THE "TIMES" ON THE SEER, &c.

WE append below an editorial from the Chicago Sunday Times of the 20th ult., in respect to Mormonism, Joseph the Seer and David Whitmer, which will be read with deep interest, for the reason that it breathes a spirit of fairness, an inquiry which promises good for the truth and for those who love the truth.

In another place will be found a lengthy article from the pen of a Chicago Tribune reporter who personally interviewed Bro. David Whitmer at Richmond, Mo., the 15th ult.

God is working with his people and with such means as will reach the masses in a strange and marvellous manner. The signs portend good for Zion and her children.

The Times says:

"Do people in general want to know the truth about Joseph Smith, the founder of the sect which styles itself 'the Latter Day Saints,' and the origin of the book which they claim supplements the Old and New Testaments? Apparently they do not. A large number of persons in Utah and a considerable number scattered through the various states and territories devoutly believe that Joseph Smith was a man who lived a pure and noble life, and that 'he went about doing good.' They also believe that he was divinely commissioned to bring to the knowledge of the world a portion of sacred history and a revelation equal in value to that contained in the book which is the religious guide of Jews and Christians.

olics, Protestants, agnostics, and infidels—declare that Joseph Smith was an impostor, a fraud, and a deceiver, and that he sought to gain converts to a new religion for the purpose of using them for selfish purposes. They state that the life he led, the example he set, and the doctrines he preached were all bad. They affirm that the so-called Mormon bible was obtained by Sidney Rigdon, a companion of Smith's from one Solomon Spaulding, who prepared a pretended history of the lost tribe of Israel for the amusement of himself and his friends. They believe, or pretend to believe, that polygamy was one of the cardinal doctrines taught by Joseph Smith, and that the authority for it is contained in the 'Book of Mormon.' They declare that polygamy is the corner-stone of Mormonism, and that the entire structure of the church would fall if it were removed. They freely state that the leaders in the Mormon Church are insincere, and that all their followers are ignorant and depraved. It is fair to presume that few of these persons ever read any of the publications of the 'Saints' or ever attended any of their meetings.

"It may astonish many people to learn that the original sect as founded by Joseph Smith, and which never countenanced the practice of polygamy, is increasing as fast as most comparatively new religious denominations ever have; that it has churches in Boston, Providence, Washington, St. Louis, Kansas City, and Chicago; that the members of these churches compare favorably with the members of other churches in morality and intelligence, and that the ministers of this denomination are earnest and able men. Many would be astonished, on comparing the creed of this church with that adopted by the Evangelical alliance, to notice how closely they agree. Joseph Smith, the son of the 'martyr,' long lived in Plano, Illinois, where he preached and edited a paper, which is the organ of the Reorganized Church. All who knew him regarded him as an able, honest, and conscientious gentleman. The 'Saints,' who have numerous churches in Illinois, Wisconsin, and Iowa, have as high a reputation for honesty and uprightness as the Quakers of Pennsylvania and New England. The services in their churches differ but little from those held in Free-Will Baptist and Primitive Methodist churches. Their creed and public religious exercises show that they are orthodox Christians. Close observers believe that their religious faith exerts a powerful influence for good on their lives and characters. No one is justified in saying that the doctrines professed by these people are not conducive to good. The exponents of the new dispensation declare that it sheds great light on both the Old and the New Testament, and that it is the means of making many obscure passages clear. It is claimed by them that many have come to believe the truths of the bible by careful study of what is known as the 'Mormon' bible. Have any of our theologians given attention to this matter?

"At last accounts, David Whitmer, the last of the original testifiers of the existence of the golden plates from which the 'Book of Mormon' were translated, was approaching death at his home at Richmond, Missouri. He went to that state over forty years ago, with Joseph Smith. His neighbors of every sort of political and religious predilections unite in giving him an exceedingly high character for honesty, truthfulness and courage. No man, it is said, ever doubted his word in regard to any ordinary matter. Why should not the testimony of a man so truthful, so honest, so courageous, be accepted in relation to the golden plates and the character of the man who professed to discover them? It is certainly to be regretted that no well-regulated attempt has ever been made to establish the truth or falsity of the story in regard to the miraculous finding of the golden plates, the alleged miracles of Joseph Smith and his early disciples, or to ascertain the real character of the man who is regarded by some as a prophet and saint, and by others as an impostor and knave. That he was no ordinary man seems certain. If he was an impostor, he has had no equal in modern times. The persons on whose testimony his character might have been determined have nearly all passed away. His widow died a few years ago at Nauvoo, in this state. She was acknowledged to be a very able and excellent woman. One by one the persons who knew Joseph Smith are passing away. It will soon be too late to ascertain from living witnesses what manner of man he really was. A historical society could not undertake a better work than that of collecting, recording, and classifying the evidence that can now be obtained in relation to Joseph Smith, the founder of the Mormon religion.—Chicago Times.

PRES. JOSEPH SMITH is thus represented by the Ogden (Utah) News, of the 17th ult. All who read will see he is very pronounced and clear in his teachings, and will learn what were, what are, and what must ever be the true faith of the Church of Christ on the points discussed. Here is what the News says:

"MORMON PATRIOTISM.

"AN ELEMENT OF LATTER DAY SAINTS' CREED.

"JOSEPH SMITH'S POWERFUL LECTURE AT THE OPERA HOUSE. 'I KNOW NO LAWS HIGHER THAN MY COUNTRY'S LAWS.'

"A splendid audience greeted President J. Smith of the [Reorganized] Mormon Church at the Opera House, last evening. The hall was filled, aisles filled, and a marked interest exhibited. It was noticeable that more than half the audience were women, a decided majority of whom were on the sunny side of thirty years.

"I am here to-night to discuss the proposition, Is my conduct as an American citizen and a member of a religious body to be controlled by the laws of the Government of the United States, or by any law claimed to be a higher law than those of my country?" began the speaker. He then proceeded in a calm, cogent way to trace the history of the revelations and the books regarded by his church as divine authorities, citing copiously from each, clear and positive commandments and doctrines to support the several propositions assumed.

"In outline, the theory, so well and convincingly laid down, is this: Assuming that God is the Supreme Being, and that persons known as the Seers, Prophets, etc., of the Church, received divine authority direct from God; admitting the divine origin, attributes and mission of Jesus Christ, then God, in his wisdom, ordered that such a state of affairs should come about, as would prepare a place and suitable state of public society to receive his people, the Mormons; and one where they could attain, if they followed his laws, their intended state of perfection. In pursuance of this plan, God ordained and carried out the inception, the organization and completion of the United States Government. He inspired the framers of the Constitution and the fundamental principles of this Government, and when it was in working order, He made his will known to Joseph Smith, the Seer, whose 'revelations' started the movement. The speaker then explained at length the progressive steps of the Church from its first days to its last journey to Utah.

"Having throughout his lecture kept clearly before his hearers the character, principles and ordinances of the 'Church,' he showed from the Bible, Book of Mormon, Confession of Faith, etc., that in all respects and in all 'divine' authorities, God ordered the people to 'obey the powers that be.' He forcibly explained this to mean, the powers and laws of the earthly government, which were to be supreme till Christ himself comes to rule.

"He then sustained, by a large number of citations from these 'divine' authorities, the proposition that the doctrine of polygamy is, and always has been, among the Mormons, in direct conflict with the laws of God, as given to the Mormon people, and acknowledged and ratified by them. He showed conclusively that this doctrine of God, prohibiting polygamy, has been clearly laid down in all the line of divine works, or books; until in recent years, when that order of the Almighty was suppressed stealthily from the 'divine word,' and this great sin and iniquity fastened upon God's people.

"He charged and quoted authority to show that the trials now visited on the Latter Day Saints were a punishment for this sin, and others, in pursuance of God's positive promise that such should come about if they disobeyed his commands.

"Having thus intrenched himself by history and the word of God Almighty, the speaker, with a voice of triumphant earnestness and splendid power of manner, repeated the proposition stated when he began, and, with face beaming with emotion and patriotic earnestness, exclaimed in tones that filled that hall, 'Thank God! I know no laws in this world higher than the laws of my country!'

"Mr. Smith devoted the remainder of the lecture to the consideration of the results and tendencies of the lewdness and licentiousness of the practice, and having held a large audience enchained from the first moment, through more than two hours, closed a powerful argument, with the promise to speak again to-night, in the Opera House at eight o'clock."

"President Smith, at the Opera House, told of the infamy and shame of polyamy, and knowing his shot would strike hard, said: 'Some of you may not like it, and squirm, but I would not give a penny to put a blister on a dead man.'"

"The same right that the Mormon polygamists claim to interpret the constitutionality of the laws of this land, would, President Smith says, give each head of a family a right to do so, and then all government is gone and anarchy is upon us all. Gentiles, Jews, polygamists and all. The Supreme Court of the United States is Supreme Judge."

PRES. JOSEPH SMITH IN OGDEN.

THE following clipping is from the Ogden (Utah) News of late date, from which it will be seen that President Joseph Smith is reaching the ears of a large number of the people in that city with words of instruction and reproof on those subjects now agitating Utah and the nation. It is timely, and will prove well for those who have fallen into the errors and evils of Brighamism if they will give heed, even now.

"JOSEPH SMITH.

"HE KNOCKS POLYGAMY SKY-HIGH.

"The Opera House, last evening, held a large, attentive and well behaved audience, during the interesting lecture, or sermon, of President Joseph Smith, son of Joseph the elder, who was numbered among the early Mormon martyrs.

"President Smith is a well-preserved man; his full flowing grey beard tells of the years he has devoted to the 'cause' for which his father contended, and which he claimed to have received, as a direct revelation, from the God of all the earth. Mr. Smith speaks forcibly, perhaps too rapidly, at times; is earnest in manner, and impresses the listener with the idea that he believes what he advocates, and therefore wins and holds both respect and sympathy.

"The burden of his address was to show the illegality and sin of polygamy. He made no effort to bang books, toss his arms and hands in the air, or howl; but forcibly and earnestly stated his propositions, cited the 'Book of Mormon,' the 'Covenants,' and the 'Confessions of Faith,' and kindred books, and clearly proved from these orthodox Mormon authorities, that God never did, and does not now, countenance the habit of one man having more than one wife, and vice versa.

"The speaker drew strong and vivid pictures of life in polygamous households, and illustrated the 'straying from the law of God,' by the people, in a striking way, when he told of a Salt Lake woman, now alive, who has been 'sealed' to ten men, and a Beaver woman who has had thirteen husbands, one of whom she 'paid to her Bishop' as tithing!

"The gentleman was listened to with great interest by the large number of persons present, four-fifths of whom were Mormons, and closed an intelligent and instructive discourse with the announcement that to-night and to-morrow night he will continue the subject, in the Opera House, beginning at half-past seven o'clock.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

BRO. W. W. GAYLORD writes of late, sending subscription for church papers, saying, "I wish to be prompt, paying before my time expires, as also in all things pertaining to that which is right." This is as it should be. Promptness in all matters increases confidence, smooths down asperities, lessens disappointments, and strengthens the bonds of friendship in all the concerns in life. We would be glad to have all our patrons equally as prompt in remitting as Bro. Gaylord. But if the condition of any is such that they can not be, they should come as near to it as they can, and remit as much and as speedily as they can, on their accounts. Begin this with the new year, continue it, and be happy.

Sr. M. Cook writes from Sheridan, Nevada: "We lived in Utah from 1848 till 1869, passed through much sorrow there, and we can't do without the Advocate."

Bro. B. V. Springer writes that he has been holding a series of twenty-one meetings near Tabor, Fremont county, Iowa; has had large attendance, the best of attention, and says he never experienced a greater, if indeed so great a degree of the Spirit of God in his preaching before, and that he never had such liberty of speech, with the power to enchain his hearers by his sermons. He has been sorely afflicted with a severe cold part of the time, but is now better.

Bro. Wm. Lively, of Chatham, Ontario, writes that he can not do without the HERALD; and C. W. Beal says: "Please see I don't miss a number."

Bro. E. C. Brand writes from Dow City, Iowa, the 18th ult., saying, "I have preached eight discourses in the church in the Grove," (probably Galland's Grove), "and had large and attentive audiences."

Bro. C. A. Bass, of Beloit, Wisconsin, says: "The Herald is the only preacher we have, and we prize it highly, and read its pages with much satisfaction."

Bishop Blakeslee returned home, to Galien, Michigan, Monday the 21st ult.

The quartely conference of this district convened at this place the 19th instant, and held over the 20th. It was largely attended, and was pronounced a most excellent one.

Some kind friend (probably at Richmond, Mo.), has sent us three extra copies of the Chicago Tribune of the 17th ult. containing the death-bed testimony of Elder David Whitmer in respect to his connection with Joseph Smith the Seer, the translation of the Book of Mormon and the building up of the church from 1830. They have our thanks.

Pres. Joseph Smith wrote from Salt Lake City the 19th ult. that Bro. Luff had baptized one two days before, and was to baptize two more the day he wrote.

"Do not fail to hear Joseph Smith at the court house [in Wilber, Nebraska,] to-night."—The Blade, Dec. 24th.

E. C. Brand says: "Had eight good meetings at Galland's Grove, Iowa, and a good conference at Omaha. Baptized one.

All matter addressed to David Dancer, that is intended for the Herald Office, should have the number of our office box—82—added. Its omission often causes delays in our office business.

All further orders for Bed Springs or Portraits, should be addressed to Bro. B. F. Ordway, Independence, Mo., instead of Central U. S. M'g Co., which is now disorganized.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. W. C. Cadwell writes from Logan, Iowa, the 24th, ult., that the conference just closed there, was most excellent:

"Splendid liberty was enjoyed by the speakers; there was a good attendance of both members and outsiders, and good attention was paid by all. So far as we can judge, everybody was satisfied with the experiment of holding the conference where no branch organization exists. A general feeling prevailed that good to the cause will result. Every branch in the district reported, and from nearly all good healthy gains were shown."

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Ques.—Is the devil a servant of righteousness?

Ans.—No.

"Ye are of your father the devil, and the lusts of your father ye will do: he was a murderer from the beginning, and abode not in the truth, because there is no truth in him. When he speaketh a lie, he speaketh of his own: for he is a liar, and the father of it."—St. John 8:44.

"He that committeth sin is of the devil; for the devil sinneth from the beginning. For this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil."—1 John 3:8.

"The field is the world; the good seed are the children of the kingdom; but the tares are the children of the wicked one; the enemy that sowed them is the devil; the harvest is the end of the world; and the reapers are the angels."—Matthew 13:38, 39.

"And I, Lehi, according to the things which I have read, must needs suppose, that an angel of God, according to that which is written, had fallen from heaven; wherefore he became a devil, having sought that which was evil before God. And because he had fallen from heaven, and had become miserable forever, he sought also the misery of all mankind. Wherefore, he said unto Eve, yea, even that old serpent, who is the devil, who is the father of all lies; wherefore he said, Partake of the forbidden fruit, and ye shall not die, but ye shall be as God, knowing good and evil. And after Adam and Eve had partaken of the forbidden fruit, they were driven out of the garden of Eden, to till the earth. And they have brought forth children; yea, even the family of all the earth. And the days of the children of men were prolonged, according to the will of God, that they might repent while in the flesh; wherefore their state became a state of probation, and their time was lengthened, according to the commandments which the Lord God gave unto the children of men. For he gave commandment that all men must repent; for he shewed unto all men that they were lost, because of the transgression of their parents. And now, behold, if Adam had not transgressed, he would not have fallen; but he would have remained in the garden of Eden. And all things which were created, must have remained in the same state which they were, after they were created; and they must have remained forever, and had no end. And they would have had no children; wherefore, they would have remained in a state of innocence, having no joy, for they knew no misery: doing no good, for they knew no sin. But behold, all things have been done in the wisdom of him who knoweth all things. Adam fell, that men might be; and men are, that they might have joy. And the Messiah cometh in the fullness of time, that he may redeem the children of men from the fall. And because that they are redeemed from the fall, they have become free forever, knowing good from evil; to act for themselves, and not to be acted upon, save it be by the punishment of the law, at the great and last day, according to the commandments which God hath given. Wherefore, men are free according to the flesh; and all things are given them which are expedient unto man. And they are free to choose liberty and eternal life, through the great Mediator of all men, or to choose captivity and death, according to the captivity and power of the devil: for he seeketh that all men might be miserable like unto himself."—Book of Mormon, 2 Nephi 1:8.

"And this we saw also, and bear record, that an angel of God, who was in authority in the presence of God, who rebelled against the only begotten Son; whom the Father loved and who was in the bosom of the Father; and was thrust down from the presence of God and the Son, and was called Perdition; for the heavens wept over him; he was Lucifer, a son of the morning. And we beheld, and lo, he is fallen! is fallen! even a son of the morning. And while we were yet in the Spirit, the Lord commanded us that we should write the vision; for we beheld Satan, that old serpent even the devil, who rebelled against God, and sought to take the kingdom of our God and his Christ; wherefore he maketh war with the saints of God, and encompasses them round about. And we saw a vision of the sufferings of those with whom he made war and overcame, for thus came the voice of the Lord unto us."—D. C., sec. 76, par. 3.

Q.—Will the devil manufacture our mortal bodies into immortal ones while they lie in the grave.

A.—No.

"And that which thou sowest, thou sowest not that body that shall be, but bare grain; it may chance of wheat, or of some other grain: but God giveth it a body as it hath pleased him, and to every seed his own body."—1 Cor. 15:37, 38.

"For our conversation is in heaven; from whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ: who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body, according to the working whereby he is able even to subdue all things unto himself."—Phil. 3:20, 21.

"Now, verily I say unto you, that through the redemption which is made for you, is brought to pass the resurrection from the dead. And the spirit and the body is the soul of man. And the resurrection from the dead is the redemption of the soul; and the redemption of the soul is through him who quickeneth all things, in whose bosom it is decreed, that the poor and the meek of the earth shall inherit it. Therefore, it must needs be sanctified from all unrighteousness, that it may be prepared for the celestial glory; for after it hath filled the measure of its creation, it shall be crowned with glory, even with the presence of God the Father; that bodies who are of the celestial kingdom may possess it forever and ever; for, for this intent was it made and created; and for this intent are they sanctified.

"And they who are not sanctified through the law which I have given unto you, even the law of Christ, must inherit another kingdom, even that of a terrestrial kingdom, or that of a terrestrial kingdom. For he who is not able to abide the law of a celestial kingdom, can not abide a celestial glory; and he who can not abide the law of a terrestrial kingdom, can not abide a terrestrial glory; he who can not abide the law of a terrestrial kingdom, can not abide a terrestrial glory: therefore, he is not meet for a kingdom of glory. Therefore, he must abide a kingdom which is not a kingdom of glory.

"And again, verily I say unto you, the earth abideth the law of a celestial kingdom, for it filleth the measure of its creation, and transgresseth not the law. Wherefore, it shall be sanctified; yea, notwithstanding it shall die, it shall be quicken again, and shall abide the power by which it is quickened, and the righteous shall inherit it; for, notwithstanding they die, they also shall rise again a spiritual body; they who are of a celestial spirit shall receive the same body, which was a natural body: even ye shall receive your bodies, and your glory shall be that glory by which your bodies are quickened. Ye who are quickened by a portion of the celestial glory, shall then receive of the same, even a fullness; and they who are quickened by a portion of the terrestrial glory, shall then receive of the same, even a fullness: and also they who are quickened by a portion of the terrestrial glory, shall then receive of the same, even a fullness; and they who remain shall also be quickened; nevertheless, they shall return again to their own place, to enjoy that which they are willing to receive, because they were not willing to enjoy that which they might have received."—D. C. 85:4, 5, 6.

All these passages prove that God—not the devil—will prepare the bodies in and for the resurrection. And these, and similar texts, show the salvation of man—body, soul, and spirit.

Q.—Is there a personal devil?

A.—Yes; and legions of them.

"And I, the Lord God, spake unto Moses, saying, That Satan whom thou hast commanded in the name of mine Only Begotten, is the same which was from the beginning; and he came before me, saying, Behold I, send me, I will be thy Son, and I will redeem all mankind, that one soul shall not be lost, and surely I will do it; wherefore, give me thine honor. But behold, my beloved Son, which was my beloved and chosen from the beginning, said unto me; Father, thy will be done, and the glory be thine forever. Wherefore, because that Satan rebelled against me, and sought to destroy the agency of man, which I, the Lord God, had given him: and also that I should give unto him mine own power; by the power of mine Only Begotten I caused that he should be cast down, and he became Satan; yea, even the devil, the father of all lies, to deceive, and to blind men, and to lead them captive at his will, even as many as would not hearken unto my voice. And now, the serpent was more subtle than any beast of the field, which I, the Lord God, had made. And Satan put it into the heart of the serpent, for he had drawn away many after him; and he sought also to beguile Eve, for he knew not the mind of God; wherefore, he sought to destroy the world. And he said unto the woman, Ye, hath God said, Ye shall not eat of every tree of the garden. And he spake by the mouth of the serpent."—Gen. 3:1-8.

"And I saw an angel come down out of heaven, having the key of the bottomless pit and a great chain in his hand. And he laid hold on the dragon, that old serpent, which is the Devil, and Satan, and bound him a thousand years, and cast him into the bottomless pit, and shut him up, and set a seal upon him, that he should deceive the nations no more, till the thousand years should be fulfilled; and after that he must be loosed a little season."—Rev. 20:1, 2, 3.

"But the men marveled, saying, What manner of man is this, that even the winds and the sea obey him? And when he was come to the other side, into the country of the Gergesenes, there met him a man possessed of devils, coming out of the tombs, exceeding fierce, so that no man could pass that way. And, behold, he cried out, saying, What have we to do with thee, Jesus, thou Son of God? Art thou come hither to torment us before the time? And there was, a good way off from them, a herd of many swine, feeding. So the devils besought him, saying, If thou cast us out, suffer us to go into the herd of swine."—Matt. 8:28-32.

"O the wisdom of God! his mercy and grace! For behold, if the flesh should rise no more, our spirits must become subject to that angel who fell from before the presence of the Eternal God, and became the devil, to rise no more. And our spirits must have become like unto him, and we become devils, angels to a devil, to be shut out from the presence of our God, and to remain with the father of lies, in misery, like unto himself; yea, to that being who beguiled our first parents; who transformeth himself nigh unto an angel of light, and stirreth up the children of men unto secret combinations of murder, and all manner of secret works of darkness."—2 Nephi 6:3.

"And it came to pass, that Adam being tempted of the devil, for behold the devil was before Adam, for he rebelled against me, saying, Give me thine honor, which is my power; and also a third part of the hosts of heaven turned he away from me because of their agency; and they were thrust down, and thus became the devil and his angels; and behold, there is a place prepared for them from the beginning, which place is hell; and it must needs be that the devil should tempt the children of men, or they could not be agents unto themselves, for if they never should have bitter, they could not know the sweet. Wherefore, it came to pass, that the devil tempted Adam and he partook the forbidden fruit, and transgressed the commandment, wherein he became subject to the will of the devil, because he yielded unto temptation; wherefore, I the Lord God caused that he should be cast out from the Garden of Eden, from my presence, because of his transgression; wherein he became spiritually dead; which is the first death, even that same death, which is the last death, which is spiritual, which shall be pronounced upon the wicked when I shall say—Depart ye cursed."—D. C., 28:10, 11.

"And the angels which kept not their first estate, but left their own habitation, he hath reserved in everlasting chains under darkness unto the judgment of the great day."—Jude 1:6.

THE CONNEAUTVILLE, (Pa.) Courier of the 17th ult., has this to say of Elder G. T. Griffiths:

"Rev. G. T. Griffiths, the Latter Day Saint preacher, who has been holding meetings in the Pettit-school house the past week, says there are many people prejudiced against their denomination on account of connecting it with the Utah Mormons, when in fact it is strongly opposed to that church, and is one of its most active opponents. Polygamy never was a part of Mormonism proper, neither is it a tenet of the doctrine as taught by Joseph Smith, Jr., the head of the Church of Latter Day Saints, whose headquarters are at Lamoni, Iowa. Rev. Griffiths defines the doctrine of his church as follows:

"First, Faith in God and Jesus Christ. Second, Repentance. Third, Baptism by immersion for the remission of sins. Fourth, Laying on of hands for the reception of the Holy Ghost, healing the sick, blessing of children and ordination of the ministry. Fifth, Resurrection of the dead. Sixth, Eternal judgment, second coming of Christ, and millennial reign. We believe in the signs Jesus said should follow the believers, such as tongues, prophecy, dreams, visions, etc. We believe one man should have only one wife, and one woman only one husband, except in case of death, then they are at liberty to marry again. We further believe that all men who keep the laws of God will be in subjection to the laws of the land."

By this it is seen Bro. Griffiths is planting the work of God right in the vicinity where Solomon Spaulding wrote the notorious "Manuscript Story," and meets with success. The tide is turning.

NOTICE.

Notice is hereby given that the Western Wisconsin District Conference will be held at the Excelsior Branch, January 9th and 10th, 1886. We request all of the officials to report by letter, if they fail to come in person. We cordially invite all to attend. Come praying that God may bless.

Correspondence.

PAPEETE, Tahiti, Oct. 21st, 1885.

Brn. Joseph Smith and W. W. Blair:—We are now at our home, near Papeete, and we have been here nearly four weeks. The conference for October 6th was appointed here, and I left Anaa to attend it, but when I got here I found but few of the Elders could get here in time, so I changed the time to the 17th and 18th. A number more came in time for that appointment, and some reached here Sunday night, and others who are expected have not come yet. The trouble in the case arises through the trading vessels. Sometimes none are at hand, except a month before time, or some days or even weeks after the day appointed. Sometimes the captains refuse to carry passengers, through lack of room; sometimes a Priest or Bishop of the Catholic Church is on board, and charts the vessel, and then refuses to allow only such as he chooses to go along. Sometimes, the illiberality of the captain, caused by religious prejudice, prevents our people from coming or going to a conference. In getting to the district conferences there is but little trouble, as many of the brethren own boats large enough to go to points that they can reach in ten or twelve hours. It would be a good thing if the church here owned a small schooner of thirty or forty tons, which could be used for missionary purposes, or for church business; but I do not see the way clear at present to get one. But if I knew that I should stay here a year or two more I would endeavor to raise the means to get one. It is terribly vexatious oftentimes, to depend on these vessels, for they do not wish to go to Papeete until loaded with shells or bufa, so sometimes they reach an island before expected, and sometimes weeks after. The Saints at Koukura raised over one hundred dollars to pay a vessel to bring them, but as yet have not found a way to come. It is vastly different to what it is in the States in traveling and mail facilities. I doubt very much if I get all the mail that comes for me. I got a letter two weeks ago that was received in the Post Office in April, as the post mark shows. Another letter from Bro. J. A. Robinson was handed to me by David Brown, which was received here in May, yet a number of others less plainly addressed found me all right. The papers come quite regularly. The July 11th number has not reached any of us. Please see that it is sent. We commenced our conference last Saturday, representatives from Taronia, Tiare, Matea, Tikahau, Avatoru, Tiputa, Amanu, Niau, and Koukura were present. The branches at Manihi, Taroa, Tapoto, Motura, Tubuai, and Aputai not represented. The branches at Faite, Farava, Makemo, Marakau, Hikuari, Raroia, Tuhora, Matahoa, Butahara, Opihi, Tamarua, and others will probably be represented at Anaa in January. We arranged here to form several districts of the branches of the western division, namely Matea and Tahiti, one district, composed of four branches; Tikahua and Rairoa, three branches, form district No. 2; Koukura, Aratua, Aputai and Niau, district No. 3; Manihi, Taroa, Tapoto, Raraka, district No. 4. It is proposed to have these districts meet in March, June, September, and December of each year. And the General Conferences to meet April 6th and October 6th at some convenient place. But for next April it is appointed at Tubuai which is three hundred miles south of Tahiti, and entirely on one side. I am desirous of going there, for it was headquarters of the first missionaries, Tahiti and Anaa being the others; and I think quite a number will come into the church from the Protestants there.

I have prepared a new paper on the laws of the church, including directions for ordinations, confirmations, the sacrament of the Lord's Supper, marriage, General and district conferences, and many other matters explained so that there can be a much better understanding among the ministry here. I have tried to get it printed here, but I can not pay fifty dollars for one hundred copies. I will copy the translation so that if it is lost on the way, or fails to reach the office, I will have the original left. The failure of the last half of the work that I sent you last spring to reach you and be printed, causes great disappointment; for I had from the 4th to the 8th chapters (inclusive) of Genesis translated. Inspired Translation. Covering the prophecy of Enoch. It cost us twenty dollars for the translation of the entire manuscript. I have prepared a question book, covering every item of our faith, and much history reaching from the establishment of the church in the days of Christ, till the present time. It will furnish the church here with a vast amount of needed information. It is being translated, and if I can get it printed the church here will become quite well informed on religious matters. The Saints here do not ask for the church in America to print these works gratuitously. They are willing to pay for them, and are glad to have them printed at the Herald Office, for they can not afford to pay the exorbitant prices asked here.

Your brother,

T. W. SMITH.

DETROIT, Minn., Dec. 23d.

Dear Herald:—We have just closed one of the best conferences ever held in the Northern Minnesota District. One week before conference, I went over the district, and found the Saints all trying to do what they could for the Master, and for the good of the cause. I was made to rejoice, as they told me of their love, and how God had blessed them, and when I met those who had but just entered the kingdom, the warm grasp of the hand and the light that came into the eye, spoke more than words, of that change that had taken place in them. We held our conference in the Saints' Chapel at Girard. The building is roomy, and was well filled at all the meetings. It is a good building, thoroughly built; all tried to do their best work. It will be plastered next season, and is a credit to all who were engaged in building it. The Spirit of God was present in our meetings, and it was that spirit that runs from heart to heart, that brings the tears to our eyes, that makes us humble, and ready to do God's will, and the Spirit says "that this district will be blessed more than it ever has been, if we earnestly seek."

The district has been blessed by the labors of Brn. J. C. Foss and H. L. Holt. I have been much with Bro. Foss, and his example is worthy of imitation; and one man in speaking of him uses a phrase belonging peculiarly to this frontier, and expressive to all who are used to such expressions: "Mr. Foss is a Joe Dandy," which means, he is a noble man. All speak well of him, and would welcome his return. I have not as much personal acquaintance with Bro. Holt, but all speak of him with love; he has done a good work, and been the chosen instrument in God's hands of bring many through the door into the kingdom. I have found him to be an earnest worker, but with a zeal tempered with knowledge. May God bless and prosper those brethren, is the prayer of the Saints. It is a pleasure to be able to report the earnest work of the Saints of this district to magnify their calling in ways which they could do the most good; and the sisters and brothers have been earnest in opening up new places, and assisting materially in our meetings, for which they will receive the reward of the Master, "Well done, good and faithful servants." And when I read in your pages of how God is blessing his people, I feel to shout, "Zion's light again is dawning."

Dear Saints; let us love one another, and not forget to pray daily for strength, that we may be able to overcome, and at last be numbered with his chosen in the celestial kingdom, is the prayer of your brother in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

MILTON, Cable Co., W. Va.,

Dear Herald: On the 18th of last month I left my home (Limerick, Ohio) to lift the warning voice to my fellow men. I arrived at the hospitable home of Bro. and Sr. Spann, in Meigs Co., Ohio, on the 20th; spoke the words of the Lord to those that came to hear; also spoke twice in a new place with good liberty to fair congregations, and was well received; I think some will obey. I promised to return. I then went to Mason county, W. Va.; there I was joined by Bro. J. L. Williams. In company with him came to this place, where we got the use of the North Methodist Church, and had fair audiences. It stirred the people some. We preached four times, then went on to Summers county, where we presented the truth in four different localities, baptized five, and left many others believing. They say they never before heard the gospel. Nearly all that heard seemed to be confounded. One man, a respectable member of the Baptist Church said they had made quite a stir among the people, gathering up money to send off to convert the heathen; and now we had brought the fulness of the gospel without money to convert them. It will be very necessary for more preaching to be done there. There are calls for preaching in adjoining counties, which I can not reach now.

We returned to this place yesterday, but will not get to preach here this time, as there is a protracted meeting going on. We baptized one here to-day, in the presence of three Methodist preachers, who are holding a protracted meeting. Milton is a neat little town of five or six hundred inhabitants, situated in a good valley on the C. & O. R. R. There are several here who are strong in the faith, and contend for it in public and private. I will start to-morrow for Jackson county,

W. Va., to labor a few days with the Saints, then to some new places in Ohio. After that I will have to look after the welfare of my family for a while. I desire to labor in the field all that I can, knowing that it is God's work. Some of the people here are trying to get some one to attack me for a discussion, but I guess they will fail. May this grand work move on, and the warning voice soon be lifted to all the inhabitants of the earth.

Yours in the hope of eternal life,

JAMES MOLER.

BUCHANAN, Michigan,

December 19th.

Dear brother Blair, and the many readers of the dear Herald:—This morning as we go to our place of business we are reminded of the many promises we have made to ourselves while reading your pages, line upon line, and have adopted your precepts upon precepts a little over five years ago, and have promised ourselves time and again to give the readers of the Herald our testimony of the gospel of Jesus Christ, and this great latter-day work, that we are as strong in the faith as ever, knowing that this is the plan of salvation taught through the oracles of God through his Apostle Paul in Hebrews fifth chapter and twelfth verse, and we thank God we were spared in life to receive the true light of the gospel in these last days of ours, after serving the evil one so many years. Sectarianism never had effect on us. It was all darkness to us. But when our heavenly Father brought us to a halt one day, and gave us a spirit to investigate his word, and sent his servant, Gomer Griffiths, into our part of His vineyard to explain that word to us, the darkness of men and sectarian priestcraft disappeared. The Spirit of God followed the word spoken by His servant, and it took only three sermons to convince us what to do to be saved. On a Sunday night we rose for baptism; the next day we received the ordinance of baptism and laying on of hands. To-day we thank God that we are numbered with the Saints, and of the household of God. To-day we thank God for the privilege of reading the many letters contained in the Herald by our brothers and sisters. We pray and ask God to help his servant Joseph Smith in recalling those who have wandered from the true fold of Christ. Brethren and sisters, let us come to the front in aiding the servants of the Most High God in finance, in prayer, and in every way we can. Come, dear Saints; let us be of one mind to try and live better every day. God bless you, the least, the weakest Saint in the world can do something. If you but just hand the Herald to your neighbor, although they may refuse to take it once or twice, try it again; and finally it will seem better than they thought for. The Herald is one of the daringest preachers in the field. While poor mortal man can only enter the house, it will enter the heart of man; and if there is any rubbish there it will remove it. Its head, its foundation—the one the word of God, the other the Spirit of God following. We are three in number here, meeting every Sunday at three o'clock p. m.; sometimes a houseful, sometimes only the required number—two or three. But God makes His promises manifest to us. There are five Heralds taken here. Let me tell you there are some here who have not obeyed the commandments of Jesus Christ yet, that have a full knowledge of the word of the gospel.

But they have not been "born of the water, and of the Spirit," yet are strong in the faith. Thanks be to God for what he has done for us in this place. We look for some soon to obey. Our missionaries in this part of the vineyard are the Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants, Life of Joseph Smith, book of tracts and the Herald. Oh, they are so faithful to their work. Just put them out on a mission; don't keep them at home for an ornament. They will speak for themselves. Man has denounced them so long, and tried to kill them so often as missionaries, and could not do it, that a great many have taken courage to investigate them. May God help us to be more free to our neighbors and friends. Ever praying for Zion's glorious cause.

Your brother in the gospel of Christ,

JOHN SHOOK.

CLINTON, Mo., December 21st,

Bro. Blair:—I send to you by mail to-day the Lowry City Times, containing a note from the editor in regard to Bro. I. N.'s efforts at that place. Bro. I. N. has been holding forth at Brownington (about nine miles from here) the last week, speaking in the Baptist Church, many seem to be anxious to know "who are these Latter Day Saints?" Strange to say, but few seem to know that there is such a people. We have been here about one year, and have said but little in regard to the work, as we thought it wise to make ourselves known in a business way first, and gain prestige with the people, which we feel we now have done. Each of us have bought lots and built comfortable homes, and now arrangements are made with Bro. I. N. and myself—he to take charge in opening up the work, and the preaching of the word, and I to look after our business, which I find quite a task, keeping up expenses and providing for our families. We are out about $50 per month to fill Bro. I. N.'s place in store. God has blessed us in the past, and we have no fears to trust him in providing for us in the future.

We have come to Clinton with the truth, to teach this people, and to sow the seed in every heart. We ask the Saints to remember us in their prayers, that we may be able to bring the "sheep" into the fold in this part of the country. Oh, how glad we are to receive the Herald! It is more than food to us; not only does it satisfy, but creates a desire for more. God bless the editors, and all the workers in the office, that the Herald may continue to prosper until every family of Saints in the land may take one.

Yours for the truth,

D. C. WHITE.

Bro. I. N. White writes his brother as follows:

"On Saturday night I saw a large wheat field; I was along its north end, save a few small fields I could see north and north-west of me. I rode along west until I came to the west side, when I went along its side going south. I stopped and looked over it. It extended far east and south, grain large and tall, more so than I had ever seen before. I rode close by its side and reached out and gathered a few heads, rubbing them in my hands, when I found its kernels nice, and remarked that it was much better than I expected, as the heads looked small and short. The yield was great, much of the wheat was so ripe that the straw had commenced to break. I looked over the field for the harvesters—laborers—but lo! not one to be seen!! I felt almost exhausted and worried out, as I had been footing it just before getting in the wagon when riding along the side. I looked at the vastness of the field, and then examined the time and found that the night was almost on us. I could see the darkness setting in, as though the sun was approaching near the western horizon and behind the dingy clouds. Some cried to me, "Hurry!" It seemed I was wanted in some other field south-west of me; but though I saw the darkness setting in, I felt not to hurry, telling them not to be too fast, as I wanted to see to the work here first, and did not care to rush from it. But as I was hurried along I observed some men, (?), fixing the road for us to pass, and one grumbled at me for just the way I managed the work. I felt sure he knew nothing about it, and I passed on, saying nothing, but said to myself: 'I am sure that I will leave my work in the hands of the Lord, and will abide his decision for a reward and exoneration at the end.' The dream is too long to relate more. What will the end be? I really feel anxious for our cause. I can see there will and must be something done. O, what a great cause! Let us be faithful to God and the work."

Yours ever,

I. N. WHITE.

GREENVILLE, Pa., December 20th.

Bro. W. W. Blair:—On December 2d, I baptized two at Kirtland, and on the 4th, left for Conneautville, Pa., where I labored for two weeks, having crowded houses and best of attention. I had the pleasure of leading brethren L. S. and F. W. Holman, two prominent men of that part of the country, into the waters of baptism; and left others believing, who will be one with us ere long; was kindly treated by Saints and friends. Arrived here on the evening of the 18th,—an appointment had been given out for meetings in the Rink here at three o'clock on the Sabbath; but owing to the cold weather, or the short notice, or late dinners, few were present, and these came in too late to make an extended effort, and so an informal talk concerning the difference between our faith and the Utah people, with the cardinal points of our doctrine, was made to attentive listeners. I think by persistent effort on our part, some good may be accomplished here yet. Bro. W. H. Garrett and wife have labored faithfully here to make an opening for the past seven years. They hold regular services at their home on every Lord's day: have prayer, testimony, speaking; and have communion on first Sabbath of the month, instilling the doctrine of Christ in the minds of their children, so that now four of them are ready for baptism. Would to the Lord that many other Latter Day Saints would follow this example, as there are many parents who neglect this important duty. I leave here for Wheeling to-morrow morning.

Saints' Herald:—Please let your columns do a little preaching for me to the Saints here generally in this field, as I am engaged teaching, and can not get out to do it in person. The work needs some assistance immediately, and we wish to ask those who can do so to help us at once. I believe that dollars and cents will aid the work here faster this winter than at any previous time. By the assistance of some of the Saints, the current expenses of the district has been provided for, and one Elder (A. H. Parsons) kept continuously in the field. At the December conference, another was sent out for the winter and spring to occupy some promising fields of missionary work. We wish to ask you now to aid us in keeping the work in this way progressing. Please do not let this Elder's wife, who is an invalid, suffer through this winter. Her husband has baptized over fifty souls into the church in this district. We appeal to those who are able to help some to do it now. The business men of the Church here we feel are without excuse if they fail in doing their share of this work. Your district record shows that over four hundred souls have been added to it by baptism since it was organized. It is no trifling matter so enterprising a district as this should be sustained. Don't let agitations bother you. The work is alive yet, and prospering. I pray it may be kept so. Yours, MAHLON SMITH.

DE WITT, Neb., Dec. 21st.

Dear Herald:—I closed a protracted effort near Wilber on the 14th; held in all thirty-six meetings, the attendance was large, order good, and the interest manifested was of the nature to impress us that several were not far from the kingdom, and we hope to gather, or hear of the gathering from so liberal sowing of the good seed. God was especially merciful in giving health in the hour of need, and utterance in telling the glad news. Elder Murphy, of the Christian Church, attended twenty-two of our meetings, and when I closed he gave notice that he would try and preach to them a little while. He seemed to be a kindly disposed and fair gentleman, paid good attention, asked quite a number of questions, and conversed freely upon topics of our religion. He explained clearly and satisfactorily why his people did not preach the spiritual gifts.

I came down here to hold meetings in the Roperville school-house, and to my thinking the best feeling and spirit that I have ever experienced at this place prevailed, and I hope the desire to investigate and hear may continue. Last Friday evening I could not have the use of the house here, so I returned to Wilber and heard Elder Murphy. The crowd continued as when I closed. The minister gave me a pressing invitation to come and take part, the time to be equally divided, and I have accepted, and the two lamps may appear before the people, side by side. Such an opportunity I have long sought for. As this effort shall progress, I will report. The past week has been quite warm for this time of year. Hopeful, and trusting in the ultimate triumph of Zion's cause, I am in gospel bonds,
ROBT. M. ELVIN.

FANNING, Kan., Dec. 24th.

Dear Herald: I left home, at Independence, on the 16th of this month, arrived at Atchison, Kansas, on the 19th. Sunday, 20th, in company with Bro. Daniel Munn of Good Intent, I attended a meeting held at the house of a Strangite; preaching by our Bro. Green of Netawaka, Kansas. In the afternoon I was called upon to preach at the house of Sr. Stubbart. Bro. Green left with Bro. Munn and Bro. Hiram Parker for Good Intent, to hold a series of meetings in that locality. Monday I came here and have been preaching ever since with good attendance and good attention. Am blest with good liberty. The attendance is on the increase nightly. If it continues we will be compelled to enlarge our place to accommodate those who desire to hear the word. The few Saints that are here are good and kind. Bro. Gurwell is doing all he can for the good of the cause and the work of the ministry in this place, and so is all the Saints of this branch. I shall hold the fort as long as I can, trusting in the Lord for strength and support; and may the God of all the earth in whom we trust be with the Saints everywhere, is my prayer in Jesus' name.

CLARENCE S. ST. CLAIR.

LOS ANGELES, Cal., Dec. 17th.

Bro. Blair:—I am now engaged in a series of meetings in this city; they open up flatteringly. Last week I held a series at Tustin. Think of going north the latter part of next week, if my work here does not prove a success. Bro. D. S. Mills is with me, in moderate health. Altogether the work is brightening on the coast.

Please have my address inserted in the Herald once more, as follows, Alex. Hale Smith, No. 919 Center Street, Oakland, California. I find an A. H. Smith here in this place, and trouble sometimes arises and mail matter gets lost. Direct to the above address. Can you send me a Spaulding Romance?

Yours truly,
ALEX. HALE SMITH.

CABOOL, Texas Co., Mo.,

December 21st.

Bro. Blair:—Two families of German people lately arrived here from Kansas City, I think expecting to get land here and locate in this vicinity. One of said gentlemen learned I was a Latter Day Saint. Said he to me, "we know some of your folks in Kansas City. I don't want to join your church and I never will." He wished to know the origin of our church, and I gave him a brief historic description of its origin. He wished to know something about Brigham Young. I showed him how Brigham departed from the original. I also showed him the restoration of the gospel of Christ and the Church of Christ. For a startingpoint I gave him the words of Jesus: "If any man will do the will of the Father, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God. I told them it is the will of the Father that all should believe, repent, be baptized for the remission of sins, receive the gift of the Holy Ghost, through the laying on of hands, and that after having complied with said ordinances, then it is their privilege to know that the doctrine is of God. The doctrine being of God, the same approvals that accompanied the doctrine of God in these days. The same signs that followed the believer in the doctrine of God in that age of the world, will follow the believer in the doctrine of God in this age of the world.

Thus all may know the doctrine of God. Thus all may know the Church of Christ. Thus all may know the believers in Christ. If God does not approve of us in said manner, working with us, bearing witness of our identity as his people who constitute his church, then we have neither part nor lot in the matter. He admitted these test rules were self evident facts, but said he, "I was brought up in the old country church—Lutheran. I never must leave that church, the church my parents belonged to, the church I have belonged to all my life. I am forty-six years old, and it would not do for me to leave my church and join yours or any other church. I must die in my religion, my parents' religion—a Lutheran."

He offered me a drink of whisky. I asked him to excuse me, and told him I did not indulge. He said there was nothing wrong about that, that one of his near neighbors, Mr. —, belongs to our church, and that he drinks. He said Mr. — was industrious, made plenty of money, and he seemed to think it was right.

Your brother in the one faith,

B. A. ATWELL.

BROWNINGTON, Mo., Dec. 24th.

Bro. W. W. Blair:—When I left Angus, Iowa, for this place, it did seem that nothing would wake the people up there to a sense of their position; but my heart was made to rejoice by reading that Bro. J. S. Roth had baptized eight precious souls into the kingdom of Christ. Go again, brother, and may God be with you, to turn them from darkness to light. The people there seem to be careless and indifferent about their soul's salvation, but I hope to hear of more awakening to righteousness.

Since coming here, I have tried to preach on Sundays, when I could get a house; and since the 28th ult., have held meetings every Sunday, in company with Bro. I. N. White. This part of the country contains a large number of the Christians, or Campbellites. I was invited to go and preach at Park's Grove School-house, on the 28th of November and went in company with Bro. I. N. White; he gave privilege for any one to speak, when one of them undertook to inform the congregation that we misapplied the Scriptures; that Bro. White was what we might call an Apollos, and what he needed was a Priscilla, and Aquilla, to further instruct him, when he would be a great help to the Christian Church. Bro. White held four meetings in the Baptist Church at this place, commencing on the 17th, had small but attentive congregations. It appears that the gentleman above referred to has been in town and told some, and they have told others, that Bro. White is a Mormon; and the result is, no more preaching in the churches here; but I have secured the school-house for him. Bro. White had appointments out for Diamond Point School-house for this week, but was called home by sickness in his family. I filled the appointment on Monday night, but found the door locked against me on Tuesday night. There are a great many anxious to hear more of the doctrine. This is a very large field without reapers, and we desire the prayers of the Saints everywhere, that utterance might be given.

I should feel lost without the church papers, as they keep me informed of the progress of God's work. I am glad to see that some are throwing down their arms of rebellion in Utah, and hope to see the day when the stigma attached to the Church of Christ will be forgotten. I love this latter day work; I know it is true, and hope I shall be found bearing testimony to it all my life. I have got the writings of "Old Come to Pass" in my possession, and think it a very poor production for a minister of the ability that it has been said he was. My faith is not weakened in the Book of Mormon by reading the writings of the cultured (?) Reverend. With a prayer for Zion's weal, I remain yours in Christ,

WM. THOMPSON.

OF DREAMS.

WHILE I agree with the wise man that "dreams come from a multitude of business," and that there is danger of becoming fanatical in regard to them, yet I believe in the voice of inspiration which says—"They shall dream dreams."

A lengthy article might be written upon this subject and prove profitable. A short rule to judge dreams by is this,—When they agree with God's character and laws, and tend to good, they certainly can do no harm.

A certain man belonged to one of the many sects now extant, and that church was seemingly very moral, and seemed to have some good doctrine. The man became strongly impressed that he ought to be in the ministry, and after several years the Church accepted of his ministry and he began to preach and baptize. But from the start there was something seemingly wrong. The man had a tender conscience concerning things of so momentous a character. In due time he received additional light, and became fully persuaded that there was a reason for doubts, and so at once quit his ministerial labors.

Sometime thereafter he received the following dream: He seemed to be on a large prairie with no human being in sight or hearing, with no possible place of concealment, nor anything to defend himself with. There was a wagon close by his side. He looked to the east, and in the distance saw a black object approaching him with rapidity, and it seemed impossible to get away. When near enough the man saw that it was Satan, black in his looks, who knows no mercy and love. He had a powerful muscular appearance, from whose hands there was no possible escape. Quickly the man felt conscious that he must now become a servant to the cruel fiend for the wrong course he had previously pursued in the ministry. It seemed of no use to run nor get in the wagon, for his power and speed exceeded all. The man began to call on the Lord Jesus with much fervency and entreaty, but with little confidence, knowing that he did not merit the protection of a kind God. But before he fell into the hands of this cruel arch enemy, to his great pleasure he awoke.

But oh! his deep reflections and meditations of the past; the firm resolutions to never engage in any thing doubtful of so grave a nature as that of precious souls.

Oh! the bitter tears that flowed in view of the possibility of falling into Satan's cruel hands. And now I appeal to all so-called ministers under heaven, to bethink themselves. The time is surely coming when you shall give an account of your labors. You can not all be right, from the fact your doctrines are to adverse. You are not all guided or led by the Holy Spirit, for then God would be the author of confusion. But he is not.

Remember that God knows your thoughts, intentions, and motives. You may cover up truth by your sophistry and learning, and also by your external humility. You may seemingly be conqueror for the time being; but remember "truth crushed to earth will rise again." How long will you continue your sad havoc of delusion upon poor honest souls! They look to you for light and instruction. Will not their blood be required at your hands? Who do you suppose those false teachers are that were to come in the last days? those deceivers that would "creep into houses and lead captive silly women," and "teach for doctrine the commandments of men," "having a form of godliness, (religion), but denying the power thereof?" "My words shall judge you in the last day," says Jesus. Who do you suppose those harlots of the old mother Babylon are?

Suppose you do have a fine position with a fine salary, and are clad in fine apparel, and fare sumptuously every day. And suppose you can deliver a fine oration, and yet be eaten of worms! Or suppose your kingdom or church is large; yet you will see the handwriting on the wall: "Mene, Mene, Tekel, Upharsin." (Daniel 5:25). To the laity of the various organizations called churches I warn you also to be wise and learn the results of following false leaders. Please turn to Numbers, chapter sixteen.

I am not telling you hereby who is right or who is wrong. I leave that with you and your God, hoping that when life's labors are over, and the judgment comes, I shall have the pleasure of knowing that this article has done great good.

Peace to all who love the Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity and truth. Amen.

By request we reprint from HERALD of April 15th, 1875, the following article:

CHRIST AND THE WORLD.

"Whatsoever is written by the Prophets and Apostles which were of old concerning me, must be fulfilled; and the time is nigh at hand, when I will come down from my habitation in the heavens, and stand again upon the earth, in power and great glory; and I will establish my kingdom and laws over all the earth, and my will shall be done on the earth as it is done in heaven. But before that great day, there must needs be preparation; that all things that are written may be fulfilled.

Behold, I the Lord will reason with you, O children of the earth, even as one man reasoneth with another, that you may understand. When I came upon the earth before, did I not fulfill every jot and tittle of those scriptures of the Prophets which related to the circumstances of my conception, birth, ministry, sufferings, death, burial and resurrection? Was I not conceived of a virgin, born in Bethlehem, called out of Egypt, turned aside into Nazareth to fulfill that which was written? Was not I betrayed for thirty pieces of silver, and was it not a treacherous kiss from one of my own household? Was I not scourged and spit upon? Did they not pierce my hands, side and feet; and did they not cast lots for my vesture, and divide my raiment among them, all to fulfill the scriptures? Was I not numbered with transgressors? Did they not pass by me without breaking my bones, although they broke the bones of the two which were crucified with me? Was not my life taken from the earth, and did I not make my bed with the rich in my death, to fulfill the scriptures? Did I not rise again the third day, because it was written that I should not see corruption? Verily I say unto you, all these things were done to fulfill the words of the Prophet.

Again, did I not predict the destruction of Jerusalem and the temple, and the dispersion and long captivity of the Jews? Did I not forewarn my disciples to flee out of Judea to the mountains? Is it not written by my servant Luke? (See Luke 21). And has it not come to pass, every whit, in relation to the city and temple, and in relation to the Jewish nation? Did I not say that Jerusalem should be trodden under foot of the Gentiles, till the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled? Are not all these things fulfilled even unto this day?

Again; did I not say there should be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars, and upon the earth distress of nations with perplexity, men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which should come upon the earth? Did I not forewarn you that when you see these signs begin to come to pass, you might know that the kingdom of God was nigh at hand, and that all the tribes of the earth should mourn, and they should see me coming with the clouds of heaven with power and great glory? Have not these signs begun to come to pass? Why then do some affirm that the coming of the Lord is not near, or that I will not come in person, in a cloud, in like manner as I ascended? For I will come upon them unawares, and they shall not reign with me on the earth. Again, there are many who err on the other extreme, not knowing the scriptures, neither the power of God. Behold they set an appointed time for my coming, and it fails to come to pass; and they cry unto me with much importunity to come down among them and not to disappoint them. But they can not alter the times and seasons which the Father hath put in his own power, nor cause me to disregard that which is written.

Behold my servant Peter testified that the heavens must receive me, until the times of restitution of all things which I had spoken by the mouth of all the holy prophets since the world began. I also testified to my people, while in the flesh, that this gospel of the kingdom should first be preached to all nations for a testimony, and then I would come. My servant Paul also testified that I would come in flaming fire, taking vengeance on all those who know not God and obey not the gospel.

Now, verily, I say unto you, if I were to come before these scriptures were fulfilled, I should be guilty both of falsehood and injustice. It would be falsehood to break my word, and it would be unjust to destroy a people for not obeying that which they had not been taught, nor had sufficient opportunity to obey. Indeed, many of the very people who manifest so much zeal to warn others, and who pray so earnestly for my coming, have not themselves understood the gospel nor obeyed it; and should I come, in answer to their prayers, it would be to their own destruction.

Again; the circumstance of my coming, and the very place where I will set my feet, are clearly foretold by the prophets. Behold I have told you by the mouth of my servant Zachariah, that my people Israel should be gathered to the land of Canaan, which I gave unto Abraham and his seed for an everlasting inheritance, and that Jerusalem should be rebuilt, and the temple and sanctuary also; and that all the nations round about should be gathered there to fight against my people, Israel; and that Judah should fight in their own defense, and that the weak among them should be as David, and the strong among them as the angel of the Lord; and thus the nations who should be in the siege against Jerusalem should be cut in pieces; and then and under those circumstances they should look upon me whom they had pierced, and should mourn and repent, and find a fountain opened in that day for the inhabitants of Jerusalem, for sin and uncleanness. Not only did my servant Zachariah tell these things, but he also told that in that day my feet should stand upon the Mount of Olives, which is before Jerusalem on the east; that the earth would cleave in twain beneath my feet, and the mountain rend asunder at my presence; that half of the mountain would remove to the north, and the other half to the south and make a great valley where the mountain now stands; that I would come, and all the Saints with me in that day, to that place, and under those circumstances to defend the Jews, to destroy their enemies, and to cleanse and purify Jerusalem; that Jerusalem should be holy, and all the land round about should be safely inhabited from that time forth; and the summer and winter should succeed each other, and the year roll round in its season from that time forth. And that all the nations of the land should go up to Jerusalem from year to year to worship the King, the Lord of host, and to keep the feast of tabernacles; and that there should be one Lord, and his name one, and he should be King over all the earth.

Again; my servant Daniel was shown a vision of my coming in a cloud to take the dominion of the earth, and that all kingdoms should serve and obey me. But before I came he saw my kingdom organized in its beauty by the Ancient of Days and all prepared to receive me. Know ye therefore, O inhabitants of the earth, that all these, and many other scriptures must be fulfilled in connection with my coming, and that I can not come till the times of restoration are fulfilled, and till the circumstances and preparations are completed, as it is written; and that when all things are prepared I will come, and bring all the Saints with me to reign on the earth. Thrones shall be cast down, Kingdoms and States shall be broken up, Empires shall rend, but my word shall all be fulfilled, and my kingdom shall stand forever.

My servant David shall then be seated on the throne of Israel at Jerusalem; mine Apostles who suffered with me in the flesh, shall be seated on twelve thrones to administer justice and judgment to the twelve tribes; and my Saints shall be placed in power upon the earth, and administer the affairs of government.

My laws shall be the only creed, the only standard of justice, and my Saints the only kings, governors and magistrates upon the earth. Intelligence and truth shall prevail; error and darkness flee away; death shall be swallowed up in victory; life shall be everlasting, and peace and love shall crown the whole and thrill through every bosom.

Earth shall feel the blessing. The parched ground shall abound in pools; the thirsty land in springs of water; the desert shall blossom as the rose, and vegetation bloom as Eden, while all the beasts of the field shall dwell in peace. Man shall plant gardens and eat the fruit of them; he shall plant vineyards and drink the wine of them; he shall build houses and inhabit them. His children shall multiply in the earth and come to a good old age; and he whose years are numbered shall be changed within the twinkling of an eye, and shall live and reign with me forever.

And now verily I say unto you, and unto all men, repent of all your errors and wicked works, obey my gospel, and become members of my kingdom, that there may be one fold and one shepherd. And in order that you may understand my gospel in its plainness and in its fullness, I will now declare it unto you, even the gospel which you must obey, in order to be prepared for my coming; without which you can never reign with me on the earth.

Believe in me, for I have been crucified and have risen again from the dead as your Lord and your Redeemer. Repent of all your errors, and of all your sins and follies; come unto me with a broken heart and a contrite spirit, and be baptized in my name for the remission of your sins; receive the gift of the Holy Ghost through the laying on of the hand of my servants, and then serve me faithfully to the end, and you shall have eternal life.

Behold, I the Lord have spoken it by the mouth of my servant, and I will bear witness of its truth by my spirit to all those who will seek with all their heart to know and do the truth,—even so, Amen."

A DIALOGUE.

RESPECTING THE CHURCH OF CHRIST IN THESE LAST DAYS, THE CHURCH OF CHRIST IN FORMER DAYS, AND THE CHURCH OF SO-CALLED MODERN CHRISTIANITY.

BETWEEN DR. TWINETEXT AND ELDER D.

PART SEVEN.

DOCTOR T.—Elder, I confess that, to use a vulgar phrase, "you rather got me," on my assertion that the Bible was all the revelation that God had given to man. I wonder I never read of those books, visions and prophecies before. But the Bible does refer to them, and I am compelled to give that up; but I think I have you on the subject of new revelation. And if I can establish my position on that point, I shall have proved that Smith was an impostor, whether my former charges stand or fall. It is my turn to quote scripture. Jesus says "all the prophets and the law prophesied until John." (Matth. 11:13). This I understand to mean that as the law was done away, so prophets were to be no longer, and that John was the last of the prophets, and as the forerunner of Christ he fitly closed up the prophetic dispensation.

Elder D.—Permit me, Doctor, to examine each passage and argument as you present them. Luke records this statement of our Lord, but he omits the word, "all," and says: "The law and the prophets were until John, since that time the kingdom of God is preached." (Luke 16:16). It is likely Luke understood the meaning of our Lord as well as Matthew; but neither Matthew nor Luke convey the idea that John was the last of the prophets. They simply mean, that all the prophets that had lived, together with the law, pointed to the time of John, and to the fact of his being the forerunner of the Messiah. As evidence, see Christ's words in the next verse: "And if ye will receive it, this is Elias which was for to come." (See Mal. 3:1). Nor was the law abolished until it was fulfilled in Christ. And instead of John being the last prophet that God should send, he prepared the way for a greater prophet,—the one whom Moses predicted should come, (Deut. 18:15), even Jesus the Christ, "our Prophet, Priest and King." If God had decreed that John should be the last prophet, that was a false prediction of Moses, and Christ would have been an impostor. I only need remind you of the prophets in Christ's church as before shown to you. This fact, together with the fact that "The testimony of Jesus is the Spirit of prophecy, (Rev. 19:10), constitutes God's people prophets as on the day of Pentecost, and is evidence of the falsity of your position. Have you any further scripture on the matter?

T.—I have the plain and positive declaration of the inspired Paul. "Whether there be prophecies they shall fail; whether there be tongues they shall cease." (1 Cor. 13:8). This is emphatic; you can not dodge this; and you must yield the argument for once at least.

D.—I am not much of a dodger, nor inclined to that practice, and could return the insinuation with justice, but shall confine myself to the merits of your position. That is indeed a positive declaration of Paul's. No uncertain sound there! Prophecies shall fail; tongues shall cease,—when? Does he set a time? If so, why not quote that? It might let too much light on the subject; and the Master says "men love darkness rather than light." But I am satisfied you are only "following your superiors," in this as well as in other matters you named. Let us read: "For we know in part, and we prophesy in part; but when that which is perfect is come, then that which is in part shall be done away." Read on to the end of the chapter, and you get the key to the whole matter. These blessings, as before shown, were set in the church as aids in the divine life, helping us on to that perfect state necessary for our admission into the presence and companionship of our glorious Redeemer. When we have reached that divine excellence, "We shall see as we are seen, and know as we are known," as implied by Paul in the text. And the aids which Christ gave his church, having answered the purpose for which they were given, can then be dispensed with; but not until "that which is perfect is come," unto all the sons and daughters of God. This positive declaration of the inspired Paul does not help you much; but it strengthens the believers in prophecy, and inspires him with fresh energy to struggle on, thanking God for the bounteous means he has given to aid the weary and weak ones.

T.—Does not the word "perfect" apply to Christ as the perfect one? and had not Christ come? hence the time was already come when they should be done away.

D.—Christ was indeed the perfect one; but he desires his redeemed ones to be perfect also, and he gave these gifts for that purpose; and it is the perfection of God's children that Paul refers to. Had your view been correct, we should have all these things done away before he gave them; for it was after his crucifixion and ascension that he gave gifts unto men." (Eph. 4:8). The expression—"That which is perfect,"—refers to the perfect condition which the followers of Christ are to attain unto; and although Christ had come, had died and was resurrected, yet Paul acknowledges his own imperfection.

T.—I see you will get around every passage in some way. Can it be possible that you are right and all the world wrong? I think Paul's instruction to Timothy is certainly evidence of the all-sufficiency of the scriptures, and, no more being needed, they certainly would not be given. Paul informs Timothy that the Holy Scriptures are able to make him wise unto salvation. (2 Tim. 3:15). Now, as all mankind are sinners against the one God, and are in danger of the eternal consequences of that sin; and as there is but one means of salvation for all, that which would bring salvation to Timothy would bring it to all men; hence, if the Holy Scriptures were able—or enough—to save Timothy, they are enough to save all, and we do not need any more. Hence, God will give no more.

D.—Paul never said the scriptures were "all sufficient," or "enough," to save

Timothy. If they had been, there would have been no need of another Savior. The Anointed one might have remained at the right hand of his Father—and, in fact his mission to earth would have been unnecessary. Doctor, you are making new discoveries, but you have one more to make, and I think you are nearing the grand secret, and that is that you are wrong! I know you are not prepared to dispense with a living personal Savior and accept the dead letter of a book in his stead; yet this is the result of your reasoning. Now let us sift this matter. The Scriptures referred to by Paul were the Holy Scriptures that Timothy had known from a child. The New Testament had not then been written; hence Timothy only knew Moses and the prophets. If those were sufficient to make Timothy wise unto salvation, then, as you have reasoned, "what would make him wise unto salvation would make all other men thus wise," and we should not only not need a living, personal Savior, but we also should not need any more Holy Scripture than Moses and the prophets, and the New Testament would be as "one born out of due time," a useless superfluity, and entirely unnecessary. But there is a truth somewhere in Paul's instruction. Let us search for the hidden treasure. "And that from a child thou hast known the Holy Scriptures, which are able to make thee wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus." Doctor, here is the pearl of great price, the gem of eternal truth,—"through faith which is in Christ Jesus." Moses and the prophets all pointed the world to Christ. Every rite in the law, and every declaration of the prophets, had reference to Christ. And their united and unchangeable testimony was calculated to inspire the human mind with faith in Him; and this faith would make all who had it wise unto salvation. For as this same Apostle says:—"The righteousness of God is revealed from faith to faith: as it is written the just shall live by faith."—Rom. 1:16, 17. Faith, then, in the great Redeemer, Christ, is the preparation of the heart and mind for the revelation of the righteousness of God. And that righteousness or "gospel, is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." Hence, instead of doing away with revelation, it opens the way to receive it. For as David says: "The secret of the Lord is with them that fear him; and he will shew them his covenant."—Ps. 25:14.

T.—I have always heard that Smith was a wizard, and I believe he must have conferred his power upon his followers; for you make every scripture support your theory. But I have one more passage to present, and if that fails to silence you, I shall conclude it is useless to try to crush the theory of new revelation by the word of God.

D.—Permit me to correct another error. We do not "make" any scripture support our theory. We take the word of God as we find it, and accept its teachings without any turning or twisting. Truth is harmonious with itself, and Holy Scripture being truth, it is in harmony with every other truth, and only rings out the divine symphony of truth whether pertaining to things in heaven or things on earth. Now for your last stronghold. And let me warn you, that if the word of God does not "crush out the theory of new revelation," it is utterly useless for you or all the cunning of men and demons to try. "If God be for us who can be against us?"

T.—My evidence is drawn from almost the last words in the last chapter of the very last book in the sacred Canon, penned by the beloved Apostle John while wrapt in the inspiration of the Holy One and gazing upon things ineffable, and eternal; hence it is of the highest authority and can not be questioned by any true believer in God's word. It is indeed a fit seal to be placed by the Divine hand on the closing of his communications with and to man. And woe to the man that shall dare to break that seal, or presume that God has again spoken to the world!—"For I testify unto every man that heareth the words of the prophecy of this book. If any man shall add unto these things, God shall add unto him the plagues that are written in this book."—Rev. 22:18. I repeat, sir, this is God's closing seal to his sacred word; and the fiery indignation of the Almighty will rest upon the man who has dared to break it!

D.—I suppose you admit that every word of God in the Bible is of equal force to the words just quoted; and especially that all the writings of this beloved apostle are?

T.—Indeed I do; but this is very emphatic upon this subject.

D.—Yes; it is a very positive declaration—no uncertain sound in that—and if it means what you claim it does I must submit to your charge of imposture. But there are a few items I want to examine. You lay great stress on the fact that it is almost the last verse, in the last chapter of, as you claim, "the very last prophecy that God intended should be given." We will allow it its full weight after duly weighing your argument. Would you think John's gospel and his three epistles could be dispensed with from the sacred volume?

T.—No, Sir; not for one moment. For it is also written—"If any man shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the book of life, and out of the holy city, and from the thing which are written in this book."—Rev. 22:19.

D.—When was the Book of Revelations written?

T.—Authorities differ; but the fact of it being the last in the sacred Canon would indicate that it was the last written of all the sacred books.

D.—It should be the last, if it means what you claim it does, viz, "That there were to be no more revelations from God to man." I have consulted learned writers and historians on this matter, and as they are all opposed to additional revelations, their testimony will be of value. Dr. John Dick places the time of writing it, about A. D. 96, and that of the gospel of St. John A. D. 97. (Lectures on Theology, p. 46, 47, 51). And Bishop Watson in his Biblical and Theological Dictionary, (Article, Apocalypse) says, "We may consider this book as written in year 95 or 96." And in regard to the date of John's gospel he says: "If we accede to the opinion of those who contend for the year 97, this late date, exclusive of the authorities which support it, seems favored by the contents and design of the gospel itself."—Article, John the Evangelist.

Dr. Wm. Smith in his Dictionary of the Bible (Article Revelation of St. John), says: "The date of the Revelation is given by the majority of critics as A. D. 95-97. The style in which the messages to the seven churches are delivered rather suggests the notion that the book was written in Patmos." Of John's gospel, after referring to his banishment to Patmos, he says, "The accession of Nerva frees him from danger, and he returns to Ephesus. There he settles the Canon of the gospel history by formally attesting the truth of the three first gospels, and writing his own to supply what they left wanting." (Article, John the Apostle). Of the First Epistle of John this author says—"It was most likely written at the close of the first century. Like the gospel, it was probably written from Ephesus." This places the Revelations first in the order of time.

Dr. Fleetwood, in his "Life of Christ and Lives of the Apostles" says: "The greatest instance of St. John's care for the souls of men is in the writings he left to posterity: The first of which in the order of time, though placed last in the sacred Canon, is his Apocalypse, or Book of Revelation, which he wrote during his banishment to the Isle of Patmos. Next to the Apocalypse in order of time, are his three Epistles. Before he undertook the task of writing his gospel, he caused a general fast to be kept by all the Asiatic Churches, to implore the blessing of heaven on so great and momentous an undertaking."

The Historian of the Revised Version of the New Testament (Prof. Isaac H. Hall, L. L. D.) says: "The precise time when the several books of the New Testament were written can not in every case be determined certainly; but the following table will show the facts with a very close approximation to the true state of the case." He then places John's writings in the following order of time: "Revelation, A. D. 94; John's Gospel 96; 1 John 98; 2 John 98; 3 John 98." You certainly can not charge the above authors with collusion with Latter Day Saints, yet they all agree in the fact that the Revelations, though placed last in the sacred Canon, was not the last book written in the order of time; but that John himself wrote four books after it. And if your theory is correct, he brought himself under the curse and therefore his Gospel and three Epistles must be rejected as imposture, because additional to the Revelations! This would be taking away four of the brightest gems from the diadem of truth, yet this is the result of your argument, put forth in your intense zeal to destroy the hope of present and continued revelation.

T.—Is it possible those learned divines have come to this conclusion? I have never read these statements, or if I have I have not noticed them. I know of no facts contradictory of them except the fact of it being placed last in the present order of the sacred books. May not God have so directed the arrangement of those books, in order to forbid any man pretending to more revelation?

D.—It would be very dangerous for us to suppose what the facts do not warrant. And it would be dishonoring the divine name and character to suppose that he would represent that book as the last written when he had inspired his servant to write at least three more afterward. And it would be the height of inconsistency for him to impress his servant with the idea that inspiration should cease with those words, and then inspire him to write four more books! But the fact of the order of the books is not the only objection to your arguments. I have another, and much stronger, in the fact that, while man is forbidden to add to the divine word, it nowhere intimates that God will not give more. And surely, if God speaks, man should hear. If he sends an angel we must receive the divine messenger. And if the Holy Spirit inspires, man must give utterance to the inspiration, unless as in the case of Paul he is forbidden. The declaration you have relied upon as your last stronghold, only forbids man to add to or take from that part of God's word. And it would be equally wrong to add to or take from any part of God's word, and I fear that while you are trying to prove that revelation has forever ceased, you are guilty of adding, and are placing yourself in danger of the curse which you imagine must fall upon the Latter Day Saints and the prophet of the last days.

T.—I confess you have taken the last Biblical weapon out of my hand against present revelation. But—

D.—Permit me to point to another discrepancy in your argument, and then I will listen to your further objections. You made John's inhibition to apply to the Bible as a book; or to the whole volume of revelation, while John only applied it with reference to any addition to the book he had just then penned. He uses the terms "the book of this prophecy." Now, that book is acknowledged by all to be independent of all the other books of the sacred volume,—just as much as John's gospel was and is independent of Matthew's. In fact, history declares that some of the learned rejected the Apocalypse entire. Dionysius, Bishop of Alexandria, expressed doubts respecting John being the author; and Luther confidently proclaimed that John was not the author. Marcion rejected the Apocalypse in toto; and others followed his wake declaring it was the work of Cerinthus, a writer of later date than John, (see Smith's dictionary of the Bible), so that the prohibition in this particular applies only to man's adding to, or taking from that particular book. Moses said, "Ye shall not add unto the word that I command you, neither shall ye diminish aught from it." (Deut. 4: 2; and 12: 32). Solomon said; "Add thou not unto his words, lest he reprove thee, and thou be found a liar." These commands are as positive and imperative as that of John, yet you would not say that God had forbidden man to receive any more revelation than the law of Moses, nor that intimated that he would give no more. If you did you must reject the prophets, and also the New Testament with John's prohibition. Moses, Solomon, and John, showed the danger of men adding their views, and claiming them as part and parcel of the word of God. In other words, "teaching for doctrines the commandments of men;" or claiming to speak in the name of the Lord when he has not sent them. Now for your other objections.

T.—I was going to urge that the doctrine of continued revelation is a dangerous one from the fact that, if it becomes general, it opens the way for imposition by base, designing men promulgating abominable doctrines under the pretense that they have received a revelation, and thus by pandering to the lusts and caprices of men, they may work great injury to mankind. Paul spoke of "False apostles and secret workers transforming themselves into the apostles of the Lord Jesus Christ, and no marvel, for Satan himself is transformed into an angel of light." (2 Cor. 11: 13, 14).

D.—Because there is great danger that men may counterfeit the coin of the United States, does that hinder the government from issuing the true coin? Did you ever know a counterfeit to exist when there was no true coin? Would it be likely to exist if the government had proclaimed its determination to issue no more coin? God well knew there would be false prophets and apostles, but that did not prevent him from sending true ones. He knew men would counterfeit his word; but while this was being done he did not slacken his hand in revealing himself to his children. In fact, David says,—"The secret of the Lord is with them that fear him; and he will shew them his covenant." Ps. 25: 14. Solomon says,—"His secret is with the righteous."—Prov. 3: 32. And since God is no respecter of persons, the righteous, in all ages, will receive the same evidence of fatherly love and care. Moreover, the revelation of the character of the great Jehovah is a grand key by which apostles and prophets may be known, and their utterances tested. In Jesus Christ he has revealed his will to man, and since he "changes not," if any revelation is opposed in spirit or letter to the character of God, we may know it is from another source; and also if it is opposed in spirit or letter to the teachings of Christ we may know it is not of God, for God changes not. The great danger lies, not in present revelation, but in men not making themselves acquainted with the revelation God has made of himself, and of his will past and present. The history of God's dealings with his people is the history of continued revelation from God to man. Without this the condition of man is spoken of as a state of famine, (Amos 8: 11, 12, 13), and unto a night of darkness,—“For there is no answer for God.” (Micah 3: 6, 7). What can be worse than a state of famine, or midnight darkness, when men “grope as the blind for the wall?” Yet such will be the spiritual condition of the world, and always has been when there was no vision from God. Solomon emphatically declares, “Where there is no vision, the people perish;” and adds, “but he that keepeth the law, happy is he.” (Prov. 29: 18). The reason of the law-keepers happiness is, that God reveleth unto him his secret. He is treated, not as a servant, but as a friend of God, (John 15: 15), as was Abraham, (Gen. 18: 17, 19.)

T.—My friend, the word vision in Prov. 29th does not signify such as Daniel or Isaiah saw, but merely sight—the natural eyesight.

D.—I have heard it so interpreted; but, unfortunately for your rendering, it is the same Hebrew word “chazon” which is used in speaking of the visions of Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Daniel, etc. It is true the word rendered vision in English, in different places is sometimes expressed differently in the Hebrew; but it nearly always refers to a supernatural appearance, and rarely, if ever, to the natural sight. (See Young’s Bible Concordance). But to return. Can the danger of imposition from “false prophets” imitating the true be greater than the danger of imposition from “false teachers” who “teach for doctrines the commandments of men,” under the plea that God does not commune with man any more? Have there not been as damnable heresies taught by those who denied present and continued revelation as ever were by the base imitators of the true, while revelation from God still flowed in its legitimate channel? Could any thing be more fiendish than Calvin’s doctrine of election and reprobation? Any thing more erroneous than the denial of the sonship of Jesus Christ, the rejection of his ordinances, the repudiation of the literal resurrection of the body, the treading underfoot of the great sacrifice made by Christ, and in fine, the utter rejection (by many who are honored as advanced thinkers) of the whole system of revelation, declaring it a myth? Yet all these are the legitimate outgrowths of the rejection of more revelation from God. They have chosen to be a law unto themselves. “They are drunken but not with wine; they stagger, but not with strong drink. For the Lord hath poured out upon you the spirit of deep sleep, and hath closed your eyes: The prophets and seers hath he covered.”—Isa. 29: 9, 10. But the true Church of Christ rejoices in the fact that God hath again lifted the veil and revealed himself as of old, in all the grandeur and glory of His divine character, “The eyes of the blind see out of obscurity, and out of darkness, the meek increase their joy in the Lord, and the poor among men rejoice in the Holy One of Israel.”—Isa 29: 18, 19.

T.—I would be glad if I could see as you see; but it seems so strange and different from the views of the learned world and our time honored forms of faith and worship, that I am not prepared to renounce the orthodox theology to accept what seems to be shrouded in such mystery, as the doctrine of present revelation.

D.—The ways of God are always strange to the world. He says, “My thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways. For as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my ways higher than your ways, and my thoughts than your thoughts.”—Isa. 57: 9, 10. And the work which God is now doing is indeed “a marvelous work, and a wonder;” for “the wisdom of the wise men” was to “perish,” “and the understanding of the prudent men to be hid.”—Isa. 29: 14). But if it is strange to you, it is not new. It is a renewed invitation from God to man—not from man to man saying,—“Prepare ye, prepare ye, for that which is to come; for the Lord is nigh; and the anger of the Lord is kindled, and his sword is bathed in heaven, and it shall fall upon the inhabitants of the earth; and the arm of the Lord shall be revealed; and the day cometh that they who will not hear the voice of the Lord, neither the voice of his servants, neither give heed to the words of the prophets and apostles, shall be cut off from among the people; for they have strayed from mine ordinances, and have broken mine everlasting covenant; they seek not the Lord to establish his righteousness, but every man walketh in his own way, and after the image of his own God, whose image is in the likeness of the world, and whose substance is that of an idol, which waxeth old and shall perish in Babylon, even Babylon the great, which shall fall.”—Doc. and Cov. 1: 3. This doom Babylon has brought upon herself by rejecting the revelations of God, past and present and substituting therefor the doctrine and traditions of men, under the plea that God speaks to man no more.

DAVID WHITMER ON HIS DEATH-BED.

[Special Correspondence to Chicago Tribune].

DAVID WHITMER, one of the founders of the Mormon Church, and a resident of the quaint and interesting village of Richmond, Ray county, Missouri, for almost a half century, lies at the point of death. At the family homestead are gathered the children, grandchildren, and great-grandchildren of the dying patriarch, and beside his death-bed is the devoted woman who linked her life and fortune with his more than fifty years ago. When your correspondent called at the house to-day and was summoned into the bed-chamber where Father Whitmer was calmly awaiting the final summons, a smile lighted up the old man’s countenance as he half rose and feebly pressed the visitor’s hand, and then, as if overcome by the effort, his head sunk back on the pillows. When told of the visitor’s mission and that he had journeyed from Chicago to prepare an historical sketch on one who had played so important a part in translating the Mormon Bible and proselyting for the Mormon Church, the request for information met with a cheerful response. Fearing, however, that the task would be too great the family deputed a member of the household to relate the history in the presence of Father Whitmer, the narration being closely followed by him and subjected to frequent corrections and interpolations.

David Whitmer was born in Pennsylvania, January 6th, 1805. The protograph, from which the above likeness was engraved, was taken four years ago, and as compared with a protograph taken in 1872, shows that he has aged rapidly during the last few years. The accompanying autograph was written to-day, while the dying man lay propped up on his pillows. “It is probably the last time this hand will ever grasp a pen,” he remarked, as he made the final stroke. While David was yet an infant his father, who served his country through the Revolutionary War, removed with his family to Western New York and settled on a farm in Ontario county, near Watkins Glen. The father, who was a hard-working, God-fearing man, was a strict Presbyterian and brought his children up with rigid sectarian discipline. Besides a daughter who married Oliver Cowdery, the village school-master, there were four sons—Jacob, John, David, and Christian—who helped their father till his farm until they had arrived at the age of manhood. During the early part of June, 1829, Oliver Cowdery incidently learned that a young man named Joseph Smith had found a valuable golden treasure in the northern part of the county, and imparted the information to David. They decided to investigate the rumor, and Cowdery traveled to the home of Smith for that purpose. On the road he found the community teeming with excitement over the alleged treasure, and heard several persons threaten to kill the finder unless he divided his wealth with them. When asked how they knew such a treasure had been found, several asserted that they had seen the receptacle from which it was taken by Smith. Cowdery, assured that there was more to the vague rumors than he had at first believed, pushed on to the home of Smith, who was living on his father’s farm near Manchester. At first he found Smith inclined to be uncommunicative, but was finally permitted to view the treasure, and was greatly impressed by the sight. In fact his wonderment was so great that he at once wrote to David to come without delay. David did so, and was equally mystified.

The treasure consisted of a number of golden plates, about eight inches long and seven inches wide, about as thick as ordinary sheet tin, and bound together in the form of a volume by three gold rings. A large portion of the volume was securely sealed, but on the loose pages were engraved hieroglyphics expressive of some language at that time unknown to any of the persons mentioned. Together with the golden tablets were a pair of spectacles, set in silver bows.

Mr. Whitmer then described Smith’s story of the vision in which the location of the plates was revealed, with the history of the Nephites, Moroni's labor, and Smith's finding of the tablets, with which every one is familiar.

TRANSLATING THE PLATES.

Whitmer and Cowdery were greatly impressed by the recital of this strange story, and were conducted to the hill, where they personally viewed the receptacle in which Moroni, at the beginning of the fifth century, had concealed the history of his fathers. Smith also said that he had been commanded to at once begin the translation of the work in the presence of three witnesses. In accordance with this command, Smith, Cowdery, and Whitmer proceeded to the latter's home, accompanied by Smith's wife, and bearing with them the precious plates and spectacles. The house of the senior Whitmer was a primitive and poorly designed structure, but it was deemed the most secure for carrying out the sacred trust on account of the threats that had been made against Smith by his mercenary neighbors. In order to give privacy to the proceeding a blanket, which served as a portiere, was stretched across the family living room to shelter the translators and the plates from the eye of any who might call at the house while the work was in progress. This, Mr. Whitmer says, was the only use made of the blanket, and it was not for the purpose of concealing the plates or the translator from the eyes of the amanuensis. In fact, Smith was at no time hidden from his collaborators, and the translation was performed in the presence of not only the persons mentioned, but of the entire Whitmer household and several of Smith's relatives besides.

The work of translating the tablets consumed about eight months, Smith acting as the seer and Oliver Cowdery, Smith's wife, and Christian Whitmer, brother of David, performing the duties of amanuenses, in whose handwriting the original manuscript now is. Each time before resuming the work all present would kneel in prayer and invoke the Divine blessing on the proceeding. After prayer Smith would sit on one side of a table and the amanuenses, in turn as they became tired, on the other. Those present and not actively engaged in the work seated themselves around the room and then the work began. After affixing the magical spectacles to his eyes, Smith would take the plates and translate the characters one at a time. The graven characters would appear in succession to the seer, and directly under the character, when viewed through the glasses, would be the translation in English. Sometimes the character would be a single word, and frequently an entire sentence. In translating the characters Smith, who was illiterate and but little versed in Biblical lore, was oftentimes compelled to spell the words out, not knowing the correct pronunciation, and Mr. Whitmer recalls the fact that at that time Smith did not even know that Jerusalem was a walled city. Cowdery, however, being a school-teacher, rendered invaluable aid in pronouncing hard words and giving their proper definition.

MORE MIRACULOUS DEVELOPMENTS.

A miracle is related by Mr. Whitmer as occurring while the translation was in progress. It seems that Smith, who was puffed up with his great importance as a confidential secretary to the Lord, displeased the Master by entering into some carnal confab in relation to the work. For this offense he was punished by having the celestial visitant, who first commissioned him to inaugurate the work, suddenly appear and carry off the plates and spectacles. In this connection it might also be mentioned that Martin Harris, one of the witnesses to the translation, a farmer in the same county and a man of simple mind and taste, was sent by Smith with a copy of the characters to Prof. Charles Anthon, a professor of languages in Columbia College and author of several well-known works, who pronounced the language inscribed on the plates Reformed Egyptian.

About this time Harris, inspired by curiosity and elation, took sixteen of the golden tablets home to show his wife, who is alleged to have stolen them from a bureau drawer and peddled them among her friends. For this offense Harris was severely reprimanded by the Lord, through Smith, but the angel afterwards recovered the plates and restored them. Smith's offense of tattling the secrets of the work among his neighbors was less readily condoned, and for a long time the work was suspended, the angel being in possession of the plates and spectacles. Finally, when Smith had fully repented of his rash conduct, he was forgiven. The plates, however, were not returned, but instead Smith was given by the angel a Urim and Thummim of another pattern, it being shaped in oval or kidney form. This seer's stone he was instructed to place in his hat, and on covering his face with the hat the character and translation would appear on the stone.

This worked just as satisfactorily as the old method, but at no time thereafter was the backsliding Joseph intrusted with the precious plates. However, the entire portion of the golden volume, which the angel said might be translated, was reduced by the nimble amanuenses to readable manuscript. The other installment was withheld until the Lord could discover what effect the first had on the Gentiles. That He was not pleased with the result is manifested by the fact that the sealed portion has not yet been delivered to the world.

THE ANGEL IN THE PASTURE.

After the translation was completed Smith informed Cowdery, Whitmer and Harris that the Lord had instructed him that the time was at hand when they should testify to all nations, tongues and people concerning this work. These four Apostles of the Lord, as they were designated, accordingly assembled in a pasture, cleared of underbrush, at a point equally distant between two public highways. About the noonday hour they were seated on a log waiting for the promised manifestations, having previously knelt in prayer. All at once the heavens seemed to open and there appeared a dazzling shaft of light, beside which the light of the sun appeared dim. Through this cleft in the sky, which seemed to lead way up to the pearly gates beyond, appeared an angel, disguised as a man, bearing the semblance of a table. The angel descended to the earth, landing nearly at their feet. On this table were the plates of gold from which they had just translated the Book of Mormon, and the plates of brass on which were inscribed the commandments written by Moses and which had been taken from Jerusalem by Nephi six hundred years before Christ and afterwards transported to America. The four Apostles were then commanded to go forth among men and preach religion as set down in the Book of Mormon.

After this wonderful manifestation Martin Harris mortgaged his farm for $1,500 in order to obtain funds for printing the Book of Mormon, and all four set about founding a church, which was called the Church of Christ, as commanded in the Book of Mormon. The four Apostles began preaching, and were so successful in securing converts to the new religion that a church was organized April 6th, 1830. The Book of Mormon was also given to the world that year. Concerning the converts Mr. Whitmer says that among the first adherents to embrace the new faith were many of the most intellectual and refined men and women in that locality, and the ranks were not recruited from the ignorant and sensuous classes like the Mormons of Utah. The year following the organization of the church the disciples moved to Ohio, where they had been most successful in proselyting, and a temple was erected at Kirtland. It was at this place that Sidney Rigdon and Brigham Young joined the church, and it was here that the first dissensions occurred.

Concerning Sidney Rigdon, who was said to have stolen the manuscript of the Book of Mormon, which, it was alleged, had been written by a Presbyterian preacher named Solomon Spaulding, and originally intended as a romance, Mr. Whitmer asserts that nothing could have been more improbable, as neither Smith, himself, or the other disciples ever knew Rigdon until they moved to Ohio.

HE KEPT THE RECORDS.

The original manuscript from which the Book of Mormon was printed is still in Mr. Whitmer's possession and most of it is in the handwriting of his brother Christian and his brother-in-law, Oliver Cowdery. Mr. Whitmer also has an exhaustive history of the church, which was compiled by his brother, and an accurate copy of several plates from which the Book of Mormon was translated. These records he has preserved against all temptations and in the face of death. Several years ago a delegation of Mormons came to Richmond from Salt Lake and made every overture to Mr. Whitmer in a vain attempt to gain possession of the records, but he stood aloof and declined every offer. A prominent business man of the place, at that time engaged in banking, informed your correspondent that he knows of his own knowledge that the Mormon Church would have willingly paid Mr. Whitmer $100,000 for the documents, and that the delegation returned home thoroughly convinced that Mr. Whitmer was proof against all financial temptation so far as concerned his records.

It was while the church was flourishing at Kirtland that the name was changed from Church of Christ to Latter Day Saints. Mr. Whitmer, who always adhered to the teachings of Mormon, left Kirtland and journeyed into the wilds of Missouri in company with one other elder, preaching the truth as he believed it to be, and exhorting men and women to Christ. Many new converts were secured, and he assisted in establishing the settlement of Jackson county, Missouri. It was here that the Ohio Mormons found refuge when driven away from Kirtland after Smith and Rigdon had been tarred and feathered for fraudulent banking. For a while the church flourished in Jackson county, with headquarters at Independence, but when the trouble occurred between the Mormons and Missourians the former were driven from the county into Caldwell county, where they founded a settlement and named it Far West. David Whitmer, stripped of his earthly possessions, was warned to flee for his life, and, accompanied by his family, his brothers and their families, and Oliver Cowdery, he journeyed to Ray county, where he settled at Richmond in 1838. At that time he had nothing left but a single horse and wagon and his precious records. It was then that the Danites were organized, and it is said that their formation was for the purpose of killing the Whitmers and Cowdery, they having been commanded and openly refused to obey the so-called leaders, right or wrong. The Whitmers and Cowdery then renounced the church, as conducted, but during the years they have lived in Ray county they have continued to teach the precepts according to the original Church of Christ.

THE LORD'S ANOINTED.

David Whitmer engaged in teaming at his new home, and in the campaign when the militia was ordered to drive the Mormons from the State at the point of the bayonet, he drove one of the military baggage-wagons to Far West. During the melee that followed he was handed a musket by the soldiery and ordered to shoot Joseph Smith, but threw the musket down, declaring he "would not harm the Lord's anointed." After that memorable event, in which Smith was taken prisoner, David returned to Richmond, and has always asserted that Joseph Smith was called and commanded by God to translate the "Book of Mormon," and that Smith, as he knew him, was a righteous, God-fearing man. Mr. Whitmer to-day clings to the religious belief of his early manhood and has never sanctioned polygamy, which he considers one of the great est abominations of the earth. The Book of Mormon as originally translated he asserts to be without a moral blemish, and says it is eminently fit for the library of the most exacting moral philosopher. It expressly forbids polygamy, and Mr. Whitmer claims that if the population of Salt Lake would live in accordance with the strict teachings of the book it would exert a greater influence in crushing out what he terms the "viper polygamy" than any other known agency. Concerning his work in the Church of Christ he looks upon his commission to apostleship as concurrent to having had a direct message from heaven through an angel of the Lord, and even now, at the threshold of death, he "stands by that pure republic, established by Christ on earth and given to the world in its original idiom, the Book of Mormon." Through the mediumship of Joseph Smith he says he received many messages from heaven which convinced him of his divine calling. The text of these messages he refuses to relate, claiming that the promises of the Lord to his apostles should be secretly locked in the breast and not blatantly betrayed to carnal minds, but, he says, they were miraculous in their fulfillment and have stood the test of his reasoning through a long life of fact and experience.

A GOOD CITIZEN.

As a citizen of Richmond he stands deservedly high, having filled the office of Mayor and Councilman. Upright in his dealings with men and just towards all, he has progressed gradually with the country until he and his children and their children have secured good business standing and are regarded among the best citizens of Ray County.

Of those who took part in the original translation, Joseph Smith was shot by a mob in 1844, Oliver Cowdery died in this county thirty years ago, leaving a wife and daughter, both of whom are yet living and reside in Silver City, Mo. John Whitmer, a prosperous farmer, died at Far West in 1878, leaving children and grandchildren. Jacob Whitmer passed away many years ago, and his son, John C., a white-haired elder of the Church of Christ, continues to preach the religion of his father in and about Richmond.

David Whitmer has two children, a son and daughter. The son, David J., is without issue. The daughter, Mrs. Julius Schweich, resides here and is the mother of two children, both of whom have children. George, the eldest of Mrs. Schweich's children, is a shrewd business man and is associated with his uncle, David J. Whitmer, in the livery business. His sister, Josie, is the wife of J. R. Van Cleve, private secretary to the Collector of Customs at Chicago.—Richmond, Mo., Dec. 15th.

RICHMOND, Mo., Dec. 16.—[Special.]—David Whitmer, who lies at the point of death, had a sinking spell this afternoon and is not expected to last until morning.

Miscellaneous.

CONFERENCE NOTICES.

Pittsburgh Conference will convene at Pittsburgh, Pa., on Saturday, January 30th, 1886, at half-past one o'clock and continue over the Sabbath. It is expected that several of the traveling ministry will be there. Send all reports promptly to Bro. Frank J. Reese, No. 9 Hazel street, Pittsburgh, Pa. Visiting Saints will be amply provided for, and those who can be present should notify Bro. Frank Criley, care No. 33 Fifth Avenue, Pittsburgh, in time so that arrangements can be made for their entertainment, and for reception committee to meet them at Railroad Stations. Delegates will be appointed to represent the district at General Conference, April 6th next. G. T. GRIFFITHS, Pres. of Dist.

The next conference of the Massachusetts District will be held in Dennisport, Mass., on Saturday, January 30th, 1886, commencing at half-past two o'clock, in the Saint's Chapel. A full attendance is desired as there should be delegates appointed to represent our district in the next General Conference. It is expected that free return tickets will be furnished as heretofore. The Saints are especially requested to pray for the success of the meetings.

NOTICES.

Notice is hereby given, that George W. Payton, an Elder, and president of Glen Alpine Branch, of the Central Nebraska District, has absented himself from his family, and it is said, leaving debts unpaid, and is purposely evading the officers of the law. Any information concerning his whereabouts would be acceptable, and is much desired. By president of Central Nebraska District. GEO. S. HYDE.

DIED.

MERRILL.—In East Des Moines, Iowa, December 14th, 1885, of membranous croup, Benjamin D., only son of Bro. Ezra and Sr. Eliza Merrill, aged 2 years, 1 month and 23 days. Blessed by Elders W. C. Nirk and Roth. Funeral service by Elder W. C. Nirk.

*Bright bud of promise, lent, not given,
Early called from earth to heaven;
Now blooming in a better land,
Now mingling with the spirit band.
In sinless purity passed away,
Ever dwelling in eternal day.*

LUCY B. MERRILL.

COBB.—At the residence of her parents, in Little High Valley, near Lower Lake, Lake county, California, November 7th, 1885, Sister Hester E. Cobb, daughter of John and Esther E. Cobb, aged 27 years, 4 months. She was born in Cobb Valley, Napa county, California; baptized by Elder E. Banta, at Middletown, California, August 30th, 1868. She passed away in full faith and hope of the glorious resurrection promised in Christ. Sister Hester was at the time of her sickness and death acting clerk of the Spruce Grove Branch. She was loved by all who knew her, and her young companions of Lower Lake gave a beautiful tribute to her memory, by covering her grave with wreaths of the most beautiful flowers, as a token of the respect and love they held for her. Her early life was clouded with trouble and sorrow, but she struggled so perseveringly to overcome and make herself useful and an honored member of society, that all admired her character. Her death occurring just as life seemed opening with more of hope and happiness than had ever brightened her life, saddens the hearts and makes it harder to be borne by those who loved her so well; and were it not for the blessed assurance that she sleeps the sleep of the just, and will awaken to the light and joy of an endless day with those who die in the Lord, our mourning would be sad indeed. But God has made it possible for us to meet again; though death may separate for awhile, we shall meet in the newness of life, immortal, to dwell with the blessed of God. So cheer up, father, cheer up, mother; she has only gone before. A. H. S.

FONTANELLE, Iowa, Dec. 18th.

Dear Herald: I have only to say, my health is on the decline: I have not long to stay. It is known to some of your readers that Nelson Bates, an Elder in the old organization of the church has resided here since February, 1866, and that he has been suffering with a cancer on and in his ear. For the last three months no person can tell the pain he has had to endure. He died the 16th of this month—a scene which he and his friends had been looking for a month or more. Funeral service took place on the 17th.

THE ART OF CONTENTMENT.

To learn the art of contentment, is only to learn what happiness actually consists in. Sensual pleasures and little to its substance. Ease, if by that be meant exemption from labor, contributes nothing. One, however, constant spring of satisfaction, and almost infallible support of cheerfulness and spirits, is the exercise of domestic affections—the presence of objects of tenderness and endearment in our families, our kindred, our friends. Now, have the poor anything to complain of here? Are they not surrounded by their relatives, as generally as others? The poor man has his wife and children about him; and what has the rich man more? He has the same enjoyment of their society, the same solicitude for their welfare, the same pleasure in their good qualities, improvement, and success; their connection with him is as strict and intimate, their attachment as strong, their gratitude as warm. I have no propensity to envy any one, least of all the rich and great; but, if I were disposed to this weakness, the subject of my envy would be, a healthy young man, in full possession of his strength and faculties, going forth in the morning, to work for his wife and children, or bringing them home his wages at night.—Paley.

The Saints' Herald.

JOSEPH SMITH . . . . . EDITOR
W. W. BLAIR . . . . . ASSOCIATE EDITOR.

Lamoni, Iowa, January 9, 1886.

THE Utah Journal, of Logan, Utah in its issue for December 26th, 1885, condones its own want of fairness in regard to what we wrote respecting the revealed will of God on the marriage relation prior to 1843, in the manner following.

"The Saints Herald of Lamoni, Iowa, in its issue of December 5th, boils with indignation over a criticism we offered on a sentence which begins as follows: "But at every time and in every place when God has uttered his will regarding the institution of marriage prior to 1843 such utterances have," etc. It seems that the Herald does not yet understand that if God revealed a certain law prior to a certain specified time, that the inference is naturally drawn that at the time mentioned, He, God, did reveal a different law; or why specify in regard to what God's will was concerning marriage prior to 1843, if at that date he did not change. Why not make a clear and plain statement to the effect that God always revealed his will in the one way? The sentence which we quoted was a complete statement, and we have a right to criticize it as such."

The HERALD understands this, that if God revealed his will or law concerning a matter of so vital moment as this marriage question has become to Utah Mormons, for a number of times prior to any given and recent date, the inference is not that he has subsequent to that date revealed a different and opposite rule or law as his will; but, if he has revealed anything on the subject it should be in conformity to what he had before time stated in regard to it.

We make the statement again, as we made it in October 24th, HERALD: "If we did not believe that the expressed will of God under whose commandment the church was organized in 1830 had specifically defined what should be the rule in regard to the institution of marriage and that it was monogamic, and that such defined rule was intended to be as final as the character of God is unchangeable, we should never have raised a voice in reference to it, neither in the valleys of Utah, nor elsewhere. But at every time and in every place when God has uttered his will regarding the institution of marriage prior to 1843, such utterance has been of a similar nature to the statement in Genesis: "For this cause shall a man leave father and mother and cleave unto his wife;" which statement is qualified beyond a peradventure by its repetition by Christ, as stated by Matthew and Mark; with the addition of the words, "and they twain shall be one flesh." For this reason we have ever averred that when the claim was made that a change had been made in the institution of marriage by a revelation in 1843, such revelation was not from God, and could not and never did supercede the rule originally given." HERALD for October 24th, 1885.

Language can hardly be plainer than the foregoing. The Journal took a part of the statement as we gave it, and perverted its meaning. Had the whole been given in its connection no such inference as the Journal of the 5th of December gives it could have been properly draw from it.

The claim has been made that a revelation authorizing plural marriage was received by the Seer, July 12th, 1843. The revelation, so claimed to have been received, was enunciated by Pres. Brigham Young, August 29th, 1852, eight years and two months after the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith. This claim for divine sanction we have persistently denied. To show that our denial was based upon good and sufficient proofs we cited the fact that the utterances of God upon the subject for nearly six thousand years, including the period of time between 1830 and 1843, during which the church was founded and flourished, had been always monogamic; and for this reason the so-called revelation was not from God.

Our indignation was a righteous one and we had a right to "boil;" and our contemporary of the Journal may "stew" now, and "fry" by and by if he does not mend his ways and obey both the laws of God and the land.

PRESIDENT JOSEPH SMITH returned here from Utah and the Rocky Mountain Mission the afternoon of Tuesday the 28th ult., hale, hearty, and in excellent spirits. He reports having a very satisfactory mission; says he was received with kindness and consideration except in one or two places in Utah, had good attention paid to his teachings by many, enjoyed marked liberty of the Holy Spirit in presenting the word, and feels satisfied so far with results.

In his intercourse with Mormons and Gentiles he found many honorable, noble-hearted people, and he expects to see a proper adjustment of matters now agitating the Utah Mormons and the Nation, and he feels assured his efforts and those of his co-laborers will aid largely in this direction.

President Smith's friends and neighbors are delighted to have him at home with them again, and give him warm welcome with hand and heart.

WHILE in Utah we made the statement in public that a comparison between the number of persons to the family in the monogamic states and the number to the family in polygamic Utah, would result to the credit of the monogamic institution. This statement was doubted by some; but the following from a late Lincoln, Nebraska paper in regard to the two counties in Nebraska named, Douglas and Lancaster, with reference to the average number of persons to the family, fully corroborates the statement we made, that the usual average was five. The family of Pres. B. Young, as shown by his will shows a little less than 2½ children to the mother, or 3½ and 1-19 persons to the family; there being 19 wives and 46 children. Diligent inquiry made by us both north and south, where we went, warrants the belief that as a practical institution the average number of children to the polygamic family, counting the mother and her children as the family, is less than the number to the family in monogamy.

"We observe that Douglas county has a reported population of 72,658, there being in the county 11,460 houses and 13,113 families. This gives a population of 6.3 persons to each house and 5.5 persons to each family. Lancaster county has a population of 39,719, with 7,136 houses and 7,527 families. This gives an average of 5.5 persons per house and 5.2 per family. The excess of males over females in Douglas county is 30 per cent. In Lancaster county it is but 20. Thus it will be seen that while there is no very great difference in the salient points of the enumeration, the advantages are all with Lancaster so far as they go. But when we consider the enumeration of school children in the respective counties it almost shakes our confidence in the accuracy of the census enumeration. Douglas county reports and draws money for 14,434 children of school age. Lancaster shows up 11,013. Thus not quite 20 per cent of the population of Douglas county is composed of children of school age, while that interesting class lacks a minute fraction of comprising 30 per cent of the population of Lancaster. This is a remarkable difference, and according to the logic of our newspaper friends of Grand Island, Plattsburgh and other points, it constitutes a fatal impeachment of the Omaha census. The Journal does not, however, insist upon its being looked at in this light, and merely drops the fact for consideration at such value as those who contemplate may chose to put upon it."

WE give a letter from Bro. Edward Rannie, Jr., which as he states may be of interest to many who read the HERALD. We can not, however, let the letter pass without suggesting, by way of warning, that matters of this kind are of greater value to the individuals to whom they occur as testimonies, or evidences than to others; and it is not wise to build theories respecting the second coming of Christ upon testimonies evidently intended to be personal and private.

Bro. W. M. Rumel is of the opinion that the stranger is one of the number that were to remain until Christ's coming; and that the reason why Bro. Peak could not remember his name was because it was not intended that these men should be known in the world. It would be an easy matter for a shrewd man to deny having read the books referred to, and still quote from them for an effect.

