Heart answers heart: in one desire,
The blending lines of prayer aspire."

"Go THY way, Daniel, for the words are closed up and sealed to the time of the end. Many shall be purified and made white and tried; but the wicked shall do wickedly: and none of the wicked shall understand; but the wise shall understand."—Dan. 12: 9, 10.

Last night a friend handed us a paper containing a sermon by the professor of theology in Harvard University, Rev. Francis Greenwood Peabody. While reading it we were forcibly impressed with some passages which it is our intention to use in this article, for we believe that the time of the end is near, and the angel said that the wise should understand. In correspondence once with a Hebrew scholar, he remarked: "The word rendered 'wise,' by the translators, should have been rendered, observing." We have no reason to doubt this, for, from the days of our childhood we remember our mother as never reading or hearing of any unusual occurrence, but she cast about in her mind to know what connection it had, or what possible bearing it might have upon the work of the Lord in these last days. Perhaps the disposition to do likewise is inherited by us; but if so, we are fully persuaded in our own mind that we are not alone in this peculiarity; indeed the spirit of observation seems to be a part and parcel of the work. "What I say unto you I say unto all, Watch!"

The text selected was Psalms 42: 2—"My soul thirsteth for God, for the living God." He remarked that he wished to speak to them upon the signs of the times in which we live, and while he admitted that a casual glance would never reveal the fact that a thirst for the living God was in deed a characteristic of this age; he held that a deeper search, a closer scrutiny in regard to the tendencies of the age, would reveal the fact, that one kind of living and thinking was upon the surface, but another and a very different one, within the depths. The almost feverish thirst for the possessions, ambitions, and indulgences of the time are but the eddies in the stream, while below the eddies—below the surface, moved the deep and quiet current, which time would reveal as a thirst for living waters, a thirst for the living God. We quote the following passage entire.

"Thus the text which I have chosen may be untrue to the superficial living which prevails in this as in every age; but I believe it strikes with increasing clearness the note of the heart of the time. There is scarcely a phase of the philosophy about us, or a really profound experience which we observe, which does not illustrate the increasing thirst of the human soul for the living God. Beneath the harsh noises of our day there is this permanent undertone, continuing like the sounds of nature which we hear only as other noises are stilled. Amid this apparent satiety and self-sufficiency of the age, there appears this divine restlessness. Each gain in things which seem to make a living God superfluous, begins to compel men to some new aspect of religion, or to some new substitute for faith. A thirsty time, not a time when the soul is satisfied, but when it is growing parched even to torture, and is demanding that its thirst be somehow slaked—a time when souls and systems are coming as the Psalmist says that the deer comes in summer, to springs that once ran free, and are finding there nothing but dry, hot stones, and then, panting for the water brooks, are turning from these barren resources of the past, and thirsty for the signs of a present and a living God. Such is the scene which the age, in its deeper living and thinking, seems to present,—a scene which contradicts and corrects our first impression; and it is this underlying and fundamental character which I wish now very imperfectly to trace. First let us see this deeper current flowing through the thought of the time, and then through its life; and then let us ask ourselves what we can do to meet and use its onward sweep." * * *

He classes philosophical unbelief under two heads, and whatever points of disagreement is found on these philosophies, one thing they have in common—the desire to withhold the thoughts of men from any sense of a living God. After having run their brief career, by the very admissions they themselves make, they are thirsting for a living God. We are even brought to a time of controversy between the two, each of them maintaining that in it alone lie the elements of true religion and the satisfaction of this human thirst. One is inspired by the mystery of the universe, and the other by the dignity of human life. One sees behind, the play of nature's forces that unknown force "from which all things proceed;" to the other, religion is religion only as it is addressed to that which can be known and loved. One presents as the embodiment of its ideal, power; the other, love. These are two of the attributes of the living God, and facts like these confirm us in our belief that the intellectual thirst of the age is for something which can be called a living God.

Take now the ethical, which demands not a living God; but a living and improved human society, is what it thirsts to see. Not a distant heaven it says, but a present earth, is the true scene of regeneration. Not worship, but work is the true offering. Here again are found the fruits of faith—they accept the doctrine but repudiate the Teacher.

"But after all, this ferment of the philosophies is but a suggestion of the spiritual restlessness which possesses multitudes about us, whether they study philosophy or not. What are the facts? All over this country there are thousands of thoughtful lives, trained in modern ways of thinking, beyond reach of ecclesiasticism or of orthodoxy, yet with this great thirst upon their souls; panting, like the hart for the water-brooks, for some assurance of a living God. These are the souls which test the force of and the sympathy of a church or a minister. They do not demand a complicated or elaborate faith, but they thirst for faith in something. For the lack of something better they yield themselves to the most extravagant substitutes for faith. Anything if it be nothing more religious than tipping tables, or "astral bodies," is precious to them if it seems to suggest supernatural control. Their doubts and problems are not concerned with the details of belief, it is the very foundation which is undermined. A few years ago, a young man came to me with his religious questionings. I never can forget his fierce and passionate attack. "Do not suppose," he said, "that I am not a good Baptist. I am a member of the church. I am 'sound on immersion.' But tell me, tell me, if you can, whether or no there is any living God." * * * Here is a time when many critics are observing the decline of religious influence and the decrease of church attendance. It seems to me a time much more marked for the wonderful eagerness with which people still turn to the ministry of any man who speaks as if his religion were real. It is one more mark of the weary waiting and divine discontent which marks the time, and which draws it, like the hart to the water-brooks, towards any voice or church or substitute for church, which seems likely to supply its thirst."

The preacher then in his conclusion, describes the church and ministry demanded by the times, but with this part of the discourse we have nothing to do, but come rather to our own application.

"Behold the days come, saith the Lord God, that I will send a famine in the land, not a famine of bread, nor a thirst for water, but of hearing the words of the Lord."—Amos 8: 11. Church of the living God, comes there from this pulpit, from this teacher of religion any appeal to you? See you in these brief extracts any signs of the time? Is there behind the gray clouds of morning any roseate gleam—harbinger of his chariot wheels! Do you hear that cry "Tell me, tell me if you can, whether or no there is any living God?" To you is committed the word of reconciliation. Who can answer a question like this? Who? Job knew that his Redeemer was living, aye more that in the latter day he should stand upon the earth; and the promise of God is, that all who obey shall know. O, how solemnly sweet the words "Having received authority from the Lord Jesus Christ," sweet as the strains of angel harps, as the song announcing the new born Babe of Bethlehem. The famine is truly in our midst. The vain husks of ethics and philosophy can never satisfy the soul of man. The gospel of power, is what the world is perishing for this day. We have it, we know we have; there is no guess work in the matter; why not send it then? If souls are perishing for want of what

God has given us to carry to them, is there not responsibility somewhere? The press standing idle, the ministry at home, because wife and children must not starve—what does this mean? If God is not doing his share then we know where blame attaches; but if he is—if he has blessed members of the church with means which they are holding back to their own condemnation—then how shall they enter heaven with the blood stains of lost souls upon their garments? Noah was commanded to preach while the ark was being built, and in mercy God stayed the waters, after he had determined the flood to come upon the earth. The ministry of reconciliation with power to declare and make known the only living and true God has been committed to the church in this day and age of the world. God has declared that the corruptible things of this earth shall be destroyed by fire, and he is waiting in mercy as he waited while the ark was preparing, for his servants to prune the vineyard for the last time. Should we hear the midnight cry, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him," which think you would most interest us, the silver and gold laid up in store, or the amount of oil in our vessel beside the lamp? But says one, "This oil can not be bought." Borrowed you mean, for while they went to buy the Bridegroom came and the door was shut.

Sisters, let not this sin be laid to our charge. We are not called to preach, but we are called to do all in our power to forward the work of God. Our soul was stirred within us, when reading the sermon. We saw the fulfillment of Amos' prophecy—saw it as a sign of the times, but had no thought of the way in which we have been led. It is a day of sacrifice. Awake, awake we beseech you; seek to God to know your duty, and then for strength to perform it, lest the ease and luxury of our life here be bought with the price of souls.

Sr. Frances.—In reading the Home Column we notice so many speak of the government of children, and we thought that we too would write on this subject; but not so much from experience as from observation. How often we hear parents say, as an excuse for the neglect of the duty they owe their child, and then the disobeying of the child which naturally follows: "Oh, it is too much trouble to be always watching and scolding." If they could but realize how much easier it would be to teach the child first to do what we say, and thus save this watching and scolding, and the constant disobeying of the child. Love is the main means in governing a child, yet we should govern with judicious love. This constant scolding is not based upon the principle of "govern by love." The love of a child for its parent is naturally great, yet we can not love as we ought where we do not respect, and how much more we respect one who is firm and just than we do one who is fretful and weak. The one through their justness, it becomes a pleasure to obey, while the other, it almost seems sometimes, the child takes pleasure in disobeying.

How often we hear children say: "Don't do that, papa or mamma would not want you to." And again we hear: "I don't care what any one says; I am going to do as I am a mind to." We would ask which child loves and respects their parents most? When I hear my scholars say:

"Don't do that teacher would not wish you to," I am sure at least of that child's respect. We wonder which child God loves most—the obedient or disobedient. Christ says: "If ye love me ye will keep my commandments." Then, therefore, if a child loves their parents they will keep their commandments; but if there is no commandment, then there is nothing to obey, and one who continually scolds gives no commandments.

How careful, therefore, parents should be that their commandments may be always just, and then through the love of the child, with the knowledge that our parents are just, although at the time we may not be able to see this justness, yet it will be a pleasure to obey such commandments. And let us each one remember that,

"One by one our duties wait us;
Let our whole strength go to each;
Let no future dreams elate us,
Learn we first what these can teach."

Dear Sisters:—Are we doing all in our power for the spread of the gospel? There is a great work to be done, and by teaching our children and setting a good example before our friends and neighbours, we may aid in it, both by precept and example. By managing our domestic affairs wisely and prudently, much may be saved to aid in the spread of the gospel. Some will say it is not our place to do very much; tithing goes for that purpose. True, but are you paying tithing? If you have much or little, the law is the same. It calls for the same proportion from the rich man that it does from the poor man, and weighed in the balances of heaven the dollar paid in with a willing heart by the poor man, woman or child, will balance ten thousand which comes from the rich man's plenty. When this is done we have only done our duty—nothing more. But there lies yet something beyond this—more than the law demands; and what is this? "Behold now it is called to-day until the coming of the Son of Man; and verily it is a day of sacrifice, and a day for the tithing of my people, * * for verily I say, to-morrow all the proud and they that do wickedly shall be as stubble, * * * wherefore, if ye believe me, ye will labor while it is called to-day."—D. C. sec. 64.

Are we sacrificing any for the Master? Many of us are poor in the things of this world, but oh, how contemptible are those things in comparison with the riches of heaven; and besides this the Lord say "Try me and prove me." Are we trying him? We can not prove him unless we try him. Have you sisters who are blessed with plenty, who clothe yourselves in fine raiment, ever tried dividing with those who were not able to appear at the house of God clad respectably? When making up a garment have you ever tried to save a dollar or two in order to buy a garment for your poorer sister. If you have not, try it and taste the sweet peace resulting therefrom, and prove the Lord. Have you ever thought while dressing your own children, to try and economize on their clothing, in order to help some poor sister who with the best effort she is able to make can not clothe her little ones respectably, and is compelled to keep them at home from church and Sabbath School. In sec. 102, D. C. you will see that the Lord reproves the Saints for their transgressions. They did all manner of evil, and they did not impart of their substance as becometh Saints, to the poor and afflicted among them. Are we flattering ourselves that by the putting on of raiment, we can make the gospel attractive? "Consider the lilies of the field!" Christ commanded his followers to let their light shine, that others seeing their good works, (not good clothes) might glorify the Father. The adornment of a meek and quiet spirit, neatness, cleanliness and godliness, are they not above price?

An Elder is in the field preaching, doing all in his power. He has more calls than he can fill, but his wife writes him from home, and tells him she has had her hat for some time, and she sees one down town that suits her. It costs four dollars, and she wants her husband to leave his preaching and earn the money to get it. What would you think of that sister? Would you not think she was not much interested in the spread of the gospel? But has she not as good a right to such a hat as her sisters, who judge her? Are there not some who are not Elder's wives that are keeping the Elders at home that they may have fine clothes? "Thou shall not be proud in thy heart; let all thy garments be plain, and their beauty the works of thine own hands. D. C. sec. 42. Dear sisters, let each one of us ask herself the questions, Are we doing all we might do. Are we sacrificing any for the Master's sake, or will we be compelled to say when we render our account to him, I wish I had done more? We will not be sorry then for any sacrifice we have made.

From your sister,
ANNA PHELPS.

Dear Sisters and Readers of the Home Column: I think I can say in unison with my sisters, The Home Column is just what our Herald has long needed in order to make it attractive to both old and young in the church, bringing forth the talent and zeal that is in us to work for the Master. The many toiling and weary mothers that are so anxiously striving to train their little "buds of promise" in the ways of truth and righteousness, knowing in this we are doing that portion of the Master's work entrusted to our care, have through it been encouraged and strengthened. And now dear sisters, shall we not accomplish a still greater work in their behalf?

Through the unceasing efforts of sister Frances we feel assured the desired work will be accomplished, and we shall see the standard of the Hope raised; that it shall even be as a bright and shining light in the pathway of the Sunday School children, both to instruct them in God's word and interest them in its perusal; but as mothers we have something to do to interest them in order that they also work in its behalf, composing their little letters and stories in their own childish language. Let us see to it, and I believe in due time we shall be blessed by the fruit of our labors.

A MANSION IN THE DEPTHS.

At Kaukauna, Wisconsin, the workmen engaged in excavating a sewer, came upon the ruins of a stone building at the depth of eight feet. The stone first found bore traces of fine workmanship and polish. Further digging developed a quantity of ashes, about twenty-five bushels of which were removed, when another wall was struck. The stones were finely faced, some being blackened as if by fire and smoke. The others must have been subjected to great artificial heat as they had crumbled into lime. The work was found but a foot or two above bed-rock, and shows evidences of workmanship that could have been performed only by a highly civilized race. It must have been done centuries ago, as a large elm tree has grown over the ruins. The discovery has led to the advancement of many theories.—Bee, Omaha, Sept. 29th.

Correspondence.

NORTH FORSTER, N. S. W.,
August 30th.

Bro. Joseph:—I have been here six weeks, holding services and visiting with the people; and in company with Bro. J. Wright visited Bro. McLaughlin at Wingham, thirty miles from here, where Bro. Glaud Rodger had the contest with the Church of England Clergyman; and afterwards with Bro. Sidney Wright went to Laurieton to see Bro. J. Rodger and the Saints there, held a few meetings there, and then returned to this place, and learned that while away some of the clergy had been trying to keep the people from following "the delusion," as they thought. I met one of them for five minutes, then he was called away for a boat was waiting for him. He saluted me with the question: "Don't you think the people are asses to listen to you—a stranger?" I thought perhaps so, and that they would be certainly, if they listened (to receiving) to either a stranger or acquaintance if they taught contrary to the Bible. And although he had but a few minutes to talk, he must leave a testimony of the truth of this work, in the usual slanderous statements against the Martyr, thus adding to the many testimonies received already that the angel spake truly—"his name should be good and ill spoken of everywhere." By the same declaration I might judge him, (the clergyman) for, the pure, good and righteous, should speak good of him; but the unjust, unrighteous and pharisaical, would speak ill of him.

I have baptized twenty-eight persons since I came here six weeks ago, and organized them in a branch called Forster Branch, and so of course the adversary and all who chose to be his servants are not idle; some timid ones who thought to obey are waiting to see how it will all turn out, for to them strange stories of wrongs have been told. I have generally had very good liberty here in explaining the word, and some times the Spirit bringing the truths so clearly before me, that I became enraptured of them myself, and felt exceedingly happy, as in the demonstration of the Spirit of God, his word flowed forth like a river—deep, placid, fervent and sure,—what a knowledge accompanies such a demonstration of God's goodness when the Holy Spirit brings to our remembrance the beauties and grandeur of the heavenly kingdom; it carries such a weight of knowledge that can not be erased—I think, never. And so we receive the encouragement and endorsement of our Master, our Lord, and are glad.

I expect to leave to-morrow for Nambucca, leaving the branch in the care and oversight of Brn. Wright, Mills, Seaberg and Taylor, and commending them to the guidance and care of our heavenly father, Jesus Christ and the Holy Spirit, communion with whom will increase their knowledge in the word of God, by which they are to be sanctified, we rest assured that if faithful they will rejoice in the truth demonstrated to them here, and soon receive their inheritance in the everlasting kingdom of our Lord.

We are well, and look anxiously, monthly for the American mail—it is so long to wait for a Herald, and often we are out of the way so as not to receive it then, but it is a feast of good things generally, when it comes. May God bless you with all the gifts and powers of your office abundantly, and "your peace flow as a river."

Your brother in Christ,

JOS. F. BURTON.

After writing as before, a Mr. Philips, a Church of England minister, came in the neighborhood, and just at dusk sent me word that he wanted to meet me before the public, to give a reason why some of his church members left him to join me. We met at 7:30, and I did what I could to defend the proposition: "The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is the true Church of Christ in organization, faith and doctrine." Bible as evidence. We were to use fifteen minutes each, but he seldom used his time, as he wished to hear. We continued from 7:30 to 10:45. After my second speech in affirming the organization and first principles, he on arising admitted what I had said, and turned the question on "the necessity of immersion as baptism." We had a "prayer book" along, and when showing from it that "dip" was the mode, we used it, especially after he admitted that Christ and the Eunuch went into the water; then by adding their "dip," we clinched the argument. None of our folks were injured by the discussion.

In haste,

J. F. B.

INDEPENDENCE, Mo., Sep. 29th.

Dear Herald:—I left home on the 17th of September; went to Clinton to assist Bro. I. N. White; went with him to the Clintonville branch, near Eldorado Springs, in Cedar County. The brethren had out an appointment at the Schroeder School house for Saturday night and Sunday, at 11 a. m., four miles east at Cedar Springs in the grove. Preached at the Schroeder School House during the week. Here we met Elder Weeks, who once belonged to the church but was cut off while living near Kingston, in the Far West District, but since has joined the Campbellites. He is lecturing and preaching against the Latter Day Saints. He had delivered two lectures at Le Beck, just before we came down. This is the place where Bro. I. N. White met the Rev. Price, of Campbellism a short time since.

It is conceded by most all that we have the truth as contained in the Bible, but some think there is something bad back of it. On Sunday the 26th of September, Bro White baptized five, all heads of families. One of the sisters baptized had been raised in Catholicism. One of those baptized was one of the moderators in the discussion, and was convinced during the discussion, notwithstanding all that the Rev. Price and other brothers could say against the truth. The Lord blessed us abundantly while we were there, and our congregations were on the increase. We left eight or ten who said they were almost persuaded to accept the faith.

At Clinton, Monday evening, we found Bros. A. White and J. Luff who had been preaching all the past week at Clinton, but congregations were small, owing to some amusements carried on by those of the world, on the street. Bros. A. White, J. Luff and myself returned to Independence, each determined to do more in the near future if God shall so open the way. There are the best openings in the Independence District at present we ever had.

Ever yours,

EMSLEY CURTIS.

DROWNVILLE, R. I., Sep. 25th.

Brother Joseph:—I have just returned from our District Conference which convened at Boston, September 25th. It was a most enjoyable time, and one long to be remembered. The power of God was present in abundance, to the blessing and confirmation of the Saints. The business sessions passed off smoothly and quietly. Saturday night we were favored with a discourse by brother N. R. Nickerson, followed by the gospel warrior Father Thompson. Sunday morning, had prayer and testimony service, which held four hours. Tongues, prophecies and revelations were given to the joy and consolation of the Saints. The afternoon service was conducted by Bro. F. A. Potter, with Elder Thomas Whiting in the pulpit. His subject was the restoration of the gospel. The speaker enjoyed good liberty and held his hearers closely until the finish. In the evening Bro. F. M. Sheehy occupied the stand, assisted by Bro. Myron H. Bond, the first principles of the gospel being his theme. The Spirit was his helper to the edification of the people. Taking all things into consideration, I believe it was one of the best conferences the Massachusetts District has ever had, and one that will result in much good. Monday five were led into a watery grave, and thus the good work goes on. Bro. Bond remains in Boston for the present. Bro. Sheehy goes to Brockton on Wednesday the 29th, and is to be in Fall River on Sunday, November 3d.

Rejoicing in the truth, I remain your brother in Christ.

GEORGE W. ROBLEY.

NEWCASTLE, Pa., Sept. 26th.

Bro. Blair:—As it has been some time since we have had the privilege to meet with the Saints of God, we have moved back to our old home, thinking to better our temporal conditions. We feel quite at a loss without meetings to attend, or even the society of the brethren and sisters. No one can appreciate this until they have had a trial of it.

Newcastle has a population of about thirteen thousand, and there are quite a number of different creeds and sects here, all claiming to be in the right. I heard a number of ministers telling quite a large congregation that they did not think it made any difference what you belong to, if you only believe in the Lord and confess him before man—that God the Father wouldn't ask us what church we belonged to. We thank God for the light we have received different. In all this large city there seems to be no one belonging to the church but myself and husband, and when we talk to some of our friends about the church they say, "Why don't some of your preachers come here so we can hear the gospel as they preach it, that we may know who is right." If Bro. G. T. Griffiths or any Elders are passing through here, we should like to have a call from them, to see if an opening might be had, as we will aid in getting one if possible. We live within one hundred yards from the Buffalo, New York and Philadelphia depot, on the east side of the city. I remain as ever in the one faith,

SARAH WALTEBAUGH.

LEAVES FROM THE TREE OF LIFE.

THERE IS A GOD.

THERE is a God, a being in whom is all power, knowledge, wisdom and goodness, the creator of all things visible and invisible, who upholdeth all things by the word of his power. This truth stands revealed in holy writ; and is testified of through the successive ages by men who have lived in such harmony with his will as to enable them to receive this testimony. Moses was privileged to receive a knowledge of this truth, and to record it for the instruction of future generations, and here is the testimony which the Infinite One commanded him to write: "I am the beginning and the end; the Almighty God. By mine Only Begotten I created these things. Yea, in the beginning I created the heaven, and the earth upon which thou standest." Genesis, first and second chapters (Inspired Translation). But Moses was not the first to whom this revelation had been given, Adam, Seth, Enoch, Noah, Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, had received the knowledge long before Moses' day that all things were created by and through this being. Again, this knowledge was received by many after his day. David says, "By the word of the Lord were the heavens made; and all the host of them by the breath of his mouth."—Ps. 33:6. Isaiah after testifying in chapter 6th, that he "saw the Lord sitting upon a throne," declares in chap. 42:5, 8, "Thus saith God, the Lord, he that created the heavens and stretched them out; he that spread forth the earth and that which cometh out of it; he that giveth breath unto the people upon it, and spirit to them that walk therein. . . . I am the Lord."

After the Lord had revealed to Job the fact that Omnipotence "laid the foundation of the earth, (chap. 38), Job declares in chapter 42:5, "I have heard of thee by the hearing of the ear; but now mine eye seeth thee." So that Adam, Enoch, Abraham, Jacob, Isaiah and Job, all saw God, as did also Moses. Solomon gives utterances as follows: "The Lord by wisdom hath founded the earth, by understanding hath he established the heavens."—Prov. 3:19. The prophet Nehemiah says, "Thou, even thou, art Lord alone; thou hast made heaven, the heaven of heavens, with all their host, the earth, and all things that are therein, the seas, and all that is therein, and thou preservest them all: and the host of heaven worshippeth thee."—Neh. 9:6. The New Testament continues the evidence: "In the beginning was the gospel preached through the Son. And the gospel was the word, and the word was with the Son, and the Son was with God, and the Son was of God. The same was in the beginning with God. All things were made by him; and without him was not any thing made which was made."—John 1: 1-3. Peter declares: "The heavens and the earth standing in the water and out of the water, were created by the word of God."—2 Pet. 3: 5. Paul says, "By him were all things created, that are in heaven, and that are in earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones, or dominions, principalities or powers; all things were created by him, and for him; and he is before all things, and by him all things consist."—Col. 1: 16, 17.

The same truth was made known upon the Western Continent, see Book of Mormon. Lehi exclaims, "Great and marvelous are thy works, O Lord God Almighty! Thy throne is high in the heavens, and thy power, and goodness, and mercy are over all the inhabitants of the earth."—Page 2, par. 7. (Lamoni edition). Nephi testifies: "Behold, the Lord hath created the earth that it should be inhabited; and he hath created his children that they should possess it."—page 39, par. 25. Quoting Isaiah, "Hearken unto me, O Jacob, and Israel my called; for I am he; I am the first and also the last. Mine hand hath also laid the foundation of the earth, and my right hand hath spanned the heavens."—page 46, par. 3. Lehi says, "There is a God, and he hath created all things, both the heavens and the earth, and all things that in them is: both things to act, and things to be acted upon; and to bring about his eternal purposes in the end of man."—page 57, par. 7. Jacob declares: "For behold, by the power of his word man came upon the face of the earth; which earth was created by the power of his word."—page 119, par. 3.

Thus we see the agreement of these two records which God has given to man. I have only selected a few out of the many testimonies in each of those records, but sufficient to show their agreement. The first revelation given to man in these last days for the ushering in of the dispensation of the fulness of times was given in answer to prayer, to a young boy, Joseph Smith, who was earnestly seeking to know the way that leads to eternal life. In that vision two glorious personages appeared to him, and one pointing to the other said, "This is my beloved son, hear him." See "Joseph Smith the Prophet," p. 78. This youth continued to receive manifestations of God's changeless love until he was enabled to say, "By these things we know there is a God in heaven who is infinite and eternal, from everlasting to everlasting the same unchangeable God, the framer of heaven and earth and all things which are in them, and that he created man male and female; after his own image and in his own likeness created he them."—Doc. and Cov. p. 94, par. 4.

Many other glorious testimonies have been given in these last days confirmatory of the records of Judah and Ephraim, but the lack of space will not permit their insertion here. The foregoing testimonies relating to the existence of a Supreme Being are strictly in harmony with each other, though given to different persons in different ages and countries. Nor are they contradicted by observation, reason, or experience. Reason tells us that this ponderous earth could not spring from nothing. Either it eternally existed in its present form, or was the work of some formative power producing it out of matter that already existed. To say that it eternally existed in its present form, is to deny that there was any purpose to be answered in its existence. But the fact that there is evidence of arrangement and design in its organic structure, is evidence of a purpose. Its rocky ribs are clothed with generous mold; this mold is composed of very different elements; and these elements are so harmoniously combined as to produce an infinite variety of vegetable life. And this vegetable matter that springs from the face of the earth is capable not only of sustaining a higher order of existence, but of contributing almost infinite pleasure to intelligent beings, and affording them the sustenance necessary to sustain their physical frames. The solid rocks themselves are so arranged that they can be used for the comfort and convenience of man in a thousand different ways. But it is not only in earth's formation that design and arrangement are seen. In every blade of grass, in every leaf, in every flower and tree,—in fact in every species of vegetation, small or great, the most beautiful order is visible, and these in their turn contribute to the support of animal life. Thus we see the facts agree with holy writ: "And to every beast of the earth, and to every fowl of the air, and to everything that creepeth upon the earth, wherein I grant life, there shall be given every clean herb for meat."—Gen. 1: 32 (Insp. Tran.)

When we come to the animal creation we find also a vast variety of species, each having a particular part to play in the economy of creation, and, so far as human observation has reached, all and every species fill some important part and place in that economy. Here, then, is another evidence of design and arrangement.

But this is more evident to our limited vision when we examine the organic structure of the various species of the animal world. These present the most wonderful evidences of intelligent design that we have yet considered. Examine any of the myriad organisms of animal life, and the mind is at once filled with wonder and surprise. In fact, such consummate skill as is manifest therein could not be conceived of had not observation made us aware of its wondrous work. Indeed, it may be truly said of all the animal creation, "They are fearfully and wonderfully made." Then add the fact that all these animal forms possess the power of independent action, with sufficient intelligence to govern that action for their individual comfort, and the darkest mind must see the overwhelming evidence that exists in favor of there being a supreme, designing and creating power.

But if our investigations cease with the lower animal world, the intelligent mind is still at a loss to discern an adequate purpose for the display of such infinite wisdom and stupendous power. Why should earth be so formed, its constituent elements so organized as to produce the teeming variety of beautiful and useful species of vegetation? While the lower animal creation may subsist upon these, there are ten thousand uses to which these varieties of vegetation may be applied, which the limited intelligence of the lower orders of animal life could never discern; nor could they appropriate them to those uses if they could discern them; hence the purpose of earth's creation is not completed in them. It is evident that while the beasts of the field, the fowls of the air, the fishes of the sea, and every thing that creepeth upon the earth may subsist upon the fruits thereof, yet the earth and all its fruits were not created only and simply for the brute creation. But now we find a higher order of existence, possessing intelligence sufficient to appreciate all the beauties and glories of this creation, with power to appropriate all things, animal or vegetable, to its use and comfort, yea, even the elements which surround him and which enter into his being. Even the lower animal creation is made subservient to his wants and will, and earth yields her treasures at his command. From these facts we reasonably conclude that all things here below were created for him; hence in his existence we find the purpose for which all things upon the earth, in the earth, and in the sea, as well as in the firmament above, were called into being. These facts, so manifest to the observant mind, are in perfect harmony with the revealed history of creation:—"And I, God, created man in mine own image, in the image of mine Only Begotten; male and female created I them. And I, God, blessed them, and said unto them, Be fruitful, and multiply, and replenish the earth, and subdue it; and have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over every living thing that moveth upon the earth. And I, God, said unto man, Behold, I have given you every herb bearing seed, which is upon the face of the earth; and every tree in the which shall be the fruit of a tree, yielding seed; to you it shall be for meat."—Gen. 1: 29-31, of Inspired Translation. "For thus saith the Lord that created the heavens; God himself that formed the earth and made it, He created it not in vain, He formed it to be inhabited."—Isa. 45: 18. "I have made the earth and created man upon it."—Isa. 45: 12.

With this testimony the Book of Mormon perfectly agrees. "Behold the Lord hath created the earth that it should be inhabited; and he hath created his children that they should possess it."—1 Nephi, p. 39. Of man David says, "Thou hast made him a little lower than the angels, and hast crowned him with glory and honor. Thou madest him to have dominion over the work of thine hands; thou hast put all things under his feet; all sheep and oxen, yea, and the beasts of the field; the fowl of the air, and the fish of the sea, and whatsoever passeth through the paths of the sea."—Ps. 8: 5-8.

In a later revelation we read: "And again, verily I say unto you, all wholesome herbs God hath ordained for the constitution, nature, and use of man: every herb in the season thereof, and every fruit in the season thereof. . . . Yea, flesh also, of the beasts and of the fowls of the air, I, the Lord, hath ordained for the use of man."—Doc. Cov. 86: 2.

Thus we see the beautiful harmony in the testimony given in ancient and modern revelation, and in the facts as we see them existing all around us, all pointing to the infinite wisdom that planned and the Omnipotent arm that executed his purpose in the creation of the earth, and the heavens, and all things that are therein. Still, the ultimate and eternal purpose can not be discerned in the visible manifestations of this wisdom and power. We may look in vain to the stupendous heavens as we see them roll in their order and splendor, or to this ponderous earth with its evidences of matchless wisdom and power, or to the fearfully and wonderfully constructed being called man for whom all things were created, to learn the purpose of his creation. Grand and noble as he is,—the image of his Creator and only "a little lower than the angels"—he is but the creature, the ever dependent creature upon the hand that formed him and sustains him. There are no means known to him, apart from the power that made him, by which he can find out, why he is. He knows that he is, and that he did not produce himself, but why he is, and for what purpose, the power that made him, alone can reveal. That purpose must be in keeping with the gigantic and wondrous work performed. It must also be in keeping with the nature and character of the Being who created him. "If a tree is known by its fruits," and a man by his works, surely we may be permitted to judge of God by his works. And from these evidences we are forced to conclude that he is the embodiment of all goodness, and that the purposes of such a Being can only be good.

But this truth does not reveal that purpose; it only prepares our minds to receive a revelation of that purpose. Here, while man is the recipient of innumerable blessings, he is the subject of many sorrows, his cup of life is mingled with much bitterness and pain, and when he has drained that cup to the dregs he becomes the subject of death, and "the place that once knew him knows him no more." If this is the end of man then this goodly heritage has been created for him in vain; that god-like frame has failed to answer a purpose commensurate with the wisdom that gave it existence; that mind, capable of almost infinite possibilities, "clothed with glory and honor," has shone its brief hour for an end insignificant and not in keeping with its own nature, to say nothing of the character of the ineffable God.

It is not enough to say that man as a race is progressive, and that each generation lives for the benefit and progress of succeeding generations. If the individual lives not again, he can have no pleasure in the well-being of succeeding ages, since he is not permitted to participate in their enjoyment. And it is gross injustice to cause the individual being, or generation, to suffer the untold evils that flesh is heir to, when he can not share in the enjoyment that his toils and pains and miseries have procured. As each individual is created with those keen sensibilities that make him susceptible to every pain or pleasure, and as pain is mostly predominant in this life it would be in keeping with Infinite justice, that, while each individual of suffering humanity might be used as an instrument to promote the happiness and well being of his successors, he should be permitted to ultimately share in the fulness of their enjoyment. This can not be if three score years and ten is to measure the entire existence of man.

Who shall measure the capabilities of the human mind? To Adam was given the dominion over all the earth. His children were to share it with him. No mere babe in power and comprehension, this masterpiece of God's workmanship!

Enoch, by the aid of the Spirit, scanned the mighty works of God, and looked down through unborn ages, reading the eternal purpose as it stood engraved in letters of light on the stupendous events as they rolled before his astonished vision. Noah was enabled to exercise such wisdom as gave him power over the elements, and as enabled him to ride safely over the angry billows of a wave-washed world. Moses, who records these facts, was enabled to comprehend the mighty works of God with sufficient clearness that he could receive and write a history of the creation, which history, the events of more than six thousand years have corroborated, but never contradicted. Time would fail to tell of a Solomon, Isaiah, Job, Paul, and all the ancient worthies together, with a Newton, Galileo, Copernicus, Bacon, Watt and Stephenson, with the whole galaxy of mighty minds who have solved many of the great problems of their times, and given evidence to the truth that there are powers in the mind of man, that, when aided by the Spirit that guides into all truth, there seems to be no limits beyond which they may not reach.

With these facts before us, are we justified in concluding that the eternal purpose of God in our creation is fulfilled in the narrow limits of three score years and ten? The human mind yearns for eternity, and nought but the breadth of its countless ages can satisfy it. This fact is strong evidence of its eternal nature. But we must look to revelation for the unfolding of the eternal purpose for which these powers are given.

As one of old has said, "Canst thou by searching find out God?" "No man knoweth the Son but the Father; neither knoweth any man the Father save the Son, and they to whom the Son will reveal himself; they shall see the Father also."—Matt. 11: 27. "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him. But God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit; for the Spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God. . . . The things of God knoweth no man, except he has the Spirit of God."—1 Cor. 2: 9-11. The whole history of man seals the truth of the above scriptures. Without revelation from God, man has been utterly at a loss to find him out, or to know his purposes. And now it becomes our duty to search out the great purpose for which God created man. It is in vain to look to man for this revelation. "The world by (its) wisdom knew not God."—1 Cor. 1: 21. Hence we must look to God alone for the revelation of his eternal purpose. Let us search that word, not with prying curiosity, not desiring to show our smartness in discovering something new, but with reverent hearts seeking to understand better our relation to him, his will in us, and the duties and responsibilities that devolve upon us; that we may be better fitted for the business of life, namely, the service of God.

THOUGHTS SELECT.

THE waters of our baptism were disturbed on the 22d ult., by the presence of two young women receiving the vows of that sacred rite, and there are other persons having the same intention and we hope will come ere long. The services of our church are well attended, and the Holy Spirit deigns to bless. During the past few months the Spirit of God has blessed me with most excellent liberty in advocating the blessed word, sometimes the Spirit resting upon me as it were, "without measure." How joyful is its influence, enlightening its power, and enriching in its presence!

The sacrament services have been blest at times much, the Lord bearing witness by his goodness of the sanctity of the same. The young people's meetings are also blessed of God, proving a benefit to all who attend, and the attendance is well kept up. We have them every Friday evening. We have good prayers, praise and testimony, and the telling of things God does for the young. I am deeply interested in the welfare of the young people of the church. It is better for them to serve God than the world. Lasting pleasures, true and rich, are to be found in God's service; pleasures transient only and airy are found in the world's service. Which will they have? It is not the design of the gospel to disrobe us of the human, but of the evil nature therein found. Paul said, "But I seek to subdue the sin that dwelleth in me." The design is to elevate, enlighten, enrich, improve and develop all the good there is in man, and raise it to a standard of perfection. And this work of perfecting shall go on here until dissolution comes,—then the perfection that budded here shall bloom hereafter in the midst of God's glory.

Our Sabbath School has increased in numbers, and good interest is manifest. The children seem to come with eager steps and go away with smiling faces. My soul and life are in "the work." I love it beyond expression, and desire to see all "who have named the name of Christ, depart from all iniquity."

All the evidence any one may ask for the divinity of Christianity, is to see the workings of its sacred power in the life of those who cherish its holy principles and make effort to abide by its proper decisions. When we see sinful lives transformed into holy lives, hardened hearts softened, dark minds made light, cursing turned to blessing, profanity to prayer and praise, ribald songs to hymns of glory, a Godless home to a God-blessed home, altars of scorn and sin to altars of living sacrifice to God, idleness to thrift, rags to clothing, want turned to plenty, hatred turned to love,—we ask what hath wrought thus? And the answer is,—“A soul has been born of God, and where the gospel was lacking, it now lives and reigns in power! O, blessed work! O, holy joy! Transporting theme! What rapture do I know, what ecstasy I feel!” I know of some such instances.

A word about tobacco. There are some of our people in different parts of the world, that make sport of “sectarian people” and churches; but let me give a few items from these “sectarians,” good for “saintarians” to follow and imitate.

TOBACCO.

“Dear Interior :—Will you allow me a few questions in reference to the over-supply of severe blows which tobacco is just now getting from the Cumberland Presbyterian Assembly and the reformed Presbyterian Synod? What harm would result if tobacco should be abandoned by every disciple of Christ? Does the use of it help the preachers of the gospel better to discharge their sacred duties? Can the Sabbath School teacher be more successful in leading his pupils to Christ by its use? If I, who am a follower of Christ professedly, use the weed, will not the young men who come under my influence be encouraged to continue the vile habit?”

In a book I have, entitled, “Wonders of Prayer,” I find the following from a gentleman:—“Yes; as respects to tobacco, I became convicted of its sinfulness by a voice saying, ‘That is not the way to glorify God; stop, and stop now.’ And from that moment he never used it, neither does he in any way like the smell, or even the sight of tobacco. Another one says:—“I had used tobacco from my childhood, and the love and use thereof grew upon me. I became convicted of its sinfulness, and went to God and said: Destroy the appetite and give me power over it. Save me that I may glorify thee as a God of power for our present sins, and I will glorify thee ever more.’ I wrote out the contract and signed it, and from that blessed afternoon have no recollection of ever desiring it even.”

This church of Christ professes superior light, power, glory, and honor. Imagine before you a picture of a great column of glory extending from earth up into heaven. Around this glory-pillar sits a large number of Latter Day Saints, talking of this glory, and rejoicing in it. But now you see a strange sight—they are spitting mouthfull of tobacco-juice upon it, puffing tobacco smoke at it, and rubbing snuff on it! Commencing at the top of this glory-pillar extending on down its brilliant sides are to be seen these words: “Tobacco is not for the body, neither for the belly, and is not good for man, but is an herb for bruises and all sick cattle, to be used with judgment and skill.” (I italicize to call special attention). This message they seem to spit at in defiance, as much as to say: “We don’t care what He says about it.” Now, maybe this is plain; but is it not true? And when I see and hear of people without the light we claim to have abandoning evil things, I think we who claim so much ought to be found doing as well, if not better. Still, Jesus has said:—“Except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the scribes and pharisees, ye shall in no wise enter into the kingdom of heaven.” There is too much of this kind of talk—“I guess I’m as good as any body else.” “Anybody” is a very indefinite personage, and of “doubtful character.” Maybe we are, and maybe we ain’t. Perhaps we ought to be better. There is no one so safe to follow as Christ. He said: “Follow me.” And He is the only one found among men that even dared to say it. He, in speaking of our duties, said: “If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them.” Said an author, upon reading this, “I shall delight myself in doing.”

This city is still cursed by the presence of the liquor traffic, and I am sorry to say we are troubled by its unhallowed flow touching upon and even defiantly entering within the threshold of the sanctuary of God! This causes me much pain and grief. Think of a professed child of God mingling with the children of the devil. Think of a hand once raised in the name of the Trinity to administer an ordinance of God’s house, now raising the intoxicating dram to the lips. Think of a hand that has swung open the portals of God’s house, swinging the creaking gates of a saloon. Think of hearts that might have received glory’s crown, now rent by the anguish of a living hell; of feet that have walked to the holy altar, walking to the drunkard’s bar! Again; think of lips through which have passed sacramental emblems, now receiving now through them the fiery rum of a liquor hell. How can any member or officer of Christ’s Church in any wise favor a traffic, the tide of which beats and dashes at the very foundation of the Church of God? “Woe unto him that putteth the bottle to his neighbor’s lips to make him drunken also.” We do this deed, if we after any manner favor its sale. No man can preach Christ and saloon. Its all “twaddle” to me, for any one to cry—“I’m a strong temperance man, but I can’t go prohibition.” If prohibition will not prohibit, “high license” never can! “High license” tends to concentrate the traffic, establish gilded saloons furnished with music, collect supposed gentry, and to all appearances would make the traffic respectable. Respectability! Respectability it shall not have.

This is no political question: it is a graver one—of morality, sociality, and spirituality. It knocks at the portals of the church, asking for recognition. Shall it have it, or no? If prohibition does not prohibit, it is because office holders perjure themselves. This perjury is too often upheld by a debauched public sentiment, and by Christians (?) in Satanic garb, who fear to put forth their trembling hand to smite the vital part, and say to the traffic, “Thou shalt die!” Then there are “policy-people,” those who fear giving offense by opposing the traffic. We’ll lose trade.” “We’ll gender strife.” “We’ll make ourselves offensive.” “We’ll appear obnoxious,” etc., etc. I read in an M. E. church paper a few weeks ago the following by the editor: “The ministry of the M. E. church have championed the cause of prohibition, and promise to stand as a solid line against the saloon traffic.” How I heartily wished that could be said of every Latter Day Saint minister. Weak-kneed? What for? Anti-prohibition? For why?

Is there no beseeching voice from heaven; no warning voice from hell? Shall there not come from the realms of glory a power, and from the regions of darkness a fear, that shall strike the soul from above and beneath, and vibrate to every part, and teach wisdom to him who indulges in the dram cup! Shall not some power wrench from the tippler’s hand the cup that darkens, blights, and damns! Shall not the promised glory from above, the impending doom from beneath, show his horror-stricken conscience the possibilities of eternal salvation, and the certainties of eternal misery unless he changes his maddened career?

Some say: “No man has the right to tell me what I shall eat or drink or wear.” But there are men who have the right to tell others what they may not know, and if they know, do not heed. If persons do not know the nature of poison, and I do, it is my duty to make every effort to prohibit its dangerous use. Every minister for Christ preaches a gospel of prohibition. It prohibits theft, lying, stealing, murder, and prescribes penalties for transgressors; and it equally forbids and prohibits drunkenness, and tipping as well. If a man obeys the gospel he should forego his whisky, his wine, his ale, his beer, his mixed drinks, and remember—and remember—that the taints of the still, and vat, and tub, are not the “sweet smelling savors” to be offered in the courts of the Lord. Our national traits and eccentricities of life and habit must be laid down; “the old man with all his deeds” must be “crucified” upon entering the church. I excuse no man, I believe God excuses no man, for retaining any rum, wine, beer, ale, or whisky habits. The Lord specifically states that strong drinks are not good for internal use, and shall not be used by his people. And even wine is restricted to the sacramental board. But, O, that much abused “Word of Wisdom!” How we empty our tea and coffee grounds on it; how we toss on it our wine slops, beer slops, ale slops, and our “cider dribs,” and try to cover it up. How we shoot at it, and seek to excuse ourselves because of headache, toothache, stomachache, and nervelessness! O, you “weakest of all Saints, who are or can be called Saints;" why do you these things, or any other evil, and then cry, "sectarian?" Why neglectest thou the precepts of Christ? Know ye not that Jesus said, "Thou shalt live by every word that proceeds forth out of the mouth of God?" O, church of Christ arise, and don your garments clean and white! "Ye can not serve God and mammon."

Yours fraternally,

J. F. McDOWELL.

COUNCIL BLUFFS, IOWA.

THE WORK IN WALES.

RESPONDING to an invitation from Elder Thomas Taylor, President of the English Mission, to attend with him the South Wales district conference held at Cardiff, I left Manchester on the 11th September, and was joined during the journey by President Taylor, Elder C. H. Caton, also brother and sister Merideth—all of the Birmingham district. We arrived at our journey's end in due time, and were kindly met and provided for by the Saints of the Cardiff Branch.

On the following morning we met at the Town Hall, which the Mayor had very kindly lent for the occasion, and had there the pleasure of meeting with quite a number of our Welsh brethren and sisters. We were in due course invited to take part in the business sessions of the conference, presided over by Elder Wm. Morris, assisted by Elders T. E. Jenkins, J. R. Gibbs and others. These are men who I believe have labored hard for the purification and success of the church in the "Principality," and are now ably seconded by Elders Cope, Weberly, and other brethren in connection with the Cardiff Branch. The sessions passed off very pleasantly under the wise supervision of the brethren before named.

The afternoon meeting was opened in charge of Elder Jenkins, and addressed by Elder C. H. Caton. Elder Thomas Taylor took charge of the evening meeting, which was addressed by the writer. There were a large number of strangers present at both meetings, many of whom left the Hall in deeper sympathy with our doctrine than when they entered.

So far as I could gather from the reports given in at the business meeting, the conference is not increasing with the rapidity that those present could have desired, but the prospects for the future are brighter than they have been in the past, and I feel sure that a few years under the guidance of those now to the front will change things for the better, and enable the brethren in charge to report in a manner more congenial to their desire for the prosperity of the church.

There are here, as elsewhere, reasons why the church is not able to report greater progress, chief amongst which is the disposition to follow after the soul-destroying and seductive pleasures of the world. The carnal appetite is permitted to reign, while the crucifying of the "lusts of the flesh" is ignored. Men and women fail to appreciate the fruits of the Spirit as enumerated by Paul, in the fifth chapter of Galatians. We are apt to forget that progress—that is, substantial progress—can only be measured according to the degree of self-purification and sanctity attained by the membership of the church. Decorum and personal purity must be insisted upon, especially as regards the official membership, if we would have the work to prosper under our hands. By decorum I mean that circumspect walk and conversation that alone betokens the higher spiritual influence that marks the Saint of God in deed as well as word. Elders or other officers of the church who stand in front of our places of meeting smoking vile tobacco scarcely represent the ideal official of the Church of Christ. Such conduct does not add to the dignity of the man or to the honor and renown of the church he represents; neither is it any special mark to the world that he is a servant of Christ or a brother and co-laborer with the Apostles of old. It reflects dishonor upon the Church of God when professed servants of Jesus honor His laws in the breach, rather than in the observance.

I have it upon indisputable authority that not long ago a worthy Elder of one of the Welsh branches was requested to visit one of the other branches for the purpose of administering to the sick. Upon his arrival he was surprised to find both an Elder and a Priest in a most reprehensible state of drunkenness. The same authority mentioned another brother who has been in the habit of putting forth his energy as a preacher of the gospel when in the disreputable condition, arising from an over dose of strong drink; and men wonder why the progress made by the church should be so slow. I have myself heard Elders discourse eloquently upon the beauty and purity of the morality taught by Jesus, and yet they have patronized both the pipe and the dram-shop, apparently without one thought of shame at the incongruity of their position. O, consistency, thou art indeed a jewel!

It is no use mincing matters; the drinking customs of the people are the curse of the church. Those who do such things do not walk worthy of their vocation as servants of the Master. To thus walk can not be reconciled with the scriptural injunction "Be ye clean;" or with the "word of wisdom" and counsel given to the church to-day. And it is not too much to say, that the officer of the church who wilfully ignores this counsel is unworthy of his vocation, and is not "clean" as a man should be clean who is honored with the responsibilities of God's priesthood. In thus writing I condemn no man; but the word of God will either condemn or save every man or woman, be they Saint or sinner.

After services, the remainder of Sunday evening was spent in singing the songs of Zion in company with the Saints to our mutual pleasure and edification; after which Bro. Taylor and myself retired to the house of our host, Bro. Thomas Gold, whose excellent wife had done so much to make us comfortable, for which we sincerely thank them both, asking our Father's blessing upon them, and trusting that ere long our hostess may be numbered along with her husband amongst the household of faith, and thus become entitled to the gracious favor of the Master.

On Monday the 13th inst. I parted company with the Saints, and also bid good bye to the brethren and sister who had accompanied me from England, and proceeded upon my journey to pay a long promised visit to Bro. and sister Lloyd, of Carnarvon, North Wales, where I arrived after a ten hour's railway journey. Bro. Lloyd, who is the captain of a vessel was at sea, but expected home almost daily. Sister Lloyd and her sons, Robert and William, and Bro. John Elias Hughes, a worthy Elder of the Welsh Church received me very kindly, and I found the whole family deeply imbued with the Spirit of the gospel, holding it in simple faith above all and everything this world can give. They are well respected by their neighbors, and exercise a benificent influence in their immediate neighborhood. Elder Hughes is a good faithful soul, with mind intent to do the Master's will.

Bro. Oates of Sheffield looked in during my stay, having made a flying visit to the town. With him and Elder Hughes I had the pleasure of teaching the gospel from the side of "Tut Hill," a commanding position just within the limits of this ancient town. While here I thought of one of old, abler and worthier than I, who thus addressed the people from a similar position near the ancient Greek capitol, declaring with the same authority, the unsearchable riches of Christ. Our esteemed brother, Captain Robert Lloyd, arrived on Thursday morning, and we were mutually glad to see each other. After comparing notes with him for an hour or two, I bade them all good bye, proceeding by rail to Menia Bridge, and from there by steamer to Liverpool, and on by rail to my home in Manchester, where I arrived shortly after ten p.m., having reaped blessings and profit from the experiences obtained.

Apologizing for time and space occupied, I remain, dear Herald, your humble admirer, and co-laborer in the Master's vineyard,
JOSEPH DEWSNUP, Sen.,
President of the Manchester District.

NEVER in the last 1,800 years have the fields been so white to the harvest as to-day. All lands are open to the gospel tidings. Old religions are losing their hold on the hearts of the people in heathen nations. Millions, all over the world, are weary of sin, and are reaching out for the Bread of Life. In our own country there is a general interest in the truths of Christianity, and a willingness to listen to the gospel. The signs of the times all point to the final triumph, and to the coming of the Messiah to reign upon this earth. All that is needed is a consecrated church to go forth in a mighty faith, with the seed in one hand, and the sickle in the other, and the glory of the Lord will cover the earth.

THE Chicago Mail uttered a great truth when it said: "The increase of suicides in Germany keeps pace with the growth of materialism. Life isn't of much value to a man bereft of faith and hope,

THE MISSIONARY'S FAITH.

AMERICAN BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS
IN SESSION AT DES MOINES.

The American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions of the Congregational Church began its seventy-seventh annual convention in the Grand Opera House, Des Moines, Iowa, October 5th. The great question of post-mortem redemption, which threatens to split Congregationalism in two, has not yet been brought formally before the board, but there is abundant evidence of strong differences on the subject. The present indications are that the conservatives, or anti-Andover party, are largely in the majority, both in the honorary and corporate divisions of the board. The conservatives are busily engaged to-night in missionary work among the doubting brethren and those inclined to the new theology, and anti-Andover literature is being freely distributed in every direction. The minority, however, forms a good sized party, and is led by some of the ablest men on the board. The fight will come when the case of the Rev. Robert A. Hume is brought before the board, which will probably be to-morrow. Mr. Hume comes of a missionary family, and has been over twelve years in the service of the board at Ahmednagar in India. It is conceded on all sides that he has been a zealous, effective missionary and most successful worker, interesting Englishmen in his labors, raising funds, superintending evangelistic work, helping to establish a native theological seminary, and editing a weekly newspaper. He came home to America to rest. That's where he made the mistake, or perhaps not so much in that as in the fact that he did not keep his mouth shut when he got here. At the last anniversary dinner given by the alumni at Andover he was unexpectedly called on to speak. In this speech he said that a full and universal atonement by Christ had its natural and logical conclusion in a universal providence through Christ. Then he referred to the more liberal theology that was gaining ground at Andover, and intimated that the adoption of such a phase of thought would be a great relief to missionaries, who found it hard to make the heathen believe that all their ancestors were in hell for not accepting a salvation they had never heard of.

All this talk was rank heresy to the old school, which rules the Prudential Committee. This committee is the executive and managing power of the board, and is invested with all authority. Its head and front is Dr. E. K. Alden, whose doctrine of eternal damnation is said to be broad and rigid enough to condemn Andover College and its new theology people to the everlasting company of the unregenerate heathen. This, perhaps, is an exaggeration, but there is no doubt that the doctor is a very orthodox theologian. And so it came to pass that when Mr. Hume wanted to go back a few months ago the Prudential Committee said: "Not yet. Wait awhile." Mr. Hume is still waiting, and his friends are kicking a good deal about it. The committee has rejected several would-be missionaries for the same reason it rejects Mr. Hume. Generally the question at issue has not been fairly stated in the press. The committee wants men who will positively subscribe to the doctrine that all who are not saved by Christ while on earth will be eternally damned. Shall the Hindoos and Mahomedans, and millions of heathen who never heard of Christ then be damned? Hume and the Andover people reply: "We do not know. The Bible does not tell us. When the Bible speaks of the light that 'lighteth every man that cometh into the world,' and again that Christ 'should taste death for every man,' it looks as if there was a gospel for every man, even a heathen, but we don't know; we shall just say nothing about it and leave the matter with God."

This reply will not do the committee—they must have a positive assertion. There are several horns to this dilemma. The Andover rulers say: "If the heathen are to be damned who have never heard the gospel, are you not responsible for the damnation of those who would hear it if you let the missionaries go to work. By keeping these men back are you not helping to fill the bottomless pit, if your own theory is correct?" It also is asked: "Are infants and idiots to be eternally damned? Where is the Scripture for such a belief? If this is true can you make your theory consistent with the attribute of justice in the Almighty?"

On the other side there is the question: "If there is redemption beyond the grave, post-mortem mercy, future probation, as Andover holds to be within the limits of theological possibility, why send missionaries to the heathen at all? If they never hear of Christ they have at least a chance to be saved, whereas if they reject Him they will be damned sure." And thus in every hotel and religious family boarding-house in Des Moines to-night the fight wages, and the hoary chestnuts of theological controversy, handed down from the medieval schools, are banded about as though they were the first fruits of the tree of knowledge. The dispute, after all, seems to be a good deal of a vulgar money matter. The Prudential Committee practically says that free congregations may be liberal in theology if they want to, but that the board pays for a particular sort of theology and must have just that and nothing else. The cash receipts for the current year as disclosed to-day were $658,754, which will pay for a lot of theology of any kind.

The Rev. C. K. Alden, Home Secretary, read the report of the committee, and as was expected, touches inferentially upon the great question of the meeting—namely: future probation. The following position taken by the board thirty-seven years ago is reiterated with unqualified approval: The board does not assume to decide upon the fitness of an individual to be a minister of the gospel; but it is their duty to decide, and that intelligently, on his original and continued fitness to be sustained by the funds committed to their disposal as a missionary to the heathen. The contributors to the fund for foreign missions demand more evidence of faithfulness in the preaching of the gospel than can possibly be in possession even of the permanent ecclesiastical bodies scattered over our country, and they will hold the Prudential Committee and the board responsible for seeing that no part of their contributions go for propagation of error, either in doctrine or in practice." The drift of Dr. Alden's report sustains the prudential committee in refusing to commission missionaries who believed what is called the "new departure," but does so very carefully in guarded language, which was warmly applauded:

The opera-house was packed to its utmost limits to-night, not less than two thousand people being present to hear Dr. Withrow's sermon. Nearly one thousand people were turned from the doors unable to get standing room. About fifty corporate members of the board and a large number of ladies had seats on the stage. Dr. Withrow preached an hour and twenty minutes. His subject was the duty of the Christian world to the heathen, and his text Acts 26: 18, 19. His sermon might be fairly described as moderately conservative. He talked all round the questions at issue; but did not face any of them. He held that the heathen are condemned because they violate the law of God written on their hearts. The rejection of the teachings of their consciences was as condemnatory as the rejection of the Cross. They are not damned because they are mere pagans, but because they are sinners. A remark to the effect that the church had no time to bother about dead and gone pagans called forth a round of applause.

REPORT OF THE UTAH COMMISSION.

The Utah Commission, by its Chairman, A. B. Carlton, has filed with the Secretary of the Interior its annual report, of which the following is a synopsis:

"During the year the law regarding the disfranchisement of polygamists and those living in unlawful cohabitation has been fully and successfully enforced. All such persons, with very few, if any exceptions, have been excluded from voting and holding offices. A large number have been fined and imprisoned in the penitentiary for polygamy or unlawful cohabitation. It is reported and believed by many resident non-Mormons that during the year a large number of polygamous marriages have taken place in the temples of Logan City and St. George, with the knowledge, approbation, and active co-operation of leading men of the Mormon Church. Whether upon the whole polygamous marriages are on the decrease in Utah is a matter on which different opinions are expressed, but in the more enlightened portions of the Territory, as, for example, Salt Lake City and its vicinity, very few polygamous marriages have occurred within the last year. The joint resolution now pending in both Houses of Congress proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States prohibiting and punishing polygamy in all the States and Territories, extending the judicial power of the Federal Government to the prosecution of such offenses, is recommended as a factor in preventing the crime."

The report calls attention to the magnitude of the evil by saying that there are more than 200,000 Mormons in the world, a large majority of whom live in Utah, and that while only a portion of them practice polygamy they all believe in it as a divine revelation. The only immediately effective remedy would be the use of the military, but the sense of modern civilization will not permit the employment of bayonets against women and children. The report further says:

"It is fully the duty of the Government to punish crimes within its jurisdiction, and religious liberty can not be pleaded as a bar to punishment for criminal acts in violation of the laws of the land and of social order. If present laws and the proposed constitutional amendments are not sufficient to suppress the evil, more stringent enactments must be adopted, and the result will be that, at no distant day, this relic of Asiatic barbarism will be swept from the land."—Chicago Tribune.

FIRM FOR POLYGAMY.

The fifty-sixth semi-annual conference of the Mormon Church convened October 6th at Coalville, a small isolated settlement in Summit County, Utah. The attendance was four hundred people. None of the recognized leaders were present except Apostle Richards, who opened the meeting. He exhorted the Saints to stand firm and never surrender their divine right, as revealed to them by the Prophet. An epistle from the First President, John Taylor, issued from his hiding-place, will be read before the conference closes Friday. It is believed that Richards, in his opening address, sounded the keynote of the epistle, and instead of an edict calling upon their followers to give up polygamy and respect the law, in accord with the more liberal and better-disposed Mormons, the policy of the priesthood will remain unchanged.—Chicago Tribune.

DES MOINES.

The conference of the above district convened September 10th, 1886, at Boonesboro, Iowa. W. C. Nirk presiding, H. A. McCoy district secretary. Preaching on Friday evening by W. T. Bozarth. Business session opened on Saturday at 9:30 a. m. The committee on credentials reported all the branches represented by delegates except Newton and Des Moines Valley. Branch reports read and passed.—Des Moines 89; including 4 Elders, 2 Priests, 4 Teachers, 1 Deacon; 2 baptized, 1 received and 1 removed by letter, 1 ordination, 1 marriage; Wm. N. Ray president, W. R. Chandler clerk. Boonesborough 62; including 5 Elders, 3 Priests, 3 Teachers, 1 Deacon; 2 removed, 2 expelled; William McBurney president, S. L. Ades clerk. Sheridan 55; including 1 Seventy, 1 Elder, 1 Priest, 1 Deacon; 2 baptized, 1 died; George Shimmel president, H. A. McCoy clerk. Newton 48; including 5 Elders, 3 Priests, 3 Teachers, 2 Deacons; 1 died; J. X. Davis president, W. E. Conner clerk. Edenville 74; including 5 Elders, 1 Priest, 2 Teachers; 6 removed by letter; W. C. Nirk president, J. T. Roberts clerk. Des Moines Valley, returned for correction. Elders' reports.—J. S. Roth had done work in the Eastern Iowa district, by request of the missionary in charge. George Shimmel had done all he could at home branch, visiting the district, and preaching in nearly all the branches. N. A. Baker had preached thirty-five times, baptized and confirmed ten, and administered to many sick. John Sayer had done all he could in the work. J. P. Knox had done some in the Galland's Grove district, done all he could, and desired to continue. I. M. Lane had preached some, would like to do more if opportunity offered. W. T. Bozarth, William N. Ray, William McBurney, Samuel McBurnie and W. C. Nirk, made verbal reports: each had done some work for the Master, and all desire to do more. Question from Des Moines branch by J. P. Knox: "Can a Deacon or a lay member preside over a branch?" The decision was reached that a lay member could not, but that a Deacon could when no higher authority was sustained in the branch. Bishop's agent, J. S. Roth, reported: on hand last report 78 cents, collected since $99 85, total $100 63; paid out $19 25, balance on hand $81 38. The following officers were sustained by motion: W. C. Nirk, president; J. S. Roth, vice-president; H. A. McCoy, secretary; J. S. Roth, Bishop's and book agent. The authorities of the church were sustained. Adjourned to meet in Des Moines, Friday, December 3d, 1886, at 7:30 p. m. Saturday evening, preaching by G. Shimmel and G. H. Gyke. Prayer meeting on Sunday, at 9:30 a. m., conducted by J. P. Knox, and William N. Ray. Preaching at eleven o'clock by J. S. Roth and J. P. Knox. Saints' meeting in the afternoon, conducted by W. C. Nirk and Samuel McBurnie, followed with preaching by N. A. Baker. Preaching in the evening by W. T. Bozarth assisted by J. S. Roth. At the close of this service a vote of thanks was given the Boonesborough Saints for their kindness and hospitality.

PHILADELPHIA.

The above district conference convened on Saturday evening, August 28th, 1886, at the house of Bro. Jacob Peters, 1739 North Ninth street, Philadelphia. The meeting was called to order by the secretary, Hosea H. Bacon. After singing and prayer, Bro. Joseph Squires was chosen president; Hosea H. Bacon, secretary. Branches Reported.—Philadelphia 52; including 5 Elders, 4 Priests, 3 Teachers, 2 Deacons; 1 received by letter, 1 died; Hosea H. Bacon president, Archibald Cameron clerk. New Park 17; including 1 Priest, 1 Teacher; 1 baptized, 1 marriage; M. O. Matthews president, J. L. Matthews clerk. Brooklyn 35; including 5 Elders, 4 Priests; 1 baptized; George Potts president, Joseph Squires, Jr., clerk. Hornerstown, no report. Bishop's Agent, Archibald Cameron, reported as follows: received during term $21 48; paid to Wm. H. Kelley $10; balance due church $11 48. Referred to auditing committee consisting of Joseph A. Stewart, Jacob Peters and William Street, who reported the account correct. The following officers reported in person: Elders Joseph A. Stewart, George Potts, and Joseph Squires; Priests William H. Harrison and Hosea H. Bacon. In the hall, South-west Corner of Eleventh and Girard avenue, Sunday morning, at half-past ten, Bro. Cameron offered his resignation as Bishop's Agent, giving as his reasons the fact that the Quorum of the Twelve, who are charged with the execution of the law of tithing, say that the Bishop's Agents should be Elders. After some discussion it was moved and seconded that Bro. Cameron act as Bishop's Agent next term. Carried. The branches in the District were requested to engage in Sunday School work, for the instruction of the children in the faith and doctrine of the church. Each branch was instructed to send a credentialed representative to the district conference. All Elders, Priests, Teachers, and Deacons, in the district are required to send in their licences to the district conference for indorsement, and that failing to report after due notice, their licences shall be recalled; and that failing to send in their licenses, it shall be the duty of the district clerk to publish their names in the Herald as not authorized representatives of the church. Bro. Joseph Squires was chosen president for the next term, and Bro. Hosea H. Bacon was sustained as secretary. Elders Joseph Squires and George Potts preached in the evening. Adjourned to meet the fourth Saturday in February, 1887.

TEXAS CENTRAL.

Conference of the above district convened with the Central branch, Saturday, September 11th, 1886. Bro. G. S. Hyde preached in the forenoon, and Bro. S. P. Sherrill in the afternoon. At eight p. m. met for business; pres. I. N. Roberts in the chair, and Elias Land secretary. The president requested the Elders to take seats on the right and the Priests on the left of the stand, and then announced the house ready for business. Branch reports were referred to a committee—Brn. Hyde and Robinson, for examination. Elders H. L. Thompson, J. A. Currie, Sr. (baptized 2), J. A. Currie Jr., S. P. Sherrill, (solemized 2 marriages), E. W. Nunley, S. W. Simmons, J. A. Robinson, G. S. Hyde (baptized 2), Elias Land, J. N. Roberts (baptized 14), reported in person. J. W. Bryan, W. G. Allen and H. Grim by letter. Priests S. R. Hay, J. L. Stone, C. C. Holcombe, and E. D. Thompson, and Wm. Wallies, Teacher, reported in person. The committee on branch reports examined those from Elkhart, Live Oak, and Texas Central branches, find them correct and recommend that they be accepted. The report was received and committee was released. Resolved, That this conference instruct the Bishop's Agent and the president in charge of the mission to negotiate for the purchase of a gospel tent to be used in the South-western Mission, and that they call upon the Saints to subscribe for the same. Sunday morning nine a. m., prayer meeting in charge of I. N. Roberts. At 11 a. m. preaching by Elder J. A. Robinson assisted by S. W. Simmons. At two p. m. prayer and sacrament meeting in charge of Elders G. S. Hyde and Elias Land. Several children were blessed and the sick were administered to. At half-past four o'clock preaching by J. A. Currie, Jr., assisted by S. P. Sherrill, and at eight p. m. by H. L. Thompson, assisted by J. A. Currie, Sr. Bishop's Agents report: On hand last report $4 50; received since $26.00; paid out $25.00; on hand $5.00. Resolved: That this conference request each Elder and Priest to seek to open up places, and preach as much as they can. Bro. I. N. Roberts was sustained president of the district until next conference, and Bro. Land secretary, Wm. M. Sherrill was sustained Bishop's Agent, and all Church authorities sustained. Adjourned to meet on Friday evening before the full moon in March, 1887.

INDEPENDENCE.

This district conference convened at the Saints' Chapel, Independence, Missouri, September 11th, 1886; J. W. Brackenbury president pro tem, T. W. Chatburn clerk. Branch reports.—Independence 445; including 1 Apostle, 1 High Priest, 2 Seventies, 31 Elders, 18 Priests, 10 Teachers, and 11 Deacons; 12 baptized, 2 died. First Kansas City 26; including 1 Elder, 2 Priests, 1 Teacher; 1 baptized. Clinton (New Branch) 17; including 1 Elder, 2 Priests, 1 Teacher, 1 Deacon. Organized July 24th, 1886, by Elder I. N. White; I. N. White, president; D. C. White, Priest; William Thompson, Teacher; Lewis J. Bradshaw, Deacon. Holden, no change. Elder's reports.—F, G. Pitt (baptized 5), B. Myers, C. StClair, M. Shaw, J. Luff, J. Curtis, J. Falk, Samuel Crum, J. W. Brackenbury, T. W. Chatburn, S. O. Waddell, W. A. Loar, E. Curtis, T. E. Lloyd, H. Lee, and Charles A. Bishop; by letter: H. H. Robinson (baptized 2), F. C. Warnky (baptized 6), and I. N. White. Two o'clock; T. E. Lloyd, vice-president, in the chair. Priest's reports.—A. Cox and R. May; Teachers J. A. Canaday and J. Burnham. Letter was read from I. N. White, explaining cause of his absence, also letter from Abner Lloyd. Committee on Clinton church reported unfavorably as to the purchase of said church; but recommend the renting for one year, and seating it with chairs, for the benefit of the Clinton Saints. Bill for same presented, $114.35. Donations raised to liquidate the above debt amounted to $59.70. Report received and committee discharged. Committee on renting, seating, and furnishing the Clinton church, was fully endorsed, and the presidents of the several branches in the district authorized to raise by subscription the balance due for said expenses. The character of the meetings were left to the discretion of the president. The Elders and Priests outside of organized branches in this district are requested to labor under the direction of the district president until the next conference. The Elder's Court in the William Lentel case presented report, which was received and court discharged. This was an appealed case. The present court confirmed the findings of the previous one, giving the brother sixty days from this date to make amends by confession before the branch. Proceeded to elect officers for the ensuing term: I. N. White, president; T. E. Lloyd, vice-president; T. W. Chatburn, clerk; and Jennie Murphy, treasurer. The several branch presidents in the district are authorized and requested to take up collections once each month, to be applied to the district fund. The district presidents are authorized to draw on the district treasurer for such funds as may be necessary for the work of the district. Statistical reports for the last three months show a net gain of 28 in the district. We hope the clerks of branches will be prompt in sending in their reports; also, the Elders will not fail to report those baptized, that my statistical report may be correct, and a leading feature in our report.—Clerk. Adjourned to meet at Independence, December 11th, 1886, at ten o'clock.

Miscellaneous.

AN APOLOGY.

Dear Herald:—Please say to Bro. Charles Derry, president of High Priests' Quorum, that in my article on the right of Seventies to preside, I had no intention to carry the idea that the High Priests' Quorum had claimed to be higher than the Seventy, or that they had denied the right of the Seventy to preside when they were present. What I said was only intended to meet objections urged by individuals, whether in or out of the High Priests' Quorum. However, when I read Bro. Derry's letter, I thought it possible that I was ambiguous, and that I might have been misunderstood, as he suggests. I therefore beg leave to apologize, through your columns, to Bro. Derry and the Quorum, for any seeming reflection cast upon them. No truer saying was ever penned than the one contained in Bro. Derry's letter, namely, "He will be great est in the sight of God who does his duty best."

May God inspire all his servants with meekness, love, and ability to labor to the best interests of the body—the church of Christ—is the humble prayer of

BORN.

KING.—Edna L., daughter of Bro. William P. and Sr. and E. R. King, born April 20th, 1886; blessed by J. R. Badham, 15th June, 1886.

SMITH.—Albert L. M., born 16th August, 1879; William A., born 26th June, 1881; Edna, born 2d February, 1884; Claud, born 14th December, 1885; children of Mr. George A. and Mrs. M. E. Smith. Blessed 19th of August, 1886, by Elder J. R. Badham.

EWING.—Near Eagleville, Missouri, on the 4th of October, 1886, to Bro. M. B. and Sr. Laura Ewing a son. Mother and child doing well.

MARRIED.

DAWSON—CLIFFORD.—Brother Edwin Taylor Dawson of Ione, Amador county, California, and sister Mary Emma Clifford of Burwood, San Joaquin county, California, September 14th, 1886, at the residence of the bride's parents, by Priest William N. Dawson.

Sweet is the sacred tie that binds
Two human hearts in one;
And blest is such a union,
When hope and faith are one.

DIED.

BRAYMAN—September 17th, 1886, at Clear Lake, Ind., of consumption, sister Lillie A., wife of Mr. Charles Brayman. She was born July 31st, 1861, at Camden, Hillsdale county, Michigan; was baptized by Elder B. V. Springer, August 26th, 1886, who conducted her funeral services September 19th. A large concourse of people, including fourteen vehicles, followed her remains to the grave. The minister comforted the mourning Saints, and instructed the people in reference to the hope of the Saints from Rev. 14: 13.

Dear sister Lillie, fare thee well;
We'll meet again.
'Tis well to know that thou art free
From care and pain.
We'll try to ever faithful be,
And thus prepare
For the great resurrection morn,
And meet thee there.

VENABLES.—At Ogmere Valley, Wales, May 29th, 1886, Elder Thomas Venables, president of the Ogmere Branch, aged 53 years.

SAMUEL.—At Llanelly, Wales, August 12th, 1886, Elder John Samuel, aged 82 years. Funeral service by T. E. Jenkins. Two good men. Who are to fill their places?

PHELPS.—At Juniata, Michigan, August 25th, 1886, Nephi A., son of Bro. Levi and Sr. Anna Phelps, aged 1 year, 7 months and 10 days. Funeral services by Bro. James Burtch.

NICHOLS.—Reuben T. Nichols, of Torch Lake, Antrim county, Michigan, departed this life on the 8th of September, 1886, of old age. He was born in Johnstown, Montgomery county, state of New York, on the 10th of December, 1807. In November, 1833, he embraced the fulness of the gospel, and was baptized in the same month by Elder Warren Parrish. Beginning with the office of Teacher, he worked up through the various offices of the priesthood, till in 1845, he was ordained a High Priest, continuing a faithful minister till he came in contact with the claims of James J. Strang. Up till his last hour he has been a faithful adherent to the claims of Mr.

Strang. Brother Nichols will be remembered by many of the older Elders and members of the church as a meek and inoffensive man, upright in all his dealings, a peace-maker, and a great lover of our common faith. He baptized close on to one hundred into the faith of the Latter Day Saints; suffered much by persecution, mobbing, and robbery; but never regretted any sacrifice made because of his faith. He left before his death, two hundred printed copies of his journal; a copy of which any one of his friends or relations can have by sending to W. Watson, box 160, Boyne, Charlevoix county, Michigan. Funeral services by Wingfield Watson.

EVANS.—At Lucas, Iowa, September 21st, 1886, William R. Evans, aged 7 years, 10 months and 18 days, son of Bro. David T. and sister Louisa Evans, and grandson of Elder John R. Evans. At nine a.m. his mother, little baby sister and himself, were in the east room, when suddenly the lightning struck the house. The mother has no recollection of seeing what then took place, till upon the porch, when she missed her boy, and returning in search of him found him lying against the safe, motionless and dead. The lightning had made a small hole in his left shoulder, and a part of his clothes were torn in shreds. One of his socks was on fire; his shoes were fearfully torn, one of them all to pieces. The hair of his head was burned; his little shirt was marked with brown streaks, which is evidence that the lightning passed down his body. The news spread quickly, and the people came from all directions to witness the sad scene. It was an awful sight. Funeral services were held next day, Bro. John J. Watkins officiating.

NOTICE.

CHARITY.

CHARITY is described to be "the love of God shed abroad in the heart."

The apostle aptly remarks, in substance, If I do not love my brother, whom I have seen; how can I love my God whom I have not seen. These may not be the exact words used by the writer, but the meaning of the exact text is conveyed in self-application in the form here presented. All texts of scripture intended to act in a reformatory way, may be retold in language addressed directly to self. As, for instance, Jesus said to his disciples; "Except your righteousness exceed the righteousness of the Scribes and Pharisees, ye can in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven." This, though apparently plain is made much more direct in its application when one says:—"If my righteousness is no better in practice than that of him whom I call a Pharisee, I can not get into the Kingdom of heaven." This brings it directly home to the mind of him who quotes the words of the Savior, with a meaning of force to him in the affairs of his every day life. The preacher declaims much against tale-bearing that self-interest has upon the judgments of men, if the preacher, shall allow the interest which he has in himself and those belonging to him, to blind his judgement to the good there may be in others, or to bias him against the acts of others put forth in behalf of their own interests, he comes under the force of his own denunciation against selfishness—man ought not to allow in himself uncondemned what he will denounce in another.

The preacher inveighs heavily against evil speaking and evil surmisings; hence, no shadows of evil surmisings should be found in his conversation. Nor should his lips utter things bearing the semblance of evil-speaking. But, as preachers are moulded of similar clay as the members of the body to whom he preaches, he may sometimes pay less heed to the admonitions he extends to others, than the members can justify from the application of them to their own lives; in such case, it will be better for the preacher to hold a sort of self-appointed inquest over his own condition; and if such inquest is held in honesty of heart, he will be the more largely benefitted by it than the lay members may be from his admonitions, as he may surpass them in intelligence and ability to comprehend and apply the meaning of language.

The preacher declares with vehemence against covetousness. How earnestly then ought he to heed the declaration, "Thou shalt not covet." If, however, he become cognizant that any of the flock of God have been forgetful of the command and have coveted anything belonging to another from his money, or goods to his good name; and if he shall have been unduly careless in his own life and has coveted, he should hesitate long before he orders the casting of stones at the transgressor. The preacher may not always be on his guard against temptation, and sin may find the weak places in his armor, wounding him sorely; he will in such case need the charity that "covereth a multitude of sins;" for he will be merciful to himself, and should be to others with the marks of his sin upon them.

The preacher bewails sincerely the want of spirituality, life and conscious communion with the powers of the life to come; and possibly attributes it to the want of personal cleanliness, or to habits which if not criminal in the sense of being violations of direct requirements of the law of God, are vain, foolish, profitless, and hence preventive of growth in grace and spiritual life. Does the preacher on his part affect the practices and habits, which have been hurtful to the lives of those whom he by his homily seeks to warn of their danger; if so mending the ways of the flock by amendment in himself.

The preacher is a man hurt by evidences of innate depravity permitted to be seen and heard in the conversation and walk of others. The outcroppings of that which is low, vulgar, suspicious: such as tale-bearing, back-biting, scandal-mongering, meddling with other men's affairs, talking of others in an insinuating and hurtful manner, peddling the petty speeches of others against foes and friends, retailing of faults and follies of others, acquaintances and neighbors, the taking of small and underhanded advantages—all these and their "uncles, aunts and cousins" of kindred vices—are all tokens to the preacher's mind that "all is not well in Zion." How earnest heed then should the preacher pay that he in walk and conversation, has held secret counsel and set faithful ward upon heart and tongue, that none of these things rise up in accusation against himself.

The preacher expresses the assurance that "zeal without knowledge" is deceitful, and does much harm to the cause of God. To him the affection of love for God's work by him whose life is condemned by the letter and the spirit of the word is hypocrisy, zeal unblest by knowledge, a putting on of "heaven's livery to serve the devil in;" hence he decries it, and warns the faithful to beware of such, nor allow themselves to be taken in so apparent a snare of the adversary, set for the feet of the unwary. Conscience, educated in the deep things of gospel lore, pray whisper in the preacher's ear:

"Preacher, be on thy guard,
Lest in thy service kind:
Within thy watch and ward
Thou shalt thyself be blind."

Charity, the love of God, is more certainly that influence and power that preventeth sin than that which covereth sin up after its commission. And it is not altogether beyond the province of the preacher to insist that it is more Christian like, and manly too, to prevent sinning upon the part of those with whom our life associations are cast, by the exercise of a Christ-like prevision which avoids provoking one to go in the way of his easily besetting sin. Men of weak control over their own spirits are frequently driven to anger, by the unwise provocation of those stronger than themselves done without thought at the time, and beyond remedy when once restraint is withdrawn. It must have been in some such sense as this that the writer of the Proverbs penned the saying: "A soft answer turneth away wrath; but grievous words stir up anger." It is more the province of charity to prevent transgression than to punish the transgressor. He who would honor the law of God as a servant by being zealous to punish those who transgress it, will honor it with more than a tenfold reward by keeping the spirit of it in his own life.

MORMON IMMIGRATION.

"CASTLE GARDEN officials say that the Mormon immigration has fallen off to twelve or fifteen hundred a year."

In June, 1852, the year before polygamy and other heresies were made public doctrines of the Brighamite church, the number of the Saints in the British Isles alone was 35,740. Of this number 3,400 were added in the six months next preceeding.—See Mill. Star., 15: 73.

In those times these immigrants numbered from 4,000 to nearly 10,000, yearly. Why is it, that now, over thirty years after, the number has dwindled to the insignificance indicated in the above clipping?

With all its added experience, wealth and proselyting machinery, that church has rapidly diminished its ratio of conversions, until to-day it stands a shattered, powerless, tottering skeleton of its former self. It is builded now by craft instead of the Spirit of God. It is held together, not by the purity of its doctrines nor its spiritual manifestations of divine love and light, but by secret oaths and covenants taught in their endowments, by the love of worldly wealth and place, by the ambitions peculiar to clans, sects and tribes, and by that blind zeal and fanaticism which are the fruits of real or imaginary persecution.

When their secret doctrines and practices for the past forty years, and their public ones for the past thirty-four years are measured by the accepted standards of God's word up to 1844, they are found sadly wanting, and it is seen they have wandered out of the way and are actually "fighting against God." Herein lies the secret of their diminished ingatherings, and herein lies the chief causes of their persecutions and reproach. Let them put away these evil causes, and the effects will in time pass away and cease to vex and trouble.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

In the letter department will be found important instruction from Bro. J. H. Peters in regard to those loaning the Voice of Warning. Read it.

We are too late to give details of Reunion at Garner's Grove, October 2d to 10th, in this issue, and will now only say, it was the best meeting of the kind ever held by the church. The attendance was large, especially the last Sunday, when, it is said, there were over one thousand wagons, carriages and buggies, on and adjacent to the camp ground. The weather was delightful throughout the session; the arrangements and order most excellent; the preaching better than average; singing, etc., first-class; social and sacramental meetings were spiritual; forty-two were baptized, and the meeting, all in all, was successful and most happy. We will give particulars hereafter.

An eight days' absence attending the Annual Reunion is our apology for not continuing "Persecution and its causes," in this issue. Be patient; "good things are worth waiting for."

There is hope for the heathen, whether "old Theology" wills it or not. We shall present some wholesome facts, "very full of comfort," on this question now agitating the sects. Away with the creeds, and let the Scripture and common sense decide.

Bro. Edward Rannie writes that he will use his best endeavors to sell the church publications in Omaha, Nebraska, and says he hopes a book agent will be appointed at their next business meeting. We thank Bro. Rannie for his interest and effort in this direction. Others should do likewise, for it is expedient that our church publications go to all who will read them.

Bro. J. C. Clapp wrote from Oxford,

Idaho, the 8th inst. He entered at once upon gospel work.

Bro. R. J. Anthony wrote from Franklin, Idaho, the 9th inst., saying he had begun a series of meetings there, and felt "splendid" in declaring "the fulness of the gospel as restored in these last days, and found in the Book of Mormon."

Bro. J. M. Tousley writes from Chester, Illinois, the 9th inst., that he is striving to "hold fast to the faith once delivered to the Saints." He further says: "We can not think of doing without the HERALD. It is getting better all the time."

Jacob K. Chaney writes from Tower Hill, Illinois, the 10th inst., asking if there is a branch at Kinnundy or in Effingham or Clay counties, Illinois. We know of none. He further says, Bro. and Sr. John S. Yohe lives in Shelbyville, Illinois, and that they would be glad to have the ministry call on them and preach there.

Bro. Hiram Rathbun, in a letter written of late from Lansing, Mich., says,—"I think just enough of the Church and of the Herald, the church organ, that I would be one of a thousand who would pay ten dollars in advance for ten new subscribers, and repeat that for five years, annually, if by so doing it can be reduced to one dollar per year. Let all speak at once."

Bro. Frank Loftly, writing from Penfield, Kansas, that he is preaching some there, suffered failure in crops this year, and that Bro. John Earnshaw lives at Key West, ten miles away, where he has held some meetings.

A brother asks, "Is it right or proper for a district to appoint a treasurer, collect money, and send elders off to preach the gospel in different places." To this we reply, that such matters should be mutually arranged and regulated by the districts and the Bishopric, that there may be unity and concert of action.

ILLINOIS MORMONS.

WE have before us the St. Louis (Mo.) Republican of September 27th, which contains a column devoted to the "Mormons in Illinois," and is rather spicy reading, and, withal, near the truth except on a few harmless points. In it is given the substantial points of the Epitome, also some of the leading facts in respect to the origin of the Reorganization, for all of which we feel thankful, and the more so because the Republican has never had many kind words for our work. We hope it may profit by its own correspondence and not think genuine Mormonism is the beast with "seven heads and ten horns."

Here are some extracts from the said article:

"Those people who to-day are called Mormons are not all confined within the borders of Utah. About midway on the Shawneetown branch of the Ohio and Mississippi railroad, your correspondent discovered a Mormon Church having a membership of sixty-one souls, and on Sunday last he attended the church in order to acquaint himself with the workings there, as well as to obtain a sketch of the organization of the sect in southern Illinois. In the year 1870 a pedagogue named Jim Jones was teaching school in district

No. 5, just north of Springerton, in White county. He was an advocate of the Mormon faith and endeavored to convert others to his belief. At Springerton, however, there was a congregation of Campbellites, who hooted at what was called Jim Jones' ravings, and he was mentally unable to cope with his Gentile opponents. He, however, had heard of the eloquence and power of one George H. Hilliard, of Jeffersonville, a Mormon apostle, and he sent for him to come to Springerton, there to preach the faith. The Campbellites and others learned of this from handbills written by Jones and distributed far and wide through the country. They put on a wry look and whispered around and about that a man with horns was about to come in upon the scene.

"Hilliard finally made his appearance and the people, more from a morbid curiosity than anything of a religious inclination, filled up the house to overflowing. Jim Jones was in his element. If these Christians could not be talked to by him he at least had found a man who would thoroughly wake them up. Hilliard displayed his oratorical efforts to the best possible advantage, and after repeated efforts it was seen that he was getting a firm hold on his auditors. The Campbellites began to bestir themselves, and the culmination of Hilliard's advent among them was that "A joint discussion was arranged to take place between the Mormon preacher and one Williams, a resident Campbellite of the county.

"Before preceding further it should be known that Springerton is just about what it was a half century ago—a small village of a dozen houses, in a wild sparsely settled country, hard to reach except by a long journey over a rough road, and after being reached is as difficult to get away from. The citizens are plain, honest, hard-working people, with fair school facilities.

"There was but one church, which was built by the people to be used for church purposes without regard to denominations. It was in this building that the discussion was held. The Campbellites announced, with a flourish, that their man "was a-goin to eat that there Mormon up," and the contest to show the superiority of one overheated sect against another went on, to the amusement of the entire populace, with unabated fury. Suffice it to say that the eater was completely eaten, which made Jim Jones hilariously enthusiastic. Mormon converts were secured in large additions and they were mainly from the Campbellite church. A bitter warfare was begun against the Mormons, led by Dr. Jas. Springer, after whom the village was named. Finally, to more effectually vent their spite, the Campbellites tore down the church building, hoping, perhaps, like Sampson, to tear something down, even if it fell on themselves.

But the tempest which was raging in the Mormon teapot was not thus settled. The Saints got together and built themselves a church in which they worship to-day, and in which your representative sat Sunday last. It is a small frame building with bellfry. The interior is rough and uncouth, the back-cutting benches being sufficient to murder a worshipper who had been in the habit of occupying the model church pew of metropolitan pattern. Church is held there once a month, at which time sacrament is also administered.

"It was the good fortune of the writer to meet on the train the preacher who was at that moment on his way to officiate in the Mormon church, and who expected to spiritually console his brethren on the morrow. The church is called the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

"Its adherents claim that they are no part and have nothing to do with the polygamous so-called Saints who, with Brigham Young as a leader, went into Utah. * * *

"There are many of these churches in Southern Illinois. The one at Springerton has sixty-one members; Brush Creek, in Wayne county, has one with 110 members; Dry Fork, in the same county, has one with a membership of thirty-one; Tunnel Hill, in Johnson county, has a Mormon church with seventy-eight members, and Alma Branch, in Marion county, a church with ten members.

"There are more members and churches in Iowa than any other State. There are several in Southern Indiana, Kansas and Nebraska. The membership foots in all about 20,000.

"The minister who officiated at the church Saturday evening and Sunday last, is a young man of considerable ability and intelligence. He is of a pleasant demeanor and delivery. He talks rapidly and fluently, never seeming at a loss for something in the Bible to clinch his arguments. He holds the attention of his congregation throughout. His name is Isaac M. Smith, and he resides in Tunnel Hill, in Johnson county. He is almost constantly preaching, though this winter he proposes to teach school. When asked if his religious belief militated against his occupation as a pedagogue, he said it did where he was not known. He accorded your correspondent a very pleasant interview and answered all questions cheerfully without reservation, and appeared to be much above the average back-woods preacher. He gave a cordial invitation to attend his church. * * *

"In his sermon the preacher gave a history of the times previous to the revelation of the plates from which the Book of Mormon was compiled, and spoke of what he called the wonderful prophecy of Joe Smith, made in 1832, relative to the war of the rebellion.

"Sacrament, after the services, was administered.

"The Mormons are close communionists and will not accept the baptism of any other church."

BRO. ANDREW TABBUT, of Detroit, Minnesota, sends us a letter written by a cousin of his, Mrs. Abigail Y. Alley, from Jaffa, Syria, Palestine, March 30th, 1886, from which by permission we give the following extracts:

"Well; restitution is moving on as fast as time can move here; the Hebrews are gathering to this land as fast as they can, building villages. There are as many as six large villages in different parts of the land, built since you went away; and there are societies both here and in England and America, which help them, so that they are greatly encouraged to come. As to the railroad, the Turks will not grant a firman to let it be made; only last summer some gentlemen came and surveyed a road for it; for one of the Americans who live at Jerusalem told me he went with them to help: his name is Spoffard, a great lawyer who has left all to live on Mount Zion with his family and a few more. * * *

"Dear Cousin; if you could see the amount [number] of carriages that are continually running from here to Jerusalem, and from different villages, all built since you went away. You remember—Abitha's house was built near the back gate—the carriages run on that road mostly, and they are continually running night and day. At ten o'clock in the evening the gates of the colony are shut, and two watchmen stand watch all night. They have a trumpet to blow if anything unusual should happen to call the people, and gun, sword, pistol, also a whistle to call the hour, and a watch-house to sit in if it rains too hard. Here, in the colony, we have singing-school and three day-schools, and meeting by the Germans; but none by the Americans. * * *

Yesterday, went to spend the day at the Netter place. Mrs. Clark and daughter, and Herbert's wife, a pleasant lady, invited me to go out and have a pic-nic with them. How can I describe to you how beautiful it was! We went in to the grounds through a street of more than a mile's length; on each side the lotus trees in bloom, full of white blossoms, hanging in strings from the branches, the length of a finger; a hedge of rose bushes the whole length of the street, also in full bloom. I thought of Paradise as we walked along. We camped in a place that is a swamp of India cane, with beautiful walks all through, cane on either side, making a shade over the way so cool and refreshing that one does not feel the heat after getting there. The fields between the cane lined roads and paths are filled with different kinds of fruit trees, each field a different kind; one field is oranges; another, is peach; another, sweet almonds; another, is citron; another, apricot; another, pears; another, lemons; another, English walnut; and so on to all different fruit trees. You must not forget that the cherry is here; also, the cauliflower, cabbage, beets, carrots, potatoes and peas; there is no kind of garden produce that you can think of, but what grows there; this shows what cultivation will do. Twelve years ago the Sultan gave this land to the Jews; it was not the best land in Palestine, but now it is like a little Paradise. Now, imagine about how handsome it is, and then you can not describe it to yourself; neither can I to you. We walked through some parts of the grounds, but not all, as it is a very large farm. They are boring for an artesian well, but have other wells, and perhaps fifty buildings; it is called the Agriculturist School Farm, and is located where Samson burned the wheat for the Philistines; the Jews have named it Israel Mickmach. They cultivate flowers, also; and when I was there eight years ago, the strawberry, raspberry and currant were grown; we did not see these at this time, as we did not go far enough into the grounds, it was too tiresome. The Jews made us welcome, and invited us to come again. I think there is not a more interesting place in all Palestine, as it shows the restitution the best, so far as I have yet seen. We took the tea-kettle with us, made a fire, made tea and enjoyed a nice time generally; returned home and had a good night's rest after it, at least I did."

Bro. Tabbut says:

"When we went there with G. J. Adams' colouy in 1866, there was not a wheeled carriage, to my knowledge, in all that land. There were things lugged by men and mules. We introduced the harness and the wagon; also widened the street of Joppa for them to go in. We also took with us many farming implements, such as the reaper, thresher, scythe, rakes, finally all the tools a colony would want even to go into a new country, of which all was much appreciated, even by the wild Bedouins. Everything native and in use by the native inhabitants was the same in form and pattern as used in the days of King David; so you see we also introduced the shovel and the grain fan."

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Elder J. J. Cornish, in a business letter to the office, says:

"A two days' debate in Bay City, Michigan, is over. All went off well, and the cause has been advanced, and we are being understood by the people of the world."

Bro. T. E. Lloyd wrote from Independence, Missouri, the 7th inst., as follows:

"Elder Hill of this place, was made successor to David Judy, as president of the Hedrickite church, last Sabbath, so it is said. Our local Elders are active in preaching the word—more so than at any time for years past."

Bro. W. J. Curry, of Rushville, Illinois, says:

"There are a few scattered and would-be Saints here, if we had a shepherd. We are very poor, and not able to pay an Elder to come and visit us, and have none in the district to preach to us."

Bro. Abner Lloyd, of Eldorado Springs, Missouri, has this to say:

"My fervent prayer is for the complete success of that noble paper, the Herald. May God bless those who so unweariedly support it."

THE following is from Reynolds' Newspaper published in England, and sent us by Bro. William Hart, of West Oakland, himself a native of England, but long a citizen of America. Read his letter, in correspondence department.

PRIEST, PLUTOCRAT, PEER AND PEOPLE

"As it is at present constituted, society is established upon one greatly false postulate, that the many shall exist for the benefit of the few. Throughout the whole world this is unfortunately true. In England perhaps matters are ordered in this direction with a harder and faster line than elsewhere is the case. Throughout Holland it is possible to go a long day's march and not see a single bare-footed person or one in want, the reason being that wealth there is more equally distributed than is the case with us." But, sir, it is impossible to take even a short walk within our sea-girt borders without stumbling across such instances of pauperism, of absolute want, of bare hunger as should be sufficient to make even a stoic sad.

"In the world of mechanics every effect must have a cause. If a bridge falls down, people do not go about with a lantern looking for a miracle, but say at once it was improperly constructed; and in the social world no catastrophe can happen which has not some original motor. England at the present moment is suffused with an all-prevailing distress; and so acute has this during the last few years become, that just at the time when the merry Christmas peals are ringing, and when the Yule log should be glowing prettily upon every hearth, our teeming cities ring with such cries of distress that the nation is compelled to suddenly collect and distribute huge local funds, lest the masses should come from the empty hovels in which they live, and with naked fist clamour in ugly earnestness at the doors of plenty, and so compel that rendition to them of the wherewithal to live, as is necessary to keep soul and body together. Nor is the cause of this prevalent poverty far to seek. So long as we support caste upon caste; a huge Court circle, constantly being fed by the addition of alien beggars; a nobility at once the most lavish and the idlest in the world; a State Church whose bishops give the lie to the teaching of Christ, and flaunt literally in an ostentatiousness of purple and fine linen, which is arrogance itself; then, so long, will the huge bulk of the people in these islands not know at sunrise where when sunset falls they will be able to get a meal. This is no fancy picture, sir, although, with that peculiar pride which seems to be the heritage of those who will be called the hopeless, our English working men, aye, and English working women, will sooner starve than they will admit to the outside world that the times are going ill with them.

"Apropos of the Church, some ingenious man has been collecting particulars as to the fortunes that those smug right reverend fathers in God, the prelates of the Established Church, leave behind them. The figures at least are instructive. In 1856 there was gathered unto his fathers the Hon. Hugh Percy, Bishop of Carlisle, who left a fortune in personalty of no less than £90,000. A Dr. Monk, Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol, surpassed the Hon. Hugh, for he left £140,000 behind him. During the thirty years from 1856 to the last day in December, 1885, three bishops left £120,000 each, and seventeen other bishops amounts ranging from £45,000 to £90,000. Dr. Sumner, of Winchester, accumulated £80,000 in forty-three years. During this period thirty-nine bishops died, leaving a fortune averaging £54,000 a-piece, and amounting in all to no less than £2,000,000 sterling. Now, sir, from whence did this money come? It came out of the land. The land really should be the property of the people, and therefore, without any stretch of argument, the masses may be said to be the poorer by this appropriation of our inheritance. I must confess, sir, that in thinking over these facts, I can hardly restrain my language within decorous limits. I do not wish to be profane, but if there be any truth in the Bible, and if its picture of the Blessed be in any way like unto truth, then of all the extraordinary spectacles ever seen must be the reception in Heaven of some paunchy person who in life has been girt about with a bishop's apron, and who, day in, day out, must have acted one long, terrible lie—one tremendous piece of self-deception, so far as the ethics of Christianity are concerned; and amongst the higher ranks of the gloriously good no spirit can possibly stand higher than of the humpbacked Paul, who so honestly believed and practiced the teachings of the great Master, that in order to remove even the shade of a shadow of reproach from Christianity, he sat down and labored with his own hands. What greeting would he be likely to give fine gentlemen who, although their curates, diocese after diocese through, were in actual want, accumulated thousand upon thousand, and thousands upon the top of them.

"Yet, in spite of my lord living in luxury, and in spite of the bishops rolling in wealth, and in spite of the Palace circle swallowing a million a-year, and in spite of a beurocracy, and a pension list swallowing sums, the magnitude of which is appalling, the Tory would still further drive the working classes into poverty. In the West Cumberland Times I noticed the other day a letter, to which I referred at the time, which admirably summarizes the average Tory idea of the way in which the wicked working man should be put down for the benefit of the popinjays who occupy, as they think, a position a little superior to his. The writer says that less than twenty years ago England was the foremost merchantile nation in the world, and that now she has lost that proud position. The reason, he discovers, is as follows. England is retrograding, because—

"Continental workmen receive much smaller wages than ours, and work longer hours; hence, to compete with their employers is for us impossible; therefore, trade naturally leaves our shores. Such is the cause of the present depression. Now, what is the cure? To my mind it appears very simple—merely to reduce our workmen to the same level as those of other countries, so that we may be able to compete with them in the markets of the world. This will be easily accomplished, if all the capitalists of England unite for the purpose. If necessary, let the scale of wages be regulated by a legally-constituted tribunal—the quarter sessions, or some such meeting of intelligent gentlemen belonging to the county. The wages of iron-workers in Belgium are 2s. 1d. per day of sixteen hours; those of Germany 2s. 2d. for fifteen hours; Italy 1s. 7d. for sixteen hours, and other continental countries much the same. Why, then, is our trade fettered in the manner it is by employers being called upon to pay such exorbitant rates for mere manual labor? The wages of workmen up to near the end of last century were fixed annually by the county justices, and rarely exceeded 6s. per week; and be it remembered that it was during this period our commercial supremacy was laid, and peace and contentment prevailed on every hand. Now, what is the contrast to-day? Trade disputes, strikes, &c., all over the country. Let us return to the good old system. Let workmen's wages be regulated by a proper tribunal, and compel all workmen to adhere to that scale, and let all who will not work under these circumstances be treated as vagabonds. Surely the time has now come when capitalists should receive some return for investments instead of greedy, grasping, ignorant workers devouring all the profits."

"This letter is not, as might for a moment be suspected, a forgery. It is evidently written in good faith, and is more pitiable, perhaps, that it stands to record as the deliberate statement of something in the semblance of a thinking man. It is a pity that there does not exist in England a social lynch law which would enable the people anywhere to visit upon the head of an offender against the common interest some marked penalty. Personally speaking, I should like nothing better, nor do I think that anything could possibly be more just, than that the Tory who indited the words that I have quoted, with his family, should be placed in some cottage in the county where he lives, and compelled for twelve months to support his family upon six shillings a week. When the rent is paid out of that, what does it leave? In this land of ours we have to pay even for God's gifts, and at six shillings a week a man could hardly afford to buy water to drink with his bread! Of course, such a retribution as this is impossible, but what is not impossible is such a steady, such a persistent action against the manner in which all the good things of life are swallowed up by the few, that we shall cease to hear of bishops by the score leaving £54,000 behind them, or an aristocracy marked amongst its younger members for lasciviousness, and amongst its elder representatives for a steady opposition to all measures intended to advance the better interests of the people.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Ques.—How are we to understand Romans 8:19-24? Is Paul speaking of man only?

Ans.—We think he refers to "the whole creation" (vs. 22) as it came from the hand of God when he said "it was very good."—Gen. 1:31. For further proof of this position, please read Isa. 11:1-9; 65:17-25; Rev. 21:1, 5; 2 Pet. 3:13, etc.

Q.—Is it necessary to believe that David and Solomon were inspired of God, in order to be a Latter Day Saint?

A.—No. But we believe he who does not believe that they, at times, were inspired of God, loses much in the way of good instruction and godly edification.

Q.—If David and Solomon were inspired, in what part of their lives was it?

A.—In the times when they were "holy men," walking in the light of God's law, and not when they sinned against it.

Q.—Is right living and well doing evidence of inspiration?

A.—Not necessarily, if this refers to moral uprightness only.

Q.—Is bad living and wrong doing evidence of non-inspiration?

A.—Yes; for the Spirit of God will not dwell in unholy temples. "For the temple of God is holy, which temple ye are."—1 Cor. 3:17.

Q.—If David and Solomon were inspired men of God, how do you palliate and excuse their crimes?

A.—We do neither; nor did David, Solomon, or the true servants of God after them. "Mine iniquities have taken hold upon me, so that I am not able to look up; they are more than the hairs of my head." David—Ps. 40:12. "Sin is a reproach to any people." Solomon—Prov. 14:34. The polygamy and concubinage of these men were denounced of God through his servants as "crimes" "wickedness," "abominations," etc., in Book of Mormon, Jacob 2:6. Men of God may be inspired at times, and at other times not. They may sin and thus "grieve the holy spirit" and cause it to withdraw from them for a season, or forever.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY SISTER "FRANCES."

"The woods shall wear their robes of praise,
The south wind softly sigh,
And sweet, calm days in golden haze
Melt down the amber sky."

CAST THY BREAD UPON THE WATERS.

'Mid the losses and the gains,
'Mid the pleasures and the pains;
'Mid the hopings and the fears,
And the restlessness of years,
We repeat this passage o'er—
We believe yet more and more—
Bread upon the waters cast
Shall be gathered at the last.

Gold and silver, like the sands,
Will keep slipping through our hands;
Jewels gleaming like a spark
Will be hidden in the dark;
Sun and moon and stars will pale,
But these words will never fail—
Bread upon the waters cast
Shall be gathered at the last.

Soon like dust to you and me
Will our earthly treasures be;
But the loving word and deed
To a soul in bitterest need—
They will unforgotten be,
They will live eternally.
Bread upon the waters cast
Shall be gathered at the last.

Fast the moments slip away,
Soon our mortal powers decay;
Lower and lower sinks the sun,
What we do must soon be done.
Then what rapture if we hear
Thousand voices ringing clear—
Bread upon the waters cast
Shall be gathered at the last.—ScL

An Elder in the field writing to us, says: "May God speed you in your work, and I hope to see the day when the move spoken of in the last Herald of something for our young people a grade in advance of the Hope will become an accomplished fact. My mother died a little more than a year ago, and I have no sisters, but I believe women to be the more devoted, and capable of more toil and self sacrifice than the other sex. I was raised by a faithful mother, and when I recall the influence she cast about our home, it cheers me onward, and whispers of the glorious home to which she has gone. Father told her on her dying bed that she had been the instrument in saving him from a drunkard's grave. When I recall her perfect resignation and saintly patience during forty-nine days of intense suffering, I thank God for the gift of a mother's love, and pray him to bless the mothers of our church and country. My father is now an Elder, and living to obtain a part in the resurrection of the just."

Dear mothers of Zion, what encouragement there is to us in this testimony. Silent now are the lips which once plead with God in prayer, folded the hands which ministered to the comfort of her loved ones, and stilled forever the heart which suffered so much in the tabernacle of flesh; but "her works follow her," and husband and children rise up to call her blessed, Her God, is he not ours? Will he not hear and answer our prayers for the children he has given unto us? Let us labor still and pray while we labor, that when God shall call home the reapers now in the field, we shall so have trained the sons and daughters given unto us, that they will be well equipped to take our places in the battle field of life, and bear aloft the banner upon which shall be inscribed, Victory for our King.

Sister Sarah A. Rose wishes us to say to both the brethren and sisters who have written to her in her affliction, that she has no words in which to express to them her sense of gratitude for the sweet peace and comfort afforded her by their letters. She is not yet able to write much at a time, but thinks she is gaining slowly, and hopes in time to be able to labor for the Master again. Dear sisters, let us who are surrounded by those of like precious faith,—who have the privilege from Sabbath to Sabbath of going up to the house of God, and those who if they have not all these blessed privileges, yet have those of their own households to sustain, cheer and encourage them upon their way—let us ask ourselves, What of those other scattered ones, who are living from day to day, surrounded by a frowning world, meeting the most cruel opposition in their own homes, from opposing relatives and those who once were friends? What of them? Pray for them we ask you, that God may give them grace to bear with patience, not only to bear but to pity and pray for those who in their blindness are preparing for themselves the bitter cup which they must drink, if they do not repent before it is eternally too late. Oh; in that great day when he shall own his children, his dear, suffering ones, before the face of his Father and all the waiting hosts, how bitter will be the cup they must press to their lips: "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." Does he not feel every wound, every arrow which quivers in the torn and bleeding heart of the least one of his flock? "Ye have done it unto me?" Be brave of heart and soul, for he is with you, and even while your trial is upon you, the peace he gives is what the world has not to give; neither can it take away. Do not expect answers but as opportunity offers; send a letter of cheer and comfort to one of these suffering sisters of the Master. The name of her post office is changed, so please address Sarah A. Rose, Quarry, Monroe county, Ohio.

LAMONI, Iowa, Oct. 23d, 1886.

CLEVELAND, Iowa, August 17th.

Sister Frances:—I will try once again to write something for The "Mothers' Home Column," and thereby try to improve the talent God has given me. I realize that in this life we are preparing for the life beyond, and we all ought to strive while here on earth to gain life's richest treasures—those that will be of the greatest worth, and also those that will yield the purest pleasures. There is a great many variety of pleasures, but the purest ones, those least contaminated with the evil influences around us are what we ought to seek after; also those which will best develop the mind, and expand and unfold those God-given mental faculties that all men are more or less endowed with, those pleasures that will bless the mind of man, and stimulate his thoughts to crave that wisdom which leads to peace in this present life and that which is to come.

One of the greatest ambitions of our hearts should be to live a good and useful life—do all the good we can and as little harm as possible, and try ever to bridle our tongues; if we can not say any good of any one say nothing at all. I have always observed that the female sex are worse to talk about each other than the opposite sex. Why is this? Is a wrong done by one of us greater than a wrong done by one of the opposite sex? This should not be so. We are called the getler sex, then let us deal gently by each other. Our work in life should be to lessen strife, and try to better man's condition. If we weave honors for ourselves the world will soon know it. We must first win honors for deeds well done, then we can expect the credit justly due us for living a true and useful life.

Let us not be afraid to give encouragement to our fellow travelers as we journey along. If they do anything that is worthy of recognition, let us acknowledge it as such, and encourage them to strive to perform their part still better next time; this will not flatter them, but stimulate them to ever strive to do the best they can; and by trying and trying again, we may at last reach perfection. When we see a brother or sister or any one else, burdened with a load of care that seems too much for them, let us take a part of it on our shoulders, and by doing this their burden becomes lighter and we will not feel their burden any weight to us when we do it in a spirit of love and good will towards them.

There is another thing I wish to speak of; it is this, Don't let us, as mothers, be discouraged if we do not see our children do just as we would wish them to do. Let us improve every chance we have to sow the seed of truth in their minds, and also put forth every effort to win them to this great work. Put good and instructive books in their way, and if they do not read them now, perhaps when our bodies are laid away they will then see the effort we put forth for their good, and how we tried while here to get them interested, and to appreciate our efforts in their behalf. Our words, work and actions will live long after our bodies are laid away. Let us encourage them when they do right, and rebuke them kindly when they do wrong. We can all remember how encouraging it was to be told we had done well; and how acceptable it will be at the last great day to hear the welcome words, "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter in to the joy that is prepared for you." Then let us nobly act our part in life; let us be just and true in all our dealings; let our words be truthful, and always try to be pure in mind and thought; and then, when Christ comes to collect his jewels, may we be numbered among those whom he will call his own. I am your sister in the bonds of love,

H. E. BIRCHELL.

RICHLAND, Dak., August 8th.

Dear Sisters:—I would like to be one of your number, for I have no sisters to visit with, and my surroundings are not saint-like; but our Herald, the messenger of light and love, is my company. It comes to cheer and strengthen us tired ones on our way. God bless its contributors with knowledge to make its pages more and more attractive; and spread its truth far and near. Brother Derry has preached a number of times in this place, but it takes the leaven of righteousness a long while to work; the weeds have injured the wheat. My work in the church seems to be to give the Elders a home, and I must try to do it well, by living an honest upright life, that they may not be ashamed of, and that I am not a disgrace to the cause and the Elder who makes his home with me. I try to be clean and tidy and cook the best I know how, and set my children an example of industry, but yet I am far from perfect; I see many faults in myself, but am trying to overcome, and have charity for all mankind. I know Joseph Smith was a true prophet of God; I did not learn it from any teaching of mankind, but by the power of God.

I have a husband, and four sons grown up, without any seeming desire to serve God, and what to do to convince them of their duty, is more than I can tell. They will listen to the Elders, but the pleasures of this life seem to fill their desires. They are good to me, but I feel anxious for their future welfare. Sisters, when in your secluded spot for prayer, remember mine and put in a plea on their behalf.

LILLY J. SMITH.

OAK ISLAND, Texas, August 1st.

Dear Sisters of the "Home Column":—As I have been greatly encouraged and benefitted by our beautiful column, I thought to acknowledge the same, and it may encourage Sr. Frances in her timely effort, to know that so many of her sisters have found strength in her labor of love. Dear sisters, we are admonished in God's holy word to "bear one another's burdens," which we shall do well to heed; and very little help upon our part oftentimes afford great assistance to others. Often cheering words and timely instruction go farther to assist weary, over-burdened hearts than any financial aid could—of course this kind of assistance should not be ignored when needed, and when we have the opportunity to render such. We are none of us too poor to offer a prayer for the afflicted among us, and is it not cheering indeed to know when the hand of affliction is pressing heavily upon us, there are other hearts beating in unison with ours, sympathizing with every pain and trial, willing to assist us in bearing our burdens, great or small? How thankful then we should be to our heavenly Father for this great and ennobling effect the gospel has upon its adherents. That we may prove faithful to the trust reposed in us, I shall ever pray.

GLEN EASTON, W. Va., Sep. 19th.

Dear Readers of the Herald:—There are a few of us here who are trying to keep the covenant we have made with our Heavenly Father. We have been abundantly blessed here this season with good crops and fruit of all kinds. God is the giver of it all. For my part I believe the law of tithing. We are required to keep it just as much as any laws. And if the Saints would keep the whole law, I am sure they would be abundantly blessed both spiritually and temporally. If we don't keep the law, we have no promise of blessings. I hope to see the day that all the Saints will comply with this law; then the work will prosper so much faster. From this time, all I have as my own I am going to give one tenth to the Lord, and I feel that He will bless me in it. I have been sorely tried, yet I am not worried, but am willing to bear all for Christ's sake. What He has done for me is worth more than I have endured. He will reward each one of us according to our works.

I think the Herald is getting better all the time. The "Home Column" is just splendid. I have a family of four children. Three of them are in the church. Bro. Griffiths was here last month and did some good preaching. We hope to see some other Elders come.

CAROLINE WAYT.

EAST LAKE, Mich., Oct. 7th.

Bro. Blair:—I wish to say a few words to those who are loaning the "Voice of Warning."

It seems that the blank reports are not understood by some. "Number on hand," means that the number they have in hand and loaned out that are readable. "Number read," means the number to whom they have been loaned to read. You will have to suppose that all read them, unless you learn to the contrary.

You may sell the books to any one who may wish to buy them, at fifteen cents each. When you have received one dollar for books, please send it to me, and I will send you new books to keep the number good, if you wish them. In this way I think the number can be kept full, and always new with but little additional expense, after they are all supplied. I hope all will report, as we wish to know what the books are doing. Out of the one thousand books offered to the Sabbath Schools, for the benefit of Zion's Hope, only sixty have been called for.

Yours in Christ,

J. H. PETERS.

MANASSA, Colo., Sept. 25th.

Dear Herald: Since last I intruded upon your notice, the busy wheels of time have rolled off many days to the measure of life allotted to your humble servant, and I know that at the most I only have a few more years to remain in this probationary state, and my earnest prayer and heart's desire is, to so live that when the solemn change takes place, I can, in the words of one of old exclaim: "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith, henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness." I dearly love the work of the Lord in these the latter days. I love to read of it; I love to hear it talked about; and above all things I delight in talking others all that I know about it, notwithstanding I am not an orator, neither am I perfect in the law of righteousness. And knowing all of my failings and short comings before the Lord of hosts, feel my insignificance and unworthiness to be the bearer of the vessels of the Lord. But what I am is by the grace of God, in whom I trust. And although I may fall far short of the duty which I owe to the Source of all light and truth for his great mercy and manifold blessings which he has poured out upon me in times. I also know that if I will continue striving to do the Master's holy will, he will ever be mindful of me by giving a sufficiency of his grace to bear me through all the temptations, trials and difficulties that may beset me in this world of sin and woe; and that if I will hold out faithful and endure even unto the end. I need have no fears or doubts, for when this earthly house of this tabernacle is dissolved, there is a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens, prepared not only for me, but for all the faithful soldiers of the Lamb.

And as my mental eye looks out over the earth and I see the awful calamities multiplying whereby the Lord will purge the earth of sin and unrighteousness, it admonishes me that the great day of the Lord's coming is now even at the door. And the great mystery with me is as to how careless and unconcerned the inhabitants of the world are to the proximity of the day of their visitation. But the Lord has said that at his coming it would be as it was in the days of Noah, but yet that he would find faith on the earth. Many have been called, but how few will be able to abide the dreadful day. And as there is no place of safety to be found only in Zion and her stakes, I feel as if the time was near when the Lord will say to all Israel, Come home.

And thou, Herald of truth and God's righteousness, continue to proclaim the glad tidings of salvation to the rebellious children of men as you have done in the past! For the bread of life through your columns is conveyed to thousands of souls who hunger and thirst after righteousness, who otherwise would famish. May the richest of God's blessings be poured out on your weekly visits, and also on all who are identified with you, is the prayer of a true believer in the only one faith.

F. B. MOYERS.

P.S.—On last Sabbath I had the pleasure of burying beneath the liquid wave, in baptism, a worthy couple, husband and wife, by the name of Irvin; the former having had his eyes opened to the gross abominations of Brighamism, while the latter never did take any stock in that system of corruption.

Editor's Herald:—I live away from any branch and never hear any preaching, but I know that God has not forgotten us; and I am sure he will not if we live faithful. My little grandson, four years old, had been troubled with asthma for two years, till his father was like the poor widow that spent all her living for the doctor; but when he went to the Great Physician the child was healed through the administration of Bro. McKiernan. I am trying to do nearer right every day, and hope to be faithful.

In bonds,

MARY DOROTHY.

MT. OLIVE, Neb., Oct. 6th.

Dear Herald:—I am holding meetings in the school district where Bro. James W. Gillen preached some twenty-four years ago. While he was here he baptized four, one died in the hope of the resurrection, is spiritually asleep, one is neither hot nor cold, while one still is striving to hold on to the "rod of iron." While meditating upon the above, I wondered if that would be a fit illustration of all our labors—"five wise" and five otherwise. I am glad that every individual will have to answer at the bar of God for themselves. By the way, Bro. Gillen visited Nebraska City during last month, and gave us five long and loud sermons of sound gospel; the Saints were benefitted, and outsiders helped to an understanding if they were only willing to pay attention and receive that which was presented. I spent the 21st ult., at Lincoln. What a great mission field there is in that city! But how are we going to get the gospel before the people? Something, surely ought to be done, and I am both anxious and troubled about it. The 22d found me at Wilber, where I continued tent.

meetings for five days, and on the 26th, the Saints were made to rejoice when Hannibal Woods, a man past three score and ten, entered the fold by baptism. But "the tribe of Levi" were more than rejoiced when I buried in the water Isaac T. Anthony, the eldest son of our worthy district president. I have seen Saints happy at friends coming into the fold, but never so many who wept with joy upon such an occasion. Best of all, the presence of the Holy Spirit in power warmed every heart, till those not numbered with us partook of the cup of bliss the Father bestowed. I spoke three times at the Roperville school-house, had a growing interest and an increasing congregation; but in all places there are some who "will not endure sound doctrine." I have made it a subject of prayer and much thought, as to how we shall be able to preach the whole truth and never give an offense; and I have about concluded that it is an impossibility. I try to be wise, and to present the gospel in an acceptable and interesting manner, not compromising any principle of truth; but I can not hope to be more successful than the Savior was, and many were offended at Him. Some in this vicinity are near the kingdom, and I believe in time will unite with us. It takes much labor and a great deal of patience in accomplishing our work. And for the honor of God and His work, the ministry should be above suspicion. If their name is reproached, it should be falsely, for Christ's sake. There is no visible mark of God's displeasure in this part of the great moral vineyard.

At work,

ROBT. M. ELVIN.

CHASE, Kansas, Oct. 8th.

Editor's Herald:—To the Saints we would send greeting, and would say we are settled here and expect to stay a while; and to the Saints of Central Kansas, send us some of your elders that need food and raiment, and we will give them shelter; and to A. H. Parsons, Come on with your sound reasoning; and to as many more of the Saints as wish to see us, We will try to entertain you the best we can; and to Bro. James Caffall, Please look after the small ones.

Your sister in gospel bonds,

H. J. LUSH.

KENTON, Tenn., Sept 19th.

Dear Editor:—We wrote to the Farmington Branch for an Elder, but received no answer. We thirst for pure water; is there no river to flow for us? We hunger for righteousness; is there no vessel to bring it to us? We can read of the peace and happiness meek Christians have; they have the glad tidings daily, but none ever pass this way. If any of the Saints call in this part they will find Wm. Rosson, a member of the Saints, one mile from Kenton, and Mrs. Jane Willis a believer, four miles, and they will be cared for as well as our ability will permit. They will also find a poor, homeless sinner, four miles from Kenton. I am poor indeed in this world, and my chance is poor for the world to come; but thank God I have a consolation that affords me much pleasure in James 2: 5. May God speed the day when this country may be rich in the faith and many be heirs of the kingdom which he has promised them that love him.

Yours in hope of the better day,

GATHERING.

TUNE:—"Rescue the Perishing."

Gather to Zion, Saints,
God has commanded:
Come ye, O come ye from regions afar.
Zion is waiting now
For her redemption,
Nations are watching for Bethlehem's star.

CHORUS:—Gird on thine armor then,
Strive to be ready,
Jesus is coming in glory to reign.

Gather to Joseph's land,
Stand in pure places,
Waiting the dawn of Millenium's day;
Peace and prosperity
Surely await you,

Come, as ye journey, sing songs by the way.

Come with kind hearts of love,
Christian devotion,
Ready to labor, with others forbear,
Heavenly anthems then
Rising from hearts pure,
Tell that the day of redemption is near.

Arise, O Jerusalem,
Gird on thine armor;
Never again shall the Lord thee forsake;
Don now thy beautiful garb
Daughter of Zion,
Immanuel soon cometh, his blessings partake.

Sing, O thou barren ones,
Thou that wast desolate,
The Lord is thine husband and he will provide.
Lengthen the cords of Thine own habitation,
The King will be with thee whatever betide.

Marshal yourselves, O,
Ye remnants of Jacob;
Go not in haste, but before you prepare.
Zion will welcome you,
Peace is her motto,
Watch, the day cometh the Scriptures declare.

MAY SEVENTIES PRESIDE?

MR. EDITOR.—I had not thought to say more upon this subject, but as a recent writer in one of the church periodicals has made indirect reference to some points made in my last article, I ask for a little more space.

The most of this writer's article was aimed at positions taken by you. I take no notice of your part of it. He says: "God, for a special purpose, instituted the Quorum of Seventy, differing from the other officers of the church in the duties of their calling, as they have no responsibility of presiding." (The italics are mine).

Now this statement is misleading, the first part of it being so much like a quotation found in Doc. Cov. 104: 11, that it leads one to think it was taken therefrom; and yet the quotation gives an entirely different reason for the Seventy's differing from other officers in the duty of their calling.

Here it is: "The Seventy are also called to preach the gospel, and to be especial witnesses unto the Gentiles and in all the world—thus differing from other officers in the church."

Whether the writer intended his statement for a quotation or not, he evidently intended to say that the reason they were different from other officers, was because they had no responsibility of presiding. If this position be correct, it excludes the Twelve from presiding, for of them it is said, "Thus differing from other officer in the church in the duties of their calling."—Ibid. Any one reading this paragraph will see readily that the Seventy differ from others in the same sense that the Apostle does, viz., in being an especial witness.

It is admitted that the Twelve, or either of them, may preside; then what means the law which says of the Seventy, "And they form a quorum equal in authority to that of the especial witnesses, or apostles, just named." If they have no authority to preside, then they are not equal in authority. The writer, however, has tangled himself upon this point, for after making the assertion that, "An Elder holds the responsibility of presiding over the churches; but when called to the office of Seventy that office precludes his presiding,"—he then goes on to quote from the History of Joseph Smith, Mill. Star, vol. 13, p. 49, * which shows, the Seer taught that, under certain circumstances a Seventy "may preside over a church or churches." But, if the authority does not exist, how can they preside under any circumstances? The position that it "precludes his presiding," is here proven false by the writer's own witness. This teaching of the Seer is exactly in harmony with the position taken in my former article, viz., that a Seventy possesses the authority to preside, but that it is better he should not preside over branches or districts where there are Elders or High Priests who are available and complete.

I took the position that Seventies should be chosen to preside over missions which the Twelve could not reach, because they were the legal auxiliaries of the Twelve in the missionary work; whereas the calling of an Elder or High Priest is to preside locally. It will be seen that in all the quotations he has made from Joseph Smith the seer, there is not a syllable to disprove this position, nor any reference made to presidency of missions. But as this writer grants the authority to preside to the Seventy as evidenced by the quotation before referred to, there is no issue between us upon this point. The only question is, when shall the Seventy preside? This I think I have plainly shown in my last article. However, if those differing are right, and a Seventy can only preside over a mission until a High Priest is sent, and the First Presidency has the directing of High Priests, I would respectfully ask, Has any Seventy refused to yield the presidency held by him unto a High Priest duly sent by the First Presidency? If so, who and when? What are you complaining about, even if your position is correct? If, according to your own position, a Seventy can preside until a High Priest is had, why not let him do so in peace? Why kick against the practical application of your own conclusions? Suppose there were districts in 1841; that fact does not interfere with my position that God had not by revelation given any direction concerning them.

The special directions given by Joseph Smith for special cases, (Mill. Star, vol. 17, p. 775), does not interfere with the general law, which provides that the Seventy are to build up the church, "and regulate all the affairs of the same in all nations." If they have no authority to regulate only as specially "delegated," because it is said they are under the direction of the Twelve, then they have no authority to preach only as specially delegated; for in this they are also under the direction of the Twelve. The Twelve being under the direction of the First Presidency, have no authority only as specially "delegated" by them; and the High Priest the same. If so, all authority is vested in the Presidency, and others act only by authority delegated by them, and therefore all official acts should be in the name of their principal—the Presidency. What becomes, then, of the statement that the three quorums are equal in authority?

The Deacon holding the Levitical priesthood, without authority to baptize, &c., is not a parallel case with a Seventy holding the Melchisedeck without authority to preside. In the one case the authority was never conferred; in the other it was possessed once, but removed by ordination—a thing altogether inconsistent.

This is perhaps the last you will hear from me on this subject, unless more potent arguments and more pointed evidences are used against my position than those I have been replying to in this article. It would be useless now, as the President of the High Priest's Quorum, speaking for the quorum, says no such positions as those taken by the writer referred to has been taken by them. Who is this who rises up and assumes to claim for a quorum what it does not claim for itself? By what authority speakest thou?

In bonds of love and best wishes for all,

LEAVES FROM THE TREE OF LIFE.

GOD'S PURPOSE IN MAN'S CREATION.

"THE Lord of hosts hath sworn, saying, Surely as I have thought, so shall it come to pass; and as I have purposed so shall it stand. . . . For the Lord of hosts hath purposed, and who shall disannul it? And his hand is stretched out and who shall turn it back?"—Isa. 14: 24, 26. "I am God, and there is none else; I am God and there is none like me, declaring the end from the beginning, and from ancient times the things that are not yet done, saying, My counsel shall stand, and I will do all my pleasure."—Isa. 46: 9, 10.

The above scriptures are a guarantee that whatever the Almighty hath decreed, it shall come to pass; hence, if we can discover his purpose in the creation of man we may rest assured it will be fulfilled. John heard the four and twenty Elders saying:—"Thou art worthy, O Lord, to receive glory and honor and power; for thou hast created all things, and for thy pleasure they are and were created."—Rev. 4: 11.

As we have remarked in a former article, the pleasure of such a being can be nothing less than the greatest good to his creatures. The mere gratification of a whim would be unworthy of God. It will be well to remember that man is composed of two natures, the spiritual and the natural, or physical. The physical was made out of the dust of the earth, and this was to be the tabernacle of the indwelling spirit. And after the Creator "breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, man became a living soul." Or in other words, the body being prepared as the tabernacle, the spirit entered into it. And now, man was a "living soul."

There are those who claim to believe God's word, but deny that there is an intelligent spirit in man, different, or distinct from the body and breath. I shall briefly refer to those scriptures, claimed by them as divine, to show that they teach there is a spirit in man. Moses and Aaron address the Almighty as the "God of the spirits of all flesh."—Numb. 16: 22; 27: 16. Paul calls him "the Father of Spirits."—Heb. 12: 9. Ezra says, "The Lord stirred up the spirit of Cyrus."—Ezra. 1: 1. He also says, "God raised up the spirit of the chief of the fathers to go up and build the house of the Lord."—v. 5. Job says, "I will speak in the anguish of my spirit."—Job. 7: 11. Elihu says, "There is a spirit in man, and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth them understanding."—Job. 32: 8. Again; "I am full of matter, the spirit within me constraineth me."—verse 18. David says, "Into thy hands I commit my spirit."—Ps. 31: 5. "Blessed is the man . . . in whose spirit there is no guile."—Ps. 32: 2. "My spirit was overwhelmed."—Ps. 77: 3. "My spirit made diligent search."—v. 6. Solomon says, "The Lord weigheth the spirit."—Prov. 16: 2. "The spirit of a man will sustain his infirmity; but a wounded spirit who can bear."—Prov. 18: 14. "The spirit of man goeth upward, and the spirit of the beast goeth downward."—Eccles. 3: 21. "The spirit shall return to God who gave it."—12: 7. Isaiah says, "With my spirit within me will I seek thee early."—Isa. 26: 9. "In all these things is the life of my spirit."—38: 16. God says, "I dwell . . . with him also that is of a contrite and humble spirit, to revive the spirit of the humble."—Isa. 57: 15, 16. "To this man will I look, even to him that is poor, and of a contrite spirit."—Isa. 66: 2. Ezekiel says "Every spirit shall faint."—21: 7.

The spirits of Nebuchadnezzar and Daniel were "troubled."—Dan. 2: 1, 3. "I Daniel was grieved in my spirit in the midst of my body."—Dan. 7: 15. God formeth the spirit of man within him, Zech. 12: 1. Christ says, "The spirit indeed is willing but the flesh is weak."—Matt. 26: 41. "He sighed deeply in his spirit."—Mark 8: 12. Mary said, "My spirit hath rejoiced in God my Savior."—Luke 1: 47. After his resurrection his disciples "supposed they had seen a spirit;" but Jesus said, "a spirit hath not flesh and bones as ye see me have."—Luke 24: 37, 39. "Jesus was troubled in spirit."—John 13: 21. Paul "was pressed in spirit."—Acts 18: 5. He said, "God is my witness, whom I serve with my spirit."—Rom. 1: 9. He refers to a transgressor being delivered "unto Satan for the destruction of the flesh, that the spirit may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus."—1 Cor. 5: 5. He desires "to be absent from the body, and to be present with the Lord."—2 Cor. 5: 1, 9. "But if I live in the flesh, this is the fruit of my labor. * * * For I am in a strait betwixt two, having a desire to depart and to be with Christ which is far better. Nevertheless to abide in the flesh is more needful for you."—Phil. 1: 21, 24. "I knew a man in Christ whether in the body or out of the body I can not tell, God knoweth; such an one caught up to the third heaven."—2 Cor. 12. "Glorify God in your body, and in your spirit."—1 Cor. 6: 20. "The Lord Jesus Christ be with thy spirit."—2 Tim. 4: 22. "The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with your spirit."—Philemon 5: 25. "The spirit of man which is in him knows the things of man."—1 Cor. 2: 11. "I pray God your whole spirit and soul and body be preserved blameless."—1 Thes. 5: 23. Jesus told the thief on the cross, "To-day shalt thou be with me in Paradise." Then with his expiring breath he said, "Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit."—Luke 23: 43, 46. Stephen's dying prayer was, "Lord Jesus receive my spirit."—Acts 7: 39.

Were all these prophets and apostles deceived? Was the Redeemer of the world mistaken? Yet if there is no living, intelligent spirit in man, they must all have been the dupes of imagination, or of some false influence. I prefer to accept their testimony, and the unchangeable word of the Lord. And if others can draw comfort from the spirilless theory, they are welcome.

But to return. The Apostle Paul says, "Now to him that is of power to establish you according to my gospel, and the preaching of Jesus Christ, according to the revelation of the mystery which has been kept secret since the world began."—Rom. 16: 25. This mystery undoubtedly was the "eternal purpose" of which we are in search. But from whom had it been kept secret? Paul has anticipated our question, and speaking of the same mystery in 1st Cor. 2: 7, 8, says: "But we speak the wisdom of God in a mystery, even the hidden wisdom which God ordained before the world unto our glory; which none of the princes of this world knew: for had they known it, they would not have crucified the Lord of glory." It was only hidden from the world, as is further evident from Rom. 16: 26, where Paul, speaking of this secret, says: "But now is made manifest, and by the scriptures of the prophets, according to the commandment of the everlasting God, made known to all nations for the obedience of faith." From this we learn that this "mystery" was given in the scriptures of the prophets, but that none except the righteous could understand it. Bear in mind that Paul says, in 1st Cor. 2:7, this "hidden wisdom" "God ordained unto our glory." This proves that his purpose is in perfect harmony with the divine character. But if that "glory" is limited to our present narrow span of life, which to the purest, wisest and best is but a checkered career of light and darkness, joy and sorrow. For one of old has said, "Man is born unto trouble as the sparks fly upward." If limited to this life only then it is a deception, and our life is a mockery, and to us nothing but vanity. Paul declared, "If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable." But, praise to our great Creator, the "mystery" is revealed; his purpose is made known, and we are enabled to live "in hope of eternal life, which God that can not lie promised before the world began."—Titus 1:2. Hence we are not only his creatures and the subjects of his care here, but we are "called with a holy calling, not according to our works, but according to his own purpose and and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began; but is now made manifest by the appearing of our Savior Jesus Christ, who hath abolished death, and hath brought life and immortality to light through the gospel."—2 Tim 1:9, 10. "This is the promise that he hath promised us, even eternal life."—1st John 2:25. This "purpose" was revealed to Adam after the fall, for his comfort, and for the comfort of his believing children, (and is found in Gen. 6:62, Inspired Translation), that they might "enjoy the words of eternal life in this world, and eternal life in the world to come, even immortal glory." Paul gives us to understand that all the ancient worthies "saw the promises afar off."—Heb. 11:13. The Book of Mormon gives evidence of this "purpose" and promise. Lehi in vision beheld the tree of Life and was permitted to eat thereof.—p. 14. Nephi was also favored in like manner; and he declares "the way (to eternal life)" is prepared from the foundation of the world.—Pages 18, 19, 20. King Benjamin, after setting forth the means whereby this priceless boon shall be brought unto man, closes with these words: "Therefore I would that ye should be steadfast and immovable, always abounding in good works, that Christ, the Lord God omnipotent, may seal you his, that you may be brought to heaven, that ye may have everlasting salvation and eternal life, through the wisdom, and power, and justice, and mercy of him who created all things in heaven and in earth, who is God above all. Amen."—Book of Mormon, p. 154. The prophet Alma, showing the purpose of God in man's creation, says: "The decrees of God are unalterable, therefore the way is prepared, that whosoever will may walk therein and be saved."—Page 513. "And thus God bringeth about his great and eternal purposes, which were prepared from the foundation of the world. And thus cometh about the salvation and the redemption of men."—Page 315. In a revelation given through Joseph Smith in June, 1830, speaking of his purpose, in his works of creation, God says: "Behold this is my work to my glory, to the immortality and eternal life of man."—Doc. and Cov. 22:9. In section 110:23, we read: "Let the mountains shout for joy, and all ye valleys cry aloud; and all ye seas and dry lands tell the wonders of your eternal King. And ye rivers and brooks and rills, flow down with gladness. Let the woods, and all the trees of the field praise the Lord; and ye solid rocks weep for joy. And let the sun, moon and stars sing together, and let all the sons of God shout for joy. And let the eternal creations declare his name forever and ever. And again I say, how glorious is the voice we hear from heaven, proclaiming in our ears, glory, and salvation, and honor, and immortality and eternal life; kingdoms, principalities and powers."—

Thus we find the three records agree with respect to the eternal purpose of God in man's creation, and that he decreed to give unto man eternal life. Surely this purpose is worthy of the great Creator and should call forth unbounded and unceasing praises from the creature man, and inspire him to undying gratitude and never ending devotion to our God.

SERMON BY PRES. J. SMITH,

OF LAMONI, IOWA,

Delivered at the Saints' Chapel, Lamoni, Iowa,
April 14th, 1886.

[Reported for the Herald and prepared by the Editor].

It is not an easy task at all times to decide in one's own mind what ought to be the specific course pursued under the circumstances which may surround one. We have all of us received evidences that indicate that for some good purpose the divine mind has watched over the best interests of the human race, with the intent and purpose that every individual might best develop what is in him to the greatest good, and receive of the infinite one the best reward. We have preached everywhere, and insisted upon this principle as being true, to our neighbors, that a man shall be rewarded according to that which he does, and we are but unprofitable servants perhaps at the best; and certainly much more unprofitable, if from the intercourse with our fellow man in the discharge of those things which we term duties, or in the prosecution of those things which we denominate pleasures, we do not reap some valuable lessons, by which our judgment is better informed and which are the occasion of our living nearer the pattern which has been given us; and we are dull scholars if from our own teaching we receive no benefit. And it is just possible that this statement may be true in more senses than the one that he is happy who condemneth not in another what he alloweth in himself; or who in observing that which is going on around him, and observing the actions of his fellow men, does not sit in judgment himself upon what he himself is guilty of, and unconsciously condemn others while he condemns himself. As a people it would seem as if we ought to be grounded in wisdom; and yet when we sit quietly and calmly at rest and in meditation, if the thought of our respective goodness comes up before us, we instinctively acknowledge ourselves as but children; and we must admit, if we think sufficiently long upon the subject, that we are children in caution, sometimes men in malice.

The apostle in writing unto Timothy in the third chapter, makes use of the expression, whether he intended to make use of it as a trite saying or as an injunction, or whether he wrote it that in after years it might come to the eyes and understandings of those who might be affected by it, it affords us a nucleus for thought, something for examination; "This know also, that in the last times, (that is in the last days), perilous times shall come." We heard on yesternight something which if we believe it, impresses upon us the thought, that we are nearing the close of the dispensation that is upon us, and that there is to be somebody somewhere upon the wide earth, that is to be so affected by him who is to come, that he shall call for the rocks and the mountains to fall upon him, and hide him from the face of him who sitteth upon the throne. This condition of things can not obtain, except there shall be in process of development and in active exercise among men a principle of evil which these individuals will serve unto their condemnation; and who, when the time of judgment shall come, will flee instinctively from the face of him who is to be their judge. The opposite of this seems to be true also; that while these principles of evil are at work in the world, there also will be principles of good at work of such a nature that individuals who may be anxious for the better condition that may ensue when the rewards shall be apportioned, shall be enabled to order their lives in such a way that they shall not call for the rocks to fall upon them to hide them from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and who shall feel satisfied that they have no cause for fear.

There are three questions suggested here. Perhaps as important a one as any of them is this: Are these the last days? Do the circumstances which surround us as individuals, as societies; do the conditions under which we live; do the things which are transpiring; the condition into which the nations have fallen; the rapidity with which events have hastened upon each other for the last fifty years; do all these things indicate that these are the last days? The next question which is suggested in this connection is this: Is there for us this means of better development? Are we in any sense affected by that which we call the principle of good in the world, which is to be exercised for the deliverance of those who shall have no fear, or for the purpose of eliminating from their characters a relationship to the evils by which they are surrounded, that they are not partakers of evil deeds, that they may not be overcome by the fear? And the next question which each individual must answer for himself is this: Have we made use of that means, or are we making use of that means?

The events of the past few days among us as a people, indicate that some of the prophecies which have been uttered concerning these days, are taking place. One of those prophets which will be remembered by a good many persons who are listening to me, as before stated, was that it should come to pass that those among you who think that they stand will fall; and those upon whom trusts have been placed will betray their trusts. And as individuals we have been looking forward to the fulfillment of such prophecies as this, and have placed confidence and trust in them, because they had been uttered as we believed by the inspiration of the Spirit unto the prophets, not unto the prophet, but unto the prophets, because it had been granted unto the church, through which warnings of this character have come from time to time to the people which constitute the church, we have been just as literally unprepared for such events when they shall take place in our midst as if the prophecy had never been uttered. Our hearts have ached with pain, and our minds have been overclouded with distrust and fear because of what seemed to have been portended in this, or shall come out of that. That might be in our minds, however good we may have supposed that was that shall have gone out. Now he is a wise man, who, having been informed beforehand upon a matter that may transpire, so well informs his judgment that he is prepared to determine what shall be his action provided these exigencies are placed upon him, and is prepared to keep that which has been entrusted to him, notwithstanding others may be shaken from their trust.

Your speaker believes a principle in common with a great many others; at all events he believes and believes it fully, that all the forces of his being as touching the relationship that each man will sustain toward his creator, and the God who sent him unto them for the purpose of their redemption, that every individual being who is born into the Kingdom of God by and through the influences of the gospel of Jesus Christ, must sooner or later in his experiences pass through the equivalent of the forty days' trial which perfected him whom we call the Captain of our salvation. It may not come to you as it would come to me. The conditions which I am placed under by which my trials have to be applied unto their fitting me for the time of triumph, may not be of the same character as the conditions under which you may be placed. Nor will the circumstances by which these trials shall be made bitter or sweet unto us, or the results be alike in any two given cases. But one thing must be borne in mind as absolutely certain to take place, that upon every individual child of God this trial will come; and he that endures unto the end is the one to whom the reward is given. There is no promise of reward for him who goes half way in the trial; there is no promise of reward for him who goes two thirds of the way; it is only he that shall endure unto the end to whom the promise is made. No person who stops this side of the end of the race is entitled to ask for a reward because of the patience with which he has gone so far as he has gone, or that shall be entitled to a reward for the pains he has suffered, or for the difficulties under which he has labored, because there is no place at which he may claim the reward but at the goal for which he has set out. No individual who may be tried and overcome, or who may weakly give way to that which tried him, can do anything more than ask mercy and pity from him who will judge them pitifully and mercifully according to their several deserts. One of the objects in presenting this to your minds is this: There is to be a number of Elders who will go out from this conference into the world preaching the way of life. Now these men ought all of them to remember that they are sent out to preach the way of life, and not the way of death. Let the adversary take care of that, and he will find disciples enough. It is the business of these men to teach the way of life. In order to teach the way of life, they must teach it by example as well as precept. It will be the height of inconsistency for these men to preach a right life as one of the qualifications that entitle men to ask at the end of the race that the door may be opened to them, if they themselves do not manifest righteous lives. It will be in vain that these men shall teach the way that men can escape from the evils that have been in the world, if themselves are walking hand in hand with those evils. It will be the height of inconsistency for these men to teach the way by which men may attain unto the better life, if themselves do not walk in that way. By just so much as these men teach the ways of life among their fellow men, by just so much they must walk in the ways of life, teaching other men by example as well as by precept.

I tried the other night to strike as hard a blow as I possibly could at what I call ministerial tattling. I want to read from what appears in this book some of the things that shall occur in these perilous times. Now let me tell you there are no times more perilous than those in which a man's course represented in his every day deportment, I was going to say in his own thoughts, is not exactly right. But when every man's character as represented in his life and conduct is above reproach by the people among whom he may travel, in such a case all perils of this character cease for him. Only those who shall be conscious that their lives are above reproach in their personal conduct, will feel that they can afford to ignore the tongues of busy-bodies, whether friends or foes. But the individual who has so schooled himself in accordance with the law which himself is teaching, that he is absolutely conscious that no person in truth can charge him with departing from right ways of conduct among his fellow men, only such men as that, can afford to keep silence when the tongue of scandal shall bring that which is evil against his name. Such men as that are above reproach. Such men as that, and only such, can afford to pass by on the street when he is accused of that which is wrong without stopping to contradict it. I well remember a reply made by Senator Seward upon one occasion, when he was promised, or his friends had offered him an office within the gift of the people. One day while in his chamber there rushed in a friend with a newspaper in his hand, and asked him if he had seen the article it contained strongly condemnatory of Mr. Seward, making statements which were grievous in their character, and if true, showing that he was unfit for any such office. Mr. Seward told him that he was acquainted with the fact very well. Are you not going to contradict it? Well, he says to the man, Is that article true? No, says the man, it is not true, that is the reason I want you to contradict it. Mr. Seward says, if I take the pains to contradict that statement before the public, all the newspapers of the opposition will teem with just such articles as that, and every single one of them that I do not deny, will be taken as confessed and be construed against me. And for that reason he did not enter into the arena of contradiction. Now you can all see the force of that at once. Suppose that a man goes out upon the street and says that neighbor John Jones is a liar, and John Jones hears of it, and he spreads a representation all over the country that every statement made by this man is a lie, and he proposes to contradict and deny them; how many of his neighbors will pay any attention to what John Jones says if they know that John Jones has been in the habit of telling falsehoods?

"For men shall be lovers of their own selves." That is the very first statement made as one of the things that shall characterize these perilous times that will come. Have we anybody that loves themselves? Where are they? Well, they are in the world. Well, what part of the world? Well, they are not at Lamoni. Where are they? Well they are in Bo-ton. No, they are not, say the Bostonians, you can find them over at Providence. No, they are not there, says the Providence man. They are over at New Bedford. No, they are not, says the New Bedford man. They are always somewhere else, these lovers of their own selves. But they are somewhere in the last days; they characterize these perilous times that are to come. Pray tell me what is a lover of one's own self? I do not know but what it is almost foolish to attempt to elucidate what is meant by that, a lover of himself. I saw an exhibition of this class. One time I saw a man who weighed about one hundred and sixty pounds, or perhaps about one hundred and sixty pounds if he should have been in good health. He had a pair of arctic shoes over a pair of boots; he had on a good stout pair of pants as the evidences indicated; an overcoat; a fur tippet around his neck; a good solid cap upon his head; a pair of good strong, warm gloves upon his hands. I saw that man leading a little girl by the hand clothed in the fashionable habilaments in which mothers that love their children clothe them in these perilous times. That child was clothed with short cotton skirts that came to her knees; over them she had a pair of thin stockings; and on her feet a pair of thin cloth shoes; she had not a semblance of an overshoe; she had on a fashionable thing called a bonnet; and a thin merino cloak, to walk the streets of a city in slush from two to four inches deep, by the side of this man who did not love himself, but loved his little girl. That is one exhibition of loving one's self. But it is presented in another form. A man loves himself when he turns judge, and can not appreciate the judgment of his fellows; when he concludes that nothing is so well done as that which he does; nothing is so well said as that which he says, nothing is so completely worthy of attention as that which engages his attention. I do not know whether you can find such people in this world or not, but I guess you can if you try, and that without a microscope.

