death which was pronounced upon Adam and Eve for their disobedience. After mankind had disobeyed the Lord and sinned, they became carnal, sensual and devilish, and gave the devil power over them. What power? Power to kill the body and imprison the soul. Now, let me ask, could they ever hope for deliverance, seeing that they were in the power of the enemy of souls, with their bodies killed and returning again to dust, in the sides of the pit, and their spirits in the pit. No doubt the devil believed that he had frustrated the design of God when he had succeeded in killing the bodies and imprisoning the souls of mankind, whom God had created for his own glory, and after his own image and likeness. How many thousands, yea millions of souls have gone down to the pit, unprepared to meet their God, and under the bondage of sin, who never heard the sound of the gospel while living; and yet they can never be saved without it, the only way, the only means, that can ever save poor fallen man. Reader, are you prepared now sufficiently for strong meat. We are dealing with facts, and facts are stubborn things. Truth is powerful, and this is what we are after. The doctrine of the Latter Day Saints is deep, too deep and sound for a stiff-necked and gain saying people. We leave the pit and the spirits in the pit, with no hope of deliverance from him who holds the keys of death and hell, and return to the living, and see what is going on. We find a man on the earth, traveling from place to place, doing good. He is meek and lowly, a man of sorrow. He is poor, with not even a place to lay his head. He is very pitiful and kind; is often seen to weep; and has power to heal the sick, raise the dead, cleanse the leper, open the eyes of blind men, and preach the gospel to the poor, &c. The word of the great God is given to him, and he tells his fellow men what will save them and deliver them from him who is dragging them down to the infernal pit, &c. He sends others to tell them, but they will not hear them nor him, and the devil puts it into their hearts to slay him, and those whom he had chosen; and they did slay them, but not till after their preaching and their testimony had been proclaimed in plainness to them. The plan was too simple and plain for them, so they reject him and his doctrine, and put him to a shameful death, and the devil thinks he has the victory, while the battle has only fairly commenced. This is the work of God. Now the sun refuses to shine, the moon refuses to give light, the solid rocks rend, while the Savior descends into the heart of the earth. This meek and lowly Jesus of Nazareth had power over Satan in life, and he has it still. The devil has more than his match now, and the prison can not hold his mighty spirit. Neither can it retain those who believe his teachings, and who choose to follow him. O glorious hope; defeat has turned to victory, and they hear the gospel preached; the mighty deliverer comes to them, and they are given a hope. Was this all done for naught? Call this hell redemption doctrine, universal salvation, &c., ye who will; but remember that you are living in the dispensation of the fullness of times, when Christ will gather together all things in him in one, in heaven, and on earth, and things, strange things will be revealed,—things that have been kept hidden from the beginning will be made known, and those who are faithful will receive "precept upon precept, line upon line, here a little and there a little." Let us live faithful and try to understand what has already been given. Prophecy is fulfilling fast, while the world is in apostacy, and now after sixteen or seventeen hundred years of darkness, behold the wondrous works of God. He restores the glorious gospel to man once more; once more establishes his church upon the earth. She is coming forth out of the wilderness; yea, with the moon still under her feet, the crown of twelve stars still upon her head, clothed in celestial splendor. But the Kingdom of God cometh not with observation. The light shineth in darkness, and the darkness comprehendeth it not. God is withholding his spirit from the inhabitants of the earth; and is angry with the wicked. (D. and C., 63: 9).

Reader, perhaps you will say that we are diverging too far from the subject, but let us look back now before we proceed, and see if there has ever been a greater prophet sent in any dispensation than Joseph Smith of the nineteenth century. A poor obscure country youth of fifteen is visited of God in open vision in answer to prayer, and is afterwards visited by an holy angel time and again. He is instructed by this holy personage, taught from on high, is inspired to bring forth an ancient record that had lain hidden in the earth for ages, and written in a language unknown to him, and which has proven to be the Everlasting Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ in its fullness, and a history of the first settlers of this American continent. Is this all? Nay, verily. He is again visited by Elias, and ordained to the Aaronic priesthood, by an angel; and again is visited by Peter, James and John, and given the keys of the Melchizedec priesthood, after the order of the Son of God. Shall we stop here? Not yet. Let us go a little further, now to the time when a house is built, and a solemn assembly called, and a glorious endowment is given, when two more personages appear, who are no less personages than Moses and Elijah, and this great prophet is now given the keys of the gathering of Israel, by one; and by the other, the keys of turning the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the hearts of the children to their fathers; thus bringing about the ordinance with power and authority for the baptism for the dead. Why; that they may be judged according to men in the flesh. Reader; have I returned to the subject; 'tis for you to say? Now when we realise what God has done for us in this our day, when "darkness covers the earth, and gross darkness the people," we ought to lift up our heads and praise God forever. (Read sections 109 and 110 D. and C.)

I refer to these sections because the Seer has these quoted the scriptures bearing upon these points; therefore, read and understand. Now baptism for the dead is an ordinance that belongs to the house of God, or Church of Christ; and is to be performed at a certain place, and at a certain time, and under certain circumstances,—the living children performing this ordinance by proxy for their dead fathers; because we can not be made perfect without them, neither can they without us be made perfect; this is wonderful, but nevertheless true. As we have neither time nor space to quote the scriptures in support of our views, you need not think that we are unable to produce them. We desire only to give our views in as plain language, and few words as possible, and feel thankful for the knowledge that has been given us since we became identified with the Church.

We know that a great prophet has been sent to us, and that he was faithful to his trust, and has spoken the word of God faithfully, and if his teachings are obeyed and lived up to, the darkness that has hitherto beclouded our minds will flee away, and doubts be removed, and our pathway become plain, our hearts comforted, our minds strengthened, and knowledge will take the place of belief, and certainty the place of uncertainty; and thus we will be children of the light, thank God; and we will not be left to grope in the dark, as the blind, for the wall. I fear that some are treating lightly the things that they have received, and that they will bring themselves under condemnation. Reader, the Doctrine and Covenants is no cunningly devised fable gotten up by uninspired men. They are not to be criticized or spoken of lightly, and if rejected, it will turn to your everlasting condemnation. 'Tis the law given to guide God's children, and if rightly understood and lived, will save them in the celestial kingdom. Beware how you hold them; God is not to be mocked.

As we have shown, that the Spirits in prison had been subjected to the will of the Devil by their disobedience, let us see if we can find out any way that would give them any reason to hope for deliverance. How could they hope unless they had faith; for they must first have faith. How cometh faith? "Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God;" but "how can they hear without a preacher; and how can they preach except they be sent." Christ was sent to preach to them; and what did he preach? Remember the anathma of Paul, in the first chapter of Galatians. But will not others be sent to preach to them! (Rev. 14: 4. Malachi 4: 5, 6. What has been the mission of all those servants of God who have been slain for the testimony that they hold? Rev. 6: 9, 11.)

Now what does all this mean? Just this; that Christ crossed that great gulf that lay between them. Paradise and hell that Abraham spoke of to Dives the rich man, as no man could go over that gulf if he would. Christ told the thief on the cross, "This day thou shalt be with me in Paradise." Then they were in Paradise on that day. And again the language of Abraham to Dives: "Now he is comforted and thou art tormented." Then there are two places. Again: "There is a gulf between me and thee." Did not Christ cross that gulf? And if so, will not his followers do the same? And did not Christ, as it were bridge it, when he crossed it, and wrested the keys of death and hell from him who held them, and then arose triumphant over death, hell, and the grave, reclaiming his body that had lain in the grave, and ascended to the right hand of the Majesty on high? "Oh Grave where is thy victory; oh Death, where is thy sting." Fow we ask, will those spirits ever come forth from hell or prison? Yea, when death and hell delivers up their dead, and the sea, &c., in the second resurrection, Rev. 20: 13, 14. What for? To be judged as men in the flesh. After Christ has reigned till he has put down all authority, all power, all rule, and put all things under his feet, perfected his work, and delivered up the kingdom to the Father, then they are to come forth and be judged, and doubtless will be the ones to whom he will say: Come ye blessed of my father, &c. But why could they not come forth in the glorious and first resurrection? Because they were not pardoned in this life; therefore they have been thrust down to hell and paid the penalty; and after the penalty is paid, what then? They are free men. Let us illustrate. If a man transgresses a certain law, then there is a certain penalty to punish him. If he gets pardoned, he does not have to suffer. For instance, we will say that two men kill each his fellow man; the same law will punish them both; say fifty years hard labor in the states prison; one sues for pardon, and the Governor of the state grants him pardon; he is a free man. But the other is not pardoned, therefore he has to suffer, and serves out his time; what then, he is a free man. Let me ask, can that same governor say to him after he has staid in prison all that long fifty years, "I have pardoned you." Or say with consistency, "I will pardon you?" We think no. God is good. After a penalty is paid, justice claims mercy, and mercy claims her own. Justice and mercy can not be separated. They go hand in hand, and I do not believe that a merciful God will ever send mankind to an endless hell, there to suffer throughout the endless ages of eternity. The scriptures will not bear me out in any such belief, and if the fire be literal fire, and the brimstone be literal brimstone, it certainly is an awful place, and worse than hell, the pit, or the prison, inasmuch as death and hell are to be cast into this lake where the beast and the false prophet are. Will those who are to suffer in eternity with the devil and his angels have to remain in this awful place of fire and brimstone for ever and ever? And will God impose a penalty that mankind can never pay? What saith the scriptures, "Every knee shall bow and every tongue confess." Shall those bow the knee, and confess to the glory of God the Father, while suffering the vengeance of eternal fire in the regions of the damned." God tells Martin Harris in a revelation that it is not written that there shall be no end to this torment, but it is written endless torment. Again it is written eternal damnation, and is more express than other scriptures, that it might work upon the hearts of the children of men, all together for his name's glory. Let me ask, what would be the consequences if this belief in an endless hell was removed from the masses; just this, the life of a man would be no more in the estimation of the desperado, than the life of a beast. Covetousness would incite man to slay his fellow man. The very officers would turn man slayers for gain. The law of the land would not check them, and a reign of terror would begin at once; and thus we see that it is wisdom that mankind should have this belief in an eternal hell to keep them from wickedness and bloodshed, &c., and why it is more express than other scriptures, &c.

Let us see if there are not other reasons that we should believe in an endless hell. We find in the first chapter of Genesis, (I. T.) that the Lord tells Moses that he has created worlds without number unto man, and as one shall pass away, so shall another come; and that there is no end to his words and his works; that his work is never done; that "This is his work, and his glory, to bring to pass the Immortality and Eternal Life of Man." Will he fail? If this be the case, there certainly must be a place of punishment, of endless duration,—seeing that there is no end to his words and his works. If the devil is permitted to go from planet to planet, to tempt the children of men, as we believe he is; and if he is not yet cast down, might it not be that this lake of fire will be the same to which the wicked of other worlds will be sent and punished; and thus all transgressors be sent to one place to be punished, just as literal as taking all the righteous to one place of happiness. (Genesis 7: 38, I. T.)

Reader; if this be the work of God, namely, to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of mankind, and this his work is never to end, then there is undoubtedly a place of punishment, of endless duration, prepared for the wicked of every world that God has created and peopled; and all Sons of Perdition will have their part in that eternal and everlasting fire, "Where their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched." We are forced to this conclusion by a reading of the scriptures; and now let me say to every man, our candid opinion after searching the scriptures is this, that the devil and Satan is not cast down, but is and will be permitted to go from planet to planet, or from world to world, to tempt the children of men as long as eternity endures; and he has a dominion which is an everlasting dominion; which is no less than the regions of the damned; and that there exists two great principles,—one good, the other bad; two great powers,—one good, the other bad; an affirmative, and a negative; two powerful beings, at war with each other for the victory, and both eternal. If these conclusions are incorrect, then I am bound to believe there is more than one hell, and more than one devil; but I do not believe that even those Sons of Perdition will ever be punished in a place of eternal fire forever, without the remotest idea of doing them any good. Neither do I believe that any more will be pardoned in the world to come. It is in this state of probation that men can get pardoned, and not in the other world. And this is the reason, no doubt, that mankind are to be thrust down to Hell, and there to remain through the great thousand years' millenium, after Christ has perfected his work. Then they will come forth in the second resurrection, and inherit the glory of the Terrestrial, or Telesial, according to what they had lived for in this life, or were willing to receive. (D. & C., sec. 76), as they had paid the penalty, and are then free men.

Are they pardoned then? No. Why not? Because they have been thrust down to hell for a long time, and have paid the penalty. Remember the Governor. Well then, who are to be pardoned in the world to come? The righteous dead are to be pardoned if they receive the gospel in the Prison after death; and after their children have performed the ordinance of baptism for them, in the Church of Christ upon earth.

We will leave those now, who are to be saved in the second resurrection, and pass on to those that are to suffer after all the rest have been redeemed, the Church Militant at the Marriage Supper of the Lamb,—at Christ's coming. The Latter Day Saints will reign with Christ on the earth a thousand years; the Terrestrial company, at the end of the great thousand years; the Telesial company at the end of the earth, when Christ delivers up the kingdom to the Father, that God may be all in all, and the Sons of Perdition sent away into everlasting fire, to inherit a kingdom which is not a kingdom of glory, and this kingdom must be a planet, somewhere among the worlds that God has created.

We are told by the astronomers that seventy-six millions, or more planets, or worlds, have been discovered by them. Jupiter is the largest one yet discovered, and is thirteen hundred times as large as this earth, and controls four satellites, or moons; while Saturn is eleven times larger, and is encircled in a wonderful ring, and controls eight satellites, or moons; Uranus and Neptune are very large, also many others; (several are now in perihelion, and have exerted their influence upon the earth, and drawn us toward the sun many degrees) while this earth is but a mere speck in the heavens, and only controls one satellite or moon; a dead world at that. Is not this wonderful? 'Tis our belief that one of those planets will be the one to which all transgressors of every world will be banished. We can come to no other conclusion, and as no man is to know the end of their punishment, except those who are to suffer, it is no use to say when the end will be; but there is an end spoken of twice in sec. 76, D. & C. Now, would there be any end spoken of, if there was to be none. "And the end thereof, neither the place thereof, nor their torment, no man knows; and again, wherefore the end, the width, the height, the depth, &c., no man is to know, only those who are to be partakers thereof" (D. & C., 76:4). He saves all, except them. Would those Sons of Perdition have to suffer now, if the penalty had been paid. It seems that all the others were thrust down to hell, to pay the penalty for their transgression, and after it was paid they were permitted to come forth in the second resurrection, &c.; but if they had been pardoned for their transgression, would they not have been permitted to come forth in the glorious and first resurrection? Can we say then that they were pardoned, or shall we not rather say that they paid the penalty, and are free men. Those Sons of Perdition were not pardoned in this world, and the second resurrection finds them still criminals; and why? Because they have not paid the penalty. If they could be pardoned, would they have to suffer further? But why can not they be pardoned? Because their sin is too grievous, and they could not get pardon in this life; therefore, they have been held in durance vile for this coming day of wrath. They have sinned a sin unto death, and the penalty for that sin reaches beyond the second resurrection. What sin? Denied the Spirit, after having received it; turned away from the living God; crucified the Son of God afresh, and put him to an open shame; and the penalty for this sin reaches beyond the second resurrection to an abode with the devil himself; and thus they are banished from the peaceful presence of him who had loved them, even unto death; therefore where God and Christ dwell, they can not come; neither can those of the Telesial kingdom. (D. & C., 76:7).

But will they not be permitted to come out of this terrible lake of fire at some future time? Can not that penalty be paid? Will a just God impose a penalty that can never, never, never be paid? If so, what good will it do? Is not this a chastening? Is not mercy an attribute of Deity? Is God love; is he kind; does he love the workmanship of his own hands? Is he of long suffering, and full of compassion? Does a sparrow fall to the ground without his notice? Does his mercy endure forever? (Read Psalm 1:36, I. T). Is his work and his glory to bring to pass the immortality and eternal life of man? (Read D. & C. sec. 22). Will he succeed? Is he infallible? Is he just? Yea, Amen. Answer these questions, ye who can.

If this article should be the means of suggesting one thought in the right direction, to the minds of any, I shall consider myself amply repaid. For truth,

THERE is three kinds of fools mentioned over in the Scriptures, viz.: one kind as sez there iz no God, & one kind as makes vows & don't pay, & one kind iz called fools by the world fur being on the side of truth, because truth iz not in fashion. Mankind truly iz in a fallen condition & we need sum one who noes tu tell how we kan git up on a skale of intelligence that iz evidently our privilege. Sum ov us who iz apt tu git off the hooks, or give up easy mite du well tu pattern from sum ov the lower animals & insects. Tom Pain pronounced the Apostle Paul a fool, but I think on reading sum ov Pain's assertions that he tu had sum weak pints. There iz sum poetry that contains sum truth and this iz among the lot:

"O, what a tangled web we weave,
When first we practice to deceive.
'Tis education forms the common mind;
Just as the twig is bent the tree's inclined."
"On eagle's wings immoral scandals fly, Whilst virtuous actions are but born to die."

Restoring Solomon's Temple.

REUF PASHA, the Turkish Governor of Jerusalem, has recently received imperative orders from Sultan Abdul Hamid to resume the work of restoration of Solomon's Temple, commenced under the reign of Abdul Aziz, but discontinued some five years ago. The Pasha has also been instructed to clear the great square fronting the Temple of all the rubbish and rank vegetation with which it is at present incumbered. In this square stands the famous Mosque of Omar, which derives a revenue of some £15,000 a year from pilgrim contributions and other sources. Hitherto the greater portion of this sum found its way annually to Stamboul. The Sultan, however, has decreed that henceforth it shall be applied to defraying the expenses of the works above alluded to, the present resumption of which, as well as their original inception, is due in reality to suggestions made at different times to the Ottoman authorities by members of the Austrian imperial family. The restoration of Temple ruins was begun at the instance of Francis Joseph during his visit to the Holy Land, shortly after the ascension of Abdul Aziz to the throne; and it was the recent pilgrimage of the Archduke Rudolph to Judea that imparted a fresh impulse to the interrupted enterprise. Not only has the Commander of the Faithful signified it to be his sovereign will that the works should be carried out without further delay, but two officials of the Sublime Porte, Serid and Raif Effendim, have already left Constantinople for Jerusalem with instructions to take measures, on their arrival, for insuring the literal fulfillment of his Majesty's decree. The gratitude of Christians and Jews alike is due to Abdul Hamid for lending his high authority to so generous and enlightened an undertaking.

The pitfalls and traps for youthful feet are so adroitly arranged, and at the same time so numerous and varied, that watchful parents can only hope, with God helping, to tide over the sea of youth. So treacherous is this sea, so full of danger from shore to shore, that mothers in these later days dread the hour when the boys, on whom great watch and care has been bestowed, shall launch out upon the untried waves.

Economy is half the battle of life; it is not half so hard to earn money as to spend it well.

A Warning against Worldly Longings.

"We remember the fish, which we did eat in Egypt freely; the cucumbers and the melons, and the leeks, and the onions, and the garlick." Num.—11:5.

It will be remembered by all who are conversant with the history of the Israelites, that they had been under the yoke of bondage four hundred years, during which time they had been sorely afflicted by the Egyptians and their sighings and constant pleadings for deliverance, reached the ears of the Almighty, who finally through the instrumentality of his servant Moses brought them out of Egypt unto the land of Canaan.

Israel had come into straits. They did not find everything in their Canaan path just as they anticipated. For many days after they left the house of bondage, their joy of emancipation enabled them to overlook many obstacles, and to bear uncomplainingly the deprivations incident to such a journey. But when the pain of their servitude had been in a measure forgotten, and present hardships, and trials had come to occupy their thoughts, then the Divine goodness was lost sight of, and they indulged in bitter complaints against their leader, and despised the provisions of their God appointed way. Listen now to their peevish cry, "We remember the fish, which we did eat in Egypt freely," etc. A stranger coming along just at this time and hearing this language would probably have said to himself, "What a nice time this people must have had in Egypt; how well they lived. I wonder they ever left it for this wilderness march with its poor fare. So would most any one reason from their present representation of Egypt. But let us look back and see their condition in this now longed for land. "And it came to pass, in process of time, that the king of Egypt died; and the children of Israel sighed by reason of their bondage, and they cried, and their cry came up unto God, by reason of the bondage."—Exod. 2:23. So they were poor, sighing slaves in Egypt, but they do not think of what they suffered, one thought now,—“the fish and the cucumbers,” etc.

I have a few thoughts to offer you, dear Saints. Remember you have started on a long road. You will grow footsore and weary. Clouds will gather around you, which will darken your mind at times. You will be tempted, tried and buffeted. Satan will decoy you if possible. Like Israel, you will come into straits. And so, I would advise you of the peculiar forms of temptations which will beset you. You will look to your surroundings; they will seem very unfavorable. To your friends, and they will seem cold and unsympathetic. To your God, and it will seem as though he had withdrawn from you. Your prayers will seem to be unheard and unanswered; but if you will follow the example of Daniel who prayed for twenty-one days without ceasing, you will certainly gain the victory. But during this trying time you will be discontent, as you can not see a step before you, and the light that illuminated your pathway when you embraced the gospel, has (seemingly) disappeared. You are now left to be tried by the tempter for a season. And if you are not watchful, like the Israelites you will go back to Egypt. You will think of companions, whose society you often enjoyed, also of amusements in which you found delight. "O, didn't I have a good time there, and there. How I enjoyed myself at such a time with those old friends. What a treat it was to visit the bar-room. Wasn't the ball-room splendid. How much I enjoyed going to the theatre. Thus you commence to recall this joy and that pleasure to mind. When this hour comes, and come it will, I ask you to act wisely. Don't take a step on the impulse of the moment. Perhaps light and joy are not what you need. Trial and sorrow for the time are probably the very best things for you. Trust God, he leads best. When you go back to Egypt to select some of its good things, you virtually declare that the Gospel of Christ has lost some of its attractiveness. Your feelings expressed would be something like this. If I could only have my old associations or have the pleasure of indulging in my former amusements I would be perfectly happy. Consider the influence of such longings upon those who know not the gospel. They once heard you declare that "you had lost your taste for worldly pleasures; that the peace which you enjoyed through the gospel had far surpassed them. Now, your former companions hear you sigh for the old amusements for which you testified you had lost your relish. What would you say the influence would be upon them? Would it tend to lead them to the gospel? I think not, but on the other hand have a tendency to drive them away. Think how you dishonor your Savior by such longings and indulgences. He beheld our condition when in a world of sin; he beheld our sorrow and grief; and in view of this fact he volunteered to leave the realms above, take our nature upon him, suffer and die upon the cross, to relieve us from this bondage of sin. Finally know this, you can not have the world in part. The children of Israel only wanted this thing and that from Egypt; "Give us the good things we had to eat there." You perhaps will not feel willing to go back into the world, but would like to cling to the gospel and have the privilege of taking the pleasures of the world with you. Impossible!

Dear Saints! I know that in this day of "liberal ideas," many "professors" of religion imagine they are going to Canaan, and take along with them the things of Egypt. But God is not mocked! "Ye can not serve God and Mammon." No, if you will have the things of your old carnal desire—from the world—you must take them in connection with the bondage and servitude of sin. If you must have the pleasures of the world, you must, with them, have the sorrows of the world; the two are inseparably connected. With them, you must have the old restlessness and dissatisfaction, which, one day, you so eagerly exchanged for Christ. Your religious duties will become distasteful in just the proportion you seek after the things of the world. Egypt is behind, Canaan is before you; which will you have? They are separated by a long distance, toward which will you go? One represents bondage, the other liberty and rest; you can not have a part of each. In the language of the Scriptures I would say, "Choose ye this day whom ye will serve."

The Only and True God. Who is He?

"And this is life eternal, that they might know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent."—St. John 17:3.

By the above, we learn the necessity of knowing "the Only True God." If we desire to know the truth, it will be necessary to consider that the truth, as taught by "the spirit of truth," (the Holy Ghost is the spirit of truth), can not contradict itself. Its teachings must be in harmony. Dear reader, bear this constantly in mind.

What we will now proceed to consider, according to the subject before us, will be to this end; namely: The harmony of the word of God upon this subject. First. We are taught in the Scriptures of the Old Testament, that there is but one God to worship, and that he is a jealous God that will not let his honor be given to another. In Isaiah 44:6, as well as in a great many other places, we read: "Thus saith the Lord, the King of Israel, and his (Israel's) Redeemer, the Lord of Hosts; I am the first and I am the last; and besides me there is no God."

Many Saints of God believe that this is God the Father and that he has an immortal body of flesh and bones; and that he has a son that has an immortal body of flesh and bones, even Jesus; and that this Son should be worshipped; as "in his name every knee shall bow," etc; and as such there are two, instead of one God to worship, in direct conflict with Isaiah as above quoted. It is impossible that the Spirit of Truth could be guilty of such contradictions. Further, in Genesis, as well as in St. John 1:1-15, (I quote from the Inspired Translation, by Joseph Smith, the Seer), we find stated that the Word (the Son, Jesus), made all things; and without him was not anything made which was made. This will bring matters, (according to the above doctrine of two personal Gods of flesh and bones), in a still more confused condition. Is the Spirit of Truth author to this confusion? Or have men misunderstood the teachings of the Spirit of Truth? To this brief description, let us add the objection made by infidels; as a consequence of above described doctrine, namely: "That God is a blood thirsty and tyrannical God that would send his son to suffer and die, instead of going himself, if it was necessary."

We will now proceed to seek and inquire from the revelations of God; the teachings of the Spirit of Truth, as touching this subject. First. Who is God, the Father, (the God of Israel), his nature, and what is He? Secondly: Who is Jesus Christ, his nature and what is He?

1. We will begin by stating some traditions by heathen, and other nations upon this subject, namely: Who is God the Father? etc., and see how far there is truth in them. The Indians call God the "Great Spirit." And the East Indians and other heathen religions that worship stones, serpents, fire, oxen, etc., do so, not that they believe that those objects really are God, but that God is a spirit that is in them, and through all things; therefore they select those objects to look upon while their minds are thinking on that God that is in them; as well as everywhere in the universe. In Acts 17:28, the Apostle Paul says: "In God we live, move, and have our being." And the Psalmist David says, in Psalm 139:7-10: "Whither shall I go from thy Spirit? or whither shall I flee from thy presence? If I ascend up into heaven, thou art there; if I make my bed in hell, behold, thou art there. If I take the wings of the morning, and dwell in the uttermost parts of the sea; even there shall thy hand lead me, and thy right hand shall hold me."

We have now discovered that the traditions of those nations agree with Paul and David in this respect. Luke tells us how an angel appeared to the Virgin Mary, and told her that she should give birth to Jesus the Savior. See Luke 1:26-33. "Then said Mary unto the angel, How can this be? And the angel answered and said unto her, Of the Holy Ghost, and the power of the Highest. Therefore also, that holy child that shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God." This Holy Ghost is the Spirit of Truth, also the power of the Highest, is the same object, only expressed twice in different words, as was customary with the ancients. For example Isaiah says, "Publish it in Jacob, and tell it in Israel." Is not publishing the same as telling, is not Jacob the same as Israel? Again in Isaiah 28:23: "Give ye ear, and hear my voice; hearken and hear my speech." Is not "Give ye ear," the same as "hearken?" Is not "Hear my voice," the same as "Hear my speech?" It certainly is. Then "the power of the Highest" is the same as "The Holy Ghost." And in Matthew 2:1-3. That before Mary and Joseph had come together, Mary was found with child of the Holy Ghost. "Then Joseph, her husband, being a just man, and not willing to make her a public example, was minded to put her away privily. But while he thought on these things, Behold, the angel of the Lord appeared unto him in a vision, saying: Joseph, thou son of David, fear not to take unto thee Mary thy wife; for that which is conceived in her, is of the Holy Ghost." Thus we have proven that Mary conceived by the Holy Ghost; by his miraculous power. As she did conceive by the Holy Ghost, is not the Holy Ghost then father to Jesus? He certainly is. To this the Book of Mormon agrees, see Mosiah 8:5. " * * * The Father, because he was conceived by the power of God (the Holy Ghost)." In Doctrine and Covenants in a revelation (on the testimony of John) in May, 1833, Jesus says in par. 2: "And the glory of the Father (the Holy Ghost) was with him, (Jesus), for he (the Holy Ghost, the Father) dwelt in him." In par. 4. Jesus says: "I am the Spirit of Truth, and John bore record of me." In St. John 14:10: "But the Father that dwelleth in me, he doeth the works."

By this and much more we have not room to quote, we can plainly see that we have answered the first question, namely: That God the Father is the Holy Ghost, the father to Jesus, the Spirit of Truth, who dwelt in Jesus, and who should dwell in us, if we are his.

We will now proceed to the second question of our subject, namely: Who is Jesus, his nature, and what is he?

We read in Isaiah 44:6: "Thus saith the Lord, the King of Israel, and his (Israel's) Redeemer, the Lord of Hosts; I am the first and I am the last; and besides me there is no God."

In Revelations 22:13, Jesus says: "I am Alpha and Omega, (Alpha is the name of the first, and Omega the name of the last letter in the Greek alphabet), the beginning and the end, the first and the last." (Here is the repetition three times, of the same meaning only in different words). We see here an agreement in Isaiah and Revelations showing that Jesus is the God of Israel, his Redeemer, the first and the last.

In Book of Mormon, Nephi 7:1, Jesus in speaking to the Nephites says: "Behold I am he that gave the law, and I am he who covenanted with my people Israel." This is now plain that Jesus, (or if you please, the Holy Ghost, the Father, the God of Israel who afterwards revealed himself in the flesh in the body of Jesus), was the being who appeared in the thunders of Mount Sinai. And thus the only and true God to worship, for all creation, whether they be Gods or Lord, has to bow before this Lord of Lords, and King of Kings. The Great I Am ("The Great Spirit"), the first and the last. This title has now a great significance, when we have learned who is the only and true God, whom to know is life eternal. Thus the Father, the Holy Ghost, dwelt in Jesus, (the spirit of Jesus) of which he had a fulness; see St. John 3:3. But not all the Holy Ghost, because if he had all, then he could not have given the Spirit to his Apostles; but as we have proven above, he is omnipresent, he is everywhere. The Holy Ghost can be given to men in China, Japan, Sweden, England, the Islands of the Sea and America, at the same time. He is also in heaven, and in the heaven of heavens; hence Jesus (the body) prayed to his Father (the Spirit, the Holy Ghost) in heaven.

As to whether this Holy Spirit is in the form of man, I will let the reader judge for himself, by presenting the following facts: that man was created in his likeness; (the likeness of the Spirit of Jesus); and Joseph Smith, as well as Stephen, in Acts, saw the Father (the Holy Ghost) with Jesus at his right hand; but please remember that neither Stephen, nor Joseph Smith did feel those personages, so as to know, if they both had a body of flesh and bones, or if one was a spiritual body, and the other a resurrected body of flesh and bones. Nor must we forget, that the Holy Ghost appeared like a dove, after Jesus was baptized; is he therefore a dove? On the Day of Pentecost he appeared as cloven tongues of fire, is he therefore cloven tongues of fire? In the Kirtland Temple he appeared as a ball of fire, is he therefore a ball of fire? He appeared as a body of flesh and blood to Jared's brother, (see Book of Ether in Book of Mormon, chap. 1, par. 8), as he should be revealed in the flesh, in the body of Jesus, about two thousand years hence; was he therefore a body of flesh and blood at that time when he appeared to Jared's brother?

Please remember, dear reader, that we have proven that the Holy Ghost is the Father to Jesus (the body) while the Father, the Holy Ghost dwelt in Jesus (the body). Now we understand why Paul exclaims, "Great is the mystery of Godliness, God made manifest in the flesh." 1 Tim. 3:16. Let us take heed to the Apostle's admonition in his epistle, where he says: "Let us therefore earnestly contend for the faith once delivered to the Saints," and see how the Saint's faith has been on this subject. And as a further proof that the faith once delivered to the Saints on this subject, I will briefly quote from the Law of the Church, which says: "The Bible, Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants are a law unto my people." In Isaiah 9:6. "For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given; and the government shall be upon his shoulders; and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, The Mighty God, the Everlasting Father—The Prince of Peace." Isaiah 44:6. "Thus saith the Lord, (not a Lord), the King (not a King) of Israel, and his (Israel's) Redeemer, the Lord of Hosts; (Jehovah, the Spirit of Jesus); I am the first and I am the last, and besides me there is no God." In Rev. 22:13, Jesus says: "I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end, the first and the last." And in St. John 1:1-16; in 3d verse we read: "All things were made by him; (Jesus, or rather the Spirit of Jesus, the Holy Ghost); and without him was not anything made which was made." This is now plain that he is the Creator of heaven and earth, with all that is in them. 14th verse: "The same word (the Spirit of Jesus, the Holy Ghost the Father), was made flesh (the body of Jesus) and dwelt among us." In St. John 14:8, 9: "Philip saith unto him, Lord show us the Father, and it sufficeth us. Jesus saith unto him, Have I been so long time with you, and yet hast thou not known me, Phillip? He that hath seen me, hath seen the Father; and how sayest thou then, show us the Father? Believeth thou not that I am in the Father, and the Father in me? The words that I (the body of Jesus) speak unto you, I speak not of myself; but the Father that dwelleth in me, he doeth the works."

"But," says one, "I can not understand such doctrine, I have been learned to believe that the Father and Son are two distinct personages of flesh and bones, to which I will answer with the words of Jesus in St. Luke 10:23: "All things are delivered to me of my Father; (the Holy Ghost); and no man knoweth that the Son is the Father, and the Father is the Son, but him to whom the Son will reveal it."

Now we will turn to the revelation given in presence of six Elders in Fayette, New York, September, 1830, in Doctrine and Covenants, paragraph: "Listen to the voice of Jesus Christ, your Redeemer, the Great I Am, (this was the name God gave himself to Moses in the burning bush), whose arm of mercy hath atoned for your sins." And in par. 12, of the same revelation, Jesus still speaking, says: "But behold, I say unto you, that I, the Lord God, gave unto Adam and unto his seed that they should not die as to the temporal death, until I the Lord God, should send forth angels to declare unto them repentance and redemption, through faith on the name of mine only begotten Son." Here we see that Jesus is speaking, and yet speaking of redemption through his only begotten Son. If the Father and the Son are two distinct bodies of flesh and bones, then this revelation is false and a deception, but if the Father dwells in Jesus, as we have proven, then this revelation is true. Again in a revelation given May, 1833, sec. 83, par. 1, the Lord says: "And the Father and I are one: The Father because he gave me of his fulness, and the Son because I was in the world and made flesh my tabernacle." And further on in the same paragraph: "Therefore in the beginning the word (the Spirit of Jesus) was, for he was the word, even the messenger of salvation, the light and the Redeemer of the world; the Spirit of Truth (the Holy Ghost) who came into the world."

We all know that the Holy Ghost is the Spirit of Truth. This Spirit of Truth came into the world, by him creating himself a body of flesh, blood, and bones, called Jesus; (which means Savior); and this creator of this body is the Spirit of Truth, the Holy Ghost, the Father. Matthew 2:3. "Therefore the Father dwelt in him." And in 2d par., "And he (Jesus) received all power in heaven and on earth, and the glory (light and intelligence, par. 6) of the Father was with him, for he (the Father, the Holy Ghost), dwelt in him."

Again Jesus says in par. 4, same revelation: "The Spirit of Truth is of God, I am the Spirit of Truth, and John bore record of me." This was the John that Jesus loved. We now turn to the revelation given the 22d and 23d of September, 1832, par. 8: "And your minds in times past have been darkened because of unbelief, and because you have treated lightly the things you have received, which vanity and unbelief hath brought the whole Church under condemnation. And this condemnation resteth upon the children of Zion, even all; and they shall remain under this condemnation (how long) until they repent and remember the New Covenant, even the Book of Mormon and the former commandments which I have given them, not only to say, but to do according to that which I have written." By this we see the necessity to both teach and practice the New Covenant, even the Book of Mormon, so that we may "bring forth fruit mete for our Father's kingdom." Therefore let us now consider what the Book of Mormon says on this subject, namely: That Jesus is both the Father and the Son. In the Book of Ether, chap. 1, par. 8, Jesus appeared to Jared's brother, as he should appear in the flesh; then he says: "Behold, I am Jesus Christ, I am the Father and the Son, in me shall all mankind have light and that eternally, even they who shall believe on my name; and they shall become my sons and my daughters." This is exactly the words of the prophets in the Bible, what the God of Israel says "and ye are my sons and daughters sayeth the Lord of Hosts," (Jehova, or Jesus), and in 11th par., 1st chap. of Ether, " * * * even unto the unfolding unto them of all my revelations, saith Jesus Christ, the Son of God, the Father of the heavens and of the earth, and all things that in them are. And he that will contend against the word of the Lord, let him be accursed." Par. 12, Jesus says: "For behold, I am the Father, I am the light, and the life, and the truth of the world." And in par. 4: "That whatever nation shall dwell on this land (America) shall worship the true and only God, and shall be perserved if they will but serve the God of the land who is Jesus Christ." 2 Nephi 6:9: "O how great the holiness of God! for he knoweth all things, there is not anything, save he knows it. And he cometh into the world that he may save all men." 5th chap. 4th par. And he also has shown unto me, that the Lord God, the Holy One of Israel, should manifest himself unto them in the flesh." In the 7th chap. 2d par. "But behold, thus saith the Lord God: when the day cometh that they shall believe in me, that I am Christ, then have I covenanted with their fathers that they shall be restored in the flesh, upon the earth, unto the lands of their inheritance." Also 8th chap. 2d par. "But there is a God, and he is Christ." Again in 11th chap. 2d par. "And when the day cometh that the only begotten of the Father, yea, even the Father of heaven and of earth, shall manifest himself unto them in the flesh." Mosiah 1:13. "The Lord Omnipotent who reigneth, who was and is from all eternity to all eternity, shall come down from heaven, among the children of men, and shall dwell in a tabernacle of clay." 14th par. "And he shall be called Jesus Christ, the Son of God, the Father of heaven and earth, the creator of all things from the beginning. Also Mosiah 3:3. "That Christ the Lord God omnipotent, may seal you his * * * who created all things, in heaven and in earth, who is God above all. Amen." Again in Mosiah 5:7. "And because he said unto them, that Christ was the God, the Father of all things * * * he said that man was created after the image of God, (Christ) and that God should come down among the children of men, and take upon him flesh and blood." "And in Alma 8:10. "Now Zeezrom said again unto him, is the Son of God the very Eternal Father? And Amulek said unto him, yea, He is the very Eternal Father of heaven and of earth and all things which in them is; he is the beginning and the end, the first and the last; and he shall come into the world to redeem his people." In Helaman 5:6, we read: "And also that ye may know of the coming of Jesus Christ, the Son of God, the Father of heaven and of earth, the creator of all things from the beginning." We will now turn to Mosiah 8th chapter, where we find this doctrine plainer if possible, and ought to settle all dispute on this point. Par. 5: "And now Abinadi said unto them, I would that ye should understand that God himself shall come down among the children of men, and shall redeem his people; and because he dwelleth in flesh, he shall be called the Son of God: and having subjected the flesh to the will of the Father, (please remember we have proven above that the Father is the Holy Ghost, the Spirit of Truth), being the Father and the Son; the Father, because he was conceived by the power of God, (the Holy Ghost); and the Son because of the flesh, thus becoming the Father and Son; and they are one God, yea, the very eternal Father of heaven and of earth, and thus the flesh (the body of Jesus) becoming subject to the Spirit (the Holy Ghost, the Father who dwelt in Jesus) or the Son to the Father being one God." We have now found what the faith on this subject was, "that was once delivered to the Saints," and which Paul tells us to "earnestly contend for." It is a universal testimony of the prophets and the law, and "If we speak not according to the law and the testimony it is because there is no light in us." Isaiah 8:20.

We will now read what the Lord God himself says the day before he came into the world. See the disciple Nephi 1:3. "For behold, the time is at hand, and on this night shall the sign be given, and on the morrow come I into the world, * * * and do the will, both of the Father, and of the Son, of the Father, because of me, and of the Son, because of my flesh." After God had been born and crucified, he appeared to the Nephites and proves to them that "the faith of the Saints" has not been in vain. Nephi 5:6, says: "And it came to pass that the Lord (Jesus) spake unto them, saying: Arise and come forth unto me, that ye may thrust your hands into my side, and also that ye may feel the prints of the nails in my hands and in my feet, that ye may know that I am the God of Israel, and the God of the whole earth, and have been slain for the sins of the world." With these three testimonies, still we have a fourth, namely the testimony of the multitude, in 6th par. After they have been feeling the sides, hands and feet of Jesus, they exclaimed: Hosanna! blessed be the name of the most high God! And they did fall down at the feet of Jesus, and did worship him." And in par. 8: "For the Father and I, and the Holy Ghost are one."

Dear reader, compare the above quoted objection by infidels, and the host of witnesses I have quoted, and judge for yourself which is the most Godlike.

Now we wish to say a word to those that still will contend for the doctrine, that the Father to Jesus has a body of flesh and bones. We shall for argument's sake grant your view to be correct, we know that the body of Jesus had a beginning, if the Father to Jesus is like Jesus, then his body also had a beginning; and if we should, like the Brighamites say that he also had a father, and if we went as many generations back as there are atoms in the Rocky Mountains, still if the God of all Gods, if having a body of flesh and bones, that body must have a beginning; then who created or organized that first body? Let the wise answer this question. We have proven by "the faith once delivered to the Saints," that the Holy Ghost, the Spirit of Truth, was and is the Father to Jesus, and that the body of flesh and bones (see Luke 24:38) named Jesus is the first and only body of flesh and bones, the only and true God has.

Much more may be quoted from sacred writ, to substantiate this doctrine, but sufficient has been said upon this at this time, to establish that Jesus Christ is the only and true God, "whom to know is life eternal." St. John 17:3.

There are some expressions in Scripture that appear to somewhat contradict this doctrine, but they only appear so to those that have not learned to know the only and true God. Dear reader, if you look upon God, as set forth in this article, and get his Spirit to enlighten you, you will then see that everything in the law and testimony of the Scriptures is in exact harmony with this doctrine. To conclude I will quote the words of Jesus in the Inspired Translation by Joseph Smith, the Seer: "In that hour Jesus rejoiced in spirit, and said: I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, that thou hast hid these things from them who think they are wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes; even so Father; for so it seemed good in thy sight. All things are delivered to me of my Father, (the Holy Ghost), and no man knoweth that the Son is the Father, and the Father is the Son, but him to whom the Son will reveal it."

May the whole Church be blessed with that great revelation, is our earnest prayer. So be it.

THOMAS BURT,
CH. E. MALMSTROM.

SPRINGVILLE CITY, Utah, Jan. 2d, 1882.

Do Something for the Master.

How many who call themselves Christians, I wonder, are guilty of the sin of laziness, or indolence, as it is more politely termed? It is to be feared that there are many good people, (I mean good in other respects), who will be obliged to plead guilty when charged with being lazy. I once heard of a man who said that he was born tired. Dreadful condition for a son of Adam to be in. And yet I think it can truthfully be said of many that they experience a feeling of weariness just when they are told to do something that required any exertion on their part. Why is it that so many Latter Day Saints are unwilling to make an effort toward advancing the cause of the Master. Yes, very many after publicly testifying that they have received the gift of the Holy Spirit and that they know "Jesus to be the Christ," will fold their arms, so to speak, and drift along with the current without showing any disposition whatever to put their hand to the plow and labor for the advancement of Zion's cause. It may not be much that some of us can do, and we no doubt often feel that we are weak and sinful, but the weakest of us can do something for the Master's cause. The harvest truly is great but the laborers are few. Let us all pray the Lord of the harvest to put it into the hearts of his children to go forth and strive to pull down the strongholds of sin, and plant the banner of King Emanuel where once floated the loathsome rag of the prince of darkness. All have not the same gift. All can not speak in tongues. All can not interpret. All can not be preachers, in the ordinary sense of the term, but there are different ways of preaching. If we can not preach from the stand, we can preach by the fireside, or distribute tracts, or Heralds, or Hopes, or some other publications of the Church, and thus scatter the seed, and we know not what the harvest shall be. The result we will leave with him who doeth all things well. Thank God we have some such earnest workers among us, and I would that their number could be increased to legion. I appeal to all who have partaken of the heavenly gift and are united in the one faith to be diligent and earnest in the Master's service, for we know that if we do this and fall not by the wayside, we shall ere long reap a great and everlasting reward.

W. H. BROWN.

They say it is hard to be a consistent Christian, but it is equally difficult to be a consistent sceptic.

You may gather a rich harvest of knowledge by reading; but thought is the winnowing machine.

Deluded.

SINCE the beginning, in all ages and among all peoples there have appeared men, and women too, who have claimed to be prophets and assumed the prerogative of foretelling future events. In many—indeed in most cases they have been bold and impious impostors, impudently presuming upon the credulity of the people, urging claims which they knew to be utterly baseless and false. In cases belonging to the latter class the love of notoriety has been the chief impelling cause. In christian lands these pretenders first begin to study and interpret according to their own fancies Bible prophecies which they make to sustain the wildest vagaries. But after a little they break away from these inconvenient trammels and declare themselves to be inspired and independent, striking out a new course for themselves. There is a class however who may reasonably be supposed to be sincere. Through physical disease or some mental peculiarity they become the victims of morbid religious impressions and begin to regard their own wild and distorted fancies as direct inspirations. These delusions usually grow the longer they are cherished, become independent of reason and scornful of common sense, discard facts as impertinent, scoff at argument and present the most miserable and wretched falsehoods as direct revelations from heaven. They see everything through a distorted medium. They rush in where angels dare not tread and even venture to dictate to omnipotence what ought to be done. The bold and wicked pretenders usually meet the fate they deserve. They are laughed out of court and subside into merited obscurity and contempt. The deluded victims of such sad hallucinations in nearly every instance meet with a different fate. The end is a tragedy. Mental disease assuming this form is of all maladies, the most incurable. It hastens on to the sad sequel. In such cases the physician is the true adviser.

A notable and mournful instance of such delusion with its terrible, tragic ending has just occurred in our city and startled and saddened the whole community. A brief history of it will be of interest to our readers.

About two years ago a happy and prosperous family lived in State Centre, Iowa. About fifteen years ago they removed from Sandwich, Ills, near which James H. Lay, the husband and father, owned a fine farm. They were financially successful in their new home in Iowa, accumulating a handsome competence. The father was an active and prominent business man. The mother was a lady of high character and excellent judgment, belonging to a family noted for intelligence and good sense. There were three promising boys who were trained in a well ordered christian home. The eldest, W. K. Lay, was attending college preparing himself for some profession and was never known to cherish any religious beliefs outside of what is termed the strictest orthodoxy. Suddenly the young man in some way became possessed with the idea that he was a prophet and had a mission. He left college and began his new career which has resulted in such terrible consequences. He claimed to be the Elijah who should appear as the messenger of the speedy coming of Christ who should close the present dispensation. He at once turned his attention to the ancient prophecies, endeavoring to prove from detached passages that he was Elijah, that he should appear on this continent, that he should be a young man and that the second coming would certainly occur before the close of 1882. He at first tried public lecturing as a means of convincing the world of his divine mission, and this failing he began issuing a series of pamphlets which he entitled, A Prophet's Warning. An intelligent exegesis of the passages quoted clearly showed that they utterly failed to substantiate a single one of his delusive claims. They were woven together in a way that showed considerable ingenuity but a total lack of sound, critical judgment. They were forced into service to establish a preconceived and wild theory. They attracted little attention and were looked upon by the curious as the wild vagaries of a disordered and fanatical fancy, as harmless as they were baseless. After a time the mother who had the utmost faith in the sincerity of her son became a convert to his notions.

Through the influence probably of some physical and nervous derangement she became morbid on the subject and at last believed herself under the power of some direct inspiration. The father also became a convert, but claimed no inspiration for himself. After a time the delusion assumed a new form. The youngest son, about ten years old, was made the scapegoat for all the sins of the family, and by way of penance was made to fast at frequent intervals during which he was closely confined to the house. This awakened some feeling in the community at State Centre, and it is said on this account Mr. Lay sold his real estate there to his sister at a nominal price and removed with his family to Sandwich where they have resided since.

During the last winter a new and fatal delusion seized upon the young prophet and the mother. She became possessed with the belief that she was soon to become the mother of another prophet who while yet an infant would have remarkable, even marvelous powers and would astonish and convince the world of the truth of their mission. A little over four weeks ago the son, W. K. Lay, who was in Adrian, Mich., preparing his writings for the press thought he received a special order from heaven to return at once as something notable was soon to happen. He had but a few minutes to prepare to reach the cars and came in great haste. On this return there was a new revelation. The mother was to fast until the new prophet was born. Mother, father and son all seemed to devoutly believe in the coming event. Little attention was paid to the wild and absurd delusion by the community. Some pitied and others ridiculed. The family lived in such a secluded and quiet way that few knew the real state of affairs. The relatives living here, while they deplored the insane delusion, hesitated to interfere. The family was so blindly fanatical that they resisted any intrusion. At last on Thursday morning last, Hon. W. W. Sedgwick, brother of Mrs. Lay, perceiving affairs had reached a dangerous crisis was compelled to interpose. He saw his sister was literally dying of starvation, and that father and son were both encouraging and fortifying her in her insane purpose. He resolutely demanded that she be given nourishment. They strongly protested, but when he firmly assured them that legal measures would be taken at once to prevent a mingled murder and suicide, they reluctantly yielded. A few spoonfulls of beef tea were given her at intervals of two hours, only a part of which they succeeded in making her swallow. It was too late. The stomach utterly refused to perform its functions. As Dr. Sedgwick perceived at first, his sister was dying. She passed away early in the evening, and thus ended the most extraordinary tragedy of modern times.

The father and son were disposed to charge her death upon the brother, who had, as they claimed, compelled Mrs. Lay to violate the divine command. To decide this question a post mortem examination was decided upon. It was held next morning in the presence of the physicians of the city; Dr. Winne using the knife. The result utterly dispelled the fatal delusion. Mrs. Lay died of starvation. There was not the slightest symptom of coming maternity.

The faith of the father was shaken and he expressed himself as about ready to believe that they had been deceived by Satan. As for the son, he was not ready to give it up as a delusion. He has intimated that he believes that the great red dragon spoken of in the Revelation has been around, and that in consequence the child has been caught up into heaven and the woman, the mother, taken off into the wilderness. He intends waiting about until June 1st, when if the mother does not rise from the grave he will believe he has misinterpreted the heavenly visions. It is hard to have patience with such wild, illimitable and unaccountable nonsense.

It remains only to be stated that the funeral of Mrs. Lay occurred on Saturday, Rev. Dr. Reed of the Baptist Church preaching an excellent discourse. The whole affair has been a sad one for the friends of the family.

A Mother's Influence.

It is hard for a young mother, who has not yet overcome the wayward tendencies of her own youthful nature, to realize the influence she exerts over her little ones. She is constantly surrounded by critical imitators who copy her morals and manners. As the mother is, so are her sons and daughters. If a family are blessed with an intelligent mother, who is dainty and refined in her manner, and does not consider it necessary to be one woman in the drawing-room and an entirely different person in every day life, but who is a true mother and always a tender, charming woman, you will invariably see her habits of speech and perfect manner repeated in her children. Great, rough men and noisy, busy boys will always tone down their voices, and step lightly, and try to be more mannerly when she stops to give them a kind word or a pleasant smile; for a true mother will never fail to do all the pleasant things that she can that will in any way lift up and cheer those whose lives are shaded with care and toil. The mother of to day rules the world of to-morrow.

Whatever you do have system about it. It is the greatest labor-saving machine in the world.

Our attention is called to a serious omission in the account of Bro. D. Dancer, Bishop's Agent for Decatur District. In the account of moneys received Bro. A. K. Anderson should be credited on December 17th, 1881, with $13.50, tithing.

Bro. W. W. Blair has reached his field, the Utah Mission, and is rallying the forces at his command, actively preparing for the campaign. Some indications of a possible reaction in favor of the truth we hold, are appearing, though slight. Those desiring to address Bro. Blair, address Salt Lake City, Utah, Box 417.

Five have lately been baptized at Wyandotte. So it would seem that the challenge and attack of D. Eccles did not affect the work badly there and at Kansas City.

Reidel's removal from New Albany to Stewartsville, reached us too late for the HERALD for June 1st, or it would have appeared in that issue.

Sr. Nancy E. Leonard, of Amboy, Lee county, Illinois, on her way home from attending the April session of conference at Independence, visited La Plata, Missouri, and spent several days there with friends. The question of her faith came up, and she was under the necessity of defending it. This she did in such a way in private conversation, that she was invited to visit the Sunday School, and there taught the Bible Class, telling them at the outset that she would probably differ from them in points likely to come up in the lessons. The result is that some there are anxious to hear some one of our elders. She is intending to send in some of the printed articles, and desires that they be visited by a preacher. Will Bro. Alex. H. Smith, elder in charge, please bear this in mind. Any one going there may enquire for Mr. Williams, Wm. Miller, or William Cole; and give Sr. N. E. Leonard as reference.

It appears that a mistake was made in the minutes of April Conference, to which our attention was called. Bro. George Montague was appointed to the South-Eastern Mission; but upon further consideration the appointment was changed to the South-Western in association with Bro. Heman C. Smith. We make this explanation and note the appointment of Bro. Montague to this South-Western Mission that no further misunderstanding may occur.

Bro. J. R. Lambert writes from Bay Point, Florida, May 16th, that his health is very poor, but he has been able to fill his appointments. He commends the Greenville Advocate, for fair presentation of our views, but states that the editor of the Santa Rosa News, neglected to publish an article from him after he had promised to do so; Bro. Lambert thinks Saints ought not to sustain such papers.

Bro. D. R. Jones informs us that the Saints of Nevada, would be very glad to have Bro. G. Rodger to visit them on his way home this Fall.

Bro. Jonathan Emmons wrote from Elk Point, Iowa, May 18th. Was well, but had been taking care of the sick. He was trying to teach the word.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Is Brigham Young now, or will he ever be, an inheritor of the Celestial Kingdom?—Perla Wild.

We are not the ones to sit in judgment on Pres. Brigham Young, and therefore can not answer the question. If he has not sinned against the Holy Ghost, he may be forgiven in the world to come; but whether the celestial glory follows such forgiveness we do not say.

On the 27th of this month, day memorable to the Saints, the people of Iowa will be called upon to vote for or against an amendment to the Constitution of that state, prohibiting the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage, within the State.

The position we have taken hitherto, has been and still is that it should be the duty of society to so frown upon the use of intoxicants that the demand for them shall cease; that prohibition should be left to the localities where liquors might be sold, hamlets, precincts, towns, cities and other organized communities, as the majority of the voters might determine; but in the absence of such a law, and in consideration of the incalculable damage the drinking of intoxicating beverages has done and is doing, we feel bound to advocate every means affording a check upon the traffic, and therefore shall personally give the amendment referred to a vote, others of course must do as they deem best; but the profession of faith which the Church makes, ought in itself to warrant every outside looker on safe in the calculation that intemperance, and all means to its continuance have no friends among the Saints.

June 27th then should find those who are called upon to vote on this question at the polls, and voting right on the question at issue. It is not made a party issue, nor does the controversy necessarily take on a political aspect, and therefore we violate no rule of fellowship or church polity in thus advocating the cause of sobriety and right.

No better monument to the memory of the man slain at Carthage, thirty-eight years ago, could his co-workers in the gospel vineyard build than to flow solidly together in one mind upon the side of the good against the evil in society. It is expected that Fayette township, in which Lamoni is situated, will give a fair majority in favor of the amendment.

WE publish in this issue an article from the pens of Brn. Malmstrom and Burt, of Utah, upon the subject of the Godhead, the conclusions of which we do not endorse, personally; nor do we understand the positions taken to be the doctrine of the Church. The article was sent us with the request to publish; and if published it would be taken that we did not object to its conclusions; upon this statement it was returned to the writers with the statement that the Church had taken position on the matter, that there were two persons in the Godhead, God, the Father; and Christ, the Son; and that we could not print the article without stating our objections to it, under the circumstances. This was agreed to by them by letter dated Springville, Utah, April 27th, 1892; we therefore violate no rule of courtesy in stating that the positions assumed by the article are not in harmony with the views of the Elders of the Church, which is the view of the Church.

The Fifth Lecture on Faith, whatever may be said of him who is stated to have written it, contains the accepted view of the Church on the subject of the Godhead; that of two personages, the "Father and the Son—the Father being a personage of spirit, glory, and power, possessing all perfection and fulness—the Son, who was in the bosom of the Father, a personage of tabernacle, made, or fashioned like unto man, or being in the form and likeness of man, or rather man formed after his likeness and in his image; he is also the express image and likeness of the personage of the Father, possessing all the fulness of the Father, or the same fulness with the Father."

All argument to make but one personage of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, must end disadvantageously, for this reason: the prayer of Christ clearly signifies that the completed work of his mission in his disciples was to make them one with, or in him, as he was one with, or in the Father:

"That they all may be one, as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us, that the world may believe that thou hast sent me."—John 17: 21.

This prayer if fulfilled according to the tenor of the article referred to would destroy at some time the identity of the disciples, and absorb them into the person of Christ, and there would be only one personage, and he be God, Christ, Holy Ghost and disciples all in one body. This is Buddhism. This destruction of identity is in antagonism to the idea of responsibility for agency conferred, which has been always taught with the gospel. It also virtually destroys the idea of rewards, or punishments; for if identities are not preserved, how can every man be judged and rewarded or punished "as his works may be."

The identity and distinct personality of God the Father, separate and apart from Christ the Son, are constantly presented in the speech and acts of Jesus, from the day he said, "Know ye not that I must be about my Father's business?" to the hour when he said: "Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit."

That the Apostle Paul so understood is clear from his writing:

"Afterward cometh the end, when he shall have delivered up the kingdom to God, even the Father: when he shall have put down all rule, and authority and power. For he must reign, till he hath put all enemies under his feet. The last enemy, death, shall be destroyed. For he saith, When it is manifest that he hath put all things under his feet, and that all things are put under, he is excepted of the Father who did put all things under him. And when all things shall be subdued unto him, then shall the Son also himself be subject unto him that hath put all things under him, that God may be all in all."—1 Cor. 15: 24-28.

BRO. J. W. CHATBURN, of Harlan, Iowa, son, wife and daughter-in-law, visited Elder David Whitmer, at Richmond, Missouri, on their way home, and after their return, in answer to a question from us, write about as follows:

"We are making progress in our preparations for church building here. I think we shall meet with good success.

"You asked the question; 'How did you like your visit with Father Whitmer?' It was one of the great events of my life to visit him and Richmond. I was well repaid for time and money expended in making the trip. We all thought we had had a splendid feast at Independence, but the visit to David Whitmer was like having the best of the wine at the last of the feast. We made ourselves known to his grandson and he prepared the way for us. We visited Bro. David in the forenoon; and again in the evening at his request. He remarked that we had brought a good spirit with us and he felt like talking. He did talk, and I learned many things that I did not know before about the rise of this work. One thing in particular; he says there were about forty or fifty members in the Church when organized on April 6th, 1830. We have been told and so recorded in history that there were only six members. He explained it this way,—there were only six Elders. He said that he baptized fourteen in Seneca Lake, a few days before the Church was organized. I asked his wife if she was present when the Church was organized on April 6th, 1830. She replied, Yes; and was a baptized member at that time. We asked him the question: Had Joseph Smith any manuscripts of any kind by him at the time of translating the Book of Mormon that he could read from?

"His answer was: 'No, Sir. We did not know anything about the Spaulding manuscript at that time.'

"We asked him if his testimony was the same now as it was at the time the Book of Mormon was published, regarding seeing the plates and the angel. He rose to his feet, stretched out his hands and said: 'These hands handled the plates, these eyes saw the angel, and these ears heard his voice; and I know it was of God.'

"That was the strongest testimony I ever heard, and I felt that he was telling the truth.

"We visited Col. Doniphan also. He was very glad to think that the Latter Day Saints thought enough of him to visit him now that he had become old. He told us that he had taken a great interest in reading the Kansas City papers during our Conference; and, said he, 'Don't you know that there is a wonderful change in the minds of the people; for I can remember the time that it would be all that your lives were worth to attempt to hold conference in the State of Missouri. He said Father Whitmer was a truthful man and the whole family were a credit to the city and country where they resided. He related some of his experiences with the Mormons. He remarked that Elder Rigdon was the most eloquent man he ever saw, but it took 'Joe Smith's brain to run things.' He told of the time he appealed for a writ of habeas corpus, for S. Rigdon. He, Rigdon, wanted to make a statement of his reasons why he wanted to be released. The Court House was full of mobbers; the Judge granted his request. He spoke about thirty minutes; and, said the Colonel, 'That laid in the shade anything I ever heard. And when he got through, nearly every one was weeping. The leader of the mob arose and said, 'Judge, let him go.' He then took his hat and took up a collection amongst them for Rigdon's expenses out of the State; and there was a hat full of money.' We quietly suggested, that was the power of God. 'You can think what you please. I think it was the power of eloquence,' said he.

"I asked him what he thought was the cause for the people wanting the Mormons out of the State. Was it because they were bad citizens, or did other causes exist that called for their removal?

"His answer was, 'The Mormons were in the main good, honest, and industrious citizens, and tried to do right, so far as I know; but like all other bodies of men, once in a while a bad man would creep in. But that was not the real cause for their expulsion. It was something of a political question with the citizens of the State. The Mormons were looked upon as Free Soilers, or Abolitionists; and it was not to the best interests to harbor within a slave state such an element of strength that the Mormons would be in a question touching the existence of that institution.' He thought this was the main cause.

I looked at him and thought I could somewhat realize what he looked like when at Far West, upon that memorable day that was to usher in the work of blood and murder in accordance with the findings of the court martial. He remarked that Lyman Wight was the lion of the whole crowd; that he did not believe our doctrine, but thought we had just the same rights as any other. This he always contended for, and he believed he was defending an honest man when he defended Joseph Smith; and now after all these years have passed away, 'I think still the same of him.'

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Sr. Martha E. Dike, writes an encouraging letter from Plum Hollow, Iowa, May 23d. She is confident in her faith in the gospel; but asks anxiously:

"Let us suppose that Bro. Joseph starts out preaching polygamy; how many of us do you suppose would be ready to hold up our hands with horror, and say: Well, I am done with Mormonism at once. I shall throw up the whole thing. I can't stand that?"

She thinks that another class would claim that they had foreseen it all along, &c.

Bro. R. J. Anthony wrote, May 16th:

"We are not losing ground amid the roaring of the News, (Deseret News). Bro. Short baptized two at Pleasant Grove, on the 10th, and I five at Provo, on the 12th, and more will come soon."

Bro. William Street, of Chester, Pennsylvania, writes May 20th, sending a lot of slips for the HOPE, and says:

"God bless the little Hopes, and their paper; the HERALD and its readers; the Advocate and its subscribers; all the household."

Bro. W. Vickery, of Plano, Illinois, writes:

"We are striving to keep up our meetings the same as ever. The more I labor for the cause the more desire I have to labor."

This is the testimony of all.

Bro. William Newton of Wyandotte, Kansas, says:

"We have rented the Opera House here for one year, a $100, and are putting forth an increased effort to build up the work. Bro. Luff has been invited to speak for us on two Sundays past, which he did with his usual liberty and clearness. His last sermon on Sunday last was a very excellent one. Bro. 'T. W.' and wife were here also, soon after Conference, and did us good; Bro. E. L. Kelley spoke once, also. We have baptized five since Conference, and others are waiting to come along."

Str. Minerva P. Winscot, wrote from Hall's Ridge, Indiana:

"Bro. Columbus Scott is with us now; he will leave soon for home. We had some good meetings at Hall's Ridge; there is a few here that believe, others have fallen away."

THE Evening Chronicle of St. Louis, Missouri, for May 11th contained an editorial review of an argument in the Protectionist, in favor of a protective tariff, in which review the Editor of the Chronicle indulged in a little quiet sarcasm, the point of which of most interest to us is contained in the following:

"Let us be more patriotic in the future, and do all we can to protect American industries. The importation of all books written by foreigners should be prohibited, and all such books now in the United States should either be destroyed or shipped out of the country. It may be objected that this would include the Bible. Some of us might miss the Bible, but if properly protected who can doubt that Yankee ingenuity would soon supply the want. A native American, Mr. Joseph Smith, got up a Bible some years ago that has largely taken the place of the old Bible in one of the western territories; and if Mr. Smith's Bible had been properly protected by prohibiting the use of any other, it would probably have largely increased his business. Many people believe that Mr. Smith's Bible is inferior to the Bible that we and our forefathers have loved and used so long, but surely no consistent protectionist will hesitate to promote American industry, whatever the results may be."

The Editor evidently knows nothing about Mr. Smith's Bible, as he calls it, but those who do know, while they would not ask the Government to prevent the issue and sale of the "old Bible our fathers loved so well," or ask protection for the sale of the one he covertly derides, are prepared to believe that if the people of the United States were fully alive to the importance of the issue at stake they would gladly pay heed to the teaching of the Book of Mormon, (the Bible of Joseph Smith), referred to.

FOR the benefit of those of the Saints interested in Mr. W. K. Lay, as the Elijah, as he claimed to be, we publish the following slip from the Sandwich, Illinois, Argus. It has considerable significance from the fact that the woman is the mother of Mr. Lay; and was to be the mother of a remarkably developed child, that was to give the information concerning the coming of Christ, as foretold by her son.

"Mrs. James Lay died Thursday night, after thirty days of fasting. This is the lady who was to bear the wonderful and marvelous child, foretold by the oldest son, who claims prophetic power. The funeral will be attended at the Presbyterian Church to-day, Saturday."

Mrs. Lay was a sister of Dr. Sedgwick, of Sandwich, who, it is said, when he found his sister persisting in her fast and likely to perish, interfered as a physician and her brother, and sought to restore her by administering food, but was too late. Bro. E. Banta, of Lamoni, was in Sandwich the night of her death, and states that considerable excitement existed concerning the affair. The Thursday night referred to would be the 18th of May. In addition to what we have inserted from the Argus, we give the following from the Chicago Tribune's special dispatches in its issue for May 20th:

Sandwich, Ill., May 19.—Last evening about six o'clock, Mrs. J. H. Lay died from voluntary starvation in this place. The circumstances leading to this terrible event, and, indeed, the history of the whole family for the past year, are peculiar.

About a year ago W. K. Lay, a son of the deceased, claimed to have received a direct revelation from heaven. According to this he was to prophesy the near approaching end of the world. His family supported and encouraged him in his assumptions, and in obedience to an alleged divine command sold their fine farm on which they were living, near State Center, Iowa. W. K. Lay then commenced the publication of a magazine called The Prophet's Warning, at Adrian, Michigan. From time to time he announced through the pages of this, new revelations which he claimed to receive. Some months ago he asserted that there would be born to his mother in this place, where she had recently come, a remarkable child, who would at the age of one year prophesy the second coming of Christ.

Our citizens paid but little attention to their vagaries, and they made no converts outside of their own family. But some four weeks ago, Mrs. Lay, anticipating the birth of the child, commenced to abstain from food, claiming that God had commanded her to do so until the child was born. Since that time she had taken no nourishment until yesterday, when her brother, Dr. W. W. Sedgwick, visited her and demanded that a stop should be put to the nonsense. Some beef tea was given her, the husband and son protesting; but it was too late; the deluded woman expired.

A post-mortem examination was held this morning, from which it appears that Mrs. Lay perished from starvation, and that her hopes of giving birth to a child were without foundation.

The affair has created a profound sensation among our people.

It would be just as well now for some of the readers of the HERALD, who have hoped that W. K. Lay were the Elijah, to get ready in mind for further failures in the direction of that hope.

We would like all the Saints, including those who may believe that Mr. Lay is the one that he makes claim to be, to understand, that as a man and as an officer in the Church, we have not the slightest objection to the Lord sending a message to men, when, where, and by whom he pleases, and in any manner pleasing to him. Nor have we any objection to any man doing any work he may be called to do; but we have a sufficient degree of faith in the work begun in 1830, to believe that were any messenger sent that in any way affected those received into the Church, there would be a sufficient nearness between the man, the message, and the way of communication, and the matters already revealed to the Church to identify the messenger and the work. We shall still await developments without compromising position or faith.

THE following is an Editorial from the Boston, Sunday Herald for March 16th, 1879, and is still so applicable to the condition of the religious sentiment of the people, as expressed in the methods employed to gather converts, that we believe a perusal of it by the readers of the HERALD will be beneficial:

NEW DIRECTION IN RELIGION.

"Perhaps there has been no time for many years in New England when the religious life is so perplexed as at present, or when the outlook on the whole is so sad. The old leaders in ecclesiastical circles are no longer the guides of the best intellectual life of the day; in most points they are blindly and hopelessly arrayed against it. Not many of them are aware that their "scheme of salvation" is at fault. They have little or no distrust of their system. They are perfectly willing to fight behind their comfortable barracks or attend to their pastoral duties, when the enemies of Christianity have to be fought in the open field and with weapons adapted to the necessities of modern thought and life. They use the blunderbuss when the only effective weapon is the breach loader, or the stone and sling when sabre-cuts alone can bring down the foe. No one can go far into social and literary circles or mingle much in the ranks of the people, who does not find that the religious questions of the hour require special treatment, and can only be met successfully by those who understand the currents of thought which now move men. The new statements in philosophy take one class; the force of what is ascertained by the tracing of evolution interests another class; the questions about the reconstruction of society occupies another; the defects in the expression of religious truth occupy still another; and every one is asking, from his individual point of view, how he can find his way to a religious belief that is not inconsistent with what he knows about nature and science and his own life. A religious teacher must have lived deeply into himself, deeply into the lives of others, deeply into the atmosphere of his time, who can be of much service to his fellow men, at the points where their necessity is greatest. It is too late for religionists to say that doubts proceed from a disordered intellect or an unsanctified heart. The men who doubt are the men who think and who are most anxious to believe: they do not doubt, as Hume did, as a kind of intellectual luxury; they doubt because they can not believe, and they can not believe because reason refuses assent to many current statements about personal religion, the grounds of religious truth, or the work of Christ in men's lives. Unless the Christian religion is made reasonable, they are compelled to depend upon the religion of nature, and the great want is some religious statement which shall dispose of a thousand and one petty objections, and again present religion four-square to the world. When a man is thus forced to wait for the solution of his doubts, he finds in the original constitution of his nature an enormous capacity for religion, and, if he does not wait till indifference gradually creeps over him, the testing time will prove a great help in pushing him forward at length into the ranks of the best believers.

"But the difficulty which those who are called to practically shape a new religion for themselves is to escape from becoming the victims of their own doubts. When a man believes that all religious truth is mixed with error, and that he can practically find the unvarnished truth nowhere, he becomes a cosmopolitan believer, which is only another name for a constitutional sceptic. He is too often caught in the depths of his own "divine despair." He is in an eddy, from whose fatal circles he can not escape. There was an admirable illustration of this in a discussion over the meeting of extremes very recently in the city. The notable leaders of opinion in the conservative and liberal ranks met together for a frank and manly statement of their differences, and had "a night of it." Each individual of each party knew he was right and circled round and round in his own little eddy of opinion as if he were out upon the broad sea, but, after all, whether it was for one side or the other, it was nothing more than a tempest in a teapot. Nothing was reached; no question was solved; no point was made; and, when the evening's talk was over, each one still whirled round in his own eddy, perfectly satisfied that he had in his own theory of life the necessary meeting-place of extremes. One can not but feel sad at this spectacle. It shows incapacity among many who have never yet doubted their own ability to deal with the questions of modern belief, to meet the real issue. It is not from either liberal or evangelical, not indeed from any extremist whatsoever, nor from any theorist in experimental or formal religion, that the larger statement of truth is to come which men are looking for. Men are usually right in what they affirm, but each one's basis is too narrow for the construction of a working religious system. The liberal emphasizes the order of nature, but ignores the higher facts of his spiritual life; the evangelical makes his experimental contact with spiritual facts in his own soul the basis of a religious scheme which is too narrow for the facts in the order of nature; the churchman again is too apt to shut himself up in his shell; each is hopelessly exclusive of the other; each fails at the point where the other succeeds; and each is too subjective or narrow in his views to see truth in its broad objective reality. The rock on which religion splits into antagonisms in New England is the narrow personal theorizing of those who attempt to teach Christianity. The outside observer looks on with amazement to see men contending for "a scheme of salvation" or a simple scheme of moral conduct, or a treadmill round of thinking, when their theories have almost no points of sympathy with the Christian religion, as it has stood forth for eighteen centuries in the history of the world. The atmosphere is too close, and each one, in his eddy, has overlooked the main current of traditional life in the Christian church. Little substantial advance can be made until the advocates of both liberal and evangelical Christianity take new ground. At present men are in the deadlock of conflicting theories of the nature and wants of human life, and no basis of union can be made by softening the terms of statement. The liberal has religion at one extreme and sees truth in it; the evangelical is at the other extreme, and has his own glimpse of truth, and sees 'millions in it;' until they each stand on new ground and breathe a new atmosphere, their differences can never be reconciled. Even if they could unite upon some particular theory about Christ, it would be for agreement, but as a rope of sand.

"It is to this point that the new direction of thought is leading to-day. Men want certainty in belief, but they also need breadth of statement. It is difficult to unite men in any statement of truth upon which each one shall put the same interpretation. This has been the secret of failure in all religious movements which have sprung out of Luther's reformation, and to-day, when so many lines of modern thought lead directly to religious questions, it is through breadth of statement alone that men can be united upon the great central facts in religion. But breadth of statement is not reached by the "don't believe" process. Historical Christianity gives breadth of statement because it presents the largest terms of belief. It is the local sect that is narrow; it is in continuous historical Christianity that the stream of belief is kept as wide and full and strong as it was in the beginning. In tracing this breadth of belief, you touch two facts. Human nature, which always bursts the bands of narrowness as a swollen stream cuts away the adjacent banks, only takes out of Christianity what it can assimilate on its spiritual side, and what in Christian truth or usage has taken hold of human life and improved it, is that in historical Christianity which men from many quarters are in search of to-day. But we are so far away from original Christianity, the churches of to-day are so little like the Church of the Apostles, that it is not easy to trace in existing organizations the pentecostal institution of the earliest days. Nor is it always evident that Christian leaders are prepared to interpret the thought and life of the hour on the side of its intelligent aspirations. It is the religious organization which has best interpreted the past, and which gives the best ground for people to stand on, the best protection and guidance for their religious instincts, that is destined to serve the religious portion of the community to the best purpose. It is here that each one must see for himself. It is at this point that inquiry is beginning to be searching and earnest. The breadth which comes from negation is not breadth. The breadth which comes from believing too much is distasteful to the disciples of reason. But it is felt that Christianity, in its historical lines of development, can show in its breadth of statement as to essential truths through different centuries what is the truth for the whole range of life which is most needed to-day. What men want is not partial statements of truth, loaded down with details, but those liberal and universal statements of truth which do not run counter to the cognate truths of nature and life. The growing belief seems to be that Christianity is the restoration of human life to its original freedom; not "a scheme of salvation," but the renewal in each man of the forces of life. Three-fourths of its energy is spent, indeed upon human conduct, but the other fourth is the renewal of life at its spiritual centre. It is in this way that what is old in religion, its breadth, its strength, its fulness, its tradition of life, give atmosphere and power to the life in which we now are. This is something objective and real. It used to be felt by the reformers that these elements were to be gathered out of the succulent air into 'the church of the future,' but it is now more and more agreed that the regeneration forces of humanity in the line of spiritual renewal are to be found in the breadth and integrity of truth as transmitted in historical Christianity. The point on which most anxiety may justly be felt is whether our religious leaders are conscious of the earnestness and sincerity of the plea for honest and unproselyting guidance that goes out to them from millions of hearts. The voice of the human is indeed heard with increased frequency from Christian pulpits, but we fear that it is still uncertain whether the leaders of historical Christianity are ready to rise above their ecclesiastical squabbles, and address themselves to the really vital questions which are in men's minds."

Correspondence.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa.,

May 18th, 1882.

Dear Brother:—I have just returned from a mission in York county, Pennsylvania, and Frederick City, Maryland. I was absent thirty-eight days, preached forty-three times, baptized five persons, and left others convinced. I baptized Mrs. Susan White and Miss Rebecca Singleton, in York county, Pa., and Miss Laura I. Cook, Miss Sallie A. Cook, and Miss Emma H. Boyed, in Frederick City, Maryland. I shall return there again in August, as I promised, Lord willing, where I expect to baptize others. I was greatly blessed with the Spirit, which assisted me in my preaching. I was much pleased with Bro. G. W. Crouse, at Frederick City. He is an old veteran, and firm in the faith. He has passed through many trials, but has held fast with unflinching integrity to what he knew to be true. He will be eighty years old on the 1st day of August, 1882. He was baptized, confirmed, and ordained an Elder, by Erastus Snow at Sleightonbury, Washington county, Maryland, in the Spring of 1838. Was ordained a Bishop at Quincy, Illinois, by Hyrum Smith, in 1839. Received into the reorganized Church in 1868; licensed by Joseph Smith. He is old and unable to preach, on account of a disease of the throat; but is doing all he can. May God bless him in his old age. As soon as I baptize a few more at Frederick City, I will organize a branch, and place him over it. He is well grounded in the work, and a good counselor.

Yours in bonds,

JOSEPH A. STEWART.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., May 28th, 1882.

Bro. Joseph Smith:—There are a few Saints living here, who are trying to live to the laws and enjoy the Spirit of God; while some act cool and seem to think light of the gospel, and are drawn aside by the vanity of this life. Temptations are plenty in this large city; but by the grace of God I will be on the right side, in the straight and narrow path. Our numbers do not increase very fast; we move slowly, but I hope surely. One was added to the branch. May God bless her with his Spirit, to testify to the divinity of the work. Our meetings are not very large, but the Spirit is with us here to-day. Two of the Brigham Young kind met with us to-day, but they kept quiet; on leaving the hall they put some of Elder Morgan's tracts under the hymn book; but they did it rather sly; they do not come out like men. I think they are afraid of the truth. I would like to see some Elder in this field that will handle Utah and her wife system without gloves. What we want is more meetings. We have only one here now. Utah folks have two, and advertise as well. The adversary is not lazy. I have sent them a few of the "Polygamic Revelation tract,—Fraud! Fraud!" and I think Bro. Morgan don't like them. My prayer is that God will open their eyes to the truth; as I believe there are some of them honest. To this end I will work, watch and pray. May the blessings of our heavenly Father be your happy lot, is the prayer of your brother in Christ,

NOAH COOKE.

PITTSBURG, Pa.,

May 27th, 1882.

Bro. Joseph Smith:—This will evidence that I am still among the living. I am striving to feel thankful for the measure of health and strength afforded me. I have just returned from a seven weeks mission at Greenville, Mercer county, Pennsylvania, the home of Bro. W. H. Garrett, who, together with his wife, (formerly Emma Hulmes), are really striving for the hope of the gospel. At their instance, I visited the place where they reside, Greenville, about one hundred miles north of this place. It is a rural town of 5,000 inhabitants. I was informed that it is the residence of twenty preachers,—they being the pastors of various scattered congregations in adjacent villages and hamlets. There is also a college of the Lutheran order. I believe about all of the leading denominations are represented. Bro. Garrett has been here as a telegraph operator about four years. He was promoted from here to the W. W. Telegraph office in Pittsburg, with increased compensation. But the railroad requested his return to Greenville, the road agreeing to make the addition to his wages. As the business of his office required his whole time week days, and part of the Sabbath, he could not make any arrangements to preach himself; and as it appeared to him and Sr. Emma, that Greenville should be warned, by being offered the gospel of life before they might leave it, they requested me to visit them and show the people the path that leadeth to the gates of the city that was seen of old; which I strove to do, showing the leading points or principles of the gospel of the kingdom of God. I concluded the effort by a one hour and half discourse, upon the "introduction of the dispensation of the fulness of times," which of necessity involves additional and continued revelation, as the period of the promised gathering of Israel and the restitution of all the things spoken of by all the prophets since the world began. There are three weekly papers published in Greenville. Each paper advertised our meetings every week, and the subject upon which the Elder would dilate. Whatever may be the ultimatum, I feel satisfied that the word was timely spoken, of its fitness and adaptation to the case, the day that comes must reveal. A very reputable and intelligent lady gave her name for baptism; but Satan hindered. He was not disposed to allow any interference with the modes of worship in the domain where he has held undisputed sway. I do not deem it advisable to give the mode of opposition brought to bear in the case of the lady mentioned above; it was not only unseemly, but under the circumstances of the case, cruel and vicious. Surely Satan in coming down hath great wrath. I do not think the case is yet ended. As said Paul, they can do nothing against the truth but for it. Every effort to stop the work is an attempt to stay the hand of the Almighty, who has assured us no power shall stay his arm. Of the fact that the truth will prevail, I feel as assured as I live. "The wind bloweth where it listeth, and we hear the sound thereof, but can not tell whither it cometh, or whether it goeth. So is every one who is born of the Spirit." Its testimony is tangible and positive to those who receive it. Every son and daughter of the Most High, holding covenant as they do with the heavens, "They shall all know me from the least to the greatest. I will be to them a God, and they shall be to me a people; for I will be merciful to their unrighteousness, and their sins and their iniquities will I remember against them no more forever." Ever praying for the success of Zion's weal.

Yours as ever,

JOSIAH ELLS.

Bro. Editor:—As the Herald is an indispensable, and a great source of comfort, and a beaming light to us on this life's journey, and as well as spiritual food, and teacher, we feel strengthened by its precious teaching; especially when we do not often meet in a sociable capacity. I feel by the present state of things in the state and district that we can not give a very encouraging report of the latter day work; and when looking back at our conduct in bringing a reproach on the Church, such as might be avoided by putting the blame on the guilty and excusing the law, and not shielding the guilty to the injury of all, or the destruction of the Church, by the misconduct of two or three, and the guilty party failed to make a confession, because some of the offended did not hold their tongues and bring all under condemnation before the law; forgetting that part which saith, "woe by whom offense cometh." But this teaches us an important lesson. Shall we lose our salvation and turn from our duty, when we know that our salvation depends on our perseverance and industry and honesty. No; never give up to the enemy while life lasts and the light of the gospel beckons us onward and onward under the banner of the christian faith. When contemplating and bringing to memory the past testimony given us of God of this work; at times we wonder in surprise, and the visions of eternity open to our views, with their renewed assurance of God's promised inheritance in the future life.

Dear Saints, let us press onward with a full purpose of heart. The testimonies which I have in the Reorganized Church is most precious to me. When I first embraced it, and still I have the assurance if faithful to the end at time when brought down by affliction, as it were nigh unto death, this testimony was my anchor and deliverance. I have witnessed by faithful prayers of the faithful, bringing consolation and joy with healing and power with peace that passeth understanding. O, how unworthy is man, and prone to depart from the law. O, Lord, pardon and redeem us, and we praise thy holy name.

I believe if some brother would come to Nevada and stay for the summer and visit the branches on his way about once a month it would be a means to gather congregations out side the church and bring unity within. We would welcome and support one with a greatest pleasure.

CLEAR WATER, Antelope Co., Neb.,
May 16th, 1882.

Bro. Joseph:—I believe you stated in the Opera Hall at Independence, that Sidney Rigdon had no connection with the Church until two years after its organization. I thought then you made a mistake, and when I mentioned it to you at Lamoni subsequently, you requested me to look into the matter and ascertain; which I have done to my satisfaction. My grandfather, Lyman Wight, was nearly associated with Sidney Rigdon when in the Campbellite Church; and my grandmother, wife of Lyman Wight, who now resides with my mother, near Oakdale, Nebraska, told me a few days ago that she remembers distinctly that Sidney Rigdon was baptized the same day herself and husband were; but perhaps not by the same person, as there were several baptizing at the same time. Grandfather says in his journal, which I have before me, in speaking of moving to a new place.

"When I had my goods about half loaded, there came along four men, namely: P. Pratt, O. Cowdery, P. Whitmer and Ziba Peterson, and brought with them the Book of Mormon, which they wished to introduce to us. I desired they would hold on until I got away, as my business was of vital importance, and I did not wish to be troubled with romances, nor idle speculations. But nothing daunted, they were not to be put off, but were as good natured as you please. Curiosity got uppermost, and I concluded to stop for a short time. We called a meeting, and one testified that he had seen angels, another that he had seen the plates, and that the gifts were back in the Church again, &c. The meeting became so interesting that I did not get away till the sun was about an hour high at night, and it was dark before I arrived at my new home. But I amused myself by thinking that the trouble was over, and that I should not see them again for a long time, supposing they would start the next morning for the western boundaries of the state of Missouri. But in this I was very much disappointed. But to describe to you the scenes of the next seven weeks in which one scene would be as interesting as another, would fill quite a large volume; I shall therefore content myself by saying; that they brought the Book of Mormon to bear upon us; and the whole common stock family was baptized; and during the seven weeks they tarried they succeeded in building up a church of one hundred and thirty members; myself and family were baptized by P. Pratt on the 14th day of November 1830."

This would of course place the baptism of Sydney Rigdon on the above date; and other circumstances seem to corroborate this. The revelation given to Pratt, Cowdery, Whitmer and Peterson, to go on this mission bears date October, 1830. (D. and C., sec. 31). Mother Smith's history, chapter 38, carries the idea that they started soon after receiving the revelation. In December, 1830, a revelation was given to Joseph Smith and Sydney Rigdon, from which I infer that Sidney was then a member. All this harmonizes and confirms the statement that Sidney Rigdon was baptized November 14th, 1830. This gives the Spaulding romance believers no encouragement, as the Book of Mormon was published some time before this; and I think these things can be relied upon as facts.

You are at liberty to use this at your discretion.

May 21st.—To-day is the Sabbath, but the swollen condition of Elkhorn river keeps me from my appointment, so I write for your column. When last I wrote I was many miles from here, in Texarkana, Arkansas. As I left that place it was with singular feelings that I sped on towards the place whence my brethren had been driven out by an infuriated mob. On March 1st I arrived at Bagwell Station, and the first greeting I received was from one of the bystanders, who proposed to the rest that "We box him up and send him to Utah where he belongs." I thought it rather a rough introduction, but made no reply. Bro. B. L. Billingsly and his son met me at the station, and seating ourselves in his vehicle, we proceeded along very pleasantly till within five miles of home, when the hack upset, and the team run away. It now being dark, the horses were soon lost from sight, and were not recovered until next day; so we walked home, where we arrived about ten p. m. Still rough! I was made welcome by the Saints of Red River Branch, and my stay with them was a very pleasant one to me. We held five meetings, and were unmolested. I heard much talk in regard to former troubles, both by members and non-members, and can not see that our brethren can be justly condemned for their actions in the matter.

On March 9th, in company with Bro. Billingsly, I started for Silver Hill Branch, Arkansas, on horse back. After some trouble with high water, and lying out all night, we arrived late at night on the 10th at Bro. R. H. Wolf's, where we were entertained with consideration. The Saints of Silver Hill Branch are zealous and kind; and may they increase in wisdom and understanding. We commenced meetings immediately, and during our stay we held five meetings, and had the pleasure of seeing five souls united with the Church by baptism.

Returning to Red River, we held five more meetings in peace; and on March 23d, took our departure. Bro. Brannon taking me to Clarksville, where I took train for Texarkana, thence to St. Louis, where I arrived on the night of the 24th. Spent the time pleasantly with the Saints of St. Louis and Belleville, also meeting Bro. Scarcliff, Montague, Springer, Thomas and Gurlley, on their way to General Conference. We attended the St. Louis Conference, which was a good one; but ere we adjourned we were made sad by the news that Sister Roe, of Alton, had been called away by death.

April 3d, Bro. Scarcliff and I accompanied father Whitehead to Alton, to be present at the funeral. We left, as we spoke upon this occasion, that it was well with our departed sister. Our visit with the Saints at Alton would have been pleasant, but for the sad event which called us there. Returned to the City on the 5th, and at night, in company with Bro. Beard and Anderson, and the missionaries mentioned above, we started for Independence. It is needless to say we enjoyed the conference, and our spiritual strength was renewed. Though we did not vote for everything that passed, we hope all was done for the best.

Leaving Independence on the 17th, in company with several of the Saints bound for different parts, we arrived in St. Joseph, Missouri, about noon, staid all night, partaking of the hospitality of Bro. Burlington. The next morning took our departure, yet in company with some of the Saints. In the afternoon arrived at Ridgeway, and there I parted with my traveling companions, expecting to have a pleasant visit with my uncle, L. L. Wight and family; but when I arrived there I found my cousin Wallis on his death bed. All night we wept and prayed beside his bed; but just about daylight he departed this life. He was a young man of good character and excellent qualities, beloved by all who knew him. On the 20th we performed the last sad rite, and left him to rest till Christ shall call him hence. Bro. Springer officiated, and his words were full of comfort.

I visited Lamoni, Davis City, Nebraska City, and Galland's Grove, and arrived at home the 11th inst.; where I found all well, and getting along rather better than I expected. I left home again on the 13th, and came here on business, where I have been since. Preached once last Sunday.

I think I can see my way into the field again in a short time. One thing is certain, I can not stay here with the responsibility of the mission upon me. My brethren appointed to go with me will soon be off. I know the privations and sufferings they will meet in that field. I can not stay behind. I must share it with them. I may suffer loss by going; but go I must. It is well to pity the poor Elder in the field; but oh, who can sympathize with that poor Elder who remains at home conscious that he ought to go. My all is in this work, and so commending those I love to the mercy of God, I will take the field,—and the consequences of the act—as cheerfully as I can.

Pray for me ye who love to pray. I am sincerely in earnest.
HEMAN C. SMITH.

FLINTVILLE, Wisconsin.

Bro. Joseph:—I have been thinking of writing you for some time, but knowing that you have many to transpass on your valuable time, many letters to read, I have deferred until now. I am some better than when I wrote last, but have not fully recovered; and I can tell you it seems good to be free from pain, even if not able to do much. It is nearly a year since I have done anything to speak of. No man, rich or poor, ought to complain of hard times who has his health. The man who is able to do a good day's labor is rich, no matter if he don't own anything. It does certainly seem to me that any Latter Day Saint, whom the Lord has blessed with health and prosperity, ought to consider their obligations to God. How any Saint can withhold one tenth of their annual interest for the advancement of the cause, is more than I can understand. I think it safe to say that such were never more than half converted.

If you have back numbers of the Herald for March 1st and 15th, 1882, which you can spare as well as not, wish you would send me one of each, I want them for my neighbors to read. I have sent mine down east to my relatives.

Yours in the hope of eternal life,
W. FRANKLIN

Bro. Joseph:—Please spare a little space in the Herald. I wish to know where the meeting Hall is in Chicago. I do not know any address. If the Saints read this, one of the brethren that lives there, please write me a letter and do me a great favor. I meet twice with disappointment; do not wish to do it any more. Tell street and number address to George Diethelm, in care of L. Dicke, No. 27, La Grange, Cook Co., Ills.

NORTH HENDERSON, Ills.,
May 19th, 1882.

Editor Herald:—There evidently is a misunderstanding on the part of some of the Bishop's Agents, and for this reason I make the following inquiry through the Herald of those who may better understand. It will be remembered that about one year ago there was a circular sent out by the Bishopric and the Twelve, who had been consulting together relative to the paying out of moneys by the Agents of the Bishop; and the instructions contained in said circular were to the effect that all money received by said Agents should be sent to the Bishop. Now in view of this many of the districts appointed District Treasurers, whose duty should be to receive and disburse moneys to assist the spiritual work in the District. Now I see from the reports of the several Agents in Herald of May 15th, that a number of the Agents are credited by funds paid out by them as late as 1882, to those laboring in the ministry. For a better understanding withal, and that we may all work uniformly, will some one please throw some light on the foregoing, and oblige, INQUIRER.

EAST DES MOINES, IOWA,
May 18th, 1882.

Bro. Joseph Smith:—I have very good news to write to you. Six more souls have been added to our number since I wrote you last. Bro. Stamm baptized them. All young. We have much to be thankful for, and praise God that His cause is going on. At the meeting before those young people were baptized, the Spirit was poured out with much power; the Saints were greatly strengthened, especially the weak ones. Bro. Stamm preached to a room full in our house last Sunday; an old gentleman the next day said, "I have heard that text preached from,—I thought you had a Bible of your own to preach from."

We had three meetings last Sunday; also the same the Sunday before. Another house has been opened for us to preach in; the people are not members of the church, but are investigating; the gentleman said, "The next time you preach here, our house will not hold all that will come." My husband preached there one week ago last Sunday; that remark was addressed to him; he had good liberty in preaching. We have purchased a lot, and the lumber to build a church, have some money paid down, and more subscribed towards it; now if our brothers in other branches, would aid us with a few "lifters," and "boomers," we would be very much pleased, and thankful for the same. My desire and intention is to live so I may be worthy to receive a crown in the celestial glory. Praying we may all meet and have a part in the first resurrection. I am your sister in the one faith.
LUCY B. MERRILL.

MOORHEAD, MONONA Co., IOWA
May 18th, 1882.

Dear Herald:—Will you allow me to offer a few thoughts for the consideration of your readers. As I look back over my past life and see the mistakes made, I am often led to wonder why it was that I gave way so easily; and I am led to the conviction that it was through a lack of that knowledge, necessary for each one, that we may be better prepared for the emergencies—be they what they may.

Last evening, while exchanging thoughts on the plan of salvation with one not of the faith, we were asked many questions, which to me seemed difficult of solution; yet they caused a train of thought which seemed to open up the subject in a different light from what it had been viewed before, and proved the benefit of thus exchanging views.

We talked with another who at one time was an adherent of the gospel; but now, sad to relate, is a defender of infidelity! Claiming as a reason for his departure, the unchristian acts of others of the "faith!" How sad it must be to reflect that by our acts we thus cause some to turn aside! What a warning to us to strive "for the faith once delivered to the Saints."

May the work roll on, and we all be alive to our duties, is my prayer. In bonds,
JOHN W. WIGHT.

FALL RIVER, Mass.,
May 19th, 1882.

Dear Herald and Readers:—I as a brother in the faith for over ten years, if nothing more have three things to be glad of. First, our success in the eyes of our beloved country over the Utah Mormons. Second, the prospects of having the Herald, a now semi-monthly, to a weekly. Third, and not least, that Zion's cause brightens as the end approaches. I also feel thankful that we have a good house now re-dedicated to the Lord, and signs of paying all the cost in a near future,—whole cost, including lumber, masons, painters, carpenters, and new seats, approximates $550; and the building looks and is $1000 better. Splendid but cheap chandeliers; fine texts on the wall. On the left is the one about "Another angel flying through the midst of heaven" &c., and on the right "This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached," &c. The chapter and verse given under each. In a magnificent archway, all done by painting, is this motto "Holiness unto the Lord." A fine pulpit made by Bro. George Bosworth, who is also a grainer, and who did all inside painting save the texts and mottoes referred to above. We had a heavenly sitting together on the 14th of this month, to partake of sacrament, to pray, talk, and sing of the goodness of God and his Son. The inclement weather deterred us not. Bro. John Smith made a beautiful prayer, and Bro. John Gilbert talked with tears of love. God bless you.

On Monday, Bro. Enos A. French, of the Laguna Branch, was ordained to the Aaronic Priesthood.

Bro. Joseph F. Burton resigned the presidency of Southern California District, and Bro. Gland Rodger was appointed to fill his place as president. A vote of thanks was tendered to Bro. Burton for his constant labors in trying to build up the cause in this district; and also to his wife as a helpmeet in the work.

Resolved that all the priesthood in the district assist the president in the district as much as is possible, to do so.

After considerable talk upon the representation question, it was resolved unanimously, that this conference adopt the report of the first committee in full, as presented to conference in April, 1881.

That we hereby rejoice to find the present condition of the work in Southern California District to be good and promising success, with strong faith among the Saints, and much inquiry among the people. Although we feel the work has been much injured by contradictory writing and teaching on doctrinal points, by the standing spiritual authorities of the Church in the East, unsettling the faith of many here, this bringing more or less confusion; all of which we hope to see corrected speedily and wisely.

The subject of tithing was talked to for quite a length of time, after which a show of hands were taken to see how many were willing to commence this year to keep the law of tithing in accordance with their own views of the law, and quite a large number expressed their willingness to do so.

Conference then adjourned subject to the call of president, as to time and place. Thus ended one of the most peaceable and quiet sessions of conference that it has been our good luck to attend.

There in the presence of from two to three hundred people, Bro. Lambert read Matthew fourth chapter, using the fourth verse for a text. In the afternoon at half past two o'clock, he resumed the same discourse and continued till four o'clock, when all present were ready to agree with the Governor of the feast, that the best wine had been presented last.

The committee appointed to ascertain the propriety of sustaining an Elder in the district, reported. The following is a copy of their report after amended and adopted by the conference:

Bro. A. D. Hougas and E. Weed were assigned a mission in the Fen neighborhood.

Whereas, There has been complaints made on account of the failure upon the part of the Priests and Teachers not visiting, as required in the law; and whereas, we believe that something should be done for the purpose of aiding the branches in sustaining the spiritual life and a goodly behavior upon the part of the entire membership;

The stones are of various sizes, some really as large as a man's fist, while others are quite small. The most of them are white flint, a stone that is not found in this part of Indiana. Many of Mr. Smith's windows were broken and several shingles knocked off his roof. In the immediate vicinity of the house more than a barrel of these stones can be gathered. $2,714 24

Total receipts.....	$2,841 54
Expenditures.....	$2,714 24

Balance due Chapel account..... $127 30

There is still due Sr. Mary Lewis, loan, $200, and probably a small balance due Mr. G. W. Bostwick, on metal roof.

In 1877 the Chapel lot was purchased at a cost of $500, a foundation laid at a cost of near $300, and near $40 left in the hands of Thos. N. Hudson, $35 of which was turned over to W. W. Blair, as credited in foregoing receipts, and the balance was used, by vote of the Salt Lake City Branch, for Church purposes, as may be seen by Branch Record.

The original estimate in 1877, for purchasing the lot and building the chapel without a vestibule, recess, and privy, without painting, seating, or furnishing, also without gas fixtures or a fire proof roof, was $5,302 91, as per estimate left in my hands. Had these latter been added, it would have increased the said estimate to not less than $6,150. The chapel as it now stands has cost probably a little less than $3,700. I have not the exact amounts of receipts and expenditures prior to 1881 at hand, and therefore can only give them approximately.

BORN.

PHILLIPS.—At Chicago, Illinois, March 5th, 1882, to Bro. T. A. and Sr. Emily Phillips, a daughter; named Helena Mabel.

LIGHTOWLER.—At Stockton, San Joaquin county, California, May 7th, 1882, to Joseph and Sr. Martha Lightowler, a son.

MARRIED.

GORHAM.—KELLOGH.—On the 18th of May, 1882, by Elder J. S. Roth, at his residence, Bro. S. N. Gorham, of Sheridan, Poweshiek county, Iowa, to Miss Orpha E. Kellogg, of Inkerman, Dundas county, Canada.

JACOBS.—WILSON.—At the residence of the bride's parents, Lamoni, Decatur county, Iowa, May 3d, 1882, by Elder J. S. Snively, Mr. H. R. Jacobs, of Keokuk, Iowa, and Sr. Alice Wilson, daughter of Bro. and Sr. George Wilson, formerly of Keokuk.

See the bridegroom stands erect,
See his brow with honor stamped,
He no other bride expects,
He no other bride doth want.
Sweet their union, pure their pleasure,
Heart with hand to each they give;
Each one's heart the other's treasure,
May they thus forever live.

DIED.

CARRICO.—At the residence of Mr. Byron C. Adams, near Logan, Harrison county, Iowa, where he and his loved companion had made their home for many years, enjoying the society and tender care of their two daughters, Almira and Jane, honored wives of Byron C. and Addison Adams, sons of the late Bro. J. M. and Sr. Hannah Adams, February 22d, 1882, Bro. Thomas Carrico. Our lamented brother was in his eighty-first year. On the morning of February 22d, he seemed as full of vigor as he had been for years, ate a hearty breakfast, and within two hours from that time the sands of life had ceased to run. Without premonition, and but momentary pain, he slept the peaceful sleep of the just; and indeed but few could be better prepared for the change than he. A few days before, he had assisted the writer in administering to his afflicted and aged companion, who still lingers behind him, longing and waiting for the moment when their faithful and loving spirits shall join each other in that eternal bond of union, where they shall together wait for the redemption of their bodies. He was born in Beverly, Massachusetts, in 1801; obeyed the gospel of Christ in 1832 or 33; was ordained a Teacher in 1837, High Priest in 1845; and of course passed through all the dark hours of the Church, but unflinchingly clung to the faith, and waited with tireless zeal for the renewal of that divine light which should call the scattered and divided fragments of the Church together again. He hailed that light with joy. And girded on his armor afresh, and joined the little band whom God had called as his remnant to complete the task of warning the nations, and calling in the wanderers. His faith in God was implicit as the trust of a child. His life was well worthy of imitation, and his end was peace. He is missed sadly,—missed by his loved ones at home, and by all who knew him and could appreciate his worth. He was laid away in the little grave yard near his home. The funeral services were conducted by Elder P. Cadwell. At the request of his family, Elder Derry preached his funeral sermon, on the 19th of March, 1882. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord."

CHAS. DERRY.

LOVELL.—At Chariton Branch, Iowa, May 19th, 1882, Bro. Ezra, son of Bro. Ekin and Sr. Elizabeth Lovell, aged 15 years, 4 months and 3 days. He was baptized July 20th, 1879, by Bro. George Spencer, and remained faithful to the last. Funeral sermon by Bro. John R. Evans.

KJERSGAARD.—In Payette Valley, Ada county, Idaho, March 18th, 1882, of consumption, Bro. Christian A. Kjeragaard. He was born in Denmark, May 17th, 1724, was baptized May 25th, 1874, by Elder J. F. Clengback. He leaves a wife and eight children. Funeral services were conducted by G. W. Grammis of the M. E. Church.

GROOM.—At Buffalo, Scott county, Iowa, 9:25 a. m. May 10th, 1882, Bro. Richard Groom. He was born in England, August 10th, 1810; was re-baptized at Buffalo, January 15th, 1861, and ordained an Elder June 15th, 1861, by Elder W. J. Ruby and E. Page. He was a regular and faithful attendant upon the meetings of the branch, when health permitted. He died conscious and at peace.

A CELESTIAL REVELATION.

MR. GOOBER—as the story goes—lived in the Mormon country. He had but one wife, and never thought of taking any more till one day an elder told him it was his religious duty to seal unto himself a few others. Mr. Goober went home and sadly informed his wife what the elder had said, and Mrs. Goober said she had no objection, provided the elder would come round and argue the case with her piously. Goober told the elder, and the elder dropped around. He smiled sweetly as Mrs. Goober advanced to meet him. The next thing he knew he was skipping around the room with his coat slit up the back and his hat knocked into pi, while Mrs. Goober wielded the broomstick. He finally jumped out of a window, and escaped with his life, a sadder and a wiser man. The next time he met Goober he told him he had had a celestial revelation by which Goober was relieved from the necessity of taking any more wives—Mrs. Goober would count for almost one thousand in the New Jerusalem.

POWER OF WILL.

Happy the people who keep themselves so well in hand that they can maintain a calm exterior under the most temper-trying circumstances! They are never excited over anything. Some govern themselves on some subjects, but not others. Very much can be done by culture to give the will entire control over the feelings. One of the best means of culture is the persistent withdrawing of the mind from the subject which produces the emotion, and in concentrating it elsewhere. The man or woman who persistently permits the mind to dwell on disagreeable themes, only spites himself or herself. Children of course have less control, and parents and teachers must help them to turn their attention from that which excites them to something else; but adults, when they act like children, ought to be ashamed of themselves. We should master our feelings—not allow them to master us.

IF WE WOULD.

If we would but check the speaker
When he spoils his neighbor's fame;
If we would but help the erring,
Ere we utter words of blame;
If we would, how many might we Turn from paths of sin and shame.
Ah, the wrongs that might be righted,
If we could but see the plea!
Ah, the pains that might be lightened,
Every hour and every day;
If we would but hear the pleading,
Of the hearts that go astray!
In each life, however lowly,
There are seeds of mighty good;
Still we shrink from soul's appealing
With a timid "if we could,"
But a God who judgeth all things, Knows the truth is "if we would."
Salem, (Mass.) Register.

The Atonement.

"In whom we have redemption through his blood—even the forgiveness of sins."—Col. 1: 14.

The doctrine of forgiveness of sins has been and is one of the great objections to the gospel system; its supposed absurdity being often flippantly dwelt upon by all classes of opposers of the religion and claims of Jesus of Nazareth. The claim is made that it would be unnatural, contrary to reason and the law and course of nature, having its origin in priestcraft and ignorance, a desire to escape the force of God's immutable law as written in nature and demonstrated in our every day experience, as well as the penalty to follow wrong in the world which is to come, on the one hand; and the priest who promises absolution on any condition, on the other hand.

The writer feels under no necessity to apologize for the terrible prostitution of this doctrine through ignorance, fear or cupidity, in the long dark ages of the past; neither to censure for the honest sceptic; but finding it inseparably connected with the purest system of religious faith the world has ever known, as attested by his own experience, desires to be able to give a reason for the hope that is in him with regard to this somewhat difficult problem, and has sought in prayer and by the study of the word to overcome the objections that naturally existed in his own mind, and offers a few thoughts that have been presented in support of the claim that the doctrine of atonement and reconciliation for human sins is true and not false.

1st. We find ourselves projected in a world where sin abounds. No argument is necessary to prove this, if we admit, sin to be a "transgression of law." 2d. We, by nature and not by volition, are subject to this law of sin, and consequent woe, so far as we may reason, or as has been revealed, we had no option in the projection of our being subject to these conditions of sin and pain. Reason but voices scripture in this. Hear Paul's belief and testimony: "For the creature was made subject to vanity, not willingly, but by reason of him who hath subjected the same in hope." Rom. 8: 20, 21-23. In hope of what? That the creature itself shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption, &c., waiting for the adoption; to wit, the redemption of our body "from the law of sin and pain." Now are we sinners? Violators of law? For sin is a transgression of law." A few facts in human experience are worth more perhaps than theories. As a youth, in ignorance I did that which I did not until afterward learn to be a transgression of God's law; I may have violated my parent's commands, but to me it was a parent's law and subject to a penalty in so far as I then knew, which they only could inflict. It is said "that where no law is (known) sin is not imputed;" that by a knowledge of law, sin is had." Parents could enjoin obedience, and punish disobedience—vague ideas of a God who punished sin, if you knew what it was, by roasting you forever after death, were among the early recollections; but having no relation to a knowledge of the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus; but when that glorious perfect law dawned upon my comprehension and understanding, then, and not till then, did I begin to understand the real nature of sin, and know that I was a transgressor of a higher law than had yet been manifested to me. When I through faith began to understand that which I had before doubted, the existence of God, of the absolute purity of these manifestations to me, they began to reveal the wide difference between the natural, sinful estate, and the pure life which the high law of God demanded. Here then was I, like Alma of old, "racked with eternal torment. Yea, I saw that I had rebelled against my God and had not kept his holy commandment."—Alma 17: 2. Was there no separation from the sins that had now become hateful to me? Was there no reversal of the past record, no reconciliation with the higher law and its author? And I thought: why, the author of my being, sinful as it was, judged by the revealed standard, was also the author of this law. Yes, it was true, that the creature was made subject to vanity, not willingly, i.e., I had no option in the matter. Then does God my maker owe it to me to make provision for the cancellation, or the sins against a law of which I had hitherto been ignorant? Reason would say so; the original pure gospel of reconciliation says so; "God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself, not imputing their former trespasses unto them."—2 Cor. 5: 18, 19. How different the sound of this gospel from that of the creeds that had fostered and nourished my infidelity.

In Book of Mormon, page 104, the good King Benjamin says: "For behold and also his blood atoneth for the sins of those who have fallen by the transgression of Adam, who have died not knowing the will of God concerning them, or who have ignorantly sinned." Paul in Heb. 10: 26 says: "If we sin willfully, after that we have received a knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more for us a sacrifice for sins." This would do away forever with the idea that the doctrine of atonement encourages vice through promise of easy absolution. Men may misunderstand, or wrest the Scriptures, but "the law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul," when properly understood.

And this brings us to a consideration of the question of atonement by blood, the ceremonial law concerning it; and why, or how the blood of Christ does atone for human sin. In the record concerning the descendants of the first families of earth, of whom God proposed to make a people for himself, after the deliverance from Egyptian bondage; God's obligations to his creatures and man's necessities being the same then as now, a provision of sacrifice of animals was introduced, not that the blood of bulls and of goats could in fact take away the effect of sin, but a covenant was made by Jehovah that sin should not be imputed, if this law of types and shadows should be adhered to until the time of reformation, given not as an end, but means to an end; "a schoolmaster," Paul says, "to bring them to Christ;" a law of bondage, or of discipline. My reason can not assent to, neither does the highest interpretation of the Scriptures compel the idea that the blood of animals, although possessing powers of cleansing naturally, peculiar only to that element, has any power to cleanse or absolve from transgression of moral law, and am willing to say as much concerning the blood of Christ. The blood that flowed on Calvary was the end of that long schooling of types and sensual ceremonies that could only appeal to a people who showed first, at the foot of Sinai, while Moses was in the mount, the deep corruption, or low standard of human life that had been brought out of Egypt. The memory of the wonders in Egypt and on their journey could not restrain that lustful, shameless orgy and nude dance to that Egyptian image, the god of lust, which the people had caused Aaron to make. And the whole course of God's dealings with them up to the time of their rejection of the giver and exponent of the perfect law, shows how much better this law was which infidels sneer at to-day, than the appreciation of the people to whom it was given.

The blood of Christ cleanses from sin the same as the waters of baptism wash them away. The saving power is in the faith that renders obedience to the covenant of God to man secure.

Jesus said, "If any man will do the will of God he shall know of the doctrine." God's promises are laid upon the conditions of fulfillment of the terms of the everlasting covenant. We might urge in our way of false reasoning many times against the covenants of God as revealed in nature. Does it not superficially look as though the decree that man should earn his bread by the sweat of his brow, was not the best way, by a God who was as able to grow grapes as thorns, or figs as thistles. Yet even Mr. Ingersoll, with his massive contempt for the Jewish Jehovah, in the face of fact and of power, can apologize for, or well knows the penalty that is sure to follow the attempt to avoid or abrogate the decree, either in want, or the many difficulties that idleness entails. Mr. Ingersoll complains even of the only God he knows anything about, and is reported as saying lately, that the master power in the universe did not "do as well as he could have done, in making disease catching instead of good health." This is just as consistent as some of the arguments used against the gospel system; but the fact of power is revealed as against such flippant sophistry. Why did not God make things to suit the notions of everybody? I believe it is the part of true wisdom to recognize the facts and govern ourselves accordingly. Behold the character of God's representative; hear him when he says, "If any man will do the will of God he shall know." Why not test him? Does he ask obedience to a line of action detrimental to human interest or purity? I only know that the truth can only be ascertained by the application of the test. Look at the cloud of intelligent and pure witnesses that have tried and are satisfied. The gospel truth and purity may be established if we are only willing to be, as Mr. Ingersoll would say, "honor bright and fair."

I may not logically prove that an atonement has been made, but I believe I can show logically the necessity of one; and that by a fair effort and trial that an atonement has been made. The primal scripture meaning of the word is "a reconciliation." This reconciliation is to be made on the part of man. "God was in Christ reconciling the world unto himself" and his plan of government and the glory that is to follow and crown his creature in the time to come. "My God is reconciled, his pard'ning voice I hear," like a great deal of other religious poetry, expresses a mischievous and untrue theology. God always was reconciled to the creature of his creation, and only asks that man be reconciled to him, and not misunderstand him, nor his great designs of the grand possibilities wrapped up in his being. The blood spilled upon Calvary was in attestation of the divine will and desire for atonement and reconciliation, and so does the blood of Christ cleanse from sin;

a token of God's great love toward us as sinners against a divine law; a fitting and perfect means by which all the affections of our nature may be enlisted and interested in the great plan of God to elevate, purify and assimilate into the divine likeness portrayed in Christ, and make the appreciation and enjoyment of the powers and glories to be revealed to the sons of God possible.

Alas! how many superstitions and absurdities of ignorance have entwined themselves around the gospel system; and how such ignorance has contributed to the building up of that great religious confusion of ideas to-day, and fittingly termed, spiritual Babylon. The errors that have been transmitted concerning the doctrine of atonement, had their origin in the misunderstanding and sensual interpretations that the Israelites under Moses had of the blood offering; glad to believe that sacrifice of animal property would be taken for obedience, they rejected "law of the spirit of life," which was the key to the knowledge of God, whose knowledge they did not like to retain; so that that priesthood which was, and is after the power of an endless life, in which alone through its ordinances (the gospel) is the power of godliness manifest, was taken, with Moses out of their midst, and the law of carnal commandments added, because of their transgressions and wilful ignorance, and the promised rest and peace were not entered into.

"Therefore he took Moses out of their midst and the holy priesthood also," and the fulness of his glory they should not see; and the lesser priesthood continued, which priesthood holdeth the preparatory gospel, a gospel of repentance, baptism and remission of sins; "and the law of carnal commandments was continued in his wrath till John, who was born with the fulness of the spirit, baptized, and ordained by an angel to prepare the way for him again, who was rejected in the wilderness." Read Doctrine and Covenants, section 83:4, 6. Paul says, "They were all baptized unto this preparatory gospel, unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea." But the power of that priesthood which contains the key to the knowledge of God through the manifestations of the Holy Ghost was rejected by them, and they settled back into the easy interpretation of the law that absolution could be had by the sacrifice or gift of the best of their property. And although at the time of the reformation in the days of Christ and the Apostles, this darkness seemed to give way for the time, yet as the night of apostacy closed in, the same sensual ideas began again to prevail, and the same broken reed is leaned upon by thousands in the mother church to-day.

The devout Catholic believes in the sacrament of the supper of our Lord, and so do I; but the interpretation may differ as the poles. He believes in the presence of the literal body and blood, while I believe that superstition could not farther go. I do it for remembrance of not only his passion for me, but of his existence and care, and continued love; and the solid proofs to me that I am not misled, are that the promised comforter, by which alone the power of Godliness is manifested, fills my whole being with a peace and a joy so perfect and profound, that I feel justified in receiving it as one of the evidences by which a man "may know of the doctrine."

My prayer is, that while we as Saints may avoid purely speculative philosophy, or its acceptance as saving truth, we may be led to understand, more and more, the word of God as revealed by his Spirit, and less of the traditions of our forefathers; that reason, that grandest attribute of our human nature, may not be under the stress of so often stifling its cries in order to preserve our souls intact in the faith. In fact, let us understand what is required of us to believe, and then examine ourselves and see whether we be in the faith that bringeth salvation or not. I can remember the time when it would have been deemed a heresy, even by a Latter Day Saint to have believed otherwise than that God made the world out of nothing in six literal days of twenty-four hours, and many other interpretations of the old testament records, a belief in which not so much is involved as has perhaps been claimed.

The world has been, and is filled with claims of men in regard to the Bible which my reason must repudiate, and whose defense I should be ashamed to undertake before an intelligent skeptic; but I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ as preached by him, his apostles, and re-revealed through the Palmyra Seer. In the light of such revelations as that given to Joseph and Sydney Rigdon, in the notable vision, (Doctrine and Covenants), in the Book of Mormon, and the restoration and reception of the Holy Spirit of truth, sent forth from my heavenly Father and everlasting friend, that pledge and security of "the Just One;"—by all these evidences and more, I can say, gladly, freely, truthfully, and with full heart; "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ for it is the power of God unto salvation unto every one that believeth; for therein is the righteousness" and goodness and reasonableness of God revealed. Upon which a faith may be predicated by which the just may live, and suffer if need be, in hope of the glory to be revealed. If men would test Christ's reasonable offer, the supposed absurdities of the atonement would vanish,—"to-day if ye will hear his voice, harden not your heart." The trouble is that the gospel asks men to reform their lives, purifying, subjecting themselves to cross bearing; and they don't care to know the truth when its acceptance compels, or demands self abnegation and denial, "If any man will do the will of God." The natural man don't like to do these things, no matter how reasonable or pure, and prefer to throw the burden of responsibility upon the creeds of Babylon, and arraign with reason and ridicule the figures of straw and fiction which the doctrines and commandments of men have placed for gospel truths.

Let us endeavor therefore, between the extremes of false traditions on the one hand, and the oppositions of science, often falsely so called, on the other, to walk in the light of God's truth as revealed by the word spoken by the Holy Ghost in all ages.

Minnesota Mennonites.

VISIT TO THE COLONY OF A PECULIAR PEOPLE—THEIR SINGULAR HISTORY.

At Mountain Lake Station, on the St. Paul and Sioux City Railroad, one hundred and thirty-seven miles southwest of St. Paul, Minnesota, there is a colony of singularly primitive people whom it was my good fortune to visit a few weeks ago. These Mennonites are known as an important body of emigrants from Southern Russia, but, aside from their alias Quaker-Baptists, but little is known of their creed and its practice. I passed a lovely June Sabbath in the Mountain Lake settlement, worshipped with them, and from one of the most intelligent of their number acquired some knowledge of their religious belief, their manners, and customs. I have spoken of them as singularly primitive. The primitive is always singular nowadays, but the singular is often far from primitive. The singularity of these people comes from rigid simplicity not only of manners and customs, but of religious belief. Some one has said, "Tell me what a people believe, and I will tell you what that people are." When I tell you what these Mennonites believe, you can largely forecast their every-day life. The Ana-baptists of Holland, deluded by lawless fanaticism, sought to forcibly establish the Kingdom of Christ on earth, and met their signal overthrow in the fall of Munster, June 24th, 1535. Great was the demoralization of their defeat. The leaders were hung, and their followers wandered about the Netherlands half-crazed, until from the throes of the Anabaptist revolt, emerged a former Roman Catholic priest, Menno Simons by name, and he it was whom God called to deliver this people. Taking into account the oppositeness of Menno's doctrine, his ultra and extreme views of non-resistance to the kingdoms of earth, there is in all history scarcely a parallel to the success of Menno. Nor do I know of a better illustration of how one extreme begets another. This people had been taught by former leaders that human government was an unlawful encroachment on spiritual liberty; that birth of rank and wealth should be abolished; and that they held a divine commission to overthrow existing governments by the sword. Munster had been called Mount Zion, and it had been defended with Spartan valor. Imagine from such as this a people led captive by the cry, "Peace on earth, good will to men;" "They who take the sword shall perish by the sword."

A study of the primitive purity of the early Christians, the sanctity of their moral precepts, the innocence and benevolence, and withal the austerity of their lives, reveals the basis of Menno's creed, not only opposed to war, but to contention of any sort. He taught that Christians should not go to law in the settlement of disputes; that the taking of interest-money makes one a usurer; and that the taking of oaths is contrary to the Divine command. They rejected infant baptism, and favored washing of one another's feet. The strict Mennonite does not practice immersion, but pouring is the favored form of the ordinance. They all hold the Calvinistic view of Christ's mediatorial mission. Under Catherine the Great, the Mennonites of Prussia and the Netherlands were invited to the cheap lands of South Russia, and were promised exemption from military service. A large body accepted the proffer, and for generations past have pursued agriculture upon the lands lying on the streams tributary to the Black Sea.

Why the hegira to the United States of late years? An edict has been issued reversing the decree of Catherine, and commanding that all children born since 1859 shall be enrolled for military service, and, furthermore, that, after May 1st, 1881, an emigrant must forfeit one-third of his possessions to secure a passport from Russia. These are virtually commands to depart, and they are being accepted as such. The Mountain Lake colony consists of about sixteen hundred souls, with continued accessions to their number. Our party had driven about nine miles from the noted Willow Lake Farm, near Windom, of as lovely a June Sunday as one may ever hope to see. The bracing air of Minnesota, the undulating prairies with their dry, smooth roads, the growing crops of emerald green, the silvery lakes dotting the wide expanse, the varied songs of the gorgeously plumed birds of this clime, and the delicate perfume of the wild flowers, set us all aglow in praise of God's handiwork. Certain it is these Mennonites have selected one of the favored spots of the Northwest. We drove into the cozy town about nine o'clock in the morning, and thence to the unpretentious little church. One of our party was a prominent merchant from England, and, singular and unusual as we must have appeared to the congregation who had gathered there, we were scarcely observed when we entered and took our seats among the men and boys who were ranged on one side of the house, while the women and girls were opposite. A plainly dressed young man, with a huge black choker about his neck and a black silk forefront, was discoursing in the German tongue of Christ and Nicodemus, and the congregation were absorbed listeners. I have rarely witnessed a body of worshippers more intent. The preacher was of their choosing, and one of a number found to possess gifts as an expounder of the Word. In common with the Quakers, they are opposed to a hireling ministry. They hold the preacher as a spiritual teacher, and they regard him with great reverence as adviser and councilor in temporal as well as spiritual affairs, and he and the Bishop constitute the only court known to the Mennonite.

After the sermon came a prayer, in which every one knelt to the floor, and then a hymn, sung with more fervor than melody. A leader carried the refrain when the congregation took breath, and for nearly half an hour it was a continuous strain. The sweet, clear tones of a soprano sang out amidst the discord, but here was the sweetness of sound, native and unconstrained as a feathered songster. The homespun, tidy dress and complete absence of any attempt at adornment, was a marked feature of the congregation. Their honest, cleanly faces, sharply defined and clean-cut features, stamp them a people whom one would trust at first sight, and this impression is fully sustained by the reputation they bear throughout Cottonwood county. They seldom vote. A great moral question only will call them to the polls. They are rigid economists, are possessed of ample means. It is supposed that thousands of dollars lie buried in the earth near their homes. For miles in every direction about Mountain Lake their homes are to be seen, and one can usually detect the house of a Mennonite from the fact that his dwelling, out-houses and barn are all connected, so that he can go from his parlor to his granary under shelter. They are notably hospitable, and, despite the law of Russia, which makes it a penal offense to tempt a Russian to join their body, I fancy many an adherent of the Greek Church, amidst the flummies and the formalisms, the glare, the glitter, and tinsel of shrine worship, must have been captivated by the power of an honest simplicity which is better calculated to challenge respect and admiration than to proselyte the worldling. The Mennonites prohibit intermarriage with non-believers, but the leveling power of our common-school system must ere long break that barrier down, and we can afford to hail it with welcome and hearty God speed, for they promise attributes of character much to be desired as constituent parts of that mongrel race of the future which the genius of American institutions is fostering. I should covet them for honest simplicity and sterling integrity, to offset and neutralize other elements which find a refuge in the great growing Republic, the most deplorable of which define Freedom as unconstrained, and find in Liberty another name for unbridled license.

We All Have Faults.

HE WHO boasts of being perfect is perfect in his folly. I have been a great deal up and down in the world, and I never did see a perfect man or horse, and I never shall until I see two Sundays come together. You can not get white flour out of a coal sack, nor perfection out of human nature; he who looks for it had better look for sugar in the sea. The old saying is: "Lifeless, faultless." Of dead men we should say nothing but good, but as for the living, they are all tarred more or less with the black brush, and half an eye can see it. Every heart has a soft place in it, and every heart has its black drop. Every rose has its prickles, and every day its night. Even the sun shows spots, and the skies are darkened with clouds. Nobody is so wise but he has folly enough to stock a stall at Vanity Fair. Where I could not see the fool's cap, I have nevertheless heard the bells jingle.

As there is no sunshine without some shadows, so all human good is mixed up with more or less of evil; even poor-law guardians have their little failings, and parish beadles are not wholly of a heavenly nature. The best wine has its lees. All men's faults are not written on their foreheads, and it's quite as well they are not, or hats would need wide rims; yet as sure as eggs are eggs, faults of some kind nestle in every man's bosom. There's no telling when a man's faults will show themselves, for hares pop out of a ditch just when you are not looking for them. A horse that is weak in the knees may not stumble for a mile or two, but it is in him, and the rider had better hold him up well. The tabby cat is not lapping milk just now, but leave the dairy door open, and we will see if she is not as big a thief as the kitten. There's fire in the flint, cool as it looks; wait till the steel gets a knock at it, and you will see. Everybody can read that riddle, but it is not everybody that will remember to keep his gunpowder out of the way of the candle.

The "Peace Policy" of the Gospel Endorsed.

Editor Herald: We had the pleasure of listening to a discourse, not long ago, contrasting the policy (war) of the world, with the policy (peace) of the Savior, which he sought to establish on earth through the gospel. And while we endorsed the position of the speaker on the peace policy, our mind was led on in further contemplation of the subject, and there appeared some seeming contradictions to arise against the idea of Jesus coming to establish peace in fulfillment of the angel's saying to the shepherds, "Peace on earth, good will to men;" which, by the way, was the text of the speaker. Thinking that possibly some of my brethren may entertain the thought that there are contradictions in the Savior's own declarations derogatory to the idea that he came to establish peace, we essay,—invoking the Spirit's aid—to dissipate those seeming contradictions; for we are so enamored of that blessed peace policy, that we desire nothing to stand in the way of its reception in the hearts of the children of men, especially those professing to be the children of peace, who are the children of God; for "Blessed are the peacemakers, for they shall be called the children of God."

The first apparent contradiction is found in Matt. 10:30: "Think not that I am come to send peace on earth; I came not to send peace, but a sword."

It can not be that any friend or follower of the Savior would believe that His coming to earth was to cause war and bloodshed, variance in families and nations. If that was his sole purpose, he had better for the peace of the world, to have staid away; for there were plenty enough engaged in that policy of the evil one, without the Savior coming to carry it out in aid of his Satanic majesty. Your writer arrives at what he conceives to be the meaning of the Savior's language by reading the text preceding the saying under consideration.

He was sending his disciples to preach the gospel of peace; was forearming them by forewarning them of what should be the effect produced upon some by this proclamation of peace. He told them they should be delivered up to councils and scourged in the synagogues; they should be brought before kings, for his sake, for a testimony against them and the Gentiles; that brother should deliver up brother unto death, and the father the child, and the children should rise up against their parents and cause them to be put to death; that the disciples should be hated of all the world for his sake, but they were not to fear them who were only able to kill the body, but to fear him who was able to destroy both soul and body in hell.

He knew that some members of a family would embrace this peace policy, whilst others would not. In some families parents would, and the children would not. In some the children, and the parents would not, etc., and also knowing that so bitter would be the hatred of those who opposed that they would deliver up even their own flesh and blood to death, hence could and was delivering only a prediction of what he foreknew would be, when he declared "I came not to send peace on earth, but a sword."

The action of the Savior in commanding him who smote the servant of the High Priest with the sword, and prediction concerning the punishment of those who use such weapons, is proof enough that he never intended to inaugurate a war, but a peace policy; he says, "Put up the sword, for he that taketh up the sword shall perish with it."

But says one, Did he not on a certain occasion, command his disciples if they did not have any swords to sell their garment and buy one? Yes; it is so recorded in Luke 22:36 verse. But I find in reading the text following this assertion which describes the heavy trials and sufferings He passed through just prior to his death, that, in our opinion, a little of the weakness, (or strength, as some have it), of that human nature he took upon him, was manifest, as proven by the prayer, "Father, if thou be willing, remove this cup from me; nevertheless not my will but thine be done." It is also recorded that he suffered great agony, and that an angel was sent from heaven to strengthen him. All this shows that he was capable of being tried, of suffering, and needed aid from heaven to enable him to overcome. We reason therefore as follows, that knowing full well what he was about to pass through, that the time was at hand when wicked men would come against him with swords and staves to deliver him up to death, for the moment, told his disciples to buy swords, as a matter of defense; but he soon rose above the thought, for when one,—right in this connection,—said there were only two swords, he answered, "It is enough;" and then when one, on only one occasion used a sword, he commanded him to put it up, lest he should perish by the sword, for all that should use it would perish by it, hence we conclude that this command to buy swords should not be used against the peace policy that his whole life and teachings sought to establish. The counsels in his sermon on the mount were all calculated if followed, to produce peace. The principles of the gospel are those of peace, not only to the bringing of peace from our Heavenly Father to us, owning us as his children through obedience to its first principles; but if obedient to its principles at all times, the people of God will enjoy peace in all their social relation. No animosities; no jealousies; no bickerings; no strife; no backbiting, or evil speaking; no slanders; no taking advantage in our dealings; in short, no evil or that which countenances the "war policy" in the least will be in our midst; for all this is strictly forbidden in the gospel, and hence the observance of gospel teachings must bring peace. It is true according to history that the world in general from the commencement of the Christian era down through centuries, rejected this gospel of peace. A small portion of the Jewish nation received it, but the major portion rejected it, and in fulfillment of the Savior's prediction, the kingdom, or the offer of it, was taken from them and given to the Gentiles, who, for a time brought forth the fruits of the same, but in fulfillment of prophecy, departed from the banner of peace, and sought to establish what they claimed to be the gospel, by the sword, as witness the horrid butcheries of frequent occurrence, of those who left the pale of the Catholic Church, done by that body to enforce what they called heretics to renounce their belief and to return to their original standing in that church, or they would destroy them from off the face of the earth, and thus to destroy what they called heresy and to establish Popery they deluged the land with the blood of innocent thousands. But although they did this they did not succeed in their design of smothering out what they called heresy. After a time other reformers came out from the Mother, and after much tribulation succeeded in establishing their views, until what is styled "Protestant Nations" came into being through their pertinacious zeal and perseverance in maintaining what they conceived to be the truth. But both Catholic and Protestant nations have warred within themselves as well as with each other from their origin to the present time, more or less, and hence we conclude that that which would produce peace is not taught amongst, or if taught, practically is ignored by them. We are speaking of the general rule, not of a few individual exceptions.

But the Savior declared that this gospel of the kingdom should be preached in all the world for a witness, and then the end shall come." This, says one, is positive proof that the gospel would continue to be preached from that day till the end of the world! Softly my friend, read the predictions in this (24th) chapter of Matthew, and you will find that he commenced with predictions concerning Jerusalem, and followed on telling what should take place at the end of the world, and at his coming, hence he says the "Sun shall be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars shall fall from heaven, and the powers of the heavens shall be shaken. And then shall appear the sign of the Son of Man in heaven, and then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn, and they shall see the Son of Man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory." Well, just prior to this declaration, the prediction of the gospel's being preached was uttered, and two verses prior to this read, "And because iniquity shall abound, the love of many shall wax cold." And on the heels of this he says, "And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached," &c. We perceive that he declares that iniquity shall abound, be in great abundance, or very prevalent, and in consequence of this, those who had professed to love their Lord (many of them, not a few) would cease to do so; their love would become cold, if cold not active, had ceased to live, and consequently they had departed from the faith. For Jesus in another place says, "He that loveth me will keep my commandments." He whose love is cold has ceased to love, consequently hath ceased to keep his commandments, and is perforce in a state of apostacy from his commandments. And so we conclude that Jesus predicted a general apostacy from the gospel which contains his commandments; and foreseeing this, predicted the again preaching of this banner of peace to all nations as a witness before the end come. Before what end come? We answer in the Savior's language, the destruction of the wicked. The wicked having rejected this peace policy, or the gospel, will be destroyed from off the face of the earth at the Savior's coming. It is written that then the kingdoms of this world will become the kingdoms of our Lord and his Christ. It is written that at that time the thrones will be cast down. It is also written that there will be one king over all the earth, and his name one; that all men shall sit under their own vine and fig-tree, none daring to molest or make afraid; that blessed are the meek for they shall inherit the earth, and that they shall delight themselves in the abundance of peace; that men shall beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning hooks; nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more. It is declared of Christ that one of his name shall be "Prince of Peace," and of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, &c. The prophet hath declared that at that day "The wolf also shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid; and the calf and the young lion and the fatling together; and a little child shall lead them. The cow and the bear shall feed; their young ones shall lie down together: and the lion shall eat straw like the ox. The sucking child shall play on the hole of the asp, and the weaned child shall put his hand on the cocatrices' den," &c.

The beasts of prey are to become docile, and with our domestic animals feed together, the lion eat straw like the ox and a little child shall lead them. The poisonous serpent is to lose its venom or desire to use it, and the sucking child shall play with them; nothing to hurt or destroy in all God's holy mountain, &c. Verily this picture portrays a reign of peace as palpably as any pen picture can do. It will require no Van Amburg then to tame the beasts—if it can be called taming that which has to be held between iron bars, in a stout cage, and when it snuffs the scent of blood utters its terrific roar, and ravenously devours the meat thrown into its den. Ah, no! A little child shall lead them in the open space, for they will feed together with the gentle cow. It will not require serpent tamers, or charmers to extract the poisonous fangs when they are small. A superior power than man will have tamed them so that the mother can place her sucking child down anywhere without fear of harm, even if it should be on a nest of serpents; and the little toddler just weaned, can play with the cocatrice and put his hand on his den without being molested, or hurt by the once poisonous reptiles, for the Spirit is poured out upon all flesh, beast and reptile included, and nothing has the desire to hurt or destroy. Hosanna! Glory to God for the promise of a reign of peace.

LAMONI, May 27th, 1882.

No man can be in a proper frame of mind for the discovery and reception of truth who is not utterly regardless of the question whether his being in a majority or a minority will be the result of his investigation.

Our title of things in this world is poor, at best. And yet how many of us act as though a warrant deed covered all our possessions—as though what we hold we have beyond any power to dispossess.

The Object of the Gospel.

"Having made known unto us the mystery of his will, according to His good pleasure, which He hath purposed in Himself: That in the dispensation of the fullness of times, He might gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven, and which are on earth; even in Him."—Eph. 1: 9, 10.

Man, as created and made and placed upon the earth, was in a condition and position to enjoy the association and affiliation of his Creator, and the things of earth with which he was surrounded,—and did enjoy them. God, his creator, being very good,—exemplifying his goodness in the condition in which he created him. And all things which were created and made were likewise very good, so that all things as they then existed partook of a like condition—thence enjoyment. Unity existed between heaven and earth. A link when unbroken brings peace and joy. A change has taken place. The link of unity is broken. Man does not enjoy that peace which existed between earth and heaven. Man has fallen from that condition of peace, and is, for this reason, deprived of the enjoyments arising from that condition. This result has been brought about by man breaking the law, by which this unity existed—even that of obedience. Had man continued obedient to those laws which God has given for his good, and not submitted to the law of disobedience, he would have still continued in the same condition of peace.

God still loves man. He desires that man may be in the enjoyment of peace. He has originated a plan by which the link may be welded,—man be reconciled,—and gives laws to govern man in this, a life of preparation, to redeem him from all the results of disobedience, and bring to him as a result of the law of obedience, peace and joy.

God is all wise. He knows the condition of man, and—being all wise—devises the means to reach his condition in every particular. The means is revealed to us in the gospel of Jesus Christ. The result of compliance with this means is man's salvation. Now for us to reach the result we must comply with the means given. This is true of all laws. In order to reap the benefits of a law we must comply with the means by which those benefits are reached. More especially is this true of God's laws, whether spiritual or natural.

The Gospel Law was given that man might have peace, as was declared by the angel to the shepherds of Bethlehem.—"On earth peace." Peace is the glorious result of unity. Hence, to have peace we must have unity. In order to have unity in man that he may enjoy peace, and good will to his fellow man, there must of necessity be a change. As he now exists under the result of the law of disobedience, the higher law, that of obedience, must be brought into effect, that its result man may enjoy, and man's present condition changed.

God has made known his will, as declared in the text taken for this article, and that too "according to His good pleasure which He hath purposed in Himself." God has devised the law just as it should be to bring the result of man's redemption. Man need be caused no trouble in this direction. The law is devised aright, and man to receive the result must comply with the conditions of the law, as it is made known in his word.

The result of his revealing his will was "that in the dispensation of the fulness of time He might gather together in one all things in Christ." We need certainly not be troubled with the result promised; for to be gathered in one, means peace to those who are gathered in that oneness; as we have before concluded that peace is the outgrowth of oneness or unity.

God then has revealed in his word a plan to bring forth the result of man's redemption. Shall there be need of his revealing, or making known more plans than that which has been revealed or made known? Can we say to him who has framed the law, Thou hast no understanding? If there is no need of his revealing but one plan to bring forth one result, what is the need of us trying to imagine there is the Gospel of the Kingdom of God, and the Gospel of the Grace of God,—of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, and the New and Everlasting Covenant? If the Gospel of Jesus Christ is the means of salvation, what is the Gospel of the Kingdom of God, or the Grace of God the means of? Surely salvation, if formed by God for man at all, as salvation is all the need of man; and if for salvation, can it not be different names to express the same law or plan? The same result is obtained, and as "Jesus Christ is the same yesterday, today, and forever," and "There is no other name given whereby man can be saved, we come to the conclusion that all are one, or different ways of expressing the one thing. So we conclude,—only more positively, that the Gospel of Jesus Christ brought salvation to man, the New and Everlasting Covenant, if there be any, must be the same as revealed in God's word; because salvation was promised as a result of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, and for God to set aside as a thing of naught that which had been devised by him to answer a certain result, and make known another means to answer that result, would prove God not to be God, and the "one Lord, one faith, and one baptism;" "One God and fath- of all," would be a thing of the past.

Let us then seek for the law God has made known, if we desire the result of salvation, and not try to formulate something in our mind that we think will do just as well, for as we have not salvation to give, we can not devise a plan to bring that result. All our trouble need be is, "What must I do to be saved." What is that law God in "his good pleasure" has given to us for us to obey, in order that we may obtain the result of salvation;" "What must I do to enjoy that oneness that will bring peace on earth, and good will to man?" The answer is plain and simple to all these questions. To be saved,—obey the gospel, "for it is the power of God unto salvation." To enjoy the result of salvation,—follow your Savior, Jesus Christ; for there is no other name given under heaven whereby man can be saved. And, says Jesus, "I am the way, the truth, and the life." To enjoy that oneness that will bring peace,—Glorify the one God and Father of us all, obey the one Lord; follow the one faith, and be buried with Christ in the one baptism.

Do this and all is well; peace will be restored; man prepared to enjoy the presence and glory of his maker; the earth redeemed and made fit for the dwelling place of all things, when they are gathered together in one Christ.

Man at first was pure and free,
But fallen he became;
The God of heaven formed the plan,
By which we're made the same.

To follow this plan which God has formed,
Will make us free again;
Then we can enjoy this glorified earth,
Forever and ever. Amen.

Notes And Facts on Polygamy.

IN PRESIDENT JOHN TAYLOR'S sermon, April 9th, 1882, he said, in his remarks referring to polygamy:

"Could you or I preach the doctrine of plurality if it was a lie? You know that only honorable, honest, virtuous men and women, who could be vouched for by those who preside over them, are admitted to practice this ordinance; you all know this."

Another statement in his discourse was:

"When Joseph Smith first made known the revelation on polygamy I received testimony and evidence of its truth which no honest man could resist."

The claim for the date of the polygamy revelation is July 12th, 1843. Now, Mr. Taylor says we could not preach polygamy if it was a lie, and again he says he received such an excellent testimony of its truth that no honest man could resist it. If President John Taylor received such a clear testimony of the divinity of polygamy, why did he not then, as an honest man, tell the truth and declare in favor of the doctrine, in place of denying it? In Times and Seasons, vol. 5, page 711, published at Nauvoo, November 15th, 1844, John Taylor, editor at the time, passed judgment upon the following article as genuine. Here it is:

"Woe to the man or men who will thus willfully lie to injure an innocent people. The laws of the land and the rules of the Church do not allow a man to have more than one wife alive at the same time."

In this article the positive declaration is that polygamy was not allowed by the rules of the Church or the laws of the land; both forbid it; that it was fiendish to thus accuse the people, and that it was a lie.

Again, in the Times and Seasons, for May 15th, 1845, vol. 6, page 888, we have John Taylor's testimony against a plurality of wives: When the final reward will be given to every man according to his works, the everlasting answer will be I never knew you. And at Bologne Sur mur, France, July 11th, 1850, Mr. Taylor said:

"We are accused here of polygamy and actions the most indelicate, obscene and disgusting, such that none but a corrupt and depraved heart could contrive."

And he reads here from the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, to prove polygamy false. (See Taylor's discussion in O. Pratt's works, page 8).

Here we have John Taylor face to face with President John Taylor. In 1844, as we have shown, he said polygamy was a lie and fiendish, and that the rules of the church and the laws of the land forbid it. In 1845 he said, those that teach and practice it will be cast out. In 1850 he publicly declared that none but a corrupt and depraved heart could contrive such an indelicate, obscene and disgusting principle, and now, when he finds himself bound, soul and body, and chained with the fetters of depravity, he stands before the people whom he and others have fettered, and tells them that at the very time he condemned polygamy so stoutly and called it fiendish, corrupt and a lie, he had a testimony that no honest man could resist; and yet at that time HE had power to resist that testimony. Now, if, as President Taylor says, an honest man could not resist that testimony and he did resist it, as we have shown, then the question is, Is President John Taylor an honest man? We will leave the reader to decide.

In this sermon of April 9th, 1882, he says: I want you to tell me if I don't tell the truth. If Mr. Taylor would be consistent, let him come out to-day and tell his people, as he did in 1844, that the rules of the church and the laws of the land forbid one man to have more than one wife alive at the same time, and thus save thousands of honest but erring ones from ruin. Then, his testimony was that none but a corrupt and depraved heart could continue such a doctrine; but to-day he says that none but honorable, honest, virtuous men and women are allowed to practice the ordinance. Such logic as that would reverse the whole law of nature. You might as well try to convince a sane man that plantain, bananas and all the tropical fruits could be cultivated and attain to greater perfection amidst the icebergs of the polar regions, as to try to make him believe that a kind, pure, just, truth-loving God would change His eternal decrees. Murder, theft and hypocrisy have always been the same from age to age; they will remain eternally the same. Sickness and death have and always will produce sorrow and mourning, while on the other hand, life and health will always give joy and gladness to man. These are truths and will abide forever. The Lord Jesus has revealed God to us as an unchangeable being, full of mercy and truth, and without variableness or shadow of turning, and his word endureth forever.

For John Taylor and his compeers to come out now, as they have since 1852, and tell the people that God has sanctified polygamy and made that the only ordinance by which men and women can attain to celestial glory and an endless life, is giving the lie to the revelations of God and their own testimony.

The Book of Mormon tells us that polygamy and concubinage is whoredom, and a greater crime than afflicting and persecuting your neighbor. John Taylor himself says that none but a corrupt and depraved heart could contrive such a thing. All the polygamist crew are sending up a howl because the American Nation has spoken and decided polygamy to be a crime, just what John Taylor and the church he represents did years ago. The Deseret News sets up a wail in a late issue because Joseph Smith, the son of the Prophet Joseph Smith, declares polygamy to be a great wrong, and corrupt men adopted it to cover up their crimes. The News says he virtually denies that his father had anything to do with it and that Brigham Young was responsible for it. Joseph Smith only stated in that speech what John Taylor, G. Q. Cannon, H. B. Clawson and others had done, that polygamy was not a part of Mormonism during the lifetime of his father. Brigham Young was responsible for polygamy and not Joseph Smith, although the Deseret News, John Taylor and all the polygamists try to make a seapegoat of him. We have shown that John Taylor denied the doctrine up to 1850.

G. Q. Cannon, in a sermon June 11th, 1871, Journal of Discourses, vol. 14, page 165-6, says:

"A prevalent idea has been that this prejudice against us owes its origin and continuation to our belief in a plurality of wives; but when it is recollected that the mobbings, drivings and expulsions from cities, counties and States which we endured, and our exodus to these mountains all took place before the revelation of that doctrine was publicly known, it will be seen that our belief in it has not been the cause of persecution. * * * Joseph and Hyrum Smith were slain in Carthage Jail, and hundreds of persons were persecuted to death previous to the Church having any knowledge of this doctrine."

H. B. Clawson says of the time they were driven from Nauvoo:

"Polygamy at that time was unknown among those of the Mormon faith. * * * The doctrine of polygamy was not promulgated until they got to Salt Lake; not, in fact, until some little time after they arrived there." (See Salt Lake Herald, February 9th, 1882.

Brigham Young said, in a speech made June 21st, 1874, (Deseret News, July 1st, 1874):

"While we were in England, (in 1839 and 40), I think the Lord manifested to me by vision and His spirit things that I did not understand. I never opened my mouth to any one concerning them, until I returned to Nauvoo. Joseph had never mentioned this; there never had been a thought of it in the church that I ever knew anything about at that time; but I HAD THIS for myself and kept it to myself. And when I returned home and Joseph revealed those things to me, then I understood the reflections that were upon my mind while in England. But this was not until AFTER I HAD TOLD HIM what I understood—this was in 1841. The revelation was given in 1843, but the doctrine was revealed before this."

Brigham Young here says that he received the revelation while in England in 1839 and '40, and in 1841 he told Joseph about it. Then, at that time, (1841), Joseph revealed these things to him; Brigham revealed them to Joseph and then Joseph revealed them to Brigham. Only think of the idea of such a revelation as that; the foot dictating to the head! But the strange part of this testimony is, that he says the revelation was received in 1843, but the doctrine was revealed before. In this Brigham evidently makes himself the author of the doctrine.

In the Times and Seasons, nineteen of the then leading women in the Church sign a certificate that J. C. Bennet was the author of the secret wife system. We also find that twelve of the leading men certified at the same time that J. C. Bennett's secret wife system was a creature of his own make. (Times and Seasons, vol. 3, page 939). Here we have nineteen women and twelve men, John Taylor and Wilford Woodruff's names prominent among them, all declaring that this doctrine was a creature of J. C. Bennett's own make, and not a revelation from Joseph Smith or Brigham Young, and that they give the certificate to show that J. C. Bennett and not Joseph Smith was responsible for it, and to warn the Church against it as false and a delusion.

Joseph and Hyrum Smith officially notified the Church that Hyrum Brown was cut off from the Church for teaching polygamy and other false doctrines in 1842. Times and Seasons, vol. 5, page 474). March 8th, 1844, Hyrum Smith wrote the Church at China Creek, and warned them against it, and called it false doctrine. The Deseret News, December 11th, 1881, said:

"Correctly speaking, polygamy is not now, and never has been a tenet of the Mormon Church."

H. B. Clawson says that polygamy was not promulgated until after they came to Salt Lake City; at the time they left Nauvoo the doctrine was unknown to those of the Mormon faith. G. Q. Cannon said that Joseph and Hyrum Smith were slain in the Carthage jail previous to the Church knowing anything about the doctrine. John Taylor denied polygamy from 1842 until 1850, and during all those years he called it a false and corrupt doctrine. August 29th, 1852, polygamy was first publicly proclaimed as a doctrine of the Church. (See "Journal of Discourses," vol. 6, page 281). In that, Orson Pratt said he was breaking new ground. All this was done in open violation of the laws of the Church and the laws of the land. They forgot the testimony that had gone forth by John Taylor, that the rules of the Church and the laws of the land do not allow a man to have but one wife alive at the same time.

All the evidences we have shown prove conclusively that Joseph Smith did not introduce and establish polygamy as a doctrine of the Church, whatever he might have done as an individual. The history of the Church, as well as the testimony of individuals all prove positively that Brigham Young and his co-workers fastened that doctrine on the Church, and whoever forged the chain, Brigham Young and his compeers riveted the fetters upon the people, and by their secret works they have deceived the hearts of the simple and have made merchandise of the people. And now, they have made them, through their oaths and covenants, slaves, bondmen and women to a corrupt priesthood. President John Taylor says: Now, if polygamy was a lie, we could not preach it. We wish to tell him that IT IS A LIE, and that he and his fellows bear record to the fact. As we have shown, it was introduced by the father of all liars and in these days it has been fostered and built up by lies. It was born of lies and is A LIVING LIE to-day. But the Lord has promised that your covenant with death shall be disannulled and your agreement with hell shall not stand. When the overflowing scourge shall pass through, then ye shall be trodden down by it.

To Whom It May Concern.

THERE is no use in putting up the motto, "God bless our home," if the father is a rough old bear, and the spirit of discourtesy and rudeness is taught by the parents to the children, and by the older to the younger. There is no use in putting up the motto, "The Lord will provide," while the father is shiftless, the mother is shiftless, the boys refuse to work, and the girls busy themselves over gewgaws and finery. There is no use in putting up the motto, "The greatest of these is Charity," while the tongue of the back-biter wags in that family, and silly gossip is dispensed at the tea-table. There is no use in placing up conspicuously the motto, "The liberal man deviseth liberal things," while the money chinks in the pockets of "the head of the household," groaning to get out and see the light of day, and there are dollars and dimes for wines and tobacco and other luxuries, but positively not one cent for the church. In how many homes are these mottoes standing—let us say hanging—sarcasms, which serve only to point a jest and adorn a satire? The beauty of quiet lives of trustful, hopeful, free-handed, free-hearted, charitable lives, is one of surpassing loveliness, and those lives shed their own incomparable fragrance, and the world knows where to find them. And they shall remain fresh and fadeless when the colors of the pigment and the worsted and the floss have faded, and the very frames have rotted away in their joints.

Questions.

Dear Herald: Permit me to ask a few questions for each of your readers to answer to suit himself.

How long was Joseph Smith a prophet, before he was baptized? Did you ever hear of any Saint of any faction, express a doubt of one single revelation received by him before the Church was organized? Did you ever hear any Saint question, or even deny, any revelation given since the Church was organized, and the questioner retain enough of the Spirit of truth, to be seemingly beloved of God and approved of good men. If we are the people of God, reading and professing to believe the same books, yet differ upon some points, may we not all be partly wrong; and may not one who never had an opportunity to read our books differ with us all upon some few points and still be the servant of God?

Have you, dear reader, been born of the Spirit? If so, do you know the whole council of God, or are you only learning? Is not every man called by the name of his father? If so, might not any prophet whom Elijah ordains, be called by his name, without any transmigration? Does the gospel make possible a plurality of spiritual fathers, if so may a prophet be called by more than one prophetic name?

If Elijah of old thought he was alone until his Lord told him he had reserved seven thousand who had not bowed the knee to Baal, might there not be in the wide world seven million true Saints and still a modern prophet be as much alone as though all men had departed from God, and Christ, and heaven, and peace? Is it as high a test of faith to live for Christ as to die for him? If so, what higher proof of faith can any one give than to consecrate himself, his time, his talents, his means, all that he has, or ever expects to have, upon the altar of his God? Is it not easier, as we have learned Christ, to believe he will answer one who calls upon him with such faith, than to assign any reason why he should not? Has not the stone which the builders rejected twice become the head of the corner, and will not some one again bring forth the headstone with shouting grace, grace unto it? Do not the Scriptures teach that Christ shall suddenly come to his temple as well as go forth and stand upon the Mount of Olives? If old Jerusalem is to be built up before Christ comes, will it not be by unbelieving Jews; or would he who has numbered the very hairs of our heads require his believing children to go where he foreknew half of them would go into captivity with all the horrors of war? May not some be lost in time, because of unbelief, yet saved in eternity because of the purity of their motives? May not the times of the Gentiles be the same time mentioned in Revelation 10:6. If the Doctrine and Covenants speaks of a few holy men whom ye know not, might not Mr. Lay or any one else be a true prophet and there be many holy men whom he does not know, and whom we do not know either? Are not all Saints called by the name of Christ; if so, might not Adam be called Michael, and Michael be one of the names of Christ? Does not our Father usually pass by the wise and prudent and reveal himself to some one whom no one, a few miles from his home, ever heard of till he comes with the word of the Lord? Not by might nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of Hosts.

Ezekiel 40:3, tells of a man with a line of flax, and a measuring reed, and having the appearance of brass. Brass is an American slang word for impudence. The words in "Heaven's Argument," "Next to your King in second heaven you sit, a prince, a priest, the ruler of his house," certainly has the appearance of brass, since, from our point of observation, we failed to see what he had done to merit such high preferment; but if he is the man he thinks he is, he will have enough to do before the battle of faith is fought and won.

"Christ bought the keys of Paradise

By cruel bleeding.

And every soul that wins a place

Upon its hills of pleasure;

Must give its all, and beg for grace,

To fill the measure."

When we remember that we are all hoping to one day awake in the image of Christ, the brass is not quite so apparent; it will disturb no one, the youngest child is always prince of the house, and good children always acquiesce in it. If we are the children of God we'll all be good.

Sackcloth was once an emblem of mourning, may it not also indicate obscurity? If so, would any two already famous, or in any sense recognized leaders, be the two witnesses of Rev. 11:3? But if it means mourning they might be.

Are we not all commanded to show both by word and by flight, that desolation speedily cometh upon the wicked? If we have ceased to obey it, ceased to preach it, almost ceased to believe it, is it not time God should send us Elijah the prophet, or some one else, to stir up our pure minds by way of remembrance? Believe as you please, is an old saying, but not in my experience a true one. I can neither believe nor disbelieve anything without a reason; I must leave unknown truths and errors in the ante room of inquiry, till God's own hand or the revelations of time separates them; belief may not be in our power, but truthfulness is; we shall all finally be judged according to our works. If we may not know the day and the hour when our Lord shall come, those who watch may know near enough to be awake and ready; 'Be always ready,' is easier said than done, there are days, months, and sometimes years in the lives of the purest minded men and women who walk the earth, when body, brain, and heart are sick and tired out, and if they could not go to sleep, they would go insane. If the bride and virgins are asleep, the midnight cry will be given long enough before the bridegroom comes for them to awake and prepare if they will. Good parents never require impossibilities of their children, neither does God.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

In a letter to Bro. Zenas H. Gurley on business, Hon. James S. Wilson, Senator from Iowa, states: "Our public library here (Fairfield) procured a copy recently, of the Book of Mormon, of the original edition, in which polygamy is prohibited. I presume that there are not many of them to be had." Thus it is, any intelligent and fair reader in reading the Book of Mormon finds the prohibition of Utah's pet theory; but learned and factious apologists for sin find covert evasion and deceitful double meaning in the plainest of teaching.

Bro. James W. Gillen, for three years absent from home on a mission to Australia, returned to Lamoni, where he resides, on Wednesday, June 7th, well and in good spirits. He does not give a very flattering description of that Australasian continent in the seas; though he found some excellent people there.

Bro. W. W. Blair, under date of June 5th, writes that the Salt Lake City Branch is improving. As Mark Anthony said at the close of his oration over Cæsar's body: "Mischievous thou art afoot. Take which way thou wilt, I am content."

Notice of the conference held at Egremont, Grey county, Ontario, appears in the local paper, the Confederate, signed by Bro. R. G. Kennedy. A chapel was to be dedicated June 11th.

Letters from quite a number of the Saints are crowded out, the dates of which will preclude their insertion later on. Among these is one from Sr. Harriet Hudspeth, Reno, Iowa. She had visited Carthage, Illinois, where she has a sister, Mrs. Willy, and while there visited the jail where the brothers, Hyrum and Joseph were killed. She describes her emotions while there, and contrasts the times of the murder of those men with the days of the late session at Independence, Missouri. With the latter she was much pleased.

Elder John Thomas, of Monona county, Iowa, lately traveling in Tennessee and Kentucky, was arrested down there for disturbing a public meeting; taken before a Justice of the Peace and fined. An appeal was taken in his interest, and at the trial in the district court, we believe, the finding of the court below was affirmed. But the glaring injustice of the affair was so apparent that gentlemen, strangers to the faith, again took the matter up to the higher court, and Bro. Thomas informs us that he is informed by letter from there that the higher court has decided the suit in his favor. Justice at last.

This number of the HOPE will be the largest issue ever sent out from the office. For the past three years it has increased in its list to a considerable extent; and it may fairly be hoped that it is found useful in our Church work. The number for the 1st of July is the commencement of the fourteenth volume, and the quantity of reading matter has been greatly increased, by the use of smaller type; and we still hope to increase its capacity for usefulness, and make it more helpful as an aid to the HERALD. Would it not be well for the households among the Saints who do not now take the HOPE to subscribe, the present number commences a new volume.

Bro. Joseph F. McDowell wrote June 5th, that on the 4th, Sunday, he had spoken to a large audience, on the street, at Clinton, Iowa, and two weeks before had done the same. He was attacked in the Herald, of Clinton, but defended properly, as he should.

We received a letter reciting something about a sisters' band called the Daughters of Zion; but as the letter named no place whence it was written, and was not signed, we did not feel at liberty to insert it.

Six baptized at Reno, Cass county, Iowa, June 4th, by Bro. T. W. Chatburn.

THE Lamoni Branch are now moving in the matter of a suitable house of worship at that place. The houses in which the branch now hold meetings are small, and the one at the village quite inadequate for the purpose. The committee to whom the inquiry was entrusted made proper examination and reported that in their opinion a house capable of seating one thousand persons was needed at the village, for the following reasons:

1. For the ordinary branch meetings for worship and business the one now occupied was very much too small.
2. The branch was daily increasing in numbers, and it would not in the appearance of things, be but a short time before quite a large local congregation would need accommodation.
3. The district would need the use of such a building in which to hold local conference.
4. The present headquarters for the business center being at Lamoni, it would become in time the place where one of the half yearly meetings for conference of the whole Church would convene, and then such a house would be indispensable.

Satisfied of the correctness of these reasons, the branch business meeting appointed a building committee, consisting of Brn. E. Banta, S. V. Bailey, George Adams, E. J. Robinson, Peter Harris, N. M. Reeder and J. Smith. Of these E. Banta is chairman of committee, and J. Smith is secretary and treasurer.

Subscription books have been opened and it is expected that the Saints of the locality and of the district will "go to with their might" to build the house.

Some of the Saints abroad have requested us heretofore to let them know when such a house would be built, as they desired to help the project along and put something into it, that they might feel an interest in it when they visited Lamoni. We take this method of informing them of the opportunity; and they can now send to Bro. Joseph Smith, Treasurer of the Lamoni Meeting House Committee any sum they may wish to donate for the purpose of erecting the house named. Receipts will be sent to those sending means.

THE Woman's Exponent, published in Salt Lake, Utah, Emeline B. Wells, Editor, in its issue for June 1st, 1882, contains an article entitled "Scenes and Incidents in Nauvoo," the writer of which, Helen Mar Whitney, pays attention to Joseph Smith, Editor of the HERALD, after the following fashion:

"Joseph Smith, who professes to be his father's successor, has (in an anti-Mormon meeting, lately held in Chicago, a city noted for its crimes, and the deepest dens of infamy and corruption, the description, which was lately given by a Reverend in that city, is so soul sickening that it may well be called the Sodom of the west; which is ripening so fast that it may soon be wrapped again in another consuming fire) declared that it was not until 1852 that polygamy was attempted to be introduced in the teachings of the church, and that its introduction was a shameless trick of wicked men, who were obliged to find an excuse to cover up their crimes."

"He must be blind not to see that his own tongue has condemned him, not only as an un-inspired leader, but an unprincipled enemy to his own father's house. For he says, 'In 1855 he began a crusade on his own hook, and in 1860, when he entered public life, it was with the avowed determination to oppose polygamy evermore.'"

"Now what man of God ever went to work on his own hook, or even thought to set up his own will independent of revelation from on high?"

"The man, whoever he was, who told Elder Joseph Smith that if an angel were to come down from heaven and tell him polygamy was wrong he would not believe the angel, was just as much of an impostor as the Prophet's son, who made the following reply, 'I would believe, but I would tell the angel to go to some one else, for I would not preach the doctrine.'"

"A poor captain and soldier of the cross he would make to stand as his father's representative to carry out the purposes of the Almighty, for which the Prophet was willing to suffer with his people, and endure every kind of persecution, imprisonment and death, for the sake of the religion which his son Joseph, under the inspiration of the Evil one, has denied, and is now leagued himself with the worst enemies of his father to destroy the work for which he had to suffer so much and at last lay down his life."

"His son declared that, although he had been accused of being an apostate, he had always been true to the faith taught by his father; and 'I have eagerly sought for a proof of the divine inspiration of polygamy, but can not find it, and believe the doctrine to be infamous, root and branch.'"

"Here he contradicts himself, which is only another proof of his infidelity and lack of inspiration, and wisdom from on high. He was hardly old enough when his father was killed to know or understand what his faith consisted of; but if he entered public life with this avowed determination, which he declares he did, how could he expect to obtain any proofs either one way or the other? For the Lord requires of his children honesty and sincerity of heart and purpose, in which selfishness must have no place, and

"This prayer pray: Lord God! thy will be done;
Thy holy will, however it cross my own,
Hard labor this for flesh and blood."

Subduing our wills and the pride of our hearts is the deepest and hardest lesson that mortals have to learn.

"If Joseph Smith was in possession of the true faith and Gospel of Christ, such as his father enjoyed, he would now be treading in his footsteps; being hated of all men, and suffering persecution for righteousness' sake, instead of being where he is and lowering himself by joining in the hue and cry of the low, contemptible and foul-mouthed hypocrites who can scarcely say that which is mean enough against his martyred father, and his most true and humble followers."

"Honesty and sincerity of heart and purpose," are undoubtedly good things to have, but very inconvenient things, sometimes. We had hitherto supposed that heart and purpose, were in many senses synonymous with desire and intention, and these are certainly the will. If this writer were as honest as she would have her readers to believe that Joseph Smith is dishonest, she would probably have given the reasons assigned by him for the statements made respecting crusading on his "own hook," and the course he took in public life, in refusing to teach polygamy; for he assigned as the principal reason for his course what was and is to him a fact in revelation, that the doctrine was not authorized of God, and that it was his duty to proclaim against it—and if, from the day conviction of such duty was fastened on him till now, he has forgotten, neglected, or refused to perform the duty enjoined by that conviction, he is unaware of such refusal, neglect, or forgetfulness.

The Editor of the Exponent is not responsible for Helen Mar Whitney's statement, as a matter of course; but the writer herself would far better conserve the interests of truth, if she would point out somewhere specifically, what part, or portion of the faith and doctrine contained in the Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants, Bible, and Times and Seasons, edited, authorized, or declared publicly by Joseph Smith as the faith of the Church as organized in 1830, according to the "everlasting gospel, that we are at war with, or fighting against.

We were not aware that the "Evil one" inspired men to preach Jesus Christ, and him crucified, the Book of Mormon, the Doctrine and Covenants the revelations of God in this generation, the faith and doctrines of the Church as stated by Joseph Smith himself in 1844, both to the Democrat, of Chicago, and to I. Daniel Rupp, publisher of the History of all Denominations, issued in that year, and Joseph Smith a prophet of God; until we saw it stated by this writer. The religion that Joseph Smith taught is found in the records he gave to the Church for their guidance; and Joseph Smith the younger, was not so young, nor so small, nor so foolish, nor so devilishly inspired that he was not taught the common principles of the faith, and that the gospel of salvation from sin was revealed in the New Testament, the Book of Mormon and the Doctrine and Covenants; nor has he since been so dull and uncomprehending a reader that he has forgotten the precepts taught him in his youth.

As to the date of the introduction of polygamy into the public teachings of the Church, we cite Helen Mar Whitney and Emmeline B. Wells, and the readers of the Exponent, to the published minutes of Special Conference held at Salt Lake City, in August 29th, 1852, and to what the late lamented President Brigham Young, and Apostle Orson Pratt both said of it then. If these women exponents care to impeach the testimony of the "Lion of the Lord," and one of the leading apostles of the Utah host, we have no possible objection. However, we call the attention of the Saints and readers of the HERALD to an article published in the Ogden Pilot for June 30th, 1882.

And this article we would commend to the readers of the Exponent, if we could get them to read it.

The work that Joseph Smith did lay in the states of New York, Ohio, Illinois, Iowa, Missouri and other states, and ended in Illinois in 1844, so far as his personal contact with it was concerned. The character of that work, in its spiritual phase, can only be determined by reference to the records and teachings of himself and compeers up to that date. Whatever those were, he who holds to them is in the faith he held.

The work of the Utah Church began after 1844, and was carried on under the direction and tutelage of Brigham Young; and there seems to be proof that it was his wisdom and will that prevailed until his death; and lies in Utah principally, a place not known to the Church before 1844, and not contemplated by Joseph Smith. This work is not the work of Joseph Smith.

The work of the Reorganization, including Joseph Smith, son of the Seer, lies in the places where the first work lay, and is being carried on with a direct view to its upbuilding and establishing, according to the records and published formulas of faith and doctrine as left by Joseph Smith and others of the first elders, and neither Helen Mar Whitney, nor any other can truthfully say that the work of the first Joseph and his co-workers is the one his son is trying to destroy.

The meeting at Chicago so much complained of by the Utah people and press, was advertised as an anti-polygamy meeting, and was an attack upon that only. Mormonism proper, as a religion, it was conceded, was at the option of any one to believe unmolested, and undisturbed. Joseph Smith was there as an avowed believer in the doctrines of Mormonism as taught by his father, and was not there as an anti-Mormon.

If Joseph Smith, the son of his father, had followed in the footsteps of President Brigham Young, he might have been in Utah, fostering and upholding that which was and is foreign to the gospel his father died in the service of, if not for, and would have been detested, not for the righteousness' sake referred to in that gospel, but for the teaching and practice of what the Lord has said was "abominable in his sight." We confess that we have no ambition to be hated for that kind of righteousness.

Whether we make a poor, or a good soldier of the gospel, or not, we are wonderfully glad that the decision lies with Christ, and not with the people who say that we are unprincipled and in league with the enemies of Joseph Smith; for if found a poor soldier, the mercy of the Judge will palliate the poverty of our service. "He doeth all things well."

The Deseret News man, C. W. Penrose, charges us with perverting and misconstruing the text of the language in the second chapter of the Book of Jacob; when the facts are that we do not construe it at all, but just take it as it reads. It ought to be a smothering fact to the men of the Penrose type all over Utah, and to their polygamic relatives everywhere else, that when men untrammelled with the plural wife incubus, take up the Book of Mormon, and read the testimony of the Book of Jacob, they invariably cry out:

"Why, this book openly condemns polygamy," and the same men also invariably state that the language of the Revelation of 1831, and the section on Marriage in the Doctrine and Covenants, both condemn the system. The charge of wresting, or misconstruing the language of the Book of Mormon and that of the Church Articles in this particular can not be sustained by Mr. Penrose against us.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Bro. Joseph: You would do me a favor if you would inform me, through the Herald, if a Teacher has authority to preach the gospel of Christ in a public assembly, the same as an Elder or a Priest, as I understand from the Book of Covenants that a Teacher is not a preacher?

The law makes it the duty of a Priest and Teacher and Deacon to "teach, expound, exhort, and invite all to come to Christ;" and he may on proper occasions do this in "public assemblies." The occasions referred to as proper are, when in charge of meetings from which the Elder, or Priest, or Teacher may be absent, or when he may be called upon by an officer who is presiding over a meeting at which he is present. As to whether a Teacher is a preacher, or not, depends upon the gifts of God to him; and his diligence and faith. That Priests, Teachers and Deacons may preach when proper occasions offer, we fully believe.

We are in receipt of a letter from an excellent man and a brother, who complains of bad treatment from a brother that borrowed a small sum of money some months ago, promising to pay in a week; but who has so far not paid the money, nor acknowledged the receipt of letters sent respecting it.

It is possible that in this as in many similar cases, there is a good and sufficient reason for the promise not being kept. If this is true, as little as common honesty could do and retain its own self respect would be to state plainly the reason and apologize for the failure to keep the promise made. To be sure, the sum promised is small, but as "straws show which way the wind blows;" might not the key to the character of the promise breaker be found in the small affair. Suppose it is a small sum, and not worth "growling about;" is it not the more easily paid, and so have the promise kept? "He that is faithful over a few things," is to be made ruler over "many things;" and, "if a man is not faithful in the unrighteous mammon, who will trust him with the true riches, must have been written for the benefit of just such a class of borrowers, as a warning and a reproach.