IN this issue we begin the reprint of a most excellent article on the gospel, taken from the Evening and Morning Star and the Messenger and Advocate. It was written when the church was in the full blaze of spiritual light and power, and published under the general inspection of the leading officers of the church, and the immediate supervision of the divinely appointed "spokesman," Oliver Cowdery. This gives it a species of authority and sanction next to the very highest.

We reproduce it now, that all the HERALD readers may know just what was the doctrine of life and salvation promulgated by the church in those early times, and what that doctrine must always be. And besides this, we think these early and authentic teachings of the church should be more widely known, and be placed more extensively than hitherto in the hands of the Saints for preservation and future reference.

THE following clipping is from the Pittsburgh (Pa.) Leader, of Sunday, December 27th, and is full of good points:

"REV. FORSCUTT ON THE SPAULDING MANUSCRIPT.

"A communication has been received from Mark H. Forscutt, pastor of Saints' Church, Fourth avenue, with reference to the posthumous story of the late Rev. Solomon Spaulding, upon which the Book of Mormon is by many believed to have been founded. In speaking of the "Manuscript Found," by which the original manuscript of Spaulding's story is known, Mr. Forscutt says: 'The publication of the Manuscript Found uncovers the fraud. Friends of the deceased Spaulding have certified that the historic 'incidents,' in detail, name and all contained therein, ('except the religious part,' as found in the Book of Mormon,) are identical with those written by Mr. Spaulding in his 'Manuscript Found.' They tell us also that 'the sorrow-stricken widow,' and brother, and friends of 'the reverend and lamented' Mr. Spaulding were 'much shocked,' and that the 'widowed wife wept bitterly,' when she and they heard the Book of Mormon read, and saw that his work had been prostituted to 'so base a use;' for they recognized the names of Laban, Lehi, Nephi and others there found as 'names which they remembered very distinctly (!)' precisely as they occurred in the Manuscript Found! Now that this precious manuscript is published, the phenomenally excellent memories of Mr. Spaulding's friends, who could accurately remember and succinctly describe, more than twenty years afterwards, what they had casually heard read by the fireside to while away the long winter evenings—these remarkable memories can now be tested. The only drawback to their memorial powers lies in the two facts: Firstly, That they remembered only after hearing the Book of Mormon read, and after having been admonished of the identity; and secondly, and most damaging of all, that they remembered what had no existence in fact and perjured themselves to destroy, if possible, the claims of that book, for not one of these names that they remembered, so distinctly is in the Manuscript Found, and yet it is the veritable manuscript they certified to. It was possessed by Mr. Howe, and would have been published by him only 'it did not read as they expected it would;' for it was obtained for this purpose from Mrs. Spaulding by D. P. Hurlbut, and handed by him to Howe for publication. It was transferred by Howe in 1839-40 to Mr. L. L. Rice, who has owned it ever since. Will these testators and their publishers now—will the men be manly enough, the women womanly enough, the publishers honest enough to make the amende honorable? We shall see."

WE present elsewhere a letter from Bro. Charles Butterworth in regard to there being a good opening at Shelby Station, Iowa, for some good, spiritual-minded Elder who is a good carpenter, and who could and would work energetically in both spiritual and temporal callings.

Shelby Station is in a good and prosperous part of the country, nor far from Persia, Harlan, Magnolia, Dow City, and some other places where there are a number of good Elders. Our experience and observation warrant the belief that what the Saints need more than a preacher is a quiet, persistent effort upon the part of the men folks of the church to live faithful, consistent, working lives, both in temporal and spiritual things. All the eloquence of a Bro. Forscutt, all the persistence of a Bro. Heman C. Smith, all the clear cut logic of a Bro. Joseph F. McDowell, all the soaring enthusiasm of a Bro. W. W. Blair, all the profound earnestness of a Bro. Charles Derry, will not and can not do for men what they can do for themselves.

We were told by one in the streets of Salt Lake City: "Pres. Smith, we have been looking for a deliverer; we have prayed for you to come here and help us out of our troubles."

We replied: "No man, not even Christ himself, can deliver you unless you are not only willing to be delivered, but will step out and act for yourselves. I can do no more for you than to show you what the law of God requires. I can not take you by force and compel you to throw off your trammels. If you and others who feel like you do not take the risk of declaring in favor of the right and let the consequences follow, no man, be he never so good and wise, can bring you deliverance."

We repeat this to the Saints, at Shelby Station and everywhere else. No man can preach you into holiness of life, or into spiritual strength. If you lean upon an arm of flesh you will fail with that fleshly arm. If you do not take pains to go to the Lord, and rely on him more perfectly, setting an example of righteous persistence in resisting the things of the world which lead men's minds away from true faith, no elder that lives can help you.

A good man visits no saloon, plays no games of chance, takes no stock in lotteries, neither gambles in church fairs, nor "on change;" but such a man can not keep men of the church, his fellow disciples, from doing those things, try he never so faithfully. Such an elder does not circulate scandal, does not visit houses where idle and vicious talk and conduct are indulged in, nor encourage license in morals; but he can not prevent the men of his flock from doing those things if they choose.

Righteousness is "not in word only," but must be in deed; and he who keeps within the word shall be blessed in his deeds. One unfortunate prophecy by some incautious, or over zealous elder made in a moment of wrapt enthusiasm, which fails of fulfillment, can do more harm in a day than the plain, consistent teaching of the means of salvation by an humble, though wise man can reclaim in a year. "Talk not judgment, boast not of mighty works nor of mighty faith," is just as true and applicable now as it has ever been. When will the children of the kingdom learn to be wise.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

BRO. JOSEPH LUFF remains in Utah until Spring, and is in charge there. He may be addressed in regard to the work there, Box 307, Salt Lake City, Utah. He expected to remain in the city until after New Years, when he would go north to Malad City and Oxford, the latter being the place where Bro. R. J. Anthony succeeded in making so good an opening a few weeks ago.

Bro. Joseph C. Clapp writes from Deer Lodge Valley, Montana, December 25th, 1885, that he was again at work there, and ready to do duty for the cause, praying that God would direct the "strokes of the battle-ax." We wish Bro. Clapp great success.

The slip from the Beaver, Utah, paper, published in a late issue of the HERALD, was an error in point of time. The challenge referred to was given some few years ago, when Bro. Gorden E. Deuel was laboring in Utah, and not now, as stated. The good brethren at Beaver will please notice this correction.

Bro. R. M. Elvin baptized four at Wilber, Nebraska, Monday, December 28th, all "of good repute."

The Senior Editor left Salt Lake City in company with Bro. R. J. Anthony, December 21st, for home. Bro. Anthony will be at Wilber, Nebraska, and vicinity as openings may occur until the April session of conference.

Who knows Elder J. or I. Goodfellow, who was on a mission to England in 1841? Elder John Pett of Dow City, Crawford county, Iowa, is very anxious to learn of him or his whereabouts.

Elder Thomas Taylor, of Birmingham, England, writes that they are not now publishing the Vindicator. Let our readers take notice of this fact.

Bro. Rudolph Etzenhouser writes from Rhodes, Iowa, 28th ult., "Had excellent Saints' meeting here yesterday. Spoke for them last evening—felt well."

Bro. Levi Cheney, of Kent, Stephenson county, Illinois, wishes some of the Elders to come there and labor, Cant Bro. J. C. Foss, or J. S. Patterson, respond?

Bro. W. A. Moore writes from Naponee, Nebraska, the 26th ult. and says,—“I can't afford to do without the HERALD, I have been a subscriber for it about twenty-five years.”

Bro. J. Roberts writes from St. Helena, California, saying, "I would hate to be without the HERALD."

Sr. Mary Nicholls writes from Iowa City and says,—“I have taken the HERALD for twenty-two years, and haven't seen an Elder yet.”

E. A. Stedman writes from Lake Crystal, Minnesota, and says,—“I think the HERALD is the best paper printed, and can't keep house without it.”

Sr. M. P. Matthews of Belfast, Iowa, says, "I would not like to do without my papers." (Herald, Hope, and Advocate). "May the editors, and all associated with them, live long to help on with the great work of the Lord.

The foregoing excerpts from the letters of the HERALD patrons are encouraging, and we are led to suggest that greater efforts should be made by the ministry and the membership in sustaining it promptly, and in extending its circulation both in the church and outside of it. When this is done one of the most influential and powerful departments of the church is made thoroughly effective in pushing its interests at home and abroad. And now that we are entering upon a new year, we ask that all strive to help forward the interest of the publishing department.

This year promises to be one of very great importance in the history of the church and of the ages. Every Saint should strive to do all he can to build up the cause of Christ and humanity.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Ques.—Is it right to go and hear sectarian ministers preach?

Ans.—Yes; if you do not by so doing neglect the meetings of your own church. Gather wisdom, truth, and useful knowledge when you can.

Q.—What was the labor performed by those women who labored with St. Paul, in the gospel?

A.—We have no means of knowing definitely from history; but it is probable they embraced teaching, as also such other ministrations as women could perform, such as visiting the sick, looking after the needy, and performing any and all other labors of love suited to the sex, for the furtherance of the gospel. Sr. Emma, the wife of Joseph the Seer, was commanded to aid in the following manner:

"And thou shalt go with him at the time of his going, and be unto him for a scribe, while there is no one to be a scribe for him, that I may send my servant Oliver Cowdery, whithersoever I will. And thou shalt be ordained under his hand to expound scriptures, and to exhort the church, according as it shall be given thee by my Spirit; for he shall lay his hands upon thee, and thou shalt receive the Holy Ghost, and thy time shall be given to writing, and to learning much. And thou needest not fear, for thy husband shall support thee in the church; for unto them is his calling, that all things might be revealed unto them, whatsoever I will, according to their faith. And verily I say unto thee, that thou shalt lay aside the things of this world, and seek for the things of a better. And it shall be given thee, also, to make a selection of sacred Hymns, as it shall be given to thee, which is pleasing unto me, to be had in my church; for my soul delighteth in the song of the heart; yea, the song of the righteous is a prayer unto me. And it shall be answered with a blessing upon their heads."—Doc. and Cov. Sec. 24, par. 2, 3.

Q.—Is it according to church law to elect a sister to act as branch or district secretary, and has that duty any thing to do with our church government?

A.—There is no specific law as to whether sisters may or may not act as church secretaries. Wisdom should guide. Secretaries are not necessarily a part of church government—they are primarily recorders.

Q.—Have the branches the right, and is it in harmony with the law in this church, for branches to appoint at regular business meetings, sisters to act as their choristers and organists for regular church services?

A.—Yes.

Q.—When branches have appointed their choristers to lead their singing, and given them full charge to conduct the same, has the ones who are presiding over the meetings the right to call out while singing goes on, "third," or, "last verse," and thus interrupt the choristers? Who are the choristers in subjection to?

A.—The choristers are subject to those presiding. But those presiding should be careful to do nothing to disconcert or interrupt the chorister, or choir, or any one else, so far as is practicable. Let wisdom, love, and patience rule.

Q.—Is it right for Latter Day Israel to eat swine's flesh?

A.—It may or it may not be. All depends upon conditions. There is no law for or against it except the dictates of sound judgment when all conditions are considered. In case of extreme hunger it will be quite proper for any one to use that kind of food, if nothing more suitable is at hand. The Jews, living under a warm climate, were prohibited from using swine's flesh, for prudential reasons. Peoples living under cold climates, or when short of other food, have not the same reasons for abstaining from its use. A vegetable diet is usually the most suitable where it can be obtained. The following instructions on these points should be observed as the wisdom of heaven:

"But remember that on this, the Lord's day, thou shalt offer thine oblations, and thy sacraments, unto the Most High, confessing thy sins unto thy brethren, and before the Lord. And on this day thou shalt do none other thing, only let thy food be prepared with singleness of heart, that thy fasting may be perfect; or in other words, that thy joy may be full. Verily this is fasting and prayer; or, in other words, rejoicing and prayer. And inasmuch as ye do these things, with thanksgiving, with cheerful hearts, and countenances; not with much laughter, for this is sin, but with a glad heart and a cheerful countenance; verily I say, that inasmuch as ye do this the fullness of the earth is yours; the beasts of the fields, and the fowls of the air, and that which climbeth upon the trees, and walketh upon the earth; yea, and the herb, and the good things which cometh of the earth, whether for food or for raiment, or for houses or for barns, or for orchards, or for gardens, or for vineyards; yea, all things which cometh of the earth, in the season thereof, are made for the benefit and the use of man, both to please the eye, and to gladden the heart; yea, for food and for raiment, for taste and for smell, to strengthen the body, and to enliven the soul. And it pleaseth God that he hath given all these things unto man; for unto this end were they made, to be used with judgment, not to excess, neither by extortion; and in nothing doth man offend God, or against none is his wrath kindled, save those who confess not his hand in all things, and obey not his commandments."—Sec. 59: par. 2-4.

"And whoso forbiddeth to abstain from meats, that man should not eat the same, is not ordained of God; for behold the beasts of the field, and the fowls of the air, and that which cometh of the earth, is ordained for the use of man, for food, and for raiment, and that he might have in abundance, but it is not given that one man should possess that which is above another; wherefore the world lieth in sin; and wo be unto man that sheddeth blood or that wasteth flesh and hath no need."—D. C. sec. 49, par. 3.

"And again, verily I say unto you, all wholesome herbs God hath ordained for the constitution, nature, and use of man, every herb in the season thereof, and every fruit in the season thereof. All these to be used with prudence and thanksgiving. Yea, flesh, also of beasts and of the fowls of the air, I the Lord, hath ordained for the use of man, with thanksgiving. Nevertheless, they are to be used sparingly; and it is pleasing unto me that they should not be used only in times of winter, or of cold or famine. All grain is ordained for the use of man and of beasts, to be the staff of life, not only for man, but for the beasts of the field, and the fowls of heaven, and all wild animals, that run or creep on the earth; and these hath God made for the use of man only in times of famine and excess of hunger."

"All grain is good for the food of man, as also the fruit of the vine, that which yieldeth fruit, whether in the ground or above the ground. Nevertheless, wheat for man, and corn for the ox, and oats for the horse, and rye for the fowls and for swine, and for all beasts of the field, and barley for all useful animals, and for mild drinks, as also other grain. And all saints who remember to keep and do these sayings, walking in obedience to the commandments, shall receive health in their navel, and marrow to their bones, and shall find wisdom and great treasures of knowledge, even hidden treasures; and shall run and not be weary, and shall walk and not faint; and I, the Lord, give unto them a promise that the destroying angel shall pass by them, as the children of Israel, and not slay them."—D. C. 86: 2, 3.

Miscellaneous.

FORT MADISON, Iowa, Dec. 28th.

Dear Herald: I am very much pleased to see the emphatic stand you take on the subject of drinking intoxicating beverages. If there is anything at the present day that Saints should shun, one of them is the use of intoxicants in any quantity or form. If there was anything in them that was in the least elevating, there might be some excuse for indulging in a drink; but on the contrary, everything emanating from the spirit of the still is degrading. From that poisoned worm continually flows misery, degradation and death. If there is anything that the Elders of Israel should stand, seeing eye to eye upon, this is one, that no drunkard shall inherit the kingdom. The way drunkards are made, is by moderate drinking. Consider what fine minds have been laid low by the demon of drink. The history of the world in the past has been a history of fall, ruin, wreck, and death. How many a bright sail wafted by the sunny breeze of a splendid intellect has been dashed to pieces upon the sunken rock of alcohol. We see the fine ship totter and finally go down amid the breakers of misery and death. Blight and desolation follow in its wake.

A few weeks ago I was on the Hannibal and St. Joseph Railroad, going to Laclede, Missouri. One seat behind me sat a poor wreck of a man, fairly pickled with whisky. This was the expression of a traveling man I sat with. His breath was so foul from a long continued debauch that we were compelled to move back four seats, and then we were not out of reach of the contaminating influence. We pitied the poor fellow. Our judgment was that he was a poor gambler or saloon keeper.

We changed cars at Laclede for Hail. Our human still-house also changed, and took the same train. My companion and I took the back seat in the coach, to avoid the drunkard. To my surprise he also got off the train at Hail. I went to the hotel and registered; but the man I shunned had put his name down before me. Then I did not care to look at it. But when supper was called, and the dining room boss pulled a chair out on the opposite side of the table, I respectfully declined, and sought a more congenial atmosphere.

The waiter asked me if I knew who I was declining to sit at the table with. I said I did not know.

"Why," said he, "this is the most eloquent preacher in this country; he has just come from holding a protracted meeting, where he converted over a hundred people to the gospel of Christ."

I said, "Why, he is full of rotten whiskey."

"Yes," said the waiter, "he is now sobering off on beer. I just now brought a pitcher of beer up to his room. I agreed to say nothing; but as you are a traveling man, it don't make any difference when I tell you."

I walked out to the register, and what was my surprise to see in bold hand, "L. L. Norton," and I thought, "Is this the man that could abuse the Saints, and call them all the vile names that could be culled. I thought—Bro. Hicklin, you should pity that poor wreck of humanity rather than feel bad at the lying frothings you had to reply to in the debate with the eloquent Disciple."

I presume he is not endorsed by his people in drinking, neither should we; nor could we condemn the work of Alexander Campbell because L. L. Norton got drunk. I hope the poor enemies of the Saints who see this will not continue to condemn the church, or its founders, because some "eloquent" man did or said something not in harmony with morality, for we are all human, and, like poor L. L. Norton, are liable to fall.

May the day speedily dawn when the demon of strong drink shall be banished from our beloved land.

J. A. ROBINSON.

MEDINA CITY, Bandera Co., Tex.,
Dec. 21st, 1885.

Dear Herald: The day I wrote from Kempner, Bro. Roberts came, having recovered from dengue, and reported that Bro. E. L. Kelley was at Temple awaiting me. On Sunday, November 22d, I returned to Temple, leaving Bro. Roberts to keep up the interest in Lampassas and Burnett counties. I arrived in time to hear Bro. Kelley deliver two very excellent discourses in the Opera Hall at Temple. We then spent a week with Elmwood Branch, Bro. Kelley doing the preaching. It was quite a treat for me to sit by and hear some one else preach, while I for first one reason and then another, excused myself, and did nothing but hear and pray for success. Bro. Kelley, so far as I heard, gave satisfaction, and gave us some wholesome instruction upon the law of tithes and offerings. If all will practice what they heard, the work will take a new impetus here.

Nov. 30th.—We went by train to Caldwell, Burleson county, where we were met by our good brother, W. M. Sherrill, and accompanied him to his home, near Cook's Point. Stayed with him all night, and he then took us to Centaal Branch, where we remained three days—Bro. Kelley preached once and I twice. Then went to Elkhart, where we arrived the morning of December 5th. Here Bro. Kelley was quite unwell, so much so that he could not attend one service. He preached twice, however, and on the night of the 7th I regretfully bid him adieu as he started for Kansas. I enjoyed his company very much, and am fully satisfied that he is "the right man in the right place." May God bless him in his important work.

The night after Bro. Kelley left me I preached the funeral discourse of Bro. William R. Hassell, son of Bro. Dr. Hassell.

The night of the 9th found me in the city of San Antonio, where I remained for the night, and the next day rode with Mr. Richard Gale to Oak Island, where I had the pleasure of meeting a few as faithful souls as it has been my fortune to meet. I preached in Zion's Chapel twice, and at the residence of Mr. Polk Neal twice.

The 16th, I met my uncle, Mr. L. L. Wight, in San Antonio, and came with him to this place, a distance of about sixty miles. We came by wagon, arriving here on the 19th, and were made welcome by aunt and cousins. There is but one church building here—the Baptist. This was denied us, and so I preached at uncle's residence yesterday. I will visit here until after Christmas, then be off again in the discharge of missionary duty. Two of my cousins, Misses Effie and Ettie Wight, expect to be baptized on Christmas. May God bless and lead them in paths of wisdom, peace and virtue.

I have not heard from Bro. Roberts since I left him. He is a faithful worker, and has no doubt accomplished much good. I think Brn. Thompson and Roberts are traveling together somewhere in the Central District. Bro. Cato at last advices was at Silver Hill, Arkansas, with fair prospects of accomplishing good.

We no longer have to beg for places to preach in, but many doors are open, and hundreds of anxious souls waiting to hear the glad news. If we only had a missionary force strong enough to follow up the advantage we have gained, great good would result. My persistent opponent, Mr. Wilmeth, seems to be going the way of all other wilful opposers of the truth. When we began our debate he was State Evangelist and stood prominently forward in the front rank of ministers of his faith. He was also chief editor of the Texas Christian. He afterward lost the first position, and a few months ago was "put out" of the editorial chair by the board of publication, and now the same paper over which he was a few months ago chief, is accusing him of slander, etc. Here is a quotation from the Texas Department of the Apostolic Guide, for December 4th, 1885.

"The Texas Christian copies an article from the Messenger that is signed 'Mark Smith,' and that contains some flings at Bro's Clark, W. K. Homan, the church at Thorp's Spring, the Orphan work, and the editor of this department. The Christian comments on the article. For my part of it I am not concerned as to who wrote it or what more the writer shall say. As the Irishman said about being hung: 'There's nothing like getting used to a thing.' Here is the Christian's comment: 'The above which we take from an article in the Christian Messenger, is a sample of the slang and slander that some men, ardently engaged in a good work, at great personal sacrifice, have to endure occasionally. We suppose we may thank brother C. M. Wilmeth for the above effusion. We are not aware of ever harming or injuring this brother or giving him any just cause to speak of us and our associates in our arduous undertaking in such a heartless style. We are not surprised that he hides behind a fictitious signature. We, too, would wish to hide were we to use toward our brethren such unkind and uncourteous language as the above.'" or not I do not pretend to know; but the above extract shows how he is held by the paper he once edited. "The church at Thorp's Spring" is Wilmeth's home church where he has resided for nearly two years. How are the mighty fallen!

Let us keep humble, prayerful, and manifest the Spirit of Christ, dear Saints, and God will care for his own. I feel more and more devoted to the cause daily.

In bonds of peace,

HEMAN C. SMITH.

SHENANDOAH, Iowa, Dec. 24th.

Bro. Blair: I was called here through sickness. Bro. Eber Wilcox's little boy, Franklin, is down with the bilious and typhoid fever. Last night, in company with Bro. S. S. Wilcox, we administered to the dear little fellow, and thanks be to God, this morning he is much better. Bro. Eber and wife have had severe trials of late. Nor long ago they lost their dear little girl, Hattie, one of the sweetest of God's dear ones. May God give them his sustaining grace in this hour of affliction. Bro. Springer and wife were calculating to leave last Monday; his health was some better. His preaching had a good effect; many were well pleased, and we hope some will obey the gospel. Our meetings have been well attended in the different school-houses in the vicinity of Plum Hollow Branch. We shall stay here a few days and then go to Hamburg.

May the truth of God spread among the people, and to this end I pray that his blessing may be with his servants, and may his Spirit inspire them in doing his will. May God bless you, dear brother, and make you mighty in defending his cause through the written word, is my sincere prayer.

Yours for the truth,

HENRY KEMP.

OMAHA, Neb., Dec. 23d.

Bro. W. W. Blair:—It is with great pleasure that I write you. Our conference which convened with very gloomy prospects is closed. There has been a heavy cloud hovering over this part of the veynard for some time, but the conference closed with glorious results. The clouds are lifted, and joy and peace filled our hearts. Never was there a conference of such importance held in this district, and one that resulted in so much good. A young man of more than ordinary intelligence was baptized. The priesthood meeting held on Monday after the conference was a grand success. The amount of good resulting therefrom can not be estimated. Bro. Caffall presided, answered questions, and gave much valuable instruction, all of which was joyfully received. Many were sorry that we could not remain together longer. The preaching was above the average.

The prospect for the spread of the gospel in this district has never been so bright as it is now. I have been greatly blessed of late by the good Lord in laboring in the vineyard. We are encouraged, and propose to fight the good fight of faith. It is good indeed to be a Saint in latter days, notwithstanding the many draughts we have to take from the bitter cup. For the joyous seasons we have by the presence of the Comforter enables us to endure. But, O, if it was all bitter, we could not endure. But having both the sweet and the bitter, we can drink both mingled together without murmuring. We must expect to have these experiences while the conflict is going on, which will not be ended until "the armies shout, Hail King Immanuel." That we may be found loyal to the King of Kings, shall be my prayer for all Israel. In bonds,

W. M. RUMEL.

DES MOINES, Iowa, Dec. 28th.

Dear Herald:—It has been some time since I wrote, but am feeling so joyful over a visit we have had of late from Brn. Bozarth and Lambert. I am sorry to say they found the branch in a very unpleasant condition. These brethren took hold of the matter with courage, love, and wisdom, and what is more, they prayed to God for help, and truly God in his mercy did give them aid, and filled them with his Holy Spirit. They worked faithfully early and late, and with patience. It is wonderful, the amount of work that was done in a short time, and the peace and harmony that prevailed. It never could have been so without the Spirit of God. Oh what a blessed people we are. How much more willing our Father is to give than we are to receive. I can discern that it will need close watching, and continual prayer on the part of the officers to keep the branch as the brethren left it. We have learned a lesson and received valuable instructions. So out of evil comes good sometimes. I pray God these trials may be a warning to us all, that we may all try to let our light shine and pray for wisdom above all things. We shall be pleased to have any Elder come and preach for us.

Yours in gospel bonds,

DOW CITY, Ia., Dec. 29th.

Bro. Blair:—There are a few Saints at Shelby station, Shelby County, Iowa, surrounded by spiritual wolves; and while some of the Saints are quite strong in the faith others have forsaken the religion of Jesus Christ and are following the traditions of men. This is a thriving little village where in my opinion any mechanic might do well, especially a carpenter. If some Elder who is a thorough Christian and a careful and energetic worker in spiritual matters and a fair speaker, would locate himself at this place the Saints here might be more perfectly organized, and the brethren and sisters be fed with that spiritual food so necessary to keep the children of God steadily marching toward the prize, eternal life.

The Saints at Shelby have no house in which to worship which is a great hindrance to them; and while laboring at this place I find that although there has been some promises made to the Saints here by the spirit which has had a complete fulfillment; yet there has been some unwise and presumptuous statements made by some claimed to be given by the Spirit, and thereby the faith of some has been shaken.

While I am firm in the belief that the Saints do and will enjoy the spiritual blessings promised by Christ and his inspired apostles; yet I believe it is foolish, and even wicked for elders or members to speak presumptuously, or even for them to speak of the spiritual manifestations given through them as though it was because of their superior righteousness instead of giving God the glory. In my opinion it is much better to teach the people that if they will believe and obey the gospel of Christ with honest hearts, and hold out faithful to the end they will receive eternal life; whether they enjoy any of the spiritual manifestations or not. As the word teaches us that Christ will divide the manifestations of the Spirit "to every man severally as he will." And while we should rejoice that our heavenly father has given to us the Spirit to comfort and cheer us, as well as to lead and guide us into all truth, how very careful we should be not to abuse the gifts bestowed upon us; thereby bringing upon ourselves great condemnation, as well as injuring the work of God and bringing reproach upon his people.

Yours in hope,
CHAS. E. BUTTERWORTH.

PITTSBURG, Pa., December 18.

Bro. D. Dancer:—I received the "Manuscript Found" you sent me. Much obliged for the same. Mr. R. Patterson is the first on the list that shall receive one. They will do us good here—more than any one can imagine. Bro. Mark H. Forscutt is doing a grand work here. He has baptized five lately, and many others are at the door. He is preaching four and five nights a week, wherever he can get an opening around the city. We are trying to push the work forward in this district as it never was before. Bro. G. T. Griffiths, president, is a humble laborer for the Master's cause, and is well liked by all that know him. He is building a work that will stand. May the Lord bless all of his laborers is the prayer of your brother in gospel bonds,

FRANK CRILEY.

BLAIR, Neb., December 2d.

Bro. Blair:—A somewhat remarkable circumstance occurred at Jamestown, Nebraska, on October 30th, which may be of interest to many of the Herald readers. On the above date a stranger came to Bro. A. J. Peak's while he was at work in his black-smith shop. He was of medium height, black hair and eyes, walked erect, was in the prime of life, Jewish features, skin as white as a child's; he had on two suits of clothes, the outer common and the under very fine, black cloth; he could speak several languages. The following conversation took place between them, the important items of which we wrote down, as the whole of it would be too long, as they talked for about two hours.

Bro. Peak.—Which way are you traveling?

Stranger.—The way the Bible speaks of.

Bro. P.—Where did you come from?

S.—Out west.

Bro. P.—Were you among the Mormons?

S.—No.

Bro. P.—The people call me a Mormon.

S.—You are not a Mormon but a Latter Day Saint.

He then told him with great accuracy the faith of the church. He said there were many who would recognize the mission of Bro. Joseph in Utah and turn from their evil practices, that there were many honest people out there and they would be all right. Some were like the children of Ninevah, did not know their right hand from their left; and that the blood of the people would be on the leaders who led them astray.

Bro. P.—Are you a Latter Day Saint?

S.—I was never baptized by any of them.

Bro. P.—What do you think of the other religious denominations of the day?

S.—There are many honest ones among them who if they had the opportunity would obey the gospel. There are many who would not obey it if they heard it, and they will have to suffer the penalty.

Bro. P.—Did you ever read the Book of Mormon?

S.—No. It is a history of the people on this continent; same as the Bible is of the people on the eastern.

He then quoted the 29th of Isaiah, and also the 37th of Ezekiel, and gave a brief history of its discovery, same as taught in the history of the church; and also an epitome of its contents.

Bro. P.—Did you ever read the Inspired Translation?

S.—No.

He then spoke of the various mistakes in the King James; and also of the corrections in the Inspired Translation, giving many correct quotations from both, and emphasizing Matth. 5: 21.

Bro. P.—Did you ever read the Voice of Warning?

S.—No.

Bro. P.—There is a good sermon in it on the kingdom.

The stranger then quoted extensively from the book.

Bro. P.—What do you understand by the kingdom?

S.—It is God's organized church on the earth.

Bro. P.—What is your business?

S.—A teacher.

Bro. P.—A school teacher?

S.—No.

The stranger reproved him for not reading more of the Doctrine and Covenants, and told him the revelations were given for this generation, as the New Testament was for Christ's day.

S.—Have you had sufficient testimony in regard to the work?

Bro. P.—Yes.

S.—Your persecutions are the greatest testimony. (The brother realized the force of the statement for he had suffered much).

The stranger then gave a full history of the law of tithing, and quoted the 3d of Malachi, and said many understood the law, and many did not want too. He then reproved Bro. Peak for not paying his tithing this year, and told him he had paid it last year; and then explained its necessity in great plainness.

S.—Are you not lonesome being so far from the church?

Bro. P.—Yes, and I intend to go to Missouri.

S.—You had better remain here for a while, and you will prosper; then you can go better prepared for there is plenty of time yet.

He then spoke of the building of the temple, and said it would be of marble, and he would be at its dedication.

Bro. P.—Is the second coming of Christ near at hand?

S.—Yes.

He then quoted various prophecies, and said the building of Jerusalem was one of the buds; and compared the different events to the budding, as found in the prophecy, or in other words each event was a bud. He spoke of several denominations in the neighborhood, and several places where the gospel had not been preached. Said he was going to Independence.

Bro. Peak asked him his name and he told it to him, and even spelled it several times for him, and then smiled because he could not remember it. He gave the brother a great deal of advice in regard to his affairs; and when asked where his home was, said he had none. When asked to remain all night, he said he would stay somewhere on the road. While talking the brother felt an influence like at a prayer-meeting when the Spirit is present.

There were many things he said which are not proper to write of as they were of a private nature, and on many things that troubled the brother's mind he gave him great light. Some things he told him no man could know save he were inspired. When he left him he shook hands and told him to hold fast to the faith, and walked away quite rapidly.

Yours in bonds,

EDWARD RANNIE, JR.

I was also present when Bro. Peak related the things stated by Bro. Rannie in the foregoing.

Bro. W. W. Blair:—On Sunday evening last I closed my series of meetings at this place. I preached twenty-five sermons, baptized two; others may obey soon. The interest was very good. Many say the gospel we preach is true, and I can't see why they don't obey, as it is to give them eternal life. The Saints here seem very much pleased with the meetings. May our God bless his children. Forty persons, on the evening of the 21st, met at the house of brother and sister I. L. Rogers to surprise me, and chose brother Randall their speaker, who presented J. C. Foss a nice coat, some other clothing and a few dollars in money. I should not forget the Plano Saints, for they aided me well while I was with them. I was with the Saints at Plano on Christmas Eve; had a good time. Four hundred and thirty-two presents were picked from the tree, besides lots of books given to the children, also a nice organ to little Maud Willett. The Mayor of the city and his wife were present and were very much pleased, as he said to me and others. I was called to Amboy on Friday last to administer to old brother Edwin Cadwell. I found him very sick. Brother Stone and myself administered to him. The next morning I learned he was feeling much better. I expect to go next month to Piper City and deliver a series of sermons there. I love this work, brother Blair, and therefore I want to do all I can to further it on. I think it better to wear out than rust out.

J. C. FOSS.

RIVERTON, Iowa, Dec. 30th.

Bro. Joseph:—We are trying to do the best we can. I know the work is of God. This testimony was given to me when I was a boy in Ohio, most fifty years ago. I remember well the time when the Spirit of God moved the curtains in the Kirtland Temple, one Sabbath day, when the Lord endowed his Saints and accepted the Temple at their hands.

Bro. Daniel Hougas has been heard and preached five sermons, and was well liked. A good interest was felt, and I think some good done. We feel like taking courage and doing all we can to help the work along. Ever praying for Zion's cause,

Yours in bonds,

JAMES W. CALKINS.

DES MOINES, Iowa, Dec. 23d.

Bro. Blair:—For the past four or five months the Saints here have not enjoyed their religion as Saints ought to, when we know we are living in the greatest time that ever was, even the fullness of time, in the which God has decreed that all things shall be gathered into one, and the heathen given to the Son for an everlasting inheritance, "and the uttermost parts of the earth for his possession." When I contemplate the greatness of these times it fills my heart with thankfulness to my Heavenly Father for his mercy extended to me; and through the pleasing influences of the Holy Spirit I have had the great privilege of obeying the gospel, and receiving a knowledge of the great work. Yet with all these holy influences, and this positive knowledge, how liable we erring creatures are to forget from whence we have been hewn.

In the midst of our difficulties and troubles, one of the noble servants of God came to hand, and with wise counsel assisted us out of the deep water. Brother Bozarth having a perfect understanding of the law, he meekly and lovingly helped us to get things into a position so we could go to work. Then we were doubly assisted by our noble brother, Joseph R. Lambert. So with the good instructions of these two brethren everything was put into good order, and all passed off peaceably and quietly, and I think that none were hurt.

While we were thus engaged, our quarterly conference convened, and to the joy and satisfaction of all assembled, we had one of the best conferences, or as good as ever was had in Des Moines. We were made glad with the presence of the Holy Spirit, peace and harmony prevailed throughout the entire business session. Our sacrament meeting was glorious, the preaching was good; so we may truly say, "The law of the Lord is perfect," and that strictly held to, will, under all circumstances cause peace to prevail, showing the order which God has set in the church.

So my beloved brethren and sisters, we ought to prize our brethren that are placed in authority; not by men, but by the God of heaven. Let us pray for them, that they may be blessed with the Spirit of their callings, so they may always be enabled to detect the least appearance of evil or schism in the church.

Yours in gospel bonds,
JOSEPH P. KNOX.

WILBER, Neb., Dec. 30th.

Dear Herald:—As per promise to report progress in the proposed joint meeting with Elder Henry Murphy, of the Christian Church. I reported myself ready to do my part of the preaching, but the Elder declined my help, was willing for me to assist in all except the pulpit labor. I had misunderstood him, having put too much value upon the words of his invitation. However no ill feelings were caused.

We met Brn. Joseph Smith and R. J. Anthony at Crete the 23d inst. Bro. Joseph spoke to a crowded house, in the Baptist Church the evening of the 24th, and in the Court House the next three evenings. At the last meeting there were fully five hundred present. The best of order prevailed, and quite an interest was manifested. We are satisfied the visit has accomplished much good for the cause in this vicinity. On the 28th four were added by baptism in the presence of a large but orderly company. Spoke to a full house in the evening, at Baptist Church. Twenty-four hours rain, and a light snow prevented meeting last evening. This morning the weather is beautiful, and the cheerful sun but tells too plainly, that after every storm, if our trust is in the Holy One of Israel, all will be well.

Dear Herald:—Come along; you have a welcome home here my darling preacher. If you did not come regularly I would soon get the blues. And only $2.50 will keep me out of them for a whole year! How any Saint can get along without you I have yet to learn. Most likely such will be left behind, or be put in the balances and be found wanting when too late to be filled with the bread of life. Oh what a pity we don't hunger and thirst more now while we can get the church publications, and keep pace with the kingdom of God.

Bro. Bolock died to-day, and Bro. Phillips is very sick. Otherwise we are doing nicely, both Branch and Sunday School.

Yours for life eternal,
J. W. VERNON.

WHEATVILLE, Wis., Dec. 20th.

Bro. W. W. Blair:—I am happy to inform you that I had the privilege of attending the Eastern Iowa District Conference, held at Clinton. We had a good time throughout the entire session. The Saints seemed to be of one mind, and one spirit. I do say they are a warm hearted people. May God bless them in the future. They will soon have a nice little church to worship in. O, may God bless his servants in presenting his word for the good of souls there—there are more calls than I can fill. May heaven send some one here that can spend his entire time in this district.

Yours in Christ,
A. L. WHITEAKER.

Dear Herald:—Bro. D. Hougas has been here, preached a few sermons, and left a good feeling among the people, for which we thank the Lord.

L. C. DONALDSON.

CLEARWATER, Neb., Dec. 21st.

Bro. Blair:—We had an excellent meeting yesterday. The elements were propitious, and the gentle sunshine cast its mellow luster upon the Sabbath scene. Through the mercy and providence of God the writer was permitted to break the bread of everlasting life. Since the hour of service, again and again have I tasted of the sweet influences of peace, as the recurring thoughts that furnished the thread of my discourse come floating gently back. Impressions stamped by the Holy Spirit are not easily obliterated.

Brother Barbee is our president now and does well. Without serious hindrance the hour of devotion finds him at his post. Brother James Smith, a stable citizen and noble-hearted man, was re-elected acting Priest, at our last business meeting. Aaron Hollenbeck, beloved by all who know him, and highly esteemed in and out of the church, is acting Teacher of the branch. Brother Holland is Deacon, and faithfully serves at his post. Brother Willson is clerk, and L. Gamet, financial agent to act in concert with Bishop's Agent for the district.

In bonds,

NOTICE.

To the Elders composing the First Quorum, Dear Brethren.—Something near two months ago I served upon you a notice, requesting that you forward at once to me, box 60, Nebraska City, Nebraska, your address. I regret to state that up to date, I have only received and know the addresses of twenty-four, while there are now seventy-two who are delinquent, and should they fail or much longer delay, your committee on "Circular Letter" will be unable to perform their task. Those who are the delinquents are those who have not sent me their addresses since November 10th. Arouse, brethren, and send a postal with your name and post office address thereon. None are too poor, or busy, but they can comply with this request.

Mrs. McWilliams, from Pike county, Illinois, mother-in-law to Bro. James, our "king grocer," is in the city.

E. C. Brand and wife rusticated hereabouts. He filled the stand very acceptably indeed. Yes; and that was a splendid social at Bro. Bishop's, given in honor of E. C. and lady.

On last Sunday a very remarkable testimony meeting was enjoyed by the Saints. Quite a number of remarkable demonstrations of the Spirit. One aged sister remarked that she once enjoyed such a meeting in Nauvoo, presided over by the Seer in 1843.

The Herald is just splendid. We look back to the semi-monthly and wonder how we did get along then. There would be no objection now to a semi-monthly.

Bro. E. L. Kelley is here at present, teaching the temporal law. He is the right man in the right place, and is well qualified to present the law with good effect.

The Christmas Tree was hugely enjoyed by the Sabbath School last evening. Quite a number were refused admittance—house too small.

Bro. R. May is building a fine residence on South Liberty street. Brethren Pitt and Barbee are the architects.

THIRTY-FIVE.

As one who climbs a mountain steep,
And pauses on the way
With backward glance his path to sweep,
So would I pause to-day,
Half-way.

Half-way! and looking down the road,
The stones that hurt my feet,
The wayside thorns, the tiresome load,
Make this short rest seem sweet—
Half-way.

Half-way! a haze obscures my sight,
My eyes grow dim with tears,
As, looking downward from this height,
I count my buried years—
Half-way.

Ah, me! how bright and happy some!
Their graves are strewn with flowers,
But others shroud me in their gloom,
And bring back heavy hours—
Half-way.

How many a treasure from my grasp
Has dropped along the way!
Father, thy strong hand and steady clasp
I seek anew to-day—
Half-way!

Half-way along! I look above,
But nothing can I see;
My Father's guidance and His love
Are all in all to me—
Half-way!

Half-way! and I may never count
My "three-score years and ten!"
But looking down on life's rough mount,
Think that this might have been
Half-way!

Aye, looking down! If e'er my feet
May tread the Mount of God,
I fain would stop for rest so sweet,
And drop life's weary load
Half-way!

METHODIST METHODS OF BAPTISM, AND THE PHYSICAL IMPOSSIBILITIES OF IMMERSION.

By request of Bro. W. R. Calhoun, I undertake a reply to an article in the St. Louis Christian Advocate, for November 18th, 1885, by W. M. Rush, D. D.

The writer's first proposition is: "The New Testament, or Hellenistic Greek nowhere authorizes immersion." A host of learned men might be quoted in refutation of this assertion, but I prefer to think that the nature of a Christian ordinance can not be determined by the heathen term chosen to designate it. I prefer to think the question historical rather than philological. Barnabas, supposed to have been contemporary with the apostles, says, "We descend into the water, and come out of it." Hermas, one of the Apostolic Fathers, says, "They descend into the water bound to death, but ascend out of it sealed to life." Justin Martyr, 140 A. D. says: "Those who believe, are led to some place where there is water, and are washed in the water." Tertullian, 200 A. D. says, "We are immersed in water." "Let down into the water, and dipped." Again, "Peter immersed in the Tiber." And in another place, "It is one thing to be sprinkled by the violence of the waves in a boat, and another to be dipped in a religious ordinance. It is indifferent whether one is baptized in a pool or in the sea, in a river or in a fountain, in a lake or in the bed of a river." And he calls the flood, "the baptism of the world." Cyril in the 3d century says: "As in the night so in immersion, as if it were in the night, you can see nothing." Basil in the 4th century says: "The bodies of those baptized, are, as it were, buried in water." Eusebius gives the first known departure from the true mode, saying, "who (Novatian), assisted by the exorcists, (having fallen into a dangerous disease, and being supposed near death) he received (the rite), being poured round (perikutheis) on the bed on which he lay; if indeed it is proper to say that such a one could receive (the rite)." In 754 Pope Stephen dispensed with immersion. The English reformers had been sprinkled, and had not inspiration enough to restore the true method. Wesley found the church great, and failed to assert the whole truth. Dr. Rust finds that Wesley was great, and the church is great, and great is Diana, and so "wrests the scriptures to sustain his craft."

In this connection Mr. Rush attacks the baptism of John saying it was not the same as the Christian ordinance, because not done in the name of the Father, Son and Holy Ghost. This is putting stress upon a form of words, without regard to the "weightier matters of the law." John's faith was identical with that of the apostles. He was the first preacher of the Father, Son and Holy Ghost. Christ called him greatest of those born of woman, and went from "Nazareth of Galilee to be baptized of him in the river of Jordan," saying thus it behooveth him "to fulfill all righteousness;" and awful was the display of divine power. And one is left in doubt whether to seriously argue the case, or dismiss Methodist sophistry in disdain. John was the "voice of one crying in the wilderness;" the predicted fore-runner. His birth and whole history were miraculous. If he did not baptize in the name of the Father he knew the Father, and communed directly with him; and God said upon whom thou shalt see the Spirit descending, and remaining on him, the same is he that baptizeth with the Holy Ghost. If he did not baptize in the name of the Son, he was first to proclaim him as the Lamb of God, and the one who should baptize with the Holy Ghost. If he did not baptize in the name of the Holy Ghost, the Holy Ghost was there to bear witness, and the voice of God from heaven sealed his acts. "And straightway coming up out of the water he saw the heavens opened, and the Spirit like a dove descending upon him, and a voice out of heaven saying, 'This is my beloved Son.'" "Angels and ministers of grace defend us." Is there nothing in this scene to overcome the Methodist line of tradition and Diana! Is there nothing in this great event that prompts them to a desire to imitate the example of their Lord. Oh how unwise to substitute the errors of the dark medieval age, for the divine command "follow me." If the Methodists demand so much of John, may we not demand something of them; where in all their history can they point to a case of the divine approval of their acts? Their objection is that John did not baptize in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost; it is nothing that Father, Son, and Holy Ghost were present in a display of power and glory too awful for words to tell. But what right have they to say that John did not use this formula? They are wise above what is written; no man knows this.

Another objection they make is that long afterward Paul met some parties who said they had been baptized unto John's baptism, and he had to baptize them again. Why not avoid the difficulties by supposing that they had been baptized by some impostor or ignorant person, who did not and could not represent John? John's baptism was merged into that of Christ, and thus they were and are one. We would of course reject any one who should now propose to baptize unto John's baptism. It does not exist separately from that of Christ, and never did. "He shall increase, but I must decrease," applies to John's work being swallowed up by Christ's, or merging into it. John built up no church; sent out no apostles; delegated no power. He baptized unto repentance; preaching the kingdom of Christ, till he was killed, and that was the last of John's baptism. "From John the Baptist until now the kingdom of heaven suffereth violence," says Christ. Dr. Rush says there was no Christian ordinance till after Pentecost. What miserable shifts these man-made systems are. No wonder the voice said to the boy Joseph, "they are an abomination." Those whom John baptized did not need re-baptism. Those whom Paul re-baptized did not say they had been baptized by John. In view of this wresting of Scripture, I make the charge that the reason the Methodist doctor wants to degrade John is that it is not possible to break the force of the declaration that he baptized "at Enon near Salem because there was much water there—Polla Udata; Isn't that 'Hellenistic?'" No one can be baptized with the baptism the Eunuch was baptized with without "coming up out of the water. No man can follow Christ in the regeneration without "coming up out of the water." "Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death, that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life; for if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection." I prefer penniless Paul to the pampered teachers of this degenerate day. Wesley said "buried with him, alluding to the ancient manner of baptizing by immersion." Did Wesley know what is in the "Hellenistic." The Apostolic Constitutions of the third century say, "baptism relates to the death of Christ; the water answers to the grave; the immersion represents our dying with him."

The third point in Dr. Rush's article is that it was prophesied of Christ that he should "sprinkle many nations." This was written by Isaiah in the measure and metaphor of Hebrew poetry. Is, of course, symbolical, and has reference to the blood of sprinkling, and the practice of the Jews. His blood should save the nations as the blood of sprinkling atoned for sin under the old covenant.

Fourth—Immersion is not practicable in the land of the Esquimaux, says Dr. Rush. This is not true, and we are not Esquimaux; and sprinkling would be inconvenient there under some circumstances. In this connection it is claimed that three thousand converts could not have been baptized on the day of Pentecost. This is an arithmetical argument. There were twelve apostles, seventy elders, and "other seventy" and all commanded to "tarry" and therefore were at the Pentecostal meeting, and could have baptized three thousand persons after ten o'clock on that day, for Chrysostom and his clergy did the same thing—that was before the mode was changed, but the text does not say so, and if it did it would be credible, and not an exaggeration like the assertion that all Judea was baptized by John in Jordan. The Methodists should have lenity for the text, for they take six months' time for baptizing their converts, and in one case I know of did not baptize at all. In this connection the subject of water supply is treated by the doctor. During protracted sieges Jerusalem never suffered for water. At the time of Pentecost the Cedron is a flowing stream. Siloam was a running stream, and was used to irrigate lands outside the walls; and is now a place for washing clothes, bathing and watering animals. Bethesda was big enough for a great multitude of impotent folk, of blind, halt, and withered, to "step into."

Lastly Paul was told to "stand up," and be baptized; anastasias is the "Hellenistic" that is forced into service at this point. Then by this interpretation, "arise from the dead and Christ shall give thee light" would require one to "stand up" from the dead. Interpreting language requires an allowance for the idiom. For instance, "Get up and git," translated as an idiomatic expression would probably become, "Stand not on the order of thy going, but go." It takes the drilling of a college to bring out drilled dunces.

Dr. Rush promises to explain away the baptism of the Eunuch. After that I would recommend him for a "Star Route" case.

A DIALOGUE.

RESPECTING THE CHURCH OF CHRIST IN THESE LAST DAYS, THE CHURCH OF CHRIST IN FORMER DAYS, AND THE CHURCH OF SO-CALLED MODERN CHRISTIANITY.

BETWEEN DR. TWINETEXT AND ELDER D.

PART EIGHT.

DOCTOR T.—Well, sir; I acknowledge that I can not sustain the claim, neither that the Bible is all that God has given, nor that he will not give any more. And I am astonished at this fact, because I have always had the idea that with the Book of Revelations the volume of God's communications to man was forever closed. I did not consider the order in which John's writings were penned, nor the fact that he was only speaking of that book he was then writing on the Isle of Patmos, nor the more important fact that there is nothing in the testimony of John which indicates that God would give no more, and, as you have shown, that it only prohibits man from adding to or taking from that prophecy, or rather the book of that prophecy. But while I concede that fact, as I am in honor bound to do, I think it will be a hard matter for you to prove that Smith's great revelation, (?) "the golden Bible,"—or "Book of Mormon," as he termed it—is entitled to our credence as a revelation from God. The story that "an angel told him it was hidden in the hill of Cumorah," that "this angel directed him to the hill, and put the golden plates in his hands, with the Urim and Thummim by which he was to translate it," is rather too fishy for enlightened men to believe. It is indeed proven false by the testimony of reliable persons, who declare on their solemn oaths that the Reverend Solomon Spaulding, a highly esteemed but superannuated minister of the Presbyterian Church, wrote it for pastime, and that by some means either Smith or Sidney Rigdon stole it from Mr. Spaulding's widow, or from the printing office in Pittsburgh, Pa., and that Rigdon was the chief fabricator of the great falsehood, while only the ignorant Smith's name was used as the discoverer of the precious relic. This evidence has been before the world for the last fifty years, or thereabouts, and has not been successfully met by Smith or any of his followers; hence Smith's story is evidently a fraud, and if any revelation is to come from God we must look to some more reliable medium than Smith.

ELDER D.—Doctor, you seem to me a mixture of candor and inconsistency, but I suppose I must accept your plea of being so traditionated, and that it is a hard matter to shake those traditions off. But I perceive you are getting nearer the light, notwithstanding the weak and foolish reasoning, and the flimsy, vacillating testimony you bring to bear upon this matter. You say that Smith's story is "too fishy." So says the infidel world in regard to the story of the creation of man from the earth, and the woman from his rib. Noah's "tale of the ark and the flood," or Moses' version of that affair—the deliverance of Israel from Egypt, the events said to transpire on their journey from Egypt, including crossing the Red Sea on dry land, the receiving of the law amid the thunders of Mount Sinai, Joshua commanding the sun to stand still, etc., etc., in fact, every transaction recorded in the Bible has been declared by them "too fishy," and none more so than the manner of Christ's birth from a virgin. His miraculous draught of fishes is not considered more "fishy" than the story of his birth. This is only equalled in their estimation by the story of his resurrection. The great fact is, even men who admit the existence of a God, judge of his works and ways according to their "traditions" instead of according to his revelations and for this reason the wisdom of God has always been foolishness in the eyes of the world, and they have invariably rejected his work because he adopted a course the very reverse of their vain imagination. If this latter day work had come forth in harmony with the views, sentiments, desires, and traditions of men, it would have been an incontrovertible evidence of the falsity of its claims, and the grossness of its imposture, or else that he who had always declared himself "God unchangeable," "without any variableness or even the shadow of turning," had lost the crowning attribute of his godhead, (immutability), and become uncertain in his promises, variable in his laws, and changeable in his works. You are not prepared to admit the latter, hence you will hesitate to give judgment against the claims of Joseph Smith before you have fairly heard both sides of the question.

T.—There you are again—running off to the Bible to bring parallel cases by which to justify the imposture. Come at once to the point and prove that the charges I make are false! Did, or did not Joseph Smith steal the "Manuscript Found" from Solomon Spaulding?

D.—Patience is a jewel, and consistency is equally precious. Are you afraid of the Bible, Doctor? Don't it read as you "thought it did?" You, who have hugged it with such pious zeal to your bosom, should not fear to hear it quoted, even though it does present parallel cases to that which you deem an imposture. But to your charges. Did you see Joseph Smith steal the Manuscript Found from that holy man, Rev. Spaulding?

T.—No! But reliable people testify that he did.

D.—So-called "reliable people" testified that Christ's disciples stole his body from the tomb. Have you seen those "reliable witnesses," and questioned them?

T.—No! But they made oath to the transaction before proper authority, and it is recorded.

D.—Did not the "reliable witnesses" (?) before Pilate make oath to their charges of treason and imposture against the Son of God? History repeats itself sometimes. But let us examine your reliable witnesses. They charge that "EITHER Smith or Rigdon stole the M. S.," either from Spaulding or his widow, or from the printing office. One of these men must have stolen it, and from somewhere, if your case is a good one. But if either, which? If they know that one of these men stole it, they know which. But it is confessed by the manner of their so-called evidence, that they don't know which, and consequently do not know that either of them stole it. Again; these witnesses are uncertain as to where it was stolen from; hence they do not know that it was stolen at all. Their charges are as unfounded as the testimony of the lying witnesses before Pilate; yet they charge that "either Smith or Rigdon stole it," "either from Spaulding or from his widow, or from the printing office." Would you be willing to condemn a man, charged with crime, upon such flimsy testimony? But after charging that Joseph Smith, instigated by his mother, got up the "imposture," as you term the Book of Mormon, you say that Sidney Rigdon was the head and front of the matter. Here your testimony is as faulty as that of your "reliable(?) witnesses." For, if Joseph got it up, Rigdon did not. But while you charge Joseph Smith with being an "ignoramus," you confess the marked ability of Sidney Rigdon, and claim that Joseph was "his tool." Please reconcile the facts and show how this "tool in the hands of Rigdon" was always the acknowledged head, the first in authority, the first in counsel, the first in the executive department of the church, and the one revered as the mouth-piece of God, not only by the whole church, but by Sidney Rigdon himself. If, as you and all the world claim, this is an imposture which Joseph presented, or which, as you claim, "Sidney Rigdon was the real founder of," the object of the imposition must have been to get gain and honor. Was it likely that the "able," "eloquent," "cunning," "crafty" Rigdon would allow his mere "tool," an "ignoramus," to get possession of all the honors and what means could be made out of the imposture without exposing the fraud when he found that he had been cheated out of the darling objects which he had set his heart upon? There may be honor among thieves; but when one rogue obtains improper advantage over another, human nature rebels, and is very apt to break faith with such a colleague. But Sidney Rigdon never complained because Joseph Smith was his superior—he accepted and honored him as such, and gave his testimony to the world that Joseph Smith had been an instrument in the hands of God in leading him into the fulness of the everlasting gospel.

T.—If neither Smith nor Rigdon stole the manuscript, nor published it as the Book of Mormon, there has been a great deal of false swearing, much pains taken, and a vast amount of money spent to prove the Book of Mormon an imposture and fraud upon the strength of this false testimony. But I shall need stronger evidence than the testimony of Smith, Rigdon, or any other Latter Day Saint to prove that the Mormon Bible was not made from Spaulding's Romance. I admit the testimony of Smith's enemies is vague and indefinite, to say the least. They surely ought to know which, if either stole it, and also where it was stolen from. And as they fail to designate positively, which one stole it, (and they certainly would have done this if they knew, for they seemed very anxious to prove Smith an impostor), their testimony is unreliable on that point, and equally so as to the question where it was stolen from. But as they charge that it was stolen "either from Spaulding," "or Spaulding's widow," "or from the printing office," it is evident they were swearing to something they knew nothing about. I grant you all this; but I submit that, while this proves that they knew nothing about it, it does not prove that Smith or Rigdon did not in some way get access to Spaulding's Romance, and publish it as the Book of Mormon. The whole world knows that a romance was written by Rev. Spaulding, and that romance undoubtedly would treat upon sacred things, as that would be in keeping with his sacred calling. And you know it would be an easy matter for some shrewd impostor like Smith or Rigdon, if they got possession of it, to palm it off upon an ignorant people as a divine revelation.

D.—I am glad you have detected the non-reliability of these pretended witnesses; for it must be borne in mind that it is upon their testimony, and that alone, that all the divines of Christendom, without exception, have pronounced the Book of Mormon to be the work of Solomon Spaulding. They have spent thousands of dollars, flooded the world with books and pamphlets, and employed ministers and lecturers of every shade of character to publish it as such to the world. I don't wonder you blush, Doctor; but you will blush deeper yet when I present facts that, under the providence of God, have come to light within the last year, upon this subject. For although your prejudice is too great to allow you to receive evidence from Joseph Smith or any of the Latter Day Saints, you must, as an honest man, receive it from the source from whence it comes. The original "Manuscript Found," written by your learned and pious (?) Reverend Solomon Spaulding, has come to light, and is authenticated by the signatures of Aaron Wright, Oliver Smith, and John N. Miller, who testified to the identity of the manuscript as Spaulding's writings fifty years ago. And these, with others, were made to testify that it was the manuscript from which the Book of Mormon was copied by Smith or Rigdon, but which of the two men they could not tell. It is now in the library of Oberlin College, Oberlin, Ohio, and was placed in the possession of President Fairchild by Dr. L. L. Rice, of Honolulu, Sandwich Islands, on the 12th of June, 1885. It is accompanied by a letter from Dr. Rice to President Fairchild, in which he says: "Herewith I send to you the Solomon Spaulding Manuscript to be deposited in the library of Oberlin College, for reference by any one who may be desirous of seeing or examining it. As a great deal of inquiry has been made about it since it became known that it was in my possession, I deem it proper that it be deposited for safe keeping where any one interested in it, whether Mormon or anti-Mormon, may examine it. It has been in my possession forty-six years—from 1839 to 1885—and for forty-four years of that time no one examined it, and I was not aware of its contents. I send it to you enclosed in the same wrapper and tied with the same string that must have enclosed it for near half a century." And in a letter to President Joseph Smith, in answer to a letter from him Dr. Rice says:—"The Spaulding Manuscript in my possession came into my hands in this wise. In 1839-40, my partner and myself bought of E. D. Howe the Painesville Telegraph, published at Painesville, Ohio. The transfer of the printing department, types, press, &c., was accompanied with a large collection of books, manuscripts, &c., the manuscript of Spaulding among the rest. So, you see, it has been in my possession over forty years. But I never examined or knew the character of it, until some six or eight months since. The wrapper was marked 'Manuscript Story—Conneaut Creek.' The wonder is that in some of my movements I did not destroy or burn it with a large amount of rubbish that had accumulated from time to time. It happened that President Fairchild was here on a visit at the time I discovered the contents of it, and it was examined by him and others with much curiosity." In another part of the letter Dr. Rice observes,—“As to this manuscript, I can not see that it can be of any use to any body, except to the Mormons, to show that it is not the original of the Mormon Bible.” Mr. Fairchild writes further to Joseph, saying,—“Certainly, the manuscript I saw was not the source of the Book of Mormon.” He adds however says the Western Watchman, from which this extract of Dr. Fairchild's is quoted, "that since the discovery has been made public, it has been claimed that there were two manuscripts by Spaulding, one on the Indian and the other on the Hebrew tribes, the former being that discovered in Honolulu, and the latter the source of the original J. Smith's alleged inspiration. Nothing, however, seems to have been heard or circulated about any second manuscript until after the first (so termed) was discovered, which gives the hypothesis a decidedly ex post facto smack that some may call 'fishy.'"

I will add that Dr. Rice says he found the following endorsement in the manuscript: "The writings of Solomon Spaulding proved by Aaron Wright, Oliver Smith, John N. Miller, and others. The testimonies of the above gentlemen are in my possession. Signed, D. P. Hurlbut." Hence, neither Smith nor Rigdon stole the "Manuscript Found." For full information on the subject I refer you to a work entitled "Manuscript Found," published at Lamoni, Decatur Co., Iowa, by the Herald Publishing Board. When you have read that, compare with the Book of Mormon and blush for your "holy," "pious," and "learned" Rev. Spaulding, minister of the Presbyterian Church; and for the "reliable witnesses" who, in their pious (?) zeal to destroy Joseph Smith and crush out the church which God made him an instrument in founding, who have so unblushingly lied, but most of all for yourself and the host of learned divines, together with Mrs. Dr. Horace Eaton, of Palmyra, N. Y., who have accepted the gross falsehood without examination, or if they did examine it, became wilfully criminal partisans in sanctioning, abetting, and publishing from press and pulpit the unfounded falsehood to save their own sinking crafts. And if you do not blush with shame and deep confusion, then indeed your "conscience is seared as with a hot iron," and truth has no place in your heart.

T.—Well, well, Elder you are waxing warm, and perhaps not without some just cause; but I confess that I accepted the story because it was backed by the very reverend names of my clerical brethren. I never dreamed they would lend the weight of their great influence to sustain a falsehood. For my part I shall now examine the matter thoroughly. But let me tell you, there still is room for doubt as to the divinity of this "Golden Bible." And while I acknowledge that mine has been proven the "fishy" part of the story, you have hard work before you ere I am persuaded to accept the divinity of the Book of Mormon. I have never seen its title in the Bible, nor anything that I could understand as alluding to it. And unless you can find some scriptures in which reference is made to it, I can not receive it.

D.—You remember there was great difficulty in determining what books of the New Testament were inspired; and that for a time some that are now in the sacred Canon were rejected by some of the learned fathers, John's Revelations among the rest; and that even the great reformer, Martin Luther, rejected the Epistle of James and denounced it as an "Epistle of Straw." (Dick's Lectures on Theology, Lect. 13, p. 131.) But I am not aware that any were rejected because they had not been before referred to by inspired authors. If you judge all of the sacred writings by that rule, you will throw them all away as even worse than "Epistle of Straw." But if I prove that the Book of Mormon has been spoken of before it was written, by the sacred writers of the Old Testament, then it must follow that its being written and coming forth in the last days must have been a part of the purpose of God in his divine economy, and hence of great importance to the human family.

T.—I readily concede that point; but I am doubtful, in fact, I know of no allusion to it.

D.—In order that the matter may be thoroughly understood, it will be necessary to review to some extent the history of Abraham and his great family. The scriptures teach that God chose Abraham and his seed as a peculiar people; that "in Abraham and in his seed all the kindreds of the earth were to be blessed." God promised to Abraham the land of Canaan; the same promise was renewed to Isaac, and also to Jacob. (see Gen. from 12th to 35th chapter.) In 28: 14, 15, Jacob is told: "Thou shalt spread abroad to the west and to the east and to the north and to the south. * * * And behold I am with thee and will keep thee in all places whither thou goest and will bring thee again into this land; for I will not leave thee, until I have done that which I have spoken to thee of." This shows that the Almighty did not intend to confine them to that land. The next point we come to is the blessing upon Ephraim and Manasseh. We find in Gen. 48: 16, Jacob predicts that "the lads" are to "grow into a multitude in the midst of the earth;" and in verse 19 that Ephraim is to be the greatest, for "his seed shall become a multitude of nations." In Gen., chapter 49, Jacob blessed his own sons, and of Joseph he says: Joseph is a fruitful bough, even a fruitful bough by a well; whose branches run over the wall. * * * Even by the God of thy father, who shall keep thee; and by the Almighty who shall bless thee with the blessing of heaven above, blessings of the deep that lieth under, blessings of the breasts, and of the womb: The blessings of thy father have prevailed above the blessings of my progenitors unto the utmost bounds of the everlasting hills; they shall be on the head of Joseph, and on the crown of the head of him that was separate from his brethren." Keep in mind the fact that Jacob says: "The blessings of thy father have prevailed above the blessings of my progenitors." Abraham and Isaac were given the land of Canaan, but Jacob's seed was to "spread abroad to the west and to the east, and to the north and to the south;" hence we must not be surprised if we find Jacob's seed at all points of the compass. And if they are there, as they are chosen of the Lord, his word will be likely to be with them, since "the secret of the Lord is with them that fear him, and he will show unto them his covenant." Now listen to the "blessing wherewith Moses the man of God, * * * while he was king in Jeshurun, when the heads of the people and the tribes of Israel were gathered together," gave to Joseph. "And of Joseph he said: "Blessed of the Lord be his land for the precious things of heaven, for the dew, and for the deep that coucheth beneath, and for the precious fruits brought forth by the sun, and for the precious things put forth by the moon, and for the chief things of the ancient mountains, and for the precious things of the lasting hills, and for the precious things of the earth and fulness thereof, and for the good will of him that dwelt in the bush; let the blessing come upon the head of Joseph, and upon the top of the head of him that was separated from his brethren. His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the horns of unicorns; with them he shall push the people together to the ends of the earth. And they are the ten thousands of Ephraim, and they are the thousands of Manasseh."—(Deut. 33: 13-17). There are several points we will do well to notice. First, the agreement between this blessing pronounced by Moses and that declared by Jacob. That of Moses seems to enter more into details; but both are substantially alike. Moses speaks of Joseph's land as though it was separate and distinct from the land of the other tribes; and we have seen that the blessings which Jacob received "prevailed above," were greater than the blessings of his progenitors, "unto the utmost bounds of the everlasting hills;" and he placed this greater blessing on the head of Joseph. And as we have also seen that, while the land given to Abraham and Isaac was only the land of Canaan, the Lord told Jacob: "Thou shalt spread abroad," etc., (Gen. 28: 13, 15). Therefore, whatever else may have been embodied in the blessing given to Jacob, greater possessions were one of the prevailing features. But as the land of Canaan was, according to Dr. Wm. Smith, "but a strip of country about the size of Wales, less than one hundred and forty miles in length, and barely forty miles in average breadth, on the very frontier of the east, hemmed in between the Mediterranean sea on the one hand, and the enormous trench of the Jordan on the other, by which it is effectually cut off from the mainland of Asia behind it. It is on the very outpost, the extreme western edge of the east. On the shore of the Mediterranean it stands, as if it had advanced as far as possible towards the west." And as the inheritance of the sons of Joseph was chiefly on the Mediterranean Sea, extending to Jordan on the east, the sea being a "wall" unto them on the west, in "running over the wall," they would go over the sea in search of greater possessions. And as the seed of Joseph were to be "a multitude of nations in the midst of the earth," and as Jacob declares their possessions were to extend "unto the utmost bounds of the everlasting hills," it follows that some of his seed must leave the land of Canaan. And as the language—"utmost bounds"—is expressive of great distance, the word "utmost," signifies furtherest, therefore we are to understand that these possessions were to extend and include the furtherest or most distant limits of the everlasting hills. Such an expression could hardly refer to Joseph's inheritance in the land of Canaan. Its extent was too small. Moreover, Joseph's seed must not encroach upon the possessions of his brethren; therefore to increase their landed possessions they must "run over the wall"—go "over the sea." In doing so they, by sailing west, would pass through the Straits of Gibraltar, thence by continuing westward over the Atlantic Ocean they would land on the western continent. Now we will notice Moses' description of Joseph's land. First, "Blessed of the Lord be his land for the precious things of heaven." Mark the language, it is very significant. What are the precious things of heaven? They are something different from the other things named. Those that follow after these "precious things of heaven" are all physical blessings and pertain to earth. But not so these, for these pertain to heaven. I need not remind you, Doctor, of the preciousness of the word of the Lord. David says:—"The statutes of the Lord are right, rejoicing the heart. * * * More to be desired are they than gold, yea, than much fine gold: sweeter also than honey or the honey comb." (Ps. 19: 7, 11). "The law of thy mouth is better unto me than thousands of gold and silver." (Ps. 119: 72). "Through thy precepts I get understanding." (v. 104). Therefore I love thy commandments above gold, yea, above fine gold." (v. 127). This then is undoubtedly one of the precious things of heaven. And then comes the blessings that can not be expressed, given as the reward of obedience to that word; and this word was to come direct to Joseph's land—not indirectly through another source, or from another land. It is one of the characteristic blessings of Joseph's land; and that land embraces in its extent. "The utmost bounds of the everlasting hills." We shall refer to this again.

"For the dew, and for the deep, that coucheth beneath, and for the precious fruits brought forth by the sun, and for the precious things put forth by the moon." These embrace a great part if not all the products of the vegetable kingdom; and Joseph's land was to abound with them. Next the man of God mentions "the chief things of the ancient mountains," and "the precious things of the lasting hills." Here reference is made to the precious and useful metals and minerals with which the Western Continent abounds. "And for the precious things of the earth and fulness thereof." So far as the Western Continent is known, her resources are almost boundless, and every new exploring expedition reveals fresh and unheard of treasures of wealth, and answers clearly the prophetic description given by Jacob and Moses, and proves unmistakably the divine inspiration of these holy men when so minutely describing the geographical features and characteristics of this continent. But Moses crowns all these temporal blessings, in harmony with the first blessing—the "precious things of heaven"—with the words, "And for the good will of him [God] that dwelt in the bush." This also is to be manifest on Joseph's land. Surely, with all these blessings, "It is a choice land above all other lands."

T.—This is entirely a new idea; but putting the blessing given to Jacob: "Thou shalt spread abroad to the west and to the east and to the north and to the south," (Gen. 28:13, 14, 15), with the words of Jacob found in Gen. 49:26, "The blessings of thy father have prevailed above the blessing of my progenitors," proves unmistakably that Jacob's seed had a right to a greater inheritance than that given to Abraham and Isaac. Then uniting the above two declarations with another of Jacob's when he blessed Joseph and told him that "his branches should run over the wall," it would indicate that the inheritance given Joseph's seed in the land of Canaan would be too narrow for them, and they would have to go to another land, and I know of no land that would answer the description given by Moses so well as the Western Continent. But I can not agree with you in all of your conclusions. For instance your mode of interpreting the words of Moses, "For the precious things of heaven;" you make them mean spiritual blessings, or the word of God. God revealed his word on the Eastern Continent, but I know of no intimation that he would ever reveal it on the Western Continent. Moreover, the word "heaven" does not always mean the abode of God, but often applies only to the firmament. The precious things referred to may signify the dew or rains or sunshine, and you know the term, "dew of heaven" is several times mentioned in scripture.

D.—It is true the word heaven often means the firmament, as in the account of the creation. But in the passage before us it seems to be used as referring to God, or the abode of God. Jacob in his blessing to Joseph uses this language, "Even by the God of thy father who shall help thee, and by the Almighty who shall bless thee with the blessings of heaven above." Doctor, you would understand this language as referring to spiritual blessings, yet you can not doubt that Moses' language means the same thing. To say that God who had manifested such care over Abraham, Isaac, Jacob and Joseph, as to give such profusion of temporal blessings and no spiritual ones, is to greatly lessen the magnitude and importance of the blessings which God gave and inspired these holy men to promise. If there was no spiritual blessing here promised to rest on Joseph in his land, or, more properly speaking, on Joseph's seed in that land, then there was no spiritual blessing promised to Abraham or Isaac. And if not, in what sense could all the families of the earth be blessed in them? But there were great spiritual blessings promised to these, and as Jacob declares that his was greater than theirs, and now as both Moses and Jacob sealed this greater blessing on the head of Joseph, (Gen. 49:26; Deut. 33:16), it follows that the spiritual and temporal were blended together. Permit me now to refer to the prophecy of Jacob while his hands were on the heads of Ephraim and Manasseh, "Let them grow into a multitude of nations in the midst of the earth." Then, speaking of Ephraim being greater than Manasseh, "And his seed shall become a multitude of nations." Now you are well aware, if you consider the matter, that this prophecy could not refer to their greatness in the land of Canaan, a land which Dr. Smith declares "is not greater in extent than one hundred and forty miles long by forty wide." But the term, "Midst of the earth," determines the part of the globe where they "shall become a multitude of nations." I now quote the Millennial Star, vol. 6, p. 66. The prophecy was pronounced in Egypt: "Taking the longitude of Grand Cairo, we find it to be 30 degrees east of the meridian of London, and tracing our course east or west 180 degrees, we find ourselves 'in the midst of the earth' at the termination of the stony mountains of North America, near Crooks Inlet." In harmony with this fact, we find on this Western Continent a people evidently of one common origin, yet divided into "a multitude of nations," each nation having a separate government and language, with manners and customs peculiar to themselves. The traditions of these several nations point to the Asiatic Continent as their original home, and the patriarchs of Canaan as their progenitors. One tradition is, that they descended from a man who had twelve sons. This points to the patriarch Jacob. Mr. Boudinot says, "It is said among their principal or beloved men, that they have it handed down from their ancestors that the book which the white people have (referring to the Bible) was once theirs; that while they had it they prospered exceedingly." Boudinot further says: "Their language in its roots, idiom, and particular construction, appears to have the whole genius of the Hebrew, and what is very remarkable and well worthy of a serious attention, has most of the peculiarities of that language; especially those in which it differs from most other languages." He concludes they descended from the ten tribes. (Gospel Reflector).

I now refer you to the 17th chapter of Ezekiel. A parable is shown and explained by the Almighty. The king of Babylon had made Judah tributary unto him. Zedekiah, the king of Judah, had rebelled. Nebuchadnezzar had come against him, defeated him, slew his sons, put out the eyes of Zedekiah, and then carried him captive into Babylon because he had broken the covenant. This was about 600 years before Christ. (See 2 Kings 24:25). The "cedar" here mentioned was the Kingdom of Judah; the king, Zedekiah, was the highest branch, with the princes and nobles, who were taken captives with him. His rebellion and captivity form the burden of this chapter to the 21st verse inclusive. In verses 22, 23, 24, the Lord remembers his covenant with Jacob, and expresses his purpose to preserve to himself a remnant—"Thus saith the Lord God; I will also take of the highest branch of the high cedar, and will set it; I will crop off from the top of his young twigs, a tender one, and will plant it upon an high mountain and eminent: In the mountain of the height of Israel will I plant it; and it shall bring forth boughs, and bear fruit, and be a goodly cedar: And under it shall dwell all fowl of every wing; in the shadow of the branches thereof shall they dwell. And all the trees of the field shall know that I the Lord have brought down the high tree, have exalted the low tree, have dried up the green tree, and have made the dry tree to flourish. I the Lord have spoken and have done it." In speaking of the cedar in this connection the Lord calls it "the high cedar," by which I understand him to mean the whole house of Israel. The highest branch thereof is the tribe of Joseph, who was the first born from Jacob's legal wife, Rachel. Although Rueben was the first son born unto him; but forasmuch as he defiled his father's bed his birthright was given unto the sons of Joseph, the son of Israel." (1 Chron. 5:1; Gen. 49:4, 5). And the name of Israel was given unto them. (Gen. 48:16).

God says, "I will take of the highest branch of the high cedar, and will set it. I will crop off from the top of his young twigs a tender one, and will plant it upon an high mountain and eminent." From this we learn that he will establish this "tender twig" of the house of Joseph in a land exalted and known for its greatness, not only in extent, but for its wealth and privileges and power. It is to be "in the mountain of the height of Israel," even in the greatness of Israel this land is great. This agrees with the blessings of Jacob and Moses. It is to "be a goodly cedar." "And under it shall dwell all fowl of every wing; in the shadow of its branches shall they dwell." This greatness is to be realized in its fullest extent in the future, and I believe it will be found to be the kingdom of God. Compare Matthew 13:31,

32. "The trees of the field" refer to the nations of the world, "the world is the field." And all the nations will know that God has exalted Israel, while he has abased the proud and haughty kingdoms. And Israel, who has been looked upon as a dead and withered tree, or nation, shall yet be made to flourish and bear fruits of truth and righteousness. And Ephraim is the Lord's first born, God will not forget his pledge that he made unto Jacob; "I will not leave thee until I have done that which I have spoken to thee of." (Gen. 28: 15, and Isa. 60).

In harmony with the foregoing scriptures, the Book of Mormon tells us, that in the first year of the reign of Zedekiah king of Judah, a man named Lehi, of the tribe of Joseph, who had dwelt at Jerusalem all his days, saw a vision in answer to prayer, in which the corruption and abominations of Jerusalem, and the destructions which would come upon her in consequence thereof were shown to him. He was commanded afterwards to take his family and depart from Jerusalem into the wilderness, with the promise that God would lead them into a land that was "choice above all other lands." They travelled from place to place in the wilderness, continually receiving instructions from the Lord, until he finally led them to the sea, or as they termed it, "Irreantum," meaning "many waters," which was undoubtedly the Mediterranean Sea. They were commanded to build a ship, and when they had set sail the wind drove them toward the promised land. Eventually they landed on the western coast of South America. They had with them the five books of Moses, and a record of the Jews from the beginning, even down to the commencement of the reign of Zedekiah, and also the prophecies of the holy prophets down to that time. They pitched their tents, tilled the soil, and it yielded abundantly to them. They found beasts in the forests of every kind, including the cow and the ox, the ass and the horse, the goat, and all manner of wild animals which were for the use of man, also various kinds of ore, as gold, silver, and copper; but it is thought they commenced permanent settlement in the region of country not far from the Isthmus of Darien. Thus we have a portion of the seed of Joseph landed on the western continent, upon a land fully answering the description given of Joseph's land by Jacob and Moses. Nor do we know of any other land on the face of the globe that will answer that description but the continent of America. It will next be our duty to examine the claims of the Book of Mormon, by the evidence found within its pages.

THE GOSPEL.—No. I.

KIRTLAND, O., Sept., 1834.

WHATEVER difference may exist in the world about the scheme of eternal life, and the duties enjoined upon the human family to prepare them for its enjoyment, all, we believe, who acknowledge the truth of the Bible, agree in this, that the ancient Apostles, commissioned by the Savior, were fully authorized to proclaim the gospel, and to make known the will of God to man; and that the things which were taught by them were correct; and the gospel which they preached was God's only scheme of life; and that adding to it, or taking from it, deprived mankind of the benefits resulting therefrom, and tended to disarm the plan of eternal life of all its powers.

We believe that it is universally admitted by all believers in revelation, that no persons could receive into their hearts the things taught by these men, and practice the duties they required, without obtaining the promises made by them; for if this were not the case, it would be worse than folly to hold them up to view as messengers sent of God to bless the nations.

The point of light in which these Apostles are held up to view in the Scriptures is, that the gospel which they preached was the only gospel acknowledged of God, and the proclamation which they proclaimed the only one that men were authorized to receive, and the promises which they made, were to be as certainly enjoyed, as ever men put themselves in a situation to receive them, by obeying the instructions which they gave them. For though religion in some form was prevailing in every part of the civilized world in the days of the Savior and his Apostles, still they presented themselves to the world as the only persons who were capable of enlightening the minds of men, and of bringing them into an acquaintance with the true faith, and of introducing them into the family of the Most High, having (as they said) authority from God to do this work, and that a dispensation of the gospel was committed to them for this purpose.

The professed object of their apostolic mission was, that men might be saved: this their commission clearly sets forth. "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned!" From this it is plain, that whatever might have been the amount of religion in their day, there was not a sufficiency of righteousness on earth to save one man, only as it was restored to the world through the Savior and his apostles, nor was it possible for one single creature in all the world to be saved unless they put themselves under their guidance, for they were to go into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature; so that every creature in all the world, had to be taught by them, and receive the gospel which they preached, or else they must be damned; for they who believed not should be damned. This was certainly placing their commission in an important point of light; and their own teachings were in perfect consistency with their commission.

Paul says, when writing to the Galatians, first chapter, 8 and 9 versés. "But though we, or an angel from heaven preach any other gospel unto you, let him be accursed. As we said before, so say I now again, if ANY man preach any other gospel unto you than that ye have received, let him be accursed." In all their teachings they held themselves up to view as the only teachers of righteousness which were approved of God in the world, and that their mission was not necessary only for the salvation of a part of the world, but for all of it; yea, every creature in it. It mattered not what progress the world had made in the knowledge of other things; in the knowledge of the science of salvation they had retrograded, until there were none doing good, no not one. And unless God had sent the Apostles, or others authorized as they were, the world must have perished; every creature in it must have been damned; for they were to go into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature, he (that is every creature) that believed and was baptized, should be saved; but he (that is, every creature) that believed not, should be damned. Had there been one creature in all the world who was in a state of salvation, or could have attained that state without the Apostles, this commission would not have been correct, that is, that every creature in all the world who did not believe them and be baptized by their directions should be damned.

Nothing can make the Apostles' commission true, but the fact, that no creature in all the world could be saved without their being brought into favor with God through their ministry.

The Savior, through the whole course of his ministry in the flesh, made it one of the principal items of teaching to make it clearly manifest to the religious Jews, that they had departed from the principles delivered unto them through the messengers whom God had inspired to make known His will to men. He did not reprove the Jews for adhering to the law, but because they had corrupted it and made it void by their traditions. For neither the law nor the prophets made hypocrites, blind guides, a generation of vipers; but a corruption of one, and a perversion of the other did—they made both. Neither was the law nor the prophets against the promises of God, nor yet a hindrance to any person coming into the kingdom of God; but a perversion and a corruption of them were against the promises of God, and a barrier to men entering into the kingdom of heaven.

The Jews were not to blame for adhering to both the law and the prophets, but for corrupting one and perverting the other, through which corruption and perversion, they ceased to believe either Moses or the prophets; for had they believed them they would have believed the Savior also; for they wrote of him. Had the leaders of the Jews never corrupted the law nor perverted the prophets, they would never have been overthrown; for they would have received their Messiah when he came, and have escaped "the wrath to come." But in consequence of their having corrupted the law, and perverted the prophets, they would neither enter the kingdom of God themselves, nor let those who were entering go in; for which the Savior upbraided them. Not that they worshiped God according to the law, but according to their own traditions, by which they had made void the law, and rendered it of none effect; teaching for doctrines the commandments of men. Mark, 7th chapter, from the 5th to the 15th verses; Matthew, 15th chapter, from the 2d to the 10th verse.

Every person in any degree acquainted with the Jewish history, as written in the Scriptures, knows, that God, previous to the days of the Savior's coming in the flesh, was withdrawing from that people, and that he continued to do so until they were abandoned to destruction.

But God never withdraws from a people for adhering to the order of things he established among them; for while they all adhere to Him he cleaves to them. Had the Jews, in truth and verity, continued to observe the law as God delivered it unto them, and to have believed the prophets who were sent unto them, God would have continued with them, and they would have known their Messiah when he came, and have entered into his kingdom and have found rest, and continued the people of God, even the favorites of heaven, until this day.—But instead of their doing so, they changed their temple from a house of prayer, to be a house of merchandise, and a den of thieves. Matthew, 21st chapter, 12th and 13th verses. Mark, 11th chapter, 15, 16, and 17th verses. Luke, 19th chap., 45th and 46th verses. They made void the law by their traditions, and stoned the prophets that were sent unto them. Matthew, 23d chapter, 37th verse. Whatever was saving in their institutions they rejected and defiled, until destruction came on them to the very uttermost. This was their situation when the Savior came among them, and such their condition when He commissioned the Apostles to go and preach the gospel to them, and not to them only, but to every creature in ALL the world also.

The Apostle Paul in the epistle to the Romans, gives us a minute description of both the Gentiles and the Jews in his day; in the first chapter commencing with the twentieth verse he thus describes the state of the Gentiles: "Because when they knew God, they glorified Him not as God, neither were thankful; but became vain in their imaginations, and their foolish hearts were darkened. Professing themselves to be wise they became fools, and changed the glory of the incorruptible God into an image made like to corruptible man, and to birds, and four footed beasts, and creeping things. Wherefore God also gave them up to uncleanness, through the lusts of their own hearts to dishonor their own bodies between themselves; who changed the truth of God into a lie, and worshiped and served the creature more than the Creator, who is blessed forever. Amen." The Apostle continues his description of the Gentiles to the close of the chapter, which the reader may examine at his leisure, and he will see that the picture is one of no very pleasing character.

From the description here given of the Gentiles, we learn this fact, that the Gentiles had previously known God; for when they knew God, says the Apostle, they worshiped him not as God, etc. This is evidence positive, that the Gentiles had turned away from the knowledge of God, and were apostates from the truth.

In the third chapter of this same epistle, he gives a description of the Jews also, commencing with the 9th verse to the close of the eighteenth we have the following description: "What then? are we better than they? No, in no wise; for we have before proved both Jews and Gentiles, that they are all under sin, as it is written. There is none righteous, no not one. There is none that understandeth, there is none that seeketh after God. They are all gone out of the way, they are together become unprofitable; there is none that doeth good, no, not one. Their throat is an open sepulchre; with their tongues they have used deceit; the poison of asps is under their lips; whose mouth is full of cursing and bitterness. Their feet are swift to shed blood. Destruction and misery are in their ways; and the way of peace have they not known. There is no fear of God before their eyes." In the 19th verse he says: "Now we know, that what things soever the law saith, it saith to them who are under the law; that every mouth may be stopped, and all the world may become guilty before God." In so saying the Apostle gives his readers to understand that the preceding quotations, taken from the Psalms, were applicable to the Jews and to the Jews only; for they were the persons to whom the law was given, and they, and they only were under the law. "Now what things soever the law saith, it saith to them that are under the law." So the Apostle makes a direct application of what he here said to the Jews, as they were the people, and the only people, who were under the law.

Such is the light in which God viewed the world, both Jew and Gentile, when he sent the Apostles among them to bring them back to the principles of righteousness, from whence they had strayed; for God considered them all, not only under sin, but in a state of apostasy also.

Let the world have made what advances it might in literature, science or philosophy, in relation to eternal life—their case was deplorable; for instead of their being in a situation to be saved, they were in a situation to be destroyed; instead of being redeemed, they were in a situation to be condemned; for so far had the whole world, both Jew and Gentile, apostatized from the living God, that there was not a sufficiency of righteousness to save one creature in ALL the world.

Whatever improvement, therefore, the Jews or the Gentiles might have made in worldly matters, they were in a situation in which they could make no advance towards eternal life, only by receiving the Apostles, and submitting themselves to their guidance and direction, however humiliating this might have been to them. But so it was, that to the fishermen of Galilee they must come, and to them they must submit, of else they must be damned.

So closely does the God of heaven adhere to his plan of saving men, that nothing will be admitted as a substitute for his ordinances and institutions; no services but those of his own appointment will tend in the least degree to save men. The Jews might lay heavy burdens on each other's shoulders, subject themselves to many privations, make many prayers, and pay tithes of all they possessed, but when done, it would leave them short of eternal life—to the fishermen of Galilee they must go, or be saved they could not. The Gentiles might lacerate their bodies, offer their children in sacrifice, or subject themselves to the severest scourgings, buffetings, or burnings; they might form books of morals, codes of laws, systems of government, or modes of worship, but all in vain, it would not give unto them eternal life, nor could they by any means obtain the salvation of God, only through and by the fishermen of Galilee; for their commission was to every creature in all the world, and he who did not believe them, should be damned; for there was no other gospel; no other scheme of things, nor no other form of worship, that had eternal life as their reward, but the gospel proclaimed by the apostles, and the forms of worship taught by them.

These apostles, however, did not pretend that God never had at any former period of the world, any messengers who had been authorized to bring men into a state of salvation, and to proclaim the gospel to the world; but on the contrary, Paul says in the 3d chapter of the epistle to the Galatians, and 9th verse, that the gospel had been preached unto Abraham. He says thus: "And the scripture, foreseeing that God would justify the heathen through faith, preached before the gospel unto Abraham, saying, In thee all nations shall be blessed." Observe that he says that the gospel was preached unto Abraham. But in the 1st chapter of the epistle to the Ephesians, the apostle shows that the gospel was of a much earlier date than the days of Abraham; that it was before time, being devised in eternity, before the foundation of the world. See the 3d, 4th, 5th, and 6th verses. "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ; according as he hath chosen us in him before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy and without blame before him in love; having predestinated us unto the adoration of children by Jesus Christ in himself, according to the good pleasure of his will, to the praise of the glory of his grace, wherein he hath made us accepted in the Beloved."

In the 11th verse he says: "In whom also we have obtained an inheritance, being predestinated according to the purpose of him who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will."

"We learn the following things from the above saying of the apostle: That the scheme of things by which he and the saints at Ephesus were saved was devised in eternity before the foundation of the world. "According as he hath chosen us in him [Christ] before the foundation of the world."

2d. That they were to be the children of God, through adoption by Jesus Christ. "Having predestinated us unto the adoption of children by Jesus Christ to himself."

3d. And all this according to his own purpose or scheme of things, (for what is a man's purpose but his scheme of things,) by which he works all things after the counsel of his own will? That is the same as to say, that the plan of life and salvation which is called in the scriptures the gospel, was heaven's own scheme or purpose, and that scheme was before the world was; and that before God created man he purposed in himself that mankind should become his son through adoption, by Jesus Christ, and in no other way.

If the apostle, in the foregoing sayings, teaches any thing, it is, that the gospel, or scheme of life and salvation which is the same, was from before the beginning, and that from the creation of the world God had but the one way of saving men; and that all that were saved, were to be saved in the same way; and this God had decreed, purposed, and predestinated, and by this eternal scheme of things, all things were accomplished according to the will of God, and this decree, will, and purpose, was before the foundation of the world.

Now let the truth of what the apostle here says be admitted and the result is, that that same scheme of things by which the Ephesians were saved, was the same by which all others that are to be redeemed, were saved. And if the same scheme of things, then the same ordinances were obeyed by all; for if Paul administered ordinances that were not administered to all who are to be redeemed, then they were not saved by the same plan of salvation; for where there is a difference, it matters not how small the difference is, the things thus differing are not the same, and it follows of necessity that if Paul baptized for the remission of sins, all others who are saved must have been baptized also for the same purpose, or else they were not all saved by the same gospel or plan of salvation; and if the plan of salvation taught by Paul required men to be born of the water, and the Spirit in order that they might enter into the kingdom of heaven, so the same must have been required of all since the foundation of the world or else the plan of salvation has not been the same, and if so Paul's testimony is not true.—Evening and Morning Star.

NOTICES.

The conference of South-Eastern Ohio and West Virginia District will be held April 24th and 25th, 1886, at Limerick, Jackson Co., Ohio, instead of at Vale's Mills, Vinton county, as per minutes of last conference. We kindly solicit the presence of brethren W. H. and E. L. Kelley, and as many other officials and members as can come.

T. J. BEATTY, President,

A. B. KIRKENDALL, Secretary.

The conference of the Southern Nebraska District will be held at Nebraska City, January 17th, 1886, at eleven o'clock; and it being the last conference of the year, I hope that all the branches will be sure to have their reports at the conference, (and not in some elder's old coat pocket), so that I can make out my annual report to the General Conference, as the law requires. Address me at Nebraska City, Nebraska.

J. B. GOULDSMITH, Dist. Sec'y.

Deuel, Willard Deuel, Julia A. Shellhart, George Ann, Margaret Hartman, sen., Millisa E. Yost, David Hartman, Rose Ellen Sorter, Avis C. Lane, Jacob Butler Yost. We, the undersigned, having been authorized by the branch to send this notice to the Herald, as we do not know how you feel in the work, to notify you that you may report yourselves to us by the 15th of February next, or your names will be dropped from the branch books, and appear on the general church records only. George M. Wyman, No. 1052 Enos Avenue, Des Moines, Iowa; or to Ezra Merrill, Lyon Street, between 17th and 18th, East Des Moines, Iowa.

[These names ought not to be "dropped" from the Branch Record, but be reported as "scattered" members.—Eds.]

MARRIED.

McMILLAN—MILLS.—December 13th, 1884, near Santa Ana, Cal., at the residence of the bride's parents, by Elder D. S. Mills, Mr. John McMillan and Sr. Annie Mills, second daughter of D. S. Mills. May peace and prosperity ever be theirs.

GOFF—HILDEBRAND.—By Elder D. S. Mills, at his residence, near Santa Ana, Cal., October 8th, 1885, Bro. Ammon A. Goff and Sr. Vina Hildebrand; the former of Laguna, and the latter late of Dow City, Iowa. This is a bond of strength for Zion's cause.

LOOMIS—GOFF.—October 14th, 1885, by Elder D. S. Mills, at the residence of the bride's parents, Goff's Hotel, Laguna, Cal., Bro. Lauren F. Loomis and Sr. Clinnie Goff, eldest daughter of Elder H. E. Goff. May their pathway be smooth to life's fair tree.

DIED.

HASELL.—At Elkhart, Anderson Co., Texas, February 26th, 1885, Bro. William R. Hassell. Bro. William was born in Anderson Co., Texas, July 23d, 1862, and was baptized by Elder Heman C. Smith, February 27th, 1882. Funeral sermon was preached in Saints' Hall in Elkhart, December 8th, 1885, by Heman C. Smith.

TRUBY.—At Putnam, Pa., December 26, 1885, Catherine Truby, aged 25 years, 7 months and 16 days. She was born in Newport, Giles Co., Virginia; was baptized August 14th, 1885, in Pittsburgh, Pa., by Elder Jacob Reese, and was a faithful Saint. Death was sweet to her. She passed away calmly, with a smile on her face, and told her friends around her that when she died, not to fret about her, for she knew she would have a glorious resurrection. She also told them to be faithful, so they could meet her again. She leaves a mother, father, three sisters, and two brothers, besides a great many relatives and friends, to mourn her loss. Funeral services were conducted by Elder Jacob Reese of Pittsburgh, at the home of her parents in Mansfield, Pa.

WATERMAN.—At Florence, Nebraska, December 15th, 1885, Sr. Mary J. Waterman, aged 72 years. She was born in England in 1813. Funeral services by brethren J. Avondet and O. H. Brown.

PEARSON.—At Corinth, Elgin county, Ontario, November 14th, 1885, of consumption, five weeks after the death of his mother, Bro. Richard, the youngest son of Brother Joseph and Sr. Jeanette Pearson. Brother Richard was born September 2d, 1859, in Malahide, Ontario; baptized and confirmed, October 30th, 1876, by Elder John Cornish. He leaves a young wife, a father and one brother, to mourn his loss; he died in the hope of meeting in the better land a mother, three sisters and three brothers, and also in the hope of coming forth in the first resurrection. Funeral sermon by Elder Arthur Leverton.

Brother Richard has passed away,
To the realms of endless day,
When he returns to earth again,
It will be with Christ to reign.

FISHER.—At Burlington, Iowa, December 16, 1885, Bro. George Fisher, born in Germany, November 19th, 1836; baptized the 23d of March, 1872. Funeral service conducted by Elder Bauer; text, Ninetieth Psalm.

TROUT.—At Grand Rapids, Michigan, November 11th, 1885, of scarlet fever, Walter H., son of Bro. Joseph and Sr. Louise Trout. Walter was born at Morris, Grundy county, Illinois, November 24th, 1868. At the time of his death was 16 years, 11 months, and 18 days. Walter was a good boy, and was much interested in the latter day work. And I think would soon have united with the church had he lived. While we were asking the Lord to spare him, if it was His will, Sr. Trout in vision saw a beautiful bed of flowers, and she said, Is it life? But it soon took the form of a grave, and when she saw this, she said, "He will die." Sister Trout lately united with the church; but this great affliction does not shake her faith, or the faith of Bro. Trout. May the Lord help them in this time of sorrow. So sad to see the precious boy die, but his faith was in God to the end.

Like a sunbeam through our dwelling,
Shone thy presence bright and calm;
Thou didst add a zest to pleasure,
To our sorrows thou wast balm.
Passed the shades of death's dark valley,
Thou art leaning on his breast;
Where the wicked may not enter,
And the weary are at rest.

CASTOR.—At Bartlett, Fremont Co., Iowa, Effie C., daughter of R. C. and O. Castor, aged 10 years and 2 days. Funeral sermon by Elder Henry Kemp.

God give them strength to endure,
In this hour of sadness and gloom,
And help them on earth to be pure,
As the one that's gone to her home.

SYLVESTER.—At Omaha, Nebraska, December 12th, 1885, Holly William Sylvester; born March 26, 1881. Funeral service by Bro. O. H. Brown.

"ONE OF THE IMMORTALS."

A FEW Sundays ago the Rev. R. Heber Newton, of New York, delivered a discourse on "the three names that represent the patriarchal period in Jewish history"—Abraham, Isaac and Jacob—the men whom Jehovah was pleased to be called after as their God. The preacher had nothing but good to say of those ancient worthies. He showed that each was unlike the others, "while each was one of the great Fathers of the people called by Providence to teach the world in conduct, each of whom was equal with the others a man of God—of the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob."

"The story of Abraham is of a magnificent manhood, a nature as one of the immortals, a veritable son of the Most High. He led a migration to a new country for freedom of conscience and purity of worship. I believe our history preserves to us the dim memory of a mighty master of men, such a hero of the soul, in the father of monotheism. When Alexander Severus was filling the Pantheon with busts of the immortals of earth, he passed by Moses and placed Abraham there. Moses founded a National religion—Judaism. Abraham fathered the faiths of three great religions—Judaism, Christianity and Mohamedanism. The Abrahamic type of character is that of the colossal forms of manhood, the giant figures of the earth—the immortals. Our business is to recognize and do homage by them when they come. The deepest irreverence of our age is its attitude of cynical familiarity toward our few really great men. There are spots on the sun, yet one should not think less of the orb of day because of these obscurations, or decline to walk in its light because it has shadows. The faith of the great souls of the earth is not easy for us, but it is in the part of true wisdom, of a sound reason to believe in their belief, to trust the vision which opens on their eyes, though it be clouded to our sight as we walk low down in the valleys of earth. In the light of their lives we can best learn to believe in one of whom these splendid beings are the children; one whose justice and goodness is imagined in these His offspring; one whom these immortals may justly call 'Father.'"

All this is just, and nothing but what is due to the memory of the great patriarch, who had a kingly soul, was learned enough to teach the Egyptians astronomy, was a foe to idolatry, a leader of men, an owner of much wealth, the "friend of God," and the husband of several wives. Yet, if this "splendid" being, this "giant figure of the earth," one of the "immortals," was living in the United States, to-day, his eulogist with others of the same cloth would have put him in the penitentiary. "Distance lends enchantment to the view." What was virtue three thousand years ago, is counted vice in the nineteenth century. One of the grandest figures in history would to-day be counted as a common criminal. And the same men who revere his memory as one of the mighty dead, would spit upon him and revile him and seek his destruction if living.

We are well aware that customs and manners and laws change with the progress of time and the growth of nations; that some things which might be tolerated in one age will be condemned in another; but morality and virtue remain the same. If plural marriage is adultery, as claimed by modern ministers, then Abraham was an adulterer and could not enter into the kingdom of heaven, according to the teachings of the New Testament, and was worthy of an ignominious death according to the Old.

Dr. Newton declares that we should "do homage" to such men as Abraham when they come to us. He says, "It is the part of true wisdom, of a sound faith, to believe in their belief." Well, then, the Latter Day Saints or "Mormons" should be praised instead of blamed wherein they pattern after the example of the great patriarch. They not only show "true wisdom" and indicate "a sound faith" by believing in his belief, but they show their faith by their works, and follow the injunction of Jesus, the great teacher, who said, "If ye were the children of Abraham ye would do the works of Abraham." But, in the language of Dr. Newton, it is because the light which opened to the vision of Abraham and his followers is "clouded to the sight" of modern "Christians," because "they walk low down in the valleys of earth" that their "deep irreverence" turns to evil that which the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob approbated and regulated for good.

If the plural marriage of the "Mormons" is vice, it was vice in Abraham. The laws of a nation do not make or unmake essential evil. The lapse of time does not change purity into corruption. If plural marriage is vile in itself, it was always vile, and Abraham was defiled by it as much as any "Mormon" is said to be to-day; and if it was not inherently sinful then, it can not be so now.

We are not arguing upon the legal aspect of this question. We are merely looking at it morally, religiously and logically, taking Dr. Newton's eulogy of one of the great characters of history as a basis.

The inconsistency of modern divines in their intemperate attacks upon the Latter Day Saints and their wholesale and unsparing denunciations of polygamy, is made plainly apparent when they go into rhapsodies over the grandeur and holiness of Abraham, and descant upon the purity and devotion of Sarah, of Rachel and of Hannah. They hold up for the admiration of modern nations the biblical worthies of antiquity and then condemn to the fate of a felon any man who exhibits faith in those examples by patterning after them in his life and conduct, and yet Dr. Newton tells us that Abraham, Isaac and Jacob were "each called by Providence to teach the world in conduct." They were not merely examples of faith but of action. Why then abuse the Latter Day Saints for their practical obedience to the teachings of those divinely called and holy "men of God?"

Verily this is a generation of humbug, and the teachers of religion, while uttering fine words to fall pleasantly on the ear, do not mean that their high-sounding sentences shall be taken for practical lessons to influence the lives of men. Truly they are but "as sounding brass and a tinkling cymbal."

[From Salt Lake Tribune, Dec. 25th.]

"The News last evening delivered an eulogy on Abraham. It was right in the line of the News, for so far as ideas are concerned, Abraham and the News are contemporaneous. Neither has had any business on earth during these last three thousand years. The News described its contemporary as "a man of much property and many wives. Will the News be good enough to inform us of any record that shows that Abraham had more than one wife at the same time? Mormon-like he settled with Hagar for several years' work by using her without marriage as a substitute for Sarah, and then drove her and her child out naked into the desert. After Sarah died he took another wife. What is there in this record that appeals to Mormon admiration except the way he treated his poor slave, Hagar?"

The eulogy of Rev. Newton upon Abraham is all well enough in its way; but the twisting and warping that the Abrahamic story undergoes passing through the loom of the Deseret News, would be contemptible if it were not pitiable.

Abraham had one wife, Sarah; this wife had a maid servant, presumably a slave; when Sarah fancied herself to be barren, she took this Egyptian bond-woman to her husband's bed under the impression that she might raise an heir to Abraham

(by proxy) by her. This act was disastrous to the peace of the household of Abraham; because Hagar proved fruitful which caused her to despise Sarah, and created jealousy in Sarah's heart; in her trouble Sarah reproached Abraham, and put the wrong of her having furnished her husband a concubine with whom he had transgressed against his marriage covenant upon him. To this Abraham replied, "Thy maid is in thy hand; do as it pleaseth thee." When Sarah drove her out from her house, the angel who visited her called her "Sarah's maid," and told her to "submit" herself to her mistress. After the birth of the promised child, Isaac, Sarah had additional cause for complaint against the method she had forced upon Abraham, for God had removed her disability and given Abraham legitimate seed. She demanded that Abraham should cast the bond-woman out. Abraham hesitated to do this, but the same God that had watched over him, and promised him an heir, now commanded him, (and it is the only time God spoke to him about the affair), to "hearken unto" the "voice" of his wife; for that "in Isaac shall thy seed be called." Abraham obeyed the voice of God and "cast the bond-woman out."