"Covetous." We all know what the sin of covetousness is. And it is said to be a terrible sin. Now covetousness is that which gathers to itself without giving an equivalent for that which it receives; that which grasps after what belongs to another. It may be manifested in different ways beside simply keeping and guarding what is one's own and coveting what should belong to another, or being close, fond of that which is one's own. One of the effects of covetousness is to make a man stand strongly upon the defense of his personal rights, in defense of that which is his own. The man who in the consideration of questions in the church in any sense of the word, is too ready to strike back, is not only contentious but covetous, especially if his disposition of striking, putting forth in defense of that which is his own is in defense of what might be called his monetary rights.

"Boasters." I am glad we have none of them.

"Proud." What kind of pride? There are a good many kinds of pride. There is false pride, and there is a laudable pride, or an excusable pride. I confess that I always like to see a man or woman proud enough to be just so haughty in deportment, that no person to lead them from the discharge of faithful duty shall be permitted to approach them. I like to see a man sufficiently proud to stand in his own dignity, his own place; just that proud that he will do everything in his power to do conscientiously that which has been entrusted to his care by either God or men. This is what proud men sometimes will do, proud spirited men. Men that are so proud that they will not descend to disregard the rights of others to their injury and suffering. That kind of pride that wishes for things a little better, a little nicer, a little pleasanter than one's neighbor's, that kind of pride is not commendable. That is the kind of pride that is meant here. It manifests itself in fine clothing; it manifests itself in fine surroundings; it manifests itself in fine deportment; it manifests itself in carelessness in respecting the rights and the things which belong to others; and finally if it is not put away, it will work in these individuals, and it will make them blind, and behold they will stumble and fall. It has passed into a proverb, and I believe it to be true, that "pride goeth before a fall." Because individuals are looking so far above them that they do not watch where they place their feet, and as a consequence they must necessarily stumble and fall; their feet not being guarded well they will certainly fall. Are you Elders proud? (A voice "no.") Well that is said kind of faint; he is not quite sure of that.

"Blasphemers." Do you know any of these? Are they in the church; and if so do they belong there? Is the character of a blasphemer one that is worthy to secure praise from the Master? Himself was meek, notwithstanding his language. Can you find any place where he ever blasphemed? Did Paul not even submit to a rebuke when he said "I did not know that it was the high priest? Was he proud, was he a blasphemer?" Now you go out into the world so called, and you will find taking the name of deity in vain is a common thing. You can not pass the streets of some cities, scarcely along half a block, but what you will hear more or less profanity. Go among the places where men congregate at work, and you will find that it is the salt of their conversation, so to speak; it is the spice of their energies; they can not make a pass at each other but what they must call the name of the Deity or his Son into question; they can not make an affirmation but what they must do the same thing, call the Deity or his Son into question to make affirmation with them. They are blasphemers. But then this is not the only kind of blasphemy in the world. There is a good deal of it that makes God responsible for the things which men themselves do for themselves. A great many men make their fellow men responsible and shelter themselves by the statement that they have been imposed upon by the misdeeds of some other men. This class of men you can find in the world to-day. They have gone in the way of transgression, and it has been pleasant unto them, and they will take shelter under the declaration, "Whv, they did it. I am no better than they. Or if so good a man as he could do it, I do not think the Lord will blame me very much if I do it, weak as I am." Now I told that people over west yonder when I was out there last fall, that while I might accept the doctrine of proxy in some senses, there was one sense in which I would by no means accept the doctrine, and that was that in the judgment day I should not expect that any man could stand proxy for me, and take the punishment that was my due, any more than a man can stand proxy for me in that day and get the reward that I may be entitled to, provided that I am entitled to a reward. There will be no punishment by proxy in the judgment day, my good friends; remember that if you please; consequently do not take shelter for your misdeeds behind the philosophy that somebody else did it—somebody else induced you to do it. If you do you will surely stumble and be led into wrong doing. Please do not do it. I will give you an instance; brother Anthony is here and he knows whether my statement is correct or not. They undertook to shut my mouth in Ogden by sending me word, or it came to my ears at all events, that there were five women in Ogden who proposed to come to the meeting, and if I said that my father did not have any more wives than one, they proposed to rise right up and contradict me. So when I heard it I will tell you what I did, I got terribly afraid. I told this people—it was a wide hall, almost as wide as this—"You may stretch a bench from one side to the other of this hall, and put forty women upon that bench, each one of which respectively shall be able to testify in truth that she was a wife to Joseph Smith in all that the term wife implies, and you will not change the situation so far as I am concerned one particle. I hope, I said, that after all that has been said, you will understand this once for all. I do not make the fight upon that proposition at all." The idea was that they found shelter for themselves under the idea that this man did it; and they proposed to shut my mouth upon the proposition also that he did it. I do not propose that his transgression shall bring me punishment, any more than I suppose his priesthood will save me. They told me down at Springville, "O brother Joseph, you are all right; your father will save you; he has priesthood enough to save you." Well, I replied, I am safe enough, I guess I will go on just as I am. Now you understand that principle do you not? That to my mind is outright blasphemy. That kind of a proposition is the worst kind of blasphemy, to implicate Jehovah in the crimes and misdeeds of some men. Men take responsibility upon themselves and do wrong because they love the wrong, and then ask that the responsibility fall upon somebody else. I do not believe that at all. You keep clear of such blasphemy when you go out into the field; you Elders. If you do wrong, don't take shelter under somebody else's wrong.

"Disobedient to parents." Our children are all obedient. We have no disobedient children, have we? Fathers, mothers, answer the question, and answer it well; and if we do not have them, then there is one mark or characteristic of the last days that we have not discovered. Is it not a fact that the young of the present generation, what is called "young America," are disobedient and strongly perverse? Why, it is not an unusual thing to find a sixteen year old boy that has got better brains and better judgment than his father ever had. His father thinks perhaps that the boy is a fool, but the boy knows that his father is, he don't think anything about it; and as for government, he knows more in a minute than his father does in a month. As for restraint, he is too big too whip, you dare not do it; if you do, away goes the boy. Command him, and he will obey you if he likes; command her, and she will laugh at you. Ask her to respect you in the assemblies where she goes, and she will if your eye is upon her; ask him to respect your commands, your do-sires, and he will as long as you watch him. I tell you the seed of disobedience has been sown some way or other, and the adversaay has been sowing this spirit of disobedience. In the child it appears at first, and it will ripen in the man, and at last you have a perverse generation. It will ripen in the girl and in the woman, and bear fruit, and her children, and her children's children are the children of disobedience. The fact is that there must be strong principles of government in the father and mother, that the principles of obedience may be fastened by nature upon the character of the child. It must not only be government of the strong iron hand, but it must be that this disposition is planted in the nature, and obedience secured by that which is placed in the mind and in the heart. That is true obedience. This obedience which is forced, this which keeps within the bonds because it is not possible to break those bonds, is not true obedience. The inebriate, while he is where he can not get liquor is necessarily sober; but it is not the result of sobriety of character; for as soon as the bond is removed, unless you shall have kept him away from it until the ability to gratify his propensity for drink has passed away, he will go out and become drunken again. If you will instill the proper obedience into the heart and brain of the individual, you will have a man like this one, (pointing to Bro. John McIntosh), who put his tobacco away, and says to the Lord, If you will help me I will never chew again as long as I live. That is the principle of obedience. Now then, another common vice is scolding. Are Saints guilty of this? I hope not. And yet we can find plenty of scolding among the Saints; men and women, and some of the Elders that are born scolds, and they are pretty good practitioners.

"Unthankful." Now this is of a peculiar character. Let me tell you where it finds its worst development. The more you do for some men the more you may do; and the time will ultimately come when they will demand as a right that which was at first granted as a boon, until they will take for granted all that is held out to them. This is ingratitude, it is one of the blackest of crimes. The elders ought not only to be enjoined in this regard to teach the principle of gratefulness, but they should also cultivate the principle in themselves. It is not enough to kneel down before God and thank him with the lips; it is another thing that the incense of the grateful heart shall arise continually and spontaneously from the heart that receives the gifts of God daily and hourly, singing a song of rejoicing continually for that which is received. I sometimes hear the prayer, and so have you, that past blessings will not suffice, we pray that way now, that past blessings will not suffice. Why not? Why, some man will say I can not feed upon the food that I ate last night, I must have food now. Surely your Heavenly Father knows that. Suppose that there may be some cause why the blessings of God are withholden from us in the present, and the blessings of the past will not suffice. Many a poor man and woman is in doubt, in an absolute condition of doubt regarding the goodness of God, and possibly some here to-night, concerning their circumstances before God, because the blessings hitherto vouchsafed from his hand had under certain circumstances been withholden, notwithstanding the blessings of the past have certified beyond the peradventure of a doubt of the goodness of God as manifested to these persons; but their being withheld for the time being has with such blotted all the past record out. Now that is an unwarranted condition of mind. It becomes a species of hard-heartedness. And however much you may have to bear; however trying your circumstances may be; however deep and poignant the anguish of your heart may be that you are called upon to be exercised by, if there has been a blessing of God in the past, that sense of thankfulness should still remain. And while you crave present blessings, you never should allow the withholden of these goodly things to change our relationship to our Heavenly Father. I know my little fellows sometimes think it is hard to be deprived of something which they may want or which they may need, and it sometimes pains my heart to withhold it from them; but continual giving of those things which they may ask for often begets in the mind of the child a degree of peevishness, of which you fathers may know and you mothers may know, and you have finally to come to it to keep the peace. Now is that the kind of children we are with our heavenly Father? Will we importune him and distress him, until he finally gives us to keep us from whining about it? If we do we are getting unthankful. That is one of the characteristics of this last age, these last days.

I read on. "Unholy." This means unsanctified, probably. I was going to say that it meant unruly; I don't know as it does altogether. It certainly means without sanctification, or without the means of grace, or without a disposition of reverence; or a careless disregard of the things which are righteous; an indifference to the claims of that which is good and noble. It may result from many conditions.

"Without natural affection." What is natural affection? What is it? Can anybody tell? Do you know of houses where this principle is lacking, this natural affection? The father is indifferent to the affection of his son, and the son indifferent to the affection of the father. The ties are so loosely placed that they are easily broken. Do you know of any body that is without such ties as these? Without the natural love and regard, the wife for the husband, and the husband for the wife; the mother for the child and the child for the mother? Do you know of any such place as this? Is it not true that the present age is characterized by the absence of this kind of affection? The courts are almost blockaded in certain localities with suits for divorce, and these things are on the increase. Almost every kind of cause is sufficient complaint to go into court with and urge a separation. What is the result of this? It is the destruction of the love and the affection of parents for their children. That follows in turn just as sure as night follows day. If you find a man and woman married together who have no love or regard for each other, you may just calculate that the seeds of distrust and carelessness to the total destruction of filial affection will be sown in the children. Now Elders and Saints, especially you Elders when you go abroad and teach upon such things as this, do you not know that there is but one thing in the whole scriptures that warrants divorce between married companions, just one sole cause recognized by Christ. The Catholic Church is infinitely in advance of some other associations in this regard; for they recognize but one cause for divorce. As a people we ought to take high ground in this regard, that this characteristic that marks the age of perilous times may not make its impress upon us as a people. We find this everywhere. This people out west charge it as the result of the monogamic relation. When I went out west I met with some strange things there. I was told by two Elders in that place, and one of them a leading man, that women out there were freer than in any other city or place, especially in the United States. I says how is that, sir? All that is necessary, if a woman gets discontented with her lot she may go to the president and secure from him a divorce from her husband and she can leave him and marry another. And so prevalent is this in the City of Salt Lake—I am glad Bro. Anthony is here to-night—that there is a woman there who has been married and separated from her spiritual husband ten times; there is another up there at Ogden that has been married seven times; and another down at Beaver that has been married fourteen times. She took the tenth husband to the bishop and turned him over for tithing. When I put this question directly to this leading elder, and asked him how can this be a fact; for there is no divorce provided for in that wonderful system of beatitude that makes angels on earth(?) he did not dare to answer. He says I won't defend. Well he could not. "Without natural affection." That is the natural result of a condition of things as that; it can not be otherwise. We find it in the monogamic world, and it must result from some causes. The easy manner in which this bond that binds men and women together in the marriage relation as instituted of God is broken, is largely the cause of this state of things, that is described here, and I am going to tell it to you, and I don't want you to tell anybody about it. A gentleman and lady had been married. After a time living together the bonds became very irksome, they were having trouble, and quarreled. One night there were lying on the rug in front of the fire the cat and the dog. "Madam," says he to her in rebuke, "do you not see that the cat and the dog can agree together peaceably?" "Yes," she says, "but you just bind them together and you will see the fur fly." The significance of this is simply in the relation of this bond. It is of course a bond, and there must be in those bound together a power of assimilation to their surroundings. I wish all the men were like a man I was reading about one time. He was a great big good natured fellow, and his wife was a little bit of a woman with a terrible temper. If she had been larger it might not have been so bad. She was small and she was in the habit of beating this big fellow. One day a neighbor came in and found her terribly angry and she was giving him a terrible fisticuffing. He took it good naturedly and after a while he went out. "Why do you allow that," says the neighbor. He says to him, "It don't hurt me, and it amuses her."

Now there must be somewhere strength, and it ought to be in this relation on both sides, in order that this people might not be without natural affection, that they might fully appreciate the idea of the human heart being entwined about with affection for another being and that reciprocated. And yet there is such a condition of mind allowed to engender as makes this bond irksome and hard to bear. It is a terrible thing. It ought to be corrected. Persons who find this cropping out within themselves ought to put themselves into strong submission; if they find it increasing upon them they ought to put—I don't know what kind of environments around themselves. They ought to put bridles on their heads; and if these won't do, they ought to by all means put a bit into their mouths and upon their unruly tongues. It will crop right out, and nobody can tell what will result from the first rashly spoken word. Cruel as the grave is this controversy between companions. I have dwelt upon this a little longer than I ought to have done; but it is a prevalent sin, one that we have to deal with, one that these elders who are going out will have to meet; and who will be called upon to decide questions as to the worthiness of individuals to be received by baptism upon whom these bonds have been fastened and broken, and others fastened and broken again. After the gospel reaches such people, and they reform and reach the heavenly gates, if they can, I have no objection to Peter opening the door to them, just as wide as he may see fit for all the sin-sick ones there; but if we shall come up to the standard of being saints upon the earth, and as teachers of the law we must by some means make ourselves acceptable unto the Lord by personal conduct in this regard.

I read still further. "Truce-breakers." What kind of things are these? I will tell you a class of them. Brother John, I want to make a contract with you. I am going to tell you something about neighbor James, and don't you tell it. I won't, says John. I go to neighbor James and tell him something of the same kind, and make him promise not to tell anybody else. They make contracts with somebody else, the same kind of contracts, and so it goes all over and they make and break them; and the result of it is that the first thing that I know I am arrested for slandering my fellow man. I go down and accuse him of breaking the agreement. He says you broke it too; you told James. I did not keep my trust and you did not keep yours, and we are even, so don't you say anything about it. Are there any of this kind of people anywhere? Did we not have a sermon in which one of the elders said, "Be sure your secret sin will find you out?" Is it not true? If it is so, please don't make these contracts if you do not intend to keep them; and when you do make them, keep them. The better way is to avoid contracts of that kind. Again men make contracts with associations to which they belong, and then they betray the secrets of those associations. They have no business to do it. If they make the contracts let them keep them. If they propose to go out from these societies, let them do so, but keep their peace about what has transpired in the lodge-room. I would not be justified in breaking faith with a Gentile any more than I would be with a Saint, so far as simply breaking the bond is concerned.

But we will go along again. "False accusers." I would be infinitely glad as a man, as a teacher, if there was none of this class found among the Saints. But I would be twice glad in this regard if there were none among the elders. There ought not to be any; and if we shall finally reach the standard to which it is best that we may aspire, there will be no false accusers among us. Let me give these elders now a bit of a clue to character. When any man or woman comes to you and proposes to tell you bad stories about your fellow laborers, take out a piece of paper and pencil, and tell them to sit right down and write it down and sign their names to it. You will hear but few stories, I tell you. But you just prick your ears toward it and listen to them and they will fill your head and your heart. If these things are not checked, they go on until they sow the footprints of these elders who go into the different parts with this kind of things and make those who come after them sad and sick at heart; they talk and talk until you will find that it is terrible to go anywhere and hear the whispers had concerning the brethren that have been before you. There are men, thank God, who have been in the field against whom none of these whispers and accusations have been urged. Thank God for that. But there have been good men who have been thus falsely accused, who when they have borne it long have at length, worn out, have turned in despair away; and the time has come that those who have been their accusers could find nothing to support the accusations which were made. The book says, "Receive not an accusation against an elder except in the presence of witness." Do not listen to any stories that are proposed to infuse into your minds something against your ministerial brother. If he has transgressed, it is your ministerial duty to see to it that he shall be brought back. If he is a transgressor against the law of the land, see that the law of the land takes him in demand for it. Now husbands, do not receive accusations against your wives. If anybody proposes to and whispers stories in your ears to poison your mind against your wife, tell them you do not want to hear them when your wife is not present. If anybody wants to tell you wives anything against your husbands, do like one good woman did before, tell them if they have anything to say about your husband, "Say it to him, I do not want to hear it." And when she insisted upon her hearing it, she said, "Stop, and go right out of the house; I will not have you telling stories about my husband when he is not here. If you want to make a statement, come and make it when he is present, and if there is any truth in it it may be inquired into." It is best to end that kind of business just that way. They are false accusers. If they have anything true let it be put forth where it can be investigated. Truth is not afraid of the light. But these scandal mongers are afraid; they don't want their names brought into the quarrel. They want you to find it out. It is your business to find it out they say. It is none of your business to go around and hunt up these scandals. It is unbecoming an elder, beneath his dignity. If you have charges lodged with you, make inquiry, but do not stop and listen to these scandals. Do you not know that one of the characteristics of the present age is to love a lie better than the truth? They will listen to it better. A lie will travel from Maine to Georgia, while truth is sitting down to soberly put on her boots.

"Incontinent, fierce." Ready to fight, that means don't it?" Despisers of those that are good." Yes, "Traitors." But no, there are no traitors now. "Heady." Any of them? What is a heady man? One that wants his own way is it not? One that persists in his own way, one that is difficult to turn, one that is hard to reason with, one that does not propose to listen when you try to tell him that this is wrong and this is right, just wrapped up in himself and takes heed to himself. He is a heady man.

"High minded." Yes, some of them. "Lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God." Any of them? Yes I can tell some of them. How is it manifested? I will tell you how I have seen it manifested. Take a congregation say as big as this, and you pass the hat for a purpose, say for Sunday School cause. The biggest part of what you will get will be pennies, now and then a quarter; and some large hearted man will give a dollar. You make an oyster supper for the benefit of the same cause, and you take the same house and the receipts are large. "Lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God." That which strikes the individual favorably, no matter what way it results to the individual, that which gives the person pleasure is patronized. This of course applies to the world also. I am very thankful that it does not apply to the Saints. I am thankful for that. They believe in direct methods.

"Having a form of godliness, and denying the power thereof. From such turn away." Some of you have thought perhaps that some of these strictures which I have been making about certain persons to be found in the world, have been rash, and that I was one of these born scolds. I tell you I was not a born scold, I have been educated into it and necessity has been the mother that has educated me. And now we come to the apostle's statement, "From such turn away." What is the object of turning away from them? Simply this. That these are perilous times, and those that shall endure unto the end shall be of that character who are cultivating the graces and not the follies, or the vices that will be found in the world. Now the graces are goodness; the graces are a meek and quiet spirit; the graces are, or one of them is to be a teacher of the wisdom that is from above, gentle, easy to be entreated, that is the wisdom from above. We think these should grace these Elders when they go abroad teaching, and those to whom they teach who make a profession of faith in Christ are to be of that character that they shall become lovely; and not only lovely in the eyes of the Saints and themselves, but in the eyes of the world. I will tell you the kind of a man I would not like to travel with as a minister; with a minister who would meddle with the house-wife about cooking and tell her what kind of clothes she ought to wear. I would not like to travel with such a man as that. I would not like to travel with an Elder who meddled with his brother's business, and who was busy trying to pry into this, that and the other thing about his business, making himself acquainted with it in order that he might pick a flaw here and there in it. I would not like to travel with such a man as that. I would not like to travel with an Elder who had not a sufficient amount of the grace of God to keep his hands off the women folks; I would not like to travel with an Elder whose hands were too ready to pat the sisters on the shoulders, and chuck them under the chin, or on the cheek, one that is fond of getting his hands upon the person of the sisters, however innocent it may appear, I would not like to travel with him. I know that the country soon would be full of yarns detrimental of his character. One man wrote me once from Ohio, asking if we practiced the holy kiss. Some know what that is. It has been practiced by some in the times past, by those that believe in the holy kiss. I will tell you what I wrote him, and if it hits any of you Elders, put on the coat and wear it. I wrote him that my observation had been of this character, that as a rule those individuals who hold most strenuously to this idea of a holy kiss looked out to kiss the young and the good looking, while the old and the withered, and the unlovely went without a kiss; and to my mind it smacked more of the flesh than it did of the holy kiss, and for that reason I was not in favor of its practice. If any of you know anything about this holy kiss, you know just what I mean. If any of you want to practice this holy kiss, I advise that when you come into the house of Saints, you kiss the old grand-mothers and let the fourteen and sixteen year old girls alone. Let me tell you one of the reasons why I make this statement: It will be charged whether it will be true or not, (remember that I make the prediction and you can write it down in your books and see whether it is fulfilled or not)—I make the prediction that this church called the Reorganization, it will be asserted that it is going into the ways of the apostate church, and this will be one of the characteristics of its departure. If so, I say see to it, I warn you now at the outset, these things must never be encouraged nor done by these ministers or representatives of the body.

Bickerings, jarrings, hateful inuendoes, the sickening insinuation, are unlovely in themselves; but how much more despicable are they when found with those who are striving to teach the way of holiness, right dealings, and right walk among men. How much more unlovely are they in teachers of righteousness, following the footsteps of the meek and lowly Master. See how he bore with these contradictions against himself. Then do not put up your arms and be so ready to strike; bear with patience all things. Take just precisely what you would expect me to take under similar circumstances. These brethren and sisters are anxious that I should not give way to anger, that I should rule my tongue and head and heart, and patiently strive to emulate so far as I may, the Master's example. It some of us get a little out of the way you see it won't be noticed, but you see what the effect would be if you should do it. Now brethren what is good for me is good for you. If this course will commend me unto the favor of the people, let it commend you. And if you do not take the pains to ingratiate yourselves into the good feelings of those among whom you travel by correct deportment, by upright walk, and by just conversation, how can you expect me to give loveliness and character unto the standard of him whom we are all striving to emulate, Jesus Christ, the perfect one; how can you expect it. Now brethren, don't make yourselves busy-bodies; and though it is said that you can not put old heads on young shoulders, yet one thing is absolutely certain, the Spirit of God has power to cleanse the heart and clear the brain, and put wise heads on young shoulders. It has that power. May it be exemplified in you and your calling; and if I have said anything which in its nature is calculated to lead you to think of these things, and lead you to a better contemplation of your duty and your privileges under your ministerial calling, may God in his infinite mercy bless it to you, is my prayer.

Conference Minutes.

CENTRAL NEBRASKA.

The conference of the above district convened at the Saints' chapel, near Clear Water, at 10 a. m., September 25th; W. S. Barbee in the chair. The minutes of June conference were read. The president, also Elders Levi Gamet, James Caffall, and Oscar Beebe; Priests Martin Cain, Alden B. Herman and Charles H. Derry; also Aaron Hollenbeck, Teacher, and John Holland, Deacon, reported. Committee on membership of Glen Alpine Branch, reported; the report was accepted and committee continued. Branch reports: Grand Rapids, 11; no change since last report. Cedar Creek, 18; one marriage. Clear Water, 68; 1 received by letter, 1 expelled, 1 marriage. Deer Creek, 34. Chelsea, 11; organized June 13th, 1886. L. Gamet, Bishop's Agent, reported nothing received or paid out. W. S. Barbee was sustained president of the district and L. Gamet secretary. The afternoon and evening sessions were devoted to preaching the word, Elder James Caffall occupying the stand. Sunday morning Elder Caffall again addressed the conference. Met Sunday afternoon for prayer and testimony. The sacrament was also administered, Bro. Caffall being in charge. A pleasant season of worship was had. Sunday evening Bro. Caffall spoke to a fair sized audience, after which conference adjourned to meet at Clear Water Branch, December 25th, at 11 o'clock a. m.

Elders N. N. Cooke, C. J. Peat, J. Beaird, J. G. Smith, H. Roberts and Priest J. S. Parrish reported their labors in the church during the last three months. Resolved, that all branches of this district who do not report to the district conference, are informed that it is expected of them to do so, and the clerk of the district is hereby authorized to so notify them. Resolved, that all members of branches who are living nearer to another Branch than that to which they belong, are requested to take their letters of removal to the branch nearest where they live, and further, that this resolution be published in the Herald. Bishop's Agent's report for the quarter ending September 30th, 1886:—Balance on hand June 17th, 1886, $51.05, received since $101.60, total $152.65, expended to H. C. Bronson $25.00, to Bishop G. A. Blakeslee $50.00, to exchange 40 cents, to E. Davis $22.00, total $97.40, balance $55.25. The auditing committee found this report correct. Sunday October 3d:—Morning session, preaching by Elder James Whitehead. Afternoon session, sacrament and testimony. Bro. R. D. Cottam spoke in an unknown tongue which Bro. Wm. Smith interpreted as follows:

"They that live godly in Christ Jesus shall enjoy all the blessings and powers of the Kingdom of God that have been promised unto them; and the time is near at hand when the restitution of the power of God through the faith of the Saints will be realized, and the blessings of God extended unto them more powerfully than they have been for a long, long time. Amen."

Officers present:—1 High Priest, 13 Elders, 2 Priests and 3 Teachers. Resolved that we sustain all the spiritual authorities of the church in righteousness. Evening session, preaching by Elders John Beaird and Henry Roberts. Adjourned to meet in Belleville, Illinois, on Saturday afternoon, January 8th, 1887, for the transaction of business, and on the following Sunday for worship.

SOUTH-EASTERN OHIO AND WEST VIRGINIA.

In obedience to the call of the President, a conference of the above named district convened at Vale's Mills, Vinton county, Ohio, September 11th and 12th, 1886. Brn. W. H. Kelley and T. J. Beatty were chosen presidents; A. B. Kirkendall, secretary. Branch reports: Morgan, no change since last report. Milton, last report 8; present 9. Union Grove, last report 19; present 30. Syracuse, same as last report, 48; 1 death, 1 baptism. Vinton, last report 60, present 62. No report from the Wayne or Lebanon Branches. The Wayne Branch was declared disorganized. Official reports: T. J. Beatty (baptized 11), J. Moler (baptized 2), L. R. Devore (baptized 5), A. B. Ervin, L. W. Torrence, D. Thomas, Thos. Matthews (baptized 1), D. Hopkins, J. L. Goodrich and Jacob Double in person; C. G. Ruley (baptized 2), and Joel Allen by letter. Priests H. E. Moler and G. Roushe in person. Teachers S. Bennington and J. F. Williams in person; J. W. Givens by letter. Cabin Run, West Virginia, and Clarksburg, West Virginia, Branches, on their petition were admitted into the district. Elder's license granted to C. G. Ruley, and Teacher's license to John W. Givens. James Moler authorized to secure names and items of ordination of the Elders in the district and forward them to the General Recorder for enrollment in the Quorums of Elders. By request of Bro. Thomas Matthews he was recommended to the Bishop for release from the office of Bishop's Agent, and Bro. T. J. Beatty was recommended for appointment. During the conference preaching by the following named brethren: W. H. Kelley, James Moler, Jacob Double and Thomas Matthews. The church dedication Sunday. Dedication sermon preached by Bro. Kelley. Three were added to the church by baptism. A vote of thanks was extended to the many friends at Vale's Mill, for their kindness shown to the visiting Saints. T. J. Beatty continued as president and J. Moler as vice president, and A. B. Kirkendall re-elected clerk. Adjourned to meet at Limerick, Ohio, in February, 1887; day of month to be designated by the president.

PROTRACTED MEETINGS.

Meetings will be held in the western part of the North-west District of Kansas as follows: Deer Creek branch, Phillips county, seven miles east of Prairie View, October 30th, at 7:30 p.m. Saints wanting to attend this meeting can address Walter Brownlee, Prairie View, Phillips county. Twin Creek branch, November 13th, at 7:30 p.m., four miles east of Osborne City. Saints attending this meeting can address Jacob F. Jameson, Osborne City. Elmira branch, twelve miles south of Glen Elder, November 27th, at 7:30 p.m. Saints attending this meeting can address Abraham Sears, Elmira, Mitchell county. Any one coming by railroad, and want to be met at the station, had better write to these brethren. Bro. Eli Clothier has given consent to preside over these meetings; other brethren have partly promised to assist. I trust each branch will make these meetings a special thought in their prayers for the success of the same. We must teach outsiders the worth of these meetings, and all others assembling, by laboring for their success. If the Saints are slow and backward to tell their neighbors the good story and invite them to come out to hear, they might conclude we are ashamed of the work. Let us put on a bold front; we have nothing to fear; it is God's work; all we have to do is to learn our duty, and then do it with an eagerness to please God. To the brethren of the priesthood in the district: do not be discouraged when you go to your appointments and find only a few to listen to you; but take courage in what the Lord said: This is not a day of many words, but a day of witness. May the work roll on, is my humble prayer.

Yours in gospel bonds.

DIED.

HALSTEAD.—At Fall River, Massachusetts, October 3d, 1886, of quick consumption, Davis, only son of James and Sarah Halstead. He was a member of the Saints' Sabbath School although not a member of the Church. He remained conscious until death; selected from among his companions certain ones to be pall bearers, and gave instructions concerning his funeral. Services were held in the Saints' chapel, where a goodly number gathered as a last tribute of respect for the deceased. Sermon by Elder F. M. Sheehy.

BRADWAY.—At Indianola, Iowa, September 18th, 1886; was buried on the 20th. Funeral services were conducted by a minister of United Brethren Church, there being no Elder of the gospel nearer than twenty miles. Sr. Elizabeth Bradway was in her eighty-sixth year. She was baptized at Newton, Iowa, in 1870, by Gordon E. Deuel, since which time she has shown an exemplary Christian life, by adhering closely to the teachings of the blessed Savior, and died with the hope of appearing again when the Savior comes. Such are the hopes of those who embrace the gospel in its fullness.

THOMAS.—At her home in Pittsburg, Pa., of typhoid fever, Elizabeth Thomas. She was born December 24th, 1824, in Cevenmaur, Wales; was baptized into the Church of Jesus Christ, at Pittsburg, June 14th, 1885, by Elder Jacob Reese; and confirmed in Mansfield, Ohio, on the same day by Elders Jacob Reese and David J. Jones. She leaves a husband, three sons and a daughter, besides a great many relatives, to mourn her loss. Funeral sermon by a Baptist minister.

Selections.

THE WILL.—REV. SAM JONES' VIEWS.

Brother, I am so glad at last the will of man is the pivotal point. I am so glad God throws it all at last upon the human will. Whosoever will. It is not "whosoever feels, now, nor whosoever thinks, nor whosoever mourns, nor whosoever cries," but "whosoever will." That is it. That makes the elect straight out, for the elect are the "whosoever will;" and the non-elect are the "whosoever won't;" and that is all there is of it. God Almighty has foreordained from the foundation of the world that whosoever will may take the water of life freely; and he has foreordained from the foundation of the world that whosoever won't take it shall perish forever. Whosoever will. Brother, he throws it on the will. Christ says: "if any man will be my disciple." "Whosoever will come after me, let him deny himself." The will. There it is. Now, brother, here is the will and the intellect and the sensibilities. There is the trinity that makes the unity—the will, the intellect, the sensibilities.

Now, God comes through my sensibilities and traverses my whole nature. My sensibilities—He comes up through my love and affection and my fears and my hopes. He just goes all through my sensibilities, and there isn't a door shut in His face. He goes through the whole. Then He comes up through my intellect, my perception, conception, judgment, memory, reason. He just runs up through every avenue of my intellect, and there isn't a door to open or to close. But when God has come up through my sensibilities and up through my intellect and reaches the door of the human will, He tiptoes, and says: "Behold, I stand at the door and knock. If any man will open to me I will come in and sup with him and he shall sup with me." And God can do all things, but God never has broken down the door of a human will. Oh, God will never bring life to you until you unlock the door of your will and pull it open yourself, and when you do God himself comes in and brings life and salvation to you.

PUNCTUALITY.

AN eminent Philadelphia jurist died the other day, and among other bequests gave to his grandson a gold watch with this instruction: "Whenever he looks at the watch he will remember the necessity of being a correct and punctual man." There is a lesson in this injunction which every one may learn with profit.

Punctuality is one of the necessities to successful business life, and it is an ornament among the social virtues. The man who is always punctual does more and does it better than he who is always late, always behind time. Leaving duties to be performed until the last moment and then rushing them through, makes a mess of any work. The man who is always punctual saves much time and saves himself much trouble and his friends and acquaintances a great deal of annoyance. He who is always on time is esteemed and respected by his business acquaintances and social companions. What a nuisance it is always to be compelled to wait for one with whom an engagement has been made for a certain hour. Some persons are habitually late, and as a general thing, they are in a hurry. This seems something of a paradox, but it is nevertheless true.

Great dangers are sometimes the result of being behind time, if only for a few minutes. Engineers know the truth of this, and profit by it by sending their engines through on time. Business men incur great financial risks by not being punctual. They arrive at the bank just a few minutes after their note has gone to protest, and their financial standard is lowered. They promise to pay their bills at a certain hour of a certain day, but being addicted to tardiness, they disregard their promises, and their business reputation suffers. There are some persons who are always late at arriving at their places of business, and they drag through the day because they started behind time. Many a good situation has been lost because clerk or salesman failed to reach his post of duty punctually. Accident or circumstances may excuse in some instances but never with persons who make tardiness a habit. The workman who is from ten to twenty minutes late every morning, not only incurs his employer's displeasure, but he frequently receives merited rebuke, and sooner or later is told that his services are no longer needed. Employers who are always prompt to quit work at the first stroke of the closing day's work should be just as prompt to begin work. At home, in school and at business, punctuality should always be insisted upon, for laxity in this respect leads to neglect of duties in other respects.

Punctuality can be taught as well as any other commendable trait, and it should be taught and practised. In business or social life punctuality should be demanded, and a want of it should ever be rebuked. Persons who are always late do not know the value of time and they lose much thereby.—Selected.

DEDICATION AT OMAHA.

ON the morning of the 17th instant, the Saints of the Omaha, Nebraska, branch assembled at their new chapel on Twenty-first, between Clark and Grace streets, for the purpose of dedicating the building to the service of God, whom they worship. Bro. John Avondet, president of the branch, placed the conduct of the services in the hands of the senior Editor, who invited Bro. James Caffall of the Twelve, Bro. Avondet and Bro. Robert McKenzie, president of the Council Bluffs branch, into the stand. An excellent programme had been provided by arrangement with Bro. William Rumel, president of the district and chairman of the building committee, and Bro. Mark H. Forscutt, who had charge of the song service, which programme we give below.

At the hour of 10:30 a.m. the service began, the opening prayer was offered by Bro. James Caffall; the dedicatory prayer by Bro. Joseph Smith. The services were impressive; the song service being exceptionally good. An excellent feeling prevailed, the house was filled, and all seemed to enjoy the hour. This good feeling continued throughout the day; two services being held in the afternoon at three and at 7:30. Of the preaching we have nothing to say. The programme is as follows:

1. Opening anthem chant, "Praise ye the Lord."
2. Hymn 769, Saints' Harp, "Oh, bow thine ear, Eternal One."
3. Scripture lesson,—2 Chron. 6: 12-42.
4. Recitative Response to lesson, "Thy word is a lamp."
5. Opening prayer.
6. Hymn 764, "We dedicate to Thee this house we have reared."
7. Dedicatory sermon, by President Joseph Smith.
8. Offertory, from Book of Covenants, "The Lord hath brought again Zion."
9. Financial report of building committee, with recommendations and offering.
10. Hymn 766, "Met, Lord, to dedicate."
11. Dedicatory prayer.
12. Hymn 767, "While afflicted tossed and driven." Benediction.

The committee, consisting of brethren

W. M. Rumel, W. Ballinger, N. Rumel senior, M. Bertleson and H. Nielson, are deserving of great credit. They had a difficult task to perform. The old chapel had been built under adverse circumstances. To some the removal to a different site seemed unnecessary, and severe criticism was sure to await the action of the committee. But having been appointed to the duty, they set forward resolutely, and in three months from their appointment they turned over to the custody of the branch officers a neat, commodious, and finished house, somewhat larger than the old one, on a pleasant site, and in a better and more suitable neighborhood than the other. The committee did this too in such a way that not an additional dollar was asked from saint or sinner, but to the contrary, with the report submitting their labor, a small reserve fund of $3.50 accompanied it, to the credit of the branch. A collection of $18.80 was received during the morning service for the purpose of procuring a new pulpit Bible, aisle matting, and defraying an accrued tax on the lot.

Bro. W. M. Rumel has been untiring in his exertions and unremitting in his care of the building in its erection; and the branch generously accord to him the merited credit for the work. The committee effected the change by selling the first site for $2,600 in round numbers; they then purchased a new site for $1,900, of which they sold twenty-six feet front for $650, leaving them a building fund of $1,350, out of which they put up the building with all its appurtenances, prepared for putting in the gas for lighting purposes, fenced the lot which is forty feet in front width, and one hundred and forty in depth, and laid the walk in the street in front of the building. To have been content to work within their means, without the desire to build larger and finer, thus creating a debt for the branch to provide for afterwards, is decidedly creditable to the branch and the committee, and sets an example worthy to be imitated.

THE RE-UNION.

THE senior Editor reached the camp ground of the Fourth Annual Re-union of the church, held this year on the premises of Bro. Henry Garner, on Saturday, October 2d, in time for dinner and the afternoon service. The grounds, under skillful management of brethren Phineas Cadwell of Logan, J. C. Crabb of Little Sioux, and David Hall of Persia, had been laid out in circles, the large tent capable of seating a thousand persons, occupying the center, the ground sloping gently upward from the stand at the west side of the tent, toward the entrance placed to the eastward.

An ample space had been left between the central tent and the first line of tents which filled the circuit completely with the exception of an outlet for passing in and out; a space of twenty feet was left between each circling row of tents, thus forming a tented city, with streets running in circles round its canvas dwellings.

The organization for the meeting was formed in the afternoon, the writer and Bro. W. W. Blair chosen to preside; Bro. J. C. Crabb to act in Bro. Blair's place till latter arrived, which occurred on Wednesday. Bro. W. C. Cadwell was chosen Secretary and Marshall; Bro. Wm. Fallon, chief of Police; the latter chose a corps of able assistants who kept admirable order from first to last. The committee were continued in charge of the grounds, and discharged their arduous duties well.

The weather was cool at the opening of the meeting, but soon settled into fair, pleasant, delightful guise which was maintained to the close. This made the assembling together constant and fruitful for good.

A set of rules were adopted at the start which made the day begin at five o'clock. Prayer service began at 8:30; a half hour's intermission, and preaching service at 11 a. m., 2:30 and 7:30, p. m., leaving two and a half hours between the morning and afternoon meetings, and about three or three and a half hours before the evening services for visiting, lunch, and social chat generally. These rules were productive of harmony and promptness. The committee had provided a substantial bell which was hung near the headquarters and was rung promptly at the hours designated for the various services, the day closing at eleven p. m.

The preaching services were opened on the evening of the 2d by Bro. Joseph Luff, of Independence, Mo., followed on succeeding days by Brn. M. T. Short, John A. McIntosh, J. C. Crabb, W. W. Blair, C. Derry, Wm. H. Garrett, George S. Hyde, J. S. Roth, Wm. T. Bozarth, Duncan Campbell, E. C. Brand, Joseph F. McDowell, G. A. Blakeslee and the writer. The preaching was unusually excellent, and those assembled seemed to enjoy the seasons of service, both prayer and preaching. The morning prayer service from 8:30 to 10:30 was filled with spiritual enjoyment for the faithful attendants; the Spirit bearing testimony to the comfort of the people. Meetings were also held in the town of Mondamin, the brethren there having secured the use of the Congregationalist Church for the occasion; these services are said to have been appreciated by the citizens.

Forty-two were added to the church by baptism, the rite being administered by Bro Phineas Cadwell, at different times as demand required. Some of the additions were heads of families whose acceptance of the truth will be productive of great good as an example. One was an old time Nauvoo veteran who has long stood aloof, but whose defences against the Reorganization have entirely broken down before the resistless march of the truth. His acceptance of the work is such an evidence as must be convincing to some that the same spirit that was with the church prior to the incoming of the tide of evil is with the reorganization now, and should be an example for many more to follow.

The attendance was fair at the start, but the canvas city grew apace until Saturday the 8th, when from the hills the ample amphitheater lying in the valley below shone in the sunlight a tented field in which hundreds of tents pitched in concentric circles round the great tent in the centre, sheltered a happy, grateful worshipping people; and on which the fitful campfires glowed at dusk in splendid promise of pleasantness and good cheer.

Peace, an "abundance of peace" was with this encampment of Israel—modern Israel. Not a jar was felt, and the influences of the spirit of devotion had sway from the start. The excellent weather made a sojourn in the open air safe and enjoyable; there was but little sickness in the camp during its duration, and the most of the cases were aided and at once by the administration of the rite of anointing with oil and the laying on of hands. The Elders called to speak responded at once and with cheerful compliance took the stand in meekness and in sobriety of thought; the baptismal services were solemn, the confirmations strongly marked by fervor and earnestness. The song service was excellent under the charge of Bro. Phineas Cadwell, ably seconded by Bro. Wm. Davison, and a number of good organists, among whom we note sisters Pearl Derry, Netty Putney, Sarah Mahoney, Fanny Pett, and others whose names we did not learn.

The management of the grounds by the committee was excellent. There were no obnoxious stands near to the tent; no noisy games, or merry-go-rounds, and no games of chance permitted. There was no loud nor profane language heard on the meeting grounds proper, that we heard of, and in fact we heard profanity but once during the nine days' session, and that was after final adjournment, a young man, doubtless under the impression that it was smart for a man to swear, or else in a moment of forgetfulness. We remarked to him that it was the first oath we had heard on the grounds, and that we were sorry that we heard that, as we had wished to have it to say that we heard none, but so it was.

The tent furnished ample seating room for all the meetings except the Sunday morning and afternoon services, when it seemed as if the woods swarmed with people. The shelter of the tent was grateful in the heat of the day, and very enjoyable in the pleasantly cool evenings, a covering from the heat by day and from the dew by night.

Bishops George A. Blakeslee and Israel L. Rogers were present and added materially to the enjoyment of the occasion by the Saints who were pleased to see them in their midst. Taken as a whole, the Reunion was an ample success.

At the close, it was determined to hold another next year, and brethren P. Cadwell and J. C. Crabb of Little Sioux, J. W. Chatburn and W. W. Whiting of Galland's Grove, and Hans N. Hansen and C. A. Beebe of Pottawattamie districts were chosen committee, with power to locate and have charge of the grounds.

PERSECUTION AND ITS CAUSES.

AFTER the Saints were thus threatened, plundered and driven, a petition was sent to Gov. Daniel Dunklin, dated the 28th of the following September, the latter part of which reads thus:

"The damages which your petitioners have sustained in consequence of this outrage and stipulation are, at present, incalculable. A great number of industrious inhabitants who were dependent on their labors for support have been thrown out of employment and are kept so by the threatnings of those who compose the mob. [See their resolutions as published in the Western Monitor, number 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5]. In estimating the damages which have resulted from the beginning to this time from those illegal and inhuman proceedings against your poor and persecuted petitioners, were they to name many thousands of dollars it would be short of a remuneration. Most of the mechanics' shops have been closed, two pair of blacksmith's bellows have been cut in pieces, our merchant, as you will see by the foregoing stipulation, has been forbidden to import or bring into the country any more goods, by which his business has been ruined. Soon after the above stipulation was made, some of your petitioners proceeded to make a new location in Van Buren county on the south but the settlers in that country drew up an agreement among themselves to drive us from that country after we had commenced laboring there; they threatened to shoot our cattle and destroy our labor, and in fact, 'The foxes have holes and the birds of the air have nests, but we have not where to lay our heads.' We were obliged to return.

"Since the stipulation was entered into some of our houses have been broken open and the inmates threatened to be shot if they stirred, and also some of our houses have been stoned or brick-batted.

"Also, that since some publications have appeared in the Western Monitor and other papers censuring the conduct of the mob, the leaders have began to threaten life, declaring that if any of the Mormons attempted to seek redress by law or otherwise, for character, person or property, they would die!

"Now therefore, for ourselves as members of the church we declare, with the exception of poverty, which has not yet become a crime by the laws of the land that the crimes charged against us (so far as we are acquainted), contained in the documents above written, and those in the proceedings of the mob as published in the Western Monitor of August 2d, are not true. In relation to inviting free people of color to emigrate to this section of country, and other matters relative to our society, see the 109, 110 and 111 pages of the Evening and Morning Star, and the Extra accompanying the same, dated July 16th—which are annexed to this petition. Our situation is a critical one. We are located upon the western limits of the state, and of the United States, where desperadoes can commit outrages, and even murder, and escape in a few minutes beyond the reach of process where the most abandoned of all classes from almost every state may too often pass to the Mexican states or to the more remote regions of the Rocky Mountains to escape the grasp of justice; where numerous tribes of Indians, located by the general government amid the corrupting influence of mid-day mobs, might massacre our defenceless women and children with impunity.

"Influenced by the precepts of our beloved Savior, when we had been smitten on the one cheek we have turned the other also; when we have been sued at the law and our coat been taken, we have given them our cloak also; when they have compelled us to go with them a mile, we have gone with them twain. We have borne the above outrages without murmuring. But we can not patiently bear them any longer. According to the laws of God and man we have borne enough. Believing, with all honorable men, that whenever that fatal hour shall arrive that the poorest citizen's person, property, or rights and privileges shall be trampled upon by a lawless mob with impunity, that moment a dagger is plunged into the heart of the constitution, and the Union must tremble! Assuring ourselves that no republican will suffer the liberty of the press, the freedom of speech and the liberty of conscience to be silenced by a mob without raising a helping hand to save his country from disgrace, we solicit assistance to obtain our rights, holding ourselves amenable to the laws of our country whenever we transgress them.

"Knowing as we do, that the threats of this mob in most cases have been put into execution, and knowing also that every officer, civil and military, with a very few exceptions has pledged his life and honor to force us from the county dead or alive; and believing that civil process can not be served without the aid of the Executive and not wishing to have the blood of our defenceless women and children to stain the land which has once been stained by the blood of our fathers to purchase our liberty we appeal to the Governor for aid, asking him, by express proclamation or otherwise to raise a sufficient number of troops who, with us, may be empowered to defend our rights that we may sue for damage in the loss of property, for abuse, for defamation, as to ourselves, and if advisable try for treason against the government that the law of the land may not be defied nor nullified, but peace restored to our country. And we will ever pray." —Evening and Morning Star, 229, 230, and Times and Seasons vol. 6: 853, 854.

To this petition the Governor replied as follows:

"CITY OF JEFFERSON, Executive Department,
October 19th, 1833.

"To Edward Partridge, W. W. Phelps, Isaac Morley, John Corrill, A. S. Gilbert, John Whitmer, and others:—

"Your memorial soliciting my interposition against violence threatened you, and redress for injuries received by a portion of the citizens of Jackson county, has been received, and its contents duly considered. I should think myself unworthy the confidence with which I have been honored by my fellow citizens, did I not promptly employ all the means which the Constitution and laws have placed at my disposal, to avert the calamities with which you are threatened.

"Ours is a Government of laws, to them we all owe obedience, and their faithful administration is the best guarantee for the enjoyment of our rights.

"No citizens, nor number of citizens, have a right to take the redress of their grievances, whether real or imaginary, into their own hands: Such conduct strikes at the very existence of society, and subverts the foundation on which it is based. Not being willing to persuade myself that any portion of the citizens of the State of Missouri are so lost to a sense of these truths as to require the exercise of force, in order to ensure a respect for them

"After advising with the Attorney General, and exercising my best judgment, I would advise you to make a trial of the efficacy of the laws: the Judge of your circuit is a conservator of the peace. If an affidavit is made before him by any of you, that your lives are threatened and you believe them in danger, it would be his duty to have the offenders apprehended and bind them to keep the peace. Justices of the peace in their respective counties have the same authority, and it is made their duty to exercise it. Take, then, this course: obtain a warrant, let it be placed in the hands of the proper officer, and the experiment will be tested whether the laws can be peaceably executed or not. In the event they can not be, and that fact is officially notified to me, my duty will require me to take such steps as will enforce a faithful execution of them.

"With regard to the injuries you have sustained by destruction of property, &c., the law is open to redress, I can not permit myself to doubt that the courts will be open to you, nor that you will find difficulty in procuring legal advocates to sue for damages therein.

"Respectfully,

"Your obedient servant,

"DANIEL DUNKLIN."

Evening and Morning Star, p. 230, 231, and Times and Seasons, vol. 6, p. 880.

On the receipt of these instructions from the Governor, the Saints at once began to labor and build as usual and set in order their houses, gardens, &c.; for they had lain comparatively idle since the outrage in July. They also engaged as attorneys, Messrs. Wood, Reese, Doniphan and Atchison, from Clay county, engaging to pay them $1,000. All this served to engage the mobbers, as will be seen by this:

"Thursday night the 31st of October gave the Saints in Zion abundant proof that no pledge, written or verbal, was longer to be regarded; for on that night, between forty and fifty in number, many of whom were armed with guns, proceeded against a branch of the church west of Big Blue, and unroofed and partly demolished ten dwelling houses, and in the midst of the shrieks and screams of women and children whipped and beat in a savage and brutal manner several of the men, and with their horrid threats frightened women and children into the wilderness. Such of the men as could escape fled for their lives, for very few of them had arms, neither were they embodied, and they were threatened with death if they made any resistance. Such therefore as could not escape by flight received a pelting by rocks and a beating with guns, sticks, &c.

"On Friday the 1st of November, women and children sallied forth from their gloomy retreats to contemplate with heart rending anguish the ravages of a ruthless mob, in the mangled bodies of their husbands and in the destruction of their houses and some of their furniture. Houseless and unprotected by the arms of the civil law in Jackson county, the dreary month of November staring them in the face and loudly proclaiming an inclement season at hand, the continual threats of the mob that they would drive out every Mormon from the county, and the inability of many to remove, because of their poverty, caused an anguish of heart indescribable.

"On Friday night, the 1st of November, a party of the mob proceeded to attack a branch of the church at the prairie, about twelve or fourteen miles from the village. Two of their number were sent in advance as spies, viz, Robert Johnson and one Harris, armed with two guns and three pistols. They were discovered by some of the Saints, and without the least injury being done to them, said (mob) Johnson struck Parley P. Pratt with the breech of his gun over the head, after which they were taken and detained till morning, which, it was believed, prevented a general attack of the mob that night. In the morning they were liberated without receiving the least injury.

"The same night (Friday) another party in Independence, commenced stoning houses, breaking down doors and windows, destroying furniture, &c. This night the brick part attached to the dwelling house of A. S. Gilbert, was partly pulled down and the windows of his dwelling broken in with brick-bats and rocks, while a gentleman stranger lay sick with a fever in his house.

"The same night three doors of the store of Messrs. Gilbert and Whitney were split open, and after midnight the goods lay scattered in the streets, such as calicoes, handkerchiefs, shawls, cambrics, &c. An express came from the village after midnight to a party of their men who had embodied about half a mile from the village for the safety of their lives, stating that the mob were tearing down houses and scattering the goods of the store in the streets. The main body of the mob fled at the approach of this company. One Richard McCarty was caught in the act of throwing rocks and brick-bats, into the doors, while the goods lay strung around him in the streets, and was immediately taken before Samuel Weston, Esq., and a complaint was then made to said Weston and a warrant requested that said McCarty might be secured; but said Weston refused to do any thing in the case at that time. Said McCarty was then liberated.

"The same night some of their houses in the village had long poles thrust through the shutters and sash into the rooms of defenceless women and children, from whence their husbands and fathers had been driven by the dastardly attacks of the mob which were made by ten, fifteen or twenty men upon a house at a time.

"Saturday, the second of November, all the families of the Saints in the village moved about half a mile out, with most of their goods, and embodied to the number of thirty for the preservation of life and personal effects. This night a party from the village met a party from the west of the Blue and made an attack upon a branch of the church located at the Blue, about six miles from the village. Here they tore the roof from one dwelling, and broke open another house, found the owner David Bennet sick in bed, whom they beat most inhumanly, swearing they would blow out his brains, and discharged a pistol the ball of which cut a deep gash across the top of his head. In this skirmish a young man of the mob was shot in the thigh, but by which party remains yet to be determined.

"The next day, Sunday November 3d, four of the church, viz: Joshua Lewis, Hiram Page and two others were despatched for Lexington to see the circuit judge and obtain a peace warrant. Two called on Esq. Silvers, who refused to issue one, on account, as he has declared, of his fears of the mob. This day many of the citizens, professing friendship, advised the Saints to clear from the county as speedily as possible, for the Saturday night affray had enraged the whole county and they were determined to come out on Monday and massacre indiscriminately. And in short, it was proverbial among the mob that "Monday would be a bloody day."

"Monday came, and a large party of the mob gathered at the Blue, took the ferry boat belonging to the church, threatened lives, &c. But they soon abandoned the ferry and went to Wilson's store, about one mile west of the Blue. Word had previously gone to a branch of the church several miles west of the Blue, that the mob were destroying property on the east side of the Blue and the sufferers there wanted help to preserve their lives and property. Nineteen men volunteered and started for their assistance; but discovered that fifty or sixty of the mob had gathered at said Wilson's they turned back.

At this time two small boys passed on their way to Wilson's who gave information to the mob that the Mormons were on the road west of them. Between forty and fifty of the mob immediately started with guns in pursuit. After riding about two or two and a half miles they discovered them, when the said company of nineteen immediately dispersed and fled in different directions. The mob hunted them, turning their horses into a corn-field belonging to the Saints, searching their corn-fields and houses, threatening women and children that they would pull down their houses and kill them if they did not tell where the men had fled.

"Thus they were employed hunting the men and threatening the women, until a company of thirty of the Saints from the prairie armed with seventeen guns made their appearance.

"The former company of nineteen had dispersed and fled and but one or two of them had returned to take part in the subsequent battle. On the approach of the latter company of thirty men, some of the mob cried, "Fire, G—d d—n ye, fire." Two or three guns were then fired by the mob, which were returned by the other party without loss of time. This company is the same that is represented by the mob as having gone forth in the evening of the battle bearing the olive branch of peace. The mob retreated early after the first fire, leaving some of their horses in Whitmer's corn-field, and two of their number, Hugh L. Brazeale and Thomas Linvill, dead on the ground. Thus fell H. L. Brazeale, one who had been heard to say, "With ten fellows, I will wade to my knees in blood, but that I will drive the Mormons from Jackson county." The next morning the corpse of said Brazeale was discovered on the battle ground with a gun by his side. Several were wounded on both sides, but none mortally except one Barber, on the part of the Saints, who expired the next day. This battle was fought about sun-set, Monday November 4th; and the same night, runners were despatched in every direction under pretence of calling out the militia; spreading as they went every rumor calculated to alarm and excite the unwary, such as that the Mormons had taken Independence, and the Indians had surrounded it, being col-leagued together, &c."—Times and Seasons, vol. 6, 881-2.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Denison (Iowa) Review writes that paper of late as follows:

"As there are many of your readers interested in gospel work we wish to say that the dedicatory services conducted at the Latter Day Saints Church in Dow City By Elder J. F. McDowell, on the 26th ult., were excellent and quite largely attended.

"Before the services commenced the Elder stated what the indebtedness for repairs in the chapel was, and the amount necessary was cheerfully given by the auditory. The Saints have their Chapel neatly repaired and painted, and the name, 'The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints,' placed within a pretty circle a little above the door. This church has a membership in Dow City and vicinity of something over sixty, and I understand are in a very prosperous condition. FAIR PLAY."

And the same paper has this to say of our late Reunion:

The annual reunion of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints was held in Garner's Grove, Raglan township, Harrison county, Iowa, from the 2d to the tenth inst. A goodly number of prominent elders were present, including Presidents Joseph Smith and W. W. Blair, of Lamoni, Iowa. The services were held in a large tent, with a seating capacity of about one thousand, which cost something like $225. There were also two hundred small tents on the ground nicely arranged in three circles with the large one in the center. Services were good throughout. The estimated attendance on the 10th inst. was about four thousand. There were forty-two additions to the church by baptism during the session. The large tent was dedicated to the service of God, Sunday the 10th, Elder W. W. Blair preaching the dedicatory discourse.

In the afternoon a very touching address was delivered by President Smith concerning the rise of the church and the work intended to be accomplished by it. He stated that he had been early taught to honor and respect the laws of the Nation, and that there was nothing in the gospel of Christ, as understood and taught by the representatives of the church, that would make a man disloyal to his country. That the gospel was intended to make a man better in every respect than he was before it was believed and obeyed by him. He stated that the Reorganized Church had forced the Utah Church to strike from their Book of Doctrine and Covenants the article on marriage, as contained in section 111, which provides "That one man should have one wife, and one woman but one husband, except in case of death, when either is at liberty to marry again." That in view of this fact, together with some others that were stated, he could not see how any could believe or say that there was any connection between the two churches.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

BRETHREN Joseph Snively and John Johnston recently spent a few days preaching in Ringgold county, not far from the village of Wirt, and they report having had large congregations of intelligent and deeply interested hearers, who urged them to return and preach for them more at an early time. Bro. Snively says he never enjoyed greater degrees of spiritual light and power in-declaring gospel truths than during these meetings, and that he and Bro. Johnston will return there with the intention of continuing gospel work. Now that the toil and bustle and heat of summer are past, the evenings getting long and cool, the local ministry everywhere should rally to the work and do valiantly in the cause of Christ wherever and whenever they can find opportunity. We hear from all quarters the cry, "Come over and help us." Brethren of the ministry, this call is to you; and it remains for you to bestow the needed aid as God may give you ability. Don't delay.

Sr. Simpson writes from Holden, Missouri, that the HERALD is the only preacher there, that she can not think of doing without it, and bids it good speed.

Bro. A. H. Parsons writes October 16th, that Bro. Eli Clothier will preside over the protracted efforts to be held with the the Deer Creek, Twin Creek, and Elmira branches in Kansas.

Bro. J. H. Peters writes from East Lake, Michigan, October 11th, that he had but forty copies of Voice of Warning left. He has ordered one thousand more to which will be added a chapter on the Prophetic Mission of Joseph the Seer. It is now expected they will be sent him by November 25th, or before. Excellent success is reported by many who loan these books.

Bro. Gomer Reese has been appointed by the Presidency, to look after the interest of the work of the church in Dakota, having charge. It is to be hoped that the local ministry will continue their efforts to spread the word, and will be pleased with Bro. Reese's appointment. Bro. Reese is requested to report from time to time to Bro. Alexander H. Smith, Independence, Missouri. Bro. Reese's address is Highmore, Dakota.

Sr. Ann E. Morris writing from Shelby, Iowa, orders the HERALD continued to her, and says: "I can not see how so many do without it. But those who have never taken it, or have never seen it, do not know how much they miss."

Bro. and Sr. Howard S. Smith write from Unionburg, Iowa, the 14th inst., expressing thanks and gratitude that the HERALD is sent them in their old age and infirmity, and testifying to the truth of the gospel restored in these last days.

Bro. Briggs Alden is extremely anxious that some one of the eldership shall visit Fontanelle, Adair county, Iowa, and preach "the truth" in its halls. He wrote October 15th that there were still some who were waiting for the salvation of God.

Bro. Wm. M. Kendall writes to us, October 17th, ordering HERALD and other matter, but he does not give his address. Will he or others who see this please forward his address.

Our readers will find in this issue an able article on "The Sabbath of our Lord" from the pen of Elder D. S. Crawley.

We glean from The Leon Methodist that the District Conference of the M. E. Church will convene in Leon, Iowa, November 2d,—instead of at Mt. Ayr, the place selected at its last session.

Elder R. C. Evans writing from 474 Adelaide street, London East, Ontario, the 15th of October, says; "The great work is onward in Canada. We have been blessed in presenting the word to the people, and have baptized over fifty into the fold since this time 1885.

Sr. Elvira Brayton of Gladwin, Michigan, writes: "I can not do without the HERALD." We are glad of it, and wish we had a few thousand new subscribers similarly minded—and there will be by and by.

R. E. Cato and wife write from Eureka, Kansas, saying, "We would like you to send us an Elder. There is a better chance now to introduce the true doctrine than ever before. We live a half mile west of the Fort Scott railroad depot."

THE October number of The Brooklyn Magazine is just to hand, and we find it well filled with valuable and interesting reading.

There is going the rounds of the papers an article written by one Mr. Briggs of Brooklyn, New York, in which he strives to make it appear that Mr. Solomon Spalding wrote a manuscript from which Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon manufactured the Book of Mormon; but he simply proves nothing beyond the fact that he is a blind zealot, taking for granted what he can not prove when it suits his prejudices. He treats with contempt the testimony of Aaron Wright, Oliver Smith, John N. Miller and others found on the "Manuscript Story" discovered by Dr. L. L. Rice among papers he bought of the notorious anti-Mormon writer E. D. Howe and now in the library of Oberlin College, Ohio. That testimony is to the effect that, the said "Manuscript Story" was "the writings of Solomon Spaulding," and has their endorsement, and this is attested by the signature of "D. P. Hurlbut" whom E. D. Howe and others procured to do their dirty work and who was in due time kicked out and slandered by them when they could no longer use him. One thing is certain, Solomon Spalding wrote the "Manuscript Story." This being true, that manuscript furnishes incontestible proof, first, that he was intellectually incapable of writing such a work as the Book of Mormon; second, that he was neither a genius nor a scholar; third, that he was morally incapable of such a work, for these writings prove him a coarse, sensual, witless infidel; while the plot, methods, symmetry, morals, theology and refinement of the Book of Mormon prove that its writers were highly intellectual, and exceptionally moral and spiritual. Any one who reads the "Manuscript Story" and the Book of Mormon intelligently and honestly will say, that the writer of the former had neither the morals, the religion, the brains, nor the information to write the latter. Dime novelists are neither accurate historians nor intelligent theologians.

A WIDE CONTRAST.

WHILE the Saints of the Reorganized Church were holding a Reunion in Western Iowa, October 2d to 10th, attended by from four to six thousand people, where the gospel was preached in power, and where peace reigned and love and joy abounded; out in Utah, at Coalville, an obscure town the Utah Mormon Church held its Semi-annual Conference with but a few hundred in attendance and its chief officers fugitives from the law of the freest, best and greatest nation of this century.

Is not this significant! Can not the Utah Belshazzars see the fateful handwriting upon the wall! We deplore their blind obstinacy, and have pity for them in their perplexities, fears and sufferings, and pray God to open the eyes of all that people to see their errors and evils, and to inspire them to "Ask for the old paths, where is the good way, and walk therein and find rest for their souls." We bear them record, that "they have a zeal of God, but not according to knowledge," and this zeal is likely to lead them just where it did the rejected Jews in the days of Jesus and his apostles.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY SISTER "FRANCES."

"Hast thou not, on some week of storm,
Seen the sweet Sabbath breaking fair,
And cloud and shadow, sunlit, form
The curtains of its tent of prayer?
So, haply, when thy task shall end,
The wrong shall lose itself in right,
And all thy week-day darkness blend
With the long Sabbath of the light!"

WHIPPED.

I may as well tell the boys now that my mother was a widow, and a woman of great firmness and decision of character, and of deep piety. When she said anything she meant it, and yet she was just as gentle as a lamb. One time in the fall of the year, when I was about fifteen years old, I was out in the yard trying to move a heavy stick of timber. I asked my brother, then twelve years of age but he stood stock still and laughed at me, while I almost strained my eyeballs out of my head. At last I lost my temper, grew hot, got mad and picked up a switch and gave my brother a whipping. That was one thing mother did not allow—she did not permit one child to whip another on her place. When she heard the row, she came out of the house and gave brother a good thrashing, and made him help me put the timber in place, and then said to me:

"Now my son, I am going to whip you for whipping your brother."

I had not had a whipping for a long time and had begun to feel like a man. I had violated one of my mother's rules, but the provocation had been a great one to a boy. True, if I had gone five steps to the door, and told mother, she would have adjusted matters and made my brother do what I wanted him to do. Instead of this, I had assumed authority, had taken the law into my own hands, and had done what I knew my mother did not allow.

I said, "Mother, you shall not whip me."

"But I shall do it my son," she replied, and started toward me with a purpose in her eye. I got out of her way, and, bad boy that I was, I turned my back upon home and mother, and went off about four miles and hired myself to a clever, thrifty, well-to-do farmer for five dollars a month. I told him what had occurred, and how I had been outraged at home, and that too by my mother. He told me I had done wrong, and that I ought to go back home. I went to work, but was not happy. I lost my appetite, and could not sleep. I grew worse and worse, but hoped all the time mother would send for me, and apologize and take me back, but I heard nothing from her. I began to feel that I needed mother and home more than mother and home needed me—a lesson most boys do not learn until it is too late. At the end of the week, on Saturday morning, I told my employer I wanted to go home. It was four miles and I was four hours on the way. I hesitated and turned back and resolved and re-resolved. The better thing in me said, "Go home, and yield to your mother and obey her," but some other thing said, "I would die first."

When I got near enough to hear, my mother was singing:

"Jesus lover of my soul,
Let me to thy bosom fly."

Ah, that song! What mingled feelings it stirred in my heart, and how appropriate it was. Hope and shame had a struggle, but, thank God, hope prevailed. Just as I reached the house, mother was setting the table for dinner.

"Good morning my son," she said, just as pleasantly as I had ever heard her speak in my life. "Come in," she continued, "have a seat," setting a chair for me. "I hope you are well my son?" That word "son," how it hurt me. I was not worthy of it.

"Very well, I thank you," I did not venture to say "mother." "Are all well?" I asked.

"Well, thank you, my son," and she went on chatting away just as pleasantly as if I had been a neighbor called in. I wanted to tell her my sin and shame, but did not know how or where to commence.

When dinner was over, I said, "Mother, what work do you want me to do?" "None at all, my son; I do not expect visitors to work for me," she answered.

"But, mother, I have come home, and want to quit this foolishness," I said.

She replied firmly, "Well, my son, if you will now take a whipping you can stay, but if not, you can have your clothes and leave."

I jumped up and pulled off my coat and vest, and sat down with my face to the back of the chair, and my back toward mother, and said, "Well mother, I will take the whipping, and stay, at home with you, so get your switch and give it to me." Just then mother burst into tears, caught me in her arms and said, "That will do, my son. Let us pray." She led. O, that prayer. It lingers to this day. Now boys I'm ashamed of my sin till this day, but I am so proud of my mother I thought I would tell you this story.—Selected.

IN the above selection the child is permitted to speak for himself, and we wish to call the attention of parents to the pride he feels in his mother. Perhaps some may be disposed to say, It is only a fancy sketch—no such thing ever happened. We are not prepared to admit this, nor do we deny it; but we are prepared to give you a true sketch, and then have you to moralize a little upon it. We once had a friend—a brother in the church and the father of quite a large family. When we knew him his hair was white with the snow of many winters, but still there was in his eyes the twinkle of firmness, although the silken lashes of kindness ordinarily veiled its sparkle. His unvarying mildness, indulgence and kindness to his children was proverbial, and such were their respect and love for him, that after they were men grown and in business for themselves, they always deferred to his advice, and honored him as God intended children should honor their father and mother. We saw him by the death-bed of his only daughter, supporting and cheering the companion of his youth; and when the angels came and bore the freed spirit of the suffering one to the paradise of God, the aged grandparents took as a sacred legacy to their home, the little one she had left. Time passed on and this little one became as the apple of their eye, until friends feared there was danger of overindulgence. An occasion arose however, to prove how groundless were these fears and to illustrate the true secret of success in this man's government of his family.

The occasion was a festive one—a party to which all the village children had been looking forward with unbounded anticipation, and the little one we write of was of the number. But when the day came no — was there, nor were the grandparents either, although they were seldom absent upon such occasions. All wondered what could possibly have detained Bro. —; but none seemed to know.

Next morning, happening to meet him on the street, we said, "Whatever was the matter, Bro. —, that you was not out yesterday?"

"I will tell you," he said, "just what was the reason," and then he related how the little one had been disobedient, and to punish — in such a way as would not soon be forgotten, they had determined to remain at home.

"I tell you I hated it," he said, but I can not live in the same house with children who will not mind. My own children know this, and — must learn it also. It was a terrible punishment to —, but it will be a lesson not soon to be forgotten."

We turned away feeling the full force of what our friend had said, and as we went on our way thought crowded upon thought, and we wondered to ourselves, if the learning of obedience through the things which we suffer, until we are wise enough to know that God's way is the true way, and his plan the only plan, was not the true secret of life.

PERHAPS we ought not to have notified the sisters in regard to our supply of letters. It surely was not that we wished them to write less. Send in your contributions and don't be afraid of variety. We would very much like some good news from the reunion—the dedication—in fact everything good which the sisters please to send us. Let us hear from you, that others may rejoice with you.

LAMONI, Iowa, Oct. 30, 1886.

DUNLAP, Iowa, Oct. 21st.

Dear Sister Frances.—I can't tell you how much I have enjoyed reading the "Mothers' Home Column," and the good instruction I have received from it. It has made me more determined than ever to try and raise my two little boys up for the Lord, he being my helper. I gather them around me at night and read to them out of God's holy word, three, four and five chapters, as my eyes will permit, for my eye sight is failing me very fast; then I teach them to say different prayers, whatever comes in to my mind as I am led by the Spirit. I felt last night as if the angels were there looking on, taking cognizance of it. My little boy Leroy is in the church with me; was baptized when eight years old, at his own request. I have never been sorry that he was baptized so young. But my husband, and my aged father, William Marks' eldest son, who is living with me, are both out of the ark of safety. I am the only living one of the Marks' family that belongs to the church, and it makes my heart ache to think of it. I ask an interest in your prayers, that I may be the means in the hand of God of bringing them both into the Church of God, that I may live such a life day by day that they may see that I am trying to live faithful to my heavenly Father, that I may set such an example before them that they may desire to walk in the same way.

I have just returned from the Re-union at Garner's Grove; was there four days, and such a feast as I enjoyed! If I never receive any better heaven than I enjoyed there, I shall be more than content. I felt that it was better than I deserved. To meet with the faithful Saints and hear the blessed word proceed from the lips as God gave them utterance, was a great privilege indeed. I never enjoyed so much of God's Holy Spirit as I did there, praise be to his holy name for it. Every thing looks different to me since. My children, the trees, the beautiful sunshine, the nights as I lie offering up thanksgiving nearly the whole night. All looks so beautiful to me. I do love the Herald so much, and the Mothers' Home Column, for which I pray. We do enjoy the Hope very much; we are going to have a little Sunday School of our own out of it, and invite in our children's playmates to read it with them, and study it. The Herald and Hope are the only preachers and teachers we have. With love to all, I remain yours in the one faith,

JOSEPHINE WOOD.

WESLEY ON DRESS.

You know in your hearts it is with a view to be admired that you thus adorn yourselves, and that you would not be at the pains, were none to see you but God and His holy angels.

Oh, stop! Aim at pleasing God alone, and all these ornaments will drop off. It you could be as humble as when you choose plain apparel (which I flatly deny); yet you could not be as beneficent and plentiful in good works. Therefore, every shilling which you needlessly spend on your apparel, is, in effect, stolen from God and the poor! For what end do you want these ornaments? To please God? No! but to please your own fancy, or to gain the admiration and applause of those that were no wiser than yourself. If so, what you put upon yourself, you are in effect, tearing from the back of the naked; as the costly and delicate food you eat, you are snatching from the mouth of the hungry. For mercy, for pity, for Christ's sake, for the honor of his gospel, stay your hand! Do not throw this money away. Do not lay out on nothing that may clothe your poor, naked, shivering fellow creatures.—Christian Truth.

LUCY LLOYD sends us a recipe for a delicious glass of "Tapioca cream," for the tea table, a palatable change from the dried and canned fruit and cream. Take one small cupful of pearl tapioca put it in you granite sauce pan, just cover with cold water and cook; when needed add enough water to prevent scorching and cook slowly on the back of the stove stirring frequently. When it has become a clear pulpy mass add a quart of morning's milk, cream and all, and stir together; add one tablespoonful of corn starch with five tablespoons of milk mixed with one large cupful of granulated sugar and bit of butter the size of a walnut; stir slowly and cook for a few moments. Now break six eggs separately; beat the whites to stiff froth; add three tablespoonsful of white sugar and a few drops of vanilla; stir the yolks well with a half dozen spoonsful of milk, pour this in with one hand while stirring rapidly with the other; remove from the stove and add one teaspoonful of vanilla. Now stir in about one third of the froth as it makes it light, spread the remaining froth over the top smoothly and set in a pan of cold water in the cellar. If this is prepared in the morning and put in glasses with the froth on top it will be delicious and cool for tea.

Correspondence.

BRO. WARREN C. PEAK sent us a letter of late, the first page of which is missing. Where the loss occurred we can not say. Here is the balance of it:

"We spoke a few times in a school-house in Hyde Park; but when some began to give heed to the teaching and investigate, the very pious passed an ordinance in the city not to allow any more preaching in any of the school-houses. We were then turned out with no place to hold meetings except in the open air. We got a grove south of Hyde Park about a half mile, and had a large crowd to listen to us. So we left a standing appointment for every Sunday at three p.m., and continued till the weather got cold and we were compelled to give it up. In a place in the suburbs of Hyde Park we spoke several times to interested and attentive congregations. Becoming somewhat bolder, we then went on the streets, and in the midst of noise and confusion we declared the gospel to hundreds. It was a little trying at first, but it was the only way to present the truth to the people. By doing so we have allayed a great deal of prejudice; have sowed the 'good seed' that will yet spring forth and manifest itself in honest hearts in due season. We have labored in Hyde Park, Taylorsville and Nanticoke. In the latter place there is an old Union Church that is free to all. We improved the opportunity and held several meetings in it. As the congregations were very small, we again went on the street. There in the center of the city, where three of the main streets form a vacant place for a large congregation to stand without blockading the street, we dealt out the pure undefiled principles of Christ to large and attentive crowds. Looking over my journal I find we have averaged from five or six meetings a week.

"We have been greatly assisted by the local Elders, J. J. Morgan and David Griffiths, the former a young energetic Elder who presides over the Hyde Park branch, the latter a very able and fluent speaker in the Welsh language. As it is getting cold weather, we are driven from the streets and have commenced in private houses. Some are interested, and I think good will be done. Three have been baptized, one a young man by the name of Jenkin Morgan, may yet be of great help to the church in the future.

"I left Hyde Park, Wednesday last, and came to Pittston, where I was made welcome by Bro. John E. Thomas. He is the only Saint in this city. Have tried to get an opening here, but failed. It seems the only way to present the gospel in Pennsylvania, is on the streets, and as it is getting cold weather, it seems the way is blockaded till spring.

"I will go from here to Danville. There are a few Saints in that city whom we have not visited. May this great work continue, and the 'stone' of Daniel's vision roll with greater velocity, till every son and daughter of Adam's race have heard the welcome tidings of the gospel of Christ as revealed in the last days by an angel from heaven. In gospel bonds,

MOORHEAD, Iowa, Oct. 11th.

Dear Herald:—To-night my mind seems to travel back over the misty past, and as the scenes of my early life and the days that followed as maturer years came are brought before me in panoramic view, I feel sad to know that I have done so little in life's great drama. Oh! if but the proper wisdom could have been mine when the golden moments were being ignorantly lived, there might have been less chance to mourn so little done. But, as with others, grumbling will not fit me for what is future.

Yesterday I returned from our grand Reunion with resolves that the future would find me doing such work as will in part, at least make up for the slothfulness of the past. Feeling that already I am under condemnation for neglect of duty, I am resolved that the future shall find me making every honorable effort to get relieved therefrom, and for that reason am now trying with my might that I may so arrange as to be found before long discharging the duty devolving upon me by an act of the last Annual Conference. I know of no reason why I should shirk the responsibility that I feel is binding upon me. Though I came into this work by tradition, and I thank God for so noble a mother, that tradition has not served when maturer years brought into development a reflective and criticising mind. But, with each succeeding investigation, instead of losing, the work has come forth better and grander, till to-day I feel that the most noble duty I can perform is to conform to its teachings and its truths. And to the end that I shall ever be found in the line of duty and ever faithful in the discharge of that which is binding upon me, I shall ask for the prayer of all who pray.

J. W. WIGHT.

LONDON, Ont., October 16th.

Bro. Joseph Smith:—Soon after my appointment by General Conference, I left home for the field assigned me. I attended both the Kent and Lambton, and London district conferences; felt cheered in hearing my brethren present the word to the people; spoke twice during the Kent and Lambton conference, and four times immediately after the conference. Went from there to London conference, where I was permitted to address the people. From that time till October conferences my labors have been principally in the cities of London and St. Thomas and the town of Vanessa. Soon after my arrival in St. Thomas, the Saints rented the Free Thought Hall, on the main street, where I delivered a course of lectures. Many of the Secular Union were in attendance; frequently they would ask questions after meeting and I would try to answer them. All went well for a time, till it began to be noised around that the "Boy Preacher," from London had got the best of the Infidels. This brought crowds out to hear us. At last their head man delivered a lecture accusing Christ of evil, and said that the God of the bible never did, does not now, nor never will answer prayer. I was present and was called on by the chairman to answer and refute the statements. He said all other preachers were afraid to answer them; that H. C. Evans, the boy preacher, had done well before, but guessed this lecture was too much for him. The congregation then called on me to defend the truth. I stepped to the front, and dear brother Joseph, to the glory of our Heavenly Father he did fulfill his promise by standing by his young servant, and the ice of Infidelity melted before the sun of God's eternal truth. The radiant beams of God's light never shone brighter upon the people of St. Thomas than on that occasion, if we are permitted to judge by the actions of the people. We are safe in saying truth lost nothing on that occasion. I felt my weakness, but God defended his own truth. They then sent for Professor Simpson to debate with me, (without my knowledge or consent). I told them I was not sent out to debate, but to preach the gospel; whereupon they accused me of being like all the rest of the preachers—a coward. I replied that if I had taught anything not according to truth, let the professor deliver a lecture and show me wherein I erred, and that if he made a point against me I would acknowledge my error and forsake. But all was of no use—debate we must. So I consented to meet him in the afternoon to arrange for debate. In my absence he made arrangements with his friends (the Infidels) to debate with me one night or more, they to pay him ten dollars and give me the same, the debate to take place in two weeks, and they to print bills and to charge an admission fee. I told them I would prefer to have the debate free of charge so that all the people could hear. But their argument was, if the debate was free people would not think it amounted to much, hence would not come out to hear.

Proposition to be discussed read as follows:
"Resolved that Jesus Christ is the Son of God, and that he came forth in accordance with the prophecies of the Bible." R. C. Evans affirms; Professor J. B. Simpson denies. King James' translation to be the only evidence. After this was all arranged we went over to the Public Park. The Professor began to ridicule the Bible. After he got a big crowd near by, he said the God of the Bible commanded polygamy, and that it was taught in the Bible. I thought, now is my time to show this people that God never commanded the practice of polygamy, nor did the Bible teach it, and that the Latter Day Saints neither taught, practiced, nor believed it. I stepped forward and challenged him to show one place in the Bible where God commanded the people to practice polygamy. He made the attempt; but failed even worse than L. O. Littlefield, if possible. I chased him from every point he took, till the people hooted him and cheered me, and till he got angry and began to call me names, and use profane language. But I got the truth before the people, and at last the police dispersed the crowd. His own people were disgusted with him, and after he left town to prepare for the debate they told me he was not the man they expected he was, and they would not give him one dollar to debate. They wrote a card to that effect, and the debate fell through. All this did us much good, for after that the crowds got larger, till the Infidels concluded that they would not allow hymn singing and prayers in their hall any longer. We were put out of the hall, though paying all the rent that they asked. So much for the Liberal League. I baptized three there, and God manifested his power in the healing of an old lady who had been a cripple for over two years. While in the waters of baptism she was healed before the people, coming straightway up out of the water without my assistance. Some were constrained to say, Truly a notable miracle has been performed, but by what power we can not tell. We left Bro. Thomas Phillips (late of Chicago) in charge of the branch, and hastened on to other fields of labor. By request I went into a new place called Vanessa, where there had never been any preaching by our people. As soon as we told our name and that we were an accredited representative of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, the fire of persecution began to burn; but the Lord raised up kind friends that cared for me. I preached five nights a week and twice every Sunday. The Methodist preacher tried to show from the Bible that when we died, if good people, we would all go up to heaven—away beyond the skies. He tried to show it was a great absurdity the Latter Day Saints preaching that we would reign on the earth, and he took for his text John 17:24. He claimed that he preached out of the Bible, and so he did, so far out of it that any one hearing the discourse would never once think that he had ever read the Bible.

The same afternoon I took the same text and spoke on the second coming of Christ. The result was, after preaching nineteen discourses I had the pleasure of baptizing eight of the best thinking minds of the town. One lady was healed of a cancer by the power of God. Two years ago she had a cancer cut out of her left breast by the doctors in the city of St. Thomas. The excruciating pain and loss of blood laid her prostrate for many weeks, but the angel of health smiled upon her once again and she returned home to her loved ones. This summer she was appalled to find another cancer coming on her right breast. She thought with the roses she too would wither and die this fall, as she thought it would be certain death to have another operation performed upon her. The mere thought of it brought sadness to her heart. As she gazed upon her companion and her darling child—her first-born and her joy—her eyes would fill with tears, for she thought that at no distant period she must leave them both. The clouds of despair had shut out from her view the sun that yet shone brightly in the horizon of her young life. She began to think God was unkind to take her from her loved ones. Her lamp of faith had nearly gone out when we arrived. She heard the first sermon, believed, and with two others was baptized. After her confirmation the clouds all rolled away. She felt peace of mind; but O, what joy filled her heart when arising from her bed next morning she discovered that all trace of the cancer had disappeared! Her husband was much opposed to the work; would not come to the meetings, and was much grieved to think his wife would come. But inside of a week I had the pleasure of baptizing him and four more of her relatives. Large crowds came to hear from all the surrounding country. The Methodists are trying to persuade the people not to come to hear us. They say we are going to ruin their church if something is not done with us. So goes Zion's chariot, We have got the truth, and all the creedology of modern Christianity can not overthrow it, and but for a time can impede its progress.

I left Vanessa in time to get home for the conference. The London district conference was a grand one, said to be the best ever held in Canada. I have just arrived home from the Kent and Lambton conference. We had a good time there in hearing and presenting the word to the people. By instruction of Bro. John H. Lake we leave home (D. V.) on the 18th for St. Marys, thence to St. Thomas, thence to Corinth, thence to Vanessa. My health is good, and I never felt better in presenting the truth to my fellow man than of late. I desire to fight till the battle is over and the victory won. To my comrades in the battle-field I would say, Cheer up! Work on that we can say,

When the last brave word is spoken
And our life on earth is done,
When the glass of life is broken
And the sands have ceased to run,
When our deeds have been rewarded,
Both the evil and the good,
May we each have left recorded—
We have done the best we could.
Yours in hope of eternal life,

RICHARD C. EVANS.

PLANO, Ill., October 14th.

Bro. Blair:—Our conference has passed, and it was truly a time to be remembered. The Spirit of the Master was with the Saints all through the session, and everything went off in peace and harmony. Even those questions that we thought would make discord were got along with so easy that it was evident the Spirit guided in the matter; so we are in high hopes that a brighter day has dawned for this district. Things have turned around so as to show where the trouble was. There have not been many baptized, but all are feeling so much better that it is rejoicing to see. Bro. Alexander H. Smith is with us at present. He came a week ago last Saturday; is at Plano now, but goes to Braidwood next Saturday to hold a two days' meeting.

In bonds, W. VICKERY.

BLLENHEIM, Ont., October 14th.

Bro. Joseph Smith:—The two conferences of this mission are past. At St. Marys we had a blessed time. Enjoyed the Spirit in much assurance. Brn. W. J. Smith and J. A. McIntosh remained and continued the meetings with good interest. Three had been baptized when I last heard, and more were believing. I am remaining here and continuing the meeting. Interest moderate. Two asked for baptism at the conference here and will be baptized in Chatham on the 24th inst. by Arthur Leverton. Reports are encouraging; many calls for preaching, and the prospects are good for many to obey. The enemy is on the alert to prevent the progress of the work, but we will try and hold the fort, "For Jesus is coming."

Yours in hopes of final triumph,

JOHN H. LAKE.

SWEET HOME, Oregon, Oct. 5th.

Brn. Joseph and Blair:—The work in Oregon is improving, new places are opening up, the interest is on the increase, I am making friends to the cause and finding "favor in the eyes of the people." Homes are offered, many say "Come and see us." Some cry "Mormon," "old Joe Smith," "they are all alike," "that Mormon preacher is getting big wages," "he will carry off a lot of women to Salt Lake," "stay away from him, it is wrong to attend his meetings," &c. These are the only arguments brought against us. But amid all of this and the old Missouri prejudice that is very prevalent in some places, we are widening out, and there is work within the circle for several representative men; and I am praying that the Lord will send more faithful laborers into the field. On the other hand I am praying that the Lord will keep hasty workers and unfaithful laborers out of the field, for the world is forfeited with men and ministers who do their work by precept instead of example. The great preachers of the present and the future are and will be exemplary. Every man, woman and child in the church should be "living epistles, known and read" of their neighbors. It is an easy matter for our neighbors to read whether we have been "pricked to the heart" or only skin deep. Example will tell the truth on all. We may preach Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants, but our examples will judge us, not only before our neighbors, but before God. If we have been pricked to the heart, what we do and say will come from the heart and go to the heart of others, and will accomplish one of two things, convince them of the truth of the work that we represent, or that we are honest and are honestly deceived.

My health has improved some since I came to Oregon, although I have had some very severe attacks of my old trouble. I go to my heavenly Father and tell him my wants. I quit long ago taking any kind of medicine, but use consecrated oil and the prayer of faith. Many times I have been so miserably it seemed almost impossible to get to the place of appointment; but after going into Father's beautiful closets, three times, and praying, I have received strength to go and preach some times one hour and a half and at others I have preached two discourses of an hour and a half each, and went home feeling better than I had for days; and I have been made to feel and know that it is out of weakness that I have been made strong—not in man's wisdom nor strength, but in the strength of the Lord. And I with others have been made to rejoice in the goodness and mercy of God, and with experience, age, and trying to live an exemplary life my faith increases daily and I am confirmed in my hope and try to say with all my heart, "Lord, thy will be done."

I have been praying that the Lord would open the hearts of several of my brethren and sisters to either send me their old Books of Mormon and the Voice of Warning, or take them down off the dusty shelves, read them, and after they get through, send them to some Elder to loan to the people. I can use several; so send them to me at Sweet Home, Oregon.

Yours in gospel bonds,

A. HAWS.

ST. THOMAS, Ont., Oct. 12th.

Dear Herald:—I am now in the same place where I became acquainted first with you and with the doctrine of baptism for the remission of sins. I have been through many trials since I was buried in the waters of baptism, but I thank God I ever was led this way, and I hope to continue in this way to the end of my probation. The St. Thomas branch have rented a hall for three months, located in the Moore Block, on Talbut street. It will hold about one hundred and fifty. In the summer we had quite an interest aroused, three were baptized; and there are three more now waiting for baptism, two, heads of families. We are expecting Brn. Lake and Evans this way soon, on their way going east of here about forty miles to organize a branch. Eight members were baptized by Bro. Evans. We expect when coming this way they will let us hear their voices, and that many may be made glad, and good done. I am trying to do all I can in the absence of better talent, and am acting as president of the branch at present, doing what I can. I mean to work in conformity with my brethren, the traveling ministry, and the known Church laws. My health has been failing for about three years, weakened, and with much difficulty do my work at the bench—cabinet-making. But God knows all our conditions, and I feel he has been good to me in extending my life thus far. Some times I have good liberty in presenting the word, and I see the need of being careful in presenting it in meekness and mildness, knowing that we shall have to give an account of our works before him. Yours,

T. A. PHILLIPS.

ATTLEBORO, Mass., Oct. 12.

Joseph Smith, Dear Brother:—The battle of the Lord against sin and the wrong is still being waged here, and his army is increasing and advancing. Six have been attracted to "the faith once delivered to the Saints" since last May. Bro. C. Coombs administered the rite of baptism to all of them. Elder John Smith preached at Plainville and Attleboro, Sept. 12th. A Bible class has been organized here, with Bro. John Robbins, superintendent, Mr. Thomas Shallcross teacher, Bro. Samuel Robbins, secretary, and sister Nellie Buxton, treasurer. Prayer or preaching meetings are regularly held Wednesday evening. Sunday School at 10:30, a. m., with a usual preaching service on the Sabbath. The reports that come from Bro. U. W. Greene, now in the Maine district are encouraging. I learn that he has large audiences, and his labors are crowned with success. May the Spirit of the living God continue with and prosper him in his gospel work. If Bro. Greene would write to the Herald, it would give all a chance to know of his endeavors. Bro. F. M. Sheehy gave a discourse to the Saints and friends here last Sunday afternoon and again in the evening. He left Monday for Maine, via. Boston. I yet hope for the redemption and perfection of Zion.

ARTHUR B. PIERCE.

As I was returning from the Reunion last Friday I chanced to fall in company on the train with some of the delegates to the Congregational Church Assembly at Des Moines, and overheard their conversation on the mooted question. One man says, "I was told something by one of our Boston brethren that I was not to tell yet, but I believe I will tell it anyhow." He said that the entire faculty of Andover College was now under indictment by the Board of Missions for belief in repentance after death. He also said, "Yale College is in the same fix; and the end is not yet."

Bro. Blair, "Straws show which way the wind blows." I saw that these men were troubled about it. Well, I feel thankful that God made our platform in the beginning, so that it is not changed by any "stormy wind that blows." It amuses me though, to see the world come crawling out of the mud and mire of man-made systems and try to sit on one corner of the great Latter Day platform that they may enjoy a ray of the sunlight of the gospel of Christ, even if the heathen have forced them to do it. I feel we again can sing, "Tis good to be a Saint in latter days."

Yours,

W. T. BOZARTH.

HOLSTEIN, Ont., October 18th.

Brother W. W. Blair:—Because of circumstances over which I had no control I was not permitted to enter upon the mission assigned me until the 23d of August, when I left Kansas for my field of labor. Arriving in Michigan, I went to see relatives and friends, (who by the way defrayed my expenses), meeting with the Saints and doing what good I could by way of preaching, etc. I found the Saints mostly striving to do the Master's will. Instances of non-conformity with the law governing temporal affairs of the church and instituting a way of their own caused disunion and confusion.

During my short experience in the church, brother Blair, I have found that where the temporal law has been presented to the Saints, and they have complied with it as the law directs, namely, paying in their "tents and offerings," God has invariably blessed these Saints. But where this law has been treated lightly, disunion, dissatisfaction, jealousies, contention and the like were invariably the rule. I hope and pray that the time may soon come when God's law will be honored by all, that peace and unity may prevail.

I attended the conference of the London District, held at St. Marys, where we had a splendid time. Peace and unity prevailed throughout the entire session, and the gifts of tongues, and prophecy were enjoyed in a marked degree. I think I never enjoyed a conference better than this one. I remained at St. Marys for a week in company with brother J. A. McIntosh, and on Sunday three were added to the church there. On Monday the 11th inst., I left Bro. McIntosh at St. Marys, and came here; I expect to go into Protan next week, thence down to Cameron, in Victoria County, as the way opens. I am feeling well and strong in the faith, and my prayer is that God may speed his work to its triumph and victory over all opposition, and that when Jesus comes we may enter into the rest prepared for the people of God. My permanent address until April, 1887, will be, Holstein, Grey County, Ontario.

Yours Fraternally,

W. J. SMITH.

LUCE, Minnesota, Oct. 8th.

Dear Editors:—I am a poor suffering brother; have been suffering from diseases contracted while in the service of the United States in defense of my country. I have not been a member of the Latter Day Saints' Church long, and am as it were an infant in the cause, but am satisfied it is the true Church of Christ. I struggled with sickness and poverty and tried to serve God without uniting with any church, and without baptism, with but little success. And I soon saw that I was on the wrong road, but I trust that I am now on the right one. I wish the brethren everywhere to pray for me that I may recover my health enough to be of some service in the cause of Christ and to bring up my family of seven children to serve the Master. Three of my family including myself belong to the church, and are united with a branch here at Luce. Although we are few in number, yet I think the good Lord is with us. We have manifestations of his Spirit. Bro. Florence Omans, Priest of the branch, and Bro. Dinehart, Teacher, are trying to carry on the work together with the few Saints here. I have not been able to meet with them for some time, but hope and pray they are doing all they can to keep up the meetings and Sunday School. Brethren and sisters please give me an interest in your prayers that I may prove faithful to the end of this life.

From a brother and Deacon of the branch.

GEO. W. OMANS.

DECKERVILLE, Mich., Oct. 19th.

Bro. Blair:—Our conference is over, and although it was wet and muddy, yet we had a large gathering, and were much blessed and encouraged by the good Spirit of the Master. Three were baptized. All went away feeling glad they came. Yours,

J. J. CORNISH.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Ques.—Has an officer of a branch the right, by virtue of his Priesthood, to administer the sacrament when he dont labor in the Branch?

Ans.—Yes; he has the right to do so, but if he thereby gives offense for the reason that he is not dutiful, it would be better to let others, faithful men, administer.

Q.—Has a presiding priest a right to report his branch in good standing when he never visits the branch?

A.—He should report only what he knows to be facts.

THE SABBATH OF THE LORD.

HAVING had some experience in reasoning with our Seventh Day friends upon the above named subject, I will present some of our reasons for observing the first day as the Lord's day of rest instead of the seventh, and in so doing will review some of the arguments presented by their ablest advocates. And as they claim that, as "The Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath;" and as God said, "For in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, and rested the seventh day, wherefore the Lord blessed the Sabbath day and hallowed it," (Ex. 20:11), that it therefore must have been given to Adam and the patriarchs as a command; hence its observance is binding upon all mankind.

Now we will deny nothing plainly taught in the scriptures, neither should we teach as doctrine what is not taught therein; for we must go "to the law and to the testimony; if they speak not according to this word it is because there is no light in them." That the patriarchs computed time by months and years is evident from Gen. 8:13, each moon, or twenty-eight days, being a month, which was very probably divided into half moons and quarter moons, periods of seven days. But from the rule given above we have no divine right to say that they were to rest upon the seventh day; for "surely the Lord God will do nothing but he first revealeth the secret to his servants the prophets;" (Amos 3:7); and as there is not a shadow of evidence that they were so required to do, there can be no truth in so teaching.

The reason assigned why God sanctified the seventh day, (which means to set it apart for a certain purpose and make it known), was because that in it he had rested; hence it was after this first seventh day that he sanctified, or made it known to man, that he had rested on that day and therefore commanded them to do so. Admit this, and the question then is, How long after? Now as our eternal rest may depend upon a correct answer to this question, how careful we should be to have the correct answer!

Order is heaven's first law; and if we can find when God revealed this secret to his prophets will we not accept of it? When did God first reveal the Sabbath to man? "Thou camest down also upon Mount Sinai, and madest known unto them [revealed the secret] thy holy Sabbath by the hand of Moses thy servant, and gavest them bread from heaven."—Nehemiah 9:13-15. Revealing the Sabbath, and giving bread (manna) from heaven, is said to have occurred at the same time. And now if Moses corroborates this, will God hold us guiltless in denying it! Moses tells us, Ex. 16:1, that Israel camped in the wilderness of Sin on the fifteenth day of the second month, and that the next morning the manna fell, of which they were to gather a certain portion daily, and on the sixth day a double portion, which they did, and that they then came and told Moses, evidently not knowing why this was done. Moses then explains that God had ordered this,—for "tomorrow" is a "holy Sabbath," telling them there would be none then to gather—but to use part of what they had and keep the remainder until morning. They did so, and to their astonishment, no doubt, what they had kept over was good. (Verse 24). For before this when they had tried to keep it it "bred worms and stank." (Verse 20). Thus we see when God first sanctified the Sabbath and made it known, it was confirmed by miracles. Moses said to them, "Eat that to-day; for to-day is a Sabbath unto the Lord; to-day ye shall not find it in the field." (Verse 25). Then follows the command how to keep the Sabbath: "Six days ye shall gather it; (or labor); but on the seventh day, which is the Sabbath, in it there shall be none." Why tell them the seventh day was the Sabbath if they already knew it?

Moses, we see, positively confirms the testimony of Nehemiah as to when the Sabbath was first made known. But as drowning men catch at straws, so will some struggle to maintain their Eden-Sabbath theory. "Why," say they, "the very language of verse 28, And the Lord said unto Moses, How long refuse ye to keep my commandments and my laws, [some went out to gather manna on the Sabbath day], is evidence, positive, that they had long been working on the Sabbath contrary to God's command, refusing to keep it holy. Now, by reading carefully the following verse we will see just why the complaint was made. They had been told to gather a double portion on the sixth day, for they should find nor gather any on the seventh, yet some went out that first Sabbath looking for more, in open violation of the command; hence the complaint, and the reason why—"See, for the Lord has given you the Sabbath, therefore he giveth you on the sixth day the bread of two days; abide ye every man in his place, let no man go out of his place on the seventh day. So the people rested on the seventh day. (vs. 29 30). Positive evidence that it was the first day appointed as a Sabbath. But to prove positively that Nehemiah and Moses were right, we will show that, instead of their having any command to rest on the seventh day, before the one confirmed by miracles, as seen, God had commanded them to labor on the seventh day before this. By command of God who led them, on the 15th day of the second month they left Elim, where were twelve wells of water and seventy palm trees, (Ex. 15:27, a desirable camping place), and came into the wilderness of Sin (Ex. 16:1), and were fed with quails; and the next morning the manna first fell. It fell first on the first day, so the day before when they performed this long journey was the seventh day. This seventh day, at least they were not commanded to keep.

In Exodus 12th chapter, the Lord tells them to select the paschal lamb on the tenth day of the months, or what we call Monday, and keep it till the fourteenth—Friday—then kill and roast it after night, clothed and shod, with staff in hand; and why? For the Lord was going to labor on the seventh day, (Our seventh day friends say it begins at sun down, Friday), slaying the first-born of all Egypt, thus causing them to urge the Israelites to go out, which they did with great parade, six hundred thousand strong, besides others, with cattle, &c., on the seventh day—not the Sabbath, but the seventh—for it was not yet appointed a Sabbath, for of the Sabbath it was said: "Let no man go out of his place on the Sabbath day."

So the seventh day was again used by express command of God as a day of great labor, day and night. Two seventh days at least were not Sabbaths, before the twenty-second of the second month, when God made known his holy Sabbath by the hand of his servant Moses, as claimed by Neh. 9: 13. No one can show us one where they rested before then. Now if the seventh day was the Sabbath at that time and before, why did not the Lord have them keep the lamb until Saturday night before killing it, and thus let them rest that Sabbath according to the commandment, and then go out on the first day? May God help you, dear readers to see his truth as taught in the Scriptures. Seventh day teachers being wrong in this seventh day question how can we trust them in other things? "The blind lead the blind." We have given incontrovertible evidence as to how long after the seventh day of creation it was that God sanctified it. On Sinai, for the first time, do we have any record of when he revealed that fact to man. It was given to Israel, and then only as a commemorative institution, as was also the passover, and it was designed for them only, as may be clearly seen by a careful examination of the following points of analogy between them.

THE PASSOVER.

"And this day shall be unto you for a memorial; and ye shall keep it a feast to the Lord throughout your generations; ye shall keep it a feast by an ordinance for ever.

"Seven days shall ye eat unleavened bread; even the first day ye shall put away leaven out of your houses; for whosoever eateth leavened bread, from the first day until the seventh day, that soul shall be cut off from Israel.

"And in the first day there shall be an holy convocation, and in the seventh day there shall be an holy convocation to you; no manner of work shall be done in them, save that which every man must eat, that only may be done of you.

"And ye shall observe the feast of unleavened bread; for in this self-same day have I brought your armies out of the land of Egypt; therefore shall ye observe this day in your generations by an ordinance for ever."—Ex. 12: 14-17.

"It is a sign between me and the children of Israel for ever; for in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, and on the seventh day he rested and was refreshed."—Ex. 31: 12-17.

From the above we learn (1), that they both were for a memorial or sign to the children of Israel only; (2), that both were holy institutions; (3), that in both all manner of work was forbidden; (4), that none but Israel were required to observe them; (5), that the penalty for violation of either by laboring therein was death; (6), that both were limited to the "generations" of the children of Israel. Where one was limited, the other was limited. What was affirmed of one, was affirmed of the other also. Now who will be so regardless of truth, reason, and logic as to say that the passover, a purely Israelitish institution, passed into and become a part of the new dispensation because Israel was to keep it "by an ordinance forever"? yet it would be just as true and logical to do so as to teach the perpetuity of the Seventh day Sabbath because of similar declarations concerning it.

The Levitical priesthood was to be everlasting, (Ex. 40: 15), yet when Christ came there was a change of the priesthood at least; our seventh day friends say it was abolished. "The priesthood being changed, there must of necessity be a change also of the law." Heb. 7: 12. So the passover was to be observed forever; and so in one sense it is, although changed from the 14th of the month to the 16th—the first day instead of the sixth—and now instead of being a sign of deliverance from temporal death by the blood of the paschal lamb, in place thereof the bread and wine, a memorial instituted by the Savior, points back to our deliverance from eternal death by the blood of the Lamb of God, and forward to his second advent, as also the seventh day Sabbath as a memorial of the first creation, as revealed at Sinai, as also of deliverance from Egyptian bondage. "And remember, that thou wast a stranger in the land of Egypt, and the Lord thy God brought thee out thence, through a mighty hand and an outstretched arm. Therefore the Lord thy God commanded thee to keep the Sabbath day."—Deut. 5: 15. Binding on mankind no longer than the passover, neither than the Sabbath of atonement which occurred once a year on the 10th day of the seventh month, Tuesday, nor enjoined in any stronger terms; for we read of this Tuesday Sabbath, "And this shall be a statute forever unto you. * * * It shall be a Sabbath of rest unto you by a statute forever."—Lev. 16: 29, 31. It is remarkable that the Seventh day Sabbath was a two fold memorial and to Israel alone, (it was not for any others), as a sign of creation that they might remember the true God, (for they had lost the Spirit by transgression) and pointing forward, being a shadow of the new creation by the resurrection of our Lord Jesus Christ. And as a memorial of their deliverance from Egyptian bondage, it pointed back to that event and forward to the deliverance of spiritual Israel from the bondage of sin and eternal death. And as the passover and other shadows could not go beyond the substance that cast them, it was fulfilled as the other commandments to suit the dispensation of life, and was changed from the seventh day to the first day by him who "is also Lord of the Sabbath," to commemorate the day He "entered into his rest" and also "ceased from his own work, as God did from his."—Heb. 4: 10. God certainly ceased from his work by blessing and sanctifying the day he finished as a rest day; and Jesus finished his work the first day, and also blessed it, as we will prove hereafter. We will now show that the Seventh day Sabbath as a part of that law given at Sinai was fulfilled in Christ and superceded by a better law.

"There is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walketh not after the flesh, but after the Spirit." Moses' law was called the flesh; Christ's is called the Spirit. "For the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death."—Rom. 8: 1, 2. When we prove that there was a law from which people were freed by the Lord Jesus, we are met with the statement that it was not the moral law, or the commandments, but the ceremonial law including sacrifice, &c., that only that law was fulfilled in Christ. Now we positively deny that there was any such distinction made by the inspired writers. That there are two laws referred to is true, "the law of Moses" and "the law of the Lord;" and that all that was given by Moses as mediator is called Moses' law; while the other is the gospel law. As evidence, we quote: "The law was given by Moses, but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ."—John 1: 7. That given by Moses certainly included the Sabbath: "And madest known unto them thy holy Sabbath by the hand of thy servant Moses."—Neh. 8: 13. So it is no part of the law of grace and truth, for that came by Christ. "He that despised [disobeyed] Moses' law, died without mercy under two or three witnesses."—Heb. 10: 28. The breaking of the Sabbath, as well as the passover and other laws of Moses, was punished by death. See Numbers 15: 31, where a man was convicted of picking up sticks on the Sabbath day, and on inquiry of the Lord about it, he was stoned to death without mercy. Here is evidence positive what law they died for disobeying, and this was Moses' law. Jesus quoting the fifth command, says: "Moses said, Honor thy father and mother," (Mark 7: 10), showing this was Moses' law. Again: "What did Moses command you?" They said Moses permitted divorce, &c., Mark 10: 3, 4. All one law, that of Moses. The ten commandments may with propriety be called the constitutional law of Israel. The Hebrew converts, some of them, soon began to trouble the Gentiles, "Teaching that they should be circumcised, and keep the law of Moses."—Acts 15: 5. But Paul, who had been "taught according to the perfect manner of the law of the fathers," (Acts 22: 3) withstood them; and it was decided by the apostles that they should not be so taught; "For Moses of old time hath in every city them that preach him, being read in the synagogues every Sabbath day." Acts 15: 21. Now, "Moses wrote all the words of the Lord" in a book that were spoken from Sinai, including the seventh day law, (Ex. 24: 4), and it was called "the book of the law;" and afterwards the words of the prophets were added to Moses' writings and then the book was called the book of the law and the prophets. So if we can learn what was read in the synagogues on the Sabbath day, then we have proof positive what "law there was no such command to keep." (Acts 15: 24). When Paul came to Antioch he "went into the synagogue on the Sabbath day and sat down. And after the reading of the law and the prophets, the rulers sent unto them," (Acts 13: 14, 15). So "the law and the prophets was what "Moses of old time" had preached for him, which the Gentiles converts were not to keep. (Acts 15: 24). Moses' Law, all that was given by Moses as mediator of the old covenant, including the seventh day Sabbath, "It was said by them of old time, Thou shalt not kill. Thou shalt not commit adultery." (Matth. 5: 21-27). The same one "of old time" said also, "Keep the seventh day." These old time sayings was "Moses Law" as read in the synagogues every Sabbath. (Acts 15: 21); was "The law and the prophets;" (Acts 15: 15); and "The law and the prophets were until John. Since that time the kingdom of God is preached." (Luke 16: 16). That is, by Christ's servants. Yet the Pharisees still persisted in teaching them after claiming faith in Christ. (Acts 15: 5). We have now shown the two laws, one of the Spirit, the other from which Paul was free—the law of sin and death, the law of the flesh.—(Rom. 8: 1-3). The last lingering doubt in regard to what law that was should be removed by the preceding chapter, where he compares Israel under the old covenant to a wife married to the law, and says that while that husband lived she had no right to marry another husband, (be under another law), but if her husband (the law) be dead, then she is freed from him, and could legally marry another husband and not sin, for she was no longer to obey the commands of that first husband, but only such as should be required of her by the second husband. O how plain! He also says that if the man under the law was dead, he was free from the law.—Rom. 7: 1-3. Now hear the application of this plain illustration—"For which reason, my brethren, ye also are become dead to the law by the body of Christ." (Some may say, He being dead, of course from the first the "law has no dominion over him" he can do as he pleases then). No, "That ye should be married to another," even to Christ, and "bring forth fruit unto God." "For when we were in the flesh, [under the old husband] the motions of sin that were by the law, [or made known by the law] did work in our members to bring forth fruit unto death." Under that old law certain death was their doom, especially for breaking the Sabbath. Oh what a terrible husband! "But now we are delivered from the law, that being dead wherein we were held; that we should serve in newness of Spirit, and not in the oldness of the letter."—Vs. 6. To make their freedom from the law doubly sure he says they are dead to the law as a wife, and the law is dead to them as a husband; and now married to a kind, merciful and loving Savior, an everlasting husband, should obey him. Our seventh day friends admit that it was the law that says "Thou shalt not covet" that Paul was speaking of; for in the next verse he says it is which same law also says, "Keep the seventh day." To evade the force of this unanswerable illustration, we are told that Paul says after this that the law is holy, and the commandment holy and just and good. Also, that "the law is spiritual." If that were correct it could not disprove what he had just been so positively asserting. But at the risk of being tedious, I will place in juxtaposition to this another translation—and our wisest translators admit many errors in the common version—and the ablest exponents have never denied to me in public the truth of the new translation in this chapter.

COMMON VERSION.

"For I was alive without the law once; but when the commandment came, sin revived and I died.

"And the commandment which was ordained to life, I found to be unto death.

"For sin, taking occasion by the commandment, deceived me, and by it slew me.

"Wherefore the law is holy, and the commandment holy, and just, and good.

"Was then that which is good made death unto me? God forbid. But sin that it might appear sin, working death in me by that which is good: that sin by the commandment might become exceeding sinful.

"For we know that the law is spiritual; but I am carnal, sold under sin.

"For that which I do, I allow not; for what I would, that do I not; but what I hate that do I.

"If then I do that which I would not, I consent unto the law that it is good.

"Now then it is no more I that do it, but sin that dwelleth in me.

"For I know that in me (that is, in my flesh), dwelleth no good thing; for to will, is present with me; but how to perform that which is good, I find not.

"For the good that I would, I do not; but the evil which I would not, that I do.

"Now if I do that I would not, it is no more I that do it, but sin that dwelleth in me.

"I find then a law, that when I would do good, evil is present with me,

"For I delight in the law

INSPIRED TRANSLATION.

"For once I was alive without transgression of the law, but when the commandment of Christ came, sin revived, and I died.

"And when I believed not the commandment of Christ which came, which was ordained unto life, I found it condemned me unto death.

"For sin, taking occasion, denied the commandment, and deceived me; and by it I was slain.

"Nevertheless, I found the law to be holy, and the commandment to be holy, and just, and good.

"Was then that which is good made death unto me? God forbid. But sin, that it might appear sin by that which is good working death in me; that sin by the commandment, might become exceeding sinful.

"For we know that the commandment is spiritual; but when I was under the law, I was yet carnal, sold under sin. [a slave to sin].

"But now I am spiritual; for that which I am commanded to do, I do; and that which I am commanded not to allow, I allow not.

"For what I know is not right, I would not do; for that which is sin, I hate.

"If then I do not that which I would not allow, I consent unto the law that it is good; and I am not condemned.

"Now then, it is no more I that do sin; but I seek to subdue that sin which dwelleth in me.

"For I know that in me, that is in my flesh, dwelleth no good thing; for to will is present with me, but to perform that which of God, after the inward man;

"But I see another law in my members warring against the law of my mind, and bringing me into captivity to the law of sin which is in my members."—Rom. 7: 9-23.

is good I find not, only in Christ.

"For the good that I would have done when under the law, I find not to be good; therefore I do it not.

"But the evil which I would not do under the law, I find to be good; that I do.

"Now if I do that, through the assistance of Christ, I would not do under the law; I am not under the law; and it is no more that I seek to do wrong, but to subdue sin that dwelleth in me.

"I find then that under the law, that when I would do good evil was present with me; for I delight in the law of God after the inward man.

"And now I see another law, even the commandment of Christ, and it is imprinted in my mind."—Rom. 7: 9-24.

We find that the Inspired Translation is strictly in harmony with all other scriptures. Paul was never "alive without the law," but was "blameless as touching the righteousness that is in the law." Phil. 3: 6. But when Ananias was sent to teach him the law of Christ, it condemned him unto death if he disobeyed it. Acts 22: 16. And he found by obedience thereunto that it was holy and just and good, and also spiritual, for by it he received the Spirit which he could never have done by obedience to all the ten commandments; for there was no such promise. And that it was the commandment of Christ that was ordained unto life, you all know; "for if there had been a law which could have given life," (with Galatians 4: 21), then no need for Christ's law, is the argument. Hence "the Law of the Spirit of life (or that could give life) is called holy, just and good." Now who will dare say that Paul who had "fought a good fight," and kept the faith (2d Tim. 4: 7), said he was carnal, (Rom. 7: 14), and then in the next breath tell them that he was free from the law of sin and death, and "to be carnal" is death, because the "carnal mind is at enmity against God" (Rom. 8: 2, 7) and could not be subject to God. I reject the libel against the character of this old soldier of Christ, as given in the common version; he doing nothing good, but evil continually "could not find how to do good," (v. 18), and yet teaching others how to live; and in the last verse thanking God through Christ that with his mind he served God, but with his flesh the law of sin. That is, teaching not to steal, yet stealing, not to lie, and yet lying, and so on. The Inspired Translation must be correct, for it agrees with all other scriptures, as well as being reasonable. There was no justification thereby.

Again Paul in speaking of the law says, "For by the law is the knowledge of sin."—Rom. 3: 20. "But now the righteousness of God [or gospel of Christ] without the law is manifested, being witnessed [or testified of] by the law and the prophets," (v. 21), which corroborates the death of the law as taught in chapter seven, and their freedom therefrom. That law said "Keep the seventh day." "By what law? of works? Nay; but by the law of faith. Therefore we conclude, that a man is justified by faith [the law of faith] without the deeds of the law" [Moses law], (vs. 27, 28), "For ye are not under the law, but under grace."—Rom. 6: 14. But we are referred, as argument against this, that Jesus said, that, Till heaven and earth pass away, not one jot or tittle shall pass from the law.—Matt. 5: 18; and that the heavens and earth yet stood, hence the law must be in force yet. Now I protest against such an unfair application of this scripture. The Pharisees charged him with trying to subvert their Mosaic form of government; hence he says "Think not that I come to destroy the law, or the prophets: I am not come to destroy, but to fulfill."—Matt. 5: 17. Fulfil is "To perform, to complete, to finish."—Webster. "For verily I say unto you, till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law, till all be fulfilled." Now when some quote his word, why leave this part out? Is it not that they fear it is against them? "Till all is fulfilled"—finished. Just what he says was done—"It is finished."—John 19: 30. And to show that he come to fulfil and change it, he at once began to show them the imperfections of that old-time law, and to give them a better one, that which was adapted to the new government he was just ushering in.

And these were the same referred to in Acts 15: 21,—“For Moses of old-time being read in the synagogue every Sabbath day.” And in Acts 13: 15, “After reading the law and the prophets, the rulers of the synagogue said to Paul,” &c.; and in Acts 15: 24, that they were not to be taught as a rule of action—“having no life in them,” Gal. 4: 21, being imperfect—no converting power in them. In Mark 10: 17, a man had kept all these from his youth up, and Jesus loved him, and said to him, “One thing thou lackest; sell all thou hast and give to the poor, follow me, and thou shalt have treasures in heaven.” No law against great riches in the decalogue, so Jesus taught the law of the Lord that was “perfect, converting the soul.” Those of old time had said, “Thou shalt not kill, and he that killeth shall be in danger of the judgment; [old law] but I say unto you [perfect law] Whosoever shall be angry with his brother without a cause,” &c.—Matt. 5: 21. Read the whole. And John says he that hateth his brother is a murderer in his heart. The old law said “Thou shalt not commit adultery. But I say, [new law], He that looketh on a woman to lust after her, hath already committed adultery in his heart. The old law only forbid killing, but not being angry without a cause. The old time saying “Thou shalt not commit adultery,” but did not forbid lustful desires, lewd talk. And so through that entire law, it only governed the outward action, while Jesus’ law governed the thoughts and intent of the heart. As Matt. 5: 19 is made a strong text to prove the perpetuity of the law and prophets, I will contrast it with the Inspired Translation in 1831 before this question of the Sabbath was agitated.

COMMON VERSION.

“Whosoever, therefore, shall break one of these least commandments, and shall teach men so, he shall be called the least in the kingdom of heaven. But who shall do and teach them shall be called great in the kingdom of heaven.”

NEW VERSION.

“Whosoever, therefore, shall break one of these least commandments, and shall teach men so to do, he shall in no wise be saved in the kingdom of heaven. But whosoever shall do and teach these commandments of the law until it be fulfilled, the same shall be called great, and shall be saved in the kingdom of heaven.”

It will be seen at a glance that the Inspired Translation is far more severe upon the law breakers than the common version, for it says that they can in no wise be saved in the kingdom God, while the other permits them to break the law, and teach others so to do, and yet be saved in the kingdom of heaven, only they will be called least. So all the difference between Sabbath breakers, murderers, &c., and the law keepers is only a matter of pride at most, as one will be called “the least,” and the others “great” in the kingdom. Then cease teaching annihilation for us seventh day Sabbath-breakers, unless you reject the common version upon that verse and accept the Inspired Translation.

“But Christ being come a High Priest” after the order of Melchisedec, began at once the work of reformation. To reform is to restore to its primitive form. “To form or shape anew” (Webster) so he would form the law anew, as it was taught by his predecessor in office, Melchisedec. This is just what he began to do in the beginning of his ministry; and that law that was added, the old covenant began to wax old, ready to “vanish away.” And when the new government of God was organized, that poor, weak, and unprofitable “husband” died, just as Paul states in Rom. 7th chapter. In verse 6, says it was the law that said “thou shalt not covet,” that was dead; and that they shall be married to Christ—or his kingdom. O, how plain and harmonious are the teachings of Jesus and his apostles! Compare Paul, Rom. 7th, with Jesus Luke 16: 16. The law was till John, then the gospel of the kingdom, which all men should obey. Paul says the old husband—the law was dead, by the body of Christ (kingdom) all should be married to Christ and obey him instead of the old husband.

We will illustrate thus:—The British rule existed here until Washington; since that time the good news of the government of America is taught, and all men press into it.

“Now the law and the prophets were until John; since that time the kingdom [government] of God is preached, and all men press into it.”—Luke 16: 16.

Now who will be so regardless of truth and logic to say that after Washington the British law existed here; (although some of their laws were adopted into our government.) But it would be just as true and logical as to admit that the law of the prophets were [existed] until John as the rule of government of Israel, and since that time another kingdom was preached and established for Israel, and that yet they were under the same old law or government, although most of the old laws changed to suit the new kingdom, were taught and adopted by them.

This is just what is taught in the above text, and we can not deny it. For “now the righteousness of God without the law is manifested, being witnessed [or testified of] by the law and the prophets.”—Rom. 5: 21. Paul, in asserting the superiority of the new covenant over the old, says, “But if the ministration of death written and engraven in stones, was glorious, * * how shall not the ministration of the Spirit be rather glorious.”—2 Cor. 3: 7, 8. None should deny that this refers to the ten commandments written on stones. Here it is called death, and in verse nine it is called “condemnation”—[the law of condemnation and death], and was to be done away, cease. “For if that which is done away was glorious, much more that which remaineth is glorious.”—Verse 11. “Seeing then that we have such hope, we use great plainness of speech; and not as Moses which put a vail over his face that the children of Israel could not look steadfastly to the end of that which is abolished.”—Vs. 12, 13. To avert the force of this unanswerable logic of the apostle, and to try and bolster up the abolished law and its institution of the seventh day, we are told that it was not the law that was referred to as being done away, but the ministration of the law. Very well; what is a ministration—“office of a minister; agency.” Minister, “one authorized to teach.” Webster. Was the authority to teach that law including the seventh day abolished by Christ! If so, by whose authority do you teach it? Out of your own mouth the Lord will condemn you. The law and ministration of the law are inseparably connected, and when one is abolished the other must be null and void. This none will deny. Some had been troubling the Galatians also, and perverting the gospel [law] of Christ, teaching Moses’ law.—Gal. 1: 7. “Compelling the Gentile converts to live as the Jews,” (Gal. 2: 14), who kept the seventh day &c. But Paul tells them they were justified by faith in Christ, without the works of the law. Vs. 16.

Moses’ law was added until Christ. For proof positive as to what law was added, see Deut. 5: 22. After repeating the ten commandments, he says, “These words the Lord spake with a great voice, and he added no more.” But he did add these, and as “he added no more,” it could surely be nothing else that Paul referred to. To forever settle that matter we will quote the remainder of the sentence; “And he wrote them in two tables of stone,”—the commands that were of God. (v. 22). “Wherefore, the law was our schoolmaster to bring us unto Christ. But after that faith is come, we are no longer under a schoolmaster.”—vs. 24, 25. Or in other words, when Christ came he became our teacher instead of the law. But some will say, “That was a strange schoolmaster to bring us to Christ, for that says nothing about him; that was the law of ceremonies, sacrifices, &c., all pointing to a coming Savior, and it was not the ten commandments." The words "to bring us" (v. 24) were not in the original, for they are in italics and thus show that they were added by the translators. The original reads: "Was our schoolmaster until Christ," and with this agrees all other texts, as see verse 19, and others. "But now after ye have known God, how turn ye again to the weak and beggarly elements of the world? Ye observe days," &c. (Gal. 4:9, 10). And to show what law he was now referring to all through, we quote,—“Tell me, ye that desire to be under the law; do ye not hear the law, [or what the Lord is compared to in the written word—and what it was for, and how long it was to exist]. For it is written that Abraham had two sons, the one by a bondmaid, the other by a free woman. But he who was of the bondwoman was after the flesh. But he of the free woman was by promise. Which things are an allegory. For these are the two covenants [or laws]. The one from the Mount Sinai, which gendereth to bondage, which is Agar. [The one covenant from the Mount, not the valley, or just near by]. For this Agar is Mount Sinai in Arabia, and answereth to Jerusalem which now is and is in bondage with her children. [He had just reproved them for ‘desiring again to be in bondage,’ or under this law from Sinai, after that God had sent forth his son to redeem them that were under this law of bondage. Gal. 4:3–10]. But Jerusalem that is above is free, which is the mother of us all.” “Now we, brethren, as Isaac was, are the children of promise.” “Nevertheless what saith the Scripture? Cast out the bondwoman and her son.”—Gal. 4:21–30. Now compare this with seventh-day teachings. I quote from J. N. Andrews on the two covenants, page 45. “The two women, the mothers of the two families, are not the covenants, but the Jerusalems. The two covenants whereby God is in his worship connected with these two Jerusalems, are represented by the relation which Abraham sustained to these two women.” That is, Sarah was his legal wife, and the other his concubine; and these two different relations represent, or are the two covenants. Now hear Paul again: Abraham had two sons, one by Agar, and one by Sarah, “which things are an allegory;” for these two sons, not two conditions or relations, are the two covenants. The one son, or covenant, from the Mount Sinai—which is Agar, which represented old Jerusalem; the other son, or covenant, from Sarah, representing the New Jerusalem. Now who shall we believe, you or Paul? Why deny the teaching of Paul in regard to this matter? If any admit that Paul was right in calling these two sons “the one from the Mount Sinai which is Agar,” and that as Ishmael was born of Agar, even so the first covenant came forth from Sinai, that would corroborate Moses in Deut. 5:2–4: “The Lord our God made a covenant with us in Horeb,” (or Sinai, not afar off; see Ex. chapter 19). And the Lord spoke unto you “out of the midst of the fire,” (not in the valley). “And he declared unto you his [not their] covenant, which he commanded you to perform, even ten commandments,” (no more, no less), from Sinai, and thus he denies the theory found on page 22, where it is said, “We say that the first covenant was this solemn contract or agreement between God and Israel concerning the law of God, which we learn from Ex. 20:18–21, was made afar off from the Mount. And to show that the covenants are the two laws, Paul goes right on talking about the law,—“Christ is become of no effect unto you, whosoever of you are justified by the law; ye are fallen from grace.”—Gal. 5:4. “For all the law is fulfilled in one word, even in this; thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself.”—v. 14. This can not refer to the ceremonial law. But it was taught in the Mosaic law. So we conclude with Paul, “If ye be led by the Spirit, [the law of the spirit of life], ye are not under the law” (from Sinai). Gal. v. 18. And we therefore are not under the law given to Israel to keep the seventh-day Sabbath.

Conference Minutes.

NORTHERN ILLINOIS.

This district conference convened with the Mission Branch, October 9th and 10th, 1886. Bro. Alexander H. Smith was chosen to preside by the unanimous voice of the conference, and W. Vickery chosen clerk. Minutes of last meeting were read, and corrected as to the report of Bishop's Agent, he having paid out $45 instead of $4 as appeared in minutes. Elder A. H. Smith advised the elders to labor so as to have good reports for next conference, and that branch officers purge out the evil and not allow it to smoulder and grow, to the detriment of the work. Bro. F. M. Cooper, president of the district, had labored mostly in the branches; had visited Streator, Braidwood, Piper City, and Courtland branches. William E. Cherry (by letter), Henry Southwick, George Shadicker, Thomas Hougas, John S. Kier, W. Vickery, M. Madison, Samuel H. Whitaker; Priests Alfred Tarling, Samuel H. Whitaker, (acting Priest of Plano Branch), C. D. Carter; Teachers Amasa Wilcox and John Wonders; Deacon Silas J. Cook, reported. Branch Reports: Streator 24 members, including 2 Elders, 1 Priest, 1 Teacher, 2 Deacons, 1 ordination. Cortland 17, including 1 Elder, 1 Priest, 2 baptized, 1 received by certificate of baptism. Plano 200, including 1 High Priest, 8 Elders, 6 Priests, 3 Teachers, 2 Deacons, 1 died. Mission 111, including 2 Elders, 2 Priests, 1 died, (error in last report, 2). First Chicago 17, including 2 Elders, 1 Priest, 1 Deacon, 1 received by letter, 2 removed by letter. Piper City 17, including 1 Elder, 1 Priest, 1 Teacher, 1 removed. Braidwood 62, including 3 Elders, 1 Priest, 1 Deacon. No report from other branches in the district. Committee on two days' meetings reported, and were on motion continued. W. Vickery reported his writing to the branches, and at his request was released as financial agent. Bishop's Agent, Thomas Hougas, reported balance on hand last report $45.25; received since $40.95; paid out $55; on hand $31.20. On motion Bro. F. M. Cooper was chosen district president and W.

Vickery clerk, for the next four months. Bro. C. D. Carter was ordained to the office of an Elder, he having been recommended by the Cortland Branch. Saturday evening, Bro. Thomas Hougas preached, and Sunday morning at 10:30, Bro. Alexander H. Smith spoke to a crowded congregation, and many could not get in. At 2 p. m. had fellowship and sacrament meeting in charge of Bro. George Shadicker and W. Vickery. One was baptized by Bro. T. Hougas. At 7 p. m. Bro. A. H. Smith again occupied the stand. A vote of thanks was tendered the Saints of Mission Branch for their kindness and hospitality. On the reading of the report of Braidwood Branch, it was asked if the branch had dropped the one name as requested by the conference, and upon being answered that they had not, a committee was appointed to inquire the reason. The committee after inquiry reported, and was discharged and report received, and the matter was left to be adjusted by the president of the mission, Bro. A. H. Smith. Adjourned to meet at Plano, Kendall county, Illinois, the 11th and 12th of February, 1887.

LITTLE SIOUX.

Conference met pursuant to adjournment at the Saints' Chapel, in Magnolia, Iowa, at eleven o'clock a. m., Saturday, September 4th, 1886; with president of the district, J. C. Crabb, in the chair. J. C. Crabb was elected president, C. Derry and P. Cadwell associate presidents, and J. L. Gunsolly and Wm. R. Davison clerks. Subsequently J. L. Gunsolly declined and Wm. C. Cadwell was elected clerk. Branch Reports: Magnolia 243, including 2 High Priests, 1 Seventy, 11 Elders, 9 Priests, 5 Teachers and 2 Deacons, 4 baptized, 1 removed by letter, 1 expelled and 1 loss by error. P. Cadwell president, Donald Maule clerk. Union Center 95, including 1 Seventy, 14 Elders, and 1 Priest, 5 baptized. J. M. Putney president, J. W. Steel clerk. Spring Creek 54, including 6 Elders, 2 Priests, 3 Teachers and 1 Deacon, 1 baptized and 1 ordained. Wm. Chambers president, D. Chambers clerk. Sioux City 14, including 1 Elder, 1 Teacher, and 1 Deacon. No changes. M. P. Berg president, E. A. Townsend clerk. No report from Little Sioux Branch. The spiritual condition of the branches was reported as fair. Official reports: High Priests, P. Cadwell, Charles Derry and J. C. Crabb; J. F. Mintun of the Seventy; Elders M. P. Berg (by letter), D. Chambers (by letter), J. M. Putney, Henry Garner, Richard Farmer, Andrew Joneson, Donald Maule, Wm. C. Cadwell, and E. R. Lanpher (by proxy); Priests Milton Daugherty, Wm. T. Fallon, James Emerson, J. C. Johnson and J. L. Gunsolly; Teachers Enoch Hunt, R. Chatburn and Wm. R. Davison; and Deacons Wm. Trospen and John Benson reported. P. Cadwell, Bishop's Agent, reported in substance as follows: On hand at last report $85.61; received $96.11; total $181.72; paid out $111.16; balance on hand June 30th, 1886, $70.56. This together with the report for three months ending March 30th, 1886, made to June conference was referred to a committee consisting of Brn. Putney, Gunsolly and Davison, who subsequently reported them correct. Their report was approved and the committee discharged. Brn. C. Derry, P. Cadwell and J. C. Crabb reported the result of the two days' meetings at Six Mile Grove, Purcell's Grove, and Moorhead respectively. Seven were baptized and general results good in other respects. On motion J. C. Crabb was sustained as district president. On motion P. Cadwell and C. Derry were sustained as associate presidents of the district. Bro. Andrew Joneson wished to surrender his license and be released from acting as an Elder as he could not speak English sufficiently well, and understood from the Book of Covenants that he who does not do his duty is not worthy to stand. President Crabb thought that it would always be wisdom not to take up a license or release a brother officially so long as he honors his christian profession, or does nothing to the discredit of the work or does not refuse to labor when circumstances are such that he could as well as not. A motion was thereupon made and carried that Bro. Joneson's license be returned to him. On motion Bro. C. Downs was released (by his own request) from his former mission, Bro. D. Chambers was assigned to a general mission in the eastern part of the district and Brn. C. Downs and Lehi Ellison requested to labor under Bro. D. Chambers' direction as occasion might seem to require. A resolution was adopted to the effect that brethren holding official position in the church attending the regular sessions of our quarterly conferences have their names incorporated in the minutes as having reported whether they report labors performed or not. A Two Days' Meeting was appointed at school-house north of Purcell's Grove, the second Saturday and Sunday in November, P. Cadwell in charge. J. C. Crabb preached Saturday evening and C. Derry Sunday morning, and an excellent prayer and testimony meeting was held in connection with the administering of the Lord's Supper on Sunday afternoon. Two were baptized and three children were blessed during conference. Adjourned to meet at Logan at 10:30 on the first Saturday in December, 1886, and Brn. D. W. Kennedy, J. C. Johnson, and P. Cadwell were appointed as a committee to make the necessary arrangements. Sang hymn 1031. Benediction by J. C. Crabb.

SOUTHERN INDIANA.

The conference of the above district convened at Wirt, Jefferson county, October 9th, 10th and 11th, 1886, with Elder James G. Scott presiding; and Elder C. Cott secretary pro tem. Saturday morning a very profitable social meeting was held. At half-past two, minutes of previous conference were read. Branch Reports: Union, 35 members, including 1 Priest, 1 Teacher, 1 Deacon. Canaan 24, including 1 Priest, 1 Teacher. New Trenton, report referred back to branch for correction. Olive 20, including 1 Priest, 1 Teacher and 1 Deacon. The Eden, Low Gap, Amanda, Pleasant Ridge, and Hope branches were not reported. Elder J. M. Scott gave reasons why the Eden Branch was not reported. Elders Jas. G. Scott, J. M. Scott, David Scott, M. R. Scott, reported. Had all done what they could under the circumstances. Elder C. Scott had preached a few times since coming into the district. Priests Wm. H. Burton, T. E. Thomson, and Wm. Foster, had labored in their respective branches. Teachers E. Flint, and Jas. Porter, and Deacon John Fewell, reported. E. Flint was voted a Teacher's License. Elder M. R. Scott was chosen district secretary. Preaching in the evening by M. R. Scott. Sunday, 10th, preaching at 11 a. m. by C. Scott. At three p. m. a highly edifying and spiritual testimony meeting was held. C. Scott preached again in the evening. Monday, 11th, 8:30 a. m. Resolved, that this body request the missionary in charge, to consult with the Bishop, and ascertain the reasons for not accepting the recommendation of the district conference of March, 1886, on Bishop's Agent of this district, and that he communicate said reasons to the district at as early a date as possible. The authorities of the church were sustained. Preaching in the evening by J. M., J. G. and M. R. Scott, after which conference adjourned to meet with the Low Gap Branch, Crawford county, January 8th, 1887, at 10:30 a. m.

SPRING RIVER.

Conference of the above district convened at Webb City, Missouri, October 8th, 1886, at half past seven, p. m. Pres. J. T. Davis called the house to order. The evening was occupied in preaching by L. H. Ezzell. Branch Reports:—Mound Valley; 45 members, including 7 Elders, 1 Teacher, 1 Deacon, 2 baptized, 1 died, 1 ordination. Keighley; 19, including 4 Elders, 1 Deacon, 1 baptized, 1 received by vote on evidence of membership in first organization, 4 removed by letter, 1 died. Center Creek, 28, including 3 Elders, 2 Priests, 1 Teacher, 1 Deacon, 6 ordinations. Columbus, 43, including 4 Elders, 3 Priests, 2 Teachers, 1 Deacon, 2 ordinations. J. T. Davis of the Seventies reported. Elders O. P. Sutherland, Andrew Hoffman, E. E. Bradley, W. S. Taylor, L. H. Ezzell, J. Richards, J. J. Davis, Wm. Westerville, William Pender, and Charles K. Ryan, also Priest Wm. T. Duncan, Teacher Asa Fuller, and Deacon Henry Smart, reported. The Spiritual and temporal authorities of the church were sustained; also J. T. Davis as district president, and Charles K. Ryan secretary. Ordered that a two-days' meeting be held in each branch of the district between now and our next conference. Preaching during conference by L. H. Ezzell, C. Ryan, E. E. Wheeler and J. T. Davis. Although the attendance was small we had a pleasant and a profitable conference. Adjourned to meet the last Friday before the full moon in Februry at Webb City, Missouri.

EASTERN IOWA.

This district conference met at Amber, Jones county, Iowa, October 9th and 10th, 1886; Wm. T. Bozarth in the chair, W. T. Maitland secretary. Jackson branch membership 15; Elder 1, Priest 1; J. M. Bradley president and clerk. Buffalo 21; Elders 3, Priest 1, Teacher 1; I. B. Larew president, Belle Larew clerk. C. C. Reynolds, Bishop's agent, reported: on hand last report $7.65, received since $5.65; paid out $12; on hand $1.30. Elders Wm. T. Bozarth, J. S. Roth, C. C. Reynolds, Jerome Ruby; Priests J. M. Bradley, James R. Johnson, D. W. Clow, W. T. Maitland, reported. Wm. T. Bozarth and J. S. Roth each preached two discourses to attentive audiences. Saints met after late preaching service, and partook of the sacrament, continuing together in prayer, testimony, and rejoicing till midnight, and were loth to disperse even then. Peace, unity and love, characterized all the deliberations and services during this conference. The authorities of the church were sustained in righteousness. W. T. Bozarth was sustained president, C.

C. Reynolds, Bishop's agent. Adjourned subject to call of president.

Miscellaneous.

THE RE-UNION.

As per previous appointment the Annual Reunion assembled at Garner's Grove, in Harrison county, Iowa, on Saturday, October 2d, 1886. About seventy-five tents had been erected before the close of Saturday, beside the large one that had been provided for holding meetings in. This is a fine one, sixty-one feet in diameter, and capable of seating fully one thousand persons, besides leaving room for the speakers' and singers' stands. The committee had done their work so well, that before the close of the meeting, the tent was fully paid for, and was dedicated on Sunday morning, October 10th, Bro. W. W. Blair delivering the dedicatory address. The report of the tent committee showed the total cost of the tent, lamps, and boxes to keep them in, to be about $230. It will be remembered that this was contributed by members of the Galland's Grove and Little Sioux districts almost wholly, and the brethren there expect to use it as wisdom may direct in the furtherance of the work in those two districts.

On the assembling of the Saints, President Joseph Smith was elected to preside, and Bro. W. W. Blair and J. C. Crabb were chosen to assist him. William C. Cadwell was elected secretary. A letter was read from Bro. Joseph R. Lambert, saying that he could not attend, owing to circumstances that seemed to demand his presence elsewhere. Committee of arrangements, brethren P. Cadwell, David Hall and J. C. Crabb, reported. Had selected Garner's Grove as place of meeting. Had also prepared a set of rules to govern during the meeting, which if acceptable to the body, would be posted up on the grounds, so that all might know their respective duties. They had also requested Bro. William C. Cadwell to act as marshal, and Bro. William T. Fallon as chief of police, who had consented to serve subject to the approval of the body. On motion the report was accepted, the action of the committee approved, and the committee continued during this session.

The following are the rules adopted by the committee:—"Day begins at five o'clock a. m. prayer service at half-past eight a. m. Morning service at eleven a. m. Afternoon service at half-past two p. m. Evening service at half-past seven p. m. Day closes at eleven o'clock p. m., at which time the bell will be rung. At this time it is expected that quiet will prevail until the ringing of the bell at five the next morning. The police will see that this rule is strictly observed, and enforced if necessary."

It occurred to those in attendance that these might be profitably amended by adding the following:—"Smoking and loud talking are absolutely prohibited during services, within the first row of tents. Do not stand or walk on the seats."

On the afternoon of Saturday, the 9th, a business meeting was held, and a committee of six, consisting of brethren J. W. Chatburn and W. W. Whiting of the Galland's Grove district, H. N. Hansen and C. A. Beebe of the Pottawattamie district, and P. Cadwell and J. C. Crabb of Little Sioux district, was appointed to locate and control the grounds for the next re-union, and make all necessary arrangements for the same. H. Garner and Wm. C. Cadwell were appointed a committee to take charge of the tent after its dedication, and see to its proper storage and preservation. Votes of thanks were extended to Bro. Garner for the use of the grounds; to committee of arrangements for labor performed; to tent committee for procuring the tent; to the police for the excellent order maintained; and to the various lines of railways for favors extended.

The afternoon of the first Saturday was devoted to ten minute speeches by Saints in attendance, and was occupied by brethren John A. McIntosh, W. H. Garrett, John Thomas, Joseph Luff, M. T. Short, Duncan Campbell and Charles Derry, in a profitable manner.

The morning prayer meetings were usually well attended and interesting, and some were particularly edifying. We especially note those of Thursday and Friday, October 7th and 8th, when God condescended to signally bless and comfort the assembled Saints.

Preaching services were held as follows:—Saturday evening by Joseph Luff, Sunday morning by Joseph Smith, afternoon by Charles Derry, evening by Joseph Luff. Monday morning by John A. McIntosh, afternoon by W. H. Garrett of Pittsburg, evening by J. S. Roth. Tuesday morning by Duncan Campbell, afternoon by M. T. Short, evening by W. T. Bozarth. Wednesday morning by David Chambers, afternoon by J. F. McDowell, evening by E. C. Brand. Thursday morning by Joseph Smith, afternoon by W. W. Blair, evening by J. C. Crabb. Friday morning by Bishop Blakeslee on tithing, afternoon by J. F. McDowell, evening by Charles Derry. Saturday morning by George S. Hyde, evening by Joseph Luff. Sunday morning by W. W. Blair, afternoon by Joseph Smith, evening by Joseph Luff. The sacrament of the Lord's supper was administered by Geo. A. Blakeslee and I. L. Rogers on Sunday morning.

Services were also held at Mondamin, five miles distant, Monday evening the 4th, and each succeeding evening, by brethren Hyde, Wood, Short, Brand, McDowell, Luff, Blair, Derry, and Joseph Smith; some considerable interest seemed to be manifested there.

An infant son of Bro. Alexander and Sr. Sarah Hoffman was blessed Saturday morning by Joseph Smith and J. M. Putney.

It was cheering to see so many of the old brothers and sisters present. We mention a few that came under our notice:—Sr. Sarah Hawley aged 86, Samuel Scott 86, W. Jordan 84, Caleb Streeter 84, John A. Forgeus 83, Sr. Rosanna Forgeus 82, Sr. Shaw 82, John A. McIntosh 80, Sr. D. Gamet 80, A. W. Lockling 80, Sr. Rebekah Coffman 79, J. W. Scofield 78, Almeda Vredenburg 78, Sr. A. W. Lockling 78, Sr. Caleb Streeter 78, Jacob Coffman 78, S. Mahony 77, Sallie Young 75, John Young 75. Mother Hawley had not intended to attend, but the weather was so fine, that she finally concluded to come overland about forty miles. This she did in one day, surprising every one, and with but a slight feeling of fatigue.

P. Cadwell led the following forty-two into the waters of baptism: three on Tuesday, four on Wednesday, one on Thursday, seventeen on Friday, three on Saturday, and fourteen on Sunday. Wm. Wilding, Charles Trosper, Comodore Clayton, Arthur Baker, Millie Davison, Edna Baker, Catherine Vredenburg, John Garner, Sarah Forgeus, Lew Kibler, Pearl Kibler, Silas Holeton, Rose Wood, Willie Emmerson, Minnie Ellison, Trummie Emmerson, Martha Spanswick, Thirza Chapman, Lennie Vredenburg, John A. Forgeus, Margaret Coffman, Jacob Coffman, John Coffman, Lida Kibler, Lucinda Daugherty, Bertha Morrow, Rebekah Coffman, Susan Coffman, Oswell Alexander, S. B. Kibler, Martha Holeton, Jacob Holeton, Lilly Lockling, Minnie Maule, Cora Young, Benjamin Smith, Maggie Maule, Belle Young, Cassie Dickie, Ethel Gamet, Nora Conyers, and Alice Conyers.

Of these the first twenty-six named were confirmed by J. C. Crabb; the next five, commencing with Catherine Vredenburg, were confirmed by P. Cadwell; Silas Holeton by John Hawley; Rose Wood and Willie Emmerson by John Thomas; the next six, commencing with Minnie Ellison, by Charles Derry; the next five, commencing with Margaret Coffman, by Joseph Luff; the next five, commencing with Bertha Morrow, by W. W. Blair; Martha Holeton by G. A. Blakeslee; the next four, commencing with Jacob Holeton, by E. C. Brand; the next four, commencing with Benjamin Smith, by J. F. McDowell; and the last three by M. T. Short.