He who goes to them who have money to lend, and who will receive a per centum consideration for its use, and gets from them moneys to his use, giving his legal voucher for the sum obtained, makes use of a privilege provided for by law; and he who lends has a present legal remedy in some sort a security for its payment, and every day he is kept out of it by delay, or neglect, is rated against the borrower at the agreed upon rate of compensation, and his creditor does not feel the failure in promptness, like those do who, for the purpose of assisting a brother in the faith, or a fellow man, in case of a present necessity, upon a promise to pay in a given time. In the latter case the delay and loss by failure to pay are not computed in the transaction; but a fulfillment is confidently expected, created by the exact promise to pay.

We have been told that there was considerable of such loose borrowing and looser keeping of the promise to pay in the old church; and we have witnessed some of it in the Reorganized Church; but which is just as reprehensible now as then, and just as productive of loss of confidence, distrust and bitterness. It is a fruitful cause sometimes for the innocent to suffer for the want of aid from those victimized, who have been unnecessarily betrayed by others failing to keep the solemn promises made.

In the minutes of the Southern California District lately published, the following singular language occurs, to which we call attention:

"Although we feel the work has been much injured by contradictory writing and teaching on doctrinal points by the standing spiritual authorities of the Church in the East, unsettling the faith of many here, this bringing more or less confusion, all of which we hope to see corrected speedily and wisely."

Would the Saints of the Southern District of California, in the minutes of whose conference this charge against the standing spiritual authorities in the east appears, please do some of those standing authorities the justice to point out the "contradictory writing and teaching" which has worked so disastrously there; and in connection with such pointing out, suggest the remedy by which it may be "corrected speedily and wisely." Or, if this is but the expression of the Elders present at the conference, will some of them, by committee properly appointed, or by some other method by which unity of action is secured, send us an explanatory article pointing out the damaging "writing and teaching." For if the fault lie east among these "standing spiritual authorities," certainly they should be willing to amend, when the fault and its remedy are pointed out; and so far as we are acquainted with them they are so willing.

We have been examining the writings of W. K. Lay, having obtained copies of "Heaven's Argument," "Second Lecture," and the Magazine, Prophet's Warning, for September, October, and November, 1881, and January, February, and March, 1882. If there were numbers issued for December, 1881, or April and May, 1882, we have not seen them; and will be thankful to any Saint having them who will forward them.

From the works themselves the following that appear to be facts are gleaned. Something like twenty months ago Mr. W. K. Lay, a student, of good character and ability, residing at State Centre, Iowa, with his parents, J. H. Lay and Mrs. L. J. Lay his wife, and at the time in business with his father, buying, selling, storing and forwarding grain. He was also a licentiate of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He became impressed by some means that he was called of God to do some specific work with reference to the soon appearing of Christ; and to find out what this work was, he was to search the prophetic scriptures. This he did and was led to conclude that his work was that of Elijah, Joshua and Zerubbabel, prophet, leader and judge. He prepared himself to declare the message, and sought the aid of his pastor, but was repulsed; he tried the congregation, but they also ignored him; he tried the Presbyterian pastor, but he also repulsed him. He then essayed to lecture, but was denied the churches. He however obtained a hall and began to lecture; but finding this slow work, he made preparations and began the publication of the Prophet's Warning.

From the pressure of circumstances, whether good or bad, the family left State Centre, and removed to Sandwich, Illinois, about a year ago.

During the course of the affair the father, J. H. Lay, the mother, L. J. Lay, and son G. S. Lay, became converts to the theories of W. K. Lay, and in July last it began to be believed by them, especially W. K. and his mother, that a son would be born to her, that was to be a remarkable child, and whose birth, with attendant circumstances was to be a miracle and constitute the beginning of a miracle period. This child was to have been born in September; but for reasons afterwards explained, the birth was deferred to take place near June 1st, 1882, the delay by the intervention of God's power to be accounted a part of the miracle.

In the Fall of 1881, Mr. W. K. Lay went east, and while there a prophecy by his mother of a great mortality in State Centre, failed of fulfillment; which failure is accounted for by Mr. Lay to prayer made by him that the scourge which was to cause this great mortality might be withheld, which prayer prevailed.

After the removal of the family to Sandwich, Mr. W. K. Lay continued the publication of the magazine, in the January, February and March numbers in which the coming miracle and its nature were set forth. The prophetic lines in which it is shadowed are as follows:

"The word which erst was spoken,
That there would be a sign,
From heaven to earth a token,
Now lives in birth divine.
This miracle dwells in power,
That keeps a son from living;
The once thought natal hour,
But proves this Sign of Heaven.
Show to all earth each passage,
Found in this book of mine,
Which tells thy golden message—
The man-child is the sign.

The interpretation as carried in the February number of the Prophet's Warning, in which the lines appear, and in the March number, carry the idea that the man-child of Mrs. L. J. Lay, which was to have been born in September, 1881, but the birth of which had been withheld by divine power, would be born at Sandwich, Illinois, about June 1st. For while at Adrian, Michigan, attending the interests of the Magazine, and preparing for the sign, the prophet, W. K. Lay, received impression that he must at once proceed to Sandwich, that he was needed there for that a notable event was to happen. At his return, Mrs. Lay, his mother, was instructed to fast until the child, the Sign, was born. This she essayed to do, but the expected event was so long delayed that she died May 18th, after nearly a month of fasting; and upon a post mortem examination of the would be mother, made under the supervision of Dr. W. W. Sedgwick, a brother of the dead woman, and by competent physicians of Sandwich, the hopes of a birth were found to be groundless, no evidences of pregnancy were found.

In the March number of the Warning, page 135, a convention of leaders was proposed, to be held "probably in Sandwich," upon the completion of the miracle. In this Mr. Lay says:

"Already we have written to a few of these leaders, and have received very favorable replies."

Who these leaders are, or were to be, does not appear from what is published in the Warning; but from the mention of the Coming Struggle, Bangor, Maine, Z. B. Chase, publisher; and the Monitor, Hannibal, Missouri, J. J. Cramer, publisher, the latter of whom was at Sandwich, attending upon Mrs. Lay for some two or three weeks before her death, we may not be amiss in inferring that these two might be two of them.

We have briefly given what appear to be the leading facts in this case as we gather them from the writings of the man himself, and the history of the events connected with the death of Mrs. Lay. Whatever the influence that impressed W. K. Lay to the conviction that he was the Elijah, it appears that the first was to the effect that he had a work, but the nature of that work he was to learn by searching the prophetic scripture. By this searching he convinced himself that he was the Elijah to come, the prophet to direct by inspiration; the Joshua, the leader to organize and to lead the hosts of Christ's miraculously made disciples to the Jerusalem on this land of America, the United States being declared by him to be the Jerusalem of prophecy; and the Zerubbabel, the Judge to settle by decision and argument the vexing questions of church and state.

From the wondrous character of the work, as stated by him, the successive periods of which ran from November 15th, 1880, to November, 1881, as the first; from November, 1881, to December 1st, 1882, as the second; and from December 1st, 1882, to December, 1883, as the the third and last, occupying a little over three years. The first of these periods is summarily closed by the prophet in his November magazine, in these words: "I wish to announce the first period of my mission now closed."

The second period, beginning November 1881, and closing December, 1882, was (or is) to be one of a great and "wide spread revival in the United States, beginning with the Jews." This great revival was to begin contingent upon the appearing of the Sign, the transpiring of the birth of the man-child, the miracle of fact, as the miracle of argument had already been given during the first period.

The time that now remains, marred by the death of Mrs. Lay with no sign of the conception of the man-child, and the utter destruction of the probability of the birth of such a child from such parentage, leaves only a few months, but little more than half a year, to accomplish the great work hoped for.

We have never corresponded with the man himself, and were not of the number to whom he had written as leaders; and are willing to accord all honesty of purpose and character to Mr. Lay, and have no personal prejudice against him. We have carefully waded through his arguments and scriptural quotations; and present what is here written candidly and without levity, either in design or execution. We wait further developments.

The celebrated John Randolph, in one of his letters to a young relative, says—"I know nothing I am so anxious you should acquire as the faculty of saying 'No.' You must expect unreasonable requests to be preferred to you every day of your life and must endeavor to deny with as much facility and kindness as you acquiesce."

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. James Caffall says in a late note:

"Please say that the donation from Sr. Amanda S. Yohe, for the church in Denver, was received with thanks. An omission by her, of her post office address, precluded an acknowledgment of the same by letter."

Sr. Yohe is, or was at Mount Vernon, Ohio, we believe.

Bro. Blair says, June 2d.

"All is quiet in this region. Business is dull; rents are high. Look to baptize some more here soon. Our meetings are well attended. Hope you're having nice weather, with good prospects for crops."

Bro. E. C. Brand writes, June 13th:

"I am preaching in the Baptist Church in this place, Logan, Iowa; had a large congregation last night."

Bro. R. M. Elvin, Nebraska City, Nebraska, writes:

"Bro. Badham has been here for a few days, preaching for the branch. He baptized one to-day, I have just returned from a trip of a week to the Moroni Branch. The farmers are very busy with their work, rainy weather hindered some. However, held meetings every night, and three on Sunday; the Spirit was richly enjoyed."

Correspondence.

DENVER, Colorado.

Dear Herald.—Without stopping to offer apologies, I respectfully suggest the following. Colorado is long and broad, nor is the writer aware that restrictive measures are thought of, much less enforced, as a preventive to migration; but all are at liberty to come within its borders. The understanding has obtained that all must depend upon their own resources. To persuade any Latter Day Saints to come, or not, is neither my province nor desire; but would respectfully remind any of your readers who may contemplate coming to Colorado, that there are perhaps as many humane people to be found here as elsewhere. It is a poor place to come expecting to find doors opened, tables spread, and any amount of money to be handed over by a pitiful look or a bold request. That Latter Day Saints should cherish kindly feelings towards and for each other, and help to bear or lighten each others' burdens through life's rugged journey, is a well established fact. But no Latter Day Saint ought to forget that as God helps those who help themselves, they too ought to leave nothing unturned to help themselves; for by this procedure they will be more likely to get help in a time of actual necessity, than by making a demand from those they think have it in their power to assist, without straining every nerve to help themselves; especially if this demand is made because they happen to be Latter Day Saints, and those to whom they appeal are in more favorable circumstances, or have a larger house, brighter furniture, and a few more dollars than himself. He who has physical strength and would strut around, killing time in joining groups of men, in stores or in street corners, in loose or filthy conversation, turning his back upon honest labor, easily obtained, and by lying, or scheming, seek to live upon the hard labor or industry of another, because he claims to be a Latter Day Saint, is a pest and a disgrace to any society, especially so to the Church of Christ, and should be admonished rather than helped.

And if perchance any with such proclivities, with no reformatory blood coursing through their veins, have their faces Coloradward, it were better for them to halt. For already prejudice has had to be met, through professed Latter Day Saints playing the fool, as to necessitate the inauguration of stringent measures for the maintenance of the dignity of the Church.

The few Saints in Colorado have but little understanding of the all things common argument, with no desire to be instructed at present. But they will not forget that the idler shall not eat the bread, nor wear the garment, of the laborer.

Incessant rains and cold, have caused a stagnation in business; but great preparations are being made, and it is expected when the weather shall settle, business will revive, in which event much will be done. But for all this competition is great, and all kinds of workmen are plentiful. Yet if there are honest and industrious Latter Day Saints, whether mechanics or laborers, whose prospects are discouraging, and the way opens to come, they will doubtless succeed here. For those who can subsist where they are, it were foolish for them to break up their homes to come here with big expectations. Furthermore, no encouragement will be given if members should leave their present homes in a dishonorable way. For the unfortunate and wayward, sympathy will be shown, and help extended as far as possible.

It may be that the above savors of harshness. It doubtless will to those who fail to distinguish between officiousness and a proper effort and becoming zeal to study and labor for the fair fame of the Church; and unfortunately there are many who fail to make this discrimination, and watch for iniquity, make a man an offender for a word, laying snares for him that repeth in the gate; but what I have said, I have said. To make the name of a Latter Day Saint honorable, is a part of the work of the Reorganized Church, or so I believe; and no indulgences should be granted, or special favors conferred, to the violation of any known or recognized law or procedure of the Church.

JAMES CAFFALL.

BROWN CITY, Mich.,

June 2d, 1882.

Bro. J. Smith.—Our District Conference, held at Goodland, on the 27th and 28th of May, was well attended, and an excellent feeling prevailed. Ample preparation was made, and the promise made by Brethren Carpenter and DeLong that the Saints at Goodland could entertain a conference, was verified. Prejudice was removed from the minds of many, and the cause was strengthened, and received a new impetus in this section. Brethren George A. Blakeslee, E. L. Kelley and C. Scott, were present as constant laborers, and did us good service. The Saints were pleased to see the Bishop, and the meeting gave increased confidence in the chief financial agent of the Church. They are convinced that their offerings will be safe in his hands.

There are so many demands for preaching, and so many places, and so wide spread, that it is difficult to determine as to what next, in the line of duty. The very cause seems to groan and cry out—"More Laborers." There are indications that some of those who have been hindered by circumstances may be able to do more in the ministry by and by. Agitation, in order to call the attention of the people to the facts of the faith, seems to be the needed thing; and the old rule appears to be good yet,—"Honest ones will believe it when they hear it."

We parted with Bro. Blakeslee at Goodland, and E. L. left us at this place, yesterday, for Canada. Bro. Scott and I are continuing the work in North-East Michigan;—good audiences and good attention. Meeting again here this evening; and tomorrow eve go to St. John's Branch, Sanilac county, Michigan. On the 30th of May, I baptized Bro. Phillip Houseman, at Clear Lake, Indiana, aged sixty-nine. He has been a long time investigating, and will doubtless be of good service to the cause there. May 21st, baptized a Bro. Felky at the same place, a young man of promise. A great interest still continues in that section. The Saints are moving along with increased interest in the work. May 26th, Sr. Cassie Kelley, wife of Bro. E. L., was baptized at Coldwater, Michigan, at which time we had a short but pleasant waiting with the Saints, and a sensible realization of the power and approval of God's Holy Spirit. The Saints are waiting and watching there, and most of them trying to be faithful. We are encouraged.

Coldwater, Mich., June 12.—After leaving Brown City, through the kindness of Bro. and Sr. Most, Bro. Scott and I were conveyed through the burnt district, some forty miles further north-east, where we visited the St. John's, Corsonville, Forrester and Lebanon branches of the Church, and a number of Saints. We found the brethren, as a rule, earnest and devoted to the faith. They are gaining, and are better prepared to help further the cause than at any time we have visited them. Like many others, they have learned some things by experience; i. e., that method and order are essential in carrying on the latter day work as well as other pursuits, and that the way to make speedy progress is to walk by the light of the law, as interpreted by the body of believers, and labor in harmony therewith. This is the section of country where Brn. J. J. Cornish and Robert Davis did most of the labor some time ago. But they have been doing little or nothing for some time. Bro. Cornish maintains that he was justified in quitting the field and going to labor to take care of himself, as he reached that point where he had little or nothing to eat; while brethren as earnestly state that he was well cared for, and should have remained in the field—might have been a little close at times, as all others were, &c. Bro. Cornish is now running a saw mill, and has been for some time, with hope of gaining. May he succeed. Yet upon inquiry I learned that he is just about the financial basis that he was when he started.

I state some of these particulars because there are some lessons to be learned from them, and no blame to be attached to those referred to:—

1. When a laborer begins to meditate upon the propriety of leaving the gospel field, he should candidly consider the importance of that field, and whether the necessities of the case are such as to justify, or demand, that he cease preaching and go into business. There is not an Elder in the Church that I have any knowledge of, that has ever reached any prominence and been of any great service to the cause but what has been close times occasionally, but worked out the best he could. Of course, if necessity demand, home is the place for every man.

2. The manner of sustain nigan Elder. In this case (as in very many others) the brethren were to look after the Elder's family. All was going to do, and each direct as they respectively saw fit. What was every body's business soon became to be nobody's business; and like all similar proceedings, it failed. When the collapse comes to such, everybody is to blame in general, and nobody in particular. It is a failure all the same, however. Each and all have done a great deal,—yet no account has been kept, and nobody knows anything about it. The people say the Elder got "heaps;" the Elder says he "nearly starved,"—his wife having to live some of the time on potatoes and salt, or bread and water, &c.

Now this is just about as it should be. When people refuse to go by the law when there is one, it seems to be just enough that they be found in just such a dilemma.

Did the branches, anywhere, propose to do something for the cause, by aiding some Elder direct, by reason of having a surplus on hand of anything that enters into a living, aside from what they propose to send to the Agent or Bishop, direct, sit down and write to the agent of their intention and ability to do, and get an understanding with the agent; then at their business meetings appoint a committee or some person to visit those proposing to aid, and ascertain the amount and what, with a cash value attached, keeping a record of all, and putting it on the Branch Record, and reporting the items and amount to the agent, the same as any other means contributed. There would be system, law and order, and a record to show just what was done; which when appealed to, would at once settle all difficulties. Besides, the agent could be apprized as to how much support had been given to any one Elder, and he could guard the interest of the Church by not allowing any one to gather from the Church two livings in one year: one from the branches and the members, and the other from the Bishop or Agent.

It would also save the Church from further disgrace, in allowing individuals to be turned loose on a community of Saints, by agreement, to nudge and jingle as much out of each member as possible in a given length of time, by going about on so called gospel errands with a hole in a boot to speak for it; and one in the coat, hat, pantaloons, &c., to speak for them,—while reciting and describing of poverty at home, at each call,—all under the commendable head "Preaching without purse or scrip. Bosh! It is simply systematic tramping and begging. To preach without purse or scrip is to go out into the world to preach the gospel, not expecting to find relatives or Saints, but trusting in God and the word of his grace to guide and see that your wants are supplied. But we will live and learn.

The burnt district looks desolate and wild enough; but all agree that the fire has been a great benefit to the country, as it can be cleared up and brought into cultivation with less than half the labor it would have taken had it not been burned. The relief was a great benefit to the sufferers; and they are now as well and better off than they were before the fire. Some dissatisfaction exists as to the manner in which the relief was administered, however. Favorites come in for extra shares, &c. Some preachers that had control of the relief in some places, would give out a little to individuals, and then tell them if they belonged to their church they would give them more, as an inducement to have them leave their faith, bury their convictions, and join their society, for a little relief which had been contributed by the generous hearts of the American people and others. If there is any class of men extant who deserve the title of "Poor Devils," in my judgment, these do. Endeavoring to force men's consciences by giving or withholding bread and butter. I hope this report is not true.

We are indebted to Brn. Most, Wilkie and Barr, more than any, for conveying us from place to place; and Sr. Wilkie for seeing that we went tidy. These are thought to be small things, but they seemed big ones to us. May every kindness receive a remunerative reward. I left Bro. Scott with the Coreonville Saints, well, and appointments out for Port Sanilac and other places. We had a pleasant few days together, and enjoyed our stay with the Saints. I am at home to-day. The fruit is killed, weather cool, Spring backward, and I am meditating as to where next.

Respectfully,

WM. H. KELLEY.

TWIN FALLS, Kansas.

I have organized a Sunday School out of the different elements here. I was told that it was impossible to get up a Sunday School, that the people were too rough; but I said so much more the need of one. I have now a school of sixty very interesting scholars. They seem very much interested, and say that I don't talk like any one else—they can understand what I teach. By the help of the Master I will try and teach the truth. I hope Bro. John T. Davies will soon come up here and finish the work that I have begun.

Pray for me that I may overcome the world, and be the means of doing some good.

Bro. Joseph.—The conference here closed last evening. We had a general good time; the spirit of the Master was present with his Saints. But the worst time was this morning in parting: Brothers John H. Lake, E. H. Gurley, E. L. Kelley and G. A. Blakeslee, left here for the London District; Bro. Deuel and I to remain in this, the Kent and Elgin District, until the Fall. They left in good spirits. The prospect looks fair for a good work to be done in this district. I might say much in regard to this great work, for surely it is a marvelous work in the eyes of the people: for the wisdom of this world is foolishness with God, and so I find the words of Paul to be true; and as I go out among those of the world, I find it to be as he said. As we go among the world and strangers, we hear some hard sayings about the Latter Day Saints, and I see the great need of Elders and Saints acting right in the world, and of being careful how we present ourselves before the world, but before the Saints and before God; and see that we do right, that God's blessing may rest upon us, and his good Spirit be with us to guide us in the right path, that we may do his will at all times. My best regards to all.

Pray for me, your humble brother in Christ,
GEORGE HICKLIN.

RENO, Iowa, June 1st, 1882.

Editor Saints' Herald.—Two years ago the writer hereof was a member and Elder of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and for nearly four years prior to that time, had been actively and almost constantly engaged in the ministerial field.

In an evil hour, nearly two years ago, I inadvertently listened to the voice of the tempter, and impelled by thoughts of wrongs received, whether real or imaginary matters not here, I acted foolish enough to send you my letter of commendation, Elder's license and certificates, requesting that my name be stricken from the Church Register, and from the roll of the First Quorum of Elders.

Not being satisfied with this wrong move, I united with another religious order; was ordained an Evangelist, and for a time tried to preach the tenets of that organization. This did not last long, as I found it impossible to continue to publicly proclaim certain peculiarities of doctrine, which I did not privately believe; and being disgusted with myself and my surroundings, I severed all my connection with that order; and "sailed out" into the world, and sin, and folly, fully determined at that time never again to unite myself with any religious body.

After nearly two long years floundering in sin and iniquity, and part of the time trying, with might and main, to force myself across the mystic border land of infidelity into atheism, I still find myself a firm believer in the principles and truths of so called Mormonism: and am now fully determined—let the consequences, trials, and sorrows of the future be what they may—to unite myself again with those whom I believe, yes know, to be the people of God.

But first, a word to the Church: My going out from among you was to me under strange influences, of wonderful peculiarities, which I could not then, neither can I now fathom nor understand. But nevertheless I then knew, and now know, that I was doing great and grievous wrong to a people who never, as a body, did me a wrong or injury; but rather by their faith and prayers and means, as best they could, ever "upheld my hands," while I was trying to do service in our common cause for Christ and truth.

Today, if I know my own heart, and I believe I do, I have bitterly and truly repented of all this sin and wrong; and having drained the cup of sorrowing to its bitter dregs, and being desirous to right all wrongs, as I hope to soon be known again as one among God's people, I feel it to be my duty to make this confession to the Church as far reaching and public as were the wrongs done; and ask and beg of you, as a body, to forgive me for the wrong and injury I did and caused.

To the Saints of the Nauvoo and String Prairie District, as to those upon whom fell the effects of my misdeeds the heaviest, I desire to say over my own signature, thus publicly, that I did you great wrong and grievous injury, and I beg and pray and hope you will pardon me, as I trust that God will; and I ask you, with everyone in the Church everywhere, to uphold me by your faith and prayers, and remember me in kindness and mercy, as an erring yet truly repentant brother.

I also acknowledge that after I left the Church, I did wrong in preference to right, and tried to drown the memory of past and present misery, in a continuous round of revelry and sin: but this is a private matter between me and my God. I feel and know that I have repented it all, sorely and bitterly, and I know my God will forgive and forget, when I shall have again passed through the portals of baptism, into the fold. I have tried to do all in my power to make right all wrongs of a private nature to individual Saints; but I know and confess that I have fallen far short of what I should have done; but it has been utterly impossible for me to do more than I have up to the present; and if any of the Saints do not yet feel reconciled and satisfied with my course, if they will only write, or see and tell me what is demanded to bring about a perfect reconciliation, I herein promise before God and man, that I will do all and everything proper, right and just, as God in his mercy may give me the ability to perform.

As I am free, and of my own will and desire make this public confession, I am just as free to state that I have been credited, by the people at large, with many and grievous wrongs that I never thought or dreamed of committing. But "Tray was in bad company," and suffered chastisement; so I may have deserved all this: at least, I am willing to leave the arbitration of these vexed questions to the decision of the Great Judge, and find fault with no one now.

This step, and following ones, I know will be fruitful in producing for me a pathway full of trials, thorns, and contumely; but I believe I have counted the cost, and I think I know why I do so; and Israel's God being my helper, I will never be wrecked on such breakers again. Foolish men learn by experience; and I earnestly hope and pray that the lessons I have thus learned may be instrumental in tightening my grasp upon the "Rod of Iron;" and that I may eventually make the safe haven of refuge, shall be my prayer and hope for the future.

My home address is Bryant, Fulton county, Illinois. Any Saints desiring to address me, will so direct their letters.

Yours in hope,

JOSEPH A. CRAWFORD.

SALT LAKE, June 16th, 1882.

Bro. Joseph:—It will be gratifying to the readers of the Herald to know that the prospects for the progress and triumph of truth and right in all these mountain regions continue to grow brighter and more abundant. Our numbers are increasing if it is rather slowly. But the influence of our work is felt far beyond the proportion of our membership. Utah Mormons, and non-Mormons, are well affected by it.

An intelligent, liberal minded Mormon, one who was with the Church in Nauvoo, says the Utah leaders and their devotees will talk, and bluster, and prophecy, for effect, till they see the strong arm of national law strike at polygamy and kindred evils, and then they will quietly yield to the inevitable.

Last conference the leaders counseled their people to not trade with non-Mormon dealers. It was observed by a few for a short time, but now it would seem that all, or nearly all of their membership trade wherever they choose, whether with Mormons or not. This indicates that the leaders have not the influence they once had to control their people in everything.

The leaders, and the more fanatical Mormons, are silent and sullen. The liberal and intelligent element are cheerful, and some persons among them are free to say to those like minded that they are glad the national government has undertaken to regulate and reconstruct Utah affairs; some of them even endorsing the Edmunds Bill on the ground that hitherto polygamists were at a large premium for all offices from that of an elder to the bishops and First Presidency.

The Deseret News (C. W. Penrose, Editor) calls you many unsavory names, and rears around "like a wild bull in a net," (that's Scripture!)

because of some things you were made to say in your Chicago "Anti-Polygamy" speech, as reported in the Chicago Times of Feb. 23d, last past. They credit it to the Chicago Tribune of that date, but that was another of their numerous mistakes. (?) We published the Tribune report of that speech in our Advocate, last April, and it is quite different from that of the Times. It proves fortunate that we did publish it, for it is a sufficient answer to the News' ravings.

Not long since I met with Hon. A. G. Campbell, late contesting delegate from Utah. He speaks highly of our delegation to Congress—Brn. E. L. Kelley and Z. H. Gurley—and said he "would be pleased to see Mr. Kelley one of the Utah Commission." He also said he was confident he (Kelley) could have got the appointment, had his friends made an effort in that direction. Mr. Campbell thinks we are doing much to place the anti-polygamous, loyal, and moral phases of the genuine Church before the world, and those in authority, but thinks we should make still greater efforts in that direction. To this we replied that we should do all in our power to that end.

The Utah Commissioners "are not yet in sight," and the people here can't elect a school trustee, nor any officer, high or low. The Edmunds Bill swept political power from the hands of the people entirely. It remains to be seen what the full scope and jurisdiction of the "Commission" may be, and what they may accomplish in the way of reconstruction. Little is said, but much expected on all sides. Hush! Watch! Wait! That's the policy now.

The Utah Mormons have, as you know, sent a delegation to Congress this week, bearing a State Constitution and a petition for Statehood. The demoralized condition of the Democratic party, and the fact that Oregon has lately gone Republican, and the further fact that North Carolina is likely to go Republican, blasts the last hope that any sensible Mormon could have of getting their petition granted now. I have lately heard Mormons express the hope that Statehood would not now be granted, nor until polygamy and priestly domination were swept out.

Utah Mormonism is a religio-politico-commercial institution, and like the fabled god Brieseus, has a thousand arms; but they will not last forever. God has decreed "deliverance to the captives," and has promised that the Saints "shall be led out of bondage by power, and with a stretched out arm." For this we work and pray.

W. W. BLAIR.

Bro. Joseph.—Yesterday I received the sad news of the decease of my dear, affectionate sister, Mary A. Fuller, of Bedford, Ohio. She fell asleep in Jesus on May 11th. O, how sorrowful I do feel. I attend to my tri-daily devotional exercises; but yester-morn I felt impressed to pray again; I did so for quite awhile, read scripture, sang a hymn,—then went to the Post Office and received a letter from my sister, Sarah E. Laughlin, announcing the sad tidings. I had been so busily engaged in other matters, that correspondence for a few weeks had been deferred, so they lost trace of my whereabouts.

My sister, if I may be permitted to say it, was a good, kind and affectionate wife and mother. I believe she lived as near to God as it is possible for one to live in this world. She always sought to make peace. Endured trials patiently. Prayed much; read God's holy word and sang his praises daily. She is asleep in Jesus; blessed sleep. I asked the kind Father to comfort me, and the following words came to mind: "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord from henceforth; yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors, for their works do follow them." O, "words with heavenly comfort fraught."

This comes very hard on me, as it is the first death in our family since I have been old enough to realize the sadness of such an event. My heart aches. I'm bound down with grief. I sorrow, but not as for those who have no hope; for concerning her salvation I entertained not the shadow of a doubt. Not because she is my sister, only; but because she was "buried with Christ by baptism;" was blessed with the Holy Spirits' presence, and some of its cheering gifts; lived the life of a Christian; died the triumphant death of a child of God. I feel now that I must so live as to meet with her in "the sweet bye and bye." I loved her dearly.

While the flowers in May were blooming,
My sister Mary passed away;
And entered through the shining portals,
Into realms of endless day.

She was true, good, kind and gentle,
Loved by all who knew her best;
But she now has gone and left us,
Entered into perfect rest.

We may weep—but we'll remember
That her spirit's happy now;
With the righteous she is dwelling,
With no care mark on her brow.

Father, mother, brothers, sisters,
All will miss her gentle voice;
With the blessed she is happy,
In their midst she doth rejoice.

Yours in sadness,

J. FRANK McDOWELL

Dear Bro. Joseph Smith.—This is to say that I am still engaged in the work of God, and hope and pray that I may do so all my life. I love the work in which I am engaged; I love my brethren and sisters, and pray for their welfare continually. No doubt some will think it strange that they do not see some account of district business, especially the Birmingham District. I may say for the information of those interested, as secretary of the district, that things are moving on well. The clouds are silver lined, and if the brethren in conference assembled would only make it a standing order that the conference minutes be sent to the Herald, you would see more of our doings than at present. But I can not take it upon myself to send them for print without their bidding, so that is the reason you have not seen much of late; but while you have not seen much of our doings, we have been at work, and intend to go forward by the help of God our Father.

The English Saints are very much pleased (as far as I have mingled with them) with the steps the American government have taken to bring an end to the abominations of Utah. I believe it will tell a tale in favor of the Reorganization; so let us be comforted and take fresh courage, for we will have a better opportunity of showing the difference between the Utah Church and our own. For let it be everywhere understood that God wants a pure people to serve him, and to carry on his work. May we be such, is the prayer of your brother in the gospel of peace,

GEORGE S. GREENWOOD.

PLAIN CITY, Utah,

June 6th, 1882.

Bro. Joseph Smith.—I leave here today for Madlad, and will spend a few days with the Saints there; will go from there to Albion, a distance of one hundred and twenty five miles, will go by team if I can; if not that way, then will have to go by rail. I baptized four here on last Saturday, one man and three women, and I leave the Saints feeling well. They have passed through a fiery trial; some fell by the way, but they were few; the rest feel stronger and firmer,—God grant that they may abide in peace henceforth.

Kind love to all; and may peace abide.

Yours in Christ,

R. J. ANTHONY.

ROSD EAU, Ontario,

May 31st, 1882.

Bro. Joseph.—After parting with you at Kansas City, Bro. Blakeslee and family, Bro. W. H. Kelley and myself, boarded the Rock Island Railroad fast train, and in twenty hours we landed in Chicago. Bro. Kelley stopping in the city, the rest of us passing on to Galien, Michigan. I had a pleasant visit at Bro. Blakeslee's, and tried to talk to the Saints on the Sabbath. Wednesday I passed on, and reached Bro. John Traxler's, near Louisville, Ontario, on the evening of April 20th. In a few days we secured the use of a school house in a place called "Bummer's Roost" (which name is synonymous with the reputation of the place) for Sundays, the trustees not being willing for us to use it at nights, unless Bro. Traxler would be responsible for all damage. So we opened up on Sunday, and had a crowded house; it being a large school-house and well seated, we had a good audience. At the close of meeting on the second Sunday, the Baptists had an appointment for the following Sunday, through one of the trustees. I made the announcement for the Baptist, and then remarked that I would like to follow up the subjects, and judging by the number present, I was more anxious (the house being full). After the meeting, four or five gentlemen took up my cause, and was determined that I should have one half of the time at least. Well; after all the Baptist held no meeting, and the following Sunday I spoke again, to a full house. And now the Primitive Methodist steps in for the alternate Sabbath. It was amusing to see the Baptists fitting the coat on the Methodist first, and then it turned the other way, yet John Wesley Methodists are very scarce. Well; we left an appointment for some of us to fill. On the whole I found good interest there. May God bless the seed sown. Ignorance of our true position militates against the work, and when they find out we worship the only true and Eternal God and His only begotten son Jesus Christ, and these only, the prejudice of many is removed; but of course all other kinds are to be found, and the plain principles of the gospel are too much for their capacity. Besides all this, it takes all styles of preachers to suit the masses; but there are some that no preachers of gospel persuasion can suit.

I tried the city of Dresden, but failed. It was very evident that when it was found out what I was, they did not want the people to hear. If I had some of Paul's sagacity I would succeed better perhaps; but I can't borrow any, and make it work. I conducted a number of meetings in Lindsey Branch meeting-house, understanding that none had been held there since Bro. Blair was here, and was assisted in both of these places by Brn. Vickery and Traxler. Bro. Lake also spoke once at the latter place, and Bro. Hicklin twice. In company with Brn. Lake and Deuel we opened up in Thamesville, but only held one meeting, for as soon as the speaker informed the hearers who we were, and that we were antagonistic to the practices of a people in Utah, also called Mormon, a number got up and left; and so it goes. Some express themselves that "those Mormon Elders compass sea and land to make one proselyte, and when they have made him, they make him two fold more the child of hell than he was before." Well we trust that God will have mercy on them in their acknowledged, before mentioned state.

I have spoken once in Wellington Branch and once in Zone Branch, and have received excellent treatment by all the Saints, and some outsiders. The Saints have kindly administered to all my wants. We have put in our time just the best we knew how. God has blessed us in our efforts. Bro. Hicklin has not been here two weeks yet; Bro. Lake scarcely three weeks. They with myself came to this place yesterday, and found Bro. Deuel here, who has been holding meetings in or vicinity of Ridgeway lately. They are all feeling well, and have just gone to administer to a sister who is sick. My labors have been in Kent county, north of Chatham, and the general feeling for the work with Saints is good; and this principle is with them generally, "What do the books teach?" may we always look to that, or rather the accepted faith of the Church.

Praying that God will bless his work and word, both here and elsewhere, we feel to push on according to the grace given us. Among us we will hold meetings here this week. Saturday conference convenes. After which Bro. Lake thinks that he and I will go into London District. Bro. Lake and Deuel have labored elsewhere, but I presume they will write you ere long. We also met with some who had been members years ago; they treated us kindly, and a kind feeling came over us while with them. They attended our meetings, and seemed loath to have us go, but seemed comforted when they learned that some of us would come again. May God help them in my earnest prayer, and let us all as the Church of Jesus Christ, look to the law, and see that it is kept. Lest I weary you, and with hoping that this mission may be blessed, and our minds guided by the Spirit of Truth. I remain your brother in Christ,
E. H. GURLEY.

Bro. Joseph—I am now laboring about seven miles north-east of Herman, in Washington Co., where there is a Baptist organization. I, as an individual, am treated with kindness by all; but as a servant of God, rather coldly by some. There are some here almost persuaded, and the interest is good. There is a Baptist minister located here, but I have had no conversation, religiously, as yet with him. He has been to two of my meetings, and appears somewhat interested in the ideas presented. He appears like a nice man, but he is not very sociable with me, as I have not chanced to speak to him but once since coming here. 'Tis true there is a reason: but I hope, ere I leave here, to present the truth so plainly, as that the beauty of it will illuminate his mind with others.

I have confined my labors almost exclusively, since General Conference, to Washington county. I spoke in Blair, as I stopped there on my way here, in a private residence, and had in attendance a good congregation. I left a good interest there to hear, and strong invitations to return, by both Christians (?) and infidels (?), which invitation I shall try and fulfill at some future time, as the Lord wills.

I baptized three adult persons last Sunday week, two of which were or had been of the Baptist persuasion, of Danish nationality.

The gnawing appetite after the bread of life is becoming more general, and more piercing, in this mission; and did the people but know that the table of righteousness and truth was already spread, that they could sit and partake of the bread of life, and receive of its satisfying and nourishing power; and who were the servants whom God, who had prepared that table, has called to serve Him and wait upon and feed them, they would be far more eager and diligent in seeking a place, and securing a position, whereby they might receive, till they were filled, of that food which God has prepared for whosoever will partake.

May the poor famishing souls, through the mercy of God, be directed in their seeking aright, that they may receive of the bread of life, that they may have life, and that more abundantly, is my prayer, and shall be that for which I shall labor.

Your brother in the everlasting gospel,
J. FRANK MINTUN.

NORTH HENDERSON, Ills.,
June 7th, 1882.

Bro. Joseph.—We have just returned from our District Conference held a Buffalo Prairie, and a blessed time we had. It seems quite evident from the overflow of God's spirit, and the abundance of peace, brotherly love and union, that were manifest during the entire sessions, that many of us are returning to our first love. We put our foot on the Satanic power in the start, and consequently peace reigned supreme. One was baptized during conference by Bro. J. D. Jones. We believe a brighter day is beginning to dawn for the work in this district.

I was gone seventeen days, with a cash expense of $26.68 for railroad expenses, &c. Stopping on the way in Grundy Co., Missouri. I have a letter from parties in Missouri that I labored with, desiring baptism—not the fruit of my labor entirely, but of Bozarth and others. Since from conference, I have preached every Sunday, visiting the friends in Grundy county, and preaching there; also, went to Des Moines Valley Branch, preached the funeral of Sr. Sandford on the 28th of May, and performed the marriage ceremony uniting Sr. R. Thomas and G. M. Jamison in the bonds of wedlock. I find the work at low ebb in many places, by reason of no laborers.

Teacher E. Merrill reports doing his duty in the branch, has visited the Saints, has a desire to roll on the work all he can.

Whereas, it now appears that the Saints in Des Moines and vicinity are making an effort to build them a small meeting house; and whereas, it seems to us a good enterprise considering the great necessity, and will be one of the best efforts and ways to give the work a prominent footing in the capital of the State. Therefore, be it

Christians let us get near the cross, and look until our souls become filled with love to him who hung there for us; until we catch something of his spirit; then shall we go forth to render, not merely an outward obedience, but to give ourselves, body and souls to the delightful service of the captain of our salvation.

The blossom can not tell what becomes of its odor, and no man can tell what becomes of his influence and example, that roll away from him and go beyond his ken on their mission.

Miscellaneous.

NEW MEETING HOUSE AT LAMONI.

On May 1st, the Saints of the Lamoni Branch of the Church, held a business meeting, at which the subject of a house of worship for the use of the Church was considered, and Joseph Smith, Elijah Banta, Samuel V. Bailey, Ebenezer J. Robinson, Amos B. Moore, Wilson Hudson, and Lawrence Conover were appointed a committee to inquire into and report the feasibility of building such a house. This committee made the proper inquiries, and reported to a business meeting provided for by call, held May 27th, that such a house of worship was greatly needed and that it was feasible, and recommended that a Building Committee be appointed and authorized to proceed with its erection.

This report was favorably considered by the meeting, and E. Banta, S. V. Bailey, E. J. Robinson, George Adams, Peter Harris, N. M. Reeder and Joseph Smith, were appointed as such Building Committee.

The brethren named met at once and appointed E. Banta permanent chairman of committee, and Joseph Smith as secretary.

On May 29th, at a meeting of the Committee, E. Banta, N. M. Reeder and Joseph Smith were appointed a committee to make inquiry concerning sites and locations, and an order was entered to submit the decision of a site to the vote of the branch at a meeting called for that purpose.

This sub-committee made inquiry, and secured from Bro. D. Dancer the offer of an eligible site just west of the present plat of Lamoni, one acre as a donation for the purpose, with the privilege of more land at a cost of not more than $80 per acre; and from Mr. H. B. Scott, agent of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad, the offer of one lot 50x120 feet in size, as a donation, and the privilege of eleven other lots of same size, lying just north of the present plat of Lamoni, at a cost of $250 cash, or $400 on terms to be agreed upon.

These offers were reported to a business meeting of the branch, held June 17th, of which due notice was given. This meeting resolved to vote upon the subject by ballot; the ballots being in printed form as follows: "Site No. 1, West of Town." "Site No. 2, North of Town."

The presiding officer, in charge, Bro. Asa S. Cochran, upon motion, appointed Brn. Wilson Hudson, Peter Harris, Stephen Wood and A. K. Anderson as tellers, two of whom distributed the ballots, the other two collecting them; after all had selected the one they chose to cast, upon the counting of the ballots cast, it was found that 137 votes had been cast, of which number site "No. 1" had received 88, and site "No. 2," 49 votes. The presiding officer then proclaimed that site No. 1 having received the largest number of votes cast, was declared to be the site chosen.

On Monday, June 19th, the committee met and perfected their organization by choosing J. Smith, treasurer, and further ordered that subscription books be furnished each member of the committee, and one to each branch of the Church in the district, in pursuance of a resolution to that effect passed at the last District Conference held at Davis City, June 3d and 4th; and also, that the subscription heading should be substantially as follows:

"We whose names are signed on this and succeeding pages of this book, agree to give the several sums set opposite our respective names, for the purpose of building a House of Worship at Lamoni, Decatur county, Iowa; said house to be 50x80 feet in size, capable of seating one thousand persons, on a site designated by vote of the Lamoni Branch of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, on land donated and bought of D. Dancer, and called "Site No. 1, West of Town;" said sums to be due and payable to E. Banta, S. V. Bailey, G. Adams, P. Harris, E. J. Robinson, N. M. Reeder and J. Smith, Building Committee appointed by said Branch of said Church, as Trustees, to be held and expended by them for the purpose named herein; payment to be made to Joseph Smith, treasurer of said committee, at the time of subscription, or upon demand of committee,—notice of demand being first duly given. Subscriptions may be made in money, materials for said building, and labor, and be payable in kind; provided that subscriptions of material and labor, not paid in kind upon demand of committee, within reasonable time after demand is made, may be held and collected as subscriptions in money."

Dated at Lamoni, Iowa, June 19th, 1882.

And also that all moneys collected by Committee or Branch Agents should be paid into the Treasurer's hand, who was to receive and receipt the same; and that all moneys paid out should be upon the order of the chairman of the committee.

It was further directed that the secretary prepare this statement of the proceedings of the Branch and the Building Committee, for publication in the Herald, with a request for its insertion.

By order of Committee.

God.

PERHAPS nothing can be more seductive in its nature, or more potent in its influence for evil, than a false conception of the nature and character of God. Our ideas of Deity, whether they be right or wrong, constitute the basis of our religion, and form the pattern by which the warp and woof of our lives are woven. We naturally assimilate the object we worship, hence the necessity of having a high, noble, and true conception of the nature and character of God.

You can gauge a man's mental and moral caliber, and judge as to the utility of his religion, by learning the character of the object of his worship.

As many religious systems as have been and are now in the world, represent as many conceptions of the Great First Cause. The benefits derived from, and the good growing out of these several faiths, range just in proportion to their tendency to inspire correct ideas relative to the sovereign power. And proportionably as they have been elevating in their moral tendency, and have approximated the pure sentiments of the "perfect law," we believe them to be of God. The gospel of Christ rises in majestic beauty above every other religious system, by reason, not only of the superiority of its code of ethics, but because its author was God manifest in the flesh." In a two fold sense we believe this to be true. Conceived of the Holy Ghost he was the "Son of God;" born of woman he was the "Son of Man," and by virtue of his perfect character he was "God manifest in the flesh." Every attribute of Deity was displayed by him. In his willing sacrifice was exemplified his perfect love; and his life-work was but a representation of the patience, charity, and wisdom of God; while his triumphant resurrection proclaimed the conquering majesty and power of the Infinite One. Here is a being represented upon whom we may well bestow our affections, predicate our faith, and rest our hope of present and future happiness. Could we but comprehend and keep in mind the attributes of Deity, they would form a standard by which we might safely judge as to the truth or falsity of every religious sentiment. It is possible for one to not comprehend the magnitude or intensity of a principle, and yet have a right conception of its character. Nature and the Christian religion agree in sentiment expressed, and concur in defining the character of God; were it not so, the latter could not be true. As a tree is known by its fruits, and man by his works, so the attributes of Deity are displayed in his boundless creations. The rotund earth with its varying and almost unlimited productions, the sun with his brilliant rays and genial warmth, the translucent moon and the myriads of twinkling stars, all blend in perfect harmony to proclaim the existence and nature of God. His munificence is indelibly written upon the broad frontispiece of heaven. The purling stream and laughing fountain bespeak his "good will toward men." The bright hued songsters tell of his goodness and pleasure, and the lovely flowers reflect his pleasant smile. Of a clear evening go out and gaze at the blue vault, gemmed with the bright jewels of heaven, and Infinitude with its awful majesty, presses itself upon your senses. There you behold, written in graphic characters, "God is unchangeable, and without shadow of turning, and his course is one eternal round." Theology that does not embody this sentiment, is deficient, and does not serve the best interests of humanity. The gospel of Christ bears the impress of divinity by reason of its uniformity, unchangeability, and agreement with the revealments of nature. It proclaims itself yesterday, to-day and forever the same. It is God's plan for a world's redemption, devised by him in the courts of heaven from before the foundation of the world. It brings its happy recipients into rapport with heaven and communion with the King of Glory. It rekindles the spark of filial love long crushed and buried beneath the ruins of a fallen nature. It enables earth's children to cry "Abba Father." It is the golden bridge spanning the dark river of separation.

Peruse the sacred pages of God's word; think upon the character and precepts of Jesus Christ; view the broad earth clad with the rich verdure of its own production; gaze at the untold millions of shining worlds, as in order they course through the wilds of ether; and if you are true to your better feelings, you can never be satisfied with any religion that does not breathe the ennobling sentiments you have just read from this bountiful volume. How the soul, true to its own interest, thrills with rapture in contemplation of the power, majesty, wisdom, benevolence, love, and mercy of the kind Creator. "The heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament showeth his handiwork; there is no language nor speech where their voice is not heard." All nature declares the existence of a supreme power. The green leaves whisper it to each other in the forest; the birds tell it in their minstrelsy; the cattle on a thousand hills assert it; the murmuring brook, the placid river, the mighty ocean, all, all, talk of him. Shall we love, obey, and become like him?

G. S. HYDE.

Peter's Doctrine Is Not Popery.

WHEN a new Pope is installed in Rome, the following words will be addressed unto him: "Noveris te urbis et orbis constitutum esse rectorem." That is, Remember that thou art placed on the throne of Peter, as a ruler of Rome and the world. (So says Rev. F. X. Weninger).

Now, the Lord Jesus Christ did not say to Peter that he was to sit on any thrones of the world, nor on the throne in Rome. In Math. 13:28, the Lord told the Twelve, Peter was one of the Twelve: "Verily, verily I say unto you (all twelve) that ye which have followed me in the regeneration, when the Son of Man shall (come to) sit upon the throne of his glory, ye (all twelve) also shall sit upon twelve thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel."

But if any should ask, "When is that day coming?" the answer being found in 25th chapter of St. Matthew, verse 31. "When the Son of Man shall come in his glory and all the Holy Angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory." And not before. Our Lord is not now sitting on his throne, but on the throne of his Father, (see Rev. 3:21), which is called the "right hand of God," where he now "maketh intercession for us."—Rom. 8:34. "Till he has made his enemies his footstool." (Heb. 7:25). When our Lord came to the earth last time, he came as an apostle, (Heb. 3:1), and when he left the earth, "He went into the Holy of Holiest of all, which was not made with hands." Where He now is as a "High Priest;" but when he comes again, the second time, then he will be, "A King of Kings," etc. (Rev. 17:14). And after he has "reigned a thousand years on the earth with his brethren, the Saints, (Rev. 20:2-4), Satan will be let loose from his prison. For he is to deceive the nations, which are in the four quarters of the earth, which are called Magog, for they are to come to the last battle; then cometh the end of the world. The last and general resurrection, and the last judgment. He will then gather all nations, and give them a righteous judgment, according to their deeds. (See Math. 25th chapter). After these are done, the Son—Jesus himself, shall be subject unto him, (the Father) that putteth all things under him, that God (the Father) may be all in all. (1 Cor. 15:28). As the Father is God of all the universe.

I will now look over the texts which the Catholics consider the greatest authority to sanction their Popery; to do this, it will be necessary to examine the history of the Twelve as far as practicable, and what may be our need, in this subject.

The first proof will be to show that Peter was not alone the head of the church; but that there were three, which are Peter, James and John. In Acts 21:18, we read, that "Paul went into James at Jerusalem, and to the elders."

Well, what did he go in to him for?

The answer will be. He went to get counsel from James, as he (James) was one of the leaders, or "pillars" of the church. (See Gal. 2:3). This was in A. D. 62, and therefore 29 years after our Lord's ascension into heaven, which shows that the church had its headquarters at Jerusalem at that time yet; and in this verse (9) we have learned that they—the three, "gave to Paul and Barnabas their right hands," and told that they (Paul and Barnabas) were to go to the heathen; and they (Peter James and John) to the circumcision. In the 11th verse it is stated that Peter went to Antioch, where Paul "withstood him to the face, because he (Peter) withdrew and separated himself, fearing them which were of the circumcision." Compare Gal. 1:18, with Gal. 2:1, Acts 15:13. And in connection I will give the following history, from Clement of Alexandria: "The Lord imparted the gifts of knowledge to James, to John and to Peter, after that the three delivered it to the rest of the Apostles, and they to the Seventy."

Hence Peter's doctrine is not Popery; as he was not the head of the church all alone. But shall we not further examine these three? Yes, we shall, and we shall find it confirmed, that Peter, James with John were equal in office, one as good as the other.

When the Lord raised Jairus' daughter, the three were with him, Mark 5:37, Luke 8:51: "And he suffered no man to follow him save Peter, James and John" And at the Transfiguration, (Matt. 17:1, Mark 9:1: "After six days Jesus taketh Peter, James and John.") And at the last prayers in the Garden, (Mark 14:33), Peter, James and John were nearest to him even there. Hence the conclusion is that Peter was not the head of the Church of Christ all alone!

But did not the Lord say unto Peter that, "Thou art Peter, (a stone) and upon this rock (Peter, or stone) I will build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it?" Will not these points turn for the Catholics now? Let us see.

In Matt. 16:13: "When Jesus came into the coasts of Ceasaria Phillippi, he asketh his disciples, saying, Whom do men say that I, the Son of man am?" (verse 14), and "they said, Some Elias, and others Jeremiah, or one of the prophets;" (v. 15). "And he said unto them, But whom say ye that I am?" (Mark this). He did not ask Peter, "But whom say ye?" And as Peter who was always ready to answer, as he was more talkative than any of the other apostles; said: "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God;" (v. 16, v. 17). "Jesus answered Peter, because it was Peter that spoke up, "Blessed art thou, Simon Barjona, for flesh and blood have not revealed this unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven." Hence Peter was "blessed" because he had received revelation from the Father, which could not be found out by "flesh and blood." Hence, Peter had the true faith, on which the church was to stand; and not on the faith or belief of those who only expected him to be a John the Baptist, or Elias, Jeremias, or some prophet.

A stone, or a rock is a symbol of strength; therefore proper symbol of faith. By faith mountains have been removed. (Matt. 17:20; Luke 17:6). By faith kingdoms have been subdued. (Heb. 11th chap.). And by faith salvation is obtain when it is commanded to believe on the name of Jesus Christ.

I shall give you the following texts: 1 John 3:23, 5:1-5, 10:13; Roman 3:26; 1 Peter 2:6 Gal. 3:26; Eph. 1:15; Col. 1:3, 4, 2:5; Acts 16:31, 19:4; St. John 1:12, 6:27, 29, 35; and a great many other texts could be had to show that Peter had the true faith which could make him blessed, and therefore received a revelation from the Father that Jesus was the "Son of the living God," "the true Christ, and not the "John the Baptist," nor any other prophet.

I am aware that some of the Latter Day Saints teach Revelation to be the rock on which the church is built, which I do not deny; but they will grant me, I hope, in this article call it faith, as faith is the first thing to be got, before anything, when converted. Nor was Peter the only "stone." We read in Eph. 2:20, that "she was built on apostles—plural—and prophets? Yes, and "Jesus Christ himself is the chief corner stone," and not Peter, as Peter was only one of the foundation stones, and Peter himself told his brethren that they were as lively stones." (1 Peter 2:5).

Let it be remembered that there was two apostles by the name of Simon; one of them was a brother to Andrew, while the other, "Simon, the Canaanite, also called Zelote." Thus it was necessary to change the name of one of them, which the Lord did; Simon Barjona he gave the name of Peter. This was done at the time when they were ordained apostles, and John with his brother was called "Sons of thunder"—Boanerges. (Mark 3:16-18). This was done at the beginning of our Lord's ministry, and not at the day nor year when he asked them, "Whom do men say that I the Son of Man am?" Nor was this Simon the only Peter, for there was another one by that name among the Seventy's. But if the Romans would claim Paul for their first Pope, they could make some profit of him, as Paul was ordained an apostle for the Gentiles, while Peter was a representative of the twelve tribes of Israel. The Romans are Gentiles, and not of Israel. (?)

We have further proof that Peter was not a Pope in Rome; not yet in the time Paul wrote his letter to the Romans, which he did from Corinthus, in about A. D. 58. By reading from first chapter, tenth verse to the sixteenth, inclusive, in which Paul says, that he has a great desire to go to Rome. In the 11th verse he says, "For I long to see you, that I may impart unto you some spiritual gifts, to the end ye may be established." Turn now to the 15th chapter, verse 20, of Romans, where Paul says that he has strived to preach the gospel, not where Christ was named, lest he should build upon another man's foundation.

Now if Peter had been the Pope in Rome by this time, surely Paul would have to build on Peter's foundation; but as he never did wish to do so, yet he was in earnest longing to get there (to Rome) that he might impart spiritual gifts, that they in Rome may be established, which concludingly shows that Peter was not the first Pope in Rome, and that the headquarters of the church was not in Rome, but at Jerusalem.

I will now go to the "keys of the kingdom." "And I will give unto thee the keys of the Kingdom of Heaven, and whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in Heaven; and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth, shall be loosed in heaven." (Matt. 16:19). The question may come, What is meant by "the keys of the kingdom?" The answer is, authority, authority to administer the ordinances, that of the Church of Christ. To confirm the converted and baptized ones, and to judge, to pass judgment on the disorderly in the Church, and cut off the sinners from the Church, that will not repent, and that authority was not given to Peter alone, but to all the Apostles and Elders in the Church. For proof see Matt. 18:15-20. When it is found that "two" (2) is the fewest number for to "agree on the earth as touching any one thing."

On page 34, "The Messenger of the Sacred Heart of Jesus, and of the Apostleship of Prayer, [a Roman Catholic pamphlet] January, 1870," I read the following statements: "In the church's first council at Jerusalem, and in reference to the question of subjecting the Gentile converts to the law of Moses, when there had been much disputings, Peter, rising up,—Acts 15:7,—and announced his final decision upon the point at issue, and all the multitude held their peace, all farther discussion ceased. The council passed on to another subject, the wonderful success of Paul and Barnabas among the Gentiles, and the decision comes down to us to this day, as what seemed good to the Holy Ghost and to us."

You will here observe that the 7th verse of the 15th chapter of the Acts, is only given in the above, and that the words, "Seemed good to us and the Holy Ghost," are here in connection with what was spoken, as if the words had been spoken by Peter. But if you look in the 13th verse you will see that James was also to speak and give his counsel. Follow him down to the 19th, where James gives his "sentence," and read all the way to the 22d verse, "Then pleased it the Apostles and Elders, with the whole church." Not Peter, but "the whole church." And that was after James had also spoken. And in the 28th verse is a declaration, "for it seemed good to the Holy Ghost and to us." Who spoke these words, is not for me to say. But as James was the last speaker, he might have spoken the sentence. So, then, any body can see that Peter was not the only speaker, but that James also had something to do with the "cause at issue." And as Paul says in Gal. 2:9, "That James, John and Peter, were the pillars of the church."

Now, according to history, this James sufferred martyrdom in the 69th year of his age, by the order of the High Priest Ananias, in Jerusalem, A. D. 62, and his brother Simon (this Simon was to Son of Mary the mother of our Lord; see Matt. 13:54-58, Mark 6:1-7) was by the general voice of the church then appointed his successor in Jerusalem. And as concerning John, the youngest of all the apostles, he was admitted into so great a share of his Master's confidence as any. John was one of those whom the Lord communicated the most private passages of his life, one of those whom he took with him when he raised the daughter of Jarius from the dead. John was one of those to whom the Lord gave a specimen of his Divinity in his transfiguration on the mount, and one of those who were present at the solitude, most retiring, in the garden. Yes, it was to John the Lord committed the care of his own mother with his dying breath. John, as it is told, continued at Jerusalem till the death of the blessed mother of our Lord, which happened about fifteen years after our Lord's ascension into heaven. And after he was released from the care committed to him, by his dying Master, he went into Asia, and to propagate the gospel. And it is said, that his chief place of residence was at Ephesus, where Paul had founded a church, and where Timothy was pastor, and wherefrom he by the orders of the Proconsul of Ephesus was sent to Rome, where he was thrown into a caldron of boiling oil, but as he was the very one that was not to see or "taste of death till the Son Man was to come in his kingdom." (Matt. 16:28). And the only one whom the Lord loveth the most. Therefore, the Lord his Master, resisted the heat like the three Hebrew children in the days of Daniel, from doing any harm. Then he (John) was ordered to Patmos by the Emperor, where he wrote the Revelation. But on the death of the Emperor Domitianus, and the successor of Narvea, John returned to Asia, and again fixed his residence at Ephesus.

Now the church's headquarters was in Jerusalem till Jerusalem was destroyed by Titus, the Roman general. Then she had to find some other spot for her chief office, which might have been at Antioch, or Ephesus where John had his residence. But I can not believe that she, the church, ever had any chief seat in Europe while she was "clothed with the sun," as represented in Rev. 12:1—under the shadows of her Lord. The Romans tell us that Peter ordained Lanius; yes, and some of them say that Hermas, his successor, for the next Pope after him. But I would ask, was not Saint John later than either Linius or Hermas, the presbyters. (Rev. 12:1.) The church of Jesus is "clothed with the sun and the moon under her feet, and on her head a crown of twelve stars." These twelve stars were the twelve Apostles. Peter was one of those stars. Hence, as the Catholics puts Peter (one star) in the place of Jesus—glory of the sun—it is no wonder that they are in darkness. No sunlight to illuminate their day; nor even a moonlight, only one star. O, how great is that darkness.

But is Peter their star? May not they be in mistake? I say Peter is not their star. Catholics say that "the history of truth show that the infallibility of the successor of Peter was unchallenged, and the Protestants never was able to challenge her as the true Church of Christ." All that may be true, as far as Protestants may concern; but I challenge any modern Solomon, be he Priest, Professor, Doctor, Pope, or proto-Pope, to prove that Catholicism is Christ's Church; or that Peter ever did ordain any Popes to sit on any thrones in Rome, or to "rule the world." Peter was a prophet, and all true christians must have "the spirit of prophecy," as the "spirit of prophecy is the testimony of Jesus." See Rev. 19:10. Has any Pope the "spirit of prophecy?" which is the "testimony of Jesus." No Pope ever claimed nor ever will claim any gifts of prophecy. They only claim that "Peter's privileges and gifts, his successors inherited also, and that infallibility, and privileges were given to every Pope." i. e., by Peter! "And that no new revelation has been given since the days of the first Christian Church," or "since Peter," is the confession of all Catholics. "But is not the Catholic Church the oldest? Hence, she must be the true Church of Christ." Yes, she is the oldest corruption. Old garments rots soonest. If Iscariot was yet in life, he would be older than any Pope. Polygamy is older than Catholicism, for she comes all the way from Lamech.

The Catholic Church is a church of symbols, her doctrine is a doctrine of symbols, her God is a god of symbols, her gospel is a gospel of symbols, every ordinance is an ordinance of symbols, and her heaven is a symbolic heaven. And therefore her salvation is but a symbolic salvation. Therefore her members are nothing more than symbolics; living on a symbolic cosmos. But the hell must be a literal hell; so that if a child should die before being sprinkled with water, which they call baptism, that child must go to a literal hell, to be burned—tormented in fire forever, and have no end, literally.

On page 28 of "The Threshold of the Catholic Church," a Roman Catholic book, is the following statements: "Peter is the keeper of the keys, as chief magistrate. . . . He is the chief shepherd. . . . He is the foundation. . . . He is the true corner-stone, and the good shepherd, who giveth his life for the sheep. . . . He it is that hath the key of David. He that openeth and no man shutteth, and shutteth and no man openeth." Rev. 3:7, only is given as proof. Then the writer says, "These titles show how Peter and the Popes can be the foundation."

I leave the reader to judge if Peter can take the place of Jesus? or who was the person that said, "I am the first and the last." (Rev. 1:17). And, "for other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ." (1 Cor. 3:11). And Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner-stone, (Eph. 2:20), not Peter. "I am the good shepherd. The good shepherd giveth his life for the sheep." (John 10:11). Was this Peter, or Jesus?

Furthermore the Catholic Church is called the "Universal," as the word properly means; therefore they say that "all the world's doctrines are from Catholicism," or a "part from Catholicism." "Even the African Fetichisms are a part of the Catholic Church." So say all the Catholic writers themselves. And that "the sun never sets on the Catholic Church."

Thence, they rule the whole world, which will fulfill the prophecy in Rev. 17th and 18th chapters. A Catholic Priest, Rev. T. X. Winger, D. D., says, that "the Catholics have converted all the world," and that "St. Patrick converted Ireland; while St. Sturmeas and Adelbert, Prussia; St. Agustine, England; St. Remigeus, France; St. Boniface, Germany; St. Kitian and Wilibold, Denmark and Sweden; St. Ansgar, Norway; St. Cyril and Methodius, Slavonia and Bulgaria; St. Ignatius, of Constantinople, Russia; St. Stephen, a king, Hungary."

Let us now look into the history for a moment, and see in what manner some of the Europeans were converted, and then compare with the manner the first Christians were converted. The history says, "King Ethelbert of England wishing to marry Bertha, a Catholic princess, the daughter of the king of Paris, commenced negotiations in view of that object. So the Pope, Gregory the Great, however, in pious regard for Bertha's soul, interdicted the marriage unless provisions were made to grant a privilege of erecting a chapel in England, in which the marriage should be performed. The initiatory step for introduction of popery into England having thus been crowned with success, the king subjugated to the queen (Bertha) and the queen to the priests, as the priests were to the Pope, Gregory consummated his artful scheme by deluging the kingdom with a monkish army, commanded by St. Augustine, who soon reduced the court and the people under their authority. From thence England became a Christian country. After that King Ethelbert sent Archbishop Seigfray to Scatanyung, King of Sweden, to win him over to the Pope's interest, and succeeded so far as to induce him and the royal family to be baptized (sprinkled). And as soon as King Olaus I, of Norway, had received the Pope's doctrine, he commenced to carry on ferocities under the elevated instructions of the monks and priests. He conceived himself ordained by heaven to be the exterminator of idolatry, and the Pope acknowledging his claim of being a military Apostle of Christ, and that his divine mission conferred on him all authority to compel the Pagans by torture or death to believe in his gospel. He then entered Greenland and Iceland, compelled them also to submit or seal their Paganism with their blood.

St. Olaus II. invaded the petty heathen kingdoms with his consecrated sword, seized on their property and possessions, annexed their territory to his own, and offered hecatombs of pagan martyrs on the altars of the Pope, as he had been instructed by the priests, into this kind of warlike art of saving souls, and that pagans had no right to life, property, or rule.

St. Eric, another Swedish apostolic king, under the sanction of the Pope, organized a force of military missionaries, and by this means subjugated Finland, Helsingland, Jampland, to the Pope and himself.

King Eric, the lisper, a royal saint, by the Papal authority, with the sacred character of a military apostle, invaded Travastland, Berger and Bothnia, and by a barbarous war planted the banner of the cross over all those domains.

That is the way Christianity came to England, Sweden, Norway and other countries, if you wish to call it Christianity, to say nothing about the Slavonians, who battled a hundred years against Popery. And of Harold I., king of Poland, who battled against the proselyting forces of Otho I., Catholic Emperor of Germany, until he was disastrously defeated, when preferring baptism to being butchered, he coldly submitted and reluctantly consented to believe the gospel.

And Prussia, which had resisted the military apostles with such heroism that Pope Honorius called all Christendom to arms, a calamitous war ensued; towns were swept from existence, communities massacred, blood flowed in reeking torrents, Pagans accepted death rather than baptism. After that a military crusade was instigated; the order of Sacred Sword Bearers was formed of missionary monks, under the instruction of the Pope's priests; the army entered the domains of Pagandom, covered their lands with terror and death. It is said, "That a military bishop—Berthold, at the head of his army, perished sword in hand, while fighting the pagans to make them believe in Jesus."

Ermak, a Cossack, who had rebelled against the Czar's authorities and emigrated eastward across the Ural mountains, and into the plains of Siberia, fighting his way through the savage tribes all Summer and wintering in rude forts, making raids on the inhabitants of the land, then he offered the possession of the west region to the Tczar, as a price for his pardon. The offer was accepted, but the raider (Ermak) was instructed to remain and push his conquest farther. He was liberally supplied with arms, and a few priests were sent to follow his band and to preach in his wake. Very little argument was wasted. On Sunday the Cossacks surrounded a village, or a tribe of them, and when they were all huddled together, men, women and children, the priests sprinkled some water on the crowd, saying, "Ghospodi pomiloy, ghospodi pomiloy," that is, "Lord have mercy on us, Lord have mercy on us." They were after that called Christians.

Let the reader now compare the above gospel with the gospel Peter and Paul and all the apostles' gospel, and they will find a very different gospel; a gospel which "is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth."—Rom. 1:16.

Paul says in 1 Cor. 15:1, "Brethren, I declare unto you the gospel which I preached unto you, which also ye have received, and wherein ye stand," v. 2, "By which also ye are saved," &c.

I am too sick to write any more on this subject, I will therefore soon close with Popery, after I have given the report of a newspaper paragraph, to show what Catholics are doing in our day.

SWEET CHARITY.—THE FAIRS IN AID OF ST. FRANCIS' AND ST. JOSEPH'S CHURCH.

There was a much larger attendance present at the closing of the St. Francis Fair Saturday night than at any of the previous evenings. It is not yet known what the total of the receipts will be, but it is expected more will be realized than was at first estimated. The ballot-box and the shooting gallery were well patronized, as were the balance of the departments. Toward the latter part of the evening the remaining articles on the stands were either auctioned off to the highest bidder, or raffled off to those who were willing to risk a small sum of money. The more important articles will be raffled for on Wednesday evening of this week, after all of the unsold tickets have been called in. The entire receipts of the Fair will not be known until some time next week, when all of the returns will be known.

The hall wherein St. Joseph's Fair is held was fairly jammed Saturday night with the friends of charity; in fact, the attendance was far larger than at any previous evening. The balloting for the handsomest young lady, who is to receive a silver cake basket, is still going on, and at a late hour Saturday night the vote stood as follows: Miss Tessy Brady, 154; Miss Lizzie Ryan, 201½; Miss Mamie Hayes, 135; Miss R. O'Donnell, 124; Miss Mary A. McCauley, 115; Miss Tillie Maloney, 101; Miss F. S. Coleman, 89½; Miss Ellen Howard, 29½; Miss Mary Maxwell, 22; Miss Annie Mahon, 11. The grab-bag is patronized by almost every visitor, and the wheel of fortune, in charge of Miss Lillie Brady, attracts a large crowd. The gypsy tent, where every one goes to have his or her fortune told, was closed Saturday night, on account of the absence of Miss Mary Sweeney, while the candy department, in charge of the Misses Brady and Sweeney, was sold out and will have to lay in a new supply of sweets for this week. The ballots for the Davitt portrait stood: 104 for the Catholic Institute and 46 for the Shields Guard. The Fair holds out all this week and perhaps for another week more."

I will conclude this article with the following verses:

"It grieves my heart, my brethren dear,
That we're not any richer;
For in these hard, hard times, I fear
We scarce can pay our preacher.
We have a thousand dollar man,
E'en learned Doctor Reaper;
So we must pay him, if we can,
Or take one that is 'cheaper.'
Now, brethren tell us what to do,
And how to raise the money;
What plan have you? Is't old, or new,
Is't grave, or is it funny?"
"Could we not have a festival,
Sell ice cream and strawberries;
Make times as merry as a ball,
By dressing like the fairies?
Could we not thus attract the crowd
To help us solve our riddle?
Yes, they would come without a doubt
If I should play the fiddle."
"Perhaps you'd rather have a show,
A so-called exhibition,
To which both great and small would go,
And pay for their admission.
All right!—I'll train your children, and I'll make the programme funny!
The means is holy since the end
Is to secure the money.
Let conscientious scruples ne'er
"Deprive you of such pleasure;
While you are paying your own fair,
Enjoy yourselves at leisure."
"Now, I have still a better plan
The people to assemble,
To salary the holy man,
Go, hold a fair and gamble!
Send through the streets your girls and boys,
Exclaiming, (I'm their teacher),
Give me your votes, for Sunday toys,
The money's for the preacher!
The prize cake,—O, your sides will split!
The grab bag,—O, how funny.
The devil gets the benefit,
The preacher gets the money."

"Death, Hell, and the Resurrection."

THE above is the title of an article in the Herald of June 15th, which has caused me some thought concerning those subjects. And as I am one of those who do not believe as the views expressed in the article referred to, to some extent, and feeling, that as it expresses the thought, that the views expressed in the article are as "the doctrine is believed and taught by the saints generally," that I must speak in behalf of myself, and endeavor to show why I so speak. I believe, and I have spoken. "Faith comes by hearing, and hearing by the word of God." (Rom. 10:17.) I shall present God's word to show why I so believe.

While the above subject is not, nor neither can it be understood in its fullness by finite mind, yet there are some thoughts revealed concerning it that should be rightly taught as revealed, when taught, especially when sent out in the world as our belief, as held "by the saints generally."

Death is that change to which all men are subject, as, "In Adam all die,"—which change is the separation of body and spirit, (Ecol. 12:7.) speaking of the physical death, or dissolution of the body; and separation of man from the presence of God, (Gen. 3:8, 10, 23.) speaking of the spiritual death: so the resurrection is a restoration of body and spirit, (B. of M. page 235, par. 10) as well as the restoration of all men in the presence of God; as "In Christ shall all be made alive, but every man in his own order: Christ the first fruits; afterwards they that are Christ's at His coming. (1. Cor. 15:22, 23), and for the purpose of each receiving judgment according to his work, (Rev. 22:12; 20:4, 13). Hell is the place of punishment for those who have done evil, or those who are judged worthy of the second death, (B. of C., page 215:4 and 5 line, and page 216: lines 5 to 11).

Christ's death was to redeem all from the power of Satan, which will have been done in due time. "When we were enemies, we were reconciled to God, by the death of His Son; much more, being reconciled we shall be saved by His life." (Rom. 5:10). We see by this that the acts of reconciliation, and of salvation take place under different conditions, and through different means. We were reconciled to God, while we were yet enemies, that is the means of reconciliation, was brought to us as a free gift, but salvation comes by belief. Christ reconciled us in this, that "as by the offense of one judgment came upon all men to condemnation: even so by the righteousness of one the free gift came upon all men unto justification of life." (Rom. 5:18). And if a free gift it is not of belief. The reconciliation has been made. Nothing stands between us and our God but our sins. The condemnation brought upon all men by the offense of one (Adam) is removed through one (Christ), which will be exemplified to the realization of all in the resurrection. Christ conquered death, hell, and the grave. (Rev. 1:18; 20:13). Salvation cometh by belief and continuance in the Gospel to the end. (Mark 16:16; 13:13).

The difference between reconciliation, which is a free gift brought to mankind through the death of Christ while we were yet enemies; and salvation, which is gained by man, after being reconciled, through belief in the Gospel revealed to us through the life of Christ is made quite plain. Salvation is not only bringing us back in the presence of God, but bringing us in His presence to enjoy His glory. (Rev. 20: 6).

While death separates the body and spirit it does not annihilate either. The body is but planted, returning to dust as it was, to come forth in the resurrection, (Alma, B. of M. page 235: par. 10); and the spirit goes to God who gave it, there to await until it can be restored to its former habitation, the body. Neither does the spirit lose its activity, or will to act, but is still conscious of its surroundings, at least to a great extent. While some are at rest in the paradise of God awaiting with joy the resurrection, the others are imprisoned, kept within bounds, to await, without any joy of, and in all probability no knowledge of the resurrection, till they have paid the penalty; or received release from that condition through the gospel.

Christ went and preached to the spirits in prison, (1 Pet. 3: 19), showing they had an individuality, and an agency to choose. "We are to be saved by His life," and again, "It [the gospel] is the power of God unto salvation, to every one that believeth." (Rom. 1: 16). This shows that the life of Christ was to preach, both by precept and example, the gospel, or plan of salvation. We then come to the conclusion, by force of evidence, that Christ carried to those who had been sometimes disobedient, when once the long suffering of God waited in the days of Noah, while the ark was preparing (1 Pet. 3: 20) the gospel, and preached it to them, that they might have faith and knowledge in God, His word, and the resurrection, or through their rejection of its condemnation: for the Gospel is a savour of life unto life, or of death unto death. (2 Cor. 2:16) For, for this cause was the gospel preached also to them that are dead, that they might be judged according to men in the flesh, but live according to God in the spirit.

By careful observation we see that it must have been preached to those who had, as yet, not heard the gospel, for if they had heard it while in the flesh, there was no necessity to again preach to them; for when it is preached to any individual, or every individual the judgment is, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, and he that believeth not shall be damned." (Mark 16:16). These dead to whom the gospel was preached, are to be judged according to men in the flesh, which judgment we have just referred to—by the word of God, (St. John 12:28), or gospel; as it is to be preached to every creature, (Mark 16:15), and the judgment is passed upon all who hear it, hence upon every creature (man); and all must hear it so as a just judgment may be rendered.

Now concerning that judgment and the resurrection, we have somewhat to say more especially. In Revelations, twentieth chapter, we have quite a minute description of the resurrection, which we will endeavor to examine in connection with Doctrine and Covenants, par. 76: "There shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and the unjust."—Acts 24:15. In Rev. 20:4, we read; "And I saw thrones, and they sat upon them; and I saw the souls of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the word of God (first class) and which had not worshipped the beast neither his image, neither had received his mark upon their foreheads, or in their hands, (second class); and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years." The first class are those who in this life had been valiant soldiers of the cross; those who had been crucified with Christ, in spending a life of sacrifice for the promotion of his word, and bearing his testimony, thereby being beheaded or crucified, with Christ making themselves a living sacrifice for him and his word, which is our reasonable service. (Rom. 12:1). The second class, not having the testimony of Jesus—the spirit of prophecy, (Rev. 19:10,) neither the word of God, the gospel, yet they do all things uprightly and honestly, dealing justly with themselves, and with their fellow men, not following the errors of others, devised by the beast willfully, hence not worshipping the beast, neither his image, but doing good, and worshipping God, as they individually believe to be right, and endeavoring to seek that which is right to do. We find some such in the world to day, and when the gospel finds them it is as meat and drink to their souls; and as there are some to-day, in this a day of darkness and wickedness, we can but conclude that many, very many, have died who were hungering and thirsting after righteousness, (Math. 5:6), who never were filled in this life, not having heard the gospel, who will be filled according to the promise;—who would have accepted the gospel here, had they heard it, yet died without having heard it, yet did not worship the beast nor his image, not having done evil, but all that was done was with a conscience clear to justice, acting on their convictions of right, with a heart filled with gratitude and a desire to do right.

In revelation on the celestial glory, (D. & C., sec. 76, par. 7.) it says: "These are they who received not the gospel, neither the testimony of Jesus, but those who denied not the Holy Spirit, these are they who are thrust down to hell; these are they who shall not be redeemed until the last resurrection, until the Lord, even Christ, the Lamb, shall have finished his work" If the fact that these are they who are thrust down to hell, and will not be redeemed until the last resurrection is true, and it is made quite plain here that it is, then we have a division made, and an explanation given who shall be in the last resurrection, leaving the conclusion that the other division or class, who are of the Celestial and Terrestrial, or of the glory of the sun and moon, (1 Cor. 15:41), will come forth in the first resurrection. And as they have done no evil, conscientiously, or in their heart, but have done all the good they knew to do, walking uprightly and justly through life, there is no occasion for a judgment of damnation, or of not having part in the first resurrection; for when they heard, they believed, hence salvation, they hearing the gospel through those of the Celestial glory, (B. of C., p. 215). Now as Christ was the first fruit of the Celestial kingdom, he being king, or shepherd, was the first to present to them the gospel for their deliverance. And as the angels are ministering spirits to those who are "heirs" of salvation here, so the celestial glory are ministering spirits to those of the terrestrial glory. So to my mind we are not idle, unconscious entities, between death and the resurrection, but still active in the great work of redemption,—not coming back to earth, as some erroneously suppose, but visiting the prisoners in the pit. Having found rest to our souls—the peace of God—we are administering rest to the souls of others of our fellow beings, in this life, and in the life to come: in this life while we live, in the next life after we are dead and until our resurrection. (St. Luke 9:30, B. of C., sec. 26, par. 2 and 3.) In this life we administer the gospel of peace through trials, privation and sacrifices, but then in peace and joy.

To more fully understand the glory of the Terrestrial Kingdom we read: "And, again, we saw the terrestrial world, and, behold, and lo; these are they who are of the terrestrial, whose glory differs from that of the first born, who have received the fulness of the Father, even as that of the moon differs from the sun in the firmament. Behold these are they who died without law, and also they who are the spirits of men kept in prison, whom the Son visited, and preached the gospel unto them, that they might be judged according to men in the flesh, who received not the testimony of Jesus (the spirit of prophecy) in the flesh, but afterward received it; these are they who are the honorable men of the earth, who are blinded by the craftiness of men; these are they who receive of his glory, but not of his fulness; these are they who receive of the presence of the Son, but not of the fulness of the Father; wherefore they are bodies terrestrial, and not bodies celestial, and differ in glory as the moon differs from the sun; these are they who are not valiant in the testimony of Jesus; wherefore they obtained not the crown over the kingdom of our God." (B. of C., sec. 76:6). This shows conclusively that they shall walk in the light of the glory of God and of those of the celestial glory, yet do not become kings as they do not obtain crowns. Hence we conclude that they can, and if they can they will enjoy the reign of Christ.

Now the question has arisen in the minds of some concerning the redemption of the sons of perdition. Let us see what the Scriptures saith: "They shall not have forgiveness, in this world nor in the world to come."—(St. Math. 12:32). "For it is impossible for those who were once enlightened, and have tasted of the Heavenly light, and were made partakers of the Holy Ghost, and have tasted the good word of God, and the powers of the world to come, if they shall fall away to renew them again unto repentance;" (for this reason) "seeing they crucify to themselves the Son of God afresh and put him to an open shame." (Heb. 6:4, 5, 6). By these quotations we see two very important truths: first, the impossibility of renewing them to repentance, and second, that God's mercy can not reach them again, as they have destroyed the means by which it can, and as they can not be renewed to repentance they will not accept of his mercy. The great truth with them is they have tasted of the salvation of the righteous, and now through their own, not God's will and pleasure, crucify to themselves the Son of God afresh. It is true that God is love, is merciful, and he is also just. He could not be such were the conditions otherwise than they are in the resurrection. He could not in justice force them from a place which they had by choice made their abode or kingdom, after having destroyed to themselves the means by which they had been redeemed, or could be. Neither would it be merciful in God to place them where they, of themselves, did not want to be. But let us hear the voice of God in these the last days. "Thus saith the Lord, concerning all those who know my power, and have been made partakers thereof, and suffered themselves through the power of the devil, to be overcome and to deny the truth and defy my power; they are they who are the sons of perdition, of whom I say it had been better for them never to have been born; for they are vessels of wrath, doomed to suffer the wrath of God, with the devil and his angels, in eternity, concerning whom I have said there is no forgiveness in this world nor in the world to come; having denied the Holy Spirit after having received it, and having denied the only begotten Son of the Father, having crucified him unto themselves, and put him to an open shame; these are they who shall go away into the lake of fire and brimstone, with the devil and his angels, and the only ones on whom the second death shall have any power; yea, verily, the only ones who shall not be redeemed in the due time of the Lord, after the suffering of his wrath." (D. & C., sec. 76:4). "Therefore they must abide a kingdom, which is not a kingdom of glory." And speaking of the punishment, we further quote from par. 4, sec. 76, D. & C.: "The place thereof, nor their torment, no man knows; neither was it revealed, neither is, neither will be revealed unto man, except to them who are made partakers thereof." From this I would not wish to be one of those exceptions to whom this was revealed, nor endeavor in any way to find out or know any thing concerning the end, neither try to reveal to my fellow men anything concerning it, it being beyond that which was, or is, or will be revealed except to those few who endure it.

Let us look to God and his love as it is revealed in his word. He has revealed a means of salvation by which means we can enjoy his glory, and the way of escape from all that is detrimental to us. He has not burdened us with what other beings will have to do, in other worlds, nor how many devils, or hells there are, nor what planets the devil will visit. We know he is on a visit to our planet, being cast down from heaven to earth, and that we will have to fight manfully to escape the home prepared for all those who serve him in preference to the God who is love.

God is just in meting out to each one, individually, as they have prepared themselves to enjoy, and if we enjoy Satan's society better than we do God's, his justice will allow us to remain in that enjoyment world's without end. Amen.

Hoping that these thoughts of one of those who are endeavoring in this life to make known the way of escape, both to the Saint and sinner, from the way of death, that thereby they may escape the death that has no end, and bring them life forevermore, may be accepted with the feeling of love with which they have been written, and throw one ray of light on some benighted soul, I subscribe myself,

A brother in the everlasting gospel of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ, MAGNOLIA, Iowa, June 21st, 1882.

TO SISTER BERGG, GREETING.

Sister Bergg, of Wyandotte City,
My eyes upon thee fell in pity
When to thy house I came in Eighty-One;
As to me it seemed, thy trouble had begun.
But why should trouble come to thee?
As nothing that my eyes could see,
Should mar thy peace in life,
And bring, or sow the seeds of strife:
And still, thy looks betrayed a grief,
From which I thought you'd gain relief,
For him who loved thee as a wife,
Had nothing done to create strife.
So far from this as to receive the plan
Which God, the Lord, had given to man;
And this had caused his soul to swell
And say, "Dear wife, all will be well.
Come, let us join the Lord to praise;
And when he comes he will us raise
And then our joy will be complete,
And rest will then indeed be sweet."
But ah! thy mind was filled with doubt
Because of what you'd heard without.
"For have I not been told," you said,
"That Latter Day Saints will more wives wed?"
And thus thy mind, which had been right
Has now received a terrible blight.
"For, how can I endure," you said,
"To have others respected in my stead.
Father, mother, friends, I'd left,
And of their care have been bereft;
And to my husband did I come,
And thought we always would be one;
But, now my brightest hopes are gone,—
God help me, for I feel forlorn;
My mother taught me God to fear,
And so I thought I'd not despair.
'The Bible take, my child she said,
'And in paths of peace you will be led.'
Thus I believed, and thus I've thought;
For Christ our peace and pardon bought.
And in this Bible I have read,
The Church Christ's bride, and He the head.
Male and female did he make,
Man for this cause, his wife should take;
And they twain one should be,
And from all others, remain free.
And then I read, those who're thus mate
Man should never separate;
Then from me take away, I pray,
The gospel of the latter day,
And do not try me to provoke,
Nor bring to me the fatal stroke;
For 'tis a mocker, I do say;
A monster, powerful to slay
My brightest hopes, and joys so fair,
And fill my mind with dread despair.
'Tis said that Joseph Smith one day,
Went into the silent woods to pray.
No eloquence did he possess,
And yet his mind was much distressed;
From which distress he sought relief,
For in a God, he had belief.
And he to prayer himself betook,
Besought the Lord on him to look
As he had promised in his Book.
And when he found himself alone,
Though to evil he had been prone,
Where no eye saw, or ear could hear,
To heaven he sent a fervent prayer:
'Where are thy people, Lord,' he said,
'O, tell, that my want I may find bread.
For in my mind a vacuum exists,
O, fill that vacuum with thy bliss.

'Tis said a brilliant light he saw;
And while his soul was filled with awe,
A voice so soft and sweet did say,
'Go, go, my son, my vineyard prune to day,
For spiritual darkness long has reigned;
And love for me professed is only feigned.'
This light he saw, his soul had thrilled,
And with God's love his heart was filled.
His pleading, praying now had ceased;
His waiting soul had now found peace;
And from the sacred spot he went,
To tell all men him God had sent
His blessed gospel to proclaim;
And say, that Christ on earth would reign,
But what, O what, can all this mean?
For I am told I may be queen,
If many wives my husband gains.
For over them and children, I might reign.
But in such order there is strife,
And brings no peace while in this life.
So if the message of the Seer is this
That man by wives is to get bliss,
Better far, he'd ne'er been born,
For plural wives makes quite forlorn;
And if polygamists alone are great,
When Christ shall come to his estate,
Such men as Peter, Paul and John,
Will have no thrones to reign upon.
And there's my husband, too, forsooth;
For of him I must tell the truth;
Nor would I e'er of him comp'ain.
But many wives he can't maintain."

But stay, O, stay, my friend, I pray,
The message of the latter day
Is not to take thy peace away,
But for thy comfort every day
It tells us to have faith in God;
And to hold fast the iron rod;
And teaches men their wives to love;
For this command comes from above.
Polygamy is not God's scheme
The sons of men for to redeem.
It never did obtain among men
But when they did the Lord offend.
Lamech's the first of which we read
Who from God's plan did secede;
And then he was a murderer double,
By which he plunged himself in trouble.
Kind Sarah did to Abraham say:
'Here's Hagar, take her as thy wife to-day.'
But on the morrow she relented,
And of the wrong Abra'm repented;
And Sarah to her husband said,
Bear wrong thou must as in my stead.
Jacob journeyed far to get a wife,
To the land of sin and strife;
And there with Laban did agree
That Rachel lawfully his wife should be,
And for seven years did wait,
To join with Rachel as his mate.
But Laban, treacherous Laban said
'Leah first, Jacob, you must wed;
For in our country 'tis not so,
That youngest first in wed'lock go.'

But sail we further down time's stream,
For all men's works are but a dream;
And in the visions of our minds we find
John, the beloved, on Patmos is confined.
There God inspired this holy man
To tell and preach his blessed plan;
And all the works of Saints to scan
And plainly say by God's order you must stay
Or from him be cast away.
But what a dreadful sound we hear;
For one Nicholas did appear,
And to the Saints of old did say:
'Wives, many, you must have to-day.'
But then we find John plainly states
Such practices the Lord God hates;
And if in this course you will persist,
My grace shall you no more assist.
But darkness will your minds possess
And plunge you into great distress.
And thus by searching you may find,
That God is merciful and kind
To all men who his law do know,
And live and practice them below.
But when his laws they vilely break
From them his power he will take."

Now with thee longer I would fain remain,
Your mind I see, is filled with pain,
But duty calls me far away;
And now in Eighty-One I say,
Search God's word, and to him pray.
And when I visit thee again
I hope God's favor you'll obtain,
And with thy husband strive to serve
The Lord of heaven, nor from him swerve.

Time, time is ever on the wing;
Winter has gone and brought the Spring.
Once more my footsteps to thy home are bent,
For which I never shall repent;
Because I found thy soul was calm,
Kind heaven to you had sent its balm.
How great the joy, how sweet the peace,
For God had sent thy soul sweet peace.
You hospitality again extend,
And said you would "God's truth defend."
"For with my husband I did pray,
And read God's word each passing day.
And now the River Kaw I crave,
To be baptized beneath its wave."
So to the River Kaw we wend,
With husband dear and many a friend;
We sung and prayed at water's brink,
And living waters did you drink.
Baptized you were, and rose with cheer
The name of God in Christ to bear,
And straightway to your house we went,
Where two bright hours in prayer we spent.
For many dear Saints had gathered there,
The joy, and peace, and bliss to share.
And when the hands were on you laid,
As God the promises had made,
Thy soul was filled with peace and love
Sent down from heaven by God above;
And when you knelt to God to pray,
Your heartfelt homage there to pay,
Our souls appeared all lifted up,
And we with Jesus Christ did sup.
O, sacred spot! How sweet the time!
When all the Saints in duty join;
With heart and voice unite to sing
And unto God fresh praises bring.
For there, oft times, we're led to look,
(As we're commanded in God's book),
Into our hearts, and thereby find
That e'en to some we've been unkind,
And on some duteous, worthy name,
Unwittingly we've brought a stain.
But stay, O stay, my pen, I pray,
Lest I my readers long delay,—
But ere I close these heartfelt breathings,
To these I say, no longer grieving:
Look up to God, in him confide,
And with thee ever, he'll abide.
Peace to thee, husband, and babes ever;
May no monster thy peace sever;
For now with knowledge you can say,
The gospel of the latter day
Is not a monster nor a scheme
To offer peace, and prove a dream;
But that to thee each day it brings,
A joy that from God's presence springs.
So may each day's experience prove,
And from your soul all doubt remove;
That when you shall have fought the fight,
You may see God in all his might.

WHAT A CONFESSION.

COCOANUT SHELLS are ground and mixed with pepper. A Philadelphia spice man says: "We have our methods of adulteration, and sell to the trade probably more adulterated goods than pure. We can't help it. There is no pretence on our part that the lower grades of spices are pure. We simply sell the retailer what he wants. We sell them spices at almost any figure—pepper, for instance, as low as eight and nine cents—but it is as much something else as it is pepper. It would ruin the trade to prohibit adulteration, and, besides, there are not enough spices grown to supply the demand of the United States alone if nothing but pure spices were sold. We are constantly making experiments to discover the cheapest harmless foreign matter with which we can mix our goods, in order to supply the demand for low grades."

Letter From Elder Short.

To the Readers of the Herald:—Your correspondent wisheth health, peace, prosperity, the fellowship of the gospel and the communion of the triune God.

Many winged thoughts surge into being, charm or pain the soul, and then vanish, as others come marching along like an invading host. To detain proper ideas, utilize elements, combine forces and arrange the whole in a royal galaxy, is no mean task. While there may be "nothing new under the sun" in the world of thought, there is an endless variety to break the monotony, to gladden the heart, to instruct the mind and to elevate and save the immortal being. An old Scotch divine once observed in public, that it would not do for every one to see as he did, for then they would all want his matron; whereas one of his parishioners thought if all saw as he did, no one would have her. It is difficult for two eye witnesses to tell the same story about a dog fight or any other common place affair. Realizing these things, our conceptions on manners, or propriety, should not be chrysalized into an inexorable law. Our conceptions should not be formulated into an "Iron Bedstead" to distort or crush noble individualities. The chances for knowing and the opportunities for performing are to be duly considered, while our imperfections remain intact. What is a charming temptation to one is either unnoticed, or quite obnoxious to another of nature's children. I see from the west window, one of the feathered tribe with its diversified plumage. It appears happier in its sphere than the scribe, for the avenues of my memory are thronged with a motley crew and some of these reminiscences are unwelcome apparitions. I look forward with fond anticipation and delight to that "glorious church not having spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing" for these backward glances are fraught with sadness. Lessons of inestimable worth, however, are evolved out of bitter remorse, and we are purified in the very crucible of affliction. The nut's exterior secretes a delicious kernel; the oyster is first inside of its shell, and seeming evils are blessings in disguise, if we love the Lord indeed. With this philoecopy to ensconce us, we can turn weakness, poverty and pain into a happy and good account.

If any one wants to keep secrets, please do not make a repository of me, as I generally get every body to help me, for I do not want an embargo run on my liberty. Sometimes I am constrained to hear family feuds, neighborhood broils, or church difficulties rehearsed; but it is invariably contrary to my will and desire. "Being as it is you and you will say nothing about it," is the way unsuspecting ones will approach the blind side and cozen in. For a person to lend an eager ear to a busy body is virtually countenancing a blood leech and encouraging a vampire. When people read and meditate thereupon their energies flow in a nobler channel; and when the Holy Spirit is a guest the work of defamation has no place whatever. "The spirit is willing, but the flesh is weak," hence we need returning supplies from the celestial fountain. When we are bruised and peeled, be sure there is plenty of balm in Gilead. When we are bowed down with disappointment, anguish or grief, as the slender grasses of the storm swept plain, then remember the Rock from whence we are hewn, and take courage. The Lord Jehovah will see us safe over the quagmires, quicksands and breakers of this inconstant life, if we will secure a through ticket on the "Old Ship of Zion." Her royal Pilot stilled the waves of tempestuous Galilee, and the barque landed safely on the other shore. "The everlasting arms" are "stretched forth still," and the angels are, doubtless, as solicitous as they were in the ages of remote antiquity. While the universal worlds are filled with painful anxiety for our good, let us fall into ranks and step to the music of the spheres. A brave officer will say to the flagging soldiers, "Come!" and such an one is "the captain of our salvation."

He willingly suffered and expired to bring "life and immortality to light." He is clothed with omnipotent power and holds the "keys of death and hell." Let us look away from self and sin to the Lamb of God who bore our sins upon the cross; His infinite mercy was freely extended while we were enemies and had no strength. God and his Christ have never complained of the injustice of the atonement, and inasmuch as we are benefitted and saved through that plan, it is downright ingratitude and folly for us to make a plea for the Deity, or find fault with the boat that carries us to our destination. A drowning man will let you take him from his perilous state your own way, and thank and praise you as well. Cold justice would say, "I am not responsible for his condition, and he can swim or drown, before I take any risks," but mercy would say, "His strength is gone and he is sinking, therefore I will 'rescue the perishing.'"

When the "sunny South" was overshadowed with gloom and death, their more fortunate neighbors were aroused to sympathy, and mercy, and money, food, raiment, nurses, and physicians were dispatched, in all haste, to alleviate and save from untimely graves those touched with that fearful scourge—the Yellow Fever. Their distant friends read of the absence of sanitary regulations at Memphis, but for all that they hastened to their relief. We were not to blame for the fires of Michigan, but the unfortunate must not suffer. Our society is not responsible for the apostasy and diabolical deportment of Brigham Young and company, but we should endeavor to save the honest from peril and ruin.

They are the rare exceptions, in our humble opinion, for this would-be-Zion is built up with lust and blood. As a class they are the most persistent prevaricators I have ever met with. Telling the truth has grown obsolete or "done away and no longer needed." Since the bill of Senator Edmunds has become a law they appear more united. They often refer to Daniel in the den of lions; the three Hebrews in the furnace of fire; Jesus Christ's betrayal and crucifixion, the death of Stephen, the persecution of the primitive church, the expulsion from Missouri, the fate of Nauvoo and their present sufferings "for righteousness' sake." Four of the "Akin party" were snared and murdered in this county and the remaining two lost their lives further north. If even handed justice was duly administered here, many would hang, while others would be serving in the penitentiary or workshops.

I heard John Taylor's son and the bishop of this place publicly teach that a person that would defile a daughter in Israel should be destroyed, and intimated that they would kill such individuals if they interfered with their children. It was observed that an honorable Gentile would do likewise and no jury would condemn him. This people love to condemn the mobocrat in order that they may seize his cudgel; howbeit their own book says, in section forty-two, "Thou shalt not kill;" again, "Vengeance is mine." They claim the inspiration, direction and interposition of God in all their daily concerns, and pity and berate the world. Such stupid flattery and blind credulity can scarcely be found among the benighted nations of pagan renown. Their outcome and doom can but be humiliating and altogether inglorious.

Last evening, on returning from services, some ambushed Danite in embryo gave us the benefit of a small volley of eggs, but I do not think said eggs had been to the tithing office for they were not rotten. This is the strongest argument I have met, so far, and my duster was quite converted. What I lack in wisdom and goodness I try to make up in untiring industry, and undaunted zeal. When I retire this Fall I hope more efficient ones will be called upon to stand in the breach. This is an excellent field for experience.

M. T. SHORT.

Is The Heart The Seat of Affection?

TO THOSE who assume the affirmative of the above query, I wish to propound a few additional ones for their solution; hoping if it be true that I may become convinced by their arguments.

1st. Is affection (which is love) an intelligent attribute; or in the absence of intelligence can love exist?

2d. If the heart is the seat of affection and affection is an intelligent attribute, why then is it conceded that the brain instead of the heart is the organ, or instrument of intelligent thought?

3d. If the heart is the residence of affection, why then is love, or affection never deranged and put out of order when that organ is diseased, while the head is sound?

4th. If affection is located in the heart and not the brain, why then is love, esteem, affection, reverence, &c., so often turned square about and transformed into their opposites when the brain is deranged; and that too while the heart is performing with assiduity all its natural functions?

5th. If the affirmative of the first question be true, why then is the fact so plainly demonstrated by the exterior shape of the head and face so comprehensive to the touch of the phrenologist, or the wary eyes of the physiognomist?

6th. And finally, why does not the physiology of the heart indicate which was, or is the embodiment of the most abundant love? Or, in other words, why can not the physiologist tell by the appearance of the human heart which was that of the bandit and desperado from that of the most affectionate and beneficent.

Saints' Herald.

JOSEPH SMITH, EDITOR.

Lamoni, Iowa, July 15, 1882.

We have long been expecting that some one, or more, in the Church, would attack the policy specially advocated and advised by us, that of the Saints ceasing to wander about in uncertain ways, without permanent homes and objects, and settling in the regions round about to stay, to build up homes, and by honorable efforts in industry and economy to secure something of this world's goods wherewith to build up temporal Zion when it is built.

From time to time the old-time "all things common" theory has been presented in seeming condemnation of the advice we have given; and certain things explanatory of supposed lack in the Church have been stated as the views of various writers on this topic; but few have cared to present the subject in so few and direct words as Bro. J. B. Porter, of Three Rivers, Mississippi. We do not know Bro. Porter, but we do know that he represents a class, and not a small one, of good, fair minded, upright men who have formed views as to what is right, and what the law of God demands, and would love to see those views carried out, as they feel assured good would result.

The apparent counsel to sell "our possessions and follow Jesus," is presented in open contrast with the advice to "purchase lands, settle and improve, and accumulate property." But the addition, "and lay up treasures in earth," is made by the brother without warrant in anything we have ever said or written; for all the advice the Church by its leading authorities has ever given on this subject has been given when discussing Zion and how to build it up.

Suppose that the Church membership universally should adopt the idea presented in the words "sell all our possessions;" would Bro. Porter and all of the Saints do what the "laid them at the apostles' feet," says?

Suppose that all the Saints every where would sell all their possessions to follow Jesus, in the light of this contrast of policy? What would follow?

Are those who prefer that rendition of the law to ours prepared to tell the Church what they mean by following Jesus? Where will the multitude of aged men, the women and the children be lodged and fed? The country in which the Zion is to be builded is not now the wilderness in which Nephi and those who came after him in the Book of Mormon times, wandered and sustained themselves on the wild game and abundance with which the new land abounded. There is no region near or far "around about" in which a few hundreds of men, women and children could wander without suffering and want, let alone the "thousands of Manasseh and the tens of thousands of Ephraim." How would the preaching of the gospel of redemption be prosecuted in such a condition of things? How would a Temple be built if no land were to be purchased on which it was to stand? How would it look for a people existing in such a condition of things, their possessions all sold, and the proceeds of the sale of them used up by the apostles in caring for and maintaining those needing it, and all supported out of the common purse that way, to own a lot on which the temple would stand, and a magnificent temple, and no one of that same people have a home, or its comforts and surroundings, no fixed abiding place, no inheritance in Zion?

The language of the revelations to the Church freely interpreted is that the Saints shall purchase all the land in the region that can be bought for money. And what object could there be in commanding a purchase that was, or is not to be used by them. And if any part of the "increase" that a Latter Day Saint may have, may be consecrated, or paid into the Lord's storehouse, it is certain that the methods by which an increase may be created or obtained are to be followed by them. No portion of increase can be paid unless there is an increase; and the fact that there is to be an increase signifies that there are ways by which that increase may accrue that are honorable ways in the law of God and in his sight—ways that are lawful.

What a community existing in the condition of the one hinted at in the contrast offered would find to do, without fixed and tangible homes and labor connected with them, as individuals and a society, is not stated; but we suppose that some have thought the matter through to the end, and can tell. If so we should be pleased to see what the conclusions are.

The works of the Church are made up of the works of the individual members of it; and where there are those who are of the opinion that the possessions of a person should be sold, these persons knowing that the Church can not order them to sell, ought in pure consistency to sell their own, and do what they hold to be the correct thing to do.

We have never seen any one who had matured a feasible plan of carrying out a common, "all things common" theory, as it is usually held, and as we have commonly heard it rendered. We are willing now, and have always been willing to listen to any one's ideas on this subject, for not having decided the plan in mind, nor finding in the law, nor yet having it revealed, we are not prepared to present one. If the prosperity of Israel depends on it, then some one or more, fully convinced that way, ought to take the lead and set the example. Here is a chance to show consistency and integrity. Organization of those who thus read the law, may be effected, by many methods, no doubt, and the joint wisdom and direction of those associated ought to be able to select the one that they find in the law, or that may be most suitable to carry out their ideas.

There is a man at Independence, Missouri, who declares consecration and not tithing to be the law now to govern, and is anxious that the Latter Day Saints shall adopt his view. He declares his view to be the law, and God's will in the matter; and denounces the methods of the Reorganization, including the writer, for being in rebellion. He is willing to undertake the organization of the Lord's store-house on his plan; and the School of the Prophets, according to his understanding. His name is Lars Petersen, and we think it possible that he will get some followers, and that an organization will be tried, the end of which will be only a matter of time. There will be no uncertainty about it, and like the one on Beaver Island, Michigan, with its feast and first-fruits; and the one at Preparation, Iowa, with its patriarchal order, it will surely come to naught.

The policy pursued by the Reorganized Church is to people the, so-called, land of Zion, with citizens, who by virtue of industry, sobriety and faithful spiritual lives, shall be prepared for the reign of King Emanuel, the Prince of Peace; steadfast, law-abiding citizens, acquainted with the powers and the methods of government, and prepared to take an intelligent part in the maintenance of good forms of directing and controlling; and whose final crowning achievement will be homes, houses of worship, (tabernacles), and a temple, their own and paid for in the sight of men; dedicated by righteous hands and loving hearts and consecrated by the Spirit of God, to his service and the good of man—temples, places of worship and homes, hearts and hands all together.

The Church does not teach, nor has it ever taught that men were to lay up treasures in earth; but that they were of the "mammon of unrighteousness," to "make to themselves friends." The Church has not taught that the Saints were to lust and covet, but that they should make a right use of the things of this world. The miser, the covetous man, the man whose heart is set on riches, and the man that hasteth to get riches, are all condemned; but the prudent man who hath wherewith to feed his household, the woman who clotheth and provideth for her family, the industrious and the frugal, the man who hath and giveth liberally, he that adds to his store by economy and simple desires, all are commended.

PRAYER and testimony meetings are to many of the Saints the most interesting and best enjoyed of any held by the branches to which they belong. That there is an amount of spiritual light and life diffused in a well conducted and lively prayer meeting, will be conceded; and the avowed purpose of a Sacramental and testimony meeting is to partake of the emblems of the body and blood, the life giving elements of the Master's body; and a Saint must be dull, or far gone, indeed, who is not refreshed by this communion. But, and many wish there were not "buts" in the case, sometimes prayer meetings are not made meetings for prayer, and testimony meetings prove to be meetings not for testimony. Sometimes, by reason of mistake in the presiding officer, or by reason of some ill considered speech of the one or two who lead first, the thoughts of those present are led into unprofitable channels and the time of all wasted, so far as spiritual advancement or enjoyment are concerned.

Most of the branches have one or more members from whom the branch always hears upon every prayer and testimony meeting, whether the attendance be large or small, few or many. And sometimes it occurs that the speech of these speakers is upon subjects not interesting to the majority, because it is full of self, trials, sorrows, griefs and shortcomings. Confession is good for the soul, only if confession is followed by amendment; but constant confession not followed by amendment, first wearies, then disgusts the hearers. Such tire the meetings into tame repetitions, very unprofitable to them that go to them.

"The meetings shall be conducted by the Elders as they shall be led by the Spirit," has passed into an axiom, and is the legal rule applying in the case. The conduct of the meeting then rests largely with the one in charge, and the force of the meeting for good may be much broken by an injudicious direction given by this leader; as for instance. Prayer meetings are not held for preaching purposes; if then, the Elder in charge spend twenty minutes in preliminary services, song, prayer and song, and twenty more "giving the meeting into the hands of the Saints," as it is frequently expressed, without regard to whether there be few or many present, he has used forty out of ninety minutes usually devoted to the prayer meeting service. If his speech has been practically a sermon, as is sometimes the case, and he winds up by telling those present that they must remember not to preach sermons, and be brief as he wants to hear from all, he has done all he can well do to kill that meeting; especially if there are many present. We once knew a prominent Elder in charge of an afternoon testimony meeting, at which four hundred Saints were present, who occupied twenty-five minutes in a testimony and an exhortation to be brief; the most time taken by any one that followed him was seven minutes. At another time we heard a brother speak for ten minutes, in the course of which he gave as one reason why the Saints did not speak in the testimony meetings was because they had lost and were lacking in spirituality. At this meeting there were two hundred Saints, and the meeting began at, or nearly at three o'clock and lasted till five. If two hundred Saints had spoken, each occupying ten minutes, it would have taken thirty-three hours and two-thirds of an hour for the whole to have spoken. As it was, twenty minutes were lost waiting to open and the opening exercises, leaving one hour and forty minutes for two hundred to speak and pray in, and only about twenty, one tenth of the whole did speak; so if our brother was right, that those who did not speak were lacking in spirituality, then one hundred and eighty of the Saints at that meeting were so lacking; and it is easy to see that all could not have spoken, using ten minutes, the same time that he did, unless the meeting had held all that day and night, all the next day and way long into the next night. Is it not possible that very many of those who were silent were in fact considerate enough to give up their opportunity to speak to others who might wish to be heard. Another thing occurred at the same meeting; two of the speakers had spoken in a prayer meeting in the morning, one of them, occupying five minutes in the morning and ten minutes in the afternoon, fifteen minutes out of one hundred and eighty, just one twelfth of the whole time.

We have heard other Saints in their sayings at testimony meetings state that if the Saints present did not all of them bear their testimony that they were under condemnation, and affirm that the Spirit testified so. In such cases we have been obliged to doubt the correctness of the statement, because the Spirit knew, if it stopped to think, (which the speaker did not), that one hundred people could not speak and bear testimony in an hour and a half, and each occupy ten minutes, the time used by the speaker; one hundred multiplied by ten is a thousand; a thousand minutes is only sixteen and two-thirds hours,—and all that to be done in an hour and a half, or two hours. We are of the opinion that those Saints who thus state that those who sit still, content to hear what others may have to say, are lacking in spirituality, or are condemned, do not take thought of what they are saying, or they would never say it.

We believe that both the officer in charge, and those who speak first in a testimony meeting should take counsel with himself and the Spirit, and lead the minds of the Saints who may take part in the meeting, into trains of profitable thought; taking care to avoid those things calculated to annoy or distress, and choosing such topics as lead the mind away from self and selfish themes.

We believe that in the Sacrament meeting a time should be allotted to any who might want to confess and make peace with God, or an offended brother or sister; after which the emblems should be presented, before the crowding of the room, the heat, or the noise of the babes and uneasy children, causes the attention to flag, the communicants to be tired and nervous, and spoils the spirit of worship.

Saints in taking part in these meetings would do well to remember that a desultory, rambling story of one's life, full of interest to him or her who tells it, is not interesting to them that hear, unless it be tempered with grace. "Take no thought what you shall say," does not apply to the Saints prayer and testimony meeting; nor does the saying that "Where the Spirit of God is, there is liberty;" give any body a license to teach, or preach, or scold any hobby into the ears and hearts of the believers assembled for prayer or testimony service. Nor does the occasion of a prayer meeting give warrant for the directing of the body of the Church in the conduct of its business affairs, by other than its constituted authorities according to the rules of the Church. And the presiding elder of a branch who governs and directs the affairs of his branch upon the "thus saith the Spirit," of this or that one, delivered in the prayer and testimony meetings, without evidence to himself may expect more or less trouble. Nor do we do any violence in this teaching to the doctrine of the gifts, because the Spirit of God certainly knows the constituted authorities of the Church, and will respect them in their places; and any direction needful to be given, may and should come through them. If the Spirit does not respect the order of the Church, who among the members of it can be expected to do so. Every officer is in his place entitled to exercise the gift of discernment of spirits, and should govern himself accordingly, but should remember that where rules for directing in the affairs of the branch, or Church already exist, he is expected to "remember the Church articles" to do according to them, and ought not to either need, or expect direct spiritual instruction on that point.

well the condition of the Church in all its affairs; and it is but right to expect that in all extreme emergencies, where the safety and well being of the work will depend upon a revelation of his will, (or the absolute right upon a doctrine), touching the case in emergency that such revelation will be given. But it is not reasonable to expect that upon any and all occasions where man fails, or hesitates to decide and act, or magnifies the emergency, that an importuning of God will force a revelation from him. If He does not know the Church and its affairs, and has not a sufficient regard for it to direct it in its vital necessities, who among us all is capable of instructing him. All that the wisest, noblest, grandest, best of the Saints can do is to present their cases of difficulty and necessity to him, and when he directs, do what is bidden cheerfully and directly; and when left to our own wisdom do what we believe to be right, without selfish desire, and leave the rest to his directing and controlling care.

Some of the Utah Church tell us that they believe that Joseph before his death was led by the Spirit of inspiration, and that whatever he said or did touching the church was inspired; and that Presidents B. Young and John Taylor, were and are led in the same way. This the Saints do not accept; and yet, according to the philosophy of the work, he who acts in purview of the gift of wisdom given of Christ, as Paul gives instruction in 1 Cor. 12, is certainly led by the spirit of wisdom, and that of Christ. So with the man led by faith, the gift of God. And if it be not possible for a leader in branch, or Church to obtain, or be given this gift of wisdom by which his words and acts relating to the Church may be directed, we make a grave mistake in preaching the manifestation of the Spirit in the gifts at all. If it be possible for a man to obtain, or be given this gift of wisdom, by Christ "as he will;" are not the words uttered by him, and the acts performed by him in the service in which that gift is given, just as well and correctly done and said as if directed in any other way. To illustrate: are not the words and acts of a man directed by the wisdom given of the Spirit, just as wise and just as much inspired, as are the words and acts of a man who says "thus saith the Lord," in the gift of prophecy, given by the Spirit; or of one who speaks and acts by the direction of the gift of tongues and the interpretation? It would not seem that the Spirit manifest in tongues and interpretation and in prophecy, is any wiser than the same Spirit manifest in wisdom, knowledge or faith. And why should we put more reliance in one than in the other.

"Be ye wise servants and harmless as doves," was not uttered foolishly, or written uselessly.—Let us be wise.

W. T. H. MARSHALL, of Buffalo, Dallas county, Missouri, is out as a "Watchman," and in a published notice to "the Latter Day Saints and all people," and after a special warning to obey the laws of the land states:

"Now I suppose the reader is about ready to ask who is the writer. I don't know how to answer that question any better than to refer you to the last chapter of the Book Michi, also the 33d chapter of Ezekiel. I make very sure of being the Watchman spoken of in those two chapters, as well as many other chapters, though I will subscribe my name

W. T. H. MARSHALL."

Messrs. W. H. Hooper, Bishop Sharpe and some two or three others of Utah's elders, have gone to Washington, bearing a petition that Utah be admitted as a State, in the Sisterhood of States. With them they take a copy of the constitution proposed for the new State, which is to be submitted to Congress for its approval. In that constitution are some things that the delegates admit will not be pleasing to the Gentile—whether in Congress or not, we believe is not stated. What the things not pleasing to the Gentile are, is also not stated; but the inference seems to be that they would be lenient to, or an endorsement of the peculiar institution prevalent there. If this inference is a correct one, then there is something that will be not only displeasing to the Gentile, but positively disgusting and exasperating. If the people of Utah, a territory of the United States, come to the Congress of those States asking that that territory be admitted in to the compact of states with a clause in the proposed constitution of the proposed State favoring polygamy, and a condition precedent to such admission, the course that Congress should pursue ought to be very clear. For, as all the other sisters of the statehood are fundamentally organized, the laws relating to the marriage relation, and the consequent practices in the courts under them in this new State, could not, in consistency, be recognized in any of them; hence that new State would be a pariah to the social and legal institutions governing in the sisterhood of States, therefore ought not to be admitted.

Bro. J. B. Prettyman, of Knox, Indiana, had been asking that an Elder might be spared from other fields to come there and labor; but as none came, he thought none would come, so he started out to preach the word in his own proper person. He was well listened to, but drew the fire of an Advent soldier, Carter by name, who replied to him, but failed to respond at Bro. Prettyman's second effort. Bro. Francis Earl met the same Adventist Elder down where he was living, and provoked a discussion which proved to the people that Bro. Earl was well prepared to defend the faith, when necessity demanded and the Spirit directed. Bro. Prettyman, Earl and L. B. Scott had been doing something in Stark, Marshall and Pulaski counties, Indiana. Bro. Prettyman says that the Methodist Episcopal folks have opened their house at Monterey for preaching; and that in some places the people turn out well, in others not at all.

Letters from a number of Saints and Elders that are crowded out, among them, H. Robinson, Belmont, Ohio; Wm. Foster, Canaan, Indiana; John C. Foss, Green's Landing, Maine; which place he had reached after his western trip. He expects to move west July, or August, to Stewartsville, Missouri. Besides those named, a host of letters, death notices, conference minutes and obituaries are crowded out. Our "News Summary" has been omitted for several issues on account of crowded columns.

Mr. Henry Ward Beecher, who a short time since so outraged the working man by his "one dollar a-day" statement, had an opportunity lately to hedge a little, and makes a discourse on the labor strikes his occasion, in which he defended the late strikers and berated the rich men and the corporations roundly.

Bro. Joseph F. Burton, arrived out at Delhaven, Nova Scotia, May 8d. He attempted to be heard there, and on Sunday, June 4th, he baptized four, Bro. H. J. Davison and wife, and Robert Newcomb and wife. He preached two weeks in Lower Pereaux; Halifax was ready to receive him. He wrote very interestingly, but his letter with many others is crowded out for want of room.

Bro. Heman C. Smith was at Independence, Missouri, July 4th, on his way to his mission in the South-West. His first call will be at some point in the Indian Territory.

Bro. Joseph R. Lambert was expected to be at LaFayette, Georgia, soon after the 26th of June.

Sr. Catharine Gillespie, of Rockport, Atchison county, Missouri, wrote Bro. L. C. Donaldson, April 14th, that she was very low with fever and wished him to come and administer to her. This letter Bro. Donaldson got June 27th, it having gone astray, and failed to reach its destination. Any one of the Elders passing there will confer a favor on Sr. Gillespie if she be still living. Enquire for William Hickles.

Sr. M. A. Christy is ill at Portlandville, Iowa, and wishes the prayers of the Saints in her behalf.

Bro. J. F. Mintun was laboring at Elkhorn, Nebraska, June 26th, and was having fair audiences.

Bro. A. P. Free, Girard, Kansas, proposes to get Bro. D. S. Crawley, of Columbus, to come and see what the Girardites will do about hearing the gospel.

Bro. Stephen Stone, New Canaan, Connecticut, writes June 18th, that he had visited Bro. Collier's at Bridgeport, and held a small meeting; blessed Sr. Vincer's child that was sick, with good results.

Read the letter of Bro. E. N. Beach in this issue, and see how the word is being scattered. Can not some of our restless young ministers push out into New Mexico, and help garner the sheaves of worth.

Bro. John McKenzie, of Jefferson City, Missouri, wrote us June 20th; he was to visit Indiana, about the last of the month, and when he returns in three or four weeks, he would like to be visited by some Elder, either en route, accidentally or on purpose, calling upon him.

For reasons that are unavoidable, both on his part and the part of the brethren at Clinton, Iowa, Bro. Joseph F. McDowell's appointment to that special field will cease, and he be assigned labor by the Presidency until the session of Conference in September. He is hereby assigned labor in Ohio, under the direction of Bro. Wm. H. Kelley, in charge of that field.

No blame attaches to the Saints nor to Bro. McDowell for this change of field for labor. The President of the branch at Clinton, Bro. Warren Turner, states that the stay of Bro. McDowell among them was an endeavor to do them good.

"THE Christian Intelligencer takes a rather gloomy view of the year; "It can not be said to have been a year of religious prosperity. There has been a great deal of church work done, in the payment of church debts, in the organization of Christian activities, and signally in the enlarged benefactions, especially in individuals, for the glory of God and the welfare of mankind. But there has been an almost unprecedented lack of conversions, a painful growth of the spirit of worldliness and covetousness and formality over the church, accompanied by a decrease of candidates for the ministry. The undermining of faith in fundamental truth, in the Bible, in God himself, has gone on, inside and out of the church, among the learned and the vulgar."

"Rather a gloomy view indeed," for the year of grace 1881.

A TALK WITH THE MORMON BISHOP, SHARPE.

"Bishop John Sharpe, of Salt Lake City, Utah, was seen at the St. Nicholas Hotel yesterday, and being asked how the Mormons regarded the appointment of the Utah Commission, the Bishop replied that its members had been chosen since he left home. He had no doubt that they would go to Utah and perform the duties which devolved upon them, and that the Mormon people would simply submit to what they did.

"It is to be hoped that the Commission will begin its work speedily," said he. "You see, the passage of the Edmunds Bill made all our registering offices vacant, and we can hold no elections until these are filled. They will be filled, of course, by men appointed by the Commission, and it is desirable that everything should be ready for our elections in August."

"Will not this bill prove disastrous to Mormonism?"

"No, not at all. Polygamy will after awhile be done away with; as it is now, a polygamist can no longer hold office. The Mormon Church will not suffer particularly."

"Then polygamy must go?"

"Certainly. People are no readier to risk a term in State prison in Utah than they are in any other State."

"Will there be any movement among the Mormons to leave Salt Lake City; to seek a new home for the faith, as they have done before?"

"No; everything that they have is in Salt Lake City, and what is there can not be moved."

We can not vouch for the foregoing bit of news; but if true it is quite suggestive. The premium that President B. Young put upon the plural marriage business gave the offices to polygamists, because the monogamist was perforce "weak in the faith." He that was first must now be last.

No. 1, vol. 1, of "The Sword of Justice," a monthly paper published at Independence, Jackson county, Missouri, and edited by E. Peterson, is received.

The first clause of the Prospectus is as follows:

"The Sword of Justice is a monthly paper wholly intended for the publishing of Christianity, and exposing Mormonism or Latter-Day-Saintism, taking the books they claim for the foundation of their churches to denounce their professions and practices.

In an editorial headed "David Whitmer Sustained" we extract the following:

"All who have a desire to save themselves from this untoward generation, must cease to follow after men and hearken unto their precepts, but take the revelations which have been given for a law. All these New Revelators, Apostles, and Prophets are seeking to destroy the constitution of the land by bringing their followers in bondage. There is no person in good standing in any of the churches of Latter Day Saints but what has sacrificed his own free agency to their Leaders. They can not act in Doctrine and Principle according to their moral agency, which God has given unto man under such a rule and head. They must have their Prophets to do their thinking. They are afraid to think and act for themselves, lest they should lose their place in the Kingdom of their God. In this way Satan leads the Latter Day Saints in an opposite direction to the commandments God has given, and also the constitution of the land. And as long as these things do exist there never will be a people who will see eye to eye and be like-minded."

THE Lay family left last week for State Center. W. K., the prophet, went via Adrian, Michigan, where he was to settle up his affairs, preparatory to going with his father and brother to Dakota or some other available field to start a stock ranch. He remained here until he found his mother did not rise from her grave at the close of the ten days after her death.—Sandwich Free Press.

This slip is cut from the Kendall county, Illinois, Record, and probably gives the last we shall hear of W. K. Lay in a prophetic career, for a time at least.

Correspondence.

GREENVILLE, Butler Co., Ala.,
July 31, 1882.

Bro. Joseph Smith:—The Quarterly Conference of the Alabama District closed last night. We had a peaceful session, and the church officials express good desires. Good attention was given to the word spoken, and the Elders were blessed in presenting it.

For the last three months, I have divided my labors between the two districts, and am thankful to God for the degree of success attained. In the Eureka branch, Bro. Scarcliff and I took primary steps with a view to set the work in order at that place. At "Pond Creek," or "Buffalo Mills," we had a peculiar experience, but soon discovered to our satisfaction that there was something to be done. We held seven meetings in their midst, and just before leaving, Bro. Scarcliff baptized one. We were invited by a leading member of the Methodist Church to hold meeting in their Chapel. We asked him if it would be all right, and he said it certainly would, but if otherwise, he would let us know in time. On the evening of May 22d, as we approached the house and the people were fast gathering to the place of worship, we were met by the excited steward, Mr. Gay, who addressed us in the following manner:

"Are you the gentlemen who were expected to hold services here to-night?"

"Yes, sir."

"Well; by what authority?"

"We were invited to do so by Mr. Upton, yesterday. We asked him if it would be all right, he said it certainly would; but if not, he would let us know."

"Well; I do not consider the authority good."

"I do not know how that is, it is best known to yourselves; but what objection have you to our preaching in the house?"

"I am not posted, myself, but I have been told some things by those who do know, and I do not feel right about letting you use the house."

"We expect to preach nothing but what is supported by Bible proof. You would not object to that, would you?"

"No; I have nothing against you; you may be perfect gentlemen, but I do not feel right about it. I may be wrong. I am not posted."

"It seems to me that a person does not need to be very well posted to know what is right in a case like this. Suppose you were preaching what you believed to be true, you would like to have a place in which to preach, would you not?"

"Y—e—s."

"Well; the Master said, 'Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do you even so to them.'"

Mr. Upton came up and told Mr. Gay that he had spoken to him about it, and he did not object; and now to deny us the privilege of going into the house when the congregation had gathered, he thought to be wrong. He invited us to repair to his dwelling house, and we did so, and there addressed a crowded room.

Bro. Scarcliff and I separated, after having been together a little more than two weeks; he to go Mill View, Point Clear, &c, I to go into Alabama.

Sunday, May 28th, and Monday and Tuesday evenings, I preached in Friendship Church, near Evergreen. I have since learned that Parson Williams, the Methodist minister of that place, made an effort to have other parties brought out, before my arrival, so that they could have absolute control and keep me out of the house. I heard him preach on Sunday forenoon, but he did not announce my meeting. He attended on Tuesday evening. I invited him to open the meeting with prayer, but he would not; gave him the privilege of speaking at the close of my remarks, but he had nothing to say. I read the same lesson he had read on Sunday, (from Matt. 7th chap) preached from that part of it which says, "Beware of false prophets," &c. Since I left he has loaned the people a book to read that they might be enlightened on the subject of Mormonism. Query. If Parson Williams believes his book to be true, and his whole object is to establish truth, and put down error, why did he not present its statements to the people while I was there, that their consistency and strength might be seen, and the weakness of our defense might be made apparent. Are the ministers afraid to put up their truth against our error? And again: they tell us the Bible is the best book in the world, and contains all that God ever intended for the people in all ages. I heard a minister say a short time ago, while making a kind of covert attack upon our faith, that "For all truth we must go to the Bible; there is no truth anywhere else." Would it not be consistent and right, then, to say to the people "Read your Bibles carefully and prayerfully. If they preach in harmony with the teachings of that book, receive it; if not, reject it." If there is no truth outside of the Bible, certainly these exposés of Mormonism can not be relied upon, for scarcely one of them undertakes to make a Bible argument against us, and those who do, miserably fail.

First and second Sundays in June, I preached at Pleasant Hill. Three young men were baptized by Bro. G. T. Chute.

June 17th, I returned to Buffalo Mills, Fla., (having previously spoken twice at Molino) and remained over two Sundays with them. Most of this time I was sick with the fever. O! how hard it was to fill my appointments! But I felt as though Satan was trying to hinder the work of God in that place. How peculiar I felt, far away from home, and in a strange land! But I found friends, and God was with me. Several times I was wondrously delivered, for the time being, so that I was enabled to preach and baptize. I preached four times, baptized eight, left a number of others believing, (some almost persuaded to obey) blest four children, and gave such instruction as was thought to be needed, and I was enabled to present to the new converts. Eight of the nine persons baptized at this place were members in full standing in the Methodist Church, four of whom are men and five women. I forgot to say that my labor at Lone Star (where I found the work in a very low condition) resulted in good. One was baptized by Bro. W. J. Booker, one Teacher ordained, and I have since learned there is some improvement there.

Please excuse mistakes, as I am hardly able to sit up and write. Expect to start for Georgia on the 6th inst. Yours in hope,

JOSEPH R. LAMBERT.

GRAND MANAN, N. B.,

June 18th, 1882.

Bro. Joseph.—It has been some time since I wrote to you, but my neglect is not attributable to indifference or lukewarmness, but rather to a sense of incompetency. I am pleased to be able to say, that according to my understanding, my faith in the latter day work is unwavering, and that while "sowing beside all waters," I am greatly encouraged, and believe it will not be in vain, but will in due time "reap." I am more fully realizing the importance of living our religion, shedding forth the principles born of a pure life. I am strongly impressed from surrounding circumstances, notwithstanding the low spiritual condition of our branch, that the latter day work has never been so highly esteemed as at present.

I am well assured that wise and judicious teachings will eventually be productive of good. It is a scriptural truth that "we shall reap if we faint not." The heralds of truth are proclaiming the gospel, and notwithstanding some call it "another gospel," yet on comparison it is found, and by the honest investigator acknowledged to be the same as preached by the pioneers in the work. Much, very much depends on our daily intercourse with our fellowman; if our life-walk is only consistent with our profession, we shall be instrumental for good.

Ever praying for the welfare of the latter day work, I am truly yours in bonds,

JOSEPH LAKEMAN.

FARMINGTON, New Mexico,
June 15th, 1882.

President Joseph Smith, Dear Sir.—Recent occurrences have induced me to write you; the subject of which I trust you will give brief attention. Last Sunday preaching by a Presbyterian minister was held at my residence, with very good attention, leaving an appointment four weeks from that time (July 9th); also to organize a Sunday School (June 25th). Wish it were the Saints. I deem it my duty to give them an invitation to the same. Should there be a minister in the field that could make it convenient to give us a call he would be thankfully received and heartily welcomed. There are a few Saints in belief in this neighborhood, and I think more would follow could they hear the true gospel.

Yours truly,

E. N. BEACH.

PAIGE, Bastrop Co., Texas,
June 3d, 1882.

Dear Herald—When I wrote to you last I was in Butler county, Alabama, and expected to go from there to Pine Apple, Wilcox county; but a lack of finances made it necessary that we change our purpose; so we left the Butler Branch and went to the Macedonia Branch, in the western portion of Monroe county. There, rain and other causes made it impracticable to do any thing, so we made a short. Thence we went to Whistler, to visit some of my relatives that I had never seen. We were not there long until enquiries began to come to me to the effect that the people wanted me to preach. I agreed to tell them what we believe, provided a house could be obtained. I visited the Methodist minister and tried to get the use of the Methodist Church; he refused, saying that some Elders up the railroad had broken up some church; therefore, he thought it best for his charge not to let us have it. The Baptist also refused us the use of their church. I was offered the use of the Odd Fellows' Hall for $1.50 per evening for three evenings, or more. I then visited a widow lady (a Catholic) and got the use of her hall seven evenings and Sunday forenoon for $5; and when our time was out, she voluntarily offered it free for the next Sunday, which we accepted; so you see there is generosity about some of the Catholics. We had good audiences while there, and left quite an interest there. I think if we could have remained a few days longer, some would have been baptized. I hope Bro. Lambert will visit that place when opportunity offers. It is five miles from Mobile.

I wish to correct a mistake that appeared in the Herald, stating, "there is about twenty member at Whistler." The article referred to by the Herald is in the Mobile Register, and had reference to the church at Moss Point, Miss.

We left Whistler on the morning of the 20th of March, leaving some with tears coursing down their cheeks, and pleadingly asking us to come again. Bro. Lambert, visit them if you can.

On the night of the 22d, we were landed at the house of Bro. W. M. Sherrill, in Burleson county, Texas. The conference of the Texas Central District convened on the Saturday following, where all present seemed to enjoy themselves. Since then I have been preaching as circumstances would permit, in Burleson, Milam and Bastrop counties. Since I came to Bastrop county, I have had large and attentive audiences; baptized seven on the 1st inst.; many others are believing. Notwithstanding this success, I am sometimes almost ready to shrink from the duties that have been placed upon me, and say, Lord send those into thy field to labor that are more able and worthy than I.

Bro. H. C. Smith is well spoken of in and around Paige; but the Campbellites don't like it much, because he gave their minister such a drubbing. They say he had the advantage,—strange that they didn't know that truth always has the advantage. Dear brethren, will you pray for me, that I may be able to represent the Church aright. And its great head: can I, O can I, poor weak mortal as I am, represent him aright in meekness, humility, love, brotherly kindness, and charity? Why, O why is it that I never could see or feel the responsibility of Elder ere this? And it is possible that I don't fully understand it yet.

Yours in hope.

A. J. CATO.

THREE RIVERS, Mississippi,

June 16th, 1882.

A few thoughts, and questions: Shall tribulation, or famine, or peril, or sword, separate us from the love of God (which is to keep his commandments)?

If it does, will we be following what Christ said, when he told his disciples not to seek to save this life, for if they did, and neglected their duty, to keep this body and soul together, that they would lose eternal life?

If you will show me the faith of the Church without these works, I will show you the faith of the Church eighteen hundred years ago, by those works.

If Christ taught his disciples to foresake all, and sell their possessions, and follow him; and the present church teaches its members to purchase lands, and settle and improve, and accumulate property, and lay up treasures in earth; can we call this the faith once delivered to the saints?

Did the Sodomites send for Lot? Or did the Antediluvians send for Noe? Or did their preaching interest them? If it did not, did God hold them responsible. Or did he try to suit them by an exchange of preachers.

Is the Church preaching to be heard of men, or is it preaching to deliver the message.

When the church shows its faith by its works, then I shall have no doubts. Though the church may speak in tongues, and do miracles, yet if it has not charity, or love, (for this is love to God: to keep his commandments): it is a sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal.

JOHN B. PORTER.

CUBA, Republic Co., Kansas,

June 15th, 1882.

To the Saints and enquirers in North Eastern Kansas and South Western Nebraska:—Any desiring my presence, or labor, in these localities (which were assigned me by the General Conference) will correspond with me at once stating the exigency of the case, &c. At present my field near home is a busy one, giving me all that I can attend to; yet if my district friends are in need of me they shall not pass without notice, and I will spare no endeavor to help them. Address me at Cuba, Republic county, Kansas.

The prospect for the advancement of the work is indeed flattering. Prejudice—the last bulwark of Satan has been broken in many places and the spirit of honest enquiry is substituted in its stead. Where once I was met with scorn, threats, menace, locks and contumely, I now find friends and warm greetings; people are looking for something that they have not got, a city set on a hill, whose builder and maker is God, and it seems as though the spirit of unrest is being poured out on men and women. I thank my master for the manifestation of his spirit in approving the labors of my hands, the sick are healed, the word is preached with convincing power, many have believed and others are looking hopefully toward the kingdom; thus the good work goes on. God be praised forevermore.

JOHN D. BENNETT.

GALESBURG, Mo.,

June 5th, 1882.

Bro. Joseph—I came to this place on the 3d inst., and held meeting that night; also twice yesterday—good liberty, and good attendance and attention; meeting again to-night, and probably all week, and next Sunday. Bro. S. Malony assisting me. Our conference came off successfully on the 26th and 27th ult.—good spirit manifested in the transaction of all business, and also in settling of existing difficulties, and I hope it will be lasting. Since General Conference I have labored mostly in the neighborhood of the Columbus Branch, and some with Pleasant View Branch, with a good degree of liberty and success—baptized three.

The crops are looking favorable and promising through this county, especially the wheat, which is nearly ready to harvest—some will commence likely this week. Corn is backward on account of cold weather. People are in need of crops here this year, for last year it was nearly an entire failure, and for this reason the funds of the Church will suffer in this district during this Summer, as they had last Fall and Winter; but we are blessed with good crops this season, I believe they will make up for past loss. A good supply of the printed word would be of great use to me in my labors, if the Church could furnish.

In gospel bonds,

JOHN T. DAVIES

MILL VIEW, Fla., May 30th, 1882.

Bro. Joseph—After writing to you from Mobile I went to Santa Rosa county, Florida, and attended the quarterly conference of the Florida District, held 6th and 7th inst. The attendance at the business sessions on Saturday was very small. Not enough interest has been taken in trying to transact business for the Lord by the Elders and Saints generally in this district. We hope to see a change in this respect in the near future. Certainly we will have a greater claim upon the Lord for spiritual and temporal blessings, if we attend earnestly to the business of his kingdom in branch meetings as well as at the conferences. As it now is, in too many localities the Lord's business is the poorest attended to of any. And yet in the same localities Saints wonder why they do not receive greater blessings from God. If blessed as some so earnestly desire, many would be added to the Church. Of course then there would be more business to attend to. The query then arises, if we can not attend to the little business that is to be done now, what would we do then?

On Sunday a very large congregation for the piney woods of Florida assembled and listened to Bro. Lambert, who blessed of the Lord delivered two powerful discourses. Those who have met and loved Bro. Lambert in the North, will be pleased to learn that, although weak in body, and laboring under adverse circumstances, the Master is blessing his efforts in the South. May God restore to health one so humble, wise, loving, kind and true; that the Church may long be blessed with the labor which he so willingly gives to it. I have had the pleasure of laboring with him during the past three weeks, parting with him last Friday: he going up into Alabama, I coming down here; the necessities of the work compelling us to sacrifice that companionship which is so agreeable to both of us, and upon my part so profitable. The last weeks that we were together we held the most interesting series of meetings out near the head of Pond Creek in western Santa county, Florida, that I have been privileged to attend in the South.

We were turned out of a Methodist Church, but gained friends among the members of the same society, by this unwise action of their steward. The majority of the members did not endorse his action. He gave no good reason for so doing, simply because I suppose he didn't have any of that kind on hand; for it is presumable that if he had he would have used them. A deep interest has been awakened in that locality, and we think a good work will yet be done there. During the past three weeks I have baptized two.

Your brother in Christ,

FRANK P. SCARCLIFF.

ROD EAU, Ontario,

June 20th, 1882.

Bro. Joseph:—The conference of this District was held on the 3d and 4th of this month. Notwithstanding the rain and bad roads we had quite a good time. Brethren G. A. Blakeslee, E. L. Kelley, J. H. Lake, G. E. Deuel, G. Hicklin and E. H. Gurley were here; and I must say I thank God for the instructions we received from the Bishop and his counselor; also from the staff of missionaries sent here by the General Conference.

On Sunday 11th inst., in company with some of my brethren and sisters I visited the Baddertown Branch. On our way up we stopped at the lake and Bro. Deuel baptized one, a gentleman that had been investigating the truth of our doctrine for some time; may God bless him in my prayer. After arriving at Baddertown, Bro. Deuel preached a good discourse to those present, after which the brother that had been baptized was confirmed. We found the Saints there strong in the faith and determined to do right, and battle for the truth as contained in the books of the Church. We met again with them at three o'clock and Bro. Deuel and Badder administered to a sister who was sick, and I trust the Lord blessed the administration.

Brethren Lake and Gurley, have gone into the London District and left Brn. Deuel and Hicklin in this District. Bro. Deuel has gone out in the vicinity of the Olive and Wilkesport Branches to labor. Bro. Hicklin left here right away after the conference, and I have not heard from him since. I think that Rev. Pomeroy's lectures have not hurt us in the least, as most fair-minded people regard him as a slanderer. I feel a great desire to see the work of God prosper and see his people live their religion and let their light shine, and I feel if we do that God will bless us and add more to our numbers.

May God bless you in my prayer; pray for us.

Yours in Christ,

RICHARD COBURN.

DAVIS CITY, Iowa, June 22d, 1882.

Dear Herald:—It has been some time since I visited your pages with my scribbling and I would not now intrude on your space, were it not for the fact that a goodly number of your readers are no doubt wondering what has become of me and whether I am still in the faith or have apostatised. To those who live in the "regions round about" I need enter into no explanation; but to those in my contemplated field of labor and those who may be interested in me in my former field, I will say that I am still in the faith and am more determined than ever to magnify my calling. Since the General Conference I have done some labor in this section, spoken once in Mt. Ayr, Ringgold county, and at Redding, same county, also at Allendale, Missouri, also preached a funeral discourse in Harrison county, Missouri. I went to Grant City, Worth county, Missouri to accept a challenge, and hold a discussion with an Advent minister, but he did not put in an appearance. I also made a trip to visit a sick brother and although his life had been despaired of, I left him better and with a prospect of life. I am at the present writing repairing my home in order to make it more comfortable for my family. Alas, my family is very small at present. Two of my daughters left us this morning for Montana. Oh, none but parents can realize what our feelings are on parting with our loved ones to go so far away. May a beneficent Father protect them. Oh, we are so lonely. I think of leaving for my field of labor in about two weeks the Lord willing, but I confess that sometimes I have my misgivings and despondent hours, while contemplating the magnitude of the work in which I am engaged and the peculiarity of the relation I sustain to it. I sometimes think I have succeeded in finding an excuse for giving up ministerial labor and bend all my energies in the work of accumulating a sufficient amount of means to live comfortably; in short, stay at home and not try to preach. These thoughts force themselves upon me sometimes when I come home from a mission and find everything going to wreck and not a dollar to help myself with. I also get the idea into my head that perhaps we are too expensive to the Church, that we ought to do with less than we do, &c, and yet when I look the matter fairly in the face, I am forced to exclaim, "Woe is me if I preach not the gospel," and judging by my own feelings at times I can agree with Bro. Heman C. Smith, that if there is any to be pitied it is those who do not magnify their callings. I have repaired my house to the extent of my means, and of course that is a sure place to stop at, much more might be done, ought to be done to make it comfortable but for lack of a little more filthy lucre it will have to be postponed sine die. Now, dear Herald, tell your readers that although the old "Devil Killer" gets a little blue on the temporal string, occasionally, that he is alive in the great latter day work; and will, with God's help spend the remainder of his life in battling for the right. Tell the brethren in St. Louis to exercise patience. I'm coming.

Fraternally yours,

B. V. SPRINGER.

BLUE RAPIDS, Kansas,

June 16th, 1882.

Editor of the Herald:—I pen a few thoughts on sixty-seventh Psalm, which is a plain prediction of the day and age in which we live, or the ushering in of the seventh and last dispensation. It begins with a prayer: "God be merciful to us, and bless us, and cause thy face to shine upon us." I add to bring to pass his act, his strange act, and to perform his work, his strange work, or marvelous work and a wonder. (Isaiah 29: 13). It would cease to be a marvelous work and a wonder to this generation of professing christians, if they only possessed the spirit of prophesy and revelation. The work is all plain to him "that understandeth and right to them that find knowledge." (Prov. 8: 9).

The prayer at the commencement presupposes a time when the Lord's way to save men would not be known upon earth; hence the necessity for revelation, or for the Lord to renew revelation from heaven to man in order that the way of salvation might be made plain to all men; so that all who wished to obtain salvation might know the conditions on which they could obtain it, and all who rejected it might have no excuse. The Psalmist proceeds that "thy way might be known upon earth, thy saving health among all nations.

In the preface to the Doctrine and Covenants, 4th paragraph, the Lord says he has established this work "that the fullness of his gospel might be preached by the weak and the simple, unto the ends of the world, and before kings and rulers." And how blessed are they who make a sacrifice of themselves and all they possess to promote this glorious work. Here is a chance for a greater speculation than you can make any other way. Whether you be rich or poor, you can not fail to receive a bigger interest than you can expect, if you have come to a certain knowledge of the Lord's way to save men. It is a priceless treasure; "freely you have received, freely give." Extend the knowledge as far as in you lies, and to such as have not obtained that knowledge, I will strive to explain in as short and comprehensible a way as I am capable of. Faith is the first principle in revealed religion. Paul says: "Without faith it is impossible to please Him" (God) And in the 10th chapter of Romans, 14 to 16 verses, he tells us that faith comes by hearing the word of God, preached by men who are sent of God to preach. Paul and Peter both say that they preached the word of God by the Holy Ghost, sent down from heaven. And Paul tells Timothy to neglect not the gift that was in him to preach the gospel not printed in the Book only, but in Timothy's heart. Men whom God sends to preach, preach God's words to the people to whom they are sent, by the power of his spirit, which begets faith in the honest in heart, who hear and believe the truth which works repentance in them and leads them to acts of obedience, to be buried in the water for the remission of their sins, and to receive the gift of the Spirit of God through the laying on of hands, by the servants of God, who are ordained to that power. Obedience to this law is the only means through which God has ever promised eternal life to man in any age of the world.

As ever your servant for Jesus' sake,

JOHN LANDERS.

GALESBURG, Jasper Co., Mo.,

Bro. Joseph:—I was disappointed some when I did not see you at our Conference, as I was in hopes of seeing you. Elder J. T. Davies is here laboring in the great harvest field of souls, and John's labors are appreciated here. He has attentive congregations. What the result will be time only can decide.

The grain harvest commences this week; and never since our country has been settled is there such a prospect for wheat, oats and vegetables, as this year. Corn is very like some of us church members were lately, sitting still doing nothing. Now since Conference both the saints and the corn are looking upwards, and I hope will continue until all are matured. We have a good country, good markets, good people, good millsites waiting for good men with good capital to make good money. Fruit and an abundant crop of all kinds is the prospect. We are having potatoes every meal now for ten days. Our respects to all. We should like to see you, if only on pasteboard. I am told you do not look well, which makes me sympathise with you. There is a greater interest here now than has been in years, and I hope it will increase.

S. MALONY.

NAUVOO, ILLINOIS,

June 22d, 1882.

Bro Joseph:—I have two grandsons, one four years of age past, the other six years past. The mother of these children died two years ago last April; since which time the children have been with me. The father of these boys was with us in the family some ten months after the decease of his wife; during which he joined the Church connecting himself with the Montrose Branch. On the 2d of February, 1881, he went to Missouri; has been there ever since. I was not at home when he left. At that time he agreed with my wife to send her $2 per week for the boys, besides their clothing. Up to this date he has only sent about that amount per month, and no clothes. He went away in debt to me for board,—was in debt to others. These he makes no effort to settle up. Yet at the same time last year, he informed us that he had plenty of work and at good wages. Yet he is neglecting his duty toward his children. It is now apparent to me and has been for some time, that he does not intend to do any better. Age is coming on as well as feebleness of body, and I feel that I must make some disposition of these boys, as my own require all that I can do to care for them. The father of these children really is not fit to have the oversight of them. So I have kept them longer than I would otherwise. There may be some family among the Saints who would like to take one or both or know of some good place or family who are not Saints, that could give them a home. I think it my duty to do this first, before applying to other authority; but I must do something with them and would like them to be in some good family of the Saints. Letters will reach me addressed to Nauvoo, Hancock County Illinois.

CORINTH, Ontario, June 21th, 1882.

I came to this place to day; spent a week in Carlingford. Since London District Conference, labored some there and baptized one. Conferences of both districts passed off pleasantly and I trust profitably. The Lord was with us in social and preaching services. Bro. Lake went north and east. Brn. Blakeslee and E. L. Kelley are doing good work. They were with us and rendered aid efficiently in both spiritual and temporal things of God's kingdom. We are doing the best we know how, and although infirm, yet "onward" is the watch-word. Pray for us.

Yours in Christ,
E. H. GURLEY.

JOPLIN, Missouri,

June 27th, 1882.

Joseph Smith—On my return from conference I have by no means forgotten your kindness to me, for a friend in need is a friend in deed. We are well; my health this far is much better this year than last. Never feel so well in any vocation as in preaching the everlasting restored gospel. I have delivered about twenty discourses in the last five months at different points within a radius of fifteen miles with approval of self and others generally; baptized and confirmed two, have almost daily interviews with the sects, spiritualists, Jews, sceptics, infidels and atheists. I find the odium almost entirely removed from us, since Brn. Gurley and Kelley's visit at the Capital. Yet notwithstanding our access to the honest minded is easier than formerly, yet I mourn because of the little interest taken by many; yea, very many of the Saints in these regions in this grand and glorious latter day work, and knowing too that the coming of the Lord draws near.

Your brother in the covenant of life.

C. W. SHORT.

MOON, Muskegon Co, Mich.,

June 27th, 1882.

Bro. Joseph:—I have sold my place, and am at liberty to move among the Saints. I desire to spend the rest of my days among them, if the Lord will so direct. In consideration of the darkness that covers the earth and the gross darkness the minds of the people, and the great afflictions the Lord has suffered me to live and pass through, I have failed to exercise my right to choose a helpmate. I have felt that the powers of darkness was not sufficiently overcome by the light, to enable me to enter into such a covenant with honor and safety before the Lord. I have tried to be patient under the chastening rod, but have not exercised the diligence in holding fast the lessons taught, as I wish to do. I am determined to seek Christ and his righteousness, until he will be pleased to add all things necessary for my enjoyment. It is some time since the last links in the chain of my father's family were broken; yet my loneliness does not pass away, and my heart refuses to be fully comforted, till my eyes shall see Zion gathering, and her children singing the songs of everlasting joy. As I consider the moneys in my hands as belonging to the Lord, and as I am not prepared with the gospel message to go among you, I have opened my heart more than is usual for me to do, so that my brethren and sisters may act their part toward me as the Lord may direct. I shall be glad to correspond with those that desire to see the mourning ones comforted, and Zion and her waste places built up.

Yours in search of eternal life,
M. N. COLE.

EDENVILLE, Iowa, June 28th, 1882.

We are happy to say that the brethren here voted solidly for the amendment—we thought the memorable day was fittingly observed. Our village gave a majority of forty-seven for the amendment. The branch here stands on a solid basis, and our preaching services are well attended. We feel encouraged at the prospects for the ultimate triumph of truth and justice.

Yours in love.

T. E. LLOYD.

INDEPENDENCE, MO.,

June 11th, 1882.

Bro. Joseph:—Since April conference I have been living here. This is a quiet, peaceable, sociable town. I am inclined to think that that old trickster, the Devil, is resorting to one of his ancient tricks with us; the people of the world are as ready now to accommodate or employ us as any one else. Christ says: "Beware when the world speak well of you." Do malice, envy, strife, ill contention, and controversy belong to the world? So far as I see, the world here in this town speak well of us. The Devil in his history of us from Adam to the present time, has changed his tactics to suit our surroundings. In time of peace and plenty, knowing that we do not appreciate that God given blessing, he leaves us to struggle with our own spirits; each of us to strive for the highest position in the branch, murder ourselves, &c.

Question, if I do not have family worship in my family for two years; because I do not like the officers in the branch, will said officers be cursed for my deficiency? 2d. Am I justifiable in criticising a brother's prayer, because I have seen Watson's Complete Speller, and he has been limited to Noah Webster's Old Speller? 3d. Is tobacco after being analyzed, only two poisons found in it, any better as a medicine, chewed and smoked, than it was in 1830?

I submit this to your discretion.

B. A. ATWELL.

[In reply to the questions asked in the foregoing letter we answer; without judging any persons.

1. Officers of a branch, if they do their duty conscientiously, are not responsible for the negligence of Saints in family prayer; and will not be cursed for such neglect. 2. No; no one is justified in criticising any ones earnest prayer, no matter how crude the language. 3. No. Tobacco and the effects of its use are the same now as in 1830. Some brands are badly adulterated now, to what tobacco was then]—ED.

HAMBURG, Iowa, June 19th, 1882.

Yesterday I organized a branch in Hamburg, consisting of eight members: N. Taylor, President; J. W. Calkins, Priest; D. Comstock, Teacher; W. R. Calkins, clerk; Olive Calkins, treasurer. The members were those that belonged to the Mill Creek Branch. On the 19th baptized three, making eleven. There are in the vicinity of Hamburg about twelve or fifteen members of the Church, which it is hoped will unite with the branch soon.

Goals of fire can not be concealed beneath the most sumptuous apparel, they will betray themselves with smoke and flame; nor can darling sins be long hidden beneath the most ostentatious profession, they will sooner or later discover themselves, and burn sad holes in the man's reputation. Sin needs quenching in the Savior's blood, not concealing under the garb of religion.

Never swerve in your conduct from your honest convictions, decide because you see reasons for decision, and then act because you have decided.

THE UNITED STATES IN THE LIGHT OF PROPHECY.

ITS GREATNESS CONSIDERED.

THIS nation that has sprung into existence within so short a time, and under such peculiar circumstances, has called forth a close scrutiny from the crowned heads of the world, who are watching its development with a jealous eye. It has an expanse of territory reaching from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and from the regions of the Arctic in the north to near the Torrid in the south, with a variety of climate, and a soil producing all kinds of cereals, and every known fruit. Rich in her deposits of gold, silver, copper, iron and coal. With her resources of learning within the reach of all, and her achievements in the arts and sciences unlimited, and with no religious intolerance, but an equal assurance guaranteed that all religious views will be held inviolate; with her friendly intercourse with all nations, and a pre-historic antiquity dating anterior to the Noachic age, giving us the most indubitable evidence of a nation compatible with any that has ever existed.

This great republic has been founded upon the principles of right, and justice, through the inspiration of Jehovah, and watched over as the apple of His eye, for the express purpose of making it the repository of his sacred trust, preparatory to the second coming of Jesus Christ.

God beholds and overrules all the great movements of the world. The monarchs of earth do his will while they freely do their own, because he makes them subservient to his own purpose. No stronger proof of the truth of God's word can be produced than the fulfillment of his prophecies. History being their expositors.

SOME OF THE SYMBOLS OF NATIONS NOTICED.

We shall now take a brief survey of some symbols that have been fulfilled, chiefly those found in the books of Daniel and Revelations, which have a bearing on the subject at issue. In Daniel ii, a symbol is introduced in the form of a great image. In Daniel vii, we find a lion, a bear, a leopard, and a great and a terrible nondescript. In Daniel viii, we have a ram, a he goat, and a horn, little at first, but waxing exceeding great. In Revelations xii, we have a great red dragon. In Revelations xiii, we have a blasphemous leopard beast, and a beast with two horns, like a lamb. In Revelations xvii, we have a scarlet colored beast upon which sits a woman. Some of these represent earthly governments, for so the prophecies declare.

THE IMAGE CONSIDERED.

"Thou, O King, sawest and beheld a great image. This great image, whose brightness was excellent, stood before thee; and the form thereof was terrible. This image's head was of fine gold, his breast and his arms of silver, his belly and his thighs of brass, his legs of iron, his feet part of iron and part of clay. Thou sawest till that a stone was cut out without hands, which smote the image upon the feet that were of iron and clay, and broke them to pieces.

"Then was the iron, the clay, the brass, the silver and the gold, broken to pieces together, and became like the chaff of the Summer threshing floor; and the wind carried them away and no place was found for them; and the stone that smote the image became a great mountain and filled the whole earth."—Dan. 2: 31-35.

The four parts of this great image represent four kingdoms, viz: Babylon, the head of gold; the Medo Persian, the arms and breast of silver; (these powers covered all civilized Asia); the Grecian empire, the belly and thighs of brass, embraced eastern Europe, including Russia. The Roman empire, represented by the legs of iron, occupied all western Europe, its division into eastern and western, and sub-division into ten separate kingdoms, viz: Huns, Ostrogoths, Visigoths, Franks, Vandals, Sueve, Burgundians, Heruli, and Anglo Saxons; and some of these pushing their conquest across the Atlantic Ocean claimed portions of America by right of discovery, consummating the toes. Hence, the geographical location of this image was from east to west. About the time when this great image is complete, a very noticeable affair takes place; the taking of a little stone from the mountain without hands, (human agency), that will smite the image on the feet, and roll eastward until it crush it to dust. We shall notice this image more particularly hereafter.

"Daniel spoke and said, I saw in my vision by night, and behold, the four winds of the heavens strove upon the great sea. And four great beasts came up from the sea, diverse one from another.

"The first was like a lion. * * *

"The second like a bear. * * *

"The third like a leopard. * * *

"The fourth dreadful and terrible, and strong exceedingly; * * * and it was diverse from all the other beasts that were before it; and it had ten horns.

"I considered the horns, and beheld, there came up among them another little horn, before whom there were three of the first horns plucked up by the roots; and, behold, in this horn were eyes like the eyes of a man, and a mouth speaking great things."—Dan. 7: 2-8.

The lion, represents Babylon; the bear, Medo-Persia; the leopard, Greece; and the great and terrible beast, Rome. The horn with human eyes and a mouth which appears in the second phase of the beast represents the Papacy, the red dragon the acknowledged symbol of pagan Rome, corresponding with Rev. xii:4: "And there appeared another sign in the heaven; behold a great red dragon having seven heads and ten horns." The eleventh horn of the fourth beast is identical with Rev. xiii:2: "And the beast I saw was like unto a leopard,—and the dragon gave him his power and his seat and great authority." Rev. xvii:3: "And I saw a woman sitting upon a scarlet colored beast, full of names of blasphemy, having seven heads and ten horns." This applies to Rome under Papal rule, the symbols having distinction between the civil and ecclesiastic powers, the one being represented by the beast, and the other by the woman seated thereon. And the woman being with child [administrative authority] cried, travailing in birth, and pained to be delivered. And she brought forth a man child [priesthood] who was to rule all nations with a rod of iron: [word of God]: and her child [authority] was caught up to God, and his throne."

"And there appeared another sign—a great red dragon, [Roman Pagan power], having seven heads [the seven changes of the government], and ten horns; [the ten kingdoms into which the Roman Government was divided]. And the dragon stood before the woman which was delivered, and the woman [church] fled into the wilderness, [among the people], where she had a place prepared of God. [Passed back into a state of nature].

This dragon spoken of is the Pagan Roman power that existed in the symbol of the sixth head of the beast, which power persecuted the church. The man child that the church possessed and brought forth, was the delegated authority of the church which Christ conferred upon the Apostles, and after she was divested of this priesthood, she reverted back into a state of apostacy, and continued in that condition twelve hundred and sixty years. This dragon [or Pagan Rome] claimed to have obtained this authority, and consummated a conjunction of civil and ecclesiastical powers in the days of Constantine. But no visible evidence is recognized that God accepted this subtle power that laid aside the Apostolic order and doctrines, and introduced an entire new regime; appointing fasts, canonizing saints, granting indulgencies, setting up courts of inquisitions, &c.

THE BEAST WITH SEVEN HEADS AND TEN HORNS,

Is Rome with her seven forms of government, viz: Kings, Consuls, Decemvirs, Dictators, Triumvire, Emperors, and Popes, five forms had passed in the days of the Apostles, the sixth was in power. John felt the power of the Emperor Domitian in his banishment to the lonely Isls of Patmos. Subsequent to this came Papacy; and this change was introduced by Constantine transferring his seat of empire from Rome to Constantinople, and giving Rome into the hands of the Papacy, and by this dragon act the Leopard Power (Rev. xii) came into effect by the issuing a decree by Justinian in 533, and to take effect in 538, thus constituting him the little horn that was to arise, strong and fierce and was to pluck up three horns or kingdoms, which was literally fulfilled by the Pope horn subjugating the Exarchate of Ravana, the Lombards, and the State of Rome. (See Dan. vii.) Thus establishing itself a blasphemous power, and by a heartless course against the good, was allowed to prosper for a time, times, and the dividing of time, or twelve hundred and sixty years, (Dan. vii: 25), dating its commencement from 538, and to the time Gen. Berthier moved by order of the French Government against that power, entered the Eternal City on the 15th day of February, 1798, proclaimed the establishment of the Roman Republic, disenthroned the Pope, removed him as a prisoner to Valence, France, where he died August 2d, 1799; thus ending the reign of forty and two months. (Rev. xiii: 5) And by this act of subjugation of the Papacy and his death, fulfilled that prophecy of Rev. xiii: 3: "And I saw one of his heads as it were wounded to death; and his deadly wound was healed and all the world wondered after the beast." The healing of one of the heads, (or one of the seven forms of government), which had been wounded unto death, was healed by electing another Pope in 1,800, and partially restoring him to his possessions and former privileges.

It was during the reign of this little horn, called to-day Christianity, (and from whom what is termed orthodoxy has evolved), that over fifty millions of people were sacrificed on her religious altar, because of insubordination, and to satisfy the ambitious desire of the Roman Catholic Church.

THE TWO HORNED BEAST CONSIDERED.

"And I beheld another beast coming up out of the earth, and he had two horns like a lamb and he spake as a dragon."—Rev. 13: 11.

It is presumed by some that this symbol has direct reference to the United States, but to my mind she has fulfilled no part of this symbol. This government has at no time exercised any ecclesiastical power. It did not evolve into existence lamb like, but by the force of the bayonet. It never has conceded to be dictated by any civil power, much less pandering to the morbid desire of the Papal Roman power. Spiritualism has never attained to any part of this symbol; as yet it never has effected an organization, neither decided on any basis of theology, but each and every one is allowed to exercise their own belief.

This lamb power is to combine civil with ecclesiastic, and to exercise all the power of the first beast (Pagan Rome), and causethe earth and her subjects to worship the first beast. It is to do great miracles, even to the making fire come down from heaven in the sight of the beast, and to make an image and only those who bow submissively can trade or sell, and as a token of their loyalty they shall receive a signet on their hand or forehead.

WHO IS THIS TWO HORNED BEAST?

England came forth gentle in her administrations until she assumed proportions and strength. The two horns represent the civil and ecclesiastic power. It was the established Church of England that assumed control by constituting Henry VIII the head bishop, and effecting a change through all her domains by subjugating her subjects to her ecclesiastical horn. Her chief spiritual dignitaries were those who left the Roman Catholic Church, and by virtue of the authority they held in her, they succeeded in forming a new regime, and incorporating all the principal dogmas of the old church in their litany, not forgetting the sign of the beast, (the cross). They exercised all the power of the first beast, even putting to death the obstinate, canonizing saints, appointing fasts. This she did in the sight of the beast.

After briefly noticing a few of the symbols of scripture and their fulfillment,

WE NOW SHALL CONSIDER THE UNITED STATES

In the light of prophecy.

We shall first notice the blessing conferred by Jacob upon his beloved son Joseph, and upon Joseph's sons, and then find a land that answers the description of Joseph's land, for it is through the lineage of Joseph, that God's great work is to be brought forth, when Israel is to be gathered to Jerusalem and the remnant to be gathered to Mount Zion in America.

"Joseph is a fruitful bough, even a fruitful bough by a well; whose branches run over the wall. The archers have sorely grieved him, and shot at him and hated him. But his bow abode in strength, and the arms of his hands were made strong by the hands of the mighty God of Jacob; (from thence is the Shepherd, the stone of Israel:) Even by the God of thy fathers, who shall help thee, and by the Almighty, who shall bless thee with blessings of heaven above, blessings of the deep that lieth under, blessings of the breasts, and of the womb: The blessings of thy father have prevailed above the blessings of my progenitors unto the utmost bounds of the everlasting hills; they shall be on the head of Joseph, and on the crown of the head of him that was separate from his brethren."—Gen. 49: 22-26.

Moses also blessed the twelve sons of Israel, and of Joseph he said:

"Blessed of the Lord be his land, for the precious things of heaven, for the dew, and for the deep that coucheth beneath, and for the precious fruits brought forth by the sun, and for the precious things put forth by the moon, and for the chief things of the ancient mountains, and for the precious things of the lasting hills, and for the precious things of the earth and the fullness thereof, and for the good will of him that dwelt in the bush; let the blessing come upon the head of Joseph, and upon the top of the head of him that was separated from his brethren. His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the horns of unicorns; with them he shall push the people together to the ends of the earth; and they are the ten thousands of Ephraim, and they are the thousands of Manasseh."—Deut. 33: 18-17.

These two blessings taken in conjunction, summarily considered, are these: Joseph's blessing is not only the blessing of Jacob's progenitors, (Isaac and Abraham), which was the land of Canaan, but far exceeds theirs. The land of Canaan had its boundaries established; Joseph's seed was to run over the wall, or boundaries, and not only to occupy his portion of Canaan, but to extend to the utmost bounds of the everlasting hills. His land was to be susceptible of producing every choice fruit, and the deep should couch beneath, that is to say, the underground streams with which his land should abound, viz. artesian wells, and oil wells should be designated with them, with which America abounds. And "For the chief things of the ancient mountains." His land shall possess mountains that are ancient; they shall bear marks of civilization, scarified with inscriptions by a once intelligent, and industrious race.

"For the precious things of the lasting hills." The hills and mountains are to be the repositories of the precious metals, and are to extend to the western boundary, or far off.

"The blessing of the breast and the womb." His land is to be prolific, in every sense of the word.

"And for the fullness thereof." The plan of salvation full and complete is to be had in his land.

"And for the good will of him that dwelleth in the bush." God spake to Moses from the burning bush, and gave him that authority to rescue Israel from bondage, and afterwards transmitted to his care the decalogue written by his own hand. So the inhabitants of Joseph's land are to find favor in his eyes. And as he spake to Moses, so will he speak to Joseph's seed through angelic voices, and as he wrote his law for Israel, and made Moses the recipient of this trust, so will he choose Joseph's seed to be the recipient of his oracles, for Joseph is the shepherd, or through him. "From thence is the shepherd, the stone of Israel." And the stone is to be found in his seed, (an instrument which Israel obtained of God when they were abiding his law). And in his land will be found God's law. Hosea viii: 12. "I have written to him, [Ephraim], the great things of my law, but they were counted a strange thing."

HIS LAND IS WEST FROM PALESTINE.

"They [Ephraim] shall walk after the Lord; he shall roar like a lion; when he shall roar, then the children shall tremble from the west."—Hosea 11: 10.

And Ephraim and Manasseh, "Let them grow into a multitude in the midst [or middle] of the earth."—Gen. xlviii: 22.

"And his [Ephraim's] seed shall become a multitude of nations."—25th v.

America is the only land that answers the description of Joseph's land. Many of the prophets have described a great event that would come forth on his land at about the time of the gathering of the house of Israel. David in his thirty-fifth Psalm, 9th to 13th verses, is contemplating this subject and the event that shall transpire at its introduction. "Surely his salvation is nigh them that fear him: that glory may dwell in our land. Mercy and truth are met together; righteousness and peace have kissed each other. Truth shall spring out of the earth, and righteousness shall look down from heaven. Yea, the Lord shall give that which is good; and our land shall yield her increase. Righteousness shall go before him; and shall set us in the way of his steps."

This truth that shall spring out of the earth is God's law, and at the time en with shall come forth Palestine will again be productive.

Habakkuk viewing this same great work with a prophetic eye in his second chapter, second and third verses, says:

"And the Lord answered me, and said, Write the vision, and make it plain upon tables, that he may run that readeth it. For the vision is yet for an appointed time, but at the end it shall speak and not live. Though it tarry, wait for it; because it will surely come, it will not tarry."

At this appointed time referred to, Isaiah tells us how the vision shall be presented and to whom, and the effect it shall produce.

"And the vision of all is become unto you as the words of a book that is sealed, which men deliver to one that is learned, saying, Read this, I pray thee. * * * And the book is delivered to him that is not learned, saying, Read this, I pray thee. And he sayeth, I am not learned. * * * Therefore, behold, I will proceed to do a marvelous work and a wonder."—Isa. 29:11-16.

Ezekiel xxxvii:16, 23, saw the law that God wrote to Ephraim; Hosea viii:11, 12, which history teaches is the record of Manasseh now in the hands of Ephraim, who has been for many generations mixed with the people. Ephraim who is the Lord's first born shall be first in this great latter day work. This law was united with the Bible and to become as one: "Moreover, thou Son of Man, take thee one stick, and write upon it, For Judah, and for the children of Israel his companions; [Bible]; then take another stick, and write upon it, For Joseph, the stick of Ephraim, and for all the house of Israel his companions; [Book of Mormon]. And join them one to another into one stick; [or Bible]; and they shall become one in thine hand. Behold, I will take the stick of Joseph, [Book of Mormon], which is in the hand of Ephraim [in America his land] and the tribes of Israel his fellows, and will put them with him, even with the stick of Judah, and make them one stick, and they shall be one in my hand. Behold I will take the children of Israel from among the heathen, whether they be gone [to America] and will gather them on every side, and bring them into their own land; and I will make them one nation in the land, upon the mountains of Israel; and one king shall be king to them all."

Job saw the record in the rock and only wished his testimony with it. "That they were graven with an iron pen and lead in the rock forever."—19:24.

Daniel saw an unseen hand take from the mountain a little stone (the Urim and Thummim), at the extremities of the toes, and that power commenced to evolve until it assumed the properties of a kingdom that was destined to fill the earth.

AMERICA FORETOLD.

After the great apostasy had extended over all the earth, and during this interim the Jews scattered and the land of Palestine reduced to barrenness, and the seed of Joseph in his land had shared the same fate, and their record hid up in the earth to come forth at the appointed time, the first sign of its advent to the slumbering world is

A BANNER TO BE RAISED IN AMERICA.

"Woe to the land shadowing with wings, which is beyond the rivers of Ethiopia: [Africa]:—that sendeth ambassadors by the sea, [from America], even in vessels of bulrushes upon the waters, saying, Go, ye swift messengers, to a nation scattered [Judah] and peeled, to a people terrible from their beginning. * * * All ye inhabitants of the world, * * * see ye, when he lifteth up an ensign [Book of Mormon, the ensign of the kingdom] upon the mountains; and when he bloweth a trumpet, [the gospel], hear ye. * * * In that time shall the present be brought unto the Lord of Hosts of a people scattered and peeled, * * * a nation meted out and trodden under foot, * * * to the place of the name of the Lord of Hosts, the Mount Zion."—Isa. 18:1-7.

AMERICA IS BEYOND DOUBT THE LAND.

It lies west from Ethiopia, or Africa. It is geographically located in the form of the wings of a bird; also the eagle is the emblem of this nation. Here was found a multitude of nations bearing a striking likeness in customs, traditions and worship, to the Israelites, and their antiquity dates them back anterior to Christ. The various manuscripts which have been found and translated, contain extracts from the law of Moses and the prophets. The traditions of the sages in the Oriental countries that in this land the elixir of life would be found, and strenuous efforts were put forth by some to make the discovery of the fountain; goes far to prove that inspiration directed the minds of the people to this land as the hope of Israel. Never at any period of the world's history has Scripture been so literally fulfilled, and prophecies so beautifully linked together by such striking historical evidence, as the great work of God that broke in upon the silence of midnight darkness through the person of Joseph Smith. Uneducated as he was, yet strengthened by the power of God, alone he met a world of opposition from the pulpit, press, and the prejudice of the people. He was instrumental in bringing forth the record of the seed of Joseph, and by the power of God through the Urim and Thummim, translated it; revealing the true origin of the American Indians, which in time will have corroborating evidence that will force its truths upon the people. He also brought forth and established the gospel in its fulness, with all its powers and privileges, and organized the Kingdom of God, the only divine appointment upon the earth, with every officer and gift designated in the only appointed plan of salvation, (Bible), and brought forth at the time and the place the prophets predicted, (at the feet of the image). Unscrupulous and bad men have crept into the Church of Jesus Christ, and by their wicked acts have brought disgrace upon its fair name; but ere long, the truth will shine and men will know that "there is a God in Israel, mighty to save." Talent is something, but tact is everything. Talent is serious, sober, grave and respectable; tact is all that and more too. It is not a seventh sense, but is the life of all the five. It is the open eye, the quick ear, the judging taste, the keen smell, and the lively touch; it is the interpreter of all riddles, the surmounter of all difficulties, and remover of all obstacles.