The whole history of Abraham being taken into the account and plain, honest common sense being brought to bear upon its examination, the Tribune may well challenge the News to cite the record in proof that Abraham had more than one wife at the same time. Sarah died about 1860 before Christ, and it was not till seven years after that Abraham married Keturah. These two, Sarah and Keturah, are the only ones named in the history as wife, or wives to Abraham; all other women with whom Abraham cohabited are called concubines.

The News, and all other polygamous papers and defenders of Utah's special doctrine, object to Judge Zane's statement to Mr. Clawson that in the eyes of the law polygamous wives were but concubines; yet the News foolishly or weakly publishes an editorial from which no other deduction is possible to the fair minded reader of the Bible than that if the example of Abraham is worth any thing in regard to his intercourse with other women than Sarah, first; and Keturah, afterward, the women with whom he so cohabited were concubines; and therefore all this Utah hulla-ba-loo about honorable polygamous marriages and the denial of concubinage in connection with polygamy is downright folly; for if anything is proved against Abraham by the record in regard to his departure from the monogamic domestic relation it is concubinage and not plural marriage.

That Abraham knew that he had sinned against his marriage bond with Sarah, is clearly deducible from his words to Sarah when she said to him "my wrong be upon thee;" "thy maid is in thy hand; do to her as it pleaseth thee." It is also strongly implied in the casting out of the bond-woman upon the censure and command of God; and the material fact that Abraham, conscience stricken, or with the view that his evil example in violating the marital rule given of God might not affect the life of his "only son Isaac," the child of "the covenant," sent his "concubines" with their children "away from Isaac his son, while he yet lived, eastward, into the east country." (Gen. 25: 6). It is also curious that though the record details the names of the children of Sarah, and Keturah, no child of a concubine, except Hagar, is given.

"The lapse of time does not change purity into corruption."

When the News states this it virtually concedes what we have persistently claimed; that is, that when God said through Jacob in Book of Mormon times that the having of "many wives and concubines" was "abominable before" him; for that he, the "Lord God delighteth in the chastity of women;" he set an infinite seal to what he considered was pure in the marriage relation. And when the same "God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob," gave the rule: "There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none," he disapproved at once and forever of both plural marriage and concubinage. The rule given to the church in 1831, which church the News grossly misrepresents, was, "Thou shalt love thy wife (not wives) with all thy heart and cleave unto her and none else." Like unto it and equally terse and binding was the other statement from the same God of Abraham, Isaac, Jacob and Joseph; (Smith); "Wherefore it is lawful that he (man) should have one wife, and they twain (not three nor twenty) shall be one flesh, and all this that the earth (not heaven, nor eternity) might answer the end of its creation; and that it might be filled with the measure of man, according to his creation before the world was."—Doctrine and Covenants, sec. 42, par. 7, and sec. 49, par. 3, Lamoni Ed.

The purpose of the Lord in giving the rule, as defined in the last two quotations is clearly stated in the Revelation given January, 1831, and reads as follows:

"And that ye might escape the power of the enemy, and be gathered unto me a righteous people, without spot or blameless: wherefore, for this cause I gave you the commandment, that ye should go to the Ohio; and there I will give unto you my law."

The church did go to the Ohio, and there God gave them the law, and the revelations of February and March 1831, already quoted from above, were definite parts of that law.

If God then designed to "gather the people" of the church "unto him a righteous people," he knew what rule of marital conduct to give them to accomplish that work; and if he gave that rule monogamic, then, adopting the argument of the News that "the lapse of time does not change purity into corruption," the one wife system was the pure one in God's sight and intention, and the opposite of it would be impure, or to use the words of the Lord himself "which thing is abominable before me saith the Lord."

It is stated in the Holy Writ that the wives of Solomon turned the old man's heart away from the paths of wisdom; and it is equally certain that the hearts of the News and its co-workers have also been turned from wisdom's ways, and for a similar cause.

If the people whom the News attempts to represent, and whose best interests it is constantly betraying, would in good faith and conscience "do the works of Abraham" in very deed, there remains one act of obedience to God's commandment by which they may crown their devotion to truth and right in sublime self-abnegation and abasement, and be exalted in the eyes of good men and God, let them put away their polygamous wives.

"A PITIABLE ATTEMPT."

"THE head of the 'Josephite' movement has been regaling audiences in this Territory with stale gossip and old wives' fables about polygamy and kindred topics. The Ogden News gives a report of one of his recent lectures (?) in the junction city. Here is an extract from it:

"The speaker drew strong and vivid pictures of life in polygamous households, and illustrated the 'straying from the law of God,' by the people, in a striking way, when he told of a Salt Lake woman, now alive, who has been 'sealed' to ten men, and a 'Beaver' woman who has had thirteen husbands, one of whom 'she paid to her Bishop as tithing.'

"If that is the kind of stuff he deals out to the public, there is no wonder that his audiences in Ogden have been so small. Joseph's 'main holt' is misrepresentation of polygamy, of the practice of which he personally knows nothing, and pettifogging attempts to show that his venerated father did not enter into plural marriage.

"As to the actual workings of the system, he is dependent upon what other people, some of them characterless, choose to tell him. Of the plural family connections of his father, he has had evidence enough to substantiate the facts and secure conviction in any honest man's mind.

"He says he prefers not to believe it. But conviction fastens itself on a rational mind when the proofs are strong, in spite of his preferences. There are very few people here who believe in his sincerity when he attempts to argue away the testimony of living women who were sealed to his father and were his wives to all intents and purposes. And while he pretends to disbelieve that which thousands here as certain of as of the existence of his father, his efforts in any direction will be vain.

"The most pitiable feature of the erratic course of the oldest son of Joseph the Prophet is his vain and sophistical and persistent attempt to argue against an established and irresistible fact."

The foregoing is from the Deseret News, of Salt Lake City, Utah, for December 30th, 1885. So far as the "Josephite" effort in Ogden is concerned, there was no stale gossip in the whole affair. The speaker was examining the statement made by leading pluralists of Utah, that in the section on marriage which these same pluralists have without authority taken out of the Doctrine and Covenants, "We declare that we believe that it is lawful that a man should have one wife and a woman but one husband," the woman is restricted, but the man is not; and to illustrate the practical workings of that restriction in Utah gave what is current gossip among those who profess to know, that the woman is at liberty to change her existing marital relationship and contract others, almost at her will. And the speaker further stated what was told him by two living members of the Utah Church that women were the freest in that particular in Utah than in any other State or Territory, for the ease and facility with which they could change their marriage conditions. Names can be furnished when time, circumstances, and place demand.

The audiences in Ogden were not small on either night, and on two of the three the seats were filled, and some stood during the service.

The leader of the Josephites did not attempt to deny that Joseph the Seer had more than one wife, as any one present can inform the News. Nor did the speaker waste his time discussing a dead issue; for the question is now, as it has been for years with the Reorganized Church, or "Josephites," is plural marriage in harmony with the law of God, and not did Joseph Smith secretly teach and practice it.

The evidences that have been presented on the latter point are "considerably shaky," to use an expression that dropped from the lips of a "live Mormon" in the city of Salt Lake this Fall, and who has believed for years what has been told him on the subject. And it seems as if the News in its desperation can not distinguish between the plain statement made by the "Josephites" that polygamy, plural or patriarchal marriage, is contrary to the law of God as that law was given to the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and therefore not of God; and the idea that the martyr practiced an evil and thereby sanctified it as a doctrine.

Besides this, the "head of the Josephite movement" made not one argument in public in attempted refutation of the charge that Joseph Smith practiced plural marriage; but in every instance discussed the principle from the "law and the testimony."

At present there are two "irresistible facts," the one opposed to the other: one is, that those who teach and practice plural marriage are law breakers; the other is, that the Government of the United States, under which the evident design of God in authorizing the establishment of the church in 1830 was that it might flourish and culminate in all Christian graces unto its final triumph, is proposing to punish those law breakers. A third fact, perhaps as important for good to the innocent of crime in Utah, though of quite another nature to the first two, is that the "Josephite movement" offers to the honest-minded an honorable way out of the sin-fog into which they have been betrayed and led by just such men as control the News.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

SR. A. E. MORRIS, of South Englewood, Illinois, (post office box 115), asks to know the place of the Saints' meetings in Chicago, Illinois, as she wishes to meet with them, "a privilege, she says, "I have not had for twenty-six years. The Herald is a most welcome visitor. I can not see how I ever did without it."

Bro. H. L. Holt writes from Audubon, Minn., the 2d inst., saying he had organized a new branch recently, of nine members, all late converts but one. His address will be Audubon, Becker county, Minn., care box 27.

Bro. O. O. Bean, of Van Horn, Benton Co., Iowa, wishes the Elders and Saints to call at his home, and that the Elders may preach there, "so that the honest in heart may be gathered into the kingdom of God."

John Richards, of Beaumont, Kansas, says: "I can't go it without the Herald for the few days remaining for me."

Sr. Ann Thomas, of Fairfield, Utah, asks the prayers of the Saints, feeling she needs health and spiritual strength. Sr. Thomas and a little band—mostly sisters—at Fairfield, have done nobly in the past, and are truly worthy.

Sr. Eliza Horton, of Plano, Illinois, writes of late that nineteen have been baptized there, and thinks more will be soon.

Bro. I. L. Hart, of Coffeyville, Kansas, says, the 2d inst., of the Herald, Hope, and Advocate: "I would not be without the papers for three times their cost."

Bro. W. E. Lloyd writes from Harwood, Missouri: "Success to the grand old Herald, and God bless you."

Read Bro. Thomas E. Jenkins' letter indicating good news from Wales. We pray for the continued prosperity of the work there and everywhere.

A sister L. Talbot, of Brighton, Colorado, writes us asking whether it would be practicable to devote a portion of the Herald to the Sisters' work, in articles concerning their life and labors as wives and mothers, their capacities, privileges, methods and successes, in connection with the great work of the last days. To this we reply; that we will publish articles devoted to the discussion, or presentation of subjects of the sort named, occasionally; if such articles are sent us by the sisters who may be interested in them, and choose to write them. But we can not promise to furnish the articles and edit such a department, for obvious reasons.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. J. F. McDowell in a letter written from Council Bluffs, Iowa, the 1st inst., says:

"Our revival closed for a while, on the 23d, ult. On the 20th seven were baptized in our new baptistry. We expect still others. Have been much blessed in preaching the word."

Sr. Polly L. Hyde, of Belmont, N. Y., writes as follows:

"I wish the Herald to be continued. We can not do without it. . . . It is food and drink for us, as it gives us such cheering news of Brother Joseph and the brethren who are preaching the word. The Master will care for his own."

Brother and Sister Straus, of Portsmouth, Iowa, say:

"The Herald has become so interesting that it is like a drink of cool water to one who is perishing. We greet the New Year by remembering our subscription for Herald and Hope."

Bro. C. E. Pearson of Burnside, Michigan, says of late:

"The Herald is greeted with joy. Although it seems a dear paper, I do not see how we can do without it. The work seems onward in this part of the vineyard; but I hope our northern ministry will get a shaking up to a sense of their duty so we can have more labor and less promises."

If the HERALD had a "patent inside," and devoted half or three-fourths of the rest of the space to paying advertisements, it could be published at $1 to $1.50 per copy to subscribers. But when all its contents have to be set up here every issue, and there are so few advertisements, it is published as cheaply as is practicable. Its readers should know and think of these things. The "patent inside" papers common to the country are issued by the hundred thousand from the same type, for merely a trifling cost, if any, over the price of white paper.

CAPTAIN CODMAN ON MORMONISM.

WE give below an article from the Salt Lake Herald of December 27th. It will pay for the time spent in perusal, as the Captain is a shrewd observer, and being friendly to the people of the Utah Church, as a people, his opinion on questions affecting them may be considered to be good.

We believe Captain Codman mistakes when he states that there has been no "plural marriage contract" made in Utah in the last six months; for we were assured by several while in the Territory, that such contracts were being entered into constantly.

We agree with the captain in regard to the inapplicability of those provisions of the Edmunds Bill now pending before Congress which look to the interference with the monetary concerns of the Utah people. It would be no hard thing to predict that should Congress appoint trustees to go to Utah and take charge of the moneys and properties of the Utah Church, there would not be found any estate, real or personal, upon which such trustees could administer. For this reason we believe that those two provisions would prove abortive. Any legislation which might be unproductive of good in the present crisis of affairs in Utah, would be damaging to the general result. Because of this we should dislike to see those provisions of the bill to become a law.

Captain John Codman has recently returned from Utah, with which part of the country he is familiar, and in regard to which he has published several pamphlets and newspaper articles. He was met by a representative of the Traveller in an office of this city yesterday.

In reply to a question as to the recent emette in Salt Lake City, he said that it was totally devoid of truth, and that dispatches he has received from his correspondents there express great surprise at the intelligence of it, which only came to their knowledge through eastern reports that have reached them. In Captain Codman's opinion it was a curiously-devised scheme of Gentile malcontents, who built it upon the slight foundation of a street encounter, in which only two individuals were engaged, which produced the excitement that would naturally ensue in a small town where people have little to talk about. "The general topics of conversation," he said, "in Salt Lake City, are Mormonism, polygamy, and sexual vice, and any little row of this kind affords rather a pleasing variety."

"It reminds me of an incident at Boise City, Idaho. There was a dog fight in the street. A large crowd had collected at the scene of action, and some one attempted to separate the animals. The newly-appointed Governor Bunn, who was looking on, exclaimed: 'For God's sake, let them alone. It is the only excitement we have had since I came here.'

"Seriously it is to be regretted that such a nasty condition of things prevails in Utah. The Gentiles are as much in fault as the Mormons. Indeed, they are more so, for their official organ, the Tribune, is full of the most disgusting details of crime daily spread before the eyes of their own women and children. As to this street disturbance, it was used by that newspaper as the foundation for the malicious fabrication telegraphed the New York World with a view to influence the President's message and to convey to him a false impression when it was too late for him to investigate it."

"What has been the effect of the Edmunds law?" was asked of Captain Codman.

"It has been successfully, although somewhat arbitrarily, enforced," he replied. "It has completely put a stop to new cases of polygamy. There has not been a contract of 'plural marriage' in Utah for the last six months. The late prosecutions have been directed against the continuance of the practice by those already polygamists. The punishment for this is six month's imprisonment and $300 fine. The court, in its discretion, has been willing to remit the imprisonment if the person convicted will promise to abandon the practice. This has been done in a few instances, notably that of Bishop Sharp, but it is to be regretted that he has not the following he anticipated. Most of the culprits prefer to be 'martyrs' at such a cheap cost. The penalty ought to be much more severe, so that martyrdom would become a more expensive luxury."

"What new legislation do you consider necessary?" was asked.

The reply was, "None whatever, excepting such an increase of the penalty that obedience would be preferable to imprisonment. This instead of six months with nothing to do, should be five years with hard labor."

"Would Utah be better ruled under a commission?" was the next inquiry.

"No," he replied; "with such a commission as is proposed to be selected from resident Gentiles I can not conceive of a more deplorable condition of things. The government is now in the hands of the monogamous Mormons, and they administer it wisely and economically. There is no disposition whatever on the part of any Mormons to antagonize the laws of the United States in any respect excepting where they bear on the single crime of polygamy. With that exception, I say unhesitatingly they are as loyal to the government as any people in the land. They can not be kicked into a rebellion. They submit without resistance to punishment, and as I have said, the punishment ought to be made so severe that they will choose to obey this as well as every other law of the government rather than be punished at all."

The Traveller representative asked: "What do you think of Senator Edmund's new bill?"

Captain Codman—From what I hear about it, it seems to be like that of Senator Hoar's of the last session, which proposes to take possession of the property of the church. It is hard to say now what is constitutional and what is not. At any rate the measure would be inoperative, for the church long ago, in anticipation of such a measure, has put its property out of its hands, and if government could lay its hands on it, I don't see how it would prevent the Mormons from believing that polygamy is a divine institution.

"Can not any moral influence be brought to bear on them to eradicate this belief," was asked.

"Yes, indeed," was the reply, "and I have often urged it on our philanthropic public. Joseph Smith, the son of the founder of Mormonism, resides at Lamoni, Iowa. I know him well. He spent a week with me last summer; and, although I regard all Mormonism as a fraud, I am satisfied that there is no fraud in the Mormonism he advocates. He says his father never countenanced polygamy, but that it was a devise of Brigham Young. Joseph Smith the younger has 18,000 followers in the Western States, and their neighbors speak of them as good citizens. Now, let me tell you the way to convince the Mormons, while we punish the actual criminals, is not to lie about them all, as has been done, or to disfranchise those who are obedient to law, or to deprive a free people of their autonomy, but it can only be done by persistent missionary effort; and the best kind of missionary effort would consist of pouring these 'Josephites' into Utah by the hundreds, to go everywhere preaching a pure Mormonism, which comes much nearer a pure Christianity than most people suppose. At all events, first eliminate polygamy, and then preach to them any other gospel which may be supposed to make them better than they are."

SR. BOURGVOIN, of St. Joseph, Missouri, sends the following clipping from a daily paper there.

"REORGANIZED CHURCH OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

"This important ecclesiastical organization has been in prosperous existence in this city for the past sixteen years. In connection with this church a large Sunday School was maintained, when the society held religious services in the Court-house. This latter organization has, however, since the burning of the Court-house, been temporarily suspended. Measures have been taken looking toward the erection of a suitable church building, and it is hoped that the same will be accomplished at no distant day. It is the purpose of the society to secure, as early as practicable, a regular minister to whom will be committed the charge of the congregation. At present the society is in temporary charge of E. T. Dobson, Esq., late principal of the Sunday School. Religious services are at present held in the Saints' Hall, over the State Savings Bank, corner Fourth and Felix streets. The present membership of this church, which includes several representative business men of the city, and some of the best families in St. Joseph, now numbers ninety-one. In the past six months this church has had eight additions; five by letter and three by baptism.

"The regular services of this church occur at the usual hours in the mornings and evenings of every Sunday, and prayer meetings are held at the hall every Wednesday evening."

COMPLIMENTARY.

THE clipping below is from a late Chicago Journal. It thinks the President should appoint members of the Reorganized Church on the board of trustees proposed in the new Edmunds Bill to have charge of the temporal concerns of the Utah Mormon Church. In the first place the Reorganized Church does not aspire to such position, and in the next, it is not at all probable that any such trustees will be authorized by Congress. The Journal says:

"The new Edmunds bill provides that the President of the United States shall appoint fourteen trustees, who shall administer all the affairs of the corporation known as the Church of Latter Day Saints. It would be right and proper for the President to appoint as such trustees at least a fair proportion of non-polygamous Mormons. Among the disciples of Joseph Smith, Jr., in various parts of the country suitable members for such a board could be found. The property of this corporation not held and occupied solely for purposes of religious worship is to be so disposed of as to form a school fund for the Territory. The Emigrating Fund Company is to be dissolved and its assets similarly appropriated."

OXFORD, Idaho, Dec. 28th.

Editors of the Saints' Herald: I am glad to be able to say the spirit of unity which Oxford felt when Bro. Anthony was here, is not abated, but greatly strengthened. Some (if not all) felt afraid to leave the old ship—Utah Mormonism. "Oh," said a sister to her husband, "I would not have cared, if you had not been the first to make a stand, but had let somebody else make a start. They will cut you off." We were very careful to see if the ice would bear us before we ventured on it, notwithstanding we could see the fire destroying the old craft. That fear has gone, and the glorious confidence belonging to the gospel has filled our hearts. We have mourned a little that we did not believe the warning voices on the banks of the Missouri, at Wyoming village, Nebraska, in 1866. "O," said some, "they are d—d apostates, scattered all over the land." Well, thus we were "deceived by the craftiness of others." It doubles our joy when we can see what we have passed through by cleaving to the rod of iron—the written word.

Bro. Luff is right about President Joseph; for no one could have reached the sheep that were scattered on these mountains but him. The cry daily is, "When will Joseph come?" It is in the mouths of all. But where the Great Shepherd of the sheep calls him, there let him be. We are feeling after others, and it may be that some more around us whom we are watching will come on the other side. No one wants to go away at present. May he who has said, "My angel and also my presence shall be with you," bless all who love and obey the Master. Amen.

Yours truly,

WM. E. GOOCH.

LOS ANGELES, Cal., Dec. 22d.

Bro. Blair: This "city of angels" is now being stirred on the surface, if not to the depths, by an excessive sensational wave, 'mid these orange groves, usually so quiet. Multitudes of eastern tourists are pouring in like a stream of life, until places of accommodation are crowded. The valley is a blooming field of gardens; roses and flowers of every hue abound, and while the extensive vineyards look denuded, the bountiful orange groves are laden with their rich golden fruit, and still richer and sweeter white blossoms peering out from the thick foliage of dark evergreen leaves; the graceful rolling hills on the north side of the city are nicely carpeted with green, now being thickly dotted with cottages and mansions of every hue and design, while behind all this, in bold relief, rising in stupendous grandeur, the snow-capped mountain range stretching from ocean far away into eastern desert wastes, forming a substantial background for the picture; while from the west and south come the welcome ocean breeze, bearing the low murmur of the sea, or the loud thunder of the foaming breakers which madly obey the living fiat—"Thus far canst thou come, and no farther; and here shall thy proud waves be stayed."

Nightly, at the great Tabernacle in the midst of this city, thousands of excited people assemble to hear the sensational speeches of Dr. Munhall, who dispenses "another gospel" in the most approved style of man's wisdom, while the spirit there manifest says smilingly to Dr. Munhall,— "I have not chosen you out of the world, else the world would hate you; but verily I have chosen thee into the world; therefore, behold how the world loveth thee. Verily, thou hast thy reward. Give thanks, therefore, that thou art not like other men, neither like these unpopular Elders, vulgarly called Mormons, who are attended only by a few dozen non-sensational, thinking people, as they meet nightly in Judge Ranney's small court room, and hear the old gospel as Paul preached it in those ages when they saw 'through a glass darkly,' who are far behind the fashion of this age, and who are even contending for present revelation to guide and instruct them, instead of the wonderful knowledge and wisdom of this advanced age of men, in which such things are not tolerated by the masses. Hence, behold how the world hateth them who are not called as thou art; wherefore, thou canst not see their reward, for, lo they minister chiefly to the poor, and are friends of publicans and sinners, and are deceiving the too conscientious people, by calling on them to believe the words of Christ, as in Mark 16:17, and of that fanatic (?) James, in his epistle, 5:14, when we have such famous medical colleges all over the land which must be supported. They even preach and teach without hire, when we have heaps of teachers, whose delicate ears itch at such things, who must be kept and paid in a princely manner—and whatsoever must be is right. Wherefore, I call upon all this great people whose voice in such things is the voice of God, to go to and make religion popular. We must float with the great current, or sink."

And when he had made an end of speaking, all the people shouted, "Great is the wisdom of Munhall of Babylon; Amen and amen." And the smoke of their rejoicing ascendeth forever.

Bro. Alexander H. Smith has been holding forth here in a series of meetings, with a moderate attendance of good thinkers. He is now called to San Bernardino for a time. Elder Badham is at the Azusa. I am holding the fort here with gradually increasing congregations, who appear interested, spiced with nightly conversations with divers ministers and others, with their questions and remarks, some of an encouraging character, and some critics. Thus the leaven it as work. The city press has treated us fairly, and published our epitome, through the kind aid of Mr. Marsh (nephew of Elder Thomas B. Marsh), a kind spirited man. We are likely to have a good hall, permanently, twice a month. It is used by the Knights of Pythias. This will be a great help to the work here. It will require quite an effort on our part to supply this city with semi-monthly meetings, and supply the demands of the district. But it must be done, else we shall not be found faithful and approved of the Master. We have some faithful Saints here, at Green Meadows, and at Downey, who will aid liberally in pushing the work in this city of confusion; but we need more active Elders. Our beloved and estimable sister Schnell, has just returned from a visit to her aged mother and relatives, at Burlington, Iowa. We hail her return gladly, as does her fine family, and especially our dear sister Fannie. Bro. William Howland, whom all love and honor, with his estimable wife and family at Green Meadows, is fast recovering from his severe sickness by the blessing of our kind Father and the tender nursing of his devoted wife and family. Nigh unto them resides old Sister Davis and her excellent family. She is an old-time Saint, faithful though feeble, looking for the inheritance of the meek. This region is full of old-timers, scattered at the smiting of the shepherd. One by one they are returning to the Shepherd's call again, and it seems like a new lease of life to them, as their spirits burn within them again as of old. As an old-time Elder (bother Michelson) remarked the other evening after meeting, "This seems like the good old time when I preached this gospel in Germany," and with moist eyes he moved away, returning nightly to hear. This seems a favorable time to labor here. Bro. and Sr. Rohrer and family have moved into town. Their musical talent will aid us in our service. Sister Jennie is an expert in music. The German sisters also are quite a force, with our aged and excellent sister Bossart at their head. Bro. Schnell has been an efficient worker among the German Saints. The coming season will no doubt be a lively one, both here and at Laguna, where all are more than pleased who are the guests of the good Samaritan at the spacious seaside resort of our well known brethren, H. C. and A. A. Goff, who, with the sterling qualities of the former, aided by the indispensable offices of Sisters Elizabeth, Vina, and Addie Goff, make the justly popular mansion more than a desirable resort and home. Visiting Saints and friends from the east should not fail to call on them and be filled, Long live all the excellent Saints of Laguna.

The labors of our able and efficient brethren, Blakeslee and Kelley, were most acceptable during their brief but busy mission here, the effects of which are quite visible and will do a vast amount of good. In short, it was just what was needed. The Saints desired to see the Bishop himself, and talk with him; and in so doing their confidence in him and in his work is firmly fixed, as all were greatly instructed in the temporal part of the gospel order as expounded so very ably and clearly by the Bishop and his counselor. We all very much regretted the Bishop's sudden call home; and while those gladly accept the law who never have before, we all pray they may be spared and ere long make us another visit and finish their work so nobly and well begun. Bro. Alex. H. Smith can not stay with us as long as we would wish, as he is soon to visit the northern districts of his extensive field. May his shadow never grow less. May his voice ring out the gospel both long and loud till all have heard who will.

Surely the set time of favoring Zion has come. Let the good work go on. The nations are beginning to gaze upon the glorious standard of Zion. I feel well in the work. Thank God for his Spirit in the work of the gospel—in proclaiming, and in administering. Many are being healed, and love is beginning to abound. Success to our noble truth-bearing Herald, and to all our blessed publications that gladden the hearts of thousands. Truth will prevail.

Yours for the kingdom of God.

D. S. MILLS.

McFALLS, Mo., Jan. 4th.

Bro. Joseph:—I have a good opportunity to learn the feelings of the people toward the work here. I find in this place, Bro. J. W. Johnson and family commanding the respect of the citizens. Being alone, they desire two or three good families to settle here and help them build up a branch. He preached his introductory discourse last night with telling effect. Services were opened by Rev. Mr. White, professor of music, in a courteous and Christian spirit, he styling us the reformed Latter Day Saints, asking the audience to lay prejudice aside and receive truth. This place is located about fifty miles south-west of Lamoni, on the Wabash railroad.

J. A. UPTON.

INDEPENDENCE, Mo.

Dear Herald:—This is Christmas day, the supposed birth-day of our Savior. I oftentimes try to fathom the breadth, depths, heights, and possibilities brought about by that event; but the finite mind is only permitted to reach out a very short distance indeed on the many avenues of thought that presents themselves. One very prominent and easily comprehended fact is, that whoever accepts the truth as brought about and revealed in consequence of that birth—temporally speaking—is saved or unsaved, successful or unsuccessful, in all the undertakings in life. In fine, he has by his own action been side-tracked from the main lines of life to a line on which he is successful and happy, or very unsuccessful and miserable. This is manifested in a marked degree when the life is spent in mismanagement, wilfulness, or the force of circumstances against desires and callings of the individual, which was revealed in consequence of his acceptance of those truths. In proof of this thought we point you to those who, before their acceptance were successful "money gatherers" and financiers, and every thing to which they put their hands turned to their profit; but afterwards a fatality seemed to hang over them, over which there seemingly is no control, and life becomes laborious and burden-some indeed, from a financial standpoint. The writer hereof has experienced, to the fullest extent, the truthfulness of the above, and we can look back on our past life and see now that God was working otherwise, but we were blinded then, as we may be again in the future. Oh, how our heart has leaped and throbbed for joy to think of being free from the environments of life, that we might in some degree at least magnify our calling, and be able to answer in our weak way some of the many calls in your columns to "come over and help." Until such times we will continue to toil, and pray God that he will rule and guide in all things to our benefit, and his glory, and the full redemption of Zion.

Yours in hope,

T. W. CHATBURN.

PLYMOUTH, Mass., Dec. 21st.

Pres. Blair: I came here from Boston two weeks ago, at the request of the president of the district and this branch, to help adjust some difficulties existing, and have been laboring to this end. What changes have been made have been with general consent and good will, and I trust may result in good. Ignorance, misconstruction, and misapplication of the law and scripture generally, often confuse and get people into difficulty; but it is a comfort to know that out of these trials and discipline may be evolved character.

Plymouth has a band of warm-hearted Saints, who love this latter day work, not in words only. And against fearful odds, so far as the world is concerned, they are struggling to hold up the banner of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

To-day Plymouth is celebrating the anniversary of the landing of the Pilgrim Fathers. A special train is here from Boston, with its "big ministers," to celebrate the memory of the dead, and their struggles for the cause of religious liberty in this land, all unmindful of the struggles of a lowly people in their midst to establish the perfect law of liberty, as revealed by the restoration of the gospel of God's dear Son.

Blinded by tradition, unaided by the Spirit of truth, the light shining in darkness is as much uncomprehended, the kingdom of God as much unperceived by the Pharisees of to-day, as in the days when public opinion permitted them to crucify the Son of God. "Do the rulers know that this is the only Christ?" "Have any of the rulers, or of the Pharisees, believed on him?" "Is not this the carpenter's son?" "They saw the boldness of Peter and John, and perceived that they were unlearned and ignorant men." "Behold, are not all these which speak Galileans?"—and don't their clothes smell of fish! Why are men so ignorant, blind and forgetful, that they can not remember what were the surroundings of the Saints of God eighteen hundred years ago, and the popular character of the men who gave the world a religion that has revolutionized it? We say their boasted wisdom and power of discernment of spiritual things are not in keeping with the facts; that they allow and employ the same methods of criticism against a people whose very claims suggest inquiry and a reasonable and scriptural analysis, instead of abuse, or even indifference.

It was impossible to bridge the gulf between the rich man and Lazarus, because of the rejection of Moses and the prophets. What shall be said, and what will be the fate of the proud and haughty and learned ignoramuses and pious hypocrites of our day, who with not only Moses and the prophets; but Christ and the apostles read every Sabbath day in their hearing, and with our multiplied press privileges and modern means of diffusing knowledge, reject the testimony of God to men in all ages concerning the times of the restitution, fulfillment of all things spoken by all the holy prophets and servants of God ever since the world began.

I thank God, Bro. Blair, that the test of my character and of yours is largely to consist in the strength and manliness with which we, in the faith of God, throw our life, our name, our all on earth, against these popular and mighty errors. Oh, may I not stand abashed or ashamed in the presence of the great Dispenser of the final award! I do desire to excel in that which will give me place and association eternally among the truly courageous, who like Moses are willing to forsake the earthly treasure, to make a test of their faith by suffering affliction with God's despised people, having wisdom enough to build for a long eternity, and with an eye "to the recompense of reward" which is enduring, and with Paul to work for the things which are unseen, "which are eternal."

"Thank God for the "cloud of witnesses" with which he has surrounded his saving truth in our day, which makes the future to us, not a picture of fancy, or of imagination, but of fact, rendered sure to us by such a preponderance of evidence as would insult our reason to reject it. The wicked do not know, "for the wicked shall not understand, but the wise shall understand." I praise God that his Son hath come and given me an understanding of the things that are true. May the Lord in mercy help us to endure until the end; until like Paul we may say, "I have finished my course." The day of trial is upon us. I can see the power of the tempter at work, and recognize the process of trial, and we hope of ultimate elimination, through this sad resort, of the refuse and the dross in our natures.

I hear that Bro. Scott has returned west, and am made to feel sad and lonesome, thinking of the work there is to do, and the need of approved workmen in this eastern country. I trust his health will be restored to him. He is an able speaker, and was well liked. Bro. Kelley's stay was altogether too short to be satisfactory. His genial way, like sunshine, makes companionship both a profit and a pleasure. Humility with those in authority—how pleasant it is to witness—and how profitable to emulate. Honor, not flattery, to whom honor is due. Flattery is the basis upon which fools build in short-lived pleasure and vanity, but to fall. True appreciation of honest and faithful endeavor is helpful, and is as safe to accord as it is unsafe and unjust to withhold.

Our meetings here for the last two weeks have been marked by spiritual power, and the refreshing testimony of God's unchangeable goodness:

One was baptized yesterday, and the Spirit was present at the water's side in power, to confirm the testimony of the Son of God, that "except a man be born of water, and of the Spirit, he can not enter" his kingdom.

The news from Utah is encouraging. If blindness in the last degree had not come upon those people, they ought to see "the hand-writing on the wall" in the Scriptures, and especially in the revelations of God to Joseph Smith, whom they profess to revere so much. But it is said, that "whom the gods would destroy they first make mad." I want to see Utah evils swept out of the way, and also the reproach that has rested upon the church and blessed gospel of Jesus Christ, because of the departure from the faith they once held.

Yours in the faith,

MYRON H. BOND.

FORT NIobrARA, Neb., Jan. 2d.

Dear brother Joseph, and the readers of the Herald:—Having been in the church for two years, I thought I would write in hope of hearing of some Saints hereabouts, whom we have no knowledge of as yet. I am fifteen years of age, have just finished teaching my first term of school, and have a second grade certificate. I like to teach and expect to commence teaching right away again. We came out west for the purpose of getting us a home, and I think we have succeeded. We have a nice place, and the country around us is excellent. I would advise any of the Saints who want homes, and are going out west for them, to come here. Brother Joseph, we ought to have an Elder out here. Pa has been preaching Saturday evenings, and the people turn out well and pay good attention. I think there are some here already who believe. Please send us a good Elder right away, if possible, I will help pay his expenses out here, meet him at the depot and take care of him after he gets here.

Your sister,

LIZZIE TAYLOR.

MAGNOLIA, Iowa, Dec. 31st.

Dear Herald:—By the date at the head of this letter I am reminded that another year has almost gone. Perhaps before this letter is concluded, it will be in the eternal past. It is a time to cast up accounts, to review my doings, weigh well my life, and ascertain as far as possible how I stand with God and man. The account with the latter is easily figured up, and I am glad to know that with man I stand pretty fair. I owe but little, and there seems no doubt on the minds of my creditors that my obligations will be promptly met. Malice I owe to none, hence am not troubled as to any method of revenge. If any feel to hold any against me, I am happy in not knowing of it, and the misfortune is theirs. With me, while I court the favors of none, only as right doing will secure them, it is an important duty to see that I give no just cause for hatred to any. I have always felt since I knew the gospel of Jesus Christ, that if I walked uprightly before my heavenly Father, I should have no need to sue or strive for the good will of the pure and the true; and I am confident to-day that their lasting friendship can be obtained in no other way. I also know that no man can be false to his fellow men and at the same time true to his God. I have at least the happy consciousness that I am at peace with my fellow men. But the thought presses home to my heart, How do I stand with God? This carries my mind back to my baptismal vow, and instantly there looms up before my mind the crooked steps I have made, the lack of wisdom in my actions, duties neglected, vain thoughts that have been cherished, failure to control the powers of my body and mind; and I can see that if my Heavenly Father had been as slow in his tender mercy toward me, as I have lacked in my duty towards him, I should not have so much cause for gratitude as I have on this the last day of the year eighteen hundred and eighty-five. This I can truthfully say, I have tried to improve, but I can not boast of my improvement. Little or great it should have been still greater; for I find there is still room, and I am thankful that opportunity is still afforded for improvement.

In looking over my journal for the year, I find my last public act just one year ago to-day was to preach the funeral sermon of our truly noble brother, David M. Gamet, a man whose life was an epistle of the gospel of Christ; and since then it has been my mournful duty to perform a like service for quite a number of God's noble ones. It is sad to look over the list of the good and true who have passed away from earth, whose voice in counsel, testimony, exhortation and preaching we shall hear no more in this life; but it is joyous to believe that they have passed to the paradise of rest, and this record of those who have gone before, should be a strong reminder that our days are also numbered, and that we must work while the day lasts, and lay up for ourselves treasure in heaven. I want to do God's will, and I know of no power that can hinder, beneath the eternal throne, if I do not surrender my manhood to the evil one. That I may be enabled to fill the measure of my creation, I earnestly ask an interest in the prayers of all Saints.

This has been an eventful year to the church. I thank God it has not toadied to the world, nor stooped to wrong to secure favor from any. But God has given it favor with the Nation, and has exalted it above its enemies. And if it remains true to its mission, honoring the law of God and spreading the gospel to the nations of the earth, God will indeed exalt it above all things here below; and truly Zion shall be the head and not the tail, neither shall be trampled under foot any more; but the glory of God shall be seen upon her, and her light shall illuminate all nations, and the wise and the meek of all earth will flock to her standard, the truly noble shall feel it an honor to be members in the ranks of her humble ones, and great prosperity shall be within her borders. I am glad Joseph and his brethren have been to Utah in this eventful year. I have no hope that Utah's leaders will allow themselves to be benefitted by his labors there, but the church has done her duty in sustaining him there, and the honest among them will be blest and redeemed from their thralldom. The effect of his labors will not cease because he has left. The good work will go on; the leaven will spread until every pure minded man and woman has been brought under its divine influence, and will have burst off their shackles and stand free in the light and liberty of the gospel of truth, peace, purity, and love untainted by lust. I do not rejoice in Utah's calamity, on the contrary I mourn, with every right minded man and woman, that there is any just cause for her suffering. And I am satisfied now that God would lift the hand of justice, and sheath the sword of his wrath if she would put away from her the unclean thing, return unto the Lord, and accept his servants whom he has sent unto her. But if she will not, God will not be mocked, but he will sweep away, completely, her "refuge of lies," until she is humbled in the dust and there is none to say "Why doest thou?"

I have been blest in laboring for the spread of the gospel. The Holy Spirit has greatly aided me in declaring his truth. My labors have been widespread, and ungrudgingly given. I have said but little about them in the Herald. In fact, I felt that I had but little to say, and I think it folly to crowd myself before the Herald readers without tidings. But I will say right here, that I do not find the world manifesting a very great desire to hear the gospel. I have many calls, but they come mostly from Saints who are anxious to have the gospel preached in their neighborhood. But when I go there, I find but few others who want to hear. It may be owing to my clumsy manner in presenting it; yet I try to tell the truth. Among the Saints I find a considerable degree of faith, but it is not always strong enough to produce the right kind of works. Desire to get gain, and keep it, is a ruling weakness with some, and the financial interests of the work are neglected. Testimonies are fine, prayers are many; but works are meagre and few. But there are noble instances of self-sacrifice, and by these the wheels of the kingdom are kept rolling. And between you and me, Mr. Herald, those noble, self-sacrificing ones will obtain the crown, and hear the glad "well done." I am not weary; see no cause for relaxing my efforts; can find no excuse for stopping, hence I shall plod on and struggle for the crown. May God grant to all Israel a happy new year.

Jan. 1st.—This is the first morning of the New Year, and I want to say that I endorse the letter of Bro. Stebbins in Herald for December 26th, 1885, and especially the portion where he urges the paramount importance of feeding the flock. God has wisely divided the work of building up his kingdom in these last days among his servants, and has ordained men for every duty; placed them in quorums, the names of which designate their several duties. He has also distinctly stated the duties to be performed by each quorum, and this fact convinces me that it is absolutely necessary for each quorum to perform the duties allotted to them, and hence every man is commanded to "learn his duty," that he may fill the office whereunto he is called. "Therefore, let every man stand in his own office, and labor in his own calling; and let not the head say unto the feet it hath no need of the feet; for without the feet how shall the body be able to stand? Also, the body hath need of every member, that all may be edified together, that the system may be kept perfect."—Doc. and Cov. p. 230, 297. The above shows the absolute necessity of every man working according to the pattern, and every quorum standing in the place which God has ordained it unto. It needs no further revelation to designate the duty and place of each quorum. It only remains for each quorum to stand in its place, and for every man to discharge the duties allotted to him. Then the work will spread and prosper. But when the quorums are jostled out of their places and nored by any other quorum, then confusion reigns, unity is broken, peace is gone, and the thirst for power takes the place of the love of God; and then amen to the prosperity of the cause, it must languish and eventually die. We all love the cause. Let us all be willing to stand in our places, and be content to perform the duties to which God has assigned us, not thirsting for power and authority over our fellows, but working for the good of all. Then peace will flow like a river, we shall be cemented together in love, unity will be as a strong and high wall around us shielding us from the assaults of the adversary, prosperity will attend our labors, and God will smile upon his children, and reveal unto them the abundance of peace and truth. God grant it. Amen. C. DERRY.

PLEASANT GROVE, Utah, Dec. 31st.

Bro. Blair:—I sometimes feel like writing a few lines for the Herald, to give a somewhat brief account of my labors, but because of my inability to write in this language I generally keep putting it off, thinking that letters from those more able would be of more interest to the readers.

My labors in this mission have not been in vain. The Danish paper is a good missionary in this country, and it must be sustained. I hope the Scandinavian Saints will give me more aid in writing for the paper. Short articles from our missionaries on the principles of the gospel will also be thankfully received. It is quite a difficult work for me, being inexperienced and illiterate, to write such a paper and at the same time labor as a missionary in this field. The assistant Editor does not seem to think that he has any thing to do with it. But perhaps he has enough to do anyhow.

Since writing you last, I have preached in several of the settlements in San Pete and Utah counties, and have baptized six. We should have half a dozen or more Scandinavian missionaries in Utah now, and hope that next General Conference will return Bro. H. N. Hansen to this mission. He did a good work while here a few years ago. In some places the Brighamites did not like him so well, and the reason I have been told was, that they always came out second-best when having an argument with him.

Bro. Blair, you were right when last Spring you told me that this was "one of the best fields for experience;" but so far my experience in this mission has only served to strengthen me in my determination to follow in the footsteps of our Master, and to more fully appreciate the sacrifice that he made.

Respectfully yours,

PETER ANDERSON.

DECKERVILLE, Mich., Jan. 4th.

Bro. W. W. Blair:—I thought a few lines from this part would not be amiss. Our debate with the Rev. Mr. Staples of Oil City, Ontario, is over. We put in nine nights in all,—seven on the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints and two only on the Methodist Church. To my mind it was a grand success. Many of the people who were so prejudiced against the Saints, and would not come out to hear them preach, came to the debate; and I tell you they heard the gospel after all. I think when we started with it, that there were fully three quarters of the people opposed to us; but when it was over I feel sure it was just the reverse. Three were baptized during the debate, and after it was over several said they were almost persuaded. Four or five told me that they intended to investigate the doctrine more fully, and believed they would yet obey the gospel. I received many invitations to "Come and have tea with us;" "Come and stay with us over night;" "Be sure you give us a call before you go home," &c.; and that, too, from members of the Methodist Church. One of the members of that faith said to me before I left, "I'm done with the Methodists forever."

Some times when I would stand and converse with some one of the congregation on the subject under discussion, (perhaps before meeting or after), the minister would sometimes crowd right in between us, and say, "Say, you are not swallowing down that trash, are you?" Some would say to him, "Why, its plainer and plainer, every night," etc. During the third night of the debate, the Rev. said, "I'll know next time who I am signing papers with. I'll never sign papers to debate with a Latter Day Saint again. I'm sick of this debate," etc. And when all was over, "I'm done with him (Cornish) forever." Mr. Staples acted very well all through the debate, with the exception that (as Bro. H. C. Smith says) he had to "sing that old song" a little, and would also misquote a little, and mistify it a little after it was quoted, etc.; as for example, Isa. 29: 11, "And the vision of all is become unto you as the words of a book." "Now," said he, "it is not a book, but as a book," etc. But there is no stop there; it reads, "And the vision of all is become unto you as the words of a book that is sealed." That shows that it is a book, but it is as one that is sealed. He cavilled about the baptism of little children mentioned in Book of Mormon, page 540, and of Emma Smith's being required to quit work, etc., (Doc. and Cov.) But when we would explain this to the audience it would all turn to our good, and to the honor of God.

It was agreed upon, before we debated, that we should occupy at least two nights on each proposition. The Latter Day Church stood the storm seven nights and came out shining, but we could not get them to stand the racket over two nights. I had everything arranged before me, necessary to be discussed, in a work I am getting up. It was not so handy in the manuscript form as it will be when it is printed in book form. When this book is published, it will be one of the best of books for any one, especially in debate. It will be a sort of synopsis of the scriptures; passages treating on the same subject in the different parts of the Bible will be brought together and arranged in rotation, so that the reader can read the many proofs one after another. Book, chapter and verse, will be printed to show where such passages are found, together with other references, etc. I have arranged in that way the first principles of the gospel, Book of Mormon, the God-head, Soul question, Sabbath question, etc. I have over fifty subjects now arranged, and will soon have it finished, and have the type setter at work. Bro. H. A. Stebbins, myself and other Elders, talked this matter up about ten years ago, but somehow it fell through. At the time of the forest fire in 1881, I had it nearly completed, but my books and papers were all burned. Since that I have it about ready for the printer. I have spent years of my spare time over it. I know it will be a great assistance to all both in and out of the church.

The work in this district is onward. Several are coming into the church, and others are believing, and but few if any, going out from us. During the year now past about seventy-five have been baptized and confirmed, and are rejoicing in the same.

I look for good to come from that servant who is at his work amongst the erring ones in Utah. And I believe and feel sure that at the next General Conference, or in the near future, further instructions will be given through his servant concerning the quorums and the work in general that will redound to the glory of God and the onward spread of his work on the earth; to that end, my brethren, let us pray, and prepare ourselves to accept it and act accordingly. I am in the faith. JOHN J. CORNISH.

No. 15 Broad St. DOWLAIS, Wales,
December 21st.

Dear Bro. Blair:—The good work is beginning to move onward a little here. It is like a dawn of day on us in Wales, because for many years the work has been at a stand-still, and worse, going less through deaths and other causes. In 1884 there was not one baptized in the mission. What a sad report. But thanks to our Heavenly Father, seven have been baptized this year, and signs of more following. Four at Cardiff, two at Morryston, and one at Ogmere. We have reprinted 5,000 tracts called Crefydd Bur, (Pure Religion). In our semi-annual conference, October 25th, the brethren manifested a determination to renew their labors, and to distribute the tracts everywhere. November 15th, in company of Elders J. R. Gibbs, Wm. Morris and J. Lewis, I went to Cardiff at the request of brethren that came there to live from Nottingham; one a Priest the other a Teacher. We ordained the Priest an Elder, and the Teacher a Priest, and confirmed three that were baptized there. Then we organized a branch of seven members, to be called Cardiff Branch. Elder W. A. Webberly was chosen President, and George B. Cope Priest of branch. We had an excellent day there. The Spirit of God so powerful there, made us all feel happy. December 13th we had a real good district conference at Merthyr. These are the reasons why we think we shall have better times in Wales. May God grant it, is the earnest desire of your bother,

THOMAS E. JENKINS.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Jan. 5th.

Elder W. W. Blair:—I have met with quite good success here in Kansas City in reaching the ears of the public. Four weeks ago I was summoned as juror in the Criminal Court, and opportunities have been presented so that nearly every day I have had the privilege of expounding the doctrine of Christ to those who never heard it before. Last Wednesday Bro. E. L. Kelley was here with me, and he struck hard in the right place. Bro. Kelley also preached here and at Independence and Armstrong. His counsel was well received, and will no doubt result in good.

The Saints here are at work building a house of worship, a great necessity. I have preached two Sundays on the street, at the Public Square, assisting Bro. Tankard, president of this branch. Hundreds of people gathered around us, and some received the truth with joy. Now the cold weather prevents us in that direction, but we will make an especial effort in the Spring. I have been preaching at other points in the district, and as a whole the people here are not very anxious to hear the truth; but if our field is poor soil, we will plow the deeper and cultivate the oftener, so as to raise the best crop we can, and be content. Many of the Elders are doing the best they can. I have no flattery for you or the Herald, but I feel perfectly satisfied with the onward march of the Church.

I remain as ever, your brother in Christ,
F. C. WARNKY.

AVON, Mont., Dec. 28th.

Bro. W. W. Blair:—I have been a subscriber for the Herald and Hope for sixteen years, and during fifteen years of that time I have lived in Montana, and have seen only two of our Elders in that time—Elders Brand and Clapp, two mighty men in word and deed. There is great opposition to all parties bearing the name of Mormon in this county, as there are Josephites, Brighamites, Cananites, and others in these parts. So you can perceive that the Herald and Hope have been our anchor, sun and guide. Were it not for them, myself and my little ones would have been adrift, or would have been wrecked on the rocks. Though not zealous in the good cause, yet my hope is there. I trust that I have not brought reproach on it. Hoping that I am worthy of fellowship, I am yours in the one faith,

SHALL THE UTAH ELDERS OCCUPY OUR CHURCHES

THIS seems to be a question of some importance just now; and as that which has appeared in the Herald heretofore, on this topic, has seemed to suggest an even swap; that is, you occupy our churches and let us occupy yours, the writer thought a few suggestions might not be out of place.

In the first place, it is not an even set off, because of the marked difference between the two organizations in point of morality. For if they teach polygamy, and that too by our consent, and in our own houses, (either houses of worship or private houses), then we not only make ourselves parties to some extent, in teaching against the "law of God" but likewise against the laws of the land. For as the law forbids polygamy and its kindred evils, (blood atonement for instance), it certainly does not contemplate that any should be allowed to teach those evils. As for instance it would seem poor policy for a city council, to allow the public halls in the city to be thrown open for men to lecture in, and try to prove to the people that it is right to steal, to rob, and to commit murder, and then complain that somebody had committed either one, or all of these above crimes, and that they must be punished. It would seem in order to be consistent, if they allow the teaching, then allow the crimes committed also, because one is just as certain to follow the other, as daylight is to follow darkness. We are not making the distinction between the two laws here, as though one is not as sacred to us as the other, because they are both bound together to us, as a church, by the word of God. We ought therefore to walk so far above that which says "thou shalt not do," as to have no effect upon the steading of our gate. Then to allow teaching in our churches that pretends to evil is equivalent to encouraging that evil. Where is the true Saint that would allow polygamy taught in his house—before his wife and daughters, (because it has been known to take both). If there are any who claim to be such, let them stand up and be counted. But not only because some of the house-hold may be led astray are we to forbid it; but, as we have shown before, we should exclude it from principle. Why! say some, I'm as good a Latter Day Saint as any body, and I would allow it in my house. Hold on gentle reader, tread lightly, we are now on dangerous grounds, pit-falls on the right and left. Perhaps your zeal has got the start of your knowledge, you have failed to learn that "evil communications corrupt good manners." Or perhaps you have been to Utah, but stood a little one side when the elephant passed, so you could get a good look at him, and saw he wasn't white, and with you there's no danger. Haven't you any daughters? and have they had the knowledge and experience that you have had? And if no daughters of your own where do you find it written that your Christian sympathy, and if need be protection should not extend to others children as well as your own? Then if not in our private houses, why in the churches dedicated to God's service; for "Whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God. He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath both the Father and the Son. If there come any unto you, and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, neither bid him God speed; for he that biddeth him God speed is partaker of his evil deeds."—2 John 9-11. And hence accessory to the crime. And if it be a criminal act in the eyes of the law of the land, then so much the worse.

But says one, if we exclude them from our houses of worship, then they will exclude us from theirs. So they may; but remember that when brethren Briggs and McCord first went to Utah and to Brigham Young, he refused us permission to preach in any of their houses, and from that time the decree has gone forth, and has been re-confirmed. So that our letting them into our houses, would make no change. But it is not for this reason that the writer would exclude them, but as said above it is from principle.

Is it contemplated in the word of God, that we should open our houses for all kinds of teaching, in order that they may open their houses to us? If so—then let us go to the robber's den, and to the different brothels, and say, open to us, that we may teach you our doctrines; and we will open to you our houses, and places of worship, that you may teach us your doctrines.

But, reader, you say that's too strong. They, the Utah people, profess to worship God as well as we; and why not let them in. To this we will say, and I hope with deference to the opinions of others, and with a desire to reclaim the erring, that it does not make any difference by what name you call it, whether righteousness or devilry, if the result is the same, it's all the same to me. No! there is no need to compromise our good name. When our first Elders (above mentioned) went to Utah, there seemed to be but one house open for them, more have been opened since, and more will be opened still, so that those who make themselves worthy may be reclaimed.

Some may say let them in, but forbid them to preach polygamy, blood atonement, etc. But if we do this, then who can tell the difference between us and them. Did we not hear through the Herald just recently from one of our missionaries in Utah that he had heard one of their Elders preach, giving the scriptural evidences in favor of the "choice seer's" mission, and that he could see no especial objections to it, then, if he couldn't, who could. The same will apply to faith, repentance, baptisms, laying on of hands, resurrections, necessity for authority to preach, etc., etc. So that if we confine them to these, well may the world's people say, "Ha! ha! we knew you were all the same, because we have never known of a disreputable character, making often and continued visits to a house, without the household, or some member of it, being disreputable also."

The congregations in the several churches throughout the country, as well as in our own, are made up largely of females—many of whom are young and tender in years, none of whom want to hear polygamy preached, and to admit it in our places of worship would not only drive them from the same when it was preached, but they would get disgusted, because of it's being allowed, and stay away altogether; and who could blame them.

And if our doors are opened with a kind of a half invitation to come and occupy, what is to hinder the Utah Church from planting an Elder in Council Bluffs, Omaha, Nebraska City, and all the principal cities and towns throughout the United States, Canada, and elsewhere, where we may have churches, to occupy them, say, Sunday afternoon, and different nights through the week. Well you say nobody would go to hear them, and they would soon leave. Let me tell you there would be enough go hear them to make a laughing stock of us. Don't numbers of preachers of different persuasions try to convince their followers that we are all one and the same church, and we are only constrained from the evil practices above referred to, through fear of the law.

The fact is, the line of difference must be drawn somewhere and that too by us. And as we are forbidden to allow anything that is "unclean" to enter the Temple when built in Zion, we had best begin with our present houses of worship, (for are they not dedicated to God's service as well as that will be) so that we will be in good practice by the time the temple is built. Because they have already polluted the Lord's holy grounds, ordinances, charters, and holy words which he has given them, even in the temple, at Nauvoo, before its completion, and would no doubt have polluted that had it been completed; and I will venture to say that they will pollute any and every church that they are allowed to occupy any considerable length of time. The above restrictions will apply to no other church organization, or that which pretends to be a church organization, from the fact that there is none other, within our knowledge, that pretends to palm off any of those "wicked abominations" (if they should have any), as a part of their religion. Neither will it apply to any other faction of the church that does not teach the above practices.

Now, with all good feeling, and for that which I consider to be for the best interest of the church, that she may become "Fair as the sun, clear as the moon, and as terrible as an army with banners," I subscribe myself to the Herald readers in bonds of fellowship.

NATURE.

How beautiful are her productions, how ample her provisions. She presents a combination of the useful with the beautiful. Her works are an index to the nature and character of God. Her smiling face reflects the intelligence of the benign Creator, and animation and life power are depicted in her lovely form. Clothed with simple but rich drapery, her grace is equalled by none, while the blushing rose bespeaks her modesty and sterling worth. With cheerfulness she toils the livelong day, and when her king, clothed with regal splendor, bows to kiss the western horizon, she spreads her sable mantle o'er the earth, and folds her children in the arms of morpheus. She is a teacher of the wise and appreciative, and her infallible precepts cite our attention to the Higher Power. Her lessons are varied, and adapted to the capacity of great and small. She clothes the sublimest truths in the garb of simplicity, and grand eloquence is her crowning virtue. She is kind and considerate, and offers rich reward to those who obey her just laws, but plies the rod to refractory children. Though gentle, yet firm; and her charity does not rob justice. She teaches wisdom, love, justice, mercy, patience, temperance, and every other principle by which the universe is upheld, and equipoise is preserved.

Is not loud or demonstrative in her labors, but goes about with gentle, yet firm tread, and accomplishes her work with ease, grace and skill. She is the greatest economist, and cleanly in all her habits. In literary attainments unexcelled; as she has written a volume, the extent of which none but the Infinite can know. Progressive by nature, never idle, but always doing good; and her works never cease. In fact one whose examples we may well emulate. It should be observed that she teaches chiefly by example; that honest labor well performed constitutes her mental and moral precepts. In all her works, are deftly blended the beautiful with the substantial, or necessary. The sturdy oak, while its chief or prime object is, perhaps, to shield man and beast, in more ways than one, from inclement elements; yet it performs an additional and important function in beautifying earth, thus pleasing her children with a display of the beautiful and grand. The towering pine, the graceful elm, the weeping willow, the bright leaved poplars, all present a combination of the useful and beautiful, serving to instruct us in relation to the character of Deity, and to inspire our hearts with reverence and filial devotion to him who is the fountain of wisdom and the gracious donor of every good.

Symmetry, beauty, and usefulness are the Divine impress upon every product of nature. Should we allow her to become, in part, our preceptor, and were we to follow her examples, we would become wise in thought and conversation; diligent and untiring in honest and useful labor; cheerful, loving, kind and generous to all, and true in every respect to ourselves, to others, and to God.

Wearied with my toilsome journey,
'Neath the friendly shade I stood;
Pensively I gazed around me;
Some useful lesson then I wooed.

The mockingbird with mimic warble,
The oriole in gorgeous hue;
Made melody in field and forest,
Gave sweet enchantment to the view.

The floating clouds in air suspending,
The shining sun with golden rays;
Alternate light and shade thus blending,
To cheer the heart, inspire our praise.

The busy bee with honey laden,
Swift to his home his burden bore;
The stalwart youth and graceful maiden,
Passed gently by in search of lore.

From distant hills came cattle—lowing,
While borne in air the anvil sound;
The gentle dove with mournful wooing,—
All nature with her notes resound.

And thus I saw that cloud and sunshine,
That pleasure's smile and labor's frown;
With merry laugh and sad emotion,
All serve in turn our lives to crown.

"Who, then," I cried "shall be our teacher?
Who then in truth our feet shall guide?
Nature shall be our silent preacher,
And Nature's God our joy and pride."

SPIRITUAL REVERIES.

God commanded Moses, saying, "Put off thy shoes from thy feet; for the place whereon thou standest is holy ground." Now if Moses could not enter into the presence of God with unclean shoes, how can we expect to enter the holy of holies with unclean hands and impure hearts—without an entire sanctification and purification from all our sins and follies. There goodness, love, justice, and mercy reign supreme. The very atmosphere is hallowed by holy thoughts and aspirations—hallowed by the presence of God, of Christ, of angels, and of just men made perfect. If we would enter, we must be in possession of those attributes which characterize the children of the Great King. In order to be a possessor of these graces, we must cultivate all the higher and nobler powers of our nature, and a harmonious action of all the faculties of our being, mentally, morally, and spiritually, will enable us to attain unto a high standard of Christian excellence, and a perfection of character that will necessarily in the gospel constitute us a child of God, and therefore a subject of that kingdom. Like the gushing of the stream from the mountain-side that wends its way forth until it reaches the great ocean beyond; so the desires and aspirations of the soul, the great underlying current of our lives will go out and beyond, until it reaches the great ocean of eternity.

The cause is onward, and in order to keep pace with its onward march and the ever hurrying tide of events—we must be up and doing, gird on the whole armor of faith, and fight manfully, fearlessly and bravely. A brave soldier is one who has faced death in the hottest of the fight, and fiercest of the battle, amid the canons roar and shower of shot and shell. He marches to victory or death. However stormy the heavens, or dark the clouds, or repeated the failures, let us arise in the strength of God and press on. The light of hope gleams through the mists and shadows; and in the language of inspiration, the church shall yet come forth "clear as the sun, fair as the moon, and terrible as an army with banners." She will yet become a power in the land that will be felt to earth's remotest bounds. Oh! what a shout will go up, what hallelujahs rend the air, when triumphant and victorious she goes forth to meet the king. Let the rocks and rills, the brooks and hills, take up the glad refrain and echo and re-echo the glorious strains: "Peace on earth good will to man."

No more the burning tears shall course down the pallid cheek, or wasting disease wreck and torture our physical frames. No more midnight watchings beside the couch of the dying until "the boat-man cold and pale" comes to take our loved ones o'er the "mystic river." Death is swallowed up in victory.

A DIALOGUE.

BETWEEN DR. TWINTEXT AND ELDER D.

PART NINE.

DOCTOR T.—Well, Elder; if you have rested sufficiently since your long conversation yesterday about the "seed of Joseph" and "the promised land," I would like to renew the subject; for to me it is interesting. And while I am not converted to your views, I confess myself unable, so far to refute your arguments, or overturn your position. I think you stated that the next subject would be the evidence of the truth of the Book of Mormon, drawn from its contents; but I am more interested in knowing what our Holy Bible says about the matter. At present you have only treated of what you call "Joseph's land," and have endeavored to show that this Western Continent is that land; (and indeed, it answers that description given by Jacob and Moses); and you have made out a pretty clear case, from your golden bible, that Joseph's seed went from Jerusalem to that land about 600 years before Christ, in fulfillment of Jacob's prediction that "his branches should run over the wall," and also of the declaration in Ezekiel respecting the "tender twig" being taken from "the highest branches of the high cedar," and planting it "upon an high mountain and eminent," which mountain, you say, is Joseph's land, or this Western Continent. Now before I can have implicit confidence in the testimony of the book which you claim to be divine, I must be convinced that such a record was promised, or at least referred to, in the "Book of books," hence I request you to bring scriptural proofs that I can accept.

ELDER D.—I gladly respond to your wish, and will proceed at once to bring Biblical evidence that such a book as the Book of Mormon was to come forth. But permit me to remind you that, as God gave the name of Israel to Jacob, and as Jacob by divine guidance placed that name upon the sons of Joseph, so Joseph's seed were called Israel; and as Ephraim was to be the greater, and as the Lord says, "Ephraim is the strength of my head." (Ps. 60: 7), the name Ephraim often refers to Israel, and the name Israel to Ephraim. Moreover, as only a small remnant of the house of Joseph came to this land, as indicated by the words—"a tender one"—which may mean one family, or at most a small company, the main portion of Joseph's seed remained behind, and shared the fate of the other tribes. Again; it does not follow, nor does the promise indicate, that all of those who are brought to Joseph's land shall be faithful to their God, any more than the balance of Jacob's seed. But their sinning will not weaken the evidence that God called them out, placed his name upon them, and led them to their promised possessions, any more than the rebellions of the whole house of Israel proved that God had never chosen them, nor brought them out of Egypt and established them in the land of Canaan. The fact of their unfaithfulness only proves the weakness and deceitfulness of the heart of man, and his liability to go astray from his Maker. Let it be understood, then, that the name Ephraim, is not confined to the descendants of those who came to this continent; but that it may and does refer at times to the seed of Joseph elsewhere. Hosea, in speaking of Ephraim in general, says;—"My God will cast them away because they did not hearken unto him; and they shall be wanderers among the nations." (Hosea 9: 17). This is true of all Israel. Therefore it will be no wonder if the particular seed of Ephraim are found among the Gentiles as well as the other tribes, and as Hosea further says—"He hath mixed himself among the people," (Hosea 7: 8), it is probable they have mingled with other nationalities, or at least that they may be found among them.

T.—Candor demands that I admit you have presented the whole of the subjects of which you have treated, in a much better light than I had supposed possible, and although I set out in this conversation as a teacher, I have been the one taught, and am desirous of hearing more. But, although driven by fair and candid reasoning from every position I have taken, I am not yet convinced of the divinity of your claims; for I conceive it possible for one to defeat another in argument while the victor may be far from the truth in the majority of his claims; and I can not think of yielding to claims of divinity, the evidences of which I can not see.

D.—I honor your resolution. If there is any time when a man needs all his manhood, it is in the investigation of truth or error, so that he may have the moral courage to denounce wrong, and acknowledge the right. The man who bows to another's opinion, or ipse dixit, without being convinced that it is truth, is hardly fit for the kingdom of God. But to our subject. From Hosea we learn that God had "written unto Ephraim the great things of his law, but they were accounted as a strange thing." This was seven hundred and sixty years before Christ. And Isaiah, speaking of Ephraim, and of his departure from the Lord, asks, "Whom shall he teach knowledge? And whom shall he make to understand doctrine?" Then he answers,—“Them that are weaned from the milk and drawn from the breasts,” and he gives his reason as follows,—"For precept must be upon precept, precept upon precept, line upon line, line upon line, here a little and there a little." (Isa. 28: 9, 10). And while showing the necessity for this continued instruction, he says, "But the word of the Lord was unto them, precept upon precept," etc., "that they might go, and fall backward, and be broken, and snared, and taken." (V. 13). This was because they were rebellious, and would not hear nor obey the word of the Lord. If, as the prophet shows in verses nine and ten, it was necessary "for precept upon precept" to be given, and as the whole language implies, to be given continually; then, as the Lord has taken a portion of the seed of Joseph out from among the rebellious and planted them in the land promised to Jacob and given to Joseph, does it not follow as reasonable that He would reveal Himself unto that portion, that they might learn the knowledge of God and understand doctrine; and that they might have that knowledge continually?

T.—Your conclusion is correct, if your premises are right.

D.—Ezekiel says,—“The word of the Lord came again unto me, saying: Moreover, thou son of man, take thee one stick, and write upon it, for Judah, and for the children of Israel his companions; then take another stick, and write upon it, for Joseph, the stick of Ephraim, and for all the house of Israel his companions: and join them one to another into one stick; and they shall become one in thine hand. And when the children of thy people shall speak unto thee, saying, Wilt thou not show us what thou meanest by these? Say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I will take the stick of Joseph, which is in the hands of Ephraim, and the tribes of Israel his fellows, and will put them with him, even with the stick of Judah, and make them one stick, and they shall be one in mine hand. And the sticks whereon thou writest shall be in thine hand before their eyes.” We are told by the learned, "It was customary in ancient days to write upon parchment, and roll the same upon sticks;" and also "on the inner bark of trees." It matters not what material it was that Ezekiel wrote on, his writings represented two distinct records,—one of Judah and one of Joseph. And these records were in the hands of the tribes to which they belonged, respectively, the record of Judah in the hands of Judah, and that of Joseph in the hands of Ephraim. It can not be successfully denied that the Bible, comprising the Old and New Testaments, is the stick of Judah it having come down to us through that channel. But until within the last sixty-five years, nothing has been heard or known of the stick, or record, of Joseph. And since that time, only one record has made any claim of that nature, viz., the Book of Mormon; and this claim has been made solely through a youth, destitute of learning, he being scarcely able to read, and consequently ignorant to a very great extent of the contents of our Bible, with limited means of information at his command, and hence unlikely to conceive the idea of foisting an imposition upon the world, and especially such an one as would demand a great deal of erudition and a thorough acquaintance with the Bible in order to make his production harmonize in every particular with that record chronologically and doctrinally as the Book of Mormon does. In fact, the agreement of that book with the Bible proves that its author, or authors, had a more perfect knowledge of the truths contained in the Old and New Testaments than all the learned divines of Christendom have displayed during the last eighteen centuries. This is indisputable evidence that Joseph Smith was but an instrument in the hands of a higher power than uninspired man.

T.—This is the first time I ever heard that the Book of Mormon had any claims to being a learned work. I have not read it, but I have always heard it spoken of as being a very illiterate book, abounding with errors in its grammatical construction, and very meagre in its style.

D.—If true and solid learning consists only in a mere acquaintance with letters, and the skill to artistically arrange them, and also of the utterance of high sounding forms of speech, then I admit the Book of Mormon is deficient, and so, in a great measure, is our Bible. But if solid learning consists, as I claim it does, in a thorough knowledge of the highest and grandest of truths, the revealed purposes of the great Creator of the universe, together with his dealings among the children of men, then, sir, the Book of Mormon stands second to no book known to the world, not even the "Book of books" which we all revere. It is in perfect harmony with the Bible, pure in its principles, plain in its diction, and in every sense adapted to the capacity of the lowest among men, while the mightiest of minds may revel amid its great truths and find ample room for their utmost capacities. Like the Bible, it is a treasure house of knowledge that seems inexhaustible. And here let me add, that its plainness, and the meagerness of style are evidences of the divinity of its origin. Had it been an imposition, its author would have imitated the style of the age, in order to adapt it to the tastes and ideas of the world in general; and the precepts it taught would have been largely in keeping with the sentiments of the day.

T.—There is considerable force in your statement. Impostors either seek to create a public sentiment, or what is easier, and more likely to be the case, to pander to the sentiment that already prevails. Have you any other scriptures that seem to point to this book? I confess I am anxious to learn all I can.

D.—Isaiah in his 29th chapter, after pronouncing a woe upon Ariel, or Jerusalem, foretelling its destruction; and, at the same time telling what shall be the fate of all those nations that fight against her, he calls upon all those that do iniquity to stay themselves and wonder; declaring that "they are drunken but not with wine, they stagger but not with strong drink. For behold, the Lord hath poured out upon you the spirit of deep sleep, and hath closed your eyes; the prophets and your rulers, the seers hath he covered. And the vision of all is become unto you as the words of a book that is sealed, which men deliver to one that is learned, saying, Read this, I pray thee; And he saith, I can not, for it is sealed: And the book is delivered to him that is not learned, saying, Read this, I pray thee; and he saith I am not learned." After describing the state of the religious world at the time when this general destruction of "all that fight against Zion and that distress her," shall take place, the Lord says, "Therefore, Behold, I will proceed to do a marvelous work among this people, even a marvelous work and a wonder: for the wisdom of their wise men shall perish, and the understanding of their prudent men shall be hid. * * * In that day shall the deaf hear the words of the book, and the eyes of the blind shall see out of obscurity and out of darkness." Here we are brought face to face with a book; and this book claims to be "the stick of Joseph which is in the hands of Ephraim." And the fourth verse of this chapter will give us a clue to the origin of the book; "And thou shalt be brought down, and shalt speak out of the ground, and thy speech shall be low out of the dust, and thy voice shall be as one that hath a familiar spirit, out of the ground, and thy speech shall whisper out of the dust." There is no uncertain language here. For so surely as the ancient covenant people of God were brought down, so surely was their voice—or their words—to be heard out of the ground. Now, Sir, in all the centuries that are past, the world has heard of no such event having transpired; and when the learned world have been questioned as to the meaning of this prophecy, they have learnedly declared it was one of the hidden mysteries of God; and they were right so far as their power to solve the problem was concerned, and it must have remained a mystery had not the Almighty broken the silence in these last days and taught knowledge to one that was as one just "weaned from the milk, and drawn from the breasts." (Isa. 28:9). Then it was made plain that the righteous among the chosen people had written the word of the Lord, and in their zeal for the Lord of Hosts, and the welfare of his children, they had hidden it up; and the words of the righteous on this continent, with many of the words of the righteous on that continent, now "whisper out of the ground," "the deaf hear the words of the book," and the eyes of the literally and spiritually blind have been enabled to "see out of obscurity and out of darkness." Remember, they were "to speak out of the ground." We talk of the prophets and of Jesus and his apostles speaking to us, i. e. they do so by their words being preserved and handed down to us. In this way many of the sayings of the prophets in Jerusalem as well as the prophets on this continent speak. Their words having been written and hid up in the ground, and thus preserved, they come forth in the due time of the Lord. The Psalmist gives us light on this subject: "Truth shall spring out of the earth, and righteousness shall look down from heaven." (Ps. 85:11). What a strange statement! It is equal to the one that says, "Thou shalt speak out of the ground." How could it be fulfilled? It is not enough to say, "It is one of the mysteries." It has a meaning. We know how righteousness can look down from heaven; for we have many instances of that in the sacred record; but, how shall truth spring, or come, (as is the literal meaning), out of the earth? It must first be placed in the ground. The Book of Mormon solves the problem; it contains the precious truths of God; it was written by holy men, and then hidden up that it might be preserved for generations yet to come, when God should "do his work, his strange work; and bring to pass his act, his strange act." (Isa. 28:21).

T.—Is there any time set, or are there any events mentioned in connection with the "springing forth of truth out of the earth," the coming forth of the book, and the union of the stick of Joseph with that of Judah? If those three passages refer to the same record, the time mentioned, and the events connected with its coming forth, must agree, or else your argument is faulty.

D.—Let us see. We will begin with the 85th Psalm. The Psalmist acknowledges the favor of God toward Israel in the past, and he prays that Israel may be turned again to the Lord, and that his anger may cease from them; after which he says,—"I will hear what God the Lord will speak, for he will speak peace to his Saints; but let them not turn again to folly." Then, as if wrapt in inspiration in answer to his prayer, he breaks forth in prophecy, —"Surely, his salvation is nigh them that fear him; that glory may dwell in our land. Mercy and truth are met together; righteousness and peace have kissed each other. Truth shall spring out of the earth, and righteousness shall look down from heaven. Yea, the Lord shall give that which is good; and our land shall yield her increase. Righteousness shall go before him; and shall set us in the way of his steps." One event connected with the springing forth of truth out of the earth, is the commencement of the restoration of "the land" of Canaan to her ancient fertility and glory. Another, which must eventually follow, is the final gathering of the Jews to that land; and, thirdly, the coming of the Lord, as is foreshadowed by the words, "Righteousness shall go before him and set us in the way of his steps." Righteousness went before him at his first advent; but the Jews would not then be set in the way of his steps, neither did fertility follow, but marked barrenness of the land, rather.

But before all this shall be accomplished, truth shall spring out of the earth, and righteousness look down from heaven." We turn again to the 29th chapter of Isaiah. After speaking of the siege of Jerusalem, and the judgments to be poured out upon the enemies of Mount Zion, and his reference to "the book," the emptiness of the pretended worship of the Lord, he then refers to the "marvellous work and a wonder" which he will proceed to do, and of which the following is undoubtedly a part, which evidently refers to the restoration of the holy land and the establishing his people thereon. He says: "Is it not yet a very little while and Lebanon shall be turned into a fruitful field, and the fruitful field shall be esteemed as a forest? In that day shall the deaf hear the words of the book and the eyes of the blind shall see out of obscurity and out of darkness. The meek also shall increase their joy in the Lord, and the poor among men shall rejoice in the Holy One of Israel." Then, referring to the oppressors of God's people, he says,—"For the terrible one is brought to nought, and the scorner is consumed, and all that watch for iniquity shall be cut off." We know this latter event will not be until the Lord Jesus is "revealed from heaven with his mighty angels in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ." Thus we find that Isaiah agrees with the Psalmist as to the time and the events connected with the coming forth of the book. Let us question Ezekiel. In his vision of the valley of the dry bones, the burden is the restoration of the whole house of Israel. And immediately after, and connected with the prediction of the union of the stick of Judah and the stick of Joseph he says,—"Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I will take the children of Israel from among the heathen whither they be gone, and will gather them on every side, and bring them into their own land: and I will make them one nation in the land upon the mountains of Israel; and one king shall be king to them all, and they shall be no more two nations, neither shall they be divided into two kingdoms any more at all." He then closes the prediction thus,—“My tabernacle also shall be with them; yea, and I will be their God, and they shall be my people. And the heathen shall know that I, the Lord, do sanctify Israel, when my sanctuary shall be in the midst of them forevermore.” Now, as this condition of things has not yet been brought about, it yet must be; for “God is not a man that he should lie.” But before this comes to pass, “the stick of Joseph” is to be revealed; a “book” is to come forth “from the ground;” “truth shall spring out of the earth.” This event is decreed in the order and economy of the allwise and unchangeable God. No man has produced such a book except the youthful Seer of Palmyra. He has, and he must have been directed by the inspiration of the Almighty, or he could not have known those great and momentous events which, although revealed in God’s word, were hidden from the eyes of the learned and worldly wise. Much less could he have translated the record from a language long since lost and had it harmonize so beautifully and perfectly as that harmonizes with the Old and New Testaments. Again; as a result predicted from the coming forth of the book, “The meek do increase their joy in the Lord;” “The poor among men are rejoicing in the Holy One of Israel;” while “the terrible ones” and “the scorner” hold them in derision, and denounce them as fanatics, false prophets, &c.; and yet this even increases their joy; for in it they see the fulfillment of God’s holy word. Moreover, the Jews are beginning to return to their own land, and that land is regaining its ancient fertility. The former and latter rains are returning, and thus the Lord is doing a “marvellous work and a wonder,” according to his word.

T.—I admit, and it has always been admitted by commentators, that the passages of scripture quoted by you were hard to understand, and that it was not known to what events they had reference; but is it not possible that some shrewd, cunning mind, while reading these passages, might conceive the idea of weaving them together; and, as they mostly favor the idea of a book hidden up and apparently coming forth at some time, would it not be an easy matter to conjure up the finding of hidden records, translating them out of some unheard of language, and pretending that such production was the book referred to in the divine word?

D.—I will not say it would be absolutely impossible; but I do say it would be very improbable, for the following reasons. These passages are not found together in one chapter, or even in one book. If they had been, that fact might have suggested such an idea as you refer to, had not the idea of any more sacred books or writings coming forth, or being in existence, been in direct opposition to the sentiments and teachings of the whole religious world. But the fact that the whole world denounced the idea of any other sacred record being in existence, or to come forth, would render your suggestion a very improbable one, and certainly one not likely to have originated in the brain of an unlettered boy. The passages that treat of the coming forth of this book are found in different parts of the Bible; and the reader of that book must be a very studious one, and possessed of a remarkable memory, whose mind would be called to see the near relationship of those passages in spirit, and the events connected with them, unless called to notice the same by a prepossession of ideas in harmony with the events connected in the word with the coming forth of such a record. And, as we have shown that none had any thought of any other record than the Bible; and still further, that with the open Bible in their hands, the Christian world entertained no thought of the literal gathering of the Jews. The Jews were denounced as the forsaken people of God, to whom forgiveness could not come; and their idea of their gathering again to their own land was treated with scorn. Hence it is not likely that any impostor would have made any such claim as is made for the Book of Mormon. The object of his imposture would be rather to make gain out of the credulity of his dupes; therefore he would adapt his imposture, as near as possible, to their tastes and traditions. The Book of Mormon comes forth in direct opposition to the popular, and world-wide doctrine of “No more revelation;” and it teaches that it is a harbinger and “messenger” before the gathering of the Jews to their own land, which gathering the whole world scornfully denied, or ignored, at the time of its coming forth; and even now a very few are willing to admit; and those few have been compelled to believe in that gathering from the logic of events that are daily transpiring in fulfillment of the testimony of the very book they despise. Hence your suspicion of imposture is not well founded. Moreover; the book claims to immediately precede the second coming of our Lord; yet at the time of its coming forth not a church was found in christendom which believed in the literal appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ; but all declared that coming would be purely spiritual and all explained that event differently; some making him to come at the time of conversion of souls, others at death, others only at the final day, or last judgment. Few, if any, believed that he would come literally to reign over all the earth as “King of Kings and Lord of Lords,” yet there is no subject more plainly treated of in the holy Scriptures, and it forms a great part of the burden of the Book of Mormon. Thus, the events connected with the coming forth of the book, and those that were to follow it, are plainly written in the Bible, and are transpiring daily around us, bearing testimony of the fact that the Book of Mormon is divine.

T.—Does it not seem reasonable that, if such a book was to come forth, that when it did appear it would be brought about in some public manner, and with such circumstances surrounding it as to make it evident to all mankind that it was the book spoken of, and that it was divine?

D.—What may appear reasonable to you, may not have been wisdom in the mind of God. But if you can show that such has been God’s method of dealing with mankind in the past, I will admit that he would adopt the same course to-day. Let us see. How many of those living just prior to the flood heard the voice of God declare to Noah that he was about to drown the world, and also command him to build an ark? That event affected the whole human family for good or evil. Would it not have been likely to have saved myriads of lives if they had had positive evidence of what was to take place instead of the single testimony of the despised and hated Noah? Have any who were immediate survivors of the flood told us of the facts, and left their testimony to the world of that stupendous event? None, not even Noah, has given us one scrap of evidence; but Moses, who lived near one thousand years after Noah, tells us of the flood and all that is known about it. This event is one of the great bones of contention found in the Bible; but you accept the statement from Moses’ lips, yet there is not the scratch of a pen to tell how Moses obtained the particulars, whether it was discovered by men of science, handed down in history, or revealed to him from heaven. Again, this Moses tells us that God gave unto him two tables of stone containing the law which was to govern Israel; and, that this law was written by the finger of the Almighty. What evidence does the world possess to-day—what evidence did Israel have—that these tables of stone were not Moses’ own production, and that the writing was done by an engraven tool in the hand of Moses? One more event out of hundreds that the world has received upon the testimony of very few witnesses, and we have done. I will pass over the birth of Christ and all the angelic visitations and miraculous works connected with it, and come to his resurrection. It is written that after he was crucified and laid in a strong tomb carefully guarded by Roman soldiers, and having a seal set upon the mouth of it, that he arose again, on the third day after his burial. Upon whose testimony are we to believe this astounding and entirely unheard of event? Just six Bible witnesses tell us that Christ is risen. Not another Bible witness has given a scrap of evidence that is known to the world of this great and stupendous fact. And, be it remembered, all those six witnesses were his particular friends. Not a foe—not even a disinterested friend—has said any thing about it that we know of. Yet we accept these statements as histories of living, real, substantial facts,—facts upon which the fate of a world depended; upon which the fate of a nation depended; and the last a fact upon which the eternal destiny of all mankind depends! And it is written, “He that believeth, and is baptized shall be saved and he that believeth not shall be damned.” If then our salvation depends upon our acceptance of the facts stated, and presented to us upon the evidence of so few, who shall dare to say that we shall be justified in rejecting the Book of Mormon because, forsooth, it comes with the simple testimony of an unlettered boy, coupled with the solemn assurance of three men of honest repute declaring they had seen and handled the plates, that an angel of God had shown them the plates, and that the audible voice of God declared the divinity of this record to them? But this is not all, for eight additional witnesses testify to the reality of these plates, who state that they saw and handled them. And what is more, they have all been often questioned as to the facts they have testified of, and their testimony has never varied in the least. They have all lived and died in that testimony, except one, who still lives, and at the advanced age of fourscore years, still lifts his hands and eyes to heaven, and with an unfaltering voice and steadfast heart declares their testimony is true, that the Book of Mormon is divine, and that the voice of the eternal declared it unto him. But sir, these are not all the evidences of the truth of this book. As faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, his death and resurrection, brought evidence to the saints in former times of his divinity, and his glorious victory over death and hell. So faith in these same eternal truths, and in the marvelous and wonderous work he is doing in these last days, brings the same indubitable evidence to the hearts and minds of God's children to-day. And we have a cloud of living witnesses, whose testimony shakes the foundation of every creed and causes the strong holds of so-called "orthodoxy" to totter to their base. Already they are slyly catching up the principles inculcated in that book, while they fain would have you think those truths have been discovered by their own researches. From the foregoing facts we learn, that we are expected to receive the truths of the eternal from the lips of his authorized servants, (Luke 10:16), and that our eternal salvation hangs on the acceptance of the truth he has delivered unto them to declare to the world. We walk by faith and not by sight, until the gospel has its perfect work in our souls. Of course, this true, living faith leads us into a partial knowledge, by the blessings we receive and the joys we receive. But for all that is in the future, we cling to that by faith in the precious promises. And every promise realized, strengthens our faith in the ones that are still to be obtained, so that the work of God in the last days is perfectly in harmony with his work in all ages. This fact throws a cordon of evidences around the work that all the powers of earth and hell can not break down.

THE GOSPEL.—No. II.

KIRTLAND, O., Nov., 1834.

I CONCLUDE that there are no people on earth who believe in the plan of salvation, or gospel, as set forth in the scriptures, but that believe also that all that will ever be saved, will be saved by virtue of the sacrifices of Jesus—for this is what was taught by prophets and apostles, as far at least as we have knowledge of the teachings. They all testified of Jesus, and had knowledge of his coming into the world in order that he might save it. Abraham saw his day and when he saw it was glad. John 8:56. The Savior says to the Jews, "Had ye believed Moses, ye would have believed me; for he wrote of me." John 5:46. And the author of the epistle to the Hebrews says of Moses, "that he esteemed the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures in Egypt." "By faith Moses, when he was born, was hid three months of his parents, because they saw that he was a proper child; and they were not afraid of the king's commandment. By faith Moses when he was come to years, refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter; choosing rather to suffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season: esteeming the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures in Egypt; for he had respect unto the recompense of reward."—Heb. 11:22-27.

It can not be a matter of dispute, that these men were made acquainted with the mission of Christ into the world; and if so, they were acquainted with the gospel or plan of eternal life, which Paul says, was before the foundation of the world. But in order that we may have a clear view of this matter, let us enquire what it was that was proclaimed to the world, which is called the gospel. For be that what it may, it is God's plan of saving men; for Paul says that the gospel is the power of God unto salvation to all them that believe. "For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation, to every one that believeth; to the Jew first and also to the Greek."—Rom. 1:16. So, let the proclamation be what it may that was made to the world by divine authority, that the inspired men called the gospel, that proclamation was the only thing which could save any person of the human family, and that was the thing which existed before the foundation of the world—the purpose, or scheme of things, which was devised in eternity, through which purpose of his own will God designed to save them that believe.

This proclamation is set forth so clearly in the Scriptures that none need mistake it, not only in the commission given to the twelve after the resurrection of Jesus from the dead, but in different of the epistles, so that the enquirer after truth on this point need not be mistaken. It is so manifest, that it would require a good deal of ingenuity to render it so obscure that a person could not see it at the first reading. A person must be greatly blinded by tradition who can not see it if he reads his bible once through with any degree of attention.

When the Savior gave commission to the apostles after his resurrection from the dead, he said unto them, Matt. 28:19, 20: "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: teaching them to observe all things, whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world. Amen."

THE GOSPEL.—No. III.

KIRTLAND, O., Dec., 1834.

MARK gives the following account of the commission given to the apostles, 16:15-18. "And he said unto them, Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature.—He that believeth and is baptized, shall be saved; but he that believeth not, shall be damned. And these signs shall follow them that believe. In my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover."

Luke records it thus, 24:45-47: "Then opened he their understanding, that they might understand the scriptures, and said unto them, Thus it is written, and thus it behooved Christ to suffer, and to rise from the dead the third day; and that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations beginning at Jerusalem."

In the second chapter of the Acts of the apostles we have an account of their first acting on their commission, and of their making proclamation at Jerusalem; as according to the Savior's command, they were to begin at Jerusalem, so they did, and the account of that memorable day is recorded by Luke, in the second chapter of the Acts of the apostles, 37th and 38th verses. After Peter, who was the speaker on that occasion, had convinced many of the Jews that they had crucified the Lord of glory, the people cried out, and said to him, and the rest of the apostles, "Men and brethren what shall we do? Then Peter said unto them Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of the Lord Jesus for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost; for the promise is unto you and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call." Let us put this account together, and we will have something exceedingly plain. Matthew says that they were to go and teach all nations, baptizing them, with the promise that the Lord should be with them until the end of the world. Mark tells what the teaching mentioned by Matthew consisted in; that is, preaching the gospel, which he says they were to do to every creature in all the world, and to baptize them that believe, with a promise that the persons thus baptized should be saved; and also that signs should follow them that believe. Matthew says that they should go and teach all nations. Mark says that they should preach the gospel to every creature in all the world. So that there is no difference as to the extent of the commission given to the apostles. Matthew says that the Lord should be with them even until the end of the world, and Mark says that signs should follow them that believe. This doubtless was what Matthew meant by the Lord being with them till the end of the world; that is, by confirming the word with signs following. They both say that the people were to be baptized; but neither of them tells us what they were to be baptized for; only Mark says that the baptized should be saved. Luke throws some light on this subject: that is, "that repentance and remission of sins should be preached among all nations." This compared with what Peter said on the day of Pentecost makes this part of the commission very plain. He tells them to repent and be baptized, every one of them, in the name of the Lord Jesus, for the remission of sins, and they should receive the gift of the Holy Spirit. Mark says that he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved. Peter says that he shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit. Matthew says that the Savior promised to be with his disciples always, even unto the end of the world. Mark says that signs were to follow them that believe. These two accounts, when put together, amount to this: the Lord promised to be with them, in confirming the word to the believers by signs. Let us now put the whole account together, and see precisely what it was that these men proclaimed to the world.

First; they were to go into all the world and teach the gospel to every creature in the world.

Second; those who believed their proclamation, and repented of their sins, they were to baptize in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Spirit, for the remission of their sins, with this promise, that they should receive the gift of the Holy Spirit, and prophesy, see visions, and dream dreams, and that in addition to these, signs should follow them—in the name of Jesus they should cast out devils, they should speak with new tongues, they should take up serpents, and if they were to drink any deadly thing it should not hurt them; they should lay hands upon the sick and they should recover; and to finish the whole of the promises made to them, the Lord was to be with them, and they should be saved. Seven things comprise the whole of the items of command and promise which they were to deliver to the world; First, faith—Second, repentance—Third, baptism—Fourth, remission—Fifth, the gift of the Holy Spirit—Sixth, power—Seventh, salvation and eternal life.

Let the reader compare Matthew 28:

19, 20, with Mark 16: 15-18. Luke 24: 45-48, with the second chapter of the Acts of the apostles and he will be enabled to see and understand the apostolic commission without either priest or commentator.

Let it be particularly understood, that when the apostles spake of the gospel, that it was this scheme of things to which they alluded; for this was what they proclaimed, and this was what all the ancient saints believed, and received, and by which they were distinguished from all other people. When Paul says that "if we, or an angel from heaven preach any other gospel than that which we have preached, let him be accursed;" or "if any man preach any other gospel than that which you have received, let him be accursed." It is to the above mentioned proclamation he alludes; for this is what he preached, and this is what the Galatians had received—not a part of it, but the whole of it—not one, or two, or three, or four, or five, or even six items, and the other one left out; but all seven, or else they would not receive the gospel Paul preached, and which the Galatians received, but another, which would not be another, but a perversion of the gospel of Christ.

NOTES FROM WILBER, NEB.

"The use of the court room was secured by the Mormons for the opening sermon of Elder Joseph Smith on Christmas eve. The managers of the Christmas tree also desired it for the same evening for their tree, and were sorely disappointed when they found it had already been promised. On their mentioning the matter to Dr. Anthony, that gentleman at once in the most courteous manner yielded to them any prior claims there might be to the use of the room. The Doctor himself preaches sometimes, but he never in his life preached a more eloquent sermon than the performing of this little kindly act."

"Elders R. J. Anthony and R. M. Elvin have been holding meetings in the Baptist church this week."

"Four converts of the church of Latter Day Saints, were baptized in the Blue River near this place last Monday."

"Elder Joseph Smith, the president of the Church of Latter Day Saints, stopped over at Wilber last week while on his way east from Salt Lake City, and preached to large and attentive congregations at the Baptist Church on Thursday evening, and at the Court House on Friday, Saturday and Sunday evenings. The elder is a good speaker, and from his prominence in the religious world, much interest was taken in his visit. There is but little difference between his preaching and that of any other preacher who has the ability to deliver a good sermon. He denounced, in strong terms, the polygamic practices of the Utah Mormons, which practices are not sanctioned by his church, the doctrine of which on the marriage relation is: One wife and one only. The Court House was crowded on Sunday evening, and many had to stand during the services. The Elder expressed himself well pleased with his visit to Wilber, and left on Monday morning for Lamoni, Iowa."—Opposition.

SAW AND GRIST MILL.

There is a good chance for a saw and grist mill near the railroad at Beardeux Station. My brother and I can furnish 100,000 feet. There is plenty of pine timber to last for several years. This is a good small grain country. It is in the north tier of counties in Nebraska, about fifty miles east of the Wyoming line, a good country for health. This is a good chance if they would come the coming Spring. Plenty of wood can be had at reasonable prices to run a mill.

Yours in gospel bonds,

JAMES L. RICHEY.

MARRIED.

THOMPSON—OWEN.—At the residence of the bride's mother, Beckville, St. Louis, Missouri, December 30th, 1885, Mr. Henry Thompson to Sr. Mary Ann Owen, Elder William Hazzledine officiating. It was a pleasant little party. May the blessings of the Lord attend them all the way of life.

TEMPLETON—RUSSELL.—At the residence of the bride's parents, Bro. L. P. and Sr. S. A. Russell, December 24th, 1885, Mr. David E. Templeton to Sr. Florence Russell, both of Bennett, Cedar county, Iowa. The bride is a niece of "Perla Wild." Seventy guests were entertained by the host and hostess, and a pleasant evening was enjoyed by all. The happy couple were kindly remembered by their many friends with tokens of friendship, and many good wishes. Mr. and Mrs. Templeton have from childhood been residents of Cedar county, and have always been held in the highest esteem by their many friends.

May their minds in future blending,
Know the purest of earth's peace;
May no evil cloud descending,
Cause their perfect trust to cease.
With the other each forbearing,
When the time of trials come;
Every joy and sorrow sharing,
Fill with light the halls of home.

DION—MALONEY.—At the Saints' Chapel, in Independence, Missouri, January 3d, 1886, Mr. Charles J. Dion and Sr. Rebecca A. Malony. Brethren Alma Etzenhouser and Frank Chatburn acted as groomsmen, and Sisters Floe Chatburn and Malissa Warnky as bridesmaids. Elder F. C. Warnky officiating in sealing the holy bonds of matrimony. Many of the friends of the newly wedded couple repaired to the residence of the bride's parents, where a brilliant reception and a sumptuous repast were enjoyed. May God's blessing attend them through life, is the wish of their many friends.

DIED.

HOLDSWORTH.—At Beckville, Mo., Sarah E., the beloved child of Albert and Eliza Holdsworth, December 21st, 1885, after a severe illness of heart disease, aged 1 year and 10 months. Funeral services by Elder W. H. Hazzledine.

"She sleeps in Jesus and is blest;
How sweet her slumbers are."

RUSSELL.—October 29th, 1885, near Howell Station, Arkansas, Arriss W. Russell. Born February 21st, 1859, in Massac county, Illinois; baptized at Cabool, Texas Co., Missouri, October 24th, 1884.

PARSONS.—At her father's home, Allegheny, Pa., December 23d, 1885, of consumption, sister Sarah Emily Parsons, daughter of Bro. and Sr. Joseph Parsons, aged 23 years, 1 month and 4 days. Born at Allegheny, November 19th, 1862; she was blessed, when a child, under the hands of Elder Archibald Falconer; baptized when near seventeen, by Elder T. W. Smith, November 9th, 1879, and confirmed by him and Josiah Ells, and died as she had lived, a faithful member of the church, honored in society, true alike to her faith and her love. She was buried in the Pittsburg Cemetery. Funeral obsequies were held over her smiling and beautiful corpse at her father's residence; but it being impossible to accommodate the many who wished to attend at her funeral sermon, that was appointed for Sunday, January 3d, 1886, and was preached by Elder M. H. Forscutt, in the Saints' Hall, 67 Fourth Avenue, Pittsburg.

The afflicted, the noble, the beautiful one
To "the home of the soul," to her rest she has gone;
Like the rose, whose sweet scent she so loved to inhale,
Whose form-beauty decays, but whose life through the veil

Of its death, (sweet fragrance), its sweet attar imparts,
So our Sadie's sweet virtues still gladden our hearts;
Though transplanted from parent-stem, more beauteous still

She in Paradise blooms—and we bow to God's will.
HER UNCLE MARK.

CRACRAFT.—At East Des Moines, Iowa, December 21st, 1885, of brain fever, Annie M., infant daughter of Milton and Sarah E. Cracraft. Funeral service by Elder J. P. Knox.

To the parents bereft
The bud they now miss
Will now bloom in bliss.

The Saints' Herald.

JOSEPH SMITH - - - - - EDITOR.
W. W. BLAIR - - - - - ASSOCIATE EDITOR.

Lamoni, Iowa, January 23, 1886.

ONE of the arguments used by the Elders of the Utah Church as a reason for not abandoning the doctrine of plural marriage is that having taught and practiced it for almost a lifetime they can not now consent to say to themselves and their followers, "We have erred;" or to stop its practice without being dishonorable. This argument is not a good one for this reason. These same elders are endeavoring to teach the world, including all classes of believers in all forms of belief called religion, that those faiths to which they are holding are erroneous and can not save them; that if they value peace here and eternal life hereafter, they should leave the churches to which they now belong, abandon the principles they have so long held sacred, and accept the light brought them by these latter day preachers. All this is honorable and commendable; no matter what the sacrifice; no matter what ties are severed; no matter who abides, or who says nay; whether they have to forsake father, mother, brothers, sisters, wives, or children,—all must be laid upon the altar, however sacred, to accept the new philosophy.

Consistency is a rare jewel at any time, and exceedingly rarer in the case in point; for the same men who are asking these of other faiths to abandon their belief and church practices, hold up their hands in holy horror and cry "impossible," "dishonorable," when asked to abandon that which can be clearly shown to be a grievous error, and productive of unhappiness and misery. If it is honorable in one instance to abandon error and wrong, it is equally so in the other. Sin is not sanctified because otherwise holy men commit it; nor is error made to be truth because men claiming to be God's servants teach it.

For those persons in Utah and other places in the United States who are teaching and practicing polygamy to abandon both precept and practice would be to honor both the law of God and the country, and for that reason commendable and honorable.

"Do unto others as ye would have them do unto you." We may be in fault in regard to the matter of permitting the use of the meeting houses controlled by the Reorganized Church to ministers of other denominations, including the church in Utah. There are only two principles upon which we favor such opening of our church doors; one is, that of free speech; the other, the one quoted above. Neither of these may be good and applicable to the case.

One reason why we favor the permitting of representative men of the Utah faith to occupy our pulpits on suitable occasions is that the great majority of that faith do not practice plural marriage, and are not open advocates of it abroad. It is our business to reach this class if we can. We think this can be more readily done if we show that we can afford to meet them fairly. He who has the better cause need not hesitate to treat an opponent with clemency.

As to what the world may say, we have nothing to say; those who choose to shape their course by what the world may say are at liberty to do so.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

THE HERALD management are anxious that the HERALD should be taken extensively, and as extensively read. All those whose term of subscription has expired are requested to forward their names and send in the amount for renewal. Those who may be in arrears for 1885, are requested to forward the amount now due at the same time that they renew for the new year.

The Brownington, Missouri, Boomer, published at Brownington, for January 7th, has a communication from Bro. I. N. White, in which he successfully gets the Epitome of faith before the people, together with copious extracts from the Independence, Missouri, Progress; Record-Union, Sacramento, California; Tribune, Salt Lake, and Chicago, Sunday Times. We thank Bro. Wm. Thompson for the Boomer.

All those writing to Bro. T. W. Smith should address him as follows: Rev. Thomas W. Smith, Missionary, Papeete, Tahiti, Society Islands, via San Francisco, California.

Elder L. D. Hickey, of Coldwater, Michigan, one of the apostles in the organization of the prophet James J. Strang, and now one of the few survivors of that organization who hold to the tenets and philosophy of it, visited Lamoni, January 5th. He had been into Kansas on a mission to some believers in the prophet James and called on us on his way back home.

UPON solicitation of Sr. Talbot, of Colorado, and other sisters who have regard for woman's work in connection with the church, we have concluded to devote a portion of the HERALD to such a department. In accordance with this conclusion we have arranged to put this department under the management of Sr. "Frances," of Lamoni, who will edit it.

It must be understood, that this department is to be devoted to the Sister's work and care, and will be under the sole direction and control of its Editor. All contributions of original articles, selections and correspondence must be addressed to "Frances," Lamoni, Decatur county, Iowa, and not the Herald Office. All questions of inquiry concerning the work, its object, matter and conduct must be also directed to Sr. "Frances."

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

ELDER R. WARNOCK, writing to President Joseph Smith from Marysville, Utah, the 3d instant, says:

"More than a year ago, at about 9 o'clock in the day, I received a most powerful and peaceful manifestation of the Holy Spirit telling me that you were the authorized exponent of the doctrines of Christ on earth. Tongue can not express the heavenly joy that I experienced. For more than ten years there has been a power and an influence not human, which has kept me in Utah. I have been advised of trials, and in every instance have been promised grace to overcome if I continued faithful. Never before have I been blessed with so much liberty in secret prayer as I enjoy now. I am thankful for the good work you have done in Utah."

May heaven bless and prosper Brother Warnock and his family. They have often aided the Lord's work with ready hands and willing hearts.

Bro. J. J. Cornish writes from Uby, Michigan, the 11th instant, saying:

"The Saints are alive to the work here. Others are believing. It makes Satan mad. Another debate is to take place here on the 25th of this month—with a Disciple Minister this time—to last three nights only, on Resolved; That the doctrine of the Saints as taught by Joseph Smith is in harmony with the teachings of Christ and his apostles."

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Ques.—Is it right to frequently repeat the names of Deity in our prayers? Is not this constant repetition what Christ taught his disciples to avoid when he said, "Use not vain repetitions, as the heathen do"?

Ans.—If persons would read and reflect upon how the Master taught his disciples to pray, (Matt. 6:9-13), they would discover that he used the sacred name directly, only once in that model prayer. If all would follow after "this manner" of prayer, being careful of their desires, and their words when expressing those desires, it would be far better than having careless, rambling, and pointless expressions and "vain repetitions" of the names of Deity.

None should understand us as meaning that, at no time, in any one prayer, should the sacred names be used more than once; but that care should be taken so that a too frequent use of these holy names should not be had.

Persons should watch as well as pray;—watch carefully and see that their desires are pure, correct in matter, and then that they be expressed in words of soberness, sincerity, appropriateness, and fervent faith. One of the revelations of the Seer states that, "Out of respect or reverence to the name of the Supreme Being, to avoid the too frequent repetition of his name," the church in ancient days called "the priesthood after the order of the Son of God" the Melchisedek priesthood. (Doc. & Cov. 104:1). Here we find the principle stated in effect that the Saints should be very careful, and "avoid the too frequent repetition" of the name of Deity, whether in prayer, teaching or ordinary conversation. John and Jesus taught their immediate disciples how to pray, (Luke 11:1), and in these days the Saints need, should have, and profit by similar instructions.

Q.—Is it proper and right for an Elder to hire a house or attempt to preach in a town where two Elders a few years before shook off the dust of their feet for a testimony against that town? (Matthew 10:14, 15).

A.—Yes; it is both right and proper. We know of just such a town, where two Elders attempted to get a hearing but failed. They shook the dust off their feet against the place; but since that time a good work has been done there by others.

Q.—Are we to believe that the Lord ever would or not send an Elder to such a town?

A.—Yes; if you choose so to believe.