The weather was all that could be desired. The grounds were in splendid condition and well arranged, and all seemed to enjoy themselves. Father Enoch Hunt's sickness prevented his large circle of friends from getting the full benefit of the meeting, and Bro. Duncan Campbell was called home on Tuesday by sickness in his family. Otherwise, health and comfort seemed to prevail.

An immense concourse, variously estimated at from five to six thousand, were on the grounds on the last Sunday, and probably not less than twenty-five hundred were assembled at the place of baptism, to witness that rite on Sunday.

W. C. CADWELL.

NOTICE.

Be it known that Abbie A. Stevens, Carrie S. Rogers and C. Louise Edwards, have been dismissed from the Plainville branch, Massachusetts, and are no longer in fellowship with or members of this branch.

MARRIED.

POE.—ALFORD. DRAKE—POE.—At the residence of Mr. Alford, near Tulare City, California, October 13th, 1886, Priest W. N. Dawson joined in marriage Mr. John W. Poe and Miss Julia Alford, also Mr. Charles B. Drake and Miss Mary Poe, in the presence of many of their relations and friends.

DIED.

CRAIG.—July 16th, 1886, of diphtheria, Luther R., fifth son of Elder James and Sr. Sarah J. Craig, aged 5 years, 11 months, and 10 days. Buried at Rock Hill, Belmont county, Ohio. Funeral services by Rev. J. G. Black, of the Presbyterian Church.

WIXOM.—Bro. Philetus S. Wixom passed peacefully away September 26th, 1886, aged 79 years, 3 months, and 25 days. He united with the church April 12th, 1864, at Amboy, Illinois. Funeral service was held in the Saints' Chapel in Sandwich, Illinois, by Elder W. Vickery. His remains were laid to rest in the Asbury Cemetery.

RAINEY.—George, third son of Bro. W. J. and Sr. Rainey of St. Mary's, Ontario, aged 9 years and 4 months. Funeral sermon to be preached at St. Mary's, Ontario, Sunday, October 17th, 1886, by Elder J. A. McIntosh.

COSSER.—Sister Isabelle Cosser was born the 11th of April, 1801, at Loves Hill, near Edinburgh, Scotland; was baptized and confirmed April 6th, 1862, by Elder Forbes, at the place of her birth; was received into the Reorganized Church Sunday, May 18th, 1884, on her original baptism, and died at Mottsville, Nevada, of old age, October 7th, 1886, and was buried in Genoa Cemetery. She came from Utah to Carson Valley, Nevada, in 1852. She leaves a son and daughter to mourn her loss.

SUMMERFIELD.—At Platte City, Missouri, July 7th, 1886, Willie E., only son of brother William D. and sister Sarah E. Summerfield, aged 1 year, 9 months, and 7 days.

EDGINGTON.—At Salt Lake City, Utah, July 2d, 1883, of abscess on the right lung, Bro. W. Wm. Edgington.

FITTON.—At New Bedford, Mass., October 6th, 1886, of Bright's disease of the kidneys, after much suffering, sister Mary J. Fitton, aged 28 years. Funeral service, October 9th, was conducted by Elder John Smith. The house was filled with sympathizing relatives and friends, and the floral gifts to deck her grave were many. She leaves a husband, and two small children, who sorely need a mother's love and care. "At the resurrection morning we shall all appear as one."

New Fast Line to St. Paul and Minneapolis.

Beginning Sunday, October 31, 1886, a New Fast Line to St. Paul and Minneapolis will be opened from Chicago, Peoria and St. Louis, via the "Burlington Route,"—Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad,—in connection with the newly-completed Chicago, Burlington & Northern Railroad. Over it a double service of through trains will be run, making as fast time as is made over any other line between the same points.

The new and elegant equipment composing these trains, which was constructed especially for service on this new line, will include Pullman Sleepers, "Burlington Route" Dining Cars and comfortable Passenger Coaches. From both Chicago and St. Louis through Coaches, Dining Cars, and Sleeping Cars will be run; and from Peoria, through Coaches, connecting at Rio with the through equipment from St. Louis.

For tickets, rates, and general information concerning the "new fast line" to St. Paul and Minneapolis, via the Burlington Route, call on or address any Railroad Ticket Agent, or Paul Morton, G. P. and T. A., C., B. & Q. R. R., Chicago.

POMPOUS.

MODESTY is an attribute of true greatness, and men of real learning are never pompous. Any freckled and saturnine school-boy can ask questions that it would puzzle a ten-volume encyclopaedia to answer; and confusion is apt to overtake the individual who tries to impress his hearers with the false idea that he "knows everything in all the books."

A story is told of a certain bishop who addressed a large assembly of Sunday School children and wound up by asking, in a very paternal and condescending way, "And now, is there a-a-n-y little boy or a-a-n-y little girl who would like to ask me a question?"

After a pause he repeated the question, "Is there a-a-n-y little boy or a-a-n-y little girl who would like to ask me a question?"

A little shrill voice called out, "Please, sir, why did the angels walk up and down Jacob's ladder when they had wings?"

"Oh, ah, yes, I see," said the bishop. "And now, is there a-a-n-y little boy or a-a-n-y little girl who would like to answer little Mary's question?"

A CURE FOR HYDROPHOBIA.

"HYDROPHOBIA can be prevented, and I will give what is an infallible remedy, if properly administered for man or beast. A dose for a horse or cow should be about four times as great as for a person. It is not too late to give medicine any time before spasms come on. The first dose for a person is one and one-half ounces of eiecampane root, bruised, put in a pint of new milk, reduced to one-half by boiling, then taken all at one dose in the morning, fasting until afternoon, or at least a very light diet after several hours have elapsed. The second dose the same as the first, except take two ounces of the root; third dose same as last, to be taken every other day. Three doses are all that is needed, and there need be no fear. This I know from my own experience, and I know of a number of other cases where it has been entirely successful. This is no guess-work. Those persons I allude to were bitten by their own dogs, that had been bitten by rabid dogs, and were penned up to see if they would go mad; they did go mad, and did bite the persons. This remedy has been used in and about Philadelphia for forty years, and longer, with great success, and is known as the Goodman remedy. I am acquainted with the physician who told me that he knew of its use for more than thirty years, but never knew a case that failed where it was properly administered. Among other cases he mentioned was one where a number of cows had been bitten by a mad dog. To half of this number they administered this remedy, to the other half not. The latter all died of hydrophobia, while those that took the eiecampane and milk showed no sign of disease."

That fearful malady being greatly, on the increase of late years, and this cure being simple and easily procured (if good and effectual), it would be a pity it should be lost in obscurity.

HUGH BRADY.

THE NEW VERSION.

SOME idea of the number of copies of the new version of the Old Testament which have and are being printed can be gathered from the following, which was published in The Pall Mall Gazette:

"At the Oxford university's own paper mill 375 tons of rags have been consumed in making 250 tons of paper for the issue of the revised version. It would cover two and a quarter square miles. It would go around the world in a strip of six inches wide, or, say, if the pages were laid open one after another, it would go round the world. The sheets piled in reams as they leave the mill would make a column ten times the height of St. Paul's, or folded into books before binding at least 100 times the height.

"The copies which are being prepared by the Oxford University press alone would, if piled flat one upon another, make a column more than fourteen miles high, or 370 times the height of the monument. If piled end on end they would reach seventy-four miles high, or 1,943 times the height of the monument. It is hardly possible to give an idea of the number of goats and sheep whose skins have been required for binding the copies, but it has been calculated that 1,560 goat skins have been used in binding the copies which were presented to the American committee of revision on the 21st ult. A special act of congress was passed to admit these copies in the United States free of duty."

IS IT SO ABSURD?

DOUBTLESS the Saints will remember that in a late issue of the HERALD we gave what was claimed to be a screed from the "Ancient of Days," at the same time making the statement that we neither endorsed the communication, nor the presumed source whence it came. We did not suppose that there could be found a person so stupid as would seriously assume that we were responsible for it, or were in anyway compromised in its authorship, after the statement that we made in regard to it. But to our surprise, the next issue of the Deseret News contained the following:

"AN ABSURD ASSERTION.

"In a late issue of the Saints' Herald, the organ of the "Josephites," appears an article purporting to be an inspired warning to the people of Utah, of which this is the closing sentence:

"The world shall not hate you if you do not steal from the world.

"This is a most extraordinary assertion for a religious writer to make, and its character as such is greatly enhanced by the fact that it comes from a person, and is published in a paper, that claim to sustain Joseph Smith as a prophet of God. A great mystery is now explained; the reason why the world hated Joseph the Seer, is because he stole from the world! The reason why the Savior was crucified and his disciples were murdered—the conclusion inevitably to be drawn from the words of this writer is too infamous for further expression. What person is too blind to perceive the source of inspiration to which such warnings and teachings as those promulgated by the writer and publication referred to owe their origin?"

The News must be seriously at a disadvantage for just defence against the legitimate attacks of the organ of the church upon the peculiar institution of Utah religionists, when it resorts to such a method to prejudice the minds of its readers against the Josephites. If the News had been moved by the spirit of fairness, why did it not attack the substance of the purported message from the "Ancient of Days," giving the HERALD credit for the statement made by us that being acquainted with the person by whom it was furnished us, we were "free to present the article without in any wise endorsing it, or the manner in which it is said to have been given." It would almost seem that the News and those who write for it have so long been accustomed to cry "devil," "devil," "evil spirit," "spirit of the devil," at those who may choose to differ from them and refuse to accept the philosophy and alleged origin of plural marriage, that they can not examine what is presented to them upon its direct merits, but must needs attempt to dispose of it by crying, "you are of the devil," at those who present it. Can the News forget that the preceding lines of the paragraph from which it quotes were, "Give unto Cæsar that which is Cæsar's, and render unto God that which is God's."

The News tries to blind its readers to the real issue joined between the two churches; but it does not require the vision of a Daniel to predict that the time will come when those now so prevented from hearing us will demand the right to such hearing; and when that time shall come, and we are permitted to go directly to the people we shall be content, no matter what the result may be.

MAJORITIES SHOULD RULE.

THE Salt Lake Herald of October 9th, reviewing an article in the Tribune from the pen of O. J. Hollister, has the following:

"Whatever powers the Constitution has conferred upon the government, it may freely use. If the Constitution has expressly given to the government the power to regulate marriage and divorce, as it has to declare war, to raise and support armies, to provide and maintain a navy, or to establish postoffices, then it may enact such laws on marriage as it may deem most proper. But if that power is not granted to government, then it is an unqualified assumption of power—if Congress undertakes to exercise it—it is usurpation that every citizen who reveres the Constitution of his country should resist. For upon the inviolate preservation of that instrument depends the perpetuation of our free institutions. But as there is no grant of power given to the general government over marriage or divorce, either expressly or that may be implied, government has no right either in a State or Territory, to break up whatever domestic relations may be established by the local governments either in States or Territories. And for that reason we hold that government has no right to meddle with the domestic concerns of the people of Utah."

This is Brighamism in a nutshell. It is in effect the claim that a small portion of the nation is greater than the whole, that a small portion of the citizens of our nation can and may adopt "domestic concerns" and "domestic relations," however repugnant to the sense and interests of the masses, and yet the masses have no legal, rightful remedy, but must submit to this small fraction of the nation who outrage their sense of purity and decency and menace what are accepted as the dearest, most valued institutions of the land—the monogamous home and family. This theory is the fungus of perverted "squatter sovereignty," and would put to shame its fondest advocates. If this theory were true, our national government were little better than the servant-slave—of cranky minorities, from the Oneida Perfectionists and their kind, to the Utah polygamists.

The Constitution provides that, "Congress shall have power to dispose of, and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States." Utah is the "territory" of the nation, and Congress holds the right to "make all needful rules and regulations respecting" it. Utah has upon her statute books no law providing for marriage nor in any sense regulating it; but has denied the wife the right of dower.

If Congress has not the right to "make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory" embraced in Utah, then that right is lost; for the Constitution further provides that, "The powers not delegated to the United States [the Nation] by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people," [of the Nation]. Utah is not a State; and the only legal rights the people of that territory may enjoy are those delegated to them by the Nation. It is folly for a territory to claim for itself the rights and powers belonging to states.

Besides this, the genius of our national government is such that, if even a State adopts what is repugnant to the common interests of the Nation at large, then the Nation has the right to demand the needed reform. The interests of the body are paramount to those of any part of it. While minorities have rights, majorities must rule in Republics. "A government of the people, by the people, and for the people," means that the people, through their majorities, are the source of government, and that their will, regularly expressed, must be honored and obeyed.

Joseph the Seer, whom the Utah leaders profess to revere, held the following in respect to the superior authority and power of the people of the United States and their Congress; "The power not delegated to the United States, and the States, belongs to the people, and Congress, to do the people's business, has all power."

If the Utah leaders would bear these facts in mind, teach them to their tried and troubled people, the evils that encompass them would vanish away, and light and joy and gladness would bless them, and the Church of Christ and the Nation.

THE Supreme Court of Idaho, Judge Hays presiding, has decided that the law of that Territory called the "test oath law," which discriminates against polygamists is constitutional. Of the ruling of the Judge, the Utah Journal thus discourses:

"It is sad news, that which comes from Idaho regarding the ruling of a Democratic Judge on the test oath law. Judge Hayes has decided it to be constitutional. He has played into the hands of the Republicans, and Idaho is lost. A blow has been struck at the Republic by one who should have been one of her staunchest friends. The right of religious liberty has been trampled upon and there is reason for sorrow in the hearts of lovers of American institutions. This is no idle thing, it is a truth too true. Idaho is gradually going into the hands of foes to good government. The Democrats of the Territory have paid little heed to the warning voice which has sounded in their ears. They have allowed the whimperings of the bigotted to turn them from Democracy unto fables, and soon the places which they should have filled, will be occupied by the carpet baggers and schemers for personal advancement regardless of the Territory's interest.

"The affliction will be a severe one for the good citizens of Idaho will have the fact to console them that they have brought the trouble upon themselves. It is a burning disgrace that a man who would rule the test oath law constitutional should wear the judicial ermine. Were the founders of the Republic and the originators of the Constitution permitted to see this day, mortification would cloud their brows."

Of the same decision the Salt Lake Tribune of October 21st, says:

"The decision of Judge Hayes as to the Constitutionality of the test-oath law will cause rejoicing in every loyal home in Idaho and Utah, and will be received with thanksgivings everywhere that the true intent of Mormonism is known. It is, we believe, sound law, that no higher court will ever overthrow. Under it, if it shall be thoroughly enforced, Idaho will this year poll only her American vote, and there is good cause for rejoicing."

And from the same issue of the Tribune we clip the following:

"As election in Idaho approaches, the people there grow more and more anxious about the final decision in the test-oath case. We know what programme was fixed up, but we have every faith in Judge Hays. If he is not a straight man, then there is nothing in a man's face, and if he decides that the law in his judgment, is not constitutional, we shall still think he is an honest man. We believe that he has received a thousand indirect hints that it would please one faction of his party, that led by Hailey, Ainsley & Co., if he could find reasons for defeating the law, but those things do not count with judges who appreciate their place as Judge Hays does. If the decision is to be in favor of the validity of the law it can not come too quick; if it is to be the other way—well, no matter. The law reads as follows:

"You do solemnly swear (or affirm) that you are a male citizen of the United States, over the age of twenty-one years; that you have actually resided in this Territory for four months last past and in this county thirty days; that you are not a bigamist or polygamist; that you are not a member of any order, organization or association which teaches, advises, counsels or encourages its members, devotees or any other persons, to commit the crime of bigamy or polygamy or any other crime defined by law as a duty arising or resulting from membership in such order, organization or association, or which practices bigamy or polygamy or plural or celestial marriage, as a doctrinal rite of such organization. That you do not, either publicly or privately or in any manner whatever, teach, advise, counsel or encourage any person to commit the crime of bigamy or polygamy, or any other crime defined by law, either as a religious duty or otherwise; that you regard the Constitution of the United States and the laws thereof, and of this Territory as interpreted by the courts, as the supreme law of the land, the teachings of any order, organization or association to the contrary, notwithstanding, and that you have not previously voted at this election. So help you God."

WE gather the following statements from the report of Governor Caleb W. West, of Utah, to Hon. L. Q. Lamar, Secretary of the Interior, of the United States:

There are fourteen breweries in the Territory; four being at Salt Lake City, two at Ogden, two at Logan, and one at each of the following places: Park City, Corrinne, Sandy, Murray, Thistle and Silver Reef. For the year ending June 30th, 1886, 24,688 barrels of malt liquors were manufactured at a total cost of $291,678. All this may have been made and drank by Gentiles, we suppose, but it does not so appear. There were 61,745 bushels of malt used during the year, or 1,050 tons.

The population of the Territory is rated at 150,000, and the yearly ratio of consumption of these malt liquors is nearly $3.00 each. If the Gentiles only drink this liquor, as the Mormon population is said by Gov. West to be five sixths of the whole, then 25,000 people average about a barrel of liquor each per year at a cost of $11 per head. There were 15,000 tons of salt made, worth three dollars per ton. There were 450,000 cattle and 1,100,000 sheep; 7,000,000 lbs wool, worth 20 cents per pound as compared with 1884, when there were 6,250,000 lbs, worth 16 cents. Of polygamy the Governor says:

"The all absorbing question in this Territory, dominating all others; hurtfully affecting its prosperity, and impending its advancement, and disturbing the quiet and hopefulness of its people, and the one question of the utmost concern and solicitude to the whole country, is the attitude of defiance assumed and maintained by the Mormon people, who probably are five sixths of the whole population, to the law of Congress for the suppression of polygamy, known as 'the Edmunds law.'

"In all questions affecting the Mormon Church and people, the polygamists and monogamists, Mormons, make common cause, stand together and are united. They maintain publicly through their leaders and teachers, in their houses of worship, through the press, and privately, in social and in business circles, that the law is infamous; and interference with and a denial to them of their religious freedom, guaranteed to all by the Constitution; of their right and religious duty, continue, in violation of the law, their polygamous relations. They deny the authority of Congress to regulate and interpose any restrictions as to the marital relations. That the obligations which they owe and will cheerfully render to a power higher than any earthly power, compels them to exercise their religious rights and privileges in the face of and in violation of the law; that they are prepared to, and will, if required of them, sacrifice their personal comfort, their property, suffer indefinite imprisonment, and surrender life itself, rather than yield and promise obedience to the law, and forego the privileges they claim.

"The Government can have and hold but one position towards this people, which is of easy statement: Its authority must be respected, its laws must be obeyed."

Of eighty-one persons at present inmates of the Insane Asylum, fifty-three are of foreign birth. And of ninety-three convictions under the law for the suppression of polygamy fifty-eight are of foreign birth.

Of the state of feeling in the Territory, he says:

"I know of no armed organization for the purpose of opposing the lawful authorities, or resisting the enforcement of the laws, nor do I believe any such now exists.

"The process of the courts is met with no physical resistance, and society is peaceable, and no outbreaks have occurred since I came to the Territory. It is true, however, that a large majority of the people stoutly and stubbornly affirm, publicly and privately, that the enforcement of certain laws is destructive of their rights as freemen, an assault upon their religion, and an invasion upon the sanctity of their homes.

"The minority, with equal vigor and openness, proclaim that the practices of the people are immoral, that they are disloyal to the Government, and that their attitude of defiance of the laws, interferes with the advancement and prosperity of the Territory, and inflicts injury upon all of its interests.

"It follows, necessarily, that the people here, with a bitterness of feeling, are divided as they are nowhere else in the country. The division is clear, distinct and palpable. The causes of the division, in language not distinguished for its mildness, are constantly, earnestly and vehemently discussed through the press, the houses of worship, courthouses, hotels, business places, on the streets and in the social circle, engendering an intense feeling of bitterness.

"The vigorous enforcement of the unpopular laws against the people in the majority, with a prospect of further stringent legislation, does not tend to soothe or to make them more amiable. Under the favorable conditions existing for such a result, an outbreak of violence might be easily provoked."

He recommends the changing of the law to provide that the Marshal shall receive a salary of $5,000 per year, with two assistants, also salaried, one at $2,000 and one at $1,800; with power to appoint others if needed; the necessity to be determined by a Board consisting of the Governor, the Justices of the Supreme Court and the District attorney; compensation to be for actual service at $4.00 per day and expenses. There are other matters upon which the Governor reports; but he closes with:

"I feel a great regret that a great majority of this people will not, or can not see their way to respect and obey the laws. The sufferings and sorrows they bring upon themselves as individuals and as a people, are a source of profound sorrow."

BRO. RICHARD COBURN of Blenheim, Ontario, writes us October 22d and says:

"I send you a piece cut out of the Weekly Mail, printed in Toronto, containing the minutes of the General Conference of the Methodist Church, being part of the report of a committee appointed to revise the Discipline of that church. They will surely need a new Bible soon."

Here is the clipping:

"The committee also recommended that the passages from Romans 6: 3, 4, and Colossians 2: 12, be eliminated from the baptismal service, as they do not refer to water baptism, and are therefore misleading in the connection in which they are now used. Carried."

This is not a very cunning move when seeking to evade Bible proofs of water baptism by immersion. It is in effect, a bold, bald rejection of the plain statements of the apostle Paul as to the manner in which the saints had been "baptized" into and "planted together" with Christ.

These Methodists repudiate the teachings of the founder of their church, John Wesley, for he says of Rom. 6: 4,—"Buried with him, alluding to the ancient manner of baptizing by immersion." But it is not singular that the Methodists now should turn away from the teachings of the founders of their church, for such things are true of all other churches, including that of Christ in ancient times in Asia, Africa, Europe and America; and it is also true of the Church of Christ restored in this age.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

SR. FRANCIS, of the Hope, says:

"We acknowledge through the Herald the many services, most willingly rendered us, in our efforts for the advancement of the Hope's interest. Brethren and sisters, young and old, have responded with a zeal and alacrity sufficient to insure (with the added blessing of God) the success of any cause. Our labors are to the same end, but we feel just as grateful as though each favor had been a personal one. Bro. Garner of Santa Ana, California, sends us to-day $1.05, the proceeds of the sale of seven copies of the Voice of Warning. This is the first fruits of Bro. Peters' generous offer to the Sunday School. He offered 1,000 copies, and if seven copies bring $1.05, we wish some if not all of our large and flourishing Sunday Schools would do a little figuring, and see how much they might help the cause by circulating these books."

Bro. William Hart, of Oakland, California, writes us October 11th:

"Our late conference here was a grand success; everything passed off harmoniously, and every one present felt the convicting influence of the Holy Spirit, and we all had a season of rejoicing. Our branch is more united than I have ever seen it before, and the Lord is opening the way for us to obtain a house of worship of our own. We hope some of our rich brothers and sisters will render us a little assistance, for they will lose nothing by it."

Bro. R. J. Anthony writes from Salt Lake City, Utah, October 21st:

"We had a very pleasant time at our conference last Saturday and Sunday, at Oxford, Idaho. We baptized two, and from indications think others will obey ere long. Bro. J. C. Clapp and myself came here last Tuesday evening, and found brethren P. Anderson and John Larson in the city. Bro. Larson has baptized four since I went north, and some have been added at Pleasant Grove."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

BRO. D. S. MILLS writes from Santa Ana, California, October 20th, that they had a most successful conference at their last session; six were baptized by himself and three by Bro. John Brush, on Sunday. Bro. Mills reports increased activity on the part of several of the Elders, and that they were to have more help this winter in the field. Bro. Heman C. Smith was expected in November. Of the spirit which prevailed during the conference on Sunday, Bro. John Garner, a Saint of many years' standing, stated: "It is the same voice and power of '43 and '44; I have seen nothing like it since; have hoped for it and now we have it."

By letter from Bro. John A. Robinson, dated October 20th, we learn that he is now returned from Texas and the South, in good health and spirits, and was at Peoria, Illinois, when writing.

We notice with regret that Bro. A. J. Cato, who has been so long preaching in the South, has lost his wife and child, by death; truly whom he loveth he chasteneth. Bro. Cato seems to have a share of this world's sorrow.

Bro. John C. Foss baptized two at Frieberg, Minnesota, on the 10th October, and expected more on the 17th.

The address of Bro. William Rumell, president of the Northern Nebraska district is 2224 Clark street, instead of 1433 Eighteenth street, Omaha, as heretofore. Please remember this all who have occasion to write him, or who desire to consult him in regard to district work.

We will publish presently what purports to be the latest statement of David Whitmer of Richmond, Missouri, in respect to Joseph the Seer, the church, etc., and append to it such notes as we think just and proper. If this last interviewer has quoted Mr. Whitmer correctly, (which we fear he has not), then he has the fault of stating the same things in different and contradictory ways. This we deeply regret.

By letter from D. H. Blair of October 25th, we learn the recently organized Sunday School at St. Joseph, Missouri, is increasing, and promises well.

Bro. M. T. Short wrote from Persia, Iowa, October 25th:—"I have good houses every night. Baptized four at Galland's Grove on the 17th;" and he orders books, tracts, etc., sent to him at Iowa City.

Bro. W. H. Jemmett, of St. Louis, Missouri, writes Bro. D. Dancer:—"Never stop the HERALD; for I love its pages. It is rich food for me."

We see by an incidental letter from Whitcomb, Wisconsin, that Bro. J. M. Wait is still doing something in the way of helping his fellowmen to see the way of life. May he increase in knowledge and grace as his years grow apace.

Bro. John B. Knowlton writes from Green's Landing, Maine, October 16th. They have a branch there of thirty members, somewhat scattered, though they have meetings each Sabbath. The travelling Elders call on them occasionally. Brn. Bond, Sheehy and Green have been there of late, and good has resulted therefrom. The Union Church in that place was refused to brethren Sheehy and Kelley, but it resulted well in the end.

Bro. D. E. Hough, of Port Carling, Ontario, says:—"The HERALD, I think is growing better all the time. It is a great reviver as it comes in its weekly visits."

A Sr. Polly Noble of Dresden Centre, Washington County, New York, sends for the HERALD and asks that if any of the Elders pass near there they should call on herself and husband and find a home while preaching the word.

Bro. F. C. Warnky writes from Independence, Missouri, October 26th, that he had lately delivered six lectures in Clinton, Missouri, with "excellent congregations and fair liberty in speaking and the assurance that good was accomplished, and am now to hold a week's meeting at Armstrong, Kansas."

WHILE at Keokuk, Iowa, this last summer, we picked up a Gate City, Keokuk paper, and tore out of it the following choice bit. To make it entirely intelligible to all our readers, we have only to state that Park Bluff is a new religious resort lately located just south of Montrose, Iowa, and opposite to Nauvoo; and that Major Bidamon is our step-father. The squib illustrates how easily men may be duped. Some of the reverend gentlemen will undoubtedly depart, tell the story as Bidamon tells it, give it the appearance of truth, and give him as their veracious informant. Selah.

"A NAUVOO SINNER.

"West Point Appeal: Major Bidamon of Nauvoo, married the widow of Joseph Smith, the Mormon prophet. Nauvoo is historical ground,

It is visited by newspaper correspondents, statesmen, historians, relic hunters, and all manner of people, seeking information in regard to the Mormons. Whenever a party of visitors strike the town they are sent to Bidamon. Now, we are not very well posted in Mormon history, but we know Bidamon like a book. He is always loaded with big yarns and the visitors get them all. He tells them that he will be 90 years of age if he lives until the 30th of next February; shows them the red bat; describes the wonderful tunnel under the river from the Mansion House to Montrose; shows them the secret or hidden chamber wherein was placed the body of the murdered prophet, etc., etc. He has been telling these stories every week for twenty years, and many of his victims accept them for truth. He is fond of fun, and he is having considerable of it just at the present time in stuffing people who come over from Park Bluff."

CRITICISM.

WE see that Bro. W. A., whoever that may be, has an article in the Expositor for October, in which our answer to the question about healing, in the HERALD for August 14th is rather severely handled. We do not object to just criticism, but certainly think that W. A. has dealt very unfairly with our answer. In the first place he gives the words, "to be nursed and doctored with mild herds," as having been quoted by us from the law; and he so treats our answer, as is seen from the statement by him, "But why is it that in speaking of the ordinance of healing of the sick, that the true constitution, as well as the correct quotation of the law is not given?" If W. A. will put on a clean pair of spectacles and turn to the answer given by us he will find that the only words attempted to be quoted from the law by us were the two words, "mild herbs." As these are the only words quoted in our answer as from the law it will be very gratifying to us; and perhaps instructive to many not so experienced as Bro. W. A.; if he will point out how and why this is an incorrect quotation; or as he puts it "were intentionally quoted wrong."

No attempt was made by us to teach in the answer what was, or was not the method, or methods of healing held or taught by the church; but our answer was as to the supposed qualification of an Elder as a representative of the church, who did not have "faith in the method" of laying on of hands for the healing of the sick.

After writing referring to the question and stating that an Elder of this kind might possibly be of the sort referred to in the the Doctrine and Covenants who "had not faith to be healed," (quoting from sec. 42, par. 12), but are permitted to be nursed and doctored with "mild herbs." We marked the words "mild herbs;" and this is our offense in misquoting if we offended at all. The sentence reads: "And whosoever among you are sick, and have not faith to be healed, but believe, shall be nourished with all tenderness with herbs and mild food, and that not by the hand of an enemy."

This statement from the law is even stronger than we put it in our answer, for we stated that such as those who had not faith might be nursed and doctored with "mild herbs;" the law says such shall be "nourished" with herbs and mild food." We may have erred in prefixing the word "mild" to "herbs" instead of putting it "herbs and mild food;" thus giving one who might choose to do so to infer that the "food" should be "mild," but the "herbs" be strong, or raging.

How it is that the statement made by us can be so assailed by Bro. W. A., and stated to be "erroneous doctrines," as he has called them by implication in his question: "Why is it that such erroneous doctrines are taught relative to the treatment of the sick;" is more than we can understand when, at the close of that answer so charged as teaching "erroneous doctrines," we stated in reference to the very Elder referred to as not having faith in the method of healing the sick by the laying on of hands, "such a man could not truly say that he represented the church, for the church does have "faith in the method, as stated in the word." Why did not Bro. W. A. give this last and definite statement in our answer its proper place in this article of criticism, instead of drawing an inference from a part of that answer that the answer taken as a whole will not bear. Brethren, please turn to that August 14th HERALD, and read again: "All we could do would be to say such a man (one who did not believe in the method of healing by the laying on of hands) would hardly labor successfully among Latter Day Saints, for they would as a rule have no confidence in his standing with God." Is not that a full recognition of the faith of the church and the fact that the method is from God?

We did not teach any other method of healing as a doctrine of the church than the laying on of hands, either intentionally or unintentionally; such teaching is not there.

The Doctrine and Covenants does not specify the herbs to be used, and it would be as fair to suppose that Bro. W. A. would have the herbs to be strong because he faults us for calling them "mild," as it was for him to infer that we misquoted the law to teach erroneous doctrine. And in his attempt to set right what he assumes was wrong in us, he quotes: "and the Elders of the church, two or more, shall be called, and shall pray for, and lay their hands upon them in my name;" but fails to add what follows in the sentence after the semi-colon; "and if they die, they shall die unto me, and if they live, they shall live unto me;" which shows that unto those thus administered unto, the promise that "they shall recover," does not apply; as it does in the case of those who "have faith to be healed."

The faith and teaching of the church, so far as we are acquainted with them, are that the laying on of hands is appointed unto the church, the believer, as the method of healing; our answer in HERALD of August 14th so holds, and so we believe. But while so believing, the law referred to by Bro. W. A. certainly recognizes that there may be those who have not faith to be healed; and permits that such may be nursed and doctored ("nourished by mild food and herbs") with "herbs," (mild or strong) while submitting to the ordinance that the law may be honored; and this too without doing violence to the teaching of James 5: 14, 15. The Book of Mormon, Alma 21: 16, clearly indicates the condition and character of believers of this kind, as seen from the following: "And there were some who died with fevers, which at some seasons of the year were very frequent in the land; but not so much so with fevers, because of the excellent qualities of the many plants and roots which God had prepared, to remove the cause of diseases to which men were subject by the nature of the climate." Of those thus dying, it it may have been said, as in Doctrine and Covenants 42: 12, they "die unto the Lord," or "live unto the Lord;" for the statement is made: "And it came to pass that there were many who died, firmly believing that their souls were redeemed by the Lord Jesus Christ; thus they went out of the world rejoicing."—Alma 21: 16.

In Doctrine and Covenants, we find that which agrees with the foregoing, and given directly to the church: "And again, verily I say unto you, all wholesome herbs God hath ordained for the constitution, nature, and use of man, every herb in the season thereof, and every fruit in the season thereof. All these to be used with prudence and thanksgiving."—86: 2.

In conclusion; if we wrote so loosely and ambiguously in our answer in HERALD August 14th referred to, that the inference Bro. W. A. draws may have been drawn by others, and the faith of the church misrepresented, we are sorry; and while we think our answer was not interpreted fairly by the writer in the Expositor, we shall profit by the criticism without prejudice to Bro. W. A.

PERSECUTION AND ITS CAUSES.

FROM what we have already seen we learn the important fact, that when the Saints were violently persecuted they appealed to the civil authorities for protection and redress; and that in the Jackson County Missouri afflictions, they were advised by Governor Dunklin and the Attorney General of the State to appeal to the courts for relief; also that this orderly, reasonable, and lawful course served only to excite and intensify the hate of the mobbers and move them to further villainous deeds, as will be seen by the following:

"The same evening, November 4th, not being satisfied with breaking open the store of Gilbert & Whitney, and demolishing a part of the dwelling house of said Gilbert, the Friday night previous, they permitted the said McCarty, who was detected on Friday night as one of the breakers of the store doors, to take out a warrant and arrest the said Gilbert and others of the church for a pretended assault and false imprisonment of the said McCarty. Late in the evening, while the court was proceeding with their trial in the court house, a gentleman unconnected with the court, as was believed, perceiving the prisoners to be without counsel and in imminent danger, advised said Gilbert and his brethren to go to jail as the only alternative to save life, for the north door was already barred, and an infuriated mob thronged the house with a determination to beat and kill; but through the interposition of this gentleman, (Samuel C. Owens, Clerk of the County Court, whose name will appear more fully hereafter), said Gilbert and four of his brethren were committed to the county jail of Jackson county, the dungeon of which must have been a palace compared to a court room where dignity and mercy were strangers, and nought but the wrath of man in horrid threats stifled the ears of the prisoners.

The same night the prisoners, Gilbert, Morley and Corrill were liberated from jail that they might have an interview with their brethren, and try to negotiate some measures for peace; and on their return to jail about two o'clock Tuesday morning, in custody of the deputy Sheriff, an armed force of six or seven men stood near the jail and hailed them. They were answered by the Sheriff, who gave his name, and the names of his prisoners, crying, 'don't fire, don't fire, the prisoners are in my charge,' &c. They however fired one or two guns, when Morley and Corrill retreated; but Gilbert stood with several guns presented at him, firmly held by the sheriff. Two, more desperate than the rest, attempted to shoot; but one of their guns flashed, and the other missed fire. Gilbert was then knocked down by Thomas Wilson, a grocer in the village. About this time a few of the inhabitants arrived, and Gilbert again entered jail, from which he, with three of his brethren, were liberated about sunrise without further prosecution of the trial. Wm E. McLellan was one of the prisoners.

On the morning of the 5th of November the village began to be crowded with individuals from different parts of the county, with guns, &c., and report said the militia had been called out under the sanction or instigation of Lieut. Gov. Boggs and that one Col. Pitcher had the command. Among this militia, (so called), were embodied the most conspicuous characters of the mob, and it may truly be said that the appearance of the ranks of this body was well calculated to excite suspicions of their horrible designs. Very early on the same morning several branches of the church received intelligence that a number of their brethren were in prison and the determination of the mob was to kill them; and that the branch of the church near the village of Independence was in imminent danger, as the main body of the mob were gathered at that place.

"In this critical situation, about one hundred of the saints from different branches volunteered for the protection of their brethren near Independence, and proceeded on the road towards Independence and halted about one mile west of the village where they awaited further information concerning the movements of the mob. They soon learned that the prisoners were not massacred, and that the mob had not fallen upon the branch of the church near Independence as was expected. They were also informed that the militia had been called out for their protection; but in this they placed but little confidence, for the body congregated had every appearance of a county mob, which subsequent events fully verified in a majority of said body, "On application to Col. Pitcher, it was found that there was no alternative but for the church to leave the county forthwith and deliver into his hands certain men, to be tried for murder said to have been committed by them in the battle the evening before. The arms of the saints were also demanded by Col. Pitcher. Among the committee appointed to receive the arms of the church were several of the most unrelenting of the old July mob committee, who had directed in the demolishing of the printing office and the personal injuries of that day, viz: Henry Chiles, Abner Staples, and Lewis Franklin, who have not ceased to pursue the saints from the first to the last with feelings of the most hostile kind. These unexpected requisitions of the Colonel made him appear like one standing at the head of civil and military law, taking a stretch beyond the constitutional limits of our Republic.

"Rather than have submitted to these unreasonable requirements, the saints would have cheerfully shed their blood in defense of their rights, the liberties of their country, and of their wives and children; but the fear of violating law in resisting this pretended militia and the flattering assurances of protection and honorable usage promised by Lieut. Governor Boggs, in whom they had reposed confidence up to this period, induced them to submit, believing that he did not tolerate so gross a violation of all law as has been practised in Jackson county. But the great change that may appear to some, in the views, designs, and craft of this man to rob an innocent people of their arms by stratagem and leave more than one thousand defenseless men, women, and children to be driven from their homes, among strangers in a strange land of, to appearances, barbarians, to seek a shelter from the stormy blast of winter's cold embrace, is so glaringly exposed in the sequel that all earth and hell can not deny that a baser knave, a greater traitor, and a more wholesale butcher or murderer of mankind never went untried, unpunished and unhung; as hanging is the popular method of execution among the Gentiles, in all countries professing christianity, instead of blood for blood according to the law of heaven.

"The conduct of Colonels Lucas and Pitcher had long proven them to be open and avowed enemies. Both of these men had their names attached to the mob circular as early as July last, the object of which was to drive the saints from Jackson county. With assurances from the Lieutenant Governor and others that the object was to disarm the combatants on both sides, and that peace would be the result, the brethren surrendered their arms to the number of fifty or upwards; and the men present, who were accused of being in the battle the evening before gave themselves up for trial. After detaining them one day and a night on a pretended trial for murder, in which they were threatened, brickbatted, &c., Col. Pitcher, after receiving a watch of one of the prisoners to satisfy costs, &c., took them into a corn-field and said to them, 'clear.'

"After the surrender of their arms, which were used only in self-defense, the neighboring tribes of Indians in time of war let loose upon the women and children could not have appeared more hideous and terrific than did the companies of ruffians who went in various directions well armed, on foot and on horseback, bursting into houses without fear, knowing the arms were secured, frightening distracted women with what they would do to their husbands if they could catch them, warning women and children to flee immediately or they would tear their houses down over their heads and massacre them before night. At the head of one of these companies appeared the Reverend ISAAC MCCOY, with a gun upon his shoulder, ordering the saints to leave the county forthwith and surrender what arms they had. Other pretended preachers of the gospel took a conspicuous part in the persecution, calling the 'Mormons' the 'common enemy of mankind,' and exulting in their afflictions.

On Tuesday and Wednesday nights, the 5th and 6th of November, women and children fled in every direction before the merciless mob. One party of about one hundred and fifty women and children fled to the prairie where they wandered for several days under the broad canopy of heaven, with about six men to protect them. Other parties fled to the Missouri river and took lodgings for the night where they could find it. One Mr. Bennett opened his house for a night's shelter to a wandering company of distressed women and children who were fleeing to the river. During this dispersion of the women and children parties of the mob were hunting the men, firing upon some, tying up and whipping others, and some they pursued upon horses for several miles.

"On the 5th, Elders Phelps, Gilbert and McLellan went to Clay county and made an affidavit similar to the foregoing sketch and forwarded the same to the Governor by express; and the Governor immediately upon the reception thereof, ordered a court of inquiry to be held in Clay County for the purpose of investigating the whole affair and meting out justice to all; but alas! corruption, wickedness, and power have

And innocence mourns in tears un wiped.

Thursday, Nov. 7th, the shore began to be lined on both sides of the ferry with men, women and children, goods, wagons, boxes, chests, provisions, &c., while the ferrymen were busily employed in crossing them over; and when night again closed upon the saints the wilderness had much the appearance of a camp meeting. Hundreds of people were seen in every direction, some in tents, and some in the open air around their fires, while the rain descended in torrents. Husbands were enquiring for their wives, and women for their husbands; parents for children, and children for parents. Some had the good fortune to escape with their family, household goods, and some provisions; while others knew not the fate of their friends and had lost all their goods. The scene was indescribable, and would have melted the hearts of any people upon earth except the blind oppressor and prejudiced and ignorant bigot. Next day the company increased, and they were chiefly engaged in felling small cotton wood trees and erecting them into temporary cabins, so that when night came on they had the appearance of a village of wigwams, and the night being clear, the occupants began to enjoy some degree of comfort.

"Lieut. Gov. Boggs presented a curious external appearance; yet he was evidently the head and front of the mob: for as may easily be seen by what follows, no important move was made without his sanction. He certainly was the secret spring of the 20th and 23d of July; and as will appear in the sequel, by his authority the mob was moulded into militia to effect by stratagem what he knew, as well as his hellish host, could not be done by legal force. As Lieutenant Governor he had only to wink and the mob went from mal-treatment to murder. The horrid calculations of this second Nero were often developed in a way that could not be mistaken. Early on the morning of the 5th, say at one o'clock a. m., he came to Phelps, Gilbert and Partridge, and told them to flee for their lives. Now unless he had given the order so to do, no one would have attempted to murder, after the church had agreed to go away. His conscience vacillated on its rocky moorings, and gave the secret alarm to these men.

"The Saints who fled took refuge in the neighboring counties, mostly in Clay county, which received them with some degree of kindness. Those who fled to the county of Van Buren were again driven and compelled to flee, and those who fled to Lafayette county were soon expelled, or the most of them, and had to move wherever they could find protection.

"November 13th. About four o'clock a. m., I was awakened by brother Davis knocked at my door, and calling on me to arise and behold the signs in the heavens. I arose, and to my great joy, beheld the stars fall from heaven like a shower of hail stones; a literal fulfilment of the word of God as recorded in the Holy Scriptures as a sure sign that the coming of Christ is close at hand [Previously predicted by the Seer, March 7th, 1851, and December 27th, 1832; Doc. & Cov. 45:6; 85:24.—Ed.] In the midst of this shower of fire, I was led to exclaim, How marvellous are thy works, O Lord! I thank thee for thy mercy unto thy servant, save me in thy kingdom, for Christ's sake; Amen.

The appearance of these signs varied in different sections of the country; in Zion, all heaven seemed enwrapped in splendid fire-works, as if every star in the broad expanse had been suddenly hurled from its course and sent lawless through the wilds of ether; some at times appeared like bright shooting meteors with long trains of light following in their course, and in numbers resembled large drops of rain in sunshine. Some of the long trains of light following the meteoric stars were visible for some seconds; those streaks would cut and twist up like serpents writhing. The appearance was beautiful, grand and sublime beyond description, as though all the artillery and fire-works of eternity were set in motion to enchant and entertain the Saints, and terrify and awe the sinners on the earth. Beautiful and terrific as was the scenery, which might be compared to the falling figs or fruit when the tree is shaken by a mighty wind; yet it will not fully compare with the time when the sun shall become black like sack cloth of hair, the moon like blood (Rev. 6:13); and the stars fall to the earth—as these appeared to vanish when they fell behind the trees, or came near the ground."

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Ques.—How long is a generation, according to Scripture?

Ans.—God said to Abraham concerning his seed entering the land of Canaan, "But in the fourth generation they shall come hither again; for the iniquity of the Amorites is not yet full." Gen. 15:16. These four generations covered a period of exactly 430 years, (making each generation measure exactly 107½ years each) For Paul says the giving of the law at Sinai, when Israel was journeying to Canaan, "was four hundred and thirty years after" the promise made to Abraham. See Gal. 3:17.

BY CHANCE!

IS THERE indeed such a phase of existence as chance? For ourselves we do not believe there is, but if any one who reads this inclines to such an opinion, let them cherish it and call the grouping together of this article by that name. If upon the other hand there are those who believe with us, that not only are "the hairs of our heads numbered," but that he who "hears the cry of the young ravens" will not turn a deaf ear to the cry of immortal souls, struggling to be free from the bondage of sin and death; if there be such, then let them christen it anew, and if in any heart a responsive chord is touched let them upon bended knee before the Father plead in the name of the Son that light and wisdom may be given them to see, and moral courage to do the right. The unfinished scrap found below was rescued from the flames. How this was done or by whom the words were written, matters not, as it is the subject matter of this unfinished article which interests us most, and the pleasure it gives us to thus discover that we have not been alone in the many thoughts we have given to the subject.

A FRAGMENT.

"The red and yellow banners of sunset were waving in the western horizon, as we came out from the house of God two Sabbaths since. A dear sister said to two of us, 'Come home with me.' The meeting had been a sacramental one, and as we walked along we talked of the good things we had heard, and I know it was not in name only, but we felt that in heart we were, sisters. Later on, when a quiet fell upon us and we sat peacefully enjoying the twilight, I said, 'I have so often wished that the sisters of our church would adopt some plain, simple mode of dress, so that all, rich and poor, might dress alike.' 'There,' our hostess made answer, 'that subject of dress has been a burden upon my mind for a long time. Sometimes it almost seems coming between me and God when I try to pray, and I am so glad you mentioned it.' 'Yes,' said our mutual friend, 'So am I glad, for I too have thought of it, and gave up buying a dress I wanted two or three weeks ago because I knew I could do without it.' So we settled down for a quiet talk about the matter.

"The truth is we three all like pretty things, and when making a garment or having them made are tempted to have them made just as prettily as possible, tucking, ruffling, and pleating them. Now this not only takes time which might be better employed, but wears one out physically and mentally, for it often happens that Nature being oppressed condemns the mind to suffer with the body."

Thus far we read—there was no more, and we laid the paper down, thinking within ourselves, "Oh, why have not those three (those three whom we know so well and whose influence could it only stand revealed to them would astonish themselves) have the moral courage to act out the conviction of their souls! Taking up the paper in an abstracted mood, thinking still upon the theme our sisters had been discussing that quiet Sabbath eve, another paper was lifted with it, which proved to be a letter we had received a few days previously and which we shall copy here, begging the writer's pardon for so doing as we know it never entered his mind that other eyes than our own would see it. We will merely say that it was written in answer to a card we had sent, thanking him for words of encouragement he had sent us in a very early day of the "Home Column." Name and date we shall withhold, but will give you the letter otherwise entire.

Sr. Walker.—Your card was received a few days ago. I am glad that I was the instrument in the hands of God, of administering comfort and encouragement to you in your work last winter. It was the Spirit of the Master that did it, and to him be the praise. Neither shall I ever forget the time. I was away from home, under trying circumstances, the lonely occupant of a deserted house, ministering to myself, living on bread and water for my health and convenience. Deprived of the most which men prize, I yet was blessed of God though the blessing was obtained through tears and strong crying unto the Lord. Last winter I passed through a crisis and by the blessing of the Lord my affairs have been improving. I carry my pack with me and sell goods to provide for myself and family and pay off debts contracted while under missionary appointment, and preach every Sunday, with occasionally a night through the week. Though under conference appointment, the Bishop has not been able to do much for me. I have many calls for preaching which I can not attend. Lord send more reapers!"

The letter too was finished and I laid it aside, musing deeply upon the sharp contrasts in the two papers. The cozy, quiet parlor in which the three were sitting enjoying such sweet, undisturbed communion with each other appeared before me, while in strong contrast I saw the "deserted house" with its lonely occupant wrestling with God in prayer for victory that he might not yield to the overwhelming discouragements of poverty and leave the field of his labors with none to bear aloft the gospel banner. I saw his crust of bread and water and the stern agony of the conflict which left its impress upon his brow, marked by deep lines of thought and pain. Just that which they themselves confessed was not only superfluous, but injurious to bodily and mental vigor, that would have been as a mine of wealth to him—would have given food and raiment to his family and sent him on his way rejoicing. And yet they loved the Master, we have every reason for believing if not for knowing, only it was so difficult to be the first to break away from the dictates of society and the habit formed of yielding to them. What a splendid opportunity of taking up a cross for the sake of him who bore his so meekly for us, and who upon it suffered such untold agony to redeem us. What a worthy example to set the church as well as the world, but best of all the untold good which might be accomplished thereby.

"The pebble is cast in the water,
And the waves circle 'round with the shock."

Thus wave after wave might it spread and roll on until the church as a body would see the sin of wasting upon self the means which should be used to spread the gospel of Christ.

[We wish to notify all our friends who have so kindly been selling the "Witnesses" for us that we think it best and necessary to withdraw the offer of packages of 4 for $1.10, and shall hereafter have but one price, whether bought singly or by the dozen. 35 cents each is what will be charged for all after this notice.—Ed]

POEM FOR ST. JAMES' DAY.

"Seek ye to sit enthroned by Me?

Alas! ye know not what ye ask;

The first in shame and agony,

The lowest in the meanest task.—

This can ye be? And can ye drink

The cup that I in tears must steep;

Nor from the whelming waters shrink,

That o'er me roll so dark and deep?"

"We can—thine are we dearest Lord,

In glory and in agony,

To do and suffer all thy word;

Only be thou forever nigh."

"Then be it so,—my cup receive,

And of my woes baptismal taste:

But for the crown, that angels weave

For those next me in glory placed,

I give it not by partial love;

But in my Father's book are writ

What names on earth shall lowliest prove,

That they in heaven may highest sit."

"Take up the lesson, O my heart;

Thou Lord of meekness write it there,

Thine own meek self to me impart,

Thy lofty hope, thy lowly prayer."

PLEASANTON, IOWA.

Dear Sisters.—I have enjoyed our "Column" in the Herald, from its commencement, and now wish to contribute some recipes which may be of help to some, especially the young sisters, not having had much experience in house work, cooking, etc. In directions given for bread some time ago, it gave a kind of yeast requiring a cool place in summer, and a place where it would not freeze in winter. Not having a cellar, and thinking many of the sisters might be in like circumstances, I will give my way of making yeast. When you are getting supper, pare and slice six large potatoes, cover them with water, and boil very soft. When you put them on, put in with them, two handfuls of hops, tied up in a piece of thin, white muslin. When the potatoes are soft, mash them very fine in the water in which they were boiled, taking out the hop bag first. If the mixture does not measure a quart, add water to make that amount, and stir in a small handful of salt, and a large one of sugar. When the mixture is lukewarm, add a teacup of yeast, of any kind you may happen to have. Set it in a warm place, and the next day when it is light, stir in sifted corn meal, until it is stiff enough to handle. Then flour your hands, and make it into small cakes, laying them on a board to dry. Keep them in a moderately warm place, turning them often. When perfectly dry put in a bag, and keep in a dry place. The night before you want to bake bread, soak two of the yeast cakes in cold water until soft. Then make a stiff batter of warm water and flour, adding two mashed potaatoes for each loaf of bread you intend to bake, or if you can not conveniently get the potatoes, omit them. When the batter is lukewarm add the soaked yeast, and set it in a warm place until morning. When it is very light add salt, and a teaspoon of soda dissolved in a little warm water. With a large spoon, stir in flour until it is very stiff. Flour the board and knead, adding flour frequently until it will not stick to the board. The more faithfully you knead your bread the better it will be. When it is well kneaded, put it in a warm place, and let it stand until it is very light. Now, put it on the board again, and knead it well. Then separate it into loaves, and put them in greased pans and let it stand until very light, then bake an hour for an ordinary loaf. Success in bread making demands care and close attention to all the details of the process. But perseverance will always meet with success.

Here is a recipe for a favorite dish of ours, which we do not think is very common: Take one quart of fresh buttermilk, put it on the stove, and while it is heating, beat two eggs and mix them with a batter made of a teacup of cold buttermilk and four heaping teaspoons of flour, add a pinch of salt, and when the buttermilk begins to boil stir it in, continuing to stir constantly until the mixture begins to boil, then pour out into saucers and sift sugar over them, and when it is partly cold, eat it, and let us know how you like "thickened butter-milk."

If any one finds these recipes of use, I shall be glad. With thanks to all those who have contributed to the column,

I am your sister,

L. H. CAMPBELL.

ADISON, Maine, Oct. 5th.

As a sister in this good cause, and also a mother, I desire to do what I can by precept and example, to encourage and help all. I have often thought who or what were the "helps" in the organization of the church or body of Christ? and it seems to me that, without fear of being too high minded, the sisterhood of the church may aspire to fill in part that office in many ways. One of old declares that to be a doorkeeper in the house of his God were preferable to living in sin; and when we think of the gospel (good news) from its inception to its final triumph over sin, and then think that in a greater or less degree we may be accounted worthy of helping in this great cause by our gifts and offerings, our prayers and our testimonies, our words fitly spoken at home and abroad—when we think of it in this way, we can truly say it is a high and holy calling whereunto we have been called.

To say I like the "Mothers' Home Column," but poorly expresses my sentiments in regard to it. I think it destined to do a good work, and bear my testimony that its earnest appeals have stimulated me to action. That I may continue thus to do, and may bear some fruit to the honor and glory of our Heavenly Father, is the prayer of,

SISTER SARAH.

It is stated that 375,000,000 persons are annually carried over the railroads of the country. Only 460 of this number are killed and 1,800 meet with injuries more or less severe. Of these 800 injured and 200 of the killed may be charged to causes for which the railroad companies are more or less responsible, while the rest is due to the carelessness of the passengers themselves.

Correspondence.

CABOOL, Mo., Oct. 12th.

Bro. Joseph: I have just returned from a visit to Illinois and Indiana. My brother says the Saints are the best writers on the doctrine of Christ he ever read. My mother, seventy-six years of age, thinks our teachings are very good. I could not hear from the Chicago Saints by letter prior to my visit in the city. In Crown Point, Indiana, I met with a new wing of Babylon; they call themselves the Pentecostal Band, and claim to preach Bible salvation; they lack a great deal in teaching the people how to obtain said salvation. Five young ladies accompanied a minister. On entering their place of worship, said ladies kneel in secret prayer, and on rising they sing a hymn or two, pray in turns for the Holy Ghost to "come right down;" one says "A-m-e-n," at the top of her voice, another shouts "Glo—ry," another "Hal—le—lu—ya," another, "Hoo—e." And when, in their imagination, the Holy Ghost has come down, one of said young ladies rises from her knee, states to the audience that she is told to read the eighth chapter of Acts, or some other chapter, and when said chapter is read, she tells the audience Bible salvation is the one thing needful, gives an exhortation without telling them how to obtain it.

Their preacher seemed to be an "occasional" preacher—subject, I suppose, to the passion of zeal. They have a balustrade to get Bible salvation at when a seeker acknowledges Bible salvation. The band declare them saved.

I called at "The People's Church," in Chicago, Dr. Thomas, pastor. The doctor speaks with ease and caution. He is not likely to wear himself out with loud and excited speech. Slow spoken and precise, he seems to try to speak each word in its place. He elaborated on the selfish views the Jews entertained of God in relation to themselves; showed that Christ introduced much broader views of God than the Jews were willing to receive, and claimed that general ignorance was the cause of the Jews dropping into such narrow and selfish views. While listening to him I was reminded of Moses who was skilled in all the learning of the Egyptians. He seems to be a man of good general information, and I hope he will find the way round to "the main entrance." He is opposed to a few selfish ones sending all the rest to hell because they don't believe as they do. At Independence, Missouri, I got some gospel food—heard brethren F. C. Warnky and T. E. Lloyd.

In hope,

R. A. ATWELL.

NEBRASKA CITY, Oct. 21st

Bro. Blair: We have just returned from our visit to Omaha, where we went to witness the dedication of the Saints' new chapel, just erected at that place. It is not a very large, but a neat building, and will seat from four to five hundred people. President Joseph Smith was present and put in his time pretty well that day, as he preached three times. In the afternoon he dwelt most on the duties of the Saints. From first to last he was moved by the spirit of love, and every heart rejoiced and felt to glorify God's holy name.

Bro. M. H. Forscutt played the organ and conducted the singing, which was excellent. To Bro. Mark is due much credit for same. We are all well, and we do rejoice in the glorious gospel of our Lord more than we ever did before. Glory and praise be to his holy name for ever and ever.

Editors Herald: In your issue of October 23d, you state, editorially, that "A brother asks, Is it right or proper for a district to appoint a treasurer, collect money, and send Elders off to preach the gospel in different places?" It is quite probable that the brother who so wrote had in view some district which had dared to act in its own behalf and right, and authorize collections in the branches which compose the district, to be applied in paying the car fare for local district work—of those Elders who are not under General Conference appointment. The question is rather loosely framed, as will appear upon examination. Has any district assumed to "send Elders off," or outside of its territory, to preach the gospel? I know of no such case, if any such has occurred. But is it not conceded, and besides, too, is it not of long standing, that districts are authorized in appointing Elders to labor within their territorial jurisdiction? But who so presumptuous as to suppose that this precludes the general church from appointing men to labor also in the same general field. It is generally known that the funds of the Bishopric are applied specially in favor of the appointees of the general church; but this does not mean that because the Bishop does not provide car fare to and support for those not under general church appointment, that no car fare shall be given to such as may need, in order to do local work, or other support if deemed necessary, by persons, branches, or districts. It would simply be ridiculous to assume that district Elders should not be allowed car fare from a district fund, simply because there is a Bishopric and its agents in nearly all the districts, which makes some provision for those sent out by the general church!

Then think of the thought, that districts should "consult" on that which is purely a local affair, and outside all jurisdiction of the Bishop and his agents, with the Bishop, "that such matters may be mutually arranged, . . . that there may be unity and concert of action." But what right has the Bishop to interfere in such matters? And suppose that a district believed its action to be right, and was firm in adhering to it, what then? No one, at least to the writer's knowledge, has in any way infringed upon the rights of the Bishop—and all seem disposed to honor every officer in his place.

If the work was only to be done by missionaries from the Annual Conference, or those sent out specially by the First Presidency and Twelve, then indeed with some sense and consistency, it might be in order to restrict districts from attending to local work, and that which pertains thereto by way of financial aid.

The Bishop has his functions of office, and I am glad to say that this office is not inconsistent, necessarily, with a "district fund" for purely local work. Both can exist within the same territory and be at peace; because they do not perform the same work. One represents the general church, and now makes provision for those who are sent out by the general church (after an arrangement with the Bishop); while the other simply attends to local demands and needs, which neither the Bishop and his agents have thus far recognized as within their scope of duty. There is no cause for alarm from the mere fancy that there would be antagonism between the District Treasurer and the Bishopric of the Church.

The Independence District, as will be seen in its conference reports, has availed itself of the supposed right to appoint a District Treasurer, and also requested its branches to take up stated collections with which to constitute the fund; the fund so raised to be applied in furnishing car fare to local laborers to and from appointments in this district, where such car fare is needed. The district has not proposed to infringe upon the Bishop and give car fare to any one who is so provided for by the Bishop. It is proposed only to apply as a help to willing, worthy laborers who are not furnished out of the funds of the Bishop. And now does any one see any great wrong in the action of the Independence District?

Dear Brethren: I got to this town August 24th. Have been at work most of my time on the railroad; have been talking some as Latter Day Saints should. I have been at work in a Catholic gang, and they began to run all denominations down, and especially the Mormons. I told them I belonged to the Mormons known as Latter Day Saints. "And they are all the same," was the prompt reply. I tried to show them the difference. They did not refuse to listen, but to heed, for they said "Utah Mormons and Latter Day Saints are all the same." I replied, "though I die, and am buried in the depths of hell, I believe that Mormonism, or Latter Day Saints, or as we are better known, the Josephites, are the true and accepted Church of God." One word brought on another. The question was asked, "How do you know that your church is right?" I answered, "the same as Christ told to Peter that he knew he was the Son of God, by direct revelation from God." They could not reply to this, so our conversation stopped for the time being. I still bear testimony to the truth of the work.

When I was a very small boy I was at conference at Council Bluffs, and had the ague. Mother got uncle Tommy Dobson and three others to administer to me. I have had the ague but very few times since then. When I was nine years old I was sick, and the doctor said that there was but little chance of my getting well. I refused to take his medicine, and said, "God would help me when I needed help." Mother sent for Bro. Ira Goff; it was about five days before he got to our place; he administered to me and said that I should gain from that hour. The doctor had a patient on the other side of our place, and he made it a point to call and see me every day; he called in about an hour, in some ways I was better. Sunday after I was worse, and grandma left me for dead, and went three-fourths of a mile to call my mother from meeting. They found I was not dead, and worked about an hour to bring me too. When I came too I was surprised to see my mother, and said I felt weak since I waked up. Mother said, "You were not asleep: you fainted. Again, five years ago, while riding on the running years of a wagon, with others, while attempting to catch my brother from falling, caught my arm in the wheel and broke one bone. I suffered a great deal for twenty-one hours, when my step-father administered to me, and the pain immediately ceased. The Lord has still continued his blessing to his people. No longer ago than last Sunday morning, when kneeling for prayer, sister said, "Remember me." I prayed the Lord to bless her, inasmuch as she needed. She said, "Willie, when you pray you think you will get just what you ask for." I answered, "certainly." She said she was aching in every bone in her body, and it had all ceased, almost while the words were in my mouth. This is the kind of a God to serve, one who hears and answers. Ever your brother in Christ,

Dear Herald:—We were honored with a visit by Elder S. Madden accompanied by Brn. Lang and Spencer. He spoke twice to an attentive audience. It was nice to hear the first principles of the gospel once more. I would like to state that I received letters during sickness that I could not answer. However, there is no good vacant land here now within twenty miles of us. Your sister in Christ,

Bro. Blair:—All goes well here. Baptized two yesterday. There are thirty members now in Siegle, six miles west of here, not yet organized into a branch. Bro. C. Green, Priest, is laboring with me for a few weeks. He is quite a help.

Yours,

Dear Herald:—As an Elder and teacher I have frequently been asked for my opinion of heaven and of hell. Of the latter I would say that to my mind it is a condition of fearful waiting for the final judgment, a state of unrest and dread uncertainty concerning their final doom as prisoners, held under charges to await action of the court that shall judge them. Unless this be the case the prison house becomes useless. Further than this, I do not desire to lift the darkening veil to attempt to disclose the revolting sight that it has pleased God to conceal from our view. It might be that the sight would so far outdo our most sanguine thoughts, or imaginations, that we would lose all hope of salvation and cease to strive for victory over death, hell and the grave. Sometimes I am led to believe that the Elders almost forget that there is a hell, or prison, separate from the Paradise of God, or where the good, the pure, the tried and true, go to rest; until they shall be called to receive their reward. I do not say this because I would have them continually preaching hell-fire to frighten, or to excite people to do obedience through fear, but Christ taught it because he wanted them to know all righteousness. Let me say this much, that there is a hell some where, and there I am taught that the wicked go (and not the good) into that fearful condition, or fearful waiting; and it is certain that if it is a fearful waiting, it is not a pleasant waiting. Jesus has warned us of its terrible nature. Matt. 25:46; and many other instances might be used to prove the undesirableness of hell, and its unfitness to give us rest after this life of weariness and toil shall end. Jesus says that it is better for us to part with any member of our body than to be cast into hell with all of them.

Heaven, what is it, and how shall we obtain it and its gifts? If I take my text from the saintly seer of Patmos Isle, 22d chapter, I would most certainly give a reverse to the former view. Instead of a fearful waiting, it would be a joyful anticipation of a glorious rest, and happy reunion with our Lord, who has promised to wipe away every tear from all eyes. St. Paul says that the mind can not conceive of the things that God has in store for them that love him. But we are told that we shall rest in peace in the Paradise of God; until the resurrection of the just, or the first resurrection. We may differ widely upon the interpretation of the Scripture, but I believe in a glorified and redeemed humanity. It may not be this material body that shall be gathered up in fragments of earth, and mineral from the grains, or the deeps of the ocean bed, to be reunited to the immortal part of man; there may be another, a heavenly body, that shall come out of this old one, like the butterfly from the chrysalis; but however that may be, "I believe in the resurrection of the body." St. Paul says so, on the authority of the divine Spirit. I believe that our departed friends in glory, have the same form and pleasant faces that we loved and caressed here. I believe we shall know them, by God's grace, when we come to the other shore; by the same marks we saw and loved on earth; the bright, clear eye, the index of the soul by which we could interpret weal or woe. If we do not find there all these earthly resemblances, I for one shall be disappointed; except it be the pains and ills of mortal life, or else the poet hath wrote and sung in vain,

"No chilling winds, or poisonous breath,
Can reach that healthful shore;
Sickness and sorrow, pain and death,
Are feared, and felt no more."

Further, I believe that Scripture will sustain my opinions that the soul is free from every shadow of doubt and darkness; safe from the snares of fashions and customs; no more bound in secret, but shall know all things, and shall walk the streets of pure gold with fearless tread, and bask in the light of the Son. I am told, Oh, happy lot, that those who are permitted entrance there shall not know of this fearful waiting, and all cares and sorrows are forgot no more to be brought into remembrance. Neither shall we be disappointed to miss those whom we may have expected to meet there, but who are not there; because we shall know the reason of their separation from us; howbeit we ourselves shall barely escape that fearful waiting. O, awake Saints, awake; put your armor on, and in the name of Israel's God, renew the battle day by day. Did not the Master use words of encouragement and forcible illustration to induce men if possible to go forth into the harvest field, when he said, "The fields are white unto the harvest and the laborers are few; pay ye the Father, that laborers be sent." And, in Mark 16:15; Matt. 28:19. To me, this means an active ministry. Romans 10:14 and Titus 1:3. This is how we shall obtain heaven and its gifts and a good report. If we are faithful in all things we shall be saved with them that hear and obey the gospel. And this means for you, as well as me to tell the story of how this gospel is being preached as a witness for the last time, or dispensation of time, to every people, kindred and tongue; and soon the vials of God's wrath shall be poured out upon the earth. Arise, let us be doing.

CLARENCE ST. CLAIR.

IN MEMORY OF JAMES VERNON.

We looked on thy face, dear father,
Where death was creeping fast,
And felt thy hand growing colder,
Within his icy clasp;
When loving ones stood sadly round
To watch thy spirit flee,
We wept, and bitter were our tears,
But they were not for thee.

Firm as the eternal hills of God
Thy steadfast heart has been;
Because of this thou had'st no fear
To cross the valley dim.
And many were thy suffering days,
And nights of weary pain.
Now thou wert leaving all of this,
To suffer not again.

We wept for those still left behind
Who miss thy presence dear—
Thy quiet counsel and advice,
Thy kindly words of cheer—
And for our mother now bereft,
Lone, grieving, sorrowing one;
Lord give her strength in this drear hour
To say, "Thy will be done."

Methinks the angels oft rejoiced,
Thine upright way to see;
For surely must their presence be Near unto such as thee.
A beacon light to those around,
Thou in thy life hast been,
That silently yet plainly speaks
The peace that reigns within.

Thou humbly strove to walk the way
That leadeth home to God;
Methinks the heavenly host rejoiced
When at the gates you stood:
And louder rose the joyous strain
Of, "Glory to the Lamb;"
And he who on the throne doth reign, Did'st say, "My child, come in."

Unto thy children here,
That of thy precious memory
Which oft our hearts shall cheer.
Should days seem drear, and cares oppress,
Thy patience we'll recall;
And strive to walk by grace divine,
The path that's free for all.

II. THESSALONIANS, CHAP. II.

"HE who now hindereth will hinder until he be taken out of the way."

He, as used above relates to a person in contradistinction to that wicked one; now, relates to the time of the hindering; hindereth, shows that something was prepared and ready for introduction; until, connects, in person and time, the "hindereth" and the "taken away;" he be taken, means a person removed by death, or a direct intervention of providence; way, is path, place, or position into which the wicked one is to come; wicked one, is the devil; revealed, is to be made manifest, through his acts, or his agents.

The time of this whole transaction is before the "coming of the Lord," the "day of Christ," and after the time of building "the temple of God." The one who was all powerful in building a temple of God, subsequent to the destruction of the temple in Jerusalem was Joseph Smith. If Paul meant a literal temple he meant the one at Nauvoo; then "he", as used above, means Joseph Smith—as the one most likely to hinder anything done in it not right. The thing to be hindered is called a "strong delusion," (verse 11), and something impending, like an awful calamity, at the time treated of. History says that polygamy was being greatly discussed at that time. Taking out of the way then, according to the above premises, was the death by violence of Joseph Smith; and the revealing of the wicked one, immediately after, was by the introduction of polygamy and its kindred evils of "lying," deceivableness, and unrighteousness, all of which history says occurred in the temple, subsequently to the death of Joseph Smith, in a manner to fulfill verse 4.

The time of these strange fulfillments may be determined in another way. An illicit union is determined in a court of law by a child being born, and the time of the crime by the date of birth. When did polygamous children first make their appearance? This is the test. Those most interested can decide the issue by it.

So much of acts; taking up the question of the revelation by which it is said the prophesied "delusion" was ushered in: those having the matter in charge say they have only a copy of it. There ought to be an original, in the proper hand-writing. That was burned, say these same persons, by consent of Joseph Smith. This proves the former deduction that he hindered, and was the one prophesied of that was to hinder. The denunciation of Brown was an act of hindering; and the word to Marks was to hinder, but he was taken out of the way.

ON PROPHECY.—ISAIAH, VI.

PROPHECY itself is, in part, God's testimony to the world; a testimony indeed of warning and of terror, fitly represented by Ezekiel's roll, written within and on the outside, and full of mourning, lamentation and woe." In fact, one of the saddest consequences of the general neglect by Christians of the prophetic word has been, that, instead of bearing in the world's ears continually this solemn and mournful testimony as to the world's prospects, we have chimed in with Satan's lullaby of peace; peace by which he soothes this poor guilty world to deeper slumber, while God's judgments, alas, by which it is sure ere long to be overtaken, slumber not. The world dreams of a golden age, a period of peace and plenty, of liberty and good government drawing nigh, and it labors as it has done for so many ages to hasten its arrival, and while the world has sought to escape its arrival by all the means and appliances of philosophy and science and political economy and a philanthropy, having these for its foundation, how many of the Saints of God have added to these the gospel, and have thought thus to perfect the machinery by which this guilty, miserable world is to be brought back to purity and joy? And if it should be urged, as it doubtless would by some, that Christianity should be placed in the foreground, and all other things be only considered as subsidiary forces in the contest, what have you gained? The world and the church are still joined in one common phalanx to fight one common battle, animated by one common hope of victory, and ensuing rest and peace and contentment in this world below. All join in putting far off the evil day, or in denying that there is such a day approaching. "Pillows are sewn under all arm-holes;" the walls "daubed with untempered mortar;" the prophets, whether in the world or its churches, agreeing to "prophecy smooth things," and "cry peace, peace, when there is no peace." And all this the result of hearkening to the reasonings and speculations of man instead of the testimony of God's Holy word.

*[The oldest polygamous child now living was born July 23d, 1845: and it is stated that there was but one child born in Mormon polygamy older than this, and that one was born in the same month and year.—Ep.]

There is a day of universal peace and blessedness yet to dawn upon this oppressed and groaning earth. There is a millennium yet to come, a period of universal righteousness and joy, brighter than any that man's hopes have pictured; brighter than any that even Saints themselves have anticipated; but as to the way in which this period is to be ushered in, as to the means by which it is to be introduced, we do affirm and we hope that it will be plainly shown to you from the word of God; and that man's fancies and speculations will not be preferred to the solemn teaching of the blessed book. It will be shown to you from the word of God, I hope. It is not by the progress of society, or the march of intellect, or the advancement of science. It is not by the spread of modern opinions, or the rise and growth of liberal institutions, neither by means of schools and hospitals and peace societies, nor missions to the heathen, however good in their places these may be. It is not by these means that Satan's kingdom will be overthrown and the world delivered from his dire oppression, but by the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ from Heaven. This is the one grand event placed before us in the "more sure word of prophecy"—an event which men have continued to put off to an indefinitely distant period, but which in scripture is ever represented as the one impending event, placed as such before saint and sinner. It has diverse aspects, I grant you. As to the one, light, to the other, darkness; to the one joy, to the other sorrow; to the one deliverance, to the other confusion and everlasting despair. But it is, whether regarded in reference to the one or the other, the one grand event foretold in the prophetic word of all God's future dealings with mankind, and it takes place, not as is commonly supposed at the end of a period of universal righteousness on the earth, but at its commencement, it precedes that period; it ushers it in, and for anything that any of us can tell to the contrary it may take place in our own life-time, within the brief space of our existence here below; but I will not pursue this theme, yet was unwilling to pass on without noticing it thus at the outset, and for this reason that in nothing has the general neglect of prophecy by Christians had a more terrible effect than in regard to this event, in its bearing upon the world. Instead of testimony to this rapidly approaching and portentous event Christians have substituted as a means of acting upon the consciences of the careless, the thought of the uncertainty of their own lives, and the thoughts of the final day of retribution at the end of time, at the dissolution of all things.

I am not going to intimate that scripture is silent as to these subjects, for "it is appointed unto man once to die, and after that the judgment"—the judgment of the dead before the great white throne, is solemnly portrayed. (Rev. 20). But this we may safely affirm, that the great subject of prophetic testimony is neither the uncertainty of our lives nor the setting of the great white throne at the consummation of all things, but the coming of the Lord Jesus is. Christ himself will come in the clouds of heaven to inflict terrible judgments upon the living inhabitants of the earth, upon those who shall be alive and behold him when he comes. "Behold he cometh with clouds, and every eye shall see him; they also who pierced him. And the kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him." The difference as to the effect upon conscience, between these two sorts of testimony is immense, but let the testimony of God's word come home to a man—let him be convinced that what is before the world is the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ in the clouds of heaven, not a thousand years hence, but, for anything he knows, his own eyes may see heaven open and the Son of Man appear robed in light, to execute judgment on the ungodly, that unless he believes and obeys the gospel, he may be one of the living objects of his wrath when that Savior comes. (2d Thess. 1: 8). But Christ says, "of that day and of that hour knoweth no man: no, not the angels of heaven, but my Father only."

Before passing on I speak this word of solemn warning to the unconverted; don't be deceived by the notions which are abroad; no one can assure you that the day or hour is at any great distance. But I charge and warn you in the sight and presence of God, before whom we shall all stand, to be prepared for it. It may be within the period of your natural lives; its thunderings may burst upon your ears, and its solemnities cause your hearts to quake. If, on the other hand, we look at the glory in which they who are Christ's, the glory in which his obedient children who are made co-heirs with him will appear, how can I contemplate such a subject if I have any doubt as to whether I am one of those to whom that glory through grace belongs. For it is written when he appears, we shall be caught up to meet him. Our hearts need the calm and peaceful assurance of this; and his promise is, that, unto all who bow in obedience to the will of God and keep his commandments, he will visit them with the comforter, the Holy Ghost, who should bring things past to mind; make known things present, and show us things to come. These are the things that happen indeed to men upon the earth, but still they are the things of God; "For what man knoweth the things of a man save the spirit of man which is in him? Even so the things of God no man knoweth save the Spirit of God be in him." What he alone knows, he alone can teach. And how blessed are the words which follow these just cited, "Now we have received not the Spirit of the world, but the Spirit which is of God; that we might know the things that are freely given us of God. Yes, beloved brethren, it is to you who "have passed from death unto life who possess this inestimable gift of the Holy Ghost—sent by the Father in Christ's name to lead us into all truth, to take of that which is Christ and reveal it unto us, to show us things to come. Has God brought us so near to himself as to instruct us with his secrets, making us his confidants, as it were? And shall we requite such love as this by utter and manifest indifference to what he has been pleased to communicate? Why was it that God told Abraham what was coming upon Sodom? It was Abraham's faithfulness to God that kept him apart from Sodom; "And the Lord said, shall I hide from Abraham that thing which I do?"—Gen. 18: 17. Christ says to his beloved, "Henceforth I call you not servants; for the servant knoweth not what his Lord doeth: but I have called you friends, for all things I have heard of the Father I have made known unto you," John 15: 15. We have God himself, and the Lord Jesus Christ who humbled himself to become the faithful servant. And God has given him a name which is above every name, that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, and that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord—to the glory of God the Father. It was not merely to the twelve apostles, but to the whole church that God made known the mystery of his will. And shall we, like recipients, neglect the communications which by reason of it we are privileged to receive; he shedding his own light upon the whole scene that surrounds us, a scene which constitutes a sphere in which we are called to walk so as to please and glorify God!

Nothing can be more practical than the study of prophecy—there is nothing more so. The gospel supplies the motives, the Holy Ghost begetting in us by the gospel a new life, and dwelling in us to sustain and guide it. It is the power of God. Prophecy reveals and gives us most exactly God's judgments of the entire sphere around us. It shows us that just as Christ arose from the dead, so we being freed by his death from guilt and condemnation through obedience, are risen with him as partakers of his life, we are not left here to pursue the objects and unite in the cause of a world lying in the wicked one, and about to be desolated by God's judgments at the appearing of the despised Jesus, at whose appearing we shall be caught up to meet him, to be ever with the Lord. Meanwhile, as strangers and pilgrims here in holy separateness from the world, we are to seek those things above, where Christ, who is our life, sitteth at the right hand of God. And lest our hearts should be attracted by the false glitter of the world and its splendor, prophecy reveals God's judgments of its moral character and condition, and unfolds to us the ripened iniquity to which its course is tending, and foretells the solemn judgments by which it will be visited in order to the establishment of the peaceful reign of Jesus and his saints. Could anything be more practical than this? It is alleged that the chief, if not the only use of prophecy is after the event to demonstrate the truth of God and evince his faithfulness in fulfilling his word. It is said. "Ah! but you can not understand prophecy till after the occurrence of the event it foretells; that is the only key by which it can be unlocked. Then it will be seen how God has spoken, and has fulfilled his word. But it is of no use examining prophecy till then." Such are the objections of the sceptic.

That fulfilled prophecy has the use here affirmed one would not of course deny. Fulfilled prophecy has this use undoubted-ly. But to say of unfulfilled prophecy that its chief use is after the event, is to go directly in the face of the plainest declaration of God's word. See 2d Peter 1:19: "We have also a more sure word of prophecy, whereunto ye do well to take heed." When? When the events have been accomplished, and the light shed upon the prophecy, makes plain that God hath spoken the truth? Is that the time? No: but "whereunto ye do well to take heed as unto a light that shineth in a dark place; until the day dawn and the day star arise in your hearts." The use of prophecy then is that of a lamp to light the traveler's feet along the dark and dreary path! If the chief use of prophecy is found after the event it foretells, it must be either to the righteous or the wicked that it is thus useful. It can not be to the wicked, for it is too late to be of use to them; the predictions having been accomplished, perhaps in their destruction. The flood proved the truth of God's word by Noah; but it was then too late to be of any advantage to the guilty world who perished for not having heeded the warning given before. And as to the righteous, surely they don't need the fulfillment of prophecy to satisfy them that God speaks the truth. No, my brethren; we do not need prophecy to be fulfilled to certify us of the truth of God; but we do need all the light it sheds upon our present path and upon the whole scene around to guide us through its intricate mazes to that "city of habitation" which is revealed to us as the home of our weary hearts, and our eternal dwelling of joy.

Prophecy is not designed to furnish food for curious imaginations or a field for the exercise of intellectual power. It is addressed to faith, to be by it simply received as God's word, and thus to become incorporated with the very existence of the inner man, humbling us at God's feet, weaning us from the world, enabling us to despise its attractions, and to be quiet and peaceful amidst its convulsions and its overturns, knowing beforehand what will be the end of its vaunting, proud career, and how God has prepared for the safety and blessing of his own amid the wide spread general crash.

What can enable us aright to pursue the study of a subject like this, except by a process somewhat similar to that which the prophet passed through? Let us consider it a moment. "In the year that King Uzziah died, I saw the Lord, high and lifted up, and his train filled the temple. Holy, holy, holy is the Lord of Hosts; the whole earth is full of his glory," is the cry which burst from the lips of the prostrate seraphim. What effect has this vision of glory on the prophet? It withers up all the pride and beauty of the flesh. In the presence of this glory the prophet has the deepest discernment of his own sinful condition, and of that of his people among whom he dwells, and says: "Then said I, woe is me; for I am undone; because I am a man of unclean lips, for I have seen the King, the Lord of Hosts."

This is needful for us as well as the prophet. It is this withering of the flesh, of all self-confidence and self-importance: this discovery to us of what we are, as sinners in the presence of a Holy God. It is this we need in order to traverse safely the scenes unfolded to us in prophecy, for they are scenes of judgment, of desolation, and of succeeding brightness and glory. But we could not pass and repass through them, and be instructed as to them, without being puffed up by increasing knowledge, unless our hearts learn these things in the brightness of the glory of God. O, we need this discovery of ourselves—of our deep sinfulness—so as to loathe and abhor ourselves, or our vain, proud hearts would turn our acquaintance with prophecy into a means of exalting ourselves above our brethren.

Isaiah takes his place as identified with his nation; he owns not only that he is a man of unclean lips, but that he dwells in the midst of a people of unclean lips. The Lord grant us in the presence of his glory this true brokenness of heart.

But the prophet is not left here; grace is administered to him. He is made to know that his iniquity is taken away, and his sin purged. And so with us when a broken heart is combined with obedience to the commands of God.

But an inquiry is now instituted. "Also I heard the voice of the Lord, saying, Whom shall I send, and who will go for us?" "Here am I, send me," is the prophet's ready response. The humbleness of the prophet, the simple blessed assurance of iniquity purged and sin removed which (the) gospel brings, and the readiness to run on any errand, and enter on any service which it may please our forgiving

Lord to appoint is here seen. And it is surely just that we shall receive to profit by these communications of God's mind as to the future of which the prophetic word is the medium. Now it is to him that the Holy Ghost bears testimony "He shall glorify me," said our blessed Lord.

Christ is the centre and object of all the counsels, and of all the ways of God. And accordingly, (which brings us at once to the subject before us), the whole prophetic testimony is thus summed up by the Apostle Peter when speaking of the Old Testament prophets he represents them as "searching what, or what manner of time the Spirit of Christ which was in them did signify, when it testified beforehand the sufferings of Christ, and the glory that should follow."—1 Peter 1:11. Those prophecies which relate to "the sufferings" of Christ, have of course been fulfilled. And so far as his personal glory in his resurrection from the dead and his session at the right hand of God is concerned, the predictions relative to these events have been accomplished. But the manifestation of his glories to the world is altogether future. The world has never seen him since he was taken down from the cross and laid in the rich man's sepulcher. For all the world believes or cares, he might be there still. But there are those who have been separated from the world by the tidings of his death and resurrection, and the salvation which has been wrought out. These are now sharing the fellowship of his sufferings; and being made comformable with his death, his word assures us that "if we suffer with him, we shall also reign with him." "If so be we suffer with him, we shall also be glorified together." This takes place when he comes again. This may be at any moment. Whenever that moment does arrive the Lord Jesus shall appear "in the clouds of heaven," "with the voice of the archangel, and the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first. Then we who are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air. So shall we ever be with the Lord," and reign with him "a thousand years," while all things are subdued unto him, and the heathen shall say, Let us go up to Mount Zion, unto the house of the Lord, that we may learn of him and live.

ANTIQUITY OF THE GOSPEL.

MANY of the religious part of the world to-day believe that the first proclamation of the good news was made when Christ was born into the world, and can not trace it any further back in the past. But when we take up the word of God as revealed by a modern prophet, the mind is drawn out in common sense and reason in contemplating the great things of Jehovah. We read in the inspired translation of the Holy Scriptures, through this modern prophet, that this gospel of life and salvation was given after the fall of man. We understand by reading Genesis 3:2, 3, that when the council was held in heaven, Satan came before the Lord God, saying: "Behold I, send me. I will be thy son, and I will redeem all mankind, that one soul shall not be lost. And surely I will do it. Wherefore, give me thine honor. But behold, my beloved Son, which was my beloved and chosen from the beginning, said unto me: Father, thy will be done; and the glory be thine forever."

We see here a conflict, a rebellion; and Satan and his host were cast out. Does this correspond with the Revelation of St. John the divine? He does not say there will be war in heaven; but rather, there was war in heaven. (See chapter 12:6-8.) Here is evidently the time and place when this God-given plan of redemption and salvation was made; hence it is called the gospel of the Son of God. In other words, it is adherence and obedience to certain laws, ordinances and commandments, to be taught to the children of men whenever there existed a necessity for the same again; ministers of this gospel should be called with a holy calling. Read Hebrews 5:4, 5. By this we see no man is qualified to do this work unless he is called of God, Jesus not excepted. And if we deny the revelations of God in the nineteenth century, then of course there are none equal to the task. God is good, and is mindful of the children of men, and would that all might be saved according to his plan.

MAY SEVENTIES PRESIDE?

THE article under this caption found in Herald, September 11th, 1886, betrays an uneasiness of the writer upon the subject, and a seeming fearfulness lest the question may not find a hearty response. Notwithstanding the precedent (of Seventy presiding) being established for the past twenty years, the cause of the disputation that has agitated the church from time to time that the brother refers to, still exists, and from the spirit as manifested in an editorial found in Herald, vol. 33, June 12th, 1886, is likely to continue. The Editorial says: "The church will appoint such men and officers [Seventies] as are best adapted to the work demanded [presiding]; and will expect the local ministry [High Priests and Elders] and membership to acquiesce in such appointments and cordially sustain the men appointed." If the precedent established by the church in placing Seventies to preside over districts, conferences, or missions is correct, why send out this feeler—"May Seventies Preside"—and then use every means of reason and sophistry to make it appear lawful?

The Seventy are the only quorum that the church differs upon in point of their jurisdiction, and why on this? Is not twenty years of practical experience sufficient time to try the merits of the theory of Seventies presiding? The feeling that still exists should be evidence enough to convince the most credulous that wrong exists somewhere. In our investigation of this vexed question, we failed to find in the history of the church from its commencement to the year 1844, one instance where a Seventy presided over church, conference, or any division of the church.

The writer says: "First, in the Seventy is vested the authority to preside; second, he has no responsibility of presiding over branches. Why? The reason is evident, it is not because he has not the authority, but, having been called to travel in all the world, a local charge would hinder him in his missionary work."

This is strange logic, the Seventy holding authority to preside but a local charge would hinder him in his missionary work. If presiding were a part of his work, would it be hindering him to attend to it? Does the presiding power of the Twelve hinder them in their missionary work?

"If a Seventy holds no authority to preside, he evidently does not belong to the Melchisedek priesthood; for it is written: 'The Melchisedek priesthood holds the right to presidency.' D. C. 104:3. To what priesthood does he then belong?"

We will introduce a few testimonies that may answer some of the brother's many questions. History of Joseph Smith, Mill. Star, vol. 15, page 849, says: "The Seventies are to be taken from the quorum of Elders, and are not to be High Priests. They are subject to the direction and dictation of the Twelve."

Again the writer says: "If an Elder is authorized to preside, a Seventy is also so authorized." Upon the same parity of reasoning the Deacon, holding the same Aaronic priesthood as the Priest, has also the right to baptize and administer the sacrament. Again he says: "Local presidency, then, belongs of right to the High Priest and Elder. But who shall preside over missions? * * * But in the absence of the Apostle, who shall preside? The High Priest or Elder? If so, by what authority?" We will introduce another testimony in answer to the brother's questions. See History of Joseph Smith, Mill. Star, vol. 15, p. 848: "A High Priest is a member of the same Melchisedek Priesthood with the Presidency, but not of the same power or authority in the church. The Seventies are also members of the same priesthood, are a sort of traveling council or priesthood, and may preside over a church or churches, until a High Priest can be had."

It will be understood that missions in that day were called conferences. See Mill. Star, vol. 15, pages 283-285; over which the twelve presided; and in their absence the High Priest was placed in charge. Things have changed somewhat since that time. For it is now said, "when at the late conference the Twelve recommended certain of the Seventy to take charge of certain missions which they themselves could not reach, they were acting in harmony with the law which says: 'It is the duty of the traveling High Council to call upon the Seventy, when they need assistance, to fill the several calls for preaching and administering the gospel, instead of others.'"—D. C. 104: 16.

The law the brother quoted lacked one essential feature to apply to their case, and without presiding authority it does not give them much prestige to act upon. But continues the brother, "And these Seventies, recommended and endorsed by the body, go out clothed with the authority of apostles, and may, in their individual capacity, officiate in any duty in which an apostle may officiate, except he is not a member of the presiding council, and can not partake in its deliberations." This is strange logic; the conference clothed these Seventies with authority of apostles that they could officiate in any duty of an apostle, only they could not preside. What a difference! Please tell us what authority the church clothed them with?

We will introduce another testimony of the truth of the law, for the benefit of Bro. "Lawabider," as we believe he is one of those unfortunate Seventies called by the late conference to preside over a mission wherein resides High Priests and Elders, efficient and willing to preside, and which innovation is in direct opposition to th law. Joseph Smith, filled with the divine afflatus of the Holy Spirit at the endowment at the Kirtland Temple, addressing the Quorum of Seventies, says:—"Also that the Seventies are not called to serve tables, [tithing], or preside over churches, to settle difficulties, but to preach the gospel and build them up, and set others, who do not belong to these quorums, to preside over them, who are High Priests.

The Twelve also are not to serve tables, but to bear the keys of the kingdom to all nations, and unlock them, and call upon the Seventies to follow after them, and assist them."—His. Joseph Smith, Mill. Star, vol. 15: p. 727. One more testimony we have to offer this time, concerning the duties of the Seventy.

Orson Hyde and John E. Page wrote to the Martyr concerning the duty of the Seventies, and in answer the Prophet said: "In answer to your inquiry in a former letter, relative to the duty of the Seventies in regulating churches, &c., I say that the duties of the Seventies are more particular to preach the gospel, and build up churches, rather than regulate them, that a High Priest may take charge of them. If a High Priest should be remiss in his duty, and should lead, or suffer the church to be led astray, depart from the ordinances of the Lord, then under the special direction of the Twelve, being duly commissioned by them with their delegated authority, to go to that church, and if agreeable to the majority of the members of said church, to proceed to regulate and put in order the same; otherwise, he can have no authority to act."—Mill. Star, vol. 17, p. 775.

According to the testimony offered, it would seem the Seventies lack one essential power to fully equip them for the duties of a mission, and that is the authority to preside. As the law and testimony stands, they can not preside where there are High Priests, they can not attend to the tithing, they can not settle difficulties in the church where there is a High Priest, in the absence of their superiors in point of authority; they then can not go into a church without a majority vote of that church; and then they must act under special act and direction of the Twelve, being duly commissioned by them with their delegated authority; that is, the power to act in their name, and by the authority of the Twelve. If the quorum of Seventies lack all these prerequisites, pray tell us by what authority the church sets them to preside over missions? If the Seventy have "no responsibility of presiding, saith the Lord your God," can conference make a responsibility and clothe them with the power of an Apostle?

FIGHTING FOR CREEDS.

ORTHODOXY AND LIBERALISM.

Contest in the Congregational Church over the Vital Question of Teaching that There is Probation for the Soul After Death.

A DOCTRINAL fight of the largest proportions is going on in the congregational church in the United States. Never before was there such imminent danger of disruption within the church. The controversy is expected to culminate next week.

Each of the congregational churches throughout the country is a law unto itself. It is not, strictly speaking, amenable to any central or supervisory authority. The denomination has no bishops nor any other authority to exercise control over the different churches. Each society selects or rejects its pastor, although a council of pastors is commonly asked to examine a candidate before ordination. The power of this body extends only to a refusal to ordain the candidate if he is found to differ in creed.

There has been, nevertheless, great conformity and unanimity among the churches in the matter of creed. Heretofore differences have been easily adjusted. For many years when any question of doctrine or other matter affecting the interests of all the churches arose it has been the practice to call a national council, made up of delegates from the different churches, to discuss the question and formulate a consensus of opinion regarding it. This action has had no binding force, and yet has been generally accepted as determinative. For the last eighteen years these national councils have been held triennially. The next national council will meet in this city Oct. 13.

The congregational church has also what is known as the American board of commissioners for foreign missions. It was organized in 1810, and has had complete control of the foreign missionary work of the church since that date. The body is self-perpetuating, and is limited to 200 corporate members. The effective body is customarily not larger than 100, many being incapacitated by old age and other causes. The honorary members, of whom there are some 12,000, have no vote. The board elects annually a prudential committee, which acts in the interim for the board in the management of the missions. Its action is subject to review by the whole board the end of each year, but, as a matter of fact, the prudential committee virtually exercises complete control over the work. The American board will hold its next meeting in Des Moines, Oct. 5-8.

The fight in the denomination is over the question of probation after death. A number of the most prominent divines openly profess and preach that doctrine. If it were only a matter of individual belief on the part of such ministers there would, perhaps, be very little commotion caused. But a far different state of things exists. The adherents to the doctrine are firmly established in Andover Theological seminary, the oldest and principal institution of the kind in the church, and are teaching it to students who are soon to become pastors, and promulgating the doctrine broadcast through church publications. They also have a foothold in the American board and in the prudential committee, and openly advocate sending out missionaries who will preach "progressive orthodoxy," as it is called.

The American board will elect a new prudential committee next week, and the absorbing question is: Shall a committee be chosen who will stand by the old-time orthodoxy of the church?

The trouble may be said to have begun with the election of Dr. Newman Smyth, in 1882, to the Abbot professorship in Andover Theological seminary to succeed Prof. Park. The trustees elected him, but the board of visitors, whose action is decisive, refused to confirm the appointment. They did so because they found that his views, especially on eschatology, or questions relating to death and the future state, were different from those held by the orthodox churches of New England.

The discussion was kept up by the ordination of several ministers of liberal views as pastors of churches in various parts of the country. The ordination of the Rev. F. A. Thayer at Quincy, Ill., was one of the most conspicuous instances.

Since 1882 several professorships at Andover have been filled by men who have been "liberal" in their views. These professors established the Andover Review, and through its columns for more than two years have persistently advocated their "progressive theology." They taught that no one could be lost or eternally punished who had no knowledge of Christ.

The leader, perhaps, in that movement has been Prof. Egbert C. Smyth, who is Brown professor of ecclesiastical history at Andover. He is a brother of Dr. Newman Smyth, and a member of the American board and of the prudential committee. He has been one of the strongest advocates of sending out new idea missionaries. In that he was powerfully supported by the Andover Review and the Christian Union.

Several members of the American board while they do not accept the "new theology" themselves, hold that the church should not exercise authority over its few missionaries in matters of belief which it can not exercise over its many pastors, and they will accordingly, in all probability, be on the side of the liberals whenever a vote is reached.

Feeling is running very high among the orthodox element. They say that the "progressive orthodox" people are Universalists in reality, and should leave the Congregational Church. They say they will resist strenuously the ingrafting of any Universalism on Congregationalism.

If the liberals can do so they will elect a prudential committee favorable to their doctrinal ideas and the sending out of missionaries who will teach it. If not able to do that they will try to have the American board instruct the committee not to make a candidate's acceptance or rejection of the "progressive theology" any test of his acceptability.

The orthodox element will be satisfied with nothing short of electing a committee unalterably opposed to the new and hated doctrine of Prof. Smyth and his followers.

If the orthodox element carries the day, there is likely to be an eruption at Andover. What the liberals may do, if defeated, can only be surmised. They may withdraw from the denomination and form another, or they may stay and continue the fight, hoping for better success in the future. The orthodox speakers will, no doubt, have some very blunt words to say about the teaching of "heresy" in their chief theological seminary. Action may be taken which will force the resignations of the liberal professors and cause a reorganization of the faculty. Such action, if taken, will probably not occur at the meeting of the American board, but at the national council, which follows in this city.

One of the most prominent Congregational ministers of the city said:

"This is the greatest fight the Congregational church has ever experienced. A crisis has been reached in which the very existence of the denomination as it now stands is at stake. The results, whatever they may be, will have a most important effect on the future history of the church."

The meeting of the American board will probably be attended by eight hundred or a thousand members, corporate and honorary. Its sessions will be opened to the public.

The Rev. Dr. Mark Hopkins is president and Mr. E. W. Blatchford vice-president. The present members of the prudential committee are: A. C. Thompson, D. D., Alpheus Hardy, Ezra Farnsworth, J. S. Ropes, Prof. Egbert C. Smyth, the Rev. E. B. Webb, C. C. Burr, Eldridge Torrey, A. H. Plumb, D. D., W. P. Elison, and the Rev. C. F. Thwing. Arrangements have been made for reduced fare over almost every railway in the country. The Rev. Dr. J. L. Withrow of Boston will preach the annual sermon before the board.

Conference Minutes.

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA.

This district conference convened October 6th, 1886 in Shattuck's Hall, Oakland, at 10:30 o'clock a. m., and was called to order by president Daley, who suggested that Bro. H. C. Smith be chosen to preside, which was approved by vote. Elder J. R. Cook was chosen secretary pro tem, and Elder G. S. Lincoln assistant. The following committees were chosen by the chair; one to draft a letter of condolence on the death of Elder T. J. Andrews composed of Elders H. P. Brown, G. S. Lincoln, and Wm. Anderson; one to secure a hall for meetings of conference, composed of H. P. Brown, John Nightengale, and Chas. Hawkins; one a court of Elders, composed of Thos. Daley, G. W. Harlow, and Wm. Hart; one on Reunion meetings, composed of Wm. Anderson, Chas. Hawkins, and G. S. Lincoln. Minutes of last April conference were read and approved. At 2 p. m. branches reported; San Francisco 75: including 5 Elders, 1 Priest, 1 Teacher, 3 Deacons. Sacramento 106: including 1 High Priest, 5 Elders, 2 Priests, 1 Teacher, 2 Deacons; 2 baptized, 6 received by letter, 1 received by vote, 1 died, 3 removed by letter. Lower Lake (formerly Spruce Grove), 26: including 2 Elders, 1 Priest, 1 Teacher, 4 added by letter. Santa Rosa 60: including 2 Elders, 2 Priests, 1 Teacher, 3 received by certificate of baptism, 4 removed by letter, 1 died. Oakland 97: including 1 High Priest, 12 Elders, 3 Priests, 2 Teachers, 2 Deacons, 8 removed by letter. Stockton 62: including 1 Seventy, 1 Elder, 2 Priests, 1 Teacher, 1 Deacon, 2 baptized, 1 died, 2 marriages.

Ministry Reports: President Thomas Daley, of the Seventy, had labored four months in Lake, Humboldt, Sacramento, El Dorado, Contra Costa and San Joaquin counties; had baptized 12. Elder G. W. Harlow, vice president, had labored in Sacramento with the branch officers attending to church service every Sunday; is willing to do all he can. High Priest H. P. Brown had preached in Oakland, San Francisco, and Lower Lake; gave a course of lectures at the latter place, to full houses, and had good attention. Preached a funeral sermon at Watsonville, also one at San Jose, and another at San Francisco, over the lamented Bro. T. J. Andrews; had the Methodist church at Watsonville, and was assisted by the pastor, Dr. Haswell, and his choir. Much interest was shown by full houses in each place, and good opportunity was given to preach doctrine. Had served as president of the Oakland Branch in which a good spirit is now manifest—the best known for years; also edited the Expositor. Elder Wm Anderson had been placed in a strange position since last Conference and had done little or nothing; had sold his business when he received his general appointment, at a sacrifice, and was ready for the field. But the Bishop notified him through the President of the Mission—Elder A. H. Smith—that he must pay his tithing; and Bro. Smith notified him that he must quit his scientific preaching before he entered the ministry, and confine himself to the gospel; that his services had better be had away from Southern California. These things so worked upon his mind as to why he should be thus restricted; so he accepted the presidency of the Oakland Branch and had preached there. Elder John Nightingale, President of Stockton Branch, held meeting every Sunday, was always present watching over the branch, which is in fine working order; accompanied Elder H. C. Smith in preaching at Burneyville and Peters. Elder Wm. Hart had assisted in Oakland Branch, and preached three times at Stockton; desired to do better in the future. Elder J. R. Cook had served as branch officer at Sacramento; preached when required; opened one new field outside of Sacramento, and preached there three times; will be ready for the field soon. Elder G. S. Lincoln presides over the San Francisco Branch, preached when necessary, also distributed tracts, and Expositors in San Francisco and surroundings; baptized three, held services every Sunday evening, and had kept his pulpit supplied. Elder C. W. Hawkins, President of Santa Rosa Branch, held meetings Sunday afternoons and Thursday evenings; had administered to the sick with good effect. Elder Wm. McLane had labored in Yuba, Butte, and Sutter counties. Elder S. B. Robinson had assisted Bro. Daley in holding meeting in the Congregational Church in Pacheco, also held meetings in private house, and five were baptized. Held meetings in Tice Valley, had served as superintendent of a Union Sunday School, and was doing good there. President H. C. Smith, of the Seventy, arrived in San Francisco in June; preached there twice, also at Oakland; went to Stockton, and preached 13 times; then went to Peters and preached 3 times; thence to Burneyville, Stanislaus county, and preached 9 discourses to the largest audiences he had met in the State in the Union meeting-house occupied by the Methodists and United Brethren. Has heard from there from some who wish to be baptized; wants an elder to go there and baptize them. Returned to San Francisco and preached once, went thence to Lower Lake and preached to the encouragement of the Saints; opened a new place in Long Valley, preached there three times, also at Excelsior, and found good interest; thence went to Sacramento, preached 9 times with good liberty; and now expects to go immediately to the southern districts of the State. Elder James H. Parr had labored with the President of the Sacramento Branch; has preached 14 discourses on the Book of Mormon, and 6 on the first principles of the gospel; had many calls for preaching—more than he could fill. Had a church offered him at Pleasant Grove, and other calls out in the country; has administered to the sick with blessings following, and is anxious to labor more. Elder Wm. Potter (by letter) expected to have been with us but can not; preached twice in Stockton; held one meeting in Lower Lake, one in San Francisco and baptized one; does not endorse Seventies presiding, as it is contrary to the law of God. Elder Owen Dinsdale (is 72 years old) has done good in some ways, as circumstances have permitted. Priest A. Anderson: his heart is in the work, and will do all he can. Priest J. A. Stromburg reported (by letter); has preached for Saint and sinner, and is still willing to do so. Deacon E. H. Barnes (by letter); has faithfully fulfilled his duty as Deacon of the San Francisco Branch to the best of his ability. On motion, ordered that J. A. Stromberg receive a new license from this conference. Report of Bishop's Agent read, corrected, and approved. We listened to a timely address by President Smith.

Thursday 10 a. m.—Committee on Hall reported having secured Hamilton Hall in Hamilton Church on 13th and Jefferson Streets, and had paid the rent, $5, for two nights. On motion Elder J. R. Cook was appointed a committee to advertise the meetings for the next two nights. On motion a committee of two, Elders Lincoln and Daley, was appointed to learn of Sr. T. J. Andrews whether she has received a temporary, or permanent appointment from the Bishop as his agent. Moved by H. P. Brown and seconded by C. W. Hawkins that a Treasurer be appointed for this district. At 2 p. m. the question of appointing a District Treasurer was considered, Elder Wm. Hart was made such Treasurer. Elder Thos. Daley was chosen President, Elder Jas. H. Parr vice-president, and Elder J. R. Cook secretary of district. The report of committee to draft resolutions of condolence on death of Bro. T. J. Andrews was read and adopted by a rising vote, and committee discharged.

Whereas, it has pleased our Heavenly Father to remove from our midst our esteemed brother, Thomas J. Andrews by death, and whereas it becomes us to bow with humble reverence to the decrees of our Heavenly Father, believing that he doeth all things well. Therefore, Resolved; That by the death of Bro. Andrews the Church has lost a faithful and excellent officer and member; the state a loyal and dutiful citizen; humanity a sympathizing friend; the wife a loving husband, and the children, a pure and upright guardian and affectionate father; and the world a genuine and Christian teacher. Resolved, That we desire to express our heart felt sympathy and condolence to the wife and family of the deceased in this their sad bereavement; and we pray our Heavenly Father to bless them with the joys of his salvation. Resolved, That these resolutions be spread on the records of this district, and that the Herald and Expositor be requested to publish them, and that the secretary of this district forward a copy of the same to the family of the deceased.

H. P. BROWN,
G. S. LINCOLN,
WM. ANDERSON. } Committee.

Officers present: 1 High Priest, 2 Seventies, 10 Elders, 1 Priest. Friday morning session: The committee on Reunion was referred back with instructions to report whether in their opinion such Reunions were permissible and should be held, and whether they should be District, or Mission Reunions, and if found advisable to recommend three persons a committee on same for this district. The committee appointed to visit sister T. J. Andrews and learn whether she has a permanent appointment from the Bishop to act as Bishop's Agent, report as follows: Sister Andrews was instructed to keep the books and moneys belonging to the church, and not give them up until she receives a direct order from the Bishop. On motion, Bro. Wm. Anderson was recommended by this conference to succeed Elder T. J. Andrews as Bishop's Agent. The committee appointed to act as a court of Elders reported no business brought before them. Afternoon session: on motion Resolved, That we sustain all the authorities of the church in righteousness. The meeting was now resolved into a season of prayer and praise. A committee was appointed by the chair to consider the propriety of holding Reunion meetings on this coast, consisting of C. W. Hawkins, Wm. Anderson, G. S. Lincoln, who reported as follows; We have considered the propriety of such Reunion meetings, and believe it would be of great benefit to the Church to hold such in each district, at such times as shall be deemed proper by the several conferences in this Mission, each conference to have control of the meetings in their respective districts; and we recommend that a standing committee be appointed in this district to confer with committees appointed by other districts, provided such other committees be appointed. The report was received, adopted, and the committee discharged; after which a standing committee composed of Brn. H. P. Brown, Wm. Anderson, and G. S. Lincoln was appointed by President Smith, to confer with committees of other districts, provided such other committees be appointed. Adjourned to meet in Sacramento on the second Friday in March, 1887.

MASSACHUSETTS.

This district conference convened at Boston, Massachusetts, September 25th, 1886, corner of Union Park and Washington streets at 2:30 p. m. Bro. John Smith was chosen to preside; F. M. Sheehy, clerk; Bro. George Yates assistant. Brn. Toombs, Ashton and Bullard were chosen as committee on branch reports; Brn. Webster and Holt as auditors; Sr. Julia Glover as organist; Bro. Bullard as chorister; Brn. Boyd and Robley as ushers; and all the Elders of conference to act as committee on appeals. Elders F. M. Sheehy, F. A. Potter, A. N. Hoxie, C. A. Coombs, H. H. Thompson, J. B. Pierce, E. O. Toombs, C. E. Brown, E. N. Webster, J. Holt, J. Woodward, N. R. Nickerson, J. Chester, A. Nickerson, T. Whiting; Priests, F. Steffee, F. Sears, J. C. Hoxie, I. B. Ames; Teachers, G. W. Robley, Wm. Talbot, W. B. Leland, George Ames, C. L. Monroe; Deacon T. Boyd; reported. Brn. J. Gilbert, G. Fisher, and W. H. Moore, reported by letter. Branch reports were received and referred to committee. The committee on the case of John Potts reported having labored with the brother, and recommend that labor be continued; which was carried. Evening session: Bishop's Agent and District Treasurer, reports were read and referred to the auditors. Bro. John Smith was sustained as president of the district, and Bro. Thomas Whiting as clerk. Bro. Thompson was by his own request released from his mission at Hills Grove. Bro. Coombs was continued in the mission to Attleboro; Bro. Perthel was appointed a mission to Hills Grove; Bro. Thompson to Artic and Pawtucket, R. I.; Bro. J. C. Hoxie was released from his mission to Fitchburg. It was then ordered that the rest of the evening session be devoted to preaching, which was accordingly done by Brn. N. R. Nickerson and H. H. Thompson. Sunday services: The forenoon, from 8:30 until 12:30, was devoted to a prayer and sacrament meeting conducted by Brn. Webster and Coombs, during which many things of an encouraging and strengthening nature were enjoyed by the Saints, confirmatory of the gospel restored in this dispensation.

Preaching at 2:30 by Elder T. Whiting, and at 7:30 by Elder F. M. Sheehy, to large and appreciative audiences. Monday, met at 11 a. m. Confirmed five who had been baptized during conference, one a native of Tahiti who heard the gospel preached there by our Elders. Committee on branch reports reported as having found Providence, Fall River, New Bedford, Boston, Brockton, Plainville, North Plymouth, Douglas and Little Compton correct. Bro. G. S. Yerrington reported by proxy. Auditors reported having found matters referred to them correct. Report of court on case of Potter vs. Chase, viz: "The committee appointed to try the case of Potter vs. Chase, have to report to you their disagreement in regard to a verdict and hereby submit our individual statements for the benefit of all properly concerned. M. H. Bond, chairman, C. E. Brown, C. A. Coombs." Report accepted and committee discharged. Moved that another court be appointed to try the case. Brn. T. Whiting, A. N. Hoxie, and J. B. Pierce were appointed as such court. A vote of thanks was tendered Boston folks for entertainment during conference. Adjourned to meet at Dennisport, Massachusetts, the last Saturday in January, 1887, at 2:30 p. m.

NODAWAY.

This district conference convened at the Freedom School House, Nodaway county, Missouri, at 11 a. m., Saturday, August 21st, 1886. Bro. Wm. Woodhead was chosen president pro tem; Jos. Flory, clerk. Ross Grove Branch: 21 members, including 2 Elders, 1 Teacher, and 2 Deacons; no changes since last report, Joseph Flory president, R. K. Ross, jr., clerk. Platte 75: including 9 Elders, 2 Priests, 2 Teachers, 1 Deacon; 1 removed; 1 baptized, 1 received on evidence of baptism. Ole Madison, president, M. P. Madison clerk. Eureka, not reported. 1:30 p. m. president Jas. Thomas in the chair. Visiting brethren were invited to participate in the deliberations of the conference. The president reported his labors in the district. Elders:—Ole Madison, Joseph Flory, A. J. Moore, Wm. Powell, Charles Williams, C. Christensen, R. K. Ross, Jr., and Peter Rasmussen (baptized 1) reported. Priest James Martin, and Teacher C. C. Nelson reported. James Thomas and C. C. Nelson delegates to the General Conference reported. On motion the resolution on the table in regard to disorganizing the district was taken up, and after being discussed, the resolution was lost. On motion, the question of adopting the General Conference rules of representation for the district was taken up and adopted. Bishop's Agent reported, received since last report $19.00; paid to the Bishop $17.00, on hand $2.00. President James Thomas offered his resignation; but on motion he was sustained as president of the district. On separate motions, Joseph Flory was sustained as clerk of the conference, and R. K. Ross, Jr., as Bishop's Agent for the district. On motion conference resolved to hold its next session with the Saints of the Eureka branch to meet at 10 o'clock a. m. on Saturday the 11th of December 1886, and to continue over Sunday, the 12th. The President was authorized to be the traveling companion of Bro. A. J. Moore as missionary in the district. Prayer meeting in the evening at the house of Bro. Ole Madison, president Thomas in charge. Sunday the 22d baptism was administered to four persons, by Bro. A. J. Moore, confirmation meeting at the house of Bro. A. Jensen. Elders Chas. Williams, Wm. Powell, and Joseph Flory confirmed those who had been baptized. At the same time Bro. John T. Ford was ordained to the office of teacher, under the hands of Elder Joseph Flory and R. K. Ross, Jr. Preaching at the school house at 11 a. m. by Elder A. J. Moore. 2 p. m. preaching in the grove of Bro. Jensen by Bro. Moore, who also preached at the school house at night. The preaching meetings were well attended by intelligent and seemingly interested audiences, and upon the whole the conference was one of pleasure, and we trust profit to the Saints of the district. Adjourned to meet as per above resolution.

ALABAMA.

This district conference convened at Pleasant Hill Branch, Butler county, Alabama, October 9th and 10th, 1886, at 11 a. m. G. T. Chute, president; L. G. Parker, secretary. Devoted one hour to prayer. Met at 3 p. m. Lone Star Branch has 30 members, including 2 Priests; 1 baptized, 4 received by vote, 1 died. Pleasant Hill 70, including 2 Elders, 2 Priests, 2 teachers; 1 received by baptism, 1 died. Elders F. Vickery, J. F. McPherson, G. R. Scogin (baptized 4, 3 at Macedonia of which there was no report), W. J. Booker, and G. T. Chute, baptized 5, reported. Priests J. T. Miniard, M. K. Harp; Teachers W. S. McPherson, and W. H. Huggins, reported. The general authorities of the church were sustained; also G. T. Chute, president; L. G. Parker Secretary, and J. G. Vickery, Bishop's agent, were sustained. Preaching at night by John Hawkins, of the Florida district; Sunday morning preaching at 11 a. m., by Elder G. T. Chute, to a large congregation, after which a basket dinner was served of which all were invited to partake. All seemed to enjoy themselves. After dinner was over, preaching again was had by G. T. Chute. Preaching at early candlelighting by Elder G. T. Chute. The meetings were well attended throughout. Adjourned to meet with the Lone Star Branch, Monroe County, Alabama, February 5th and 6th, 1887.

Miscellaneous.

DIED.

HODGKINS.—At Blenheim, Ontario, October 7th, 1886, of consumption, Bro. William H. Hodgkins; aged 19 years, 3 months, and 25 days. He was buried on the 9th, and the funeral sermon was preached by Bro. Arthur Leverton, to a large number of Saints and friends assembled at the conference of the Kent and Elgin district. He was ready and willing to go.

CATO.—At Manchester, Red River county, Texas, September 11th, 1886, sister Sarah S., wife of Elder A. J. Cato, aged 43 years, 5 months, and 11 days. Sr. Cato obeyed the gospel in Alabama, in 1866, and lived the life of a Saint. The last seven years of her life were spent in traveling with her husband who was in the active ministry, and many times she would walk eight miles to be at a meeting, as cheerfully as if it was only half a mile; during this time she never murmured at any thing that might befall her; whether adversity or prosperity. She passed away like falling into a quiet sleep. "Those who knew her best, loved her most."

CATO.—At Manchester, Red River county, Texas, October 5th, 1886, Sarah Amanda, infant daughter of Elder A. J. and S. S. Cato; aged two months and fifteen days.

"The little bud of promise, it did not tarry long,
But He who gave it took it; he doeth nothing wrong.
It is now a little angel, and with its Savior dwells;
And if I but live righteous, in the end, all will be well."

WILLIAMS.—In Mason county, West Virginia, September 19th, 1886, Bro. James H. Williams. He was born December 13th, 1860, at Red Sulpher Springs, Monroe county, West Virginia; was baptized by Elder T. J. Beatty, June 14th, 1886. His stay was short with us. We miss him, O how much! He leaves a wife and one child, a father, mother, and a large family of brothers and sisters, also many friends. He was greatly loved by all who knew him, and though he had many persecutions he bore them patiently. The funeral sermon was preached from 1 Cor. 15: 35, by Elder J. L. Williams.

SISTERS AID SOCIETY.

Report of the Sisters Aid Society of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ, of Independence, Jackson County, Missouri:—Organized February 9th, 1879; membership fee, ten cents; five cents every other week, when we meet. The vote of the majority, influenced by the reports of the Aid Committee, and other members governs the disbursement of the means. Fifty yards of carpeting made and sold for $19.60; Quilts and garments sold for $24.45; Two festivals $40.50. The Society has never numbered more than twenty-seven members at any time. Total $291. Gifts and money to the poor, 33.60. Paid toward building the church, $50.00. Chandeliers and other gifts for the church, $19.60; for papering and calomining, $28.00; for carpets and matting, $24.40; for sofa and chairs for the platform, and trimmings for the pulpit, $31.75; towards the stove $7.00; cloth for sacramental table, $2.25; leaving a total on hand of $17.45.

By order of Society.

CONFERENCE NOTICES.

The Western Maine District will convene with the Saints at Little Deer Isle, Maine, November 13th and 14th, 1886. Business meeting at two p. m. 13th. It is hoped that all will attend.

WM. G. PERT, Dist. Pres.

REUNION REVIVAL.

The Saints here are feeling well generally. We are going to have a revival meeting at Stewartville, beginning the first of November and expect it to continue for two weeks. Bro. H. C. Bronson will be with us. All the Saints in the Far West District, and all others that desire are invited. Come Saints, and let us have a grand revival, that we may be strengthened in the glorious work in which we are engaged, and souls be converted to the faith. A. W. HEAD.

THERE is a tremendous temperance lecture contained in the following: A lady living on the Blue Ridge in Rappahannock county, Virginia, had twelve stands of bees, which were very valuable until a distillery was started in the neighborhood. Since it was started the bees fly over there and get very drunk, and are now of very little profit. Too much "peach and honey."

SAD STORIES FROM BERLIN.

OUT of a population of 1,200,000 in Berlin more than 150,000 are receiving public charity. Many of the workingmen here openly favor community of wives. Divorces have increased to 15 per cent of the marriages solemnized. The attendance at the churches has decreased to 2 per cent of the adult population, and of 48,000 funerals last year nearly 30,000 were performed without any religious ceremonies whatever.

Women flock by thousands to the city to obtain employment, and, failing to get what they want, large numbers fall and are lost.

This evil has become so great that strenuous efforts are being made to avoid it. The law of consent has already been raised in a similar way as it was done in New York and in England. By such legislative enactment some sort of protection is extended to girls up to the age of 18. Lodging houses and benevolent institutions have been established to aid working women, and a society of ladies has been formed charged with protecting, sustaining, and counseling women up to the age of 35.

A FINE ARTOTYPE LITHOGRAPH PORTRAIT OF PRES. JOS. SMITH,

Fac simile of a Stippled Crayon, life size, bust form, will be published for the holidays, which we trust will be appreciated by all brothers and sisters.

Portraits will be sent to any part of the world on receipt of price, $1.25.

DAVID WHITMER REVIEWED.

WE give below what purports to be the last statement of David Whitmer in respect to Joseph the Seer, the Book of Mormon, etc., etc., with what we think is a needed and just review of it. We quote from the article as printed in the Chicago Inter-Ocean, October 17th. It differs a little from that published in the Omaha Herald and other papers.

"RICHMOND, Mo., October 10th.—[Special correspondence of the Omaha Herald.]—David Whitmer, the only living witness to 'the divine authenticity of the Book of Mormon,' is not dying. His recent extraordinary feebleness was brought on by the intense heat, which very naturally affects one at his advanced age rather severely. He is not even confined to his bed, although he passes the greater portion of his time there, and does little else than rest. He is nearly eighty-two years of age. One would scarcely infer this from his erect carriage and wonderful nerve power any more than from the exceedingly fine control he exercises over a retentive and well stored memory, which responds readily to his call with accurate details. Newspaper reporters are not admitted to his presence, and it is no wonder when one recalls the shameful misrepresentations which have been sent out as 'interviews.' The last of these was written by an unprincipled penny-a-liner who, when he was told emphatically that he could not see Mr. Whitmer, sent off to his paper the sensational announcement that the 'White-haired Hero of Hill Cumorah' had just been stilled in death, and that with his latest breath he gurgled: 'The Book of Mormon is a fraud.'

"Your correspondent has just finished the last of a series of interesting conversations with the old gentleman, in which after considerable coaching, he expressed himself without reserve, by reason of our personal friendship. David Whitmer is one of those three 'special witnesses' who in 1829 sent out to the world the following quaint proclamation:

"Testimony of the Three Witnesses.—Be it known unto all nations, kindreds, tongues unto whom this work shall come that we, through the grace of God, the Father, and our Lord Jesus Christ, have seen certain plates which contain this record (the Book of Mormon), which is a record of the people of Nephi, and also of the Lamanites, their brethren, and also of the people of Jared, who came from the tower of which hath been spoken, and we also know that they have been translated by the gift and power of God, for His voice hath declared it unto us, wherefore we know of a surety that the work is true; and we also testify that we have seen the engravings which are upon the plates, and they have been shown unto us by the power of God and not of man. And we declare with words of soberness that an angel of God came down from heaven, and he brought and laid before our eyes that we beheld and saw the plates and the engravings thereon, and we know that it is by the grace of God, the Father, and our Lord Jesus Christ that we beheld and bear record that these things are true, and it is marvellous in our eyes, nevertheless, the voice of the Lord commanded us that we should bear record of it; wherefore, to be obedient unto the commandments of God we bear testimony of these things; and we know that if we are faithful in Christ we shall rid our garments of the blood of all men and be found spotless before the judgment seat of Christ, and shall dwell eternally with Him in the heavens; and the honor be to the Father and to the Son and to the Holy Ghost which is one in God. Amen.

"OLIVER COWDERY,
"DAVID WHITMER,
"MARTIN HARRIS."

Any one who will carefully compare the above "Testimony" with the same document as found in the Book of Mormon, will find that the reporter was not literally exact in his work, but has left out words and added others.

"Oliver Cowdery never followed the church after the disaffection of the Whitmer party in 1838, but remained in Missouri, and in 1862 was laid under the quiet, green sod at Richmond."

Oliver Cowdery lived for years after 1838 in and near Elkhorn, Wisconsin. He was re-baptized and ordained an Elder at Council Bluffs, Iowa, about 1847, a seeming confession that he believed he was legally cut off in 1838, and he died about 1850.

"Harris became estranged from the church at about the same time and from the same causes also, but long after he had become feeble in both body and mind he was persuaded by persistent importuning to join his destinies with the Utah Mormons, and thither he went more than ten years ago, only to lay down his bones in the shadow of the great tabernacle.

"Mr. Whitmer entertains no doubt whatever that this singular action upon the part of Harris was wholly chargeable to the enfeebled condition of his mind, which had begun to manifest certain positive symptoms of imbecility even before he entertained the overtures from the Rocky Mountain saints. His step in this direction was greatly deplored by his old-time associates, 'the witnesses' (there were eight other witnesses who testified to having handled the plates), who had come out solid from the church in 1838 and remained, with this one exception, in perfect accord."

Joseph Smith Sen., Hyrum Smith and Samuel H. Smith, did not go out with David and John Whitmer and Hiram Page; nor is there evidence that Christian, Jacob and Peter Whitmer Jr., did. The latter died prior to August, 1837. See Mill. Star, 16:54.

"When this serious rupture in the organization occurred it took from the fold among others John Whitmer, the church historian, and with him the church records covering their early history up to that date."

John Whitmer was in full accord with the Church up to March, 1836, and after. See Messenger and Advocate, page 287.

"These records are in this town in the possession of John Christian Whitmer, a son of one of the 'eight witnesses,' and with the original manuscript of the Book of Mormon, which David Whitmer holds, are really the most notable relics of the church, and are much sought after by the Utah Mormons."

Genuine Christians do not worship "relics;" and the printer's copy of the Book of Mormon, and what historical items were left by John Whitmer, have but little value in any other direction.

"In 1879 two of the Mormon 'aposties,' Orson Pratt and Joseph F. Smith, (a son of Hyrum Smith, who was killed with the prophet), visited Richmond for the express purpose of obtaining these time-worn sheets, and they came admirably prepared to pay for them. Mr. Whitmer received them courteously, and Apostle Pratt said:

"Father Whitmer, we desire to purchase the manuscript, and we are authorized to say that you may name your price, and (with a patronizing air) be sure you put the price high enough, for the church has plenty of money in the treasury, you know."

"It was a brilliant overture; but how dismally it failed. Old Mr. Whitmer replied with quiet emphasis: 'Elder Pratt, there isn't gold enough in the world to buy it.'

"They knew it, too, and no further importuning was indulged in. The tavern-keeper makes the very trustworthy statement that before leaving Richmond, Orson Pratt told him that they would have willingly paid one hundred thousand dollars for the manuscript. Much speculation has been indulged in regarding the particular reason for this anxiety on the part of the church to possess this relic, some going so far as to assert that it is traceable to an important difference which is said to exist in the text touching on polygamy as between the original manuscript and the present reading of the Book of Mormon.

"In glancing through this original manuscript your correspondent discovered the notable text which so completely annihilates the morality which the Mormons claim for polygamy. It is found in the second book of Jacob, sixth chapter, and the copy herewith furnished is a faithful and accurate tracing—a perfect fac simile of the original translation in the hand writing of Oliver Cowdery. Mr. Whitmer's remarkable attachment for the manuscript may be easily accounted for."

In all the editions of the Book of Mormon, except perhaps the Scandinavian, Jacob 2:6 reads just alike. There is no "second book of Jacob, sixth chapter," in the Book of Mormon.

"He is one of the very few who saw it written, that is, parts of it—and one may infer from the tenor of his testimony and the sincerity with which he still adheres to it that he entertains no shadow of a doubt that the record came forth by divine inspiration. His recital of reminiscences which take him back to the days of his devotion to the Mormon prophet are pathetic and interesting.

"He was but twenty-four years of age, and working on his father's farm near Palmyra, N. Y., when the village school-teacher, Oliver Cowdery, at that time a stranger to him, mentioned in a somewhat serious way the reputed finding of gold plates by Joseph Smith—a topic on everybody's tongue for miles around. Cowdery was visibly impressed by the report, and announced his intention to visit Smith and investigate the matter for himself, promising Whitmer, at the latter's request to advise him of the results of his investigation upon his return. A letter from Cowdery, a few days later, urged his friend to come immediately to where Smith and the plates were, in order that he (Whitmer) might receive the personal assurance that Smith's claims were substantial. He went. It was a two days' journey. The prophet received him with open arms, and he remained long enough to become strongly and favorably impressed with the situation.

"It was not long after this incident that Whitmer while plowing in the field one afternoon was visited by Smith and Oliver Cowdery, who requested him to accompany them into the woods for the purpose of witnessing a manifestation which should qualify him and Cowdery to testify as witnesses of the divine authenticity of the Book of Mormon; for Smith explained that this action was in pursuance of clearly defined instructions received from an angel of the Lord. The woods were not distant more than a stone's throw from the farm house, and thither they repaired and engaged in 'fervent prayer.' All of a sudden Mr. Whitmer says he beheld a dazzlingly brilliant light that surpassed in brightness even the sun at noonday, and which seemed to envelop the woods for a considerable distance around. Simultaneously with the light came a strange, entrancing influence, which permeated him so powerfully that he felt chained to the spot, while he also experienced a sensation of joy absolutely indescribable. While trying to realize what had come over him there appeared immediately in front of the little party a personage clothed in white, and near him a table containing a number of gold plates, some brass plates, the urim and thummim, the sword of Laban, and some other articles. Whitmer and Cowdery were requested by the personage to examine these things, and after the inspection they were told that the Lord would demand of them that they bear witness to all the world. Mr. Whitmer describes every detail of the 'vision' with great precision and much fervency and insists that he handled and scrutinized the plates, and that the form and appearance of the strangely engraved characters were so impressed upon his memory that he would never forget them.

"At this particular stage of the recital an inspection of a copy of the hieroglyphics made from the first of the gold plates by Joseph Smith and preserved with the same solicitude that is thrown around the original manuscript becomes of curious interest. The accompanying cut is a perfect fac-simile of the little sheet which it took Joseph Smith a whole week to copy, so particular was he that the characters should be perfectly reproduced, and that the 'reformed Egyptian' language should be shown up in all its native simplicity; for, it must not be forgotten, there was a singular significance in the errand which this scrap of paper was destined to perform.

"Martin Harris, who had received a similar 'visitation' to that recounted by the other two witnesses, was dispatched to New York with this copy of the gold plate, which he presented to Professor Anthon with a request for the learned linguist to read it; in fulfillment of a prophecy of Isaiah, which is here literally applied, and which reads:

"And the word of the Lord has become unto them as the leaves of a book which are sealed, and which is delivered unto him that is learned, saying: Read this, I pray thee, and he saith, I can not, for it is sealed, etc." [This quotation is incorrect. Read Isaiah 29: 11.—Ed.]

"Much of the translation of the plates was accomplished at the house of Peter Whitmer, the father of David, and the latter witnessed demonstrations on more occasions than one of the prophet's manipulation of the stone spectacles. He states that the work of translation occupied fully eight months, and that at times this peculiar instrument would refuse to perform its functions. On such occasions the prophet would resort to prayer, and after a short season he would return to find that the urim and thummim reflected the words of the translation with its wonted power. He had to be humble and spotless in his deportment in order that the work might advance. On one occasion the prophet had indulged in a stormy quarrel with his wife. Without pacifying her or making any reparation for his brutal treatment, he returned to the room in the Whitmer residence to resume his work with the plates.

"The surface of the magic stone remained blank, and all his persistent efforts to bring out the coveted words proved abortive. He went into the woods again to pray, and this time was gone fully an hour. His friends became positively concerned, and were about to institute a search, when Joseph entered the room, pale and haggard, having suffered a vigorous chastisement at the hands of the Lord. He went straight in humiliation to his wife, entreated and received her forgiveness, returned to his work, and, much to the joy of himself and his anxious friends surrounding him, the stone again glared forth its letters of fire."

This passage has the ring of a malicious attempt to bring reproach upon the memory and work of Joseph. It must strike the reflective mind as very inconsistent that God would call and empower a man of quarrelsome, "brutal" instincts toward his wife or any one else, to be his seer—"choice seer"—to found and build up his great and marvellous work, and of whom He says in this same Book of Mormon, "I will make him great in mine eyes; for he shall do my work."—2 Neph 2: 2. It is not impossible, nor highly improbable, that Joseph and his wife had some misunderstanding or unpleasantness then, or afterwards; but those who knew them well, and best, certify to their mutual affection for each other from first to last. Hear Joseph's last written words to Emma: "What transports of joy swelled my bosom when I took by the hand, on that night, [June 11th, 1844, sixteen days before his murder.—Ed.] my beloved Emma.—She that was my wife, even the wife of my youth, and the choice of my heart. * * * Again is she here, even in the seventh trouble, undaunted, firm and unwavering, unchangeable, affectionate Emma!"—Life of Joseph, p. 654.

Of their mutual regard and affection, Emma testified in 1877, in answer to the question, "Were you in the habit of quarreling?" "No. There was no necessity for any quarreling. He knew that I wished for nothing but what was right; and as he wished nothing else, we did not disagree. He usually gave some heed to what I had to say. It was quite a grievous thing to many that I had any influence with him."—Life of Joseph, page 795.

And of the general good repute of Joseph, Oliver Cowdery bore record in the Messenger and Advocate, October, 1835. This was some time before David Whitmer and his fellows became disaffected. Oliver's testimony is far the most reliable, first, from the fact that he was associated with Joseph much more intimately and for a much longer time than David Whitmer; second, for the reason that his mind was not then soured and biased by wrong supposed now by David Whitmer to have been done by Joseph. Here is what he then said:

"But in consequence of certain false and slanderous reports which have been circulated, justice would require me to say something upon the private life of one whose character has been so shamefully traduced. By some he is said to have been a lazy, idle, vicious, profligate fellow. These I am prepared to contradict, and that too by the testimony of many persons with whom I have been intimately acquainted, and know to be individuals of the strictest veracity, an unquestionable integrity. All these strictly and virtually agree in saying, that he was an honest, upright, virtuous, and faithfully industrious young man. And those who say to the contrary can be influenced by no other motive than to destroy the reputation of one who never injured any man in either property or person.

While young, I have been informed he was afflicted with sickness; but I have been told by those for whom he has labored, that he was a young man of truth and industrious habits. And I will add further that it is my conviction, if he never had been called to the exalted station in which he now occupies, he might have passed down the stream of time with ease and in respectability, without the foul and hellish tongue of slander ever being employed against him. It is no more than to be expected, I admit, that men of corrupt hearts will try to traduce his character and put a spot upon his name: indeed, this is according to the word of the angel; but this does not prohibit me from speaking freely of his merits, and contradicting those falsehoods—I feel myself bound so to do, and I know that my testimony, on this matter, will be received and believed while those who testify to the contrary are crumbled to dust, and their words swept away in the general mass of lies when God shall purify the earth!

“Connected with this, is the character of the family: and on this I say as I said concerning the character of our brother—I feel myself bound to defend the innocent always when opportunity offers. Had not those who are notorious for lies and dishonesty, also assailed the character of the family I should pass over them here in silence; but now I shall not forbear. It has been industriously circulated that they were dishonest, deceitful and vile. On this I have the testimony of responsible persons, who have said and will say, that this is basely false; and besides, a personal acquaintance for seven years, has demonstrated that all the difficulty is, they were once poor, (yet industrious), and have now, by the help of God, arisen to note, and their names are like to (indeed they will) be handed down to posterity, and had among the righteous.—They are industrious, honest, virtuous, and liberal to all. This is their character; and though many take advantage of their liberality, God will reward them; but this is the fact, and this testimony shall shine upon the records of the saints, and be recorded on the archives of heaven to be read in the day of eternity, when the wicked and perverse, who have vilely slandered them without cause or provocation, reap their reward with the unjust, where there is weeping, wailing and gnashing of teeth!—if they do not repent.”—Messenger and Advocate, p. 200.

“The Urim and Thummim in this strange process of translation, would reflect a number of words in pure English which would remain on its face until the party acting as scribe had got it correctly written, and the occasional disposition of the characters to remain long after they had been so written was always an infallible evidence that there was something wrong in the translation of the record, and a close comparison would invariably reveal this fact. When the necessary corrections had been made the words would instantly disappear from the Urim and Thummim and new ones take their place.

“The first 116 pages when completed were by permission of the prophet intrusted to the hands of Martin Harris, who carried them home to his incredulous relatives in triumph, hoping by the exhibition to convert his family and kinfolk from their uncompromising hostility to the religious premises he had adopted. Upon retiring at night he locked up the precious pages in a bureau drawer, along with his money and other valuables. In the morning he was shocked to find that they had been stolen, while his money had been left untouched. They were never found and were never replaced, so that the Book of Mormon is to-day minus just 116 pages of the original matter, which would increase the volume fully one-fourth its present size. This unpardonable carelessness evoked the stormiest kind of chastisement from the Lord, who took from the prophet the Urim and Thummim and otherwise expressed his condemnation. By fervent prayer and by otherwise humbling himself, the prophet however, again found favor, and was presented with a strange, oval-shaped, chocolate-colored stone, about the size of an egg, only more flat, which, it was promised, should serve the same purpose as the missing Urim and Thummim (the latter was a pair of transparent stones set in a bow-shaped frame and very much resembled a pair of spectacles). With this stone all of the present Book of Mormon was translated.

“It is the only one of these relics which is not in the possession of the Whitmers. For years Oliver Cowdery surrounded it with care and solicitude; but at his death, Old Phineas Young, a brother of Brigham Young, and an old-time and once-intimate friend of the Cowdery family, came out from Salt Lake City, and during his visit he contrived to get the stone from its hiding place through a little deceptive sophistry expended upon the grief-stricken widow. When he returned to Utah he carried it in triumph to the apostles of Brigham Young’s ‘lion house.’”

Joseph Smith, in a letter to John Wentworth, editor of the Chicago Democrat, in 1842, published in the Times and Seasons, vol. 3, page 707, says:—“With the records [plates of the Book of Mormon, Ed.] was found a curious instrument which the ancients called ‘Urim and Thummim,’ which consisted of two transparent stones set in the rim of a bow, fastened to a breastplate. Through the medium of the Urim and Thummim I translated the record by the gift and power of God.” To this agrees the testimony of Oliver Cowdery, given September 7th, 1834, as follows:

“Near the time of the setting of the sun, Sabbath evening, April 5th, 1829, my natural eyes for the first time beheld this brother. He then resided in Harmony, Susquehanna County, Pa. On Monday, the 6th, I assisted him in arranging some business of a temporal nature, and on Tuesday, the 7th, commenced to write the Book of Mormon. These were days never to be forgotten—to sit under the sound of a voice directed by the inspiration of heaven, awakened the utmost gratitude of this bosom! Day after day I continued, uninterrupted, to write from his mouth, as he translated, with the Urim and Thummim, or, as the Nephites would have said, ‘Interpreters,’ the history, or record, called ‘The Book of Mormon.’”

It must be allowed that these men best knew by what means the Book of Mormon was translated. If the stone of which Mr. Whitmer speaks was used in translating, it was in effect a Urim and Thummim, yet it was evidently not the chief instrument, nor did its use detract from the Seer’s powers of Joseph Smith. It rather confirms and exalts them, showing that the gift of translation and revelation was bestowed of God upon the Seer in person, and was of first importance and virtue. In this connection it should be remembered that David Whitmer had nothing to do, directly, with the work of translating the Book of Mormon. He was neither translator nor scribe, but only an occasional observer.

“In reciting this early experience of the church Mr. Whitmer rises to his feet, and with an intense earnestness and a clear, and forcible iteration, he carries the listener along through every detail with wonderful precision. ‘Do I still believe that Joseph Smith was a divinely inspired prophet?’ repeats the old man. ‘I know he was; it is not a matter of belief. But he fell; yes, he fell, like David, like Solomon. They were great prophets and wise men, greatly favored of the Almighty; but God did not sustain them in their sins and corruptions, and he did not sustain Joseph, either.’

“In narrating the circumstances of the prophet’s fall, Mr. Whitmer becomes especially emphatic in his denunciation of the action that changed the name of the church and altered many of the revelations and commandments, so as to admit such abominable doctrines as the ‘high priesthood,’ baptism for the dead, polygamy, and others. Here the old man takes from a well-worn trunk several volumes of the first editions of the Book of Commandments, which he proceeds to contrast with the present ‘Book of Doctrine and Covenants’ as published by the Utah Mormons. The comparison undoubtedly reveals some strange cuttings out and fillings in. The first of these early volumes has the following title page: ‘A book of commandments for the government of the Church of Christ, organized according to law on April 6, 1830. Zion. W. W. Phelps & Co., 1833.’ This volume was supplemented in 1835 by one published in Kirtland, Ohio, which bears the title: ‘Doctrine and Covenants, Church of the Latter Day Saints, carefully selected from the revelations of God, and compiled by Joseph Smith, Oliver Cowdery, Sidney Rigdon, Frederick G. Williams, presiding elders of said church, proprietors, Kirtland, Ohio,’ etc. From several texts in the Book of Mormon as well as by the early revelations given to Joseph Smith, Mr. Whitmer contends that the name first bestowed upon the organization—‘The Church of Christ’—is the only title approved by the Lord, and that the changes since made are unmistakable evidence of the apostasy of the Utah Mormons. But this is not all. There have been whole paragraphs injected into some of these early commandments, and matter too, entirely foreign to the texts.’ An instance of this appears in the clause referring to the Melchisedec priesthood, not a mention of which system is found in the revelations until after the ‘revision.’”

If Mr. Whitmer knew, and still knows, that Joseph Smith was called of God a seer, a prophet, a revelator, and a translator to bring forth the Book of Mormon, which in 2 Nephi 2:2, compares Joseph Smith to Moses, he should fear lest he like Aaron, Miriam, Korah, Dathan, Abiram and others, find that his judgment is at fault, and that like them he is really fighting against God. He admits and advocates the calling and authority of Joseph, but assumes that he "fell." Who made him the judge in these matters? What and whence are his credentials for correcting and reproofing the Seer? By what authority does he sit in judgment upon and undertake to rectify the ministerial conduct and administration of that Seer of whom God said: "I will make him great in mine eyes; for he shall do my work?" If he is called and has authority and capability to do such a work, what and where are the evidences of it? Where is there a sentence or a word in the books he endorses, stating or implying that he ever was or ever would be called to such a work? What work has he done for the church since 1836, except in bearing testimony to the prophetic mission of Joseph Smith and the divinity of the Book of Mormon? Jesus says we are to judge men "by their fruits;" and what have been the works of David Whitmer for the past fifty years! His work, appointed of God, was to bear witness to the Book of Mormon. We honor him in that; but we reject him as an interpreter of the Scripture, and when he labors to tear down the work of God's Seer.

It is evident that in the over-ruling providence of God, David Whitmer has been kept in Richmond till now for the sole purpose of bearing witness to the calling of Joseph as a prophet, Seer, and revelator and translator, and also to the divinity of the Book of Mormon. But when he opposes his judgment, his interpretations of Scripture, and his testimony against the "great and marvellous work" ordained of God and founded by Joseph Smith, Oliver Cowdery and others, he is doing what God has never called him to do, but that which we fear he has suffered Wm. E. McLellin and other aspiring, overzealous, unwise, and unauthorized men to persuade him to do. His movements since 1837 prove as much.

We honor and revere David Whitmer in his proper calling; and we would not mar his peace or darken his sky, but when in one moment he testifies to the divine mission of Joseph Smith and the Book of Mormon and in the next rejects the prophetic work of Joseph as set forth in that Book and as is claimed by this same Seer, then we think Mr. Whitmer is sadly out of his place, and we treat him accordingly. Joseph Smith never claimed personal perfection. His revelations represent him as being imperfect, and in this respect similar to many others whom God called to be his prophets and Seers.

"A comprehensive statement of Mr. Whitmer's views on these improvised doctrines, made in refutation of a scandalous misrepresentation invented and sent out by some reporter, contains the following salient points:

"I have never at any time denied that testimony or any part thereof which has so long since been published with that book (the Book of Mormon), as one of the three witnesses. Those who know me best well know that I have always adhered to that testimony; and that no man may be misled or doubt my present views in regard to the same, I do again affirm the truth of all my statements as then made and published. He that hath an ear to hear let him hear; it was no delusion! What is written is written, and he that readeth let him understand. And that no one may be misled or deceived by this statement, I wish here to state that I do not endorse polygamy or spiritual wifeism. It is a great evil, shocking to the moral sense, and the more so because practiced in the name of religion. It is of men and not of God, and is especially forbidden in the Book of Mormon itself. I do not indorse the change of the name of the church, for as the wife takes the name of the husband so should the Church of the Lamb of God take the name of its head, even Christ. It is the Church of Christ. As to the high priesthood, Jesus Christ himself was the last great high priest; this too after the order of Melchisedec, as I understand the Holy Scriptures. Finally, I do not indorse any of the teachings of the so-called Mormons or Latter Day Saints, which are in conflict with the gospel of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ as taught in the Bible and Book of Mormon, for the same gospel is plainly taught in both of these books as I understand the word of God.

"Mr. Whitmer denies that apostles, presidents and councillors and high priests are legitimate appointments of the church and the assertion is substantially borne out by the records."

The "Book of Commandments," published imperfectly at Independence, Missouri, in 1833, was never received and adopted by the church, but was publicly pronounced faulty, incomplete and unreliable; hence the need of the re-publication of one of a similar kind, the "Doctrine and Covenants," which was given to the church and endorsed by a "General Assembly" at Kirtland, Ohio, August 17th, 1835. The separate and several quorums, and then the entire body, accepted and approved it by vote after careful, prayerful deliberation. President Oliver Cowdery introduced it to the Assembly in behalf of the committee who selected and compiled it. It was then unanimously received and adopted as "a rule of faith and practice to the church." See Messenger and Advocate, page 160, and Mill. Star 15:299.

If additions were made to some of these revelations, (which we do not admit), that would not necessarily corrupt and invalidate them. For the same power that gave them had authority to add to them. Jeremiah reproduced and added to revelations given him, (Jer. 36:32), and he evidently did it by the will of God. Joseph may have done the same, possibly.

SEVENTIES SHOULD PRESIDE.

IN his article on Seventies presiding, published in HERALD for November 6th, Bro. Wm. Anderson either misunderstands the tenor and scope of the Editorial in HERALD for June 12th, referred to by him, or we fail to comprehend the criticism he offers. In quoting from the Editorial named, Bro. Anderson puts into it, in brackets, the words [Seventies,] [presiding,] [High Priests and Elders,] and then argues from the premises thus made as if we made them. Bro. Anderson may be sincere and honest in so doing, and we are not willing to think he is not; but his argument is based upon improper premises. No such words occur in the Editorial of June 12th in the order stated by him; and if we were reprehensible for misquoting from the law "mild herbs," instead of "herbs and mild food," thereby teaching erroneously, is Bro. Anderson justified in foisting whole platoons of words upon the quotation of a statement made by us.