The Character of Christ of Supernatural Origin.

WHAT think you of the Christ? is an interrogation the most fundamental and all-engrossing that has ever been propounded to men. For more than eighteen centuries, it has been the most vital question among all classes. Even unbelievers can not let it alone, for they feel that their eternal well-being might depend upon a proper answer to it.

We do not understand by Supernatural, something contrary to all means; but that which is superhuman, and above the common laws of Nature. We believe that the Supernatural comes within the domain of law, but it is a higher law than any with which we are now acquainted. All Nature at first originated in the miraculous, and it is impossible for the world to get rid of the idea of miracle. In all this, however, we believe there was profound method. The mission of the Christ into this world was not without means; but it was the grandest methodical arrangement of which man can form a conception.

The Jews did not originate the character of Christ, for it was the opposite of all their preconceived ideas of the Messiah. It arose far above any conception of which the Jewish mind was capable. It could not have taken its origin among the gentiles, for it was entirely too Jewish for them. That it did not originate with the disciples of Christ is shown in the fact that even after His resurrection from among the dead, it required miraculous power to make them fully comprehend the completeness of His character. We must, therefore, conclude that the character of Christ was of Supernatural origin, and that it required the Great Artist to present to the world such an original and such a perfect picture.

The teaching of Jesus proves His divine origin. It can not be said of Him that He simply taught good things; for every thing he taught was absolutely perfect. At the conclusion of His grand sermon on the mountain, the people were astonished at His teaching; for He taught with authority, and not as their scribes. The first seven beatitudes of that sermon should convince every honest mind of the divine mission of Jesus. They refer to traits of character and to states of mind; and are paradoxical; for the world's conception of the man who is superlatively blessed has always been the opposite of what is taught in them. The doctrine was new and strange not only to the heathen world, but also to the most cultivated students of the Jewish law. The truth of all these maxims has been fully realized by all that have accepted and practiced them. They make up a perfect character.

The life of Jesus corresponded to His teaching; for He perfectly practiced what he taught. Not a man, among the keen-eyed critics, or the vilest opposers of Christianity, has been able to produce a single instance, where Jesus violated in practice what he had taught. In this Jesus stands alone; for He is the only teacher who has had a perfect practice, and the only one who has perfectly practiced what he taught. How account for this without admitting the divine authority of Jesus Christ?

The teaching and the life of Christ have stood the test of time. What has become of the philosophers who were contemporary with Jesus? With the exception of a very few they have gone into forgetfulness, to be heard of no more until the unfolding of the records of the last judgment. What has become of the great statesmen of Greece and Rome? With the exception of a few, they too have passed from the records of time, and have gone into the shades of forgetfulness. What has become of the Jewish doctors, who lived in the days of Jesus? Their names have also perished, and they have left but few foot-prints on the sands of time. The name of Jesus acquires more influence day by day: How understand this without accepting the divinity of His mission!

The admissions of those not favorable to Jesus in His day are sufficient to show that His teaching was of superhuman origin. His question to the Jews about the baptism of John silenced them, and showed that they despised the truth. They admitted that He cast out demons, and tried to explain it away. Judas, the traitor, understood all the private counsels of Jesus, and he went to the chief priests to confess that he had betrayed the innocent. The wife of Pilate and even the governor himself, pronounced Jesus innocent. After the resurrection of Christ, the guard came into the city to report, the fact, and was hired by the Jewish priests to tell an absolutely unreasonable falsehood.—Microcosm.

Representation.

Dear Herald: If you will kindly afford me space I should like to express some few thoughts on Representation. The following is a true axiom, "In ventilating thoughts truth appears," and therefore I hope truth will always guide, even to the uprooting of my notions, unless they are based upon a solid foundation.

First, a glance at voting. I am not the friend of the lifting hand system of voting; I submit to it, the practice prevailing in the Church demands my observance of it, and so it should be with every citizen, bound for the Kingdom, until the better method gain the ascendancy. My experience has taught me one fact in relation, i. e. that through the present plan of voting inequitable measures have become law. One case in point will serve—though not the only one by many—to excuse my wishing to see a change in our present system. The case: a notice of motion had been given, it was brought forward in due time; it was very unpopular, and when passed proved injurious in its operations. It passed into law with a three majority, and those three had privately spoken against the measure, so when their action in voting was called to question, their answer was, "It was not to our interest to vote with you, because so-so voted against you." Now it appears to me, dear Herald, that the ballot-box would have afforded those three, and likewise many others, the opportunity of voting in accord with expressed convictions, and that beyond the risk of damaging their present interests, as well as raising to a higher standard such a class of voters spoken against. Expense is given as a reason, by some, for their non-acceptance of the ballot; that need not be used to militate against the ballot, because pieces of white paper can be used, on which may be written, Yea, or Nay, the paper rolled up, and placed in a receptacle, by that means the object would be gained, i. e. voting incog.; tellers appointed by the president of the meeting would declare the result of the poll. I should very much like the ballot system of voting to become the general rule in the Church, but if conservatism continue to debar for a time, its introduction into Church polity, I must patiently wait, until thought, and education, shall produce the desired change. Another assigned reason against the ballot is, secret voting tends to show that bad men are members in the Church of Christ. I see no cause for wonder should that be the case, and ask, can any person prove that God's Church existed on the earth in any age when all professed members thereof were good? I think not, but I do not see wherein the ballot tends to show anything of the kind; all men do not see alike, yet they may be members of Christ's body, and therefore that which one's mind conceives to be wrong, is not so recognized by another, that is so clear in every day life that it needs not any exemplification. Such being the case persons may be equally as sincere one as another, yet widely differing in action one from the other; for instance, some evidently, firmly believe that they have a perfect right to carry by strategy any measure in opposition to another, if legitimate means fail them; others hold the contrary opinion, and contend for every measure standing or falling upon its own merits. But I am satisfied that in most instances, education will remove from the honest mind all that is out of place, and I believe that if the ballot was the system of voting in the Church, the majority of such persons would observe the law to do it, and would recognize the folly of using any other means of testing the merit, or demerit, of their expressed thoughts by motion. Others feel afraid that the divine principle of common consent would be ignored by the ballot. How so? I fail to see the possibility of such happening. The present method is only for the obtaining a majority vote, on one side or other of a question, and that is what would be gained by the ballot; therefore common consent will be perfectly safe, and equally protected by the one system as by the other. It is presumed by some that the ballot would incite voters to be hypocrites, that appears not to me a valid excuse, methinks the present system is the more likely to develop that fell quality—where it exists—than the ballot. A hypocrite is a dissembler, and if a natural one very expert in action, such an one would be likely to act in either case as best suited the present purpose of mind, but that fact does not show that the ballot is calculated to grant greater facilities for a development of the fell principle than the present method; certainly not, for instance, a person privately expresses an abhorrence to a certain scheme, but when the test time arrives and he lifts his hand to record his vote, he is found voting in favor of that scheme. Why does he do so? Not because the course he has taken accords with his feelings. No! But because it is to his present interests to do so, and seeing his recording would be known through his open voting, and knowing he must vote either for or against his interests, he chooses the former. But before it would be right to condemn or justify such an one it would be necessary to know the whole circumstances surrounding that one's life. But if that one could have voted incog, the incitement to vote contrary to his feelings would be removed, and the chances are, present interests would be secured without having to vote contrary to inclination. Methinks I hear one say, I would not vote contrary to my conscience for any cause. Hold friend, and let us consider. You may not be a child of circumstances; your brother may be, to such an extent that his life may be mainly controlled thereby, hence he would be deprived of the privilege of acting so independent as his nature would prompt him to do, while you on the contrary can be independent without injury in the least degree to you or yours, consequently the ballot would best secure your brother's interest. And here let me ask, can vote by ballot injure those who can at all times act in an independent manner? No, surely not. Then I ask such not to be perverse, and try to debar others from enjoying what to them will be a boon. It is said God would not allow one taking advantage of another, in the Church, without revealing the delinquent. In answer I point to ancient Israel in their palmist days, and call to mind those Jehovah laws given to them, which stringently forbade them to take advantage one of another; still they did so. Can we say that Israel in latter times is less prone to act contrary to divine teachings? No one will attempt to say so, I think. It therefore seems best that bulwarks be raised to prevent, if possible, injury to any part of the body politic. But we will suppose that some one had revelation convicting one of desiring to act disadvantageous to another's weal, in the direction under consideration, and the revelator makes the matter known; church litigation is the result, perhaps causing some to be severed from the Church; which would be best, I ask, to act thus, or to cause an impediment to such action, and so save an unnecessary amount of vexation? Methinks it would be wisest to rear an obstacle and prevent the result opined. Therefore the ballot is offered as the required impediment.

Representation, rightly considered, is a most important department in the government of the Church, therefore pure, and simple, representation should characterize all the priestly assemblies of the Church; that is as the writer conceives it should be, in consequence, the vox-populi theory is distasteful to him. For he does consider that individual benefits are retarded where that principle is carried out, which he believes should not be the case. For proof let us take a cardinal conference of the Church, conducted on the promiscuous style of legislation, can you conceive other than confusion, waste of time, and a show of irascibility, in such an assembly? I can not. But in a purely delegated assembly the case would evidently be the opposite, a display of prudence, thoughtfulness, and guard over temper, so important to assist in the arriving at a proper understanding of the question before the assembly. The representative system has been and still is, the favorite method of legislation, by all the thoughtful in most non-autocratic nations. Because every part of a community is cared for, which is the acme of true government. Some good men seem to be afraid that the great right of common consent would be ignored were delegates only allowed to debate and vote in Conference. I think a little reflection will show the contrary. Note: A church or branch meet, they discuss their local business, they appoint their delegate to watch over their interests in district conferences. Is that not done by common consent? To be sure it is, the same branch, through the very delegate chosen from its own body, chooses at the district conference a delegate, or delegates, as the case may be, to the cardinal conference, the very same branch is therefore represented in the cardinal conference through no other channel than common consent. And thus is very clearly shown, the writer thinks, that pure and simple delegation as sole business agents in conference, is the true perpetuation of common consent. Now let us see how the vox populi principle might act in the case. The district, by majority, declares its veto, regarding some particular measure to be discussed at the cardinal conference; the delegates are instructed to remember that the measure would be detrimental to the interests of the district, and that therefore they must not be party to the passing of that measure, now, the minority in the district are the only non-official members who attend conference, but suppose they make up a majority in conference in voting the passing of that measure decided by a majority vote in district conference to be contrary to the interests of the district, would not that act entirely destroy the right and privilege of the delegates, and the majority in district? Yes? Therefore of what use is it to appoint delegates at all? None that I can see. The writer would not close any meeting from non-official members, because he thinks that all such attending would be benefitted much; but he would plead for pure representation—through delegation—to obtain in every priestly council of the church, because he believes that outside the primary organizations—branches—of the Church true legislation can only be carried on by its adoption.

Trusting for the best, I remain, dear reader,
Yours in truth,

ENGLAND, May 4th, 1882.

Grumblers.

UNHAPPY souls! Public torments! The sun shines on them in vain; they only see clouds and feel cold winds. Blessings are poured into their laps to no purpose; they only think of desired things they lack. Virtues shine in their neighbors unseen; faults are discovered in every feature; a virtue seldom mentioned without a deprecating "but." Greet them on a glorious winter morning, with congratulations over its brightness, and they will growl back, "We shall get our pay for it;" speak of the noble conduct of Mr. D, and—"Y-e-s, but he had no good purpose in the act," will be flung into your face. Is any one charged with evil? They believe before they fairly hear; suspicion is taken for certainty; scandal accepted for fact; virtue subjected to discount; a stain presumed on every character; evil motives insinuated when none are apparent. A cloud hangs over their spirits; bitterness drops from their tongue; there is discord within, and chafing without. These absorb no comfort, but emit perpetual discomfort most burdensome to companionship. The good recoil from their society, are annoyed by their bitterness, disturbed by their grumbling, offended by their injustice, grieved by their miseries, and discouraged over perpetual failures to infuse sunshine into their experience.

"Adam Sinned That Man Might Be."

I DON'T know where the passage is, but have heard it made use of very often; and I am not sure but I have heard Elders in the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints quote it. I am satisfied some argue in favor of it. I am at a loss to account for the belief of that doctrine in any one. You can not call me a heretic, for I believe in God, his Son Jesus Christ, and the Holy Ghost; also in faith, repentance, baptism, laying on of hands, the resurrection of the dead, and eternal judgment; so that I am no heretic. But I have a way of telling some things that may call forth the word heresy. And my thoughts on the fall of Adam, and the consequences of that fall, are at variance with a vast number of so called Christians.

Did God intend that Adam should sin in order that he might manifest his love the better, by providing a Lamb for the slaughter, for the redemption of man. Could God not have raised up a spiritual or a holy people without the sin of Adam, and at the same time manifest his love, his glory, and his power. I believe he could. I also believe it was his purpose; but God's purposes have been frustrated many, many times, by the creature he formed. The old argument, that God foreknew that man would sin, is worn out with me. I believe God knows all his works from the beginning; but there are thousands of things occurring every day, that are not God's, nor has he anything to do with them. But Adam was his workmanship. So was the woman. He talked with them, gave them his law to govern them in their new home; permitted them the use of the garden with every privilege of using and eating of all the trees in the garden but one. That one he forbade them touching under a severe penalty, no less than death itself; whether temporal, or spiritual, or both, we shall not stop to argue; suffice it to say they did eat of the tree, (forbidden), and lost their place in the garden. Now, I believe that they did eat of the tree of life before the sin; and were in a condition never to taste of death. That the tree of life was a portion of their food before the sin; but the tree of knowledge of good and evil was not. And after the sin the tree of life was forbidden them, was guarded by a flaming sword, lest they should put forth their hands and eat, and live forever. If they ate of it before, it was for prolonging life; but after their disobedience, the boon was denied. They were sinners, had broken a sacred command, and of their own free will brought the sorrow on themselves and their posterity. After the sin, and just before they were driven out, the Lord came into the garden and called for Adam. He hid from the Lord, or supposed he was out of his sight. His eyes were opened; both were naked, and they were ashamed. Sin had developed shame. Holiness never will, for it is a stranger to shame. Children, prattling babes are not ashamed when naked. God asked them who told them they were naked. He asked them if they had eaten of the tree forbidden. The man accused the woman, the woman accused the serpent, the serpent could accuse no one. Their excuse availed nothing. God said, Because thou hast done this. And to the woman, Because thou hast done this, in sorrow thou shalt conceive; virtually telling them, that had they remained loyal, kept themselves from sin, they should have produced offspring pure as they were. If any one says, Nay, I only have to say this, that God must have been dependent upon sin and could not bring about a single purpose without the aid of sin. The word, because, implies that God was able and willing, and had planned the earth's purposes according to his own will for the good of man and beast. The tree of life was there; no restrictions made with regard to it; only after the sin was it forbidden and guarded. The moment God said to them they should die, they became mortal; that is after they sinned. Don't be impatient with me, dear reader. I have thought many times, and have seen it in holy writ, that God can not look upon sin with the least degree of allowance. How, then, could he act as our orthodox friends profess to believe, tell Adam not to sin, but all the while intend that he should, for the purpose of showing his power and this love. "Adam sinned that man might be;" John Wesley said so; it must be true. But the Bible nowhere tells it.

I gather from the Old and New Testament scriptures, that God sent his Son to redeem them (mankind) from sin, and reinstate them in their former positions; that is, the position Adam was in before the fall. Did any one ever hear of a mechanic making a piece of machinery for the sole purpose of knocking it to pieces, that he might build it again to show his handiwork. (I guess not). Neither do I believe that God made man in his image, and ordained him to sin that he might sacrifice his son to redeem him, in order to show his love and mercy. John Wesley says that had man not sinned we should never know, or have known the great love of God and Christ. Then it looks to me like this, that God suffered Satan to rebel in heaven that he might cause men to sin; thereby bringing about an occasion for a sacrifice for sin, or the glory of God would never be known. Such is the outcome of the doctrine of the sin of Adam being necessary that man might be. I believe that God's glory can not be diminished. It is an impossibility. He is the same, yesterday, to day and forever. I believe that men come short of the glory of God by acts of sin. But not so with God himself. That a sacrifice was needed after sin entered into the world I believe; but that God decreed the like for the purpose of showing to man his love, I never can, until God by his Spirit tells me it is true. It is said again, that all that are born into the world are born in sin, in consequence of Adam's sin. If this is so, and God is said to be the one that joins all good men and women in wedlock, what God joined together let no man put asunder. Then most assuredly, if children born of such are born in sin, the one joining them is the cause of the sin. I do not believe the sin of Adam is attached to them. The effect may be, but the sin itself can not be. Christ is my voucher. In the case of the man born blind, the apostles asked him if the man or his parents had sinned that he was born blind. Christ answered, neither the man nor his parents had sinned, abolishing the theory of being born in sin. Eve said at the birth of a son, I have gotten a man from the Lord. (And a sinner at that). Such nonsense as is palmed off on the world of mankind makes one sick. The question is asked nearly every Sabbath, of the scholars, small children of course, Who made you? The answer is, God; if the child does not know, the teacher or the preacher answers for it. And in the next breath they tell the child that it was born in sin. And yet God made it, thus making God the author of sin, the cause of all the strife the world ever witnessed; wars, that have well nigh drenched the entire earth in blood. I can not attribute such things to God. I do believe that God could have and intended to have a pure people; but the devil operated against him, and man having the power, the will either to obey or reject then as now, God left him to choose. He chose the bad and suffered for it, causing an atonement to be made. God said to the serpent, "Because thou hast done this, I will put enmity between thy seed and the seed of the woman." Does it not look as though harmony was intended instead of discord. The word because is used three times, showing conclusively to my mind at least, that Adam was spiritual and was in a condition to live forever before the sin. God said before the sin, "Be fruitful and multiply," not after the fall. Not a word about multiplying. Finally, was John born in sin? (Baptist) No man will dare say our Savior was conceived or born in sin. Then could not God have raised sons and daughters pure and holy, and yet as in other cases manifested his power and glory. I believe he could. I believe his pleasure has been thwarted on earth by the work of Satan, to a great extent; but his glory is the same, all powerful, all-wise, benevolent, kind even to the wicked; sending rain on all alike, giving the good things of earth to saint and sinner; but never having anything to do with the creation of sin.

Your brother in Christ,

T. F. STAFFORD.

There seem to be some persons the favorites of fortune and darlings of nature, who are born cheerful. It is no superfluous visibility, but a bountiful and beneficent soul that sparkles in their eyes and smiles on their lips. Their inborn geniality amounts to genius—the rare and difficult genius which creates sweet and wholesome character and radiates cheer.

When gold and silver dwell in the heart, faith, hope and love, dwell out of doors.

IN THE article on the Godhead from Brn. Malmstrom and Burt in Herald of June 15th. They say that many of the Saints believe that God the Father, and God the Son, have bodies of flesh and bones. They say He appeared as a body of flesh and blood to Jared's brother. See Book of Ether, in Book of Mormon, chap. 1, part 8. And ask the question, "Was he then a body of flesh and blood at the time when he appeared to Jared's brother. If they will read on the next page of the Book of Ether, they will find an answer to the question "Behold, this body which you now behold is the body of my spirit, and man is created after the body of my spirit; and even as I appear unto thee to be in spirit, will I appear to my people in the flesh." They also bring up a number of passages of scripture to prove that there is only one God revealed to men to worship; that the Son is the body, and the Father is the Spirit. If they will study Fifth Lecture on Faith, they will find that the Father and the Son are glorious personages of Spirit, and that the Godhead consists of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost. In Gen. 1:2-7: "I am the beginning and the end; the Almighty God. By mine only begotten I created these things. And my spirit moved upon the face of the water, for I am God."

Here we have three powers doing a work in unity, as one God.

Verse 27: "And I, God, said to mine Only Begotten, which was with me from the beginning, Let us make man in our image, after our likeness; and it was so."

This shows that they, the Father and the Son, are two personages.

In Matt. 3:45, 46, we find Jesus being baptized by John and the Holy Spirit in the form of a dove, and a voice from heaven. Here we have again the three great powers of the Godhead, at one and the same time, all three acting their own part. Heb. 1:6: "When he brought his first begotten into the world he saith, And let all the angels of God worship him." John 5:23, "That all men should honor the Son even as they honor the Father. He who honoreth not the Son, honoreth not the Father who hath sent him.

The Holy Ghost being one of the Godhead, is called God in the Scriptures, as well as the Father and the Son. God, the Father, and God, the Son, can not be everywhere present, but God, the Holy Spirit, is omnipresent; it extends through all space. All the innumerable phenomena of universal nature are produced in their origin by the actual presence of this all-wise, intelligent, and all-powerful substance. It is the most active matter in the universe, producing all its operations according to fixed and definite laws, enacted by itself in conjunction with the Father and the Son. What are called the laws of nature are the fixed methods by which this spiritual matter operates. Each atom of the Holy Spirit is intelligent, and like all other matter, has solidity, form, and size, and occupies space. Our brethren reason from false premises, which can not be defended by revelation nor reason. All the passages of revelation they bring up to show who God the Father is, are passages which relate to the work of the Holy Spirit who always carries out the will of the Father and the Son. Psalm 139:7-10: "Whither shall I go from thy spirit, or flee from thy presence." It is plain that it is the Spirit of God that is everywhere present, and not his individual person. The word, they give us to understand is something that proceeds from him that is omnipotent and not himself.

Jesus Christ in John's gospel, speaking of the Comforter, said he would send it to them from the Father. It is the spirit that proceedeth from the Father that was in them, and not the Father from which it proceeds. If we admit that the Father is a personage of spirit, consisting of parts united in a body; and that Jesus Christ's body before his incarnation was a spiritual body and was with the Father in the beginning, when God said, "Let us make man in our likeness and in our image," not after his moral image, but after the image of his person. There is no such thing as moral image. Morality is a property of some being or substance; a property can never have figure, shape, or image of any kind. The spiritual bodies of all men were in the likeness of the spiritual body of Christ, when they were first created. When Jesus Christ was born into our world he was made flesh; and when he arose again, the same flesh, the same bones were reanimated by the same spirit. This glorious body of flesh and bones and spirit ascended into heaven, to dwell in the presence of the glorious personage of the Father, of whose express image and likeness he was the most perfect pattern. Orson Pratt says, "If then, both of these glorious personages are about the size of man, they must, like man, occupy a finite space of but a few cubic feet in dimensions; and according to the admitted truths of philosophy no substance can be in two, or more places at the same time; therefore neither the Father, nor the Son can consistently with those truths, be in two places at one and the same time.

"Revealed truths never will contradict any other truths. The revealed truth inform us that God is everywhere sustaining and upholding all things, and that in him we live and move and have our being. How can these important truths of divine revelation be reconciled with other admitted truths of philosophy which are equally certain. They can be reconciled in no way only by admitting the omnipresence of the Holy Spirit.

"This all powerful, intelligent substance extends throughout the material universe, uniting and mingling with all other matter in a greater or less degree, not filling all space, for then there would be no room for other matter, but like the rays of light or heat existing in different degrees of density in different parts of space. By it all things are governed in the most perfect order and wisdom, according to the will of the Father and the Son.

"This view of the subject does not necessarily do away with a personal spirit acting in conjunction with the other two persons of the Godhead; for myriads of personal spirits could be organized out of the inexhaustible quantities which exist, and still an abundance would be left to govern and control the various departments of the universe, when those personages could not always be present."

That different parts of the spirit can assume different shapes is evident from its appearing as a dove at one time, and as tongues of fire, and as a ball of fire in the Temple at Kirtland. There is no more inconsistency in one part of the Holy Spirit existing in the form of a person than there is in another part existing in the form of a dove, or other parts existing in the form of cloven tongues of fire.

May we all gain a fulness of the truth through Christ.

Be Cheerful.

WHAT the gentle shower is to the parched earth, and what sunshine is to earth's creature, cheerfulness is to the human soul. It is a luxury in which all may indulge, and none can afford to do without; and is one of those things in the use of which the height of extravagance is the most frugal economy. Though one of the "pearls of great price," rich or poor, patrician or plebeian (if there is any such distinction) may have it, and its purchase does not diminish the wealth of the purchaser. Indeed he who buys gives in exchange only that which would be an injury to him to keep. Those who have may freely impart to others, and their store will not be diminished, but rather be enhanced; like the burning candle that lights a thousand others, yet loses none of its brilliancy.

It is a fact that some people are more highly endowed with this happy propensity than others. Inheritance may, and doubtless does have something to do with this, but we think in the main it is a matter of cultivation. He who always searches for the dark side of the picture, is sure to find it, while its true light and beauty are obscure to him. Those who are always borrowing trouble have no trouble in finding those who have to lend. Upon the other hand, there are few events or circumstances in life in which a bright side may not be found if sought for. The darkest cloud sometimes possesses some rare beauty; and often its silvery lining reflects the radiance of the ever shining sun behind it.

Life has many stern, solemn realities, and presents some difficult problems, but as we deal with them, the constant cultivation of cheerfulness will be found a precious healing balm for the soul, and an actual remover of many obstacles. When cheerfulness accompanies labor, the most difficult tasks become easy, and even sometimes a pleasure. With it, mountains of trouble become mole hills; without it mole hills become mountains.

Cheerfulness is closely allied with hope, and always contemplates a brighter beyond. Is not superficial in its conception, but regards life as a grand whole. To those who are cheerful in disposition, that which seems an insuperable difficulty to others, is but a trivial affair to them. If we have a true conception of this present life, we shall expect to meet difficulties, sorrows, and trials; and any other view than this, serves to unfit us for meeting them when they come. He who fane would pluck roses, must anticipate the occasional sting of a thorn. Perhaps your happiness is not as dependent upon every thing going just as you would desire, as you suppose. Learn to do well, and submit cheerfully to the inevitable. The child that cries for the moon doubtless thinks its happiness depends upon its wish being gratified; perhaps our desires sometimes in reality are as erroneous. Happiness does not depend so much on what we obtain as how we obtain it, and how well we appreciate it when possessed. A well balanced mind, a true conception of life, a generous appreciation of our fellow creatures, and a mammoth, loving heart, the great essentials to a cheerful disposition. It is impossible for one who is constantly seeking to contribute to the happiness of others, to be subject to protracted spells of the "blues." A true philanthropist is seldom troubled with this mental disease. It attacks often those who forget others but never lose sight of the wants of self.

Before giving consent of your mind to become cross and ill-natured, remember it will destroy your own happiness, and think of the influence you may have upon all with whom you associate. Reverse the situation, and think how different your feelings have been upon meeting a cheerful, whole souled man or woman, than when coming in contact with those to the reverse. The presence of the former was like the sunshine after a shower, while communion with the latter was like the chilly disagreeable blasts of dreary winter. None can afford to be otherwise than kind and cheerful. A pleasant smile, an encouraging word, or sympathy expressed in any way, are gifts we can well afford to bestow each day and hour of our lives, and they will serve to strew the path of others with the fragrant flowers of virtue and happiness.

We should not be partial in our selection of those whom we would make happy, but make it a study to harm none and do good to and encourage all, whether they be rich or poor, great or small. Unfortunately we meet a few people in the world whose dispositions seem to be completely "soured." They have no kind word for any one. Apparently the fire of human sympathy and love, if it ever existed in their hearts, has entirely died out. The prattle of a child they hate; the loveliest song of a bird has no charm for them; they see no beauty in the choicest of flowers; they find fault with every enterprise in which others hope to do good, but never suggest anything better. Encouragement to others seem foreign to their natures. Their thoughts have worn down into a little narrow channel wherein a ray of light seldom ever shines. As the mariner feels the chilly effects of the iceberg in oceans, so the presence of those unfortunate individuals emit an influence blighting to all the better and higher hopes of humanity. Again we meet those in life whose very presence imparts peace and encouragement. If in trouble, you feel that if they can not aid you otherwise, you have their sympathy and best wishes, you feel the genial warmth of true kind heartedness glowing in their heart; your better nature is developed, and the purer emotions of the soul are stirred.

To cultivate cheerfulness, we must encourage hope, based upon right principles. These are: to believe in God reverently, seek to know his will, abide his just law, and trust him for happiness.

The Habit of Reading.

"I have no time to read," is the common complaint, and especially of women whose occupations are such as to prevent continuous book perusal. They seem to think, because they can not devote as much attention to books as they are compelled to devote to their avocations, that they can not read anything. But this is a great mistake. It isn't the book we finish at a sitting which always does us the most good. Those we devour in the odd moments, half a dozen pages at a time, often give more satisfaction, and are more thoroughly digested, than those we make a particular effort to read. The men who have made their mark in the world have generally been the men who have in boyhood formed the habit of reading at every available moment, whether for five minutes or for five hours.

It is the habit of reading, rather than the time at our command, that helps us on the road to learning. Many of the most cultivated persons, whose names have been famous as students, have given only two or three hours a day to their books. If we make use of spare minutes in the midst of our work, and read a little, if but a page or a paragraph, we shall find our brains quickened and our toil lightened by just so much increased satisfaction as the book gives us. Nothing helps along the monotonous daily round so much as fresh and striking thoughts, to be considered while our hands are busy. A new idea from a new volume is like oil which reduces the friction of the machinery of life. What we remember from brief glimpses into books often serves as a stimulus to action, and becomes one of the most precious deposits in the treasury of our recollection. All knowledge is made up of small parts, which would seem insignificant in themselves, but which, taken together, are valuable weapons for the mind and substantial armor for the soul. "Read anything continuously," says Dr. Johnson, "and you will be learned." The odd minutes which we are inclined to waste, if carefully availed of for instruction, will, in the long run, make golden hours and golden days that we shall be ever thankful for.

A New Theory About Food.

A GERMAN physician has started a new theory with regard to food. He maintains that both the vegetarians and the meat eaters are on the wrong track. Vegetables are not more wholesome than meat nor meat than vegetables, and nothing is gained by consuming a compound of both. Whatever nutritive qualities they may possess, he says, are destroyed in a great measure, and often by the process of cooking. All food should be eaten raw. If this practice were adopted there would be little or no illness among human beings. They would live their apportioned time and simply fade away, like animals in a wild state, from old age. Let those affected with gout, rheumatism, and indigestion, try for a time the effect of a simple, uncooked diet, such as oysters and fruit for instance, and they will find all medicine unnecessary and such a rapid improvement of their health that they will forswear all cooked articles of food at once and forever. Intemperance would also, it is urged, no longer be the curse of civilized communities. The yearning for drink is caused by the unnatural abstraction from what are termed "solids" of the aqueous element they contain—uncooked beef, for example, containing from 70 to 80 per cent., and some vegetables even a larger proportion of water. There would be less thirst, and consequently less desire to drink if our food were consumed in its natural state without first being subjected to the action of fire.

Saints' Herald.

JOSEPH SMITH, EDITOR.

Lamoni, Iowa, August 1, 1882.

For a number of years a number of those who accepted the claim of Mr. James J. Strang to the leadership of the Church, based upon the letter which it is said that he received from Joseph Smith before his death, and who have failed to recognize the position assumed by the Reorganization, have been busily presenting to us on all possible occasions, the claim of Mr. Strang, and urging against us the great wickedness and enormous wrong we were doing in not accepting their views; stating that we were willfully and purposely ignoring the plainest principles of evidence in refusing to accept; and that we were depriving the Saints of floods of light and worlds of spiritual power, and that sooner or later some one would arise from those who remained faithful to Mr. Strang and successfully restore Israel to the faith. Some of the same parties have, no doubt, been urging the sons of Mr. Strang, able and intelligent men, to call the faithful together and revive the kingdom. One of the sons, living at Lansing, Michigan, has written us a communication for the HERALD, and a letter requesting its publication. The letter we give below, as our warrant for publishing the article which will be found elsewhere in our columns. We call attention to both the letter and article:

"LANSING, Mich., July 18th, 1882.

"Pres. Joseph Smith; Dear Sir:—Will you oblige me by giving the enclosed communication a place in the Herald?"

"I have been urged many years to undertake a revival of the 'kingdom,' but I can not do it, and this communication is intended to satisfy all those who have a lingering faith in Strang, and have been looking to me to do this work. One or two in particular have been very persistent in urging me to 'do something' in defense of Strang and his kingdom. Perhaps you can guess who, but I better mention no names."

CHAS. J. STRANG.

The view taken of the "Letter of Appointment" by Mr. Charles J. Strang, is perhaps entirely correct. That Joseph and Hyrum, were about the time of the alleged date of said letter engaged in appointing persons to labor and build up branches and stakes, in different States, is a matter of fact; and it is entirely within the range of probability that recognizing the capabilities of Mr. James J. Strang, the appointment to build up at Voree was made. And it is very natural that they should have added the postscript, which Mr. Charles Strang thinks to be so significant of the proposition to build up at Voree, and so fatal to the claim made for the Beaver Island project. This view has occurred, or been presented to us before, but never having heard of this tell-tale postscript, the possible deductions drawn by him from its consideration were not suggested.

We accept the view as probably the correct one; and there can be no doubt, that had Mr. Strang continued in affinity with the faith and body under which he received his appointment, and at Voree, he and the Saints who gathered to that place, would have been prospered; and it is not at all improbable but what there might have been the rallying point whence the Reorganization would have made head against the evils that crept into the Church.

Of the other conclusions of Mr. Charles Strang, as stated in his article, we at present express no opinion. He has certainly taken a positive position, and one that will expose him to severe criticism, and possibly censure from some friends of his father, and professed friends to himself; but we commend him for the frank and serious manner in which he has stated his view; and we trust that honor and integrity which he evidently prizes will enable him to abide with even temper the abuse of whilom friends, who will profess to see in his article the tokens of a betrayal of his birthright, treachery to his father and apostasy from the faith. We have borne all of that from the professed friends of Joseph Smith and the latter day work, and can foresee to some extent what Mr. Strang will have to bear.

We hope further that some of those who were and have been so urgent in the pressing of Mr. James J. Strang's claims upon us and his successors, will see that the "sons of the prophets" may have better views concerning the work of their fathers, and their duties as sons, than may those who have assumed to dictate though neither the mantle nor the spirit of the prophets fell upon them.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

MARY ANN ANGELL, only "legal wife" of President Brigham Young, died at Salt Lake, Utah, June 27th, 1882, after years of sickness, sorrow and suffering. She was born June 8th, 1803, was married at Kirtland, in 1834. She bore to Pres. Young, Joseph A., deceased; Brigham and Mary A., (twins), the latter deceased; Alice Y. Clawson, deceased; Luna Y. Thatcher, and John W. She was a faithful wife, and may find now the peace denied her here.

There are in Kansas a number of those who were with William Bickerton, at West Elizabeth, Pennsylvania, and in Kansas, who, not satisfied with their present standing wish to be visited. It will be well for the brethren who have charge of that part to visit them. Enquire for Solomon Vamliou and Abashia Risk, at Spring Creek, Post Office, Chuataqua county, Kansas.

Bro. Josiah Ells writes us from Warnock, Ohio, July 4th, and from his letter we gather that he is still engaged in the Master's work. His writing is clear and strong, showing no diminution of mental force and vigor, and the penmanship shows not the trembling of age. May he remain vigorous and strong for years to come, is the prayer of Israel for him. He states that Bro. Hiram Robinson is active and baptized two July 3rd.

Bro. J. A. Stewart, of Philadelphia, wrote a card July 11th, from Baltimore, Maryland, where he had just gone to visit some old time Saints. He will report the result of his visit.

Bro. Joseph R. Lambert was at Chattanooga, Tennessee, July 15th, and was trying to secure a house there in which to speak.

Bro. A. J. Hinkle, a son of George M. Hinkle, whom the Saints know from the history of the old church, with nine others, some of whom were affiliated with the Sidney Rigdon and Stephen Post association, and now living at Green Ridge, Manitoba, have decided to unite with the Reorganized Church, and are only waiting for some one to visit them. We received a letter from Bro. Hinkle, July 10th, making known their decision, and asking for an Elder. Will it be possible for Bro. Wm. H. Kelley to send a considerate man up there soon.

Bro. John S. Patterson has removed from Kewanee, Henry county, Illinois, to Sandwich, DeKalb county, the same state; and his address hereafter will be the latter place. The Northern Illinois District has gained a good gospeler, and Sandwich a good citizen. Bro. Patterson is a live Elder, a consistent and plain teacher of the Truth of God.

Bro. W. W. Blair writes with good courage from Salt Lake, and was about starting for the north to be gone till September. He says: "I am highly pleased to see you are to build a church at Lamoni." It is expected that work on the church will begin soon. Rock and sand for foundation walls are being hauled, and excavating for walls is begun.

By letter dated July 14th, we learn that at that time Bro. H. A. Stebbins, of Lamoni, was at Sandwich, Illinois. He had been at Pecatonica preaching, and had baptized some, how many he does not say.

The following is from a Mt. Ayr, Ringgold county, Iowa, paper we believe, and was handed to us by Bro. Wildermuth at a recent visit to the office: "The Mormon lecture last Friday evening by Elders Wildermuth and Springer, was pronounced very able and interesting by those who were in attendance, but owing to the bad weather, few were out to hear them. They went from here to Redding, and Grant City, where they will hold a series of lectures. They belong to the anti-polygamy Church of Latter Day Saints; of which there is a strong following in Decatur county, where their headquarters are situated."

It is estimated that six hundred people were in attendance upon the Sunday services of the Galland's Grove district conference at its last session.

Letters from Bro. Robert Gould, London, Ontario; Joel Edmunds, Sunol Glen, California; and through him one from Bro. D. S. Seavy of Tennant's Harbor, Maine; S. P. Sherrill, Cook's Point, Texas; J. B. Porter, Three Rivers, Mississippi; W. H. Kelley, Coldwater, Michigan; E. H. Gurley, Walsingham Centre, Ontario; Willard J. Smith, East Tawas, Michigan; Wm. Anderson, Oakland, California; John Carmichael, San Benito, California; David Brown, Papeti, Tahiti, Society Islands; Sr. S. H. Gaiter, Burlington, Iowa; Bro. Edward Hubbard, Moselle, Missouri; D. R. Evans, Chauncy, Ohio; Sr. Carrie Nutt, Shelby, Iowa; Bro. Josiah Ells, Warnock, Ohio; Sr. E. A. Hannam, Forester, Michigan; Bro. W. Vickery, Plano, Illinois; R. Ferris, Oakland, California, and E. C. Brown, Fonda, Iowa; Jannet Pearson, Corinth, Ontario; M. N. Cole, Moon, Michigan; G. T. Griffith, Fall River, Mass.; all of which are left over for want of space. No offense is intended by leaving any out; and we do the best we can in choosing those that are inserted.

To the Saints who may wish to use them, we will furnish the Epitome, and the tract called "What is Truth," with the Decision of the Ohio Court upon the back of them, at the following rates: 100 for 25c.; 250 for 50c.; 500 for $1, and 1000 for $1.75. A similar reduction will be made in all our tracts at an early day.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Is it right for us who claim to be Saints of God to condemn a man when he tells us that he was healed from sickness by the prayer of faith? Is it right that we should tell him he was healed by the evil one, and that gift is only for them who belong to the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints?

We can only answer that we do not consider such conduct wise, noble, or right.

A question concerning the parable of the ten virgins. Has the midnight cry been made yet? We understand the Reorganization is that cry, especially your first general epistle to the Church.

We have never issued what we understood at the time to be the midnight cry, referred to in the parable named. In some respects, that is, the condition of the Church and the circumstances surrounding the Saints at the time of the Reorganization, there is a striking similarity to the condition of things named in the parable; and we have heard Elders on the subject who made it look quite reasonable, but we have not knowledge that it is a correct rendering of it.

Is it right for Saints to travel by rail upon Sundays? Is it not upholding railroad companies in running trains on that day?

Yes, if necessary. Yes.

Is it a proper calling where an officer is called to a higher office through a sister?

Yes, if the presiding officer is satisfied of the correctness of the spirit by which the call is made.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. Donaldson wrote June 27th, from River-ton, Iowa:

"Bro. Milton Dougherty will commence a series of meetings here next Saturday. We think he can do good here. On his last visit here he baptized Sr. Mary I. Zimmerman and Sarah Comstock."

Bro. Edward DeLong, writes from Reese, Michigan, June 21st, after returning from laboring at Vassar:

"The result of my labor in Vassar thus far, is this: I spoke seven times and last Tuesday evening I baptized four. I am to go there again Thursday, and if the Lord permits me, I shall stay there as long as the interest keeps up. There are four or five Saints besides those just baptized, and we expect soon more will be added. To this end we labor and pray. I wish the Church to understand that I am willing to labor all that circumstances will permit; and if I am never permitted to take the field free, I am not going to get jealous over the matter, and throw it up, for I do not covet silver or gold. I am looking for my reward at the last day, when justice will be meted to all. So let us not be idle."

Bro. J. T. Phillips, of Renick, Randolph county, Missouri, June 19th, says:

"Our branch is in pretty good standing at present. We have splendid meetings every time we meet. I baptized one on the 12th of this month; his name is Thomas Clift, a man of a good promise. I never felt any better in my life than I did when I confirmed him, and I believe there is good prospect of more to be baptized soon."

Bro. Joseph Brown, of Davis City, Decatur county, Iowa, writes:

"My mother is now in her eighty-fifth year, her strength is fast declining, and before crossing the waters of separation she wishes to inform her friends and acquaintances, that read the Herald, that she is still firm in the faith that she embraced fifty years ago. She united with the Church in an early day, and has shared in its joys and sorrows until now; during which time testimonies upon testimony have accumulated, which furnish satisfactory evidence that the work is of God. She received an evidence of the divine call and ministration of Joseph, the restoration of the gospel, and the truthfulness of the Book of Mormon in an open vision, in midday, before entering into covenant with God, and after complying with the mandates of heaven, all doubt and fears of the future have been dispelled. The Herald and Hope are constant and welcome visitors with us; the spiritual strength and nourishment they afford are to us like the nourishing dew to the tender blade. May their columns never grow less."

Sr. Clara C. Smith, writes from Sioux Rapids, Iowa:

"I think we have reason to be proud of our township; (Poland). There was not a single vote cast against the prohibition Amendment. No place could do better, they might cast more votes, because there might be more to vote."

That is good enough. No township could do better. Fayette Township, Lamoni, did well, giving 139 for the amendment, and 34 against it, a majority for of 105. The county gave 200 majority for it, 105 of which came from Fayette.

Bro. Blair writes July 15th:

"I look to see thorough work done by our nation in Utah affairs, for the next few years, and our Church should be well represented in this field. I expect to go to north Utah and to Montana soon, as it is now haying and harvesting in Utah, and we can do but little except in towns and cities on Sundays. May be gone eight weeks."

Bro. F. R. Tubb writes from Hackney, London, England:

"We continue to receive blessed and holy gifts from the Most High; both in meetings and in solitude, inasmuch as we abide by the covenants and commandments of the Lord. I received last night a vision of a lighthouse standing unmoved in the midst of a dark and turbulent ocean, and although the waters immediately surrounding the lighthouse was so dark that it appeared to be full of some black liquid, and rose mountains high, yet the light from the lantern at the top of the lighthouse shed a strong and steady arc of light for a great distance in the air, and on the heaving waters as far as my eye could reach.

"After this disappeared I beheld a very old lamp, so rusty that I could not discern of what metal it was made, and of a pattern dug up from the ruin of Nineveh, and now exhibited in the British Museum; yet it shed such a light as I have never before seen even in the best examples of modern constructure. Will some one, (guided by the Spirit), kindly give the meaning, &c., of these two visions."

Bring up your children to joy. Give them just as much as they can take without intoxication and without reaction. If you take too much of any one essential you cheat some other. equipoise of the various elements of our being is what we want.

If BURNS had lived and been fortunate enough to become a "reorganizer," he would not have written the lines:

"O would some power the giftie gie us,
To see ourselves as others see us;
It would from many a blunder free us,
And foolish notion."

Read the following and see what a terrible fellow the editor of the HERALD must be, as stated by Lars Peterson, in the last July number of the Sword of Justice:

CONSTITUTION, AND THE REORGANIZER.

"The Doctrine and Covenants speaking of the Constitution, says:

"The Laws and Constitution of the people which I the Lord have suffered to be established, and should be maintained for the rights and protection of all flesh, according to just and Holy principles. That every man may act in doctrine and principle pertaining to futurity according to their moral agency which I have given unto them, [Utah Mormons not excepted], that every man may be accountable for his own sins in the day of judgment."—98 sec., given 1833.

"It would hardly be reasonable to suppose, that in opposition to this revelation, Joseph Smith the reorganizer went to Chicago for the sole purpose of destroying Polygamy. The destruction of Polygamy was not his only object.

"Cain did not murder his brother Abel because his offering was accepted. No! that was only the excuse; the real cause was, he was tempted by his brother Abel's flocks, saying, surely the flocks of my brother falleth into my hands.

"Therefore the voice of Joseph Smith in the Chicago meeting must have been for another purpose than to destroy the laws of the land which are constitutional, that guarantee freedom and equal rights to all mankind according to their moral agency. But the secret of the matter is, like Cain, he was tempted because of the flocks of his brother Brigham, or Taylor. He thought, could he only get Polygamy annihilated, that surely the flocks of my brother falleth into my hands; and the good tithing payers of Utah that have made Brigham and the twelve millionaires and fortunes would certainly come to me, and I would be rich and happy and my twelve would be more successful in executing the law of tithing—according to his pretended revelation appended to Doctrine and Covenants, dated Oct. 7th, 1861.

"It would be well to add, he has not been very successful in the tithing business among the few apostates that have flocked to his banner.

"Cain gloried in his wickedness but for a short time."

Correspondence.

LANSING, Michigan,

July 18th, 1882.

Editor Herald:—Concerning James J. Strang's claim as successor to Joseph Smith, which is urged from time to time by certain of the faithful, permit me to give through your paper a brief statement of the matter as it looks to me.

Some time ago I was permitted to see what purported to be the original letter of appointment, and there is written below the signature a postscript which is not given in any printed copy of the letter I ever saw. I carefully compared the whole letter with the copy printed in The Diamond, a gospel tract, and found it a true copy except the postscript, which was as follows: "P. S.—Write me soon and keep me advised of your progress from time to time." Without this the letter may be easily construed to mean just what was claimed for it, but this, it seems to me, puts the whole matter in a different light. In the very first sentence of the letter I would understand that Strang had written to Smith "proposing the planting a stake of Zion in Wisconsin;" and this letter was a reply to that proposal. And it is equally clear to me that Smith would not have made a request for reports of progress from time to time if he had known he was going to be martyred and the appointment was not to go into effect until his death.

The point I wish to make is this: Strang was appointed just as the letter reads as a whole, to establish a "stake of Zion," or a branch of the main church, to which he was subject and must make report, and with his death or removal that branch would be without a head until a new one could be appointed by the president of the central or mother church. But Smith's death occurring so suddenly, and before the letter had been made public, gave Strang an opportunity, which he was shrewd enough to grasp, to undertake to lead the whole church. How well he succeeded is a matter of history.

His removal from Voree was one of the primary causes of his fall, for in the words of the vision, "there shall my people have peace and rest, and shall not be moved." So far as I have been able to learn the history of the church at Voree, before any other scheme was advanced, it had peace, and rest, and prosperity. But with the removal to Beaver Island, Strang and his followers passed from the dominion of primitive Mormonism into a little kingdom of their own, and thereby Strang became supreme ruler of the whole kingdom, instead of head of simply a branch.

Bearing indirectly on this subject is another item of some importance. In 1846, at Voree, Strang pronounced a curse upon certain ministers, a portion of which I here quote: "As for those who, as gospel ministers, have assumed to teach such damning, soul-destroying doctrines, (that deceit, fraud, lying, perjury, plundering unbelievers, polygamy, fornication and adultery are required by the command of God in the upbuilding of his kingdom), in the name of God and the Lord Jesus Christ, may their bones rot in the living tomb of their flesh; may their flesh generate from its own corruptions a loathesome life for others; may their blood swarm a leprous life of motelike ghastly corruption, feeding on flowing life, generating chilling agues and burning fevers. * * * And I prayed unto God, saying, Oh, God, curse them not, and let me not raise my voice against my fellows. But he said, Curse, curse, curse! I will altogether curse, until they return to me, for they have perverted my law and deceived my servants; unto the Destroyer shalt thou deliver them, for their prayer is sin."

Yet later on Strang fell under this very curse, — in the matter of polygamy if nothing else.

Permit me also to say in this connection that all that has been said to his credit as a shrewd, intelligent, capable man, can be multiplied a hundred times without flattery, for all who knew him personally have only the highest praise of his extraordinary ability, and his perseverance and success in whatever he undertook to accomplish. The press notices published in your paper for June 1st could be multiplied a many times without exhausting the number or quality.

LAWRENCE, Michigan,

June 30th, 1882.

Dear Herald:—Having an intense interest in ennobling work you are advocating, we would, if possible, contribute something for your encouragement, also, for your patrons. We yet feel that we are "one" with you, in all the leading principles and facts of the great work of these last days, and consequently are still striving to do what we can under the circumstances, to move the cause onward. To us the omens of success to the progress of truth never seemed brighter than during the last few months. Many circumstances and events seem to conspire to encourage us to renewed effort to strive more faithfully to work and to overcome.

The failure of many in these last days, who have assumed to extraordinary divine callings and missions, and whose claims do not accord to the way pointed out in the prophecies and the doctrines of the divinely accepted standard, as compared with the success of those who have adhered to "the law and the testimony," encourage us to still cling to the rod of iron that leads to the tree of life. Surely deliverance is with the "remnant as the Lord hath said."

The extensive publication of our religious position as a church, in contrast with that of the people of Utah, through the agitation of the polygamy question, together with the fact that delegates appointed by the Reorganization, represented the moral influence of the Reorganized Church at the National Legislature, and in conjunction with it, against the evils of those in apostasy, and the consequent recognition of the genuine faith, by the public, places in front the fact, that the Reorganization has done more to remove polygamy from the land so far, than any other church in the United States, and this is another source of encouragement.

The further fact the journals of our country are granting us the "redress" so long sought through their columns, ought to encourage us all to move on in the glorious cause. Along with these facts is a growing desire to hear the preaching of the word, and a spirit of toleration is increasing among the people to that extent that comparing the present with the past, the times seem changed. This was very noticeable in Southern Indiana during our visit to that part of the field, extending from the latter part of February to May 10th. Nearly every body in the vicinities visited seemed willing to give us a respectable hearing, and the newspapers freely announced our meetings, and favorably commented, regarding the faith, etc. Many new places where people would not hear, invited us to preach among them the word of life.

It was with considerable pride, that, after having been to the Ohio River, at the city of New Albany, on the afternoon of Easter Sunday last, and having baptized eight persons into the fold, walked up into the city, at the head of a delegation of Saints, marching along in double file, some fifteen in length, where formerly scarcely any one would hear the faith declaimed. While there we also visited the Union and Hall's Ridge Branches, and found most of them strong in the faith, and as Bro. Rector expressed it, willing to go on in the work when all things were in order, which of course indicated that some things in the district need setting in order. We did not despair of the success of the work while there, but were made strong in the faith, that a good work can be done there by a persistent labor, (as elsewhere), and by acting according to "the law and the testimony." Good attendance, with much liberty characterized the most of our meetings in Southern Indiana. Visiting among the home folks was very pleasant, and rambling among the hills and by the rippling brooklets of years ago, after an absence of nearly five years, brought afresh to the mind reminiscences of childhood, mingled with thoughts of pleasantness, picturing scenes now gone, never more to return.

On the 15th of May I met in discussion, on the Sabbath Question. Elder John Branch, of the Church of Christ, section of the Seventh Day Adventists, whose head quarters are at Marion, Iowa. Our debate was held two miles north-west of Hartford, Michigan, continuing four evenings, and was well attended; the school house, though large, was crowded to its utmost each evening. The burden of his efforts being to show that the Ten Commandments, as recorded in Exodus 20, literally are binding on Christians of the Christian dispensation. We argued a "change of the law" — the one not "abolished," and the inauguration of a higher, more perfect law, one that not only forbid the overt commitment of sin, but one that condemns as sin the inception of evil in the heart, that "converts the soul." That in the "change" wrought, the excellencies of the former law were incorporated into the latter—the higher. We are informed that the discussion did good, that the people of that place wish to hear more.

I was enabled to be in attendance at the conference of the Michigan District, held May 27th, with the Saints of the Mill Creek Branch, Lapeer county. The session was limited to two days; the school house in which it was held, being in use at the time, and although it rained most of the time the attendance was as large (of Saints) if not larger than any one we have been privileged to attend in the district.

Business was transacted in the best of feeling, unity characterized the entire session, and we need but mention the fact that Brethren W. H. and E. L. Kelley did the main part of the preaching to insure that that department lacked nothing to render it interesting, instructive and edifying. The brethren decided that one General Conference a year was sufficient, but we are not so sure but they were a "little bit" hasty. We'll see.

Conference concluding, in company with Brethren Kelley, we moved on east, visiting the Union and Maple Valley Branches, holding business and preaching meetings, doing whatever seemed best at the time, to instruct the Saints and build them up in the faith. We are thankful for the very kind manner in which the Saints of this region received our efforts. But, dear Herald, it made us feel sad to find that the many calls to respond to, caused us to hasten on from point to point, and leave large and anxious audiences, who came teeming out to hear the word of life, hungry therefor, and unsatisfied. And the above will serve to illustrate the labor and condition of things clear on to the lake—Huron.

I had forgotten to mention that Bro. Blakeslee was in attendance at the conference, and gave timely instructions respecting the manner of proceeding to fulfill the temporal duties of the Saints in lawfully sustaining the work, and was duly appreciated by them.

Many good devoted Saints are living in Sanilac county and vicinity, whose aid to the work in the past, is commendable, and will evidently be appreciated by Brn. Cornish and Davis, as well as others who have done a good work there. Of the condition of those in the burned district, I need not write, as this has been investigated. We feel the importance of praying the Lord of the harvest to send more laborers into the vineyard, and more fully, by our recent experiences in this part of the mission. We did what we could during our stay, for the cause, but it seemed "but a drop in the bucket."

Much more might be written that would be of interest to your readers, but I fear the liberty we have now laken will make the editor or some body else twice glad or altogether sorry.

I remain yours for truth,

C. SCOTT.

Bro. Joseph:—Just returned from a visit to the Delana Branch. Found these Saints alive in the good work. Met with them on Sabbath in their well finished and furnished church, at 9:30 o'clock, in Sabbath School, which we found to be well attended, and a deep interest in it. Bro. M. F. Beebe holds a steady reign as superintendent, and is heartily supported by the school. May prosperity attend them and all others who are taking an interest in the proper education of the rising generation. As a church we should take a deeper interest in the Sabbath School cause. It matters not if it is of sectarians origin, it is a great work and should be heartily supported; for as we once read in an editorial, it is "better to be sectarian and right than non-sectarian and wrong." At eleven o'clock we spoke to the Saints with good liberty and were built up by God's Spirit.

Next Sabbath we are expecting to have a basket meeting near town, at which Brn. M. H. Forscutt and T. W. Smith are to speak. Notice has been given both in the paper and by bills. This branch is in good condition, enjoying the Spirit. Bro. W. H. Kelley (not the Apostle) has lately located here, and is at work wielding the hammer with a determination to succeed that should characterize all Saints, especially those moving into the (se) regions. Bro. T. W. Smith is doing some good preaching for us on the Sabbath. There seems to be a desire on the part of the Elders to "push out" and warn the country round about, at the school houses through the country. The work would get out into the country more; travel from district to district, and not in a fitting sense, but remaining as long as there can be accomplished any good, traveling from branch to branch, spending labor, or perhaps only time in localities where there is local laborers sufficient to attend and to and prosecute the work.

The work in this district is in fair condition under the care of Bro. J. T. Kinnaman, who is ably filling the place. Our town is fast rebuilding after the dreadful calamity which befell it. The new town when completed will be much better than the burned one was, but is costing time and money.

Yours for truth,

JOHN M. TERRY.

Bro. Joseph Smith:—I am sorry to day, and feel downcast; and have been ever since I read the letter of Bro. W. H. Kelley in Herald of July 1st. My case is misunderstood and misrepresented by him. I kept laboring in the ministry as long as I possibly could, and left it to my sorrow and regret. I considered well the importance of the work, and did not leave until my store-keeper presented me with my store bill of $38 and said he wanted it, as he was making all his accounts; and my clothes ragged and torn, and I was owing about $25 or $30 at the Herald Office which I knew must all be paid; and I had nothing to pay it with, and most of the brethren unable to pay it. I was now and then hearing from my wife; the tale was the food was scarce, and that she with three little ones had not the necessary clothing for the cold, coming winter. I felt myself duty bound to go to work. And as a matter of course I turned my hand to what I thought would pay me best, and with the assistance of one or two good hearted ones I started the saw-mill spoken of. I would have tried it longer; but just then, seeing the resolution passed at General Conference that the Twelve and Seventy were to first be kept in the field, &c. I was aware that there was not enough to do it, and hence looked for no more support from the Bishop. I never did any begging for money, or clothes from the Saints, nor never hinted had boots and shoes, &c. unless when asked; and I feel sure I never acted the "tramp" unless in my last round with the Saints, when I made the statement here before mentioned; and asked what to do. They all talked, "sorrow" to see me leave the field; and many said, "Better go to work." Bro. Kelley states that "the people" say that I was well cared for. Now there is nearly one hundred Saints around here, all or nearly so, the fruits of my labor; and I do not think ten of that number will say so, but to the reverse. He also states: "the Elder says, his wife had to live on potatoes and salt, or bread and water." I "never" made the statement; yet there was a time that we neither had potatoes, nor bread, but lived on corn meal. And the statement I made to him was that we only had corn meal at times.

Bro. Joseph, I have tried hard for nearly five years to labor, I spent all I had. When I started I had some money and a well furnished house. The money went, and finally, in order to still keep out, I sold off all the furniture, and spent that in the ministry; whilst Bro. Harney, then of London, now of Kansas, kept my family. Then, when clothing was needed I went to work again, got a little ahead, then out in the field again, &c., until I found I did neither justice to my family, nor the ministry. So I went into the mill with a desire to accomplish something, and by and by go into the ministry and let my business self support me, which I think can be done. The statement of my being about on the same basis as when I started, is not like I told him face to face. Why will he not believe me? I ought to know. He never knew me to tell a lie. Yet the parties from whom he received his information were proven to lie to him; and followed him up very closely; (as many of the Saints said) for fear that he would be told the true facts in the case, &c. The statement of my doing little, or nothing in the ministry is hard for me to bear. I am but young and have not had the experience that Bro. Kelley has; but his letter did not strengthen me. Now I have baptized nearly four hundred into the Church; and since they say I have been idle and done little or nothing, I have preached much, both among the Saints, and in new places, and baptized perhaps as many as Bro. Kelley has, and without asking a dollar from the Church to do so. I have cleared about $100 since the fire by my mill; and believe that things will yet work out for my good, and that soon, I will be able to keep out and the mill be self supporting. Bro. Kelley states that he thinks the Church will support me if I will go out, and that I had better try as soon as conveniently to sell and go out, &c. Now I state, as I stated then, if the Church will agree to support myself and family; I will advertise the mill for sale, sell it and go right out, as I know I have been called to preach the gospel, and have received the spirit of the calling, and feel it now. I preach nearly every Sunday, some place, and baptize some occasionally. Several of the brethren from the different branches came here on the Fourth. We had preaching and fellowship meetings, baptized one, and enjoyed ourselves well. I am still in the faith of the gospel; and may God hasten the time when my voice may daily be heard again in the vineyard of the Lord is my prayer.

Dear Readers of the Herald:—I have not written for the Herald for so long, I expect the most of you have forgotten me, and some others are wondering what has become of me. I am still firm in the faith of the Latter Day Saints, or in other words, in the gospel of Jesus. I have passed through many terrible conflicts with the various cares of this life since last you heard from me. A mortgage took my farm in Sumner county, this State; and I was compelled to come west into the great American Desert to seek for a home. I have been here nearly five years, and have made but little progress in a temporal point of view, and less in a spiritual one. I have not been able to preach much on account of the fact the people have not been willing to listen to me. Nevertheless I have preached in two places in this county, in two places in Reno county, and in one place in Stafford county. In the absence of any other minister I was severely questioned, and finally as a last resort was called upon to preach a funeral sermon for an Advent lady. The result was excellent, as much prejudice was thus destroyed. If any Saints in adjoining counties see this, and desire to have me preach for them let them write to me and I will do all in my power to assist them.

Saints everywhere, pray for me and my family. I will write again soon. I am as ever a laborer in Christ's vineyard,

J. S. WEEKS.

INDEPENDENCE, Jackson Co., Mo.,

July 14th, 1882.

Dear Herald:—After writing for your columns I spent the time at Clear Water and home, until June 15th, visiting and preaching a few times. On June 11th my brother, Charles A., the youngest of the family and the last to unite with the Church, was baptized by Bro. Hyrum O. Smith.

The night of June 15th I arrived at Dow City, Iowa, and the next day walked out to Bro. Petts and remained until Sunday the 18th, when Bro. P. took me to Galland's Grove, where I remained until the 21st, speaking four times, and enjoying my visit very much.

The night of the 22d I spoke at Dow City, and the next morning was again on my way. At Council Bluffs changed cars and on towards Nebraska City. At McPaul, Brn. J. R. Badham and E. C. Brand got on the train, the first bound for Shanandoah—home, the last for Nebraska City. Both seemed to be in good spirits, and it is needless to say strong in the faith. Arriving in Nebraska City we had the pleasure of hearing Bro. Brand discourse. The next morning Bro. B. departed westward bound. I remained in the City till the 27th, and while there preached three times. I enjoyed myself there. I always do—who could help it. The night of the 27th I tarried with Bro. E. T. Dobson in St. Joseph. The next day after visiting Bro. Mark and others I sped on to Atchison, and thence rode with Mr. Chick to Good Intent, and had a short visit with old friends, and preached once.

July 1st, I arrived here and met Bro. Luff, who, it will be remembered, was appointed as my associate laborer in South-western Mission. His circumstances are much different from what they were at conference; and it seemed he would reluctantly have to fail to go. However, after consultation he concluded to go as far as Indian Territory and labor awhile if I would wait until the 17th, which I am now doing as patiently as possible. I have preached twice in Independence, twice in Wyandotte, and once in Kansas City. We fully intend to be off on the 17th, and will go directly to Vinita, Indian Territory, and labor there for a while, when Bro. Luff will need to return, and I will proceed to other parts of the mission. Circumstances have detained Bro. Montague, so he is yet at home, but will probably join us before we leave the Territory.

Bro. Cato is doing a good work. He writes me of baptizing eleven and organizing a branch near Paige, Texas. He seems in earnest, and others speak well of his labor. May God bless him. I am very anxious to be in my field of labor. Rest seems sweet sometimes; and yet we can not enjoy much of it unless the church will relieve us of responsibility. Many are the hardships and privations which a traveling Elder must endure; and it is hard, hard indeed, to preach this gospel; but it is much harder not to preach it.

More soon, from the sunny south.

MOUNT VERNON, Grant Co., Oregon,

Brother Joseph:—The Saints are in good spirits and strong in the faith. When Bro. J. C. Clapp and Father Buckingham left here we were disorganized; but have since organized; F. N. Fields president; and we hope to keep up our organization. We have eleven members, but our organization is not confirmed yet, I suppose through a mistake of ours in sending the papers to Bro. J. C. Clapp, and he in Idaho.

Your brother in the same faith,

R. FIELDS.

LONDON, Ont., July 17th, 1882.

Dear Brother:—Bro. McIntosh and I have been in this branch for some time, and have put forth an effort to set the branch in better order. They have a full grade of officers: Bro. Herrington, Pres; Richard Evans, Priest; Pugsley, Teacher; Geo. Hanly, Deacon. I hope they will get along better. Bro. McIntosh has gone to Picton to baptize a man there. Bro. McIntosh has been writing to him for some time, and he wrote for Mc. to come. It is a new place and Bro. McIntosh expects to open up the work there, if the people will hear the gospel. I received a letter from Bro. Gurley a few days ago. He was at Walsingham to preach in the Town Hall. He thought there was some almost persuaded. I have not heard from Brethren Hicklin and Deuel. I hope they are doing well. I expect to come to the Fall Conference. The conference of this London District elected me president of the district, and appointed me their delegate to the conference. I find Bro. McIntosh an able defender of the gospel. I hope he will keep humble and faithful. For two Sabbath evenings, since I have been here, I have preached in the Public Park. Hundreds of the citizens present, there was good order, and I enjoyed good liberty of the Spirit. The mayor of the city was present last evening, and expressed himself in the presence of some of the brethren, well pleased with what he had heard. I hope the heaven will work in the minds and hearts of the people. Remember us when it's well with you.

Love to you and yours, and friends in the office. From your brother and friend in the bonds of the one faith.

J. H. LAKE.

MAGNOLIA, IOWA,

July 6th, 1882.

Dear Herald.—Knowing the deep interest your readers take in the labors and travels of the ministry, I feel it my duty to give an outline of mine. I have labored in Little Sioux District in various parts, from this up to the Minnesota and Iowa line; and at Grand Prairie and Little Rock in Minnesota, also in Galland's Grove District, in various branches, and some in Northern Nebraska and Central Nebraska Districts. In accordance with requests made I have attended the several quarterly conferences of said districts, and have had good opportunity to judge of the condition of the work there. In some places I see signs of improvement and progression; in others I see but little, but rather a retrograde movement if any at all. (I mean among the Saints). I do not feel it to be my duty to localize or individualize these conditions, hence I speak of the facts in a general way, feeling assured that none will feel hurt but those who are hit, and I desire not to strike at any, but rather to aid the weak and guide the erring. I need not say that where I find improvement and progress. I find a lively faith, diligence, and unity of spirit and purpose, and where I find retrogression or backwardness, there I find a looseness of morals and manners, and lack of faith and a consequent lack of appreciation of the things committed to our trust as well as of the blessings promised. I have tried to cheer the faithful and to warn the negligent; and at the same time to aid them to see the glorious promises of reward, that they may be inspired with a desire to obtain, and a determination to labor for such reward. I trust my labors are not all in vain. In fact, I am satisfied they are appreciated by some, if not all. It would be a miracle to me, if the Saints were not more or less affected by the influences that surround them. We are only human, and we were found in darkness, and to a greater or less extent, depraved by the corruptions of the world. It requires time and labor, even under a proper realization of our state and the true sense of what is required of us, to overcome our natures and bring them subject to all the requirements of the gospel. The Lord knew this when he said, "To him that overcometh will I give to inherit all things, and he shall be my son and I will be his God." Hence he promised a reward that would be, at least, equal to the greatness of the task. I know by experience the greatness of the task to some extent, but I shall not know it fully until, through his grace, I have fully overcome. May God aid us to conquer and cast out every evil of our natures, that we may all be clothed upon with the graces of the gospel.

I sometimes fear that many enter the church without a sufficient knowledge of the nature of the solemn covenant they make with God, or else have not fully given themselves to his service; can it be possible that as ministers of the gospel we are so anxious to appear as successful laborers that we crowd men and women into the Church without that preparation God demands from them? That we are building "wood, hay and stubble" into the sacred building, instead of "gold, silver and precious stones?" If it is a name we are laboring for, we may obtain it, but it will be an empty bubble, and will sink into shame and oblivion, and we shall have forfeited the right to "shine as the stars in the firmament," and if we are saved at all "it will be so as by fire." Mere baptisms will not make men and women

"heirs of God and joint heirs with Jesus Christ." There must be the preparations of the heart by a lively faith in God and his Christ, a downright forsaking of our sins, and determination to obey all the commands of God, looking beyond the watery element "to Jesus the author and the finisher of our faith," and thus leading a new life, leaving all the old things behind and pressing on to the virtues, joys, excellencies and blessings that are before, thus enduring to the end we shall obtain the crown of life.

The eye of the preacher must be single to the glory of God. Our good name and popularity must be the least consideration in our hearts. Neither the love of gold, nor the desire for fame must actuate us. We have no right to modify the gospel of Christ to suit the minds of men. Here lay the secret of the apostasy in ages gone, and the result is seen in ages of darkness and superstition. "Woe to us if we preach not the gospel!" Or if we "Shun to declare the whole counsel of God." If we toady to the liberalism of the age we are traitors to God's cause and to humanity. The pure gospel is the only truly liberal system under heaven. It is high enough, deep enough, and broad enough for all; all may be partakers of its blessings. I am not authorized to say that all will, but I am authorized to say that all may, and that freely. It demands no sinking of our manhood, no forfeiture of our liberty; it is no galling yoke, no crushing burden. Christ was true when he said, "My yoke is easy and my burden is light." The gospel proposes to exalt our manhood and raise it to the glory of God. It proposes to burst every fetter and plant us firmly in the liberty of God! It is for us to say whether it shall do this or not "For this eternal truth is given, that God will force no man to heaven."

With respect to the world, a fearful apathy prevails, especially in cities. In rural districts we get better attention, but this is owing, in a measure to the lack of amusements in the latter, while in the former there is everything that can pander to the taste and amusement of the masses; besides the worship of the almighty dollar. Our ministers have as good audiences generally as do those of other churches, and the general conclusion is, among the unfettered, that if there is any truth it is with us; but it is a hard matter to awaken a proper interest in their minds in regard to the truth. In many of the Saints there is an abiding faith in the gospel; a little more zeal would be commendable. The signs of the times strike terror to the popular heart; every little cloud is watched with anxiety; every flash of lightning brings dismay, and every unusual gust of wind leads the people to "hunt their holes," or cellars, in dread foreboding, and yet they know not that "The fig tree is putting forth its leaves," and "The kingdom of God is near at hand." I saw a little cyclone in Butler county, Nebraska, a few days ago, as I sat in Columbus; men climbed the houses to watch its progress and others held themselves in readiness to go into their cellars; but how many thought of taking refuge in the gospel of Christ? It was in vain to tell them that that was one of the testimonies that God was bearing of his truth and of his work in the last days. "It was a phenomenon of nature, nothing more." Yes! It was a phenomenon of nature, and God will use these phenomena to give emphasis to his word and work.

May we as the children of God understand and be ready, "That that day may not overtake us as a thief in the night," is the prayer of

CHARLES DERRY.

GALLAND'S GROVE DISTRICT.

This conference was held at North Coon Branch, Carroll county, Iowa, June 9th, 10th and 11th, 1882. W. Whiting, presiding; John Pett, clerk.

Branch Reports.—Gallands Grove 227; received by vote 1, removed by letter 4. North Coon 20; died 1. Coalville 15; removed by letter 3. Union 58. Pilot Creek 17.

Elders J. A. McIntosh, E. C. Brown, J. Allen, F. Rudd, D. Butterick, C. Butterworth, I. Goff, W. A. Carroll, D. Delivergne, J. Hawley, E. Clothier, B. Salisbury, W. Whiting and John Pett, reported in person; and J. W. Chatburn, by proxy. Priest C. J. Carlson by letter; and Teachers D. Hain and G. Salisbury, in person.

The committee appointed to ascertain the boundary lines of the district reported as follows: If the Galland's Grove District claims all the territory not belonging to surrounding districts, your district extends south to Pottawattamie, Cass and Adair counties. On the west your district runs to the old Harrison county line, which runs six miles east from the west line of Crawford and Ida counties until it comes to the north tier of townships of Ida, when the same line runs about eight miles from the east line of Ida county, and the same distance from the east line of Cherokee, Obrien and Osceola counties, on the east your district extends to the east line of Guthrie, Boone, and Grundy counties. This is as far north as we are able to trace the line on the east. Bro. I. N. White, president of the Des Moines District, thinks it would be better for all if their district could have Boone and Hamilton counties, to which we call your attention. We believe it would be better if the division line between Little Sioux District and your district was the county lines between Crawford and Monona counties, and so on north. We would therefore respectfully recommend your honorable body to appoint a committee to confer with the authorities of the Little Sioux and Des Moines Districts, so as to have a perfect understanding with them, and then petition the General Conference to so establish your boundary lines. Joseph R. Lambert, Charles Butterworth, committee.

The report was accepted, the recommendations adopted, and the committee discharged.

Brn. John Pett and C. E. Butterworth were appointed a committee to confer with the presidents of the Des Moines and Little Sioux Districts, in order to carry out the foregoing recommendations.

BORN.

HARTNELL.—At Davison, Michigan, June 27th, 1882, to Bro. Thomas and Sr. Sarah Hartnell, a daughter; all doing well.

MARRIED.

BRANNAN—STREET.—At the home of the bride's parents, Denver, Colorado, on Thursday evening, June 29th, 1882, Mr. John Brannan to Sr. Ella Street, by Elder James Caffall.

God made man and woman to love,
And as husband and wife, remain pure as the dove,—
To leave father, mother, and friends,
And their love each other to lend,
Not a love that with a day shall pass,
But that which through checkered scenes shall last;
Love that brightens as each year shall pass by;
Love that makes better and purer, when they die;
May then this now happy couple see
That their joy and peace more solid shall be.
As down life's short stream they go,
That the life unseem to them more solid joys shall show. J. C.

DIED.

MORRELL.—Thomas, eldest son of Bro. and Sister William and Mary Morrell, was born January 16th, 1861, died June 24th, 1882, being crushed to death in a coal mine by the falling of a mass of rock displaced by an accident knocking away the prop that upheld the roof of the mine. He leaves behind a father, mother, seven brothers and sisters, and a host of relatives. Deceased never heard the gospel as taught by us, but occasionally attended the Primitive Methodist Church; this being the case, and the many relatives desired to have the Primitive Methodist Minister officiate, the services were so conducted by Rev. W. A. Willison at the house. Had the weather been fine, I believe it would have been the largest funeral ever held in Streator, as he was well respected by all that knew him. Blessed are they that mourn, for they shall be comforted."

MARTIN.—In view of the distressing circumstances under which the natural life of Sr. Pluma Martin, (formerly Pluma Alexander), became extinct, in justice to her sainted memory, her bereaved husband, her mother, sisters, brother, and for the satisfaction of her numerous acquaintances and friends, in Missouri, Colorado, Southern California, and particularly in Iowa, I, by special request of her husband, pen for publication the following.

Shortly after their location in Independence, Missouri, deceased was afflicted with catarrh, and other bodily ailments, for which one of the most skillful medical men told Mr. Martin that the only probable cure for his wife was a change of climate, and suggested Colorado or California. They disposed of their business and moved to the former place, and subsequently to California, and from thence back to Colorado, at Jefferson Creek, Park county. But their travel, outlay of money, etc., seemed abortive; the disease became more threatening, though the external appearance of our sister, to those ignorant of the nature of her disease, failed to excite sympathy or create apprehension. On the morning of the 18th inst., (Sunday, June, 1882), Mr. Martin, after a short absence, returned to his house about noon, and saw his wife quietly sleeping, as he thought, with her head on the table. Often finding her in a similar position, no apprehension was felt; but after speaking to her and meeting no response, greater efforts were made to arouse her. Alas! Too true; unmistakable evidence appeared that her own hand had used the deadly weapon, a revolver, that sent the fatal shot to her vitals. She was dead; the instrument of death by her side. In close proximity was a sweet babe of ten months playing, and throwing its innocent smiles in the face of its agitated and distressed father as he gazed upon the lifeless form of its mother; her flesh yet warm, eyes closed, heart and pulse still, her lips bearing a pleasant smile, as if to say, "Husband, momentary insanity brought this sad spectacle to your gaze."

Mr. Martin wishes mother, brothers and sisters, and Saints, to know that he does not entertain the slightest idea that his wife did the fatal deed while her mental faculties were unimpaired. Besides catarrh, deceased had suffered from erysipelas in the head, which often caused the most acute and distressing pain. She would frequently ask her husband to place his hand on her forehead, where he would find a scorching heat, which she would describe as if there was a scraping inside her head; and then say, "I fear this will sometime reach my brain." This, together with other peculiarities recently developed, though not much noticed at the time, but now taken into account; together with the fact to which her husband testified that, the thought of suicide to her was always terrible, that she looked upon it as the most damning crime known; that she thought too much of her religion; held too much respect for her aged mother, brothers and sisters, and her husband and babes, ever to, in her proper mind, commit so terrible a deed, for which she has often said she believed there was no forgiveness. Still further, of late, deceased became despondent, and frequently told her husband how much money her sickness had cost and that instead of a help she was a drawback to him. These things now are only so many evidences of the non-responsibility on the part of his wife for the fatal blow. The writer believes that the bereaved husband is entitled to the sympathy of the world in his present affliction. And though not a member of the Church, there is good reason to believe that he ever proved an indulgent, kind, Bishop's Agent's Report.—On hand and received since last report, March 3d, $56. Paid out $22. Balance $24. District Treasurer's report: Cash on hand $6 50. John Pett, Agent and Treasurer.

A series of two days meetings were appointed. Bro. Jonas W. Chatburn was sustained as president of the district, with Brn. W. Whiting and Beman Salisbury as his assistants.

All the spiritual and temporal authorities of the Church were sustained in righteousness.

On Sunday morning, a prayer and testimony meeting was held, and many of the brethren and sisters bore encouraging testimonies to the truth of the work and the goodness of God. In the forenoon and in the afternoon Charles Derry preached in the grove to congregations consisting of several hundred people; an unusual degree of attention and interest was manifested, and good was evidently accomplished. In the evening Bro. E. Clothier preached at the Hiron's school house, which was filled to overflowing. Peace and harmony prevailed and the Saints returned to their homes blessed and encouraged.

Adjourned to meet at Galland's Grove, September 9th, 1882, in the forenoon.

Elder J. E. Betts was elected president of the St. Louis District Conference for the ensuing six months, by an unanimous vote, who nominated Elders W. Anderson and R. D. Cottam as his counselors; J. G. Smith was elected district clerk; J. S. Parrish was elected assistant clerk.

Preaching in the evening by Henry Roberts and W. Still.

Adjourned to meet in the Saints' Hall, Saint Louis, Missouri, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon, on the first Saturday in October, (7th), 1882, and on Sunday, October 8th, 1882, at 10 o'clock in the morning.

For every benefit or delight we receive we must confer something in return. No one can go through life a perpetual debtor.

and considerate husband, and spared neither money, labor nor attention to promote her happiness. Of her reputation where she was known, 'tis needless to speak, for nothing I could say would add to it, as a sister in the Church. And while her virtues are known, it is also known that her intellectual abilities were more than ordinary.

Her remains reached Hutchinson, after being conveyed a distance of forty miles, on Tuesday, 20th inst., at 11 a. m. The report and notice had been so sudden and short that it was late before the Saints and friends came together to participate in the funeral ceremonies, which took place at the Saints' house of worship in a quiet and solemn manner. At the close Mr. Martin placed himself at the head of the casket holding the dead form, and in a tremulous and subdued tone, in substance said, that his wife had proved to him the best of women; she thought the world of her religion, and would have died for it, or so he believed. He hoped that none would do her the injustice to think her responsible for her death,—here the noble man gave way to emotion, but his words were fitly spoken, and greatly increased the solemnity of the occasion, and caused the tears of sorrowing friends to flow more freely. Her body was conveyed to, and laid in the place she desired in the event of her falling in Colorado. Deceased has battled with the ills, vicissitudes and changes of mortality about forty years. The last few years of her life have been years of bitter suffering, in a manner that her external appearance failed to testify of. She now rests, doubtless in peace.

Rest on in peace, thou child of sorrow,
These we hope to meet, on the glad morrow;
When Christ the Savior will appear
And bring the grand sabbatic year.

JAMES CAFFALL.

And we'll soon come, dear Willie, to thee.

For two days before his death he was engaged in prayer, and bearing his testimony to those around him. He was loved by all who knew him. The funeral discourse was by Bro. John McMillen. Brother Weir leaves a wife and five children to mourn his loss.

SMITH—At Davis City, Iowa, March 25th, 1881, Sr. Sabrina Smith. She was an old time Saint, and passed away from earth with a full assurance of coming forth at the resurrection of the just to inherit celestial glory. Funeral service on the 26th, by Joseph Smith, at Union Church.

Dear as thou wert and justly dear,
We will not weep for thee;
One thought shall check the rising tear,
It is that thou art free.

EATON—At Little Deer Isle, Maine, June 5th, 1882, Isaiah N. Eaton, aged 27 years, 17 days. He expressed a great desire to get well, so that he might obey the gospel. His father, mother, and wife mourn his loss. Funeral service by Elder J. C. Foss.

ERRATUM.

This is to inform the Church that by error, Bro. F. P. Scarliff was twice charged with $50 that he had once, and Bro. J. R. Lambert received $50 with which I did not charge him at all upon the Church books. These brethren having called my attention to the fact since my April report, I hereby give notice, and ask the Bishop to charge on his books. I. L. ROGERS.

SANDWICH, Ills., July 1st, 1882.

FREMONT DISTRICT.

All the Elders of Fremont District are requested and expected to report, either in person or by letter, at the next session of conference, to be held at Keystone Branch, August 25th, 26th, 27th. Elders neglecting this duty will be considered inactive, and will be dealt with as such. J. R. BADHAM, Dis. Pres.

SHENANDOAH, Iowa, July 14th, 1882.

Many people wish they might live their lives over again; in nine cases out of ten they would only repeat them.

The Moral Effects of Hurry.

To THE thoughtful, the moral consequences of tension and hurry are very saddening; to the physician their results are a matter of profound concern; their grave evils come under his daily observation. No evolution of force can take place with undue rapidity without damage to the machine in which the transformation is effected. Express railway stock has a much shorter term of use than that reserved for slower traffic. The law is universal that intensity and duration of action are inversely proportioned. It is therefore no matter of surprise to find that the human nervous system is no exception to the law. The higher salubrity of rural over urban life is not entirely a matter of fresh air and exercise. Rural life involves leisure and pause in work, which are very essential to the maintenance of the nervous system in a state of due nutrition. Unremitting spasm soon ceases altogether. The tension of life produces weakness at the very place where strength is most needed. The damage done to the health of the most valuable part of the community, the best trained thinkers, most useful workers, is incalculable. Work and worry, though not proportional, are closely connected, and as excess of the former soon entails an increase in the latter beyond the limits which the nervous system can bear with impunity, especially under the conditions under which work has to be done.—London Lancet.

CHURCH MANNERS.

Ought we not to behave as well in the house of God as in the house of a neighbor? Many do not. Lack of reverence is general; of decency frequent. When one enters the church, he should quietly be seated, and reverentially bow his head in devotion to God, the recognized master of the house. To lobby around the door, and gossip, and create confusion, is a serious fault, which detracts greatly from the sweet enjoyment of worship. In many congregations this is disgracefully prevalent. Another practice is to scribble in hymn books. Would we venture on such an offense in a gentleman's house? A person presuming to do so would be regarded as a boor. But why write in the books belonging to the church more than in those of private families? Are not good manners quite as becoming in the house of God as in other houses?

A VOICE TO THE REAPERS.

TUNE.—"Ring the bell, Watchman."

Go to the harvest field; Reaper, beware
 Of lingering at home, with loving ones there;
 Precious ones waiting thy coming, to hail
 The tidings the Master has called thee to tell.

CHORUS.—On to the harvest field; on, on, on;
 Thousands are calling, Come, O, come.
 Why wilt thou tarry the tidings to tell?
 In God put thy trust, and all will be well.

On to the harvest field, Reaper; why wait?
 Thousands are seeking the bright golden gate
 To the city of God; the straight narrow way
 To mansions of glory, to bright endless day.

On to the harvest field, Reaper; the while Thou art waiting, Satan seeks to beguile
 Precious souls from the pathway of right;
 On, Reaper, on with the Gospel's pure light.

On to the harvest field, Reaper; there lies
 At the end of the pathway a glorious prize,
 For them that overcome and earn the reward,
 That's promised to reapers by Jesus the Lord.

The Godhead.

"The fool hath said in his heart there is no God."—Psalms.

"But to us there is but one God, the Father, of whom are all things, and we in him; and one Lord Jesus Christ, by whom are all things, and we by him."—Paul.

THE theory that all things are governed by law seems to have grown to an admitted fact; at least with that portion of the world called reasonable or scientific, and this being true would it not be prudent to consider in brief the force, extent, and effect of such admission.

Law is defined as a "rule of action," "precept or command," and being so is it "reasonable" or "scientific" to affirm that it both originates and applies itself in the most perfect manner possible without the aid of intelligence? Yet this seems to be the theory received and advocated by the multitudes of to-day. That the great code of laws which govern the universe is the soul, or god thereof, and the only one; this probably seems to them correct, but to me the opposite; for, while I agree to the existence of the "code," we should not forget that we have also agreed that law is a "rule of action." And whether we have agreed to it or not, the fact exists and is equally as potent as the law itself, for, go where you may, into the creation either animate or inanimate, and constantly you are assured of supreme design on every hand, which conception necessitates a designer possessed of supreme intelligence; and as you advance in your examinations and find that each and every specie, whether in the animate or inanimate kingdoms, brings forth after its own kind, you are compelled (or should be) to admit the supreme power of that intelligence which thus so wisely administers these laws, and by them has said, "Let the earth bring forth the living creature after his kind," and the "herb yielding seed after his kind." And further, "rule of action" in itself embodies the fact that it is the product of some intelligence, for to allow such "rule" to apply itself without the aid of intelligence would simply be a consignment to a world of chance which few reasoners, if any, are prepared to accept, I hope; it is to be believed that these thoughts will indemnify the conclusion that the very existence of law in itself necessitates an existing law-giver," "the self-existent necessary cause of the universe." Again: as we examine these various laws and their relations to the race, we are at once struck with awe at the great prospect of good which comes to mortals who live in harmony with them, and also the great amount of evil which befall those who violate them, hence we are forced by these facts to believe that this class of laws possess within them the principles of good and evil, but if neither, then are they neutral and not of special worth to mortality. The fact that laws possess good in principle and evil necessitates the knowledge of good and evil on the part of the lawgiver; for, to say that abstract principles formulate themselves into a "rule of action" upon the principle of good or evil, is to my mind a greater miracle and requires a greater stretch of the imagination to believe it, than to say that God "created all things out of nothing," the one as well as the other being monstrosities to reason and common sense. Having seen that the law of necessity compels the existence of a supreme intelligence, the question naturally comes up in the mind, How does it exist? To say that it pervades and is inherent in all matter and is distributed equally throughout the universe, would I think be anarchical, the opposite of the truth, the potent power everywhere visible in the government of the universe forbidding such speculation; but to believe that some matter may be highly intelligent, or that some qualities of matter are highly invested with intelligence seems reasonable and in harmony with our experiences; for as we look over the varied creations, and find intelligence lodged in various forms of animate life, we find above and over them all, the crowning work of all the creation, MAN,—not so because of his physical powers, but because of his intelligence, hence the proverb, "Knowledge is power." It seems proper to emphasize here that the supreme intelligence necessarily exists only in matter, limited, not unlimited, hence has form; for, to deny his organization or personality is to deny his supreme power, for to conceive even of supreme intelligence without organization is, I confess, too much for me, may do for those who believe that "God made all things out of nothing," but for me it certainly is too heavy a drain on the elasticity of my mind. I am aware that theoretically many professed Christians declare and believe that God in fact is in everything, and to support this thought they bring quotations from the Bible, "If I make my bed in hell, thou art there," or "If I take the wings of the morning," &c., "thou art there." Now if the idea related here was true, then the larger the object, say the larger the man, the more God would be in him; for if it was a fact that God is "in hell" as well as anywhere else, why should such religionists object to going there. But now compare with this idea, the theory already advanced in this paper, that the supreme intelligence whom we call God, is omnipresent by his laws, and that by his agents his will is constantly being administered in harmony with the law, so that his Spirit power is felt throughout the universe,—and then I think we may fully comprehend the fact that if our lot was cast in hell we would feel the power of God's law governing that condition; or if in heaven, we should feel the power and efficacy of the law which governs there, for, go where we may in the universe, we find a law governing, and this fact, if we were inclined, would certainly lead us to believe and to feel God in everything by virtue of these laws, and herein lies the sum of all our interests: as we develop so will we be conditioned, and in eternity will be so placed, that we will associate with our own true affinities, ie., spirits of like development as ours.

To bow down and say "Our Father which art in heaven," signifies that an individual is addressed and located in a certain place; the pleadings and requests set up in this prayer show clearly that the person addressed is capable of rendering aid, as one intelligent being may assist another, but he in a more sublime and exalted manner for "all power" is subscribed to him. Now suppose for a moment that he was not a personage—without organization, or passions,—a principle or something pervading the universe; how, I ask, can any intelligence degrade itself by bowing down to an abstract principle, and hope for its interposition in time of great peril or need? The very statement renders the object void and incapable of either loving or hating, and then to clothe such an idea with the name "God"—as has been and is being done, is beggarly in the extreme to me, and in my judgment resembles what a legal friend of mine once said of his opponents argument, "The dying embers of a vague hope."

It will be conceded that the basis of all religion is the object worshipped, and the object worshipped is the God of that religion, hence the inspiration of the worshippers would necessarily agree with or correspond to the attributes with which their deity is invested; and here I undertake to say that to invest anything other than a personage with the attributes of justice, truth and mercy, is among the impossibilities, and every mind which accepts such attributes in Deity should, I think accept what seems to me the inevitable, that he is a person in fact, and when we consider the universal government which does exist, and the universal harmony which is self evident everywhere by virtue of a supremely wise administration of law, logic and common sense should compel us to believe in the existence of a supreme guiding mind whom we call God in opposition to every form of anarchy and confusion.

It is but prudent that we now examine some of the scriptural evidence in relation to the Godhead; for while I accept the existence of one God the Eternal Father, who is above all and over all, I also accept the existence of Christ, called the Son, also called "Very Eternal God," &c., a separate and distinct person from the Father, and the one who was addressed in the morn of creation with these words, "Let us make man in our own image," this signifying that he undoubtedly was the agent by whom God created the worlds, as "all things were made by him." And thus he stands as the great Second Cause to creation, for, as expressed by himself, Rev. 3:14: "I am the beginning of the creation of God," and might properly be called Father by us, being the Creator, and "the image of the invisible God, the first born of every creature." (See Col. 1:15; Jno. 1:3; 1 Cor. 8:6; Eph. 3:9; Heb. 1:2).

It would seem that the Apostle John, held the same view as expressed above, for in his first epistle 5:7, he says expressly, "There are three that bear record in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost; and these three are one." Some believe that "these three" are used as different representations, but that only one person exists after all. Let us see. We have seen the necessity and admit the existence of a personal God; history teaches the personal existence of one Christ Jesus. Of him Paul said that God "hath in these last days, spoken unto us by his Son, whom he (God) hath appointed heir of all things, by whom also he (God) made the worlds. Who being the brightness of his glory, and the express image of his person, and upholding all things by the word of his power, when he had by himself purged our sins, sat down on the right hand of the Majesty on high." (Heb. 1:2, 3). To this testimony also agrees the blessed Stephen's, for when being stoned to death, 'tis recorded of him that "He being full of the Holy Ghost looked up steadfastly into heaven, and saw the glory of God, and Jesus standing on the right hand of God, and said, Behold, I see the heavens opened, and the Son of Man standing on the right hand of God." (Acts 7:55, 56) This witness had been with Jesus in his ministry, and had personal acquaintance with him, and now "being filled with the Holy Ghost" certainly gives his declaration much force, and should be accepted as true, especially so when we consider that it is in keeping with Christ's own words prior to his death and ascension, for after many answers to his apostles relative to himself and father, he said, "I came forth from the Father, and am come into the world; again, I leave the world and go to the Father." His disciples said unto him, Lo, now speakest thou plainly and speakest no proverb." (John 16:28, 29). With this accords the statement, "Jesus knowing that the Father had given all things into his hands, and that he was come from God, and went to God." (John 13:3). And when the burden and the time of his departure came he only asked the Father to "Glorify thou me with thine own self with the glory which I had with thee before the world was." (John 17:5). Surely wisdom's voice as recorded in the 8th of Proverbs seems appropriate here, and to my mind applies to none but Christ: "The Lord possessed me in the beginning of his way, before his works of old. I was set up from everlasting, from the beginning, or ever the earth was."

To fully comprehend this matter it might be well to examine farther into the testimony in relation to Christ's existence prior to his incarnation, in which if we succeed we will certainly be benefitted.

"In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. The same was in the beginning with God. All things were made by him, and without him was not anything made that was made." The expression "was with God" clearly shows two distinct persons. Also, "the Word was God" shows clearly and definitely that the Word was one of the Godhead. This idea is clearly brought out in the following passages, showing that Christ, or the "Word" was sent of God into the world, "And the Word was made flesh and dwelt among us." "Concerning his Son, Jesus Christ our Lord, which was made of the seed of David according to the flesh." "But when the fullness of the time was come God sent forth his Son made of a woman made under the law." (See John 1:14; Rom. 1:3; Gal. 4:4). And still further, the Apostle Paul in speaking of Christ "partaking of flesh and blood," he states definitely to the Hebrew brethren, chapter 2, verse 16: "For verily he took not on him the nature of angels; but he took on him the seed of Abraham;" the earth house or body, the "flesh and blood" was born of Mary, and is reckoned as Abraham's seed or lineage, thus fulfilling the promise made to Israel, and enabling in a special manner the inauguration of God's will "in the flesh," and also enabling the occupant of that "body" or "earth house" to enter in by death to those who were in prison, and to break the bars thereof and "send forth the prisoners out of the pit wherein is no water," and above all things to bring to pass and demonstrate to witnesses the resurrection from the dead. I trust the reader will carefully consider the expression "took on him the seed of Abraham," and in doing so remember that according to Paul there was a person beside the "body" as clearly shown by the pronoun "him," and that he took on him the seed of Abraham, (or body) and as expressed by himself, he had power to "lay it down," (the body or "temple") and he "had power to take it up," clearly recognizing his own personal existence and power out of the body, which he declared as having been long, long before that body, or even the earth was made; this fact is so patent in his history that I need not pursue the thought farther, only to add that in Rev. 3:14; 1:5, Jesus is called the "faithful and true witness," 19:11, "faithful and true," 13th verse, "and his name is called the Word of God," and in 16th verse is also called "King of Kings, and Lord of Lords." A multitude of testimonies might yet be brought that bear upon this subject, but I do not wish to weary the reader; however prudence would seem to direct that we examine with care and see what was the faith of the early fathers, and when possible, let their own writings speak for them. Eusebius, who was cotemporary with Constantine the Great, maintains with clearness that "the name of Jesus, as also that of Christ, was both known and honored from ancient times by the "inspired prophets" as one of the Godhead, which idea is beautifully brought out in Dan. 3:25: "And the form of the fourth is like the Son of God;" this expression coming from a heathen king is evidence of such faith and theory as existing at that time, whether Christ in person or an angel appeared to them; but to give the historian's language I quote: "Thy throne, O God, is from everlasting to everlasting. A scepter of righteousness is the scepter of thy kingdom. Thou hast loved righteousness and hated iniquity. Therefore hath God, thy God, anointed thee with the oil of gladness above thy fellows." In which words he calls him God in the first verse, and in the second he ascribes to him the royal scepter; and thus proceeding after the divine and royal power, in the third place he represents him as Christ, anointed not by the oil of material substances, but by the divine oil of gladness. By this, also, he shows his excellence and great superiority over those who, in former ages had been anointed as typical images with the material substance. The same speaks of him in another place, thus: "The Lord said unto my Lord, sit thou at my right hand, until I make thine enemies thy footstool;" and a little after: "From the womb before the morning star did I beget thee; the Lord hath sworn and he will not repent, thou art a priest forever after the order of Melchisedek." This Melchisedek is mentioned in the Holy Scriptures, as a priest of the Most High God, not consecrated by any unction prepared of any material substance, and not even succeeding to the priesthood of the Jews, by any descent of lineage. Hence Christ our Savior is denominated, with the addition of an oath, Christ and priest after his own order, but not according to the order of those who received merely the badges and emblems. Hence, also, neither does history represent him anointed corporeally among the Jews, nor even as sprung from a tribe of the priesthood, but as coming into existence from God himself, before the morning star; that is, before the constitution of the world, obtaining an immortal priesthood, subject to no infirmity of age, to all endless ages. But the great and convincing evidence of that incorporeal and divine power in him, is the fact that he alone, of all that have ever existed to the present day, even now is known by the title of Christ, among all men over the world; and with this title he is acknowledged and professed by all, and celebrated both among Barbarians and Greeks.

Even to this day, he is honored by his votaries throughout the world, as a King; he is admired as more than a Prophet, and glorified as the only true High Priest of God. In addition to all these, as the pre existing Word of God, coming into existence before all ages, and who has received the honors of worship, he is also adored as God; but what is most remarkable, is the fact, that we who are consecrated to him honor him not only with the voice and sound of words, but with all the affections of the mind; so that we prefer giving a testimony to him, even to the preservation of our own lives." To me the above statement seems to be in harmony with the light and truth reflected by the divine record itself, and a careful and prayerful study of the same, will, I think, enable all to see how that Christ in the eternity of the past was elevated to the Godhead and Fatherhood, for, he is the Only Begotten of the Father, and I might say received or receives his glory and power from the Father, and the only one in whom a fullness dwells except the Father, for surely we would except him who has elevated Christ to the exalted position he occupies, and by whose light and power he shines; in this I recognize and affirm the principle laid down by our Savior in the expression, "My Father is greater than I"—prior, senior, but because Christ was "faithful and true" and whose great love to see the Father's will administered, surpassed all the host of heaven, all these things and knowing while here in the flesh of the glory and power that awaited him at the right hand of God, "thought it not robbery to be equal with God."—Phil. 2:6; John 5:18; 10:33.

In studying eternal life upon the proposition laid down in John 17:3, it is essential to note that it is just as necessary to know Jesus Christ who was sent by the "only true God," as it is to know the "only true God" who sent him, and as it is highly necessary to have the spirit of truth to assist in the great and marvelous study of the "mystery of Godliness," it is to be hoped that such will comprehend that when Christ was elevated to the Godhead, before the constitution of the world, that he then was justly entitled to the titles of "very eternal God," "eternal Father," &c., but when he was in the flesh, or earth house, was called the Son because that condition imposed a lesser title than the former, it being a lower degree.

The love of God made manifest in the gift of his Son surpasses my understanding, and as I seek to view and comprehend it in my feeble way, trying to contrast that love with the abuse, hatred and death received at the hands of violent men, which Christ bore with such Godlike virtue, and as I look to that cross, and see the friend of the race, the Savior of men suffer such an ignominious, shameful death, for the good and benefit of all, even those who slew him, I do not wonder that some soul should have been prompted to write,

"Just as I am, without one plea, O, Lamb of God, I come to thee," nor that Christ should have said, "And if I be lifted up I will draw all men unto me;" and John's testimony—"Behold the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

To God be all honor for the gift of his Son and the Gospel by which we may be saved, and to the Father, and the Son, and Holy Ghost, the one Godhead, or matchless governing power that rules the universe, be all glory, dominion, honor and power, now and evermore. Amen.

The Only True God.

Editor Herald:—Permit the present writer to "say a word" relative to the above named subject through the columns of the Saints' paper. I do not write for the sake of controversy, but it really seems to me that after two pages of reading "nothing" is reached.

The "Trinity" and "Unity" of the Godhead are intricate ideas. "Three times one are one." "Once three is one." So says "theological mathematics." The only reasonable solution of the "divine problem" is the dual idea.

What will our Utah brethren, or others, do with the following? In speaking of Christ, Paul says: "Who, being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God." (Phil. 2:6). If God and Christ are "one," actually one, of course a God ought to be his own equal, as a man is equal with himself. But here is an individual in the form of another, who said: "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth." (Matt. 28:18). This ought to make him God's equal, according to Paul. Again, said Jesus: "I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another comforter, * * * even the spirit of truth." Here we have it. Christ the first person, the speaker; the Father, the second person, spoken to, and the Spirit of Truth, the third person or thing spoken of. We are told that "Jesus, the body, prayed to the Father, the Holy Spirit." Can a body "talk?" "The body without the spirit is dead." Can a "body" talk to a spirit, or the spirit in it? As far as "the mystery of Godliness" is concerned, the fact of the matter is this: That Christ's body being of human birth, in human form, viewed as a man, lived a perfect life, Godlike throughout. Godliness is Godlike. It might have seemed a "mystery" how a man could live the life of a God, do "the works of God." "The words that I speak, I speak not of myself, but that which the Father hath commanded me, that I speak." The spirit of Christ spake what another spirit had spoken unto him. In speaking of the sun, moon and stars, we read: "Any man who has seen any, or the least of these, hath seen God moving in his majesty and power." Does this suggest or imply that "sun worship" is to be performed? Jesus Christ was not afraid of robbing God of any honor, and we ought to have sense enough to understand the form of worship prescribed by Christ, for he said: "Ye shall pray unto (not me) the Father in my name;" "Whatever ye ask the Father in my name that will he give unto you." If Christ Jesus is the mediator between God and man, how could he get between himself and man, if God and Christ be one individual? "We have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous." (1 John 2:1).

False Prophets.

EIGHTEEN years ago I did not know that Joseph Smith was a true prophet, but I believed he was not. I had some friends, however, who believed he was, and who gave me some reasons for their faith, and requested me to show them from the Scriptures wherein their faith was wrong. I essayed to do this, but the more I sought for Bible evidence that they were wrong, the more I found them right; instead of convincing them, I was myself convinced, and from that day to this, no living soul has heard me express a doubt. Have my writings ever conveyed a doubt. If I have had any they have been reasoned with between myself and God, and never mentioned to friend or foe until the revelations of time have removed them, and then only when I thought it might assist another in fighting the battle of faith to conquer, and the revelations of time have removed them. The events of almost every day add another golden link to the seemingly endless chain of evidence, that God was with the Seer of Palmyra.

If I knew the whole conceit of God, there would be no question in my mind, who is to give every call until our Lord shall come, but as I do not, the Scripture teaches me to listen to every call long enough to determine from where it came. I have examined the various factions of Mormonism, many of the dogmas of Sectarianism, Catholicism, Mohammedism, Spiritualism, and various shades of Skepticism; have read every scrap of church history I could obtain, from the day the prophet first called and the Lord did answer until he was lifted up to God. I am conversant with the history of the Reorganization, have considered the various reforms proposed and discussed through the Herald, the rights of the people and the prerogatives of the priest, the relation of the sexes to each other and toward God, the philosophy of life and death, and the probabilities and possibilities of the future; I have held dread and solemn inquests over my own thoughts, words, and deeds. I find in all some grains of truth, some outcroppings of human weakness, and human error. As a perfect teacher sent from God, Jesus Christ stands and always will stand alone. I have read "Heaven's Argument," and every other argument published by W. K. Lay, and though I find in his as in all the rest, some outcroppings of error, I have, or think I have, as good reason to believe that God sent him, as I have to believe that he ever sent any one else. Though I never heard of him till last January, some of these reasons date back nearly eight years. About then, circumstances compelled me to believe that such a person was then living upon the earth; that he would grow up out of his place; (the place for a true prophet is with the Church); that his work would be similar to, but entirely separate from ours; that he would in no sense interfere with us nor we with him; that he would for a while be unknown and unrecognized by the Saints; that somewhere along the stream of time the work would blend, either by one absorbing the other, or by the love of Christ drawing us all to him. Do not wonder then, that when I heard of this movement I began to investigate, thinking it possible that he might be the person. I presume I saw as many points of seeming conflict between his faith and ours as any one else did, and once attempted to write to him to point out what I believed to be his errors; in so doing every objection was answered almost before it was formed, not by any doubtful supposition, but by positive declaration of Scripture, until before I sent the letter to convince him, I was myself convinced. Space will not here permit me to give all my reasons, but they were satisfactory to myself; and even now, after the sad death of Mrs. Lay and the seeming failure of his mission, I can not assign a single reason why I should not have believed. We are told to watch and pray; I did, and the more I prayed the more I believed. To search the Scriptures; I did, and the more I sought, the more I was convinced to try the spirits. I did, by every rule I have ever read to try them by; and the more I tried them, the more it seemed like the Spirit of Christ. The fruits of the Spirit are righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost. Does any one, even now, accuse Mr. Lay or any of his father's family of unrighteousness? Mr. and Mrs. Lay were wedded in heart as well as life, taught their children the fear of the Lord, which is the beginning of wisdom, and cultivated the sweet spirit of domestic peace. As a result they had joy in each others' society, and what they had Scriptural reason to believe was the Holy Ghost. Who was it that promised that God was more willing to give the Holy Ghost to every one that asketh him, than an earthly father is to give good gifts unto his children; but he must ask in faith believing. If these people did not give proof of faith and obedience, and a wish to do right, who does? If it is urged that having not obeyed the laws of adoption, Mr. Lay was not a son, whose son was Joseph Smith when he first called and the Lord did answer? Whose sons and daughters were we all when love divine first found us? Whose fault was it, any how, if he was not a son? Who was it said if any man lack wisdom let him ask of God? Who was it said call unto me and I will answer thee? Where was God if he did not answer when Mr. Lay called? If he was deceived who was responsible? What assurance have we that the rest of us are not? Answer these questions to suit yourselves; I have answered them to my own satisfaction, and answering them believed that God was with him, and so believing wrote to Mr. Lay as near as I can recollect as follows: "God forbid that I should ask a sign from idle curiosity, or dictate terms upon which I will serve him; but my youngest daughter has all her life been afflicted by a terrible sense of fear; I never dare leave her alone, night or day, and often she will nestle up to me sweating with terror, and saying she sees ugly men. I know the cause, but nothing but the hand of God can remove it. I have prayed for her, but for reasons unknown to me my prayers are not answered. It has occurred to me to ask you to pray for her; it may be another evidence to me that God has sent you. It seems unreasonable to ask for further evidence, for it would seem more strange if he did not regard such faith as yours than if he did."

Mr. Lay answered this letter, which I will not quote, but told what God required of me, when the evil spirit of fear should be cast out of my child. I thought then I would wait for developments to see if it came to pass, but the longer I waited the worse she was afflicted, until the last night, when the light was removed for a short time, she shrieked with terror and said she could not help to see ugly things. I could stand this no longer, but the next day did or endeavored to do as directed, and God be praised, from that day to this she is as free from fear as any other child. If in this case this was done by Satan in order to deceive, by whom do the Latter Day Saints cast them out? Where was God while that was being done? Where was he all the years that I had prayed? If it is thought that my sins separated me so far from God that he would not hear them, we must conclude that Mr. Lay's righteousness brought him so near to God that he did hear him. But Jesus gave a different solution to a similar problem: "Neither hath this man sinned nor his parents that he was born blind, but that the word of the Lord might be glorified." A dear, good sister suggested that perhaps as I had ignored the authorities of the Church, and called upon some one else, God was permitting me to be deceived. I answer the logic of this in the words of the only perfect teacher: "Lord, we saw some casting out devils in thy name and we forbade them not; for there is no man that can do a miracle in my name who can lightly speak evil of me." And really I had no thought of ignoring any one, surely no one can blame me for asking him or any one else to pray. Who was it that said God heareth not sinners, but every one that doeth the will of the Father, them he heareth.

It will be remembered that one of the claims made by Mr. Lay is that he is the Joshua of Zachariah 3d chapter, and so claiming, foretold that Satan would in some manner cause his christian garments to become filthy. I did not believe that he was that Joshua; some of the Saints know my reason why, and I wrote to him some of my reasons why I hoped he was not; had I believed it I would have been satisfied that some of his prophecies would seemingly fail, for there is nothing on earth or under it can make a prophet's garments so foul in the estimation of some, as to be deceived when he maketh a vision. After the death of Mrs. Lay I thought he possibly might be the Joshua, and so wrote to him. He replied that he probably had a hundred times the evidence I had, even if my child was healed as I hoped, but could not ask the world to believe him now. I think if Robert Ingersoll or any one else wished to see a miracle, he can be gratified by going to State Center, and seeing a young man whose plans in life whatever they were, abruptly broken off by what he had every reason to believe was the call of God, and who in obedience to that call did consecrate himself, his time, and his talents, his means, all that he has or ever expected to have, upon the altar of his faith, which is now as suddenly and abruptly shattered; mourning the loss of a mother, doubly dear to him by a oneness of spirit which made them co-workers together with Christ. Bearing a deeper sorrow than the wail above the dead; branded a false prophet, seemingly forsaken of God, he has returned to State Center, knowing well that he would there meet the open scorn and silent contempt of some, and what is harder to bear than both, the pity of friends. Yet still in spite of all, remaining in every sense of the word a christian gentleman, mindful of the very smallest courtesies of life. The miracle is the wondrous power of faith to sustain a man under the most trying circumstances. No thought of rebellion, no hint that God has dealt strangely or bitterly with him. He must himself have been somehow wrong; does not know how or wherein, still he must be to blame, and is receiving merited punishment. I do not say he wrote this, but sentiment was conveyed more by what was left unsaid than what was said. For the sake of the Christ we profess to worship, the gospel of peace we profess to believe, I hope that no Latter Day Saint will add a single drop of bitterness to the cup that he must drink, or drive a single nail in the cross he must bear. But whether they do or do not, be assured that I respect him now just as he is, and have more confidence in the ultimate success of his work than if I now saw him at God's right hand. The most weak and foolish person that walks the earth could walk upright with the strong arm of God around him, but when God seemingly forsakes a man and he does not fall, then I know there is in him the material of which I always thought prophets and reformers are made. I say seemingly, for I do not believe that God ever really forsakes any one who trusts in him, but as long as he seems to, it seems just as bad as though he did. Jesus says by their fruits ye shall know them. We always thought that false prophets were false men who prophecied out of the conceit of a wicked heart, taught some doctrines that were morally wrong. Are any of this prophet's doctrines morally wrong? If so, which? Does any one even now accuse him of bad practices? It is true, as a friend lately reminded me, I do not know him, neither do I positively know the heart of any one else living or dead, but if any one else knew any serious harm of him we would be apt to hear of it now.

Nothing can exceed the sweet simplicity and apparent truthfulness of the testimony of Mrs. Lay, concerning the evidence she had of the truth of his mission; no earnest protestations, nor earnest appeals, but a plain and modest statement of facts; she is telling the truth, and expects to be believed without an oath. "Strangers," she said, "might think Willoughby an impostor, but no one who has ever known him could possibly doubt his word. As a child he was always truthful and honest, as a man he respected his word." It seems sad to contemplate, that such an one should now be branded a false prophet. If he is a false prophet who is to blame? Who was it that promised the Holy Ghost to every one that asketh? Who was it said that as we know not how to pray, the Spirit maketh intercession for us? Who was it that upbraided the disciples for their unbelief and hardness of heart?

Do not think I write this to cast any doubt upon the word of our Lord, or that within my heart I have any doubts. It is because I implicitly believed them; that I believed the Spirit of Truth was leading this young prophet and his mother. It is because I still believe some real and greater good is to flow to them and to others concerned and unconcerned by these seeming failures, than could from a present success. The prophet will be less like Elijah perhaps, but more like Christ. There will be no more satire. The draught has been too deep and bitter for even pleasant joking. No more upbraiding for blind unbelief, for blind faith may be as dangerous; only the mildest and tenderest reproof for the sin of disobedience, for the righteousness of obedience snapped the tenderest ties that bound their family together. Out of the dregs of this cup of trembling, this, and other real good will flow to him. What good will it bring to others? Of course the thoughtless will sneer, and the wicked will delight in derision, but thoughtful men and women in and out of all churches, will look well to their own foundation, will try well the spirit that is leading them, will empty their heads of religious and irreligious bigotry, their hearts of self conceit, their creeds of cant and nonsense and superstition. They will be guided more by reason and less by impulse; they will look more to Christ and less to the prophets; they will be compelled to admit that if the living are liable to be mistaken, so may the dead have been; that if others mistake when they think they have the Spirit, so may they be. They will recognize the Fatherhood of God, the brotherhood of man, the universal Kingship of Christ; and in after years, if there are any after years, it will be said of him, He has lifted men nearer to God, and made the world better for his having lived in it. If there are no after years to speak of, then he is a true prophet in the sense of foretelling future events. After I read the April and May Warnings, I propose to analyze every one of his published prophecies; even now text after text of Scripture is brought to my mind which I had read and studied, without being able to apply to anything but which so exactly fit these circumstances, they seem to have been written for that purpose. Who was it that Jesus said should bring all things to our remembrance? Who was it that told Oliver Cowdery that he should have stupor of thought to cause him to forget the thing that was wrong for him to write? I have tried my best to forget; I have tried not to think; I have prayed with all my heart for forgetfulness; but go where I will, alone or in company, silent or conversing, sleeping or awake, there is before my eyes a bowed head, a wounded spirit, a living and dying martyr to a faith, mistaken, possibly, but sublime in its every intensity. A lady starving to death in body, but sustained in spirit by an all absorbing faith. I could not help ask the question, Where was God? I received for answer, Daughter, when you pray, Let not one single grain of wheat be lost, but save at any and at every cost, did you know what you were saying. I answered, I did not, but if I had I should have prayed it all the same, for be it what it will, it can not be as terrible as the wail of a lost soul. Was it a delusive fancy leading me farther wrong? If so, where was

God? Was it his voice telling me that this young man must know by experience the blank despair and wordless, tearless, prayerless agony of a lost soul, in order to reach down in the woeful depths to rescue the perishing. That this lady who has all her life lived in the fear and the love of God, this devoted wife and mother, this exemplary christian, must die a martyr to a seemingly mistaken faith in order to carry the love of Christ into the wilderness of spiritual Babylon where the victims of false faiths, and worshippers of false Gods are supposed to be. I did not wish so hard a mission for her, but if God is there the wilderness will not be dark to her. See Psalms 139:8. When I examine his prophecies I shall take the Inspired Translation and our Book of Covenants as proven standards of truth and rather admit a failure than evade by doubtful supposition; at the same time it will be easier for me to believe any plausible or even remotely possible explanation, than to believe that these were altogether led by Satan or other false spirits, and still believe that God is very near to every one, or "every one of us."

MORMONIA.

Answer to "Exparte."

THE brain is the seat of intelligence—the residence of the directing and governing powers of the human body. Every function of the spiritual and physical man is in sympathy and has communication with this organ. Every attribute of the character is represented there—hence it is an index to the soul. The cranium displays system and order of arrangement, each respective organ representing its particular part, or function. Every emotion, every affection, every desire, and any and every sense of the spiritual, or physical being, is communicated to the brain. Love is an "intelligent attribute," but not more so than others, though perhaps superior in character. Every attribute of the character, and all that pertains to the soul, originates and centers in intelligence, without which we would not exist. Appetite is perhaps as clearly reflected upon the soul's indicator as is love; yet its place of residence is the stomach, and not the brain. There are certain animal passions to which we owe our mundane existence, which reside not in the brain, but are nevertheless represented there. The tender emotion, or affection, love, has its representative organ at the intellectual center, but does not necessarily reside there. So I believe and subscribe, Spiritual Desires.

"Blessed are they who feel a deep sense of spiritual poverty." Yes, blessed are they, for the unsearchable riches of Christ are made over to them. It is absolutely necessary to be convinced of insufficiency and poverty if we would be rich toward God. "It is certain," says Martin Luther, "that man must altogether despair of himself in order to be made capable of receiving Christ's grace." We must be emptied of all self-dependency before we can be filled with Christ. And it is only through the valley of humiliation that we can ever reach the heights of Pisgah. "No one can know the depths of grace until he has experienced the depths of mortal sorrow. Can you not see why it is that in answer to our most earnest and persistent prayers, it often happens that our Lord's love for us is expressed more by rebuke than by those special manifestations for which we pray? This is the way he fulfills his promises to those whom he loves. By temporal sorrows he shatters their earthly hopes, that they may hope in him alone. By spiritual trials he reveals the strength and depth of their corruption, that they may know the power of his forgiving and sanctifying love. By 'manifold temptations' he tries their faith in his love and his promise."

Let us be patient, then, and bear the cross his love lays upon us. His discipline precedes his crown. Only let us learn to see the daily necessity for just this spiritual discipline, and give our entire confidence to our Lord in all his dealings with our souls.

"ACTA PILATI."

TO TIBERIUS CÆSAR,
Emperor of Rome;
Noble Sovereign, Greeting:

THE events of the last few days, in my province, have been of such a character, that I thought I would give the details as they have occurred, as I should not be surprised if in the course of time they may change the destiny of our nation, for it seems of late that the gods have ceased to be propitious. I am almost ready to say "Cursed be the day that I succeeded Valerius Flaccus in the government of Judea." On my arrival at Jerusalem I took possession of the Pretorium and ordered a splendid feast to be prepared, to which I invited the tetrarch of Galilee, with the high priest and his officers. At the appointed hour no guests appeared. This was an insult offered to my dignity. A few days after, the high priest deigned to pay me a visit. His deportment was grave and deceitful. He pretended that his religion forbade him and his attendants to sit down at the table of the Romans and to offer up libations with them. I thought it expedient to accept his excuse, but from that moment I was convinced that the conquered had declared themselves the enemies of the conquerors. It seemed to me of all conquered cities, Jerusalem was the most difficult to govern. So turbulent was the people that I lived in momentary dread of an insurrection. To suppress it I had but a single centurion and a handful of soldiers. I requested a reinforcement from the Prefect of Syria, who informed me that he had scarcely troops sufficient to defend his own province. An insatiate thirst for conquest—to extend our empire beyond the means of defending it—I fear will be the means of overthrowing our noble government.

Among the various rumors that came to my ears, there was one that attracted my attention in particular. A young man, it was said, had appeared in Galilee, preaching with a noble unction, a new law, in the name of the god's that had sent him. At first I was apprehensive that his design was to stir up the people against the Romans, but soon were my fears dispelled. Jesus of Nazareth spoke rather as a friend of the Romans than of the Jews.

One day in passing by the place of Siloe, where there was a great concourse of people, I observed, in the midst of the group, a young man who was leaning against a tree, calmly addressing the multitude. I was told it was Jesus. This I could easily have suspected; so great was the difference between him and those who were listening to him. His golden-colored hair and beard gave to his appearance a celestial aspect. He appeared to be about thirty years of age. Never have I seen a sweeter or more serene countenance. What a contrast between him and his hearers, with their black beards and tawny complexion. Unwilling to interrupt him by my presence, I continued my walk; but signified to my secretary to join the group and listen. My secretary's name was Manlius. He was the grandson of the chief of the conspirators who encamped in Etruria waiting Catiline. Manlius was an ancient inhabitant of Judea, and well acquainted with the Hebrew language. He was devoted to me, and worthy of my confidence. On entering the Pretorium I found Manlius, who related to me the words Jesus had pronounced at Siloe. Never have I heard in the Pettico, nor in the works of the philosophers anything that can compare to the maxims of Jesus.

One of the rebellious Jews so numerous in Jerusalem, having asked him if it was lawful to give tribute to Cæsar, Jesus replied, "Render unto Cæsar the things which belong to Cæsar, and unto God the things that are God's." It was on account of the wisdom of his saying, that I granted so much liberty to the Nazarene, for it was in my power to have him arrested and exiled to Pontus; but this would have been contrary to the justice which has always characterized the Romans. This man was neither seditious nor rebellious. I extended to him my protection, unknown, perhaps, to himself. He was at liberty to act, to speak, to assemble and address the people, to choose disciples unrestrained by any Pretorian mandate. Should it ever happen—may the gods ever avert the omen—should it ever happen, I say, that the religion of our forefathers be supplanted by the religion of Jesus, it will be to this noble toleration that Rome shall owe her premature obsequies, while I, miserable wretch, shall have been the instrument of what Hebrews call providence, and we destiny.

But this unlimited freedom granted to Jesus provoked the Jews; not the poor, but the rich and powerful. It is true, that Jesus was severe on the latter; and this was a political reason, in my opinion, not to control the liberty of the Nazarene. "Scribes and Pharisees," he would say to them, "you are a race of vipers; you resemble painted sepulchres." At other times, he would sneer at the proud alms of the publican, telling him that the mite of the poor widow was more precious in the sight of God.

New complaints were daily made at the Pretorium against the insolence of Jesus. I was even informed that some misfortune would befall him—that it would not be the first time that Jerusalem had stoned those who called themselves prophets—and if the Pretorium refused justice, an appeal would be made to Cæsar. However, my conduct was approved by the Senate, and I was promised a reinforcement after the termination of the Parthian war. Being too weak to suppress a sedition, I resolved upon adopting a measure that promised to establish the tranquility of the city, without subjecting the Pretorium to humiliating concession.

I wrote to Jesus, requesting an interview with him at the Pretorium. He came. You know that in my veins flows the Spanish, mixed with Roman blood, as incapable of fear as it is of puerile emotion. When the Nazarene made his appearance I was walking in my basilic, and my feet seemed fastened with an iron hand to the marble pavement, and I trembled on every limb as a guilty culprit, though he was calm—the Nazarene, calm as innocence. When he came up to me he stopped, and by a signal sign he seemed to say to me, "I am here." For sometime I contemplated with admiration and awe this extraordinary type of man—a type of man unknown to our numerous painters, who have given form and figure to all the gods and heroes.

"Jesus," said I to him at last—and my tongue faltered—"Jesus of Nazareth, I have granted you for the last three years ample freedom of speech, nor do I regret it. Your words are those of a sage. I know not whether you have read Socrates or Plato, but this I know, that there is in your discourses a majestic simplicity that elevates you far above these philosophers. The Emperor is informed of it, and I, his humble representative in this country, am glad of having allowed you that liberty of which you are so worthy. However, I must not conceal from you that your discourses have raised up against you powerful and inveterate enemies. Neither is this surprising. Socrates had his enemies, and he fell a victim of their hatred. Yours are doubly incensed against you, on account of your sayings against me, and on account of the liberty extended towards you. They even accuse me of being indirectly leagued with you, for the purpose of depriving the Hebrews of the little civil power which Rome has left them. My request—I do not say my order—is, that you be more circumspect in the future, and more tender in arousing the pride of your enemies, lest they raise against you the stupid populace, and compel me to employ the instruments of justice."

The Nazarene calmly replied:

"Prince of the earth, your words proceed not from true wisdom. Say to the torrent, stop in the midst of the mountain home, because it will uproot the trees of the valley. The torrent will answer you, that it must obey the laws of the Creator. God alone knows whither flows the torrent. Verily, I say unto you, before the Rose of Sharon blossoms, the blood of the Just shall be spilt."

"Your blood shall not be spilt," replied I, with emotion. "You are more precious, in my estimation, on account of your wisdom, than all the turbulent and proud Pharisees, who abuse the freedom granted them by the Romans, conspire against Cæsar, and construe our bounty into fear. Insolent wretches, they are not aware that the wolf of the Tiber sometimes clothes himself with the skin of the sheep. I will protect you against them. My Pretorium is open to you as an asylum; it is a sacred asylum."

Jesus carelessly shook his head, and said, with a grace and a divine smile, "When the day shall have come, there will be no asylum for the Son of Man, neither in the earth nor under the earth. The asylum of the Just is there, pointing to the heavens. That which is written in the books of the prophets must be accomplished."

"Young man," answered I, mildly, "you oblige me to convert my request into an order. The safety of the province, which has been confided to my care, requires it. You must observe more moderation in your discourses. Do not infringe. My orders you know. May happiness attend you. Farewell."

"Prince of the earth," replied Jesus, "I come not to bring war into the world, but peace, love and charity. I was born the same day on which Augustus Cæsar gave peace to the Roman world. Persecution proceeds not from me. I expect it from others, and will meet it in obedience to the will of my Father, who has shown me the way. Restrain, therefore, your worldly prudence. It is not in your power to arrest the victim at the foot of the Tabernacle of expiation."

So saying, he disappeared like a bright shadow behind the curtains of the basilic. To Herod, who then reigned in Galilee, the enemies of Jesus addressed themselves, to wreak their vengeance on the Nazarene. Had Herod consulted his own inclination, he would have ordered Jesus immediately to be put to death; but, though proud of his royal dignity, yet he was afraid of committing an act that might diminish his influence with the Senate. Herod called on me one day at the Pretorium, and on rising to take leave, after some insignificant conversation, he asked me what was my opinion concerning the Nazarene. I replied that Jesus appeared to be one of those great philosophers that great nations sometimes produce, that his doctrines are by no means sacrilegious, and that the intention of Rome was to leave him to that freedom of speech which was justified by his actions. Herod smiled maliciously, and saluting me with an ironical respect, he departed.

The great feast of the Jews was approaching, and the intention was to avail themselves of the popular exultation which always manifests itself at the solemnities of a passover. The city was overflowing with a tumultuous populace clamoring for the death of the Nazarene. My emissaries informed me that the treasure of the Temple had been employed in bribing the people. The danger was pressing. A Roman centurion had been insulted. I wrote to the Prefect of Syria for a hundred foot soldiers, and as many cavalry. He declined. I saw myself alone, with a handful of veterans, in the midst of a rebellious city, too weak to suppress a disorder, and having no other choice left but to tolerate it. They had seized upon Jesus; and the seditious rabble, although they had nothing to fear from the Pretorium, believing with their leaders that I winked at their sedition, continued vociferating, "Crucify him! crucify him!" Three powerful parties had combined together at that time against Jesus. First, the Herodians and the Sadducees, whose seditious conduct seemed to have proceeded from double motives. They hated the Nazarene, and were impatient of the Roman yoke. They could never forgive me for having entered the holy city with banners that bore the image of the Roman Emperor, and, although in this instance I had committed a fatal error, yet the sacrilege did not appear less heinous in their eyes. Another grievance, also, rankled in their bosoms. I had proposed to employ a part of the treasure of the Temple in erecting edifices of public utility. My proposal was scowled at. The Pharisees were the avowed enemies of Jesus. They cared not for the government. They bore with bitterness the severe reprimands which the Nazarene for three years had been continually throwing out against them wherever he went. Too weak and pusillanimous to act by themselves, they had embraced the quarrels of the Herodians and the Sadducees. Besides these three parties, I had to contend against the reckless and profligate populace, always ready to join a sedition, and to profit by the disorder and confusion that resulted therefrom.

Jesus was dragged before the high priest and condemned to death. It was then that the high priest, Caiaphas, performed a derisory act of submission. He sent his prisoner to me to pronounce his condemnation, and secure his execution. I answered him, that as Jesus was a Galilean, the affair came in Herod's jurisdiction, and ordered him to be sent thither. The wily tetrach professed humility, and protesting his preference to the Lieutenant of Cæsar, he committed the fate of the man to my hands. Soon my palace assumed the aspect of a besieged citadel. Every moment increased the number of the seditious. Jerusalem was inundated with crowds from the mountains of Nazareth. All Judea appeared to be pouring into the devoted city. I had taken a wife—a girl from among the Gauls—who professed to see into futurity—weeping and throwing herself at my feet—"Beware," said she to me, "beware, and touch not that man, for he is holy. Last night I saw him in a vision. He was walking on the waters. He was flying on the wings of the winds. He spoke to the tempest, and to the fishes of the lake—all were obedient to him. Behold! the torrent in Mount Kedron flows with blood, the statues of Cæsar are filled with Germonide, the columns of the Interium have given away, and the sun is veiled in mourning, like a vestal in the tomb. O Pilate! evil awaits thee if thou wilt not listen to the vows of thy wife. Dread the curse of a Roman Senate, dread the powers of Cæsar."

By this time the marble stairs groaned under the weight of the multitude. The Nazarene was brought back to me. I proceeded to the hall of justice, followed by my guard, and asked the people, in a severe tone, what they demanded. "The death of the Nazarene," was their reply. "For what crime?" "He has blasphemed. He has prophesied the ruin of the Temple. He calls himself the Son of God, the Messiah, the King of the Jews." "Roman justice," said I, "punishes not such offenses with death." "Crucify him, crucify him!" belched forth the relentless rabble. The vociferations of the infuriated mob shook the palace to its foundations. There was but one who appeared to be calm in the midst of the vast multitude. It was the Nazarene. After many fruitless attempts to protect him from this fury of his merciless persecutors, I adopted a measure which, at the moment, appeared to me to be the only one that could save his life. I ordered him to be scourged, then calling for an ewer, I washed my hands in the presence of the multitude, thereby signifying to them my disapproval of the deed. But in vain. It was his life that these wretches thirsted for. Often in our civil commotions have I witnessed the furious animosity of the multitude, but nothing could be compared to what I witnessed in the present instance. It might have been truly said, that on this occasion all the phantoms of the infernal regions had assembled at Jerusalem. The crowd appeared not to walk; they were borne off, and whirled as a vortex, rolling along like living waves, from the portals of the Pretorium even unto Mount Zion, with howlings, screams, shrieks, and vociferations, such as were never heard in the seditions of the Panonia, or in the tumult of the forum.

By degrees the day darkened like a winter's twilight, such as had been at the death of the great Julius Cæsar. It was likewise towards the ideas of March.

I, the continued governor of a rebellious province, was leaning against a column of my basilic, contemplating athwart the dreary gloom of these fiends of tartars dragging to execution the innocent Nazarene. All around me was deserted. Jerusalem had vomited forth her indwellers through the funeral gate that leads to the Gemonica. An air of desolation and sadness enveloped me. My guards had joined the cavalry, and the centurion, to display a shadow of power, was endeavoring to keep order. I was left alone, and my breaking heart admonished me that what was passing at that moment appertained rather to the history of the gods than that of man. A loud clamor was heard proceeding from Golgotha, which, borne on the winds, seemed to announce an agony such as had never been heard by mortal ears. Dark clouds lowered over the pinnacle of the temple, and, settling over the city, covered it with a veil. So dreadful were the signs that were seen, both in the heavens and on the earth, that Dionysius, the Areopagite, is reported to have exclaimed, "Either the author of nature is suffering, or the universe is falling apart."

Towards the first hour of the night, I threw my mantle around me and went down into the city, towards the gates of Golgotha. The sacrifice was consummated. The crowd was returning home; still agitated, it is true; but gloomy, taciturn and desperate. What they had witnessed had stricken them with terror and remorse. I also saw my little Roman cohort pass by mournfully, the standard-bearer having veiled his eagle in token of grief, and I overheard some of the soldiers murmuring strange words, which I did not understand. Others were recounting prodigies almost similar to those which had so often smitten the Romans by the will of the gods. Sometimes groups of men and women would halt, then looking backward towards Mount Calvary, would remain motionless, in expectation of witnessing some new prodigy.

I returned to the Pretorium, sad and pensive. On ascending the stairs—the steps of which were still stained with the blood of the Nazarene—I perceived an old man in a suppliant posture, and behind him several women in tears. He threw himself at my feet and wept bitterly. It is painful to see an old man weep.

"Father," said I to him mildly, "who are you, and what is your request?"

"I am Joseph of Arimathea," replied he, "and am come to beg of you, upon my knees, the permission to bury Jesus of Nazareth."

"Your prayer is granted," said I to him, and at the same time ordered Manlius to take some soldiers with him to superintend the interment, lest it should be profaned.

A few days after, the sepulchre was found empty. His disciples published all over the country that Jesus had risen from the dead, as he had foretold. A last duty remained for me to perform, and that was to communicate to you these deplorable events. I did it on the same night that followed the fatal catastrophe, and had just finished the communication when day began to dawn. At that moment the sound of clarions playing the air of Diana, struck my ear. Casting my eye towards the Cæsarean gate I beheld a troop of soldiers, and heard at a distance other trumpets sounding Cæsar's march. It was the reinforcement that had been promised me. Two thousand chosen troops who, to hasten their arrival, had marched all night. "It has been decreed by the fates," cried I, wringing my hands, "that the great iniquity should be accomplished; that for the purpose of averting the deeds of yesterday, troops should arrive to-day! Cruel destiny, how thou sportest with the affairs of mortals!" It was but too true, what the Nazarene exclaimed while writhing on the cross: "All is consummated."

The Necessity And Dignity of Labor.

I rely upon it that you are now working hard in the classical mine, getting out the rubbish as fast as you can, and preparing yourself to collect the ore. I can not too much impress upon your mind that labor is the condition which God has imposed on us in every station of life,—there is nothing worth having that can be had without it, from the bread which the peasant wins with sweat of his brow, to the sports by which the rich man must get rid of his ennui. The only difference betwixt them is, that the poor man labors to get a dinner to his appetite, the rich man to get an appetite to his dinner. As for knowldge, it can no more be planted in the human mind without labor than a field of wheat can be produced without the previous use of a plough. There is indeed this great difference, that chance or circumstances may so cause it that another shall reap what the farmer sows; but no man can be deprived, whether by accident or misfortune, of the fruits of his own studies; and the liberal and extended acquisitions of knowledge which he makes are all for his own use. Labor, my dear boy, therefore, and improve the time. In youth our steps are light, and our minds ductile, and knowledge is easily laid up. But if we neglect our spring, our summer will be useless and contemptible, our harvest will be chaff, and the winter of our old age unrespectful and desolate.—Sir Walter Scott (letter to his son).

Considerations.

As I am a Deacon in the Church, but not an officer in any branch, I thought according to the law in the books, that a duty was mine; so I will try, with hope I may have the prayers of the Saints.

We are as travelers here, all on a journey to a better country. We are now subject to droughts and wet seasons, insects and storms that destroy crops, life and property, and to sickness, etc. We have deep gloomy ravines to pass, and rugged, steep hills and mountains to climb and to travel over, on our way to a better clime. We need to encourage and help one another all we can on the way; the promise to all such is a right to live in that better land. We need to cultivate and have all the trust in God we can, and ask him to help us and trust that he will; this I understand is genuine faith, or "faith in God," that Christ commanded to have. Let us beware of the snares there be to lead astray from true belief, that we may all reach in safety that better land, (life) and thus share with the redeemed and enjoy peace and rest on earth, when the Lord shall come to be King of all the earth, and when all shall know, him and delight to do his will, and to respect and help each other.

Training Children.

How many a mother with her babe in her arms looking forward to his possible, and, in her fond eyes, his probable, future greatness, fails to realize that to her is largely given the work of laying the foundations of his success or failure in life. She is naturally solicitous that all his physical wants shall be amply supplied, but it seems a long time, looking forward, before he will be a man with the "heart and the hopes of a man." Yet, if when he has reached maturity she would still hold in his highest affections a mother's place, she must not forget the future man in the present babe; she will not only see to it that he is fed and clothed and cradled properly so that his physical growth and development shall be the best possible attainable by him, but she will in his moral, in his intellectual, in his social nature, lay broad and deep the foundation of a noble manhood.

The first work will naturally be forming in him the habit of prompt and implicit obedience to her will, which habit will be the foundation of obedience to all law, human and divine—of the law written in his members, on the statute book, or on the tables of stone. The next work, in a moral point of view, will be to insist upon perfect truthfulness, and never for a moment to look upon falsehood in her child as a venial fault. Alive to the importance of inculcating this principle of perfect veracity in her child, she will always treat him with perfect truthfulness, never deceive him, never betray his confidence. Reverence for the name of the Deity, for His worship, for the Sabbath, will be the next lesson inculcated, and will be the root whence reverence for all things high and pure must spring. For all social relations the Golden Rule is an infallible guide, and where the child has learned to be governed by this in his intercourse with his parents, with his brothers and sisters, with his playmates, he may be trusted to make his way in society.

From its parents the child should learn a proper self-respect and self appreciation. It is a vital mistake made by many parents, that of bringing up a child with a slight estimate of his capabilities, his importance, his talents. If he has the gift of beauty, from no lips can he so safely learn it as from the parental lips; if he has rare powers of intellect, he should find in his own home their most thoughtful appreciation, and for his moral action no words of approval should be so sweet to him as those his father and his mother speak.

Separation.

The strength of the Church of God consists largely in its separation from the world. Christians are called to forsake all and follow Christ. It is the policy of the deceiver to mingle all things good and bad, sacred and profane, in one confused and jumbled mass. God calls his people to come out and stand aloof, and thus escape the contaminating influences of the world. Persons sometimes excuse their conformity to the world by claiming that they join with them in order to do them good; but if a man is mired in a bog we do not extricate him by plunging in with him; if a boy has broken through the ice in a pond, we do not dive in with him in order to bring him out. We keep a safe distance, and push a plank toward him, and bid him take hold of it and escape from his perilous position. So if we desire to benefit the world, we can best accomplish our object by living in holy separation from it; and while thus separated from the world and consecrated to the Lord, we have power with God and also with man. Mingling with the world, we lose our fellowship with God and our testimony to man.

So long as Christians and worldlings are so mingled in business, in pleasure, and in religion, that no one can tell them apart, so long will the church be powerless and the world triumphant. "Wherefore, come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you and will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty." 2 Cor. 6: 17, 18

The Ancient People of Unknown Centuries.

Prof. John S. Newberry lately said in a lecture on the ancient civilization of America, before the Academy of Science, at New York, that when the savages were pressed back by advancing civilization between the lakes and the Mexican gulf, it was discovered that they were not autochthonous, for mounds, caves, palaces and remains of cities showed the existence of a race that lived in the highest style of civilization. Investigation and research by historians, geologists and archaeologists, have brought to light much concerning these wonderful people. They can be divided in two classes which, with local differences, are generally the same. One is the mound builders, who dwelt in the fertile valley of the Mississippi, following a sedentary and peaceful life. Mounds built by them and instruments and pottery and copper ornaments made by them, have been discovered all through the Mississippi valley. They were miners, farmers, raised tobacco, and remains of their oil wells still exist at Titusville, Pa. In numbers they probably equalled the inhabitants of the region at present, and enough is known of their osteology to say they were of medium size, fair proportions, with a cranial development not unlike our red Indian. Their teeth were large and strong. They buried their dead with great ceremony. When, and why, and how the mound builder disappeared we do not know. Their ultimate fate was probably entire extinction.

The second class of these early Americans was the palace-builders of the table-lands, a class that was spread from Chili, on the south, to Utah on the north, reaching their greatest degree of power and civilization in Central America, Mexico and Peru. The Incas and Montezumas were types of this race, and though when swept from the earth by the brutality of Pizarro and Cortez, their glory was already in its decadence, we can scarcely conceive of the extent of their magnificence. This Mexican and Peruvian era far surpassed anything in our day in the construction of public works, roads, aqueducts, palaces and cities. The unmacadamized road that led from Callao to Lima exceeded in cost the Union Pacific railroad, and if all the forts within our borders were put into one, it would not equal the fortified structure that is yet to be seen on the Peruvian coast. Louis Hoffman, an engineer who was with Maximilian, has described the ruins of a large sea-port town on the Pacific coast of Mexico. The Central American country abounds in evidences of the Aztec race, and last winter many archaeologists went thither, and from their labors we shall soon learn more of this wondrous people. Their origin is lost in antiquity. They may have come from seed borne across the sea by Phœnician traders—perhaps they sprang from the fabled race of Atlantis. They were either indigenous or imported in an embryotic state from the oriental archipelago—the latter most likely.

THERE is more need than most teachers would be willing to admit, for the caution given, which we here earnestly repeat—that "A teacher sometimes thinks he is doing a very good work by telling his scholars of the questions and objections of skeptics as to the Scripture lesson of the day, and then giving what he deems a satisfactory answer to these cavils. But he must have a care lest in doing this he merely suggest doubt to his scholars' minds, instead of strengthening their faith. The question raised may strike them more forcibly than the answer with which he is satisfied. Their is rarely any gain through explaining to the young the details of doubts or vices with which they are yet unfamiliar. At all events, the work should be attempted only for a good reason and with exceeding caution. The better way is to tell what is the truth of the lesson and what is its application, rather than what has been said against it, and why it has been doubted."—Independent.

"ACTA PILATI."

We publish in this issue the bulk of a little book found in his labors by Bro. R. M. Elvin, bearing the above title: The Acts of Pilate. It is prefaced with several letters showing that the work is a translation from an ancient document in the Records of Tiberias Cæsar, found in the Vatican at Rome, a transcript of which is said to have been procured from Peter Freelinhusen, by H. C. Whydeman, for W. D. Mahan, by whom the book was published. We print it as we find it; and if authentic, it adds corroborative evidence to the Story of the Cross as found in the New Testament. Of its genuineness we can not say, but see no reason on its face to doubt it.

We are asked by a brother to explain why he is wrong in believing that the "Lord's Supper" should be partaken of every Sunday.

We do not find fault with this belief as entertained by the brother, or any others; but when it is assumed that this is the imperative law, and that the Church is in transgression for partaking on any other day, or for not partaking every Sunday, because this is the law, we demur to the opinion as not correct. The law of God in Doctrine and Covenants upon the Lord's Supper, states specifically that the Church shall "meet together often" for the purpose; but does not determine what the term "often" may mean. The Church has not by resolution, rule, or statement, fixed the time to be covered by this word "often;" but has, as we believe wisely, left the matter to be determined by the circumstances and condition of each and every branch, according to wisdom. The day to be chosen upon which this often may fall is named elsewhere, and is not found specially in connection with the Sacramental Supper; which is easily seen by the declaration found in it, "Nevertheless ye shall keep all days holy alike," which literally sanctifies any other day set apart to those services, if need require.

It is the custom in some branches, quite large ones among them, to meet for the sacrament and testimony, in fellowship meetings, every Sunday, sometimes in the forenoon, but mostly in the afternoon; and in none with which we are acquainted, where any regard is had to regularity, are the stated periods farther apart than every first Sunday in the month.

In the revelation concerning the Sabbath the plural form of the word is used, sacraments; "thou shalt go to the house of prayer and offer up thy sacraments upon my holy day," * * * "thou shalt offer thine oblations and thy sacraments unto the Most High."

In the Greek and Roman churches there are six sacraments: confirmation, penance, holy orders, matrimony, extreme unction and the Lord's Supper. Protestants have two, baptism and the Lord's Supper. These all have their signification from the original meaning of the word, an oath, a sacred thing, a mystery, a holy token, or pledge; practically, a service commemorating a vow, or sacred obligation. In this meaning it has been used as opposed to Catholicism in reference to the Lord's Supper, and possibly thus the meaning has been contracted to that alone. But the word being used in the plural wherever it occurs in the revelation respecting the Sabbath, would seem clearly to imply that more than the Lord's Supper was meant. The words "it is expedient that the Church meet together often," gives to us the understanding that in regard to this ordinance, time, place and surrounding conditions should govern in wisdom. This view is confirmed by a consideration of that part "Nevertheless thy vows shall be offered up in righteousness on all days and at all times."

What we wished in our former reference to it was this: that upon the institution of the sacrament of the Lord's Supper in the Church, as indicated by the article, "It is expedient that the Church meet together often to partake of bread and wine, in remembrance of the Lord Jesus;" it was intended to leave the times when this meeting should take place to be determined by the Church, branch, or body of believers, according to their condition and circumstances and the wisdom obtaining among them. If we failed to make our meaning plain then, we hope we have not failed now.

All present partook of the measure of enjoyment.

We publish a letter giving texts bearing on the subject of usury, which it will be seen we were requested to insert. We do so with cheerfulness, all the more, because we are as much opposed to usury and oppression as the writer of the letter, or any one else can be. But we can not see that any of the texts answer the former article referred to. A proper remuneration for the use and occupation of what belongs of right to another, which use and occupation accrue to the good of the one occupying, or using, governed of course by the circumstances surrounding each case, seems to us to be right, and to have its warrant in much that is written, and the structure of society, even at its best.

Bro. WM. ANDERSON, of Oakland, and Bro. George S. Lincoln, of San Francisco, California, are ordering from the office, at their own expense, some ten thousand tracts, in 500, 1000 and 5000 lots, and are distributing them over the cities they live in. They are both in business, and believe that it is a good business to scatter the printed word. We furnish these brethren, and will all others, tracts at a trifle above actual cost. We shall make strong efforts to get the tracts flying like snow flakes, this Fall and Winter.

We want the Saints to talk a weekly HERALD up between now and January first next; and be ready for it in mind, purpose and purse. The advance on the price will be but a trifle, and we don't want any one to decline to take it. We want the Elders, local and traveling, to canvass for the HERALD. If you find any wanting it, send us the names and addresses, and we will send the paper. Get all the subscribers you can. We now print 3600; make it 4000 by January 1st.

BRO. BRIGGS ALDEN, of Fontanelle, Iowa, writes August 2d, that his health was failing and that he felt that he was not destined long to remain in this mundane life.

"On reading at the eleventh hour of worship, on the Sabbath of May 14th or 21st, I am not certain which, I read the 19th chapter, or section of Book of Covenants, and have now, and at that time I had an additional witness of the position you are occupying; and made up my mind to hold fast to the position that your father brought forth; and to reject all prophets that reject faith in Christ, and baptism and laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost. All who reject Mormonism, I shall reject, and continue to reject, and do; yes, and will continue to reject while I stay on earth."

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. John Carmichael, of San Benito, California, president of the Northern District, is of the opinion that some one from the officers east of the Rockies would do the work great good in the Golden State; and would like to see one of them to come there. He wrote July 4th:

"Send one here that never has been here before. All that have been sent latterly, in the past, have been here before. And now, if we have a change, all will be satisfied. Now is a good time to do so; the people in this State in many places are more favorable to us. I find no fault with any of the Elders that have been sent, as far as my experience is, they have all done their duty, and are good men; but as the old adage is, a new broom sweeps clean. I devote to the work about eight months of my time in the year, and the spiritual state of the conference is not dead, as some would represent it. All the Elders in the District are alive to the work, and many are striving to do their duty, and I have much pleasure in laboring amongst them. Peace and love prevails, except what I have mentioned. In the future through the help of the Spirit, I intend to do all I can for the advancement of the work of the Master; and my prayer is that we all may have much of the Spirit to help us to do so.

Bro. Joseph Curtis writes from Summer Hill, Nebraska, July 19th, 1882:

Lately we have been encouraged by Bro. J. F. Mintun. I think he has done a good work here. He preaches faith and repentance to the world, and the law and gospel to the Saints. I think, if all our Elders were as straightforward as he is in his duty, we would not have as much trouble in the Church. There are plenty of calls for preaching here. So you see there is no need of any one sitting still with their arms folded.

A brother, David S. Seavey, living at Tennant's Harbor, Maine, wrote to Bro. Joel Edmunds, of Sunol Glen, California, asking some questions respecting the character of the information given by the Nephite visitors, whom Bro. Edmunds mentioned in his letter lately published in HERALD. In reply to this Bro. Edmunds wishes to answer through the HERALD, so that others may be satisfied also; as follows, quoting from his letter:

My answer is this, to all inquiring friends. The Nephite told me nothing, only what is written in the Holy Scriptures, the Mormon Book, and the Book of Covenants. He talked much about the Order of Enoch, and showed the wisdom in living up to that order, as Enoch learned while here on earth.

Bro. Richard Ferris writing from Oakland, California, lately, states that:

One baptized lately into our branch, and one to be baptized from San Francisco next Sunday. A spirit of peace prevailing. Bro. Anderson and some others quite active in spreading the gospel news. We have got special permit to preach on the streets.

BRO. B. V. SPRINGER was to leave St. Louis, August 7th, for Alma, Illinois. By letter dated August 2d, he says:

I arrived yesterday and am in tolerable fair fighting trim. There is a branch of the Brighamite order here, in full blast, and I want to look after them, and shall give them a chance to give us the true inwardness of their system in a discussion, if I can get them into it; if not, I shall bombard the institution and fairly and fully represent its true inwardness. Will you please forward me such weapons as shall be effective, all tracts that bear upon the difference between us, especially that sweet scented and delectable, celestialized, and crystalized and materialized Revelation of July, 1843, and I will try to improvise such a simple sling as shepherds use to fight this Goliath (not the Son of Anak) but the Son of Lamech and grandson of the devil.

Correspondence.

DENVER, Colorado, July 22d, 1882.

Bro. Joseph:—Please whisper in Herald, thusly: I have no objection to answer inquiries touching Colorado, finding paper and envelopes, but would rather all enquiries be accompanied by a stamp. These are my sentiments. On July 15th, with other letters received, was one containing a dollar for church building, which, ere I learned name and post office, I unfortunately lost; will those sending about that time re-address me and oblige. Those wishing, may address me at Denver, Colorado, or Hutchinson, Jefferson county, Colorado.

Our Colorado bark is beset with adverse winds, blasts frequent and fierce, all from within. Our first ministerial bow was made in Greeley, a very pretty city of 2,000 inhabitants, fifty-one miles north of Denver, Sunday, June 24th. A few looks at a fair looking Latter Day Saint seems to suffice some. One of the most intellectual of the place, to flatter, or for some other reason, told us we preached more gospel truth than others, but we should find the citizens of Greeley sceptical, which I don't doubt. You doubtless will excuse my brevity for once.

JAS. CAFFALL.

SHACKLEVILLE, Alabama,

August 2d, 1882.

Bro. Joseph:—I have felt impressed for some time to write you a few lines. Butler Branch at present is in tolerable working order. Since our conference we have been striving to some extent to serve our Master. Conference passed off very pleasantly; the weather was very warm, which under the circumstances rendered it a little unpleasant, yet we had a good attendance on Sunday. The business transacted, and the measures taken, seemed to be agreeably and united, with one exception, and that was in regard to a request to General Conference for an Elder to this mission. There were two Elders who favored a motion that our conference request the General Conference to send us one of the Twelve to work in this Mission. This was certainly a strange request, when there was one already here, and one that had given satisfaction. The strangeness and injustice of this request was not perceived until after it had passed. Most of the members after a little thought and reflection were displeased, and censured themselves for not having an explanation.

Knowing that Bro. Lambert was here with us, it seemed to me, and also to others, that it was an unjust reflection upon Bro. Lambert. The majority of the Saints speak of Bro. Lambert as the right man in the right place. We are pleased with him; we love him; he has by his conduct here in this mission, endeared himself in the hearts of the people;—not only the Saints, but to world. There has been no strife, no contention; difficulties have been settled. Where Bro. Lambert has been, his wisdom in the management of the affairs of the district that came before him, and his steadfast example, and his love for the work, as a brother, a companion, a friend, he has made friends that will always have a warm place in their hearts for him. We hope he will be assigned this mission again. He has done good in this South land, although his health has been poor, yet he suffered and pressed on.

What I say of Bro. Lambert is in unison with the feelings of all that I have talked with, not in this branch, but in the other branches also. His letter to the Greenville Advocate opened the eyes of many, and no doubt will do good in days to come.

I cast no reflection on his predecessors; they were good men, and are remembered with pleasure by the Saints here. Yet as this request from the Conference convened at Butler Branch has been sent up to General Conference, and as several of the brethren requested me to write to you as an explanation, and to express their feelings and views upon the subject, and I hope that all will work out for good. If you think this worthy of a place in the Herald, I would be glad to have it published in justice to Bro. Lambert and others.

Praying for the success and final triumph of the work, I am your brother in Christ,

J. M. PICKENS,

Clerk of Buller Branch.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., July 18th, 1882.

Editor Herald:—We send you an article from the Armory, of Boston, which we hope you will find room for in the Herald. We feel that it is highly appropriate to this especial season, when the worldly circus, picnic, midnight summer festival, Sunday excursions and fishing parties, are in full blast. Our position in the Church affords us ample knowledge to know, and also to desire, that a warning of this kind should be sounded, and if necessary a halt called to the Church.

Yours in the faith,

J. F. MCKENNA,

A. J. PERRY,

Teachers in Providence Branch.

FALL RIVER, Mass.,

July 10th, 1882.

Bro. Joseph:—We left Worcester, my wife's home, May 31st, to attend the Massachusetts District Conference, held at Douglas. Here we met a number of brothers and sisters, whom it had not been our privilege to meet before, and we truly enjoyed their society. The conference passed off pleasantly. By request we went from there to Boston remaining one week; I had been there twice before. The Boston Branch is in a fair condition, the Saints are striving to do the Lord's will, and the prospects are that many of those who are interested will accept the gospel ere long. Bro. E. N. Webster is an efficient and faithful laborer and greatly blessed of the Lord. He is doing all that lies in his power to forward the work.

Bro. Webster and I took a ride on one of those beautiful steamers, which are found in all these sea-port cities for pleasure trips, and I obtained my first view of the mighty rolling ocean. Language is inadequate to express my feelings of admiration and awe, while gazing upon its grandeur, it was indeed a sublime sight, as far as eye could reach I beheld the deep blue waters, dotted here and there by the white sails of the messengers of the deep, and I thought of the great Creator who controlleth all the works of his hands, and how great his care over us, poor children of the dust, that even the hairs of our head are all numbered. Truly I felt to rejoice in calling such a great and all-wise Being, My Father.

We next called on the Providence Branch, staying with them a week, had excellent times with the Saints. Bro. F. M. Sheehy, the Presiding Elder, is doing his best to build up the work there; Bro. Frank is a man of ability and ought to be sustained as a traveling Elder in the field. He is highly thought of and much respected, by all the Saints in the East, who have known him for many years. We left Providence, Rhode Island, en route for Brooklyn, New York, stopping however, by invitation at Fall River, Massachusetts. The Saints here have one of the finest chapels that I have seen in my travels. This Branch is in a good working condition. Bro. John Potts is the Presiding Elder, and an excellent singer. He leads the congregational singing, which is the best I have heard for years. Bro. John Gilbert is a member of this branch, but now is traveling in the District. Bro. Gilbert is an able expounder of the truth. A man fit to represent this Church any where. His excellent wife is willing to sacrifice in order that he may work in the field. Bro. Gilbert is worthy of a mission from General Conference. There has been six baptized since we came to this place, five by Bro. Gilbert and one by myself. We intend to leave here shortly for Brooklyn, thence to Pennsylvania. We are going to our mission as rapidly as circumstances will permit. All has not been as propitious as we could wish in the past. Our trials have been many, but the Lord has given us his Spirit to comfort and cheer us. We feel grateful to all the Saints in the East for their kindness and hospitality.

Your brother in Christ,
G. T. GRIFFITHS.

OLIVET, Iowa, July 22d, 1882.

Bro. Joseph Smith:—On last Sunday I preached twice to crowded houses of attentive listeners. In the evening the house held about one half the audience. I speak again to-morrow. And one week from to-morrow (July 30th), I am, weather permitting, to preach in a grove offered me by a Catholic friend. It is ready for services. I enjoyed most excellent liberty in dispensing the truth as it was and is in Christ. I never feel so well as when in the "sacred desk," giving of "the bread of life" unto the people.

An aged gentleman, Bliss, by name, talks here bi-weekly, as Mrs. Partington would say—"dispensing with the gospel," for which reason she (?) liked to go Church! When I declare God's saving truth, as the words fall from my lips, I feel that there is nothing in earth nor hell that can successfully oppose it. It is God's triumphant word, and ever conquering work.

"How firm a foundation ye saints of the Lord,
Is laid for your faith in his excellent word."

Yours in the gospel,
J. FRANK McDOWELL.

ON USURY.

FALL RIVER, July 24th, 1882.

Editor Herald: Sir:—In a recent date of your esteemed paper, appeared an advocacy of yours in support of the taking of interest on money. I have culled the following scriptural texts, and would desire to put them before your readers; they are well worth pondering over.

"Thou shalt not lend to thy brother money to usury, nor corn, nor any other thing."—Num. 23:19. "To thy brother thou shalt lend that which he wanteth, without usury, that the Lord thy God may bless thee in the land which thou shalt go in to possess."—Deut. 23:20. "If thou lend money to any of my people that is poor that dwelleth with thee, thou shalt not be hard upon him as an extortioner, nor oppress him with usuries."—Exodus 22:25. "Take not usury of him, nor more than thou gavest. Fear thy God that thy brother may live with thee."—Leviticus 25:36. "Thou shalt not give him thy money upon usury, nor exact of him any increase of fruits."—Leviticus 25:37. "And I rebuked the nobles and magistrates and said to them, Do you every one exact usury of your brethren? And I gathered together a great assembly against them."—Esdra 5:7. "Hath not wronged any man, but hath restored the pledge to the debtor; hath not lent upon usury, nor taken any increase; hath withdrawn his hand from iniquity."—Ezekiel 18:7, 8. "They have taken gifts in thee to shed blood; thou hast taken usury and increase; and hast covetously oppressed thy neighbors, and thou hast forgotten me, saith the Lord God. Behold I have clapped my hands at thy covetousness, which thou hast exercised, and at the blood that has been shed in the midst of thee. Shall thy heart endure, or shall thy hands prevail, in the days which I will bring upon thee. I the Lord have spoken and I will do it."—Ezekiel 22:12, 14.

These texts ought to convince any man that God does not sanction usury; that on the contrary it is a crime the perpetrator of which must pay the penalty. "I the Lord have spoken and I will do it."—Ezekiel 22:14. But the usurer disregards the admonitions of God, as he does the sufferings of man; yet we must make the people understand that usury is a sin, that it is opposed to the divine law as well as to the good of society; for if it were in accordance with divine law it would also be for the welfare of the human race. Sir, I believe you to be a friend of truth and justice, though it may be against yourself; therefore, Sir, I doubt not but you will publish the above letter.

Your friend in the cause of truth and justice to all humanity alike,

PATRICK SMITH.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa.,
July 28th, 1882.

Bro. Joseph Smith:—We left Fall River on the 19th inst. for Brooklyn, N. Y. I shall never forget the pleasure we experienced in the society of the Fall River Saints. While there I baptized five, one of whom was Bro. John W. Whiting who was an Elder in England in the days of your father, he has never united with any of the various factions; from the fact he became disgusted with the actions he saw in the Utah Church and he can relate things about it which are too abominable to write. Since the days of the apostasy he has been wandering like a sheep without a shepherd, but at last after many years of trouble and dissatisfaction of mind the prodigal son has returned to his Father's house to feast upon the good things of the Lord, and thus may he ever remain faithful unto the end of his days, that he may be worthy to enjoy the final rest that the Lord has promised the tried ones of Israel.

Bro. John Smith of New Bedford, President of Massachusetts District, showed by the manner he presided over their conference that he believed in observing heaven's first law (order), and the results are that everything passed off harmoniously. We arrived in this city the 22d inst, preached Sunday morning in their Hall; in the evening had the pleasure of hearing Bro. Joseph A. Stewart at the house of Bro. A. Grist, who has fitted up a room for that purpose in another part of the city. We leave here the 29th inst, for Hyde Park, Pa., thence to Danville. P. O. address Hyde Park, Penn.

Your brother in Christ,
G. T. GRIFFITHS.

BURLINGTON, Iowa,
August 1st, 1882.

Dear Herald:—A short time ago, Bro. Johnson and myself visited Montrose, Iowa, on the Chicago Burlington and Quincy Railroad, opposite Nauvoo. We found from fifteen to twenty Saints, who, to our surprise were all sisters. One male member, an Elder, lives in Nauvoo, but being well advanced in years can not visit them as often as he would like to do. They have a neat little church, all finished, and what is better, paid for. The inside is most tastily papered, both ceiling and walls. Suitable mottoes decorate the walls; such as, "Christ is risen;" "No Cross, no crown;" "I am the light of the world." On the pulpit are these words, "The Lord is my strength." But best of all the mottoes for a people who are so often judged without a hearing was this one, "First hear, then judge." The church reflects much credit on the sisters, as the work of finishing it has all been accomplished through their instrumentality. Sunday morning we attended the Sunday School, superintended by Sr. Turner. There were about twenty five present. At eleven o'clock a. m., Bro. Johnson preached to an attentive congregation. In the afternoon we met again for Sacrament, after which six were administered to. In the evening Bro. Johnson preached on the Resurrection, and was greatly blessed with the Spirit. There were a goodly number present. May God bless the seed sown, and give the increase, that will bring those in the fold that will be a help to the faithful ones there. While there we visited Sr. Simpson in her affliction. May the Saints remember her in their prayers. A month ago Bro. Johnson administered to Sr. Shroder's boy, ten or twelve years old. At the time he was a living skeleton; he is now well, and enjoying good health. The Lord has not forsaken us here, but is still manifesting his power in the healing of the sick. A sister here who was nigh unto death was administered to by Bro. Johnson, and the Lord raised her up. All glory to his name.

Yours in the gospel,

R. R. GAITHER.

IRON HILL, Iowa,
July 22d, 1882.

Bro. Joseph Smith:—I shall attempt to write to you once more. My health for the past few months has been so poor that I have been unable to visit the Saints in this district; but am feeling better now. All that I have seen have appeared to be trying to live their religion. We have been somewhat disappointed by not having more Elders to preach here. We expected Bro. McDowell to be with us at our last conference, but he failed to come.

Sister Lowe, of Baldwin, died the 13th of July; she died strong in the faith. She left a kind husband and six children and many loving friends, who will miss her greatly. Ever praying for the latter day work,

I am your brother in bonds,
EDWARD LARKEY.

42 York Street, Cheetham, MANCHESTER, England,
July 20th, 1882.

Bro. Joseph:—I was much interested in the reading of the conversation had by Bro. Chatburn, on his recent visit of Elder David Whitmer, as detailed in your issue for June the 15th last. And I found in conversing with the brethren and sisters here, that they, like Bro. Chatburn, had concluded that at the organization of the Church, April 6th, 1830, the membership upon that date consisted of six persons only. But upon referring to the history of your father, "Joseph Smith," I find that our aged brother's statement is quite correct, and in keeping with what is therein written; as will be admitted upon perusal of the following extracts speaking of circumstances that transpired about June, 1829, he says: "The Lord continued to pour out his Holy Spirit, and as often as we had need, he gave us in that moment what to say; so that, although unlearned and inexperienced in religious controversy, yet we were able to confound those learned Rabbis of the day, whilst at the same time we were enabled to convince the honest in heart that we obtained, through the mercy of God, to the true and everlasting gospel of Jesus Christ, so that almost daily we administered the ordinance of baptism for the remission of sins to such as believed. We became anxious to have that promise realized to us, which the angel that conferred upon as Aronic priesthood had given us, viz., that provided we continued faithful, we should also have the Melchisedec priesthood, which holds the authority of the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost. We had for some time made this matter a subject of humble prayer, and at length we got together in the chamber of Mr. Whitmer's house, in order more particularly to seek of the Lord what we now so earnestly desired; and here, to our unspeakable satisfaction did we realize the truth of the Savior's promise 'Ask, and you shall receive; seek, and you shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you.' For we had not been long engaged in solemn and fervent prayer, when the word of the Lord came unto us in the chamber, commanding us that I should ordain Oliver Cowdery to be an Elder in the Church of Jesus Christ, and that he also should ordain me to the same office, and then to ordain others as it should be made known unto us from time to time. We were, however, commanded to defer this our ordination until such times as it should be practicable to have our brethren, who had been and who should be baptized, assembled together, when we must have their sanction to our thus proceeding to ordain each other, and have them decide by vote whether they were willing to accept us as spiritual teachers or not, when also we were commanded to bless bread and break it with them, and to take wine, bless it and drink it with them. Afterward proceed to ordain each other according to commandment, then call out such men as the spirit should dictate and ordain them, and then attend to the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost, upon all those whom we had previously baptized, doing all things in the name of the Lord."

After citing a Revelation concerning the calling of the Twelve Apostles, given in Fayette, New York, June, 1829, he continues: "In this manner did the Lord continue to give us instructions from time to time, concerning the duties which now devolved upon us; and among many other things of the kind, we obtained of him the following by the spirit of prophecy and revelation, which not only gave us much information, but also pointed out to us the precise day upon which, according to his will and commandment, we should proceed to organize His Church once again here upon the earth."

After a further citing of revelations he continues: "While the Book of Mormon was in the hands of the printer, we still continued to bear testimony, and give information, as far as we had opportunity; and also made known to our brethren that we had received commandment to organize the church, and accordingly we met together for that purpose at the house of the above mentioned Mr. P. Whitmer, being six in number, on Tuesday, the sixth day of April, A. D. one thousand eight hundred and thirty." Millennial Star, vol. 4, Nos. 7 and 8, November and December, 1843.

I think the foregoing fully confirms the statement of Elder Whitmer, and bespeaks for him a retentive memory in his green old age.

In the history of Joseph Smith, Millennial Star, vol. 5, Nos. 1 and 2, July, 1844; I there find the baptism of Sidney Rigdon fixed at the same time as given by Elder Lyman Wight; (See letter of H. C. Smith, in Herald for June 15th, 1882). viz, during a mission of Elders Parley P. Pratt, Ziba Peterson, Oliver Cowdery and Peter Whitmer, in the Fall of 1830 I mention these matters as being confirmatory of the statements of the brethren, and of interest to the readers of the Herald, and the membership of the Church.

The position of the Church in the Manchester District is very encouraging. A fair amount of progress is being made; inquiries are numerous; we have had several baptisms of late; the candidates bid fair to become creditable and useful members of the Church. We are about extending our operations in several directions, with fair prospects of success. There is a good spirit manifested in the several branches composing the district; the official brethren seem to desire to magnify their respective positions in the Church; we have the Spirit manifested in our administrations, and peace prevails. I believe that with wise council and judicious labor there is a future before the Church in this country that will surpass anything in the past. Brighamism is dead here; they have had to give up their meeting room here in Manchester, not being able to support it. I do not think that they have ever been at such a low ebb before. And while Brighamism is declining, the Reorganized Church is steadily increasing in membership and in influence, corresponding with the diligence in good works of the membership of the body. So far, we have not made a great deal of noise, but we have in an unassuming manner endeavored to live in keeping with our profession, and teach by our example as well as by our precept; and God has blessed our humble efforts in this direction. I believe that the Saints in this district desire the prosperity of the Church, and work obediently and loyally to that end. We shall be glad when we receive the Herald as a weekly, for therein we find food for reflection, and the means of consolation in many trying circumstances, besides, we are cheered in our labors, by the success of our brethren and sisters, as detailed in their letters to its pages from time to time.

Ever praying for the success of the gospel of Christ, yours in the Covenant of Peace, JOSEPH DEWSNUP.

BOSTON, Massachusetts.

Dear Brother:—The work in Boston is in a very good condition. There is chance for improvement, and we believe most of us are trying to improve. From the Dennisport conference to the conference at Douglas, June 6th, nine were added by baptism. Some are enquiring, and one or two near obedience. I am still in the faith, and striving for the victory. Through faith in Christ, prayer and obedience, I expect to evercome.

Yours in hope,
E. N. WEBSTER.

DEER CREEK, Minnesota,
July 27th, 1882.

Bro. Joseph:—It is with pleasure I improve the opportunity to pen you a few lines. I am the only member of the Church in this part of the country. My name is on the record with the Oak Lake Branch. Part of the Oak Lake Branch have moved east of Lake Clitherall. My brother, L. D. Sperry, moved to Shenandoah, Iowa, two years ago last fall; and I feel as though I was the hundredth sheep that was lost from the flock, and no shepherd to hunt after me. Deer Creek seems very dear to me, and I have neighbors that I love as myself, right or wrong. It has seemed to me for a long time that I must write to you, and ask you to send some Elders to preach here. I think there could be quite a branch raised here. There is a little town called Deer Creek Station. A number of houses are being built now. I have been thinking for a long time, if there was some Elders that could work at the carpenter's trade five days in the week, rest on the sixth and preach the seventh, it would be of great worth to this place. There has been some close calls, Minnesota has had some cyclones as they are called, or tornadoes all around us, but we have never had one here yet that has done very much damage. Two years ago this Summer we had a tornado just as stacking was done, that riddled the grain stacks, but did no damage to buildings. Some of my neighbors thought the widow's castle would be blown away; but it still stands. My house wants repairing and we have had the lumber ever since last January, and can't get any one to fix it. I have plenty of house room for two Elders, if there are any to come, and will be glad to have them make it their home here with me. There are two school-houses in the district. I gave the district I live in the use of half an acre to build a school-house on, and there has never been a sermon preached in it, that I recollect of; I think it is held in reserve, for the pure testimony of Jesus to be preached to those that think the sectarian religion is all a humbug. I know of some young men that never heard but one sermon preached of the Latter Day Saints' gospel, and were greatly taken up with it; one of whom says that God has nothing to do with the people now a days; that in olden times he sent messengers to the people to see what they were doing, but now a days he had nothing to do with them. I think my neighbors are as good people as the Lord has in reserve, according to what they know. I have prayed night and day to the Lord to protect me and my people, as I call them. When I hear of the fierce judgments of God that have been poured out upon the earth this Summer past, I think I can not hold the fort any longer. I must have help, and I have thought so for a year.