A CORRESPONDENT of The South Bourke and Morning Journal, New South Wales, or Australia, writing from Hastings, in that province, has a letter in the issue of that journal for November 18th, 1885, concerning the work of Bro. Joseph F. Burton, that will do the Saints good to read. We give it below:

"We have been visited during the past week by a member of that church called the "Latter Day Saints." This denomination or name arises through a re-organization of a church unfavorably known as the Mormons of Utah. The Saints of this day disclaim all connection with the church referred to, and repudiate the many charges of impurity levelled against the Brigham Young party. Mr. Burton, who, at the present time, represents the Saints in this locality, has had two services in the Athenæum, both of which were very well attended. Of course curiosity may have had something to do with the attraction, but I think it may be safely said that a desire to learn the truth and an unprejudiced regard for the views of others operated as a chief inducement. Mr. Burton commenced his discourse by stating that his church had no connection whatever with the Mormons of Utah, except as sending missionaries there in the hopes of converting them; and all the rest of that discourse was of an earnest and scriptural tone, derived from the Bible alone, and which might have emanated from any evangelical preacher. The faith that we inherited from our forefathers is cherished as the truth and the only truth, and this extends from the savage with his idol god to the highest pinnacle of religious perfection. It is admitted that the Latter Day Saints believe that Joseph Smith was a prophet, and that the Book of Mormon is an inspired writing, but does this in the eyes of the orthodox render their case hopeless? and doubtless with many people it does so; but if a good man, a sincere believer in the Bible and the truths contained therein was to believe that Gulliver's travels were inspired, and that Tom Sayers was a prophet, must he necessarily be hopelessly lost? It is not fair or just to condemn a new church merely on account of its novelty, even when some knowledge has been acquired of the modus operandi; but when in perfect ignorance to ridicule and misrepresent is a sad example of the lengths to which one of an ungenerous, unscrupulous and uncharitable turn of mind may go. Fortunately the days of intolerance and persecution and the faggot and sanguinary wars have gone by, and are succeeded by liberal views, and with an intelligent charity for other men's opinions, which receive that consideration that a problem unsolved deserves at the hands of the believers in truth and justice. It may be as well to announce that Mr. Burton proposes holding services during the ensuing week, commencing on Thursday next, the 19th inst., when an opportunity will be afforded those who desire to learn the doctrine of the Saints to do so exhaustively. Up to the present we have had no startling revelations, but what may be in store this deponent knoweth not. To the lovers of novel mysteries an opportunity may be afforded of satisfying their anxious craze, but to judge from the discourses already given, and from that alone is it possible to judge, nothing but the old, old story will be heard in its sincerity and integrity, and profitable to members of all churches."

THE Plano, (Illinois), Pivot, of the 5th ult., has the following to say of the "Manuscript Story." The views the editor takes are decidedly sensible.

"Everybody is aware that there has been a great deal of discussion concerning the origin of the Book of Mormon, a very prevalent belief being that Jos. Smith obtained the foundation ideas of that work from a manuscript written by Rev. Solomon Spaulding, and with the help of Sidney Rigdon elaborated it to the present form. The truth or falsity of this theory has been a matter of vital importance to the Latter Day Saints, and therefore they hailed with joy the discovery of the lost manuscript, a verbatim reprint of which has been sent us from the publication office of the Reorganized Church at Lamoni, Iowa. This pamphlet of about 150 pages contains letters establishing the authenticity of the manuscript found as that written by Spaulding. It was accidentally discovered by Pres. Fairchild of Oberlin College, among the papers of L. L. Rice Honolulu, who was for years state printer in Ohio. He says that it came into his possession with a miscellaneous collection found in a printing office bought by him in 1839, but that he had never examined it till President Fairchild made him a visit about a year ago. The original manuscript is now in the Oberlin college library, and Pres. Fairchild says he could detect no resemblance between it and the Book of Mormon. We are not sufficiently acquainted with the latter book to render an opinion, but we certainly see nothing in Spaulding's story that would suggest any of the theories advanced by Smith, or assist in maturing them. Of course this does not establish the authenticity of Smith's revelations, but it saves the trouble of further refutations in one direction."

QUEEN'S FERRY, Western Port,
Victoria, Australia, Nov. 25th.

Bro. Blair: I arrived here October 6th, and commenced meetings with the brethren of this place and the "mills" four miles distant. I also accompanied brother McIntosh in his boat eighteen miles to Tooradin twice, preaching twice each visit, but failed to interest the people sufficient to warrant another visit until they get more hungry than they are now. From there I went to Hastings, and there found quite an interest already existing, for Bro. Evan Jones (a Floridian) lives there, and by his wise instruction, upright deportment, and Christian life, had created a favorable impression on the minds of the people of the village, and prepared some for ebedience to the gospel; so that all I needed to do was merely to confirm his teachings. I found one ready for baptism on my arrival, a Bro. McGurk. After a few discourses, and visiting in company with Bro. Jones, five others wished also to follow Christ in baptism. Sunday last we had excellent meetings: preaching in the morning, and baptism and confirmation in the afternoon, and preaching in the evening. For the last six months I have been especially blessed in my mission-work, by the presence and power of the Holy Spirit.

The Saints in America have been praying for us, and our God has heard them. There is great power in true prayer. In our confirmation meeting, last Sunday, we enjoyed an excellent spirit—the room seemed to be filled with the Holy Spirit, all present felt happy, and in different degrees received of the divine Spirit. In the evening, preaching on the "restoration," I felt exceedingly happy; and as the evidence accumulated in the discourse, my heart burned within me, and as thought flowed as fast as utterance could be given it, the truth of the restoration, and also of the word of God, was confirmed by the Spirit with such an assurance that there seemed to be no place for doubt. My whole soul was filled. How happy—how full of love to God, and Christ as my Redeemer; how anxious for sinners to see the beauties in Christ's life and ways; and that they should obey him and enter the kingdom; how I wanted the power of the hosts of heaven to beseech men to turn to God; and, loving Christ, keep his commandments, that they might receive the blessed gifts of the gospel here, and life eternal in the world to come.

If the professing Christians would only know how far below the privileges of Saints they are living, I think they would gladly rejoice in the great restoration of the gospel, so plainly foretold by Christ and the apostles, and the prophets of old. But how shall they know? Patience, brethren; the light that dawned on the world in 1830 is permeating all classes of society, in all Christendom. A mighty shaking is taking place, and after a little more shaking there will be a sifting time. Then all who are in Christ will be gathered in one, both in heaven and on earth. We better remain in Him.

I had the pleasure of hearing the Rev. Charles Strong's first discourse, after the organization of his church under the title of The Australian Church. He was of the Presbyterian order; but getting beyond the creed, he withdrew. His discourse was intended to show what a church should be. I felt sorrowful as I listened; for, as he handled "the sword of the Spirit," he found it two-edged, cutting both ways, and he dare not use it; so putting it away, he admitted the necessity of organization; but repudiated the New Testament form of organization,—priesthood, law, and privileges,—and thus virtually made the church to mean grace and charity, while quite severely denouncing those from whom he withdrew, as well as other bodies of the world's orthodoxy. The only passage in his sermon that was applauded was when, in speaking of heretics, he said "the day had passed when the rack, the stake, or the gibbet could be used; but that now, instead of these, denunciations and the gag were freely used;"—another Swing or Dr. Thomas.

The enclosed clipping is from the pen of Dr. Arthur Smith of Hastings. He is quite fair, as you see; was acquainted with Bro. Glaud Rodger, and speaks very highly of him. He has attended most of our meetings, and is somewhat interested. I hope he may both see and enter the kingdom. There are some more persons in Hastings who will obey soon. One of those baptized on Sunday was brother Jones' son Evan, a fine young man twenty-two years old, who will be a help to the work here in preaching the word through this Continent. All the others were married persons. I left an appointment to meet them again a week from Thursday. I shall be here and at Bass, a new place, next Sunday. I am glad to say, the work is prospering in Australia—slowly, but we hope surely. Still pray for us. May God bless you and all the Israel of God.

Your brother in Christ,
JOSEPH F. BURTON.

MOLINE, Ills., Jan. 2d.

Bro. Blair:—While reading the Herald I felt like making some effort to open the work here, as I have been living here ten years and have heard but two sermons. I think if they could send a good sound preacher here there could be some good done. My neighbors are all Swedes. They have been reading my Heralds. They say they can't understand, and the Elders try and help me in this effort. They can have a home at our house. I will close by saying, this work is true.

Your sister in the gospel,
MRS. SUMAN.

FANNING, Kansas, Jan. 1st.

Dear Herald:—I am still holding the fort at this place with fair prospects of doing some good. The opposition is losing strength; the promised reward seems to be very near. Those who heretofore have been against us are now for us, and that too, with enthusiasm, and are helping us to fight the ignorance that hitherto has prevailed. We hope to trouble the waters next Sunday, Lord willing. One of the strange features of the whole matter is, that those who have been the strongest against us are the first to fall before the light of truth. Pray for us that we may be kept strong in faith and assurance towards God and our Lord Jesus Christ who giveth the victory. We have been fighting against great odds. The Methodists are and have been holding a protracted meeting three miles north of this place; but we are undismayed, knowing the Lord is God and that he will prevail, and that if we do our duty "the church" will triumph at last and we shall be blessed as our works shall be. We hope to receive a good report that our joy may be full when we have finished our labors here. We have more places to preach in than we can possibly fill. Oh, that more of our Elders were so situated that they could take the field and thrust in their sickle and reap; for truly the harvest is great, and the fields are white. If we do not reap we will suffer loss.

CLARENCE STCLAIR.

SPICKARDSVILLE, Mo., Dec. 27th.

Dear Herald:—I have often thought I would write to the dear Saints, and as I have just been reading Bro. Stebbins' letter of December 15th, it seemed it was in unison with my own thoughts so often. "Feed my sheep." "Feed my lambs." Oh how often I have been trembling on the brink, starving for more of the bread of life. I could not reach it myself, and no shepherd near to feed me the true word. If it had not been for the Spirit saying, "Be cautious before you step," I might have given way to the tempter who said, "Why stand you there almost alone in society, with the epithet, Mormon cast upon you, when you might be surrounded by the society and have the applause of other denominations. Oh shepherds; feed your flocks! For many poor, weak lambs have fallen or strayed by the way. How thankful I am to-night that the good Spirit has led me through so many dark places. And I feel his presence with me, giving me strength to say, All glory to God the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost; for these three are one. God helping me I am determined to hold on to the rod of iron. Pray for me that I may never give over to the tempter. I would like for some shepherd to soon come this way, and gather the flock together, and at least give us a little salt once a year. Your sister in the gospel,

SARAH L. MCVAY.

NORTH PLYMOUTH, Mass., Dec. 27th.

Bro. W. W. Blair:—Feeling an interest in the Herald and the plain and pure teaching of the gospel, I will try to tell you something about our beloved brother Bond and his visit with us. He preached twice in this place, and the same in Plymouth, to small audiences and some attentive listeners. He spoke Sunday evening on the revealed book from the Psalms 85, and the 29th chapter of Isaiah, with such firm and unshaken faith, and with such plainness, that it did my heart good. Brother Bond is a worthy brother. He appeals "to the law and the testimony." He believes firmly in this latter-day work and Joseph the Seer's divine calling and prophetic mission. He shows the fulfillment of prophecy, our surroundings and the signs of the times, in a most remarkable manner. I hope the church will sustain him, for you can plainly see that he has no other motive than to build up the kingdom of God with the pure in heart. He is seeking to save souls. He baptized one when he was here, and in the confirmation the Spirit was with us. He has exhorted the Saints to hold to the law and and showing them glorious promises in the future, if they are faithful. I will give you my testimony to this work, that I know that Joseph the Martyr was a prophet of God to bring forth this latter-day work, and that part of the Bible has had its fulfillment, namely the 14th chapter of Revelations and 7th and 8th verses, that the angel has come. I am ready to defend it if occasion requires. And I do know that Joseph, his son, is the true successor not only by the Spirit of Christ, but by the law in Doctrine and Covenants. Now I do not say this to boast of these things, but the God of heaven has given me such a knowledge of this upon my heart and mind that it has become part of my very nature; and I believe I can say firmly that I would rather meet death than to deny this testimony. I will give you a little sketch of my experience. I was trying to exercise my faith at one time after returning home from a M. E. revival. I had taken part while there, in going forth to the anxious seat. I received nothing, but was in very deep reflection about my soul's salvation, and I was calling upon God, when all at once his son appeared to me in the clouds, and he spoke to me, and I shall never forget the words he said—"I am the way, the truth and the life. No one can come to the Father but by me," And through that enlightenment I was led into the latter-day work. Brethren, no personal influence has had control on me on that point—only the Spirit and the word. I have passed through some trials, but it is only added fuel to the flame.

Your brother in Christ,
N. K. NICKERSON.

PAPEETE, Tahiti, Dec. 7th.

Dear Brethren and Sisters: The mail for October has come, and we are rejoiced to find letters from America, and some papers. But we miss the Globe-Democrat, which Bro. Robinson had been sending us; and we have not received from Brn. Andrews and Anderson any California papers for two mails now. We received the October Heralds, Hopes, and Advocate, and were sad indeed to hear of the death of Bro. Ells; but not altogether surprised, knowing something of the disease afflicting him when we saw him last at Stewartsville. He was always most highly esteemed by us. He has ended his work, and has gone to rest in the Paradise of God; and being faithful to the end, will hear the Master say, Well done, thou good and faithful servant, . . . enter thou into the joys of thy Lord. His death reminds me of an impression I had in 1878, while talking with some upon the desirability of having the Quorum of the Twelve filled, and it was, that before it would be full it would become still less in numbers. The Saints here, who of course have never seen Bro. Ells, yet feel sad over his death, and on last Sabbath the pulpit was draped in mourning, which will remain for three months.

The Saints are all glad to hear of Bro. Joseph's labors in Utah, and have prayed much for the blessing of God on his work there in the "fenua i te roto no te mito,"—the land with a lake of salt. Now for one I am not surprised at any very marked results being visible at present, for the time has not quite come for the harvest to be seen; but it will come, and that ere long. Many there will accept Joseph as the true shepherd of the flock of God on earth, and some who will be of much value to the cause of truth as represented by the Reorganization. But the cup of iniquity of many there, notably the chief leaders, is not quite full. There are men of prominence there to-day whose memory will be held in execration ere long by hundreds who almost worship them to-day; but the scales have not fallen from the eyes of the people yet. They will find that their supposed shepherds were merely hirelings and false shepherds, whose only care is to fleece instead of feeding the flock. There will be many however who because of the disgust and mortification they will feel because of the abominations, iniquities and hypocrisies of some of their leaders, will repudiate everything connected with what is commonly called Mormonism, becoming sectarians, and infidels, and atheists. But many will be reclaimed; yes, very many; and the labors of Brn. Blair, Briggs, McCord, Alexander Smith, Brand, Anthony, Luff, Short, Deuel, and other good and faithful Elders who have toiled in that field will yield a grand harvest by and by. But it strikes me that something yet has to be done before the garments of the Reorganization will be clean from the blood of that people; but I believe it will be done, for those whose duty it is never shrink when they understand what duty is. I am truly glad that Joseph went to Utah just when he did, and did just what he did. The wisdom of the movement will be seen after awhile, and the mouths of croakers will be stopped, who say:—"Ah, I told you so; it is only waste of time and money to sustain a mission to Utah; you see they have not forsaken Taylor, Cannon & Co., and followed Joseph." I will only say to such, just wait awhile and see, and you will find that the labor bestowed has not been spent in vain.

I suppose that the Saints are sitting around their stoves and fire-places, and wearing thick, heavy clothing, and wishing the dreary winter to be over; while I am sitting by the open window, without coat or vest, and Helen is writing in the open portico, and the little native girl is running about bare-headed and bare-footed. The trees are full of fresh foliage; the grass bright and green; the flowers in full bloom, and on Saturday we had for supper, fresh cabbage, green beans, cucumbers, and tomatoes. This present winter with you is the second we have missed, and it seems strange to pass a year without any frost or snow; and to see green leaves on the trees, and fresh grass the whole year. As far as the climate is concerned this country is very desirable, but we would very cheerfully stand the frost, and snow, and the cold air, in order to possess the many comforts and conveniences of a home in America. One good, lively, spiritual Saints' meeting would be a good exchange for all the temporal advantages we enjoy here. Now when I write of a spiritual meeting, I do not mean such only where the "gift of tongues" is manifested, for I have found in my nineteen years connection with this church that some of the very best meetings were those where every heart was melted to tenderness, humility, meekness, and charity or love by the invisible operation of the comforter, while no one spoke in tongues or prophesied, but I have also seen some of the most heavenly seasons that mortals could enjoy, where these gifts were abundantly manifested; and while perhaps not a "wise builder" as some others doubtless are whose mission seems to be to "treat lightly" not the things however they "have received," but that others have, yet I have for nineteen years taught everywhere, that when we come together in a Saints' meeting, we should seek in earnest prayer for the gift or bestowment of the Holy Spirit, leaving God to direct the operation, and manifestation thereof, and give such gift as "he will," and that every one should be willing to receive and exercise just such gift, or enjoy just such manifestation, and permit the Spirit to operate—as God would be pleased to so order. This may not have been wise teaching, but it has been mine, as Saints everywhere well know, and as truth loving ones would testify to. We are to "covet earnestly the best gifts." But doubtless Paul could no more tell what the "best gifts" were than we can to-day, or he would have told the church what they were.

And as some contend for one, and some for another and all can not agree, I think the wisest course would be to follow Paul's advice, "Seek that ye may excel to the edifying of the church." But here comes in the same difficulty: shall each one form his or her own opinion as to which gift would edify the best, and select that one, and seek for it? No, that would not help the matter at all. What then? And if one should in his mind select one gift, and another some other, and so on till all the gifts are picked out, would the Spirit then divide or distribute as he (the Spirit) will or elects, or would he give such as the individual in his own finite judgment elects? If human judgment could not determine this matter, and it is evident by the history or experience of the church that it can not, what then? Why, leave God to give as in his infinite wisdom he sees proper, and would he give a gift that would not edify the church, or that would not be the best gift for that particular individual to exercise? And if God gives the gift of tongues to one, and the gift of prophecy to another, and faith to another, etc., who shall say it is not proper, or wise to exercise that gift whenever the Spirit will? The trouble in my judgment is, this very selection of gifts, calling this one the best, and that one the best, and not leaving the selection entirely with God; simply seeking for his Spirit, and being willing to receive and exercise the gift that the Spirit chooses, and only when and where he chooses. To say that there could be anything said, or the gift used at an improper time, or in an improper manner if the Spirit directs and leads in the matter is an insult to the wisdom of the Giver. The Seer taught the same doctrine as I do. See entire section 46, D. & C., 52:4; 63:3,4. Now I suppose that taking neither extreme, neither over zealous for, nor fearful of, spiritual gifts, I please neither extreme party. Now while selecting some particular gift, irrespective of any knowledge of God's will and purpose in the case, is certainly unwise, and unallowable; indifference to, and fearfulness of, and a "treating lightly" of certain gifts is deserving of as much censure, and is equally offensive to God, and equally unwarranted, to say the least. God has commanded the Saints to "covet to prophesy," and has forbidden the prohibition of "tongues." He requires us to "seek earnestly the best gifts," and as we can not tell what are the best (for all are good) we should simply live for, and seek for in prayer, for God to choose, and for him to bestow. To not "seek earnestly" for God to bestow on us what in his infinite wisdom is the best gift for each one of us to possess, is to disobey him, and to treat his offer to give us these heavenly blessings with contempt. I have never seen but one branch where there was undue zeal for certain gifts, and that was not planted or builded by me. But I have seen scores of branches where there was scarcely any zeal at all in the matter, even for such gifts as would not frighten the "fearful and unbelieving," namely, wisdom, faith, knowledge, discerning of spirits, healings, miracles.

Can the devil inspire wisdom, faith, knowledge, healings, miracles, etc.? If any deny, I will prove it. And if the matter was looked into carefully it would be found that his operations in tongues and prophecy are few in comparison with other superhuman operations, or spirit manifestations. Indeed, does the devil speak in unknown tongues at all, or is it in some of the various Indian dialects of the United States. But suppose he does speak in tongues, how many sick and infirm does he heal, or miracles does he work? Now as there are "signs and wonders" and "miracles" and "doctrines" of devils; why not get skeptical about these things also, and finally doubt everything claiming to be divine. In fact that is the tendency of the spirit that begins on the "tongues" question. I would like to know what is not doubted? Whatsoever constitutes the faith, or forms part of the faith, we will be tried upon. If the trial of our faith is necessary, may not it be wisdom that bogus tongues, prophecies, visions, dreams, revelations, &c., &c., be occasionally manifested?

My faith in Joseph the Seer being a prophet of God could not be shaken should I find a revelation given by him, to be not of God. He could be a prophet of God, and that particular prophecy be not of God. Having been clearly proven to be a prophet of God by the test that God gave to Moses, and no evidence of having lost the spirit of his calling, I can see how that for a trial of faith he could be permitted to speak presumptuously. I do not say that I think such has been the case; but I mean that if "a trial of our faith" be the order of heaven, then means to that end must be permitted of heaven. I do not believe that God ever inspired men to speak what is not true, for he can not lie, nor vary from that which he hath said. But he could permit even his children to speak by a power not of him, and it would not prove that they were not his children. If it would, how about Jonah and his prophecy concerning Ninevah, and other cases that can be named? Were there no genuine gifts there could be no counterfeit; or false revelations, if there are no true ones. Shall we destroy the genuine so that counterfeiting may be impossible? Or kill the prophets lest they might prophesy out of their own hearts? Or burn up the multitudinous revelations that God has given, because the devil or some human spirit may give one or more?

Would a man be a wise builder who would reject his whole bill of lumber because of a rotten shingle? or a wise gardener who would dig up and throw away his whole garden, or a part of it even, because he found one or two weeds in it? What shall wise people do? "Prove all things, and hold fast that which is (proven to be) good." Now what things are to be proven or tested? Those which we know to be good, or true already? Nay, but those which we are uncertain about. But how can we test that which does not exist, or which we have no opportunity to try? There is no need of trying the spirits, if all are good and true, and there can not possibly be any evil or false ones. If there is nothing in the world either solid or liquid that is sour, or bitter, why need any one taste this or that to see whether it be sweet or sour? The gift of "discerning of spirits was and is necessary, because there are various spirits to be discerned. But if not allowed to manifest themselves, the gift is an empty one, or useless. What are the conclusions reached? 1st, For the trial of faith, and for the purpose of test, and exercise of "discerning of spirits," the existence of false spirits, and gifts not divine, must be expected, and permitted an opportunity of displaying themselves. 2d, The gifts of the Spirit of God must be desired and earnestly sought for. 3d, That the seeking for, should be without dictation to the Almighty as to the kind or degree of the gifts. 4th, The gifts such as the Spirit elects to bestow should be exercised when and where said Spirit bestows them. 5th, All gifts proven to be of God, should be valued, and God be thanked and honored therefor, and all proven to not be of God should be simply ignored, and not that all should be accepted as of God because of those which have been proven to be divine, nor on the other hand, all should not be doubted or condemned because that some having been tested, were found unable to bear the test.

God having by his Spirit commanded us to "prove all things," to "try the spirits," and to "Beware, lest ye be deceived," does not ask us to close our eyes and swallow everything put into our mouths, without knowing first whether it be food or poison. Revelations to individuals should be tested by the individuals concerned; revelations to the entire body should be tested by the body, and this can be best done by the several quorums in a General Assembly. Can the entire body thus represented be deceived? I can not believe it to be possible, except the entire body was under transgression, and had forfeited the Spirit, and the power to discern between the good and the evil being lost. Then they would be more likely to accept the voice of Satan as the voice of God, than not. In fact God would not speak through any member of such a body. If he should speak to them by some one outside of that body, they would not receive it as coming from God.

Had a revelation like that on polygamy been given in 1843, it could not possibly have been accepted by the church at that time; therefore, God could not have given it at that time. After he rejected the church, and they went deeper and deeper into sin, and he withdrew his Spirit from them, he would not reveal anything to them through any of their leaders at least. Having lost the ability to discern between the Spirit of God and seducing spirits, or between the "doctrine of Christ," and "doctrines of devils," then they could receive a revelation from the devil, and would contend that it was of God, and do it so long as they remained in darkness, and devoid of the Spirit of God; and that is where the Utah Church stands to-day, and that is why they would not as a church receive Brother Joseph. But it was needful that the opportunity should be given them; the judgments of God could not be poured out upon them until they had a chance to reject him. In more than one respect the course of the Utah Church and the Jews are a parallel, the experience of the former will not be widely different. Those who have read of the sorrows of the blinded Jews who knew not "the time of their visitation," will feel sick at heart in contemplating the picture of the sorrow and suffering that the leaders of that people will bring upon them. For one I can not be surprised at any measure of folly and of madness, that their blind infatuation will lead them to do. They may and probably will provoke the people of the United States by their treason, their rebellion, and repeated insults to the Government; that their fury will be unbounded and uncontrollable, and what happened in the "green tree" of their history will be nothing compared to the "dry." I wish I had even a little faith that the judgments of God could be averted. But I verily believe that the leaders have sinned away their day of grace, and now they call punishment, justly deserved for their crimes, persecution; as well, and with as much propriety, could the convicted horse-thief, gambler, or murderer, call the execution of the law against him, "persecution," and an interference with his "religion." It is just as easy for one set of men to make a religion warranting stealing, infanticide, or cannibalism, as for another class to make adultery and incest a part of their religion, calling it by the deceptive title "celestial marriage." Great Scott, as Bro. Caffall would say, what would bestial marriage be, if that is celestial? Perhaps they really mean "bestial," and it is a typographical error.

But I must say something of the mission, and that is what I intended to say the most about. Bro. Joseph informs me that Benjamin Grouard still lives, and is in California, and has repudiated Brighamism. This will be good news to hundreds here who revere his memory. They felt sad enough when I told them that he was living in Utah, and had joined Brigham's Church. They said, "He taught us nothing but the gospel of Christ, and we will not join Brigham's Church; we will believe what Grouard taught, and not do as he has done." Grouard never taught that Brigham was the President of the Church, after Joseph's death, and I suppose knew nothing of polygamy. After Grouard had established branches in some six different settlements or villages on Anaa, and on a number of Islands of the Paumotus, and lived among the people for about eleven years, he went to Tubuai, and joined the Church of Brigham, being baptized into it by the missionaries sent out by that church. These men wanted to go to Anaa, and baptize the church there, but Grouard vigorously protested, saying that they should let his work stand there as he had reared it. They tell me that they were not visited by any of Brigham's Elders, and have never changed their baptism. I told them that as Grouard was sent out by the church in the days of Joseph the first, or the father, that I would receive them on their original baptism; as the faith and form, or organization of the church under the father and the son were the same. When David Brown went there some three years ago, he could do nothing with them, for following the example of Nelson, he insisted on rebaptizing them, no matter when or by whom they were baptized. These Anaa people claimed that their baptism by Grouard was all right, and of course I say so to; so while they rejected Brown, they were willing to receive me. However if they learn that Grouard has joined our church by baptism, they probably will want to be baptized over. also. It would be a wise course, yet not one that I shall insist on. It would be a most excellent thing for Grouard to unite with us, and come here, and spend the remainder of his days, taking a general oversight of the work here. I should like to have some one sent here right away so that he might get an understanding of the work, before I went away, for I should like to go on to Australia by next June or July. That field is too large for Bro. Burton or any one man, and while he is doing finely, and as much as any one man could do, I begin to feel that I ought to go to his help ere long, and it is a general desire there that I should. Some one should be sent here with a good retentive memory. Eloquence is not particularly requisite, but a good understanding of the doctrine and history of the church. No one who comes will have half the trouble, vexation, care, and work that I have had and still have. When the Board of Publication prints what I have prepared, the missionary would have comparatively light work. I hope one will be sent so to get here by the first of April at least. I expect to return to Anaa in a week or two, and hope to get back here by the first of March next.

While we are very grateful for stamps sent for return postage, and appreciate the motives of the senders, yet they are useless here. American paper money or greenbacks are as good as gold here, bringing a premium of ten per cent. American silver is on par with other silver. It costs us a great deal more for everything here than it does in the States. Potatoes just now are bringing $5 a bushel, sometimes they are down to $1.50. Native yams or sweet potatoes are scarce now, and about $2 per bushel. We were away during the plentiful season. When we are at Anaa and on the Paumotus we get potatoes only occasionally; and pay there 80 cts for two pound can of meat, 40 cts for small can of oysters, 30 cts for one pound can of salmon. So we live on rice, bread and fish, and occasionally chicken. We have always had enough so far; but here in Tahiti the Saints have only what they earn daily. On other islands they sell their cocoa-nuts, or dive for shells, and sometimes get a pearl worth from one to a hundred dollars. Our mail is expensive. The mail we sent out in October cost over $3. This mail about $2. The November mail about $1.50; or not less than $25 a year. So you see that it is quite expensive to live here. The Herald Office will have to excuse us for not observing their rule to write on one side of the sheet only, for it costs enough for postage as it is—five cents for every half ounce, or fraction thereof. The Papeete daily or weekly Herald, or News, or Tribune, or Times, are not published yet, so we can not send any in exchange for papers sent us by three or four friends. They must take the will for the deed.

Yours in gospel bonds,

THOMAS W. SMITH.

WABASH, Ind., Jan. 1st.

Dear Herald:—As I was reading the letters of the Saints I saw one from brother Shook in Buchanan, Michigan, and it made me feel sad to think I have no one in this place to meet with. It has been two years since I heard a sermon, and I don't know where I belong, as I was a member of the branch in Nauvoo, Michigan, and many of the Saints there have moved away as I have learned. I am the fore-woman of forty girls, and they ask me what church I belong to. I tell them, The Latter Day Saints. And they say, What Church is that? I never heard of such a church before. I am glad to get the Herald, as it is food for me, and I give it to the neighbors to read, as I hope it may do some good. I would be pleased to have some Elder call this way; and if there should some one come, enquire for H. C. Underwood. Brothers and Sisters, I ask you all to pray for me, as I need the prayers of all Saints to help me in my trials. One who is trying to live faithful in the good work.

LAMONI, Iowa, Jan. 10th.

Dear Herald: Since writing you last, I have visited and labored at DeKalb Branch (formerly Stewartsville), Cameron, Bevier, Salt River and Renick. At DeKalb I spoke twice, and did some other work which is far more difficult than preaching. Enjoyed very good liberty in speaking to small congregations. Near Cameron, in the Delana Branch, I spoke four times, and with the exception of hard labor in my first effort, I felt well. In my last effort I felt unusually well, and so did the Saints. At Bevier I preached twice, and the good Master was with me. It was hard work to get away from the Bevier Saints without stopping over Sunday. However, there are a few at Bevier who never come out any more to my preaching meetings. I presume they would rather give their own reasons for staying away than to have me do so, and I am willing they should, in order to avoid a conflict. At Salt River the weather was against us, but I spoke twice on Sunday, and felt reasonably well. I spent a week at Renick, preached three times, and attended four other meetings.

Of the condition of the work in these five branches, for prudential reasons, I have only this to say: some of them are in fair condition, but plenty of room for improvement; while others are "below par," and need to repent and learn wisdom. I desire to pray for the welfare and salvation of all. I am most positively opposed to highly colored and one sided reports, which claim to represent the true status of the work in different parts of the field. When done knowingly, it is a species of hypocrisy, which is a sin before God; and when the reaction comes, as it surely will, it will bring loss to the church every time. The gospel law does not authorize the least variation from truth and right.

I am also opposed to the practice of highly eulogizing any person or persons, when they have done nothing more than to perform a common and well known duty belonging to their office and calling in the church. Good, solid men do not need this kind of encouragement (?), while those who are not good and solid are quite likely to be spoiled by the practice.

After a six weeks' tour, I returned home last Thursday, thankful that under such peculiar physical conditions, I was able to remain in the field that long.

Whether it is the duty of the Twelve "to regulate" and set in order "the affairs of the church," as defined by resolutions of April, 1884, or not, one thing is clear, namely, this duty and prerogative belongs to somebody. The fact that there is a demand for this kind of work to be done is a sufficient argument to all who believe in the divinity of the work, that somebody has been authorized to perform it. And if so, the authority must be found in the revelations of God which define the calling and prerogatives of those to whom this important duty belongs (D. C. 104:12).

My feelings are these: Were it not for the law and order which God has laid down, and not men,

I would gladly shift my part of these responsibilities; but my difficulty is this: outside of that law and order I can have no faith. He who desires to assume these grave responsibilities for any other purpose than the good of the work, is destitute of intelligent faith, and from my point of view, I would be compelled to regard him as an ignoramus or a knave.

May the good work move on gloriously, as I believe it will, is my prayer.

JOSEPH R. LAMBERT.

AKRON, Iowa, January 1st.

Dear Herald:—What a very welcome visitor. I can not do without you, with your pages freighted with such a variety of choice reading, teaching the gospel in its fullness and simplicity, which is meat and drink to us isolated ones who have but little chance to learn, only through your columns. And through you we learn also of the progress of this glorious latter day work, which makes our hearts glad. I praise God for his truth, and do earnestly pray that the good work may go on until the honest in heart are all gathered into the fold of God, and that his servants may have wisdom to carry on this great work, that the quorums of the church may be more fully organized and enabled to see eye to eye. For this is the grandest work allotted to man on the earth, to my mind. My constant thought and wish and prayer are for its ultimate triumph. It does my heart good to learn of the good Joseph and his co-workers are doing in Utah. And I trust Bro. T. W. Smith's cry for laborers can be reached in the near future. Dear brethren and sisters, the old year has flown, the new year is here. Let us help on this great work with our means, with our prayers, and in every way that is open for us. The time is short, therefore let us redeem the time, because the days are evil. I send some aid as a freewill offering to help roll on the gospel work. Let every Saint that can, do likewise; and let us see how much can be done this year for the advancement of the greatest and best work that we ever were or can be engaged in. Will Bro. Hiram L. Holt please write me. I have written to him twice and the last was returned to me. I don't seem to direct right.

Your sister in Christ,

M. A. CHRISTY.

CABOOL, Mo., Dec. 29th.

Bro. W. W. Blair:—Another Christmas is past, another year is ended. Yea, blessed be the Lord, for we know that our Redeemer liveth. When our minds wander back over the many years that have passed since the first Christmas, in all our studies of his divine character and mighty works, we are drawn with peculiar interest to the lowly manger where the Holy Child was laid, to the obscure village where the son of the carpenter lived, to the sacred city where the immortal Redeemer died. Yea, on Calvary the conflict with death and the powers of darkness was complete, and the cross of shame was changed to the sceptre of power and the throne of glory. Dear Saints—sisters and all—we can all do something to forward the great work which is before us, if it's only to preach the gospel of purity and peace and love by a living example in our own homes. Christ calls for multitudes of martyrs to suffer the pains of rack and fire, in sickness and infirmity, and yet live on and find much to be thankful for every day. I can talk and pray and try to get others to see and understand the scriptures as they are demonstrated to me through the fulness of the gospel. Should I labor faithfully all my life, and be the means of saving but one soul, my reward would be much greater than sitting idle, with my hands folded. For then I would fear the Lord would say, "Depart from me into outer darkness." Every one can find something to do. I have often heard women say, "Oh, women can do about as they please; the Bible don't say much about women." Dear Sisters, read Deut. 31:12: "Gather the people together, men, and women, and children, and the stranger that is within thy gates, that they may hear, and that they may learn, and fear the Lord your God, and observe to do all the words of this law." Why were they commanded to be gathered together? Of a surety it was, that women as well as men might be prepared to observe to do all the words of the law. "There was not a word of all that Moses commanded, which Joshua read not before all the congregation of Israel, with the women, and the little ones, and the strangers that were conversant among them," (Josh. 8:35). Dear sisters and children, we can not excuse ourselves in doing nothing, for that is evil. My prayer to God is that each and all may see their follies, and turn from their evil ways while it is day; for when night cometh no man can work. Our Saviour hath taught us that he will rule the kings of the earth with a rod of iron, and dash them in pieces like a potter's vessel. He teaches us that the kingdom of heaven comes like the sunlight, in silence and in power. The throne, which is to be exalted above all the thrones of earth, is to have its seat in the heart. Your sister in the true gospel of Jesus Christ,

MARY A. ATWELL.

SILVER LAKE, Minn., Dec. 29th.

Dear Herald:—In reading the good news in your columns of crowded houses, good attendance, and kind friends met nearly every where by the Elders, I thought it best to present a little of the other side of the picture, lest the Saints might be led to think our labors all sunshine. An appointment was given out for me to preach, where we had reason to believe an interest had been awakened. At the time appointed we started, and after a cold ride of some five miles we arrived to find all dark, cold, and silent. After making our horses as comfortable as possible we entered, and by the light of our lantern, which we fortunately carried with us, we made a fire and patiently waited for company. They came, two besides those we brought, and we began service. It should be said the flow of eloquence was not very great, nor very long. Being invited to return, we consented, in order to give the place a fair trial. That night appointed proved to be a bitter cold one. When part way there we were not a little provoked at breaking our double trees, by the sleigh getting caught, which necessitated our getting out of our wraps and into the snow, a performance in this country which is easier realized than imagined. After hitching a horse to each runner with straps taken from the harness, we got in with feelings not the best, nor feet the warmest. When we got there we found a like reception as before. And amid the cracking trees and glistening frost we tied our shivering animals, and went inside, ourselves to shiver, which after an hour or less we started for home not having the pleasure of meeting even our former congregation. But changes come. The next effort was at the town of Flieburg some twenty miles from there, where I was kindly taken by Bro. Barnhart, who is young in the work, but destined ere long to be a standard-bearer in his Master's service. There I had the pleasure of presenting the word to a very attentive audience with the best of liberty, and of meeting two, if not more, of the old veterans—Kidders. They are not identified with us at present, but their sympathies must always be with what they once loved. May the light soon shine with a glow that will attract all the wanderers back to shelter and to safety. Its increasing splendor must soon meet their wandering gaze.

Our conference, held on the 19th and 20th was a most enjoyable one. The Holy Spirit's presence was felt, and its fruits were visible to the joy I believe of all, through the entire session. Envy and jealousy did not attend. Peace and love filled their proper places, reigning right royally in the hearts of all. The Saints here have a bright prospect before them, and are striving hard for their crowns. One noticeable fact, which goes far to ensure success, among the ministry is, that there is very little if any of this terrible fiend, jealousy. While the head is right all is well, or soon will be. May God bless all the faithful. I go in a few days to Detroit. My address will be Clitheral, Otter Tail Co., Minn.

HIRAM L. HOLT.

OGDEN, Utah, January 5th.

Bro. Joseph Smith:—The minds of the people are quite different now concerning the Reorganized Church, than they were some time ago; and my belief is that in the near future many souls will be saved from the eternal punishment.

Your brother in Christ,

OLIVER JOHNSON.

OAKLAND, Cal., Jan. 6th.

Editors of the Herald:—The Lord so willing, I expect to leave here in a short time for Oregon, to preach the gospel; and have been praying in secret and want to be rewarded openly. My prayer has been that I might be an instrument in the hands of our Father in heaven, of bringing some to a knowledge of the gospel. And I do not want to go with my hands tied, into a new field, the church looking for some returns from my labors, therefore I have been praying that the Lord would put it into the hearts of some of my good brethren and sisters to send me about two thousand tracts, for distribution, and, as some may not see their way clear, allow me to make some suggestions to all those who are eating, drinking, chewing, smoking, wearing, or spending time or money in any way not conducive to health, comfort and the service of God in body and spirit, and have said many times in private and public that they want to do all they can towards the advancement of the great work of the last days, to show by their works as well as by words, and lay all of these things aside. Spend your money for tracts; flood your neighborhood with them; all can preach the word in this way. To those who do not come under this head, I say, send some tracts, as it is an uphill business to start the work in a new field without tracts. My prayer is, Father help my beloved brethren and sisters to put away all their pride and spots of the world and be doers of the word indeed and in truth; and help all they can to preach the gospel for a witness that the end may come. You can order the Herald office to send tracts to my address, East Portland, Oregon.

Yours in the gospel bonds,

A. HAWS.

DOW CITY, Iowa, Dec. 28th.

Editors Herald:—The snow has left us now, the roads are muddy, and the ground soft enough to plow. This evening it is raining a little. Bro. E. C. Brand has been here and preached several times; fortunately the sleighing was good then, and congregations fair. The Saint's at Gallands Grove were greatly blessed with the good instruction and kindly words of cheer and encouragement given. Bro. W. W. Whiting and James Turner are now, and have been for some days past, holding forth at Dow City. Quite an interest is awakened there now, with a prospect of its increasing. Yesterday afternoon (Sunday), we had an excellent prayer and testimony meeting there, causing all hearts to rejoice.

Our conference was a peaceful and profitable one, the Spirit of the Master being present and manifesting itself on one occasion in the gift of tongues to the encouragement of those who would go into the world and proclaim the word, graciously promising to sustain and be with those who did so, and declaring that the blotch brought upon the church by the people in the west should soon be removed and the fair name of the church vindicated. Since the conference, ten have been baptized, and thus the good work prospers.

Yours in gospel bonds,

JOHN PETT.

TIPTON, Iowa, Dec. 26th.

Dear Herald of truth and heavenly light to all the lonely, scattered sheep of Israel's flock:—You come to us surely, with clean hands, pointing us unerringly to a higher plane, a loftier walk in life. Silent, yet eloquent friend, heaven bless you and the gifted ones whose inspiration makes you potent for truth and righteousness.

I have often heard the remark, "How I wish I had lived in the days of Christ," from the lips of professing Christians; and I remember to have uttered the same thing myself, before hearing the gospel. Sincere in believing, the early Christians enjoyed superior light and knowledge of Spiritual things. They looked unto our day and dispensation with wistful and longing hearts, as many before Christ had "desired to see his day, but could not." This desire was evidently consistent with the true Spirit of the gospel. The scriptures teach the folly of looking on those things which are behind, as did the Jews, saying: "If we had lived in the days of our fathers, we had not slain the prophets." This is precisely the spirit actuating the mass of religionists to-day, paying fabulous prices for dumb canvas daubs of the Holy child by the "masters," and driving His Saints from their doors. Lauding Peter, Paul, James and John to the seventh heaven, and refusing their synagogues to their fellow servants of the same priesthood. Not discerning the ominous signs of the nearness of the times of restitution of all things, which, when accomplished, yea, and while in process of accomplishment, make this day and dispensation, so much more desirable than all preceding ones that it formed the theme of inspiration so joyously and enthusiastically astically dwelt upon "by all the holy prophets since the world began." The king who shall shortly reign has given his loyal subjects a number of signs, or tokens, whose appearing shall herald the speedy coming of himself. Those eyes are certainly spiritually dim, which see no likeness between the manner of chariots described by the prophet "in the day" of his preparation," and the lightning gaited, railroad coaches, which are as a torch in the night, which "rage in the streets," and "jostle in the highway."

Who so blind as to see no "hand beneath the wheel" rolling away the prejudice against Judah, as evinced by the election of the late Lord Beaconsfield (a Jew) to the British Premiership "whose skirt" was laid hold on by the ambassadors of the ten allied Powers of Europe at the treaty of Berlin, the terms of which were dictated in the interest of Judah, putting, the "sick man" under the care of a "nursing mother," whose coat of arms is a union of the tribal totems of Judah and Ephriam, (see the bottom of your stone ware dinner-plates), the Lion and the Unicorn rampant. As Jacob, speaking of Judah in the last days says:—"His hand is in the neck of his enemies," he shall possess the "gates" (exits, entrances, ports, harbors) of his enemies. "As an old lion, who shall rouse him up?" What nation to-day but thinks twice ere it risk an insult to the "old British lion?" What important straits does she not dictate the opening or the closing of?

Again; what Saint fails to see a fulfillment of the prophecy saying:—"In that day shall seven women take hold of one man, saying, we will eat our own bread and wear our own apparel, only let us be called by thy name, to take away our reproach." When the delegation of women from the Utah church waited on Mrs. Hayes, in 1877, with a petition signed by (seven) a multitude of Utah's deceived wives of youth, "treacherously dealt with," asking her to use her influence with the President to have the bill then pending before Congress, making polygamy a crime, vetoed, urging that in case it passed the polygamous mothers would be classed as prostitutes and their children as illegitimates; saying they were willing to support themselves apart from the relations of polygamous wifehood, and only desired the mantle and protection of the husband's name to remove the stain and reproach threatened in the bill then pending.

Read Habbakuk, chapter second, and then walk in the telephone office and you will hear "the stone in the wall cry out," (Halloo!) and the timber and beam in the wall answer. This, too, in an age when the "vision on plates" has been made known, for which the prophet said "wait," when Joseph (the Smith) had brought forth the instrument (document) against which the tin sword weapon of Conneaut Creek fame has so ignominiously failed; a day in which (unlike Eli's) there is "open vision."

Thank God, dear Saints, we are not left comfortless. But revelation's brilliant light has burst the brazen seal of the heavens, so many ages voiceless, and that they who err in spirit may come to understanding, and the murmurers learn "so ind doctrine" which the self-wise will "not endure." God speed the word of life by the means of his ministry. Saints should speed this word by the use (under the law) of the means which they are but stewards of, although wolves may say and teach—"this is my own to do as I please with,"—You don't own yourselves; you are bought with a price! Would all your possessions equal that ransom?

Love to all Saints,
WM. T. MAITLAND.

KIRTLAND, Ohio, Jan. 4th.

Editors of Herald:—On Saturday, October the 10th, last, in company with Bro. Frank M. Sheehy and sister Elizabeth Woodward who had been in attendance at the Providence conference. I arrived at Jonesport, Maine. Bro. Sheehy and I were soon domiciled at the comfortable home of brother and sister Walker, familiarly known as "Joshua and Liza," where we found a warm welcome; Sr. Woodward going to her place of business and home. She is a very worthy sister and citizen. We slept sweetly in sight and hearing of boisterous old Atlantic. Awoke on the following day to find ourselves on a good granite foundation, and really among the "down eastahs;" whom by the way we found to be very much like other people. We had to be disciplined a little in taking beans for breakfast on Sunday morning, but found it quite easy to conform to custom, as an orderly missionary should. In fact it don't pay to put on airs when a breakfast is at stake any. "Eat what is set before you, asking no questions," is excellent advice in these days of epicurean habits.

The 11th held two services in a commodious room in the city with attentive listeners, and were thus fairly introduced into the east Maine district. Here in Jonesport is a very commendable society of Saints and of long standing; Bro. J. S. Walker presiding. They hold regular services, and are holding their own if not gaining, and exert a good influence for the cause.

We were disappointed at not being able to visit Grand Manan and Nova Scotia from this place, to meet with the Saints there, but failed to connect at any time with a boat. Should have gone direct from Boston. May they be of good comfort and press onward in the cause. Help will reach them by and by; and we will labor to that end.

We spent a month in the Eastern Maine District, averaging a meeting a day; but was not able to visit all of the Saints; but met with some very worthy ones among those we did chance to meet. The names of Josiah Ells, T. W. Smith, J. C. Foss, Joseph Lakeman, Frank M. Sheehy, John Gilbert, Z. H. Gurley, J. Smith, E. Banta, E. L. Kelley and others, are household words among the Saints, they having in turn labored more or less in the district. Whatever may have been the mistakes made, if any, some good work at least has been done; and we were glad to find witnesses for the truth in that far off land, who love and labor for the prosperity of the work.

At Addison Point there is a branch organization, some excellent members; but they hold no meetings, being scattered, yet hold on to the faith. We held meeting in the little school-house near by, with an attentive audience. Also at the house of Bro. Steele; father and mother Steele being sick and not able to attend services away from their home, but longed to meet with the Saints. We felt like gratifying them. Sisters Clara and Mercy were present, and we had an enjoyable Saints' meeting. Father Steele is an old veteran in the cause, and laments that he has not many more years of vigorous manhood to devote to the work. May God comfort them in their isolation. Sister Clara's tears and ardent heart plead that the branch remain intact. It continues. Sr. Hall welcomed us at her home, as did her son Andrew and his wife. We are indebted to them for consideration and kindness, which are duly appreciated. Thanks! Sister Hall acting the part of a missionary in conjunction with Mr. Stephen Phipps, of Epping, the very pleasant and commodious church of his neighborhood was procured, where we held a number of meetings with good audiences and excellent attention. Bro. Sheehy's efforts in that neighborhood, some time previous, made friends for the cause, and they were pleased at his return. There are a number not far from the kingdom in that place. Bro. Frank promised to continue the work as practicable. We are indebted to Mr. Phipps and his very worthy household for looking after our welfare and furnishing us a pleasant home while there. Already convinced of duty, may they take pleasure in finding a place in the true fold. We believe good will result from our efforts in that community.

At Mason's Bay we tarried over with Bro. Samuel Otis Foss, brother of John C., and held meeting in their new school house in the evening with attentive listeners, who seemed to be edified. Some adverse winds have blown here, the Saints are reduced to but a few, and meetings are not kept up. They love the work and the preaching, however. Bro. Foss might be a very efficient laborer, but the circumstances are against him just now. He was sustained president of the district without any dissenting, at the conference.

We visited Little Kennebec and called on Bro. W. Manchester, to find that but a few members of the church there were left—not enough to continue meetings; they were scattered. Thought of Bro. T. W. Smith as we scanned the chapel on the hill. The commendable incentive that moves one to "aim high" governed in the erection of this, whatever the practical results. It is quite well preserved. We preached in the school-house at Jonesboro to what seemed to be rather indifferent hearers, and were kindly cared for by Bro. John Benner and family. Bro. Benner is an Elder in the church and an earnest and devoted worker, doing what he can. May the Spirit attend him and family. The Elders who have the courage to move out into new fields are the ones that will succeed. Try it. The good news is to all the world.

November 7th we attended the district conference at Indian River. Was kindly received by the Saints. The families of Capt. J. Campbell Crowley and son made us welcome at their home. They are very kind and considerate. May the faith ever have an abiding place with them. Father and son were chancing it upon the great sea for a livelihood or fortune. May they return rewarded for their sacrifice and effort. Sisters Brown and Kelley are among the faithful there. The unfavorable weather for a conference gathering prevented some from attending, but the district was fairly represented. The preaching services were good and were attended by appreciative hearers. The meeting altogether was comforting and assuring.

I think we took in the situation of the district, its needs and demands. Whatever other causes have militated against the progress of the work, the constant diminution of numbers has had its effect. At Mason's Bay where there were some forty members at one time, and active, but ten or twelve can meet now if they so desire. A less number can meet at Little Kennebec where a still larger number was once active. Moved away—scattered. Only about twelve can meet at Homer's Bay out of twenty-five in number; and about the same is true of Addison and Indian River. There is nothing very strange that a branch should flourish well for a season and then dwindle away and become inactive, especially when built up by the working classes who depend on being employed for a livelihood. They go where work can be had and the highest wages paid. What is most needed is some capable, persevering and energetic laborers, who can and will push out and work in old and new fields,—especially the new. Whatever the methods and policy employed by those who wrought in the interest of the work there hitherto, a number of excellent Saints have been gathered out, and survive all conflicts. May the darkest hour have been passed.

At Jonesport I chanced to attend the Sisters' Sewing Society, where was gathered as noble band of workers who apply heart, and head, and hands to aid the cause as it has been my fortune to meet. Experienced and capable they would honor any sphere assigned to woman. May the good they deserve come to them. We are indebted to the Saints there for consideration and kindness, and especially brother and sister Walker, who furnished us a cheerful home when we chose to enjoy it.

November 12th we went into the West Maine District, and late at night found us on Deer Island, kindly received at Bro. Joseph Eaton's, where we lodged for the night. Sister Eaton was ill, but had faith to be administered to. I saw her at meeting afterwards. The next day we set to work helping to get ready for the conference the next day at Green's Landing. After some effort at hunting up trustees and insisting on "yes," or "no," we succeeded in being refused the use of the "Union Church" of that place. The "blind guides" did not know that this suited us just as well. Green's Hall was tendered by the owners for preaching services, and three sessions were held on Sunday with the people in attendance. We could well afford to pray for our enemies, their neighbors were taking care of the other part. The business was transacted on Saturday evening, and we had a pleasant and cheering social season on Monday morning, and an attentive audience again at evening. The Saints were not so lively here as in some other places, but they need help, encouragement, and comfort. The gospel message has not completed its work on that island yet. There are some quite capable brethren here who can defend the cause. Thanks to Bro. J. D. Nolton and family, Bro. H. Robins, Eatons to numerous to mention, Messrs. Green, Richards, and others for care and hospitality. Go on and be encouraged in the good work. Father Landers and Z. H. Gurley, sen., pioneered the work here, which was sustained by Bro. T. W. Smith.

The 17th, Brn. Nolton and J. Eaton conveyed us in a schooner across to the Bray's Mountains Branch, where we held meeting in a small but crowded house with attentive listeners. Was kindly cared for by Bro. J. B. Eaton. Sister Eaton was unwell and is an excellent Saint. There is a good people here.

The 18th, Bro. Samuel Eaton conveyed us across the reach to his place where we dined with his cheerful family, after which himself and two young sons conveyed us by schooner to Sedgwick. From here Captain Carver was kind enough to convey us with his private conveyance to Bro. W. G. Pert's where we met a cordial reception and a pleasant home. Bro. Pert is Bishop's Agent and President of the West Maine District, and has the confidence of the Saints.

The 20th we took supper with Mr. Billingsly, at Sargentville, who seems to be a fair man, and preached in the church in the village in the evening to a small audience. Stayed with our warm hearted Bro. Brown, who is in the faith, has a young wife and nice children. May his happiness be just begun.

The evening of the 21st we were twenty miles away in a new field, opened up by Brn. Sheehy and Carter; friends of the cause having secured our passage with a Mr. Clawson. That is a hilly and rocky country; rather picturesque. We held four meetings with excellent attendance and interest, and was very kindly treated by the neighbors. Bro. Frank Carter resides here, who introduced Bro. Sheehy into the neighborhood last summer and the faith was presented to the people who received it with consideration. A good work might be done here and we regretted that our program would not permit us to stay longer. Continue the work Bro. Sheehy. Bro. Carter and family have a happy faculty of making one feel at home. May the good spirit attend them and the further prosecution of the work there. I saw so much to be done that I wished that I could have remained until spring in the east, but could not. By the kindness of Bro. Carter and aid of the steamer Richmond the night of the 23d found us under the kind care of Sr. Martha Murry at Rockland. The day following I parted with my genial companion and able defender of the faith, Bro. F. M. Sheehy, leaving him in his wife's care at Brunswick with the intention of spending thanksgiving at home; and night found me at Boston in a rain storm—soon comfortably housed at Bro. Frank Steffe's where I found a home and friends while tarrying in the "Hub."

Briefly,

Bro. Blair:—A few days ago I received from Switzerland the sad news of the death of sister Anna Bear, wife of brother Diethelm Bear, in Affollernd, A. Zurich, Switzerland. She suffered great afflictions and pain for almost eight months, which turned at last into dropsy. She continued strong in the faith to the last moment, and watched the clock. And when asked why she was looking upon the clock she always replied, Because the Savior will soon come. She then slept away in peace, September 29th, 1885. During her sickness she had a great desire to see me once more, and firmly believed that she would be healed through the power of God if I was there. But God had ordered otherwise, and she is now free from all pain and suffering, waiting for the resurrection day. She leaves a husband, three daughters, and one son. She was born June 23d, 1833, in Affoltern; baptized by me November 22d, 1880.

While I am especially interested in that mission field, it saddens my heart as I see one by one ce-parting into the other life, which lessens the number of the little band of Saints there. Already five have passed away since I was there the first time as a missionary. May we all be ever ready and prepared, when we are called by the all wise Father to leave this earthly career, in the wish and desire of your brother in Christ Jesus,

J. L. BEAR.

Editor Herald:—There is probably no branch of our church within seventy-five or one hundred miles from here. Certainly, this is a broad field to labor in, if not a very inviting one; but of course we must wait till Spring, as the weather would not permit of much work being done in midwinter on these prairies. There is no use going into details about the good qualities of this country again; it has been said, and any one wishing to know more can write to us. I would like to be understood, though I have no desire to create a spirit of discontent among Saints who are blessed with church services and good schools, and doing very well in general. No, no; a thousand times no. But there are certainly Saints some place, who like myself, that would like to gather where they might do good, work for the cause of the church, and at the same time secure themselves a home—a good home—in a country where it neither gets very hot or cold, so that its inhabitants can manage to get along very nicely. And I would have it distinctly understood there is no sand here, except along the Republican river. Let us hear from some of you.

Your sister in the gospel of Jesus Christ,

MRS. DIAN CARTER.

REESE, Michigan, Jan. 8th.

Bro. W. W. Blair:—I have just returned home from where I have been laboring for Christ. I have been away from home three weeks, and have been blessed in presenting the truth. Since writing you I have baptized one in Vassar, preached five times in Juniata, and then on to Goodland, where I held several meetings and ordained one teacher. When I returned home I found two letters from brethren in Tawas, wanting me to come up there and do some preaching. I shall go next week if the Lord permits.

"Sanctify them through thy truth, thy word is truth."—John 17:17. To my mind the subject is not clearly understood by many. However, I desire to give my views in regard thereto. It is thought by many that we could not become sanctified until Christ comes. So we will cite to some scriptural evidence. "Abstain from all appearance of evil, and the very God of peace sanctify you wholly, and I pray God your whole spirit and soul and body be preserved blameless, unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ."—1 Thes. 5:22, 23. We join with this the fifth Lecture on Faith, par. 2, referring to Christ: "And Christ descended in suffering below that which man can suffer; or in other words, suffered greater sufferings, and was exposed to more powerful contradictions than any man can be. But notwithstanding this, he kept the law of God and remained without sin, showing thereby that it is in the power of man to keep the law and remain also without sin." In section 17, paragraph 6, of Doctrine and Covenants, it is said by the first elders of the church, Joseph and Oliver, "And we know that justification through the grace of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ is just and true, and we know that sanctification through the grace of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ is just and true." When any person believes in God and Christ with all their heart, and repents and is baptized for the remission of sins, they are then justified from all past sins, but not sanctified. And then comes sanctification through a continual pleading with God, not being overcome by any temptation, because one sin brought upon Adam condemnation, say nothing of the results on others. We are preserved by law. "They [who are not sanctified through the law, even the law of Christ, can not inherit the celestial glory." (Doc. & Cov. 85:5). So if we are guilty of breaking that law, or of not keeping it, we are condemned. And if we keep no law, we must abide a kingdom which is not a kingdom of glory. But to him that is purified and cleansed from all sin, he is in possession of all things—just in the position that God wants him in. My position may be doubted by some. If so I would be glad to see the other side. Enoch and the city of Zion went to heaven. Why? Because they were perfect. May we attain the same perfection, which is our privilege. If we can not refrain from all sin and be sanctified, let some one show the sin we can not overcome.

Your brother in Christ,

E. DELONG.

MC FALL, Mo., Jan. 7th.

Bro. Joseph:—Last Sunday night, I, for the first time in this place tried to tell the people what the gospel was. Since that time many of them say that I am a Campbellite in full. One man said he wanted that I should have gone ahead for two hours longer; so I hope that Bro. J. R. Lambert may come here and help things out. Bro. Upton, of Lamoni, Iowa, was here the 2d to 5th inst. He is a nice man I think. The work seems to be looming up in many places, yet some have room for a chance to do better. I would rather have a people hungry for more when I quit speaking than for them to say I don't want any more of that. In haste,

REVELATION FROM GOD.

In view of the relationship mankind sustain to God by virtue of the creation and the utter hopelessness of our case without the interposition of his providence in our behalf, no subject is better calculated to fire the mind with interest, nor can any matter lead to greater issues than the one suggested by the above caption. If, as many assert and claim to believe, there is no communication from God to man then it follows that the future to all men is a dark chasm into which all must be hurled by the resistless tide of death, to meet they know not what. How awful to contemplate! How terrible to believe! And yet I am led by observation to think that some prefer this kind of faith—or rather unbelief. Even professed Christians have entered protest against latter day revelation upon the ground that the credulity of the people to this belief subjected them to deception. How profound! As though the wisdom of God was confined to time or place. How thankful these modern Christians ought to be that Enoch, Noah, Abraham, Moses, and all the prophets with Jesus, the apostles and all the primitive Saints were subjected to a pressure that they themselves are unwilling to bear.

If the noble men of God referred to had cherished such an aversion to present revelation as do these modern apologists for Christianity, mankind must have inevitably remained in a condition of darkness, the economy of God would have been unknown and all men, themselves included, would have been deprived of the benefits of the gospel.

The issues of life must be met, manfully or otherwise, and to desire darkness rather than light may signify that our "deeds are evil." It is further urged by some,—indeed the idea is quite popular, that the present status of Christianity does not necessitate additional revelation to that given in the Bible; but this is rendered anomalous when we consider that those who unanimously agree upon this point are at loggerheads upon every prominent feature of the gospel, so that every precept enunciated by Christ is by them called in question. Who or what is to settle this controversy? To the tribunal of God they can not appeal. Their wise men differ and the breach grows wider and wider. Is confusion to thus increase and the souls of men be bereft of the light of God; because forsooth their ministers differ and wisdom that would settle the difficulty can not be sought for and obtained of God? Without arrogance, I trust, and with due respect to all men and their religious faith, it occurs to me that the present condition of the nominal Christian world is that of the "dog in the manger." Permit me to add that in this charge I implicate the personality of none, believing as I do in the personal faith and goodness of many who live to the best light and knowledge their circumstances afford.

If the entire membership of the so-called Christian churches constituted "one body" as represented by Paul in 1 Corinthians 12, then there would be a source of appeal in all cases of controversy. And if sufficient wisdom was not found in the body to decide on matters in dispute the Lord could be importuned and answer given through the proper channel—the head. But, alas, this one body of modern orthodoxy is multiform, multifarious and hydra-headed. The claim so often made to palliate this difficulty that the mystical body of Christ is found among the membership of every denomination is controverted by Paul. Those who read dispassionately Ephesians 4th chapter, with the chapter already quoted, can not fail to conclude that the "one body" referred to relates to an organization of men and women according to the pattern there given. It should be borne in mind that the Church of Christ is organic and authoritative. Jesus, who was a High Priest after the order of Melchisedec, conferred this priesthood upon the chosen of his brethren. Its authority is shown in the language of Jesus to Peter, "And I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven; and whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven; and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven."—Matt. 16: 19.

It will be seen by reference to Mark 16 that these men were empowered to act in the name of the Father, Son and Holy Ghost agreeably to the instructions they had received. And it necessarily follows that their ministerial acts were recorded as binding on earth and in heaven. Doubtless the record made is with the view to future judgment of men according to their works. John in exile saw by vision that the books were opened and still another book was opened which was the book of life and men were judged out of those things which were written in the books according to their works.

By what rule of reasoning are men led to suppose that the Church of Christ today is less authoritative than the Church of Christ anciently? John 15th shows clearly the relationship of Christ to the Father and his disciples. We are informed by some that the various and diversified Christian organizations now extant exhibit the adaptability of Christ's work to the various phases of humanity. Jesus said substantially, "My sheep hear my voice." John 10th. Is really the voice of Jesus subject to such variety and contradiction? In music there is such a blending of sounds as to produce harmony, not discord. Throughout the wondrous realm of nature in all its diversity there is a harmonious blending of conditions, shades and colors. "It is admitted that the different species of the animal kingdom require a corresponding diversity of food, but we are not willing to concede that such change and variety of spiritual meat will fit men and women for the presence of God. However, for the benefit of these adaptationists, I wish to cite the fact that while the demand may exist for the variety created by promiscuous church organization, the word of God provides that in the world to come our glory and happiness and reward will only be commensurate with the desires and aspirations by us exhibited in this humble sphere. In the midst of confusion that every where abounds, God has, we think, planted again the standard of his truth by the revelation of his own will. Prior to the organization of the church in April, 1830, by Joseph Smith and his compeers, and subsequent to the apostacy of the primitive church, there was no church organization agreeing with the pattern represented by the apostle Paul. The ordinance of baptism has been a disputed point in theology. The most scholarly and profound among the clergy have differed with reference to the mode, object, and efficacy of this ordinance.

The Book of Mormon clearly defines the mode and object of baptism and who shall administer it. The laying on of hands as a church rite so long forgotten, is again taught and practiced as the result of revelation from God. The Holy Ghost in its rich effulgence is bestowed upon the meek and faithful of earth. And from thousands of hearts ascends the incense of praise and thanksgiving for the matchless love of God made known and enjoyed through the fulness of the gospel. Now, agreeably to the commands of God, men commissioned from on high are going forth preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God. Not a new, fanciful theory, but the same blessed plan taught and enjoyed by the primitive Saints. The Lord has promised that his kingdom shall no more be thrown down—the authority to act in the name of the Lord will never again be taken from the earth. Every nation must hear the glad sound that proclaims the news of redeeming love and saving power. The signs of the times portend the consummation of earthly events. Sooner or later all men must meet the justice of God. Swift retribution will overtake the evil doer, “the scorner will be consumed and they that watch for iniquity will be cut off,” but the pure in heart will be saved. Things “whispered in the ear in the closet will be revealed upon the rooftops” and the secret acts of men will be proclaimed aloud. See Luke 12: 2, 3. Among the requirements of the latter day gospel is that men should “fear God and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come.” And Solomon records a terse epitome of our obligations and the inevitable issues that are to be met. After having risen to the very acme of glory and magnificence that wealth and the favor of God could bestow, he takes a retrospect of the past and concludes that to “Fear God and keep his commandments” is the “whole duty of man.” And assigns the best of reasons, “For God shall bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing whether it be good, or whether it be evil.” Eccles. 12: 13, 14.

A PLEA FOR DOMESTIC CULTURE.

DEAR SISTERS of the household of faith, I trust our beloved editors will grant us space in the columns of the Herald for the purpose of writing to each other whatever may seem best for our mutual benefit, that we may assist ourselves and others also by kind words of advice and such encouragement as shall lead us, through our own energies, to attain a higher plane of excellence in every-day life.

The times now urge us to be steadfast; striving daily to perfect our faith and build each other up in every good work, spiritually, socially, and morally. An exchange of our choice recipes and best methods of regulating our domestic affairs for the comfort and health of our families is very desirable, that we may learn to simplify our work and teach ourselves to be pleasant and companionable, and that although our homes may be very poor and plain, try to make them habitations of love and happiness. We will also consider the duty of parents to children and try to learn the most wise and proper plans for their training. Home is a mother's kingdom, and there is no field in this world that requires more careful, faithful cultivation than the hearts of our little men and women. Truly, a happy home is worth striving for, and it is a duty we wives and mothers owe to ourselves and families to make it happy. We need encouragement, therefore let us try to give and receive with all patience, charity and humility before God, asking him to bless our efforts, that our talents may multiply and our light shine through this department, helping the Herald to bless every fireside it may reach. Household, according to Webster, are those under one roof, or those belonging to the same family. All Latter Day Saints should feel that they belong to the one family our Father in heaven, and as such should love and help each other as members of one household, remembering it is the duty of the strong to help the weak; and the duty of the wise and fortunate to seek to uplift the needy and unfortunate. If some are more blessed than others and have by dint of calculation gained a more lofty round in the ladder, let them not look down on those struggling beneath, but kindly show them how they may accomplish the same ends. Wisdom, and all good gifts are from God, and we should impart as freely as we receive. Blessed are they that overcome self and strive to keep that love in their hearts like a living fountain which continually strengthens the faith and patience of the Saints of the Most High.

Hoping that many of our sisters will put forth efforts to establish a household department in the Herald, and praying for the deliverance of Zion's children.

WONDERS OF ASTRONOMY.

BY ELDER F. R. TUBB, LONDON, ENG.

CHAP. II.—COMETS.

IN our first article upon the wonders of the heavenly world as revealed by the science of Astronomy, I endeavored to fix the admiring attention of your readers to the wondrous size, power, distance and velocity of the sun and the planets of the solar system, including the planets Mars, Mercury, Venus, the Earth, Jupiter, Saturn, Uranus and Neptune.

We now propose to take a rapid survey of those wondrous objects whose movements frequently defy and set at naught all rule, and baffle the computations of the most patient and observant Astronomer, viz, the comets of the solar system.

I propose to confine our attention to these mysterious visitants of our solar system for the simple reason that more is known of their form, dimensions, character and velocity, than can possibly be known as to the movements and nature of those vast systems of suns, planets, and comets, which carry on their ceaseless, silent and apparently eternal revolutions in the illimitable spheres of space above, around and beneath us. To convey to your readers, (en passant), some idea of the fearful magnitude and distance of these other solar systems, it is only necessary to state that one of the latest discoveries of astronomical science reveals the stupendous fact that our sun, (immense though it is to our eyes), is but a small fiery globe revolving round an incomparably greater sun some where in the region of the milky way; and carrying our earth, Jupiter, Saturn and all the planets of our (solar) system with her in the sun's eternal revolution round that far greater sun in a circle which must take ages of ages to complete one revolution!

The milky way, therefore, which to the naked eye appears but as a long irregular streak of star-dust,—turns out to be a vast assemblage of suns, planets and comets, beside which the planets of our entire solar system fade into positive insignificance; while our sun, with his (to us) unmeasurable heat and power of light, takes the back seat; as a star of no more than the fifteenth magnitude! Well might the contemplative and adoring mind of the royal psalmist burst out into the rapturous pæan of praise wherein he exclaims:—“When I consider the heavens, the work of thy fingers, the moon and the stars which thou hast ordained; what is man, that thou art mindful of him? and the son of man, that thou visitest him?”—Psal. 8: 3, 4.

Having taken but a passing glance at those vast orbs whose immeasurable distance forms at present an impenetrable barrier to our feeble sight, but of which we shall assuredly “know hereafter,” (John 13: 7), we take up the thread of our narrative by introducing to your readers some account of those mysterious visitors to our solar system, i. e., by proceeding at once to consider the form, structure, and velocity of comets.

In ancient history several very remarkable comets stand recorded. One is mentioned by the Greek philosopher Aristotle, in B. C. 371; with a tail extending over a third part of the sky. Many great comets are recorded at even more ancient dates in the Chinese annals; for that strange people kept an official record of all the remarkable stars, meteors, and other celestial appearances for more than a thousand years before the Christian era; and, what is stranger still, that record has been handed down to us, and seems reliable. A great comet was seen close to the sun sixty-two years before Christ, during a total eclipse of the sun; and one which appeared in the year B. C. 43, soon after the murder of Julius Cæsar at Rome, was seen by all the assembled people in full day-light? Such a thing, though very uncommon, is by no means singular; it has happened several times, and in one even quite recently: the great comet of 1843 was seen at noonday quite close to the sun, both in Nova Scotia and at Madrid; and before sunset at the Cape of Good Hope. Of course it is only the brightest part or the head of a comet that can be so seen; the faint light of the tail has no chance of contending against broad daylight.

Before the invention of telescopes, the appearance of a comet was of rare occurrence, because only a small proportion of them can ever be seen by the naked eye; and of these again only a small portion are considerable enough to attract much attention. Since that discovery, however, it has been ascertained that they are very numerous; hardly a year passes without one, and very often two or three; and in one year, 1846, no less than eight were observed by the telescope. Taking only two a year on an average as visible if looked for in a telescope, and considering that at least as many must occur in such situations that we could not expect to see them, in the 6,000 years of recorded history there must have been between 20,000 and 30,000 comets, great and small.

A great comet, however, hardly occurs on an average oftener than once in fifteen or twenty years, or even yet more rarely; though, as sometimes happens in matters of pure accident, and in the course of chances, it is not very unfrequent, (and we have lately seen it remarkably exemplified), for two, or even three very great comets to follow each other in rapid succession.

Thus the great comet of 1860 was followed in 1862 by another very conspicuous one, of which we shall have more to say.

When a comet is first discovered by a telescope, it is, for the most part seen only as a small, round or oval patch of foggy, or as it is called nebulous light, somewhat brighter in the middle. By degrees it grows larger and brighter as it approaches our (solar) system, and, at the same time more oval, and at length begins to throw out a tail, that is to say, a streak of light extending always in a direction from the sun, or in continuation of a line supposed to be drawn from the place of the sun below the horizon, to the head of the comet above it.

As time goes on, night after night the tail grows longer and brighter; and the head, or nebulous mass from which the tail springs, also increases, and within it begins to be seen what is called a "neucleus," or kernel—a sort of rounded misty lump of light dying off rapidly into a haziness called the "coma," or "hair." Within this, but often a good deal out of the centre, there is seen with a good telescope, and a high magnifying power, a very small spark or pellet of light, which may or may not be the solid body of the comet, and which is the real nucleus.

All this while the comet is getting every evening nearer and nearer to the sun, and is therefore seen for a shorter time after sunset or before sunrise, as the case may be; (for quite as many comets are seen in the morning before sunrise as in the evening after sunset.) At last it approaches so near the sun as to rise or set very nearly at the same time, and so ceases to be seen, except it should be so very bright and great a comet as to be visible in the presence of the sun. When this has taken place, however, the sun is by no means to be considered dead and buried. After a time it reappears having passed by the sun, or perhaps before or behind it, and got so far away on the other side as to rise before the sun, or set after him. If it first appeared after sunset in the west, it will now reappear in the east before sunrise. And, what is very remarkable its shape and size are usually totally different after its reappearance, from what they were before its disappearance. Some, indeed, never reappear at all. The path they pursue carries them into situations where they could not be seen by the same spectators who saw them before.

Others, like those of 1858 and 1861, without altogether disappearing as if swallowed up by the sun, after attaining a certain maximum or climax of splendor and size, die away, and, at the same time run southward, and are seen as that of 1858 was (on the 11th of October for the first time), in a southern latitude, the faded remnants of a brighter and more glorious existence of which we, in the northern hemisphere witnessed the grandest display. On the other hand we here receive, as it were, many comets from the southern sky, whose greatest display the inhabitants of the southern part of the earth only have witnessed. It may often happen, also that a comet which before its disappearance in the sun's rays was but a feeble and insignificant object reappears magnified and glorified; throwing out an immense tail, exhibiting every symptom of violent excitement as if set on fire by its near approach to the source of light and heat. Such was the case with the great comet of 1680 and that of 1843; both of which, as I shall take occasion to explain, really did approach extremely near to the body of the sun and must have undergone a terribly violent heat.

Other comets furnished with beautiful and conspicuous tails before their immersion in the sun's rays, at their reappearance are seen stripped of that appendage, and altogether so very different that, but for an intimate knowledge of their courses, it would be utterly impossible to identify them as the same bodies. This was the case with the beautiful comet of 1835-6; one of the most remarkable comets in history. Some on the other hand, which have escaped notice altogether in their approach to the sun, burst upon us at once in the magnitude of their splendor, quite unexpectedly, as did that of the year 1861.

I come now to speak of the paths described by comets in the sky.

There are four paths or orbits in which comets travel through the regions of illimitable space (1) circular, (2) oval or elliptical, (3) parabolic, (4) hyperbolic. Those of the first class travel in a circle, those of the second in an ellipse. The third class of comets travel in an orbit known as a parabola. The fourth in a path known as a hyperbola. Comets of the first and second class return after a varying period of years to the region of our solar system because circles and ellipses are forms which are self-contained and any body or object travelling in either a circle or ellipse will necessarily return after a greater or lesser lapse of time to the point from which it started. Those comets which travel in either a parabola or hyperbola for their orbit in space can never return to our system even after the return of endless ages. The reason for this is difficult to explain in a brief treatise such as the present, but any of your readers acquainted with the rudiments of Astronomical Geometry, and converse and with the nature of conic sections,* will readily understand why comets of the third and fourth class, after once visiting our solar system will never return to it, worlds without end.

The properties of the ellipse (or oval) have, even from a very remote period, been the subject of careful study among Geometers; and their acquaintance with them is so far perfected, that, knowing certain circumstances with regard to any portion of an ellipse, or having certain data, (as it is termed), in respect to that portion of an ellipse, they can tell the form and magnitude of the whole of the ellipse. Having these data of any, the least part, they know certainly what is the whole of the ellipse of which it forms a part.

TO IDENTIFY A COMET.

Now, four observations upon one of the heavenly bodies describing an ellipse in space are sufficient to give an observer at the earth's surface these data, by which he can tell the magnitude of the whole ellipse traversed by the comet. Thus, then, four observations tell him what is the ellipse, which (if it describe an ellipse), a comet is describing. Now, knowing the form and magnitude of the ellipse, we can further, by another known process of calculation, tell all the circumstances of the comets motion in it; and if it really move in an ellipse, we can, therefore, tell before-hand what place it will occupy in it, after any given time. Suppose the astronomical observer to have done this, and again then to observe it. If his observations agree with the predictions, he will know that he was right in supposing the comet to be describing an ellipse in its course through the regions of "eternal ether"—and that particular ellipse.

Now, observations of this kind have for the last two centuries been made upon all the comets which have appeared; (two hundred in number); and the observations on each have been repeated so as to verify one another in a great variety of ways; and the conclusion from nearly all has been the same; viz, that those portions of their orbits (or paths) which the comets are describing when within our sight, are ellipses: ellipses which have the sun for their focus, or rather for one of their foci, —and that the other focus is infinitely far off beyond the limits of the orbit of the most distant of the planets. Moreover, that all these ellipses are of the kind which are described as of great eccentricity, or deviating greatly from circles. Now, similar observations applied to the planets of our system show them also to describe elliptical paths in the heavens, having, too, the sun in one of the foci of each ellipse; but these ellipses are of exceedingly small eccentricities; i. e., they approach very nearly to circles. But the elliptic orbit of a comet may lie in an infinite variety of positions in respect to the sun, and yet in all these have its focus in the sun.

The length of the ellipse may lie one way or another, to the right or the left of a line drawn, for instance, from the sun to a particular star, or at any angular distance from that line; or having its plane inclined, at one angle or another, to the plane of the orbit which our earth describes round the sun; and all these things we are required to know, before we can fix what is the precise path in space along which the comet flies in its fiery way. They are called the elements of its orbit. And, on the other hand, knowing these, we do know very nearly the curved line which through the years, perhaps centuries, of each of its revolutions, the comet is describing through the fields of space. Nay, more, we can tell what part of that path it is at any given time describing; the inward eye remains, as it were, fixed upon it, long after it is beyond the reach of the most powerful telescopes. We can tell when it will slowly reach its greatest distance from the sun (or its aphelion distance, as it is called), somewhere, perhaps, double or treble the distance of the planet Uranus from us; and when it is borne in mind that the planet Uranus is distant 1,995 millions of miles from our orb,* the reader may glean some faint and imperfect idea of the enormous distance from whence come some of these mysterious fiery visitors to our solar system. We can also tell precisely when the comet will return and go through its perihelion, or that extremity of its orbit in which it is nearest to the sun and to us. Now, these other elements of a comet's orbit may all be determined from the same four observations which ascertained its form and its magnitude.

These things have been calculated in respect to two hundred comets, which have appeared at different times during the last two centuries, and if from this number three or four be excepted, no two will be found to describe the same orbit,—no two of them are, then, different returns of the same comet. But if two comets, appearing at different periods, had, on examination, been found to be describing, one of them at one period very nearly the same path in space, which the other did at the other period; if, moreover, the actual movement of the first comet, known from a previous knowledge of its orbit, ought to bring it precisely to that point of its orbit where the second comet was, at or near about the time when it was seen there, then we should have known that the two comets were, in fact, one and the same comet.

Out of the whole number there are three, the identity of which with three others, has been thus established: Of these, one is the comet of 1835, or 1759, called Halley's Comet, because he first established its identity with the comet of 1682, 1607, and 1531. This comet, therefore, has a periodicity of 76 years; that is to say it takes 76 years to traverse the ellipse which the Divine hand has planned out for its pathway through the heavens. Another is the comet known as Encke's comet: so called because Professor Encke was the first to discover that this comet skirted the borders of our earth's orbit every 3 3-10 years. A third is the comet called, for a similar reason, Biela's comet, which is known to have a periodicity of  $7\frac{3}{4}$  years.

A comet discovered at Paris by M. Faye, in 1843, has been calculated by M. Nicolai to have a period of somewhat less than seven and a half years. This comet returned in 1851, at the very hour predicted by M. Le Verrier; and thus a fourth is added to the number of comets whose periodicity is ascertained.

There are two others, one discovered by M. de Vico in 1844, and one by M. Brorsen in 1846, respecting which calculations have been made, assigning periods of about five and a half years to both; but at the time of their predicted return they were sought for in vain, probably because of their proximity to the sun. The former returned to its perihelion (or nearest distance to us and the sun) on the evening of August 6, 1855, the latter early in 1857; and both have been found to attain their perihelion every  $5\frac{1}{2}$  years since that period; but, owing to the earth's position at the time, and their near proximity to the sun, these comets have only been visible two or three times since 1857, at the respective  $5\frac{1}{2}$  year periods assigned to them by those eminent astronomers.

Now we all know that the sun, moon, and planets keep to certain high roads, (their orbits), like beaten tracks in the sky; from which they never deviate beyond definite and narrow limits assigned by calculation. With comets it is far otherwise. They are wild wanderers, and appear to care nothing for beaten tracks. A comet is just as likely to appear in any one region of the starry heavens as another. They are no respecters of boundaries. The first time a comet is seen, no one can tell where it may next day be. The second observation still leaves a great uncertainty as to its future course. The third nails it. After three good observations, carefully made, of its place in the heavens, we can thenceforth tell where it will go. For we shall then know which description of the four great classes it belongs to. If traveling in either a circle or an ellipse we know that we shall see it again, and at what precise period to fix its return to our solar system. But if traveling in either a parabolic or hyperbolic orbit, we know that to endless ages it can never return to the region of our earth; for parabolas and hyperbolas are curves which never return to the point from whence they started. Meanwhile, such is the variety of which their paths are susceptible, that for a very long time their movements were considered to be altogether capricious and unaccountable,—creatures of chance,—governed by no laws. Now, the case is different.

Comets are wild wanderers; yet the sun controls the movements of them; and by the very same force acting according to the very same law which retains the planets in their paths—that marvellous law of gravitation. The same power which draws a stone thrown from the hand back to the earth, which keeps the moon from flying off, and holds her to us as a companion, which keeps the planets in their well-beaten tracks about the sun, controls all the wanderings of the comet.

Planets are tame and gentle things for gravitation to deal with: a little tightening of the rein here, and a little relaxation there, as they career round and round, suffices to keep and to guide them in their smooth and graceful evolutions. We belong to a planet, and we can realize this law. But here is a stranger from afar—from out beyond the extremist limits of our system—dashing in, scorning all their conventions, cutting across all planet orbits, and rushing like some infuriated thing close up to the central sun, and turning round it in a sharp and violent curve, and with a speed of, in some cases one thousand two hundred millions (1,200,000) of miles an hour at the turning point, and then going off at a new and ever-changing pace. But, in its wildest gallop and easiest walk alike, it is curbed by the guidance of a firm and steady leading-rein held by a powerful hand.

The most magnificent comet ever seen was that which appeared from November 1680 to March 1681. In its approach to the sun it was not very bright, but began to throw out a tail when about as far from the sun as the earth is. It passed its perihelion on December 8th; and when nearest, it was only one-sixth part of the sun's diameter from his surface; being only one hundred and forty-five thousand, two hundred and ninety-one miles and four-sixths (145,2614.6) miles from the sun; and it had at that moment the astonishing speed of one million two hundred thousand (1,200,000) miles an hour, 20,000 miles a minute,  $333\frac{1}{3}$  miles in a second.

Now observe one thing. The distance from the sun's centre was about the one hundred and sixtieth ( $1\text{-}160\text{th}$ ) part of our distance from it. All the heat we enjoy on this earth comes from the sun. Imagine the heat we should have to endure if the sun were to approach to the one hundred and sixtieth part of its present distance! It would not be merely as if one hundred and sixty suns were shining on us all at once, but one hundred and sixty times one hundred and sixty. Now that is twenty-five thousand six hundred (25,600).

Only imagine a glare of 25,600 times fiercer than the sun—not the sun as felt here in England, but in the tropics, at the equator, and at noonday. And again, only conceive, not only a heat, but also a light 25,600 times more glaring than the glare of such a noonday. In such a heat, iron, rock, and every solid substance we know of would run like water and boil away in smoke and vapor.

No wonder that at such a time the comet gave evidence of most violent excitement. It had come from the cold regions outside the very furthestmost of our planetary system, torpid and icebound. When arrived in our temperate region, it began to show signs of internal activity; the head began to develope and the tail to elongate, till the comet was for a time lost sight of in the intense splendors of nearness to the sun. No human eye beheld the wondrous spectacle it must have presented on December 8th. It was as above described.

* Twice the distance of the planet Uranus from our orb would therefore be 3,990 millions of miles: three his distance brings us to the enormous number of 5,985 millions of miles, (5,985,000,000).

Four days afterward it was, however, seen; and its tail had already lengthened to an extent of about ninety millions of miles. (90,000,000).

All this is very mysterious. We shall never, perhaps, quite understand it; but the mystery will be, at all events, a little diminished when we come to understand some of the things which are seen to be going on in the heads of comets under the excitement of the sun's action, and when calming and quieting down afterwards.

COLONIAL LAW.

THE Colonial law makers of the commonwealth of Virginia were evidently strongly indoctrinated in the belief of the necessity of baptism, as we glean from a copy of a law found in Henning's Statutes at Large, vol. 2, page 165, December 14th 1662, Charles II.

"Article III.—Against persons that refuse to have their children baptized.

"Whereas many schismatical persons, out of their averseness to the orthodox established religion, or out of the newfangled conceits of their own heretical inventions; refuse to have their children baptized—

"Be it therefore enacted, by the authority aforesaid, That all persons that, in contempt of the divine sacrament of baptism, shall refuse, when they may carry their child to a lawful minister in that county, to have them baptized, shall be amerced in two thousand pounds of tobacco—halfe to the informer, and halfe to the publique."

The same importance is not placed upon the ordinance by the wide spread offspring of the King's subjects, as was considered essential for the safety of the religious weal of the colonial people, a relapse from the religious zeal has transpired.

THE GOSPEL.—No. IV.

KIRTLAND, O., Jan, 1835.

THERE never ought to be a dispute in the world about what the gospel is among those who profess a belief in the bible; for if it is not told in the scriptures plainly, and without leaving it a matter of contention, the bible is not a safe guide, neither could any thinking man trust his salvation on its teaching unless they were easily understood; for if the gospel is designed for the salvation of all men, it certainly ought to be very plain; for there are a great many in the world who can not understand any thing unless it is very plain and easy of understanding. There is no subject ever addressed to the understanding of man, that needs to be so plain and easy of comprehension as the gospel, if we may credit the persons who have promulged it. They profess to have had a commission to proclaim it to every creature in all the world. In taking so wide a range there would be many persons of very weak capacities, who are not able to understand but very little, and that little must be exceedingly plain, or else they would not be able to understand it. There is no person who will suffer his mind to reflect on the nature and design of the gospel, but what will be led to see that it must be the plainest of all messages, for it was to effect every creature in all the world; and if so, it must be suited to their capacities to make it a scheme of mercy and benevolence. For if they could not understand it, it would be worse than folly to present it to them. This is one reason why so few either believe or embrace it. It is too simple and foolish, according to their estimation, to be of any consequence to them. It was so considered in the days of the apostles who immediately followed the Savior; and to such an extent did this feeling prevail that an apostle said, if a man would be wise he must become a fool: that is, to be wise, he must believe and practice those things which the world consider the most perfect foolishness, and too simple and degrading to be believed by any rational being. And yet, notwithstanding its foolishness and simplicity, it had power to save them that believe. For says the apostle, the (or in other words this) foolishness of God is wiser than men, and this weakness of God is stronger than men: "For when, in the wisdom of God, the world by wisdom knew not God, it pleased God, by the foolishness of preaching, to save them that believe."—1 Cor. 1. Or, by the foolishness of the gospel which he proclaimed, to save those that the world with all its wisdom, could not save; for after all the wise men of the world had said or could say, and all the wisdom they had or could get, with it all they could not know God. But the apostle, with the foolishness of his preaching, could make men acquainted with God. From what is said on this subject in the New Testament we can see that such was the contempt in which the gospel was held in that age of the world, that for a man of talents or understanding to profess to believe and receive it, was to expose himself to the certain contempt of the wise ones, so-called—to expose himself to their bitterest feelings and severest contempt. Even to so great an extent did those feelings prevail, that they that killed them thought they were doing God service, (John 16: 16), doubtless thinking that they were knaves and rascals, and not fit to live. Such were the feelings which existed in the minds of the people in the days of Paul, Peter, John and James, in relation to the gospel which they preached, and such are the feelings which prevail now, both concerning the gospel and those who receive it.

Since the coming forth of the everlasting gospel, contained in the Book of Mormon, the very same feelings prevail among the would be wise ones. It is called a "simple and a foolish mess!" too simple to be believed or received by any person of sense. And every man of that description in the estimation of the world must be a knave, for say they, Surely they know better; for any person of a spark of sense, must know that it is an imposition. But notwithstanding all this tumult of words and great exertions, the persons who embrace it in sincerity and truth learn, as did the saints of former years, that it has power to save; and that the foolishness of God is wiser than man, and the weakness of God stronger than men. God saves them that believe. And as this last proclamation has the same effect on the enemies of God in these days, as the former proclamation had in the former days, so this last proclamation has the same effect on those who receive it, as the former had on those who received it, and the same fruit follows. They receive the same Spirit, and that Spirit brings forth the same fruit at one age that it did not at another; and the same gospel will always secure the same blessings to those who receive it.

Upon this subject there appears to be something very strange to me, in the world. It is this: all men who believe, or who profess to believe in the gospel, say that as far as the gospel proposes eternal blessings, they will be enjoyed by all who receive it; but as to the blessings proposed to be enjoyed by the saints in the flesh, these are limited to a few individuals, or a few individual churches. The fruits of the Spirit which were brought forth in former days, notwithstanding they were the effects of receiving the gospel were limited to a small period of the world, for though men receive the same gospel now, yet these fruits have ceased, but still the eternal blessings are the same—they will all get to the same heaven, and rejoice in the same glory. It matters not how much they may differ in this world, they will be all alike there!

The great query with me is this: How can the gospel still have power to save in the kingdom of glory, since it has lost its power on earth? Those who were saved by it in former days and made meet to be partakers of the inheritance of the saints in light, were made partakers of its power on earth. And we have no account of its saving any in the heavenly kingdom, only those who were made partakers of its power on earth. But according to the opinions of the world, it has lost its power on earth, but still retains power sufficient to save men in the everlasting kingdom. This may be, but I must confess I have serious doubts about it, and should not be surprised if it should be found that those who never receive its power on earth, should likewise fail of its glory in eternity.

Conference Minutes.

SOUTH-EASTERN ILLINOIS.

This conference convened at Springerton, Illinois, December 19th 1885, I. A. Morris, president; J. F. Thomas, clerk. Branch Reports.—Brush Creek 90; died 1. Dry Fork, no report. Tunnel Hill and Alma reports returned for correction. Springerton 64; cut off 2. Elders T. P. Green, G. H. Hilliard (baptized 7), J. W. Stone, I. A. Morris (baptized 4), J. F. Thomas and M. R. Brown. Elder T. P. Green appointed to labor in the district as his circumstances and his ability permit; Bro. H. Walker to Jacob's Chapel and Keen Station, assisted by Bro. J. F. Thomas and Bro. M. R. Brown; Bro. J. W. Stone and Bro. Green to Brush Creek; and Bro. Stone and Bro. G. H. Hilliard to Springerton and Franklin county. This conference requests Brn. E. Webb, I. M. Smith, and Ouldcott to labor as their circumstances permit, and that Bro. Stone visit Alma Branch. We request Bro. J. F. Hensen to labor at or near home, and in Marion county, and elsewhere. Bishop's Agent received $11.50 since report in June. I. A. Morris was sustained as president and J. F. Thomas clerk. In the evening preaching by T. P. Green, assisted by J. F. Thomas. Sunday forenoon preaching by G. H. Hilliard. Sacrament and Saints' meeting in the afternoon, presided over by Brn. Stone and Morris; there were many testimonies borne, and a good feeling prevailed among the Saints, as also through the entire conference. In the evening preaching by I. A. Morris. One came forward and was baptized. The meetings were well attended, and good attention given. Adjourned to meet at Springerton, White county, Illinois, Friday evening, March 19th, 1886.

GALLAND'S GROVE.

Conference of the above district convened at Dow City, Crawford county, Iowa, November 19th, 20th, 21st, 1885, in the Saints' Church. W. W. Whiting, president; John Pett and C. E. Butterworth, secretaries. Branch Reports.—Salem 87; baptized 5, removed by letter 1. Boyer Valley 47. Ministerial Reports.—J. A. McIntosh, J. Hawley, C. E. Butterworth, J. Rudd, J. Pett, W. Whiting (baptized 4). By request of the president of the Boyer Valley Branch a Court of Elders was appointed to examine into and report upon the case of an offending member of said branch. Brn. J. A. McIntosh, J. Hawley and J. Turner were appointed, who subsequently reported and were discharged. Preaching in the evening by Bro. J. A. McIntosh, assisted by Bro. B. Salisbury. Ministerial Reports continued.—B. Salisbury (baptized one), J. Turner (baptized 2); Priests C. Williamson and W. Galland; and Teachers W. Spence and N. Brogden reported. M. Lynch and Priest J. Pearsall reported in person. R. Etzenhouser, M. T. Short (baptized 2), and J. Rounds (baptized 2), reported by letter. Bishop's Agent John Pett, reported: cash on hand June 20th, $15.20; received since $231.75; total $246.95. Paid out $217.45. Balance $29.50. The following preamble and resolution was adopted: "Whereas, the work of God in these last days, as in all former times, is of the highest and purest character; and whereas, the command of God is, "Be ye clean that bear the vessels of the Lord," and as no man can be pure or clean in his sight who becomes intoxicated, or who is not truthful; therefore, be it resolved, that the presiding elder of the Galland's Grove District be and is hereby requested to silence any Elder who is either given to lying, or visiting saloons, or indulging in intoxicating drinks either in or out of saloons." Bro. W. W. Whiting was chosen to preside over the district till after the close of the next district conference, with Bro. Charles E. Butterworth to assist him. All the Elders and Priests who can labor were requested to do so, under the direction of the president of the district. The authorities of the church were on motion sustained in righteousness. Preaching in the evening by Bro. Whiting, assisted by Bro. Turner, Sunday forenoon preaching by Bro. James Turner, assisted by Bro. Ira A. Goff. In the afternoon an excellent prayer and testimony meeting was held; the Spirit of the Master being present in tongues, interpretation, and prophecy, to the edification and encouragement of the Saints. Sunday evening preaching by Bro. Whiting, assisted by Bro. Turner. The conference was a decided success, the speakers were blessed with good liberty; the congregations large and the attention and interest all that could be desired. A vote of thanks was tendered the friends and brethren of Dow City for their kindness in entertaining those who came to the conference. Adjourned to meet at Galland's Grove on Friday, March 5th, 1886, at half-past ten o'clock.

NORTH-WEST KANSAS.

Conference of the above district was held at Blue Rapids, Kansas, December 12th and 13th, 1885. A. W. Parsons presiding and H. R. Harder, clerk. Branch reports.—Twin Creek 46. Blue Rapids, no change. Elmira 34. Official reports.—John Landers, G. W. Shute, R. Hoyer, G. Vail, M. Smith, H. R. Harder (baptized 2), A. H. Parsons (baptized 9, ordained a Priest and Teacher, organized one branch), J. D. Bennett, G. W. Beebe, J. Morrill, J. Caffall, J. F. Jemison; Priest Z. Decker; Teacher W. Scott. Bishop's Agent's report.—Received $60.25, paid out $54, balance $6.25. District officers were sustained for three months. Gaylord Branch was disorganized. The ministry to labor in the district as their circumstances permit. Whereas, the means coming through the Bishop's Agent's hands is insufficient to properly prosecute the work in the district, and that we believe the cause to be that the agent does not preach the temporal law sufficiently to be comprehended by the Saints; therefore, resolved, that we pray the Bishop of the church to instruct his agent to either preach the law, or step down and out, that some one may be appointed who will preach that law as the church of God demands. Elder J. D. Bennett reported that his past, present and future labors, are done outside the limits of this district, where they are well received, with plenty of calls for preaching, and his labors blessed. His report was by vote regarded by this conference as reprehensible. Adjourned to the call of District President.

CENTRAL NEBRASKA.

This district conference was held at the Saints' Chapel, in Clear Water Branch, December 26th to 28th, 1885. Pres. G. S. Hyde in the chair, L. Gamet secretary. By request of the president Bro. James Caffall made a few remarks. Branch Reports.—Columbus 39, no change; Clear Water 66, no change; Deer Creek 31, a gain of one; Cedar Creek 18, a loss of one; Grand Rapids reported the organization of a branch of ten at that place, on the 7th of October, 1885, also a gain of one; Glen Alpine, not reported. Elders Reports.—J. Caffall, C. Brindly, P. W. Premo (by letter), B. Kester, L. Gamet, J. B. Williams, W. S. Barbee, and G. S. Hyde; Priests M. Cain, J. H. Smith and C. Derry, by letter; Teachers, A. Hollenbeck, W. H. Blalock and J. Shepard; Deacon, J. Holland reported. Whereas, we learn by report that G. W. Payton has absconded to parts unknown, and further learn that he left debts unpaid; and whereas, we have had no opportunity yet to formally investigate the facts in the case.

We, nevertheless, assure the public and all concerned, that we will lose no time in making a thorough examination to find out and frown down any and all his illegal proceedings; and be it known that the said G. W. Payton will be under disability so far as privileges of the church are concerned until restitution is made. C. Brindley, Bishop's Agent, reported nothing received or paid out. His resignation as Bishop's Agent was accepted, and L. Gamet recommended for appointment in his stead. L. Gamet was selected to preside over the district, and W. S. Barbee secretary. L. Gamet, B. Kester, and J. B. Williams were appointed a committee to investigate the condition of Glen Alpine Branch. J. Caffall was requested to consider the appeal of B. Kester from the action of Glear Water Branch. He reported and advised that the matter rest where it is. Saturday evening and Sunday morning and evening Bro. Caffall preached; on Sunday afternoon Saints' meeting was held. Adjourned to meet at Clear Water, Neb., March 27th and 28th, 1886, at ten o'clock.

CONFERENCE NOTICES.

The conference of the North-East Missouri District will be held at Bevier, Macon county, Missouri, commencing the first Saturday in February, 1886. All the branches are earnestly requested to send delegates, or in other words, Elders, to represent them, as there will be some important business to transact.

W. H. BYBEE, Dist. Pres.

The Fremont District conference will convene at the Gaylord School-house, February 13th and 14th, 1886. We hope all who possibly can will attend.

HENRY KEMP, Pres. of Dist.

WANTED,

Information of Fredrick Banewer, formerly of Norrkoping, Sweden. The last known of him he resided in Omaha, Nebraska. Address Eric Johnson, 214 Sedgwick street, Chicago. Illinois.

MARRIED.

POTTER—THORNTON.—At Bartlett, Iowa, on January 1st, 1886, by Elder Henry Kemp, at the residence of the bride's parents, W. D. Potter to sister Flora Thornton, both of Bartlett, Iowa.

Imbue them with love divine,
Great God of truth;—
Help them to feel they are thine,
While in their youth.

DIED.

BLACK.—At Ridgley, Litter county, Mo., at the residence of her father-in-law Christopher Black, December 10th, 1885, of pneumonia, Sr. Mary J. Black, wife of H. H. Black, daughter of H. T. and E. A. Burnam, aged thirty-nine years, five months and thirteen days; was baptized into the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, May 20th, 1868, with her father, mother, and one sister, by John Vanderwood, at Nebraska City, Nebraska, and remained firm in the faith to the last. She was the mother of six children. One daughter, three sons, her father, one brother and five sisters have gone before her.

She leaves a husband, two sons, six nieces, six nephews, a mother, three brothers, and many friends to mourn her loss. No Elders being nearer than twenty-five miles, her funeral was preached at the Mt. Zion grave-yard by R. H. Jones of the Baptist church, from 2 Cor. 5:3. Thus we laid her to rest to await the resurrection morn.

E. A. BURNAM.

WEST.—At Dennisport, Barnstable county, Massachusetts, Jan. 6th, 1886, Sister Sophorina West, aged 61 years, 5 months, and 2 days. She was sick but two days, and died of paralysis. She was conscious that the end was approaching, and quietly passed away, not fearing the "King of Terrors." Her funeral service was held in the Saints' Chapel, which was filled with her neighbors and friends, who met to pay their last respect to one whom they loved while living, and now desired to honor in death. Sermon at her request by Elder J. Smith, on January 8th.

SELLERS.—At Fall River, Bristol County, Massachusetts, January 6th, 1886, of a complication of diseases, James Sellers, aged 47 years, 9 months, and 19 days. Just before his departure from this life his dying request to his children was that they should be good to each other, as he would soon close the battle of life satisfied to go and meet his Master. Service was held in the Saints' chapel, January 10th; sermon by Elder J. Smith at Bro. Sellers' request before his death. The chapel was filled to overflowing. The Benevolent Society of Foreston, of which Bro. Sellers was a member, attended the funeral in a body, he being held in high esteem by them. The ritual of their burial service was also read over his remains. Thus, "one by one" they are passing away.

THERE are two provisions of the Edmunds Bill which we think ought not to be adopted and become law. One is the section providing for the taking charge of the Perpetual Emigration Fund, by trustees for the purpose of closing out that fund and winding up its business. The other is the section providing for the appointment of Trustees to take charge of and administer upon the monetary affairs of the church.

Our reasons for wishing that these provisions may not prevail are, that when the Trustees so appointed shall attempt to administer in their office they will find no assets upon which to exercise their calling; and the law will fall flat of its purpose. The measure is extreme and if it should fail may be construed into spiteful and oppressive legislation by those whom it was intended to reach.

CHARITY.

It is said that "Charity is the love of God." Paul seemed to think that if he should give all his goods to feed the poor, yet if he lacked charity, he would be but as a "tinkling cymbal, or as sounding brass." "Charity begins at home." How? How shall we describe charity? It is a quality of benevolence, and yet it is not benevolence. A man gives of his means to endow an academy, a church, a hospital. He is a charitable man. Another goes a mile to help a neighbor out of a push in his work and it is called a kindness. One man gives money to relieve the distress resulting from a flood which had turned hundreds out of doors, and it is accounted a charity; another visits a neighbor in his sickness and it is called a duty. One man sets another up in business and it is worthily called a charitable act; another helps a tramp to a lunch at a restaurant and it is soundly berated for encouraging idleness.

But some of the characteristics of personated charity, as stated by the apostle, seem to indicate that the qualities of mind (heart or soul) that constitute a charitable character, may not be found in acts of giving of this world's goods in any sense.

"Charity is kind." How does that agree with the act of a churlish money-grubber who saves largely that he may endow a college at the end of his life when he can no longer covet, or use the wealth he has gained? How does that accord with the sentiment by which a man throws a quarter of a dollar to a hungry tramp for the sake of getting rid of him?

"Is not puffed up." What can that mean? How is the character of a charitable giver of this world's gain affected by that sentence?