The spirit of the Editorial is this: that there has been a disposition on the part of some to hinder the missionary work of certain appointees of the church to missions by urging objections to their appointment. In regard to the question of Seventy's presiding, there is no disputation upon the part of the general church authorities; for the question was definitely settled at a Conference held at Plano, in which the decision was that they might under certain conditions preside; that is to say, their office was of such a tenure that if wisdom dictated, or necessity required, they could preside; but that in all cases of local organization they were at liberty to refuse, the words "under no responsibility of presiding" being then construed to mean, that though by virtue of their calling they were empowered to preside when properly authorized by the Twelve, the Presidency, or the church, the responsibility of so presiding did not rest upon them. The 104th section of Doctrine and Covenants, paragraph 43, provides that "And these Seventy are to be traveling ministers unto the Gentiles, first, and also unto the Jews, whereas other officers of the church, who belong not unto the Twelve, neither to the Seventy, are not under the responsibility to travel among all nations, but are to travel as their circumstances shall allow, notwithstanding they may hold as high and responsible offices in the church."

It will not be urged that High Priests and Elders have no right nor authority to travel and preach and become "traveling ministers" because of the foregoing declaration that they are not "under the responsibility" to so travel. If not, why should a similar statement found in section 107, paragraph 44, as follows: "The difference between this quorum and the quorum of Elders is, that one is to travel continually, and the other is to preside over the churches, from time to time; the one has the responsibility of presiding from time to time, and the other has no responsibility of presiding, saith the Lord your God," be construed as denying the right to preside to the Seventy.

It is also here stated that though the other officers in the church besides the Twelve and Seventy were not under obligation to travel and preach, they might "hold as high and responsible offices in the church." In what sense can it be said that the Twelve and Seventy hold higher and more responsible offices in the church?

According to the teaching of paragraph 3, section 104, the office of an Elder is of the Melchisedec priesthood; this priesthood holds the right of presidency; the offices of Elder, High Priest, Seventy and Apostle, all are of this priesthood and all hold the right of presidency, and this priesthood has "power and authority over all the offices in the church."

High Priests may administer in spiritual things in their own standing, "under the direction of the Presidency;" and an Elder has the right to officiate in the things in which a High Priest may when the latter is not present; and in paragraph 7, of the same section, High Priests and Elders are put on the same plane in administering "spiritual things," and "have a right to officiate in all these offices of the church when there are no higher authorities present." By paragraph 11, the Twelve and Seventy are made quorums of equal authority in decision and judgment; and in paragraph 13 it is declared that the Seventy are to act in the name of the Lord "in building up the church, and regulating all the affairs of the same, in all nations;" and this is in direct keeping with the mission of the Twelve who "are a traveling, presiding high council, to officiate in the name of the Lord, . . . to build up the church and regulate all the affairs of the same, in all nations."

In these quotations we have omitted what is admitted by all to be essential, that both Twelve and Seventy are to act "under the direction of the Presidency," and of the church. In paragraph 8, of section 17, the rule in defining the duties and calling of the officers, classes the entire offices of the higher, or Melchisedec priesthood, all under the term "Elders;" and certainly it will not be urged that in the term Seventy are not included; more especially when the statement is "an Apostle is, an Elder," and in paragraph 9 it is stated, the "Elders shall conduct the meetings," &c.; this certainly meaning all the officers named under the same priesthood. In paragraphs 13, 14, 16, 17, 18, 19, 25, the term "Elders" is used to represent the officers of the presiding priesthood; and paragraph 2 of section 46, also classes the same officers under the same term of "Elders."

From a consideration of all the foregoing and other things, we have concluded that the Seventy are not isolated from their compeers of the same priesthood calling in the powers of their office; and that the office itself is not an anomaly.

Practically, those who oppose Seventy presiding assume to know more about the necessities of the field and the available working forces in the church to fill them, than the men to whom the rules of the church have assigned the active duties and oversight of them. There is no district now organized in which a Seventy is presiding as a local officer where such Seventy is so presiding by virtue of conference appointment, that we are aware of. There are instances, however, where Seventies are presiding by reason of the vote of the districts in which they are laboring; and this too without direction of the Presidency, the Twelve, or the Church. Surely one could hardly say that a Seventy is not eligible to such a choice; and if he may preside if chosen, because of his office, when chosen by branch or district, why may he not by appointment and direction of the Twelve and the church.

The statement of Joseph the Martyr, quoted in answer to some ones question as given by Bro. Anderson, makes the announcement made in the editorial of June 12th clearly within the rule contemplated by the Martyr, who said: "The Seventies are also members of the same priesthood, are a sort of traveling council or priesthood, and may preside over a church, or churches, until a High Priest can be had." The Editorial referred to stated: "Until such time as the High Priest's Quorum shall be sufficiently full to provide for all contingencies of presidency occurring in districts and missions, the church will appoint such men and officers as are best adapted to the work demanded." What was intended to be said in this was, that in the general work of the ministry the nature of the work to be done and the suitability and availability of the man to do it should govern the church in the selection, choice, or appointment; and was not intended to be what it has been apparently taken to be, a threat to override the local organizations by the Presidency, Twelve, or the Conference.

When it is stated in objection to those of the Seventy appointed by the church in Conference assembled to the charge of fields, or missions, that they should not be so appointed because there are High Priests and Elders, ready, competent and willing to preside, it is tantamount to saying that there were those of the latter offices available for the field at the time the appointments were so made. It will be gratifying to us, being one of those who was present at last Conference and assisted in making the appointments then made, if the names of such officers who were and are suitable and available for the positions to which such appointments were made shall be given, so that similar blunders may not occur again. The men making the appointments, including the conference, it is to be presumed acted according to their best information and with good desire for the work and in good faith; and if there is better wisdom elsewhere they will certainly be pleased to avail themselves of it. Personally we desire not to force an innovation; what we did we believed then and believe now to be in accord with the law; and we hold such belief without prejudice to any who believe otherwise.

At two successive conferences the presidency, twelve and conference were notified by resolutions originating one with the High Priests and one with the Seventy, that until all available men in the two leading quorums were exhausted in making appointments for general ministerial work, calls should not be made on the High Priests and Elders. And with this in view efforts have been made to order appointments in accord with the spirit of those resolutions.

In conclusion; the appointments made by conference of Seventies or Elders where such have been appointed, to take charge of missionary work in either districts, or missions so called, have not been made with any view to ignore, or show disrespect to the High Priests as a body, or to the members as individuals, but were made with a view to the best good of the work and the availability of the men appointed, as understood by those having charge of such appointing; and the appointments have been "under the direction of the Presidency" and "the Twelve," and sanctioned by the voice of the Conference. No member of the Twelve or Seventy has been appointed by the Conference to the presidency of an organized branch or district since October 7th, 1867 when the following preamble and resolutions were adopted:

"Whereas; in the opinion of this conference, it is inexpedient that an Apostle of the Quorum of the Twelve should have special local jurisdiction, except as the exigences of foreign missions may require, be it Resolved, That each member of that quorum now holding presidency involving such jurisdiction, be and is hereby released. Resolved, That the same rule be applied to the Quorum of Seventies."

The Seventy do not lack the essential qualification to preside, but may, when duly sent by direction of the Presidency, the Twelve, or the Church in Conference assembled, "preside over a church, or churches," "from time to time," build up the church and "regulate all the affairs of the same;" the same as an Elder, or a High Priest could do under the same kind of an appointment. If there are disputation strife in regard to this question it is not upon the part of those to whom the duty of the appointments rest in the law, but upon the part of those who refuse to acquiesce in the acts of the church and who raise opposition to the appointments.

BISHOP GEORGE A. BLAKESLEE seems to be impressed with the idea that some of the brethren are neglecting to pay their offerings into the treasury because that some of the Elders spend too much time and money in going to and from, and to and fro in their fields of labor; those thus withholding thinking that their money ought to be differently expended.

It may be true that in some instances Elders have run hither and thither to poor purpose; and here and there, it may be an Elder has spent too much time and money getting into a field, and has left that field before he has canvassed the ground thoroughly, and thus the money used has not brought its fair equivalent in good to the work we do not say but what this has been the case in some instances. It does not seem to us, however, that such has been the rule, especially of late years, the evident intention of the Elders being to stop in a field as long as the doors remained open and good was resulting from their labors. Besides this, it is hardly consistent and fair to cripple the untiring labors of those Elders who are doing what they can, according to the best wisdom and direction they have, because some others have done, or may be doing unwisely in the prosecution of their ministry; that is like starving and caring ill for the willing and laborious ox in the team because his yoke-fellow was something of a shirk.

The Presidency and the Bishopric have been doing all that could be done to teach, and to insist upon the Elders occupying wisely in the fields where they are called to labor, and have directed in every case that no Elder should leave his field for trivial cause, or while the opportunities are good for continuing labor. But, one thing must be borne in mind, and that is, an Elder (especially the faithful one) is constantly beset wherever he may go, by calls to go to this place, and to that place; open doors are before him to the right and to the left; anxious hearts offer care, kindness, transportation, free houses, if he will only come and preach; to meet these he tries and in so doing scatters his efforts unwittingly, and with no possible thought of trespassing upon the fund raised by the offerings of the good Saints and cast by them into the treasury. We can not say to the Saints, "It is none of your business how the money is expended," for that is not true; it is the business of the Saints to be careful stewards of what God has blessed them with; but so long as the church has officers to whom the delicate functions connected with the disbursement of finances have been intrusted, and these officers discharge their duties with direct reference to their responsibility to the church, we think that they may safely be trusted to use their discretion in so doing. Especially so, when these officers give evidence that they strive to avoid wrong doing in themselves and disapprove of it in others.

In addition to this the expenses of men differ, under differing circumstances. Elders traveling in the eastern states, travel short distance at two and two and a half cents per mile; while to reach similar, or possibly smaller fields in the west, a man will be compelled to pay from five to ten cents per mile. He will pay from ten cents upward for a lunch and twenty-five cents for a meal in the east, where he will pay from twenty-five to seventy-five cents for similar accommodation in the west, or do without; and Elders can not travel and preach with safety to health of body and mind without sustaining food. Of course, men in both the east and west when among Saints are made welcome to the homes and tables of the true-hearted, and no expense attaches while an Elder is in such a field.

It sometimes occurs that an Elder is called by what appears to be an imperative necessity to visit a point more or less distant, and thinking it to be his duty away he goes, by the shortest and most available route, sometimes on foot, sometimes by volunteer conveyance and sometimes by rail; he fills the apparent necessity and returns to his field of immediate operations, and not a soul has thought to ask him whether he has been warmed and fed, or whether he has money to get home, or back to his field or not. For instance; we knew an Elder who was once called to go one hundred and fifty miles to marry a couple; he left his field of immediate labor, went the distance required, performed the rite and returned to his preaching at his own expence. We knew another who travelled two hundred miles by rail, involving a night ride, to attend a district conference by invitation of the rightful officers of the district, doing his part as faithfully as he could; and who returned without any one saying, "what were your expenses," and without receiving anything; except a dollar and a quarter, handed him by a brother in saying "Good by." Of course, in neither of these cases was there any intentional disrespect; but neither of these men was at liberty to call attention to the state of the case, nor to his real, or supposed want of means to return to the place whence he came; and they are only cited to show how drafts may sometimes be made upon the finances of an Elder while in the field, even among his own brethren which he must meet, and of which he can say nothing without being indelicate, or inconsiderate, and sometimes ungenerous. So let us all be patient, bear so much of the burdens as we can together, doing our duty though there may be some whom we feel are not so wise as they should be.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

BRO. JOHN C. FOSS wrote from Maine, Minnesota, October 25th, that on the 10th he baptized two, and on the 17th two more; thinks several more believed, but that he gave them a good chance to obey and they did not, and therefore he did his duty toward them. He met some formerly members of the church under Elder J. J. Strang, who wished to be received on baptisms performed in that church, and insisted that Bro. Foss should accept the Book of the Law as binding. To these two propositions Bro. Foss very properly demurred, as a representative of the Reorganization. Baptisms performed by Elder James J. Strang while he was an Elder in the church prior to the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, there would be no hesitancy in accepting. And it would be in keeping with the theory of the organization to receive such persons on their original baptism as could show that they were baptized by one ordained in Joseph's time, who had not transgressed, whose standing before God was not doubtful; or such persons to whose baptism the Spirit bore witness. The date of June 27th, 1844, is chosen as the dividing line for obvious reasons; baptisms performed since that time, are to be inquired into and their status determined according to facts.

Bro. Foss reports the work as progressing and gaining ground every day. Bro. Foss was to speak in Maine, on November 1st and on Sunday, November 8th would be at conference at Girard, and from thence to Cormorant, Becker county, Minnesota.

Sr. Mary P. Brush, of Marshallton, Iowa, requests some Elder to call there and preach the funeral sermon of her late husband, Bro. Blakeley Brush.

The address of Elder H. C. Bronson is now 2020, Clay street, St. Joseph, Missouri.

Bro. John F. Lemburg writes of late from Cedar Rapids Iowa, saying he has many old HERALDS to give for free distribution to any of the Elders wishing them, who will send postage. He says there are now six members there, and they wish the Elders passing near there to stop and preach, for they think a branch may be organized soon. Bro. J. S. Roth had labored some there of late, had baptized one, and left good influences at work.

Sr. Alice Whitehead, in a recent letter from Vermillion, Oswego county, New York, expresses gratitude that though her mother has been called to the paradise of God, her brother Jay has now united with the church, making the family all members.

Home Life, published by the Home Life Publishing Company, of New York, a Monthly Magazine, devoted to the interests and affairs of the home, is laid upon our table, fresh, clean and promising. It is number one, volume one, and seems to be starting out under fine auspices for good success. With it is a juvenile magazine called the Pearl, issued by the same company. Both magazines are spicy and show excellent skill in construction, matter, and arrangement.

Bro. John S. Roth, writing from Cedar Rapids, Iowa, October 30th, says that he met the Saints in conference at Amber, and that the Comforter was with them, that he had good liberty in the word, and large congregations. Bro. Russell had the promise of a church at Bennett, but when Bro. Roth and Bozarth reached there the good brethren had taken alarm and refused the church. Bro. Russell obtained a hall and the brethren preached to good houses, after the first night. Bro. Roth visited Canton and found Bro. Maitland doing for the Master what he could, and held meetings for two weeks. On the 26th four were baptized by Bro. Roth. He was to speak at Cedar Rapids on the evening that he wrote, the first time any of the Elders had spoken there that Bro. Roth knew any thing of.

Bro. I. N. White sends us the Daily Advocate for October 22d and 23d, published at Clinton, Missouri, and containing an epitome of Bro. F. C. Warnky's, lectures lately delivered in the Saints' Chapel at Clinton. The digest of the lectures seems to be fair and correct; the matter good as we would think it should be presented by Bro. Warnky.

We have received papers from the brethren of many places containing the late reported interview with Elder David Whitmer, for which brethren place receive our thanks.

Mr. E. D. Bennett, writing from Detroit, Dakota, October 19th says he heard Elder Oehring preach a most excellent sermon from Matthew 28: 30, the first he ever heard from any Latter Day Saint. The Elder was to preach in a school house near Mr. Bennett's, October 23d, and Mr. Bennett expected to be baptized the first of November, and he says: "May God bless the Herald, Hope and Expositor."

Bro. Joshua Betzer, living one mile from Shiocton, Wisconsin, with his daughter, Mrs. Mattie Dorn, will be pleased to be visited by an Elder passing that way.

Brethren O. B. Miles, Ezra Depue, and C. M. Fulks, down in McDonald county, Missouri, would like for an effort to be made in that direction in gospel work. Bro. Miles is at South West City.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. S. W. Tomlinson, in a letter dated Copleston, Ontario, October 25th, says:

"The Saints in this part are all striving to live faithful, desiring that some Elder will visit us, for we are in a bad way here about partaking the Sacrament, having no one to administer the ordinance. I believe there are many honest souls in this place."

Bro. I. N. White says by card dated Clinton, Missouri, October 5th:

"I baptized three on the 17th, in St. Clair County. I never had such a battle with prejudice. We are moving the people to think. Brn. Curtis, Robinson and others are doing some grand work. Your sermon in late Herald moved with wisdom to the Saints, and especially to ministry. It hit me. Some consolation though, dead men can't feel.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Ques.—Is it right for a presiding Elder, when present in a meeting, to ask the assistant Priest to lead the meeting when he is able to do so himself?

Ans.—Yes; if he so choose. Read Doctrine and Covenants, 17: 10.

Q.—Is it correct to confirm members under the name of the Church of Christ, or the name of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints?

A.—No formula of words for confirmation is given; hence either term may be used, the confirmation being done in the name of Jesus Christ. It is the Church of Jesus Christ if it is the Church of Christ.

WE have received from Elder James Gerard, of Zion's Hope Branch, Oldford Road, London, England, copies of the Evening Standard, for October 13th; the Daily Chronicle for the same date; and the Daily Telegraph, for October 14th, 1886. The first two contain reporters' notices of a meeting held in St. George's Hall, Langham Place, London, October 12th, of which due notice had been given, at which Elders Kelson, Shipp and Sloan, of the Utah Mormon Church, proposed to air the peculiar philosophy of their faith, under three heads, as stated by Mr. Phil Robinson, (not a Mormon), who was chairman by invitation, and by reason of a belief in free speech and fair play, these heads being: Mormonism; its theology, its morality, its legality and loyalty. The Telegraph contains a communicated article signed "An Unfortunate Listener;" and an editorial, the latter of which we reprint, as it shows decidedly that while the English mind may be willing to tolerate men when essaying to tell the story of their convictions in regard to religion, they are not quite prepared to gild known vice and call it respectable religion.

"Missionaries from America to convert Old England to peculiar views held across the Atlantic have seldom been a success. We accept with reverence thinkers like Emerson, poets like Longfellow and Poe, masters of fiction like Hawthorne, or later writers of delicacy and grace like Mr. Howells and Mr. Henry James; but when it comes to the New World teaching its granddame how to read the Bible or how to regard marriage, a certain sense of impatience pervades public opinion in the Old Country. No doubt there are eminent divines in the United States, but we hear less of them than of popular preachers whose self-confidence has in it a touch of impudence, and who contrive by jest and gesture, to vulgarise even the Gospel. As to the heterodoxies of the States, in number and size they match her mountains, her waterfalls, her prairies, and her mammoth caves. It is characteristic of the people, however, that, while the Old World has been rich in curiously subtle schools of theology; in distinctions which the learned only could understand; in fierce fights over a word or even a diphthong, the Americans have done little or nothing to add to the purely speculative heresies of mankind. They have instead invented new ways of life, abnormal systems of celibacy and of marriage, and elaborate arrangements whereby sensuality can be brought within the reach of the meanest capacity and the poorest citizen. A generation ago New York was startled by the Free Lovers, who to some extent are still represented in periodicals refused permission to pass through the post because they contain improper matter. The Shakers display a comparatively respectable eccentricity held by men and women, who live together like monks and nuns under strict and ludicrous precautions. The Oneida Creek sect has ideas as to improving the human race which carried out into repulsive practice Sir George Campbell's theory that marriage should be arranged by the community. There are scores of other quasi-religious experiments at work in the United States—churches, communities, societies, leagues, and bands, some mystic and secret, other semi-public and grotesque. It would seem as if the Great Republic were intended as an asylum not only for men but for ideas—a kind of model farm for system-mongers, where they can have soil, air, and opportunity for testing any theory, however wild, any faith or "fad," however astounding. As yet, however, the Old World has imported nothing valuable from America—excepting, perhaps, the revolver. We have severely let alone their free shootings, their lawless loves, their easy divorces, their queer marriages, their tarring and feathering, their bowie-knives, and their eccentric spelling.

"When, therefore, the Mormons come amongst us to preach their Gospel according to Joe Smith, it is difficult to anticipate for them even a success of curiosity. A group of their Elders drew to St. George's Hall on Tuesday evening a gathering thinly scattered to make up a show; so that even highly-spiced profanity and a curious mixture of blasphemy and nonsense must be considered a fiasco from the point of view of the speculators who organized the meeting and hired the hall. One Elder informed the assembly that "Christianity as an agent of social and moral reform was a failure." The audience hissed this bit of insolence, and the speaker resumed his seat disconcerted. Had he continued he would doubtless have invited those present to adopt Mormonism, and live up to it. When Henry Drummond denounced the Deceased Wife's Sister Bill, he said in the House, with reference to its proposer, "Why does not the honorable gentleman marry his grandmother like a man?" The Mormons are certainly not wanting in equal courage. Long before his wife is dead a Mormon may marry her sister, or two or three of them if he feels inclined. Brigham Young was married to ladies any one of whom was old enough to be his grandmother, taking compensation in allying himself in his latter years with girls young enough to be his granddaughters. This is the system which the missionary Elder would substitute for the ideal of the Poet Laureate, the man "who loved one only and who gave to her;" for the home where the honored wife and mother rules by love her husband and her children; for the lives linked in unity through sunshine and shade, and united in the holiest aspiration. We sometimes see excuses for Mormonism based on apologies for Mohammedanism; but the polygamy of the East is very different from the organized concubinage of Utah. A Mohammedan is restricted as to his wives, but Elder Sloan informed his audience on Tuesday that amongst them there was no limit fixed to the number of wives a man might have. A Mussulman woman lives in the midst of a community that recognises her status and secures her rights; but a Mormon woman has no legal standing, for the Courts of her sect can not enforce their jurisdiction, and the United States Judges regard her as one of many mistresses and as an accessory to a misdemeanour punishable at law.

"In Europe a woman who has been betrayed, and has foregone the ceremony of marriage, sometimes asserts that she is "a wife in the sight of God," and no doubt there are fanatic females in Utah who hold themselves justified in accepting the corresponding and precarious position out there. No sophistry, however, can make a wife out of a woman who practically depends on the conscience or constancy of a man, and who may, even according to her own admission and ideas, be virtually set aside any day for a younger or more attractive companion. In Mussulman lands the wife, though only one of two or three or four, has rights in the home which can not be abrogated by the will of her husband, who, according to the Koran interpreted by the Cadi, would be severely punished if he deserted or ill-used her. A Mormon, on the other hand, might any day leave all his women to starve without fear of interference by Church or State. We might relegate a subject like this to the gentlemen who love to dissect the morbid excrescences of human conduct in obscure and out-of-the-way corners of the earth; but the question comes home to us when we find Mormons preaching and praying and ensnaring our men and women. They raise their recruits amongst English, Welsh, or Scotch laborers or servant-girls, who do not know how to read. These poor dupes have never heard that the Book of Mormon, alleged to be brought down from heaven by an angel on gold plates, is a preposterous farrago, a fantastic and feeble copy of the ancient and philosophic divinity of the East. They do not know that Joe Smith was a man of bad life, who invented revelations to cloak his vicious desires. They are told that amongst Mormon elders there have been "sincere and earnest" men; but they do not know that sincerity and earnestness have characterized some of the leaders and some dupes in the case of every delusion that ever attracted mankind. Johanna Southcott believed in herself as the destined mother of a new Christ. Poor Mrs. Girling, who died the other day, honestly expected to live for ever. There are people who still have faith in Madame Blavatsky. There is, or was, a gentleman who thought the earth was flat; and anti-vaccinationists are abundant around us. Educated people know that devotion and disinterestedness prove nothing; but the clodhoppers and serving-wenchs who follow the Elders across the seas are impressed by enthusiasts, and leave their homes for a land where they are degraded into drudges, and lose their chastity, their character, and their liberty at one stroke.

"The apologists for Mormonism tell us that the Americans have no right to cast stones; for there are vices in New York, and even Boston is not perfect. There is a great difference, however, between individual vice and systematized license. The State is not answerable for the result of personal weakness nor for the sins of individuals in a great city. What it may and ought to put down is a practice that degrades women and that is organized into a system. Before the United States law interfered the Mormons exercised over their dupes a despotism much more wide-spread and effective than the "boycotting" of the Irish League. It was, like the Hibernian plan, enforced by assassination, but it had at first the advantage that Utah was far away and isolated. Until Gentile judges, police, and residents came to Salt Lake City Brigham Young ruled the whole community with an iron hand. No man or maid could stand before his frown or resist his persuasion. Like the coercion which the Irish leaders dislike, the statutes of Congress came to make the Mormons free—free from the execution by force of decrees and revelations which emanated from the Prophet's successor, like "the laws of England" from the mouth of Jack Cade. All this, we are told, is due to the prejudice of the people of the United States against the pure and gentle followers of Joe Smith. We do not believe it. The Americans are a very tolerant and long-suffering race. They put up with slavery for generations, and did not suppress it until provoked by the insolence of the South. Previous to the election of President Cleveland they bore with an enormous amount of Civil Service corruption; they allowed illiterate Irishmen to rule and rob New York for years; they give breathing-space and free play to every race and to many varieties of Old World sin. If they have resolved to tolerate no longer the abominations of Utah we may be sure that they on the spot know well the reason why."

What a striking contrast to the prosperous day of 1840 to 1850, that remarkable decade in which the truth of Christ was making successful headway everywhere in England; and men of thought and culture were receiving it with gladness. Now a trio of poor preachers attempt to stem a tide of popular ostracism the moving cause to which is found at the centre of their church organization, wickedness and venality in high places. These men were sent out by a corps of apostles, the majority of whom are fugitives hiding from process of arrest and prosecution for a misdemeanor under the law of the land, a crime under the spiritual law by virtue of which the church of Christ originated and existed, until the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith. The men at whose doors the charge of raising and perpetuating the terrible barrier against the preaching the gospel of Christ as authorized by the angel's message and the Book of Mormon must be laid, will have a strange and sorrowing reckoning to answer for in the "day of visitation." Why will those men not be warned by the signs of the times seen on every hand.

"Soon or late, to all that sow,
The time of harvest shall be given;
The flower shall bloom, the fruit shall grow,
If not on earth, at last in heaven."

"WHAT A MAN SOWS, THAT ALSO SHALL HE REAP."

FAR back in the morning of creation, when in Eden God placed man and woman, there was nothing to molest or make afraid, nothing to mar their peace or joy, and but two things were required of them. They were placed there to dress or cultivate the garden, and a commandment was given unto them in regard to a certain tree, "Thou shalt not eat." Before eating of this tree, they walked and talked with God, and certainly must have known perfect happiness, for they had not transgressed any law, consequently they were sinless, and being sinless or obedient, they were permitted to hold converse with God. How the angels must have looked on to see the result! Would man continue obedient, with the possibility of disobeying, and the tempter ever ready to whisper in his ear the sweets to be gained by disobedience? Would he resist, or would he believe the tempter and stretch forth his hand and prove to God that he had made a great mistake in regard to this matter of happiness? Upon which banner should victory perch? It was their God-given right to disobey, if they chose to disobey, for so the Father had ordained; but he had said unto them, "Thou shalt not eat," while the voice of the tempter was saying "Eat." They ate; and when banished from the garden, made heirs to all the ills which followed in the train of this act of disobedience, think you they did not realize what they had lost? Like the brother referred to recently, who said "I can not live in the same house with children who will not mind me," so our heavenly Father could no longer live with, or hold communion with these disobedient ones, in the same way in which he had done before; but seeing the necessity of punishment, in order to restore, he drove them forth and placed the angel to guard the way to the tree of life, lest perchance they should eat of it in their fallen condition, and so sin should become immortal. Throughout the history of this period and the years which followed down to the days when God raised up Moses to lead his people out of bondage, we have every reason to know that the gospel was preached unto men, and they were taught to look forward to the atonement of Christ, even as we now look back to it; but in the days of Moses, because they were rebellious and hard hearted, they were put under the law, or the "law was added because of transgressions." Science tells us that uncounted millions of years this earth was in process of preparation for man. We care nothing for this, for if it be true, it was the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob who was preparing it, and in due time he sent his Son, not to tell us all this wonderful but unimportant news, but to declare unto us the principles of life and salvation—eternal life, and the very corner stone of the plan of redemption was and is, obedience! Not our will, but the will of the Father. We have the power, the God-given right if you please, to disobey; but if we elect to exercise this right, we have no choice left in regard to the consequence. We may live upon this fair earth, acres and possessions innumerable of which we call our own, and turn a deaf ear to him who hath said, "All the tithe of the land, whether of the seed of the land, or of the fruit of the tree, is the Lord's; it is holy unto the Lord." We may do this, but if neither the earthly nor the Heavenly Father can live in the same house with children who are not obedient, what then? We may have, and call our own, vast herds and flocks; sell them and spend the money as seemeth us good, forgetting entirely that God has said, "The tithe of the herd, or of the flock, even of whatsoever passeth under the rod, the tenth shall be holy unto the Lord;" but while we may do this, has it once entered into our minds that we must accept the consequences? When the act is done, no choice is left us. The follower of Christ should live above the law, by being obedient thereunto in all things; for if the earthly father spared not the grandchild, who was as the apple of his eye, and even the Son of God, "learned obedience by the things which he suffered," think you not that we will yet have to learn the full meaning of what Jesus said, "These ought ye to have done and not to have left the other undone?"

THE LAMONI MITE SOCIETY.

WE have long intended telling our readers what the Mite Society of Lamoni had been doing, since their first organization in 1883, to help on the cause. We have often watched the sisters who belong to it, faithfully and punctually toiling through all kinds of weather, breasting the piercing storms of our severe climate, climbing our hills when they would have to stop more than once to rest, before reaching the top, and have thought that the blessing of God could not be withheld from such labors of love and entire sacrifice of self. The sweet-toned bell which almost daily announces some meeting in the Saints' chapel was bought by them at a cost of $147 50 and presented to the church. A handsome eight-day clock, pulpit bible and carpet, plush covered book rest, together with many minor but equally needful articles were obtained in the same way. Neither have they forgotten the cries of the poor but besides many days given to sewing for the sick and overburdened ones, they have expended $175 00 of their earnings. When the conference was to be held here and an effort was being made to build a side-walk from the depot to the chapel, they generously donated upwards of $95.00 to help build it. The entire amount of what they have earned and expended during the two years and a half of their existence is $561.00. There has been with them no royal road to fortune, but every penny has been earned by the expenditure of labor worth ten if not more. Are these hard earned pennies counted by the angels as we count them? Out of their abundance the rich cast into the treasury, but the gift of the poor widow, so small in the counting outweighed them all when the eye of the Master fell upon it. Labor on brave ones, and the reward is laid away far beyond the reach of moth and rust, where no thief shall break through and steal.

ST. JOSEPH, Mo., Oct. 11th.

Dear Sister Frances:—I see by the colored label on the Hope that my time is not out until 1888. That is a good way off yet, and if I did reach there, you did not get the amount of money it needs, so I have put a dollar away for it. The way I manage is this. When I have a few pennies I put them away and say to myself, "This is for the work of God." I feel blest because it comes back to me double and I know it. We must help. It is our Christian duty to do it and not wait until we feel able. We can if we will. Many a dime is spent in the candy store that could be put to better use. May the Lord bless all of you who work for Zion's Hope. It is grand in its new dress, and I am proud of it. In bonds of love, your sister,

S. BOURGUINE.

We love these testimonies from the faithful servants of the Master. "Try me and prove me, saith the Lord." The wisdom of the world is as vanity compared with that childlike faith which takes God at his word and does not hesitate to trust him. Think, of dear little ones. He is your Savior. If your soul is saved it will be because you trust it to the care of God. Can you think more of the care you give to dollars than what you give to your soul?

How gladly we welcome the dear sisters, letters,
And long for the Herald with message divine;
It's a treasure to us which we tenderly cherish,
And strive by his help to let our light shine.

O, may it be prospered to spread forth the gospel,
According to promise in every land;
May Zion be perfect, her borders be strengthened,
Her children a holy and united band.

Though lonely and sad, far away from the pasture,
I feel not to falter, nor lag by the way;
For grace still is given to each by the Master,
In measure to gladden our hearts when we pray.

Deem it not presumptuous, that I should claim unction
When so long dissevered, away from the band;
The vine is the Savior, his branches are bearing,
Without any reference to clime, or to land.

My harp has been idle, long hung on the willows,
But now I will waken it once more to song;
Long silent with grief, for the wailing in Zion,
The doors of its prison were stubborn and strong.

The Lord in his mercy has heard the low pleading
Of one who has cried in the desert for bread;
On the way up to Bethel the angels descended
And blessings brought with them for one waiting head.

O, daughters of Zion, cease mourning and sighing;
Be patient in trials, the time draweth near Foretold by the prophet, when Christ the anointed,
With glory and power again shall appear.

Let us shake off our fetters, and ever be ready,
With oil in our lamps his coming to greet;

The truth is extending, the signs are appearing,
And soon will be ended the harvest of wheat.

How wondrous and great is the plan of salvation;
We may not attempt to survey it, or scan;
Most perfectly laid before earth was created
And formed to redeem the entire race of man.

Then cleanse we our garments; to God be all honor—
Our Father, Redeemer and Lord over all,—
Through whom and by whom came life everlasting,
Grace, mercy, redemption, as broad as the fall.

The gospel restored by an angel most holy,
Never more from the earth to be taken away;
Oppressors are trembling, while proud thrones are crum-
And soon we shall see the millennial day. [bling,

When he comes in his glory, what joy to behold him,
And reign with the nobles enrolled in his band,
In white robes most spotless, on streets pure and golden,
When the earth is renewed with Jesus to stand!

May we be elected, through Jesus made perfect,
Our robes washed and cleansed in the blood of the Lamb,
When the supper is ready, the summons is given,
From all tribes and nations, Go gather the clan.

Again shall the armies of Israel shout Glory,
Since God has removed from his people all stain;
From the north they shall come as doves to their windows;
Like an army with banners advance on the plain.

The law from Mount Zion go forth in its beauty;
The word of the law from Jerusalem's gate;
While assembled before him, our Lord and Redeemer,
Every kindred and nation of earth shall await.

FLORA HANNAH.

CABOOL, Mo., Oct. 1st.

Dear Sr. Frances: I have just finished reading Bro. R. J. Anthony's sermon in last Herald. It makes my heart rejoice to read and ponder on the many good sermons we get through the Herald. It is life to the weary mind, and food to the hungry soul. Dear mothers: let us try to improve by the many good instructions we receive through the Herald. There are none of us so ignorant but what we know what it takes to constitute a good Christian. To those who, by "patient continuance in well-doing," seek for glory, honor and immortality, God will recompense eternal life. "The pure in heart shall see God." "He that doeth the will of God abideth forever." "Him that overcometh will I make a pillar in the temple of my God, and he shall go no more out." Let us continually keep these words in our minds, that we may overcome all evil. What a great blessing it is to be numbered with the Elect of God. "Blessed are they that do His commandments, that they may have a right to the tree of life, and may enter through the gates into the City."

Should we find it difficult to instruct and raise our children aright, we should go in earnest prayer to God for light and direction; and if such inquiries be conducted with reverence, with devotional and a contrite spirit, and with perseverance, every difficulty will gradually vanish as the shades of night before the orient sun; "For the Lord giveth wisdom; out of his mouth cometh knowledge and understanding. In all thy ways acknowledge him, and he shall direct thy paths." I have solved many problems in this way, which were difficult to the mind. Indisputably, the firm believers in the gospel have a great advantage over all others—for this simple reason, "For God shall bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing, whether it be good, or whether it be evil." And many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt. And they that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars forever and ever." Job has left us an example of patience under affliction; he consoled his spirit in the midst of adversity by the hopes he entertained of a blessed immortality. "I know," says he "that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth: and though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God." With respect to Moses, it is said that under all persecutions and afflictions, "he endured as seeing Him who is invisible; for he had respect to the recompense of reward." That reward did not consist in temporal grandeur; for with regard to all the other patriarchs whose names stand high on the records of the Old Testament church, Paul declares that "they confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims on earth," that "they declared plainly that they sought a better country, that is, an heavenly;" and that those who "were tortured" to induce them to renounce their religion, endured their sufferings with invincible fortitude, "not accepting deliverance" when it was offered them, "that they might obtain a better resurrection."

Let us be patient in well doing, not offending any; for should we offend, we might hinder the gospel of Christ, and crush some noble spirit that is seeking after truth. Woe to him by whom offences come. I will close; ever praying for the blessings of God to rest upon the writers of the Mothers' Home Column of the Herald; and not only them, but all sisters and brethren of like faith. Yaur sister in Christ,

M. A. ATWELL.

Correspondence.

PORT HOPE, Mich., Oct. 28th.

Bro. Blair:—I am pleased to tell you that the Saints throughout this part of the vineyard are in the faith, and are trying to live devoted to the cause of Christ. Several are coming in, and prejudice is falling. We are gaining much favor in the eyes of many. I feel much encouraged to see the onward spread of this great latter day word. I am in the faith,

J. J. CORNISH.

XENIA, Neb., Oct. 30th.

Dear Herald:—I continued preaching for several days, at the place where my last letter was dated. I am still hopeful that some good will be effected in that vicinity. Attended our quarterly conference at Wilber, the 10th and 11th inst. The largest attendance of visiting Saints that I remember of were present; the meetings were likewise well attended by the outsiders; one was added to our fellowship by water. The Elders and officers all seemed possessed with a deep solicitude for the success of the cause. The question of whether the district conference should continue to work under the representative system as adopted a few years ago, or revoke this and work under the "mass-convention-rule," brought out quite an interesting discussion. Agitation of this nature is beneficial; provided always, that we do not become too personal and wound unto death. Spent the Sabdath (17th) at home, spoke twice, the attendance was small for some reason to me unknown. Came to this vicinity on the 22d, a walk of about four miles in the rain and mud was not the most delightful. We made an effort to obtain a house in Springfield, to hold meetings in, but we were not successful. Brn. David Armstrong and Geo. S. Hodge, and their companions, all aged people, live there. Have held meetings in the Buffalo school-house, and all things duly considered, the attendance and attention have been good. I have just read an interview with David Whitmer, published in the Omaha Herald, of the 21st inst. Like many other interviews, it is a compound of truth and falsehood. It is strange that such articles can find a place in leading and influential newspapers, while the truth is not acceptable for publication. However, I suppose the Editors are the best judges of what kind of food their readers relish. It is stated in this interview that Joseph Smith was a "fallen prophet." It must be evident to every one who claims to be possessed of common sense, that he could not be a "fallen prophet," unless he was first a true prophet. Thus with their mud-slinging, some pearls are scattered abroad. I often feel tempted to say to fault-finders, whether in the church now, or at some former period, or the open enemies of the cause, Go on, your tools will bury you, and "with what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again." And I feel that the rule we apply to others, is a good rule to measure ourselves by. I closed my meetings here last evening. Yesterday was a beautiful day, and a little company of believers met on the banks of the Platte River, and I was permitted to baptize seven. I herewith desire to return thanks to the Saints for their kind treatment and the substantial remembrance. Hope the officers of the Northern Nebraska District will have a watch-care over these scattered members. Weather is beautiful and farmers very busy. Crops are much better than was expected. Gospel work is on the increase, and friends are being made thereto. More anon,

ROBT. M. ELVIN.

NEW BEDFORD, Mass., Oct. 25th.

Mr. Joseph Smith:—The "Hope" in its new and enlarged form is very neat and attractive. The pledges for children is a move in the right direction; so the young may be educated to abstain from the use of tobacco, and all intoxicants, which "defile the body." The arrangement of the lessons, for children of different ages, is really good and commendable. I think no home of the Saints should be without the Hope.

Yours in the faith,

JOHN SMITH.

NEWTON, Iowa, Oct. 27th.

Dear Editor:—I have not been idle, but am actively at work in the field for the Master. Have done some preaching at Pratt, in Warren county; from there came to Newton, being so directed by the Spirit, and preached on two different Sundays in the Saints' Hall. One man was very much interested; congregations small. I had good liberty. Went to Edenville, preached once to the Saints; the president was away preaching so I occupied his appointment; the next Sunday returned to Newton, where I preached again, quite a number being present; good liberty. From here I returned to Edenville, and the president and myself went to Newton, where he preached a most excellent sermon; and the result was that this man who was so interested was fully convinced and was baptized by Bro. Nirk; and at the confirmation meeting in the evening we had a most refreshing time—the Spirit was with us. Thus a good man has been added to the fold. His name is Peter M. Given, formerly from Indiana, and prior to his baptism a member of the Baptist Church, a quiet, intelligent man of gentle deportment. From here I shall go to Colfax. My health is good, thank God; I weigh one hundred and fifty-two pounds,—how is that for the little Dutchman? May God's blessings be with you in your work of love, and remember me a little. I think I have the Spirit.

In gospel bonds,

N. STAMM.

NEW PROVIDENCE, Ind., Oct. 29th.

Bro. Blair:—Last Sunday two were baptized into the Church of Christ at Eden Branch, Bro. Thomas F. Wheeler and wife, of Pulltlight in Washington county. They were formerly United Brethren, and they attended our meetings and were convinced of the "more perfect way." They are excellent folks, worthy of the name of Saints. The Lord is working with his people here, and with the honest hearted, causing them to see, who will but look, into the true principles of the gospel. It seems that the Lord is gathering out the honest ones, for he penetrates them to the heart. Only a certain portion of the human family ever accepted a dispensation given to inspired prophets or messengers sent, but were always ready to cry "Delusion," "false prophet," and would not stop to investigate their claims.

Your brother in the one faith,

JAMES M. SCOTT.

PARIS, Tenn., October 26th.

Bro. W. W. Blair:—The work here is somewhat on the increase. Our district Conference convened the 23d and 24th at the Foundry Branch. We had a very quiet and peaceable session enjoying a fair degree of the Spirit. Bro. Griffin and myself are trying to exercise our gifts in presenting the word of truth to Saint and sinner. I sent to Bro. Peters and procured twenty of the Voice of Warning for free distribution, and they seem to be doing good, opening the way for preaching. On the tenth of this month we baptized an old man, W. P. Green, who had been a member of the Baptist Church for fifteen years in the vicinity of Eagle Creek, the first that I have had the pleasure of leading into the waters of baptism.

Dear Herald:—Our semi-annual conference of the Manchester district was held here in Manchester on the 9th and 10th inst., and was largely attended by Saints and friends in the district. The business session passed off very agreeably, and the services of the Sunday were in every sense successful. We had present with us Elder Thomas Taylor, president of the mission; Priest, Robert Lloyd, of Carnarvon, North Wales; besides a large turn-out of the Elders of the district. Elder Taylor presided over the services, which consisted of morning, prayer meeting; afternoon, fellowship; evening, preaching by the president, and Elder Joseph Naylor president of the Leeds Branch. We have baptized three since the adjournment, and the signs portend many more in the near future. So far this has been the most prosperous conference yet held in the district from both spiritual and progressive points of view. And the present year has so far been a very prosperous one indeed, in connection with the work of the church. The branches at Manchester, Sheffield, Leeds, and other places, are making very substantial progress indeed, and bid fair to become important centers, from which district organization may be effected. I am looking forward to a time when what is now the Manchester District will be represented by the Leeds, Sheffield, Liverpool, Wigan and Manchester districts. Ever praying and working for the success of the gospel of Christ, I remain your co-laborer for Zion's weal,

JOSEPH DEWSNUP,

President of Manchester District.

BOWRAVILLE, N. S. W., Sep. 26th.

Bro. Joseph Smith:—My wife and I were baptized on the first of September 1885, by Elder Burton. In the confirmation of my wife he prophesied that her persecutions would be very great, but she would have power to overcome them. The prophecy has been very true as yet, for her parents and friends were very bitter against us and would not allow us to visit them, till her mother became very sick; and then she sent for us to come and see them. Of course we were glad of the chance and started off; but to our sad disappointment after riding about fifteen miles, when her father saw us coming, he met us and turned us back, and would not allow us to speak to any of them; nor will he allow any communication, although they are all very anxious to see us but him. My wife was fretting very much because they treated us so hard, and I got the Testament and was reading the 14th chapter of St. John, (this was about three o'clock in the evening), and she saw a vision; she was about two hours in it; there were three of us present, and she told us that she could see angels coming, the Holy City and her Savior. She took the Bible out of my hand and opened it towards Him and turned the leaves over and then patted her heart with her hand. About four months after she had a severe fall on a chair; the pain was so strong that she could neither see, nor speak from half past one o'clock till six. I went for my mother; when she came she told me that she could not check the pain. I said: "If I get the doctor could he do her any good?" She told me that she could do all the doctor could do for her. I then said I would call for the Elders of our branch, L. Ballard, and have her anointed. I did so, and she was healed instantly. I rejoice in the latter day work; it is the grandest of all the works ever done, I think, when it is finished.

Your brother in Christ,

A. MCKAY.

CHELSEA, Nebraska, Oct. 20th.

Bro. Joseph Smith:—Our branch is in very good working order at present. We have splendid meetings every Sunday at eleven o'clock, with very good attention. We need a good elder badly, as we don't have preaching very often. There is a priest and teacher in our branch; but we hope that a good elder will come and locate with us before long. We are persecuted some by the world but we don't mind that, knowing that we belong to the church of Christ; and if we hold out faithfully to the end we will be saved in the kingdom of God. We have the Spirit of God to a great extent in our meetings, which gives us great hope.

PROTON, Ont., Oct. 29th.

Dear Herald:—I write to say that the London District conference, held at St. Mary's, is past, and was a success in all ways so far as the church is concerned. We were blessed by the Spirit's presence; peace and good will reigned, and the gifts were enjoyed to the comfort and edification of all. Three were baptized during the conference. Bro. W. J. Smith and I remained, preaching every night during the next week, and on Sunday three more were baptized; then Bro. Smith went to the field assigned him, leaving me at St. Mary's for a week longer, and the result was two more were baptized. Then Bro. R. C. Evans came to my relief, and was holding the fort when I left with good prospects of several more coming in. I joined Bro. W. J. Smith in the county of Grey, and since then four more have been baptized, and here the prospects are good for several more to come in soon. I can only stay a few days longer with Bro. W. J. Smith for I must push on to other openings which I have, by God's aid, made in Dufferin county. And as I have a debate to come off on November 30th and December 1st I must be near by so as to be on hand at the proper time—God willing.

I think Bro. W. J. Smith will be able to write you up a few items of cheerful interest soon. I am sorry to have to part company with him, but the field is large, the calls are many, and laborers few; so we must part to spread the good tidings as far as possible with that few. The prospects are cheering, so we press on and pray for Zion and all her sons and daughters. I specially now remember the laborers in the Herald department. May God continue to bless you is the prayer of yours,

J. A. McINTOSH.

CANTON, Iowa, Oct. 30th.

Dear Herald:—Since my last letter to your pages, the Saints in the Eastern Iowa district have been the recipients of some goodly things from the hand which guides the destinies of men and nations. Following a very well attended and unusually peaceful conference at Amber, Jones county, we were made still to rejoice in the wholesome and fruitful ministration of Bro. J. S. Roth, sound in doctrine, wise in counsel, and timely in advice; may his mother's best boy obstruct the rays of old "Sol" for lo, these many years. The district has been the victim of a spiritual fast, whose duration makes Tanner's temporal one a mere appetizer, and it would do your soul good to see the eager "sheep" eat. Canton has been laid siege to by the hosts of the highest; her good citizens turning out sixteen nights in succession, (save one); many friends won to the good cause, slanderers hushed, the Saints built up and confirmed in the faith, and four dear souls added by baptism. In giving the services of Bro. Roth to this needy field for the coming three months, Bro. Joseph R. Lambert would confer a great favor upon the Saints of the district, who eagerly desire it, and put a competent exponent of the faith in a position to reach a large number of new openings, without material expense, with fair prospect of adding to the membership of the church many who would be an honor to the cause; people of intelligence and means, who have shown their faith by a substantial work of hospitality and generous deeds. One new opening has been effected amongst the Presbyterian people at Frozen Hill, where the lactic fluid of human kindness is by no means in a congealed state, if the "Hill" is. This is proved by their furnishing house, lights, and fuel for us, and turning out in fair volume as well. May heaven bless the workers in the cause we love, and send more of them to comfort and build up the Saints in knowledge and righteousness, is our prayer.

J. R. JOHNSON.

HOLLISTER, Cal., October 29th.

Dear Herald:—After writing you from Lower Lake, we remained in Lake county, until September 24th, during which time we preached three discourses in Ingleside Hall, Long Valley. We were well received and found a hospitable, kind people. In Excelsior school-house we held a series of ten discourses; then returned and preached three sermons in the town of Lower Lake. We found the Lake county Saints a zealous, kind-hearted band, willing to work and sacrifice for the Master's cause. May God bless and lead them.

September 24th: In company with Bro. J. M. Adamson and wife we drove to Child's Valley, forty miles over a rough, dusty road, where we found a Mr. Roseberry, whose companion is a sister of Bro. Adamson in the flesh, and our sister in the faith. We were well entertained, and enjoyed a night's repose. The next morning early we were again on the road, and twelve miles more brought us to Rutherford, where we bade Bro. and Sr. Adamsom adieu, and were soon hurled by Nahum's chariots toward the city of Sacramento. Arriving there we were met at the depot by Bro. J. R. Cook, who took us to the house of Sr. Moore, an old-time Saint, and one in whom the fire of other days still burns. We found at Sr. Moore's a pleasant and agreeable home until we exchanged for another pleasant, cheerful one at Sr. Calderwoods. We also went out to Brighton and made our genial brother, G. W. Harlow and family a visit. We had a good time with the Sacramento Saints, they are a noble band under the wise management of Bro. Harlow, assisted by brethren Parr and Cook. We went to work immediately upon our arrival, preaching twice on Sunday, and each night afterwards. On the night of September 29th, as we went to the house of prayer, we were both surprised and pleased to meet our worthy brother, Thomas Daley, president of Northern California district. The next night I had the pleasure of hearing him. It was a real treat to me, being the first sermon I had heard from any of our faith (save myself) since leaving Lamoni. I think Elders get as hungry as others for preaching, and hearing other voices than their own. We held nine meetings, I preaching eight times and Bro. Daley once. One was baptized, Willie Calderwood, Bro. Daley officiating.

October 6th in company with several of the Sacramento Saints, we proceeded to Oakland, where conference for the Northern California District convened the forenoon of the same day and continued in session five days. It was a very peaceable session. Though there was some difference in opinion there was not an angry or unkind word heard by me. Bro. Thomas Daley was re-elected president of district; Bro. J. H. Parr chosen associate president; Bro. J. R. Cook elected secretary; Bro. Wm. Anderson recommended to the Bishop as his agent to succeed our lamented brother, T. J. Andrews. The office of district treasurer was created and Bro. William Hart appointed to fill the place. The minutes will inform your readers more full of the business done. While there we were the guests of Bro. Brown and Prof. Bartholomew; in each place were well cared for, and all necessary efforts made to make us feel at home.

October 15th found me in Watsonville, assembled with the Saints of Central California in conference. This conference was presided over by Bro. I. F. Kingsbury; Bro. J. M. Range acting secretary. Continued in session three days, and had another very harmonious session. Bro. J. M. Range was elected president; Bro. Daniel Brown associate; Bro. I. F. Kingsbury secretary; Bro. Range sustained as Bishop's Agent. Sisters Culp, of Haywards, and Clem, of Watsonville were baptized. I remained at Watsonville the guest of Bro. Brown until the 21st, preaching twice after adjournment of conference. The 21st I met my wife at Gilroy, (she having remained with Sr. Andrews in the city while I was at Watsonville) and together we proceeded to this place where we are the guests of Bro. Range. I have preached three times in the town of Hollister; and on the 25th went to San Juan and preached the funeral sermon of old sister Twitchell, who died the day previous, aged 90 years 3 months and 23 days; continued faithful unto the end and died in the faith. The people's heads are too full of politics just now, to get their attention. Five tickets in the field, election day near at hand, and people are wild with enthusiasm and excitement.

Bro. Mills writes a glowing account of the conference in the Southern District; prospects there are said to be favorable. The three districts have each appointed a committee to make arrangements for the holding of re-union meetings. The Northern District appointed brethren H. P. Brown, G. S. Lincoln and William Anderson; for the Central: brethren J. M. Range, J. H. Range and J. B. Carmichael; for the Southern: brethren D. S. Mills, J. R. Badham and E. J. French. I trust they will be a success. Why should they not? The cheering news from Re-unions in the east should encourage us.

The Lord has as a rule blest me with excellent liberty since coming to this field, and I am feeling much encouraged. Such confidence have I in the great work in which I have enlisted that I am willing to trust myself in it and become just what its principles will make me in time and in eternity. Bro. Albert Haws is still battling faithfully in Oregon, and giving good satisfaction. Have not heard from Nevada. Will the brethren there please correspond with me? Remember, my address is 1801 Polk street, San Francisco, California.

With a prayer for Zion's triumph, and determined to work for her good wherever directed by the body, I am as ever,

HEMAN C. SMITH.

MERCED, Cal., Oct. 16th.

Bro. Joseph:—I have been a member of the Reorganized Church over two years; am the only one out of a large family that has investigated this doctrine, for which I feel to ever praise God that he has such a gospel on earth; and of course, it is the earnest desire of my heart that those near and dear by kindred ties may also hear; and I request that any good elder traveling near Eldon, Wappello county, Iowa, will visit that place and see if there are not some there that are seeking for the old, old paths. I would like them to call on my father at that place, his name is Henry Dornisfe; also my brother, Well Dornisfe; and if brother Haws, or any other Elder traveling in Oregon, can, I would like them to call on Jerome Dornisfe, at Independence, Polk Co. I desire the prayers of the Saints in behalf of my husband that he may yet come unto the true light and that I may ever press onward and upward.

I remain yours in hope,

FRANCES RIESS.

GLASGOW, N. Y., Oct. 26th.

Dear Herald:—I am often cheered when lonely, and comforted when sad, by reading your cheering columns. Being so far from the Saints, and hearing no preaching only what comes through the Herald, I appreciate it more than tongue can tell. My heart has not grown weary of the fight, neither have I ever had a desire to turn back to the "weak and beggarly elements" of this wicked world. I often think we do not appreciate the work of good and faithful servants in their ministerial labors till it is too late. Because we are at work and little concerned about the welfare of the church or our own souls, we should not be so narrow-minded as to think all are the same. I have known young men who have had the love of God burning in their bosoms, willing and ready to make any sacrifice of the pleasures of this world for the welfare of Zion. These Christ taught to go and do their part, and he promised that his disciples would clothe and feed and aid them.

His disciples whether in or out of the Church will not want such to go to temporal work and earn their living. Christ says "when you depart, shake off the dust of your feet against any city that will not receive you" &c. "He that receives you receives me." This has never been the case only in isolated branches. But I had a boy, a darling son, who has long since gone to the regions of love, who went forth in this great Latter Day Work, and I am sorry to say he met with some of this condemnable class. While they professed great piety and love for the work, yet they were not willing to make the least sacrifice financially. They would talk of the great blessings of God to them in times past, but seemed little concerned about the souls of the hundreds groping in midnight darkness all around them. But O, the pain that filled my breast when I read from his letter, "Mother, I have worked faithful for several months, but the Saints are not willing to aid this great work, so I am compelled to go to work in the mines." Are we worthy to be called Saints if we are not willing to do what God requires in this respect? I thank God that our duties of "alms-giving" and "tithing" are being better understood and practiced in the Church.

Your sister,

FLORÁ.

HUTCHINSON, Colo., Oct. 25th.

Dear Herald:—I left home on the 7th, for Box Elder, this State, about 170 miles distant. I first went to Denver, and visited a few of the Saints that live there, and found some of them feeling well. I next went to Brighton and found Sr. Talbot feeling strong in the faith. Stayed over night with Mr. Talbot, who is a very kind hearted friend to all Saints. I went on to Cheyenne, and there I found our worthy brother, John Eames, and was kindly received by him and Mrs. Eames and invited to partake of their hospitality, which I did, and stayed with them over the Sabbath, as it was Saturday night when I reached their place. Bro. Eames went up to the newspaper offices, and put in a notice for preaching at his house on Sunday at 11 o'clock a. m., and at half-past seven p. m., and told the people of Cheyenne, that Elder James Kemp would preach. The congregation was small but very attentive; one man said that he never heard the gospel presented so plainly before. I hope he will obey ere long, with many more. Wednesday, the 13th, Bro. Eames took me over to Box Elder, twenty-seven miles from Cheyenne, where we found Bro. Barrett and family; and they were more than pleased to see us. We also found two more families of Saints, just come from Oregon, Brn. William and Joseph Doty. They are good Latter Day Saints, and have taken up land at that place. We spent four days with them and held four meetings, two on Sunday the 17th. I preached at the school-house at eleven o'clock a. m., and had good liberty in presenting the words of truth to the people. At night we held a prayer meeting at Bro. Barrett's House, and ministered the sacrament to the Saints; had a good meeting, which lasted for three hours. The Spirit of God so rested on all that it made them rejoice in the Lord, the gifts of the gospel were enjoyed, and indeed we had a time long to be remembered by all present. On Monday I left them with the promise to return, when I think we can baptize some and organize a branch of the church. I left Bro. Barrett in charge, he being a Priest, and he will hold meeting with the Saints every Sabbath, and also Sunday School, as they have quite a goodly number of children, so I think that the work will yet spread in the State of Colorado. On my way home I met Bro. McConley at Greeley, for the first time; he lives at Sterling. He is strong in the faith of the gospel of Christ. The train stopped fifteen minutes, so I did not have much time to spend with him; he however helped me on the way, and God bless him. My thanks are tendered to all for kindness shown. Praying for the prosperity of Zion's cause,

JAMES KEMP.

HELP THE CHILDREN.

I FEEL interested in the cause of Zion, and not less in the young and rising generation than in those of maturer years and greater experience.

The Scriptures forecast a time when children shall grow up "without sin unto salvation." Such a state of society can only be effected by comprehending and carrying into effect the gospel plan. The rite of blessing of children being ordained of God shows plainly that, to a certain degree, parents are not only responsible for the deeds of their children, but have power to control the elements that form their character. By our voluntary act of faith we bring them before the Elders of the church and they are blessed in the name of Jesus Christ. So by an act of which they comprehend nothing, and for which they are not responsible, they are brought into a relationship which entitles them to the special blessing and protection of God. Infant baptism, or sprinkling is wrong, a service without benefit, because unauthorized of the Lawgiver. If Jesus had taught it by example or precept I would reverently acclaim, Amen. But in the absence of such teaching the practice necessarily falls under the head of "commandments of men," by which the law and order of God are "made void."

The virtue of any ordinance is vested in the authority by which it is ordained. The baptism of adults would do no good were it not that God has so commanded; but in view of this command and the immutable promise of Him who can not lie, we have the forgiveness of sins through the gospel. There is a manifest lack of discipline among a few, even of the Saints, by which children are to be tutored to become suitable subjects of God's kingdom as they arrive at the age of accountability, which the Lord has set at eight years. The foundation of home rule and discipline is "faith hope and love," to which we may safely add firmness. In order to cure any evil, we must get at the very root of it; and in order to effect a salutary home government, the parents must think right and do right; not a part of the time, but all the time.

Every wrong discovered must be repented of and forsaken and the breach healed by the ointment of the gospel. Harshness, coarse and rude jesting, vulgarity in any form or to any degree, fault-finding and backbiting, are all discordant elements in the family circle, and are as sure to blight the morals of children as an untimely wind to blast the tender fruit. Shall I speak evil of my neighbor before my child and then reprove him for being saucy? Shall I indulge in impure language and punish my child for following the example? Shall I be cross, crabbed and ill-natured, and censure my offspring for imbibing the same feeling and habit?

The chief merits of our religion are to be developed at home. Sacred spot! Blessed inheritance! Abode of kindred spirits! The sunshine of eternal peace must be there. The name of Jesus must be revered in this sacred realm. God and his truth must enter into every thought and act of life. Patience, forbearance, and love must have their perfect work. God-fearing and truth-loving parents must teach their little ones of righteousness and of judgment. Educate the innocents to know God; to obey his truth; to love his word; to revere his name.

Oh, the power of the gospel! its light; its joy; its intelligence! Illimitable in its promises and blessings, it makes a home of peace, a world of delight. If we can taste of the "good word" and "power of the world to come" in this imperfect state, what must it be to dwell with God and walk the illumined streets of that "golden city."

"On the hope of bright glory, of heavenly bliss—Take away every other and give me but this."

The wonders of this latter day gospel unfold to my mind as I labor in the service of God, and I do praise the Lord for "the great restoration through Joseph the Seer." I learn by experience that the sublime truths enunciated by Joseph Smith must and will stand the test amidst the fiercest opposition.

What would I have been had it not been for the gospel taught by the Latter Day Saints! It found me an ignorant, sinful man, without God and without intelligent hope in the world. But I know that God has redeemed me from conditions of darkness and given me place in the kingdom of his Son. My joy I can not tell, save that it surpasses the understanding of the natural mind. Can any one think, then, that I am foolish to pursue my present mode of life? I only wish that all might know the virtue of following the Lord. My happiness is replete when I think of what God has done for my family. Though nearly a thousand miles from home I have the profound assurance that the sunshine of the gospel surrounds my loved ones to protect them from evil and danger. I only wish to be more persistent in duty. May heaven bless modern Israel, and may all parents cultivate the law of kindness, that the Hopes of Zion may be reached "without sin unto salvation" is my prayer.

GEO. S. HYDE.

DIALOGUE BETWEEN DR. TWINE
TEXT AND ELDER D.

DR. T. T.—Friend D., I have been anxious to renew our investigations of the Mormon question. While I must admit that the evidences produced by you in our former interviews are puzzling and appear to establish the claim that the Book of Mormon is divine from the fact that the antiquarians quoted by you hold the book in supreme contempt, and yet have brought forth such astounding evidences in its favor, and agreeing so perfectly with the book itself that one is almost forced to the conclusion that the book has some apparent claims to divinity of origin. Yet when I think of the cunning of Satan and the power he holds over the hearts of men, I can conceive it just possible that the evil one did inspire the boy Smith to forge such a work, just as he inspires spiritual mediums to reveal many truths in order to lead the human family into the meshes of error; and that by this means Smith may have hit upon many facts while really unconscious of their existence. But aside from this, in reading the book I have discovered it claims that the gospel of Christ was known to the world long before that divine personage came to proclaim it; and I find that not only does this idea run through the whole book, but your elders proclaim this to the world everywhere. This claim is not only contrary to the teachings of every acknowledged christian church of the present day, but it is absolutely opposed to the Bible. The holy apostle Paul, in Rom. 16:25, declares it "was kept secret since the world began;" and in 1st Cor. 2:7, 8, he calls it "the hidden wisdom * * * which none of the princes of this world knew." Again, in Eph. 3:5, speaking of the same gospel, he says, "Which in other ages was not made known unto the sons of men." This error of the Mormon Bible is so palpable that it seals its own condemnation.

Elder D.—Well, Doctor, I thank you for the admission that the antiquarian evidences puzzle you; but in order to get rid of the puzzle, you conjure up the idea that Satan might have inspired the boy Smith to have forged the book, just as he inspires "spirit mediums" in their work of deception. I have heard that "drowning men catch at straws," but we will try to save you yet. The cunning of Satan is very great, at least that is his reputation given from the highest authority, and I should hardly think he would be anxious to impair that reputation by inspiring one of his agents to carry out his infernal designs and then inspire millions of others to denounce it. And you are aware, no doubt, that every spirit medium in the world denounces Joseph Smith as an impostor as loudly as the most pious, orthodox clergyman does, and for the same reason, because they know that if Joseph Smith is true, they must be false. But Satan was never known to seek to establish God's eternal truth; and yet this book, which you now imagine may be the product of Satan's cunning, is in perfect harmony with every truth revealed in the Bible, and is diametrically opposed to all the works of Satan. It strikes at every error, whether found in the church of God, the churches of men, or the systems of the evil one. It proclaims God as the One Supreme, to whom we owe all reverence, love and obedience; Jesus Christ as the only Savior of men, and the Holy Spirit as the only safe guide, teacher, and comforter of the children of God. It establishes the truth of the Bible by making plain many glorious truths that have been hidden by the traditions of the ages, and bears incontrovertible witness to every word which God has spoken to the children of men. All this can be proved by a candid and prayerful examination of its contents. But now for this palpable error which you have discovered running through all the book. "To the law and to the testimony; if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them."—Isa. 8:20. You say, "It claims that the gospel of Christ was known to the world long before that divine personage came to proclaim it;" and you think that this is contrary to the testimony of Paul as quoted by you. Let us see. What was "kept secret since the world began?" and from whom was it kept secret? David says, "The secret of the Lord is with them that fear him; and he will shew them his covenant."—Ps. 25:14. Did any fear the Lord from Adam to Christ? Is not the gospel pre-eminently the covenant of the Lord? Did not David speak of Christ? Did he not have hope in him? Had not he a knowledge of the resurrection through Christ? He says, "I shall be satisfied when I awake in thy likeness."—Ps. 17:15. He "spake of the resurrection of Christ, that his soul was not left in hell, neither his flesh did see corruption." Acts 2:31. Does the resurrection form any part of the gospel? Is it revealed by any other means than through the gospel? David surely understood the secret of the Lord. But we will not particularize. "Blessed be the Lord God of Israel; for he hath visited and redeemed his people, and hath raised up an horn of salvation for us in the house of his servant David; as he spake by the mouth of his holy prophets, which have been since the world began."—Luke 1:69, 70. This is the testimony of the Holy Ghost through Zacharias. According to this testimony Christ as the Redeemer was revealed to "all the holy prophets which have been since the world began." The great burden of the gospel is "the restitution of all things" by Jesus Christ. This was certainly understood by the prophets, for Peter says, "He shall send Jesus Christ, which before was preached unto you; whom the heavens must receive until the times of the restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began."—Acts 3:20, 21. "Of which salvation the prophets have inquired and searched diligently, who prophesied of the grace that should come unto you: searching what, or what manner of time the Spirit of Christ which was in them did signify, when it testified beforehand the sufferings of Christ, and the glory that should follow."—1 Peter 1:10, 11. Paul, speaking of Israel in the days of Moses, tells us that the gospel was preached unto them, "but the word preached did not profit them, not being mixed with faith in them that heard it."—Heb. 4:2. Moses esteemed the reproach of Christ greater than the rich treasures of Egypt. Heb. 11:26. From the above scriptures we learn that this great mystery had not been kept secret from the holy prophets; but it was hidden from the world because the world would not receive it, just as in Paul's day when he says; "If our gospel be hid, it is hid to them that are lost; in whom the God of this world hath blinded the minds of them which believe not, lest the light of the glorious gospel of Christ, who is the image of God, should shine unto them."—2 Cor. 4:3, 4. Here is the reason why the princes of this world did not know the mystery of God. And Paul was correct when he said, "which in other ages was not made known unto the sons of men, as it is now revealed unto his holy apostles and prophets by the Spirit." The Holy Spirit is the great medium through which alone the mystery of God is made known. (1 Corinthians 2:11; and 12:3). As they would not accept his word, they could not receive the Spirit, (John 14:17); therefore they must remain in ignorance of the great things of God. Now, be it known, that when Joseph Smith translated the Book of Mormon, he knew but little of the many religious creeds that existed, and the question of the gospel being preached before Christ was not one of the questions of the time, but it was an universal understanding, notwithstanding the testimony of the Bible, that the gospel had never been known until Christ came. But no sooner had the elders began to preach what was found in the Book of Mormon on that subject than the clergy concluded they had found a sure evidence that the book was an imposture and Joseph Smith a false teacher. And they have continued to hurl this argument at our heads, just as you, doctor, have hurled it at me to-day; and thank God, with just as little force. Let me ask you a question or two, doctor, and please see that your lips give a right answer. Since the Scriptures declare that "There is no respect of persons with God, (Rom. 2: 11); and that with him "there is no variableness, neither shadow of turning," (James 1: 17); and since without the light of the gospel no man can be prepared for eternal life, are we justified in supposing that for four thousand years God purposely kept the world in darkness, and hurled them down to the shades of eternal death? Could we reconcile that supposition with the fact that "God is love?" Is it true that life and immortality are brought to light in the gospel, and in that alone?

Dr. T. T.—I certainly believe in the divine character as revealed, and I know of no means by which life and immortality could be brought to light only in and through the gospel. And I must acknowledge the truth that, as Christ's is the "only name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved," (Acts 4: 12), it follows that wherever and whenever Christ was preached, there and then was the gospel preached; for by no other means could Christ be made known to the sons of men. Christ, without the gospel would be as useless to man, so far as salvation is concerned, as the gospel without Christ. The one is the workman, the other is the means of operation.

Elder D.—Thank you, doctor. Christ says, "Abraham rejoiced to see my day; and he saw it and was glad."—John 8: 56. And Paul says, "The gospel was preached to Abraham."—Gal. 3: 8. Read the proud galaxy of names recorded in Hebrews, chapter 11, who all lived and died in faith—the faith of the glorious gospel of Christ, for none other could bring life and immortality within the scope of their spiritual vision. Joseph Smith was given wisdom far ahead of the great ones of the day; for in his translation of the Scriptures, rendered in his twenty-seventh year, the year 1832, he has shown that the gospel was revealed to Adam, Seth, Enoch, Noah, Shem, Abraham, and Melchisedec, and he gives this testimony. "And thus the gospel began to be preached from the beginning, being declared by holy angels sent forth from the presence of God; and by his own voice, and by the gift of the Holy Ghost." (Inspired Translation Gen. 5: 44, 45). And now since this translation has been made others are beginning to see this truth, and are acknowledging it, even though they reject the means through which it came. Dr. Seiss in his "Miracle in stone," published in 1877, on p. 225, says: "From the texts in Luke and Acts, (Luke 1: 68, 79, 70; Acts 3: 20, 21), it is clear that the gospel is as old as the race, and that there never was a time when it was unknown and unsounded. It is traceable in the constellations of the heavens, as represented of old; it is reflected in the traditions and mythologies of all ancient peoples, and in every age there were holy prophets who treasured the divine oracles, and prophesied and taught concerning the coming and achievements of Jesus Christ, and the restitution of all things." Thus we find the work of Joseph Smith sustained by the pen of inspiration, and also by the pens of those who, Pharisee-like, would scorn to stand on the same platform with him. While they reject his inspiration, they are compelled to adopt his views. And while we rejoice to find this despised young man unwittingly honored, we give the honor to whom it belongs, to the Lord God of Hosts, who "from the mouth of babes and sucklings hath perfected praise." Let his holy name be praised!

Dr. T. T.—I heartily respond, Amen. And I confess that I see the matter in a very different light. I can now see that the Old Testament is full of evidence that the prophets and patriarchs all had a glorious foretaste of that life and immortality brought to light in the gospel, else how could Job exclaim, "I know that my Redeemer liveth." Or Isaiah sing so sweetly of the "Savior and Redeemer, the mighty God of Jacob;" or the prophetess Hannah rejoice in the salvation of the Lord? I now have a desire to thoroughly canvass this strange book with you, and compare more fully its teachings with the Bible. I feel that I can no longer walk alone. I need aid to lead me through the darkness.

Elder D.—My friend, my feeble aid shall be freely given, but the needed guide is the Holy Spirit. That will guide into all truth. Seek for its guidance, and let your heart be open to its teachings; and you shall be led in the way of the Lord. For the present, Adieu. C. D.

ANSWER TO "OPEN QUESTION."

Editors Saints' Herald:—Though not having great wisdom or knowledge, yet I thought to try to answer the "open questions."

First, Inasmuch as good and righteousness have an eternal existence, does it not follow as a natural consequence that evil and unrighteousness exist eternal, and that independent of the devil.

Briefly, yes; else the devil and his angels could not have fallen.

Extended. God is the fountain of all truth, goodness, justice and mercy, and is all powerful for good. But to better explain to human understanding, we say that it is not because God wills it that it is good; but because it is good, God so wills it. Thus, then, we understand that God is a God of truth and can not lie. He can not make five and four more or less than nine. It therefore follows that all truth and righteousness are independent in the sphere of action that God has placed them in, and any attempt to set them aside would not be a righteous act, consequently must be unrighteous. The devil did not err so much in proposing as he did, if he knew no better; but he did evil in striving to establish his plan after he had been shown his error.

Second. Inasmuch as eternal life consists of gaining, through Christ, a celestial glory in the presence of God and his holy angels, while eternal death denotes eternal banishment from God's presence, will the occupants of the terrestrial and telestial glories enjoy eternal life, &c.?

Briefly; yes. Christ is an eternal king, and they will be the subjects of his kingdom.

Extended; the second death has power over none but them who deny the Holy Spirit after having received it; then it must be that all the redeemed shall have life eternal, and the glories are the rewards given for works; for we learn those who are not valiant in the testimony of Jesus will not receive a celestial glory. They of the telestial shall not enjoy the millennium. They are to suffer the vengeance of eternal fire till Christ subdues all enemies under his feet; then all shall bow the knee and every tongue shall confess to him who sits upon the throne for ever and ever. True, they will have no right to the tree of life, but as the leaves of that tree are for the healing of the nations, it shows that there has been provision made for all the children of men who shall receive a redemption through Jesus Christ. And therein do we see the goodness and mercy of God the Father made manifest, and the blind teachings of priestcraft exposed. True, there is a great and vast difference, they of the celestial glory being priests and kings, and they of the terrestrial as children of the household, while they of the telestial remain as servants of the Most High. Yours sincerely,

WILLIAM CAIRNS.

ROOKER.—At Riverton, Iowa, November 1st, 1886, Sr. Lucinda, wife of W. L. Rooker, aged 25 years, 9 months and 16 days. She was baptized July 11th, 1875, by Elder Gordon E. Deuel. Funeral sermon by Rev. James Lytell of the Wesleyan Church. She was faithful in the gospel taught by the Saints.

McKEEL.—Another of the lambs of the fold of Christ is gone to rest in the paradise of God, till the morning of the first resurrection. Elizabeth McKeel was born the 5th of February, 1801, in the Province of New Brunswick, on the north side of the Long Beach on the St. John's River, and was baptized in July, 1865, at Grand Harbor, Grand Manan, New Brunswick, by John Landers. She died on Deer Isle, Eastport, Maine, the 9th of September, 1886, a happy Saint, at peace with God and man, aged 85 years, 7 months and 4 days. Funeral text, Jeremiah 31: "And there is hope in thine end."

Asleep in Jesus! blessed sleep,
From which none ever wakes to weep;
A calm and undisturb'd repose,
Unbroken by the last of foes.
Asleep in Jesus! O how sweet
To be for such a slumber meet!
With holy confidence to sing,
That death hath lost its venom'd sting.
Asleep in Jesus! peaceful rest,
Whose waking is supremely blest:
No fear, no woe, shall dim the hour
That manifests the Savior's pow'r.

MARCHINGTON.—In Attleboro, Massachusetts, Saturday, October 23d, Lucy May, daughter of Bro. John and Sr. Lizzie Marchington, aged 2 weeks and 5 days. Elder C. A. Coombs officiated at the funeral, on Monday 25th. The parents have the sympathy of the saints and friends in the loss of their fond hope. The poet offers the following consolation:

"Though your darling child is taken,
From your bosom to the urn;
Soon the sleeping dust will waken,
And its spirit will return.
Yes; again you will behold it,
Fairer than the morning ray;
In your arms you will enfold it,
When all tears are wiped away."

BETZER.—At Shioction, Outagamie County, Wisconsin, September 27th, 1886, of old age and debility, Sr. Betzer, wife of Bro. Joshua Betzer, aged 67 years, 8 months and 26 days. Sr. Betzer, with her companion, were members in an early day, and have stuck by the church through evil and good report. Her daughter, Mattie Dow, wrote:

"Dear mother, the rushing river,
Whispers ever-more of thee;
To a brighter one above us,
Till the world's loud ringing chorus,
Drew you from your native glen
Only to return again."

BRUSH.—Near Marshalltown, Iowa, October, 11th, 1886, of Bright's disease, brother Blakley Brush, in full faith of the gospel of Christ. He was born in Kentucky, February 8th, 1806; in 1830 he located in Clay County, Indiana, and was married in 1832 to Miss Mary P. Ferguson, to whom was born eleven children, seven of whom—two sons and five daughters—are still living, who with thirty grand-children, now mourn his death. Both husband and wife were baptized by Elder George M. Hinkle in 1835, came to Iowa in 1847, and in 1880 united with the Edenville Branch.

HODGKINS.—At Blenheim, Ontario, October 22d, 1886, of consumption, Bro. George Edward Hodgkins, aged 21 years, 6 months and 5 days. The funeral sermon was preached in the Saints' Chapel, by Elder Samuel Brown, Sunday, October 23d, to an attentive audience of Saints and friends. The text was Matthew 5th chapter and 5th verse, "Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth." Bro. Eddie was very cheerful and patient in all his sufferings, and died strong in the faith. He selected hymns 836, 854, and 862 to be sung at his funeral, and wished Bro. Brown to preach the sermon.

CHASE.—At Brockton, Massachusetts, October 17th, 1886, sister Ella F., wife of Elder Isaiah L. Chase, aged 34 years, 6 months and 17 days. A few days before her death she suffered much from convulsions, until her spirit fled and gave her release. She was a kind mother, an affectionate wife, a loving sister, and will be greatly missed in the society of the Saints. Two children are left with the motherless throng. Funeral service by Elder John Smith.

MARMOY.—At Columbus, Nebraska, Sunday, October 10th, 1886, Bro. Samuel J. Marmoy; born in England, July, 1825, came to America, 1854. In 1869, October 30th, was baptized into the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ, in Salt Lake City, by Elder E. C. Brand; returning in November to Columbus, Nebraska, where he has since resided. After a year of intense suffering from acute bronchitis, from which he seemed to be recovering, he was stricken with paralysis on the 4th, and lingered in great distress of the body, but his mind calm and clear till the last breath was drawn, taking leave of the dear ones of his family, bidding each an affectionate farewell.

J. W. TERRY, Dist. Pres.

A St. Paul clergyman is reported as saying that if Jesus Christ "run a carpenter shop here in this city there are fully one half of our church members who drive up to our churches in their fine carriages would not speak to him. He could not get social recognition unless he lived on Summit avenue or belonged to a club." Evidently the town has been named after the wrong disciple.

Dr. Magnus Huss, the celebrated Swedish physician, is quoted as saying that people of the Northern States of Europe who abuse alcohol, degenerate visibly, and afford more frequently than others examples of monstrosities at birth. In London, at the beginning of the eighteenth century, there was an alarming decrease of the birth rate, which, on inquiry, was shown to be gaused chiefly by drunkenness.

Original Poetry.

TO THE PARENTS WHO MOURN THE LOSS OF LITTLE EDNA.

Mourn not that God hath tho't it best,
That you should be bereft;
He still is merciful and kind,
For you have jewels left.

Think not of darling Edna,
As laid beneath the sod;
But as a shining cherub,
In the palace of the Lord.

Think of the care and sorrow
She has so happily passed;
Think of the shroud and coffin
That awaits us all at last.

And be glad that she so early
Hath left the house of clay,
For the mansions of our Father,
In the realms of endless day.

DAVID WHITMER REVIEWED.

[Concluded from last Herald].

When Mr. Whitmer asserts that "apostles, presidents, councilors and high priests" are not "legitimate appurtenances of the church," he assumes to give an opinion without having the competent authority to make it of any special value; and in some points he is found to differ widely from Jesus and Paul and Joseph. If Joseph the Seer was the servant of God to do the work promised in 2 Nephi 2:2, 3; Book of Nephi 9:11, 12; Book of Mormon 4:2, then the adverse opinions of David Whitmer are of no worth. God's estimate and guarantee of the Seer and his work are to be preferred vastly before the opinion of a man who, though called to the ministry of Christ has nevertheless been of no force in preaching the word of God, and building up the church except in the mere, (yet important), work of bearing testimony to the Book of Mormon, and necessarily to the further fact that Joseph was a prophet, seer, revelator and translator. Whatever Mr. Whitmer may think, Jesus and Paul and Joseph all taught that God made apostles essential officers of the church. Matt. 10:2; 1 Cor. 12:28; Book of Nephi 5:9; Moroni 2:1; Doc. Cov. 16:5, etc.

As for "presidents and councilors," these are convenient modern names signifying those who preside, and those composing councils in the church. And as for "high priests," they were in the church in the days of Melchizedek; (Gen. 14:18, with Heb. 5:10; Alma 9:6, and 10:1, 2); also with the "Church in the wilderness" (Acts 7:38) in the times of Moses. (Lev. 21:10). Jethro was evidently a servant of God and a high priest, (Ex. 3:1, with Ex. 18:7-12). Moses and Aaron were "priests," (Ps. 99:6), and probably high priests, Moses of the higher order and Aaron of the lesser. (Numbers 16:10, with Lev. 8:1-8). That Joseph the Seer held the high priesthood may be inferred from the fact that he was "great like unto Moses;" (2 Nephi 2:2); and that he rightfully possessed the Urim and Thummim which pertains to high priests; (Lev. 8:8).

But in case there were no precedents in the Scriptures, the fact that Joseph was called and appointed to found and establish the "great and marvellous work" of the Lord in this age is a guarantee that in so important a matter as organizing the priesthood he would not go far wrong if at all. It is far safer to trust the judgment and ministrations of the "choice Seer" in these matters than of one or many whom God never called to that work. These who find fault, confess that Joseph was a prophet, seer, revelator and translator, and yet they, who never held such offices and callings propose to correct and rectify his official ministrations. This is both presumptuous and audacious. David Whitmer evidently has the sectarian notion as to what priesthood and high priests signify. Webster defines priesthood as meaning, "The order of men set apart for sacred purposes." Buck holds that a priest is "a person set apart for the performance of sacrifice, and other offices and ceremonies of religion." And both Buck and Webster say that the word priest is a contraction of the word presbyter, and is "of the same import with Elder." Smith, in his dictionary of the Bible says: "Its root-meaning, uncertain as far as the Hebrew itself is concerned, is referred by Gesenius to prophecy." He further says that Saalschutz considers the primary meaning of the word as equivalent to minister. There being grades of authority, there must of necessity be high and lesser priests. In the light of this sensible view of priesthood, Mr. Whitmer's bugaboo of high priests vanishes out of sight.

"The tendency of Smith to abandon the primitive faith and introduce these damnable doctrines, Mr. Whitmer assures me, began to develop quite early in the history of the church. He manifested an alarming disposition to get revelations to cover every exigency that would arise, and in this he was eagerly urged on by some of his associates who would frequently come to him with the request that he "ask the Lord" about this thing or the other. The first striking instance of it, and one that gave rise to grave apprehensions in the minds of David Whitmer and others of his kind, occurred in connection with the publishing of the first edition of the Book of Mormon. Martin Harris was a well-to-do farmer, and he was expected to mortgage his property for the purpose of raising the necessary funds for the printing of the book. His seeming reticence to act in the matter, which Mr. Whitmer attributes to the cautious, business-like manner in which he did everything, offended some of the brethren, and Hyrum Smith, 'The Patriarch,' proposed that some of them take the manuscript to Canada, and there sell the copyright for sufficient money to enable them to get out the publication. A revelation was procured "to order," and "warranted to fit," a thing which occurred with remarkable frequency afterward, and which caused it to be a matter of foregone conclusion that whatever the desires of the favored few expressed or the pressing emergency of the hour demanded it would be admirably embodied in the "message from heaven." Thus "the word of the Lord came" directing that two of the brethren go to Canada as suggested. They went. They also returned, but they brought no money with them and no promise of any."

This has the merit of being news, even if it is false. For it is the first time we ever read, or heard of such a transaction.

If David Whitmer claims that Joseph obtained false revelations and spoke falsely in the name of the Lord as early as 1829, and yet that he was a prophet, seer, revelator and translator sent of God, it remains for him to explain why God called and sent such a recreant, unreliable, misleading false prophet; also why he did not fulfil his promise that such an unfaithful prophet "shall die." (Deut. 18:20). Mr. Whitmer's position in this is contrary to the teaching of the Scriptures, outrages common sense, and in effect charges God with sending and highly recommending one he foreknew would mislead and corrupt by means of false revelations! Preposterous!

"Revelations came in the same manner respecting the establishment of the high priesthood system, which was the work of Sidney Rigdon, an ambitious Biblical scholar, who yearned for authority and notoriety. As well might they restore, says Mr. Whitmer, circumcision and the typical ordinances that were annihilated by Christ's coming as to ornament the church premises with Melchisedec priests."

This "high priesthood system" did not originate with Sidney Rigdon, nor Joseph Smith. As we have seen before, it was with the church in the times of Melchizedek and before, and after that in the times of Moses, and Alma, and Jesus. It was also with the saints in the times of Peter and John. Peter calls it "a royal [kingly] priesthood;" (1 Pet. 2:9); and John says of it: "And hath made us kings and priests unto God his father."—Rev. 2:6. Bingham, in Ant. Chris. Ch., p. 50, says: "St. Jerome, who will be allowed to speak the sense of the ancients . . . says that both in the Old and New Testaments the high priests are an order, the priests another, and the Levites another." . . . "Tertullian in his book De Baptismo, says: "The right of baptizing belongs to the chief priests." Of "chief priests" he further says: "It was no human invention, but an original settlement of the apostles themselves, which they made by divine appointment."—p. 54. On page 60 he also says: "Now this is most expressly said by Theodoret, that he [Ignatius] received the gift of the high priesthood from the hand of the great Peter." Joseph's teachings are in harmony with Scripture and church history, while David Whitmer's theory flatly contradicts both.

"There is no doubt, he continues, that the beginning of the mobbings and persecutions of the church dated from the bold and aggressive announcement of these many revelations, which in their nature, were calculated to stir up a spirit of antagonism among a people who ordinarily were peaceable."

All history shows that the persecutions and mobbings of the Saints at the first were only because of the coming forth and translation of the Book of Mormon, the preaching of the restored gospel and doing other legitimate church work; and that what occurred in Jackson, Van Buren, Clay, Ray and Carrol counties, Missouri, arose from the Saints being believers in the Book of Mormon and prophetic mission of Joseph Smith, and also because they were free-state and anti-slavery people; and also that these were among the chief causes of their persecutions in Caldwell county, Missouri, and at Nauvoo and vicinity in Illinois.

"There was no occasion for the martyrdom of Joseph Smith. He should have lived to witness the coming of Christ, as it was promised him he should, if he remained faithful. His death was conclusive evidence of his having fallen from grace, as it was in direct conflict with what had been promised by the Lord on condition of his remaining faithful."

We know of no promise of this kind; but on the other hand there were prophecies delivered by Joseph showing he would not live to the coming of Christ. See revelation Nov. 27th, 1832, Times and Seasons, vol. 5: 673-4; Mill. Star., 14: 284; also one given Feb 24th, 1834, Doc. Cov. 100: 3, etc.

"Many of the declarations of the prophet, after he lost the spirit of revelation, which were called prophecies, signally failed to come to pass."

This is a bold, unsupported charge. We have asked, and now ask, that any of the authentic revelations and prophecies of Joseph be shown to be false. If David Whitmer, or others, failed to comply with the conditions of certain prophetic promises, it can not in fairness be said the promises failed, even if the things promised did not come to pass.

"The great heavenly 'visitation,' which was alleged to have taken place in the temple at Nauvoo, was a grand fizzle. The elders were assembled on the appointed day, which it was promised would be a veritable day of Pentecost, but there was no visitation. No Peter, James, and John, no Moses and Elias, put in an appearance. 'I was in my seat on that occasion,' says Mr. Whitmer, 'and I know that the story sensationally circulated, and which is now on the records of the Utah Mormons as an actual happening, was nothing but a trumped-up yarn. I saw a great many of these things which I knew were not right, but I clung on in patience, trusting everything would eventually be put right."

Mr. Whitmer has often stated that he had nothing to do with the church after 1838. How then can it be that he attended any endowment in the temple at Nauvoo in 1845 and 6? But if he meant the temple in Kirtland, Ohio, and the endowment and dedication which took place there in 1836, he flatly contradicts the statements of the Messenger and Advocate, edited at that time by his own brother John, as may be seen by reading that paper for March, 1836, pages 274 to 281 also statements in Mill. Star., 15: 581, to 739. And besides this written testimony, the writer has frequently conversed with some who attended on that occasion, and their testimony is the very reverse of Mr. Whitmer's as here given. George Morey, who was the temple-keeper, Ebenezer Page, John E. Page, Lebbeus T. Coon, Ebenezer Robinson and his wife Angeline, and others, have repeatedly told of great and very marvelous divine blessings and manifestations which they personally witnessed at that time. If Mr. Whitmer was present upon these occasions and witnessed no extraordinary divine manifestations, it simply proves that he alone was at fault. Saul "heard the voice" of Jesus who met him in the way, but those who journeyed with him did not. (Acts 9: 7). Daniel "alone saw the vision" which appeared to him at the river Hiddekel; but the men who were with him "saw not the vision." (Dan. 10: 7). The "pillar of the cloud" that was light to Israel, was "a cloud and darkness" to the Egyptians. Ex. 14: 20.

If remarkable evidences of divine favor were not given during the endowment and dedication at Kirtland, then the testimony of hundreds—possibly thousands—of persons who attended is false; so also is the testimony of the "choice Seer," John Whitmer, etc., who have written or caused to be written and published, while they were living who were in attendance, the statements that God did, in a marvelous and wonderful way, accept and approve of the services and administrations on those occasions. We are willing to believe that David Whitmer did not then receive spiritual blessings; but when he insinuates or testifies that others did not, his evidence is presumptuous and worthless.

"The brethren had received their 'everlasting inheritances' in Jackson county, Mo., where it was declared that Zion and the great temple were to be built, and where Jesus would come in 'this generation.' Joseph Smith went so far as to mark out a particular tract of country near Far West, Mo., where he declared was the Garden of Eden. From all of these places the church was driven, and their everlasting inheritances were wrested from them. The spot where Eve had plucked the fated apple fell into the hands of the unbelieving, and the 'Center stake of Zion,' located by 'divine injunction,' was transplanted and moved around promiscuously from one locality to another, according to the disposition of the people to tolerate the presence of the Saints.

"At Far West, Missouri, the most serious split in the church occurred. It was in 1838. The Whitmers, Oliver Cowdery, Martin Harris, Hiram Page, and others of the original stock protested against preaching some of these strange revelations as doctrine, and this called forth the most violent attack from the autocratic priesthood."

The history of the church for those times informs us that the causes which then led to the "serious split" were as follows: "The committee of the whole church in Zion, in General Assembly at Far West, February 5th, 1838, Thomas B. Marsh, Moderator," [Joseph the Seer was not there.—Ed.] "entertained a charge made by Elder George M. Hinkle against 'the three presidents' of that church, namely, David Whitmer, W. W. Phelps and John Whitmer. "He then read a written document containing a number of accusations against the three presidents. He spoke many things against them, setting forth in a plain and energetic manner the iniquity of Phelps and Whitmer in using the moneys which were loaned to the church; also David Whitmer's wrong in persisting in the use of tea, coffee and tobacco. . . . Elder George Morey, who was one of the committee sent to labor with the Presidency, spoke, setting forth in a very energetic manner the proceedings of the presidency as being iniquitous." So also did Elders — Grover, David W. Patten, Elias Higbee — Murdock, — Morley, Moses Martin, John Corroll, and others. "Elder Lyman Wight stated that he considered all other accusations of minor importance compared to their selling their lands in Jackson county; that they (Phelps and Whitmer) had set an example which all the Saints are liable to follow. He said it was a h—h principle, and that they had flatly denied the faith in doing so." [The Saints had been counselled by revelation through the Seer to not sell their lands in Jackson county—where they are now worth from $75 to many thousand dollars per acre—but to hold on to them unyieldingly.—Ed].

"The Moderator then called the vote in favor of the present Presidency; the negative was then called, and the vote against David Whitmer, John Whitmer and W. W. Phelps was unanimous, excepting eight or ten, and this minority only wished them to continue in office a little longer, or until Joseph Smith Jr. came up."—Mill. Star., vol. 16: 115, 116.

Joseph the Seer reached Far West the 14th of February, 1838. And on the 11th of the next April Elder Seymour Bronson preferred charges against Oliver Cowdery before the High Council and the Bishop and his Council and he was cut off.

On the 13th of the same month charges were preferred against David Whitmer before the High Council at Far West, as follows: "1.—For not observing the word of wisdom. 2.—For unchristianlike conduct in neglecting to attend meetings; in uniting with and possessing the same spirit as the dissenters. 3.—In writing letters to the dissenters in Kirtland unfavorable to the cause and to the character of Joseph Smith, junior. 4. In neglecting the duties of his calling and separating himself from the Church while he had a name among us. 5.—For signing himself President of the Church of Christ, after he had been cut off from the Presidency, in an insulting letter to the High Council.

"After reading the above charges, together with a letter sent to the President of said Council, (a copy of which may be found in Far West Record, book A), the Council considered the charges sustained, and consequently considered him (David Whitmer) no longer a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints."—Mill Star, vol. 16: 133-4.

From the foregoing the Saints can readily discover what were the causes of the "serious split," and with whom they originated. They can also see which of the revelations of the Seer these "dissenters" then resisted. Time has fully vindicated the wisdom of that revelation commanding the Saints to not sell their lands in Jackson county; and as for the Word of Wisdom, the principles it advocates are now amply sustained by the most eminent physicians, hygienists, etc.

We regret any occasion for displaying before our readers any of those dark and trying scenes through which the church passed in 1837-8, and present them now, only to defend the Church and maintain its integrity. We honor David Whitmer for all the good he has done; but we honor God and his Church far more than any man, and this is our explanation for presenting the foregoing facts and any which may follow hereafter. And besides this, Joseph the Seer is dead, and when the living-attack his work and reputation and he not here to explain, others must be permitted to do it, even if by stubborn facts and searching logic.

The Danites were organized and instructed to bring these belligerent brethren to terms, or visit upon their heads the desperate consequences. There was no mistaking the alternative. David Whitmer was the first man to act, and he acted promptly. Without waiting to argue the question further, he proceeded to run the fearful gauntlet, and one shudders to hear the recital of the thrilling incidents that attended that memorable flight. If the whistling of bullets was to be taken as evidence of an intention to dispose forever of this uncompromising witness, then Mr. Whitmer was assuredly left in no doubt as to the desires of the church concerning him. He succeeded in passing the vigilant sentinels of that terrible night's watch, and reached Richmond in safety, where he has ever since resided."

It is only necessary to remark that David Whitmer in a late letter to us denies what is here stated, also some other things stated by the reporter, but which letter we are requested by Mr. Whitmer to "not publish." This will strike our readers as decidedly strange. If the reporter misstated Mr. Whitmer, why is he not willing to state particularly wherein, and then have the error and evil corrected through the press?

"A person residing not far from the picturesque town of Richmond declares that he met Porter Rockwell immediately after the shooting had been executed, and that Rockwell asked him for ten dollars to enable him to leave the country. This party, who was himself a pretty rough character, gave the Danite the money asked for, after Rockwell had confessed to having shot the Governor in retaliation for the memorable order which was sent out by Boggs to exterminate the Mormons. His story is well substantiated. None of these things is told by Mr. Whitmer in a spirit of hatred; in fact his consideration for all of the "transgressors" is most commendable. He does not entertain a doubt that Joseph Smith was a practical polygamist, and has no sympathy whatever with Joseph Smith, Jr., who is at the head of the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints, and who avers that his father (the prophet) never adopted or advocated polygamy."

When Mr. Whitmer parades his opinion on this matter of polygamy, especially in view of the fact that he had nothing to do with the church after April 1838, and therefore knew nothing of Joseph's private life, he only gives further evidence of his recklessness of other people's reputation, and of his seeming readiness to cast a cloud over the fame of that Seer whom he allows God called and empowered to introduce the last, and in some respects, grandest of all the dispensations. This smacks of prejudice, envy, disappointed ambition, retaliation for supposed wrongs, or something of that sort, and exhibits a sad want of forbearance and Christian love.

Joseph Smith, president of the Reorganized Church, demonstrates from the Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants, and from all the papers, periodicals and books published by the Church up to the death of his father, (June 27th, 1844), that he always taught monogamy, and denounced polygamy and everything of that kind. Mr. Whitmer would hardly dare undertake to refute this position. And as he was not with the church after 1838, he is not a competent witness to prove that Joseph the Seer "was a practical polygamist," and his volunteering such an opinion reflects no credit upon either his head or heart. Joseph does not admit or confess what he does not know of in respect to his father's life and teachings.

"He is satisfied that this faction, like that which followed Brigham Young into the Rocky Mountains, is a withered branch, without the vitality of divine approval; and along with this he insists that there are lots of good, honest people among them all."

Mr. Whitmer's opinion that the Reorganized Church is a "faction like that which followed Brigham Young into the Rocky Mountains," and "is a withered branch, without the vitality of divine approval," is equally valueless with others he has given. When the facts in respect to the rise and progress of the Reorganization are considered, it is found to bear unmistakable marks of "the vitality of divine approval;" for at the very first "the Spirit of the Lord" lifted up a standard, and from that time forward faithful men and women have labored prayerfully and diligently, bringing many thousands to a saving knowledge of the gospel of Christ and redeeming them from the ways of sin and error. In doing this they have met and overcome the accumulated prejudices originating in falsehood and fed by the heresies and dissensions of professed Saints; and they have also vindicated the work of God, delivering it from the reproach brought upon it by unwise and corrupt would-be leaders, and have won for the Church of Christ an honorable place and name and influence among men. This they have done with the world, the flesh, the devil, and all the factions of the church opposing them; and while so engaged, God has marvelously blessed and sustained their work, confirming it with divers miracles, signs and gifts of the Holy Ghost, as many thousands bear witness in America—including Canada—in foreign lands, and upon the islands of the sea. When Mr. Whitmer says the Reorganized Church "is a withered branch, without the vitality of divine approval," he undertakes to testify of what he does not know, and he thereby exhibits a lack of prudence and wisdom, and Christian love and light that is truly lamentable. The Reorganized Church has withstood the slurs and slings and slanders of enemies from without and within the church from the first, and it was never more prosperous than now, was never so well prepared to resist attacks as now, and its prospects for future work were never before so promising. It exhibits a wonderful degree of vigor, growth and activity for "a withered branch," and it will likely continue to do so.

Since writing the chief part of this review we have received a letter from David Whitmer in which he denies having told his interviewer some of the things set forth in the foregoing article from the Inter Ocean. His denial is not sufficiently specific, and what is worse he requests that we do not publish it!

It strikes us as very strange that Mr. Whitmer refuses to permit us to correct through the HERALD what he states is incorrect in the Inter-Ocean article. If he knows that misstatements have been made in that article, he being in some sense the occasion of it, fair dealing demands that he take the earliest time and the most effective means to mend the wrong. But when he fails to do this, and also forbids us to publish his letter of denial and explanation, it awakens unhappy misgivings and moves us yet further to defend the church and its interests by an appeal to facts on record and to the testimony of credible men and women who related the facts to which they were and are knowing, and leave the results for the future to determine.

David Whitmer is now an old man, (over eighty-three), worn and weakened in mind and body, and all should look with forbearance and compassion on his real or seeming errors and misstatements, also upon what appears to be his prejudices against the Seer and the Church, and attribute them to human weakness, rather than to intentional wrong. Interviewers now ask him to recount what transpired fifty and sixty years ago, and when they get his statements, they dress them up in their own language, and no doubt exaggerate and even add to them. Mr. Whitmer should either reject all interviewers, or correct at once the errors they publish. This would, in part, save us the painful work of refuting published misstatements, which we do and shall do, by an appeal to documents published by the church and its officers at or near the time of the occurrence of facts recited. Authoritative written evidence is vastly superior to the memory of the aged and infirm. We wish David Whitmer well, but we heartily reject his theories and resist his errors.

In conclusion, we think the key to David Whitmer's attitude toward the church, his slackness, dissension, opposition and self-justification, may be found in a revelation given through Joseph the Seer, September, 1839, Doc. Cov. 29: 1, which says:

"Behold, I say unto you David, that you have feared man and have not relied on me for strength, as you ought; but your mind has been on the things of the earth more than on the things of me, your Maker, and the ministry whereunto you have been called; and you have not given heed unto my Spirit, and to those who were set over you, but have been persuaded by those whom I have not commanded; wherefore, you are left to inquire for yourself at my hand, and ponder upon the things which you have received. * * * And you shall attend to the ministry in the church, and before the world, and in the region round about. Amen."

AMERICA, THE LAND OF JOSEPH.

WE give below an extract, or two, from an oration delivered at Wirt, Decatur county, Iowa, July 3d, 1886, by Judge R. C. Henry, of Mt. Ayr, Iowa, and sent us by Bro. N. J. Kent, for publication. The delay has been partially unavoidable.

"I believe that permanent and universal peace will come, because the mouth of the Lord of Hosts hath spoken it. On every page of the New Testament are written forever words of peace. The generous, unselfish efforts of this great republic may be a part of God's plan for the fulfillment of prophecy, and the ushering in of that time when nations shall not lift up sword against nation; neither shall they learn war any more."

"Let Romans boast of Carthage destroyed, and Greeks celebrate burning Troy—but let our age boast of nobler victories. Let our faithfulness and constancy to human rights and the cause of the world's advance further the coming of that time,

"When the war-drum throbs no longer,
And the battle flags are furled,
In the parliament of man,
The federation of the world."

At the request of Bro. Kent we add the following evidences concerning America being the land promised to the seed of Joseph in prophecy.

"Joseph is a fruitful bough, even a fruitful bough by a well; whose branches run over the wall: the archers have sorely grieved him, and shot at him, and hated him; But his bow abode in strength, and the arms of his hands were made strong by the hands of the mighty God of Jacob; (from thence is the shepherd, the stone of Israel); even by the God of thy father, who shall help thee; and by the Almighty, who shall bless thee with blessings of heaven above, blessings of the deep that lieth under, blessings of the breasts, and of the womb: the blessings of thy father have prevailed above the blessings of my progenitors unto the utmost bound of the everlasting hills; they shall be on the head of Joseph, and on the crown of the head of him that was separate from his brethren."—Gen. 49: 22-26.

"And Israel beheld Joseph's sons, and said, Who are these? And Joseph said unto his father, They are my sons, whom God hath given me in this place. And he said, Bring them, I pray thee, unto me, and I will bless them. Now the eyes of Israel were dim for age, so that he could not see. And he brought them near unto him; and he kissed them, and embraced them. And Israel said unto Joseph, I had not thought to see thy face: and lo, God hath shewed me also thy seed. And Joseph brought them out from between his knees, and he bowed himself with his face to the earth. And Joseph took them both, Ephraim in his right hand toward Israel's left hand, and Manasseh in his left hand toward Israel's right hand, and brought them near unto him. And Israel stretched out his right hand, and laid it upon Ephraim's head, who was the younger, and his left hand upon Manasseh's head, guiding his hands wittingly; for Manasseh was the firstborn. And he blessed Joseph, and said, God, before whom my fathers Abraham and Isaac did walk, the God which fed me all my life long unto this day, the angel which redeemed me from all evil, bless the lads; and let my name be named on them, and the name of my fathers Abraham and Isaac; and let them grow into a multitude in the midst of the earth. And when Joseph saw that his father laid his right hand upon the head of Ephraim, it displeased him; and he held up his father's hand, to remove it from Ephraim's head unto Manasseh's head. And Joseph said unto his father, Not so, my father, for this is the firstborn; put thy right hand upon his head. And his father refused, and said, I know it, my son, I know it; he also shall become a people, and he also shall be great; but truly his younger brother shall be greater than he, and his seed shall become a multitude of nations."—Gen. 48: 8-19.

"And of Joseph he said, Blessed of the Lord be his land, for the precious things of heaven, for the dew, and for the deep that coucheth beneath, and for the precious fruits brought forth by the sun, and for the precious things put forth by the moon, and for the chief things of the ancient mountains, and for the precious things of the lasting hills, and for the precious things of the earth and fulness thereof, and for the good will of him that dwelt in the bush; let the blessing come upon the head of Joseph, and upon the top of the head of him that was separated from his brethren. His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the horns of unicorns; with them he shall push the people together to the ends of the earth: and they are the ten thousands of Ephraim, and they are the thousands of Manasseh."—Deut. 33: 13-17.

"How shall I give thee up, Ephraim? how shall I deliver thee, Israel? how shall I make thee as Admah? how shall I set thee as Zeboim? mine heart is turned within me, my repentings are kindled together. I will not execute the fierceness of mine anger, I will not return to destroy Ephraim: for I am God and not man; the Holy One in the midst of thee: and I will not enter into the city. They shall walk after the Lord: he shall roar like a lion: when he shall roar, then the children shall tremble from the west. They shall tremble as a bird out of Egypt, and as a dove out of the land of Assyria: and I will place them in their houses, saith the Lord."—Hosea 11: 8-11.

"Therefore wait ye upon me, saith the Lord, until the day that I rise up to the prey; for my determination is to gather the nations, that I may assemble the kingdoms, to pour upon them mine indignation, even all my fierce anger; for all the earth shall be devoured with the fire of my jealousy. For then will I turn to the people a pure language, that they may all call upon the name of the Lord, to serve him with one consent. From beyond the rivers of Ethiopia my suppliants, even the daughter of my dispersed, shall bring mine offering."—Zeph. 3: 8-10.

These prophecies locate the land of Joseph and his sons, Ephraim and Manasseh, "beyond the wall"—the sea. It was greater than that received by Jacob's "progenitors," reaching "the utmost [farthest] bounds of the everlasting hills," reckoning from the land of Goshen where the patriarch Jacob was when delivering this prophecy. And Jacob, when blessing Joseph's sons, locates their "multitude," their posterity "in the midst of the earth," reckoning from Goshen, and here Ephraim's seed would "become a multitude of nations." This points clearly to the continent of America, (1) for the reason that, measuring from Goshen, it is "in the midst of the earth; (2) for the reason that in America, when discovered by Columbus and others, "a multitude of nations" having a common lineage occupied it, whose origin is manifestly Israelitish. Moses' prophetic blessing on Joseph and his seed is possible in America, but it is not in the land of Judeah, nor in any other land known to man.

"The precious things of heaven" doubtless refers to the revelations of God's will, and to Divine providences and favors specially bestowed.

"The dew," and "the deep that coucheth beneath," relate to the large and singularly beneficent distribution and supply of these elements.

"The precious fruits brought forth by the sun," and "the precious things put forth by the moon," relate without question to the variety, excellence and abundance in the vegetable kingdom on the American continent, stretching through every variety of climate from near the extremes of north and south.

"The chief things of the ancient mountains," and "the precious things of the lasting hills" are clearly the valuable minerals and other precious mountain products which abound to such an unparalleled degree throughout America.

"The precious things of the earth and fulness thereof, [of these precious things. —Ed.] clearly refer to all those blessings in any way arising from and pertaining to our earth, and which are found in such "fulness" only on the American continent.

"The good will of him that dwelt in the bush," is manifestly the good will of God, for he it was who appeared to Moses the prophet in the burning bush. (Exodus 3: 4-14). And this "good will" could be manifest to Joseph's seed on Joseph's land, only by direct revelation from God to that "seed" making known the government of God and the plan of salvation in Jesus Christ.

These prophecies relate to America for the reason that they point geographically to it; and for the further reason that there is no other land in which it is possible for them to find fulfillment, and for the still further reason that every part and every item of these prophecies do find fulfillment here. America is the land of Joseph; and this fact pointed out by ancient prophets which now is so amply and minutely sustained by known facts which agree exactly with the prophecies, is irrefutable proof of the existence of God, of the truth of the christian religion, and of the great work entrusted to the Latter Day Saints.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

THE associate Editor spent Sunday the 7th inst., with the Saints at Saint Joseph, Missouri, and was well pleased with the progress made by them, and also with their cheering prospects. All the services were well attended by large and deeply interested congregations. Their newly organized Sunday School is making progress and bids fair to be an important helper in the good work of building up the right and saving souls. Elder H. C. Bronson was at Stewartville engaged in a protracted effort at the German church, and was having large and deeply interested congregations. Elder John Terry and wife were among the many esteemed Saints and friends whom we met at St. Joseph. They are happy in the work of the Lord.

The Saints of Webberville, Michigan, are trying to build a church, so writes Sr. Billinsky; and she writes that they are poor and would be glad of help from any of the brethren. She thinks "every little helps," and says direct to Matilda Billinsky, Webberville, Ingham county, Michigan.

The Saints at DeKalb, or Cortland, DeKalb county, Illinois, are also asking for aid to build a chapel. It seems but a small thing that is asked for, and in itself it is but small; many may give without feeling the loss of what is given. But we wish to remind those who are more directly interested in the building of places of worship in the various branches, that many other branches are also engaged in building, are poor and straining every nerve to build, and can not in justice to their own work give so liberally, if at all, as they could were the circumstances different; therefore, brothers and sisters, be not offended or hurt if few only respond to your calls for help. Do not depend upon help from abroad, for each branch may possibly have its own burden to bear.

Bro. W. N. Ray, of Des Moines, Iowa, writes under date of November 5th, that the Saints were trying to live correctly. Bro. M. T. Short left Des Moines Nov. 1st after speaking there six times, excellent discourses, Bro. Ray writes; house better filled each night than at any time since it was built; except at conference.

Sr. Julia M. Allen of Birch Run, Michigan, writes us October 30th, her seventy-first birthday, that she still loves the truth she received over fifty years ago.

Bro. S. Reed writes from Lone Elm, Henderson county, Tennessee: "I can't do without the HERALD. It is our only preacher here."

Bro. A. H. Parsons writes us, November 4th, from Chase, Kansas, "The work is onward in this mission."

By letter from Bro. J. H. Lawn we learn that two were baptized by Bro. Herman C. Smith at the Watsonville, California, conference; and that Bro. Smith was preaching to excellent audiences wherever he went.

Sr. S. M. Grimwood of Providence, Rhode Island, collected and sent to aid the Hope $4.84, and says: "I hope to see the Herald and the Hope prosper. I could not give up the Herald, and hope to always have it to read."

Sr. Eliza Hannam, of Forester Michigan writes: "We can not do without the Herald. It is like bread to the hungry soul."

WE are decidedly favorable to the idea of fully repairing the Temple at Kirtland. It is quite in keeping with the prophetic declaration that "the waste places of Zion shall be rebuilt," and besides that, there is a moral prestige to be gained by it which properly utilized by the elders in their respective fields, especially in the East, will materially increase the chances of the missionaries to get a hearing before the people. Of course measured merely from a money getting stand point it "will not pay," as there is nothing connected with it that can possibly return cent per centum, upon the expenditure; but measured from a spiritual and moral standpoint, it will return a hundred fold.

We were misunderstood when we first suggested that the Temple would be of value as an objective in a legal fight in the courts; but time proved us to be correct; and this encourages us to persist in the belief that while there are "no millions in it," as a speculation in the money market, in the moral and intellectual world it is a vantage ground that we can not afford to abandon, or forego to occupy,—it will be seen ere long.

REV. C. P. LYFORD, who has been a missionary of some one of the, so-called, Evangelical churches in the United States, to Utah, lately made some astonishing statements in a ministers' meeting held at Syracuse, New York, in reference to the "Mormon question." Among other things he said: "There never was a Mormon book published that was not a record of crime, treason and subversion of government, and that is the reason it has come to have a power that is wonderful."

If Mr. Lyford had even a superficial knowledge of Mormonism when he said that, he certainly told a lie. The Book of Mormon itself is no more such a history as that, than is the Bible; and except those books which the enemies of Mormonism have written of it, there never has been a book published in regard to its history and origin that will bear such a name.

Mr. Lyford also states that during the four years which he spent in Utah he never knew of a Mormon being converted, or brought into an evangelical chuech. In this we presume Mr. Lyford told the truth; and it may be to the discredit of Mr. Lyford and his co-missionaries, and against the methods of conversion adopted by them in dealing with Mormonism in Utah.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Sr. Carrie C. Heath, all alone at Manchester, New Hampshire, writes on November 1st, as follows:

"I am trying to let my light shine, by living near the Savior, and doing the will of my Father in heaven, who has done so much for me, in and through the gift of his dear Son who purchased my pardon and set me free; glory to his name! I have no where else to go but to the Savior. He is "the way, the truth, and the life." I am glad I have not to go far off to find him. I have desired that the elders of latter day Israel might come here to New Hampshire, if it is the Lord's will. I left the orthodox church in Northbridge, Massachusetts, and was baptized into this about fifty years ago, about the age of twenty. It seemed to me that I received an additional light and glory. I have always stood aloof from other churches, but have worshipped with them. It seemed I could adopt the language of the beloved apostle Paul, "Whether in pretense or truth, Christ is preached, and therein I do and will rejoice." How beautiful it is to be a branch of the living vine, bringing forth fruit to the honor and glory of the Master. This I am striving to do, the Lord helping me."

Bro. M. T. Short is at Iowa City, Iowa, endeavoring to get an opening. He went there at our request and direction. Of the situation there he writes November 3d:

"I can not get church, nor have I succeeded in obtaining any public building here, as yet, nevertheless I am holding forth in a private house, and several will renew their covenant, and a number will accept the gospel for the first time. Here is where a hand-cart company outfitted for Utah, and hence prejudice is very great. I will tract the town and walk into the public prints, as I did at DesMoines. A number are to be baptized at Grimes, near DesMoines, next Sabbath, so they stated to me 31st ult."

BRO. JOSEPH F. BURTON sends us a Manning, New South Wales, Times for September 4th, from the "local and general news" department of which we cull the following:

"THEOLOGICAL DISCUSSION AT NORTH FORSTER.—At North Forster a public discussion took place on Monday night, in the Hall, between the Rev. R. H. Phillips of Taree, and Mr. Joseph F. Burton, a traveling missionary of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in California. The subject was, "That the Church of Latter Day Saints is the true church of Christ in organization, faith, and doctrine," and the common version of the Bible was taken as the standard of evidence. Each speaker was allowed fifteen minutes, and the debate lasted from 7:30 to 10.45 p. m., a crowded audience being present. Mr. Dunn occupied the chair. Mr. Burton has been in the colonies about two years, and was through this district about a year ago. He is now on his way to the Nambucca, where a church has been formed. At Forster he immersed twenty-eight persons of both sexes in the river, and organized a church containing thirty members. Since his arrival in the colonies he has baptized about one hundred persons. His wife and daughter accompany him on his tour. The church represented by Mr. Burton is entirely opposed to Mormonism, and takes the Bible as its standard of faith, but believes the Book of Mormon to be what it is represented to be, namely, a revelation through Joseph Smith—but belief in it is not essential to membership or salvation. The headquarters of this church are at Lamoni, Iowa. The church numbers about 35,000 members."

"THE prosecutors of the Andover heresy seem to have run against a stump at the very outset. The three lawyers appointed to review their indictment pronounce it as "perfectly unprofessional, loose, rambling, and incoherent throughout," and the board has ordered the prosecutors to amend the charges "so that they shall be made plain," and to substitute five indictments adapted to the theological condition of each one of the defendants instead of one indictment. It was also voted by the board that the prosecutors must comply with the order and furnish their proofs on or before the 8th of the present month. In view of the size of the contract on hand the prosecutors have already publicly declared that "they are ready to retire from the case at once or at any time." The prosecutors' lot evidently is not a happy one."

It would appear from the foregoing from the Chicago Tribune of Wednesday, November 3d, that the conservative elements in the Congregational Church which sat down so summarily upon the "progressive theology" of the unsatisfied portion in the late convention held at Des Moines, Iowa, propose to hunt down the heretics among them. We wish them earnest success in heresy hunting, as the atmosphere of Congregationalism will not again be clear until the discussion is had, be it soon or late,—“probation after death” as a principle of belief has come to stay.

BRO. E. L. PAGE of Hannibal, Missouri, sent us a copy of the Hannibal Evening Post for October 2d, containing an article from the pen of F. W. Morton, and credited by the Post to the Chicago Times, in which the following huge story is told:

"On returning to the village of Palmyra we visited another hill which is celebrated in the annals of Mormon history. In order that the reader may understand the significance of this hill we must go back to Joe Smith and his bible. The book, which by the way, no one ever saw, was said to consist of metal plates, pierced on one edge, and fastened together by rings which passed through the holes. With the book was also found, or so pretended, a huge pair of spectacles, too large for any mortal eyes, which had the remarkable quality of turning the hieroglyphics on the metal plates into plain English.

"Smith's scheme required the publication of his bible. How was he to accomplish this? No one was allowed to see the metal plates, and yet Smith could not write a legible hand. An accomplice was necessary. But Smith was equal to the occasion. He engaged one Oliver Cowdery, a school-teacher, to be his scribe, promising him part of the proceeds of the book. The Smiths were then living in a little, one-story log house. There were only two rooms on the ground floor, with a pointed garret in the roof. Across one corner of this garret Smith had a blanket screen stretched. Behind this screen he ensconced himself with his magic spectacles and his golden book (or as Hussey affirms, his tile, brick). Cowdery sat on the other side of the blanket and wrote from Smith's dictation.

"Martin Harris, a wealthy farmer, was induced to bear the expense of printing the manuscript. But Harris' wife was a woman of too much good sense to be Smith's dupe. So in the absence of her husband she put the manuscript in the stove and burnt it up. Here was a check in the proceeding, and one, too, that filled Smith with dismay.

"He and Harris were morally certain that Mrs. Harris had taken the manuscript, but they did not know it was burned. Smith was unable to reproduce the book exactly, and he feared that the first manuscript would be produced to confound him. However, it wasn't a time to give up. He and his friends repaired to Miner's hill by night, and there dug a sort of cave on the east side of the hill. The dimensions of this cave were forty feet deep, sixteen feet wide, and seven feet high. The entrance was secured by a substantial door of two inch oak plank. In this dark cave Smith set about producing a new manuscript, Cowdery still acting as an amanuensis. This copy was more securely guarded; it is that from which the Mormon bible was printed in 1829.

"Miner's hill is about two and a half miles south of Palmyra. In appearance it is similar to Mormon hill, and like it runs off to the south in a ridge. In the days of Smith it was heavily wooded. When we visited the hill the timber had been cut down, and the whole was a slashing filled with stumps, briars and burrs. We had little difficulty in finding what used to be the cave. It is situated just below the brow of the hill. Fifty-six years, however, have left their ravages. Instead of a cave we found quite a depression where the earth had given way and fallen in. The door had long since disappeared. The door-frame, however, still stands there, buried more than half the way up in the earth. The frame is roughly made, the sides not being mortised into the top, but simply secured by three large spikes driven through each end of the top piece. We took our knife and cut off a piece of the wood. It was as sound as when the frame was first made. Hundreds of people, we were told, annually visit Mormon hill; but few ever wend their way through the burs and briars of Miner's hill.

This is the first time we ever heard of Miner's Hill, and a hole in it in which the Book of Mormon was concocted. This story, if F. W. Morton is really sincere, has been palmed off on him by somebody who caught him off his guard. To believe that two men engaged in digging a cave "forty feet deep, sixteen feet wide and seven feet high," into a hill side in an open country without observation and detection, requires heaps of credulity, and F. W. Morton is entitled to a prize. This is a cousin to the story told in the presence of Bro. Blair, while traveling on a train lately, to the effect that the "Mormons" were building a fine temple at Lamoni. "Why," said his informant, "one block of stone which is to go into the wall is a solid cube ten feet square." And when Bro. Blair mildly reminded the gentleman that the people of Lamoni were not possessed of mechanical contrivances with which to handle stones of such immense weight as a ten feet cube of solid rock would be, he collapsed as a story teller, with "I declare, I never thought of that." No, this stone so easily lied into existence, was made to stop the mouth of the cave lied into Miner's Hill. It is of the same piece of extravagant Mormon Munchausens, as the yarn told by our ancient landlord of the Nauvoo Mansion, to visiting reverends from Park Bluffs, Iowa, about the wonderful tunnel dug by the Prophet Smith under the Mississippi river from the Nauvoo House to Montrose on the opposite side of the river, a distance of two miles.

THE town of Stewartville, Dekalb county, Missouri, where quite a number of the Saints are dwelling has suffered a very serious loss, by the burning of the College there. Of it the Independent Extra, for Nov. 6th says:

"At about nine o'clock this Friday morning, Stewartville College was discovered on fire and the building with its contents were soon in ashes. The first intimation of fire to the inmates of the college came from smoke pouring in the recitation room, and upon rushing to the outside the cupola and a greater portion of the roof surrounding it was in a blaze. Every effort was made by the students and college employees to stay the fire but the flames had too much the start, and the many citizens who soon gathered, turned their attention to saving the small out-buildings in which they were successful. The College was Stewartville's pride, a handsome, costly and imposing structure, situated some distance from the business portion of the city, built up by the indomitable pluck and energy of Rev. W. O. H. Perry, its President, and its loss is a blow which staggers and almost paralyzes our people. The loss is probably in excess of $10,000 with an insurance of $5,000. The origin of the fire is supposed to have been a defective flue.

We sympathize with the citizens in their loss.

THE Rev. Dr. John Hall, the famous New York Presbyterian divine, has a clean record in one respect at least. It is said that he has never been offered less than fifty dollars by any member of his congregation who enlisted his services at a marriage. He leaves the matter to the victim's discretion, but the organist of St. Stephen's church, Philadelphia, is more cautious. He has an iron clad contract with the church, forbidding anybody to play the organ without his consent, and charges $50 at every wedding.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY SISTER "FRANCES."

"Never on custom's oiled grooves
The world to a higher level moves,
But grates and grinds with friction hard
On granite boulder and flinty shard;
The heart must bleed before it feels
The pool be troubled, before it heals."

"CAN WE AND SHALL WE?"

To the subject about which we wish to write today we have given much thought, and it has long been upon our mind to present it to those who read the "Home Column," but for valid reasons we have not hitherto done so. The "groves of custom," as the poet says, are well oiled, and to move right along in them is so much easier than to make a departure in any direction. The path is well trodden and our feet do not come in contact with hard or uneven surfaces, neither are our hands torn by the way side briars. Yes; we admit the truth of this, but the poet says that the world never moves in these to a higher level. Has it not at some time entered into the heart of each one of us, that we would wish the world to be the better for our having lived in it? Our tenure of life at the best is very brief, and many of us perchance are even now passed its prime, and the shadows are lengthening as the sun sinks lower and lower towards the western horizon. We shall pass from this stage of action and others will occupy our places here. By the present, the future is shaped and colored. Not ours only, but to a certain extent the future of others; for as we have moved on in the oiled groves of custom, the paths made smooth by the wearing foot-steps of those who went before us; so perchance will some move in the way we are now treading, because we walked therein. Shall we then rise above the level in which we are now treading—rise to a higher plane, by humility, prayer and self sacrifice?

Doubtless many of you read the letter in our last editorial, and felt for our brother who is laboring so faithfully to preach the gospel of the Son of God. Did it once enter into the minds of any of us that there was any sacrifice which we might make to help spread the gospel. Is Simon the only one upon whose shoulders the heavy cross is to be laid? Is there a royal road by means of which our feet shall pass over smooth ways into the open portal? We read of two gates—two ways. The one is wide the other straight. The one is broad, the other narrow. The end of the one is death, the other eternal life. "What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul, or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?"

The letter from Bro. Evans in Canada has made us feel that we wished very much to do something more than we have been doing for the spread of the gospel. One year ago and we would have thought it impossible for us ever to have broken off from the habit of tea drinking. Like Aunt Patience when the work was more than usually hard we resorted to an enlivening cup of tea for the strength to help us perform it. We made the resolution however that we would be free. We would never ask others to follow where we could not lead. We thought one pound a month, for our own use and the demands of hospitality a moderate allowance. This would cost during the year not less than seven or eight dollars. Now a cup of hot water suffices us, and we do not miss the tea we once thought we never could get along without. Nay more, we feel very thankful to our heavenly Father that we are free from its nerve enslaving bondage, and do not intend to be ever entangled by it again. The money which this useless habit cost us, when a few more debts are paid, shall every year go towards helping the work of God; and our testimony to you our sisters is, that what we once thought a sacrifice so great that we could not make it, has proved no sacrifice at all; and instead of a cross, is the cause of rejoicing. Could all the money which is expended for tea, coffee and tobacco, go for one year into the treasury of the Lord's house, and his people be a clean and obedient people, we would hear of greater works than those done by the power of God in Canada, and our own lives would be replete with thanksgiving and praise to God for the unspeakable gift of salvation. Who will make a resolution to be free and give to God the price they have been paying for the chains of their bondage? Who will believe him when he says that "hot drinks are not good for man," and test him to know if he will not bless the abstaining from them?

In our own minds we are perfectly well satisfied that the sisters of the church could by a concert of action, furnish the money for sustaining two elders in the field, and we are going to propose a plan which we hope will meet with your approval, and which we could test for one year at least. If it proves a success then we could continue it. It is not intended in any way to interfere with tithing, but it is to be a free will offering, such as the children of Israel brought unto Moses, until they had to be restrained from bringing, because they had more than there was need of.

Let each sister, old or young, whether she does or does not pay tithing, upon her birthday send to the Home Column as many pennies as she is years old, and let it be called the "Home Column Missionary Fund." Let this not be for one year only, but for every year as long as the Lord prolongs our lives. At the end of the first year the amount thus collected shall be given in charge to the Bishop for the support of one or more elders, whom the conference shall appoint, and we will request to know what elder is the recipient of our funds. We wish our own birthday was nearer that we might be among the first upon the list; but as it is we await your response. If any are not able to send according to their ages, let them send just what they can afford, and if others wish to send more let them so do, and we will render weekly returns of names and amount. The receipt of your name and money will constitute you a life member. Many who read and enjoy the Home Column do not feel like contributing to it by letters or articles. Here then is a way in which all may join, and if all would join what glorious results might be achieved. We wait to see whose name will be first.

THURSDAY, November 25th has been set apart as a day of Thanksgiving and prayer. As Latter Day Saints, we have abundant reason for thanksgiving and praise to our heavenly Father. From every part of the vineyard is coming up glad tidings—tidings to rejoice the heart of every one who loves the work of the Lord in these latter days, and still the cry comes up for laborers—more laborers in the vineyard of the Lord. Is it not a good time upon Thanksgiving day, when we are feasting upon the ample rewards of our labor, to remember that "The laborer is worthy of his hire," and if the Lord's treasury is empty, from whence shall his wages come? Could there be any more acceptable way of thanking God and expressing our gratitude to him, than by first rendering to him that which is his due? A friend after reading one of the letters we recently received said, "How can any one hear such calls as this and still refuse to pay tithing? It is a time when every elder ought to be in the field and every Saint paying tithing to support him while there."

We are pleased to submit the following figures in regard to the Hope: new subscribers up to November 10th, 896. Donations $157.19. Cash from sale of Witnesses $121.50.

It will be remembered by our friends that we inscribed upon the banner when we first unfurled 1000 new subscribers. One hundred and four are still lacking to complete this number. To place the Hope upon a just basis the rate to clubs must be advanced. We trust that Sunday School superintendents will see the necessity of this. It is not justice to single subscribers to furnish it in clubs for less than cost, and make up the deficiency from single subscribers and donations. We have the promise of the "Board" to adjust this matter in the course of a few weeks. If the paper is worthy of support, the Saints ought to support it; and they surely are able to do so. In its present form it is as cheap as, if not cheaper than, any paper of the kind we have seen in the country. Let the Sunday Schools stand by it and it will stand by their best interests, until the warfare is ended and our weapons grounded for aye.

WE are in receipt of letters from sisters Robbins, Thomas, Garrett, Annie and Nancy Swan.

MY THANKSGIVING.

BY FRANCES E. POPE.

While through the land the faithful and believing
In grateful suppliance bow,
And all the air is vocal with thanksgiving,
My soul what givest thou?

Oh! looking in remembrance down the reaches
Of years my feet have trod,
Not one hath lack, not one but surely teaches
The providence of God.

Still hath the manna gathered ere my fasting,
And still the stream hath gushed
From desert rock, at whose delightful tasting
My murmurs have been hushed.

Aye! not alone the wants this life inherits
Have been to me supplied,
For higher needs, through Christ's uncounted merits
Have been well satisfied.

Of this fair earth I own no teeming acre;
Yet am I often led
In fields of peace, and made to be partaker
Of heavenly good instead.

Through vales where falls the sunlight of God's glory
In tender mood I roam;
Or from the mount of promise read the story
Of love and rest and home.

No mansion fair is mine; yet is my dwelling
All beautiful and wide,
And joy within my heart is ever swelling
Since I with Christ abide.

And so, though I possess no crowded coffer,
Content, best wealth, is mine;
And my thanksgiving, Lord, to thee I offer
For riches so divine.

Dear Sisters:—This is the Sabbath day, and having got through with my little Sunday School I have some time to spare and thought I could not do better than give the benefit of it to you (if, indeed I am of the least benefit to any of you). I scarcely know what I shall talk about this morning, but trust what I may be led to say will be to the good of some one, whether they be old or young, and if, perchance, it be to the inspiring and encouraging of only one weary soul I shall feel myself amply repaid for my task. To God be the honor and glory. I am only his instrument, and I glory only in that he has made me his humble servant. I said I scarcely knew what I should talk about, but my mind seems to be drawn towards the true and the beautiful. My heart is all aglow from my sympathy with nature, for turn which way I will, the beautiful handiworks of God are portrayed before my eyes, and I would that I had language in which to convey my thoughts and feelings as I gaze upon so lovely a scene. All nature has donned her gorgeous autumn dress, the trees and foliage are brilliant, the evergreens adding a beautiful and striking contrast. And as I gaze out upon the grand old hills which surround our mountain home—dotted here and there, with their varied, and beautiful hues, which the hand of the artist has so perfectly drawn, I am led to ask, Can anything compare with so lovely a scene? It is indeed, one that is unsurpassed by anything that I have ever seen, though nature and I are old friends, and she has shown me many of her choicest pictures in a light which comes only from above. This beautiful Sabbath day presents a quiet loveliness. O, blessed day in seven when my mind and heart can be somewhat at rest and free from the cares of every day life! There is seemingly nothing to mar my communion with God and nature, and as I look my eyes are drawn upward to the beautiful blue arch above, dotted here and there with snow-flake blossoms. I seem to see smiling faces peeping through the rifts in the clouds and angels fingers beckoning and pointing upward and forward, admonishing me to live, and walk more by faith, and less by sight than I have hitherto done, then would mountains of trouble diminish into mole hills before my eyes and petty cares and trials would not be so much burden to me. O, why live so much upon the surface of the things of this world, where all is vanity and vexation of spirit, transitory, and will soon become as chaff upon the summer's thrashing floor, and the wind carry them away?

Ah, yes; why? Why not dig deep; go down beyond the surface and search for riches which will neither rust nor canker? And so the Spirit admonishes; and as I grow older these glimpses into the spiritual become more and more clear, and all that is visible to me now stamps itself upon my soul as a type of the invisible, and I ask myself, Will it continue to be so? For as I gaze upon the different hues and the changes which the age of the advancing year is casting over all nature before me, I am reminded that coming age casts its shadows before me, and the dearest of attainments is to grow old happily and gracefully. I can look back from my childhood up, and out of so many of my acquaintances, who have grown old, I am pained to see how large a proportion are a burden to themselves and an annoyance to others. The joyfulness of youth excites in them no happier feeling than gloom, and fortunate it is, if it does not encounter an angry rebuke. If such a state were an inevitable one upon our advanced years, then would a long life be a curse; but there is no such necessity imposed upon us. Old age, in an outward sense, returns to childhood; should it not do so spiritually, and we be just as joyous and happy when old as we are when young?

That was a beautiful picture presented to us in the Hope, where the aged and the young gathered at a picnic and the grandmother and grandfather were so enveloped in the happiness of the young that self was entirely forgotten. I think it is lovely. We make old age cheerless and morose in the same manner that we pervert all things, and that is by selfishness. We allow ourselves to think more of our own comfort and convenience than we do of the happiness and improvement of others, and thus we lose the habit of sympathizing in the loves and joys of others. I pray God to enable me to guard against this. I would that we should all grow old gracefully, and ever be willing to promote the innocent pleasures of others in their own way, even if it be not my way. We may have had many trials and hardships to bear—but these should not sour us to such an extent that we would do as the man did who had the tooth-ache—kick poor puss because she was sleeping so comfortably in the sunshine; but through our own individual sorrows and suffering, learn to be kind, everywhere, and to everybody kind, knowing that those who are of more tender years will yet, if they live have enough to bear. Was there ever one filled with more sorrow, or made more acquainted with grief, than our blessed Redeemer? Yet with his latest breath he had a kind word even for his enemies. Noble example! Fill us more with thy love, our Father, that we may be more like thee, unselfish, charitable, loving and kind, and so be worthy to dwell amid the beauties and real joys of eternity, is my prayer.

AUNT PATIENCE.

WON'T Aunt Patience please tell us something about her little Sunday School. Would it not be interesting matter for the Hope?

GLASGOW, New York, Oct. 26th.

Sr. Frances:—Often has my heart been caused to leap for joy and that happiness and peace reign supreme in my soul, which nothing but the Spirit of God can give, when I have read and reflected upon the wise instruction of the Mothers' Column. May the Spirit of that God that delivered Daniel from the mouths of the lions, be with the mothers in this great latter day work. There is great responsibility resting on us. Look at that son who has been reared by a praying and ever faithful mother. Often when he is lured from the path of righteousness by the vile and tempting hand of vice, he will reflect upon his mother's kind advice; her teachings will come to his mind and he will ask himself What if my mother, the one who spent so many hours of anxious care over me, the one who gave me so many kind and useful instructions in the days of my youth, who has prayed so often, with tears streaming down her careworn face, that her boy should be protected by the hand of God, from the evil of this wicked world; what if she should see how far I have wandered both from her and her instructions. How often have such recollections saved such sons from yielding to temptation and becoming outcasts from society and wanderers from God. But, on the other hand, here is a son a boy with bright, attractive eyes, with gentle ways and the picture of innocence. He gradually develops and comes to the years of manhood. He has never heard a prayer from his mother to the God who created them. He is surrounded with all the vice and contaminating influence of human depravity. Soon he goes forth into the world to try his ability among the others, to make his fortune and prepare for old age. Now mark the condition of the two. One has been reared to pray and look to God for protection, the other has had it instilled in his mind from his infancy that it was all foolishness, and a disgrace to do so. Oh such a sad condition! Such profound darkness! Nothing but the powers of the Almighty could cause his heart to change from his evil ways and worship his Maker. Are not the mothers to a great extent responsible for the condition of these two?

Your sister,

FLORA.

Dear Sister Frances:—I am one of those diffident mortals that always prefer to be silent when in the presence of those who can and do instruct me. Such has been my feelings ever since the Mothers' Home Column has been set apart by the Board of Publication for the benefit of the "mothers in Zion." And since so many excellent letters have appeared from both old and young, it seems inexcusable to be continually receiving and giving nothing back. The Master said: "Freely ye have received, freely give." We too frequently are like the barren sand, unfruitful and profitless; receiving the reviving showers of heaven the same as the fruitful soil. How gracious is the God of all the earth who sendeth his blessings on the just and the unjust, leaving us without an excuse.

I have been to the funeral of one of God's dear children whose whole life has been one of simple adornment of the life of a Saint. While gazing upon her calm and placid features—almost a smile in death—it was then that memory's storehouse put forth such a quest of thought, and revealed so many pictures wrought in silver and gold, that thirty-two years ago were placed in its secret chambers; so that when the Elder began his discourse and announced his text; That a good name was better than precious ointment, and the day of death better than the day of ones birth. The goodness and fragrance of her life, life a rich perfume, pervaded the large audience of neighbors, friends and family, as they were rapidly reviewed by the speaker till all felt to say, "Let me die the death of the righteous."

How bright is the pathway of the just, when made so by an unflinching trust and confidence in the promise:

"Fear not I am with thee,
Thy troubles to bless,
And sanctify to thee,
Thy deepest distress."

Yet dear sister Welch had a large share of earth's sorrows, and privations, but with child-like trust and obedience she put on the Lord Jesus Christ, by fulfilling the law of righteousness and truth.

THE first Christian Church in England was built in Glastonbury (the tale was that Joseph of Arimathea built it, directed by the Angel Gabriel). Glastonbury was at that time a desolate island full of ferns and brambles, and the church was built, like the British houses, of wicker work, or rods walled and interwoven. It was sixty feet long and twenty-five broad. This was during the reign of the Roman governor Agricola, somewhere in A. D. 78.

WHEELING, W. Va., Nov. 5th.

Dear Bro Blair:—On last Sabbath, assisted by Elder James Craig, I conducted the services, and preached the funeral sermon of Bro. Jesse Sheldon, at his home near Warnock Station, Belmont county, Ohio. Many of the Saints will remember him, as his home was the headquarters of the Elders laboring in that section of country; he died very peacefully. So passed another aged one to his rest.

I came to this city late in the summer of 1885, from Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, where I formerly lived and worked locally as a member; then successively as a teacher and priest of the Pittsburg Branch, which latter position I occupied when I came here. Since my arrival here I have been ordained an Elder, and later a Seventy; and I can with gratification say that in these varied callings in the church I have been made to realize that God's power attends the proper discharge of the various duties of each office, or in other words, that the distinct office work of the Holy Spirit attends these several varied offices in the body. For I have never yet received ordination to any office, local or general, but what I have been made conscious of the spirit of said office accompanying the same.

I mention these matters because I see the necessity of wise laborers; nay master builders being placed in the local as well as in the general church ministry and to encourage local laborers in this and other districts. Truly, "the head can not say to the feet I have no need of thee." How deeply significant and fitting are the statements of the great apostle; as recorded in 1 Cor. 12th chap.; and, also, Eph. 4: 15, 16.

It has heretofore been my lot mainly to care for the Saints in a local capacity, and I now see the value of that experience. My observations, impress me with the importance of local duties. In my past experience I found that a man had all he could do to discharge well the duties of a teacher or priest. During the past ten years I have tried to be active as a member as well as an officer; endeavoring as a member to aid and encourage the officers in their efforts, by attendance, and in other ways that one can readily lay hold upon if they have the welfare of the cause at heart. The time has seemingly been in the past when any office less in degree than that of an elder has been looked upon by many as of little consequence, but if my experience teaches me anything it certainly is the fact that men of talent are necessary to properly fulfill the duties of local offices, as well as those of a general character, in order that those gathered into the fold of Christ may be nourished and cared for.

I baptized two here this summer, and last night I performed the pleasant duty of burying five more in baptism in the waters of the Ohio river, at this place, making seven baptized by me in addition to others that Bro. G. T. Griffiths has gathered in here as he passed through the district from time to time, this summer. Thus the Lord fulfills his promises to us when faithful and persistent efforts are made. Our branch is improving and growing in numbers. I desire to say to the Saints in the district that I intend to take the field just as soon as my arrangements to that end are made. Before the April conference appointed me a mission, I stated that I could not go until near the fall season; but I am endeavoring to arrange my affairs that I can enlist for life in the ministry. However, I am not now idle, but trying by earnestness to be anxiously engaged in the good cause. Yours in the faith,

RICHARD S. SALYARDS.

KIRTLAND, Ohio, Oct. 7th.

Bro. J. Smith:—One of the pleasantest meetings that I have been permitted to attend for some time was the district conference held at Vale's Mills, Vinton county, Ohio, September 11th to 13th, last. The whole community seemed to have an interest in the meeting, and outsiders and Saints extended a warm welcome and hospitality to all in attendance, most commendable. They had united in building a neat and commodious church, a credit to the community,—and those not of the faith bore equal, or greater burdens than the Saints in its erection. It was guarantee enough to solicit a common interest to know that the edifice was to be dedicated as the property of the "Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints." This meant a free pulpit and the spirit of toleration without any equivocation. No further guarantee was needed. The church was too small, however, to accommodate the anticipated gathering, so more ample preparation was made in the grove. A refreshing rain that fell on Saturday evening and Sunday morning interrupted the desired grove pleasure and kept more away, but the church was crowded at all of the meetings. Friends of the cause did much towards getting the right view of the faith before the people, which tended to lift the cloud of prejudice from those still in doubt about our faith. Messrs. Vale and Gregory to whom I became personally indebted, with others whose names I did not get, are entitled to great credit for their generous support, in entertaining and befriending the members and friends of the conference. An excellent spirit prevailed throughout the entire session, with the best of deportment and order. The work was introduced at this place by Brn. L. R. Devore and James Moler, but recently, and under rather unfavorable circumstances. But through a persistent effort the work has been planted and they and it stand in honor before the people. Others have labored some there also, Brn. Matthews, Beatty, Double, &c. Our young and useful brother Kirkendall, of Creola, is entitled to great credit for his untiring effort and aid in getting the faith introduced into that section of the country, although he is not a member of the ministerial department. May his usefulness continue. A silent, earnest worker frequently, if not as a rule, accomplishes more for the cause than those anxious that every effort they make shall be spread out in print. I notice that the Herald has announced by name the most of the ministry attendant at the conference, and it is not necessary to repeat them in this. There are getting to be some very efficient and earnest workers in Southeastern Ohio, however, who have been willing to labor at great sacrifice and disadvantage that the truth might be planted there. The fruits of their efforts are beginning to be realized in some localities. It was just a little gratifying to meet with so formidable an array of defenders of the faith. Chief sisters and earnest brethren acting together had gained the confidence and esteem of the people and the cause is had in honor. May the good work go on, and good workers be multiplied to the faith. Best of all the Spirit of the Lord was in our meetings and moved upon the Saints to confirm the word.

At our suggestion Brn. Devore and Beatty remained after the conference to set the branch of that place in better working order. Bro. Jeffers, a man of good repute and with an excellent helpmeet to encourage him, was placed in charge of the branch, with a priest, teacher and deacon to assist—good men—but I did not secure their names.

In compliance with the order of the General Conference I ordained Bro. L. R. Devore to the office of a seventy. Bro. Devore has been an active and efficient laborer in the past and has the confidence and esteem of the Saints of the district. He hopes to be more useful and acceptable in the future. Bro. Beatty continues by unanimous vote, president of the district. Bro. J. Moler is about ready to take the field for the winter. Bro. Goodrich is defending the faith through a Jackson paper in some well written articles. A brother who had become convinced from the reading of the "Braden and Kelley Debate" that the Saints have the right faith, came seventy-five miles to attend the conference and make further inquiry into the faith. He was well recommended by letter and license from the Disciple denomination of which he was a member and preacher. He was baptized and seemed to enjoy the society of the Saints. Two others were baptized also, and others convinced; so the prospect is good for a further ingathering in that community. The Saints returned home stronger and better from having met together.

September 17th I preached the funeral discourse of little Emma Marie, the only child of Richard S. and Zaide V. Salyards, at Kirtland, Ohio. The parents had arranged to move to Kirtland for the winter and when about to start Emma took a relapse and died suddenly. They brought her with them to Kirtland where they met with sympathizing friends both of Saints and outsiders. Sad as the circumstances were there seemed to be something fitting in the thought that the funeral services of an innocent little babe and great grand-child of Joseph Smith should take place in the grand old temple on the hill. She rests near by in a little grave covered over with flowers, to await the angels' awakening to restore her back.

Bro. Griffiths is busy in the district. Brn. Peek and Davis are aiding the cause in Wyoming. Indeed rather encouraging news come from all parts, except Southern Indiana, which is rather in the shadow of the mountain, just now, but may succeed in pulling to the other side with little loss and the stronger for the battle. Regular services are held here, and an interest and friendly feeling greet us. E. L. is here and busy with us about the work that calls for first attention, temporal and spiritual. The little Methodist church which stood near the temple, by the cemetery, has been purchased by the Grand Army Post of this place, and moved to a place just south of the town hall. The lot was purchased by the church. This will be gratifying to all who appreciate growth and progress. The lot extended within a few feet of the temple and might have been made a painful hindrance and obstruction, or the occasion of a lawsuit to try titles.