Fiddling and dancing is all the young folks have to occupy their leisure moments. If they could have meetings to go to that were interesting, and the gospel explained as I have heard it, fiddling and dancing would be done away with. I hope you won't think I am insane and will overlook my imperfection. Please send me one of your news papers if you print any, and one of the last issue of the Herald. Address Mrs. Amelia M. Stillman, Deer Creek, Ottotail Co, Minn.

MOON, Muskegon Co., Michigan,
June 3d, 1882.

Bro. Joseph:—The smouldering spark, on the altar of my heart, has again caught a little new fire. In the Herald of the first of this month, under the head, "A few thoughts on local work," is the spirit that fans the spark, not quite to a burning flame, would God it were so. Now for the words most beneficial to my brethren, is the prayer of the writer. With my brother as a detective, so far as he goes, I find no fault, but in suggesting the remedy is where the fire begins to kindle. A little of my experience will illustrate.

For years before I knew of this Church, claiming all the glory of the gospel in her midst, I had a great desire to preach the gospel as it was preached by the Son of God. I always knew a miracle must be wrought for full liberty and success in the ministry, but that seemed to be God's greatest delight, to raise up the weak by his miraculous power, to the astonishment of all the world. So this was no stumbling block. But I soon discovered my sectarian brethren did not so see it; and after much sorrow of heart, and prayer to God, I gained strength to place my views in a crude form before my brethren; and this added to my sorrow, for some were offended. Still I could not rest. I continued to press my claim to many different sects, and in many localities, but never gained sufficient confidence to make an application for ordination, till I came to this wonderful church, claiming all the blessings of the gospel. Then I made my application, and there it lies, and I turned away empty. If they discovered anything in my heart as an objection, (unlike our Savior), they have failed to point it out, that I might repent and be filled, or turn away full of contempt, for none ever went away from Jesus empty. I have always thought the miracle seemed too heavy, and therefore my heart has been full of pity and charity; but this will not always answer in place of solid labor. And now let me ask my brother to take another step as detective, for self, for selfishness has caused some of the greatest men that ever lived, to come short of the full desire of their heart. Moses closed the door into the promised land against himself by it. And let me ask you to read 1st and 2d Peter, all carefully and prayerfully, and remember the records of Paul, that a husbandman must first be partaker of the fruits; and see if you can not prove 2d Peter 1:8 true, by going laden with the richest fruits of the Lord's vineyard, to set before all who will accept. And then tell me, if you ever have another occasion, to return home, leaving poor Bro. Bill, with a broken heart, and full of wounds, without bandage or the oil of gladness, selfishly satisfied to brow beat to hide self barrenness. Dear brother, with your remedy for weakness, I am afraid the sectarians will soon claim you. There is only a short step between you. They claim all the time for a man to make himself interesting; you nearly all. For an eye opener on these points, please read Mosiah 9:9; 11:15-19, 20; Alma 1:6; 4; all of 16:6-8.

And, O, my dear brother Bill, let me say a word to you. Please remember how you were enabled to yield obedience to the ordinances of the holy law, by the drawings of the Lord's Spirit. And if his agents by the laying on of hands, have failed to bind up the broken heart, and fill it with the spirit of inspiration, which causes the tongue to speak the words of eternal life; do not be discouraged, but let thine eye be single, and thy prayer constant, and the Lord will do for you what his agents have failed to do. Do not try to find rerief for your aching heart in places where men congregate to idle away their time; flee them as you would the infernal pit awaiting the ungodly. A bright and beautiful day is always shedding its rays of light before the eyes of the faithful; and I believe the morning of that day already begins to break, and the angels, as morning stars, are set to flash the glories of that day's light down through the darkness to us poor mortals of earth. Therefore, let us watch faithfully for their counsel; and not be deceived by him who would transform himself from the regions of night.

Yours in the love of heaven's law,
M. N. COLE.

P. S. I find by a more thorough search it should be Mosiah 11:15-20; this, after all the references for a further account of the fruits of one man with an eye single to his God, please read Alma 12 and 15. Please make this correction in its proper place.

DOUGLAS, Neb., July 29th, 1882.

Bro. Joseph:—I send a notice of enquiry, which I would like, if you please, for you to put in the Herald:

Information desired as to the whereabouts of William Underwood (brother of the second wife of C. W. Penrose), or any of the family, especially his wife, Cecilia Underwood, (formerly Baldray). The last heard from, he had moved from Kayesville to Cache Valley, Utah. Mrs. Mary Ann Taylor, (formerly Baldray), Summer Hill P. O., Douglas Co., Nebraska.

This lady is now wife of Bro. Robert C. Taylor. She belonged as member to the old organization; but suffered so much upon arriving at Omaha from England, in one of the "Mormon" trains, that she is distrustful as yet of accepting the Reorganization, but she says she knows the gospel as she received it to be true.

How much must some have suffered to almost distrust their own minds. Yes, God knows they suffered, and what will be the end thereof!

I am still preaching here, to only fair congregations. I shall close my labors at this place tomorrow night, and leave the result with God to bring forth the increase. I have planted, and shall abide time for growth, praying that some may have fallen in good ground.

Yours as ever,
J. F. MINTUN.

P. S. I am still preaching at Elkhorn Station Douglas is the name of the Post Office.

CORINTH, Ontario, July 3d, 1882.

Bro. Joseph:—I have just been home a short time from Conference. I took a trip into north Michigan, where I have grandchildren. Their father was very anxious that an Elder should come there to preach; he and wife are ready to be baptized, believing the word from the letters and papers that I have sent him. An Elder will find a home at his house. It is in Bro. W. H. Kelley's mission, I believe; his address is Albert Buckner, Bear Lake P. O., Manistee county, Michigan. If an Elder can find their way there, I should be glad of it. I also found a good branch of Saints at Hersey, under the presidency of Bro. Joseph Shippy. It seemed to confirm and strengthen me, to find the president of the first branch that I belonged to in Canada, running an orderly and well established branch in a new place. It did seem as if I heard and found so many places where they wanted the word preached. Joseph, will the supply ever be equal to the demand for the administering the Word of Life. Surely "there is a famine in the land; not for the want of bread, but of hearing the word of the Lord." Let us pray the Lord of the harvest to send faithful laborers into the field; for assuredly the grain is ready for the sickle.

When I got home it was too late to go to our conference, so I have not seen any of our missionaries but Bro. Gurley, who stopped here over Sabbath and held forth to a very attentive congregation in the evening; and then went on his way to the Walsingham Branch, where I think an Elder was much needed. I was all confirmed down to General Conference, and felt repaid for my money. That the people of God may have many such glorious conferences; and that in the center places of Zion too, is my prayer. Truly the Saints are finding grace and favor in the eyes of the people. Bro. Joseph, remember us here in your prayers, if you can happen to think of us among the many things that you have to think of. Most truly and sincerely a sister in the bonds of truth, JANNET PEARSON.

July 24th, 1882.

Bro. Joseph Smith:—Our branch is still increasing. I baptized a young man of twenty-one years of age, a very promising, faithful and devout man in the cause of his Master; three others have been baptized some two months since. One of the three was an old lady about sixty years of age, who has been a Catholic for many years, but now rejoices in the truth; the other two were young sisters, about fifteen and seventeen years old. The Saints are all well except Bro. John Roberts, he is still in poor health. I am in my usual health at present, so is the family. Remember me before the throne of God, that I may be able to discharge my duty. I have no desire to do my own will, but the will of my father which is in heaven. May God bless, is my prayer.

I remain your brother in Christ,
D. J. PHILLIPS.

May 31st, 1882.

Bro. Joseph:—Some of the sisters in the Providence Branch have organized a society which meets every two weeks for prayer and testimony; also carry garments ready cut and fitted, to be made by any of the sisters, then returned to be sold. We feel that by the help of the Divine Master, we are trying to serve him. The Lord has blessed us with the gifts of the gospel, some of which have come to pass in confirmation of the great work. Sr. Eliza Hawks has been president for about three years, being re-elected from time to time, and our last meeting being the end of the term, she was presented with a gift from the sisters, by Sr. Abbie M. Barnes, who made a short speech as follows: "To our president, Sr. Hawks, we, the Daughters of Zion, offer our heartfelt thanks for the devotion with which she has performed her duty, the conscientiousness that has pervaded her life in every department. She has filled her office with meekness and humility of heart, speaking kindly of all. We have indeed been a happy band, our lives closely linked in the bonds of peace. Nothing has intervened to mar, or disturb our friendly feelings since we have been known as the Daughters of Zion; but by the powers of heaven we have been blessed to the edification of our souls, and received strength to go on afresh. May we meet in heaven in an unbroken band around His throne to praise his name forever. We now present to you, dear sister, this token as a memorial of the past, as a leaf in your memory to which you may often turn."

PROV., July 31st, '82.

Dear Bro.—The letter written speaking of the sisters meeting of Providence Branch, being sent without date was April 25th, '82, sent by Sr. Grimwood of Providence.

A. M. BARNES.

CLEVELAND, Lucas Co., Iowa,
July 27th, 1882.

Brother Joseph:—I have been at this place since last January. There is a good branch of Saints here and a well conducted Sabbath School. Prejudice seems to be waning; the church Sabbath School and the Saints were allowed to join in the Decoration day and Fourth of July processions. This is evident that the work is gaining ground, although converts come slowly. I see by reading the Herald that some are desirous to redeem Zion, and get at a system of all things common: That is what I call the common salvation. I believe that a great work of preparation is needful to get it into a successful practicable observance. Those who have ruled their own house so well that all things common is habitual with them, have done better than me. I believe that the exhortation in latter part of the "Pleasant Chat," found in the Herald of Nov. 1st, 1866, should first be more feasible in the Church. I believe that business transactions in co-partnership, by bands of brethren in various conferences and branches throughout the country, carried on under a rigid system of no credit any further than what is secured by labor, or stock, is a preparatory principle to all things common, in a general sense. If this system be entered into by bands of mechanics and coal miners, manufacturers and dealers in goods, with a view to secure real estate, either in Zion or her borders, paying tithing as they go along, having a truly determined intention to keep the commandments of God, and manifesting by word and deed that they and theirs are Christ's, I think it would be a great stride towards the commandment; "Let all things be prepared beforehand." Excuse my mistakes.

Yours in gospel bonds,
T. R. ALLEN.

And whereas, The Lord has in times past admonished the Church, time and time again, to be satisfied with and to observe that which had been revealed as sacred, (62:15; 83:8), and reproved the Church for treating them lightly, and commanded that we regard them with reverence and care, remembering that our own inspiration must not conflict with that which is written; (27:4); and that our authority is defined and limited by law. (31:1; 62:15).

And whereas, It is the duty of ministers to teach repentance and forgiveness of sins through Christ; therefore, being servants of his, let us seek to serve him acceptably, and see that we are qualified for the work as is defined in the law, (3:9), remembering that the Lord has said that if we are not qualified, as is provided in the law, that we can not assist in this work. (11:4). Therefore, be it

Resolved by this assembly, That we entreat the

The Spiritual and Literal.

THE world is rife with speculation and conjecture, in regard to our original and primary conditions; from the scientific evolutionist—he, who thinks that the race of man descended from the monkey tribe, to the man who accepts the records of revealed religion, as containing solemn and eternal truths for the benefit of all.

That opinions would be continually changing, will not be regarded as strange, when we but take into consideration the fact, that opportunities for investigation and being well informed, are so varied with the many,—together with the fact, that we arrive at our conclusions through the channels of investigation, if we are reasonable and intelligent persons.

The scientist, in particular, is continually shifting his base; for, with him, what may to-day be considered bed rock truth, may be entirely discarded to-morrow. Thus he passes on, from one uncertainty to another, evolving theory after theory, never being satisfied but for a moment at a time, pursuing his investigations incessantly; like the traveler of legendary note in pursuit of the "Will of the Wisp," his efforts are in vain; and in time, worn and weary, he sinks in the fog and mists of his own *imagination*s, into the quicksands of infidelity and despair. And yet, we often hear men jeer at revealed religion, and gloat over the certainties of so-called science!

The situation is much different with the believer in revealed religion, if he is but willing to investigate into the writings of the olden prophets, together with the revelations given in our own generation, through the "Choice Seer." He must cheerfully yield up his traditions, and become as a "little child," in order to be fully prepared to drink in of spiritual truths from the eternal fountain, open to all, to-day, to-morrow and forever. He must be willing—desirous to learn, and to rid himself of the "leaven," lest his may be the difficult task of reconciling truth and error.

So many accept this person's or that elder's minutia to a conclusion, and never once pause to consider the possibility of mistake or error therein. So many read, and then force some other one's construction thereon, and do not think for themselves, but pass right on, as if they had arrived at the immutable and not-to-be questioned truth.

If some one else is unreasonable and illogical, they too must act likewise, and be the veritable echoes, who, parrot-like do some talking, but less thinking. And if some one were to think, and not follow altogether the old-beaten paths and methods of thought, methinks I hear the wail of those who seem petrified in their ruts, Heresy! Heresy!

To take the lesson home, in order to make it more impressive, Who is there, of ourselves, who may not be more or less influenced in opinion and theory, by our earlier surroundings,—by the esteem in which we held some good brother, who so believed?

May not our ideal elder, have been trained in the errors common to protestantism, some of which may have remained with him after he had believed and preached the Gospel of Jesus Christ? We know, and will confess in our hearts, if we but think, that we may have a fair understanding of the gospel, so as to be able to present saving truth acceptably; and at the same time, be uninformed in historical facts connected with the Lord's work in the ages by-gone, as well as tinctured with some of the minor errors of the Protestant and Catholic world.

I am aware that this is a tender spot with many. Who is there among us, that is willing to admit that possibly some of his idolized theories may be without foundation in truth? It is so easy to believe that that other fellow holds to some unsound views; but oh! how "uncharitable" and damaging it would be to truth, were my views subjected to similar criticism! Some persons seem so constituted, are filled with so much self esteem and conceit, that they really seem to act as though they believe themselves to be the very "pillar and ground of truth." Oh! that we had more of that charity, which would not impute evil to differences of opinion upon unsettled and unimportant questions. Who shall say that the first Elders, the co-laborers of the seer, were entirely free from all the errors of education, and the contaminations of surrounding beliefs?

The statement is made, and it is a reasonable one, that Joseph the Martyr, in speaking of the Voice of Warning—the work of P. P. Pratt, said that it was an excellent book, but was not free from mistakes and minor errors. There had not been that winnowing and sifting at that time that has obtained in late years. The Elders were seemingly content to propogate first principles, and leave the unexplored to take care of itself. But they did not remain so long, ere they went out in all branches of theological thought in quest of a North Pole—an Open Polar Sea, whereon to float their barks of speculation and conjecture.

Well does the writer remember the influence of his early surroundings in regard to the details in the make up of theoretic faith. He really thought the writings and utterances of the compeers of the man slain at Carthage, to have been endowed with a sort of infallibility. But by close inspection, and in all due deference to the illustrious dead of the early church, I would say, that they sometimes went beyond that which is written, aye, contrary to it. I can find no excuse sufficient to justify a man, no matter who he may be, in teaching, and persisting in so doing, a doctrine, or theory contrary to the written word.

I remember well, when once I tried to preach in the City of Pittsburg, in 1872, saying, incidentally, that our fore parents, prior to the fall were immortal, that if they had never eaten of the forbidden fruit they never would have died. I thought I was preaching only the "faith of the Saints;" but now I beg their pardon, for imputing to them such logic as that involved in the idea of an immortal dying. Had I ever thought, or had I only stultified reason and common sense? I might as well have talked of warm ice, cold fire, dry water; as to have talked of one who was not mortal dying.

Latter Day Saints are usually accorded the name of being logical; but if the "immortal," or "not mortal" theories are to be considered as sample copy, then I for one, would want another word besides logic to convey the idea of sound, natural reason. For such "logic" is bad enough to effectually dispose of any cause to which it adheres. At that time, I had never heard of the "new idea," viz., That Adam and Eve prior to the fall, were neither mortal nor immortal, but occupied a condition between. It will be seen that some wonderfully astute thinker must have been its author! Such fine distinctions can never be comprehended by the ordinary mind; for most of us have become accustomed to think that a mortal person is one who is liable to die, unless the power of God should prevent,—thus making him, im-mortal.

Now if a living thing was not im-mortal, what could we say reasonably, but that it was mortal, subject or liable to death. The "new idea" is certainly novel, and a wonderful specimen of chop logic. Even words have to be wrested from their meaning, and meanings repudiated, in the attempt to make an absurd, self-contradiction look plausible and right.

In all candor I must say that I am greatly astonished that a man of any intellect or understanding, would adopt into his belief a theory, at once so transparent and flimsy as that of which we now treat. What courage, zest and vim are used in the vain endeavor to build up this "broken reed!" With sheer recklessness, but with zeal worthy of better use, they rush into the sacred writings, and press texts into their service which are as foreign to this new theory, as the tropics are to the frigid zones. Our first parents were, undoubtedly, created as mortals. The "tree of life" was placed in the garden for their benefit, and of its fruit they had the privilege of eating, and in consequence, living forever.

What supreme folly would appear in the thought of an immortal eating of the fruit of the "tree of life," with the view of living longer thereby! Could he add to the duration of eternity? Could he live more than always? Of what possible use or benefit would the fruit of the tree of life have been to one who was "not mortal?" For if "not mortal," therefore not subject to death,—that's what we understand to be immortality. How long do you suppose that a person "not mortal"—a person exempted from death would live? Do you think such a person would need as a panacea, the fruit of the tree of life?

But then, what becomes of the "new idea"—the "neither mortal, nor immortal?"

Gone—like a meteor, that o'er head
Suddenly shines, and ere we've said
"Look! look! how beautiful!"—'tis fled.

The "idea" was weak at birth, and could not endure serious handling, and like the darling babe I once heard of, it was too small to spank.

In a few days after my sermon, (before alluded to), a young brother asked me, "If Adam and Eve were immortal, why they died? How could death seize an immortal?" I was confounded, but managed to say that death followed in pursuance of Jehovah's warning threat: "In the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." In a day or two afterward, one of the Quorum of the Twelve was with us, a man of ripe experience and thought,—the friend and compeer of Joseph the Martyr. We submitted the question to him for solution. "Why," said he, "if they had been immortal, death would have been impossible, as the very word would imply. How long do you suppose a person not mortal would live?" Just imagine my feelings! Crestfallen and abashed before the young brother and the apostle.

It was shortly afterwards that I heard of the "new idea," and I eagerly examined it, for I realized it to be my duty so to do. It only required a short time to determine that the brother was right in saying that they were "not immortal;" for had they been, or attained that distinction, eternity would only have been the measure of their lives. But what should I do with the other wing of his statement,—that they were "not mortal?" Liable to death, and dying, and yet not mortal! Verily, a pyramid on its little end, falling of its own dead weight. I could readily see the same glaring self-contradiction and absurdity in the death of a person "not mortal," that I could in the eternity which ended at Adam's grave! The fact was, that the "immortal" and "neither mortal, nor immortal" theories, were one in origin and base. That a literal death was the death which was threatened when God said: "In the day thou eatest thereof, thou shalt surely die."

But the same God which spoke to Moses out of the burning bush, and displayed his wondrous glory and power in Sinai, and gave Israel a cloud by day and a pillar of fire by night; which throughout the ages revealed himself to his chosen people, also revealed himself to the martyr—prophet of the nineteenth century. Hear what he says as touching the fall and the death following.

"Wherefore it came to pass, that the devil tempted Adam and he partook of the forbidden fruit, and transgressed the commandment, wherein he became subject to the will of the devil because he yielded unto temptation; wherefore, I, the Lord, caused that he should be cast out of the garden of Eden from my presence, because of his transgression, wherein he became spiritually dead, which is the first death."—Doctrine and Covenants, sec. 28: 11.

If the Lord had meant a literal death, or if the spiritual included the literal, he would not have been silent concerning it, in his revelation to the Seer. But he has spoken plainly and to the point, and for one, I am willing to accept the statement made. If a two fold death was threatened, why is only one mentioned, and why is the death mentioned defined as being a spiritual death? Who is Bro. A. or B., that he is authorized in taking such reckless liberty with the word of God, as to say that the spiritual included the physical! If an orthodox minister were to undertake to bolster up his doctrine by such reckless liberty with texts, I can imagine just now how general would be our disapprobation of such methods. That which we condemn in others is not excusable in ourselves. It was the policy of the "old serpent" to deceive our foreparents in regard to the kind of a death to result from sin. He knew that the threat referred to the spiritual alone. But, says he, "Ye shall not surely die," i. e., literally, "and ye shall be as gods knowing good and evil." Although Satan triumphed in tempting them, and although they died, not literally, on the "day" of their fall, but spiritually, we do not find that they esteemed their long earth-life as an evidence of the failure of the warning threat. They knew too much for that; for their sad experience but demonstrated the prophetic truth of his word. If the "spiritual" included the "physical death," then, the time governing one, must also govern the other; and therefore the spiritual and the physical must have been simultaneous, were the premises true. The spiritual and physical deaths were entirely unrelated; the former, the result of sin, the latter, the result of natural, organic law. Physical death came in its own season, and then, "dust returned to dust," and the "spirit to God who gave it." The spear of grass, the blade—the ear—the full ear of corn, and all the trees of earth, except the "tree of life," grew up and passed away, being reproduced by seed of their own specie. Just imagine what a gigantic forest earth would have been if all the trees were to have continued bearing seed—the seed continually springing up into new trees! Would there be room sufficient for poor creatures like us to place our feet on the ground? Why the very thought makes me to feel uncomfortably crowded! Yet some people assert that death in its general sense, alike in the vegetable, animal and man, is the result of sin!

Man was made in the image of God, but was "made a little lower than the angels," in that he was made subject to death. Death was inherent and natural to man; and in this we have a sensible appreciation of the benefit which might have been derived from the "fruit of the tree of life," if they had but eaten of it. Death would have been swallowed up of its life-giving power. But the gracious opportunity passed away with their innocence; for when they fell, angels with flaming swords guarded the "tree of life," lest they should then eat and live forever. Adam was the first of the race created, and being "made a little lower than the angels," he was mortal. Eve was made of him, and so she became "flesh of his flesh and bone of his bone," so inheriting his nature; while all others of the race descended from the twain. Adam was therefore the parent stock of all the race, so bequeathing his nature to all posterity. Therefore the Apostle Paul said: "For as in Adam all die," and then speaking of the glorious redemption from death through Jesus Christ says, "Even so in Christ shall all be made alive." As universal as death may have been, just so universal will the resurrection of the dead be. The death derived from Adam will be effectually overcome through the power of Christ by the gospel plan, whereby all will be brought to justice and judgment. But sin did not enter our race by Adam, for Eve was the first to fall. But death came of, with, and by Adam, while life can only come from the Lord Jesus Christ. Pointing to these truths, the Apostle Paul says, "For since by man came death, by man [Christ] came also the resurrection of the dead." In contradistinction between man as created, and the race as it shall exist in that blessed day yet to come, Paul says: "As is the earthy, such are they also that are earthy; and as is the heavenly, such are they also that are heavenly. And as we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly." "The first man is of earth, earthy; the second man is the Lord from heaven."

How fraught with comfort is this promise to us; with John of old, exultingly we may say, "Beloved, now are ye the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be;

but we know that when he [Christ in his second coming] shall appear, we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is." No more death or sorrowing, sickness and pain; all of these shall be abolished when the "life and immortality" of the gospel are brought to pass.

That we may endure to the end is my prayer,

Hints on Reading the Scripture.

WE ALL know there are various opinions in regard to reading the Scripture. We are very sorry that some deny its authenticity, and equally as sorry that others misconstrue its meaning. Our object is not, however, to tell what others think and do, but to give a few of our own thoughts in regard to its study. If we carelessly read a little here and a little there, although we may try to be devotional, can we get a true sense of its theory? Certainly not; no more than we can any other book. We may think that the ten commandments were given in the gospel dispensation as their substance was quoted in that age; or that Enoch lived after the flood; or that Job lived—well we don't know when—but suppose he lived sometime, or was the figure of something, we hardly know what. In all probability he lived before Moses, and some say before Abraham. We understand that there are many figures of speech in the Scripture, but we must remember that figures stand for something of importance, and not figure till we figure away their worth.

There never was an age in which people had so great facilities for understanding the Scriptures as at present. We have commentaries, dictionaries, missionaries' travels, and revelations. Why then, should any person say, "I can't understand the Bible!" No reason, whatever, only such do apply their energies to the all important work.

"Can't get time," say many, and even professors of religion say so; but such can get time to loaf and smoke, or to spin street yarns and to gossip.

But to the subject: If we wish to understand the Book, we must commence with the first chapter of Genesis and read the volume carefully. "I can't, it is so long." So the year is long; but the days slip away and it is soon gone. If we read a chapter or two each day, and four or five each Sabbath, we shall find that the Book is not very much longer than the year. What we read we should ponder well each day, if we can get no other time we can while about our work. We should not shut the Bible and keep silent in regard to what we have read, but we should make it a subject of conversation in our families; then the young may understand as well as the old. It will give us light to learn the signification of the names of the different books; and to notice how many chapters each contains, also their order and period of time. It is somewhat surprising to learn that the account of the flood is given in the seventh chapter of Genesis, and that sixteen hundred years had elapsed from the creation. When we take into consideration the brevity of the accounts we do not wonder that so many stumble over them. We could put but very few incidents of our nation's history into seven chapters of the length of the above mentioned. Yet if we did not have them we could not get the genealogy back to our first parents, nor the chronology back to the creation of man. This book closes with the death of Joseph, which was twenty-three hundred years after the creation. By giving attention we shall notice that more than one hundred years elapsed from that time till the birth of Moses, which is recorded in the second chapter of Exodus. The latter book is the history of the Hebrews' exit from Egypt, and contains about one year, after they left. Leviticus one month, which we see by carefully reading the last chapter of Exodus and the first of Numbers. The latter book contains thirty-eight years and ten months. Deuteronomy but one month.

We find it interesting to notice the customs, architecture and forms of worship of those ancient people, and still more interesting to notice God's dealings with them; how in every instance he rewarded the obedient and punished the disobedient according to the law and the prophecies. Also in a later age, when only the tribe of Judah with the remnant of Benjamin worshipped in Jerusalem according to the pattern. So down to the present day, when we reflect on what little we know of the history of the Jews, we can but exclaim, how sure are thy promises, O, God! and we feel to bow with reverence and awe before him. We find that about four hundred years elapsed from the book of Malachi to the coming of Christ or the commencement of the New Testament.

The account of some of the proceedings of the Jews during that time is given in the Apocraphy and also in the writing of Josephus. From the birth of Christ down to Revelations was about one hundred years. Then followed the spiritual famine that the Prophet Amos spoke of. But glory to God, the famine did not last always! The Father in his own time again inspired men. By understanding the former points we get much light on the historical events of the Bible, and the latter we are brought to know what God requires of us as accountable individuals. We must not embrace some creed of man because our ancestors adhered to it, and then study the Bible to prove it to be the right one; but we must look above such ideas and study well the plan that Christ gave to his followers. There is but one way by which souls can be saved in the celestial kingdom, and that is by believing in the gospel of Christ; not merely believe that there was a Savior, but believe the glad tidings of joy—if we believe we will obey. The traditions of the fathers can not save us any more than the traditions of the golden calf could save the revolting tribes of Israel. We fear this is too lengthy for the reader's patience, but we have touched very slightly on a few points of our subject, and hope he will make it a study himself, till he has tasted the Father's love, the excellence and grandeur of which surpass the description of man. It is free for all as is the sunshine, and those who seek for it the right way shall find it. When the tabernacle in the wilderness was completed according to the pattern, fire was sent down from God and consumed the offering on the altar. In like manner when we have fashioned our worship by the pattern given by the Master, the Holy Ghost will be sent down according to the promise, and will consume the sin of our hearts and cause them to burn with the love of God. Then, and not till then are we prepared to understand the beauty and sublimity of the Scriptures. Dear Saints, let us bear in mind that we must daily lay the wood on the altar, or the fire will go out.

God bless and prosper the cause of Zion, is the prayer of your unworthy sister,

THERE seems to be mistaken notions by the religious world about religion. BAD AIR.

AIR, the breath of life, is the first want of the human being, and it is also the last. At every pulsation during life we need this life-sustaining element. Yet one would suppose, by the bad ventilation of churches and houses, that it was a matter of indifference whether he had much or little, or whether it was good or bad. We read in the papers of the death of persons from suffocation in wells, mines, or by escaping gas, and are startled, wondering why people will be so careless; yet thousands of people die by inches, or only half live, in consequence of the impurity of the air which they breathe. If one is shut up in a small room without any admission of fresh air, the air contained within the room soon becomes impure by having been breathed over and over, and very great lassitude or depression of life and spirits is the consequence. The blood requires to be revitalized constantly within the lungs by coming in contact with atmospheric air. Indeed, that is the whole office of the lungs, to aerate or revitalize the blood—which is there met by the atmospheric air—and change it from dark, venous blood to bright scarlet, arterial blood, thus preparing it to carry life to every part and tissue of the system. In the lungs the blood loses many of its impurities, and takes on the life-giving oxygen from the air; and in proportion as the air is abundant and pure which we breathe, in that proportion we have the glow of health and the enthusiasm of living which comes from well-vitalized blood.

The difference between being perfect and constantly trying to be so, is the difference between an angel in heaven and a good man on earth.

Don't put out so large a crop that your boys, hired help, and the horses will be too tired to go to meetings on Sundays.

A shot that hits is better than a broadside that misses.

How to Secure a Good Prayer and Testimony Meeting.

Bro. Joseph:—I have read your editorial in the Herald for July 15th, and I can sympathize deeply with the true and faithful—not a very large number in any branch—who are always at “our” prayer and testimony meetings, and who wish they knew how to make it more interesting. You want to know how to bring live coals to the altar as you go, to awaken its fires. You want, not merely to enjoy more of God’s blessings, but to have others enjoy more; and you want your meeting to be an instrument of doing your branch good and the community around you. How shall you aid? Let the weekly prayer and testimony be uppermost in your minds. Think of it when in your business, when you read your Bible, and see if you do not light upon a beautiful text to carry there, when you read the Herald, and the Hope, and see if you do not find some thought, or some little anecdote, incident, or fact that you can use in the meeting. See if you can not gather a few drops of the dew which falls on Hermon. You may not be a theologian, or a genius, but you can do something if you think of it before hand. You can utter a thought in a few moments, which cost you perhaps days to think out. The pebble which David chose was one that had been washed and smoothed in the brook for a long time. Nevertheless it was all the better for its polishing. A single thought that has been revolving in your mind, may be valuable in proportion as it has been thought over. On the day of your meeting, don’t forget to think about it. Mention it in your family worship, let all the family see that it lives in your heart. Be sure and pray for it, before you go to it. Ask, plead that Christ will be manifested in it. Pray that the Holy Spirit may be present to warm, cheer, and animate the whole proceedings. Feel responsible for it. Make it a solemn duty, a habit, and a privilege to be there. Go with a cheerful face, there’s nothing like sunshine for making a pleasant time. Don’t go acting, looking, or feeling that you had paid the last penny you had, or if you had a chain around your neck called Duty, by which you were dragged to the place. If the lights are low, move around and get more light. If not warm and cheerful, go to your brethren, and insist upon it that the room must be made comfortable, pleasant and inviting. If others seem inclined to shirk, don’t you. If the singing is tame or dull, or if there is none at all, be careful and see one of the brethren who is a singer, and urge him to be there. If you can not sing, tell him he must go. If you can sing, tell him you need his aid. Go up near the pulpit or table, up where the presiding elder and your brethren are, and can see you, and feel that your breath is warm. When the meeting is thrown open for remarks, don’t sit and wait for others. Be ye always ready, was a valuable injunction of the Great Teacher. There is no life in silence or waiting for others. Let your prayer or testimony be short. It may be much longer than you think it is. I was once at a prayer and testimony meeting where sixty persons got up in two hours. I have been and took part in scores where twelve have got up in half an hour. Feel under obligation to have a variety in your meeting. It is a fatal mistake to have a prayer and testimony meeting stereotyped. Can not you have something sung that they can all sing, and that is inspiring, spiritual and lively. Can you not get that brother or sister to speak, who never bore their testimony or offered up prayer. Can not you get that young man or woman who lives in your neighborhood to come in. You must go to them alone before the meeting, and speak encouragingly to them and “compel them to come in.” Go to your meeting hopeful—I mean hoping, trusting, watching, praying, and having confidence in Christ, when he promises to be in the midst of the two or three who gather in his name. You may feel perhaps that you are cold, and that others are cold. But there certainly will be one there, Christ, who is not cold. Don’t always be harping on one string, either in your prayers or in your exhortations. Keep the wheels out of the old deep rut. There is the Sabbath School; there is the soil preparing and to be prepared for the word; and all these and more belong to the prayer meeting. Do not commence to scold, it will do no good. Those present feel that they do not deserve it, and the absent ones do not hear it. The prayer and testimony meetings are not the places to groan under spiritual dyspepsia. Don’t whip your Elders or officers with your prayers; their hearts are perhaps heavy enough. They want your earnest prayers and sympathies. Don’t carry a burdened conscience to the prayer and testimony meetings. If to day, this week, or last week you have wronged any brother or sister in bargains, actions, words, or deeds, settle with them and God before you come to the prayer meeting. Clear your conscience of the burden of known sin. You will find the meeting dead and cold to you if you do not. (I know this from experience); our sins separate between us and God. Do as the Psalmist did, “Create in me a clean heart, O, God, and renew a right spirit within me.” “Cast me not away from thy presence, and take not thy Holy Spirit from me.” “Restore unto me the joy of thy salvation, and uphold me with thy free Spirit.” “Then will I teach transgressors thy ways, and sinners shall be converted unto thee.” Psalm 51st. “ whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with all thy might.” In building a church edifice—the mere shell to contain the church—there must be the architect, and the contractor, carpenters, builders and laborers, they are all to do something. So let it be with all who are laboring to build up the true Church of Jesus Christ. “For he that knoweth to do good, and doeth it not, committeth sin.”

What the Face Shows.

ROUND eyed persons see much, live much in the senses, but think less. Narrow eyed persons, on the other hand, see less, but think more and feel more intensely. It will be observed that the eyes of children are open and round. Their whole life is to receive impressions. It is only when childhood is maturing toward manhood or womanhood that thought comes, if it comes at all. But what is it that most leads to reflection? Experience. Our errors, our shortcomings, our failures—these teach us to think before we act, to consider each step, to weigh every motive. When, therefore, the upper eyelid—for it is that which has the greatest amount of mobility—droops over the eye, it indicates not merely reflection, but something painful to reflect about. Hence the length or drooping of the upper eyelid betokens confession and penitence.

The drooping of half of the eyelid from the outer angle to the center, indicates the disposition to confess one’s faults to parents or seniors, to a “father confessor,” or to the Supreme Being. The drooping of half of the eyelid from the inner angle to the center betokens the disposition to repent, and to “do works meet for repentance.” Closely allied to these sights are those of prayerfulness and humility. The former is indicated by the muscle which turns the eye directly upwards. The faculty of humility is indicated by the muscle which turns the eye directly downwards, as represented in the pictures of the Madonna. Prayerfulness is usually large in connection with the sign of confession, and humility in connection with that of penitence; the reason of which is, that between the faculties of penitence and humility there is the same close connection as between confession and prayer. One who has more prayer than humility has the eye turned habitually somewhat upward, so that the upper part of the iris is a little covered by the upper eyelid, and so as to leave a slight space between the iris and the lower lid. The reverse is true of one who has more humility than prayer.

The faculty of truth—that is, the love of it—is indicated by the muscle which surrounds the eye, causing folds and wrinkles. Justice is indicated by the muscle which causes perpendicular wrinkles between the eyebrows. Fullness and wrinkles under the eye, for which some persons are remarkable, indicate the love of mathematical accuracy; and wrinkles curving upward from the outer angle of the eye and eyebrow indicate probity or personal truthfulness. There are three degrees of the faculty of justice. The first is a kind of exactness or strict honesty in small money matters, which some people would call closeness, and is indicated by a singular perpendicular wrinkle or line between the eyebrows. The second is the disposition to require justice in others, and is indicated by two perpendicular lines or wrinkles, one on each side of the center—a very common sign. The third degree is conscientiousness, or the disposition to apply the rule of justice to one’s self, and is indicated by three or more wrinkles of lines, especially noticeable, extending above the eyebrow when the muscle is in action. The love of command is indicated by one or more short transverse wrinkles across the root of the nose, exactly between the eyes. It may be seen in great military commanders, in masters and teachers, and in those generally who are fond of exercising authority. In those who are wanting in the power to command, and have no desire for responsibility, this sign is also absent. The faculty of command frequently acts with that part of justice which reprimands, or requires others to do right, and both together produce that frowning, and lowering brow which is so terrible to evil-doers, or to those who love to be approved rather than condemned.

We Ought to Trust in God.

"Except the Lord build the house they labor in vain that build it; except the Lord keep the city, the watchman waketh but in vain."—Ps. 127:1.

From this passage of Scripture we learn of the magnitude of God's power—his omnipresence and omnipotence—that God directs in all things for the good of man, and our trust in him is not misplaced, but is fraught with blessings. Without him was there nothing created, and he upholds all things by his power.

To create is to build, or to bring together in an organized form, and all forms were organized for certain purposes, to bring forth certain results.

Laws are regulations or conditions by which order is maintained, and without which no order could exist. Order governs heaven, as "Order is heaven's first law," so likewise earth, as earth is a production of him who rules heaven by his most perfect laws, so that all things in heaven move in perfect harmony and order; and as he is a being unchangeable, he rules all things by his mighty power, and the most perfect laws. We see perfection in all of his creations: in the tiny flower, and in the mighty tree, in the meanest thing that crawls, and in the highest form of organized animal life; in our planet in its movements, and in the movements of the firmament above. As these testify to us the perfection of the laws by which all things are controlled for the benefit of the creature man,—the object of the creation of earth and all that therein is.

Since perfection meets our gaze in every direction as we view the works of God for the good of man in this life, what can we expect but that perfection must meet our gaze in viewing the plan or law that shall take man in his now imperfect state and perfect him, and by so doing fit him for the presence and enjoyment of a perfect being. Says the Savior: "Be ye perfect for I am perfect," which taken in connection with the saying of David in the 19th Psalm: "The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul," shows the condition to which God desires we may attain, and the means that he has devised in order that we may be perfect. Perfection is the result to be obtained,—that of converting or restoring the soul to a sinless state, to be obtained by a perfect law, that we may enjoy the association of perfect beings. It is a well known fact that where there is no affiliation of thought or sentiment, there is no enjoyment, and only where there is perfect affiliation can perfect enjoyment be had; hence the need of perfect laws, by which to perfect our natures so we can enjoy the presence of him who is perfect, and bask in his smiles and favors.

If a law as given is perfect, any change in any degree will mar its perfection, and as it will only in its perfect state bring forth a perfect result, if it be marred or perverted we must look only for a marred or perverted result. Hence from God, who is perfect, came a perfect law, for the purpose of perfecting man, and we could not look for the result of perfection in man unless the law was perfect. Our hope would be lost. We see this verified almost daily and hourly. When the laws with which we are finitely acquainted, operate without meeting with anything contrariwise to a perfect operation, we see a perfect result obtained; but on the other hand does the law become disobeyed in any particular, we can mark imperfection as the result, because there has been an imperfect operation of a perfect law which is equivalent in result to the operations of an imperfect law.

To view the creeds of to-day would give us the conception of the imperfect nature of the founder or founders. As all perfection will agree with itself, we would conclude the authors of the creeds of to-day to be imperfect, as no two of the many creeds of the present nor past agree with each other. And again, had these several creeds or laws purporting to be the means of man's salvation been perfect in their inception, there would have been no need of any change in any wise at any time to have answered the result of man's salvation, as man has been in the same state ever since the fall—that of a sinner,—and as the law was conceived to redeem and save sinners, it would have brought forth that result when conceived, or else it must have been conceived in imperfection, and not perfection, in man and not in God.

We dare say that none of the laws that have come forth purporting to be the gospel have remained the same, save the one conceived in the bosom of the Father; and any change to that must prove its author changeable, which is contrary to truth, for says Malachi, concerning the character of God, "I am God, I change not."

We can see by tracing out the history of God's hand dealing with the children of men in the past, that when they have departed from the ways of the Lord in any degree they have been made to suffer the result—the chastisements of Almighty God; and when the perfect law was rejected, apostasy and its attendant evils followed. We may expect to see the same results upon viewing the present or future state of the religious world. If we abide in the law, happy are we, but do we in any degree turn our steps from the law, we must suffer loss.

We now turn our attention to the Scripture of divine truth to seek for the law by which we can become members of the House of God, as presented by the Apostle Paul. We only cite to his teachings in this article as we can not refer to all the evidences, and if what was presented by him was divine, we must accept the fact that all others who have or may preach the gospel law, will present it only in perfect harmony with that which was presented by him. He was one of the parts of the building and there must be perfect agreement in all parts to bespeak the character of him who must build the house, or else they labor in vain who build it.

Paul has given us an epitome of the principles of the doctrine of Christ, as recorded in the 1st and 2nd verses of the 6th chapter of his epistle to the Hebrew saints. And we must conclude from facts presented in the Word that this doctrine is the same as is referred to by the Psalmist as the perfect law. St. John says in his 2d Epistle and 9th verse, "He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ hath both the Father and the Son;" which to have would be to have perfection, the natural result of a perfect law.

To show proof of the divinity of these principles taught by Paul we refer to his epistle to the Galatians, 1st chapter, 11th and 12th verses: "For I certify you, brethren, that the gospel which was preached of me is not after man. For I neither received it of man, neither was I taught it, but by the revelations of Jesus Christ." We hear nothing to-day from the various divines concerning their receiving what they teach by revelation of Jesus Christ; but on the contrary their testimony is, "For I testify you, brethren, that the gospel which is preached of me is not by the revelation of Jesus Christ, for revelations are done away, no longer needed, but I received it of man, and by men, and that is good enough for me." Paul says further in the 8th and 9th verses of this same chapter: "If we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you, than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed. As we said before, so say I now again, if any man preach any other gospel unto you than that ye have received, let him be accursed." The sayings of those who deny present revelation from God say: "An angel has a perfect right to preach any gospel they please, and if an angel from heaven would come to me, and tell me this or that was the gospel I would believe; but, pshaw, I don't believe that angels will come, so you need not be afraid of their preaching any other gospel, and as for man, he has a perfect right to preach anything for the gospel he pleases, and you can believe it if you want to, and if you are sincere in it you are all right, and so is he that preaches it; he will not be accursed."

But to the notice of the principles of that perfect law or doctrine. "Therefore, leaving (not leaving, I. T.) the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on unto perfection; not laying again the foundation of repentance from dead works, and of faith towards God, of the doctrine of baptisms, and of the laying on of hands, and of resurrection of the dead, and of eternal judgment." Perfection was that to be obtained by "not leaving," but going on in the principles of the doctrine of Christ, hence must have been a perfect doctrine to have brought forth that result. Six principles: Faith, Repentance, Baptisms, Laying on of Hands, Resurrection from the Dead, and Eternal Judgment. But, says one, "I see by your reasonings that the perfect operation of a law must be had as well as a perfect law, and you have placed faith before repentance, which is different to Paul's statement, as he places repentance first. I would like you to follow your own reasoning, if it be true "Paul is only giving the names of those principles and not speaking concerning their operations; for we find in Rom. 11:6, where he speaks of faith, he shows it to be the cause of man's acting in coming to God; and man would not be led to repentance without first believing that he needed to repent, and that he would be benefitted by so doing. "But without faith it is impossible to please him, for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of those that diligently seek him." We come to God to repent, and if we must first believe in order to come to God, we could not repent without having faith, for if we did it would not please him. We find in enumerating these principles of which the doctrine of Christ is composed, that there are six,—no more, no less. And if it took six principles to complete the doctrine of Christ in its perfection, in the days of Paul, as given to him by the revelation of Jesus Christ, it will and must be composed of just six principles—no more, no less—in order that it may be in its perfection to-day, as it must be if given by the revelation of Jesus Christ, for Jesus Christ is the same yesterday, to-day, and forever.

If a horse, which was created with four legs, and now has four legs in order that he may be a perfect horse and can navigate with ease, and answer the end of its creation as the Creator intended, two legs or three legs or even five or six legs, would not fulfill the purpose of the Designer. While two or three legs would be a deficiency, five or six would be an excess, and burdensome to those necessary. Were a horse to come into existence in a condition of deficiency or excess in this direction or any other, we would call it a deformity or monstrosity. From this reasoning we are forced to look upon those ways or doctrines which have come into existence, claiming to be the doctrine of Christ, with only two or three, or any number of parts otherwise than six, as deformities, monstrosities, or at least imperfections, outgrowths of an imperfect mind, not conceived in righteousness and truth; but man, not knowing the righteousness of God, has gone and is going about to establish his own righteousness. God has again, by the revelations of Jesus Christ, made known to man the doctrine of Christ in its perfection, with its six principles: Faith, Repentance, Baptisms, (of the water and of the Spirit), Laying on of Hands, Resurrection from the dead, and Eternal Judgment; and Paul, like his servants can say he received it not of man, neither was I taught it, but by the revelations of Jesus Christ.

God has truly chosen the weak things of earth to confound the wise, because they are taught by the wisdom of God, which makes the wisdom of man look as foolishness. "The testimonies of the Lord are sure, making wise the simple."

We invite the world to come to, and abide in the perfect law, as revealed again in these last days by the revelation of Jesus Christ; and the promise is, do you heed our invitation as servants of God, redemption from sin and all its results, the blessing of perfection, having the Father and the Son. Let us go on to perfection, not leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ; remembering to trust in God, because except the Lord build the house they labor in vain who build it; except the Lord keep the city the watchman waketh but in vain."

Except the Lord direct our work
We labor but in vain;

Although we may with all our heart,
Labor with might and main.

God works with those who follow him,
In all his wondrous ways,
In all the labor we may do;
For so the Scripture says.

All men must work in harmony
With the Law that by God, exists;
That good may follow us all our days,
And then in heaven be blest.

Come, we say to all the world,
As servants of God to-day,
And follow the old, but Christ-like plan,
Revealed in the latter day.

Of principles six this plan is formed,
To perfect it in all its beauty,
That it may bring to man salvation complete;
To obey it is but our duty.

Obey it then, at the sacrifice,
Of all your former whims;
For the House of God again is reared,
That all may enter in.

Do we reject this holy plan,
Condemnation will ensue;
But do we live in accordance therewith,
Salvation we'll pursue.

Salvation is that which man most needs,
Condemnation is not good;
Salvation we may gain, condemnation avoid,
If we but only would.

May God assist all men to see
The goodness of his ways;
And bow submissive to his will Revealed in these latter days,

Is the prayer of one of the servants of God,
And no doubt is the prayer of all;
That all flesh may be saved in the glory of God,
Whether they be great or small.

A STONE FROM THE SKY.

Vessels arriving in Chicago yesterday report a most remarkable occurrence at Muskegon on Friday night. At midnight there was an awful shock, heard throughout the whole city, accompanied by a bright, sulphuric light, which illuminated the entire surroundings. Crews of craft in the harbor sprang from their bunks; and citizens, terribly alarmed, rushed to the windows. Many supposed that a severe thunder storm had burst upon them; others thought that the great boilers of some of the numerous immense mills had exploded, and not a few attributed the deafening report to the first crash of "the wreck of matter and the crush of worlds." When the people ventured out shortly afterward, however, they beheld one of the most calm and beautiful moonlight nights ever witnessed. The only explanation of the mystery is that a great aerolite fell into Muskegon Lake.

The following is from the Muskegon Chronicle, received in Chicago last night: "The great mystery is solved by the statement of persons employed in and about the mills in the lower part of the city. They say that a large ball of fire fell into Muskegon Lake, seemingly striking its surface three or four hundred feet from the shore. James Fisk felt the shock perceptibly and Mr. Archibald Lee was 'shaken up' by it; both of these parties were on Western avenue at the time. Messrs.

Frank Johnson, Levi Beardsley, C. Moulton and Fred Miller, all of whom lodge on Western avenue, state that the buildings in which they have rooms were shaken by the explosion. Mr. Hugh Leonard, the druggist of 'lower town,' who had just retired to his room on Western avenue, states as follows: 'I saw the glare, and it seemed as though the entire light was concentrated in my room. At first it appeared as though my window curtains were wrapped in flames.' Where the aerolite struck there was a great commotion, 'as though a ton of solid substance had fallen into it from a great height.' It is currently believed that a great meteoric stone fell, and it may be well for steamers and sailing vessels to be guarded for the present while passing the point where the stone is supposed to have struck."—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

A Character For Integrity.

INTEGRITY of character is a species of capital which every merchant, be his business large or small, may possess. It is a property which the young man may acquire early in life, and it is one which throughout his career, whatever revolutions of fortune he may experience, he need never lose.

Integrity may be characterized an eminently practical virtue, as no species of it is recognized that does not include the acts as well as the disposition of the individual. It matters not how much a person may prefer to do right, to win a reputation for integrity he must do right, regularly and consistently. It is this very thing that makes integrity of character so valuable. The world is ready to commend all good qualities, but it values only those that it finds useful; and steadfastness and entire trustworthiness being so essential in every business transaction, the value set on them is especially great.

This view, viz: that integrity of character is valued by the world for what it ensures and not for its own sake, considerably raises the standard up to which a man must live before he can properly be said to have such a character. He may satisfy his own conscience as to his motives, but if with the best intention he goes wrong, leads others into error and deceives unknowingly, except in special cases, his character for integrity will be at stake, just as much as though he were actuated by wrong motives. If a merchant from being a poor judge of goods buys and sells an article that fails to give satisfaction, it will not exonerate him to say that he knew no better and that the transaction was made in good faith.

It is evident, therefore that integrity of character—the integrity which the world values—depends as much on intelligence as honesty. A man of thorough business integrity must not be capable of faults arising from error any more than from dishonesty. An honest man who is open to every species of misrepresentation, who is not painstaking enough to examine facts for himself, who is not careful in the management of his business, can not be set up as a model of integrity; the errors into which he is led and into which he thereby leads others may be as disastrous as though he himself were really dishonest.

A character for integrity, therefore, rests on moral principle and also intelligence; it gives the assurance that a person will not go wrong for want of either the one or the other, and where the two are combined it is a qualification of the highest value.

In every subordinate capacity integrity is one of the qualities which men esteem the highest. The mind of an employer is at rest when he knows that he can rely on the integrity of his assistants. But, as we before stated, mere goodness of disposition is not integrity. A young man who would scorn to waste either his employer's time or his money, but who might be led away or imposed on by others, does not possess true integrity, and is one whom his employer would scarcely trust, any more than a person suspected of being dishonest.

Men in business value a reputation for integrity in themselves and in those with whom they have transactions. One of the very strongest recommendations for a merchant to his customers is his integrity. They know what they buy at the store will reflect the character of the merchant; if the latter is not to be depended on, they will place no reliance on the character of the goods he sells, while if they know him to be an honest, upright man, provided he has the due amount of business ability, they will believe that they are being fairly treated in regard to their purchases.

There is nothing more truly worth striving for by the young men in business than a reputation for integrity, founded, not on plausible appearances, but the thing itself.

Pulpit and the Pews.

By THE pulpit and the pews, we of course mean to include the occupants or rather imply them.

The mission of the pulpit is a grand one. No office is of the same or equal importance. It bears the message of life to dying humanity. It stands between God and man; "between the living and the dead." It occupies the most important place among all appointments in this world. When we see it we remember God, Christ, and eternity! Life and death; heaven and the prison! Sometimes it causes all the deeds of our lives to come in grand array before our startled vision; awakens all the powers of our being, and often is productive of serious, anxious thought.

We have spoken of it in the present tense, while what we have said is true of it in the past, but in the present it is not wholly true, we wish it were, in the popular sense and usage thereof. The pulpit has been viewed with profound awe and reverence. Its messages awakened the sinful slumberer from out his wild revelries and convicted him of sin, then and there! The sting of death and sin pricked him hard, and he came to God a trembling, conscience-awakened prodigal. Its messages brought all the pews to their knees in humble submission unto him who sent his only begotten Son for their redemption. The pulpit told a plain, simple story of Calvary's cross, and its awful sacrifice. But, alas! Its use, grand and glorious, became perverted. The pulpit arrogated a certain authority God had never given it. It began to bring the pews into slavish subjection by its perverted spiritual claims. The pews became cringing and the pulpit strutted with pompous mien, while the pews with uncovered heads paid homage to its vile assumptions. The message of life was no longer heard, but a train of "endless, meaningless ceremonies" stepped in, and by a blending of Pagan rites and ceremonies, the blessed life-giving service was enshrouded in the mists and darkness of Jewish and heathenish traditions. As we read: "Preaching shared a similar fate of the other institutions; * * * when metaphysical reasoning, mystical divinity, yea Aristotelian categories, and reading the lives of the saints, were substituted in the place of sermons." This state of affairs existed for a long time, during which spiritual darkness reigned supreme, and his Satanic majesty held full sway. The pews dare not question any act of the pulpit, and dogma, neither expression of opposite opinion. The pulpit claimed now a superstitious infallibility; to be in direct, continual communication with the "supreme pulpit" of heaven. Criticism was blasphemy; questioning was sacrilege; dumb, blind submissiveness was the universal condition of the pews. Even when the first peal rang forth, upon the darkened atmosphere, of approaching reformation, and after its clanging bells had rang forth peal after peal, with almost deafening sound, the pulpit now divested of its pomp of robe, mitre, cross, alb, censor, and wearisome ritualistic "performances," became entrenched with fearful fire sights of staring demons, and strange words, terrorizing the hearers, caused them to seek an omnipotent, inorganic God, that they might escape the agonies of an imaginary "fire place." Liberty had not yet come to the pews, darkness had not passed away, although the clouds were slowly breaking, and a faint glimmer of a coming dispensation of power and angelic visitations was seen, yet not appreciated. What was said by Robinson, when taking leave of the pilgrims who left Leyden in the Mayflower, of 1620, may be said to-day with equal force and truthfulness: "For my part, I can not sufficiently bewail the condition of the reformed churches, who are come to a period in religion, * * * The Lutheran can not be drawn to go any further than what Luther saw; and the Calvinists, you see, stick fast where they were left by that great man of God, who yet saw not all things."

The dogmas of the Calvinistic pulpit were doomed to meet with stern and talented opposition. The "five points" have died an ignominious death. They were fought by some such men as John Gaster, Christian Lavater, James Necker, the great financier and prime minister of France, and Mr. Scarlett. These men presented views of man's future condition quite biblical. These men's views were opposed by "two articles" of forty-two articles, framed during the reign of King Edward. The articles are a breathing of bigoted thought, divested of true Christian charity.

The pulpit still held in subjection the pews, and announced its right to teach its varied dogmas without being investigated. Of course the pulpit ought to know, it having been theologically educated, and its brains supplied with a sufficiency of divine knowledge(?) so as to allow of no contradiction. When the divinely arranged(?) dogmas were read and preached they were always appended with: "He that believeth shall be saved; and he that believeth not shall be damned." I think I hear the latter word pronounced midst profound silence, and piercing every auditor's ear, sending a fiery thrill of the fear of "eternal torment" through every soul! These things were reiterated until year after year carried its fearful victims of contradicting dogmas, to "the other shore;" and by and by all this passes away. Men arise who dare question the authority of the pulpit to propagate such things. Thinking men call it humbuggery, and denounce it as infamous. The pulpit rages, the pews quake, skeptics shake, and amid the confusion a decision is reached! The pulpit says nothing more about these dogmas—all parties decide that it is decidedly sectarian to advocate doctrine. The creed is laid by on the shelf, still the church stands upon it, but dare not advocate its peculiar dogmas; the pulpit dare not denounce them lest it is suddenly branded "heretic," or "heresy;" so the pulpit stands between the dogmas and the finally independent assertions of the pews, who have at last discovered that they possessed individual rights and privileges that the pulpit had long time arrogated unto itself. But one peculiar feature of all this wonderful reaction is, that various forms of skepticism have crept into the pulpit as well as the pews. While the pulpit can no longer advocate its peculiar dogmas, discovering that they will not bear the light nor weight of modern investigation, and close comparison with biblical doctrine, and not feeling authorized to fairly advocate the "six principles" of "the everlasting gospel," they are apt to renounce the whole system of religion, and go to the "bar," the "stage" and the "store." What Luther, Calvin, Wesley, Knox and others thought, will not serve for us to day. For their thoughts were blended with errors that can not stand the test of examination, and now there is a general demand that we have something in religion, real, tangible, solid, good, worth possessing, a religion of actual, God given power, an evidence that will stand the test of solid reason, based upon justice, equity, and truth!

A certain writer has well said: "When religion becomes a mere sentiment, moral principle, or philosophy of life, the dogmatism that binds the old churches together has gone out of it. Fear has become extinguished in the mind, and individualism asserts itself. It is hard then for the religious teachers to address the people and sway them with authority. And unless the pulpit is entrenched in an authority that is thought to be divine, the church becomes impaired; the pulpit and the clergy dethroned; the temple and the oracle contemned, religion begins to waver and decay."

The pulpit has been cowering before the evolutionists, such as Darwin, Haeckel, etc., while at the same time it has been asking, even imploring the pews to accept and believe the Bible as containing God's saving word, while it has had mental reservations as to the Eden story of man's creation, as though the God who professed to save men through Christ's work was not able to create or organize the man he proposed to save! But since Hall's "Problem of Human Life," etc., has been issued, the pulpit lifts its fearful head, and announces to the pews that the Bible is right, Eden's story can be fully relied upon, as "Wilford's" "Problem" has fully "evolved evolution" and we'll now "pronounce the benediction!" - I think a little revelation from God in this century would not have a bad effect in throwing a little light upon matters and give the pulpit a little more back-bone (?) and moral stamina, and the pews would have more than chaff upon which to subsist. Their "faith would not rest so much in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God."

A general reformation of pulpit and pews is badly needed. "The gospel" will triumph in the grand accomplishment of the long looked for work.

Something To Steer By.

MEN WHO LEAD AND MEN WHO LAG

Keep up with the procession, my boy. Don't hang back in the breeching. You may be able to make things drag a little, but you can't stop the team, and you'll have to come along. There was a man, an eminent mathematician, Dr. Lardner, of England who published a treatise to prove that no steamship could ever cross the Atlantic ocean, and the steamer Sirious a few weeks later brought the first copies of his pamphlet to America. This same eminent scientist also "staked his reputation as a man of science," before the House of Commons, on his statement that no railroad train could ever go faster than ten miles an hour, and the slightest curve would invariably throw it off the track. Babinet, the French calculator, declared that no telegram could ever be transmitted from Europe through the Atlantic to America. There was a man here in America, only 100 years ago, who opposed the rebellion of the colonies because he knew it would be a failure. There was a man who laughed himself sore at Fulton's absurd ideas about steamboats. There was a member of Congress who wanted Morse shut up in an insane asylum because he talked about a telegraph, which was an impossibility. There was a man who said you could never build a bridge across the Mississippi. There was a man who said you could never raise wheat on the great American desert. There was a man who swore he would call the roll of his slaves in the shadow of Bunker Hill monument. There was a man who "knew" that nothing but a steam horse could ever trot inside of 2:40. There was a man who "knew" you couldn't make the sun draw your portrait. There was a man who "knew" you could never find a better light than a whale oil lamp. There was another man who knew you could never beat lard oil. There was another man who said Col. Drake was a gibbering idiot because he said he could pump a better oil than lard oil out of the ground like water. There was another man who said Edison was insane when he talked about an electric light. There was another man who said the phonograph was a clever trick of ventriloquism. There was a man who said the telephone was a newspaper line. There was a man in England who fed mobs of agricultural laborers to destroy thrashing machines. There was a man in America who "knew" the invention of the sewing machine meant starvation for the poor seamstress. And there is a man to-day who says all people may come to America, save only the Chinese. There is a man who "knows" the Indians can never be civilized. There is a man who "knows" we have reached the limit of human progress. There is a man who "knows" the gigantic corporations will devour the country. There is a man who "knows" the people are helplessly enslaved, and will never rise to assist themselves. There is a man who "knows" that all politics are corrupt, all politicians mercenary, the civil service rotten to the core, and our social life is honeycombed with decay. Now my dear boy, there's only one way for you to escape that man's whining and obstinate, mulish opposition to everything. Keep so far ahead of him you can't hear him. And do you keep moving and drag him along. Rasp him with the double trees; he has to come, for the old chariot never stands still a second. The difference between you and that man, my boy, is that you run and he is dragged. You spring along with your eyes open, your head erect, and you help to keep things moving. He has his feet set in the road, his eyes shut tight, his back up on his shoulders, and his heart under the wheels. Every time you make a leap you throw the dust back in his face. Don't, my boy, whatever you do, don't get back beside that man. Don't have any breeching on your harness. Put on a breast collar, and that is enough; you'll run more lightly and feel freer. Let the man in the breeching hang back. All that you have to do is to step out, keep pace with the time, sing as you march, and keep the man in the breeching so covered with dust the world will only know he's there by the dirt around him. It may be, Telemachus, you will run a little fast sometimes; it may be that you will kick over the traces in your exuberance of spirit; you may sometimes want to strike a 2:10 gait on a 3:20 road; you may need more curb than whip, but go it, my boy. There is a good driver on the seat and a firm hand on the lines, and I'd rather see you coming down the long vistas of history with a bit in your teeth, your heels in the air, the brake rod sprung, and the dash board flying, than down on your haunches, your eyes shut and your back bowed, the lash on your flanks, and your collar up to your ears, your legs set like crowbars, and the dust of the whole team flying in your face, while you hang back in the breeching, and only come along because you can't help it.

BURDETTE.

THE REAL COMFORTS OF LIFE.—There are numerous conceptions of pleasure and comfort. Most people find, with or without experience, that the real comforts of life are found at home. For there the devoted wife is the presiding deity; there the children praise and play; there the young girl approximates and reaches womanhood; within its sacred precinct youth puts on the responsibilities of manhood; there are the reuions of hearts and hopes and prayers; there can be found real rest; there are the place and affection typical of the better life; there the germinating and binding together of hearts and minds and souls in a bond as strong as a chain and as lovely as a wreath of beauteous flowers; there the memories that glow and exist with life itself; there the influence that strengthen and bless and guide in after years whatever we do and wherever our footsteps roam.

Prehistoric Races.

THE Rev. Robert West, editor of the Advance, who is temporarily filling the pulpit of the New England Congregational Church, Chicago, during the vacation of the pastor, lectured on the evening of August 20th, to a large audience, taking as his subject, "The Prehistoric Races of the Southwest."

The speaker commenced by saying that the freshest remains of the work of the prehistoric races were to be found in the southwestern portion of this continent. When Cornado first left Mexico, in 1540, to seek the seven mysterious cities of Cibolo, he went direct to the town of Santa Fe, and to the region now known as the San Juan country, near where Arizona, Colorado, and New Mexico join. A geological survey was subsequently made of that county, by the United States, and to this we owe all the specific information concerning the cliff dwellers. Their dwellings were situated on the Colorado River and its tributaries, the most of which had been built of dressed stone sometimes laid in mortar and cement, and sometimes dressed so well as to lie evenly, breaking joints with regularity. The singular feature of these dwellings, however, was that they were situated in the sides of almost perpendicular walls, and were accessible now by only the most daring and expert climbers. One of these buildings was 360x120 feet, and was built in a cleft in the rock 500 feet from its base. One of them had been apparently as large as the Grand Pacific Hotel of this city, and contained about 1,000 rooms. The cedar floors of these buildings were often composed of lumber bearing marks of having been dressed with stones, and no one knew who erected them.

The speaker next took his auditors south to Chihuahua, on the great plain of Anahuac, in New Mexico, and entered into a minute description of Casa Grande, the remains of which showed it to have been a building 800x250 feet, which had been built of adobe. Further on he introduced them to the pyramid of El Tajin (or the Thunderer), which was ninety feet square, seven stories high, and had been built of dressed porphyry and sandstone regularly laid in mortar and cement, with three-inch coating of the latter upon the walls. He next referred to the pyramid of Cholula, in the State of Puebla, which he said was the largest in the world—greater and more wonderful in every way than the famous pyramid of Cheops on the Nile. It covered forty-four acres, and at the present day was between 200 and 300 feet high, after the storms of ages had beaten down its walls of earthen and sun-dried brick. Perhaps the most wonderful of all the remains of this prehistoric people, however, he thought was found seventy-five miles west of the City of Mexico. It was called Xochicalco, or the "hill of flowers," which was two miles in circumference and 400 feet high. It was encircled with stone terraces seventy five feet in height and faced everywhere with perpendicular stone walls reaching to its summit. On the summit, which was truncated, and 285x328 feet in surface, stood a pyramid with its sides facing cardinal points, the singular thing about which was that it was built of immense granite blocks, eleven feet in length, three in height, and four in width, and that there was no sign of granite within forty miles of the site. Another singular thing about the hill was that it was penetrated by a tunnel into the solid limestone rock for hundreds of feet, which was nine feet high and nine feet wide. And the masonry, too, had been employed at intervals to support the roof wherever defective, and it led to a chamber eighty feet square and sixty feet high, terminating in a gothic arch.

The speaker then passed to the mines of Palenque in Central America, and spoke of their immensity at some length, which, he said, gave evidence of some of the finest architecture, sculpture, and painting, and which, according to Waldeck, Humboldt, and Dupaix, was equal to anything the world had ever produced. He next called attention to the ruins of Copan, in Honduras, near the Guatemala line. The building there was of dressed stone, about 800 feet long, 600 wide, the walls being twenty five feet thick and sixty feet in height. The lecturer asked, "Who were these people?" and went on to say that they possessed a literature, arts, and sciences, and had evidently many of the characteristics of a highly civilized life. They had been variously known under the names of Chimechs, Quiches, Nahuas, Maya, Toltecs, and Aztecs, but the question was, Where did they come from and who were they? One of the theories was that Plato's Atlantis was a reality, and that the two continents were connected by an archipelago, and Prof. Dana was among those who had believed that such an archipelago had once existed between our coast and that of Europe. Another theory was that of the Japanese current, which sweeps along the Asiatic coast to the east, describes a semi-circle, and bends itself across to the shores of California and Mexico, returning to Asia. This current threw Japanese junks on our shores every year, which was a singular fact. Another theory had been that the migration from Asia to this continent had been by way of the Aleutian Islands, but the most probable theory, in the mind of the speaker, was that they had come by Behring Straits. Sir Charles Lyell had pointed out the fact years ago that these straits agreed singularly in width and depth with the Straits of Dover—that is, they were about thirty miles broad in their narrows, and about twenty-five fathoms in their greatest depth. The Straits of Dover had been crossed as early as twelve centuries before Christ by adventurers seeking the island now known as England, and to the speaker's mind there was no doubt but this continent had been originally peopled by a migration from Europe. He quoted from Prof. Geste to show that the migration had taken place in the tertiary period in pliocene time, and that the subsequent advent of the ice period had cut off all communication with the Old World until recent times. Prof. Asa Gray had shown satisfactorily the intimate relationship between North American and Asiatic vegetation, and that many of our fauna were clearly of Asiatic origin, and scientific investigations, he said were demonstrating the truth of Scripture—that God had made of one blood all the nations of the earth."

Saints' Herald

JOSEPH SMITH, EDITOR.

Lamoni, Iowa, September 1, 1882.

We were lately invited by the Saints at Boonesboro, Boone county, in this state, to visit them and assist them on the 13th of August, to dedicate a chapel to the service of prayer and the worship of God. Accordingly, on the 11th we left the Sanctum, and by rail reached Boone by the way of Indianola and Des Moines, on the evening of the 12th, to be met at the depot of the Narrow Gauge, by Bro. Wm. McBirnie, Samuel McBirnie, Hill, Nelson, Clark and others; and to be by them escorted to the little church by the Court House, for a moment's rest and chat, and from there to Bro. S. McBirnie's, where we sojourned during our stay with them.

The morning of Sunday the 13th, threatened rain, but by the time set for dedication service, 10:30 a. m., the sky was clear. The house was crowded, early, so that no delay occurred. An opening hymn was sung, Bro. Troughear led in prayer, and we pronounced a discourse adapted as we thought to the occasion. A collection was taken up by which a small sum was realized, and the house dedicated to song, prayer and worship service, and the blessing of God invoked upon it and the little band by whom it had been built. An excellent spirit was present, and all felt that the solemn consecration was acceptable to the Master.

We staid with the Saints until Monday afternoon, speaking under the trees in the Court House yard, at 2:30 p. m., Sunday, to quite a large and very attentive congregation, one that gave evidence of great interest. We spoke again in the evening at 7:30 in the chapel, to a house full of hearers.

The interest at Boonesboro, the old town, and at Boone the new town and railway station, is fair, and is in great part due to the steadfast and consistent advocacy of the truth by Bro. William McBirnie, together with the active co-operation in theory and practice of the rest of the Saints located there. Bro. Wm. McBirnie has held several debates in Boone and vicinity, and has, it is admitted, successfully defended the faith. Besides the local labor which the brethren living there have done, they have now and then been visited by Bro. J. R. Lambert, Eli Clothier, J. F. McDowell, B. Salisbury, M. T. Short, and others passing through. Sr. Josephine O. Barnes, a grand daughter of Elder Jared Carter, of the Church in the early day, lives at Boone, and is with her husband in the glove, hat and cap furnishing business. She is known as a member of the Church and frequently defends the faith in the conversational way. Sr. Jennie Murphy, at one time resident at Boone, but now of Marshalltown, a daughter of an old time Saint, Norton by name, was visiting at Boone to attend the meeting. These sisters, with the wives of Bro. McBirnie, Hill, Clark and others have taken a deep interest in the building of the little church, and are rejoiced that their efforts have been successful. Sr. Samuel McBirnie carried us to and from the meetings and home in her light wagon, drawn by her mare Fanny, which she manages with much skill as a good horsewoman can do.

One of our reasons for giving this extended notice of our visit to the Saints of Boone is, that of the example set by them. Scarcely a quarter of an hundred in number, all poor in this world's goods, industriously engaged in hard work, (nearly all being coal miners), this little band of believers has fought its way forward, meeting in private houses, school houses, and occasionally hiring a hall, until they felt that the work and their interest in it demanded some local center where their worship might be constant and become well known. We did not learn who among them originated the idea, but they talked it up, agreed, bought a lot right over against the Court House square, and proceeded to appoint a committee, solicit aid, and build. They have erected a house 20x26 feet square, and have seated it with chairs. It is neatly finished inside, wainscotted and plastered. The windows open from top or bottom as desired. A neat platform extends across the end farthest from the door. It will seat a hundred people comfortably and is an easy room to speak in. The aggregate cost is a little rising of six hundred dollars, the larger part we understand is paid and arrangements made by the committee to raise and liquidate the remainder. Some few of the brethren expect that the burden will necessarily fall on them, but they are not of the sort to "take hold of the plow and look back." Some of their neighbors and friends have aided them and will do so again, and the rest will be done by sacrifice.

We regretted that we could help them so little, but did all we could to encourage them; and we were glad that the "faith once delivered to the Saints" had there so faithful and devoted a band of believers. We were refreshed, spiritually by our visit to them.

BRO. PETER N. BRIX, now at Aalborg, Denmark, is quite anxious that the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants should be printed in the Danish language. He has written us in regard to it, thus:

"It is necessary for the Church to have the Books of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants in the Danish language. I can get one thousand Books of Mormon printed in Denmark for $360, and bound for 25c. each; and one thousand Doctrine and Covenants for $210, and bound for 20c. each. If the Church will send me $570, I can place the money in the bank here and then get the work done, so far as printing is concerned; and can get them bound as needed."

The Bishop is not authorized to devote the money to this work without an order from the Conference; and it perhaps may be proper that the friends to the Scandinavian Mission shall bear this in mind at Conference. Bro. Brix is an earnest worker, and would if he had the means of his own, at once devote it to this work.

The Board of Publication is not yet in condition to take up the work indicated by Bro. Brix; and it would seem like an opportunity was offered for some body to turn "lovers of men" in this emergency. Any one wishing to address Bro. Brix on the subject may address him Norregarde, 18 Aalborg, Denmark.

We also have for sale at the office the Sunday School Engineer, for use of secretaries of schools, arranged with printed headings for a complete weekly record of the school for one year. Price postpaid, thirty-five cents.

Bro. V. D. Baggerly wrote from Lancaster, Indiana, August 3d. He had had two quite interesting dreams, in which he was visited by the Martyrs Joseph and Hyrum, and by Abraham Lincoln. He was encouraged by what he saw and heard in dreams. He would visit Brooksburg, August 19th.

The conference for the district in which Nebraska City is, will meet at that place September 10th and 11th. Delegates to Fall Conference will be chosen then.

Bro. H. Robinson wrote from Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, August 9th, that he had visited Monroe county, Ohio, and found five members of the branch there who still held on to the way of life. He spoke eight times there, a good interest was manifested. He held a discussion with a Christian minister at Hartshorn Schoolhouse, which he thinks gained friends to the cause.

Bro. Jobe Brown wrote from North LaCrosse, Wisconsin, August 8th, stating that he was making a home there, and was willing to try to lift the warning voice, and to establish righteousness.

Bro. Wm. Burch writes from Port Sanilac, Michigan, in defense of Bro. J. J. Cornish, and in reply to Bro. Kelley's mention of Bro. Cornish. In this connection we advise that Bro. Kelley's letter be read again by Bro. Burch and others; we believe that Bro. Kelley is misunderstood, and that he did not intend any personal disparagement of Bro. Cornish, but aimed to write on principle only.

Bro. W. H. Kelley and G. A. Blakeslee were to visit Green Ridge, Manitoba, starting from Chicago, August 16th. Bro. Kelley goes in answer to the request of Bro. A. J. Hinkle and others, and Bro. Blakeslee, to avoid periodical attack of Hay Fever, to which he has of late years been subject.

Bro. James Caffall sent us a Greeley Tribune for July 5th, containing a defense of the Reorganization written by himself. It is a very good one.

Ground has been broken and the walls for the church building at Lamoni are being laid. The poor prospects for corn crops and the rainy season has had a retarding effect; but it is thought that it will go ahead all right.

Bro. J. C. Foss writes from Stewartsville, Missouri, to which place he has removed from Maine. He may be addressed at that place.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Are parents responsible as per revelation, 1831, page 200, par. 4, Doctrine and Covenants, for the actions of their children outside of Zion and her organized stakes, if they do not teach them the doctrine of Christ; or are parents free because Zion is not organized?

As we comprehend it, the duty of parents to teach children the gospel and their obligations to God, is just as incumbent on them and as grave in its consequences for good if performed, or for evil if neglected, as it can ever be in Zion, whether redeemed or not. So far as parents can be responsible for children, so far are Saints who have them responsible for their children. That father and mother who permits son or daughter to grow up away from the Church, and untaught in the knowledge of the Lord, may look for grief sooner or later. If the Saints will not teach their children the way of the Lord, others will teach them the ways of the world and the devil.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Sr. M. J. Ryerson writes from near Malvern, Iowa:

If any Elder should come this way, he will be greatly welcomed at my house. We live five and one half miles north-east from Malvern, and no difficult matter to get here without walking, as there is a great deal of travel over this road.

We believe Sr. Ryerson is a sister to Bro. W. H. Kelley.

In an account of the death of Senator Ben Hill, of Georgia, the disease of which he died and its cause, written by Mr. Frank A. Burr and published in the Philadelphia press, occurs the following:

TOBACCO CANCER.

WHAT KILLED SENATOR HILL OF GEORGIA.

"Epitheloma, or skin cancer, is entitled to be classed with the other carcinomæ, or cancer proper. Its seat is always in the skin, or mucous membrane, or both, and it may force itself into deeper structures, invading lymphatic and other glands, and infiltrating the surrounding tissues. It is generally occasioned by the long continued or frequently repeated application of an irritant, as in the case of Senator Hill, who had the peculiar habit of holding a cigar almost constantly in his mouth, and keeping the nicotine-coated end against the left side of his tongue. This was, no doubt, the exciting cause in his case. It is well known that the Senator inherited a predisposition to cancer, having lost a sister several years ago by the same disease. Many instances are on record where the disease has been traced to a short stemmed pipe.

"Each of the millions of little round cells is a section of epitheloma endowed with the power of reproduction, and the cells migrate and colonize and feed upon the surrounding tissues. About three years ago Senator Hill observed a little fissure on the right side of his tongue. Aside from slight pain and occasional inconveniences nothing was thought of it. As it grew worse he consulted a physician, and was told that it would soon heal. Had Senator Hill removed the exciting cause by removing the ever present cigar the chances are that it would have healed kindly. Soon an ulcer formed, and the destruction of tissue and life began. The disease grew daily worse. Finally, after a long and fatal delay, his friends induced him to visit Prof. S. D. Gross, of this city, only to hear the great surgeon pronounce those ominous words, "Too late."

It is not many months since the death of a brother in Missouri, from cancer of the tongue, or throat, was published in the HERALD, and we have not a doubt that many cancerous affections with which both men and women, Saints and those not Saints, are afflicted, result from the tobacco habit. We think we have seen some of them.

BRO. WILLIAM ANDERSON, of 1009 Broadway, Oakland, California, loaded Bro. Steele with tracts, "Which is the Church," among them, and commissioned him to attend the Central Holiness Association meeting at East Oakland, for the purpose of distributing the tracts, and inciting investigation. The result may be seen by the following extract from the Oakland Daily Evening Tribune, for August 14th:

"The second annual camp meeting of the Central Holiness Association, which has been in progress during the week, has been well attended and very successful. Last evening the crowd was very large. Several young men who ridiculed the services were ordered out by the camp police, and they revenged themselves by singing obscene songs outside the tents, when they were removed from the grounds. A peaceable old man, over sixty years of age, was also requested to retire, whose sole offense was distributing tracts entitled 'The True Church of Christ, and others.' They proved to be a new Mormon publication with reference to the Church, and not agreeing with the tenets of the holiness people, the poor man had to go to the station to distribute his peculiar doctrines unmolested."

Not much use for the Church of Christ there.

BRO. B. V. SPRINGER is out in the St. Louis, Missouri, Post Dispatch, in the following:

"Will you allow a subscriber and reader of your paper a little space in its columns to disabuse the public mind in reference to an advertisement that appears from time to time in the Globe Democrat announcing religious services at 1310 Broadway, 'by the Elders of the Church' of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. It looks very well on paper, but the fact is that the aforesaid elders are representatives of Utah Mormonism, which involves the doctrine of polygamy, Adam God, blood atonement, etc., etc. The above institution is no part of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. The true Latter Day Saints meet at 1302 Broadway, where the Elders are prepared at any time to fortify the above statement. By giving this an insertion in your paper, you will confer a favor on a lover of truth, virtue and morality.

B. V. SPRINGER,
Elder in the Church of Jesus Christ of L. D. S.

ADVANTAGES OF PLAIN ATTIRE AT CHURCH.

1. It would lessen the burdens of many who find it hard to maintain their place in society.
2. It would lessen the force of the temptations which often lead men to barter honor and honesty for display.
3. If there was less strife in dress at church, people in moderate circumstances would be more likely to attend.
4. Universal moderation in dress at church, would improve the worship by the removal of many wandering thoughts.
5. It would enable all classes of people to attend church better in unfavorable weather.
6. It would lessen, on the part of the rich, the temptation to vanity.
7. It would lessen, on the part of the poor, the temptation to be envious and malicious.

Correspondence.

DENNISPORT, Maine,

August 14th, 1882.

Dear Herald:—Since I last wrote you, I have been constantly engaged in the ministry, traveling throughout the Massachusetts District, under district conference appointment, preaching in the branches and where opportunity offered. After our conference which was held at Douglass, June 3d, I visited and preached in Providence, and Scituate and vicinity. Then in company with Bro. G. T. Griffiths, went to Fall River on Sunday, where June 25th, I occupied the stand in the morning, Bro. Griffiths in the evening. Good seemed to be accomplished, for on the following Tuesday evening I was permitted to lead four into the waters of baptism. On the Friday following, I visited one of my former mission fields, i. e., Kerby's Corner's, Westport, and preached Friday and Saturday evenings and twice on Sunday. And on Sunday evening our labors were rewarded by being brought back to Fall River, a distance of ten miles, by our faithful friend, Mr. Algerine O. Tripp, who also brought his garments with him, and asked baptism before the church, at the close of Bro. Griffith's discourse. We adjourned from the Chapel to the water,—it was a beautiful sight; the moon's silvery light was reflected from the clear waters of the Wattupa Lake. About an hundred Saints and friends had gathered to witness the ceremony. We sang an hymn, solemn prayer was offered, a covenant was made, we walked into the water to a sufficient depth, then by the authority of the Master we baptized Bro. Tripp in the name of the "Father, Son, and Holy Ghost." O, what a blessed thought that "we arise to walk in newness of life,"—and the promise, "For if we have been planted in the likeness of his death, we shall also be in the likeness of his resurrection."

Tuesday, July 4th—We had the pleasure of attending the Annual Picnic of the Bethel Sabbath School, held at Blossom's Grove, about six miles away. About one hundred and fifty went in large teams, besides those who came in private carriages. A number came from New Bedford. A right good time we had. "We pitched the ball, and swung the bat," we had swinging and games, &c., everybody seemed to enjoy themselves. This to me is as it should be in all the branches: a Sunday School, and at least once a year a gathering such as this. Get the young interested; make them believe that being a saint does not mean that you have got to mope your time away with a "face as long as a fiddle;" but that proper enjoyment and innocent amusement can be better enjoyed in the Church than out of it, and I believe that more of the children of the Saints would be in the Church than there are to-day. I notice this in my travels, that there is a lack of interest in the children of the Saints, and in the Sabbath School cause.

Sunday, July 9th—Spent again in Providence. District President, J. Smith being with us. He spoke in the afternoon, we followed in the evening Friday, July 14th. I arrived at North Plymouth about two miles from Plymouth Rock, the spot where the pilgrims landed in 1620. Bro. N. Nickerson was in waiting for us and took us home. A number of Saints have removed from Dennisport to this place. Met with them that evening and spoke to them, and had prayer-meeting Saturday evening went to town to attend the Advent meeting. Some two month's previous we were there and had the use of their Chapel twice, and when we left, it was their wish that we should come again. We therefore put in an appearance, and mingled our voice with theirs, i. e., what was present, (there were but four when we entered) I understand this was their regular meeting. After we went in, there seemed to be a number follow, and we bore our testimony to the Gospel of Christ, &c. After the meeting I applied for the use of the Chapel; but I found that there was a regular squabble going on about me. They had heard I was coming, and some of them looked upon it as a desecration of the place to let that Mormon in; others apologized and wished me God Speed, was very sorry, &c, but hoped that when Christ comes we should all wake up and meet in his Kingdom, where prejudice could not shut us out. I told them it was all right, they had a right to close their doors upon us if they choose; but when Christ came we would choose to dwell in the Kingdom with men of more liberal ideas. This was rather a surprise to me I admit. The Advents getting up on their dignity, and refusing us their Chapel because of our unpopularity, especially in town of Plymouth,—it's a little "Tempest in a teapot."

Sunday, July 16th.—Spoke in the morning at North Plymouth, in the Chapel there; not many out. At 7 p. m. congregation about a hundred, and we again pointed out the way of life to them. Preached Monday, Thursday and Friday evenings; also twice on Sunday the 23d. In the evening, by request I spoke on the coming forth of the Book of Mormon. Had unusual liberty, and excellent attention was paid; among those outside, a good spirit of enquiry was manifested, and at the close of the service many came and shook hands with me; some said it was the truth; others that I had given them more light since I had commenced to preach there than they had received in all their life before; one man told me he knew I was a servant of the Lord when he first heard me preach.

On the Wednesday evening previous the Saints met at the house of Bro. Nehemiah F. Joy, and talked over organization of a branch. It was finally decided to organize, by choosing John Gilbert to preside, and A. Nickerson clerk. It was voted that Nehemiah R. Nickerson be set apart and ordained to the office of a Priest, which was done, I ordaining him, being the only official present. He was appointed to preside over the branch, Bro. Freeman Joy was appointed secretary, and Sister Effie Joy treasurer; branch to be called the North Plymouth Branch. There were seven members originally, but on Saturday I baptized Bro. Nymphas Chase, making now eight. We left them Monday, the 24th. As we did so I raised a prayer to God that he would bless the little flock, and add to their numbers.

Saturday, the 29th.—I arrived in Dennisport. On Sunday, 30th, I preached twice; also, Monday and Wednesday evenings. Alas, poor Dennisport, almost wrecked by internal broils; business depressed so that the greater part of its members have had to go elsewhere to obtain a livelihood, and some have died. It is time that those who are left should endeavor to try and keep the "unity of the Spirit in the bonds of peace," and uphold the banner of the gospel, that its folds are not found trailing in the dirt. Last evening, in connection with Bro. Small, we visited South Yarmouth, but at this time found it impracticable to hold meetings there.

At this writing I am at the Alm's House, of the town of Dennis. Bro. Eleazer Small being the overseer. Bro. and Sr. Small are noted for their hospitality; their kindness to those of the unfortunate under their care is proverbial. I expect to morrow evening to go to Provincetown and preach the gospel, if opportunity offers, which I trust will be the case. I desire the prayers of the Saints everywhere for the work here in the east. The good seed is now being sown, and by the blessing of God the reaping will be bye and bye.

Yours in bonds,

JOHN GILBERT.

Bro. Joseph Smith:—I receive a great deal of good from the Herald and I think all those that read them do. If it was not for the Herald I would not know what to do; for there is seldom any preaching here. There is a few here that belong to the Church of Christ, and I think there would be more if there was some one to preach for them. My desire is to seek the great things that lead to everlasting life. Pray for me brothers and sisters,

FRANK LA POINT.

MT. VERNON, Mo.,

August 13th, 1882.

Bro Joseph Smith:—Two years ago, while on a visit to my native home, Southern Illinois, I was ordained an Elder in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saint. I have labored as circumstances would permit, and I trust to the best of my ability, almost exclusively in Lawrence county, Missouri, and I am glad to say that my labors have not been altogether vain. The way is beginning to open up and a good work can be done here if the proper effort is put forth. Prejudice is giving way slowly, and some people are beginning to understand that Mormonism is not polygamy. Of course, there are some with whom the terms "Mormonism" and "Polygamy" are synonymous; but those who are willing to investigate, and receive the truth when they have found it, soon learn that Mormonism proper, is as far from being Polygamy, or having any connection with it, as the glorious orb of day is from "a gambler's lamp at midnight."

The Reorganization has put a nail in the right place and driven it to the head. If its members will now clinch it fast by obeying the old time adage "mind your own business" (with the appendix, let the business of others alone), and the injunction of the "golden rule," then all will be well. Then shall the outside world realize the true position of the church, and be made to know that we are indeed a people, if not the people of the Lord. So may it be.

People of different classes, of different shades of opinion, of different professions, and different politics and religions have listened while I have tried to "preach the word" in these parts. All have treated me with as much respect as I might reasonably wish or expect. All, or nearly all I believe, are willing to admit that the doctrine is good, but "Joe Smith" and the "Book of Mormon" are two mighty stumbling stones which they can neither get over nor around. This, perhaps is just as it should be. There always is, and ought to be something to try the faith and hearts of men; and if they are ashamed of the servants of the Lord they are also ashamed of the Lord himself, and are not fit for his kingdom; and the church is better off without than with those who are not sufficiently strong in the faith to acknowledge the Lord and all his servants, as well as all the means of grace which the Lord may see fit to provide for his people.

Through the medium of friends I hear a great deal that is said about the "Mormon Preacher." Please pardon my vanity, Bro. Joseph, if I tell some of the remarks that are made about him. He is given to understand by some that he is "smart enough to make a living by preaching if he would only join some of the popular churches and quit preaching Mormonism." Some who love to backbite and belittle the doctrine when they are asked to defend, publicly, a different position, dodge the issue by saying "K—y is too smart for us." Again, some will say "He is too smart to believe what he preaches," etc. Now, brother Joseph, I would not have you believe all this, for I know it is not all true. I have only been, as nearly as I could, "instant in season and out of season" in preaching the word, and they see that the Bible upholds the word preached; yet can not get the consent of their own minds that there is any good thing in "Mormonism," and having not the Spirit of God they know not "the things of God;" and can not understand where the force of the argument lies; and hence, blindly, very blindly too, attribute it to the "smartness of the Mormon preacher."

On the 18th day of June I baptized three persons, all ladies of excellent repute, into the kingdom. One, a member in good standing of the Baptist Church—the other two were outsiders, having made no profession of religion hitherto. All seem well satisfied and sound in the faith. And "still there's more to follow." One good old lady is anxious to join the church, but remains out on account of opposition from children and friends(?) I would be glad if some efficient laborer would come to this part of the vineyard, and "thrust in his sickle and reap," for I think that such an one could do good here; and surely "the field is white already to harvest." I expect to still do what I can for the cause, yet under the present circumstances I can not labor nearly so much as I would like. A good supply of the printed word would greatly aid the cause here, and go far to diffuse light—and dispel prejudicial darkness from the minds of the people. If the church can afford it, and you will send a good supply of tracts, I am sure the church will not be the loser in the "long run," and very probably it may be "bread cast upon the waters, to be gathered in again not many days hence." I would not ask it if I was able to buy them, but I am not; and tracts in abundance are needed badly here.

Whith a devout prayer for Zion's weal and the cause of truth. I am, Bro. Joseph, very truly yours in the "one faith,"

THOMAS C. KELLEY.

ECHO, Cherokee Nation, Indian Territory,
August 7th, 1882.

Dear Herald:—On July 17th in company with my traveling companion, Bro. Joseph Luff, I left Independence, Missouri, on our way to our mission in the South-west. Two o'clock the morning of the 18th found us at Vinita, Indian Territory, where we remained until afternoon of the following day, when we went by rail to Prairie City, where we met Bro. W. N. Stewart awaiting us. A ride of fourteen miles in a wagon brought us to the home of Bro. Stewart, on Cow Skin Prairie.

We found in this neighborhood over twenty nominal members of the Church, who had been baptized by Bro. J. O. Stewart and organized into what is known as the Delaware Branch, under the watch care of Bro. David Beck. We immediately set about our work, and during the week of our arrival we held two meetings at Bro. Beck's.

The Sunday following we attended a Quaker meeting, in charge of Rev. Jerry Hubbard. He was quite friendly, and invited us to speak in the afternoon services, which we each did, and thereby reached the ears of some who would perhaps have failed to come to hear us. The results were we had about one hundred and fifty persons out to hear us in the evening. Bro. Luff addressed them in his usual forcible way, and we think removed some prejudice. The next day we held a business meeting, and former difficulties which had existed in the branch were in a manner settled, but not with entire satisfaction to all, and we fear differences will never be adjusted unless there is more of the fruits of the spirit manifested. We held two more meetings at and near Bro. Beck's, and then by request we went to South-west City, Missouri, and held three meetings, and were well received. We found Bro. and Sr. O. Miles there. This place is a quarter of a mile over the line in Missouri, and consequently out of our mission; and if Bro. A. H. Smith feels offended at the trespass, the way is open for him to come over on our side and retaliate; and let him see to it that he retaliates with ten fold vengeance.

Two meetings in a new school-house near Bro. Stewart's completed our meetings on the east side of Grand River, and on the 5th we came over here on the west side, where we held three meetings, with fair interest manifested. On Saturday night we had a distinguished visitor, in the person of Lars Peterson, of Independence; but he tarried not long with us.

So far we have had no very flattering results following our labor; but we feel well in spirit, and have felt since coming here a renewal of the long cherished hope that God would do a great work among the Lamanites; but whether the time has fully come, or not, we are not fully satisfied. We hope, however, to lead some of them into the light of what God did for their fathers, and what he has promised to their seed in the latter days. Pray for us!

If there are doubts in the minds of any of the capacity of these people to comprehend the gospel story, they could have these doubts dispelled by making a visit here; and the old theory that they can not be civilized would soon vanish from the mind, if one could take a look around the premises where we now sojourn; over which a son and daughter of Laman preside. Every thing around the place shows evidence of energy, thrift, and industry; while within doors all is neat, clean, and orderly. We feel perfectly at home, and enjoy their company well.

We will stay until about September first, when I go on to Texas, and Bro. Luff will return home. We are daily expecting the arrival of Bro. Montague, but for some cause he has been delayed, we know not where. Hoping to report more progress next time, I am in bonds of gospel truth, HEMAN C. SMITH.

CRESTON, Iowa, August 14th, 1882.

Dear Herald:—There having been a few Saints come to this part, we met June 25th, and were organized into a branch, under the supervision of Bro. E. D. Bullard, who now is president; and we think worthy of the position he holds. He is calculated to give instruction to the little flock under his care. H. O. Redfield was chosen clerk of the branch, and myself Priest. Our number being eleven, and three more having been added by baptism since, makes us fourteen now, with the prospect of more uniting. We have met together every Sunday except two, in prayer and testimony, and enjoy that Spirit which brings peace and joy to the hearts of Saints. Any Elder coming this way will receive a welcome here, as we think there is an opening for the preaching of the word.

Hoping the time will come when we can see your face once a week, and ever praying for the welfare of Zion, I remain a lover of truth,

A. W. HEAD.

THREE RIVERS, MISS.

Bro. Joseph:—I note your answers in the Herald to my letter, and do acknowledge that the "lay up treasure in earth" part should have been left out. But I believe that temporal Zion will cause the Saints to lay up treasures in earth, you "suppose that all the Saints were to sell all, in the light of the contrast;" and then ask, what would follow? I answer; that if the same things did not follow that did when the Saints sold their possessions eighteen hundred years ago, that it would prove to me that they either were not called to do so, or that they disobeyed God. And if God has not called the Church to do so, (and will not according to the temporal Zion theory), then something to the opposite of what pleased him eighteen hundred years ago will please him now; and if he has changed in this point, probably he has changed in others.

You ask, what I mean by following Jesus. I mean that he came to condemn sin in the flesh, and told the people to follow him; (to condemn sin in their flesh); and that the servant was not above his master. And he had not where to lay his head." You next ask, what would become of the helpless. I answer, that whatever become of them in the apostles' time, in that order of things, would become of them now. The preaching of the gospel would be carried on in the same manner it was then. You ask; "How would it look for the Saints to have their possessions sold and be without a home or its comforts. I answer, that they would look to me to be equal, not above their Lord. I am not able to tell what a community would do as hinted at in the contrast offered; unless they did as they did eighteen hundred years ago. You say that the work of the Church is made up of the individual members and that where any one thinks that their stuff ought he sold, that to they to show consistency ought to sell their own, and do what they hold to be right. I do not believe that God requires one member of his body to sell their possessions and not require the same thing at every ones hands. But it does seem strange that something to the opposite of what pleased him in the Apostles' time will please him now. If it does then may be something to the opposite of the principles of his doctrine will please him to. I have written plain, but do not feel hard towards you,

J. B. PORTER.

P. S: If every one was not seeking his own interest more than his brother's, a maintenance would be had, and if any would not seek to benefit self, or brother, let him not eat.

GERBER, Walker Co., Georgia,

August 7th, 1882.

Bro. Joseph Smith:—To-morrow, if the Lord will, I start for home, after nearly one years' labor in the "Sunny South." What I have done for God's great work, in this part of the vineyard, remains with Him and His people; but this much I have learned, at least, that I am greatly deficient in some of those qualifications so needful for every one who labors for the salvation of souls.

I came into this field in the firm belief that it was my duty to come, whatever might be the result. Some hinted that the climate, in my case, would either "kill or cure;" others were confident that it would do wonders for me by way of restoration to health. I paid but little attention to either of these classes; and now, after having made the test, I am prepared to say that it has done neither one. I am not dead, thank the Lord, nor have I received my health; but, upon the whole, I am in a worse condition, physically, than when I entered the mission. But with respect to my taking this field, at the time I did, I have not changed my mind in the least. The Saints, as a rule, and to the extent of their ability to appreciate and understand my peculiarities, have been very kind, for which I pray God to bless them. I have reason to believe that my labors have been duly appreciated by a large majority of the Saints. The confidence and favor secured is the result of a conscientious effort to discharge duty without fear or favor.

I believe I know more about the Southern people and the needs of the work in the South, than I did one year ago, and in learning I have been compelled to change my mind in several respects. The mission ought to be well sustained by a larger ministerial force than hitherto, and even then, it will take time for our position to be understood and acknowledged to that extent that it is in the North. One who comes here free from political bias and does not learn an important lesson, is dull indeed. (Please do not accuse me introducing politics in the Herald). I have spent about one month on Lookout Mountain and vicinity, preaching from one to four times per week. Congregations generally small, interest ordinary. There are a few who believe, and ought to obey, we think. At Suphur Springs, or Wildwood Station, we had rather an interesting time. They would not allow us to preach in the Union (?) Church, and put us out of the school-house. They presented us with a petition to which is appended twenty-six names, requesting us not to preach any more in the house, and to call in our appointment. This was done on Sunday when we were within a quarter of a mile of the place of meeting. We spoke twice under the shade of the trees and felt well. Quite a number attended. The reason assigned for this cause, when asked for, was that a real Josephite Elder had preached somewhere in Georgia and taken people off to Utah! We challenged them and everybody else for proof, but up to this time it has not been furnished.

Yours with a growing interest in the work,

JOSEPH R. LAMBERT.

MANCHESTER, Texas,
August 7th, 1882.

Dear Herald:—I take this method to inform you and all Saints of God that we of Red River Branch are yet on this side of eternity; but sorry to say we are not all alive to the duties we owe to God; the causes I may not know, so I will not try to mention them. I have just had a chill and am feverish, but while lying in bed meditating over the great mercies of our Father and his power, my thoughts dwelt upon my brethren and sisters, and also my neighbors and enemies, who will not, with few exceptions, hear our report. I thought of Rom. 10:1-3, and if ever I felt the spirit of my calling, I certainly did then. My heart was void of offense to any one, and with Paul I could say, My heart's desire is not only for Jewish Israel, but for all my fellow creatures, Saints, friends, and enemies. I desired to speak to all, but I had no audience present. I thought, at the moment, I could make every honest heart understand and feel the testimony of Paul, and all ancient and modern Saints of God; and that they could not through blind prejudice reject the gospel of Christ. We have loved and respected friends that claim that just so they are honest in their faith they are all right. But does the text I mention teach so. Nay, verily, Nay. If the Jews' "zeal of God" would not save them, will zeal save any one? Paul did not so state. Let us hear what our great High Priest, Jesus, says on the subject. See John 3:5-16; John 5:4-39; John 7:17; Mark 16:17, 18. And many other texts I could cite, but I will not here. What is the doctrine of Christ: Faith, repentance, baptism, laying on of hands, resurrection and eternal judgment. See Heb. 6:1-3. But some of our friends say, and I believe them honest, that there is some of the ordinances and gifts spoken of in the New Testament "done away." I simply ask them who did them away, God, or man? They deny any more revelation since John the Revelator. And they can not show any authority from the Bible for doing them away. See the dilemma they are in. They, and some of the Saints I fear, by their practice, teach that James 5:14, 15, are extincts also. I ask, has Christ a Church on earth to-day. If so, his promise is just in as much power and as binding now as ever. I can bear my humble testimony that it is. And so can the most of the Saints in this branch. But, alas, how soon we sometimes let the adversary lead our minds into doubts, and neglect to appreciate the mercies, love and testimonies that our Father bestows upon us, and suffer ourselves lead off into indifference and seek the temporal blessings first and not the Kingdom of God and his righteousness.

Dear Saints and friendly reader of the Herald, let one who is weak, yet firm in the faith of God, admonish you to trust in God. Believe all of his scriptures, not a part of them, and go to God in prayer, and when you pray, do so in full faith in the name of Christ. Pray in humility, let your heart feel that you desire his will to be done in all things, even if it requires your own life. Be not proud, nor vain, nor puffed up, and God will hear you, and answer your prayers, and give you blessings and testimonies. But you have no consistent right to expect God to give you those testimonies in their fullness, unless you obey his holy will in meekness and sincerity. I for one, believe that God does hear, and to a certain extent answers the honest, humble and sincere prayer of those who are not of us. And I think the scriptures bear me out in the belief; but how any Bible reader, or so called honest Christian, after receiving the testimony that God is, and rewards all who diligently seek him, can have the stubbornness to ask God to change his will and doctrine to subserve theirs, is beyond my comprehension; unless they let the tempter lead them astray, like he did the mother of the human race.

I had intended to visit the Silver Hill Branch in July, but I was not financially able. I hope to visit them as soon as I can.

Dear Saints, I am a firm believer in the efficacy of prayer, and humbly claim an interest in your prayers, that I may have God's Spirit to enjoy and ever discharge my whole duty and follow my Savior through evil as well as good report, and win the reward that is for all the faithful, "For I am not ashamed of the gospel, for it is the power of God unto salvation to all who believe it." But for weak fallible man to offer above six hundred doctrines as a substitute for the gospel of Christ, and under the name of "spiritualizing" and "interpreting" God's word, they would fain render it meaningless, without force, and then say the gifts of the gospel are "done away." May the Lord in abundant mercy yet lead them into the glorious light of the gospel, is my humble and earnest prayer in the name of Jesus Christ.

Yours in bonds of peace,
B. T. STJOHN.

SIoux CITY, Iowa,
August 19th, 1882.

Bro. Joseph:—Bro. J. J. Conyers and M. Daugherty, have been holding meetings here. There is a good interest manifested. The Spirit of the Lord was here. I think there could be a great deal of good done here if we had a hall to preach in; but we have no suitable place to hold meetings. The school directors of Sioux City will not open the school houses for any denomination. They closed the house while I was at conference last Fall. We have had our meetings in my house. My wife was away when Bro. Milton came here. I went to work and took our beds and stove out so that we could have a room to hold meeting in; but my wife has come home now, so that we have no room that is large enough to have meetings in. There is a hall here that we can hire for eight dollars per month; but it is not seated. I think that we could get a good branch here if the Church would send us fifty dollars to seat the hall with and pay the first month's rent; and send us some Elders to help us in the work. If you can do that we will pay the rent ourselves the next five months.

E. G. WILCOX.

WALSINGHAM CENTER, Ontario,
August 7th, 1882.

Dear Herald:—We have frequently heard brethren declare, and seen in print in your pages, that "The Shepherd the stone of Israel" Gen. 49:24, refers to Joseph that was sold into Egypt, or rather to his posterity, carried down to this day. How any one can think so is a great mystery to me, I'll quote the verse "But his bow abode in strength, and the arms of his hands were made strong by the hands of the mighty God of Jacob: (from thence is the Shepherd the stone of Israel)." From this it is clear that the arms of Joseph's hands were made strong by the hands of the mighty God of Jacob from thence, from what? Why from the mighty God of Jacob—not Joseph,—is the Shepherd the stone of Israel, and hence refers directly to Christ. Men may be shepherds in a limited sense, but Christ and him alone is the Shepherd of all that will be saved. Turn to Psalms 80:1 "Give ear oh Shepherd of Israel, thou that leadeth Joseph like a flock: thou dwellest between the cherubim, shine forth." Joseph may be a shepherd, but you see from the last quotation that there is a shepherd that leads him. And pray tell us how could Joseph be "the stone of Israel," when we are emphatically told that Christ is the stone. Turn to Isaiah 28:16, "Therefore thus saith the Lord God, behold, I lay in Zion for a foundation a stone, a tried stone, a precious corner stone, a sure foundation: he that believeth shall not make haste." Was there ever a man, save Christ, that filled that pattern? All testimonies loudly say NO. Peter in Acts 4:10, 11, points it to Christ, and Paul, in 1 Cor. 3:11, says "For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ." On the question of "the stone" read Matt. 21:42, Acts 4:10, 11, Rom. 9:33, Eph. 2:20. I Peter 2:6, 7, 8. On the question of "the Shepherd," read John 10:11, Isaiah 40:11, Ezek. 34:23; 37:24. Turn to Zeck 14:9, "And the Lord shall be king over all the earth: in that day shall there be one Lord and his name one. By the quotations we see that Christ is "the Shepherd" "the stone of Israel" "The Prince and King of David [of the tribe of Judah and house of David—or through David "under the law] and when the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdoms of our Lord and his Christ, then Christ will reign as King of kings and Lord of Lords. Christ will then be lifted up before all nations in glory. Dear brethren let us be careful how we apply prophecies, for it is very evident that some have applied to man that which belongs to Christ. In our text, the definite article "The" refers to that, which supercedes all others, and the words "from thence" relates to the noun "God." It requires no great amount of learning to see, the force of this language. Let us as ambassadors for Christ, stand stoutly for Him. Read page 452 in Book of Mormon. Three folds brought into one, and one shepherd, even Christ. I have written in haste, but please examine quotations. I do not want to rob man or Christ, but whatever character under God, figures high and glorious in the highest sense both now and in "that day," I certainly believe refers to Christ.

In love to all Saints I am yours for Christ,
E. H. GURLEY.

LAMONI, Iowa.

Brother Joseph:—Thinking that perhaps some of the readers of the Herald might have a desire to know some thing concerning what I am doing by way of spreading the word; as I am one of the missionaries sent out by General Conference. I do not report often through the Herald, for I don't like to boast of how many miles I have traveled, and the number of sermons I have preached. For the last month I have been laboring in Nodaway county, Missouri. I found a grand opening for preaching, and as is the case wherever I have been, there is but little if any preaching done by the local ministry. In Nodaway I found Old Uncle Charlie Williams, still with the "harness" on; and preaching as his circumstances permit, may his life be prolonged in years of usefulness. In all North West Missouri there is a great field for missionary work. The people are every where anxious to hear more of the doctrine we preach, and are willing to grant us a hearing in any of their school-houses, and even in many of their churches. I had just fairly got started and thought to carry on a vigorous Fall and perhaps Winter campaign,—we were occupying four school houses with mostly large congregations in attendance. But, alas! for human hopes; words from home informed me that for reasons unknown to them their supplies had stopped, and I must come home at once.

When will the Church adopt some system that these intervals need not occur, that the ministry need not thus be crippled; or has the gospel been preached in all the world as a witness unto all nations? I find hundreds of people who have never heard the gospel as we preach, who are very anxious to hear and how can they hear without a preacher; and how can he preach except he be sent, —AND SUSTAINED, (you can whisper the last clause). Nodaway county, can boast of a rich and beautiful country, and, this year an abundant crop of all grains and fruits indigenous the soil and climate, and even more than this, we saw and ate figs from a tree growing in sister Kyersten Anderson's door yard.

I found the Saints in the Platte Branch a zealous, industrious, frugal people, who seem to love God and the latter day work with all their hearts. For fear of trespassing on your space I will close by saying; that would to God there could be more laborers in the field. I am still willing to devote my time to the preaching of the word if I am sustained.

Your brother in the gospel,
E. M. WILDERMUTH,

Miscellaneous.

COLORADO DISTRICT.

To the Saints in Colorado, Greeting.—I wish to say that some time ago I was appointed as Bishop's Agent for this State, and I would like to ask the Saints to come up to the help of the Lord. Those that have means and want to help the work along in Colorado, let them send in a registered letter all they can afford, addressed to James Kemp, Hutchinson, Jefferson county, Colorado. This is a hard mission for an Elder to be in without money, and as the Elders have to make sacrifice of home pleasures, we ought to be willing to make a sacrifice of a little of this world's goods to keep the wheels of salvation rolling.

JAMES KEMP, Bishop's Agent.

SECOND QUORUM OF ELDERS.

To the Second Quorum of Elders, Greeting.—As the time of meeting during the sessions of the Annual Conference at Lamoni, Iowa, is near, I respectfully request that the members report their labors for the six months ending August 31st; also, your willingness to labor as Elders in the cause of Christ. I wish you to notice the resolution adopted by the informal Council of Elders at last April Conference, viz: "That every Elder is requested to report to the president of his quorum, and a failure so to do will be prima facie evidence to each quorum of the unfaithfulness of such members not so reporting." Therefore, I trust you will report to me on or before the 10th of September. Address me at Persia, Harrison county, Iowa.

Your brother in the gospel bonds,

W. CHAMBERS,

President of Quorum.

FIRST QUORUM OF PRIESTS.

By a resolution adopted by the quorum at the April Conference, every member is required to report, either personally or by letter, to the quorum at the ensuing Fall Conference at Lamoni. Will the brethren see to it that this rule is strictly complied with, in order that the quorum may have an exact knowledge of its condition and capability to perform its allotted share in the work of spreading the gospel. Members of the quorum who are actively engaged in the field and wish to so continue, together with others whose circumstances will permit of such labor, should embody such facts in their report, with a statement of the conditions under which they can take the field.

The offices of secretary and treasurer being vacant through the ordination of Bro. E. L. Kelley to the Elder's office, will necessitate to appointment of one of our number to those offices.

A suggestion is submitted for consideration and action upon by the quorum when assembled, namely: That all applications for conference appointment shall be first submitted to the quorum for its approval and recommendation, and that the Quorum of the Twelve be requested to return to the First Quorum of Priests all applications not so submitted.

LAURENCE CONOVER,

President First Quorum of Priests.

NOTICE.

Brethren and Friends.—Our church house is progressing, and our conference will be held in it September 2d and 3d. We invite as many Saints and friends as can manage to come; we want to have a good conference, and being State Fair week also, we expect a large gathering.

OBITUARIES.—Obituary notices not exceeding one hundred words, about twelve lines, will be published free of charge; when exceeding one hundred words, five cents for each additional eight words (one line) will be charged; notices of prominent Church officials excepted. Money to accompany notice.

MARRIED.

HOPKINS—STONE.—At Lucas, Lucas county, Iowa, at the residence of Bro. James Robinson, July 24th, 1882, by Elder John Watkins, Senior, Mr. Thomas Hopkins to Miss Hannah Stone.

"May their minds in future blending;
Know the purest of earth's peace;
May no evil cloud descending,
Cause their perfect trust to cease.
With the other each forbearing,
When the time of trials come;
Ev'ry joy and sorrow sharing,
Fill with light the halls of home."

DIED.

CULVER.—Alma James, infant son of Bro. M. E. and Sr. A. Culver, died of cholera infantum the 9th day of August, 1882, aged 6 months and 16 days. Funeral services by Bro. James Brighthouse—text Job 1:21: "The Lord gave and the Lord hath taken," &c. The Spirit of the Lord rested upon us; important lessons were learned and consolation given. The sleeping form was taken to Plano, Illinois, and reposes in the Saints' burying ground.

"Go to thy rest, fair child;
Go to thy dreamless bed,
While yet so gentle, undefiled,
With blessings on thy head."

DAHL.—In Nebraska City, Nebraska, August 13th, 1882, at 15 minutes past 11 o'clock, Sunday night. Sister Karen Dahl, beloved mother of Sr. Anna Nielsen. She was born in Christiania, Norway, March 30th, 1819, came to Nebraska City, August 1st, 1866, was baptized here by Elder Knud Johnson July 30th, 1881, who also conducted her funeral service to a large concourse of people, at her residence August 15th, 1882. She was also mother of Mr. John H. Dahl, the jewelry merchant in Nebraska City, and had been a widow twenty-six years. Her illness was consumption of the liver, which she patiently without complaining endured nearly two years. Her short life in the Church was a blessing to her, as she told me she obtained relief when the Elders prayed over her. Her last request to me was Sunday at eleven o'clock to go after the Elders to lay their hands upon her, which they did, and peace and happiness were in her soul; and she could talk to me till five minutes before death, when she passed away in my arms without a struggle, like a weary child. She was a faithful, kind mother to us all. The pall bearers were, brethren J. W. Waldsmith, P. G. Bergsteen, E. Jasper, Mr. Wm. Willie, A. Johnson, C. Anderson. Two sons and one daughter are left to mourn a loving mother's loss.

"She is gone, her work on earth is done,
Her battles fought, her race is run."
She sleeps; her troubles here are o'er;
She sleeps, where earthly ills no more,
Will break the slumberer's rest,
Her dust will rest beneath the sod,
Her spirit has returned to God,
To mingle with the blest.

It is reported that the workmen employed in digging a canal to connect Lakes Eustis and Dora in Florida, have made a very interesting discovery. On the northwestern shore of Dora, four feet below the surface of the water, they came upon the ruins of what seems to have been a stone house or fortification. Small, curiously shaped blocks of sand stone, some of them showing traces of fire, pieces of pottery and utensils made of melted flint, were brought to the surface. Who built the fortification and made the pottery, are questions now agitating the curious of Florida.

No. 18.

Of God or the Godhead.

1. INASMUCH as many have taken it in hand to write out their views, as is published in the Herald, relative to God and the Godhead, Godship, or Godhood; I thought, being strongly solicited by an Elder, I would express some of my views so as to let them appear in print. We want to have clear views of the Father, of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit in order that we may have right belief and right faith also. The Book of Mormon has come forth "For a standard unto my people." Therefore we shall apply to its sayings as well as to the Bible for our sentiments about the Godhead. It says in the last of the 13th chapter of 2d Nephi, "And now behold, this is the doctrine of Christ, and the only true doctrine of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, which is one God without end. Amen." The last of the 8th chapter of Alma, "And shall be brought and arraigned before the bar of Christ, the Son, and God, the Father, and the Holy Spirit, which is one Eternal God, to be judged according to their works." The last of the 3d chapter of Mormon, "To sing ceaseless praises * * * unto the Father, and unto the Son, and unto the Holy Ghost, which is one God, in a state of happiness which has no end." The New Testament says, The Word was God, "Emanuel, God with us," "God was manifest in the flesh." And again, "There are three that bear record in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost, and these three are one." But Alma says, "Which is one eternal God."

2. From all the above quotations the subject of the Godhead is so plain that I can find no room for cavil or contention. But say you, do you believe the three are three distinct persons? I do so understand it. Then how can three persons be only one person? Inspiration nowhere says they are one person, but they are one God. The first word in the Hebrew bible translated God is of the plural number. The three are not one person, but one God, consisting of three persons. They are one in unity, one in spirit substance, one in essence, one in age or eternal being, one in council, one in their tribunal, one in judgment, and one in glory. But they are not one in knowledge, one in authority, nor one in power. The Father is first, the Son is second, and the Holy Ghost is third, and he is subject to both. As to Jesus' knowledge he said, "But of that day and that hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels which are in heaven, neither the Son, but the Father only." Mark 13:32. As to Jesus' authority he said, "And given him authority to execute judgment also, because he is the Son of Man." John 5:27. And as to his power he said, "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth." Matt. 28:18. The giver is superior to the one receiving.

3. The three persons constitute the great Godhead in heaven. They are the highest tribunal in all worlds. They are the first and the last; they are the great supreme. There is no tribunal above them, nor round about them to which they might be arraigned to answer for their rulings or decisions. Christ was sent of the Father, and the one who sends is considered superior in authority to the one sent. Jesus said, "My Father is greater than I." Again, "My Father is greater than all." John 10:29. The Lord Jesus would not have said this had it not been literally true, nor Alma said that the Father, Son and the Holy Spirit was one eternal God," provided the Son and Holy Spirit were not God as well as the Father. They were three distinct persons united in one grand council to give decisions in the heaven of heavens.

4. I am aware that the Godhead has been a controverted doctrine ever since the days of Constantine, of Alexander, and of Arius, in the fourth century, and even before. About the year 317, a furious contention arose between Bishop Alexander of Alexandria, in Egypt, and Arius one of the presbyters. The bishop among his adherents declared that the "Son was not only of the same eminence and dignity, but also of the same essence with the Father." But Arius declared that "the Son was totally and essentially distinct from the Father; that he was the first and noblest of those beings whom God had created out of nothing; the instrument by whose subordinate operation the Almighty Father formed the universe, and therefore inferior to the Father in nature and dignity." Origin, who died about the middle of the third century, held that "The Son was in God that which reason is in man; and that the Holy Ghost was nothing more than the divine energy or active force." He also called Christ "a being created and made."

5. The Emperor Constantine the Great, assembled a council of three hundred and eighteen bishops, and about one thousand of the inferior clergy, on the 19th of June, 325, in Nice in Bithynia, in Asia Minor. This council sat sixty-seven days in consultation, discussion, and keen debate, and the result was they deliberately made a calf, viz: a creed to settle the belief of the church as to this disputed doctrine, after their contentions and bickerings. Instead of calling upon God to settle their differences and disputes by direct interposition or revelation from heaven, they depended upon Constantine—they looked up to him. The council agreed with the excommunication and banishment of Arius to Illyria. But soon he was recalled, and the schism broke out more fiercely. One party called orthodox was sometimes in the lead, then the Arians prevailed. Their disputes lasted many centuries, and was only smothered until it broke out afresh about the beginning of this century. Barton W. Stone of Kentucky, and Elias Smith of Boston, and their friends were called schismatic on account of their views relative to the Sonship of Christ. They opposed the orthodox idea of the Trinity. They set up what they called the "Christian Church;" which finally mostly in the west assimilated themselves with what was called Campbellites. They reasoned much against the trinity of persons in the Godhead, of co-equal age and power. Many books and pamphlets were written, and very many sermons delivered all on this old disputed doctrine. And in the Herald the controversy is beginning to be agitated again as to God or the Godhead.

6. I believe with all the Jews from the days of Moses until now, in only one God; but that there are three distinct persons in the Godhead. Neither the Father, the Son, or the Holy Ghost ever had a beginning. They were eternal in the past, and will be in the future to endless duration. Each one is everlasting, eternal, and endless in their existence. The Son and Holy Spirit are as much God as the Father himself—as much distinct persons as the great I Am. Inspiration says, "There is no God beside me—I know not any." Isaiah 24:8. The book says, "God knoweth all things." And if the Lord did not know of any other God in boundless space, then why is it that man can believe in a plurality of Gods? The great I Am is a distinct person from the Son, and the Son from the person of the Holy Spirit. Each one has a separate spirit-form or person, and a mind within that form, so as to speak and communicate thoughts and words to other minds. All three persons in the Godhead have spoken; and nothing can speak without organs of speech and faculties of mind. Hence I hold not as Elder Rigdon declared in the Book of Covenants, lecture five: "There are two persons who constitute the great matchless, governing and supreme power over all things. * * * They are the Father and the Son, the Father being a personage of spirit." I must, as Alma and John, have three intelligences in God, or have none.

7. Paul says: "For the invisible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and Godhead; the Godhead was clearly seen on earth by Peter, James, and John, who were special witnesses for Christ. Those chosen apostles saw three distinct persons clearly on earth, as a pattern of the Godhead in heaven; and he left his three apostles to remain a pattern still on earth—"who seemed to be pillars" to the church. Here the pattern of the Godhead could be clearly seen in the pattern of three persons on earth as well as three persons in heaven.

8. I hold that God was never really a Father, only by creating Adam and Eve, or that Christ was ever called a Son (only in prophetic vision) until Jesus was born of Mary. There never was a natural son without a mother; and Moses said, "The blood is life of all flesh," and without blood no progeny was ever born. All unembodied spirits are eternal beings. They never began to exist and they will never cease to live. Whatever has a beginning may have an end, hence I say Christ, that being who had "glory with the Father before the world was," was never created, made, formed, devised, produced, emanated, composed, originated, constituted, generated, or caused, in eternity. He came from the court of glory into the world and accepted of his body of Mary, and thereafter but not before was called the Son—"the only begotten Son of God." He was so called because he had no natural father after the flesh. Paul said, "He was made of a woman." No other person was ever produced as Christ Jesus was. He was the only begotten. The rest of men were all partakers of flesh and blood, after the natural order of generation. Christ only took "part of the same, and hence the knowledge of the past and future was not altogether taken from him in consequence of his being planted or condensed into an infantile body, but the past and the future were familiar to him.

9. I find by conversing that some men think the great I Am has a body of flesh and bones. Then I can't understand the Apostle John who said, "God is a spirit." And Jesus said a "spirit hath not flesh and bones as you see me have." (Luke 24:39). I conceive that God, the Father of Jesus' body, is a spirit-form, but not possessing material substance. There are two kinds of substances, one of spirit-substance, and one of material or earthly matter. But there is nothing on earth to which we can liken spirit or spirit substance, therefore I shall not try to tell what spirit is or what it is like. I feel certain all spirits have spirit substance, have a form, have faculties of mind and attributes of soul, by the exercise of which they can give off thoughts and words to other minds. All spirits have spirit-substance, and organs of soul and faculties of mind, and exist as men do in this world separate; I consider all spirits intelligent personalities. In future I may write about the person of the Holy Spirit.

10. Some intelligent men hold the opinion the great I Am, the Father of Jesus, came down and took a body, lived in it, died and rose again, and ascended to heaven; and there is but one being who is God, or constituting the Godhead. Against this dogma there are so that they are without excuse."—Rom. 1:20. When Christ was transfigured upon the mount he stood with Moses and Elias, having put on his glorified appearance in the presence of those translated men. Here the pattern of many objections. If true, heaven was depopulated of a God for thirty-three years while Christ or God was here upon earth. When Jesus was baptized, and on the mount of transfiguration a voice came from heaven saying, "This is my beloved son," this voice came from the Father of Jesus, which evidently shows two distinct persons, one speaking from heaven and the other hearing on earth. And some believe that the Holy Spirit, as Orson Pratt wrote, extends throughout all space, and is composed of atoms, and is not a distinct person at all. If he so extends, and is as they claim, a substance, then he would exclude all other substances from space. An unalterable law in logic or philosophy is that no two substances can occupy the same place at the same time. I hold that all spirits have locality—a home in which to live. The emanation or influence of the Holy Spirit may be present everywhere, but not his person.

11. Then I scout the idea of the spirit's omnipresence i. e., to extend throughout all space. Don't tell me that the Holy Spirit is a substance and yet he extends infinitely. I look upon the Holy Spirit as an actual personality, as much so as the eternal Father of all worlds. He is an intelligent person possessing spirit substance, form, entity, and locality; not like ether, electricity, or wild wind, existing everywhere. And don't believe that Christ or the Holy Spirit was ever organized, or that Christ was ever elevated to the Godhead. He was eternally one in the Godhead, had not to be elevated to it. Never, as some Elders vainly say, "Christ was elevated to the Godhead and Fatherhood." He was eternally in the Godhead, and had not to be elevated to it. Of the spirit Nephi says, "I spake unto him as a man speaketh, for I beheld that he was in the form of a man." Then he was not atoms diffused everywhere, and each atom intelligent. Nephi describes him as a person talking to him, and nothing can talk without mind, and nothing has mind but intelligent spirit. Christ showed himself to the brother of Jared and said, "Behold this body which you now behold is the body of my spirit, and man have I created after the body of my spirit." Thus showing that a spirit has a body and a likeness. If so, the Holy Spirit can have a spirit-body, with entity and identity. But the Father and the Holy Spirit have no body of flesh and bones, but are pure spiritual beings; they have spirit-substance and minds within those forms to give forth intelligence.

12. The Father, Son, and Holy Spirit are all called Father, which I think means the protector of the "spirits of all flesh." Christ entered into the body of Jesus, as our spirits enter into our bodies; and then he was the "inner man," the spirit and mind of the man Christ Jesus. When he died he resigned his spirit—the eternal Christ, into the hands of his Father. The Father is one, the Son is one, and the Holy Spirit is one; but they are three distinct personalities, yet but one in their union and design in all things. Some object to the use of the word person applied to the Holy Spirit. But if he has a mind and a will of his own and one in the Godhead, then I write of him as a distinct person. But I believe with Paul that "great is the mystery of godliness, or the Godhead, and with this I close for the present. I am a pilgrim on earth.

Sunday Thought.

"A Sabbath well spent
Brings a week of content,
And strength for the toils of to-morrow.
But a Sabbath profaned,
Whatsoever be gained,
Is a certain forerunner of sorrow."

After six days of toil comes a day of rest. It comes to the Christian laden with full fruition. Thoughts of "the Nazarene" crowd themselves on the mind, and we look far into the clouded past, and we see Jesus nailed to the cross—the "first day of the week" comes and presents to the world a living, immortalized Savior, and the Infinite speaks, and tells humanity of his matchless love. For—

We hear His love in the song of birds,
And in the lowing of the herds;
We hear His love on "Calvary's brow"—
We hear it in that darkened hour.

Our Sunday dawns not upon us bearing the sound of Sinai's thunders, and the glare of its vivid lightnings, but it comes in all the serenity of a Savior's love, speaks peace to the troubled soul, saying: "Let not your heart be troubled, ye believe in God, believe also in me."

We read God's precious promises concerning the great work He purposes performing through Christ, and we endeavor to peer through the misty future, striving to obtain a glance at some of its beauties, but we can not "for now we see through a glass darkly." We wait, reclining on the Savior's breast, until the dawning of a brighter day shall greet our enraptured vision, when "all that was promised the Saints, shall be given, and none shall molest them from morn until eve'n."

All present joys are mixed with grief. We may convene on the Lord's day, and tell one another that "All our desire is to the Lord,

To know and to do his holy word."

And in the week to come, we'll depart in some way, perhaps, from the path of duty, for "To err is human," and we go stumbling along, sometimes, as blind men. No man lives perfect; all claim to perfection is a "cloak of maliciousness." The encouraging words come rolling down through eighteen centuries, losing none of their worth, meaning, nor force, saying: "Be of good cheer, I have overcome the world." By this we understand that, through constant effort, unceasing labor, we too may "overcome the world."

"It requires a constant effort,
All his precepts to obey."

When I hear a man say, "I live every day as though I stood in God's immediate presence," I am led to doubt his statement, for any man that so lives will never have occasion to tell it. We read: "Thy vows shall be offered up in righteousness on all days, and at all times; but remember that on this, the Lord's day, thou shalt offer thine oblations, and thy sacraments, unto the Most High." We may sing:

"So let our lips and lives express
The holy gospel we profess."

But there is the life we live. And that life will never be lived so long as one man sets himself up as judge of another man's doings.

It is well for people to go unto the Lord's house and pay their vows and oblations; but if after this they berate their brother, and endeavor in an underhanded way to undermine his character, it has a poor appearance to say the least. Among other things we read: "Thou shalt not go up and down among my people as a tale bearer." And we should remember while speaking of another's faults, not to forget our own, for it is poor policy to "Live a Sunday Christian,

And a week day devil."

As Christ has died for us, loved us, bought us with his own precious blood, we should strive for the masteries lawfully; and to do so is to make the effort to comply with his requests. "We know that his commandments are not grievous." Let us love him out of a pure heart fervently. SUNDAY.

Gospel Antiquity.

UNDER this head I wish to give expression to a few thoughts, and while I do so I hope no one will object to my having the privilege, though they may be foreign from what theirs would be, looking from the standpoint which they occupy. I will state further that I am not unaware that my views upon this subject will differ not only with those of many good brethren who are excellent good thinkers, but also with some, perhaps only seeming, teaching of some of the books on this subject. But I do not believe them to be contrary to the teaching as a whole of any of them. And while I thus think, my mind revolting within, I can not if I would, place myself up as a standard, for neither am I unaware that there is not only in every man found defect and fault, owing to the nature with which he is surrounded, but as a natural result the same is true with respect to every book which we hold as a representative of the faith; so that neither man nor record is found free from defect and fault. A sad affair then, says one. Be that as it may, the voice of reason echoes to me, it is true; and certainly no thinking person can successfully deny it. And the best that mortal can do is to carefully draw in the light that has been reflected through all that has been spoken in the past, and with careful consideration of that which may yet be reflected by the Spirit of God, and in the light of reason of which we at least possess a degree, cautiously try to let our faith rest upon evidence; for whether written or otherwise, faith can only run parallel with evidence. Therefore the great necessity of a critical examination of the premises upon which we would base our faith. For unless it be grounded in truth, there is no promise of its effecting the salvation which we so earnestly seek. I trust then, that on the presentation of these thoughts, that there will be no effect farther than the harmonious teaching of God's word may afford a sure resting place for our hope. For there is nothing divine, neither above nor beneath the heavens, that ever has or ever will bind a true spirit,—save that of a reformation from that which is wrong to that which is right, as fast as we learn. I heartily believe in the inspiration of God's spirit in all ages where there is a covenant people. That we believe and profess to-day. But I do not believe that that which is received by the creature, (either speaker or hearer), is always that which was intended by the Creator. Consequently we have line upon line, precept upon precept, here a little and there a little. And also the prayer, "Lord, speak not to thy servant in dark speeches, speak plainly to thy servant." In treating upon the subject mentioned, I shall examine the covenants, for to be without a covenant is to be without authority, without God, (presence of God), and without hope in the world. As were the Gentiles before God had broken down the middle wall of partition between Jew and Gentile, and made of twain (two nations) one now man (new church) and so making peace. And as were the Jews when their covenant with the law thereof had found an end and the veil of the temple was rent in twain (two) from top to bottom. Authority runs parallel with the covenant. When the one ceases so does the other, there ceasing to be a basis for action. Without this basis we can do nothing with promise. The Creator is not bound for that which he has not covenanted or promised. But a covenant forms the basis for action. To covenant with God is to form the obligation by taking him at his word; there can be no obligation till this is done, hence the necessity of living by every word, that, and that only, which proceeds from the mouth of the Lord—being harmonious with itself and philosophical reason, remembering that God is not narrow, or short minded that he should make mistakes or blunders. Remembering too, that weak humanity has always done this even amid the most brilliant light that has ever been reflected through any covenant that he has ever made with man. Hence we can see the wisdom in the all-wise Creator in making many covenants, (but not two at the same time) with the race, step by step, to try to raise him from this shattered condition into which he has fallen. O, says one, if we only have the spirit, it is enough. So says the heathen. But with the history of the past not only of latter days, there is enough to make the conscientious thinker tremble with cautious fear. (Pardon the digression).

Covenants are generally matters of record, so that it may appear to what extent the parties may have complied with the same on their part. Covenants are generally ratified, or dedicated before they are considered of force by the parties. Two of the most noted covenants of which we know anything, are styled the old and new covenant, and are found recorded in the Old and New Testaments, testament meaning covenant. The Old is that of circumcision, which God proposed to Abram and his posterity, (Gen. 12:1-3, 17:1-14), in the seventy-fifth year of his age, B. C. 1921 years. But afterward becomes the combination of circumcision and the law in consequence of the law being added to it 430 years after God had covenanted with Abram, this reaching the year B. C. 1491. (Ex. 19th and 20th chapters, King's Translation). But in regard to this addition of the law there are some differences of opinion now, as there was also in the day when Paul wrote his Gallatian letter. Now addition is simply an act of uniting two or more things in one, and in speaking of one you would speak of all; therefore if it shall appear that the keeping of the law and that of circumcision were both conjointly made obligatory upon those who sought justification by the keeping of one, or if they were both equally taught as being necessary in order to justification, it will appear also that they have been united forming one covenant, and are therefore thus conjointly urged. The Master seems to have recognized this oneness. St. John 7:22, 23, says, "Moses gave unto you circumcision, not because it was of Moses, but of the fathers. And you on the Sabbath circumcise a man. If a man on the Sabbath receive circumcision that the law of Moses be not broken," &c. Paul seems to recognize the same (Rom. 2:25): "Circumcision verily profiteth if thou keep the law, (connected with it), but if thou be a breaker of the law thy circumcision is become uncircumcision." In Acts 15:1, 5, 24, there is an argument favoring the circumcision of Gentile converts, and to command them to keep the law. Why were the two thus coupled, if they were not one covenant. But that this addition was in relation to circumcision and the law, is further evident from Paul, Gal. 3. Says the Scripture foreseeing that God would justify the heathen through faith, preached before the gospel (good news) to Abraham, saying, "In thee shall all nations be blest;" 16th verse speaks of the seed (Christ) promised; states that the covenant (rather the promise in relation to Christ) the law which was 430 years after can not disannul. He asks the question as to the purpose of the law, and answers that it was added because of transgression till the promised seed should come. Now it is evident from the foregoing that the law was added to a covenant containing a promise of a seed, and we know what covenant that was—"In thee and thy seed" &c. But from 1921 B. C., (the time of God covenanting with Abram), take 430 years, which will bring you just so much nearer the coming of Christ, viz: B. C. 1491, the date of adding the law. Or vice versa, add 430 to 1491 and it will reach back to B. C. 1921, the time when God gave the Decalogue through Moses; and this is another evidence as to what was added or united. But the term gospel being used as having been preached to Abraham, it is thought by many that the gospel covenant must have existed then; but to me there is no such evidence, since the term signifies "Good news, Glad tidings," and may not signify any definite system of faith. It was evidently glad tidings to Abram, "I will raise up Kings unto thee," "I will raise up a Lord unto thee." But the context, Gal. 3:1-9, shows that the parties addressed were Judaized, having began in the spiritual covenant, yet sought justification by the fleshly covenant. This Judaism has always been troublesome. Paul therefore against their present assumption refers them to the broadness of this prophetic preaching, one of the distinguishing features of the new covenant, viz: "In thee shall all nations be blessed." But mark the language—The gospel was preached to Abraham, saying, "In thee shall (future tense) all nations be blessed." But it is further argued that the new covenant must have existed in those days because in Heb. 11 it is stated that Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Enoch and others, are mentioned as having found favor with God, and obtained witness that they were accepted of him, that therefore the covenant of the gospel must have existed then. But there fails to be any evidence in this for me, since the context shows that they died in faith, not having received the promise and only having seen them afar off. And especially since I see that the 39th and 40th verses are quoted by the Seer as having direct reference to baptism for the dead, "They (Abraham, Enoch, &c.) without us could not be made perfect;" which, if this application is correct, is a positive evidence that they had not the gospel, baptism being an ordinance of the new-covenant system of faith. It is further urged that in Heb 4:2 is mentioned that the gospel preached did not profit them not being mixed with faith in them that heard it. In this I fail to see more than that the promise of a Redeemer was preached to them, which would be good news, glad tidings to them. But that the system of faith pertaining to the gospel was not yet published, is evident for the reason that the covenant of circumcision and the law was in force having the presence of the Most High sanctioning it; (the covenant); even 'till when the fullness of time had come (fulness, not in part, not in shadow or type, not in prospect or prophecy); and God sent forth his Son (the seed) made under the law, born of a woman—to redeem them that were under the law,—nailing it to his cross. It would not be reasonable that God would have two covenants differing from each other at the same time with his presence, in sanction of their validity; neither that he would establish another differing from the one that he made with Abram in relation to a promised seed, and that would find its end only in the appearing of the seed, which was to bless all the nations. But the introduction of the one that was to be brought about by the seed that was to bless all the nations could not possibly be effected otherwise than by his coming, which would be the fulness of the one in relation to his coming. Hence he says I came not to destroy the law but to fulfill. Paul says "Christ is the end of the law;" "He nailed it to his cross and took it out of the way." When the fulness of time had come God sent forth his son and he opens the dispensation of the fulness of time, which dispensation is like the covenant that is to all the world, every nation, and is intended to gather in one of all, both which is in earth and which is in heaven, even in him. But they could not be gathered in him (his body, the church) till he had come and formed it. Hence there is no reason in the claim that God ever had made the new covenant prior to making this one with Abram; neither that he had a desire to make it any time while this other one was extant, for the very nature of the promise in that covenant shows that it was to run until the seed had come which would make an end of it, and effect an opening for the establishing of the new one.

In the year B. C. 601, God, as his manner often was speaking to the prophets by figure, type or symbol, speaks to Jeremiah, (Jer. 18:1-6), tells him to go down to the potter's house. And when he went he beheld the potter working on one of the wheels, making a vessel of clay; which, becoming marred in his hand, he (the potter) made it again another vessel as seemed good to him. Then the word of the Lord through him was, O, house (kingdom or vessel) of Israel, can not I do with you as this potter. Are you not in my hands as the clay in the hands of this potter; may not I do with you as I will saith the Lord. If the making of the new vessel or kingdom was yet in future, as was shown to this potter, being a lapse of 890 years since the law was added, would it be reasonable to suppose that the new covenant (which if in force would form the vessel) was a reality, either there or elsewhere, since the eye of prophecy through so many, has so plainly pointed to the time and place of the beginning of the formation or reformation of this new vessel, or kingdom. Again five years prior, B. C. 606, the word of the Lord (Jer. 31:31) was: "The days come that I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel and the house of Judah." The prophet then mentions some differences that will distinguish the old from the new covenant, viz: while the old was without in the flesh, the new would be within in the heart. The old in tables of stone, the new in fleshly tablets of the heart. These items—without, in the flesh, in stone, and in the heart, being thus classed in connection, is another evidence favoring the addition of the law and circumcision. But the differences are further; the old had remembrance of sin and an annual offering for the removal of the same. The new, but one sacrifice, one offering, and the sin remembered no more. The old, they were taken in at eight days old, having to be afterward taught to know the Lord. The new, all would know him from the least to the greatest of them, since they would have to hear and learn before they could come unto him. There would be no necessity for the saying, "Know the Lord."

In the further tracing of the subject see Isa 2:2-5. "It shall come to pass in the last days the Lord's house (kingdom) shall be exalted—all nations shall flow into it." All nations, all flesh, all the world, every nation, all that are afar off. You (Gentiles) who were sometimes afar off, &c. These phrases are all distinctive features of the new covenant. But in the 2d verse the words last days occur. Last days of what. Acts 2:16, 17. Peter says this is that spoken of by Joel, "It shall come to pass in the last days that I will pour out of my spirit upon all flesh," &c. This pouring out that the apostle refers to (this is that) was then occurring in the last days, or end of the Jewish age or world. Heb. 1:2. Paul says: "God who at sundry times and in diverse manners spoke in times past to the fathers by the prophets, hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son." The Son spoke in the last days, or end of the Jewish age, or world. Also Heb. 9:26, (King's translation): "For then must he oft have suffered since the foundation of the world, but now once in the end of the world, hath he appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself." Jesus did not only speak in the last days of that age, or world, but in the very end of it was sacrificed, nailed the law to his cross, took it out of the way, and closed that age or world. So I can but conclude that it was in these last days as here set forth that the Lord's house was to be exalted in, and all nations flow into it. 3d verse: "Many people will say, Come, let us go up to the house (kingdom) of the God of Jacob, he will teach us of his ways. For out of Zion (the church) shall go forth the law and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem (the city)." Luke 24:47, Jesus says that repentance and remission of sins would be preached in his name among all nations beginning at Jerusalem (the city). Now we have the following items from Isaiah 2:2, 3. The Lord's house would be exalted, all nations would flow into it, the law would go forth from Zion, the word of the Lord from Jerusalem. From Jesus we learned that the law of remission of sins in his name to all the nations would begin at Jerusalem. From Peter's discourse on the day of Pentecost, Acts 2, we get the following items: Peter having been strictly charged to tell no man that he was the Christ until the Son of man be raised from the dead; and having been told to tarry in Jerusalem before he would go into all the world to teach and baptize the nations. Item 1st. He was in Jerusalem. 2d. He says repent. 3d. In the name of Jesus Christ. 4th. For the remission of sins. There were seventeen different languages spoken. There were Jews, devout men out of every nation under heaven present in Jerusalem. All nations would flow into it. And the same day there were about three thousand added to them; and a few days later five thousand, which has a resemblance of a flowing in of many nations. Eight years later, this time having been spent among the Jewish nation, when through the same apostle, Cornelius and his friends came in (being Gentiles). And when Peter was accused, he said, What was I that I could withstand God, seeing they received the same like gift that we did at the beginning. This beginning referred back to was in Jerusalem where they received their endowment. We have reached the time of the re-formation of another vessel out of the same material, as foreshown by the potter by making another vessel out of the same clay. John, a Jew, says Repent, (reform, form again). Jesus, a Jew, says the same, chooses twelve Jews, and restricts their mission to the lost sheep of the house of Israel (same clay) with the same proclamation to reform. Chooses other seventy disciples, sends them to the same parties with the same proclamation i.e. reform again. And this cry has gone throughout all Judea and the result is that another prophetic prediction is fulfilled, found 2 Kings 19:30, 31. "And the remnant of the house of Juda (same clay) that have escaped, shall yet again take root downward, and bear fruit upward, for out of Jerusalem (the city) shall go forth a remnant. Paul speaks of the same people, says there is a remnant to this day. And his reasoning there is, having a knowledge of that foreshown by the potter, and knowing that his hearers also knew, he therefore reasons with them thus: "hath not the potter power over the clay of the same lump, to make one vessel to honor and another to dishonor," meaning that God had out of the some old vessel, or kingdom of Israel, made another vessel to honor him though the first had dishonored him. It might seem to some that this is sufficient as to point of the time of the beginning of the gospel covenant; but as it is a disputed point not only in the minds of many but also seemingly in some of the books. We wish therefore to find the harmony of God's word to the point, and let that which is inharmonious, if there be any, take care of itself. Paul to the

Heb. 9:7-11, says that the high priests went into the second tabernacle to offer for himself and the errors of the people, the Holy Ghost this signifying—that the way into the holiest of all was not yet made manifest, while the first tabernacle (made with hands) was yet standing. Speaks of divers washing, carnal ordinances, which could not make the comers thereto perfect, which were imposed on them until the time of re-formation. But Christ being come an high priest of good things to come, not of this building (the old one) but of a greater and more perfect tabernacle not made with hands. From this we learn that while the old institution was in force the way into that which was more holy was not yet made manifest until it had been re-formed, Jesus having manifested the way into it. Heb. 7:21, we learn that the priests of the old covenant were made without an oath, but this man (Jesus) with an oath. From this we draw something that has a resemblance of a legal procedure. Before his sufferings and death he was about the Father's business; he did the bidding of the Father; the Father gave commandments, and he did them, and it is worthy of note that we do not hear of any one offering remission of sins in his name, or doing anything in the name of Jesus (that is by his authority). We hear him speak of the Son of Man having power on earth to forgive sin, but as to the order in which he has this power we know not, unless it be by virtue of his being an apostle. But there is no hint of it being in his own name, or authority; but on the contrary, he does not profess to do anything only as commanded by the Father. And now before entering upon the duties of a great high priest as the head and supreme ruler of the new government, he took this oath—which oath, we learn, (Heb. 7:28), was since the law. Whether the oath was by the Lord himself, or by the Father, makes no difference, it was the oath that made him priest, and was made since the law, says Paul. Now as has been adduced, Jesus tells us (Luke 24:47) that this preaching of remission of sins by his authority would begin at Jerusalem. Yet we would not pass unnoticed the fact, that the mission of John, as foretold, (Luke 1:77, 78), in preparing a people prior and in order to the organization of the new government, connected with the work of Jesus and others whom he called, was a primary work of the gospel. Hence Mark begins his history thus: "The beginning of the gospel of Jesus Christ as it is spoken of in the prophets; behold I send my messenger before thy face to prepare the way before thee."

Connect this statement of what the prophets have said, with that of Zacharias, (Luke 1:68-70), "Blessed be the Lord God of Israel for he hath visited and redeemed his people (Jews) and hath raised up a horn of salvation for us in the house (Jewish kingdom) of his servant David as he spake by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began."

MICHIGAN MORMONISM.

THE QUESTION OF "KING STRANG'S" SUCCESSOR.

THE HEIR TO THE "THRONE" PRONOUNCES THE WHOLE THING AN IMPOSTURE AND WILL HAVE NOTHING TO DO WITH IT.

It is well known by some that there are quite a number of Mormons in Michigan, and that for years a movement has been on foot to revive the "Kingdom" of James Jesse Strang by making his oldest son in polygamy king in the father's stead. This son's name is Charles J. Strang, and his home is at Lansing, this state. Less than a month ago a letter from him on the succession was published in the Saints' Herald, which has served to bring the entire matter to the front for final decision. In order to ascertain the whole truth in the matter, the News has communicated with Mr. Strang, and by him been made acquainted with the fact involved. In February, 1844, James Jesse Strang went from his home at Burlington (or Voree), Wisconsin, to Nauvoo, Illinois, to hear Joseph Smith, the Mormon leader, preach. There were then a few Mormons at Voree, and it is fair to suppose that Mr. Strang had already become somewhat interested in their doctrines and practices, though he seems to have gone to Nauvoo largely out of curiosity. Be that as it may, he was "converted" and received into the church at Nauvoo within a week after his arrival. He was then thirty-one years old, just the present age of his son Charles J., now at Lansing. He returned to his Wisconsin home immediately, filled with religious ardor and desire to spread abroad the cause of Mormonism. So great was this desire that, under date of May 24th, the same year, he wrote Joseph Smith, "proposing the planting a stake of Zion in Wisconsin, and the gathering of the saints there." This letter Smith answered less than a month afterward, June 18th, saying that at first he disapproved of Strang's scheme, but that Brother Hyrum thought otherwise, and also that God had since made a revelation to him in favor of it. He therefore favored what he first opposed. As this letter is the one document around which the controversy about J. J. Strang's real position of leadership in the church has raged for nearly forty years, it seems necessary to make a few extracts.

"The flock shall find rest with thee, and God shall reveal to thee his will concerning them."

"I have long felt that my present work was almost done, and that I should soon be called to rule a mighty host, but something whispers me it will be in the land of spirits."

"The wolves are upon the scent, and I am waiting to be offered up."

Smith quotes God as saying in the vision: "And now behold my servant, James J. Strang. * * He shall plant a stake of Zion in Wisconsin, and I will establish it; and there shall my people have peace and rest, and shall not be moved, for it shall be established on the prairie on White river, in the lands of Racine and Walworth."

"The name of the city shall be called Voree."

"Unto Voree shall be the gathering of my people, and there shall the oppressed flee for safety."

"Great calamities are coming on the church, * * but if they gather to my city of Voree, there will I keep them under the shadow of my wings."

"And now I (the Almighty) command my servants, the apostles and priests and elders of the church of the saints, that they communicate and proclaim this, my word, to all the saints of God in all the world, that they may be gathered unto and round about my city of Voree and be saved from their enemies."

"So spake the Almighty God of heaven. Thy duty is made plain. * * If evil befall me thou shalt lead the flock to pleasant pastures."

To this letter Smith added (as is variously claimed and denied) the following postscript: "P. S. Write me soon and keep me advised of your progress from time to time."

Smith was killed nine days after this letter was written, on June 27th, 1844, at half-past five o'clock in the afternoon. At the instant of Smith's death at Nauvoo, Strang claimed to have received a revelation while "in the Spirit" at Voree. Among other things, the angel of the Lord said to him: "God hath anointed thee and set thee above all thy fellows." "With thee is the fountain of truth. In thy light shall the people of God see, for thou shalt speak his word unto them, and from thy lips shall they receive it. The blessing of their God shalt thou put upon them, and his curse upon evil doers." "Thou shalt break in pieces the yoke of the unjust ruler." "Unto thee shall they (the oppressed, the poor and needy) come, and their brethren who are scattered with them shall come."

In a letter written ten years later, J. J. Strang asserts that he made known the vision to others the same day of its occurrence, but his son, Charles J., thinks it was concealed until the arrival of Smith's letter, which was received July 9th, just twelve years, by the way, before Strang died. Immediately on Smith's death, Strang claimed that he himself was alone entitled to become Smith's successor as head of the Mormon Church; basing his claim on the letter from Smith, and his own revelation from heaven. This claim Brigham Young and other of the "twelve apostles" denied. Their opposition to Strang's pretensions led them to deny the genuineness of the letter purporting to have come from Smith. They went so far as to assert that the so-called Smith letter in Strang's possession had a black post mark, while the Nauvoo post mark was always red. But Strang's letter has a red post mark. They further asserted that no entry of the mailing of such letter could be found in the register of "mails sent" from Nauvoo. But examination of the post office register showed that such a letter was sent from Nauvoo, June 19th, 1844, and in due time received at Burlington.

Brigham Young claimed the office of prophet by virtue of his being president of the board of twelve apostles, and forthwith began to exercise the duties and prerogatives pertaining to it. So seriously was this opposed by the Strangites that in December, 1847, three and a half years after Smith's death, and while the Mormons were in Winter quarters at Council Bluffs, Iowa, on their way from Nauvoo to Salt Lake, Young's title to the presidency was sought to be confirmed by his election to office. The Mormon records state that the election was made by the people, about 12,000 being present, and yet the building in which the election was held was only 40x60 feet in size, and could hold less than 800 persons. Strang's first pastoral letter as prophet is dated December 25th, 1845, a full year and a half after Smith's appointment and his own vision. May 1st, 1848, he issued a letter to the Saints emigrating from Great Britain and Ireland, in which he denies the legitimacy of the so-called election, charges Brigham Young with being a usurper, and commands all emigrants to recognize and obey him, assuring them that "both at Voree and Beaver Island, God has provided for the Saints peace, abundance and safety." In January, 1846, Strang began the publication of the Voree Herald, and he went so far as to summon the principal rulers at Nauvoo before him for usurpation of office. Several of them, including two of the twelve apostles, responded to the summons, acknowledged his authority and preached Strang the prophet with great success. But nothing effectual was accomplished, and in time Young and his 16,000 followers went to Utah, while Strang and his company went to Beaver Island, where he was assaulted by Thomas Bedford, now of Eaton Rapids, Michigan, June 16th, 1856, from which wounds he died July 9th following, at Voree. Besides Young and Strang, there were thirteen others who prominently aspired to Smith's office. All were elders like Strang, but none secured any special following, and the presidential efforts of all of them died out in less than a year.

"King Strang" had five wives, one legal—Mary Perce, married in 1836—and four polygamous. His first polygamous marriage was to Elvira Field, July 13th, 1849, and by whom he had four children, all living, and now in Michigan. Charles J., Lansing; Rev. Clement J., Dowagiac, who has just completed a full course of theological study at Andover Seminary, and is about to enter the Congregational ministry; Charles J. "Greer," lawyer; Charlotte, adopted in early life and name changed; and a daughter living near Onondaga, Ingham county. His other polygamous wives were Betsy McNutt, married January 19th, 1852, four children, a son and two daughters living in Wisconsin, the son educated to Mormon doctrines by his mother, and the next and only "successor" to his father after Charles J. and his own brothers; Sarah A. Wright, married July 15th, 1855, one child, a son, in Utah, not a Mormon; Phoebe A. Wright, married October 27th, 1855, one child, a daughter, Black River Falls, Wisconsin. The first polygamous marriage was kept secret a year. Immediately on learning it Strang's legal wife left him. Of her children two remain, the daughter living at Covington, Illinois, while the son is employed at some station on the Lake Shore road. Charles J.'s mother remained at Voree after her husband's death until 1860, when she removed to Eaton county, Michigan. Sixteen years ago she married John Baker, and is now living near Farman, Lake county, Michigan, on a farm. She believed in Strang's claims to Mormon leadership as superior to those of Young up to the time of her husband's death, but now seems to have some misgivings on the subject. She identifies herself with Christian work, but is not a member of any church.

Her son, Rev. Clement J., repudiates the whole Mormon system of doctrines and practices. He once thought seriously of going to Utah on purpose to contend against the Mormons in their stronghold. He visited Voree two years ago in search of documents and evidence relative to his father. While there he succeeded in getting the original letter, with its postscript, written by Smith to Strang in June, 1844. This letter is now in the possession of one of the brothers, and can be produced, if necessary, within twenty-four hours. He got it from one of the original Beaver Island members who had kept it since Strang's death. Its genuineness seems to be established by the red Nauvoo post mark, by its long continuance in the possession of the Beaver Island member, by the firm belief of Strang's immediate followers, by the internal evidences of its being a Mormon document, and by its appearances of age. And yet the thought of forgery has suggested itself to some who are most interested in the question of its authenticity. C. J. "Greer" (Strang) thinks the whole system of Mormonism an imposture. Charles J. Strang calls attention to the fact that in 1846 his father pronounced the most terrible of all curses on all ministers who should be guilty of polygamy, and yet three years later himself began marrying polygamous wives. He thinks his father purposely preached one thing on this subject and practiced another. As to his father's motives in going to Beaver Island, Charles J. thinks he went there for precisely the same reason that Brigham Young went to Utah: to be rid of Gentile interference and so to separate himself from other Mormon influences that he might build a kingdom entirely to his own liking and in which he should be supreme. The Beaver Island scheme was not for the glory of God, but for the glory of Jesse Strang. Most of the Voree settlement went with him. The kingdom was never re-established there after his death. A few Mormons still live in the neighborhood of Voree.

Charles J. Strang is willing to have it known that he does not believe in the divine origin of Mormonism as a whole. He further says he believes that Smith's letter restricted his father's work and jurisdiction to Voree; that the Beaver Island movement was wholly unwarranted, and an imposture; and that the postscript plainly shows that Smith expected to live and therefore did not intend to nominate Strang as his successor in the presidency. Without the postscript, which furnishes the key of interpretation to the whole, the letter may be easily construed to mean just what was claimed for it; but the postscript changes everything.

The movement to have Charles J. Strang succeed his father was begun some ten years ago by L. D. Hickey, of Coldwater, Michigan, who, with S. Bennett, of Cleveland, has been crowding it more or less ever since. Mr. Hickey has gone so far as to visit Mr. Strang several times on the subject. At first he was inclined to accept the kingship if convinced of his right to the "throne," but he is now prepared to say that his mind is fully made up to have nothing to do with it. He trusts that this announcement will rid him of further approaches of this kind by his father's admirers. He says there has never been any organized movement looking to his kingship, but it has been confined to isolated individuals. He is not a member of any church, but is a frequent attendant at the Methodist Church, Lansing, where his wife is a member. Of course the declination of Charles J. Strang puts an end to all hopes of a revival of the Strang kingdom, since he alone has the right of succession. And yet it is possible that the Strangites may by an election do something for themselves. But this would be to introduce an entirely new dispensation.

At the thirtieth annual conference of the Reorganized Church, held at Independence, Missouri, last April, the following churches and members were reported from Michigan: Bridgehampton, 18 members; Coldwater, 52; Forester, 20; Galien, 78; Genesee, 15; HERSHEY, 57; Hopkins, 22; Lawrence, 60; Lebanon, 39; Maple Valley, 31; Mill Creek, 17; Reese, 20; Sherman, 24; St. Clair, 9; St. Johns, 20; Union, 31. Total, 16 churches; 513 members. The next semi annual meeting of the Michigan conference will be held at Coldwater in October. The Reorganized Churches do not believe in polygamy, and have Joseph Smith, son of the former prophet, for their president. They have no connection with the Strang movement, though some of their individual members probably favor it. The official organ of the Reorganized Church is "The Saint's Herald," published by Joseph Smith at Lamoni, Iowa.

Representation.

Editor Herald:—I see by the last Herald, that the question of Representation is still being discussed; and, as I would like to get some light on the subject, I wish to offer a few thoughts, and hope that those who have more experience and knowledge than I have will by evidence deduced from the standard works of the Church correct whatever ideas are not in harmony with the revealed word of God. My object is to obtain a correct understanding of the truth as it is in Christ Jesus.

From what we have been able to learn we understand that all efforts that have been put forth to effect a better representation of the Church in transacting business for the Church, has been based on the idea of getting the common consent of all the members of the Church. In Doctrine and Covenants, sec. 25, par. 1, we read, "All things shall be done by common consent in the church; by much prayer and faith." Again, sec. 27, par. 4, "Neither shall anything be appointed unto any in this church contrary to the church covenants. For all things must be done in order and by common consent in the church, by the prayer of faith."

It will be noticed that all things are to be done by common consent in the church, not by the common consent of every member of the church, for if all things shall be done by the common consent of all the members, the Lord has given a commandment which has never yet been obeyed, and with the church in the present condition, can not be obeyed. Therefore we do not believe the Lord ever gave or ever will give a commandment that can not be obeyed. How then shall we understand what is meant by common consent? In the minutes of the organization of the High

Council sec. 99, par. 5, we read "Voted that whenever any vacancy shall occur by the death or removal from office * * * of any of the above named councilors, it shall be filled by the nomination of the President, or presidents, and sanctioned by the voice of a General Council of High Priests convened for that purpose to act in the name of the church."

Here we think is a key. In this case a certain number of High Priests act in the name of, or represent, the church; and the question may now be asked, Do they represent Christ, or the members composing the Church of Christ on the earth? From what little light we have been able to gather from the word as contained in the three books we think that both are represented, and will try and give a reason for our belief. 1st. Christ is represented, because he has bestowed the priesthood, or authority on those whom he has called and chosen to fill certain offices in his church; to act in his stead; to judge all matters that may come before them according to the evidence produced, and by the law which has been given to govern the church; and if there is not enough given they can enquire of the Lord and receive instruction through the one who is appointed to receive revelations for the church. 2d. Saul calls himself an ambassador of Christ, and the latter day ministry have been given the same commission, viz., "The Elders are to see that the law is kept;" and in so doing they represent Christ. The members are represented because they receive those who are called and appointed by God to fill the different offices in the church, as their teachers and representatives, both to the world and in the church.

The question may now be asked, Does the same rule apply in the district and General Conferences; and are Christ and those composing the church on earth represented the same as in the High Council. We refer again to sec. 17, par. 13. "The several Elders composing this Church of Christ are to meet in conference once in three months, or from time to time as said conferences shall direct, or appoint, and said conferences are to do whatever church business is necessary to be done at that time."

From this we learn that the Lord has appointed all the Elders, and it does not need any evidence to prove that all who hold the Melchisedec priesthood are Elders, to represent him and to see that the law is kept and the members have received them as their teachers and representatives, both to the world and in the church; and when those Elders who are called of God and accepted by the members meet together in conference capacity and transact church business by common consent with prayer and much faith, there will be no danger of the members being dissatisfied with the action of such a conference; and any attempt to establish a rule, or system other than that which has been given to govern the church, we look upon as transcending the bounds of authority given to man by the Great Head of the church.

There has been several articles in the Herald on this subject, and we wish to notice one or two points. One writer urges as an objection to the common way of voting that some very inequitable measures have been adopted in the past under the old system of voting. That we are willing to admit; but if all things were known, very probably one of the main reasons why such things have been done is because the law was not obeyed, viz., the Elders (not the members) shall meet together to transact business.

Again it is claimed that there are some who have to vote contrary to their honest convictions because of present interests. We do not quite understand what is meant by present interests, but suppose it means, if B does not vote just as A wants him to, A has the power and will use it to hurt or damage B in a temporal point of view. If such be the case, it is hardly worthy of notice, for any one who will vote contrary to what they know is right because they are afraid of losing a little money, or of being looked down on, we wish to give some of Christ's teachings, "He that will not give up father, mother, houses, lands, or even life itself, is not worthy of me."

Again we are told to have an eye single to the glory of God. Paul says whatever we do, do all to the honor and glory of God; and we might multiply quotations, but think enough has been written on this point.

May the time soon come when the church shall be represented as the law directs is the prayer of your brother in Christ,

C. HALL.

The Godhead.

"There is a spirit in man, and the inspiration of God (the Almighty) giveth them understanding."

I see in reading the Herald that many of the brethren differ widely in their views in regard to this all-important subject—The Godhead. How can these things be? While I believe it a privilege we all have to express our views, we should be very careful that we do not lead others astray in doing so. Some claim that the Father and the Son are one and the same personage. Others that the Father is a spiritual body, while others claim that the Father is flesh and blood. If we read the 5th section of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, on faith it says, the Father is a personage of spirit, and the Son is a personage of tabernacles, making them two distinct personages. The Son, in praying to the Father, in John 17:5, says, "And now, O Father, glorify thou me, with thine own self, with the glory which I had with thee before the world was." Again, 18th verse, as thou hast sent me in the world, even so have I also sent them into the world." Here we find two persons, one praying to the other. Again in John 7:16, 17: "Jesus answered them and said, my doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me. If any man will do his (the Father's) will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself."

This should be sufficient to convince any reasonable mind that they are not one and the same personage. The Father being a personage of spirits, is a spirit body or body of spirits, not a spiritual body. A spiritual body is a body of flesh and bones, quickened (made spiritual) by the spirit. The Son who had glory with the Father before the world was, and by whom the world was made, left that glory and took upon him a body of flesh and blood, which was a natural body, and mingled with natural bodies; but at his resurrection his body was quickened by the spirit and he became a spiritual body. He ascended to the Father with that body, where he now sits at the right hand of the Majesty on high, from whence he will come to judge the quick and the dead at his appearing; and all those who hold out faithful to the end will be made like unto his own glorious body; that is, become spiritual bodies. Paul says: "There is a natural body and there is a spiritual body. The Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost comprise the Godhead; and they are in harmony with each other, possessing the same wisdom, glory and power. Therefore they are one."

When the Father said, "Let us make man in our own image," there was not yet flesh upon the earth; therefore, I believe man was made in the image of his spirit body. The body and spirit united make the natural man. There is an inner man and there is an outward man. Paul says: "Though this outward man perish, the inner man is renewed day by day." Hear Job: "Thou hast clothed me with skin and flesh, and fenced me with bones and sinews." What part of Job was clothed? That active, intelligent, inner man; the power that moves this earthly tabernacle. The spirit of man is in the form of man, and this earthly tabernacle is the case it dwells in. The Apostles are supposed to know what a spirit looks like, and when Christ appeared to them after his resurrection, they thought it was his spirit; but Christ says: "Come, handle me and see; a spirit hath not flesh and bones as ye see I have." He was then a spiritual body. Spirit is matter, therefore it is substance, and occupies space. The Father is a spirit, a substance, has form and occupies space; therefore he can not be in two places at one and the same time, only by his spirit. The Holy Spirit is omnipresent; it extends through all space, and acts in conjunction with the Father and the Son, and by it all things are governed according to their will. Every particle of the Holy Spirit is intelligent, and every man may (if he will try the gospel with full purpose of heart) obtain a portion of it, not the same particles, but the same substance. The Son came to do the Father's will, and by his righteousness he obtained victory over death. He then ascended to the Father to be glorified; and he now sits at his right hand to intercede for his brethren. All power is given to him both in heaven and upon the earth. Paul says, In him dwelleth all the fullness of the Godhead bodily. Therefore he is the God of this world; and will be until he subdues all things under him, then he will become subject to the Father.

That we may all be one, as the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost are one, is the desire of

Yours in bonds,

The Use of Wealth.

There are thousands of rich men who are not skintents, who have the reputation of being so, because they have never been known to have done any special good with their money. A man who is worth $50,000 can do more to make himself loved and respected by all with whom he comes in contact, by the judicious expenditure of a thousand dollars in charity, than by giving the whole fifty thousand dollars after he is dead. It seems as though it would be mighty small consolation to a millionaire to leave money to some charitable purpose, after death, and be so confounded dead that he couldn't see the smiles of happiness that his generosity had created.

Suppose a millionaire who has never had a kind word said of him except by fawning hypocrites, who hope to get some of his money, should lay out a beautiful park worth a million dollars, and throw it open free to all, with walks, drives, lakes, shade and everything. Don't you suppose, if he took a drive through it himself and saw thousands of people having a good time and all looking their love and respect for him, that his heart would be warmed up and that his days would be lengthened. Wouldn't every look of thanks be worth a thousand dollars to the man who had so much money that it made him round-shouldered? Wouldn't he have more pleasure than he would in cutting off coupons with a lawn mower.

Saints' Herald.

JOSEPH SMITH, EDITOR.

Lamoni, Iowa, September 15, 1882.

BRO. J. R. BADHAM writes as if the Church had no system, and that if the members understood what was required of them they would do it. This view, that there is not a system, is also hinted at in a late letter written by an Elder called home by his wife for reasons assigned in the letter.

It is not a little strange that Elders should so write. The Doctrine and Covenants contains law, more or less direct, from which the duty to devote some part of the earthly wealth that the Saints may have to the uses of the work, may be easily derived; and as no specific amount per head could possibly have been named in the church articles, it is clearly the privilege, right, duty, (whichever one may choose), of every member to decide for himself the amount he or she is willing and able to give to that end.

The Bishop has stated just as plainly as he could in words, that the Saints should pay to the several agents the sums designed by them as their portion of the work. In like manner the Bishopric has directed the way in which disbursements of the funds should be made.

As to system; it must, or should be clear to everybody, the brethren who write included, that neither the Bishop, nor the Bishop's Agents, can pay out moneys which are not in their hands; nor can they in reason, consistency, or honesty, make promises to any Elder that they will pay to the family of the Elder so much per week, month, or year, whatever sum may be stated as necessary to sustain said family for the time stated. It ought not to be expected. The Bishop nor his agents can not create money. They can only disburse, at their discretion, what they receive, be that little or much.

The system is clear enough, whatever view we may take of it. If we decide tithing of any sort is not binding, consecration and freewill offering remain, and either one is sufficient, if the individual wills; and the man or woman who has not common sense enough to decide whether they will consecrate or give a freewill offering of their means for the carrying on of the work, the success of which they so devoutly pray for, is very poor indeed. If tithing is believed by any one to be the correct thing, they can easily tell which they will yield to, one tenth of all or one tenth of yearly products, or one tenth of increase; and then pay in accordance with the decision.

It is well known that the Church has no power to collect a dollar, or enforce the payment of any dues from the Saints. All it can do is to make known to the Saints the necessity that something must be done, and suggest the how, and ask that it be done. This has been done. The Saints are all advised of the necessities of the missionary field, both for laborers, and means to sustain their families. The rule that may apply has been pointed out by the Bishop from time to time, and been stated in the HERALD as frequently. What more in the way of system is necessary?

We sometimes think that when Elders sit down to write to the HERALD that they write mechanically, and do not sufficiently think about what they do write. How else, can men bewail the absence of a system for carrying on a work designed of God, for the which the Master himself has provided. It is to us like charging the Master with having forgotten one very important item in the design. We do not believe that so important a feature was left out, but that a wise and sufficient method (system) by which the funds for carrying on of the gospel work was given—but that like the gospel requirement, "Believe and be baptized," it must be believed and then obeyed.

If the "wise men" suggested by one of the brethren, and all the other wise men were to get together and plan till their heads ached, they would fail to devise a method that would be free from objection; and when presented to the Church, should they devise one, it would be met with: "Well, where is your law for it?"

It is nearly time that we quit abusing the Church, or anybody in it, for the want of a system when we do not live near to what we have; and quit finding fault with a system not carried out, for a failure to provide means, for which failure the system is not to blame; and let us admit that the failure is not in the law, but in not doing under it what it clearly points out.

Is there any reason to believe that three, or four, or more districts, neither of which supports one to exercise charge as a missionary, could by a combination into one large district, get more gospel labor for nothing than the smaller districts can? If in the one district there are "more calls for preaching than I can fill," is it not likely that an increase of territory would increase the number of the calls? If districts can not "carefully select men suitable for the labor to be done," can the Church, out of the same districts get any better quality of men by "carefully selecting."

"A great work could be done here if the right kind of an Elder was sent here." This is a stereotyped sentence and occurs in letters from nearly everywhere, and from all classes of men. It means almost nothing many times, and in some instances is a downright reflection upon some "good Elder," doing all he can for the very region whence the words are written. It is just like a statement made by a conference that a certain thing could be done if they only had one of the Twelve with them; and one of that body was right with the district at the time the matter was voted on.

The gospel system is a good one if followed; if not followed, does the good character of the system fail? So with the finance system of the Church; it is a good one if followed. Does a failure to follow it make the system bad?

What is the system? Give what you can. How?

First: All of your wealth and possessions not in use and occupation by you—a surplus.

Second: If you have none of the first, then consecrate so much as you may choose, money, goods, or chattels.

Third: If you have not the first, nor choose the second, then give as a free will offering, much or little as you please.

Fourth: After that:

Fifth: Each year, one tenth of your increase.

Sixth: If you have no increase, and choose to help, then as before, consecrate, or donate free-will offerings.

Seventh: All of these are to be voluntarily performed.

Can anything be simpler, or more specific than the foregoing, and leave anything at all to the prompting of the Spirit to teach men the way?

Eighth: Pay to the Bishop's Agent where these are appointed; and in their absence pay to the Bishop, or as he may direct. Address at present, George A. Blakeslee, Galien, Berrien county, Michigan.

How is the means to be paid out.

First: Upon a direct order from the Conferences by vote.

Second: At the discretion of the Bishop; and by his agents by consultation with and direction from him.