Pride as a motive frequently lies at the bottom of many an act accounted as charity. John Jones waits upon Christian Purse with a paper, headed: "We the charitable citizens of Bankville agree to pay the sums set opposite our names for the purpose of relieving the sufferers by the flood at Brookville." When presenting the paper he says: "Mr. Purse, we thought to get you to head this list. You always give something handsome, and there are those who if they see your name down at the top will give freely as they are too proud to be outdone." So Mr. Christian Purse puts his name down and by so doing captures the dollars of his proud fellow citizens. Had pride anything to do with Mr. Purse's giving?

Robert Goodfellow is too good-natured to say, No. Hence keeps his bank deposits from becoming large by aiding and giving to those who seek him. He is often remonstrated with for so doing. "I hate to say No," is all the answer he gives. His wife says, "Charity begins at home." Does it in his case? He has no self esteem to gratify and is not proud. Where is the motive for his giving?

Theophilus, the grocer, has a garrulous tongue. He gives largely, in his way, but every one knows of his giving as he fails not to tell how ungrateful many of the recipients of his benefactions are. "But then," he says, "I'll get my reward in heaven. The Lord loves a cheerful giver." Is Theophilus entitled to reward?

"Vaunteth not itself." This seems plain enough; and is usually rendered as against the man who gives, but declares in self praise what he does in that way. Is it not possible that it will justly apply to other cases of boasting in regard to what a man may be, or have, or do?

"Charity suffereth long." Does this mean physical or mental suffering? The faculty of enduring pain, bodily suffering, differs in many degrees in different persons. What one man will bear without a murmur, will completely unman another.

Some are stoics in enduring the pains and distresses of others, and shrink like cowards from that inflicted upon themselves. Some resolutely offer condolence to others, but in sorrow are themselves inconsolable. Some meet disaster with apathy, seeming not to feel what to others seems great. Do these suffer? Others are keenly alive and sensitive to every touch of adversity, but meet their difficulties and sorrows with resolute courage. How do they do it? It is said in legendary teaching that Abraham drove a man from his tent door, one evening, because he sat down to meat offering no thanks therefor. The angel who reproved Abraham asked him, "Have I not borne with thee, lo, these many years? and couldst thou not bear with thy fellow man one night?" Abraham had set the lentils and milk before his transient guest, because it was a custom from which he did not care to depart. The traditions of his race required it, and disgrace, or loss of caste would have followed him had he neglected to offer the traveler food. But he was jealous for the honor of his God and his faith, and drove the stranger out into the night because of it. Are there Abrahams in these respects with whom our life work lies? Was Abraham a charitable man as shown in this transaction, when offering food to the wayfarer?

"Charity is kind," and "begins at home." May we not safely write that kindness begins at home and that loving kindness is the true motive in all classes of giving. Is not he who takes pains to do his neighbor a good out of his penury of purse but his richness of labor, as much entitled to the merit of being charitable, as he who feeds a township of men suffering from general calamity, out of an abundant purse. Kindness of heart underlies much of the manly helpfulness that we meet with in the world; and much that is beggarly and mean is sheltered under the misnomer of charity though giving with a prodigal hand. Some revel in the self ascribed attribute of charity for lavish giving, who will not concede one inch of standing room in moral honesty and heaven to a man who differs from them in social and moral ethics. No matter what claims such may make, "How dwelleth the love of God" in them?

"Charity abideth." Why? "Charity is the love of God." Is it love for God? Or is it love of a similar nature to that which God has for man; or such as affects the divine mind, or heart?

A traveler in the streets of Jerusalem, "once upon a time," found a motley group of men surrounding an object lying in the street, about which many disparaging statements were being made. One remarking, how ugly; another how poor; and each in turn found something ill in the appearance of the object. The traveler leaning upon his pilgrim's staff pushed into the crowd to discover what the pitiful object was, and saw a dog that had fallen and died in the street. Parting the lips of the fallen brute with the point of his staff, he remarked, "Pearls can not exceed the whiteness of his teeth." Happy traveler. To him, footsore and weary, worn with the conflict of man's ingratitude toward himself, and through him toward the one who sent him; love like unto that which is an attribute of Jehovah, found something to tolerate in kindness in an animal emaciated and bedraggled, fallen unto death in the streets, where he was himself a stranger among the children of his Father's house."

"Charity (the love of God) covereth a multitude of sins." How can this be? God can not "look upon sin with the least degree of allowance." How then can his love cover what he can not allow? The love of God (charity) is wise. Prescience belongs in its province. It foresees what may be foreshadowed, or foreordained. It comprehends. Hence, "charity preventeth a multitude of sins." Long suffering and patient forbearance are but indications of the presence of charity. Smiles glow where charity warms the heart. Gloom flees abashed from the radiance of charity's glance. Before her footsteps sadness departs. Sorrow lies down to rest in resignation when charity's hand smooths the pillow. God's love (charity) finds all men brothers. Beneath its fostering care goodness becomes greatness. Evils and wrongs which embitter the soul, become under the wise direction of charity blessings in disguise. Charity is large of heart and generous of mind.

To charity there is room on Life's platform for all. No tormenting jealousy embitters her labors or life. Her kindnesses are without dissimulation. Hypocrisy and double dealing have no place in her affairs.

What can we say more. Charity endureth when all else fades and fails.

BRO. STEPHEN J. STONE of Amboy, Illinois, writes us the 18th instant, that Bro. Edwin Cadwell passed away the 11th. He says: "We have lost a great and good man, and will miss him very much. I preached his funeral sermon to a crowded congregation."

We have known Bro. Edwin Cadwell from 1850, and we always found him to be a man of strong, clear brain; a man of honor and uprightness, one who earned and enjoyed the confidence and esteem of his neighbors and fellow-saints. It was largely due to his excellent qualities as a citizen, his plain subject matter and methods in preaching, and his clear, straightforward and decided testimonies as to what he knew and how he knew it, in respect to the truth of the restored gospel and Church of Christ, that the writer first united with the Saints, October 8th, 1831. We were closely united with him in doctrinal views, in church work, and in our sympathies from that time forward.

The writer remembers well a vision related by Bro. Cadwell, by which he was first fully confirmed in the faith of the restored gospel. He, prior to uniting with the Saints in Ohio, had been sceptical on matters of religion, and after joining the Saints his doubts and fears in this direction troubled him much. At a time when hearing Elder Almon W. Babbitt preach a series of discourses on the latter day work, including the Book of Mormon and prophetic mission of Joseph the Seer, he felt powerfully and persistently prompted to seek for special testimony from God as to the truth of those things. One night, upon returning home from one of these services, he was deeply moved to pray, and kneeling alone (as his family were in bed and asleep) he asked God in fervent, faithful prayer to give him the needed testimony. After prayer he retired to bed, his soul still filled with ardent, longing desire, and had been there but a short time when, to his surprise, he saw his room was rapidly becoming filled with a clear, soft, beautiful light, which at length became so intense that it seemed brighter than day. Raising up upon his elbow, and looking toward the opposite side of the room, he there saw a personage, as the appearance of a man, clothed in a robe of white, whose brightness was much greater than the light with which he was surrounded. This glorious being looked directly upon him, and, though uttering no audible words, he by his silent look held communion with Bro. Cadwell, and conveyed to him by the Spirit such testimonies as fully confirmed him in respect to the truth of the latter day work, its gospel, church and dispensation. After this had occurred, the light seemed to gather in around the heavenly personage, and in a moment the vision closed.

No one who knew Elder Cadwell well would question his word in respect to the ordinary affairs of life, for they knew him to be a man of much more than average mental and acquired ability, a man of truth and integrity, even tempered, strong nerved, well poised, and of fine self-control. Well, he has passed away to try the realities of what he so fondly cherished, and firmly believed in this world, and his memory is rich in all the leading qualities of a good man and a humble, fearless, diligent, devoted servant of Christ. We shall ever look back upon his life-work with pleasure, and look forward upon his present and future rewards with rejoicing and delight.

THE Elders writing in regard to their labors in the gospel field report that as a rule they are greatly blessed of the Spirit in their ministrations. Were it not for the unseemly quarrels and interminable difficulties that like Banquo's ghost "will not down," or stay settled, the lot of an Elder would be pleasant so far as branches are concerned. There are a few branches on which apples of discord seem to grow. There are some few so called Saints, who are almost proving the western proverb to be true of themselves. "There is only one good Indian—and he is dead." Why will men persist in such irreconcilable disputes.

An officer goes among them, and after listening to the affair, arranges for its settlement and departs thinking people are at peace; scarcely have his footsteps ceased to echo in the hall where peace was established before the muss is all stirred up again, the old feud is raked into life and the public peace of the branch suffers. We believe the angels are ashamed of such doings and we know that we are.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

WE publish by request, the minutes of a conference held at Atchison, Kansas, by some of the followers and believers in James J. Strang; but who from one of the resolutions seem to have accepted the President of the Reorganization as the one to lead. It seems to us that if these men were really in earnest in adopting such a resolution, with an understanding of what leadership implied they would not be contented with such a left hand policy as the one upon which they seem to have acted, as shown by the resolutions.

Brother John Martale, of Manning, Iowa, wishes some of "the ministerial brethren" to call on him when any are passing through that region, and deliver a few discourses. There has never been any preaching in that place by our ministers, he says.

Bro. Martale wishes to hear from some of the brethren of Six Mile Grove Branch.

Bro. J. R. Badham writes from San Bernardino, Cal., the 12th inst., that "Elder D. S. Mills is holding forth at the city of Los Angeles with good effect."

Sr. Agnes O'Neal of Cherokee, Iowa, in a late letter says she obeyed the gospel in the days of Joseph the prophet, and had manifestations of the truth of the work she embraced.

Bro. C. St. Clair writes from Fanning, Kansas, the 13th inst., that his meetings are largely attended by attentive listeners, and that he looks for the fruits to be gathered in at an early time. He says Bro. Gurwell has aided well in helping forward the work at that point.

Bro. J. C. Clapp was at Deer Lodge, Montana, on the 10th inst., and says he had baptized one—a lady—and that quite a number more are believing and he hopes to trouble the waters again soon "if it don't all turn to ice."

Bro. W. H. Garrett of Greenville, Pa., writes the 15th inst. and says, "Like all the rest of the Saints the HERALD is a feast to us every week. We could not be without it."

A passenger coach was thrown from the track on the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad, forty miles south-west of Lamoni, near Albany, Missouri, on the 20th January, resulting in the death of one killed outright and the injuring of six others, one likely to die. "In the midst of life we are in death."

Bro. Joseph Luff has baptized five at Salt Lake City lately.

Bro. Asher Allen writes of late from Birkner, Illinois, that a branch was organized there the 15th of August last, with twelve members, and that already much prejudice had been removed, that their neighbors are forming better opinions of the Latter Day Saints, and there are some persons very near ready to obey the gospel of the Kingdom. He says, "We have been greatly blessed of the Spirit in our meetings, and rejoice that we are engaged in the work of God."

Lorenzo Snow, one of the Twelve of the Utah Church, gets eighteen months in the penitentiary and is fined $900 for unlawful cohabitation. He "who sows to the wind must reap the whirlwind." "If a man sow to the flesh, he shall of the flesh reap corruption."

Bro. C. A. Butterworth sends for twelve copies of the Hope for their newly organized Sunday School at Dow City, Iowa. They are pleased with its "Lesson leaves."

Old Sr. Mehitable Hall writes from the "Old Ladies Home," San Francisco, Cal., thanking us for sending her the church papers. She says "There are many religious papers coming to the 'Home,' but they are nothing compared with ours."

Bro. Alexander H. Smith, of the Twelve, wrote from Oakland, California, January 14th. He had been preaching steadily for quite a while. He spoke twice Sunday, the 11th, and was to speak in Oakland on the 17th, and possibly at San Francisco in the evening.

Sr. Sarah M. Sullivan of West St. Paul, Minn., says the Heralds she sends to Waltham, Mass., "are doing much good, as also the tracts."

Bro. O. W. Cambridge, London, Ontario, writes us that he has been imposed upon by "a black sheep," in the person of one William Robert Frazer Laird. He is about five feet eight inches in height, dark brown hair, and a very red nose. He warns all to beware of him.

Bro. B. H. Case writes from Randolph, Kansas, as if there were hopes that the town might be reached in time, though at present there are giants there. A Mr. Adams, an Englishman, and an infidel, had lectured there lately.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Ques.—Does the 46th section of Doctrine and Covenants teach that confirmation and sacrament meetings are not public meetings, and should not be held before the world?

Ans.—They are not "public meetings" in the same sense as are preaching services. It does not teach that those of "the world" should be excluded from those meetings for the reason that they are not church members. The exercises of such meetings relate especially to the members, while those devoted to preaching the principles essential for non-members to learn and obey before entering the church, are very properly distinguished as "public meetings."

Q.—Does the 4th paragraph of same section make it obligatory upon the Saints to seek the best gifts; and does it also teach that if they are in possession of the gifts they are safe from deception?

A.—It teaches that the members should seek "earnestly the best gifts," and that, too, for the very purpose that they "may not be deceived." And it also teaches that when the members are in actual possession of the said "best gifts," and so long as they retain them, they will be safe from deception. But persons must be certain as to what are the "best gifts" in any given case where they are in danger of being deceived. Discerning of spirits may be the best gift in some cases, divine wisdom in another, interpretation of tongues in another, and so of the other gifts. Each several case may require a different gift.

Q.—What are the best gifts?

A.—Wisdom, knowledge, faith, in the order given. These three are those first named by the apostle in 12th Corinthians. "Wisdom is the principal thing."—Sol.

Q.—Is it right to seek the gifts of the gospel in a meeting where there are those who are not seeking to keep the commandments of God?

A.—It may or may not be. The guidings of the Spirit and surrounding circumstances should govern.

Q.—It is stated in the 7th paragraph, that to the Bishop and presiding Elders it is to be given to discern all the gifts. Now, if the Bishop or said Elders have not the gifts to discern, is it evidence that they are not called or appointed of God?

A.—No. It is simply evidence that they have not then the gift needed to discern, and that such persons may then be living beneath their privilege and duty.

Q.—Can the presiding elder fulfill the requirements of the 1st paragraph of said section when the members appoint the meetings and say what the order of said meetings shall be?

A.—Yes. Appointing meetings is one thing, and conducting them is another. The members of a branch may, by vote, in a regular way, appoint meetings, and to those who preside over them it is given to conduct them "as they are directed by the Holy Spirit."

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

A BROTHER writes, saying:

"I am sorry I am not prepared at present to pay for the Herald. But as I can not do without it, please continue it and I will pay as soon as I am able to do so."

All others who are in arrears for their papers should notify us as this brother has done, if they can not pay up at once and yet wish their papers continued. Such a course is business-like, and it saves misunderstanding, disappointment and other trouble. There is nothing like punctuality, promptness, and frank, open-hearted dealing; and this is just as true in respect to journalism as anything else.

An intelligent and worthy sister writes us under date of the 15th inst., as follows:

"Brother Blair; enclosed you will find a year's pay for the Herald, Hope and Advocate; also ten dollars as a free-will offering. We have a book in the branch, with all the members' names on it; but the brethren can't decide whether we ought to pay one-tenth of all we possess, one-tenth of our increase, or whether we ought to pay anything. For my part I now feel, and have always felt, that it was my duty to pay all I can. If I waited 'till I could spare something,' I probably would give nothing. I want something laid up where 'thieves can't break through and steal.' I heard a brother say he never was as prosperous as when he gave most to the church. As we all want to prosper, I think we had better try it."

Bro. I N. White, writing from Clinton, Missouri, the 15th inst. says:

"I am preaching every night, with liberty, to a hungry people. I now have such an investigation as was never witnessed in this country. I have completely nonplussed three or four ministers. They are reading our works. I look for fruitful results. The enemy is on the move, yet at every turn has been out-generated. The oil of wisdom and charity is a fort in favor of truth. God is with me, and my heart is comforted."

Sr. Taylor writes from Fort Niobrara, Nebraska, the 16th of this month, rejoices in the knowledge of the latter day work, and wishes to bear witness that she has had a large measure of its divine favors. She further says:

"We started from Blair, Nebraska, last spring, landed here the first day of June. My husband and two of my children have taken land here, on the north side of the Niobrara river, eight miles east of the Fort, and twelve miles east of Valentine, this being our nearest railroad station. This is a fine country; good soil, plenty of timber, plenty of rock, well watered, (the water is mostly soft), all kinds of vegetables, and corn and wheat grow well; abundance of wild fruit, such as plums, grapes, raspberries, black currants, sand cherries, and wild cherries. There is still some vacant land here. Will some of the Saints that want homes come here and settle? We want some good Elder to come here and preach for us. We are very lonesome here, away from the church and the society of the Saints. The Herald is all the preacher we have, and we have not been backward in giving our Herald, Book of Mormon, and the Epitome of our faith to our neighbors to read, in all places and under all circumstances. We have embraced every opportunity offered to speak a word in defense of the truth. In so doing we have made some enemies, some friends, and convinced a few of the truth."

MADAME VS. MISSUS.

WE commend the following from the Chicago Tribune, of December 29th. We have frequently been shocked, sometimes pained at the careless way in which men speak of their wives. "This is my woman," or "This is my old woman."

We believe that we would like to see the word Madame adopted for Missus, or Mistress, as applied to a married woman.

"It is forty-one years ago to-day since my father, entering our humble home one evening about five o'clock, newspaper in hand—it was a little bit of a sheet called the Shippensburg Gazette—announced that Col. Tom Benton had "set his ball in motion—solitary and alone." Father was a Whig—an up-and-down National Union Henry Clay Whig, blind to all things but Whiggery and a high protective tariff. He had read something in the sheet referred to about the Harrison and

Tyler nominations, and was almost furious to think that "Mint-Drop-Tom," as he (Benton) was frequently called, should think of such a thing as starting a huge ball to roll onward from St. Louis to Baltimore over the great National Government turnpike between those two then widely-separated cities. He threw down the paper in somewhat of a dejected mood, and, my mother picking it up, began to read aloud something about Missus Dunlap and Missus Marshall. And then, following down the column, she struck upon an item about Missus Knodle and Missus Baker, concluding with an obituary notice of a Missus Shoemaker. Just here my father remarked. "Madame, in mercy's name, stop! If there is anything that sounds bad in the ears of a man it is to hear the word Missus. Why not say Madame? I hope that some day some newspaper editor will take hold of this subject and handle it as John Calvin did all church flummery." (Father was a Calvinist, and believed it would take at least a thousand years to produce another such a man). Mother looked up at him, never spoke a word, laid the paper aside, and walked to her room. This was all I heard of it, but it made an impression upon me, young as I was, and to-day that impression is as fresh and clear as though it was imprinted but yesterday.

Now, being through with the prefatory part of this article, would it not be a glorious thing were the newspapers to start in motion a reform ball? At best missus is very much out of place when applied to a married lady. It is but a corruption or vulgarism of "mistress;" in French, "maîtres," which means a kept, unmarried woman. In London all the married barmaids are missuses, and the word is not considered altogether genteel. There, among the better classes, a married woman or wife is generally spoken of as "the wife of Mr. So-and-so;" or, more frequently, "Mr. So-and-so's wife." The upper classes always use the word lady, as "Lady So-and-so," etc. "Missus" is rare among the educated.

The French, to whom by universal consent is accorded true politeness, never say Missus, "madame" being their word. And they are right. No child ever lisped missus, but they lisp "ma," "mam," "ma'am"—hence madam and madame.

We Americans—it is so said—never copy from foreigners. That's an error—a gross one. We have copied hundreds of things from them—among these the postage stamp, the money-order system, the hansom cabs, etc., which were in use in Europe years before we adopted them. We are all the time copying from Europe—our fashions as well as our dude ideas—and, while we are about it, why don't we copy "madame?" We use boulevard with no meaning to it so far as our own thoroughfares are concerned, and we may as well copy madame, which has a meaning. "Boulevard" is old French for bulwark, and as Paris grew the old walls of defense were torn down, their sites becoming roads. These were built up, and hence afterwards called boulevards because the bulwarks of the city formerly occupied the space. "Boulevard," however, does not do much in misleading people, unless it be a true Parisian "to the manner born;" but missus does mislead, and very improperly. Therefore, by and with your consent, I ask The Tribune and every other paper in the United States to hereafter use the word madame instead of missus and madames or mesdames instead of mistresses. The Frenchman, in his musical language, when addressing a bevy of married and single ladies says: "Mesdames and mesdemoiselles," and it does really sound much prettier and better than "mistresses and misses."

The newspapers taking hold of this, the eye will become quickly trained to accept madame instead of Mrs., and the voice will utter madame instead of missus. It will save many a full-point, and period, too. Start the ball rolling. All the married ladies will prefer it and talk about it; so will all the girls who are anxious to become dignified madames. Both old and young men will give it a push, and with the aid of all the editors this ball of reform will ere a decade run to a successful terminus, not meeting with anything like the friction which retarded the ball set in motion by good old Tom Benton, who, it will be remembered, looked Gen. Kearney, the old Indian fighter, so sternly in the eyes that these organs of the latter were said to have fallen unto the floor of the senate and rolled around among the No. ten and twelve boots of the Senators. Seriously, let us have madame instead of missus.

THE Utah Territorial Legislature has refused to pay the expense incurred in the maintenance of the Penitentiary in the Territory. They say:

"The Government can liquidate its own debts, settle its own bills, manage its own treasury. It can not legislate a dollar or a dime out of a Territorial treasury. It may undertake the task, but it has no lawful authority to do so. The people have the right to say what shall be done with their own money, and if the Government attempts to make expenses the Government can pay those expenses or charge it up."

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY SISTER "FRANCES."

"Better to stem with heart and hand
The roaring tide of life, than lie
Unmindful on its flowery strand Of God's occasions drifting by."

"A PLEA FOR DOMESTIC CULTURE."
EIGHTEEN years have cast their shadows upon "the dial plate of time," since in the columns of the Herald appeared "A Plea For The Little Ones" signed by "Frances."

Eighteen years! what a long, long interval of time. Some friends there may be who will still remember the name, but to hundreds it will be unknown, quite as much so indeed, as the one who bears it. What matter! It is not the name, nor the individual, with whom we have now to do, but the work appointed her and the manner in which she shall acquit herself of this work.

When Bro. Joseph asked us, "Will you take charge of such a department?" the immediate answer of the heart was "We will do all that we can," and the same response comes from the soul to-night, when we take our pen in hand to make the first effort. Sister Lucy Lloyd has, in her excellent letter, fully explained the purpose of this new department of the Herald, and if any do not understand it, we refer them to her letter in the Herald of January 23d. By reference to that it will be seen that the department belongs exclusively to the Sisters, and it is their letters, their articles and their selections which must sustain and give interest to it. As one of your number we expect from time to time to contribute our share. To this work we willingly bring the entire talent God has given unto us, nor stop to question how much that may be. We know that he who had the one talent committed to his charge was held to an account as strictly as he who had ten, and what matter if when our hands are folded in death, no more to labor, our busy brains have ceased to work, our hearts ceased to throb with joy, or ache with pain,—what matter, if it may be truthfully said of us, "She has done what she could!"

Done what she could! Oh! how that sentence rung in our ears, and knocked at the door of our heart after hearing it said over the remains of one who "slept in Jesus." Done what she could! We knew that if we, like she, were lying there, no more to labor for the Master, no more for those we loved, that it could not be truthfully said of us. God has been very merciful in showing us, that although there is much for our hands to do, there is still a portion of time in which we may labor for him. And it is because of this, because we were waiting to begin this work, that our heart and soul responded to Bro. Joseph's question, "We will do all that we can."

When the "Plea for the Little Ones" went abroad to this church, through the columns of the Herald, it found a response in many a faithful heart, and soon the children had not only a column in the Herald but a paper all their own. Is not this second plea as much for the children as for the sisters? "Home is a mother's kingdom, and there is no field in this world that requires more careful, faithful cultivation than the hearts of our little men and women." Truer sentence than this was never written, and when the time shall come that God shall fully baptize our hearts with the spirit of this work, when the mothers of the lambs of this flock shall arise in his strength to acquit themselves fully of this sacred duty, then may they look for the blessing of God upon their homes, and expect to see their children walking in wisdom's ways.

That this department of the Herald may be a success—may fully realize the most sanguine hopes of those who labor for it, and whose hearts bid it "God speed," let each one "Try to give and receive with all patience, charity and humility before God." Grand key note than this was never struck, and may God imbue the heart of each one who shall contribute with this spirit is our prayer. Many brothers and sisters during these long years, have been faithfully contributing their share towards sustaining the 'Hope,' and who may say that this department shall not be equally successful. It is needed now, it has long been needed, and if we are only true to ourselves and the trust committed to our charge it may prove a blessing to thousands, comforting, supporting and cheering those who of all others in this wide world need encouragement in their never ending labor of patience and love.

As Editor of this department, we promise you that no effort shall be wanting upon our part to make it a success, yet the sisters must not forget that we are only one among many. We will need original contributions upon any subject of general interest to us as mothers, wives and housekeepers; also any means by which as members of the Household of Faith, we may contribute our mite towards rolling on the great work in which we are engaged. But while we solicit original contributions, we do not propose to confine ourselves to these exclusively.

"Truth is truth wherever found,
On Christian or on heathen ground."

The Savior said in his time: "The children of this world are wiser in their generation, than the children of light;" and we are persuaded that it is just as true to-day as it was then. We want the very best within our power to obtain, and when a paper, magazine, or book, falls into the hands of any of our members, containing any good article upon the subjects mentioned by Lucy Lloyd, send them to us and we will use them. The Herald management proposes (for the present) to allow us the use of one page and a half, each week. By careful selecting and judicious condensing, much valuable matter may be put into this space during the course of a year, or even a shorter period of time, and we have no fears that if the demand for space becomes greater, the space will be found.

"Woman's work in connection with the church," we had intended to glance at in this number, but the compositor is waiting for copy and we must defer it to the next issue. By that time we hope to have heard from some at least of those who will bid this work "God speed," and to have felt in our souls that from many hearts, the silent incense of prayer was ascending to God, for his Holy Spirit to fit us for the work. We feel that unless His blessing is with us we shall labor in vain, and yet we have a strong assurance of faith, that He will not leave us to ourselves.

Correspondence.

GALENA, Ind., Jan'y 14th.

Bro. W. W. Blair: Indiana is still flooded with slanderous and willful misrepresentations of the doctrine believed in and taught by the church, in almost every paper of note in the State, and we are doing what we can in replying through the press. I will send a specimen of some of the literature of some of the enemies of the latter day work. As one of the most noted merchants of this place said on last evening, "All of this persecution now going on in the papers will only tend to spread the work." He wants a Book of Mormon. I hope the church will look after its interest here, soon. I expect to go to New Albany to-day to see if I can get a reply published to a slang published in the Louisville Post, of recent date. The greater the battle, the more we can appreciate the victory won.

Yours in hope of a speedy triumph of truth over error.

Dear Herald:—We are rejoicing, having the privilege of meeting again to worship the Master. Brother St. Clair is with us preaching here and at Highland Station; and is doing much good. There are several believing at both places, but whether they will obey time will tell. They are anxious at other places for him to come and preach, and I think if he can continue there will be good done here; for there has never been such an interest among the people as there is at the present time. In gospel bonds,

SR. S. E. GURWELL.

PIPER CITY, Ill., Jan. 18th.

Bro. W. W. Blair:—I arrived here the 9th, in a very cold snow storm. Last night the house was crowded. I shall be here over next Sunday, 24th; at Streator the 31st, and then return to Plano and Sandwich, till after their conference, or as I may be directed hereafter. The Saints often speak of you, T. W. Smith, H. A. Stebbins and C. Derry. Prejudice prevails here, but I feel it is giving way. At Plano, the 7th, I baptized one more, making twenty who have obeyed since I went there. Bro. Vickery has of late been laboring in Streator, and baptized five. He is well liked by the Plano Branch, over which he presides. They esteem him as a father to them. All the other officers act their part. We rejoice to know that brother Joseph returned home safe to his family.

Yours truly,

JOHN C. FOSS.

PLAINVILLE, Mass., Jan'y 12th.

Bro. Joseph Smith: The Saints of Little Compton, R. I., have been encouraged by a visit and the work accomplished with the help of the Lord, by Elders M. H. Bond, C. H. Coombs, Priest U. W. Greene and myself. The services commenced in the Chapel on New Year's eve, with preaching by Elder Bond, followed by an exhortation by Elder Coombs. Friday evening, January 1st, Elder Bond preached from 2 Cor. 3:14; subject, "the law of Moses, and the law and the spirit of Christ. On Saturday evening Bro. Greene occupied the pulpit. Sunday morning the Saints met to commemorate the Lord's Supper; before and after which there was a powerful prayer and testimony service—the spirit of prophecy was manifested to the edification of all. In the evening Elder Bond preached. On Monday evening the brethren furnished their teams to carry us to Adamsville, over two miles distant. Meetings were held in Electra Hall for four evenings in succession, commencing Monday night. Elder Bond preached each evening in the power and demonstration of the Spirit of God, teaching the first principles of the gospel as a witness unto the people. Elder Coombs made earnest entreaties for the people to accept the gospel, and called them to repentance. The attendance increased each evening, and close attention was paid. The people seemed to desire to have the meetings continued; they were willing and did pay for the rent of the hall.

On Tuesday forenoon, Bro. C. A. Coombs baptized one, and the confirmation took place in the afternoon by Elder Bond. The ordinance was attended with unusual power of the Holy Ghost, and Bro. Bond and others were comforted by the testimony of Jesus. It was a meeting the Saints will long remember.

I can say that thirteen months' experience as a Latter Day Saint has been the happiest portion of my life. I never knew what true pleasure was until I came into the Church of Jesus Christ. When I first entered the church, my former pastor (Baptist) said in a letter to me, "It hardly seems possible that Arthur B. Pierce could be a Latter Day Saint." But I now think, and did at that time, that it was impossible for me or any one else who hear the gospel to be anything less than one of God's Saints with the Bible, Book of Mormon, and so great a cloud of witnesses before us. I am prepared to say that in all my four years' experience in the Baptist Church I did not get the Holy Ghost, nor did I see it manifested; but since I came into the Church of Christ I have received the Comforter according to promise, and seen its manifestations.

Hoping for the advance and perfection of Zion,
I remain yours in faith,

ARTHUR B. PIERCE.

PEMBROKE, Dak., Jan'y 3d.

Bro. Blair: We are yet alive and doing battle on the Lord's side. Recently we have preached at two new places. At one of them our views gave mortal offense to a certain Methodist Rev., so much so that he went for us in one of the county papers, but made such a bungling attack that we did not deign to answer him, as his folly was manifest to all men. There was really nothing in our remarks to call for censure, as we were speaking on first principles; and the only way I can account for his feeling so bad, is that we gave him the "pure milk of the word," to which he was not accustomed, being used to having his considerably weakened with water. Of course the genuine article was strong for him, hence the result. We baptized one more into our little branch, a promising young man of twenty-six summers, whom we have good reason to believe will be an ornament to the church. With love to all the faithful in Christ Jesus, I subscribe myself, yours in the one faith,

W. SPARLING.

SILVER HILL, Ark., Jan. 1st.

Dear Herald: It is now a little over a year since I wrote to you; but to try to tell my reasons for not writing sooner, would only serve to occupy time and do no good. From the Verde, in Bandera county, the place from which I last wrote you, I went to Medina City, in the same county, about twelve miles west of Bandera. While there I preached six times—was the guest of Mr. Lamoni L. Wight; yet we visited other of the Saints, had a real good time while there. February 15th we took a seat in a wagon with Mr. Wight and father Mechem Curtis and started to San Antonio; we got to Bandera a little before night, and soon learned that the Temperance folks had an appointment for us to lecture for them in the Methodist Church. The time came, and we met a fair audience, and tried to tell them some of our reasons for believing all people ought to abstain from intoxicating drinks—it ought to be done away, "because it is no longer needed."

Next morning we resumed our journey, leaving brethren Smith and Curry, whom we met here; the former to lecture the following evening on the same subject. We arrived at San Antonio on the 7th, expecting to go from there to the Oak Island Branch; but finding no means of conveyance out there, we were compelled for want of finances to forego the privilege of a visit to that branch, so we took the train for Austin the next evening, and got there safe at eleven p. m.; next morning we took train for Paige, in Bastrop county, and then walked out to Bro. Allen's, about four miles.

We remained here until March 30th, preaching as circumstances would permit—part of the time assisting Bro. Smith, who had come to attend conference of Texas Central District. Conference over, Bro. Roe took us to Paige; Bro. Smith to go to Temple, en route to the General Conference, and we to go to Bro. Sherrill's, in Burleson county. At eleven a.m. we started for Caldwell, leaving Bro. Smith to take the west bound train to Austin. We got to Caldwell at half-past three, and as we got through a day sooner than we expected, we went to Mr. Perry King's, and stayed until next morning, when Bro. Sherrill and his wife came and took us out to their home, seven and a half miles from town. We remained here until April 10th; preached five times during our stay. These being among the best friends we have in Texas, it was with reluctance that we parted with them. On the 10th, Bro. and Sister Sherrill took us to Caldwell, and we were soon on our way to Hearne, where we arrived at five a.m. next morning.

Sunday, the 12th, we met with the Saints in their church at nine a.m. for prayer meeting, after which we preached to all present the way of life; we also occupied the stand again at eight p.m. We remained with the Saints here trying to instruct them, and aiding them in getting their branch record in good shape, until the 29th, when we started to the Elkhart Branch, in Anderson county. We got there the 30th, and stopped for the day with Bro. Randolph Hassell until the next day, when we had a real pleasant time with the temperance folks of Palestine and Elkhart, who met in a grove near by and spent the day in singing temperance songs and speaking. The dinner that had been prepared was good enough for a king. Everybody seemed to enjoy themselves—were happy. In the afternoon we went to Dr. Hassell's.

We remained here until June 14th and preached as often as circumstances would permit; also assisted Bro. Bryan with his branch meetings and some appointments he had at an adjacent school house. On the 14th Bro. Hassell took us to Cedar Creek Church to fill an appointment we had sent there, but we could not preach much because of ill health. After meeting we went to the house of one Mr. Fields, where we remained until the 17th, when we started to Hearne to attend the conference of the Central Texas District. We arrived at Hearne all right and after a few minutes' walk we were at Sr. Belcher's. On the 18th Brn. Smith and Roberts put in their appearance, and they had been there but a short time until Bro. Roberts was very sick; just at that time he would not have given a very favorable report of Texas, but it was not long until he was well and enjoying himself. On the 19th we went with Bro. Hay to Bro. Dotson's. The 20th, conference convened at ten a.m., and closed on the 21st at nine p.m.; (no business done on the 21st). Everything passed off pleasantly. Brn. Smith, Roberts, and myself remained here until the 30th preaching alternately, and a good interest obtained to the last. On the 30th Brn. Smith and Roberts left for Bell county, and on July 2d I started to Anderson county, to hear a Baptist divine tell what he didn't know about Mormonism.

July 5th, Sunday, when eleven o'clock came we were at the church (Cedar Creek), and the house was filled until there was hardly standing room. He commenced by saying that he regretted it very much that he had such an unpleasant duty to perform, yet as a watchman on Zion's wall(?) he must do his duty, and he puffed and blew for two hours and twenty minutes telling what Mormonism is not and when he got through I announced that I would reply to his argument, and he began to pack up his books to leave; I invited him to stay, but he said he did not have time, and he started; I told him I hated to fight a man and he running from me. He then came back and sat down in the door, but it was only by the hardest kind of an effort that he could stay until I was done with him. I left there on the 7th for Weatherford, having preached twice besides the time occupied in instructing the Baptist. I arrived at Weatherford on the 9th and there being no one there to meet me, I took the stage next morning for Jack county. Arrived at Bro. Hams' about dark, having traveled about forty miles—walked eight of the forty. On the 20th we commenced a series of meetings under an arbor that had been prepared for us.

On Sunday, August 9th, a Campbellite preacher sent me word to meet him the next evening at the Raines School House, to arrange for a debate. We went and found him to be a very nice man. The propositions were promptly signed by Mr. Pritchard, (the preacher that had sent for me), for Mr. Thurman, another Elder of that persuasion; he, (Mr. Pritchard), being unable to speak but little. Sept. 4th Bro. Smith arrived, and as he has given you a synopsis of our labors while we were together, I will not tax you with a rehearsal of the same. I will say this much however, before the debate the Campbellites were afraid (?) they would not get any debate, and before it closed they were afraid they would have to have more debate. On the night of the 11th of October Bro. Smith and I parted, he going to Mr. Parson's and I remaining in Whitt. We held two meetings at Whitt after Bro. Smith left. On Monday the Campbellites were jubilant because they thought the Methodists were whipped, and vice versa. Yet we assailed the doctrine of no one, but contented ourselves by telling them the doctrine of Christ in its plainness, letting it cut who, and where it would. I returned to Bro. Hams on the 14th. On the 18th Bro. McLester came from Wise county after us. We started next day at noon, and after jolting over forty miles of hills and rocks we arrived at our place of destination. Commenced our meetings at the Twin Pond School House on Wednesday evening, preaching there and at the Flat Rock School House until November 2d. We then started to Silver Hill, Arkansas, Bro. McLester taking us to Denton in his wagon.

On the 5th we arrived at Bro. Billingsley's in Red River county. We remained there four days—preached twice; on the 11th we completed our journey. While traveling through the Indian Territory (which we had to pass through to get there) I often thought of the promises to the Lamanite, and wondered how long it would be, before they would, by obedience to God's law, change that tawny skin for one more white; and I did wish that I might yet see the day when God would use me as an instrument to bring some of them to the knowledge of a loving Savior. Since coming here we have held meetings as often as circumstances would permit, and have made another trip to Red River county. Thus the year 1885 has passed away, and everywhere that I have been there was a great demand for preaching, and the people seem to be thirsting for something—they know not what.

During the year I have baptized ten; three in Jack County, three in Young, two in Wise County Texas; and two in Sevier County, Arkansas. I have made many friends, and no enemies as I know of now. I have been blessed in many ways during the past year, and have also met with some things that have caused me much sorrow. I then remember the saying "all things work together for good to them that love the Lord." Again: "Whom the Lord loveth He chaseth." I think I love the Lord—I want to love Him, hence it may be for my good that some things have been permitted to come upon me. To say that He loves me is useless, for it was love that caused Him to send His Son to die that I might live. One thing that I have been pleased to hear of is the successful mission of our President to the Rocky Mountains. Since he has been there I have often thought of the pathetic words uttered in the Temple 1,800 years ago, and if the same individual was on earth now, how he could, in the same strains of love say: "O polygamists, polygamists, how oft might you have been brought back to the pure word of God, and you would not; now if you suffer, you are the only ones to blame for it." May God bless the labor of the Elders in that mission. Wishing all the Saints a happy new year, I am as ever,

Yours in bonds,

A. J. CATO.

PAWTUCKET, R. I., Jan. 16th.

Bro. Blair:—It is now twenty-four years since I commenced taking the Herald. I can't do without it. It improves much. I like the correspondence first rate. It is a grand idea of Bro. J. J. Cornish getting up and publishing such a book as he suggests. It is what is wanted. I hope you will push it along as fast as you can. Fifteen years ago, if you remember, I had a talk with you about such a book as Winchester had in the old church.

Yours,

JOHN HOLT.

LYONS, Wis., Jan'y 18th.

Bro. W. W. Blair:—Your dispatch reached me in due time, and your request has been complied with. The Sister Bass, near Beloit, Wisconsin, is far advanced in consumption, and can scarcely recover, although she received immediate relief when administered to. I have been constantly engaged in the ministry since I last wrote you, and am trying to make an effort here. I will probably go soon to East Delavan to hold services. Prospects look brighter in some parts of the district, and the Lord still blesses all efforts in the interest of his cause. I think the late efforts in Utah by Bro. Joseph and others were of the right kind, and made at the proper time.

With kind regards for yourself and all in the office, I remain yours for truth,

JOHN S. PATTERSON.

CLEAR LAKE, Ind., Jan. 14th.

Bro. Blair:—I have not seen any thing from this branch for a long time. We continue to hold our prayer meeting twice a week, and there is more of that love manifested in this branch that should characterize the Saints than there has ever been. I was chosen to preside over it when it was organized, and continued in that office for nearly six years; then brother Jonathan Emrich was chosen to fill that place. I think he served two years, and I am now acting as president. I think often of brother Joseph, and how much he has to contend with in having the oversight of the whole church. It would be impossible for some men to fill his place. Those in authority, especially, should do all they can to keep peace and unity in the church! I always feel sad when anything is printed in the Herald that has a tendency to create hardness between the Saints. It causes the weak members to stumble, and to sometimes fall, when they see there is disunion among those in authority. We should be very careful how we live and what we say, so that those who are continually watching us can't find any fault with us truthfully. If we are at peace with ourselves, and do good unto all men, and especially unto the household of faith, we will continue to grow in strength, both spiritually and in numbers. There is nothing that can stay this latter day work. But when those that are in the church try to be contentious, then is when we have the hardest trials. The adversary will work, and when he sees he can not do us harm by our opposers, he will try to raise difficulty in the church. My prayer is that we may all strive to have unity and peace and help to forward on this glorious work.

ANDREW J. SMITH.

NAUVOO, Ill., Jan. 13th.

Bro. Joseph.—We are still trying to be on the Lord's side; for what else can we do but love and adore the goodness of that Being that brought us out from that slough of sin and misery, and worse than death to me if I had been compelled to stay there. How I have prayed for the honest in heart, in that the blessed Lord would send mighty men to open the way that the bound ones could be free. Thank the Lord the set time is come and the work will roll on and many will be gathered into the true fold.

Yours in bonds,

THOS. REVELL.

UNION GROVE, West Va., Jan. 5th.

Dear Herald.—A short time ago Bro. Moler and myself visited Summers county, West Virginia. We were gone about three weeks and baptized six. It was a new field, and the people said that they had never heard the gospel before. I think that there is opportunity for a grand work in that part of the land. We came back and went to Mill Creek, about twenty-three miles from here, and baptized two, and blessed eight children. When I reached home on the 28th of December I found my baby very sick; he was taken sick on the 28th and lived four days.

ELDER I. L. WILLIAMS.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, Oreg., Jan. 31.

Bro. W. W. Blair.—As there are many letters in our much loved and welcome visitor, the Herald, I thought perhaps it wouldn't be amiss to write from this far off western country, as there might be some that would like to hear from this part of the Lord's vineyard.

The Saints here are trying in their weakness to live as near right in the sight of the Lord as they know how. We were blessed with a visit by Bro. Dobson, of Clackamas county, this State. He informed us that he had been a resident of Lamoni for about four years, where he has heard some of our best spiritually minded men speak. He was at our meeting and bore his testimony that, while he knew of the doctrine whereof we preach, he could see that we were in possession of the same Spirit that influenced him to unite with the church some two thousand miles away from here. Brother Dobson was not well when he was here though he was improving when he went away. He left my place with the intention of starting home in two or three days. Brother T. N. Fields was going with him to break the bread of life in that part of the State. We hope he will do good. There is plenty of room in this mission for twenty Elders to work, though there is no one at work outside of this little branch that I have heard of, and what are here have large families, are poor as to worldly goods, and have to work for daily support. It is the writer's opinion that this district is too large for one man to preside over, as we never hear from our president, let alone seeing him. It appears that his time is taken up in California, while Oregon has to endure famine for the want of the reapers. May the Lord send more laborers into the vineyard. Can not the April Conference do something for us? Or must this part of the vineyard perish for the word of God?

I will now tell you something about the goodness of God towards us, and then you can judge about whether we are serving him or not. About four years ago the Spirit told us to repent of our sins and return to the Lord, saying, Know ye not that pestilence is raging through the earth, baffling the most skillful physicians of the land? Ere long you will have need of that great physician, Jesus Christ. Shortly after there came some disease that the doctors had no name for. Several died, mostly children. Soon after its appearance a doctor was waiting on a little child a little over a year old, and he said there was no hope for it, at least there were fourteen chances against it to one for it; and the father of the child bought its shroud. That evening a brother come after the writer, then president of the Prairie City Branch, and I went in haste, for the Spirit bade us be quick. When we reached the place we found several old people there, the mother weeping over the child, with all in the house, except three or four Saints who were well satisfied that the power of God would be there in due time to save.

To the surprise of all, the Spirit was given, the blessing was pronounced, and in about five minutes all could see the child was much better. The next morning the doctor was sent for, and he pronounced the child was in perfect health. Though weak, it gained strength slowly for a time, then the Saints held a prayer-meeting and the plague was no more. Soon after this a cancer came on my wife's left cheek. The Saints by this time had departed from the narrow path, the Spirit was withdrawn, the branch went down, and I with my family moved to this place. The cancer kept growing larger. I employed a doctor and he took out the one on her cheek, but soon after it made its appearance on the left temple. We began to doctor it, but to no effect. It grew to the size of eleven inches one way and eight and a half the other. We called another doctor, and he said she could not recover, as it was in the blood. I told my wife what he said, and we continued our prayers. That night I had a dream. A messenger appeared to me and told me that if it kept on four days it would reach the brain, but to have all the faith I could. The next morning she asked me what I thought of the case. I told her all, and said I knew that she would stay the four days. She said she didn't believe the Lord would take her away from her little children yet. The next morning I dressed the cancer and applied medicine as common, and it spread as usual.

After dressing as above, she said something made her feel that we ought to send for the Saints to meet in prayer. That evening all met at her request and bowed around the bed in mighty prayer, and then she told us to take the medicine off, which was done, and to the surprise of some of the Saints as well as our neighbors it stopped its work immediately, and now she is still with us, in fair health, and still improving. It must not be thought that we only prayed once, for the Saints wrestled all that night. In fact it was the subject of our prayers for weeks, inasmuch that some could testify that the angels were near us at different times. Excuse my bad writing, backwood's grammar and awkward spelling as I am not a scholar, though I suppose you can get my meaning.

Your brother in bonds,

C. E. ALDRICH.

FAIRPLAY, Nev., Jan'y 9th.

Dear Bro. Blair: Perhaps a few lines from this part of the world will not be amiss. The few Saints in Elko county are getting along very well considering our chances. Our last preaching was by the late Elder Glaud Rodger, who made his home at our house while in Ruby valley. We shall never forget his kind, fatherly instruction. We were made glad on New Year's day to have Bro. and Sr. Stauts visit us from Elko. God bless them. Their faith in the latter day work is unflinching. Bro. Penrod is down from the mines at present. We expect a visit from him this winter. Come out, brother, and see us; we are lonesome. Ever praying for Zion's triumph,

Your brother,

A. HAYS.

EARLING, Iowa, Jan., 15th.

Bro. Blair.—I would hate to do without the Herald, for it brings to us such comfort, and gives new life and energy. It is a feast when we can see and read the dying testimonies of such men as father Whitmer. I would to God that all mankind could become as firm, and bear such testimony as David Whitmer has to the truths of this latter day gospel. May God bless you brother, and all connected with you in the office.

As ever yours,

ALFRED JACKSON.

EXCESSIVE EATING.

"I live to eat," was said to an old Grecian sage. "I eat to live," was his reply." Now it is a well-known law that pleasure fails us in proportion as it is sought as an end. Socrates was right when he told the luxurious Athenians that, after all, he got more real pleasure from his plain food than they did from their richer viands.

But there is another fact in the case, that people who live to eat, eat to die; while those who eat to live, live on long after apoplexy, heart-complaint, or pulmonary congestion, has suddenly ended the lives of the former.

Most great eaters die in their prime. Few pass threescore years and ten. The long lived are the small eaters. Even in families remarkable for longevity, it is mainly those who are temperate in eating who inherit their birthright.

Says a medical writer in the Herald of Health, "In 1875, I spent some months in the British Museum library, reading up the subject of longevity, in the literature of which that library is surprisingly rich. I was struck with the testimony on this very point. Where anything was known of the habits of a person remarkable for longevity, it came out almost uniformly that he was a very small eater."

He adds, "It is a constant drain on the vitality to digest more food than is necessary to run the machine. Where one dies of too much drink, ten die of too much food."

A DIALOGUE.

RESPECTING THE CHURCH OF CHRIST IN THESE LAST DAYS, THE CHURCH OF CHRIST IN FORMER DAYS, AND THE CHURCH OF SO-CALLED MODERN CHRISTIANITY.

BETWEEN DR. TWINETEXT AND ELDER D.
PART TEN.

ELDER D.—I wish you a good new year, Doctor. It is gratifying to have you visit me at this time. I have been desirous of learning what progress you are making in your investigation of the truth, and have expected you to visit me in order to renew our conversation, although I find that your brethren generally are averse to a free and full investigation of what they are pleased to call "Mormonism," and would rather—assassin like—fight it in the dark. They seem to think the less they know of it, the more successfully they can oppose it. But I have always observed that they love to "draw the long bow," and they generally get a long way off to draw it, and then they want the shelter of some very pious and very learned divine's hearsay statement, so that if their arrow should perchance miss its mark, or fall harmless from the intended victim, they may crawl away with the cowardly excuse that "some one told them that the Reverend Twist-truth had heard some one say that somebody said that they heard that some one else declared, that they knew the story was true."

They may fight it in the dark with fewer scruples of conscience—if indeed they have any conscience—but if our doctrine is the monster they claim it is, the better they understand it the more successful they will be in unmasking it. Yet on the whole, if they are determined to oppose it, right or wrong, their ignorance of it may prevent their ardor from being dampened, and their valor weakened, until they meet it face to face; and then, like the foolish general who underestimates his foe, they realize a terrible disappointment and fly vanquished from the field.

DR. T.—Elder, I thank you for your good wishes, and I as heartily return them. You certainly are not complimentary to our order, yet I must own that if it is not poetical there is some truth in it; and I have learned by painful experience that it is as great folly to underestimate a foe, as it is to over estimate ourselves. I can hardly tell which is the most disastrous course of the two. The true test of courage lies in our willingness to brave the danger, when we can look it squarely in the face, and have a proper estimate of its dreaded power. Cowards may be bold in the absence of danger, and a brave man may tremble when danger stares him in the face; but the sense and love of duty nerves his arm with a valor all the more desperate. But I want to investigate this foe of our orthodoxy. If it is the friend of man, the economy of God, the gospel of salvation, I want to know it. I have done fighting it in the dark, but I may prove no less bitter a foe in my daylight opposition than when fighting it in the dark. One thing is certain, I know of no surrender so long as I have a weapon to wield. My views on many points are changed. I need not enumerate them. But I have other stumbling blocks that lie in the way of my acceptance of the order of things represented by you. You have shown, if the Scriptures quoted mean anything, that a book was to come forth; that it was to be a record of a branch of the house of Jacob; and that its coming forth was to precede the gathering of Israel, the returning fertility of their ancient home, and the second personal coming of the world's Redeemer. These are all new truths to my mind; yet truths they are, if God has ever spoken to man. But I lack the evidence that this "book" has come forth; or, in other words, that the Book of Mormon is that book. And while I admit that you have shown from the Scriptures that a book, or record of some kind was to come forth "from the ground," yet it does seem strange that Omnipotence should hide a book in the ground to preserve it. It may seem blasphemous to you, yet I think it indicates weakness in Him, rather than omnipotence, when his word could not be protected and preserved by Him without having to hide it away.

D.—Your own Cowper says: "God moves in a mysterious way his wonders to perform." He also says: "Blind unbelief is sure to err, and scan his work in vain." Was Cowper a prophet, that he read so correctly the heart of Dr. Twine Text and those of his school? Must I again quote, "My thoughts are not your thoughts, nor my ways your ways." (Isa. 55: 8, 9). I have no doubt of the power of God being sufficient to preserve the records referred to without hiding them, any more than I doubt His power to preserve Jeremiah and Baruch when the king and his nobles sought their lives. But he chose to hide them. (Jeremiah 36: 26). Certainly Jesus did not doubt the ability of his Father to preserve him under all circumstances, yet he hid himself from the Jews when they took up stones to cast at him. (John 8: 59). If he chooses to adopt this method of preserving his children, or his word, who shall say him Nay? Nor is our lack of power to tell the reason why He does thus and so, any proof that He does not do it. Nor is the hiding of the Book of Mormon in the earth any reason why we should reject it, especially since God decreed that such a book should come forth from the earth, as we have shown. But to aid you I will offer a thought or two. One evidence of a parent's love for his erring child, and also of his wisdom in dealing with the child for his best good, that the child may not run to ruin, is in preventing evil from being committed by putting away the incentive, or that which may act as an incentive, even though it be no evil of itself. Now the world is, by its corrupted nature, at enmity with God, hence loves not the things of God. The Book of Mormon shows the awful condition into which both Nephites and Lamanites had fallen; and had the book, (which was in part a record of their wickedness, as well as a record of God's reproofs for the same), been kept among them, they would have added to their many crimes the enormity of destroying, or seeking to destroy the word of God. But the love, as well as the justice of the almighty, was manifest in causing it to be hid up from them. Again; it is well known that when the Spaniards conquered the inhabitants of this land, they destroyed almost every vestige of a record which they thought would tend to endear the hearts of the natives to their traditions and government; and had this record escaped the rage of the renegade Nephites that remained, or that of the Lamanites, they would probably have fallen into the vandal hands of the Spaniards, and perhaps have been destroyed. But God preserved it in his own way, and at the same time kept those peoples from the sin of destroying, or seeking to destroy them. I do not offer these thoughts as a justification of the Almighty, but simply to help you see the loving kindness and wise dealing of God with mankind. His acts need no justification from man. They declare his goodness and his love. "God is his own interpreter, and he will make it plain."

Since you admit that a book was to come forth "from the earth;" and as it must first be placed there before it thus comes forth, it seems like a quibble to object to its being hidden in the earth. Remember God works in His own way, not in ours.

T.—In a former conversation you spoke of three witnesses who testify that an angel of God came down from heaven and showed them the plates containing the record from which the Book of Mormon was translated. If such an event transpired, connected with such a stupendous work as the establishment of God's kingdom prior to the advent of the great King, there would certainly be some intimation of it in the Scriptures. Where do you find reference to the visitation of an angel from God in the last days, as you term them?

D.—Had you read carefully the Revelations of John, you would have seen that a number of angels are to visit the earth before the time of the end. I will ask you to read Rev. 14: 6, 7—"And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying with a loud voice, fear God, and give glory to Him; for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters." Here the prophecy of the Psalmist is fulfilled—"Truth shall spring out of the earth, and righteousness shall look down from heaven." (Ps. 85: 11). The law of the Lord is righteousness. (Ps. 119). The gospel is that law, even "the perfect law of liberty." (James 1: 25).

T.—Do you understand that to be a literal angel? That Scripture is figurative, and refers to the religious press, which, in its exalted position, is printing millions of copies of the Bible. Or to the Christian Bible Societies who are using the press as an instrument of spreading the word of God to every nation. Or, it may mean the various Christian Missionary Societies who are daily sending missionaries to all of the world to preach the gospel. Or it may have reference to the church as a whole, embodying all Christendom. I incline to the latter view. I can not understand that a literal, real angel is again to come from heaven for the purpose of preaching the gospel since there are so many thousands now preaching it.

D.—You are certainly liberal in your interpretations of the text. We can take our choice. If it does not mean one thing, it means another; and if not that, it is something else. But Doctor, you have not exhausted all the interpretations given by men who, like you, do not want to believe in the visitation of a real angel to earth, in these days. Rev. Abel Stevens, author of a tract called "The Great Reform," seems to be more positive in his views of what this angel is, though he does not reveal the mystery. He says: "The church has long been looking for the apocalyptic angel who is to bear 'the gospel to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people.' She has looked to every point in the horizon for the blessed sight, but she has looked amiss. She must look to her own altar; there she will find him bound in the golden fetters of her avarice, impatient, but unable to attempt his gracious flight. Let her break his chains; then will he spread his pinions, and she shall see the sublime vision 'flying in the midst of heaven, bearing the everlasting gospel to preach to them that dwell on the earth.'"

There is a slight difference between the angel which John saw and that of Abel Stevens. The one could not be fettered by the avarice of a church; it knew of no hindrance but the law of the divine Being whose message he must bear. When the time appointed for "his gracious flight" came, obedient to the behest of God he winged his way to earth, and truth sprang "out of the earth, while righteousness looked down from heaven;" and as a consequence "the meek increase their joy in the Lord, and the poor among men rejoice in the Holy One of Israel." But this Methodist Episcopal angel has sadly folded its wings, permitted itself to be pinioned, is bound to the Methodist Episcopal altar, and there is languishing the golden moments away without power to fulfill its man-imposed mission!

T.—I am not responsible for Rev. Stevens' views. He may be right or wrong. It is a matter of vast importance however, to know whether the Apostle had reference to a bonafide angel, or whether his language is figurative. One thing is certain, great efforts are being made by all bodies of Christians to spread the gospel in all the world, and this may be what John saw in his vision.

D.—You are only responsible for Stevens' views so far as you make them your own. You do not seem to have any view of your own, but appear ready to accept any or all that are presented by the learned world. Mere supposition will hardly do in the interpretation of prophecy, for it is likely to leave us further from the truth than it finds us. Still, I am glad that after all, you appear to realize the importance of knowing the truth in this matter—there is some hope in your case. Now let us come to a common sense view of the matter. So far as the efforts of the churches are concerned, it is not clear that they are trying to spread the gospel, yet it is possible they are trying to spread their peculiar doctrines, and thereby extend the name and influence of their respective churches. Here is one of my reasons for this conclusion. The Rev. Dr. Hopkins, in a congress of the churches held recently, stated that in Japan there were "nineteen different sects of modern Christendom endeavoring to convert the Japanese, and no two of these religious sects read or understand the Bible alike." (I have quoted the Dr. from memory). The point I make is this. If each of those nineteen religious sects believe that any one, or all of them, were preaching the gospel, why not concentrate their means to aid some particular one of these sects, and let that one present a solid front to the foe, and thus labor for the salvation of souls, instead of confusing the Japanese mind with their contradictory creeds, and differing churches? Is it not evident that, if they did believe that any, or all of them were preaching the pure gospel of Christ, and themselves were filled with the love of God and had their eyes single to the glory of God, that they would withdraw from the field in favor of one sect, unanimously preferred to themselves, and concentrate their means to aid in the good work? And since they do not do this, is it not further evident, that either each sect believes, or would have others believe that they alone have "the pearl of great price" to offer? Does it not appear that they are striving for preeminence and mastery; and that instead of the salvation of souls being their object, lust of power and gold are the gods they serve? Surely a divided Christianity can have no attractions for the thinking Japanese; and a true zeal for the glory of God and the salvation of souls on the part of these sects would have led them to remove this stumbling-block. And what is true of those nineteen sects of Christendom now in Japan, is true of the hundreds of different sects in our own land, as well as in all modern Christendom.

T.—You are severe in your arraignment of the churches. I would be glad if there was no just cause for it; but I must see to it that, while you present the errors of other churches you do not blind me to the errors of your own. I want to return to the question of the angel. Give me your reason for believing that the angel referred to was a personal being—a real inhabitant of that better world. I find it is easier, oftentimes, to disprove another's views than it is to establish our own.

D.—Permit me to ask you, Doctor, if the angels mentioned in the preceding and succeeding chapters, and those following this angel in the same chapter were "real angels"—"personal beings;" "inhabitants of that better world"?

T.—I must acknowledge that such is my belief; in fact there are two instances in which their personality is declared by the heavenly visitants, and in both of these cases the glory attending them is so great that John, filled with awe, is about to worship them; but the divine beings forbade it and declared themselves his fellow servants, and of his brethren, the prophets." (Rev. 19:9, 10; 22:8, 9).

D.—Thank you. Since you acknowledge the other angels to be real and heavenly beings, why should you seek to make it appear that the one in question was not a real angelic person; an inhabitant of that better world? Why represent him as a Bible Society, a Missionary Society, a Church, a Printing Press, or some indefinable thing bound at the altar of the Methodist Episcopal Church? Is it not to cover up the fact of a great apostasy; and in consequence the absolute necessity of the gospel being sent again to man with divine authority? Would not the admission that this angel was a real being, force the conclusion that, in the future from that time he was to bring the real gospel again to earth? And would not the fact of his having to bring the real gospel, be overwhelming evidence that Christendom is not teaching the gospel of Christ, but that they are teaching for doctrines the commandments of men?

T.—On examining closely the language of the apostle, I find he uses the phrase, "I saw." You understand this verb is in the past tense, and this is the key to the whole matter. It was undoubtedly a personal being, but the event was in the past; and undoubtedly had reference to one or both of two events. First, the advent of the angel to the shepherds, (Luke 2:9, 10), saying, "Fear not; for behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people." Here is the gospel, and it was to be to all people. And sometimes prophecy has a double fulfillment. This may be one of those instances hence we find another occasion when an angel of the Lord comes down, (as in the instance of Christ's resurrection), and declares the gospel—glad tidings—"He is not here, he is risen." Either or both of these instances may be the event that John declares, in the passage under consideration. In fact, many of the learned incline to this view.

D.—Your "godfather" and "godmother" must have had the gift of prophecy when they named you "Twine Text." There is a slight discrepancy, however, in your interpretation and application of the texts. First, as to the time of the angels' flight; and, second, as to the message borne by each, which we will notice in their order. It is true that John uses the past tense, "I saw another angel fly." But you must remember John was wrapt in vision, and was describing what appeared to him in the vision, and not the event as actually transpiring then, but as it was to transpire in the future. And just as you would relate a dream previously had, detailing the events as they appeared in your dream, you would use the past tense, just as John has done. In Revelations 4:1, John says, "I looked and behold a door was opened in heaven; and the first voice which I heard was as it were of a trumpet talking to me; which said, Come up hither, and I will shew thee things which must be hereafter." In this statement we see what was shown unto John, after this time, relates to the future, and not to the past. You will do well to remember that the time of this vision was about A. D. 76, and that the events seen in vision by John were yet in the future. The angel who announced the birth of Christ to the shepherds had delivered his message about ninety-six years before John saw this vision; hence that could not be the event referred to in Rev. 14:6, 7. Again; thirty-three years had rolled away before your second angel appears to declare the good news—"He is not here, but is risen." This transpired about sixty-three years before John's vision on the Isle of Patmos; hence this could not relate to the flight of the angel seen by John; for these events had both transpired in the distant past. Therefore, your interpretation and application fall far short of the truth, and despite your unwillingness, and that of the learned world, to acknowledge the general apostasy from the gospel of Jesus Christ, and the restoration of that gospel by an holy angel, this vision of John is unquestionable evidence that such an apostasy would take place, thereby rendering it necessary that an angel should restore that gospel in order that the kingdom of God might be built up and the hearts of the people prepared for the coming of their King. That which John saw, as described in Rev. 14:6, 7, has had its fulfillment in the visitation of a heavenly messenger to Joseph Smith, bearing to him the sacred message and authorizing him to declare that message to all mankind, and to ordain others who would receive the gospel, that they might spread the glad tidings and be empowered in their turn, to ordain such as God should designate by his Spirit, to also aid in the good work, that the sound of the everlasting gospel might again go to every creature, that the world might learn to fear God, worship and give glory to him, and be prepared for the hour of God's judgment upon the nations. While righteousness thus looked down from heaven, this same angel revealed the sacred record that had long been hidden in the earth, containing the fulness of the gospel, and thus truth sprang out of the earth. Three witnesses have given their testimony to the world that they saw the angel of God, who came down from heaven and laid the plates containing the engravings, which was a record of God's dealings with his people on this continent, as well as of the fulness of the gospel, and in addition to this, the voice of God declared unto them that the engravings had been translated by divine power, and at the same time commanded them to bear record of it. These three men have given their lives to this work, and their testimony has gone to all the world. The last of these is lying at the point of death, and this testimony has just as been repeated by his dying lips. Through all the years of a long and eventful life, amid persecutions, and hate, in poverty and prosperity, surrounded with raging foes or smiling friends, under the keen, critical, and suspicious questioning of unbelievers, whose business it was to note every flaw or weak point (if such could be found, in his testimony), or in pleasant conversation with confiding friends who looked upon him as the model of truthfulness, his testimony has been clear, unruffled, pointed, plain, firm and unchangable; no uncertain guessing or even thinking "so and so," but positive, and demonstrative of the fact that he at least fully and honestly believed his own testimony. No man ever came to question him on the subject without being impressed with the fact that David Whitmer felt and realized in his own mind the truth and importance of his testimony. And on his dying bed, with the weight of fourscore years pressing upon his worn frame, and just about to be ushered into the presence of the August Judge, he in the presence of believers and unbelievers, repeats his unchanged testimony, that an angel of God had shown him the plates referred to, and that the voice of God had declared to him that the record was divine. And what is true respecting his testimony is equally true of the testimony of Cowdery and Harris. Their testimonies are one and unchangable in life and in death.

T.—It is quite possible the witnesses to the Book of Mormon were very sincere in the belief that they saw and heard what they state in their testimony; but I think with the Chicago Weekly Herald of December 23d, 1885, that they were imposed upon by designing men.

D.—Thank you for mentioning the article in the Chicago Herald. It will pay us to examine it. I have read it several times, and there are a few points I will call your attention to. The writer speaks highly of the character of David Whitmer, and says:—"On only one point has his word ever been doubted; and even as to that his friends have charitably conceded his sincerity, while believing that he was made the victim of designing men." Then, after referring to Whitmer's account of the translation of the plates, he says:—"After a few days he and others were on the highway together when a great light broke upon them, a mysterious power smote them to the earth, and a voice awesome in its scope commanded them to bear witness to the truth of that which they had seen and heard. David Whitmer was convinced, and to his dying day he testified on all occasions to the divine origin of the work which he regarded as a supplement to the Bible. That he was deceived and imposed upon by the fanatics who founded the order goes without saying; but that he was cognizant of the swindle has never been alleged."

Doctor, it requires a far greater degree of credulity to accept the above conclusion, arrived at by this learned Editor, than it does to accept the plain, intelligent statement of D. Whitmer and his fellow witnesses. Such a conclusion requires that the eyes be closed to every fact in the statement, and that the mind be completely hoodwinked before it can accept that theory. Whitmer declares that Joseph Smith and himself, Oliver Cowdery, and Martin Harris, "assembled in a pasture cleared of underbrush, at a point equally distant between two public highways. About the noonday hour, they were seated on a log waiting for the promised manifestations, having previously knelt in prayer. All at once the heavens seemed to open, and there appeared a shaft of light beside which the light of the sun appeared dim. Through this cleft in the sky, which seemed to lead way up to the pearly gates beyond, appeared an angel disguised as a man, bearing the semblance of a table. The angel descended to the earth, landing nearly at their feet. On this table were the plates of gold from which they had just translated the Book of Mormon." (This is from the Chicago Tribune's version of D. Whitmer's statement as given on his death bed, and taken down by the Tribune reporter, Dec. 15th, 1885). The honesty, integrity, intelligence and piety of Whitmer are established. Nor have the like qualities in the other witnesses ever been denied by those who knew them. Harris was a thrifty farmer. Cowdery taught school, and afterwards followed the profession of the law. Whitmer's intelligence is not questioned. Who was there to deceive these men? If one was deceived, all were! Cowdery was Whitmer's brother-in-law, and would not likely be privy to an imposition upon him, especially since there was no money in it, had he been base enough to connive at such a thing. (Smith declared that he was forbidden to use this record as a means of getting gain). And since Martin Harris appears to be the only one who had means he would be very wary of imposture, since he had to bear the burden of the expense. Therefore, if there was any deception, we must look for it from some other quarter than Cowdery and Harris. Joseph Smith was the only one present besides these three; and these three are the ones to be deceived, if there was any deception in it. If any one else had been there they could have been seen by these witnesses, because they were "in a pasture cleared of underbrush," and the time was "about noon day"—rather a poor time for any work of darkness to be perpetrated. "Men love darkness rather than light, because their deeds are evil;" but this was in the broad light of day! The deed shuns not the light; nor do the men who are "waiting for the promised manifestation." Moreover, in the midst of this noon-day glare, when every artificial light would "pale its ineffectual fire," "there appeared a dazzling shaft of light, beside which the light of the sun appeared dim!" What necromancy, magic powers, or sorcerer's craft, in the hands of an ignorant young man, could have produced this effect, and carried these three intelligent men to have imagined they saw an angel coming through the pearly gates? What hocus pocus could have so far deceived their eyes, and every sense within them, so as to make them believe that a glorious being landed nearly at their feet, and that their ears were saluted with "an awesome voice?" What power did Joseph Smith possess to strike these three men to the earth! Yet, according to the Chicago Herald, there they lay, prone at the feet of the angel, and Joseph Smith as weak as the others, and filled with as great astonishment! Either the facts occurred as David Whitmer and his fellow witnesses have testified, or they all must stand accursed as the most heinous blasphemers that ever cursed the earth. There was positively no room for deception! And since their characters stand unimpeached throughout their lives on every other question, subject, or purpose; and since, amid scorn and hate, friends and foes, prosperity and adversity, in the most trying hours, without honors or reward from man, and in the very presence of the pale messenger, death, with their feet on the very verge of eternity, they have maintained unchanged and unflinchingly the truth of their testimony. Right reason and sound judgment must accept that testimony as true, and the work they advocated as divine. Deception in the matter is out of the question. And your conclusion, Doctor, backed by the Chicago Herald, is the most veritable nonsense, and can only be excused as unreasoning childishness, or in the extreme mental weakness of old age. Add to this the fact that Whitmer was one of the four that claimed to be instruments in God's hands in founding this work, and the thought that he should be deceived by any man under the circumstances is worse than folly.

THE GOSPEL.—No. V.

KIRTLAND, O., Feb., 1835.

THERE is one thing necessary to know in order to have a correct knowledge of the gospel; that is, that it was, is, and ever will be the same; that it is as immutable as God himself, or Jesus the Savior, and that the gospel is the scheme of life and salvation; and that there was not nor will be any other, that it is that scheme of things by which all that are saved, will be saved, and all who are now saved were saved by it. The apostle Paul, in his epistle to the Ephesians 1:3-11 gives us the following account of the scheme of life and salvation which he promulgated in his day to the generation among whom he lived, and to whom the Lord sent him. "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ; according as he hath chosen us in him before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy and without blame before him in love; having predestinated us unto the adoption of children by Jesus Christ to himself, according to the good pleasure of his will, to the praise of the glory of his grace, wherein he has made us accepted in the beloved. In whom we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins, according to the riches of his grace; wherein he hath abounded toward us in all wisdom and prudence; having made known unto us the mystery of his will, according to his good pleasure, which he has purposed in himself; that in the dispensation of the fulness of times he might gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven, and which are on earth; even in him."

In the foregoing quotation the apostle gives us an outline of the order of things which he proclaimed to the people of his day, which he said he had not received of man, nor by man; but by revelation of Jesus Christ. Galatians 1:11, 12, "But I certify you, brethren, that the gospel which was preached of me is not after man; for I neither received it of man, neither was I taught it, but by the revelation of Jesus Christ."

The account then which the apostle gives of the proclamation which he proclaimed to the world is, that the same thing which he received by immediate revelation from Jesus Christ, was a scheme of things which had originated in eternity, before the world was—"Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ Jesus: according as he hath chosen us in him before the foundation of the world."—Ephesians 1:3, 4. "Having predestinated us unto the adoption of children by Jesus Christ, to himself." 5th verse. That is, before the foundation of the world. No language need be plainer than this; that is, that God, before he framed the world, had laid the scheme of life and salvation, and before he formed Adam's dust into man, he had predestinated that the human family should be made children to himself through Jesus Christ; and all this was fixed before the foundation of the world; and this is what Paul had revealed unto him to proclaim to the uncircumcision, as well as Peter to the circumcision. But it was in Jesus Christ that men were to be made children to God, or that God made children to himself out of the apostate race of man. "He hath chosen us in him, in whom we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins, wherein he hath abounded toward us, (or in him he hath abounded towards us) in all wisdom and prudence." In all these instances it is in him, not out of him, that men are to receive blessings, and to become sons of God.

This is in perfect accordance with what this same apostle says in the epistle to the Galatians, when speaking of Abraham, and the gospel proclaimed to him 3:8: "And the scripture, foreseeing that God would justify the heathen through faith, preached before the gospel unto Abraham, saying, in thee shall all nations be blessed." The promise to which the apostle alludes is found in Gen. 12:1-3: "Now the Lord had said unto Abraham, get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred, and from thy father's house, unto a land that I shall shew thee of; and I will make of thee a great nation, and I will bless thee and make thy name great; and thou shalt be a blessing, and I will bless them that bless thee, and curse them that curse thee; and in thee shall all families of the earth be blessed." In chapter 22:15-18, the promise reads thus: "And the angel of the Lord called unto Abraham out of heaven the second time, and said, by myself I have sworn, saith the Lord, for because thou hast done this thing, and hast not withheld thy son, thine only son, that in blessing I will bless thee, and in multiplying I will multiply thy seed as the stars of heaven, and as the sand which is upon the sea-shore, and thy seed shall possess the gate of his enemies; and in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed; because thou hast done this thing."

In the former of these quotations it is said, that "in thee shall all families of the earth be blessed." And in the latter that "in thy seed shall all nations be blessed."

In the 28th chapter we have an account of the same promise being confirmed unto Jacob; for according to the declarations of the Psalmist David this promise was made unto Abraham, and by oath unto Isaac, and confirmed unto Jacob. Psalm 105:8-10: "He hath remembered his covenant forever, the word which he commanded unto a thousand generations, [or the generations of the thousand years]. Which covenant he made with Abraham, and his oath unto Isaac, and confirmed the same unto Jacob for a law, and to Israel for an everlasting covenant." The account of this confirmation we have in Genesis 28:10-14; "And Jacob when out from Beer-sheba and went toward Haran. And he lighted upon a certain place, and tarried there all night, because the sun was set; and he took of the stones of that place, and put them for his pillow, and lay down in that place to sleep. And he dreamed, and behold a ladder set upon the earth, and the top of it reached to heaven: and behold the angels of God ascending and descending on it. And behold the Lord stood above it and saith, I am the Lord God of Abraham thy father, and the God of Isaac; the land whereon thou liest, to thee will I give it and to thy seed. And thy seed shall be as the dust of the earth, and thou shalt spread abroad to the west, and to the east, and to the north, and to the south: and in thee and in thy seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed." Here it is said to Jacob that in him and in his seed all families of the earth should be blessed, and putting both the former quotations together it would read the same way to Abraham; for one says in thee, and the other says in thy seed, so that the promise to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, was, that in them, and in their seed, should all the families or nations of the earth be blessed. And this is what is called the gospel, which Paul says was preached before to Abraham, Galatians 3:8. It is necessary that the reader should notice particularly that, it is in Abraham, and in his seed that all the families of the earth should be blessed, and not out of them; for here lays the mistake with many; they do not notice that little proposition in, and they fancy to themselves that they will be blessed whether they are in Abraham and his seed, or out of them; not thinking that there is a difference between in and out.

Concerning this promise made to Abraham the New Testament writers have said many things. In the 3d chapter of the epistle to the Galatians, the apostle Paul settles the question of who the seed was concerning whom it was said that, in thy seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed. He says thus, in verse 16: "Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not, and to seeds, as of many; but as of one, and to thy seed, which is Christ." According to this explanation, the promise to Abraham and his seed stands thus. That in thee, and in Christ thy seed, shall all the families of the earth be blessed. We can see by this that it was not enough that a person should be a regular descendant from Abraham to entitle them to the blessings of heaven, but they must be in his seed also, which is Christ, so that to obtain eternal life a person must be both in Abraham and in Christ.

What is here said about Abraham and his seed, so directly corresponds with what the apostle has said in the epistle to the Ephesians, as before quoted, concerning the scheme of things which he proclaimed to the world, or the plan of life and salvation, which is called the gospel, that even a careless reader can not avoid seeing how completely they harmonize. Mark, reader, that the apostle said God had chosen us in Christ Jesus before the foundation of the world. Eph. 1:4. Again "in whom we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins wherein [or in whom] he hath abounded towards us in all wisdom and prudence." So then we are chosen to be sons of God in Christ, and it is in him we have redemption, the forgiveness of sins; and it is in him that God abounds unto us in all wisdom and prudence. And the promise to Abraham was, that in his seed all the nations of the earth should be blessed, or that in Christ all the nations of the earth should be blessed; and that, says the apostle, is what God purposed in himself before the foundation of the world, and agreeably to that plan men should be blessed. In Christ Jesus they should get the remission of sins: in Christ Jesus they should get redemption: and in Christ Jesus God would abound towards them in all wisdom and prudence. And says the promise to Abraham, (or the gospel as before preached to Abraham), "in thee and in thy seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed," whether they are descendants of Shem, Ham, or Japheth—in Christ they should be blessed; for God will abound to all who are in Christ Jesus, in wisdom and prudence; they will have redemption, the forgiveness of sins.

It is in view of this promise made to Abraham and his seed that the apostle says, Rom. 9:6, 7; "For they are not all Israel which are of Israel: neither, because they are the seed of Abraham are they all children: but, In Isaac shall thy seed be called." And in Rom. 4:11-13 the apostle says, "And he [Abraham] received the sign of circumcision, a seal of the righteousness of the faith which he had yet being uncircumcised; that he might be the father of all them that believe, though they be not circumcised, that righteousness might be imputed to them also; and the father of circumcision to them who are not of the circumcision only, but who also walk in the steps of that faith of our father Abraham, which he had, being yet uncircumcised. For the promise that he should be the heir of the world, was not to Abraham, or to his seed through the law, but through the righteousness of faith."

The careful reader of the New Testament will find that the allusions to the promise made to Abraham and his seed are very numerous, but would not be to our purpose to quote at present.

It is necessary to remark here, that the apostle has pronounced a curse on any person, or even on an angel from heaven, if they preach any other gospel, than the one which he had proclaimed. See Gal. 1:8, 9. And he says as quoted above, that, the gospel which he proclaimed, had been before preached to Abraham, telling him that in his seed—that is, in Christ Jesus—all the families of the earth should be blessed; and from what he said to the Romans it is evident that the apostle excludes the fleshly seed of Abraham from being the children of Abraham according to this promise, only such as had faith like faithful Abraham, and that all others who had this faith were equally entitled to the blessings of Abraham, whether they were his fleshly seed or not—it mattered not from whom they descended—for if through faith they were enabled to get into Christ Jesus, they would be considered Abraham's children and heirs according to the promise.

In the third chapter to the Galatians the mystery is solved, how it is that we are put into Christ and become Abraham's seed and heirs according to the promise. Verses 26, 27, 28. "For ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus. For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ, have put on Christ. There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female: for ye are all one in Christ Jesus. And if ye be Christ's then are ye Abraham's seed and heirs according to the promise." This carries the promise made to Abraham to its legitimate issue, and shows what it was that was preached to Abraham; and that it was not only in his seed that all the families of the earth were to be blessed, but that they were to be put in his seed, (that is, Christ), by baptism; "For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ, have put on Christ." We could hardly admit the thought that the Lord had told Abraham that in him and in his seed all the families of the earth should be blessed, and yet not tell him how it was that they were to become his children, or in other words, how they were to be put into Christ, Abraham's seed. No doubt therefore can exist, but that Abraham knew all about it; for if he did not, could it be said that he had the gospel preached unto him? It could not, unless he had the things preached unto him which Paul afterwards preached, and concerning which he said that any man, or an angel from heaven should be accused if he preached any other. Neither can we with safety admit, having the testimony which we have on this subject before us, that God had at any period of the world any other way of making sons and daughters but the one; for Paul says that the gospel was before the world was; and that the things which he received by revelation was the same which had existed from eternity.

But to have the whole subject fairly before us, we will attend to the proclamation of him in whom God had wrought effectually to the apostleship of the circumcision—we mean Peter. We have his proclamation to the circumcision in Acts 2:37-39: "Now when the Jews heard this, they were pricked in their hearts, and said unto Peter and the rest of the apostles, men and brethren what shall we do? Then Peter said unto them, repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit. For the promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call."

The reader may see very easily, that all these men understood the subject alike; for the specimens which we have of their preaching are alike. Paul says as quoted above, that in Christ we have the forgiveness of sins, and redemption through his blood, and that in him, we are made partakers of the blessings of Abraham. And he also says that it is by baptism that we are put into Christ. Peter says, "Repent, and be baptized every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and you shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit." Why be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins? Because, that by baptism Paul says you put on Christ—"as many of you as are baptized into Christ have put on Christ." And being in Christ you have remission of sins, and redemption through his blood; and in him God will abound to you in all wisdom and prudence. Therefore, repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ, and you shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit, or in other words God will abound towards you in all wisdom and prudence, through the gift of the Holy Spirit. These two apostles then, surely, had the same views on the subject of the gospel. And let it not be forgotten, that Paul says this gospel was preached to Abraham, and not only to Abraham, but that it originated in eternity, before the world was, and that it was not some new thing which had sprang into existence with him and his contemporaries and was not known till then. But more on this point hereafter.

GLADSTONE AND HUXLEY.

"GENESIS" DECLARED BY "THE GRAND OLD MAN" TO BE A GOD-GIVEN RECORD.

In the January number of the Nineteenth Century Mr. Gladstone publishes, under the title "Proem to Genesis," a reply to Prof. Huxley's interpolation in his dispute with Prof. Reville. Readers of the essay will agree that Mr. Gladstone is, if not more powerful, at least more entertaining in attack than in defense. His first few pages are taken up with a rather captious criticism of Mr. Huxley's method, and gave one the idea that the writer considers himself to have been treated almost without due respect. When, however, he gets to work the gist of his argument is very much as follows: He holds that Mr. Huxley's attack is misdirected. His heavy guns are aimed at a position which was not occupied. It is, therefore, only necessary to restate in amended terms, the previous reasoning, and to show how very little Mr. Huxley has done towards demolishing its essential strength. Mr. Gladstone says:

"I do not think Mr. Huxley has even endeavored to understand what is the idea, what is the intention, which his opponent ascribes to the Mosaic writer; or what is the conception which his opponent forms of the weighty word Revelation. He holds the writer responsible for scientific precision; I look for nothing of the kind, but assign to him a statement general, which admits exceptions; popular, which aims mainly at producing moral impression; summary, which can not but be open to more or less of criticism in detail. He thinks it is a lecture. I think it is a sermon. He describes living creatures by structure. The Mosaic writer describes them by habitat. Both I suppose are right. I suppose that description by habitat would be unavailing for the purpose of science. I feel sure that description by structure, such as the geologists supply, would have been unavailing for the purpose of summary teaching with religious aim."

THE MOSAIC COSMOGONY.

Consequently, one expects in Genesis such a narrative as would answer the author's evident purpose of showing man his relation to God on the one hand, and to the external world on the other. We should, therefore, look for a cosmogony as accurate as the purpose demanded, but neither in form nor matter anticipating or superseding scientific knowledge. The proof of its Divine origin would, inter alia, be its conveyance of knowledge unobtainable at that time from human sources, but enduring the test of comparison with the results of subsequent investigation. After examining some points of detail in which incorrectness has been imputed to the Mosaic account, Mr. Gladstone boldly says:

"I do not suppose it would be feasible, even for Pro. Huxley, taking the nebular hypothesis and geological discovery for his guides, to give, in the compass of the first twenty-seven verses of Genesis, an account of the cosmogony and of the succession of life in the stratification of the Earth, which would combine scientific procession of statement with the majesty, the simplicity, the intelligibility, and the impressiveness of the record before us. Let me modestly call it, for argument's sake, an approximation to the present presumptions and conclusions of Science. Let me assume that the statement in the text as to plants, and the statement of verses 24, 25 as to reptiles, can not in all points be sustained; and yet still there remain great unshaken facts to be weighed: First, the fact that such a record should have been made at all. Secondly, the fact that, instead of dwelling in generalities, it has placed itself under the severe conditions of a chronological order, reaching from the first nixus of chaotic matter to the consummated production of a fair and goodly, a furnished, and a peopled world. Thirdly, the fact that its cosmogony seems, in the light of the nineteenth century, to draw more and more of countenance from the best natural philosophy; and, fourthly, that it has described the successive origins of the five great categories of present life, with which human experience was and is conversant, in that order which geological authority confirms. How came these things to be? How came they to be, not among Accadians, or Assyrians, or Egyptians, who monopolized the stores of human knowledge when this wonderful tradition was born, but among the obscure records of a people who, dwelling in Palestine for 1,200 years from their sojourn in the Valley of the Nile, hardly had force to stamp even so much as their name upon the history of the world at large, and only then began to be admitted to the general communion of mankind when their Scriptures assumed the dress which a Gentile tongue was needed to supply. It is more rational, I contend, to say that these astonishing anticipations were a God-given supply, than to suppose that a race who fell uniformly and entirely short of the great intellectual development of antiquity should here not only have equalled and outstripped it, but have entirely transcended, in kind even more than in degree, all known exercise of human faculties."

The reader will hardly care for a more minute analysis of the argument. Two extracts from the pages which are less controversial will be more welcome. Of Evolution Mr. Gladstone says:

"Evolution, is, to me, series with development. And like series in mathematics, whether arithmetical or geometrical, it establishes in things an unbroken progression; it places each thing (if only it stand the test of ability to live) in a distinct relation to every other thing; and makes each a witness to all that have preceded it, a prophecy of all that are to follow it. It gives to the argument of design, now called the teleological argument, at once a wider expansion and an augmented tenacity and solidity of tissue."

RELIGION AND THEOLOGY.

His remarks on Religion and Theology are of wider interest:

"The exaltation of Religion as against Theology is at the present day not only so fashionable, but usually so domineering and contemptuous, that I am grateful to Prof. Huxley for his frank statement (p. 859) that Theology is a branch of science; nor do I in the smallest degree quarrel with his contention that Religion and Theology ought not to be confounded. We may have a great deal of Religion with very little Theology, and a great deal of Theology with very little Religion. I feel sure that Prof. Huxley must observe with pleasure how strongly practical, ethical, and social is the general tenor of the three synoptic Gospels; and how the appearance in the world of the great doctrinal gospel was reserved to a later stage, as if to meet a later need, when men had been toned anew by the morality, and above all by the life, of our Lord.

"I am not, therefore, writing against him when I remark upon the habit of treating Theology with an affectation of contempt. It is nothing better, I believe, than a mere fashion, having no more reference to permanent principle than the mass of ephemeral fashions that come from Paris have with the immovable types of Beauty. Those who take for the burden of their song 'Respect Religion, but despise Theology,' seem to me just as rational as if a person were to say 'Admire the trees, the plants, the flowers, the sun, moon, or stars, but despise Botany, and despise Astronomy.' Theology is ordered knowledge, representing in the region of the intellect what Religion represents in the heart and life of man. And this Religion, Mr. Huxley says a little further on, is summed up in the terms of the Prophet Micah (6: 8): 'Do justly, and love mercy, and walk humbly with thy God.' I forbear to inquire whether every addition to this—such, for instance, as the Beatitudes—is (N. C., p. 860) to be proscribed. But I will not dispute that in these words is conveyed the true ideal of religious discipline and attainment. They really import that identification of the will which is set out with such wonderful force in the very simple words of the 'Paradiso'— and which no one has more beautifully described than (I think) Charles Lamb: 'He gave his heart to the Purifier, his will to the Will that governs the Universe.' It may be we shall find that Christianity itself is in some sort of a scaffolding, and that the final building is a pure and perfect Theism; when the kingdom shall be 'delivered unto God,' 'that God may be all in all.' Still, I can not help being struck with an impression that Mr. Huxley appears to cite these terms of Micah as if they reduced the work of Religion from a difficult to a very easy performance. But look at them again. Examine them well. They are, in truth, in Cowper's words:

Higher than the heights above,
Deeper than the depths beneath.

"Do justly—that is to say, extinguish self; love mercy—cut utterly away all the pride and wrath, and all the cupidity that make this fair world a wilderness; walk humbly with thy God—take His will and set it in the place where thine own used to rule. 'Ring out the old, ring in the new.' Pluck down the tyrant from his place; set up the true Master on His lawful throne.

"There are certainly human beings of happy composition, who mount these airy highths with elastic step, and with unabated breath.

"Sponte sua, sine lege, fidem rectumque colebat, This comparative refinement of nature in some may even lead them to undervalue the stores of that rich armory which Christianity has provided to equip us for our great life-battle. The text of the Prophet Micah, developed into all the breadth of St. Paul and St. Augustine, is not too much—is it not often all too little?—for the needs of ordinary men."

Conference Minutes.

NORTHERN MINNESOTA.

The quarterly conference of the above district convened on the 17th day of December, 1885, at ten o'clock, at the Saints' Church, in the town of Girard, Otter Tail county, Minn., in a two days' session. Elder Hiram L. Holt in the chair, and M. Shaw clerk. Branch reports.—Hope of Zion, J. R. Anderson president, has 51 members. Silver Lake, G. Gould president, has 26 members. Oak Lake, M. Shaw president, has 40 members. Monotoc Falls, W. Barnhart president, has 8 members. The district has 125 members, including 10 Elders, 3 Priests, 3 Teachers, 1 Deacon. Eighteen baptized since last conference. Elders T. J. Martin, H. L. Holt, H. Way, G. Gould, C. G. Gould, J. R. Anderson and M. Shaw, reported in person as doing something in the Master's cause. Elder J. C. Foss reported by letter. Priest E. Anderson, Teacher W. Anderson, Deacons E. F. Anderson and T. M. Parr, all reported as trying to do their several duties. Elders J. R. Anderson and H. L. Holt were elected as delegates to attend the General Conference at Lamoni, Iowa, April 6th, 1886. J. R. Anderson, Bishop's Agent, has received $53.43, paid out $52.45, balance on hand 98 cts. Treasurer of church building committee had received and paid out $500.71; total cost of church building $560.71; amount due on it $60. Elder T. J. Martin was elected district president till the close of next conference, and M. Shaw as clerk. H. L. Holt preached on Saturday evening, M. Shaw on Sunday morning, and H. L. Holt again in the afternoon. Prayer and testimony meeting in the evening. Many of the sick were administered unto with blessings following. Adjourned to June 14th next, at noon, at this place.

Miscellaneous.

AN ADDRESS

To the Saints in the States of Michigan, Indiana, Ohio, Pennsylvania, New York, and the New England States; together with those residing in Virginia and Nova Scotia, greeting:

My appointment to this vast field of labor requires a word from me, doubtless, in something of the form of an address. This should have appeared before, perhaps; but not being very partial to long Epistles, I preferred to meet with the Saints in person, so far as might be practicable, as the surest way of accomplishing a desired good; but every case can not be reached in this way, and the next best thing is to write.

A general oversight is all that could have been expected, however, by this appointment, which was made, evidently, in the interest of good order, a proper discipline, unity of action and right rule, the large extent of territory being assigned from the necessity of the case. Proper government in the church is as essential as it is in other associations or compacts, and authority must be lodged somewhere, and in some person or persons. In the church all are equal before the law, and have equal rights to the blessings and privileges bestowed by the union, but all have not the same office, nor carry the same burden. Authority does not exist in the individual, but in the law. Office imposes obligations upon those appointed to fill them, and he that is faithful to his trust is entitled to the respect and esteem of his brethren, as well for himself as for the office filled. "God set some in the church"—officers—first, second, third, &c., to the end that a proper purpose, unity, and harmony might prevail throughout the body. General church officers are not a detriment and hindrance to the progress of the work, but aids for the general good; else our system of faith and government is not sound. "There is one body and one spirit"—one chief interest—the objective point being the encouragement, success, and final happiness of the whole.

Under the direction of the Presidency, and the authority of office under the law, as well as the sanction of General Conference, the officer in charge in this and other similar cases becomes the chief director and interpreter of the law and usages of the church. His decisions upon all questions involving the interest of the Church and Saints should be received as final and acquiesced in, for the sake of harmony and good government, until reversed, if wrong, as provided by the law; and good Saints will maintain this respect, unity, and order everywhere, as duty under the law binds them. Here is the security and safety of the Church and Saints from aspiring geniuses, self-constituted authority, the rebellious and inciters of divisions and discord, to gratify a vain ambition or a cranky turn of mind. The officer in charge being fallible like others, and liable to err, aggrieved parties, not satisfied with his rulings and interpretation of the law, have recourse to the law, and may appeal to higher authority, where the officer in charge will be made to answer for both his judgment and conduct. Thus the rights of each and all are protected, and good order and proper discipline maintained throughout all of the churches.

Districts, branches, and individuals should seek to act in accord with the usages and decisions of the general church, and not attempt to defeat its purpose by antagonizing its rulings or its chief representatives in order to carry out some personal, ambitious scheme, with a feeling of "We know best." That is a quite natural feeling to most persons, at times. Harmony of action, mutual respect and consideration must be secured in order to attain to the desired oneness. Each working in his own way does not always conduce to the best results. It is quite as essential to know how to labor to a given end as it is to possess a willingness to labor; and it is apparent to those who may wish to see that time, labor, and means have been squandered for the want of being properly directed. It is essential that order, concert of action and right rule should obtain, that we may be in fact "God's husbandry"—"God's building"—his spiritual house, or temple.

The spirit and genius of our cause is not that of domination, but an appeal to the judgment and conscience of the people; the education, enlightenment and advancement of all—keeping constantly in view "the law and the testimony."

The Saints are free, one and all. But their freedom is in the law; not to ignore and refuse to obey, but to keep it. Not goaded to duty as serfs and vassals, by the lash of some dominant Lord; but intelligently, cheerfully, and conscientiously performing their respective duties as made known—able to give a reason for their faith and action—fearing God and loving the right. This is the royal road of progress in earth and heaven. "We are laborers together," mutually interested in a great cause. Each one forms an integral part of the whole, and each in charge of him or herself with a fixed determination to be found in the line of duty—keeping constantly in view the right—and there is no question as to success—the securing of the honor of the cause everywhere—together with the Divine benediction. Let me appeal, then, to the judgment and conscience, the better self of each, and place you upon your good behavior, as trustees in trust, to look after "self" and keep in view the honor and success of the cause and your own unity therewith. Preserve the dignity and sacredness of the work at home—your neighbors will be influenced by your example. In one sense the Saints are all preachers.

It is to be regretted that there are not Elders to meet all of the demands for labor; but the few should do what they can, and abide the Lord's time to increase the number. He has said "I will hasten my work in its time." The inspiring agencies are at work, and we should toil on, content. Do not become discouraged because of uninviting surroundings and embarrassed circumstances today, things may change to-morrow. Try to become more efficient and useful, by studying the word, and do not squander your time away. "Preach the word." Preach the gifts; but do not leave the impression that it is necessary to have special gifts at every meeting of the Saints, else it will be a poor meeting, or something is wrong. If the Saints are sound in word, doctrine, and practice, the gifts will be present when needed, but not every time they do meet.

Do not tattle and backbite. Tale bearing is a most contemptible practice, and the cause of much evil and strife. Do not get so well acquainted that you become unfriendly. Each household is entitled to reserved rights. If an offense arises, a difficulty between two or more, first follow the counsel in Matthew 18: 15, 17, then on as the law directs, until the case is settled. Settle every difficulty at home in your own branch, if possible. Do not burden the District or General Conference with home troubles, when it can be avoided.

Keep up the family altar. The spirit of worship should abide in the home. Make home as comfortable and pleasant for wife and children as you are able, and be found there the first of all places, except duty calls elsewhere.

Aid the cause by gifts and tithes, as you may be prospered; and do good everywhere, and to all, as opportunity permits. A tree is known by its fruits; and they are not true Saints who have no good works.

Do not be hasty in dealing with members. "With what measure you meet it shall be measured to you again."

Elders should push out into new fields, especially General Conference appointees, as much as practicable, and preach the word abroad. The gospel is to all men.

Be not ashamed of the faith, but speak in its favor, and defend it with evidence. Truth is in conflict with the world's errors. Do not fear, but go forward; truth will triumph, and the valiant and faithful will be crowned.

My address is Kirtland, Lake county, Ohio, and I will be pleased to hear from any who may wish to write me; will take pleasure in answering, and will visit as many in person as I may be able to. I will be in Ohio and Pennsylvania the remainder of this month, and in York State in February, if the Lord will.

May the Lord bless his people,

Very truly,

WM. H. KELLEY, Pres. of Mission.

CONFERENCE NOTICES.

The Northern Illinois District Conference will convene at Plano, Illinois, February 13th, 1886, at half-past ten o'clock. All concerned will please govern themselves accordingly. The traveling ministry are invited to attend.

JOHN S. PATTERSON, Dist. Pres.

The Philadelphia District Conference will be held in Philadelphia, on Saturday evening, and Sunday, February 27th and 28th. The branches will please send their reports to the district secretary, Hosea H. Bacon, 1209 Citron street, Philadelphia, and send a delegate if practicable. Ample accommodations have been made for visiting Saints. Those arriving before Saturday evening will go to the house of Bro. Jacob Peters, 1739 North Ninth street, and those on Sunday morning to the hall, south-west corner of Eleventh and Girard Avenue, at ten o'clock. The scattered members of the Philadelphia Branch or District will please send their address to the secretary. We expect Bro. William H. Kelley to be with us. Come and bring the Spirit with you, that we may have a good conference and devise means to further the work in this part of the Lord's harvest field. There is plenty of work here, and few laborers. Come and help us.

BORN.

BEST.—November 30th, 1885, to N. W. and A. C. Best, of San Gorgonia, Cal., a son, named Joseph Rupert, and blessed by Elder J. R. Badham.

MARCALE.—To John and Mary Martale, April 8th, 1885, a daughter, named Caroline. All doing well at present.

CARLSON.—To brother C. J. and sister Mary Carlson, a pair of twin boys, November 12th, 1885, named Willie and Bertie, and blessed by Elders W. W. Whiting and Benan Salisbury, December 20th, 1885. The boys are growing nicely.

MARRIED.

GRIEVE—KINGHORN.—December 24th, 1885, at the residence of the bride's parents, Bro. and Sr. Wm. Kinghorn, in Birkner, Illinois, Mr. Thomas Grieves and Miss Isabella Kinghorn; Elder N. N. Cooke, of St. Louis, Missouri, officiating. A bounteous feast was enjoyed by many friends, and all wished the young couple prolonged and unalloyed happiness.

MONROE—BUCKINGHAM.—January 3d, 1886, at the bride's home in Lamoni, Iowa, by Elder George Adams, Bro. Isaac Monroe and Sr. Anna Buckingham.

Father, bless these two, I pray,
Who have joined their hearts and hands
May they walk the narrow way,
And serve Thee to the end.
May their love and faith grow stronger,
As the joys and sorrows come;
Each one for the other striving
To make a happy home. E. M.

WILLAVIZE—FISHER.—At Sandwich, Illinois, December 31st, 1885, Bro. Theodore Willavize to Sr. Anna M. Fisher, Elder J. C. Foss, officiating.

DIED.

WILLIAMS.—At Union, Jackson county, West Virginia, January 1st, 1886, Lewis Lambert, son of Elder J. L. and L. F. Williams, aged 2 years, 6 months and 11 days.

"We miss thee, darling; Oh! how much
Our God alone can tell,—
He took thee from our loving arms;
He doeth all things well."

CADWELL.—At Amboy, Lee County, Illinois, January 11th, 1886, High Priest Edwin Cadwell, in the triumphant faith of the gospel of Christ. He was born July 7th, 1810, at Springfield, Mass., and shortly after lived in Hartford, Connecticut; in 1833 moved to Portage County, Ohio, where he married Miss Permelia Prichard. In March, 1840, he was baptized and confirmed by Elder Samuel Phelps; and not long after this he moved to Nauvoo, Illinois, from thence to Keokuk, Iowa, and from there to Amboy, Illinois, in 1848, where he resided until the time of his death, having attained the age of 75 years, 6 months, and 4 days. He leaves four daughters and their families, also many friends, to mourn his departure. Brother Cadwell would not follow the blind leaders of Utah, but remained in the States, heard and accepted the claims of the Reorganization in this state, and has lived an exemplary, Christian life, full of faith and good works. He was a staunch and able defender of the gospel of God's dear son, a brave and tried spirit, a kind and affectionate father, a noble and generous brother, and an undeviating friend. And while our hearts are lacerated and sorrowful, we look to Him whose voice resounded o'er the hills of Judea, saying: "He that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live. He that liveth and believeth in me shall never die," and we gather strength and consolation that our brother liveth; and that he justly claims an honored seat in the high council of the King of Kings. And while we miss his wise counsel, parental care, and fraternal love, we do not sorrow as those who have no hope, realizing as we do the time will be short until we shall meet again, to be severed no more. The funeral took place Wednesday, the 13th inst., at his late residence where has lived nearly thirty-eight years. Elder S. J. Stone preached the funeral sermon; the 15th chapter of Corinthians for his Scripture lesson touching the resurrection of the dead, and spoke words of consolation to the mourning friends. His remains were buried in Prairie Repose Cemetery. C. W. R.

A conference of L. D. Saints who identify Joseph Smith the martyr and James J. Strang to have been prophets of God, met at Atchison, Kansas, Dec. 13, 1885. The meeting was conducted after the usual forms or practices of other years—preaching by the Elders and speaking by all. The preaching was from the sayings of Jesus and the prophets, as interpreted by Joseph Smith and James J. Strang. Some $40.00 was raised to be used in getting hymn books and other church purposes.

The following resolutions were passed unanimously, both male and female voting:—

1 Resolved: That we hold Joseph Smith the martyr to have been called of God and ordained by angels a prophet, seer, revelator, and translator.

2nd Resolved: That Joseph the martyr appointed James J. Strang on the 18th of June, '44, to be his successor in the presidency of the church.

3 Resolved: That angels did ordain and anoint with oil, the same day and hour in the day that Joseph was taken, James J. Strang, to be the prophet, seer, and revelator to the church.

4th Resolved: That James J. Strang did by urim and thummim translate from the plates that Joseph was not allowed to unseal—the book of the law of the Lord, a work of 336 pages.

5 Resolved: That we uphold Joseph Smith, the son of the martyr, in the priesthood and calling, as was Hyrum Smith.

6th Resolved: We uphold by our faith and prayers Bro. L. D. Hickey in the priesthood conferred upon him by the prophet James J. Strang, July 8th, 1850.

The conference adjourned Dec. 14th, '85, to meet April 6, '86, at Atchison, Kan.

It was the wishes of the Saints that I send or hand these minutes to the Editors of the Herald for publication. L. D. HICKEY.

In the ancient graves in Tennessee are found human skulls that are some inches larger than any modern human head. Within the last forty years there has been a very marked diminution in the size of heads in Philadelphia. Old and experienced hatters in Philadelphia and New York, says the Ledger, will corroborate this statement. Somebody writes to an exchange to ask: "Is there a similar change taking place elsewhere, and what will be the result?"

SEE what vitality the Gospel has. Plunge her under the wave, and she rises the purer for her washing; thrust her into the fire, and she comes out the more bright for her burning; cut her in sunder, and each piece shall make another church; behead her, and, like the hydra of old, she shall have a hundred heads for every one you cut away. She can not die; she must live; for she has the power of God with her.—Spurgeon.

JOSEPH SMITH . . . . . EDITOR.
W. W. BLAIR . . . . . ASSOCIATE EDITOR.

Lamoni, Iowa, February 6, 1886.