Later; October 30th.—We have been compelled under pressure of service to procrastinate this letter. We hope that those interested will extend to us their clemency. This is a lovely day. Bro. Griffiths discoursed in the temple this morning to an appreciative audience; and his discourse was just full of comfort. The Lord is here as the Saints may testify, and we are comforted and encouraged. The work on the temple goes on. We need more money in order to place it where it can be used with comfort and pleasure, however. Six hundred dollars will go far towards completing it. Shall we raise the money? or shall we "Take hold of the plow handles and look back?" Is it meritorious to expend in order to get legal possession that we may possess in discredit? It has just occurred to some (and the writer is glad that they are but few) that "it won't pay" to go on. With that few the Lord favored the suit for possession, the raising of three-fourths of enough means and the expending of it to fully repair the house, but all at once, unexpectedly to everybody and without assigning a cause, the Lord changes over to the other side, and is against further progress. If this does not resemble the approaching of the shores of the Jordan and desecrating giants in the distance, growing faint hearted and fleeing, we can't judge what does. Did the Saints as a whole fully appreciate the good to be derived to the cause by completely restoring this house they would never rest until it was done. The larger number (as we believe) are earnest in it. God has not changed to the other side, and now disfavors what he once favored. Send in your contributions, you who can, and let us make this house a credit to the noble band of Saints who own it, and God will bless your effort. With no faint heart, but enterprise, faith and courage, yours for the spread of gospel light and freedom,

W. H. KELLEY.

TILBURY CENTRE, Ont., Nov. 2d.

Bro. Joseph Smith:—I came to these parts last Sabbath and have commenced holding meetings in Bro. Henry Atkinson's house. There are twelve Saints living here, but not organized into a branch. I expect to attend to that before I leave here. There is not much interest by the world's people here, as the Salvation Army has just fired on Tilbury Centre and the people are running to see the result. I went yesterday to Camber as I had heard that Bro. Ralph Mather was living there, and I met with them. He is suffering with rheumatism, but the love of the gospel is still in their hearts, although they have not met with the Saints, nor heard any preaching for years. They subscribed for the Herald, as they had not been taking it for some time. I felt to recommend the Herald to them, and to all the Saints, for it brings good news from afar. May it long live to do so. I received good reports from the elders laboring in the mission. When I last heard from St. Mary's, eight had been baptized, and Bro. R. C. Evans was continuing the meetings with good interest. Bro. McIntosh had left for Egremont and Protan. I baptized two at Baddertown of late and left some others nearly ready for the water, and hope to baptize them when I return. Bro. A. McKenzie is still doing some battle for the truth.

Yours in bonds,

JOHN H. LAKE.

Dear Herald: It is with joy and gladness that thy advent is looked for. Thy pages bring joy and encouragement to press on to the end. With the Mothers' Home Column you are worth more than twice the present price. To my mind none are so well qualified to teach the rising generation as mothers. May God bless sister Frances and all who are putting forth their labor of love in behalf of those soon to take the place of the older ones. I wish to say what God has done for one in our family. My daughter-in-law was deaf in one ear since she was a child, from the effect of measles. When our beloved Bro. R. J. Anthony was here she wished to be administered to. Brn. Anthony and J. E. Reese were called; she was administered to, and on Sunday following she received her hearing perfect, for which we praise the name of our Redeemer. Brethren L. B. and Loren Gaultner were in the house at the time; the Spirit's influence was felt by all in such power that tears of joy flowed from all present. Bro. Anthony preached here most excellent discourses to those in and out of the church; if observed and acted upon, many will be greatly benefited by the same. I went with him to Willow Creek, where he preached to well filled houses of attentive listeners; and I think if the work could be kept up, good may be done by such preachers. May God bless brethren Anthony and Clapp, for they are able defenders of the gospel of the Son of God. Ever yours for the truth,

THOMAS HARRIS.

SOLDIER, Iowa, Nov. 2d.

Brethren Smith and Blair:—Agreeably to your permission I began labor in western Iowa, preaching at Moorhead on the Sunday following the close of the Reunion, then every night during the week at the Dunlap school-house with a fair degree of interest, and the next Sunday again at Moorhead. There are noble Saints and some able workmen in the Union Center Branch, but a little more energy and zeal exercised on the part of all would impart new life to the work and rekindle the flame of God's love so that the cause would be onward again. This is a well populated and prosperous region of country. Commodious school-houses are open on every hand for the eldership to occupy. These opportunities ought not to be neglected. No elder or priest should allow the Sabbath day to pass without making an effort to advance the cause. Spiritual decay is certain to follow a neglect of duty and privilege. Our talents, whether they aggregate ten, five, or two, must be employed if we would gain other talents.

Brethren, can we afford to sleep upon our privileges while the golden moments are passing by. Can we afford to sustain the loss that will inevitably follow the neglect of repeated opportunities?

We held several services in the Brown school-house where there is a good interest manifested. Infidelity is strong here. Brethren Derry, Lambert, Crabb, Thomas and Wight have labored here in years past. There is a hope that the rising generation, the young, may be more susceptible of divine impression, and respond to the demands of the call. At any rate they attend, assist in singing, and listen attentively; and I devoutly pray the Father of light and truth to shed forth the beams of his love into their young and tender hearts that they may be drawn to him and embraced in the arms of his mercy.

The Peoples Press of Mapleton did us the courtesy to publish a brief article. I feel well in the service, strong in hope, and desirous to continue faithful to the sacred trust. My health is much improved.

Yours hopefully,

GEO. S. HYDE.

BATTLE MOUNTAIN, Nev., Nov. 1886.

Bro. Dancer:—Some unknown person has sent me the Herald for nearly three years, for which I feel very grateful. I would not like to do without it, for it is all the preaching I have. I am the only one of our faith in this place, and I look forward with pleasure to the day when the Herald is due, for it is food and drink to me. In it I see many familiar names, and I rejoice to see the Lord's work rolling onward.

Yours in bonds of truth,

GALIEN, Mich., Nov. 10th.

Editors Herald:—My stay in Indiana was necessarily short, and I therefore did not learn all the conditions and needs of the work in that locality. It is plainly manifest, however, that constant, faithful labor is needed. A united, faithful, continued effort of the Saints there, in both a temporal and spiritual manner, would go far toward supplying this need, for there are fully competent laborers there. In all kindness I point to one mistake made there in the past. It is aiding financially the visiting minister, individually, while ignoring the home minister, instead of aiding the work in the legal way through the Bishop and his agent, though the home minister was appointed by the General Conference. When we all work together in the way designated in the divine law, the work moves on. Experience abundantly proves this. Some things of a discouraging nature exist in the district, but they can be extensively overcome by a united and faithful effort of the brethren, in accordance with the law.

The conference at Union was quite well attended by the Saints, though some of the branch officers were slow, not having their branches reported at all. The business was done in the spirit of unity and meekness, each trying to appreciate the importance of the work. The preaching services were well attended, the nice little Saints' chapel generally being crowded on these occasions; and we know the Saints were blessed with the Holy Spirit during the conference in healing, and with great joy in believing the truth. Since I returned two have been baptized by Elder J. G. Scott at old Mt. Eden, where Bro. Blair began the work in the district in November, 1867. Of this we are glad, as many efforts have been made there to kill the work, and discourage the Saints.

The conference at Coldwater, Michigan was largely attended all through, though it was not overstocked with business. The preaching was good, especially that done by brethren C. M. Rootman, H. Rathburn and L. Scott, and was duly listened to by the audiences that literally crowded the house. The Saints were greatly encouraged and made to rejoice as the Holy Spirit rested upon them so richly. A number of the friends in the vicinity attended and were interested, who hitherto seemingly gave the work no consideration. My desire to bring other hearts into the enjoyment of what we were made to realize in believing "the present truth," was greatly intensified during these sittings in heavenly places in Christ. Bishop Blakeslee was present and ably assisted in the ordinances and work of the conference, also Brn. Springer and Norton.

I offered to resign the presidency of the district, but it was not accepted; for I believe the Seventies are not under the "responsibility of presiding" over branches and districts, except when such responsibility is imposed by Saints, and in cases of emergency. The higher the sailor in the ship's rigging, the greater his fall if he loses his hold when the storm comes. We prefer to work near the hull of the Old Ship Zion. Under the immediate (plainly expressed) orders of the captain is the greater safety, it seems to me. Conference at Coldwater adjourned with the Saints encouraged to renewed effort, and determined to aid in moving the work along. As evidence that the leaven is working, two have been added to the Coldwater branch since the conference. We are sorry to lose another laborer from the district—Bro. C. M. Bootman—who goes to the state of Missouri to make a home and work for the Master in new fields. May peace and due prosperity attend him.

We are still in the faith and trying to work for the Master's cause. I desire its prosperity, the unity of its devotees, and their advancement in its light and truth.

Your co-laborer,

C SCOTT.

LEAVES FROM THE TREE OF LIFE, NUMBER THREE.

ETERNAL LIFE THE GIFT OF GOD.

"THE wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord."—Rom. 6: 23. "For O, how beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that is the founder of peace; yea, even the Lord who has redeemed his people; for were it not for the redemption which he had made for his people, which was prepared from the foundation of the world; I say: were it not for this, all mankind must have perished."—Book of Mormon, p. 173, Lamoni edition. "If you keep my commandments and endure to the end, you shall have eternal life; which is the greatest of all the gifts of God."—D. C. sec. 12: 3.

From the above testimonies taken from the three records, we learn that eternal life is a gift; not something purchased by fallen man; not something which man merits by his righteousness, nor a treasure which his keen eye has discovered. It is the gift of the Creator to the creature. But of what greater value would a gift be that is eternal in its nature than the present temporal condition, unless the recipient is immortal? If the recipient is only mortal, he could only enjoy it in mortality, he could scarcely put the cup to his lips ere it was dashed away, like the cup of Tantalus, forever.

If there is no immortal spirit in man, there is nothing in his nature that can appreciate the gift; and without the power of appreciation there can be no enjoyment, and the gift of eternal life to such a being would be of no value, and the divine interrogation,—“What is a man profited if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul? Or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?” would have no force or meaning. But it is the fact that in man and constituting the conscious selfhood of man, is the indwelling, intelligent, and immortal spirit that renders this eternal life of infinite value to him. But without presuming “to be wise above what is written,” let us ask, What is eternal life? It is evident from a careful reading of God's word that it is something more than a mere existence, or than is expressed in the term “immortality.” The spirits of those who perished in the flood existed in the “prison house” until Christ, after his crucifixion, and preached the gospel to them (1 Pet. 3: 18–20; 4: 6.) as had been foretold by Isaiah, 42: 7; 61: 1, and Zech., 9: 9–11. In this imprisoned state they did not have eternal life. From the above facts it is evident, that while the body of man is mortal, the indwelling, intelligent spirit is immortal. But we shall be told that Paul says God “only hath immortality.”—1 Tim. 6: 16, of Inspired Translation. To this I reply Paul could not mean that there were no beings who were immortal but God himself; for he was a believer in the existence of angels; and surely none will claim that angels are mortal beings. The Saints who arose out of their graves and appeared unto many after the resurrection of Christ were certainly immortal, if the resurrection brings immortality to man.—Matt. 27: 52, 53. Hence, God is not the only being who hath immortality, and King James' translation is at fault; for it contradicts the teachings of Jesus and the apostles on this point. They teach the existence of the immortal spirit in man, as well as the existence of angelic beings, and also the fact that many of the Saints had, at the time of Paul's writing, entered into that glorious state where mortality was not known. We will now give the rendering of the saying of Paul, as found in the Inspired Translation, by Joseph Smith, in A. D. 1832, long before the present order of Sadducees, “Soul sleepers,” came into existence: “Who is the blessed and only Potentate, whom no man hath seen, nor can see, unto whom no man can approach only he who hath the light and the hope of immortality dwelling in him.”—1 Tim. 6: 16.

This rendering is consistent with the whole tenor of God's word; it does not deny the immortality of the spirit of man, nor that of angels, but King James' translation does. Neither does it place man independent of God's greatest and highest gift, but it shows that the righteous who “hath the light and the hope of immortality dwelling in him” can approach this “blessed and only Potentate.”

But this immortal nature pertains to the spirit, and that only; for since the fall man has been the subject of death. “In the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die,” “By one man sin entered into the world and death by sin, and so death hath passed upon all men for that all have sinned.”—Rom. 5: 12. “And now behold, I say unto you, that if it had been possible for Adam to have partaken of the tree of life, at that time, there would have been no death, and the word of God would have been made void, making God a liar: for he said, If thou eat thou shalt surely die. And we see that death comes upon mankind, yea, the death which has been spoken of by Amulek, which is the temporal death.”—B. M. p. 238. What, then, was the immortality hoped for, as spoken of by Paul? It was that which Jesus Christ has promised in the resurrection of the just; (John 5: 28); the reunion of spirit and body when this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality.—1 Cor. 15: 53, that which was “made manifest by the appearing of our Savior Jesus Christ, who hath abolished death, and hath brought life and immortality to light through the gospel.”—2 Tim. 1: 10. Without the gospel, immortality and eternal life were hidden from our eyes. The pathway of humanity was one of darkness and uncertainty; but those who live in the light of the gospel, to them life's pathway is clear, and death has no terrors, for they know it will be “swallowed up in victory.”—1 Cor. 15: 54.

Eternal life, we repeat, is something more than mere existence, even in a future state. And now let us hear the definition as found in God's word. “And this is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent.”—John 17: 3. “As we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly.”—1 Cor. 15: 49. “Who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body.”—Phil. 3: 21. “When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory.”—Col. 3: 4. “We shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is.”—1 John 3: 2. “He that overcometh shall inherit all things; and I will be his God, and he shall be my son.”—Rev. 21: 7. “And if children then heirs; heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ; if so be that we suffer with him, that we may be also glorified together.”—Rom. 8: 17.

“For all things are yours; whether Paul, or Cephas, or the world, or life, or death, or things present, or things to come; all are yours; and ye are Christ's and Christ is God's.”—1 Cor. 3: 22, 23. “He [Christ] hath brought to pass the redemption of the world, whereby he that is found guiltless before him at the judgment day, hath it given unto him to dwell in the presence of God in his kingdom, to sing ceaseless praises with the choirs above, unto the Father and unto the Son and unto the Holy Ghost, which are one God, in a state of happiness which hath no end."—B. M., pp. 493, 494.

"They are they who are the Church of the First Born; they are they into whose hands the Father has given all things; they are they who are priests and kings, who have received of his fulness, and of his glory, and are priests of the Most High after the order of Melchisedeck, which was after the order of Enoch, which was after the order of the Only Begotten Son. Wherefore, as it is written, they are gods even the sons of God; wherefore all things are theirs, whether life or death; things present, or things to come, all are theirs, and they are Christ's, and Christ is God's." D. C., p. 213.

Thus God, in his three records, has been pleased to give us an insight in respect to the gift of eternal life. What more can Infinite love offer, or Infinite wisdom devise? Infinity is bounded by this gift! The treasure fills infinite space. Eternal, never ending ages alone, measure the period of its enjoyment. It is exhaustless as eternity itself. Well might the apostle pray that the saints might "be able to comprehend what is the breadth, and length, and depth, and height; and to know the love of Christ which passeth all knowledge, that ye might be filled with all the fulness of God."—Eph. 3:18, 19. Reader; is the prize worth striving for? Can you afford to let the treasure slip? Is it not "the pearl" of greatest price? Without it our present life would be a vain and empty thing. Without it man must perish, having no hope. He would be the sport of time; the prey of his own lusts; the degraded victim of evil; the subject of that arch enemy of God and man, Satan; his outward tabernacle the prey of death, while the unclothed spirit must "be reserved in chains of darkness" "where the worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched." Such, and infinitely worse than our feeble minds can conceive, would be the condition of humanity without the priceless gift of eternal life offered in God's boundless love and infinite mercy to perishing man. Well might Joseph Smith, God's mouth-piece in these last days, call upon all creation to shout for joy because of the "glorious voice from heaven proclaiming in our ears glory and salvation, and honor, and immortality, and eternal life; kingdoms, principalities and powers."—D. C. 110:23.

Reader, when we consider this gift, its infinite value, its boundless extent, its measureless greatness, together with its never ceasing enjoyment, can we hope to merit it? "Our righteousness is as filthy rags" compared with it. What can we give in exchange for it? "We are wretched, miserable, poor and blind and naked."—Rev. 3:17. What work can we do that shall be a just return for the priceless treasure? We can not do more than God has commanded, nor more than is our duty. For Jesus says, "So likewise ye, when ye shall have done all those things which are commanded you, say, We are unprofitable servants: we have done that which was no more than our duty to do."—Luke 17:10. Let all the works of righteousness that have been performed by the church of the First Born in all ages, and all that have received the approving seal of the august Judge be placed in the balance of eternal justice alongside the gift of eternal life—the "all things" that "he who overcometh shall inherit." "The inheritance of the saints in light," "the things that God hath prepared for them that love him," "the crown of righteousness prepared for all that love the appearing of our Lord," "the joint heirship with Jesus Christ," the "glory, and salvation, and honor, and immortality, and eternal life, kingdoms, principalities and powers," as the free gift of God, and when that is done, I hear the grand and glorious strains of music ringing through the supernal dome, from the hearts and lips of that vast concourse of souls redeemed, saying, "Thou art worthy; * * * for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood."—Rev. 5:9. "For of him and through him and to him are all things; to whom be glory for evermore."—Rom. 11:36. The very declaration that "eternal life is the gift of God," precludes the idea of merit on our part. But while this is the case, are there no conditions governing the bestowal of this gift? Is there no standard of fitness to which the receiver must come in order to be prepared to receive the gift? If not, why was the gospel revealed to man? Why the ministry of angels to declare the divine will, and the inspiration of prophets to record that will, in ages past? And again, why the advent of "the Great Teacher," Jesus Christ, declaring, both by precept and example the plan of salvation? Why the sending forth of the apostles to preach that gospel to all the world? Why does Jesus say, "He that rejecteth me, and receiveth not my words, hath one that judgeth him in the last day?"—John 12:48. Again: "He who believeth on the Son hath everlasting life; and shall receive of his fulness. But he who believeth not the Son, shall not receive of his fulness; for the wrath of God is upon him."—John 3:36, I. T. All these scriptures, in fact the whole tenor of God's word, teaches that there is something necessary on the part of man not as a work of merit, but as a means of preparation for the gift of eternal life.

"TAKE HEED TO THYSELF."—No. 1.

BY CHARLES E. BUTTERWORTH.

"TAKE heed unto thyself, and unto the doctrine; continue in them: for in doing this thou shalt both save thyself, and them that hear thee." Dear reader, this language of the apostle, addressed to Timothy, his "own son in the gospel," is full of excellent instruction, and is worthy of prayerful consideration. Timothy was at the time a minister in the church of God, and the language is applicable to any and all ministers laboring for the same Lord.

There is something beautiful in the words of the inspired man to the ministry, "Take heed unto thyself." How it harmonizes with the whole of God's word; for before Christ the word of God was, "Be ye clean that bear the vessels of the Lord." We have a beautiful illustration of this principle in the life-work, suffering and death of the spotless Son of God, sent to redeem a lost and fallen world. It is just that a minister who undertakes to represent God should first examine himself. What a great responsibility rests upon him. How very careful he should be to not bring a reproach upon that worthy name of whom it is written, "Every tongue shall confess that Jesus Christ is the Lord, to the glory of God the Father." Christ taught his first ministers to labor in love for the salvation of mankind, without regard to themselves, teaching them, saying: "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works and glorify your Father which is in heaven."

What a rebuke was given to Peter and the other apostles when for a short time they had apparently forgotten their responsibility, and had left their labor of love and gone fishing. Jesus appeared to them and said, "Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou me more than these? He saith unto him, Yea, Lord; thou knowest that I love thee. He saith unto him, Feed my lambs." This question was repeated three times, the last two injunctions being, "Feed my sheep." This was to make the impression deep and lasting that their duty was to feed the church and call sinners to repentance. Peter had not forgotten this instruction when he wrote: "The elders which are among you I exhort, who am also an elder, and a witness of the sufferings of Christ, and also a partaker of the glory that shall be revealed: Feed the flock of God which is among you, taking the oversight thereof, not by constraint, but willingly; not for filthy lucre, but of a ready mind; neither as being lords over God's heritage, but being ensamples to the flock. And when the Chief Shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away." The true ministers, then, do not labor for wealth or power, nor for the honor or applause of men; but because they expect the reward when the work is finished, and that, too, from the Lord himself. Knowing this they labor on in love, rejoicing that they are permitted to work for Christ in such a great and glorious cause, knowing that the Great Shepherd will bless them as they have sought to bless others. Paul understood the same grand truth when he charged the elders: "Wherefore I take you to record this day, that I am pure from the blood of all men. For I have not shunned to declare unto you all the counsel of God. Take heed therefore unto yourselves, and to all the flock, over which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers, to feed the church of God, which he hath purchased with his own blood." Paul felt clear because he had lived his religion and had been diligent in teaching the whole of the truth, and had even with tears warned them of approaching danger. The true minister should then be set apart "by the Holy Ghost." Nor is this all; for they are expected to so live that they will be worthy to receive the aid of that precious guide in all of their labor, for it is to "bring all things to their memory" that hath been spoken by inspiration—it must lead and "guide them into all truth, and show them things to come.

It becomes necessary, then, that they should by obedience to God's law place themselves in a position to receive this Spirit and by continuing to walk in harmony with the same, keep their body and mind pure as the temple of the Holy Ghost. "What! know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost which is in you, which ye have of God, and ye are not your own? For ye are bought with a price; therefore glorify God in your body, and in your spirit, which are God's." "Take heed to thyself." Yes; that we may understand what we are to teach and how it should be presented, that our teaching may carry conviction to the heart. "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth."

We should take heed that our thoughts, words and actions, are in perfect harmony with the teaching of Christ, for if we are found walking in paths of sin our teaching will be rejected, or at least our influence for good will be lessened. We should live so as to be ensamples to the flock, so we can say like Paul of old, "Be ye followers of me, even as I am also of Christ." Only those ministers who live their religion will be successful in the end.

What a high and holy calling, to stand and teach the people in Christ's stead, being ministers, "not of the letter" only, "but of the Spirit" also. "Now then we are ambassadors for Christ, as though God did beseech you by us; we pray you in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God." What a wonderful responsibility rests upon the minister when administering the ordinances of baptism, laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost, the ordaining to the ministry, blessing little children, or when called upon to pray for the sick, anointing them with holy oil and laying hands on them in the name of Christ, asking God for his dear sake to heal them! The minister is to "take heed unto the doctrine; continue in them." The doctrine here referred to must be the doctrine of Christ in its most complete sense. It was to be taught in fulness, purity, simplicity, and power. "Continue in them." This without doubt has reference to the several principles comprising the doctrine or gospel of Christ, and therefore all are essential to life and salvation. If this admonition had always been heeded there would to-day be no men-made theories taught for the gospel of Christ; nor would the Christian world be divided and sub-divided, and a thousand ways presented as leading to the throne of God, instead of that one way taught by Christ and his apostles. The ministry would then be united in spirit, in word, and in doctrine. They would be one in Christ, and as a result the world would believe that God sent his Son to save them. John says: "Whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God. He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath both the Father and the Son." "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned." One gospel, one doctrine, is the condition of salvation.

Paul understood that to depart from this gospel either in faith or practice, was to be removed from God, for he wrote to the Galatians: "I marvel that ye are so soon removed from him that called you into the grace of Christ unto another gospel." And to the Hebrews he said, "How shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation; which at the first began to be spoken by the Lord, and was confirmed unto us by them that heard him; God also bearing them witness, both with signs and wonders, and with divers miracles, and gifts of the Holy Ghost, according to his own will?" The doctrine—gospel—consists of principles. The first requirement made is to believe; for without it they could not obey. "Without faith it is impossible to please him; for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him." God is pleased only when we place ourselves in a position that he can save us. We must first believe that God exists, that he sent his Son to save us, that what the Son taught was and is the commandment of God to us and that he will reward us for obedience. In order that man may believe, God sends his ministry to teach that he is the God who created all things; that he is full of love, mercy and justice, and is all powerful to save. "For whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved. How then shall they call on him in whom they have not believed? and how shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? and how shall they hear without a preacher? and how shall they preach except they be sent? So then faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God."

But we are told by some would-be teachers that we can't have faith until we first repent, because that, wherever faith and repentance are mentioned together, repentance is always mentioned first. It is necessary then to consider to whom this language is addressed and their peculiar condition. The Savior, when he commenced his work, taught the Jews to "repent and believe the gospel." But remember they claimed to be the people of God, for he had spoken to them and they had his law; but like many others who claim to be God's people they had transgressed the commandments of God and had followed the traditions of the Elders, and they were asked to repent.—See Mark 7: 7-13. And when Paul taught the Hebrew Saints, repentance is mentioned first; but they were members of the church; and he tells them they ought to be able to teach, yet he said, "ye have need that one teach you again which be the first principles of the oracles of God."

Those who have believed in God, obeyed the gospel and taken upon them the name of Christ, if they forget or leave those principles should repent first. Repentance suggests a broken law. A man who does not believe in God, should you approach him and ask him to repent, would he not tell you that he neither believed in God nor the law you taught? First convince him that there is a God, that he has given to man a law, and that he is a transgressor of that law, and then ask him to repent. Faith, then is the first principle in the doctrine of Christ, and repentance is the second. Jesus taught that men should repent, and so did his apostles. Repentance requires that sinners should be sorry for the wrongs done, forsake them by trying to do right. If any have wronged their fellow creatures, they are asked by this doctrine of Christ to restore, and to make the wrong right so far as it is possible.

SERMON BY BROTHER A. J. MOORE,

At the Saints' Chapel, Lamoni, Iowa,
June 27th, 1886.

Brother Moore said:—As I cast my eye round over the congregation this morning, and see so many whose experience in this latter-day work is so much greater than mine, I feel as though I would be unable to present anything unto your consideration that would be a benefit to you, except I should receive that assistance we so much need. However, I trust that I may be able to bring some things from the word of God, that will strengthen us in faith and cheer us in life's journey, and assist us in this great latter day work we have espoused. I will call your attention to the second chapter of Acts, and 37th verse: "Now when they heard this they were pricked in their hearts, and said unto Peter, Men and brethren, what shall we do?" We are all aware that this question is answered in a great many ways, in the day and age in which we live. We look out upon the religious world, and it is lo here, and lo there; and if I should place myself in the condition of those who asked this question, it would be my duty to examine the theories that are taught to-day, as explanatory of the answer to the question asked, "what must I do to be saved?" and I do not know that I can find an answer that will satisfy my mind better than the one given by the apostle Peter. But when I stop to consider the teachings of the day, and the answer given by christians, and also by the heathen nations, [for they make the same claims to tell us what we must do to be saved], and compare the answers made by them with that made by Peter, I often pause and wonder, and ask myself the question, how is it, that with the Bible in their hand containing those teachings that our Master left on record, men have wandered so far from the plain statements contained therein. We ask the heathen this question, [the Hindoos for instance], and they say we must believe in their great god Brahma, that we must pray to him, and prostrate ourselves in the Pagoda, that building made venerable by the devotional exercises performed therein, and live in obedience to their law contained in the book called the Veda. We ask the Chinese the question and they declare that we should believe in God, and worship him through images. They say, you Christians believe in a god that has no body or parts, we worship him through images, something that we can see. You Christians set up something in your minds, an immaterial God and hence no God at all, and they say that we should worship a God that we can see, and hence they say in answering the question, you must be saved by complying with our requests. I ask other heathen nations, (the Japanese for instance) and they tell us, you must keep the Christian Bible out of your house, and follow the admonitions of your own conscience which will lead you aright. If I ask the question of the teachers of Christianity of to-day, "What must I do to be saved," and they tell us it matters not what church you belong to, only believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and that is all you need. Here we find the answers differ widely. But when we go to the good book, and read the teaching of Peter on the occasion which brought forth our text, we find he differs from both christian and heathen in answering this question. He declares unto the enquirers, "Repent and be baptized every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. For the promise is unto you and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call." He answered the question consistently. And here let me call your attention to the fact that Peter was ordained by Christ, and after his ascension on high, Peter with the rest of his brethren, went forth preaching the gospel; and when this question was asked him he knew how to answer it, and those who teach differently have wandered off in different ways. They have departed from the faith the apostles taught. They claim that to believe on the Lord Jesus Christ is all that is needed to be saved. But when we ask them if they believe in the words of Christ, as contained in the New Testament? O, yes, we believe the Bible? Yes, when it is shut, but when it is open they try to explain the words of Christ away, and they declare that those words were done away soon after Christ and his apostles. But the word of God being the test, for by it we are to be judged at the last day, it becomes our duty to search the word, and see if we can find in it what we must do to be saved. I remember reading in this book an answer to this question, an account of Paul's journeying to Damascus, and while on the road he saw a remarkable vision. The Master appeared to him, and talked with him, and though Paul had seen this wonderful vision and had conversed with the Lord, he knew there was something for him to do, and hence he made the enquiry, "Lord what wilt thou have me to do?" The answer was given by Christ, "Go on to Damascus and there it shall be told thee what thou must do." It seems that the apostle was placed in a condition to know, and was sent to a place where a servant of God could teach him what to do. The Lord appeared to this servant, Ananias by name, and informed him of Paul's condition; "For behold he prayeth," and told him to go to Paul and instruct him in his duty, "for he is a chosen vessel unto me." Obedient to the command of his Lord, Ananias went to the place where Paul was, and finding him blind from the heavenly vision, and in humble, penitent, praying condition, informed him that the Lord who appeared to him on the way had sent him (Ananias) that "he [Paul] might receive his sight and be filled with the Holy Ghost;" and after laying his hands on the head of Paul who received his sight straightway, he says, "And now why tarriest thou, arise and be baptized, and wash away thy sins calling on the name of the Lord."

It appears by this declaration there is something for us to do, not only believing on the Lord Jesus Christ, but doing what he has declared for us to do; and if we will walk after the pattern he has laid down we shall come out conquerors in the end. Then we shall find that glorious rest that those who follow Christ's teachings will enter into finally.

Turn to the 8th chapter of the Acts of Apostles, and there we find that the angel of the Lord speaks to Philip and tells him to go to a certain place, and he heeds the admonition. While on his way he meets a certain man, riding in a chariot, who was reading the prophet Isaiah, where he foretells of Christ, that he should "be led as a lamb to the slaughter, and as a sheep dumb before his shearers He opened not His mouth," &c., and as he read on, the man of God asked him if he knew what he was reading, and the man replied, "How can I except some man guide me?" Philip upon invitation stepped into the chariot, preached unto the man Christ, and he must have taught him the necessity of baptism, for when they came to a certain water the man in the chariot said, "See, here is water, what doth hinder me from being baptized." Philip replied, "If thou believest with all thy heart thou mayest." What was it that the man of God taught him? It was the plan of salvation, whereby you and I also may be saved, if we follow in Christ's footsteps. As they came up out of the water, after baptism, the Spirit of the Lord caught away Philip, who as he journeyed on his way taught the word in many places. When we come to compare these teachings with those of professing christians who claim to answer this question, we find they differ as widely from the word of God as do those heathen nations spoken of, as for instance, we go to the great mother church and we ask her the question, what must we do to be saved? They say, certainly, we can answer this question. You must believe in Jesus Christ, and that the Pope is His vicegerent on earth, and you must bow down to the Virgin Mary and you will be saved. But stop, say some of the reformers, the Lord will judge that idolatress, and "deliver her over to the burning flames." And says Mr. Wesley, "The christians have all turned heathen again." Those reformers condemn the mother church, and send about one hundred and fifty millions down to hell, and say they will fail to reach that celestial glory, or that heaven they are seeking after, that they are doomed to a bottomless hell eternally. This is past my comprehension. But stop, says the mother church, when you went out from us you cut yourself off from all authority to act, and what right have you to reform this church, having no authority to do so? And so she excommunicates them, and sends them to the bottomless pit. We follow on, asking others the question, and they tell us we must believe in a God, without body and parts, and when we come to compare this with the light of the Chinese, we find that the light of the Chinese exceeds that of those who make this declaration, for they declare it can be proved that he has both body and parts, and that he will answer our prayers. We might go on examining the answers given by men of different faiths, but if we should do so it would take a great length of time. We stop in the midst of this confusion, and ask what must we do to be saved? The only way we can answer that question is by turning to the word of God. Christ says, "I am the way, the truth and the life, no man cometh to the Father but by me." If this be true, it becomes necessary for us to follow Christ, who went down to John the Baptist, in Jordan, and there demanded baptism at his hands. John refused, but the Savior said, "Suffer it to be so now, for thus it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness," and the word says, that when our Redeemer came up from the water, the Holy Ghost descended upon him in the form of a dove, and a voice from heaven says, "This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased, hear ye him."

When we come to examine the answers by Christ, by Peter, and by Paul, we find a vast difference between them and the answers of men, and we ask why is it that man will follow his fellow-man? I can not answer for this, but I am thankful to God that we have lived in a day in which the light has come from heaven, that when that "young man" went forth in a grove to pray, an angel was sent down from heaven, and there it was made plain unto him that the gospel shall come forth in power, the same plan of salvation, the church organized according to the original pattern, the same principles that the Savior of mankind taught in ancient times should again be taught upon the earth; and in answer to the prayer—Which one of the churches is right—it was made known unto him that none of them was right.

We follow down to the Church of Christ of Latter Day Saints, and we find that they preach faith, repentance, baptism for the remission of sins, laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost, the resurrection from the dead, and eternal judgment, claiming authority from God to administer in the ordinances of his house as was taught 1800 years ago.

But stop, says one, you are in the same condition that you said the Catholics and Reformers were, you send all that do not believe as you do down to the bottomless pit. O no, these are not the teachings of the Bible, for if we taught that principle we would be as far from the truth in that respect, as are others spoken of, but we say that God is just and that he will reward mankind according to their works. We believe, [at least I do], that those who have lived by the best light they have received, will receive a reward according to their works. But when we come down to our day, and see the same gospel preached in its fulness, and see the same blessings follow according to obedience, we say that men should turn to Christ; and there is but one way, and that way will lead them to eternal life. Peter, having had experience from association with the Master, could answer this question of what we must do completely; he said to those believers, "Repent and be baptized every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins. For the promise is to you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call." The Savior gives an invitation to all. He says, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest," &c. Yes, says one, and the way to come to Him is taught by Paul to the Philippian jailer, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved, thou and thy house." But why do you stop at that portion of the quotation? Read the whole of it. "And they spake unto him the word of the Lord, and to all that were in his house. And he took them the same hour of the night, and washed their stripes, and was baptized, he and all his straightway." He told them to believe on the Lord, then spake to them the word of the Lord, or gospel, that they might believe, and one principle in the word spoken was baptism, by which they were "baptized into Christ," and consequently had come unto Him. When we come to compare the teachings of the Master and His servants with those of to-day, we are almost astonished to see how far man has wandered from the principles of life and salvation. I remember reading here in the Acts of the Apostles, that there was a devout man, who prayed unto God, and gave alms to the poor, (and it would appear to some that he was in a saved condition, he believed on the Lord); and as he fasted and prayed, God saw fit to send an angel from heaven to tell him what he must do, and when that message came, it was, to send for an individual who had authority to act in the name of his Lord, and he should tell them words whereby they must be saved. Peter, obedient to the message sent from Cornelius, went down there, and as he met Cornelius at the gate, who, upon seeing Peter was about to fall down and worship him, but he picks him up and says, I am but a man. But Cornelius had received this glorious vision, he had conversed with the angel, and supposed that when he saw Peter that he was something greater than a man, who was to tell him words whereby he must be saved, and he thought to worship him. Peter being invited into the house preached the word of the Lord unto them, and the Holy Ghost descended upon them, which caused Peter to say, "Can any man forbid water, that these should not be baptized, who have received the Holy Ghost as well as we, and he commanded them to be baptized in the name of the Lord." After baptism the promise is made to all that they shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost, and when we read the teaching of Peter in answering this question "what we must do" he declared unto all that they must Repent, and be baptized, for the remission of sins, then the gift of the Holy Ghost was received, the promise was to all that the Lord should call, and how many does the Lord call in the invitation of the Master, "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." If we receive this in the entire meaning of the word, it is, all that will come. In another place it reads "All that will come, may come, and partake of the water of life freely." But the question "what must we do" is answered by Paul, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ," and in another place he says, "By grace are ye saved, through faith, and that not of yourself, it is the gift of God."

We believe in Christ, that he was the one ordained from the foundation of the world, to redeem man from the fall, and place him in a condition whereby he can help himself, and as he paid the debt of Adam's transgression, we become responsible for our own individual sins. That we may partake of the bread of life, and drink of the fountain of life freely is my prayer. Amen.

Conference Minutes.

DECATUR DISTRICT.

Conference convened at Lucas, Iowa, July 10th, 1886, H. A. Stebbins presiding and A. S. Cochran clerk. Branch reports:—Lamoni 568; 14 baptized, 15 received, 5 expelled, 3 marriages. Lucas 221; 2 baptized, 6 removed, 3 died. Little River 100; 1 baptized, 1 removed, 2 expelled. Davis City 59; 1 baptized, 1 removed 3 expelled. Greenville 33. Lone Rock 57; 1 received. Cochran (baptized 1), N. Stamm and J. T. Phillips (baptized 1); Priests John Davis, J. Wahlstrom and Luke Sharp in person, and Wm. Crick and Joseph Hammer by letter. Resolved That we sustain the action of General conference in not permitting members to withdraw from the church without trial. Resolved, That we do not approve of the action of the Davis City branch in allowing members to withdraw without trial. Moved that when this conference adjourns, it does so to meet at the call of the president as to time and place. Preaching on Saturday evening by Asa S. Cochran; Sunday forenoon by Bro. E. Banta; social meeting in the afternoon, in charge of president, assisted by Bro. Henry Jones. Preaching in the evening by Bro. J. R. Lambert.

THANKSGIVING DINNER.

The Ladies Mite Society of Lamoni, will prepare a bounteous dinner November 25th to which all are invited. The proceeds to be used in procuring matting, etc., for the Saints' Chapel.

Miscellaneous.

MARRIED.

DERRY — BLACK.—At the residence of the bride's father, Mr. William Black, Fayette township, Decatur county, Iowa, October 28th, 1886, by Elder Joseph Smith, Bro. Arthur E. Derry of Nebraska, and Miss Malvina I. Black.

HOPKINS—CLUM.—At the residence of Bro. William Hopkins, Lamoni, Iowa, November 7th, 1886, by Elder Joseph Smith, Bro. William Alexander Hopkins and Sr. Libbie J. Clum, all of Lamoni.

BAILEY—LATHROP.—At the residence of Bro. R. S. Hogue, Lamoni, Iowa, November 7th, 1886, Mr. Truman Bailey to Sr. Lydia A. Lathrop, Elder Asa S. Cochran officiating.

DIED.

DILLEN.—In Tipton, California, October 15th, 1886, Freddie, son of Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Dillen, aged 2 years, 2 months and 27 days.

Freddie, thou hast gone and left us,
And the loss we feel to mourn;
Though the mighty God above us,
Can our weeping hearts console.
Yes, we mourn for thee our darling,
And are waiting for the time
When we will meet thee, little loved one,
In the paradise of God;
Until we meet thee with the blest,
In the mansions of our Lord.

DILLEN.—In Tipton, California, October 30th, 1886, of malarial fever, Emory, beloved husband of Alvira Dillen, and a son of Bro. and Sr. J. P. Dillen, of Lamoni, Iowa. The deceased is a native of Jackson county, Iowa; aged 33 years, 7 months and 2 days. He leaves a wife and child to mourn his loss.

Gone to rest, a valiant soldier
In the army of the Lord;
Faithful husband, loving father,
Gone to reap a just reward.
Father, bless the anguished widow;
Guard the little orphan dear;
Give them lasting cheer and comfort,
Be thine angels ever near.

HOLT.—At Galesburg, Illinois, October 28th, 1886, of old age and dropsical affection, sister Ellen, wife of Elder Robert Holt, of Kewanee, Illinois. Sister Holt was born at Bolton, Lancashire, England, February 12th, 1812; was married to Robert Holt, April 16th, 1832; was baptized by him in the old organization about 1840. In company with her family she went to Utah in 1856; returning to the states in 1859, and reaching Kewanee in 1861, where she has resided ever since. She united with the Reorganization in 1871, and remained a faithful member till death reached her at Galesburg, while on a visit to her daughters. She was brought home for interment on Sunday, October 31st, where a large number of citizens testified of the esteem in which she was held, by attendance at the funeral service, which was conducted by Bro. John Chisnall. Of fifteen children born to her, she leaves one son and three daughters, with their father, to mourn the loss of a faithful wife and mother.

TWITCHELL.—Near San Juan, San Benito Co., California, October 24th, 1886, grandmother Eunice Ursula Twitchell. She was born in Northampton, Massachusetts, July 1st, 1797; and at the time of her death was aged 89 years, 3 months and 24 days. She together with her husband, children and grandchildren, came to California in 1849. She was baptized September 21st, 1873, by Bro. John R. Cook, and confirmed same day by Bro. Charles W. Wandell. She has been a widow nineteen years, as grandfather died in 1867. She has been severely afflicted with rheumatism the most of that time, and has not been able to walk for some fifteen years, but has sat in her chair. She many times bore a faithful testimony. Her worst suffering was in her last days; but she now awaits the resurrection of the just. Funeral sermon was preached by Bro. Herman C. Smith from Job 14: 14, in the Congregational church at San Juan.

ADVOCATE NOTICE, No 3.

There are yet about six hundred names on the Saints' Advocate subscription lists of persons from whom we have never heard anything in response to our two former appeals through the Herald. This neglect will probably occasion serious delay in our getting out into the field again, as we can not go forth until we have settled with those to whom we are indebted, and this can only be done as fast as delinquents pay up their dues. Will every reader of this third appeal please respond if they have overpaid or are delinquent. Thanks to all who have written us and aided in this matter. Who will be the next to write us?

In bonds,

JOSEPH LUFF.

Box 372, Independence, Missouri.

DECATUR DISTRICT.

A conference of the above district will be held at Lamoni, Iowa, beginning at ten o'clock on Saturday, Dec. 4th, 1886. Presidents and clerks of branches are requested to make out and send their statistical reports. We also hope that each branch will be well represented at the conference by both officials and members. The annual election of district officers takes place at this session, which should have been in November, but I overlooked, till too late, the publication of the notice to that effect.

H. A. STEBBINS, Dist. Pres.

NOTICE.

The North-East Missouri district conference will be held at Bevier, Macon county, Missouri, December 11th and 12th, 1886. All are invited to attend.

Wanted the address of Oscar Anderson. Four years ago he was conductor on a passenger train running from Grand Rapids to Big Rapids, Michigan. I also have real estate that I will trade with some one who may wish to leave Missouri or Iowa. I wish some of the Saints would look me up a man and write me. M. N. Cole, Miller-ton, Sumner county, Kansas.

THANKSGIVING PROCLAMATION.

In conformity with a time-honored custom and in accordance with the recommendation of the President of the United States, I, William Larrabee, Governor of the State of Iowa, do appoint Thursday, the 25th day of November, 1886, a day of thanksgiving and prayer. I request all to refrain on that day from unnecessary labor, and at their firesides or places of worship to return thanks to Almighty God for the manifold blessings which we enjoy, and invoke the continuance of his favors. Let the day be devoted to good works, and especially let the sick, the needy and the afflicted be remembered by deeds of kindness and charity.

WILLIAM LARRABEE.

APPEAL.

To the president of — Branch of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints; dear brother: Please present the following to your branch. We being a new branch, organized at Cortland, Illinois, are desirous of building a church on a lot we have secured, appeal to your branch for a nickle contribution from each member, and as much more as any one may feel able or willing to give. We believe by this plan a church can be built every month in a year for the Saints and no one feel much poorer. Money can be sent by Post-office money order, Express money order, or by registered letter to C. D. Carter, treasurer, DeKalb, Illinois. W. E. Cherry and C. D. Carter, building committee. The first answer to our appeal was from the San Francisco branch, Bro. George S. Lincoln president, $6.10, for which we send thanks; may God's blessings attend them.

"A WIDE CONTRAST" INDEED.

THE Utah Journal, published at Logan City, Utah, for November 6th contains a "plaintive wail," very significant, and very touching. The Editor, writing about what appeared in the HERALD for October, 30th in regard to the Reunion at Garner's Grove, last October, and the contrast between that Reunion and the Conference of the Utah church at Coalville, Utah, states:

"Under the head of 'A Wide Contrast' the Saints' Herald published the foregoing in the October 30th number. We are willing that it should take the consolation unto itself which it can derive from the contrast. The Picture, however, presents a different view to us. A study of the history of God's people in former ages reveals to us the knowledge that persecution and hatred have always been their lot. A careful study of the scriptures convinces us that the gospel will produce similar fruits in the latter days, to those experienced in former times.

"The statements of the Herald show in plainness the church that is hated of the world. They leave no ground to doubt regarding the one that has fellowship with mankind. The contrast is indeed significant; it is so great that none acquainted with the history of real Saints need be in error concerning the course to pursue or the church to unite themselves with in order to be approved of God. If they desire to be approved of man, the way is also clear before them.

"The fact that some of the leaders were not present at the Coalville conference seems to strike the mind of the editor of the Herald with peculiar force, but his view of it is the popular one. It does not enter his mind that their absence was a disgrace to the 'best and greatest nation of this century,' just as the fleeing of the children of Israel from the tyranny of Pharaoh was a disgrace to that ruler.

"The law is not feared, but the tyrannical, prejudiced and bigoted administration of it. If history be studied it will be found that their course is not unique in this particular. Servants of God have had to hide from their enemies in the past. If the Herald editor deems the attendance at that conference an indication of a decline in the work here, he is laboring under a strong delusion, for such is not the case. As for his pity for this people, it is of the nature of that manifested by R. J. Anthony in his efforts against Apostle John W. Taylor. It is a pity which tends to bring perplexities upon the people. 'It must needs be that offenses come, but woe unto them by whom they come,' is language fitting those characters who persecute, in this age, the people of the Lord. The 'handwriting on the wall' no doubt foretells troubles for the Saints, but it also teaches that those troubles will educate and develop a class of people who will serve God at all hazards, and who will maintain liberty and save the constitution of this glorious country. This people are growing strong in faith and knowledge by reason of the trials upon them. They will continue to grow and increase until Zion is established, the joy of all on earth. They are willing, so far as they possess strength, to endure a little of that trial of which the Savior endured so much, for they know that by the trials come the blessings. They want no hypocritical sympathy but they desire faith and strength to endure unto the end."

Was it not a "wide contrast?" In the one case the members of a church believing fully in the teachings of the New Testament, the Book of Mormon and the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, as the same were construed by Joseph and Hyrum Smith and the first elders of the Church of Jesus Christ, (indeed many of them were members of the church prior to June 27th, 1844), met, preached, prayed, sang, bore testimony and enjoyed the rites and privileges of their church relationship not only without molestation, but under the protection of the law of the land; none of its ministry either in hiding, or in fear of arrest by an officer of the law for an infraction of the law because of their faith. Whatever good face the Journal may attempt to put upon it, or whatever pitiful begging of the question to be considered as victims of persecution made by its writers, the fact remains that the Lord told the people of the church that if they would "Talk not judgment, neither boast of faith, nor of mighty works; but carefully gather together, as much in one region as can be consistently with the feelings of the people; and behold, I will give unto you favor and grace in their eyes, that you may rest in peace and safety, of the people, until the army of Israel becomes great."—Doc. and Cov. 102:7, 8.

From the time that Pres. Young and the pioneers reached the foot of Ensign Peak, until the utterance of this wail in the Journal, the Valley Saints have not ceased to boast of their faith, their superior goodness, and their mighty works; nor ceased to denounce with bitterness and the calling of hard names those laws which the Nation's Congresses have adopted for the government of the people of the territory of Utah, and the officers to whom was entrusted the execution of those laws. The Journal truthfully says: "The law is not feared." No man fears the law itself; but the executors of the law. If there were no Marshal, and no Deputy Marshals chosen from, or appointed from among the Gentiles, or so-called apostate Mormons, and no courts presided over by citizens of the United States, not Mormons, not a man Jack of all the host of polygamists who have disregarded the law of 1862 and the Edmunds law, would be in hiding, or dodge the service of a writ. No, Mr. Journal, it is not the law, but the executors of the law that you fear. Go, not to the ant that feareth the winter, but to Paul, the apostle, who writing to the Romans, states the matter thus:

"For rulers are not a terror to good works, but to the evil. Wilt thou then not be afraid of the power? do that which is good, and thou shalt have praise of the same: For he is the minister of God to thee for good. But if thou do that which is evil, be afraid: for he is the minister of God, a revenger to execute wrath upon him that doeth evil."

The law against polygamy remained upon the statute book of the United States, a dead letter; and was a butt of ridicule and a laughing stock for polygamist philosophers and mongers of the law; but when the power was at last provoked to wrath, then the executors were feared—O no, the Journal fears not the law; but the executors of it.

The Reorganized Church fears neither the law of the land, nor the executors of it. The Lord has said to them, "My law is contained in the Scriptures which ye have received, and in the Book of Mormon and my Book of Doctrine and Covenants; seek them and do according to what is there written, and I am with you by my Spirit unto your salvation." We have believed what he said; and the way in which we might gain favor in the eyes of the people being clearly stated in the Doctrine and Covenants, as we have already shown, we have considered it to be our privilege and our duty to do what was therein commanded; and have found favor as it was promised we should; the people are becoming while you are saying unto the people, execute judgment and justice for us according to law, and redress us of our wrongs." "Now, behold, I say unto you, my friends, in this way you may find favor in the eyes willing to "execute judgment and justice" for us; and as stated by Paul we are having praise of the power, the executors of the law, which we fear not because we neither outrage it, nor teach others so to do.

The Journal, and its co-worker the Deseret News of Salt Lake City, unite in calling Elder R. J. Anthony hard names, and accuse him of being moved by an evil spirit of hatred against the people of the Utah church, because he appeared as a witness against a man in a United States Court, being commanded to appear there by a proper writ served by a proper officer. What would the Journal have? Elder Anthony as an American citizen was present at the meeting at which Elder John W. Taylor delivered the discourse in which he used the language upon which the jury found an indictment. He heard what was said. It was known that he was present, for Mr. Taylor's friends took good care to give notice that a Josephite elder was in their midst. He was properly bidden before the jury; and would the Journal have him dodge the power of the law; take passage on the Underground Railroad, and refuse to answer to his name when called as a witness in the courts of his country? Elder Anthony does not so construe the language of Paul, "Be subject unto the higher powers;" nor so read the revelations of God, in which the people are told that if they "keep the law of God they have no need to break the laws of the land."

We know Elder R. J. Anthony, and we believe that he would not condescend to gratify any personal and petty spite against Elder J. W. Taylor, or any other man opposed to him in faith; and that he would not purposely put himself in the way of being instrumental in causing trouble and grief to men whom he believes to be misguided. But while he would not do this, he also is a free born citizen of the American Republic; has his home and political happiness under the protection of the government of the United States, and exercises his privilege of religious worship and church allegiance under the Constitutional protection of the United States, and is absolutely free from any priestly domination as to what his personal course shall be as a citizen of the commonwealth. Under these circumstances, it would be expected that if Elder Anthony was bidden before the jury, he would go; if required to speak there, he would tell what he knew; and he would do this without fear, let, or hindrance from his friends; and we hope for the honor of manhood without fear of his enemies, if he has any. If he has spoken before the jury, or the court we believe that he has told the truth; and is in no wise responsible for the fate of Elder J. W. Taylor. The latter knows what the law is. If he did what was condemnable under the law, he should not be surprised when arraigned and punished. Elder Anthony when present at the meeting where it is charged that Elder Taylor used the language complained of before the court, was not there secretly, nor in disguise, nor as a spy. He is not an apostate from the Utah Church, and breaks no oath, betrays no confidence, nor divulges a secret entrusted to him when he states what took place there, and what was said by Elder Taylor; he simply states what was said and done in his presence. If what Elder Taylor said was not reprehensible under the law, why should Elder Anthony be censured, or rated for stating what it was. No, Mr. Journal, it will not do. You clearly mistake the quotation: "It must needs be that offences come, but woe unto them by whom they come." There is no shelter under this for your wrong doing. Offences against the law of God and the land have come by reason of your disregard for both, and the woe is to be upon you, and not upon the instruments by whom that woe shall be visited upon you.

There is no parallel between the flight of the children of Israel from the tyranny of Pharaoh, and the flight of some of the leaders of the people of the church in Utah. The former was the effort of a people, under the direct command of God, to escape from a condition of physical bondage; with no sympathy and no bond of union between the two peoples other than the benefit to be derived to the captors from the the captives; the latter is a personal evasion of the service of writs of apprehension for misdemeanors committed against the laws of a republic in which there is or should be a union of political interests, a sympathy between peoples of the same race and origin, in a land where there can now be no possible avoidance of commercial and political intercourse between the church and the outside world; the former was to compel physical service, the other is to compel an obedience to wholesome laws properly enacted.

If there is to come a time in which Zion is to receive help from kings and queens as nursing mothers and fathers, ought not that time to be nearly here? If there is a "set time" in which Zion is to meet with "favor," ought we not to be earnestly and with confident hope looking for it? If there is to be such a favoring time, and God has pointed out the means by which Zion's children may attain unto it, is it not time that those who desire such favor should use the means so pointed out? If the favor which is to be extended to Zion when the "set time" has come, is not to be "rest and safety," what are we to look for? If "rest and safety" are to be enjoyed by God's people when the "set time" is come, then the means to be employed to secure "rest and safety" if used and used successfully, will certainly mark the epoch in the history of the church when the "set time" has come. Bonds, fines, imprisonments are not favors; but distresses. If borne for the gospel's sake, and that only, there would be merit in bearing them; but there is neither merit nor persecution in just prosecution for offences against law. Plural marriage is no part of the gospel, never was, and never can be; hence, those who are guiltily hiding from arrest and prosecution for practicing it, are not fleeing from persecution for righteousness' sake, but are fugitives from justice because of evil-doing; for them there can be no just excuse.

FACTORIES NEEDED.

LAMONI needs a number one Cheese Factory and Creamery, run by parties who have pluck and stick-to-it-iveness to put their means into it and push it. This is one of the finest regions for grasses and clovers in the Mississippi Valley, is much more than average for corn, winter wheat, oats, rye, and all vegetables peculiar to this climate; is fair for fruit, large and small; has a fair supply of timber, stone and plenty of coal near by; and is an exceptionally healthy country for man and beast. Markets are opening up finely at the growing cities of St. Joseph, Kansas City, Des Moines, Burlington, Omaha and Council Bluffs, besides other places, and what this region needs is more intelligent, enterprising farmers, manufacturers, merchants and mechanics, who will labor in unity, and good fellowship to build up the country, aiding and encouraging each other for both the individual and the common good. Broad and liberal views in respect to all lines of business from raising peas and poultry to establishing factories and all the more advanced industries are needed.

Those who seek the good of "me and my wife, my son John and his wife—us four and no more" are no help to any country. Such parties would do well to society to repent and help on the general weal, or else emigrate.

There is no apparent reason why a broom factory would not do well at this place, and indeed there is no apparent reason why some other kinds of manufacturing may not succeed here if planted right and then prosecuted with patience and vigor. Of course, wisdom must be used in respect to all the facilities needed, both as to manufacturing and making sales, etc.

If capital was had, packing and canning meats and fruits would pay well. But none of these things come by chance; none come without a venture, and none can succeed without well directed, persistent effort. The man who sits watching for every stray nickel and yet does nothing to increase them except for his own pocket, is simply a leech on society, and is not worthy of aid or countenance in business; they are business barnacles, and need to be scraped off as hindrances to progress, while eating out the vitals and giving nothing in return. The profits and burdens of business and of society should be made equal as far as practicable; and when business men will not help to build up the general good, they should be shunned. When moneyed men are reaping the fruits of others' labor, they should cheerfully repay by aiding others in some practical way. No man should live for himself alone. He has no right to do this. And when men have money or business talent, they should use it for the common good; and when they are meanly selfish and will not, then they should be left to themselves until they reform.

We think Lamoni is a good point at which to concentrate talent, money, and faithful effort, in building up useful industries for the common good, and demonstrating what can be done here by united capital and labor skillfully applied. Business men here should urge and aid such efforts; and, in turn, the farmer and mechanic should aid their business men in every legitimate and proper way, if, and when, such business men are seeking the common good. And if men, (and especially business men), will not seek the good of their town and surrounding country, they are entitled to no consideration; and if the people benefitted by the efforts of others in building up will not reciprocate and also aid in building up, they are unwise, ungrateful, unworthy, and injure both themselves and their benefactors.

Lamoni and the country about it need the forces of intelligent industry and spirited enterprise till they thrill and throb and grow with happy, prosperous activities. All this can be had, and they ought to be had. But we again remark that such conditions do not come without intelligent effort and persevering enterprise. Now that we have leisure from the bustle and rush of the summer and autumn months, it will be well to consider the needs and opportunities awaiting at our doors, and devise ways and means to dispose of them profitably.

PERSECUTION AND ITS CAUSES.

SOME of the Missouri officials deprecated these unprovoked and unparalleled outrages, and among them the Attorney General, who wrote the counsel employed by the church, to prosecute the mob, of which the following is a copy:

"CITY OF JEFFERSON, NOV. 21, 1833.

"Gentlemen: From conversation I have had with the Governor, I believe I am warranted in saying to you, and through you to the Mormons, that if they desire to be replaced in their property, that is, their houses in Jackson county, an adequate force will be sent forthwith to effect that object. Perhaps a direct application had better be made to him for that purpose, if they wish to be re-possessed. The mitila have been ordered to hold themselves in readiness.

"If the Mormons will organize themselves into regular companies, or a regular company of militia, either volunteers or otherwise, they will, I have no doubt, be supplied with public arms. This must be upon application, therefore, as a volunteer company must be accepted by the Colonel, and that is a matter in his discretion, perhaps the best way would be to organize and elect officers as is done in ordinary cases,—not volunteers, you could give them the necessary directions on these points. If the Colonel should refuse to order an election of company officers, after they have reported themselves to him for that purpose, he would I presume, be court martialled therefor, on a representation to the Governor of the facts. As only a certain quantity of public arms can be distributed in each county, those who first apply will be most likely to receive them. The less, therefore, that is said upon the subject the better.

"I am with great respect your obedient servant.

Times and Seasons, vol. 6, page 712.

Immediately after this, Judge Ryland wrote Amos Reese, Circuit Attorney, and of counsel for the church, as follows:

"LEXINGTON, NOV. 24, 1833.

"Dear Sir: I have been requested by the Governor to inform him about the outrageous acts of unparalleled violence that have lately happened in Jackson county, and have also been requested to examine into these outrages and take steps to punish the guilty and screen the innocent.

"I can not proceed unless some person shall be willing to make the proper information before me. I now request you to inform me whether the Mormons are willing to take legal steps against the citizens of Jackson county? Whether they wish to return there or not, and let me know all the matters connected with this unhappy affair. It will be necessary for you to see the persons injured, and be informed of their desires and intentions. The military force will repair to Jackson county, to aid the execution of any order I make on this subject. Be particular in your information to me. I am willing to go any time to Jackson county, for the purpose of holding a court of inquiry and binding over to keep the peace such persons as I shall think ought to be restrained.

"It is a disgrace to the state for such acts to happen within its limits, and the disgrace will attach to our official character if we neglect to take proper means to insure the punishment due such offenders.

"I wish to know whether Joshua Lewis and Hiram Page handed the writ to the sheriff of Jackson county that I made and issued on their affidavit against some of the ringleaders of the mob in Jackson county, dated the sixth of this month.

"I will know why he refused to execute the writ, if it ever came to his hands. Enquire into this subject and let me know. I should be glad to see you and agree upon what course to take. After you have sufficiently informed yourself come down and see me, as you live near the scene of these outrages you are better able to receive all information necessary to prepare for future action than I am.

"Write me as soon as you are properly informed, and state when you can come down and see me on this business. Keep copies of all the letters you write on this subject.

"Your friend,

"JOHN F. RYLAND."

Times and Seasons, vol. 6, p. 912.

These officials perceived the enormity of the deeds of the Jackson county mobbers, and seemed willing to defend the innocent Saints and punish their cruel enemies. All honor to such men.

Soon afterward A. S. Gilbert wrote the Governor thus:

"LIBERTY, Clay Co., Nov. 29th, 1833.

"Dear Sir: Yesterday I saw Mr. Doniphan, an attorney of this place, who informed me that he saw the Attorney General, Mr. Wells, in Saline county, last Saturday week, and that Mr. Wells had acquainted him with your intention of ordering a court of enquiry to be held in Jackson county, in relation to the late riotous proceedings in that county. Mr. Doniphan is of opinion from the conversation he had with Mr. Wells, that said order will be suspended till a communication is received from our people, or their counsel. This is therefore to acquaint your Excellency, that most of the heads of our church had an interview yesterday on the subject of an immediate court of enquiry to be held in Jackson county, and by their request to me I hasten to lay before your Excellency serious difficulties attending our people on an immediate court of enquiry being called.

"Our church is at this time scattered in every direction; some in the new county of Van Buren, a part in this county, and a part in Lafayette, Ray, &c. Some of our principal witnesses would be women and children, and while the rage of the mob continues it would be impossible to gather them in safety at Independence. And that your Excellency may know of the unabating fury with which the last remnant of our people remaining in that county are pursued at this time, I here state that a few families, perhaps fifteen or twenty, who settled themselves more than two years ago on the prairie about fifteen miles from the county seat of Jackson county, had hoped from the obscurity of their location, that they might escape the vengeance of the enemy through the winter; consequently they remained on their plantations, receiving occasionally a few individual threats, till last Sunday, when a mob made their appearance among them, some with pistols cocked and presented to their breasts, commanding them to leave the county in three days, or they would tear their houses down over their heads, &c., &c.

"Two expresses arrived here from said neighborhood last Monday morning for advice, and the council advised their speedy removal for the preservation of life and their personal effects. I suppose these families will be out of the county of Jackson this week. In this distressed situation, in behalf of my brethren I pray your Excellency to await a further communication, which will soon follow this, setting forth among other things the importance of our people being restored to their possessions, that they may have an equal chance with their enemies in producing important testimony before the court, which the enemy are now determined to deprive them of. Trusting that your Excellency will perceive the agitation and consternation that must necessarily prevail among most of our people at this day from the unparalleled usage they have received, and many of them wandering at this time destitute of shelter.

"That an immediate court of enquiry called while our people are thus situated, would give our enemies a decided advantage in point of testimony, while they are in possession of their own homes, and ours also, with no enemy in the county to molest or make them afraid.

"Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

"A. S. GILBERT.

"To his Excellency, Daniel Dunklin, Jefferson City, Missouri.

"I have seen and read the above letter, and on reflection, I concur entirely in the opinion therein expressed. I also think that at the next regular term of the court, an examination of the criminal matter can not be gone into without a guard for the court and witnesses.

“(Signed), AMOS REESE.

“Those who were threatened by the mob on Sunday the 24th, fled into Clay county and encamped on the banks of the Missouri river. A number of the families went into Van Buren county; their whole number of men, women and children, being upwards of one hundred and fifty.”

Times and Seasons, vol 6, p. 912, 913.

These extracts will enable the reader to see the distressed and comparatively helpless condition into which the Saints were forced by the mobbers, and also the legal and peaceful methods by which they sought redress.

In this connection we may add relative parts of a letter written by Joseph the Seer from Kirtland, Ohio, to Bishop Partridge, Liberty, Missouri, as follows:

“KIRTLAND, Dec. 5th, 1833.

“Dear Brethren: We have just received a letter from Brother Phelps, dated 6th and 7th of November, at Liberty, which gives us the painful intelligence of the rage of the enemy, and your present unsettled situation. But I must inform you that there is a great dubiety resting upon our minds with regard to the true state of affairs in Zion; for there seems to be some difference in the statements of Elder Phelps' letter, and that of Elder Hyde's communication to the editors of the Missouri Republican. Elder Hyde states that 'on Monday the 4th, the mob collected in Independence to the number of two or three hundred, well armed, and a part of their number went above Blue to drive away our people and destroy our property, but they were met by a party of our people, and being prepared they poured a deadly fire upon them, two of their number fell dead on the ground, and a number mortally wounded, among the former was Brazeal.'

“Tuesday morning there were a number of the mob missing and could not be accounted for, and while we were at Liberty landing, on Wednesday, a messenger rode up saying that he had just come from the seat of war, and that the night before another battle was fought, in which Mr. Hicks fell, having three balls and some buckshot through his body, and about twenty more shared a similar fate, and also many wounded; and he [Hyde] heard the cannonading distinctly, and also stated that the man who broke open the store took Gilbert, Phelps, and one more, for false imprisonment, and put them in prison, and as near as he could learn, never to let them escape alive.’

“This statement of Elder Hyde is somewhat different from that of Elder Phelps, who states that 'on Friday night the brethren had mustered about forty or fifty men, armed, and marched into the village, took one prisoner, and fired one gun (through mistake); and on Saturday the mob fell upon our brethren above Blue, and one of Manship's sons was mortally wounded. On Monday a regular action was fought near Christian Whitmer's, under the commend of Elder David Whitmer. We had four wounded; they had five wounded and two killed, namely, Linville and Brazeale. From Friday till Tuesday our brethren were under arms, when one hundred and fifty of them came forth, like Moroni, to battle. On Tuesday morning the mob had collected to the number of three hundred, and before any blood was shed we agreed to go away immediately, and the enemy took our guns.’

“Elder Phelps also states that 'since the above was written, (namely, on the 6th), another horrible scene has transpired: after our people surrendered their arms, a party of the mob went above Blue and began to whip, and even murder; and the brethren have been driven into the woods, and are fleeing to the ferry; and also the mob have hired the ferryman to carry them across the river; [but they made the brethren pay the ferrage]; and it was reported that the mob had killed two more of the brethren.’

“It appears, brethren, that the above statements were mostly from reports, and no certainty of their being correct; therefore, it is difficult for us to advise, and can only say that the destinies of our people are in the hands of a just God, and he will do no injustice to any one; and this one thing is sure, that they who will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution; and before their robes are made white in the blood of the Lamb, it is to be expected they will pass through great tribulation, according to John the Revelator.

“I wish when you receive this letter that you would collect every particular concerning the mob, from the beginning, and send us a correct statement of the facts as they transpired from time to time, that we may be enabled to give the public correct information on the subject; and inform us also of the situation of the brethren with respect to their means of sustenance, &c.

“I would inform you that it is not the will of the Lord for you to sell your lands in Zion, if means can possibly be procured for sustenance without. Every exertion should be made to maintain the cause you have espoused, and to contribute to the necessities of one another, as much as possible, in this your great calamity, and remember not to murmur at the dealings of God with his creatures. You are not as yet brought into as trying circumstances as were the ancient prophets and apostles. Call to mind a Daniel, the three Hebrew children, Jeremiah, Paul, Stephen, and many more too numerous to mention, who were stoned, sawn asunder, tempted, slain with the sword, and wandered about in sheep skins and goat skins, being destitute, afflicted, tormented, of whom the world was not worthy. They wandered in deserts and in mountains, and in dens, and in caves of the earth; yet they all obtained a good report through faith; and amidst all their afflictions they rejoiced that they were counted worthy to receive persecution for Christ's sake.

“We know not what we shall be called to pass through before Zion is delivered and established; therefore, we have great need to live near to God, and always be in strict obedience to all his commandments, that we may have a conscience void of offense towards God and man. It is your privilege to use every lawful means in your power to seek redress for your grievances of your enemies, and prosecute them to the extent of the law. But it will be impossible for us to render you any assistance in a temporal point of view, as our means are already exhausted, and we are deeply in debt and know of no means whereby we shall be able to extricate ourselves.

“The inhabitants of this county threaten our destruction, and we know not how soon they may be permitted to follow the examples of the Missourians. But our trust is in God, and we are determined by his grace assisting us to maintain the cause and hold out faithful unto the end, that we may be crowned with crowns of celestial glory, and enter into that rest that is prepared for the children of God. * * *

“We learn by Elder Phelps that the brethren have surrendered their arms to the enemy, and are fleeing across the river. If that is the case, it is not meet that they should recommence hostilities with them; but if not, you should maintain the ground as long as there is a man left, as the spot of ground upon which you were located is the place appointed of the Lord for your inheritance, and it was right in the sight of God that you contend for it to the last. You will recollect that the Lord has said that Zion should not be removed out of her place; therefore, the land should not be sold, but be held by the Saints until the Lord in his wisdom opens a way for your return; and until that time, if you can purchase a tract of land in Clay county for present emergencies, it is right you should do so, if you can do it, and not sell your land in Jackson county. It is not safe for us to send you a written revelation on the subject, but what is written above is according to wisdom.

December 6th, 1833, the Elders in Missouri sent the following petition to the Governor.

“To his Excellency, Daniel Dunklin, Governor of the State of Missouri: We, the undersigned, leading members of the Church of Christ, vulgarly called Mormons, would respectfully represent to your Excellency, in addition to the petition presented to you by Messrs. Phelps and Hyde, and the affidavit of Messrs. Phelps, Gilbert and McLellan, after having read the letters of the Attorney General and District Judge of this circuit to Mr. Reese; that, whereas, our society, men, women and children, after having been in some cases wounded, scourged, and threatened with death, have been driven by force of arms from their lands, houses, and much of their property in Jackson county,—most of which lands, houses and property, have been possessed by the mob of Jackson county, or others,—and are now unlawfully detained from the use and possession of our people; and that, whereas, our people have been driven and scattered into the counties of Clay, Ray, Van Buren, Lafayette and others, where in many cases they are destitute of the common necessities of life in this, even this winter season; and that, whereas, the guns which were taken from our people, as set forth in the affidavit, are kept from them; Therefore, in behalf of our society, which is so scattered and suffering, we, your petitioners, ask aid and assistance of your Excellency, that we may be restored to our lands, houses, and property, and protected in them by the militia of the state, if legal, or by a detachment of the United States Rangers, which might be located at Independence, instead of Cantonment Leavenworth, till peace is restored. [This could be done probably, by conferring with the President, or perhaps Colonel Dodge]. Also, we ask that our men may be organized into companies of Jackson Guards, and be furnished with arms by the state, to assist in maintaining their rights against the unhallowed power of the mob of Jackson county:

"And then, when arrangements are made to protect us in our persons and property, (which can not be done without an armed force, nor would it be prudent to risk our lives there without guards, till we receive strength from our friends to protect ourselves), we wish a court of enquiry instituted to investigate the whole matter of the mob against the Mormons; and we will ever pray.

"W. W. PHELPS, ISAAC MORLEY,
"JOHN WHITMER, EDW'D PARTRIDGE.
"JOHN CORRILL, A. S. GILBERT.

"The following letter accompanied the foregoing petition:

"LIBERTY, Dec. 6th, 1833.

"Dear Sir:—Your Excellency will perceive by the petition bearing date with this letter, that we intend to return to Jackson county as soon as arrangements can be made to protect us, after we are again placed into our possessions.

"We do not wish to go till we know that our lives are not in danger of a lawless mob. Your Excellency will understand that, at this inclement season, it will require time to restore us, and troops to protect us, after we are there, for the threats of the mob have not ceased.

"Your obedient servant,

"W. W. PHELPS.

"To Daniel Dunklin, Governor of Missouri."

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Brother William Goreham wrote from Beelerville, Ness county, Kansas, November 6th, 1886. He located on a homestead in the western part of the county last May, and thinks there are others who could do similar with profit. Of his attempts to preach the gospel in that vicinity he writes as follows:

"The second Sunday I was here, I went five miles from home and in my weakness tried to preach the gospel. It was in a sod shanty 9x12, and scarcely high enough to stand erect in. I thank God for the help I had and the spirit that I felt which accompanied the word. Everybody seemed pleased to hear me. But, alas; it was soon noised among the homesteaders that Goreham was a Mormon; and they then cried out, "Away with him!" But I continued holding meetings, asking the Master to direct. It was finally decided that if talk would not keep the Mormon at home, rotten eggs would. And while the excitement was running high, a good and influential widow lady cried out and said, "Stop!" declaring that about thirty years ago she boarded with a family of Latter Day Saints, and she was bold to declare that if there were any Christians on earth at that time, it was W. W. Blair and wife. This lady is a Mrs. Dickenson. Her husband at that time was a clerk and book-keeper for Bro. Blair. She advised them to wait and see, for she thought if I was half as good a man as Brother Blair I did not deserve such treatment. And, dear Herald, while I do not feel that I am half so good as brother Blair, how my heart has been made to rejoice, and how thankful I have been that I have had the good name of brother and sister Blair to help me when being persecuted by the homesteaders. I have continued to preach as best I could and have endeavored that my walk and conduct should compare with my teaching; and I thank God that prejudice is fast giving way, so that at the very place where they wanted to egg me last June, they are now trying to get me to superintend the Sabbath School. To God be all the praise. I am well satisfied with my new home, and I think there are many Saints who would do well to come to western Kansas and secure a home. If any desire information about this country, and will write me, I will give all the information I can. We often feel lonely, and we ask the Saints to remember us at the throne of grace, not forgetting Mrs. Dickenson our friend and protector.

We remember well Mrs. Silas T. Dickenson and her husband, both of whom were our very dear friends when we lived in East Paw Paw, Illinois; and we are glad to know that our influence, where known in those dark and trying times for the Saints, was found on the side of truth and righteousness, and is now fruitful in good results.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Ques.—If an Elder is traveling all the time, and has his letter of membership with him, does this deprive him from preaching the gospel; he not being a member of any branch? If so, why?

Ans.—No.

Q.—If the general conference assigns an Elder a mission through his own request, is his call to the world, or to preside over a district when the local Elders can preside?

A.—His call is to preach the gospel to the world, and preside if it becomes needful.

Q.—Has such an Elder the right to stay at home in the branches and act as a local, and draw tithing from the agent of the Bishop? And if so, why?

A.—Yes; he has such right if wisdom or necessity require. The necessity is the reason.

Q.—If such Elder has an appointment from the General Conference ought not the conference to see that he fills that mission?

A.—Yes, we suppose so, by those who may be in charge of the field where such Elder is laboring.

THE PREMILLENIALISTS.

At this writing, November 17th, there is in session at Chicago, Illinois, a body of earnest, intelligent men, who have come from various parts to discuss the question of Christ's second coming. All, or nearly all of them hold that His advent will be before the millennium, and that it is near at hand. They hold that this fact should inspire the utmost devotion and faithfulness in warning mankind and in seeking their conversion to God.

The Scriptures abound with evidence that some, both Jew and Gentile and Christian, will in these latter days be in expectation for the coming of Christ, and that but few will have understanding in respect to it, and be well prepared for it. See Isa. 25: 9; 26: 8; Zech. 14: 1-11; 2 Pet. 3: 3, 4; Luke 12: 45; Matt. 24: 29-51; 25: 1-13; Ps. 50: 1-6, &c., &c.

The Saints have, from the beginning of this latter day dispensation and the organization of the church, been definitely and faithfully instructed in the fact, first, that the glorious coming of Christ is now nigh at hand; and, second, as to the means by which to be ready for that event. See

Doc. Cov. 1: 3; 34: 4; 45: 2-10; 49: 4, 5; 56: 6; 63: 13; 65: 1; 68: 1; 108: 3-11, &c. These texts afford the thoughtful reader abundant and conclusive evidence that Joseph Smith was a highly favored and clearly inspired servant of God, giving to the Saints in due time and in an open, plain and authentic manner important and essential instruction in things pertaining to God and the salvation of man. In all this we see the wisdom and love of God manifested.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

THE brethren living in the locality of the Lone Rock School-house, and constituting the Lone Rock Branch, held a series of meetings beginning November 6th, and ending the 14th, Bro. John S. Johnston in charge. The attendance was all that the house would hold, from first to last; Brn. Johnston, Joseph S. Snively, Charles Jones and J. Smith, filled the pulpit during the meetings; a fine interest seemed to be felt, and the result was gratifying; two excellent young men, one the head of a family, were baptized by Bro. Johnston on Sunday the 14th.

Lamoni and vicinity were blessed with fine rains November 16th, and on the 17th Jack Frost laid his icy hand, in a gentle way, on forest, field and flood. We have had a pleasant, seasonable fall thus far, and are happy trusting in God for blessings, spiritual and temporal. The Saints' meetings here and about here have been marked by unity, love, and a good degree of the comfort, guidance, grace and gifts of the Holy Spirit, and more especially during the past few weeks. But this is not exceptional, for we hear from all quarters of the peace and light and joy and spiritual signs and gifts enjoyed by the faithful Saints. The Spirit of God is moving upon the people.

Sister A. T. Hamilton of Reese Creek, Montana, is visiting friends in Lucas and Clark counties, Iowa, and will return in a short time to her home in the mountains.

Brother A. E. Nelson of Campello, Massachusetts, writes the 6th inst. that the people in Brockton are being aroused by the preaching of Bro. Bond. Bro. Nelson feels "at rest" in the Church of Christ, and is anxious to see it progress.

Bro. G. R. Scogin writes from Trumbull, Alabama, of late, and says he is laboring in both Florida and Alabama, and that the Saints are alive and active, with few exceptions, and that there are many calls for the ministry. Several new places have been opened. He in connection with brother J. W. Booker organized a branch, October 17th, of seventeen members.

Bro. J. R. Badham, of Los Angeles, California, wrote November 6th, very encouragingly in regard to the prospect of the work there. By the good providences of the Lord, Bro. Badham has been able to secure a post of labor where he can be useful to himself and the cause.

Two others were baptized by Bro. J. C. Foss, October 17th. He wrote November 10th that he has been permitted excellent liberty in the gospel.

Meachen Curtis writes from Medina City, Texas, that responsible parties (members of the church preferred) can now secure the best water power in that or adjoining county at reasonable figures, for factory purposes; and he claims it is in the heart of a cotton and wool growing country.

Bro. M. O. Matthews, of New Park, Pennsylvania, spent two weeks at Nottingham, Pa., preaching; he baptized two there, one of them being won to the truth from infidelity.

By letter from Bro. John Eames, dated November 11th, we learn he is preaching in his city, Cheyenne, Wyoming, and at times with apparent good effect.

Bro. J. M. Wait informs us that he has moved to Aniwa, Wisconsin.

Bro. James Whitehead, of Alton, Illinois, writes us of late that he attended their district conference at West Belleville. He is strong in faith and joyful in spirit, and hopes to visit us at Lamoni next May or June. He will find a warm welcome when he comes. Bro. Whitehead was the Seer's private secretary at Nauvoo, and has much valuable information touching the church in those times.

Bro. R. J. Anthony writes us from Franklin, Idaho, November 10th, that he is having a pretty fair hearing at that place, and hopes for good results. Heavy snows prevent his going to Albion, Idaho, at present.

Dr. W. A. Pease, a friend of the Saints, has moved from Sandwich, Illinois, and located at Black River Falls, Wisconsin, and wishes the Elders to preach there.

Bro. I. N. Roberts, writing from Senior, Texas, states that times are hard there financially, but they are rejoicing in the Spirit of God.

The Lowry, Missouri, City Times, and the Henry county, Missouri, Democrat of November 11th and 15th respectively, contain favorable notices of Bro. I. N. White's labors at the High Hill School-house, near Lowry. Bro. White has commenced another series at the Lundaker School-house. Bro. White proposes to not suffer the work to lag in his district. Pray for more laborers, brethren.

Bro. George W. Galley has an interesting correspondence going on in the Columbus, Nebraska, Journal, between himself and a former resident of Columbus, now in Utah, and converted to polygamy which she essays to defend.

THE clipping below is from the Denison (Iowa) Review:—

"LATTER DAY SAINTS.

"The quarterly conference of the Galland's Grove district of the Reorganized Church of J. C. of L. D. S., was in session at Dow City from the 5th to the 7th inst. This district is presided over by Elder W. W. Whiting and has a membership of about 750. Elder E. C. Brand was in attendance, who is a speaker of noted ability. The session was very pleasant throughout. We saw many familiar faces from Galland's Grove, Pretty Prairie, Deloit, and North Coon. All the former officers of the district were re-elected. They believe that all officers placed in the church by God in the first century are still necessary in order that the gospel of Christ may be fully and perfectly taught and the ordinances of this church rightly administered. We understand that their ministers are quite energetic in preaching the gospel, yet receive no salary. Would a minister travel and preach, leaving all the comforts of home, without receiving any earthly remuneration if he was not fully convinced that what he preached was the truth. No, I think not.

JERUSALEM AND THE JEWS.

BELOW is a clipping from the Salt Lake Herald of the 3d inst., from which it will be seen that the Jews are gathering and building in and near Jerusalem; also, that at least some of them are "beginning to believe in Christ." "Wad El Ward," it is claimed, is the son of a Jewish ribbi living in Jerusalem; but the latter had been converted to belief in Christ as the true Messiah, and is a professional lecturer. This is something of what he said at the Tabernacle in Salt Lake City, October 31st.

"Wad El Ward, attired in Oriental costume, after the first portion of the Sacrament was administered, arose without any introduction and began a brief address, in the course of which he stated that he was the first representative of his people who had ever appeared in this community. He said he anticipated the time when the religion he professed who prevail throughout the world, when Jesus would come to reign on the earth. Mr. Ward's delivery was marred somewhat by its indistinctness, and many eager listeners were disappointed in not hearing all the gentleman said. He briefly stated his belief in the religion of his forefathers, the Jews; that the influence of God was made known through agencies; that conversion took place at once; and that it was not necessary to go to school to learn the miralces of God. He rapidly reviewed the history, persecutions and final captivity of the children of Israel; referred to the monuments and religion of the Egyptians; their monuments remained, but their religion was gone; so also was the religion of the Romish church, and so would every one that had not the Spirit of God to sustain it.

"The speaker alluded to himself and said that he came here a stranger; that his father still lived in Jerusalem, at the advanced age of one hundred and ten years. Mr. Ward had traveled considerably, but the more he moved around the more he discovered how ignorant he was. He gave it as his belief that in the beginning man came upon the earth after the animal creation, among which the attributes had all been distributed, and when man asked for first one gift and then another, and was told that such and such an animal or bird had the desired attribute, he returned to his wife and complained. His better half replied that he should go to the throne of grace and ask for envy and jealousy. The speaker did not inform his hearers, however, whether the advice was taken. Religion, Mr. Ward said, was thought by many to consist of a long face, and ridiculed the proposition,

"Referring to Jerusalem, his home, Mr. Ward remarked that land there was increased in value; the place was being built up; the Jews were beginning to return there. As a Christian Jew Mr. Ward believed in Jesus and Him only. He also believed, and firmly too, that the grand festivals and feasts of olden times would once more be observed by his people in the land of Palestine; everything used and worn by the ancients would again be given to the Jews; the customs and observances of his forefathers would be restored. The gentleman believed in the Bible literally; he did not read it with a spiritual eye. Religion, he asserted, originally came from the Jews; laws were not known until the Jews gave them.

"In a pleasing style Mr. Ward related some of the customs which the poor in Palestine observe, and told an amusing story illustrative of the superstition of the pilgrims there. They come long distances, he remarked, to kneel to a golden box, which contained a single feather. On being interrogated as to why they did so, their reply was that the feather was one from the wings of the Archangel Michael. Mr. Ward pointedly disclaimed any belief in the plumage of angels. He humorously referred to several of the practices in the far-off east, and spoke of them lightly as nonsensical. On one occasion in one of these cities where he tarried, a procession passed along the principal thoroughfare, and the poor knelt as it moved by them. He was requested to kneel, and on inquiring why, was answered with, 'Don't you see the good God passing?' He looked, but observed nothing going by but a priest carrying a pancake. He respectfully replied that he 'knelt to no panpake.'"

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY SISTER "FRANCES."

"Darkness in the pathway of man's life
Is but the shadow of God's providence,
By the great Sun of Wisdom cast thereon
And what is dark below is light in heaven."

BELOW we present our readers with the plain unvarnished story, from her own pen, of sister Brooks, the aged cripple referred to by Bro. R. C. Evans in his recent letter in the Herald. We believe it our duty to speak of these things, in order that God may have the glory due to his high and holy name, for the mercies he is constantly bestowing upon us, and that the ears of our enemies may be saluted with the answer given by one of old whom Christ had in a like manner healed, "Why, herein is a marvelous thing, that ye know not from whence he is, and yet he hath opened my eyes." "Now we know that God heareth not sinners; but if any man be a worshipper of God, and doeth his will, him he heareth." John 9: 29, 30. Jesus came into the world to do the will of his Father, and his Father gave him power to comfort and strengthen his poor, despised disciples by stretching forth his hand to heal and bless. When he sent his disciples forth to preach the gospel we hear him saying, "As my Father hath sent me, even so send I you."

Again after his resurrection, when giving to them their final commission, he said, "These signs shall follow them that believe." His disciples were believers in him already, but the signs were not only to follow them, but those who should believe, and we read that the "Lord confirmed the word with signs following." We claim that our Elders are sent forth in the same way, and if the same power does not attend their ministry, it is not because the gospel is changed, but through a want of faith or a want of faithfulness upon the part of those who hear or those who preach. God is not pleased when the honor and glory are not given to him, neither is it pleasing in his sight when we think it was because of some good thing in us, that the blessing has come upon us; but surely it is not displeasing when we tell what the Lord has done for us, that his name may have honor, glory and praise, forever and forever. This is not the last or the greatest of the testimonies we propose to give in this column. These things have not been done in a corner, neither are they given to mislead any one, but that the gospel of Christ may be preached by these living witnesses, that the world may know that as it came to them of old, so in these last days has it come to us, "Not in word only, but also in power, and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance." To the watchmen on the outposts of Zion, the daughters of Zion wish from time to time not only to send words of greeting, but of cheer. Storms purify the air, and through the clearer atmosphere we are enabled to see more clearly—to walk in the light, even as he is in the light. The church has long lain under condemnation, because she has failed to obey the command of God, in regard to remembering her former covenant, even the "Book of Mormon;" but now as a result of late attacks upon the books of the church, the young Saints of Lamoni have organized themselves into a society for the express purpose of studying the church books, the Book of Mormon coming first in order. We sincerely trust their example will be followed by every branch in the church, and should any desire further information in regard to their plan of working let them address the secretary, sister Eliza France, enclosing a stamp, and they will be promptly answered. Nor is this all, the Lord is moving upon the hearts of many to "come up to his help against the mighty," by desiring much more earnestly to wear the pure white robes of righteousness, and to adorn themselves with a meek and quiet spirit, rather than by the putting on of costly apparel or ornaments of gold. The cause of truth is moving on, the victory is coming, and soon will come up from far and near the glad shout of "Harvest home." "The Lord is extending, the Saints under standing."

As an answer to the proposition of creating a "Home Column Missionary Fund," we quote below:

"Sister Frances:—I have just read your proposal to the sisters in the last Home Column, and was so taken with it that I determined to respond now, though it will be some time to my next birthday, so long indeed that it would place me quite at the bottom of the list; so I thought I would begin with the one last past. I could not make out the exact number of pennies and so concluded it had better be more than less and what is over can be carried forward at some future time when I may not have enough, so I enclose fifty cents, wishing only that it were as many dollars.
ELEANOR."

And thus Sr. Eleanor's name becomes the first on the list, which we have just faith enough to believe will number its thousands before the cycle of time shall roll round to the period marking a second contribution as being due from her, Sisters, we pray God while we write that every one of you will rally to the standard of the gospel banner. Let us be ready by our next spring Conference to say to the Bishop, "We have means enough in the Home Column treasury to support at least one elder in the field. Let us each one carefully and prayerfully consider what sacrifice of self we can make, in order that our gifts may have the value in the sight of the Lord, possessed by the gifts of those dear ones who have been sending in their hard earned pennies to the support of Zion's Hope. Some time since we received two contributions from two sisters, requesting us to use it as we thought best. They had already contributed to the "Hope Fund," and we laid it aside waiting a good cause in which to expend it. When they see their names and the amount, they will know how their contribution has been used. We do not by any means intend to say that their age corresponds to the amount of their contribution.

ARE you going to make any member of your family a Christmas or New Year's present? If so, send to the "Home Column" for a companion picture to the "Three Witnesses." Bro. Chase the artist who executed the former has now an excellent likeness of brethren Joseph and Alexander Smith, with Bro. W. W. Blair,—all three on one plate the same size as the Witnesses, and which we are offering for the same price. As the profits of the first are to go to the "Hope Fund," the profits of these will go to the "Home Column Missionary Fund." Send in your orders, and thus help the cause while spending your Christmas money.

ST. THOMAS, NOV. 10th.

Dear Sister Frances: Having seen Bro. R. C. Evans, of London, and hearing that you wish me to write to you to tell you of God's love and goodness to me. I scarcely know how or where to begin, for when I think about it I am lost in wonder, love and praise. Tongue or pen fails to convey the sentiments of my heart. What it is to those who find, no tongue or pen can show; the love of Jesus, what it is, none but his loved ones know. I began to serve God with all my heart (or was converted) April 22d, 1878, in the United Brethren church, and continued in that church until August, 1881. In July of that year two Utah elders came to the part of England where I lived, to preach. I had heard so much about them (having lived with my grandmother who was a Latter Day Saint in the early days of the church, but died when I was nine years of age), that I went to hear them. Now you know that they preach so like the Reorganized Church that they will almost deceive the very elect, and I must say that the preaching was to me what bread is to the hungry. I heard them speak twice on the first principles of the gospel, and was baptized. Then my troubles commenced. My brothers and sisters and friends turned against me, and the church I had been a member of called a meeting to turn me and another dear old sister out of the church; and to expose us all they could, they got all the books they could find against the Mormons and gave me to read. I am sorry to say that much which I did read is too true. You must please understand that I had never heard there was any such church as the Reorganized Church, nor did I ever hear it until the early part of this last summer. I wanted to serve my God faithfully, and I made up my mind that I could and would suffer anything if I only had the assurance that they were God's people; so I prayed God to let me know in some way if they were his people or not, and in the night I dreamed that I heard a voice say: "They are wrong; have nothing to do with them." So in the morning I promised the Lord that I would never go near them again till he should show me it was right for me to go; so I never saw or heard them after I was baptized, only in my own house; and in the spring of 1882 we left England and came to Canada.

When I look back at all the circumstances, I can plainly see that my Father's guiding hand has brought me and my husband here, to hear and obey the gospel in its fullness. Oh, my heart overflows with gratitude to him for all his goodness and mercy to me.

I had lived in St. Thomas about one year when to my surprise I heard the Saints holding a meeting on the street. I spoke to some of them, and some told me their names and where they lived; but being a stranger, I soon forgot the names of the streets. Of course, thinking they were the same I had promised the Lord not to go near again, I was half anxious and half afraid to try to find them. The next winter I fell down and broke my limb, and the cords of my instep. My toes caught the edge of the step, so that I fell upon my head and hurt myself so badly that it was a year and four months before I could walk up town, a distance of half a mile. During the time I was confined to the house I was very anxious that some of the Saints would come and try to find me out. I used to look and look for some one to come, but no one ever did. Last Christmas I moved into town to live, then I found out where they held their meetings and I went. Once we had a talk about the two churches, and they explained to me the difference. Of course I liked the reorganized the best. There was no polygamy behind in it, and that doctrine I never had nor ever could believe; but I thought the Saints looked down upon me because I had belonged to the Utah Church, so that I never went again.

There was one dear sister that spoke kindly to me, and when I met her on the street, some two months after, I recognized the same kind voice, but had forgotten the face. I would like to say to all my brothers and sisters, "Be kind to strangers, for you know not what good you may do.

One day last July I was away from home, and when I returned I found on my table a notice that Elder R. C. Evans was going to preach three or four times that week. I went every time to hear him, and eventually was re-baptized; but he had hard work to get me to see the necessity of being re-baptized. I could not see why once would not do, so long as I was honest about it; however, I was baptized on the 18th of August, 1886. I was so lame I could scarcely walk to the river, and to make it still worse there was a very steep bank to go down. I thought I never could get down, as it hurt me fearfully to step downhill. I was from a quarter to half an hour going down, but reached the water at last. I was baptized, and the second or third step I took after being buried in baptism, I found my foot was all right. I could not believe it for a minute; but oh, my dear sister, when I realized that my foot was healed, I was nearly beside myself with joy and gratitude. There was quite a number there, and I wanted all the world to be there, that I could tell them what God had done for me. When I went into the water my foot was so bad that if I stepped upon anything as small as a marble, I would fall down if I did not save myself by holding on to something for support; now I am nearly as well as I ever was in my life. Praise and glory to God! May he keep me faithful to this grand and glorious work which I know to be God's restored gospel to fallen mankind! May I live to his honor and glory, and do all I can to extend his kingdom; and at last may I meet all my brethren and sisters in the celestial kingdom, is the earnest prayer of your sister in the everlasting gospel,

MILLBROUGH M. BROOKS.

P.S.—My husband was baptized, with two others, the 8th of this month, by Bro. R. C. Evans. Four months ago he would not let me be baptized. Now he himself has been.

Dear Sister Frances:—In the last Herald you said that you would very much like to hear some good news from the Reunion. What more can we say than our beloved president has said, that "Peace, an abundance of peace was with this encampment of modern Israel." And dear sister Frances, it was that kind of peace that the Savior has promised to his faithful followers, that the world can neither give nor take away; this was ours to enjoy during the Reunion, and I think that many of us have returned to our homes strengthened for the conflict, with renewed determinations to hold on to the end. The preaching was excellent, the testimonies were grand to hear. The old time Saints related how the Lord had blessed and cared for them during the dark days which the church has gone through. To hear the prophecies uttered and fulfilled before our eyes was joy indeed, not to mention meeting with old friends, and relating our joys and our sorrows. I will speak for myself, it seemed to me as if my happiness was complete, and while I was there I just wished that every one that had taken upon them the name of Christ was there to partake of the great spiritual feast that we were enjoying, while tears of joy flowed from our eyes and our hearts overflowed with thanksgiving to God.

From your sister in hope,

ELIZABETH THOMAS.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

SARAH A. ROSE:—I must say before I close that what I read from all parts of the earth, causes me to see by the eye of faith what glorious things are coming for the true people of God. Severe and long has been the battle with trials and darkness which the valiant burden bearers have been waging. Praise God, light is breaking, truth is triumphing and glorious victories are approaching. I feel, and seem to see, the work of Satan torn down, while the beautiful banners of King Emanuel float calmly in the breeze of heaven; and I seem to hear the armies of Israel singing songs of victory and praise unto the Lord, and the notes are joyous as though no more apprehension or sorrow will come to the singers. I am all alone in my room, and I feel the Spirit so while writing this that I seem to be under the Spirit of revelation or vision. Oh, I wish I could be with the Saints. I ask myself the question, "If I must live in the flesh, why can't I be with God's people and have part in helping work for the cause of truth? Oh, I love the cause and the true Saints, and pity all who fight against it.

Observing minds may see if they will, something to please and encourage them as Saints; and it is this, that the watchmen upon the walls of Zion are, as the years roll by, growing wiser, more prayerful and more careful over themselves. Some indeed there are who seem to strive to pattern their lives after that of the blessed Master, so much so that the Spirit seems to encircle them about, and you can feel the good influence as soon as you come into their presence. Would that all the Elders in Zion were more like him whom they preach—even Christ and him crucified.

A SISTER.

DORCHESTER, Neb., Nov. 7th.

Dear Herald:—I have long had a desire to write you a letter, but a feeling of inability has kept me from doing so. Yet I feel a responsibility as I am growing old, (will be seventy-four next March) and may not be with the Saints many years more to bear my testimony to the truth of the restored gospel. I never had a doubt of its truth, nor of the church organized by Joseph Smith the Seer being the true church of God.

I obeyed the gospel in 1838, was baptized by Elder Benjamin L. Clapp, father of Joseph C. Clapp, an Elder in the Reorganized Church. My husband, Elder John Henderson, was the first one who obeyed the gospel in Washington county, Missouri, about three weeks before myself. He was ordained an Elder about thirty days afterward and remained faithful through all the trials, persecutions, apostasy of many, and final disorganization of the church, until the time of his death which occurred October 4th, 1861. We passed through the Missouri war where we lost all we had, even a part of our bedding, and had to leave in snow knee deep, at which time Joseph and Hyrum Smith were taken to Richmond jail. I was acquainted with all the Smith family from the time we went to Far West. The next Spring we went to Nauvoo. (Commerce it was then called). Joseph and Hyrum were at length released from jail and came there too. Their families including their parents were already there. The corner stone of the Temple was laid the same Spring. While in Nauvoo we owned two acre lots, with a good brick house on each; they were about a half mile north of the Temple.

We were a happy and prosperous people, taught by our prophet to obey God and the laws of the land. But our prophet and patriarch were again taken from us and murdered by the ruthless mob, in Carthage jail. Trials and persecutions came. Many followed Brigham Young to Utah. The rest of us were scattered, and went from place to place as sheep without a shepherd until the rightful heir was called of God to take charge of the flock over which his father before his death had ordained him. I have a few testimonies to give in regard to the gift of healing enjoyed by Joseph Smith, whom many call impostor, deceiver, etc. Once while living in Nauvoo, I was very sick and sent for the Elders many times, but failed to be healed. Finally I asked my husband to go after Joseph Smith. He went, but there were so many sick at his house, (which was no uncommon thing as it often resembled a hospital, so many sick came there), he could not leave. So he gave my husband a handkerchief to tie around my head, saying if I did so I would recover. I did as instructed and recovered almost instantly. My husband, children, and myself have been healed many times by the power of God through the administration of the Elders, and the prayer of faith. I have raised six children, and they are all with me in the Reorganized Church but two, and I have the promise they too will come in.

Ever praying for the welfare of Zion I remain your sister in Christ, BETSEY JANE HENDERSON.

BENNETT, Iowa, Oct. 31st.

Dear Herald:—While reading your pages this beautiful Sabbath morn my thoughts drifted back two weeks, when we had the privilege, with others, of hearing the gospel declared by Bro. J. S. Roth, and again in the evening by Bro. W. T. Bozarth. Perhaps we who are isolated can appreciate "gospel feasts" more than those who may assemble each holy day and hear the word spoken by those who feel the spirit of the ministry. Elders Roth and Bozarth have done a good work, inspiring the Saints to live more faithful, prayerful, doing all they could to cast out the wrong and uphold the right for which they will receive their reward. According to previous appointment they came to Bennett, as the people seemed much interested and wanted to hear them again. My husband asked for the church at Bennett, the only one in town, and the trustees gave permission, but ere the time arrived a note was sent us asking us not to occupy it, as some of the members would leave the church society if we did. Of course we did not intrude. It was also thrown in our teeth that we were not orthodox, and was just the same as the Utah Mormons, (how enlightened some people are). At first we were almost discouraged, and it was almost like casting pearls before swine, yet husband did not propose to be run off in such a way; so he hired the Bennett Hall for $1 per night.

The first meeting the audience was small but increased each succeeding evening until the hall was filled. Some remarked at the close of the last sermon; "What a pity the preachers could not stay a week or two longer, as the people are just getting interested and are not afraid to come out." One Methodist lady said it was the best preaching she ever heard and she believed they were good men and would just as soon have them at her house as any other preacher; and would not be ashamed to ask them home with her, and told some they missed more Bible sermons than they ever heard. One gentleman in Bennett who thought we had been misused asked the privilege of passing the hat at the close of the services Sunday evening, saying "There are some people here in Bennett that I would just like to hold the hat right under their nose for treating you so mean." Accordingly the hats went round and much to our surprise $3.85 were paid in; so you see we did not have to pay a very large bill ourselves; and if we had, we would have been thrice repaid by the good preaching and pleasant time we enjoyed while the Elders were here. We sincerely hope this will not be their last visit to Bennett. Although treated so rudely they left many friends who would like to hear them again. May the Good Spirit ever be their guide that they may ever know they are accepted in the sight of their Master. And we do sincerely hope if there are some that could be made to see the "better way" that there will be some one directed this way. Perhaps we are too selfish yet we would like to see some of our neighbors and friends embrace the truth. Ever praying for the good of the work, I ask an interest in your petitions at the throne of mercy.

Editors Herald:—Our branch here, as well as every other place I have visited, are sadly in need of hymn books. I often see a large congregation arise to sing a hymn designated by the minister, and it may be not more than a half dozen hymn books are in the congregation. You may ask why this great lack of books. The answer is, "The Church is going to publish soon a hymnal or tune book, and we are all waiting for them, that we may sing the songs of Zion in harmony." If the Church is not able now to issue a large hymn and tune book, why not issue one hundred to one hundred and fifty pieces suited to those hymns most familiar and call it No. 1? and when they get able issue No. 2, and so on, and have them bound in one volume, the same as the "Gospel Hymns? One more suggestion and I close. Why not increase the pledges in the Hope, one more at least, something like this: We whose names appear in this column do solemnly pledge ourselves that we will from henceforth no more dance or tolerate dancing, nor play cards in any form. Let a list of all the names signing any or all of these pledges be kept in the office, and as often as wisdom may dictate be published, and let those lists be opened to the old Hopes as well as the young. If a person can control himself in one of these reforms let them have the credit; if in two, give them the credit; if all, let the credits so signify. Yours in bonds,

R. M. DUNGAN.

Editors Herald:—It is with great pleasure I read your letters and articles, especially the Australian letters. We feel great interest in the Australian Mission, as it is only seven months since we left the shores of sunny, New South Wales. Some of our brethren there are anticipating coming to America. If they would like to learn a little by our experience, we would advise them to stay where they are, where wages are higher, with less hours to work, and the climate superior. The Holy Spirit is as powerful at the antipodes as in America. With joy I read how the Comforter is working in conjunction with Brother Burton, and I trust that himself and family will make up their minds to stay there a few years, and be the means in the hands of God to bring many more into the fold. My heart longs to see them again. I often think of the Saints at Wallsend and Hamilton; how earnest they are in their endeavors to bring sinners unto repentance. It seems a pity that there are not more such men as Brother Burton in such a large field as the Australian Mission. My wife and I tender our love and best wishes to all the Australian Saints, trusting we shall meet them again, and if not in this world, then on the resurrection morn, and together to meet our Savior in the clouds and reign with him a thousand years.

Yours in faith,

JOHN MORRIS.

Dear brothers and sisters in Christ:—I would not call you such if I did not know you are, for Christ is with his people. While I was a Methodist I tried to be a good one, but always doubted my religion. I always felt afraid I would be lost. The last time I bore my testimony with the Methodists I will never forget. It pained me to speak in class with them. I told them I was a Christian hunter, hunting for Jesus, and that I intended to hunt until I found him. I was ashamed after I sat down and thought on what I had said. In about two years after that brother D. L. Shinn from Clarksburg came here to preach. Myself and husband went to hear him, and while he was preaching I felt assured I had found Jesus; and I shook from head to foot, and I stepped back so they could not see me shaking. We invited him home with us.

We and a son and two daughters belong to the church now, and we hope and pray that we may be a united family in the kingdom of our God. That is what we are striving for. Brother L. R. Devore was here the first of September, preached several times at our house, some came who never attended before. He went about ten miles from here and preached. Some are believing and will obey soon we think. Mr. Taylor, the one that debated with brother Shinn, has left all the churches and is now going to start one of his own. He calls it the Union Church of Christ.

Editors Herald:—Bro. H. C. Bronson has been for some time holding a protracted meeting at the German Church six miles north of town. He is having crowded houses, and prospects are good for an ingathering. Bro. W. T. Bozarth and Will Kelley are holding forth North Cameron with flattering prospects. The field generally hears the Macedonian cry; those who can spare their time have no need to be idle. I have but little time save the Sabbath to spend for the cause. I try to use that time to the best advantage. I praise my heavenly father for his blessings, both to myself and others. Zion's sons and daughters should awake to the magnitude of their responsibility and put on the beautiful garments, study the life and character of Christ, who came not to judge, but to save. On the 7th we visited St. Joseph to fill appointments caused by absence of Bro. H. C. Bronson, and was greatly pleased to find an efficient substitute in the person of Bro. W. W. Blair, who spoke forenoon and evening to good sized audiences. In the evening he handled ably the agitated question of rewards and punishments.

Our conference convenes here on December 11th, and we would urge every branch to report by delegate or letter. Come prepared to hold a good spiritual conference. May the eyes and nays be called for after the chair declares how the vote by acclamation went! We except to hold a protracted effort here some time in December. We have engaged the help of a "good Elder" and expect good to be the result.

Your brother worker for truth,

J. M. TERRY.

"ON THE WING."

Brother Joseph:—I drop a line to say that I am well and happy; and as busy as a nailer. Attended the conference at Coldwater, Michigan, Oct. 16-18; which was a decided success. I remained there a short time assisting Bro. Leanord Scott in holding meetings at different points. While there I baptized two. Came back to Indiana on the 6th inst., (my birth day), and left Bro. Leanord to continue the work for a time at Coldwater. There is quite an interest awakened both there and here; also at Antwerp, Ohio, where I labored in September. The work is spreading and the field widening as is evidenced by the fact that I am being beset with invitations to go here and there to four or five points in Indiana, four points in Ohio, besides the pressing calls to various points in Michigan. I am thankful that I am blessed with health and strength of body and pure desires and aid of the Spirit to perform my duties. This glorious work never appeared brighter, nor was clearer to me than now. I love this mission, the country and the people. My health is excellent." I have added fourteen pounds to my weight since I left Lamoni. I am to commence a series of meetings to-night at a point eight miles south-east of Fremont. I spoke there four times in September with good effect. As soon as practicable shall return to Ohio where I expect to see some good results from former labor, as I have encouraging reports from there. I am having a little tilt through the Coldwater Republican, with our old friend, L. D. Hickey. I had the last lick so far; suppose I let him down too hard as he seems to have subsided. We shall see. One thing is certain, truth is much more easily defended than error.

Ora pro nobis in bonds,

B. V. SPRINGER.

NORTH PLATTE, Neb., Nov. 6th.

Bro. Joseph:—We desire that you and our beloved band of Saints should know that you have some addition to the family away out here in western Nebraska. Our prayer has been heard and answered,—for one of the noble sons of God has visited us; and this has been our greatest desire that the people might hear the gospel preached in this place. Bro. R. C. Elvin came on the ninth of October and staid until the morning of November the third. The Baptist Church was secured for services and our brother preached each evening during his stay here, except two Sundays, the church being occupied by the Lutherans we had services at our home.

Four obeyed the gospel and others are near. One child was blessed, and two of the afflicted were administered to with immediate relief. My husband was ordained a priest. We are now in a position to hold meetings which we will do. The foundation is laid for a branch here and we believe it will be completed; but it requires work and faith. There are six of us altogether, two men and four women. We are well pleased to know that they all desire to be faithful workers for Christ. As we are situated on the highway between the church in the east and the west, we request the elders to stop and visit this city if passing this way; they will find a home with us. We desire all the attention we can get from our brethren. Bro. R. C. Elvin is the first to present the gospel here that we know of, and it was well done. We were made to rejoice because the Spirit of the Master was a witness.

Your sister in Christ,

MRS. L. M. RICHARDS.

SINKING SPRING, Ohio, Nov. 8th.

Dear Herald:—At the request of Bro. E. L. Kelley I write you. I was brought up by religious parents, in Methodist faith; but I could not reconcile my mind to the doctrine of the Methodist church, for it was not in harmony with the word of God as found in the Bible. After I became old enough to think for myself I cast my lot with the Disciples, because they came nearest the gospel of Christ. I was ordained a minister in that church. I began to preach of the Spirit of Christ working on the hearts of men. My church began to "wax gross and kick." They said that was all right in the primitive church, but that kind of doctrine would not do now, for miracles were past. I contended for the truth, though I knew nothing about this great latter day work. Last spring it pleased the Father of spirits to bring me to the full light of the gospel of his dear Son. He put it into the heart of one of my friends to hand me the discussion between Bro. E. L. Kelley and Clark Braden, thinking, I suppose, to get all "Mormon doctrine" out of me. I was confirmed more in the light of the truth. The farther I read the work and looked at the fair reasoning of Bro. Kelley, and compared it with the truth, the brighter it shone. While on the other side, Clark Braden's tales and traducing stories about the Spaulding Manuscript Found did not show one proof. So I went to the Ohio conference at Vail's Mills, in Vinton county, and obeyed my Master, and he gives me little by little, precept upon precept; a little here and a little there.

Yours in Christ,

THEODORE CLUFF.

WHELOCK, Texas, Nov. 2d.

Bro. Smith and Blair: I was born May 7th, 1846, in Grundy county, Tennessee, and was reared principally in Warren and Grundy counties of said state, in rather the middle class society, under unfavorable circumstances as to education. All the education I received was in a country free school, together with what I learned at home. I commenced trying to serve God when a little boy taking the New Testament as a rule of my faith and practice, together with the guidance of the Spirit. I joined the Baptist church when I was about twenty-three years old; and soon after, I commenced to preach, and continued to in said church until last April. I had the care of three and four churches nearly ever since I commenced to preach; have baptized and married a good number both in Tennessee and Texas.

I came here in the year 1881. On the fourth Saturday and Sunday in last January I heard for the first time a Latter Day Saint preacher, by the name of Roberts, which caused me to examine the Bible, especially upon the points that he presented, which was new to me, yet old as to the Bible. Well, I went to hold a protracted meeting with the Baptists, on Monday after, in the community where the Latter Day Saints had lately held a branch conference; but after arriving in the community I found that the preachers were still in the community, and were going to continue to preach to the people for some days; so I went to hear what they did have to preach, so I would know for myself. Bro. Heman C. Smith was the speaker. He talked very fluently, and to the point and purpose I thought.

This increased my desire to investigate the doctrine they presented; so I procured a Book of Mormon the next day after hearing Bro. Smith, and as soon as I commenced reading it the Spirit of the Lord revealed to me that the book was true. I went to hear Bro. Smith again next night, and then started home next morning. After traveling on foot two miles, the good Lord revealed to me by his Spirit that the doctrine of the true Latter Day Saints was true; however, I recast the whole matter in the way of examination, and still stayed with the Baptists for about three months from that date, having been with them for about twenty years and all my people nearly were Baptists, and most of my intimate friends were Baptists, and I had the care of four large churches at that time; and so I thought I would just stay in the Baptist Church, and preach the Bible as I then understood it, and so tried the experiment for about three months, but found that would not do. I determined to join the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints; was baptized on the 18th of April, 1886, by S. Hay, confirmed by Bro. George S. Hyde and ordained an elder soon after by Bro. I. N. Roberts, and today am sitting in my humble cottage rejoicing and thanking God that it has been my lot to hear and obey the gospel in its fulness. I have not preached much yet in this church, but hope the way will be opened soon so that I can tell the good news to a great many of my fellow creatures. Brethren pray for me. God bless you all.

I am your brother in Christ,

E. W. NUNNLEY.

THE ADDED LAW.

"WHEREFORE then serveth the law? It was added because of transgressions, till the seed should come to whom the promise was made."—Gal. 3: 19.

Having for fourteen years past had occasion to give much thought to the above matter, and having had much experience in debating with those who claim that the added law was not God's law, but Moses' law, I will give some of the things I have learned, for the benefit of others. It is claimed that the law that was added was the ceremonial law, that of sacrifices, &c., that it was imposed on Israel until Christ, because of their transgression of the decalogue.

Now Paul says this "added" law was given four hundred and thirty years after Abraham. But the law of sacrifices was given as far back as Abel, and was observed by Noah, Abraham and all God's people of those times. Circumcision was also given to Abraham. Indeed, all the law of types and shadows, "statutes, judgments and laws," were given "in Mount Sinai by the hand of Moses," (Lev. 27: 46), before there was any transgression of the decalogue. So that theory is untrue.

Again, Moses says (Deut. 5: 22) that after God had spoken to them the ten commandments "with a great voice; he added no more." They were a law of themselves, a fundamental or constitutional law to Israel, and what was given after were called "statutes and judgments." They are given from Exodus 20: 23, and hence are no added law, for he "added no more" commandments, or law. Moses says after the ten, and as there was an added law, or commandments, because of transgression of law previously given, and as God plead with them thirty days before he had given the decalogue to keep his commandments, (Ex. 15: 26), the decalogue must have been that law which was "added" to the law existing before that spoken from Sinai. It must have been added to that pre-existent law as "he added no more," law to the statutes and judgments being given after. This should satisfy any reasonable mind; but if we can show that they transgressed that pre-existent law, then the last doubt should be removed. The gospel was that law; it was preached to Abraham. Gal. 3: 8. It was believed by Moses; loved above all else. (Heb. 11: 23-27). It was preached to Israel in the wilderness, but did not profit them because of unbelief and transgression. (Heb. 4: 1-4). Moses evidently was the preacher; (Ex. 14: 31), And the people feared the Lord and believed the Lord and his servant Moses." "And were all baptized unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea, and did all eat the same spiritual meat; and did all drink the same spiritual drink: for they drank of that spiritual rock that followed them, and that rock was Christ."—2 Cor. 10: 1-4. This was in the Church of Christ "in the wilderness." (Acts 7: 38). We had just as well say that the church described in 1 Cor. 12, needed another law, as to say those Israelites did before they transgressed the gospel law. Then why were the ten commandments given? Because "with many of them God was not well pleased."—2 Cor. 10: 5. They ceased to believe. Heb. 4: 3. Of that fearful transgression and apostasy we have a brief account in Exodus 16: 1-10. After being just redeemed from Egypt; passing the sea; their enemies overthrown; Marah's bitter waters made sweet; Christ following them as a rock; the Holy Spirit as a cloud by day, and a pillar of fire by night; when tried with a little hunger to prove them they murmured against God. And most of them were to fall because of this murmuring; (Num. 14: 29); accusing him of bringing them out of Egypt to kill them all in the wilderness with hunger, and no doubt would have killed Moses and returned into Egypt. How unlike the faith of Abraham who would have slain his only son, trusting in God to raise him up again. They utterly rejected the gospel law, losing the Spirit, when God gave them a law of carnal commandments adapted to their carnal natures, in addition or instead of the one they had so utterly transgressed, instead of destroy-ng them all as he afterwards thought to do, only for the intercession of Moses. Deut. 9: 13, 14. Some were contending with Paul that the promise of God to Abraham was to come to them by keeping that law, instead of "the law of faith" preached to Abraham. This doctrine was one of Satan's great weapons to overthrow the truth. So zealous of the law were the Jewish converts, that when the Gentiles turned to God, they without any authority went to Antioch, teaching that it was "needful to circumcise them and command them to keep the law of Moses."—Acts 15: 6. That this was not the sacrificial law is evident, for they were believers in Christ, accepted him as the great sacrifice, and of baptism for remission of sins. Acts 2: 38. But when Paul, who had been "taught according to the perfect manner of the law of the fathers, (Acts 22: 3), opposed them, and they took the matter to Jerusalem before the Apostles and Elders, when, after much disputing, Peter told how God had blessed the Gentiles (who were without the law, Rom. 2: 14) that obeyed the gospel with the Spirit, saying, "Now therefore why tempt ye God to put a yoke upon the neck of the disciples which neither our fathers, nor we were able to bear." Acts 15: 10. Paul and Barnabas testified also to the same. Now who will be so rash as to say these Gentile converts had ever been taught any of the Israelites' national law? For Paul tells them that he was determined to know nothing amongst them but Jesus Christ and him crucified. Yet the apostles decision was that, "We trouble not them which from among the Gentiles are turned to God," only to keep from pollutions, fornication, idols, things strangled and from blood. Why! are they to have no chance to hear about the law? Yes; but the apostles and elders were only commanded to teach them Christ's commandments. Hear the reason: "For Moses of old time hath in every city them that preach, him being read in the synagogues every Sabbath day."—v. 21. Of course, the Gentile disciples, if they wished, could go and hear him preached; but Christ's ministers were not to preach him. In Acts 13: 14, 15, we read what this old time preaching was in this same city where this trouble began; it was "the law and the prophets," to teach which the apostles gave no such command."—Acts 15: 24. Indeed, it was the great cause of Paul's persecution, for out amongst the Gentiles, as at Antioch, he taught to forsake Moses and the customs.

After being at Troas seven days amongst the Saints, he no doubt appointed a first-day meeting, because they were laboring until that time; preaching to them on the first day, instead of the seventh according to Moses, departing before day on "the morrow"—second day—and when he had reached Jerusalem and reported these things there was great joy amongst the apostles. But they said, "Thou seest how many thousands of Jews believe, and they are all zealous of the law; and they are informed of thee that thou teachest all the Jews which are amongst the Gentiles to forsake Moses, neither to walk after the customs."—Acts 21: 20, 21. What were "the customs?" Keeping Sabbath was one of the strictest. Why not teach the Gentile converts to forsake Moses neither walk after the customs? Because they had never done it. "What is it therefore? for the multitude (of believes) must needs come together, for they will hear that thou hast come."—v. 22. And means were devised to try and appease their wrath; but soon the Jews laid hands upon him, from which time on he was a prisoner.

All his letters are against that "added" law. He says (Gal. 3: 21) it could not give life. It was as "a schoolmaster" until Christ. Then Christ was their instructor, and by baptism into Christ they became "Abraham's seed and heirs according to the promise," by obeying the new schoolmaster without observing that "added" law. That the old master—or law—taught observance of days is evident from Gal. 4: 10. That "added" law, and Christ's law, are called two covenants, or codes of law, given as the will of God. (v. 21–31), one from Sinai, the other from heaven; the first be "cast out" when the second came. It seems that, if nothing more had been written upon this subject, this should satisfy every one in regard to what the added law was. But most of Paul's writings teach the same, though differently illustrated. After telling the Roman saints, (Rom. 2: 17–24), that, although Jews, they should not boast of the law, the law by which was the "knowledge of sin," (3: 20: and all admit that was the decalogue), for "now the righteousness of God without the law is manifested," (made known). All that was good in the law was taught by Christ, "being witnessed by the law and the prophets." Hence the law and the prophets were the witness, or "schoolmaster until Christ," telling what sin was. But now sin is not made known by that law, "but by the law of faith."—v. 27. "Therefore we conclude that a man is justified by (the law of) faith alone, without the deeds of the law."—v. 28. The law of faith, (or of Christ), is all sufficient to justify men now, without that "added" law. "Do we then make void the law through faith? God forbid; yea, we establish the law."—v. 31. Here, says an added law keeping friend, is evidence, positive, that Paul taught the perpetuity of that law; and yet he admits that it is the same law as was referred to in the entire chapter. When the righteousness of God, or all that God required a man to do to be righteous, was made known without that law, made known by "the law of faith" a man was justified by faith alone "without the deeds of the law," or without doing what was taught in that law. How then did we establish (make effective) the law through faith? Evidently as a true and effective witness of God's righteousness "without the law, it having accomplished its purpose as "a school-master" until Christ, when we could be "justified by faith" (the law of faith or of Christ), alone without the deeds of the (that) law, establishing its efficacy as a teacher to preserve sufficient morality amongst the Israelites that some of them should accept of Christ. This is evident from the further reading of the same letter. In 6: 14, he declares that "We are not under the law, but under grace" [or law of grace]. And in Rom. 7: 1–6, he makes it so plain "that the wayfaring man, though a fool, need not err therein," by comparing the Jews as a wife under the law of Moses the first husband to the church (they were Moses' disciples. John 9: 28), as a wife under the law of Christ the second husband. Christ's disciples were called his bride or wife. As our friends deny that Moses was that first husband we refer them to Heb. 3: 2–5, which settles that matter. Moses "as a servant was faithful in all his house" (Israel). But Christ, as a son over his own house, (the Church), "whose house are we," called his bride, wife, &c. So Israel was Moses' wife in the same sense. He tells them that that first husband was dead; his law was dead, they were free from that law as a woman was free from the law of her husband when he was dead, and then says, "That ye should be married to another, even to him who is raised from the dead, and bring forth fruits unto God." "But now we are delivered from the law, that (husband) being dead wherein we were held" or under whose law we once were, and are under the law of the second husband (Christ) who taught all that was required by him of that first husband's law, all that was good, and a great deal that was far better. In verse 7, he says that law that they were as free from as a woman from her husband when he was dead, said, "Thou shalt not covet," said also, "Keep the seventh day." But as Brigham Young taught that the wife was not freed from her husband by death, but belongs to him in the next world, so our seventh day friends in their blind zeal to perpetuate Moses' law, carry the Sabbath over into the new earth, (Isaiah 56: 23), new moons also. But Rev. 21: 23–25, inform us that there will be no moon there, neither night, but one eternal day. So it must be outside the city, where dogs, sorcerers, murderers, and others dwell.

That this law which the Saints were free from included the seventh day law, is evident from Rom. 13: 9, for after quoting several of the ten commandments that Moses had taught in his law Paul says: "And if there be any other commandment it is briefly comprehended in this saying, namely, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." This is evidence positive, that Christ had taught no law of the Sabbath, for there was no love to their neighbor in that, but to the contrary as is evident in 14: 4.—"Who art thou that judgeth another man's servant? (Christ's servants about keeping a day); to his own master he standeth or falleth." "One man esteemeth one day above another; another esteemeth every day alike. Let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind," (v. 5); a stinging rebuke to those who taught to keep the seventh day better than another. The same is taught in Col. 2: 16, where after saying that Christ had nailed the hand writing of ordinances, rules or commands to his cross, he says: "Let no man therefore judge you in meat, or in drink, or in respect of a holy day, or of the new moon, or of the Sabbath days, which are a shadow of things to come." Mark the distinction between "a holy day," and "the Sabbath days." Seven annual Sabbaths are described in Lev. 23, besides the Sabbaths of the Lord (v. 38) or holy day. Paul here forbids teaching any of them. To turn the ears from Paul's illustration of husband and wife in Romans chapter seven we are told that in the same chapter he calls the law "holy" and "spiritual," and that of course we must keep it. If he had said so, it certainly would not be to deny all he had taught before and after. But superior translations say it was the law of Christ that was holy, etc. See Inspired Translation. This confirms chapter 8:2. "There is therefore now no condemnation to them who are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, (that carnal law), but after the Spirit. For the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death." Just what he had been teaching in all his letter. In chapter 3:20, he had said, "by the law is the knowledge of sin." Hence he calls it "the law of sin." Connect this with 2 Cor. 3:7, where he calls it death, or the law of death, "written and engraven in stones," the ministration of which caused Moses' face to shine with glory. And in verse eleven he speaks of it being "done away" and a more glorious law remaining; says in verse thirteen, "is abolished." To evade the force of this crushing argument, we are told it was the ministration that was done away—not the law. Very good; if then it is the ministration, or authority to teach that law, then no such command being given by Christ or his apostles, (See Acts, 15:24), if that was done away in Christ, or abolished, please tell us by what authority you now teach it? A large body of Adventists have turned away from Mrs. E. White, as a prophetess, forming another church, calling it the Church of God, denying any later revelations than the Bible, and that surely condemns both seventh day churches. Of what force is a law after its ministration (which you admit) is done away? To evade the force of this idea, some say it was only the glory of Moses face that was to be done away. But Paul says: "If the ministration of death was glorious, how shall not the ministration of the Spirit be rather glorious. For if that which is done away was glorious, much more that which remaineth is glorious." This needs no comment.

Speaking of the glory on Moses' face being made glorious, reminds us of the little boy making water wet. All this confirms the fact, that this law of death, of sin, "of condemnation, written and engraven in stones," was that which was that "added because of transgression," for it was abolished when Christ gave the more glorious ministration of the Spirit written upon the heart.—verse three. We are told that there were two laws given at Sinai, God's law and Moses' law. I have already shown that there was a constitutional law, and after that statutes and judgments given, all called God's law and Moses' law, interchangeably. Christ said to the Jews, "God commanded, saying, honor thy father and thy mother, and he that curseth father or mother, let him die the death."—Matt. 15:4, quoting from the judgments, Ex. 21:17 as well as the decalogue. Both are God's law. Again "Moses said," and yet the same laws are quoted; Mark 7:12. all one law—Moses' law.

"Did not Moses give you the law; and yet none of you keepeth the law."—John 7:19. "For the law was given by Moses, but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ."—John 1:17. "He that despised Moses' law died without mercy under two or three witnesses."—Heb. 10:28. In Numbers 15:30, 31, we are told that the transgressor should "Be cut off from among his people. Because he hath despised the word of the Lord"—Moses law—just what Paul referred to above, and then follows the account of a man that despised that law by gathering sticks on the Sabbath day; and he was cut off, "died without mercy."

To evade the force of this, we are told that it was Moses' law he despised. "Who-soever doeth any work in the Sabbath day he shall surely be put to death."—Ex. 31:15. This is untrue from the fact that "they put him in ward, because it was not [yet] declared what should be done to him."—Num. 15:34. Afterward the penalty was fixed. That all from Sinai come by Moses, see Deut. 5:5. After telling them that the Lord spoke the ten commandments to them all he says, "I stood between the Lord and you at that time to shew (teach) you the word of the Lord." They heard the voice, but understood not for fear. See verses 23 to 31. After the people had moved afar off, (Ex. 20), God said to Moses, "stand thou here by me, and I will speak unto thee all the commandments, statutes and judgments, which thou shalt teach them."—Deut. 5:31. Thus Moses became mediator of that first covenant, the law that was added, Gal. 3:19, and Ex. 24:12. In Deut. 4:13, Moses says God declared the ten commandments, then the statutes and judgments, (verse 14), and then says of these commandments: "This is the law which Moses set before the children of Israel."—Verse 44. And in verse 45 the statutes and judgments are spoken of as different from that law. This explains chapter 5:22, which says that he spoke the ten commandments and "added no more"—as a law. All else were called statutes and judgments. This should forever settle, with all truth-seekers, as to what constituted that "added" law.

The truth is, that "Moses wrote all the words of the Lord" (Ex. 24:4) in a book that were spoken at Sinai, and afterwards the history of the ministration of that law by the prophets was also written in that book of the covenant, (verse 7), afterwards called the book of the law, 2 Kings 22:8; book of the covenant, 23:2; book of the law of the Lord given by Moses; 2 Chron. 34:14; book of the law of Moses which God had commanded to Israel; Neh. 7:1; book of the law of God; verse 8; the law that the Lord had commanded by Moses; verse 14; the book of the law of God;

verse 18, etc., etc. And in the priests' prayer, after reading in this book, referring to its contents he says that God "Gave them right judgments, and true laws, good statutes and commandments; and madest known unto them thy holy Sabbath * * * by the hand of Moses thy servant."—Neh. 13, 14, statutes, judgments, commands, laws including the Sabbath, all by Moses, all the law of Moses. "Remember the law of Moses my servant, which I commanded unto him in Horeb (Sinai, see Deut. 4:10; Ex. 20) for all Israel; with the statutes and judgments."—Mal. 4:4. Read the statutes and judgments in Ex. 21, and onward. Did the Lord want them to remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy? If so, was it in "the law of Moses my servant, which I commanded him in Horeb," or in the statutes and judgments only? If the latter, what was that law of Moses from Horeb? This book so often referred to was also called "The law and the prophets," Acts 13:15; "Moses of old time" (15:21, which there was no command to teach, (verse 24), "For the priesthood being changed, there is made of necessity a change also of the law."—Heb. 7:12. The reason of the priesthood being changed was, because the Levitical could only minister "the law of Moses, which made nothing perfect;" (verses 10 to 19); but after Jesus came a great High Priest, Paul says: "There is verily a disannulling of the commandment going before," (that received under the Levitical priesthood, verse 11), "for the weakness and unprofitableness thereof."—Verse 18. So Jesus began at once to change that weak and unprofitable law. When accused of wishing to overthrow their government, he says: "Think not that I am come to destroy the law or the prophets: I am not come to destroy, but to fulfil. Till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law, till all be fulfilled." Matt. 5:17-19. This is the Gibraltar of Adventism in favor of the perpetuity of the law; for they tell us to fulfil means only to do, to keep; and in support of this they quote; "For thus it becometh us to fulfil all righteousness."—Matt. 3:15. And they say that Christ's baptism did not remove the command to be baptized, only magnified it—made it more binding; so he only magnified the law, made it more binding by fulfilling it as taught of him in Isa. 42:21. Again; "Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfil the law of Christ."—Gal. 6:2. Now we admit the force of this argument, and if there was no other meaning to the word fulfil, and no evidence that Christ's meaning was altogether different, we would cheerfully accept it. But when Joseph took Christ into Egypt it was, "That it might be fulfilled which was spoken of the Lord by the prophets, saying, Out of Egypt have I called my Son."—Matt. 2:15. It was fulfilled, completed, and became a thing of the past. "Then was fulfilled that which was spoken by the prophet Jeremiah, saying: In Ramah was a voice heard," &c.—Verses 17:18. This was about Herod slaying the children. It was completed. See also Matt. 4:14; 27:9, 35. All these, when fulfilled, were completed. See also John 19: 32-36. In all these, to fulfill was to complete, make it a thing of the past; as when a man fulfills his promise to pay, it completes, and makes that promise of no force in the future.

Now let us see in what sense Jesus used the term. He came to fulfill—nothing should pass from the law till all be fulfilled. If it should never pass, why say till a certain time? After asking the Pharisees if it was lawful to heal on the Sabbath day, (Luke 14: 3), and after healing the men and speaking many parables unto them, he justifies himself thus: "The law and the prophets were [to be observed] until John. Since that time the Kingdom of God is preached, and every man presseth into it." And it "is easier for heaven and earth to pass away, than for one tittle of the law to fail."—Luke 16: 16, 17. Language could not make it more positive than this does, that the law governing this Sabbath matter, (about which the Jews were seeking to kill him, because he had not only broken the Sabbath, but said also that God was his father.—John 5: 18), was in force only until John; that it was not the law of God's kingdom; but since John a new dispensation was preached by heaven's king and lawgiver—Jesus Christ. The law of faith, that had governed Abraham, (to which the law was added that included the Sabbath day, because of transgression), was again preached as the gospel of the Kingdom of God, and was an all sufficient law, without Moses and the prophets. Not one tittle of the law had, or shall fail. It had accomplished its purpose as a "schoolmaster" until Christ preserving morality; its ministration had been glorious, but was eclipsed by the rising glory of the ministration of Christ's law. When "the people which sat in darkness saw great light; and to them which sat in the region and shadow of death, light is sprung up," (Matt 4: 16), the law of death gave way to that of life and immortality through the preaching of Jesus Christ. Light, hope and joy sprung up in honest hearts since John; for "From that time Jesus began to preach and to say, Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand."—Matt. 3: 17; Mark 1: 14, 15. Well did he say unto them when troubling him about the 4th commandment, "The Son of Man is Lord also of the Sabbath."—Mark 2: 28. That law was only until John. Not the law and the prophecies, as some try to make it appear, but "the law and the prophets."—its ministers. In his first great sermon he at once begins to speak of these old-time sayings of Moses: "Thou shalt not kill; thou shalt not commit adultery," etc. And as God's great high priest he begins to change that law given under the Levitical Priesthood, annulling it "because of the weakness and unprofitableness thereof," (Heb. 7: 11, 20), finding fault with them," and saying, "But I say unto you," then giving the law of the Spirit. The old-time sayings only governed the flesh. But Jesus' law governed the Spirit, the thought, and intents of the heart. See Inspired Translation, Matt. 5: 19, admitted by all to be truth; compare with common version. In Luke, 16: 18, Jesus, just after telling that a new lawgiver had been teaching them since John, teaches them what Paul refers to in Rom. 7, that "Whosoever marrieth her that is put away from her husband, committeth adultery." And Jesus was proposing to marry the Jews—take them as his Church, or bride, when they claimed to be under Moses' law, and to be Moses' disciples, etc. But he tells them that first husband was dead and his law dead since John, persuading them to unite with him and come under his law, and then they would be no longer adulterers, as he taught a better law than Moses.

Connecting all these positive, scriptural evidences, it seems that every one should be able to see that the decalogue, with all the statutes and judgments thereunder, were Moses' law; that it was added to the commandments of the gospel, or given in the place of them, because of the transgression thereof, recorded in Exodus, chapters 15 and 16, and was superseded by "the law of faith"—all things whatsoever Jesus commanded his disciples to teach being a perfect law within itself.

ANSWER TO "S. F. W."

UNDER the head of "communications" in Herald of November sixth S. F. W. brings forward some far fetched arguments to prove that Joseph Smith and some other person—presumably Brigham Young—are the characters alluded to in Paul's second epistle to the Thessalonians, second chapter.

Is it not time that this idea was exploded of Brigham sitting in the temple of God as god. The only temple of God that he ever sat in, so far as we have evidence, was the Kirtland temple, for the presumption is that the Nauvoo temple was rejected of God, hence could not be the temple of God spoken of by Paul. In the opinion of the writer the term "temple of God" here alluded to, is only a figurative expression of Paul and is not a building made with hands; one used in a sense like this expression of his, "Ye are the temple of God," and was given to illustrate the audacity of Satan in his assumption of spiritual things and so given that the church might not be deceived as between the two spiritual powers. For even now, with all our light and experience, we have to acknowledge our liability to be deceived. I prefer to read the Inspired Translation, for in it the idea intended to be conveyed by the apostle is more clear, and evidently there the "son of perdition" spoken of is Satan. It has ever been his policy to assume the character of God, even to the diversion of the worship which is due to God only. His persistent efforts in this direction are strongly shown in his desire that Jesus should worship him; and not content with the mere exaltation of himself above all that is called God, or that is worshiped," he is ever contesting with and for the Omnipotent power of God. His is termed "the mystery of iniquity," and was then already at work, and would be suffered to continue to work till Christ should come, or the time be fulfilled that he should be "taken away." And then shall that wicked one, with his mystery of iniquity, be revealed. In this revelation the Saints will be made acquainted with the influences that have been brought to bear upon them, to the end that they might be his servants to obey, or, in other words, worship him.

Joseph Smith is an important link in the great chain of historical events, but it is just possible that in our veneration for him as such, we may place him in some wrong position.

In reading the seventh verse of the chapter spoken of, in the Inspired Translation, we can not fail to see that he that is "taken away," is the power, or "mystery of iniquity" that was then, in the days of Paul, at work, and which Christ would suffer to continue till he comes, and as stated in the following verse, "destroy with the brightness of his coming." The taking away, then, can not have reference to Joseph Smith at all. In the language often expressed we say, "Give the devil his due," and in justice to all don't set up Brigham Young as filling such an important mission, for in the opinion of the writer he would be too highly honored, judging from a personal experience with him.

The text at the heading of the article in question is not found in the Inspired Translation; hence the writer is reasoning from wrong principles.

Polygamy is only a part of "the mystery of iniquity," and to the great body of the people of Utah it is more an error of judgment in interpreting the Mosaic economy than an intentional sin against God. The "deceivableness of unrighteousness" spoken of by Paul is with them who "receive not the love of the truth." Now, it is a well attested fact that the people of Utah love the truth, as they understand it, with a fervency and zeal not surpassed by any other people in any age of the world, and manifesting this love, as they understand it, that they may be saved in the Kingdom of God.

If we could only grasp the true idea of the two great spiritual powers as they really exist, and in the sense in which Paul is evidently writing of, we could find in the history of Spiritualism a better solution of satanic agencies at work to divert the children of men from the true worship of God than we may have hitherto thought of, for he well knows that worship is a cardinal principle of revealed religion, and therefore his best efforts will be brought to bear on this point.

Some day, to the Latter day Saints, Polygamy will be a dream in the night, in comparison with the great power yet to be developed through Spiritualism. Brigham Young, in his day represented a peculiar phase of the power of despotism and imposition upon the minds of a people who in their hearts loved the latter day message as they loved their own souls. This power is easily understood and can be readily accounted for by the thoughtful mind. Nor is there anything miraculous about the man. His success may be accounted for in his consummate cheek, his surrounding circumstances and superior opportunities.

On the other hand, the power spoken of by Paul is the very incarnation of evil, and comes to us with a record from before the foundation of the world, defying our comprehension without the aid of the Spirit of God; controlling principalities and powers and bringing them to bear against us at his will. "Give the devil his due" then, and look to God for protection against his power, "till he be taken."

"TAKE HEED TO THYSELF."—No. 2.

BY CHARLES E. BUTTERWORTH.

BAPTISM.

BAPTISM is the third principle and is administered to the repentant sinner, by immersion, for the remission of their sins. Jesus thought it necessary to be baptized, and although without personal sin, yet he had to bear "the sin of the world." When he obeyed, God acknowledged the act as pleasing to Him by sending the Spirit upon him and by declaring, "This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased." But we are told that baptism is a Jewish ordinance and does not belong to us under the Christian dispensation, and that John's baptism is no part of the Christian religion. Put together Mark 1: 1, and John 1: 6, and see how they will read. "The beginning of the gospel of Jesus Christ, the Son of God. There was a man sent from God whose name was John." Again, Mark 1: 4, "John did baptize in the wilderness, and preach the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins." Jesus says of him:—"For I say unto you, Among those that are born of women there is not a greater prophet than John the Baptist."—Matt 11: 11. "And all the people that heard him, and the Publicans justified God, being baptized with the baptism of John. But the Pharisees and lawyers rejected the counsel of God against themselves, being not baptized of him."—Luke 7: 29, 30.

Here we see that sinners were justified because they obeyed and the would-be righteous rejected the counsel of God, would not obey, and therefore were condemned. The angel of God said to Cornelius, "thy prayer is heard, and thine alms are had in remembrance in the sight of God." Yet he was told to send for Peter who would tell him what to do. Suppose Cornelius had thought that as his prayer was heard and his alms were had in remembrance before God, that there was no need of his going any farther; do you think he would have been saved? I think not. When Peter arrived at his house Cornelius said:—"Now therefore are we all here present before God to hear all things that are commanded thee of God. . . . And he commanded them to be baptized in the name of the Lord." When Jesus sent the Apostles into all the world he said to them: "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." Again: "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned." This should be sufficient to convince all that baptism is a condition of salvation, nor will it do to say that this has reference to the baptism of the Spirit, for Christ commissioned no man to baptize his fellow man with the Holy Spirit, but reserved that right unto himself. It must be admitted, then, that Christ did authorize men to teach and baptize with water. When Jesus was baptized he went up straightway out of the water. Paul taught that baptism was by immersion when he wrote: "Know ye not, that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death? Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death; that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even we should walk in newness of life. For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection."—Rom. 6: 3-5. "Then Philip opened his mouth, and began at the same scripture, and preached unto him Jesus. And as they went on their way, they came unto a certain water; and the eunuch said, See, here is water; what doth hinder me to be baptized? And Philip said, If thou believest with all thine heart thou mayest. And he answered and said, I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God. And he commanded the chariot to stand still; and they went down both into the water, both Philip and the eunuch; and he baptized him. And when they were come up out of the water, the Spirit of the Lord caught away Philip."—Acts 8: 35-39.

Peter, under the influence of the Holy Ghost upon the day of Pentecost, said to those who believed his preaching and "were pricked in their heart": "Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost."—Acts 2: 38. When God sent Ananias to Saul to tell him what he "must do," he said, "Brother Saul, the Lord, even Jesus, that appeared unto thee in the way as thou camest, hath sent me, that thou mightest receive thy sight, and be filled with the Holy Ghost. And now why tarriest thou? Arise and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling upon the name of the Lord."—Acts 9: 17. "For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ."—Gal. 3: 27. Kind reader, is there any other way by which we can put on Christ, or put off the old man and on the new? Is not this the only way taught in the word of God by which we may receive a remission of our sins? Yes, by faith, repentance and baptism for the remission of our sins we are made clean, and are therefore prepared for the reception of the Holy Ghost.

The Holy Ghost was promised by Jesus to the disciples. When their souls were grieved because he told them that he must leave them and go to the Father he comforted them, saying: "If ye love me, keep my commandments, and I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you forever; even the Spirit of truth; whom the world can not receive, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him; but ye know him; for he dwelleth with you, and shall be in you."—John 14: 15-17.

Previous to his suffering, when they were in trouble, or did not understand, they would go to him and he would comfort them and explain. They loved him, and grieved because it would be but a "little while, and they would see him no more." The world could not comfort them; for they needed something it could not receive or give. Ah, how cheering the promise, "I will not leave you comfortless." "My peace I give unto you; not as the world giveth, give I unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid." God will give you that Holy Spirit, for you shall be baptized therewith. It shall be with you as long as "you love me," "even unto the end of the world." It shall comfort you; it "shall teach you all things and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you." It "will guide you into all truth; for he shall not speak of himself; but whatsoever he shall hear that shall he speak; and he will shew you things to come."

The disciples were learners, pupils, followers of Christ. How essential that the Spirit should lead them into all truth? How important that they should know the things of the Father? and how very necessary that they should understand the things to come. It is the same Spirit enjoyed by the prophets of God ever since the world began; for Peter declared that "holy men of God spake as they were moved upon by the Holy Ghost;" and Paul said, "according to his mercy he saved us by the washing of regeneration, and the renewing of the Holy Ghost, which he shed on us abundantly through Jesus Christ our Savior." And the disciple whom Jesus loved wrote: "for the testimony of Jesus is the Spirit of prophecy." Reader would you not like to be a learner and follower of Christ, be baptized with the Holy Ghost and be led by it into all truth, have "the testimony of Jesus" and be a truthful witness for your Redeemer? If so, are you willing to accept the fourth principle in the doctrine of Christ—the laying on of hands?

Conference Minutes.

TENNESSEE AND KENTUCKY.

QUESTIONS.

Dear Herald; will you let us ask
A few short, simple questions;
For, lacking wisdom of our own,
We'd thank you for directions.
We've read some very good advice
To all the noted preachers;
The Bishops, and the Elders good,
The Deacons and the Teachers.

The duties we would better know
Of mother, wife, and daughter;
We've tried the gospel to obey,
We've been baptized by water;
We've often had our faith confirmed,
And strengthened by receiving
Some of the precious blessings,
Once promised the believing.

The Elders they are often called
The gospel to be preaching;
And 'tis right, that by example
They should prove what they are teaching;
But when we sometimes go along
With them upon their mission,
Is any thing required of us,
To help to teach the lesson?

We always take the books along,—
The three the Savior gave us,—
And we believe the law therein
If we obey, will save us;
That law we are required to teach
In every place, or landing;
Yet in that self-same law are things
That passeth understanding.

For instance; I have read, somewhere,
"Make plain thine every garment;"
And now, the very thoughts of this,
Is a perpetual torment;
Because in every place we go,
In this wide world of fashion;
The love of clothes made beautiful,
Is now a ruling passion.

Some over look the "Make them plain,"
And only heed, the "beauty."
So, "beautify your clothes," say they;
That is your only duty.
Some good Saints say, "Use wisdom;
"That's all that now is needed."
That's true, but is it mine, or God's
That should be known and heeded.

My wisdom might direct upon
My next plain dress, one ruffle;
Another's wisdom might say, three;
And yet another's, double.
There's few upon this great footstool,
But like to dress quite nicely;
And fewer yet could ever think
But what they acted wisely.

But what must busy people say
Of Elders' wives who meanly make
So very plain the garments;
"O ugly fright;" "unseemly taste."
The Elders brave, I do believe,
Take fright at such an object;
Because it seems they hardly dare
To preach upon that subject.

Or else they think it is beneath
Their dignity, or calling,
To talk upon such little themes
To carnal minds so galling.
Too bad it is, for God's elect,
At such small things to tarry;
Yet this would be, I must confess,
A heavy cross to carry.

I tell you what! I think that it
Would cause me quite a tustle;
To have to give up all my bangs,
My ruffles, and my bustle;
My jewels, and my cringing pins;
My velvet bands and laces;
My silken fringe, and finger rings,
Those lovely, worldly graces.

How little that would make me feel;
So simple, and so lowly;
And yet I know 'tis in the books,
And if I would be holy,
I must renounce this world, and all
Its vain and foolish pleasures;
And following Jesus Christ our Lord
Lay up in heaven my treasures.