Third: By agreement and understanding between the Twelve and the Bishopric in regard to missionary work, its needs and the ministry engaged in the work.

Fourth: And to them who are engaged in the work as necessity, wisdom and opportunity demand and provide for.

It is not wise for Elders and Elders' wives to assume that every need and want must be provided for instantaneously; or that the Bishop, or his agents will without questioning, or inquiry, meet this or that payment. The finance work is that of the Bishopric, and men of that office are called "according to the gifts of God unto them," and they must discharge the duties of their calling intelligently and with knowledge of them and the reasons for the demands upon the treasury in their care, or they are unqualified for the position, and no one should find fault with them for diligence and care in office.

The position of an Elder abroad from home is a humiliating one, beyond question, and seems to have been so designed. If God wants an humble people, the Elders must be humble and teach humility by precept and example. The position of an Elder's family is a humiliating one, no question about that. But if the husband and father is humble, why should not the wife and children be also.

The position of the family of the Elder traveling abroad is a dependent one. True in the greater number of instances. But is the family of one, who, when at home in the bosom of his family, does little more than earn the daily bread of himself and family by employment not fixed and regular, but dependent upon the usual circumstances of man's existence and success, any more dependent so far as they are concerned, when the Elder is away about his Master's business. In the one case, as we view it, they are dependent upon God who has called them and promised them sustenance, and upon the many their co-workers in the great work; and in the other they depend upon the labor of the one man, subject to all the peculiarities of the situation, good, bad or indifferent, as the case may be. This is the case with some, and from this class many of the complaints against the inefficiency of the system now obtaining comes.

There can be no possible excuse on the part of any body that they do not know the condition that the finances of the Church are in; for each quarter of the year the statement in cold figures of the receipts and expenditures is made in the HERALD, and this is done by order of the Saints in Conference assembled, so that all may know. It follows then that those who deal with the Bishop should do so with a knowledge of what is and what is not at his disposal; unless it should be deemed best by those who write him, to deal with the matter as if unlimited resources were at his command. We are quite strongly impressed that it is too frequently a question of will rather than how.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

WE reproduce from the Lansing, Michigan, Evening News, the report of an interview of a reporter with Mr. Charles J. Strang, son of Mr. James J. Strang. It may be open to the objection that reports of interviews by newspaper reporters are subject to, lack of fair dealing with the parties interviewed; but it will be interesting to the Herald readers, by reason of its connections.

Affairs at Nauvoo, Illinois, remain much the same as for a few years past. Bro. Thomas Revell and his wife Elizabeth, are nearly all that remain of the one time active Olive Branch. There are a few others in and near the place; Bro. Jas. Gifford and family, Bro. and Sr. Pond being some of them. A late letter from Bro. Revell renewing subscription for the Herald, brought remembrance of the long and arduous struggle the few Saints in the region there made from 1860 to 1866, before a firm foothold for the faith could be obtained. The old town looks dilapidated and sad, as well it may—after the strange history it has had.

The "Law of the Spirit of Life hath made me free from the law of sin and death." Paul to the Romans. What a consolation.

Tullidge's Quarterly Magazine for July, 1882, is on our table, and is an excellent number. Utah is the subject of presentation, and it is ably done. Her position, natural resources, and her men, Mormon and Gentile are all presented to the reader in attractive form.

Bro. Henry M. Wilbraham wrote from Pittsburgh, August 23d, that Bro. Joseph Parsons, one of the veterans in the work was seriously ill, and would not likely survive until we received Bro. W's. letter. So do the aged and tried ones fall by death, to wait their reward.

Bro. St. Clair left Independence, Missouri, August 27th, on foot en route for Lamoni and conference.

A brother writes from London, Ontario, that it must not be thought that the London Branch is fallen away, for it is not. Much is being done to awaken the people to the truth. The brother sells coal oil from place to place, and usually carries some tracts with him, and by them makes opportunity to tell the gospel story.

We received some months ago, by arrangement with Bro. E. N. Webster, of Boston, Massachusetts, a letter from an enquiring brother, man and fellow searcher after truth, named J. Crossett. We publish in this issue a letter from him, written in the far Orient, and containnig much that will interest the Saints.

Bro. Joseph R. Lambert and family arrived at Lamoni, September 1st, across country from Creston, Iowa, by wagon with Bro. A. W. Head wagon master, guide and captain. We were glad to greet them.

Bro. D. S. Crawley wrote from Weir, Kansas, August 21st, that he had arranged to preach considerable this fall; but lameness intervened and prevented. Crops there are abundant and best ever known.

Robert Heman Cain died at Elmwood Nebraska, instead of Elmwood, Kansas, as stated in Herald for August 15th. Please notice.

BRO. JOHN EAMES sends us the following from the Cheyenne Leader. In the news from Hartville, August 18th, occurs the following:

Father John Eames, of Cheyenne, arrived on the coach to-day, and will preach to the boys on Sunday next, using the Hon. D. S. Bartlett's store for the occasion. Father Eames is well known here, having spent several weeks with us last summer, and with Colonel Hart, of the 5th cavalry, has some of the finest prospects in Hartville, among them being the Keystone.

Bro. Eames writes August 24th: "Just home from the mines. Am in hopes I shall come out all right. Met Bro. and Sr. Hudson from Columbus, Nebraska. Left yesterday (23d) for Greeley, Colorado, will meet Bro. Caffall and Bro. George McConley. Bro. McConley is a good brother, who has lived at Greeley for some time. The people offer a church for preaching. Bro. Caffall has been there. I met Bro. Caffall there. I start back to Hartville next Tuesday. They gave me a lot there to build a church on, and promise to come in and help me build."

THE Electoral Commission, appointed by President Arthur, under the action of the Edmunds Bill, are at their work in Utah. They have appointed a registration office and a registrar for each of twenty-four counties of the territory. Of the registrars seven are Gentiles, nine apostate Mormons, and eight Mormons. The oath of office which the Commissioners require these registrars to take is as follows:

"That he is not a bigamist or polygamist; that he is not a violator of the United States' laws prohibiting bigamy or polygamy; that he does not live or cohabit with more than one woman in the marriage relation, nor does any relation exist between him and any woman, which has been entered into or continued in violation of the said laws of the United States; or if a woman, that she is not the wife of a polygamist, nor has entered into any relation with any man in violation of the laws of the United States concerning polygamy or bigamy."

We presume that a similar oath will be required of every person registered as a voter in the Territory. It is probable that some of the so-called apostate Mormons may be members of the Reorganization, for in the common usage of the papers, those who had once belonged to the church in Utah and severed from it, whether into unbelief or for unity with us, would be termed apostate, or recalcitrant Mormons, thus opposing them to Utah polygamists.

It is said that there is not altogether pleasure or content on any side concerning the action of the Commission; but we think that they evidently desire to be conservative, and will act as they believe for the best good of all the citizens of Utah affected by the act of Congress, by which they are appointed; while they probably will, as they should do, insist upon the strict carrying out of the provisions of the act.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

BRO. WILLIAM ANDERSON writes from Oakland, California, August 22d, 1882:

"I wrote you a few days ago to print me one thousand "United States in Prophecy," now I countermand that order and substitute five thousand, and will send the money when I get the bill. As the Fall is approaching, I am determined to let the leaves fall.

One week ago last Sunday I fitted old Bro. Steel out with tracts and sent him into a camp-meeting to distribute them; they soon spied him, and put him out,—rough. Last Sunday I loaded up and surveyed the fort. I saw no chance to do much myself, so I hired a small boy to stand at the gate and hand them to the passers by, and I took a seat among the sanctified to watch the movements; and how I laughed to myself to see the sentinels trying to find where the tracts were coming from."

SR. STERRET wrote from Pleasant Grove, Utah:

"Bro. R. J. Anthony left us for home yesterday, and will go to Ogden this morning, and take the U. P. R. to-day: and go on and onward until he arrives home. He is a worthy soldier of Christ, and much respected by those that know him in Utah. We shall miss him.

BRO. J. W. BRYAN, writes from Texas:

Crops are splendid, and the prospects are good that we may be able to assist in supporting the Herald as a weekly. I would be very glad to receive it weekly. Still praying and laboring for the advancement of the cause we all should love.

THE following from The American, a monthly magazine published at Philadelphia, the September number of which some brother sends us, gives a good idea from the American view of the Eastern Question now solving or being complicated, who shall state, in Turkey and Egypt, by England and the Powers:

ENGLAND'S DESCENT UPON EGYPT.

"The traders begin the wars," said Sir Charles Napier, "and the soldiers end them." The gallant general meant by this statement that trade is the great provoker of international enmities, and not the "fair, white-winged peacemaker" of Tennyson's ode. The great trading communities have been the most constantly engaged in war. Carthage, like Tyre and Sidon, fought incessantly for the extension of its commerce. Rome was a great trading centre, before she became a great military city, and her battle for life and death with Carthage was a battle for the commercial control of the Mediterranean. It was the jealousy of the Roman bankers which seconded effectively Cato's "Carthago delenda est," and which led to the final destruction of the rival city. Similarly, Venice, throughout the Middle Ages, was everywhere drawn into wars for the defence and extension of her trade. Her ships of war were but the necessary escort of her great mercantile fleet.

England inherits the traditions of Tyre, Sidon, Carthage, Rome and Venice. For the past hundred years, she seldom has enjoyed even a brief period of absolute peace. She has had more fighting than all the rest of Europe taken together. Generally her fighting has been in the line of domineering over weaker powers than herself. Since 1815, she has shrunk from every kind of collision with nations regarded as her equals; but in every corner of the world she has been forcing her rule and her trade by military power, upon weak but resisting peoples.

The curious campaign now progressing in Egypt, is therefore not an exceptional event. It is but a new chapter, in a policy which has become so well established, that Englishmen begin to think themselves discharged from any consideration of its rightness or its wrongness. It has become almost axiomatic with them, that whatever stands in the way of British trade is to be crushed by superior force. When Lord Beaconsfield went into war for "a scientific frontier," the solid good sense of England refused to follow him. Liberal leaders charged him with setting up a Moloch called "British Interests," to which he was ready to sacrifice every other people, if need were. It was one of the signal instances of his failure to understand the people he was governing. Had he said "a commercial frontier,"—had he shown that his ambitious and showy policy was, in some way, identical with English commercial interests—the result might have been quite different. The spirit which, in 1802, plunged Europe into a new war with Napoleon, on the discovery that the Peace of Amiens did not open the continent to British manufactures, who would have sustained him. That spirit still rules in the councils of the empire.

We speak of the expedition to Egypt as curious. Ordinarily wars are waged against countries and their governments. In a few instances, they have for their object the overthrow of a particular government, and the establishment of some other in its place. But neither of these objects can be alleged in the present instance. Tewfik Pasha is recognized by England equally with the rest of the world, as the legitimate ruler of Egypt, under the suzerainty of the Sultan. With him England has no quarrel. She bombards the chief city of his dominions, reduces public works and palaces to ruins, and kills thousands of his subjects, while professing the keenest anxiety for the maintenance of his authority. She courts his invitation to assist in rebuilding the edifice of public order, on the ruin she has made. And all this she does, in order to effect a change of ministry in Egypt. The Khedive's minister of war, recognized as such by his master even after the bombardment of Alexandria, is regarded as offensive to his master and hostile to British interests. To secure his removal from office this unheralded war is waged. Be it noted, that the Khedive did not make that public appeal for assistance against Arabi Pasha, which international law exacts as a preliminary to foreign interference. On the contrary, he recognized him as the only man who could maintain order in Egypt, and declared that he held him responsible for the lives of the foreigners who are resident in Egypt. So far as the rules of international law extend, England was bound to assume that the Khedive was satisfied with his servant, and was responsible for his acts. She certainly found in Egypt no evidence of a revolt against constituted authority. At the most, there was an agitation for a larger measure of liberty of action than the Khedive has been used to accord to his people.

There is no proof that Arabi Pasha meant to take any step which would imperil the usefulness of the Suez Canal, nor even that he meant to put an end by violence to the foreign Control of Egyptian finances. Here, also, the English have proceeded without that public warrant for their action, which the world has the right to exact. But this is only natural. The spirit of trade is a spirit of jealousy and suspicion. It constantly is seeing remote dangers and possible perils. Its best exponent is in the fluctuations of the money and other markets, which arise so often from circumstances of no practical importance, but express the nervous and feverish temper which results from making prosperity dependent on remote contingencies. The foreign Control was set up in Egypt, nominally to secure the payment of the debt, but really to secure the Canal. Arabi Bey professes to be quite friendly to the Control, but hostile to its policy of filling Egypt with an army of French and English officials. It is the possibility that this first step may lead to the abolition of the Control itself, and that to the abolition of the safety of the Canal, that has led, first to diplomatic pressure, and then to war. It is another case of the possibly desirable door-plate, with the name Thompson spelled with a P.

The conduct of the Egyptians, even as seen through the mass of misrepresentation and prejudice, is such as to entitle them to the sympathy of mankind. That they fought bravely in the defence of their untenable earthworks, is shown, not more clearly by the reluctant testimony of their enemies, than by the evident unwillingness of Admiral Seymour to court another conflict with them. That they set Alexandria on fire before evacuating it, was exactly to be expected. The plundering is not said to have begun before the troops left the city. It was only the resumption of the outrages which Arabi Bey had put down, with a strong hand, a few weeks before. Every despotic and corrupt government tends to create a great population of reckless and desperate men, whose opportunity comes in the horrors of a bombardment. At any rate, the people of Egypt stand higher before the world to-day, than was thought possible ten years ago.

England, having gone so far, must go farther. She can not with safety evacuate the country. With every day it becomes more evident that the whole Egyptian people are arrayed against her. Arab and Copt, Christian and Moslem, have sunk their ancient feuds to unite in resistance to her demands. To restore the Khedive and the Control, and then leave them to deal with this people, would be to invite a new uprising. To kill or banish Arabi Bey would only leave his place vacant for a dozen leaders of the same temper. As England might have learned from Ireland, nationality is one of those indestructible forces which all statesmanship must take into account. To it, as to the Catholic Church, nullum tempus occurrit. It can wait, in the certainty of outliving any force which may be brought against it. It is the anvil which will break many a hammer. In Egypt, as in Ireland and Afghanistan, England has enlisted this principle against her own interests; and she will find that nothing is accomplished by the overthrow or expulsion of those who for the time serve as its spokesmen.

But holding on to the wolf's ears is as dangerous as to let them go. An occupation of Egypt, however masked under the pretence of maintaining the authority of the Khedive, will involve complications with both European interests and Moslem opinion. It has long been recognized in European diplomacy, that the Turkish Empire was permitted to exist only because the great powers could not agree upon any plan for disposing of its possessions. On every side there are claimants, the principal being Russia, Greece, and Austria-Hungary. When any one of these three has succeeded in appropriating a part, this has been urged as a reason for concessions to the rest. And the European Concert has conceded the justice of the claim. The Berlin Conference ceded territory to Greece, Montenegro and Austria-Hungary, to compensate for the conquests made by Russia, each of these countries having alleged these conquests as a good reason for expecting concessions. The same rule will apply to the English annexation of Egypt, and Italy will insist on being included among the claimants. Already, both Italy and Russia have indicated their dissatisfaction with the situation, and Austria-Hungary evidently shares their determination to watch for what they can get out of the new deal. Thus far, it is true, the Muscovite has shown his activity chiefly in prompting the Turk, and indicating the course which will annoy England most. But when once England commits herself to the permanent occupation of Egypt, the relations of all these powers will be strained to the last degree. A general European war may grow out of the attack on Arabi Bey; and with Ireland thoroughly disaffected, a general war is the last thing that England can afford.

Mr. Gladstone, besides, is running the serious risk of inflaming Moslem zeal, throughout the East, to the fighting point. All diplomacy must take account of the new intensity of religious feeling in Western Asia. A great religious revival began last century, with the Wahabee movement in Central Arabia. For a time it was bounded by the sectarian and national limits in which it originated. In the present century, it has spread Northward to the Caucasus, Eastward to Calcutta, and Westward to the Barbary States. It has been marked by a great decline in the use of spirituous liquors, and by a great increase in attendance at the mosques and in pilgrimages to Mecca. Sixty years ago, a Jihad or "War of Zeal," was an idea as obsolete with the Moslems, as is that of a crusade with Christians. Now it is on every tongue. The Sultan does not comply with the European demands, because he knows of the seething mass of fanaticism behind him in Constantinople. The Moslem who called out to him in the street the other day, that "the time was come for him to show himself a man," spoke for the great body of his Moslem co-believers. In one part of the Empire after another, the "house of faith" has been converted by Infidel conquest into that "house of confusion" in which no Moslem can die with safety to his soul. Roumania, Servia, Bokhara, Bulgaria, Eastern Armenia, Thessaly, Tunis, in our own time, have become countries in which, according to the soundest school of Mohammedan interpreters, the true believer has only the choice of flight or rebellion. Is Egypt the first conquest of the Prophet's soldiers outside of Arabia, and the neighborland to the holy city itself, to become "the house of confusion," to the severance of the Prophet's grave and the Caaba, by Infidel territory, from the great body of African Moslems? And is the spiritual and temporal head of Islam, the Sultan himself, to help to this desecration and pollution?—These are the questions which are stirring multitudes, not only on the Bosphorus, but wherever the new awakening of Moslem zeal has been felt. And any over-eagerness for English control in Egypt might cause an earthquake which would be felt beyond Calcutta, to the straits of Malacca.

ANOTHER reason for not using tobacco:—

"A new horror has been added to the cigarette in California. 'Leprosy,' says a San Francisco physician, 'is revealing itself about the lips and tongues of boys who smoke cigarettes made by the Chinese. The disease, though fatal, is slow in giving tokens of its approach.' No less than 170 cases of infection by cigarette smoking had come under the physician's notice."

LANSING, Michigan,

Editor Herald:—The question has already arisen how I came into possession of the letter of appointment mentioned in my former communication.

Two years ago, my brother Clement, while on a visit to Black River Falls, Wis., procured for my use in the preparation of a history of father's life, some very valuable material, among which was this document, represented to be the original letter. It was brought to me enclosed within the covers of the book of record containing the names of the "witnesses of the crowning of the King of Zion," July 8th, 1850. The affidavit in the book of record was apparently in J. J. Strang's handwriting, and was followed by two hundred and thirty-four signatures, fifty-eight of which were cross-marked. There was nothing about any of the documents to indicate a forgery, so I was compelled to believe the letter was genuine as represented. The postscript bore the appearance of having been written at the same time as the body of the letter,—a little below the center of the third page of a large letter sheet; the fourth page having the superscription and red postmark, being the outside as letters were then folded and sent, sealed with wax or wafers, and without envelopes. I could detect nothing differing from the description of it published during Strang's lifetime.

As soon as I read the postscript I was almost fully convinced of the theory expressed in my communication, but I studied the matter nearly two years before I finally decided to publish my opinion.

On this subject I have a request to make of your subscribers. As it has been suggested that possibly this document is a forgery, will those who saw the original letter in the possession of J. J. Strang write me if they ever saw or at any time knew of a postscript.

I would also state that I am preparing a sketch of his life, which I hope to publish this Fall or Winter, and would appreciate any material in the line of official tracts or church papers, or letters touching the work of his life. If any one has such material they will loan me, I will use carefully, return promptly, and appreciate the favor.

Bro. Joseph:—Our Quarterly Conference held at Millersburg on the 2nd and 3d, has just passed off, and a blessed time was had, the Good Spirit was with us all the way through, and the Saints were much strengthened in the work. There were two baptized during conference. I think there will be more labor and spiritual work done in the district this Fall than there has been for some time past. May the Lord in his mercy remember scattered Israel, and put forth his strong arm for the good of his work, is the prayer of your brother in Christ,

H. C. BRONSON.

TSINANFU, China,

Capital of Shantung Province,

July 10th, 1882.

Joseph Smith; Dear Brother.—Failing to meet you while in the United States, as I wished to do, I must for the present be content with an acquaintance through the postal medium. If our Lord's prayer in John 17 is to be answered, as it surely will be in course of time, we may hope for intimate companionship in the future. You received through E. N. Webster of Boston, a letter from me while in a state of uncertainty as to where the authorities which I believed the Lord intended should be the servants of his people were to be found. I felt constrained to leave the United States for my old home in Asia, without having the question settled, but time makes me more reconciled to this condition of things, and certainly the freedom of intercourse with disciples of our Lord of every denomination is a compensation for the loneliness at first occasioned by want of any organic union with others of "like precious faith."

I left New York for China, January 20th, 1882, and passed through England, Europe, to Palestine, where a month and a half was spent in Jerusalem: and then through the Indian Ocean to this great city, arriving five months from the date of leaving the United States.

To meet acknowledgers of Jesus Christ as the Restorer of his people and find so many hopes in common and not being obliged to admit that I belonged to some sect of hostile creed, has been a great source of joy and peace. Of course joy and peace are not to be obtained at the expense of bearing the cross of being classed with an obscure or despised sect, but where the conscience is clear that the sect to which he should belong has not been revealed to him yet, the peace seems so far genuine.

At one time this phase of the Christian life was brought up to me frequently and strongly. "Now that you have left a large and popular church and have found the happiness of being shunned by men, but sought out by the Good Shepherd, go farther into the humiliation of identifying yourself with some despised flock where greater spiritual blessings than you had imagined would attend the humiliating action."

I hope I did not shrink from the cross bearing of such a burning of bridges behind me; but while humiliation and consequent exaltation in bearing reproach for conscience sake, I felt sure would result, yet was I at liberty to obtain the joys of a deep humbling and companionship of those who would be drawn very near me in the new relationship, while the claims of one sect equalled another in my mind, and made a choice a matter of dishonest acknowledgment of exclusive monopoly of the Lord's truths, which neither reason nor faith admitted to be the sole patronage of the sect chosen?

If obedience to the humbling confession would make doubtful things plain as others claimed it did with them, I still was debarred from action because of the command to be honest in acting according to conviction. If it were the case of choosing between starvation and several kinds of imperfect food, I could draw lots among the rival denominations, enter blindly some door which would receive me rather than be lost; but such an alternative has never been forced on me.

How are these questions to be solved? Am I to live and die alone? If I proclaim these heterogeneous views of Jesus Christ, which so many different denominations have furnished, and there are those who believe them with me, will not a new denomination be the result? But what right have I to found a sect when the only one "new and true Jerusalem" can come down out of heaven on earth? Every idol must be broken. The great church image which man began to worship so soon after our Redeemer's return to Heaven has been broken and must be broken and broken again. Shall I break off a piece and set it up for the worship of a handful of subscribers to the new creed? Please throw light on the dilemma of refusing to speak where men need saving truths, or if the mouth is opened, do it at the risk of making a new carnal man worship and church idolatry.

It may give joy to some of my fellow Christians whom I love, to state a few facts.

As a missionary of a large orthodox denomination I labored in this north-east promontory of China from 1870 to 1879. In the very first of 1879, while under great religious and moral disturbances of the old line of things, both in my own heart life and in connection with a revived state among Chinese Christians, the question of the destiny of the seed of Abraham came up like a revelation, and I could not drive the apparently impractical thoughts away. The Scripture as to their return, the coming of Christ, etc., came up for a large place in the Christian experience then breaking in upon me. The Mongolians, Manchurians, Tibetians, Koreans, Japanese, etc., seemed a part of the lost tribes, and the proofs which gathered around the first revelation by visits to Peking, Japan, etc., made me feel certain in the main of the truths of the impression.

While in Japan and in the United States in 1879 the books and other sources of light on the Israelitish origin of a large proportion of the races in America now decaying or already gone, convinced me that Northern Asia and America held at least a part of the remnants of those long lost descendants of Jacob.

It did not occur to me to examine the Book of Mormon until a year or two after. It came to my notice for other reasons than searching for genealogies. A reading of that collection of documents made me sure that no Congregational minister could frame a romance in which immersion was the mode of baptism constantly mentioned as the only kind. Neither could he put the salaried ministry under the censure which those writings did and remain where he was.

In fact, the marvel of a Catholic Bishop preaching and immersing in a Presbyterian meeting-house, would be tame to the inconsistencies of any modern denominational adherent, who should attempt to unite the collection of annals known as the Book of Mormon.

Twenty different men might agree to write something which they would bind together without an attempt at reconciling their different views, but they could no more be the authors of the Book of Mormon within the last two or three hundred years, or at any time, than Heroditus, Xenophon, Josephus, etc., could be bound together and passed off as modern productions of any one man or set of men.

All the accounts of Joseph Smith's simple piety, illiteracy, familiarity with the English of King James' translated Bible, etc., are consistent with the claim of a set of ancient chronicles dug out of the earth and put into English by him.

I intended to visit the locality near Palmyra, New York, and was within a few miles of it last December, but I felt satisfied with the testimony of others. At Rochester, I met a woman who had been claimed in public print to be a witness of the Spaulding origin of the Book, but she did not believe that any evidence which she, or her relatives had, could identify an old M. S. in a trunk with the Book of Mormon.

At Dansville, New York, the Episcopal Rector had a choice collection of books, objects of antique, etc., which were very valuable to me in collateral proof of the truths of the Book of Mormon, relating to former great races with Israelitish and Christian emblems, etc. He is well informed on these questions.

I have great hopes that some near future will bring forth a person humble enough for the Lord to again commit those plates and their interpretation, so that a fuller and better translation into English can be made.

In this great Empire, the translations of the Old and New Testaments in their present crude condition, cause them to appear to the vast majority of people who see them or have heard of them, as certain impostures if claimed as heaven inspired oracles.

But does the imperfect translation make the originals false? Does Joseph Smith's limited vocabulary of English make writings committed to him for bringing to light in that language forgeries? Then much of the English Bibles must be pronounced a forgery.

I hope the day is not far distant when truer views of inspiration will help to break the Protestant Idol, called the English Bible, gilded so handsomely but so useless on the tables of ornament and idleness. When the collection of Hebrew and Christian books are studied and loved because obeyed, and obeyed because loved; then there is promise of admitting all inspired words to be profitable.

There is every shade of inspiration from the highest to the lowest. Every one sets his own standard, for he will be led into truth just in proportion as he is truthful.

Take the translators of the books which constitute the English Bible. A knowledge of their private lives would determine the degree of correctness of their work, for if deceiving, they must be deceived according to God's invariable law which sends lying spirits to those who first love and make a lie.

If we are not honest in relating any private affair, God's strict law of recompense can not allow us to see the truth in such matters, for instance, as theology, man's origin and destiny, etc.

We can reverse the process of reasoning also, and from the errors of their translation tell for a certainty that in their every day conduct, they failed to be exact in truthfulness.

A man's inspiration differs at different periods of his life. If humble and simple in word and deed, he can have great truths safely committed to him; but if pride comes in, and consequent doublefacedness, he still may be an oracle of God, but the standard is lowered and the revelations which he can make are less pure.

It has seemed to me that Joseph Smith when unknown and full of the purpose and actual communion with his God in the woods while yet young, was such an emptied vessel as God could, and did use to reveal great truths. In after years he confesses that which we all know to be our case, notoriety and other causes gave occasion for temptations under which men fall into degrees of spiritual pride. Of course, greater fame bringing greater persecutions in a measure corrects itself, but not necessarily to the full extent.

Elijah and Moses probably stood next to Jesus Christ in their inspiration, but Elijah's pride at the last must be rebuked and even as he slew with fire so must he be slain. I may be mistaken but it has seemed to me that Joseph Smith's inspired translation of the Scriptures was a decided letting down from former gifts of prophecy, interpretation, etc. Yet in the inspired translation, I find wonderful things which no ordinary uninspired mind could suggest.

Perhaps my brethren whom I have met at General Conferences wonder where I am and what I am doing. I am trying to assist in keeping up our meetings; we have meetings twice every Sunday and Sabbath School. Am strong in the faith. Have succeeded in getting Dr. Thomas' sermon on Mormonism published in the Baraboo Republic, our county paper, and it has done a great deal of good in removing prejudice in these parts. I intend to try and devote my time to the ministry this Winter. Hope that whoever is appointed to this country will visit us. Have been looking for Bro. Briggs, but have not seen him yet.

Your brother in bonds,

F. HACKETT.

DOUGLAS, Massachusetts,

August 30th, 1882.

Bro. Joseph:—I stayed and preached in Fall River last Sunday, August 27th, and had the pleasure of baptizing five into the Church there. Thus the good work keeps moving. The good seed sown is beginning to bring forth fruit. "We shall certainly reap if we faint not."

Yours in Christ,

JOHN GILBERT.

COWSKIN PRAIRIE, Cherokee Nation,

Indian Territory, Aug. 17th, 1882

Bro. Joseph Smith:—I regret very much that I have not been able to honor the appointment of Spring Conference as fully as was expected. As the causes for this are known to you, I shall not attempt to more than state for the information of the Church, that just as I had completed arrangements for going to the mission assigned me, I received intelligence concerning some things, which delayed me materially, and threatened to tie my hands permanently. The nature of the case I can not make public; but I was about to bow to the seemingly inevitable, when an unexpected turn in affairs set me at liberty for a short time, and I determined to take advantage of it, and so started with Bro. Heman C. Smith for this place on the 17th of July. We have labored in this territory together since then, till the present. I will need to return home soon again, and attend to some matters before Fall Conference. What the ultimate will be in the matters referred to, I can not tell till that time. I hope, however, that I shall be able to so arrange, that the rest of my days may be spent in the field. If I can get to the Conference, I shall be able to state my case to be understood by those who attend to the appointment of missions, and if I can not get there I will write. I have labored diligently for a long time with a view to being at liberty to go abroad and preach the gospel, and any hindrance now appearing will prove galling in the extreme; but I am hopeful that I shall be able to offer myself to the Conference, notwithstanding what has occurred. I have not been idle, however, for prior to coming here I visited Holden and Montserrat, Missouri, also Wyandotte, Kansas, and preached as opportunity was furnished. I also attended to preaching and other duties as president of Independence, Missouri, branch. In all, I have preached thirty-four times. My hindrance has caused me greater grief over the matter than the united Church can feel, for if I understand myself, I find no greater joy than in preaching the gospel, and if I shall be materially delayed henceforth, it will be almost unendurable. Spiritually, I feel well, and have been much blessed in attending to the ordinances. I baptized five at Independence not many weeks ago. Two have been baptized here since our coming, by Bro. Montague, who arrived on the 10th. I will leave the reporting of our work in this mission to be attended to by Bro. Smith, who has charge. We have done our best; the field is interesting. I regret the necessity for my speedy return home. May see you at Conference. If so I hope to be able to "see farther" than I do now into the future, and base my action thereupon. Praying that the obstacles of the present may cease to obstruct beyond a few weeks. I am as ever,

Yours for the truth,

JOSEPH LUFF.

GALENA, Kansas,

Dear Herald:—As the standard books are my main guides I feel disposed to defend their teachings. Bro. T. F. Stafford can find the doctrine that Adam fell that man might be in the Book of Mormon, second Book of Nephi, page 59. I have never heard much preaching, and I search the books and the Herald with eagerness to know the right way. The Herald is worth its weight in gold now, and when it is a weekly it will be worth more. Love to all in Christ,

MELVINA BURLISON.

PEACH TREE, Cal.,

Dear Bro. Joseph:—Not seeing anything from this portion of the Lord's vineyard, I thought I would write a few lines to let you know that we are still striving to hold on to the "iron rod," realizing that it is the only means of salvation. We once had a very flourishing branch here, but now there only remains two families of us; that is John Holmes and my own. We do not have meetings regularly, but our much esteemed president, Bro. John Carmichael, was here a short time ago, and delivered us some splendid sermons and gave us such good counsel that it does us so much good to have him visit us. I feel that he is the right man in the right place. There was a great deal of prejudice here, but it is removed and the people begin to turn out to hear us. We expect Bro. Carmichael here again soon.

We have sacrament meeting once in a while at our beloved branch president's, Bro. John Holmes, who is a good man and brother indeed, but we do not have preaching very often. We have started a kind of union Sabbath School and Bro. Holmes is superintendent. We had a good turn out last Sabbath.

I remain your brother in the gospel bonds,

PERRY DAVIS.

ROND EAU, Ontario,

August 23d, 1882.

Bro. Joseph:—We are all well at present. Bro. Hicklin has been preaching in Chatham, and Bro. Deuel has just returned from Wilkesport, he baptized ten out there. Bro. Hicklin preached eight discourses in Chatham, and has sowed the seed which in time may bring forth fruit.

Some Saints, I am sorry to say, take the position that there is no law in the Church against dancing (they do not live here) Now, for my part I consider Saints very weak in the faith that can go to balls and dancing parties. In such places we mingle with those who would scorn our society elsewhere on account of our faith. If there is no law against such, I think it is high time that one should be passed. I do not think that there is so much harm in the amusement, but it is the society that we mingle with there, that we are apt to take example after. I do not think Saints should take part in any exercise but what they can ask the Lord's blessing on them while engaged in it.

Yours for truth,

B. CORVEN.

Bro. Joseph:—I have always had a great desire to say or do something to help confirm the truth, feeling that it is the best and greatest act in one's life,—the knowledge of my inability restrains me. If this article should possess the least light it is hoped some may find it.

A. G.

The description given in Josiah Priest's American Antiquities, which was published in 1833, and of that given in the Book of Mormon, published in 1830, being so minutely alike, ought forever to put a quietus on the silly allegation that the Spaulding Romance, published in 1812, was the foundation of the description given by both, the Antiquities and the Book of Mormon. To accept such story would be simply to brand as counterfeit both books, and to attribute to Mr. Spaulding supernatural foresight. We will here append a report out of each book, noting the similarity between them, as an inducement to investigate, that we may find the truth.—On page 273, Antiquities, it reads thus: "The whole western coast of the American Continent from Lat. north 5°, down to Patagoni in Lat. south 4°, a distance of over six thousand miles, would appear as once densely settled." One would infer that a settlement of that length would have a corresponding breadth, which would be no less than to span the continent. In relation to this same subject the Book of Mormon, on page 384, reads thus: "And it came to pass that they did multiply and spread, and did go forth from the land southward to the land northward, and did spread, insomuch that they did begin to cover the face of the whole earth, from the sea south to the sea north; from the sea west to the sea east."

Such similarity abounds in both books. Seeing that the Book of Mormon and the American Antiquities so perfectly agree in description, and Mr. Spaulding wrote before these discoveries were made, leaves no ground to suspect the romance to be the foundation of the Book of Mormon, if it is, it is also that of the Antiquity, for they both agree.

NERVANA, Lake Co., Michigan,

August 21st, 1882.

Bro. Joseph:—Brother Carns, formerly a Priest of the Buckhorn Branch, Ontario, has moved here and is doing what he can in the way of preaching on the Lord's day. There seems to be quite an interest manifested, they seem anxious to hear. The word comes from different places, Come and preach for us. May the seed sown drop on good ground and bring forth fruit, is my prayer. We think some will soon call for admittance into the sheep fold. Our prayer is that they may. One man, whom the people call an Infidel, told me the other day, he is interested in this work. May his interest increase. Pray for us that we may act wisely and do right, and get the work started out here.

Yours in the love of truth,

SAMUEL C. REYNOLDS.

HARTFORD, Connecticut.

Brother—greeting—to you and to all Saints:—I am the poorest of all; yet heir to all things. I have searched the scriptures by course for many years, but did not understand but little until I became familiar with about all the works of the latter day Church. Please ask all through Herald to examine Inspired Translation and all the works of these last days. Why I ask you in this way, at this time, Bro. Blair requests me to solicit for Advocate and remit to him; 1st. By subscription on this line we help the work. 2d. Spiritual food is obtained by us. 3d. Give away the documents to the honest and keep them going until they are worn out. Noah's preaching one hundred and twenty years not long hence will amount to an immense. I was sad for a long time that the gospel was crippled for want of means. As I had not the money, about two years ago I was impressed to give R. O. C. a $100 note by installments—$70 yet due. The power whose I am has enabled me to meet them, also to give now and then $5 for Utah—very important—mission. Brethren of the Massachusetts District say I ought to give more to the above mentioned district. What say you. Glory.

R. B. WHITMORE.

SYRACUSE, Ohio, Aug. 28th, 1882.

Bro. Joseph:—On the 8th of July last, Bro. Gideon Roush, of Morgan Center, came after me with a buggy to go and baptize some there. We could not go at that time on account of sickness in the family, but agreed with him that we would be there by Sunday 16th, he coming with the buggy to meet me; however, during the week Bro. Roush built a dry water dam across the little creek in front of Bro. Hughes' house to catch some water if it would rain. After our arrival there some good friend to the cause (you know) tore the dam out on Saturday night, but, O, how they were disappointed after working so hard in the midnight hour; it did not rain, and we did not lose one drop of water; so on Monday the 17th, Bro. Roush and myself went to the creek in the morning to see for a place to baptize in; we dug a hole where the dam was torn out, Bro. Roush and a friend to the cause doing the work, and I looking on; and in the afternoon I baptized three, Bro. Calvin Hughes and his estimable wife, and a daughter-in-law of Bro. Roush's, who lost her husband a short time before, of small pox. It was a hard trial to Bro. Roush; he lost three of his children at the same time, one twenty-three, one fourteen, and one five years old. The Lord bless him and the Saints of Morgan, is my prayer.

Yours in the hope of eternal life,

Bro. Joseph:—As we can not have the Elders of the Church come and administer the ordinance of the God, I desire an interest in your prayers, that God may give me health and strength to be about my duties that are required of me. My health has been poor for a long time.

Your sister in the true faith,

JANET STRANG.

SHENANDOAH, Iowa,
August 29th, 1882.

Bro. Joseph:—We have just closed one of the largest conferences ever held in our district. The work here is progressing, there is a good interest all over this part of the country where the work has been opened. I have spent the whole of my time since the Conference at Independence in preaching the word; have preached about eighty discourses, baptized eighteen persons, and have had many calls that have not been able to fill. We need good efficient laborers. It seems to me that the Church should speak, and adopt some system of missionary work, so that all our districts can be worked up, and the Saints kept in a proper condition. The worst difficulty is that those who are able financially, to spend their time, don't seem willing to do so, and those that are willing that are not financially able, can not; therefore, the work is languishing. There is but very little local labor being done through the district as far as I can see, yet there is a great demand for it. I believe, that did every Saint understand what his duty was, in regard to free will offerings, &c., that they would be willing to do; but as the adage is, "what is every body's business is no body's business," so that many of our best laborers are compelled to quit the field for want of temporal support. I believe that if the General Conference would district our county, throwing several districts together forming a local mission, then appoint some one or ones whom that mission would have confidence in, to spend the whole of his time, and then so arrange the finances that it would pass through the hands of the Bishop or his agents, it would then be satisfactory. And still further, in the selection of our ministry let such ones be appointed as would be competent for the particular class of work they are called to perform; for many have attempted to labor, and have failed because they were not in the right place. I might write very lengthy upon these points and what is needed among the Saints, but will close, and hope the few suggestions offered will call the attention of some of our wiser men, to look after the interests of our local matters, for therein is the strength of the Church

Yours for the cause of truth,

THREE RIVERS, Jackson Co., Miss.,
August 22d, 1882.

Bro. Joseph:—I have had but little experience in this work, and in this little I have heard some testimonies and have borne testimonies; but the most of them, (my own not excepted) were borne on the strength of the gifts to other people. But on meditating on the subject, I find that the gifts are not a proper test, even when received by ourselves. For the devil can speak in tongues and bring as it were fire down from heaven to deceive man. I have no doubt but what spiritualists can bear as strong a testimony to spiritualism as some can to Mormonism, and I fear that some Elders are trying to be a witness for Jesus on the strength of the signs following. Now, to be a witness for Jesus I believe that the witness should know God and Jesus Christ whom he has sent. Then how are we to know him? By signs? No. For the signs are to follow the believer, not the believer the signs; for if we take the signs for a test, then we are following signs. Here is what I call a proper test, 1 John 5:10. "He that believeth on the Son of God has the witness in himself; and hereby we do know that we know him, (not by signs), when we keep his commandments. He that sayeth he knoweth him and keepeth not his commandments is a liar; and he that sayeth he abideth in him ought to walk even as he walked," 2:3, 6. I am an Elder but not a witness, for I have not sought to increase my brothers goods, as I have my own; and if I said that I knew him and did not love my neighbor as myself, I would lie.

J. B. PORTER.

OMAHA Medical College, Neb.,
August 17th, 1882.

Bro. Joseph:—I send you a copy of the Nebraskans, hoping you will accept the same. I will remain at the Omaha Medical College till March, 1883, then I hope to sound the tocsin of the coming Master. But to tell you the truth, I am not idle at the present time; I have many opportunities to advance the gospel, and especially on the laying on of hands. They say to me, "What use have you for doctors and why are you here?" I tell them, that I may perfect myself in the knowledge of anatomy, physiology and chemistry, and with pathology, that I may know men in health and in disease; that I may be the better enabled to administer those things that God has created for the use of man; these only do the Saints of God believe in, so that we are opposed to minerals as medicines. Minerals never had life and can not sustain life, and if they will make a healthy man sick, what will they do to one that is sick. As God created the plants of the field for the benefit of man, and as man by sin lost the knowledge of their medicinal properties, God in his wisdom gave to man, if he has faith, to be healed by the hands of officers in the Church of God; and if they have not faith, we are to administer mild herbs and mild food. By such reasoning many have a better knowledge of our doctrine.

But I may weary you. So good by, from

R. C. ELVIN.

CORINTH, Ontario, August 26th, 1882.

Bro. Joseph:—I left Walsingham last Monday. Bro. Lake had been with me a few days. He gave the people four glorious sermons. The Spirit of the Master was with him. I had opened up in Charlottsville township, and found good interest and good liberty in speaking to the people. On Sunday the 20th, we held a bush meeting near Bro. R. Fish's, and the people came from all quarters. I endeavored to talk once, and Bro. Lake gave them two good gospel sermons, and a number went away troubled in spirit. I feel quite sure that a little work there (four or five miles east of Walsingham Center) will bring souls into the kingdom. It seemed necessary to leave it for the present. Some in Walsingham Center are persuaded, but they do not want to separate from their companions, so says Madam Rumor. I have bush meeting next Sunday half way there from here. Bro. Lake is north.

In the covenant,

E. H. GURLEY.

EAST TAWAS, Michigan.

Bro. Joseph:—I am preaching every Sunday here, and trying to do the best I can for the advancement of the cause of Christ. I have had the pleasure of leading seven into the waters of baptism since the Michigan District Conference. I sent for Elder John J. Cornish to come and confirm them; he came, and we had a time of rejoicing, and felt strengthened and encouraged on our way. The Saints here are trying to live their religion, and that God may bless them, and establish them in every good work is my prayer. I have a new opening about six miles distant, where I have spoken six times with good liberty; some are investigating who I hope will soon obey. Yet there is some who will not come out to hear, claiming that the "Latter Day Work" is based upon the "Spaulding Romance." Nevertheless, I feel to rejoice to know, that "our gospel is not of man," but is built upon that "Solid Rock," and is winding its way to the dark corners of the earth, and will continue to roll, while proud and haughty monarchs will tremble; and ultimately the Saints join in the glad anthems of praise, saying, "Lo this is our God; we have waited for him, and he will abundantly pardon."

Brother Joseph, my heart is in this great Latter Day Work; and my desire is to live humble before God, so that when Jesus comes I may be enabled to enter in to the "Marriage Supper of the Lamb;" I hope the Saints will pray for me, that I may "grow in grace, and knowledge of the truth, as I advance in years."

Yours in the gospel covenant,

WILLARD J. SMITH.

MONTROSE, Iowa, August 21st, 1882.

Bro. Joseph Smith:—I would like to tell you how thankful the little band of sisters here in this place are for the blessings that we receive from our heavenly Father's hand. Though alone, yet we are not forsaken, the Lord still is merciful; we have not a brother this side of the river that can help us. Bro. Revel is old and feeble, and can not be with us; Bro. Babcock has moved to Nauvoo and is not with us; has not met with the Saints for nearly a year, yet we try to not be discouraged. We have kept up our meetings, and have Sabbath School every Sabbath morning, and prayer meeting Thursday afternoon, around among the sisters at their homes and we feel greatly blessed many time, and know that the Lord is with us to encourage and strengthen, and we feel determined to live faithful and trust the Lord. We have been greatly favored the last three months, through the efforts of our district president, Bro. Durfee, in sending brethren from Burlington to speak words of comfort to us. Bro. Johnson has been here three times, and has done much to cheer and strengthen; also Bro. Wicks has been here twice. We are all thankful to these brethren for their interest manifested for us. Bro. Ruby was with us in Sabbath School last Sunday, but could not stay longer. Bro. Joseph, remember us at Montrose, in your prayers.

Ever praying for the redemption of Zion and that we may be found worthy when the master comes. I remain, RUTH A. TURNER.

Laughter very often shows the bright side of man. It brings out his happier nature, and shows of what sort of stuff he is really made. Somehow we feel as if we never thoroughly know a man until we have heard him laugh. We do not feel "at home" with him till then. We do not mean a mere snigger, but a good, hearty, round laugh. The solemn, sober visage, like a Sunday's dress, tells nothing of the real man. He may be very profound, very cross or very jolly. Let us hear him laugh, and we can decipher him at once, and tell how his heart beats.

It is not known how many persons were smothered to death in the swamp.

FOREIGN NEWS.

Details of the outbreak at the capital of Corea show that the life of the King was spared, but the mob murdered the Queen, her son and his affianced bride, and thirteen Ministers of state. It is said that Japan will exact the most rigid reparation for the outrages, and if this is denied will declare war and avenge the outrage on her representatives with bloody reprisals. A fleet has been dispatched to the port nearest the capital of Corea.

Within twenty days, at Yokohama, there were 572 deaths from cholera. The death rate from the diseases at Tokio is about fifty daily.

The appearance of the dreaded plague in European Russia has caused much alarm.

Calcutta dispatches report fearful rioting between Hindoos and Mohammedans at Salem, India. Men, women and children were beheaded and their corpses thrown into the drinking wells.

The city of Manila, in the Phillipine islands, reports 300 deaths from cholera in a single day.

A Vienna dispatch of the 24th says that in the town of Gross Becskerek, Hungary, over one hundred women were on trial upon the charge of having poisoned their husbands, and that thirty-five had already been found guilty.

WAR IN EGYPT.

Cablegrams of the 27th from Constantinople report the arrest of fifty persons engaged in enlisting men in behalf of the Khedive.

An Alexandria dispatch of the 25th states that some of the leading Arab merchants of Port Said and Damietta had contributed money for the rebel cause and sent out five hundred horses. The orders at Alexandria were not to permit Turkish troops to disembark without the signature of the Military Convention and the issuance of a proclamation by the Sultan denouncing Arabi Pasha as a rebel, but the Turks were unwilling to accept the latter condition. There were rumors that the rebel chieftain had set a price on De Lesseps' head, charging deliberate deceit. General Wolseley, with the first division of infantry, all the cavalry and sixteen guns, attacked the enemy near Mahalla and captured five Krupp guns and seventy-five car loads of provisions.

An Alexandria dispatch of the 23d states that the Austrian gunboat Nautilus, seeing a white flag flying on the forts at Aboukir, sent ashore an officer and twelve men, who were held as prisoners. The Turkish Prime Minister on the 26th informed Lord Dufferin that the Council of Ministers had resolved to publish Arabi Pasha as a rebel and accept the British Military Convention. The attitude of the Russian representatives was still antagonistic to England. The British embassy at Constantinople had received information that Russia was making large purchases of wheat and storing it at Kars. The English opened fire with two heavy guns on Arabi's forces on the left bank of the Mahmoudieh Canal, but the reply was feeble. A party of Bedouins advanced to within a short distance of the Meks forts, but found the position untenable and retired after considerable firing.

THE CONSCIENCE AND FUTURE JUDGMENT.

I sat alone with my conscience,
In a place where time had ceased,
And we talked of my former living
In the land where the years increased.
And I felt I should have to answer
The question it put to me,
And to face the answer and question
Throughout an eternity.
The ghosts of forgotten actions
Came floating before my sight,
And things that I thought were dead things
Were alive with a terrible might.
And the vision of all my past life
Was an awful thing to face,—
Alone with my conscience sitting
In that solemnly silent place.
And I thought of a far-away warning,
Of a sorrow that was to be mine,
In a land that then was the future,
But now is the present time.
And I thought of my former thinking
Of the judgment day to be,
But sitting alone with my conscience
Seemed judgment enough for me.
And I wondered if there was a future
To this land beyond the grave;
But none gave me an answer,
And no one came to save.
Then I felt that the future was present,
And the present would never go by.
For it was but the thought of my past life
Grown into eternity.
Then I woke from my timely dreaming,
And the vision passed away,
And I knew the far-away warning
Was a warning of yesterday.
And I pray that I may not forget it,
In this land before the grave,
That I may not cry in the future,
And no one come to save.
And so I have learned a lesson
Which I ought to have known before,
And which, though I learned it dreaming,
I hope to forget no more.
So I sit alone with my conscience
In the place where the years increase,
And I try to remember the future
In the land where time will cease.
And I know of the future judgment,
How dreadful so'er it be,
That to sit alone with my conscience
Will be judgment enough for me.

Baptism.

"THE baptism of John, was it from heaven or of men?"

This question is being argued by a great number of those who profess to be followers of Christ, and some who profess to be followers of John the Baptist. It seems to be as puzzling for them to answer as it was those wise and learned ones who professed to serve God, when asked this same question by Jesus eighteen hundred years ago.

We deem the correct answer to this question of the greatest importance, for as there is but one baptism, to be accepted by those who are the followers of Christ the one Lord, a knowledge of what that baptism is will be the means of leading us to obey that which God has instituted for us to obey. If obeying God's commandments is the means of pleasing God and receiving blessings from him, we must have a right understanding of what to obey; and if John's baptism is from heaven, we will be forced to the conclusion that it is the one baptism referred to, which we should believe, being the same conclusion the chief priests, scribes, and elders came to as they reasoned together, if they had said it was from heaven. If it is of men, which a number of the wise and learned of the doctors of divinity have concluded, then we must look to some other source for the one true baptism referred to. But we shall endeavor to present evidences of its heavenly appointment, and the reasons why we should obey it.

John the Baptist was a man sent from God (St. John 1: 6) with an especial message, and upon an especial mission, as prophesied of about seven hundred years before his coming by the prophet Esaias. This mission was to prepare the way of Lord, make his paths straight. If he fulfilled his mission, which we have no reason to doubt but what he did, then that which was done by him must have been from heaven to have been the way of the Lord. The whole mission of this man was to make straight the ways of the Lord. His whole missionary life was spent in preaching and administering the ordinance of baptism and of teaching that the Lord should come. Hence the way of the Lord must have been that which he fulfilled, and from heaven.

Zacharias was a priest after the order of Aaron, in which office he was administering when the angel announced the coming of this messenger, at whose birth many should rejoice (St. Luke 1: 14). Elizabeth, his wife, was also a descendant of Aaron (St. Luke 1: 5). Both of which were righteous (St. Luke 1: 6). These persons were certainly fit means through whom should come the long promised messenger to announce and introduce to the world the Messiah. They both being descendants of Aaron, and righteous, would give him the lineal right to officiate in the priest's office after the order of the Aaronic Priesthood, which priesthood was to remain with him, Aaron, and his seed. As all priests after the order of Aaron were not qualified to administer till at the age of thirty, so he did not commence his mission to act in the name of the Lord till at the age of thirty. He was a man fully qualified to act in the office he did, having the priesthood of Aaron by lineal right, being of the proper age, and, best of all, having the word of the Lord, which he came preaching (Luke 3: 2, 3)

We now notice the word preached, how it was accepted, and how we may be sure of its origin. "And he came into all the country about Jordan, preaching the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins; and as is recorded in the first chapter and first verse of Mark, it is "the beginning of the gospel of Jesus Christ the Son of God." Then if the gospel is of heaven, the baptism of John must necessarily be, as it is part of that gospel—the beginning. No one will doubt for one moment, but what the gospel is from heaven, hence how can they doubt about the baptism of John.

After John had prepared the way, the Lord himself, who was the originator of the way prepared, or else it would not be way of the Lord, came to be an ensample of those who should be his followers, by accepting and obeying the way he had planned for the followers to accept and obey. As a shepherd goeth before his sheep, so Christ our Shepherd has gone before his sheep, hath entered in by the door which the porter openeth to him and now says: Come, follow me.

Jesus came to John for the express purpose of being baptized of him; not because it was a Jewish ordinance, but that he might fulfill righteousness, which it became him to fulfill, as he himself says. And after fulfilling this righteous act and coming up out of the water, the Spirit of God acknowledged the righteousness of it by descending upon him in the form of a dove, and God, by his voice from the heavens, declares his pleasure in the obedience of his Son to the act.

If the fulfilling this act of righteousness, the baptism of John, became the Son of God to fulfill, it certainly will become all who desire to be like Him, righteous, to fulfill, and if it was righteousness that they fulfilled, it was a part of the gospel, for therein is the righteousness of God revealed from faith to faith."—Rom. 1: 17. And inasmuch as the gospel is from heaven, so also is all its parts, hence the baptism of John is from Heaven. The righteousness of God is revealed in the gospel, and as all righteousness looks down from Heaven, so to determine the origin of any ordinance we must determine whether it is a righteous ordinance, which after this is determined, we can readily answer. If righteous, from Heaven, and necessary for us to obey to please God and enjoy His blessings; if not righteous, of men or Satan, and not necessary to be obeyed; unless we do it to please the originators, which when we are doing thus we are not pleasing God, because we can not serve God and mammon.

This answers then this question, which has puzzled many of the wise and learned of our day; but need not, unless they are as the divines (?) of old, afraid to say of Heaven, as it would minister to their own condemnation.

"To the law and to the testimony." The testimony is conclusive as to John's authority to act in the name of the Lord, and to the heavenly origin of the message he brought.

Righteousness tendeth to life, and as life is that for which we all are striving, obedience to this ordinance, and all other righteous ordinances will bring us the boon for which we pray so much—Everlasting Life.

May God aid His creatures to understand the plain provisions devised by Him for eternal welfare, and have submissive hearts that they can say, like their Savior in the past, "It becometh us to fulfill all righteousness." And may His blessing attend this that it may aid some to a better understanding of their duties, and to Him be all the praise, henceforth and forever. Amen.

XENIA, Neb., August 15th, 1882.

Running in Debt.

I DWELL on this point, for I would deter others from entering that place of torment. Half the young men in this country, with many old enough to know better, would go into business—that is, into debt—to-morrow, if they could. Most poor men are so ignorant as to envy the merchant or manufacturer, whose life is an incessant struggle with pecuniary difficulties, who is driven to constant "shinning," and who, from month to month, barely evades the insolvency which sooner or later overtakes most men in business; so that it has been computed that but one man in twenty of them achieve a pecuniary success. For my own part I would rather be a convict in a state prison, a slave in a rice swamp, than to pass through life under the harrow of debt. Let no man misjudge himself unfortunate or poor, so long as he has the full use of his limbs and faculties, and is substantially free from debt. Hunger, cold, rags, hard work, contempt, suspicion, unjust reproach, are disagreeable, but debt is infinitely worse than them all. And if it had pleased God to spare either or all my sons to be the support of my declining years, the lesson which I should most earnestly seek to impress upon them is, "never run in debt." Avoid pecuniary obligations as you would pestilence or famine. If you have but fifty cents, and can get no more for a week, buy a peck of corn, parch it and live on it, rather than owe a dollar! Of course I know that some men must do business that involves a risk, and must give notes or other obligations, and I do not consider him in debt who can lay his hands directly on the means of paying, at some little sacrifice, all he owes; I speak of real debt—that which involves risk or sacrifice on one side, obligation and dependence on the other—and say from all such, let every youth humbly pray God to preserve him evermore.

Authority and Order.

To the Editor:—In the Herald for the 15th inst., I find an article entitled "False Prophets," which leads me to offer a few facts and reflections in hopes of benefitting those interested in the matters involved, and I write more especially for those who believe in the ministerial mission of Joseph Smith, the Seer.

Nothing more clearly reveals God in nature than the orderly, systematic manner in which all things in the material world are governed. Immutable law controls the movements of the atom and marks the pathway of the planets. The same laws which govern our physical world, govern all others of the same order. Revelation, reason, and the scientist, all agree in this. It is by virtue of this that we have such perfect order, and such essential harmony in the works of nature. All the works of nature are within the domain, and under the indispensable rule of arbitrary law, and the result is concord and unity. In view of this a wise one has said, "Order is heaven's first law;" but we may say it is rather the result of heaven's law.

In reasoning "from Nature up to Nature's God," we can only conclude He wills that law shall likewise control in intellectual, and moral, and spiritual affairs, and that there should be order and harmony in these departments also. It is true we may look for variety in the works of God, but not for contrariety; we may look for consistency and agreement, but not for confusion and contradiction. Paul says, "God is not the author of confusion, but of peace, as in all churches of the saints." 1 Cor. 14:33. The Lord gave a specific law for the government of Israel, which was binding upon them till it was repealed and superceded by the commandments of Christ, and then "the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus" (Rom. 8:2) was binding upon all to whom it was sent, and it was so exacting and authoritative, that "every soul which will not hear, * * * shall be destroyed from among the people." (Acts 3:23).

The Church of Jesus Christ, organized by Joseph Smith, Oliver Cowdery and others, April 6th, 1830, by virtue of special commandments, is based and buided upon the claim, that in fulfillment of prophecy the Lord restored the gospel by the ministrations of an angel, (Rev. 14:6, 7), and founded his kingdom predicted by Daniel (Dan. 2:44, with Rev. Oct., 1831, Doc. and Cov.), and gave to the Church laws and covenants by which its ministry and membership should be guided and governed until Christ should come in person "and subdue all things unto himself." (Doc. and Cov. 41:1, 2, with 58:5).

The Lord said to the Saints, Dec. 27th, 1832: "And they who are not sanctified through the law which I have given unto you, even the law of Christ, must inherit another kingdom," (than the celestial). Doc. and Cov. 85:5. Referring to some items of that law we may learn who, and who only, has the authority to teach and govern, and who only is called of God and has authority to build up Christ's church on earth.

"Again I say unto you that it shall not be given to any one to go forth to preach my gospel, or to build up my church, except he be ordained by some one who hath authority, and it is known to the church that he has authority, and has been regularly ordained by the heads of the church. And again, the elders, priests and teachers of this church shall teach the principles of my gospel which are in the Bible and Book of Mormon, in the which is the fullness of the gospel; and they shall observe the covenants and church articles to do them, and these shall be their teachings, as they shall be directed by the Spirit; and the Spirit shall be given unto you by the prayer of faith, and if ye receive not the Spirit ye shall not teach."—Doc. and Cov. 42:4, 5.

From this the Saints should learn the order of Christ's church in respect to ministerial authority, and learn to not trust as teachers in the things of the kingdom those not regularly called, ordained and sent as the law provides.

Another item of law essential to the peace, safety, and good order of Christ's church is found in revelation, February, 1831, Doc. and Cov., section 43:

"O hearken, ye elders of my church, and give an ear to the words which I shall speak unto you; for behold, verily, verily I say unto you, that ye have received a commandment for a law unto my church, through him whom I have appointed unto you, to receive commandments and revelations from my hand. And this ye shall know assuredly, that there is none other appointed unto you to receive commandments and revelations until he be taken, if he abide in me. But verily, verily I say unto you, that none else shall be appointed unto this gift except it be through him, for if it be taken from him he shall not have power, except to appoint another in his stead; and this shall be a law unto you, that ye receive not the teachings of any that shall come before you as revelations, or commandments; and this I give unto you, that you may not be deceived, that you may know they are not of me. For verily I say unto you, that he that is ordained of me, shall come in at the gate and be ordained as I have told you before, to teach those revelations which you have received, and shall receive through him whom I have appointed. And now behold, I give unto you a commandment, that when ye are assembled together, ye shall instruct and edify each other, that he may know how to act and direct my church, how to act upon the points of my law and commandments, which I have given; and thus ye shall become instructed in the law of my church, and be sanctified by that which ye have received, and ye shall bind yourselves to act in all holiness before me, that inasmuch as ye do this, glory shall be added to the kingdom which ye have received. Inasmuch as ye do it not, it shall be taken, even that which ye have received. Purge ye out the iniquity which is among you; sanctify yourselves before me, and if ye desire the glories of the kingdom, appoint ye my servant Joseph Smith, Jr., and uphold him before me by the prayer of faith. And again, I say unto you, that if ye desire the mysteries of the kingdom, provide for him food and raiment and whatsoever thing he needeth to accomplish the work, wherewith I have commanded him; and if ye do it not, he shall remain unto them that have received him, that I may reserve unto myself a pure people before me."

The foregoing contains important points to be carefully considered by the reader.

(1). The "law" to the Church was given of God through Joseph the Seer. (2). None other was appointed "to receive commandments and revelations" for the Church, "until he be taken (die) if he abide in me" (Christ). (3). "None else shall be appointed unto this gift (to receive commandments and revelations for a law to the Church) except it be through him, (Joseph the Seer). (4). "This shall be a law unto you," (the church), and, (5), the purpose of this "law" is "ye (the church) receive not the teachings of any (not thus appointed) that shall come before you as revelations or commandments;" and, (6), the further purpose of this "law" is, "that you may not be deceived, that you may know that they are not of me."

It is stated, moreover, that "he that is ordained of" God, "shall come in at the gate, (repentance and baptism, 2 Nephi 13:2, 4), and be ordained as I have told you before, (D. c. and Cov. 42:4, with sec. 17:16, 17, and sec. 43:2), to teach those revelations which you have received and shall receive through him whom I have appointed."

Such is the plain, consistent, and irrevocable law to all the Saints. Had it been carefully heeded, the Saints when considering the question as to who were prophets and authorized teachers, would not have been deceived; for unless authority could be traced regularly and lawfully back to Joseph the Seer, those claiming to be ministers for Christ must be rejected. It does not signify that miracles and signs follow those who do not, and can not, trace their authority to "the heads of the Church." The law of the Church is imperative, and the regular order of church authority is indispensable. They are the safeguards heaven has given the Church, and they must be carefully observed and honored.

The Lord has "hedged in" his Saints with law, and doctrine, and principle, and spiritual light, and power; but when the Saints permit any one to "break down the hedge," they may not complain if they become a spoil and a prey. Jesus, the Apostles, and Joseph the Seer, have predicted "perilous times" for the Saints in this age, and have warned the Saints. Jesus says, "He that treasureth up my word, shall not be deceived." Matt. 24th chapter, Inspired Translation. To conclude, the reader may examine Deut. 13:1-4:

"If there arise among you a prophet, or a dreamer of dreams, and giveth thee a sign or a wonder, and the sign or the wonder come to pass, whereof he spake unto thee, saying, Let us go after other gods, which thou hast not known, and let us serve them; thou shalt not hearken unto the words of that prophet, or that dreamer of dreams; for the Lord your God proveth you, to know whether ye love the Lord your God with all your heart and with all your soul. Ye shall walk after the Lord your God, and fear him, and keep his commandments, and obey his voice, and ye shall serve him, and cleave unto him."

Every Day Thoughts.

AH, how sad and vain a thing is regret. When too late, some past wrong-doing will burden the memory, and the bitter truth we tried to veil, even from our own hearts, is revealed in all its undisguise. Who has not to repent some slight, thoughtless omission of duty or kindness toward those whom they love? What even are regrets compared with the anguish of feeling of having parted from a friend—perhaps from our best beloved—with unkind and cruel words? It may have been those words were uttered carelessly, lightly, as the wild and wanton breeze sweeps by; but they leave a pain, as the breeze leaves some scattered rose-leaves to mark its track. Or it may have been they were purposely spoken, prompted by pride and passion and imagined wrong. Such has been an episode in many a life. The cause we know not, any more than that of the little fragment from which I quote, whose actors and whose story are alike unknown. But what a fitting place and time was that for such a parting!

By the seething main,
While the dark wrack drives overhead.

And one is drifted out into the mist and storm—the other left to mourn the embittered past, pleading from the far spirit-land for that forgiveness earth cannot afford.

A Few Words to the Young.

Bro. Joseph Smith, while preaching not long since made this remark, "The time is coming when there will be a call for men to labor in this cause with power, men of moral strength and courage, to withstand the adversary in the great work before them."

As I pondered the sentence over in my mind, I asked myself this question, will the rising generation of young men in the Church furnish men for this work? Are we fitting ourselves by deeds of morality and self-denial, and purity and strength of character to be those strong workmen of God.

My dear young brethren and sisters, as I try to realize the beauty and glory of the great work in which we are engaged, I can see that I come far short of my duties, in many respects. I believe there is enough to be found in the gospel that we have obeyed to furnish us with all the pleasure and enjoyment that we should desire. I also believe that it is not the mission of the gospel to detract in the least degree from the real pleasure of living; but that it rather increases the pleasure of living, and makes life more desirable, from the fact that it does, or should take away the fear of death, and make us feel that let come what will, we are safe if we keep the laws and commandments of God.

In the Scriptures, now open before me I read, "Rejoice, Oh young man in thy youth, and let thy heart cheer thee in the days of thy youth, and walk in the ways of thine heart, and in the light of thine eyes, but know this, that for all these things, God will bring thee into judgment."—Ecl. 9:9. These words, my dear young friends, ought to make us feel that we should be careful how we run after the vain and foolish things of the world, the pride of the eye and the lusts of the flesh.

I think sometimes that we as young Saints, do not feel the dignity and the responsibility that we should feel, the responsibility that rests upon us as those who must certainly follow in the footsteps of our fathers and mothers, in carrying on the great work of the latter days.

I see the old, gray headed veterans passing away, one by one, and I know that the time is soon coming for some of us to step into the ranks of the great army. Are we preparing ourselves to fill those places is the question that every young man and woman, every boy and girl in the Church should ask themselves, and think upon it seriously, and with the thought begin to act, praying to know our duties, and then to do them with all our might and strength.

Of course we can not all be ministers of the word, but we can all be defenders of the truth. We can defend it by our daily walk and conversation, as we are commanded to do, and by our actions more especially, can we defend it. The young man in the Church who allows himself to partake of the habits of his associates in the world, such as smoking, chewing, dancing, and many other things so common among young men of the world, does not defend the work, from the fact that they receive no light from him, as they see him only doing what they do, and if there is any good in what he professes, they think that he has failed to receive it. The gospel should come to us as a shield against such things, and our actions should show that it has been such to us. We are told to be "diligent in business, fervent in prayer, serving the Lord." To be diligent in business we must be careful and economical, not allowing ourselves to be overcome by foolish habits and appetites, which cost us not only money and time, but health and strength also. We ought to keep our bodies in subjection to the will of God in all things, and if we do these we will find that we are not taking away or losing any of the real pleasure of life.

I turn to the Scriptures and read again, "Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth, while the evil days come not nor the years draw nigh when thou shalt say I have no pleasure in them."

If we could look ahead, down along the journey of life, and know that we could live to the allotted age of man we might be safe to forget the future for a few years and plunge into the pleasures of the world for a season, but we can not. We see the babes, the youth, the middle aged stricken down and laid away; and we know that our time may soon come. This fact then should make us feel that we ought to be about our Master's work, living soberly and cheerfully with some little thought to the future.

I can see many encouraging things in the gospel, not only does the Spirit of the Master testify to the work, but there is evidence upon every hand showing that the work is true; then let us study to be workmen approved of God, rightly dividing the word of truth to ourselves and to others.

I know that there are many in the Church who can do this subject justice, and I send these few lines that some one may take it up that can say more upon the subject, and because I feel it to be a matter of the greatest importance, and if I shall be the means of making one of the children of God strive more earnestly to keep their covenant with him, I shall be satisfied, whatever may be thought of my effort.

Your brother in the truth,

LLEWELLYN.

PEACE PLEDGE.

"Believing all war to be inconsistent with the spirit of Christianity, and destructive of the best interests of mankind, I hereby pledge myself never to enlist or enter into any army or navy, or to yield any voluntary support or sanction to the preparation for or prosecution of any war by whomsoever, or for whatsoever purpose declared or waged."

The above was written in 1846, by Elihu Burritt, and signed by many thousand persons in the United States and Great Britain.

Israel's Fall and Rise.

"I beseech you, therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service."—Rom. 12:1.

IN ORDER to fully appreciate this statement by our beloved brother Paul, it is necessary to observe the argument on which it is predicated. The word "therefore" has reference to some previous remark, and if you will read the preceding chapter you will see why he thus exhorts us to consecrate our lives entire unto God. If Paul's brethren according to the flesh [on account of whom he could almost wish himself accursed from Christ, if so they might be saved] were all condemned to eternal woe as many teach, then it hardly seems reasonable that he could beseech us "by the mercies of God," neither would one think that he could close with these wonderful words, "O, the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God!"—Rom. 11:33. No, Paul did not understand that his kinsmen were eternally lost, for he says: "God hath not cast away [utterly forsaken] his people which he foreknew."—Verse 2. We fear that the teaching of many who profess to believe the Apostle's writings are widely at variance with him. Let us see. "Have they [Israel] stumbled that they should fall? God forbid: but rather through their fall [or stumbling] salvation is come unto the Gentiles. For if the casting away of them be the reconciling of the world, what shall the receiving of them [Israel] be, but life from the dead?"—Verses 11, 15. That the return of Israel at some time to a position of favor is here implied, we think none can deny; further, that they have not since they stumbled received favor, and hence this opportunity must be future; and if Paul supports this, then we are willing to abide by it. Strange as it may seem he does so teach. Observe that after Israel stumbled, God turns his direct attention to the Gentiles, and ever since, now over eighteen hundred years, he has been showing them more or less favor. But there is a time when he will again bless Israel, for "they also, if they abide not still in unbelief, shall be grafted in; for God is able to graff them in again."—Verse 23. So he affirms that God will so do when He says: "I would not, brethren, that ye should be ignorant of this mystery, lest ye should be wise in your own conceits; that blindness in part is happened to Israel, until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in. And so all Israel shall be saved, as it is written. * * * For this is my covenant unto them, when I shall take away their sins."—Verses 25, 27. That Paul had a glimpse of the plan of the ages is evident. He recognized the gospel age as the time for the "fulness of the Gentiles to come in," and then introduces a new age of glory when "There shall come out of Sion the Deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob." Also, "Simeon hath declared how God at the first did visit the Gentiles to take out of them a people for his [Christ's] name. * * * As it is written: After this [after God accomplishes his work among the Gentiles] I will return, and will build again the tabernacle of David, which is fallen down * * * and I will set it up;" and then he states why God does thus: "That the residue [balance] of men might seek after the Lord."—Acts 15:14, 17. What a glorious plan! What wonders God will yet work. First he saves a people from among the Gentiles; then at the end of this dispensation he will restore and bless Israel, and all this is done that the balance of men "might seek after the Lord." But can we wonder at this, when "God hath concluded them all [Jews and Gentiles] in unbelief, that he might have mercy upon all."—Rom. 8:32. "Oh give thanks unto the Lord, for his mercy endureth forever."

Gospel Antiquity.

Now this is a noted index pointing to the time of the organization of this new government, but we notice that the baptism connected with this primary work was that of repentance (reformation) and not in the name of Jesus. But seeing the prophets from the beginning have so plainly pointed to the beginning of this work, together with the nature of the preparation, the time, and the place, with the messenger sent before to prepare the way. And now with the understanding that this is the kingdom which the God of heaven has revealed that his purpose is to gather all both in heaven and in earth into, let me ask in all candor, who is there with a full comprehension of these promises that can believe for one moment other than that this is purely the beginning of this work. And seeing that the prophetic eye has pierced the future from the beginning to the end, with a view of the full scope of human redemption. Let me ask who is there that can not predicate faith here. At this time and place we have found new developments, which have met the prophetic and prospective specifications of the prophets, of Jesus, and the New Testament writers. Many things which are new in point of fact, but old in prophecy. The descent of the Spirit, the speaking in tongues by illiterate Galileans, the resurrection of Jesus to the right hand on the throne are old in prophecy, but new in fact. We have heard from Jer. 31:31, with whom God would make this covenant. We have seen the figure of the marred vessel being made again another vessel. Have seen the preparatory work and partial reformation. Have heard of a remnant taking root downward and bearing fruit upward, and going out of Jerusalem in righteousness. (2 Kings 19:30, 31). Also of the promise—"I will pour upon the house of David and the inhabitants of Jerusalem of my Spirit, and they shall look upon me whom they have pierced, and they shall mourn. In that day there shall be a fountain opened to the house of David, and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem, for sin and for uncleanness" (Zachariah 12:10, and 13:1). Have seen the peculiar people, Jews, devout men out of every nation under heaven. We can also see the prepared material at the appointed place. (120 in number, Acts 1:15). They have received word from the heavens, have received power and authority. We have heard that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem. That the law should go forth from Zion and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem. The testator is not only dead but the parties concerned, both the executors and the parties to whom the will is sent are all present at the place appointed. On asking what they must do in order to this inheritance, Peter opens the will and says: "Repent and be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins and you shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit." From the foregoing it is now evident that these and other items that have been adduced are to the point and have here at the time and place had their literal fulfillment, (or fullness, God having sent forth his Son we are told in the fullness of time). And it is further evident that the matter contained herein and set forth by these witnesses, is new, that it here had its origin and that it never was created in like form either there or anywhere else, at that time, before or since, and no likelihood of its ever being again.

1st. We have looked at this organization and the covenant constituting the same as a prospective thing as foreseen by the prophetic eye. 2d. In its preparatory, or infantile state. 3d. We shall now look at it in a growing and partial complete state. As the covenant was now a reality, there could and did three thousand of them accept of it. As the church was now organized the Lord added daily to it such as should be saved. This is the first adding mentioned and the first time the word church occurs as a descriptive noun. Jesus used the words,—"Tell it to the church" in delineating to his disciples as to what the law should be, but it was after this that he told them "On this rock I will build my church." It was the evidence adduced by Peter relative to the fact that Jesus was the Christ,—the one whom their beloved king David had foreseen always before his face that he (Jesus) would be raised up to sit on the throne, that awakened the inmost soul of the three thousand, and sunk to oblivion the foundation of their former hope. But the Spirit of God did not only show to them the intended terminus of the old covenant in that the 'promised seed' had come and removed the law out of the way—nailing it to his cross, and the promise—"I will raise up a Lord unto thee," being attested by his resurrection from the dead, but also brought life and immortality to light, beyond the dark shaded tomb, thus disclosing to their view a better basis for faith and hope than that of flesh and the decalogue in stone, viz: the writing, or establishing in their hearts the reality of the Sonship of the crucified one, in connection with the terms of reconciliation to him made known to them by them to whom the terms of reconciliation had been committed. With them the darkness of shadow and type have fled away, the anti-type has come in plainness, a flood of light has broken in upon the darkened horizon; they discover that things are having their fulness; the true light, the fulness of light has come, and the way is lighted up with many a heavenly ray,—the Son of Righteousness has arisen with healing in his wings. Now it will be remembered that Jesus told them, Acts 1:8, "Ye shall receive power after the Holy Ghost is come upon you, and ye shall be witnesses for me, (1st) in Jerusalem, (2d) and in all Judea, (3d) and in Samaria, (4th) and unto the uttermost part of the earth." Let these prophetic statements, in their order, of our Savior just before he ascended the heavens, make an impress upon our minds. For the order, with the matter presented, are necessary in point of evidence. We have seen them nobly testify to the divinity of Jesus, according to order, 1st, in Jerusalem, immediately after they had received the power promised. Now we have heard the prediction relative to the mission of these twelve men chosen from the twelve tribes, coming off from the twelve sons; have seen them gather to the peculiar place, seen them tarry to be endowed from on high, seen them receive it, and heard the testimony, at the time and place, according to the prophetic order. From this testimony comes the law. And let him who will speak other than according to this, I shall have reason to question the light that is in him. Darkness and fog with the superstition thereof must and will pass away. And the honest whose inward parts have been lifted up with the revelations of God's spirit will love the harmonious teaching of God's word better than that of a popular position, regardless of all the sneering and snarling, presumptuous Judaized superstition. Now I shall not attempt to follow the Apostles to see that this mission was filled by them in every point, but will save space by giving reference to the following: Acts 4:33; 5:32; 10:41; 22:15; 26:16; 1 Peter 5:1; Rev. 20:4. There are many other places where they established the divinity of their Lord by their drawings from the prophets and by their testimony of his resurrection being seen of them and others; even of above five hundred brethren at one time, connected with the Lord, working with them with signs following. Paul determined that he would know nothing but Christ and him crucified. The Eunuch was admitted to baptism on believing that the one spoken of by the prophet was the Christ. This preaching the death, burial and resurrection of Christ seems to have been the theme of address. These items seem to be the underlying, fundamental principles of the gospel. Paul calls them the gospel. He says, "Moreover, brethren, I declare unto you the gospel which I preached unto you, for I delivered unto you first of all. How that Christ died for our sins, that he was buried, and that he rose again the third day, according to the Scripture."

Now it is evident that no one can obey doctrine but they can believe doctrine; can not obey facts but can believe them. Hence we may believe these facts, or doctrine. But the apostle gives us a thought which is very complete, viz. "Though you were the servants of sin, you have obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine first delivered you, being then made free from sin you become the servants of righteousness." Now according to Paul, he had first of all delivered unto them the gospel that is the death, burial and resurrection of Christ, and they had obeyed from the heart the form of doctrine first delivered them, being then made free from sin. Now the form is certainly seen in the following. A death to a sinful life, a burial in baptism and a resurrection to a new life. "If ye then be risen with Christ," &c. How risen? "Buried with him in baptism wherein also ye are risen with him through the faith in the operation of God that raised him from the dead." "Buried with him by baptism that like as Christ was raised up by the glory of the Father, even so also we should rise to walk in newness of life; for if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection." "If we be dead with Christ we believe also that we shall live with him." "Ye are dead and your life is hid with Christ in God." This is the fountain for sin and uncleanness, as foreseen by the prophets, which separates from a life of sin to a life of righteousness. Now the prophet did not speak of this fountain as though it was already opened in some part of the world, or as though it had been opened at some time prior to this; but he speaks of it in a way that we may know both the time and the place of its opening as referred to before this. Please examine it carefully, with all that bears upon the subject of its opening. It is certainly apparent that it never existed, anywhere on the earth, prior to the time of its opening, as foreseen by the prophet, viz: the beginning of the new age or world. Where can we read of any one standing up as a witness testifying to the death, burial and resurrection by which things "he is declared to be the Son of God" with power, and consequently the "Savior of all men," not in the Old Scriptures, but in the New, beginning with the new age after the facts had occurred. Now it is plain that immortality, or the way was made manifest by his death, burial and resurrection. Now it is hardly logical to think that any one could die, or be dead with him when he was not yet dead, neither of rising, or living a new life with him when he had not risen and taken the new life. After Christ came we get new expressions which are not found previous: i.e., "begotten with the word of truth;" "born, (or delivered), not of blood, nor of the will of man, but by the word of the living God, not of corruptible seed;" "new birth," "new life," "new born babes," "new creatures," "new man," "children of God in consequence of the new and living way," which are found only in the new covenant under the new mediator, who is the head of the new vessel, or kingdom, that Jeremiah saw was to be made. We get also the words, religion, meaning to bind back, or fast; and regeneration, to generate again. Strange that none of these phrases occur in the old Scriptures prior to the induction of the kingdom of Christ. Strange indeed that men will believe, though man or angel should preach that a system existed which must contain these principles, when the terms which give expression to them are not brought into use for hundreds of years after. Who then will presume to say that this new vessel existed before the time as before shown, before the reformation under the auspices of the messenger sent from God, who according to Zachariah was foreseen by all the holy prophets since the world began. Think of it you that will. Who can believe that the gospel of the new covenant was published for obedience of faith before the formation of the new vessel, before Christ became the mediator of that covenant, or had given the right to any to officiate in his name or by his authority even before he had attained to the right himself. The manner of his receiving this right was by a lawful process as foreshown; and as to the way in which he was prepared for it is seen in the following. "Sacrifices and offerings thou wouldst not, but a body hast thou prepared me." "Inasmuch as the children were partakers of flesh and blood, it became him to take part of the same, that he might be a faithful and merciful high priest." That he might be able to succor them that are tempted, he was tempted in all points like as we are, sin excepted. That he might be a high priest who could be touched (as Paul says) with the feelings of our infirmities. It became him who is the author of our salvation, to be made perfect through suffering. Wherefore the Holy Ghost is a witness also to us, for after he had said before, this is the covenant that I will make with them after those days, when I shall take away their sins, I will put my law into their hearts and in their minds will I write them. "Having therefore boldness brethren to enter into the holiest, by the blood of Jesus by a new and living way which he hath consecrated for us through the veil, that is to say through the flesh, and having a high priest over the house of God, let us draw near with a true heart in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled [consecrated] from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water." Heb. 10:15-22.

By what was an entrance by this new and living way effected? Was it not done by the shedding of the blood of Jesus, or was it before he had taken this blood? Was the way consecrated through the flesh? or was it consecrated (set apart) before he had taken flesh? Heb. 10:20. "The High Priest entered once a year into the holiest of holies, or inner tabernacle and made an offering for himself and the sins of the people, the Holy Ghost this signifying that the way into the holiest of holies was not yet made manifest." Heb. 9:8. Is this true? Or was the way made manifest before there was such a thing as a tabernacle? Has not Jesus become the great High Priest over this tabernacle? Has he not entered into the holiest of holies, there making intercession for those of his own house? Has he not made one offering that has originated and given efficacy to that fountain for sin and uncleanness?

When we contemplate upon the subject of the remedial system as revealed and recorded in the books, as it was effected and brought about by the great architecture, we can behold the work of an allwise and loving hand meting out a preparation in fitness and adaptation, one step upon another (the covenants) and none of them lost. Thus bringing about a scheme of redemption and salvation, adapted to the various stages of man's alienation and depravity. Looking by the light of the marginal reading of the king's translation—"Dying thou shalt die, instead of the very day, thou shalt die" It was probably not immediately after the first transgression that man drank of the most bitter and degrading consequences of sin. But that the wickedness of the wicked grew worse and worse, the separation (death) becoming broader and broader until the great king of the earth was compelled to withdraw his presence until man had lost the knowledge of him. The father's eating of the sour grape and putting the children's teeth on edge for the worse, until the separation was final so far as a relation to the Creator was concerned—they were broken off. The knowledge of God being so far lost that in his mercy he chose a mediator (one between) to reveal himself again to his fallen and depraved beings, and through him instituted a system of religion (meaning to bind back or fast) a system of regeneration that man might generate again. That man might be begotten with the word of truth and born again, not of corruptible seed but by the word of God which liveth and abideth forever. And thus be re-instated into the favor of God, becoming a new creature, a child of God. And now the adage of the fathers eating the sour grape would be used no more in Israel, but on the other hand it would be expected that as the fathers would continue to eat of the sweet grape the children's teeth would be put on edge for that which was better. So that it would not be expected that by the first obedience of man that he would attain to the highest state of perfection, but by applying himself to the remedial system until he would be transformed, and delivered from a state of corruptibility into incorruptibility; into the image and the presence of him who created him. But go back again. Moses, a man of God, is called. He is a type of Christ. He says a prophet shall the Lord your God raise up like unto me, Him shall you hear in all things. He made known his mission among the people as having authority by signs and wonders. He promises the children of Israel an earthly Canaan. As a leader and deliverer he leads them out of a state of bondage and oppression, through the baptismal waters of the sea and cloud, at which time they sing the songs of deliverance. These waters are a separation from their former bondage. But Christ the anti type promised a heavenly Canaan making known his power and calling by mighty signs and wonders. He leads the children of men from the bondage and oppression in sin through the separating waters of baptism, at which time they sing their songs of deliverance from their former bondage. This is a complete type, as Moses was commanded to make all things according to the pattern shown him in the Mount, but is by no means the gospel, or any part of it, only in type. And so we find the tabernacle with its contents and services refiguring, or typifying in all his work a coming spiritual tabernacle that of a temple not made with hands. "Ye are the temple of God,"—"ye are builded together, as lively stones, for an habitation of God through the spirit."

We are told that Moses was faithful in all his house. I suppose he made all things according to the pattern shown him in the mount. But Paul tells us that these patterns of heavenly things were not the exact image of the things themselves. He tells us further that if these patterns were not sanctified without the shedding of blood, how much more the heavenly things themselves. In the typical services the order was, 1st, The shedding of the blood of the victim; 2d, The priest carried it into the inner tabernacle, or holiest of holies; 3d, Offered it as a sacrifice; 4th, The removal of sin for one year, but a remembrance of the sin was kept and the offering for them was repeated annually, which service could be done only by the high priest. In the anti type the services were somewhat different; not the exact image, or likeness of the patterns. The order was, 1st, Shedding the blood of the victim; (Christ); 2d, Having shed his own blood he arose from the dead and ascended into the holiest of holies, into the presence of the most high on his throne; 3d, Offered his own body a living sacrifice, hence a new and living way; 4th, Having made one offering forever sat down at the right hand of the Father. And if the type is right sin would be removed here, and according to Paul (Rom. 5:7-9), the type was right. He tells us that he (Jesus) learned obedience by the things he suffered, and being made perfect he became the author of eternal salvation. Again we learn, (Heb. 2:10), "It became him (God) in bringing many sons to glory to make the captain of our salvation perfect through suffering. Paul (Heb. 8:6) in contrasting the new covenant with the old, speaking of Jesus, says, "But now hath he obtained a more excellent ministry by how much also he is the mediator of a better covenant, which was established upon better promises." The point is—now hath he obtained—is the mediator of a better covenant. I wonder if any one had obtained this ministry before he did. I wonder who was the mediator of this new covenant before he attained to it by suffering in the flesh, and thus establishing his divinity, which alone could lay the foundation for such thing.

But there is another effort to link back by this Judaizing philosophy; because Paul says, "The gospel is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." From this they will presume to say that God's power is the gospel, and as it has always existed that therefore the gospel has. Now Paul says he is ready to preach it, he is not ashamed of it for the reason that it is God's means of saving men. Is God's power the remedial system? Is it the terms of reconciliation? A drowning man will grab at a straw. Would you go out and preach God's power for the gospel, or would you preach the initiatory steps into an existing authentic covenant. The power that created the earth is in no sense the gospel, and yet it is God's power. But say they, "Therein is the righteousness of God revealed, from faith to faith; and Noah was a preacher of righteousness, therefore he must have preached the gospel. Another straw. What constitutes righteousness in all ages of the world? Would it be right for any one to make a brazen serpent and hoist it on a pole for people to look at in order to be healed? Would it be right now to tell no man that Jesus is the Christ. This is a commandment of Jesus. There are two reasons why any thing may be right. It is natural for me to love my mother and father and all good people that love me, but it is not natural to love my enemies; hence it is commanded by our Savior and is right! Now the one is in nature right of itself, but the other is only right by virtue of the commandment. It is right to obey the commandments of God that are to us. Whatever were the commands of God to Noah constituted the righteousness for him to preach. But there was no baptism there, but there was a type of it, but it was like the children of Israel passing through the Red Sea dry shod. It was a dry one, for though the water was above and below their boat, it was no doubt dry inside. Yet Peter says, (1st Peter 3:21), speaking of this separation, "The like figure whereunto even baptism doth also now save us, (not the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but the answer of a good conscience towards God) by the resurrection of Jesus Christ." There would be no need now of raising a brazen serpent since the thing which it forefigured has transpired; neither any need of the services of the scapegoat, or of the slaying of a lamb, because the thing forefigured has transpired. It would be no need of God commanding a thing now that would be a figure of the separation that is effected by the waters of baptism. But it was needful in the days of Moses, and in the days of Noah, and in my honest opinion in the sight of God and all men, it was needful from the time that it was said the seed of the woman shall bruise the serpent's head, until the seed came in the fullness of time when figures, shadows and types had their fullness in reality and were no longer needed. The true light in its fullness having come. The seed having come and opened the fountain in reality—the Son of Righteousness having arisen with healing in his wings for all who had looked to him, connected with their obedience to whatever commandments of God that may have constituted the righteousness of God to them.

We are taught that, "By the law sin was made manifest. That sin is the transgression of law, "That whatsoever things the law sayeth it sayeth to them that are under the law." And that until the law sin was in the world, but that sin is not imputed when there is no law. Rom. 5:13, 14. "For where no law is there is no transgression." Rom. 4:15. Again Heb. 9:15: "And for this cause he is the mediator of the new testament (covenant), that by means of death, for the redemption of the transgressions that were under the first testament, (covenant), they which are called might receive the promise of eternal inheritance."

We learn from Paul that death reigned from Adam to Moses, even over them that had not sinned after the similitude of Adam's transgression. This is because that death had passed upon all. But he tells us that sin is not imputed where there is no law, but that where there is a law that sin might appear, that there might be a recovering of sin because of transgression then there would be a remembrance of the transgression that would have to be atoned for. Hence Christ's death alone could atone for the sins under the law in the past. God having winked at because of ignorance (no law that sin might appear) and through his forbearance passed by until the time come when he commandeth all men every where to repent. But it was impossible for the blood of bulls and goats to atone for sin for every priest standeth daily ministering and offering often-times the same sacrifice, which can never take away sins. Paul says if there had been a law that could have given life, there would have been no place found for the second. Hence where there was a law there was also a remembrance of the transgressions kept until the true anti-type come, whose precious blood alone could atone for sin, and instituted the law of life, the remedial system in its fullness, which was perfect in its application. Hence the injunction, "Be ye perfect even as your heavenly father is perfect." But mark you, this injunction was never given till the perfect way had been brought in, the fountain for sin and uncleanness opened. But do not forget that though this fountain was opened to the house of Israel, the house of Judah, and the inhabitants of Jerusalem, that it was also to all nations—according to the promise of the seed. One Lord, one faith and one baptism for all.

Prayer.

PRAYER, to be heard, must be earnest, full of trust, simple, constant, and free from cant. God is neither deaf nor far off, that men should thunder their petitions in his ear, or cry as if their Father were heartless, exacting and unkind. He waits to be gracious. He bids his children ask, and promises blessing in answer to the soul's uplifted quest. If any one must needs get into an agony of words, and writhe and bellow his petitions, the very noise would indicate a lack of faith. Sincere faith but whispers, and the answer comes. The full soul but looks and longs for good, and the benediction meets the upward glance. The believer who feels that he is near to his Father will not speak to him in boisterous tones, as if he were calling upon one afar off. The child who sits upon the mother's knee, can ask for best gifts out of that mother's hand, by the merest breath of a broken sentence; a sob is eloquent; a tear touches the source of all love: a hungry glance opens the inmost treasury of food. And thus God hears his children. It is not bombast, or penance, or bodily suffering, but simple belief, uttered in the nearest, easiest form of words, which our Heavenly Father hears as prayer. We make plea for the utmost earnestness, for the soul's inmost, deepest sense of want, but we find no warrant in Scripture for contortions of body, extravagancies of speech, for shouts and yells of asking, as if there were divine stubbornness to be overcome. While there may be all night wrestling with our own unbelief, and tears and pain at our own lack of love for God, there is no Gospel reason for turning a prayer meeting into a Babel of distracting sounds, as if the dear Father were dead!

An Ancient Legend.

TO THE student of ancient history, it is interesting to observe the prognostics of the Nativity found among others than the inspired writers. The great Budha, nine hundred and sixty years before the coming of Christ, foretold that at the end of a thousand years, a greater than he would appear among men. An ancient Indian poem predicts that the Vishnu Yesu shall be born of a Virgin, and shall purge the world of its sin and woe. The wonderful eulogium of Virgil, translated by Pope is well known. Cicero confessed that he looked for a great Master; Socrates, that he expected a Divine Teacher. Confucius, who taught the Chinese of earthly duties, nearly six hundred years before Christ, told them to await the coming of a great Saint out of the West to teach them of heavenly matters.

Let us listen this Christmas Eve to a legend of Cathay, connected with the Virgin Mother and her Holy Child. Those who want the true story can find it in the first and second chapters of the book of Matthew; the fact that the Christian religion does find a place in the historic lore of China is all that is claimed for the present.

The birth of Christ took place about the middle of the Han Dynasty, a family which reigned in China for four hundred years. Ching Tai occupied the royal palace; he was an impulsive, easy ruler, not without amiable traits, but destitute of executive ability, weak-minded and fickle in character. He had been but a few years upon the throne, when he became passionately enamored of Chaou Tsae, a beautiful actress; the profession was held in China in the same contempt that it was regarded by the ancient Romans, or indeed by the modern Puritans. The Emperor, nothing daunted, raised his beautiful inamorata to the rank of Empress, and raised her father Chaou Ling to a high position among his counsellors; in so doing he gave offense to all his nobles, for by the laws of China, Chaou Ling was excluded from competing in the examinations for rank by his profession, and although a very learned man, they could not forgive him for raising in spite of prejudice, and contrary to custom.

About six years before the birth of Christ, a remarkable phenomena appeared in the skies, which is thus recorded in the annals of China:

'On the eighth day of the fourth moon, of the thirty-eighth year of the reign of Ching Tai, a bright light appeared in the south-west, out-shining the sun; the walls of the king's palace shone like burnished silver; men hid their faces for blindness of eye-sight. When the illumination faded, its last expiring glow left the mark of the cross on the high dome of the palace. The king, astonished and alarmed, sent for all the sages, who were skilled in foretelling events from the signs in the heavens. Chaou Ling being interrogated, showed him the ancient books where even Kung-fut-tze (Confucius) had predicted great wonders in the skies when the Holy One should come out of the West. Whereat the king determined to send an embassy of wise men toward the direction where the wondrous light had been last seen.'

Here the ancient chronicle makes a pause, and the next record we have of this era, is found in the travels of Chaou Ling, who assumed the garb of a wandering physician, and set out for the country of Ta-Thsin; a general term signifying Western Asia, and also applied to the Persian Empire by the Chinese historians. The good doctor left his daughter, the fair empress, with many evil forebodings, although the Emperor had sealed to him this promise before his departure:

If I forget the daughter of Chaou Ling during thy absence, may Shang-te (Heaven) forget to give me the power to draw my breath.'

Chaou Ling was absent two years, and brought to the Celestial Empire the first authentic account of the Nativity. We give it as translated for us by a learned Chinese scholar, sometime ago

'O lo ho created man pure and holy, fitted for happiness and peace, but Sa Thau contending with the Eternal, propagated lies, and corrupted the work of the great First Cause. In pity for their fallen condition Mi chi ho, the son of the father, offered to go himself, and teach them the truth, and in order to understand all their wants and woes, he said:—

"I will take upon me their nature, and thus realize their temptations from infancy to manhood."

'Far in the West, at Ta-Thsin, lived a daughter of royal lineage; Sa-Thau attempted to destroy her because he saw that she would be the Virgin mother of the one who should defeat his designs, but the dragon King-Tsing was sent to protect her, and when she trembled at his presence, he announced to her the honor that awaited her, then she fled from him in shame, and for many days never stirred from her mother's side. An honorable man had long loved her, and, over-awed by the wonderful things told her in dreams, she became his bride.

'Poverty and the loss of parents marked her bridal year, and she brought forth her first-born son in the cattle's stall; but three kings of Ta-Thsin were there with me to welcome the royal stranger. Thy presents, oh! Ching-Tai! Son of Heaven! were given to the Holy Mother, when I heard a whisper in my ear,—

"Thou hast wasted thy spices and treasures, Chaou-Ling; this is no more than a hundred other babes."

"I looked around, but there was none to be seen; I went to my chamber in sorrow and anxiety.

"I sought the three kings of Ta-Thsin; they could not be found.

"As I was pondering in sadness over these things again the same voice whispered in my ear,—

"They have discovered the fraud and gone from hence."

"Because I feared to return to your majesty, I again sought the mother, this time in anger and vexation, but when I approached that pure and beautiful presence, the same wondrous light shone from her golden hair, as once enveloped the palace of your majesty. I fell on my face blinded by the vision; when the darkness relieved me, I came to myself; the Virgin had been all unconscious of her dazzling appearance, and was playing with the Holy Child.

"I approached him, when, as if to confirm my dawning faith, his angelic lips parted, he spake, and repeated that divine rule of Confucius, only rendered into an affirmative.

"Confucius taught us:

"Do not unto others what you would not they should do to you."

"The Holy Child said:

"Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so unto them."

"By this miracle I knew that this was he of whom Confucius spake, and that the evil one had whispered to me. I hastened home, that this Celestial Land might welcome the great Mi-ci ho (Messiah!) and send an embassy to bring him to your royal presence."

Here the venerable doctor's journal came to a sudden close.

Several well-known historians of China speak of his cruelty to his former Empress by the fickle Ching Tai, and there is reason to believe that the oath, by which he confirmed his promise to Chaou Ling, was literally fulfilled, in his sudden death, which took place (reconciling the different styles of chronology), in the same month in which the Babe was born in Bethlehem.

It was not until the day of St. Thomas that Christianity was introduced into the Eastern countries, by way of India, where tradition tells us that that apostle suffered martyrdom on a Christmas day.

Subsequently, the Nestorian Church sent missionaries into the Chinese Empire; and for a period of two hundred years succeeding A. D. 630, there is good historical evidence that the "Luminous Religion," as it was called, was highly honored in some parts of China. Indeed, we have an account of one Emperor, Tai Tsoung, A. D. 764, who encouraged the celebration of our festival of Christmas.

APOSTACY.

WHAT is an apostate?

"One who denies the faith."

If a man believes fully in the mission of Joseph Smith, (including the call of the Angel and the Book of Mormon), as that mission developed from 1827 to 1844, having received what was publicly taught, both by preaching and in the published journals and papers of the Church, is he therefore an apostate?

If a man accepts the gospel as stated in the Bible, New Testament, Book of Mormon and the Doctrine and Covenants, and believes that therein is the fulness of the gospel contained, and that upon obedience to that gospel he may have and ensure eternal life, happiness and peace, is he therefore an apostate?

If a man believe in God, the Father, in Christ Jesus the Son, the Redeemer, Mediator and Savior of mankind, is he for that reason an apostate?

If a man believe that in the Bible and Book of Mormon is the word of God revealed, and that in the Doctrine and Covenants is contained revelations of Jesus Christ to the Church, and church articles and covenants duly authorized by the will of God and the voice of the Church, is he for that belief an apostate?

If a man believes that faith in God and Christ are needful to stir the human heart to action in obedience to the will of God, and that baptism in water is essential to a remission of sins and an entrance into the Church of Christ upon earth, is he for this an apostate?

If a man believe in the laying on of hands for confirmation in the Church and the conferring of the Holy Ghost, is he for that an apostate?

If a man believe that there are various gifts of great worth to man by which Jesus Christ is revealed as the Son of God, and by which men exercise great faith, obtain knowledge, act according to wisdom, receive dreams, visions and revelations, prophecy, speak in tongues, interpret, discern spirits, both of God, men, and devils, and that these gifts are bestowed according to the will and wisdom of Christ and the Holy Ghost, is he an apostate?

If a man believe that by and by, when the set time of God, the Father, has fully come, the dead will rise from their graves, every one in his order, and eternal life in glory be granted to them who have received and obeyed the gospel and been faithful in life, or in the prison house; and a fearful banishment into darkness, gloom and death, be visited upon the wicked and unfaithful, is he an apostate?

If a man believe that all men must be judged by God's eternal judgment and rewarded or punished for his deeds as they may have been bad or good, and that not one may escape this judgment, is he an apostate?

We are interested in knowing, for we believe all this, and some folks call us apostate. And there be some who nominally hold with us who say that Bro. Joseph "believes and teaches things contrary to the three books."

No one of our brethren has yet named to us the particular point of faith fully taught and accepted in the Martyr's day and shown us wherein our avowed teaching is a departure from the faith.

Our Utah friends aver that because we deny their doctrine of polygamy and whatever hinges necessarily thereon, we are apostate; but we have shown, and they have admitted, that said doctrine was not in the original faith, and is therefore not the faith. Joseph, the Martyr, was a General in Israel, and we are not even a soldier in military usages; but the tactics of Vaubun and Hardee are not parts of the gospel, and therefore not the faith. The legends and traditions of the elders seem to point out a temporal kingdom; we hold allegiance to one king only; but the traditions of the elders are not parts of the gospel, and therefore not the faith.

Church government is both by command and necessity; where one leaves off the other continues, and whatever it demands and the wisdom of the day points out is law, the same as if commanded, as the elders are to do "whatever church business is necessary to be done at the time," and are to see that the "law is kept." But this is not new theory, for it has prevailed ever since Moses appointed judges at the suggestion of Jethro, or Paul "ordained elders in every city."

The rejection of the Church and the subsequent and necessary reorganization of the old and new element into the Church created new issues, so far as local work was concerned, and these new issues have many of them been in government and policy, not specifically named, yet provided for in the law. In them we could not apostatize, for the difference between the new and the old is in method, not in object or purpose. The building up of a spiritual Zion, having for its fundamental beliefs what was enumerated at the beginning of this article, was the early avowal of the elders of the Church; was the object pursued by preachers and people; that when Jesus came to reign as King of Kings and Lord of Lords, he would find many subjects already prepared and living according to the rules of his spiritual government, the kingdom to come. We believe in this object and purpose, and have therefore not apostatized from the faith in that regard.

"But," says one, "there are theories and doctrines put forth in the HERALD that do not agree with the books, and Bro. Joseph allows them, and of course believes and endorses them." This is partly true in word, but in intention is wholly false. That there may have been some things set forth in the HERALD that may have been out of harmony with the books may be true; and that if there be such, Bro. Joseph has allowed them is also true; but that he believed and endorsed them, or does believe and endorse them is wholly false. The HERALD is the property of the Church, materials, office, moral prestige and all, every man, woman and child in the Church has as much money interest in the HERALD as a church publication as the editor has; and the editor is not responsible for the views and opinions expressed, in the articles and communications published in it any more than is any other owner of the paper. What he as editor writes, that he is responsible for, and his views and opinions are his own, the same as the views and opinions of every other person belong to them. If in the editorial department what is contrary to the books is taught, the editor is subject to be dealt with for irregular, false or pernicious teaching, as the case may be; but before he is condemned he should be tried.

We have avowed our acceptance of and belief in the principles of faith set forth by Joseph the Seer in 1844, published in that year by John Wentworth in the Democrat, at Chicago, Illinois, over the signature of Joseph Smith; and also published in the History of Religious Denominations in the United States, by I. Daniel Rupp, and printed in 1844, the article containing a brief history of the Latter Day Saints and their creed furnished to that author by Joseph Smith, as a reputable and responsible member of that church founded in 1830; therefore, when, where, and how are we apostate?

"PROVIDE things honest in the sight of all men."

This must have been written with a purpose. It has a co-relative in the statement: "They have loved darkness rather than light, because their deeds were evil."

It must be clear to every thinker that the ways among men by which they supply themselves with the necessary "things that perish with the using," may be classified as honest, doubtful, and dishonest. The apostle does not tell us just what ways are doubtful, or what dishonest, but contents himself with charging the disciples and the Church to provide honest things. To him the word was not of doubtful, or double meaning. Nor does he flatter the reader that lawful things are always honest, for he says "all things are lawful; but, (the force of that but), all things are not expedient."

It is among these lawful things possibly, that some of the doubtful ones are found; but for Saints, things lawful, but of doubtful honesty must not be done.

Under the old English Common Law, it is scarcely possible to find an excuse for a dishonest action; and it is not until intermeddling minds have tinkered and doctored the fundamental principles into statutory enactments to provide for special contingencies that doubtful or dishonest things could become lawful. And it is evident that the apostle, acquainted with the written law, meant to establish clearly a difference between things permissible under the law, and the honest things of the unwritten, but not untaught law of the Spirit of Life in Christ.

It is also clear that Saints now must have and use those things which sustain the life and comfort of the body, which perishes with the use of the things that perish. He also recognizes that the estimate that men place upon honest and dishonest practices was in many respects a good and a correct one; and what was honest in the sight of all men, was that which the Saints might use, or provide.

We have in times past wondered why such advice as the apostle gives in the text was ever written; and why was it not permissible for the Lord's people (whoever they may be) to take whatever might be necessary for the maintenance of themselves and those dependent upon them, as if it belonged to the Lord, and was intended for their use. But the abominable misconstruction of a commandment given to the Saints of later times respecting providing for the Lord's people, and a clearer search into the Word led us to conclude that all provision for the temporal necessities of the people of God must be in accordance with "His will," and that will is too certainly shown to permit the remotest sanction to theft, or dishonesty in any sense. Hence, "Thou shalt not steal," is as much declared to be God's will touching property rights, as "Thou shalt not kill," is of personal right to life. From this the apostle does not diverge when he charges respecting providing "things honest in the sight of all men."

David eat of the shew bread, which was not lawful according to the code of usage of the temple and the priests; and yet the hungry necessity of the man knew no law. So of the disciples, who passing through the field plucked the wheat ears and rubbing out the grain in their hands did eat them. They not only disregarded the right of property in the ownership of the field, but in the eyes of the law desecrated the Sabbath; yet the unwritten code of necessity did not condemn them, even in the eyes of those who sought occasion against them.

But things right and honest under stress of dire need, can not when done, furnish the precedent, or the law by which men may provide for the things that perish. Solomon's, "Go to the ant, thou sluggard," was intended to serve the same grand purpose. It was to teach the prescience of necessity, the provision against the chances of dire need. It was that the Summer time of labor, must not be squandered in idleness, or sport; but that the careful foresight of thrifty husbandry might "lay by in store" that which in the time of need, would remove by the presence of a healthful supply the temptation to "break through and steal." The apostle's injunction goes no farther. The precept is similar. In one the wisdom, gift of God, enforced by practical illustration in the provident ways of the ant, the way to do; but the apostle, on higher plane, utters the warning cry, a patient heed to which gives the Saint his clue to the methods of his labor, and at the same time removes him from the number of them, who walking disorderly bring reproach upon the name of the Church and fellow Saints.

We are frequently asked questions respecting ways and means, personal conduct, methods and modes of business, &c. It is not reasonable to expect us to answer all of them, for obvious reasons. And some of them are of such a nature that the answer should be suggested by the question. Is it an honest way? Is it honest in the sight of all men? Is it lawful? Is it dishonest? Here are the ways to test the matter. If it is a dishonest way in the sight of men it must not be followed. If it is lawful, but of doubtful honesty, it must not be adopted. If it is lawful and honest, there can be no good reason why a Saint may not follow it as well as any other person.

In this line of thought it would be easy for some to sit down and write out a long list of honest ways of providing for things needed. And it is possible that were they to do so, they would to a very grave extent be governed by the circumstances surrounding them. These circumstances would, unconsciously to themselves point out this, or that occupation as proper; this, or that as improper; and that too without being tell why, except that men so regarded them.

Farming, one of the oldest and most honored occupations, is rightly considered an honest occupation. The "ring, straked and speckled" of the flock that fell to Jacob as his portion of the yearly increase of his Master's cattle, were lawfully his; the method of obtaining them of doubtful honesty. The imposture of Leah for Rachel, was a lawful transaction according to the custom of the country; but was not an honest keeping of faith between the parties to the contract. The farmer who proposes to gain his bread honestly, must make up his mind that he can neither cheat God, nor nature. He must sow and plant in the season thereof. If he regardeth not the seasons he shall not reap. Seed time and harvest are assured unto him; but neither seed nor the grain after harvest are his, except he has by care and toil secured them. He must honestly toil if he would honestly garner. He can not cheat nature. The use of the soil is his by decree of God; and the earth yields to him if at all according to his honest and fair dealing and her mood. If he gives to her sparingly of labor and seed, she retaliates with weeds and scant supplies. If he deals honestly and candidly with her in seed and bestows his labor in like manner, she returns to him lavishly, sometimes bounteously; but in no case will she grant liberally to grudging seeding or niggardly labor. She is herself honest, has provided honest ways known to all who study her, and will not brook dishonest dealing without direct response and sure rebuke.

Commerce likewise is the thrifty interchange of things valuable for other things of use, or of standard and universal worth. Her ways are "of old." He who would thrive in them must remember that for those who abide in them success is certain; but he who deals treacherously in them must inevitably fall. "He that hasteth to become rich, shall scarcely be innocent." "Honesty is the best policy." Here all can see that he who by commerce would provide things honest must buy and sell by just weights and measures. No doubtful ways will do.

The question, Will the ways advised by the Apostle be suitable to the Saints of the Reorganization in their present condition? Are the principles couched in the text and other texts used in this article applicable to the necessities of the spiritual life of the Saints of the present day, under the gospel as restored by the angel's message to Joseph Smith? If so, what effect will the conduct of those who receive that gospel and live in accord with those principles have upon the peoples by whom they are surrounded; and how will the work entrusted to them and which they are trying to do be affected by a continued and persistent continuing in them.

We believe that in an honest exhibition of gospel growth and development, the "providing for things honest in the sight of all men," is clearly identified with the Savior's policy, "Render therefore unto Cæsar the things that be Cæsar's, and unto God the things that be His." And whether the Reorganization as a body, or its members as individuals, survive and live or fail will be largely due to the determinate judgment to be finally passed on their works; if they have been honest the verdict will be favorable; if not, let the darkness ensue.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Is it right for Sisters in Sister's Meeting to exercise the gifts, such as prophecy, tongues and interpretation, no Elder being present to judge of the same?

Yes, if it is done unto edifying.

MR. CHARLES J. STRANG, Lansing, of Michigan, is in receipt of letters from different persons, who have written him touching the matters recited by him in an article published by us not long since. One of these is from one well prepared to know, and in it occurs the following: "The postscript you speak of was at the bottom of the so-called appointment, as I saw the letter several times and know of a fact that it was so."

Among other things mentioned by Mr. Strang are the following:

"In the minutes of a conference held at Kirtland, Ohio, commencing August 7th, 1846, and published in the Voree Herald, September, of the same year, the following resolution was adopted:

"Resolved unanimously, That we utterly disclaim the whole system of polygamy known as the spiritual wife system, lately set up in Nauvoo, by the apostates who claim the authority there, and will neither practice such things, nor hold fellowship with those that teach or practice such things."

In an article published in Zion's Revelle, for November, 1846, entitled, "The Pseudo Mormon Clique," there is a protest against being classed with the followers of Pres. B. Young, which protest is signed by many of the leading men then at Voree, and of the church there, passages of which evidently show what the prevailing sentiment of the people at that time was respecting polygamy. For instance:

"Some who are guilty of lascivious and abominable iniquities, such as teaching and practicing the 'spiritual wife doctrine,' which things we hate and totally disallow, have been engaged in writing and publishing many false and pernicious statements relative to James J. Strang, John C. Bennett, and others, in regard to the establishment of secret associations and secret societies in the church at Voree. * * * We shall strictly adhere to primitive Mormonism, and the practice and teaching of virtue, righteousness, and all the Christian duties as taught in the word of God. * * * We have been compelled to excommunicate and disfellowship, and consign to the buffetings of Satan, several rebellious, corrupt, and licentious spirits. * * * We have the most implicit confidence in James J. Strang."

In the same paper, for December, 1846, John Greenhow, writing to the church at Philadelphia, says:

"Some of the abominable pseudos have been guilty of the most damnable heresy in inculcating the principles of the 'spiritual wife doctrine;' but thank God, it has been consumed like stubble before the devouring flames, and its base and licentious advocates have been dispersed like chaff before the wind, or dew before the sun. Brothers Strang and Bennett have been sustained by the entire officary of the church, and all the truly virtuous members, in putting down this vile and abominable doctrine, and I can assure you that while they stand at the helm, you need have no fears; but let your prayers in all confidence daily come up before God in their behalf; and I only call on you to be as strenuous in putting down filthy rumors as they are in trampling on iniquity, and be assured that the church will some day be presented faultless before the Lamb."

These extracts from the current publications of the time show that although barely three years later, Mr. Strang and some others gave way to the temptation offered in the doctrine of polygamy, these same men knew and recognized the fact that there was nothing in primitive Mormonism that warranted the departure; and that under whatever guise it appeared at the first, it was contrary then to the Truth as it was known to be in Christ, and cursings and disaster were certain to follow. Mr. Greenhow rightly instructed the church at Philadelphia, that if iniquity (and spiritual wifery was named as iniquitous), was put away the church would "some day be presented faultless before the Lamb."

Those among us who fancy that we are moving too slow, may console themselves with the thought that we are not going to the devil on the polygamous route at any rate.

We are greatly under obligation to Mr. Charles J. Strang for the foregoing extracts, and permission to use them, kindly given.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Bro. William Blair wrote very cheerily from Willow Creek, Montana, September 5th, see letter in correspondence column.

Bro. Joseph R. Lambert is building at Lamoni. So is Bro. A. Seely, from Macedonia, Iowa.

A Methodist conference was held at Edenville, for the week ending August 30th, and during its session Bro. Joseph F. McDowell accepted a challenge to discuss the following: "Resolved, That all so-called Evangelical churches constitute the Christian Church, as represented in the New Testament Scriptures." It is expected that Elder Smays, of the M. E. Church will be their champion.

Bro. Norman W. Smith, of Hopkins, Michigan, has arrived at Lamoni, and is building him a home there.

Bro. St. Clair and son who started from Independence, August 28th, on foot for Lamoni and Conference, put in an appearance on the 7th of September, well, but foot sore.

Bro. Winthrop H. Blair, of Amboy, Illinois, arrived at Lamoni, September 14th, with his household goods to stay with the dwellers in the regions round about.

The branch at Plano, which we left last Fall weakened by the loss of so many friends to the Master, is bravely standing for the Truth. Sr. Sarah Cramer, visiting at Lamoni, reports activity in the affairs of the branch, by pretty much all the members. We are pleased with this. We left them a little in debt as a branch, but learn that they are out of debt and have something in the treasury, Pro bono publico.

Wood at Lamoni, for fuel, is from $3 50 to $4 00 per cord delivered; soft coal $3 30 to $4 50 per ton; and hard coal $10 87 to $11.57, owing to quality and size.

Bro. W. W. Blair wrote from Malad City, Idaho. He proposes to make the winter campaign a warm and persistent one, against wrong and error; and is anxious that some of the best workers we have shall be sent to Utah this Fall.

Bro. Glaud Rodger arrived home from California and Nevada, Sept. 14th, well and hearty. He reports a fair condition of health among the Saints on the coast; but not so much spiritual life as could be desired. Hopes of the work in San Francisco and Oakland are fair.

Bro. Alexander McCallum and wife came in to Lamoni, Saturday, September 16th. He reports the burned district of Stewartsville, DeKalb Co., Missouri, where he resides, as being rapidly built up in a better and more substantial manner than it was before the fire. The Saints there under the presidency of Bro. John M. Terry for the English, and Bro. Timme Hinderks for the German speaking portions, are doing all they can to build up the cause. Bro. F. A. Reidel, who removed from New Albany, Indiana, with his German Newspaper, is also trying to do well. Bro. McCallum thinks Bro. Rediel's paper is doing well. We certainly hope so. The readers of the Herald who may be desirous of taking a paper printed in the German language, will do well to send for a specimen copy—and then subscribe.

The British Lion has the Suez Canal, Arabi Bey, and the Greek-Turkish army under its paw; and now, as was the case in the Transvaal, the Kingdom of Cetawyo and everywhere else where her conquering armies have gone. England will dictate terms of commerce and of peace: that is, if the victory said to have been won on the 14th September is as decisive as it is thought to be. It may be possible however that there may be other "dogs of war" to be let slip, that are not in the count at present.

Bro. Eli M. Wildermuth returned home from his field of labor in Missouri, pleased with the improving chances to open doors for preaching, but anxious and troubled about the ways and means of keeping in the field.

Bro. Joseph R. Lambert's house is progressing quite rapidly to date, (Sept. 15th), and if nothing prevents he will get into it by Winter.

Bro. G. F. Weston had reached Allendale on his way from Independence to Conference, September 14th.

Weather at Lamoni, at date, September 18th, is very dry. There has been no rain for weeks.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. Jonas W. Chatburn, of Harlan, Shelby county, Iowa, writes September 6th:

"We are at work building our church; contract let and putting it through in good shape. The brick foundation is all in, will raise in a few days, 26 by 50—16 foot posts; everything to be done in good style. We have a little pride and don't want to be too far behind the others in town. We have got to be saving at this Conference; we expect to have to go down pretty deep for the church,—got to have it now."

Bro. W. R. Calhoun wrote from Cortland, Illinois, lately:

"My faith is still in this great and glorious cause that I embraced nearly forty years ago, (October, A. D., 1843). I am sorely tried and tempted; yet I do not remember that I ever doubted the doctrine. One thing is certain, I do not now doubt it, nor its ultimate results and victory in the least, if I do doubt my own faithfulness and endurance. Know ye, and all the world, that the Book of Mormon and the gospel brought forth with it, are true; and that St. John 7:17, tells the truth; this, whether I stand or fall, I know by the Spirit of Christ, is so. Pray for me, that I may hold out faithful and with you and all the Saints of God win the prize "eternal life."

Bro. W. W. Ray writing from Des Moines, Iowa, September 10th, says:

"Our conference is just past, had a good time. Brn. E. Robinson, and J. F. McDowell were present."

The following is from the Vassar, Michigan, Times, and speaks for itself.

"On account of the efforts of Rev. Edward DeLong, of Reese, a church of Latter Day Saints is about to be organized in Vassar, and already some meetings have been held in the Wilbur house on south Main street. The people of this faith, in reply to queries by our reporter, utterly disclaim being Mormons or believers in polygamy; they believe in a literal, or what might be called the "original" interpretation of the New Testament; and in case of sickness among their members, the apostles of the church are called upon to anoint and pray with the sufferer, and this is held to be efficacious as a cure. The next meeting of this society will be held at the place above designated, Sunday afternoon at three o'clock, and they are anxious to have all people attend who wish to know further of them."

Illinois furnished two instances of the infliction of capital punishment on the 15th. James Tracy was hanged in Chicago for the murder of Policeman John Huebner on the morning of Feb. 3, 1882, and at Metropolis, Illinois, the law's extreme penalty was suffered by Samuel Redden, a negro, who murdered Adolph Zimmerman, a merchant at Mounds Junction, Pulaski County.

The last spike in the railroad which connects Chicago with the Mexican City of Chihuahua was driven on the 16th, by Gov. Tarrazas, of the State of Chihuahua, in the presence of an immense concourse of people. The affair has excited great interest among the Mexicans, who seem to be vastly pleased at being thus brought into intimate trade relations with the powerful Republic of the North.

The steamer Asia, was lost during a gale on Lake Michigan, and about 125 lives were lost; only two persons, a young man and a lady were saved out of all on board. The Asia was a propeller of 350 tons burden, was built in the Welland Canal in 1873. She was a Canadian bottom, and was of that class of propellers known as "canallers." She was sunk last Summer, but was raised and repaired.

While three boys were rowing on the river at Reading, Pa., some one of them threw a lighted cigar into the water, which was thickly covered with benzine from the gasworks. They were quickly enveloped by the flames, and jumped overboard. One had his face and neck badly burned, and may lose his eye sight; the other two were seriously burned.

The ship, Bullion with railroad iron, from Philadelphia, arrived the 17th. On the 29th of August, in latitude 14 degrees 49 minutes north, longitude 111 degrees 41 minutes west, the ship encountered a terrific gale which carried away a portion of its rigging. The vessel shipped several heavy seas and narrowly escaped foundering. The wreck was cleared away, and the vessel managed to reach Cape Flattery, when she was towed in. One seaman fell from the rigging and was instantly killed.

Two freight trains collided in the tunnel three miles west of Kirkwood, on the Missouri Pacific Railway, on the afternoon of the 17th wrecking both trains and slightly injuring a couple of the EGYPTIAN WAR NEWS.

Over eight thousand Arabs were fortifying the city of Salihyeh on the 15th. Large numbers of Bedouins had been seen on the banks of the Suez Canal. Victor de Lesseps reported that General Wolseley accepted for the British Government the responsibility for damage to the traffic of the canal. A body of one hundred English marines raided the villages between Alexander and Meks and arrested all suspicious persons.

Orders had been received at Woolwich, England, to dispatch four thousand more men to Egypt. The Sultan had finally issued a proclamation declaring Arabi Pasha a rebel for disobeying the Khedive and Dervish Pasha, and exhorting all Egyptians to obey the Khedive.

It was announced at Alexandria on the 7th that the Sultan offered Egypt to England two months ago, on the same condition on which she took Cyprus, and that England declined the offer. At Ismailia a general move to the front had been ordered, and a decisive attack on the enemy was soon expected.

Antono Paulo, arrested in Alexandria for complicity in the conspiracy to massacre the Khedive and the Christians, was on the 6th compelled to leave the city. The water of the Ismailia Canal had been rendered unfit for use by the Arabs throwing the carcasses of dead animals into it. The British outposts repulsed the enemy at Kassassin, and a number of Bedouins who attacked a mule train were compelled to retire. Three hundred persons of different nationalities without visible means of livelihood had been sent away from Alexandria by steamer. The Nile had risen very high, and it was reported that part of the enemy's position at Kafr-el Dwar was flooded.

According to the Egyptian correspondent of the London News, Arabi Pasha has an army of 93,100 men, of whom 30,500 are Bedouin Arabs.

Arabi's forces were still busily engaged on the 8th in strengthening the defenses of Tel-el Kebir, whither he had brought all the troops from Cairo, together with the negro regiments and forty guns. A reconnaissance by the British from Kassassin caused a brisk exchange of shots between the opposing forces. The Khedive had issued stringent orders to stop the torturing and ill treatment of prisoners at Alexandria. The fresh-water canal had been cut above Tel-el Kebir, thus flooding the low lands in that section.

Arabi Bey's attack of the English forces near Kassassin on the morning of the 9th was a disastrous move. The British success was complete, the Egyptians leaving two hundred dead on the field, while the English loss was slight. Four Egyptian officers, who surrendered at Ramleh, said that Arabi had but six thousand troops at Kafr-el Dwar. Arabi Pasha was said to have diverted the canal at Ismailia around his intrenchments. A large party of Bedouins approached Meks, and a few succeeded in entering, but were repulsed by the British.

At Alexandria on the 7th the Arab murderer of the Englishmen Dobson and Richardson was publicly hanged in that city by native policemen. Several hundred Europeans witnessed the execution, but the natives were conspicuous by their absence.

An Arab paper published at Beyrout, in Syria, has been suppressed for having published an article against the Christians.

FOREIGN NEWS.

In certain parts of Hungary an anti Jewish agitation having been started, Louis Kossuth, who, in spite of exile, is held in great esteem by his countrymen at home, has expressed himself surprised at the root the agitation has taken. He says agitations of this sort are "nothing but humbug," and are "a trade carried on by certain persons for the purpose of profiting by the passions of the thoughtless and for fishing in troubled waters."

An official report places the number of agrarian outrages in Ireland during the month of August at 165.

An armistice has been concluded between the Greeks and Turks on the frontier of Thessaly.

The Vienna Seed Market estimates that the amount of wheat in Austria and Hungary available for exportation is 13,500,000 centals; of rye, 2,000,000 centals, and of oats 2,500,000 centals.

The British authorities have decided to fortify the port of Aden.

The damage done by the late earthquake at Panama turns out to be greater than at first thought. The loss to that city alone was reported on the 8th to be several hundred thousand dollars, and several persons perished. Other portions of the isthmus were still to be heard from.

Panama experienced another short but sharp shock of earthquake at day break on the 9th. Half the population were sleeping in the square or walking the streets, and some families were encamped on the plain. Traffic on the railway was suspended, as the bridges were out of line.

The number of deaths in the Philippine Islands on the 7th from cholera was 449.

At Winnipeg, Manitoba, on the 8th, two strangers entered the Merchants' Bank, and during the temporary absence of the Teller, secured possession of $10,000 in bills and escaped.

A St Petersburg dispatch of the 8th states that the convicts in the prison of Khokan, Russia, recently revolted, and in the struggle that ensued forty of them were killed.

In 1631 the Lord-Mayor, at the instance of the Privy Council, took a careful census of London. The result showed 130,268 inhabitants. In 1636 what we know collectively as London contained 700,000 inhabitants. Sir William Petty estimated that by 1840 London would contain 10,718,800 souls, but that it would reach its maximum in 1880 and then begin to decline; but, while it has only reached half his estimate, it shows no sign of decline. The population of the city proper has declined 62,000 in twenty years, and is now 20,000 less than in the reign of James I.

Correspondence.

FREMONT, Nebraska, Sept. 7th, 1882.

Bro. Josph:—I pen a few items to you to let it be known that I am still with the armor on, and pealing forth the battle cry. I have labored since I last wrote you for publication in Dodge, Washington, Sarpy and Douglas counties, with what success I will leave others to tell if told, only that I am encouraged by what appears as the outgrowth of my labors. I have baptized four children in Sarpy county since last I wrote, all of which by their own decision expressed a desire to obey their Father in heaven, and I felt that God accepted them as lambs to his fold.

The branches in this the Northern Nebraska District need a revival bad. They all appear as in a sort of stupor as to branch duties, which I will offer the suggestion, that did the Saints live in their families, and attend to all individual and family duties, as God has directed, they would not be thus affected. I only offer this as a suggestion, but if it is received as instruction we know not as we shall object. But while such is the case as to branches I must say that there are many, many, kind hearts among the Saints of the Northern Nebraska District; kinder hearts I do not believe exist anywhere on the face of this broad earth. As a return for their kindness I can but express my sincere thanks and leave with them a God's blessing.

I will have to offer an apology to the parts of Nebraska to which I have been invited especially, for laboring nearly all my-time in the one district as I have, and offer as my excuse that I found more than I could do here, twice over, and I could not feel justified in leaving one part to suffer for want of labor where I was somewhat acquainted with its needs, for another part of the mission, which I knew nothing about. I do not wish the Saints and friends to think for once that I did not think of the other parts of my mission, for such is not the case. My prayers were ever for you, and if I had been as large as my desires to labor were

I would have been all over my mission every day, to have told the gospel story. But I am as I am, and I have endeavored to do that which I felt was for the best, and if I have erred it has been of the head and not of the heart. I go from here on to-morrow to attend the conference of this district, from whence I repair homeward to try and arrange matters so as to attend the coming Semi-Annual Conference.

May God bless all the Saints in this mission and aid them to live more and more in accordance with their professions as children of God. With a prayer for all the laborers for Zion's cause, and that God will call more laborers to aid in reaping the great harvest of souls.

Magnolia, Iowa, Sept. 13th.—I arrived at home after attending the Conference of the Northern Nebraska District on Monday night, and as I had not sent my former letter I felt like adding a few words. The Conference was a success. The District received quite a revival, such a one as I have never experienced its superior in every respect. It was a conference for the people as all expressed themselves well pleased—both Saints and friends. God manifested himself especially in relieving the sick through the prayer of faith and anointing with oil. While there I enjoyed the fellowship of Bro. E. C. Brand, who did much good by his presence and labors. May God add many years yet to his labors is my prayer. I found on my arrival home that God had fulfilled His promised blessings to my family.

Your brother in Christ,

J. F. MINTUN.

WILLOW CREEK, Montana,

September 5th, 1882.

Bro. Joseph Smith—My labors for the past few weeks have been devoted in this territory. The Church is making some progress here, and prospects are encouraging. I spent over two weeks in Deer Lodge Valley, preaching and visiting among the Saints and friends: baptized one, the mother of a large family. Many others are believing. I found a score or more of those who were once united with Joseph Morris, they gave me a respectful hearing, treating me with kindness and attention. They profess faith in the work we are doing, and confidence in your ministerial calling. I respect them—nay more, I esteem them highly. The Lord's Spirit attended me in my labors among them. I called at Glendale, but conditions did not seem to favor my preaching there then; and so, blessing the babies of Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Smith and Bro. and Sister David Terry, passed on to Butte City, where I tarried, briefly, at the busy, but most hospitable home of Bro. and Sr. E. M. Bowen.

My next point was South Boulder, where I remained four days, the guest of Bro. and Sr. James W. Saery, formerly of Petaluma, California. Here I rested, preaching twice on Sunday, August 20th, to small but attentive congregations. After which I went with Elder L. Gaulter to the pleasant home of Bro. and Sr. James Johnson, on upper Willow Creek, and on the next day reached Lower Willow Creek, where the worthy families of Bro. L. Gaulter and James Green welcomed me with genuine Christian kindness. On Sunday, August 27th, held two preaching services, and the Lord blessed with his Spirit the speaker and congregations. Here I, with Elder Gaulter, administered to the sick and afflicted, and immediate healing followed.

On Tuesday, August 29th, Bro. and Sr. Gaulter, their daughter Louise, and myself, went to Reese Creek to attend conference, September 2d and 3d. While at Reese Creek I made my home with Bro. and Sr. John E. Reese. Many who read these lines will remember them. They are sound in the faith, energetic, and fully alive to their duties as Saints. Time has dealt kindly with them, and they are hearty and vigorous in mind and body.

The Reese Creek Branch is in the main an excellent one. Nearly all of its members are willing and anxious to do their part in the upbuilding of the Church, as are nearly all of the Montana Saints. Their religion is to them above all price, and they prove their faith by good works. They have aided liberally in prosecuting the Rocky Mountain Mission in the past.

Our conference on the 2d and 3d inst. was a most excellent one, and was well attended. Elder Gomer Reese makes a prudent and able district president, and though young in years and experience, bids fair to make a prominent minister.

The Church in Montana will soon lose from its number Bro. and Sr. Lewis Gaulter, their daughters Phebe, Lizzie, Emma and Louise, and their sons William and Alexander; also, Bro. and Sr. A. J. Moore, who will move the last of this month to Lamoni, Iowa. We take pleasure in commending them to the Saints in all that region.

I am now on my way to Malad City, Idaho, to attend conference, September 9th and 10th, and hope to reach Salt Lake City by or before the 18th inst.

The past six months have been filled with trial to me, through sickness of and accidents to various members of my family, causing delays, obstructions, fears, and numerous perplexities. But the clouds are passing away, the prospects are more cheering, and we hope our "hour of temptation" will be succeeded by the light and gladness of glorious day. We hope to see the Rocky Mountain Mission make steady and rapid progress under the guiding hand of our Heavenly Father, and to this end we shall both labor and pray.

I must not conclude without mentioning that Bro. James Smart and Sr. Margaret, his wife, who reside near Gallatin City, though not members of the Reorganized Church, are nevertheless in the faith, and are helpers in word and deed. We trust they will not long remain out of "the fold." Many of your readers will remember them.

Very truly,

W. W. BLAIR.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Sept. 19th, 1882.

Bro. Joseph—The work of God is reviving here: we continue to sustain our Sunday evening's preaching, and have an increasing spiritual influence at our Sunday afternoon meeting. Two were baptized lately, and two more will be by Bro. W. Anderson next Sunday. We have occasionally with us Bro. Springer, who is laboring faithfully for the truth. The Saints are all united here in love for the prosperity of the everlasting gospel.

Yours in hope,

WM. STILL

TABOR, Iowa, September 5th, 1882.

Bro. Joseph—I left Ogden, Utah, August 22d, for my home in Iowa, and arrived at Glenwood on the 29th. I met Bro. George Kemp at the depot waiting to drive me to my home, eight miles away. On our arrival there we found loved ones waiting and watching for us; I was pleased to find them pretty well. I left the Saints and friends in Utah, generally well, there were some exceptions, however. After full two years and almost a half, I look back and can see but little effectual work done, yet I leave that field, for a time at least, with the to me pleasing thought, that at the time of doing the labor I did the best according to my judgment; since the work has been done all no doubt can see where it might have been done better. All I can now say is, my work must speak for itself. If in the providence of God we have sowed seeds of kindness that have now, or in a time to come will produce joy and peace, and a hope of salvation, I shall thank the Lord that gave me utterance; if on the other hand I have scattered seeds of bitterness, I shall feel sorry, and pray the good Master to blot it out. During my labors there I met many kind and generous men and women; all have been kind to me; why it is so I can not tell; even the bitterest of opposers have treated me with respect, as a general rule. I have tried to discharge my duty to all according to my limited wisdom and judgment; have compromised no principle, but have tried to be cautious and prompt in planting the work for the best good to the cause we love so dearly. It is in the hands of the Dispenser of all good, and if the work done redounds to the glory of God and honor to his cause, then when he shall reward every man for the work done, if I prove faithful, I will receive a reward that is due.

Wherever I have labored, in Utah, Idaho, or Wyoming, the Saints have all been kind and good to me. I have proved them to be disciples of Christ. I thank the Saints and friends that have so kindly remembered me and mine, and wish especially to thank the sisters and friends of the Salt Lake City Branch, and others, that so generously remembered Sister Anthony. The presents sent, for the sacrifice made, were gratefully received, and accepted by her, and a tribute of thanks returned to the Giver of all good for them that so generously remembered her. The little presents and kindly greetings filled our hearts with joy and gladness. May the Lord abundantly bless them and all that seek to establish peace on earth and good will to men.

In bonds yours,

R. J. ANTHONY.

CARY'S FERRY, Cherokee Nation,

Indian Territory, Sept. 9th, 1882.

Bro. Joseph—It may be I ought to write you a few lines that you may know what I am doing. I left home on the 25th of July and came direct to Cherokee, Kansas, where I tarried, visiting old friends and relatives, among whom I had an enjoyable time, although I sadly missed the dear departed ones that have passed away, but trust to meet them in the mansions that the Master has gone to prepare. I arrived here on the 10th of August; found Bro. Smith and Luff busy. In company with Bro. Heman I visited Bro. and Sr. O. B. Mild, at South West City, where we held five meetings. We continued to labor together till the 4th, when Bro. Heman left for other parts of the mission. I can not say that the prospects look very bright to me here, though I believe with patient and wise labor a good work can be done. The length of my stay here will depend on circumstances; I have set no stakes. I hope the conference will send some one to labor with me; I would like to see a long strong pull made here.

With love to you and all Saints, I remain, your brother in gospel bonds,

GEORGE MONTAGUE.

SKYO, Escambia Co., Ala.,

September 9th, 1882.

Bro. Joseph—Since writing to the Herald I have visited all the branches in the Florida District, and have been assisting the officers in some of them to set their churches in order. Steps are being taken in the right direction, and I think a perceptible improvement can be seen in the district. But we need more local preachers, pastors who shall feed their flocks with knowledge and understanding. What a great field there is for labor to-day, in the Church as well as out of it. Surely the wise shall understand, improve the opportunities, and lay up treasures in heaven.

My health is about the same; it does not improve much; still I am not like Bro. Lambert, in a worse condition than when I entered the mission.

Ever praying for God's people, I remain your brother in Christ,

FRANK P. SCAROLIFF.

SAVANNAH, Wayne Co., N. Y.,

September 15th, 1882.

Bro. Joseph—We were recently favored with a visit from Bro. G. S. Yerrington from Providence, Rhode Island, whose labors were instructing and comforting. He preached several discourses here. The people seemed to listen with marked attention, though congregations small. One lady came over one hundred miles to be baptized. She was baptized on Sunday the 10th inst., by Bro. G. S. Yerrington, and went home greatly rejoicing in the Lord. May the Lord help her to keep his commandments, is the prayer of your unworthy servant,

JESSE SEELYE.

1511 Madison street, St. Louis,
September 12th, 1882.

Bro. Joseph:—Understanding that my mission here was given to continue for the space of one year or more according to the petition of the St. Louis District, I will not report to this Conference only through my Quorum. Will say however, that I am laboring constantly; have labored in Moselle, Gravois, Cheltenham, and City, one baptized at Cheltenham, and two in the City. I also made a flying trip to Alma, Illinois, spoke twice; am to speak there to night and perhaps continue through the week, thence to Caseyville and Belleville. I am feeling after the Unionians here, but they are very reticent and not very susceptible to the pinch. I am also looking after a Baptist Editor, on the apostolic succession business; it seems clear to him, but not so clear to me, and my peculiar faith, and naturally inquisitive turn of mind, causes me to desire a better understanding of the matter, hence the investigation.

Praying that you may have a pleasant and profitable Conference, which shall redound to the honor and glory of God and the salvation of souls, I remain your co laborer in the gospel,

B. V. SPRINGER.

P.S.—My permanent address is, 1511 Madison street, St. Louis, Missouri.

VANCLEAVE, Jackson Co., Mississippi,
September 1st, 1882.

Bro. Joseph Smith:—It is my desire to inform you concerning the Saints in this section of country. They hold out well in the faith they started with to do the work, though we are needing some good Elder to visit this place. We have had no preaching here since the 29th of January, 1882; Elder George Montague and John B. Porter were here and held meeting at my house. They baptized four, and several more would have joined had the services continued. All the Saints want a church organized here in the center of the members. There could be gathered together twenty members, and it ought to be done to set it to work. The scope of country which is needy, is lying west of Pascagoula River, which the church is lying on the east side of at the Three Rivers, about seven miles by water, which leaves a great many of the Saints who can not attend the meetings, and we ask if you can assist us, we will be well to in our work. It is greatly needed here, and if you can assist us, please send me word, and we will stir up the Saints and be ready to look for and welcome the coming of some good man. I close by looking to our Heavenly Father for protection.

CATHARINE LIVINGES,
Baptized March 17th, 1879, by Heman C. Smith.

TILBURY, Ontario, Sept. 2d, 1882.

Bro. Joseph:—I have been trying to preach to people wherever I could get an opening. I have been holding meetings in the following named places: Chatham, Kent Bridge, Bummers Roosts, so called, at the Lindsay Church, McKay's Corners, Wellington Branch, Rond Eau, or Blenheim, and Tilbury, and have just closed meeting here, last evening, and go to Baddertown to-morrow morning, to hold meeting there. The good Spirit of the Master has been with me while I have been trying to sow the seed, "the good word of God," and I have found great joy in trying to do my duty before the world and before God in presenting the truth to the world as it is in Christ Jesus our Lord. None have come in as yet. I am not discouraged, as I know we must sow before we can reap. I know for whom I am laboring. I think one or two will be baptized to-morrow, if all is well. I have found some hard cases here in Canada, I fear none of them; the hardest places I have found are Chatham and this place, Tilbury. I remain your brother in Christ, as ever,

GEORGE HICKLIN.

Conference Minutes.

NORTH NEBRASKA DISTRICT.

This conference convened September the 8th, 1882; N. Brown president, H. Nielson secretary.

All visiting saints were invited to take part in the conference.

The evening session was devoted to prayer and testimony. A most excellent time was had: God's spirit speaking peace to all.

Report of Branches; Omaha (English) 67. Platte Valley 35; baptized 2. Omaha (Scandinavian) 32. Douglas 31. Plattford 15; baptized 4.

District Treasurer's Report.—Collected by the Pleasant Grove branch $3 30; Douglas Branch 75 cents. Paid to N. Brown $3 30

Report of Elders:—E. C. Brand said he had no report to make but his personal presence. J. F. Mintun had spent his whole time preaching in the district. He had preached 48 discourses and attended 53 meetings; baptized 8, confirmed and assisted to confirm 8, and had seen the sick healed to a very great extent. A. Brown said he had done some considerable traveling on Church business. The prospect of the work was very good. He had assisted to confirm 14, and administered to the sick with good results. Bro. Boulson had baptized 4, and preached some at Fremont. B. Hodges had invited many to come to our Church.

The spiritual condition of each branch was reported by delegates. These reports showed that the district as a whole is in a better spiritual condition than it had ever been before; there was little exceptions to this in several places.

The committee on scattered members reported no further progress since last report. The report was received and committee discharged.

Resolved, That we appreciate the labors of Brn. J. F. Mintun, E. C. Brand and Chas. Derry, in the district, and that our delegates to the General Conference use their influence to have them returned to the same mission, if the Conference deem it wisdom. Carried.

Resolved, That a committee of three be appointed to investigate all difficulties that may come before this Conference for adjustment, and that they be authorized to give final decision. J. F. Mintun E. C. Brand and G. C. Hodges were appointed said committee.

W. Rumel and O. Brown were appointed delegates to General Conference, and instructed to vote for two General Conferences each year.

We, the undersigned committee appointed by the district conference of the Northern Nebraska District, to whom an appeal from the Pleasant Grove Branch was submitted for investigation, decide as follows: That it is entirely contrary to law and good government for any branch of this Church to interfere with the affairs of any other branch. Therefore, we consider the petition not worthy of the consideration of this conference. signed: G. C. Hodges, E. C. Brand, J. F. Mintun.

We, the undersigned, appointed a committee by district conference of the Northern Nebraska District, to examine the appeal of Sr. Hannah Madsen against the decision of the Omaha (Scandinavian) Branch, in the case of Hannah Madsen vs. Hans Nielson, do bring the following decision, to-wit: (1) That the charges against Hans Nielson are not sustained; because first, that charge one and four are rebutted by the testimony of Sr. Mary Nielson; and second, that said Hannah Madsen in her application for removal, did testify that she had nothing against any one in the branch, thereby proving by her own evidence that these charges are false. (2) That we exonerate Bro. Hans Nielson from the charges made by Sr. Hannah Madsen against him, which charges have evidently been made in malice; yet the evidence as well as his own confession shows him to have used unchristian words and deeds in retaliation, for which we think he owes an apology to the council of the Omaha Scandinavian Branch. Signed: G. C. Hodges, J. F. Mintun, E. C. Brand.

The reports of the committee were received and approved and committee discharged.

Kelley, who had been authorized by the President of the Mission, called the meeting to order, and after singing and prayer, and a few remarks, moved that Bro. Samuel Rector preside over the session of the conference. Bro. Rector declining to act, Bro. E. L. Kelley was chosen to preside, and Bro. John Scott was chosen to act as secretary of the meeting.

A letter of instructions to the conference from Bro. W. H. Kelley, president of the mission, was then read.

The following Elders being present made report: John Scott had not much of a report to make; on account of other duties had not been out in the work much; desired to do what he could, and see the cause prosper. Samuel Rector had not been engaged in preaching and had no report to make. Daniel Scott of New Albany had been doing what he could in the work, and in few cases had been called upon to administer to sick with good results attending. He desired to do more for the truth. Bro. Wm. Burton, priest, had not much of a report to make, but his desires were to do what he was called to by the Master. Bro. Varden Baggerly rejoiced in the work in which we were engaged. Had done some preaching at Hall's Ridge, Olive Branch and at Brooksbury, as his circumstances would permit. Bro. William Foster, priest, had been engaged in the work at several places, mostly at Hall's Ridge.

Elder Columbus Scott reported his labor in the district by letter. During the Winter and Spring had held a great number of meetings with fair success, and a number had embraced the truth during the time. Bro. David Scott had been of good assistance to him in his labors.

The following resolution was unanimously adopted, with reference to the case of John S. Christie to wit: Whereas, Bro. John S. Therefore, be it REEVES.—At Amboy, Illinois, August 19th, 1882, Jessie Alvin, only child of Chadborn and Theresa Reeves, aged 1 year and 9 months.

Jessie, thou art gone and left us,
And our hearts are thrilled with pain;
But the loss we mourn so sadly,
Is for thee eternal gain.
Yes, our hearts are sad and aching,
And we feel the bitter sting;
But for thee 'tis life eternal,
In the mansions of the King.
All thy sufferings are over,
Thou hast gained a home above,
For the God of Heaven said so,
Thou art one of whom he loved.
Jesus prayed for little children,
As the prophet did record;
But the words for them he uttered,
Only can be spake by God.
Yes, we trust thee, blessed Jesus,
And rely upon thy word,
That we'll meet our little loved one,
In the Paradise of God.
Yes, we know we'll meet thee one day,
When life's journey we have trod;
We shall know no parting, never
From the presence of our God. FATHER.

MOORE.—At his residence near Sweet Home, Missouri, February 9th, 1882, in the sixty-fourth year of his age, Robert C. Moore. Deceased was born in Brown county, Ohio, May 4th, 1818; passed through all the trials of the Church in Missouri and Nauvoo; he united with the Church, February 18th, 1866, at Malad, Idaho, under the hands of Elder T. Thomas. Funeral services conducted by Elder James Thomas.

WHITTEMORE.—At Council Bluffs, Iowa, September 4th, 1882, Ephraim Whittemore, aged 61 years, 6 months, 10 days. He was born in Hinckley, Leicestershire, England, in 1821, came to the United States in 1858. Funeral services conducted by Elder William Gess.

BURGISSER.—Anna Burgisser was born July 2d, 1851, in Hedingen, Canton Zurich, Switzerland; was baptized into the Reorganization July 27th, 1880, by Elder J. L. Bear; died a faithful member, March 7th, 1882, in Lunghofen, Canton Aargau. She suffered from consumption, getting weaker in strength till she passed peacefully away to a better home. She was prepared to go. Her life here was mixed with much tribulation and very little joy. She found a better habitation and a blessed reward. She leaves a husband and a child to mourn her loss.

DAVIS.—In Caseyville, St. Clair county, Illinois, July 11th, 1882, Sr. Mary Davis. She was born September, 1827, in Wales, where she obeyed the gospel. Emigrated to this country in 1855, with the intention of going to Utah with her husband; but became convinced that the Utah people had departed from the faith as originally taught. She located near St. Louis, and joined the Reorganized Church, March 3d, 1867, being baptized by Elder J. Beaird. About twelve hours before she died she predicted her death, and asked her husband to remain in the house with her, as that would be her last day with him on earth. She always had an open door for the Elders, and a helping hand for all in time of need. Funeral service conducted by Elder John Beaird.

CASTNER.—Near Osceola, Iowa, September 13th, 1882, of epilepsy, Sr. Emma L. Castner, daughter of Sr. Emma V. and step-daughter of Bro. M. B. Oliver, aged 16 years, 6 months and 10 days.

HALL.—Elder Joel Hall died at his residence in Cass Township, Shelby county, Iowa, September 1st, 1882. He was Born in Newcastle County, Delaware, December 15th, 1799. Aged 82 years, 8 months and 15 days. He united with the Church in April, 1844; he removed from St. Louis to Council Bluffs in the year 1852; but refused to follow the Brighamite faction any farther. In the year 1859 Elders Briggs and Blair came along, gathering up the scattered ones; he said he knew the voice and he followed; and truly he was a consistent disciple of Christ. He was earnestly devoted to the Service of God; a lover of the Gospel; quiet and unassuming in his manner; a gentle, kind and truly affectionate husband, a loving father and kind brother. He leaves an aged wife and a son and daughter and many friends, to mourn the loss of his society. He died in the faith of a glorious resurrection. Funeral services by Elders D. Chambers and Henry Halliday.

HINTS FOR POOR SLEEPERS.—Poor sleepers will find it advantageous often to raise the head of the bed a foot higher than the foot, and then to sleep on a tolerable thick hair pillow, so as to bring the head a little higher than the shoulders. The object of this is to make the work of the heart in throwing blood to the brain harder, so it will not throw so much. A level bed, with the head almost as low as the feet, causes an easy flow of blood to the brain, and sometimes wakefulness, when the vessels can not contract on it and keep the brain empty.

Lord Derby has recently said: "Unhappily there is no international tribunal to which cases of dispute can be referred, and there is no international law to meet such cases. If such a tribunal existed it would be a great benefit to the civilized world. This is the great want of the world. Commerce, arts, religion, are spreading, but one war puts back civilizing influences for a whole generation. He who succeeds in leading the great powers to agree upon peaceful arbitration as a system, will deserve a statue of gold."

GOOD NATURE.—Good nature is the best feature in the finest face—wit may raise admiration, judgment may command respect, and knowledge attention. Beauty may inflame the heart with love, but good nature has a more powerful effect—it adds a thousand attractions to the charms of beauty, and gives an air of beneficence to the most homely face.

Angry feelings in a teacher beget anger in a pupil, and if they are repeated day after day, they will at last rise to obstinacy, to incorrigibility.

Resolved, That it is the sense of this conference that Bro. Christie's license be demanded, and that he be silenced as a preacher; and the President of the District cite him to appear at the next session of our Conference to answer to said charges and show cause, if any, why he should not be cut off from the Church.

On motion, Bro. Harbert Scott was elected the President of the Southern Indiana District for the ensuing term; and the following resolution adopted with reference to his work in the District.

Resolved, That we recognize in Bro. Scott the ability and desire to do great good in the District, if he is sufficiently sustained, to pass all of his time in traveling and preaching, and that we recommend him to the First Presidency and Quorum of the Twelve for recognition as a general missionary of the Church, for appointment to labor in this District; as we believe he will be able to accomplish all the good, and more, that it would be in the power of a foreign missionary sent here to do.

On motion Bro. Samuel Rector was recommended as a worthy and efficient brother to act as Bishop's Agent in the District.

Bro. Carmichael was sustained as clerk of the District for the ensuing term.

The following Branch reports were read: Union 23, New Trenton 16, Caanan 19, Eden (returned for correction) 26. No report from other branches. Letter from J. R. Chappelow Priest was read.

Preaching on Saturday evening, and on Sabbath morning and evening by Bro. E. L. Kelley, and in the afternoon by Bro. James G. Scott, to large and attentive congregations.

Monday morning conference met for business. Report of Eden Branch read, and after discussion of considerable length upon the recommendation as to ordination of Bro. Monroe Scott, it was decided by the conference that so far as the facts were before the conference, or known, Bro. Monroe Scott was already an Elder and entitled to the respect of the body in that office, and that the report be returned to the branch for correction.

On motion of Bro. Samuel Rector and V. D. Baggerly, the license of Bro. James G. Scott, as an Elder, was by a unanimous vote of the conference restored to him.

The following resolutions were passed: Resolved, That in the opinion of this conference it will be to the interest of the Church to hold the sessions of the Annual Conferences annually instead of Semi-Annually.

That we elect as our delegate to represent us at the General Conference, to be held in September next, the President of this mission and co-laborer with us, Bro. W. H. Kelley, and that he be authorized to cast the cast the vote of this district in said conference.

Moved by Brn. Rector and Burton, that all Elders, Priests and Teachers, of this district be requested to report to the president of this district the amount of time they can spare to labor in the ministry, and to labor under his direction during the coming quarter. After a long discussion was carried.

Conference adjourned to meet at Hall's R'dge, Indiana, November 24th, 1882.

MUTILATING FRUIT TREES.—Of all the blunders that the common farmer makes with trees, none is so common or so hurtful as the practice of cutting off lower limbs. All over the country nothing is more common than to see big limbs cut off near the body of the tree. This is a sin against nature. The very limbs necessary to protect the tree from wind and sun are cut away. But the greatest injury is the rotting—too big to heal over, and keep moist, by the growing tree, the limb must rot, and the rotting goes to the heart and hurts the whole tree.—Gardener's Monthly.

A COUGH CURE.—Take one quart of water, make it thick as gruel with wheat bran, boil twenty-five minutes, then strain through a cloth. The liquid will be as thin as for gruel. Add a little nutmeg and sugar to suit the taste. Take it often, one or two swallows. Drink a pint each day, and soon the cough will leave entirely. Give this a fair trial, say for one month, daily.

Your committee would further respectfully call attention to the fact that a large number of the delegates present separate credentials, so that each presents the name simply of the member presenting it, and thus there is presented contradictory credentials, which may make great difficulty for the committee; and we recommend that hereafter in writing credentials that all names from a district be placed on the same paper, and particular attention be given to giving the number of members in the district or branch.

Bro. E. C. Brand called attention to the fact that some were appointed as delegates when they are not members of that district.

Moved to receive the report of the committee on credentials. Carried.

Moved to adopt the report, and the committee be discharged.

Amended to read: To adopt the report and continue the committee.

E. C. Brand said that W. H. Kelley represents two districts, and J. H. Lake was not a member of Canada, and that E. M. Wildermuth was not a member of Nodaway District.

Bro. J. S. Patterson, said that a representative was here to represent the Chicago Branch, to which he objected.

Bro. J. W. Chatburn, thought it was understood, they had to be members of districts they represent hereafter.

E. L. Kelley, made a statement that the committee did not know where these brethren were members of.

J. S. Patterson asked that this matter be now settled, now and forever, as it is now no nearer settled than it was before.

W. Powell explained why they had sent E. M. Wildermuth to represent them.

Chairman:—Some districts could not raise the means to send delegates, and so sent those available.

The minutes of April Conference called for and ordered read by the Secretary.

Amendment put on passage and lost.

J. W. Chatburn called for reading of Rules on Representation. Read by secretary.

E. Robinson read from Herald of 1881, page 312, containing a decision.

E. H. Gurley moved as follows:

Resolved, That hereafter the various districts composing this Church may choose whoever they will to represent them, whether they are actual members of districts or not; provided said delegates are members of, and are in good standing in the Church; and provided further, that said delegates shall not represent more than one district at the same conference, and that this motion shall make void all rules heretofore passed that conflict with this motion.

J. W. Chatburn objected to entertaining the resolution.

J. Luff said that one year ago Canada could not send a man who was not a member of their district.

E. H. Gurley withdrew resolution.

J. W. Chatburn, as a committeeman six months ago saw the same difficulty.

Z. H. Gurley was ready to vote yes. There is no evidence submitted that these brethren were not of these districts.

J. H. Lake called for proof that he is not a member of the district he represents.

J. W. Gillen and L. Conover spoke on seeming conflict.

M. T. Short thought they ought to be made to prove they are delegates.

E. L. Kelley thought the ruling of the chair correct on this matter.

Joseph Smith thought they should only be in good standing.

W. C. Cadwell moved to amend to read: That we except the names of W. H. Kelley and E. M. Wildermuth, in this report of committee on credentials.

E. H. Gurley and J. H. Lake spoke against the amendment.

A. H. Smith moved as a substitute, that we adopt the report section by section. Carried.

Section 1 read and adopted.

Section 2 read, and J. S. Patterson objected; said he held credentials signed by the secretary of the district.

Z. H. Gurley, A. H. Smith, M. T. Short and E. L. Kelley, spoke thereon.

Put on passage and carried. Division called: 22 for, 22 against. A second vote taken: 29 for, 27 against. Section 2 adopted.

Sections 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15 and 16, read and on separate motions adopted.

REPORTS OF MISSIONS.

Elder W. W. Blair, president of the Rocky Mountain Mission, reported by letter from Malad City, Idaho:

We beg leave to report, that the Rocky Mountain

Mission is in a fairly prosperous condition, and that its prospects are decidedly good. There has been a steady, though not large, increase in membership; its financial condition is better than ever before; its influence for good is wider and stronger than hitherto, both among Mormons and non-Mormons. The action taken by the last Congress in respect to polygamy in the territories, also the appointment of an Election Commission for Utah, and the empowering of the government of Utah to appoint all the elective officers for Utah whose terms have expired this year, is making and must continue to make decided, extensive and favorable changes in the political, social, religious, and industrial conditions of Utah and the adjacent territories, all of which has been desired and expected by the Reorganized Church. "God is just; and his justice will not slumber forever." The peculiar and hurtful doctrines and practices properly called "Brighamism," is being held up to the light and stricken with the just wrath of God and man. The Reorganized Church has the important and pressing duty resting upon it, of bearing glad tidings to the captives, declaring to Zion's blinded and chastened children. "Thy God reigneth," and pointing them to "the old paths," from which they have strayed.

We respectfully ask that this mission be well sustained, and that it be supplied with a suitable number of ministers well qualified for its peculiar and difficult character and conditions. I have written to Pres. J. Smith, suggesting the names of ministers I think fitted for mission-work here.

Elder R. J. Anthony, who is conversant with the mission from the lengthy experience in it, can give valuable advice, so also can Elders J. Luff, C. Derry, J. W. Chatburn, M. T. Short, Z. H. Gurley and others.

It will be well that such ministers as are sent here should come immediately after your conference closes.

We hope the time is near at hand when the Lord will send Pres. Joseph Smith to labor in this mission, and in regard to this we earnestly desire and pray that God's will may be done.

This mission needs missionaries who can preach in Welsh, and in the chief Scandinavian languages, and such should be sent when practicable.

Praying God to bless you in all your deliberations and labors, and to enlighten and gladden all your associations by the light and power of his Spirit, I am ever yours in Christ our Lord and Savior.

Elder Thomas Taylor, president of the English Mission, reported by letter from Birmingham, England:

In offering to you my report I have great pleasure in stating that the work of the Lord in this mission is still onward.

We keep baptizing a few here and there in most places, and I believe that all are doing to the best of their ability and desirous of seeing the work roll on. I have nothing particular to inform you of, more than I have said before.

That the work is moving steadily, although not so fast as we should like to see it, but upon the whole we consider it in a fair condition.

Hoping that you may have a good and profitable session, and we ask an interest in your prayers, and remain your brother in the cause of truth.

Elder J. R. Gibbs, president of the Welsh Mission, reported by letter from Morriston, Wales:

I send you a word from this part, to let you know that we are still striving for life eternal, and strive to publish the gospel. In our preaching out, we have good congregations, and an attentive hearing. Our cry is faith, repentance, and baptism for the remission of sins, and it sinks to the hearts of some. Since my last report we have baptized 7, and the hope for the future is more bright. I would like to see an Elder more able than myself, who has not the care of a large family, that could give his whole time to the Church, taking the charge of this mission; then I believe the work would have more chance to prosper.

Elder Peter N. Brix, president of the Danish Mission, reported by letter from Aalborg, Denmark:

It is necessary for the Church to have the Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants in the Danish language. I can get one thousand Book of Mormon printed in Denmark for $360, and bound for twenty five cents apiece; and 1000 Doctrine and Covenants for $210, and bound for twenty cents apiece. If the Church will send me $570, I can place it in a bank, then I can get the work done; to get them bound I can get that by chance. Bro. L. Rasmussen at Davis City, is in debt to me 150 to 200 dollars; if he can pay them now, I will use them for the printing of the books, then the Church can send so much lesser; if not, I am in hopes the Church will send the 570 dollars; or if the printing office in Lamoni can do better, they are welcome to it; but we must have the books. Please send me a Doctrine and Covenants, so I can get all the new revelations, and get translated into Danish; and if Bro. Christensen will translate them, or some other man, send me the copy. I have received the books you sent me to Mr. Charles Payson, in charge of affairs in Denmark.

Since my report to April Conference I have baptized six. I hope that God will send laborers to this mission, for as long as I shall be alone in the mission and no Herald in the Danish language and no books, the gospel will not have much influence upon the people. May the Spirit of the Lord God our Father direct in the matter, and preclude your assembly.

Elder Joseph R. Lambert, of the Twelve, present, reports:

Since last reporting to your honorable body, I have striven to advance the interests of God's work in the South-Eastern Mission. I have labored in the Alabama and Florida Districts, both in and out of the branches; also, on Look-out Mountain and vicinity, in Georgia. Have preached 64 times, baptized 8, and performed such other labor as usually devolves upon the traveling Elder.

The attention of the conference is called to a resolution passed by the Alabama Conference, July 1st, 1882, in which Bro. J. R. Lambert is requested to use his influence in favor of having one of the Twelve sent to take charge of the South-Eastern Mission. There are several strong reasons why this request should be granted. Brethren Scarcliff and Hyde are yet in this field doing good service for the Master, and should be continued. Bro. L. F. West writes me that he has been kept from the field by financial disappointment, which he greatly regrets. He desires to be released. The Southern Mission is a peculiar one, and the difficulties in the way of its prosecution are numerous; but when we consider the interests of God's work, as a whole, and the importance of individual salvation, we can but decide that the field is one of relative importance. May the wisdom of God direct in sending men to this field, as also to all other parts of the vineyard where they may be sent, is the prayer of your co-worker for Christ.

Elder Alexander H. Smith, of the Twelve, present, reports:

As is due from me, I so report to your honorable body my labors since my continuance in the field, in accord with my appointment by you last spring.

I have tried to do my duty, however I can see upon looking back over my work, many places I might have done better.

I was summoned at the close of the last spring session of conference to attend the last sickness and death of my Uncle Arthur Millikin residing in Illinois. I spent some two weeks there, preached funeral sermon, and then went to Keokuk, Iowa, where I labored some with good success. Baptizing one and assisted at the baptism of two others, and confirming them. Then I labored in Bevier, Macon Co., Mo., confirming one there, baptized by Bro. George Hicklin. I afterward visited Cameron, Stewartville, St. Joseph, Kansas City, Wyandotte, and in company with Bro. Luff labored at Mount Serrat, Johnson county, Mo. I baptized two at St. Joseph. Have assisted in confirming others baptized at Independence, Mo., and Wyandotte, Kansas.

Have spent my entire time in the ministry, whether at home or away from home. Administering to the sick, visiting and strengthening the saints, and trying to make myself generally useful. Have tried to use the force under me to an advantage. Those at least who reported to me. Bro. Wildermuth has labored in North West Missouri, and will report; Bro. W. T. Bozarth in Central and Northern Missouri, and will report. Bro. B. V. Springer is now in his field, Southern Missouri. These three have reported to me, and I believe have been doing a good work, as their report will show. I am still in the field, and expect to remain there the balance of my life.

There are difficulties existing in my mission, which will take time and patience to eradicate. Much injury has been done the cause by members running in debt, and then running away from their creditors; and time and patience only, with prompt action on the part of the church officials, will counteract the injury done.

I propose to continue my efforts for the welfare of Zion; ever praying and laboring for her success. My mission is as large as I want, and larger, and there is more work in it than I can do, and should it be deemed wisdom for me to remain in it, I shall try to honor the cause, and labor diligently for its success.

Elder John H. Lake, of the Twelve, present, reports:

Since your last sitting I have labored in Canada, the mission assigned me in charge. Attended two quarterly conferences: one at Blenheim, Kent and Elgin District; the other at Egremont, in the London District, had pleasant sessions; good was done by the preaching of the word, and by the presence of and timely and appropriate instruction given on financial matters by G. A. Blakeslee and E. L. Kelley of the Bishopric. Prejudice is giving way before the truth; many new places have been opened up for preaching, in some places more than we could fill. I have baptized eight, ordained one Priest, and helped to ordain one Deacon, blessed three children. I have administered to the sick whenever called upon to do so, in some instances with marked effect.

The brethren associated with me in the mission, so far as have been reported to me, have done a good work. Bro. E. H. Gurley and I have labored in the London District most of our time. I found him a kind and faithful, willing, and true friend in the gospel. Brethren Hicklin and Deuel have labored in the Kent and Elgin District. Bro. Hicklin has put forth a faithful effort and has done good. The season of the year has been unfavorable, the busy time and short evenings. Bro. Deuel has not reported to me for some time; but I learn he has done a good work in the mission. The work in the mission is onward. The heaven is working, and I expect to see a good work done in the mission by the help of the Lord. And by patience and perseverance, I think I am safe to say that the branches are in a better condition than when I came here, they seem to be getting rid of that restless spirit that has troubled them, and are getting down to the rock, the word of God. I hope they will still continue to build thereon.

The local laborers of the mission are doing well. Bro. Jas. A. McIntosh was with me for some time: I found him an earnest and faithful brother; on July the 13th he left me at London to go to Picton, a new place, about two hundred miles from the other branches; and this morning I received a card from him, reporting that he had baptized 21, and organized a branch; and four more had offered themselves for baptism, ordained 1 Priest and 1 Teacher, and organized a Sabbath School. Bro. Samuel Brown has done some labor this summer in the gospel. The Saints of the Bayham Branch are putting forth an effort to build a church house at Corinth. I hope they will succeed. The sisters of the London Branch have learned that they can do something to help their Master's cause, and have organized a mite or sewing society. Long may they prosper in the good cause. Bro. A. Leverton of the Zone Branch, and President of the Kent and Elgin District, has been preaching some this summer, helping to open up the work in some new places. And others are helping to sound the gospel trumpet. Bro. R. Evans, Priest of the London Branch, is getting appointments out side of the city, and preaching the word and circulating tracts. Bro. Owen Cambridge has sent for three thousand tracts, and proposes to give the people of London and vicinity a chance to learn what we believe. He sells coal oil to the people, and he proposes to furnish them with a little oil for their spiritual lamps at the same time,—that they may see more clearly how to walk, and that they may have their lamps trimmed and burning when the Bridegroom cometh. I do not know of many drosses in the mission; all seem to be trying to do something to help the work along.

And in the assigning of the missions we hope to be remembered. As brethren Gurley and Deuel are leaving me I wish to have two or three sent here in their place.

As I mingle with the Saints I am often reminded of the old saying that the good place is just over in another neighborhood, and when they get there it is just a little further on. And so it is with the Saints, if they can only get to Jackson county, Missouri, or to Lamoni, or some other branch in the west, they would be so happy; but when they get there the happy place is somewhere else. Now let us profit by the saying of General Grant. When he got himself and his army properly established, he proposed to fight it out on that line. So let us when we find ourselves properly established in the Church and on the rock, the word of God and Jesus our captain, and the Spirit our strength, let us fight it out on that line. And when we have the flesh, the will, and the devil conquered, the Father will have us gathered home. If he has to send his angels after us, we will not be forgotten, we need have no fear. If in your wisdom I am sustained in this mission, I hope to labor for the good of the work and encouragement of the Saints, and the ingathering of the honest of heart; and the glory of God, and the magnifying of my calling as his servant, and the salvation of my soul in the kingdom of our God and his Christ.

Elder Zenas H. Gurley, of the Twelve, present, reports:

Since our last session, held in April last, I have labored in the vicinity of home, having been prevented from reaching my mission by a combination of circumstances apparently beyond my control; am prepared however, and hope to reach the East within a short time.

During the summer I have been well received by the public in trying to discharge my duty in presenting the word, and so far as my observation extends, the cry of "come over and help us" prevails all around us, and sheaves are lying ungathered while many laborers are standing with "rusty blades."

I have administered the ordinance of baptism to three, and in other ways sought to wait upon my ministry.

Elder Thomas W. Smith, of the Twelve, present, reports:

Last Spring I was appointed to labor as counselled by the First Presidency. Believing that I should return to my home and see to its condition after some three years' absence in the missionary field. I have been home since April Conference, or at least after laboring a little in Independence, Missouri, and Wyandotte, Kansas, immediately after Conference. I have preached nearly every Sunday. I have spoken in the Saints' Chapel near Stewartsville, in Bro. McCallum's house in Stewartsville, in the German Saints' Chapel, and in the Delana Branch meeting-house. I baptized one, a brother, who has since died.

I have been very busy in building an additional room to our house, and in fixing up our home in different ways, so that I can leave it if need be, for the missionary field, and not feel troubled about its condition. I have not yet done all that is necessary, for lack of means. I expect by the blessing of God to have everything so arranged in a month, if I am favored with a little means, to be able to take the field again; and I am not particular as to the field, only so that it be where I ought to be, or where it is my duty to be,—for we have too little time to spend any in prospecting or experimenting. As God knows the field, and where I can do most good, I earnestly desire that he may inspire his servants in deciding my field for future work. I am satisfied that I am called to preach, and that I should be chastened severely if I refused to spend my time and little abilities in that calling; or as Paul said, "Woe is me if I preach not the gospel." I find no peace in idleness, and it is not all peace in activity. But I believe that I must expect no rest from constant labor while I live, or have mental and physical ability to labor for the cause. Praying that God may direct all the counsels and transactions of the Conference by His unerring Spirit.

Elder W. H. Kelley, of the Twelve, present, reported as follows:

Since the April Conference I have labored in the missions assigned to me and have met with the usual encouragements met with before. In Michigan and Indiana the interest to hear still increases. The Saints as a rule are moving along with commendable consistency, and are gaining with experience. The way is gradually opening up in Ohio for the preaching of the word, so that with proper labor a good work can be done there. Some constant laborers should be sent to that field if practicable, especially to Northern Ohio. The desire to hear the word preached has so increased in Michigan and Indiana that with the few laborers with us, we have not been able to scarcely make a beginning towards responding to the calls.

I was not able to visit York State, as contemplated, for want of time and duties calling elsewhere. I responded in person to the request of President of the Church, that some one be sent to Green Ridge, Manitoba, to answer to a request from Bro. A. J. Hinkle and others there, accompanied by Bro. George A. Blakeslee. While there ten were baptized by Bro. Blakeslee, and a branch was organized, to be known as the Green Ridge Branch. All of those who had followed the leadership of Elder Stephen Post into that country, save, I believe, three or four, united with us, and the others feel friendly. Further labor by an Elder in that vicinity, I think, would accomplish good. They are good-hearted people, and like the rest of us mortals have learned something by experience. I feel confident that they will be contented and happy with the Reorganization. I have met with unity and peace almost everywhere among the Saints during the summer, with the smiles of hope and prosperity imbuing all, save in the City of Chicago. Here a combination was formed which had all of the appearance of a fierce conspiracy, in my absence, to break up the mission and drive me from it, which for a time jeopardized the peace, and even the very honor of the Church; and as president of the mission, I was forced for the first time during my ministerial experience to control, by reason of the authority placed in my hands, and compel obedience to law and order and due respect for the cause.