"STIRRING TIMES"

Not long ago we heard an active clergyman of the Presbyterian church make a remark that struck us with great force: "Bro. Smith, these are stirring times; times in which it is a blessed thing to be permitted to live. It is a glorious thing to live in such times as these and be permitted to take a part in the work that is being done." His face was all aglow with enthusiasm, and suppressed earnestness.

We coincided with the sentiment he expressed, but of course from our own view of the work being done. We felt that to aid in any degree to the object of enlightening the world and breaking the bands of dark superstition and error, was indeed to live in a momentous age. And to be permitted to realize how fully the Divine hand had contributed the means by which such work of enlightenment could be carried on was indeed glorious.

But our Presbyterian brother meant more than this, or he meant to convey quite a different idea from this. He meant that the times were freighted with grave and great questions. He said that the Mormon religion whether true or false, had forced the question of religion into greater prominence in religious circles of thought than it had occupied since the early days of the reformation. The question of what was and what was not permissible in religion had come to stay until finally settled. The gravity of the issue was not to be set aside, and men who lived within the arena where the events which gave rise to the issue were transpiring were fortunate men. It is an age of thought and action. There could be no doubtful, or neutral ground—there was no room for dead men in the fight. Live men only could stand.

He meant that men of action, men who dare to think and to do could be of any value in the pending conflict; and he deemed it a happy thing for a man to live in an age where he could work. As we looked at him, and saw the fire of conviction and resolve glowing in his countenance, we thought that we should like to see the evidences of a similar enthusiasm elsewhere. Here was a man standing merely upon the outside of an arena where thoughts of no pigmy race were contending for supremacy, both claiming the right of truth, who felt the wind of battle upon his face as he regarded the strife, but who could not enter fully into the din of conflict because of self-imposed trammels, who could realize the privilege and ability to enter in and achieve as a glorious thing.

The privilege to achieve is a wonderful one, a God given boon. How forcibly has Christ made this to appear in the revelation in which he says: "It is given to man of himself to bring to pass much righteousness; for the power is in him." He who appreciates this and will neither work himself nor sacrifice that others may work, is in a fair way to die spiritually, if he is not already dead.

In the letter department will be found a good spirited and interesting letter from Elder J. C. Clapp, son of Benjamin Clapp, one of the active and prominent Elders in the days of Joseph the Seer. This son perceives clearly that the disappointments and much of the sufferings which have overtaken the Saints have been because they have not read and observed the written law of God to the church as contained in the Doctrine and Covenants of the church. While they professed to believe the sacred books of the church, they treated their teachings with indifference, neglect, and outright disobedience.

When the Saints learn to read and then to carefully heed God's written word given for their instruction and government, they will turn their faces from the darkness and confusion of error, and their feet will tread securely the pathway of "pleasantness and peace." Many need living, practical faith in God's revealed word—all of it—for "man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word which proceedeth out of the mouth of God." Wicked Herod exhibited more faith in the revelations of God, and showed better practical sense in respect to its guidings, than has many who profess to be Saints. When the wise men came to inquire of him where they could find "he that is born King of the Jews," he at once consulted the revelations of God found in the hands of "the chief priests and scribes," and they, by the prophecy of Micah, who prophesied over seven hundred years before, pointed out the exact place from whence the "ruler in Israel" should come.

If Latter Day Saints would lay aside the pretensions of men and consult God's revealed word, they might know the source ordained of God, from whence the successor of the Seer must come, and also the means appointed of heaven by which unity of faith, concert of action, and harmony in doctrine and church-work might be secured and maintained.

The voice of God to the wandering Saints to-day is "Return unto me, and I will return unto you, saith the Lord the Lord of hosts." "Remember from whence thou art fallen, and repent, and do the first works."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Bro. J. W. Gillen writes from Valentine, Mo., the 18th inst., that he is preaching a series of discourses at that place, and has fair treatment and good attention to his sermons by both those out of, and those within the church. He says: "I think Missouri is redeeming herself in this respect."

Bro. Wm. Foster, of Atlas, Illinois, writes us of late that some of the Saints in that region are strong and active in the faith, but that some are in a measure upon the background, and that they have but little preaching, especially of late, as Elder J. Goodale has been sick. They wish some of the Elders to come there and preach.

Bro. N. P. Clawson speaks highly of the comfort and instruction derived from the HERALD.

Please don't forget to send the dollar with your marriage notices. If any are too poor to pay that amount, then send along the notice and it will be inserted just the same.

A GREAT deal of trouble would be avoided in branches if every member would stop to think long enough to be as subject to law, as he is anxious others should be. It is one thing to honor the law by bringing others to answer to the tribunal for breaking the law, and it is another thing to be subject to the law ourselves. The Savior at one time seemed to think that the executors of the law should themselves be free from blame. "Let him that is without sin, first cast a stone." Apparently, there was in his mind at the time of the saying a very characteristic difference between the law and the manner of its enforcement. It may be that he knew the parties to the case on both sides; and intended only to teach would-be executors of the law the salutary lesson that those who are over zealous for the law, should remember that he who breaks the law in one particular is guilty of all; that is, that the law was broken no matter what provision of it was violated. It may be also that the woman was a sinner because of her surroundings, unconscious of sinful intention; this can not be said of those who were so anxious to punish her, for they were conscious of guilt though not accused.

We sometimes hear of men, Saints, who under the plea that the Elders are to see that the "law is kept," urge that offenders shall be prosecuted and punished that the law may be honored. The Savior did not seem to so think, for when the accusers vanished, he made no charge of crime, only "Go thy way and sin more." If he could afford to forgive, why can not we.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Brother Sheba Bell, of Hutchinson, McLeod county, Minnesota, writes as follows:

"We would like very much to have an Elder come up here and preach for us, as there are none of our Church people living near here, and we have no preaching. We will be glad to make a home for one or more as long as they will stay, and help them to places of preaching. We think much good might be done here, as the people have never heard the gospel preached. We feel very lonely here among strangers, but have a good home and pleasant neighborhood. We live three miles north-east of Hutchinson."

Bro. Wm. R. Stauts, of Elko, Nevada, writes the 14th instant:

"As the Church papers are the only preachers we have, we wish them continued, for we can not get along without them. They are anxiously looked for every Sunday morning, and read with interest. Each one grows more interesting."

Bro. Robert Brown of St Marys, Ontario, says in a letter of the 16th inst:

"I am now three years in this place, bought a church and lot—the building is 35 by 40 feet; also built a brick parsonage on the same ground, and it is all paid for. Seventeen have been baptized here, seven of them last fall. Four more are expected to-morrow, and still more are expected. We had our branch organized lately, with an Elder, Priest, Teacher, and Deacon. To God we give all the glory."

Bro. Hartman Nesser, of Stewartville, Mo., says:

"I received a letter from Switzerland in October last, from my relatives, asking why President Smith does not send missionaries there. These have heard the word preached by Elder J. L. Bear."

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Ques.—When did the church bring forth the "Man-child, who was to rule all nations?" Rev. 12: 2-17.

Ans. We understand the "man-child" to represent the priestly, kingly authority, (see 1 Pet. 2: 5, 9; Ex. 19: 5, 6; Rev. 1: 6; 5: 10), which always is found in God's organized church on the earth; and we understand this authority was taken from the church, because of its total apostasy as an organization, about A. D. 570, or at least near the close of the sixth century after Christ. Any one who will take time and carefully read the history of Rome and the nations adjacent, in connection with church history, will find that, about the time above indicated, the church had lost all that distinguished it as "the body of Christ," had not only gone "into the wilderness," but soon after that time had been placed "upon a scarlet colored beast"—Pagan Rome—(Rev. 17: 3), and was sustained and directly supported by it thenceforward. We look to see, at an early day, many of the mysteries embraced in the Revelations of St. John clearly explained, for the promise to us is as follows:

"Come unto me, O ye Gentiles, and I will shew unto you the greater things, the knowledge which is hid up because of unbelief. Come unto me, O ye house of Israel, and it shall be made manifest unto you how great things the Father hath laid up for you, from the foundation of the world; and it hath not come unto you, because of unbelief. Behold, when ye shall rend that veil of unbelief which doth cause you to remain in your awful state of wickedness and hardness of heart, and blindness of mind, then shall the great and marvelous things which have been hid up from the foundation of the world from you; yea, when ye shall call upon the Father in my name, with a broken heart and a contrite spirit, then shall ye know that the Father hath remembered the covenant which he made unto your fathers, O house of Israel; and then shall my revelations which I have caused to be written by my servant John, be unfolded in the eyes of all the people. Remember, when ye see these things, ye shall know that the time is at hand that they shall be made manifest in very deed; therefore, when ye shall receive this record, ye may know that the work of the Father has commenced upon all the face of the land. Therefore, repent all ye ends of the earth, and come unto me, and believe in my gospel, and be baptized in my name; for he that believeth, and is baptized, shall be saved; but he that believeth not, shall be damned; and signs shall follow them that believe in my name. And blessed is he that is found faithful unto my name, at the last day, for he shall be lifted up to dwell in the kingdom prepared for him from the foundation of the world. And behold, it is I that hath spoken it. Amen."—Ether 1: 12.

Until this prophecy is fulfilled we should be careful about building theories upon the very numerous and widely various interpretations of the obscure portions of the Revelations of Saint John.

Q.—In a fully organized branch, with presiding Elder, Priest, Teacher and Deacon, in the absence of the Teacher, whose right and duty is it to officiate in his stead?

A.—If presiding Elder, Priest and Teacher are absent, then it is the Deacon's prerogative and duty to preside. In case the branch has chosen more than one Priest, or Teacher, then the assistant Priest, or Teacher should preside before the Deacon.

Q.—Will all men, including the Saints, appear at the judgment seat of Christ (or God) to be judged according to their works?

A.—Yes. "God will judge the righteous and the wicked."—Eccl. 3: 17. "God shall judge the secrets of men by Jesus Christ." Rom. 2: 16. "Who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom." 2 Tim. 4: 1. "God the Judge of all." Heb. 12: 23. "For God shall bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing, whether it be good, or whether it be evil." Eccl. 12: 14. "For we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ; that every one may receive the things done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad." 2 Cor. 5: 10. "And, behold, I come quickly; and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his works shall be." Rev. 22: 12. For out of the books which shall be written, I will judge the world; every man according to their works, according to that which is written." Book of Mormon, 2 Nephi 12: 8. "The Lord shall come to recompense unto every man according to his work." Doc. Cov. 1: 2. "I have accomplished and finished the will of him whose I am, even the Father, concerning me; having done this, that I might subdue all things unto myself; retaining all power, even to the destroying of Satan and his works at the end of the world and the last great day of judgment which I shall pass upon the inhabitants thereof, judging every man according to his works, and the deeds which he hath done." Doc. Cov. 18: 1. These quotations from the three sacred books of the Church, agree perfectly, and should be conclusive upon the point.

Q.—Are answers to questions, given by the editors of the HERALD, to be considered as reflecting the position of the Church upon points of doctrine and polity?

A.—Yes; when supported by the sacred books and the conference rulings of the Church; but otherwise they should be received as only the opinions of the editors.

Q.—Is an Elder justified in teaching publicly or privately his views in contradiction to answers thus given?

A.—The church does not authorize the Elders, nor any of its ministry, to teach their personal views, nor apply their private interpretations. The authority of the church must be honored by its members, including its ministry. "But if he neglect to hear the church, let him be," &c. Matt. 18: 17. See also Acts 15: 22, 23, "Then it pleased the apostles and elders, with the whole church." * * * "The apostles and elders and brethren send greeting." This was authoritative in deciding the doctrine and polity of the church, and personal views had to yield to the church. The Nephites were commanded to submit to "the voice of the people." Mosiah 13: 4; also Alma 8: 4. "All things shall be done by common consent in the church." Doc. Cov. 25: 1; "All things must be done in order, and by common consent, in the church." Doc. Cov. 27: 4. All these texts teach that the members and ministry must hear and obey the voice of the body on all matters upon which it decides. This means unity and good government. But when the individual teaches his private views in conflict with the voice of the church, that means division, contention and strife, and tends to anarchy and ruin. If persons have views differing with the church, they should do themselves and the church the justice, at least, to say that such are purely personal with them. When, therefore, the editors answers are in keeping with the accepted authorities, standards, and rulings of the church, no minister or member is justified in teaching publicly or privately their personal views in contradistinction thereto. The accepted law of the Lord is vastly superior to the opinions of the individual. The voice of the "body of Christ"—the church—is greater than that of any one person, or even of many. No faithful agent of a business firm would do anything against its interest, but would act only as authorized. No good government will suffer its officers to disrespect, dishonor, and resist its laws and appointments, but will require submission thereto, irrespective of person's private opinions. All persons in authority should honestly uphold the body that gives and sustains such authority and "Be subject to the powers that be."

The questions sent to the HERALD for answers are sent with the idea that the Editors are as well informed in regard to what the doctrines and theories of the church are as any other officers of the church, and are therefore qualified to answer. Besides this, the present Editors are among the leading authorities of the church and are authorized by the body as such leading men to speak, or write in the name of the church in their position, subject to answer to the body for their expressed views and conduct. If they are thought worthy to be questioned, they should be honored in their answers. They make no claim to infallibility, however.

We object to being asked questions the answers to which are intended to be used by the questioners for the purposes of controversy, mastery or browbeating others; and shall answer none of the sort if we discover such intent.

Q.—Was John the Baptist baptized? If so, by whom? Please point out the passage.

A.—The inference is that he was. But by whom, when, or where, is not certainly known. It is known, however, that baptism as an ordinance was long and well known before and during John's lifetime. But so far as the Christian economy is concerned it does not matter whether it be certainly known that John was baptized. He was sent of God and called the Baptist.

WE call attention to the following from the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railway:

In accordance with the custom of the day, the BURLINGTON ROUTE is now running California Excursions from the Missouri River in connection with the Denver & Rio Grande, Central, and Southern Pacific Railroads, connecting at Omaha and Pacific Junction with regular trains from Chicago, Peoria, St. Louis and other Eastern points. Both first class and cheap rate Excursions are run, leaving the Missouri River on the following dates:

First Class—Feb. 3d and 17th, to Los Angeles; March 3d, to San Francisco.

Low priced—To all California emigrant points, on Wednesdays of every week until June 30th inclusive.

THE following letters from Bro. Philander A. Page and his father Hiram Page, will explain themselves. We give them place gladly.

RICHMOND, Ray Co., Mo.,

Jan'y 20th, 1886.

Bro. Joseph Smith: I send with this a copy of a letter written by my father to Dr. Warren Cowdery, a brother of uncle Oliver Cowdery, concerning his death and sickness; also answering some questions that Warren Cowdery asked by letter. Father most always kept a copy of this kind of letters when he wrote to any one, and mother gave me a number of his old papers. This copy I found amongst them. Different parties had been making inquiry concerning Uncle Oliver's dying testimony. It seems the devil will keep up his lying, thinking he can weaken some in the faith of the Book of Mormon, and saying that the witnesses denied their testimony before they died. I bear my testimony that I was with three of the eight witnesses to the Book of Mormon in their last sickness, and they held firm to their testimony. If you think it would do good to publish the letter concerning Uncle Oliver, you may. Yours in the hope of a glorious resurrection,

PHILANDER A. PAGE.

March 20th, 1850.

Dr. Warren Cowdery; Sir: In compliance with a request made by your brother Oliver, and from you, feeling it my duty both to the dead and the living, I address you upon a subject which is solemn, yet carries with it a consolation. Although we have been called upon to mourn we are not left to despair. We have been called upon to inter his remains in the silent tomb where it will not be seen any more until the morning of the resurrection, yet the principles which he avowed deserve to be written in letters of gold, never to be obliterated.

I will give you a description of his illness and death. On the 22d of January, 1849, brother Oliver came to Richmond. The weather was severe and he caught a bad cold, which gave rise to a tight, dry cough. When warm weather came on, he had better health until the first of August when he was attacked with a fever; after the fever left, the chills came on; after this his health was on the decline. In December he was attacked with inflammation of the throat. Some time in February 1850, the inflammation settled in his stomach attended by a severe cough, which wore him down; and on the 3d day of March, 1850, we had to part with him. But he gave evidence of his acceptance with God, declaring that he knew his sins were forgiven, and that he had become sanctified. I held him up till he could take the parting hand with all present; then he said to me, "Lay me down, and let me sleep in the arms of Jesus."

During his sickness his mind was strong; although his bodily strength failed, his mind was clear and active.

QUESTIONS.—Did he die holding to his former testimony as he taught it, or did he die as some of the sectarians without any special faith in any church? Did he express any opinion about Strang and his followers, or Brewster and his followers, or the Twelve-ites, or any others that pretend to embrace the Mormon faith? He did frequently express his opinion of those different factions pretending to hold the authority of the primitive Church of Christ, who do not cleave to the standard of truth. Of those he said they are either deceivers, or deceived; but he said there are many among them who are honest and will receive the truth when they hear it; and any organization that does not agree with the order laid down in the Bible and Book of Mormon in the gospel dispensation, is to be rejected; knowing that for us to support such errors would be opposing the order of God, and would be worshipping the man of sin. Among his last words, was to reaffirm his testimony to the Book of Mormon.

Your brother in Christ,

HIRAM PAGE.

"All of good the past hath had Remains to make our own time glad,—
Our common daily life divine
And every land a Palestine."

"I KNOW HIM THAT HE WILL COMMAND
HIS CHILDREN AND HIS HOUSEHOLD
AFTER HIM."

THE remarkable vigor and vitality of the Jewish race, their power of adaptation to every climate, and of bearing up under the most oppressive and disadvantageous circumstances, have been so marked as to attract the attention of thinking minds throughout the entire world, and, in the case of France, the attention of the government to such an extent, that two commissions of inquiry have been instituted, "On the causes of the health and longevity of the Jewish race."

The conclusion to which both of these commissions came, or the causes to which they attributed the facts, were: "Greater temperance, purer morals; but especially, a better regulated family life."

Let us now examine the word of God, and see how far these modern wise men were from the truth. God, in dealing with the human family, has always chosen, not only his agents, but the means, through which or by which his agents should be enabled to accomplish his work. And just here we wish to add that they never failed, never yet turned back defeated, when they worked in harmony with God's ordained plan.

God established a covenant with Abraham, and said unto him: "And I will make thee exceeding fruitful, and will make nations of thee, and kings shall come out of thee." Again, he said, "In blessing I will bless thee, and in multiplying I will multiply thy seed as the stars of the heavens, and as the sand which is upon the sea shore; and thy seed shall possess the gate of his enemies."

How unequalled and alone in its grandeur, stands this promise, when we look at it in the light of its complete fulfillment. We may safely say that no man was ever more honored, more beloved of God, than Abraham; and no man ever returned this love with purer affection, or the trust God reposed in him with greater fidelity. We hear him spoken of as the "father of the faithful," and truly he was. But connected with this covenant stands one grand underlying truth, one bulwark of safety, which stands a sure pledge for its fulfillment, and the blessing which its fulfillment was to bring, and has brought upon all mankind.

Let us suppose that this promise of multiplying the seed of Abraham "As the stars of the heaven and as the sand which is upon the sea shore," had been literally fulfilled, and there had been turned loose upon the world, this host of men and women, possessing characters unworthy of example, and morals so debased as to blast and blight all with whom they came in contact. Small need would there have been, under circumstances like these, for any nation or individual to have instituted inquiries into the cause of their health and longevity; but rather might they wish that the angel who stayed the hand of Abraham when it was raised to slay Isaac, had been delayed upon his mission until too late to arrest the blow.

God has in all ages, in all dispensations, chosen His agents, for the accomplishment of His work. For Abraham there was a certain work to do, and that it might be done, and well done, God chose him because he possessed the necessary qualifications within himself, to be God's instrument in doing the work.

The gospel had been preached unto man, and he had rejected it. The world was in its infancy, and they rebelled against the authority of God, and in order that there might be a hope for them in the future, God saw fit to institute other means for the time being. He chose a family, of whom Abraham stood at the head, and this is the reason He himself gives for His choice.

"And the Lord said, Shall I hide from Abraham that thing which I do; seeing that Abraham shall surely become a great and mighty nation, and all the nations of the earth shall be blessed in him? For I know him, that he will command his children and his household after him, and they shall keep the way of the Lord, to do justice and judgment; that the Lord may bring upon Abraham that which he hath spoken of Him." Gen. 18: 17, 19.

Nearly four thousand years have passed since that day. The children of Abraham have "been scattered and peeled." Driven from land to land, spoiled and robbed upon every hand, have been a hiss and a bye word in all nations; but despite all this, like an echo thrown back from the midst of the blazing light of this nineteenth century, comes this admission from a nation which has long been considered the very acme of all that is cultured and refined, "Greater temperance, purer morals, a better regulated family life."

"I know him, said God, that HE WILL command his children and his household after him."

Abraham was the agent God chose as the one to begin the great work He had in view, and he chose him because He knew that he possessed qualities requisite for the carrying out of that work. The foundation was sure, and to-day God stands justified in His choice, wherever a Jew is known, or an Israelite is to be found. Abraham was the agent, and his seed the stock upon which the experiment (if experiment we may call it) was to be tried. Let us now examine the means by which God worked to accomplish His purpose.

They went down into Egypt, when Joseph sent for them, seventy in number. There they increased in numbers to such an extent that the king of Egypt, with his counsellors feared that in case of war they would become dangerous to the government, so they not only oppressed them, but appointed that all male infants should be slain at their birth. In the fourth generation, God had said to Abraham, "Thou shalt come hither again."

Four hundred and twenty years God was waiting for the iniquity of the Amorites to be full. They were upon the land of promise, and when they should have filled up their cup, it was written upon the wall they must give place for a better people. From the banks of the Nile, from its rich and fertile valleys, was going up to heaven upon every wave of air, the sighings and groanings of a nation of slaves. Robbed of their children, cruelly beaten by task masters, life became a burden too heavy to endure. God heard their cry, and at the appointed time sent them deliverance. They came up out of Egypt, six hundred and three thousand and five hundred and fifty able men over twenty years of age, not counting the Levites, women, nor any under twenty years old, whether male or female. Truly here was a host descended from the loins of Abraham. No doubt in regard to the promise of "As the stars of heaven—as the sand on the sea shore;" but what of the other—the far more important clause. If the blessing had only been of multiplying, then would Isaac, at that time the only legitimate child of Abraham, have had no preference over Ishmael; for the Lord said, "And as for Ishmael, I have heard thee: Behold, I have blessed him, and will make him fruitful, and will multiply him exceedingly; twelve princes shall he beget, and I will make of him a great nation. But my covenant will I establish with Isaac." Doubtless through Christ was to come the great blessing promised; but through the long stretch of years yet to intervene, who was to watch over and guard the honor, purity and chastity of his earthly ancestry. How were this host of people—this nation of slaves, coming forth from centuries of contact with a nation of the most corrupt morals and worst forms of idolatry, how were they to be fitted for the work before them?

Doubtless Moses was, in many an hour of discouragement, ready to sink under his burden. "As for this people, they are too much for me," seems upon one occasion to have been fairly wrung from his lips; but the blood of Abraham flowed in their veins, and of Abraham God had said, "I know him that he will command his children and his household after him."

Because of unbelief and of hardness of heart, not one of the host who were numbered at their going out of Egypt,* was permitted to enter into the promised land, but during this time of wandering God threw around the altar of home, those safeguards and bulwarks of protection, which will never be thrown down, and will mark the superiority of the laws of Moses over all laws ever enacted by the wisest law-givers of other nations. From amid the thunders of Sinai came its first annunciation.

"Honor thy father and thy mother, that thy days may be long upon the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee."

Here God places the mother, side by side with the father, as an object of honor and veneration, and further on makes provision for the enforcement of this command. The father to sustain the mother, and both to be sustained by the law, in their family government. In this respect, perhaps more widely than in any other social form, they differed from all other nations of antiquity. Among the Greeks the wife and mother was merely an appendage, and never associated publicly with her husband as an equal. In imperial Rome the father held the sole power of life and death over his wife and children; but among the Jews the wife was the co-equal queen of home, and equally honored and obeyed with her husband. And again the command is reiterated, placing the mother first in order, "Ye shall fear every man his MOTHER, and his father."—Lev. 19: 3.

Time would fail us, nor is it necessary, to enumerate the various times and circumstances in which places of honor were bestowed upon women, and noble and heroic actions performed by them. We know of no office, except the priestly office, in which she was not allowed to officiate. At another time we may take up some of the characters that have figured in Bible history with pleasure and we trust with profit, but for the present enough has been said.

The object of this introductory article is, or should be, self-evident.

First, God chose Abraham, because He knew that he would "command his children, and his household after him." If this was the cause, (and at least it was one cause), of his being chosen, then it follows that it was a very important part of his work. Second, When God gave laws to his people, the laws upon family government were not only very prominent, oft reiterated and strict, but it was made obligatory upon parents to see that they were well instructed in these laws.

"And thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and shall talk of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up."

"Think not to say unto yourselves, 'we have Abraham unto our father,' for I say unto you that God is able of these stones to raise up children unto Abraham."

Beloved Sisters, if we have been grafted into the true olive tree, and partake of the fatness of the root, let this one thing sink deep into our hearts. The hope of the church, the hope of the world, finds its surest pledge, its brightest promise, in the character of our homes, in the altars we there erect, the lessons we there teach, and the manner in which we train up our children to go forth and do battle for truth and right. In view of facts like these, how much importance we should attach to every thing calculated in its nature to advance this work, to aid us in coming up to the standard God requires.

May God enable each mother in the church to realize the importance attaching to them as such, and especially when we remember that we live in a day when children were to be just the opposite of what God requires them to be.

We trust that before another issue of the Herald, our hands will be overflowing with letters, selections, suggestions, etc.

Correspondence.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, Ind., Jan'y 20th.

Dear Herald:—I rode sixteen miles last night to hear Miss Kate Field lecture on the Mormon problem, or as announced, "The Mormon Monster." I was disappointed. The language, diction, and manner were faultless: but the lecture seemed to me to be the product of a soured, New England old Maid. She could find nothing redeeming in Mormonism. Is it not strange—passing strange—that all who attempt to speak upon that subject to tickle Gentile ears can not find a good word for the poor Mormon? Miss Field's lecture was the old thread-bare, stereotyped "Joe Smith" aspiring to become a king, and actually to the Presidency of the United States. And by the way, if he did, he was not the first prophet that aspired to such positions. Samuel ruled Israel, and Moses led them as a king, (Deut. 33:5). Yes, and even if he was a general, we read of general Joshua commanding the armies of the Lord,—all these men ruled well. Here are precedents. Miss Field forgot to mention them. Wherein then was Joseph's sin in allowing his name as an American citizen to go before the nation? The Mountain Meadow Massacre was dished up in all its horrors; but she was silent as the grave about Haun's Mill, and the bones of pure, innocent women and children bleaching on the plains, being driven from their comfortable homes in Nauvoo "the beautiful," to starve and die.

It makes a great difference whose ox is being gored. The Utah harems came in for a goodly share of spicy sarcasm. Brigham's policy, John Taylor's lying about polygamy, in France, in 1850; blood atonement; the Endowment House oaths, grips, and robes. In fact, the whole lecture was after the Ann Eliza-Dee-Young order.

I believe I could see the prime object of the lecture was to give her forthcoming book a first-class advertisement. She, however, did manage to say that the "Josephites" were tolerably white goodey goody's; that the president of the Josephite Church was a pretty fair sort of a man; that we might safely be tolerated among white people.

In my opinion she is a much over-rated woman. All the thought she presented that I could see worthy of a moment's consideration, was her advocacy of a United States' marriage law. I do not know whether that is original with her or not. This would be good for Gentile and Mormon alike. I had advocated this myself long before I heard Miss Field.

Oh! how I longed in my heart for the privilege of following her, and showing to that splendid audience the glories, beauties, and divinity of the latter day work; and that it would redeem even Kate Field, and save her from the odium of besmearing an already filthy enough system—for the purpose of money-making, and money-making alone. I am now satisfied Miss Field never would have been a Mary or Martha had she lived in Palestine 1880 years ago. She would have looked at in the light of "Will it pay?" Concluding that the "bread and butter" side would be to tickle the Pharisaical ear, rather than be associated with the humble carpenter of Nazareth.

If I meet her on the trains we will have a time.

Yours Truly,

J. A. ROBINSON.

Bro. Blair:—The Sunday before Christmas I preached twice at Beaver Meadows, twenty-five miles above Mobile. Then I went to my home, Lamberta, Ala., and remained about ten days, returning to this state to work for the support of my family, and to preach the word. I shall probably make some new openings. Brethren, pray for me and the Saints in the south.

Your brother in Christ,

Bro. Blair:—We have been favored with the labors of Bro. E. L. Kelley, and have been greatly benefitted by his instructions on the law of tithing, and hope the Saints will all observe the Same. I wish to hereby notify all solicitors in this District to send their reports to me by the 20th of February next.

Dear Herald: We have had quite a storm in which a number of persons perished. It was a sad affair. The general opinion is that it was not so much the storm at fault as it was the country's being so thinly settled, and no land marks to go by. The same thing is apt to occur in any new country. For the benefit of those who have written for information, I would like to state that I cannot make plain to those who have been born and raised in a settled country, the particulars of life on the border. They inquire what building material is worth, and if stone, brick, or lumber is used most. As I have stated before, the country is very new and the houses are made mostly of sod. Men with money build sod houses, which will no doubt be replaced with frame houses in a very short time. Lumber is high, but it is only a question of time when it will be cheaper. The average depth of the soil is three or four feet.

The country has some disadvantages. Water is a little hard to get, we have to dig two hundred feet, but we have a never-failing well. The water is very pure, soft, and good. Good ash wood is three dollars per cord in timber. Coal is from $7 to $9 per ton. Timber being scarce cuts no figure in the case, for in settled communities the prairie farms are the most valuable. There is vacant land here yet, and I think there will be till the emigration west commences in the spring, which is generally when the grass is getting good. Any one can obtain a plot of the vacant land by writing to Oberlin, Kansas, to some land office, for about twenty-five cents. I think there is more vacant land in Sherman County than in this county. Come in the spring when the birds sing to make the way merry. Bring a good supply of corn, millet, and rye. Turn over the sod and scatter it abroad. When this you have done the battle you have won, and gain for yourself a good western home.

Dear Herald:—As I think there can not be too much said on the subject of tithing, if what we say is in keeping with the law, a few thoughts from me again may not be out of order. In the first place, I find that many in this Church as well as in the days of the first Seer, who seem not to understand the law alike. Therefore the need of searching the law of giving, as well as the history on this subject, that we may see eye to eye. I understand the law to be part of the gospel, and in this many in the Church may differ with me. We will take the law of giving in its order, and will give the testimony of some witnesses which we deem important. The law as we find it in the Book of Covenants, page 143, reads: "And behold thou wilt remember thy poor, and consecrate of thy properties for their support." The next paragraph speaks of a second consecration (undoubtedly from the same individuals) and says, "And for the purchasing of lands for the public benefit of the Church, and building houses of worship." In section 51:1, it says that if such person "shall transgress, and is not accounted worthy to belong to the Church, he shall have power to claim that portion which he has consecrated to the Bishop." Paragraph five says, "Behold, this shall be an example unto my servant Edward Partridge, in other places, in all churches. And whoso is found a faithful, a just and wise steward, shall enter into the joy of his Lord." In section 58:7 we read, "It is wisdom in me that my servant Martin Harris should be an example unto the church, in laying his moneys before the Bishop of the Church." Section 64:5 reads, "Behold, now it is called to-day [until the coming of the Son of Man], and verily it is a day of sacrifice and tithing of my people." Section 70:3 reads, "Nevertheless, in your temporal things you shall be equal, and this not grudgingly." Section 72:3 reads, "For according to the law every man that cometh up to Zion must lay all things before the Bishop in Zion." Now, I wish you to remember that these revelations were all given in the year 1831.

In section 87:1, we read "For if ye are not equal in earthly things, ye can not be equal in obtaining heavenly things." Section 82:2 reads, "All children have claim on their parents for their maintenance until they are of age; and after that, they have claims on the church; or, in other words, upon the Lord's storehouse, if their parents have not wherewith to give them an inheritance." This ends the year 1832. Now for the year 1833, Section 94:3 reads—"Verily I say unto you, that it is my will that an house should be built unto me in the land of Zion, like unto the pattern I have given you; yea, let it be built speedily by the tithing of my people." In section 101:2,—"If any man shall take of the abundance I have made, and impart not their portion according to the law of my gospel unto the poor and needy, he shall, with the wicked lift up his eyes in hell, being in torment." This ends 1833.

Section 106 was given in answer to a question and reads, "And after that, those who have thus been tithed shall pay one tenth of their interest annually; and this shall be a standing law unto them forever." And I discover that the land is sanctified by this law. Now for 1841, section 107: 8, "I therefore say unto you, I seal upon his head the office of a Bishopric, like unto my servant Edward Partridge, that he may receive the consecrations of mine house."

Now for a little comment on the revelations I have produced. In the first place the teachings in the law of 1841, the first on the list, which law must govern the church till Christ comes, I find a certain portion is required of the people, and after this, if they increase, they are to consecrate a second time, an annual payment undoubtedly; and all this is for the poor and needy, and for houses of worship, etc. And as we have already seen that the "temple in Zion" is to be built by the tithing of God's people, I am led to believe there is no difference between consecration and tithing, because the Lord calls this giving tithing, and also consecration; and either are for the poor, or for houses of worship.

I have quoted section 51: 1, to show that only a portion was consecrated, not all. On the next page we are told what the Bishop should do in churches, that is take their portion due, and look after the poor; and that all things must be made sure according to the laws of the land. When we get our receipts from the Bishop all things are made sure, and we can not have any claim on that portion we have deeded to him, and that we shall enter into rest with those that have done likewise, and be made equal. In section 68: 7, we have an example in Martin Harris laying his money before the Bishop, but we do not find how much it was. I once asked W. E. Lellin if he knew how much Martin Harris paid then, and he said he gave one-tenth of all he had. That was in the year 1833. I asked him if he was an eye witness to that, and he said he was not, but Bishop Partridge told him so. And he said the Bishop never took nor required any more of the people than a tenth. After that I thought if this was true, it was good testimony on tithing, that God's people should tithe themselves as did Martin.

Section 64: 5 teaches that those who are tithed shall not be burned at the coming of Christ. Coming "up to Zion" and laying all before the Bishop "in Zion," we think needs a little comment. Now, if what we have quoted signifies a "portion" that we are to lay before the Bishop, we don't want to forget that, in that sense we have complied by laying down all the law now requires of us. But if we give only a part of our tenth, we have not come up to the example of Martin Harris. Therefore, we say, that in laying all before the Bishop is all the law requires. Section 77: 1, commands those in the "Order of Enoch" to be equal in temporal things, in order to be equal in spiritual things.

Now all this is complying with the law of tithing, makes equal, and fits us all for having equal claims on the Lord's storehouse. What it did for Abraham for spiritual blessings, it will do for us. And when we receive spiritual and temporal blessings by this compliance with the law, it will make us all equal. Section 82: 1 shows that when we receive our inheritance, we may increase so as to be able to give our children an inheritance. Some have supposed that when we receive our inheritance, we give all and keep giving all over and above our living. If this were the case we never would have anything to buy our children an inheritance. But when we examine the law we see we may lay up treasures while complying with the law. Section 94: 3 says a house is to be built in Zion; and we read it is to be built by the tithing of God's people. This was given in 1833. No one will say that this is not a house of worship. And have we not read in the law of 1831, that consecrations were for "houses of worship?" And here the Lord says this house "in Zion" shall be built by tithing. I only refer to this to show you "the law of giving" is one and harmonious. Section 101: 2, warns us thus: "If any man will take of the abundance I have made, and impart not his portion to the poor and needy," and that according to the gospel, "he shall lift up his eyes in hell."

What an awful sentence; but it is no more so than, "The summer is past, and the harvest is ended, and my soul not saved." Here again we find the words,—"Impart not his portion"—not all, as some would say. Section 106 gave the Saints to understand what they should have understood before. The question could not have been asked to satisfy the Bishop, for he was governed by the pattern, "one tenth of all." Here let me say that when my father went up to Missouri in 1836, he turned over a tenth to the Bishop. This shows plainly he understood it as the "surplus." Lyman Wight, father Morley, and a few others believed in "in things common," and contended that the church should "lay all things at the apostles' feet"—even to a jack-knife. Was it not because of this misunderstanding of the law that the question in section 106 was asked? I think so. In answering this question the Lord gives us to understand that "the beginning" of our tithing is the surplus. Now remember the pattern set by Martin Harris, (for this was to govern the church), one-tenth of all. Webster defines the word surplus as meaning that any property over what is needed, or wanted, is a surplus. In this we should beware lest we come on the same ground with old Israel who made "the table of the Lord contemptible." Brethren, this will not do.

The present Bishop with his counselors has said, "If you have not paid any tithing, one-tenth is required." This is the beginning of tithing. And the first Bishop with his counselors defined the word surplus to mean one-tenth; therefore the two bishops agree in the main. Now bring on your "surplus" and commence this part of the gospel order. Joseph Smith convinced me that consecration and tithing were one and in unity, in an article a few years ago to the Church, appealing to them to pay their tithing, or consecration. He said call it either. I see no difference. When I read it I said the prophet is a little off. But I put away my tradition, and looking up the law on tithing, I found he was correct. We see that Bishop George Miller was to take "the consecrations of the people" for the building of the temple, and for the poor. And what did he take but the tenth? I for one see no difference in tithing and consecration. Both are one, not two, laws of giving. I pray we may not pass over this important duty. If I should fail to pay my just dues to the Lord, yearly, the Church would do well to erase my name from the record as not being worthy to abide among you, for this is what we find in answer to the question in 1838.

JOHN HAWLEY.

STUART, Mont., Jan. 18th.

Bro. W. W. Blair.—I have been preaching in Deer Lodge, Willow Glen and this place with fair liberty, and feel encouraged with present prospects. In my "Montana notes" I spoke of the "Doves" and used such plain language that I gave offense to two or three individuals of this valley, but I hope that they will soon see that I was only doing my duty as a shepherd. I have no objections to the Doves building a church or churches all over the land, if they can do it on their own merits; but when any one tries to build up themselves on the good name of the Church of Christ, I feel it to be my duty, as a watchman, to sound the alarm. Those who were offended, I believe are all good, conscientious people, but are more or less in favor of the Dove movement, and for this reason, and perhaps not understanding my motives in writing as I did, they take offense. But I feel confident that time will convince them that my warning was the voice of a friend, and certainly they will be able to see that no offense was intended for them as a people.

I can, with confidence, repeat what I said in a former letter, that the Morrisites of this valley, as far as I have become acquainted with them, are an honest, industrious people. And while I differ with them very materially in religious matters, yet I must accord to them sincerity. They believe a great many things which to me are strange, and I believe, are erroneous; yet they are of such a character that the belief of them would not hinder them from being good Latter Day Saints. And the worst that could be said of such doctrines is, that they are unprofitable. They are sound on most of the essential doctrines of the Latter Day Work. The great and most damaging difference is in respect to the right of presidency, which I hope will yet be satisfactorily removed. I have tried to show them that most of our sufferings and disappointments in past church affairs might have been averted, or avoided, if we had read, understood, and given heed to God's written word.

There was no danger of one latter day Saint being led into difficulty or disappointment, in regard to the Successor in the presidency of the Church if they had read, understood, and heeded section 43: 1-2 of the Doctrine and Covenants, which the Lord was good enough to give us as a law that we might "not be deceived." Read it.

"O hearken, ye elders of my church, and give an ear to the words which I shall speak unto you: for behold, verily, verily I say unto you, that ye have received a commandment for a law unto my church, through him whom I have appointed unto you to receive commandments and revelations from my hand. And this ye shall know assuredly, that there is none other appointed unto you to receive commandments and revelations until he be taken, if he abide in me. But verily, verily I say unto you, that none else shall be appointed unto this gift except it be through him, for if it be taken from him, he shall not have power, except to appoint another in his stead; and this shall be a law unto you, that ye receive not the teachings of any that shall come before you as revelations, or commandments; and this I give unto you, that you may not be deceived, that you may know they are not of me. For verily I say unto you, that he that is ordained of me, shall come in at the gate and be ordained as I have told you before, to teach those revelations which you have received, and shall receive through him whom I have appointed."

Could anything be plainer? And yet, is it not strange that we did not see it in time to save us much of our sufferings?

When I think of what I have gone through, and then realize that a merciful God has marked out a better way for me, and that I was either not aware of it, or did not heed it, I feel to cry out, O what a wasted life! But, thanks to God, the light of his glorious truth is shining once more, and a portion of it has found its way into my heart; and for that reason I speak in such plainness to this people. It is because I love them on account of their honesty; and I want them to share with me and all Saints this great blessing. And I would say to all the old Saints who have been drifting around for many years past, your hearts can find a home and the comfort it has long yearned after, in the True Latter Day Saint Church. You who left your father-land for the sake of truth, and crossed the boisterous ocean and the dreary plains to meet only disappointment in not finding the Zion your hearts yearned after, to you I say that God has revived his work and acknowledged it by the voice of revelation, and also by an abundant outpouring of his Holy Spirit.

The branches that have been led off into error and evil are fast going to decay; but the parent stock is full of Spiritual life and vigor, and it only remains for you to be united in Christian fellowship with the body, in order that you may realize that it is man, and not God, that has been the cause of your afflictions.

And may the God of peace help all the wandering ones to come once more to the good "old paths" and walk therein that they may at last find rest for their souls, is my earnest desire.

J. C. CLAPP.

REXBURG, Idaho, Jan. 19th.

Bro.——: I don't wish to offend you or any one else, but it strikes me that you have got a little befogged, and somewhat in the wake of the Utah Mormon Church, from the run of your letter, in intimating that Elder Wm. Marks was only a high Priest, as though Pres. Joseph Smith does not hold high enough Priesthood to lead the Church. You appear to ignore dreams. Joseph the Martyr declared, and all parties of Mormons have testified, that this great work of the last days is a dispensation of God, even "the dispensation of the fulness of times." That being the case it is a sequence of all former dispensations. See B. L., p. 216, par. 8. Please take a retrospective view with us. Go back to a time before Israel was in Egyptian bondage. Joseph was sold into Egypt; and by dreams marvellous events were brought about to the saving of his father's house and all Egypt from starvation by famine. And it does not appear that he held any priesthood. See Gen. 49:9-24. Now, it appears from holy writ that there has been a family broil with those two families—Judah and Joseph—all the way down; but according to the sayings of the prophets this family broil must cease in the dispensation of the fulness of times. We can only give some of these important events a passing notice at this time. Moses, of the tribe of Levi was raised up a law-giver to Israel. On the intercession of Moses, Joseph, in the person of Joshua, through the lineage of Ephraim with less priesthood led the children of Israel into the land of promise and divided off their inheritance by lot. In the time of the Babylonish Captivity, when Israel had strayed far away from God's ordinances, a Joseph, in the person of Lehi, through the line of Manasseh, I believe with no priesthood that we know of, but by dreams was led into the wilderness, and finally to this "land of promise," even Joseph's land. Again, in process of time Israel strayed far away from God, though they boasted of having a high priesthood, and of being better than other men, when John the Baptist came from the wilderness of Judea, crying, "Repent ye for the kingdom of heaven is at hand," and calling them "a generation of vipers," declaring that there was one mightier than he standing among them. It appears that John did not go to the Jews to receive any priesthood, he holding, as is believed, the Aaronic priesthood. Neither does it appear that the mighty one went to the great Sanhedrim high priest of the Jews to either be ordained or baptized, but came to John to be baptized of him.

A revelation to Joseph the Seer written to W. W. Phelps says: "Behold I will send one mighty." There was a man who came from afar to Joseph the Seer at Nauvoo, for the truth when he knew it not, and to be baptized of him. Was he the "one mighty?" You say Moses was the one mighty in the Mosaic dispensation—he was king and law-giver. Jesus was the "one mighty" and stood as king and law-giver in his dispensation. Who is the "one mighty" in this dispensation of the fulness of times? As this is the "rock of offense" to those who have known the Lord, but have turned their hearts from him; we will give the matter but a passing notice at this time. The angel of the Lord appeared to Joseph and showed him the plates and he obtained and translated them by the gift and power of God, and he received revelations, and did a great work before he was baptized and ordained as clearly appears from his history.

Neither did he go to the high priests nor the popes of the Catholic Church, who professed to have the authority brought down from Peter and the Apostles. He did not go to them to get authority or to be baptized of them. J. J. Strang was only an Elder when he claimed to be called of the Lord, after the martyrdom of Joseph, when he declared that the angel of the Lord stretched forth his hand and touched him and put oil upon him and said "Grace be upon thy lips; thou hast loved righteousness and hated iniquity; therefore thy God hath anointed thee with oil and set thee above all thy fellows." (B. L. p. 169).

Brigham and the Twelve said it would be only as president of the Elders' quorum, as he was only an Elder, and they had received great endowments, and hence held the highest authority of the priesthood on earth, and he would have to get ordained by them to get any higher authority. Now Brigham and the Twelve, before and after Joseph's death, took more pleasure in sin and unrighteousness than they did in righteousness.

and when the Lord told them to "put away lying, and to speak every man the truth to his neighbor," they would not. They rebelled against God and his law and were cast "away out of Zion," and have become "ungodly Jacob."

And now, when God sends a deliverer out of Zion to turn ungodliness from Jacob in the person of a Joseph, ungodly Jacob cries out, "What priesthood does he hold? Brigham said before his death that Joseph could take the lead of the church if he would come and get ordained of him and the Twelve. We tell you that the Lord confers it on whomsoever he will, and answers not presumptuous questioners. And when apostles and men holding so high and glorious a calling as an Elder or an Apostle in the Lord's Church ceases to work righteousness, it goes back to God; for it is like his breath, fragrant odor to the blessed in the highest heaven, and it enliveneth the crumbling frames of the dead.

Dear Herald, we got up a petition for a School district, and all, both Mormons and Gentiles were for it. But when the Gentiles said they would have it free for all irrespective of creed, the Mormons backed out, and all of them turned out to build a Meeting house expressly for themselves, and the School house is blocked for a while.

Yours truly,
S. S. THORNTON.

Bro. D. Dancer:—The Saints are enjoying good health, and those who are doing their duty are enjoying themselves spiritually. We had Bro. I. N. Roberts with us in December last which was a great help to us all. We desire an interest in your prayers. Bro. H. C. Smith and his cotemporaries are doing much good in this mission. Ever praying for the advancement of the cause, I am yours,

RUSHING TO THE CITIES.

American population seems to seek its kind, and such inducement as cities afford prove too attractive for the rural population. In 1880 only one-ninth of the population of Minnesota lived in cities. If the state census just published, may be credited, one-fifth of her present population lives in cities. Speaking roundly, it may be said that, in 1790, one-thirtieth of the population of the United States was found in cities of more than 8,000 population; in 1800, one twenty-fifth; in 1810, and also in 1820, one-twentieth; in 1830, one-sixteenth; in 1840, one-twelfth; in 1850, one-eighth; in 1860, one-sixth; in 1870, more than one-fifth, and 1880, half-way between one-fifth and one-quarter. The tendency of modern civilization is to amass population. The strong lights and shadows of our cities, the love of society, the satisfaction of better shelter, better roads, stronger institutions, lead men to crowd together, when unable to be anything but dependents in the system to which they unite themselves.

RHEUMATISM.

Rheumatism is more easily prevented than cured. The great point is not to catch cold or expose one's-self in damp clothing—or on damp soil. This disease is most frequent among soldiers, sailors, farmers and others who get wet, or go with wet feet.

Woolen clothing is best to prevent it; a daily bath is important and only a moderate amount of meat should be eaten. The perspiration of rheumatics is very acid, and has a sour smell and causes much discomfort. The disease is often cured by Turkish baths, a bread, milk and fruit diet, with free use of Lemon juice.

Original Poetry.

LOVINGLY INSCRIBED TO SISTER BERTHA
M. SMITH, ON THE DEATH OF HER FIRST-BORN, DAVID CARLOS.

The night came down with moaning winds,
The earth wrapped soft in snow,
A mother's heart sent up to God
The question, "Must he go?"

Like prayer of old, the question reached
The ear of God alone;
And to the angel Death, He said—
"Go, bring the sufferer home."

Then soft upon the wings of love
The heavenly message came;
Alarmed, the mother's heart spoke out,
Demanding quick his name.

No voice replied. On David's face
She saw the shadow fall,—
"David, your breath is leaving you;
Dost hear the Father call?"

"O! mother, No," the boy replied,
"I shall not leave you yet;
I may go soon, but not just now,—
My going, don't regret."

"Oh! Is it so," her soul replied,
In deepest agony;
"I know His voice; 'David, my son,
The Master calleth thee.'"

Then soft the angel whispered him:
"E'er yet thy soul depart,
A kindly, loving message leave,
To cheer her lonely heart."

"Mamma, you've been so good to me,"—
The last his pale lips said,— Unto the angels living now,
To mortals, he is dead.

Sleep, then, thou weary sufferer,
Till the dead in Christ arise,
And come forth with a mighty shout,
When He descends the skies.

Thou, weary mother, rest thee here,
He needeth not thy care;
For Jesus will be good to him,—
Cast all thy burden there.

Thee, brother Joseph, God sustain,
And surely guide thy way,
That thou with thy departed ones,
May dwell in endless day.

SHOULD THE DOORS BE OPENED?

I REMEMBER upon one occasion, when studying "Moral Philosophy," having the question put to me, "What do you understand by 'Whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so unto them?'" I understand that the Savior meant all things which I had a right to expect them in righteousness to do, was my answer. It was accepted as correct then, and I believe it is correct to-day. When Jesus gave utterance to this pure and holy sentiment, his discourse was addressed to his followers, those who had been taught of him, and were expected to follow out his teachings. It would be a very hard matter to carry out such a saying if it were not limited. "A house divided against itself can not stand." With us we know that when our Elders go forth in the Spirit of the Master, preaching only the gospel as taught by him, they are endeavoring to build up his kingdom according to his command and his revealed will. For this purpose the Saints throughout the land have erected houses of worship and dedicated them to Him. They are consecrated, set apart to His worship in an especial manner. In these houses are to officiate God fearing men. "Be ye clean that bear the vessels of the Lord." Here are to be taught the principles of righteousness and salvation, and none other. That discussion, full and free, upon many points, is not admissible, I do not for one moment believe. The watchmen upon the walls of Zion do not yet "see eye to eye." But shall the watchman standing upon those walls descend when he sees the foes coming, and if he ask for admittance at the gate, open it to him? Still more, shall he open unto him the very holiest place in the citadel—the doors of God's house, and bid him enter with his poisoned breath, to tear down the kingdom of our God. Do not let the lip rise in scorn at this latter thought. "Is thy servant a dog, that he should do this thing?" exclaimed one of old, when told by the prophet what he would yet do, and what despite his scorn of the act at that time, he did do a short time after. No watchman standing upon the walls of Zion can say that God has given him such perfect assurance of the safety of the flock within, that he is justified in opening the gate to an enemy, even if he contemplates slaying that enemy (metaphorically) after he has practiced all his devilish arts to build up his master's kingdom. Better slay him without the walls, if he must be slain, or at all events keep the gates locked and the way to the holy place safe from the contamination of his unholy feet.

There is in this no spirit of harshness, no thought of evil speaking against any one, but simply what to my mind appears a sacred duty.

"If there come any unto you and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, neither bid him God speed: for he that biddeth him God speed is partaker of his evil deeds." If John was correct in this injunction, it only remains for us to determine whether the house of God is equally sacred. In your own house you expose to the tempter, only your own family, but in the house of God, the entire flock. When one comes unto you and teaches such horrible blasphemy, as the worship of Adam as God, blood atonement; and in short, all those horrible doctrines, which the apostle bundling together labels "Doctrines of Devils," how can you, how can any one, be justified in saying to them, "Enter into the sanctuary of our God and proclaim your doctrines to the people? We have warned the building, it is lit for the occasion, and the bell is ringing to call them together!" This is not hyperbole, but the plain unvarnished truth, from which we can not, if we would escape.

That the great majority of that faith "do not practice plural marriage, and are not open advocates of it abroad," is small argument in their favor. Why have they selected these very men and for what purpose sent them abroad? They have been selected because they were able men, zealous men, but above all, because they were men strong in the faith; and they have been sent abroad for the sole purpose of making converts. Making converts; and it will be wise in the shepherds to remember this. Jesus says "If the good man of the house had known in what watch the thief was coming, he would not have suffered his house to be broken open, and his goods stolen." Small value, in comparison were the stolen goods of that house, to the worth of souls over whom "The Holy Ghost hath made you overseer."

I would not forget that once these "false shepherds" were true followers of the Son of God. They even now teach the same pure principles of the gospel as they were taught by him while in His ministry here upon earth. I say I would not forget this, nor would I forget to pray for them, that they might return to their first love, and do their first works over, but at the same time we must not shut our eyes to the fact that just here is their stronghold for evil, and the great source of danger to their innocent victims. They are still making their converts by thousands, just through the practice of such deceit. There is no falsehood on earth, so fraught with elements of evil as one which is only a half lie. Just where to draw the line—just what to eliminate, becomes a problem so difficult that many minds weary of the effort, and either accept or reject the whole thing. It has been the almost universal plan of these men to preach the gospel abroad, and the doctrine of devils at home. When the fly had walked in, the spider was master of the situation. This practice of the false shepherds of Utah, has become so well known, that it is almost impossible to free the minds of the people from the impression that the Reorganized Church is contaminated in the same way. The apostle exhorts us to "avoid even the appearance of evil." We would be very far, perhaps as far as any one living, from shaping our course to meet the demands of an exacting world, but how can the hearts of the people—the honest hearted ones of the masses, be reached, until they are free from the fear that we may be following in their footsteps in relation to this hypocritical practice. Will opening the doors of our churches to them, help to do this?

Even the most strenuous advocate of "free speech" must admit that there is a limit to that, also. No Christian father, who had any sense of manhood in him, would allow the name of the God he worships to be blasphemed, in the hearing of his little ones, provided he was where he had any authority to prevent it. Jesus scourged even from the porches of the temple, those who polluted it. Have we on record another instance in which the Son of Man resorted to violence? It is true the priests and doctors of law were within, but the cup of their iniquity was not yet full. God was patiently waiting for them to fill it, before he punished them even as he waited for the Ammorites in the days of Abraham.

In conclusion I want to speak for many, very many of our people, who feel that our churches should be used in the service of God and only in His service. Will you bear with us in this weakness—if weakness it be? We do not want that our little ones should go to the house of God, to be inducted into such things as we strive to shelter them from in our own homes. Just throwing out this thought, we close.

WONDERS OF ASTRONOMY.

BY ELDER F. R. TUBB, LONDON, ENG.

CHAP. III.

THE NUMBER OF COMETS.

WE endeavored to demonstrate the fact in a previous portion of the present article, that comets are much more numerous than is popularly supposed; but that owing to their extreme distance from our earth only the very largest and brightest are visible to the naked eye. We then remarked that owing to the valuable assistance of that crowning masterpiece of constructive science, the reflector telescope—astronomers have counted no less than two hundred different comets revolving about the sun during the last two centuries; that number having been seen during that period. None of these except four, have, as yet had time to return to us; for many of them, it is known, must require seven or eight hundred years to complete their orbits round the sun, while some few will require two and three thousand years, and one in particular, though travelling at an extraordinary speed, has so vast an orbit as to require no less than eleven thousand years for the completion of one revolution round the sun. The four comets above alluded to which require less than one hundred years to complete each revolution, have been found severally to return at the periods assigned for their next visit to our system.

How many other comets there may be, or what is the total number of bodies which compose the cometary, as distinguished from the planetary system of our sun, we know not. Comets have been observed and calculated by astronomers only during the last two centuries; about two hundred different ones have during that time been seen, and more are continually discovered as instruments are perfected and observations multiplied.* Nevertheless, hundreds may, during this period, have escaped observation, because of their great distance, and the faintness of their light; or because we can not observe the heavens in the day, and they traverse them so rapidly that long before the period of the year when that portion of the sky in which they move becomes visible, they are gone.*

The comet of Biela could only be found by Sir John Herschel, with a reflecting telescope of twenty feet in length, an instrument of enormous power in the collection of light. What shall we say, then, of the number and variety of the cometary bodies, which might have been discovered, had we instruments of greater power, were our observations more numerous, and carried back through a greater distance; or what shall we say of the possible number of cometary bodies which may be discovered during the next two centuries? It is quite within the bounds of possibility, that the number of the different comets, revolving continually round the sun, may amount to many thousands! When we consider the vast magnitude of the creations of God, and the immense fertility of His works, the number of solar comets is more likely to be thousands than hundreds.

THE POSITIONS OF THE ORBITS (OR PATHS) OF THE COMETS, AND THE DIRECTION OF THEIR MOTION.

Those which are known to us have their orbits lying in every conceivable direction in space, subject all, however, to the condition, that one of their foci is occupied by the sun. They have their planes inclined to one another, and to the plane of the earth's orbit at every possible angle up to ninety degrees, and the lengths of their orbits are directed towards any and every point in space; moreover, and this is a singular fact, they have the directions of their motions, some one way and some another. Thus, one comet revolves in its orbit eastward, and another westward. Moreover, by reason of the elongated forms of their orbits, and their various directions in space, these orbits are made to cross one another, and the orbits of the planets and comets are thus frequently brought into such positions, in respect to the planets, that the attractions of these greatly interfere with, and control the attraction of the sun upon the comets. Now, in all these points of view, the cometary is distinguished from the planetary system of the universe. The orbits of the planets are all of exceedingly small eccentricity; they differ little in form from one another, and none of them much from circles. Their planes are none of them inclined much to one another, or to the plane of the earth's orbits.† Their orbits never intersect one another, and their distances between are such, that the attraction of the rest upon any one must always be greatly less than the attraction of the sun upon it; moreover, all of them describe their orbits the same way, or in the same direction towards the east.

THE SYSTEM OF PLANETS IS STABLE; THE SYSTEM OF COMETS IS UNSTABLE.

These are terms which must be explained. All the bodies of our system, (and from recent observation it appears of every other), attract one another; each planet is attracted by every other planet as well as by the sun, and in reality moves more or less in consequence of, and in obedience to, each such attraction, deflecting more or less continually from the path which it would otherwise describe, according to the greater or less proximity of the disturbing body. And the aggregate result of these disturbing motions is, an orbit whose general character is that of an ellipse (or oval); but which is not in reality an ellipse; an orbit which, moreover, is continually changing, no two successive orbits of a planet round the sun being exactly the same. This continual alteration in the paths of the planets through space might go on with more or less of rapidity, and it might be such as in its nature would go on infinitely, so that we might be assured that our system should never again be what it now is. Nay, a state of things might easily be imagined, such as would produce a continual change of this kind, leading necessarily and ultimately to its utter destruction. Now, we know and are assured by the most certain reasoning, that the state of things which actually exist, is other than this:—that it is a state of things which renders it impossible that the forms of the planetary orbits should continue to change for ever; that, on the contrary, the existing state of things renders it absolutely certain and necessary, that (if nothing else interfere) eventually, after perhaps millions of years, each planet shall be again describing the very same path that it is now describing; and the whole order of planetary disturbance return from period to period, by almost imperceptible degrees, in an eternal cycle. This condition of the planetary system is that which is meant by its stability, as the opposite condition is implied by instability.

* It is related by Seneca, that, during a great solar eclipse, 60 years B. C., a large comet was seen near the sun.
† The inclination of the orbit of Mercury to that of the earth is greater than that of any other of the seven great planets, and it does not much exceed seven degrees.

Now, the peculiar circumstances out of which the stability of the planetary system arises, are precisely those in which we have described it, as distinguished from the cometary system. They are the great excess of the sun's attraction upon any of the bodies which compose the system, as compared with that of any other body; the uniform direction of the revolutions of the planets in their respective orbits, towards the East; the small eccentricities of their orbits, and their small inclinations to one another. From these provisions in our solar system it arises, that it is stable, and if any of them were wanting, it would be unstable. Now, in the cometary system, not one of these obtains; it is therefore unstable, and in a state of continual and rapid change, and thence arises the great difficulty of calculating the motions of the comets.

THE TENUITY OF THE SUBSTANCE OF COMETS.

The masses of such comets as we have observed are all exceedingly small* as * If Halley's comet had been the 20,000th part of the mass of Jupiter, Laplace has calculated that it would have produced an effect on the motions of that planet, which would have been in 1682 distinctly perceptible with our instruments, and in 1835 it would have been perceptible even had the mass of the comet been much less. If the comet of 1770 had been the 5,000th part of the mass of the earth, it would have perceptibly lengthened our year.

compared with those of the planets of our system; so that although they exercise no perceptible influence on the motions of the planets, however near they approach them, yet do the planets exercise a very sensible control over theirs.

A comet was discovered in 1770, and its orbit was calculated by Lexel to be described in five and a half years. At the expiration of that period, it was however looked for in vain, and it was called Lexel's lost comet. Years afterwards, it was shown by Laplace, that this comet, when returning, had passed so near to Jupiter, that the attraction of that planet upon it had become 200 times as great as the attraction of the sun; and the result was, that the form of its orbit had been so completely altered, that from five and a half years, it came to be an orbit described in thirty years! The attraction of Jupiter described upon this erratic comet actually brought it between that planet and his Satellites; and yet, so small was its mass* and so wonderful its tendency, that it proceeded not the slightest alteration in the motions of any one of them. There is reason to believe that the comet discovered in 1843 by M. Faye, may be the lost comet of Lexel. If there be a resisting medium in the regions traversed by comets, the greatness of their bulk (or dimensions), and the tenuity of their substance, can not but subject them in a far greater degree than the planets, to the influence of such a medium. Its effect, paradoxical as this may seem, would be to diminish the time of each successive revolution. Now this continual diminution of the periodic time is actually taking place in respect to the comet of Encke, under circumstances which it appears impossible in any other way to explain.

THE DISTURBING ATTRACTION OF THE PLANETS.

Every comet when it enters our system, has its orbit more or less changed by the influence of the planets, and in some cases that influence is felt throughout the whole of the comet's course. Thus, the comet of 1835, never, throughout the whole of its course, extending three billions of miles from the sun, escaped the sensible attraction of Jupiter! Thus, then, it appears, that those changes which must in the orbits of the planets necessarily be for ever gradual, and almost imperceptible, are, as it regards the comets, not only perceptible, but remarkable; and moreover that whereas the changes of the planetary orbits must return in certain cyclical periods for ever, those of the cometary orbits never will; so that what the cometary system is at any given time, it can never (that is, it can not except by an infinite improbability) be again; but to what this perpetual series of changes tends, or in what it will terminate, no one has, probably, been bold enough to make the subject of his speculations.

Enough has been said to show that the calculation of the motions of the comet is no easy matter. The attractions of five bodies, (all of which, except one, are continually moving) upon another, which is itself also perpetually in motion—these attractions, each of them varying (with each change of distance) their efforts in accelerating or retarding the attracted body, or in altering the path which it describes—effects to be considered and allowed for, during a period not of some few weeks or months, but through seventy-six long years; this is a task, about which are accumulated difficulties of no common order. It is a work of infinite complication, learning, ingenuity, and labor; nevertheless, it was undertaken and accomplished in respect of the comet of 1835; the entire known history of which wonderful object I am now about to place before the Herald in detail as befits so magnificent and tremendous a subject.

* A distinction must be made by the reader between mass and dimensions; mass has reference only to the quantity of matter; and thus a body may have a very small mass, and yet very great dimension; this is the case with comets.

CHARITY.

A WORLD'S redemption is pending upon the principle of charity. An inherent attribute of Deity, and a gracious boon to those who court its possession, it is one of God's choicest gifts to man. By its presence the soul is filled with tenderness inexpressible. The impulses of the heart are made pure and strong. The divinity of the soul is awakened, and every fiber of the being thrills with holy emotion. It lends a golden tinge to every experience in life, and the hope of heaven is made a grand reality. It clothes the sun's rays with a brighter luster, and it beautifies the works of nature in all their varied form.

The paradise of God, with its joys and blessings, is brought near by this messenger of love; and God and Christ seem more nearly related to our spirit by reason of its divine ministrations. Oh charity! We crave thy presence; we invite thee to fill the vacuum of our aching hearts. Thou art as oil poured upon the tender wound. By thy magic touch our troubled spirits are healed. Pity dwelleth in thy bosom, and thy sympathy falleth as the crystal tears from a summer cloud. Thou hearest the widow's moan, and the orphan's plaintive cry. Upon the battle field thou carriest the memory of a sainted mother to her dying boy. Thy virtues are only known to the pure in heart; and are appreciated only by those of a contrite spirit.

Forbearance is born of charity, and deeds of beneficence flow from this ceaseless fountain as waters from the mountain-side.

Charity palliates no evil, yet is not hasty to condemn; patiently hoping for the best, it looks upon the brighter side.

Justice and charity are not opposed. As brother and sister in the divine economy, justice does the sterner work, deals only with facts and figures, while charity lovingly draws near to, whispers words of hope and cheer, disclosing the summer sunlight of a better day. Her work is conservative; she sees merit where others find fault; preserves and builds up where many would tear down and destroy; is not selfish, nor partial. By an apostle we are admonished to follow after charity and desire spiritual gifts." Happy, delightful people are they who cultivate the virtue of charity within their own hearts.

GEO. S. HYDE.

HAS REVELATION CEASED?

AS WE were reading the other day in a Confession of Faith of one of the so called orthodox churches we came across the following: "Therefore it pleased the Lord, at sundry times, and in divers manners, to reveal himself, and to declare his will unto his church; (Heb. 1: 1. "God who at sundry times, and in divers manners, spake in time past unto the fathers by the prophets")—and afterwards for the better preserving and propagating of the truth, and for the more sure establishment and comfort of the church against the corruption of the flesh, and the malice of Satan and of the world, to commit the same wholly unto writing; which maketh the Holy Scripture to be most necessary; those former ways of God's revealing his will unto his people being now ceased. (Heb. 1: 1). "God who at sundry times and in divers manners, spake in times past unto the fathers by the prophets, hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son, whom he hath appointed heir of all things, by whom also he made the worlds."

The first thing we notice in the above quotation is this, that God, to guard against Satan and the corruption of the flesh, committed the same will wholly unto writing. This appears to me to be a very foolish idea; for if God had anything to do with putting together the books in the Bible, he would have done the work more perfectly and not allowed so many mistakes to have been made when it was compiled and called the Bible. We believe the Lord inspired these holy men of old to write, but we do not believe that for the propagating of truth he caused uninspired men to collect these books and form the Bible and say that this was the end of revelation. And the reason we give for this objection is, that we turn to the Bible and there find about twenty books mentioned that can not be found. For instance, "the Book of the Wars of the Lord," Num. 21: 14; "Book of Jasher," 2 Sam. 1: 18; "Book of Nathan the Prophet," "Visions of Iddo the Seer," 2 Chron. 9: 29. We turn to Jude and in the 14th verse we find the prophecies of Enoch mentioned which can not be found within the Bible; and we also find in Jude another very important book missing, on the common salvation, [which means salvation for all], which Jude said was needful for him to write; and if it was needful for him to write it, it is needful for us to have for our guidance. Now, if there is to be no more revelation, how are we to be guided into all truth, when so much of the Bible is gone? It seems to me if God caused his words to be committed wholly to writing, so as to guard against the corruption of Satan and for the better spreading of his truth that he made a sad failure of protecting it from Satan. We turn to the Union Bible Dictionary and of the Scripture it says that, the first edition of the Bible in any print or language was the Mazarin Bible, published about 1455. But we can not find in any ancient history that God directed it to be done. The common version of the Bible—"King James' Translation"—was certainly not done by the voice of God, for King James appointed certain learned men to translate it and he indorsed their work after it was finished. So it certainly was not the work of God. We believe the Bible is the word of God, so far as it is translated correctly; but do not think as our so-called orthodox friends do, that every word in it is inspired. We believe in present revelation and that God has shown his church that the Bible has been tampered with by wicked men. Our orthodox friends in their "Confession of Faith" say they do not believe in present revelation; so they are left in darkness about the inspiration of the Bible. By reading their article of faith we see that they believe God revealed his will unto his people until Christ came, and then ceased, and never has revealed himself since, and cite us to Hebrew 1: 1, for proof. This view is certainly contrary to the Bible, for we read in Amos 3: 7, "Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets." The quotation from Hebrew 1: 1, does not prove that revelation has ceased; for when Christ came he was the great prophet of all, and while he remained on earth there was no need of other prophets, for he was the Holy One and had direct communication with the Father. But just before his death he spake unto his disciples thus, in John 16: 13: "Howbeit when he, the Spirit of truth, is come, he will guide you into all truth; for he shall not speak of himself; but whatsoever he shall hear, that shall he speak, and he will shew you things to come." This clearly shows that continued revelation was promised by Christ to his people. If the quotation taken from Hebrews 1: 1, means God has ceased revealing his will unto his people, then we are afraid our orthodox friends will find themselves in a sad dilemma, for we read in John 14: 17-26; that the Spirit would unfold new truths, and therefore it must be the Spirit of revelation. We now turn to Acts 2: 38, 39 and find that after Christ's death Peter promised the Holy Ghost to the believer; and by turning to John 14: 17, 26 we find that the Holy Ghost, or Spirit, was to show them things to come, which proves that God would still reveal his will to his people. Again we find in Matthew 16: 18, that Jesus said to Peter—"Whom do men say that I the Son of Man am?" Peter said that they had various opinions about him; and Jesus said unto his disciples, "Whom do ye say I am?" And Peter replied that he was the Son of God. Then Christ said, "Blessed art thou, Simon Barjona, for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven." "Thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." Matt. 16: 18. How did Peter gain this knowledge of Christ, if it was not through human agency? It was revealed to him by a higher power. Peter received this knowledge of the character of Christ by divine revelation. Here we again see that upon revelation Christ would build his church, and that God would lead his church by revelation. If revelation has ceased how shall we know Christ, for we read in the Holy Book "No man knoweth the Son, but the Father; neither knoweth any man the Father save the Son, and he to whomsoever the Son will reveal him." If we do away with continued revelation, there is no possible way for us to know whether Christ is the Son. If there are to be no more prophets after Christ came upon the earth, how will our orthodox friends reconcile their views with those of the Bible? We read in Acts 8: 28: "Then the Spirit said unto Phillip, Go near and join thyself to this chariot." This proves that revelation continued after Christ's death. And again, we read in Acts, chapter ten, of Cornelius receiving a vision from the Lord telling him what he must do to be saved. In Acts, chapter eleven it reads—"And in these days came prophets from Jerusalem unto Antioch. And there stood up one of them named Agabus, and signified by the Spirit that there should be great dearth throughout all the world: which came to pass in the days of Claudius Cesar." Paul was directed by revelation in what he should do after the Lord had made him blind. In Rev. 4: 1, we read the following, "Come up hither, and I will shew thee things which must be hereafter." It was in A. D. 96 that John received this vision of things that was to transpire hereafter. We read in Revelations, chapter eleven, that two prophets were to come in the last days and they were to do wonderful things. All this proves beyond a doubt that there were prophets after Christ's time, that the Bible is not enough for our guidance, and that revelation is still to continue, notwithstanding the above "Confession of Faith."

HUMILITY AND AUTHORITY.

SOMEBODY wrote long ago a few lines like the following:

'He that is down need fear no fall;
He that is low, no pride.
He that is humble ever shall have
God to be his guide.'

It must have seemed a strange paradox to our Lord's followers when he told them that in his kingdom whoever wished to be great, must offer service; and the chiefest must become servant of all; and that we must all humble ourselves if we want to reign with Christ a thousand years and take part in the first resurrection. It looks, and it is, a great error that, after eighteen hundred years some people are so slow in grasping what is the truth, viz—that the highway of authority runs through the vale of humility and service. He is first of all who is first in sacrifice, in duty, and in love. Authority is not to be thrust into one's own hands like a sceptre. No one is to be the chiefest by claiming only; but by winning. Might is no longer to make right; but right and truth are to make might. Homage paid to authority is not to be so much something to be shown, or to be spoken, but something to be felt. Supremacy does not come from birth, wealth, position and education alone: but from the use, and the powers made by use of the talents God has given to us. Rulers are to be made out of servants, and those shall be exalted highly who have achieved the greatest usefulness. I am glad that the Latter Day Saints know this, both socially politically, and religiously. Does he not truly rule whom men look up to for counsel? to whom men look up for direction, and love to obey? True worth is true dignity, and such a man's character is a power for good in any community. Whatever name may be attached to us, there is one consolation, we are the genuine leaders when society can not do without us. Is not this the real mastery? Call it what you will, after all, it is something that must be acquired; hence it must be noblest, grandest, and the most powerful of all, because it came from heaven. Even Christ our elder brother came not to be ministered to alone, but to minister, and was made perfect through suffering. Joseph had to stoop to an Egyptian dungeon before he could have power and authority at the right hand of Pharaoh. Moses, Joshua, and David rose from obscurity to fame by virtue of character which was pure, zeal which was holy, and ardent service. Just compare the lowly fishermen of Galilee with the Sadducean and Pharisaic priests, and rabbis. Contrast the Wesleys, Luther, Knox, and Calvin with Voltaire, Paine, Barker and Hume. Give us a John the Baptist before an Herod or an Herodias. Give us a Saint Paul before a policy seeking Pilate, a Saint Peter before a treacherous S. Wallum. Dr Cotton Mather in company with Dr. Franklin was at one time walking out of a house through a narrow passage which was crossed by a beam overhead. "We were still in conversation," says Dr. Franklin, "when he hastily said, 'Stop! stop!' I did not thoroughly understand him until I felt my head hit against the beam. Dr. Cotton Mather was a man who never missed an opportunity of giving instruction when it presented itself. 'You are a young man' says he, 'and have the world before you; learn to stoop as you go through it, and you will miss many a hard thump.' This was timely advice and many times I have thought about it when I have seen pride mortified, and misfortunes brought by people trying to carry their heads too high." We all know there are different degrees or grades of labor to a building and in a workshop, and it is an almost invariable rule that the master-hands rise higher and higher in points of kinds of labor performed, and of the compensation received, while those who fall short are as sure to be found at the bottom of the ladder, fitly surrounded by their tardiness and badly done work. Nothing but perseverance, energy, and faithfulness will tell who are the industrial workers in the Lord's vineyard. The bees that make the most honey are not drones; neither do they meddle with their neighbors while they fly from flower to flower; they seek to be wise, and to lay up in store for a future day. To-day the most noble and the grandest leaders in Zion are those who, in the truest sense of the term, have been servants of all, ministering to the wants of others through thick and thin, in all kinds of weather, on sea and on land, at home and abroad. This Christ-like leadership will be richly crowned. In God's kingdom and vineyard only workers are wanted—not drones. And those who will be the greatest, must be the servant of all. "Faith without works is dead," and he that overcometh shall sit down with Christ on his throne. According to our works will our reward be.

O, let us walk in the pathway our blessed Lord and Master has shown us and made glorious by the foot-prints of his own footsteps. Let him who chooses to be the first be like the apostle, "More abundant in labor and sacrifices." Dwight L. Moody once said "Nobody can hurt Moody but Moody himself." Remember, that it is not in the power of one man to make or spoil America; but the Americans themselves. It is not in the power of one Saint to make or spoil a meeting; but the Saints themselves. "What a poor meeting we have had," exclaimed a sister in my hearing. "Please get up and speak a word for Jesus next Sabbath," I said. She did so, and confessed the meeting was a most excellent one. Nothing makes manual labor so sweet, and menial service more profitable than one's own work and working for the good of others. If you wish to be happy, you must make others happy also.

"Go preach my gospel, said the Lord,
Bid the whole world my grace receive:
He shall be saved who trusts my word!
He shall be damned who won't believe.
I'll make your great commission known:
And ye shall prove my gospel true
By all the works that I have done:
By all the wonders ye shall do."

THE GOSPEL.—No. VI.

KIRTLAND, O., March, 1835.

INASMUCH then as the gospel was preached to Abraham, would it be thought hazardous much to say that baptism was preached to him for the remission of sin? Or could the gospel be preached to Abraham and this not be preached? Perhaps some might say it was told to Abraham that in his seed all the families of the earth should be blessed, and that was all. Could it be said that the gospel was preached to Abraham, and yet it was not preached to him, or that was Abraham left to guess the rest and find out what was meant by being "in his seed." But let us go back and look a little at this subject. Paul as before quoted has told us that it was a fixed principle in the economy of God, and that before the foundation of the world, that men were to be saved by being in Christ. And he also tells us that Christ was Abraham's seed. Is this testimony correct? If it is, ever since man was in existence there has been but one way of being saved; for God, according to the apostle's statement, had fixed it by an irrevocable decree, and that before the world was, that men should be saved in this way and none other. The question now arises, Was this scheme of things kept hid from the early ages of the world, so that they did not understand it, and yet were saved by it? If so, there never was any need of understanding it from that day to this; for if they could be saved by it without understanding it, so could we, and so could all others, and Paul's assertions to the Ephesians would be worse than vain. "That by grace are ye saved through faith," for when there was no understanding there could be no faith. And there is nothing more certain than this, that if the ancients were not made acquainted with the scheme of life, they must have been saved without it, or else they were destroyed for want of knowing it. The latter can not be admitted, and it is very hard to admit the former, that is, that any people were ever saved without understanding how it was done that they were saved, or that any persons could be washed from all sin by the Lamb, and yet know nothing of Jesus the Lamb of God; and be taken into heaven by a scheme of things of which they had no knowledge? We are told that "without faith it is impossible to please God," and where could faith be in all this matter? Had the ancients the happy faculty of believing on Him of whom they had not heard, and of hearing, without a preacher? Mark, reader, that Paul has fixed this matter forever; that it is in Christ Jesus that men were to be saved, since the foundation of the world, and in no other way; so that the ancients must either have known that they were in Christ, (we mean those among them who were saved), or else they did not. If they did not they were saved in ignorance; and the old maxim with them holds good that, ignorance is the mother of devotion. But on this point there can be no difference of opinion among the candid; for to admit that any portion of the human family were saved at any time, or in any period of the world, without knowing how they were saved, or by what means they were made partakers of the grace of life, is to suppose an improbability. That is, it is to suppose that they were saved, and were not saved at the same time; for the revelation of the plan of salvation was essential to the salvation of any of the human family. It mattered not how good the scheme of it was which was devised in eternity, nor how well suited to the situation of man; nor how well calculated to save men; nor yet, how competent it was to save, still it would never have saved one individual since the world began, unless it had been revealed to him. Let it have remained secreted in the bosom of eternity, without its being made known to man, and the world would have been nothing the better of it, but would all have gone to destruction together.

Another thing which would appear very strange is, that there should be an Abel, an Enoch, and others, who had great power with God, who got many revelations from God, and had great faith so as to obtain testimony that they were accepted of him, and that they pleased him, and yet with all that they knew, they did not know nor understand the scheme of things by which they had this power with God, and through which they obtained it. Enoch prophesied of the coming of the Lord with ten thousand of his saints to judge the world, (Jude 14), which judgment came by reason of the atonement of the anointed Savior; and it would be very strange indeed if Enoch should not have known anything of the sacrifice of the Savior, and yet knew of his coming to judge the world, because they rejected the salvation which was offered to them by reason of that atonement, and not only knew of the sacrifice of the Savior, but of the way by which the world of mankind was made partakers of the benefits of that atonement; that is, by being put into Christ Jesus, and that work of putting in, by baptism, in water, according to what Paul has said: "That as many of you as have been baptized into Christ, have put on Christ;" and I may add, that none others but those who were baptized into Christ did put him on, or could put him on; for there was no other way of putting on Christ.

Who can doubt but what that man who had faith sufficient to get revelations, and to obtain knowledge of the great day of judgment when the Lord should come with ten thousand of his Saints, who walked with him three hundred years, and had faith sufficient to be translated, who can doubt I say, that this man was acquainted with the whole scheme of life and salvation, or the gospel? No person can doubt it but one who is incapable of judging any matters.

The Scriptures are pointed on this subject, and so clear that a caviler has no room left, only to show his unfairness and want of candor. Paul says, (2 Timothy 1: 9, 10), "Who hath saved us, and called us with a holy calling, not according to our works, but according to his own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began; but is now made manifest by the offering of our Savior Jesus Christ, who hath abolished death, and hath brought life and immortality to light, through the gospel." If this statement be correct, life and immortality came to light by the gospel, the same as to say that unless the gospel had come, life and immortality would not have come to light. Let us ask, when did life and immortality come to light? Before answering this question, let me ask, what is meant by life and immortality? I answer, The knowledge of a future existence, or an existence after the present state, in a state of superior glory; and this is the knowledge which came to light by the gospel. When did it come to light? Enoch had knowledge of life and immortality, or else he would not have had faith to have been translated; for could he have faith about a thing of which he never heard? And Paul says that this knowledge came to light by the gospel. If so, Enoch had knowledge of the gospel, and if he had knowledge of the gospel, he knew that men must be in Christ Jesus, or else they could not be blessed, and he must have known that men were put in Christ by baptism, or else there was another gospel, for this was the one which Paul preached, and which he said was before the foundation of the world, and by which we had grace in Christ before the world was, and that it was through this gospel that life and immortality came to light. And Enoch must have been put into Christ according to the law of this gospel, or else he would not have walked with God three hundred years; for no man can walk with God unless he has obeyed the gospel. And Enoch must have been baptized for the remission of sins, and have received the gift of the Holy Spirit by the laying on of hands of some one who had authority from God so to do, or else he would not have known of life and immortality.

This matter will appear exceedingly plain, if we attend a little to the promises made to those who believe and obey the gospel, for they were to those who were baptized for the remission of sins, that they should receive the gift of the Holy Spirit, and through this gift they should see visions, dream dreams and prophesy. Acts 2d chapter. Let us look at Enoch then, and see what great knowledge he had of things of God, and ask him, How did you come to have this knowledge? The answer: By seeing visions. And how did you obtain power with God to see visions? The answer would be, I obeyed the gospel, received the Holy Spirit, and thereby saw visions, and through this means I obtained all my knowledge.

A BURIED CITY.

A MAMMOTH CITY BUILT AND WRECKED BEFORE THE TIME OF THE AZTECS.

ABOUT thirty miles from the city of Mexico, and to the south-west, lies one of the most interesting places in the world to antiquarians, historians, and curiosity seekers. It is the site of a buried city, twenty miles square, whose foundations were laid so long in the past that neither records nor traditions remain of the builders. We know only that it is of pre-Toltec origin, and that the Toltecs disappeared from the valley of Mexico before the coming of the Aztecs.

On a small portion of the site of the once mammoth city is a small native village bearing the same name as that applied to the ancient city—San Juan Teotihuacan. The tourist can spend many days prowling about the pyramids of the ruined city, poking over the twenty mile area, with sticks and umbrellas, and reaping a reward in great numbers of obsidian arrow-heads, broken idols, fragments of pottery, and the terra cotta heads for which the place was famous. The two are called the House of the Sun and the House of the Moon. The former is nearly 200 feet high, with a base of 700 feet. Its platform is now only about 75 feet square, and the middle point of it is marked by a modern cylindrical monument of stone. The Pyramid of the Moon, about 100 yards distant, has a height of 137 feet, and base measurement of 426 by 511 feet. Each was once crowned by a temple containing stone idols wearing golden breast plates; and we are told that outside the edifice on the summit of the House of the Sun was a colossal figure of its presiding deity, the sun, covered cap-a-pie with burnished gold, which glowed so brightly in the sunlight as to guide worshipers on their way to the valley to visit this ancient Mecca.

Both pyramids are composed of rocks, whinstones, cement and pottery, and so softened are their outlines by the flight of centuries that to-day they hardly appear more sharply defined than an ordinary steep-sided hill. Chapparal and cactus bushes, clambering all over them, contribute to hide their pyramidal outline, and time has entirely removed the facing of dressed stone that once, doubtless, encased them. Three terraces may still be distinctly traced around the pyramid of the sun and two around that of the moon. One can ascend to the summit of either, if good at scrambling, by a winding pathway starting from the southern base.

A RELIC OF THE PAST.

Neither pyramid now contains any vestige of statue or temple, but a little to the left of the greater mound may be found an immense idol, supposed to have formerly graced the summit. The statue is of solid stone, about ten feet high and seven or eight feet through the head. Its face is not that of a monster, like Huitzilopochtli or Teoquomiqui, the bloodthirsty gods of the Aztecs, but differs as much from them in its benign expression as the pastoral people who worshipped it differed from their fierce successors. The eyes are as large as a barrel head, nose flat, ears like two enormous platters and ludicrously flanged, mouth in the exact shape of a watermelon, and half open, as if his majesty meant to whistle, while in the breast a square orifice is cut, into which a man might put his head. The whole is carved from a single block of trachite, and no living savant is wise enough to tell how the early Mexicans managed to make it from the solid rock without iron tools, or to convey it to the top of the pyramid when they had no beasts of burden.

The Pyramid of the Moon was doubtless a place of sacrifice, and its interior a sepulchre for priests or kings. Charney found a wonderful idol inside of it. About two hundred yards away lies a great carved block called the "sacrificial stone," which is said to have been overthrown from Mexilli by order of the Spanish Bishop Zumarraga, whose vandal hands destroyed more treasures of antiquity than his bigoted head was worth. In the western face of the smaller pyramid is an opening, supposed by many to lead to hitherto unexplored treasure vaults, deep down in the interior of the vast structure. The eminent author, Fred Ober, crept into this narrow passage on his hands and knees, about twenty-four feet down an incline, and had the satisfaction of reaching only a pozo, or well, twenty feet deep. Further than this no one has yet penetrated. There are many smaller mounds and pyramidal elevations surrounding the larger ones and lining a broad road-way called the Path of the Dead.

AN INDIAN TRADITION.

From the summit of either pyramid a most superb view is obtainable of many neighboring villages, the white towers of the city of Mexico shining in the distance, and the environing mountains which upon all sides shut in this cup-like Vale of Anahuac, what better place can be found for listening to a tradition of the ancient inhabitants? An Indian historian, whose data were principally compiled from picture writings on the woven fibres of the maguey, states what happened here toward the destruction of the Toltec empire. He says the gods were very angry with the people, and to avert this wrath the Toltecs called a meeting of all their wise men, priests and nobles, at the Holy City, Teotihuacan, where from ancient times the gods had been wont to listen to the prayers of men. In the midst of their feasts and their sacrifices an enormous demon, with bony arms and long fingers, appeared dancing in the court where the people were assembled. Whirling through the crowd in every direction, he seized upon the Toltecs that came in his way and dashed them at his feet. A second time he appeared, and again the people perished by thousands in his clutches. At his third appearance the demon assumed the form of a white and beautiful child, sitting on a rock and gazing at the city from a neighboring hill top. As the people rushed in crowds to examine the strange apparition, it was discovered that the beautiful white head was a mass of corruption, the stench from which smote with death all who approached. Finally the dancing demon appeared again, and informed the terror stricken Toltecs that their fate was sealed as a nation, and that the remnant could escape destruction only by flight.

"FAMILY GOVERNMENT."

IF the trees grew, so did baby, and she developed some traits unknown to the vegetable kingdom, unless, indeed, they sprung from that tempting apple our poor grandam tasted in the lost paradise. It seemed to Sally a dreadful thing to punish her treasure for anything; the idea of tears in those lovely eyes and quivering sobs from those red lips was unendurable. Mademoiselle had her own way, and bid fair to become a nuisance in the house. Tom came home one day and found her screaming and kicking on the floor, and Sally standing by her with a woeful face.

"What's the matter here?" he inquired.

"Oh, Tom! she saw the new carving knife in the drawer, and it is so bright she wanted it to play with, and I can't let her have it, can I?"

Tom's face darkened; he had long had his own thoughts about baby's mismanagement, but he hated to hurt Sally so much that he kept putting off what he felt to be a thankless but disagreeable duty. But he had been well brought up himself, and looked back on the rigid discipline of his childhood as the source of all the strength and uprightness of his character. And now things have come to an open issue: his child must be governed, however Sally objected; it was his duty. He picked the child up from the floor, screaming and kicking more vigorously still.

"Margy!" he said sternly; "stop! don't cry any more!"

It was useless; Margy had never minded her mother in the two conscious years of her life, and her father had never before seen her in such a rage. She did not stop at all, but roared the louder. Her father looked her in the eye—"Margy!" he said, "stop, or papa will slap you."

"Oh, Tom! Tom!" cried Sally, "don't whip her; oh, don't; she'll be good pretty soon; she's never been slapped."

"So I see," said Tom. "Sally, this child is spoiled; it is my duty to her and to God to bring her up as the child of Christian parents should be reared. Will you go into the other room, my dear, if this is going to hurt you?"

There was an authority in Tom's voice Sally had never heard before, and it frightened as well as angered her. She had thought of her marriage vows of honor and obedience as mere vague forms. Never before had her will and Tom's come into direct conflict. She was ready to defy him; her face blazed, but Tom's look was not to be withstood; he was master and she must yield. With rebellion in her heart, quite as vehement if not as outspoken as Margy's, she went out of the room and out of the house, and sat down on the shed steps with her hands over her ears. Tom picked up the screaming child, turned her over on his knee, and, after the good old fashion, proceeded to "reverse the magnetic currents," as modern aesthetes call that form of castigation.

Margy was more astonished than hurt; the surprise and the sting recalled her to herself; she stopped crying, and when Sally came back the child's arms were around her father's neck, the tears stood in Tom's eyes, and the baby voice cried, "Me dood baby, mamma!"

After tea was over and the little girl asleep, Tom said, "You were angry with me to-day, Sally, and you haven't got over it quite yet."

Tears welled up into Sally's eyes and choked her voice; she could not answer.

"Let's have it out, dear," said Tom, tenderly; "we shall both feel better than to have a silent sulking. Do you want Margy to grow up such a girl as Della Mix?"

"Oh, Tom! but I don't see how you could slap her."

"What would you have me do, Sally?"

"Oh, nothing, she's such a baby! I'd let her alone until she is old enough to understand that she ought to mind.—Why, she's only three; wait till she's ten"

"And by that time habits of disobedience and giving way to temper will be fixed upon her, Sally, and the struggle made dreadful for both of us."

"But it seems so cruel to punish a poor, helpless little child who can't resist you, but whom you can beat just as much as you like without fear of retaliation."

"Sally, your plea holds good against God's dealings with us. He can do with us as He will; is it right, therefore, to arraign His providences when they hurt us?"

"But that isn't the same thing; He is God."

"He is our Father; He tells us that He scourgeth every one whom He receiveth, Sally. He makes laws, and if we refuse to obey them we are hurt either in mind or body by so doing. Do you think we are better than our Maker?"

Sally had never looked at the matter from this point of view before; almost adoring her baby, she had only thought to make the child well and happy. That its government was involved in her duty as a Christian woman had not entered her mind, but she was an honest servant of her Master, and meant to do His will just as far as she knew how. "I guess you are right, Tom," she said, with a wistful look that went to Tom's heart; "but oh!" she went on, "I do wish you would do all the governing."

"How can I, Sally? You are with her all day, the occasions for discipline are almost all in your hands. You do not hesitate to give her only wholesome food for her body; can't you do so much for her character?"

"Well, she never sees anything to eat that isn't good for her; but how can I keep away or hide from her everything she fancies? I must have knives, and scissors, and pins, and needles to use."

"It would make a flabby sort of moral training to take every hurtful thing out of her way. Try the Bible, Sally; it has more of what the people call common sense in it than any earthly book, and some help for every emergency. Remember what Christ said—'I pray not that thou shouldst take them out of the world, but that thou shouldst keep them from the evil.' Don't try to make her world into heaven, but teach her to resist temptation, to obey the powers that be, to have self-control and self-respect. You want people to love her, don't you?"

"Why, they can't help it."

Tom smiled. "They can't help disliking her, Sally, if she grows up ungoverned. Nothing is so utterly disagreeable as an untrained child; think of Della Mix!"

Sally did, with inward horror; she could not quite believe that her own Margy would ever be like that dreadful girl, yet she began to fear such a result might follow. "But I'm afraid Margy won't love me if I slap her, Tom."

"Didn't you see her arms around my neck after I had punished her? She put them there of her own accord. If you punish her calmly and make her feel that you hate to do it, but must, she will end by being sorry for you instead of angry. I shall never forget what my little cousin said once to her aunt: 'Nan, I finks you dovern me better'n anybody.'"

"Why, dear?" asked the aunt.

"'Cause you'se so d'edful, d'edful gentle with me, an' you feels so bad 'bout punishin' me, that I finks in my own mind

—though I doesn't by any means tell you so—that I nebber, nebber s'all do so adain; but when Patty comes 'long, and says "you bad, awful naughty dirl," an, slaps an' shakes me, I dit just as mad, an' I finks I'll do it adain, soon as I possibly tan."

"There's the whole history of government in the mind of the governed, Sally, and it is pretty much so."

A PICTURE IN THE STUDY OF SOCIALISM.

How far is the Social Ideal from being realized to-day? Perhaps you have allowed your eyes to be blinded by your success until you have ceased to realize what the facts of life are to-day in this boasted nineteenth century civilization. Perhaps you have not roused yourself to ask whether indeed things were ever different from what they now are or ever can become again—settling down in the natural feeling that whatever is right.

If so let me remind you in a few words of what our nineteenth century presents to a candid study. In every sentence of the paragraph to follow I speak upon the authority of leading political economists and of governmental reports.

In England we find that two-thirds of the population toil that the other third may be exempted from toil; that about seven thousand persons hold four-fifths of the soil of Great Britain; that ten or twelve persons own one-half the land of Scotland; that seven millions five hundred thousand acres of land are left waste in a crowded country; that a million of human beings are pauperized, or one in every twenty-one of the population; that eight thousand five hundred persons have an income averaging twenty-five thousand dollars, twenty-two millions an income averaging four hundred and fifty-five dollars, and about four millions five hundred thousand an income averaging one hundred and fifty dollars per annum. Of the greater part of Europe to-day the United States consular reports show a uniform state of things. "The wages paid (in Germany) hardly cover the necessities of existence. * * * "The workman's life is at best a struggle for existence. * * * The large majority of the workingmen (in France) barely earn sufficient for the necessities of life," and so on through the dismal pages that report the condition of labor in nearly every country in Europe.

Our own country is beginning to feel itself crowded with only fifty millions where two hundred millions might be supported; to find twenty per cent. of its people owning eighty per cent. of its wealth; to realize that there are few industries in which a workingman could support his family without additional earnings from wife or children; to be told that more than two millions of persons employed in our factories earned an average wage per annum of about three hundred dollars; to learn that it must no longer cherish the expectation of keeping the working classes above the level of their brothers in Europe; to enter upon its vocabulary a novel and abhorrent word, the "proletariat," and to catalogue as the latest product of American industry "the tramp," from Heber Newton's social ideal of Protestantism.

EAT FRUIT.

Fruit-eating must obtain more than it does, not as a luxury, but as a hygienic measure. Our lives are becoming impaired, and meat-eating is a luxury which is incompatible with many generations without deterioration of the viscera.

Fruit should be kept where the children can help themselves to it. A barrel of apples will often save a fit of sickness. Three or four eaten every day will do them ever so much good. Never scrimp your children's supply of fruit if you can help it.

Miscellaneous.

KEWANEE DISTRICT.

To the Saints of the Kewanee district, greeting: Our last district Conference, held at Kewanee, December 19th and 20th, was a very pleasant and peaceful one, yet in point of attendance from the branches it was deemed a failure. In view of this fact the Conference, when it adjourned, did so to re-assemble at Kewanee on the second Friday, Saturday, and Sunday in March, with a distinct understanding of all present, that an effort should be made to secure as large a delegation at that Conference as possible, making it partake of the nature of a Reunion of all the old members of the district.

To further this object, the Kewanee branch has instructed the undersigned to give through the Herald, a general invitation to the Saints of the district to come then; and extend a special invitation to those brethren and sisters now outside the district who used to form a part of, and meet with us in days of yore. To one and all we say, Come to our Conference, and let it be as intended, a Reunion of all the old members of the district, together with as many others as can make it convenient to attend.

Elders east of Kewanee, intending to go to the General Conference, who can make their appointments so as to meet with us they will confer a favor by doing so.

Through the combined efforts of district and branch officers, it is confidently expected that the preaching of the word and other services during Conference will be of special interest; and visitors may rest assured, that the Kewanee Saints will give their visitors such welcome as gospel bonds inspires. Correspondence with all interested in this effort is earnestly solicited, and may be addressed to either of the undersigned.

In behalf of the branch we subscribe ourselves your brethren in the covenant,

ROBERT HOLT.
JOHN CHISNALL.

KEWANEE, Ills, Jan. 23d.

ELDERS' QUORUMS.

To the Elders of the Fourth Quorum: All wishing to be reported at the April Conference will report to the president, J. D. Flanders, at Stewartsville, Mo.; or to the clerk, S. Crum, Independence, Mo. We hope to hear from every one. The clerk desires to have every one's address. Let us hear from all not later than the 20th of February, 1886. Any wishing Quorum Licences can obtain them by corresponding with the president or clerk.

Brethren of the Fifth Quorum of Elders are hereby apprized that on or before March first, we desire you to make out your report of work done since last year's report. Tell us how often you have preached, how many you have baptized, confirmed, &c. Those who preside as presidents of branches or districts, please mention it. If any of you are ready to take the field, mention under what circumstances, that the Quorum may report it to the conference. Send your address with report, as we wish to publish a "Circular Letter" with all your addresses on them. Don't forget the fifteen cent yearly due, for incidental expenses; enclose two cent stamps with your report to that amount, and more if you choose. We want a report from every one, even though very little may have been done; tell us of it, and do more next time. We also want about twelve or more good men to fill our number. If any of you know of such have them send items of ordination. A recommend from branch or district president, or missionary in charge. Send reports to R. Etzenhouser, box 58, Rhodes, Iowa; or to J. A. Robinson, box 289, Fort Madison, Iowa.

CONFERENCE NOTICES.

The Nevada District Conference will be held in the school-house near Elder A. B. Johns', in Jacks' Valley, beginning at eleven A. M., March 14th, 1886. A full attendance of the officers of the district is requested; and if they can not attend, I wish to have them report in full by letter. Presidents of branches are requested to report in due season. Address D. I. Jones, President district, Sheridan, Nevada.

The time of the convening of the Northern Illinois District is hereby changed to February 13th and 14th, 1886, instead of 20th and 21st as in minutes of said conference.

W. VICKERY, Sect.

The Mobile District Conference will convene on the second Saturday (the 13th) in February 1886, at eleven o'clock, at the Saints' Chapel, in Three Rivers branch, Mississippi.

F. P. SCARCLIFF, Dist. Pres.

DIED.

ROSS.—At Montrose, Iowa, January 15th, 1886, of diphtheria, little Daisy E., daughter of Bro. F. M. and Sr. Eleanor Ross, aged 4 years. Funeral services at Saints' Chapel, on Sunday, the 16th, by Elder H. C. Bronson.

Little Daisy dear, hath gone
To the Paradise of God;
There to sweetly dwell in peace,
Where angel's feet hath trod.

ALLEN.—Near Paige, Texas, December 28th, 1885, Bro. Warren Allen, aged 70 years, 4 months and 20 days. Bro. Allen was born August 2d, 1815, in Warren County, Georgia; came to Alabama with his parents in 1825; was baptized into the Church of Jesus Christ February 17th, 1867, by Elder W. A. Litz, in Monroe County, Alabama; was ordained to the office of Priest shortly afterwards, and moved to Texas, December 8th, 1885. Funeral services by Rev. Mobly of the Baptist Church.

PRIOR.—Alonzo R. Prior died of croup and diphtheria, January 14th, 1886, aged 4 years, 2 months and 29 days. Ella Prior died of croup, January 15th, 1886, aged 2 years, 6 months and 22 days. Funerals conducted by John Hawley and Chauncy Williamson.

GAYLORD.—At Little Sioux, Iowa, December 31st, 1885, Sister Elvira Gaylord, relict of the late Elder John Gaylord of Burlington, Wisconsin, aged 78 years, 6 months, and 8 days. She was baptized about the year 1836, at Plymouth Michigan; was married to Wm. Edmunds in 1833, who died in 1840, and was married to John Gaylord in 1841. She was a most excellent woman and consistent disciple of Christ. Elder J. C. Crabb officiated at her funeral services.

SMITH.—At Lamoni, Decatur county, Iowa, 2.15 a.m., January 24th, 1886, David Carlos, oldest son of President Joseph and Sr. Bertha M. Smith. David was born at Plano, Kendall Co., Illinois, August 14th, 1870. When seven and a half years of age he had an attack of rheumatic fever, which left him with a diseased condition of the heart, of which disease he died aged 15 years, 5 months, and 10 days. He suffered greatly, and is at rest. Services at the Saints' Chapel, on the 26th, at two p.m., in charge of Elder H. A. Stebbins; sermon by Elder W. W. Blair, text: "He giveth his beloved rest." Singing in charge of Deacon Norman W. Smith; Sr. Lucy L. Lyons, organist. Funeral cortege in charge of Elder S. V. Bailey. Bearers: Dan Anderson, Ben Anderson, Frank Cochran, Fred Blair, Joseph Silver and Willis Kearney. The grave was made in Rose Hill Cemetery.

"Weep not for those Who sink within the arms of death
Ere the chilling wintry breath
Of sorrow o'er them blows;
But weep for them who here remain,
The mournful heritors of pain,
Condemned to see each bright joy fade,
And mark grief's melancholy shade
Flung o'er Hope's fairest rose."

MRS. EMBURY.

BISHOP.—Lucinda C. Bishop, daughter of Rufus Peaslee, born in Crawford county, Pa., October 3d, 1841, died January 22d, 1886. She united with the Church about the year 1879, since which time has lived a consistent Latter Day Saint. She leaves a husband and ten children to mourn her loss. May the good Spirit be with those who remain. Funeral services by J. C. Crabb.

TAYLOR.—At Fall River, Mass., January 20th, 1886, of hemorrhage of the lungs, Bro. Thomas Taylor, aged 33 years and 2 months. Funeral services by Elder John Smith, in the Saints' Chapel, Sunday, January 24th, at which many Saints and friends gathered around the remains of him whom when living they loved. As an officer of the church he was a willing worker, with full faith in the gospel. The floral contributions by his brethren and sisters contained the motto, "Our brother"; one by his fellow workmen, "Our shop-mate"; and one by his employer, "Willing worker"; all showing the esteem in which he was held by those who had the pleasure of his acquaintance. "He rests from his labors."

"TIME BRINGS ITS REVENGES."

MANY years ago the Saints were compelled by pressure of prejudice and intolerance to leave Kirtland and Northern Ohio for other and western regions, sacrificing time, property, and money to the Moloch of superstition and bigotry. Time in passing has thrown the Temple into the hands of the church; and a portion of the moral prestige of the place into the grasp of a portion of the Eldership. One of the latter, Bro. E. L. Kelley, writes encouragingly of prospects there. One of the brethren has bought a store and goods at public sale at advantageous prices. The suggestion is made, "It has been said that the Saints left Kirtland bankrupt, and others came into their possessions. Will history do us justice now by recording the fact that we return to Kirtland and buy from the bankrupt. We will patiently await the verdict."