And if I do not keep this law
How can I, now pray tell me,
How can I pray to God above;
"Thy law to keep, now help me."
How can I say; "Lord, this command
Thou hast to mortals given;
I don't believe, I won't receive,—
But,—save us all in heaven."

And if this is the word of God,
Ought we to treat it lightly?
Besides, I think that I can see
How fashion hinders, slightly,
The good we might do; for sometimes
The elder from his Bible,
I have to call, to curl my bangs,
Because I am not able.

And then, the gospel trump you know,
Is sent to every nation;
And hence, we often find ourselves
Mong'st them of lowly station.
I know we're welcome there; because
They always try to bless us,
With comforts of their home, and board,
And room, and beds to rest us.

But oft I'm grieved at heart, to see
The mother weary toiling;
Because I can not help her, lest
My fine clothes I'd be soiling.
"A perfect lady" I should be;
Now do not call me crazy;—
In fashionable circles high,
The "lady-like," means lazy.

They call it by another name;—
"Tis "delicate refinement."
"Too nice to work." But what is best
To do needs some discernment.
I try to sing our hymns of love,—
Her labor never ceases;
I try to cheer her daily tasks,—
But still her work increases.

Now, if I could wear plainer clothes,
And love my neighbor better;
I think that I could help her some,
In deed, as well as letter;
And we could work, as well as sing
Of Zion's coming glory;
And then we both could rest, and talk
The gospel's pleasing story.

How Jesus gave up all for us;—
Can we give up for Jesus
This love of self, and love of pride,
That is so apt to seize us.
And now we've told you what we think,
We trust you will endeavor
Advice to give us; so we may
The better serve our Savior.

A SISTER.

NOTICE.

To the First Quorum of Elders: I send to each member of the quorum a blank report and circular letter. Should any fail to receive them, please notify me at Lamoni, Iowa, by the first of March, 1887.
V. WHITE, Sec'y of Quorum.

BORN.

HEADRICK.—At Crays' Creek, California, June 25th, 1886, to Mr. Daniel and sister Sarah Headrick, a daughter.

MARRIED.

BENTLEY—SMITH.—At the residence of the bride's parents, October 27th, 1886, by Elder Wm. Bradbury, of Providence, R. I., Mr. Louis E. Bentley and Sister Esther J. Smith, both of New Bedford.

"Sweet their union, pure their pleasure,
Heart with hand to each they give;
Each one's heart the other's treasure,—
May they thus forever live."

WOOD—WORDEN.—At Stewartville, Missouri, November 3d, 1886, Bro. John Wood and Sister Delphine Worden, both of Stewartville, Mo. Elder J. M. Eerry officiating.

You both have done well
To try life's rugged road as one.
In days to come may you have as much joy,
As in this, the day you begun.

DIED.

JOY.—Sister Rhoda Joy was born in Dennis, Constable county, Massachusetts, June 30th, 1805. She was an esteemed member of the Baptist church at the time of her baptism into the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, which took place in the days of the martyr. And though that wicked tragedy—the assassination of the prophet—which clothed all Zion in mourning, soon followed her new found hope; yet she had received enough of the confirmatory spirit of the gospel to know that the work is of God. She was re-baptized and confirmed into the Reorganized Church by Elder John Smith at Dennisport, November 25th, 1866. In October 15th, 1886, she passed through the seeming shadow, apparently, without a struggle. And so a mother in Israel, whose beneficence the orphan and the stranger felt, has been transferred from the church militant to the church triumphant. Funeral discourse by Elder W. Bearse. Text, Rev. 14: 13.

SMITH.—At Clear Lake, Indiana, November 10th, 1886, father Peter Smith. He was born September 15th, 1804, at Fishing Creek, Columbiana county, Pennsylvania; was baptized June 29th, 1877, by Wm. H. Kelley. Funeral service by Elder B. V. Springer, November 12th, 1886, a very large crowd of relatives and friends were in attendance. He passed peacefully away in hope of a glorious resurrection; he needs no eulogy from my pen as his long residence here had endeared him to all, both Saint and sinner. He died as he had lived, an honest man, the noblest work of God. Many of the Elders who read these lines will remember with love and gratitude "Uncle Peter." His aged companion with whom he lived over sixty years, and several children and grand children survive him, and while we discoursed over his remains of the hope of the Saints from Romans 15:4, we felt to say "Farewell, father, we shall meet thee
When the toils of life are o'er;
Loved ones gone and loved ones coming,
Soon will meet to part no more."

B. V. SPRINGER.

MCINTYRE.—At St. Joseph, Missouri, October 30th, 1886, Bro. John C. McIntyre. He was born in Scotland in the year 1818; emigrated to this country in 1853; settled in St. Joseph in the year 1868. He united with the church first in his native country, in the year 1846, and with the Reorganization in 1871, being baptized by Elder J. L. Bear. Bro. McIntyre was one of our faithful and substantial members; we all miss him. He leaves a wife and two daughters to mourn his loss. Funeral services conducted by Elder H. C. Bronson; a large number of friends followed the remains to its last resting place.

HAYER.—At Mission Branch, near Norway, LaSalle county, Illinois, October 31st, 1886, Bro. Oliver Hayer, Sen., of heart disease; aged 66 years, 7 months, and 9 days. He was born in Norway, in 1820; came to America in 1842, united with the church in 1843, and with the Reorganization in 1861, and was acting Priest of the branch. He had suffered from asthma for about thirty years. A widow and eight children remain to mourn his loss. The wife and two of the children were present at his death; the others were summoned by telegram, and arrived in time for the funeral, when the largest concourse of relatives and friends that ever gathered at the chapel, were present. Services conducted by Elder Thomas Hougas, from Rev. 14: 12, 13.

MCPHERSON.—Passed to the home of the blessed, from Monroe county, Ala., May 15th, 1886, Bro. Daniel McPherson, aged 68 years, 3 months, and 15 days. He was born in Robinson county, North Carolina; was baptized and confirmed by Elder G. R. Scogin, Sept. 15th, 1882. As a citizen and Christian he stood fair with the many who knew him.

STONE.—Near Thornton, Limestone county, Texas, of disease of the head, and typho malarial fever, October 27th, 1886, Sr. Frances E. wife of Bro. J. L. Stone. She passed away firm in the faith after suffering greatly. She leaves a kind husband, one son and three daughters to mourn her loss, and a babe two months old. She was born January 29th, 1854; and was baptized August 1879, by Elder R. Jenkins. She was loved by all who knew her.

BROWN.—Four miles north of Pleasanton, Iowa, November 6th, 1886, of congestive chills, Chester S., youngest child of Bro. Joseph and Sr. Amelia Brown. He was born May 30th, 1885, blessed by Elder W. W. Blair; buried at Davis City, Iowa, funeral services by Elder E. Robinson, assisted by Elder A. W. Moffet.

There's a niche in our home that our Chester once filled,
So empty and lone that our sad hearts are chilled;
A chair by the hearth, and a place at our board,
Whence a presence has passed that will ne'er be restored.
We miss the dear face and the patter of feet,
The ways that were childish, so tender and sweet;
Our stricken hearts bleed at the stroke of the rod
That took our loved "Chettie" to rest with his God.
And if the bright angels where his lot is assigned,
Will care for and comfort him whom we've resigned;
We'll bear our hard portion of sorrow and pain,
And wait till we meet him, in glory, again.

CORRESPONDENCE.

ANTWERP, Ohio, Nov. 2d.

Bro. Joseph Smith:—Bro. B. V. Springer came here the 4th of October, and remained until the 13th. Preached every night except one, and twice on Sunday. The people turned out tolerably well to hear. It did me good to hear the true gospel preached to my neighbors. Some of them say now that they don't wonder at Bro. Gaston and myself wishing to have the gospel preached here; as they begin to see the difference between it and what they have been hearing. Bro. Springer is well liked by most of the people, and some have taken decided stands in our favor; hope he will be able to return and follow up the work.

In hope of eternal life yours,

"MORE OR LESS."

A BROTHER wants to know:

1. When Jesus said, "And whoso shall declare more or less than this, and establish it for my doctrine, the same cometh of evil," did he mean that no more doctrine and principle than what he then had taught those he was speaking to would ever be taught by himself or faithful servants?

2. Or, did he simply intend to forbid the teaching of any doctrine or principle contrary and opposed to that which he had already taught?

3. What does the phrase "more or less," as used in the Scriptures, signify?

Ans. 1. We are not certain whether we understand just the scope this questioner might wish his question to take, or that we so far comprehend the question, and the relation an answer might bear to the general subject of the faith of the church as to answer satisfactorily.

To the first part of the question we reply, no. Jesus could not have intended that such a construction should be placed upon the language quoted. If he had, how shall we understand his words; "except your righteousness exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees, ye can in no case enter the kingdom of heaven."

This language is preceded by a statement referring to commandments the doing of which should exalt men, the breaking of which and the teaching to break should abase men.

All Scripture given by the inspiration of the Spirit, being for our benefit, instruction and learning, warrants us to conclude that no one passage, or portion should be construed in such a way as to do violence to other passages and the tenor of the whole. St. Mark states that after John was put in prison "Jesus came preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God, and saying, the time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand; repent ye, and believe the gospel."—(Mark 1:14, 15). And in the closing verses of the same chapter the risen Redeemer charges the disciples to preach this same "gospel to every creature," promising salvation to those who believed and were baptized, and stating that several blessings should follow. In the closing verses of Matthew's relation of the life, doctrines and death of Jesus Christ, the statement is made that the charge was given to the disciples to "teach" the observance of "all things whatsoever" he had "commanded them."

It is evident that Jesus did not intend to restrict future revelation, nor to say, nothing more shall be taught by himself and his servants than the requirements of the commandments referred to in Matthew 5th chapter; or that the disciples should not "teach" all things connected with the "gospel of the kingdom." Phillip taught Christ unto the people of Samaria; and yet the history states that the people believed "the things concerning the kingdom of God;" and the Spirit bore witness to them that Jesus was the Christ.

Jesus, when asked once concerning the commandments, stated: "Thou shalt love the Lord with all thy heart, and thy neighbor as thyself," "on these two hang all the law and the prophets." It would be as unwise to say that because the Savior made this the specific commandment, therefore the gospel ordinances ought not to be taught, as to say that because the declaration found in our question refers to two specific parts of the gospel, therefore, nothing but those two things are to be taught, or believed.

That the whole law, and the teaching of the prophets, were but the center from which the radiating rays of truth were to scientillate and enlighten the world, must be conceded, and yet the doctrines contained in and covered by the two branches, love to God and love to neighbor are infinite in number; not one of which must be made to conflict in the slightest with any other one, nor with the central thought, or root of the whole. The fifth chapter of Nephi, from which the language of the question is taken, contains the history of the visit of Christ to the disciples on this land; and after the declaration "And whoso shall declare more or less than this," referring to the doctrine he had stated was his, the statement is followed from the ninth paragraph of the fifth chapter to the third paragraph of the twelfth chapter by a recitation of the teaching of Christ upon a great variety of topics other than the "ye must repent and be baptized," which constitute the doctrine referred to. Are we to believe that Jesus did not know the scope of his own words? That he did so soon violate the terms of his own statement and add "line upon line," unto that doctrine and institute the ordinance of blessing bread and wine, and commanding its observance with words similar in import to those forming our text. "But whoso among you who shall do" more or less than these, are not built upon my rock, but are built upon a sandy foundation * * * and the gates of hell are ready open to receive them." "Behold, I am the light; I have set an example for you."

In neither place is the doctrines of faith, laying on of hands, the resurrection of the dead and eternal judgment, as enumerated by Paul in Hebrews 6th, included in the statement of doctrine; and if the close rendition of the text put upon it by some is insisted upon, it must exclude these, as well as the sacrament of the Lord's Supper; the doctrine taught by Christ in regard to marriage, and the peculiar provisions of the Sermon on the Mount, found in the New Testament and Book of Mormon alike, of which the Savior says in the tenth paragraph of the same chapter five; "for verily I say unto you, that except ye shall keep my commandments, which I have commanded you at this time, ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven;" and in paragraph nine of chapter eight: "Therefore keep these sayings which I have commanded you, that ye come not under condemnation, for woe unto him whom the father condemns."

There are a number of Scriptural passages of similar form and import, in which the words "more or less" occur, some of which we give, that we may more readily reach our conclusion.

It is stated in Numbers 22:18, that Balaam upon being importuned by the princes of Moab to yield to the desires of Balak, their king, to curse the people who had come out of Egypt and whom he wished to destroy, replied: "If Balak would give me his house full of silver and gold, I can not go beyond the word of the Lord my God, to do less or more." In this case Balaam had been commanded not to go with the elders of Moab and Midian, and not to curse the people; yet the history following this statement of Balaam shows that God told him something more which he was to tell Balak. If the stringent construction that it is now sought to put upon the "more or less" found in Nephi 5, were put upon the same words in Numbers 22:18, then Balaam ought not to have consented to ask God for anything further for this king of Moab. But it is seen that he did ask and that the Lord answered, and in his answer gave specific and decided directions to bless the people; whereas in the 12th verse he was simply commanded not to go "for the people were blessed." Here was a great addition to the "more or less" spoken before; but when examined it is found in direct harmony with the simple statements "Thou shalt not go with them; thou shalt not curse the people; for they are blessed."

Not content with this, Balak takes Balaam once again away to another spot suggesting to him that it might be that God would hear more favorably from the top of Peor, where offerings were again made. The result of this was the conferring upon Balaam a vision of the prosperity and blessing of Israel, and a prophecy:

"How goodly are thy tents, O Jacob, and thy tabernacles, O Israel! As the valleys are they spread forth, as gardens by the river's side, as the trees of lign-aloes which the Lord hath planted, and as cedar-trees beside the waters. He shall pour the water out of his buckets, and his seed shall be in many waters, and his king shall be higher than Agag, and his kingdom shall be exalted. God brought him forth out of Egypt; he hath as it were the strength of a unicorn; he shall eat up the nations his enemies, and shall break their bones, and pierce them through with his arrows. He couched, he lay down as a lion, and as a great lion: who shall stir him up? Blessed is he that blesseth thee, and cursed is he that curseth thee."—Num. 24:5-9.

Those who choose to follow this case more closely will find that when Balak, angry with the prophet, said to him, "I called thee to curse mine enemies, and behold, thou hast altogether blessed them these three times;" Balaam replied in such a declaration concerning the people whom Balak wanted him to curse that Balak left him, doubtless in despair concerning his projected assault upon that people.

"And he took up his parable, and said, Balaam the son of Beor hath said, and the man whose eyes are open hath said: he hath said, which heard the words of God, and knew the knowledge of the Most High, which saw the vision of the Almighty, falling into a trance, but having his eyes open: I shall see him, but not now: I shall behold him, but not nigh: there shall come a Star out of Jacob, and a Sceptre shall rise out of Israel, and shall smite the corners of Moab, and destroy all the children of Sheth. And Edom shall be a possession, Seir also shall be a possession for his enemies; and Israel shall do valiantly. Out of Jacob shall come he that shall have dominion, and shall destroy him that remaineth of the city. And when he looked on Amalek, he took up his parable, and said, Amalek was the first of the nations, but his latter end shall be that he perish for ever. And he looked on the Kenites, and took up his parable, and said, Strong is thy dwelling-place, and thou puttest thy nest in a rock. Nevertheless, the Kenite shall be wasted, until Asshur shall carry thee away captive. And he took up his parable, and said, Alas, who shall live when God doeth this? And ships shall come from the coast of Chittim, and shall afflict Asshur, and shall afflict Eber, and he also shall perish for ever. And Balaam rose up, and went and returned to his place: and Balak also went his way."—Num. 24:15-25.

The words "less or more" as used in 1 Sam. 25:36, convey only the meaning that Abigail refrained from informing Nabal of anything that had transpired between David and herself, in the effort she made to turn the wrath of that warrior away from her house. But when Nabal had rallied from his drunken fit Abigail told him the whole story as the several occurrences transpired; nor is it to be supposed that she varied in substance from the facts, though the words of her recital may not have been exactly those found from verse 18 to 37.

The Savior commanded the disciples to go and "preach the gospel to every creature; he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, and he that believeth not shall be damned." From this it may be inferred that he who was so received in baptism was in no danger; yet in Matthew 5:19, 20, it appears that the same august teacher had reiterated several commandments and charged that they be observed; giving as a sufficient reason that those who failed could in no case "enter into the kingdom of heaven." Does an entrance into that kingdom constitute the salvation referred to in the charge to his disciples? If so, do not the two statements belong together to complete the harmony of the Savior's theory, or doctrine? Or shall the one be taken as the specific and only rule; and if so, which one?

In May 1829 a revelation was given in which the Lord said: "Behold, this is my doctrine: whosoever repenteth and cometh unto me, the same is my church; whosoever declareth more or less than this, the same is not of me, but is against me; therefore, he is not of my church." "And now, behold, whosoever is of my church, and endureth of my church to the end, him will I establish upon my Rock, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against him."

These passages show clearly that Christ contemplated the establishing a church; that it was to be built upon the Rock; that it was to be composed of those who repented and came unto him; and that this was to be effected through his doctrine. But, in these quotations the theory of baptism, its necessity, mode, subjects, object and results are not named. And in the latter paragraph quoted, the endurance, (perseverance of the Saints), the theory of the Rock and its correlatives, and hell and its surrounding teachings are hinted at, but no marks given by which they are to be known.

If the close rendition of the words "more or less than this" were insisted upon in regard to the first quotation, certainly all the prophecies, promises and theories concerning the "Rock that followed after," the "Rock" upon which the church should be built, so that the gates of hell should not prevail against it, would be denied the minister and the people alike, and men would be left hopelessly groping after light but denied it.

But, in order that there should be no reason for disputation on this, the same Great Revealer, Jesus Christ, stated in paragraph 15 of the same revelation: "And I will show unto this people, that I had other sheep, and that they were a branch of the house of Jacob; and I will bring to light their marvelous works, which they did in my name; yea, and I will also bring to light my gospel, which was ministered unto them, and behold they shall not deny that which you have received, but they shall build it up, and shall bring to light the true points of my doctrine; yea, and the only doctrine which is in me, and this I do, that I may establish my gospel, that there may not be so much contention; yea, Satan doth stir up the hearts of the people to contention concerning the points of my doctrine."

With this explanation it seems to us that any one might see that the "doctrine" referred to in the passage from Nephi 5th, and in the 16th paragraph of section 9 of Doctrine and Covenants, and John 7:17, and Paul to Hebrews 6: 3, 4; and 2 John, are one and the same and is constituted of several points all correlative, and all in harmony one with the other; no one branch denying any other separate portion, nor in antagonism with the whole tenor of the gospel.

In the gospel "life and immortality are brought to light." It is but meet and just that in declaring the gospel, all that appertains to life, things past, things present and things to come, should be considered. This includes the state of man before the fall, the fall and its consequences; the atonement, its cause, manner, consequences and results; the coming of Christ as the Redeemer, the prophecies concerning him, his life, labors, teachings, death, resurrection and ascension and the results and glory to follow; the life eternal offered in Christ, the way to obtain it; baptism, its mode, subjects, object and the result; the birth of the Spirit, the christian life, conduct, hope and causes therefor; the resurrection, its fact, reasons for and glories of, manner of and triumph in; the second coming of Christ on earth, object, character, results and reign; the church, what it is, organization, officers, members, how made, object of organization, powers, privileges and duties; the body of Christ, and how it will be merged in the Kingdom of God finally established upon earth. All these things are essentially included in the preaching of the gospel, and are also incorporated in and are correlative to the "doctrine" referred to in the Savior's statement. To accomplish the preaching of the gospel and for the calling, ordaining, empowering and sending out men upon a ministry, which Paul calls the "ministry of reconciliation," it is in strict keeping with the command to "preach the gospel," declare nothing but repentance unto this generation, and the promise "he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, "that those sent out upon this ministry should be sustained while doing it; and for this purpose some rule, or regulation regarding the gathering and disbursing of money, goods, wares and merchandize consecrated and set apart by honest devotees for this purpose. All wise human governments when passing acts, or issuing edicts, permitting, directing or commanding anything to be done, or forbidding it, also pass, or issue enabling or empowering acts conferring power for the accomplishment of the acts commanded to be done, and for punishing those doing what is forbidden. God is certainly as wise and just in his administration as are human governments, however wise these may be; and it is gravely imputing folly to him to allege that he has commanded his gospel, his doctrine to be preached and its rites to be administered, and has not provided a way by which it can be done.

For this and other reasons which we have stated in this reply we believe that the rule of free-will-offerings, consecration and tithing, is a necessary point in the "doctrine" of Christ; one of the correlative doctrines included in the central and leading doctrine, one of the enabling and empowering acts by which "they who preach the gospel shall live of the gospel." It is not opposed to, nor subversive of either of the two specific ideas in the question to which this is a reply, but is intended as an auxiliary to the carrying them into effect. Those who object to the teaching of tithing, under the idea that it is forbidden by the words "more or less," found in text, to be consistent, ought, (as we think), also to reject those doctrines we have heretofore named as they are no more named than is tithing. Nor do we feel that the church believing in free-will-offerings, consecration and tithing, has added to the gospel, or by so doing is teaching that which vitiates, or denies the doctrine of Christ any more than to teach the atonement, restoration, the resurrection, or eternal judgment.

Paul writing to the Galatians 5th: 14th, says: "For all the law is fulfilled in one word, even in this; Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself;" an example of centralizing of thoughts, theories, doctrines in few words so terse that we commend it to the student of this paper. "Love is the fulfilling of the law;" and yet Paul goes right on, telling the Galatians what to believe, what was theory, principle, doctrine, just as if he had not written the sentence; doing it because love was a single principle, law a compound of many; so is the doctrine of Christ, a compound of many principles, or points of doctrine.

Ans. 2.—The sentence clearly forbids any one to say that any person can be saved with the salvation referred to without repentance, baptism and coming to Christ's Church. It also forbids teaching that which opposes, or denies Christ's doctrine.

Ans. 3.—More, or less, in the scriptural sense, as we understand the term, signifies that which is over and above, or comes short of what is affirmed, and may apply to material things as well as spiritual. In law it is supposed not to limit the description of lands recited in a deed, if subsequent surveys should ascertain that the described premises should overrun, or fall short in measurement. In the passage from which we have written it is to us clear that the Savior did not intend to convey the idea that there were no other principles in his doctrine except repentance and baptism, but did intend to forbid any from denying, or teaching contrary to what he there affirmed.

ELDER DAVID WHITMER'S LETTER.

IN our Communications this week will be found an article from Elder David Whitmer, partially explanatory, in relation to the late purported "Interview" published and reviewed by us. In view of the fact that the "Interview" was widely published, appearing in the leading papers of the United States and Canada, it was not proper for us to have let it pass unnoticed. We waited some time, thinking that Elder Whitmer would make some correction or explanation in some one, or more of the journals in which the "Interview" appeared; but seeing none, we essayed to correct some of the things in it which we conceived were either errors on Elder Whitmer's part, misconceptions or misconstructions upon the part of the one who interviewed him. Of this review Elder Whitmer complains, as he states with only good feeling and wishes for us. The first portion of our review was in type before we received Elder Whitmer's letter, which was on November 1st, the letter itself bearing no date, as may be seen. But the letter when received did not help us out of our dilemma, as Elder Whitmer added at its close a statement not to publish it. This left us practically, as if he had not written. The "Interview" had been made public; it bore the prestige of Elder Whitmer's name, age, and apparent opportunity to know of what was stated therein. We had no means of knowing specifically what parts of it had been stated by Elder Whitmer, and what were the addition of the reporter. We were not at liberty to suppose that the readers would of themselves sift the errors from the correct statements, retaining the one and rejecting the other. We were obliged to treat the whole as if it all came legitimately from the lips of the aged and revered witness. We regretted to do this, as we felt that a mistake had been made. We did not make it, we were not certain who did; and we felt compelled by a sense of our duty, not to leave the Saints without answer to the misstatements, or misconstructions.

The efforts lately made by men claiming to act under the prestige and authority of Elder David Whitmer, and who have assailed the views held by the Reorganized Church, gave some color to the thought that this "Interview," so widely circulated, might be a part of the plan; and if so, it was our duty not to pass it by in silence. We have personally no quarrel with Elder David Whitmer. We respect the testimony he has borne to the Angel's ministration, and revere the man for the integrity in which he has maintained that testimony. We do not, will not, can not wish him harm in any respect; we hold, however, that his duty to this same life-long testimony, his age, his reputation, the spirit of fair dealing,—all demand that Elder Whitmer should make a specific and public denial of those statements, of which he is made the author in the published interview, and which he did not make, of the subject matter of which he could not have been cognizant. We expect to meet the truth, sooner or latter, no matter what the nature of it, and are just as well prepared to accept what is in our favor and make use of it, or to submit to what is unfavorable and bear with, or be overcome by it, as we ever shall be in the flesh; but, we do not propose now, as we have not proposed in the past, to take any man's opinion for demonstrated fact; we have heard and tested the conclusions and opinions of too many of those giving adverse testimony against the latter day work for that. Whatever Elder Whitmer has of the facts of the history of the past that has come within his knowledge, we shall seek to find no fault in him for stating. If he, however, should essay to give his opinions or surmisings of what transpired out of and away from his circle of knowledge, we shall feel at liberty to examine them from the light of happenings duly recorded at the time of their transpiring.

Elder Whitmer proposes to publish an article which he is now preparing, in appeal to the believers in the Book of Mormon, and asks us in advance to promise to insert it in the HERALD. This promise we can not make; as, however much we might be disposed to favor publishing this appeal when it is presented to us, and possibly might be disposed to hearken to it, we do not propose to judge of any matter before we hear it, lest we shall err and be shamed thereby. If David Whitmer, the surviving witness to the Book of Mormon, has at this late period of time anything good for the Latter Day Saints, we shall be pleased to see it. If, on the other hand, what he has to communicate is of such a character as to undo and unsettle the good that has resulted from the labor of the past thirty years, and increase confusion and division, diverting men from all the real truths essential to the progress of the work, we shall feel sad, because we are assured that failure and chagrin must ensue to the man whom we respect for what he is, and has done.

PERSECUTION AND ITS CAUSES.

HAVING seen that the chief officers of the State advised the Saints to seek by law redress for their grievances and losses at the hands of the mob, it is well to now further learn how the heart of Joseph the Seer was moved in these critical trying times, and also what counsel he and his advisers gave the Saints in respect to their course and conduct. Here is a letter written by the Seer which breathes the tenderest sympathy and is filled with wise and godly counsel:

"KIRTLAND MILLS, Ohio,

"Dec. 10th, 1833.

"Beloved Brethren: E. Partridge, W. W. Phelps, J. Whitmer, A. S. Gilbert, J. Corryll, I. Morley, and all the Saints whom it may concern:

"This morning's mail brought Bishop Partridge's, and Elders Corryll and Phelps' letters, all mailed at Liberty, November 19th, which gave us the melancholy intelligence of your flight from the land of your inheritance, having been driven before the face of your enemies in that place.

"From previous letters we learned that a number of our brethren had been slain, but we could not learn from those referred to above, as there had been but one, and that was Bro. Barber, and Bro. Dibble was wounded in the bowels. We were thankful to learn that no more had been slain, and our daily prayers are that the Lord will not suffer his Saints who have gone up to his land to keep his commandments, to stain his holy mountain with their blood.

"I can not learn from any communication by the spirit to me that Zion has forfeited her claim to a celestial crown, notwithstanding the Lord had caused her to be thus afflicted, except it may be some individuals who have walked in disobedience and forsaken the new covenant; all such will be made manifest by their works in due time. I have always expected that Zion would suffer some affliction, from what I could learn from the commandments which have been given. But I would remind you of a certain clause in one which says that after much tribulation cometh the blessing. By this, and also others, and also one received of late, I know that Zion, in the own due time of the Lord, will be redeemed; but how many will be the days of her purification, tribulation and affliction, the Lord has kept hid from my eyes; and when I enquire concerning this subject, the voice of the Lord is, be still, and know that I am God! All those who suffer for my name shall reign with me, and he that layeth down his life for my sake shall find it again. Now there are two things of which I am ignorant, and the Lord will not shew them unto me, perhaps for a wise purpose in himself,—I mean in some respects, and they are these,—why God has suffered so great a calamity to come upon

Zion; and what the great moving cause of this great affliction is; and again, by what means he will return her back to her inheritance with songs of everlasting joy upon her head. These two things, brethren, are in part kept back that they are not plainly manifest, in consequence of those who have incurred the displeasure of the Almighty.

"When I contemplate upon all things that have been manifested, I am sensible that I ought not to murmur and do not murmur only in this, that those who are innocent are compelled to suffer for the iniquities of the guilty; and I can not account for this only on this wise, that the saying of the Savior has not been strictly observed: 'If thy right eye offend thee, pluck it out and cast it from thee; or if thy right arm offend thee, cut it off and cast it from thee.' Now the fact is, if any of the members of our body are disordered, the rest of our body will be affected with them, and then all is brought into bondage together; and yet, notwithstanding all this, it is with difficulty that I can restrain my feelings when I know that you, my brethren, with whom I have had so many happy hours, sitting, as it were, in heavenly places in Christ Jesus; and also, having the witness which I feel and ever have felt of the purity of your motives, are cast out and are as strangers and pilgrims on the earth, exposed to hunger, cold, nakedness, peril, sword, &c.; I say when I contemplate this, it is with difficulty that I can keep from complaining and murmuring against this dispensation. But I am sensible that this is not right, and may God grant, that notwithstanding your great afflictions and sufferings, there may not anything separate us from the love of Christ.

"Brethren, when we learn your sufferings, it awakens every sympathy of our hearts, it weighs us down; we can not refrain from tears, yet we are not able to realize, only in part, your sufferings. And I often hear the brethren saying they wish they were with you, that they might bear a part of your sufferings. And I myself should have been with you, had not God prevented it in the order of his providence, that the yoke of affliction might be less grievous upon you, God having forewarned me concerning these things for your sakes. And also, Elder Cowdery could not have lightened your afflictions by tarrying longer with you, for his presence would have so much the more enraged your enemies; therefore God hath dealt mercifully with us.

"O brethren, let us be thankful that it is as well with us as it is, and we are yet alive, that peradventure God hath laid up in store great good for us in this generation and grant that we may yet glorify his name.

"I feel thankful that there have no more denied the faith. I pray God in the name of Jesus that you all may be kept in the faith unto the end. Let your sufferings be what they may, it is better in the eyes of God that you should die than that you should give up the land of Zion, the inheritances which you have purchased with your moneys; for every man that giveth not up his inheritance, though he should die, yet when the Lord shall come he shall stand upon it, and with Job in his flesh he shall see God. Therefore, this is my counsel, that you retain your land, even unto the uttermost, and seek every lawful means to seek redress of your enemies, &c., &c.: and pray to God, day and night, to return you in peace and in safety to the lands of your inheritance. And when the judge fails you, appeal unto the Executive; and when the Executive fails you, appeal unto the President; and when the President fails you, and all laws fail you, and the humanity of the people fails you, and all things else fail you but God alone, and you continue to weary him with your importunings, as the poor woman did the unjust judge, he will not fail to execute judgment upon your enemies, and to avenge his own elect that cry unto him day and night.

"Behold he will not fail you! He will come with ten thousand of his Saints, and all his adversaries shall be destroyed with the breath of his lips! All those who keep their inheritances, notwithstanding they should be beaten and driven, shall be likened unto the wise virgins who took oil in their lamps. But all those who are unbelieving and fearful, will be likened unto the foolish virgins, who took no oil in their lamps; and when they shall return and say unto the Saints give us of your lands, behold there will be no room found for them. As respects giving deeds, I would advise you to give deeds as far as the brethren have legal and just claims for them, and then let every man answer to God for the disposal of them.

"I would suggest some ideas to Elder Phelps, not knowing as they will be of any real benefit, but suggest them for consideration. I would be glad that he were here, but dare not advise, were it possible for him to come, not knowing what shall befall us, as we are under very heavy and serious threatenings from a great many people in this place.

"But perhaps the people in Liberty may feel willing, God having power to soften the hearts of all men, to have a press established there; and if not, in some other place; any place where it can be the most convenient, and it is possible to get it; God will be willing to have it in any place where it can be established in safety. We must be wise as serpents and harmless as doves. Again, I desire that Elder Phelps would collect all the information, and give us a true history of the beginning and rise of Zion, her calamities, &c.

"Now hear the prayer of your unworthy brother in the new and everlasting covenant:—O my God, thou who hast called and chosen a few, through thy weak instrument, by commandment, and sent them to Missouri, a place which thou didst call Zion, and commanded thy servants to consecrate it unto thyself for a place of refuge and safety for the gathering of thy Saints, to be built up a holy city unto thyself; and as thou hast said that no other place should be appointed like unto this; therefore, I ask thee, in the name of Jesus Christ, to return thy people unto their houses and their inheritances, to enjoy the fruit of their labors; that all the waste places may be built up; that all the enemies of thy people who will not repent and turn unto thee, be destroyed from off the face of the land; and let a house be built and established unto thy name; and let all the losses that thy people have sustained be rewarded unto them, even more than four fold; that the borders of Zion be enlarged forever, and let her be established no more to be thrown down; and let all thy saints when they are scattered like sheep and are persecuted, flee unto Zion, and be established in the midst of her, and let her be organized according to thy law, and let this prayer ever be recorded before thy face. Give thy Holy Spirit unto my brethren, unto whom I write; send thy angels to guard them, and deliver them from all evil; and when they turn their faces towards Zion, and bow down before thee and pray, may their sins never come up before thy face, neither have place in the book of thy remembrance, and may they depart from all their iniquities. Provide food for them as thou doest for the ravens; provide clothing to cover their nakedness, and houses that they may dwell therein; give unto them friends in abundance, and let their names be recorded in the Lamb's book of life, eternally before thy face; Amen."

"Finally, brethren, the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all until his coming and kingdom; Amen. JOSEPH SMITH, Jr."

"December 12th. An express arrived at Liberty, from Van Buren county, with information, that those families which had fled from Jackson county, and located there, are about to be driven from that county, after building their houses, and carting their winter's store of provision, grain, &c., forty or fifty miles. Several families are already fleeing from thence. The contaminating influence of the Jackson county mob is predominant in this new county of Van Buren, the whole population of which is estimated at about thirty or forty families. The destruction of crops, household furniture and clothing is very great, and much of their stock is lost. The main body of the church is now in Clay county, where the people are as kind and accommodating as could reasonably be expected. The continued threats of death to individuals of the church, if they make their appearance in Jackson county, prevents the most of them, even at this day, from returning to that county to secure personal property which they were obliged to leave in their fight."—Times and Seasons, vol. 6: 928-930.

The following is an extract from a letter by Elder W. W. Phelps to President Joseph Smith:

"Clay county, Mo., Dec. 15th, 1833.

"The situation of the Saints, as scattered, is dubious, and affords a gloomy prospect. No regular order can be enforced; nor any usual discipline kept up; among the world, yea, the most wicked part of it, some commit one sin and some another, (I speak of the rebellious, for there are Saints that are as immovable as the everlasting hills), and what can be done? We are in Clay, Ray, Lafayette, Jackson, Van Buren, &c., and can not hear from each other oftener than we do from you. I know it was right that we should be driven out of the land of Zion, that the rebellious might be sent away. But, brethren, if the Lord will, I should like to know what the honest in heart shall do? Our clothes are worn out; we want the necessaries of life, and shall we lease, buy, or otherwise obtain land where we are, to till that we may raise enough to eat? Such is the common language of the honest, for they want to do the will of God. I am sensible that we shall not be able to live again in Zion, till God or the President rules out the mob.

"The Governor is willing to restore us, but as the constitution gives him no power to guard us when back, we are not willing to go. The mob swear if we come we shall die! If from what has been done in Zion, we, or the most of us, have got to be persecuted from city to city, and from synagogue to synagogue, we want to know it; for there are those among us that would rather earn eternal life on such conditions than lose it; but we hope for better things, and shall wait patiently for the word of the Lord.

"Our people fare very well, and when they are discreet little or no persecution is felt. The militia in the upper counties is in readiness at a moment's warning, having been ordered out by the Governor, to guard a court martial and court of enquiry, &c., but we can not attend a court of enquiry, on account of the expense, till we are restored and protected.

"(Signed)

W. W. PHELPS."

Times and Seasons, vol. 6, p. 944.

On the 16th of December, 1833, the Seer received a revelation explaining why God suffered the Saints to be persecuted and driven from Jackson county, giving promise of their restoration and the redemption of Zion, also directing them as to what they should do to attain to this, and revealing much to comfort, enlighten and encourage. This revelation is found in Doctrine and Covenants, section 98, to which the reader is now referred. The foregoing letters of the Seer and W. W. Phelps indicate that the Saints—some of them—had sinned grievously against the commandments of God, and that the church had failed to deal with them as transgressors in the manner taught by Christ, and that this was at least one cause of their afflictions.

The Saints had been amply and timely warned in respect to these matters, as will be seen on reading the following revelations in Doctrine and Covenants: section 6: 7, given September 11th, 1831; section 83: 8, given September 22d and 23, 1832; section 94: 5, given August 2d, 1833.

"And your minds in times past have been darkened because of unbelief, and because you have treated lightly the things you have received, which vanity and unbelief hath brought the whole church under condemnation. And this condemnation resteth upon the children of Zion, even all; and they shall remain under this condemnation until they repent and remember the new covenant, even the Book of Mormon, and the former commandments which I have given them, not only to say, but to do according to that which I have written, that they may bring forth fruit meet for their Father's kingdom, otherwise there remaineth a scourge and a judgment to be poured out upon the children of Zion; for, shall the children of the kingdom pollute my holy land? Verily, I say unto you, nay."—D. C. 83: 8.

"And now behold if Zion do these things, she shall prosper and spread herself and become very glorious, very great, and very terrible; and the nations of the earth shall honor her, and shall say, surely Zion is the city of our God; and surely Zion can not fall, neither be moved out of her place, for God is there, and the hand of the Lord is there, and he hath sworn by the power of his might to be her salvation, and her high tower; therefore verily thus saith the Lord let Zion rejoice, for this is Zion, the pure in heart; therefore let Zion rejoice, while all the wicked shall mourn; for behold and lo, vengeance cometh speedily upon the ungodly, as the whirlwind, and who shall escape it; the Lord's scourge shall pass over by night and by day; and the report thereof shall vex all people; yet, it shall not be staid until the Lord come; for the indignation of the Lord is kindled against their abominations, and all their wicked works; nevertheless Zion shall escape if she observe to do all things whatsoever I have commanded her, but if she observe not to do whatsoever I have commanded her, I will visit her according to all her works, with sore affliction, with pestilence, with plague, with sword, with vengeance, with devouring fire; nevertheless, let it be read this once in their ears, that I, the Lord, have accepted of their offering; and if she sin no more, none of these things shall come upon her, and I will bless her with blessings, and multiply a multiplicity of blessings upon her, and upon her generations, forever and ever, saith the Lord you God. Amen.—D. C. 94: par. 5.

From what we have seen thus far it is apparent the Saints had in no sense violated the laws of the land, nor infringed upon the rights of other citizens, yet they had come far short of living up to their privileges, duties, and covenants to Godward, and for that reason they were afflicted and persecuted.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

THE following questions are being discussed at the present writing, November 20th, at Tunnel Hill, Illinois, between E. L. Kelley on our part, and Elder Thomas Williams on the part of the Christadelphians. The subjects for examination are 1, Consciousness after death. 2, Immortality of the spirit. 3, Annihilation. 4, Resurrection of the dead. 5, The pre-millennial existence of the kingdom of God. 6, The attribute of divinity in Christ while in the flesh. 7, Divine authenticity of the Book of Mormon. Brother Kelley wrote on the 15th, that they had passed through the ordeal of annihilation, and were to take up the fourth question. The discussion takes place within a mile of where Bro. Kelley was born, and where his father preached many years ago. This makes it very gratifying to Bro. Kelley who has no fears of what the issue may be. He writes the truth is unimpaired as yet.

Bro. D. T. Shaw writes from Fall River, Massachusetts, November 13th, renewing for his HERALD, and says: "It is the best religious paper I ever read."

Bro. R. C. Elvin writes from Williamsburg, Nebraska, November 10th, that at Napanee at first he had fair congregations, but that the three divines there combined to "freeze" him out, and one of them attempted to reply to him (Bro. Elvin) on the subject of baptism, and did so in a hasty, malicious manner, doing harm to himself and his position. This man said baptism was changed after Christ's death, and that to sprinkle was now the proper mode, and cited for proof Cornelius and his household, the jailor and his house, Lydia and her household, also the testimony of the early fathers.

Bro. J. R. Badham writes us from Los Angeles, California, November 12th, that they have a nice hall in which to hold services, and that some strangers come to hear the gospel. He says the work of God is gaining in southern California, but rather slowly, yet he thinks the prospects are good for its future.

Elder Peter Anderson wrote us from Logan, Utah, November 15th, that he held two meetings there the day before, with "good attendance and attention," and would speak there again the night of the 17th inst.

Bro. J. C. Clapp, writing from Salt Lake City, November 15th, had baptized two more, was holding the fort with success, and was preaching persistently, with fair outlook.

Bro. A. Himes, of Allendale, Missouri, wrote us November 19th, that he had held three meetings in Lots' Grove; and that he was blessed of the Master in his preaching the word. Bro. Himes had an appointment north of Grant City, on the fourth Sunday in November, which he was expecting to fill. May the good Spirit be with our brother is our prayer.

THERE are many things which happen to us in the journey of life which puzzle us; many in which it is difficult for us to decide what the right thing to be done is. Human judgment is at fault. Our experience furnishes us with no criterion from which to determine; nothing has ever caused us to think upon the principle involved; the subject may be surrounded with circumstances of such bewildering nature that we are not able to apply any known rule of procedure; our desires are to do right and our determination may be absolutely clear to do only what is right, but just where the right is we can not tell and how we are at a loss. God has provided for the Saint in such an emergency, a refuge, a sanctuary in which there is a more than reasonable certainty he will find help, it is the sanctuary of prayer, the sure resort of the troubled spirit. He is a happy man who when thus beset and bewildered has the assurance that he has so lived that he may call upon his God with assurance that he will be heard. Who can estimate the effectiveness of such a man? What an incentive to good behavior in Christ is this? To be constantly in the frame of mind to appeal to a never failing guide. Saints, do you value such a privilege? If you do, then be diligently, assiduously engaged in those works which commend you to your Heavenly Father.

BUSINESS OUTLOOK.

WE hope the opinions expressed in the clipping below may be early realized, yet it is well to go very carefully and keep business concerns under perfect control and in safe moorings till safe and generous conditions are ushered in.

"Bradstreet's and R. G. Dunn's commercial reports, stoutly claim a great revival in business the coming year. They say that never before were the prospects better for the man of business. We must place a great deal of confidence in Bradstreet and Dunn when we know that their statements of commercial prospects are based on sound principles, and a long experience in that line. Prosperity for the merchant means prosperity for the farmer, for the miner, and for all other laboring men, because upon these depends the merchant and professional man for his support. The report of good times comes to us like the voice of a friend to one long lost in the wilderness. Let us hope that our country is on the eve of a new era of prosperity."

A GOOD NAME.

"A GOOD name is better than precious ointment." This was the judgment of one of God's wise servants; and we feel gratified to know that the Saints of Lucas, as at other places, are winning by their upright, faithful lives a good report from those among whom they dwell. These are the conditions the Lord promises his people when they walk in his ways. "Righteousness and peace have kissed each other." "The work of righteousness shall be peace."

"The Latter Day Saints while comparatively unknown outside of the vicinity in which they exist, are known to us as the strongest religious sect in our prosperous little city. Not only are they the strongest in numbers, this branch consisting of about two hundred members, but they are zealous and energetic in all their church work. As to the principles upon which they base their belief we are not fully acquainted, and hence are not prepared to speak, but we desire to say that no other church furnishes our city with a better class of citizens. This sect is of very recent origin, the first organization being formed in Manchester, New York, on April 6th, 1830, under the leadership of the prophet, Joseph Smith. Because of their peculiar ideas of religion, they were persecuted by others and compelled to travel westward until some reached Salt Lake City, Utah; where, after the death of Joseph Smith, Brigham Young led off into the vicious practice of polygamy. Many refusing to follow Brigham Young in his practice, formed the organization like that found in our midst. These have no connection whatever with the polygamists of Utah, which are strenuously denounced by them as immoral. Let the people investigate before pointing the finger of contempt at a sect that are working the good that these are. The head-quarters of the church is now at Lamoni, Iowa, where they conduct a large newspaper and printing establishment. The total membership of the church in the work, is between 30,000 and 40,000. Space forbids us giving a more detailed account of the church."—Lucas Recorder.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY SISTER "FRANCES."

"By his life alone, Gracious and sweeter the better way was shown."

"A TRUE LIFE IS AT ONCE INTERPRETER AND PROOF OF THE GOSPEL."

It is "Thanksgiving Day" as we write, and we have just come in from the bountiful spread board of the "Sisters' Mite Society." Their dinner was a complete success, as is most, if not all, they ever undertake. Before dinner we listened to a Thanksgiving Discourse by Bro. Joseph, than which we never heard a better. It was entirely national in its character, if we make one exception. He spoke of the gratitude we should feel as a nation that the curse of slavery had been wiped out, and that we lived in a country of freedom; and thanked God his hat would never be lifted at the mandate of a despot, for God had said this should be a land of freedom, and upon or over it no king shall ever reign until He comes whose right it is to reign. In connection with this he spoke of the overthrowing of kingly governments, the casting down of the oppressors of mankind, and the ushering in of a better day, as cause for thanksgiving. He touched upon the fact that the Anglo-Saxon race was pushing its way into every habitable part of the earth, and with it was carried the love of free institutions and the indomitable energy characteristic of the race. To us as a people, however, the cream of the discourse was in the exception above referred to. Referring to the subject of temperance, he spoke of the record the Saints had made in Plano with reference to this cause, and then narrated briefly a conversation he had had with a gentleman just before the Fourth of July celebration of this year. This gentleman did not belong to the church, but when his boys wanted to go to Bethany to spend the Fourth, he told them, no. When they wanted to go to Leon, the answer was still, no. Finally he said, "You can spend your Fourth of July at Lamoni, or hitch up your team and go into the corn field." Bro. Joseph said he thought this rather hard, but the man said, "I can trust my boys in Lamoni, for I know that whatever may happen there will be good sober men to take care of them." We felt that, "A good name is better than precious ointment." One of the special causes of thanksgiving was, in the speaker's estimation, the glorious onward march of the "Temperance Cause."

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Sister Hays writes from Fair Play, Nevada:—"You have my best wishes for success in your work of love. We are living away from any church privileges, and no one of the faith to associate with except sister Stauts of Elko. We have spent some pleasant hours together. I have not heard a sermon since our beloved brother Roger fell asleep; hut we still live in hope."

PUT aside all your scruples and write for the "Column." It will comfort you and build you up. We spent six years in Smoky Valley, Nevada, away from all the Saints, and even now we sometimes long for the mountains and clear mountain streams, and the grand scenery of some of its canyons. But before we went there we had learned that

"The friends who most cheer us on life's rugged road,
Are the friends of our Master, the servants of God."

BRUSH CREEK, ILLS., Nov. 1st.

Dear Sisters:—I had thought of entering the Home Column for some time, and when I read "Whipped," it came right home to my heart; I too was left a widow in time of the war, with five little boys, and know so well the trials that a mother has in raising her children. My youngest one the kind Father took home; the others have grown to manhood and are honorable men in society; all belong to the church, are all married men and two of their wives are members, and two are not, as yet. My motto was to try and raise them honest and industrious and in the fear of God. I think firmness and decision are two of the best rules in raising a family. Never promise a child anything unless you aim to do it. I am proud to say that my boys neither use intoxicants nor chew tobacco, and I can assure you that they are proud of their mother.

I used to be a Methodist, but I feel thankful that the Lord saw fit in his mercy to call me out of darkness into his marvelous light, and I rejoice to-day that I am numbered with his Saints. I think the "Mothers' Home Column" a great help, and I do not see how any Saint can do without the Herald. With love to all, I remain your sister in the one faith,

NANCY SWAN.

OAK ISLAND, TEX., Nov. 5th.

Dear Sister Frances:—Feeling greatly blessed and encouraged by the great work of the Lord, which he has done here through his servants, brethren I. N. Roberts and J. C. Curry Jr., I desire to make known to you and other Saints the joyful tidings. The Lord has heard our prayers and has abundantly blessed our souls. The relief for which we have so long and earnestly prayed has come. The branch here is again organized, with old Bro. Absalom Kuykendall of Galland's Grove, Iowa, as our president; several added to the branch by letter, and two by baptism last week—Laura Neal and Delainey Bennett, daughters of two of the faithful sisters, who have held up the banner of our Lord in this place for the past two years, when all around seemed so dark and lonely. Although we were left alone to watch by our sisters and brethren, yet we were not alone; for Jesus, the great captain of our salvation met with us cheering us onward; and now, blessed be his holy name the victory is his, for we were weak instruments in his hands, "holding the fort" until his ministers came to set the house of God in order. The prejudice of the people gave way, and many came out to our meetings, who had never attended the preaching of the Latter Day Saints before, and they have shown only a peaceable inquiry into the things concerning the work of the Lord. Last Sunday we had the sacrament administered to us, and such a time of joy and comfort in the Holy Ghost as we had, my pen can not describe. The gifts of tongues and prophecy; the word of the Lord given to us in the past was brought to our remembrance, and cheering things in the future foretold. Many outside of the kingdom were present, and they seemed to marvel and wonder at these things; but none who were present, seemed to scoff or doubt the sincerity of those to whom it was given. Bro. Roberts was a stranger among us, but he has made many friends in and out of the church. He is a zealous worker in the Master's vineyard, and I feel that the Lord will bless him wherever he goes. Bro. Currie is young in the work, but is full of zeal and love for the cause; is talented and calculated to make friends and do much good wherever he goes. May the Lord watch over and guide him and may he cling to the rod of iron, in humility and faith is the prayer of the one who feels a motherly care for his welfare.

Our little Sunday School is prospering, and we are all pleased with the Hope.

Your sister in the gospel,

NANNIE A. GIFFORD.

This is good news and we rejoice with you, dear sister, and thus it shall ever be, for God will remember the sheep of his pasture.

LAMONI, IOWA, Oct. 25th.

Dear Sisters:—Through the Home Column we receive many good and precious teachings to the mothers concerning the children. I am not a mother, but as a teacher in the Sunday School am one deeply interested in the improvement of the young, I thought to write a few thoughts on the subject of teaching in the Sunday School. I believe that next to the parent the Sunday School teacher may do good. It is the duty of both to do all that we can to interest the children in the Sunday School and the study of God's word. Many parents act as if they had nothing further to do but to dress the child and start it for Sunday School. Mothers, is that child capable of studying the lesson without help from you. If not, is it not your duty to give the necessary aid? It not only encourages and helps your child to go with the lesson prepared, but it encourages and greatly helps the teacher to explain and impress the truths of the lesson upon the heart and mind. The parent and teacher must work hand in hand, earnestly, prayerfully, if we would accomplish the good we desire in the Sunday School. If the parents can do so, I think it is their duty to go with, and take part in the school with the children; if not, they may encourage the work by an occasional visit to the school. Teachers, do we realize the responsibilities that rest upon us? Do we study and meditate and pray over the lesson, to bring out every thought, to devise ways to reach each heart, and bring out their thoughts, and make a lasting impression. Do we realize that we deal with "eternal truths, immortal souls?" Do we feel the so?

lemnity of those truths, the value of those souls? My experience and observation have led me to feel that we do not as we should.

Near six months ago our superintendent asked me if I would teach the young men's class? I thought had she asked me to join the young ladies class and be taught that I would have most heartily responded; but what she asked of me seemed so impossible, that I said No. But she in her earnestness said, "Think of it and pray over it before you decide." Just at that time brother Joseph remarked in his sermon that "many Saints said they were willing to do what they could, and when asked to do something they said I can't;" so I decided to say I will try, though I felt that there were those in the class better able to teach me. I took charge of the class, hoping thereby to profit, and to be profited. We have a nice class of fourteen young men who are taking a great interest in the lessons from week to week, which we pray may be continued until our desires for them may be reached. All of this class are not yet within the "ark of safety;" such we feel especially anxious to do good to, and desire an interest in your prayers.

Oh teachers, let us be not wanting in seriousness, we know not the result of our labors, "He who continueth patiently in well doing shall reap if he faint not." I feel that there is a grand, a lasting work to be done in the Sunday School. Let us awake to a realization of this work, with renewed zeal and earnestness, is the prayer of sister

FAY.

FREMONT, Ind., November 7th.

Dear Sisters of the Home Column:—I have long felt it my duty to write, but have thus long failed to do so; now I do want to become one among the many already therein. As I have read the letters from week to week; it has so wonderfully cheered my heart and encouraged me. I, too, am a mother, and have been left to bring my little children up without the help of a husband; but my heavenly Father has been to me a present helper in all times of need; and now he has given me the pleasure of reading those beautiful letters in the Column, that are so much help to us who are toiling, as it were, alone in this world. But not alone, for we have one that has promised to be a husband to the widow and a father to the fatherless. I tell you I love the Home Column because it gives so much good instruction about bringing up our dear little children in the right way, and teaching them the way into the kingdom.

Ever praying for the welfare of Zion, I remain,
your sister,

ANNIE.

Correspondence.

TABOR, Iowa, Nov. 16th.

Dear Herald:—We are still alive to the interest of the work and are striving in weakness to promote its welfare. Since our last writing we have been blessed with the able labors of J. W. Gillen, which were gratefully received by the Saints and well spoken of by non-Saints. He finished up his work among us at the Wheeler's Grove camp meeting.

Our last conference, held at Shenandoah, was a success. We were blessed with Elders E. C. Briggs and E. L. Kelley, whose efficient help came in time of need. The Saints and friends drank eagerly from the fountain of truth as God's Spirit manifested it through his servants. Elder Kelley's able exposition of the temporal law, in the Plum Hollow Branch, greatly benefitted the Saints, and highly interested our friends, and we all say, Come again, Bro. Kelley.

We still hold to the breeze the banner of truth unfurled by the God of heaven through the instrumentality of his servants and the administration of holy angels, and are thankful for the inestimable privilege of bearing testimony to the world that the work is the Lord's. We are blessed, indeed, according to promise, in preaching the word in different localities and branches of the district, and are unable to fill one-tenth of the calls made both by Saints and friends. We hope to occupy faithfully and profitably, by the aid of God's Spirit, so that the work may not suffer loss in the field assigned us. We say to the Saints in this district, Strive to do the will of the Master, that you may enter in at the straight gate that leadeth to the glory of God. I am thankful for the help received from the Elders and officers of the district, and pray that they may not slacken their efforts in so glorious a cause. I am solicitous for the work and sincerely pray for its ultimate triumph through Christ our Lord.

Yours in bonds,

HENRY KEMP.

MERLIN, Ont., Nov. 18th.

Bro. W. W. Blair:—Elder John H. Lake came to this place on the 20th of October, and commenced preaching the word to those that came out, and on the 25th he baptized my daughter Flora, and on the 29th he baptized one more (head of a family) by the name of Smart. His wife belonged to the Church before, so now this family is made happy in the Lord, and we hope others soon may be. On Sunday, October 31st, I took Bro. John H. Lake to West Tilbury, where there were two appointments for him at brother Atkins'. At this place there are twelve Saints in number, six who once belonged to the Baddertown Branch. The other six were baptized last winter when Elders S. Brown and R. Coburn were there. On Monday, November 1st, brother Atkins took Elder Lake and the writer to the village of Cambria, where we found brother and sister Mather. They are still in the faith. They subscribed for the Herald. For my part, I can't see how any Saint can do without the Herald, or other church papers. I had rather live on two meals a day than do without the church papers. Our Father in heaven has said, Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth from God; and in the Herald we find good food. There are hundreds of Saints who, if they knew the value of the Herald, would not be without it.

Come, ye Elders, when among the Saints, explain this to them; it will be better, and do good. We drove home, about fourteen miles, and Elder Lake remaining to teach the way of life, Bro. Walter Corless aiding him. He organized a branch there with twelve members, Bro. Walter Corless presiding Priest. Elder Lake got back to my place the 13th, and preached four times to date. He expects to go with me from here to Blenheim, seventeen miles east of here about Friday next. We thank God that he came to this part of the Lord's vineyard, for he has done good. The Saints here and in West Tilbury have been edified and strengthened by his wise counsel and instruction. He has many calls to go here and there from the Saints in different places. It is very easy for the Saints to write and say, "Bro. Lake, can't you come and pay us a visit, we want some preaching." I believe that Bro. Lake and other Elders also would gladly respond to all the calls where good could be done, if it were possible to get there. Although he is an apostle of the Lord Jesus Christ, still he is a man and has not wings to fly on. It takes money to travel, and little do some of us think about it. I mean by the help of God to do what I can to roll on this work. Last week when Elder Lake had meetings at Bro. Corless' there was a man present from Tilbury Center. He got filled with what he heard and went back and began to thresh the preachers there with the doctrine of the Saints. So the seed is being sown in that way.

Yours in Christ,

A. MCKENZIE.

HAVEN, IOWA, Nov. 20th.

Dear Herald:—How we welcome you every Thursday. You are indeed bread to our souls. When we contemplate the goodness and mercies of God in raising up a leader, and one to whom he revealed himself spiritually, how our hearts swell in gratitude to him, that we were permitted to hear and accept the truth; and how sad we felt at times when we hear of so many base falsehoods printed and circulated derogatory to the character of the martyr. Would to God we could attain to the degree of goodness and holiness to which we firmly believe he did. But, for the sake of argument, we will admit that Joseph the Seer was a polygamist—practiced and taught—does that prove by any means that the doctrines he taught concerning Christ and his true word, are pernicious and to be shunned? No; we believe he was inspired of God, and that he had the courage and fortitude to proclaim the only and true way by which we may inherit eternal life; and we sincerely believe that he is now rejoicing with the angels, and that at the first resurrection he will come forth clad in shining garments, bearing the palm of victory.

Our Elder Geo. Shimel is doing what he can for the Master's cause, as are all, apparently, in our branch. Peace and harmony prevail.

Your sister,

MAGGIE BERG.

THE SOREHEAD.

ALMOST everywhere, either in great or small quantity, is he to be found; and, as he is something of an attraction, it might not be amiss to regale the gentle reader with a few items concerning him.

To those whose good fortune it is to be unacquainted with him, this, we think, will serve as ample introduction for all concerned. We have known him for a long time; and we have wandered and roamed, and yet, wherever we have been, "in all the churches of the Saints," even there have we found him. He is the chronic growler who is ever finding fault with the management of things in the church. He is never satisfied, and is always in a state of unrest. The unhappy elements which combine in the general make up of his character, may be summed up in jealousy, envy, self-conceit, and selfishness. And these "thorns in the flesh," are ever and anon, coming unpleasantly to the surface to be the observed of all. He is jealous of another's success, and envious because another succeeds, where perhaps, he has met failure and reverse. Cropping out now and then, we discover strong indications of self-righteousness; and we can not but see, that in all matters of difference whatever Elders' courts may have determined, or others have thought, this man has always been right. In fact, although in some instances, he seems as a veritable Ishmaelite, whose hand is against every man, and every man's hand against him, he is a poor, persecuted, and injured innocent. In other cases, you can discover an inordinate love of self—and with that a constant tendency to overestimate himself, and underestimate all others. He may be found combatting this and that, finding fault with whoever may have been preaching, magnifying trifles into mountains, and misconstruing utterances in order to detract from the esteem in which others may be regarded. And sometimes, in his gusto to find fault, he even dares to tell "an undeveloped truth," (the new name of a lie), about those in whom he has so great interest. This may seem rather severe, but not so, when we consider that the person who misrepresents acts or utterances is guilty of lying in so doing.

I have known the utterances of some of the ablest defenders of the faith so stated that it would appear that the "first principles" of the gospel had been made the subject of public ridicule and derision. I pity that man or woman who can lift up hands in holy horror and tell a lie, as though really believing it a just defence of God's truth. A little more work for such people might possibly result in them having less to answer for before God. The sorehead is touched to the very quick when he sees his brother more admired as an expounder of the faith, or more popular as a pulpit talker. If, through the wisdom and discretion reposed in the presiding officer, his brother Elder is called upon more often than himself to occupy the pulpit, he can't tolerate it, and afterwards he may be heard declaiming against favoritism.

The matter of fitness, and the "moving of the spirit," cut no figure with him; and to hear him tell it, the presiding officer is guilty of making unjust discrimination. Good judgment and discretion, according to his way of thinking, are of no use in a presiding officer, and it would be unjust were he to use the best means at hand for the good of the work. He goes around, at least where his palaver is unrebutted, finding fault with presiding officers, and those called upon to preach, as though he could build himself up by tearing others down.

And sometimes he is slightly tintured with the rowdy—and he listens to the preaching till the sermon is nearly ended, when, to display his disgust, he gets up and struts out. Poor soul! He has been almost crucified with that long sermon of forty or fifty minutes! But perhaps the part of charity regarding him would be to consider that to whom but little is given, of him little is required. At times he vents his spleen towards presiding officers, in discourteous acts. Where common decency would but dictate an assent he roars out boisterously and rude, No. Refinement, or gentlemanly instincts, are strangers to him, and he but glories and gloats in the opportunity to show indignity to those in authority. Little does the boorish sorehead seem to realize how he is regarded by thoughtful, considerate, and well-meaning persons. Presiding officers and elders' courts have duties to perform, regardless of the frowns of evil doers, whether within or outside the church.

Occasionally we see an elder who is conspicuous for apathy and want of interest. He is generally absent from church. Talk to him, and see how wonderfully glib he is in finding fault with others. Indeed it would seem that all else but himself, his wife, his son John and his wife, were sadly in the dark. But should the church gather around him, and pour cheap flattery into his ears, giving him great praise for the little that he may have done in the long ago, then notice how he brightens up. Although stunted and without growth, make him out to be the very embodiment of wisdom; and the "one, altogether lovely," and just notice the change come over the spirit of his dream. He no more takes a back seat, and indeed he feels like "standing on the top of the heap." But unless he can be prominent, and a chief man, he feels bad, and "refuses to be comforted." Why, he is a dreadfully misused man unless he is recognized according to his inflated notions of his own importance. And of course things are sadly "out of joint" in the church. "Birds of a feather will flock together," and without doubt, in all large branches there will be kindred and associate spirits, in the very fitness of things.

Jesus likened the kingdom unto a net which is cast into the sea which gathers of all kinds; so therefore, we need not be astonished at the presence of the proverbial croaker and sorehead within the fold.

A man may be the main stay and almost indispensable in a small branch; but should he remove into a larger branch, among many of the "tried and true," it is quite probable that his local importance would be considerably changed. Perhaps he is no more the chief man, nor yet prominent in the affairs of the church. But should his changed condition make him envious toward his brethren? Should this arouse his latent jealousy, and convert him into a dissatisfied, whining malcontent? God forbid, that any man should so lose the Spirit as to make himself miserable, as well as those in immediate contact. He should not think that his usefulness is ended, and he should be a conservator of peace and quiet, adapting himself to his new and changed surroundings. This we think is far better than for him to grow cool and careless, losing the spirit, and displaying a peevish and jealous disposition, going around spreading discontent, "sowing to the flesh," "of the flesh to reap corruption." Men, knowing their elements of weakness, should guard sacredly the "temple of God, and so avoid partaking of the grumbling and faultfinding spirit, so pernicious to the peace and well being of the church. They should cultivate contentment and gentleness if they would enjoy the blessings which belong to the children of God, emulating that righteousness which alone exalts a nation.

T. E. LLOYD.

THE SITUATION AS I SEE IT.

THE Bishopric and the Twelve were commanded of the Lord (and I believe "without mental reservation" that it was the Lord) to execute law of tithing, or to take proper steps or measures to execute the law. And of necessity a law must be binding on a people if measures to execute it are to be taken by certain officers chosen and upheld by the people. The law is not a temporal or worldly law, howbeit it applies to temporal things. And being a law of the Lord it must be "perfect," as saith the Psalmist, "The law of the Lord is perfect, converting (or restoring) the soul: the testimony of the Lord is sure, making wise the simple. The statutes of the Lord are right, rejoicing the heart; the commandment of the Lord is pure, enlightening the eyes."

Then, if tithing is the law of the Lord, if it is a statute of the Lord, and a commandment of the Lord, it is perfect, and will give understanding and light. It is merely foolish to say that it is one of the "carnal commandments" given to disobedient and gainsaying Israel of old, in the days of Moses. It formed part of the Constitution of the church of God, long before the by-laws written by Moses were given. The principle is as old as the gospel. The sanctity of the Sabbath was not established by the law of Moses, but was established from the beginning of creation; yet under Moses, rules and regulations governing the observance of the day and attaching penalties for non-observance were made.

The fact that God forbade idolatry, stealing, lying, adultery, murder, dishonoring of parents, and covetousness, under the law of Moses, is no proof that there was no law against them before. For if no law, then no transgression, and it would have been no sin to worship idols, or to lie or to steal, or to commit adultery, or to murder, or to covet, or to dishonor parents for over two thousand years. The gospel was before the law; it was preached to, and understood by Abraham; and he observed the principle of tithing; and it was a tenth of his increase, and a tenth of all his possessions; that is, a tenth of what he already possessed, and a tenth of what he gained after that first tithing. If tithing was a law unto Abraham, the father of the faithful, and by his works of righteousness did he make his faith perfect, and was justified before God; shall not we who are Abraham's seed do also the works of Abraham? The works which formed part of the gospel law, we mean.

We are not to do those special works of Abraham, such as offering up a child in sacrifice, or to leave home and friends, to go to a far and new country, which were strictly individual duties enjoined by direct, personal commandment; but the works of righteousness that Abraham did were the works required by the gospel; for that is the law of righteousness, as Paul says, in Romans 1:16, 17. Abraham was not under the law of Moses, but he was under a law nevertheless, and that was the gospel law; and in honoring that law he observed the principle of tithing. Did the gospel begin with Abraham? Nay, but it was preached by angels unto Adam, who taught his children, and they in turn taught their children, and so on down to Abraham. Moreover, the teachings of the Lord were recorded or written in Adam's day, and in this way also was the gospel law understood from generation to generation. The principle of tithing was doubtless expanded somewhat under the Mosaic law to meet the necessities of the case, or to furnish support for the Levitical priesthood; but because it was employed to assist the priests in performance of duties, some of which are not now in force, and which were merely temporal, it does not follow that this law of assistance was a temporal law; and not being temporal it must be spiritual, because pertaining to spiritual things, and emanating from a spiritual being. The term temporal, however, need not be so objectionable, for it does not necessarily convey the idea of carnality or worldliness; but means that which belongs to time, or to this life. I believe that the law of tithing in this sense is both temporal and spiritual or eternal. It belongs to this life and the life to come. It is temporal in its operations, but spiritual and eternal in its consequences. Paul could not separate the temporal from the spiritual, for he held that they who preached the gospel should live of the gospel. As the gospel is spiritual bread and water, it could sustain spiritual life only, within itself, abstractly speaking. Paul was speaking of sustaining the physical life, and it was simply in this form, viz., that in return for spiritual food imparted by himself and others, they who were thus fed should give him and his fellow-laborers the bread and meat that perisheth, or food for the body. If the principle is correct and just, (and who can deny it), what objection can be urged, in reason and justice, against some law to rule and regulate the principle, providing such rule be fair and just? There are but two laws affecting this matter of the support of the ministry that I can see taught in the scriptures, and they are the giving of all that is possessed by the church members, and the giving of a tenth, or tithing. If any consider the latter burdensome, they are at liberty to adopt the other. The giving of free will offerings on the first day of the week, as recommended by Paul, was for an especial purpose,—an extra effort we may say,—outside of, or additional to the general law governing the support of the ministry and the poor in each locality. It was to help the famine-stricken saints in Judea. It will serve as a pattern for us to follow, to raise funds for special necessities, like the repairing of the temple at Kirtland for instance; or for any purpose that the general church funds may not be used for; or even to assist where these funds may be insufficient. I have an idea that the work of the early church in giving all they had in possession, was something of the nature of the law requiring a consecration of property and receiving back an inheritance, which will apply to the time when the church can receive back inheritances; for it is evident that the church did not keep up this rule or custom continually; for Paul shows in first Corinthians, chapter eleven, that some had houses and some had not. So they did not have "all things common" among the Corinthians.

I heartily agree with the idea of the Bishopric that a tenth of what a man or woman possesses now should be given to the Lord, and a tenth of what is an increase over what he has left, at an annual inventory of his possessions. It is not fair, consistent, nor the truth, that a man or woman can commence to pay a tenth of the increase over his present capital, or (what I consider a better term and which covers the whole ground) his possessions, and not owe the Lord anything for the past years. Now mark this if I am under the law of tithing now, I have been ever since I became a member of the Church of Christ, (if not ever since I was born). But we will say that, ever since I was baptized into Christ, and yielded myself to his service. If I am in debt to the Lord therefore, it is (to say the very least), for one tenth of all that I have gained since I became a Christian. But if I am simply a steward, whether saint or sinner, which is the simple fact, then I owe the Lord a tenth of my increase, or in plain English, of what I have gained in the past; or a tenth of what I possess. However, the point I wish to make is, that at least, since I was baptized and became of my own volition a servant of Christ, I owe the Lord one tenth of what I have gained since that time. In my own case, or to apply the rule personally, I did not own any real-estate or house and land, March 14th, 1866. I now own a house and two lots in Independence, Missouri,—or will own two if the Lord opens the way for me to save one, by paying one hundred dollars more than I have paid; I owe also something like one hundred and thirty or forty dollars on the house. If I can sell the property and pay the man what I owe him, I shall owe the Lord one tenth of what I have left, for I have not yet gained the amount I owe. So if I should have 1,000 dollars left, I owe and I shall pay to the Bishop 100 dollars. What other possessions I have of a personal kind should be assessed in the same way; for why should I escape paying tithing on a piano, or an organ, or a library, or a gold watch, or silver plate, &c., if I have spent the money I have gained in that direction instead of investing it in land or houses, or cattle or sheep or hogs? Now I am not alluding to or "hitting" any individual, but I introduce the principle merely. Possessions are possessions; whether money, jewelry, houses, lands, or live stock, poultry or canary birds. This is no trifling matter or children's work, and should be viewed candidly and seriously. Let us suppose a case. Here are several persons who some time ago came into possession of 100 dollars cash a piece, which was an increase. One bought a piece of land, one a few cows, one a parlor organ, one a gold watch, one a lot of fine fowls, canaries, and other birds. Now, why do not each of these owe the Lord ten dollars? or does the two that bought land, and cows only have to pay, and three are exempt? Property is property. And it was the property of the Saints that the Lord demanded tithing upon. My brother's thousand dollars in the bank is as much subject to tithing as my house and lot, and if my property will bring 100 dollars more a year from now than it will to-day, I must pay my ten dollars, as he will his ten, which would be the interest on his capital at ten per cent. If I put my thousand dollars in organs, watches, books, &c., which may not increase in value, I only will pay the first 100 dollars on my possessions, if they are worth one hundred more a year hence than they are now, I should pay one tenth of the increase. I certainly am compelled, if I use my reasoning faculties, to agree with the Bishopric that my present possessions must in the whole be considered an "increase," and that I owe the Lord for one tenth till I pay what I owe. If any one can show that my indebtedness commenced only when I understood the law, and not since I became a servant of God in obeying the gospel, I earnestly desire that he will give us the argument that will sustain that ground. I am perfectly willing to concede that God may not condemn the man or woman, who not understanding the law ten years ago failed to comply with its requirements, on the same ground that he will not condemn the heathen for not obeying the gospel which they never heard or understood, but can any one be excused from paying up in full, when they learn that they were subject to the law for the past ten years.

"THE SURPLUS."

I believe that the Bishops are right in their application of the surplus being required only of those who gather up to Zion. And that fact suggests the thought, that if there is any command of God in force to-day requiring a gathering to Zion, i. e., Independence, Missouri, then those who have already gathered there, and those who may hereafter gather there, must observe that feature of the law; they must pay their "surplus" or be cast out of the land. They will not be found able to stand. See what the revelation says. Read and ponder it well, ye dwellers in Zion. But as the Bishops say, and as I have held and taught for years both in Zion and elsewhere, there is now no law in force requiring a gathering to the "center place," but "into the regions round about." The wisdom of keeping the "surplus" till the church is ready to purchase inheritances is seen in the fact, that with the surplus as so much additional capital, the increase may be augmented, and the surplus itself may increase considerably, and thus more means be found to purchase homes for the worthy poor. It is wise and proper that every one be permitted to make as much as he can in an honorable and just manner with his capital, surplus and all, after he has paid his tenth of what he possesses, which of course means a tenth of the surplus if there be any. But candidly I can not determine what is a surplus now; but I can readily understand what would be surplus when the law of consecration, which is to be the law in Zion hereafter, will be executed. Thus when a man consecrates his property and receives back what would be his inheritance or what he needs for the support of himself and family, all above that would be "surplus." With this idea before me, and for reasons given by the Bishops heretofore, I can agree with them that the surplus is not required now. If I understand the situation, it is this. Every member of the church, without exception, is to pay a tenth of his or her possessions first, and a tenth of the increase thereafter annually. If I have a farm, and stock, or any other property which I have bought with other people's money, I own just what I do not owe for, and no more. If I have a farm under my supervision that is worth 5,000 dollars, and I paid $2,500 dollars with money that I claimed to be my own, on it, and borrowed 2500 more to complete the payment, I only own half of the farm. If I have 2500 dollars worth of stock which I do not owe for, yet that stock is not really mine if liable to be seized to pay my debt with, yet if seized, and the debt paid, I own the farm, or in either case I own 5000 dollars worth of property, and I owe the Lord 500 dollars. If I make the first year 2,500 dollars so to pay my debt I must pay the Lord 250 dollars of that, for the increase is 2,500 dollars. But suppose I spend my increase for something that I wanted but did not really need,—say a new house, and a pony for my son, and a piano for my daughter, and a Jersey cow or two for my wife, and was not in debt,—and these things cost 2500 dollars, and that was all of my increase for the year, how much do I owe the Lord? Just 250 dollars. Can I expect any blessing at his hands such as he promised through Malachi? No. But suppose I can not raise the 250 dollars. Then I should sell the piano, or a Jersey cow, or something that I can do without, or that is not essential to the carrying on of my business. But is it necessary to wait to the end of a year to pay the tenth of my increase? I think not, but I may pay it quarterly, or even monthly, but I am to pay the Lord every year the tenth of the increase of every year.

Suppose I calculate my legitimate outlays or expenses, and my true gains, income, or revenue, and find that I have made this month one hundred dollars, and I put that away or pay ten dollars to the Bishop or his Agent. And next month I lose a horse worth one hundred dollars, yet make otherwise one hundred and fifty dollars, I owe only five dollars to the Lord, or if I make only one hundred I owe nothing that month. Or I may calculate every three or six months. But at any rate every year I am to square accounts, and offset my gains or the increase in value of my real estate, or stock, or whatever property I may have, with my legitimate outlays, or what may be called my losses, and the remainder, whether it be one dollar, or one hundred, or a thousand, or ten thousand dollars, I owe the Lord one-tenth; after I have paid one-tenth of what I have gained since I was born; at which time I brought nothing with me, and owned nothing. Now I have my idea about Paul's instruction to the Church, to lay aside on the first day of the week, according as the Lord had prospered them. I believe this was not a regular, continual gathering on every Lord's day, but a special collection for a special and urgent case, even famishing brethren. Paul wanted them to attend to it at once, and not wait till he came, for he did not want any "gathering" when he came. He wanted them to have it all ready so he could get, and take or send it to those in need. Starving people could not wait very long for weekly contributions to accumulate. It was a case requiring prompt action, and liberality. If not regular weekly contribution, then the amount given was not what they made or the profits over expenses of each week. What then? Why, as the Lord had prospered each one, or according to their respective ability, they were to give. Those who possessed the most were to give the most; because for each one to give a like sum, when one had been prospered more than another, would not be giving as the Lord had prospered each one; but they would so give if all had been prospered alike, which was not any more likely than is the case in any local church to-day. But if each one had to give according as he had prospered, there must have been a definite per centage of the gains of each one; or else it was the surplus, or all above the needed capital and running expenses of each one. A definite per centage was most probable. Apollos had been to Corinth a man mighty in the Scriptures i. e., the Old Testament, and many of the Corinthian Saints were Jews, and they doubtless well understood the principle of tithing, and in all probability they gave a tenth of their increase, as did their father Abraham. I can not see into a giving according as the Lord had prospered each one, if the poor gave five or ten dollars, and the rich twenty-five or fifty cents, as is often the case in these days; nor if every one gave the like sum, whether large or small. A tenth, or some other per cent of the increase could fulfil the "order" of Paul. But if this tenth principle is too burdensome for any "gospel" lover, he can follow the example of the widow with her two mites—her all—or as in the case of the early Christians, they can sell all they have and then give the money to the apostles; or divide up equally among those who have nothing as Jesus commanded.

At the risk of being considered too strenuous, or too exacting, I can not help repeating the thought that many of us are in debt to the Lord, for the past annual increase, to say the least. When did I become in debt to the Lord? I learn that when I became subject to the law of tithing; and when was that? When I became a member of the Church, what I owed then was subject to the law of tithing, and has been ever since. The Church will not compel any one to pay their debts to the Lord. But is God unchangeable? Is he the same to-day, yesterday, and always? If so, (and who can deny it?) then the curse of God must rest on us, as on Israel in the days of Malachi; and if the curse for disobedience applies to us, so the blessing promised for obedience to the law of tithing applies to us also. The promise of the gift of the Holy Spirit is to every soul who believes and obeys the gospel; and I do not believe there ever was a case where God failed to give the Spirit when the conditions upon which its bestowal depended were fully complied with; yet I have heard people who had been baptized, i. e., immersed by some Elder, who affirm that they did not receive the blessing promised. The failure to receive must rest with the individual. They may not have understood the gospel; may not have genuinely repented, or may have desired to unite with the church through some sinister or improper motive. God's word of promise to the penitent believer can not fail. And so of tithing payers; "the Lord loveth a cheerful giver." It is the willing and obedient or the willingly obedient, who are to eat the good of the land in the latter days. Suppose a man pays tithing grudgingly, and laments his act continually after, what credit can he expect from the Lord. The Scotch Deacon was not far wrong when a parsimonious party put a half crown in the plate instead of a farthing as he intended, and afterward wanted the Deacon to give him back the half crown in exchange for the farthing; but the Deacon refused. He then comforted himself with the thought, and said that he would get credit for the half crown in the day of Judgment. The Deacon told him he would get no credit for the half crown that he gave, but for the farthing that he intended to give. Perhaps the cause of failure to obtain the blessing promised—if any have failed to receive it—may be explained on similar ground. But will the Lord excuse a person in the day of judgment because his plea may be that he did not give his tenth because he felt that he could not do it cheerfully? What sort of a Soul has a Latter Day S—no, a professed Latter Saint who can not give one tenth back to the Lord of what he has received from the Lord. Of course we have nothing to say, if he claims that he has been prospered by man or the devil, and not by the Lord. Is it true that “the earth is the Lord’s and the fulness thereof.” Then how is anything our own? Are we not simply agents or stewards? Paul affirms that our bodies and spirits are not our own, but the Lord’s. And if we do not have the ownership of our bodies and spirits, how can we claim that our houses, and lands, and horses, and cows, and sheep, and swine, and poultry, and jewelry, and our personal property in general are our own? Now, the fact is that we, and all that we have, are the Lord’s. And in abundant mercy and loving kindness he says, in substance, “Give me one tenth of the time, the talents, the money, and everything I have put into your care, and you can have nine-tenths for your own use and benefit. Yet we are but stewards of this nine-tenths. We will surely be brought to an account if we waste, or squander, or fail to make proper use of the time and talents and money and other property intrusted to our care. To this thought agrees the word of the Lord. “Let no man deceive himself that he shall not give an account of his stewardship unto me.”—Rev. Sep. 1882. Who among us is ready to render our account with joy and not with grief? What an awful solemn thought, that we must give account for the use we make of our bodies. Think of that, tobacco users; and beer, wine and rum drinkers. And the use we make of our spirits. Think of that, novel readers and lovers of frivolity and foolish fashions. We shall give an account of our time; and is it spent in idleness, useless employment, worldly gratification, and sensuous pleasures? We shall give an account of our talents; are we faithful as apostles, prophets, seventies, high priests, bishops, elders, priests, teachers, deacons, receivers of spiritual gifts, and in whatever calling the Lord has placed us? We shall give an account of our money; and are we making the wisest and most profitable employment of it, or have we invested it where it brings us no gain, but rather loss?

We shall give an account of our property of all kinds; what are we doing with it? Is it gaining value as it should, being not our own but another’s, and he, the Lord? And now, finally, what have we done with the Lord’s portion of the time, talents, money and property entrusted to our care? Have we wasted, or failed to make proper use of our portion? What have we done with that which we have no right to keep or use or misuse, namely, the Lord’s tenth? If we have failed to make proper use of our portion, and must answer for the failure, what shall be our situation and our fate for having robbed the Lord of his portion? Will it not be well to think over these things, at least occasionally? It is a personal matter. “So then every one of us shall give an account of himself to God.” It will be all that we can undertake, without being responsible for any one else, and yet we may not escape judgment, for the example set others, either of doing what we ought not, or of leaving undone the things we ought to do, and that idea will apply to the tithing question as well as to other matters. Example is perhaps better than precept in this matter than in many others. I judge no man, for I know not what any one has done or left undone, but I believe that the Bishopric and the Twelve should be exemplars in the matter of paying tithes.

Yours for the truth and right,

THOMAS W. SMITH.

PAIROA, August 25th, 1886.

COMMUNICATION FROM ELDER D. WHITMER.

DEAR BRETHREN:—Before anything appeared in the Herald relating to that so-called “interview,” I sent them a letter correcting the mistakes in that newspaper article. The Editors of the Herald had my letter before them, before they published anything about this matter. I told them not to publish my letter for this reason, because I did not know the Herald was going to publish anything relating to that “interview.” So the Herald Editors went ahead and published that so-called interview (with my letter before them) and appended comments to it against me on some of the very points which I stated in my letter that I did not say. For instance, the Herald almost abuses me for saying that Joseph had treated his wife brutally, when they had my letter before them stating I had said no such thing. They say nothing about receiving my letter correcting mistakes, until in the winding up of the last article in the last number of the Herald, after they had already made it appear as if I had made all of these statements to a newspaper reporter. Is this fair dealing? But this will suffice on this point. I want the brethren to understand that I say all this in the spirit of love and meekness. Below I give you the letter I wrote to Brothers Joseph and Blair. I wrote briefly, because I am writing a letter to the Latter Day Saints on all of these matters. I was moved on by the Spirit of God to write an epistle to the Latter Day Saints, before that gentleman came here who wrote that so-called “interview.” I explain in this letter how it was that this article happened to get into the newspaper. The man who wrote the article is an old Latter Day Saint.

“RICHMOND, Mo., 1886.

“Dear Bros. Joseph and Blair:—I suppose you have seen an article in the Chicago Inter-Ocean of 17th inst, being an interview of a reporter with me. In regard to it, I want to say as follows: The gentleman who wrote it used to believe in the Book of Mormon, but his faith has been shaken of late, and he came to me as an honest enquirer for the truth. He did not tell me anything about his intentions of publishing any article. He is with a job printing house, and wanted the tracing of the “characters,” etc., to have a “wood cut” made of them to send to me. He is quite well posted on the Latter Day Saint question. He asked me many questions, but took no notes while here. I believe him to be an honest man.

“On the following points he misunderstood me: In regard to some things about Oliver Cowdery; some things about Martin Harris. He misunderstood me in regard to Joseph’s quarrel with his wife. I did not say that Joseph treated his wife brutally on that occasion. I only said that Joseph had quarrelled with his wife, and lost the spirit of revelation until he repented and made amends with his wife. He also made a mistake in saying Nauvoo, when it should have been Kirtland. In regard to what he has written about the Kirtland endowment, I told him it was a failure, and not what we expected. I told him nothing about me being shot at when I left Far West. Others told him about other brethren being fired upon by the Danites when they left Far West. He misunderstood me when he wrote that I “had no respect for the position of the present Joseph;” you know that I have respect for you, and love you, and sympathize with you, but believe you are in error. I write you this letter in confidence. Do not publish it.

Your brother in love,

DAVID WHITMER.

“I will not say any thing more now concerning these matters, as I am writing an epistle to all believers in the Book of Mormon, in which I speak of all these things. (I intend to publish my epistle in the form of a tract for free distribution to all who write here to Richmond, Missouri, for it). I may state some facts which are on record in the History of the Church written by my brother John Whitmer who was appointed Church Historian by revelation in 1831. It is my desire that the Herald will publish all that myself and Bro. John C. Whitmer have to say. Before I send any article to the Herald for publication, I want the Herald to state to their readers through their columns that they will publish all we have to say, and that they will publish it solid: I mean, not put in comments in between my writing, but solid in the columns; and that they will give me as much space at a time as there has been in the Herald of late against me. I think this will be fair. If the Herald refuses to do this, I prefer to publish it in tract form. The God of heaven knows that all I have to say will be said in the spirit of love and meekness. The Spirit of God has never moved upon me until recently to publish to the world many truths which are not generally known. I will not engage in a wrangle or contention in the Herald or any other paper. I will begin at the first and follow straight through until I am done. This is no controversy on my part to strive for the mastery. The Spirit of God has moved upon me to write to all believers in the Book of Mormon, and to the world, to open the understanding of the honest in heart who have been led into error by their shepherds who are in error: To call them back to the plain and simple teachings of Christ in the new covenant of the Book of Mormon, which teachings Christ gave to the Nephites because there was disputations among them: Telling them to write his teachings for they would come down to us for our teachings. And if we would accept the words of Christ himself on this very point, we would make the new covenant of the Book of Mormon alone our only guide on all doctrinal points,—the order of offices in the church, etc. The teachings of Christ to the "twelve" on this continent are his teachings to us: given in all plainness, to settle all disputations among us, just the same as among the Nephites. All who accept Christ's words on this point, taking the new covenant of the Book of Mormon alone for doctrine, will have no disputations among themselves, if they have the Spirit of God with them. (Nephi 7th and 8th chapters). Christ said to the Nephites, "Blessed are ye if ye have no disputations among you." This is what I am called upon to do: To point out to the honest in heart the teachings of Christ and show them how they have trusted in man and followed men and their teachings, instead of following Christ and his teachings.

"Now brethren, (I consider the Latter Day Saints my brethren whom I have always loved, although I believe you have been led into errors) I beg of you and plead with you to not condemn the truth nor judge me until you have heard all I have to say. The Herald has explained me away to the uttermost regions of error and blindness. I am old and desire to live in peace with all mankind, and die in peace with God. May God be with you to help you seek the truth with an honest heart is my prayer through the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

DAVID WHITMER.

"TAKE HEED TO THYSELF."—No. 3.

BY CHARLES E. BUTTERWORTH.

LAYING ON HANDS.

"Now when the apostles which were at Jerusalem heard that Samaria had received the word of God, they sent unto them Peter and John: who when they were come down prayed for them, that they might receive the Holy Ghost. (For as yet he was fallen upon none of them; only they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus). Then laid they their hands on them, and they received the Holy Ghost." "And Ananias went his way, and entered into the house; and putting his hands on him said, Brother Saul, the Lord, even Jesus, that appeared unto thee in the way as thou camest, hath sent me, that thou mightest receive thy sight, and be filled with the Holy Ghost." "Paul having passed through the upper coasts came to Ephesus; and finding certain disciples, he said unto them, Have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed? And they said unto him, we have not so much as heard whether there be any Holy Ghost.

And he said unto them, Unto what then were ye baptized? And they said; unto John's baptism. Then said Paul, John verily baptized with the baptism of repentance, saying unto the people that they should believe on him which should come after him, that is, on Jesus Christ. When they heard this, they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus. And when Paul had laid his hands on them, the Holy Ghost came on them; and they spake in tongues and prophesied." By these scriptures we see the church understood that those who received the word of God and had been baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus should receive the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost; and they sent Peter and John to the Samaritans for that purpose. When these men laid their hands upon them the Spirit came with such power that "Simon saw that through laying on of the apostles' hands the Holy Ghost was given, he offered them money, saying, Give me also this power, that on whomsoever I lay hands, he may receive the Holy Ghost." Those who did not know it was their privilege to receive the Spirit in this way were not properly instructed in the doctrine of Christ, nor did they understand John's teaching, or why he baptized. The very fact that God heard their prayers and sent the Holy Ghost when they laid hands upon the baptized believers shows that the laying on of hands was a part of the "all things" that Jesus commanded his ministers to teach. Should it be thought that none but the first Twelve whom Christ chose had the right to lay on hands for the reception of the Holy Ghost we reply that Paul was not one of them.

Ananias was not an apostle at all, yet God sent him to Saul and putting his hands on Saul he said that God had sent him that he might receive his sight and be filled with the Holy Ghost showing that at least one man who was not an apostle practiced the laying on of hands for the reception of the Holy Ghost. Again; if none have the right to lay on hands for this purpose but the apostles, how very essential that there should be apostles in the church? We do not undertake to say that God can give the Spirit to none but those who receive the laying on of hands, but that it is a part of the doctrine of Christ, the order of God, and should be observed.

SPIRITUAL GIFTS.

How shall we know that we have received the Spirit? By the effects produced by it. We may have read or heard that the telegraph wire is charged with electricity, but in order to test the truth of the matter let us take a piece of wire in our hand and hook one end over the telegraph wire when it is charged with electricity, holding the other end in our hand, and in less than a second we are convinced of the truthfulness of the statement, by the shock we receive. So it is with the Holy Ghost; there is a peculiar sensation produced by that Spirit which can be produced by nothing else. The effect of this Spirit upon the soul and spirit and body is of such a character that it can not be mistaken.

"But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance." Then he who is not in possession of these graces is not in possession of the Holy Ghost, no matter how loud and high professions he may make.

Then again, the Spirit is manifest when individuals receive extraordinary wisdom, faith, or the gift of healing, discerning of spirits, tongues, interpretation of tongues, or the gift of prophecy. It was so with Cornelius' household, those baptized by Paul at Ephesus, and so it was on the day of Pentecost. Peter says it is for "as many as the Lord our God shall call." And the prophet Joel said:—"And it shall come to pass in the last days saith God, I will pour out my Spirit upon all flesh; and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy and your young men shall see vision, and your old men shall dream dreams: And on the servants and on the handmaids I will pour out in those days of my Spirit; and they shall prophesy." These blessings must reach us if our hearts are right in the sight of God. As we are still subject to sickness and death we should receive a fulfillment of the promise, "they shall lay hands on the sick and they shall recover." "Is any sick among you? Let him call for the elders of the church; and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord; and the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up; and if he have committed sins, they shall be forgiven him."

SACRAMENT.

The Sacrament of the Lord's Supper is an indispensable ordinance. Then Jesus said unto them, "Verily, verily I say unto you, except ye eat the flesh of the Son of Man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you." "And he took the cup, and gave thanks, and said, Take this and divide it among yourselves. . . . And he took bread, and gave thanks, and broke it, and gave unto them, saying, This is my body which is given for you; this do in remembrance of me. Likewise also the cup after supper, saying, This cup is the New Testament in my blood, which is shed for you." Paul wrote; "For I have received of the Lord that which also I delivered unto you, that the Lord Jesus, the same night in which he was betrayed, took bread; and when he had given thanks, he broke it, and said, Take, eat; this is my body, which is broken for you; this do in remembrance of me. After the same manner also he took the cup, when he had supped, saying, This cup is the New Testament in my blood; this do ye, as oft as ye drink it, in remembrance of me. For as often as ye eat this bread, and drink this cup, ye do shew the Lord's death till he come. Wherefore, whosoever shall eat this bread, and drink this cup of the Lord, unworthily, shall be guilty of the body and blood of the Lord. But let a man examine himself, and so let him eat of that bread, and drink of that cup. For he that eateth and drinketh unworthily, eateth and drinketh damnation to himself, not discerning the Lord's body. For this cause many are weak and sickly among you, and many sleep."

RESURRECTION, JUDGMENT.

The resurrection of the dead is the sixth principle, and eternal judgment is the seventh. But for fear we have written too much already we will close by saying that these seven principles are the first and the foundation in and of the doctrine of Christ. They are those that Paul exhorted Timothy to take heed to, and to "continue in them;" for said he, "in doing this thou shalt both save thyself, and them that hear thee." Can anything less do? or is there any other plan given? "The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirits, that we are the children of God. And if children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ; if so be that we suffer with him, that we may be also glorified together."

Conference Minutes.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA.

The above district conference met at New Port, Los Angeles county, California, October 8th, 1886, at ten o'clock, President D. S. Mills in the chair; John Brush, assistant; N. W. Best, clerk, R. M. Dungan assistant. At 2:30 p. m., business session opened in due form. President D. S. Mills addressed the meeting and gave a very able exhortation, and encouraged the Saints to diligence. High Priest D. S. Mills, reported verbally. Elders John Brush, P. M. Betts, H. L. Holt, D. L. Harris, Daniel Garner, Wm. Gibson, by letter; J. R. Badham, H. Hemenway, A. W. Thompson, E. J. French, and John Garner, sen; and Priests N. W. Best, Alonzo E. Jones, R. M. Phenegar, H. C. Ladd, F. P. Schnell and Wm. Pickering by letter. Teachers Stephen Penfold, W. A. Penrod and C. W. Earl, and Deacon Wm. Schade, reported. Los Angeles Branch, 52 members; including 2 Elders, 1 Priest, 2 Teachers, 1 Deacon; 6 baptized, 1 received by certificate of baptism, 5 received by letter from other branches; 1 ordained. J. R. Badham, president, Wm. Shade, clerk. New Port, 130 members, including one High Priest, 6 Elders, 6 Priests, 4 Teachers, 2 Deacons; 2 baptized, 1 received by certificate of baptism, 15 received by letter from other branches, 7 removed by letter, 2 died; 2 ordinations. Daniel Garner, president, R. M. Dungan, clerk. Bishop's Agent's report from February 16th to October 8th, 1886. Balance on hand last report, $128.85; amount collected, $326.75, total $455.60; amount paid out $165.60; Balance due church, $290. J. R. Badham, agent. The president read quite a lengthy communication from Bro. H. C. Smith, missionary in charge of Pacific Slope Mission, and now in Sacramento, expressing his regret in not being able to meet with us in conference, but hoped that the Spirit of God would endow us with convincing power. He recommended to the conference the propriety of appointing a committee to take into consideration the advisability of holding reunion meetings and to make arrangements accordingly and report to our ensuing session. Conference, acting upon the recommendation, appointed the following on said committee: J. R. Badham, D. S. Mills and E. J. French. Volunteers were then called for by the chair, for missionary labor. Bro. A.

W. Thompson said he intended to labor all he could, and that he wished to be sustained as a missionary of the gospel. Bro. Hemenway said he was willing to preach whenever and wherever an opportunity offered, or wherever the Spirit dictated. Bro. H. L. Holt would be ready for the field some time in December, but wanted a traveling companion. Bro. D. L. Harris will give half of his time at any rate, and all if he can get a little assistance from the Bishop. Bro. Badham had not asked any assistance, and did not expect any. Resolved, That we will in our wisdom, do all we can to discourage dancing and social card-playing, as it tends to lead our minds away from the pure principles of the gospel of Christ. That we sustain the authorities of the church in righteousness, and that we give our faith and prayers to the sustaining of the Elders in their calling. That this conference offer to Bro. D. S. Mills our sincere thanks for his past labors in the district as president, and that we will sustain him as District President; and that we sustain him in his office by our faith prayers and means. That we in conference assembled tender our sincere thanks to Bro. N. W. Best for services rendered as district clerk and that we still sustain him in the office by our faith and prayers. On the evening of Friday the 8th, preaching was had by J. R. Badham; Saturday at 9 a. m., prayer meeting; 7:30, p. m., preaching by H. L. Holt; Sunday, 9 a. m., prayer for the sick; at 11 preaching by D. S. Mills; 2 p. m. six were baptized; 3 p. m., confirmation, administering to the sick and sacrament. Q. S. Sparks and Ammon Goff were by order of conference ordained to the office of Elders, after which a glorious session of prayer and testimony was had with a marvelous display of God's Holy Spirit, in tongues, interpretation and prophecy. After the exercises closed three more were baptized, making nine in all, all adults. At 7:30, the last three baptized were confirmed; then had preaching by Q. S. Sparks. Conference adjourned to meet at San Bernardino the first Friday in March 1887.

CENTRAL KANSAS.

The above district conference convened at Nekawaka, Jackson county, November 13th and 14th, 1886. William Hopkins, pres., Griffith George, clerk. Reports of branches:—Centralia 25, including 2 Elders, 1 Priest, 1 Deacon. Fanning 30, including 2 Elders, 1 Priest, 1 Deacon. Scranton 26, including 7 Elders, 1 Priest, 1 Teacher, 2 Deacons, 1 ordination, 1 child blessed. Good Intent 30, including 2 Elders, 1 Teacher, 1 baptized, 2 received by letter, 1 marriage. Netawaka 32, including 4 Elders, 2 Priests, 2 received by letter. Report of Elders present:—James Buckley, H. Parker, David Williams, (preached several times, baptized 1, solemnized 1 marriage). Clarence St. Clair had preached at Fanning and at other places with good results. H. Green had preached 14 times outside the branch. Wm. Hopkins and G. George reported. By letter W. Gurwell, Charles Herzing, W. Williams. Priests. Joseph McDougal in person; J. Price and Watson B. Thatcher by letter. Deacon A. L. Gurwell reported. H. Parker, Bishop's Agent had received $9. Bro. W. Gurwell reported that Elder Herzing claimed the Fanning branch was not legally organized, and for that reason had not united with it. On motion, the conference reaffirmed the organization of said branch by brethren

D. Munns and H. Parker, December 6th, 1885, to be legal. Resolved; That a court of Elders be appointed to correspond with C. Herzing and visit him in person, and report to next district conference. Adjourned to meet at Good Intent, February 12th and 13th, 1887. The authorities of the church were sustained in righteousness, also the present officers of the district. James Buckley preached Saturday night assisted by D. Williams. Sunday H. Green preached assisted by H. Parker; prayer and testimony meeting at 2 p. m. conducted by D. Williams, assisted by G. George; evening services conducted by Clarence St. Clair, assisted by D. Williams.

FREMONT DISTRICT.

This conference convened at the Saints' Chapel in Shenandoah, Iowa, October 16th, 1886, at ten a. m. Bro. E. C. Briggs was elected to the chair, Bro. Kemp assistant; W. C. Mathews, secretary. Branch reports:—Shenandoah, 87, including 1 high priest, 4 elders, 1 teacher, 1 baptized, 1 received by letter. Of the above 22 are scattered. S. S. Wilcox president, W. C. Mathews secretary. Key Stone Branch, 59, (28 of which are scattered), 2 elders, 1 priest, 1 teacher, 1 deacon, 2 baptized, 4 received by letter. E. S. Weed president, J. B. Cline, secretary. Plum Creek, 88, including one high priest, 9 elders, 2 priests, 3 teachers, 1 deacon, 5 baptized, 2 removed by letter. Wm. Leeka president, M. W. Gaylord secretary. Elm Creek, 35, 3 Elders, 1 priest, 2 teachers, 1 deacon, 5 baptized, 6 removed by letter, 1 died. Henry Hershey president, Samuel Orton, secretary. Farm Creek, 34, 1 elder, 1 teacher, 4 baptized, 1 died, 2 married. Daniel Hougas, president, T. A. Hougas, secretary. Union branch not reported. Resolved, That the clerk of Plum Creek Branch confer with father Baldwin in regard to his taking a letter of removal, he having removed to Stewartville without letter. The report of Bro. Wm. Leeka, Bishop's Agent was referred to a committee composed of S. S. Wilcox, E. L. Kelley, and J. B. Cline, and reported by them correct. Bro. S. S. Wilcox reported the Shenandoah Branch in fair condition, and that meetings and Sabbath Schools are kept up regularly. Bro. E. S. Weed reported the Keystone branch in good condition; meetings and Sabbath school kept up regularly, with fair attendance. Bro. Wm. Leeka reported the Plum Creek Branch in good condition, meetings and Sabbath School kept up with fair attendance. Bro. T. A. Hougas (clerk) reported Farm Creek Branch in fair condition; meetings and Sabbath School kept up with good attendance. Elder Edward E. Mortimore reported the Union Branch not in as good condition as he would like to see it. Elder Henry Kemp reported the district in very good condition, with few exceptions. He feels encouraged in its prospects, and thinks a little more energy on the part of the officers would greatly improve it. He had baptized eleven. He reported the late difficulty in Union Branch amicably settled. Elder E. C. Briggs reported that he had spent his time in the mission assigned him, and exhorted the Saints to diligence, especially the officers of the branches and district. Elder E. L. Kelley reported that he had spent his time in the mission assigned him, felt greatly encouraged with the present outlook, and gave encouraging counsel to the conference, urging them on to victory. Elder Wm. Leeka reported that his labors were confined to the branch, and spoke very encouragingly, insisting on a more diligent exertion on the part of the officers, and more system in business, especially in our church records, insisting on a strict observance of the law given us. Elder W. C. Mathews reported his labors confined to the District and Shenandoah Branch; the records which are not fully completed yet, except Shenandoah, Key Stone and Farm Creek. They are in good shape. The Union Branch is in bad condition—no report from the last two sessions. In order that the records may be more fully completed, the following questions were submitted to the conference. 1. Shall the Branches be required to make out abstracts of their branches showing the total number of local members, and how many are scattered, showing their residence when known? Ans.—Yes. 2. Shall deaths be reported to the district secretary for record and transmission, with date of birth and baptism as shown on their branch records? Ans.—Yes. 3. Is it proper for an Elder to marry a couple out of the church and report them to district or church secretary for record? Ans.—No. 4. Is it proper for an Elder to marry a couple where one is a member and the other not, and report them without showing the same? Ans.—No. 5. Shall all marriages be placed on district record? Ans.—Yes. 6. Shall children, when blessed, be placed on district record? Ans.—Yes. 7. Shall all marriages be placed on district record, with date of birth and baptism the same as it appears on the branch record, that there may be duplicate records in case of loss by fire or otherwise? Ans.—Yes. All the officers were requested to labor as their circumstances will permit, subject to the call of the president. On motion, Elder Henry Kemp was sustained until next conference, as district president, and that W. C. Mathews be sustained till then as district secretary. On motion all the authorities of the church were sustained. Officials in attendance:—E. C. Briggs, of the Twelve, S. S. Wilcox, High Priest, 3 Priests, 2 Teachers, 1 Deacon, 11 Elders, total 19. At 9, a. m., Oct. 17th, held social meeting, and at 11 a. m. preaching by E. C. Briggs. At 3, p. m., social meeting, Bro. S. S. Wilcox presiding. Emma Catharine Hall, infant daughter of H. G. Hall, Sen., and Jane Hall, was blessed by E. C. Briggs and Wm. Leeka. At 7: 30, preaching by E. L. Kelley to crowded house, after which conference adjourned to meet at the Gaylord School house, 2d February 1887, 10 a. m. Thus ended one of the best conferences ever held in Fremont District.

NORTHERN INDIANA AND SOUTHERN MICHIGAN.

This district conference convened at the Ball School house, in Quincy township, Michigan, at 10: 30 a. m., October 16th, 1886. The forenoon was devoted to society meeting in which many strong testimonies were borne, to the edification of all present. At two p. m. the conference was called to order by Elder C. Scott, district president. Bro. C. Scott was chosen president, D. B. Teeters clerk, and L. Fay assistant. All visiting brethren were invited to take part. TANKARD.—At Kansas City, Missouri, October 27th, 1886, to brother and sister James Tankard, a son. Blessed by Elder F. C. Warnky, and named Laman William.

MARRIED.

KIRKENDALL—THOMASON.—At Creola, Ohio, June 12th, 1886, by Elder L. R. Devore, Bro. A. B. Kirkendall and Sr. Mattie E. Thomason, all of Creola, Ohio.

DIED.

CAMBRIDGE.—John Alford Cambridge was born in London, Ontario, March 4th, 1884; blessed by Elder G. Mottashed, July 30th, 1886. Funeral service conducted by Elder R. B. Howlett.

JACKSON.—At Salt River, Missouri, January 29th, 1886, from blood poisoning from a knife wound received by accident, after eight weeks' illness, Bro. William M. Jackson, aged 37 years when the Father called him home. He was a member of the church for eight years, and died in full faith, believing he would go to rest and receive a glorious reunion with those he left behind. He leaves a devoted wife and six children. Service by Elder Robert Thrutchley.

GAYLORD.—Ruby, infant daughter of Bro. Moses and Sr. Philinda Gaylord, at Tabor, Iowa, aged 1 year, 4 months and 6 days. Funeral sermon by H. Kemp.

Thou art gone, sweet Ruby, from our embrace,
To dwell with the angels of light;
May God give us strength through his grace,
To be crown'd with thee by his might.

THRUTCHLEY.—At Salt River, Missouri, November 13th, 1886, after suffering for two weeks from a paralytic stroke, Bro. Robert Thrutchley, He was born at Markfield, Leicestershire, England, December 11th, 1813; he was baptized on March 17th, 1844, at Long Lane, England; and united with the Reorganized Church by baptism January 30th, 1877, at Norris Creek, Macon Co., Missouri, by Eld. James Kemp; since that time he has labored faithfully under many difficulties, and succeeded in establishing a branch at Salt River, over which he presided until death. He acted for years as Bishop's agent of the North-east Missouri district. Bro. Thrutchley was highly esteemed by all in this district, and we shall feel a great loss in his departure, especially his aged companion, who suffers a great deal with sickness for some years. He leaves a wife, two sons and two daughters to mourn his loss. Funeral service at the house: sermon by Elder Henry Jones, assisted by Elder Charles Perry.

THOMAS.—At What Cheer, Iowa, October 29th, 1886, after a long sickness of dropsy of the heart, Bro. John F. Thomas. He was born January 27th, 1830; was baptized in September, 1864, at Syracuse, Ohio, by Bro. W. W. Blair. Brother Thomas was a faithful Saint, lived worthy of the name he bore; performed his duty as an Elder faithfully; presided over the Bevier branch a long time; his loss will be felt by the Saints; he felt his loss very much at What Cheer, not having the privilege to meet with the Saints. A few days before he died he was meditating on some things, and seemed to be in some trouble, when Sr. Thomas (his wife) asked him what troubled him, and asked him if he was afraid to die, when he answered her with such boldness and confidence that he was not, but that he was troubled the most to part with his family. He was a kind and tender father and husband. His body was buried at What Cheer, October 31st; but by request of his son David, living in Wyoming Territory, it was raised and taken to Bevier for burial, on November 3d. Funeral sermon at the church by Elder Henry Jones, to a full house of attentive listeners, from Job 14: 14. Bro. Thomas leaves a loving wife and six daughters and two sons, to mourn his loss. May God comfort the bereaved in their loss.

SMITH.—At Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, October 8th, 1886, Sr. Eve J. Smith peaceably and in full hope passed from this life to the rest from the afflictions incident thereto. Sr. Smith, formerly Miss Eve J. Harrison, was born at Braddocks, Pennsylvania, November 24th, 1822. Her husband preceded her in death a little more than twenty-three years ago, they having passed the greater part of their travels together in the city of Pittsburg. They leave a family of six children, three sons and three daughters who are grown to man and womanhood. Sr. Smith was a member of the first organization of the church and at an early time united with the Reorganization. Prior to her departure, but during her last affliction in the month of July she assured the writer that the only regret she had in looking back over her past work was that she had not done more for the church. Her faith and hope were steadfast to the last. The traveling ministry who visited Pittsburg ever found a welcome home at Sr. Smith's and now that she has passed beyond, their remembrance will recall the many attentive acts of her life. The funeral at her residence was attended by a large number of friends and relatives with the Saints. Bro. E. L. Kelley pronouncing the discourse from the words, "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord."

VOICE OF WARNING REPORT.

I have just finished making a summary of the reports of those who are circulating the Voice of Warning. I would have made it long since, but the reports were not in, and, indeed, some are not in yet. There are 2,940 in circulation; 1,215 persons have had them to read. Reports received from seventy-four. Twenty who have books, send no report. I am certain that the above is short of the number, who have had the books to read, as some of the reports show that all of their books are out; yet they do not say how many have had them. Some did not report because they were not certain whether those who received the books had read them or not. I expect that all will take it for granted that the books are read by as many as borrow or buy them; as there are more instances where the book is read by more than one than there are where it is not read at all. I hope to have more prompt and more accurate reports this quarter. The books have been well received in most cases; and a great many are investigating, and desiring further information. I feel well satisfied with what has been accomplished so far, and feel certain that we can do much better hereafter. Your brother in Christ,

J. H. PETERS.

GATHERING.

God said to the Saints in 1831, when they were gathering to Zion and "the regions round about," that they should not gather "in haste, nor by flight; but let it be done as it shall be counselled by the elders of the church at the conferences."—Doc. Cov. 58:12. In December, 1833, this was further enjoined in these words: "Let not your gathering be in haste, nor by flight; but let all things be prepared before you."—Doc. Cov. 98:9. And in 1873, He said: "Let my commandments to gather into the regions round about, and the counsel of the elders of my church guide in this matter," &c.—Doc. Cov. 117:11.

The instruction herein given should govern all the Saints in the matter of gathering or removing into "the regions round about." Those who do not "have all things prepared before" them when they remove, are neither wise nor safe; and if they meet with disappointment and loss, and severe trials of faith, they will have themselves to blame. The "elders" should seek to have these matters well considered and complied with by those whom they know are gathering "into the regions round about," and thus prevent confusion and evil; and no member should remove from one place to another till they know what awaits them, and how they can find affairs in their proposed new home. Be prudent; be wise.

If such as intend to remove would consult with the Bishop, the leading authorities of the church in the locality where they wish to gather to, or with the chief authorities of the Church, stating their wishes, needs, conditions and intentions, they could obtain council and direction which would be of great value tending to prevent bad feelings, and unity and mutual benefit be secured to all concerned. "Look before you leap."

REV. LAMB ON THE BRIGHAMITES.

REV. M. T. LAMB is reported as saying in a Baptist church in New Haven, (Conn.):

"I am not here to abuse the Mormons, but to ask from you love and sympathy for the great body of the members of the religion. They are not hypocritical. The leaders may be frauds and hypocrites, but the masses are as sincere in their belief as you and I in ours. The sincere, honest Mormon is a strange mixture, a religious puzzle. While religious, even fanatically so, he will adopt practices which we consider utterly foreign to Christianity. The average Mormon is very religious, more so than the professors of other religions, and ready to make greater sacrifices for his creed. Mormons do much praying, but not so much in secret as I would wish. They pray not exactly in an ostentatious way, but they mix religion with everything they do. Business meetings, entertainments, theatrical representations, dances, are all opened and closed with prayer. Even in making speeches Mormons begin with a prayer and end with another. They observe the Lord's Supper twice on Sunday, and every good Mormon is baptized at least once a year, and many oftener. Polygamy is one of the smallest difficulties we have to contend with, for only one out of twelve indulges in the luxury of several wives. We can not reach the honest Mormons on account of their peculiar training and views. Only when they have become infidels to their own religion can we reach them. But the young people are within our grasp. The majority of them are irreligious and indifferent and fast becoming infidels. Two-thirds of them, I believe are infidels."

We heartily endorse what Mr. Lamb says of the sincerity of the Utah Mormons, but when he says "Polygamy is one of the smallest difficulties we have to contend with," we think he does not comprehend the situation; for polygamy is the very root and generative cause of nine-tenths of the errors and evils to be found among the Brighamites.

Polygamy is a fruit of unbelief, (Gen. 15:2-13; 16:1-3), a display of human folly in an attempt to improve and amend the wisdom of God and aid him to fulfill his promises. (Gen. 16:1-2). It induces mean selfishness, envy, and fleshly pride. (Gen. 16:4, 5, 30:1-24). It is the fruit of covetousness and fraud, (Gen. 29:18-30). It leads to deception and falsehood and theft. (Gen. 31:25-35; Mal. 2:14). It also leads to base craftiness and brutal murder. (2 Sam. 11:4-27; Gen. 4:23, 24).

Polygamy, in its origin and fruits, may well be said to be "the sum of all villainies." It is in direct conflict with the pre-ordained purpose of God in peopling and replenishing the earth. (Gen. 1:27; 6:18-20; Mal. 2:15; Doc. and Cov. 49:3; revelation March, 1831). It libels and violates the Book of Mormon, and nullifies and condemns the law of the church found in the Doctrine and Covenants. The laws of the land and of well regulated society are transgressed, evaded and spurned, and as a legitimate result this modern Ishmaelite is publicly branded as evil, and the sword of God's wrath, in the hands of civil rulers, is smiting it to its certain and ignoble fall. Polygamy, like Pandora's box, is the source of "innumerable evils," as all well know who are acquainted with its history ancient and modern. We think Mr. Lamb quite unreliable when he says "They observe the Lord's Supper twice on Sunday, and that every good Mormon is baptized once a year, and many oftener." Exaggerations of this kind strike "the sincere and honest Mormon" unfavorably, and as a species of persecution. It also appears in that light to all intelligent, fairminded people. Truth, without stretching, facts, without distortion, are the only honorable means with which to wage a warfare of words against error and evil.

By the way, how does Mr. Lamb judge of the paucity of the Mormons "secret" prayers? His must have been very superior opportunities if he is well fitted to decide in such matters. We think the gentleman gives himself away in his statements, and is proved by his own words unfit to pose as a reformer. It is just possible that Mr. Lamb, when he says "Polygamy is one of the smallest difficulties we have to contend with," refers to his efforts at converting the Mormons to the peculiar tenets of the Baptist Church. If this is what he means, he is probably near the truth; for to those who have learned the fulness of the gospel and had spiritual experience therein, the doctrine of the Baptist Church would have little or no attraction. Perhaps polygamy is "one of the smallest difficulties" in the way of Mr. Lamb's proselyting efforts.

IT IS COMING.

"A QUESTION OF CREED.—It is to be hoped that the meeting of the Congregational board of foreign missions which commenced its sessions yesterday, in Des Moines, Iowa, will be able to settle definitely the disturbing point at issue. The point is one of very general interest, especially to the heathen of paganism, and possibly those of Christianity. There are those of the missionary board who are firm in the opinion that all the heathen who have not heard of Christ have gone to everlasting perdition, and others will continue to go so long as they remain in ignorance of the Nazarine. There are others of the same board who are anxious that the poor heathen may have a little show, and ask that they may be permitted to entertain a hope that there may be a period of probation after death, during which the poor heathen may have an opportunity to hear of Christ, and to secure his salvation if he wishes to. The modest gentlemen who urge a little leniency in the matter of the wholesale damnation of the heathen do not ask that their hope of probation be made into a dogma; but simply that they, on the quiet, may entertain a belief that, possibly, divine lenience may find some method of not punishing billions of heathen forever and ever for an offense concerning whose commission they had not the slightest knowledge or suspicion.

"It is somewhat awkward for a missionary among the heathen to be obliged to tell them the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, to the effect that their ancestors through all time have been thrust into hell for not believing something they never even heard of; and there are some missionaries who would like to leave out this statement and assure the heathen that it is just possible that their dead ancestors may be given a chance to refuse salvation before being eternally damned for never having heard of it. It would make it much more agreeable for the missionary to be able to leave out the unpleasant information as to the crowding of the infernal pit with heathen, and to permit them to hope that eternal justice may decide to make the charges against them, try them, and at least let them know what they are being everlastingly punished for.

"All such discussions as this one rejoice the infidel and the scoffer. During the progress of this debate, ten thinkers are liable to drift into infidelity for each heathen "saved" by the ministrations of Andover missionaries.

There are some healthy suggestions in the foregoing editorial from the Chicago Times of October 5th, 1886. The fact that justice demands that any law upon which men are to be judged and condemned to perdition, must first be declared to them, seems at last to be dawning upon the minds of theological students, and has got a foothold in the Congregational Church to such an extent that a solemn conclave of "most reverend seigniors" occupy their time in discussing "probation after death." These churchmen may reach by the way of long debate and years of church wrangling, what simpler minds have been enabled to decide by accepting the direction of present revelation, accompanying the restoration of the gospel. What the itinerant elder of the Latter Day Saints has had given him because of his trust and confidence in Christ and his promises, these searchers after wisdom by man's ways may be compelled by hard circumstances to adopt to avoid ugly conclusions resulting from the inquiry coming from civilized men as well as from the heathen, "Why must I be damned because I have not heard of this Christ and his law?" Brethren, "the world moves;" let the good work go on; we can afford to watch and pray and wait,—and work.

THE letter below we clip from the Idaho Enterprise of late date:

"OXFORD, Idaho, Nov. 9th, 1886.

"Editor Enterprise—I hear that the Deseret News thinks the Reorganized Church is their enemy, and that Oxford especially would be glad to have them destroyed. I wish to say that it is a mistake, as we sympathize with them in their punishment, not blaming those who are honestly striving to obey a modern king, who is stripping them of one-fifth, if not more of their hard earnings, in a land of saltness and barren.

"I know it is natural for some invalids to believe their best friends are their enemies. The Utah Mormon is correctly described in the 17th verse the 3d chapter of Revelations as being rich and increased with goods, and have need of nothing, and knoweth not that they are wretched, miserable, poor, blind and naked. Let them take counsel from verse 18.

"If there be a Josephite in the whole world that would like to see them suffer, they are unknown to us. From Joseph Smith down to the last convert, all would be glad to see them come back to their allegiance to the best government in the world, and renounce their sinful practices and corrupt doctrines, for they have copied the faults of great men in Bible history, and like them will suffer the penalty thereof. If they would, like ancient Israel repent, they would soon find a deliverer.

A JOSEPHITE."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

ELDER M. H. BOND writes us from Plymouth, Massachusetts, November 22d: "I am trying all I can to get new subscribers for the HERALD. There has been too much neglect in this direction." We are well aware that there is great neglect in these matters, and that, too, with the ministry, though there are some of them who are diligent in getting our church publications before the people. The church papers are highly commended, not only by many of the members, but also by the press. All this is encouraging, and we are led to conclude it would be well to have these papers in the hands of as many as can be induced to read them and subscribe for them. Our subscription lists are steadily increasing, and promise well; but a far greater circulation can be attained for them if all the Saints, and especially the ministry, will interest themselves actively in soliciting subscribers. We ask all to aid in these matters what they can.

We are sorry to learn of the bereavement of the families of Brn. E. M. Bowen and the late Isaac Harris. "Dust returns to dust, and the spirit to God who gave it." This is true of all, yet when death casts its baleful shadow over the hearts and homes of dear friends, sadness fills the soul, and we look unto Jesus and find consolation and joy in his promise and power to save to the uttermost.

Sr. M. A. Wilcox in a late letter expresses the hope that Bro. G. T. Griffiths will soon raise the gospel standard in New Philadelphia, Ohio, and she expects not a few there may unite with the church.

Bro. S. S. Wilcox of Shenandoah, says in a late letter: "We wish all the Saints were supplied with the HERALD and HOPE. I have been a subscriber from the first, and would not be without them."

Bro. C. M. Fulks writes from Coy, Missouri, that he had received ten numbers of the Voice of Warning from Bro. J. H. Peters, had loaned them out, and they were being read by many with interest and profit.

On page 724, first column and fourteenth line, for 1839, read 1830; and on page 765, first column, for 1884, read 1886.

M. J. Beirly writes of late from Seligman, Missouri, of the excellent services at the last October conference at Webb City, and of pleasant associations with the Saints, and thinks the people of God should ever exemplify the gospel.

Bro. Thomas Gregory in a letter dated Wallsend, New South Wales, speaks highly of the efforts of Bro. Burton in that far off land, and expresses his confidence in the speedy coming and glorious reign of Christ.

Bro. I. N. Roberts has been of late at Senior, Texas, working in the Master's cause, and says the Lord worked with him, "confirming the word with signs following." Two were baptized, the branch reorganized, and the Saints rejoicing in the Lord. From there he intended to go to Bandera to labor.

In a letter from Bro. D. S. Mills, dated Santa Ana, California, November 15th, he says: "The Saints are usually well physically, and more than usually well spiritually." He further says, "The Seventh Day Adventists have just published to the world the glowing statement that at their recent tent meetings in Santa Ana they made and baptized fifty-four adult converts, reporting it as a great victory, &c., while the facts are, forty-one of the fifty-four were old standing members whom they baptized over again for not having kept the seventh day quite right." Again he says, "Our meetings are well attended, the Spirit is working with us, and the sick are being healed. * * * My health is pretty good, my courage never better."

Sr. Lucretia J. O'Camb, of Lakeport, Michigan, bears testimony that, by the prayer of faith by herself and the members of the last fall conference, her son was healed of lunacy; also that in her waking hours at night she saw a beautiful supernatural light and received audible words of instruction to comfort and guide her.

Bro. R. C. Evans was preaching, November 23d, at St. Thomas, Ontario, and had lately baptized six in that place, and says, "The work is onward." He also says, "W. P. Brown, of Whitmer fame, is in Canada trying to do us all the harm he can. But truth will prevail."

Sr. Mary A. Wilcox, of Blakes' Mills, Pa., writes November 22d, that they are expecting Bro. G. T. Griffiths to preach the gospel at that point. Also at New Philadelphia. We wish Bro. Griffiths ample success.

On the 12th of November Bro. Thomas Hougas wrote us that on the 8th inst., four were baptized and united with the branch at Mission, LaSalle county, Illinois.

Sr. Mary A. Carter wishes to sell a wreath of zephyr flowers, for three dollars and fifty cents, in order to purchase church books and other needed reading matter. Her address is Bird City, Kansas.

Bro. J. J. Cornish writes from Bad Axe, Michigan, November 26th, that he had recently baptized three men and their wives, and that he felt excellent and was being blessed of God with his Spirit.

Bro. J. S. Roth writes from Runnels, Iowa, the 22d of November, that he had not been able to do anything in the ministry for about two weeks, owing to sore throat, and he asks the prayers of the Saints for his recovery. Don't speak too loud, Bro. Roth; don't get heated and then go out into the cold air when perspiring; keep your mouth shut when in the cold air, and don't bundle your throat so as to make it unnaturally warm, and bathe it often in cold water, use a gargle of salt and sage; keep your feet warm and dry, and all will be well.

Bro. W. W. Hodge of Beaver Falls, Pennsylvania, loans his HERALDS out with good results, for some are now anxious to hear our ministers.

Bro. J. A. Stromberg was in Oakland, California, November 21st, had been to Sacramento, and was about to assist some in the erection of the Saints' Chapel in Oakland, where he says the Saints are active and spiritual.

By letter from Bro. G. H. Hulmes dated Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, November 25th, we are informed that four Utah Elders had held service in the Saints' Hall at that place, and that they literally astonished those who heard them by their wild and absurd perversions of scripture, the principal spokesman being an Elder Palmer.

Bro. David Brand writes from Marengo, Illinois, November 27th, and says there are four Saints living there whose united ages are two hundred and fifty-nine years, and as they have not been visited by the Elders for the past two years, they fear they are esteemed as "old and good for nothing." He thinks there is a fair chance of winning others to their number in that place. Bro. Brand is one of many who left Utah rank infidels. But God, by the power of his Spirit led him to the Reorganization and revealed to him its divinity.

Sr. Mattie Lively, Prairie Siding, Ontario, says of the HOPE, "It is the best Sunday School paper I ever saw. I have no children old enough to read it, but I lend it to my neighbors who have."

Sr. Thomas Vince, of Chatham, Ontario, says, "I prize the HOPE very much, and can not well do without it. I am using it in our Sabbath School. Hope to send you new subscribers with the new year."

J. W. Whiting, writing from Juliaetta, Nez Perces county, Idaho, orders the HERALD and says, "I feel great interest in the cause of truth. We have a good many members scattered in this country, but no preacher."

The Lamoni Gazette comes to us this week under changed auspices, Bro. S. F. Walker has sold out and retired from the Editorial charge; and is succeeded in both relations to the paper by Bro. D. F. Lambert; the firm name being Lambert and Hansen. The Gazette will continue under the editorial charge of D. F. Lambert, independent on all subjects, religion and politics included; and proposes to publish the news of Lamoni and vicinity, and the county seat, Leon, with as large a summary of general news as space will permit, and digests of sermons at both churches of Lamoni. We yield adherence to the Virginian rule of hospitality, we "Welcome the coming, speed the parting speed the parting guest;" and shall miss Editor Walker, while we gladly entertain Editor Lambert. Manuel Merritt, a young "typo" is on the staff, and is doing well, as a paragraphist and compositor.

A Mr. Allan Irvine of Sturgeon, Allegheny county, Pennsylvania, sends for the HERALD, and says he has been searching the HERALD sent his father, late of Hamlin Station, and that it appears to him that the Reorganized Church is in the light, while the Utah Church is groping in darkness. He further says, "I have been raised in the last named church." The ministry in the Pittsburg District should look after this friend at an early time.

Bro. Jesse Seelye, of Savannah, New York, writes: "I can not do without the HERALD. It is the only preacher I have. I would not do without it for double its cost."

Bro. Thomas F. Wheeler, of New Providence, Indiana, in a late letter (he was recently baptized by Elder J. G. Scott) orders HERALD and books, and says: "I am truly satisfied that the Reorganized Church is the work of God."

Writing from McFall, Missouri, November 29th, Bro. J. W. Johnson says that prejudice, once strong there against the Saints, is giving way. Some are favorable to the faith, and some seem "almost ready for the Kingdom." He thinks good and cheap homes can be bought there, and says to his comrades, "we have here a good G. A. R. Post, No. 256."

Bro. George H. Hulmes is confident the church would do well to "settle" an efficient minister at or near Pittsburg, Pa., to labor for a term of years in that region. To this we say, amen; for the Spirit of God bears witness to this suggestion while we now write. But whoever labors there in such capacity should be competent, wise, patient, diligent and very spiritual, for there are fragments scattered in that region of many of the different factions, and there is also one of the strongholds of infidelity, and of sectarian opposition.

Bro. Stephen H. Morse, writing from Sullivan, Dakota, November 17th, says he baptized, confirmed and ordained Leonard F. Daniel on the 10th of October last, and he is confident that God accepted the same. Bro. Daniel was formerly a Methodist minister and had preached in that region some. Bro. Morse writes also that he recently found a family of Saints by the name of Webber, living about ten miles away, who were glad to meet him. Sr. Webber was baptized by Bro. Blakeslee.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Ques.—What is the difference between a committee of investigation and a court of elders?

Ans.—Investigate means to inquire, examine, search into, and the like; therefore a committee of investigation is properly one of inquiry and examination. A court of elders is a body empowered to not only make inquiry into matters over which it has jurisdiction, but also to try and decide such matters according to the authority they may possess.

BRO. TOWNSEND, Chicago, Illinois, sends us a Chicago Journal of the 20th, November, containing a challenge to the Prophetic Conference sitting in Chicago, to try conclusions on the Second Coming of Christ, as the Conference has decided to be the belief of the assembled delegates. It remains to be seen whether there will be an acceptance of such a challenge. If no member of that august body is found of sufficient hardihood to take up the cudgels in defence of the Second Coming of the Savior, it may be that some of our elders will like to accept it; if so they can communicate with Mr. Jordan, the challenger, his address being given in the challenge itself.

"PROPHETIC CONFERENCE.

"THE SECOND COMING OF CHRIST.

To the Editor of the Chicago Journal.

"CHICAGO, November 19.—I see that there is a conference of ministers and others in session in this city at present, to discuss the matter of the millenium and the second coming of Christ, and matters connected therewith. I notice also that the members of this conference believe and maintain that this great event is yet in the future, but liable to occur at any moment, etc. Now, I believe in the Bible—Old and New Testaments—and as sincerely and thoroughly, I presume, as any of these gentlemen; and yet I believe and maintain that the so-called 'Second coming of Christ,' or His 'coming in the clouds of heaven, with power and great glory,' etc., so often mentioned in the New Testament, is an event long since passed; that it took place over eighteen hundred years ago, viz., at or about the time Jerusalem was destroyed by the Romans. And this, I am—as I think—prepared to prove by Holy Writ. And I will undertake to do so in a little written discussion of half a dozen letters or so on a side—if any of these gentlemen—or any one else—will accept my offer, and any paper in the city—daily or weekly—will publish the discussion. Although I am not a minister or clergyman (at least not at present) I will say that I can give satisfactory evidence as to my character, etc., and will let my arguments show my ability to take care of my side of the question. Address

DELINQUENTS.

ALL who are in arrears for the HERALD or HOPE are expected to pay up and renew for another year by or before the first of January next. And all book agents are likewise requested to collect all balances due for either books, tracts, or papers, and remit by or before that time. Please don't delay this matter, for all bills due by the Herald Office have to be paid promptly at maturity. The credit of the office must be kept first class. It should be borne in mind that the success of the Publication department is the success of the church, for it belongs to the church, and the Saints therefore should labor for its prosperity.

Prompt payments by subscribers and book agents enables the Publication department to discount its bills and thereby make saving to the church ranging from ten to twenty-five per cent. per year.

The office is doing its utmost to win success, but it needs and must have the ready and timely aid of its patrons. The outlook increases in interest and promise, and we are determined to keep this department fully abreast with the times and the demand of the work entrusted to us. Again we ask delinquents to pay up at once, and also to renew; and we also ask all the Saints and friends of the church to increase our subscription lists and book sales, and in this way help forward the glorious work of God entrusted to our care.

WRITERS FOR THE PRESS.

TO THOSE writing letters for the HERALD we say, Make your letters pithy, plain, pointed, and bear in mind that "brevity is the soul of wit." If your letters are not printed in full, or if notice of them is not made in the editorial department, be patient and try again. Sometimes we can not publish either letters or communications for the reason that we have not room. We now have on hand piles of manuscript, which has been accumulating for months and years past, some of which may be used by and by, and some, "like an untimely birth," we consign to everlasting oblivion.

All kinds of manuscript for publication must be written on one side of the sheet, and written clearly, so that the printers may not make mistakes, or be in doubt as to what the writer says, or intends to say.

The editors are anxious that excellence shall mark all that is published in the church works in every respect. Be concise in statement, direct in argument, precise in quotation, and don't leave anything to be either guessed at or guessed out by the editors, printers, or general readers. Make your communications just as perfect as you would like to have them when printed. Long, wordy letters are seldom read. Tedious, pointless, commonplace articles harm the prestige of the writer, the interest of the reader, and the reputation of the paper in which they are published. Writers should be studious, observant, critical, wise, and persevering. They should carefully and fully revise what they intend for the press, cutting out every unnecessary sentence, clause and word; make their ideas like arrows, clothing them with only such words as will carry them directly and forcibly to the points aimed at. Sifting a ton of chaff for a thimbleful of wheat, and "hunting a haymow for a cambric needle," are neither pleasant, edifying, nor profitable. Writers should study what is profitable, timely, and attractive, and then write wisely, clearly, and with great care.

WE clip the following from the Lisbon, (Me.) Observer, of the 17th and 24th issues:

"At the F. B. Church Sunday evening, November 7th, by the request of the Pastor, Elder F. M. Sheehy preached from the text "What must I do to be saved." The speaker answered the question by reference to several other scripture texts, chiefly Acts 2: 44, "Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and you shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." The object of the Holy Ghost being to lead and guide into truth. One in possession of it will be led into the truth, as contained in the Bible, and not away from it. It would also harmonize with all truth "wherever found, whether on Christian or on heathen ground," it would not be fearful of meeting a fair and candid investigation, for it being the greater light would only shine the brighter. This discourse was largely given to a spiritual argument, supportive of baptism as an essential part of the doctrine of Christ, its object being for the remission of sins. Sunday afternoon, November 14th, a large gathering assembled at Good Templar's Hall. Extra seats had to be provided, which then left quite a number of the auditors the pleasure of standing. Rev. Mr. Record was present in charge of the services. After the usual form of opening, Elder F. M. Sheehy was introduced, and delivered a discourse from Romans 1: 16. The Elder's effort was well received; it occupied something over an hour, and was devoted mainly to the subject of revealed religion, as against invention or discovery by finite man. He quoted largely from scientists, their admissions relative to his point, and defined the doctrine of Christ as being composed of certain first or fundamental principles enumerated by Paul in the sixth chapter of Hebrews."

"The discourse of Elder F. M. Sheehy was very well received by a large and appreciative audience at the religious services held at Good Templar's Hall, last Sunday afternoon. Elder Sheehy is a very interesting and eloquent speaker, and his sermons are replete with logical and argumentative force."

THE IDAHO WORLD.

THE following clipping indicates, in some measure, the work of the Reorganized Church in removing the reproach that has fallen upon the name Mormon through the follies and abominable heresies of those who have departed from the faith as set forth in plainness in the sacred books of the church.

While we have none but the very best wishes for the Utah Mormons, it has been clear to us for the past thirty-five years that their polygamy, priestly domination, and the like must go to the wall; and we have labored diligently, as a church for the past twenty-six years and more, to reach and reason them out of their errors and evils. The clouds are lifting and we look for fairer skies in the future.

"We receive in exchange The Saints' Herald, a Mormon paper published in Iowa. Those who have become possessed of the idea that all Mormons are law-breakers and upholders of immorality will only have to read a number of the Saints' Herald to be convinced to the contrary. Said paper represents the religious views and teachings of the Josephite branch of the Mormon Church the teachings of which are as pure and elevating as those of any other church denomination. The Herald makes a strong fight against the doctrine of polygamy, and as strongly favors the test oath law of this Territory as the most staunch anti-Mormon, and rejoices over Judge Hays' decision sustaining said law. The Josephites widely differ from the Brighamites, and are no more deserving of persecution than members of any other religious denomination. They are a moral class of people and good citizens, which is as much as can be said of members of other denominations, and they are entitled to their beliefs, for they do not conflict with the laws of the land. All "anti-Mormon" papers speak in the highest terms of the Josephites. It is the Brighamites the loyal people of this Republic are fighting, and the fight will continue until they abide by the laws. The Herald, from which we reproduce an article, is a sixteen page paper, ably edited, and pure in tone."

FROM a Providence, Rhode Island, Sunday Journal, sent us by Bro. W. Bradbury, we make the following extracts from a late speech of Senator Dawes, of Massachusetts, before the Commercial Club, together with a number of the Rhode Island Indian Association, at the Narragansett Hotel, November 20th. Senator Dawes is Chairman of the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs. We commend these extracts to the thoughtful among the Saints, as they contain the possibility of some justice for the poor Indian.

"We have had the Indian on our hands for two hundred and fifty years, and to-day he is substantially what our fathers came here and found him. He numbers just about the same, and as a whole up to the adoption of the present policy, in character, habits, and pursuits to-day what he was when our fathers landed on Plymouth Rock, with civilization and Christianity in their hands, proffered to the poor red man as a boon. So, if it is the purpose of the present policy to change the Indian, it is quite certain that it must not do what has been done heretofore. For that is false from the beginning to the end, so far as our bringing the Indian to the ways of the white man.

"Now I may show the necessity of the Government acting on its part. These gentlemen produce the Indian with something in him that was never there before: a knowledge of his own power, a knowledge of his relations with and to other people, what is meant by property meum tuum, a knowledge of the fact that out of the work of his hands comes to him something that has never come before, that comes to an Indian like a white man. When we have got him there what is the result? In the present condition of legislation in this country he is as helpless as a child. To begin with, he is a foreigner, for every Indian tribe is treated as a foreign nation in our midst; and he is a foreigner with no legislative provision by which he can be made a citizen. He can not go into a court. Even the courts, State and national, are closed against him, so that he can enforce no right of his nor redress a wrong or grievance when inflicted on him by a white man. He can not vote, has no voice in the laws that he has to obey, can make no contract with a white man that the white man can not break and there is no redress. There is no human being over whom the flag of the United States floats that is so helpless, so utterly unable to protect himself from encroachments, or to assert a right of his, as this very enlightened Indian of whom I am speaking. He has land enough. There are 121,000,000 acres of land on the reservations, on which, now that he knows what it is to have a farm, he can be placed. But there is nobody in the United States who is authorized to deal with the individual Indian, only with a tribe. The President of the United States has no authority in law to deal with him, nor can any other man do anything with any individual Indian,

He can give him no title to a foot of land. He is afloat, so that if this man (Capt. Pratt) is to be supplemented in his effort, these men who have put new life, inspiration and hope into the Indian, are not supported by law, we had better give up the work right there, because no good ultimate result can come from it.

"So there are three or four things absolutely necessary as legislation if you desire to accomplish anything with the Indian. First, you must authorize somebody to deal with this individual Indian. Next take him out on the broad reservation, mark out a suitable spot for agricultural purposes that shall be his in such quantity as may be proper for the benefit of the whole number. And then, third, you must so convey it that the white man can not touch it, that the Indian will hold it as his own and shall be unable to part with it until, like the white man, he develops into such a man that he understands its value and may dispose of it intelligently himself.

"And then you must give him citizenship, or all the rest is lost.

"Senator Dawes then read extracts of 'S. 54,' a bill that is the result of the work of years, and is desired to effect the three objects stated in the address. This bill has passed the Senate twice, and has been in the House where it now is; and if the House does not pass it at the coming short session it will be put back again two years. The bill gives the power to the President to deal with the individual Indian, to cede an allotment of land to him from the reservation of public lands, have it surveyed, etc. It causes patents to be issued that will give him security of the land for twenty-five years, holding it in trust, and at the expiration of that time conveying the same to the Indian; and any contract made before the expiration of that time, even one to convey the land at the expiration of the twenty-five years, is absolutely null and void. The United States is obliged to protect him. His land is free of taxation, so that a state hostile to his interests or desiring to tax him, or get possession, can not do so so long as the title is in the United States. He can only part with it by an act of congress; (and I think he will be pretty safe for twenty-five years, said Senator Dawes). The bill also provides that on the completion of this allotment he shall have the benefit of and be subject to the laws, civil and criminal, of the state where he resides, and shall have an equal protection of the law; and every Indian owning or born in this land is hereby declared to be a citizen of the United States, and is entitled to the rights and immunities of citizenship."

WORSHIPPERS IN LONDON CHURCHES.

A CENSUS of the worshipping church going people of London is given below.

The results of a census of the worshippers at the morning and evening services at the churches and chapels of London, Sunday, October 24th, showed that out of a population of over 4,000,000 about 460,000 were present in the morning, and about 410,000 in the evening. At St. Paul's in the morning 1,662 were present, and in the evening 3,403; at Westminster Abbey, in the morning 1,721; at Archdeacon Farrar's in the morning 1,730, and in the evening 1,362. Mr. Spurgeon heads the dissenters by a great distance, his attendances being 4,519 and 6,070. He is followed by his pupil, Mr. Archibald G. Brown, of the East London Tabernacle, who returns 1,696 and 1,831, and by Dr. Parker of the City Temple with 1,325 and 2,415.

WE clip the following from a late Chicago Tribune:

"President Taylor of the Mormon Church has sent a letter to Secretary Lamar, in which he says that the future of the church over which he presides 'is indissolubly connected with the [this. ED] land.' He thinks it possible that in the future the Mormons may found colonies outside of the United States."

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY SISTER "FRANCES."

"Whatever in love's name is truly done
To free the bound and lift the fallen one,
Is done to Christ. Whoso in deed and word
Is not against him, labors for our Lord."

WE KNOW THAT WE HAVE PASSED FROM DEATH UNTO LIFE, BECAUSE??

TO THIS unfinished quotation from the words of John, we have added interrogation marks, and would be glad to have every one pause long enough to answer the question. It is not idly asked, but should come home to each one of us, who have professed our faith in the Lord Jesus Christ and followed him into the waters of baptism. There is an appointed way by means of which the Savior has said, "We should know of his doctrine," and there is also an appointed way by which "All men should know we are his disciples." This way not one of us needs to be told as to what it is. Let us suppose a case.

In a settlement of the Saints where there is a large branch of the church, a son or a daughter of ours is suspected of, or found to be going astray.

With what eagerness—what avidity some human vulture follows up such an one, and when they think they have found out the hidden sin, they will rise in the air with hideous caw and flapping of their black wings, calling others to the feast of scandal fit only for vultures to partake of; nor do they call in vain. It is not our daughter, nor our sister, therefore the eager summons is answered with haste, as indecent, and the filthy feast is rolled like a sweet morsel under the tongue. It is passed from lip to lip, and those most nearly interested are the very last ones to hear of it. Indeed they never hear of it until their fair name is rolled like a foot-ball in the mire and dirt of the streets, and then if the vile story be questioned or denied, how they will flap their wings and circle around the author of it, to protect him from the odium he merits, while they will repeat without a blush of shame, the name of some youth or maiden said to be the guilty one. And this is Christianity! This is the love of God shed abroad in the heart? Why, they have not even the grace of the ancient Jewish hypocrites, for they openly dragged the guilty woman before the Savior, but these spread the feast in private and darkness. Even the world, leaving Christ entirely out of view, is raising a higher standard than this.

Answer us, you fathers and mothers, sisters and brothers, Is this the way you shield your own families? Is this the way in which the great Shepherd of the flock cares for those within the fold? Ninety and nine were left alone in their safety, while from the safe, warm fold, the tender shepherd hastens in search of the straying one.

"But none of the ransomed ever knew
How deep were the waters crossed;
Nor how dark was the night that the Lord passed through,
In search of the sheep that was lost.
Out in the desert he heard it cry—
Sick and helpless and ready to die."

"But all through the mountains thunder riven,
And up from the rocky steep,
There rose a cry to the gates of heaven,
'Rejoice! I have found my sheep!'
And the angels echoed around the throne,
'Rejoice! for the Lord brings back his own!'"

How long, oh how long will such things as this exist! How long will the Saints of God act as spies in the service of the devil. In the law God gave to Moses, even dumb animals when found going astray and they the property of an enemy, were to be returned to him.

And now mothers, and fathers too, one word for us. How are we watching over our sons and daughters? What is the nature of our home enjoyment? Are we striving to make home attractive? Are we willing to sacrifice our own comfort and inclinations, in order that our children may be instructed and amused, so that home will be the dearest place on earth to them; or are we so absorbed in the pursuit of worldly things, as to forget that this is our first, our heaven appointed duty? Don't let us deceive ourselves and think it is not possible for the wolf to enter our fold. Others have felt just as secure, have loved and trusted just as firmly and the bolt has fallen like swift lightning from heaven, in a clear sky. Where are our sons and daughters when away from home? Whose company are they keeping? And what impressions are they receiving from that company?

Let us appeal to the sons and daughters of Zion that they band together as one. (If you are not one, you are not mine.) That they shield and guard the younger ones of the flock, even as they would the son or daughter of their own father and mother; and if they would follow the example of the blessed Master, let them be not afraid to go in search of the erring ones of the fold; but above all, let them never, never, take up and pass around a tale of scandal, or say anything to bring a reproach upon the name of any one. When our "Hope Gleaner Pledge" shall spread, it will embrace a band of workers who will hold such things in detestation, and say to the slanderer, "thus far and no further."

DEAR fathers and mothers: As we have been chatting with the HOPE in this issue of their paper, we want to have just a few words with you, in relation to Christmas. Will you read in their little paper the article by Eleanor, and also the comments upon it? When you have read it, will you think about it and try the plan for just this year. Does it not occur to you that children should be taught the sweets of giving very early in life? There was never a time in our lives, which we can now remember, that we did not derive more sincere pleasure from doing good than from anything upon earth, and just the same in regard to giving. Don't understand us as meaning to say that we have always done good; would to God we had; but we do mean to say that all the pure joy we ever had in life, all we ever expect to have has come from this source.