This difficulty originated from the existence of a petulant and malicious spirit, harbored only by two or three, that has endeavored to obstruct and defy the mission every since my first appointment there, and which met me almost as soon as my feet touched the pavements of Chicago streets. It was a feeling that they could do their own preaching, run their own business, conduct their own affairs, and that home talent had been slighted and passed by, by sending missionaries to take charge.

This feeling gained strength from foreign influence during my absence from the City, some two and a half months, and became so formidable as to produce division and distress, and was able to make a showing of successfully defying everything that stood in its way, so that the missionary in charge was forced from the very circumstances of the case to do what the General Conference failed to do, viz., to decide upon the relation of districts and missions. This he did upon the law and usages of the Church, and so by the authority of the law and the hand of strength given by the presence of God, order was maintained and harmony secured, and now the cause in Chicago is in a fairer way to prosperity and success than at any time since I have been connected with the mission—the combination being about destroyed, only as it is succored from outside sources.

The mission should be sustained by all means, and sustained as a mission beyond question, and a wise, constant laborer sent to carry on the work, if it is in the power of conference to do so.

The hall rent during the summer has been paid entirely, or nearly so, by the church in Chicago. I have great confidence in continuing the effort there, not because of what has been accomplished, but because God stands by the laborer there, as all the ministry who have labored there this summer can testify; and I have endeavored to get every one possible to go there and help, and get an understanding for themselves of the work in Chicago; and they agree with one voice so far as heard from; so that I hope the conference, before deciding upon that mission, will call out, and hear those who have been on the ground and know the facts.

I have been blessed in my labors, and am yet glad to be numbered with the Saints, and try to bear an humble part in trying to sustain the blessed faith by which God proposes to save the world.

Confident in the hope of the ultimate triumph of the Saints, I remain your fellow laborer.

Elder James Caffall, of the Twelve, reports by letter from Bunker Hill, Kansas:

Since the April session, my time has been spent in Kansas and Colorado. Unlooked for obstacles have loomed up, which have precluded the consummation of contemplated measures towards the erection of a house of worship in Denver, referred to in my last report. One event militating against this project was the bursting of a cloud early in the Spring which inundated land, which was in near proximity to the spot on which we expected to erect the house of worship, which created prejudice in the minds of some promising aid. And though like the rumbling of distant thunders. The explosion came, revealing objections to the contemplated spot. Then came an unlooked for lull in business, bringing to some of the brethren promising aid, financial embarrassment, etc. And beside all this, a cessation of improvements which had begun, with a failure thus far to prosecute many contemplated improvements,—all of which would have contributed to have rendered the spot we had expected to build upon easy of access by hundreds of people, and therefore desirable. But amid these unlooked for draw-backs, we by no means have abandoned the project. About eight dollars, from the Saints, some in the far off south, and west, have been received and by the mite system, which is held sacred for the purpose it has been sent. And should we fail in the project, unless otherwise instructed, it will be turned over to the General Church fund. If the whole membership had caught the inspiration and aid likewise—we might have received, funds sufficient to have purchased a lot in a desirable location, and more impoverished; but our people think a ten cent arrangement too small a matter, though from 14,000 the result would be astounding. In behalf of the few Saints in Colorado, I extend thanks to those Saints who have given a helping hand for the erection of a house of worship—in the great state of Colorado. And if any brother or sister would like to extract five hundred or a thousand dollars from their abundance, and forward, they need feel no delicacy, for we shall not think them at all prostrative, because it is just what we need in the present emergency.

There is a prospect of a branch being organized in Denver at no distant day, it is possible this might have been reached ere this. But the advice, to make haste to go slow, we have found (or thought at least) was sometimes very essential. We trust those who wish to make up the branch in Denver, will be among those who shall abide. It is possible your honorable body may not feel much encouragement at the present status of the work in Colorado. But could I lay before you the barriers and obstacles that have had to be met, (for which I have neither time or disposition) you might think it is all that could be expected.

I have been attacked and challenged to public discussion through the public print—from behind entrenchment, to which I replied with a promise to consider the propriety of acceding to the wishes of the individual when it was known who or what he was.

I held meetings at Bunker Hill, Kansas, early in the Spring, which were interfered with through inclement weather. I am at this point, at this date, and the interest manifested seems to forbid my departure in time for your session. Some evidence of increase is seen here; but 'tis not good to be too sanguine. For a decision reached to-day is often ignored on the morrow.

Elder E. L. Kelley, of the Bishopric, presents, reports:

At the close of the session of the April Conference I at once entered upon the work assigned me; and first, with Bro. Alexander H. Smith, attended to the defiant challenge to the ministry of the Church during the sitting of conference, by a Mr. David Eccles, through the Kansas City papers. Mr. Eccles had chosen to call in question and publicly attack the most unpopular, as he supposed, feature of our faith, viz: the divine authenticity of the Book of Mormon; and upon this the contest was made. But not withstanding the great prejudice against us upon the question, and the fact that Mr. Eccles began with an audience that cheered him on the first evening of his attack, I have the pleasure now of reporting to you that the evidence of truth were so clear in favor of this record of God's dealings with a portion of the human family, that so soon as the third evening in the discussion, Mr. Eccles was left entirely by his audience, and which now gave to our positions round after round of applause.

Before the discussion began the papers of the city held out Mr. Eccles as a champion who was well acquainted with Mormonism (as they termed it) and who would be well able to demolish this feature of the faith, if any body could; and notwithstanding this, the audience declared by a unanimous expression with the exception of one man (and there is no doubt in my mind but that he was deaf) that Mr. Eccles had failed to maintain his proposition, to-wit: "that the Book of Mormon was the work and production of man only." I stated to him in the office of the Kansas City Journal, the paper through which he first published his challenge, that if he was not satisfied, to again name his time and place, and the Church would have a man there, to meet him; to this he replied that he was satisfied and did not want to discuss any more.

Besides this we then made the public statement through the press that we were willing to face any man and before any audience, or on any platform, and show from the scientific and archeological discoveries of the age, or the truths of the Bible, that the Book of Mormon was what it claims for itself, viz: a true record of God's dealing with the original inhabitants of this continent and another evidence that Jesus Christ is the Son of God and Savior of the world; but to this time no one of the many thousands there has seen fit to question the proposition, and therefore Bro. Smith and myself would respectfully ask to be discharged as a committee upon this matter.

Leaving for the east upon the close of this discussion, I assisted the Bishop for a time, specially in the work of teaching and presenting the temporal law of the Church to the Saints in Michigan and Canada. During this trip, also besides our own work, we had the pleasure of seeing at actual work many of the Elders in these missions, and felt to thank God that he had raised up men who with so much fortitude and patience were willing to labor most devotedly for the work simply because it was God's work. With this class of men we can not fail. Of these men in Canada I take the liberty of naming your general laborers there: Brethren J. H. Lake, E. H. Gurley, G. E. Deuel, George Hicklin, Arthur Leverton and James McIntosh; the former of whom also well honoring the cause in the manner in which he presided over the work in the Mission.

When not directly performing the duties relating to the Bishopric, I have been constantly engaged in preaching either in branches or in entirely new fields, and in some instances I believe to good effect. At Kirtland, Ohio, I remained for about two weeks, preaching in the Temple, a place in which there has been a little contest between nearly all the ites who have sprung up since the death of the Martyr in 1844, and I pondered in my mind when I went there, if I was but a representative of another one of the ites, which in time must have its folly made manifest and fall of its own assumptions. And under this feeling Bro. William H. Kelley and myself began our meetings, and after the second Sunday, when I returned to my stopping place, I heard a gentleman who is an infidel, but who had attended well the meetings, say to his wife she ought to have gone. Why, she says, they preach just like all the rest who have been here, don't they? No; he says, these men's preaching is no more like the preaching of those other fellows who have preached here than anything in the world. This I can tell you I was glad to hear, and I set myself about to find out the difference, and this is the result. Elder Sidney Rigdon went there and for years preached Rigdon; Strang preached Strang; Thompson preached Thompson; Brooks preached Brooks; Brigham Young's legions had preached Brigham; and so they had Sydenhites, Strangites, Brooksites, Brighamites, &c., to the most ridiculous extent. We however had preached Jesus Christ and him crucified and his gospel the power of God unto salvation. And we presented as our proof that the Church was what we claimed for it upon the ground that "Whosoever abideth in the doctrine of Christ hath both the Father and the Son," and to my mind this is the strongest and most satisfactory proof of the calling of an individual by Christ, and of the correctness of the claim of Joseph Smith to the presidency of the Church that can possibly be presented to any people of a Christian belief. They did not call us then Josephites, or any other kind of ites, but as we called ourselves, Saints, after the name of the children of Christ. And I am thankful to-day that we have a President who is willing and ready to prove to us that he is a servant of God, by abiding in the doctrine of God's Son. There is a prospect of good being done for the truth in and about Kirtland by preaching, and the people tell us to come.

In Southern Indiana I had a pleasant meeting with the Saints, but found the work needed some way for a financial basis besides the District Treasury theory, for here as in every other district where it has been tried, to my knowledge, it has proven a flat failure. And it is not surprising, since it is a plan unknown in the law of God. But they said what shall we do; we have a man in our district whom we want to labor, and he can do as much or more good than any man General Conference can send here, and his expenses would not be near so great. And I told them then to put him in the field, and recommend him to general church authorities for recognition as a general laborer in that district; to dismiss one of their treasurers, so they would know what to do, and pay their funds into the Bishop's Agents hands, and so sustain their laborer as the law directs. To this they assented, and their laborer is Elder Harbert Scott.

The field of labor which I was assigned to in the Spring, I have not been able to work in, but have letters from brethren in Philadelphia, stating the work could not well be prosecuted there during the Summer months any way, and advising a postponement of my trip. To this the president of the Mission, Bro. Zenas H. Gurley, has endorsed as right under the circumstances. I would further call the attention of the conference to the fact that my duties as a member of the Bishopric are made such under the law of the Church, that it is not always possible for me to work in a field which may be assigned to labor in, and in view of this, whether it would not be more in accordance with the law not to assign me to any particular place. I did not know of this in the Spring when I was appointed by the conference, but have found it out by the summer's experience, &c. Ever wishing for the welfare of all, I remain.

Elder Columbus Scott, of the Quorum of Seventy, reports by letter from Lawrence, Michigan:

Since my last report to your honorable body, last April, I have labored in the field assigned me almost constantly. Having labored in New Albany, Floyd county, and in Jefferson county, Indiana, and in VanBuren, Berrien, Lapeer and Sanilac counties, Michigan. Fair sized and interested audiences have greeted, usually in most localities visited; and in some instances we were made to feel sad, when pressing calls urged us to press on and leave crowded houses of anxious listeners, to respond to further calls. Laborers too few! "Pray the Lord of the harvest" to send more.

Have been blessed abundantly in administering the gospel ordinances, word and doctrine; have baptized eight, confirmed five, blessed some children, and administered to the sick with blessings following. Will rejoice very greatly to be able to continue to labor for the Master.

Elder J. Frank McDowell, of the Quorum of Seventy, present, reports:

Since last conference I have labored in Clinton, and also in Olivet, Mahaska county, and Edenville, Marshall county; and Collins, Story county, this state. Have labored continuously, and have been much blessed with liberty of the Holy Spirit. At Edenville I delivered in all eighteen discourses. Two persons of good character were baptized, and at whose confirmation there was an almost "Pentecostal" manifestation of the Spirit. As we invoked the Spirit's power and gift it came in immediate answer, and every heart was made to feel the Spirit's thrilling touch filling them with holy fire.

I am strong in the work. I glory in its power. And during the past six months the kind Father has graciously stood by me. I am still willing to be spent in the Master's service.

Elder John S. Patterson, of the Quorum of Seventy, present, reports:

Since April Conference my time has been exclusively devoted to the ministry, except two weeks spent in moving my family from Kewanee to Sandwich, so as to be nearer my immediate field of labor. In my labors I have been accompanied most of the time by Bro. Henry A. Stebbins. I have found him an agreeable companion, and a fair defender of the faith. We labored together, preaching wherever opportunity offered, both in the branches and outside, having a goodly degree of liberty on most occasions, and challenging the attention of the thinking portion of the localities we visited. So far as raising a warning voice to the people is concerned, I feel well pleased with our labors; but so far as the addition of numbers are concerned, we have but few to report, only 5; but we believe they are of the honest in heart. It seems that the labors of the Elders now resembles the gleanings of grapes when the vintage is done; yet it is good to feel a consciousness of having done our duty, and with the Lord we leave the increase. I am still at the disposal of the conference; but would prefer my present field, on account of family sickness. The Northern Illinois District, which is under my care at present, is partly in good working order; other parts are not. We hope and shall work for a better spiritual status.

Hoping to be with you at conference, and trusting that through your legislation good may result to the cause.

Elder Eli M. Wildermuth, of the Quorum of Seventy, present, reports:

Having been continued in my former mission, in company with Bro. B. V. Springer I started for my field of labor on the 4th May. Commenced our work in Mt. Ayr, Iowa; from there went to Redding, in the same county, and tarried several days, holding meetings each evening and twice in the day time on Sunday. Our congregations were fair, and considerable interest manifest. From Redding we went to Allendale, Missouri, where we commenced a series of meetings; sometimes the house would be crowded, and again there would be but few out, though there seemed to be quite an interest. After spending two weeks together it became necessary that Bro. Springer should return; and hearing that my family were sick, I returned home. After remaining at home a few days I again started for my field of labor, stopping at Redding and holding several meetings in the village and vicinity. From thence to a school house south of Allendale. The spring and early summer months were unfavorable for holding night meetings,—there being so much rain. I prosecuted the mission as best I could, finding a growing interest manifest every where in the latter day work.

For the last two months I have been mostly in Nodaway county, Missouri, where I have found a marked interest manifested for the gospel. It seems that North-Western Missouri has been neglected, or overlooked, by our missionaries for several years; and as there is but very little preaching being done by the local ministry, the work is almost at a standstill; but the people are anxious to hear our doctrine. I have baptized five since the April Conference. I still feel willing, and desire to continue in the field of the ministry if your body so direct.

Elder William T. Bozarth, of the Quorum of Seventy, present, reports:

I have labored all that I could under the circumstances. I have been troubled some with asthma, which has hindered me from preaching as I desired; yet I have done all that I felt able to do, and am still willing to labor. I have labored in Grundy, Dekalb, Ray, and Caldwell counties. I have baptized 14, confirmed 5, blessed 1 child.

Elder R. J. Anthony, of the Quorum of Seventy, present, reports:

Since your April session, I have labored in Salt Lake City, and in different parts of Utah and Idaho. I have baptized twenty during the time. The people under the rule of John Taylor in Utah and Idaho are very bitter against the Reorganized Church, and the prospects are not so good in some localities as they were before the passage of the Edmunds bill; but in other places the interest is about the same. Altogether the mission is stronger than ever before, and is increasing in strength, and I think should be sustained.

Elder M. T. Short, of the Quorum of Seventy, present, reports as follows:

I have labored as much as I well could, in the field assigned me, until the latter part of last month; since which time I have operated in three districts in western Iowa. I also spoke a few times at Lucas to a dense assembly of eager listeners. In all my laborious and strangely diversified career, benedictions have been heaped upon poor me, and temporal aid has been forthcoming. In Utah I went after them and waged an uncompromising war upon their serrated columns. We invariably used the "sword of the Spirit" and left "the balm of Gilead" to those more discreet. "The heroic treatment" was administered without fear or favor, but withal in gentle firmness and tender regard.

The Presbyterians, by regular motion and vote, have denied our Church the use of any and every public house they control in the territory; but the Methodist's have acted honorable and very kind. The prevailing church denied us of the privilege of proclaiming from their stands, except Bishop A. Hatch, of Heber, Wasatch county. They appear more prejudiced and united since the late national move, but many are dissatisfied or indifferent and reckless. Our predecessors have opened up the mission admirably, and now it is an inviting field. The Saints love the missionaries, and will look well to most all reasonable wants.

I was appointed to that far off mission without being solicited, and relieved when I expressed a willingness to remain longer, and further your deponent sayeth not. I baptized thirteen while there, but seven of that number were reported to the annual sitting. I also immersed three at Little Sioux, Iowa, quite recently. Their open-handed generosity revived my desert-worn spirit, and will ever live and grow green in my memory. All that received the ordinance from my hand had been within the pales of the dominant church. I blessed about a score of children, and otherwise officiated according to the several emergencies. I have preached under the direct illumination of God's eternal Spirit, challenged through the pulpit and press, and scattered Advocates broadcast. When you can wash the black out of charcoal, then you can cleanse the masses from sin. This rule is general, with here and there are honorable exception.

I am willing to toil on, and I am happy in the thought. I hope to merit the love of the Saints and the co-operation of Jehovah. My prayer is that we may labor in unison, and that others will be called to the rescue. Blessings be upon the universal work.

Elder J. Frank Mintun, of the Quorum of Seventy, present, reported as follows:

Since last report at the April Conference I have labored to the best of my ability for the promotion of Zion's cause, knowing, as I do, that it is the work by which all men must be judged, and being anxious that all may receive like knowledge and make a preparation for their final condition while it is to-day with them. I have labored exclusively in the five counties of my mission, Nebraska, of Washington, Burt, Dodge, Douglas, and Sarpy, since last reporting, and have had more calls than I could fill. During my labors I have attended about ninety-one meetings, eighty of which were preaching meetings, of which I was speaker; have baptized eleven, confirmed and assisted confirming eleven, have blessed a number of children, and assisted in administering to quite a number of sick.

The work is onward in the mission where I have labored, as far as I know; but not as I would love see it entirely, as there seems to be somewhat of a coldness pervading some of the branches. Have assisted in organizing a branch in Washington county, composed of sixteen, who seem to be somewhat alive to the work. I am still anxious to see the work prosper, and willing to throw in my mite in order that it may progress, God being my helper.

May peace and wisdom be yours to enjoy, is the prayer of your brother and co-laborer in the ministry.

Elder John T. Davis, of the Quorum of Seventy, present, reports:

I beg to report to your honorable body that my heart and desires are in the work, and that since last conference I have labored in the field assigned me to the best of my ability under existing surroundings. I trust to continue in the field to help on the great work of God, if it is your wishes to so order.

Elder James W. Gillen, of the Quorum of Seventy, present, reports:

Since last report I have labored to the best of my ability in the mission assigned me, but I am sorry to say that my success has not been so great as I desired. This no doubt is chiefly to be attributed to my inefficiency as a minister, and lack of the ability that should be possessed by a representative of the Church, and partly owing to the many obstacles that I found in the way of and opposed to the progress of the work in that country, and there is also another prominent reason for the slow progress of the work in that mission, and that is that there are but few (if any) local laborers to carry on the work there, so that the preaching of the word rests almost entirely upon the missionaries sent there by the Church, and this together with the whole burthen of the watch-care over the entire mission is more than any one man can do successfully; nevertheless, during my mission I baptized twenty-nine or thirty; there were two at Wallsend baptized by me, and one by Bro. Haworth, also eleven by me at Nambuccra, and sixteen or seventeen at Queen's Ferry, in the colony of Victoria. The people there are liberal and kind-hearted: I was furnished with ample means to sustain me while there, and abundantly with means for my return home, and I am satisfied that they are fully prepared to sustain any Elders that might be sent there, and they are extremely anxious that at least two should be sent at as early a day as possible; and I ask that the mission be sustained, and that at least two efficient Elders be sent from this conference. May the Lord bless you in all your deliberations.

Elder E. C. Brand, of the Quorum of Seventy, present, reports :

Since April Conference, at which time I was continued in the Nebraska and Western Iowa Mission, I have preached as follows: In Iowa: Plum Creek 4, Keystone 1, Hancock 4, Harlan 3, Shelby 5, Leland Grove 9, Logan 4, Magnolia 2, Crescent City 4, Council Bluffs 1. In Nebraska: Nebraska City 5, Elmwood 4, Stone Creek 1, McKeggs 2, Plattsmouth 11, Platte Valley 2.

I have baptized one, confirmed 7, blessed 6 children, attended 5 district conferences, administered to the sick with some blessed results, traveled 1,173 miles. Have labored in harmony with branch and district authorities, and have felt much blessed and encouraged in my labors. The calls on every hand for preaching of the word are more numerous than ever, and I am sure that there is an awakening in many places where deep lethargy has long prevailed. I have a deep desire for the prosperity of Zion's cause.

Elder John C. Foss of the Quorum of Seventy, reports by letter from Stewartville, Missouri, as follows :

I feel myself happy to have the privilege of reporting to your honorable body the little labor I have done. You know I was released from the Eastern Mission last conference, and no other assigned to me, as I expected to leave Maine, and settle in the west. I left the conference at Independence and came to Stewartville, and found that the Baptist Preacher wanted to sell his twenty acre farm for six hundred dollars, with all the improvements. I have a good home for my family, and soon will be ready to give my entire time for the service of my master. I have been greatly favored in purchasing me a home, well worth one thousand dollars; for this I can feel in my heart to thank the giver of all good. The Spirit said to me last March, go west and I should be blest in going. It told me the truth; my neighbors say God favors that Mormon preacher. I have not been idle, but traveled twenty-five hundred miles; baptized one, blessed one child, attended fifty-eight meetings. I am not ready to leave this state at present, as I have five acres of corn to gather and sell. So I should like to labor in Missouri, till Spring conference. I know the work is of God; therefore, I wish to keep the stone rolling. I hope the good father may be with you.

Elder Gomer T. Griffiths, of the Quorum of Seventy, reported by letter from Hyde Park, Pennsylvania, as follows :

I herewith submit a condensed report of my labors since the April Conference. I arrived in the mission assigned me by your honorable body on the 22d of July; circumstances would not permit me to come sooner; sickness was one hindrance, want of means the other. I have labored in the following places since June 1st, (at which time I left Worcester, Mass.,) Douglas, Boston, Fall River, Mass.; Providence, R. I.; Philadelphia and Hyde Park, Pa. I have been in this place five weeks; this branch was in a dormant state—had not met but once in three months. I am glad that I can say the work is in a better condition, and there is a good prospect for the future, and we expect some few honest ones will soon unite with the Church. I have baptized five, confirmed eight, blessed two children, ordained one Elder, and have administered to the sick a number of times with some good results. The Saints throughout our travels have been very kind in ministering to our wants, for which we are grateful. I still have an inclination to help build up the latter day work, and am subject to the authorities as to where my labor the coming six months may be. I hope and trust that you will have a good conference, and that the spirit of peace and quietude will characterize the entire session.

Elder Charles Derry, of the High Priest's Quorum, present, reports :

I beg leave to report that since my last report I have labored in North-Western Iowa, North-Eastern Nebraska, and some in Minnesota. I have been blessed in my labors, and hope I have been used as an instrument in blessing others; and have reason to believe such has been the case. I have not shunned to declare the counsel of God. If I plant, and some Apollos waters, "it is God who gives the increase," and I trust I shall always be disposed to give to Him the praise. I have been permitted to baptize ten, and to discharge all other duties pertaining to the office of an Elder. And I believe my labors have been in harmony with the labors and feelings of my brethren in the fields where I have been, at least, I have not seen or heard any signs of disapproval. The calls for my labors there are many, and if it is the will of the Conference, I shall still do my best to respond. My faith in the gospel of Christ remains. I wish to continue and close my life in its defense and promulgation. But if God wills otherwise, or if it should please Him that I should cease my ministerial efforts, I shall submit; but I do not feel there is any stopping place for me until He who called me and sent me forth, shall bid me cease. I feel that I need grace to enable me to endure, and his wisdom to direct my effort, and his spirit to make those efforts effectual, and for these blessings I trust I shall ever pray.

Elder H. A. Stebbins, of the High Priest's Quorum, reports by letter from Mediapolis, Iowa, as follows :

According to the appointment given me last Spring to labor in Northern Illinois and Southern Wisconsin, I report that I found sufficient demands to keep me in Illinois during the season, excepting a few Sundays spent at and near Burlington, Iowa. But there is some prospect that I may yet visit Wisconsin this Fall, as invited to do. At present, however, I have been called to labor in Western Illinois and Eastern Iowa by the Nauvoo and String Prairie District, and anticipate so doing, for a while at least, or until I go at work upon the Church Records and at the Secretary's duties. If the conference will release me from the former appointment and give me permission to labor in Iowa and Illinois, I would like it; and if properly supported in the Recorder's and Secretary's office, shall be glad to devote what time I can to preaching as set forth in my letter to the committee on records.

I am glad to say that I have enjoyed a fair degree of the Holy Spirit, and have tried to arouse, to stimulate, and to encourage the Saints; warning them that the signs of the coming of the Son of God increase, and that only those who are prepared shall enter in and be secure. I have administered in baptism and confirmation and for the healing of the sick.

Elder Robert M. Elwin, President of First Quorum of Elders, present, reports :

Since the April Conference I have devoted my whole time in the ministry: preached 118 times, baptized nine, and confirmed some fifteen, blessed twelve children. By voice, tract and pen, I have embraced every favorable opportunity to spread the truth of the gospel. I am still engaged, and hope to continue in the work of redemption, as guided and directed by Christ my Savior.

Elder Joseph Luff, present, reports :

Since the Spring Conference I have preached 39 times, baptized 5, and performed such other ministerial work as occasion required. Only five and a half weeks of my time, since April, has been spent in the mission assigned me. This will appear strange to some who heard me state last Conference that I was ready for the field; but I can only say by way of excuse that a circumstance entirely unexpected occurred, which compelled my delay, and for a time threatened my liberty as a minister permanently. I counselled with the President of the Church, making known my situation, and have acted upon his advice. I received $200 from the Bishop; one-half of this was used to support my family and the other to remove an obstacle that prevented my taking the field; this was the distinct understanding had with the Bishop when I received it.

A statement made by a few persons, to the effect that I had been making the ministry a sinecure, and was giving evidence of laziness during the past six months, has led me to make the above brief explanation. My case though known to the President of the Church, has not been known to the Saints generally. I deeply regret my inability in the past to fulfill my pledge to you in the Spring; but I have finally arranged matters so that I am now free, and ready to serve the Church in any way and any where they may desire and decide; provided, as in other cases, my family shall be provided for.

I have no choice to make as to what field I shall labor in; but shall honor your decision in this respect, if Providence permit. I have been much blessed of God in what little I have been able to do; and hope to be proportionately blessed in doing more henceforth.

Elder George Hicklin, reported by letter as follows :

I left home for Canada on my mission on the 9th day of May, and have labored and done all I could in my office since that time. I have tried to preach to the people 43 times. I must say that the Lord has blessed me in so doing. I have baptized 2 and confirmed 1, and attended to all other duties. Have labored in the following places: Bevier, Hannibal, Bellville, Lindsley, Kent Bridge, Townline, Wellington Branch, McKay's Corners, Blenheim, Chatham, Tilbury and Baddertown, and the good Spirit of the Master has been with me in sowing the seed of his kingdom. I have done all I could, and I am willing to still labor if my wife can be taken care of. Should you deem it wise to keep me in the field, I am at the disposal of the conference. The calls are many, and much labor is needed here in Canada. I find that calls are beginning to be more than I can attend to.

Elder E. H. Gurley, present, reports :

Feeling a lack of powers to express my views on the situation of the work in Ontario, it is with reluctance that I essay to report. I have preached in Wellington, Townline, Lindsley, Zone, Blenheim, London, Egremont, Carlingford, Corinth, Glenmyer, Walsingham, Charlottsville, Middleton, and Langton, in all 51 times. My labors were confined mostly in London District, and including Walsingham, chiefly in opening new places. I baptized two, and assisted in other administrations common with laborers in the vineyard. In the last three named places of labor, I found good interest, and the prospects are good for a good work to be done there this Fall and Winter, if laborers are sent there. My grove meetings brought out several hundred, and some there expressed themselves as believers in the faith. I found that opportunities for preaching in some places very scarce, others very good. The best being in Norfolk county. School houses are closed against all churches as a rule, and especially against us. During our mission we used town halls, private houses, and groves chiefly.

The work in Canada is a peculiar one. With the masses I found quite a high degree of prejudice against the United States, and Mormons of the states were almost universally conceded to be the same as Mormons of Utah. The press there does us little or no good, and while I think it well worth our efforts to sustain the mission there with as much vigor as we can—as we have a number of strongholds—yet I can not offer anything encouraging, because of this universal classing together before alluded to. The people of Ontario generally regard the United States as very loose and careless in executing her laws; and hence they have learned to believe that crime will be punished here after it is punished, but not before. The masses believing that one can practice many crimes in the States as well as in Utah, hence they are slow to hear us, at least so I find it.

God's truth never was popular, nor never will be in this mundane sphere; but give the Reorganization equal privileges with the first organization, and I think its work will compare favorably with it. But why say more: God is at the helm, and I believe is doing all things well for us, and will do for us according to our faith and works. Other evils in some places arising from within, such as contention, hatred and intemperance, all of which militate in no small degree against the work. Yet notwithstanding all this, the Saints on the whole are zealously affected, and are noble souls. All used me kindly, and administered to my temporal wants, and there are some staunch defenders of the faith there. I have generally enjoyed good liberty, yet doubtless erred, but I did the best I knew how. I know that out of the whole God will have a pure people, and I hope you can send at least five or six Elders into Canada. I have been officially aided by local brethren; also by C. M. Fulks, who was stopping a few months in Ontario. May the Spirit of God be with you in the appointment of missions is my prayer.

Elder Frank P. Scarcliff, reported by letter from Milton, Florida:

Since my last report I have preached 57 times, baptized and confirmed 2, administered to a number of the sick with good results. My labors have been confined to the Florida District, as its president: I have been laboring to set it in order. My progress to this desired end has been slow, still I have been cheered by seeing some improvement. A combination of circumstances has set the work back in this part of the South; these circumstances makes it discouraging to the laborer; and as Bro. Lambert once said to me, "It will require a great deal of faith to labor here," and results obtained for awhile at least, must be necessarily small. The calls for preaching are very numerous—I can not fill a tithe of them. Send help to this part of the mission, brethren, if you can. If sustained by your body I will continue to strive to serve the interests of the work in this mission.

Elder Joseph T. Burton, reports by letter from Delhaven, Nova Scotia:

I arrived at Annapolis, May 3d, have visited and preached publicly in Pereaux, Hantsport, Canning, and Somerset, have traveled and privately taught and distributed tracts in Halifax, and Yarmouth, and through the western part of the Province; have baptized four persons—others have stated their desires to be baptized when circumstances will admit. I find a great deal of prejudice, bigotry and intolerance, in some places here; and although I have felt sorrow keener than ever before, because of these, yet I also have felt joy unspeakable when the Lord was pleased to bestow upon the Saints of Nova Scotia the Holy Spirit, blessing them with the manifestations thereof, and our hearts were filled with gratitude to him, because in this land, also, the Reorganization was acknowledged of Him, and we owned as his servant. Tracts are almost a necessity in this mission. If retained in this mission, we think of going on through New Brunswick and Maine, by winter; but am at the disposition of the conference, either to remain, or go elsewhere, if my services are desired.

Elder Hiram Robinson, reports by letter from Nanticook, Pennsylvania:

Since last report I have spent all my time in the field; have spoke about eighty times; have baptized five. I think a good work can be done this Winter in the Pittsburg District. I am free to labor as the conference may direct: would prefer to be continued in present field, if found worthy.

Elder Gordon E. Dewel, present, reports:

I entered the field of labor assigned me by the last Semi-Annual Conference, and began in November preaching in Blenheim, by request of Bro. J. H. Lake. I have preached 178 times in the following places: Blenheim, southern part Howard, Tilbury, Baddertown, Merlin, Middle-road, Botany, Kent Bridge, McKay's Corner, Howard school-house; and I opened the door in Chatham, by preaching twice on the market, and then got the town hall for our use; and also opened a place for preaching in Ridgetown, and preached four times there in the town hall. Went up into Lampton county, preached at Kimball, Court-wright, Brigdon, and at Wiltspott. Baptized thirty-three, confirmed twenty-nine, and helped to confirm others. Ordained one Elder, and one Priest, assisted to ordain one Elder and one Teacher. Organized the Baddertown Branch, composed of nineteen members: Thomas Badder president, Henry Badder Teacher and clerk. Blessed twenty-two children, administered to the sick a number of times,—the Lord blessed the administration by restoring them to health in many instances almost immediately after the ordinance was performed. As far as I have traveled have been kindly received, and shared the hospitality of the Saints; may God bless them for the same is my prayer. Have endeavored to labor on new ground as much as possible. I have traveled and preached to the best of my ability, and have cheered and comforted the Saints, and can say the Saints are trying to do right, and do receive the gifts and blessings of the gospel.

I am at the disposal of the conference, should it wish to continue me.

Elder A. J. Cato, reported by letter from Cook's Point, Texas, as follows:

Since your last sitting I have labored to the best of my ability in the field assigned me, the South-Western Mission. Whether I have preached as often as I could or not, I can not say; yet I can truly say I have labored to the best of my knowledge; and in looking back at the past, I can not see wherein I could, by acting differently, it would have been any better for the cause I represent. Don't think, brethren, that I am claiming perfection. O no! don't think that. I hope you will pardon me for not having visited as many branches, and traveled as many miles as some of my brethren may have traveled. Yes, forgive me, for we are appointed to travel and preach, and it might not do to stop long at a place, least we don't travel enough. I have preached as often as circumstances would admit. Have baptized eleven, ordained one Elder, and organized one branch.

We are gaining in favor with the more intelligent class, and in most places where I have labored, it is the minority that oppose us. Some of the clergy and also some of the newspapers are denouncing the course pursued against us by the people. The present outlook for this mission is brighter than it has been at any time heretofore, according to my way of seeing just now. Brethren, I am still at your disposal.

Elder George W. Shute writes from Blue Rapids, Kansas, as follows:

This leaves me in a feeling of regret in regard to the state of affairs in our district, as well as my own. I had contemplated going to the conference, but have concluded perhaps I could do more good by staying at home and earning a few dollars, than to go there and have to spend money and lose time, to any certain accomplishment of any great good. I have labored for about three and a half years, out of the last six, to establish the gospel in this district, together with a very few of the brethren, we have so far succeeded, until within the last two years, we increased in numbers as fast as could be expected, until laborers began to be scarce, the means of those who had first opened the work failed, and they were compelled to forsake the field to look after their families, and then and now we see the need of laborers. I see the need I see hundreds waiting to hear and know the truth. I sorrow in very soul, but what can I do. I have preached the gospel, borne my own expenses, fed my own family, until all my substance is gone, and I am feeling the effect of age, and still the Lord has commanded me to preach the gospel. I know it, and thank him for the honor that he has conferred upon me. But what shall I do. I see no disposition in this district to contribute to the furtherance of the work. Can there be any help from the Church. This district needs help. The brethren have lost their crops, and are poor generally, but will, perhaps, soon regain what they have lost; and with many who would be likely to embrace the gospel, would soon make the district self-supporting, and also help the Church general, thereby be the means of salvation to many. I ask for help in our district; I pray for it; I work for it with hands; I have begged my family, disgraced myself for the cause, until I am so low down in finance that I can do nothing. Sickness and death have visited us in the last year, and now I am over an hundred dollars behind; this paid and I am ready again for the work.

I earnestly pray the conference to send some one to our relief. Help is the word now, in any form it may come. I have calculated to go out to preach this Fall and Winter, but not until I am free from debt,—one hundred and twenty-five dollars will place me in the field for one year, constant; and I hope to reach it by some means soon, either from those interested in the cause, or by my own labor; and either way it shall be spent to further on the work of the Lord and the upbuilding of his kingdom. May the conference send us help in some direction, or down goes the ship I fear.

May the Spirit of truth be with you in your gathering together, to guide and direct the minds to the true principles of the doctrine of Christ. Please excuse if you find any thing in this out of place or wrong.

Elder T. W. Chaburn reports by letter from Shelby, Iowa, as follows:

In the appointments made last Annual Conference, I was in company with Bro. W. C. Cadwell, directed to labor in Shelby, Cass, Pottawattamie and Harrison counties. I herewith respectfully report, that in pursuance of the appointment, I have labored in all of the above counties. Most of my labors however has been in Cass and Shelby counties. Bro. Cadwell labored with me in Harrison and Shelby counties. Baptized five, administered to the sick, assisted in blessing children, &c. I have had many calls to "come and preach to us," some in new places. I have agreed to go to as soon as possible, should the conference deem it wisdom to continue me in my present field. I regret very much not being with you, as it is the first time in the history of the Reorganization that I have not been present at the Fall Conference. My prayer is that you may enjoy God's Holy Spirit in all your deliberations, and that they may prove to the extension of his glorious cause.

Elder Alma Kent writes from Clay Center, Kansas, as follows:

As I will not be privileged to meet with you in conference, I would make this my report. The condition of the work under my watchcare is in fair condition, considering the circumstances surrounding us; there are but few laborers here that can be called active, judging from the spirit entertained. At our last quarterly conference we would say we are still recognized by the Lord as a part of his family. We are in need of some missionary labor in this field, and if it should please your honorable body during your session to look favorably upon the west, and this barren and unfruitful field, remember us, and breathe one prayer for the starving, hungering, and thirsting souls of North-West Kansas; and if you would send us Bro. Charles Jones to labor in this field this coming Winter, we will be very much pleased, as we think he will be just the man to wake up these slumbering souls. We ask this, as Bro. Jones gave us this encouragement last April. If the conference would appoint him a mission in this direction, he would fill it; and we will pray the Father to send him. I feel that there will be something done in this field during the coming Winter, as the people will have but little to do, only tend meetings and get good as the saying is. I hope to be able to spend the Winter and a part of the Fall in the field. I believe I am in harmony with the doctrines of the Church, as taught by Joseph the martyr, and found in the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants. In some things I can not see eye to eye with some of my brethren, and the application made of the written word, but hope the day may come when the Saints will all be one in spirit, doctrine and in faith.

May God bless you in your deliberations, and may the spirit of peace prevail throughout your sittings.

BOUNDARY LINES.

The matter of the boundary lines of the Little Sioux and Galland's Grove Districts, Iowa, was presented, and the following was read:

Extract from minutes of Little Sioux District conference, held September 2d, 1882:—On motion the secretary of the district was requested to notify the General Conference Authorities that the Little Sioux District is willing to relinquish to Galland's Grove District, if agreeable to their wishes, all that portion of the present territory of said Little Sioux District lying east of the counties of Lyon, Sioux, Plymouth, Woodbury, Monona and Harrison, and ask said General Conference to establish the eastern boundary of the Little Sioux District accordingly.

Moved by M. T. Short and W. C. Cadwell, and adopted, as follows:

Resolved, That the east boundary line of the Little Sioux District be established as follows: commencing at the north-east corner of Lyon county, Iowa, running thence in a southerly direction to the south-east corner of Harrison county, Iowa, being the eastern boundary of the counties of Lyon, Sioux, Plymouth, Woodbury, Monona, and Harrison, and that all that portion of territory east of said line heretofore embraced in said Little Sioux District be declared to be now a portion of the Galland's Grove District.

BISHOP'S COMMITTEE REPORT.

Report of G. A. Blakeslee, J. W. Chatburn and H. A. Stebbins, committee to settle with Bishop I. L. Rogers read as follows, and committee released:

As the committee appointed by the General Conference of the Church to settle with Bishop I. L. Rogers, and to transfer from his hands into those of Bishop G. A. Blakeslee, his appointed successor, all the funds, books, documents, etc., belonging to the Church, do hereby report that we have this day acted in accordance with our appointment, and having balanced the books and collected the documents and papers, together we have turned the same over to said G. A. Blakeslee as the Presiding Bishop of the Church. We present this report for the action of the General Conference of September, 1882, and ask to be released as a committee.

Appeal of E. C. Wildermuth, on motion of Z. H. Gurley and W. H. Kelley, was referred to Quorum of Seventy.

Appeal of Robert Davis: moved by E. L. Kelley and G. Kemp, to refer back to him, for the reason assigned, that no report has been made to his district.

Prayers were asked for sisters M. E. Salyards, Ella M. Fuhr, and Sr. Farr.

Moved by E. C. Brand and J. W. Gillen, that the chair appoint a committee of three upon the subject of the translation of Books of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants into the Danish language, as presented in Bro. P. N. Brix' report. The chair appointed H. N. Hanson, John Hawley and J. T. Davis.

CHURCH SECRETARY AND RECORDER.

Report of H. A. Stebbins, Church Secretary and Recorder, read, and on motion of E. C. Brand and J. S. Patterson, was referred to the committee upon the Secretary's books.

Since the April session I have done some labor both as Secretary and Recorder of the Church, part of it before leaving home in the Spring and considerable more while traveling and preaching, having had some work which I could take with me, the last of that kind at present.

I have already made a very full statement to the committee whom you appointed last Spring, concerning what has been done, and what remains to be accomplished to bring the Church Records to perfection, as the limited time heretofore taken has allowed the doing chiefly of the more necessary things, and then only by condensing as much work as possible into the time taken from needed rest and sleep.

Additional matter for the records of branches throughout the world continues to come in, both regular reports and that called out by correspondence last winter. In addition to this regular work on hand, the conference last Spring ordered the keeping of a record in alphabetical order of the scattering members of the Church who dwell in all parts of the United States, both those who have never been upon any branch or district record and those hundreds (if it be not thousands) whose names have been dropped from branch and district records without law, and in some instances without ceremony, or which have been left off when branches have been reorganized. It will take time to do this, but until it is done the exact standing of the Church can not be known.

Furthermore, there has never been any index of names made except the one by Bro. Sheen to Record A., but I think they should be made to Records B, C, and D, as time may allow in connection with the other portions of the work. Several benefits would accrue from having such an index, but I have never been able to do any thing at it during the eight and a half years since I was appointed as Church Recorder, could not crowd any more work than I did into the time, but whenever time is allowed as it is at other work, and everything does not have to be done so hurriedly, then all this work can be accomplished thoroughly, and also in a better manner than heretofore.

Besides the condition of the records I have also reported to the committee the part of the work that seems more specially to belong to the Church Secretary's department, though much of it is closely connected with and dependent upon the other, such as a book made expressly for the purpose and containing a record of every quorum since the Church was reorganized in 1853. Also the alphabetical index books of all the Elders, Priests, Teachers, and Deacons in the Church, and the pages of the Church Records upon which they can be found. There is also a scrap book of all the General Conferences from 1853 to 1880, begun by Bro. Forscutt and completed and thoroughly indexed by me. Having all these things in their hands the committee will be able to present a report of the whole business.

In closing I would say that I certainly wish to see this work accomplished and have set my mind for years to that end more than upon anything else except upon the saving of souls. And in that work also I wish to be engaged with you, so far as the means earned by doing the other may enable me and time from that permits. I wish to earn my own living as far as possible, and as this work must sometime be done so also the longer delayed the more complicated it will be, and if done at once it would be better. I believe that three-fourths of ones time can, with profit to the cause, be devoted to this work, till the Church is ready to keep one in the office all the time in charge of the records, documents and books (as will sometime be necessary), and I am willing so to labor and the rest of the time be ready to answer any calls or do any duties upon which I may be sent by the authorities of the Church, from time to time as necessity arises. The expense may be some greater than it would for me to be engaged in the ministry all the time and my family be supported, but greater good will also result, and the commandment and order of the Lord will thereby be observed.

Having no desire but to serve God and his cause among my fellow men, and hoping to see justice and right triumph in all things, especially in the Church of Christ.

Closed by singing "We thank the Oh God for a Prophet." A collection was taken up by E. C. Dobson for to purchase oil for the lamps, and received $3.68. Benediction by Pres. Joseph Smith.

RESOLUTION OF THE TWELVE.

Whereas, The ministry of the Church in the several quorums seem to be in a measure inadequate to the pressing demands made upon them, and believing this should by virtue of their calling take the lead in establishing the work in the regulating of its affairs in general; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we do hereby ask the Church to engage in solemn, earnest prayer, asking the Lord to reveal his will concerning these various quorums, that they may be properly filled, and that in so doing we may act agreeable to that will.

The above was submitted by the Quorum of the Twelve. Spoken to by Z. H. Gurley, and adopted.

DANISH PUBLICATIONS.

Report of H. N. Hanson, John Hawley and J. T. Davis, committee on translation of Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants, into Danish language.

We your committee to whom was referred the matter concerning Danish publications, herewith report that we have considered it to the best of our ability. With reference to the printing of the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants, we understand that said books can be purchased at a reasonable price, and therefore would not recommend the Church to spend means for that purpose at present. But being that there is a growing desire among the Danish and Swedish people for the printed word, we would suggest that a periodical, about the size of the Advocate, be published monthly; the number above home need, to be sent part to Utah and the balance to Denmark and Sweden. Probable cost at Omaha: 1,000 for $12, 2,000 for $15, and that subscriptions and contributions be solicited.

Moved by E. C. Brand and E. M. Wildermuth, that the report be received, committee discharged, and report referred to Board of Publication.

E. Banta and J. C. Crabb moved as a substitute, that the report be received, committee discharged, and pamphlet printed at Omaha.

Z. H. Gurley and E. L. Kelley moved to amend by striking out "at Omaha." Carried.

Moved by J. S. Patterson and J. W. Gilson to insert the word "ordered" before the word "printed." Carried.

Moved by E. C. Brand and J. F. Mintun, to further amend by adding "under the direction of the Board of Publication." Carried.

Moved by H. N. Hanson and E. C. Brand to still amend by adding the words "in the Danish language." Carried.

Motion as adopted with its amendments reads as follows: That the report be received, committee discharged, and pamphlet ordered printed under the direction of the Board of Publication, in the Danish language.

REPRESENTATION.

Moved by W. C. Cadwell and J. W. Chatburn.

Resolved, That in the opinion of this conference "The Rules of Representation," or of the amendment thereto, having reference to the eligibility of members of the Church to the office of delegate to General Conference means that in regularly organized districts, in order to be eligible to said office of delegate, their names must be recorded on some branch record, or be regularly enrolled as resident scattered members of said district; and credentials of delegates elect should show these conditions to exist.

The President ruled that the resolution was in the nature of it an amendment to the Rules of Representation and should have two months' notice.

W. C. Cadwell appealed to the house from the decision of the chair.

Vote to sustain the chair was carried. Division called: The vote stood 56 for, 19 against.

Preaching in the evening by Alexander H. Smith, upon the practicability of the work, assisted by R. M. Elvin.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 23D.

The morning prayer meeting was in charge of W. H. Blair and S. M. Rogers. Preaching in the forenoon by President Joseph Smith.

Business session was opened by singing "Burst ye emerald gates and bring." Prayer by Bro. I. L. Rogers. Minutes of yesterday read, corrected and approved.

A letter from St. Louis Globe-Democrat, asking to be supplied with parts of the minutes was read, and on motion of W. H. Kelley and E. C. Brand, Bro. Z. H. Gurley was appointed to report for the Globe-Democrat.

The following resolutions were read and deferred subject to call.

UTAH DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS.

A resolution on the Utah edition of the Doctrine and Covenants was read:

Whereas, the Book of Covenants issued by authority of the Church at Salt Lake has been materially changed from that accepted by the Church; be it Resolved, that this Conference advise the Danish brethren against the use of the same.

RESOLUTION ON FINANCE.

Notice by brethren J. T. Davis and I. R. Ross, delegates of Spring River District, to call up resolution on finance, read:

We are under instructions to call up a "Resolution on Finance," from the Spring River District, to last Fall Conference, and laid over for consideration last April Conference, but for some reason was not brought up; and now we ask you, on behalf of said District, to bring it up for consideration at your convenience during this conference.

ROCKY MOUNTAIN BRANCH.

The appeal of the Rocky Mountain Branch was presented. Questions were asked, and the following resolution was moved by E. C. Brand and Z. H. Gurley, and adopted.

Whereas, the case of appeal in case of the Rocky Mountain Branch vs. F. C. Warnkey has been discussed by this body and decided, we therefore advise that it be referred back to him with instructions that he appeal to a higher tribunal, to wit, the High Council.

EXPLANATION

Matter of Statement by brethren D. Dancer and A. S. Cochran, of the late firm of Dancer and Co. was read as follows:

To the Brethren in Conference assembled, greeting.—We wish to call your attention to the report of the committee on the report of the Board of Publication, received at the last conference. It is there stated that, "A building was erected in part by Dancer & Co., at an expense of $4,853.78." Now we wish to state that in our opinion this carries a wrong impression. To correct which we desire to state that the making of the brick, the carpenter and mason work, and the purchase of rock, and building lots, with the prices paid for the material, and wages paid to all workmen, we had nothing whatever to do with, except to pay the orders of those appointed by others to superintend those matters. And in regard to the wisdom and economy used in the outlay, as far as we were concerned, we submit the following report:

In the month of May, 1881, we paid out cash to the amount of $121.65, and furnished material to the amount of $265; in June paid cash $643.58, and material $617.89; in July cash $526.70, and material $263.22; in August cash $340.56, and material $920.36; in September cash $483.66, and material $355.10; in October cash $381.76, and material $131.60.

From this it will be seen that up to the 1st of June we had furnished $123; up to the 1st July we had furnished $1,380, and received $100. Up to August 1st we had furnished $2,175; up to September we had furnished $3,435, and on that day received $1,000. Up to October 1st we had furnished $4,275, and on the day previous received $2,526. Up to November 1st we had furnished $4,775, and after crediting lumber returned and brick sold, there remained $602.28, which was not paid until the March following.

The amount upon which any profit accrued to us was $2,190, which if it had been furnished at our retail prices would have brought us the sum of $219 profit, which we think would not have been exorbitant, considering the amount of money invested, upon which no interest has ever been charged or received. And we wish to say that on lumber furnished in anything like wholesale quantities, the aim was to furnish it at an advance of six per cent above cost, and in some instances at much less than that.

Trusting that this may explain some things that have not been heretofore understood correctly, we remain your brethren in the gospel of Christ.

Moved by E. L. Kelley and A. B. Moore, that it be received and spread upon the minutes. Carried unanimously.

Bro. Alex. H. Smith was called to the chair.

The resolution on finance from the Spring River District was called up.

Moved by J. W. Chatburn and E. L. Kelley, to lay on the table. Carried.

KIRTLAND TEMPLE.

W. H. Kelley and G. A. Blakeslee, the committee on repairing the Kirtland Temple, reported as follows:

Your committee on the repairing of the Kirtland Temple, beg leave to report, that they have visited and examined the Temple, and made an approximate estimate of the cost to repair it; and this amount being so much more than we believe the conference contemplated that it would take at the time of the appointing of its committee, we did not feel justified in commencing the work until we obtained further counsel from the Church. We believe that when the repairing is commenced, that what is done, should be well done; and the work prosecuted from time to time, as the Church may be able until the building is completely restored in all of its departments as when first built with its pulpits, curtains, ornaments and all fixtures in tact.

To commence this work, and put the house in a good state of preservation and the arranging of the lower room, that church services may be comfortably held in it; will need an appropriation of about $1,000.

A less amount than this expended will be but to make an outlay of means and labor—without accomplishing the object in view, the preservation and ultimate restoration of the building—and to a great extent the squandering of the means that may be expended and the work will finally have to be done over again.

Had proper shingles been used when it was recovered last, the roof would now have been in a good state of preservation.

It takes upwards of 63,000 shingles to cover it; these will cost at Cleveland $4.15 a thousand at least. The steeple will need to be almost wholly restored, especially all of the ground work, save it may be the corner posts,—these repairs, with some cut stone, cement, plastering, &c., should be made at once. We were gratified to learn while in Kirtland, that the citizens are pleased with the thought of repairing the Temple, and some expressed a willingness to assist by contributions when the work is commenced, and take pride in protecting the building after it is restored. We were informed that contributions were made by the citizens when it was partially repaired by Father Huntley and others. How much they did we were not informed.

Again: had we thought wise to have expended so large an amount on the Temple, a grave obstacle stood in the way, viz: The Bishop did not have the money to meet the expense. To obviate this difficulty, if it is thought wise by your honorable body to prosecute the work further, we recommend the putting forth of an effort to raise a subscription fund to meet the necessary expenses.

Moved by J. C. Crabb and J. Hawley, that the report be received, the committee discharged, and the matter be referred to the Bishop.

W. C. Cadwell and E. H. Gurley, moved the following substitute, that report be received, adopted, and the committee continued with instructions to solicit subscriptions and make such repairs as the money so raised will enable them to do.

Spoken to by E. L. Kelley, M. T. Short, E. Banta (would give $50), W. H. Kelley, J. C. Crabb and E. H. Gurley.

The previous question was moved, and the substitute carried.

The matter of the Book of Covenants used by the Brighamite Mormons of Utah was brought up, and after being spoken to by several members, was unanimously adopted.

REPRESENTATION.

Moved by Z. H. Gurley and O. B. Thomas:

Resolved, that Joseph Smith, E. L. Kelley, J. W. Gillen, J. C. Crabb, and J. R. Badham, be a committee to revise and enlarge the Rules on Representation, and so far as practicable make the same applicable to district conferences and branches; reporting to the Church the results of their labors as soon as convenient.

By motion to amend, the name of J. R. Badham was dropped at his request, and the name of P. Cadwell inserted.

Moved by C. Derry and J. C. Hardman, as a substitute, to strike out P. Cadwell and insert W. C. Cadwell. Carried.

Moved by L. Conover and H. C. Bronson, to take up the Spring River resolution on finance.

Moved by E. L. Kelley and J. W. Chathurn, to refer the matter to the Bishop of the Church. Carried.

Bro. J. S. Patterson asked that the preamble and resolution handed in by him be now considered.

The Chair ruled it out of order.

Moved by C. St. Clair that the preamble and resolution be considered. Carried.

The preamble and resolution was read as follows:

Whereas, at the opening of conference I made the request that the minutes of last Annual Conference be amended by the insertion of a resolution that was acted upon there; but did not appear in the printed minutes; and Whereas, it was stated by some members of conference that no such resolution ever came before the last April Conference, I ask in vindication of the position taken by

COMMITTEE REPORTS.—CONTESTED SEATS.

J. C. Crabb, S. S. Wilcox, J. T. Davis, J. Snively and L. Conover, committee on contested seat of delegate from Chicago reported:

Your committee appointed on the contested case of brethren Patterson and Culver, relative to the right to cast the vote of the Chicago Branch, beg leave to report:—

1. We find from the evidence presented before us that the Chicago Branch was organized under the direction of Bro. Mark H. Forscutt, on June 20th, 1880.

2. That a statistical report of the branch was forwarded to the next succeeding conference of the Northern Illinois District, held at Streator, Illinois, October 17th and 18th, 1880; and that said report was read before and accepted by the conference of the Northern Illinois District, together with the reports from the other branches of said district.

3. That from that time until the present, the Chicago Branch has regularly reported to the several conferences of said Northern Illinois District, and has been represented in the General Conferences of September, 1881, and April, 1882, by the delegate from the said Northern Illinois District.

4. From the foregoing evidence your committee conclude that the Chicago Branch is a part of the Northern Illinois District, and as such entitled to representation in this Conference through the accredited delegate from that District.

We your committee therefore recommend the unseating of the delegate claiming to represent the Chicago Branch.

CHURCH RECORDER'S WORK.

Committee on Church Recorder's books, J. W. Chatburn, I. N. White and Joseph Luff, reported as follows:

Your committee, to whom was referred the work of examining the books of the Church Secretary and Recorder, with instructions to report on various matters, beg leave, and offer the following as the result of our labor:—

1. We find that no index has ever been made for Record Books "B," "C," and "D." We believe such index to be absolutely necessary, and that the preparation of it should be commenced at once. As nearly as we can determine, it will require the labor of from five to six months to perfect such work, and we recommend that the sum of $250 be paid for said labor.

2. By carefully investigating the amount of general work to be done by the Church Secretary and Recorder, (apart from the above), we have discovered that it will require from four to five months for its performance each year; and we recommend that the sum of $250 per year be paid by the Church as a fair compensation therefor; also, that an additional sum of $50 per year be allowed for office rent and fuel.

3. We have been forcibly reminded that the Records, &c., in the care of the Secretary and Recorder, are constantly exposed to danger; but do not believe that the Church would be justified, at present, in going to the expense of building an office and vault; we therefore recommend that a fire-proof safe of sufficient size to hold all the books be purchased as soon as possible, and used for the purpose of their protection.

The hour of adjournment having arrived, the meeting closed by singing, "Praise God from whom all blessings flow" Benediction by President Joseph Smith.

In the evening, preaching by Bro. Joseph Luff, assisted by Bro. F. C. Warnky.

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 26TH.

The morning prayer meeting was in charge of brethren I. L. Rogers and J. R. Badham.

The forenoon preaching service was opened by singing, and prayer by Bro. Glaud Rodger. Bro. Elijah Banta was ordained as one of the Bishop's Counsellor by brethren Joseph and Alexander H. Smith. A child was blessed by brethren Joseph Smith and Glaud Rodger. Preaching by Bro. J. M. Terry, assisted by Bro. G. Rodger.

The business session was opened by singing "Shout the tidings of salvation!" Prayer by Bro. Jonas W. Chatburn.

Moved by E. Stafford and W. C. Cadwell, that every speaker in this body, occupying the floor to speak on any question, be restricted to ten minutes time, and that he be not allowed to speak twice on any question until all have spoken on the same who desire to do so. Carried.

FINANCE

A letter of recommendation from the Quorum of the Twelve and the Bishopric was read as follows:

The following recommendations were adopted by a conjoint council of the Twelve and Bishopric, and by order of the same are presented to the Conference for their consideration and approval.

1. That the action in the appointment of District Treasurer's, aside from the General Agents in the Church, we find is working injury to the cause and defeating the placing of funds either in the hands of the District Treasury or Bishop's Agents; and as there is no warrant in the law of the Church for such a plan:

Resolved, That the action authorizing it be and is hereby repealed.

2. That under the present system of reporting to the Bishop, on the part of the ministry, injury is wrought in this, that in some cases all funds are sent to the Bishop or his Agents, and in others not so done, but kept by the ministry, and privately reported to the Bishop, and so never known to the Church, which fact causes complaints on the part of those who contribute; therefore, we recommend that hereafter all persons under General Church appointment, report all Church moneys received to the Bishop, together with the names of persons paying, so far as possible, and that they draw for their expenses directly from the Bishop or his agents.

3. We believe that it will be to the interest of the Church and the good of all, if the Bishop's reports are published annually instead of quarterly, and they will be in a shape to be better understood by the Saints, and the transactions for the year are then in such shape as to be properly considered and criticized.

4. That to prevent doubt and distrust, and the abuse of the discretion now exercised by the Bishop, all persons under appointment of General Church authorities, requiring expenses paid by the Church, should before appointed, state to the Twelve and Bishopric, the probable amount required for expenses per annum.

5. By resolution all rules and conjoint agreements heretofore obtaining, which conflict with the operation of any of these rules and agreements be declared to be rescinded.

Moved by J. C. Crabb and E. L. Kelly, to take up and examine each clause singly. Carried.

Moved by W. H. Kelley and J. W. Gillen, to adopt the first clause.

Moved by Z. H. Gurley and H. C. Bronson, to amend by striking out "and as there is no warrant in the law of the church for any such plan," and inserting in place the word "therefore." Carried.

After several had spoken, and that portion of the minutes of April, 1881, had been read relative to this matter, it was adopted.

A. W. Moffet and J. S. Patterson moved the adoption of the second clause, which after having been duly examined was adopted.

J. F. Mintun and J. W. Gillen moved the adoption of the third clause. Adopted.

E. H. Gurley and O. B. Thomas, moved the adoption of the fourth clause. Adopted.

Questions were asked by J. W. Gillen, C. Sheen and Joseph Luff. Answered by the chairman of the Twelve and Bishop: "that the word 'expenses' referred to in fourth clause applies to the families, and not to the Elders.

E. L. Lelley and Z. H. Gurley, moved the fifth clause. Adopted.

Moved by E. H. Gurley and J. S. Snively to adopt as a whole. Carried.

HIGH PRIEST'S QUORUM.

Report of the High Priests Quorum read:

The High Priest's Quorum met in Herald office building on September 21, 1882. Called to order by president, C. Derry. Prayer by president. J. W. Chatburn was elected to act as secretary pro tem.

The following members reported by letter: H. A. Stebbins and M. H. Forscutt. Brethren reported in person: John A. McIntosh, E. Bobin-son, G. A. Blakeslee, W. H. Blair, George Derry, I. L. Rogers, S. S. Wilcox, J. W. Chatburn, J. C. Crabb and David Dancer.

Resolved, That we request the Presidency of the Church to nominate persons to fill the vacancies now existing in the standing High Council, agreeable to Sec. 99, p. 5, in Book of Doctrine and Covenants. Adopted.

Resolved, That we recommend that when church houses are built in the different branches of the Church, and are deeded to the Church, that in consideration thereof, due credit be given to the parties donating their means for the building of said churches as free will offerings or tithing, in a book kept for that purpose. Adopted.

Moved to now take up the report of the committee on Chicago contested seat. Report read.

Moved by Z. H. Gurley and E. L. Kelley to release the committee.

Moved by J. W. Chatburn and W. C. Cadwell, that the report be received and committee discharged.

Moved by A. W. Moffet and E. C. Brand, to adopt the report.

Moved by Z. H. Gurley and E. L. Kelley, as a substitute, that this whole matter, together with the decision and reasons therefor made by the President of the Chicago Mission, be recommitted to a committee of three, appointed by the chair, and that Elders J. UNTO THE ELDERS OF MY CHURCH.

In asking of me, ye did well. I will hasten my work in its time. Ye can not now prosecute missions in many foreign lands, nor is it expedient that the elders of the first quorums be sent out of the land of America until the work of the reorganization of my church be more fully established, and a greater unity of understanding between them be obtained. Nor is it expedient now to further fill up the quorums, except it be the elders, priests, teachers, and deacons: which ye may do, as ye deem wise, by the direction of conference.

Continue the mission in Chicago until the April conference, when if it be found expedient it may be left in the charge of the authorities of the Northern Illinois District.

It is my will that ye more fully honor and pay heed to the voice and counsel of the traveling ministry in spiritual things; which if ye do not, the office which they hold is not honored in my service, and the good they should do is made void.

If they approve themselves as righteous ministers, they shall be blessed; if they be found transgressors, or idle servants, ye shall not uphold them. But be not hasty in withdrawing your support from them, peradventure ye shall injure my work. Even now I am not well pleased with some, but space is granted for repentance and a renewal of diligence. Let no one deceive himself that he shall not account for his stewardship unto me.

JOSEPH SMITH,

By command of the Spirit.

Whereas, the circular letter of Hon. William M. Saints' Herald.

JOSEPH SMITH, EDITOR.

Lamoni, Iowa, October 15, 1882.

THE General Conference at Lamoni, holding from September 20th to 29th inclusive, was in some respects the most remarkable of any lately held by the Reorganized Church. The session last Spring, at Independence, was of the old regime, and brought forcibly to the mind the terrible results of expulsion, pain and distress, brought upon the Saints for the faith's sake in the days of the past; while the late session at Lamoni was of the new, and forced the special work of the present upon the attention of those present. It was with painful apprehension that the first influx of visitors and delegates was welcomed; for, while the Saints resident at Lamoni had done what seemed prudent in making ready for the conference, it was not known how many or how few would attend, if but few the preparations were more than ample; if very many, some might be neglected and disappointed. The attendance was fair, and hence, preparations were all that could be required.

Another source of apprehension was the apparent disagreement between two of the leading ministers on a question of jurisdiction, policy, or government, which had possibly engendered some personal feeling, and was likely to introduce serious distress into the deliberations of the body. Two positive men, each confident in his right and cause, it was thought would create division and injury. This feeling prevailed during all of the earlier sessions, and was not fully passed until the second week of the session was well advanced. However, the final adjustment was effected without serious jar, and the irksome feeling of apprehension and restraint was removed.

The delegates were nearly all present on the first day of the session, though an occasional one came dropping in as late as the fourth day; the ex-officio members, coming and going, registered about one hundred and sixteen upon call for the yeas and nays, but the greater majority were present from the first. One of the features of this is that upon the most important question, that of holding but one conference session per year, the decision was made upon the vote cast by delegates instructed by their districts as to their wishes in the premises.

Considerable discussion was had on many subjects, but a good degree of harmony prevailed among the members of the conference from first to last. The question of two conferences, or one, per year, was quite largely examined, and nearly all the delegates came instructed as to their action, and was finally disposed of in the greatest good humor.

The decision of the body to hold the session of April next at Kirtland, Ohio, was made after quite an animated debate, and in the belief that it would accrue to the advancement of the work.

Eight were added by baptism during the session. The preaching meetings were well attended; those of Sunday, the 25th, being very large. The whole country round about seemed to be present. The Saints at Lamoni had by committee erected a temporary tabernacle in the Herald Office grounds, capable of seating thirteen hundred, and this was well filled morning, afternoon and evening; the exercises being excellently well received.

The weather from first to last was splendid, a trifle cool at times, but still pleasant; no rain fell to cause a moment's delay until the Sunday after adjournment, October first, when the morning sermon, being delivered by Bro. Edmund C. Briggs, was broken in the middle, and the congregation driven out of the tabernacle to seek shelter in the Herald Office and the houses of the people adjacent. An evening meeting was held in the Chapel, that was but lightly attended, rain having fallen nearly all day, the first of moment for nearly two months.

The conference at Lamoni is declared a success, and will have its influence all over the country near to the village where it was held. Missouri, for miles south and west, contributed largely to the members in attendance at the preaching services. There were on Sunday at noon one hundred and ninety-two double and eighty-two single teams, together with fifteen tents and covered wagons, showing that the interest was most excellent.

The Elders who addressed the congregations had good liberty, and many of them show remarkable advancement; clearly demonstrating the important fact that those who have gone into the field of missionary labor have improved far, far beyond those who have remained inactively at home. Even those who have done local labor as the opportunities offered, are developing well as ministers for the truth. As a whole the session was a pleasing one. There was less of haste in the deliberations, and marked thought in much that was said touching current topics; and all conceded that the law, the word of God, should be paramount with Elders and people.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

In considering the matter of the Kirtland Temple, it was ordered that Brethren Blakeslee and E. L. Kelley solicit subscriptions for the purpose, and put the building in good repair: about one thousand dollars is needed. Any one wishing to aid may do so by giving their names and the money to the Bishop's Agent of their branch or district, or send to G. A. Blakeslee, Galien, Michigan.

Bro. Heman C. Smith wrote from Oenaville, Texas, September 27th. He was heavily burdened with care and responsibility, and anxious to do the Master's will. He finds many openings for preaching the word; but also finds the adversary active in endeavors to prevent progress.

Bro. Thomas Taylor writes that the prospects of the work in England have improved of late, and the Saints feel well toward the missionary fields. Care and diligence are redeeming the good name of the Lord's work. Let his name be glorified evermore, and every where.

Bro. John Eames of Cheyenne is advertized in the Sun of the 1st, as follows: Mr. John Eames will preach this evening at Keefe Hall. Subject: "And Moses answered and said, but behold they will not believe me, nor harken to my voice, for they will say: The Lord hath not appeared unto thee."—Exodus 4th chap. 1st verse.

Sr. Copeland, formerly Sr. Marberry Robbins, is strong in the faith, and would be pleased if some of the Elders would come and see her. She thinks they could get the hall that is near by where she lives to preach in.

Bro. W. H. Kelley has sent us a lengthy and terse answer and explanatory statement to Bro. J. J. Cornish's letter, lately published by us.

This letter Bro. Kelley rather insists we should print; but, believing that he had no intent in his former letter to asperse any one, or to disparage and discourage Bro. Cornish, or any one else, but simply to give the general situation of a man in the field, and the possible consequences of a failure to sustain by indirect methods, and to show the feasibility of the better way, we fear a further controversy will be unprofitable. Ministers in charge are compelled, sometimes, to speak harshly for the sake of the general good, on the correct principle that it is better that one suffer, than injury result to the many. Too much disregard to the character and calling of the Elders in charge of missions and districts in the past, we fear; and it is now time to treat gravely and courteously those whom God has placed in the Church.

Much harm may accrue to the work by over-resentfulness, and those having matters in their charge are usually better judges of those things occurring in their fields than others not so placed can possibly be. "Honor to whom honor is due."

Bro. Kelly wrote sharply and feelingly, but we hope it may rest here.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

1st. Is an Elder prohibited by law from acting in any other office than an Elder?

No. He may act in other offices below that of an Elder.

2d. Can he act as a branch officer if appointed by branch to the office of a Priest, Teacher or Deacon?

Yes.

3d. Has the branch power to make such appointment?

Yes.

SOME time ago we published a letter from England signed H. C. in which a comparison was drawn between the manner of doing business in the Kewanee District and a district in England, apparently to the disadvantage of the brethren in authority in England. We thought at the time that though some fault was found no harm would come of it. We learn, however, that the facts hardly warranted the comparison made. We feel annoyed that we inserted the letter, as it was clearly ex parte, and would have hurt no person, or principle, to have been left out.

It has always been our intention to exclude personal allusions calculated to stir up angry replies, or to publish ex parte statements damaging in their nature; but have sometimes misjudged as to the effect likely to be produced from the reading of what was presented.

It was so in the case of the article referred to, and we hereby make apology to Brn. Thomas Taylor and others of the brethren who have had reason to complain in the matter, and fully agree with the sentiment of one who writes:

"I do think that when a person is appointed to a charge, by voice of the Church, he should be respected in his calling until lawful and just cause be shown that he is unfit for the trust reposed in him."

This ought to be the conclusion of all.

We shall use redoubled care that we are not misled to the injury and disparagement of co-workers in distant fields by seemingly fair statements which are clearly from one side only.

We trust that those writing us will also remember that our work in discriminating will be rendered much easier if disparaging ex parte personal allusions are left out. The proverb which says, "He that is first in his own cause seemeth just; but his neighbor cometh and trieth him."

Correspondence.

HAMBURG, St. Charles County, Mo.,
September 18th, 1882.

Bro. Joseph.—I am an old latter day member of the Church. I was baptized into the Church in the year 1835. I believed the doctrine the first sermon I ever heard preached, I knew it was the pattern that Christ and the Apostles laid down for the people to follow. I wondered many a time why the preachers of our day did not preach the same doctrine that they taught, and the first sermon I ever heard preached by a Mormon I knew it was the true gospel. I shortly embraced it and was baptized, and I never for a moment have doubted the reality of the truth of the doctrine since. I moved and gathered with the Saints in Far West, Missouri, and when we were driven from Missouri I also went with them to Montrose, Iowa; and when we were driven from there I was not able to go with them. I was poor and had a large family to support, and had no means to emigrate with any part of the members of the Church. I finally moved to this county, (St. Charles), and have lived here ever since. My wife died here, my children married here, and I am alone here as a member of the Church; but my faith has always been as strong as when I first embraced the doctrine. I have never heard a gospel sermon preached since I heard it preached in Nauvoo. I never believed in polygamy, but always believed in the first principles of the gospel, and all the rules that governed the Church. I did not know till two years past that the Church had been reorganized and that the work was progressing so rapidly as it is till I got letters from my brother at Galland's Grove, Iowa, and he sent me some of the Saints' Heralds, published in 1878 and 1879, which put new life in me; and I feel to rejoice that the work is progressing as rapidly as it is. I long to be with the Saints again, and would go to some branch if I could raise the means to go on; but I am old and feeble, and not able to work. I would like to be baptized into the Reorganized Church. I would like for an Elder to call in this section; it might be that some would believe and obey. I ask the prayers of the faithful that I may prove faithful to the end.

God be with you to the end,

JOHN. H. GOUGH.

NORTH LACROSS,

Dear Brother.—I attended the West Wisconsin Conference, and we had a good time, and accomplished all we expected or desired at this time. All the distracting elements are "shaken out" of this conference according to the word of the Lord, and we had perfect unity; and it was a unity with Christ, and his word is law. There is not a vestige of distracting element amongst them, and if they are faithful you will have a good report from there soon. Pray for me, I am driving ahead to my appointed purpose. Write me often, your counsel does me good. Never mind fault finders, critics, and would be supplanters, but press forward to your appointed work, and the Master will supply all your wants.

Your brother in bonds,

GREEN RIDGE, Manitoba,

Bro. Joseph.—I feel anxious to let you know how we are getting along here, since the visit of Brn. W. H. Kelley and George A. Blakeslee. They are two noble men. Brother Blakeslee is a man in the right place. The people here as many as saw them, speak very highly of them. I was so busy with my harvest that I could not possibly go around and give them an introduction to those that were favorable to this gospel. They were here only one week, but it seemed the shortest week I ever witnessed. We had two sermons from Brother Kelley, but they were to the point, and where prejudice was not too deeply grounded, it took but a short time to make up the mind where the truth lay. Ten went to the Rosue River and obeyed the Master's call, and still rejoice in it, and are striving as much as is in their power to keep themselves in the narrow way. We wish an Elder could visit us soon as convenient. We ask an interest in your prayers. I still feel to rejoice in this latter day work.

Yours as ever in the truth,
A. J. HINKLE.

BEAVER CITY, Utah,

Bro Joseph Smith:—I have felt impressed for sometime to write to you for a little information. Will you please spare a little space in the Herald for the following. If I was baptized into the Church in the days of Joseph, the Martyr, and have come to Utah and have been baptized into the Utah Mormonism, and have its practices to some extent, and had to be twice baptized; once after crossing the plains to Utah, and then again at the reformation; now, can I become a member of the Reorganized Church on my former baptism, or would I not have to be baptized to become a member of the Reorganized Church. Please answer through the Herald and oblige many readers of the Herald.

Your brother in the gospel,

One cheerful face in a household will keep everything bright and warm within. Envy, hatred, malice, selfishness, despondency, and a host of evil passions may lurk around the door, they may even look within, but they can never enter and abide there; the cheerful face will put them to shame and flight.

Lying supplies those who are addicted to it with a plausible apology for every crime, and with a supposed shelter from every punishment. It corrupts the early simplicity of youth; it blasts the fairest blossoms of genius; and will, most assuredly, counteract every effort by which we may hope to improve the talents and mature the virtues of those whom it effects.

Two of the most precious things on this side of the grave are reputation and life. And yet, strange to tell, the most contemptible whisper may deprive us of the first, and the weakest weapon of the second. Be more anxious, therefore, to deserve a good name than to possess it.

The first institution vouchsafed to our race was the Sabbath, the next marriage. So give your first thought to Heaven, the next to your wife.

Individuality.

"And to every seed his own body."—Paul.

AS THE thoughts go out in contemplation of the various productions of the visible and invisible world, we see individuality stamped as a characteristic of each and all. The oak imbued with the powers of reproduction, bears seed after its kind, which successively germinates and produces, in paternal likeness, other forms endowed with similar characteristics, and like powers of propagation.

Marked distinction is noticable, not only with reference to species, but in regard to each individual plant. Should we go in quest of two, or more natural objects precisely alike, our search would doubtless be vain. The young oak, offspring of its maturer parent, though similar in general appearance and inheriting like nature, is endowed with every attribute essential to self-existence and progression in the sphere affording the conditions necessary to its sustenance and growth—it is a thing or creature of itself, separate and distinct from all else.

Invested with organization and life-power, it is capable of appropriating whatever properties are suitable to its purpose in formation and growth; and strange yet true it is that the limitless varieties composing the vegetable kingdom, with few exceptions, find, in the same soil and atmosphere, those properties essential to their growth; and in the appropriation of which, adverse colors and flavors are created, and an endless variety of shades and tinges, both in flavor and color, are produced. By this we learn that the basis of character, embracing form, color, flavor, &c., is individuality. Destroy this principle so essential to order, and we would have acorns and apples growing on the same tree; corn planted would produce wheat, and onions and cabbage would grow on bean vines, which would be a condition of things more illustrious for novelty than utility and order.

Some varieties are so nearly allied in specie, that, when placed in near proximity, amalgamation takes place, which usually injures or renders entirely worthless the product so produced.

Turn our attention to the animal kingdom, and similar features are noted.

The smallest ant, gnat, or animalcule, is blessed with as perfect an organization, and is as well provided with every natural facility promoting its welfare, as is the horse, the ox, or the elephant. Endowed with the essential powers of vision, locomotion, &c., it is fully able, when in its proper sphere, to take care of self.

The prime distinction that marks and separates the animal from the vegetable kingdom is, that the former possesses intelligence, while the latter does not. Life power is as discernable in one as in the other—each possesses spirit essence. A grain of corn is a composition of elements found in earth, air, water, and fire, which its own nature has appropriated through channels prescribed by law. Two of these may appear to human sagacity precisely alike, while one is alive and the other dead—that is, the spirit or life-power remains in one, and has gone from the other. Where? Perhaps "to God who gave it."

In view of facts referred to, and convictions arising from observation, we conclude that intelligence and spirit are not always synonymous.

We look internally and discover that intellect resides in the brain—nowhere else, yet through every extremity of the body permeates the life principle of spirit. This essence, though not imbued with intelligence, is susceptible of pleasant, or disagreeable sensations, being thoroughly invested with the attribute of sensibility. Intellect discerns, weighs, decides, directs; in subordination the spirit acts and executes its prescribed measures. Man's preeminence over every other form of animal organization is due to his superior intellect. The brute creation recognize this superiority and obey him. Made in the image or likeness of his creator, he is capable of paying homage and rendering devotion not recognized nor understood by the lower order of beings. His intended sphere is an exalted one, but observation teaches that all do not make the same proficiency in appropriating those existing elements suitable to the promotion of intellectual and spiritual life. True, these influences do not always abound alike or in the same degree in every locality, but it will be observed that where similar, or even the same conditions surround different ones, the nature of one, by virtue of affinity's laws, will appropriate the good, while others inhale the evil.

Although there are certain similarities of feature, form and color, by which nationalities are distinguished, and peculiarities common to families in which the resemblance seems quite vivid, yet individual distinction is so great, as to make, upon close acquaintance, each one seem almost entirely dissimilar to all others; more especially is this true with regard to disposition.

To the casual observer, honey bees of a specie are precisely alike, but observation teaches that they—though they be numbered by the millions perhaps—know each other, and one from another; and should one from a neighboring hive make his advent among them, he is immediately interrogated, apprised of his mistake, treated as a spy, and, at the point of the bayonet, (bees have bayonets, I am a witness to this fact) he is escorted beyond the picket lines, with a higher appreciation of "home, sweet home." I suppose there are exceptions to this rule, as in cases of swarming, however, am not posted in "bee-ology."

Individuality marks every creature of earth, and doubtless millions of earths and Heaven above.

In Heaven "we shall know each other," identity will not be lost. Upon earth we look over the vast sea of human faces, each an index to character, feelings, hopes, desires, aspirations, and every emotion within; none are alike. The aged sire, the man in prime, the expectant youth, the prattling child, the dimpled new-born babe,—in each inheres a disposition of its own. Life's passage only serves to illustrate and develop the character of this germ. Surrounding and attendant influences may and do affect its development, but do not destroy its individuality. Adam in Eden, and Adam in Heaven were one and the same. Whatever we do in life, whatever we are, or whatsoever happiness we attain to in time or eternity, finds its basis in our individuality.

Repudiate this and the doctrine of Eternal Judgment, would be unjust and untrue. The judgment of men "according to their works," implies that the prime acts of life inhere, not in mere surroundings nor fortuitous circumstances, but in individual disposition.

The agency of man, so clearly declared in the word of God, embodies the sentiment which individual experience verifies, that man is endowed with all the faculties essential to "choosing" whatsoever is congenial to his nature; hence it is that men are held accountable for the manner in which they exercise this right. "This is the condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men loved darkness rather than light, because their deeds were evil." "Evil deeds" were the result of choice, originating in disposition, indicated by the statement, they "loved darkness rather than light." Paul's description of the resurrection implies that all will be resurrected, judged, and assigned the sphere which, by virtue of affinity, is suited to their condition and development; which judgment and assignment are based upon the consideration and in pursuance of previous "works."

The glorious orb of day, that scintillates his shining rays throughout the boundless universe, holding, with his mighty powers of attraction, a system of dependent worlds too vast to number, being the highest visible type of magnificence, glory, and power, symbolizes the exalted state of bliss to which mortal man may attain; the pale faced moon with its clouded disc, prefigures the happiness of those whose inherent disposition lead them to no higher sphere, while the twinkling stars reflect the more remote rays of peace that gem the minimum crowns of delinquent ones, who at last did "bow the knee" and "confess that Jesus was the Christ to the glory of God the Father."

The paths leading to these several spheres of joy and peace are in the world, and, we think, ever have been. Though at times the one "straight and narrow pathway" pointing and leading to the zenith of glory, has been obscure to mortal vision, still the desires of every heart have been duly weighed; and faithful, weary feet that have diligently sought its passage, will find rest and happiness at its termination commensurate with labor performed.

Many things there are pertaining to our existence that finite wisdom does not fathom, but as we look upon the gospel of the Son of God, and our souls are filled with the sweet cadence of its celestial sounds, gentle chords of love and tenderness, untouched by other strains, are moved with ecstasy and delight. Slumbering fires and hitherto unawakened emotions are aroused, rekindled, and brought to a vivid glow. Each heart a sacred altar upon which is sacrificed, and from which ascends in curling wreaths, the pure incense of filial love and devotion. Needy and thirsty souls hitherto wandering in the darkness and sorrow of confusion, attracted, induced, and imbued by and with its crystal gleam are first made hopeful, then secure by its love, justice, and munificence.

Glory to God on high,
For the blessings and gifts of his love;
Our souls in rapture draw nigh,
As we feast from the manna above.
All honor and praise to Him.
No longer in darkness we roam;
Sweet songs of gladness we'll sing,
As heavenward journeying home.

G. S. HYDE.

Was Thomas Jefferson an Infidel?

THE above question is generally answered in the affirmative; especially by infidels.

They boast much of great men who were skeptical and always name Jefferson among the rest. It would make no difference to the writer whether he was or not; for he claims the right to think independently of Thomas Jefferson, or any other man; but as he has seen that such things have a weight with some he has looked up the matter; and gleaned some facts which has convinced him, that while Thomas Jefferson may not have endorsed any of the systems of religion taught in his days; yet he was a believer in the overruling power of God and the religion of Jesus Christ.

John S. C. Abbott says of him: "Mrs. Jefferson was a christian, a loving disciple of the Redeemer. But there were no cheering Christian hopes to sustain the sinking heart of her husband."

Was this opinion formed of him because of his disbelief in God, or because he did not endorse the prevailing systems of religion. We shall see. His first inaugural address closes with the following words:

"And may that Infinite Power which rules the destinies of the universe, lead our councils to what is best, and give them a favorable issue for your peace and prosperity."

This shows conclusively that Jefferson believed in a power which would control and direct the minds of men.

At the time of his daughter Maria's death, his other daughter, Martha, says of him: "I found him with the Bible in his hands. He who has been so often and so harshly accused of unbelief,—he, in his hour of intense affliction, sought and found consolation in the sacred volume.

The comforter was there for his true heart and devout spirit, even though his faith might not be what the world calls orthodox."

This solves the question; he believed in God and the Bible; but did not agree with what was called orthodox, and for that reason was branded as an infidel.

In answer to a letter of consolation from a friend he wrote: "We sorrow not, then, as others who have no hope, but look forward to the day which joins us to the great majority." Then he had hope of a future life.

In answer to a question regarding his religious faith he said: "Say nothing of my religion, it is known to my God and myself alone." It is said that he formed in a blank book such passages in the evangelists as come directly from the lips of the Savior.

Of this he wrote to a friend; "A more beautiful or precious morsel of ethics I have never seen. It is a document in proof that I am a real Christian; that is to say, a disciple of the doctrines of Jesus."

Thomas Jefferson Randolph, his grandson, wrote of him as follows: "In his contemplative moments, his mind turned to religion, which he studied thoroughly.

He had seen and read much of the abuses and perversion of Christianity; he abhorred those abuses and their authors, and denounced them without reserve. * * * * * A gentleman of some distinction calling upon him, and expressing his disbelief in the truths of the Bible, his reply was, "Then, sir, you have studied it to little purpose."

Though Thomas Jefferson is branded by historians and others as being an infidel. We see by the above authentic statements that he believed in an infinite power directing the councils of this nation; he believed in a future state of existence; he believed in the doctrines of Jesus, and in the Bible.

He was infidel to the abuses and perversion of Christianity, and unreservedly denounced them and their authors; for this he bears the name of infidel.

We are satisfied if those who quote great men as authority will manifest such infidelity as did Thomas Jefferson!

CREDULOUS.

GREAT MINDS.—Very few of the great minds of this country have come from the city, or the cradle of the rich. The farm and the workshop have supplied by far the greatest number of our eminent men.

Praise is not valuable unless it comes from one who has also the courage to condemn.

A New Departure.

H. W. BEECHER, the already famous preacher and Pastor of Plymouth church, Brooklyn, New York, has, if it were possible added another feather to his cap of notoriety. The following taken from the Chicago Times of October 11th will more readily tell the story. What is Orthodox Christianity coming to?

Beecher a Law to Himself.

HENRY WARD BEECHER astonished the meeting of the New York and Brooklyn Association of Congregational churches in the Park Congregational church, Brooklyn, October 10th, by withdrawing from membership. He had been assigned to open the discussion on the subject of "Spiritual Barbarism." He said it had occurred to him that this subject might have been selected on account of his expression of views in The North American Review last August, in which he had described some theological doctrines as barbaric. As this article had led to many inquiries and comments concerning his own theological views, he thought this a good opportunity to state his views fully, especially as he had determined to close his remarks with withdrawal from membership in the association. He said he felt as a Christian gentleman that it was not right for him to lay upon any one the responsibility of his peculiar position. His views had not materially changed in forty years. He had often felt that his ministerial brethren were called upon to bear an undue share of responsibility for him, and now he had definitely determined to keep this association, or its members, from such a position, and that his defense should be no further part of their duty. He believed that he should not be any the less in sympathy with them, but rather in closer bonds of love. He would do anything for them or their churches, even more freely and heartily than before. He then stated some views of the nature of God, as set forth in the Westminster confession. He said the eternal decree of God, as set forth, to create a large part of men and angels for the purpose of eternal torment, was barbaric. Such doctrines he rejected with an impetus that touched the very foundation of his soul. The doctrines of man's total inability to obey the laws of God, he also rejected, as well as the gross and physical representations of future punishment. He believed in future punishment, thoroughly, but he believed the wholesome influence of that doctrine had been largely destroyed by substituting the slaughter-house notion of hell. He rejected the whole doctrine of original sin as founded on the fall of Adam as barbaric. He expressed his full belief in a personal God, and utterly repudiated all atheism, and also the theory of Matthew Arnold that God is nothing but a tendency, a mere blind power not within ourselves. He believed, although he could not explain it, in the doctrine of the trinity. His own thought and faith were concentrated upon Jesus Christ. So literally did he believe Christ to be divine that he could not really pray to any other being. He sometimes tried to pray to the Father, but always ended by addressing his prayer to Christ. He also believed in divine Providence, both general and special. He believed in answer to prayer. He thought there were millions of prayers that were not answered, because they ought not to be. He believed in miracles because he believed that they were just as possible to-day as they ever had been, if only the same circumstances should happen. He emphatically believed in the two great miracles of the New Testament, the miraculous conception, and the resurrection of Jesus Christ. He did not believe in the verbal inspiration of the Bible, but he believed in the direct influence of God upon the souls of men who wrote the different books of the Bible, although in very different degrees.

Thus far Mr. Beecher proceeded without interruption, but when he passed to the subject of the atonement he was interrupted with many questions. The summing up of his statement was that he did not believe in the theory of substitution or in the doctrine that all punishment which belonged to the human race, or any part of it, was concentrated upon the head of Christ. He held that human souls may only be saved through suffering, and that Christ as the representative of the divine nature on earth suffered beyond all others for the sake of men and as an exhibition of the eternal love of God, and of God's willingness to suffer in order to save men. This part of his statement appeared to give the least satisfaction to the association, although several members expressed their approval. He closed with a few words on the subject of future punishment, repeating in substance what he had said before. He then formally bade the association farewell, assuring the members of his continued love and of his belief that they would not be separated from him in heart or in sympathy, and they and he probably could work together in more complete harmony without having any special ecclesiastical relation.

Mr. Lloyd offered a resolution requesting Mr. Beecher to reconsider his withdrawal, which was referred by unanimous consent to a committee consisting of Dr. Storrs and the Rev. W. C. Stiles.

Thomas G. Shearman, of the lay delegates of Plymouth church to the association, said to-night, when asked concerning the significance of this step of his pastor: "Plymouth church does not withdraw from the association. This is only Mr. Beecher's withdrawal of his personal membership. He is not delegated by the church, and is not necessarily a member on account of his ministerial office. Several other ministers, members of the association, are in spiritual sympathy with him. The denomination permits its ministers perfect liberty in the matter. Mr. Beecher's chief difference of views is with reference to the doctrines of the atonement and of future punishment. It is now agreed that a minister is not to be excluded from the pastorate of a Congregational church by reason of holding these views of future punishment. That has been decided by two councils, one in Connecticut and the other in Illinois, representing fifty churches. It was unanimously held that such views are not a ground for refusing fellowship to a church or its pastor. Among the Congregational ministers whose faith is similar to Mr. Beecher's are the Rev. Newman Smyth, of New Haven, the successor of Dr. Leonard Baker, and the Rev. John M. Whiton, of Newark. I have no reason to think that Mr. Beecher's expression of his views will create any dissension in Plymouth church. He has expressed pretty much the same views at various times in detail, although never all at one time."

Gospel Antiquity.

AN other evidence as to time and place of the origin of the new covenant, age or dispensation, is that upon which it is based, viz.: The divinity of the crucified one. This is the energising, life-giving, touch stone. It is that which underlies and gives strength (efficacy) to the whole structure of the new institution, temple, tabernacle, or kingdom. It is that which Peter confessed upon which Jesus said he would build his Church. The prophetic eye has not been closed to the important matter of laying this stone, neither to the effect, or result of it being laid. A tried, precious, rejected, corner, foundation stone. Isaiah 8:14 says, "And he shall be for a sanctuary, but for a stone of stumbling, a rock of offense to both the houses of Israel, for a sign and a snare for the inhabitants of Jerusalem."

Again, Isaiah 28:14, 16: "Wherefore hear the word of the Lord, ye scornful people that rule in Jerusalem. * * * Therefore thus saith the Lord God, behold I lay in Zion for a foundation, a stone, a tried stone, a sure foundation, he that believeth shall not be confounded."

There might be much other, but these suffice to point forward to the beginning of the new temple agreeing with that foreseen by others, that it would be made with the house of Israel, house of Juda in Jerusalem. Exactly agreeing in point of time, place and people with the beginning of the gospel of the new covenant, and the time of making the new vessel, sanctuary, temple, or kingdom as described by the prophets otherwheres. The laying of this stone and the beginning of the new temple with its covenant law must run parallel with each other. But now let us go forward and look back. Paul, "Other foundations can no man lay save that is laid which is Christ Jesus." Not his body, a spiritual thing would not rest on a literal thing, but on his divinity. Paul determined to know nothing but Christ and him crucified. Resolved not to preach where Christ (the foundation) had been named lest he should build (he being a builder) on another man's foundation. And he warns other builders to be careful how they build. "This is the stone which you builders rejected." Peter exhibited this stone on the day of Pentecost in Jerusalem says, "Therefore let all the house of Israel and all the house of Juda know assuredly that God hath made that same Jesus, whom you have by wicked hands crucified and slain, both Lord and Christ."

When they heard this they were anxious to be builded on the foundation. Does this meet the prophetic specifications? Yes. Paul says, we preach Christ (the stone) crucified; to the Jews a stumbling block, to the Greeks foolishness, but to them who are saved the power of God and the wisdom of God." Paul speaking of the Jews says,—"they stumble at that stumbling stone" which was Christ. And so another straw is lost in the effort of trying to show that this institution, or some fragment of it existed away back, that therefore the gospel must have existed. I know that the stone existed, but it had not been made manifest, had not been laid as a foundation, was not part of the building in reality, but was only prepared to be. I don't know why men want more than the truth; we have got the truth of God in the principles of the gospel with the presence of God in sanction, and we do not need more. But we do need to loosen the wheels of Zion from all the rubbish that binds her that she may rest upon a solid foundation. "Yea, that she may roll forward and accomplish the purpose of the Head (Christ) even the gathering into one all things both in heaven and in earth even in him, (Christ the body the church.) Eph. 1:9-11.

Again, it may be claimed by some that Melchisedec's priesthood, or the lineage thereof, can be traced back to Adam; and that therefore the gospel plan must have been extant then with this priesthood. But in the light of that which has already been adduced from the revelations of God's word pointing to the severing from every tie that would bind by law or covenant, and the induction of the new institution it would seem impossible for any thing to appear to the contrary unless it come in by the weakness of man. There are two reasons why I can, or can not believe a thing presenting its self to be divine, viz. 1st. If it is reasonable. 2d. If it is not contrary to that which has as good a claim to divinity. In considering the matter of Heb. 7, I shall consider that I am living in the days of Paul, that I am a Hebrew, the eldest son of my father; that he holds a certain position that he by a certain order pronounces his blessing on me; that I take a journey into a far country, knowing that I can not attain to this position during the life of my father, that I can only inherit it by lineal descent from my father at his death. After long years I return in the interest of my inheritance and finding that my father has just died. I would understand that by making evidence that I was the eldest male descendant of the deceased, the rule governing the case would give the inheritance to me. In short I would understand that this priesthood came by lineage, by descent, by father and mother and that it had a beginning of days at the end of life—that of the father. The Spirit of God frequently takes of things that we are well acquainted with to explain that which we are not. Paul speaking to me then, gives me this information, that the person he speaks of does not receive his priesthood by virtue of the things which gave me mine, but that he (Melchisedec) is Priest of the Most High God, King of Salem, (afterwards Jerusalem), king of peace; without father, without mother, without descent, not having a beginning of days at the end of life. Like that of the Son of God without the death of the Father. I will understand him clearly, Heb. 7:13, when he tells me that "he of whom these things is spoken pertaineth to another tribe, of which no man gave attendance at the altar; that therefore there was no priests among them. And when he says that our Lord sprang out of Juda, of which tribe Moses spake nothing concerning priesthood, I would think like

Paul, that if there had been any priests there, Moses would have made some reference to them, and knowing that our Lord did not get his priesthood at the end of the life of his father, and as cited in 14th and 15th verses as there was no evidence that he (Jesus) came in a line of priests, I would think it very evident that this priesthood did not come by a lineal descent by the father and mother. I may learn further that the power that makes such a priest does not come by virtue of a commandment in a carnal law that can not cleanse from sin. But from a divine power resting in a spiritual law, perfect in its application for the cleansing from sin and that can give eternal life. I would be forced from the general discourse of Paul to believe that there was not only a change of the law and a change of the priesthood, but that both the law and the priesthood were very different; the new taking for its people and priesthood of every nation, kindred and tongue, without distinction of race, or color; nothing except the proper disposition of mind and heart. Now I confess frankly, and I hope honestly, if I know my own heart, that I fail to see any inspiration in that which would tell me that delegated power had no father and mother. Wonderful logic this. But I can see reason in the logic that it is without father and mother in that it is not dependent on such. I can also see reason in the thought of it having a beginning of days at the end of the life, that of the father when he would vacate it. But there is no reason in that this priesthood had no beginning of days and that it therefore has always existed. This is Judaism trying to link back. Think a little I pray you—delegated power have no beginning of days? Now power is not priesthood till it is put upon, or invested in another. Paul tells us that Jesus was made a priest and that he was not such till he had attained to it. Now who is there that does not know that every priest that ever lived on the earth, Jesus not excepted, had a beginning of days for his priesthood the very day that he was made such. I confess that I can see nothing in this but the greatest of weakness of man in trying to trace this lineage, since it is not only contrary to the teaching of this Apostle here but is also utterly contrary to the broad premises of the new covenant which gathers of every nation its people, putting them all on equality—one as likely to hold the priesthood as another; so far as lineage is concerned. And so far as the Aaronic priesthood is concerned I guess it passed away with the law that created it when it was nailed to the cross. Else there must be a piece of the old institution brought over and patched on the new; and if so, I fear the rent is worse as Jesus said it would be. What do you think, is it bettered? But the veil of their temple was rent in twain and the presence of the Lord deserted it when their covenant with the law thereof was taken out of the way, and we would have no need of them now for the Lord said "Sacrifices and offerings thou wouldst not, but a body hast thou prepared me." "Again in burnt offerings and sacrifices thou wast not well pleased." And this priest having offered his own body alive, the order is therefore in this new and living way for every one to offer his own body a living sacrifice, which is not only our privilege, but our reasonable service. I confess that I am sick of this mixing things, but I hope that no one will try to doctor me unless he is willing to be careful to observe the law of the Great Physician. I hope that no one will flatter themselves that there is no need of bothering ourselves about these things, for it is evident that if they are error they are a burden to the truth. It should certainly be a bad person that would object to us examining any and every thing presenting itself as the word of God, for truth alone will save, and we are all responsible for ourselves.

Another evidence of the origin of the new institution with its covenantal law, is the division of time which is distinguished by the following, some of which have been produced hitherto for another purpose. The end of the old covenant with the law pertaining to it having come, there was also the end of that dispensation, age, or world; creating a division of the time. The apostle recognized it, 1 Cor. 10: 11, King's translation. "These things happened unto them (in the wilderness) for ensamples unto us, and they are written (old scriptures) for our admonition upon whom (apostle and others) the end of the world has come." Again, Rom. 15: 4, "Things written afore time (before their time or dispensation) were written for our admonition and learning, that we, through patience and comfort of the Scriptures might have hope." Heb. 1: 1, 2. God who at sundry times and in diverse manners spake in the time then past, had in the last days of the Jewish age, or world, spoken unto them by his Son. The last days of a world would be near the end thereof. Well, the apostle says he (Christ) was not like the priests in the other institutions making many offerings. For then must he oft have suffered since the foundation of the world, (previous age, or world), but now once in the end of the world hath He appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself. "So Jesus cried, It is finished," having filled the covenant, taking the law out of the way, the veil of the temple being rent in twain and it deserted as to the presence of the Most High. No more shining faces of the priests after this, no work of offering any more by authority in this earthly tabernacle, or temple made with hands, for the Lord did not dwell in such any longer. Acts 7: 48, "Old things are done away and all things become new."

It is remarkable that there is a space of nearly fifty days that there is no covenant in force on the earth, from the time of the crucifixion until the next Pentecost (fiftieth day). Now as there has been a general disannulling of that which had become like an old garment, as spoken of by our Savior, there was no attempt to patch up the old with that which was new, but there is a general introduction and an inauguration of that which was new. There is the founding of not only the new spiritual temple, or tabernacle, but also the laying of this stone is the founding of the new age, or world,—so styled by the Apostles. This predestinating and choosing to the adoption of children (in Christ) did not occur before there was a world, or any one to choose, or fix the destiny of, and yet it is said to be done before the foundation of the world. Why do we not find such an expression in the Old Scriptures. Because the foundation of the world referred to had not yet been effected. The Apostle in Eph. 1, after using the relative pronouns 'us' and 'we,' referring to himself and the rest of his Jewish brethren,—says, "In whom ye also trusted (ye Gentiles) after ye had heard the word of truth, the gospel of your salvation." The Jews are the ones who had been chosen, predestined, elected; who are referred to by the pronouns 'us' and 'we.' Paul says, "I could wish my body accursed from Christ for my brethren, my kinsmen according to the flesh, who are Israelites, to whom pertain the law, the covenants and the promises, and of whom Christ came." They were a peculiar people separate from all others by circumcision predestinated, fore-known, i. e. known before the foundation of the apostolic age or world. Paul says, "God hath not cast away his people whom he fore-knew, for I also am an Israelite of the tribe of Benjamin of the seed of Abraham."

Christ who spoke in the last days of the Jewish age, or world, speaks of a sin that would neither be forgiven in that world; the one he was in, nor in the world to come. We may know what world was to come by their preaching the ushering in of the new age. Matt. 25: 34, Jesus says, "Then will the King say unto them on his right hand, Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." Was this kingdom prepared from the foundation of the earth? I think it is better understood in this light,—about the founding of the new age, or world, Jesus went away, we are told, to receive for himself a kingdom, (the rights of a kingdom). He said "I go away to prepare a place for you, that where I am there ye may be also." In this way the king could say, "Enter into the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the apostolic age, or world, for it was at that time that he went to prepare it. Rev. 13: 8, we have the language, And all that dwell upon the earth whose names are not written in the book of life of the Lamb slain from the foundation of the earth, but more literally from the foundation of the apostolic age, or world; for then is when he was slain. Again, Grace given before the foundation of the world to certain parties, i. e., the new world.

There are many other passages that might be brought to bear, but these are sufficient connected with that quoted in regard to the founding of the new spiritual temple, to show distinctly that there is here not only the end of one world but the founding of another also. This time has not only been seen but has been pointed to by the prophets since the first transgression, which ought to forever settle the question relative to the ushering in of the dispensation of the gospel with the new and everlasting covenant. This new institution is seen by the prophetic eye and painted in the following manner by Isaiah, the stone was to be for a sanctuary. Abraham looked for a city, a heavenly. It is described as the tabernacle of God with men. John saw it, the holy city, New Jerusalem, adorned as a bride. Again he saw it having twelve foundations, having the names of the Twelve Apostles written therein. Paul speaking of the same thing (Heb. 11: 18, 22-24) says, "For ye are not come unto the mount that might be touched, and that burned with fire; nor unto blackness, and darkness and tempest. But ye are come unto Mount Zion, and unto the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem, and to an innumerable company of angels, to the General Assembly and Church of the First Born * * * and to Jesus the Mediator of the new covenant." He says they had come unto this holy city—Church of the First Born. Jesus is the "first born from the dead that he might have the pre-eminence in all things," we are told. Again, Paul speaking of the same thing, Eph. 1: 11, 12 says, "In whom also we have obtained an inheritance, being predestinated according to the purpose of Him who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will; that we (we Jews) should be to the praise of his glory who first trusted in Christ." The same thing is referred to 1 Pet. 2: 3-9, "If so be that you have tasted that the Lord is gracious, to whom coming as unto a living stone, disallowed indeed of men, but chosen of God, and precious, ye also as lively stones, are built up a spiritual house, a holy priesthood, (any one could make an offering now—that of his body), to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God by Jesus Christ. Wherefore also it is contained in the Scriptures (Old Scriptures) "Behold, I lay in Zion a chief corner stone, elect, precious; and he that believeth on Him shall not be confounded. Unto you therefore that believeth he is precious; but unto them who are disobedient, the stone which the builders disallowed, the same is made the head of the corner, and a stone of stumbling and a rock of offense, even to them which stumble at the word, being disobedient. But ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a peculiar people, that you should show forth the praises of him who hath called you out of darkness into his marvelous light."

The foundation of that represented by these various figures was made bare, or laid by the apostles witnessing the divinity of the Messiah, the Christ; in that of his resurrection from the dead, according to the prophets. No man can successfully deny this be he who he may. Paul says, "I as a wise master builder have (according to the grace which God hath given me) laid the foundation." We can see plainly how he laid it. "Other foundations can no man lay save that which is laid which is Christ Jesus, the Lord. Who then ever witnessed his resurrection and thus laid the foundation before he was declared to be the Son of God with power according to the spirit of holiness by the resurrection. When he was here he forbid the disciples to do so until he was raised from the dead. To the law and to the testimony in this matter.

I shall now bring a few passages pointing to a time when the system of the gospel was not published, and also to a time when it began to be published. It was not published in the days of the prophets spoken of by Paul, but was published in his day, and he an apostle of it. Rom. 1: 1, 2, 3: "Paul an apostle of Jesus Christ separated unto the gospel of God which he had promised afore by his prophets in the Holy Scriptures." "The beginning of the gospel of Jesus Christ as it is spoken of in the prophets—Behold I send my messenger before thy face to prepare the way before thee, the voice of one crying in the wilderness, &c.—Mark 1: 1-3

The salvation of the gospel first began to be spoken of by the Lord, but was afterward confirmed unto us by them that heard him. Paul, Heb. 2: 3. "Now to him that is of power to establish you according to my gospel, and the preaching of Jesus Christ, according to the revelation of the mystery which was kept secret since the world began, but now is made manifest by the scriptures of the prophets, and according to the commandment of the everlasting God, made known to all nations for obedience of faith."

This gospel of the seed that was to bless all nations which was commanded to be preached to all nations, the mysterious union of all nations gathered, and made one in the Church—the body of Christ—even in him. This broad premises of the new covenant had been hid in God from the beginning of the world according to Paul, Eph. 3: 3, 4, 5, 9, "How that by revelation he made known unto me the mystery, (as I wrote afore in few words whereby when ye read ye may understand my knowledge in the mystery of Christ), which in other ages was not made known unto the sons of men, as it is now revealed unto his holy apostles and prophets by the Spirit. That the Gentiles should be fellow heirs and of the same body, and partakers of his promise in Christ by the gospel, (that is, that he would, as promised, bless all nations), and to make all men see what is the fellowship of the mystery, (of the gospel making all nations one in the covenant), which from the beginning of the world hath been hid in God."

Paul speaking of this same union of the Jewish and Gentile nations says, "God made no difference between them and us, purifying their hearts by faith and hath broken down the middle wall of partition between us and them making of twain (two) one new man, (new church), hence the exhortation to grow up in him into the perfect stature of a man, "Whereof I am made a minister according to the dispensation of God which is given me for you to fulfill the word of God, (promise of God) even the mystery which hath been hid from generations, but now is made manifest to his Saints." 2 Tim. 1: 9, 10: "Who hath saved us and called us, with a holy calling not according to our work, but according to his own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began, (given them by promise). But is now made manifest by the appearing of our Savior Jesus Christ, who hath abolished death, and hath brought life and immortality to light through the gospel." Titus 1: 2, 3. "Receiving the end of your faith, even the salvation of your souls, of which salvation the prophets have inquired and searched diligently. Who prophesied of the grace that should come unto you; searching what, or what manner of time, the Spirit of Christ which was in them did signify; when it testified before hand the sufferings of Christ and the glory that should follow, unto whom it was revealed that not unto themselves, but unto us they did (or would) minister the things which are now reported unto you, by them who have preached the gospel unto you with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven, which thing the angels desired to look into"—1 Pet. 1: 9-12.

I guess it had hardly been made known in any part of the world. "In hope of eternal life which God that can not lie promised before the world began, but hath in due time, (a time promised and therefore expected) manifested his word (promised) through preaching."—Titus 1: 2, 3. "For verily I say unto you that many righteous men and prophets have desired to see those things which you see and to hear those things which you hear and have not heard them." "These things spake Jesus in parables that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the prophet. I will open my mouth in parables; I will utter things which have been kept secret from the foundation of the world."—Matt. 13: 17, 35; and Luke 10: 22-24. By reading the parables you may know the things which had been kept secret, 1 Cor. 2: 7, "But we speak the wisdom of God in mystery, even the hidden wisdom, which God ordained before the world unto our glory. Not that it had ever been made known and then hid, but that it was promised but kept secret till the due time of the Lord—when the fullness of time had come; when God would send forth his Son and institute and publish the plan.

Respectfully your brother in the hope of the triumph of truth and the speedy redemption. SOLA.

"Try the Spirits."

It is very important to know the kind of spirit we possess. When we through obedience, come into possession of the "Divine Spirit," the fruits are manifest, as well as the "gifts," by which we are to know of the truthfulness of the promise. Since I embraced the latter day work I have been a firm believer in the "gifts of the gospel," and have never doubted but that they were, and are, indispensably necessary; and that the Church is as much incomplete without them, as the human body would be without its members.

We must not forget that we are liable to err in relation to the different manifestations. If we through carelessness, or wilful disobedience, allow ourselves to be controlled by an impure spirit, we become subject to that spirit, and recognize the manifestations as those of God—hence we are deceived.

Some Latter Day Saints claim, that it is impossible for counterfeit manifestations to be made through them, and hence conclude that all and every manifestation is of God, and is to be received by all Saints as such. Truth never contradicts itself, but is always harmonious and consistent, and so long as we are in possession of the Spirit that guides into all truth, we will be able to detect the counterfeit. Every Latter Day Saint should understand that the enemy has power to deceive, and that power is being exercised, and in consequence of it, we find division in the branches, and some falling out by the way. We can not be too careful how we pronounce, "Thus saith the Lord." I believe God does speak through his servants, in dreams, visions and revelations, but the temples must be holy, for I understand that "His Spirit will not dwell in unholy temples," consequently, when anything is revealed, contrary to what has already been revealed, accepted and proven to be by the Spirit of God, it should be condemned.

The Elders can not be too careful in watching after this evil and checking the first manifestation of it. I have witnessed much injury done the Church by unwise action. Zeal is commendable; but, zeal without knowledge, works great evils.

The so called Christian world is in an undecided state of mind; it is divided and subdivided almost indefinitely; and thousands are anxiously asking "What is truth?" Now, if they could only be satisfied, that one, of all the answers given to this question was true, they would cheerfully accept; but they lack confidence in all, hence the reason, why we find so much indifference. If we, as Latter Day Saints, would only live up to our privilege, possessing the "gifts," in connection with a pure life, demonstrating to the world the truth of the gospel we profess, we would soon see the effects, for it would be like, "leaven," and the result would be, the whole lump would become leavened. "By this, shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one for another."

I have written in kindness hoping that it may result in good.

Is the Heart the Seat of Affection.

"FIDEI DEFENSOR'S" answer (?) to the above question sounded quite plausible when I gave it a superficial perusal. But noticing that some of the important questions were wholly left out, no solution of them attempted. I thought I would try and adjust the proposition of such reasoning, and I must say, I can see no analogy therein. The thread of his argument runs thus. Whereas "Appetite" as also "certain animal passions to which we owe our mundane existence, which reside not in the brain, but are nevertheless represented there." He concludes "the tender emotion, or affection, love, has its representative organ at the intellectual center, but does not necessarily reside there."

Now in my humble opinion, if questions numbers three and four of the first article were applied to this, they would successfully dethrone it, and leave it without a single prop. For as soon as the stomach is put out of order appetite is affected, and those animal passions referred to are affected, if not to all intents and purposes destroyed, when their well known place of residence is disabled.

But not so with that affection, love, for though the heart (muscle) may be so badly disabled that at times, one has to remain nearly motionless, and yet it can scarcely furnish enough nutrition to sustain life, or may be affected ever so bad with any or every disease that organ is heir to, but as long as life lingers affection remains unmoved. To my mind there is stronger proof that the liver has that honor, for when that organ becomes morbose, in some who are noted for their love, they become peevish, sullen and morose.

But the most rational location I can conceive of for this "heaven born" principle, love, is that intellectual center, the head

I am a little surprised at some of the brother's logic; he says, "Every attribute of the character, and all that pertains to the soul, originates and centers in intelligence." His first statement is "The brain is the seat of intelligence."

Now if "the brain is the seat of intelligence" and intelligence is the originator, beginning, cause or producer of affection, and there is where it "centers," I fail to see how the heart can be where it resides. I may be dull of comprehension. I have been called stupid, and perhaps this is why I can not see how a thing can be "center" in one place, and seated, placed, or settled in another. I love the cause of truth. I love to hear the gospel trumpet, let the seat, or center of that love be where it may.

EX PARTE.

Woman's Rule in Russia.

"WHO is now the leading spirit of the Czar's Government?" I asked a high official. "A woman, as usual," he answered. "Like other monarchical countries, we have always had some women at the top or at the bottom of our Government."

During the thousand and twenty years of Russia's existence there have been eighty rulers, all told, of whom only five were women. But if we study Russian history, we shall find that nearly every Russian ruler has been ruled by a woman. Among Russian sovereigns there are seven canonized as "Saint," several are "Great," one is "Apostolic," one "Monomachos," one "Longarmed," one "Blessed," one "Soothsayer," one "Dark," one "Imposter," one "Brave," one "Proud," one "Terrible," one "Not-to-be-Forgotten," one "Money-sack" and one "Liberator;" but among the host of crowned heads that have ruled Russia for the past thousand years there was apparently but one "Wise" head, and that a woman's. The great Princess Olga of the tenth century, the first Christian sovereign of Russia, is known in history as "the Wise."

When the great Prince Vladimir, being yet pagan, consulted the representatives of his people as to what religion should be adopted, they answered: "The Greek religion, for were it not the best, your Grandmother Olga, the wisest of women, would not have adopted it;" and the worthy grandchild followed the example of his grandmother. The philosophers of to-day, however, would call her rather "the Smart" or "the Cunning."

After Olga for seven centuries no woman ascended the Russian throne. In 1725, when Peter the Great died, his charming and witty wife, "the Russian Asphasia," was proclaimed autocratix under the name of Catherine. In course of time there were three other Empresses, Ann, the niece of Peter the Great and murderess of the boy Czar, Peter II.; Elizabeth, the daughter of Peter the Great and murderess of the baby Czar, Ivan VI.; and Catherine II. the wife and murderess of Czar Peter III. The poets sang of Catherine II. as "the Northern Semiramis," and by her great vices and brilliant deeds she fully deserved that appellation. As for Ann and Elizabeth, the classical name of Messalina would be perfectly applicable to both.

Mme. Pobedonostz'eff, the leading spirit of the Russian Government of to-day, is the wife of the Chief Procureur of the Holy Synod and the most confidential counsellor of the Czar. She is young, beautiful and ambitious. She married Mr. Pobedonostz'eff but a few years ago. Her husband, a very old gentleman, is in love with her. It is said of him that the knightly motto, "God and my Lady," he changed into "God and My Wife," and upholds it as devoutly as a knight of old. He rises early, prays to God, adores his wife, and then goes to see the Czar, or the Ministers, or the Holy Synod, and everywhere he tries his best to carry out the commands of his charming goddess. Meanwhile she herself is not idle. She receives hosts of fair visitors of high rank, who, while offering their homage, seize the chance of commending their husbands, brothers or cousins. Sometimes this or that Minister of State does himself the honor of paying his respects to her. Occasionally she visits her Majesty, the Czaritza, to cheer her soul in her golden cage. And the Czar himself is there always at hand. Thus it has come about that, while the Czar keeps away from the capital of his empire, Mme. Pobedonostz'eff has somehow found herself to be the center of the Russian political world. Instead of the Czar's policy, or the Chancellor's, or the Minister's policy, we hear of the Madame's policy. With the modesty of an ascending star, she does not reveal her projects, but it is very doubtful whether any liberal reforms will find favor with her.

St. Petersburg Cor. N. Y. Sun.

Revelation to Emma Smith.

I HAVE been somewhat surprised of late to here some very severe criticism upon the revelation given to Emma Smith, found in Doc. and Cov's. sec. 24. The objectionable passage reads as follows: "A revelation I give unto you concerning my will, and if thou art faithful, and walk in the paths of virtue before me, I will preserve thy life, and thou shalt receive an inheritance in Zion."

The opposer of the latter day work claims that this prophecy has failed of fulfillment from the fact that Jackson county, Missouri, was pointed out as the Zion of the Lord, and she never received an inheritance there. Others who do not endorse the position taken by Emma Smith; but who claim to have a faith in the work say that she did not receive the promised inheritance, which is conclusive evidence that she did not comply with the conditions; namely to be "faithful, and walk in the paths of virtue." A little thought will convince the most skeptical that this so far from being a failure of prophecy is a very singular fulfillment.

In July, 1830, when this revelation was given, Emma Smith had no permanent abiding place and no visible means of support. Her husband's time and her own were spent in the interests of a church that was both numerically and financially weak. She would have been more than mortal if she did not, under these circumstances, have some misgivings, and sometimes fear as she looked out upon what, from a natural stand point, would appear a hopeless future. The Lord, looking with compassion upon her in her trouble, cheered her with these words: "And thou needst not fear, for thy husband shall support thee in the Church." Now, was this promise of an inheritance realized? If we can show that it was, will it not be a peculiar fulfillment of prophecy, when we consider how little prospect there was of such inheritance when the revelation was given. Will it not also be conclusive evidence that Emma Smith remained faithful and walked in the paths of virtue? It is a well known fact that Emma Smith, after years of trial, received an inheritance in Nauvoo, Illinois, and held possession of it until her death, while the Church was driven from Zion and her stakes.

Will this fill the requirement of the prediction? Let us see. In Doctrine and Covenants 107: 18 we read: "Therefore, let my servant Joseph, and his seed after him, have place in that house, from generation to generation forever and ever, saith the Lord, and let the name of that house be called the Nauvoo House, and let it be a delightful habitation for man, and a resting place for the weary traveler, that he may contemplate the glory of Zion, and the glory of this the corner-stone thereof; that he may receive, also, the counsel from those whom I have set to be plants of renown, and as watchmen upon her walls." Emma Smith was not promised an inheritance at the center place (Jackson county) but "in Zion." If Nauvoo is a corner-stone it must of necessity be "in Zion." This so boastfully quoted as an evidence against the revelation, or the Elect Lady, Emma Smith, is then but another link in the chain of evidence that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God. No prediction was ever made with less prospect of fulfillment, and yet none have been more literally and completely fulfilled.

CREDULOUS.

The Christian's Sabbath.

THE Sabbath is recognized in the Constitution of the United States, and its desecration forbidden by statutes, both state and national. Its observance is inwrought with our social and religious customs, and constitutes a marked feature of our national life.

By law our legislative halls are closed upon the Sabbath, our courts of justice suspended, our school rooms are shut, our manufactories dampen their fires, and places of amusement cease to invite their votaries, shops may not offer wares, nor legal contracts be made upon that day. Railroads are commanded to suspend their traffic, and steamboats to lie inactive at their wharves; while the Sabbath Schools gather the children, and the churches throw wide open their doors, inviting all to respect the law of the land and to obey the law of God; and this by the observance of the Sabbath as a day of rest, not of toil—a day of worship, not of amusement—a holy day, not a holiday. Why do Christians give the Sabbath a place so prominent and important in their civil and religious life? Because they believe it to be of Divine origin, of perpetual obligation, and its observance essential to the welfare of the individual, the prosperity of the church, and the perpetuity of the state. Of Divine origin, for God rested from his creative work, and commanded mankind to follow his example. He made the Sabbath for man, and he showed man how to observe it, by resting from his labors as God did from his. He "blessed" the day that its rest might be a blessing. He "sanctified it," that is, withdrew it from secular uses, and set it apart to holy purposes and sacred employments.

And this he did in the outset of the race, ordaining the day for man as man, and linking it with that other institution of Paradise

—the family—designing that they should ever stand together as they came from his hand, constituting the divine bases of all true and high human progress. Of perpetual obligation surely, not only because based in the necessities of man's nature, but because re-enacted thousands of years after its first announcement, in a moral code made for the race. It was not inserted in the civil, or ceremonial law of the Jews, but in the ethical law for all nations. It was embedded of the Ten Commandments, and buttressed on each side by moral laws forever binding and upon all men, and must needs stand with them and of equal obligation evermore. Nor does the fuller development of the gospel scheme in the New Testament, and the freedom given from the bondage of the Jewish code, afford any hint that the law of the Sabbath was abrogated. It had existed four thousand years, and must still exist unless annulled. No such repeal is found. But more than this is clear. The New Testament explicitly recognizes its continued obligation, and the Savior in his wonderful Sermon on the Mount, after referring to some of the laws of the Decalogue—sweeping away the false glosses put upon them by Jewish Rabbis—re-enacts the entire moral code, including the Sabbath of course. "Till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law till all be fulfilled. And that there might be no escape from this conclusion, he wraps up in a single phrase the original purpose, the right use, and the lasting obligation of this day: "The Sabbath was made for man," and while man exists it must be kept.

That the right observance of the Sabbath is essential to the welfare of both the Church and the nation, is demonstrable by unlimited testimony.

Says God in Isaiah 58: 13, 14: "If thou turn away thy foot from the Sabbath from doing thy pleasure on my holy day; and call the Sabbath a delight, the holy of the Lord honorable; and shalt honor him, not doing thine own ways, nor finding thine own pleasure, nor speaking thine own words: Then shall thou delight thyself in the Lord; and I will cause thee to ride upon the high places of the earth, and feed thee with the heritage of Jacob thy father; for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it."

And again: "Every one that keepeth the Sabbath from polluting it, and taketh hold of my covenant, even them will I bring to my holy mountain, and make them joyful in my house of prayer," "For my house shall be called a house of prayer for all people."—Isaiah 56: 6, 7.

Says Voltaire: "There is no hope of destroying the Christian religion, so long as the Christian Sabbath is acknowledged and kept by man as a sacred day." Says Blackstone, "A corruption of morals usually follows a profanation of the Sabbath. The keeping of one day in seven holy as a time of refreshment as well as for public worship, is of admirable service to a state, considered merely as a civil institution. It enables the industrious workman to pursue his occupation in the ensuing week with health and cheerfulness; it imprints on the minds of the people that sense of their duty to God so necessary to make them good citizens, which yet would be worn out and defaced by an unremitting continuance in labor without any stated time of recalling them to the worship of their Maker."

Says Bishop, on Criminal Law: "It is a mistake to suppose that Sabbath keeping is a thing merely of religious observance—the setting apart by the whole community of one day in seven, wherein the thoughts of men and their physical activities shall be turned into another than their accustomed channel, is a thing pertaining to the laws of nature as is the intervening of the nights between the days."

But why multiply witnesses when the fact that no nation can long prosper in material wealth, or high morality without a Sabbath, lies in the very nature of things. Persistent and intelligent labor is essential to material prosperity; but the rest of the Sabbath is essential for such labor; morality is essential to the perpetuity of free institutions; but a pure morality can not long exist without a properly observed Sabbath. While believing this, Christians do not ask nor wish the nation to enforce a religious observance of the Christian Sabbath. They only demand that the nation shall protect them in the exercises of their spiritual privileges, and shall not itself desecrate holy time by encouraging, or allowing secular employments on the day of rest. "They regard the civil Sabbath as essential for public morals and the self-preservation of the state;" The Christian Sabbath as essential to the progress of pure religion and the salvation of men. The spheres of the two—the civil and the Christian Sabbath—though harmonious, are not co-extensive; the civil prohibits desecration. The Christian does this, and also enjoins holy observances; and here runs the broad line between the duties of the Church and the nation. The nation should protect the Sabbath from injury; the church teach and incite men to spiritual improvement during its sacred hours. For the state or nation is no less responsible to God for the right discharge of its civil duties, than is the church for its spiritual functions. This view of the Sabbath as to its origin, perpetuity, binding obligations and infinite value to morals and religion, is a characteristic of our national life. It enter into the bone and sinew of every Christian. It is entrenched in the whole Christian habits; embodied in their belief and guarded by all good citizens and legislations; and should never lose hold on our affections and patriotism. Is it strange then if we plead for the preservation of the holy day both in its civil relations and in its sacred character and spiritual power? Ought we not to guard with holy jealousy that which is so essential to us as a people? Must we not protect its bulwark's, "The Christian's Sabbath," from all attacks, covert or open, from pretended friends or avowed enemies.

Take away the Sabbath and you deprive the man of his labor and toil, or poverty and sorrow, of his most humane and beneficent institution. Take away the Sabbath and you will destroy a mighty conservative force and dry up a pure fountain from which the Christian family, the church and the nation, receive constant nourishment and support. Take away the Sabbath and you shake the moral foundations of our national power and its prosperity; churches will be forsaken; Sabbath Schools emptied; domestic devotions will languish; the fountains of public and private virtue will dry up; a flood of profanity, licen-tiousness; and vice will inundate the land, labor will lose its reward, liberty will be deprived of its pillow, republican government would prove a failure and republican institutions would end in anarchy, confusion, despotism, and bloodshed. Yes! the end of the Sabbath would be for the United States, or any other nation, the beginning of the reign of Mammon, Bacchus and Venus, and finally overwhelm us in temporal and eternal ruin. No, we can not; we dare not, God helping us. The Christians will not give up the Sabbath.

Lord we would all our Sabbaths spend,
In thy most blest employ;
That all our work's on earth may end,
In heavens eternal joy.

Saints' Herald.

JOSEPH SMITH, EDITOR.

Lamoni, Iowa, November 1, 1882.

A MAN calling himself A. W. Dehner, or Dennis, victimised the Saints at Plano, about the 12th of October, claiming to be an employe of the Herald Office, and sent out by Bro. Joseph to attend to appointing agents for the HERALD, collect moneys, and receive subscriptions.

He managed to collect several sums at Plano, and appointed a Sr. Abbie A. Horton as "sole agent" for the HERALD at Plano. He also artfully collected some money, ostensibly for the repairing of the Temple at Kirtland; receiving from Sr. Elsie Walker some $9 for that purpose, and perhaps from others some smaller sums. He represented that he was employed as a short hand writer in the office, attended to the correspondence, answered all letters, &c.

The Herald Office has not now and has never had such an agent as this A. W. Dehner, or Dennis, claimed to be; nor is he in any wise employed in the Herald Office, or for it in any capacity. He is a swindler obtaining money from the Saints upon false statements.

He further stated that he had received some $30 from the Saints at Chicago for HERALD, and to aid the repairing of the Temple; which if true, seems very strange; that citizens of that sharpest of all sharp cities should be so easily taken in.

The Saints of Plano should have known better. They know that no stranger would be employed in the Herald Office in so confidential a position to its Editor, or sent out on an errand of the kind, except notice had first been given through the HERALD. And then how strange it is, that the Saints should be so ready to listen to a man they did not know, having no credentials from us, and to pay him money, when they know so well how to send money for HERALD purposes; and to whom moneys for Church purposes may be paid.

We sincerely thank Bro. John S. Patterson for his timely interference at Plano, and his denunciation of this A. W. Dehner as a fraud. Bro. Patterson remembered that the Kirtland Temple matter rested with the Bishopric, and knew that we would not send a man out on their business; and he so stated to the Saints at Plano, for which we thank him.

We warn the Saints against this A. W. Dehner, and against paying moneys for HERALD, or Church purposes to strangers, when there are Elders, presiding officers, Book Agents, and Bishop's Agent, whom they know are authorized to receive it. Now in this case, a shrewd speculator has secured some hardly earned dollars from members of the Church, for which they will in no event receive any benefit. We hope the rascal will be caught. He stated at Plano, that he resided at Lamoni, had boarded at Bro. Joseph's, and was on his way to Galesburg, Burlington and Lamoni. Who he really is we do not at present know. If he turns up any where among the Saints after this HERALD reaches them, we hope they will see that he is dealt with as the law of the land directs, according to the statutes in such cases made and provided.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

BRO. JOSEPH:—Will you please answer me this question through the Herald: In St. John, it says that God is a Spirit. My question is this: If God is a Spirit, why did he say to Christ when he made man, Let us make man in our own image.

A. Because a Spirit has identity of personage. God and Christ were both Spirit identities.

Also, this question: If a member of the Church is detained at home, through circumstances over which he has no control, has an Elder of the Church any right to administer the sacrament to said member after the meeting, in the member's house.

A. Yes, he may do so.

Q. Can we judge a man's Christianity or faith with a righteous judgment, by the way he puts his hands in his pockets and the amount he draws up and out? (for the good of the Church I suppose is meant)?

A. No; the amount is not the best criterion by which to judge. By "the way it is" done, might do, if all the circumstances, and the conditions under which it is done, are known and are taken into the account in making up the judgment. Prudent men and wise seldom betray their condition in money matters to others, and little can be known except from parties themselves.

THE HERALD A WEEKLY.

It is now expected that in January next the HERALD will be issued as a weekly, in the same form that it now has. It will be given a new dress, retaining as a whole its peculiar characteristics as a journal, increasing the subscription price thirty-five cents, that is $2 50 per year. This is only 35 cents for the doubled half.

We trust that this will meet with favor by our patrons; and that the same zeal to add to its usefulness, so long characterizing its correspondents and contributors will be continued in behalf of the weekly.

It is also expected that a portion of the paper will be devoted to the advertizing trade, as a means to aid in its continued existence as a weekly paper; for unless it is made to pay its way, the Board must need return to its semi-monthly issue again; which will be a bad step backward.

There are those who fear to see advertisements permitted in the HERALD, because that certain sorts are disreputable and unfit to appear in such a paper. "We don't want to see secular advertisements in our church paper," say they.

The point just where the legitimate and the illegitimate separate, the one stopping and the other beginning, is not very clearly laid down, and must very necessarily vary according to the way men view things; but the Board will in its management strive to suit every body at interest in the HERALD, except the unnecessary critical and the unduly fastidious; to these no particular attention will be paid.

Those in charge of the HERALD will use every endeavor to prevent the paper from developing into a merely secular advertizing sheet. And further, there should not be much fear exercised that the Board will permit advertisements of a disreputable and doubtful character to be inserted. But in this connection one thing should be remembered by every body, and that is, that the Herald Office and its affairs are, by the articles of Incorporation, under the sole control of the Committee of Publication, or Board of Publication, as it is known to the Church. Hence, the only method proper to employ in correcting any persistent evils inflicted by said Board in its management of Herald Office affairs, is by proper action at the conferences, by changing, or charging the Board.

THE UTAH MORMONS.

THE following statements made by Mr. A. N. Hamilton, the Editor of the Salt Lake Tribune, will probably give the situation in Utah in reference to the action of the Electoral Commission and the results obtained by the Edmunds Bill, so far as to facts. We quote from the Globe-Democrat, of St. Louis, for October 5th.

DISFRANCHISEMENT OF POLYGAMISTS FAILS TO SOLVE THE UTAH PROBLEM.

Mr. A. N. Hamilton, the Editor of the Salt Lake Tribune, is in St. Louis on a visit, the guest of George W. Parker, of the Cairo Short Line. In conversation with a Globe-Democrat reporter last evening he supplemented, with some interesting information and opinions, the rather startling news of yesterday morning from Salt Lake. The dispatches were to the effect that the Mormons had taken a position of open defiance to the Edmunds bill and were refusing squarely to surrender the offices to the appointees of Governor Murray.

"The Edmunds bill, as you know," said Mr. Hamilton, "disqualified polygamists from holding office and voting. As most of the county offices in Utah were held by polygamists, the effect would be to turn everything into confusion. To meet the emergency the Hoar amendment, as it was called, was attached. This provided for a special election in August, to fill all the offices, but the Commissioners who were to supervise the registration and exclude polygamists from the lists of voters, failed to reach Salt Lake in time to attend to the necessary work, and the election was not held. Under the amendment, however, Governor Murray was authorized, in the event of the failure of an election to fill by appointments the offices held by polygamists made ineligible by the Edmunds bill. This he has done, selecting good men, although the time was short. But, as the dispatches show, the Mormons refuse to surrender, and the matter goes into court."

To a question as to what the Mormons expected to gain by the course adopted, Mr. Hamilton said: "They think they can hold on to their offices until the next election, when they will be safe. There has been so much stealing by Mormon office-holders, and they are so afraid of exposure that they will not give up the records until they have tried every expedient to retain the offices. The last Legislature, Mormon as it was, passed a vote of censure on the County Clerk of Salt Lake County, one of the most important offices in the Territory, for refusing to give any account of his office. The whole Territory is in the same condition. The arrogance of the Tweed ring is intensified in the office-holders of Utah. No statements or exhibits are ever made of revenue and expenditures by county officials, and nobody knows what becomes of even the Territorial revenue."

A suggestion about official bonds Mr. Hamilton answered with a smile. Said he: "When Col. Nelson, of our staff, was appointed by Governor Murray to take the place of the polygamist County Clerk of Salt Lake, the one I mentioned as being censured by the Legislature, he applied to the Probate Judge to know what bond was required. The Judge was unable to tell him. This will illustrate the attention given by the Mormons to official bonds."

The Mormons have nothing on which to base their legal test of the Governor's appointments, in Mr. Hamilton's opinion, and he does not see how the appointees can be kept out of the offices longer than a few weeks. An appeal from the decision of the District Court to the Supreme Court of the Territory can not be depended on for much delay, because the Governor can convene the higher tribunal by proclamation immediately. The position that body will take can be easily predicted, from the fact that the three Judges recommended the Hoar amendment as providing a way out of the confusion which would be occasioned by the Edmunds bill passing and disqualifying the polygamist office-holders. A very few weeks ought to bring the issue to a determination. The Gentile appointees will hold until the next general election a year from November, and as soon as they are fairly in office the country may expect startling developments as to Mormon methods.

Mr. Hamilton does not hold the Commission blameable for the failure of the August election. There was not time after their appointment to make the revision of the registration, and indeed the result shows that the Gentiles would not have had the opportunity to investigate the offices but for the lapse of the election permitting the Governor to fill the vacant offices.

The conversation turning on the work of the commission, Mr. Hamilton said: "The commissioners, ex-Secretary Ramsey, Senator Paddock and their associates arrived in Salt Lake late in August, and proceeded to put the machinery for a new registration in operation. They were enabled to get Gentile registration officers in most of the counties, but in a few lying outside there were not Gentiles enough, and the registration was conducted by Mormons. The magnitude of the work may be estimated from the fact that the lists were completed only last Saturday. The result has been the disfranchisement of 20,000 Mormon voters for polygamy."

"It was predicted that there would be difficulty in the way of securing evidence to exclude the polygamists. How did the Commission get around that?"

"They issued very explicit instructions to their registration officers and clothed them with judicial powers to some extent. The old registration lists were used as a guide, and all persons, Gentiles included, were required to take a test oath before the names were entered. Even with the oath the registration officials exercised discretion. Evidence on polygamy could not be had. All records on that, if any are kept, are secrets of the Endowment House. The proof attainable was the general knowledge of a man's domestic relations. Undoubtedly many of the Mormon applicants for registration perjured themselves on this point, but the work of sifting them out was done so thoroughly that 20,000 were cut off."

"That leaves the relative strength of the Gentile and Mormon voters what?"

"The Gentiles have, in the new registration, from 8,000 to 10,000. The Mormons have double that number."

"How does the new registration help you, then?"

"It doesn't help us at all. The Edmunds bill is of no advantage to us. The Commissioners will only demonstrate how little can be accomplished under it. The measure, as Senator Edmunds said, is a starter in the right direction, and that is all. We hope for good through the recommendations the commission may make after they have put the provisions of the measure in operation and observed its ineffectiveness."

"What is your remedy?"

"Congress must deal with a union of church and state to be dissevered in Utah. The impression is general that polygamy is the great evil. It is a great evil to be sure. It goes back to the time of Moses. The Mormons are 4,000 years behind the times. The politics and religion are inseparable. Nothing is done there except through an order of the church. Everything originates in the church. All the political appointments are made in the church. Mr. McCullagh struck the right chord in his letters to the Globe-Democrat. It was a surprise to us that the situation was grasped so quickly by one a stranger in Salt Lake. We read those letters with great pleasure. It was encouragement to have a paper like the Globe-Democrat present the situation so truthfully and powerfully. It came to us like thunder out of a clear sky. The Gentiles appreciate the efforts of the Globe-Democrat. As was made plain in those letters, polygamy isn't the central and binding idea of Mormonism. It is the amalgamation of politics, business and religion. The Book of Mormon doesn't teach polygamy. It teaches monogamy. Legislating against polygamy won't meet the issue in Utah."

"What should Congress do?"

"The Government has exclusive jurisdiction over the Territory. What we want, and what the country will yet require, is the government of Utah under a commission—a legislative council. Congress must take everything out of the hands of the Mormons. The Legislature of Utah is paid by the United States Government, yet it is a political body utterly foreign to everything American. Congress should take citizens of Utah, not Mormons, and constitute them a council to govern Utah a certain number of years, until it is thoroughly Americanized. This will cost the Government less than Utah does now, and it is the solution of the problem beyond a doubt. The acts of the Mormon Legislature are only restrained in their pernicious effects by the absolute veto power of the Governor. We have a Governor in whom we all put implicit confidence. He is the best since the organization of the Territory. When he came he said he couldn't sit with his hands tied. He must do something. We owe him a great deal. Last winter he vetoed two-thirds of the acts of the Legislature, and that was a body above the average."

"The Gentiles can do nothing of themselves then to regenerate Utah."

"They could if they had been able to disfranchise women. As it is, they can not. The organic law of the Territories doesn't give woman the right to vote. The Utah law, enacted ten or twelve years ago by the Mormons, does. A test case was made by the Utah Gentiles, the ground being taken that woman suffrage was contrary to the organic Territorial law; it created a special class of voters. The Federal Judges held that the law was legal, and that banished all hope of the Gentiles helping themselves. A woman can come to Utah from another country to-day, marry a Mormon and vote to-morrow. That is the operation of the law. There is no naturalization—indeed, male Mormons have disregarded that requirement—and when the new registration was made, many who had been voting for years took out their papers of citizenship for the first time and the church paid for them. The Mormons vote the woman as if they were so many sheep. The Ward teachers or spies give them their instructions and put the vote in their hands. With the women and the polygamists disfranchised, the Gentiles I believe would have carried this election."

"You will at least get a new delegate?"

"Yes. The Edmunds bill retires Cannon and that class. He has been lost sight of so far as politics are concerned. But the new man will be a Mormon. The general impression is that John T. Caine will be the man. He is a counselor to Bishop John Sharp. Salt Lake is divided into twenty-one wards, each with a bishop and counselors. The counselor is a church officer. The disqualification of polygamists will change the character of the Legislature considerably. In the last body there were only three members who were not polygamists. The Gentiles may be able to do something in some of the wards in Salt Lake City. These, besides giving the county offices and the Territorial Treasurer and Auditor to the Gentiles for about a year, by appointments, a temporary advantage only, are the effects to be deprived from the Edmunds bill."

"Can't you count on the railroads, and the attendant development of the Territory doing anything toward solving the question?"

"They might, if they employed Gentiles instead of Mormons. Heretofore Mormons have been employed in construction, in the machine shops, and in various positions. The completion of the Denver and Rio Grande will help the country greatly. It is anticipated the road will reach Salt Lake in a few months. That by the Atchison connection will bring us into close trade relations with St. Louis, and make Utah a natural field for this city. This extension of the Rio Grande opens up the grandest coal fields of the Continent, and a vast iron region in Utah. The mining resources of the Territory are very great, and all the development in that direction is so much added to Gentile strength, for the Mormons do not touch mining. The mineral production of Utah this year will be $12,000,000 at least. Within the last two or three years the Gentiles have been increasing more rapidly. The Mormon population grows at the rate of about 3,000 or 4,000 a year. A wrong impression, I find, prevails in many places as to the character of the Gentile population. They have been represented as a marauding element—adventurers. This impression has been fostered as much as possible by the Mormons. The truth is the Gentiles are progressing and enterprising citizens. They have gone there to make their homes. The majority of the business men of Utah are Gentiles. Gentiles pay two-thirds of the taxes, and thus far have never had anything to say in regard to the disposal of the revenue. Thanks to this element, business is good, and Salt Lake is growing faster than ever. It is no surprise to Gentiles to read that the Mormons ignore the Edmunds bill. They have not shown the slightest regard for it. They are going into polygamy the same as ever. As compared with the decrees of the church the Supreme Court of the United States is of no more significance than a Justice of the Peace. The Mormon leaders set themselves up to be the judges of the constitutionality of all legislation affecting them. The Commission can not but discover soon that they are unable to accomplish the objects for which they were sent, and must recommend more radical measures. In its present effect the Edmunds bill is of little consequence. The Gentiles are hoping that it may be followed up, now that Congress has given this much recognition to the need of legislation to suppress the evil. One thing should be well understood: Utah must not be allowed to come in as a State in the present condition. That is what the Mormons want most. It would relieve them of the vetoing power of the Governor and give them Mormon courts. The Territory has a population of 150,000, which the undue proportion of woman and children go largely to make up. The condition is bad enough now. It would be worse with a State organization."

Cousin Don C. Salisbury, of Lacross, Illinois sends us a copy of the Warsaw, Illinois Bulletin, for October 7th, in which the Editor, Mr. Phil Dallam, replies to an attack of Thomas C. Sharp, Editor of the Carthage Gazette, as follows:

The old fossil who presides over the bastard organ at the county seat would give us a character. Who is this man who presumes to speak for us? Would it not be well, if the truth is what he is after, for the old hypocrite to reproduce Col. John Hay's description of the cowardly murder of Joseph Smith, published in the Atlantic several years ago, and also publish a letter he received from W. K. Davison, when old Tommy undertook to gobble the former's printing office while Davison was off to the war. Or, perhaps, to recite the case from La-Harpe, wherein the man who sat as judge carried a retainer in his pocket from one of the parties to the suit at the time. We may be an awful, awful fellow—possibly a fit subject for mob violence, and probably we might expect such a fate if we were in a defenceless position and old quint essence of virtue had five hundred men at his back; but bad as we are, we don't have to bear the sin of a cowardly murder, or that of the meanest of robberies, nor the memory of having once worn judicial ermine ignobly, basely and dishonorably.

There seem to be continued surprises in store for the Reorganized Church; not the least of which is to see the justice of the law of compensation manifest in the foregoing editorial. It will be remembered that Thomas C. Sharp was Editor of the Warsaw Signal, in Nauvoo times, and that paper was a foe to the Saints. Now from Warsaw, and one of its journals, comes the Nemesis of retribution, and visits reproach on that same Editor, Thomas C. Sharp, for the cruel way in which he and others betrayed and slew a man innocent of the crimes they charged him with.

"Inscrutable are thy ways, O Lord, and past finding out;" and "Vengeance is mine: I will repay, saith the Lord."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Bro. G. T. Griffiths got an excellent showing for the cause in the Evening News, of Scranton, Pennsylvania, of nearly a column in length. It is well written and comprehensive in its statement of facts and grouping of arguments.

Bro. W. O. Thomas, of Cheltenham, Missouri, sent us a copy of the Globe-Democrat, of St. Louis, containing a good notice of our late session of conference.

Mr. Frank James, brother to the famous Jesse, has surrendered to Governor T. Crittenden, of Missouri, asking amnesty and an opportunity to live as a law abiding and peaceable citizen should do. It is rather expected that the clemency of the state will be extended to this noted man, in view of the entire disruption of the gang of outlaws which for years has rendered the name of Missouri synonymous with crime and outlawry.

Bro. W. T. Bezarth, of Cameron, Missouri, was called home from conference by information that one of his children was dangerously ill. A card from him dated October 3d, says, "Our little boy is better, thanks be to God. I thought once he would die, but the Lord heard and answered us."

Bro. T. W. Smith wrote a card from Stewartsville, Missouri, October 13th, that his wife was very sick of chills and fever, and had been since returning from conference. Sr. Meriam had also been sick of the same disease.

Elders calling at Warren Station, Alabama, will find a home at Bro. Thomas R. Gibbs', who is anxious to see some of the brethren of the faith.

When Bro. R. M. Elvin reached Lamoni, and conference, he brought with him a box containing some of the products of Nebraska, in the shape of two onions, measuring each nearly five inches across, and five fine large peaches: of these, he made a free will offering to the Editor of the HERALD. They certainly showed that Nabaska was not a barren, nor an unfruitful land.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. R. J. Anthony wrote from his home, Tabor, Iowa, October 12th, 1882:

"I arrived at home on the 9th inst; I spent one week at Lucas, and held several meetings there. I left our Advent friend there trying to convince the people that the only way to obtain salvation is to believe his message; that that the seventh day is the Edenic Sabbath, and that the disregard of that day has caused about all the trouble in the world. "What a pity the people are so blind, it is so easy to get right if they only would."

Bro. W. H. Kelly wrote from Chicago, on his way to his home and field of labor:

We held two preaching services here last Sunday. A respectful number was present, and we were blessed through the exercises. The cause moves slowly, but is getting on a sure footing; and we have great confidence that there will be a good work done in Chicago ere long. Our effort will be to do what is done—well. I will remain here, if nothing prevents, over Sunday next.

Bro. E. G. Culver wrote Bro. W. H. Kelley from Chicago, Illinois, October 17th, 1882:

Bro. Scott has just left for home this morning. He spoke well on Sunday; there were more outsiders in on Sunday evening than has been before for more than one year; the best of attention was paid.

Correspondence.

ROCK ISLAND, Illinois,

October 3d, 1882.

Bro. Joseph Smith:—Bro James Houghton wishes to be remembered to the Saints that know him, to whom and to yourself, he sends a hearty greeting. He wishes his testimony recorded; that when he left Liverpool, England, he was not a member of the Church of Christ; but on the voyage and journey to Nauvoo, being continually with the Saints and in conversation with them, he resolved if it were possible for him to receive proof satisfactorily that Joseph Smith was the prophet of God (that the Saints represented him to be) he would become a member of the Church, and live a new life. On arriving at Nauvoo the Martyr met his party going up from the river landing. Bro. Houghton saw him at a short distance, and at the same time a voice said to him, "This is the prophet of the Most High God." The brother was satisfied; believed, repented, and was baptized. This occurred a year or two before the Massacre of the two prophets, Joseph and Hyrum. He rejoices in having the privilege of being a member of the Reorganization, and wishes he could be instrumental in uniting the scattered Saints at Davenport, so that they could meet together in harmony and love as of yore.

We thank the Lord he has answered our prayers and has spoken through his chosen prophet to his erring children again. May each one of us do his whole duty and secure his Divine favor, and through his chosen instruments roll on the work of regeneration and restoration of all that was pronounced good, by our Father and our God, unto whom be all praise and glory ascribed, through Jesus Christ our Lord.

Yours for truth,

F. G. DUNGEE

PLANO, Illinois,

October 15th, 1882.

Bro. Joseph:—We still continue our meetings as heretofore, and a friendly feeling towards all generally exists. The desk has been acceptably occupied of late at intervals by a few of the veterans in the cause: Father Woolams, Father Bronson and Father Wilsey, now deceased, and some of us think that though their whitened locks show plainly the ravages of time, they are not wanting in valor in the fight against the foe.

The Sunday School still continues its work among Zion's Hopes.

This afternoon a very serious accident occurred; Sister Vickery and sister Patterson were out riding, and when near the Stone Church the horses took fright at the sight of an old boiler in the street, the consequence was the sisters were thrown out and very badly hurt. Dr. Jenks was called in, and I heard last evening that they were getting along well.

Mrs. Ursula Steward, of Plano, was laid away in her last resting place on Saturday last. Mr. Kinney, who preached the funeral sermon, said her life which had covered the years of the golden age of this republic had been a very useful one. She passed away peacefully at the age of eighty-one.

years, leaving a family of seven sons and two daughters. About two hundred were present at the funeral. Among the mourners were several great grand children. Some of the most thrifty citizens of Plano represent her family.

I remain your sister,

A. A. H.

SONORA, Powesheik, Co., Iowa,

October 6th, 1882.

Bro. Joseph:—After Bro. I. N. White and I left conference on Thursday, we went to Ringgold county, one mile north, and six miles east of Mount Ayr, to Mr. Wm. McConnell's, (who is married to I. N. White's sister), when we got there we found their little daughter in the agonies of death; by midnight she had spasms so badly that they had to hold her fast so that she could not bite her fingers; the parents requested us to administer to her; we did so, and while yet in prayer she became calm and laid her hands down and did not stir any more, but fell asleep; and in two hours after, the angels conducted her spirit home to her place of rest without a move of the body.

Bro. Kent lived in that neighborhood once, and the people were so prejudiced, that on one occasion he was at a M. E. meeting, and the congregation took a vote that he should not be allowed to stay at their meeting. We had preaching on Friday night, Saturday at 11, Saturday night, and Sunday at 11, and at night. The house was crowded every time; and on Monday I baptized one. Several are convinced and almost ready for baptism. We could hardly get away, for they said they wanted to learn more about that way. We had pressing invitations to go home with several of them, which we did as far as we could. We promised to try and send some one if possible to preach to them for a week, soon. I think now is the time to work in that neighborhood. An Elder can stop with sister Lizzie McConnell, or Mr. Herman Johnston, a Presbyterian, or Mr. F. Rush and others. I had a letter from W. B. Hibbs one and a half miles from Bismark, Dakota Territory, if we had any Elders up there, asking if we had any Elders up there, and if we had they should call on him, and he would get a school house to hold meeting in. I think Mr. Hibbs almost convinced. I sent them the Scriptures and Voice of Warning, and they like them very much. Mrs. Hibbs is my sister. I hope some of the Elders up there will notice this.

I am yours in the everlasting covenant.

J. S. ROTH.

Bro. Joseph:—I have often thought I would like to tell the Saints how and what I have passed through since I have entered into the fold of Christ. I would tell a few of them if you think what I write will be a comfort to any. You may publish it, but say "what a sister has passed through," and not use my name.

It is twelve years since I started on the road that leads to eternal life. I came out of the enemy's ranks into the narrow way; Satan saw me and took after me; but there was light before me and darkness behind me. Then he said, I will overcome you. In a short time after I went to the house of prayer. On my way home three of my neighbors came along, they said that all the Mormons from old Joe Smith down, were thieves, highway robbers and murderers, and ought to be driven out of the country. I was alone, but I did not reply, for they were under the power of darkness. I went home and into my closet and asked God to show me how I could do them good. I was in the light and wanted all to come to the light of the truth. But the great enemy of God and all of his Saints was not satisfied; but he took the love of my husband; then, not content, he took away from me the love of my child, my only child. You may ask what I did. In my great trials, I went to our Father; for it is written that he will be our help in time of need. I laid my cause before him that knew my heart, and I gained strength day by day. Let me tell all the Saints that my hope has grown brighter and brighter under all my trials. Now I have my child and most of her children with me in the fold of Christ. My neighbors are kind to me. I have ever sought to do them good, and God be praised for his tender care over me. Although my husband is not with me in the fold, yet he is kind and treats the brethren kindly. It is the power of God, and not man that I am as I am. Before I knew the way of life I could not do my enemy a kindness, and now I can; and I feel my heart burn with gladness and joy to think when I was in darkness the Lord sought me out. It is my heart's desire to serve him while I live, and in the day of battle, for he is my salvation, my all. Pray for me that I may ever do right.

DELHAVEN, Nova Scotia,

October 3d, 1882.

Dear Herald:—Permit me through your columns to add another testimony to the thousands that have already been borne concerning the work of God on the earth. Many of the California Saints remember the three days' meeting held at Bro. J. H. Lawn's, when Bro. D. S. Mills was president of the Santa Cruz Sub-District, and our esteemed and now departed brother, Hervey Green, was laboring on the San Benito with him; Bro. A. H. Smith also present. It is now nearly eight years, still, that three-days meeting is, and will ever be fresh in my mind. It was the first gathering of the Saints I had ever attended, being only a few months since we had heard the joyful news that the Lord had again restored the gospel of the kingdom to the earth, that the blessings enjoyed by the ancients could be again had in our day. In our simplicity our faith was very child like, and I believe was such as pleased God, for he manifested his goodness to us in great abundance. I realized the fact of being transplanted from the kingdom of darkness into a kingdom of light, even the kingdom of God's dear Son; and the brightness of that light contrasted so strongly with the darkness out of which I had come, that for a time I could scarcely contain my joy. My own experience did not differ from that of many at that time, consequently we assembled ourselves together with no other thought in our hearts than to feast on the good Word of God; and verily it was a feast. How eagerly we drank in every word that fell from the lips of those who spoke "the eternal truths of God," and instructed us, "babes in the kingdom," in the plan of salvation wrought out by the Son of God and delivered to the children of men. How new it sounded; how beautiful, and how grand. We hung on every word with an eagerness that told well how our souls had been starving for the bread of life. I love to linger over those days and taste again, and again, of their sweetness. At the close, after many had left the grounds, the writer was administered to by Elders D. S. Mills, A. H. Smith, Hervey Green and J. F. Burton. The administration was not conducted in the usual way, but all joined in prayer, after the first prayer was offered, Bro. Green commenced speaking in tongues and D. S. Mills saw in vision, passing before him like a panorama, the writer in her native land standing on an elevation, in the center of a large circle of light, with arms extended, and an inviting expression; he saw her mother come up and put her arms around her neck and lay her head on her shoulder, and "I saw also one of your sisters," he said, "who resembles you very closely, come up and stand in the light." Another sister came within the circle of light, but had not got up to us, but was still coming. I was rejoiced when I heard the vision and did not for one moment doubt but some time I would go to my native land and be present when some of my people would come up to the "ensign," that has been raised to all nations; thou our circumstances at the time forbade the thought; but with God it was possible; and now has come to pass. The attitude he saw my mother in, best represents her position. The sister whose features and mine resemble each other, has come up to the light, been baptized and taken her stand, and a firm one too. The other sister is in the light indeed, and rejoicing therein; she is coming towards us, and perhaps before this reaches the Saints, she too will have taken her stand to war against the powers of darkness. May others soon follow is our united prayer. These I have spoken of are not the only ones here who are rejoicing in the light of the gospel, I speak of them because they were seen in the vision.

SISTER EMMA.

Bro. Joseph:—I wish to notice through the Herald, some of the points hinted at in Bro. J. B. Porter's letters. I have thought much on the "All things common" theory; having been taught it in my youth and early manhood; and like many others uniting with the Reorganized Church, brought my traditions with me; and I think from a careful study of the subject I may be able to show a little light.

Whoever undertakes to carry into effect an order of that kind, will find that he is left without a written law by which to be governed. The statement, "And they had all things common among them," is very vague and unsatisfactory, when we come to reduce it to practice. There are a great many contingencies arising in the practice of a theory that are overlooked in contemplation. And unless we are willing to yield and be governed by a head, that shall settle all matters of difference that may arise, in a similar manner as a father governs a family, we will find that of necessity we will have to part. The advocates of this "All things common" theory, have been in the habit of making the power that characterized the church in ancient times to depend on their temporal policy. I think this a mistake, and that it was the legitimate result of obedience to the gospel. And while I regard the gospel law in relation to our spiritual interests as remaining without change, yet the difference in the work to be accomplished in the two dispensations is so great that a difference in the means made use of would be necessary, and should have been expected. That was the day of Judah's scattering; the day of the fulfillment of the prophecies in the destruction of Jerusalem and the Jews, as a nation; while the dispensation of the fulness of times will be the day of Israel's gathering, so that what might then have been temporal wisdom, might now be the extremest folly. Now, if the angel spoken of in Revelations 14: 6, 7, has come and restored the gospel to man (Eph 1: 10) the dispensation that would gather Israel has commenced. And the Latter Day Saints need no further proof than is found in the facts of the altered condition of the Jews and the restoration of the land of Palestine to its now fertile condition to convince them of the fact. Additional evidence is found in the wisdom that was given to organize a church upon the apostolic order, having not only the same ordinances and officers, but the same gifts and powers as promised by the Savior; in fact, the signs following the believer. But our brother says, that this is not a true test; because the devil can work miracles. I suppose that the Lord knew he promised that signs should follow them that believe, that the devil was a counterfeiter. We read that he did some wonderful works in the days of Moses; but did that prove that God had not sent Moses, and that his witness to Pharaoh was not true? Again, if a ten dollar bill is counterfeited, does that affect the value of the genuine bill? I read in Revelations 19: 10, that the "testimony of Jesus is the Spirit of prophecy." Again, First Corinthians 12: 8, that "no man can say that Jesus is the Lord but by the Holy Ghost." It would seem by these, and a multitude of other evidences, that the signs that were to follow them that believe were inseparably connected with the reception of the Holy Spirit; and shall we say that because these grand and glorious blessings are sometimes counterfeited and otherwise abused, that their testimony is of no value, or binding force. The brother has given us what he considers a proper test. Now if he will turn to that same chapter and carefully read it, he will find what it is that bears witness. We read that it is "the Spirit that beareth witness," 6 verse. To my mind, when the promise made through the prophet of the last days, that those that obeyed the gospel as taught by the Elders of this Church should receive the gift of the Holy Ghost was fulfilled, it was good evidence of the divinity of his mission; and of their oal to bear the message to the nations.

Now, dear Herald, will you tell us in what way we can better prove our love for our fellow men, and the work of God, than by preaching the gospel. If there is some way that would not involve the forsaking of all worldly interests, wife and children, and home, with all its endearments, I for one would like to know it. I accepted this work as the work of God, and as a consequence expect to be governed by the law that has been given, and believe that when the law is kept the Spirit of truth will be given that will make of Elders true witnesses.

GEORGE MONTAGUE.

JOHNSTON, R. I.,

October, 2d, 1882.

Bro. Joseph:—Having the privilege to attend the Massachusetts District Conference held at Providence, Rhode Island, September 24th, I was very glad that I did. In going I was blessed. We had the Holy Spirit with us, the gifts of prophecy, tongues and interpretation. I never enjoyed myself more in my life. People may talk about the joys and pleasures of this world, but thanks be to God and my dear Savior, who took my feet out of the miry clay and planted them on the rock of revelation, I would rather be in a prayer and testimony meeting one hour, than to have all the world and its pleasures for one moment. I have a testimony to bear to the world, and I intend to live the life of a true Latter Day Saint, but knowing that I can not do it in my own strength I have to rely, through faith and prayer, on my Heavenly Master. I attend my meetings regularly; and as often as I can I go to the Scituate Mission. We have excellent meetings.

I remain your brother in the one gospel.

WILLIAM MARSLAND.

FONTANELLE, Adair Co., Iowa,

October 9th, 1882.

Bro. Joseph:—I am home again, and find myself relieved from some fears and anxieties, or cares, which had troubled me for nearly two years past. I was pleased to hear from your own tongue the cause of the new method of representing the branches of the Church; and though I saw and heard things at the conference that to me were painful, yes unpleasant, (not of the Lord), yet I heard and learned many things that were true and worth to me more than all the gold and silver I ever handled; because I see, and feel assured that we are the only true and living church upon the earth that the Lord acknowledges as his. I was pleased and made happy to see and hear men speak the principles and doctrines of Christ in such a manner, or order, that no learned divine of this generation can refute nor destroy. This is what I have often asked the Lord to do for his servants, or Elders; and now it is my prayer that this blessing may never be taken from them; under this principle Zion can and will be redeemed. So let it come.

Let me say to all who labor in the ministry who can spend a little time for the benefit of Fontanelle, now is a good time to come here. The Germans have a good house, but no preachers, I think. Let one of this class come and see what he can do. If any one will send me German tracts, or papers, I will see that they get them. Methodist and Congregationalists are almost dried up as to preaching. It is the best time now I have seen since I came here twelve years ago.

Respectfully yours,

B. ALDEN.

EAST SELKIRK, Manitoba,

October 8th, 1882.

Bro. Joseph:—Myself and family are living out here all alone; I say all alone, because we are here where we haven't the chance to go where we can hear the sound of the gospel explained in its fullness, as I have in times past and gone. There are no Latter Day Saints around here, and I haven't heard tell of any since I came to this country, with the exception of one which I noticed in the Herald of September 1st, where the Elders went to visit Bro. A. J. Hinkle at Green Ridge.

I emigrated to this country with my wife and two children, about the first of last May; I came from Rond Eau, Ontario, we were baptized at Buckhorn on the 19th day of February, 1882, by Elder Gordon E. Deuel, and I feel thankful to my Heavenly Father that I ever obeyed the gospel of Jesus Christ. I would be very thankful to receive any Latter Day Saint into my house; if any should call they shall be made welcome. We live at the above named place, twenty-one miles east from Winnipeg on the Canadian Pacific Railroad. I have been employed as engineer in a steam brick yard. I don't intend to live here all winter, I don't know where I shall go yet.

I remain your brother in Christ,

MURDOCK MCKENZIE

DOW CITY, Crawford Co., Iowa,

October 17th, 1882.

Bro. Joseph:—Our conference was well attended, many outsiders were present and apparently interested. We had a peaceful and profitable time, hope you had at Lamoni; but I think the action of the conference in doing away with the Semi-Annual Conference is of doubtful propriety; for many reasons that might be mentioned. It certainly does not afford much consolation to think that the happy reunions we have had, and to which the Saints looked forward to with such joyous anticipations, are for the present at least amongst the things of the past. But I suppose the better way is to accept the situation and make the best of it we can, not forgetting the promise, that "all things shall work together for good to them that love God." Am thankful to say we are all well, hope you and yours enjoy the same blessing.

Yours in gospel bonds.

JOHN PETT.

NANTICOKE, Luzerne Co., Pennsylvania,

October 16th, 1882.

Bro. Joseph:—Since I wrote last to the Herald, I have labored in this district, with some good results. I have spent some of my time in Hyde Park, as the branch there was in a dormant state, when we arrived there. I preached in one of the public halls on main street. At times I had fair audiences and enjoyed excellent liberty in speaking. I had the pleasure of baptizing three; two ladies and one man. One lady had been a Catholic forty eight years, the other a Methodist twenty-eight years; the man was one of the old time Saints. I left more interested in our doctrine, some of whom promised me that they would be baptized when I returned there. I intend to open up the work in the city of Scranton within a few weeks. I must not forget to mention the kindness of the Hyde Park Saints in ministering to our wants, and all we can say in return is, God bless you for the same. We came to this place on the 5th inst., and opened up the work on the 8th in Snyder's Theatre Hall; preached three sermons on Sunday, had a large audience in the evening. Truly the Lord stood by me in the preaching of the word. I spoke again on Monday evening; also last night to a good congregation. I shall speak again to-night. I sincerely believe that there are a few honest people in this place who will unite with the Church ere long; and peradventure a branch be organized. Bro. L. B. Thomas, the president of the district, and Jacob Baldwin and wife live here; and they are all good Saints, doubtless they have an influence among their friends who are outside the Church that tends to good. I anticipate to leave here on the 18th inst. for Plymouth, thence to Hyde Park, then back to quarterly conference. I can say the work is onward in this part of the vineyard, and that the cause has received a new impetus; and may the good work continue to roll on until all the honest in heart are gathered in the fold of Christ,

Yours in the one faith,

G. T. GRIFFITHS

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah,

October 9th, 1882.

Bro. Joseph Smith:—Our conference closed last night after an interesting and profitable session of three days. Attendance was fair. The Spirit of the Lord was present in much power, and all pronounce the session the best by far of any ever held in Utah. Some old Mormons present said they had not witnessed such grace and power of God's Spirit since they lived in Kirtland, in the first and best days of the Church.

The outlook for our mission work is far better than ever, and all feel encouraged and joyful; and better still, they are determined to labor, and make every needful sacrifice to forward the work. This is true of both the ministry and the membership.

If the whole Church were under the same measure of love and power and light which pervaded the assembly at our two o'clock service, yesterday, there would be no want of energy, nor means, to push forward the gospel work they have committed to them of God.

It is painful to think how many in the Church are careless, negligent, and worthless to the Church, when at the same time they should work for and aid it.

Our Sunday School bids fair to be a success. Hope you may send us specimens of your Sunday School paraphernalia, soon, as we must soon select;

Bro. R. Warnock is fully in accord with our mission work, and preaches with power, spirituality and a great measure of love. He is superintendent of Sunday School, also. It would do you good to now visit our Chapel, and many of the Saints hope the dear Lord may send you out here as a missionary, soon.

Yours ever,

W. W. BLAIR.

Dear Brother Joseph:—I love the cause of Christ, and my constant, longing desire, is that I may be instrumental in bringing others to a full knowledge of the gospel, many have been astonished at the doctrines we advocate, and exclaim, "Why! there is no Mormonism in that." I knew this was the Kingdom of God when I first found it, which will be five years next 14th day of May. Bro. Cook was the one who baptized and confirmed me. He let me read Spencer's letters, and told me about the priesthood, (or authority), and told me God had real living prophets, and I believed quickly. Before I had read many pages of the good little work, above mentioned, I received testimony, such as I shall never forget, such a sudden joy pierced through every bone and sinew of my body, and which lasted three days; it would go through me like shocks of electricity. It returned more after baptism; so you see, dear faithful servant of God, I have enough evidence to last me all my life if I never see the faces of any of the dear Saints again; I do love them all. I have not the privilege of going to meet with them; it is over a year since I went to Church; yet God has blessed me in a great many things, and at a great many times. I was healed of dyspepsia of many years' standing, and thanks be to our dear Father, I am well; entirely free from it, except when I get too careless about going to the throne of grace. The Lord gives me a little trouble to bring me to my senses, and that is right, for he chastens those he loves. I belonged to the Advent denomination for seven years, and was waiting for the Lord to come, as we were the only ones that were to be caught up in the air to meet Him. I was immersed by the author of the Emphatic Diaglot, who has persecuted me beyond all measure of endurance; but I pray God to forgive all of our enemies, for they know not what they do. I have a great deal more to write, but have not time, as my household cares are great.

Yours in Christ,

MARY H. LEE.

Joy, Mercer Co., Illinois,
October 19th, 1882.

Bro. Joseph:—Since conference I have been spending my time in this county. I held three meetings at Millersburg, and commenced meetings here on Friday evening, the 13th, and continued until Sunday night. I commence services tonight at a school house two miles south of this place: shall continue there as long as the interest lasts. I shall then probably go to Buffalo Prairie.

Yours in Christ,

H. C. BRONSON.

Pres. Blair gave many encouraging words in respect to the past, present, and future condition of the work of the Church.

Elders Wm. Gibson and John Taylor spake encouragingly, as did also Elders John Brown, Ethan Barrows and Thos. Burt.

In the afternoon session Elder Blair addressed the audience, reviewing the rise and progress of the Reorganization, demonstrating in a clear and powerful manner that Joseph the son of Joseph Smith the Seer, is the legal and proper president of the Church of Christ, and the only one to whom the Saints should look for revelations in respect to the doctrine and law of the Church.

On Saturday afternoon, after the usual exercises, the president called for branch reports. Provo reported 7 added by baptism, and 2 removed by letter. Branch in good condition, and prospects excellent.

Smith, John Brown, John Johnson—all expressed a desire to aid in the further spread of the work; and these, with Elders R. Warnock, Chas. E. Malmstrom, and all other ministers in the district were by vote requested to labor as they could find opportunity.

Elder W. W. Huetchings reported by letter. Elder Wm. Gibson was continued president over the district for next six months.

On motion, Ethan Barrows was chosen secretary of district.

Pres. Blair read a letter from Pres. J. Smith and a revelation given to Pres. Smith, September 28th, 1882.

Preaching services were held on Friday, Saturday, and on Sunday evenings; also Sunday forenoon. The sacrament and testimony meeting on Sunday afternoon was large, spiritual, and highly edifying. It is said to be the best ever held in Utah. The Spirit testified of the onward movement of the Lord's work in all this mission.

R. Warnock, treasurer of the Rocky Mountain Mission reported; Receipts $208.60, and a balance in hand due the mission of $13 85.

EASTERN IOWA DISTRICT.

Conference met at Clinton, Iowa, September 23d, 1882. Called to order by Bro. James Johnson, and prayer by Bro. Jerome Ruby. Bro. C. C. Reynolds president pro tem.

Elders Reports.—Jerome Ruby had met with the Saints at Montrose and Burlington. James Johnson had been doing all that he could. Had preached nine times at Clinton, twelve times at Jackson Branch, two at Buffalo, and held several meetings at other places. Blessed three children and administered to several sick. Had traveled between two and three hundred miles, and had spent more money in traveling and giving than he had received. Liked the work and had been wonderfully blessed and thought there ought to be something done to help the Elders in the field. The district is in a very bad condition. Clinton Branch is very good, and Jackson Branch was doing very well two months ago. Warren Turner had been chiefly confined to Clinton; had baptized four since last conference; had endeavored to do what he could. Went to Davenport and had a talk with some of the brethren. Could not attend the conference at Butternut Grove, because he could not get ready after Bro. McDowell declined to go. M. G. Maudsley reported that he had not done much since last conference; having met only three times with the Saints: twice in branch and once in prayer meeting. The last time we met in Baldwin, had a pretty good meeting, although the branch is in a very bad condition. Bro. M. O. Briggs, Teacher, had not much to report, not having any branch report made out: the branch having met with the brethren at Rock Island.

Committee report on Davenport Branch accepted and committee discharged.