Two meetings were held January 24th, and the regular Wednesday evening meeting re-established.

The Methodist Episcopal Church property is for sale, and it would almost seem to be a good thing were the Saints to buy it, to use as an auxiliary to the Temple in time of need.

A BROTHER writing from the west quotes part of a letter from us to him, writing thus:

"You say: 'One thing my trip has assured me of, that there are hundreds of good, honest men and women in the Territory, (Utah) that ought to be saved, and who will in time hearken to the counsel of God.'

"I am glad you feel so because it is true, and they can not be forsaken, either by God or his servants. They obeyed the gospel of God as revealed through your father, and their sins are almost entirely due to the wickedness of their leaders. You have warned them, but they are not delivered. Their circumstances are not far removed from a condition of despair. They are, as it were, between the upper and nether millstones. The rulers of their church on one hand, and the government of the United States on the other. Who will deliver them? Who will lead them back to Jackson County to set the house of God in order, and build the promised Temple at that place? Shall we invoke the aid of Senator Edmunds and the government of the United States?

"You and the Reorganized Church have been blessed of God to check the wild career of those men who have trampled under feet God's people. You have performed your part well, so far as the scourging is concerned, but is the scourging to continue for ever, or only until they obey the Edmunds law, and the demands of the Reorganized Church, and abandon their plural wives? Should they do this promptly and completely, what condition would they be in then? Wounded, beaten and sore, and engulfed in poverty indescribable, would their condition be bettered any? Who would be there to feed those hungry women and children—pour in the oil of consolation to their wounded and broken hearts; teach the people what they would need to know, set the house of God in order by organizing them into their several quorums of Priesthood and birthright, and such family organizations as God should approve and as their names are recorded in the Lamb's Book of Life, organize them for traveling back to redeem Zion, as Israel were led of old, but with more power and beauty of order than the people of Moses ever had. Fair as the sun, clear as the moon and terrible as an army with banners."

These earnest words come from the full heart of a delayed and hindered worker; one who has felt the iron heel of priestly domination and power in the "dark and cloudy day;" one who would fain see Israel delivered and who has been waiting for the "strength of Israel," but who has not yet seen that strength to recognize it. He writes near the close of his letter:

"It is easy to tear down and destroy, but who shall build up, organize and save. These are some of the things that demand our serious consideration for the coming season, and they can not be delayed much longer. (so says the Spirit of the Lord to us), 'Time is on the wing,' and is rapidly passing away, and the promises of God are all to be fulfilled. It is useless to look for help to any earthly power. God alone can be our helper; therefore let us cleave to Him with all our hearts and soul and strength."

To this sentiment we say most heartily, Amen. The God who ordained the gospel means of salvation alone is the great competent worker for Israel's deliverance. In Him only is there strength. In him alone can any one be "mighty and strong." In him all can be made strong, who will to labor.

For words of encouragement and cheer from any of the exile workers of the time past we feel deeply thankful; we can but see in them the tokens of God's Spirit moving upon the hearts of the remnants from among the people. But we feel that words are but the vessels through which the sentiment reaches us, the outward case in which the thoughts are clothed. We can not refrain from expressing the thought that if all the earnest well wishers of the host that was "scattered and peeled," would array themselves with the Reorganized Church, the present hope for redemption and triumph, it would greatly strengthen the phalanx soon to become "mighty and strong" in God's strength.

The times are propitious; the armor waits in God's "tiring room," the church, for those who can, who will enter the lists and do battle for Zion.

"THE snow, the beautiful snow," has kept piling up on the railway track in places, stopping the trains on the branch road on which Lamoni is situated, resulting in a regular plethora of letters on the 4th inst. It is out of the question to get them all in HERALD, so we put in some and epitomize and notice others.

Bro. C. StClair baptized eight at Fanning, Kansas, January 31st. Two others had given their names for baptism. He was still preaching at the Iola Schoolhouse, where the congregations remained good. In his last letter dated February 1st, he says, "The people still wish me to stay and talk to them from the 'wonderful words of Life'" Bro. Clarence has our prayers for his faithfulness and success in Christ.

Bro. Oden Jacobs wrote from Leland, Illinois, January 30th. He had been holding meetings among the Norwegian settlements in Illinois; but had not seen any fruit of his labors yet, though he had had some good audiences and good liberty in speaking. He proposes to try again when spring comes. He had been reading much this winter, and thought he had gained some in knowledge and experience.

Bro. Wm. Gurwell writes from Fanning, Kansas, February 1st, confirmatory of the news from Bro. StClair. He also reports the temporary organization of a branch at Fanning, by the aid of Brn. Daniel Munn and H. Parker, of Good Intent, on December 6th, 1885. The branch chose its officers December 25th and now is in working order. The addition of the eight adults before mentioned is very timely. The Fanning Branch has passed through much of trial. And we hope that the evil of the past will suffice to them. Sr. Gurwell is entitled to much credit for the unyielding faith with which she has maintained the cause at Fanning. May the tide of their success be only just begun; and may it continue till the whole country is overflowed with the peace and righteousness to follow good works.

Bro. Wm. France writes from Mound Valley, Kansas, Brn. John A. Davis and Bro. Charles K. Ryan are working like good soldiers in the district, sowing the good seed. Bro. France says of these young men, "They are the Lord's workers, and are blessed of him." Bro. James L. Hart, a young man, is presiding over the district.

Bro. J. C. Clapp was at Butte, Montana, holding meetings in the dining room of Bro. D. M. Bowen, to small but seemingly interested audiences. He wrote quite cheerfully, January 17th. Bro. Bowen and family were doing what they could for the advancement of the work at Butte. The work at Stuart and Willow Glen is apparently in better prospects than for some time. Bro. Clapp had more calls than he could possibly answer.

Elder Nicholas Stamm wrote from Adelphi, Iowa, asking to be remembered as a worker for God's good cause. He feels the strait in which he is placed, and is anxious to be on the Lord's errand, but is hindered by his infirmity—deafness.

Bro. D. S. Mills, the veteran worker of Southern California, writes from Los Angeles that they were holding meetings in the hall of the Knights of Pythias every week, to good audiences. They were having terrible floods in the region of the Santa Ana river, at Los Angeles, Newport, Santa Ana, Anaheim, and the other towns along the sea coast. Bro. Mills was storm-stayed at Los Angeles, could neither get home nor hear from there. Bro. Mills writes that Mr. Finch, the now noted temperance revivalist is doing the cause good by honorably stating the distinctive features of difference between us and the Utah church.

BROTHER H. P. BROWN, of the Expositor writes us from Oakland, California, under date of January 23d, that more than half of the subscribers for the Expositor for the second volume, are new subscribers. Now, if a goodly number of the subscribers for volume one would "do what they can," as we so frequently hear some people say, and renew their subscriptions for volume two, Bro. Brown could make his little paper live. It has done a good work on the coast, and among the mountains of the west; so say several of the Elders to whom the work of the Expositor has been known. Elihu Burritt, the learned blacksmith, once said that a man could not "have too many irons in the fire, if he kept them all moving," nor can we. The Expositor ought to live. Last year it ran behind about $150, and two good brethren came to the fore and paid it, thus sending it into its second volume free from debt. It is used as a tract, as a book, as a cudgel, as a journal, as a defense, and as an aggressive propagandizing sheet. We should like to see it sustained.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Bro. R. J. Anthony, writing from Nebraska City, Nebraska, January 29th, states that he was to be there over Sunday, the 31st. They were holding meetings every night with fair attendance "considering the cold wave." Bro. R. J. Anthony would be at Independence, Missouri, February 1st.

Bro. Wm. Street writes: "Fifteen years a subscriber for the HERALD, and it grows brighter and brighter, onward till the perfect day. May its shadow never grow less, is my prayer."

Bro. W. H. Kelley was at Wheeling, West Virginia, at last advices; and Bro. E. L. Kelley at Kirtland. Meetings were held regularly at Kirtland.

Bro. John F. Lemberg writes from Cedar Rapids, Iowa, that it is a town of 20,000 inhabitants, 20 beer-shops, a number of breweries, and a chance for good laborers in the gospel economy. An Elder would find a home with him while laboring there.

Bro. E. N. Beach, of Flora Vista, New Mexico, writes us of late that he had been grievously imposed upon by a man who professed to be a member of the Church. His name he represented to be E. J. Harrison. Beware of him.

Elder J. C. Clapp writes from Butte City, Mont., the 22d inst., "The ball is rolling all right up this way. Mercury thirty degrees below zero, but the Spirit of God keeps us warm."

Bro. J. C. Burgess of Mt. Uniack, Nova Scotia, writes last December 15th, and it reached us just now. His letter will appear in its place.

Bro. John Lake wrote from Zone, Ontario, January 21st. He had restored Bro. James A. McIntosh; and reports the work as progressing where his labors have been. He had organized a new branch at St. Mary's. Bro. R. C. Evans had baptized nine since the branch was organized, and others were near. Bro. Lake proposed holding a few meetings at Zone, then on to Blenheim and Chatham. From there to Independence, Missouri, where he expected to be February 1st.

There is to be a sheep shearing contest at St. Louis, Missouri, April 7th and 8th, 1886, for prizes—$1,500.00 cash premiums are offered. Weight and fineness of fleece to be the standard. Those competing must own the sheep which they enter for the contest. Entries must be made on or before April 1st, 1886. The classes are: class A, fine wools; class B, middle wools; class C, long wools. Premiums range from $20 to $100 in each class.

TO CONTRIBUTORS we again say,—Be sure and quote correctly, whether it be scripture, history, biography, or poetry. Whoever will not do this may expect to find their communications consigned to the oblivion of the waste basket. Misquotations are very serious defects, and should be studiously avoided. It is too much to expect the Editors and proof readers to detect and correct them. Don't quote from memory alone.

And we would further advise that no one should attempt to write for the press what they do not clearly comprehend, and pretty thoroughly understand, lest their articles, like an untimely birth, prove offensive and harmful. No one should wade out beyond their depth, lest they get swamped in the sight of those who can not save them. Write of that you understand; write carefully; write clearly; write interestingly, and your articles will appear in due time if there is room for them.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Ques.—What is meant by "charity seeketh not her own," and, "thinks no evil?"

Ans.—This word, as found in the texts quoted, means love. It is something more than kindness, benevolence, liberality, or good-will. Charity will move the individual to suffer wrong and harm rather than exact what is the person's "own" in respect to justice and personal rights. Justice and equity decide what is one's "own;" but charity moves the individual to yield or give away what is really his "own." It is not mindful and exacting of self-interests. So also charity moves the individual to put the best possible construction on the words and deeds of others. It moves to compassion and mercy, and to be forbearing with the foibles, faults and sins of others; whereas, those who have not charity are suspicious, surmise and imagine evil in respect to various matters. Charity puts the best construction possible, while its opposite—malice—puts the worst.

BRO. M. R. SCOTT writes us under date of the 29th ult., from Galena, Indiana, saying:—

"I am sorry to know that some residing in your country are writing to certain individuals in this district, pursuing the policy of Elymas the sorcerer, trying to turn some one from the faith. It is the policy of the adversary to attack the disaffected ones, or the 'weaker vessels,' as in the case of mother Eve. These parties confess that when they heard the first principles of the gospel taught by the church, they accepted them, and received the Spirit. To such I would say, if you received the Spirit by the obedience of faith, why not be satisfied? That should have been sufficient evidence for all time to come that God endorsed the authority, by giving his Spirit. But in the face of this acknowledgment in respect to receiving the Spirit in obedience to the gospel, such parties state that for several years they have been dissenting from the church. They ask fifty or more questions in regard to lineage, priesthood, types and shadows. Why send them to southern Indiana to have them answered? All of this indicates, to my mind, that such parties are badly confused, hypocritical, or they are aspirants. And I think if Brother Joseph would get down and out, and they could get in his place, they would be satisfied—for a time at least. When shall we believe such dissenters; when they bore testimony to the gospel, the church, and the latter day work? Or now when they dissent from it, oppose it, and say it is not true? Who can believe them when they flatly contradict their former testimony?"

To the foregoing we have only to say, that when members dissent from and oppose the doctrines and rulings of the church, a decent respect for their own honor, if they have any, would move them to withdraw from the church. To remain in it while they privately give evidence of disbelief in it, is to publish their want of either judgment, piety, or moral uprightness. "Whatsoever is not of faith is sin."

THERE is a very great amount of reluctance upon the part of the "unco pious" to admit the identity of the Spaulding "Manuscript Found," which was unearthed and brought to light at Honolulu, Hawaiaian Islands, as the "Manuscript Found," for which the claim has so long been made that it was the original of the Book of Mormon. Wisacres are now advancing the idea that "there was, there must have been" two Manuscripts Found; one in common English, the other in Hebraistic; the one a religious romance, the other an allegorical and mythical account of the early settlement of a portion of the Western Continent. Mr. Clark Braden even went so far as to assert that there were three or four copies of the Manuscript Found, one of which fell into "Smith's hands."

Prof. Samuel S. Partello writes thus learnedly in the Chicago Morning News for January 28th, 1886:

THE SPAULDING ROMANCE.

THE LOST MANUSCRIPT OF SOLOMON SPAULDING—A CURIOUS LITERARY DISCOVERY AND ITS CONNECTION WITH THE MORMON BIBLE.

So much has been written in reference to the "Book of Mormon" and its connection with the literary effusion of Solomon Spaulding, written and lost in the year 1814, that the recent discovery of the so-called "Manuscript Found" has again put before the skeptics the wherewithal to verify the truth of its identity with the Mormon Testament. The writer finds himself, through the courtesy of a reverend correspondent at the Sandwich Islands, enabled to give an outline of this new-found manuscript, including a copy of the first few pages.

This famous lost work of Spaulding owes its notoriety to being the supposed original document from which the Mormon Bible was in part derived. A great many accounts have been written about it, in different books discussing Mormonism, as being without doubt the source from which the companions of Joseph Smith derived much of the alleged contents of the golden plates. Our knowledge of its contents, however, has hitherto been confined to what has been obtained from the memory of a number of persons who read it at the time that Spaulding completed it, none of whom are now living. The manuscript itself disappeared when it left the hands of its author in 1814 to go to the printers, a firm by the name of Patterson & Lambden, at Pittsburg.

By the favor of a correspondent, now in Honolulu, it is my privilege to say that the long-lost and noted document has lately been discovered in the hands of Mr. L. L. Rice, a Honolulu resident, who removed from Oberlin, O., there, about five years ago. Not long ago it occurred to the venerable gentleman to make an examination of a box of old papers which had accumulated during a period of twenty-five or thirty years of his life as a newspaper editor and publisher in Cleveland and other places in northeastern Ohio. Among these musty and dust-laden papers there was a small package wrapped in strong, buff paper, tied with a piece of stout twine and plainly marked on the outside in pencil in Mr. Rice's own hand: "Manuscript Story. Conneaut." The exterior of the package seemed somewhat familiar to its owner, but yet he could not definitely fix on his mind the events in connection with his possession of it, and he did not remember having inspected its contents. He lost no time now in making an examination of it, calling in subsequently the writer's informant and another friend. The examination disclosed an old manuscript book of some two hundred closely written pages, carefully sewn in book form, about 7 by 6. It was brown and dusty with age. The first twenty pages show the effects of much handling, and are somewhat gnawed and damaged by insects, but no great injury to the writing has been done. A few extra outside leaves remain attached to the back of the book, on one of which in a rough hand is inscribed:

"Writings of Solomon Spaulding. Proved by Aaron Wright, Oliver Smith, John N. Miller, and others.

"The testimonies of the above gentlemen are now in my possession. D. P. Hurlbut."

Mr. Rice was wholly unable to account for how or when this manuscript came into his possession. He says he has no knowledge of the persons whose names are mentioned above. Some forty or fifty years ago Mr. Rice was editor of the Painesville Telegraph, about thirty miles from Conneaut, the residence of the Rev. Solomon Spaulding, then deceased. He conjectures that it must have been placed in his hands at that period for perusal and subsequently for publication. He personally knew Samuel Rigdon, one of Smith's right-hand men and later a Mormon apostle, their first location being at Kirtland, in the same county in which he lived.

Unlike the Mormon Bible, Spaulding's manuscript as found is not sham Hebraistic, but in ordinary English. It contains no quotations from the Bible, unlike the other, which transfers large portions of Isaiah and other books. Both devise a number of uncouth names for their characters; both record a series of desperate wars; both narrate a voyage across the Atlantic in ancient times, and a settlement in North America. But whether this manuscript is the original is yet to be proved, although there have been witnesses who have stated that Spaulding told them that he had altered his first plan of writing by going further back with dates and writing in the old scriptural style in order that it might appear more ancient. But a closer comparison of the two books should be carefully made before accepting the manuscript as the original work of Spaulding. Below will be found a copy verbatim from Mr. Rice's find. The asterisks indicate where it is illegible or obliterated: * * *

The foregoing will suffice as a verbatim sample of the book as taken from the manuscript found by Mr. Rice.

The party reach America and settle there, removing after two years to the Ohio region. Long accounts of the inhabitants and their wars are given, which I have not closely examined. The book having achieved such note, it would not seem out of order to make further and more direct inquiries into this manuscript, and which Mr. Rice would seemingly approve of. Whatever may be the result, its supposed connection with the "Book of Mormon" will furnish at least a valuable piece of literary history.

Prof. Samuel S. Partello.

[We leave out the quotation, as it was but the opening chapter and has been published in the HERALD, and is in print in the "Manuscript Found," on sale at this office.—ED.]

THE Boston, Massachusetts, Morning Record for December 15th, contains a very interesting report of the work of the Reorganized Church in New England, the reporter's information being derived from Brn. C. Scott, John Smith, M. H. Bond and others. The extract we give below will be read with pleasure by the HERALD readers.

It was in December, 1865, that the first Mormon church in New England was organized in Fall River, with a membership of eight persons. They were John Smith, John Gilbert, Sarah Gilbert, Thomas Gilbert, William Cotton, Mary A. Smith, Edward Rogerson and Ellen Rogerson. In the following October the Massachusetts district was organized, and the first conference was held in Fall River in a business block on Main street. Since then churches have been established in this vicinity in New Bedford, Providence, R. I., Plainville, Brockton, Dennisport, Little Compton, R. I., Boston, Douglass and also quite a large number in Maine and Nova Scotia. What was at first the Massachusetts district now comprises Massachusetts, Rhode Island and Connecticut. Connecticut, however, is a land of steadier religious habits than the others, and there are very few Saints there. These few, however, hold a meeting quite in a New Testament sort of way, and the apostles go about among their homes in very apostolic fashion. Their Mormon ministers are self supporting. Some of them may be tent makers, and they have to live where some progress can be made with small expense.

In Fall River the Mormons have a chapel for worship, and announce their services in the newspapers like other well regulated religious bodies. In New Bedford they meet in Waites's building on Willam street; in Providence, in a building on High street; in Boston, in Chickerling Hall on Washington street; in Little Compton, Dennisport, Plainville and Douglass they have chapels. They also have quite a large number of believers of the faith in Attleboro and Mansfield; and also in Georgiaville and Scituate in Rhode Island. In the district there are about 700 members enrolled, although they have a far greater attendance; of these, 200 are enrolled in Providence and 128 in this city.

I visited their chapel in this city on Sunday last, and found Elder Columbus Scott—who is one of the "quorum" of twelve apostles appointed by sacred revelation—in the pulpit preaching on the "Signs of the Times." He claimed that we are living in the "latter days" spoken of by the Scriptures, and talked learnedly and comprehensibly about the prophecies that are being fulfilled every day. Two hundred and fifty very respectable people were listening with close and admiring attention to his words. Their chapel is a very neat one story structure, located at the Flint Village, a section of this city which our refractory French-Canadian Catholics have done their best to make famous. The house will comfortably seat 300 people. It is very neatly furnished with settees, and there is a large "family organ" at the foot of the rostrum, which is raised several feet above the main floor of the church. The chapel is heated by a very latter day hot air furnace. The aisles are neatly carpeted and the windows curtained. The people correspond in looks remarkably well with their neat place of worship.

Although the church has a complicated hierarchy of apostles, bishops, elders and the like, and the church property belongs to the bishops, the management of the individual churches is quite democratic. "We are thoroughly American," said Elder Scott to me; "we believe in free government, free schools, a free press and a free pulpit." Elder John Smith is the "president" of this district, and Elder Thomas Whitney acts as his secretary. The other preachers of the sect in the district are Elders John Potts and John Gilbert, of Fall River; Frank A. Potter, William Bradbury, George Yarrington and M. H. Bond (active missionary) of Providence; Charles A. Coombs, of Plainville; U. W. Greene, of Attleboro; E. N. Webster and J. Chester, of Boston; Wellington Barse of Dennisport, and Isaiah L. Chase and Nathan C. Eldridge, of Plymouth. There are still others who preach.

Elder John Smith of New Bedford, whom I saw in that city the other day, told me that his church is growing more rapidly at the present time than at any previous time in the history of the church. "We had great trouble in getting a start," he said, "because the papers were afraid of us and wouldn't publish our notices. They have got over that now." These Mormons are very intensely opposed to polygamy, and have sent their prophet Joseph Smith as a missionary to Salt Lake. Elder Smith gave Senator Edmunds much valuable assistance in getting up his anti-Mormon bill. Their organ, the Saints' Herald, published the whole of Kate Field's anti-polygamy lecture.

The elders of the Fall River church have frequently invited ministers of other denominations to enter their pulpit and preach to them on the prophecies. Their members here are largely of English extraction, and are highly respected, as are also their brethren elsewhere in the State. Their next conference will be held in Dennisport about the last of January.

WE give from the Chicago News of January 28th, 1886, a letter criticising the new theology of Professors Thomas, Swing, and Rev. H. W. Beecher. We commend its straight common sense in discussing the "new theology" of the day as "sugar-plums" to the doubter and holiday believer; but suggest that to be consistent the same writer should not for the same reason that he rejects Beecher, Thomas, and Swing, accept Moody and Talmage, for both of these latter ignore some of the plainest doctrines taught by the Savior as the means of salvation. To illustrate: Mr Moody, in an effort made in New York City, in ridiculing the belief in the necessity for baptism as an ordinance essential to salvation, declared that if he thought that baptism was essential to salvation he would take a bucket and a broom, and going into Broadway would baptize every body he met; using the bucket and broom to illustrate baptism by sprinkling rather than immersion, as was the acknowledged method in the New Testament times.

THEOLOGICAL ANTIPODES AND CLERICAL INCONSISTENCIES.

ROCHELLE, Ill., Jan. 24.—Editor News.—It is Sunday. Will you kindly, as an agreeable dissertation from the struggle and routine of every-day business life, permit an unprofessional reader of your paper to express a few of the many thoughts which occur to him while perusing the reports of a few of the late sermons of Moody and Thomas?

It seems to me that if the old theology as taught in the past by Calvin and Edwards is based upon a bible supposed to be a true revelation from God, recorded by Moses, Matthew, Luke and John, and as consistently preached to-day by Moody and Talmage, the so-called "new theology" as expounded by Beecher, Swing and Thomas, has no foundation to rest upon, unless indeed, a new bible or a new revelation from God to Beecher, Swing or Thomas, has been forthcoming in support of it. Have these evolved ministers of the gospel received such divine favors as a basis for the new faith they are now proclaiming to the world with the assurance that it is more worthy of their confidence than the old, or are they simply discoursing, without authority, a gospel of their own invention?

If the "new theology" preached by Beecher, Swing and Thomas, is not based upon a new revelation, but is simply an expression of their individual views and the logical, but fallible, conclusions of their own researches, this, of course, implies the right of every one to reason concerning matters which heretofore have been considered strictly sacred, authoritative, and beyond human understanding; and behold! soon we will be blessed with innumerable other gospels, including Tom, Dick and Harry. There will be as many gospels as there are thinkers and critics, and all these gospels, the old included, will amount to about the same thing as a rule and guide to our faith and conduct—namely, nothing.

If the bible is to be subjected to human reason and fallacies, it instantly ceases to be infallible, and we then have no bible.

It therefore seems plain that in the conflict now pending between the representatives of the old school and the so-called progressive divines, the former have a very decided advantage over their evolved colleagues. If the bible is worth a straw as a revelation, and binding as a guide to faith, its plain language can not be misunderstood, and should not be misconstrued by any one. Its many strange doctrines, both agreeable and the opposite, must be accepted in resigned faith and with unlimited confidence in the truth of its many strange dogmas, or it must be rejected entirely and placed among the categories of ordinary books. There is no middle ground. Likes and dislikes must be ignored. There is no reasonable excuse for audaciously presuming to submit divine infallibility to human understanding, or to substitute finite methods for omniscience. Its arbitrary behests and solemn admonitions must be accepted as absolutely final and true, no matter how our intellect may revolt, or our hopes may be shattered by facing its terrible decrees, or it must be summarily rejected as a farce.

The old theology must be true, every word of it, as recorded in the bible and as accepted by the Christian world for nearly two thousand years, or we simply have no theology. The "new birth" Mr. Moody insists upon must be an essential process, hell and eternal punishment a fearful reality, or all the cunning, all the sophistries, and all the eloquent appeals to our sense of justice, to our hopes and aspirations, can not prevent the old bible from being branded a collection of fables and lies.

If there is no hell; if man may be saved without the "new birth," without Christ, without salvation, then the death of Christ, the vicarious atonement—in fact, the whole plan and economy of God as recorded in the bible—become not only a monstrous burlesque, but likewise transforms the character of God from that of transcendent goodness and wisdom to that of a miserable bungler and fiend.

If the criminal may be saved without the "new birth," the infidel without conversion, the heathen without Christ, as now taught by Beecher, Swing & Co., why did Christ die at all? Why did God, in his august wisdom, assume the role of a kind and loving Father and sacrifice for us his only Son for the ostensible purpose of making salvation and eternal bliss possible? Why did he in his wisdom, consider it necessary to resort to this awful sacrifice if without Christ, as Thomas says, we may be saved as well? How can the human mind reconcile this most shocking deed with divine goodness if all to no purpose? What excuse if not an absolute necessity as a means to accomplish great and lofty ends?

Some few years ago when the "new theology" first became popular, on account of the many sugar plums it so lavishly distributed among its disciples, it will be remembered that Beecher first renounced with intense indignation the ancient doctrine of heathen damnation. Both Swing and Thomas promptly indorsed the sentiment, and since then it has been generally taken for granted that the missionary is a very superfluous agent, and that those deluded Christians who still squander their money to convert the heathen are indeed behind the times.

But again I plead for consistency. If the heathen are saved without Christ, would it not have been infinitely better for humanity if all the millions of Christians who have lived and all those who now live had been or now were Hottentots, Laplanders, or other barbarians, as now Christ, instead of securing their salvation, may be the cause of their eternal misery? And surely a lifetime of luxury even in a land of civilization can not compensate any human being for taking its chance of being eternally damned. Therefore, if being a Christian tends to eternal misery, and being a heathen exempts us from this hazardous experience, it were indeed better God had not sent his Son at all and that we were all heathens. All of which emphatically proves the inconsistency of the new theology and that the poor heathen must be—damned.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY SISTER "FRANCES."

"On the ladder of God which upward leads,
The steps of progress are human needs.
For his judgments still are a mighty deep,
And the eyes of his providence never sleep."

POLISHED STONES.

DEAR SISTERS, Are there among us any such? Stones that have been cut and polished, until they throw back in a thousand glittering rays every color of the rainbow, from each ray of light which falls upon them? Has the net cast into the sea gathered in the refined, the talented, the gifted according to what the world esteems such? Talent, we are persuaded, the church has within her fold, gifted ones too; but we are just as firmly persuaded that the talent needs using—the gift improving, as we are that it is in the church. "Not as the world giveth, give I unto you," said Jesus; and upon another occasion: "For that which is highly esteemed among men is an abomination in the sight of God;" but he has given to each one a talent, and said, "occupy until I come."

"The present, the present is all thou hast
For thy sure possessing;
Like the patriarch's angel, hold it fast
Till it gives its blessing."

Do not say that to-morrow or next week, a month or a year hence, I will do something for God, something for the cause in which I am engaged; but do it now, now in the present, which is all the span of time we possess. The steps of the ladder of God, the poet tells us, "are human needs." Human hearts are throbbing, beating all around us. Do not let us wait until they are stilled in death, before we shed a tear for or with them; not wait until the weary ones have fallen under their burden, before we try to help them bear it.

Human needs, can we number them? If they are the steps of progress, in the ladder of God, then truly we may climb nearer to Him every day of our lives. We may not fathom his judgments; His ways to us may be past finding out, but we can not go amiss for Human needs. Do not let us wait for great and grand things to do; they may never drift by us; but be sure, if we seek for human needs, we shall find them. Happy then if we strive to supply them.

I remember one bitter cold day last winter, looking from my window and seeing a diffident, modest woman, one who shrank from public gaze, who could not speak before the people without her voice becoming indistinct with trembling; I remember seeing her enter the home of a poor lonely widow, her hands filled with the abundance God had given her to make glad her sister's heart; and I said, "God bless her, she is climbing God's ladder."

Did we say she could not speak before the people? Let us correct this. The funeral train was drawing near to the house of God. It was storming fiercely, and the drifting snow was piled high in the streets. None but the strongest and surer-footed might be abroad in a day like this. The pale face of a poor crippled woman looked out upon the storm, and a sigh escaped her heart. He whose funeral it was, was the son of one she loved, yet she could not be there. But her heart was made glad, and in the sanctuary of God her face, beaming with gratitude, spoke for the diffident one who brought her there, in language sweet as a hymn of praise. Not afraid to breast the storm to visit the fatherless and the widow, to go far out of her way to bring the cripple to the house of God; this is speaking words for which indeed there is no death—words such as I would to God we all spoke—testimonies such as I would we all bore, to the power, truth, vitality and glory of the work in which we are engaged.

Shall any come between the human heart and its Creator? Shall any enter into the sanctuary of the soul and say this is right and good for you? To one it may be a joy to bear his testimony to the goodness of God, and others will silently listen and rejoice with them. If the testimony is faithful and true, God is glorified and his people are cheered, while the soul of the individual is blest; but if it be painful to another to speak of things so sacred, before the people; if they feel that only upon bended knee, before their Heavenly Father, can they unveil the sanctuary of their soul, if you may be not concerned in regard to their spoken testimonies, touch not the veil which God himself has hung before their sanctuary, but leave that to his Holy Spirit, for it is not the office work of man.

"Write them then,

As they who loved their fellow men;"

"Our Friend, our Brother, and our Lord,
What may thy service be?—
Nor name, nor form, nor ritual word,
But simply following thee."

When the angel shall trouble the waters of a soul like this, have no fear for them, they would speak though the world were assembled to hear.

"Let your light so shine, that others seeing your good works, may glorify your Father who is in heaven."

Come we now to our question, "Have we any polished stones among us?" If we are permitted to answer, we say they are these.

We read of a "stone which was set at naught by the builders." It was not polished according to the Jewish idea, and they would not accept it. Perhaps if Christ had been polished according to their ideas, they would not have rejected him. Where then would have been our salvation, had Christ become a Jew, instead of listening to the Father's voice, and teaching only the words given him to say?

THAT STONE is polished—has become the head of the corner, and author of eternal salvation to all who obey him. Let each of us strive to become more like him, to follow more nearly in his footsteps, and honor him by walking in his ways.

WE can not forbear calling the particular attention of all interested in the Home Column, to the following extract from the address of W. H. Kelley, published in the Herald of January 30th.

[Selected.]

A WORD TO MOTHERS.

MOTHERS! I say, make practical housekeepers of your daughters, whatever else you make of them. What is a woman if she can not keep house practically? Is she any comfort to her husband. I would say she is not. It is the duty of every mother to train her children so that they will be a comfort and a blessing to those around them. The wealthy mother may say she keeps a servant or housekeeper, and it is not necessary for her daughter to work. That is all very well. Does she forget that "riches have wings" and, too, that her daughter will sooner or later be married and will then want to keep house herself? How many young women are there, that know how to manage a house when they are first married? And how often do we hear them say, "Why did not my mother teach me how to keep house," or otherwise they will be ugly and disagreeable to their husbands, which brings a separation of what might have been a happy couple. Now, if mothers would put a daughter at little things, like dusting or cleaning up her own room, or putting her clothes in order, (and there are a number of other things which she might be put at when quite young, as may seem proper to the mother, all of which will train her), as she grows older increase her responsibilities and cares. In this way, little by little, a knowledge of cooking, baking, washing, ironing, cleaning, sewing, and managing a house in general, is gradually yet easily acquired. If all mothers will do this, there would be more happy families, and more well managed households in this world than we have now.

I do not mean to say that art and music should be neglected; for, can not a woman know how to keep house, and still be an artist or a musician? I was born in wealth, never wanted for anything. My mother kept servants, but still we had to work. She used to say, "we have all we want now, but will it be so forever?" And a good thing it was that we learned while yet young, for time changes; one year goes, another comes, each brings its sorrows and its joys. Each day has its tale to tell of some one who has lost a fortune, or some other who has found one.

And the day came to us too, when our fortune went, and happy we were that we knew how to go ahead and do the work. What a comfort it is to a mother if she is sick, and knows she has a daughter who can look after the household duties. Often is the time I have heard it said by women in trouble, "Would that my mother had taught me to work when I was a child; now I am married and must find out everything, and worry where there is no necessity for it."

Girls grow up, knowing nothing of the worry and troubles their mothers have. They go to school, to parties, concerts, and so on, and are as merry as larks, while their mothers are at home overburdened with care. Now, why not let them help and share the cares of their mothers, and comfort them? It would give both mother and daughter pleasure. Have you ever noticed a mother and daughter working and planning together, and sharing the sorrows, as well the joys of this life? If you have, you will know what a great help that daughter was to the mother. Take a girl that knows nothing about house-keeping, or the care of children, what is she when she is married? Then take one that knows about it, and see the contrast of the two new homes. Let sickness come in the house of the former, and she will be completely upset. Let it come to the latter, and she will know just what to do.

I never saw the woman yet, who was sorry that she had learned practical house-keeping, and a queer woman she must be if she were sorry for it. I think every woman ought to be proud of being a good housekeeper. And I know that men in general are very proud if they have a wife who is a good housekeeper.

BOONSBORO, Iowa, Feb. 1st.

Bro. Blair:—There is something which prompts me to write; for as I read the many letters in the Herald, and hear the cry for reapers, my heart goes out in sympathy to those who are hungering after the pure word of the Master, and especially when there are many places like our branch here, that are over burdened with members of the priesthood, and none of us doing much for the Master, while there are many places we could go and at least plant the word, even if we could not stay to water it, or see the increase. Now the question arises, If God has called us, (and no one of us disbelieves it), he intended us to work in his vineyard. Then why do we huddle up here in one corner, and in one another's way? Why don't we scatter out into new places and try to get the people to see what we do preach? By so doing we would be beneficial to ourselves, to our fellow men, and to the cause. But as long as there is an overplus of the priesthood in a branch, there is likely to be a lack on the part of the members in the discharge of their duties; experience has taught this. Now the main cause of this letter, aside from the love the writer has for the work, is to see if it would not come to the sight of some Saint, or Saints, where there are none of the priesthood living, that could correspond with us in regard to our moving into their neighborhood with a view to doing something for the Master as well as ourselves. Now if any brother should know of such a place, where a minister could get labor to support a wife and children, and put in a good share of time trying to tell the good news of the gospel, they will confer a favor by corresponding with us. We are poor as to this world's goods, but feel that laboring for the Master is time well spent. We are a kind of a Jack-at-all-trades, and a miller in particular. Don't care much about running a mill, as it is rather confining. Can plow, sow, reap or mow, carpenter, and do many other things. Can do very well here, but the main object is to get where we can do some local work for the Master, as well as physical labor for ourselves.

Ever praying for the welfare of Zion and her children, I subscribe myself your brother in the everlasting gospel,

W. F. CLARK.

Bro. Blair:—I have held eight preaching meetings at Maple River Junction, Iowa, from the 16th to the 24th inst. These meetings were not very well attended: snow being deep, roads bad, and nights cold. At this place I was very kindly received and entertained by Bro. Daniel W. Shirk and his excellent wife, and Mr. Lester Angell and his estimable lady, who have my heartfelt thanks. Bro. Shirk is a very exemplary man. He rendered excellent assistance in opening meetings and bearing testimony that we had presented the gospel of Christ. This brother needs the prayers of the Saints, as there is a great deal of prejudice against our people and the work of the last days in this locality.

Yours for the truth,

C. E. BUTTERWORTH.

DAVID DANCER, Lamoni, Iowa; Dear Sir: I send the following short letter and poem for publication in "The Saints' Herald."

Dear Readers of the Herald: Having been somewhat "out in the world," or rather among the people of the world, I thought I would write to the Herald to let you know that my brother John and myself are still clinging to the hope of meeting you all in Heaven, and also of meeting our dear parents and little brother, who have long since left their earthly home. At present I am in Cass county, Michigan, teaching school. My term is four months, for which I receive forty dollars per month. The neighborhood in which I am teaching is a neighborhood of Friends, or Quakers, as they are called. I find them to be a very friendly class of people, and I think that they are striving, the best they know how, to do what is right in the sight of the Lord. They are an earnest, praying people. Dear reader, I want you to pray for me and this a praying people.

The following few lines I write to you readers of the Herald, in which I attempt to express how our troubles disappear when we strive earnestly against them.

HOW TROUBLES DISAPPEAR.

If e'er the troubles of this life,
I would have driven away,
I must not sit down in the strife,
But work on night and day.

If, when I've found that some dark thread,
Across life's pathway 's drawn,
I battle on with ceaseless tread,
I'll break it—though 'tis strong.

If, when the skies are black as ink,
And angry tempests roll,
I do not let my sad heart sink,
Then I will reach the goal.

Great swarms of foes misfortune brings,
In summer's darkened hours,
Who hie away on lightning wings,
When our good fortune lowers.

The man of Uz found it not so
In his primeval day;
As now it is no man did know
Until time sped away.

But I have learned that not by chance,
Do troubles take their flight;
Nor, do they till we drilled t' advance,
Show them our will to fight.

And so my heart gives God the thanks,
To see them moving high;
For twixt us and their darkened ranks,
The Christian banners fly.

Yours in the bonds of Christ,

COLE MOXON.

STREATOR, Ill., Jan'y 31st.

Editors Herald.—We are pleased to state that we yet have a desire to give an answer for the hope that is within us. It seems that, for a long time, Satan has desired to separate us from the love of God; and instead of all feeling to suffer when one has suffered, or all rejoice when one rejoices, it has been the reverse of this. But we rejoice now, that instead of malice and strife, peace and unity are the characteristics of the Saints. To God be all the praise. May his Spirit ever keep us humble before him. We have been highly blessed and edified with the presence of Bro. Vickery, of Plano, who has baptized five here. We think Bro. Vickery is cut out for an exhorter and counsellor. They have every reason, we think, to be proud of their president in Plano. In our weakness we tried to wear off a little of the rust, in presenting the word last Sunday evening; felt a man-fearing spirit until our president offered prayer, when it dispersed like a shot; and, thank God, the few outsiders expressed themselves as well pleased. We feel the fire is again kindled. We expected to speak again to-night, but we have a champion for truth to feed us to-day and to-night, in the person of Elder J. C. Foss, so we gave way, and expect a good turnout to-night, principally Swedes.

Asking an interest in the prayers of the Saints that my longing desire may be granted, namely, the erection of a house of worship here, and that we may be faithful, I remain your brother,

JACOB STANLEY.

205 Park Avenue,

COUNCIL BLUFFS, Iowa,

January 31st, 1886.

Bro. W. W. Blair:—The discussion to have been held at Boonesboro, Iowa, commencing on the 6th inst., between Elder J. D. Pegg of the Seventh-day Adventist society, and myself, began on time and ended, I think, all right. After the first evening's session a storm interfered for three following evenings, so we resumed on the 10th, holding two sessions that day. In article of agreement I named four sessions of two hours each, Elder Pegg suggested six sessions, and on evening of the fifth I extended it with his consent, so we had eight sessions. Our proposition was: "Resolved, that the observance of the Seventh-day Sabbath named in the fourth commandment of the decalogue was and is binding upon all mankind." There is considerable to it, but the sufficiency you named in your letter to me was more of a sufficiency than Elder Pegg cared to have!

I made it a matter of much prayer after I received the first word from him, and the morning I left this city, directly after my morning devotion, the Spirit said: "I will bless thee for my truth's sake, for the sake of my people there, and for thy sake." And the Lord abundantly kept His promise! I entered upon the discussion comparatively "green" on the question, but the kind Father matured me ere I got through. Elder Pegg is their champion, is widely known throughout various states. He had a large number of books; histories, authors, etc., but your servant went with the Bible, and God's word shone brightly, as it always does. He had much to say about Constantine and the Papal power, and what the Pope wears on his forehead signifying his being God's vicar; and the last evening I felt impressed to present the Rev. something to wear on his forehead to keep the Pope company—and on it I painted in large letters—"Tebel," and held it to my forehead, and turning to the opponent, as the Spirit rested much upon me, I declared his arguments "weighed in the balance" of God's word and "found wanting;" and he looked confounded as I did so, and I gave it him as a chromo for his effort. He tried hard to excite me, or irritate me, but he did not, and he at times got quite boisterous, but God helped me to always arise with a smile, and that even provoked him. Elder Pegg is an able man; seemingly earnest, zealous, and a forcible speaker, but it is all wasted on a "lost cause." The debate was largely attended, and good attention given throughout, and many peoples' minds fixed upon the "first day" who had been wavering, and others from the Seventh day turned over.

The Boone County Republican gave a synopsis of my summary, I furnished them by request, which I forward with this letter.

I have been, and am blest much, at times, and blest always, in preaching the gospel word, and have received lately some excellent favors from the hand of God, for which I feel truly thankful. Some weeks ago I received calls from two different, and strange (to me) places, that were in exact fulfillment of a dream I had a short time prior to their reception, but have not been able to go. Bro. Blair, it is my daily and almost hourly, living, burning desire, and effort to do God's will. O, that I may be able by His loving-kindness to so live that His sacred peace may abide with me.

"Lord, I care not for riches,
Neither silver nor gold;
I would make sure of heaven,
I would enter the fold.
In the book of Thy kingdom,
With its pages so fair,
Tell me, Jesus, my Savior,
Is my name written there?"

Jesus said, as I used for my text this morning: "A man's life consisteth not in the abundance of things which he possesseth." I thank you for "notes" etc., sent me.

Yours, in the conflict,

J. F. McDOWELL.

LITTLE RIVER, Iowa, Jan. 19th.

Dear Herald:—It is with mingled feelings of pleasure and sorrow that I sit down to write you this morning; pleased that you are so prompt in your weekly visits, and sorry that your columns are not longer. I am pleased with the Herald in its present form, especially its tone. It seems to be giving a certain sound, and it can with propriety be called the messenger of truth. As such I use it with my neighbors with good results. There ought to be societies in the different branches throughout the church to raise funds to send the Herald and other church publications, gratis, to those of enquiring minds, and also to send them as messengers of peace to various localities to open up the way before the Elders, that prejudice might be removed. It is difficult to ascertain, until tried, the vast amount of good that might be accomplished in disseminating the light of truth in this way. Sacred Writ requires us to let our "light shine," and this would be a good way to do it. The ocean steamers and Nahum's chariots could soon carry the glad message even to very remote places in a short time. This would be like casting our bread upon the waters; and ere long we would see the good resulting therefrom.

The Saint who has an abiding testimony, and knows of the doctrine that it is of God, and is faithful, is not backward in using his temporal means for the spread of the gospel; for he has been blessed and has tasted of the good things of the kingdom, and they were "sweeter to him than honey in the honey-comb." The sweet influence of the Spirit is far greater than words can express. It causes a feeling of charity to arise in the heart that predominates over all covetous desires, and he is willing to do all he can to bring others into the fold of our blessed Redeemer, where they can participate with him in the enjoyment of these heaven-born principles. We intend to take up collections in our branch, and every Saint will have an opportunity to donate something for the church treasury. O Saints, let us not neglect the financial part of the work, but let us try and have our faith and works agree, remembering that "the Lord loves a cheerful giver." Bro. Little and I have of late been laboring in the branch, going from house to house, trying to encourage the Saints to duty. The branch has not been visited before for several years. We were glad to see such good desires manifested, with a willingness to still keep working for the prize. The Baptists have been holding a revival in New Salem Church, which is a mile from our place. It was conducted by Rev. Oxshier, of Kellerton, Iowa. About forty joined them during the protracted effort. He made heavy inroads in the dancing society, and succeeded in convincing many of the leading ones that the violin was dedicated to the devil's service, especially when used to make music for the dance. O, that a good Elder could step in just now while their hearts are penitent, and present Christ in his true work, preach to them the gospel in its fulness, and like Peter lead them into the marvelous light of the Sun of righteousness where they could, after complying with the requirements of the gospel, attain to a knowledge of their acceptance with God, and also of the doctrine whether it be of God or man. When mortals are led by their faith and repentance to a desire to comply with the requirements of the gospel, to be buried with Christ in baptism that they may become heirs to the Holy Spirit of promise, how necessary it is that they seek one who is called of God as was Aaron, to administer in the sacred ordinance, and the transaction be recorded in the "Lamb's Book of Life."

Yours in the love of truth,

J. M. BROWN.

COUNCIL BLUFFS, Iowa, Feb. 1st.

Bro. Blair:—In the last six months we have visited and preached in Crescent City, Hazel Dell and North Star Branches and felt well in bearing testimony of the restoration of the gospel. When preaching in the North Star Branch I felt wonderfully blessed with the Spirit of God. One Sunday I spoke on baptism. At the close of the meeting two requested baptism, a young man and his mother. How my heart praised God when I saw this aged sister go down into the waters of baptism and renew her covenant with her God. Thus one by one these aged soldiers of the cross come forward, pledging their faith anew. This was Sister Jane Carlisle; she and her husband live at Eight Mile Grove, and were in the church in the days of Joseph the Seer. God has encouraged us many times in his own way, by signs following, by visions, and by the voice of the Spirit.

If it had not been for the special evidence which God gives to us, we would have been discouraged long ago. Sometimes we feel that our inability and our plainness of speech are not such as the times demand, especially to those highly educated and refined, those whose nerves are so delicate and sensitive they will not listen unless the speaker can clothe his sentences with the language of the poet. Let this be as it may, we are going to keep on crying aloud, "Fear God, and give glory to him," for the poor have the gospel preached unto them.

How interested we have been in Bro. Joseph's mission to Utah. Many times have we prayed that God would open the eyes of that people, that they might see and know "when good cometh." We have always felt interested in that people. When Bro. Joseph was traveling through Utah, we thought of Alma of old, who left the judgment seat and went forth among his brethren. His heart was moved with that true charity of God, and he suffered all manner of affliction that he might reclaim them from their sins.

Shall we of the Reorganization not make every effort in our power to reclaim that people? Yes, brethren. If not, their blood will be required at our hands and we will not be found spotless at the last day. Some say it has cost the church a great deal of money to prosecute the work there, and so few have believed. Oh! brethren, what is money compared to the souls of men. Know ye not if the church had not made one convert in Utah, that the church has been doubly benefited by the effort made there, it has been the means of drawing the line of demarcation between the pure gospel of Christ and the abominations of that people in such a way that the nations has been able to see that primitive Mormonism had nothing to do with polygamy. The Reorganization have been "pleading the cause of injured innocence," for the last thirty odd years, and will continue to plead until the blame shall rest on those who are guilty of this terrible apostasy. Yes, and until the world shall know that the gospel brought by the angel to Joseph the Seer was truth and purity.

I remain your brother,

D. K. DODSON.

BLOOMINGTON, Dak., Jan'y 15th.

Bro. Blair: I am preaching most every Sunday. The Lord has helped me in my understanding. The people open the doors to me, and many come to hear. I preached at Bloomington last Sunday, with full house. If you would send some one to this place they would find churches to preach in, and could do a good work. The reason that I don't preach more is, I have to work for my living, for I am on a new farm. Times are very hard here. I do not like it here, for the water is very scarce. I will try it one more year, and if I can not raise anything, then I will leave.

Your brother,

J. HOGABOOM.

MT. MORIAH, Nova Scotia,
Dec. 15th, 1885.

Bro. Blair:—Though few in number we are striving for the spread of truth, as taught by Jesus Christ and his Apostles, as far as our circumstances will permit. We hold meetings every Sunday, and there seems to be an increase in number to hear, although some stand stiffly to the sects. We met in conference October 17th last, and were some disappointed in not having some Elder to meet with us. But we were favored by having Bro. H. J. Davison, president of Cornwallis Branch, to meet with us. He preached Sunday afternoon and evening with acceptance, and the Saints were edified, and returning home were somewhat built up, having their spiritual strength renewed. The conference session mended the clerk of the district to correspond with Bro. W. Kelley, president of the Eastern Mission, asking for an Elder to come and labor among us. We think the mission might be self-sustaining, or nearly so. We are building a meeting-house, and the outside is nearly done. We manage to hold meeting in it. I think if some Elder could come and labor steady, they would get a good hearing, and some good be done. We feel the Lord is waiting to bless those that will obey his commandments and prove faithful to the end. Your brother in Christ,

J. C. BURGESS.

CORTLAND, Illinois,
January 23d.

Brother Joseph.—I wish to bear testimony of the latter day work, and to the truth of the Book of Mormon. I know of no better way at present than to relate a dream that I had lately concerning that book. The course the Saints in Cortland and Dekalb have been pursuing for the last eight months, or more, may have had something to do in causing this dream. I will state that last May we commenced holding meetings regular twice a week. Sunday afternoons we held our reading meetings, under the name of Sunday school, or Bible class, the writer being chosen suprintendent. At first we would read from the Bible, or the Hope lesson; then ask and answer questions, concerning what we had read. About two months ago; as some of us had never read the Book of Mormon through, and fearing that we might merit the reproof given in Doctrine and Covenants, sec. 83: 4, we began to read the Book of Mormon through by course. Have now read seven lessons from that book, and have felt that we received a blessing at each lesson. We meet together, sing a hymn, then read a chapter from the Bible, and then pray; we then read by course from the Book of Mormon, each member present reading; spend an hour or more in this way, then dismiss and go home to come together in the evening for prayer and testimony. When an Elder is with us we then omit our reading lessons to hear him.

On Sunday, the third of this month Bro. Patterson organized us into a branch of fourteen members; and on the night of January 8th, the writer had the following dream:

I dreamed that I was at a small gathering—perhaps ten or a dozen, mostly men—who appeared to be a collection of visitors. There was one man present thirty or thirty-five years old; rather slender build, light complexion, well dressed with rather light colored clothes of a neat fit. There was something said about the Book of Mormon that caused him to enquire if anybody there believed in the book, or knew of its truth? I replied that I knew by the Spirit of God, that it was true, and that he might know that it was true, if he desired to, and would put himself in way of knowing. That I also knew that the Bible was true, save where it was mistranslated; but that the inspired translator corrected the most of those errors, or the most important ones; and I quoted Isa. 37: 36, as a sample. I also stated that there might be typographical errors, as there were more or less in all books.

The language used in my dream, by both the writer and the person referred to in the dream, is as nearly as I could remember next morning when the dream was fresh in my memory.

I have more than once felt the witness of the spirit of the truth of that book while reading the same; and on one occasion very powerfully while reading a portion of the fifteenth chapter of the book of Alma, and especially from paragraph four to seven inclusive. And while I continue to believe in the divinity of the Book of Mormon; I can not better close this letter and my testimony of that book, than by quoting from our Saints' Herald, page 121, vol. 32.

"While the writer continues to believe in the divinity of the Book of Mormon, he is bound to believe in revelations which the 'Choice Seer' gave to the church, even though he may not fully comprehend them all. Christ's apostles, for a season did not fully understand the Scriptures they believed in. Luke 24: 45. Peter did not understand Christ's commands to him. Matt. 28: 19; not the Scriptures which promised salvation to the Gentiles. Hosea 2: 23, with Rom. 9: 24, etc., till Christ in a marvelous way revealed the fact to him.—Acts 10: 1-48."

Nor does the writer fully understand all things that is true; but he is striving to grow in grace and in the knowledge of the truth. May God bless all his Saints, enabling them to cling to the rod of iron, which is the word of God, is the prayer of yours in Christ,

Dear Herald.—The work is still alive here, and God has warned us that we should be more united, and come to the help of the Lord against the combined powers of darkness. We need help, and have written to Bro. W. H. Kelley for help. We have got a meeting house up, and have the outside finished. We invite any Elder that can do so to give us a call, and we also ask the prayers of all God's people, as we are strong believers in the power of prayer.

MARMATON, Kansas, Jan. 30th.

Dear Brother Blair.—I was over in Missouri north-east of Nevada, at Brother and Sister Oleson's, and got home last Monday. I went over on Tuesday, the 19th, and preached five times; never felt better in my life in trying to present the word than I did during both times, while I was there. I gave all the chance to learn they could ask, by letting them ask questions bearing on the subjects, after I was through preaching. All worked pleasantly, several took notes after me while I was speaking. One man said he examined the Scriptures which he noted and found them correct. I think some are investigating. They never heard the gospel preached before. Oh, if I could be in the field enough to give my time and strength to the Lord's cause, how my heart would leap for joy. This is the greatest desire of my heart, if I know myself. There is nothing I go at that I feel blessed in like preaching the word. It is my desire by day, and many times my dreams by night. I pray the Lord to bear me up and loose the bands that have kept me back so long, viz, home cares. While at Bro. Olesons I was lying on the bed reading, after I returned from preaching, and was talking concerning my great desire to be in the missionary field, I arose, by a powerful influence which came upon me and exclaimed with tears, "My work will be given me; I'll get it—the Lord has been withholding that I should be better prepared." There is a work for me, and I know it. Several times has this occurred with me since I have been in the church, which always gives me courage. Pray for me, that the Lord may make me able and keep me so. In hope,

KALO, Iowa, Jan. 28th.

Bro. Blair.—I met an old friend of yours here. I am the only Latter Day Saint in Kalo, although there is a branch of the church a little over a mile away. To-day the assessor came and was questioning me as to what property I had, and the postmaster told him he could believe what I said as I was a Mormon. He replied, "Well, Mr. Phelan, you can say what you please, but the Mormons have the truth." That led him and myself to talk a little about the church, and he asked me if I was acquainted with W. W. Blair. I said No; but that I had read some of his writing. "Well, I know him," said he, "and a good man he is." He also knew Bro. Joseph and his father, and also Brn. Zenas Gurley, Briggs, and more of the Elders. His name is D. R. Fuller. He said you would remember him, and that he would like to hear from you very well. I was to let him know if you wrote to me in answer to this.

I am trying to do the Master's will, and whenever I get a chance to speak a word in behalf of the doctrine I do so. I was baptized by Bro. Roth in May, 1884, at Boonsboro. My relatives are all on the other side—they belong to the sectarian world, and laugh at me.

Your brother in Christ,

J. KNOX.

HOW TO SAVE BOYS.

Women who have sons to rear, and dread the demoralizing influences of bad associates, ought to understand the nature of young manhood. It is excessively restless. It is disturbed by vague ambitions, by thirst for action, by longings for excitement, by irrepressible desires to touch life in manifold ways. If you, mothers, rear your sons so that their homes are associated with the repression of natural instincts, you will be sure to throw them in the society that in some measure can supply the need of their hearts.

They will not go to the public house at first for love of liquor; they go for the animated and hilarious companionship they find there, which they discover does so much to repress the disturbing restlessness in their breasts.

See to it, that their homes compete with public places in attractiveness. Open your blinds by day and light bright fires by night. Illuminate your rooms. Hang pictures upon the wall. Put books and newspapers upon your tables. Have music and entertaining games. Banish demons of dullness and apathy that have so long ruled in your household, and bring in mirth and good cheer. Invent occupations for your sons. Stimulate their ambition in worthy directions. While you make home their delight, fill them with higher purposes than mere pleasure. Whether they shall pass boyhood and enter upon manhood with refined tastes and noble ambitions depend on you. Believe it possible that, with exertion and right means, a mother may have more control over the destiny of her boys than any other influence whatever.—Ed.

TEST THE SPIRIT.

SAINT JOHN was evidently concerned for the good of the church when he wrote: "Beloved, believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they are of God; because many false prophets are gone out into the world." Ever and anon are we requested by some people to manifest a sign; and often this request is supplemented with a statement, "If you will show such a sign, we will believe your doctrine." These requests are seductive, coming as they do in the form of a temptation. Hence, the divine wisdom in the above wise admonition. For as both good and evil spirits would be encountered, and none would be more exposed to deception than those who accepted as truthful the promise, "But the manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal." If there is not a sure rule of interpretation granted from "Him who can not lie," so that all manifestations, of every kind, nature and magnitude, whether coming from apostle, prophet, priest or layman, male or female, can be properly tested, that the source and correctness of such manifestations may be determined beyond the suspicion of a doubt, then the popular practice of dismissing all spiritual manifestations and the adoption of only the moral precepts and regulation as are taught in the Scriptures would be much the safest plan to follow. But as John directs to "try the spirits," surely it was for a wise purpose that the church was thus put upon its guard and instructed. It would appear folly in the extreme to attempt to believe this teacher would have us to understand that the only object in trying the spirits was to refuse and deny all that were presented as gifts by the Spirit, but rather that we comply with what is clearly the intention of the apostle, accept and profit by the receiving that which is God-given, and bestowed upon all those who have obeyed that form of doctrine which has ever been administered by the "measure" of the Holy Spirit, as promised by Christ when he says, "If any man will do his will he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself." This was certainly Paul's design when he said, "Prove all things; hold fast that which is good." Another, and fully as great an object of this valuable instruction lies in the testing of spirits—we discover the evil, and escape the consequences that must inevitably follow if we succumb to the guidance of that power that has ever sought to counterfeit and supplant the true gifts that are promised upon keeping the required conditions of the gospel covenant.

He has poorly read the history of the past who has failed to perceive that the true and the false manifestations are brought in close contact. The first important lesson for all to learn is, that "the law of the Lord is perfect," that all spiritual manifestations are subordinate to the written word, and that the spiritual gifts are bestowed as an auxiliary to assist those who make the effort to have their life, walk and conversation comport with the behests of heaven. And when we are besieged with "sign seekers," we cite them to the scenes of the Crucifixion; "and they that passed by railed on him, wagging their heads, and saying, Ah, thou that destroyest the temple, and buildest it in three days, save thyself, and come down from the cross. Likewise also the chief priests mocking said among themselves, with the scribes, He saved others; himself he can not save. Let Christ, the King of Israel, descend now from the cross, that we may see and believe." Which shows that it was not compatible with the design of the Almighty that Christ should have complied with the request of implacable "sign seekers," and delivered himself from the cross, and thereby gained renown and glory in the exhibition of his deliverance, I personally would just as soon give cheerful and full confidence and worship to one who possessed power to free himself from the ignominious death upon the tree, as one possessing power to arise out of the grave. Belief that Christ is the Son of God being the germ of salvation, it would appear, from a human standpoint, that when those around the cross made such a fair promise that if Christ would come down they would believe, that this was a golden opportunity to make believers. Perhaps the equal of this opportunity will never again appear. But God was deaf to all their importunate demands, and Christ was "delivered by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God," thus carrying out the divine plan which chains our admiration of the fixed principles of the divine law. The sad death and triumphant resurrection of Jesus are more supremely grand and stable, than all else accomplished by the despised One of Nazareth. Here is a good place to furnish a sentence from the Chief Teacher of God's plan for man's salvation. An exigency arose through tempting the Master, who said, "A wicked and adulterous generation seeketh after a sign." It would be well for those of the present time, ere they ask an unreasonable thing, that they enquire who those parties were whom Jesus rebuked so severely. They were "Pharisees" and Sadducees"—the most devout religionists of that period. It was the unwise zeal they possessed for their religion that sealed their hearts against the truth, and caused them to reject the Anointed One.

When we are still more closely pressed to show a sign, we find a reply in the promise, "And these signs shall follow them that believe." Within this strong bulwark we may abide until every storm be past; and notwithstanding men may be very anxious to reverse the order, and have the signs go before belief, we are not responsible for the order in which God set these gifts, neither are we willing, by a direct effort upon our part, or by compromise to gain to the cause believers, and seek to reverse that which God hath appointed. As the harvest is the result of faithful and untiring toil to the farmer, so is the receiving of signs to those who have put on Christ in baptism. Some will say, "How shall we know the genuine from the spurious?" To all such we have but one reply, "It is written;" and we adopt the rule appointed by "The Father of lights, with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning." For in the mouth of two or three witnesses shall every word be established. Ezekiel said: "And when this cometh to pass, (lo, it will come), then shall they know that a prophet hath been among them." Moses said: "When a prophet speaketh in the name of the Lord, if the thing follow not, nor come to pass, that is the thing which the Lord hath not spoken, but the prophet hath spoken it presumptuously: thou shalt not be afraid of him." Isaiah said: "To the law and to the testimony; if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them." And Jesus said: "Now I tell you before it come, that when it is come to pass, ye may believe that I am he." Under the gospel economy we find mentioned as the gifts or signs of God to man promised, 1, wisdom; 2, knowledge; 3, faith; 4, healing; 5, miracles; 6, prophecy; 7, discerning; 8, tongues; 9, interpretation; 10, dreams; 11, visions; 12, eternal life. There are other gifts which we might add to this list, but these suffice to illustrate the point at issue. May we expect to possess in the church at the present time such a portion of grace as will entitle us to the reception of these several gifts? What saith the scriptures? "These signs shall follow them that believe." Do any believe? Well, it would seem reasonable to suppose that all church members were believers and therefore under the promise made by the Lawgiver, and that each would receive such a gift as would be a fulfillment, "the manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal." Now, I am prepared to ask those who oppose the spiritual gifts in the church at the present time, if the signs do not appear among the so-called followers of Christ, is it not a sufficient cause for doubts to arise? As soon as doubts are expressed and inquiry is made, some uninspired teacher, who himself does not believe, explains that these things were only for a particular time and people; others say the qualifications and the restrictions vouchsafed to us were not in the original article as pronounced by the Lord. But Jesus bade his apostles "Teach all nations, * * * observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you." Peter, in harmony with this instruction promised upon repentance and baptism the Holy Spirit "unto you;" "your children;" those "afar off," and to those whom "the Lord our God shall call." With this plain promise, no minister can be consistent when saying to sinners, "God calls you now," or "tonight;" and in the next breath tells those same sinners that "repentance and baptism" are essential, and then deny to them the fulfillment of the promise made by Peter when under the influence of the Spirit sent down on the day of Pentecost. Beware before you attempt to divorce that which God hath joined together! Read, and be convinced that repentance, baptism and the Holy Spirit, are united with the word "and." To remove that word, or to omit quoting the last ten words of Acts 2:38, is to do violence to heaven's grandest proclamation, wherein man is furnished with the knowledge of the means whereby he may be freed from sin, and obtain a "lamp to his path, and a light to his feet" while making the journey of life, through this world of sin, sorrow, pain and death.

Let us now take a brief retrospect of these several gifts, and do so by number. 1st. Can it be that any one engaged in the laudable effort of trying to ameliorate the condition of his fellow being, but what has felt the need of that "wisdom" which cometh from on high and leadeth up to duty, acceptance, and glory? 2d. The confusion, ill-will and divisions found in all organizations who claim to be the "body of Christ," evince that there is a deplorable want of that "knowledge" which is bequeathed unto man by the Holy Spirit. 3d. Not as a formula of belief, or creed, but as the action of the mind resulting to the individual, in evidence that God works in and through man as in ancient times, read the result of the operation of faith as described in the eleventh chapter of Hebrews, and then seek for "the assurance of things hoped for," and "contend earnestly for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints." The ministers of all the churches have long felt the need of an increase of pure and simple faith. Let joy give place to sadness, for "the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord," has been heralded abroad, and the glad news are now received wherein the Lord promised saying, "I will put my law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts." Unto faithful and true servants has this come, and they now spread these tidings among the people, and are preparing a band to receive with joy the coming Messiah. 4th. This for many long years has been counted among the "lost arts;" but there is an awaking upon the importance of having this gift restored to its proper place, and there are favorable indications that "healing" by faith in the promises of God, with prayer, is daily becoming more frequent. 5th. We stand upon the threshold of an age big with the most stupendous and awe-inspiring "miracles" mentioned in the Bible. 6th. Of this the world is full; and the important feature in prophecy is to prevent enthusiasm leading into acts with which the Holy Spirit has naught to do. Our text, and "witnesses," govern upon this point. 7th. "Now concerning spiritual gifts, brethren, I would not have you ignorant." The absence of this gift has taken away the safeguards which prevent "wolves in sheep's clothing" from entering, who bring in shame, reproach and loss to the flock of God. The restoration and right application thereof would go a long ways in weeding out the black sheep or goats. 8th. This is the most abused gift of all those promised. We will therefore be more critical in the examination of it. The general commission of Christ to the Apostles, as it is recorded by Mark, has "new tongues" as one of the signs to follow, and the last scenes upon the cross were marked by the Son of God using this sign. In proof of this statement we herewith subjoin both the tongue and the interpretation thereof: "Eloi, Eloi, lama sabachthani." The interpretation is, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" Jesus said to the apostles: "Tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem until ye be endued with power from on high." These men did as directed, and when they received the promised endowment, the "cloven tongues like as of fire" sat upon them, and this was the first gift manifested. The last by Christ, and the first by the apostles. This is passing strange, indeed; and more especially is it strange to those who are, by misfortune, or willfully, ignorant of God's revealed will and purpose concerning these signs. Paul sheds much light on this branch of the subject. "Wherefore, tongues are for a sign, not to them that believe, but to them that believe not." Upon reading this many who do not believe will say, "You are under obligation to speak in tongues, for we do not believe, and it is a sign unto us." It is a difficult task to get such persons to see the true intent of this text, or if they do, to get them to confess the truth. Let the example in Scripture be the end of contention. Surely, the apostles on the day of Pentecost, were preaching in tongues to those "that believe not"—"Behold, are not all these which speak Galileans?" This was said of those who preached unto the people. The language and dialect of that congregation were as follows. That of the apostles, Parthians, Medes, Elamites, of Mesopotamia, Judea, Cappadocia, Pontus, Asia, Phrygia, Pamphylia, Egypt, Libya, Cyrene, Rome, and of Crete and Arabia. This mixed congregation, were "them that believe not;" and let them tell the result of the preaching in the gift of tongues, "Every man heard them speak in his own language." When the truth was thus by the power of God so forcefully presented that all could hear and understand, the disciples received a strong reinforcement; for there were "added unto them about three thousand souls." O you who fight against the gift of tongues, consider that the angels of heaven rejoice over one sinner that turns from sin to righteousness. Certainly, the turning of about three thousand was enough to cause a jubilee among the angels. Let the unbeliever of to-day understand that when one shall speak to another "in tongues" in "his own language," then has he that hears received a sign. Some object that the gift of tongues is faulty or fractional, and "whether there be tongues, they shall cease." Should any take alarm at this statement, we may ask, When will they cease? "When that which is perfect is come," is Paul's reply, God will permit us the crumbs till the feast is prepared. Now my pilgrim friend, do you remember reading, "Go to, let us go down, and there confound their language, that they may not understand one another's speech?" Upon the accomplishing of this, the people were scattered abroad, to every land and island of the world, and an imperfect language or dialect is the common lot of all men. The logic based upon the promise of perfection, would inspire us with the hope that God will continue to bestow "line upon line," and retain for man's good the fractional till he fulfills this promise: "For then will I turn to the people a pure language, that they may all call upon the name of the Lord, to serve him with one consent." Zeph. 3:10. When this is done, tongues will be no longer needed. But until then, do not rob us of the fragments that come from our Father's loving hand. 9th. Upon this little need be said, for "interpretation" is contingent upon the exercise of tongues. 10th. We are not justified in rejecting all dreams for the reason that most people dream. Some of the clearest and most important things revealed in the Bible came through this medium. God hath promised, and who shall hinder. If space would permit we could furnish many instances of the fulfillment of dreams, that has recently been published in many newspapers. 11th. Visions were promised to the "young men" by Joel, and reiterated by Peter. And the "wise man" tells us that "where there is no vision the people perish." None are so blind as those who refuse to see. 12th. As to this, the chief gift from God, we only need say, "But if the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you."

Having briefly gone over these wonderful things we find in the good book, I wish to add here the matured thoughts from the pen of one well versed, by study and experience, on this subject: "We are to try the spirits and prove them, for it is often the case that men make a mistake in regard to these things. God has so ordained that when he has communicated, no vision is to be taken but what you can see by the seeing of the eye, or what you can hear by the hearing of the ear. When you see a vision, pray for the interpretation. If you get not this, shut it up; there must be certainty in this matter. An open vision will manifest that which is more important. Lying spirits are going forth in the earth. There will be great manifestations of spirits, both false and true. Being born again comes by the Spirit of God through ordinances. An angel of God never has wings. Some will say that they have seen a spirit; that he offered them his hand, but they did not touch it. This is a lie. First, it is contrary to the plan of God; a spirit can not come but in glory; (as Moses and Elias; Matt.); an angel has flesh and bones; we see not their glory. The devil may appear as an angel of light. Ask God to reveal it; if it be of the devil he will flee from you; if of God, he will manifest himself, or make it manifest.

We may come to Jesus and ask him; he will know all about it; if he comes to a little child he will adapt himself to the language and capacity of a little child. Every spirit, or vision, or singing, is not of God. The devil is an orator; he is powerful; he took our Savior on to a pinnacle of the temple, and kept him in the wilderness for forty days. The gift of discerning of spirits will be given to the Presiding Elder. Pray for him that he may have this gift. Speak not in the gift of tongues without understanding it, or without interpretation. The devil can speak in tongues; the adversary will come with his work; he can tempt all classes; can speak in English or Dutch. Let no one speak in tongues unless he interpret, except by the consent of the one who is placed to preside; then he may discern or interpret, or another may." See Joseph the Seer, p. 190-1. The clear and positive instruction in this long extract, can not be improved upon by any words of mine, however I would urge upon all who are blessed with any of the gospel gifts to observe these rules, and thereby raise the spiritual standard, that the wavering shall be made strong, the weak confirmed, and the strong made perfect. We are not required to cry aloud and publish all that is manifested to us, for the reason that many of the revealments made to us by the Spirit are for a personal or individual benefit. Herewith I transcribe some of Paul's most pungent remarks, and directions upon the use of spiritual gifts, and let your mind be filled with a holy desire to know and do good unto all men, by teaching them more perfectly the way of life.

"For he that speaketh in an unknown tongue speaketh not unto men, but unto God; for no man understandeth him; howbeit in the Spirit he speaketh mysteries. But he that prophesieth speaketh unto men to edification, and exhortation, and comfort. He that speaketh in an unknown tongue edifieth himself; but he that prophesieth edifieth the church. I would that ye all spake with tongues, but rather that ye prophesied; for greater is he that prophesieth than he that speaketh with tongues, except he interpret, that the church may receive edifying. Now, brethren, if I come unto you speaking with tongues, what shall I profit you, except I shall speak to you either by revelation, or by knowledge, or by prophesying, or by doctrine? And even things without life giving sound, whether pipe or harp, except they give a distinction in the sounds, how shall it be known what is piped or harped? For if the trumpet give an uncertain sound, who shall prepare himself for battle? So likewise ye, except ye utter by the tongue words easy to be understood, how shall it be known what is spoken? For ye shall speak into the air. There are, it may be, so many kind of voices in the world, and none of them is without signification. Therefore if I know not the meaning of the voice, I shall be unto him that speaketh a barbarian, and he that speaketh shall be a barbarian unto me. Even so ye, forasmuch as ye are zealous of spiritual gifts, seek that ye may excel to the edifying of the church. Wherefore let him that speaketh in an unknown tongue pray that he may interpret. For if I pray in an unknown tongue, my spirit prayeth, but my understanding is unfruitful. What is it then? I will pray with the Spirit, and I will pray with the understanding also: I will sing with the Spirit, and I will sing with the understanding also. Else, when thou shalt bless with the Spirit how shall he that occupieth the room of the unlearned say Amen at the giving of thanks, seeing he understandeth not what thou sayest? For thou verily givest thanks well, but the other is not edified. I thank my God, I speak with tongues more than ye all: Yet in the church I had rather speak five words with my understanding, than ten thousand words in an unknown tongue. Brethren, be not children in understanding: howbeit in malice be ye children, but in understanding men. In the law it is written, With men of other tongues and other lips will I speak unto this people; and yet for all that will they not hear me, saith the Lord. Wherefore tongues are for a sign, not to them that believe, but to them that believe not: but prophesying serveth not for them that believe not, but for them which believe. If therefore the whole church be come together into one place, and all speak with tongues, and there come in those that are unlearned, or unbelievers, will they not say that ye are mad? But if all prophesy, and there come in one that believeth not, or one unlearned, he is convinced of all, he is judged of all; and thus are the secrets of his heart made manifest; and so falling down on his face he will worship God, and report that God is in you of a truth. How is it then, brethren? when ye come together, every one of you hath a psalm, hath a doctrine, hath a tongue, hath a revelation, hath an interpretation. Let all things be done unto edifying. If any man speak in an unknown tongue, let it be by two, or at the most by three, and that by course; and let one interpret. But if there be no interpreter, let him keep silence in the church; and let him speak to himself, and to God. Let the prophets speak two or three, and let the other judge. If any thing be revealed to another that sitteth by, let the first hold his peace. For ye may all prophesy one by one, that all may learn, and all may be comforted. And the spirits of the prophets are subject to the prophets. For God is not the author of confusion, but of peace, as in all churches of the saints. * * * What! came the word of God out from you? or came it unto you only? If any man think himself to be a prophet, or spiritual, let him acknowledge that the things that I write unto you are the commandments of the Lord. But if any man be ignorant let him be [let him confess he is, Ed.] ignorant. Wherefore, brethren, covet to prophesy, and forbid not to speak with tongues. Let all things be done decently and in order."

Patient reader; when you arrive at this long quotation, do not skip over it, but read it carefully, and note the reasoning, logic, and conclusions of the great Apostle unto the Gentiles. His argument is full and complete. May the household of faith be able to eschew all that would cause division, strife, or coldness, but rather learn and emulate that which will bring an increase of love, confidence, peace and unity.

RAISING A CROP.

DEAR HERALD:—When working in my garden in the summer time, which is situated close to the road, I hear many remarks made by passers by, not intended for my ears sometimes, some complimentary, and others not so much so.

Last summer, a wagon load of people were passing, I was some little distance from the road, and presume that the party did not think I could hear them, did not hear what the first person said, but the remark brought forth from the saying, I did viz., "Yes he is always hoeing in his garden."

This set me to thinking, and the thoughts consequent upon the remark I desire to communicate to your readers, if you have no objections. The first suggestion was, that the remark was intended as complimentary, but upon further consideration came the thought, possibly it is one of reproof. It came in this wise. Is it possible that I am esteemed as the man with the "muck rake"—as represented by Bunyan in his Pilgrim's Progress—whose head was always down, and who did not look up and see the crown over his head, which he might obtain, if his thoughts were not so engrossed with the things of earth. However meant, it caused the writer to go through a process of self-examination, and he concluded to heed the lesson, to strive to take time to look up at the crown, and reach forth in God's appointed way to obtain it. Other thoughts came marshalling along in rank and file like the following, "Work while the day lasts for the night cometh wherein no man can work."

This will apply to things temporal as well as spiritual. If I lounge around or go visiting my neighbors too much in the day time, I can not work in the night, the consequence is, that which was planted is choked with weeds and is smothered to death, and at harvest if there is anything at all it is worthless; and then I might whine and complain at the providence of God, and think that things were too unequally divided, and oh! how hard hearted my rich brethren are, how uncharitable not to divide with a brother in Christ; when the fact is my own improvidence brought these things about, because I did not work while the day lasted.

Right in this connection we were reminded of a story read when a young man in the "American Agriculturist," of two farmers who were nominated for Representatives to the State Legislature. One of whom, for some time before election day, neglected his work on the farm to make stump speeches to secure his election, and on the election day spent considerable money in liquors and cigars to procure votes; the other stayed at home, tended to his business, seemingly not over-anxious about how the election went, but acted on the maxim, "a bird in the hand is worth two in the bush," and it was his good fortune to be elected. The artist of that paper had pictured the condition of the two men after election. The one who had gone about making stump speeches, sat on the fence, watching a little urchin digging potatoes, who held up a potatoe-vine he had pulled up by the roots, on which was to be seen half a dozen diminutive looking potatoes, which he was in the act of handing to the farmer, who was represented as having just put on his spectacles in order to see them, and his eyes bunged out in astonishment at what he beheld.

The one who stayed at home tending his business was represented as being in his potatoe patch to, digging his potatoes when the messenger sent to inform him of his election arrived—and the nice large bulbs lay in winrows as a reward for the care and labor bestowed upon them. There needs no comment of mine upon the picture drawn, it carries its own lesson.

In carrying the parallel in spiritual things my thoughts ran thus. I am engaged in raising a crop which consists of "The fruits of the Spirit viz. love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance; against such there is no law."—Gal. 5: 22, 23.

Well said the apostle, against such there is no law, for the law is all in favor of such fruit raising. He says in Rom. 13: 16: "Love worketh no ill to his neighbor, therefore love is the fulfilling of the law." The Savior declared that upon Love to God and to our neighbors hung all the law and the prophets. Dear Herald, the writer thought he saw the greatness of the task before him, in a measure, he saw that it would take all the diligence he was master of to cultivate the crop, to keep it free from weeds of every description, to secure its development, and that it might yield abundantly. He knew he was dependent upon the refreshing showers of the grace of God, and upon the sunshine of God's Spirit, to water and warm up the soil upon which the crop should grow, and also knew—according to God's word—that if he should neglect this crop, and go worship at the shrine of the god of this world, and succeed in gaining the whole world, it would be at the expense of the crop he was raising, and as a consequence that of his soul, and he could not afford to do that, it was paying too high a price for the worldly bauble.

If love is the fulfilling of the law, it is the principal part of the crop, indeed the most, if not all of the other portion depends upon it. If we love God with all our heart and our fellow-man as ourself, what can hinder joy from springing up in our heart? If the love of God dwells in our hearts constantly, what can hinder peace from dwelling there also? If our hearts are filled with the love of God, [charity] the apostle says charity suffereth long, which long suffering is another portion of the crop specified in the catalogue, and thus we might proceed through the list, and we would find the balance of the crop in its order, are the effects of love. If the foregoing deductions are correct, it follows that our main labor is to be bestowed on love.

In the writer's opinion, the weed that takes the most strength from love is selfishness, which may be denominated a corruption, or abuse of self-love. Self-love is allowable in the text "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." But the abuse of that self-love, which is selfishness, is not allowed. It does not say thou shalt love thy neighbor not quite so much as thyself. No that would gender to selfishness, for I would then love myself better than my neighbor, which is not the command.

God knew that man did not need to be commanded to love himself, he would willingly, and always do that, but to love his neighbor as himself was so contrary to human nature, it would require a strenuous, and continuous effort to come up to this standard. As, in the writer's opinion, love is the prime mover of all that is good, so we believe selfishness to be the leading motives to all that is bad. It is written, "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish but have everlasting life." It is also written, that the Savior left the courts of glory to come and do the Father's will, and offer himself as that gift that the world perish not. Here, we think, it is plainly seen, that love was the prime mover in both the Father and the Son, in the act of saving the world. Love to God causeth man who believeth in his word, to do good unto his fellow-man because commanded of God to do so, as it is written, "If you love me you will keep my commandments." And if love worketh no ill to his neighbor, all the works done to or for that neighbor must be good, and if all our actions are good to our fellow-man, we are fulfilling the law "for love is the fulfilling of the law." From these deductions we conclude that love is the prime mover of all that is good.

Selfishness moved Lucifer, a son of the morning, to lust after the honor and glory of God, to seek to breed disturbance and contention in heaven, inaugurating a war to gain his selfish desires, but being cast to the earth he has sought the destruction of mankind, by drawing them away from the service of their God.

The governments of nations from selfishness, lust after power, honor, and dominion, and reckless of the slaughter of their subjects, as well as of those to whom they are opposed and of the treasure squandered; reckless of the sorrow and mourning brought in the homes of the widow and fatherless, and of the fathers, mothers, brothers and sisters of those slain; reckless of the groaning and misery consequent upon the heavy burdens of taxation, placed upon their subjects, to supply the exorbitant demands to raise means to carry out their lustful and covetous desires; they pursue their selfish, ambitious designs, inaugurate war, and established their thrones in the blood, and sweat and treasure, not only of their own subjects, but of the conquered foe, enslaving millions of God's fair creatures, made after his own image. We might carry on the illustration of the evil effects of selfishness upon individual actions, but desire not to be tedious, taxing the good nature of the reader no further than to ask him the question, is there a bad action we ever perform but what can be traced back to selfishness as the cause?

If then our deductions are correct, selfishness is the source of all evil, and the opinion expressed that it was the weed that took the most strength from love, is correct. This being the case, we thought, friend Herald, it would require the most of our time to keep it down, (it having so strong a root, with innumerable branches, showing the great necessity of constant labor) we must be diligent, "Work while the day lasts, for the night cometh wherein no man can work." We must keep it down in order that love may grow to its full measure, a dwarfed diminutive crop is not very marketable anywhere, neither will a dwarfed diminutive love be very marketable with our Judge, who will not like to pay a very high price (or reward) for such an article. He may pay an inferior price—or lessor glory—but we want to receive the highest reward, therefore must cultivate and enrich the soil, keeping it clean, and this will keep us all the time "hoeing in the garden," naturally and spiritually.

THE BED ROCK.

BRO. JOSEPH.—After reading an article entitled "The Church of Jesus Christ, Figurative and Literal, from the pen of brother George S. Lincoln, in Herald No. 52, vol. 31, and as I have read a great many articles something similar to the above, I have not as yet been satisfied on the whole. Not being much of a writer I have kept silence, but after reading the above article I have made up my mind to write some of my views on the subject, if the church as a body has not decided upon this question. But if it has, I want to know it, and then I am satisfied. The solid, firm substance on which the church is to be built, is revelation from God.

Now I differ from my brother in this way, Christ asked his Apostles, "Whom do men say that I the Son of man am? And they said, Some say thou art John the Baptist: some, Elias; and others, Jeremias, or one of the prophets. He saith unto them, whom say ye that I am? And Simon Peter answered and said, Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God. And Jesus answered and said unto him, Blessed art thou, Simon Bar-jona: for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, (the truth of his being the Son of God), but my Father which is in heaven. And I say also unto thee, That thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it."—Matt. 16: 13-18. Now the question arises, If the revelation is not the rock, then what is? To me it is the fact, the truth, that Jesus is the Christ, and not revelation as stated in the above article.

The revelation was only the truth brought to light by the will of God to Peter. God so opened Peter's eyes that he could see clearly that Jesus was the Christ of a truth, and after having this knowledge from God he could confidentially say, "Thou art the Christ." After saying that Peter was blessed in that he had received such a knowledge he said, "And I say also unto thee, that thou art Peter, and upon this rock, (truth, not Peter nor the revelation), I will build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." Rock, as I understand it, is a solid and firm substance—something that we can rely upon as a sure foundation for any kind of building. So also is truth. It is a firm foundation, and any one that will build upon it need fear no storm let it come when it will. As the poet said,

"Truth is divine wherever found,
On Christian or on heathen ground."

Although we may have the rock—truth—within our reach, unless we have the light also, so we can see, we can not build upon them no more than if they were not within our reach. But when the light appears, then we can see clearly. Then we know what we are doing. It is by the light that the "rock,"—truth—is revealed to us. Had not God revealed the fact to Peter he would not have known any more than the rest, hence I say again that revelation was only the light by which the "rock," or truth, was brought to sight so that the church could be built upon it. And as long as the church is built upon the truth, the gates of hell can not prevail against it. The resting of the Holy Ghost on Christ's head (John 1: 33, 34) was not the fact that he was Christ; but it was the means of giving John that knowledge and establishing the fact in his mind, as God had previously told him, that he was the Son of God, and consequently he like Peter bore record that he was the Son of God, of a truth. It is upon truth as revealed from God he builds his church, and this is the rock referred to by Christ. Upon truth, God's work always began; and upon it his work always must stand; and upon it the Church must ever be built.

WHERE IS EPHRAIM?

WE believe that the word of God as given through his servants the prophets will have a literal fulfillment. Jeremiah says 31:6: "For there shall be a day that the watchman upon the mount Ephraim shall cry, Arise ye, and let us go up to Zion, unto the Lord our God. For thus saith the Lord; Sing with gladness for Jacob, and shout among the chief of the nations; publish ye, praise ye, and say, O Lord, save thy people, the remnant of Israel." "For" says God, "I am a father to Israel, and Ephraim is my first born." In Genesis chapter 48, Jacob blesses the two sons of Joseph, naming the tribe of Joseph after them, Ephraim and Manasseh, and says, "Let them grow into a multitude in the midst of the earth." Joseph objected to his father's putting Ephraim before Manasseh who was the eldest. His father replied, "Manasseh shall be a people, he also shall be great, but his younger brother shall be greater than he, and his seed shall become a multitude of nations." In Gen. 49:22, Jacob blesses Joseph and prophesies what shall happen to his seed in the future: "Joseph is a fruitful bough, even a fruitful bough by a well, whose branches run over the wall." The branches of Joseph's bough, are, without doubt, Ephraim and Manasseh; and that they should "run over the wall" shows they would leave their native land and cross the waters. And although they should be "shot at and hated," they should become a strong and warlike people. From thence is the shepherd, the stone of Israel. That is, that in Ephraim and Manasseh,—or the tribe of Joseph,—shall be found the one who gathers to the gathering place in Israel, or in other words, Jesus Christ who indeed is the Shepherd and stone of Israel, working in and through the seed of Joseph unto the gathering of all Israel. The blessings of Jacob had prevailed above the blessings of his progenitors Abraham and Isaac, "unto the utmost bounds of the everlasting hills." The promises of inheritance given to them only related to the land of Palestine, while Jacob's had prevailed "unto the utmost bounds of the everlasting hills," which he sealed upon the head of Joseph. The utmost bounds of the everlasting hills, in its full meaning, takes in all the world, but in regard to the inheritance promised to Joseph it means the farthest point from where Jacob then stood, Goshen in Egypt. Take the map and measure from the land of Palestine, east and west and the "utmost bound" is found in the land of North America. The Book of Mormon tells us that Lehi, who was of the seed of Manasseh was commanded of God to take his family and go into the wilderness, and He would lead him to "a land that was precious above all other lands." He traveled first, south to the Red Sea; then south south-east along its borders many days, then turning east they ever kept about that course until they reached the sea, which they called Isreantum. This took them about eight years. In their course from the Red Sea they must have passed near the head of the Persian Gulf, from which an east course would carry them to the Yellow Sea in China. Probably some where near the shores of that sea the land Bountiful was. Here they built a ship as God commanded them, and put to sea. And it is probable they still kept the same course to the east, which would bring them to the west coast of what is now Lower California, or Mexico. When they had landed there they found a land whose valleys and plains were fruitful, whose mountains and hills were rich with precious ores and its climate delightful. Moses in Deut. 33:13 says of Joseph: "Blessed of the Lord be his land for the precious things of heaven, for the dew and the deep that coucheth beneath; and for the precious things brought forth by the sun and for the precious things put forth by the moon; and for the chief things of the ancient mountains, and for the precious things of the lasting hills. And for the precious things of the earth and the fulness thereof; and for the good will of him that dwelt in the bush. Let the blessing come upon the head of Joseph, and upon the top of the head of him that was separate from his brethren. His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the horns of unicorns; with them he shall push the people together to the ends of the earth. And they are the ten thousands of Ephraim, and the thousands of Manasseh." The horns of Joseph here spoken of and the branches are the same, Ephraim and Manasseh. With them he will push the people together to the ends of the earth. The ends of the earth I conceive to be the same as the utmost bounds of the everlasting hills, or "the midst of the earth," mentioned by Jacob, the land of America.

The Book of Mormon is "the stick of Joseph." It was written by Manasseh. It tells us how he became a great people upon this land. Unto him God gave the great things of his law, even the gospel. Unto him Christ was revealed, but who at last dwindled away in unbelief and wickedness, were destroyed, and only a remnant was left. Although the stick of Joseph was written by Manasseh, yet when the dispensation of the fulness of times comes in, it is given into the hands of Ephraim,—"I have written to him the great things of my law, and they are accounted a strange thing."—Hosea 8:12. The record becomes the stick of Ephraim when it is found in his hand as God's law to him. And also this land becomes the Mount Ephraim when the watchmen of Ephraim shall cry, "Arise ye, and let us go up to Zion, unto the Lord our God."

There is a grand work for Ephraim to do in this dispensation in which Israel is to be gathered. Zechariah, speaking of the gathering of Israel, says, "And they of Ephraim shall be like a mighty man, and their heart shall rejoice as through wine." 10:7. If it is his work to shout the good news "among the chief of the nations," he will certainly be found in position to do that work—even among the "the chief of nations." It seems that when Israel was carried away captive, Ephraim became broken and scattered among the nations. For, as Hosea says, "Ephraim has mixed himself among the people." Becoming broken, mixed, and scattered among the Gentile nations he lost his identity as a tribe of Israel, and became identified with those nations. It was the seed of Ephraim that was to become "a multitude of nations," and not a tribe. Drifting with the tide of civilization and progress as it has rolled to the west, he crosses the Atlantic and comes to this land, ("shaddowing with wings"), and the "ten thousands of Ephraim and the thousands of Manasseh" are being pushed together to the ends of the earth, for this seems to be the fulfilling of that prophecy. For Manasseh coming from the west, and Ephraim coming from the east, and meeting upon this land they are thus pushed together.

And I would say to the Elders and people of latter day Israel, If you are not Ephraim, you are doing the work of Ephraim. In sec. 64:7, D. C., it says, "Behold, the Lord requireth the heart and a willing mind; and the willing and obedient shall eat the good of the land of Zion in these last days; and the rebellious shall be cut off out of the land of Zion, and shall be sent away, and shall not inherit the land; for verily I say that that the rebellious are not of the blood of Ephraim; wherefore they shall be plucked out." It follows then, of course, that the obedient are of the blood of Ephraim. Section 108:6, reads, "And they shall bring forth their rich treasures unto the children of Ephraim my servants, and the boundaries of the everlasting hills shall tremble at their presence. And then shall they fall down and be crowned with glory, even in Zion, by the hands of the servants of the Lord, even the children of Ephraim; and they shall be filled with songs of everlasting joy. Behold this is the blessing of the everlasting God upon the tribes of Israel, and the rich blessings upon the heads of Ephraim and his fellows." I can not help thinking, that when the records of the Nephites were put into the hands of Jos. Smith, "the stick of Joseph" was "in the hand of Ephraim;" and, joined with the Bible—the stick of Judah—the grand work of "the dispensation of the fulness of times" had commenced, which shall result in gathering God's people.

W. G. PERT.

[Joseph the Seer and Oliver Cowdery were God's "first born" in this dispensation, (Doc. & Cov. 17:1; 2 Nephi 2:2), and they were of the lineage of Joseph, (2 Nephi 2:2, 3), were "heirs according to the flesh," (Doc. & Cov. 84:3), and were reputed to be of the tribe of Ephraim. (Doc. & Cov. 64:7; 84:3; 108:6). This harmonizes with these Scriptures, (Rom. 3:1, 2; 9:4; 11:23-29; Deut. 33:1, 17; Ps. 80:1-3; 108:8; Jer. 16:14-19; 31:6-9; Isa. 11:13; 61:6; 66:19-21; Zech. 10:6-8; Ezek. 37:16-19). Read carefully and reflect.—Ed.]

THE GOSPEL.—No. VII.

KIRTLAND, O., May 1835,

THERE is nothing which gives greater peace and satisfaction to the mind, than clear views on the gospel. To understand it correctly is to understand the will of God to men, and to put a person in possession of truths which will guard him against the various impositions which have been imposed on the world at one period of it and another, and to give him power to become extensively acquainted with God, as well as the heavenly worlds. But it is necessary, in order to a clear understanding of the gospel, that we should have a correct understanding of its origin, and of its progress among men; for without this knowledge we are liable to be led into darkness, and all the glory of the gospel be hid from our eyes.

Let me here observe that, whatever the gospel was, it now is, and ever will be; that it has not nor will it change: its laws are the same; its ordinances are the same; its institutions are the same; its commands are the same, and its regulations are the same. Whatever is required of one man in order to obtain eternal life, is required of all men, and that in every age of the world, and will require the same until all shall be gathered that will be gathered, and until those who have obeyed its requisites enter into the rest which God had prepared for them. And it is not only the same yesterday, to-day, and forever, and changes not; but it is the only scheme of things by which any portion of the human family has been, or will be saved; for it is only by virtue of the gospel that salvation was ever proclaimed among men, from first to last; for by it life and immortality came to light; so says Paul, 2d, Timothy 1:15. And as the knowledge of life and immortality is essential to salvation, it is easily seen that there could be no salvation without the gospel, and not only without the gospel, but without the knowledge of it also; for how could a man have faith in that of which he never heard?

Seeing, then, that life and immortality came to light by the gospel, and without the knowledge of life and immortality no person could be saved, there can no difficulty exist in the minds of any of the human family, unless they create one where none really exists, as to the time the gospel was promulgated to man. It must have been promulgated as early as life and immortality were known, and they were known ever since the time that salvation was proclaimed among the family of man; for salvation is a matter of faith, and faith can not exist in relation to it without hearing the word of the Lord, for it is by hearing the word of the Lord that faith in relation to salvation comes. As far back then as we date salvation, so far back we date the proclamation of the gospel to man; and it must be so unless it can be proven that God had more ways than one of saving mankind. And to do this Paul must be refuted, for he says that the plan which he proclaimed was before the foundation of the world, and that no other foundation could any man lay than that which is laid, which is Christ Jesus; and Peter says that there is no other name given under heaven among men, by which they can be saved, but in the name of Christ Jesus.

May we not reason a little upon this subject. Let us ask then, What was the most important thing which God could communicate to his creature man? The answer is, The thing which would save him. If God ever at any time condescended to speak to man, there can no good reason be shown why he did not communicate to him the things which were of the greatest consequence to him; and as God always acts according to reason, and never against it, we may conclude that he did declare unto man the gospel or the way by which he was to be saved. But what would be very strange would be, that there should be a great number of persons saved in the earlier ages of the world, and yet not know how they were saved—be saved in ignorance! It would be equally as strange that prophets, such as Enoch for instance, the seventh from Adam, could prophecy of the second coming of Christ and of his judging the world, and yet not know of his first coming and of his dying for the world. And what would be stranger still would be, that men could be saved by faith, and yet never hear, nor know, of the way of salvation through the blood of the Lamb! This would be believing without hearing, and being saved without understanding, and having faith without hearing the word of God. Or, in other words, it would be believing on him of whom they had not heard, or else it would be hearing without a preacher; and if it were any of these things, it would put the shame on all the sacred writers, and expose them to just ridicule. But while it is written in the pages of the divine oracles that salvation is of faith, and that men can not have faith in a being of whom they have not heard, nor hear without one to tell them—or a preacher—and that life and immortality came to light by the gospel, and that Abel was a prophet, and that Enoch the seventh from Adam was translated, and that God saves men by the gospel and nothing else, (for whatever will save men is gospel), so long it will be believed by every thinking man that, the gospel was made known to the ancients as well as to us. But what seems to put the matter at rest as relates to the antiquity of the gospel proclamation is, that the apostle Paul says that the gospel which he proclaimed, or what was to the same effect, that the scheme of things which he taught, was devised before the foundation of the world, and that it was God's fixed purpose to save men in that way, or by that plan, and none other; so that if there was salvation at all among the ancients, it was because they had the gospel among them.

There are some other considerations which force the conclusion on the mind that the ancients had the gospel among them, and that is, that according to the sacred record the fruits of it abounded among them as far back as to the days of Abel. If we inquire what are the things which attend the gospel, we will find that prophecying was one thing; and we are told that Abel was a prophet, for the Savior said to the Jews, that the blood of all the prophets should be required at their hands, from the blood of righteous Abel to the blood of Zacharias. Matthew 23:34, 35. Enoch was also a prophet; for he foretold of the second advent as recorded by Jude. Who does not know that when the apostles proclaimed the gospel, they promised to those who received it that they should prophesy? Seeing then that prophesying was a fruit of the gospel, who can help seeing that it was by virtue of it that men prophecied? We can not see where there can be a risk in believing that, wherever there are or where prophets, there the gospel is, or was. And one strong reason which confirms this belief is, that whenever the gospel is lost prophesying is lost also. This generation is all the proof we need on this subject; for if we ask, Why has prophesying ceased in this generation? the answer is, Because they have lost the gospel, and not having the gospel, they can not have the fruits of it. But we see the ancients had the fruits of it; and how could they have the fruits of it and yet not have the gospel? This is a question we will leave for those more learned than ourselves to answer.

SUNDAY AS THE SABBATH.

THE debate recently held in Boonsboro attracted considerable attention, upon the proposition, Resolved, That the observance of the Seventh-day Sabbath, named in the fourth commandment of the decalogue, was and is binding on all mankind." The debate was able upon both sides, and we wish we had space to give an extended resume. Rev. J. F. McDowell, of the Latter Day Saints, furnishes such a finely condensed summary upon the negative that room is made for that. He showed:

First, That the claim made for an Edenic Sabbath is a fallacious one, supported neither by the Bible, history, analogy or logic; because, (a) Adam knew nothing of holy from unholy, clean from unclean, for the opposites were not yet known, (b) He could not rest for he had not yet labored, (c) The requisite observance had no existence in fact, such as is named in Ex. 10: 10; 35: 3.

Second, That there is no evidence that the Seventh-day Sabbath was observed by any portion of the human race until "the covenant, even ten commandments" was given at "Sinai in Arabia" through Moses to the Israelites.

Third, That when then given, it was only, "to and with" the blooded Israelites as evidenced from Ex. 19: 5; Deut. 4: 23; 10: 1-4, and 22; Deut. 9: 13; Ex. 34: 28. And that it never extended beyond their borders nationally, either by divine command, precept, injunctiou or example.

Fourth, That it was a "sign between God and Israel," to continue "throughout their generations," as evidenced by Ex. 31: 13, 16, etc. And that the duration of those generations is explicitly named in Matthew 1st.

Fifth, That all things required by the Lord as to what should actually constitute the observance of the day were an absolute universal impracticability, as evidenced by Ex. 20: 10; 35: 3; 16: 29, 30.

Sixth, That "the law" is called "the ten commandments," and as such became "dead," as seen by Rom. 6: 4-6. That it was a "law of sin and death," and christians are free from it.—Rom. 8: 1, 2; 7: 7.

Seventh, That "the covenant, even ten commandments," (Ex. 34: 27-8; Deut. 4: 13) was the "bondwoman's son," as it then stood, to be "cast out," as named by Paul in Gal. 4: 21-31, which, said he, "gendereth to bondage."

Eighth, That there was promise of a "better covenant," founded "upon better promises;" a "new covenant" to be given, "not like unto the covenant made with Israel at Sinai," as shown from Jer. 31: 31, 34; Heb. 8: 6, 9.

Ninth, That the old was "done away" in Christ, and having been given to endure "throughout their (Israel's) generations" "until the seed, Christ, should come, it then served its purpose, as evidenced from Matt. 5: 17-19; Rom. 2, 17-20, 22; Luke 16: 16; Gal. 3: 17-19.

Tenth, That the same language used in connection with the specification of the covenant's duration, is also used in the connection with circumcision, priesthood, and the passover, as evidenced from Gen. 17: 4-11; Ex. 40: 15; Num. 25: 13; and if no regard is to be given to the limitation term "throughout your generations"—then I urge, and logically too, the absolute observance of circumcision and the passover.

Eleventh, That the "first covenant," "even ten commandments," was faulty, (Heb. 8: 7, 8), the chief fault lying in the universal impracticability of the fourth commandment as seen by Ex. 20: 10; 35: 3; 21: 29. Hence a change was necessary.

Twelfth, That after Christ came, a change occurred, and he withheld, by example, his sanction from the "Seventh day's" continued observance after his resurrection by two special meetings on the "First-day" of the week, as seen by Luke 24: 35, 36; John 20: 19, 24-26, and 1 Cor. 15: 6, gives evidence of a third meeting.

Thirteenth, That the Apostles never met with real christian assemblies on the "Seventh-day" of the week but did do so on the "First-day," as seen by Acts 1: 13, 14; 20: 6, 7, 16, and that christian churches did also meet on the "First-day," as seen by 1 Cor. 16: 1, 2, and the many quotations from authentic historians I have given you.

Miscellaneous.

NOTICE OF RESTORATION.

Notice is hereby given, that the silence heretofore imposed by me as Elder in charge of the Canada Mission, upon Elder James A. McIntosh, of Alliston, Ontario, is hereby removed, Elder McIntosh having made such explanation and restitution as have been satisfactory; such restoration to take effect from January 21st, 1886.

JOHN H. LAKE, Presiding in Mission.

ZONE, Ont., 21st Jan'y.

NOTICE.

Whereas, I, (J. A. McIntosh,) of the Canada Mission, have been silenced by Elder J. H. Lake, in charge, for "reproaching the church," and for "unchristian-like conduct." Said charges having been made to Bro. Lake on the representations of members of the Cameron Branch; this is to say, that by counsel I have met with Elder Lake, and on further investigation, he consents to my acting again upon my making an apology to the members of the Cameron Branch who were offended; I hereby do make apology, if by my acts I gave offense to any; but I have no apology to make for any wilful act of wrong doing, except as that wrong appears in their sight, wherein they think I ought to have acted otherwise.

As Elder Lake inserted notice of my silence in Herald, not in haste, but on being informed that I was still preaching, which was true, as I had entered on an appointment which I did not like to break off without good excuse, and the only excuse would be to tell the truth. I did not wish to spread to the world that I was silenced, so thought to finish the course I had entered on, and then I could drop out. As it may have been interpreted that I was in contempt of authority, by not ceasing to preach, I make this statement to show that Elder Lake did not cause my name to appear until he was informed that I had not respected the silence. Therefore, I exonerate Elder Lake from all or any attempt on his part to injure me in his official duty on the representation of those who were interested.

And furthermore, as the notice of my silence in Herald has spread far and wide; and as the statement that I had been a reproach to the church, and the nature of that reproach or unchristian-like acts were not stated; and as various surmises and interpretations can be placed on it, this is to further ask an apology of all, or any one in the church, and officials in particular, that I wish to be understood as making my apology to all; that is, as it may appear I was guilty of contempt of authority. I wish to be fully understood that if any official decides against that act as unchristian, or of a contemptuous nature, I include this and all or any other thing which may be made to appear.

And furthermore, in regard to my intentions and future acts, I desire to be fully in accord with the church in doctrine, discipline, and obedience to those in proper authority. I know the work is of God, and I have the most confirmatory and abundant testimony of both the work and my calling, and desire to labor for good, and have often publicly so expressed that I desire to spend all my remaining days in disseminating the truth of the gospel, and I hope to be properly understood and appreciated as a fellow laborer in bonds.