I have not a doubt that every one who reads this will confirm my testimony. Let us then upon this Christmas day begin to teach this lesson to our children. We ask of Sunday School superintendents and teachers to let this one request come up before them for prayerful consideration. Ask the children to begin to labor now and see how much they can get. Let them tell father and mother that they are willing to give up at least one Christmas present, that they may give one to Christ. Fill up a missionary box and send it up from every branch to swell the "Home Column Fund;" or if any prefer other ways of using it, so let it be, only let it go for the spread of the gospel,—this "Glad tidings of great joy unto all men."

MANY names in the Birth day contribution this week are for birth days some time past. One sister writes, that she would have been ahead of Eleanor, she thinks, but for the need of a stamp to post her letter. Sister Eleanor's came in before the Heralds were mailed at this office.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Sister E. A. Gill writes from Emerson, Iowa:—"My husband does not belong to the church, but my people do. When I was a young girl my father lived at the "Colony," so called then, but Lamoni now. I belong to the Shenandoah branch, but am isolated from any branch now; but I believe that God will take care of all those who put their trust in him."

Sister Cora Russell writes from Boone, Iowa:—"I feel impressed to write you this evening, to let you know how the Saints are doing in this part of the vineyard. I live one mile from the Boonsboro branch, and having two small children, I do not attend regularly. We have a Mite Society, and have done quite nicely. I have organized a Sunday School at home, and I feel blessed in doing so. We are going to save our pennies for the Hope. It is a dear little paper, and does me as much good as the little folks. I feel always like a little child. I need it, and find that it teaches me a great many things. I enclose an excellent receipt for Graham bread."

Buttermilk one pint, one egg, one-fourth cup of molasses, one small tea spoon of soda, a pinch of salt, and stir in Graham flour until quite stiff. You will find it nicer than if made with yeast.

Sister Martha H. Lockhart writes from Vineland, New Jersey:—"Not knowing that I shall be living next September, I enclose you 63 cents, as I was 63 years old last September. When I read your suggestion in the Herald to my sister (Mrs. Bristol), she said she would join me. She was 66 years old September 28th."

If others feel disposed to do the same, their contributions will be welcome. Sisters: don't let your birthdays pass as other ones have done.

Renew your covenant of consecration each year, and help on the cause of Christ. Give to the Lord first, and see if he will not recompense you. By the next conference we must have funds enough for one laborer for the Master.

We thank Sr. Bristol for papers, and assure her she lives in our memory.

Sister P. A. Sterrett writes from Pleasant Grove, Utah:—"I intend to make an effort to sell more of the 'Witnesses,' to help the cause of truth. I am interested in the spread of the gospel of Christ. Although so far west as to be almost unknown, yet I feel that God has watched, and is watching over and protecting us, and I feel while reading the sisters' 'Home Column' that your God is my God, and my heart is made glad."

LAMONI, Iowa, Dec. 2d.

DELOIT, Iowa, Oct. 25th.

Dear Sister Frances:—Seeing so many cheering letters in the "Home Column," and such good instruction to the sisters, makes me feel that each and every one in the fold of God can do something for the advancement of his work. He says, "Work while it is called to-day." He wants us to be diligent, faithful workers. He says, "Cast thy bread upon the waters, for thou shalt find it after many days." Are we striving to help do this? I believe we can help in many ways to send God's light and truth to the perishing; I love this work, my whole heart and soul are in it; the older I grow, the more beauty and grandeur I can see in it. God has richly blessed me with testimonies of its truth, and I am firmly rooted and grounded in it. While at the reunion of the Saints God blessed me in hearing his word. There were many sacred truths imprinted indelibly upon my heart, and I was made to rejoice in heart and soul. I felt that the kind and loving influence of God's Holy Spirit was there, and we felt drawn closer to him; and may God help us to do his will and keep his commandments, that we may ever retain this Spirit, and may have a right to the tree of life, and enter in through the gates into the city.

In gospel bonds, your sister,

KATE TURNER.

WILBER, Neb., Oct. 31st.

Dear Sister Frances:—I feel thankful to God for the "Mothers' Column." It gives me great joy and comfort to read the sisters' letters, for I see how bravely they fight the battle of life's troubles. Sister workers, I am one of those that are called to pass through many severe trials. The Lord knows best what is good for us all. I want to be reconciled to my fate; but some times I feel like rebelling, and if it was not for the knowledge I have of the work I am afraid I would at times. But thank God I feel firm in the gospel. I am an old time Saint and many who read this will know me and know the dreadful trial I was called upon to pass through over a year ago. I had but one dear boy, and he was taken from me. He went out one morning healthy and well, but before noon he was brought home almost dead. Oh! that dreadful morning will never be forgotten by me. One comfort I have; he was in good standing in the church. So kind and loving, we miss him very much. Now mothers, we must not forget our young men and women, for they need our care and protection as well as our smaller ones. Give good advice; spread a kind and loving influence around them and they will remember it in days to come when you and I have passed from this earth to the home beyond. Praying that the spirit of Israel's God may inspire my sisters to write for the "Home Column," I sign myself as one of you in the same faith and work.

CATHARINE NUTT.

GALESBURG, Mo., Nov. 14th.

Dear Sisters:—Allow me to write a few words for the "Home Column," for I love the glorious cause which we are engaged in; and I know it is of God. My husband is out of the church, yet he believes the doctrine and upholds it. Whenever we have preaching he hoes to hear. Bro. O. P. Sutherland preaches here sometimes. He has good liberty and good congregations, and some earnest listeners. I have good neighbors, and my prayer to God is that they may learn the truth as it is contained in the Scriptures. I ask an interest in your prayers that I may be ever faithful.

Your sister,

MARIAH RIMBOLT.

GREENVILLE, Pa., October 25th.

Dear Sister Frances:—Having promised some of the dear mothers and sisters whom we met at the Reunion that we would write them after our return home, and having so little time to spare aside from family cares and household duties, we thought we would ask a little of the valuable space of the "Mothers' Home Column," in order to reach them all; and by this means only take the time to write one letter, as we do not wish to slight any one that might wish to hear of our welfare. It would seem presumptuous in us to think that persons who are a thousand miles away from us, and not related to us by the flesh, should care for us, did we not feel and know the strength of the chords that bind the Saints of God together in bonds of love, peace, wisdom and joy, that is unspeakable, and ever full of glory, and can never be broken so long as we live near unto God, and are often bowed before Him in prayer, and often in communion with the Holy Spirit. Even in the silence of our own homes, apart from all the world, does the Holy Spirit teach us, "here a little and there a little," until we can feel our stubborn hearts are being gradually cleansed and purified by its presence within us. Then when we are in a great measure without the Comforter, and clouds hang thick over our pathway, and we can feel no burning influence within us, then is the time to try our faith. We have often thought of the words of a good old colored man who said, "When the way is all dark and you can't see the hand of the Lord, then is the time to trust in him." Many times have we been in the dark, but when we get out in the sunshine again we can't help but thank the Lord that he has tried us, for it seems to take so very much chastening to keep us humble; and we know that we are the nearest to our Father when we are the humblest before Him. This morning, after the sweet enjoyment of the Lord's day are past, and we have partaken again of the emblems of the broken body and shed blood of our dear Redeemer, thus bringing our little family into a nearness with Himself, when I look back at the Sabbath just past and many other blessed Sabbaths, my heart goes out in praise and adoration to God for all his good.

ness to his people, in restoring to the earth again the fullness and completeness of the everlasting gospel; surely in view of all that the Lord has done for us we should be the best people on the face of the earth, the firmest and best of fathers, and the most patient, purest and wisest of mothers; if we all try to come up this high standpoint, even as we are commanded to be perfect as Christ is perfect; if we hope to be like him when he comes. If, dear sisters, we through Christ strengthening us and giving us the Comforter can do all these things, just think how much better our children will be than we have been. Just picture to yourself a mighty host of children, all being trained and brought up in the fear and admonition of the Lord, not only on Sunday, but every day of the week! Just think of the grand army of willing workers there will be, wanting to fill our places as the Father calls us home, one by one to rest from our labors. But we, mother and sister, are apt to forget the importance of our calling when baking or ironing day comes and there are more calls for mother's help than she feels able to fill. Then is the time one is apt to get cross and out of patience; I know I am; but then is the time I feel to need help; and I go away to some quiet spot to plead with God that he will give me strength to set before my dear children an example of patience and long suffering; and I am never turned empty away, but blessed according to the desire of my heart. And how much we need to heed the exhortation of our dear Savior when he says, "Watch and pray lest you enter into temptation."

My sisters of the Reunion will perhaps like to hear something of how we got home, if all was well with the children. We left brother and sister Garner's on Monday morning, and after a dusty but not unpleasant ride of twelve miles we arrived at the Valley, where we took the train for Council Bluffs. We took dinner and spent the remainder of the day and that night at the pleasant and peaceful home of brother and sister Beebe; we much enjoyed our stay beneath their roof. Tuesday morning we again took train for Middletown, Ohio. Bro. McDowell accompanied us a short distance on the way; we had a pleasant chat before we parted. We spent all that day on the cars, all night and all the next day. It was dark when we reached our uncle's house in Middletown. We were very hungry and tired, but we found kind hearts and willing hands, and they soon got a plain supper ready. We staid there two nights and one day. On Friday morning we bade them good-by and started for home, sweet home, and little ones. At eight o'clock we arrived in Greenville. After we had passed out of the station we met our son, who had come to meet us with a lantern and his express wagon, which he was trundling along with him to haul our satchels home in. We kissed him and loaded his wagon. He then trudged cheerfully on with his load and his lighted lantern, while we walked behind, asking him many questions about home and loved ones. When we got about a hundred yards from home we could see the lights in the windows. Our three youngest were so brim full of joy at our return they could not wait, but came running down the street, laughing; and when they reached us, such caresses and kisses we did have! Such as only sweet, happy childhood can give. We found our dear eldest born awaiting us at the front door. Inside the house we found our dear aged mother about as we left her; and our dear sister had the house as neat as a new pin, and our supper ready. So here we are at home again, after our trip of a thousand miles to the Saints' Campmeeting; and we must say we feel repaid a hundred fold for the trouble of getting there. Indeed, words can not express our joy and thankfulness, that we were permitted to meet with the Saints in Reunion; and may the peace we felt then continue with us is my prayer,

EMMA GARRETT.

GREEN'S LANDING, Me., Nov. 5th.

Dear Sister Frances, and all in Christ:—I still have a desire to let my light shine before the world, and bear testimony to this latter day work. We all should know that it is the gospel of Christ, and it is the power of God unto salvation; so let us not be weary in well doing, but ever ready to stand in our place and to give a reason for the hope that is within us. It is not every one that saith Lord, Lord, that is acceptable, but it is the doers of the work. I am looking down to the end of this journey of life, when we, if faithful, with all the redeemed ones, will be gathered home to that beautiful world where Jesus has gone to prepare a place for those that love his appearing. My desire and determination is to live and prepare myself, that I may be ever ready. Keep on, dear mothers, train your children in the way the Lord would have them go, and when they are old they will not depart from it. At times you may feel discouraged in your efforts, but bear in mind that the faithful, fervent prayer of the righteous will prevail with God. Requesting your prayers,

Your sister in Christ,

HANNAH ROBBINS.

MONDAMIN, Iowa, Nov. 9th.

Dear Sister Frances:—I wish to enter the Home Column at this late hour, and tell you that I truly appreciate the same. I don't see how we got along all this long while without it. The Herald would not now be complete without it. May God ever help you, with all who contribute, to make it ever profitable to its readers. I have felt for some time that I would like to help, but also feeling my weakness have kept still. I am one of the young mothers in Zion, and feel much need to be taught, that I may train my three little ones in the way that Saints' children should be trained. The "Fragment" in the last Herald (November 6th) suggests a problem to which I have given some thought.

The Book of Covenants says, "Let your garments be plain, the beauty thereof the workmanship of your own hands." If the word "plain" means absolutely plain without pleat, or gather of any kind (as some think), in what way are we to beautify our garments, is the problem? There is a saying, I guess it is true, that "A thing of beauty is a joy forever." We must make them in some shape, and most, if not all of us, have a taste for pretty things, with different ideas of the same. What I may think is pretty, some other sister would not like at all, and vica versa. I have more ambition to make a garment when I see it is going to suit me, than when it is not; and I suppose we are mostly alike. Of course we can cultivate proper tastes, and crucify all false pride, and thus come somewhat to a unity of thought,

I for one want to be found doing the Lord's will in all things, and use my influence (if I have any) for the good of God's kingdom. We can all pray for a "unity of the faith," and I believe we will get it. Will some of the experienced ones teach us in these matters through the Column, that the daughters of Zion may know how to cultivate proper tastes, and be found with the "beautiful garments" on, the robe of righteousness. Ever praying for Zion's triumph over things worldly, I remain your sister in Christ,

CHRISTIE A. STUART.

We gladly welcome each new correspondent, and are especially pleased with the questions propounded in this letter. We hope they will meet careful and prayerful attention, and have well considered answers.

Correspondence.

BURLINGTON, Iowa, Nov. 22d.

Since leaving home I preached in Lucas twice, six times at Montrose, and twice at Burlington. Elder James McKiernan, president of the district with me. We will remain in Burlington for a day or two longer, and then visit the Keokuk branch. I remain in the district until after the conference, December 4th and 5th, at Farmington, and then go to St. Louis. I can not speak very encouragingly of the branches that I have visited, but with the opportunities they have, they have done well—much better than some which have decidedly greater advantages, for they are practically without preachers in their branches. The president of this district is a faithful man, but he is under the necessity of laboring to sustain his family, and has but little time to spare without making great sacrifice; greater, in my opinion, than he ought to make. He is an efficient laborer and ought to be assisted in some manner so that he can devote a greater part of his time to the work of the ministry. The church can not afford to let such men lie idle for want of support.

PLYMOUTH, Mass., Nov. 18th.

Editor Herald:—My last communication was from Maine, I believe. This state presents a field of labor for the gospel missionary second to none that I know of. There are a great many country churches that have been abandoned by their pastors, who have sought the convenience, luxury, and "hire" to be found where wealth, fashion and popularity center, in the cities and large towns. As a consequence of the flight of these "hirelings," there is a vast number of sheep left without a shepherd. It seems a pity that these poor people can not raise enough money to hire these disinterested shepherds to stay with, and protect them from "false prophets," and "wolves in sheep's clothing," etc., but such is the fact.

Bro. Sheehy is a wise counselor and the church interests are safe in his hands, but he needs help. Bro. V. Green, whom we met in Jonesport, but who returned to the western district is there now, and working for the cause and is liked by the people, conducting himself as a minister should, striving by study to show himself approved unto God.

Our conference session at Green's landing, as well as the meetings held afterward were crowded. An effort on the part of the town minister to arrest the interest in our meetings by advertising an expose of Joseph Smith and the Book of Mormon, drew a crowd of twelve, I believe. "The wisdom of their wise men shall perish." "Babylon shall fall." May God hasten the day of opening to the blind eyes. August 18th Bro. Pert brought Bro. Sheehy and myself by sail boat to Sedgwick, and from there by team with Bro. Candige to Blue Hill, making our home with Bro. Frank Carter, where we preached for a week with increasing interest, leaving many friends and interested ones; with white harvest fields beckoning and waving beyond and around.

The morning of the 25th found us on steamer for Jonesport, passing by the grand and awe inspiring scenery of Mt. Desert and Bar Harbor. Evening at seven found us a welcome such as only Saints can give, and comfortable quarters at the hotel—the home of Sr. Mansfield. Time would fail to tell of the kindness we met at the hands of the children of God in Maine—we shall never forget; may God bless them and fulfill their every desire for good. If there are places in the country where it can be said without detriment that the Saints are popular, Jonesport is one of them. I wish the church was able to furnish a man for that place; we have many friends there who are willing to give more than a cup of cold water, and that too not in the spirit of common charity, but in the name of a disciple and servant of God; of whom it will be said: "Come ye blessed of my father." We labored here, preached at Addison, Mason's Bay, Indian River, and at East Addison at different times; held two meetings also at Epping.

Our conference at Addison, September 11th and 12th, was a success. The Universalist church was filled at all our sessions; the Baptist choir singing for us at our preaching service, and the influence of God's Holy Spirit attended the preaching and social services. Returning to Jonesport we held meetings there every evening; Sunday, Bro. Sheehy baptized four more, fulfilling a dream Sr. Sheehy had nearly a year before in a somewhat remarkable manner. Seven were baptized during the trip. The seed sown I am satisfied will bear fruit and will ripen and some be gathered by the missionary this winter. We preached alternately, or nearly so, averaging in spite of storms, a meeting every night during our stay in Maine; but Bro. Frank is not one of those ministers that prefers to hear himself talk to any one else, but is always willing to give his brethren a chance, (a little more than some of them want, sometimes, I think), but this failing is not so common as to be unbearable, generally speaking, and is far to be preferred to that jealousy that works to the detriment of the cause by that self-sufficiency on the one hand and disparagement of the efforts and jealousy of success of brethren on the other.

The 21st of October, leaving Maine for home and for our Massachusetts conference. Saturday found us with the Boston Saints in conference assembled, which proved to be one of the best,—in fact our two last conferences have been altogether the best that I have seen in the east. The preaching was excellent; social services were attended by the manifestations of the gifts of the Spirit, and our hearts were made glad in the sureties guaranteed in the gospel. Seven were baptized after conference, the Spirit being present in power both at the water and in confirmation. Remaining with the Boston Saints over the following Sabbaths, and until the 8th. Wednesday, 6th, conducted the funeral service of Mrs. Hamilton, a Baptist lady. Saturday 9th went to Scituate, and on Sunday by request of district president, and according to previous arrangement organized what is now known as the Cranston Branch, twenty-two members, I think; Elder H. Thompson president, Bro. A. Vickers acting priest. Since then have preached in Providence, Georgiaville, Attleboro, Plainville and Mansfield. Also from October 29th to November 6th was with the Brocton Saints, speaking nearly every night, with excellent liberty and increasing attendance, and only left to fill prior appointment at Mansfield. Expecting now to return to Brockton some time next week, and continue as long as interest or circumstances warrant. Meeting yesterday here; few out, but Spirit present. To-night we speak in Cordage Company's chapel, here in North Plymouth, and will labor as best we know and can, leaving the result with God.

Everywhere we go we find a few, or many, interested and hungering for the word of the Lord; but the greatness of the field and scarcity of laborers are discouraging at times; nevertheless, the work is onward in this district, notwithstanding the trials that oppress us all at times. The attainment and exercise of the gift of wisdom with both the laity and those who are called to minister in gift, ordinance, or preaching, will enable us to progress, and remove stumbling blocks from the way of the investigator; and in no quarter is Satan more successful in retarding the work than where the "gifts" seem to be the principal thing sought for, and end to be accomplished by possessing a "power" that defies authority, opposes itself to all order or law established by God for the discipline, education, and final salvation of his people—a "Holy Ghost" that leads them, not into, but away from the word of truth, sanctioned by ages of experience and witnessed to by those who do have the better gifts of discernment, wisdom, etc., would that we could all say with Paul: "We are not ignorant of his devices." The fact that these spirits have proved themselves to be lying spirits, seems in no way to discourage these enthusiastic ones; and weak ones looking on, without power of God's Holy Spirit to discern, are led into temptation, to make light of any exercise of the gifts of the gospel.

For my part, I can conceive and recognize the trials that some of our gifted brethren and sisters are under at times, because of the watching and criticism they are subjected to by the altogether worldly wise, who like a prophecy or a tongue from an infallible oracle in the shape of a man or woman. The only infallible oracle for God's Saints is the Holy Spirit, and that is secured to us with its blessings, not by lazily lying back and demanding always the infallibility of its utterance, or adaptation to our perhaps darkened mind and understanding; but by a holy life and walk in accordance with God's law. We may be enabled to sift the chaff from the wheat, and by spiritual discernment be kept from the error of rejecting the counsel of God on the one hand, or being deceived with the prophets who unconsciously, and honestly perhaps, may be led by their own or some other spirit or influence to say, "thus saith the Lord," when the Lord has not thus said. But being placed between these two fires is one of the trials of missionary life, and I suppose is good for discipline at least.

The devil is after the Reorganized Church. I see that David Whitmer is a partial victim of the ignorance of what this church is accomplishing, and the spirit that unfortunately seems to have deceived him, objects to the name of "Jesus" in connection with the church, and no wonder; for "at the name of Jesus every knee shall bow"—a service which devils and spirits of devils do not wish to be tormented into before their time. "Try the spirits." God has given him to be head over all things to the church which he himself acknowledges. We are told that the church should be called properly the Church of Christ, and if found with any other name, "will be found on the left hand of God," etc. Of course, the "Church of Christ"—what cunning of Satan. If it be St. James, St. Johns, St. Peters, St. Pauls, or St. Mark's—it is verily not the Church of Christ. But which Christ? For there have been and are many. There is Christ's Church, and the Church of Christ, in all our cities, nearly; but they are not the Church of Jesus Christ. They are all the daughters of their mother—Babylon.

The priesthood order as maintained by this church seems also to have furnished a chance for contention to not only Bro. Whitmer, but other unstable souls, even here in the east, who have been encouraged by his late statements to reporters, and published in late Boston papers, in their indifference to the work of the church and the unity of faith and purpose necessary to the spread of the gospel of the kingdom of God.

In nothing do I recognize the greatness of the mission of the "choice Seer," more than in the restoration of the Priesthood which belonged even in Moses' day to "the true tabernacle which the Lord pitched, and not man;" and the priestly service had with the church in the wilderness, and the lively gospel oracles; "to whom," said Stephen, "our fathers would not obey, but thrust them from them and in their hearts turned back again into Egypt." David in one of his Psalms recounts their rebellion in the wilderness "until God greatly abhorred them—so that he forsook the tabernacle of Shiloh (or Christ), the tent which he placed among men;" the law which was added to the true service to serve as a schoolmaster to bring them to Christ. And again was the tent of the "true tabernacle pitched according to the pattern of heavenly things shown in the mount; as first a presidency with Moses, Aaron and Hur, his ministers and aids; with the nobles and quorum of the Seventy of the Elders, &c. So now did this man Christ Jesus again call his priests and ministers in the order of the service and pattern shown, of whom it was said that "The government should be upon his shoulders, and when he ascended on high he gave these gifts of apostles, and other offices mentioned in this connection by Paul; save under the general statement of governments. The seventy whom he chose with another seventy also belonging to this order of him to whom all power in heaven and on earth was given, and of whom it is said by Paul, that "this man because he liveth ever, hath an unchangeable priesthood;" and if there is but one office and but one incumbent, namely, Christ himself as mediator, appearing now in the heavenly place for us; then who has a right and authority to stand as minister between God and man upon earth. Where does David Whitmer get his authority? Or shall we assume with the world to take the letter and go and preach the best we know how, trusting for God's acceptance of our method and earnestness. I believe in the restoration of the true tabernacle service and the order of its priestly authority by revelation and commandment to Joseph Smith; and as the kingdom which Daniel saw grows among men, the more will the beauty, order, harmony, and necessity of this law of adaptation of means to the great end in the establishing of the everlasting kingdom of God be made apparent.

I recognize the value of the testimony of David Whitmer to the Book of Mormon, by reason of his honesty and upright character, and do not endorse all that Joseph Smith may have said or done; but he has been under fire sometime, and I think ought to rest; his temptations—only God knew. The man who persistently talks about or against him will lose the Spirit of God if he had it before. He has gone from a world in which he did not have an overly good time. I believe that he is in the paradise of God. I denounce that fanaticism that declares in prose or verse, that he is "pleading with God in behalf of his brethren," as sacrilegious. "There is one God and one mediator between God and man," the man Christ Jesus; but I revere the memory of Joseph Smith for his great work and calling. I also remember that I am benefitted by what he suffered for the cause of Christ. I can not afford to depreciate the magnitude of his calling.

I remember visiting many years ago in Independence, Missouri, Dr. Wm. E. McClellin, who unsparingly denounced the Reorganization, and proved its high priesthood and other fallacies, as clearly as does David Whitmer now, and had succeeded in dazing a few who had belonged to the church. He also proved that if Joseph Smith was taken, no power but to appoint another in his stead should be given, and that man was David Whitmer; and that the "Church of Christ" would soon be organized, and untrammelled by any addenda or impedimenta; would rise in all the grandeur of his desire. When I asked him why he did not go and see Bro. Whitmer, and have the true church started at once, so that the honest might have a refuge from delusion. He replied that he was going. He subsequently informed me of his visit to Richmond, and its failure, because Bro. Whitmer, like the Spaulding manuscript, which Howe sent for "did not read as he expected." His failure to a great extent, as I understood, (and I wish to speak with careful reverence for the truth), was due in a measure to a failure on the part of David to appreciate his true worth and ability as a Moses man; and also of the indifference of Bro. Whitmer concerning his own calling, etc. This I learned from correspondence carried on mostly on his part after I left there. "Great men are not always wise." The wisdom which comes from above is first pure and then peaceable. O, to learn the lesson of humility. "He that would be great among you," let him listen to the Divine Teacher.

We want the promises of God and not of men—how are they secured? "For all the promises of God are yea and amen in Christ Jesus." How do we get into Christ, in order to obtain all his promises, salvation from beginning to end? "For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ," &c. Yes; that's what Bro. Whitmer would say, and some who have gone out from us would say as they baptize their converts in—what? Water. Yes, that's it, water, but not into Christ. Why? Because not into the church, which is his body, "the fulness of him that filleth all in all."—Eph. 1:22, 23. "The hope of the gospel" is in the church and kingdom of God, whereof, says Paul, "I am made a minister, who now rejoice in my sufferings for you, and fill up that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ in my flesh for his body's sake, which is the church."—Col. 1:24. Being "members of his body of his flesh and of his bones," grafted into the true vine and partakers of its nourishment and its life. We can afford to look with charity, but not always without protest, upon those who have suffered themselves to be arrayed unwittingly, as we would believe, against the interests of the Church of Jesus Christ, by the subtle tactics of the everlasting enemy and opposer to the church and kingdom of God and its establishment among men. Where is the kingdom which was to be set up by the God of heaven, and never to be thrown down! Is it represented by the men at Richmond, Missouri, or has it not yet been set up?

In faith and hope,

MYRON H. BOND.

Bro. Blair: Much good was done at our late debate on the "Sabbath Question." It lasted three nights. Some had to go away for want of room. An attempt was made the second night to do away with my "Synopsis," but the people voted that I should use it. A vote was taken at the close to see who, in the opinion of the people had gained the day. Eight only voted against me. More anon. Yours,

J. J. CORNISH.

INDEPENDENCE, MO., Nov. 22d.

Dear Herald:—When I last wrote I had just closed a series of lectures at Clinton. Since then I have been laboring at Armstrong and Kansas City, with good prospects ahead. At the former place I was assisted by Brn. Joseph Luff and A. J. Cato, (the "Texas ranger"). All the meetings were well attended, and the interest all that we could well expect. The Saints rejoiced in the truth, and sinners expressed themselves instructed and some are standing at the door of the kingdom. Bro. Joseph Emmett, president of the Armstrong Branch is ably assisted by his staff officers, and with but little exception all the members of the branch are striving hard to live as becometh Saints, all of which we rejoice to see. The Kansas City Saints are laboring under disadvantage on account of their scattered condition, and are but few in number. But the prospects are better than heretofore. Bro. Shaw is an excellent president and an able minister. Meetings are held regularly every Sabbath and Wednesday evening in the new little church on Troost Avenue, between 20th and 21st streets, while our ever faithful priest, J. Tankard is out on the highway and is heard by hundreds nearly every Sunday afternoon on the square presenting the words of life and pointing out the way that leads to eternal happiness. May God bless all those faithful laborers is my prayer. At the great day there will be much rejoicing when we receive our reward for our feeble efforts. There is but one thing that we regret; sometimes men become so intelligent according to their own judgment that God can not do anything with them, and everything that others are doing and trying to do is all wrong, and they put obstacles in the way at every opportunity. The Independence Branch is prospering nicely under the presidency of Joseph Luff. Some who have been somewhat backward seem to feel better, and are coming more to the front. Most all the elders and some of the priests are putting forth an effort in the right direction. As a whole, Zion is flourishing, and God is giving us great favor in the eyes of the people. I have many calls for preaching and am enjoying good liberty in speaking.

I think those articles on Seventies presiding, by W. A., "Lawabider," and the Editor, are all excellent, and will in time result in much good.

THE WORK IN WALES.

No. 15 Broad-st., DOWLAIS, Wales,
November 6th.

Dear Herald: We highly appreciate you, and have great delight in reading the sermons, articles, letters, news, and answers to questions. But although we appreciate you, and generally are all well pleased with your contents, yet there are pitiful exceptions that make us feel sorrowful: such as was published some months back, for the sake of marring the bright character of an illustrious dead. We pitied the writer, but was astonished at ye Editor in publishing them. Again: we are pained by reading a letter from Elder J. Dewsnap, in Herald for October 16th, page 652, which is full of false accusations. Where is your consistency, Mr. Editor, when you stated in your sermon (Herald page 669): "False accusers,—I would be infinitely glad as a man, as a teacher, if there was none of this class found among the Saints;" and give publication to one of the meanest false accusations ever written against the Saints of God. The accusations are false, and the accuser proves it. The accusation is: "That the carnal appetite is permitted to reign, while the crucifying of the lusts of the flesh is ignored." How can that be if, as Mr. Dewsnap said, that Elders Morris, Gibbs and Jenkins, have labored hard for the purification of the church. Either they do not labor for purification, or these evils are not permitted. How Elder Dewsnap can reconcile both statements I do not know. We deny the accusation.

Again he says: "I have it upon indisputable authority that not long ago a worthy elder of one of the Welsh branches was requested to visit one of the other branches for the purpose of administering to the sick. Upon his arrival he was surprised to find both an elder and a priest in a most reprehensible state of drunkenness." The authority for this statement is Elder Cope, of Cardiff, an innocent, truthful young man; and he says emphatically that Elder Dewsnap misconstrued what he said. He says that he visited a branch, but not by request, a sick person was there; he administered; the ordinance was successful; that there were two men there at the time is true, and rather under the influence of drink, but neither of them was an officer in the church at the time; they were silenced for their evil habits; which ought to prove to Elder Dewsnap that carnal appetite is not permitted to reign.

Again he says: "The same authority mentioned another brother who has been in the habit of putting forth his energy as a preacher of the gospel, when in a disreputable condition arising from an overdose of strong drink." Why, Elder Dewsnup, you connect this with the work in Wales, when you knew that it was in Nottingham, England, that Elder Cope told that the man lived, and this had taken place before ever he came to Wales. Where is your consistency that you call jewel.

Dear readers of the Herald, we beg to inform you that Elder Dewsnup came to Cardiff very late on Saturday night; was with us in company of that eminent, godly servant of Christ, Elder Taylor, of Birmingham, and faithful Elder Caton, in a district conference, on Sunday, September 12th; he attended the meetings—morning, afternoon and evening. In the morning he spoke a few words of exhortation, seemingly with good feeling. In the evening he preached an excellent sermon, he being an eloquent, powerful speaker; all were delighted. After the services, as he said, we met at Elder Webberly's, and there sang together the songs of Zion; all was joy and happiness, every one was pleased, especially Elder Dewsnup, who in the midst of the singing, gave vent to his feelings by praising Elders Jenkins and Gibbs as men worthy of their high calling. When separating, all was love, peace, and happiness. He left Cardiff early Monday morning, and went to North Wales, and he says he was treated kindly, and that the Saints there were of excellent character. He went home on Thursday to Manchester, and wrote that letter. What does it mean? Is it that elders are to go abroad and preach eloquent sermons and then publish in public journals that that community is not fit for any one to join, Mr. Editor.

The mission conference held at Aberaman ask that you publish this defense; at their request it has been written.

Yours,

THOMAS E. JENKINS.

OMAHA, Neb., Nov. 22d.

Bro. Blair: I take pleasure in writing you of the work in these parts. We are having most excellent meetings here now. We have two preaching services on the Sabbath. Bro. Mark preaches every Sunday night by appointment, and has splendid liberty. He gives entire satisfaction to all. A number of strangers attend regularly, who are not in the habit of going anywhere to meeting. He is also teaching the young folks to sing, and also conducts the singing at the meetings with the aid of the organ, with good effect. Sunday School, Bro. Mark in charge, is held just after the morning service. The prospects are that he will build up a large school. He is taking a lively interest in the work here, and he feels well in spirit.

The dark cloud seems to have been lifted, and better times are at hand. I have just returned from Sarpy county, where a week ago I baptized a man in the Platte river, where Bro. R. M. Elvin baptized seven some time before. A Methodist preacher of Springfield made an attack of three hours long, one evening, before a large crowd, on baptism as we teach it. We are to reply to him in about two or three weeks. We were prevented at that time by a storm, the greatest ever known in Nebraska at this time of the year. He said he was God's minister, and God told him what to say; said that John did not go into Jordan at all, as the banks were so high and steep; that he stood on the bank and dipped the hyssop in the water, and thus he baptized hundreds; and that such was the way in which Jesus was baptized; that there was not much water in Enon, but many wells, etc. He thanked God that he believed in a God that did not require us to go into the river, especially at this time of the year, etc.

How is that for "God's minister!" We see herein how far men are removed from the worship of the living God. We see also the necessity of the angel's coming with the everlasting gospel, calling the attention of the people to the God who made heaven and earth, etc.

There is a good interest in that neighborhood. The Saints are alive in the work and take great pleasure in scattering the seed wherever and whenever opportunity offers. They have a good reputation, they are respected, and this gives power to the preaching of the word. Would to God it was so everywhere, then it would not be half so hard to convince people of the truth; but this is one of the crosses the ministry has to bear in this life. We were much blessed in laboring; to God be all the praise.

Yours in the covenant of peace,

W. M. RUMEL.

KANSAS, November 16th.

To-day finds myself and wife enjoying the hospitalities of a member of the Lutheran Church, by whose request we came here to preach, and have delivered several discourses, and quite an interest is manifest. This gentleman, Mr. Sybald, with whom we are stopping, dreamed he was in heaven, and that it was a two story building, and he desired to be in the upper story, and so would others who were with him, and they looked around to see how they could get there. I thought it a true representation of his condition. I told him I was now showing him the way up to the upper story. This seemed to strike him with force.

The demand for preaching is so great in this field, it is enough to make a man sick at heart to think he can not make more hear the gospel when they cry, "Come over and help us." An elder needs the strength of Samson, the patience of Job, the courage of Daniel, and the faith of Elijah, to equip him for the ministry. Two have given their names for baptism already, and what will be the result of the continuation of our labors here, time will tell. The outlook at present does not bid fair for my attending the district conference at Blue Rapids, December 11th. The good I can do here in presenting the good old story had ought to replace the comfort there would be in meeting the brethren and sisters in conference. Brethren from Ness and Lane and Troga and Edwards counties, are waiting for my appearance to sound the gospel trumpet in their neighborhoods. The Lord only knows whether I shall be able to reach them or not. I desire to extend kind regards to all the Saints where we have been received and cared for, in confirmation of what the Lord said in the beginning to the elders: "The same will feed you and clothe you," &c. May the blessings of heaven attend the Saints. It is the duty of every one holding authority to report to the district conference they belong to so that the district may know what the strength is, who can labor and how much, for by branches reporting their needs and wants, the conference can direct her ministerial help to the different fields.

Yours in gospel bonds,

A. H. PARSONS.

LAMONI, Iowa, Nov. 28th.

Editors Herald: I have often thought I would write to let the Australian Saints know how we like this country. We arrived here last May, and found Lamoni as good as we expected. It is quite a new and small place, but there are some good Saints here, very kind-hearted, for when my wife was sick, they came and did all they could for her. I can say like a brother last Sunday afternoon at meeting, that there are as good people here as I ever lived amongst. The climate here I like much better than in Australia, for we have not got the mosquitos to trouble us like we had there, and my health is much better here, and that is one great thing to be thankful for. As for expenses, I think we can live here quite as cheaply as we could there, and we both feel satisfied with this country. I once heard a brother say that when any one came here they should come with a good spirit, also with a determination to stop here and help build up the place. As you will see by the Herald, we want a few good, enterprising men with money, to help build up the place, and give work to the poorer class. This letter is for the Australian Saints, and I can bear my testimony that the Spirit of God is working with this people, and that we are both satisfied here.

Yours in the faith,

THOMAS J. & ALICE A. FARMER.

TESTIMONY ON THE BOOK MORMON.

BY EBENEZER ROBINSON.

BROTHER JOSEPH:—Having been requested by Bro. Blair to write for the Herald, a statement with regard to getting the Book of Mormon stereotyped and printed in 1840, I will endeavor to do so as briefly as I can in justice to the subject.

The first edition, (three thousand copies), of the Book of Mormon was printed by E. B. Grandin, in Palmyra, New York, in 1830. The second edition was printed in Kirtland, Ohio, in the church printing office, in the winter of 1836-7, on which I assisted in setting the type. This edition consisted also, I believe, of three thousand copies.

In 1837-8 a large majority of the church members moved from Kirtland to Caldwell and Davis counties, Missouri. In the fall of 1838 the great persecution arose against the church, which resulted in Lilburn W. Boggs, governor of Missouri, issuing his famous exterminating order to General Clarke, commander of the militia of the state, to "Expel the Mormons from the state, or exterminate them if necessary." Quite a number of the members of the church were killed, (eighteen were massacred at one place, Haun's Mill), some sixty cast into prison, the writer being one of the number, and all were required to sign a deed of trust, conveying their property, both personal and real to the state, to, as they said, "defray the expenses of the war," and the entire church was driven from the state in the winter of 1838-9.

The writer, (having been liberated from prison by order of the court), walked from Far West, Caldwell county, Missouri, through the snow in the latter part of January, 1839, to Quincy, Illinois, where he arrived early in February with barely one dollar in his pocket, and his family, (wife), yet to be provided for her removal.

The citizens of Quincy, and people of Illinois generally, were kind and hospitable to the exiled members of the church, and I soon obtained a situation as journeyman printer in the office of the "Quincy Whig," published by Messrs. Bartlet and Sullivan, for whom I will always retain a warm regard. As soon as possible, arrangements were made and my wife came, and we remained at Quincy until the month of May, 1839, when we moved to Commerce, Hancock county, Illinois, afterwards called Nauvoo, to which place the church rapidly gathered.

At a council of the First Presidency and authorities of the church, early in June, it was decided to let Don Carlos Smith, and the writer (as we were practical printers) have the press and remnants of printing material, which had been saved from the mob in Missouri, by having been buried in the ground and a hay stack placed over it, and that we should publish a paper for the church, or a church paper, at our own expense and responsibility, and receive all the profits arising therefrom. The council named said paper Times and Seasons. Accordingly we undertook the task, and after purchasing fifty dollars worth of type on credit, from Dr. Isaac Galland, and cleaning the Missouri soil from the press and type that had been saved, and hiring from one of the brethren, fifty dollars in money, which we spent for paper, we issued the prospectus for the Times and Seasons, and sent it to the brethren residing in the different states.

The only room we could get for the printing office, was a basement room in a warehouse, on the bank of the Mississippi River, with a ground floor which was kept damp by the water constantly trickling from the bank side. Here we set the type for the first number of the paper, which we got ready for the press in July, and had struck off only some two hundred copies, when both Carlos and myself were stricken down with the chills and fever, and what added to our affliction, both our families were taken down with the same disease. My wife was taken down the very next day after I was, which sickness lasted us ten months. This was a year of suffering for the citizens of Nauvoo, as it was estimated that there was not one well person to ten who were sick. Five grown persons died out of one family in the short space of one week.

Before we had taken sick we had wet down paper sufficient for two thousand copies of the Times and Seasons, which paper mildewed and spoiled. Afterwards another batch of paper was wet down by Francis Higbee, who thought he could work the papers off, but he failed and that paper was lost.

Subscriptions for the paper soon commenced coming in, in answer to the prospectus, and the two hundred copies sent out, which enabled us to provide for our families; and also to have a small, cheap, frame building put up, 16 by 22, one and a half stories high, the lower room for the printing office, and our friends moved myself and wife into the upper room, or chamber, in the latter part of August. We were moved upon our bed, and a portion of the time, in those days, neither of us was able to speak a loud word. We had been living in an old log house, situated in the woods above the upper stone house, on the river bank, more than a mile from the printing office. This was a happy change for us.

In the month of November 1839, we secured the services of a young printer from Ohio, Lyman Gaylord, and resumed the publication of the paper. In the winter of 1839-40, brother Carlos and myself had each of us a log house built on a lot donated to us by the church, situated on a block next to the one on which the printing office was located, and moved into the same in early spring.

The two editions of the Book of Mormon, spoken of above, had all been sold, so there were none to supply the demand which was being made for them. The question arose, how can means be devised to have an edition printed, as the church was in the depths of poverty, and many of its members just recovering from a severe and protracted sickness, brought on in a great measure, as is believed, in consequence of the terrible exposure to which they had been subject in being driven from their homes in Missouri, in the depths of winter; therefore the idea of having the Book of Mormon printed was given up as hopeless.

My health had so far recovered that I was able to walk back and forth from my house to the printing office; when, in the month of May, 1840, as I was walking from my house to the printing office, I received a manifestation from the Lord, such an one as I never received before or since. It seemed that a ball of fire came down from above and striking the top of my head passed down through into my heart, and told me, in plain, distinct language, what course to pursue and I could succeed in getting the Book of Mormon stereotyped and printed. I went into the printing office and in a few moments brother Joseph Smith, he who translated the Book of Mormon by the gift and power of God, as I verily know, stepped into the office, when I said to him, "Bro. Joseph, if you will furnish $200, and give us the privilege of printing two thousand copies of the Book of Mormon, Carlos and I will get $200 more and we will get it stereotyped and give you the plates." He dropped his face into his hand for a minute or so, when he said, "I will do it." He asked how soon we would want the money. I replied, in two weeks.

Brother Carlos and I made an effort immediately to obtain our $200. We found a brother in the church who would let us have $120, until the next April at thirty-five per cent interest, the interest to be incorporated in the note, and all to draw six per cent interest, if not paid when due. We consented to the terms, and got the money. A few days after the same brother brought us $25 more, on the same terms, making $145. I took the money and put it away. In a few days brother Joseph Smith came to the printing office and said, "Brother Robinson, if you and Carlos get the Book of Mormon stereotyped you will have to furnish the money, as I can not get the $200." I replied, that if "he would give us the privilege of printing four thousand copies we would do it." He said he "would do that." We then made a strenuous effort to raise more money, but signally failed, and did not succeed in raising another dollar for that purpose.

We were considerably in debt to different persons, and our creditors were repeatedly pressing us for money, so that after a little time we began to draw a few dollars from the $145. We knew that it would not do to be paying thirty-five per cent interest for money to pay ordinary debts with, so Carlos said to me, one day in June, "Brother Robinson you take that money and go to Cincinnati and buy some type and paper, which we must have have." I said "Yes, I will go, but I will not come home until the Book of Mormon is stereotyped," for it was as fire shut up in my bones, both day and night, that if I could only get to Cincinnati the work could be accomplished. He replied that "that was out of the question, as it could not be done with our limited means." Brother Hyrum Smith also said it could not be done, but brother Joseph Smith did not say it could not be done when I told him, but he said, "God bless you."

Brother Joseph and I immediately went to work and compared a copy of the Kirtland edition with the first edition, by reading them entirely through, and I took one of the Kirtland edition as a copy for the stereotype edition.

On the 18th of June, 1840, I took passage on board the steam packet, "Brazil," which made regular trips from Cincinnati, Ohio, to Galena, Illinois, stopping at Nauvoo as she passed each way. At St. Louis, while the steamer was waiting for passengers and freight, I foolishly stepped into a mock auction store, when the auctioneer had up a fancy box filled with valuable articles, among which was a gold watch, or what the auctioneer claimed to be one. A young man present said he wanted an interest in the contents of the box, and if I would bid it off he would take half of it. I bid it up to $23, when of course I secured the prize, but just then I did not find my partner ready to take half. This took $23 from my already limited purse. I left that auction room, if not a better, I trust, a wiser man. Since writing the above sentence, the thought has occurred to me that perhaps it was a good thing that it occurred, as it had a tendency to try my faith just that much more, and the sequel proved to me that the Lord is abundantly able and willing to provide means for the accomplishment of his purposes, when we follow his directions.

After arriving at Cincinnati I purchased a quantity of paper and put on board the "Brazil" to take to Nauvoo on her return trip. After paying for the paper and paying my passage, I had \$105.06 $\frac{1}{4}$  left. Now came the trial of my faith. I had not yet taken my trunk from the steamer. The adversary of all righteousness said to me, "Get more paper and some type and go home; it is folly to think of getting the Book of Mormon stereotyped; for you can not do it." I replied that "I came for that purpose, and did not propose to return until it was done;" but I assure you he made the big drops of sweat roll from my face, but I did not give up to him for one instant, or swerve from my purpose, although I was there a stranger in a strange city, not knowing a single person there, except those who came with me on the steamer.

I took the Book of Mormon in my pocket and made enquiry for a stereotype foundry. I was informed there was one on Pearl street. I found the place, and as I stepped into the office a feeling of horror came over me and it seemed as though I was in prison. A gentlemanly appearing man was there, and I asked him what they charged for stereotyping a book, giving him the size as near as I could without naming or showing him the book. He told me what they charged for one thousand ems, a term which I understood. I then asked him if there was not another stereotype foundry in the city. He said, "Yes, one in Bank Alley, off Third street, owned by Gleason and Shepherd." I felt in an instant that that was the place for me to apply to, and bidding the gentleman "Good day," left, breathing freer when I stepped into the street. I soon found the other foundry, and as I entered the office, I saw three gentlemen standing by the desk, in conversation. I asked if Messrs. Gleason and Shepherd were in. A gentleman stepped forward and said, "My name is Gleason." I said, "I have come to get the Book of Mormon stereotyped." Mr. Shepherd stepped forward and said, "When that book is stereotyped I am the man to stereotype it." I then handed him the book and told him what size type I wanted it done in. He took the book and went to a case of type the size I had named, and set up one line and counted the ems in the line, then counted the number of lines in the page and multiplied the two numbers together, and then counted the number of pages in the book, and multiplied the number of pages by the number of ems in a page, when he said the stereotyping would amount to five hundred and fifty dollars. I told him that I had one hundred dollars to pay in hand, and would pay two hundred and fifty dollars more in three months, or while he was doing the work, and the remaining two hundred dollars within three months after the work was done. He said he would do that, and sat down and immediately wrote out a contract accordingly, which we both signed, which contract I have to this day. I then told him I wished to see a book binder and contract for the binding of two thousand copies of the book. He said I will go with you to a good book binder around on Main street, and taking me by the arm, we went directly to the book binder, who said he would bind two thousand copies in good leather for two hundred and fifty dollars, which was twelve and a half cents apiece. I told him I would give him eighty dollars while he would be doing the work, and the remainder within six weeks after the work was done. He agreed to that, and wrote out a contract to that effect, which we both signed. I told Mr. Shepherd I wanted to engage paper enough for the two thousand books, when we went from the bindery to the paper warehouse where I had just purchased the paper I sent to Nauvoo; but the paper dealer, the proprietor, was not in, so we left word for him to come to Mr. Shepherd's foundry the next morning, which he did, when I engaged the paper from him, amounting to nearly two hundred and fifty dollars to be paid for in payments similar to the stereotyping and binding, but we did not write the contract. After we had concluded our bargain, the paper dealer said, "Mr. Robinson, you are a stranger here, and it is customary to have city references in such cases when we deal with strangers." Mr. Shepherd stepped forward and said, "I am Mr. Robinson's backer, sir." "All right," said the paper dealer, "you can have the paper, Mr. Robinson." This was the only case where any reference, or backing was required.

Mr. Shepherd purchased a font of new type the day we made the contract, and put three compositors (type setters) immediately at work on the book, and I was to remain and assist in reading the proof, so as to be sure it was done according to copy. I was to have twenty-five cents an hour for what time I would be engaged at that, or any other service for Mr. Shepherd, to be applied on the contract.

I engaged board with Mr. S. W. A. Oliver, who was in Mr. Shepherd's employ as moulder and finisher of his stereotype plates, and paid him the five dollars I had left, after paying Mr. Shepherd the one hundred on his contract, leaving me only 6 $\frac{1}{4}$  cents (an old fashioned Spanish sixpence) on hand. The five dollars was soon boarded out, and there I was, a stranger in a strange city, with contracts on hand amounting to over one thousand dollars on which only one hundred had been paid, and board bill due and nothing to pay with. I confess that for a time, viewed from a worldly standpoint, it looked quite gloomy, but I never for a moment lost faith in the final success, or literal fulfillment of the previous promise of the Lord made to me in Nauvoo. In the mean time I had written to Bro. Don Carlos Smith telling him what I had done, and also to several brethren in the eastern states requesting them to get subscribers for the book, offering to send them one hundred and twenty books for every one hundred dollars sent us in advance, in time to meet our engagements. It was several weeks before I received a response.

The first money I received brother Don Carlos Smith sent me a twenty dollar bill on the state bank of Indiana, a specie paying bank, the bills of which were at a premium of 13 per cent, so that I realized $22.60 for the $20. This relieved me of present financial embarrassment. Not long after this, my brother, Joseph L. Robinson, who resided in Boonville, Oneida county, New York, whom I had baptized into the church, when on a mission to that state in the summer and fall of 1836, sent me a draft on the Leather Manufacturer's Bank of New York City, for $96. This was also at a premium of 13 per cent. Bro. John A. Forgeus, of Chester county, Pennsylvania, who now resides at Little Sioux, Harrison county, Iowa, then a perfect stranger to me, whom I had never seen, sent me a draft on a Philadelphia Bank for two hundred dollars, as a loan, which I afterwards paid him in Nauvoo. Several other brethren sent me money in advance for books, so that I paid Mr. Shepherd all his money before it became due, and gave the book-binder eighty dollars on his contract before he had done any work on it, and when I was ready for the paper to print them on, the paper dealer with whom I had contracted for the paper on time, did not have it on hand of the size and quality I wanted, when I went to another paper dealer who had the article I wanted, and paid him all cash in hand for the paper, and had the books printed on a power press, for which I paid the cash in hand as the work was done.

I had the printing progressing before the stereotyping was finished, so that by the time the last twenty-four pages of stereotype plates were finished, the printer had the book all printed, except the last form, of twenty-four pages, and the printed sheets were in the hands of the book-binder being folded, so that soon after this last form was printed the book binder had several hundred copies bound, ready for me to deliver to those who had advanced their money for the books. This was strictly in accordance with the instruction I received in the first manifestation made to me in Nauvoo.

Thus the work was accomplished, and all paid for before the time specified in the contracts, and I had nearly one thousand copies of the book left. The work was finished in October.

I then purchased from Mr. Shepherd and other parties several fonts of type, and material for a stereotype foundry and book-bindery, and a winter's supply of news and book paper, and took to Nauvoo, a considerable portion of which I paid for down, and got credited for the balance. Mr. Shepherd endorsed one note for me of four hundred dollars, payable in four months, which money I sent him before it became due.

In June, 1844, I went to Cincinnati and settled all up with Mr. Shepherd, and paid him what was due him, (his bills altogether amounting to about $1000), when he arose and said, "Mr. Robinson, do you want to know what made me do as I did when you came here last summer, it was no business way, it was not what I saw in you, but it was what I felt here," putting his hand upon his heart.

This voluntary statement of Mr. Shepherd's afforded me great pleasure, as it was a practical illustration of the ease with which the Lord can move upon the hearts of the children of men to assist in the accomplishment of his work and purposes; and to our Heavenly Father be all the praise and glory, now and ever, Amen.

From the foregoing experience, together with many other evidences which I have received of the truth of the divine origin of the Book of Mormon, I bear record that it is true, and that the promises and prophecies contained therein are being and will be fulfilled to the letter. May the Lord help us to walk according to its holy precepts, that we may be able to stand in the day of his visitation and power, which is coming as a whirlwind upon the nations, and that we may be worthy to enter into his rest, is the desire of your brother,

E. ROBINSON.

DAVIS CITY, Iowa, Sept. 25th, 1886.

WHY SHOULD WE PRAY?

THERE is probably no query that arises in the minds of the Saints which affords the Devil more pleasure than the one just propounded. And indeed we are led to think if his satanic majesty can infuse any impressions, or course of reasoning into the minds of God's people that he presents this one as frequently as any other.

Yes; why should we pray? Since we are informed that "God so loved the world that he gave his only Begotten Son that whosoever believeth on him should not perish but have everlasting life." Also that he is omniscient, hence better acquainted with our surroundings than we are; our adaptabilities, our necessities, our capacity together with our appreciations are all much better understood by God than by ourselves; he knows better how to give good gifts to us than we who are evil know how to give them to our children.—Matt. 7: 11. "Your Father knoweth what things ye have need of before ye ask him." (6: 8) Now, is it not clearly evident that man is liable to ask amiss? And does it not follow as a natural result of this great love, this superior wisdom that the divine being will bestow upon his creatures the good things they need, whether we ask or not? Our answer is most emphatically no. It is presuming altogether too much to think that spiritual, or superhuman blessings will be given gratuitously like the sunshine and the rain, upon the just and unjust. Such blessings are the result of other causes, and an opportunity is given us to produce those causes by strict adherence to the word of the Lord.

In the first place, if we accept the above proposition that his love is so great and his wisdom so much superior to ours; if we believe this we ought to be willing to take him at his word, and when he commands us to pray, believe that act to be for our benefit. And right here we would remark, that whoever thinks it not necessary for them to pray, or we would put it even stronger than that, whoever continues to neglect prayer from any cause whatsoever, thereby plainly manifests their distrust of the wisdom and love of God; for, if he is so wise and so kind, he surely would work no hardships against his servants by requiring at their hands a thing not for their good, an act requiring a portion of their time daily which would result in no good to them. Again; if the Deity was to give his Spirit in this way, how short would the period of time be until we would try to cast God entirely out of the matter, and claim blessing to be the result of some other cause. Many of us would soon reason with the "gifts" of His Spirit as the infidel world reasons with the gifts of nature, casting God entirely out of the matter, and urge some other cause for their presence.

The nearest a parallel case we can now think of from which to illustrate this matter is that of an earthly parent dealing with his children; and when we compare man with the Deity we would not be guilty of using any mean or low specimen of humanity, but the highest type possible; one who seeks not so much to gratify the livid and unwholesome lusts and desires of his children as he does to develop their manly character; one who is not so indulgent as to try and gratify every foolish notion, but seeks to bring out such manly traits as self-denial, industry, submission, honesty or loyalty. It may be necessary at times for him to give some severe tests; he may not only have to urge, chide and correct, but command, rebuke and chasten, when his judgment tells him it is for their good; one who seeks their future good more than their present gratification. Such an one may wish to inspire his children with the principles of appreciation and humility, and by an experimental watching of their temperaments he may see the best course to pursue is to let them see and feel the need of some things before giving to them. He may wish to give a lesson on manners and forms of civility, such as obedience etc., and after explaining and illustrating the proper way of asking for things they need, he may withhold such things from them even until it becomes a severe trial to himself, until they obey his instructions. It may be his good pleasure that they have the same; yet he sees it is for their good that they ask, and ask properly.

The application of the above allegory is this: Express instructions are given all through the Scriptures for us to pray; that is, to ask for what we need. It is amply illustrated by the pattern of our Divine Master in his oft supplication for his Father's blessing. Indeed, it seems to have been necessary for him, for when left alone and without this blessing he could do nothing. (John 5: 19, 30). If necessary for Christ, by whom "all things were made;" (John 1: 3, 10); sustaining the relationship he did to the Father, how much more for weak, dependent humanity.

It is not a mark of humility, nor an act of obedience; nor does it savor of reverence for us to presume that his abundant mercy will cause him to bless us, regardless of justice. Then again, it appears that whatever is obtained by effort is more duly appreciated than what is a free gift.

We have only to look at the tramps, the inebriates, the worthless, depraved beings who had fortunes left them by rich ancestors on one hand, and a majority of our most successful, enterprising men, statesmen and public servants, who are self-educated, and came up through roads thickly strewn with obstacles, on the other. We believe that none can so fully appreciate a blessing as those once deprived of it. It appears then, that the Deity has adopted methods commensurate with his superior attributes; those well calculated to beget within his creatures those qualifications that would best fit them for his divine presence; and be it remembered, that prayer is one of those methods.

It has been known for a long time that "necessity is the mother of invention," and some may have thought invention to be her only heir; but on examination we find she has a goodly number of children and grandchildren; the names of some of them are as follows: industry, diligence, appreciation, humility, obedience and prayer. We might mention others if necessary. These are of one common family, and the last named is by no means the younger; he occupies a prominent chair, a responsible position, insomuch that some of the above named depend on him for life; so if we cast him out, or in any way disapprove of him, others will die of starvation; so on the whole we should not only let "prayer" survive but give him a hearty reception as an important benefactor.

But some there are who seem never to lack for excuses; and while no excuse we ever heard will bear the test of a thoughtful investigation, yet some sound very plausible at first thought. For instance, we read in John 4: 24: "God is a spirit, and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth." Now, says one, this term "must" is imperative language and equivalent to saying, "If I have not the Spirit I must not pray; and specially am I led to doubt the propriety of the attempt when I make a commendable effort to pray and then do not receive the Spirit."

But would it not be well for us to examine the premises before jumping at such wild and unscriptural conclusions. Let us see. The term "prayer" is not exactly synonymous with that of "worship." Prayer, strictly speaking, is the simple act of asking, importuning, supplicating, or begging; while "worship" is the act of paying divine honors, to adore with homage, to love intensely." Tillotson says, "The worship of God is an eminent part of religion, and prayer is a chief part of religious worship." It is so in just that proportion that we mix the two together, to that extent that we blend with our asking divine honors; such as reverence, praise adoration, thanksgiving, and the like. Bowing upon our knees is expressive of the same, a token of our humility and the superiority of him we approach. There are many when pressed by extreme exigency will pray for divine aid and protection; while all their energies, both physical and mental, are for the time being employed with the necessities of the case; such is not that kind of "worship" spoken of in the text.

It would be an act of hypocrisy for the writer to laud, and praise, and magnify the great "I am;" unless he had a portion of the Spirit; but there could be nothing more appropriate under such circumstances than for him to humbly pray for the Spirit, that he might have ample cause for such rejoicing and worship. We can importune for favors at the hand of a vagrant; but we can not worship what is not our superior; the attempt to do so would be an act of idolatry.

We think we have read somewhere a wise and truthful saying like this: When the saints pray, the devil trembles. If this is not written we think it should be, for it is a self-evident fact, that prayer is a source of strength to the faithful; and as the great battle of truth against error grows more intense, and as one by one his strongholds of deception are wrested from him, and knowing full well that the time is nearing when he will lose his power and be taken prisoner for a thousand years, well may he quake as he sees the privates and officers upon the side of truth importuning at the throne whence he knows reinforcements are sure to come. Prayer then seems to be the most fatal weapon we can wield against that arch enemy. We should take advantage of these facts and never allow this useful blade to become rusty. But, if we lay all argument aside and sum up our own experiences with the bright examples set us in the lives of Christ and his disciples, the many instances recorded in the Bible and Book of Mormon of great blessings obtained through prayer; as also the commandments given through the prophet to this generation, to observe this duty at all times, and in all places, we would have a preponderance of evidence upon the side of prayer. See Doctrine and Covenants, section 21:5; 18:4; 85:21, 36, 38; 90:8, 9; 98:11; 108:2. We hear another strange argument by way of connecting Matt. 6:7, "But when ye pray use not vain repetitions as the heathens do," with Exodus 20:7, and Deut. 5:11, and then reason thus. We have prayed for every thing we can think of and it is so seldom that our prayers have been answered, that we fear to pray again lest we violate these commandments.

Well, well! This is the last use we ever heard made of these texts. Yet it opens up a vast field for thought, and we can only offer a few brief qualifications to this duty of prayer. We are forced to the admission that thousands of ineffectual prayers are offered, a serious fact; yet we who offer them can find the cause of all this trouble in ourselves, as well as an all-sufficient panacea in the gospel. Our prayers should be for just what we need and can not by our own effort obtain; and it is just as much an exhibition of folly for one who is acquainted with the latter day revelations and believes them, to constantly pray for health in time of affliction, while at the same time their bodies are steeped in unhealthy narcotics, poisonous stimulants, and gorged with fat meats in hot weather, as it would be for a man who is sentenced for a term in the penitentiary for grand larceny to continually petition for a reprieve. There is just as much wisdom manifest by the man, who after having his buildings insured, refuses to pay his installments, forfeits his policy and then sues the company for pay when they burn, as there is by the Latter Day Saint, who offends his brother and refuses to restore and reconcile, but continues to partake of the sacrament, and then cry unto the Lord for health and cure when he is suffering the consequences of partaking those sacred emblems unworthily. 1 Cor. 11:29, 30.

The banking company who is too careless to keep proper track of their dividends, or be they ever so diligent in this and transcend the bounds of their charter and thus fail in business, is more liable to censure than pity; and some of us would be outspoken enough to say they ought to fail. But what shall we say for those who embrace this work upon its merits and then either through carelessness, or by overreaching themselves fail to observe the law of tithing and are unsuccessful in business?

What would you think of a man who would bitterly complain of the loss of standing in good society when he had been cast out for violating well established rules of decorum and decency. My estimation of that man's complaints would be the same as I would estimate the prayers of all who do not by a careful, earnest, practical, every day life build themselves up to that platform of worthiness.

In these and all other things we should subscribe ourselves closely to the rules governing them. Then, and not until then, can we consistently expect the good Lord to come to our rescue in times of crises, no matter how much we pray. "I the Lord am bound when ye do what I say, but when ye do not what I say, ye have no promise." Doc. and Cov. 81:3. It is also recorded, somewhere, that the Lord has said, "They that are slow to listen unto me in time of prosperity, I, the Lord, will be slow to listen unto them in time of adversity."

Conference Minutes.

NORTHERN NEBRASKA.

Conference convened at Fremont, Nebraska, September 10th, 1886. William M. Rumel presiding, Isaac Sylvester clerk. Opening session devoted to prayer and testimony; good feeling manifested throughout. Committee on credentials appointed consisting of Nelson Brown, G. M. L. Whitman and William Ballinger. Morning session:—Committee on credentials reported; report accepted and committee continued. Minutes of conference held at Platte Valley, Nebraska, approved. Elders Robt. Elvin by letter, Nelson Brown, William Ballinger, Wm. Rumel, reported. Bishop's Agents' Report.—On hand at last report $76.60, received since $56.50; total $133.10. Paid out $45.00, balance on hand to date $88.10. Union branch 46; 2 baptized, 1 died. Omaha 98; 3 baptized, 4 removed, 1 died, 1 ordained. Columbus 36. Platte Valley 34; no changes. Afternoon session, James Caffall reported. District president tendered his resignation and upon peremptorily declining to act any longer his resignation was accepted. Nelson Brown was then elected district president. Evening session. Credentials from the Columbus branch were received. Columbus branch 36. Upon motion Wm. M. Rumel, Bishop's Agent, and Isaac Sylvester, district secretary were retained for the coming three months. Brn. Chas. Brindley and George W. Galley of Columbus, reported by Bro. H. J. Hudson who reported in person. Preaching by H. J. Hudson at 10:30, a. m.; collection for benefit of Fremont church, $9.50. Prayer and testimony at 2:30 p. m. Preaching by Bro. James Caffall at 7:30, p. m. Collection $5.40. Adjourned to meet at Omaha, Nebraska, the first Friday in January, 1887.

NORTHERN MICHIGAN.

The district conference met with the Delaware Branch on the 16th and 17th of October, 1886; president J. J. Cornish in the chair; Bro. Charles Sherman secretary pro tem., and John Bailey assistant; Bro. William Davis chorister. The forenoon spent in prayer and testimony. Afternoon was occupied in hearing reports of officials and such other business as lawfully came before the assembly. Elders Reports.—Levi Phelps, confirmed one, blessed one child, and labored as circumstances permitted; J. J. Cornish, baptized 12; J. J. Bailey, baptized 2; Elder A. Barr, baptized 2; John Most, by letter; E. DeLong, by letter, baptized 1; E. A. Shelley, by letter, labored in the branch, assisted in ordaining one teacher, and blessed one child; Robert Davis reported. Priests C. E. Pearson and Lorenzo Rushton, William Davis, Thomas Whitford, Charles Green, Saleda D. Shippy and James Birch, by letter, baptized 2. Teachers Thomas O'Brien, William H. Smith, Enoch Leadsworth and Joseph Norton, reported, and Deacons Elijah Hind and Joseph Bass reported. Forester Branch 23, including 1 elder, 1 priest, 1 teacher, 1 deacon. Delaware 19, including 1 priest. St. Johns 45, including 1 priest, 2 teachers, 1 Deacon; 2 added by baptism. Mill Creek 37, including 2 priests, 1 teacher, 1 deacon. St. Thomas 24, including 1 priest, 1 teacher, 1 deacon. St. Gideon 23, including 1 priest, 1 teacher. Black River 15, including 1 priest, 1 teacher, 1 deacon, 2 received by letter. J. J. Cornish, A. Barr, J. J. Bailey, E. A. Shelley and Joseph Shippy were appointed delegates to April Conference. J. J. Cornish was sustained as president of district. Sustained J. A. Carpenter as secretary. Resolved that a copy of the resolution passed by the body at last June conference relative to Elder Robert Davis, be obtained and appear with the minutes of this conference. The resolution is as follows: "When the public statement and confession of Brother Robert Davis to the conference [were made.—Ed.], the following preamble and resolution were unanimously adopted: Whereas, this district in connection with the members of the Michigan and Northern Indiana District in the conference of the Michigan and Northern Indiana District four years ago, decided upon charges presented and trial to retain the license of Bro. Robert Davis as an elder; and whereas, that since that time he has continued to reside in this district, and has during the four years since passed conducted himself in all his associations known to us in a becoming and christian-like manner, and has made public confession of the wrongs complained of, and restitution so far as in his power and to the satisfaction of the aggrieved parties. Therefore, be it resolved by the members of the Northern Michigan District conference, that we freely and fully forgive the brother, and that we unite in asking the president of the mission to make such order in the premises as will restore to Bro. Davis his license to act as an elder in the church." The evening of the 16th Bro. Levi Phelps preached, assisted by Bro. Wm. Davis. The morning of the 17th the Saints assembled at 9:30 for prayer and testimony. At ten a. m. Bro. J. J. Cornish preached. At two p. m. two were baptized and confirmed, after which four were administered to, and two children blessed. At 3 o'clock Bro. J. J. Bailey spoke. Adjourned to meet at Uby, with the St. Gideon Branch; the president of district to name the time when such conference should convene.

MALAD.

A district conference of the Reorganized church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, convened at Oxford, Oneida county, Idaho, October 16th, 1886, at 11:30 a. m.; John Lewis presiding; John Van-der-Wood, Clerk. It was moved seconded and carried, that all business (reports Ed.) submitted to this conference shall stand accepted unless legal objections are made. Malad branch 33; including 3 Elders, 1 acting priest, John Lewis, president. Samaria 7; including 4 Elders, Owen Thomas, president. Oxford 30; including 2 elders, 2 priests, 2 teachers, and 1 deacon, John Hall, president. Elkhorn not reported. Elders John Lewis, John Hall, R. J. Anthony, Owen Thomas, William Richards, Morgan Jones, John Van-der-Wood, J. C. Clapp, Wm. E. Gooch, reported in person; J. H. Conditt, by letter, and Benjamin Croshaw, teacher, reported in person. The spiritual and temporal authorities of the church were sustained in righteousness. John Lewis was sustained as president of the Malad district till next conference; John Van-der-Wood was sustained as clerk. Report of district treasurer was read, having received $12.65 and paid out $11.15, balance on hand $1.50; John Van-der-Wood treasurer. R. J. Anthony was sustained as president of the Rocky Mountain Mission and J. C. Clapp as missionary, by our faith, means and prayers. The following Elders did the speaking during conference; John Van-der-Wood and John Lewis, Saturday afternoon; R. J. Anthony in the evening. Sunday morning, sacrament and testimony meeting; in the afternoon preaching by R. J. Anthony, and in the evening by J. C. Clapp. Adjourned to meet at Malad branch, at the call of the president of the district.

NORTH-WEST KANSAS.

The conference of this district was held with the Goshen branch, September 12th and 13th, 1886; President Parsons in the chair, H. R. Harder clerk. Blue Rapids, Deer Creek, Prairie Home, Elmira, and Goshen branches, reported. Elders G. W. Shute (baptized 4), H. R. Harder; M. Smith, J. Caffall (by letter), A. H. Parsons and J. D. Bennett; Priests V. F. Rogers, Z. T. Decker, E. M. Reynolds, A. J. Taylor; and Teachers T. Cochran and S. C. Andes, reported. Bishop's agent's report: on hand last report $16.75; received $19, total $35.75; paid out $45.76. The present officers of the district were sustained for the next three months. On motion, a week of revival meetings will be held in each branch; the president of district to appoint time, place, and preachers. Whereas, Bro. Bennett feels aggrieved as touching the resolution of December 12th, 1885, concerning his report being reprehensible; and whereas, it now appears that he did not intend to insult the conference; resolved, that said resolution be rescinded. Adjourned to meet with the Blue Rapids branch, December 11th, 1886, at ten o'clock in the forenoon.

Miscellaneous.

BORN.

TUCKER.—Near Palmyra, Nebraska, October 13th, 1886, to Brother Fred. L. and Sister Melinda Tucker, a son; blessed November 14th, by Elder Robert M. Elvin, and named, Levi Jefferson.

WOODS.—Near Wilber, Nebraska, October 29th, 1886, to Bro. A. N. and Sr. M. B. Woods, a daughter; blessed at Castor School-house, November 28th, by Elder R. M. Elvin, and named Olive.

TROOK.—To brother and sister Trook, of Moroni branch, Cass county, Nebraska, a daughter, named Nancy Edna; born July 13th, 1886; blessed October 26th, by elders J. Armstrong and J. Thompson.

DIED.

HALLIDAY.—Brother Henry S. Halliday, son of the late Henry and sister Alice Halliday, now of Salem branch, was born at Genoa, Platte Co., Nebraska, July 10th, 1862; was baptized June 13th, 1875, by his father; died November 21st, 1886, at his mother's home, of typhoid fever. Three weeks before his death he visited his sister, Lizzie Mathers, and while coming home he said to brother William Bullard, "This is the last time I shall ever go to see Lizzie. I have had a vision, and I saw father, and had a long talk with him, and he said he was waiting for me, and I am going to him; I am not going to stay here long. I do not desire to stay, I have no fear of death, but don't tell mother till I am gone, because it would make her feel so bad." Elder David Chambers officiated at the funeral. Our dear brother was loved by all, and he passed away in perfect peace.

How calm, serene, and sweet the peace
That fills the Saint's confiding breast;
Conscious that when death brings release,
Angels will bear him to his rest.
How firm the trust! It does not quail
When death's grim terrors meet the eye;
His faithful spirit can not fail—
He knows that his Redeemer's nigh.
Conscious of Jesus' tender care,
He yields his spirit to his trust
In steadfast hope that he will share
The resurrection of the just.
'Tis sweet to die, if this be death—
Transition from this world of strife;
Yielding this fleeting, mortal breath
For God's best gift—eternal life!
Give me, O Lord, such trusting faith,
Such steadfast hope, and constant love;
That when I'm face to face with death,
I may thy love and goodness prove.

CHARLES DERRY.

MACAULEY.—At Menomonee, Dunn county, Wisconsin, March 30th, 1886, sister Mary J. Macauley, aged 79 years, 1 month, and 16 days. Her departure was most peaceful and happy, even as her life had been a noble and faithful one, enduring her trials with gentleness and patience. Her husband, Bro. John Macauley, (who died two years before, was the presiding High Priest over the Glasgow and Paisley conference in 1842. They came to America in 1843, and after the death of Joseph, went away north into Wisconsin, where H. A. Stebbins the writer, found them in 1869 and they united with the Reorganized Church by baptism. Both were God-fearing and noble, faithful also unto death; and in the peace and love of God and his truth they departed from this life in full hope of his rest and of the resurrection.

ROHRER.—At his residence, West Side Hotel, Colton, California, October 27th, 1886, of partial sun stroke, Bro. John A. Rohrer, aged 51 years. Born in Germany, May 11th, 1835; married Esther Bailey, daughter of Elder John Bailey, of Cambridge, England, July 28th, 1859. Bro. Rohrer was baptized and confirmed by Elder Z. H. Gurley at Ogden, Utah, in 1876. He left two sons and two daughters grown up, to mourn his loss and to comfort their bereaved saintly mother; and may the sons unite as the daughters have done with the body of Christ, to form an unbroken family in the Kingdom of God. Our brother's last prayer was, "Thy will be done." Shortly before his departure he dreamed that his father-in-law, Elder John Bailey, came towards him, and standing on the opposite bank of a clear narrow stream, reached out his cane or staff, saying, "Here John, take hold of this and cross to me," which he did and said he felt happy, and glad to see him. The funeral was conducted under the auspices of the order of Odd Fellows; short sermon by Elder D. S. Mills, from Rev. 14: 13, followed by remarks by Rev. McDonald, of Colton, who seemed to sympathize with the family as he had done with the deceased. The closing ceremonies were performed by the Odd Fellows at the cemetery, at San Bernardino.

HAMILTON.—At Boston, Mass., October 4th, 1886, Margaret Eliza, wife of Bro. J. B. Hamilton; she was born in Nova Scotia in the year 1838. Although a member of the Baptist Church she endorsed her husband's action in lately uniting with the Church of Jesus Christ, and was only prevented from entering the kingdom of God by sickness and death; she was in life an exemplary woman, of good report by all who knew her. Bro. Hamilton's loss is a great one; but we know that the gospel consolations are his. We felt by the Spirit that it would be well with her. Funeral service conducted by Elder M. H. Bond, from John 5: 26.

SLOAN.—In Sacramento City, California, October 24th, 1886, aged 93 years, 11 months and 27 days, Bro. James Sloan, native of Dungannon, county of Tyrone, Ireland. He was ordained an Elder October 28th, 1837, in Columbiana, county, Ohio, and ordained a High Priest the 18th of February, 1838, in the above named county. He received a renewal of his license April 6th, 1843, for his mission to England and Ireland. About three nights before he died he sang the hymn beginning with "How firm a foundation, ye Saints of the Lord," all through twice. His funeral discourse was preached by Elder J. H. Parr.

STEVENSON.—Mother Ann Stevenson, at her home in Rock Creek township, Hancock county, Illinois, November 20th, 1886, of inflammation of the bowels and weaknesses of old age. She was born April 6th, 1810, at Ravenstone, Leicestershire, England; was baptized at the same place on the 5th day of April 1843, and became united with the Reorganization in the year 1869.

Her sickness was of about six days duration, but she passed peacefully away at the last, in the light and hope of the gospel. She leaves her aged companion, two sons, many grandchildren and great-grandchildren, to mourn her loss. Funeral services were conducted by Elder Richard Lambert, and hundreds showed their respect for her by attendance and following the remains to their last resting place.

PAGE.—George W. and Daniel M. Page, sons of Sr. Eliza G. Page of Hudson, Wisconsin; both died at Madison, Wisconsin, the former on June 11th, 1886, aged 37 years and 15 days, and the latter on November 19th, 1885, aged 34 years and 3 months. Both were taken to Hudson for burial. Sr. Page, after fifty-one years membership in the church, stands at the age of nearly four score years as a stricken yet majestic tree, almost alone in the place where she has dwelt for forty years, yet steadfast in the faith for all the solitude. The funeral sermon of her sons was preached by Bro. H. A. Stebbins on September 26th, 1886, in the Methodist house at Hudson. There was a large attendance and much interest manifested.

McDOWELL.—Near Chagrin Falls, Cuyahoga county, Ohio, November 10th, 1886, Sr. Mary, relict of Elder James McDowell, aged 76 years, 10 months, and 10 days. She leaves three sons and two daughters to mourn her loss. Sr. McDowell united with the church in the early part of 1842, in Pittsburg, Pa., being baptized by Elder John E. Page. She was healed of a grievous illness at her baptism. She united with the Reorganization at an early day, and always bore a faithful testimony to the truth, and endeavored to lead a true, prayerful and Christian life. She was instrumental by means of "fire-side preaching," of bringing several persons to a knowledge of the gospel, and leading them to the door of the fold of Christ. A few months ago, God gave her two blessed visions of the future—and often she shouted for joy and sang hymns of praise on her dying bed. She has gone to rest, and awaits the resurrection of the just.

HARRIS.—Near Stuart, Montana, November 23d, 1886, Elder Isaac Harris, aged 56 years. He was buried in Butte City Cemetery. Bro. Harris was a worthy man and highly esteemed by those who knew him.

BOWEN.—At Butte City, Montana, November 20th, 1886, of diphtheria, Eva, daughter of Edward M. and Mary Bowen, aged 7 years, 3 months and 7 days.

With Jesus, the Shepherd, and angels fair,
Sweet Eva rests in their loving care.

TYRRELL.—At Butte City, Montana, October 25th, 1886, William Herbert, infant son of Charles G. and Mary H. Tyrrell, aged 11 months, 1 day.

INSTRUCTION.

In the event of a district conference appointing Two Days' Meetings, there are two ways in which persons to have charge may be appointed: 1, The body may appoint. 2, The body may authorize the president to appoint, or if the body adjourns without making arrangements, it would then become the duty of the president to appoint, or write to the respective branches where the meetings had been appointed, instructing or advising them when coming together to appoint whomsoever they would to preside,—it might be the president of the branch or some one else. It does not follow that a president of a branch must preside at such a meeting; it does not properly come under his jurisdiction, unless appointed by the conference or its president. The appointment of such meetings by the legislative acts of a dittrict conference, without authoritative measures to preside would be to throw that part of Zion into confusion by failing to finish the work begun. There is no occasion for misunderstanding on such matters as these.

JOSEPH SMITH . . . . . EDITOR.
W. W. BLAIR . . . . . ASSOCIATE EDITOR

Lamoni, Iowa, December 18, 1886.

WRITING from Fenelon Falls, Ontario, November 20th, Bro. A. A. St. George asks:

Q. 1.—Under what name was the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints first incorporated?

Ans.—We have now no evidence that it was ever "incorporated" under any other title than "The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints."

Q. 2.—What are your chief objections to the church being called "the Church of Christ," when it is so plainly called that in the Book of Mormon?

Ans. 1.—It is called by various names in the Book of Mormon. If we must call it "the Church of Christ," in a corporate, technical and formal way—that and nothing else to be its legal title—simply because Christ called his church founded among the Nephites by that name, then we must reject the titles, "the Church of the Lamb of God," (1 Nephi 3:46, 48, 50), and "the Church of God," (Book of Mormon 4:4), both of which are used, prophetically, of the Church of Christ in this dispensation. Such a strained, perverse application of the Scriptures would make them conflict, and therefore we can not accept the theory that the Church of God in this age must be called always, and in every case, "the Church of Christ"—just those words and nothing else.

Ans. 2.—There is no command in the Book of Mormon that the Church in this dispensation must be or shall be called word for word, "The Church of Christ." If God intended that form of words, and nothing else, to be the title of his church in this age, then the Holy Spirit would not have called it "the Church of the Lamb of God" and "the Church of God." But the fact that God by his Spirit calls His Church in this dispensation by these different titles, is proof positive that the Church may take any of these, or essentially similar titles, and make it the formal, corporate name, and it be the Church of Christ, if it is built upon Christ's doctrine.

The Church of Christ, like himself, has a variety of names, and yet this variety has never been taken as evidence of heresy except by would-be wise ones "who make a man an offender for a word." These various titles are equivalents, with God and his people. God, and Christ, and the Spirit, and God's servants and handmaidens, have various names as the scriptures teach, and yet this variety is no evidence of either spiritual blindness or apostasy, except in the conceit and opinion of those who lack the light of God and the charity of the Holy Spirit. Those who "strain at a gnat" over this matter are those who make the scripture texts conflict, and whose theory would prove that the prophets, apostles, the Spirit, Christ and God Almighty, were all false and on the highway to eternal perdition because they call the church by other names than "the Church of Christ!"

Examine Acts 20:28; 1 Cor. 1:2; 10:32; 15:9; Gal. 1:13; 1 Tim. 3:5; 1 Cor. 14:33; 1 Thess. 2:14. Was Paul blind, or an apostate, because he called the church "the Church of God," the "churches of the saints," etc.! Yet this was long after Christ instructed the Nephites upon the name of his church in Book of Nephi 12:3; and this fact should prove to all that those who clamor for the formal title, "The Church of Christ," and allow no other, are false, irrational, and unscriptural in their claims, and are the ones who teach contrary to the word of God. We accept all the names given to the church by proper authority, as we do all the names given to Christ, the head of the church. In the beginning of this dispensation the church was called "the church of the first-born," (D. C. 76:5), "the kingdom of God," (D. C. 65:1), the church of God, (D. C. 4:1, 3; 10:1, 8; etc., etc.), in a similar way as in Bible and Book of Mormon times. All these are proper names for the church, and with those who understand and love the scriptures, either of these names or all of them, being equivalents, signify, and are essentially one with the name, "The Church of Christ."

In the history of the church written since 1827, the church is variously called the church of God, the kingdom of God, the Church of Christ, the Church of the Latter Day Saints, the Church of Jesus Christ, the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, etc

Its corporate name, as recorded under the laws of the land, is, "The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints," which name is essentially that of "the Church of Christ, but in an amplified and explanatory form, the words "Jesus" and "of Latter Day Saints," being added words, explaining and identifying it in contradistinction to many other churches having the corporate name "The Church of Christ."

The true church is in fact and in essence "The Church of Jesus Christ," and is composed of "Saints," and latter day Saints at that. In these essential facts lie the verity and propriety of the corporate name, "The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints." To object to this and demand that the corporate name shall consist exactly and only of these words, viz., The Church of Christ, is to antagonize the prophecies, and the usages of the church, in both ancient and modern times. For these reasons we object to being confined to the verbal name "The Church of Christ."

Another reason lies in the fact that the church in 1834, in conference assembled, saw fit to denominate itself officially, "The Church of the Latter Day Saints."—Evening and Morning Star, Vol. 2, page 352, etc. This was done, it is claimed by some, because there was another church incorporated with the exact title, The Church of Christ, and it was foreseen that confusion would ensue unless the recorded title of the two bodies were different and distinct.

In 1838 the church adopted the further title, The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.—See Mill. Star, vol. 16, pages 117, 130, 131, etc. And April 26th, 1838, Joseph the Seer received a revelation, saying: "Verily thus saith the Lord. . . . My Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, scattered abroad in all the world; for thus shall it be called in the last days," etc.—Mill. Star, vol. 16, pages 147, 148.

In order that the reader may see the timeliness of this revelation, he should remember that these were trying times for the church, for some of her strong ones were turning away to the "beggarly elements," following their own private notions and seeking to justify themselves therein by wresting and perverting texts of Scripture to suit their theories, prominent among them the name of the church.

In conclusion on this point, we shall readily and cheerfully adopt as its corporate title, "The Church of Christ," when a command to that effect comes through God's authorized prophet and Seer to His church. God's Church is one of order and authority, and he is wise who heeds this fact and profits by it. Private interpretations of Scripture, like private notions of church government are neither consistent nor scriptural. "If he neglect to hear the church, let him be unto thee as a heathen man and a publican."—Matt. 18: 17.

Answers to further questions will be appear in due time.

IN Bro. James Caffall's letter in this week's issue of the HERALD, there is an allusion to the letter of Bro. Charles Derry, in our issue of September 25th, in which Bro. Derry commends the HERALD for its position on Bro. T. J. Andrews' statement regarding the help that the minister might, or should receive while in his field at work. Bro. Caffall seems to construe this commendation, so warmly expressed by Bro. Derry, into a charge of wrong of some sort, against other colaborers in the gospel work. Bro. Caffall, also seems to think, that the HERALD, by publishing the eulogistic part of said letter, is in error in that it, also, shares this supposed charge. We are sorry to see this; as, at the time we published the letter of Bro. Derry, we had not the remotest thought that there was any reflection upon a single human being intended by the writer, let alone his fellow laborers; nor can we now see any such reflection in the language quoted by Bro. Caffall. We understood Bro. Derry, at the time, to mean that he was pleased to see that the HERALD had spoken in a plain and comprehensive way on a much controverted point; and we thought that we had the right to publish his commendation, and had no thought that any one could be hurt thereby. It seems strange to us that a man can not speak in praise of what may please him in the conduct of his fellows, and be free from the hurtful suspicion that he is thereby speaking derogatorily, or disparagingly of other of his acquaintances or co-workers. It certainly can not be that commendation of one man's good deeds is necessarily a charge upon others of evil doing. If so, what confidence can any man have that his best feelings and sentiments towards his fellow men may not be taken as an indictment against his best friends; especially if he should express them. Bro. Caffall certainly does not wish that his letter shall be so construed.

There are no charges of wrong doing made in the HERALD, in the article, "Aid to the Ministry," nor in Bro. Derry's letter, neither direct, nor indirect; no more than there are charges against some writers for the HERALD couched in Bro. Caffall's eulogy of Bro. G. S. Hyde's article on baptism. One who had written on astronomy, would have as much ground to find fault with the warm commendation of that article, as given by Bro. Caffall, as the latter has to find a charge of wrong doing against some minister in the field in the letter of Bro. Derry.

If Bro. Caffall seriously objects to the HERALD publishing any thing that bears a remote semblance to charges of wrong doing, how will he have the following from his letter construed? "The work in parts of Nebraska is fair, other parts it is in a languishing condition. The inactivity of local officials contributing thereto, or preventing progress; would it were otherwise." Now here is an indirect charge of serious neglect of duty made against somebody; who, the writer does not say; but it is local somewhere, for the letter so states. Suppose some one living in one of the branches visited by Bro. Caffall in the discharge of his ministerial labors, should choose to apply this as a charge made against him in an indirect way, and should essay a defence against it in the HERALD, would we be justified in publishing that defence upon the ground that Bro. Caffall had really attacked him as an officer of the church? We think not. Now on behalf of ourselves, and in behalf of Bro. Charles Derry, we assure Bro. Caffall, and all others, that no reflections were intended, no offence intended to be given, and we are sorry that any has been taken, if such is the case.

In our conduct of the HERALD we have tried to prevent the insertion of anything of a personal, or injurious nature; but we have not been able hitherto to avoid (or at least we have not avoided) this altogether, which we very much regret; and we shall studiously strive in the future to prevent offending in this way. We trust this explanation and statement will be satisfactory to all concerned.

BRO. R. J. ANTHONY was at Wanship, Utah, December 1st. He and Bro. J. C. Clapp are seeking to lead the captive Saints in Utah away from their bonds and afflictions, by pointing out their causes and cure; but they find it difficult, for the reason that of the Utah leaders, like the self-righteous leaders of the Jews, it may be said: "Ye neither go in yourselves, neither suffer ye them that are entering to go in." Matt. 23: 13.

He says that a young Stoddard, son of a polygamist, is the chief orator now among the "Liberals," and that he is likely to come east on a tour lecturing against Mormonism first and last, and he hopes some of our elders may meet and correct where needed.

The present condition of affairs in Utah he looks to see intensified rapidly from this time forward to the final issue, which to his mind, is not far distant.

A man in Franklin, raised in Utah, said to Brother Anthony that half of the Mormons in Utah were "Josephites" in sentiment though not yet aware of it, for the doctrines of the Josephites were either kept from the people or perverted to them. This same man said that people would yet learn the facts, and that then there would come a general and happy revulsion from the present Utah leadership and doctrine to the original faith.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

THE late district conference at Lamoni, was a success. The reports from the various parts of the district show that there were many who were desirous of hearing what was to be said on the subject of religion from a latter day stand point.

Bro. J. R. Lambert is off for the Bonnet School-house, and Brn. C. Jones and J.

Snively are to keep the work going at the Aliff School-house. There are several new openings at different points in the district, and efforts will be made to fill them.

Bro. I. N. White has another debate on hand just now. This time it is the Rev. Blalock, of the Adventists, or Christian Church, who proposes to do the business of driving Mormonism, as interpreted by the Reorganized Church, out of the field. The debate is to be held at Shell City, Vernon county, Missouri, and to begin on December 27th, and continue six days. We can only ask the Saints to bear Bro. White and the cause in mind and heart, that the good word be not defiled. We certainly have abundant reasons to feel assured that God will hold his servants harmless in doing battle for his work. Rev. Blalock has just closed a debate with a Dr. Roy, of the Baptist Church, and now comes to do battle against Bro. White and the cause he represents, with his laurels of victory fresh upon him.

Sr. Agnes Bair writes from New Mt. Pleasant, Indiana, the 3d inst., and asks that the elders call on her friends and preach for them. Her brother-in-law says he will procure them a place in which to preach, and will also see they are well cared for. His name is Charles Love, and he lives one and a half miles from Blaine station and seven miles from Portland.

Bro. N. Stamm wrote a card from Pleasantville, Iowa, November 30th, that he had been in Viola, preached once, had a house full and good liberty, from there to Lucas, spoke twice there; from there to Coal Creek, and found himself in his old field of labor. Bro. Stamm reports good attention and liberty.

Bro. S. S. Staley of Cave Springs, Kansas, orders the HERALD for himself and Bro. Joel Laning, and says he thinks it "the greatest preacher he ever saw."

George M. Carter writes from South Hancock, Maine, subscribing for the HERALD, and requests us to thank those, (unknown to him), who kindly sent it to him the past six months.

From the Bay City (Michigan) Sun we see that Bro. J. J. Cornish was given nearly two columns in which to "thresh" a Rev. Mr. Sims of that place for his yarns, exaggerations, and "whoppers." We are glad to see that the best papers of our times open their columns to well written, good tempered articles by our people in defense and advocacy of their faith. Times are changed marvellously in these matters from what they were ten, twenty, or more years ago. //

The "Bible Synopsis," now at hand, is a work of 564 pages, and is made up of Bible texts arranged under various heads as proofs or illustrations, also facts of history, and notes by the author, Elder J. J. Cornish. The chief merit of the work lies in the selection and classification of proof-texts, and in the personal testimonies related. The paper, press work, and general mechanical make up of the book reflects no credit upon those who did that work. Whilst the critic will find objections to the use made of some of the texts quoted, the work will nevertheless prove a help to the candid Bible student. In another column will be found the advertisement of the book, so that all who wish may know as to price and address.

Bro. I. L. Rogers writes us the 7th inst., and says he thinks some good can be done in that region, (Sandwich, Illinois), if ministerial labors were prosecuted thoroughly and wisely. He and others would be glad to have Bro. Joseph Luff preach there.

Sr. Edwards of Edmore, Michigan, writes us that she loaned her HERALD for October 30th, (the one that treats of the Seventh day), to a Methodist minister who held a debate with the Adventists, and that when the HERALD was returned it was minus that article. We sincerely hope the article may convert many to the truth. She further says: "We appreciate the HERALD. I think it is more interesting every week, and especially with the Home Column. We are loaning the Voice of Warning sent by Bro. Peters. All seem pleased with them."

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Ques.—Is it right for an elder to preach from the stand to the people of the world the doctrine of Baptism for the Dead?

Ans.—This would be owing to the manner in which it would be taught. If he assumed that it was now a belief of the church and an ordinance now to be administered by the elders, No.

2.—If it is right, when should it be administered, where and by whom?

A.—While we may believe the doctrine, it is a permissive ordinance, and we are not aware of any authority for the present administration, neither time, place, nor administrators are specifically determined. For this reason it can not be taught by the elders as authorized by the church.

The Deseret News for December 3d, has the following:

"RUMEL RECANTS.

"To-day John H. Rumel, Sen., was arraigned in the Third District Court. The indictment against him charged unlawful co-habitation with "Abbie Gray Rumel and Eliza Gray, sometimes known as Eliza Rumel," from December 1st, 1883, to November 25th, 1886. On the inquiry of the clerk, "What is your plea to this indictment, guilty or not guilty?" Mr. Rumel said to the Court, "If your honor please, I would like to make a short statement with regard to pleading to this indictment." The Court then asked what he had to say, when he read the following:

"In pleading to this indictment, if your honor please, I would like to make a short statement. My record as a law-abiding citizen for nearly sixty-eight years has never been called in question until this day. During this time I have never sued a person nor have I ever had a suit to defend. To say that I am guilty of this charge would be doing violence to my conscience; nevertheless, the grand jurors have indicted me for the crime of unlawful cohabitation, and as their findings are entitled to respect I shall plead guilty, which seems to be rather paradoxical. If I have erred in my judgment or understanding of the law in the past, I shall not tarnish my record as a law-abiding citizen in the future, and will obey the law in the future as construed by the Court. JOHN H. RUMEL, SEN."

"Mr. Rumel is a member of the High Council and one of the home missionaries, and his action was the cause of considerable comment both among Mormons and non-Mormons on the street Tuesday."

This means that when John H. Rumel was arraigned for a misdemeanor as defined by the United States Courts, he did not defy those placed in judicial authority over him, but submitted as gracefully as he could, to the inevitable destiny that awaits those upon whom the law lays its hand. We can see in this act of Mr. Rumel that which is commendable; but he will be pursued by his brethren of the church in the Utah valleys as a recanter. Upon him will be visited the ill names which the News has so often called those who have dared to act out of harmony with their religious leaders. One other, a Mr. George C. Watts, arraigned on the first of the month, also agreed to abide the law, and was released. It will now be in order for the Deseret News to blazon the names of these men abroad as reprobate to the faith. But how can they do this and still ask the people of the United States to believe their oft made statement that they are and desire to be law abiding is a matter not so easily understood. If it be true that they do desire to be loyal, why do they denounce those who simply promise to obey the laws?

A YOUNG brother, W. Armstrong, sends us the following from the Manchester Evening News for November 8th. It is interesting reading just now.

"THE POSITIVIST SOCIETY.

"The winter session of the Positivist Society was opened last night by a meeting in the Memorial Hall, Albert Square, Manchester. An inaugural address was delivered by Dr. Congreve, of London, who said that as one by one in different parts of England and of the world communities, however small, however public, arose which shared in the turning away from the old theology and in the putting on of a new conviction, they had it forced upon them, they had to allow, that there was arising a possibility of a new order of things, a new Church, analogous to that earlier Church which some nineteen centuries ago began in a very similar way. They saw these new bodies, as a rule, arising in contact with the great industrial problems of the day. They did not see the new religion taking the least hold upon the centers of knowledge, of thought, upon what were called the centers of the higher cultivation of England, such as the Universities. These were places where there was very considerable composure of mind, where people were not immediately brought face to face with the difficult problems of our disordered society. They, therefore, could go on without feeling the necessity for some change; but where we had that disorder strongly impressed on all around, where there was a great sense of the accumulation of mankind in dense masses without any guidance to direct them, there arose the wish for some remedial action. Hence it was that in England the towns in which the new movement had taken any form whatever were the great industrial centres. The old order of things was, as many recognized, giving way in all its aspects, and there was a giving way of all the traditional beliefs and authorities of mankind. No doubt there was a strong feeling among numbers of their fellowmen that the old beliefs could again be made of sufficient strength to bind mankind together, but he and those who thought with him believed that the remedy for the disorder which prevailed must take the form of a new organization, a new church based upon a new belief, or at any rate a new rendering of the old beliefs. Thus they aimed at affording a rallying place in the most sacred sense to all those who, coming out of the old order wished to help in the formation of a new one, and this new church must be in the truest sense a church able to include within itself all the countries of the earth."

CHRISTMAS BELLS.

I heard the bells on Christmas Day
Their old familiar carols play,
And wild and sweet
The words repeat
Of "peace on earth, good will to men."

And thought how as the day had come,
The belfries of all Christendom
Had rolled along
The unbroken song
Of "peace on earth, good will to men."

Then pealed the bells more loud and deep,
"God is not dead; nor doth he sleep,
The wrong shall fail,
The right prevail,
With peace on earth, good will to men!"

Longfellow.

CHRISTMAS GREETING.

"Let not your heart be troubled, ye believe in God." Adown the ages this glad Christmas tide comes floating this injunction from the Master, full of the sweet consolation ever welling up to his lips like cooling waters by the dusty highway of life, to strengthen and sustain his faithful disciples. He who knew all things, knew how the cares and perplexities of life would weigh upon them, and how the weary load of responsibility which he was now bearing alone, would rest upon and compass them about. Hitherto he had said unto them Go, and they had gone, but to him they had returned with every care which weighed upon them; to him they had brought for solution every problem of life too difficult for them to solve, and he had comforted them, had opened to them the treasure house of mind and soul, and bade them lean upon him and trust in his love.

Present with them! Oh, who can comprehend the mighty power of that presence! Sustaining and comforting even while there walked by his side the shadowy presence which was to meet him face to face in Gethsemane's garden and he knew that every hour as it passed by, brought him nearer and nearer to the long and cruel agony of the death he was to suffer. "Let not your heart be troubled." Alone I shall tread the wine press of the fierceness of God's wrath. My garments, not yours, shall be dyed. "You believe in God." It shall be accomplished! From the cross I shall descend to the very dominions of him who holds the powers of death and hell, and take from him the keys. Hath it not been written, "By the blood of thy covenant" this shall be done? "Let not your heart be troubled," I am your Master, and if as your Master I have done this for you, "bear ye one another's burdens, take up your cross and follow me."

"Then pealed the bells more loud and deep,
God is not dead nor doth he sleep,
The wrong shall fail,
The right prevail,

Can we doubt it? Never! Eternal as are the ages of God, so eternal is his truth. "Consider him which endured such contradiction of sinners against himself, lest ye be weary and faint in your minds." "If they have called the Master of the house Beelzebub, how much more shall they call them of his household?" Let us not be troubled then, this glad Christmas day, but rest in sweet confidence and peace upon the arm of Jehovah. Like a grand panorama, slowly but surely is being unrolled before the world, after the lapse of more than eighteen hundred years, the glorious truths which the Savior came to make known. Swallowed up in the apostasy and darkness of the centuries, but restored by "another angel" in the own due time of the Lord, louder, sweeter, tenderer and clearer peal out this Christmas day the bells of truth—"Peace on earth good will to men!" than ever before since chanted by the "multitude of the heavenly host" to the shepherds guarding their flocks by night.

Shepherds of Zion, the morning is breaking and all the East is rosetate with its light. Only draw nearer to the Master—follow closer in his footsteps and like him, because you are strong, bear the burdens of the weak, and though you should fall at your post far away from home and loved ones, "Let not your heart be troubled." The countless ages of eternity belong to our God and "he is not unrighteous to forget your work and labor of love." Think of this when your hearts yearn for home and the loved ones at this Christmas tide. Think where the feet of the Master trod in order to "bring life and immortality to light!" Who shall know the conflict in that world of spirits, before the keys of its power were delivered up? Alone and unsustained, save as God is ever willing to sustain us, he fought the battle and gained the victory. If he became in all things like unto his brethren, this surely was the case. Adam and Eve were pure, but when tempted by the devil they fell. Christ was pure but when tempted, he came off more than conqueror, simply because he believed God. "Let not your hearts be troubled!" O, ye that believe in the living God, do you not know that in these last days God has sent an angel with the fulness of the "Everlasting gospel?" When Satan came down in great wrath and sowed seeds of corruption in the church, until God suffered their enemies to cast them out into "a salt land and not inhabited," then were many of the honest in heart scattered upon the face of the earth. To-day we see the fruits of that scattering. Then the leaven was gathered together and the prejudice of the world was so great that they held it as a self-evident fact "no good thing could come out of Nazareth;" but when these poor, despised almost broken hearted Saints fled from a church with which they could no longer hold fellowship, for a time they were dumb. They felt as though even God had forsaken them, and like Peter went back to the fishers' nets of the world. But after a time the old fire began again to burn in their souls, and their hearts were stirred within so that while they did not mention the source from whence they had derived their ideas, they nevertheless talked freely about the grand and glorious principles of the gospel of the Son of God, "The glad tidings of great joy!" Before this leaven, the gross darkness of sectarianism began to tremble. How dark and abominable beside the pure light of the gospel, became the doctrine of "God for his own pleasure and glory, creating the soul of one human being to dwell in endless misery, throughout the countless ages of eternity, and the soul of another to dwell in bliss." "Hell paved with infants not a span long!" "A disembodied spirit wading for thousands of years upon seething billows of fiery torment, sent out for other thousands upon the same voyage, time, time and again, and in answer to the frenzied cry, "How long, oh, how long!" receiving back the answer from a merciful God, "Forever and forever!"

Oh, the wonderful patience of God! How think you the dear Redeemer must have felt, to hear his gospel thus presented to those he came to seek and to save. How must the angels have wept to hear the "glad tidings of great joy," so blasphemed, contorted, and set at naught.

We said the darkness began to tremble, not only this but there began to be an upheaval of the entire mass. Infidelity grew bold and walked the land with an unblushing front, nor can we wonder, for to our mind the wonder is, that under the preaching of such a gospel, the whole world did not become infidel, or worse than infidel. Here, there and every where, men and women who had tasted of "the good word of God and the powers of the world to come" identified themselves with different bodies of religionists and step by step made gradual inroads upon these powers of darkness, these doctrines of Satan. From time to time the children of these scattered ones rose to positions of trust and influence in the land, and this influence was every time used to the breaking down of these corrupt doctrines. We remember of one young girl fearlessly telling the president of a Presbyterian college where she was being educated, that, "If I could believe in such a doctrine as that, I would rather dwell in hell than in the presence of the author of it." She was but a child when the church was driven and scattered, but the pure seeds of truth had taken root in her heart and she felt that God was being blasphemed and the gospel of Christ defamed.

Thus from place to place and from time to time, the leaven was scattered and now this very question (in a far milder form) is shaking one of the most powerful bodies of religionists in the land. A body heretofore considered perfectly orthodox upon this doctrine of eternal damnation to all outside the fold of the (supposed) faithful ones. Is this all? Nay, in the same city of Chicago, has been called a conference upon the second coming of Christ to reign upon the earth, prior to the final judgment day—a doctrine once as unpopular as the doctrine of probation, or the possibility of a change after death.

Be brave of heart then, is the greeting the Home Column sends you to-day. Brave of heart, and faithful soldiers of the Lord Jesus Christ. Preach his gospel by example as well as precept—the glorious gospel of peace, purity and free salvation, and before another Christmas day God will give you sheaves more abundantly than in the past. The sieves are being put into the church and the time of separating for many who can not stand the refining process has come, but though they fall out of the ranks upon the right hand and the left, "Let not your hearts be troubled."

"You believe in God"—the living God, who in this Reorganized Church has set his seal to your ministry, and is even now working with and for you! Nor are you working alone. Just above and around you bend the angelic host, only waiting until God shall command them to "Thrust in their sickles and reap." From the homes of the Saints, go up daily, and hourly prayers for you, and many, very many have resolved that they will come to your aid, with all the material help self-sacrifice will enable them to bring. The dross is being burned up and the flames are purifying the gold.

Let us repeat to each other—to each one who reads the Home Column—"Let not your heart be troubled." Let us as mothers, wives and sisters lay aside every anxious care concerning those things which we can not control, and while we seek to God for wisdom to help us, let us do the plain duty of the hour, striving to do it faithfully and well, and leave with God the rest. If we might crave from our readers one precious gift upon this happy day, it would be, "Pray to the Father for us that we may have grace and wisdom, as he sees we need." Let our motto until the dawn of another and a brighter than a Christmas day, be

"God is not dead; nor doth he sleep,
The wrong shall fail,
The right prevail,
With peace on earth, good will to men!"

Dear Sisters and Mothers:—We bespeak for Sister Eleanor's letter a careful perusal, and would by no means have you overlook the letter of our young sister, E. Viola Blair, for both will tell you that the cause is onward and upward. "Dig," we say unto you, "Dig deep, and never rest until you have struck the solid rock upon which to build your house." We believe that much of the trouble and perplexity which has come upon the church has come in consequence of our failure as a people to heed the word of the Lord unto us, when the church were told that condemnation rested upon them as a church and should remain until they repented and remembered the new covenant, even the Book of Mormon and the former commandments given them, not only to say but to do according to that which was written. The devil was for once found working in a good cause, when he stirred up this trouble in regard to "the books." We have no idea that he meant to help in the great work, but certainly God has overruled his wrath. We would suggest that classes be organized in every branch, and when questions arise too difficult for class settlement, send them up to the Herald.

Some time since we received a letter from a sister in England, whose name has escaped our memory, but as we have had but the one from there, should this meet the writer's eye she will know who we mean. It was prepared for the press, but by some untoward fate has been misplaced or lost. We thought much of the letter, because of its plain, unvarnished testimony to the truth of the work, and would be pleased if it could be refurnished us.—[Ed.]

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Sister Susan Tyler writes from Erie, P.:—"I take pleasure in responding to your request for a "Home Column Missionary Fund," and I pray the kind Giver of all good gifts that he will move upon the hearts of the sisters, both old and young, to respond cheerfully, and see how much we can do for the spread of the gospel. I am willing to do my part, that others may hear the good news of the gospel restored by the angel. The Home Column is just what we needed. How different were the times in the church when I was raising my children. It was in the dark, dark days of the church, but, thank the dear Father in heaven, I never doubted the truth of the latter day work."

Sister Eliza Dingle writes from Anaconda, Mont.:—"I am fifty-two years old the 7th of December, but might not have a chance of sending it then, so I forward my offering now. If all the sisters respond, not two, but many elders would be enabled to go forth and preach the restored gospel. I take great pleasure in reading the Herald, the letters, sermons, and in fact all which it contains. The sisters must feel much encouraged by reading the beautiful letters written every week. May they continue in their good work, and may God bless and prosper them, is my prayer."

Sister Margaret Hurst writes from Keokuk, Iowa:—"I was seventy years old last June, but like Sister Eleanor, thought it so long to wait for my next birth day, that I send for the one last past. It makes my heart rejoice to see the Saints striving to do good."

A Sister (whose name we withhold) writing us from Boone, Iowa, says: "I only wish I could support one elder in the field myself, but if I can not do this I will do all I can towards it. I feel each day how much the work needs money. I shall be twenty-seven years old next January, and I wish I could send pennies enough for Methuselah's age. I am determined by God's grace to go on and do all I can for this work, because it is God's truth and I know it."

LAMONI, Iowa, Dec. 9th.

Dear Sister Frances:—It has long been my desire to write a few words for the "Home Column," the fear that I could say little or nothing of interest or encouragement having heretofore prevented.

The earnest desire within my heart is to heed the admonition of His sweet Spirit, which seems to say, "put thy trust and confidence in Him who hath watched over you in days gone by, and He will hear and answer your supplications."

Oh that we might daily live that we might enjoy such a portion of His Holy Spirit as He would be pleased to give us! Then there would be no sacrifice too great and our trials and vexations would appear so small, we would wonder how we could have stumbled in the past.

I want to tell all the readers of the "Home Column" about our little reading circle, recently formed, which meets every Tuesday evening with some member of the society. Our object is to study the church books, and more fully inform ourselves on the teachings and belief of our church. We have bylaws, and a membership fee of twenty-five cents is charged, the fund thus accumulated being used for the advancement of the cause. We open each session by singing and prayer, each member taking part as called upon by the president. We feel this is another means of help to us, as we believe it binds us closer together as brothers and sisters; and helps us overcome the fear of one another.

Would not this be a good idea for the young people in the different branches to make a similar study of the books, and prepare themselves as we hope we are doing, to be able to defend our faith whenever we may be called upon to do so.

I pray that God's people may all be more faithful, and that our little band may grow in grace and in the knowledge of the gospel, even as it is in Christ Jesus.

Your sister in the one faith,

E. VIOLA BLAIR.

LAMONI, IOWA.

Dear Sisters in Christ:—I come to wish you all a merry Christmas and a happy New Year. A year has passed since we were brought into closer communion by the "Home Column." We know it has been a blessing to many; we hope it has been a help and pleasure to all. Faithful, earnest labor has made it a success. It has helped us mothers to realize more fully the needed consecration of self first, then of our home's and families, that each may be able to say, "I and my household, when the King shall enquire "Who is on my side?" Dear sisters, I know there are some of you who are mourning that you can not say that yet, as regards your beloved; but the "Home Column" was instituted for mutual help and comfort; for this purpose I wish to say something about the children's reading. We are to join to our faith diligence and watchfulness. There are many mothers who would think with horror of the dimmest possibility of their children becoming drunkards who regard with indifference the mental intoxicants for sale at the counter of every drug store or news office, in the shape of cheap books, so cheap that no boy is without pocket money to buy them, selling for 3, 5, and 10 cents each or an extra number for a quarter. The titles are as enticing as the wine "when it is red," and in effect ministering to the lowest appetites of human nature. Men sell them who teach in the Sabbath School and who would not like to see the vile stuff lying on their center tables, nor feel pleased to have their own children acquire a taste for them; yet they spread them before the children of other people with no apparent compunction of conscience. Men who like to be called leaders in moral reform, I am sorry to add, not infrequently brethren in the church, are engaged in the traffic. Mothers, watch what your children read; teach them to shun what they can not bring to your presence and fireside. I am sorry that our church literature for the young is so deficient. We hope and believe it will come, meantime supply them with the best to be had, if you would see them grow up with elevated tastes and moral perceptions. Better let them go with some fewer physical comforts than to neglect the influence of good reading. Do not say that Eleanor can not know the difficulties of poverty. She is well acquainted with the bitterest dregs pressed into that bitter cup. She has often done without, not luxuries but necessities, in order that the young mind committed to her training should have the best thoughts of noblest minds by which to model his own.

While many people are willing to lend books and papers, and to a small extent I have availed myself of such kind offers, yet I think it is the better principle to let the children have their own; they feel more interest in what belongs to them, and avoid the bad habit of borrowing, which becomes obnoxious when encouraged too much. Let me add for encouragement that I am beginning to reap a hundred fold all that I ever invested in that way.

In regard to the Home Column Missionary enterprise: I have heard it said, "there is too much begging of money from the poor." I do not think the Lord will ever permit the gospel to go begging; if it comes to that I think He will take it from us as unworthy servants. As this is a free will offering no one is asked to give who gives not willingly from the heart. No blessing can attach to tithes or offerings which come grudgingly. When the plan of salvation was proposed to the Son of God, he counted not his life precious unto him, but was obedient unto death. So may our hearts be so consecrated, that like one of old we can say, "Yea let him take all."

It has been said that we lack the Spirit and fire of the old organization; if so, it occurs to me the reason may be that every time a spark of the divine flame is seen smouldering among us, some fearful one sets a foot on it and stamps it out, forgetful of the admonition to "quench not the Spirit." Sisters, if the coming of our king is so near, what will it profit us as to the treasure we lay up here? Even should our Lord delay his coming, for a while, that of death, is ever near. If from some higher plane we can look back on these mouldering bodies of corruption and all that we spent so lavishly upon them mouldering with them; if from thence we are permitted a glimpse of celestial glory, and remember the poor little pennies given so sparingly, how will astonishment overwhelm us at our own blindness and selfishness—a word as hateful as the serpent in Eden of whom it sprang. The old monarch who has swayed his scepter over the world so long may tremble for his kingdom when he sees the mothers of Israel entering the inner temple of their own hearts to throw down his image, for well he knows that he can not long retain a place in the hearts of the children.

The column has been nobly sustained, but let us try to bring still more earnestness to the work in the new year, that by its close we may see some tangible good accomplished. Whoever our standard bearer shall be, we will require that he bring the same spirit of earnestness, zeal, temperance, and entire self-consecration as of those who place it in his hand. Surely we may expect him to carry it to triumphant victory, sustained as he will be by the special prayers and watch-care of the mothers and sisters in Israel.

In gospel bonds,

SISTER ELEANOR.

Dear Sr. Frances: We need patience to bring up our little ones in the love of our Lord and Savior. It is a responsibility that we can not realize too fully. When we feel the angry words rising to our lips, let us stop and cry, Father in heaven, help us to set a righteous example before our little ones. The other day I spoke harshly to my oldest girl; her lip began to quiver. I asked her what she was crying about. She said, Mamma, you spoke so loud to me. It wounds their feelings at first; it angers them at last. And the apostle says, "Parents, provoke not your children to anger." Be patient, be kind with the little ones entrusted to your care, and they will love and respect you. May God bless the Home Column, is the prayer of your sister, EMMA PAYNE.

PITTSBURGH, October 31st.

Dear Sr. Walker:—I have been watching for a letter from this part of the Lord's vineyard, but thus far have been disappointed; and feeling somewhat timid and unworthy of the task I will yet try. This may seem strange for a mother to say, still I do feel my unworthiness before the Lord; and many times feel as though I would fall by the wayside. My trials and temptations seem more than I can bear. When I read of many Saints that live a long way from a branch, and can not meet with the children of God as I do from Sabbath to Sabbath for a blessing, it is not wise for me to complain. I wish you and all the good sisters God speed in your good work, for it encourages many. I can't give advice, but will take all from your "Home Column."

Your sister in the gospel of Christ.

Correspondence.

BOWRAVILLE, Nambucca, N. S. W.
October 27th, 1886.

Bro. Joseph:—We have been laboring here and in this vicinity nearly two months, and expect to move on before long. Besides here and Bowra, Bro. George Ballard and I have held meetings down at Nambucca Heads, and Boat-Harbor, on the Bellinger river. Our presence in this vicinity seemed to arouse the ire of some of the folks of this neighborhood, so they wrote to the Macleay Chronicle for help from some of the clergymen; wanting them to come and "demolish the new sect." It gave us a chance for getting our faith and position before the people, so we moved on and occupied the ground to the best of our ability, the editor being very kind to us, we got two letters in the paper—two weeks between—then the editor closed the question. I will send you the papers. We are well. The branch here is moving on nicely, all seeming to be interested in the work.

Our Heralds have just come, and our hearts are heavy and sad as we learn of the death of Bro. T. J. Andrews—how inscrutable are the ways of God—how past finding out by man—but He doeth all things well; and although we mourn, we do not as though we had not hope; for we shall surely meet again, in a more beautiful, cheerful, brighter world than this—so, now we strive to say clearly, Thy will, O God, be done. May our heavenly Father in his tender mercies bless, comfort and sustain the bereaved sister and her children and friends. Bro. Hervey Green's statement in tongues was, "The older Elders will pass away and the younger ones will barely have time to rid their garments ere the coming of the Son of Man." One by one the older ones are passing on behind the veil, to us; but to enter into the brightness of the glory of the paradise of God. Our brother rests with the ransomed of God, and another impetus is given us to strive to fulfill the duties and obligations resting upon us in this great latter day work, that we may meet him again, with all the mighty throng in that blessed abode who have been, and will be redeemed out of every nation. Everything is moving; and as the end nears the movements increase in rapidity and volume, so that at the consummation islands, continents, and seas will move, kingdoms and thrones will be removed, all wickedness be removed by the brightness of His coming, "whose right it is to reign." Then peace will flow as a river, and righteousness be triumphant. "Who shall dwell in the holy hill of Zion?" May God grant us an inheritance there, and all the Israel of God.

Your brother in the bonds of faith,

JOSEPH F. BURTON.

BRIGHTON, Colo., Nov. 15th.

Dear Herald: Though cherishing regrets because of inability to be ubiquitous were unbecoming, yet one is apt to think of its advantage, in the event of its practicability, in being made conscious of inability to respond to but few of the calls made. I find myself in the eleventh day of twelfth month of the year of 86, and seventh from the annual conference of the same year, and wonder what the fast receding year will record in my favor, if anything. Though my self-justifying nature would have me believe I have done my best,—a claim so easily made, but if proof is lacking to make the claim valid, what of the claim? If our best is done, we shall do well. Yesterday, thoughts revolved in my mind consequent upon a consciousness of responsibility by virtue of my profession; to-day the responsibility seems no less, hence similar thoughts. A belief in faith, repentance, baptism, laying on of hands, organization, etc., is the cause of the above thoughts—and timeliness in Herald for September 25th looms up to my astonished vision; and if it is to be construed to mean originality, then it is probable that the capacious stomach of the waste basket may be opened to meet my effusions at their coming, to be as if they never had been. "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business," was the first sound heard above the clamor of the age, from Christ; confirmed by his three years' ministry, and the forty days going in and out with his disciples subsequently to his resurrection; that his disciples might be qualified to go forth and tell the world of faith, repentance, baptism, organization, etc. But if our theological stomachs have been overgorged by a too frequent reiteration of the above, who shall determine on the much besides? I hear much about tiring on first principles, and a thirst for something new; or the much beside; and a growing weary in present duties; and spiritual inactivity is the result.

Ask a Latter Day Saint when he or she felt the soul lifted nearer heaven, and when a response comes it will be found, when listening to a gospel discourse, while the instrument trembled under the power of God; that was the time. Ask those who through yielding to the weakness of human nature rather than a design to make mischief, when they felt most like being reconciled, and the response will be similar. Many felt satisfied of the validity of baptism; but where was the soul that did not feel inspired anew in reading Bro. G. S. Hyde's effusion on that God appointed ordinance? One of the causes, if not the cause, of the disturbed state of society to-day, may be traced to a surfeiting of what they have had, and running to and fro for something new, original, and exciting; they frequently find what they thirst for; and so the gospel economy is, to the masses, not attractive; and the fact of present duties or their sameness becoming monotonous among Latter Day Saints, is too apparent; which, together with a yearning for the respectability of modern orthodoxy, is opening the way for settled pastors; cultured ones, of course. I would not depreciate culture by any means, or humor it in ignoring the recognized order or laws of the church; why should I? Nor could I expect that among forty or fifty elders all could bear physical burdens alike. But I would have all labor under the auspices of the church without special privileges. If saving good comes through setting to one side order or law, then what of law and order? What is its purpose? The cultured and uncultured officials and the laity are equal in the eyes of the law. But instead of only providing for one great big position, and only one big man, there are many positions and many members, with a variety of talents and duties; but all this to reach one finality. Any misunderstanding of this leading to confusion among Latter Day Saints is indeed a sad spectacle, for which there is no justifiable excuse. We may boast of our liberty, etc., but we may rest assured that our legislative acts are narrowly scrutinized, and any unseemly division will have its effect. Between liberty and license there is a difference challenging our discriminating powers, and much depends on their legitimate use, nor should the difference between feigned and unfeigned loyalty to God and his laws be lost sight of; for Latter Day Saints never appear to a greater disadvantage than when failing to make a claimed piety or loyalty formidable by works or deeds. With these stubborn facts we all have to cope, and individual responsibility though solemn, is sublime; which sublimity increases as we think and gain assurance that a godly zeal shown by works as ability may permit will secure the inestimable gift of eternal life.

A response to a Macedonian cry heard from my co-laborer, Bro. James Kemp, though interfering somewhat with a contemplated procedure, seemed necessary. Those making and responding to calls, are to some extent at least responsible for time and means thus used. There may be a fascination in frequent or continuous travel much sought after, or more preferable than continuous labor in opening up new fields of labor, and so a similar plan obtained to men hunting homes and squatting down on the best pieces of land.

The theory of order, organization, etc., is very easy to present; but its practical part is that which tests. The work in parts of Nebraska is fair, other parts it is in a languishing condition. The inactivity of local officials contributing thereto, or preventing progress; would it were otherwise, as it ought to be. Room could be found for a dozen elders to devote their entire time. Spasmodic efforts are ineffective to establish the work in any locality; continuous and well directed effort is needed. Ministerial labor should be regular and systematic. The zealotry of some who wait not for appointment or direction, but claim to be under great responsibility, because directed by the Spirit; seldom assume the labor and unpleasantness attendant upon opening new fields; but almost invariably seek pleasant places, or roam from branch to branch. It seems a little singular that some who are in a good situation to sustain their families and do very much good for the cause, can not thus remain until called to a different place and remain contented. It is important enough for one to sacrifice all that contributes to his dependents' welfare when legitimately called upon to do so, and become the representative of the church. To keep members in when brought into the fold is of the utmost importance; and it is a mistake to suppose that all the best talent must be sent out, and anybody can fill the place of home guards. Worldly cares press heavily, but to claim that a week's labor in any vocation altogether unfits an elder for Sunday work in the delivery of two or three gospel sermons is nonsense. In the beginning of the latter day work some of the most remarkable conversions were made by the hard-fisted sons of toil, some of whom never saw daylight but on Sunday morning; then they rose with it, and with Bible in pocket, traveled ten or twelve miles on foot to preach a gospel sermon or two; rising again at six on Monday morning to resume their avocation another six days. A revival of this kind of zeal among local officials is very much needed. What a splendid opportunity to build up an influential branch is now offered to the Saints in Omaha,—which is becoming one of the most important cities in the west. An opportunity to have a competent choir offers; will this golden opportunity be allowed to slip by! Let us hope not.

Some branches have essayed to reach this; but none—knowing only enough of the art of music to find fault with others, without ability to give the needed correction and point out the way for advance, have failed. A competent music teacher offering his services in a branch of the church, should see evidence of appreciation of such valuable services. We hope to see ere long a well trained choir in Omaha, with a first class Sabbath School. There is talent for both if the will power is brought into requisition.

Let the Omaha Branch arise and shine,
And show to the world that the cause is divine.

Zion's Hope now compares favorably with other similar papers in price. Think of ten copies being sent in one bundle for two dollars and a half per year. Arouse, branch and district officials, and send in orders for bundles of ten. The lessons therein are sufficiently impregnated with Latter Day Saintism to drive out lessons of sectarian origin that might have found place among the Saints in the absence of anything better. Away in the past a resolution obtained that Sabbath School institutions be considered as a part of the latter day work, and reported at conferences, etc. How supremely ridiculous we appear, to pass resolutions and fail to observe them?

Two elders having no responsibility of families might find a good field for labor in the Central Nebraska District. Points at which good might be done being sixty or seventy miles apart, to be reached in a lumber wagon, horseback, or on foot; meeting some good and liberal people, and some not so good; give the best they have, with evidence of welcome; and a traveling elder that can not submit to this with becoming resignation, ought to retire from the business. The latter day work was established through elders patiently bearing the vicissitudes, changes, etc., incident to the life of a traveling elder. Nor were the pioneers of the Reorganized Church behind in this godly work.

Openings in Kansas, too, are plentiful. And there is an excellent chance for some one to immortalize his or her name by a donation to purchase a good team and a suitable light wagon to afford two elders the facility to travel over the big State of Colorado; which would prove the best method for sending the gospel over the hills and through the vales of this, so different in many respects to other States. About three hundred dollars would reach it, or a little more—who will respond? There doubtless are those who have paid their tithing that could do this—we would not want such a lift from those who have not tithed themselves, lest they be charged with robbing the Lord, and we with being accessory to the theft. It will be a fearful thing to be charged with robbing the Lord—who would want to meet it?

Your columns of September 25th, 1886, are made luminous by effusions from a dweller of Magnolia, Iowa, of a eulogistic nature, and the writer appears ecstatic over an article which previously appeared on "Aid for the Ministry;" and surely applausiveness was never more thorough. "I am pleased with it," says the writer, also, "because it will allay the fears of hundreds of the true friends of God's glorious cause, for there are many who have feared the church was going to forsake the good old paths and gradually slide into sectarian footsteps by preaching for hire and divining for money. But that plain, stalwart article from your authorized pen is a guarantee that the good old ship Zion is not near being wrecked on the sands of human folly." What a fortunate affair that that authorized pen moved, at that particular juncture, relieving the writer and hundreds of others of true friends of God's cause from the terrible fear, created by imagining hearing the creaking and seeing the timbers of the old ship rending asunder, by some religious scoundrels forsaking the old path, and gradually sliding in sectarian footsteps, by preaching for hire, divining for money, exhibiting human folly, etc. The right to eulogize one's particular friends, or tell of the purity of his desires, can not be questioned. But against such a method of charging wrong upon some body, I solemnly protest, but recognize the right of any member of the body to legitimately proceed against wrong doing. The only method to sustain families of the representatives known is to grant from the church coffers what is needed, and the writer, or dependents have participated therein, therefore if others have been guilty of preaching for hire, etc., by what method of reasoning is he free, or how is it that he is immaculate while the taint of preaching for hire, etc. is on others' garments and his sweet with the fragrance of purity? Direct charges of wrong doing in the columns of the Herald is wrong, but indirect charges are infinitely worse. But if those controlling make the columns of the Herald the receptacle of such attacks defense can not well be denied. It is about time to know whether the church will respect and protect its servants in carrying out the decrees thereof, or no. Tithing and almsgiving are recognized in the divine economy, and one must not be fostered to the exclusion of the other, but both be understood. As to the former, many are seeking a better understanding, for what purpose time must determine. This matter was broached at a district conference held at Wilber in October; and I believe in the effort good was the result. The importance of our financial system demands efforts to instruct all concerned. And at confirmations, in carrying out that imposed in 18th paragraph, 17th section, Doctrine and Covenants, (so often disregarded), is a seasonable time to instruct. One of our Bishop's Agents recently said an orthodox questioned him on our financial system, and was much delighted with the explanation. Some regard those parts of the Bible that inspires. So with us, sometimes we like that we like, and that we don't we fight. I think I am right in saying the church holds that every member is a steward over what he may possess in life: and that due efforts are imperative to present the requirements of the law; which being done, all are free as they were before to do as they please, but the watchman has delivered his soul. I have been astonished to find some impressed with the thought that efforts to prevent the giving of private gifts were made. The theory of all things being authoritatively done is sublime; but the theory being reduced to practice sometimes seems terrible. The birth of the child of representation, and speaking into existence less than two hundred ex-officios, was terrible; but when a thousand additional ex-officios were added the terribleness disappeared, and the quivering of the timbers of the old ship ceased; and while before it was thought two hundred would swamp her, a thousand additional ones would but prove a proper ballast.

The following copy of a letter forwarded, will explain our present position:

BRIGHTON, November 2d.

Messrs. Matthews and Rev. Wilson; GENTLEMEN:—Having learned that subsequently to the time, the Rev. Wilson refused to read a notice presented him by Mrs. Talbot, of Brighton, at the close of one of his religious meetings held in Brighton School-house; said notice being to announce a subsequent appointment for Elder James Kemp at the same school-house; by a concert of action a lecture, denunciatory of what you, dear sirs, are pleased to denominate Mormonism, was prepared and read to a public audience as per previous arrangement, at the Brighton School-house. And further, that the said Rev. Wilson did eulogize Mr. Matthews for his able efforts and thought him entitled to a vote of thanks, etc.; and still further, the Rev. Wilson hoped and thought it should end the matter; which, as I take it, gentlemen, was tantamount to saying that however myself, Elder Kemp and the people we represent were denounced, reproached and misrepresented, it must be submitted to without a thought, much less an effort to defend; and thus evince the justness of your ipse dixit. Now, may it please you, gentlemen, while we would not question your right in the above procedure, if right in your eyes; or object to those who may wish to abide your finality. We say that to us it is not seeming to be too aggressive, or slow to defend. Therefore, forasmuch as neither myself nor Elder Kemp were present to hear your lecture, and so were prevented from hearing your objectionable points, would you, gentlemen, repeat your lecture, that we might feel its force, accept as destroying that we thought valid; or failing in this, make a defence before a discriminating public; or if you have points, other than those embodied in your lecture, you would rather investigate by a joint discussion on the public rostrum, and will submit, we will consider and reply. Or if in preference, to either method you choose, we will grant you the use of our stand any subsequent night to our occupancy and uninterrupted by you have equal time to examine and reply; reserving our right of course to reply and defend. We commence a series of meetings in the Brighton Hall, on the 14th instant. Address Brighton, Colorado.

Respectfully,

JAMES CAFFALL,
JAMES KEMP.

We looked for a reply on the above date, but no response; all is quiet. Our meetings on Sunday were thinly attended, but we were at our post. A severe snow-storm set in yesterday, continuing all night; incoming trains late; unfavorable for meetings. There is much anxiety among the orthodox of Denver, and efforts are being made to unite all Christians. A Mrs. Wilbry has been serving as an Evangelist—making converts and instructing the clergy. All are moving. Surely, the Latter Day Saints ought to be on the alert. We request all Saints, scattered in Colorado, to report to James Kemp, Hutchinson, telling prospects, if any for the work in their several localities, with financial aid possible.

In bonds,

JAMES CAFFALL.

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo., Nov. 30th.

Bro. Joseph Smith:—I have been with Bro. I. N. White, in St. Clair county, Missouri, and returned last week. We had meetings in three school-houses; the houses well filled all the time, and sometimes they could not all get in; they gave good attention from the first, and kept good order. After the third meeting they came up and took us by the hand and kindly invited us to their homes. We were four weeks with them; the seed has been well sown, and a number are investigating. We gave out tracts and Voices of Warning, and I hope God will give the increase. We left Bro. White, and Bro. Curtis, from Independence; but it is not easy to follow Bro. I. N. White, for he is greatly gifted as a speaker; he often spoke an hour and a half and held the audience to the closest attention. The Spirit was given in power sometimes.

Bro. StClair and myself tried to open up the work here in Jefferson City, in August last. I got the Christian Church, and put up hand bills all over town; we had about twenty the first night; we lighted up the church three nights but none came after the first night.

I knew that prejudice was strong against us here, but I thought we would get a better hearing than we did. Then we went down to Osage county, near Linn, the county seat, and found

Bro. John Mantle and branch. They had been organized twenty-one years that day; we met with them on the Sabbath, in Bro. Wilson's house. They have no school-house near them but they keep up their meetings in their own house. They do not grow much but amongst their own families; they are surrounded by German Catholics. We found them hopeful of the better time coming, a good, kind, earnest band in good works; just what I look for in Latter Day Saints.

I am pleased to see from the Herald that the work is spreading out and prospering. Bro. I. N. White has another debate on hand at Shell City, Missouri, on the 27th of December. All south-west Missouri is stirred up and investigating, and more laborers are wanted every where. May God continue to prosper the work, and the elders do their duty.

Yours in the Lord,

JOHN MCKENZIE.

BLAKES MILLS, Ohio, Nov. 25th.

Bro. Joseph Smith:—The battle of the Lord against sin and wickedness is still being waged here, and his army is increasing in number and spiritual strength daily. As one engaged in the conflict, I have endeavored to discharge the responsibility resting upon me as a missionary and presiding Elder of the district. In all my labors for the Master, I have felt the witness of the Holy Spirit which has greatly cheered and strengthened me for the work of the ministry. In my travels in the district I found the majority of the Saints striving to work out their salvation; and as a result of such good efforts on their part, they were being greatly blessed of the Lord. The delinquent members I found sitting with folded hands, and among the number were many elders and priests. It is a mystery to me, how such persons can testify before the people that they know that the work is of God and at the same time idle away the golden moments; especially at a time when there are so many urgent calls for the bread of life. Truly such characters do not fully realize the importance of the latter day work. It seems to me that the language of the poet is very applicable at this juncture:

"Arouse, arouse, why idly stand,
Why sit at ease with folded hands?
There is a work for you to do,
No other one can do for you.
Arise and work, though great or small,
For by our works we stand or fall."

It is to be hoped that all who are in a dormant condition will soon awaken to full realization that the time is not so far off as many people anticipate, when the cry will be heard; "Behold the bridegroom cometh, Go ye out to meet him."

Am much pleased with the sisters' department in the Herald, and I believe that it is and will be the means of doing much good. It is a well known fact, that the mothers in Israel can do more toward educating the young of Zion than the fathers; for the reason that mothers are with them continually. Sisters and brethren ought to be interested in the work that has been assigned to sister "Frances." The old veterans are passing away to their home of rest. It remains with the young to carry on the grand work. Hence every mother should be anxious to equip her son and daughter for the service of the Lord.

During the month of October I went to Kurmaray, Ohio; while there I baptized four, two of whom had passed the age of seventy-three, Bro. Wm. T. Jones and wife. Bro. Jones was convinced of the truthfulness of the gospel by my father over forty years ago, and it did my soul good to lead the old brother into the sheepfold; so there is such a thing as the father sowing the seed of life and the son reaping it, years afterward.

I was made to feel very sorrowful on learning of the sad and sudden death of my brother-in-law John F. Thomas, of What Cheer, Iowa. May our heavenly father comfort the sad hearts and cheer the drooping spirits of the bereaved ones. Have baptized seven of late, and there are more who will be with us ere long. I leave in the morning for Washingtonville, Ohio, thence to Sharon, Pennsylvania. I never felt better spiritually, than at present. I can see bright hopes before us, and trust that I shall receive grace and strength wherewith to continue faithfully unto unto the end of the race.

Your brother in Christ,

G. T. GRIFFITHS.

PLAINVILLE, Mass., Nov. 29th.

Bro. Joseph Smith:—I read with joy the good news of gospel tidings that come to us through the Herald from all over this broad land, and am glad that I have a part and lot in the matter, although my work in its behalf is not all that I wish it might be. This gospel witness has been faithfully declared in West Mansfield, both recently, and at the time of Bro. C. Scott's visit to this State about a year ago. The audiences have not been quite as large as they were a year ago, yet there seems to be a deeper interest on the part of those that attend. Last Wednesday evening Bro. Coombs held a meeting there at a private residence with a crowded house. Some are "pricked in their hearts" and are beginning to closely investigate. One man that was troubled about baptism said there was no record of Paul and some of the other apostles obeying this ordinance. We cited the words of Paul in 22d chapter of Acts, how the Lord told him what he ought to do, through his servant Ananias. To me it is not reasonable to suppose that a man who went through what Paul did for this gospel, would refuse or neglect to obey a principle of the doctrine of Christ, which he told Timothy to "continue in," with the promise that it would save him and them that heard him. True saints of God never teach to others, as doctrines, what they do not believe or obey. [Ananias, sent of God to tell Saul the things which were "appointed" for him "to do," said "Arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord."—Acts 22: 10, 16. And Paul afterward testified: "O King Agrippa, I was not disobedient to the heavenly vision."—Acts 26: 19.—Ed.] Another man that is conspicuously devoted to the water baptism doctrine told the people that they believed and taught "dry doctrine" and "all their ministers cared about was their bread with butter on both sides. The "dry doctrine" accusation was quite applicable to this community as it has quite an organization of the Friends Society, and many of them have attended our services. Bro. M. H. Bond preached there yesterday on "church organization." It is sufficient to say that some well directed gospel shots were discharged at their walls of superstition and ignorance by this bold "soldier" in the Lord. The interest seems better than ever before in Attleboro. Quite a fair sized and appreciative audience greeted Bro. Coombs a week ago last evening, and a larger one listened to Bro. Bond last night. There are more honest investigators in Attleboro that will accept the faith soon.

Bro. J. B. Pearce and Mr. Rouse Pearce of Little Compton, R. I., made a visit to Plainville recently. Bro. Pearce and wife had just returned from New York State where they talked of the gospel and its blessings to the edification of some. Sr. Ruth Burlingame, of Cumberland, R. I., and Sr. Parker, of Douglas, were present with the Saints on the 7th inst, and heard Bro. Bond preach in the chapel.

Bro. U. W. Greene writes to me from Deer Isle, Maine, under date of October 23d, that he went to West Surry and opened meetings with wonderful success. The word took the place (all but the ministers) by storm, so he writes.

Yours in faith,

ARTHUR B. PIERCE.

ROCK ISLAND, Illinois, Dec. 1st.

Dear Herald:—We take great pleasure in announcing that the Saints of Rock Island, Illinois, and Davenport, Iowa, have decided to unite their faith and means, (desiring the good of the glorious cause) and to rent the vacated Young Mens' Christian Association Hall, in Davenport, above third on Brady street, for public worship and the proclamation of the gospel. We cordially invite the ministry, and especially the presidents of the two districts of Eastern Iowa, and Kewanee. We need instruction and better organization. You will meet with a warm welcome at Bro. D. W. Clow's, 124 Locust street, Davenport, or F. G. Dungee's, 222, 18th street, Rock Island. We hope to open the hall to the Public December 12th. Yours for truth,

F. G. DUNGEE.

WATERLOO, Neb., Dec. 4th.

Brother Joseph:—We are still battling for the truth. We feel encouraged; there is considerable of a spiritual warfare going on in some parts of the district, and in the conflict there have been sixteen added to the church. In some places there seems to be a great awakening among the people, and my prayer is that the good work may continue.

In gospel bonds,

NELSON BROWN.

WHERE COULD THEY GO?

"IN his letter to Curtis, John Taylor, in speaking of the rumors that the Mormons contemplated an exodus, asks the pertinent question: Where could we go?" This question from the head of the church ought to cause the brethren to stop and think. Sure enough, where could they go? They steadily abuse this Government; aliens that they are, they incessantly open their foul mouths to scoff at carpet-baggers; they tell of their persecutions under a government where the friction of the laws is less than in any other spot on earth; but were they forced to find a new home, where would they go? All civilization would close its doors to them in a moment. The North-lands and South-lands would repel them; there is not a spot on all the round earth where men are civilized, that they would be welcomed to. Ought not this fact to have some weight with this people? Do they think what their position would be were this Nation to become, toward them, as all the rest of the earth is? Then they would all have to ask the question that John Taylor now asks: "Where can we go?" Is it not time that they began to call a halt? The pressure has been growing heavier and heavier upon them for years, and despite their claim to divine protection, they have not made a real point. If this shall be continued a little longer, where will they go?"—Salt Lake Tribune.

LOST ISRAEL FOUND.

WE desire in this article to trace an ethnological stream down through centuries of time in the midst of the nations of the earth, which has been the theme of man's speculation and the object of God's incomprehensible providence. We mingle frequently with the descendants of one or another branch of the Israelitish family, in our business relations without observing any just claim to superiority over the rest of mankind, and yet those who have the keenest spiritual discernment and the most profound understanding of the fulfillment of God's most gracious promises in the eternal record of the faithful, brighten up and their faces beam with hope and gladness in anticipation of the time when God shall set his hand to the restoration of natural Israel; and who by obeying the gospel "become Abraham's seed and heirs according to the promise" i. e. adopted Israel. An accomplished young lady, the daughter of a noted judge and lawyer of this state recently visited in the writer's family. She had just come into possession of a tract of land in the Indian Territory by virtue of descent on her mother's side from the Pottawattamie tribe of Lamanites. And when I told her that I should be proud of such a descent, for I believed they were of Israelitish origin; she answered with the monosyllable, "yes," with peculiar satisfaction; and seemingly this has suggested the question to those who have become acquainted with God's professed purposes under the fullness of the gospel, if they think the accumulation of that tract of land the only and most important result of an inherited connection with a race to whose progenitor God said, "To you and to your seed will I give this land forever." Of these descendants of Abraham to whom this promise was given, the Bible is an Ancient history. The story from Jacob and his twelve sons down to the time of Moses, is one of providential separations and happy reunions. There Moses under God erected his numerous posterity into a nation which continued for centuries, obtaining possession of all that country lying east of the Great Sea. Here Jerusalem became their seat of government. But in the day of their prosperity discord arose, disunion was the result; and thereafter two separate Kings reigned over Israel. This separation occurred about 975 B. C., and in this condition the two governments of Israel is continued side by side, one of which containing about three of the largest tribes, was called the Kingdom of Judah; and the other, including ten tribes, was called the Kingdom of Israel. Jerusalem was the capital city of the former, and Samaria of the latter. But Israel being cut off from worshiping in the temple at Jerusalem which they had helped to build, soon became estranged from the true God, departing from the law of Moses so far as to erect idols on the hills of Samaria and worship them. In this condition they were taken into captivity by the King of Assyria, about 725 B. C., and placed along the river Gozan in Assyria. From this captivity they have never returned. And now while outcast Judah may be met in every city and country being wanderers for their subsequent rejection of Christ, we submit the following account of Israel's wanderings and their present home. We have not an absolute knowledge of its truth but believe in its probability, and that the nations of whom we speak will soon by the grandest and happiest of all their reunions become the allies of Judah and all Israel in an effort to repossess their promised inheritance.

As a people we have believed the children of Israel were hid behind the ice-barriers of the north Polar circle from the fact that prophets of old have said they went to a "north country," and by prophecy of modern times we are assured they will return from a north country.* Had the reader, however, stood with Captain Hall 83° 30'; north latitude, looking over that partially open sea with its desolate and dark flocs of drifting ice, realizing that only about four hundred and fifty miles away was the North Pole, he would perhaps more easily accept the theory we now advance in regard to that "north country," and that Israel will appear on the scene in the last days, the greatest and mightiest of all nations, destined to be drawn into a final struggle allied with gathering Judah for possession of their common inheritance from the grasp of the combined Gentile world.

We purpose to submit evidences that God has singularly directed the different fragments of this holy posterity to a land 1500 miles north of sunny Samaria, to a rugged country and climate which has developed them into the strongest of earthly governments, they undergoing a change similar to that if the people of New Orleans should emigrate bodily to Labrador.

It is known from the history of Israel in the Bible that the tribe of Dan became too numerous for the small territory assigned them near Jerusalem and that the tribe divided, a part going northward to the city of Laish in the northern part of Canaan, which city Joshua had been commanded to destroy. This they destroyed with all its inhabitants, and on its ruins built for themselves a city and called it Dan. This Dan was taken into captivity by Shalman-

* We think the writer mistaken when he says the Saints "as a people" have believed the children of Israel were hid behind the ice-barriers of the north Polar circle. Individuals may have believed this, but it is no doctrine or general belief with the Saints.—Editor.

ezer and placed along the river Gozan with the rest of Israel. But the other Dan who occupied the territory first assigned to the tribe it appears with Simeon who occupied the coast still further south, never went into captivity. But what shall these tribes do! Unite with Judah they can not, for by this time a wide difference in customs and religion had sprung up between them; but they must go somewhere for fear of their still greater enemies, the Assyrians. Now it is known that Dan was a mariner, and that he "abode in his ships."—Judges 5:17. And also it is known that when Solomon was building the temple some 250 years before this, that Dan was employed in company with the Phoenicians in importing tin from Brittany, now Cornwall, England, for the purpose of making brazen vessels for the temple. From historical evidence it appears that Dan had frequently accompanied the Phoenicians to the shores of western Europe, and had thus become acquainted with the geography of that coast. Accordingly we find him in company with Simeon, as the historian asserts, sailing westward with whatever effects they could carry by way of Tarshish, now Tartus, and through the strait of Hercules (Gibraltar) into the Atlantic. Here, while sailing northwestward, a storm overtakes the mariners, and whatever may have been their destination, they were unable to land until they were driven to the coast of Scandinavia. Here they effected a landing; but not being satisfied with their surroundings, they re-embarked, and sailing southward landed on the north coast of Ireland, where Dan pitched his camp, placing Simeon over on the opposite coast of Scotland. As the result of this pioneer expedition we have the Scotch-Irish race of to-day, which has furnished perhaps more eminent men than any other race on earth. The United States has been elevated to much of her greatness by the orators, statesmen, journalists, poets, etc., which have boasted of their descent from this race. The other Dan, which was taken into Assyria, now becoming restless, was the first to separate from his captive brethren, and going to the north of the Black Sea to escape the Assyrians, he travels on in the direction of his separated brethren, either knowing of their whereabouts, or being directed by an unseen power that way. The first river he crosses he names Dan, now Don, the next Daniester, now Dniester, and another Danieper, now Dnieper, to the Danube. On this river he made a temporary settlement, and Philologists assert that the word Danube means literally the settlements of Dan. But still some influence was leading him onward, and he follows up this great river nearly to its source, and soon reaches the coast, and its numerous contiguous "Islands of the sea," of which he takes possession, and all of which he names Danemarsch, now Denmark. Here he flourished for centuries, filling the surrounding nations with awe at his almost miraculous military valor, and making the very name of Northmen a terror to all Southern Europe.