Moved and seconded that Bro. Turner make a statement of the facts in the case of Bro. McDowell, and send to the Herald for publication. Carried.

The resignation of Bro. James Johnson, as vice-president of the district was accepted.

Whereas, Bro. E. Larkey has sent his resignation to the General Conference, and has notified the secretary of the Eastern Iowa District; Therefore, Resolved, That we relieve Bro. Larkey, and that this conference extend to our beloved brother a vote of thanks for valuable services rendered to the district, and we pray God to bless the brother. Carried.

Moved and seconded that C. C. Reynolds act as president of this district.

Amendment moved and seconded that we make it a subject of prayer in regard to the appointing of the president. Carried.

Resolved, That in the future, members coming from branches having no report, nor accredited delegation, shall not be privileged to participate in the deliberations, nor be entitled to a vote. Carried.

A vote of thanks was tendered Bro. Turner for his labors as district clerk, and for the kindness of his family during our conference. Carried.

CENTRAL NEBRASKA DISTRICT.

The above district conference was held at Deer Creek Branch, Nebraska, September 23d and 24th, 1882; Geo. W. Galley president, Levi Gamet secretary pro tem. Brn. Oehring and Gamet addressed the Saints.

The district clerk was authorized to procure a District Record.

Elders G. W. Galley, Robert Oehring, Levi Gamet, Chauncy Loomis and Oscar Bebee, reported in person. Elders H. J. Hudson, C. Brindly and H. O. Smith, by letter; also, C. N. Hutchins, Priest.

The president made some very appropriate remarks touching the duties of the officers of the Church and the work at large.

Clear Water, Columbus, Deer Creek and Cedar Creek branches reported.

The several officers in the district, also the general authorities of the Church, were sustained in righteousness.

Preaching in the evening by Bro. G. W. Galley. Conference adjourned to meet at Columbus, Nebraska, on the 2d and 3d days of December, 1882.

FREMONT DISTRICT.

Conference convened on the 25th of August, 1882, at Keystone, Iowa; J. R. Badham in the chair, J. M. Stubbart secretary.

The preaching during conference was good and well attended.

The order of last conference referring Bro. Waterman to the First Quorum of Elders was rescinded.

Branch Reports.—Farm Creek 29, baptized 1. Plum Creek 94. Mill Creek 21. Shenandoah 110. Keystone 47; baptized 7. Elm Creek 29. Hamburg 22; baptized 9. This branch was organized June 18th, 1882. Hazle Dell not reported.

Elders John Leeka, E. J. Moore, N. Taylor, J. W. Calkins, R. M. Elvin, (baptized 1), J. R. Badham (baptized 18) and E. C. Brand, reported by letter. S. S. Wilcox, G. Kemp, R. J. Anthony, Wm. Leigham, G. Lush, D. Hougas, (baptized 1), S. Dykes, Wm. Leeka, J. Good and J. M. Stubbart reported verbally. Priests E. Weed and L. C. Donaldson reported. Teacher Clines, and Deacon W. Scheick, reported.

The request of the Mill Creek Branch for the district authorities to make out licences for L. C. Donaldson and J. F. Comstock was refused and the matter referred back to the branch.

Brn. E. Weed and A. D. Hougas were continued in the mission to the Fen neighborhood. Bro. E. L. Kelley was continued in Malvern. J. M. Stubbart and Geo. Kemp were appointed on the Bartlett mission.

Bro. Badham, district president, reported that some of the branches are doing well, others not as well as they should. Many persons were not willing to take the advice of their spiritual teachers. One great difficulty is to select competent officers for the branches. One thing needed is the labors of competent ministers.

District president's financial report: Total receipts $96 45; total expenditures $120 53; leaving the district in debt to him $24, which amount was made up during conference.

District Treasurer's report: Total receipts $96 45. Which amount was paid over to the district president.

John W. Navert was ordained to the office of an Elder, under the hands of R. J. Anthony, S. S. Wilcox and D. Hougas.

Brn. J. R. Badham, Wm. Leeka, S. S. Wilcox, D. Hougas and J. Good were appointed delegates to cast the vote of the district, which is 70, and were instructed to vote for two sessions of General Conference per year, but on other questions were to use their judgment.

J. R. Badham was sustained as District President.

It was decided to hold District Conferences but once in six months.

A committee was appointed to consider the propriety of sustaining Bro. Badham as traveling Elder in the district, and reported that they highly appreciated Bro. Badham's labors, but thought a man's family could not be sustained by the vote of conference only; so recommended that it be ascertained how much the several branches could raise by subscription, and if that be sufficient, he should continue to labor as previously appointed.

Bro. J. R. Badham was authorized to secure a hall for worship in Imogene and other places, if he saw fit.

Adjourned to meet on the first Saturday and Sunday in March, [3d and 4th], 1883.

You can never catch the word that has once gone out of your lips; therefore, take care what you say. Never speak an unkind word, an impure word, a profane word.

Be industrious. Improve each day as if you expected to die on the morrow. Indolence, debt, and disease, are brothers.

Good thoughts, like rose leaves, give out a sweet smell if laid up in the jar of memory.

G. A. BLAKESLEE, Presiding Bishop.

The Bishop informs us that in his last published quarterly report we omitted to credit "Mrs. M. A. Dempster, Iowa, $1." On looking the matter up, we find he is correct, and hereby apologize.

THE "ADVOCATE."

We now intend publishing some more important letters of Joseph Smith the Seer, also his explanation of some of the Savior's Parables with other valuable matter, all going to show the views of the Seer and the Church, on essential points in regard to the affairs of the Church, and of the State. This seems necessary just now, as "Mormonism" is attracting the attention of not only our own nation, but of the civilized world; and it is of the highest importance to the Church that the genuine doctrines and principles of the Church from 1830 up to 1844 should be so clearly displayed that all who will may learn just what those doctrines and principles were and are, in contradistinction to the heresies and perversion of the great latter day apostacy.

We have received many words of commendation for our little paper in the past. Progress and improvement is our purpose.

We hope to distribute free 1,000 to 5,000 copies of each issue. To do this we must have paying subscribers. Send in your subscriptions please, and procure us as many as you can, and remit to Joseph Smith, box 82, Lamoni, Iowa; or to the Editor, box 417, Salt Lake City, Utah.

DIED.

TYLER.—At Birmingham, England, May 22d, 1882, of heart disease, Samuel, youngest son of Charles and Maria Tyler, aged 16 years and 21 days. He was baptized by Elder C. H. Caton, November 4th, 1879; was a good saint, and would have been of great use in the Church had he lived. Funeral sermon by Elder H. C. Crump. The Saints showed deep respect for the parents.

McCONNELL.—Gracie E, infant daughter of William and Sr. Lizzie C. McConnell departed this life September 29th, after an illness of five days, aged 1 year, 9 months and 8 days. Funeral service by Elder J. S. Roth, at the house of the parents, seven miles north-east of Mt. Ayr, Iowa.

WILSEY.—At his residence, on the east side of Fox River, near Milbrook, Kendall county, Illinois, October 4th, 1882. Bro. Archibald M. Wilsey departed this life, passing peacefully into the beyond to join the mighty host of those redeemed by the blood of Christ. He was born in New York, January 18th, 1800, and died aged 82 years, 8 months and 16 days. He united with the Church about the year 1830; followed its fortunes to Nauvoo; but discovering that the leaders, after the death of the Martyre, had gone into apostasy, he declined to follow them, and waited for the Reorganization, with which he united about the year 1858, and has since been a faithful and true witness for the Master. At his death he was a member of the High Priests' Quorum. He leaves an aged partner, a large family, and many friends to mourn his departure. Services conducted by Elder J. S. Patterson, assisted by Elder W. Vickery, October 6th, from Psalms 116: 15.

DUNWOODY.—Near Hatfield, in Harrison county Missouri, September 10th, 1882, Bro. James A. Dunwoody aged 56 years; born in Saint Field, Down county, Ireland; came to America in 1850, enlisted in 1861, and served during the war; obeyed the gospel in 1876. He has been a member of the Church for six years, and was always ready to bear his testimony, and to discharge every duty devolving on him. He has fought the battle of life, and now rests in peace with full hope of being raised in the first resurrection. Funeral services conducted by Bro. C. H. Jones.

SUTTON.—Elder John Sutton departed this life at Gravois Mo., Sept. 18th, 1882; he was born in Staffordshire, England, December 21st, 1817, and was in his 65th year at his death. He was baptized and united with the Church, January 9th, 1865, under the hands of Elder David Davis, in St. Clair county, Illinois. A large number followed his last remains to his then earthly house. Elder W. H. Hazlidene conducted the funeral services.

PERKINS.—At Camp Creek, Calhoun county, Iowa, August 25th, 1882, Bro. Frank, son of Bro. Rufus and Sr. Perlina Perkins. He was born October 18th, 1867, and baptized July 24th, 1881. He departed in hope, leaving a father, brothers and sisters, with friends to mourn his departure.

SCRAPS.

Gathered by the wayside, from many fields of research, and compiled for the readers of the Herald. May they prove both interesting and useful, is the wish of the collector.

MATTHEW HENRY:—"Especially make the Bible your study. Many get wisdom by books; but wisdom toward God is to be gotten out of God's book, and that by digging. Most men do but walk over the surface of it, and pick up here and there a flower; a few dig into it. Read other books to help you to read that book. Fetch your sermons from thence; the volume of inspiration is a full fountain, always overflowing and has always something new.

DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS.—"And verily I say unto you, that it is my will that you should hasten to translate my Scriptures, and to obtain a knowledge of history, and of countries, and of kingdoms, of laws of God and man, and all this for the salvation of Zion."

BISMARCK—"How, without faith in a revealed religion, in a God who wills what is good, in a Supreme Judge, and a future life, men can live together harmoniously—each doing his duty and letting every one else to do his—I do not understand."

WILLIAM H. SEWARD:—"The whole hope of human progress is suspended on the ever growing influence of the Bible."

CHRYSOSTOM:—"An intimate acquaintance with the Holy Scriptures is a secure haven, and an impregnable bulwark, and an immovable tower, and imperishable glory, and impenetrable armor, and unfading joy, and perpetual delight, and whatsoever other excellence can be uttered."

BOYLE:—"I use the Scriptures, not as an arsenal to be resored to only for arms and weapons, but as a matchless temple, where I delight to contemplate the beauty, the symmetry, and the magnificence of the structure; and to increase my awe and excite my devotion to the Deity there preached and adored."

THOMAS JEFFERSON:—"I have always said and always will say, that the studious perusal of the Sacred Volume will make better citizens, better fathers and better husbands."

NAPOLEON BONAPARTE:—"Christ proved that He was the Son of the Eternal by His disregard of time. All His doctrines signify only, and the same thing, eternity."

DR. ADAM CLARKE:—"From this word all doctrines must be derived and proved; and from it, every man must learn his duty to God, to his neighbor, and to himself."

Epitaph on the tombstone of the Hon. Daniel Webster:—"Lord, I believe Help thou mine unbelief. Philosophical argument especially that drawn from the vastness of the universe in comparison with the apparent insignificance of this globe, has sometimes shaken my reason for the faith that is in me; but my heart has assured me that the gospel of Jesus Christ must be a divine reality. The Sermon on the Mount can not be merely human production. This belief enters into the very depth of my conscience. The whole history of man proves it."

HYMN TO THE SAINTS OF —.

TUNE—"Redeemer of Israel."

Why grope ye in darkness
 At noonday, O saints;
 And why are ye troubled and sad?
 The sun of God's love
 Beameth brightly for aye,
 Then walk in its light and be glad.

He hath not forsaken
 His children—his own;
 But, oh! we have wandered from him;
 No rest have we found,
 While afar thus we roam,
 And the light in our lamps is so dim.

Can we not discern now
 The signs of the times,
 Which good to his Israel portend?
 Awake, ye! Awake!
 Gird the armor anew,
 And faithfully strive till the end.

Sweet peace ever broods o'er
 The pathway of right,
 'Tis guarded by Him who is strong;
 Arise! let us gladly
 The pathway pursue,
 And sing as we journey along.

V. V. SHORT.

Is the Baptism of Water Essential to Salvation.

In considering this question, it will be necessary to ask another. Is the baptism of water merely an ordinance of human enactment, or was it commanded and ordained of God? If it was of human origin, then, as human beings could not have any right to determine the conditions of salvation, and as they are not the dispensers of salvation, no decree of councils, synods, or churches, can endue with saving power, any ordinance, rite, or commandment that such councils, synods, or churches may, or have enacted. On the other hand, they would be utterly powerless to abrogate any law, or nullify any ordinance that God has ordained. In all spiritual matters we are commanded to obey God rather than man. But if the ordinance was of Divine appointment then it follows, that since we are dependent upon Him alone for salvation, and as he has decreed that "Every man shall be rewarded according to his works, and as our works, must be works of obedience, or of disobedience; and as he has never promised salvation only to the obedient, it follows that none but the obedient can have any claim to the priceless treasure. Moreover, as disobedience, in the Garden of Eden, brought banishment from the presence of God, and made mankind aliens from the kingdom of God, they thereby becoming the servants of sin; (John 8: 34. Rom. 6: 16); and as "The wages of sin is death," (Rom. 6: 23), and as the same cause will produce the same effect; then, in order to have the gift of God, eternal life, it follows that we must obey God's laws and ordinances; for it is written that Jesus, "Became the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey Him." (Heb. 5: 9). And again, "The Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God and obey not the gospel."—2 Thes. 7: 8.

From the above facts it follows that if baptism is an ordinance appointed by Divine wisdom, it is absolutely essential to our salvation.

For evidence on this question we will go to the written word of God. Not in the light of human commentaries, but in the simple light of that word, as God has preserved it for our guidance.

Our Lord once asked the Jews, "Was the baptism of John from heaven or of men?" but they, dreading his scathing reply, and the peoples faith in John, durst not answer. (Mark 11: 29, 33). But the Scripture says, John "was a man sent from God." (John 1: 6). And he declared that God sent him to baptize. (John 1: 33). Here is evidence that John's baptism was of divine origin. It was accepted and obeyed by Jesus, and this act of obedience was acknowledged by heaven, and the Divine seal, as promised by John to those who believed in him, was given to the Divine Son, viz., the baptism of the Holy Ghost. Read Matt. 3d, Mark 1st, Luke 3d, and John 1st. Of this baptism, Jesus declared, "All the people that heard him justified God, being baptized with the baptism of John."—Luke 7: 29. Here we pause to ask, In what sense was God justified by these people. In Mark 1: 4, 5, We read, "John did baptize in the wilderness, and preach the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins." Here then we learn what baptism was for. "And there went out unto him all the land of Judea and were baptized of him in the river Jordan confessing their sins." When therefore they came repenting of their sins, and obeyed the ordinance which God had ordained for the remission of sins, He was justified in forgiving their sins according to his word. "But the Pharisees and lawyers rejected the counsel of God against themselves being not baptized of him."—Luke 7: 30. From these words it is evident that the baptism of John was essential to salvation. Obedience to it secured the promised blessing; disobedience brought the curse. Is stronger evidence needed? Remember, these are not the words of commentators, but of the Son of God.

But some say John's baptism was not Christian baptism. Were there any truth in this quibble it would make our position stronger, if possible; for, if John's baptism was inferior, and yet fraught with such tremendous results, what must be the consequence of obedience to, or rejection of, the greater baptism? But we have no Scriptural evidence of any distinction between that which Christ sent his apostles to administer and that which John administered. We find God was the author, Christ obeyed it, and the heavens acknowledged it, and the same blessings followed; as, see Peter's sermon in Acts 2: 38. And when Jesus submitted to John's baptism, He said, "Thus it cometh us to fulfill all righteousness."—Matt. 3: 15.

But did Christ teach the baptism of water? We have already seen that he recognized it as a part of righteousness. That he declared "God was justified by the people's obedience to it. And that those who disobeyed, "Rejected the counsel of God against themselves." Now turn to John 3d chapter, Nicodemus is sitting at his feet. The Master is teaching him of the kingdom of God, and recognizes the awful fact that man is an outcast from that kingdom. Hear Him! "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, except a man be born again, he can not see the kingdom of God." This was a strange utterance to Nicodemus, he was ignorant of the "new birth," he asks for an explanation. "How can a man be born when he is old?" Mark the the answer! Note the difference, in Christ's definition of the new birth, from that of the so called evangelists of modern times. "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he can not enter into the kingdom of God." The trumpet gives no uncertain sound here. Surely the Great Teacher needs no interpreter. Are you outside the pale of God's glorious kingdom? You must enter by the door. The one who utters the above words "Has the power to open and no man can shut." "He can shut and no man can open." Will he falsify his word, can mercy rob justice? Will he be justified in admitting you by any other way, and without that due preparation of the heart, and submission, which God's unchanging law demands?

Answer the above questions in the light of holy writ. By what authority did Jesus teach these things? He tells us, "My doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me. (John 7: 16). Again, "I have not spoken of myself, but the Father which sent me, he gave me a commandment what I should say and what I should speak." John 12: 49. Do you ask Is there any saving virtue in it? He replies, "I know that his commandment is life everlasting." (v. 50). And he further declares,

"He that rejecteth me, and receiveth not my words hath one that judgeth him; the word that I speak that shall judge him in the last day."—John 12: 48. Reader, can you truly be said to receive God's words while you reject this great command? By treating it lightly are you not subjecting yourself to its condemnation in the last day? Jesus not only taught this doctrine to Nicodemus, but in the great commission given to his apostles and ministers. He said "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature, he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." Mark 16: 16. From this we are assured it is a saving ordinance. When the apostles stood forth for the first time to fulfill this mission, their cry was, "Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." Acts 2: 38. Here we find, as in the case of John's baptism, it brought the remission of sins, and was a preparation for the baptism of the Holy Ghost. Ananias told Saul to "Arise and be baptized and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord." Acts 22: 16. Paul declared he was "buried with Christ in baptism," and said, "If we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection." Rom. 6: 4, 5. The same apostle informs Titus that God had "Saved him by the washing of regeneration and renewing of the Holy Ghost."—Titus 3: 5.

All these testimonies bear witness to the saving and remitting efficacy of God's holy ordinance, when we "Bring forth fruits meet for repentance." If it possesses this efficacy, then as we need that salvation, and as there is no other way marked out but believing and obeying the same, baptism is essential to our salvation; and those who teach to the contrary, are not sent of God, for "He whom God hath sent speaketh the words of God." John 3: 34. "To the law and to the testimony, "If they speak not according to this word it is because there is no light in them." Isa. 8: 20. But you ask, "How can it be a saving ordinance?" I answer, because God has pledged his Eternal Godhead, that, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." And "He is faithful that promised." The blood of Christ has purchased this boon for us. The glory of the Eternal world must forever fade before God shall be unfaithful to his promise. "The word of God must endure forever." "Heaven and earth may pass away but my word shall not pass away." When Israel for their sins were bitten by the fiery flying serpent, and Moses was commanded to make a serpent of brass, was the healing virtue in the brazen serpent, apart from God's command and promise? Yet as many as looked upon it were healed. God was faithful to his word; but the disobedient perished. Was the virtue in the water when the Syrian General was told to go and wash in Jordan seven times that he might be healed of his leprosy? Or was it in God's word, when Naaman bowed in obedience to the same? Reader, bitten by the serpent of sin, filled with the leprosy of corruption, would you be healed and cleansed? Then bow to God's word, obey his ordinances, then you shall prove the truth of John's testimony, that, "If we walk in the light as he is in the light, we shall have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin." And remember that a true and lively faith always leads to obedience. "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, and he that believeth not shall be damned."—Mark 16: 16.

CHARLES DERRY.

A Dream Which was not all a Dream.

THE other day we were riding past a large farm, and were much gratified at a device of the owner for the preservation of his tools. A good plow, apparently new in the Spring, had been left in one corner of the field, standing in the furrow just where, four months before, the boy had finished his stint.

Probably the timber needed seasoning—it was certainly getting it. Perhaps it was left out for acclimation. May be the farmer left it there to save time, in the hurry of the spring work, in dragging it from the shed. Perhaps he covered the share to keep it from the elements, and save it from rusting. Or, again, perhaps he is troubled with neighbors that borrow, and has left it where it would be convenient for them. He might at least have built a shed over it. Can any one tell what a farmer leaves a plow out a whole season for?

After we got to sleep that night, we dreamed a dream. We went to that man's barn; boards were kicked off, partitions were half broken down, racks broken, floor a foot deep with manure, hay trampled under foot and wasted, grain squandered. The wagon had not been hauled under the shed, though it was raining. The harness was scattered about—the hames in one place, the breeching in another—the lines were used for halters; we went to the house; a shed stood hard by, in which a family wagon was kept for wife and daughters to go to town in. The hens had appropriated it as a roost, and however plain it was once, it was ornamented now, inside and out.

We peeped into the smoke-house, but of all the "fixings" that we ever saw! A Chinese museum is nothing to it. Onions, soap-grease, squashes, hog's bristles, soap, old iron, kettles, a broken spinning-wheel, a churn, a grindstone, bacon, hams, wash-tubs, a barrel of salt, bones with the meat half cut off, scraps of leather, dirty bags, a chest of Indian meal, old boots, smoked sausages, the ashes and brands that remained since the last "smoke," stumps of brooms, half a barrel of rotten apples, together with rats, bacon bugs, earwigs, sow-bugs, and other vermin which collect in damp dirt. We started for the house; the window near the door had twelve lights, two of wood, two of hats, four of paper, one of a bunch of rags, one of a pillow, and the rest of glass. Under it stood several cooking pots. As we were meditating whether to enter, such a squall arose from a quarreling man and woman, that we awoke—and lo! it was a dream. So that the man who left his plow out all season may live in the neatest house in the county, for all that we know; only, was it not strange that we should have dreamed all this from just seeing a plow left out in a furrow?—H. W. Beecher in Christian Union.

Genius is the gold in the mine. Talent is the miner who brings it forth.

Heaven's Argument.

"EVERY truth passes through three stages: First, it conflicts with the Bible; second, it has been found out before; third, we always believed it." When I first read Heaven's Argument, I found some things that seemed to conflict with former revealed truths; the next time, I thought it all had been revealed before; but when I took the time to read its references, I thought I had believed it long before the author was old enough to know what he did believe. Hence, Heaven's Argument looks to me very much like truth.

"Mormonia" on Prophets.

For the sake of brevity we will pass by the points of coincidence between Heaven's Argument and the Book of Covenants, and briefly notice the points of seeming conflict. "H. A." speaks of Christ as Michael; B. C. speaks of Adam as Michael, Prince of the ancient of days. A careful analysis of the Bible and B. C. reveals two Michaels, one of whom certainly is Christ. B. C. "Michael, mine Archangel shall sound his trump, and then shall all the dead awake." For proof that this Michael was Christ, read John 5: 25-29. It is true, Adam has been called the son of God, but he was never called the son of both God and man. Rev. 12th speaks of a Michael who fought and prevailed against the dragon. This Michael can have been no less a person than the captain of our salvation, a Christ. There is a Michael spoken of in two or three places in Daniel; and in Jude 1: 9, who was most probably some one else, Adam our Prince.

"H. A." speaks of Gabriel and Angelina as parents of all spirits, whether steadfast or fallen; B. C. says man was also in the beginning with God. Intelligence and the light of truth is not created, or made; neither indeed can it be. The word, 'beginning,' is sometimes used in a limited sense, the Bible, (I. T.), plainly tells us that God made man spiritually in the heaven's before he was naturally on the earth. Doubtless the light of truth by which he was created is self-existent, but that as separate intelligences we had a beginning, the Scriptures plainly teach.

"H. A." speaks of a time when there were no existences but self, (God), and boundless "nothingness." The revealments of science seemingly prove, and most Latter Day Saints believe that matter is self-existent and eternal; that it is absolutely indestructible; hence uncreated. This expression in "H. A." is poetry, similar to the words in Job. "He spreadeth out the north over the empty space, and hangeth the earth upon nothing." The words naught and nothing need not mean a vacuum, but may mean no organized, or created thing. "H. A." speaks of God as being "self born forth from the womb of might." This is poetry. Put it in prose and we have something like this. "God dwelt alone in night, when he said, Let there be light and there was light." Then he was self born from night into day; there is here no conflict with the words "From everlasting to everlasting, Thou art God."

"H. A." "To you is given the seal that seals for God." B. C. promises the keys of the kingdom to Joseph Smith and his successors in this world and the world to come. Whether the words seal, and keys, do, or do not mean the same thing it matters little; for Christ himself holds both as Lord of all. Rev. 3: 7, 8. And no man can either look or seal any one who loves him and keeps his commandments out of the kingdom, but every servant of Christ should endeavor to call all men unto him. The Holy Ghost is the seal that seals for God, and one of the keys of the kingdom is the prayer of faith that moves the arm of God. What some of the other keys may be we will not discuss. "H. A." speaks of two temples from one of which to fall is possible, and from which some did fall; from the other descended none nor could. B. C. speaks of the sons of perdition as being those who knowingly blaspheme against the Holy Ghost after having received it. These two propositions seem to be a flat contradiction and are the only ones that I had the least difficulty in reconciling at a second glance, and this only because of the revelations of the last half century, have seemingly proved that many who have prophesied in the name of Christ, and in his name done many wonderful works, have afterward become very wicked.

It is well known that no prophecy or revelation must or can contradict a known fact, but there is one witness more potent than the revelations of time, and that is the revelations of eternity. But as we have not reached eternity yet, we can only examine this witness by the revelation of the Almighty. We read in the Book of Covenants, "There were liars and hypocrites in the Church from the beginning, who had deceived some, but they should be reclaimed, and the liars and hypocrites be destroyed." I do not know how, when or where, those who have wandered far in sin and darkness, following these liars and hypocrites, are to be reclaimed; but true, as it is God's word, it will be done. I have in my mind a man spoken of in B. C., as the Lord's servant, whom those who knew him told me, was a political demagogue before he came into the Church; a hypocrite, pious libertine, all the while he was in it; a defamer and persecutor after he left it. Does any suppose that he was ever the Lord's servant in the sense of being a Saint? He was the Lord's servant in some other sense. Nebuchadnezzar, Cyrus, Columbus, have all been spoken of as the Lord's servants; but not in the sense of saints. The lectures on faith, convey the idea, that it is possible for Saints, even in this life, to be sealed up unto life eternal, and "H. A." admits the possibility of saints falling from grace. In the lines, "The stars that fell from heaven grieve me most, for those who knew my love then fell as they, * * * when God's are sealed, and time has come to end, professed lovers sealless fall to death."

"H. A." tells us probation will end December 1st, 1882. The Bible and B. C. both speak of a time, "When men will curse God because of their plagues, but repent not of their sins." It is the Spirit of God that moves upon the heart, and leads to repentance, and the Lord says, "My Spirit shall not always strive with man." As the Scriptures in many places tell us that the time will come when the wicked shall be given over to hardness of heart, and "H. A." tells us that the time will be December next. It is certainly not the philosopher, or prudent person, who will live as though he was sure that time would never come. Probation may not end next December, but I believe that for certain classes of sinners, and for one class of Saints, it will; and so believing, wish that the prophet's warning could be spread throughout the world, that sinners may have another call to repentance, and Saints to make their calling and election sure. I do not know exactly what the close of probation may imply, and it is not best that any of us should know; but one thing it does not mean, that those who are thus lost shall never be reclaimed throughout the countless cycles of eternity; for the Scripture speaks of the time, "When every knee shall bow, and every tongue shall swear allegiance to Christ. It is a mistake, that Mr. Lay definitely fixed December 1st, 1883, for the second advent of our Lord. The words in "H. A." are, "When three years are past, till then the wicked prosper as they may, the righteous flourish as was never known." Then a long list of events, war, plagues, volcanoes, and then, "When hell and night meet, heaven and day becomes." Months and even years might intervene, and still this prophecy be true.

"H. A." speaks of the earth "As the shrine at which eternal providence makes possible that final death relive." In all the writings of W. K. Lay, this is the only place in which pre-existence is remotely hinted at. I am writing to wise men and women; be your own judge which is most in harmony with the goodness of God; to give this probation in mercy to those who have erred in spirit, that the dead may have another chance to live; or to fling the steadfast angels, weak, helpless, and ignorant, into the terrible vortex of life, that the living might have another chance to die. But the Book of Covenants seems to teach the same idea in the words, "Christ having redeemed man from the fall, man became again in his infant state, innocent before God." Man can not become again innocent, unless he has once lost his innocence. I admit that the book of Abraham plainly declares, "That Abraham and many other honorable spirits were present at the council of God, when it was determined that Christ should be the redeemer of the world." We are told that John the Baptist was a man sent from God; that Jeremiah was ordained a prophet before he was born; and probably every true prophet and reformer, who has made the world better by having lived in it, was sent from God, on purpose to be a savior of men; but among them all, only one, has passed through this life unstained and sinless; "For none are free from blemish since the fall, And love divine has paid one price for all."

I have in my mind two prophecies of Joseph Smith the martyr, which, taken separately, mean nothing very definite, but taken together, lead us to expect the advent of our Lord between the years 1884 and 1890. However, to the last date there is an if, which makes it still more indefinite. There is also in "H. A." an if, which makes it just as indefinite, "This tell the Bride, if now she will prepare, true as God's word, a marriage feast will be with Christ, and Spirit will officiate." But if she will not prepare, what then? I can not answer this question, but Jesus says, "You shall not see me again until you shall say "Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord." Looking back over the world's history, there are many times when Christ has seemingly drawn very near; when he has stood at the very doors of the Church and knocked, but the Bride was never ready, because the call never came at the right time, in the right way, the right place, nor from the right person; and as long as the gospel car moves in the time worn ruts of stereotyped theology, it never will. Nathaniel was an "Israelite indeed, in whom there was no guile," yet he questioned if any good thing could come out of Nazareth, and the pious Pharisees were sure that no prophet could arise out of Galilee.

In some of Mr. Lay's arguments, he seemingly claims that he is the Elias of Restoration. John 1: 20, Inspirid Translation, represents Christ as the Elias who shall restore all things. Though Mr. Lay does not use the word, Elias, in referring to Christ, he conveyed precisely the same idea in his answer to the first letter I sent him, which letter at the proper time I will offer for publication. Perhaps I should here remark that I have his permission to make any quotations from his letters I choose. After speaking of the great work of restoration committed to himself and others, (I quote from memory). "It is but as drops to the ocean, compared to the great work of Christ, when he shall have redeemed every created intelligence, and presented the kingdom to his Father."

There are a few other points which I should like to notice, and some questions closely allied to this, I should like to discuss; but I know I have already had more than my share of the Herald's columns. I will discuss the other topics through some other paper. I thank you, Bro. Joseph, for permitting me to speak to the Saints through the Herald, and wish to remind those who think Bro. Joseph does wrong to permit heretical views to be expressed through the Herald that God could silence all heretics, but he does not, and we are commanded to be like him. Silence is the argument of tyrants, reason is the argument of God. To those who think that Deuteronomy 13: 1, 3, applies to Mr. Lay, or the God who sent him, I would say that for half a century the Saints have been telling the world that the reason why the signs do not follow the churches, is because Christians have ceased to believe the truth. Who was it said them that believe shall cast out devils, * * * and lay hands on the sick and they shall recover? If such a sign, given in answer to humble prayer of faith in Christ, is no true sign at all, who else was a false prophet besides W. K. Lay? I request you, reader, to prayerfully study Mark 3: 21, 30, and then be careful that you too, do not create Gods that neither we, nor our prophet, nor our Christ, have known. If the words "become a spoil and a prey" refer to Mr. Lay, I answer he has never preyed upon any one's purse but his own, and that is a matter between himself and God. I do not think he ever spoiled any one's faith, I am certain he never spoiled mine. He only put into words thoughts which burned in my brain and heart before he was born; but which I had not courage to speak or write. If the words, "need not complain," refer to me, I never did complain, I had brains of my own and knew what they were for, before he had any. He is in no sense responsible for my faith, nor any thing I have written. In his answer to some of my letters he has said God does not speak to him, and he can give no advice. In this, as in nearly every thing else, he obeys the command, "If you receive not the Spirit you shall not teach." He observes the word of wisdom, better than many who profess to believe it. He contends against no church; he has never reviled our God, nor abused our prophet, nor ridiculed our faith, nor misrepresented any of us. Reader, are you sure you never misrepresented him?

The words, "Thou shalt not be afraid of him," do not fit me either, for I never was afraid of him, nor any other prophet, false or true, living or dead. I am a reasonable human being, and expect my religious teachers to appeal to my reason, not my fears. His message was just what the Saints have been saying for half a century: "Fear God and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come."

I have read, and do believe all the promises made to Joseph Smith III; but I understand it differently from some; perhaps I am wrong; I do not know the whole council of God; and, pardon me reader, neither do you.

There may be many Eliases, but Christ is the great restorer of all; there may be many Zerubables, but Christ is Judge of all; there may be many Joshuas, but Christ is leader of all. Let not the sun reject the moon; the moon the stars; nor the stars the feeblest lamp that lights the darkest corners of the earth. If any man on earth or heaven, thinks he is the sun, he makes a mistake; for Christ is the sun that lights us all, and the nearer we can come to him the more of his light we reflect.

I believe in authority. It is ordained of God and approved of men; it is to the spirit of truth, what the prism is to the light of the sun. It arranges and sets the Church in order; but as the light of the sun is better for most uses without the prism; so the Spirit of truth is wider in its range, and more perfect in its results, when it flows to all without the prism of authority.

The Influence of Example.

THERE is on the borders of Connecticut a small town, which, though weak and feeble, still with the help of the "Home Missionary Society," supports a minister and maintains regular divine worship.

About the time when it became necessary to pay the minister's salary, there moved into the place a man who gained a living by carting coal and other similar labor. It was noticed that this man was very regular in his attendance at church, but in a pecuniary point of view he was not considered a valuable acquisition. One fine morning Deacon A—, a man of considerable means and considerable penuriousness, started out, subscription paper in hand, to see how much he could squeeze out of the parish for the support of the minister. The first person he met was the above mentioned coal-carter, moving along the road with a cart load of that material. The deacon considered within himself that it might be worth while to ask him to contribute, seeing he was a good sort of person, and every little helps; and so he accosted him with "Good morning, Mr. B, are you willing to give anything to the support of the pastor?" at the same time handing him the paper.

The man stopped, stood thoughtfully for a moment or two, drew a pencil out of his pocket, and with his dirt begrimed hand he headed the list with the sum of $50.

The deacon was so taken by surprise that he could hardly believe the evidence of his eyes, and thinking the man had made a mistake, and not wishing to take advantage of him, he asked him, "Did you not mean that for 50 cents?" The coal-carrier turned and drew himself up to his full height and with great earnestness replied, "I do not value the gospel at 50 cents a year." This answer placed the case in a new light. The deacon went immediately to the pastor, related the incident, and said, "If that man can give $50, I can give $500."

The same spirit actuated the rest of the parish on hearing the story, and in a few days the salary was raised by the people themselves without the necessity of applying for outside aid.

Did Christ go to Paradise?

"And he said unto Jesus, Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom. And Jesus said unto him, Verily I say unto thee, to-day shalt thou be with me in Paradise."—Luke 23:42, 43.

THE above question has been one of much comment, and I have heard a variety of opinions expressed respecting the same. I have heard it said that Christ did not go to Paradise during the day referred to in the text, but that he (Christ) went and preached to the Spirits in prison, who were disobedient in the days of Noah, and that he was thus occupied during the three days that his body was in the sepulchre. This argument is used to do away with the idea that Christ went to Paradise on the day that he expired on the cross.

I frankly confess, that I have been of the same opinion myself, until I made the subject a study, and after a careful investigation, my views have materially changed concerning the matter, from the significant fact, that I fail to find one passage of scripture, either in the New Testament, or Book of Mormon, that proves emphatically that our Savior spent his entire time preaching to the antediluvians. Neither is there adequate proof to establish, satisfactorily, to my mind, that he visited the prison-house during the interval that his spirit was absent from the body.

"But," says the objector to this, "does not the Apostle Peter write that Christ went and preached to the spirits in prison?" Let us read what Peter wrote: "For Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God, being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the Spirit: By which also he went and preached unto the spirits in prison."—1 Peter 3:18, 19. I fail to comprehend that the language of Peter affirms that he preached to the prisoners at all in the spirit form. He simply asserts that Christ went there at some time, but does not specify any particular time; suffice to say he was taken there by the power by which he was quickened, (or brought forth from the dead). Hence there has not been sufficient proof adduced by the objector to prove that Christ did not go to Paradise; whilst, on the other hand, we have ample proof, "For he that spake, as no other man spake," said unto the thief, "To-day, (not a thousand years) shalt thou be with me in Paradise." Again we meet the objection that Paradise and the prison-house are one. I think those who make such objections are not acquainted with the teachings that are contained within the New Testament and Book of Mormon, for they plainly teach us, that Paradise and the prison-house are two distinct and separate places.

Paradise is said to be a place which God has prepared for the righteous departed spirits, and they are to remain in this place of bliss, until they are permitted to unite with their bodies, at the first resurrection. The prison-house is hell, or a place of confinement, to which the spirits of the unrighteous are consigned and reserved until the judgment. "He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches; To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the paradise of God."

—Rev. 2:7. Read 2 Corinthians 12 chapter, "Wherefore, death and hell must deliver up their dead, and hell must deliver up its captive spirits, and the grave must deliver up its captive bodies, and the bodies and the spirits of men will be restored one to the other; and it is by the power of the resurrection of the Holy One of Israel." O, how great the plan of our God! For on the other hand, the paradise of God must deliver up the spirits of the righteous, and the grave deliver up the bodies of the righteous, &c. 2 Book of Nephi 6:4, 5. Also read Alma 19:5, 6.

I shall now endeavor to prove that our Savior's voice was heard by the inhabitants of this continent, while his body was in the grave. I do not contend, that the Nephites saw him until after his ascension into heaven. In the Book of Helaman, 5 chapter, we have an account of a prophet, called Samuel the Lamanite, who gave the people of this continent a sign, the import of which signified that certain events would transpire during the time of Christ's death, and would continue the three succeeding days: "But behold, as I said unto you concerning another sign, a sign of his death, behold, in that day that he shall suffer death, the sun shall be darkened and refuse to give his light unto you; and also the moon and the stars; and there shall be no light upon the face of this land, even from the time that he shall suffer death, for the space of three days, to the time that he shall rise again from the dead," &c.—Helaman 5:7. We ascertain from Nephi, grandson of Helaman, that the predictions, of Samuel the Lamanite, were fulfilled to the very letter, "And it came to pass that there was thick darkness upon all the face of the land, inasmuch, that the inhabitants thereof who had not fallen, could feel the vapor of darkness. * * * And it came to pass that it did last for the space of three days, that there was no light seen; and there was great mourning, and howling, and weeping among all the people continually; yea, great were the groanings of the people, because of the darkness and the great destruction which had come upon them. * * * And it came to pass that there was a voice heard among all the inhabitants of the earth, upon all the face of this land, crying, Wo, wo, wo, unto this people; wo unto the inhabitants of the whole earth, except they shall repent, for the devil laugheth, and his angels rejoice, because of the slain of the fair sons and daughters of my people; and it is because of their iniquity and abominations that they are fallen. * * * O, all ye that are spared, because ye are more righteous than they, will ye not now return unto me, and repent of your sins, and be converted, that I may heal you? Yea, verily I say unto you, if ye will come unto me ye shall have eternal life. Behold, mine arm of mercy is extended toward you, and whosoever will come, him will I receive; and blessed are those who come unto me. Behold I am Jesus Christ the son of God. I created the heavens and the earth, and all things that in them are. I was with the Father from the beginning. I am in the Father, and the Father in me; and in me hath the Father glorified his name. I came unto my own, and my own received me not. * * * And now it came to pass that after the people had heard these words, behold they began to weep and howl again because of the loss of their kindred and friends. And it came to pass that thus did the three days pass away."—Book of Nephi 4 : 4, 5, 6, 8, 11. There are several points in the above passages I desire to call the attention of the reader to. First, the voice heard, is declared, in the 8th paragraph to be Christ's. Second, this voice spake to the people during the three days of darkness, (not after), his body at this time being in the grave. Third, I fail to see how Christ could have spent his entire time, preaching in the prison-house, and at the same time, be speaking to the people on this continent. It is obvious from the above examination, that Christ visited Paradise, the day referred to in the text and that he spake to the people on this continent during the three days. The above are views on the question, whether correct or incorrect I leave them for abler minds to decide. Hoping the brethren will throw more light on the subject, because I believe it to be of importance to all.

Unpunctual People.

You may take it for granted that unpunctual people are thoroughly selfish. Their own inclinations are paramount to the convenience of others. The unpunctual man is apt to think that the greatest evil he occasions by his special infirmity is temporary inconvenience or disappointment. But this is not so. If one of his delays should disturb only the arrangements for one day of a single person he may congratulate himself. What bitter disappointment, and what serious annoyance and loss, may come from a letter a little too late for the mail, a bill paid after the promised time, an appointment not kept, a commission deferred! Note for yourselves and think on these things. Punctual people are always reliable. Do all that you promised to do, and all that you are rightfully required and expected to do as certainly, so far as it depends upon yourself, as the sun rises and sets, so that the hearts of all with whom you are in any way connected may "safely trust" in you. Then you will become "pillars of support" in the family and in society instead of broken reeds. Let your word be as good as your bond, and when you say you will do a thing, do it.

Hear, and Then Judge.

EDS. TRIBUNE:—It is often held that the doctrines and practices of the Brighamite Mormons are the exact reflex and necessary outgrowth of original Mormonism as found in the standard books of the Church and the ministerial teachings of Joseph Smith the Seer. Nothing can be more untrue. There is not one word in the sacred books of the Church, nor in the published teachings of Mr. Smith, commanding or justifying polygamy; neither is there one word teaching or justifying disloyalty to civil government, disobedience to civil rulers, or resistance to civil law. However much Mr. Smith and the Mormons of his time may have erred in their conduct, the teachings of the authorized Church books, with the letters, editorials, and pulpit utterances of Mr. Smith, do not contain the first sentiment contrary to good morals and upright citizenship.

In August, 1831, Mr. Smith taught the Church as follows, in regard to obedience to civil laws and rulers, which, if obeyed by the Mormons now, would solve and settle the difficulties now existing between them and the civilized world in the matters at issue. He said: "Let no man break the laws of the land, for he that keepeth the laws of God hath no need to break the laws of the land; wherefore, be subject to the powers that be, until He reigns whose right it is to reign, and subdues all enemies under His feet,"—a time yet in the future. This command, if obeyed in good faith, would now bring the Utah Mormons into complete harmony with the laws of our nation. The Utah leaders tell their people this was binding at the time it was given, but is not now; yet the text says it must be observed until the personal coming and reign of Christ.

This law of the Church will yet prevail in Utah, in connection with the laws of the land, and the cunning craft of corrupt teachers will pass away as the blackness of darkness at the incoming of glorious day.

In 1839 Mr. Smith wrote a pastoral letter to the Church from Liberty, Missouri, in which he said, "There is a duty which we in common with all men owe to governments, laws, and the regulations in the civil concerns of life. These guarantee to all parties and denominations of religion equal and indefeasible rights, all alike interested, and they make our responsibilities one towards another in matters relating to temporal affairs and the things of this life. The former principles do not destroy the latter, but bind us stronger and make our responsibility, not only one towards another, but unto God also. Hence we say that the Constitution of the United States is a glorious standard; it is founded in wisdom; it is a heavenly banner, and is to all who are privileged with the sweets of its liberty like the cooling shade and refreshing water of a great rock in a thirsty and dreary land."—Times and Seasons, vol. 1, p. 134.

Mr. Smith's views of the power of Congress under the Constitution are pertinent and valuable just at this time. In a letter to John C. Calhoun, the great "nullifier," who held that the people of a State were greater in their rights and powers than the people of the entire United States in some matters of national interest, Mr. Smith wrote as follows:

"Why, sir, the power not delegated to the United States, and the States, belongs to the people; and Congress, sent to do the people's business, has all power."—Times and Seasons, vol. 5, p. 395.

In the same year, 1844, Mr. Smith gave to the public his "Views on the Government and Policy of the United States," and therein says: "In the United States the people are the Government, and their united voice the only sovereign that should rule; the only power that should be obeyed; the only gentlemen that should be honored, at home and abroad, on the land and on the sea."—Ibid, 533.

These, Mr. Editor, were the sentiments of Joseph Smith and the Church from 1831 to 1844; and when persons teach contrary to them they violate the fundamental law of the Church and the public teachings of the founder of the Church. We confidently believe the Utah Mormons will yet see their errors and abandon them.

Very truly,

Smoking—Its Effects Upon the System.

SEVERAL years ago Dr. Decaisne, of the notabilities of the Societe d'Hygiene, startled the smokers of Paris by drawing attention to the fact that the use of tobacco had a peculiar effect on the pulse, which he styled intermittency, and by tracing the phenomenon, then for the first time accurately described, to a rhythmically intermittent action of the heart, without organic disease, and due especially to the narcotic action of the nicotine and other potent alkaloids present in the tobacco-leaf. He had at that time carefully studied the cases of eighty-one inveterate smokers, in twenty-three of whom the intermittent pulse was a confirmed trouble, not associated with any real heart-disease. The intermittence vanished when the habit was abandoned even for a few weeks, and reappeared as soon as the use of the poison was resumed. In conjunction with this series of studies on adults he investigated the influence of tobacco on the circulation of boys from 9 to 15 years of age, and discovered that not only did it produce palpitation of the heart and intermittency of pulse, but also a peculiar condition of the blood itself allied to anæmia. Laziness, stupidity, and indisposition to apply the mind to study were traced, with probable accuracy, to the habit of smoking in many of these lads, and, when formed early, he found that smoking gradually brought a predisposition to alcoholic stimulants, and that, in some instances, the starting point of a criminal career dated from the first secret indulgence of the vice—producing by slow degrees, when acting upon a constitution still extremely flexible, a complete moral and intellectual transformation as well as physical degeneracy. M. Decaisne, according to a Paris medical journal, has just contributed to the annals of the same society a valuable appendix to his former paper, in which he takes up the effect of smoking upon women, forty-three cases of which have come under his observation since 1865, when he commenced this special series of studies. Besides disturbance of the digestive function which was common to them all, eight presented a marked intermittency of the pulse without organic disease of the heart. No medical treatment proved of the least avail to correct the distempered function, tonics and sedatives being equally powerless. At length he was compelled to insist on his patients discontinuing the use of tobacco, and in each case where smoking was actually given up—the cautious writer says actually because he found women more inclined to deceive than men in this regard—the trouble was immediately relieved and ameliorated; and when the suppression of the habit was persevered in for a few weeks with steady purpose, the alarming symptom disappeared altogether. M. Decaisne offered no rationale of the action of the narcotic, and enters into no analysis of the disease now familiar to popular parlance as smoker's heart; but here his observations are supplemented by those of a careful microscopic observer, who has discovered that all narcotics—opium and its preparations, hasheesh, etc., as well as tobacco—act in a peculiar manner upon the colored corpuscles of the blood, producing the phenomenon styled crenation—that is the margin of the corpuscle, instead of possessing the absolute regularity of margin noticed in the condition of health, presents a series of scallops somewhat irregular in their distribution. When viewed by oblique light under the microscope, this appearance is found to be due to the conversion of the corpuscle into a minute sac, apparently containing some hundreds of spherical bodies about one four-thousandth of a millimetre in diameter. In a few hours the sac ruptures and the imprisoned germs or organisms escape into the surrounding plasma to form bacteria when the conditions are favorable. A few such crenated corpuscles, in the proportion of one to 350, occur in the circulation of persons in normal health, not addicted to narcotics; but in the opium and tobacco habits, when of long standing, the ratio is sometimes as high as one degenerated corpuscle to ten healthy ones, and often attains the figure of one to twenty five or thirty. In such cases the countenance is pale and almost cyanotic; dark circles appear beneath the eyes, which lack lustre and are deeply sunken, and the respiration is weak and easily disturbed, while the heart palpitates violently upon very slight muscular exertion. An incident illustrating the sequel of this appearance of the blood occurred a few months ago in the office of a manufacturing optician in this city. As the Professor of microscopy in one of our medical colleges dropped in, a gentleman of evidently large wealth and finished intellectual culture was just leaving the office with a cigar between his lips. He was a wealthy amateur, and had selected a valuable microscope, using a drop of blood from his own finger as a test object. The instrument was still adjusted, and the slide still beneath the lens. The Professor glanced at it; then moved the slide to and fro, so as to study one field after another; then counted a few fields, and made a rapid computation. The optician looked on in astonishment. "That gentleman is one of our best customers," he said; buys more heavily than half a dozen professors." "And this a drop of his blood?" inquired the man of science, musingly. The purveyor of lenses assented. "Very well," replied the Professor, "tell your best customer, if you can without impertinence, that unless he stops smoking at once he has not many months to live." But he did not stop. A few weeks later he went to Europe, thinking a sea voyage might recruit his wasted energies. In a few weeks more his death was announced by telegraph from Paris, where the doctors styled his disease a general breaking up.

Charity.

"AND though I bestow all my goods to feed the poor, and though I give my body to be burned, and have not charity, it profiteth me nothing."—1 Cor. 13:3. Strange indeed does it appear to persons in this nineteenth century, that a man may give all of his goods to feed the poor, and yet not be a charitable man. If a man in this age gives of his abundance, but a very small portion, to buy food for the hungry, or clothing for the naked, he is considered a very benevolent man, and he is sure to be very highly praised by the press of the country. When a certain gentleman, in New York, subscribed fifty thousand dollars to the fund for the relief of the sufferers in the Chicago fire, we remember how the papers talked about Mr. so and so's munificent gift. And yet the gentleman was said to be worth, at that time, about fifty millions, and so we see his gift was really about one thousandth part of what he possessed. But, the Apostle says, though I give all my goods (not a small portion) to feed the poor and have not charity it profiteth me nothing. It is right that we should give our goods to feed the poor, that we should succor those who are in need of help, that we should raise up the fallen, cheer the faint hearted and do all in our power to relieve their wants. But it is not enough that we do all these things. They are good so far as they go, but they do not constitute charity in the full sense of the term. We should have the same love toward our brethren that Christ had toward us when he laid down His life for us. "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends." We are commanded to love one another even as Christ loved us. And moreover we are commanded to bear all things patiently. If any one should seek to provoke us to wrath we should remember that "Charity suffereth long and is kind." If we feel inclined to envy our neighbors we should remember that "Charity envieth not." How many of us can truthfully say that we possess charity, the greatest of Christian graces? Remember, dear Saints, that if we do not have charity we are told that all other virtues profiteth nothing.

W. H. BROWN.

The Baptism of John—Its Nature.

ORDER is Heaven's first law. If first, all other laws will be governed by it in their nature and application. God, the author of law, is governed by this first law in his very nature, without which he would not be perfect, and hence all law devised by him, must move in perfect order to manifest the nature of the Creator by the creature. For a law to operate in any degree contrary to order, proves the law itself not to be of God, or that opposing influences are operating against it in its movements. God has revealed a law—"The perfect law of liberty"—to redeem man from sin, and bring freedom from all the effect of sin, which is not only perfect in its formation, but it must harmonize in its operations to answer the result of its creation. Did it not harmonize in all its parts and movements, it would bear the impress of its own death; for that which is divided against itself can not stand, and hence, instead of proclaiming itself the law of life, would proclaim the opposite.

The law, or principle of baptism introduced by way of the messenger, John, bears the impress of its continuation in the object for which it was sent. The object, remission of sins, is necessary as long as there are sins to be remitted, and the law of baptism revealed by John will remain until the object for which it was sent is accomplished, for the word of God will not return to him void until it shall have accomplished that thing for which it was sent.—Isa. 55:8 to 11.

If, then, this law of baptism promises that result by its application which is necessary today, and in all ages of the world until it shall have attained the object for which it was sent, it proves its present legality and necessity of application. We are sinners, and need remission therefrom. No power on earth or in the heavens can remit sins save the power of God, and as God expresses his power by law, we must look for some law coming from him in order to gain this blessing, and to see that law remain in full force till this blessing is gained by all to whom the blessing will prove beneficial. Any law pretending to come from God should be investigated in order to rightly understand its nature, which to receive a right understanding of will give us the evidences whether it is of God or not, and if from him, to know how to apply it to receive the blessing.

John did baptize in the wilderness, and preach the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins. "And there went out unto him all the land of Judea, and they of Jerusalem, and were all baptized of him in the river Jordan confessing their sins." (Mark 1:4, 5)

The first requisite, as shown by the above quotation, necessary to comply with this law of remission as preached by John, is that of repentance, or confession of sins. To truly repent we must confess our sins to Him against whom we have sinned. We have sinned against God, hence to him we confess, which we would not, nor indeed could not do unless believing that he is. We would not be led to repent unless we believed we should be rewarded by so doing. Faith comes by hearing the word of God, through which means we gain access to the fact that he is a rewarder, and the nature of the reward. We learn by the word, that the blessing to be obtained by repentance is the remission of sins, and that repentance is the preparation necessary to be made in order to receive the blessing, and that without this preparation, faith in God and repentance, the blessing could not be obtained. If the preparation must be made to God, and the promise to us by obeying the law must be obtained of him, we can safely conclude that we must look to him as the author and finisher of the law, and that we need not believe in vain for the reward promised. God has given the law, made the promises to be obtained by obeying it, and to understand the true nature of the law is but to understand the true nature of God, and to obey it is to show our faith in God. We must do as well as say, for to say we have faith in God and yet not do those things commanded we bring upon us the judgment "Depart from me." "Faith without works is dead." We have now noticed the preparation to be made, but as yet have not noticed the ordinance itself, but will now undertake to solve the nature of the ordinance of baptism, scripturally. "And were all baptized in the river Jordan," by which quotation we notice that being baptized and being in the river Jordan are two quite different acts, and yet one is an explanation of where the other was committed,—the act of baptism being done in the river Jordan.

Great stress is placed upon the phrase in the wilderness, some endeavoring to force the argument that being buried in the water is not baptism more than being buried in the wilderness is. This argument we will admit as true when applied to this particular passage, but not true in the light that baptism could not have been obeyed in other parts of the river than that which coursed its way through the wilderness, and yet been true baptism as well, nor in the light that the expression in the wilderness excludes the force of the expression in the river, for both expressions are full of meaning peculiar to themselves. John and those who came to him for baptism, might have gone into the wilderness and then into the river Jordan and no baptism take place, but in the wilderness and in the river tell us where the act was obeyed. John and those with him might have gone into the wilderness of Judea and then into the river Jordan and not baptized, but to be baptized in the wilderness in the river Jordan, without going into the wilderness and then into the river Jordan is an impossibility. We could not say that they were not baptized in the wilderness, if they were baptized in that part of the river Jordan which coursed its way through the wilderness of Judea, but if we desire to be understood, as to what part of the river Jordan, John baptized, we would be forced to say in the wilderness. We can as truly say that they were baptized in the wilderness as well as in the river Jordan, but we must understand that the water in the river Jordan was that in which they were baptized, instead of the trees of the wilderness. One is reasonable and the other is an absurdity, but the absurdity of the man of straw, does not destroy the reasonableness of the true facts.

This argument when used shows to what extremity a man is forced who pretends to believe the record of God's word and yet try to disbelieve in the nature of John's baptism as that of a burial or birth, or a submerging of the one to whom the law is applied in the water, that they may be hid from the world, and then arise a new man in Christ—being freed from the sins of the past as the result promised by compliance therewith.

Ministers, like lawyers, have a case to plead, and those for whom they are counsel pay the fees, and they feel that they must use all the means in their power to win the case, or at least to make it look plausible to their constituents, that they may think their cause is just, although the judge—the word—may decide against them, all of which is done that the fee may be obtained without trouble, and they be continued in the case. I do not wish to be understood that the true minister of God is thus, for they have no fee to influence them this side of the other shore. They without purse or scrip must go, laying up treasures in heaven where moth and rust doth not corrupt, and from thence do they look for their reward. They who are of God heareth God's words, and teacheth them.

Jesus, after he was baptized came up out of the water,—he being one of those who were baptized in the wilderness in the river Jordan, and the Spirit of God attested the fact of its God-like nature, and that he, God, was well pleased with his son in having obeyed the ordinance which he did. He certainly would not have been pleased had his son made a disorderly example in obeying the law which he had just obeyed. The manner of obeying the law, as well as the preparations prior to obeying it must have been heeded to the very letter to have pleased the law giver, and to have been a pure example of righteousness, and of perfection, to which, by following his example we are striving to attain. His coming up out of the water proves that he must have been in the water, to which place he went to receive the object for which he came, even baptism of John.

John was sent as the porter to open the door and let the Shepherd in, that He might walk in the way of the Lord, which way John was sent to prepare, and in which way we are to walk to obtain life, which we could not do unless He had obeyed it first, and yet follow Him. Jesus would not have gone into the water unless it had been necessary. He presented in His life no unnecessary, but what was done by Him was to fulfill the will of the Father, and to accomplish the result desired to show forth the nature and power of God. "John was baptizing in Enon near to Salim, because there was much water there, and they came and were baptized of him." Strange that John would go where there was much water unless much water was necessary in which to baptize! Strange that this man sent of God as the Elias, would spend his whole life in fulfilling unnecessary! Strange that Jesus would accept John's baptism as fulfilling righteousness! Strange that Jesus would call the baptism of John the counsel of God! Strange that God would declare Himself pleased with His Son fulfilling an unnecessary command! Strange that God would send His Holy Spirit to seal Jesus as the Lamb of God, upon His accepting this unnecessary (?) ordinance! Strange that Jesus would go into the water to receive this ordinance if it was unnecessary so to do! Strange, very strange!! Anything that comes forth to affirm that the baptism of John is of heaven, and the one true baptism is also accounted as a strange thing. How beautifully do the Apostles and Elders in their teachings harmonize with the teachings of John. Says Peter, "Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins." Says Ananias, "And now why tarriest thou? Arise, and be baptized and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord." Says Luke in writing concerning Philip and the eunuch. "And he answered and said, I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God; and he commanded the chariot to stand still; and they went down both into the water, both Philip and the eunuch; and he baptized him. And when they were come up out of the water, the Spirit of the Lord caught away Philip, that the eunuch saw him no more; and he went on his way rejoicing." God's ways are unchangeable, without variability or shadow of turning, hence the way of the Lord preached by John is and must be the way of the Lord, whoever preached by and whenever preached. The ordinance of baptism was devised by God, who is all-wise, for the remission of sins, and as surely as God liveth and changeth not, so sure will the principle of baptism remain the same in its nature, application and effect. God's ways are not man's ways. Why should we wish to change His ways to suit our ways? Is man more wise than his Maker? Shall the thing framed say to Him, who framed it, Thou hast no understanding? Is the way God has devised for our welfare too inconvenient, or too simple? Too high or too low? Does it look possible that God devised wrongly? Does it look impossible for the remission of sins to follow obedience to this law when God has promised it? God has all power, and why should we doubt his fulfilling it. The blessing of remission of sins is needed to-day, and we must look to God for it. It would be far beyond the reach of faith to believe that God would remit sins or could remit them in a way He has not promised, and yet would not, or could not, remit them in the way He has devised for that purpose.

God has not promised our sins believed away, nor repented away, when as yet not His children, unless we subscribe to the law formed for the remission of them. God will not change to suit man's sincerity. No matter how sincere we believe our sins are remitted without we obey that form of doctrine devised for their remission by God, our faith is vain, and our hope is also vain.

Faith is founded upon the promises in God's word, and He invites us to believe as He has spoken, but warns us to not depart from His word and expect otherwise than He has promised. Too many are the examples of the past of expectations unfulfilled because of not conforming with the conditions to obtain that for which man expected.

John's baptism was fulfilled by going down into the water, obeying the ordinance while in the water, and coming up out of the water in the past, and as it was fulfilling righteousness, and pleasing to God then, so it will be to-day, and forever, as the Lord is the same yesterday, to-day, and forever, who was the Author of this law for man's good. John's baptism is Jesus' baptism, and as He fulfilled His Father's will, God's baptism, and all that is left for us to do is to accept it as such with a faithful, repentant heart and we will receive the blessing of heaven as promised by God; and after accepting this law—pleasing God thus far—and continuing through life to please by fulfilling righteousness—doing His will—we have the promise of Eternal Life, and the acceptance of one of those who have been faithful.—entering into the joys of thy Lord. May God add His blessing, that these thoughts, homely clothed in language, may be as bread cast upon the waters, and fraught with god is the prayer of

JOSEPH SMITH, EDITOR.

Lamoni, Iowa, November 15, 1882.

THE following editorials, we publish the first from the Chicago Tribune, the last from the Ogden Pilot. We insert them to show how thoroughly the fact that early faith of the church and the polygamic Mormonism of Utah, are not only widely different, but the latter is a perversion of and a departure from the first, is being disseminated. Thanks to the persistent policy of the Reorganization, it is now within the reach of any public spirited journal, and every reading man of the world to show, beyond possibility of refutation by these Utah transgressors against the good laws of God given to the Church through Joseph, the Seer, that Mormonism, pure and plain, never was, and can never be polygamic in any feature of its faith and practice. Keep it before the people.

MORMON AUDACITY.

It begins to look as if the act directed against polygamy in Utah were a brutum fulmen, and as if the Edmunds Commission, while flattering itself it is dealing strong blows at polygamy and purging the poll-list of polygamists, were in reality making no progress at all. Elder Cannon may be accepted as a representative Mormon. He is one of the Twelve Apostles, and exerts an influence upon Mormons not inferior to that of President Taylor himself. Substantially he is the Mormon Premier, and what he says carries conviction. This man a few days ago made a public speech to the Saints, which for its boldness and craft recalls some of the addresses which Mahomet used to make to his wavering followers. In the course of this speech he said:

"My brothers and sisters not in polygamy, do not think you are to be the saviors of the Latter Day Saints. If this people are saved it will be through the men and women who have obeyed this divine command—and this is as true as if spoken by an angel from Heaven. Let not the fear of the world extinguish the love of God within you. If we can not obey the laws of our country and God, better far for us to obey God. Let us go from this conference and obey the revelations we have heard better than we have heretofore. If we had obeyed the counsels of the prophets of God we would have kept these people from getting a foothold here. We have warmed a viper in our bosom, and it has stung us."

Notwithstanding the declaration so frequently made that polygamy is an institution not recognized by the Book of Mormon and not contemplated by the founder of Mormonism, it is evident enough from these declarations of Elder Cannon, who speaks with authority, that polygamy is the very foundation-stone of Mormonism, and that the church now regards it as the essential feature of its doctrines and the test of its membership. Under such circumstances what confidence can be placed in the statement of any Mormon that he is not a polygamist, since if he is not a polygamist he acknowledges that he is not a Mormon?

The Mormon propaganda is not satisfied with defending polygamy as the corner-stone of Mormonism in the very face of the commission; its missionaries were never more busy than now. While the Edmunds Commissioners are unquestionably doing their best to check the evil in Utah, the Mormon missionaries have literally carried the war into Africa, and are swarming all over the South searching for recruits for the Salt Lake harems. The Southern papers announce the arrival of Elder John Morgan at Chattanooga a few days ago with fourteen missionaries consigned to different parts of the South. He boldly proclaimed his mission, and in an interview hesitated not to say that they were there in the interests of polygamy. In the course of this interview he said: "Why, look at the census of Tennessee: it shows an excess of 17,000 women. What is going to become of these poor women! Under the laws of the State they must violate the command of God to marry. We fix it differently, and think it the duty of a man to take care of as many women as he can. They are entirely dependent upon men. God said: 'Multiply and replenish the earth,' and we try to do it." In keeping with this doctrine was his subsequent announcement that he was going to send missionaries into various Southern States to secure, if possible, young women to send to Utah for polygamous purposes. The mountainous regions of Tennessee and Georgia have in years past furnished many female recruits for polygamy, but it was done quietly, and the victims were obtained from among the poor whites. Now they propose to recruit openly. Fortunately, some of the Southern States, particularly Georgia, are aroused on the subject and will take measures to thwart the rascals in their infamy. Nevertheless, it is a fair illustration of the audacity of Mormonism that its principal and most authoritative leader warns the Saints at home that those who do not practice polygamy will be eternally damned and are not Mormons at all, but apostates, and that its missionaries travel through different States openly announcing that they want young women to fill up the harems of polygamists—and all this while the Federal Government is attempting to crush out the evil in Utah and has sent its commission there for that purpose!—Tribune.

MORMONISM.

When writing from time to time in such pronounced language in reference to the Mormon Church, we do not wish to be understood as directing our remarks to that class of Mormons known as Josephites, who, as is pretty well known, some years ago made a distinct issue with the President and bishops of the Mormon Church upon the question of polygamy, and who have, we believe, faithfully carried out the principles then advocated by them. We have no quarrel or contention with these. It is with the pretentious, arrogant, venal, hierarchy of bishops whose assumptions both of a temporal and spiritual character are of a nature to disgust every intelligent American. We say it is with these we propose to wage a war until their downfall is accomplished.—Ogden Pilot.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Our readers and all having business with the Herald Office will please remember that we prefer money orders, or drafts, on Chicago, as much of our business lies there and vouchers for money payable there, are more available than money orders on other places. Look at our instructions on this point in our business advertisement and take it for granted that we know what we want, and mean what we say.

Bro. Joseph Lampert wrote from Oshkosh, Wisconsin, a good letter concerning his connection with the gospel and the Church, relating many of the trials to which he and his faith have been subjected, and the sacrifices he has been under the necessity of making by reason of his desire and determination to preach the gospel. The letter gives the experience of a great many beside Bro. Lampert, but from its length and personal nature we do not print.

In this case, as in hundreds, perhaps thousands, the obedience to the Lord's commands brought the purifying and sanctifying influences. Among their sacrifices and distresses, oppositions and adversities come, frequently, and if faith survives it is because the grace of God, sufficient to the work is given. Bro. Lampert's faith survives, and a grand triumph is surely waiting for him if he "endure unto the end."

We learn by letter from Bro. Wm. J. Curry, of Rushville, Illinois, that the conference of the district failed to hold a session, for causes said to be good at the last appointment. Since the death of Bro. Darius J. Weatherbee, but little preaching has been done in the district or the Rushville Branch.

Bro. Thomas R. Gibbs of Warner Station, Alabama, has a copy of the Book of Mormon and one of the Doctrine and Covenants, in the Welch language, which he will sell or exchange for copies in the English. Address him Warner Station.

The population of Kansas, as shown by statistics gathered by the Assessors shows an increase over 1881 of 26,958.

BRO. JOSEPH F. BURTON'S work in Nova Scotia will be seen by the following from the Halifax Mail:—

Pereaux is the vanishing point of the fair vale of Cornwallis. The shadow of Blomidon falls upon it, and the pleasant waters of Minas Basin kiss its shores. The spot is beautiful for situation, and in fruits and field products rich as the garden of the Lord. The inhabitants are virtuous, pious and happy. To this land, in June last, Elder Joseph Burton, a son of Rev. William Burton, formerly a Baptist clergyman in Halifax, and afterward in Hantsport, N. S. Mr. Joseph Burton, his son, was a member of the Baptist Church, and a sea captain of no inconsiderable attainments. In California Captian Burton was converted to the Mormon faith, and gave such evidence of preaching power, that he was sent by the society of the Saints to convert his friends to Mormonism. He came to Cornwallis, took a hall at Pereaux, and went to preaching. His early efforts were crowned with success. First a prominent Baptist, a deacon or other official was won over, who, with his wife, were re-baptized, according to the rules of the Mormons. This accession was followed by that of other equally sturdy Baptists. A worthy lady convert was made a prophetess. She received a divine message the first day of her official life from a man of her acquaintance, who did not look favorably upon the dispensation. The revelation was to the effect that the recipient had sinned away his day of grace and was a lost soul. She delivered her prophecy with due impressiveness, but the man was not disposed to accept the heavenly warning. He had a better hope of his spiritual state and general prospects. An attempt was made to organize a Mormon mission in Canning but it failed. Mr. Burton is not a polygamist, and does not believe in the Brigham Young faction of the Latter Day Saints. Some say that it is the lack of the attraction of polygamy which has prevented the further success of the mission. Whatever may be the cause, the work has not the measure of prosperity that its early success gave reason to expect.

THE following extract from the Christian Commonwealth, published at London, England, for October 12th, 1882, will be read with pleasure by all lovers and advocates of temperance reform. It shows clearly that there is a gradual working up in the tone of public opinion in favor of abolishing the use of intoxicating liquors as a beverage from good society. Let the good work go on.

We see by late minutes of a conference of the Saints, held at Oakland, California, that a resolution was adopted strongly endorsing the present temperance movement going on in that state as elsewhere in the union.

OUR REVENUE FROM DRINK.

It will be a source of unbounding satisfaction to all right-minded persons to find that from the Revenue Returns for the quarter and half year just ended there is again a falling off in the income derivable from intoxicating drinks, and this notwithstanding the fact that the improvement in trade has been gradually going on now for about three years.

For the half-year just ended we find that the Excise exhibit a decrease of £90,000, in addition to which the Customs exhibit a decrease of £4,000, showing that as the year advances the revenue from this source steadily declines. The decrease for the last three months, compared with the corresponding period of last year, is £94,000. All this implies that the falling off in the revenue from this source, to which Mr. Gladstone referred in his Budget in April last, is still going on. For this we feel profoundly grateful, inasmuch as it reveals the fact that progress is still being made among the people in the direction of total abstinence principles.

Last year the Beer Tax realized £8,580,000, or less by £92,000 than the average of the malt duty for the previous six years. It, therefore, is clear that the consumption of beer must have fallen off. This will be all the more readily understood if we take into consideration what Mr. Gladstone pointed out, that the entire revenue from drink fell from £31,029,000 in 1874-5 to £28,444,000 last year, or more than 2 per cent., and it still goes on decreasing.

All this means that the people are learning wisdom, and that the money formerly spent in drink is spent in a better manner, and is finding its way into the homes of the people in the shape of comforts and blessings, over which we must and ought to rejoice. It is evident that the missions, whether "Blue Ribbon," "Gospel Temperance," or by whatever name they may be known, are leading to these glorious results, and we trust that during the coming Winter a still greater change for the better may attend such efforts. The loss in this way to the revenue means a real gain to the people.

But what does all this imply? Is it not this,—that in proportion as the revenue is enriched, the people are impoverished; and in proportion as the people shake off the curse of drink, the national exchequer will be emptied? Better that this should be so, we say, than that the people should be degraded and ruined. Long ago John Wesley truly said, "that revenue is bought too dear which is bought with the price of the flesh and blood of the people." Yes, we say, perish any revenue which is raised by the moral ruin of the community; and is it not suicidal for any Government to depend upon such a source for the maintenance of its position? If "righteousness exalts a nation," it follows that wickedness ruins a nation, and, therefore, a revenue which is derived out of the vices of the people must sooner or later bring its own retribution. It would be a grand thing if Mr. Gladstone and his colleagues, now that these facts are compelling them to face the question, could see their way to take the only legitimate course which an enlightened Christian opinion has long dictated, viz., to cease to do evil, and to forego raising a revenue from such a demoralizing traffic, and to say with the heathen Chinese Emperor, when asked to license the opium traffic, "Nothing will ever induce me to derive a revenue out of that which will degrade and demoralize my people." A sober, moral, and godly people are worth any price to preserve, while nothing is more pernicious than tempting a people to evil for the support of a national exchequer.

HENRY WARD BEECHER wrote the following to the Boston Traveller in reply to an invitation to express himself against the critics who have been examining his late renunciation of his ministerial association with the Congregational fraternity.

BROOKLYN, Oct. 26th.—My Dear Sir: I thank you for the letter and papers. I have read somewhat largely the expressions of these many and excellent men in regard to my orthodoxy, consistency, influence, and general merit without wishing for a moment to reply, as you kindly request me. When a dead man is lying on the dissecting table under the hands of experts, it would be unbecoming for him to rise up suddenly and discuss with his surgeons the propriety of their methods and the truth of the results. It is not often one can see himself as others see him, and especially as Boston sees him; and more than all, as Boston clergymen see him. I am reduced to pulp, but, thank heaven, not to ashes. When you suggest a reply to these, I am sure you can have no conception of the subdued and enlightened state of my mind. I am bent on improvement. Laying aside all my old notions of my beliefs and of my standing, I am carefully putting together the real man that I now am taught that I am. When I get my new personal identity together and in working shape I intend to study theology somewhere, though in my present confusion I can not yet see whether I shall study at Andover or Boston. New Haven is nearer, but Dr. Smyth has been settled there and I fear laxity of doctrine in his neighborhood. Princeton is not far to the south of me, but Dr. McCosh is a Christian evolutionist and it would be folly, after what I have suffered, to come under the malarial influence of that philosophy. On the whole, I incline to study at Park street, but wherever I may go, I am determined before I die to find a theology which will pass muster at Bangor, at Andover, at Cambridge, at New Haven, at Princeton, at Alleghany, at Oberlin, at Chicago, and at Park street. Then I shall willingly die. Yours,

HENRY WARD BEECHER.

It might be a most excellent thing for Mr. Beecher (it will hardly do to say now Reverend H. W. Beecher) to do at this juncture while he is in the pulpy state, to adopt the doctrine and gospel of Christ, as his system of theology, and with that batter into supreme nothingness Andover, New Haven, Boston and the rest of the places where ministers are made.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bishop George A. Blakeslee, of Gallien, Michigan, wrote October 27th, 1882:

I had expected to go to Kirtland next Monday, but shall not go until a week from Monday, to try to get a roof on the Temple this fall. I have received on the Temple account up to this date a very little over $300. Our conference held at Coldwater on the 21st, 22d and 23d, of this month was an excellent one; we had a large attendance and the Elders had excellent liberty in presenting the word.

Bro. J. J. Cornish wrote October 27th, from Richmondville, Michigan:

Bro. Barr baptized a young lady lately who has been troubled with fits, but who has been healed. The sister had been given up by three doctors, but God, the Great doctor, healed her.

Bro. C. C. Reynolds of Buffalo, Scott county, Iowa, writes:

With Bro. David Holmes of Buffalo Prairie I went last Sabbath, five miles below Buffalo, on the Illinois side of the river, and assisted in baptizing and confirming one man and his wife, a Bro. Amos Roberts; seed sown by Bro. Holmes, one of the faithful Elders, who never puts his hand to the plow and looks back.

Sr. Catharine Salisbury, sister to Joseph and Hyrum, of Fountain Green, Hancock county, Illinois, writes:

I wish you could come and see your Aunt Lucy and make us all a visit, we would all be very glad to see you. I wish you would send some good Elders this way; we will board them as long as they will stay.

Bro. David McGoan, of Volney, Alamakee county, Iowa, writes:

I am strong in the faith of the gospel in its fullness. I am an old Mormon; was baptized in 1832, the same year you was born. I am not ignorant of the work of the last days, but am not able to do much. I shall be seventy the first day of February, if I am spared. I rejoice in God, my Savior, that you have become old enough to take your father's place and carry on the work that he laid out to be done, under the power of inspiration. I don't preach much, only at funerals; I am helping in the Sabbath School, at present. I am lonely since my wife died, but if I am faithful I shall meet her soon in the paradise of God, with those gone before.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Questions and answers on page 323, HERALD, present volume, fail to give satisfaction to some here, as it only answers one side of a controversy that has continued here for years; therefore I submit the following. I am a disinterested party.

Yours in Christ,

ROBT. M. ELVIN.

Are not the Spirit and genius of the law governing in the priesthood of this Church, that those receiving the Aaronic priesthood, are ordained to the end and with the understanding; that the office shall be utilized to the good of the Saints, and the exoneration of the incumbent? Yes.

2. Is honor done to whom honor is due, by a branch imposing upon an Elder the duties of Priest, Teacher, or Deacon, to the discouragement and detriment of those holding the office of Priest, Teacher or Deacon; and furnishing the Elder an excuse to neglect the magnifying the calling and duties of his own office?

Not necessarily so. If the Priest, Teacher, or Deacon be unavailable for any legitimate reason, (and there may be several), an Elder may properly be chosen to act. Nor should the so acting as a Priest, Teacher, or Deacon hinder an Elder from magnifying the higher office and calling if it be a higher one. He that is not faithful in small things will not be in greater ones. No Elder who is above performing the duties of Priest, Teacher, or Deacon in a proper spirit of meekness and simplicity, can fully comprehend the nobility and proper characteristics of an Elders office, and hence can not fill the office of Elder well.

BELGRADE.—The Servian Ministry have resigned. They give as a reason for the step that King Milan expresses dissatisfaction with the measures they have taken to discover the authors of the plot which resulted in an attempt to assassinate him. Oct. 30 —At New York fire destroyed the Park Theatre. Two men were seriously injured, and another is missing. Loss about $280,000.

Judge Hunter this morning delivered his decision in the mandamus cases of Douglass and Pratt to compel the Salt Lake Sheriff and Territorial Auditor to surrender their books and offices to Douglass and Pratt, appointed by the Governor to the respective positions under the Hoar amendment to the Edmunds law. The Judge denied the writ on trivial grounds, and his decision has caused many uncomplimentary remarks and great disgust among the Gentiles, who think so plain a law should have been put in force without delay or quibble. Hunter, they say, has always sided with the Mormons on questions at issue between Mormons and Americans. Many openly declared on the streets that he has been bought by the Mormon Church, and as he is not in sympathy with any movement toward the reformation of this Territory, President Arthur would be doing the whole country good service by speedily removing him. An indignation meeting is talked of to publicly denounce him and call for his removal. At Ogden to day, in a similar case, Judge Emerson decided in favor of the Government's appointees, and they will be at once installed. His decision receives the highest praise by the law-abiding people of the Territory, and is in marked contrast with the shuffling of Hunter.

When we rise above our fellow man, our head is a mark for their missiles.

Be anxious, when you relate anything, to tell it just as it occurred. Never vary in the least degree.

We may mend our faults as easily as cover them.

Correspondence.

COLDWATER, Michigan,
October 30th, 1882.

Dear Brother Smith:—Our quarterly conference held here the 21st 2d and 3d, was a decided success. Was largely attended by both brethren and friends. The large school house in which it was held, was crowded to overflowing three times on Sunday. A good impression was left on the minds of those who came to hear, as expressed by many since. The preaching was refreshing in the main, and very impressive. Bro. E. L.'s effort on Monday, to the Saints on finance, was rather extra. The spirit of his mission was recognized as being with him. Two were baptized by Bro. Wm. Kelley, The Spirit's power attended the preaching, baptisms, confirmations, consecrations, administrations, and blessing of children. Business was transacted in great unity of feeling, and all were encouraged to press on in the narrow way.

We are spending a few days here and preaching to interested audiences. And we feel blessed in our efforts, the oldness of the field notwithstanding.

Bro. Joseph, I rejoice to know that God still recognizes the work, and reveals his will in regard to it. The revelation of September 28th, 1882, to me seems so concise, perfect and so beautiful in its very construction. And it seems to me that nothing could be more consistent with the present circumstances that surround the Church, than this revelation. I sometimes fear I am one of the unfaithful ones referred to in the last paragraph. I hope to be more faithful in the future. I hope you will pray for me.

Are you able to supply us with a copy of Articles on Representation, as they now are? Would like a copy.

Bro. W. H. Kelley is now in Chicago, and E. L. is in Clear Lake, Indiana. Bro. A. Barr, E. DeLong and M. H. Bond were at the conference.

Hoping for success,

C. SCOTT.

ELKHART, Anderson Co., Texas,
October 20th, 1882.

Dear Herald:—Since my last letter in your columns, I have been busy, and have been rewarded by seeing some good done, I think. Bro. Montague joined Bro. Luff and me, in the Indian Territory, on August 10th. Together we labored and counseled for a few days, when Bro. Luff took his departure for home; and Bro. Montague and I continued together until September 4th. I had the pleasure on August 13th, of seeing Bro. Montague immerse two in the clear, sparkling waters of Grand River. I enjoyed the labor and company of the two brethren named above.

We had some seasons of joy in our communion with the spirit. Prospects there for the work are not so good as we could wish; but there are some well meaning Saints there, who, I trust, will grow strong in the work. I arrived at Elmwood branch, September 5th, and soon after commenced meetings; and was blest with the spirit, while expounding the word to large, and well interested audiences.

The Lord blest us in a remarkable manner in healing the sick, both in and out of the church. One case out of several I will briefly relate. A Mr. Skinner, afflicted with some disease, the name of which I do not know, but he was suffering severely, and the family thought he was dying. They sent in great haste for Bro. H. L. Thompson and me. We found him in a suffering condition, the cords in his leg were so contracted that he could not straighten himself. We asked him if he had faith to believe the Lord would heal him through our prayers. He replied "I do." We administered to him in the usual way; and he arose and walked into the kitchen, and ate supper; and has gradually grown stronger ever since. Praise God for his goodness!

The morning of the 15th before we started for conference we baptized one. Conference at Cook's Point September 16th and 17th passed off pleasantly, though but few attended. At conference I met Bro. A. J. Cato, and have been with him ever since. We remained a few days at Cook's Point, and then to Elmwood, where we held a week's meeting, which was well attended; and resulted in the baptism of six more, including the Mr. Skinner, who was healed as mentioned above. From Elmwood we went to Central branch, where we remained a week and baptized one. We arrived here on the 13th inst., and have held a few meetings; but the weather being bad, has militated much against us. Two are to be baptized to-morrow, and so the good work goes on. Bro. Cato is with me, but is in very poor health. We trust he will soon be restored, so his usefulness will not be diminished. Bro. Montague was yet in the Territory when last heard from. The work in this part of the mission was never in better condition. The interest in many places is increasing, and the fields open so wide we are constrained to pray for more laborers to be sent into the vineyard. We are not without our trials, however. Many things threaten our peace, which we anxiously wait the development of. But on the whole, we feel encouraged and also feel well in the work. It seems to me that the work has become part of my very existence, and without it life would be a burden. The minister's life is in many respects a hard one. It is hard to preach this gospel; but much harder not to preach it.

I am in bonds of love for Zion's cause,

HEMAN C. SMITH,

LINDLEY, Missouri.

October 22d, 1882.

Bro. Joseph Smith:—We are living out of reach of any branch, and consequently are deprived of hearing any preaching from the Saints, except what we hear through the Herald. We wish you to state in the Herald, that any Elder coming this way will find a welcome home, as long as he sees fit to stay. We have a large meeting house, and it is said to be open for all denominations; and the school houses are mostly open for preaching, and there are some that want to hear the doctrine. The Adventists have been preaching here, and have broken down prejudice to some extent. Any one coming by rail, can get off at Gault Station, on the Wabash road, running from Quincy, Illinois, to Frenon, Grundy county, Missouri. Any one wishing to correspond, may address E. Moorman, Lindley, Grundy county, Missouri.

As ever, yours, in the one faith,

E. MOOREMAN.

St. Louis, Missouri,

October 31st, 1882.

Bro. Joseph:—Have just returned from a tour in Illinois, where I held forth every night last week, at Caseyville and Alma, alternately. The result for good, (if any), remains for the future to disclose. One thing is certain, I mean to do all that lays within my power to roll on the good work, by magnifying my calling. I find the Saints to some extent manifesting their faith in the gospel, by living in harmony with their profession, while in some localities I am sorry to say they are quite indifferent, seem to be tired, and wish a rest. One thing certainly is a puzzle to me, and that is how Saints, who have, (as they claim), received a testimony of the truth of the work, with all that this knowledge implies, can become careless and unconcerned, sit down supinely still, be cause, forsooth, some one has done wrong, according to their standard of right. I have yet to learn that wrong doing of others is an excuse for wrong doing by me. If I shall succeed in obtaining the great reward, it will be due to my individual, persistent efforts to do right; and only by a voluntary willingness to exercise my powers in that direction, can I claim divine assistance so to do. I am made sad sometimes while contemplating the magnitude and character of this work, when I see in the secular news papers announcements for political stump speaking by our Elders, who instead of devoting their time and talents in the service of the Master are aiding and abetting a set of political tricksters, and demagogues, who are clamoring for spoils; and while I would not ignore the right and duty of Saints, who are a part of the government, to exercise the elective franchise by voting for the best and wisest men to represent us in the national councils; and while I recognize the principles of the political party in power; while I remember the noble work done in perpetuating our Union of States, the grand principles of the platform, and so forth, it is now a thing of the past, and is only to be seen on paper. The principles I cherish still, but the party—as such—is corrupt, and rotten as a rope of sand. The hand writing is on the wall, its days of power are numbered; and I do hope and pray, that the time will soon come, when the Elders of Israel will find some noble employment than political stump speaking, to get the applause and hurrahs of the rabble. May God speed the day when they shall rise to a higher plane.

As the Herald excludes politics from its columns, I desire to say that the foregoing lines are not partisan, neither faultfinding; but I believe sound, therefore, not objectionable; and as I have neither time nor opportunity to make spread eagle speeches from the stump in Iowa, I ought to be allowed to say this much through the columns of the Herald. I leave to-morrow for Moselle, and Sullivan, Missouri. Shall probably extend my trip to Oregon county, returning again to the city about the last of December, and shall strive, by the help of the Master, to preach the gospel; but no politics in mine, thank you.

Kind regards to all. Fraternaly,

B. V. SPRINGER.

EAST DES MOINES, Iowa,

October, 1882.

Dear Herald:—If the sister who wrote to me a few months ago will send me her address, I will try to answer her letter, which has been mislaid. We expect to have our church completed by the second or third week in November, and expect Bro. Joseph Smith to dedicate it. God has blessed us greatly in all our undertakings in raising funds to build it.

L. B. MERRILL.

WHEATVILLE, Crawford Co. Wis.,

October 11th, 1882.

Bro. Joseph:—I have not written to you for some time. I am happy to say there is a change for the better in this district, and I believe it will work out all right. We had a good conference at Excelsior, September 23d and 24th, the best we ever had in the district. I believe it will prove of good to the cause in this district. The Spirit of God was with us. We give God the praise. I could not travel over the district as I should have done, on account of the affairs at home, sickness, and so forth; but will endeavor to give a correct report between now and next conference. There were two baptized at the last conference by the writer. I will endeavor to give the items as I have them. Pray for me and the district.

I remain, as ever, your brother in Christ,

A. L. WHITEAKER.

KENT, Illinois.

Bro. Joseph:—I am as strong in the faith as ever, but get lonesome once in awhile,—none of our Church being here, except mother and myself. I think my wife would be baptized, if an Elder would come here. I think if an Elder would come and preach our doctrine, and say nothing against other churches, and come in the early fall before other protracted meetings begin, with a little care and patience there might be a good work done here. Bro. J. H. Lake could build up a branch here.

Ever praying for the welfare of Zion and the work, although I can't do much at present, I still remain firm in the faith.

Pray for me.

LEVI CHENEY.

823 Henry St., WEST OAKLAND, Cal.,

October 18th, 1882.

President Joseph Smith:—Our late conference held in Oakland, on the 6th instant, was a grand success. The weather was really delightful, the last two days in particular. Our meetings were well attended, and the Saints all enjoyed themselves, the good Spirit being with us throughout the conference, and two more precious souls were added to the fold. Bro. Carmichael was re-appointed President of the District. Bro. T. J. Andrews was recommended to the Bishop by the unanimous voice of conference to have him appointed the Bishop's Agent for this district.

Under date of October 23d, 1882.—The work is looming up in Oakland. We had an excellent meeting last night. Bro. Price preached to a full house. I was glad to see in the Herald that the brethren had taken action to repair the Temple at Kirtland. I shall contribute my mite to such a noble work.

Yours, respectfully, in Christ,

WM. HART.

RICHMONDVILLE, Michigan,

October 27th, 1882.

Bro. Joseph:—Just a few lines to let you know that I am still alive. I am busy every Sunday, preaching to the people one place and another. I work every day through the week in the mill. I have preached every Sunday but four this year; most of the time in a school house five miles north and west, a new place, and have been blessed abundantly; seven there have been baptized, all heads of families, except one, and the leading people of the place; I have baptized eight in all within the last three months, and there are about ten, or twelve who seem to believe, some of whom will obey the truth. One mile from where my mill now stands there is a protracted meeting going on. I went down, and after meeting, we had about three quarters of an hour in conversation with the minister, (United Brethren), I am sure the truth was made plain, as the people expressed themselves. This is close to the place where I held a debate with three ministers about four years ago, when so many were won to the cause. All around those places where we have been, they have held protracted meetings but failed to get any new converts. Sometimes some of the old ones fall back, and in their protracted effort they get them up to the bench again, &c. I went again to the protracted meeting and shortly after he got started, he let out a little on miracle power, stating that those who believed in miracles now as in Christ's time were a disgrace to the country, &c. Before he could get it all out, two young men came in and said that a horse had fallen into the well. All the men went out except three with myself, that broke up his report against the Saints. I spoke to him after meeting, and tried to reply to what he had said. But he said he did not want to speak to me. When the people saw that he had made statements, and after meeting would not and could not meet them, they hooted him, and he left as soon as he could. They said they wanted no preacher around there who could not stand to his doctrine. Since then, but few come out to hear him.

Bro. Joseph I tell you it is no use for other ministers to try to get up revivals and such like after Latter Day Saints have gained a foothold. Nearly all the young folks who hear the gospel, if they do not join never believe in any thing else.

My license was burned at the time of the fire. I was sorry; for about four months ago I might have preached in a church several times, if I could have shown that I was an ordained minister, as the church is opened to all such.

I shall be glad when I can devote all of my time in the ministry. I see to preach once every Sunday is scarcely enough in a new place.

Yours in the faith,

JOHN J. CORNISH.

Box 1046, SALT LAKE CITY, Utah,
October 24th, 1882.

President Joseph Smith:—I reached this city late on the evening of the 22d. On the following day, (Sunday), I put in an appearance at our new chapel, where I met and was welcomed by Brn. Blair, Warnock, and a number of the Saints. At the close of Bro. Blair's discourse in the afternoon, I spoke for a few minutes, and in the evening addressed the congregation again.

My health is good, and if so continued I hope to labor diligently while I remain here.

While I was in the Indian Territory this summer, my brother came from Canada to Independence, Missouri, and on my return there I met with him, after some four years separation. On the last Sunday I was there, prior to coming here, I had the pleasure of baptizing him into the Church. May the Master bless him, and "reveal unto him the abundance of peace and truth," that his usefulness may be proportioned with his days. He suffers from partial blindness—one eye being covered by a cataract, and the other weak—I ask for your prayers that he may have his perfect sight restored.

I can not write concerning this mission till I become better acquainted with it; but the fruit of the labor already performed is beginning to come forth. Charity, wisdom, patience, are quite as essential here as zeal, in order to accomplish or reach the object in view. I feel the need or want of these qualifications, and for this reason hope to be remembered by you in prayer.

In hope of final triumph, as ever,
JOSEPH LUFF

CHICAGO, Illinois,

October 30th, 1882.

Editor Herald:—The Michigan District Conference was held, as per announcement, on the 21st, 22d, and 23d instant, with an excellent attendance, both by Saints and outsiders. It was in every way a success. Some expressed that it was the best yet held in the district. All felt happy and not a note of discord was heard throughout the entire session. No shade of dissension or strife was seen or felt. I was led to ask in my mind the question, whence cometh strife and opposition any way?

The preaching was fair to good, and what was best of all, the Spirit of the Lord was sensibly present at times, to confirm the word to the believer, and impress the unbeliever that this is the revealed way of the Lord. Altogether, the cause was certainly honored, and new life, strength, comfort and courage imparted to the believer. The house was crowded at the preaching session, and the enquirers manifested more of an earnest and direct interest in what was said and done than at any previous session. The interest still goes on, and Bro. C. Scott is there responding to the further desire to hear, the meetings being well attended. Two were baptized and others expressed a desire to be with us soon.

It has come that the faith of the Saints in and about Coldwater, is no object of reproach, save it may be with the possible few, who persistently refuse to hear and fairly judge, but are bent on walking as they have without being able to assign a reason for it.

The weather was fine all through. We met with pleasure, rejoiced together, parted with grief to be confirmed and encouraged to still sacrifice and labor to strengthen and build up the cause of Christ, to his glory and the good of men. May all succeed. Bro. E. DeLong returned home and Andrew Barr returned to North Michigan to do some labor for the cause. Bro. E. L. is at Steuben, helping to encourage the cause, and the writer at this place, where the Lord and Bro. Weston stood by him yesterday morning, and evening in the presentation of the word. The audiences were good, especially in the evening, and the Lord gave unquestionable assurances of his determination to permanently plant his work in the city of Chicago. Things are looking up, and we are encouraged. Will be gratified when Bro. Lambert arrives to lend a helping hand, and even then there will not be enough to do the work a tithe as completely as it should be done, and of course results must be something accordingly. Bro. T. A. Phillips takes charge of the branch in the absence of Bro. Lambert, assisted by others, and brethren are trying to honor the work. Bro. George F. Weston will preach in the city next Sabbath.

Laboring for the success and triumph of the cause I am as ever, a fellow workman,
WM. H. KELLEY.

SANDWICH, Illinois,

October 23d, 1882.

Bro. Joseph:—I have just returned from Mission Conference, and found your letter of the 18th waiting my return. I have done all I could to warn the churches against A. W. Dehner, and have also sent a description of him to Bishop Blakeslee. It is truly surprising that our people are not more on their guard against such characters. We had an exceptionally good time at conference, and the brethren who spoke acquitted themselves well. We had crowded houses, and good attention, and an overflow of the Holy Spirit, in our sacrament and fellowship meeting, and tears of joy wet many faces, both of the aged and the young, and we believe that the influence for good will be felt by many in the future. Bro. F. G. Pitt, of Sandwich, was unanimously elected for recommendation to Bishop Blakeslee as his agent, for this district. Sr. Vickery is much better at this writing; but my wife is still suffering from the effects of her injuries. I shall take the field again as soon as her condition will permit. We intend, if possible, to make a steady, united effort for the cause in Northern Illinois.

Yours in bonds,
J. S. PATTERSON.

COUNCIL BLUFFS, Iowa,

October 25th, 1882.

Dear Herald:—I gave the last of thirteen discourses on the evening of September 25th in the vicinity of Bunker Hill, Russell county, Kansas. Three adults were added to the Church. Among the three, was Bro. Joseph Menezie, formerly of the Bickertonites. His brother William, also resides in the neighborhood, who was baptized by Bro. Jarvis, of Scranton, two years ago. They are men of good repute, and able defenders of the faith.

Leaving on the 26th I touched Kansas City and Wyandott. Made a brief stay in the latter place, receiving a warm reception from old friends, with invitations from Bro. Wm. Newton and the others; which mark of kindness I appreciated, and would have been glad to have accepted the invitation, but hinderances loomed up. Traveling some distance from Kansas City, the sound of St. Joseph saluted my ears, bounding from the cars; tarried long enough to greet, shake hands, and receive marks of kindness from old acquaintances. Will they and the Wyandott folks accept my thanks, and believe, I regret my inability as I partially promised, and then expected, to see them again on my way through Kansas. As the development of circumstances compel a change, or departure, from plans mapped out in my mind. I had not expected to have come this far east until spring, but home matters rendered it necessary—which being known—kind Saints extended aid—which we shall ever remember—only remembering with pity the croakings of those, whose non-pious souls—are so exercised—at the thought of Elders traveling in rail-road cars. As it generally happens that those who make a fuss about money matters, are those who keep their purse strings tight. Any Elder abroad, feeling the responsibility of his calling, will never allow (physical strength permitting) a walk of ten or twenty miles to stand between him and duty. Nor will he miss a chance to ride, to satisfy croakers. As the acceptance of invitation to visit localities hereabouts would necessitate a longer stay, and as that is impracticable, I trust those thus inviting will accept this explanation.

In hope,
JAMES CAFFALL.

Bro. Joseph:—One of the greatest pleasures derived from reading the Herald, is to me the perusal of the correspondence. In it we find the pleasures and pains, the hopes and fears, the joys and sorrows of our brethren and sisters depicted, and our hearts respond to the feelings expressed as though they were our own; we rejoice with them that do rejoice, and mourn with those who mourn. To me the correspondence stands next to a Saints' meeting. Through it, though hundreds of miles separate, and have never beheld each other in the flesh, space is annihilated and we feel in the presence of old friends. There is a magnetism about Mormonism that is possessed by nothing else under the sun. The Spirit of the living God permeates through the whole and makes us one in Christ Jesus. And though our minds may be cast down, though circumstances may weigh upon us heavily, and we feel to be traveling in the valley of despondency, one cheering letter in the Herald, one beaming countenance, and one grasp of the hand from a Latter Day Saint will scatter all the blues that ever congregated. Whatever the world may think of Mormonism, to me 'tis good to be a Saint of latter days."

From your brother,
WM. HAWKINS.

FONTANELLE, Adair Co., Iowa,
October 25th, 1882.

Dear Herald:—Your information of the death of Bro. Wilsey brought sadness to my heart such as I seldom ever felt. To me he was a worthy brother.

Joseph Young was the first defender or preacher I ever heard. His second sermon was in my house. Elijah Reed was the second laborer I ever heard. Bro. Wilsey was the third, with whom I have often been in his ministry when in his branch, and who set me to preach my first in his branch, on the first day of January, 1837. He had the November before, baptized my sister, and the next fall with Bro. Kellogg, ordained me an Elder. In March he baptized my wife, and on the fourth of June after preached her funeral sermon. Afterwards he baptized my son Stephen and my Bro. William, and in May, 1864, at Plano, performed the necessary ceremony that makes my present wife and myself one.

In June, 1862, he called on me in Wisconsin. We went on to the shore of lake Michigan, and in a week's time baptized 21, and organized a branch twenty miles above Milwaukee. If you would like to see one of them, call at the house of Peter Harris; his wife is one of them, as you can see by her.

I have been reading the above, or trying to read you may think, and fear it will try your patience. If it does, lay it by until the last or until you have plenty of time.

Bro. Wilsey's ways and manners are still with me this morning. I have been corresponding with him for a year or two. In some of his letters he informed me he did not expect to stay long. I think he was not taken by surprise. It is well with him, though I should, yes, I would like to have gotten a few lines from him to my last letter.

But I shall now have to wait a short time and we shall be together I trust. My love and respect for Bro. A. M. Wilsey still live with me, and will while I stay on earth, and I know not now why they will not continue forever, yea, forever and forever.

BRIGGS ALDEN.

WARNOCK, Ohio,
October 24th, 1882.

Bro. Joseph:—The good work moves slowly here for the want of labor. I am doing what I can in my weakness. Have been laboring in the Lamps-ville Branch. Have got it fully organized, and feel fearless. Baptized one last Sunday, and three Monday. Will go to Monroe county, next week.

H. ROBINSON.

OTTUMWA, Iowa,
October 23d, 1882.

The books and your communication came to hand all right. I neglected to hand you the enclosed scraps when I saw you. I have had a running fight with the Campbellites which I do not wish to refer to in detail now. They acted improperly in the debate. Good was done, however. I go east on to-morrow. Kind regards to all and love to the lovable. The Saturday Advent at Lucas, was too weary to debate, but just right to preach!

Forever and a day I work away, for Zions weal,
M. T. SHORT.

CAMBRIDGE, Iowa,
October 30, 1882.

Bro. Joseph Smith:—I have "been holding a series of meetings" in the above named place for over two weeks. Have delivered eighteen consecutive lectures. Have had full and crowded houses, constantly. Intelligent auditors, attentive listeners. Eleven of our discourses were delivered in the upper room of the school building, when the preceptor entered objections to any further services being held there. We asked what the objections were. The answer was! "Hem—well—ah—I'm—a—satisfied it is detrimental to my school!" We now have a large hall. The secret is out. Our services were not proving beneficial for the M. E. Church, which "holds full sway here." Many good members of it attend our meetings. There is an interest manifest—some are almost ready for baptism. We continue all this week, weather permitting. The weather has been delightful for two weeks past. I am well. Feel strengthened in the blessed gospel—what is more precious than it?

I am fully persuaded that the religion we present is the grand embodiment of all truth, all good. That no other religion possesses a good that is not already embraced in "ours." It reaches out its God-like arms, and lays hold upon, and embraces all that is good, pure and lovely; kind, gentle and merciful; righteous, holy and just. It loves virtue, and hates vice; embraces truth, and shuns falsehood; it teaches freedom and disdains bondage; it accepts right, and discards wrong! It seeks for truth and goodness, gleaming the same from every flower, every shrub; from "The forest dark and grand;" from every bird of plumage bright; from the gold fish, and the crystal fountains' spray. From the turbulent oceans, and roaring seas; from the rolling rivers, and laughing brooklets; soaring through illimitable space where e'er God's works exist. It does this because it is the truth of God, and we teach it in all the grandeur and purity of its plenitude; and we invite people everywhere, to come, and drink, not from the stunted flow of sulphured water issuing from the contracted tube of a prescribed creed, but of the water of life—everlasting life, sparkling with the brightness of God's love, filled with the beauty of immortal truth! Upon its placid bosom they may launch their barks, and be wafted by heavenly breezes, filled with the fragrance of the flowers of Paradise, into the haven of everlasting joy, peace and happiness, where they may be filled with joy unspeakable and full of glory!

I have never imbibed of the preciousness of any creed. When I accepted the gospel, I did not receive it as a "piece of new cloth" with which to patch "an old garment." Nor as "new wine to put into an old bottle." And I'm a thousand times glad of it.

I have many calls, and shall respond as rapidly as possible.

Pray for me. Yours,
J. FRANK McDOWELL

SCOTTSVILLE, Indiana,
October 27th, 1882.

Bro. Joseph Smith:—I see by minutes of the last General Conference, that I was assigned a field of labor in Southern Indiana, under Bro Wm. H. Kelley. I accept the field, though a hard one; for the opposition in this part is composed mostly of old war horses, who have the advantage of all the great blunders we have committed in this District; but we hope to profit by our past experience. I have done but little for Christ this Summer, save that in which my family holds a large share of interest, and no wonder, since my family consists of my wife and eleven children at home, and most of them too small to earn anything. My first duty is to God and my family, then what time I have I will spend in looking after others. In keeping with this sentiment I have labored hitherto, and intend to proceed in the same way in the future. If the Church says that I shall do more than I have in the past, and says it in the right way, I will make the effort, but I do not approve of the course some have pursued in the past,—going out to preach, leaving their financial matters in such a condition that damage to the work follows them at every step. Such a course, in my opinion, will always result in damage to the work. I have tried to preside over this district ever since it was organized, with the exception of Bro. Springer's short term, and by experience I have learned, that one reason why this is a hard field in which to sustain the work, is, that about the time we get a branch in good working order, some of its good staunch members sell out and go west. This seems to weaken the energies of those that remain, and there are but few branches in this District but what are in this condition. But we console ourselves with the thought that our loss is their gain. I have not written this for publication, unless you see fit.

Yours,

H. SCOTT.

Conference Minutes.

ENGLISH MISSION.

Abstract of minutes of the English Mission Annual Conference, held at Hanley Staffe, England, May 27th, 28th, 29th, 1882.

Bro. Thomas Taylor, presiding, Bro. Charles H. Caton, secretary.

Delegates were present from Birmingham, London, Hanley, Manchester, Stafford, Sheffield, Burton-on-Trent, and Summerfield (Birmingham).

Meeting opened by singing and prayer, followed by a short address by the president. Minutes of previous conference read and approved.

Reports of Districts—Birmingham, by Bro. John Seville, District President, embracing the following branches: Birmingham, Hanley, Stafford, Clay Cross, Burton-on-Trent, and "Summerfield." Excepting Clay Cross, they were reported to be in good condition. Bro. Seville spoke very encouragingly of the prospects of the work in that district.

Manchester, by Bro. Joseph Dewsnup, District President, embracing the following branches: Manchester, Farnsworth, and Sheffield. The district was said to be in very good condition, with fair prospects for its advancement.

London, by Bro. James Jerrard, District President, embracing Limehouse, Hackney, and Enfield branches, reported not to be in so good condition as could be wished, yet trying to spread the knowledge of salvation.

Sunday, May 28th. Morning preaching by Bro. J. Jerrard, George Beale, Ed. Potts, E. A. Webb and Robert Baty.

Afternoon, testimony meeting, Bro. John Seville in charge. This was a time of rejoicing.

Evening, preaching by Bro. Joseph Dewsnup, followed by C. H. Caton. Attendance at each service very fair.

Business meeting, May 29th. The President called attention to the question of publishing a periodical in the interest of the English Mission, laid on the table last conference. It was allowed to lapse.

The Mission Secretary's report read and approved by vote. The Secretary stated he hoped to complete record of district soon.

Bishop's Agent, (Thos. Taylor), presented a financial report up to March 1st, 1881, which was committed to Bro. G. S. Greenwood and H. C. Crump, to audit. They afterwards reported it correct. Report received, ordered spread on the minutes, and committee discharged.

Bro. Thomas Taylor tendered his resignation as Bishop's Agent for the mission; but at the solicitation of the conference he withdrew it.

Resolved: That we petition the authorities of the Church to lay before the next Annual Conference of the Church, (in America), the advisability of publishing a small hand-book, relating to the different Quorums of Priesthood, and their distinctive powers and duties, in relation to each other and the Church.

The following were presented by Bra. A. C. Crump and J. Jerrard on Church property, and are here given as amended.

1st, That a responsible person be appointed as trustee, for the purpose of holding in trust all property, called Church property, belonging to branches of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in each district now formed. That the words "Church Property," be understood to mean those things purchased by the branches from their common funds; and all things received by gifts, or donation to the branches.

2d, That all such property in future do belong to, and may be claimed from, each branch, by the district body corporate, for the benefit of the district in general in which such branch of the Church may have become incorporate. And for this purpose District Presidents shall be appointed sub-agents to the Bishop's Agent, to act as overseers to trustees of branches.

3d, But that no district shall be empowered to lay claim to, so as to seize on, the Church property, in the use of any branch of the Church, except in case a branch may be dissolved, or otherwise cease to exist.

4th, That should a district in conference decide on the necessity of disorganizing any existing branch, no such district shall be able to lay claim to any property in use in that branch, unless the branch has had one month clear notice to attend conference, either en masse, or by delegation, in order to approve or disapprove of the action taken by such district; and further, if the branch gives notice of appeal to annual conference, against the decision of the district, they, (the branch), shall be left in full possession of their property, pending the verdict of annual conference.

5th, That no branch shall,—while waiting appeal to annual conference,—(in any manner whatever), dispose of one particle of property under their charge. Neither shall they in any way damage the same, in a wilful manner, and should they do so, they shall be dealt with as annual conference may decide.

6th, That each branch is in duty bound to, as soon after these clauses become law, as is practicable, make out an itemized list of all properties owned by them, and cause the same to be forwarded to the Secretary of the Mission, who shall as soon after as is convenient, forward the same to those who may be appointed sub-agents for a district. And further, it shall be the duty of said sub-agents, to render every six months a correct account of all such properties intrusted to his care, to the Bishop's Agent, who will, in virtue of his office, hold such sub-agents responsible for the safe custody thereof.

7th, That all present, and future districts, and branches be governed by these rules.

8th, That the above mentioned be understood as relating to the English Mission only.

On motion, resolved: That the foregoing rules be spread on the minutes of conference, and that they do now become law.

On motion, Resolved: That any of the foregoing rules may be altered, amended, or struck out, by action of any future Mission Conference; providing, that due notice of such alteration shall be made known to the branches, (in writing), at least one month before the assembling of conference at which it is proposed to make the proposition.

Resolved: That this conference do now appoint a committee, consisting of the President of the English Mission, the district presidents, and, if convenient to them, the Welch Presidency, to draw up a memorial, to the proper authority, setting forth the difference between the Brighamites and the Reorganization, that the recognition of the Reorganization as the true Latter Day Saints Church by the American authorities, be not forgotten. Moved by H. C. Crump and C. H. Hassall.

On motion the following was adopted: Be it Resolved, by the house, that in future all new business, such as appeals, motions, or notices of motions, changes of any nature, or any other matter intended for the consideration of General Conference of English Mission, shall be forwarded to the Mission Secretary, or President, Secretary preferable as being in order, all such matter at least two months before any such General Conference shall convene, in order to afford the Mission Secretary time to prepare an agenda, to have the same printed, and to send the same to the various district secretaries, who shall forward the same to the clerks of branches.

Resolved: That in future the President of the Mission charge all branches the lowest price possible for all literature supplied them by him (The above refers to tracts, &c., printed in England only. C. H. C.).

Resolved: That the general authorities in America be requested to consider the advisability of issuing all tracts, pamphlets, etc., uniform in size, so that they may be bound together in volumes.

Resolved: That in future, all reports of districts to these annual conferences, be submitted in writing.

Regarding the legacy of Bro. John Haywood, (deceased), to the Church. After remarks concerning the part of "will" relating to printing press and its effects, it was Resolved: That this conference empower Bro. Thomas Taylor, as President of the English Mission, to dispose of the same, or use it, as may seem good unto him.

Resolved: That when this conference adjourns it does so to meet again in Stafford, on Whit, Saturday, 1883.

The authorities of the Church in America were sustained by the unanimous vote of conference.

Brn. Thomas Taylor and C. H. Caton were sustained president and secretary, respectively, by unanimous vote of conference.

Report of Committee on Chicago Branch. To the Northern Illinois District of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in conference assembled, greeting: We your committee appointed to draft preamble and resolutions, regarding the action of General Conference in deciding that the Chicago Branch was not connected with the Northern Illinois District beg leave to suggest, that the following preamble and resolution be presented to the Church at their next April Conference:

Whereas, we learn from the report of our delegate to General Conference and also by minutes of General Conference as published in Saints' Herald, that General Conference has declared that the Chicago Branch is not connected with the Northern Illinois District, notwithstanding the fact that the said Chicago Branch was formerly turned over to the Northern Illinois District; at a conference in Streator, in the fall of 1880, by M. H. Forscutt, the missionary then in charge at Chicago, and has reported at every district conference since that time.

And, Whereas, by the action of General Conference in this matter the Chicago Branch has been severed from the Northern Illinois District, without the district having any voice in the matter; Therefore,

Resolved: That we the Northern Illinois District in conference assembled herewith enter our protest against this action of General Conference, and respectfully ask the Church at their next Spring Annual Conference, to reconsider their action in this matter, and correct the mistake which we believe they have made.

And be it further resolved, that we endorse the action of the president of the district. The president of the Chicago Branch, (Bro. Brighthouse), and those who have stood by him in these their endeavors to resist what we believe to be the unlawful exercise of authority, and we assure them of our sympathy and support, and admire the noble spirit that they have manifested from the beginning of this most unpleasant affair. To the president, officers, and members, of the Church of Christ, for the Northern District of California, in conference assembled.

Having in an evil hour resigned my membership of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and asked to be cut off without notice for not believing that Sunday was the Sabbath of the Lord; and whereas over eighteen months have elapsed without any action having been taken in the matter, through the abundant charity of the brethren of my quorum of High Priests, I hereby desire to withdraw my resignation of membership of said Church, and branch of said Church at Oakland, and be restored to the fellowship of the same, as I stood before said resignation; reserving to myself the right of individual, private opinion; subject, however, to the highest tribunal in the Church of God, which is the end of all controversy. And I further take opportunity to ask the pardon and forgiveness of all my brethren and sisters whom I have in any manner offended; and can freely say, that I feel to forgive all who have offended me.

I can only point to my past history as pledge of my fidelity to the present truth; and wishing the Church of Christ "God speed" I remain fraternally.

Your brother in Christ,

H. P. BROWN.

OAKLAND, CAL., OCT. 6th, 1882.

The following resolution was presented and carried unanimously.

Resolved: That we accept Bro. H. P. Brown into full fellowship in the Church, and restore him to all the rights and privileges he enjoyed previous to his resignation.

Elders Reports.—Elder J. Carmichael reported as follows: Have visited various places and branches, and found some branches in a condition of inactivity and partial disorganization, owing, I believe, to a lack of proper material to keep them working; found many Elders completely idle, and suggested that the conference take some active measure in the endeavor to maintain proper Church discipline with such. Thanked the Church for its support to him, and tendered his resignation as President of the District.

Elder D. J. Phillips reported: In presiding over the Oakland Branch had done the best he could, and was happy to say that his branch was in pretty fair working order.

Elder G. S. Lincoln reported. Had labored in San Francisco exclusively, since our last conference, had preached and distributed in the city 12,000 tracts.

Elder Joel Edmonds reported, that he is greatly blessed in his old age, (84), in spreading the truth amongst his neighbors.

Priest Hawkins, a member of Santa Rosa Branch reported its condition as poor, and partially disorganized.

Teacher's Report.—Teacher, Charles Monckom, reported his labors in visiting the sick in San Francisco.

Resolved: That the President of the district shall have the power, and it shall be made his duty, to demand and receive the licences of all Elders, who have power, but who will not magnify their offices and callings in the ministry, or of those who appointed to a mission, refuse or neglect to fill said mission.

Resolved: That this conference proceed to appoint a committee of three Elders, to select in its judgment a suitable person for District President, and report to the conference at the close of sacrament on Sunday.

Resolved: That Brn. T. J. Andrews, E. H. Webb, and Wm. Hart be said committee.

To brethren and President at Oakland, now assembled in Conference. Being quite unable to travel, and feeling the responsibility resting upon me as Bishop's Agent, I deem it wisdom to offer my resignation as such, hoping you will accept it without controversy and recommend some one at this conference, to the Bishop, for appointment.

I remain respectfully yours,

JOHN ROBERTS.

Resolved: That we accept the Bishop's Agent's resignation, and select and recommend to the Bishop some other person for that office.

Resolved: That we recommend to the Bishop of the Church, the appointment of Bro. T. J. Andrews, as his Agent for the Northern District of California.

Resolved: That Bro. William Hart be appointed District Treasurer.

Resolved: That this conference tender a vote of thanks to Bro. John Roberts, for his services as District Treasurer, and Bishop's Agent.

Report of Committee on Presidency. After a careful consideration of the matter submitted to our care, we have arrived at the following conclusion: That in view of the scarcity of available material, it seems to us there remains but one suggestion for us to offer you, i. e. the re-appointing of Elder John Carmichael for the next term, expiring at our next conference; we do so because we can not see how you can do any better. So far as we are enabled to determine the present sentiment, it is that he should be re-appointed, not only from his availability to serve, but from a duty of respect, that we owe him; that we fully appreciate his services in the past, and that he should stand for us in that capacity again.

Resolved: That the committee's report on presidency be received, and committee discharged.

Resolved: That Bro. John Carmichael be accepted as the President of the Northern District of California, for the term expiring at the next conference.

Resolved: That our next conference be held in San Francisco, commencing on the morning of the first Friday in March, instead of April 6th, in order that it may provide for a proper representation at the next General Conference of the Church.

Resolved: That this conference tender a vote of thanks to Elder Carmichael for his past services.

Inasmuch as the Northern California District of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, considering the great importance of the Temperance question as one of the Christian graces; And as there is now a great temperance movement afoot, and we feel it a duty to show our position on the question; therefore, be it

Resolved: That we are in full harmony with the movement, endorsing it as a great measure of reform as we do every other legitimate movement of reform, having in view the salvation of the human race. The great question of Prohibition has our hearty support, and pray it may be successful in eradicating the great bane of the human race.

Resolved: That this conference uphold all the Church authorities in righteousness.

During the conference two persons were baptized, and two children blessed. The attendance was quite good. The feeling was pleasant and harmonious. Fortunately the last word from above to the Church reached us in time for conference, through the thoughtfulness of Bro. Glauud Rodger and Bro. George Adams, and proved a source of much encouragement to all present.

The preaching exercises were conducted by Elders A. Haws, H. P. Brown, G. S. Lincoln and T. J. Andrews.

A Good Enterprise.

IN THIS day of prosperity and speculation, it becomes necessary for the Saints of God to do all they can, honestly, to keep up with the progress of the age, and avail themselves of all the benefits of this day of "God's preparation," in which science and arts are teeming forth in all the grandeur that the intellect of man can produce.

It is said, That the children of this world are wiser in their generation than the children of light. While this sentiment is true, it is also true that the children of light may avail themselves of the benefits of the age in which they live. It is said of Mormons, that they are a people that discourage education and advancement.

I should be glad to see the time when the world will be constrained to say that the Latter Day Saints are first and foremost in science and knowledge.

The Latter Day Revelations tell us that we should seek knowledge out of the best books, and become acquainted with kingdoms, countries, things in the earth and under the earth, and things in the heavens, &c.

We also learn from the Book of Abraham, that he was a great astronomer, and that he wrote very largely upon that subject, at least as far as he could with the means that they then had. We find that the people of God at different periods of the world's history have been highly endowed with scientific wisdom, so much so that the monuments of some of their works have remained as an evidence of that superiority. We might refer to the erection of the Tabernacle in the wilderness with all its surroundings.

The molten calf produced by Aaron, also the building of Solomon's temple, one of the most magnificent structures that the world has ever produced. We learn that connected with this work they had their choir of singers, as well as their musicians, bespeaking a high degree of refinement and enterprise. It seems that no time, nor means, were spared to beautify and qualify for the work that was there authorized of Jehovah. We read of the city, New Jerusalem, whose streets are paved with gold, with its twelve foundations builded upon the most precious stones that nature can produce, with its four gates, and magnificent wall, and towering temples, &c.

I do not suppose that this wondrous city, with all its surroundings, will grow; but it will require mechanism, the knowledge of architecture, fine paintings, chemistry, brazen work; in fact it will combine all the sciences of the ages, and will require workmen in all the arts.

I stop again and think and consider, that the children of this age have all the advantages of book education that can be obtained, and schools are so free, and so little expense that all can have a knowledge of the sciences.

Then I ask again, how many of our people are skilled in those things? How many Professors can we produce? What is the matter with us?

There is scarcely a religious institution in the world but what sustains an educational college. It is very true that their institutions, both scientific and religious, are of human origin; but it bespeaks energy, thrift, and a will to do.

Why can not the Latter Day Saints rise up and redeem themselves from the censure of not being an educational class, and as a church establish a Normal College? Those of our brethren who have means to invest, do so; it would be self sustaining, and bring in a nice income.

Let it be comparatively small at first, and grow as it can. We need something of that kind in which our children could be educated under the influences of our own people.

There could not be a better enterprise for Lamoni than a college; it would bring hundreds of Saints to that county.

We need more enterprise as a people. Throw our means together and take stock upon business principles, and seek to establish ourselves in accordance with the age in which we live.

I do not mean that we should follow the sins of the world, but use the things of this world for their uses and benefits.

The old idea of our going out of the world, or withdrawing from among the people, to get clear of the sins of the world, is a matter of the past. But throw our interests together, in one direction, pull one long, strong pull, all together, then we can do something.

It is all summed up in three little words, "Be ye one." From my reading the divine writings, there must be a system of oneness among the people of God, on temporal things as well as spiritual; for they are inseparably connected, and until the time when there is a spirit of oneness in every respect, we will not be what God designs us to be, and we will fail to arrive at the perfection as presented by the apostles.

Those who read this article must not misapprehend me, and think that I am a believer in common stock, or of a promiscuous throwing together of temporal means. Such a course would bring anarchy and confusion; but I do see the need of Saints aiding each other, and getting confidence in temporal as well as spiritual things.

The foregoing is an introductory to some thoughts which we will present upon the temporal or finance question, if we can collect our thoughts for that purpose. J. R. B.

"Gospel Antiquity."

UNDER the above caption, an article in three parts has been published in the Herald, and has caused some talk thereon; and some have been to the pains of canvassing the church text books upon the subject.

As the author of the article is in the enjoyment of a reputation of being a profound student of the peculiar theology and idiosyncrasy of the Church, likewise the several scientific problematical investigations, but more especially in antique researches, I therefore read with care and interest, and was some little disappointed; not being satisfied, and giving him the benefit of the doubt that perhaps I did not properly understand the subject, I reread the lengthy production. From this second reading I arose with increased doubts in my mind as to the correctness of the brother's summary and conclusion. I therefore scrutinized it the third time, and concluded that the brother was a latitudinarian, as compared with the accepted books, literature, and the avowed faith of the Elders of the Church.

Not for the purpose of "mixing things," but in the hope of gaining an influx of knowledge, and to increase the investigation, I am prompted to pen this. The brother confesses to being sick, but is very particular as to shall be permitted to administer the panacea.

"And again, the elders, priests and teachers of this church shall teach the principles of my gospel which are in the Bible and the Book of Mormon, in the which is the fulness of the gospel; and they shall observe the covenants and church articles to do them, and these shall be their teachings, as they shall be directed by the Spirit; and the Spirit shall be given unto you by the prayer of faith, and if ye receive not the Spirit ye shall not teach." Doctrine and Covenants, sec. 42: 5.

I herewith pledge my fidelity to the foregoing, and supplement it with the following:

"And again I say unto you, ye must repent and become as a little child, and be baptized in my name, or ye can in no wise receive these things. And again I say unto you, ye must repent, and be baptized in my name, and become as a little child, or ye can in no wise inherit the kingdom of God. Verily, verily, I say unto you, that this is my doctrine, and whoso buildeth upon this, buildeth upon my rock; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against them. And whoso shall declare more or less than this, and establish it for my doctrine, the same cometh of evil, and is not built upon my rock, but he buildeth upon a sandy foundation, and the gates of hell standeth open to receive such, when the floods come, and the winds beat upon them."—Nephi 5:9.

I will not attempt to answer point by point, but in the aggregate, and give the proposition as I understand it; viz: that the gospel was neither preached nor practiced before the day of Pentecost. I glean this from the statement of Bro. "Sola," that when Christ bowed his head upon the cross and said, "It is finished," that was the end of the old covenant; and as there was no patchwork, and fifty days space, with no covenant in force, from these I am impressed with the conviction that we are asked to believe that Peter and his compeers did the first preaching that was authoritative.

For more than half a century the Elders of the Church have proclaimed as one of the cardinal, constituent parts of our faith, the unchangeability of God and therefore the unchangeableness of the gospel, and this was a bulwark from which we could not be dislodged; and until the following are all explained away, I shall still think we "hold the fort." "I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end, the first and the last."—Rev. 22:13; "I am the beginning and the end."—Gen. 1:2. In this union of expression and thought, we feel justified in preaching, that since the earth has been the abode of man, Christ has been the light and savior of the world, through the principles of the gospel, which are: 1st. faith; 2d, repentance; 3d, baptism; 4th, laying on of hands; 5th, resurrection; 6th, eternal judgment.

In this order must the gospel be accepted and obeyed. How comforting it is to read, "Who hath saved us and called us with a holy calling, not according to his own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began; but is now made manifest by the appearing of our Savior Jesus Christ, who hath abolished death, and hath brought life and immortality to light through the gospel."—2 Tim. 1:9, 10. "And that from a child thou hast known the holy scriptures, which are able to make thee wise unto salvation, through faith which is in Christ Jesus."—2 Tim. 3:15.

Timothy was an ordained minister at the time Paul wrote to him, A. D. 64; and as he was thirty years or more, at time of ordination, and as Matthew was written A. D. 38, thus we perceive that "the unfeigned faith that is in thee, which dwelt first in thy grandmother Lois, and thy mother Eunice; and I am persuaded that in thee also," (2 Tim. 1:5), was the result of their familiarity with the writings of the Old Testament. "Without faith it is impossible to please him;" (God). Heb. 11:6. "For whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord, shall be saved." How then shall they call on him in whom they have not believed? and how shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? and how shall they hear without a preacher? and how shall they preach except they be sent? As it is written, How beautiful are the feet of them that preach the gospel of peace, and bring glad tidings of good things! So then faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God."—Rom. 10:13-16.

The requirements and conditions essential to place any one in a saved condition, are in the above clearly outlined, and before the bondage of the grave is vanquished, and the spirit and body are united in the triumph of the resurrection, the principles of the gospel must be first presented, understood and accepted.

I think none will attempt to deny this plain statement, therefore I ask your consideration to this: "And the graves were opened, and the bodies of the saints which slept, arose, who were many, and came out of their graves; and after his resurrection went into the holy city, and appeared unto many."—Matt. 27:56, 57. As this opening of the graves of the Saints, occurred three days after Christ said "it is finished," and during the interim in which "Sola" states no covenant existed, and forty-seven days before the enactment of the gospel covenant, we are left to choose from the following: the gospel was preached advantageously prior to Christ's time, or the people prior to Christ's time obtained the right to, and benefit of the resurrection, upon some other plan, than that of the gospel. "Neither is there salvation in any other; for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved."—Acts 4:12.

"In the beginning was the gospel preached through the Son. And the gospel was the word, and the word was with the Son, and the Son was with God, and the Son was of God. The same was in the beginning with God."—John 1:1, 2. "Jesus Christ the same yesterday, and to-day, and for ever."—Heb. 13:8. Here are three periods of time, presented to us, "To-day," the period in which the apostles were the workers, that the arms of the other two periods be equal, and the equilibrium thereof regarded and sustained, inspiration is the witness, "When shall the blood of the righteous (Christ) be shed, that all they that mourn may be sanctified, and have eternal life? And the Lord said, it shall be in the meridian of time, in the days of wickedness and vengeance."—Doctrine and Covenants, sec. 36:9. "Hearken and listen to the voice of him who is from all eternity to all eternity, the great I Am, even Jesus Christ, the light and the life of the world; a light which shineth in darkness, and the darkness comprehendeth it not; the same which came in the meridian of time unto my own.—Doc. and Cov., sec. 39:1. "His soul shall be at ease; and his seed shall inherit the earth. The secret of the Lord is with them that fear him; and he will shew them his covenant."—Ps. 25:13, 14. This is explained in the following: "The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul; the testimony of the Lord is sure, making wise the simple; the statutes of the Lord are right, rejoicing the heart; the commandment of the Lord is pure, enlightening the eyes; the fear of the Lord is clean, enduring for ever; the judgments of the Lord are true and righteous altogether."—Ps. 19:7-9. It would seem a superfluity to here bring together evidence to establish, that this "perfect law" was the gospel. It accomplishes for man, all that the gospel promises to accomplish, and as we have already discovered, gave the ancients the right to obtain the resurrection.

Faith and its consequences are as clearly taught in Numbers 20:12, and Isaiah 7:9, as anywhere in the gospel economy. Repentance is as certainly taught in Ezek. 16th and 33d chapters, and Joel 2:12, 13, as ever spoken by the mouth of apostle; and the antiquity of the gospel is assuredly confirmed in the following extract, as truth can be presented to mortal man:

"For behold I say unto you, there be many things to come; and behold, there is one thing which is of more importance than they all! for behold, the time is not far distant that the Redeemer liveth and cometh among his people. Behold, I do not say that he will come among us at the time of his dwelling in his mortal tabernacle; for behold, the Spirit hath not said unto me that this would be the case. Now as to this thing I do not know, but this I do know, that the Lord God hath power to do all things which are according to his word. But behold, the Spirit hath said this much unto me, saying, "Cry unto this people, saying, repent ye, and prepare the way of the Lord, and walk in his paths, which are straight; for behold, the kingdom of heaven is at hand, and the Son of God cometh upon the face of the earth. And behold, he shall be born of Mary at Jerusalem, which is in the land of our forefathers, she being a virgin, a precious and chosen vessel, who shall be overshadowed, and conceive by the power of the Holy Ghost, and bring forth a son, yea, even the Son of God: and he shall go forth, suffering pains, and afflictions, and temptations of every kind; and this that the word might be fulfilled which saith, he will take upon him the pains and sicknesses of his people; and he will take upon him death, that he may loose the bands of death which bind his people; and he will take upon him their infirmities, that his bowels may be filled with mercy, according to the flesh, that he may know according to the flesh to succor his people according to their infirmities. Now the Spirit knoweth all things; nevertheless the Son of God suffereth according to the flesh, that he might take upon him the sins of his people, that he might blot out their transgressions according to the power of his deliverance; and now behold, this is the testimony which is in me. Now I say unto you, that ye must repent, and be born again; for the Spirit saith, if ye are not born again, ye can not inherit the kingdom of heaven: therefore come and be baptized unto repentance, that ye may be washed from your sins, that ye may have faith on the Lamb of God, who taketh away the sins of the world, who is mighty to save and to cleanse from all unrighteousness; yea, I say unto you, come and fear not, and lay aside every sin, which easily doth beset you, which doth bind you down to destruction; yea, come and go forth, and enter into a covenant with him to keep his commandments, and witness it unto him this day, by going into the waters of baptism; and whosoever doeth this, and keepeth the commandments of God from henceforth, the same will remember that I say unto him, yea, he will remember that I have said unto him, he shall have eternal life, according to the testimony of the Holy Spirit, which testifieth in me."—Alma 5:2, 3.

Here the whole platform of human redemption is as positively set before us as language can convey to the human mind, and accepted and obeyed some eighty years before the birth of Christ. Once more let a jewel from the casket of divine truth cast rays of light upon this question:

"Wherefore I beseech of you, brethren, that ye should search diligently in the light of Christ, that ye may know good from evil; and if ye will lay hold upon every good thing, and condemn it not, ye certainly will be a child of Christ. And now, my brethren, how is it possible that ye can lay hold upon every good thing? And now I come to that faith, of which I said I would speak; and I will tell you the way whereby ye may lay hold on every good thing. For behold, God knoweth all things, being from everlasting to everlasting; behold he sent his angels to minister unto the children of men, to make manifest concerning the coming of Christ; and in Christ there should come every good thing. And God also declared unto prophets by his own mouth, that Christ should come. And behold, there were divers ways that he did manifest things unto the children of men, which were good; and all things which are good cometh of Christ, otherwise men were fallen, and there could no good thing come unto them. Wherefore, by the ministering of angels, and by every word which proceeded forth out of the mouth of God, men began to exercise faith in Christ, and thus by faith they did lay hold upon every good thing; and thus it was until the coming of Christ. And after that he came, men also were saved by faith in his name, and by faith they become the sons of God."—Moroni 7:3.

The last prophet of the Nephi Saints, understood that the gospel was the same, in every age of the world's experience, and that there was but one plan of salvation, that the same cause will produce the same effect in every age, under like circumstances.

"But, behold, I say unto you, that I the Lord God, gave unto Adam and unto his seed, that they should not die as to the temporal death, until I, the Lord God, should send forth angels to declare unto them repentance and redemption through faith on the name of mine only begotten Son."—Doc. and Cov. 28:12.

The prophet, who sealed his testimony by death at the Carthage tragedy in 1844, stands a unit with the Nephi prophet who testified some fourteen hundred years before.

"Wherefore the Almighty God gave his only begotten Son, as it is written in those scriptures which have been given of him; he suffered temptations but gave no heed unto them; he was crucified, died, and rose again the third day; and ascended into heaven to sit down on the right hand of the Father, to reign with almighty power according to the will of the Father, that as many as would believe and be baptized in his holy name, and endure in faith to the end should be saved; not only those who believed after he came in the meridian of time in the flesh, but all those from the beginning, even as many as were before he came, who believed in the words of the holy prophets, who spake as they were inspired by the gift of the Holy Ghost, who truly testified of him in all things, should have eternal life, as well as those who should come after, who should believe in the gifts and callings of God by the Holy Ghost, which beareth record of the Father, and of the Son, which Father, Son, and Holy Ghost are one God, infinite and eternal, without end."—Doc. and Cov. 17:5.

"And it came to pass that Enoch continued his speech, saying, behold, our father Adam taught these things, and many have believed and become the sons of God, and many have believed not, and perished in their sins, and are looking forth with fear, in torment, for the fiery indignation of the wrath of God to be poured out upon them. And he gave unto me a commandment, that I should baptize in the name of the Father, and the Son, which is full of grace and truth, and the Holy Ghost, which bears record of the Father and the Son."—Pearl of Great Price, page 3.

"And the Lord ordained Noah after his order, and commanded him that he should go forth and declare his gospel unto the children of men, even as it was given unto Enoch. And it came to pass that Noah called upon men that they should repent. And it came to pass that Noah continued preaching unto the people, saying, hearken, and give heed unto my words, believe and repent of your sins, and be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ the Son of God, even as our fathers did, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost, that ye may have all things made manifest, and if ye do not this, the floods will come in upon you."—Ib., page 17.

I now quote in conclusion, from the clearest and grandest revelation of the Father's will unto the children, upon the immutable, unchangeable scheme of reconciliation.

"And the Lord spake unto Adam, saying, Inasmuch as thy children are conceived in sin, even so, when they begin to grow up, sin conceiveth in their hearts, and they taste the bitter, that they may know how to prize the good. And it is given unto them to know good from evil; wherefore they are agents unto themselves. And I have given unto you another law and commandment, wherefore, teach it unto your children, that all men, everywhere, must repent, or they can in no wise inherit the kingdom of God. For no unclean thing can dwell there, or dwell in his presence; for in the language of Adam, Man of Holiness is his name; and the name of his Only Begotten is the Son of Man, even Jesus Christ, a righteous judge, who shall come in the meridian of time. Therefore I give unto you a commandment, to teach these things freely unto your children, saying, that by reason of transgression cometh the fall, which fall bringeth death; and inasmuch as ye were born into the world by water and blood, and the spirit, which I have made, and so became of dust a living soul; even so ye must be born again, into the kingdom of heaven, of water, and of the Spirit, and be cleansed by blood, even the blood of mine Only Begotten; that ye might be sanctified from all sin; and enjoy the words of eternal life in this world, and eternal life in the world to come, even immortal glory; for, by the water ye keep the commandment, by the Spirit ye are justified, and by the blood ye are sanctified. Therefore it is given to abide in you, the record of heaven, the Comforter, the peaceable things of immortal glory, the truth of all things, that which quickeneth all things, which maketh alive all things, that which knoweth all things, and hath all power, according to wisdom, mercy, truth, justice and judgment. And now, behold I say unto you, this is the plan of salvation unto all men, through the blood of mine Only Begotten, who shall come in the meridian of time. And, behold, all things have their likeness; and all things are created and made to bear record of me, both things which are temporal and things which are spiritual, things which are in the heavens above, and things which are on the earth, and things which are under the earth, both above and beneath; all things bear record of me. And it came to pass, when the Lord had spoken with Adam our father, that Adam cried unto the Lord, and he was caught away by the Spirit of the Lord, and was carried down into the water, and was laid under the water, and was brought forth out of the water; and thus he was baptized. And the Spirit of God descended upon him, and thus he was born of the Spirit, and became quickened in the inner man. And he heard a voice out of heaven, saying, Thou art baptized with fire and with the Holy Ghost; this is the record of the Father and the Son, from henceforth and forever. And thou art after the order of him who was without beginning of days or end of years, from eternity to all eternity. Behold, thou art one in me, a son of God; and thus may all become my sons."—Gen. 6:57-71.

Had I presented each of my proofs with the full scope of the analytic deduction they were susceptible to, this essay would have been four times longer. Nor are the evidences upon the question exhausted. May no one become a valetudinarian, as to the faith in the antiquity of the gospel, is the prayer of Declivity of Rivers.

A VERY slight declivity suffices to give the running motion to water. Three inches per mile in a smooth, straight channel gives a velocity of about three miles an hour. The Ganges, which gathers the waters of the Himalaya Mountains, the loftiest in the world, is, at 180 miles from its mouth, only 300 feet above the level of the sea, and to fall the 800 feet in its long course the water requires more than a month. The great River Magdalena, in South America, running for 1,000 miles between two ridges of the Andes, falls only 500 feet in all that distance; above the commencement of the 1,000 miles it is seen descending in rapids and cataracts from the mountains. The gigantic Rio de la Plata has so gentle a descent to the ocean that, in Paraguay, 1,500 miles from its mouth, large ships are seen which have sailed against the current all the way by the force of the wind alone,—that is to say, which, on the beautiful inclined plane of the stream, have been gradually lifted by the soft wind, and even against the current, to an elevation greater than that of our loftiest spires.

Card Playing.

THE playful shuffle of a few pieces of pictured and spotted papers in a parlor does not look significant of evil at first. It seems as innocent as swinging the mallet on a croquet sward.

Those who first devised that seductive and sin nourishing game may not have intended to do harm. But they have. For who shall estimate immortalities and miseries which have flowed from the play? It has been a course of doing harm, with no known excuses or results to palliate its pernicious consequences. It has made so many noble lives base; upright people dishonest; rich people poor, and poor people painfully more impoverished. That game has a dark indictment against it in the court of heaven.

Other games have indeed been used as instrumental causes of injury. The once innocent use of boat and oars, the ball and bat, the field and foot-race, have been seized by sin as instruments for gambling. But all and each of these has something noticeable to stand upon as a defense and plea for their preservation and practice, in spite of these abuses.

The race course develops muscle in the athlete, and also leads to the useful practice of walking for exercise. The bat and ball, with betting left out, lead to physical development, which all must approve. The oar and boat broaden the chest and make the liberated lungs beat with life.

But who can say what good gaming cards have ever done for physical development, for intellectual enlightenment, for æsthetic culture? What excellent part of the nature are they known to improve? What wit do they sharpen which would not be better left blunted? What skill do they train which would not be better left stupid.

If they are admitted to some respectable homes and a little decent society, are they not always admitted to the places of sin and shame? Granted that some reputable people play, do not all those who are disreputable? You may find families on fashionable streets, who profess godliness, giving time, much time, to card playing. But I am sure you will not find one solitary drinking saloon, nor one house of unmentionable sin, nor one pirates' fore-castle, nor one den of desperadoes, where the pack does not hold the prominent place of honor. It has on it the odor of all outlawed habitations. The game is a friend of all whom virtue has reason to fear. Why then should those who are virtuous be friendly to such a wily foe?

Do I preach against cards?

I simply let cards preach against themselves. Let me summon the soiled and soiling pack into this presence, and inquire of it: What good have you ever done mankind, as offset to the immeasurable evils which have come by your use? What have you done to spread knowledge, chasten taste, develop industry; to promote uprightness; to encourage religion; to elevate the circles and communities where you have commanded time and attention, money and men? There is no need to denounce card-playing. Looked at in the light of reason and religion, it is self-condemned.

DR. WITHROW.

Tithing.

EXTRACT of a sermon delivered by Bro. Wm. Lewis, at Saints' Church, near Stewartville, Missouri, September 10th, 1882, he having been recently appointed as Bishop's Agent.

Prepared by J. M. Terry.

We have in this church, order. A Bishop with his agents, duly appointed, to attend to the finances of the church. There has been a law of tithing in all ages, and some have even gone beyond it and sold all their possessions, and given to the Lord. I shall not consider it my province to tell Bro. A. B. or C., personally, that I think they should pay tithing; but will teach the law in a general sense, and leave each one to apply it to himself, according to his own conscience.

In a revelation given in 1833, we read as follows:

These men were not satisfied in their minds as to what the Lord considered it their duty to give. Some assume to say the first paragraph here is not binding now, only the second, but until such time as the Lord shall change it, I shall continue to teach both as of equal force.

There is a danger of extremes. The Utah organization went to one extreme by requiring one tenth of all that was earned. If ten dollars per week were earned, and it took twelve to provide for the family, the one tenth of the amount earned was required as tithing all the same. Those coming into the Church, and being thus taught by the priesthood, exerted every power to comply; and it is said they would, after working hard all day, put in extra hours, that they might have the more to give the Church as free will offering. The greater the effort put forth, the more avarice was manifested by the priesthood.

The Lord has said that this law of tithing shall be a standing law unto the Church; yet we hear some saying they will not pay another cent, as some are receiving so much, and doing so little. This is not the proper course. If the moneys of the Church are not equitably distributed, there is a proper way to treat the case. Your withholding may be the cause of the Bishop's withholding (because of lack of means) from some truly worthy brother, and thus the cause be crippled.

Now let us hear the answer to the inquiry as to how much the Lord requires.

Says the Lord, "I require all the surplus property."

The inquiry arises: What is surplus property? If I have a home paid for, and am engaged in a business requiring two hundred dollars cash capital, my brother has a home and in a business requiring ten hundred dollars capital. If I wish to commence paying tithing, and find I have two hundred and fifteen dollars,—the extra fifteen dollars is surplus, and is what the law requires, as surplus, or the beginning of tithing. My brother finds he has an extra twenty dollars, this would be surplus, and required to be paid as tithing. One year passes, and I find by invoice that I have gained, over and above my necessary expenses, fifty dollars. My brother has gained two hundred and fifty dollars extra. The law requires not all this gain again, as tithing, but only the tithe or tenth thereof,—making my amount five dollars, and my brother's twenty-five dollars, leaving the balance as mine, to be used for myself. I might contract for a piece of land, and get into debt, and make it as an excuse not to pay tithing; but we should not make any such dodge. If we dodge at all, it should be in favor of the law, and not to avoid its claims on us. If we are legitimately allowed to continue to contract debts, we might continue, and never think ourselves in a condition to pay tithing. Some have complained that they paid tithing, which was used for the good of other districts, and not their own.

I pay ten dollars as surplus, as the commencement of tithing; and because of not being satisfied because other localities get more benefit than mine, I conclude to give my next as free will offering, that it may be used in my own district. Now, this is not according to the law; for that given as free will offering can not answer as tithing. There is no evading the law. If we pretend to pay tithing, we can not do otherwise than pay it as tithing, and the law requires it to be sent to the Bishop, or used by Agent as he may direct. The Lord complained at one time, that there was a spirit of murmuring among his people, and they did not impart of their substance for his work; and there was enough, even then, for the redemption of Zion; if they would but impart it.

There is great wisdom and equity in the law; for the amount required is in proportion to the amount gained, which should be in proportion to amount of capital invested. If we can not pay tithing, we can pay free will offering, according to our desires. The purpose of the law is to support the ministry; so let us live to the law of God, and he will bless us. Amen.

Hot and Cold Drinks.

A CORRESPONDENT of Knowledge calls attention to some of the disadvantages of hot drinks. Cold drinks, he says, are natural to man, though most people nowadays are so used to hot drinks that they do not feel satisfaction—really stimulation—unless they have them. Hot drinks are injurious to the tongue, for they deaden its sensation, and, after taking hot soup or drink, the tongue becomes quite numb, and unable to taste the finer flavors of a dish. The teeth are greatly injured by them, and many dentists say caries (decay) is due to them alone. They crack the enamel, and thus allow caries to set in. When caries has once set in, hot drinks are a common cause of neuralgia.

Hot drinks are especially hurtful to the stomach. They cause irritation of the stomach, and consequent mild inflammation of that organ, so that after a hot drink the stomach is red and congested; in time a debilitated condition is set up. A temperature of 100° Fahrenheit also destroys the active ferment of the gastric juice—pepsin—and so leads to indigestion. If the stomach is at all disordered, hot drinks give rise to much griping pain, and in many cases to vomiting. In cases of diarrhea, too, hot drinks only increase it, while cold ones tend to lessen it.

Thirst is not common in Winter, unless sugary, salty, or hot spiced foods have been taken. In cold weather, the air contains more moisture than in hot, and in cold weather there is less perspiration. Hot drinks increase the volume of heat in the body, and if that is not required, it is quickly got rid of by the skin. Water is the best thirst quencher, but if simple food is taken, the need of drinks will be small. Many vegetarians drink nothing from month to month, the only fluid they get being the juices of the fruits which they eat. But pleasant drinks, like tea, coffee, etc. may be taken lukewarm for a long time with little apparent damage. The least injurious is cocoa, made with plenty of milk, and allowed to stand until nearly cool. A good test is to apply the little finger to the drink, and if it be not hot to it, then it may safely be taken.

Postal Curiosities—Unmailable Matter—Carelessness of Letter-Writers.

In spite of official warnings and notices almost without number, people still continue to send to the post-office articles which can not be handled or delivered. In the New York office within the past month the searcher department has found in the mail-bags and held as unmailable matter the following:

Received alive.—Rattlesnakes, black snakes, copperhead snakes, moccasin snakes, cats, grasshoppers, bees, hornets, wasps, alligators, canary bird, potato-bugs, horned frogs, tortoise, turtles.

Received dead.—Mice, butterflies, humming-birds, rats, insects, squirrels, quail, bugs, pheasant.

Cooked articles.—Plum pudding, boiled quail, ham, sandwiches, bread and butter, cake, crackers, bread pudding, jelly, custard, cheese, sausages.

Miscellaneous.—Pistols, loaded cartridges, torpedoes, medicines, glassware, clothing, soiled undergarments, baby clothes, hosiery, hair brushes, combs, carpenter tools, pieces of machinery, fence wire, gold and silver watches, jewelry, novelties and notions of all kinds, shrubs, roots, scions, herbs, fresh and dried; fruits and flowers, six cases of dynamite, which were thrown into the East River to prevent serious disaster.

But it is not only in posting matter which can not be mailed that the public is careless to a degree almost beyond belief. Hardly a day passes that letters unsealed, unaddressed, and containing sums of money, checks, and other valuables are not dropped into the boxes. During the past six months, 1,153 unsealed registered letters were received at the New York office. They contained in cash $649.21, and in checks, drafts etc., $204,615.56, making a total of $211,464.77 posted in unsealed envelopes. Not long ago a well-known city bank posted $1,500,000 worth of United States bonds, which were unregistered and easily negotiable, in an envelope so flimsy that it broke open before it left the stamper's table. Similar instances of carelessness could be repeated almost without number. Indeed, it is hardly to be wondered at that the officer who related these circumstances felt called upon to exclaim in conclusion: "The post-office has to deal with a great many curious people."—New York Times.

Letters From Bro. John Macauley.

Bro. Joseph:—I have seen in several Heralds that the woman in Revelations 12, that was clothed with the sun and the moon under her feet, with the crown of twelve stars on her head, was the same church that apostatised in Revelations 17th chapter.

Now I can not find anything in all the Bible to cause any one who knows his Bible to believe any such thing.

She represents the Jewish Church, clothed with the Priesthood, the sun, to whom the kingdom belongs, represented as the moon and she standing upon it, (as it was under her feet), with the crown of twelve stars, (the twelve tribes, for this is what we see in Gen., chapter 37, verse 9; 1 Chron. 5: 1, 2; Jer. 31: 4, 5, 6, and 9 verses; Ps. 80: 1, 2. I refer the reader to these passages to save me from the trouble of writing them.

The child she brought forth is Jesus, when he finished the work that his Father gave him to do, he ascended on high to the Father, and he as King, will rule all nations with a rod of iron. Ps. 2: 8; Rom. 9: 1-6, with chapter 15, verse 8.

Now I ask, would God carry this beautiful building of his to the wilderness of the people who were God's and their bitter enemies, with the dragon, (devil) their king? Surely not. Honest reason says no. Surely she was securely hidden, when seated upon the back of the devil, (shut out from God), when the devil had all control of her, so that she deceived the whole world. Her first head, Constantine, said he saw a cross in the air, saying, "By this, conquer." But I ask, was this the Church, (the woman of Revelations 12). Answer, no, it was her seed converted Heathen, with her Bishops and Priests, and her Deacons, but without Apostles and Prophets.

Now I would ask all the Elders and Saints, what has become of the Jewish Christians?

There were many thousands of these in Paul's day. Acts 21: 20. The three thousand that were baptized on the day of Pentecost, were all Jews and for several years after Christ ascended, they would not receive a Gentile, until the Lord rebuked Peter, saying unto him, "Call thou not common or unclean what I have cleansed." Acts 10. And when they did receive them they kept each their several churches. It was to the seven churches of the converted Heathen that John wrote.

Now we will notice the proofs of God's hiding his people, both in the Book of Mormon and the Bible. That there are three places where he hides his people from the face of the devil. In Ezek. 5: 1-3 one third part was burned in the midst of the city, a third part to be smitten with his knife, a third part to be scattered to the winds. He was to take a few and bind them in his skirts. This alludes to their last dispersion and the destruction of their temple and city. Now, as it alludes to this time, see verse 9-13, with Matt. 24: 18, 19; Luke 21: 17. Of the same time Jesus said, that not a hair of their heads should perish. Paul says, Rom. chapter 11, speaking of what God said of Elisha, when he thought that all his prophets were slain but himself, "I have reserved to myself seven thousand that have not bowed to the image of Baal." Verse 5, "Even so then at this present time also, (the present desolation that was then upon them), there is a remnant according to the election of grace, (gospel grace)."

Now we see that God has hidden the Jewish Church and she is to come forth from her hiding place, "Clear as the sun, fair as the moon, and terrible as an army with banners." For this army with banners, I refer you to Isa. 41: 15, 16; Jer. 51: 20, 25; Ps. 149: 7, 8, 9; Ezek. 5: 38, 39.

I often wonder why it is that Latter Day Saints are so divided on the word of God, especially when they have it inspired by our dear martyred prophet. How is it that they should believe and write it to the Herald, to go abroad to both Saint and sinner, that the baptism of John and Christ's baptism were the one baptism, and like our old orthodox preachers, nail it down by the Scriptures, saying it must be so, for John's baptism was from heaven.

Surely they must know that the law given to Moses was from heaven, but that Christ fulfilled it, (not in offering the blood of bulls and goats), but in loving the Lord God with all the heart and mind, and their neighbor (all men whether Jew or Greek, white or black, bond or free). What our fallen nature could not do.

If they would read the 5th chapter of Matt. they would see the contrast. The blood they offered under the law, and their washings and baptisms, were all of no avail when Christ was nailed to the cross. He nailed all these ceremonies to his cross. They died, but when he rose he established a new order of things. Read Hebrews 9th and 10th chapters. "Having therefore, brethren, boldness to enter into the holiest of all by the blood of Jesus. By a new and living way which he had secured for us through the veil, (that is to say his flesh)." 21st verse, "And having such a High Priest over the House of God, 22, let us draw near with a true heart, in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water."

I think this reading shows quite a difference between the water John used and that of Christ's, (not that there was any difference in the water, but in the power that was given to it). The blood of Jesus alone could wash the robes of the Saints. Rev. 7: 14. "These are they who came up out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb."

John's baptism was for repentance, as was Alma's in the Book of Mormon, of those who were afraid of King Noah. He baptized Helaman. This was the first baptism of this people; for there were none it seems had the authority to baptize; for Alma said: Helaman, having authority of Almighty God, as a testimony that ye have entered into a covenant with him to serve him until ye are dead as to the mortal body, and may the Spirit be poured out upon you.—And after Alma had said these words, both Alma and Helaman were buried in the water. He also gave power to ordain Priests to teach them concerning the things of the kingdom of God, yea, even commanded them to teach nothing but repentance.

Now remember that the authority that Alma had received was the authority of the priests of Moses; because they had got the Lord's authority; and their baptisms, (not the washings of the law), were like that of John and hence their power was greater than the law.

Jesus did not come to fulfill the carnal law of Adam, or levitical; but he came to fulfill the law that was given to Moses. God had promised that in Deuteronomy 18: 17, 18.

Neither John nor Jesus called upon them to wash their flesh and clothes in water, but began to baptize, John being sent before Jesus. John could not come in by Jesus, but Jesus came in by John. God has order in his Church. Here in this first Baptism I agree with my brethren as being the same; but if we examine the baptisms in the Book of Mormon and their teachings, they were very particular to teach them to keep the law of Moses, and to look forward unto the Messiah for the remission of sins.

One other circumstance I will introduce of the Nephites in this land. Although Jews there must have been no circumcision among them, and this one circumstance alone proves that the present Gentile Churches in the sprinkling of their babies, take it from the Jewish circumcision. It shows that covenant was an assurance of their land for an everlasting possession, and the uncircumcised soul should be cut off from among his brethren. (That is the land of Palestine).

But Joseph gave to Ephraim this land without condition or covenant. But when his (Joseph's) seed came into its possession, then God laid conditions upon it. But when Jesus came to them he gave it to them for their inheritance, so that there is no need of certain things,—keeping the law of Moses, but it is given on keeping the law of Christ.

Now I think if the Saints in reading the Scriptures, would pause to see to whom the word is spoken,—for it is this mistake that is a stumbling block to the Gentile Churches,—for instance, in reading the 5th and 6th of Matthew they apply the teaching to all the members of their Churches, whereas it exclusively belongs to the Priesthood. And so the teaching of Jesus to his disciples in this land, and plainly so with the epistles of the apostles. Hebrews, James, and 1st and 2d Peter are exclusively to the Jews and the scattered tribes; 1st and 2d Corinthians, Galatians and Ephesians are to the converted Gentiles; Romans is to both the converted Jew and Gentile. Paul to the Galatian Church, because some Jewish brethren were striving to persuade them that they must be circumcised or they could not be saved, strives to point out to them that the law was fulfilled, and their circumcision would not now profit them without obeying the Gospel law. For said he: "Circumcision is nothing, neither is uncircumcision, but a new creature; for as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ. For there is neither Jew nor Greek, bond nor free, male or female, but ye are all one, (in Christ)." Gal. 3: 28, 29; Eph. 4.

Paul here was writing to the converted Ephesian heathen, showing them that they with the Jewish Church were one. Verse 3, "Endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace, (between Jew and Gentile), in one body and one Spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling, 5, one Lord, one Faith, one Baptism, 6, one God, and Father of all, (Jew and Gentile), who is above all and through all, and in you all." Here then is the one baptism that brings all, Jews and Greeks, and bond and free, male and female, into Christ. Under the law there were no women allowed, but they are in the Gospel Church baptized into Christ.

Now, dear Bro., I send you these that you may know my views, as I am not a good pen man, I am infirm and trembling with age, (in my 84 year). My eyes are dim, but I love the truth. Error, (especially with the Saints), I can not bear. I always wrote my mind and thoughts to Bro. Stebbins, but I do not know where to write to, or I would have sent it to him. May God keep you, dear brother, from all Satan's wiles and wicked men, and also from false brethren, that you may finish the work laid upon you, as did your dear lamented father.

Your brother in the New Covenant,

JOHN MACAULEY,

DUNVILLE, Wis., October 1st, 1882.

Sabbath Excuses.

WHAT a host of them there are, and how readily they come out at our slightest beck or call! One would suppose that Satan stood ready with a sort of a Pandora's box, filled with them, and suited to every occasion.

Saturday night's dissipation or over-work, calls for an extra nap, and is a sufficient excuse for entering Church or Sunday School at a late hour, if at all. Then how easy it is to be sick on Sunday. Were there ever such distressing headaches as Sunday headaches? And, are there any things so incurable as Sunday headaches, of every description? The physician who could find a remedy for this class of diseases, would confer a blessing on many a pastor and Sunday School Superintendent.

If one's garments are getting threadbare, how astonishing it is, and how much worse they look on Sunday than any other day. They can be renovated and made quite presentable, and respectable for every occasion, except that of church-wear.

Then how much harder it storms on Sundays than on any other day: fog and mist are magnified into drops of rain, and drops of rain are imagined hail stones, and a squall of wind is nothing less than a tornado.

As to the cold, the thermometer never ranges so low as it does on Sunday. And how solicitous we become, all at once, in reference to our health.

One would suppose that all mankind were more susceptible to disease on the Lord's Day, than on any other day. Even the warm, pleasant sunshine brings with it an excuse. A hot week-day is bearable, but a hot Sunday who can endure.

Ah these Sunday excuses, how plausible they are, and how easily they quiet the guilty conscience. But there is a day coming when all excuses to idle away a Sabbath, will be in vain. I know a man who led a useful and upright life, who was not ashamed to go to Sabbath School with a patch on his pants when a boy, and who became a preacher and lecturer, in the town of Rochdale, England.

How far fine clothes affect personal piety, I am not able to say; nor do I conjecture. They always say fine birds will flock together, and the church is no exception to this rule. The fact is, that churches now-a-days are so fluttering with silks, satins, and feathers, that no sorrow fowl will venture in. No person can attend the services of any of the churches in large cities and towns, and worship God without distraction. One needs continually to ask, "take off mine eyes from beholding vanity."

By request I am at present teaching a Bible class at a Baptist Sabbath School in Chester, (our faith), and previous to Sabbath School picnics, anniversaries, &c., scholars attend by hundreds; but a few Sabbaths after, what a falling away! Excuses are plentiful. When dress and fashion, sin and folly, reign supreme, who dare enter in. I am glad of those words uttered by the great teacher, "The poor ye shall always have with you."

Science and the Bible.

The Research of Scientific Astronomers speaks thus on page 347: "What are these stars" these millions upon millions of luminous orbs, scattered above, below, and on every hand through the depth of space? We can not view them, being as they are the production of infinite wisdom, as having been called into existence for no other purpose than to throw light and splendor over the solitude of immensity; nor can we suppose that they have been formed to give light by night upon the earth; for that would be absurd, as one small additional moon would give more light than they all. Besides this, there is comparatively but a small portion of them visible to our world. Myriads of them lie far beyond the reach of the unassisted eye. For what conceivable end, then, have these globes been created? Like our sun, each of them is placed at an immense distance from all others; like our sun they each one shine by their own light; like our sun, as far as observation has reached, they each one turn upon their own axes. Why then, may we not suppose that like our own sun also, each of them is the center of a system, and gives light and heat to numerous planetary worlds revolving around it? This, at any rate, is the most rational conclusion that we can offer, and is the view entertained by astronomers generally. "Worlds rolling in these distant regions," Says the eloquent Chalmers, "And these worlds must be mansions of life and intelligence. In the canopy of heaven we see the bright aspect of the universe, where each shining point presents us with a sun, and each sun with a system of worlds, where the Divinity reigns in all the grandeur of his attributes. Where he peoples immensity with his wonders, and travels in the greatness of his strength, through one vast and unlimited monarchy."

On page 51: "I am a great King, says the Lords of Hosts," and the extent and magnificence of his dominions, as revealed by astronomy, prove him to be such indeed. Cast our eyes in any direction we please, or stretch our imagination to the utmost of its power and we can not tell neither where these dominions begin nor where they end. It has been calculated that there are within the reach of the best telescopes, more than two billions of worlds, and men of solid minds and profound intellects, have advanced the supposition that were even all these to be swept away, into nothingness and oblivion, the universe of God would be still left in its grandeur, and that its glory would suffer no more by the event, tremendous as it seems to us, than would the forest by the dropping of a single leaf. What then must be the whole realm of God? And if we advance still farther, and suppose in accordance with what seems to be probable, that the innumerable worlds embraced within his vast dominions, have all their days and nights, seasons and years; that they are peopled with an endless gradation of intelligent beings who can reckon these days and years, and employ these seasons in the pleasing duties of mutual benevolence and united devotions."

Compare the contents of the above result of the deep research of those who stand in the foremost ranks of the learned, with the contents of the 7th chapter. 36-43 verses of Genesis of the Inspired Translation by Joseph Smith, and how completely do they harmonize. Here it is. Says Enoch: "And we're it possible that man could number the particles of the earth, yea, and millions of worlds like this, it would not be a beginning to the number of thy creations, and they are stretched out still, 43 verse, and among all the workmanship of my hands there has not been so great wickedness as among thy brethren."

The language plainly infers that these myriads of worlds are populated with accountable beings. The inspiration of the Psalmist confirms the observation of science, and the Bible, as the Spirit gives him utterance, thus: "He shall call to the heavens above and to the earth beneath, Gather my Saints together." And we are informed in the Book of Covenants, that the earth and all the planets comprehended; so that if in the mouth of two or three witnesses every word is to be established, we think this essay has passed the ordeal. The Origin of Churches.

"Every plant which my Heavenly Father hath not planted shall be rooted up."—Christ.

The text embodies a sentiment worthy of the consideration of all. The line of demarcation is clearly drawn, between the creeds and systems of men, and the church government inaugurated by the Great Law Giver, Jesus Christ. The declaration is prophetic, and points to a time when confusion will have an end, by reason of the final triumph of truth.

The moral worth of every system will be tested by the "perfect law of liberty." And who will not say, that just so far as these systems compare unfavorably with the "perfect law" their adherents shall suffer loss. How lightly will popularity weigh in the balance against actual worth, in opposition to truth.

That those who have labored faithfully and well, to bring about "reformation," will receive "a just recompense of reward," we do not question; but "every man's works shall be tried."

If there is any compromise in the gospel scheme, we have failed to discern it as yet. Men may "depart from the faith," and in so doing diverge from the line of right; but the gospel does not follow them. Paul recognized the possibility of there being a "falling away" from Christianity proper, but evidently did not entertain the idea for a moment that the eternal principle of truth would become corrupted by reason of puny man's refusing to abide in it. The Savior acknowledged that the "kingdom of heaven [church militant] suffered violence," and seemed to predict that the violent would "take it by force;" but probably did not think that "its righteousness" would be subverted. John saw the church represented under the figure of an abominable "woman," courted and admired by the kings of the earth, but rejected of God; her spiritual power, not subverted, but withdrawn, as is shown by the figure in Rev. 12th chapter.

That the world has become partially conscious of its poverty spiritually, is evidenced by the efforts of different ones to reform the "church." As to how well they have succeeded it is difficult to determine. In some respects "the rent is made worse." Much good has been done, however, by way of gaining freedom of thought and action, and doubtless thousands have been made better, happier, and hence drawn nearer to God, by the work very properly called, "the reformation." But the sentiment taught in the parable relative to putting "new cloth upon an old garment," and "new wine into old bottles," is well exemplified by the efforts of these men to bring back primitive christianity by "reformation." Those who have filed their objection to direct restoration by reorganization, seemingly have forgotten that "new wine" must be put into "new bottles. But many seem to verify the statement, "And no man also having drunk old wine, straightway desireth new; for he saith the old is better." How well this illustrates the force of tradition, and the bias of religious education. How needful it is that men should obey the Savior's injunction, "Seek first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness." This does not imply a careless observation, but an earnest, prayerful and diligent searching after the Church of Christ.

One of the prime causes of the spiritual lassitude in the nominal Christian world, is carelessness relative to the things of God, together with a non-appreciation and disregard of the plain teachings of his word. Thousands become identified with churches, apparently without a thought in reference to their origin, or as to whether their organic laws and executive officers, are such as are specified in the word.

Why is it that men who are cautious and shrewd in secular affairs, and who exercise commendable discretion in nearly everything pertaining to present life, are willing to base their hopes of future happiness upon a careless and superficial investigation of religion. "Blessed are they who do hunger and thirst after righteousness," does not apply to those who make religion a secondary object. "Ask and it shall be given you, seek and ye shall find," does not mean that men should drift carelessly along through life, waiting listlessly for something to turn up that shall set them aright, without any effort on their part. Neither does it imply that they should base their hopes of future felicity upon the opinions of others, Reverend or otherwise, only so far as light is reflected upon the written word. It were far better if more would believe the promise, "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, who giveth to all men liberally; and it shall be given him." Surely the promise is to all who truly desire to know, and do his will.

Unbelief, in ten thousand forms, is stamped upon the world, infidel and professional. A manifest lack of confidence in the plain promises of Jesus Christ, disseminates confusion, mistrust, and doubt throughout the entire religious fabric, giving to Christianity a countenance that is anything but prepossessing.

The gospel makes each one morally responsible for a due exercise of his or her reasoning faculties, and recognizes each as being capable of exercising all needful faith in God, provided their desires for "righteousness" are sufficiently strong. And if the saying of Christ be true, that his word shall judge us at the last day, will not a failure upon our part to "seek" properly for a knowledge of his truth, enter into the account greatly to our debit.

Notwithstanding the scriptural interdiction, the inclination of "man to trust in man" is painfully discernable, concerning whom "it is written," They "shall not see when good cometh." The elders of the Church of Christ are made practically acquainted with the force of this scripture, while presenting the precious truths of a restored gospel to the people, many of whom seemingly prefer to trust in the traditions of their predecessors, together with the opinions of so called Divines, who deny the very principle essential to the call, and qualification of a minister of the gospel of Christ. And thus it is, that when they sacrifice all mercenary considerations, together with the companionship of wife and offspring, devoting their time, and the energies of their souls in seeking to persuade the people to believe in and lay hold of the spiritual blessing of God, they are told by certain ones, "these things are not for you;" and these parties knowing (for they must know, else they do not read) that their assertion is unfounded in truth, and will not bear a proper investigation, and comparison with the word, raise the hue and cry of "impostor."

In many instances. (thank God not in all), sympathy, charity, love, justice, and every pure instinct of the soul seems to depart, while prejudice, malice, and intolerance run high in the minds of the people. And while claiming more for the Bible than it claims for itself, its moral worth is forgotten if ever understood, and its teachings disregarded; and thus they fail to "see when good cometh," by reason of "trusting in man."

But to the consideration of the text, "Every plant which my Heavenly Father hath not planted, shall be rooted up."

Just how much Divinity has had to do in bringing the various churches into existence, it is not our province to say. We hope the offense may be pardonable however, if we are not so capacitated as to believe that God calls and qualifies a hundred men to preach as many doctrines. We believe that much, very much, is left to man's agency, and that proportionally as they teach truth, either by precept or example, they may be blessed of God, and we see nothing in the text that need cause any to fear that any good thing is going to be taken from the people.

The elders of latter day Israel have been cautioned to "contend against no church, save it be the church of the devil;" which I can but interpret to mean, that so far as men in any denomination, or out of any, teach truth, we are to encourage them in so doing; but to oppose by every honorable means, the encroachments of evil, whenever and wherever they may be found. They have also been commanded to "declare nothing but repentance to this generation;" from which we understand that the gospel now, as in former days, is an authoritative message, and that nothing short of obedience to its requirements is an evidence on the part of the people, of their acceptability with God. As "The Son of Man came to seek and to save that which was lost," so has the gospel been restored in "the latter times," not to subvert earthly governments, nor to undo the good that other churches (though they be churches of men) may have done, and are doing, but to usher in the reign of peace, and spiritual power, which can only be done through obedience to law, even the "perfect law of liberty." And whatever others have done, or may do, the motto of the writer shall be, "Peace on earth, good will toward men."

That the origin of a church is a matter of vital importance to all who are concerned, none can well deny. We see the primitive church towering far above all other contemporaneous systems, by reason of its author being sent of God. We have confidence in the ministrations of the prophets, apostles, evangelists, pastors and teachers, because "God set them in the church as it pleased him." Its members did not envy the popular Pharisees, Sadducees, nor Essenes, who made such loud profession of love for "the law," of whose true merit and genius they were entirely ignorant; they were willing to endure such persecution as would arise by reason of their peculiar faith, and to suffer death if necessary, all because their doctrine and church had their origin with God.

Nearly two thousand years have elapsed, and "signs" fulfilling, betoken the near approach of the event that all who are prepared should welcome, the second coming of Christ. Query, has God, who it is said, is "without variableness, or shadow of turning," given the theological machinery into the hands of uninspired men to be run according to their fancy, till the day of crisis shall come? or will he act like himself, and fulfill the promise of his word, and send another angel "with the everlasting gospel to preach to them that dwell upon the earth," that "this gospel of the kingdom" may be preached for a "sign" or a "witness" of the "end of the world?"

Preferring to believe the latter, and rejoice.

ing in a knowledge of its truth, we offer the following in vindication and explanation of the claims of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints: It claims first, that the terrible apostasy as predicted by the prophets and apostles, has occurred. Second, that the Scriptures promise a restoration of the gospel, with all its privileges and powers. Third, that in fulfillment of this promise it has been restored, together with the priesthood, which comprehends the authority to preach the gospel and administer its ordinances. Fourth, that the gospel, like its author, is unchangeable, and hence the same gifts and blessings should, and do follow now, as primitively.

Respectfully,

G. S. HYDE.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

REV. R. G. McNEICE is enlightening the good folks of Salt Lake City upon the subject of Mormonism, and of the personal short comings of Joseph Smith, the founder of that faith as the human administrator. Bro. Blair writes that either himself or Bro. Luff will look after him a little. Bro. Blair sends us the second discourse of the series, in which special regard is paid to "Joseph Smith as a Prophet." From the reading of the sermon, we can believe that had Rev. McNeice been favored to listen to Brn. Joseph R. Lambert and James Gillen, in their last efforts at Lamoni, November 5th and October 29th, respectively, he would have been far better prepared to draw a just conclusion on the subject.

The Utah politicians, polygamic, in a campaign document issued and circulated in the city and country, rate Bro. W. W. Blair "Among the total half hundred notorious anti-Mormon" anarchists in the city. Gov. Murray, P. T. Van Zile, M. M. Bane, Rev. R. G. McNiece, H. W. Lawrence and a number more, more or less known, make up the list; and it is stated that John Sharp, chairman of the People's Central Committee, pays more tax than all the fifty. Thirty-four names are given who pay $755.58, while J. Sharp pays $1,252.39.