We have now traced the tribe of Dan, one part to Ireland where we shall soon find him with an organized government; Simeon to Scotland and Wales; and the other Dan to Denmark and the islands of the Baltic sea.

We will now introduce a novel theory of individual history, not vouching for the absolute truth of this, or any part of this article, but only submit it on the authority of men of research or those who have taken an interest in this subject. Among which authorities are "Israel's Wanderings, by Oxonian;" "Lost Israel Found, by E. P. Ingersoll; Herodotus, Josephus; "The Anglo Saxon, East and West," by G. H. Moon, M. D.; the Apocrypha, and the Bible. The Lord said to Jeremiah; "See, I have this day set thee over the nations and over the kingdoms, to pluck up and break down, to destroy and overthrow, to build up and to plant."—Jer 1: 10.

We have in the Bible a record of Jeremiah's great work as a prophet to Judah which yet remained at Jerusalem, in warning them of their speedy downfall if they did not repent of their sins which he charged home to them with great power, but to no avail. The king of Babylon came, the Jews were defeated, their king, Zedekiah, taken, his eyes put out, his sons slain and his daughters placed in the care of the prophet Jeremiah. We find, also, that the king of Babylon charged his chief captain, Nebuzaradan, to look well to and attend to all the wants of Jeremiah, and to give him liberty to dwell and go wherever he wished and to withhold from him nothing which he desired. It is also found that the temple was sacked by Nebuchadnezzar and the sacred vessels taken out and carried to Babylon. These vessels were all numbered and specified at this time, and also when they were returned some seventy years after this by Cyrus; but in neither case is any mention made of the Ark of the Covenant. Josephus also mentions this transaction, but is silent concerning the Ark of the Covenant. Now, why this silence concerning this most sacred object of God's magnificent house? It is stated positively in 2d Maccabees, that Jeremiah, knowing the temple would soon be destroyed by fire, removed from thence the Ark of the Covenant to a place of safety in the mountains, and it is presumed, though it can not be proved here now, that he, at the same time, took the stone upon which Jacob rested his head at Bethel and anointing it said, "This is Bethel." These, Jeremiah, and Baruch who was with him at Jerusalem, took, and it is supposed preserved and carried safely away out of the land of Israel's promise soon to fall into the hands of a heathen power. Now we find that in the reign of Eochiad II, according to the Irish record, about 525 years B. C., a wise, holy man came to that country from the east bringing with him his scribe Brugsch, (probably Baruch), also a beautiful princess named Tephi. In course of time Eochiad sought to marry the beautiful Tephi, to which the man (inferred to be Jeremiah and the princess, daughter of Zedekiah, king of Judah), assented; on the condition that the government should be purged of all Baalism and based on the divine law which he carried with him. This was assented to and the marriage solemnized by this holy man, it is claimed, on Jacob's covenant stone. This stone it is claimed was handed down according to the instructions of this holy man to Fergus 1st, of Ireland, who took it over to Scotland, B. C. 320; and thence down through every succeeding reign in Scotland to the joint reign of James VI of Scotland and James 1st of England, and thus down to Victoria the present sovereign of Great Britain. It is also believed, though it may be but speculation, that this ancient memento has been used in the coronation ceremonies of each succeeding king, or queen, and is now preserved in Westminster Abbey and may yet be used by that nation as proof of their descent from Jacob, who anointed it for some sacred purpose.

When Tephi, the Jewess princess, died in Ireland, her husband, on account of his great grief, constructed a great mausoleum for her, in the center sixty feet square, into which her body was placed, and over this tomb was constructed a great mound called Tura, a pure Hebrew word, signifying "two tables." So strong is the supposition that the Ark of the Covenant was brought to Ireland and placed in this mound, that a company was recently formed in England to excavate for its recovery. In Ireland, Jeremiah it is said, established the School of the Prophets, the Supreme Judgeship, and several other Hebrew institutions according to the Mosaic ritual, and thus fulfilled his commission of "planting and building." Before leaving Ireland, let us notice the example it furnishes of the contrast between the "seed whom God has blessed," and the Gentile nations.

Northern Ireland was peopled by the Danai, according to our record, while Southern Ireland was peopled, according to the same evidences, by the original inhabitants of Canaan whom Joshua drove out to make way for God's chosen people. To-day northern Ireland is Protestant, southern Ireland Roman Catholic. Northern Ireland is the home of the Scotch-Irish race, who are furnishing to the world many of its greatest and most liberal divines, statesmen and scholars, while southern Ireland is depraved, ignorant and rebellious, and has to be kept, in consequence, in a condition almost of slavery by superior England which has subjugated her.

We now return to the history of the eight tribes remaining yet in Assyria. We offer a prophecy by Ezekiel,—“And say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I will take the children of Israel from among the heathen whither they be gone, and will gather them on every side and bring them into their own land; and I will make them one nation in the land on the mountains of Israel and one king shall be king to them all; and they shall be no more two nations, neither shall they be divided into two kingdoms any more at all.”—Ezekiel 37: 21, 22.

Wonder, O reader, at the words of the above unfulfilled prophecy, and more so, as we offer to trace these tribes from the day the above words were uttered far away from those beautiful hills and mountains of Samaria outlying to the north of Jerusalem, the city of hope and of God, their divinely appointed home forever.

At this time the eight tribes were pushing their conquests eastward from Assyria into Media and Persia, being successful in their warfare against those nations wherever they went, until they had gained supremacy over all that country through to the farther India. And while they were in that country, B. C. 623, a child was born said to be of this same race named Saca Muni. This child gave early manifestations of wonderful mental and religious characteristics; and at an early age gained supreme ascendancy over the inhabitants of those countries. He taught them religiously for over forty years and established a religion founded on the principles of the decalogue which has been venerated by millions of those people since that time, and indeed, it is claimed that both Saca Muni and many of his followers are literally descended from these tribes during their temporary invasion of their country. These we will mention hereafter.

But this was not to be the home of eight tribed Israel. We quote from 2 Esdras, 13: 39, 48: "And whereas thou sawest that he gathered another peaceable multitude unto him, those are the ten tribes which were carried away prisoners out of their own land in the time of Osea, the king whom Shalmanezar the king of Assyria led away captive, and he carried them over the waters and so they came into another land. But they took this counsel among themselves that they would leave the multitude of the heathen and go forth into a further country where never man dwelt, that they might keep their statutes which they never kept in their own land. And they entered into Euphrates by the narrow passages of the river. For the Most High then showed signs for them and held still the flood till they passed over. For through that country was a great way to go, namely, of a year and a half. And the same region is called Arsareth. Then dwelt they there until the latter time;" that is, to the age of the Messiah. The testimony of Herodotus also confirms the above account of Israel's emigration and residence in Arsareth for a period of 500 years, in every particular. And who was Herodotus? Oxonian makes it appear that he was an Israelite himself of the tribe of Dan.

We have not time nor space to follow the history of this people while sojourning in Arsareth, which lies on the north-west coast of the Black sea, according to the maps of that ancient time. But wherever these tribes went they excelled in progress, in agriculture, art and war. It is said that in one year this people imported to Athens alone 3,500,000 bushels of Scuthic corn, which trade arose to immense proportions with the cities of southern Europe. We will mention but one of their many battles with Rome. The scene of this battle was the headwaters of the Erus and Weser rivers, and called Saltus Tentobergiensis. It was called by Sir E.

Creasy, one of the decisive battles of the world; Quintilius Varus commanded the Roman legions, and Arminius commanded the forces of Arsareth, called at this time Scythians, a term probably derived from the Hebrew word "Succoth," indicating the temporary nature of their habitations. The battle lasted two days, and was so fatal to the Romans that the tidings of it filled all Rome with an agony of terror. Cæsar Augustus was so alarmed and mortified at this defeat that he afterward exclaimed bitterly, "Quintilius Varus, give me back my legions!" Of this battle we submit the following indicative comment of the modern English historian: "Had Arminius been supine or unsuccessful, our Germanic ancestors would have been enslaved or exterminated; this island never borne the name of England, and we, this great English nation, whose rule and language are now overrunning the earth from one end of it to the other, would have been utterly cut off from existence." The precise time when these wanderers moved on into Germany is not known; but here we find them in the second century of the Christian era, being now called the Anglo Saxon race. The Bible says of Israel, "they shall be called by another name."—Isa. 65: 15. While yet in Assyria, in fulfillment of this prediction the children of Israel were called the Saca Suni, and we now find their province in Germany given the same name with a slight variation; viz: Saxony, evidently derived from Saca Suni. In their wandering they had been called successively Saca Suni, Scythians, and Cimmerians. The first of these names means literally, the sons of Isaac; the second is derived from the Hebrew word, Succoth, meaning booths, as before stated, and the last being only a slight variation from Samaritan, or Samaria, from whence these people were first deported into captivity. But we now find them called Anglo Saxon. This prefix it is claimed is derived from the Hebrew word Engel, a contraction of Ephraim, hence the term Anglo Saxon means literally the Ephraim-Isaac people. We have now traced this people down to historic grounds thoroughly travelled over. We have only to examine the history of modern times for an account of the ingress of the Anglo Saxons into England in A. D. 446 to 450, where they established themselves under the name of the Ochtarchy, remaining there quietly until A. D. 800, when these eight little kingdoms were all consolidated into one and the crown put on Egbert's head. This, then, was the beginning of the English government in its present form. Not long after this the restless Danes invaded England, harassing that country, so that there was little or no peace until A. D. 1066, when William the Conqueror, came over from Normandy, and at the battle of Hastings subdued the whole and put the crown on his own head. But who was this William the Conqueror? It is declared by the best authority that the Normans, of whom he was the leader, were none other than a remnant of the tribe of Benjamin, which tribe remained with Judah until the Babylonish captivity; after which a portion at least went northward to the region of Tarsus, where they remained until the taking of Jerusalem by Titus.

Here they were joined by the other fragments of their tribe, whence they can be traced northward through Asia Minor into Europe, until they find Dan in Denmark. The Bible declares that Benjamin was simply loaned to Judah, indicating the alliance would some time be broken up. St. Paul declared, "I am an Israelite, of the seed of Abraham, of the tribe of Benjamin;" which would be evidence that this tribe, or portion of them, dwelt at Tarsus, as Paul claims that to be his native city. From Denmark the Benjaminites went south through Holland and Belgium, having distinguished themselves in their dealings with the nations for their great military valor and prowess, to France where one of the feeble heirs of Charlemagne ceded to them a fertile province which they named Normandy, (Northmen). Here they built up one of the most magnificent kingdoms of Europe. Hence it is shown by this theory that all the successful invasions of England have tended to consolidate and gather together the outcast tribes of Israel into the one great government of Great Britain. Allowing now that Great Britain, Denmark and their Isles of the sea, is that "North Country" spoken of as the destination of the Ten tribes, they being 1,500 miles north of the country whence they started, we can perhaps the better understand the following passages of scripture concerning them:—"My God will cast them away because they did not hearken unto him and they shall be wanderers among the nations."—Hosea, 9: 17. "For the children of Israel shall abide many days without a king and without a prince and without a sacrifice and without an image and without an ephod and without a teraphim."—Hosea 3: 4. "I will sift the house of Israel among all nations like as corn is sifted in a sieve, yet shall not the least grain fall upon the earth."—Amos 9: 9. To be brief, the prophets of old predicted that this race should become a great nation, "the head and not the tail;" that they should "lend to many but borrow from none," and "possess the gates (straits) of their enemies;" and that finally they should be gathered back from "all nations," "on every side," the courts of the earth;" "the north country" and "isles of the sea," to their final home. We ask the consideration of those interested in this great subject of the singular and providential fact that Great Britain has so extended her ægis over the 200,000,000 followers of Saca Nuni of old, now in India, who are discarding their Budhistic errors by the million, and adopting Christianity; and also, over sixty different nationalities including, if the writer mistakes not, all of Egypt, Pathros, and Cush, mentioned in one of those startling prophecies of old concerning this race; and especially the Islands of the sea, which are almost universally under her proud dominion, as to be the only nation known to civilization who could fulfill the conditions relating to the gathering back and re-establishment of both scattered Judah and outcast Israel to their coveted and God-given earthly and immortal inheritance.

The Levites with their sacred priesthood may have been hid from the gaze of the Gentile nations amid the dreary scenes of the unknown northern world, from which God may providentially lead them back to, probably, America in his own due time. But Jerusalem, the great central theater of God's mighty work in the last days, shall it not receive from the promised and preserved seed of Abraham the upbuilding wealth and power and greatness of the nations, of whom we write, confederated together; and whose possessions by the singular providence of God are now outlying the promised inheritance in nearly every direction. Judah and her offshoots known in the earth have shown for their motto an Excelsior which has developed singularly in the fear of God, whether exemplified in the touching piety of the Tabitian whose grace of person and character are the pride of the numerous islands surrounding them, or any other offshoot of that princely tribe. So also, we claim the same disposition all through Israel's wanderings which we have briefly followed. Oliver Cromwell though considered by his foes cruel in the extreme, wrote letters to his relatives filled with as pious and tender sentiments as those of a school girl. The savage Attila, also, when demanding as a ransom from a captured Roman city that they pay him all their money and jewels, and set all their slaves free. "What then shall be left us;" said the Roman Senators; "I leave you your immortal souls," was perhaps the noblest answer of those dark ages.

The writer now closes an article which is intended as an encouragement, more especially to the English people everywhere, feeling an interest in them such perhaps as the prophet Ezekiel would have felt for them had he been shown in one of those visions he had of Israel of old, also the enlightened people of that island our brethren of to-day, exemplifying the common nature of all Israel, in opening up with so little encouragement in the way of honor or power, a fountain of truth proceeding from the fullness of the gospel, which shall grow larger and wider, agitating that whole people, until from which shall result the upbuilding of the kingdom of God through the salvation of thousands of souls.

ALL THINGS COMMON.

I MAKE no apology for writing on the subject, further than that I am a believer in "all things common," and have been ever since I have been a believer in the gospel, and that has been forty-six years. The apostles laid on hands for the bestowment of the Holy Ghost, and they had "all things common." But the command for either is not written in the four gospels, Matthew, Mark, Luke and John; but because they did lay on hands and the Holy Ghost was given, it is argued and believed that it was right; and that it is one of the principles of the doctrine of Christ. "They had all things common;" then why not believe that it is right to have all things common and that it is one of the principles of the doctrines of Christ. Christ certainly commanded the rich young man to sell that he had and give to the poor, that he might be his disciple. Simon, the sorcerer, seems to be one of the witnesses that the Holy Ghost was given through the laying on of hands. Ananias was the first to suffer for using hypocrisy and lying to the Holy Ghost; he wanted to be one with the brethren outwardly, but not in heart; so he was made an example for others; then it was no wonder that fear fell upon all that heard it.

"And the multitude of them that believed were of one heart and soul; neither said any of them that aught of the things which he possessed was his own; but they had all things common."—Acts 4: 32.

Ananias liked the company, but he did not like to pay the price; he wanted something he could call his own, and undertook to smuggle himself into good company. "Neither said any of them that ought of the things which he possessed was his own," showing plainly that they had individual rights, a right and title to some things, but they did not say "that aught" was their own.

Acts 2: 42—"And they continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship," that is right, "and in breaking of bread and prayers." "And fear came upon every soul; and many wonders and signs were done by the apostles." "And all that believed were together, and had all things common."—Acts 2: 42-44. The result of all this and what follows in the next two verses, is summed up in the forty seventh verse, "having favor with all the people."

I am a believer in "all things common." I also believe it was one of the doctrines of Christ. Turning to the Book of Mormon, we read that the people on this land "had all things common among them." "And it came to pass that they did do all things, even as Jesus had commanded them."

And this order of things was brought about as suddenly on this land as it was at Jerusalem. And thus "doing all things as Jesus commanded" goes to show that Jesus commanded them to have "all things common." The particular way of organizing such a body is not stated; but their "dealing justly one with another" goes to show that they had individual rights and dealt with each other; in short, bought and sold, and "became exceeding rich." I am not writing this in reply to other writers on the subject of all things common. One brother may think I am replying to him. If so, I will just say that I had this commenced before I read his letter. I firmly believe that there is a time coming when the Latter Day Saints will have just such an order of things as the people on this land had; and that it will last one thousand years in place of two hundred; and when it takes place the time will be when "the hypocrite will be detected" just as Ananias was, (not killed) and sinners be afraid.

Common stock, and all things common are two different kinds of associations. The former may be a kind of worldly association, the latter a principle of the doctrine of Christ. Amongst the Nephites it was called "all things common;" at Jerusalem by the same. In Enoch's day it was called oneness, and "they were of one heart and one mind and dwelt in righteousness and there was no poor amongst them." And because of this "the Lord called his people Zion," "pure in heart." Ananias can not come into that order. Call the order, or organization "oneness," "all things common," or some other name; the time will come when Zion will be redeemed and be built up according to the law of "the celestial kingdom." In sec. 38, par. 6, D. C., these words may be found, "I say unto you, be one; and if ye are not one, ye are not mine."

AN OLD TIME BELIEVER IN THE DOCTRINE OF CHRIST.

THE PIONEERS OF PROVIDENCE.

THE workings of providence in detail are, as a rule, unperceived by the race at large; but in the aggregate they become plainly visible, and their outlines sharply defined. All thinking minds, that have not run off into belief in a blind chance, are agreed that the notable and great events which mark the progress of the great Adamic family, tribal, national, and personal are bound together in one vast chain of cause and effect, of which both ends are held in the hands of him, the Master of life and intelligence, who "knoweth the end from the beginning," and who, out of the seeming confusion and contradiction, evolves his wondrous purposes; and the web which to the preceding age appeared one mass of inextricable confusion is seen by the succeeding one to be a marvel of skilful workmanship for which but one place can be found, for its texture, make, and pattern will accord with no other place than the unfinished panel of the tapestry of the world's history where the last age dropped it. Well and truly did the poet write that "God moves in a mysterious way,

His wonders to perform."

The pagan philosophers gave to the hidden, silent, secret worker the name "parca;"—three sisters who were continually weaving the web of fate. The Hebrews were the sole people of the ancient world who recognized the hand of the "One" in the government of the world at large.

To the student of history it is wonderful, as we proceed from the beginning of history up to the present time, to mark the predominating influence of that hidden and mysterious providence regulating the progression of the race; and so ordering it that it does not in any wise militate against the free moral action of the individual; he is left to move, act, and go astray with perfect freedom in the choice of good, or evil, in his sphere of action; knowing, moreover, that there is a fixed, logical sequence of penalties to be paid, or of rewards to be received for actions done, or undone, and in accordance with intentions whether they were vicious or good. And yet with this free moral agency, this freedom of thought and speech, providence holds the guiding rein, and its hand is plainly to be perceived in the general results of the acts of the individuals elected to be its pioneers, and in those of the nation, tribe, or people who followed, aided or rejected them. Moreover, providence makes use of both our vices and our virtues, overruling and obtaining from evil as from good the accomplishment of its design.

The all potent instrument of Deity, when He thinks fit to make use of men to prepare, or accomplish a part of His plans is inspiration; but inspiration only comes to the genius, to those born to the purple of leadership, "Nascit non fit." They are born, not made. They have a gift neither acquired by labor, nor obtained by virtue; they are utterly unable to explain its nature or how they came by it; the world calls it "genius." To these geniuses comes the inspiration for the time and needs of the age, and by it they do certain strange things, startling the world with their ideas, teachings, and apparent audacity, the end of which is often fatal to them. It is in this manner that providence ruleth in the affairs of man, ever working, ever striving, ever approaching the final consummation of the designs of Him who "knoweth the end from the beginning," and never receding.

"It maketh and unmaketh, mending all.
What it hath wrought is better than hath been.
Slow grows the splendid pattern that it plan'd,
Its master hands between."

Whenever Deity is preparing the world, unknown to itself, for some great change, religious, social, or political, there appears to be a species of intellectual epidemic floating in the air, and which is inhaled by thousands of people in different and distant places and surroundings, and who are utterly unknown to each other. These are the advanced guard of the movement which the inspired genius will by and by usher in. They dream about, talk about, preach about a something approximating in a greater or lesser degree to that which the genius will at the appointed time astound the world with. When in the course of time the hour is come that marks the completion of one chapter of the history of the race and the commencement of another, providence, the "Hiram Abiff," of the great temple of human destiny, the master builder of the great architect of the universe, looking around, sees the genius standing idle, as it were, in the market place, because no man doth hire him, stretches forth its hand and lifts him (the "living stone") into the exact place which it alone can fill in the great building. But how came the genius to be in the market place? Chance, was it? No such thing as chance is in existence. Law, eternal, unchangeable governs all; his being there was simply one of the links in the great chain of cause and effect. How came Cromwell, the brewer of Huntingdon, to become Lord Protector of England? How came Napoleon Bonaparte, the poverty stricken officer of the French army, to be in Paris at the precise time when the Assembly was seeking a man who could and would quell the Parisian mob of Sans culottes? Why was he not with the army in Italy? Because they were the born geniuses who, under the inspiration needed for the times, wrote the concluding sentences of one chapter in the history of the race, and commenced a fresh one written in letters of blood.

Cromwell made a government "of the people, for the people, by the people" a possibility, Napoleon made it a success. Cromwell destroyed the idea of the "divinity that doth hedge a king." The French accepted Cromwell's idea, and attempted to establish a democratic government. Failing in it in their own nation, they helped make it a reality and a success in America. Thus we find Cromwell the Lord Protector of England, and Napoleon Bonaparte, the poverty stricken sub-lieutenant of the French army—two men widely separated by time, nationality and religion—were links in the great chain of human events to establish the reign of a true democracy in a land neither of them ever saw.

When the time drew near that Popish mummery and mockery, which under the name of religion, disgraced all Europe, an intellectual epidemic, a fever of thought had already set thousands thinking. During that epidemic the genius, Luther, was born. The time came when the divine afflatus lighted upon him; and he, the protestant "Thor," so hammered and smote that he hammered the Popish giants, mummery and mockery, clear out of the German brain and drove Protestantism in; and finally made freedom of religious thought and speech a possibility throughout Europe. When the Reformation had achieved all that it could possibly do, and under the lethargy of the time the Protestant Episcopal Church had sunk into a deep sleep, and darkness covered England as with a pall, priests and people given over to sensuality and indifference, another epidemic fever of thought passed over the land, and thousands commenced to think and speak, unknown to or by each other generally. By and by, the thought began to assume shape and find expression; and a young man invites two or three of his fellow collegians to meet with him on certain evenings for mutual instruction in the scriptures and prayer; and lo, Methodism was born. Wesley and Whitefield, the inspired geniuses of their day, the "Jupiter and Mercury" of the English reformation, so thundered and hurled the terrors of a righteous judgment from the hands of a just and offended God, at the masses, that the snoring right reverends, and wrong reverends awoke in terror, and cried out, while rubbing their eyes, "These men are turning the world upside down; away with them. Great is Morpheus, the god of slumber." But it availed them nothing; the Wesleyan reformation went on, and on, growing each month more and more powerful, until finally, the whole land from "John O'Groat's to Land's End" was filled with earnest, working, devoted christians, acting and living up to the light they enjoyed.

Luther made Methodism possible. Wesley made it a reality, and the outlines left by Luther on the web of the history of the race were filled in by Wesley, and thus another panel was completed. But he who completed it left another and a grander one outlined, to be filled in by some genius in another age, and possibly in another country. Said he, "The real cause why the extraordinary gifts of the Holy Ghost are no longer to be found in the Christian Church is because the Christians are turned heathens again, and have only a dead form left." These words fell upon dull ears, upon stony ground. But when in the economy of God it became necessary that these words which had so long lain dormant should spring into active life, a genius was born. But long before his birth it had become necessary that one should arise to lead the struggling American people to victory, nationality, and freedom, both civil and religious. And lo, the man was at hand. Years prior to this the genius had been born, and providence putting forth its hand lifted him up, and placed him in position as the inspired genius who was to lead the American people to nationality, and civil and religious freedom. And all time will tell how well George Washington, the gentleman farmer of Virginia, filled the position. Of a verity, providence fires no blank charges.

"The thoughts of peoples and their ways and wills
There too the great law binds
Unseen, it helpeth all with faithful hands.
Unheard, it speaketh louder than the storm."

A few years more and another chapter in the history of the race is closed. War has passed away and peace prevails, and again an epidemic of thought is in the air; its germs are being inhaled by thousands unknown to, or by each other; and the Second Advent of Christ becomes a prominent idea among those thinkers, and Alexander Campbell stands forth as its champion; when lo, from the backwoods a voice is heard proclaiming the commencement of a new chapter in the history of the race; the genius becomes inspired; the divine afflatus falls upon him; and lo, he makes the words that had so long lain dormant start into active, living life; and to throb and flame, and burn, and sink down deep into the hearts of the simple, honest folk that heard him; and lo the gifts of the Spirit are again upon earth, and what to John Wesley was a bare possibility is become to Joseph Smith a glorious reality. What to Alexander Campbell was a mere matter of conjecture founded upon his own private interpretation of Scripture, Joseph Smith declares to be a certainty founded upon revelation from heaven. These things did not please the reverend snorers in whose dreams the good Morpheus had declared that all was well in their Zion, and so it was, that the spiritual gifts were only needed in the early days of Christianity to establish it among the Pagan Greeks and Romans, having seemingly forgotten the Pagan Chinese, Hindoostances, Japanese, et. al; to say nothing of the Pagans of Christendom, and that the reign of Christ was to be a spiritual one in the hearts of his people when all the world was converted to him, by them, the snorers. Straightway there arose a mighty shaking among those dry and withered skeletons of Christianity; and they arose with a great rattle and shaking, and they came together, and skeleton stood shoulder to shoulder with skeleton, and they put all the powerful machinery of their churches throughout the land to work, to crush out the daring genius, who had so rudely disturbed them, and caused those long forgotten words, and that long ignored doctrine of the personal advent and reign of Christ on earth, to live, move, and have a glorious being in the hearts of tens of thousands. Fifty years have passed away and the "dry words" and "long ignored doctrine," are not only living despite the anathemas of the old skeleton fathers; but wonderful to say, the children of those skeleton fathers have flesh upon their bones now, (not much as yet 'tis true), but some, and they are advocating, and convocating, and resolving, and printing that the Second Advent of Christ will be a personal one, and that he will reign in person over all the earth in just as literal a manner as Emperor William reigns over Germany. And they are also preaching and teaching, these sons of their fathers the gifts of the spirit, in the healing of the sick through the land, and reporting wonderful manifestations therein. Of a truth, the children are adorning the supulchres of those whom their fathers stoned.

But not alone in these did the genius prove himself ahead of his time and its thought; (which even now has not come up with him); but in many other instances, of which I will mention but two. Years ago, the writer, when in the stand said, "And now, not speaking Ex-Cathedra, but as one who closely watches the stream of thought as it flows along, I tell you that ere many years are past a question will come up in the religious world upon which the churches will be divided, and some of the great ones will split asunder on this rock ahead. Do you ask me, what will that question be? I reply it is that of probation after death; that is the rock ahead. Already the point of the wedge is entered, and it will in the course of a few years be driven home to the head, riving and tearing the Protestant log. That wedge is the now widely spreading belief that punishment should be reformatory rather than vengeful; limited according to the offence, whether done viciously or in ignorance, rather than eternal." And now what do we see? The great Congregational Church is taking up that very question. It has been broached in its late convention, and a split in the church is very probable. And yet that very doctrine was taken up and preached by the genius as a fundamental one of the doctrine of the Church of Christ.

Ere long another question will arise causing another division among the churches, and upon it the Protestant fabric will be rent through and through. Already the germs of the intellectual epidemic are floating in the air; and the questions, Does death put an end to man's intellectual development? Does the believer remain in a condition of intellectual inertia after death? Is the life to come a non-progressive one? Is there nothing for the believer to achieve, no position to be won after death? Is mental torpidity to be the result of eternal salvation? The slumbering snorers reply; The believers will be so entranced by the joys and happiness of heaven, where, with crown on head and harp in hand they will eternally sing the praise of God and the Lamb, that they will need nothing more, will desire nothing more. Sweets will cloy, O, most reverend skeletons, and praise without work and something to work for, something to win, will become monotonous. Imagine, O most Right Reverend, or most wrong Reverend, a thousand years, ten thousand millions of years, ten thousand billions of trillions of years, and these are but a drop, (scarcely that), in the great ocean of eternity, spent in harping and singing, and then da capo, in English "encore," for another billion of billions. Why, the Nirvana of Buddha Gautama is far preferable; for there we lose all individuality and become part of the divine soul of all things—as the dew drop becomes part of the vast ocean—dwelling where the "silence lives."

Of course these things are calculated to shock you, dear old Right Reverend, and wrong Reverend slumberers, who prefer the stagnation of the swamp, to the flow of the river, and you would, if you dared, put restrictions upon freedom of speech and press. But thank heaven, the giants Stagnation and Mould can only sit in their caves and fire off blank cartridges at the travelers who pass by on the great road of eternal progression.

"Tis vain that you call back the past,
The past will not come at your prayer,
Out of the shadows of night
The world rolls into light,
And 'tis daybreak everywhere."

And I thank God for it. Again the inspired genius has been ahead of his time, and of the thought of his age; for eternal progression was preached by him half a century back. And why should it not be true doctrine? Look all around you O, Rev. slumberers; do you not see that all things are in a condition of progressive development, man included? And is the grave to be the "Ultima Thule," the "Ne plus ultra," to man? God forbid. If you are content to believe that a dull, dreary, torpor, superinducing mental stupor is to be the outcome of the celestial life, so mote it be.

"Yet I doubt not through the ages
One eternal purpose runs,
And creation on creation grows
With the cycles of the suns."

But it must not be thought that the "pioneers of providence" make no mistakes, far from it. They often speak "unwisely with their lips," as did Moses, and in some instances what would be but a blunder in any of us becomes a crime in them, and marks a blot upon their lives as connected with the history of the race. From the beginnings of history down to the present time we find fallibility stamped as the "Hall mark," upon all the pioneers who have been inspired for their day and age. And much, very much said and done by them that has caused them to shed bitter tears ere they closed their eyes in death, and to lay their bodies down when in sight of the promised land.

Conference Minutes.

WYOMING.

The above conference convened at Bro. H. S. Gill's hall, 42 Bellvue St., Scranton, Pa., with the Hyde Park Branch, at 2 p. m., November 27th, 1886. E. A. Davies was chosen president, and W. E. Peak clerk. Sr. Maggie Gill was called on by the president to act as organist. Ministerial Reports.—Elders H. S. Gill, D. Griffiths, J. Baldwin, Lewis Thomas, J. J. Morgan, E. A. Davis (baptized 2), and W. E. Peak. Priests F. Evans and J. R. Williams reported in person, J. Ecker by letter. The Bishop's Agent, H. S. Gill, had received $34.50; paid out to Elder E. L. Kelley $10; to Elders E. A. Davies and W. E. Peak $16.50; balance on hand $8. Moved by W. E. Peak that the president have the right to appoint all committees for the conference. On motion Sr. Maggie Gill was appointed district clerk. D. Griffiths, L. Thomas and W. E. Peak, committee, audited the Bishop's Agent's books, and found them correct. Hyde Park Branch reported by J. J. Morgan, has improved since last conference, and that the work there looks better for the future than it has for a long time in the past. Nanticoke Branch reported by Bro. L. Thomas, was doing the best it could. The Danville Branch reported by W. E. Peak, had not held meetings for about a year. Elder Crumb recommends that this conference declare the branch disorganized. On motion the Danville Branch was declared disorganized and that the members have their letters of removal granted by application to the district clerk, Maggie Gill, 42 Bellvue street, Scranton, Pennsylvania, and that the president make all necessary arrangements. On motion the spiritual authorities were sustained. Branch Reports.—Hyde Park 36, including 4 elders, 3 priests, 1 teacher, 3 baptized, 1 died; J. J. Morgan, president, Sr. Mary Morgan clerk. Nanticoke 12, including 2 elders, 2 priests, 1 teacher; L. Thomas president, J. D. Eckard clerk. On motion Bro. H. S. Gill was sustained Bishop's Agent. On motion the Taylorsville Saints were granted the right to organize a branch and have their letters of removal. As Bro. W. E. Peak has been called to labor in the Pittsburg District by the missionary in charge, it was resolved that we tender to him our thanks for faithful labors in this district. On motion Bro. E. A. Davies was chosen district president for the coming term, and that if he leaves before his term expires he have the authority to appoint one in his place. Sunday, 9 a. m., Bro. H. S. Gill presided over the prayer meeting; preaching at 10 a. m. by Bro. L. Thomas in the Welsh language, assisted by A. N. Bishop, in English language; prayer and sacrament meeting at 2 p. m., presided over by J. J. Morgan and J. Baldwin. The Spirit of the Lord was manifest and all the Saints rejoiced in the blessings of heaven. Resolved that this conference fully appreciate the services of Brn. Davies and Peak in this district, and tender them this vote of confidence for their efficient, faithful work as ministers of the gospel of Christ. An itemized account of moneys received by the Bishop's Agent was read and approved, showing $34 received from the Hyde Park Branch and 50 cts. from T. O. Davies, from the Nanticoke Branch. Preaching at 6 p. m. by Elder D. Griffiths in the Welsh language and A. N. Bishop in the English language, assisted by W. E. Peak. On motion adjourned to meet at Taylorsville, the last Saturday and Sunday in February, 1887.

WESTERN MAINE.

Conference of the above district convened with the Deer Isle Branch, November 13th and 14th, 1886. W. G. Pert president, U. W. Green clerk pro tem. Brooksville 43; including 1 elder, 1 priest, 1 teacher, 1 deacon. Green's Landing 31; 1 elder, 1 priest, 2 teachers, 1 deacon. Brays Mountain 26; 2 elders, 1 priest, 1 teacher, 1 deacon; 1 baptized. Elders John Blastow, W. G. Pert, John J. Billings; priests U. W. Green, (baptized 1), and teacher Peater Eaton reported. Bishop's Agent reported; on hand last report $18.06, received last quarter $5.25, paid out $10, on hand $13.31. Saturday evening preaching by U. W. Green; Sunday morning, prayer-meeting; forenoon, afternoon and evening sessions, preaching by U. W. Green, assisted by W. G. Pert. A collection of $15.25 for the Green's Landing Chapel, was taken up. The weather during the session of conference being very stormy, prevented many of the Saints from attending. The time and place of the next conference was left with the president of district to determine and appoint.

KENT AND ELGIN.

Conference of the above district was held in the Blenheim Branch, October 9th and 10th, 1886, John H. Lake president, R. Coburn clerk. Minutes of last session read and approved. Branch Reports.—Chatham 21 members, 1 elder, 1 priest, 1 Teacher, 1 Deacon, 4 baptized. Petrolia 32, 1 elder, 1 teacher, 1 deacon, 3 baptized. Blenheim no changes. Elders' Reports.—Arthur Leverton had preached every Sunday, sometimes twice, baptized 5, and solemnized 1 marriage. R. C. Evans had baptized 13, (in the London District), and had been greatly blessed in preaching the word. J. H. Lake had labored since the General Conference principally in the London district. Priest Peter McBrayne had preached some and baptized three. James H. Tyrrell reported branch labor, also preached once in the Lindsley meeting house. R. Coburn, Bishop's Agent, reported: Balance on hand last report $54.56. Received since $45.34. Paid out $67.15. Balance on hand October 8th, 1886, $32.75. Report was examined by James H. Tyrrell and A. McKenzie and found correct. The committee on house of worship in Chatham reported that a house 30 x 50 feet would cost $1,200. The report was tabled and the committee discharged. On motion the clerk was authorized to draw up a petition to raise money to buy a lot in Chatham on which to build a church. The petition was drawn up and given to Thomas Miller, Jr., to circulate among the Saints. A motion to have a two days' meeting in place of the June conference next year was not entertained. J. H. Lake was sustained as president of the Canada Mission; Arthur Leverton as president of the district, and R. Coburn as clerk and Bishop's Agent. J. H. Lake, James H. Tyrrell, John Taylor, A. McKenzie and Samuel H. Bacon, the last named four to bear their own expenses. (Delegates to Kirtland Conference, April 6th, 1887.—Ed.). At 7:30 p. m. preaching by J. H. Lake on the priesthood. Sunday morning at 8:30 prayer and testimony meeting, Bro. J. H. Lake in charge; three were administered to, and one child blessed. At 9:30 the sacrament was administered, after which Bro. Arthur Leverton was ordained to the office of a seventy, by Bro. J. H. Lake assisted by Bro. R. C. Evans. At 10:30 preaching by R. C. Evans. At 2:30 p. m. Bro. Arthur Leverton preached the funeral sermon of Bro. Wm. H. Hodgkin, from 1 Thess. 4:13. At 6:30 p. m., preaching by Bro. J. H. Lake. Adjourned to meet on the second Saturday and Sunday in June, 1887, with the Blenheim Branch.

Miscellaneous.

INDEPENDENCE LOCALS.

Weather is splendid; very little snow or freezing as yet.
Joseph Luff, the present presiding officer of the branch, has been dispensing some very wholesome food for the past few Sabbath mornings. He is the right man in the right place.
Bro. R. May manufactured and sold ten thousand apple barrels this season. His corps of men are now making cider barrels.
A baptistry has just been completed in the church yard.
Two large street lamps, furnished by the Sisters' Aid Society, are erected and give light by night. "Long may their light shine."
Bro. T. W. Chatburn has the "Soldiers' Roll" almost ready for publication. Those wishing their names to appear on said roll must send them in this month.
Under the auspices of the Sisters' Aid Society, a grand supper and entertainment were given in the Grand Army of the Republic Hall, netting some $85; the proceeds to be dispensed to the poor.

BOOK NOTICE.

We are out of the best bound Doctrine and Covenants, but the cheaper ones are a nice book. Those who have lately ordered the cheap Voice of Warning will receive them soon, as we have a new and revised edition at the binders. Please remember also that "Hesperis" a book of choice poems by Bro. David H. Smith is an excellent gift for either gentleman or lady.

NOTICE!

The ladies of the Lamoni Mite Society desire to thank all who so kindly assisted them with Thanksgiving dinner, with donations, labor, and patronage.
MRS. W. W. BLAIR, Pres.
MRS. A. BULLIS, Sec.

The quarterly conference of the Northern Nebraska District will convene at Omaha, Nebraska, Friday, January 7th, 1887, at 7:30 p. m. All are invited to attend. By order of NELSON BROWN, Dist. Pres.

The Second Quorum of Elders are preparing a new Circular Letter. We lack the post office address of Brn. Samuel Alcott, Robert Holt, L. N. Merchant, W. B. Smith, Wm. Thompson, Edward Wheeler and J. W. Wight. Will the above named brethren please send me their address. We desire to send each of the elders a circular letter by the 1st of January, also a blank on which to report to the next General Conference.
F. C. WARNKY, Secretary.

THE CHICAGO TIMES.

ANNOUNCEMENT FOR 1887.

THE DAILY TIMES.

The experience of the past has demonstrated that the west requires and will liberally sustain a first-class newspaper such as THE TIMES—a journal that spares no necessary expense in the collection of the news of the world, and that gives an ample presentation of the events of each day as they occur. It is strictly within the bounds of truth to assert that THE TIMES in all its editions is the most complete, comprehensive, instructive, and entertaining journal published on the American continent; and care will be taken to maintain the high reputation that so many years of a 'knowledge supremacy have brought.

THE TIMES is represented at Washington, New York, and other principal cities of the United States and Europe by correspondents of experience and a high order of ability, who transmit by telegraph or mail accounts of all occurrences, and present intelligent reviews of the political and social events of the time. The vigilance of the correspondents is a guarantee that readers of THE TIMES will be kept fully informed in all that goes to constitute the history of the period.

The city news will be given more fully and adequately than it is possible for any other Chicago paper to present it. All occurrences will be reported, as they have been heretofore, with absolute impartiality. Through no other channel is it practicable to obtain such complete records of the proceedings of deliberative bodies of a national or representative character as through the columns of THE TIMES.

Merchants and bankers throughout the country have long recognized the superiority of THE TIMES' financial and commercial reports. Absolute accuracy and freedom from the influence of traders' cliques and rings will continue to characterize this department of the paper.

Literary features of a high order of merit have been added to the Sunday and Saturday editions, and to these departments some of the best writers in the United States have become regular contributors. These editions rival the best magazines in the excellence of their literary contents.

THE TIMES will continue in the advocacy of sound political principles. It will labor for the emancipation of the country from the burdens of a protective tariff, and give all encouragement to efforts for the improvement of the civil service by its divorcement from party politics. THE TIMES will remain, as it has been for more than twenty years, an aggressively independent journal, acknowledging allegiance to no party, but striving for principle and justice.

In order to meet the demands of its country patrons, arrangements have been made whereby the Sunday edition of THE TIMES is distributed by means of special and fast railway trains to cities within a radius of two hundred miles of Chicago early on the day of its publication.

THE WEEKLY TIMES.

THE WEEKLY TIMES is a complete compendium of the news of the week, with special features of late and trustworthy market reports, and a department of industrial and agricultural intelligence carefully prepared by an editor of long experience, and is printed and mailed the morning of the day on which it is dated. In these respects THE WEEKLY TIMES is superior to any mere agricultural paper, for the field it covers is infinitely more extensive than that which can be occupied by the 'one idea' press.

The subscription price of THE WEEKLY TIMES is only $1 per year, postage prepaid. It is not believed that so valuable and comprehensive a library of useful knowledge can be anywhere else obtained for so small a sum. The endeavor will be to make THE WEEKLY TIMES a perfect newspaper for farmers and for families to whom it is not convenient to take a daily.

Sample copies will be sent to address on application by letter or otherwise to THE TIMES office, corner Washington street and Fifth avenue, Chicago, Illinois.

TERMS.

PERSECUTION AND ITS CAUSES.

It might well be thought that the brutal rage of the Jackson county mob would have been satiated in their threatening, whipping, burning, and killing, when driving the body of the Saints from their midst. The following, however, will further serve to exhibit their fiendish cruelty, and their unrestrained avarice.

"On Monday night the 24th of December, four aged families living near the village of Independence, whose penury and infirmities, incident to old age, forbade a speedy removal, were driven from their houses by a party of the mob, who tore down their chimneys, broke in their doors and windows, and hurled large rocks into their houses by which the life of old Mr. Miller, in particular, was greatly endangered. Mr. Miller is aged sixty-five years, being the youngest man in the four families. Some of these men have toiled and bled in the defence of their country; and old Mr. Jones, one of the sufferers served as life guard to General Geo. Washington, in the revolution. Well may the soldier of Seventy-six contemplate with horror the scenes which surround him at this day in Jackson county where liberty, law, and equal rights, are trodden under foot. It is now apparent that no man embracing the faith of this people, whatever be his age or former standing in society, may hope to escape the wrath of the Jackson county mob, whenever it is in their power to inflict abuse.

"A court of enquiry was held at Liberty, Clay county, Missouri, the latter part of this month, to enquire into the conduct of Colonel Pitcher for driving the Saints, or Mormons, from Jackson county, which resulted in his arrest for further trial by a court martial. * * *

"The mob sold the materials, or rather gave Davis and Kelley leave to take the Evening and Morning Star establishment, to Liberty, Clay county, where they commenced the publication of "The Missouri Enquirer" a weekly paper. They also paid our lawyers, employed as counsel against the mob, three hundred dollars on the one thousand dollar note, on agreement; a small amount towards an establishment which with the book work and furniture, had cost three or four thousand dollars.

"From the very features of the celebrated mob circular previously inserted, it will be seen that they meditated a most daring infraction of the constitution of our country, that they might gratify a spirit of persecution against an innocent people. To whom shall blame be attached in this tragedy, when they in July last boldly made known their determination to drive the Mormons from Jackson county, 'peaceably if they could, forcibly if they must,' openly declaring that, 'the arm of the civil law did not afford them a sufficient guarantee against the increasing evils of this religious sect.' And in their circular they further say, "We deem it expedient, and of the highest importance, to form ourselves into a company for the better and easier accomplishment of our purposes,' and conclude with these high toned words: 'we therefore agree, that after timely warning, and upon receiving an adequate compensation for what little property they can not take with them, they refuse to leave us in peace as they found us, we agree to use such means as may be sufficient to remove them; and to this end we pledge to each other our lives, our bodily powers, fortunes, and sacred honors.'

"In answer to their bold and daring resolves to guard against anticipated evils, I give the following extract from the Governor's letter in relation to this affair, dated October 19th, 1833. 'No citizen, or number of citizens, has a right to take the redress of their grievances, whether real or imaginary, into their own hands; such conduct strikes at the very existence of society, and subverts the foundation on which it is based.'

"I ask again, to whom shall blame be attached in this regard, when the mob previously and publicly declared their intentions; and the principles involved were understood by the executive, as appears by the foregoing; and also by the Judiciary, according to Judge Ryland's letter. And the constitution of the land, guarantees equal rights and privileges to all. To whom [then] should blame be attached, but Jackson county mobbers and Missouri."

The following letter from Bro. Gilbert will enable the reader to see further in regard to the Saints taking arms in their own defense and in defense of the institutions of the country, and by whom it was advised.

"LIBERTY, Clay county, Mo.,
January 9th, 1834.

"Dear Sir:—Since my communication of the 29th of November, and a petition dated the 6th of December last, to which my name was attached, I am induced to trespass again upon your patience, with further particulars in relation to the unfortunate faction in Jackson county, on which subject I should be silent were it not that I entertain a hope of suggesting some ideas that may ultimately prove useful in ameliorating the present suffering condition of my brethren, and in some degree restoring peace to both parties.

"Being particularly acquainted with the situation of both parties at this day, my desire is to write impartially; notwithstanding I feel very sensibly the deep wound that has been inflicted upon the church of which I am a member, by the citizens of Jackson county. The petition to your Excellency, dated the 6th of December last, was drawn up hastily by Mr. Phelps and signed by several of us just before the closing of the mail; and there is one item in particular in said petition that needs some explanation; the request that "our men may be organized into companies of Jackson Guards, and furnished with arms by the state" was made at the instance of disinterested advisers and also a communication from the Attorney General to Messrs. Doniphan and Atchison, dated the 21st of November last, giving his views as to the propriety of organizing into regular companies, &c. The necessity of being compelled to resort to arms, to regain our possessions in Jackson county, is by no means agreeable to the feelings of the church, and would never be thought of but from pure necessity.

In relation to the court of enquiry, serious difficulties continue to exist well calculated to preclude the most important testimony of our church, and there appears to be no evil which man is capable of inflicting upon his fellow creature man but what our people are threatened with at this day by the citizens of Jackson county. This intimidates a great many, particularly females and children, and no military guard would diminish their fears so far as to induce them to attend the court in that county. This with other serious difficulties will give a decided advantage to the offenders, in a court of enquiry, while they triumph in power, numbers, &c.

The citizens of Jackson county are well aware that they have this advantage, and the leaders of the faction, if they must submit to such a court, would gladly hasten it. The church are anxious for a thorough investigation into the whole affair, if their testimony can be taken without so great peril as they have reason to fear. It is my opinion from present appearances, that not one-fourth of the witnesses of our people can be prevailed upon to go into Jackson county to testify. The influence of the party that compose that faction is considerable, and this influence operates in some degree upon the drafted militia, so far as to lessen confidence in the loyalty of that body. And I am satisfied that the influence of the Jackson county faction will not be entirely put down while they have advocates among certain religious sects.

Knowing that your Excellency must be aware of the unequal contest in which we are engaged, and that the little handful that compose our church are not the only sufferers that feel the oppressive hand of priestly power, with these difficulties, and many others not enumerated, it would be my wish to adopt such measures as are best calculated to allay the rage of Jackson county, and restore the injured to their rightful possessions. And to this end, I would suggest the propriety of purchasing the possessions of the most violent leaders of the faction; and if they assent to this proposition, and about twenty of the most influential in that county, (which would embrace the very leaders of the faction), could be obtained, I think the majority would cease in their persecutions, at least when a due exercise of executive counsel and authority was manifested. I suggest this measure because it is of a pacific nature, well knowing that no legal steps are calculated to subdue their obduracy, only when pushed with energy by the highest authorities of the state.

In this proposal I believe that I should have the concurrence of my brethren. I therefore give this early intimation of our intention on the part of some of the leading men in the church, to purchase out some of the principal leaders of the faction, if funds sufficient can be raised; hoping thereby to regain peaceful possession of their homes; and in making a trial of this measure at a future day, we may deem it important, and of great utility, if we could avail ourselves of counsel and directions from your Excellency, believing that there will be a day in negotiations for peace, in which an Executive interposition would produce a salutary effect to both parties.

In this communication, with honesty of heart I have endeavored briefly to touch upon a few interesting points in plain truth, believing that I have given no wrong bias on either side, and with earnest prayers to our great Benefactor that the chief ruler of this State may come to a full knowledge of the grand outrage in Jackson county. I subscribe myself,

Your obedient servant,

ALGERNON S. GILBERT.

To his Excellency, Daniel Dunklin, Jefferson City, Missouri.

ANTI-MORMON LEGISLATION.

CHIEF among the very first movements in the present Congress is the following prompt effort to get further and speedy legislation on Utah Mormonism.

"Chairman Tucker of the Judiciary Committee made the first move towards anti-Mormon legislation to-day, by his resolution fixing December 14th for the consideration of the amended Senate Anti-Polygamy bill. The resolution went on the calendar, and it will probably be after that date before it can be called up. The object of Mr. Tucker was to give notice that the Judiciary Committee would press a hearing for its measure. This is not pleasant news for the Mormon lobby, but its members will make a desperate fight just the same. The convenient title of 'counsel' which enables the lobby to include within its ranks ex-Cabinet members and others of well known reputation, gives a cloak of respectability to the Mormon missionaries whose missionary efforts just now are bent toward Congressmen with pliable convictions. Opposed to these are Messrs. C. W. Bennett and R. W. Baskin, the committee appointed by the Gentiles of Utah to represent them at the National Capital. Baskin is a Democrat and Bennett is a Republican, so that the question of politics can not be raised. Kate Field is also on hand to fight the battle of the Utah women. The House amendments to the Senate bill are mainly for the purpose of protecting the property rights of the Mormons as citizens so clearly that no one can confound the uprooting of polygamy with an attack on vested rights. If the bill gets through the House there is little doubt that the Senate will concur in the amendments."—Chicago Tribune, Dec. 8th.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

CONTINUED.

Ques. 3.—Did D. Whitmer promise the mob that he would stop preaching if they did not take his life?

Ans.—Many years ago such rumors were afloat, but as to the truth of them we can not say.

Ques. 4.—Did D. Whitmer in any way assist the mob to murder Joe [we suppose the writer means Joseph.—Ed.] Smith, and what assistance, if any, was it?

Ans.—We are not informed that he did, and have never heard a rumor to that effect, except in the sense that Mr. Whitmer, being disfellowshipped in 1838, and settling among the persecutors of the Saints, thereby encouraged and emboldened the Missouri mobocrats to push their persecutive movements against the church, which resulted finally in the murder of Joseph and Hyrum, June 27th, 1844. We do not believe Mr. Whitmer directly or intentionally, was ever guilty of such a base deed; for however much he may have been offended because the church tried and disfellowshipped him, in 1838, and however much he may have differed with Joseph in his views and sentiments and interpretations in respect to doctrine and church polity, we can not think he knowingly would in any way contribute to such a horrible transaction.

The persecution and driving out of the Saints from Missouri involved them in terrible trials and temptations, and how far their own acts, and the acts of those who were disfellowshipped or apostatized, contributed to prejudice and embitter the mobocrats, is a matter not easily weighed and decided, especially at this late date. And if it shall ever be found that David Whitmer's course in any way tended to cause or intensify the persecutions that afflicted the Saints and resulted in the assassination of Joseph and Hyrum, we confidently hope it will also be found that no such thing was intended by David Whitmer. We regret the existence of such a rumor. It did not originate with the Reorganization.

The Saints were fearfully persecuted in Missouri from 1833 to 1838-9, when they numbering about 12,000, men, women and children, were expelled from the state by the exterminating order of Gov. Lilburn W. Boggs. In the midst of the confusion, strife, and terror incident to such a horrible outrage, it is not surprising that many were misrepresented, misunderstood, and that hosts of false rumors obtained credence and were accepted as facts. True Christian charity will cast her quieting mantle over those dark and cruel times, and let the impartial historian, and the Judge of all the earth, decide where and upon whom rests blame.

Ques. 5.—What authority had the church to say that the original Book of Commandments was faulty, &c., as I see it stated in the Herald of November 13th?

Ans.—It had that authority which every organized body has to point out and correct its own mistakes, or those of its agents.

That serious errors were made in publishing the Book of Commandments, and in printing in the Evening and Morning Star, vol. 1, some of the revelations it contained, is seen in the following statements taken from the re-printed Evening and Morning Star, published at Kirtland, Ohio, in 1836, by Oliver Cowdery, "spokesman" to the Seer, and "second elder" to the church. Oliver Cowdery who had the means of knowing of that matter, says: "We have again inserted the articles and covenants according to our promise in a previous number, for the benefit of our brethren abroad who have not the first number of the first volume. As there were some errors which had got into them by transcribing, we have since obtained the original copy and made the necessary corrections."—Evening and Morning Star, vol. 1, page 196.

Add to this what is said by F. G. Williams & Co., in volume 2, page 384: "It is also proper to say, that in the first fourteen numbers, [of the "Star."—Ed.], in the revelations, are many errors, typographical and others, occasioned by transcribing manuscript; but as we shall have access to originals, we shall endeavor to make proper corrections." These corrected revelations agree exactly with those published in the Doctrine and Covenants. Let it be borne in mind that Oliver Cowdery and F. G. Williams & Co., made these corrections by the original copies, and it was done about the time the errors were first discovered, and that the said revelations, thus corrected, were accepted and endorsed by a General Assembly of the ministry and Saints in Kirtland, Ohio, August 17th, 1835, convened for the purpose of deciding as to whether they would accept the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, compiled by "presiding elders Joseph Smith, jr., Oliver Cowdery, Sidney Rigdon and Frederick G. Williams." See Messenger and Advocate, vol. 1, page 161; Mill. Star, vol. 15, page 299. But the Book of Commandments was not compiled by such authority, it was never completed, and it was never accepted and endorsed by any General Assembly or Conference, but was from the first pronounced faulty, was rejected, and the Book of Doctrine and Covenants was authorized, compiled, and unanimously endorsed as containing "the items of doctrine of Jesus Christ, for the government of his church," by "the several authorities, and the General Assembly."

Ques. 6. Why did the church change some of the revelations in this Book of Commandments when they compiled the Book of Doctrine and Covenants and then put them in the Doctrine and Covenants as the correct ones?

Ans. As we have seen, the editors of the Evening and Morning Star when reprinting that paper, corrected the first publication of those revelations by the original copies stating that errors had occurred in transcribing them; and we have further seen that a General Assembly of the church appointed a committee, (September 24th, 1834), composed of Joseph Smith, jr., Oliver Cowdery, Sidney Rigdon and Frederick G. Williams, the chief presiding elders of the church, "to arrange the items of doctrine of Jesus Christ, for the government of the church." These "items" were "to be taken from the Bible, Book of Mormon, and the revelations which have been given to said church up to this date, or shall be until such arrangement is made."—Messenger and Advocate, p. 161; Mill. Star., vol. 15: 299. The compilation thus authorized was made, and August 17th, 1835, it was presented to a General Assembly called to decide upon that compilation—the Book of Doctrine and Covenants—which was then accepted and indorsed "unanimously" by said assembly, to "become a law, and a rule of faith and practice to the church."—Mill. Star., vol. 15: 299. In this public, authoritative way, the church changed—corrected—"some of the revelations" found in the Book of Commandments, "and put them in the Doctrine and Covenants as the correct ones." The reasons, we see, were good and sufficient, and the authority was of the highest character.

Aside from this, God has the same right to authorize his appointed Seer to add to any of the revelations certain words and facts, that he has to give him any revelations at all. And the people of God have no proper grounds for rejecting such additions, or what purports to be revelation, given by and through God's authorized and accredited Seer, unless they perceive that it contradicts and contravenes the word of God already received and endorsed—which thing very, very rarely occurs, and when it does it proves speedily fatal to that Seer, as a protection to God's people against deception and as a punishment, a sign, and a warning.—See Deut. 18: 20; Jer. 28: 1-17; Ezek. 14: 3-11. Add to this Helaman 3: 13,—"thou shalt not ask what is contrary to my will;" and Doc. & Cov. 7: 3—"do not ask for that which you ought not;" and the teachings of Joseph the Seer,—"We never enquire at the hand of God for special revelation only in case of there being no previous revelation to suit the case." . . . "It is a great thing to enquire at the hand of God, or to come into His presence; and we feel fearful to approach Him with subjects that are of little or no importance, to satisfy the queries of individuals, especially about things, the knowledge of which men ought to obtain, in all sincerity before God, for themselves, in humility, by the prayer of faith."—Times and Seasons, vol. 5: 753; Mill. Star., vol. 14: 413.

God has the right to add to his own words, and this, too, by means of his duly accredited Prophets and Seers. See Jer. 36: 32; Deut. 5: 22; Gal. 3: 19.

Joseph the Seer states in respect to the revelation in Doc. & Cov., section 26, that "the first paragraph" was given "early in the month of August," . . . "and the remainder in the September following."—Times and Seasons, vol. 4: 117; Mill. Star., 14: 36, 37.

Ques. 7. Is there not a revelation in the Doctrine and Covenants under date of 1831, or some time, saying that the Book of Commandments was right and there was no unrighteousness in them?

Ans. No; not that we are of.

The charge that Joseph corruptly altered some of the revelations he received has been a favorite weapon with which to attack his Seeric reputation and the authority of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants. Those who don't know the facts in the case, and who make that charge are presumptuous, self-conceited and lack either good sense or good morals. And those who do know the facts and make that charge, are contemptible and criminal.

God says of that Seer, "he shall do my work;" and, "he shall be esteemed highly among the fruit of thy (Joseph, son of Jacob) loins;" also, "he shall be great like unto Moses;" and further, "I will make him great in mine eyes."—2 Nephi, 2: 2. This could not be, if he was a false revealer; a deceiver and corrupter of the word of God.

UTAH MORMONISM.

WE clip the following from the Stockton, California, Independent, of November 27th, and is valuable as showing the inside view of Utah Mormonism and the tendencies of the younger generations:

"An emigrant family from Utah Territory the home of Mormonism, arrived in this city yesterday morning and encamped on the bank of Mormon channel, between Hunter and Eldorado streets. Being desirous of learning something of the manners and customs of the Latter Day Saints, a reporter of the Independent paid a visit to the family. He found that it consisted of father, mother, six children, and a young man about twenty years of age. The head of the family, John Bates, a man about fifty years of age, and of a pleasing demeanor, received the scribe and readily undertook to give some information about Mormonism. The reporter had fully expected to see at least half a dozen wives, and was somewhat at a loss to account for the apparent discrepancy; but the first thing Mr. Bates did was to set the reporter's mind at rest on the polygamy question. He explained that he was a believer in the principles of Mormonism as laid down by the Prophet Joseph Smith. The sect to which he belonged differed in many things from the Mormon Church presided over by Brigham Young and his successor, but the main point of difference was on polygamy. The followers of Brigham Young recognized polygamy as a divine institution, while those of Joseph Smith were unalterably opposed to it. Many people did not make a distinction between the two sects, in fact, in their minds Mormonism was inseparably connected with polygamy, and a Mormon was regarded as a second Solomon. * * *

"Speaking of affairs in Utah Mr. Bates said the feeling of the Brigham Young Mormons was very intense against the United States Government, and they would die sooner than yield to what they considered the encroachments of the Government. If trouble ever came the poor people would have to suffer the most, as the rich and educated would probably leave. The poorer class were imposed upon by the elders of the church who were constantly preaching and exhorting them to stand by the church, as therein lay their only hope of salvation. The young people were inclined to be progressive, and the majority of them were inclined to look with disfavor on polygamy. The officers of the church and the older people did all they could to hold the tendency in check, and their efforts were successful until recently. Now, the younger people finding that they will be protected by the United States Government, are growing bolder, and some have gone so far as to openly espouse monogamy. The children of Mormon parents are brought up very strictly, as far as the word strict is applicable to the Mormon Church. They are not allowed to hear or read anything about any other religion, and if by chance they should, they are sternly forbidden, under the penalty of severe punishment, from telling it to others. As the Koran is to the believers of Mohammedanism, so the Book of Mormon is to the Mormons. It is the foundation of their educational system, and is taught in every Mormon school, the same as geography or arithmetic is taught in one of the public schools of the United States.

"The Mormons are noted for their secrecy, and United States officers in search of any information will not be able to find out any Mormon. A Mormon never turns traitor, and can not be induced to say or do anything against one of his sect. This accounts for the difficulty officers experience in getting a conviction for any offense committed. Mr. Bates stated that when the officers were hunting for Elder Taylor, he was hiding in a house near where Mr. Bates was stopping. The officers several times came to the house and inquired of the inmates if they knew where Taylor was; but they disclaimed all knowledge of his whereabouts. Mr. Bates said he could have given the Elder away, but under the circumstances he didn't think it advisable to do so. The Mormons have a code of signals whereby they can give warning of danger. In one house the waving of a rag is a danger signal. The women, as a general thing, are well disposed toward their husbands, and would die before they would give any information. This state of things makes a conviction for polygamy a difficult matter. Women will swear point blank that they were never married to or cohabited with a man on trial for polygamy, even when such marriage or cohabitation is notorious. The Federal officers in Utah show a disposition to deal severely with polygamists. The poor people are not troubled much in this respect, the officers singling out the rich and influential. * * *

"In Utah that little line, 'It is a wise child that knows its own father,' is peculiarly applicable. It is a 'chestnut' taunt for one boy, when angry, to sarcastically observe to a companion, 'Why you don't know who your father was.' A man with seven or eight wives and the father of twenty or thirty children, in most cases, could not tell one of his children on the street. As a general thing a man keeps all his wives in one house, but the rich people usually have separate houses. 'Polygamy has its humorous sides,' said Mr. Bates, as he indulged in a meditative smile, 'it may sound strange and ludicrous to you, but I have seen a man, clad in his night garments, issue from the bedroom of one wife and enter that of another, and the thermometer at twenty-six degrees below zero, too!" In conclusion Mr. Bates said that all over the Territory of Utah armories were secreted. Every Mormon adult male was considered a minute-man and supposed to be ready to respond to a call to arms at a moment's notice. When the final struggle comes, the Mormons will die before they yield. As the reporter left, Mr. Bates and his family bid him a kind good night, and laughingly requested him to call again. As the emigrants left at daybreak this morning, the invitation will probably not be complied with. Mr. Bates' remarks on Mormonism are to be understood as applying to the Brigham Young branch of the church. The followers of the Prophet Joseph Smith, who claims to have found the Book of Mormon, have a church in this city. Their belief in many respects is the same as Protestantism."

THE HERESY IN THE CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.

THE Saints, of all classes of the latter day belief, are interested in the cause of the religious controversy now going on in the Congregational Church. The present condition of the quarrel may be briefly stated to be that some of the ministry have reached more liberal views regarding the gospel demands upon the living, and the condition of the unenlightened beyond the grave; and they have become somewhat forward in stating their convictions. The Calvinistic element in the church propose that men holding the advanced, or liberal views shall not be sent abroad to reclaim the heathen, because their view is heretical. The following from the Chicago Tribune of November 15th will aid the HERALD readers to a better understanding of how the matter stands, one being an editorial from the New York Times, the other a telegram from Boston.

New York Times: "The sharp controversy in the Congregational Church concerning the destiny of unenlightened heathen and the rejection of certain missionaries by the American board who do not believe that the heathen are all in hell and going there, did not end when a compromise resolution was unanimously adopted at the Des Moines meeting. It has been kept alive and embittered by the 'friendly' prosecution of the Andover professors for breach of trust, and by the recent declarations of the venerable Dr. Mark Hopkins and the Hon. Alpheus Hardy. A Boston newspaper urges Dr. Dexter and his associates to 'let the Andover prosecution drop,' because 'the spirit of revolt which is growing up in the church as a result of the narrow policy of the American Board is spreading so rapidly as to cause great alarm even among the ultra-conservatives.'

"The Hon. Alpheus Hardy has been a member of the American Board's Prudential Committee for twenty-nine years. When the meeting was held at Des Moines he was chairman of the committee, and for some years he had held that office. It was well known that he had opposed the committee's rejection of certain applicants who were unsatisfactory because they did not believe that all heathen who die without a knowledge of the Christian religion begin at once to suffer endless torture. With the Hon. Joseph A. Ropes and the senior secretary of the board he voted against a majority of the committee when it was decided that the Rev. Robert A. Hume—a faithful missionary of twelve years' experience—should not be allowed to return to his field of labor in India for the sole reason that he agreed with the rejected applicants. At the Des Moines meeting Mr. Hardy resigned, and at the same time Professor Smyth of Andover was dropped from the committee, which was reconstructed so as to present a solid front against the probation idea. The convention saw, as one of its committees reported, that the loss of Mr. Hardy 'took away a tower of strength.' He was urged by a resolution, unanimously passed, to accept a re-election and was unanimously re-elected.

"Mr. Hardy has since refused to accept this re-election, and his letter of refusal is given to the public by Dr. Mark Hopkins, President of the American Board, in company with a long letter of his own.

"When the so-called heresy of a probation for unenlightened heathen first excited the opposition of the Prudential Committee and certain ministers of the old school, it was urged by them that its adoption or a failure to exclude it from the mission field would 'cut the nerve of missions.' If missionaries holding the obnoxious views should be sent out by the board, contributors who had been very generous would, it was asserted, withhold their donations, and the missionary work would die out for want of money and men. But it was afterward shown that those who were most eager to enter the field were the very men who had embraced the so-called heresy, and now it appears that the board is in danger of losing money support, not because it has allowed liberals to save the perishing heathen, but because it has barred the liberals out, for the disaffection or departure of such men as Mr. Hardy is a serious loss.

"What would happen if applicants should be turned over to councils may be shown by the experience of Mr. Stoddard of the last class at Andover, the leader of a group of students who desired to become missionaries in Japan. On the 22d ult. he was ordained and installed by a council as pastor of a church in Haverhill, N. H. His views concerning probation for heathen caused only one dissenting vote to be cast. He is qualified to preach to the people of Haverhill, but not, in the opinion of the American Board, fitted to work for the salvation of heathen who are going to endless punishment because missionaries do not enlighten them."

"Boston, Mass., Nov. 12.—The amended charges against Profs. Smyth, Tucker, Harris, Churchill, and Hiddcks have been sent to the board of visitors of Andover Theological Seminary. The charges, which are signed by J. M. Wellman, H. M. Dexter, O. T. Lampear, and J. J. Blaisdell, are made against Prof. Smyth by name, but copies were sent to each of the other Professors with the information that the charges against them were the same as those against Prof. Smyth. The first specification alleges that Prof. Smyth holds beliefs, has taught doctrines and theories, and done other things antagonistic to the constitution and statutes of the seminary and the "true intention" of its founders as therein expressed; that Prof. Smyth, contrary to the modified requirements of Articles 11 and 12 of the constitution is not a man of sound orthodox principles and divinity, according to the fundamental and distinguishing doctrines of the gospel of Christ, as summarily expressed in the Westminster Assembly's [short catechism,' but that he teaches what is antagonistic to the seminary creed; that Prof. Smyth in the breach of the requirements of Art. 4 is not orthodox and consistent Calvinist.

"The fourth specification gives in detail the 'heterodoxy' of Prof. Smyth. He holds:

First, that the Bible is not the only perfect rule of faith and practice; second, that Christ in his days of humiliation was finite, being limited in all His attributes, capacities, and attainments—in other words, was not God in man; third, that no man has the power or capacity to repent without the knowledge of God in Christ; fourth, that mankind, save as they have received knowledge of historic Christ, are not sinners, or if they are are not of such sinfulness as to be in danger of being lost; fifth, that no man can be lost without having knowledge of Christ; sixth, that the atonement of Christ consists essentially in his becoming identified with the human race through his incarnation; seventh, that the trinity is modal or monarchian and not a trinity of persons; eighth, that the work of the Holy Spirit is chiefly confined to the sphere of historic Christianity; ninth, that the salvation of men is not wholly by grace; tenth, that faith ought to be scientific and rational rather than Scriptural; that there is probation after life for all men who do not decisively reject Christ, and that this should be emphasized and made even central in systematic theology.

"He also holds that there is a new theology better than the old, which is bitterly opposed to the creed, and he has in repeated instances broken the solemn promises made when he subscribed to the creed."

WE notice that there is a serious charge made against one Samuel S. Partello, a late writer on Mormonism. When such men write, similar articles is the result of "unconscious cerebration."

"A CASE OF PLAGIARISM.

"LOUISVILLE, Ky., Feb. 18th.—To the Editor: Mr. O. D. Howe of Table Rock, Nebraska, a son of Mr. E. D. Howe, late of Painesville, Ohio, who was the celebrated author of the work entitled "Mormonism Unveiled," has this day forwarded to my address a clipping from your paper under date of February 3d, 1886. It contains an article regarding the "Spaulding Manuscript," purporting to come from a person who subscribes his name as "Samuel S. Partello."

"Mr. Howe is of the opinion that this article is a verbatim copy of an article which I had the honor to print in the New York Independent during the month of October, 1885. After a close inspection I am glad to be assured that the case is not quite so ill as Mr. Howe has conceived; Mr. Partello has made a few alterations of my article, but these are not by any means numerous or important enough to relieve him from the charge of plagiarism. This charge is hereby pronounced against him.

"I should not be at pains to expose the grave misconduct of Mr. Partello but for the circumstance that the article which he has taken such unwarranted liberties with constitutes a chapter of my work, now almost ready for the press, entitled the 'Biography of Sidney Rigdon, the Real Founder of Mormonism.' It would be very awkward when that volume appears to find myself confronted with the charge of having committed a theft upon the writings of Mr. Partello, when exactly the opposite is the true state of the case.

I humbly request you to insert this note for the purpose of giving me some protection against what I consider to be an act of serious injustice.

Yours very truly,

WILLIAM H. WHITSITT,

No. 306 East Chestnut Street.

[“A comparison of the two articles fully sustains Mr. Whitsitt's charge. We regret the imposition, and assure Mr. Whitsitt and the readers of the Daily News that Mr. Partello will not be given another opportunity to deceive them.—ED. Daily News.”]

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

ON the 10th inst. President Joseph Smith took train for Kewanee, Illinois, to attend district conference there, and he may go thence to Plano, Sandwich, and Mission, ere he returns.

Bro. George Cope, of Cardiff, South Wales, kindly calls our attention to an error in Voice of Warning, page 14, where it reads, 1 Kings 10: 34. We are happy to say, that error with some others are corrected in the present edition. It is next to impossible to make printed copy perfect. The revised edition just received, has a chapter of twenty-one pages added by W. W. Blair on “Joseph Smith, a prophet of God.” Bro. Cope says the work of the Lord there is progressing favorably, though slow; but that indications are favorable that a good work will be done there.

Bro. J. S. Roth, under date of December 12th, writes from Des Moines. He is actively at his mission work, baptized a very promising man of late, and quite a number more were near the kingdom, and he feels greatly encouraged.

Bro. Geo. S. Lincoln says in his letter to us of December 4th, that their branch, San Francisco, California, is in good condition, and that we may expect to hear good reports from it. Elder John Parson, once with the Utah Mormons, and after that with Joseph Morris, has been preaching for them with much acceptance, and it is hoped he will give his entire attention to the ministry and prove a great helper in the church.

Bro. B. B. Mosher writes from Cattaraugus, New York, and says that about a year and a half ago he was led to unite with the church, and was baptized by Bro. H. S. Holt. He has been persecuted some, but testifies that the Lord had healed some of his family by the prayers of the Elders. On invitation of relatives he had preached there, but his doctrine did not suit some, yet they thought he could do good if he belonged to some church which was respected. Brother Mosher says he fought under his country's flag, had laid in Libby Prison, and thinks he is entitled to worship God as he chooses, if he does not harm others. He says he has been at heart a Latter Day Saint ever since he first read the book of Doctrine and Covenants, and that he has evidence of its truth.

Bro. Cornish was making quite a stir at Bay Port, Michigan, up to December 10th; had opened some new places during the past two months. He says, “three were baptized in Caseville yesterday (the 9th), and there is quite a stir in Huron county.”

Bro. Peter I. Brown writing from Waterloo, Nebraska, the 8th inst., says that Elder Nelson Brown, president of that district, is doing well, the work in the district is looking up, and a good number have lately come into the church. Bro. Peter has been preaching at a place called The Island, and until the weather turned bad, had full congregations.

Every little while we see the statement made in various newspapers antagonistic to the temperance reform movement that “prohibition does not prohibit,” even in Maine, for that statistics show that the enormous sum of $1,000,000 is expended in the state annually for liquor under prohibition laws. But this statement is at once seen to be misleading, when it is stated that the sum spent for liquors in Maine prior to the enactment of the law prohibiting its sale was $11,000,000, and this has been reduced to $1,000,000—what is the reason that prohibition does not prohibit in this case. Let any man stop the leak in his fortune box from eleven dollars to one dollar, and it would be hard to make him believe that there was nothing prohibitive in the means by which the stop was effected. Again, the decrease in crime in Rhode Island since the enactment of prohibitory laws in that state has been very marked; the arrests for the month of July were less than one half what they were in the same month for many years—prohibition does prohibit crime in Rhode Island.

In twelfth line from the bottom of the last column, page 780 of the HERALD, read “1841” instead of “1844.”

BELOW we give a clipping from the Youth's Companion, which will be of interest to our readers. And in this connection we may relate what was told us by eyewitnesses relative to Joseph Smith's examination on a writ of Habeas Corpus at Monmouth, Illinois, in July, 1843. Joseph had been arrested at Palestine, Lee county, Illinois, by Sheriff Wilson, of Hancock county, and at the instigation of J. H. Reynolds, of Jackson county, Missouri, (who died there not long since, a miserable, degraded, despised whisky sot). These men, Wilson and Reynolds, attempted to run Joseph out of the county, (and probably out of the state), without giving him an opportunity to have the protection of the law. But in this they were foiled; for when they reached Dixon, the county seat, and placed Joseph in close confinement and seclusion, Col. John Dixon, the venerable pioneer of the town, hearing of their base treatment of their prisoner demanded and obtained an interview with Joseph, procured him an attorney—Col. E. D. Southwick,—through whom he secured a writ of Habeas Corpus; and as Judge Caton's court at Ottawa had adjourned, that of Judge Douglas was found to be in session at Monmouth, and Joseph was taken thither and tried and honorably discharged. At this trial Hon. O. H. Browning, afterward secretary of the Interior under President Lincoln, made a most notable speech in behalf of Joseph, during which Judge Douglas and the entire audience were deeply moved in favor of the prisoner, the Judge and many others weeping freely, though at the opening of the court the prejudices of the people were strong and bitter against him. Judge Douglas was ever after a warm friend of Joseph, who about this time named him “The little giant.”

“TAKING THE RESPONSIBILITY.”

“He who is what Homer calls a ‘master of men,’ has ‘the will to do, the soul to dare.’ His mastership shows itself in an emergency by immediate action. In a crisis, he takes the responsibility and turns the scale. A scene in the judicial career of the late Stephen A. Douglas illustrates this sort of mastership. When he was but twenty-eight years of age, he was elected one of the judges of the Supreme Court of Illinois. The circuit to which he was assigned included the Mormon settlements, and the constant conflict between the ‘Saints’ and the ‘Gentiles’ often made his court house a battle-field.

“It happened that the Mormon leader, Joseph Smith, was put on trial for some criminal offence before Judge Douglas. The people flocked to the court house, anxious to see Smith convicted and punished, because they thought him responsible for all the crimes charged against the Mormons. When it was whispered that the evidence would not secure a conviction, it was proposed that the citizens should enter the court house, seize Smith, and hang him. A gallows was hastily built in the court house yard, and a boisterous mob rushed into the court-room where the prisoner was about to be tried.

“‘Sheriff,’ called out Judge Douglas, as the mob crowded toward the place where Smith sat, ‘clear the room! The proceedings of the court are interrupted.’

“‘Gentlemen, you must keep order! You had better retire,’ said the sheriff, a small, weak man, trying to carry out the court's order.

“‘Judge,’ said he, as the mob, instead of retiring, kept crowding toward the prisoner, ‘they won't go out, and I can't make them.’

“Several of the ringleaders, stimulated by the sheriff's confession, jumped over the bar and started to seize Smith. They were arrested by Judge Douglas rising and calling out to a large Kentuckian, who stood six feet and a half.—

“‘I appoint you sheriff of this court. Select as many deputies as you require. Clear the court house. The law demands it, and I, as the judge of this court, command you to enforce the law and preserve the peace.’

“The suddenly-appointed sheriff obeyed the judge's orders. Hastily calling upon half a dozen men to serve as deputies, he knocked down three ringleaders; his deputies pitched six more out of the windows, and in a few minutes the court room was cleared of the mob, who, seeing the fate of their leaders, scampered out of the door.

“Judge Douglas' prompt action prevented a murder and secured a fair trial to the prisoner. But he had assumed an authority which did not belong to him. As the duly appointed sheriff was present, he had no legal right to appoint any one to act as sheriff.

"He knew that before he spoke, but a moment's delay would have sealed Smith's fate. He took the responsibility, and met the emergency by the immediate action which prevented a murder."

INTELLIGENT people everywhere, those who are studying Mormonism from the genuine, standard works of the church, are finding much in them to heartily approve and commend, and much in the Saints to admire. Whenever and wherever the Saints live up to Mormonism as taught in their sacred books—the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Nauvoo edition of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants—they will compel the good opinion of honest, sensible people in their favor, for those books teach the very purest and most exalted principles in respect to civil government, loyalty, marriage, hygiene, morals and religion. All the error and darkness and reproach and stumbling which the Saints have suffered, has been because they have not carefully heeded the teachings of these standards.

Here is a clipping which serves to illustrate what we have said:

"THE MORMONS ON FOOD AND DRINK.

"Rev. James K. Applebee preached to the 28th Congregational Society, of Boston, recently upon the Mormons. In the course of his sermon he remarked: 'In his Word of Wisdom Joseph Smith teaches that it is not good to drink wine or strong drinks, excepting in the sacrament of the Lord's supper, and then it should be home-made grape wine; that it is not good to drink hot drinks, or chew or smoke tobacco; that strong drinks are for the washing of the body, and that tobacco is an herb for bruises and sick cattle; that herbs and fruits are for the food of man; that grain is for the food of man, and beasts and fowls; and that flesh is not to be eaten by man excepting in times of winter, cold and famine.' It is not pretended by the Mormon that this Word of Wisdom is to be regarded as a divine commandment, but simply as a revelation showing forth the will of God, and suited to the conditions of all saints young or old, male or female, without distinction. Anyhow it has had its effect on the Mormon people, so that, next to being the thriftiest, they are the soberest people on this continent."

WAR IMMINENT.

THE following judicious remarks in respect to impending wars in the east are from the Sandwich (Illinois) Gazette:

"War has become a science and a terribly expensive one. The Great Powers of the world are not inclined to rush into it without long and careful preparation. In Europe immense standing armies are maintained and all material of war kept up to the highest standard at vast expense, and each nation is watching its neighbors with jealous eye; but there is always much hesitancy and a long trial of diplomacy before the challenge is given. Just now a critical point has been reached. France and Germany are watching each other. Russia and England are holding themselves in readiness for a trial of strength that must soon come. Austria regards Russia's attitude towards Bulgaria with apprehension. All these nations are increasing their armaments. Turkey and Egypt are prizes over which the battle will one day be fought. It is thought by the most careful observers that the conflict can not long be delayed, and that it will involve all Europe when it comes. The period when the nations will beat their swords into ploughshares has not yet come. The approach to it will be through many gory battle fields."

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY SISTER "FRANCES."

"O, Golden Age, whose light is of the dawn,
And not of sunset, forward, not behind,
Flood the new heavens and earth, and with thee bring
All the old virtues, whatsoever things
Are pure and honest and of good repute.
But add thereto whatever bard has sung
Or seer has told of when in trance or dream
They saw the Happy Isles of prophecy."

CHRIST'S COMING.

ON Sabbath last we were permitted to listen to an eloquent sermon from Bro. W. W. Blair on the "Second Coming of Christ." It was a sermon intended not only to make every Saint thankful for the gospel light and truth, but to cause many who heard it to pause and ask the question of their soul, "Shall I be ready to meet Him? Is my lamp trimmed and burning, and have I oil in my vessel with my lamp?" We have sometimes wondered if the hearts of the disciples when they conversed with the Savior upon the way to Emmaus, ever "burned within them" more than burns the heart of many a grateful one in these latter days, when they think of the marvelous light which has followed in the train of the gospel restored by that other angel flying in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach!

Yes; our hearts burn with gratitude; but sisters, we must have the faith which leads to a pure life, to constant works of self-sacrificing love for the sake of that crucified one who is so soon to return again to earth, and re-visit the scenes of his conflict and agony, his toils and privation,—his triumph over death and the grave.

We copy below an exquisite poem, and wish every one who reads it would commit it to memory. It is many times a help in times of trial and temptation to have the memory stored with gems of thought, upon which we can draw as oil to throw upon the seething billows of grief or passion.

COMING.

It may be in the evening,
When the work of the day is done,
And you have time to sit in the twilight
And watch the sinking sun,
While the long, bright day dies slowly
Over the sea,
And the hours grow quiet and holy
With thoughts of me,
While you hear the village children
Passing along the street,
Among those thronging footsteps
May come the sound of my feet:
Therefore I tell you watch!
By the light of the evening star,
When the room is growing dusky
As the clouds afar;
Let the door be on the latch
In your home,
For it may be in the gloaming
I will come.

"It may be when the midnight
Is heavy upon the land,
And the black waves lying dumbly
Along the sand;
When the moonless night draws close,
When the fires burn low and red,
And the watch ticking loudly
Beside the bed;
Though you sleep tired out, on your couch,
Still your heart must wake and watch
In the dark room,
For it may be that at midnight
I will come.

"It may be at the cock-crow,
When the night is dying slowly
In the sky,
And the sea looks calm and holy
Waiting for the dawn of the golden sun
Which draweth nigh;
When the mists are on the vallies shading
The river's chill,
And my morning star is fading, fading
Over the hill:

Behold I say unto you watch!
Let the door be on the latch
In your home.
In the chill before the dawning
Between the night and the morning,
I may come.

"It may be in the morning,
When the sun is bright and strong,
And the dew is glittering sharply
Over the little lawn:
When the waves are laughing loudly
Along the shore,
And the little birds are singing sweetly
About the door.
With the long day's work before you
You rise up with the sun
And the neighbors come in to talk a little
Of all that must be done;
But remember that I may be the next
To come in at the door,
To call you from your busy work
For evermore:
As you work, your heart must watch,
For the door is on the latch
In your room,
And it may be in the morning
I will come."

So He passed down my cottage garden,
By the path that leads to the sea,
Till He came to the turn of the little road,
Where the birch and laburnum tree
Lean over and arch the way:
There I saw Him a moment stay,
And turn once more to me,
As I wept at the cottage door,
And lift up His hands in blessing,
Then I saw His face no more.
And I stood still in the doorway
Leaning against the wall,
Not heeding the fair white roses,
Tho' I crushed them and let them fall.
Only looking down the pathway,
And looking towards the sea,
And wondering, and wondering
When he would come back for me
Till I was aware of an angel
Who was going swiftly by,
With the gladness of one who goeth
In the light of God most high.
He passed the end of the cottage
Towards the garden gate—
(I suppose he was come down
At the setting of the sun,
To comfort some one in the village
Whose dwelling was desolate).
And he passed before the door
Beside my place,
And the likeness of a smile
Was on his face!
"Weep not," he said, "for unto you is given
To watch for the coming of his feet
Who is the glory of our blessed heaven;
The work and watching will be very sweet
Even in an earthly home,
And in such an hour as ye think not
He will come."

So I am watching quietly
Every day:
Whenever the sun shines brightly
I rise and say,—
Sunlight is the shining of his face!
And look unto the gates of his high place
Beyond the sea,
For I know he is coming shortly
To summons me.
And when a shadow falls across the window
Of my room,
Where I am working my appointed task
I lift my head to watch the door and ask
If he is come.
And the angel answers sweetly
In my home,—
"Only a few more shadows
And he will come."

By a brief letter from sister S. A. Rose, Quarry, Ohio, we learn that erysipelas having set in, in her wounded limb, she has been suffering intensely and is doubtful in regard to the ultimate result. She misses the kind letters, which, as she is not able to answer, have ceased to come. She has prayed earnestly that God would send one of his servants there that she might be administered to, but they come not. She expresses perfect trust in God and resignation to his will. Who of the dear family of Saints will spare from the happy Christmas time an hour, to send a few comforting words to her?

ORDER.

THIS is a subject worthy of the deepest consideration. No society, religious or political, can progress and arrive to any degree of perfection without it. In the affairs of life of all ranks and circles is seen its actual necessity, for the promotion of peace and happiness. What nation or people can be controlled and governed without this ruling principle? Even on the battle field where the enemy is brought face to face the result of its power is felt. See the vast amount of machinery that is filling all parts of the earth in this enlightened age,—yes, this age of wonder and amazement. Can one single piece turn on the wheels of action or move in the sphere for which it was designed without order? The poet has said "Order was heaven's first law." Let this be as it may, we are well assured that it is a striking principle in all the works of God. The sun, moon and stars, wonderfully disclose the grandeur and beauty of the same. The earth and the minerals thereof, the seas and forests, the fowls of the air, with all the animal and vegetable kingdom exclaim aloud, 'Surely our Creator, by whose matchless power we were formed, could fathom the depths of the universe, and bring all things to work systematically and in order. Pause for one moment and think of self, and will we not say with David, "Lord I will praise thee for I am fearfully and wonderfully made; marvelous are thy works, and that my soul knoweth right well?" Many years ago when my spirit was permitted to see and enter another world, the first thing that attracted my attention was the beautiful order. It was lovely indeed and neat. The peace and joy that filled my bosom, the things which I saw and heard, can not be described, as it was only understood and known at the time when in the spirit or trance; but the perfect happiness I can never, no never forget, and have longed in spirit many times to be there. Sisters, do not grieve for the loved ones that have gone. Those who have fought the good fight and kept the faith; they are free, free from the enemy of all righteousness. When I found myself returning to earth, great was my lamentation, desiring nothing but to have stayed there; but we must at all times be resigned to the will of the Father. My heart burns within me when I contemplate the wisdom and goodness of God towards his creatures, and how seemingly ungrateful to what we ought to be when we know that through him we live and move and have our being. Our earthly home should bear the marks of the heavenly, and order should be inscribed upon its tablets and cherished in every breast. It relieves the mind of many a burden, and saves the feet very many weary steps; in fact how little can be accomplished without it, and how much with it. We are told "the house of God is a house of order." So it is. Can not this be applied to the home; the family of God is a family of order. Of course circumstances differ materially, which makes a wide difference, but in all cases, whatever may be the surroundings, each one should strive to cultivate that heaven-born necessity in this probationary state. Boys raised in a well regulated household generally make the best business managers, the best husbands, and girls the best housekeepers and wives, and so, being implanted in the minds of their posterity, humanity will become nobler, the mind better prepared to behold the beauties of the principles of salvation which were ordered in the high counsels of heaven. Yes, every link is set in order or the chain could not be perfect, and by its power, through obedience mankind can receive an inheritance in the kingdom of heaven.

I will close with the saying of Paul, "Let all things be done decently, and in order."

C. ACKERLY.

Dear Sister Frances:—We are of the isolated ones, (my little daughter and I), there being no branch nearer than eight miles, and we have no way of going to church except when some good brother comes and takes us. It is seldom that we hear the gospel in its fulness, yet we try to think it is for the best that we are so situated. God perhaps has willed it to be so, that we may learn to lean more on our heavenly Father for strength and comfort in the hour of our trials; yet there are times when we are lonely for the companionship of the Saints, when we long to be with those of the same faith, that we may talk of the doctrine and of the work, and exchange ideas and views, and by so doing gain strength to go on fighting the good fight of faith. We are both but babes in Christ as yet. My husband is not in the church, but does not hinder us from enjoying every privilege of mingling with the Saints whenever opportunity affords. We get the Herald and Hope, and they are a source of great comfort to us. We always look forward to the day that brings them, and every thing else is laid aside until they are read; and oh, what comfort and strength we feel after reading the many letters therein, especially when some one we are personally acquainted with writes. I am so young in the faith myself, (not having been in the church a year yet) that I do not feel as though I could offer my advice to the sisters, but instead need advice from them, and it does encourage me when I read the letters from the sisters who have passed through the trials that the church had to endure in the early days. When I think of what they went through in the way of persecution; and with it all, remained faithful to the cause, my trials while hard to bear seem very light in comparison. Yet what a great blessing, and what a help it is, to be able to attend church every Sunday, and to attend prayer and testimony meeting every week? When Thursday night comes I think the Saints are meeting now for prayer and testimony meeting, and I wonder if any will let some trivial thing keep them away. I hope not; and I wonder if those who meet will remember and offer a prayer for the ones far away. Surely they will.

I remain a sister in the faith.

NORTH PLATTE, Neb., Nov. 24th.

Dear Sr. Frances: In answer to your last appeal to the mothers, I enclose my offering. I am twenty-seven years old to-day, and I am thankful for the privilege of helping in so glorious an undertaking. If the sisters will all respond, we can support more than two missionaries in the field. When they once find out what they can do, they will have more courage to work and sacrifice. As I look into the future, I see with my mind's eye a trained band of workers for Christ.

Every principle of the gospel seems nearer, clearer and grander, as the days go by. I wish that every one could see the whole plan from beginning to end as clearly as I do. One said to me last night: "You don't know what you will believe; in fifty years from now you may be a Spiritualist." I said I shall believe as I do now, only I shall know more. Since God has set his seal to my covenant, I feel as secure as the house built on the rock; and having had the privilege of examining many other theories, and having felt the temptations and trials of life, I have faith that God will help me to abide in the truth, and walk in the light.

I must tell you of a dream I had in regard to taking the Herald, and Inspired Translation. We were poor, and had just moved and got to house-keeping, and I had just money enough to pay for the Herald and Bible. My husband told me I had better keep my money to buy meat with, or we would have to go without. I had written my letter, and I went to the post office, but the two ideas came up for consideration, and I turned away and waited till the next day. That night I dreamed some one held a pearl for me to look at, and oh it was so beautiful! Then it was dropped on the ground at my feet and lost, and I got down on my hands and knees and hunted for it; and while I was hunting I came to the spot where the Book of Mormon was deposited in the stone box. I held my hands on the box and looked, and in front of me was a terrible gulf. In the morning the interpretation impressed upon my mind was, send for the Herald and Bible. I went right away and sent for them, and they have proved a pearl indeed. I have been a wanderer and alone, but I do not intend ever to be without my counselor—the Herald.

Your sister in Christ,

MRS. L. M. RICHARDS.

THE above letter leaves untold a history which will interest each one who reads it, and does not refer to an example which is well worthy of imitation. Last August a letter came to the Herald Office from Sr. Richards, saying to Bro. Joseph, that she had been instructed of the Lord to work to enlighten the minds of the people among whom she was living. By the distribution of tracts and Voice of Warning (furnished by Bro. Peters), together with the use of the Bible, Book of Mormon, and other church publications, she had been the instrument in the hands of God of enlightening some, who were rejoicing in the truth, and many were wanting to hear an elder preach. She wrote, asking if possible, that an elder might be sent to gather in the sheaves. Accordingly Bro. R. C. Elvin was sent, and four were baptized. He will return at an early day, as more are now waiting to be buried with Christ in baptism.

How blessed such an experience must be. What a joy forever to know that we have been instrumental in saving one soul. It is a joy which we can only imagine, for in all our life experience we can not say, that we know ourselves to have been so favored of God. But shall we therefore cease to labor, or labor with less zeal? Nay, verily. For one we feel to say with Job, "Even though he slay me, yet will I trust in him." We would rather work for God while we live, even if we knew that we could not dwell with him hereafter, than to serve the devil, while we had it in our power to serve the living God. Others have labored, and let us enter into their labors with patience and zeal, trusting God with confidence so implicit that we ask not of the future, but feel that each day spent in his service brings its own rich reward.

HENDERSON, December 4th.

Dear Sister Frances:—If in my weak way I can encourage some other timid sister to try, I shall feel well repaid for any effort I may make to write. The evil one often whispers "better not, what can you write that will be edifying or soul-cheering? Better leave it for some one wiser or better than yourself." But is that letting our light shine? Is that imitating our blessed Lord, who, we read, went about doing good; and who, remembering the refuge of the foxes in their close coverts, and the hidden nests of the birds—those winged pilgrims of the air—says, in words that touch the heart with anguish, "But the Son of Man hath not where to lay his head." From the hour of his birth, when there was no room for him in the inn at Bethlehem, to the hour of his burial, when his body reposed in another man's sepulchre, there was no abiding place for him on the earth. O! when we think of his goodness, his humility, his meekness; him who was King of kings and Lord of all, is there anything we can not bear or endure for his sake? Let us do what we can, be it ever so small, and we shall surely receive our reward. Remember not many wise, not many mighty, not many noble, are called.

NELLIE WILLIAMS.

"When the King comes, with gracious voice and tender,
To call his own,
That they a holy service, glad, may render
To him alone.
Not many of earth's great or wise are taken,
These stand afar;
The lowly, meek, despised of men, forsaken,
His chosen are.

"They in whose willing souls is sweetly sounding
The still, small voice;
These loyal ones, with love and works abounding;
Hear and rejoice.
With earnest zeal, with reverence, meek and lowly,
With faith and prayer,
They speed his coming, and their efforts holy
His way prepare.

"What though they toil to-day in pain and sorrow,
With bitter tears!
Their sure reward is life and joy to-morrow,
Past doubt and fears!
God giveth to his chosen, grace and power;
Their work of love
Is but to trust and labor, hour by hour,
Till called above."

LITTLE SIOUX, November 23d.

Dear Sister Frances:—Reading Aunt Patience's letter in the "Home Column" has cheered my heart, and renewed my courage. I would that as mothers in Zion we might fully appreciate the picture the Holy Spirit has enabled her to paint with her pen, and practice the lesson in every day life. It is comforting to read such letters; we look anxiously to receive them, but it is quite a different thing to always live in harmony with their spiritual teaching. Not that our desires are not to do the will of God, but we find ourselves weak, erring, human, in a world full of sin and darkness. And when we look around us and see the condition of the mass of the human family, and think what probably our condition would have been without the gospel, we feel to exclaim, Precious boon, Savior of mankind, Oh, let me enjoy its spirit. I am one of those unfortunate creatures who might do much if their patience were only sufficient. I see more and more the need of self-government, in order to be able to govern my little ones. I love the effects of the gospel upon the repentant soul; and we have this to encourage us—if we find we have erred, we can ask forgiveness and try to do better. If when the Spirit admonishes, I heed and reform, I shall grow in grace and in a knowledge of the truth; but if I am admonished and heed not, God can not help but be displeased any more than we could if any one of our dear children would indifferently treat our counsel. Now while God has so abundantly blessed us in this temporal life, let us not forget the important part of surrounding our children with pleasant spirits, cheerful countenances, and useful conversation. Innocent little children love the pure and the good. If this is not the case it is because older ones have corrupted their pure minds. Remember the saying of our blessed Savior, "Suffer little children to come unto me and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven." I have seen innocent little children, the unfortunate victims of parents' pain and troubles; which, to my mind, is far more serious than kicking poor puss, (though I sympathize with the poor cat. Yes, indeed, we should not let the perplexing scenes of life sour us. If we retain the spirit of the gospel they can not; else our blessed Savior could not have said when on the cross, "Father forgive them they know not what they do." He was calm, retained the Spirit of the gospel at all times and under all the trying ordeals he was caused to pass through. His life was in perfect harmony with his teachings. This is the kind of religion that will lead our children to serve the Lord. "Pray for me, dear sisters, that my life, and my profession may be consistent.

CAMERON, Mo., Dec. 9th.

Bro. Joseph:—The work is very prosperous here at present. I have more calls than I can possibly fill. I have been preaching in our church, three and a half miles north of Cameron, and have had the privilege of baptizing twelve precious souls into the kingdom, and have the name of one more for baptism. There are others who are near the kingdom. The prospect for ingathering here never was so good as at present. The Saints are all alive to, and all seem to be doing what they can to advance the cause. The best of all is, that the Spirit of God is moving upon the people, both in and out of the church. Before we began this protracted meeting, the Lord spoke to us by the spirit of prophecy and told us that there should be an ingathering of precious souls, and that some would come in that we did not expect. This has been fulfilled; I never had better liberty in presenting the word than I have had the past year. I have never felt more encouraged in the work than now, and I feel like entering into the winter's work with renewed energy.

Yours in hope of triumph,

W. T. BOZARTH.

FAIRFIELD, Nebraska, Dec 7th,

Dear Herald:—Immediately after writing my last, I went to Plattsmouth, and spoke four times to attentive but not large congregations. Good could be accomplished there with a little more push upon the part of those residing there, and more regular preaching. We can not expect the cause to thrive and prosper unless we devote both energy and patience. Went home for a few days, fixed up a little for the winter season, and thence west to the Palmyra branch. Spoke there six times to crowded houses every time, and was snowed in for a week, while you were having rain. The storm was very severe for the first of the season. The snow drifted badly, and the farmers throughout the state lost considerable stock. I spent a few days at Wilber, and although almost sick with cold contracted through exposure, I labored as best I could to speak words of comfort, cheer, and instruction to both Saint and friend, and those who should know said I gave words of gospel light not before told to that people. Truly, God is good to all those who seek to keep his word of promise; and just as fast as we make progress in this glorious work will he lead us by the light of his Holy Spirit. There is no stand still, and those who are faithful will surely make steady advancement in divine knowledge. I came here the 29th ult; Bro. John E. Hopper having obtained the use of the Baptist church, I began meetings the next evening, and the good Lord willing shall continue for the next two weeks. All things considered, we have reason to be thankful for the attendance and attention. The result is hid in the future. This is a very religious town, there being five churches, and I am told there is not a saloon in this county. Bro. Hopper has lived here a number of years, is a man of good repute among the people, and during the late State election, he received 8193 votes for state auditor. He is quite anxious for the establishing of a branch of the church in this part of the vineyard. There are many scattered members of the church throughout this state, and for one I am very desirous to see one and all enrolled in some branch and have the opportunity to be blest with meetings.

In gospel bonds,

ROBT. M. ELVIN.

GALENA, Indiana, Dec. 6th.

Brethren Joseph and Blair:—From the very introduction of this latter day work here, many bitter opponents have risen up to hinder the spread of truth, who resorted to every thing ignoble save violence to crush out the truth, but they have not succeeded. What are the facts in relation to those who have opposed this "marvelous work?" Where are those towering intellectual champions who fought this work? Are they still opposing? Where are Revs. J. M. Henry, Goss, Brown, Tilford, Scott, and others. It is a well known fact that these men all fought against the work, and they are not. "O," says one, "do you think it dangerous to oppose this work?" Yes; inasmuch as it is the work of God those that fight against it are fighting against God. But doubtless God is merciful to those who don't know any better. I may be censured for what I now write; but I have not affirmed or denied that God made a specialty in punishing those who have opposed the work here; but I do say it is marvelous. Think of it, you that anticipate having a good time in crushing out the work in Southern Indiana. May you not be disappointed as others have been? Be assured that God will meet heaven and earth and the combined forces of the power of darkness in the future as he has in the past, in defense of this "marvelous work and a wonder." Don't think you will have a complete walk-over, as there are none of the twelve or seventies here. God will take care of his work. "You shall find favor." This, as we understand it, is prophetic, and evidently designed to encourage the Saints in their trials, though at the first thought it would almost seem unreasonable while the matter of difference was so great. Nevertheless, it is a fact. And we would risk the prophetic mission of Joseph on the truthfulness of this statement. We have demonstrated its truthfulness by our own experience. When I came to this place, (Galena), I found prejudice ruling to such an extent that the M. E. Church was advised by the pastor in charge to call a meeting and pass such resolutions as would hinder me from their social meetings, for he said my object was to proselyte them. I was informed that they had held two sessions, and they "Resolved, That M. R. Scott, known as the Mormon Elder, is requested not to attend our cottage prayer meetings so long as he adheres to that pernicious doctrine of Mormonism. H. E. Emerson, Secretary." Permit me to say that those who were so opposed to me on account of the doctrine, have worked themselves out of the M. E. Church at this place, and the present minister in charge has invited me to attend their meetings; and last evening I was permitted and had the privilege of speaking in their church at this place. "Find favor!" O, how true! I am so thankful that this latter day work has incorporated within it the principles by which its own truthfulness may be demonstrated. Yes; thank God for the expression, "He that believeth on me shall know of the doctrine." And may I not say that I know this is the work of God, and not be considered as boasting? O, I feel as if I could not be thankful enough to our heavenly Father for this glorious latter day work. And when I hear of the onward march of the truth, and its success, I feel as Bro. Kelley remarked, that "good news comes from all parts," (except Southern Indiana). I am sorry that the work here is in such a condition. I am not at all discouraged if we don't set the world on fire. I think the work is moving along slowly, but surely, when we take into consideration the fierce winds that have passed over Southern Indiana. A wise general may be known in time of war, by saving his army from destruction as well as successfully meeting the enemy. I am aware that I was appointed to labor in Southern Indiana, but not being sustained by the church I have not done much. As Bro. C. Scott said in his letter to the Herald, there had been a mistake made in the district financially. When this is put in proper order, then we may expect prosperity here as elsewhere. May God speed the time when Southern Indiana may be equal in ministerial labor with the rest of her sister districts.

Your unworthy brother,

M. R. SCOTT.

CLINTON, Mo., Dec. 13th.

Bro. Dancer:—I have not the success in selling books and getting subscriptions for Heralds, etc., as I had in Iowa. The effects of slavery and the baneful influence of whisky and * * * is more than a live * * * can surmount at one jump. However, I am getting adapted to my surroundings, and have never seen as great advance in the right direction as has been made on the minds of the people since I have been here. Ignorance and superstition are fleeing before a well directed gospel effort, like a morning fog before a rising sun. I feel encouraged every way; never had the liberty in presenting as I have had since here. God is moving the people on every side, and I can hardly rest content out of the ministry for even one day. Bro. John McKenzie came down, and we opened in three new places early in November, holding for three weeks. Houses were crowded to their utmost. I saw it was impossible to close the meetings with justice to the work, so I wrote for help and Brn. A. White and Emsley Curtis came and continued the work for two weeks, while I went to Holden to hold a series of meetings. The brethren have baptized eight, and write me that many more are convinced. They also state they never had such liberty in presenting the word. These brethren are alive in the interest of the work. Other brethren are doing good service at some other points.

Bro. R. Etzenhouser and I commence a protracted effort in Clinton on the 15th inst., to continue up to the 26th. On the 27th inst. I will commence a six days' discussion at Schell City with Elder W. W. Blalock. Schell City is a railroad town of some 1,500 inhabitants, and thoroughly "discipled." We can look for nothing else but a lively time, as there are a score of "big guns" massing to "take in" the situation. We have no people there, and our cause has never been represented any where in that country.

The few Saints that are at Holden are an honor to the work. I spoke ten evenings, and a number are much interested. Went from Holden to Armstrong, Kansas, and met with the Saints and friends for one evening and tried to instruct them in the good way. They are not doing badly. I was billed for another night, and also at Kansas City for two nights, but was telegraphed from home that my child was very sick. I reached home to find my baby just alive; but through the mercies of God it lives and is getting along toward a restoration. Being called home, I missed our conference at Independence on the 11th instant.

We are becoming attached to this country, and there is no reason for any to get dissatisfied with it if the head is rightly balanced. Saints that come to this country should come to stay, first having "all things prepared before hand." Those who move to this land "in haste" and without "preparation," will soon learn that the revelations given in 1831, 1833, and 1873, are full of force; and as sure as we treat them lightly a crash and dissatisfaction will follow. In my close observations I have seen and realized that it is very damaging not to observe these commands to the very letter.

Yours in the work,

I. N. WHITE.

NORCATUR, Kan., Dec. 2d,

Dear Herald:—Bro. Madden and I came to North Western Kansas the last of September; we visited some Saints in Cheyenne county, held two meetings with good attendance. We then can back to Decatur county, and opened meetings where we have been trying to tell the gospel in its fulness. We hold our meetings in a large sod school house, the people turned out so well to hear the new doctrine, that the house will hardly hold them; I assist Bro. Madden all I can.

I remain yours in faith,

JAMES I. SPENCER.

30 Butler-st., Greenheys,

MANCHESTER, 22d Nov.

Dear Herald: Ten years have passed away since our family and others, numbering over twenty souls, were born unto the Reorganization in the city of Manchester, England, and a branch of the church organized by our mission president. We now number nearly one hundred members, and our branch is but one of several forming the Manchester district, presided over by Elder Joseph Dewsnap. We believe this increase is due to the faithful, persistent efforts of men called of God and ordained to preach the gospel; who realizing that they have been so sent, do not fear for the issue, but strive to "turn the battle to the gate," and with the late Seer say, "Courage, brethren, let us on, on to victory" though it be in death.

With our household, indeed I may say with our branch, the truth of the prophetic mission of the Martyr and his beloved son is an established fact. The Lord has confirmed His word amongst us by the signs following the believers. About thirty-six years ago my mother was baptized into Utahism, through hearing and believing the gospel. The result was that the Almighty gave her clear, distinctive evidence of her position in relation to that church, her future severance there, from, and the existence of the true one. Twenty-six years afterwards the dream was completely fulfilled when she was baptized into the Reorganization by God's servant, Elder Taylor. He was present at our District Conference, held October 9th and 10th, and appeared overcome with joy and gratitude to hear the testimonies, feel the Spirit's power, and see before him a room full of people eagerly listening to the words of life, nearly all of whom were bona fide members of the church. Our room is becoming too small, and enquirers are now constantly visiting us.

With reference to the Book of Mormon; its truthfulness to us has been confirmed by reason, light obtained in reading it, and also by dream.

Faithful labor brings its own reward. We would say to all who may peruse this letter: Let us "Remember the New Covenant, even the Book of Mormon and the former commandments which have been given us, not only to say but to do according to that which is written." Let us "seek to become workmen approved," and "if our structure is to be high, let us dig deep."

A few years ago a sister wrote the Herald stating that she wanted to serve the Lord, and the Spirit directed her to carry the message from door to door. She gave heed to the whispering, and in return was greatly blessed. Our sister's testimony was not borne in vain. A few months after, another brother and myself were constrained to set out on the Sabbath afternoon to visit from house to house inviting the inmates to attend our meetings and hear the gospel. Now there are four of us carrying the principal Church tracts out each Lord's day.

The teachings of the Herald and Hope are a source of delight to us. May the blessing of God rest on editors and contributors to their columns. We are led to say, blow favoring gales for the vessel that carries the welcome freight to our shores. It has indeed proved to be a herald to us, with its message of peace. Its teachings lead us onward and upward, and as the youngest Elder in the English Mission, I wish to profit by them, especially such as those found in our prophet's charge to young Elders at April conference.

My father is an Elder. He was formerly of the Romish faith, but was led into this church by my mother, and it is mainly owing to their Godly teachings that I now stand as a duly accredited minister of our faith.

Our beloved district president, Elder Dewsnup, is a man of sterling worth, whose whole thoughts are for Zion's weal. Time, means, and leisure, are all devoted to it, and he is ably seconded by Elders I. Baty and H. Greenwood. As a babe he has nursed me in the congregation of Saints whose praises heralded my birth. He has been by, to prompt and encourage me until now I stand proclaiming the word with him, and hope to endure so doing till the end.

We were pleased to hear the Lord was with Israel in the Camp at Garner's Grove, and trust that his guiding light may lead our hosts on towards the promised land, leaving the clouds of darkness and confusion behind, until we cross the Jordan to receive our inheritance. With "songs of everlasting joy" we shall then meet and sing praises unto the Lord for ever.

Dear Herald; it seems impossible to transmit, in any earthly tongue to paper the great and happy thoughts we are blessed with in this work of "latter days." If eye hath not seen nor ear heard, neither hath it entered into the heart of man to conceive the things that God hath prepared for those that love him," what a future there is before us. May we fortify ourselves with the Spirit against every temptation, and with word and work prepare for the coming of Jesus Christ to reign with his people.

In conclusion, "Behold, let every man learn to do his duty," and remember that:—

"Tis not by dreaming and delay,
But doing something every day,
That wins the laurel and the bay
And crowns the work of duty.
The planets as they roll on high,
The river as it rushes by,
Forever, and forever cry,
On, man, and do thy duty."

Apologizing for so lengthy an epistle, I remain a brother and laborer in the gospel,

WILLIAM R. ARMSTRONG.

HORNING'S MILLS, Ont., Nov. 19th.

Dear Herald: I am still battling for the truth, as well as my ability will permit,—would like to do much better if I could. I am not doing all the battling, as there are some in this part who assume the right to lay on hands, but in a very bad spirit. You know the devil is anti-Christ, or opposite in all things, yet keeping up a similarity; for instance faith is required of God's people, and devils believe and tremble; (and I have often seen them do so); especially when the Book of Mormon is mentioned. If evidence is wanting to prove that book true; here it is, "Woe unto him that trembleth with anger" "at the word." I can talk to men on almost all or any topic in religious controversy, and they can keep cool on most of them; but when the Book of Mormon is the topic, I have seen men's faces blanch pale as unbleached cotton, and their bodies tremble as an aspen leaf; and some of them have allowed themselves to be lashed into such fury as to foam at the mouth. Why?

It will be remembered that I mentioned lately having to meet some one in debate on the following question: "Resolved, that Jesus Christ did appear in person on the continent now called America and established his church." King James' Bible to be the only standard of evidence on either side. The outcome is that the opposing element is not going to oppose, and wishes the subject changed; consequently it has been so changed as to read: "Resolved, that the Book of Mormon is of divine origin, and is true and can be proved so by the Bible and by the internal contents of the Book of Mormon, and by American antiquities." I am to affirm; my opponent is to prove the Book of Mormon a fraud. The change of subject is at his request, and also the whole debating element, as I was forced into the matter at first by a bravado challenge on the part of several. This man is a Mr. G. Rutherford; and the other day a merchant in Shelbourn met him and me when we were making our new arrangements, and asked if we had backed out. My opponent said no; and I said, "Yes, sir, he has backed clean out on the first question and wishes the proposition changed for another," and took out the two written documents to show, when my opponent snatched one of them out of my hand in great fury. This, together with what talk followed, soon gathered a crowd; and a drunken Methodist class-leader named Best, who was then stinking with whisky, struck me several light taps on the face with his front finger, in a very defiant way and intending it as a taunting insult, which I took all right.

Finding that I can not be driven out of the field, force and slander have been tried. They got it reported that I had left and was afraid to come back; but now that I am back and intend to stay till it is over, they try bullying; but I can't be got rid of in that way either; so I will wait and hope, and watch and pray, for patience and grace and victory for the truth. There is good prospects of reaping here in the future; several are investigating by reading and coming to hear. I can't say about their praying, but hope and teach them to do so. This debate comes off on the 29th and 30th of November. I am well in health, and feel in excellent good spirits; and am preaching on every occasion, every night in the week (except Saturdays), right along. "Preach the word," is my motto; and I am making friends for the cause wherever I go. I baptized one more since writing, and on the afternoon of the same day united him to a wife in marriage.

I expect to visit each of the branches in Canada now in turn, so as to be in a position to report, or act as the case may require at the conference, &c. Your brother in bonds,

J. A. McINTOSH.

CRAWFORD, Nebraska, Dec. 6th.

Dear Herald:—I have now been connected with the Christian religion for about twelve years, nine or ten of which I have spent in the German Baptist Church; the remainder with the Reorganization of Latter Day Saints, incorrectly known as Mormons.

While connected with the former church, I tried hard to live a life devoted to Christ. I read and meditated and prayed much. I respected the church, but never felt that all was right. I saw and felt the deficiency in the church as regards spiritual gifts of the Holy Ghost, and my longings became deep and pungent. I was determined to accept the truth wherever found, regardless of church, parents, or property. I am still in the same mind. While exercising the function of preaching, I now and then heard of the Mormons, but nothing good. In due time I was requested to preach in their church at DeLoit, Iowa, at which time I was treated very kindly, they even bearing my expenses home on the cars. I concluded that they had at least done more than any other denomination I had visited, outside of my own, and should have credit for it, whatever other bad principles they might have. We soon fell into conversation, when I was asked whether the signs promised in Mark, chapter 16, followed us. I humbly confessed they did not. I was then informed that God does now bless them with these things. My heart was made glad, but I was a little fearful of latter day delusions and concluded to be careful. I was told of the marvelous coming forth of the Book of Mormon and some of the prophecies relating to it. I became greatly interested, fearing that I and my church might be wrong, and the despised and persecuted Saints right. I was then informed also that if I with honest intention asked concerning the Book of Mormon, that God would reveal to me the truthfulness of the same. Accordingly after much thought about our church, a divinely called ministry, and religion in general, including the Catholics, I one evening retired to the granary, closed the doors, kneeled down and asked these words:—"Lord Jesus, is the Book of Mormon true? Are the Latter Day Saints your Church, or are they trying to deceive me?" I expected an answer, I don't deny, but how I did not know. My soul was in trouble, when presently there seemed to arise from the floor a frame about 6 x 12 inches, like a picture frame, inside of which was Jesus Christ crucified, being in great agony. I looked upon it for a while, when another frame arose, the same size, containing Christ glorified, or risen from the dead. It was pleasant to behold. The color of the vision, if I may so call it, seemed more like the daylight than anything I know.

Since then I examined the Book, and if there is one doctrine more prominent than another, it is this, that Christ would be and was crucified and glorified. In this it agrees with Paul:—"I am determined to know nothing among you but Christ and him crucified." I also know that it condemns having many wives as were had by David and Solomon of old, Brigham Young, and plenty of others of late date. But, kind reader, this is by no means all it condemns; and some of my readers will do well to let it alone if they don't want to be chastened and corrected of error, pride, theft, adultery, covetousness, hireling prests, harlots and harlot churches, all are named. Deeds of goodness and holiness are encouraged.

But what about the church. I have heard the gift of prophecy; some fell on my own head, and to my understanding has had a fulfillment. I have heard the gift of tongues and the interpretation, and believe it to be a supernatural power, and not "bogus," as claimed by some; have seen children blessed, the sick anointed with oil and hands laid on; have helped to lay on hands when the sufferer claimed to be relieved, and went to meeting and about their labor. Have known some that testify to receiving their sight, others having evil spirits cast out, and numerous other miracles being performed, visions and revelations being received by the church, all through the name and merits of Jesus Christ our Lord and Redeemer, and not Joseph Smith or any other man or men. That the Reorganized Church is free and separate from the Utah Church and polygamy, I do verily believe; and if this is not God's Church, I am at a loss to know where it is. I have faithfully and prayerfully investigated the history and doctrine of the church since its origin, and I confess I feel unable to combat against it. The Lord said to Paul:—"It is hard to kick against the pricks." But that I feel entirely satisfied, I do not say, but I am not willing to exchange for anything I know of now. It is truly a great and a marvelous work. It seems to reach out in all directions—past, present, and future.

I have read that noted debate between Braden and Kelley, and I must say, if Braden would be victorious hereafter in debate, he had better teach and practice more of the everlasting gospel; likewise the Rev. William Sheldon to whom Bro. Blair replied in "Joseph the Seer." And in short, it might be well enough for all uninspired and unauthorized men to let it alone, as it brings their "craft" in danger. The pit they dig for others, they themselves fall into.

My heart is still open for every truth. I am willing to exchange views with any church or people under heaven, and would be pleased for any new gospel light. Great; oh, very great is the day in which we live! Let men repent while it is called to-day, and lay aside all vain traditions received from the fathers, for it is God's word that will judge all in the last day. To the Saints I would say, Arouse from your slumber; and walk as children of the light. "Let us shake off the coals from our garments," thrust in our sickles while the harvest lasts, and let not the beautiful golden grain go to waste, may the Lord send many "fishers and hunters," until the honest in heart are all gathered out. Oh, the many poor, aching, longing hearts that are waiting for the entire gospel. "For Zion's sake I will not rest; I will not hold my peace until Jerusalem be blest and Judah dwell at ease, until her righteousness return as day break after night." D. W. SHIRK.

WOONSOCKET, Dak., Nov. 6th.

Bro. Joseph Smith:—I have been a life-long Methodist, but have long been dissatisfied with the man-made rules of that church. I have preached twelve years in the M. E. Church with much of the power of God, but seeing the formality of the preachers and members, and hearing them deny the power, I withdrew and came out from them. I made the acquaintance of Stephen Morse, an elder in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. He gave me the Book of Mormon, together with the Voice of Warning and some other books. I read with care until I was convinced of the truth of the gospel, and then I accepted it and was baptized and ordained an elder, on the 10th day of October, 1886. I preached the same Sabbath, and have preached every Sabbath since. Although there are none of the church here but he and I, we are contending for the faith once delivered to the Saints. I received power when hands were laid on me, and I can truly say, God is with me of a truth. I have never had such power before in my life. We have quite a number to hear us preach every Sabbath. God has wonderfully led me through many trials in order to show me the corruptness of the churches, "having a form of godliness and denying the power." Oh, that God may sanctify my heart and tongue to preach the unsearchable riches of Christ!

Your brother in Christ,

L. F. DANIEL.

HINTON, W. Va., Nov. 25th.

Dear Herald:—I left my home in Jackson county, Ohio, November 3d, 1886, arrived in Wayne county, West Virginia on the 4th, and on the 7th preached to a fair congregation at Centerville, where some time in the past the Saints were misused and their house stoned; where also, two years ago, Brn. Devore and Beatty received a written notice to leave or they would get their backs "withed." But they did not leave at that time, nor get the lash. This is the place where the judge refused to have those who interrupted the Saints in their worship prosecuted. The Scriptures say the wrath of man shall be made to praise God. After laboring in the vicinity of the county seat for twelve days, I am satisfied that there has been friends made to the work. While there a Methodist preacher in good standing offered to guard me while I preached the word if it was necessary. Bro. Trout met me at Centerville with conveyance to his home at the Infirmary, near the county seat. (He is overseer of that institution). With him and his noble wife

I mostly made my home while in that vicinity, preaching most every night to some who are interested. One rarely meets with such a helper in this country as is brother J. W. Trout. While there I baptized a noble young man, who will be of use to the work. Two others, young ladies, asked for baptism. Some who were once very bitter enemies I think will obey when they have another opportunity. The Saints there have been discouraged, and were rather on background; but I think they are generally now encouraged in the work; they have resumed their prayer and testimony meetings.

If the work is looked after it will prosper. Friends have been made to the work, and they request me to return that way soon. The Saints administered to my wants, for which they have my grateful thanks.

I next went to Milton, Cabell county, where I spoke twice in a school-house and twice in a Methodists church house. The desire there to hear is widening; two new doors are opened, which I could not fill on account of being booked for this place the 23d, where I am at present. I expect to stay here two weeks, if the Lord will. We had great prejudice here against the truth, and there has been talk of making me leave; but my confidence is strong in the Lord of hosts, and I hope to be able to endure all things. Some will obey here, and I think to organize a branch. I can not fill half the calls for preaching in these localities. Have had good liberty in speaking the word; to God be the praise.

I ask to be remembered by the faithful Saints, that I may be able to stand.

JAMES MOLER.

WHO ARE HIS?

"Now if any man have not the Spirit of Christ he is none of His." So said the Apostle Paul in his letter to the Romans. I have heard it said by many in the church that no one has the Spirit of God, except those who have been baptized and confirmed by the elders of this church; and that the Spirit is not found in other churches. If this be true, then there is no one that is "His," that is, belongs to Christ, in any other church, than the church or people called Latter Day Saints. But how are we to decide this matter, or by what rule are we to judge other people in this case? Well, says one, the Holy Ghost is promised only to the baptized believer of the gospel. I grant it, that is, "the gift of the Holy Ghost" is promised to such, and is received through the laying on of hands of a divinely appointed and authorized ministry. But what are we to do with this other inspired truth: "Wherefore by their fruits ye shall know them?" And this: "Every good tree bringeth forth good fruit?" Suppose, therefore, a man should exhibit the "fruits of the Spirit," shall we say that he "have not the Spirit of Christ," or that he is in possession of it?

What is the fruit of the Spirit? "But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance."—Gal. 5: 22, 23. Now it is simply folly, and a manifestation of sheer ignorance, to deny that the "fruit of the Spirit" is found exhibited in the life and character of numbers who are not members of the fraternity, of "our church;" and the writer, if he has ever learned to know what the Spirit of God is, by experience in this church, is compelled to confess that he has known it in a measure in other churches, i. e., by experience of the fruit of the Spirit. He believed then, and believes now, that he "had the Spirit." Besides, he has seen the manifestation or exhibition of the same fruit in many others. He has seen those who had the "same mind" that was "in the Lord Jesus," and who displayed in their daily walk and conversation, a truly beautiful and heavenly Spirit, whose characters were truly lovely, and who sought to live as near the Lord as they knew how; and it would seem to be extremely unjust to question their acceptance with God. They had not, it is true, heard of the gospel in its fulness; but as far as they had heard and understood they had obeyed, howbeit they had not been baptized, nor had they received the laying on of hands of the elders. Now, it is written that baptism, in connection with repentance, is for remission of sins; but can we say that no one has received a forgiveness of sins except those who were baptized? They genuinely, honestly, fully repented of sins; they had a godly sorrow that worked a reformation of character and life, in many cases remarkable, and the change was wonderful and striking, and that which only God's Spirit could effect.

Well, says one, why preach repentance, and baptism for remission of sins, and the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost? Because it is God's order; a part of the celestial law, that much of the plan of salvation. But will God save any one who has not obeyed the gospel, it may be asked? Will he damn any one who has never heard it? we ask. If they are not saved, and not damned, what sort of state or condition are they in?

Even some of the gifts of the Spirit are enjoyed by people in other churches. Faith, healings, (and some of them miraculous), and visions, and dreams, and "operations" of the Spirit, have been experienced. These have been enjoyed by people who have earnestly sought for them by faith in God, by trust in the Lord Jesus, and by humble, earnest prayer for the presence and operation of the Holy Spirit. I, for one, can not believe that they were produced by demons, or Spirits of the dead; for in many cases these "manifestations" are experienced by those who have not the least possible faith in "spirit manifestations" as taught and believed by Spiritists. By the Book of Mormon rule, that "whatsoever inviteth and enticeth to do good is of God," then, as an increase of faith in God, and love for the Lord Jesus, and desire for the presence of the Holy Spirit is the result of these experiences of a superhuman power, we must concede that they are of God. In the days of Jesus and the early apostles, at one time, one was found casting out devils in the name of Jesus, and some of His disciples nought to forbid him, because he would not follow them; but Jesus gave them to understand that no man could do a miracle in His name, and speak evil of Him; in other words he was a believer in, and a friend of Jesus, even if not recognized as one of "our church," by the disciples.

This matter must be understood in some way, and the solution of the problem to my mind is, that these experiences are the result of individual faith, and faithfulness, and are not an evidence of the acceptance of the church to which the individual belonged by the Lord, as his church. In many cases the church to which they belong repudiates the doctrine of superhuman or spiritual gifts of the kind named being now desirable or attainable.

They do not prove the church to be correct in doctrine, practice, order, name, or organization. For being experienced by members of various churches of opposite, or conflicting faith, and practice and order, they would prove each to be right which would be a religious impossibility. The answer seems to be that "God is no respecter of persons, but that in every nation, he that feareth God and worketh righteousness is accepted of him;" on the principle that "whosoever doeth right is righteous." He may not work righteousness in full, but he may so far as he understands it; or in other words, live up to the light that he receives. God is a merciful and just God, and when an humble, trustful soul comes to him, and honestly and earnestly, with an eye single to his glory, seeks for his Spirit and the manifestations and gifts thereof, that God will not withhold. But suppose that these same parties should have the way of the Lord shown unto them "more perfectly," and duties unperformed hitherto by them should be unfolded to their understanding, and they then refuse to receive the greater or additional light, and to perform these duties; what then? Why, "to him that knoweth to do good, and doeth it not, to him it is sin." They would become disobedient, transgressors, rebels, and would of course come under condemnation, and would forfeit the favor of God, and would lose the Spirit. The enjoyment of any measure, any gift, and operation of the Spirit by those who may only believe a portion of the gospel, because they understand but a portion, and who have not heard, and consequently not obeyed the fulness of the gospel as before remarked, does not prove the church to which they belong correct in faith or practice, or accepted of God as a church. The signs were to "follow them (the persons) that believe," not they who disbelieve. They may not believe all, because they do not understand all; but can we say that those who enjoy these gifts disbelieve any of the gospel? Millions, there may be, who do not believe in the one living and true God, simply because they have never heard of him.

And faith comes by hearing; but having never heard, do they disbelieve in him? Certainly not. A man may hear a portion of the gospel only, and therefore believe a portion only. Again, he may refuse to believe that portion, or what he has heard; another may hear it in full, and believe the fulness; and another may hear the fulness of the gospel and not accept it. What the first party believes is gospel, as far as it goes; but it is only a part; he is a believer in what he has heard, but has not learned the perfect, or full law of liberty. He goes to hear and learn the "way of the Lord more perfectly" as Apollos did from the mouth of Aquilla, and his wife, Priscilla. (How about this female teacher of the gospel?)

The first party is but a partial believer, and receives but a portion of the Spirit; but of the Spirit he does receive. The other is a full believer, and is entitled to the "gift of the Holy Ghost," the Spirit in full. Not simply a gift or two, but the power that produces all the gifts, operations, and manifestations. Not merely a stream that flows from a fountain, (and there may be many streams large or small), but he receives the fountain itself, so to speak. There is this difference in the two parties, and it is a marked difference; the one receives the Spirit in a measure, as a matter of free grace; he can not claim the "promise of the Holy Ghost;" for he has not complied (because of lack of understanding) with terms in full, upon which the promise of the "gift" rests. He can say, Lord, in thy abundant mercy, and loving kindness, give me of thy Holy Spirit, as a matter of grace. The other, no less humble and trustful can say, Lord, I ask thee to give me the gift of the Holy Ghost according to thy promise; for I have heard, believed, and obeyed the gospel in its fulness, and I claim, not arrogantly, however, the promise. Another feature of the case is this; there is no need of denying that members of other churches enjoy the peace, joy, humility, and happy feelings that they claim to enjoy, and doubtless do enjoy and believe to be the work of the Holy Spirit, (and to my mind rightly so believe), for this reason, viz., the Holy Spirit has two aspects, so to speak, or two sides, two faces; one face is covered with frowns, the other with smiles. The face with frowns is turned toward the unbeliever, and impenitent, and he is reprov- ed of sin, convinced of the gospel or righteousness, and fears the judgment to come; he believes, repents, and receives joy and peace because thereof; he feels meek, gentle, patient and happy, and these are the results of the operation of the Spirit of reproof. But when he obeys the gospel in baptism, and received the laying on of hands, he then obtains the promised "comforter," the gift of the Holy Ghost. The one convinces, convicts, and condemns, and the result is faith, and repentance, and this brings peace, and satisfaction, and the spirit of obedience and reformation of character. The other brings life, light, and liberty: and assures of pardoned sin, a new creation; for the individual is born of God, and is a new creature in Christ Jesus; for, having been baptized into Christ, they have put on Christ.

The party who has not been baptized into Christ, has not put on Christ; but, like the Gentiles at the time of the existence of Solomon's Temple, who became Jewish proselytes, they could find place in the outer court and enjoy certain privileges of the Jewish economy; but the Jew alone could receive the full measure of the benefits provided of God for <sup>the</sup> party who has received <sup>of</sup> reproof is not inside the fold <sup>of</sup> Christ until born of water and the Spirit. <sup>of</sup> Becoming a son of God by obedience to the law of adoption, he then receives the Spirit of God's Son, even Jesus Christ, into his heart, whereby he cries Abba Father. Are these unbaptized (yet partially believing people), Christ's? Not in the fullest sense of the term. Are they the Devil's? Not by any means. Are they their own? No; for they have yielded themselves servants to God, as far as they understood, and they were and are his servants as far as they understand his laws and the order of his government and obey them. They are Christ's however, because they will have part in the resurrection at Christ's coming—not in the celestial glory, but in the terrestrial. The second death hath power on all who do not take part in the first resurrection.* "And it is only those who are the terrestrial ones, who are not resurrected at Christ's coming. Those who receive the terrestrial glory are the honorable ones of the earth, who have been blinded by the traditions of men, hence do not hear the gospel in its fulness. And with them are the heathen who have never heard the gospel in the flesh at all. Are the heathen Christ's? Yes; but not his in the sense that those are who have obeyed the gospel, and have put on Christ by being baptized into him. They are Christ's in the sense that David uses in the second Psalm, "Ask of me, and I will give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession."

They are "his" in the sense found in Revelations, 18: 4. "Come out of her my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues." As this refers to a religious or ecclesiastical body, or a number of bodies, under the general term "Babylon," and not a literal city. It is understood by some that God's "people" are to be found yet in Babylon, not those of course who have "come out," and from the church of Christ, or belong to that church. Now, they are not "his" in the same sense that the "body of Christ," or the baptized, and confirmed believer is. If they are "his," then they will have part in the first resurrection, or that which takes place at Christ's second coming. If they, with the nations who have not received the gospel, are to have part in the resurrection to terrestrial glory, and are to receive the Holy Spirit through the ministration of the celestial ones, this can not take place in the spirit world, for if so, then they would have become entitled to celestial glory, for having received the Holy Spirit through the administration of those who are "the Church of the first born," they would become heirs to "celestial glory," because they would have heard, believed, and obeyed the celestial law. But we read of a resurrection of terrestrial beings, and if the Holy Spirit is received by this class, it must be after their resurrection. The celestial glory is not obtained till the resurrection, then the natural or earthly body becomes a spiritual body, (not a "spirit body"), "this mortal," then puts on "immortality," these dead are "raised incorruptible." The others are "terrestrial" or earthly, and not "celestial" or heavenly, but they receive the Holy Spirit, or as I understand it, the gift of the Holy Ghost through the administration of those who have become celestial by virtue of being believers in the fulness of the gospel, and having received the Holy Ghost themselves, through the administration of those who held the authority to give it through the laying on of hands, while they were in the flesh, or earthly beings. Upon the principle or rule that we are to "work out" our "own salvation," and according to the declaration of Christ, "Therefore, let every man stand or fall by himself, and not for another; or not trusting another," we would judge that every person must hear, believe, repent, be baptized, and receive the laying on of hands for himself. I may be dull of comprehension, but I can not see why a person can not just as well hear, believe, and repent for another as to be baptized or confirmed for him. If the terrestrial ones are to receive the Holy Spirit through the administration of the celestial ones, it will be when there are celestial ones to administer, and I do not understand that there will be any celestial administrators of gospel ordinances, till "this mortal puts on immortality, and this corruptible puts on incorruption." I can conceive of people in the Spirit world hearing, believing and repenting of sin, but if they can not obey for themselves in the Spirit, they can wait until raised from the dead, when they can receive baptism, and the Holy Spirit through the administration of those who through the resurrection become celestial beings. If these honorable Sectarials, and heathen are Christ's—not his "body," but his "people," they will be raised at his "coming," as Paul taught in Corinthians, 15. And if they receive the Holy Spirit in the sense of being born of the Spirit, after being born of the water, they will be exalted to celestial glory; and receiving the Spirit during the Millennium or the "last day"—the seventh, of the week of seven thousand years, the prophecy of God will be fulfilled in which the Spirit shall be poured out upon "all flesh." God will have "all men to be saved, and to come to a knowledge of the truth," or as it might be very properly put, have all men to come to a knowledge of the truth, and be saved. And to come to a knowledge of the truth, they must manifest a belief of the truth, and before they can exercise faith they must hear the "word of truth" preached unto them through the gospel. We can see some use for "priests" as well as for "kings" in the Millennium, with these thoughts before us. And we can see in it an explanation of what has been a mystery, and a trial of faith to many. The writer remembers what a "trial" it was to him, in the early days of his membership in the church, when seeing a little boy blessed by Bro. Blair, and a prediction made that he should preach the gospel to other nations, and in a short time the child died, but after a while the light came, that there was a hundred fold greater work to be done in the Millennium than in these days, in the matter of preaching the gospel, and that this boy, and others who had received like promise, would, when grown to sufficient age, preach the gospel to nations, who have never heard it, and who will accept it. The time must come when the will of God will be done "on earth" "as it is done in heaven." The Spirit of Christ does not partake of churlishness; it does not prompt a man to pray to God to "bless me and my wife, my son John and his wife—us four and no more. Amen." It rejoices that a "Manifestation of the Spirit" is given to others beside members of the Reorganization, and it is glad that the time will come when "every knee shall bow, when every tongue shall confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father." It is pleased to know that there is as much light, and truth, and fruits of the Spirit, in the religious world as there is, and it would rejoice still more, if there was a thousand fold more display of this "fruit," to say nothing of the "gifts" in the church, which has named herself the "body of Christ." There is a great deal more hope of salvation of a man who, having never heard of the fulness of the gospel and who lives as faithful to the law of heaven as he can, or who lives up to the light that he has received, than for those who claim to "know the Lord," and who cry, "Lord, Lord," and yet "do not the things" that he has taught.

This church boasts of "present revelation;" sings, "We thank thee, O God, for a prophet;" tells the world that it believes, nay, that it knows that Joseph Smith was a "prophet of God," and that it knows the same of the present Joseph, and yet look at the "word of wisdom," the "law of tithing," the "laws of the church," found in section 42 of Doc. & Cov., and a number more commandments which come as "the word of the Lord," that are daily trampled under foot, which, if believed, are continually disobeyed by some. What means this saying of Christ? "For unto whomsoever much is given, of him shall much be required; and to him whom the Lord has committed much, of him will men ask the more."—Luke 12: 57.

I would like some one to show why the church is not as much under condemnation, and for the same reason, as the church was in September, 1832.—D. C., sec. 83, par. 8. "The sectarian world has not the light that we have," cry hundreds in our church, and in the day of Judgment, it may thank God that it did not have so much, when it beholds the condemnation

* The writer has made a mistake here, and probably has written different than he knew and intended; for at the second resurrection there will be many on whom the second death will have no power. See 1 Cor. 15: 32-36; Rev. 20: 6-15; Doc. Cov. 28: 7; 76: 4, 7; 85: 29.—Editor.

and shame of those who laid claims to the greater light, and yet walked not in it. There is no longer any need of the admonition, "Boast not of faith, nor of mighty works," for there is very little of either to boast of. "He that receiveth my law, and doeth it, the same is my disciple; and he that saith he receiveth it and doeth it not, the same is not my disciple, and shall be cast out from among you;" and if such are not cast out, because there is no one without sin in the matter, we may expect to be all cast out by the Lord, and then we will know who are his.

Conference Minutes.

CENTRAL MISSOURI.

The above district conference convened with the Wakenda Branch, October 2d, 1886, W. L. Booker presiding. Elders Reports: David Powell (baptized 4), E. W. Cato, sen., Parley P. Powell, F. M. Miller, Geo. W. Carter (solemnized 1 marriage), W. L. Booker (baptized 1), F. C. Warnky of Independence, and Robert L. Ware of Far West; J. B. Belcher reported by letter. Priest W. H. Nuckles; Deacon M. H. Stone reported. Branch Reports: Carrollton, no change. Wakenda, 5 baptized; 2 received by letter, 1 died; present number 46. Alma no report. Elder Warnky, missionary, reported. Letters of removal were granted to Wellington Johnson and Elizabeth J. Johnson, scattered members of the old Knoxville Branch. The report of committee on scattering members was received and committee discharged. Whereas, there appears on our minutes a resolution that this district be represented only by elders, priests, teachers and deacons; Therefore be it Resolved; That we rescind said resolution. Carried. Bishop's Agent's report: On hand last report $9.35, paid to Sr. Lloyd $5, balance on hand $4.35. Elder E. W. Cato, sen., Bishop's Agent. District agent's report: On hand last report 10 cents, received since $1, amount paid out as per account $1.45, due agent 35 cents. The spiritual authorities of the church were sustained. W. L. Booker was sustained as president of the district for the ensuing term, and M. A. Trotter clerk. The Saints met at night for prayer and testimony; Sunday, preaching in forenoon by Elder F. C. Warnky, assisted by Bro. W. L. Booker; afternoon, sacrament, prayer and testimony meeting; at night, preaching again by Bro. Warnky, assisted by E. W. Cato. Adjourned to meet with the Wakenda Branch, March 5th, 1887, at ten a. m. W. L. Booker president, M. A. Trotter clerk.

NAUVOO AND STRING PRAIRIE.

The conference of the above district met at Farmington, Van Buren county, Iowa, December 4th, 1886, at ten o'clock. President James McKiernan in the chair. Keokuk, Farmington, and Burlington branches reported no change. Montrose 98; 1 disfellowshipped, 2 ordinations. The president reported having visited all the branches of the district, and had labored as circumstances permitted. He had also visited a place in Jefferson county, Iowa, where he had preached some and baptized two. He presented an itemized financial report, which was accepted. Visiting brethren were requested to take part in the conference. Elders H. T. Pitt and J. H. Lambert reported labors near Elvaston, which resulted in the baptism of two. Elder J. W. Gillen, present, reported his labors in the district, and hoped for good results. Elder B. F. Durfee reported by letter. The Bishop's agent, J. H. Lambert, reported: Amount on hand last report $24.69, received since $36.54, paid out $36.40, balance due the church $24.83. An auditing committee—George P. Lamber, H. T. Pitt and J. W. Gillen—found the books correct. Elder H. T. Pitt had his license renewed. By request of the Montrose branch Bro. Herrick was granted license as a teacher, and Bro. Campbell as deacon. Brother James McKiernan was elected president, and George P. Lambert clerk, for the ensuing six months. Each branch of the district which has not done so, was requested to adopt the Rules of Order for governing branches, and use it in all branch business. At 7.30 p. m., preaching by Bro. John H. Lambert and J. W. Gillen. Sunday at eleven a. m., preaching by Bro. McKiernan on the resurrection. At two p. m. the Saints met in sacrament and social meeting, and were much blessed. In the evening the congregation were highly interested in a sermon by Bro. J. W. Gillen. Adjourned to meet at Montrose, Iowa, March 5th, 1887, at ten a. m.

Miscellaneous.

NOTICE!

The conference of the Southern Nebraska district will meet at Nebraska City, January 9th; and as it is the last quarter in the year it is absolutely necessary that I have a correct report from all the branches so I can make up annual report; and for the same reason it is desirable that we have a good attendance, as the question of sending delegates to General Conference will come up.

THE CLOSING OF THE YEAR.

A FEW more days and the year which to some has brought happiness and to others misfortune will be added to those which have passed before it. Many will during the present month sit in retrospective thought over the events which have marked the year in their lives. To the young the years speed not fast enough; to the old they are all too short. The young man employs the closing of one year in preparing for the next, the aged man muses over the events of past years, and contemplates the mysteries of the future. In the lives of many the year has proved a memorable one, while in those of others it has been marked with no special events. The hopes of one have reached fruition, the aspirations of another have fallen short of success. And thus the last day of December will bring alike pleasant and sad memories. There is a lesson to be drawn from the close of every year that may well teach us of the opening of the new one. It is by deriving profit from the past that we can improve the future. If we have undertaken enterprises during the present year that have proved unsuccessful, we can now, on looking back over the ground, see more clearly what our mistake was or wherein we failed, and by having undergone such experiences we are by far the better off. We have been taught lessons which we might otherwise never have learned, and in our future undertakings the great value of them will be apparent to us, if now they yet seem unnecessary and unproductive of good. There is a lesson in all our failures, if we will but regard them in the proper light. So long as we profit by what has occurred during the year now rapidly drawing to a close, it will not have been wasted. The experience of the old year will make our success during the new more assured, for we will have learned what shoals to avoid in the sea of life. If our bark has just ground over the rocky reefs with but slight injury, let us feel thankful that we were not entirely wrecked. The closing of another year will also remind many of the necessity of acting in the present rather than postponing to the future. It will teach us, perhaps, what may have escaped us before, that the sun as swiftly descends to its setting as it rises to its noon. As a nation, our history is unequalled for activity, enterprise, and thrift, yet how many are loitering by the wayside, contending to themselves that there is "plenty of time" in which to attain a certain end; then, rousing up suddenly, how surprised are they to find that the opportunity for their achievement has passed. These and scores of other lessons will be suggested to many with the close of 1886.—Christmas Brooklyn Magazine.

THE CHICAGO TIMES.

ANNOUNCEMENT FOR 1887.

THE DAILY TIMES.

The experience of the past has demonstrated that the west requires and will liberally sustain a first-class newspaper such as THE TIMES—a journal that spares no necessary expense in the collection of the news of the world, and that gives an ample presentation of the events of each day as they occur. It is strictly within the bounds of truth to assert that THE TIMES in all its editions is the most complete, comprehensive, instructive, and entertaining journal published on the American continent; and care will be taken to maintain the high reputation that so many years of a knowledge supremacy have brought.

THE TIMES is represented at Washington, New York, and other principal cities of the United States and Europe by correspondents of experience and a high order of ability, who transmit by telegraph or mail accounts of all occurrences, and present intelligent reviews of the political and social events of the time. The vigilance of the correspondents is a guarantee that readers of THE TIMES will be kept fully informed in all that goes to constitute the history of the period.

The city news will be given more fully and adequately than it is possible for any other Chicago paper to present it. All occurrences will be reported, as they have been heretofore, with absolute impartiality. Through no other channel is it practicable to obtain such complete records of the proceedings of deliberative bodies of a national or representative character as through the columns of THE TIMES.

Merchants and bankers throughout the country have long recognized the superiority of THE TIMES' financial and commercial reports. Absolute accuracy and freedom from the influence of traders' chiques and aud rings will continue to characterize this department of the paper.

Literary features of a high order of merit have been added to the Sunday and Saturday editions, and to these departments some of the best writers in the United States have become regular contributors. These editions rival the best magazines in the excellence of their literary contents.

THE TIMES will continue in the advocacy of sound political principles. It will labor for the emancipation of the country from the burdens of a protective tariff, and give all encouragement to efforts for the improvement of the civil service by its disengagement from party politics. THE TIMES will remain, as it has been for more than twenty years, an aggressively independent journal, acknowledging allegiance to no party, but striving for principle and justice.

In order to meet the demands of its country patrons, arrangements have been made whereby the Sunday edition of THE TIMES is distributed by means of special and fast railway trains to cities within a radius of two hundred miles of Chicago early on the day of its publication.

THE WEEKLY TIMES.

THE WEEKLY TIMES is a complete compendium of the news of the week, with special features of late and trustworthy market reports, and a department of industrial and agricultural intelligence carefully prepared by an editor of long experience, and is printed and mailed the morning of the day on which it is dated. In these respects THE WEEKLY TIMES is superior to any mere agricultural paper, for the field it covers is infinitely more extensive than that which can be occupied by the "one idea" press.

The subscription price of THE WEEKLY TIMES is only $1 per year, postage prepaid. It is not believed that so valuable and comprehensive a library of useful knowledge can be anywhere else obtained for so small a sum. The endeavor will be to make THE WEEKLY a perfect newspaper for farmers and for families to whom it is not convenient to take a daily.

Sample copies will be sent to address on application by letter or otherwise to THE TIMES office, corner Washington street and Fifth avenue, Chicago, Illinois.