Bro. George Hicklin wrote from Corinth, Ontario, November 6th, that he was there laboring for the time being. He states that they had a good conference at Zone, where good was done. He visited London, but was called back by the death of Bro. Matthew Pearson, of Michigan, at Corinth, where he was visiting his parents.

We have printed for the brethren in California, (three of them), on special orders, from March to November 30th, of 1882, 35,000 tracts, viz: William Anderson 11,000, George S. Lincoln 19,000, W. N. Dawson 5,000. These were for distribution in the Golden State. Bro. Anderson wrote us in the early Spring that he and Bro. Lincoln intended to make it snow in California this season.

Bro. E. G. Culver wrote from Chicago, November 2d, that "the man Dennis, referred to in HERALD, of November 1st, must have made a mistake about obtaining thirty dollars from the Saints in Chicago. He must have stopped at some small town on the way, and they gave so liberally that he supposed it to be Chicago, as every one that wants to get along easy comes there to obtain the good things of life. For it is known, far and near, that Chicago is a "good cow." No difference who brings the pail, she does the best she can to fill it." We are not advised about the giving qualities of the goodly city; but are glad that A. W. Dehner, or Dennis, did not victimize the Saints there. Bro. Culver also states that Bro. W. H. Kelley spoke in Chicago, October 29th, and had a good number of outsiders in."

Bro. Jobe Brown writes from Morth LaCrosse, Wisconsin, his home. He is still trying to bear faithful witness to the truth. He wrote on the 5th of October.

Bro. W. Anderson is a maker of, and dealer in candies. He sent a box of samples to the sanctorium, not long since and they were delicious.

Brn. Clay and Butler call attention to their stocking weaving establishment at St. Joseph, Mo. Saints in need of hosiery, knit jackets, &c., would do well to give them a trial.

THE branch at Lamoni, Decatur county, Iowa, the place where the Herald Office is located, now numbers over four hundred members, and others are added by conversion and baptism, and by reception on letters of recommend from other branches, every few days. There are two places of meeting, at which the Saints congregate; one two and a half miles south west of town, in what is called the Old Church, standing on the premises of Bro. E. J. Robinson; and the other just within the limits of the settlement called Lamoni, west of the railway depot, called the New Chapel, a small building owned by Sr. Rosalia H. Dancer, and used as a chapel by the branch. Neither of these buildings will seat above two hundred, without crowding, and at no time now, in fair weather is either large enough to hold the comers to worship. There is great necessity for the house of worship now in process of being built.

Bro. Joseph R. Lambert moved into his new home on the 10th of November, and is now domiciled as a resident of the suburbs of Lamoni, near neighbor to Bro. Joseph Smith.

Bro. Glaud Rodger and family removed from Lamoni, to Independence, Missouri, about the 22d of November. Lamoni is sorry to lose Bro. Rodgers, but can safely commend them to the Saints at Independence. Bro. Glaud Rodger, Jun., and family also remove with the family. Bro. Joseph, the younger son of Bro. Glaud is a young man of excellent promise, an ingenious and steady mechanic, one of the plastic workers, that shape and build up the world. The circles of the Saints where this family goes will receive a good addition to their number.

The impression has somehow obtained among some that the county of Decatur, in which Lamoni is situated, is poor in soil; but it is certain that good beef and pork are raised, and good butter made. For some other products see what Bro. Abram Reese, of Pleasanton, twelve miles east of Lamoni, has done: "Mr. A. Reese raised nine kinds of potatoes this year, among that number he found the Surprise to be an extra good potato and very prolific. He ordered from St. Louis two potatoes which cost fifty cents apiece, one called the White Elephant, weighed 5½ oz. and produced 249 potatoes, which weighed 39 lbs. The other, the Vermont, weighed 6½ oz., produced 269 potatoes, weight 45½ lbs. While at St. Louis last Fall he bought another variety called the York, which was raised on his place down there. A bushel of them took first premium at St. Louis Fair this year. The seed came from California."

From Pleasanton items in the Decatur county Journal, we clip: "Elder Duncan Campbell preached Sunday morning from 1st Peter, 2d chapter, on the subject of sanctification. He made all his points well and cleaned up this mystified subject in a logical and concise manner. He also preached at night."

THERE are now but one more number of the Herald to be issued, before it will enter upon its weekly state and mission. We are very desirous, as its editorial guardian, that the venture as a weekly may be crowned with great success. And as a member of the Board of Publication, we can express for them the same desire. Everything that can be done by the committee and those engaged at the office in direct labor on the Herald will be done to make it welcome to its readers.

We ask of our patrons their continued support. Not only renew your own subscriptions for the weekly, but give us a lift in the direction of an increased list, by securing one or more additional subscribers; and also by sending a copy to some friend or relative, as a present for the whole, or half year.

If it is to be an engine of war against the common enemy, why not use it; that is, everybody use it, as everybody can and may. Do not be chary of the influence the Herald may exert for the good of the Church, and the advancement of the cause. It is hoped that we may be able to give Lamoni, and its vicinity something more of a notice in the Herald than heretofore, that the Saints who may be desirous of becoming acquainted with the location and environs of the office, may have an opportunity to do so.

We shall take it for granted that all our present subscribers will want the Herald in its weekly form, and shall continue it to them; the thirty-five cents extra, being so small an advance upon the price, that every one can afford to pay it.

Bro. W. N. Dawson, now of Nortonville, California, writes, "I was much surprised when I read that the extra price for weekly Herald was to be only thirty-five cents; it is a very small advance for so much given in return."

Bro. James A. McIntosh wrote from Egermont, Ontario, that he was much pleased at learning that the Herald was to be made weekly. He proposed to push the getting of subscribers for it.

Sister Sarah Chester, of California, sends $5.00 for two copies of the weekly Herald for 1883. These are among the first names received; but nearly everyone that names the change welcomes it.

MR. A. G. CAMPBELL, the man who contested the seat of George Q. Cannon, as delegate from Utah to Congress, last year, in a conversation respecting the late election in Utah and its results, said to a Times reporter in Chicago:

"It is to be presumed that he will not neglect to do what he can for that sect. Judge P. T. Vanzile, who is an able and popular man, was the gentle candidate, and he ought to have received in the neighborhood of six thousand gentle votes, besides the votes of the Josephites, who are good citizens. They believe in the Mormon religion, but are not polygamists."

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

1st. Why are not the Elders of the Reorganized Church sent out as provided, in Section 115, Doctrine and Covenants?

The only reason that can be given. It is not expedient.

2d. Can the Elders have confidence in God, while there is a failure upon the part of the Church to honor his revelations?

Yes.

3d. Have the Elders any promise of a full protection and guidance of the Holy Spirit, and still be a party to the ignoring the letter of the law?

We believe not.

In Sec. 104, par. 40, Doctrine and Covenants, these words are found: "This president is to be a Bishop." Question: Can other than a Bishop act as the president of a Quorum of Priests? If so, why?

Yes. Because he is chosen. The words quoted do not refer to the subdivision of forty-eight priests.

The following is certainly very ingenious, and comes from The Christian Commonwealth, a religious journal published in London. The Editor evidently does not intend to be found unwilling to defend the Bible. The Inspired Translation says that Cain took one of his brother's daughters to wife; quite as good and farther removed than a sister.

WHERE DID CAIN GET HIS WIFE FROM?

There are large numbers of thoughtless people who suppose this question to be unanswerable, and workmen of the Free Thought school never tire of putting it. The answer is very simple. We read in Genesis 5:4, "And the days of Adam after he had begotten Seth were eight hundred years; and he begat sons and daughters." Now Adam's age when he died was nine hundred and thirty, so that he was one hundred and thirty years old when Seth was born. The birth of Seth was shortly after Abel's murder by Cain. We have no distinct data as to the age of Adam when Eve was formed, neither do we know certainly how long after the Creation the fall took place. There can be no doubt that Adam's adaptation to, and fitness for, the high position of dominion given him by God (Gen. 1:26-30), was a result of many years of study and training, in which God Himself was the great teacher, educator, and counsellor (Gen. 3:8). Probably we shall not be far wrong in placing the birth of Cain at the time when Adam was eighty years old. Supposing the murder of Abel to have taken place when Cain was fifty years old, this will bring us near to the date of the birth of Seth. That his birth was followed by other sons and daughters we have already seen, and the rational and Scriptural position is this, that Cain, after an interval of twenty-five or thirty years, took to wife one of his father's daughters. The question of incest under the circumstances is quite beside the mark. God's law in relation to consanguinity had not at that time either room or place. It is interesting to observe that the fact of marriage to one as yet unborn is not unknown to the statements of Scripture. When Naomi endeavored to persuade Ruth the Moabitess to return to her home on the ground that as a young widow she might yet find a home and a husband in Moab, she uses this argument in these words, "Should I have an husband and bear sons, would ye tarry for them till they are grown? would ye stay for them from having husbands?" (Ruth 1:12, 13). It will be said by some, But the history of Cain taking his wife is found in Genesis 4:13, and you are quoting from the 5th, which is subsequent to the events narrated! No, not subsequent in its history, but in the order of the chapter. It is a common thing in Scripture statement for one chapter and history to overlap or go back into another. The first and second verses of the fifth chapter give proof of what we affirm. This arises from the exceeding brevity of the record, and does not in the least invalidate the accuracy of Scripture testimony.

The following is from the Ogden Pilot for November 4th, and shows to what extent the reigning element in Utah have forsaken the traditions of the early Church; for in those days any one would be heard without being interrupted, but now whatever is opposed to Utah, must not be heard. Alas, how are the mighty fallen.

MORMON HOODLUMS.

We were considerably amused by reading in last evening's Deseret News a letter from Joe West, of Ogden, to the London Chronicle, in which the statement is made that "the 'opposition' and 'disturbances' incidental to open-air meetings in London have nothing to do with us. (Mormons). The meetings of the 'Josephites' (an apostate sect of the true Mormon Church) have, unfortunately, often given rise to disturbances and provoked angry opposition. Joe signs his letter to the News, "Your brother in the gospel." There is not a man or woman in Utah but what knows that the reverse of the above statement is true. The Josephites are peaceful, law-abiding, God-fearing people, and there is no opposition to them or their teachings except such as comes from the Utah polygamous organization styling itself "the true church." Here is a case in point: Elder W. W. Blair, a Josephite and also a gentleman of irrefragable character, lectured at Plain City last night, on the subject of "Obedience to Civil Law." The audience was small, owing partly to the threatening condition of the weather. The hoodlum element (Mormon) was numerous outside the building and sought to disturb the exercises in various ways. Mr. Blair urged simply obedience to civil law and no "going back" on the laws until they have been pronounced unconstitutional by the highest judicial tribunal. He voiced the sentiments of his church.

LET the thoughtful Elders of the Church examine the following:

The Rev. Dr. Hepworth defines the faith-cure as "that religious idiosyncrasy," and says it is "the product of the emotional nature when it is swayed by an inexplicable mysticism and becomes indifferent to such a low order of materials as facts and law." He devotes an Independent article to a consideration of recent cures claimed as miracles, and concludes: "Suppose my father to be attacked with typhoid fever, shall I resort at once to those means of recovery which have been providentially afforded and which the educated physician is acquainted with, or shall I send for the officers of the church to make a prayer? I think I ought to do both, but especially to send for the doctor. The messenger who does my errand should go to the physician first, and to the minister afterward. If either of them is out of town, I earnestly hope it may not be the doctor. If I ignore the agency of God in the cure of disease, I am an infidel; and if I ignore the fact that the Lord has provided for just such an emergency in the skilled physician, I am without that ordinary common-sense which the Lord expects me to use."

Is it not a wonderful thing that a man who stands in the sacred desk, ostensibly to point men to the way of life, and who presents the Word of God from the Bible, should forget that the same God who formed man and "ordained those means of recovery," (if there are any), of which he so learnedly discourses, also made man's "emotional nature" and gave it the possibilities to become indifferent to "facts and law."

By "facts and law" Rev. Hepworth can only mean material facts and the law governing man's material (physical) existence. Of course pain, disease and suffering are facts, and according to Rev. Hepworth, the sufferer may possibly become indifferent to them by a "religious idiosyncrasy." Does the gentleman forget that the first teacher of the "Faith Cure," so far as the Christian economy is concerned, was Christ? Is it possible that he would have us believe that Christ, instead of teaching men the truth of "facts and law" in cases of disease when he healed them and charged his disciples to do likewise, only played upon their emotional natures by means of an "inexplicable mysticism?" As for instance, the case cited in the eighth chapter of Matthew, of which Christ himself said, "I have not found so great faith, no, not in Israel." In this case the centurion was idiosyncratic, according to Hepworth, and believed that a word from Christ, the Master, could and would heal his servant. Was Christ, in this instance, also idiosyncratic? Was he "swayed by an inexplicable mysticism" and "indifferent to facts and law?" The fact of the servant's sickness was recognized; and without the aid of an intelligent physician the fact of his restoration was effected. Was this the result of a disregard to the law of life, a case of double dealing on the part of the Great Teacher? It seems strange to a careful and honest reader of the Bible, that a man who proposes to teach Christ as the Way of Life, should dismiss a subject of such import in such a cavalier and unbelieving fashion.

Learned and intelligent physicians now say of the very fever mentioned by Rev. Hepworth, that so far as a "Knowledge of the disease sufficient to predicate a remedy for its cure" is concerned, that it has not been reached. Suppose then, that Mr. Hepworth, senior, is attacked by typhoid fever, to what intelligent physician can he apply; to the one who honestly acknowledges that he knows of no remedy to which the fever will yield; the popular man whom fortuitous circumstances have placed as the leading one of the vicinity; or to some late fledgling of the medical college, who has been coached through his examination, and is sent out to experiment upon human life and trifle with human affections and fears? There can be but a few eminent men in every profession; and allopath, hydropath, or homeopath, not many very learned or skilled are found; and the great mass of those who are sick, it attended by physicians at all, must be content to suffer the ministrations of those who are not yet eminent, but are winning knowledge and experience out of the sad sufferings of the sick?

If Rev. Hepworth really believes the words and in the mission of the Christ, and he ought if he preaches him, how can he cast discredit upon him; for he commands his disciples to "lay hands on the sick," and promises that "they shall recover." But the reverend gentleman would send for both, the physician first, then the elders; and pray that if either could not be found that one should not be the doctor. This places first trust in man; and then, if there is room for other trust, to God. So be it, let them who choose so put their trust in the arm of flesh; but men who are willing to accept the word of God as the man of their council, ought to be as willing to die by it as to live by it, if need be.

It is such men as this reverend sneerer at the sublime faith taught by the Savior, that has given place and success to such men as Mr. R. G. Ingersoll. When men, professedly in the ranks of believing Christians, openly throw discredit upon the direct statements and commands of Christ, and covertly sneer at men who accept them as being simple minded, or the victims of idiosyncratic psychology, it is not to be wondered at that other men who seek for an occasion to disregard the claims for Christ made upon them, because they do not choose to put their lives upon that form of probation, should become bold and arrogant; and taking it for granted that these captains in the salvation army, properly reflect the principles and polity of their great leader, should argue that if these do not place sufficient stress upon the positive commands of the Word, how can it rightfully be required of us to pay heed to them. This is a sufficient indictment to found a case of resistance upon hard to be defeated; and the result is that the lukewarm defenders and apologists of God's word go to the wall while their bolder antagonists pass them by in triumph. Of them we can safely echo what Ingersoll says: "They tell me that statesmen and poets, philosophers, heroes, scientists, and inventors come by chance; that all other departments depend entirely upon luck; but when God wants exhorters he selects." And to this add, if he selected such men he made full many mistakes, while chance and luck have made by far many a better choice.

We clip from the Chicago Tribune, of a late date, the following pious protest of the Pope against the lapse of temporal power from the occupant of St. Peter's chair at Rome. It may be sad to Pope Leo XIII, but to the real Christian it is the handwriting on the wall announcing that Papacy has been weighed and "found wanting."

THE POPE STILL HOWLING "PERSECUTION."

In replying to the address presented by the French pilgrims who are returning from Palestine, Leo XIII. said that in kneeling upon that holy ground they must without doubt have meditated upon the ingratitude of those men who had prepared Calvary for the Son of God. The Church Militant, which reproduces on earth the image of the mortal life of the Savior, must consequently expect to be treated by men as her Divine Founder was. They saw, in fact, that she was the object of the incessant contempt, persecution, and hatred of the impious. To him to whom upon earth was confided the awful charge of being the supreme head of the church, there could not be reserved other than at all times a large share in these sorrows, but, nevertheless, they seemed to have surpassed the ordinary measure, since impiety had violently established its seat in Rome. The sovereignty still recognized as belonging to the Pope recalled the purple robe and sceptre of our Lord in the Prætorium. The calumnies and insults to which he is continually subjected were a souvenir of the humiliation inflicted on the Son of God, and the Supreme Pontiff, deprived of his liberty, is at the mercy of the Powers hostile to him, as his Divine Master once was.

The Pope then went on to speak of France: As we have to-day the consolation of addressing you, we repeat the words the Savior used to the pious women who followed Him to Calvary—"Daughters of Jerusalem, weep for yourselves and for your children" One shudders, in fact, at the sight of the efforts impious sects are at present making to corrupt France and strip her of her glorious character as a Catholic nation. One is terrified at the sight of the war which has there been declared against religion and even against God. At this moment of unquestionable gravity, and in the presence of such dangers, an imperative duty is incumbent on you, beloved sons—that of watching over the salvation of your country, and of working with redoubled zeal and activity for the defense of the religious interests thus jeopardized.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. M. R. Scott, wrote from Scottsville, Indiana, November 11th:

I have lost three of my family in eighteen months. Who can sympathize with us? It seems that there is no permanent peace in this life. Every day brings its trouble; hence we seek that rest that all the ancients sought for. Peace be with you.

He adds:

"You shall find favor," &c. I had the honor to be the nominee for State Senator, for the joint counties of Floyd and Washington, of the Republican and National Greenback parties.

Bro. W. W. Blair wrote, November 7th:

I had a pretty good trip to Ogden and Plain City of late. Our work is gaining in that region. Politics has been the chief topic in Utah, of late.

On the 8th:

I am to go south on the 9th or 10th inst., to be gone ten to fifteen days.

Bro. Joseph F. McDowell wrote from Collins, Iowa, November 13th:

Closed my meetings at Cambridge on the 2d inst. Delivered twenty-one discourses; baptized three. Commenced meetings at Harsh School House, four miles south of here, on the 5th inst. Delivered nine discourses, and baptized two, a young man and his wife, of good report. Expect to go to Warren county, next.

Mrs. O. C. Merrill, of Chatfield, Minnesota, wrote November 14th, 1882:

I have read several publications of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and I believe their teachings are divine. I take the Saints' Advocate.

Bro. Joseph C. Clapp wrote from Moscow, Idaho, October 30th:

I have just read, with much interest, the minutes of the late Conference, and while I am thankful to the Conference for liberating me from the Rocky Mountain Mission, I very much regret that I am so circumstanced that I can not take a more active part in the great harvest field. I feel very keenly the admonition given in the late revelation, but trust that as the Master knows my condition, that he will extend the hand of mercy. I have been preaching of late, and have had good liberty, considering. I have been working at a saw mill about nine miles from home, and after my day's work, each evening last week I preached to the mill crew, something over thirty men, and aroused quite an interest among them. I expect to do all I can to forward the work wherever I am. I have labored very hard here to kill out prejudice, and have made much advancement in that direction. The difference between Latter Day Saintism and Utahism is well understood in this vicinity.

Bro. C. M. Fulks sends the following suggestion which we adopt.

A convention of Christian workers has been in session during the past week in the city of Chicago, and has been grappling with the problem of evangelizing our large cities. Many good suggestions have been offered, but we think that sufficient prominence has not been given to the fact, that the great lack of city and country is a revival of apostolic christianity; not in formed theory only, but in spirit and practice. The gospel, the ancient gospel, preached in life and deed, as well as in word, would be "the power of God." We doubt whether an apostle would recognize the religion that he preached, and for which he died, in the worldly, fashionable, formal, emasculated christianity often found, now adays.

Bro. W. D. McKnight wrote from Chicago, lately:

Prayer meeting to-night at Bro. Phillips'. All want to see Bro. Lambert. Sunday School is not progressing. People are willing to hear at meetings. This is the best place I know of for preaching. Branch feels better.

By act of the Canadian authorities, the Post Office at Blenheim, Ontario, which has been known as Rond Eau, is now changed to Blenheim. The Saints having occasion to address those living there will please remember this. The following shows the official action:

Post Office Department, Canada.

Bro. Joseph:—Since leaving Lamoni, I have preached nearly every Sunday, when I have been able. I have had a severe attack of ague, but by the aid of God, my Father, I was relieved, and I am regaining my natural strength again. Met Bro. Anthony at Galland's Grove, on the 29th and 30th of last month, and we enjoyed our trip well. Would that God would send more laborers into his vast and overripe vineyard, that were as humble and God-like as Bro. R. J. Anthony. May God bless him in his labors. I am collecting information as to the prohibitory law in Kansas, and will send some items to you soon. I start on the mission westward next Monday—nothing preventing. Had not sickness overtaken me, I would have been there ere this, or tried to very hard. The Branch at Magnolia, seems to be enjoying more spiritual life than usual, but there are some dead or sleepy members.

I am as ever your humble servant,
J. FRANK MINTUN.

Dear Brethren in Christ:—Our last session of conference in this district was held at the Excelsior Branch, September 23d. We had a good time through all of our meetings, and especially in our business sessions God met with us by his Spirit. We adopted the law of tithing as set forth by our estimable Bishop, in the Herald of June 15th, 1882, and in doing so, God poured out a blessing upon us, which made us adopt it with willing hearts. O, that the Saints would all bring their tithing to the store house of God. Then there would be no idle servants in this Latter Day work. Bro. Jobe Brown, from Lacross, met with us in Conference. We thank him for his labor with us during this conference, and may God bless him in his effort for Zion's weal.

Bro. Joseph, I love this Latter Day work, and long for the day when Zion will be redeemed. Pray for me. As ever I remain your brother in Christ,

W. A. McDOWELL.

OENAVILLE, Bell Co., Texas,
October 11th, 1882.

Bro. Joseph:—Bro. Heman C. Smith and A. J. Cato, have just closed a protracted meeting here, which has resulted in six being baptized into the Church; making seven in all at this place, since Bro. Smith returned to this part of his field of labor. It seems as if a new era had dawned, or is being ushered in with the Elmwood Saints. Not only have sinners been aroused to a sense of their danger, but Saints are also awakening from a lethargic state, and express resolutions of more faithfulness and diligence in the future.

For about a year the cause has been languishing at this place, and in this branch, notwithstanding, the faithful, warning voice of those who are as watchmen upon the walls we slept, while the enemy approached, and as it were, almost stormed our fort. But thank God, we now feel "To shake off the coals from our garments," and no longer rest in slothfulness and inactivity, while there is so much to engage the true soldier of the cross. We feel grateful indeed, that Bro. Smith has been returned to this mission, for we are confident that nothing escapes his vigilance, and although this field must be a hard one, and one from which some of the Elders shrink with dread; yet we are grateful to, and have confidence in those who do make the sacrifice, since we believe it is nothing but the love of God and their fellow men that prompts them.

One of our number who has lately come into the Church is my son, my eldest child, and O, what joy to see him won away from the Broadway of sin, while yet in his childhood, and before the toils of the evil one had closed around him.

May God bless and nourish the little branch planted here at Elmwood, and prosper the work through out this mission, and elsewhere, is the profound hope of

Your sister in the covenant,
R. S. McMANS.

EDENVILLE, Iowa, Nov. 1st, 1882.

Bro. Joseph:—Our time has been mostly occupied in field since General Conference. Held a series of meetings in Warren county, where I was both tried and blessed. Good hearted Saints and friends cheered me at a needed time.

Just returned from a visit to Grinnell, the city that suffered so terribly from tornado, last June. The poet could truthfully say: "Fearful hearts be still!" We tried to calm their troubled ocean, (as was said) by one of our "best efforts." God stood by us in making the first opening in that fated city. Left one lady of note, both for wealth and piety, ready for baptism, really a convert by the labors of sisters Phebe and Cass Dumbaulds. Invitations were pressing to come back. I am now at home, probably for next two weeks, to take care of Post Office while my brother Alfred is looking a home in Nebraska. I have a discussion pending with one Rev. A. F. Russel, and if it ever comes off, will be in Adell, county seat of Dallas county, and will be the first opening there. Questions, viz: 1st, That the Holy Scriptures translated and corrected by the Spirit of revelation, by Joseph Smith, is a revelation from God. 2d, That the teachings of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, are not in harmony with the teachings of the Bible. Bro. Ezenhouser, takes the field this week, and expects to continue during Winter. Bro. McDowell is doing a good work in Cambridge; he baptizes one this week, and others believing. Bro. J. S. Roth will soon be at work, and if faithful will make one of our best laborers. Bro. W. C. Nirk is trying to shake off the "love of mammon." If he succeeds, can do much lasting good in ministry. There seems to be a general move in the "authority" of our district for the better. The smarting words of the revelation given during our late General Conference, force themselves before my vision almost daily; who can dodge the issue?

"Let no one deceive himself, that he shall not account for his stewardship unto me." I feel well in the work, and expect to continue my ministerial labor if finances admit.

I dreamed a few nights ago that I was on a large ship. It was slightly moving to and fro, on a troubled sea. All on a sudden it hove to land; I, with others, was sitting in small boats in the stern. The captain in the cabin came to the front, and cried, "All on shore." With a little reluctance we obeyed, as we thought the time early to quit the ship, when we had so much to do. With some difficulty we ascended the perpendicular stone wharf. When on shore, I perceived I was on the very grounds where shipwrights had been laboring, as there were timbers of nearly every description scattered around. Above me, I heard people singing in a loud voice, a hymn commencing: "The harvest is over, &c; after every verse was a chorus commencing: "The reaping time is past," &c. I felt some peculiar power that caused me to readily join in the music, and the singing awoke me. I feel anxious, and would like the interpretation. I am yours in bonds,

I. N. WHITE.

Bro. Joseph:—There was a terrible storm in our part of the country on September 29th, 1882. The waters were higher than ever known, sweeping everything before them, fencing, logs, crops of all kinds, thrashed and unthrashed grain, hay and fodder, buildings of various kinds, stables, cribs, smoke houses, hen houses and one dwelling, that was my own. My house floated off the pillars eighteen minutes after nine o'clock at night, with all of my family and other contents in it, floating about one mile down stream, through fields, over bushes and saplings, landing us in the mouth of a little branch, the house resting on each end, across the branch. We got out all right,—safe; but the house was not sound. J. S. Baggerly's corn cribs floated some distance, and are now resting on part of his wagon. I have my house back again. It took nineteen yoke of oxen to bring it back. We were kindly treated by all of the citizens, for which we feel thankful. May the giver of all good be praised for the mercies received.

W. H. ROBERTSON.

WASHINGTON CORNERS,
Alameda Co., California,

Bro. Joseph:—I have not changed my faith in the Latter Day work yet, and hope I never shall. I have not been actively engaged in the ministry for about one year and a half. The reasons are, I got into debt while trying to feed my family on conference resolutions, and I found that they would not pay for wood, flour, beef or potatoes; so I had to stop preaching and go to work, and thank the Lord I have been prospered wonderfully, and have a good business and am almost out of debt. If the Lord spares my life, and still continues to prosper me, I shall try to get into the field again. While writing the above it occurred to me what an easy thing it has always been, for the Elders to assemble together and resolve that we sustain Bro. so and so in his mission, with our faith, and prayers and means, but there was no collection taken up of the means promised at that time, and the prayers and faith could be given at any future time, and in many instances all three fail, because our zeal cools when we get home. Thus from conference to conference we continue, not realizing that the Bro. has been out, trying to fulfill his part of the contract; going from place to place, not knowing where the next meal or night's lodging is to come from; an outcast in the sight of the world; the finger of scorn pointed at him and in the midst of all his other troubles, a letter comes from his dear wife, "The flour is all gone and I am in debt. I do not know where the next load of wood is to come from; the childrens clothes are so shabby I am ashamed to take them to meeting; you must come home, or we will have to go hungry." It may be he has left a good business of some kind to go into the field to preach, and now he begins to look around and back, and he can not help thinking, if I had stayed at home, as the great majority of my brethren do, my family would not have come to want, neither would I be in debt. I could be at home, enjoying the company of my family, and laying up something for my old age, like the rest of men. Are these not natural feelings? All shall receive a reward according to their works. Oh how this promise should encourage all that are making sacrifices, and the same promises should stir up those who are waiting to see whether the work is going to amount to much or not.

Your brother in the gospel,
A. HAWS.

PLEASANTON, Iowa, Nov. 12th, 1882.

Editor Herald:—Sickness in my family, in the form of malarial fever, prostrating one of my children for three weeks, will delay my departure for the east. I have made some arrangements, however, for the Winter's campaign, and hope to reach Washington in December. Elders now at work in the mission, report favorably. I have the pledge of some prominent statesmen, to assist us in giving truth and right the victory.

As ever, and in bonds,

THREE RIVERS, Jackson Co., Miss.,
October 26th, 1882.

Bro. Joseph:—The Scriptures and reason both teach me, that where our treasure is, there will our hearts (minds) be also. Now, if our treasure is divided, part on earth, (in temporal Zion), and part in heaven, will not our minds be divided. And if so, wont we be unstable in our ways. And can't this be applied to a church that is aiming after both of these? Can a vessel steer to two points of a compass at once.

And now I wish to ask some more questions on another subject. If the Spirit leads into all truth, and brings all things to the understanding which he has said, how is it that we, (the church), are commanded to take what is written in three books to be God's law? I fail to find any quotations from any of the doctrines and covenants, or any acknowledged laws in the apostle's times, that a law, manifested through lifeless and senseless letters, on cold and senseless stone, was anything but weak and without power. Then how much stronger is that written on paper?

I believe that these books are taking the place of the Holy Ghost in a great degree. I am in doubts upon these points, and desire truth.

JOHN B. PORTER.

STEWARTSVILLE, DeKalb Co., Mo.,

November 16th, 1882.

Dear Bro. Joseph:—I returned from Burlington last night. I spoke eleven times, commencing on Sunday the 5th inst, and closing on Tuesday night the 14th. I spoke in the Saint's Hall, except on last Sunday, when I used the old Court House, or Marion Hall. There were not many non members present, at any time. The few who came out, expressed themselves as being well pleased with what they heard. I could not wish for more liberty than I had in preaching. There was but one active officer in the Branch when I went there, namely, Bro. Nicholas, the Priest. In connection with Bro. Stebbins, whom I met there. I helped set the Branch in order. Bro. Nicholas was called and ordained an Elder, and chosen as Branch President. Elder Fred. Johnson was appointed Teacher; and on last Tuesday night Bro. Schade was ordained a Deacon, and elected Deacon of the Branch. Bro. Gaither, resigning. The Saints claimed to have been much edified by my efforts—as the themes were generally such as were suitable for men and women in the gospel, although much was suited to babes. We endeavored to give each their portion in due season. A young Spanish lady, raised a Catholic, heard several discourses, and is convinced: 1st, that Catholicism is not the doctrine of Christ, and 2d, that our faith is vastly superior to her own, or that of the Protestant Churches. I think that she will yet see her way out of Babylon, and into the true Church of Christ. Some who were administered to in a prayer meeting were immediately healed; others were benefitted. The Saints have a nice little Hall on Jefferson St., near 5th. It is quite a good place to speak in. I came home as I had not got everything fixed as I considered necessary to be done before I left for considerable length of time. I think that I can be ready in a week or ten days. I am ready to hear from you in regard to labor, and will endeavor to go where you say the Spirit intimates.

Your brother in Christ,
T. W. SMITH.

TAHITI, Sept 12th, 1882.

E to matou taeae here, Rui Parauni, oia hoi, Louis Brown, E to matou here e!

Very Dear Brother:—We love you with love which can not be estimated, and the churches in this place, as well as in all others, send you their greetings for the success of our great work.

We send as our delegate to you, our dearly beloved brother, Thomas Coffin, and he will tell you everything respecting the success of our labors in the Lord, in these islands.

We have now in our hands a large extent of land, in the metropolis of these islands, Papeete. We have already secured among ourselves a small sum; but we require the assistance of our brethren, and above all their prayers. "The prayers of the righteous availeth much." Do, then, all you can to assist us in framing and building our new church. We will do all we can to assist, and the Lord Almighty will not fail to assist us in this good work, done for his honor and for our good cause. I am still the Elder in charge of the church at Papeete, where I can assure you that I endeavor by every means,—by preaching and by advice, to advance our sacred cause. Pray for me. Torohia is my assistant; I love him as a brother beloved in the Lord. He is a great assistant.

We beg you then, to continue in your earnest prayers for us in general, for the cause, and for each individually. We are in number, at the present time, about one thousand, and many others are being daily admitted. Pray, pray for us. The cause of God is all we desire, all we ask for, all we pray for; may we succeed. Perhaps, by your means we may have a little success by pecuniary means; if so, please address to the care of the American Consul, a gentleman esteemed by all.

Your brethren in the Lord,

TEHOPEA, TOROHIA,

And all the members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

LONDON, Ontario,

November 11th, 1882.

Joseph Smith, Dear Bro:—The conference of the London District has closed. We had a pleasant session. The branches of the district were quite well represented. Brethren Duell, Meriam, Hicklin, McIntosh were present, and James Robb. Bishop's agent of the Kent and Elgin district, was with us. They all seemed to feel well, and to take new courage for the battle. Brn. Merriam and Duell, are to labor in the Kent and Elgin District, and the western part of the Dominion; Bro. Hicklin and Samuel Brown are to go north into Usbora and Carlingford, and Egermont, and so on as the way opens for them. Bro. McIntosh to return east, where he has been laboring since July, and where the Pictou Branch has been organized. My health has been very poor since the Fall Conference at Lamoni. Inflammation of the lungs, with a severe cough. At times almost prevents me from filling my appointments. I have been kindly cared for by the Saints and friends. At present writing, I think I am getting some better. I hope so, at least. Please remember me in your prayers, that God may deal with me according to his loving kindness. Most of the Saints seem to be encouraged over the reports from the Fall Conference. And many are pleased that the Spring Conference is to be held at Kirtland, Ohio. And I must say, since I have had more time to reflect over the question of the Spring Conference being at Kirtland, I have not yet felt to regret the act of the conference in that respect; but I have been thinking over the instructions the Lord gave to the Saints years ago, that the Church was under condemnation, and would remain so until they returned, and remembered the new covenant, the Book of Mormon, and the former commandments; not only to say, but to do. Now the question is, if we are the Church, have we returned, and are we remembering, not only to say, but are we doing the former commandments? If so, we may expect the Lord will meet with his people, and bless them as he has in former years. I hope the Saints will think of these things, and seek to gather at the Spring Conference in meekness and under the favor of the Lord, and his Spirit, with its inspiring, cheering, and guiding influences, be enjoyed by his people. More might be said, but I forbear, lest I might weary you. I remain your brother and friend in the bonds of peace,

JOHN H. LAKE.

RIVERTON, Iowa,

November 6th, 1882.

I thought a few lines from Mill Creek would be interesting to the readers of the Herald. We still hold our branch together, and meet together as often as we can. We do not have as large assemblies as we did before the branch was divided. Part of our members were organized in the Hazel Dell Branch, and another part with the Hamburg Branch. I expect we will hold a protracted meeting here as soon as Bro. Milton Daugherty comes to help us. The Wesleyan Methodists have promised us the use of their Church. We hope good will be done.

Yours,

L. C. DONALSON.

BROCKTON, Massachusetts,

November 13th, 1882.

Bro. Joseph:—From present indications the Latter Day work seems to be prospering in this (Massachusetts) District, to an extent never before equaled. The facilities obtained and now being used, and the necessary expense called for in building chapels and maintaining halls for places of worship, show that the seed of the gospel of latter days has taken deep root in many honest and valiant hearts.

The Providence, Rhode Island Branch, have engaged a very fine large hall at 281, High Street, the best ever had since the Branch was organized. It is easy of access, well lighted, well ventilated. The Saints have neatly and tastefully fitted it up for divine worship, and here the word is preached every Sabbath; and as they have sole control, it is expected that a course of lectures will be given on some of the week nights during the Winter months. They have gone to considerable expense in fitting up this place, but now they can take pride in inviting all to come and meet with them at their place of worship. Besides this, they are vigorously prosecuting several missions in places bordering on the city; viz, Scituate, Georgeville, Hebronville; so we conclude that Providence is alive to the work.

The members of the Plainville (Mass.) Branch, who have held their meetings at the house of Bro. C. A. Coombs, for a number of years, have now decided that the work demands a greater effort; and they are erecting a meeting house upon land adjacent to Bro. Coomb's house, which is situated on the most public street in the village. Their energies and their means, are being called into requisition to accomplish the project. Three weeks ago the foundation was laid and paid for. May their zeal for the work of God continue.

Boston (Mass.) Branch, has met in a little hall at 2373, Washington St., for sometime past, which answered every purpose, no doubt, when it was first engaged; but "Give us room that we may dwell," was the sentiment, when we were with them recently, and a much larger hall has been engaged at the corner of Union Park and Washington Sts., in a large marble front building, up one flight. The hall is larger, finer, and better every way, of course at an additional expense. They are to take possession December 1st.

Fall River (Mass.) Branch has a fine Chapel, 25x58 ft. On my recent visit there, I found them, (brethren and sisters), working like beavers in their endeavor to maintain the cause. They have just put in a new furnace, so the house is heated by registers, instead of by stoves. They have built the furnace themselves, of brick, thereby saving considerable expense. The cost I think is between fifty and sixty dollars. The brethren have worked all day at their employment, and then worked nights on the chapel. I know something of this kind of work by experience. When the chapel here was first built, many a night have we labored by moonlight or lantern light, digging and rolling rocks for the basement, &c. We did not think it any disgrace to dig and drive a tip cart for the Church one day, and then preach the next. The brethren and Saints deserve all praise for their effort, which has called for such an outlay of money, labor and brains; may their efforts be blessed to the saving of themselves, their families, and the honest hearted souls about them.

New Bedford (Mass.) Branch, which continued to meet in private houses for sometime after the "little flock" was organized, is alive to the needs of the hour. They have recently engaged a hall for Sunday services in a most public place, where they hold forth the "word of life" to the people, their numbers are not many, but their love for the cause is great; as is manifested by their works and labors of love.

Douglas (Mass.) Branch, have a little Chapel where they meet and hold divine service. Recent advices from there show that the Saints are alive to the work, and are contributing of their means for its advancement.

Brookton (Mass.) Branch is a little band of Saints, who are struggling to maintain the cause, seemingly against great odds. They hire a hall in "Clark's Block," Main St., where they meet every Sabbath, and try to reason with those who come in, and testify to the people of what they know to be true. We preached twice here yesterday, (Sunday), and had fair liberty. Some are on the eve of obeying.

Dennisport (Mass.) Branch have a Chapel where they meet regularly, and continually for the service of God.

North Plymouth (Mass.) Branch, but recently organized, is striving to uphold the "ensign." They meet at their houses at present. Occasionally when we visit them, they hire a fine Chapel for us to preach the word in.

Thus the work is being pushed on and is gradually gaining. I remember when the District was first organized there was but one branch (viz, Fall River), and we met in a small room in the fourth story of a wooden building. We had to make the ascension up a dark, dingy, winding stairway. Yet the spirit was with us, and it was then stated at the Spirit's dictation, that this was laying the foundation of a great work, that should be accomplished in the East, if we were but faithful. I do not think that the work then spoken of, has by any means been accomplished; but we are simply yet working, laying that foundation; and that part that has been done is an evidence that it is being surely and securely laid. There is yet a great and glorious work to be done in the East. Many of the Saints are making sacrifices for the advancement of the work, which is laying up treasures in heaven. To God be all the glory.

Yours in bonds,

JOHN GILBERT.

REESE, Michigan,
November 11th, 1882.

Bro. Joseph:—I am at home at present. I expect to remain home until the latter part of this month; then if all is well, I shall try and further the cause, somewhere. I attended the conference held at Coldwater, the 21st of November. The conference was one of the most cheering ones, for me, that I have attended. I saw a large number of strange faces. There was a large gathering of Saints, and those not Saints; I was pleased to meet so many from Indiana. There was not much business done, not much to do. The preachers consisted of Brn. W. H. Kelley, C. Scott, E. L. Kelley. This latter day work is a glorious reality; experience teaches every one this. I am satisfied the longer we live saint like, the more we can appreciate its intrinsic value. We are not increasing very fast here in numbers, but in faith we are gaining. Since arriving home I have preached twice in Vassar, and twice in Reese. We have a branch organized in Vassar, consisting of twelve, one Elder. Everything, nearly, seems to be working for the side of right. I am thankful to get the voice and favor of General Conference; I shall try and prove myself a worthy man, and devote myself to the appointed field of labor. I want to work for our heavenly father, so when my pilgrimage shall end, he will say, "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of the Lord." Our Savior labored and toiled while here below, and the work is not all done yet. May each one do his duty, and gather the lost one into the fold is my prayer.

I send you another item from a paper published in Vassar, called the Pioneer.

"A company of Latter Day Saints gathered at the river, just below the dam, Sunday afternoon, and two of the number, Mr. and Mrs. Hancock, were immersed by Rev. DeLong. A large number of spectators witnessed the baptism from both banks of the river."

Your brother in Christ,
EDWARD DELONG.

MILLESBURG, Wy. Ter.,
November 7th, 1882.

Dear Brother Joseph Smith:—I hope you are well. I am pleased to tell you my wish is to do good in my Father's work. I feel thankful to the Lord, that he has brought me to love and serve him, and has counted me worthy to have a standing in his church, and to bear his holy priesthood. My desire is to be very humble and prayerful, very wise and faithful. I am happy to tell you I preach every good chance I get. I got here last Friday night. I preached last Saturday night. I went to Heartville last Sunday, which is about five miles from here, and preached at three o'clock; I had about fifty miners to hear me. I came back here and preached at night. I preached at a place called the Chuge Water, at H. B. Kelley's. His place is fifty miles from Cheyenne, on the way here. I came on the stage, and we had to lay over that night. He keeps a large place to accommodate the passengers and freighters and teams. There were two large trains of mule wagons and teamsters, about a hundred men were there. I asked Kelley if he would be willing for me to preach in his bar room. He gave his consent, so I preached, and was treated very kindly. In the morning at six o'clock, I saw our Minister of the Presbyterian Church, Mr. Cowback. He said I wish I had known you was going to speak last night, I would have come and helped you, and preached a little myself.

This is a most beautiful place for a city; it is one hundred miles from Cheyenne. This city is laid off into town lots, on the North Platte River. In five years from now, it will be a large city. To-day we have about fourteen houses almost built. I am in a dugout to write this. I have six men at work for me. I am building a two story house. We have laid off this city, one mile square. There are thirty-two members of the town city company, and they count me worthy to be their President of the company, by which I feel highly honored. I feel our Church shall be the first in this city, Millersburg, and in the new city, Heartville. These will both be cities in a short time. Our mines are good.

We have a large copper stamps almost finished, and the city Heartville, is building up fast. I shall build a house there as soon as I get this done here. This will be my church till we can have meeting there. All are going to help build a church for me. No one has preached in Heartville and Millersburg but me; and I want us, as a people, to have the first church in these two cities. Good-by, dear brothers and sisters, and I pray the blessed Lord to bless you all.

Your brother,
JOHN EAMES.

ALLISTON, Sincoc Co., Oat.,
November 14th, 1882.

Bro. Joseph:—I have just returned from my field of labor to conference, held in London. Had a peaceful and good session. I have been laboring alone (so far as man's help is concerned) since our last June conference. The field is entirely new, and separated far from any of the branches. I have baptized twenty-five since July, and the prospects are good for more in a short time. I did not write to thank you for the bundle of tracts you sent to me, but I do so now, and assure you they were of immense value in aiding me, as I found they were in most cases eagerly perused, and the result was that during the stay of three and a half months, the prejudice of the people was so far overcome by their reading, and my feeble preaching, that during the visit I never once heard a single word disparaging to the cause; no vile slanders, as on former occasions, in other new places.

Pictou, the town where I have been laboring, is a place of about three thousand five hundred inhabitants, situated on what might almost be called an island, in Lake Ontario, being joined to the main land by a narrow neck. The interest seemed to be as good when I left, as at any time during my stay, and I am returned to the same field of labor by conference. I was very highly pleased to meet the staff of Elders sent by General Conference, and especially our beloved brother, J. H. Lake. I esteem him very highly, but was sorry to see that he was somewhat afflicted with a very bad cough. There is a general good feeling kindled in the hearts of the Saints at the thought of Conference being held at Kirtland next Spring. Several intend visiting, and I hear a general report of satisfaction in regard to the Herald becoming weekly, at the small advance in price. I will do all I can to aid in getting subscribers, &c I desire to do all I can for the Master's cause, but I am very weak, and prone to err, and therefore desire your special prayers for me, that I may be kept from the present evil and temptation.

My poor feeble prayer is for you personally, and the cause in general. May God bless you and yours. Expect to go home for a few weeks, to put domestic affairs in order for the Winter, then off to the war again.

J. A. MCINTOSH.

IONE VALLEY, Amador Co., Cal.
November 11th, 1882.

Dear Brother Joseph:—I desire to say to the Saints, that they (myself with the rest), should not become afraid, nor excited. Let the government make such changes as it may see fit. We are required to pursue a straightforward course, to keep the commandments, keep humble and faithful, and to prepare to meet God.

I ask an interest in all your prayers, that I may be enabled to overcome all evil.

Yours in bonds,
EDWIN T. DAWSON.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 31st, 1882.

Dear Brother:—I have just returned from my mission in York county, Pennsylvania, and Maryland. I was absent twenty-eight days, held thirty-three meetings, preached one funeral sermon, and feel that good has been done. I find that I have removed the prejudice existing against our church in that section, and have reached the ears of many who would not give me a hearing before. I preached in places this time where I could not get permission when I was there last Summer. The same places are now offered to me when I come again, with a request that I will give them a series of lectures on our faith, as they can see no fault in it. That is what I have been working for, that they might learn the true principles of our doctrine. I find that this time in the year is not a good time to be there as the Saints are scattered in different places, and some far away, assisting in canning fruit, (which is carried on there to a great extent), for they can make better wages at it than at any other work they can do; therefore it is a harvest for them. The farmers are also very busy, gathering corn and Winter stores. Also their tobacco, which is raised in abundance in this section, for which they get good prices. I have promised to return to them again in January, God willing, when they will all be home and at leisure, and I hope much good will be done, as there are several convinced that our doctrine is Bible doctrine, and no fault can be found in it. I have made as many promises to preach in new places when I return, as I will be able to fill while I am there; but expect to remain there all that month. I will mention one little circumstance that occurred while I was there. A gentleman and his wife, who were so very much prejudiced against us that they would not hear us, came very unexpectedly to Bro. Matthew's house, one Saturday evening, to stay over Sunday. They did not know I was there, as they lived several miles from there; but when they found out they concluded to return in the morning, but were persuaded by them to stay until after morning service and hear the doctrine once, to which they consented; for they could not find any excuse. We spent the evening together, and they told Bro. Matthews I was a different man from what they expected to find. That night I prayed for the Spirit's aid, and I was greatly blessed in the morning while speaking. After the morning meeting was over, they concluded to stay and hear me in the afternoon, which they did, and then resolved to stay and hear me at a school house in Maryland that night, which they also did. The result is, that I am invited to come and spend a few days with them, when I return to York county, and preach in his house, which I hope to do, Lord willing. He says there are others there like he was, and he wants them to hear for themselves. This was on Sunday, October 15th, the last Sunday I spent with them in York county. I then announced that I would preach my last sermon during that visit on Monday, the 16th, at 7 o'clock, p. m., as I had made engagements to be in Baltimore on Wednesday evening. On Monday afternoon, the president of the branch said to me: "Bro. Stewart, you know that every time you have been here, and announced your last meeting, the Lord has placed obstacles in your way, so that you could not get away at the time, and that was when you did the most good; and I feel it strongly impressed upon my mind that something will arise that will keep you a few days longer, for I do not feel that your work is yet done." On that Monday evening a request was made by one present that I would stay one more day, and preach at his house, on Tuesday night. I consented, as I had time to reach Baltimore to meet my appointment. That same Monday night a messenger arrived with the news that Bro. Geo. W. Matthews was dead, and that his body would reach there on Tuesday, and for me to stay and preach the funeral sermon. I did so, on Wednesday, and then I reached the ears of many who had never heard the true gospel. I preached to them the "Resurrection of the dead." That night, Wednesday, I preached again at the same house that I preached in Tuesday evening. Bro. Matthews was on a visit to his daughter in Montgomery county, Md., when he died of heart disease. His daughter was sick, and unable to attend the funeral, so her husband requested me to visit her before I came home, which I did, and preached there three times last Sunday. It is about fourteen miles from Washington, D. C. They are both members of the New Park Branch, and will return in December. I expect to visit them again in a few weeks, as I go to Frederick City, Maryland, as I could not reach the Saints there this time, as I had to be in Philadelphia at a certain time.

Bro. George W. Matthews was an old veteran, belonging to the old church in the days of your father. A short time before he united with the Church, while living in Hartford county, Md., an Elder of the Church passed through that section, trying to get a place to preach, but prejudice ran so high, that he could not find shelter, or a place to preach; but finally met with Bro. Matthews, who gave him shelter and supplied him with food. Bro. Matthews also gave him permission to preach in his woods, and erected a stand and seats. But few came to hear. Here is the first time Bro. Matthews heard the sound of the everlasting gospel, and he was so much taken with it, that he could not find rest until he obeyed. Therefore, in mid Winter he walked fifty miles to find an Elder, who, when he found him, cut the ice and baptized him, in 1843. He has held faithful to the truth during the dark and cloudy day that came over the Church. United with the Reorganized Church and remained faithful until death, and I have no doubt but he will receive his reward with the just.

With kind regards to your family, and all the Saints, I remain.

Yours in bonds,

JOSEPH A. STEWART.

News Summary.

Oct. 30th.—Davenport, Iowa. The most violent hail storm ever known visited this county this afternoon. Here in the city the damage was light with the exception of skylights, nearly every one in the city being broken. The storm began at 3:30 p. m., the hail continuing here not more than six minutes. Pieces from as large as a marble up to pieces weighing a half pound fell.

Oct. 30th.—St. Paul, Minn. The first general snow storm of the season occurred in Dakota and Montana to-day.

Paris. The River Seine is rising rapidly. A waterspout destroyed seven brigs at St. Raphael. Floods have stopped the traffic between Marseilles and Cannes. The latter town is inundated. The dike at Digue has been carried away.

The continuance of heavy rains in the Thames Valley has caused inundations in every direction.

Madrid. A gale which has been sweeping the southern coast of Spain has, according to reports now arriving, done much damage to shipping at Cadiz and Alicante.

The devastation by floods in the Tyrol and in Corinthia has been very disastrous. In Upper Italy the terrible floods are abating, but in the Tyrol, roads, railways, and bridges are submerged, and in many instances have been swept away.

Nov. 4th.—The Irish Times correspondent says: "Great distress exists in County Clare, owing to the failure of the potato crop, an epidemic among the pigs, and the high prices demanded for all articles of food, which are caused by the taxes levied on farmers by the crimes act, and which has proved a very heavy burden. Fields and meadows are deluged with water; men, women, and children, and pigs, calves, cows, dogs, and chickens, all are herded together in one conglomerate mass, in miserable dwellings unfit for the habitation of any human being."

Destructive gales and inundations continue throughout England. In Radnorshire, a county in the south of Wales, the grain crops have suffered complete destruction.

Petersburg. A terrible conflagration has taken place at Uleborg, and enormous losses have resulted. Stores, theaters, etc., have been destroyed.

Madrid. Disturbances have broken out at Valdancorre, in the Pyrenees, and several persons are reported killed and wounded.

Nov. 5th.—Constantinople. There was an earthquake in Northern Syria yesterday. Several villages near Aintah were destroyed. No loss of life is reported.

ly notified of the discovery of a conspiracy at Pultowa for a rising of the peasantry. This is the nest of 200 conspirators, most of whom, when an attempt to capture them was made by the police, escaped by jumping from windows

Minneapolis. An $8,000 to $10,000 fire occurred here to-day.

Alexandria. The forces of the False Prophet in the Soudan made five attacks on the town of Obeid, but were driven back with great loss. Among those killed were two brothers of the False Prophet. Abeid remains invested, and the Prophet continues his advance upon Khartoum, for which there is hope of successful defense.

Owen Sound, Ont. The propeller Josephine Kidd was burned off Cape Commodore last night. She left here about 8 p. m. with a full cargo of merchandise.

November 6th.—Red Bank, N. J. The fourth destructive fire within four years, ravaged this place last night, and did damage to the extent of $500,000.

Cairo. Eight thousand troops are on the point of starting to Zuakim to oppose the new insurrection. A reserve force of 3,000 has been detailed to remain at Korosko and guard that point.

London. Letters from Ireland state that a famine is impending in the counties Donegal, Clare, and Roscommon. The potato crop has been a failure, while storms have devastated the fields and cabins of the poor. The guardians of the workhouse unions declare that the prospect is the worst since the famine of 1846.

Alexandria. There is great distress among the victims of incendiarism, who are waiting to be paid indemnity, and they have been compelled to appeal to private charity to sustain themselves.

Nov. 7th.—The Exeter Canal has broken its banks, and the whole country bordering it in Cheshire, Warwickshire, and Somerset is flooded.

Halifax. The poor asylum burned last night, in which thirty-one persons are known to have perished.

An Austrian bark has been wrecked at Milford and twelve of the crew drowned.

Another terrible hurricane has occurred at Manila. The damage is heavy to vessels and house.

The public debt of Chicago is $12,752,000.

Nov. 10.—New York. Malkasten, summer residence of Bierstadt, the artist, burned, with several of his most valuable paintings, loss above insurance from $35,000 to $40,000.

OTTAWA, Ont.—The total number of immigrants who arrived in the Dominion up to the 31st of October was 153,055, of whom 82,482 are known to have remained in Canada, the rest having been through passengers to the Western States from Liverpool, and who took Canada as the shortest route to their destination.

Victoria, B. C. The United States revenue cutter Corwin, which has arrived from the north, brings particulars of a fight with Indians and the destruction of a village. The village destroyed was located at Hochinooc, on the Alaskan coast. The tribe had seized and held two white men and a steam-launch which had been sent out with a tug to a whale launch, provided with a bomb-gearing for firing, when an explosion occurred, and an Indian Chief who was sitting on board the launch, was killed. The tribe surrounded and captured the launch, with two white men, and nearly succeeded in getting possession of the tug.

The latter, however, got away and steamed to Sitka. The Corwin, with the Captain and sixty sailors and marines, were dispatched to Hochinooc. Capt. Merriam demanded the surrender of the launch and prisoners, which the Indians refused to do. Next morning a Gatling gun was placed on an Indian canoe on the beach, and a force was afterwards landed and destroyed all the canoes. The Indians fled to the woods. The village was shelled, and the huts that remained standing after the shelling were looted and burned. Several warriors who ventured out of the woods were killed. The severe lesson was required, as the tribe had been guilty of many acts of cruelty toward the whites. Hearing while at Alaska that Indians had taken possession of one of the American Fur-Trading Company's stations and held all employees prisoners, Commander Healey went to their relief, and the Indians were very hostile. He shelled the village and released all the men held as prisoners. The village was totally destroyed and two chiefs made prisoners.

St. Petersburg. The construction of nine war vessels is ordered, seven of which are for the Baltic and two for the Black Sea ports. Cronstadt will also be greatly strengthened. This is in consequence of the lessons taught by the English bombardment of Alexandria.

Nov. 13th.—London. The steamer Westphalia, of the Hamburg-American Line, from New York November 2d for Hamburg via Plymouth, has put into Portsmouth with a hole in her port bow received by collision with an unknown steamer off Beachy Head early this morning. A boat lowered from the Westphalia to search for the other steamer is missing. It is believed that the unknown steamer has gone to the bottom with all on board.

Cairo. The native population in the Delta is in great distress on account of the failure of their chief means of sustenance, the rice crop.

The Mark Lane Express in its review of the British grain trade of the past week says: "The progress of wheat-sowing is small, owing to disastrous floods and violent storms of hail and snow, accompanied by destructive lightning. Trade is very quiet. Country flour is coming forward freely. Foreign wheat was in better demand Friday. The supply offering on spot is moderate, and off coast is very meagre, nevertheless stocks are large and the quantity float increases. Flour is slow of sale, and prices are unchanged. Maize is continually dearer. The scarcity on spot must continue until early in 1883. There is scarcely any business in off coast wheat. Cargoes of California are about six pence dearer. There were seven fresh arrivals, three cargoes sold, six withdrawn, and five remain—all the latter No. 2 red winter. About twelve cargoes are due the present week. Sales of English wheat the past week were 44,232 quarters at 44 shillings 11 pence, against 49,138 quarters at 44 shillings 3 pence the corresponding period of last year.

Nov. 14.—London. The first annual report of the Irish Land Commission speaks of the indisposition of the tenants to purchase holdings, though a number of landlords are anxious to sell. The arrears clauses of the act are not operative to the extent expected, and the amount of assistance applied for is insignificant, considering the large sums due to landlords. Agreements for rents between landlord and tenant, without the intervention of the court, are increasing. Fair-rent cases have been disposed of at the rate of 4,000 per month.

Kansas City.—A terrible collision occurred on the Chicago & Alton Railway, near Oak Grove, twenty miles east of this city, about 6 o'clock to-night, between a construction train and a hand-car, which resulted in the death of six men and the ditching of the entire train.

Nov. 15th.—Madrid. The Spanish Government is preparing to send a force to occupy Port Santa Cruz Demar, on the coast of Morocco, to protect the fisheries. The Sultan of Morocco has protested against the occupation.

The crew of the missing boat from the steamship Westphalia have landed at New Haven, and report that the other steamer, with which the Westphalia was in collision, went to the bottom with all on board.

The exact condition of the Russian debt is thus stated: Foreign debt, $944,050,000; internal 5 per cent, $550,830,000; land and serfs 5 per cent, $416,585,000; credit notes 5 per cent, $39,800,000; Polish debt, $34,935,000; internal 4 1/2 per cent, $108,000,000; internal 4 per cent, $142,730,000; internal 6 per cent, $21,825,000; uncovered paper money, $457,150,000; total, $2,765,995,000. To extricate himself from this financial slough the Czar is making a desperate effort. He has ordered that hereafter there shall be no further disbursements except with his personal sanction.

For the first time in the history of Dakota an Indian suffered the death penalty in the regular course of the administration of civil law. Brave-Bear, a Sioux, in May, 1879, lay in wait for, killed and robbed Joseph Johnson, a white man, who, with $1,000 on his person, was traveling alone to join his mother and brother.

Stewartsville, Mo. The store of A. J. Culbertson was broken open, the safe picked, and about $250 taken. Other minor crimes of like character were committed there.

Nov. 16th.—Vienna. Much alarm was caused to day by an incidental remark in Von Plenner's speech to the Delegations in alluding to private information given to the Delegations by Count Kalnoky, Minister of Foreign Affairs. Von Plenner begged the Government not to give way to warlike tendencies, but to preserve the peace at any price except dishonor. It is generally thought he alluded to a possibility of war with Russia in the Spring.

London. The first severe snow-storm of the season is reported to day, and seems to be general throughout England. A heavy gale is blowing around the coast, particularly in the southwest. A brig has been lost, with all hands off Stewes, and a small vessel is ashore at Stewes Bay. Another vessel has been totally wrecked at Hayle.

Five pilots have been drowned while attempting to reach a distressed vessel on the Firth of Forth. Berlin. The railways running toward Russia are interrupted by heavy snow-storms.

Nov. 17.—London. A fearful explosion of dynamite occurred this morning at the works in Burryport, Llanelly, Wales, instantly killing three girls and two men, and wounding seven others.

New York.—An atmospheric storm, which old telegraphers say was unparalleled in intensity, began about four o'clock yesterday morning and continued during the day and into the night, with no prospect of immediate abatement. The territory covered extends from New York to Omaha, and from Kansas City north to the end of the wires. By 10 o'clock in the morning Chicago was practically cut off from communication with any point in that area. The storm seemed to travel in successive positive and negative waves, alternately neutralizing the currents and increasing their intensity to such an extent as to start fires in the telegraph offices. The switch board in the Western Union office here ignited half a dozen times, several instruments were melted, the duplex and quadruplex wires were rendered useless, and only one wire out of fifteen between Chicago and New York was in operation at noon. A message was received from Milwaukee that the electricity on one wire had sufficient dynamic power to keep the electric lamp burning. Reports from offices all over the North west told of damaged switch boards and melted keys.

Salt Lake City.—About twenty election precincts in the Territory remain to be heard from, but the result is no longer in doubt, as the total Mormon vote will be about 23,000, and the entire Gentile some 5,500, or a little less than one-fourth, thus insuring the election of Caine, the designated appointee of the church officials, as the Congressional Delegate from Utah.

Nov. 2.—Mecca. The cholera has reached Jeddah.

Laredo, Tex.—A band of hostile Indians numbering about fifty made a raid on a ranch near the Town of Huisachexa, Mexico, last night, seizing some fifteen or twenty persons and capturing a lot of stock. They made good their escape.

Ottawa, Ont.—The most disastrous fire of years visited this place this evening, and in the course of three hours laid in ashes nearly $1,000,000 worth of property, temporarily throwing 1,000 hands out of employment.

FULFILLED PROPHECY:

A Historical Sketch of the Church.

"Another parable put he forth, saying, The kingdom of heaven is likened unto a man which sowed good seed in his fields, but while men slept, his enemy came and sowed tares among the wheat, and went his way. But when the blade was sprung up, and brought forth fruit then appeared the tares, also. So the servants of the household came and said unto him, Sir, didst not thou sow good seed in thy field? From whence then hath it tares? He said unto them: An enemy hath done this. * * All these things spake Jesus unto the multitude in parables; and without a parable spake he not unto them: That it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the prophet, saying, I will open my mouth in parables: I will utter things which have been kept secret from the foundation of the world. * * * He that sowed the good seed is the Son of man. The field is the world: The good seed are the children of the kingdom; but the tares are the children of the wicked one. The enemy that sowed them is the devil."—Matt 13: 24, 39.

In the foregoing we have revealed unto us something that has "been kept secret from the foundation of the world," it being the course of the kingdom since it was set up in the days of Christ. It also foretells the evils and corruptions which were to come in "while men slept," and shows who their author was even "the devil." We also learn that it had been known, and that Christ knew, before he organized his Church (the kingdom) what course it would pursue, and that Satan would sow evil seed, after Christ had finished his work, with the intention of overthrowing all that he had done.

"He that soweth the good seed is the Son of man." After the world had been without the gospel for 400 years, Christ came and sowed the seed. Malachi had been the last Prophet on earth; the last person who could speak with authority from God. The Jews had departed from the Lord, and were "teaching for doctrine the commandments of men." They had departed from the "One body," as it had always existed when the people listened to the teachings of the servants of God, and had instituted new sects and forms of worship. There were the Scribes, Pharisees, Sadducees, Epicureans, Stoics, Academics, Essenes, Gnostics, etc. With all the religion that there seemed to be, Christ said to them; "Ye compass sea and land to make one proselyte, and when he is made, ye make him two fold more the child of hell than yourselves."—Matt. 23: 15. And Paul said: "We have before proved, both Jews and Gentiles, that they are all under sin. * * * There is none righteous, no, not one."—Rom. 3: 9, 10.

LIGHT OF DAY

They had just passed through a long night of spiritual darkness, and they no longer understood the Law and the Prophets, but just at this time John came and brought light, that those who would, might see. He opened up the way, and then Christ came, the perfect light. Spiritual darkness was driven away, and those who were honest, had the privilege of walking in the light, and could see the truth; for the day had come. Christ said: "I am the light." When it is light, and men can see, it is day. When Christ (the Son of man) was sowing the good seed, it was day; for he says: "I must work the works of Him that sent me, while it is day: the night cometh when no man can work."—John 9: 4.

Here we have a plain prediction, that night was coming; and it was during this night, "while men slept," that an enemy, "the devil," was to sow "tares among the wheat." Christ sowed the good seed, preaching the "Gospel of the kingdom," (Matt. 24: 14), the "power of God unto salvation," (Rom. 1: 16), through which "life and immortality are brought to light," (2 Tim. 1: 10), and "the knowledge of the glory of God." (2 Cor. 4: 4-6). He organized his Church, with all its officers, and ordained them, (Jno. 15: 16) Apostles, Prophets, Evangelists, Pastors, Teachers. (Eph 4: 11)

We are also informed what the "principles of the doctrine of Christ" were; viz, Repentance, Faith, Baptism, Laying on of Hands, Resurrection of the dead, and Eternal Judgment. (Heb. 4: 1, 2). "Except a man be born again he can not see the kingdom of God." * * * "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he can not enter into the kingdom of God." (John 3: 3, 5).

Paul knew he was living in the day, as he states, "Now is the accepted time; behold, now is the day of salvation." (2 Cor. 6: 2) "Ye are the children of light, and * * of the day, we are not of the night nor of darkness."—1 Thess 5: 5. And he also knew, that the night was coming; for when the Saints were troubled concerning the second coming of Christ, he says unto them: "That day shall not come, except there come a falling away first, and that man of sin be revealed, the son of perdition."—2 Thess. 2: 3. From this we would understand that the "falling away," would be the means of revealing the "man of sin;" and as Satan was to sow the tares "during the night," it causes the "falling away."

It was the great "falling away" in the truth, which should cause the darken men would "depart from the faith," and see the Spirit, and become worldly, and forget God; and would become so evil and corrupt, that the knowledge of God should be taken away.

"For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, trucebreakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, highminded, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God. Having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof."—2 Tim. 3: 2, 5.

DARKNESS FORETOLD.

"For the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine; but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears, and they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables." (2 Tim. 4: 3, 4). Amos also foretold the great night of darkness, when the light of the gospel would not be known on earth: "Behold, the days come, saith the Lord God, that I will send a famine in the land; not a famine of bread, nor a thirst for water, but of hearing of the words of the Lord; and they shall wander from sea to sea, and from the north even unto the east; they shall run to and fro to seek the word of the Lord, and shall not find it."—Amos 8: 11, 12.

Many may claim that this prophecy was fulfilled during the four hundred years previous to the birth of Christ, but that could not be, as the famine then was not so severe as the words indicate. That there was a time of apostasy we admit; but we find that Zacharias, father of John the Baptist, was a priest, officiating in the temple of the Lord. That his wife, Elizabeth, was of the daughters of Aaron. (Luke 1: 5). Therefore, their son John was a literal descendant of Aaron, and by that authority, the "Aaronic Priesthood," (which had continued on the earth), and the commission he received, (John 1: 33), he went forth, preaching and baptizing. The Melchisedec Priesthood, which held the authority to lay on hands, and baptize with the Holy Ghost, had been taken away; therefore John declared: "One mightier than I cometh. * * * He shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost." (Luke 3: 16). John held not the authority to do this; but to preach, and baptize with water only. There were none on earth who held the authority to give the Holy Ghost; hence, it descended from heaven in the form of a dove upon the Savior." (Luke 3: 22).

After this, Christ said unto his disciples "Tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem until ye be endued with power from on high." (Luke 24:49. Only "blindness in part had happened to Israel."

During the famine, (the night), so great was to be the darkness, that men should "seek the word of the Lord and not find it," because it would not be on earth; which also implies that all authority and priesthood should be withdrawn, "Caught up unto God, and to his throne. (Rev. 12:5).

THE GOSPEL LOST.

This was the condition of things during the night, which history calls the "Dark Ages." Where were the Melchisedec and Aaronic Priesthoods,—the right to baptize with water and the Holy Ghost? Where was the Holy Ghost? All were lost to the inhabitants of the earth, and they were left to struggle in the darkness, without hearing "the word of the Lord."

To further prove that this was the time alluded to, I quote: "Behold, the Lord maketh the earth empty, and maketh it waste, and turneth it upside down, and scattereth abroad the inhabitants thereof. And it shall be as with the people, so with the priest; as with the servant, so with his master; as with the maid, so with her mistress; as with the buyer, so with the seller; as with the lender, so with the borrower; as with the taker of usury, so with the giver of usury to him. The land shall be utterly emptied, [of the hearing of the word of the Lord], and utterly spoiled: For the Lord hath spoken this word. * * * The earth also is defiled under the inhabitants thereof; because they have transgressed the laws, changed the ordinance, broken the everlasting covenant. Therefore hath the curse devoured the earth, and they that dwell therein are desolate. (Isaiah 24:1-6).

Isaiah here plainly saw the time when all mankind would be in the same spiritual darkness. "As with the people, so with the priest," places them all on the same level; and this was fulfilled during the night,—the "dark ages."

The Church of England states in her "Homily on the Evils of Idolatry:" "The laity and clergy, learned and unlearned, men and women, and children, of all ages, sects and degrees, of whole christendom, have been at once buried in the most abominable idolatry, and that for the space of eight hundred years, or more." (Tract, "Which is the Church," page 3).

Peter also speaks of the same time, and of the prophecies foretelling it, saying: "We have also a more sure word of prophecy; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day star arise in your hearts. * * * For the prophecy came not in old time by the will of man, but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." (2 Peter 1:19, 21). In looking forward to those "terrible times," he tells the people to take heed unto that "sure word of prophecy." It was to be the only light shining in that dark place, and he cautions them to remember it "until the day dawn;" and when surrounded by the great darkness, they might know that in God's time the "day star" would arise, to usher in the glorious day again.

During the night we receive light from the moon, in which science tells us there is no light; but that she is a reflector, receiving her light from the sun. It is a borrowed light. So the saints were warned to give heed unto the prophecy. The "light that shineth in a dark place," and this borrowed light, (prophecy and revelations of days gone by), was all they were to have, until the "day dawn."

Peter, being filled with the Holy Ghost on the day of Pentecost, looked forward to the same time when he said: "Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost; for the promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call."—Acts 2:37-38.

He did not say that the promise was unto them and to their children, and to their children's children, and to continue with them on down through time, until the end. But foreseeing the dark night, during which they would not have the "promise," he says, "you, and to your children;" then, looking away down in the future, beyond the "dark ages," he adds, "and unto those that are AFAR OFF."

DESOLATION FORETOLD.

Paul makes still clearer statements: "Charity never faileth; but whether there be prophecies they shall fail; whether there be tongues, they shall cease; whether there be knowledge, it shall vanish away; for we know in part, and we prophecy in part. But when that which is perfect is come, then that which is in part shall be done away. * * * Now we see through a glass darkly." * * * 1 Cor. 12:8, 12.

In the church in the days of Christ, all believers after being baptized, had hands laid upon them to confirm them, and also to convey the gift of the Holy Ghost unto them; and the very first fruits of the Spirit, in every instance was, they spoke in tongues, (Acts 24:10, 46; 19:6), and then came prophecy; and we find in 1 Cor. 12th and 14th chapters, that wisdom, knowledge, prophecy and tongues were among the gifts of the Spirit, and they were common in the church, and were enjoyed at all their meetings, and we learn in 1 Cor. 14:22, "that tongues are for a sign * * * to them that believe not; but prophecy serveth * * * for them which believe." Tongues were a sign to convince the unbeliever that that was the church which God accepted; and prophecy and the other signs, were to serve the believer, that he might know that they were the children of God. The Savior says: "If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God." John 7:17. Wherefore, if these things were done away, none would know whether their acts were accepted of God or not; hence away goes their knowledge.

PROPHECIES FAIL.

"But whether there be prophecies they shall fail." They did fail. Where are they to-day? Who has uttered a prophecy during the long dark night which has passed? At present I can recall but one, that of Mother Shipton, and it utterly failed in regard to the end of the world, which she said would come in 1881. And how the prophecies recorded in the Bible have failed to give the world light, that they might understand these things! They failed in the church, and she has not enjoyed them for hundreds of years, although the Saints were told to "desire spiritual gifts, but rather that you may prophesy."—1 Cor. 14: 1.

"Whether there be tongues, they shall cease." This was fulfilled before the fifth century of the Christian era had passed: and now, speaking in tongues, is not heard of, and is unknown, in the churches, and has not been enjoyed for centuries. Even to day, the eminent divines strive to convince us, that they are no longer needed. The prophecy was a true one: they did cease.

"Whether there be knowledge, it shall vanish away." There have only been certain times, during which there has been knowledge of God upon the earth; and at these times the effect of that knowledge has been felt in all the land. Whenever there has been a Gospel dispensation, the light of the Truth has illuminated the minds of all mankind, and the arts and sciences have flourished. But when the Gospel has been withdrawn, men have sunk into ignorance.

We are told, that "no man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost." In the days of the Apostles many could say that he was; for they had seen him. (1 Cor. 15th chapter). They had the knowledge. John says: "We know we are of God, and the whole world lieth in wickedness;" (1 John, 5:19); but this knowledge was to fail. It did fail. Where is the knowledge of God to-day? Who knows that he lives? Who has seen him during the last 1500 years? What denominations can truly say, "We know that we are of God," when they deny the very means through which that knowledge comes (Revelations: the signs and gifts)? We find that during the "dark ages," knowledge had vanished; and from then until now, men have been striving to learn what the Gospel of Christ really is; hence, the many changes in the religious world. They are continually changing, striving to find which is right. "Ever learning, and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth." (2 Tim. 3:7).

"These signs shall follow them that believe," says Jesus. They are the seal of our adoption which God gives. If they do not follow, it is because we do not believe. When they ceased, with them knowledge also ceased. Not only in the church did they lose knowledge, but in the whole world. There never was such a time of darkness, superstition, and lack of knowledge, as during the dark ages. Paul said: "we now see through a glass darkly." If that was his condition, with all his spiritual light, revelation, prophecy, and the knowledge he enjoyed, who will not admit, that from then until the present century, all have been stone blind, fulfilling the prophecy of Isaiah, 60:2, "the darkness shall cover the earth, and gross darkness the people."

The arts and sciences were neglected, and errors were held up as truths.

SCIENCE NEGLECTED.

In astronomy we find, that Ptolomy, in the year 130, introduced his theory,—that the earth was the center of our planetary system; and that around it all the planets revolved. The church supported that theory, and taught it as true, and it was accepted for some 1400 years. When Copernicus, Tycho Brahe and Kepler, proved the theory to be false. That the sun was the center, and all the planets, including the earth, revolved around it. All the united wisdom of astronomers since, agrees that this is true; and the whole world was wrong during all that time. When Galileo asserted the truth of the Copernican system, he was denounced as a heretic, and imprisoned for daring to think beyond others. They preferred to believe an error rather than have their ignorance exposed. "Ancient astronomy had produced but one catalogue of the fixed stars, that of Hipparchus, (200 years B. C.). Ulugh Begh has the honor of having formed the second, after an interval of sixteen centuries." (Encyclopedia Britannica, vol. 2, page 656).

"Agriculture flourished in Egypt, India and Greece, and was highly esteemed among the ancient Romans, who took great interest in the cultivation of the soil. Their land and produce of the soil was almost their only wealth. But in the latter ages of the empire, agriculture was neglected, and those engaged in it, regarded with contempt. * * Under the Goths, Vandals, and other barbarian conquerors, agriculture in Europe during the middle ages, seems to have sunk into the lowest condition of neglect and contempt." (Encyclopedia Britannica, vol. 1, page 261).

Concerning anatomy we read as follows: "The death of Galen which took place at Pergamos in the ninetieth year of his age, and the 193d of the Christian era, may be regarded as the downfall of anatomy in ancient times. After this period, we recognize only two names of any celebrity in the history of the science,—those of Soranus and Oribasius, with the more obscure ones of Meletius and Theophilus, the latter the chief of the imperial guard of Heraclius. * * * The decline indicated by these languid efforts soon sunk into a state of total inactivity; and the unsettled state of society during the latter ages of the Roman empire was extremely unfavorable to the successful cultivation of science. The sanguinary conflicts, in which the southern countries of Europe were repeatedly engaged with their northern neighbors, between the second and eighth centuries, tended to stray their minds from scientific pursuits; and the hordes of barbarians, by which the Roman empire was latterly overrun, while they urged to them the necessity of making hostile resistance, and adopting means of self defense, introduced such habits of ignorance and barbarism, that science was almost universally forgotten. While the art of healing was professed only by some few ecclesiastics, or by itinerant practitioners, anatomy was utterly neglected; and no name of anatomical celebrity occurs to diversify the long and uninteresting period commonly distinguished as the 'Dark Ages.'" (Encyclopedia Britannica, vol 1, page 705).

"God chose the Jewish nation to be the repository of his law, that through them, all the nations of the earth should be blessed." Even so, Satan chose the Roman nation, through which to do his evil work, that through them, all the nations might be deceived. Christ sowed the good seed at Jerusalem. "Thus it behoved Christ to suffer and to rise from the dead the third day; and that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem." Luke 24:46, 47. Satan sowed the tares at Rome, and from there the great apostasy spread.

In Revelations 12:1, we see a representation of the church as established by Christ:—"A woman clothed with the sun, (light of Revelation), the moon under her feet, (the Mosaic law), and upon her head a crown of twelve stars," (representing the twelve apostles). In reading further, we see the church persecuted by "a great red dragon, having seven heads, and ten horns, and seven crowns upon his heads." (Pagan Rome—through which Satan began his work—the crowns on the seven heads being the different forms of government through which pagan Rome passed, namely, Kings, Consuls, Decemvirs, Dictators, Triumvirs, Emperors and Popes).

In Rev. 13:1, we see the change from pagan to papal Rome; we see the beast with "seven heads and ten horns, and upon his horns ten crowns." The horns here represent ruling powers, and we see papal Rome divided into ten different kingdoms, the Huns, Ostrogoths, Visigoths, Franks, Vandals, Suevi, Burgundians, Heruli, Saxons and Lombards. (Pagan Rome gave its seat to papal Rome). Under the persecution the woman, (the church), flies into the wilderness.

Who was the "red dragon?" "And the great dragon was cast out, that old serpent called the Devil, and Satan, which deceiveth the whole world. * * * Woe to the inhabitants of the earth and of the sea! for the devil is come down unto you, having great wrath, because he knoweth that he hath but a short time." Rev. 12:9, 12. We also read to what extent he carried his persecutions. "And it was given unto him to make war with the saints, and to overcome them; and power was given him over all kindreds, and tongues, and nations." Rev. 13:7. We are here clearly shown that Satan was to overcome the Saints, and also gain power over all the world. This he did through the Roman, pagan and papal powers, and as foretold by the Savior, "the kingdom of heaven suffereth violence, and the violent take it by force." Matt. 12:12.

Daniel speaks of the doings of the same beast, saying, he shall "wear out the saints of the Most High, and think to change times and laws." Dan. 7:25.

THE CORRUPTED CHURCH.

The woman (church) is also changed. Before, she was "clothed with the sun;" now, she is clothed "in purple and scarlet color, and decked with gold, and precious stones and pearls." She is upon the back of the beast,—held up, and supported by Satan." She is called the mother of harlots; and lest any might doubt who the woman (church) really is, we quote: "The seven heads (of the beast and dragon) are seven mountains on which the woman sitteth. * * * And the woman which thou sawest is that great city, which reigneth over the kings of the earth." Rev. 17:9-18. Every school boy or girl knows that the city of Rome was built on seven hills, and we all know what city "reigned over the kings of the earth." Rome also "took the kingdom by force," and "wore out the Saints," which occurred since the third century, "while men slept." This was the cause of the "falling away," and the revealing of the "man of sin." All this was the work of Satan, But how did he sow the tares? Paul said in his day, "the mystery of iniquity doth already work."—2 Thess. 2:7.

NIGHT, DARK AGES.

Now let us watch the course of the church during the night, the dark ages. The enemies of the church put to death all the Apostles, and continued persecuting the Saints, until the days of Constantine. But we find that the faith of the Saints was kept until the third century, and even then, "miracles were performed, such as healing the sick by the laying on of hands and the prayer of faith," and also laying on of hands for the reception of the Holy Ghost was practiced. But there was at this time a great change brought about, by the mixing of Paganism and Christianity, and we here find the first departure from baptism by immersion. Gahan, a Catholic historian, speaking of Novation, says: "He fell sick, and was baptized in bed by pouring on of water, and not by immersion, which was then the usual method." Gahan's Church History, page 93. Image worship and use of incense was introduced.

Constantine was declared Emperor of Rome, in the year 306. The 28th of October, 313, he is said to have had his vision of the cross, which he saw flaming in the heavens. After this he became a convert to the Christian faith, and placed himself at the head of the church, "usurping the right of convoking councils and presiding in them, and attempting to regulate the affairs of the church. * * At the conclusion of this century, there remained no more than a mere shadow of the ancient government of the church." Mosheim, vol. 1, page 107. Here we find Constantine at the head of the church, and supposed to be the successor of Peter. Let us look at his character, and then see who would accept him as an ambassador for Christ. He caused the death of Sicinius, his brother-in-law, whom he ordered killed. His reign "was disgraced by a series of bloody deeds, that have left an indelible stain on the emperor's memory." He was a "monster of cruelty." "He suffocated his wife Tansta in a bath of boiling water." He beheaded his eldest son Crispus, the same year he presided at the Council of Nice. He murdered his father-in-law, and his nephew Sicinius, and many others. He was a Christian one day, and a heathen the next. "He was at best only half heathen, half Christian, who could seek to combine the worship of Christ, with the worship of Apollo, having the name of the one, and the figure of the other, impressed upon his coins." And with all his claims of conversion, and presiding at the councils, he was not baptized until just before death, (337), and then he went out of the church and was baptized by an Arian Priest. (See Encyclopedia Britannica, vol. 6, page 267). Is it through such a source that the Church of Christ descends?

During this, the fourth century, all the prelates clothed themselves in gorgeous apparel, purple being the chief color. (John saw the corrupted church clothed in purple and scarlet. Rev. 17).

"The chief of the insignia of a cardinal's dignity, is the scarlet hat. * * * The canonical vestments of a cardinal are scarlet, and in the city and in their homes, the hems, and such like of their coats, and also their stockings, are of the same color,—in Italian parlance “purple.” Hence, to “aspire to the purple,” to “receive the purple,” is also equivalent to being a candidate for, or being made a cardinal. Their Eminences also wear a scarlet “beretta” a four cornered cap * * * and a scarlet “berettina,” or skullcap.”—Encyclopedia Britannica, vol. 5, page 87.

How clearly John saw and described them, three hundred years before, and how strange that they should clothe themselves in the very colors he mentions.

“The use of the cross was introduced, performing of pilgrimages, use of pictures, ridiculous ceremonies in saying mass, lighting of wax tapers, celibacy of the clergy, besides many other superstitions equally ridiculous, were sanctioned by the prelates. Indeed, the principal part of their worship consisted of this ludicrous nonsense.”

About the year 305 the famous Antony concocted his scheme, and organized the society of monks.

CORRUPT POPES.

“In the year 606, Boniface III ascended the papal chair, and begged the title of “universal bishop.” Soon after this the Popes claimed they were infallible. But the very class of men who succeeded in reaching and occupying the Papal chair, shows the claim untrue. During the 9th century some of the Popes were among the very worst of wicked men, and about this time, a woman named “Joan,” who had taken refuge in Rome with her lover, was placed upon the Papal throne, “whose sex was betrayed by the pangs of childbirth, during a solemn procession.” * * *

Abandoned women at this time governed Rome; and that throne which pretended to rise above the majesty of kings, was sunk in the dregs of vice.

Theodora and Marozia, installed and deposed at their pleasure, the self styled masters of the Church of Christ, and placed their lovers, sons, and grand-sons, in St. Peter's chair.

In 1033, Benedict IX, a youth brought up in debauchery, was placed on the pontifical throne. This boy of twelve years, continued, when Pope, the same horrible and degrading vices.

Another party chose Sylvester III in his stead; and Benedict, whose conscience was loaded with adulteries, and whose hands were stained with murder, at last sold the Papacy to a Roman ecclesiastic,” (D'Aubigne's History of the Reformation, vol. 1, page 45, 46)

“John Matian, arch presbyter of Rome, who took the name of Gregory XI. Soon after this the Catholic Church had two Popes at the same time. Gregory I, and Sylvester III.”—Mosheim's Church History, vol. 1, page 264.

We also read on page 86, D'Aubigne's History, concerning Rodrigo Borgia, who lived in crime, while he was a cardinal and an archbishop, who at the death of Innocent VIII, obtained the Pontifical chair, by bribing each cardinal at a stipulated price, and became Pope under the name of Alexander the VI. During all the time he occupied the chair he indulged in sin and crime of all kinds.

If the church was not ruled by Satan previous to this time, it surely was in these days. In 1484, John Sallier, doctor of the Sarbonne, said: “Since the time of Sylvester, the Romish Church is no longer the Church of Christ; but a State Church—a money getting church.”—D'Aubigne, page 103.

When we remember the scandalous Tariff of Indulgences, into which the church entered, we shudder at the thought of this being called the Church of Christ. “Incest, if not detected, was to cost five groats; and six if it was known. There was a stated price for murder, infanticide, adultery, perjury, burglary, etc. Oh! disgrace of Rome.” (Ibid, page 58.) “Dark was the night, how dark!” In the 12th century, the horrible Court of Inquisition was instituted. We have now outlined the course of the church during the dark ages.

Isaiah says: “The earth is defiled under the inhabitants thereof, because they have transgressed the laws, changed the ordinance, broken the everlasting covenant.” All this was done during the “dark ages.” They transgressed concerning baptism and the officers of the church. They changed the ordinances.

CHURCH CHANGED.

The officers in Christ's church were, Apostles, Prophets, Pastors, Teachers and Deacons. These were done away, and in their stead were placed, Popes, Cardinals, Archbishops, Bishops, Vicar Generals, Priests, Deacons, Sub Deacons, etc.

The original name of the church was the Church of Jesus Christ—“There is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved,” (Acts 4:12). The name was changed, and that of “Roman Catholic Church” was substituted. The doctrines which Christ placed in the church, were no longer accepted,—and baptism by immersion, without which he said no man could enter the kingdom of God, was taught as no longer needed. Who can not see the change, and entire departure? In the great darkness, they apostatized from the church and from God, and we no longer find the church of God, but the church of Satan. He had “sowed the tares” and the world nourished them. Who would accept a church with such a record, for the church of Christ? Remember the horrible Courts of Inquisition, and the Holy Wars, which history tells us caused the death of over one hundred million souls. Is that the church of the meek and lowly Savior? During the dark ages, any one who dared speak or think, contrary to the Catholic Church, was put to death in the most horrible way.

John saw the wicked and apostate church, drunken with the blood of the saints, and with the blood of martyrs of Jesus.” Rev. 17:6 Who drank the blood of the saints and martyrs? Who but the church of Rome? Has it not been the Roman power that made the martyrs, all the way through, even crucifying our Lord and Savior?

Please notice the following prediction: “Now the spirit speaketh expressly that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils; speaking lies in hypocrisy, having their conscience seared with a hot iron; forbidding to marry and commanding to abstain from meats.” 1 Tim. 4:1-3.

Here we find that Paul had a revelation, in which the Spirit spoke expressly concerning some departing from the faith in the latter times, and giving heed to “doctrines of devils.” Speaking expressly concerning this, shows that it was of so much importance that the Spirit spoke to him concerning it, that he might record it, so others might beware. Those who departed, and gave heed to these “doctrines of devils,” were to “forbid to marry,” and “command to abstain from meats,” and the very fact of this “forbidding” and “commanding,” was the evidence that they had departed from the faith. What can be clearer?

In the tenth century, Pope Gregory VII. planned and enforced the law of celibacy, which prevailed for some six hundred years. The clergy were forbidden to marry. Concerning abstaining from meats, let me ask, where does the season of Lent come from, and how does it happen that all the Catholics eat fish on Friday? It is because the Catholic Church is commanding to abstain from meats during those times, and is holding out the sign, that they have departed from the faith.

But what had become of the Church of Christ? Where had it gone, if this was not it? She had “fled into the wilderness,” (Rev. 15:6), and was to remain there twelve hundred and sixty years, during all the night, the dark ages, and during that time, concerning which we have quoted so many prophecies, which have all been fulfilled, not a single soul could speak with authority from heaven. The “word of God” was not to be found, only as borrowed light,—borrowed from times past, recorded in the Bible. Both of the holy priesthoods were taken away; the lineage of Aaron was lost; all the signs had ceased; the gifts and miracles were no longer enjoyed; the Church of Jesus Christ was not upon the earth; none of the sacred offices, which Christ placed in his church could be found.

Revelation, it was declared, was “no longer needed.” There was no spiritual light any where,—all was darkness, ignorance, superstition, and folly; and who will not admit that this was midnight darkness,—the great time of “famine.”

But there was to come a brighter time. The “day star” was to arise. Another day was to dawn, during which the “Son of Righteousness” was to shine, and light was once more to spread over all the earth.

LIGHT BEGINS TO DAWN.

The light began to break in the sixteenth century, when the reformation commenced under the preaching of Martin Luther, Melancthon, Zuinglius and John Calvin; and the little ray of light which they saw, began to grow brighter and brighter, and we see the spirit of invention begins to manifest itself,—improvement begins wherever this little light penetrates. Spiritual affairs, and men's conditions grow better, and continue to improve. Each of the reformers in his turn, does a good work in trying to “reform the Catholic Church,” but that was all they did; and with all their efforts, in starting new sects and new churches, each with his improvements, none established the Church of Jesus Christ. And as the corrupted church was called the “Mother of Harlots,” (Rev. 17:5), of course all her daughters are corrupt also. But as the light was very dim, men did the best they could to help themselves. They continued to throw off the yoke under which they were held down, and by degrees gained footing where they might think and act for themselves, in defiance of the priestcraft under which they had been held so long, until finally, that position was reached, as we find in the Constitution of the United States, which grants unto all the right to worship God as they see fit.

THE DAY STAR.

This was at the break of day, but the day star, (Morning Star), shines brightly long after day-break, and its light is dimmed only by the rising sun. Even so, the day star arose in the nineteenth century. In the town of Sharon, Windsor county, Vermont, on the 23d of December, 1805, Joseph Smith was born. In the year 1823 he declared that a Holy Angel had appeared unto him, whose name was Moroni, and instructed him concerning the work which God had for him to do, telling him, that if he was faithful, he should be the means in the hands of God of bringing forth the everlasting gospel. In the year 1829 John the Baptist appeared unto him and Oliver Cowdery, and ordained them to the Aaronic Priesthood, which gave them the right and authority to preach the gospel, and to baptize for the remission of sins, which authority, had been taken away from the earth hundreds of years before.

An angel had appeared unto him, fulfilling the words of John,—“And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying with a loud voice, fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come.”—Rev. 14: 6. Now, if the everlasting gospel was on the earth, where would be the necessity of an angel coming to bring it? He was bringing it to “preach to them that dwell on the earth,” to every nation, kindred, tongue, and people, which includes every individual. Hence, there was no one on the earth, among any class of people, who had the gospel. That all were without it, until the angel came, is certain; from the fact that the angel was to bring it, and that the angel had not come, previous to 1830, is evident, as no one had declared his appearing, and angelic administration was not believed in.

Soon after this, Peter, James and John appeared unto Joseph, and ordained him to the Melchisedec Priesthood, which holds the authority to lay on hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost. This placed him in a position to act in any of the offices of the Church. After this, appeared unto him Adam, Moses, Elias, Gabriel, Raphael, and even God the Father, and his Son Jesus Christ, from all of whom he received instructions concerning the kingdom of heaven.

The wisdom and knowledge which Joseph received from these holy ones placed him far beyond the wisdom of all the world combined, in things pertaining to God and his kingdom. Joseph Smith, as insignificant as he appears to the world, was the day star, that dispelled the darkness and gloom which had hung over the world for ages, and that heralded the rising of the glorious Son of Righteousness.

DAY LIGHT RESTORED.

In 1830, by command of God, he organized the Church of Jesus Christ, with Twelve Apostles, called by revelation, the Quorum of High Priests, Bishopric, Quorum of Seventies, Elders, Priests, Teachers and Deacons. The exact pattern of the church as organized by Christ in his day. Joseph stated that God was very particular in his instruction for him to organize the Church on the sixth day of April, 1830, the Lord naming the very day. On this day the Church came forth out of the wilderness. The Church was now in perfect order, the gospel was preached, the believer was baptized; through the laying on of hands the Holy Ghost was given; the signs followed the believer; the sick were healed, devils were cast out; many spoke in unknown tongues, and others interpreted the tongue; many prophesied in the name of the Lord, and there was a general outpouring of the Spirit, as thousands can testify.

Through Joseph Smith, the day was fully ushered in. Not alone was the Spiritual light improved, but all the world felt the effect,—the light spread every where.

The arts and sciences, which had so long been neglected, began to flourish. Wonderful inventions were made. Wisdom and knowledge began to increase, and such has been the advancement in the present century, that it has been the most wonderful age this earth has ever known.

We are now living in the day, and all who will see may see. The kingdom is receiving its subjects, and we now look forward for the coming of the King of Kings. And we can say with Peter of old, “Now is the accepted time; now is the day of salvation.” And by authority we can say, as did our Master, “He that believeth and is baptized, shall be saved, and these signs shall follow them that believe.” And as Paul: “We are ambassadors for Christ, as though God did beseech you by us; we pray you in Christ’s stead, be ye reconciled to God.” We are now in the same condition as Paul. “We now see in part, and we know in part, but when that which is perfect is come, that which is in part shall be done away.” We are in exactly the same position he was in, and it is this “in part,” which we have that is to be done away, by “that which is perfect” coming.

We call upon all to come, for here you will find rest for your souls. Do not “reject so great salvation” for all are responsible, now that the great light shineth. Come and become sons and daughters of God. “For the promise is unto you.”

That we may continue the children of the light is the hope and prayer of your well-wisher, GEO S. LINCOLN.

A New Commandment.

IN the seventeenth century the minister of a certain parish in Scotland was the famous Samuel Rutherford, the religious oracle of the Covenanters and their adherents. It is among the traditions that on a Saturday evening, at one of the family gatherings, when Rutherford was catechising his children and servants, a stranger knocked at the door and begged shelter for the night. The minister kindly received him, and asked him to take his place with the family and assist at their religious exercises.

It so happened that the question in the catechism which came to the stranger was that which asks: “How many commandments are there?” He answered, “Eleven.” “Eleven!” exclaimed Rutherford. “I am surprised that a man of your age and appearance should not know better; what do you mean?” And he answered: “A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another; as I have loved you, that ye also love one another.” Rutherford was much impressed by the answer, and they retired to rest. The next morning, as he threaded his way to church through the thicket, he heard among the trees the voice of the stranger at his devotions. The elevation of the sentiments convinced him that it was no common man, and, on accosting him, the traveler confessed that he was no other than the great divine, Archbishop Usher, the Primate of the Church of Ireland, who well fulfilled that new commandment which he bore to others. He it was who had come in disguise to see Rutherford in the privacy of his own home. Side by side they pursued their way to the little church, and from the rustic pulpit the Archbishop preached to the people from the words which had so startled his host the evening before: “A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another.”

BRO. LEVI CHENEY, of Kent, Illinois, sends us a Freeport, Illinois, Bulletin, containing the following notice of a New Bible, an addition to the biblical literature of the day.

A NEW BIBLE.

THE HISTORY OF THINGS IN GENERAL FOR 24,000 YEARS.

A new “bible,” a book containing over nine hundred pages and claiming to be a direct revelation from heaven, is really something partaking of the character of a novelty. Such a book has appeared within the past week. Its name is peculiar, and all that we know of the meaning of the word we gather from the book itself. “Because it relates to earth, sky and spirit it is called Oahspe.” As to the object of the book, we gather that it is not mercifully intended to supplant the former bibles, nor vedas nor other sacred books. Oahspe, we are told, is not a revision or compilation of the sacred books of the past, but a new bible, comprising the causes of the other bibles, with revelations of the heavens also. Other bibles, it avers, have been for a tribe or race of people only. The one is for all races and all peoples on the earth, and sets out to show how the former sacred books were parts of one stupendous plan for bestowing light upon mortals. It is further claimed that through Oahspe we learn why the Chinese became confucian, the Hindoos brahmins and buddhists, and why the emigrating people became Jews and christians. The new revelation which had become a necessity because of the divided condition of mankind, provides for the fellowship of all people. It is a characteristic of “Oahspe” that it reveals the affairs of the angels in heaven—what they do, how they live and travel, their relations and the parts they play in the affairs of mortals.

Laying aside the claims of this book, “Oahspe,” to be regarded as of divine authority, a brief account of the book and its author may be given, and the reader can choose his own conclusions. “Oahspe” is a large bible-like volume in style and appearance, and consists of over nine hundred pages. There are some thirty books, with such titles as the following:—"Book of Sethantes," "Book of Aph," "Book of Sue," "Book of Thor," "Book of Osiris," "Book of Fragyapalri," "Book of Lika," and such like. There is one book called the "Book of Sixteen Cycles," which deals with the history of forty-eight thousand years. There is another book devoted to the wars against Jehovah—a book the details of which make it very plain to see that the sons of the great Lord of the universe were but sorry specimens of piety and loyalty. The entire work claims to cover a history of twenty-four thousand years.

The history of progress or development of the United States, the constitution, the war, Abraham Lincoln and emancipation is somewhat amusing. In the book of "Es Daughter of Jehovah," we thus read:—"Jehovah said to this ambassador, 'Take thine own inspiring hat and go down to the earth, to Washington, to Lincoln, the president, and hold this matter up to him, that he may understand me,' &c. And the angels of Jehovah went to Lincoln in a vision, like a dream, and they said unto him, 'Lincoln! Lincoln!' And he answered and said:—"Who art thou?" And the angels said:—"Such as come in Jehovah's name for freedom's sake. Behold millions of his angels look down from heaven and would come to thy armies if thou wouldst but proclaim freedom to the slaves! Lincoln awoke and was troubled." The vision is repeated; a seeress, Nettie Maywood, is introduced; and ultimately "Lincoln's eyes were opened, and he went straight away and proclaimed freedom to the whole four million slaves." The Book of Praise recalls the style and phraseology of the Psalms of David. But the sweet singer of Israel soared on stronger pinions than he of the New Bible.

These are the words of Bon: Thou, O Jehovah. Who can fashion thee with words, or show thy immensity? Where stood thy feet in the time of Creation or rested thy hand?

Thou Present and Afar! Thou Who art older than time, O Jehovah! Thou Dealer in worlds; where can I write the wonders of thy name?

Oh, that I had a standing place to see thee! That I could come to an understanding with my Creator! To find wisdom for my song; a dialogue in the words of the Almighty!

The language all through is highly Scriptural in tone, with sad lapses now and then into vernacular idioms, Walt Whitmanlike slap dash and pathetic commonplace.

A faithful examination of the work as a whole shows that it is opposed to all creeds and systems of religion, but that it is mainly an elaborate argument in favor of vegetarianism, and every other ism by means of which animalism may be eliminated from human nature.

The author of this peculiar book is Dr. Newbrough, a dentist, of this city. It was natural that an interviewer should seek out the author of so remarkable a production. Dr. Newbrough is a tall, well built man, of over six feet. His head, his face particularly, reminded us much of General Hooker. His manner is calm, placid, gentle. His hand is cold—a characteristic to which he himself calls attention, and which he believes to be related to its peculiar power of independent action. He is about fifty-five years of age, and is a native of Ashland, Ohio.

"The book," said the Doctor, "was begun and finished inside of two years—two years less two weeks. It was composed and put on paper in half hour spells every morning, immediately or soon after sunrise, with the use of a typewriter." It is claimed by the doctor that he is personally irresponsible for the book; that he wrote as he was commanded and what he was commanded. He was simply the instrument, and his hands, he says, seemed to act of their own accord, and as if independent of any mental volition on his part. At the close of the half hour the communication ceased, and morning after morning he put away the sheets without examination until the end of the above mentioned period. At the end of two years, all but two weeks, the communication ceased altogether, and he was commanded to collect the sheets and make a book and give it to the world. He did not know, he said, what he had written till he began to prepare the work for the press.

He was astonished at his own work. He finds himself in a very peculiar position of coming into contact with names and facts and statements and opinions for the first time in the pages of his own book. People call to ask him questions about the mysterious cycles, vortices, gods and goddesses; and he can give them no information. He can only refer them to the book itself. Learned men call to compliment him on his knowledge of Sanscrit and on his profound acquaintance with, as well as the new light he has thrown on, cosmogony, astrology; but he knows as little of Sanscrit as he knows of Latin and Greek, which is nothing at all; and he claims to have never made a study of cosmogony or astrology—

We call attention to the following from the San Francisco Chronicle. It should be remembered that some little time ago, we reproduced a sermon by this Chunder Sen, as published in the Chicago Times.

CHUNDER SEN.

THE STORY OF AN INTERESTING REFORMATION IN INDIA AS RELATED BY THE REV. JOSEPH COOK.

There is at present in India a convert from Buddhism to Theism, who is doing a work that will as certainly leave its mark on the religious history of Hindostan as Ridley did on that of England. The name of this progressive Hindoo is Chunder Sen, and it is from a conversation had with the Rev. Joseph Cook, of Boston, who has just reached San Francisco after a lecturing tour around the world, that the information contained in the present article has been obtained.

As a few lines of fit preface, it should be mentioned that the eminent lecturer and writer left the Massachusetts home of "culchaw" in the Spring of 1880, for a season of alternate rest and labor, in the Western States, and quitted America for England on the 7th of September. Nine months were spent lecturing in the United Kingdom, and then in June, 1881, Mr. Cook made a round of the great German universities, and in company with the various professors, discussing and arguing on those semi-mystical, semi-religious problems to which his soul inclines. From Germany he passed to Italy, thence to Greece, where he met Dr. Schliemann and witnessed the pathetic endeavors of a country to make a collection of art treasures dug out of the ground, after all the world had plundered her of that which lay above it. After Greece, Egypt, and the Holy Land were visited, and then, under the burning sun of a Christmas Day, he sailed down the Red Sea, and reached Bombay on the 5th of January, 1881. The stay in India and Ceylon was for eighty-four days, during which Mr. Cook delivered forty-two lectures, and then, still keeping to the extreme Orient, Penang, Foochow, Singapore, Hongkong, Canton, and Yokohama were called at, and then sailing South Australia was reached. In those colonies, fifty-two discourses were addressed to as many audiences, the total number of lectures delivered during the two years being two hundred and fifty.

It was in Bengal that Mr. Cook met Chunder Sen, and of his interesting acquaintance's work, appearance, and faith, it will be best to allow the lecturer to speak himself.

"For some years," said Mr. Cook, "I have made it a practice to deliver what may be called question-box lectures. That is, a box is provided in which questions upon any subject may be deposited, the answers to which I give from the platform. I was surprised to find in Bengal that the questions were of a peculiarly searching nature, and dealt largely with speculative subjects, and the more advanced process of thought. There was a tone of earnestness about many of these mute inquiries, and this and the evident desire of the propounders to be lifted out of certain difficulties of belief, interested me much. In Calcutta I was led in turn to inquire into the intellectual and religious development of my audiences, and soon found that there existed a very remarkable society, or sect, or school, of what may be called Free Brahmins. Their freedom was not only of a religious order, but extended also to social matters, for they were not only opposed to idolatry, but, stranger still, were opposed to caste.

"At their head was one Chunder Sen, a man of most unusual attainments and dispositions. The most distinguished orator of Calcutta, speaking as fluently in English as Bengalese, of excellent manners, traveled, having visited London and been introduced to the Queen, educated in the best schools, forty-five years of age, handsome in feature, standing six feet high, a man of means, and the editor of the New Dispensation, Chunder Sen is a man who would make his mark anywhere, and who would not pass unnoticed in the capitals of this country or Europe. The title of his paper is that which has been assumed by his followers. They are the believers in a new dispensation of which Sen is the revealer. If he were not so honest a man as he is, this belief in special revelation—in which he himself fully shares—would be dangerous. but in my many talks with him on the subject, I found that revelation with him meant no arrogant claim of inspired superiority, but rather that he held it to be his duty to teach those better lessons and that happier creed which he felt to be born of the truth.

"His religion is not so strong positively as it is negatively forcible. For instance, he calls himself a 'Uni-Trinitarian,' and while he implicitly believes in Christ in his humanity, his conception of Christ in his divinity is vague. He, in fact, confounds personality with attributes. He has energetically and definitely given up Buddha and renounced the Veda. He is devotedly theistic, but is in that state of mental bewilderment in which all great thinkers find themselves, who cut away from recognized tenets and strike out for something new and higher. For such a thinker, in such a condition he spends too much of his time in prayer and too little in study. He appeals to Providence, in whose interposition he puts implicit trust, but is lost in the mysteries of his novel faith. He is as devout as Martineau, and more so than Theodore Parker. His adherents are all of the more advanced class of Brahmins, and in the work of peculiar reformation he has the active assistance of his brother, who is a celebrated Professor, and one of the most prominent Brahmins, named Moozumdar. A number of incipient apostles or students live with him in his house, and there spend hours each day in prayer, the singing of hymns, and introspective study. His disciples number about seven hundred in Calcutta, who every Sunday throng the church which he has erected to the service of Theism, while there are, I should think, quite one hundred branches claiming affiliation with the head church, and scattered throughout Northeastern India.

"Of course he is bitterly opposed by the conservative Brahmins for his liberal ideas, but it is to the credit of the missionaries that they look encouragingly upon the movement which he has originated, and hopefully toward the outcome. If you were to ask me for a terse opinion of this religion I should say it is that of a Quaker theist in a Hindoo dress. He is a devout man, earnestly studying Christianity, but is held back by a desire to please his fellow-countrymen. He is making a hopeful progress toward the true religion, but suffers from a confusion of thought. He has already exercised a most important influence on his educated co-religionists, and will continue to increase in power and importance. He is not arrayed against propagandism; but at the same time he is the powerful instrument in a process of religious evolution in Hindostan which will most probably end in the institution of an independent and non-sectarian Indian Church. This may take half a century to accomplish; but even if Chunder Sen is not apotheosized, the impress he has made upon his surroundings will not end with his labors, and he is to be looked upon as the most prominent reformer that India has seen for centuries. Above all he is to be admired, if not revered, for the bold stand he has taken against agnosticism, materialism, Buddhism, drunkenness, caste, and early marriages—evils against which no one has before had the courage to assume so squarely an antagonistic attitude."

If the Cap Fit Wear It.

Dear Herald:—The aphorism is no doubt often viewed correctly. As proof, we frequently hear the following, Do you refer to me in what you have said, or written? Again, what do you mean by imputing such and such things to me? Such questions are invariably followed with the answer, "If the cap fit wear it." And my experience has taught me that those who put that, or similar questions, are delinquent, but frequently try to hide some truth revealed against them by assuming a blustering mien. Certain it is, that most thoughtful persons, when they hear that question put, concede guilt to the questioner, reasoning the matter thus, such thoughts would not arise in the mind without a consciousness of guilt. It is also positive that an elevated mind, guiltless of wrong doing, would not conceive such thoughts. And were such accused to their face, their dignified temperament would lead them to treat the Calumniator with contempt. But if on the other hand it was truth that was told, then the cap would fit them, and their noble nature would at once seek to repair the wrong done. A short time ago a man was charged before a magistrate with brutally knocking a man down, when the prisoner was asked why he did so? his excuse was, "Why ye'r worship, he told ther truth on mes." The justice then said: "I presume you to mean that had the plaintiff told some untruth about you, you would not have illused him, is that so?" "Not I yer honor" said the defendant. The justice then said, "I must say your dastardly act is very much aggravated by your confession; I shall therefore send you to jail, and hard labor, for three months. Served him right, said I. It is evident the cap fit that striker, and he did wear it. Moral. Had he been honest in principle, he would have repaired that wrong done, which brought forth the truth concerning him. By so doing, he would have saved himself imprisonment, and refrained from maltreating an innocent person. The following will also illustrate our meaning; and although the one actor was a king, he was no more spared by the justice of God than if he had been a mere plebeian; showing the non-respect of God for persons. The case will be found in 2d Sam. 12th chapter. It is quite evident, to me, that the cap fit David, and pressed on him sorely; still he endeavored to assume innocence, or in other words made an effort to hoodwink the prophet, by saying, "He shall surely die." But when the prophet knew his subterfuge, by the tuition of God's Spirit, the folly of his attempt was apparent. And therefore when Nathan said to him, "Thou art the man," he repented the evil done, but the evil was past reparation. We may infer from the after history of David he did so far as he could in that direction; for he did not try to injure the character of the man he had already so grossly injured, which thing he might certainly have done as king, and thus in the eyes of Sycophants. (there are always plenty of those surrounding men in power), have been exonerated from blame. And it was surely the better for him that he did not do so.

Human nature is on par in all countries and conditions in life, and the source of evil is continually working out some fell design, in order to do injury; because he is ever fighting against right. And it mattereth not what station in life men move in, noble or other wise, defamers are sure to arise in their paths, and it is often amusing to notice the foolish methods used by such defamers to try and carry their designs into execution. All persons whose tastes lead them to make acquaintance with notable men have read of David Garrick. He was contemporaneous with Johnson, and those other celebrities who reigned supreme in the literary world in the last century.

I mention David Garrick, dear Herald, because the passage between him and Quin is worth relating I think, and also because it will show that men of his stamp of mind were not without detractors. Quin, evidently through jealousy, wrote the following invective on the popularity of Garrick: "Though the secretary is followed for a time, they, the public, will soon be all coming back to church again." David replied:

"Thou great infallible forbare to roar;
Thy bulls and errors are revered no more;
When doctrines meet with general reprobation,
It is not heresy but reformation."

You see, that, although the "cap fit" David, yet he replied in a manly way, and it is said making his "cap fit" Quin, and that he, with the discernment of a wise man, saw he had better wear it without kicking. The consequence was, those two became friends.

Jealousy is always suspicious. The jealous mind is on the continual stretch to lay hold on any pretence—however small, or foolish,—on which to build an accusation, when it is found; judgment is at once set, and we hear, Ha, you may take my word he, or she, means so and so. And it is some times the case, that confidence is broken, by finding that those who ought to know better are guilty of such mean acts.

A very amusing circumstance occurred a short time since. A person who sprang up in social position, a little higher than those who were formerly compeers, through a piece of good fortune, hired a servant; but being unused to such a condition did not know how to properly treat one; and the result was, the servant became tired of such usage, therefore gave notice to quit. When about to depart, the following colloquy took place.

First person. "Mind you speak the truth of me after you are away." What need for such a wish if all was straightforward? I conceive none.

Second person. "Are you not aware that I profess to be desirous of following Jesus?"

F. P. "Yes, I so understand."

S. P. "Then I may not tell untruths, as they would bring me under the displeasure of God."

F. P. "Certainly."

S. P. "Then I shall take a neutral course of actions. Should any person ask me anything concerning you, and tell them that if they wish to find out how to understand you they must come and remain with you some time, then they will be sure to gain all they require to know. But if I were to tell the naked truth of you, those I told it to might not afterwards hold you in quite so high esteem."

F. P. was so indignant at the reply, coming as it did so very unexpected, that (holding up hands in horror) F. P. was heard to say: "Well, did you ever hear such impudence, and to me, so much above S. P. in station, well, well, well, what next," and the abuse went on still further, ending in a real—some cruel persons said a pretended—fit of crying.

Now had F. P. but remembered, how few are the years ago since a similar position held by S. P. was held by F. P., my humble opinion is S. P. would have been differently treated by F. P. and all the the amusing story related would not have been heard of, and the F. P. would not have been made to wear a "cap because it fit."

There are some who hold the belief that the scene depicted by Moses as having taken place in Eden, is to be taken as an allegory. Be it so, or a reality, it is quite evident, to observant minds, that there is a reproduction of that drama, frequently in every day life. There are serpents in plenty at work, there are also Eves in numbers, ever ready to allow their vanity to be played upon by those serpents; and there are Adams, too, upon whom those Eves can, and do, play a similar part to that performed by original Eve. The consequence is the trio cause much mischief in that circle they move in. It appears plain that original Eve had not any intention to degrade her lord, as the sequel to the story proves she did do; and the cause of her so doing is obvious, she did wrong, by allowing her vanity to get the better of her judgment, and then, foolish like, persuaded her lord to follow her improper course. So with many Eves of to-day, their vanity get the better of their judgment, and thereby they lead their lords to do things their vain gloriousness imagines will elevate them; instead of that, they but do as their mother did, drag down their lords, in causing those whose favors they seek to see through their chicanery, and like Mother Eve, they lower themselves in the estimation of many good people through their own folly. It is a pity it should be so, but so it is; more is the pity. Better would it be, could professors be brought to act on the square. Foolish plots, and base plots would then cease, men's minds would be at ease. Evil juggling lose its power, which is an ever wished for hour.

God grant it may speedily come. Amen.

JOSEPH SMITH, EDITOR.

Lamoni, Iowa, December 15, 1882.

EVERY man who deserves the name, should have in his heart some standard of measurement by which to examine and determine the relative and positive merits of every question coming before him for consideration, that lies within the reach of his abilities, natural or acquired. No one who has failed to set this standard at an early period of life, has ever succeeded. Few who may have deferred setting such a standard, until some common, or uncommon, occurrence of every day life has changed the ordinary current of human affairs, has forced them to draw lines between right and wrong, far from those originally set, have successfully reset the lost standard; but have ever after carried themselves in accordance with the loose lines more lately set. One result of this has been that when similar things to those which disturbed the standard first set occur, the lines are again readjusted still farther away, until in time these persons become "creatures of circumstances." While it may not be wise to say that men should control circumstances, it is not unwise to hold that there are circumstances which may possibly environ a man that should not by any means control him; for if they do, the person is injured in every conceivable way.

The standards of morality which have governed the world, since the Mosaic code was given, have been more or less fashioned from the "eye for an eye, tooth for a tooth" rendition, so far as offence and retaliation, or reward for deeds of evil have been concerned, where any rule has obtained; but some sins have become so prevalent, that now there is in some places no condemnation of them, so far as the enforcement of law is concerned; while in others the penalty is trivial under law and in public opinion, and in others still the penalty is more or less severe, upon conviction, and the loss of social favor entire. This gives rise to gradations in standards incompatible with social good.

He who labors forward to an insufficient standard, or one much too low, can not recover the ground lost, if he be so unfortunate as not to discover his error until he reaches the full fruition of his effort. And he who measures the affairs of others and of himself by such a standard, must find when too late, that he has missed much that would have helped to fill his life with peace and gladness.

A people that as a body, or who in their principles of association have permitted a low standard of moral conduct to be set up, or to become incorporated in their profession of faith and belief, must, soon or late, meet with disappointment in their progress, if not with an absolute prevention to their success. Hence, it is necessary that the men of the Church, everywhere, set up for themselves standards for judgment, not for purposes of condemnation to be passed upon others who may fall short when tried by them; but for emulation in themselves, and of self culture. For this reason, brethren, set the standard well up, because if you set it low you will not be apt to reach above it; but if you set it high and perchance fall a little below, you may still be far above him who unfortunately sets his standard low.

The young men of the Church who are forming their habits and characters, ought by all means to be aided and encouraged to set up in their minds a standard of excellence and honor from which they should in no case permit themselves to be either driven or coaxed, but which should be rigidly adhered to by them, in public and in private. No permanent or great benefit can come to them from a single act beneath their standard, while such an act may lead to great and irreparable injury to themselves and the cause they should honor and respect, as well as love.

THE Inter Ocean of Chicago thus notices Bro. Gurley's tarry in the city:

LATTER DAY SAINTS.

ELDER GURLEY—HIS WASHINGTON MISSION.

At the morning service of the Latter Day Saints in the hall, No. 213, West Madison street, yesterday, Elder Z. H. Gurley preached on "Christ, the Life and Light of Men," holding that all liberty was based on law, and that the public clamor for liberty must give place to a proper application of law physically, practically, and religiously. Christ's presentation of divine virtue would secure the greatest liberty to the race, hence the necessity of accepting Him. Christians' failure to practice Christ rendered nothing null, but only an exhibition of human weakness. Infidelity produced barrenness in the soul, while true love of God and neighbor, as exemplified in Christ gave "life and light." The Elder also urged the necessity of living in harmony with the institutions of our government as being the best on earth, and held that no one was a good citizen who lived otherwise, no matter how much Christ was professed.

Elder Gurley said that he was on his way to Washington, in company with Elder E. L. Kelley, to urge again further recognition of the Reorganized Church of the Latter Day Saints, as the legal and true successor of the primitive church, holding, as they did, that polygamy and its concomitants should be treated as an excrescence, a loathsome incumbrance upon the faith, but no part of Mormonism proper whatever.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Has a Teacher or Deacon the right to bear the emblems and pass them to the partakers at Sacrament services?

Yes, if necessary in assisting the Priest, as it is stated that they shall assist the Priest in his duties.

A person came into the Church ten years ago; for several years he heard nothing about tithing, (did not know there was such a thing). After a while (several years) he heard there was such a thing, but it was so obscurely defined that he did not comprehend it; by and by a good Elder comes from the east, and defined it as paying one tenth of your surplus annually; at that time he (the person of the first part) had one hundred and sixty-seven dollars, over and above his living, so he paid seventeen dollars, tithing, and has paid in that way ever since, (one tenth of surplus). Now it appears from later knowledge on tithing that he ought to have paid the whole of the one hundred and sixty-seven dollars, as a consecration of all the surplus for a commencement of tithing. This year he finds he has but one hundred dollars on hand, altogether, after paying tithing, is it his duty to pay in the one hundred dollars, too? And if it is his duty, will he still owe the Lord fifty dollars?

Without presuming to answer the question categorically, we reply, that as the person referred to made a direct and honest effort to comply with the law, as he understood it at the time he essayed to obey it, it is enough as a beginning; and if he now continues to pay the one tenth of his increase he will comply with the law of "tithing." If, however, he desires to adopt the consecration part of the law, he may pay so much of his yearly increase as he may choose after he has paid the one tenth. Should he do this and pay the one hundred dollars referred to, as now on hand, he will not owe anything. Nor will he have kept the "law of tithing," but the law of "consecration." One of the evident mistakes which has been made in regard to "tithing," and one that has given rise to so much controversy and abuse of the law, both in teaching and its execution, has been the confounding of the "consecration" clause to mean the all, or tenth of all, &c. The surplus could never mean more of any man's goods, chattels, or moneys than he could well spare, under a generous provision of the laws of demand and supply; and how the well meaning and innocent reading of so plain a law, could have been made to take on so grievous and hard a form as it was has always been a mystery to us.

A man obeys the gospel in England under the Utah regime, say fifteen years ago,—he pays tithing into that organization for several years, till he gets his eyes opened, then leaves them and comes to California and joins the Reorganization,—now, if he has made a consecration as a commencement in tithing (as I understand that that is a correct principle) in the Brigham Church, has he got to make a consecration of all his surplus as a commencement in the Reorganization, also?

The answer to the first question virtually answers this; for as before, the attempt to begin to comply with the law was made in good faith, and should be so considered. But this should not be construed to the excusing such person from obligation to the law, in some of its forms; nor be made a criterion by which obedience to other requirements may be evaded. The person may still consecrate to his credit, as much as he chooses, and may put himself under the tithing, or tenth clause if he wishes.

But, in these answers we may be trespassing upon prerogatives of the Bishop, to whom we refer these questions, with the request that he give to the readers an answer for them.

What of the "tailed star" seen in the east?

It is one of the signs in the heavens, and has been visible long enough to cease to be a wonder. It may, or may not have some connection with the electrical condition of the atmosphere just now prevailing over our land; but if it does, it is controlled by the power of the highest and obeys the law of its creation, and none need to fear whatever it may portend, who have obeyed the law of their new creation in Christ.

Rev. 10:4-7?

We understand this to be a declaration as to the end of Time, an act that is to finish the work of the earth in its present form, and to immediately precede the reign of Christ as King of Kings. All the mystery there is now about the work of God concerning the redemption of earth and the salvation of man, will then be understood, for it will be finished in earth.

Rev. 11:3-4?

Joseph Smith, the Martyr, stated in a Key to Theology published many years ago, that these two were two prophets that were to arise in Jerusalem being called and sent of God, who were to do a great work for the Jews as a nation, as stated.

Matt. 28:20?

This verse certainly needs no special comment. It is a plain commandment of the risen Lord to his disciples as to the character of their teaching while preaching; coupled with a promise of his unfailling aid and protection, with a specification how they should be given, or the manner in which they would be manifest. Taken in connection with the 16th of Mark, this passage is a clear refutation of the claim made by the opponents to the latter day work that the age of the signs following the believers is past. Christ made sure of the integrity of his apostles by trying them, and after the trial, he gave them his assurance of his perpetual presence," even unto the end of the world." The end of the world not yet having come, we are prepared to assert that in the gospel economy the very things which, so-called orthodox christianity deny as not needed now, were intended to be perpetual.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

From a late letter from Bro George A. Blakeslee, we make the following extracts:

I find the people there take quite an interest in having the Temple repaired. I think the Church should locate a good man in Kirtland who is acquainted with the history of the Church, and who is able to cope with spiritualism and infidelity. I think that mission would be self sustaining in a very short time. I found that from the 23d of June last, to the time of my last visit, some over two hundred had visited the Temple, and whose names were registered in the book. I think it would be one of the best things the Church could do, to repair the Temple as it was when originally built.

Bro. Robert M. Elvin, Nebraska City, wrote us, November 23d:

I have agreed to debate the following questions, beginning January 22d, 1883: 1st, Resolved, That the Missionary Baptist Church, with which I, N. M. Allen, stand identified, is the only church which holds the identical doctrines as taught by Christ and his apostles, as revealed in the Old and New Testaments. Allen affirms, I deny. 2d. Resolved, That the church organized by Christ and the apostles, apostatized, by mutilating the organization and changing the ordinances. I affirm, Allen denies. Three days are to be devoted to each proposition. I likewise have a promise of U. M. Browder of the Christian Church, to debate.

Bro. Wentworth Vickery wrote from Plano, November 24th:

We keep up our meetings the same as formerly; and also our Sabbath School. Some of our meetings are good ones, and the Spirit's presence is felt to a good degree; others do not seem so good; but we have a great deal to encourage, and many things to discourage us, but believe that those that encourage are more than the other. I think that the visit and fraudulent action of W. A. Dehener, though hard to bear at first, will be a benefit to the Saints. You know that there is a good, kind-hearted number of Saints at this place, and though poor in this world's goods, I believe they are rich in spiritual things. Bro. Amos Bronson has left us for his son's, in Wisconsin; I missed him in the prayer meeting last evening very much.

Bro. John A. Robinson, of Peoria, sends us from Cameron, Illinois, a preaching poster announcing his services at Alexis for November 26th, morning and evening. He adds:

Meetings over, splendid attention; intelligent audience, thinking men; excellent liberty; poured canister and grape into old orthodox theology; set the town on an uproar.

This is good news from Bro. Robinson. He is a mercurial, active defender and presenter of the faith, and quite original in his methods.

Bro. Richard Ferris wrote from Oakland, California, November 24th:

The Oakland Branch is prospering, a goodly spirit manifested, fair attendance at meetings.

THIS is the last number of the HERALD before the weekly issue. We must take it for granted that all our list of subscribers will take it in its changed form; and hence give notice that a reduction in the time of each one paid in advance will be made according to the rate of the new price, as follows:

All subscriptions extending into 1883, except in cases where the increased price for the weekly has been sent us, will be set back as follows:

Those expiring between January and March, inclusive, two numbers.

Those expiring between April and June, inclusive, four numbers.

Those expiring between July and September, inclusive, six numbers.

Those expiring between October and December, inclusive, eight numbers.

All HERALDS will be stopped with this number the subscription for which expired with June 15th, 1882, or prior to that date.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

PROPOSITIONS for discussion were submitted by Brn. John T. Kinnaman, J. M. Terry, Wm. Lewis and others, of Stewartsville, Missouri, to Rev. Phillips, of the M. E. Church, some time ago; but to date, December 2d, no acceptance had been accorded. Rev. Phillips provoked it, by charging that the Church originated in "polygamy and theft."

The brethren at Lucas, Iowa, were also attempting to get up a debate with some Christian Elder on the Sabbath question. Brn. J. W. Gillen, of Lamoni, and C. Scott, of Coldwater, Michigan, were telegraphed to come and attend to it, but nothing has resulted so far.

Sr. Ella M. Fuhr would be much pleased if some one of the Elders would come that way this Winter. She lives eighteen miles east of Waverly, Bremer county, Iowa, and fifteen west of Oelwin, at Grove Hill Post Office.

Sr. Sarah A. Rose wrote from Graysville, Ohio, November 16th, that Brn. L. R. Devore and Hiram Robinson had been doing some preaching in that locality. She wrote highly of the effort; she having attended at one of Bro. Robinson's services, after an illness near unto death, from which she is slowly recovering.

The branch at Lamoni now numbers four hundred and twenty-three. There are over a hundred of the HERALDS taken at the Post Office in the village. We have a daily mail, and efforts will be made to get a mail twice each day, as on the main line.

For the name of Amos Roberts, in Bro. C. C. Reynold's letter, in HERALD for November first, please read Moses Roberts. Bro. D. S. Holmes rectifies the error.

Bro. Briggs Alden says the word "sister" in his letter in same HERALD, should be "father." It was the next February that Elders Kellogg and Wilsey ordained Bro. Alden.

We have lately received in exchange for the HERALD the Deaf Mute Hawk-Eye, a paper published at the Institution for the Deaf and Dumb at Council Bluffs, Iowa. It is an eight page quarto, quite well printed. In the number for December 1st, they gave the HERALD a good notice.

Sr. Abbie A. Horton wrote from Plano, November 29th, that the Sunday School was to have a Christmas doings, in which the exercises were to be free from the theatrical, as much as possible. She had been placed in charge with directions. She gives a generality that reads like a wise saw. "When the storm comes if we can keep very quiet, all blows over and generally no harm is done; not half as much as we anticipate."

Bro. Ebenezer Robinson of Pleasanton, put in an appearance at the editorial rooms, December 2d, in a fair state of health, for so aged a soldier of the cross. He is the same cheerful, unchanging gospel believer that he must have been when a boy of eighteen he obeyed the word in Kirtland. He reports that Bro. Zenas H. Gurley would be at Chagrin Falls, Ohio, on to-day, en route to Washington, D. C.

Sr. Abbie Horton wrote that the snow in Plano, our old home, was from five to six inches deep; at Lamoni the sky was clear, the ground bare, and mercury above freezing point the same day. As we write the sun is brightly shining, the sky is clear and very blue, and the air, though chilly, has vigor and tonic in it. The weather so far,

(and it is December second), this Fall and Winter, has been most excellent, quite different from what it was last year, and we of the Herald office are very glad of the change.

ONE of the encouraging signs of the times is seen in the following. It is of course late to insert it as a news item, but as one of the points which marks the highway progress of Missouri as a State it is of special interest. It has lain on our desk biding its time:

"To-day, May 1st, at Liberty, Clay county, Mo., near which point the notorious James boys were born and raised, a large mass-meeting was held by prominent citizens for the purpose of giving expression regarding the Jameses and death of Jesse. Clay County has for years been the home of the outlaws, and Jesse was buried in his mother's dooryard. The meeting was a large and unanimous one. The following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

"Whereas, We, the people of Clay County, in mass meeting assembled, recognize the fact that there has been a band of criminals in the State who have defied all law, and who, by their acts, made it impossible to arrest and punish them by the forms known to the law, and recognize the necessity of dealing with such characters in the only way that would be successful in ridding the State of them: therefore, be it Resolved, That we fully indorse and approve the course adopted by Gov. Crittenden in ridding our State of these outlaws; that the best and noblest work that has been done for Missouri is the breaking up of this band, and we call upon Gov. Crittenden and those acting under him to continue the good work until the entire band is exterminated, so that lawbreakers will know that law rules in Missouri; and we assure the authorities of our continued support and approval in all efforts in that direction."

FROM a Boston Journal for November 24th, sent us by Bro. E. N. Webster, we clip the following extracts out of a long communication in regard to the use of tobacco in the schools of Boston:

A VETERAN MASTER'S OPINION.

Mr. J. F. Blackinton, Master of the Emerson School, East Boston, said that he would not place the estimate of boys who use tobacco so high as had been done in communications to the press. He made a special investigation and found that of four hundred boys in his school, including one primary class, about thirty-three per cent. use tobacco in some form, more or less frequently. Of this number about forty boys—ten per cent. of the whole school—may be considered habitual smokers. The boys referred to are from eight to sixteen years of age. He had no doubt of the injury done to the boys by the practice when it prevails, and he could not fail to notice it in the relative application of boys to the studies. In reference to what may be done to correct the habit away from school he thought that it was a question how far the teacher has authority to discipline boys for what they do going to or from school. Teachers are guarded in the use of the authority, although they usually address the boys as if they had full power. Some thirty or forty years ago, when the former Superintendent of Boston schools, Mr. Philbrick was a school-master, the parents of a boy succeeded in having him fined for punishing a boy on account of what he did out of school. The school teachers of Boston, however, paid the fine themselves to indicate their conviction that Mr. Philbrick was right. The parents will not often second the teacher in this matter of out-door discipline, but will claim that the boy was not on his way to or from school, but was on some errand at the time that the teacher noticed his actions. About forty per cent. of the foreign element smoke habitually, and when the children see their parents smoking at home after work they can not easily be prejudiced against it, although it is true that nearly all parents who use tobacco themselves would prefer to have their children free of it. With regard to the age, it is said that boys smoke even as early as at six and seven years, although he had not discovered any in his school younger than eight. The boys are fond of rolling paper with sweet fern into cigarettes, and securing a smoke in that way. Many of course do not smoke regularly, because they are too poor to obtain the materials, but they pick up butts or they beg a whiff from others. As to the possibility of securing abstinence from tobacco by a general promise signed by the boys, that depends largely on the public opinion of the school. "It is rather surprising," observed the teacher, "that where so many as Mr. Billings mentions were tobacco users he should have found so large a proportion to keep their promise. Among the effects of the use of tobacco on boys, it is noticed that they become less cleanly in their habits and more indifferent to appearance. When they become somewhat older they are brought by it into company where drinking and loose talk prevail, and they assume a certain air of independence and bravado. Statistics assist me to these conclusions, viz: (1) That the use of tobacco is not general among boys of grammar school age; (2) That the habitual use of tobacco is almost wholly confined to boys whose moral surroundings are bad; and (3) That the habit is acquired, in the great majority of cases, after the boy has reached puberty and is out of the grammar school."

WHY not. A brother sends us from Ontario the following clipping, in regard to a case of healing by faith:

CURED BY FAITH.

"A somewhat remarkable case of faith cure has been discovered in the old county of Glengarry, and one that has been authenticated by a local reporter who visited the scene. A Mr. Scott and his daughter Margaret, have been confined to bed for three years past, the former with inflammatory rheumatism, and the latter from hyperæmia, or congestion of the spinal chord. Both suffered excruciating pain at times. Margaret was a constant reader of her Bible, and Christian faith supported her, when Dr. McBean, of Martintown, told her that she might die at any time, and that she certainly could never recover the use of her limbs. The Rev. Mr. McCaul, of Stanley-street Church, here became interested in her case, and spoke of it in his church prayer meetings. Some time after having done this the reverend gentleman received a letter from Miss Scott, announcing that she had received assurance from the Lord that she would recover, and asking the prayers of Stanley-street Church for her. Her request was acceded to, and on Wednesday evening last the reverend gentleman read a letter in the prayer meeting announcing that Miss Scott had been completely healed of her infirmities.

MISS SCOTT'S STORY.

A Witness reporter interviewed the doctor named, and also the family of Mr. Scott. The mother of Miss Scott thus set forth the case:—"On Tuesday afternoon, Oct. 31st, a neighbor woman came to help us to pare apples, and while in conversation I happened to ask her what she thought of 'faith cures.' She replied: "I would rather not answer that question, Mrs. Scott." The conversation then went on other subjects until the clock struck three, when some of us remarked that this was the hour to pray for Maggie to be healed, and at once we all rose up, I going into Maggie's room, and the girls going to their room upstairs also to pray, leaving our visitor where she was, to pray or pare apples as she thought fit. When I knelt down it seemed to me as if the only prayer I could offer was, 'Lord help my unbelief.' We were all praying in silence, and it seemed as if a pin could be heard dropping on the floor of the room where we were. After continuing in prayer for some time I began to think that I had acted rudely to my visitor who had come to assist in paring apples, by thus leaving her to herself. I was thinking it might be more prudent for me to go back to my work, when that passage became strongly impressed on my mind, 'Though it tarry, wait for it, because it will surely come and will not tarry.' Heb. 2:3. While I was considering if I ought to consider this as a command to continue longer in prayer, Maggie repeated aloud the same passage, and I resolved to continue praying on. Maggie now began to repeat other passages of Scripture, and her voice seemed so strange that I looked up, and seeing her eyes closed and a strange look on her face, I began to fear that she was about to die and that thus she would be delivered from all her earthly pains.

THE CURE EFFECTED.

"While I was still looking at her, she repeated aloud, 'Behold the Bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him.' She at once opened her eyes and pushing aside the bedclothes, turned her feet out on the floor and sat up in the bed. I was almost paralyzed, but I did not move from my knees. At once she stood upright on the floor, when I sprang from my knees and clasping her in my arms, called for all the family to come with me to praise the Lord. Maggie knelt down with us and joined in our praise meeting, without suffering any pain, although she had been suffering severely a few moments before. We then arose from our knees and walked out to Mr. Scott's room, Maggie walking along and not seeming to feel any bad effects from the bright light, although she had not looked on a bright light for three years.

RETURNING THANKS.

"When we came to Mr. Scott's bedside we all knelt down again to praise the Lord, and it seemed to me that my gladness did not arise chiefly because my child was restored to health, but because the Lord was so very good in answering such unbelieving prayers as I had offered." The case is authentic without doubt, but the strange thing about it is that Mr. Scott is still an invalid. Should he be cured, the faith in faith cures will be complete in Glengarry, at least.

A LEGAL decision that may be of some value to the Saints is given below, let everybody read and remember it:

A passenger on a train was assaulted by a brakeman thereon, and he sued the company for damage and recovered a judgment. The company appealed—Chicago and E. Railroad Company vs. Flexman—to the Supreme Court of Illinois, who, in September, affirmed the judgment. The Chief Justice (Craig), in the opinion, said: A carrier under his contract to convey a passenger must carry him safely and properly. He must protect him against the insults and violence of strangers and the other passengers, and especially must he defend him against the violence and insults of his own servants; and if the passenger suffers from such ill-treatment the carrier is responsible.

Correspondence.

BOZEMAN, Montana, Nov. 16th, 1882.

Bro Joseph:—On the 15th day of November, 1857, I was united with that curious people called Mormons. It was twenty five years yesterday,—a quarter of a century,—since it happened. I stayed at home all of yesterday; kept the day a holy one on account of the one of which it was the 25th anniversary. When I look back on time that is past, I naturally ask myself the question, What have I done? True enough, one-third of the time I spent in preaching the gospel—about eight years, or from 1857 to 1865. But after 1865, when I came to this country, I have done very, very little for the cause, except providing for the family which God has given me, and looking to both their temporal and spiritual welfare; which I find a pretty good undertaking to do right before God. My desire is that I may have twenty five years more in God's kingdom on earth; be able to do more good, and at last, with my family, have a place and name in his glorious kingdom forever. This is my prayer.

If any of my brethren desire to write to me, my address is below.

Your brother in Christ,

MARTIN LUNDBALL.

SULIVAN, Missouri,
November 21st, 1881.

Bro. Joseph:—We in this part of the vineyard are alive in the work, though we are few in number. We are striving to manifest our faith in the work by leading consistent lives. Bro. B. V. Springer is with us, speaking every night at three different points. The interest is good at each point, full houses of attentive listeners. Bro. Springer spoke last Sunday on the subject of the Apostasy and Restoration, from Daniel 2: 44. At the close of his discourse a Baptist minister announced, that on next Sunday he would review the discourse, and show that the kingdom spoken of by Daniel was set up in the days of Christ's first advent, and has continued to the present day. We shall see,—we think we do see, that it will result in good to the cause. Last night the aforesaid minister was on hand and took notes. Bro. B. V.'s subject last night, was the second advent or Jesus as King. So it goes.

Old formal professors are crying, delusion,
And high minded hypocrites say it is confusion;
While grace is poured out in a blessed effusion,
And Saints are rejoicing to see priestcraft fall.

Bro. Springer expects to go from here to Oregon county, Missouri.

Your sister in the gospel,
RACHAEL EVANS.

GALESBURG, Jasper Co., Mo.,
November 19th, 1882.

Bro. Joseph:—I again write that self and family are well in body, and feeling tolerably well in mind, looking forward to the hope of the future. This is our present consolation. Our conference commences next Friday, 24th, and I am to meet Bro. Alexander, at Missouri Pacific depot at Webb City, on the 23d, noon, from Kansas City; Webb is ten miles south-east from here. On Friday we will go to Pleasant View Branch. I hope for good to be done so that we will have the life of the Spirit in the future.

S. MALONEY.

MUSES BOTTOM, Jackson Co., W. V.,
November 27th, 1882.

Bro. Joseph:—It has been months since I addressed you and for fear some may imagine I have been charmed by the "Siren Singers," I pen you these lines that they may learn I am still on the "war path." Although I have not been preaching as much as perhaps I should have done. In October I visited my invalid mother who, it was thought by many, would soon bid adieu to the shores of time; but her life is still spared.

We were permitted to meet Bro. Hiram Robinson for the first time while with mother; heard him preach several times. Mother offered him a home while he remained. He conversed with her on the necessity of obedience to the "perfect law;" and on the 7th of this month I had the pleasure of baptizing her into the fold. Since her baptism she seems much improved in health; I trust her life may be spared, that she may be an instrument in God's hands of bringing many of my kindred to the truth.

There are evidences that the Monroe Branch will again be built up. It once flourished, but since that has been "scattered and peeled" I spoke once at Washington Hall school-house, in Washington county; once at my mother's, at which place quite a number of my kindred were present. A good impression was made. Spoke four times at Pleasant Ridge, and once in the Methodist church in Graysville, Monroe county.

Bro. Robinson is an earnest, faithful man; and is wielding an influence in the Pittsburg District for good. I expect to visit Bro. and Sr. Raley, and Sr. Leeson in a few days. They live in Doddridge county, West Virginia. Some doors are open there for preaching. By the 20th of December, wife and I intend going into Wayne county, West Virginia, to spend the most of the winter with the Wayne Branch. Plenty of doors open for preaching in the South East Ohio and West Virginia district. I can not fill them all. Bro. Elders of the district, please lend a helping hand in the way of preaching.

Yours in bonds,
L. R. DEVORE.

EAST DES MOINES, Iowa,
November 30th, 1882.

Bro. Joseph Smith:—We are pleased to say to the Herald, that our chapel has reached a goodly degree of completion, being furnished with quite a good pulpit and other necessary fixtures, since plastering was completed. We feel grateful for the success.

Please say in Herald, that brethren passing through the city are invited to call on us and preach. My residence is at 1604 East Sycamore St., and other Saints close by. Brethren will find a hearty welcome.

Your brother in Christ,
WM. RAY.

GRAHAM, Young Co., Texas,
November 25th, 1882.

Dear Herald:—On October 24th I was obliged to leave Elkhart, to take Bro. Cato to Temple, as he continued to get worse. Leaving him with his wife at Bro. Presely's, I made my way to Elmwood Branch, and finding Bro. H. L. Thompson about starting for Milam county to make an opening, I concluded to go with him. So on the 28th, in company with Bro. Skinner and wife, we drove about thirty miles, and stopped with Mr. Bozeman, a brother of Mrs. Skinner. The next day we held two meetings; I preached at eleven o'clock, and Bro. Thompson at night. Bro. Thompson left an appointment for December 31st, where upon a Mr. E. M. Thompson objected; but when we enquired we found he had no authority for objecting, yet he warned us that we had better not come, and four others sanctioned what he said. The better part of the community, however, wished the appointment left, and it was left.

Elder J. O. Stewart, whom the readers of the Herald will remember was published in the Herald for July 15th, came to this place and preached some, and baptized three after he was silenced, and was here arrested and carried back to Red River county, leaving the name of the Church tarnished; so on the 9th inst., I set out from Bell county to see what could be done to lift the disgrace from the fair name of the Church, and to preach the word anew to those who had been deceived. On the 10th I arrived at Breckenridge Stevens county, where I called on Bro. W. T. Craig, formerly of Carroll county, Mo. I found Bro. and Sr. Craig and their daughter, yet strong in the faith, though for some years standing alone. I also met, at Breckenridge, a Bro. Watson, (who was baptized in Colorado by Bro. F. C. Warnky), of Sourry county, who seemed rejoiced to meet me. I preached twice in Breckenridge, once in a school house, and once in the Presbyterian church; meetings were well attended, and the word well received by some. I borrowed a horse from Bro. Craig, and on the 17th set out on horseback for this place, and arrived in safety the forenoon of the 18th, at a Mr. Bennett's, ten miles east of Graham. I found matters much worse than I expected. In addition to Elder Stewart's wrong in running away from his bond, he had positively denied having a wife in Red River Co.

I having seen his wife and child there, of course said so when asked. The enemies of the Church use this as an evidence that the Church is as bad as represented. Those who were by him baptized, feel humiliated, and I am greatly embarrassed. I have to meet the usual prejudice in new places, and with it the record of Stewart; while I have no better authority to show than he did, as he had a license signed by the President and Secretary of the Church. When asked what more evidence they have that I am in good standing than they had that he was, I must say none.

But I am determined to meet the issue, and clear my skirts, whether men believe my report or not. I have preached five discourses, and one has made application for baptism.

The Lord has stood by me in my extremity, and am confident that a good work will yet be done here. I was never in just such circumstances in my life, and hope I shall never be again.

The work in the mission is making slow, but permanent improvement in many places. I have not heard from Bro. Montague for some time. I think he is either in Red River or Ellis county. He is a faithful man, and will honor the cause wherever he is. Bro. Cato was yet unwell when last heard from; but had a strong desire to be about his Master's business. May he become able to do all the good he desires to do. While traveling with Bro. C I received evidence of his devotion to the cause.

I hope the Saints every where will pray for this mission, and its laborers. We have to fight against overwhelming odds for every inch of ground we gain or retain. We have, however, an abiding faith in final success; and so far have been able to labor in perfect harmony, so far as the missionary force is concerned. We propose to stand by our guns, and if we go down in the conflict, go down with the armor on.

In hope,
HEMAN C. SMITH.

P. S. Nov. 27th. I have preached three discourses since writing the above, and have this day baptized three persons.
H. C. S.

SHELBY, Iowa, Nov. 21st, 1882.

Bro. Joseph:—We are, to some extent, still wading through sloughs of disappointments and mysticism, with now and again a spot of skepticism, and at times so badly mixed with cares, spiritual and temporal, that we sometimes wish the work was over, and the end had come. But when we reason that, when the work is over, and the end has come, and we perchance have not won the victory; then we feel to redouble our diligence, and try to our utmost while going over the down grade of life, to as great an extent as possible, overcome and subdue this impetuous bundle of sin and inconsistencies, with the hope and object in view, to ultimately hear the "well done good and faithful servant."

We had hoped that this Winter we could have given a goodly share of our time to preaching the word, but circumstances will not permit, I fear; and it has been my experience, that when we do not preach to any great extent, we very forcibly feel the weight of neglected duty, and to a great extent lose the spirit of our calling, and become lukewarm, and indifferent to the great cause intrusted to our care. We have had some good preaching here of late. Bro. Lake, after the Fall Conference, came here to see and visit with his children, before going to Canada, and with his usual force and candor, and under the Spirit's power, delivered several very able discourses, after which we had the pleasure of adopting two more precious souls into the kingdom of God. Bro. Thomas Davison, and Charles Davis. Bro. Anthony also has been here, and preached to us three times, with force and very good effect, instilling into our branch considerable warmth, and in consequence a better feeling prevails. One of the sisters in the Harlan Branch is sorely afflicted. Altogether it is a very sad case indeed, and we earnestly ask the Saints to plead with us for her restoration.

T. W. CHATBURN.

VIRGINIA CITY, Nevada,
November 21st, 1882.

Bro. Joseph:—In reading over News Summary in Herald of November 15th, my attention is called to an item from Eureka, Nevada, which can not be understood in its present form. It should be called Accumulator instead of accumulation; the accumulator itself being the shaft referred to; standing as it does in a perpendicular position. It is called a shaft, but it is a hollow tube about sixty feet high, forty feet of which is filled with compressed air, the other twenty with water, or something near those proportions. The accumulator is a part of the apparatus in use for working the hydraulic pump, stands in the same relation to it as the steam boiler does to the ordinary engine. The hydraulic pump is a new system of pumping water from mines, doing away with the expensive and cumbersome system of rods and balance hobs, so long in use; the pump is placed in a horizontal position in a platt or station, cut out from the bottom of the working shaft, an engine house if you will; for it is chambered out about seventy or eighty feet long by about twenty feet wide, the pumps working horizontally. Connecting with the pumps, on the bottom are two pipes from the engine on the surface, one is called the pressure, the other the exhaust; the pressure connects with, runs through the accumulator, the exhaust comes up to the surface by the force of the pressure. It is in reality the pressure itself returning after having done its work of running the pump below, and freeing the mine of its own water, or the natural accumulation of water in the mine; the exhaust water discharging itself in a reservoir on the top, to be returned again through the pressure. Thus you must see the same water is used all the time, it is one continual round, so far as the hydraulic pressure is concerned. Not so with the mine water. It is discharged by itself through pipes of its own, and is no more used, glad to get rid of it. You must see an extraordinary pressure has to be used to return its own water, and force the mine water up separate pipes; hence the bursting of the shaft or accumulator. (boiler, if you will), only the water in it is cold instead of hot, and compressed air instead of steam. Water is in reality pumped down the mine, acting with such force through the pressure pipe as to work the pumps below, forcing the water up in proportions about two gallons for one it sends down, besides itself.

I don't know if I could make it any plainer to be understood without drawings, and in that part of the business I have never taken any lessons. I only wrote because some of our brethren are miners, and speaking of a shaft being riven from top to bottom would naturally think of the hoisting shaft, through which men have to pass. If you think fit to publish, all well; if not there will be no offence by me.

LEVI ATKINSON.

BUCHANAN, Henry Co., Tenn.,
November 17th, 1882.

Bro. Joseph Smith.—Bro. Thomas and Bro. Hyde have been preaching in Kentucky for some time, introducing the gospel in new places. Bro. Thomas has returned to our branch; Bro. Hyde has gone to Kenton, Tennessee. We are looking for Bro. Anthony every day. The work in this part seems to be at a stand still, and there seems to be a lack of energy with the Saints. I am fearful the branch will be disorganized in a short time, as a great many are going west next Spring. Ever praying for the welfare of Zion, and the spread of truth, I remain,

Your brother in Christ,

W. H. GRIFFIN.

Bro. Joseph.—I am still rejoicing in the truth of the latter day work, for I know it is of God. My greatest pleasure in this life is to talk about the gospel of Christ, which I know is the "power of God unto salvation" to all them that believe. I never fail to warn my neighbors and friends of the great calamity that will befall them, if they do not obey the gospel. Some say they like to hear me talk; others say I have gone crazy.—if it is craziness I wish my neighbors were all crazy too. Though I make many crooked paths the Lord still blesses me with his Spirit. I still remain,
Your sister in Christ,

ANNE E. SPANN.

News Summary.

Nov. 19 h.—Hamilton, Canada. A test case in regard to playing games in saloons was heard before the Police Magistrate. The charge was brought by the License Inspector against Joshua Dansett for allowing parties to play dominoes in his saloon for drinks. It was proved an infraction of the law. The Crown Attorney and the Police Magistrate agreed that the fine should be nominal, and Dansett was fined $5. The Inspector stated that hereafter violations of the law in this way would be pressed under the statute, in which case the violator would not only be fined, but would lose his license.

Lyons, France. Twenty-five persons, including three foreigners, were arrested to day charged with being members of an association formed for the purpose of fomenting strikes among workmen, obtaining a general division of property, and destroying sentiments of patriotism in the people.

Pittsfield, Mass. The Congregational Church at Richmond, a large wooden structure built over one hundred years ago, burned. Loss, $20,000; insurance, $5,000.

Nov. 21st.—Providence, R. I. A disaster of a far more appalling nature than this city is accustomed to, happened here this forenoon. At 10:30 a fire broke out in the four-story brick building corner Calender and Mason streets, in a locality occupied by a large number of manufactories of jewelry and small wares. The third story of the building in question was occupied by Melvin's "Le Jolly" dye house. Here the fire originated, being caused by ignition of vapor from a ten-gallon can of naphtha. The flames spread with almost the rapidity of lightning cutting off from escape the forty people working for William H. Robinson, manufacturing jeweler, on the fourth floor. The flames rushed up a narrow stairway and imprisoned the terrified mortals above. Those employed in shops on the same floor with the fire and below got out safely. There being no fire escapes available the forty people in Robinson's shop could do nothing but wait for relief from the firemen—relief which was of no avail. The result was, three persons perished outright, and nineteen received horrible burns and injuries.

Nov. 22d.—Madrid, Spain. By the accidental explosion of gunpowder in the barracks to day nearly the whole building was blown to pieces. Fifteen soldiers were injured.

Liverpool, England. The steamer Winton, with grain from the Black Sea, foundered off the Island of Ushant, on the coast of France. Thirty persons were drowned.

San Francisco, Cal. The arrivals of deep-water vessels in San Francisco last week were both numerous and important, including the whaling fleet from the Arctic. The chartered wheat fleet in port has now a register of 73,586 or an export capacity of 110,379 short tons, or 2,207,580 cents, against 106,984 tons at the same time last year. The disengaged tonnage in port has now a register of 50,270 or an export capacity of 75,405 short tons, or 1,508,100 cents, against 28,792 tons at the same time last year. There is also a disengaged tonnage of 2,602 at Wilmington. Tonnage now on the way to San Francisco has a register of 228,016 against 300,183 at the same time in 1881 and 177,488 in 1880.

During the month of October, 1882, there arrived in the United States 45,965 immigrants, against 67,929 for October, 1881. For the four months ending Oct. 31st the arrivals were 203,986, while for the corresponding period in 1881 the arrivals were 239,734.

Nov. 24th.—Buffalo, N. Y. The storm which began Thursday evening and lasted until near midday to day, was the worst known in Buffalo in twenty years. It combined rain, hail, snow, sleet, thunder and lightning, and finally severe cold. The streets were swept by the wind from an early hour, signs blown down, bill boards overturned, electric lights extinguished in the streets, trees uprooted, park shrubbery ruined, immense damage done to glass, and an extensive fire started.

The schooner J. W. Doane, owned by W. M. Egan, of Chicago, Capt. Harry Long, light, from Erie, was driven in by the tremendous sea and smashed against the old stone breakwater. The crew was safely taken off by the life-saving crew. The steam barge Empire made port at midnight from Wallaceburg, Ontario, having abandoned the schooners Groton and Moss which she had in tow. Both were despaired of, but daylight this morning found them both in sight, riding heavily at anchor in the storm. Soon after daylight the Moss drifted down to the foot of Georgia street. The Groton drifted ashore at the upper end of the new breakwater, and her crew were seen in the rigging. The life-saving crew saved them. In the harbor the floating elevator Little Giant went over with a loud crash about nine o'clock this morning, during the heaviest part of the gale, falling across a pile of lumber, breaking her completely in two. The loss is $2,000. The steam barge Gratwick broke loose in the outer harbor. The Central Railroad trestles on the Falls branch, this side of Fort Porter, were washed out this morning, and trains on the branch and the roads into Canada go around by the belt line to Black Rock. A train of cars was run down to the scene of the washout this morning and left standing on the track as a breakwater. The waves dashed clear over the cars, making a splendid sight from the Lackawanna chutes. In the lumber district not much damage was done, though the water was among the lumber piles in both yards. The floating elevators Marquette and Buffalo broke from their moorings and were badly damaged in Erie basin. The schooner J. W. Doane will be a total loss. The palatial residence of George Bailey, at Cold Springs, was fired by lightning and burned. Bailey, an ex-merchant and an invalid, had a narrow escape with his life. The loss on house is $50,000, and on furniture $10,000. A boy named Michaels was struck by a falling sign this morning, and dangerously injured. While the storm was at its height this morning the streets were impassable. The Lackawanna machine shops at East Buffalo were blown down. The loss is $8,000. Railroad travel is considerably interfered with. Telegraph and telephone wires are down in all directions.

Erie, Pa. The storm has done considerable damage along the shore of this end of the lake, huge trees, barns, and in two places dwelling houses having been pulled up by the gale this morning. The propeller Philadelphia went ashore on the peninsula of Presque Isle, inside the harbor. The crew was got off and fortunately the spot where the boat is aground is a good sandy bottom, so that her getting off will be attended with little difficulty. There is no damage to speak of in the city. The body of Joseph SchAAF, one of three fishermen belonging to a capsized schooner, has been recovered, but the other two are missing.

Detroit, Mich. The captain of the propeller Fountain City, which arrived down at midnight, thinks the loss to the shipping by last night's gale will be very heavy. He says there are many crafts of every description out on Lake Huron, and that the storm on Saginaw bay was simply terrible. The schooner C. B. Benson was reported aground on Colchester reef, Lake Erie, yesterday afternoon, flying signals of distress. The crew were lashed to the rigging. The vessel that sighted them was unable to get to them.

Reports of disasters are not numerous here, which leads to the hope that the gale of Thursday night did not catch many vessels out. There is no further news from the schooner on Colchester reef, and it is believed that the crew have successfully made their escape. The new iron propeller H. J. Jewett is aground on the Lime-kilns, but it is thought will be got off without difficulty when the water rises. The propeller Panama is high and dry on Bar point, Lake Erie, in an exposed position. The schooner Morning Light, lumberladen, from Manistee, went ashore at 5 o'clock this morning, four miles north of Ludington. The life-saving crew went to her rescue, but the lifeboat capsized, and the crew were obliged to swim ashore. A tug was then procured which towed the surfboat from Ludington, which succeeded in rescuing all the men. How much will be saved of the vessel and cargo is not yet known. There are no other tidings here up to 11 p. m.

Amberstburg, Ont. Last night's gale has subsided, and all the boats which were sheltered here have gone. The storm lowered the water at the crossing so that the steam barges Fred Mercur, Iron age, H. J. Jewett, and V. Swain were detained till this afternoon, when they all crossed safely. The propeller Conemaugh, bound up, was aground off Bois Blanc light last night, but the water came up to day. She worked herself off after the tug Erie Belle had gone to her release. The schooner Benson, which was flying signals of distress off Colchester last night, rode the gale out all right. The propellers Cuba and China passed down this evening without being detained. Last night's gale finished the destruction of the schooner Canada, which had been on Colchester reef since last week. The water at the crossing is fourteen feet nine inches to night.

Port Huron, Mich. The gale last night was the most severe of the season. The wind was from the south west to west north west, with heavy snow. The schooner Malta left this port for Goderich and was caught out in the gale. Nothing has been heard of her since. She was sighted off Forester about the middle of the lake. She is an old vessel and poorly fitted out for such heavy weather. The H. J. Jewett was detained in the river until near daylight. No disasters have been reported yet. The storm signals are up.

Picton, Ont. The schooner Enterprise, loading barley at West Point storehouse, attempted to leave for shelter, but went ashore. The vessel and cargo are a total loss. The crew were saved.

Rochester, N. Y. Two propellers and five sailing vessels, were driven into Charlotte to-day by stress of weather.

Pierport, Mich. The schooner T. Simms, of Chicago, partly loaded with hardwood lumber, broke loose from Hopkins pier last night and went ashore. The crew are all safe. The vessel is going to pieces.

Toronto, Ont. The heavy gale last night and this morning, was in some cases accompanied by snow. Little damage is reported to shipping.

London, England. The railway bridge at Bromley, near London, fell this morning. Seven workmen beneath the structure eating breakfast were killed, and several others injured.

It has been officially reported to the government that widespread distress is feared in Ireland this winter. The districts most seriously affected, through want of employment on farms and the failure of the potato crop, are Sligo, Ballina, Swinford, and the greater portion of Galway. There is much destitution in the west of Clare and in Connaught. Owing to the continually heavy demand upon Irishmen in America to support the Land League, there has been a considerable decrease in the remittances to the struggling natives in Ireland. This has reduced many to a condition of being unable to purchase new seed.

Biebrich, Prussia. The Rhine is rapidly rising. The banks here and at Rudesheim are under water. Navigation is suspended.

Nov. 25th.—Milwaukee, Wisconsin. The fierce north-wester of Thursday wrought sad mischief on this lake, notwithstanding the fact that a large majority of the sailing vessels are snugly ensconced in winter quarters, and few, in consequence, were caught outside. The fine iron propeller Wisconsin, Capt. McGregor, which arrived here shortly after four o'clock from Grand Haven, brought a terrible story of shipwreck and suffering in connection with the storm. The Wisconsin left Grand Haven at a quarter past eight o'clock last night. When about twenty eight miles out, shortly after half-past ten o'clock, the second mate, John Nolan, who was on watch forward in company with the captain and lookout, heard what sounded to him like the wild shout of a human being sweeping across the water from a point some distance away, and nearly ahead. He reported to the captain, then listened, and heard the shout again, plainer than before. Capt. McGregor at once took the night glass and began to scan the surface of the lake in the direction from which the sounds came. A little patient search with the glass led to the discovery of a group of human beings adrift on the watery waste, with apparently little to support them, not less than two thousand yards away. The course of the propeller was immediately changed, the mate aroused, and instructions given to clear away one of the boats on the hurricane deck for service. When sufficiently near, the Wisconsin was stopped and the boat lowered into the water. The mate, James O'Brien, the second mate, John Nolan, and a crew selected from the complement of deck hands stepped into it and pulled off. They were not long in reaching the castaway mariners, who proved to be three in number, taking them on board and returning to the propeller. One of the men was so exhausted that he had to be lifted from the raft into and out of the yawl. They proved to be the sole survivors of a crew of eight, belonging to the steamer Collingwood, wrecked in the storm of Thursday last.

Paris, France. Two workmen were arrested at Lyons yesterday in connection with the anarchist movement. There have been further discoveries of dynamite at Lyons.

St. Petersburg, Russia. The recent visit here of the emperor and empress was attended with extraordinary precautions. Police were posted every six yards, dvorniks were massed at the corner of each street, and soldiers were drawn up outside the barracks.

There is very great concern here in consequence of the alarming increase of mortality from epidemic disease, especially diphtheria.

Berlin, Germany. A dispatch from Cassel states that the River Fulda has overflowed its banks, stopping traffic there. The Lahn has risen above its banks, and is flooding the towns of Dietz and Limburg. The rivers Main and Neckar are also rising.

Traffic on the Odenwald railway is interrupted between Erbach and Eberbach, owing to the bursting of a dam by rains. The Rhine has risen rapidly, and the railway service on its banks is suspended.

The diplomatic relation between England and Spain have for a long time been more or less under a cloud. The obstructions which Madrid has placed in the way of a satisfactory commercial treaty between the two countries have more than once assumed quite a character of international unfriendliness. It is only a few months since that Lord Granville dictated to the Spanish government a dispatch which severely accentuated this situation. The Spanish journals, official and otherwise, delivered themselves of some of the bitterest philippics against the English policy in Egypt that have appeared to the continental press. The Madrid ministers, through their agents, intrigued with Italy and France with an apparent view to bring about serious complications in connection with the recent development of the eastern question. We have here a groundwork of trouble sufficiently cultivated to receive the seeds of a great war. If Spain had any strong allies, and really desired to bring about such a calamity, recent events at Gibraltar, combined with what has already passed, are sufficient for the occasion. As it is, there seems every probability at the moment that Spain may be compelled to eat the leek, either diplomatically or at the point of the sword. Present prospects favor the idea that she will accept the first alternative. Should she do so, England will only have planted another seed of bitterness to spring up at Madrid and to bear fruit at any future time England contracts a serious continental war.

Nov. 29th.—London, England. A steamer foundered off Port Reath, Cornwall. Eleven of the crew were drowned.

Dusseldorf, Germany. A house here has fallen in, having been undermined by the flood in the Rhine. Fourteen persons are believed to have been drowned.

Cologne. The forts here, on account of the flood from the overflow of the River Rhine, are being emptied of their stores and ammunition. The zoological gardens are inundated.

He joined the Church in the days of Kirtland, but never was identified with the Reorganization. He left a wife and four children to mourn his loss. Although poor in this world's goods, he did not forget to exhort his oldest son to see that his little children were baptized as soon as convenient. Services by S. S. Wilcox. J. R. BADHAM.

HILDRETH.—At Green Ridge, Manitoba, September 23d, 1882, James Arthur, son of Bro. Orson and sister Celestia Hildreth, aged 9 months, and 19 days.

Arthur, thou hast gone and left us,
And the loss we feel to mourn;
Though the mighty God above us,
Can our weeping hearts console.
Yes, we mourn for thee our darling;
And are waiting for the time,
When we will meet thee, little loved one,
In the mansions of our King.
Sleep my baby, sleep and rest
In the paradise of God;
Until we meet thee with the blest
In the mansion of our Lord.

MOTHER.

NEWKIRK.—At Willow, Richland county, Wis., November 8th, 1882, Sr. Catharine Newkirk. She was born in the State of Ohio, December 23th, 1799. She professed religion in early life. She believed and obeyed the faith of the Saints, in the Fall of 1852, under the ministerial labors of Father Gurley. She was one of the first members of the Reorganization. She was a witness and participant of those early manifestations of God's power which have developed the work of God upon its original bases. Her's was a life of prayer, of purity, and undying love for God and his truth. Funeral services conducted by Bro. F. Hackett, and F. M. Cooper. The life of our sister covers the greatest part of a century, but the virtues of Christian life adorn the character, and extended years of our departed sister. Her aged companion still lingers, and mourns the absence of one who has shared with him life's joys and sorrows for over fifty years. We laid her away in the quiet grave amidst the tears of children and grandchildren, to await that beautiful morning of resurrection, when all tears will be wiped away, amidst the glad greetings, and happy reunions of the loved of earth; when age, and pain, and death, will be swallowed up, in the fadeless beauties of immortality.

PALMER.—At his home in Bigler's Grove, Iowa, on Tuesday, November 21st, 1882, Elder Elisha Palmer, in the 84th year of his age. Bro. Palmer was born in district of Newcastle, Upper Canada, September 9th, 1799, from whence he moved to Whiteside county, Illinois, in June, 1844; thence to Wisconsin, in 1846; and finally to Harrison county, Iowa, in 1854, where he has since resided. He joined the Church in 1842, being baptized by Wm. Myers, in that year, and identified himself with the Reorganized Church, in 1859. He has always been a true man, a consistent Christian, and a kind and loving husband and father, and like the patriarchs of old, is now "gathered to his people" being "old and full of days."

Gone to rest a valiant soldier,
In the army of the Lord;
Faithful husband—loving father,
Gone to reap a just reward.
Father, bless the anguished widow;
Guard the little orphans dear;
Give them lasting cheer and comfort;
Be thine angels ever near.

KEIR.—At Braidwood, Illinois, November 6th, 1882, of hemorrhage of the lungs, Bro. John Keir, Jr., aged 30 years; of whom the world said, few died having a better reputation; and hundreds showed their appreciation of his goodness by attending his funeral.

QUANDT.—At North Freedom, Wisconsin, Nov. 4th, 1882, George, son of Bro. John and Sr. L. Quandt. Aged 3 years, 9 months, 19 days. Funeral sermon at the Saints' Hall, by F. M. Cooper in which words of comfort were spoken to the bereaved; and we would rehearse our Savior's words:—"Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not; for of such is the kingdom of heaven." What a comfort!

ANDREASEN.—At Essex, Iowa, November 16th, 1882, of old age, Bro. Niels Andraesen, aged 73 years, 7 months, and 18 days. Baptized January 15th, 1876, by Elder Henry Kemp. He leaves an aged companion, (their journey in wedded life together was more than fifty-three years), and three grown sons; viz, the first, fifth and ninth child. For the last hundred days he partook of no solid food. About two weeks before death he sent for Bro. J. Thomson to administer, after which he suffered no pain, and slept away in peace, without a struggle. Funeral from the house the 18th. Sermon by Elder Robert M. Elvin, text, 1 Cor. 15: 22, 23. There was quite a large attendance.

WHITE.—At Edenville, Iowa, November 23d, 1882, infant son of Bro. D. C. and Sr. A. White, aged one month and twenty-one days. May the bereaved parents find comfort and consolation in the thought, that their little one is lost to them only for a short time. God in his wisdom and love saw fit to remove this little bud from their earthly garden, to blossom in his own beautiful garden in paradise, there to wait the day, when the curse of sin and death shall have been removed from this earth. Then in its glorified body it shall be restored to them, never more to be separated by death. We would say to the sorrowing ones; think not of your little one as in the cold and silent tomb; for only the casket which contained the precious jewel is there. Think rather of the happy day, the blessed resurrection morn; when body and spirit shall be re-united, and death shall no longer have dominion over us. Oh, the unspeakable joy and consolation, in the contemplation of this thought, when our hearts are torn and bleeding, o'er the spoils which death hath wrought.

Then friends shall meet with friends most dear,
Parents and children too;
No more to shed the parting tear,
Or bid the sad adieu.

M. H.

DUTTON.—At Columbus, Cherokee Co., Kansas, October 22d, 1882, of pneumonia, Elder James Dutton, aged 52 years, 2 months, and 28 days. The deceased was born at Mansfield, England. Funeral services by D. S. Crawley.

"He suffered long, and he bore it well.
His sorrows came thick and fast,
Then call him not back, in his pains to dwell—
He has gone to sleep at last."

REW.—Near Lamoni, Iowa, November 29th, 1882, Bro. Sylvester H., son of Bro. Sylvester Rew, aged 18 years, 3 months and 15 days. Two days previous to his death he was kicked by a horse while leading it, and the injury was mortal. The circumstance and his death were very sad events to his parents, especially as he was a very faithful son to them. Before he died he expressed his thankfulness that he had not been instantly killed, for he had had an opportunity to think over his life and prepare his mind as far as possible for the great change. Funeral sermon by Elder H. A. Stebbins, assisted by Elder J. W. Gillen.

ALEXANDER.—At San Benito, Cal., September 23d, 1882, of measles, sister Emma, the beloved wife of Levi Alexander. She was born in the State of Virginia, January 4th, 1826; baptized and confirmed at San Benito, Cal., December 13th, 1873, by Elder J. R. Cook; and remained a faithful and consistent member unto the end. A few hours before her death, knowing that she was passing away, she bore a strong testimony to the truth of the latter day work, and said she knew that her name was written in the Lamb's Book of Life. The funeral sermon was preached by Elder J. H. Lawn, from Job 14th chapter, and 14th verse: "If a man die, shall he live again?"

At her funeral service, which was conducted by Elder John Smith, many were unable to gain admittance, and twenty-one carriages followed her to her grave.

God hath placed as guardians before the closed gates of eternity, fear and anxious doubt, and the awful stillness of death and impenetrable darkness. These drive back the human race, that it may pursue to the end its appointed path upon earth. In spite of all the discomforts of life, in spite of our impatient longing to be re-united with the friends who have gone before us to our eternal home, the terrors that surround the portals of eternity repel us, and we continue our earthly journey with calmer spirits.

We can not, if we would, escape the experiences that cause us to feel and suffer and think. Ask any brave, sympathetic, helpful soul, when he first donned the purple of these royal gifts, and he will answer, When I was sitting in the shadow of some mighty sorrow, or in the weary days of hope deferred, it came to me like a revelation that the only way to lighten my own burden was to aid others in bearing theirs.