NOTICES.

Eastern Iowa District Conference will meet with the Jackson Branch, near Amber, Jones county, Iowa, Saturday, February 27th, 1886, at ten o'clock. Any one wishing information can write to James or J. R. Bradley, Amber, Jones county, Iowa. A general attendance of members of the church and district is desired.

JEROME RUBY, president.

MARRIED.

HASSALL—ATHERTON.—January 2d, 1886, at Saint John's, Parish Church, Farnworth, Manchester England, by the Rev. Ward Travers Burges, M. A., Vicar, Elder C. H. Hassall to Miss Mary Hardman Atherton, both of Farnworth, Manchester, England.

WEITLICH—BEAR.—At Saints' Hall, St. Joseph, Missouri, January 31st, 1886, by Elder E. T. Dobson, assisted by Elder Columbus Scott, Mr. Frank Weitlich to Sr. Barbara Bear. Their many friends wish them much happiness.

SPECIAL CONFERENCE NOTICE.

A Mission Conference will be held in the chapel at Salt Lake City, Utah, on Saturday and Sunday, the 13th and 14th of March, 1886, at 10 a. m. All the branches in Utah are requested to send in reports, and a large attendance is hoped for. Some important business relating to future mission work in the territories will be presented, and action taken thereupon. All who can attend are earnestly requested to do so. Delegates to the General Conference at Lamoni will be appointed and it may be found necessary to instruct them regarding important matters affecting this mission. Don't fail to attend.

Return tickets for one fare (half rate) will be issued by the Union Pacific, Utah and Northern, Oregon Short Line, Denver and Rio Grande, and Utah Central Railroads, extending from Evanston, Granger, Garrison, Park City, and all points on the U. C. and D. & R. G. Arrangements have been made with each of the above roads to this effect. The conference action will largely affect the whole Rocky Mountain Mission, and representatives from all over the mission are invited and will be made welcome. Don't forget the date. The half rates on all the above railroads will be good from March 11th to the 16th inclusive.

No division of the Utah District has yet taken place, therefore all the branches in Utah form part of this Conference.

JOSEPH LUFF,
Missionary in Charge.

QUORUM OF SEVENTY.

Brethren:—By request of our senior President, Bro. E. C. Brand, I inform you that there will be some business of importance to present to the quorum at the time of our assembling—at Lamoni, Iowa, April 6th, 1886; and it is important that as many of you be present as possible.

Our quorum has been in rather a dilapidated condition, but it must arise to its duties, privileges, and obligations. The time is near, we think, when the services of a full quorum, or more, of Seventys will be demanded in the active ministry. Come then all who can, and come praying for God's blessings to rest upon us in our deliberations, and that we may be able to fully perform our duties as special witnesses.

Should any be unable to come, do not fail to report. Whether you have done any labor or not, let us hear from you. We want to know your circumstances, your determination as to future labor, your feelings in regard to the faith; and in fact, everything pertaining to your interest as connected with the cause we are called to represent.

We received no reports last Spring from the following named brethren:—E. M. Wildermuth, Jessie L. Adams, I. A. Bogue, Stephen Stone, B. V. Springer, Thomas Revel, Duncan Campbell, J. C. Clapp, J. McKiernan, Joseph Lakeman, D. H. Bays, John L. Bear, C. H. Jones, John Thomas, Robert Davis, J. M. Wait, David Evans, Alex. McCord, A. Johns, Henry H. Morgan, and Peter N. Brix. Their especial attention is called to the fact that we want to see, or hear from them next April. Please address me at Lamoni, Decatur County, Iowa; being careful to write my name, in addressing, me in full to avoid mistakes.

Praying God to bless and aid you all in the duties of your calling, I am your co-laborer in the cause of Christ,

HEMAN C. SMITH,
Secretary of Quorum.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

WE find an article in the Daily Inter Ocean of the 2d instant, written by Bro. Thomas W. Smith and covering about two and a half columns of that paper, in which the writer dissects and refutes "the twin relic" in a masterly manner.

Bro. Wm. M. Harson sends for suitable tracts for the Oregon Mission to be forwarded to Elder A. Haws, while Bro. F. G. Dungee orders tracts to be forwarded to Elder Joseph Luff, for distribution in the Utah Mission.

The snow blockades have sorely hindered our publications reaching subscribers, and it is quite probable losses have occurred. Patient forbearance is valuable in such times.

A member writes us of late that they circulate the church papers among their neighbors with excellent results. This is as it should be. Many write that they can not get along without them, and that they will strive to aid in all proper ways to make them a success. If all will act promptly and faithfully in this direction, the publishing department of the church will become an immense power in spreading the glorious work committed to the care of the Saints. "Fear not, little flock; for it is your Father's good pleasure to give unto you the kingdom." Then let us guard and build it with our might, mind and strength.

Bro. A. P. Cantrell of Harper, McDonald county, Missouri, whom we met in Manassa, Colorado, in 1884, says he is unwilling to be without the HERALD, for it is nearly all the preacher they have in that region. We hope the Elders may call and labor there by and by.

Bro. D. S. Mills wrote January 30th, that he was still holding forth at Los Angeles, with fair prospects. Some of the Elders were doing local work. He names Elders Badham, French, Thompson, Goff and Gibson.

Bro. Daniel C. Danielson of Leland, Illinois, writes us that he is loaning his books and papers with good results. He says a Baptist minister there remarked that he once knew Joseph the Seer, for he lived near him, and he advised the people to read the Book of Mormon and so "prove all things," before they condemned it. The brother hopes some able Elder may come and labor there.

Bro. R. J. Anthony was at Independence, Missouri, February 4th; would remain there over Sunday, the 7th.

Elder StClair baptized another at Fanning, Kansas, February 7th.

Sr. Jennie Pemberton of Lynchburg, Ohio, writes for tracts to distribute.

Bro. James Burwell writes "If an Elder should come this way I will make him welcome at my home. I think they would get an opening here." He lives at Caseville, Michigan.

Sr. Charles Derry has been lying very ill for a few days prior to the 4th inst., and Bro. Derry asks the prayers of the Saints in her behalf. She was mending slowly when last heard from. A noble woman, a faithful sister, her family the church, and society at large can not well do without her.

Bro. D. S. Crawley writes under date of Jan. 26th, that he has been preaching in his vicinity, (Haydenville, Mo), and that he intends to do what he can in that direction for the future.

Mr. E. Day Bennett of Detroit, Dakota, writes us Jan. 30th, and says,—"I like the Herald very much—can hardly wait to get it out of the post-office. Please send me a sample copy of the Saints Advocate."

Great floods are prevailing in southern California. The Santa Ana river had overflowed and a portion of it swept across Bro. Mills' place, but did no great amount of damage to him.

Bro. J. J. Cornish writes: "We have had two nights of the debate; all goes well. Some more gave in their names for baptism, yesterday."

THE LOUISVILLE COURIER-JOURNAL.

THE above paper, in a late issue, had a lengthy article in respect to the Latter Day Saints in Clark and Floyd counties, Indiana, which contains at least ten falsehoods for each truth found in it. About all the truth in it may be summed up in the following facts, viz: that an "Elder Blair" preached in that locality, baptized many and organized a church there. This was done in June, 1870, and not in 1863 as the article states. Elder Blair did not "follow Joseph Smith to Utah;" neither did Elder Blair "volunteer to fill the pulpit of "Rev. John Scott," in Scottsville; neither did "Blair and his adherents purchase a log house which had been used for a school," nor any other kind of a house. Besides this, no "Rev. John Scott and his six sons, who were also ministers," ever united with the Latter Day Saints there, or elsewhere, to our knowledge.

Elder Blair never "argued that the services of a physician were never needed," * * * "and that human science and knowledge could not stay the hand of death;" neither was he "Brigham Young's missionary;" nor did he appoint "John Scott and his six sons * * * to fill all the offices." The balances of the said article, so far as the said Blair now knows and believes, is essentially false, except in perhaps two or three points. As for James and Elias Bell, they were not Latter Day Saints, but, we believe, were members of the Disciple Church; and if either were guilty of murder, (which we doubt), and if either became insane it must be credited to the Disciple Church, if any.

We surmise that some one "stuffed" the writer of said article, and inspired him with such falsehoods as render the Journal simply scandalous and unreliable. The said Elder Blair now resides at Lamoni, and is the writer of this refutation.

THE present usages of good speaking and good writing require that where any one proposes to use the noun one, man, fellow, or any other in the singular number to be followed by references in the use of representative pronouns, either in the possessive or the objective case, those pronouns should be in the singular number. To illustrate: "Any one writing to the Herald Office should give their names, their post-office address, the county and state where they live," should not be written or spoken in that way; it should be; any one writing to the Herald Office should give his name, his post-office address, the county and state where he lives.

"But, suppose it is a woman who writes?" inquires some one.

Suppose it is, the word his represents the word one, as used in the sentence and one represents man in a generic sense; hence though it may be a woman who writes, she is still a man considered in such generic sense. If a woman is meant by the word one, then it should be one, a woman, writing to the Herald Office should give her name, &c.

The use of good language, proper speech, should begin at home. In a family where father and mother take care to use good forms of speech, the children grow into such use by second nature. We once heard a mother say in reply to the question why she always called her children by their full names, "I call them so, because I believe that nick-names originate at home. If fathers and mothers would always call the full name of a child the other children would fall into the habit, and those outside the family would do so as a result. But let the parents shorten a child's name or give a child a nick-name, that child will always be called by that name." Use good language in the household, good Saints, that you may avoid inelegancy abroad.

FOR the benefit of inquirers we remark that, Lamoni has been greatly blessed in the health of its inhabitants for the past year, and though business is dull, money scarce, and times hard in many ways, yet the people have much to be thankful for. The town is over-run with carpenters, and there are too many day-laborers to find anything like steady employment. Manufacturing is great aids in such times, and yet complaints are nearly everywhere made of great stagnation in that department.

This is an excellent region for stock of all kinds, and dairying could be made successful. The tame grasses, especially blue grass, also both red and white clover, do finely. So do millét and Hungarian. Corn, oats, barley, rye and broomcorn do fairly well. But little wheat is raised. It is a healthy country for stock. Parties coming here to farm, who have means to go into stock-raising, (including hogs), can do well. It pays poorly to raise grain to sell to dealers, for prices are low and freights and commissions consume the profits. But grain wisely fed to good stock pays well, and probably always will.

Wise, thrifty farmers, especially those having capital to start with, can do well here, notwithstanding times are hard. Hard times are complained of all over the world just now. Well directed industry, and economy in expenditures, are needed by all, and can only result in good.

To all who think of coming here to locate we have to say, "Look before you leap." Persons should be sure they will better their condition by removing here or elsewhere, before they break up where they are, and incur the expense of moving and locating in a new home. There are excellent opportunities here for farmers with moderate means. Farms can be bought at prices ranging from $10 to $60 per acre, owing to location, quality of soil, and improvements. Unimproved lands can be bought at from $5 to $25 per acre, owing to quality and location.

Vegetables do well—those adapted to this range of climate—so do large and small fruits, if well cared for. The country is comparatively new, but it is developing steadily, with fair prospects.

As the area for ranging stock on the plains of the west grows decidedly less, and deteriorates rapidly in its feed supply, as it has been doing for the past few years, the fine stock regions of southern Iowa and northern Missouri will come to the front, and rank among the very best stock and dairy countries in the world. Now is a good time for those who like that business and intend to engage in it, to "stick their stake" in "the regions round about."

This paper has never "puffed" this region of country, and probably never will. What it has to say to inquirers in regard to it we hope will be said in such a way that none can justly say it was misleading, or overstating facts. We hope to see many thousands of the Saints located in settlements, towns and cities "in all the regions round about" Zion, and become a mighty power for good to all men, this and nothing less.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. Solomon J. Salisbury writes from Lacrosse, Hancock county, Illinois, February 2d, 1886.

It has been some time since I have written to you, thinking that in the course of events it should be necessary to tell what I am doing for the cause of Christ; which is of more interest than any thing else, at this time, to those that have been placed in the ministry. I have been trying to improve upon the talent given by preaching at our school-house this winter. I have, up to date, preached five Sunday nights in succession, and no preventing providence, shall continue to preach till spring. I have fair congregations and they still increase in number, and I am having good liberty in speaking to them. I think if a man can draw a full house at home he is doing very well. Don't you?

Bro. H. Way writes from Audubon, Minnesota:

Bro. Holt and I will go to Frazee City, to hold meetings for six or eight days. It is some twenty-four miles from this place. The work is onward in this district. You will hear again in two weeks, if all is well.

Bro. Henry Green writes from Whiting, Kansas, January 26th, 1886:

I was lately in the neighborhood of Good Intent, and with the Saints there went to a new place to preach, and found the people friendly and apparently well pleased with the gospel we preached. The place being at a distance unfavorable to reach, with threatening weather, we had to discontinue for the present. The people wished to hear more, and to become more acquainted with the doctrine. Although the people were of different churches, yet they agreed to say that there is food for all in the gospel that we preached to them.

Bro. Joseph Luff, writing from Salt Lake City, February 1st, says:

Have been to Ogden, Kaysville, Plain City and Union Fort. The first and last named places the meetings fizzled, on account of steady rains, dark nights, and poor advertising. The Union Fort people never got my notice, though I sent it two weeks ahead. That is the place where you buried Thomas Smith last July, and the place also where Bishop Phillips boasted and domineered over me some time before. Thank heaven, the tables are turned. He refused us the meeting house then; but now Bro. Smith positively refused to pay taxes until the school meeting house was thrown open for all, or none. It has been decided to give it to us at any time we want it, except school hours.

At Kaysville and Plain City I was greeted with crowded houses and excellent attention; was also favored with glorious liberty. Did a little public debating in each place; and a little went a long way with them. Your work in Ogden is telling all over. It is public talk to this day, and you are wanted back there. I go north to Oxford day after to-morrow. Have sent word on ahead. They want me at Malad. Will put in the best of this month in those localities, everything agreeing. Will hold conference March 13th and 14th. The prospect is fine at present for our work outside; but the devil is trying hard to get inside again.

THE clipping below will enable our readers to know of the late whereabouts and work of our faithful brother, R. J. Anthony. The Lord promised the ministry in the beginning of this dispensation that if they would wisely, faithfully, and in the spirit and love of Christ preach the gospel, he would raise up those who would minister to their temporal wants.

"A PLEASANT SURPRISE.—A pleasant surprise was accorded Elder R. J. Anthony, last evening, at the residence of J. W. Waldsmith. Elder Anthony has been holding interesting meetings in this city, during the past week, and made many friends. He was the recipient last night, of a purse and other handsome presents. The Elder will lecture this evening at the Church building. All are invited."—Nebraska City Daily Press, Jan. 31st.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Ques.—Why should individuals who do not observe the Law of Tithing or Free-will offerings have a standing in the church? Since it is written that all such have robbed God, and were cursed with a curse, and the Lord in 1831 as much as said that such would be burned at his coming. Also, Christ says, "Every branch in me that beareth not fruit, the Father taketh it away." Do we not fail to bear the fruit referred to if we do not observe the Temporal law? and if so are we not dead branches?

Ans.—Because it would be improper and very bad policy to cast such persons out. And because it would be forestalling the action of Christat his coming.

2.—What is meant by the Holy City New Jerusalem, descending from God out of heaven; seen in vision by John the Apostle and spoken of in Revelations 21: 2? Does it refer to the actual city portrayed in the same chapter verses 10-27, or does it mean the Saints who are to dwell therein?

A.—We understand it to mean a literal city, and that both passages refer to the same one. We also understand that Paul refers to this same city, in Gal. 4: 26; Heb. 11: 10; 12: 22; 13: 14; and that Moroni refers to it in Ether 6: 1. By reading these passages and their contexts, we learn what will be the character and condition of the New Jerusalem after the millennial reign, in the "new earth." We must not confound what is said of the city after the millenium, with what is said of "a New Jerusalem" both before and during the millenium.

Q.—Should we lend the Doctrine and Covenants to an outsider to read?

A.—Yes; if the person is earnestly and honestly seeking the truth; and no, if the person is a heedless or heartless critic. A self-conceited caviler, a "blind Pharisee," or a self-righteous bigot can manufacture nearly as many objections against the Doctrine and Covenants as the tricky infidel will against the New Testament. Prudence should dictate the loaning of the church books to non-members.

Q.—Is it wrong for a Saint to talk to an outsider about the many healings and miracles that are performed in the church?

A.—"There is a time for everything under the sun"—a time to hear testimony to such things, and a time to forbear. "Give not that which is holy to the dogs; neither cast ye your pearls before swine, lest they turn again and rend you." To those who are earnestly seeking for truth and right, such things may be told. Wisdom must direct.

Q.—If a Saint does not possess any of the gifts of the gospel, should they pray for them? How can they tell when they possess them?

A.—Read 1 Cor. 12: 31; 14: 1, 39; with Doc. and Cov. 46: 1-9. They can tell when they possess them, if they watch the operations of the Spirit.

Q.—Is it right for Latter Day Saints to get their lives insured?

A.—It is a business question which every man must answer for himself; we therefore answer, Yes, if they so desire.

Q.—If so, why could not the church form a mutual aid, or insurance company for the purpose?

A.—The members of the church who desire to form such a society are at perfect liberty to do so. The church as a corporate body is not likely to do it.

Q.—Is there any revelation endorsed by the church which permits, or in any way authorizes, the gathering of the Saints to Independence at this time?

A.—There are no revelations on the subject of the gathering other than those in the Doctrine and Covenants; except the one which declares that the revelation on Fishing River and the counsel of the Elders should govern in the matter. The Fishing River revelation does not specify Independence, but names the "regions round about."

Q.—Has the church by its conferences ordered, or in any way provided for the gathering of the Saints to Independence at this time?

A.—There has been no action of the conference at any time ordering, or authorizing the gathering at independence.

Q.—What authority, if any, has any of the Elders, or of the church for counseling, encouraging, and advising such gathering at this time?

A.—The authority of the general provision to gather into the regions round about. No such authority has been specifically given by the church.

Q.—Are we to expect that, when God will have the Saints gathered, he will, through the proper authorities of the church, command and provide for it?

A.—We have so understood. In the mean time those who choose to remove from the places where they have lived, to any of the regions supposed to be within the limits of "round about," have been and are at liberty to so move into, and occupy the places they may obtain by purchase, observing and keeping the law of the land as becometh good citizens, the same as they might do in regard to any and all other localities where they should desire to settle.

The church has not yet ordered, or authorized the settlement at any stake. Those who make changes of location should make thorough examination and use great care not to make improper sacrifices; for these are not demanded, and those who may be unfortunate, or unwise enough to make them, must by all means refrain from casting the blame upon the church. The leading authorities have tried to use all care and diligence to save the Saints from squandering the means God has blessed them with by hasty and ill-advised moving from one region to another. "Have all things prepared before you," is one of the wisest precautions possible; and God knew this when the revelation containing it was given.

There is getting to be a large branch at Independence; and, like all other places where Saints congregate, there are causes for trouble there. Stewartsville is also increasing its branch. Lamoni has nearly five hundred and fifty members. Other branches in Missouri, Iowa, Nebraska and Kansas, within the radius of a railway journey of twenty-four hours, are growing finely. The country is a good one for honest and industrious citizens, and there is room for them almost every where.

Q.—In Doctrine and Covenants 42: 22, we have the following words: "And thus ye shall do in all cases which shall come before you." Do these words refer to all cases of transgression, or only to the crime of adultery?

A.—Yes; modified by the nature of each offense of which complaint is made, and the conditions attendant upon each transgression for which trial is required, or had. All trials for offenses should be as nearly according to the pattern given as time, circumstances, and conditions properly considered will admit.

Q.—In Matthew 13: 38 we read as follows: "The field is the world; the good seed are the children of the kingdom; but the tares are the children of the wicked one." Who are "the children of the kingdom?" and who are "the children of the wicked one?"

A.—He who hears the word and profits by it, either unto full or partial obedience, receives the good seed; and he who hears, understands, and obeys it unto salvation, is a child of the kingdom. The children of the wicked one are those who have not been fully repentant, or have turned away from the truth after having known it. The tares were sown among the wheat, or among the good seed unto the injury of the wheat and the destruction of the tares. But as it is difficult to improve on the Savior's own definition, we cite to the word itself Matthew, 13: 39-43. Also Doctrine and Covenants, sec. 84, pars. 1-2. We quote the latter:

"Verily thus saith the Lord unto you, my servants, concerning the parable of the wheat and of the tares: behold, verily I say that the field was the world, and the apostles were the sowers of the seed; and after they have fallen asleep, the great persecutor of the church, the apostate, the whore, even Babylon, that maketh all nations to drink of her cup, in whose hearts the enemy, even Satan, sitteth to reign; behold, he soweth the tares, wherefore the tares choke the wheat and drive the church into the wilderness. But, behold, in the last days, even now, while the Lord is beginning to bring forth the word, and the blade is springing up and is yet tender, behold, verily I say unto you, the angels are crying unto the Lord day and night, who are ready and waiting to be sent forth to reap down the fields; but the Lord saith unto them, Pluck not up the tares while the blade is yet tender (for verily your faith is weak), lest you destroy the wheat also; therefore let the wheat and the tares grow together until the harvest is fully ripe; then ye shall first gather out the wheat from among the tares, and after the gathering of the wheat, behold, and lo, the tares are bound in bundles, and the field remaineth to be burned."

Q.—Is the practice of the church in casting out unrepentant members, who have been proven guilty of unchristian like conduct before a Court of Elders, in conflict with the words of Christ, as found in Matthew 13: 30, "Let both grow together [wheat and tares] until the harvest," &c?

A.—No; but we believe that much injury has been done to both wheat and tares by over zeal to pluck up and cast out; casting out having been adopted for punishment for all classes of misdemeanors. The Scriptures warrant the disfellowshipping of those who will not walk orderly.

Q.—Was the transfiguration of Christ on the Mount a resurrection? If not, what does the saying of Jesus mean, recorded by Matthew 17: 9, "Tell the vision to no man until the Son of Man be risen again from the dead?"

A.—(1.) The transfiguration was not a resurrection; for Christ was "the first fruits" of the resurrection (1 Cor. 15: 20, 23); "the first that should rise from the dead" (Acts 26: 23; Col. 1: 18; Rev. 1: 5). And Christ was not resurrected till the morning of the third day after the crucifixion (1 Cor. 15: 3, 4; Luke 24: 26-46; Acts 2: 31, 32; 13: 32-37; etc., etc.)

(2.) The "vision" was ocular—open to the eyes of those who saw it. The word "again" does not necessarily mean "repetition," or doing the same act the second time. "If thou meet thine enemy's ox or his ass going astray, thou shalt surely bring it back to him again."—Exodus 23:4. See also Eccl. 8:14; Amos 8:14; 1 Pet. 1:3; Gen. 42:37; Deut. 1:22; Matt. 7:6; Luke 10:6; 17:4; Gal. 4:9, etc. These texts amply illustrate the use of the word in the text quoted. The power and glory and majesty of Christ, in which he will appear at his second coming, were evidently exhibited, to some degree, in the transfiguration. (See 2 Pet. 1:16-18.)

Q.—Did Moses and Elias confer any authority on Christ? If not, what does the record mean, (Matthew 17:5) "hear ye him."

A.—We have no record of any priestly authority being then given Jesus. That his authority as God's teacher and law-giver and son was here solemnly proclaimed and confirmed, is the burden of the words, "Hear ye him." His ordination to the priesthood then, is merely inferential.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY SISTER "FRANCES."

"Heed how thou livest. Do not act by day
Which from the night shall drive thy peace away.
In months of sun so live that months of rain
Shall still be happy. Evermore restrain Evil and cherish good, so shall there be Another and a happier life for thee."

COURAGE.

LIFE is truly a battle field, and we, as actors in its shifting scenes, require all the help we can obtain, not only from our heavenly Father, but from every available source, that we may not be overcome of evil, but may overcome evil with good.

"Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfill the perfect law." Looking back over the pages of our own past life, we never come to one upon which memory has recorded an act of forbearance, or helpfulness, or kindly extended sympathy, but what we rejoice that the opportunity was improved, and feel ourselves the richer for the memory; while upon the other hand, what vain regret and sadness come over us when we think of what we might have done, and yet did not do. Those opportunities, whether improved or unimproved, are gone forever. The page is written, and no vain regret can change it. Not so the future. Upon its unwritten pages, what may we not write. Upon its battle field, what victories win. Courage is what we need. Not a day, not an hour of our lives, but we need strength above our own.

But while this is true, experience has taught us that the soul has reserved forces of its own, upon which we may draw almost without limit. Indeed we must draw upon them, if we hope or expect to contend successfully with the trials of life. The Psalmist has truly said, "We are fearfully and wonderfully made." The last and crowning glory of God's creation was man. We were created to be placed in a world like this, else we had not been here. Our heavenly father knew just what attributes we would need to enable us to conquer and bear palms of victory in the end, and wisely endowed the soul with those attributes.

God never made anything in vain. Never bestowed upon us any power, but what if wisely used, was best suited of any earthly means, to answer the very need for which, in the beginning, it was given.

Love, Patience, Hope, Courage, and Endurance, have been given to woman in a pre-eminent degree, because by her they are pre-eminently needed. We do not say that she always possesses them pre-eminently; but we do say that God has pre-eminently endowed her with them; they are among the reserve forces of her soul, and if she does not possess them in this degree, it is because she has failed to use and improve them in the manner her Creator designed she should. It is one of the fixed laws of our being, that by a proper use, every faculty of our body, mind, or spirit, is strengthened and improved, while by neglect, or abuse, each is weakened, tarnished, and finally becomes like the salt which has lost its savor.

We are writing for the wives, mothers, sisters, and daughters of the "Household of faith." Those who have been baptized into Christ, and therefore have entered into covenant with him to strive to overcome in all things. When this thought is fully realized by us, in its breadth and solemnity, our soul cries out, "Who then shall be saved?" "They that endure unto the end," said the angel to Daniel. Endure unto the end, in itself implies that endurance was from the beginning. There is no way provided for turning back, neither for sitting down by the way side. Upon the forces of our soul—the forces God himself has provided us with, we must draw with steady hand; must keep them bright by daily use, and if we do this, to our great joy we shall find the "cruse of oil" unailing.

Life's lesson is given us to learn. To act well our part is all the Master requires. A faithful student prepares her lesson before the master calls upon her to recite. If there be in it any thing too difficult for her to conquer by herself, she goes privately to him for aid before the hour of recitation comes. To such an one there will come no shameful failure—no confusion or embarrassment, when called upon to recite before her class-mates. So will it be with us, if day by day we have exercised the powers God has given us; when unexpected trials or troubles come upon us, we shall not be crushed by them; neither will we be unprepared; but having endeavored to do our duty in the past, we will quietly summon to our aid patience and courage; and cheered on by hope, will endure unto the end.

As we said before, we can not do this of ourselves; nor need we fear that our Father will leave us to ourselves. "There hath no temptation taken you but such as is common to man; but God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able; but will with the temptation also make a way to escape, that ye may be able to bear it."

Take courage then, you weary wives and toiling mothers. Let Mary, in the fulness of her first love, in the unbounded joy of the gospel just made known to her spirit, let her sit at the Master's feet. But fear not that he will forget you who are left to serve alone. Mary hath chosen the better part, which shall never be taken from her. Go thy way, Martha, for this time; this news will enable you to call up your courage, will strengthen you though cumbered with your cares, to serve alone this once.

Take courage, and let us not forget that although the Savior came to earth to perform the mightiest work ever performed, yet to labor, working with Joseph, his earthly father, he gave all the years of his life, (from the time he was old enough to work), except the three years of his ministry. "Six days shalt thou labor," is just as much a part of the fourth commandment as, "on the seventh thou shalt rest."

Courage then, and while we labor cheerfully and patiently, let us strive to make Wisdom our handmaid, even in the labor of our households. Order and method have much to do in rendering labor less toilsome. Just here about Lamoni we know of many excellent house keepers, and we shall expect assistance from them in this column.

We do not ask for any methods of slighting work, such as we see going the rounds of other papers, but for such methods as will lighten our work, thereby giving us more time for the reading good books, and devising ways and means by which to aid in the spread of the gospel.

Those who are acquainted with us, know that it will not be possible for us to sustain this department alone. If it is worthy of being sustained, then come up to our help. If the sisters who have asked for it really want it, then let them see to it that they do their part of the work. We gladly welcome a letter from Sister Emerson this week. Let the sisters study it carefully; for it comes from a soul baptized as with fire; from the heart of one who has laid her all at the Master's feet. We trust to receive many more from her pen.

Thanks to Sister Lucy Lloyd for the promises of contributions at an early day; also for wise suggestions we hope to be able to carry out. When shall we hear from our old friend, Aunt Ruth?

LAMONI, IOWA, Feb'y 11th, 1886.

Dear Sisters.—Our dear sister Frances requests me to write a few lines for the household page of the Herald, and I gladly comply with her request. To the mothers, wives, sisters and daughters of the Church of Christ, I send a sister's greeting. I feel very thankful that the Lord put it into the heart of Sister Lucy Lloyd to ask for some space for us in the paper, where we can exchange views, and encourage one another to good works. I would first say to the weary mothers—those whom God has appointed to be the keepers of the homes,—do not "grow weary in well doing, for in due time you shall reap if you faint not." It is only at the end of the race that the prizes will be given. We must overcome if we hope to be crowned. When the burden of life seems too heavy, remember that the Strong One, the ever present Helper, is near, and ask him for help. We must not think for a moment that our lives are narrow, and our duties small, and that our share in the great work of these last days is at all insignificant. We must ever keep in mind that we have but one day given to us at a time; and that duty never calls but one way at a time, and the duty just before us is the one to be taken up, and discharged as faithfully, and as cheerfully as if done for the Master. I shall rejoice to hear from you through the pages of our loved Herald. It has been my only teacher for fourteen years, and probably has been the same good friend to many of you. To the scattered ones, lone sentinels in the enemy's land, let me say to you: Stand fast. Hope on, and be firm. Let us work for the Master each day; and although we can not all hope to hear the exalted words of the wise man, "Many daughters have done virtuously, but thou excellest them all," yet we can all merit those words of the Master, applied to Mary when he said, "She has done what she could."

Ever your sister,

H. B. EMERSON, Lamoni.

STREATOR, Illinois, Feb. 9th.

Bro. W. W. Blair:—I arrived in this place twelve days ago, and preached ten sermons. All that came to hear seemed to be interested. I preached once in the Swedish Church, and had the promise of it to deliver several sermons in; but their preacher told the people I believed in Brigham Young and "Joe Smith," and the house was closed against me. Several of them are favorable, and may yet obey. I find some good Saints here. They are talking about building a chapel soon. Yesterday we had a hard job cutting ice, to prepare a place to baptize one more, Miss Olive M. Mills. Her father arrived home in time from Lucas, Iowa, to help prepare for the burial in baptism. I leave for Plano to-morrow.

Yours truly,

J. C. FOSS.

SYRACUSE, Ohio, Feb. 5th.

Dear Herald:—On Saturday, January 16th, I took a trip to Morgan Center, Gallia Co. Arrived there the evening of the same date. There are only five members of the church there all told, in that neighborhood. I stayed while there with Bro. Gideon Roush and family. His wife is not a member of our church; but she showed me the kindness of a sister. I stayed a part of the time with brother and sister Hughes who are living on the adjoining farm to Bro. Roush. The same kindness was shown me by brother and sister Hughes. May God bless them.—After our arrival here, some of the friends made application for the school house for us to preach in, but it was refused, which refusal was not satisfactory to the people, so we learned afterward. During our stay here we preached three times in the house of Bro. Roush.

On Tuesday, January 26th, in company with Bro. Roush, I started for Vale's Mills, Vinton County, on horseback, Bro. Roush furnishing the horses. After we had started on our way, we learned for the first time that Bro. L. R. Devore was in that locality, blowing the gospel trumpet. But when we arrived near to Vale's Mills we found that he was preaching at a new place some five miles from there, in the Baptist Church, with sister Devore, Bro. Bennington, presiding Teacher of the branch, and a number of the Saints with him. Just as we were going to start for Bro. Devore, brother and sister Perry and sister Jeffres and husband, (who is not yet with us, but will be ere long we hope), were coming back in a sled. This was my first meeting with them, and it was a joy to me.

Next morning we left for Bro. Devore, with young sister Bowen as our guide, and meeting with Bro. Bennington for the first time, and Bro. and sister Devore for the first time since they moved from Meigs, Jackson county. We had the pleasure to hear a good discourse by Bro. Devore. That evening your writer spoke for a short time, Bro. Devore continuing the subject. The next evening Bro. Devore preached a powerful sermon on the resurrection, with some remarks by the writer. With this the meetings adjourned on account of bad roads, but the interest was good to the last. On Friday the 29th we left for Vale's Mills in company with Bro. Bennington, sister McGlochland, and Bro. and Sr. Devore.

Sunday morning and evening, and Monday evening, Bro. Devore and your writer preached to crowded houses. It is not a year yet since Bro. Devore, with Brn. Beatty and Moler began to preach in this place, and the branch now numbers between fifty and sixty, and we think they are a noble band of Saints, as far as we could observe. They intend to build a church the coming summer on Bro. Bowen's place. I said Bro. Bowen, although not baptized as yet, we hope to see the day when he will be one with us. Thanks to Bro. Roush and all the dear Saints of Vale's Mills. May God bless them all.

Yours in bonds,

THOMAS MATTHEWS.

GRAYSVILLE, O., Feb. 2d.

Dear Saints:—Although we may stand in hard places, and have bitter trials let us always keep in mind our God who is more true and tender than a loving mother watching over us to bless us for our good works and trusting faith. No matter what we are called to endure, let us be truly faithful. Only the true and faithful can claim the blessed promises of God. I feel grateful for the realization of his promises in many ways. It cheers my heart to read in your columns the good news of the progress of the cause, and to see the reports of the faithful shepherds and the testimonies of the blessings of the Lord to his children. I do hope all who take upon them the name of Christ, will be at the feast of the Lamb.

Though darkness separates us here awhile,
The dawning of that day will bring light;
And those who bask in our Father's smile
Will forget the stormy night.
And when we meet in that blest day,
Those loved ones passed on high,
A thousand "welcomes" we may say,
But never more "good bye."

Your sister,

S. A. ROSE.

CAMPELLO, Mass., Jan. 27th.

Brother Blair:—I never have had the pleasure of addressing you before, and have not been in this work but about five months, yet I feel at liberty to call you brother; "for he that doeth the will of my Father, the same is my mother, brother and sister—so saith the Savior. We are all warming up to the work here in Brockton. I had a conversation to-day with a church member about the Book of Mormon. Finally he concluded he did not know much about it, but said he would ask his Elder B. about it. Now brother, I want to be fortified with the word of truth and righteousness, and the power of the Holy Ghost, that I may be able to defeat my adversaries, and pursue them until they cry for quarter—"Lord, what must we do to be saved." There are a few here in Brockton, thanks be to our Savior, who we do not have to pursue, but they are pursuing after us, because they say we have got something they have not, and they are satisfied in regard to that, for they have so testified. They seem to like our tactics, but they do not yet understand about the authority in regard to our gospel ministrations. But, I thank the Lord, we have a well regulated camp, and that our officers have authority from their great chief to carry out His commands, while it seems that in the opposite camp confusion reigns, because everybody takes authority upon themselves, and by so doing there comes strife, contention, railings, backbiting, confusion, and disorder. But if we move according to the plans of Christ the Savior there will be no discord, and we will enter into rest with the Saints and all of God's people.

Pray for me that I may grow in grace and knowledge of the truth. A. E. NELSON.

NEBRASKA CITY, Feb. 2d.

Dear Herald:—At last writing I was doing service for the Master at Wilber. Left there on the 15th ult., to attend the quarterly conference here. Train was twice stuck in a snow-drift, and shoveling snow at midnight is not a very pleasant part of mission work. The conference was a grand success, considering the severe weather, and the almost impassable condition of the roads. Bro. James Caffall was present, and gave some wise and very instructive counsel. Brn. John Goode and George Kemp were also with us.

Bro. R. J. Anthony and I kept up meetings till last Sabbath evening. On the 31st ult. we went to the river, and after cutting through two feet of ice, one was added to the household of faith, and we are inclined to believe that in the future he will be useful in aiding to spread the work, and more especially in Michigan, where he spent the most part of life. The intense cold and deep snow have been against us for the past five weeks.

In bonds,

R. M. ELVIN.

FANNING, Kan., Jan. 30th.

Dear Herald:—To-day Bro. Wm. Gurwell and myself are arranging to baptize seven who have given their names, all adults. These would have been immersed before this time if weather had not prevented; more are expected as they have openly confessed their conviction of the truthfulness of the gospel we preach. A greater interest is now being manifest than ever before in this locality; our houses are filled nightly with the most intelligent class of people; and some of them come from four to five miles this cold stormy weather to hear the words of eternal life; and are saying in their hearts, as did Peter, "To whom shall we go, thou hast the words of eternal life." Truly the people are greatly awakened and I am kept busy answering questions. I would be so glad if some good Elder could come and relieve me for a time. I have been here ever since December 20th, and have preached every night and twice each Sunday; besides, have daily been teaching in the market places and in private houses. God is daily confirming his word among this people. I am now preaching at Iola School-house, about two miles from this place. Last night the house was filled to overflowing. If another Elder will come here he will be well cared for, not only by the Saints but by the outside people, as they want more preaching at Highland Station, McGalord and Hickory Grove school-houses. Come and help us. If you can't come pray for us that we may be one in the gospel of Christ Jesus; Again, pray for us.

Inclosed please find letter from Mr. G. L. Pepper, which I would like to have published on account of the doctrine contrasted with ours. He places a birth before baptism. Again, the sacrament to invite the Lord's people to partake, or open communion. I want to show the difference and who the Lord's people are as many of the Baptists here think we teach same as the Separate Baptists do. I am trying to show them that Christ took the cup and blessed it and gave it to none but his disciples; also the bread and brake it and gave to his disciples, and to none other, not desiring to bring damnation upon any by giving them a chance to eat or drink unworthily. Pray for me that "I may fight the good fight that I may win the crown." I want to keep the faith.

Yours in the one faith."

C. STCLAIR.

January 23d, 1886.

Mr. C. Stclair, Dear Sir:—In reply to yours of the first of this month, I answer your questions. You wanted to know whether there were Separate Baptists in this country or not. There is such a society here. You wanted to know what was their belief.

1. We believe in repentance toward God and faith in the Lord Jesus Christ.

2. We believe that a man must be born again before he is a Christian.

3. We believe after the new birth, that a man should be baptized by immersion as we believe this to be the apostolic mode of baptism.

4. We believe that all God's children should commemorate our Lord's death and suffering, by taking the sacrament. We, as Separate Baptists invite all the Lord's children to eat and drink with us at our communions. Paul called it the Lord's table and we do the same.

5. We believe in washing the Saints' feet, as taught by Christ himself. Christ said unto Peter "If I wash thee not thou hast no part with me." So we as Separate Baptists hold this as an ordinance of the church.

The Nolynn Association of Separate Baptists, was constituted in the year 1819. The South Kentucky Association was constituted in the year 1787. The first Separate Baptist Church was constituted in old Virginia 250, or 300 years ago, according to history.

We, as Separate Baptists deny any right to be governed by books of decorum, creeds, or confessions of men; aside from the scriptures of the Old and New Testaments. We agree to be governed by the Bible, taking it for the man of our counsel and government.

I have given you a faint history of our doctrine, and I want you to write to me and tell me what you think of it; and if you are not satisfied write me and I will try and give you satisfaction on our doctrine. Please come over next fall to our Association and you can get a clear view of our premises then.

Your truly,

G. L. PEPPER.

Bro. W. W. Blair:—Sr. Bertha and myself are receiving letters from many of the Saints expressive of sympathy and condolence in our bereavement by the death of our oldest son. We feel grateful for these kind remembrances, and are thankful to those who have so delicately and considerately given token of their regard for us.

JOSEPH SMITH,

BERTHA M. SMITH.

LAMONI, Feb. 9th, 1886.

BLUE RAPIDS, Kan., Feb. 6th.

Bro. William:—I've been looking for several days for the Herald, and we are very lonely without it. Truly, we are thankful to have the Herald, and we thank the publishers who send it to us. There is an old saying (but I do not think it always a right one), that we must never look back. But I assure you I take as much comfort in looking back at things in the past, as looking forward to the future which is so uncertain. I often think of the lonely condition of sister Blair while you were traveling through the cities you once [twenty-nine years ago, Ed.] dreamed of; and I often think how literally it has come to pass. The great serpent you then saw has not yet lost all his power over the beautiful woman, the church, and I often think and say, "Oh my Father; when will their captivity cease, and they be set free?" For I know many of them are by nature as good as we, but were led off and deceived by that wicked power. But the scenes that I look back on are not all dark and harrowing, but many are joyous.

I look back on the days when Joseph and his mother came to Amboy and when by the Spirit of prophecy from the Lord he came, and by the Spirit we received him, and rejoiced that our wanderings were o'er, and that the Lord was pleased to own us as his again, for we were like sheep without a shepherd, tossed too and fro not by every wind of doctrine. But when good came, we were ready to receive it, for our faith was in the gospel. And now we rejoice to see the prosperity of the church. We read a letter from Sr. Helen Smith last night in the Hope, and I shed tears to think how patient she was in teaching those people, and how earnest they were to learn the word of life. But it fulfills the words of Isiah that, "the Isles shall wait for the law of the Lord." I am rejoiced to see how many there are on those Islands who have obeyed the gospel, and I hope the Lord will bless Bro. Smith and his wife and give them wisdom and patience to perform their arduous task.

With love to all in the office, I am your sister,
CHRISTIANA LANDERS.

SPRINGPORT, Mich., Feb. 1886.

To Joseph Smith:—Dear friend, I confess I was sorry, if not most ashamed to see that public notice in the Herald signed by L. D. Hickey. It reminds me of the words of an apostle who said by way of keen rebuke against the sin of divisions among the saints, viz: "Is Christ divided?" "Or were ye baptized in the name of Paul?" Is it not now as then, proof of a carnal mind-at enmity with God. "Not subject to God's law, neither indeed can be." I think with the word of God, that "a living dog is better than a dead lion." J. J. Strang was known as "another Mormon lion." And was so published as such immediately after the death of his predecessor. Whether or not he was worthy of that honor, it is well known and proved that he was from the tribe of Judah. I say it was and is as positively manifest as it is that the present acknowledged shepherd is from the tribe of Joseph. There is no dispute of this matter. Now if this be so indeed, is it not manly and wise to follow the "living dog" in preference to a dead lion." In other words, a living shepherd instead of one who is dead and gone with all the prophets who were before him. Why prefer one dead lion to another dead one.

All dead prophets are alike to me. I conclude the people were subject to the order of Joshua after his superior left him in charge with only a part of the honor that God had conferred on Moses. No one will doubt this fact. If God did so once who is he to contend against his right to "repeat" such an "history." As to divisions in the household of faith, or among Latter Day Saints, it is a shame and disgrace that an apostle should be guilty of speaking in favor of it after so much has been said in this generation against that wide-spread, world-wide confusion. If Christ is one his wife is one also. If his body is one body, never to see corruption nor death, his bride must be one also or "none of his." So says his word; viz: "Except you are one, you are none of mine." Why should a prophet be an "idol shepherd?" Who can answer this question. Please read the last four verses of 13th chapter of Zechariah. That foolish shepherd would not mean Joseph Smith, for he has visited them that "were cut off" by the prophet for not obeying the call of the true shepherd. Mr. Strang never visited them, but he prophesied their destruction. But it seems a clear matter that the brotherhood between Judah and Israel is "broken" in so far as the two last instruments as shepherds is concerned, if not any further.

I am inclined to believe we are near the time foretold in the next chapter, viz: 14th. Is he a foolish shepherd who leaves the flock to guard themselves alone when he is gone? I am a poor instrument myself and "foolish" also; but I would like to know and do my duty. If the Lord is pleased to raise up a foolish shepherd for a wise purpose best known to Himself, it would not be wise in me to despise or set him at naught. No, nor would I do so. I just note these humble remarks out of love to God's word and work. For I am a believer in this dispensation of the fulness of times; God bless the present shepherd and all of his flock.

Editors Herald:—I was reading the Deseret News, sent me by some kind hand, I presume, and as I perused the article penned by W. W., [Wingfield Watson.—Ed.] I could but feel like the juryman, who heard the plaintiff's case, and while under the direct influence of his witnesses, and his lawyer, he said—It is a clear case. The defence might as well own up whipped, and well whipped. But he took the second thought, and said, "Am I a fool, that I should thus decide until I hear from the other side, even the defendant." He corrected himself, stood up like a man and heard both sides of the case, and then decided accordingly. One would think to read those letters that President Smith was a second Nero, or Herod. If he should judge simply by what W. W. says. We would like to say a few words for the good of Zion and her converts. Mr. Smith is charged with want of charity and philanthropy. But let us see what the son of the martyr has done.

1st. He claims and teaches the world his father was a prophet of God. 2d. He teaches the same gospel his father taught. 3d. He took the cause of Zion when it was homeless and friendless, and made to it many friends. 4th. He stood up in the halls, groves and school houses of the nation and preached Christ and him crucified for a lost world, (out of Christ). 5th. He has, as he understands the spirit and letter of the law God gave the church through his father, defended it at home and abroad. 6th. He has not shunned to defend the latter day work, whenever it has been assailed. 7th. He has devoted his whole time and influence to the great latter day work. As to the Utah people. They do not belong to the church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. When they turned their backs upon the city of Joseph, and chose Brigham Young and others to lead them; men whom God had not sent; God then and there cast them out of the fold, and there is not a soul of them who endorsed Brigham and followed him that holds a citizenship in the church of God. Pres. Smith has been over the mountains and up and down the valleys of Utah and other territories to show them their folly. In many places he has been used well, and some have been made glad while hearing the man God has set at the head of the dispensation, for a time. All this he has done, and yet these very men and women for whom W. W. has so much sympathy, many of them have closed their halls and public places of worship; yet he has pleaded with them, giving line upon line, for them to abandon their leaders and accept these men God has sent.

We don't claim perfection for Pres. Smith, but we do claim he has done as well as many of God's chosen in this and other ages. It is easy for a man to sit down on his own farm and look for faults in men of active life. Let those very men get up and out and they will get many a polt from those who despise the good. We don't offer to make excuses for Pres. Smith, but from a bird's eye view of his life he has done very much to help on our common Zion. And we shall hold him up as the President, &c., of the church until God himself sets him aside and gives us another. May God bless, has been and now is our prayer.

L. D. HICKEY, To all the Saints.

EMERSON, Ia., Feb., 6th,

Brother Joseph Smith:—I have been living in Emerson about one year. I wish you would send me the Book of Mormon. If I should stay herre this Summer, I will send for the Herald and other valuable reading matter. I am still in the faith if I know myself.

Yours,

H. W. POMEROY.

ROGERS, Texas, Feb, 1st.

Dear Herald:—As anticipated when I wrote you last on Christmas, I had the privilege of baptizing my two cousins—sisters Effie and Ettie Wight. The day was warm and pleasant, the water clear as crystal, the place beautiful for situation, just where the water became smooth after passing over a rugged fall. The murmur of the falls above us mingled strangely, but sweetly with the music of song and the solemn words of baptism, as these two were ushered into the kingdom of God. I thought it a fitting way in which to celebrate the birth of him in whose name we were assembled. All nature seemed to smile upon the scene, while our hearts were filled with praise and thankfulness. May these be faithful and humble, and their lives be fraught with peace, shall ever be my prayer. At night I spoke on the subject of laying on of hands, confirmed the two baptized, and blessed several children. Thus ended our Christmas—one of the most peaceful days of the year.

Dec. 29th I bid adieu to kindred, Saints and friends, and in company with a Mr. John Benton started for San Antonio, where we arrived the next day. On the 31st in company with Mr. J. T. Wilson rode to Oak Island, where I spoke once on the New Year's Night in Zion's Chapel—commencing my year's work in the same place I did one year ago. The next day in company with Mr. David Kuykendall I traveled fifteen miles to his father's, Bro. Absolom Kuykendall. The next day assisted by Bro. K. I commenced labor four miles from his house at "Agua Negra Springs." Preached four discourses which seemed to be well received, and the interest was increasing when inclement weather put an end to our services.

The 9th we returned to Oak Island where I spent the time until the 14th. The weather was all the time so unfavorable that we held no meetings. The 14th, though the weather was yet very disagreeable, and roads quite muddy, Mr. J. P. Neal kindly drove to San Antonio with me. The next morning I was early on my way to Hearne. At Milano I met Brn. Simmons, Norwood, and Renfroe on their way to conference, and we travelled the rest of the way together.

The conference convened the 16th and adjourned the 17th, and though the weather was unfavorable we had an excellent time, all present seemed encouraged and strengthened. Bro. Roberts and I continued meetings until Thursday night, after which he and Bro. Hay went to Cottonwood Prairie to open a new place there, at the earnest solicitation of Mr. Closs. On Sunday, Bro. Kirby and I went to Henry Prairie to open another new place. The brethren returned reporting fair audiences and some enquiring. We were not so successful—were forbidden the privilege of speaking in the house. The reason given was: "We have heard that wherever your doctrine is preached it brings division in the neighborhood." We replied that we would not guarantee a unity of sentiment in regard to our preaching, for some would probably receive it while others would reject it; but what is true of us in this regard, is also true of all other denominations; so to be consistent you had better stop all. A Mr. Peeler, a trustee and a Baptist replied: "I've got as good a religion as I want, and if I'm in ignorance I prefer to remain ignorant." With such a pitiable specimen of intelligence in authority as that, of course argument was useless, and we returned to Central Branch.

Bro. Roberts and I preached a few more times in the Saints' chapel; when on the 29th I left Bro. Roberts and son with the Saints of Central Branch and came directly here where I am the guest of Bro. E. D. Thompson. I have preached twice, had very respectful attention and good audiences. The people of Rogers appear to be liberal, respectful, and intelligent. I have of late had better, freer liberty as a rule, than ever before in my life. Have witnessed and received some glorious spiritual blessings. This I think is the result of an earnest effort upon my part to dedicate myself more fully to God's service, and to live more humble and nearer to God. Bro. Roberts expects to go to Cook's Point to-day to put his son to work planting a crop preparatory to moving his family here from Missouri soon after April Conference. The interest and calls for preaching are on the increase. The weather here now is warm and pleasant, though we oc-asionally have a disagreeable day. Farmers are plowing their ground, and busily preparing for the sowing and planting of another crop. Praying for the success of all God's people I am in bonds,

HEMAN C. SMITH.

EMERSON, Iowa, Feb., 2d.

Dear Herald:—The Keystone Branch is yet alive and endeavoring to keep the unity of the faith in the bonds of peace. We have our prayer meetings regular every Wednesday night, and have a fair attendance considering the severe cold weather. The members express themselves as being strong in the faith, and have no desire to turn back to the beggarly elements of the world. Elder Henry Kemp was with on the 30th, and 31st of January, preached three times to fair sized congregations of attentive listeners. We hope some good may result therefrom.

Mother Campbell is lying very low, and has been for more than a year. She suffers a great deal from a cancer of the breast, but bears it patiently and seems to be reconciled to her lot, hard though it is. I enclose a clipping from the Louisville Courier Journal of Jan. 4th which I believe contains some false statements which ought to be shown up in proper style that all may see their deformity. Ever hoping and praying for the success of the truth and the redemption of Zion,

I remain yours,

J. B. CLINE.

PERSONAL.

Mr. Anthony Trollope has no hesitancy in alluding very frankly to his early history and struggles. Recently, in an address he delivered on the subject of "Reading," he said: "I remember well when I came to London, a lad of nineteen, to enter a public office to earn my bread, with very little knowledge before me of any thing except that I had to earn my bread, that an old relative of mine, a dear old lady, who lived down in the country, wrote to me a letter in which she said, 'My dear Anthony, when you leave your office, always go home, drink tea, and read good books.' Now that advice was good so far as it went. Let me tell you that among my friends, among those nearest and dearest to me, among some who are the wisest that I know, I find men and women who can not read. They can take a book, open it, and read a line here and there, or read a whole page, as well as I can or as you can; but still they can not read. They can not take the book, sit down with it by their fireside, and be happy."

FOR YOUNG MEN TO REMEMBER.

That clothes don't make the man.

That to deal honorably with all men they begin with their washer-woman.

That they need something more substantial than cigars, kid gloves, and a cane to start house-keeping with.

That they can't reckon on their father's fortune to bring them through life. Fortunes are slippery things—better have something besides to fall back on.

That a girl who decks herself in the latest things out and parades in the street while her mother does the washing, isn't worth wasting much love on.

That a fellow who deliberately proposes matrimony to a girl when he can't support himself, is either a first class fraud or a fool—unless he marries for money and becomes her hired man.

Selected Poetry.

Sr. AUGUSTA, of Independence, Mo., sends us the following beautiful paraphrase of the Lord's Prayer. It is accredited to a French author, M. Pierre Bernard.

THE LORD'S PRAYER.

Our Father—
 By right of creation,
 By bountiful provision,
 By gracious adoption;
 Who art in heaven—
 The throne of thy glory,
 The portion of thy children,
 The temple of thy angels.
 Hallowed by thy name—
 By the thoughts of our hearts,
 By the words of our lips,
 By the works of our hands,
 Thy kingdom come—
 Of Providence to defend us,
 Of grace to refine us,
 Of glory to crown us,
 Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven—
 Towards us without resistance,
 By us without compulsion,
 Universally without exception,
 Eternally without declination.
 Give us this day our daily bread—
 Of necessity for our bodies,
 Of eternal life for our souls.
 And forgive us our trespasses—
 Against the commands of thy law,
 Against the grace of thy gospel;
 As we forgive those who trespass against us—
 By defaming our characters,
 By embezzling our property,
 By abusing our persons;
 And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil—
 Of overwhelming afflictions,
 Of worldly enticements,
 Of Satan's devices,
 Of error's seduction,
 Of sinful affections;
 For thine is the kingdom, the power and the glory forever—
 Thy kingdom governs all,
 Thy power subdues all,
 Thy glory is above all.
 Amen.
 As it is in thy purpose,
 So it is in thy promises,
 So be it in our prayers,
 So it shall be to thy praise.

WHAT IS THE CHURCH; AND WHAT DO WE JOIN IT FOR?

IT is a mutual protective association, and we join it for protection. There are two sources of good and evil. These two principles operate upon the mind of man. We call the sources from which these originate, God, and the devil; it generally being supposed that God has given the evil influences or power into the hands of the devil, with permission to destroy those who are willing to be led by him; and that good, He controls for the benefit of those who are willing to be led by Him. Man having his agency to chose which he will follow. Man is seeking happiness; it is the aim of life, the grand incentive to action. Both these beings promise it to him, and have ordained means for that end. The devil can not give it. God will aid man to obtain it, but can not force man to accept it.

In all ages of the world men have formed alliances for mutual protection against each other, to secure happiness, even at even at the expense of others—generally wealth being the object—the weak against the strong, and vice versa. These, the Book of Mormon informs us, will eventually prove the downfall of all nations. They are now causing anxiety, and no small amount of sorrow among the nations. Such a principle must be hurtful to the welfare of the people; for it divides them, setting one against the other. It is a selfish principle, emanating from an evil source. It certainly is no good influence that moves men in this manner. But there is manifested wisdom in all these organizations, showing that He who is at the head recognizes the fact that in unity there is strength. In these secret combinations we clearly see the working of satan organizing his forces; and those who are willing to seek gain at the expense of their fellowmen, are his, and will be securely bound up in bundles (small secret societies) and burnt when Christ comes. Already the bundles are forming, and the bands put around them. But ere this could be done some means must be resorted to, and cruel selfishness is the means satan is now using, and is rapidly bringing about his ends. From all parts of the land we hear that his forces are being assembled and duly organized; for what? a dreadful end—the burning.

Those who are not willing to be connected with those bundles will be enrolled in the organization of God for protection; against what? This evil influence that satan is exerting. Many are now indifferent about these matters, but a time will come when all will be interested. This is clearly seen by reading Rev. 13: 8.—“And all that dwell on the earth shall worship Him, who are not written in the book of life of the lamb slain from the foundation of the world.” “He that leadeth into captivity shall go into captivity.”—verse 10. Both powers will be stronger near the end. All will have to take part—no neutral ground to stand on then.

God's organization is different from those of men, in having for its object the welfare and happiness of men. All his laws in all ages have been to secure man's happiness here and hereafter. Protective associations among men are for the good of the few who are within their pale. Protection to them generally means injury to others. But the church is for the exaltation of all, and to protect them against an unseen enemy, cruel and subtle, one who is constantly seeking their destruction, and who can approach, and to some extent lead, all who are not in God's kingdom. How is safety found there more than elsewhere? From the fact that within that organization (if the laws of the same are duly kept) this enemy can not come. Those who are overcome are such as have wandered from the fold, as stragglers from the main body of an army, who properly belong to the army, but have wandered unwisely beyond its protection, and are easily cut off by the watchful enemy.

Those who are of the church, living according to its laws, he can not overcome. For in order to do so he must cause them to sin. To sin is to infringe on the rights of others,—do wrong to each other. This we will not do if we love each other; hence the necessity of loving one another. “A new commandment give I unto you, that ye love one another.” Jesus' prayer was that we should be one, as he and the Father were one. No influence can make us such but the power of love. Within its sacred realm Satan can not come, no more than he could go to heaven. It is God's safeguard thrown round his people to protect and make them happy. It only can give them happiness. Look at domestic circles where it is absent, (which is too often the case), and is happiness found? God designs that his people shall have comfort to a degree, and that they shall do right towards each other; so he commands that this bond shall bind us together. And it should be our prayer that it may increase, if we want to be happy; for the experience of all mankind, both in and out of the church, is that love is the foundation, the grand source of all true happiness. The ministry should abound with it; for if any other principle moves them to action they will eventually come to naught. No other foundation is solid; for it is the Spirit of Jesus, manifested by him when he left his glory with his Father and came to the earth to labor for man. He asks no reward for the mighty deed, only that they which he once had might be restored to him again. A spirit of love prompted him in the beginning to so act for man. And that same spirit must prompt his servants, if they would be accepted of Christ. If it does so, then indeed will they be one, and Satan can not have power over them to make them do wrong; for they will not injure those they love. Examples of this are always before us. The mother will not injure her child. She cheerfully labors for it, for she loves it. We can cheerfully labor for mankind, for labor will be light if this principle moves us. Otherwise we will grow weary. No other principle should actuate the elders of Israel; if so our works are vain; we will tire of the applause of men, (if we should be so fortunate or unfortunate as to gain it), or if a sense of duty alone moves us, that ere long will be hushed and we will step out by the wayside to be wondered at.

This thought may be extended into other worlds. Love is an attribute of God, as lasting as he is, and will not cease because the objects of it may fail to merit it. Who can say that attachments formed here will not reach into other worlds? We want to carry all the attachments of this life into the next. We want to there enjoy the friendship of those we love here. The fond ties that we form here, that gladden the pathway of life and shed many a ray of sunshine over it, will in all probability exist there, and we may in some way be able to assist them, who have wandered from the path of duty and are beyond our power to rescue here. We may not have the privilege or the power to aid them here; but as we labor for those we love here, why not there? We will not change in our affections for them; for such ties are lasting, and we certainly will carry the Spirit of our Master into the worlds beyond. The same Spirit that prompts us here to labor for those who suffer, will do likewise there, until redemption is complete. Will we not grow weary and want to rest? No; moved by that principle labor is joy, and always will be. God labors, and if we partake of his Spirit we will want to do likewise. And thus on, on through eternity, as messengers of power and love we will go, bringing peace and joy to those who mourn and are toiling up the height of glory, as angels do now for us poor mortals. Such thoughts and scenes are according to the genius of the gospel—the spirit of the work. To labor for others, impelled by the power of love, is the ruling principle of the gospel. No man can say when it will end. Wisdom would say, Not until all had been redeemed that will be according to the word, in the far distant future.

He who would be great, then, must have great affections. Jesus is greatest of all. We believe his love for man was greater than all others. Who can say it was not that which made Him so? We can faintly see the necessity of cultivating and praying for this heavenly principle, that by which God rules the hosts of heaven and commands his children here to have. And it will not be long ere he will rule the earth with it. O what joy and happiness will be ours when the earth is ruled by love! We have a foretaste of it sometimes in our prayer and testimony meetings.

With this band around us we are secure from our foe. Without it we are at his mercy, helpless in his grasp. This principle he can not give to his followers; he does not control it; nor would he if he could. It is the power of heaven. Hatred, malice and jealousy are the powers of hell controlled by Satan. We see their effects, have felt their influence, and are able to judge of them.

God designs that his people should be one; that the strong should aid the weak; for there are some such by nature. From such we should not expect too much. But some will ask, Have we not all got to obey the same law? Yes; but in so doing some will stumble often in trying to keep the law, while others will make less because of their different dispositions. The promise is to them who overcome. Where a good disposition is given, from such much is required. One should aid the other. The labor of all is the welfare of mankind. Truly the church is a grand protective association which reaches into the worlds beyond, there to exist on the same principles it does here; for God's laws are perfect, and consequently are unchangeable.

HIRAM L. HOLT.

VICTORY OVER THE TAVERN KEEPER.

MINISTER.—I have never had but one opinion on this subject, and that is adverse to your great "movements," as you call them.

SON OF TEMPERANCE.—(with surprise) Adverse!

M.—That is the word I have used.

S. of T.—You surprise me, of all others, I would expect to find in the minister of the gospel the advocate of temperance.

M.—I am the advocate of temperance.

S. of T.—And yet you do not approve our action in this cause.

M.—I do not.

S. of T.—Why so, sir?

M.—Your pledge is based upon a simple human resolution. Now, I acknowledge no reforming power but the grace of God. Build the foundations of your order upon religious principles, and then I will have confidence therein. But so long as all depends on the unsustained, unregenerated will of man, there is no safety. Human resolutions may appear very strong for a time; but so long as they are unsustained by the silver cords of divine truth, and the golden bands of divine love, they may be broken at any moment. Your pledges and associations are but external bonds in danger of being severed at any time, that inward struggling, self-love, self-interest, appetite, or unsubdued passion, regain strength; but religion is an attraction that draws from the center of a man's life, and holds all in permanent integrity. Your "moral suasion," depend upon it, is of little value; I believe only in "religious suasion."

S. of T.—What do you mean by religion?

M.—A change of heart, wrought by the grace of God. Such a change is worth a thousand pledges. The new man is freed from the shackles of old appetites and passions; he is washed from his impurities; he has left the fiery streams of sin, and drinks now only the waters of life.

S. of T.—But how is the drunkard to begin to be religious?

TAVERN KEEPER.—I knew several of these men, Parson B., who have been saved by your religious "suasion," as you call it.

M.—Well, what of them?

T. K.—Out of six who joined the church, four drink at my bar as freely as ever; two keep sober, but one of these is a bigger rascal than he was before. These are facts; and no one should be afraid to look at facts. So much for your pledges, and so much for your religion! I wouldn't give much for either.

M.—Nor would I give much for your hopes of heaven, friend Tavern keeper. You mustn't be angry with me for speaking the truth.

T. K.—The truth, as seen from your point of view. Not in the least angry. I am a plain spoken man of the world; I can receive, in turn, a good share of plain speaking.

S. of T.—Let us not, by anything offensively by personal, disturb, on this occasion, the balance of each other's minds. We three, all men of some experience, look upon the great temperance movement from different points of observation. Each sees what is before him, in a peculiar light, and comes to his conclusions through a different course of reasoning. No harm can, and some good may arise from an interchange of ideas.

T. K.—And so I think. And if you gentlemen wish to converse on the subject of temperance, I am willing to give you the benefit of my conclusions on the subject.

M.—Suppose, then, friend Tavern keeper, you give us your views about temperance.

T. K.—Well; my views, to speak frankly, is that neither ministers nor temperance men, as a general thing, are doing half the good they might do.

S. of T.—Indeed! How so?

T. K.—I do not speak lightly, nor from prejudice, in what I say. It was but natural that, from my relation to this movement, I should, from the beginning, assume an attitude of observation. At first I was rather alarmed. You attacked the enemy so vigorously, and carried point after point with such indomitable bravery, that I really began to fear for my own position; and there was a period, when blinded by self-interest, and angry with the sweeping denunciations hurled at the heads of tavern keepers, I would, had it been in my power, have crushed the very heart out of your salutary reform. That feeling, however, in time passed away, and was followed by a better state of mind. I was still a careful observer; yet, with my sympathies all on your side.

S. of T.—And still continued in the traffic?

T. K.—(Not appearing to notice this remark). It was not long, however, before I saw that your system had in it a most fatal error.

S. of T.—Ah! And pray what was this error?

T. K.—You took from the clinging vine its old support, yet failed to furnish another of adequate strength.

M.—You are right there, friend Tavern Keeper; this I have always said.

S. of T.—We procured employment for the reformed inebriate. We organized associations in which he might act with his fellow man, and find others to lean upon in his weakness; others, who would encourage him to persevere in the good work he had begun. We interested his sympathies in the poor drunkard, and sent him forth to the highways and by-ways, the lanes and the alleys, on missions of mercy.

T. K.—And, for a while, every thing went on bravely.

M.—But all was done in the strength of mere human resolutions; and these are, in times of strong temptations, weaker than the bruised reed. No wonder that so many who have run well for a season, fainted and failed by the way. There is, depend upon it, no true reliance upon any system that is not based upon religion. The heart must first be changed. Unless reform begins here, all is hopeless.

T. K.—So you ministers all say; and yet the pledge has made fifty sober men out of drunkards where your religion, as you call it, has made one. I speak knowingly on the subject.

M.—It pains me to hear any one speak so lightly of religion.

T. K.—Don't misunderstand me. I am no scoffer at God and the Bible.

M.—And yet you scoff at religion.

T. K.—Don't misunderstand me on this either. I have only spoken of the value of what you call religion in reforming the drunkard. Do not construe my remarks into anything beyond this.

M.—What we call religion?

T. K.—Your suddenly wrought conversions, I mean. Your washing the Ethiop's skin white in a moment. In this kind of religion I never had any faith; and this kind of religion, let me tell you, never had, nor ever will have, any salutary efficacy in saving men from the degradation of drunkenness.

M.—The Bible is very explicit on this subject. To all men, whether sober or not, it says: "Ye must be born again." Here is the only chance of salvation from evil.

T. K.—I have never questioned this; but I have always questioned your common interpretations of the Scripture annunciation. The Bible regards our natural birth as the type of spiritual birth, does it not?

M.—Certainly.

T. K.—And yet your new spiritual man is conceived and born in a moment, coming forth as it were in full stature. But in natural birth there is brought a tender, helpless, ignorant infant, and a growth therefrom with almost imperceptible slowness; until at length we have the man in full stature. If this is the case naturally, how can we look for a different order of things spiritual? I am no Doctor of Divinity, but depend upon it, my friend, you can have no true spiritual man in any other way.

S. of T.—There is to my mind force in what you say, and I perceive some glimpses of a new light breaking in upon me. Without doubt, as experience too amply demonstrates, there is some defect in our system; for though we can draw multitudes over to our side, large numbers soon leave us for the old enticements. It seems too true that we take from the clinging vine its former supports, and fail to give another having equal power to lift up to the breezes and sunshine.

T. K.—In other words, as temperance reformers, you cut off from a man who has sought for years his pleasure in sensual indulgence, all his old delights; and ere a new and higher life is developed, you fail to substitute for him those innocent social pleasures that he may enter into without danger. You make stirring appeals to his reason and manhood and all that, while in truth he is but a child, weak limbed and tottering in the right way. You lift him upon his feet and say to him, "Walk on bravely, confidently, and all will be well;" and yet he has in himself no strength. And with the church it is no better; but rather worse.

M.—Don't say that.

T. K.—It is true. There everything, I might almost assert, is taken away. The church excludes all pleasures, as evil in themselves. What ground is there therefore for the reformed drunkard to stand upon?

M.—The ground of trust in God.

T. K.—Good ground, I will own, for those who can trust in Him.

M.—All may if they will.

T. K.—But there lies the great difficulty. This willing to trust in God is easy enough in theory, but how difficult do thousands and tens of thousands find it in practice. Many seem for a time to trust in God; but the result proves that it is only seeming. Depend upon it, your church systems, with here and there an exception, fail to provide for that very class most in need of its saving influence. You require them to come up to you, but never dream of going down to them.

M.—You make broad assertions my friend.

T. K.—Yet true, as that the sun shines. The children of this world, as they were eighteen hundred years ago, are still wiser than the children of light. They go down to the level of the ignorant, the sensual and the debased, and hold them where they are, by ministering to what is in them. But the "children of light," as the religionists of the day esteem themselves, never do this. They offer only mental pleasures, and sublime ecstasies, and condemn all other pleasures as evil. Instead of coming down to the sensual minded with pure sensual pleasure, and by these gradually lifting them up, step by step, until by an almost imperceptible transition they are able to elevate them into a perception of mental delights, they say to all in spirit of self-righteousness, Come up to us. But alas! who of the grovelling crowd are able to go up?

M.—What would you have us do?

T. K.—I can say what I think it wise for you to do.

M.—Well; what is it?

T. K.—Bring within the pale of the church all innocent pleasures.

M.—What do you call innocent?

T. K.—Such as do not violate any of God's commandments.

M.—Mention some of them.

T. K.—Concerts of fine music, exercises in elocution, dramatic representations, and all other modes of enjoyment not evil in themselves.

M.—No; never!

S. of T.—You are right friend Tavern Keeper! I see this as I never saw it before. It is too true that we have failed to provide innocent pleasures, blending the sensual with the intellectual, for those who during long years have debased themselves in things merely corporeal. And this has arisen mainly from our desire, as temperance men, to be co-workers with the churches. We saw and acknowledge the power of God in saving men; and numbers of us had faith in the pledge, only so far as it paved the way for religion. But afar off, in stately attitudes, stood the church, with a repulsive, rather than an inviting aspect. It did not come down to help us, but rather rebuked us for interfering with its exclusive right to save men.

T. K.—Your arch-enemy knows better how to do his work. He understands the power of dramatic spectacles, of music and pictures, of all things that appeal to the senses; and he is daily gathering in his harvest of those whom the church neglects to save. Under this particular patronage the theatre, which you might make so all-powerful for good; and everywhere he is seizing upon things innocent, yet despised and neglected by the church, and making them engines of destruction. But, good morning! I have said a great deal more than I expected to say at first. Pardon my free speaking; and do not be so unwise as to reject what is true, even though it be uttered by a tavern keeper. Good morning gentlemen.

S. of T.—Just one word if you please.

T. K.—Well; speak freely.

S. of T.—I must also venture upon a plain word or two before we part. I acknowledge myself your debtor for useful hints; perhaps I may be of equal service to you.

T. K.—Say on, I am always willing to learn.

S. of T.—You seem to have thought a good deal on the subject of temperance. Has it never occurred to you that as a vender of liquor you were doing harm in the community?

T. K.—O, yes; often. But, then, I have argued that my giving up the sale of ardent spirits wouldn't lessen their consumption. Some one else would take my stand and sell on just the same as before. And, why, I have asked myself, should I not have the benefit as well as another?

S. of T.—Might not a robber use the same argument?

T. K.—Not always; for, if he failed to rob or steal in a certain case his intended victim would, in all probability, go free of harm.

S. of T.—Perhaps so. Still, I do not understand how any one as intelligent and observant as you are can reconcile it to his instinctive sense of right, to make a gain of that which destroys his brother, body and soul.

T. K.—I doubt if many who sell liquor permit that instinctive sense of right to which you refer to come into play.

S. of T.—How can they help it?

T. K.—The selfish love of gain rules over most in our impulses.

S. of T.—Most true. But are we just to ourselves, to say nothing of society, thus to permit self-love to overrule these better impulses?

T. K.—I will not say that we are.

M.—Society is held in its integrity by the bond of mutual benefits; the farmer, the mechanic, the manufacturer, the artist are all engaged in promoting the public good. Each works for, and provides food, raiment or other things needful to sustain life, and increase the common stock of enjoyment. A few are drones in the hive; spending their days in idleness, and taking from others without rendering a just return of benefits. And there is yet another class who are neither producers nor idlers, but parasites, drawing life from the very hearts of the people; who pull down, but never aid in building up the social fabric. Can you guess the class to which I allude?

T. K.—To do so would not by any means be difficult.

S. of T.—It grieves me friend Tavern Keeper to adjudge you as belonging to this class.

T. K.—I will not gainsay your judgment now, to-morrow it will be different.

S. of T.—Do I hear aright? will you indeed give up this evil traffic?

T. K.—Such is my purpose. For some time my mind has been approaching this decision. It has been confirmed by our present conversation.

S. of T.—You will come over on our side and help us?

T. K.—I will abandon the sale of liquor. This much I owe to society as a good citizen. Beyond that, I can now pledge myself to nothing. As already said, I do not think either your rule of action, or that of the church the surest and best that can be adopted. You do not come down low enough, stooping under the poor debased drunkard, like the mother bird to her fledglings. You do not wisely regard what is in man. You do not come to his senses with enticements, and thus give him the good, opposite to the evil that has been removed. But I have spoken of this already. Good morning!

S. of T. May God confirm you in your good resolutions.

M.—Amen.

T. K.—And may he bring to your love of serving your fellows, a higher intelligence; for, rest assured, that both of you have much to learn of the science by which we are saved from evil.

WHAT SHALL WE READ.

THIS is a question that is agitating the minds of a great many, and one on which we see a great many "articles" written, setting forth the necessity of acquiring a taste for good books, but never telling us what the good books are. Why doesn't the writer of some of these articles tell us what we should read, for it is what so few seem to understand. How many a child has formed the habit of "novel" reading, simply for the lack of something better to read. Whose fault is it? It surely is not the child's, and we do not believe that there is a parent that would knowingly place before his child anything so destructive to one's mind and happiness as is constantly being placed before most children. It might be asked, why is this reading so hurtful, and if it is, how is it to be prevented?

The greatest evil, we believe, of this reading, is the unnatural goodness of some of its characters, which goodness we being unable to attain to, or to find in others, causes dissatisfaction and discontent, and is the starting point of novel reading, and all know how hurtful this is to the memory. But the greater evil is in the number of hours spent in such useless reading, which could be spent in gathering knowledge that would not only be of use to us now, but in all our after lives. Now how is this evil to be prevented? The first thing to do, we believe, is to make our own paper, the Hope, interesting even to the youngest, and this can not be accomplished by the editor alone, but by the help of the readers of the Hope, and especially the help of the young. We are afraid that most of the help that the editor receives has been like our help, all wishes. But let us try this year to give not only the editor better help, but to be more of a help to each other, but let us not forget that,

"Every sower must one day reap
Fruit from the seed he has sown;
How carefully, then, it becomes us to keep
A watchful eye on the seed, and seek
To sow what is good, that we may not weep
To receive our own."

THE CHRISTIAN HOPE.

"BE ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you, with meekness and fear." We live in an age of eager inquiry, one ripe with skepticism. It appears to me that every person, who cherishes a hope of immortal consciousness, life and identity, should fully consider the words of the foregoing quotation, and endeavor to base their hopes on something more stable than the principles of men and poor weak, ever changing human reason.

"We're born but to die, and reason but to err." Most people have a hope of immortal consciousness, and as it belongs to the nature of most if not all healthy humans to look on the bright side, there are therefore comparatively few who anticipate anything worse after death than that which is their lot here at present. What reason has the average Christian of the present period, for his hope of immortal consciousness individuality? I think the following words, quoted from a modern author, fairly answers the foregoing question.

"What though the lesser lights fade from the sky. Blaze through the ambient air and fall in floating dust. The great sun still shines on in his splendor, and would do so though a million meteors were to burst at once; just so the mind of man, mighty, knowing, and enduring, shall remain after this body withered with inherent fires, sinks and mingles with the dust."

The foregoing, instead of containing any tangible evidence of the immortal individuality of the mind of man, is simply a fine sentimental effusion of an over hopeful nature. Aside from that hopeful, delusive feeling which is the main stay of human ignorance, our evidences of immortal life are found in the Bible. Yet how are we to know that the Bible is not a cunningly devised fable, excepting the signs which Christ promised should follow the believers still continue to do so; or except God still reveals himself to man.

By denying direct, present revelation from God, we cast into the shades of doubt the divine authenticity of the Bible, and throw ourselves upon the resources of human reason for the establishment of that hope we so much desire.

Let us take a glance at what unbiased abstract reasoning can do for us in this respect. Who can recollect any of his personal experiences previous to the quickening of his present body? "The spirit and the body are the soul of man."—(Herald, Jan. 2d, 1886). What hope can we have for consciousness after dissolution? "If Christ be not risen, then is our hope vain." (Paul).

Where do we get our hope of the resurrection of the body? Can we find it in reason? We can not—abstract reason pronounces it nonsense. Thank God, we have something more comforting than the wretched, frigid blasts of abstract reason,—even faith in Christ crucified and risen from the dead. The fact of our longing after immortality is no more evidence that we shall be heirs thereof, than is our wishing for and aspiring to health, riches and honor proof that we shall acquire them,—in fact it is not nearly so much so, taking abstract reason for the judge.

WONDERS OF ASTRONOMY.

BY ELDER F. R. TUBB, LONDON, ENG.

CHAP. III.

HISTORY OF THE COMET OF 1835.

THAT comets were the causes, or at least the signs of famines and pestilences; and were followed by droughts and tempests, that they preceded civil commotions and great wars, and were especially fatal to princes, were things at one time believed not only by the vulgar, but the learned. They were stated from chairs of theology and philosophy, as facts established by the universal testimony of history. Of such historical records of the appearance of comets, and of the prodigies which accompanied them, Pingre has collected some hundreds in his "Cometographie." Comets have been exorcised as evil spirits.

The comet of 1835, when it came in 1456, was encountered by a Papal bull, and the anathemas of the whole Catholic Church. Dismayed at once by the progress of the Turks, and the progress of the comet, Calixtus included them both in the same prayer of conjuration ordered to be said in all the churches.

This comet came again in 1531, in 1607, and in 1682. 1759 was to be the next period of its appearance, and its coming was now, for the first time, foreseen. Halley, afterwards Savilian professor at Oxford, having undertaken to calculate the orbits of the different comets which had, up to that time been observed, presented, in 1705, to the Royal Society, a work called "Cometographia," in which he predicted* the return of the comet of 1682 in 1758, an announcement received in those days with no little interest and surprise.

It was, however, immediately foreseen by astronomers, that the path of this comet would be disturbed by the attraction of the planet Jupiter. Lalande and Clairaut undertook to calculate the amount of this disturbance. The work was one of enormous labor, which they would never have undertaken, as Lalande himself admits, had not assistance been rendered to them (strange to say) by a lady. To Madame Lapaute, the wife of a celebrated watchmaker in Paris, was assigned a principal part of their calculations, and to that lady is due a principal share in their success. "During six months we calculated from morning till night, even during meals," says Lalande.

They determined the actual perturbations during 150 years of Jupiter and Saturn, and they arrived finally at the conclusion, that its coming would be delayed no less than 518 days by the attraction of Jupiter, and 100 days more by Saturn. The time of its perihelion passage or nearest approach to the sun, was thus brought to the 13th of April, 1759; it was, nevertheless, stated, that errors might have been made amounting to a month either way.

These conclusions Clairaut published to the world in November, 1758, when astronomers had already begun to look for the comet. It was seen by a farmer of the name of Palitzch near Dresden, on December 25th, 1758, and at Paris on January 21st, 1759. It passed its perihelion on March 13th, 1759, just one month before the time predicted.

The comet of 1759 was next to complete its orbit in 1835; and of its appearance in that year an account will now be given, the materials for which I have collected from the work entitled, "Notice of Halley's comet and its return in 1835 by M de Pontecoulant.

THE CALCULATION OF M. M. DAMOISEAU AND PONTECOULANT

The comet of 1835 was, in its last revolution, influenced appreciably by the attractions of the four planets, Jupiter, Saturn, Uranus, and the Earth, and of course by the attraction of the Sun; and M. M. Damoiseau and Pontecoulant severally and independently undertook the task of calculating their amount of attraction on the coming stranger, and separately completed their computations. M. Pontecoulant found that the action of Jupiter would, as compared with the last revolution of the comet, accelerate it on the whole 135.34 days; that of Saturn retard it 51.53 days; that of Uranus return it 6.07 days; and that of the earth 11.7 days, making a total result of 66.4 days advance as compared with the mean time of the comet's revolution completed in 1759. The principal portion of the influence of the earth on its motions, dating as far back as the year 1759, or the very beginning of its revolution, at which time it passed exceedingly near to the earth.

PREDICTED TIME OF THE APPEARANCE AND PERIHELION PASSAGE OF THE COMET OF 1835.

Allowance being made for these the whole period of the comet's last revolution was brought to 27,937 (twenty-seven thousand, nineteen hundred and thirty-seven) days; and counting from the 13th March, 1759, when it last passed through its perihelion, or nearest extremity of its orbit to the sun, this brought its next perihelion passage to the 13th November 1835.* At the same time M. de Pontecoulant expressly stated that there might be an error of a few days in this time, and assigned as a proximate cause of such an error, a possible incorrectness in the assumed masses of some of the planets. His words are, "We must here once more repeat, that it is not pretended that the time announced for the comet's return to its perihelion may not be in error some days." Elsewhere he says "Thus, then, it is conclusive that about the middle of November 1835, the passage of the comet through its perihelion will take place.

The determination of the time when the comet would first appear at any place, was altogether another and a much less important matter. It depended upon the time when it would enter that portion of the heavens then visible at night at that particular place;—it depended upon the intensity of its light, as compared with what twilight there might be when it first appeared—it depended also upon the state of the atmosphere. All these were variable elements, and none of them, except one, could be calculated upon with any certainty. It would have been madness to have mentioned a particular day when it would first be seen—nevertheless both M. Pontecoulant and M. Damoiseau ventured to announce it as probable that it would appear during the first days of the month of August.

ACTUAL TIME OF THE APPEARANCE AND PERIHELION PASSAGE OF THE COMET OF 1835.

The facts which astronomy reveals are so stupendous, her results so far beyond the range of ordinary thought the steps which she takes through time and space so rapid, leaving even imagination far behind, that of all sciences, she would find least credit with the world, were it not for the predictions to which she appeals, and which everybody may verify. It is this prophetic power which constitutes her strength, her whole strength, or her weakness with the vulgar. Driven from every other test, there were people disposed to cavil at this science, (as there are always people disposed to cavil at what they do not understand),—who had fixed their criterion on the predicted return of the comet of 1759.

Now what was the result? It had been announced that the comet would probably be visible during the first days of August. It was seen on the 5th of August at Rome by MM. Dumouchel and Vico; its light being then exceedingly feeble. But more than this, the precise place in the heavens which the comet would occupy on every day whilst it should be visible, had been calculated and announced beforehand, and it was when they directed their telescope towards that point in the heavens which had been so predicted for the fifth of * M. Damoiseau fixed its perihelion passage at the 4th November.

† The reader need not be reminded how pure and clear is the atmosphere of Rome.

August, that M. M. Dumouchel and Vico saw it. It had been foretold that it would pass its perihelion on the 13th of November. It passed its perihelion on the 16th of November. It had been stated by M. Pontecoulant, as a reason for the uncertainty which he thus felt in respect to the time of the perihelion passage, amounting, however, only to a few days, that the masses usually assigned to some of the planets by astronomers, and used by him in his calculations, might require correction. Of all the planets, Jupiter exerted the greatest influence over the motions of this comet. Any error in the mass which had been assigned to Jupiter, would therefore, most affect the result. Now, the mass he had assigned to the planet Jupiter was such that 1054 such masses would equal the mass of the sun. Recent observations have shown that the mass of Jupiter repeated only 1049 times would equal the mass of the sun; and it has been ascertained that if M. Pontecoulant had used in his calculation this corrected measurement of the mass of Jupiter, instead of that which he did use, it would have protracted the predicted time of the perihelion passage three days, and brought it to the 16th, and so within six hours of the time when it actually took place,—an error of six hours in a period of seventy-six years!

The following are remarkable facts connected with the appearance of this comet, in 1835.*

It developed no tail until the 2nd of October, and on that day the nucleus was observed to become suddenly brighter, and to throw out a jet of light from its anterior part, or that towards the sun. Its tail attained its greatest length of twenty degrees on the 15th of October, and had entirely disappeared before its perihelion passage on the 16th of November. "The anterior luminous jet, meanwhile, underwent," says Sir J. Herschel, "singular and capricious changes, succeeding one another with such rapidity that, on no two successive nights were the appearances alike! At one time it was single, at another 'fan-shaped or swallow-tailed,' while at other times, two, three, or even more jets were darted from the comet in different directions." In receding from the sun it passed through a series of changes scarcely less remarkable, and finally disappeared on the 5th of May.

THE COMET OF 1843.

Of all the comets of modern times, one which suddenly appeared in 1843 was, as seen in Southern latitudes, the most splendid and the most remarkable. Its head and nucleus were of extraordinary lustre, and its tail extended at first in a double, and afterwards in a single beam through fifty or sixty degrees of the heavens. It was seen in broad daylight, on the 28th of February, the day after its perihelion passage, and the distance of its nucleus from the sun was then measured with a sextant.† The smallness of this distance is the remarkable feature in the elements of its orbit. No other comet is recorded to have approached the sun so nearly. The space between it and the sun's luminous surface was not more than one seventh of the sun's radius; whence it has been calculated that the solar heat to which it was subjected must have been 47,000 times that which we experience, and  $24\frac{1}{2}$  times as great as the heat which has been found sufficient to melt cornelian, agate, and rock crystal!

† By Mr. Clarke of Portland, United States. (See Herschel's Outlines, p. 368.)

BIELA'S COMET IN 1846.

On its return in 1846 the comet of Biela presented the remarkable phenomenon of a double comet! On the 13th of January it was seen thus double at Washington; the one comet being exceedingly small and faint in comparison with the other. From day to day it increased, however, in size and brightness, and appeared to separate from its companion, until, on the 16th of February, it had become the brighter of the two; it then gradually faded away, and disappeared on the 15th of March, and its companion on the 22d of April. The tails of the two comets were parallel, and a remarkable streak of light, apparently thrown out by the new one, extended from it to the other. Their average distance from one another, from the 10th of February to the 22d of March, (according to M. Plantamour), was about two-thirds the distance of the moon from the earth's center; and the increase of their separation during this time was not real, but only apparent.*

THE COMET OF 1882.

This wonderful comet, one of the most recent that has come within the borders of our solar system, was a comet in many respects truly remarkable. It presented a most magnificent spectacle as it extended its glowing and enormous tail upwards over 27 degrees on the southern sky. The tail taking a bold sweeping curve upwards and towards the right hand, formed a magnificent and awe-inspiring spectacle, calculated to impress the imagination of the most matter-of-fact observer with a sense of the wonderful in God's creation.

A circle or an ellipse which takes centuries for so swift an object as a comet to traverse, must be immense indeed. The mind attempts but in vain to follow the course of the fiery messenger as it wings its never ending journey to the distant regions far beyond mortal ken. The mind's eye seems dazzled as it attempts, after the lapse of a few brief months, to point out its position in the silent eternal space beyond; but what must be the difficulty after the lapse of years to follow the flight of the fiery steed, and fix its place in the trackless wilds of everlasting space!

Indeed our puny measure of years and miles proves totally inadequate to convey to the mind any idea of the distance traversed by these mysterious visitors; or the time occupied in journey over an orbit the length and breadth of which fairly staggers the mind to realize. The distance of the comets being so utterly unfathomable, I propose as a stepping-stone to place before your readers some statistics in regard to those more familiar and much nearer, (yet still exceedingly distant) bodies, the planets of the solar system. We have already attempted to set before your readers some faint idea of the enormous distances of some of the heavenly orbs, viz: Jupiter 589,000,000 miles, Uranus 1,995,000,000 miles, Neptune 2,850,000,000 miles.

These enormous distances seem to our humble finite minds wholly beyond the power of the utmost imagination; and are like many other facts within the comparatively limited vision of the most powerful telescope, so utterly astounding that it has been well said concerning the heavenly works of the great creator—"Truth is stranger than fiction;" though, indeed, the axiom is quite as applicable to any department of the study of nature as revealing God's handiwork.

But as I am anxious that the least and feeblest intellectually of all the Saints should have some little idea of the enormous distance of these heavenly bodies, I have made some calculations based upon things of comparatively familiar occurrence to their mind; for it is only by being able to see some of the lower rounds of the ladder first, that we are able in any measure to appreciate the stupendous height of that ladder by which, and by which alone we must climb from the finite to the infinite, from the known to the unknown, from earth to heaven. One illustration I shall make use of is as familiar to your minds on the western side of the Atlantic as to us in the old country; I refer to the steam engine (locomotive).

Suppose it possible for a steam engine to traverse the unknown parts of space in order to reach Jupiter the nearest of the Exterior or Superior planets, and imagine that the engine travels day and night without ceasing at the high speed of a mile a minute, (60 miles an hour), it would take 1,091 years, 6 months, 0 days, 10 hours, 23 minutes to reach the nearest boundary of planet Jupiter. This length of time appears the more wonderful when we compare it with the time the same engine travelling day and night at the same rate would reach the moon in, or even the sun. The former would be reached in 5 months, 16 days, 14 hours, 33 minutes at its mean distance, while the sun would be reached in 173 years, 11 months, 18 days, 1 hour, 20 minutes. Next after Jupiter, the engine would make for the planet Saturn, but supposing the locomotive to be capable of continuing its journey at the same speed of 60 miles an hour through the centre of the planet Jupiter, it would require 2 months, 1 day, 9 hours, and 20 minutes to accomplish the task; while it could perform the same journey through out earth in 5 days, 12 hours, 5 minutes; and through the moon in 1 day, 12 hours, calculating throughout at the rate of 24 hours to the day, as the locomotive is supposed to be travelling day and night incessantly. We will imagine then that the steam engine is now fairly upon its way from the farthest side of Jupiter to the next wondrous orb in order from the sun, viz. Saturn. The immense distance intervening between these two planets will require no less than 764 years, 9 months, 26 days, 5 hours 37 minutes to traverse; while supposing the locomotive to go straight from the earth to Saturn at the uniform rate of 60 miles an hour, it would require no less a period than 1.856 years, 3 months, 26 days, 16 hours to reach that superb planet which yet is visible even to the naked eye of the beholder on the earth at a distance, as I before stated of 963,564,000 miles.

The next planet we will suppose our locomotive to be in search of is Uranus; which is 881,717,052 miles from Saturn, and the next in order in the solar system. It could not possibly arrive at this planetary body until a period of 2,026 years, 4 months, 16 days, 20 hours, 12 minutes from the time it started from the earth!

The last and most distant of all the orbs in the solar system at present discovered is the planet Neptune; which is situated at a mean distance of 992,420,180 miles from Uranus, and which would therefore take the locomotive 1,914 years, 4 months, 20 days, 16 hours, 20 minutes after leaving Uranus; while no less a period than 3,940 years, 9 months, 7 days, 12 hours, 32 minutes would have to be consumed in coming direct from the earth to Uranus. This would be the case if Uranus were at the mean, or medium distance from the earth in its orbit; but if the planet happened to be in its aphelion or greatest distance from the earth, the train would require another 46 years, 2 months, 9 days, 5 hours, 24 minutes; thus bringing the enormous sum total to 3,986 years, 11 months, 16 days, 18 hours, 24 minutes, having travelled the enormous distance of 2,861,647,344 miles from the earth to reach the planet Neptune in aphelion.

Here I will just pause to explain that the planets, (or any single planet), when in that part of its orbit (or path), nearest to the earth, is said in astronomical terms to be at its perihelion distance from the earth, or in perihelion; the middle portion is called the mean distance, while the most remote part of its path is called its aphelion distance; and the planet is then said to be in aphelion. I have calculated all the above periods of the locomotive's imaginary journey by the mean distance of the planet from the earth in each case, being obviously the most fair computation.

When we call to mind the rapidity of a railway train going at the enormous speed of sixty miles an hour, how it dashes past the beholder with terrific speed, and how in a few minutes it has traveled such a distance as to enable the clearest-sighted spectator to discern nothing of it but a faint streak of smoke in the far distance, the mind staggers under the attempts to conceive the unfathomable and almost illimitable extent of space which would take this express train upwards of 3,986 years to traverse it. Yet this is not all! For recent celebrated astronomers have discovered that far away beyond Neptune, at about ten times the distance of that remote orb, there is an immense sun, round which our sun itself is making slow but mighty and gigantic revolutions, taking the earth, Saturn, Uranus, and the whole of the great planets of the solar system with him, in his stupendous orbit of hundreds of centuries' duration. But at a mean distance between us and this hypothetical sun at an inconceivable distance, (round which our own smaller sun is continuing its huge revolution), there are certain bodies known to us, for want of a better name, as fixed stars; though many of our astronomers strongly incline to the opinion that these said "fixed stars" are themselves suns, moons and planets, by the side of which our own solar system fades into comparative insignificance and dimutiveness. M. Shuve found and examined with a most powerful reflector telescope no fewer than 120,000 such stars beyond the orbit of Neptune, the most distant planet of the solar system. The distance of these fixed stars is so vast as to be altogether incredible had the facts not been repeatedly verified by the closest and most patient telescopic investigation. The distances of a few only have been thus ascertained. The remainder of the 120,000 which M. Shuve saw, and the millions upon millions of stars which lie so far beyond that the best telescopes can but faintly descry them,—lie at such remote portions of the everlasting space which surrounds our horizon, that no human eye or instrument will probably be able to wrest from them the secrets of their size, distance, or elements. Of the few whose distance has been satisfactorily ascertained, I will here subjoin the only item yet known to our finite minds concerning them; viz: their enormous distance from our orb: adding just one or two illustrative facts in connection therewith to enable your readers to the better grasp the one sublime fact of their almost inconceivable remoteness. The star "a Centauri," has been proved from its parallax, (by Professor Anderson), to have a distance from our planet of no less than twenty-two billions of miles. The star known as 61 CYGNI, the first star whose parallax was satisfactorily ascertained, was found by M. Bessel in 1847-8 to have a parallel displacement of about 7-20 of a second; that means, says Sir J. Herschel, that its distance is fifty-seven billions of miles.

Your readers may have some inadequate idea of the magnitude of these distances when I remind them that although light travels at the enormous rate of 1,110 feet in a second, (188 7-11 miles an hour), yet it takes no less than three years for a ray of light to reach our earth from the star "Centuri," and eight and a half years from the star "Cygni."

But there has been more recently announced a fact concerning the star a Lyræ, that it was found by M. Skuve to have a parallax of one quarter of a second, and, as the distance of any given star is always in the inverse ratio of its parallactic angle, the star a Lyræ is situated at no less a distance from us than 80 billions of miles! The light, therefore from this remote orb occupies no less a period than 13 1-13 years on its way to this planet!

When we reflect that these are but fair examples of the immense distances traversed by cometary bodies in their wondrous and mysterious gyrations round our sun, from the pathless and interminable regions of silent space, ere we can behold their fiery flying forms within the limits of our solar system, we feel overwhelmed with astonished admiration.

RECORDER'S NOTICE.

If District Clerks who have branch reports in their hands not yet sent to me will send them in I will be greatly obliged. Also if Branch Clerks will take especial care to report to their coming March conferences it will be an obligation both to the district authorities and to me, in the effort to make the records as complete as possible, then the District Clerks can make out more satisfactory Annual Reports to the General Conference.

H. A. STEBBINS,
General Church Recorder.

HIGH PRIESTS' QUORUM.

The attention of the members of the above Quorum is called to the rule adopted by said body that each member should make a report in writing and send it in on or before the first day of March each year. The officers of the Quorum hope that this rule will be generally observed, so that when we meet in April the labors, intentions and purposes of each one in the Lord's work may be known, not only of those who may be present, but also of those who may not be able to attend.

HENRY A. STEBBINS,
Secretary of Quorum.

NOTICES.

Wanted to know the whereabouts of Bell Thomas, formerly of Boonsboro, Iowa. If nothing is heard from the sister on or before June 1st, 1886, her name will be stricken from the church records.

A. L. VEITCH.

[We suggest that no member's name should be dropped from the church records, unless they have been excommunicated in a regular way by the law of the church. Otherwise they should be numbered among the scattered members.—Ed].

Brethren of the Second Quorum of Elders:—Remember your annual report. Those who are alive and "wide awake," need no notice. The dead ones—who are they? Let your non-report answer. Your president and co-laborer

I. N. WHITE.

CLINTON, Henry Co., Mo.

The following absent members of the Davis City Branch, J. F. Scott, Olivia Scott, Alma Bennett, Ruth Forkner, and Mary Ellen Mercer, are hereby requested to report their faith and standing and place of residence to the president of said branch.

O. J. BAILEY, president.

SPECIAL CONFERENCE NOTICE.

A Mission Conference will be held in the chapel at Salt Lake City, Utah, on Saturday and Sunday, the 13th and 14th of March, 1886, at 10 a. m. All the branches in Utah are requested to send in reports, and a large attendance is hoped for. Some important business relating to future mission work in the territories will be presented, and action taken thereupon. All who can attend are earnestly requested to do so. Delegates to the General Conference at Lamoni will be appointed and it may be found necessary to instruct them regarding important matters affecting this mission. Don't fail to attend.

Return tickets for one fare (half rate) will be issued by the Union Pacific, Utah and Northern, Oregon Short Line, Denver and Rio Grande, and Utah Central Railroads, extending from Evanston, Granger, Garrison, Park City, and all points on the U. C. and D. & R. G. Arrangements have been made with each of the above roads to this effect. The conference action will largely affect the whole Rocky Mountain Mission, and representatives from all over the mission are invited and will be made welcome. Don't forget the date. The half rates on all the above railroads will be good from March 11th to the 16th inclusive.

No division of the Utah District has yet taken place, therefore all the branches in Utah form part of this Conference.

JOSEPH LUFF,
Missionary in Charge.

PLANO BRANCH.

Below is given a list of absent members of the Plano Branch of the Northern Illinois District; and they are hereby requested to report to the branch, as some have not been heard of for years; and if they are living in the precincts of other branches, to please send for letters of removal, and join where they reside, according to the ruling of General Conference, and also that we may be able to keep our Branch Record more perfectly.

MARRIED.

SMALES—WILLIAMS.—At the residence of the bride's parents, Cleveland, Iowa, sister Pèrille Williams to Bro. Russell Smales, both of Lucas county, Iowa. Elder Alma N. Bishop officiating. [No date of marriage given.—Ed.]

STOCKS—MARTIN.—At the residence of Bro. James S. Martin, of Forest City, Mo., Bro. Wm. Stocks, of Saint Joseph, Mo., to Sr. Anna M. Martin, of Forest City. S. P. Rasmussen officiating. Many friends and relatives were present, and partook of a sumptuous dinner prepared for the occasion. All remained during the evening, and a most enjoyable time was had.

C. E. NELSON.

DIED.

STEEL.—At Beckville, St. Louis, Missouri, November 14th, 1885, Sr. Barbara Steel, aged 71 years and 6 months. She was born in North Shields, England; was baptized by Elder Wm. H. Hazzledine, December 17th, 1879, and confirmed by Elder Joseph Smith, the 26th. Funeral services conducted by Elder Wm. H. Hazzledine, which were largely attended. We hope to meet her in the resurrection.

CROSS.—In Hannibal, Missouri, January 31st, 1886, Sr. Sarah, wife of Bro. James Cross. She was born 19th October, 1829, in Dumfries, Dumbartonshire, Scotland; baptized January 8th, 1841, in Greenock, Scotland, by Elder William Spickman. She was received into the Reorganized Church, November 21st, 1865, in Hannibal Missouri, through baptism at the hands of Elder John Taylor. For years she had been afflicted with a disease which baffled all human skill. She bore her sufferings, however, with exemplary fortitude, and with a firm reliance on Him "who doeth all things well," waiting patiently till He should call her to come up higher. She bore repeated testimony while on her bed of suffering, to the truth of the latter day work; also mingling her voice in prayer, almost to the very last, with the Saints assembled, as was our wont in her room. A true saint, an affectionate wife, a kind and indulgent mother: she has seen her sons grow to manhood, and leaving with them the priceless heritage of a mother's prayers and counsels, has gone to receive the reward of the just. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord."

CLARK.—In Mains' addition, Tulare City, California, December 29th, 1885, of diphtheria, George E., son of Bro. and Sr. M. Clark, aged 8 years, 3 months and 4 days. Blessed by Elders Haws and Parks.

We had a precious household flower,
So pure and fair and bright;
It seemed that every passing hour
He gave our home its light.
But, oh, there came a day of gloom,
When sorrow held its sway;
For in a quiet, darkened room,
Our flower was laid away.
His dimpled hands were folded white,
Across his silent breast;
As his lips had kissed a last good night,
Before he went to rest.
But Jesus whispered sweet and low,
"Peace, troubled hearts, be still."
And now, our hearts have learned to know,
'Twas but the Master's will.

MYERS.—At Avenue City, Andrew county, Missouri, Mary, daughter of Tama and C. H. Myers, aged 10 years, 7 months and 23 days. Her stay on earth was but to bud and blossom, to bloom in heaven. [Date of death not given.]

SMITH.—Near San Juan, San Benito county, California, 8.15 p.m., January 3d, 1886, of kidney complaint, Bro. Richard Smith. He was born January 11th, 1827, in the parish of Stock and Bradley, Worcestershire, England; he was baptized April 6th, 1840, by his own brother, John Smith, in Himbelton. In the year 1846 he was ordained an Elder and sent on a mission to the north of England, in which mission he labored seven years, in the conference then known as the Norwich conference. He was released in 1853, and emigrated to Utah; was dissatisfied with their teaching and practices there, and moved to California. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church by Bro. J. C. Clapp, December 11th, 1869; confirmed same day by Bro. George Adams, and next day was ordained an Elder by Bro. J. C. Clapp, at Watsonville, which office he held and faithfully fulfilled its duties according to circumstances, till he fell asleep in Christ. At his death he was 58 years, 11 months and 23 days old. He leaves a devoted wife, ten children, and several grand children.

NICHOLS.—At Torch Lake, Antrim county, Michigan, on the morning of January 30th, 1886, sister Mary, wife of Reuben T. Nichols. Deceased became a member of the church some years before the prophet Joseph was killed, and has ever remained a faithful and consistent member thereof till death, according to the best light and understanding she had of its faith and doctrine. She became a believer in the claims of James J. Strang soon after Joseph's death, and has ever regarded it as true. She has suffered much through the mobbing, spoiling, and driving of the Saints in this region, in 1856, with her husband and family, and as a pioneer in an almost uninhabited country, but bore it all with patience and fortitude, looking forward to the reward of the Saints, doing all for righteousness sake. Her house and hospitality has ever been welcome to the Saints and Elders, and her deeds of charity has not been confined to them. She leaves a husband, two sons and three daughters, to mourn her loss. She will be remembered by those living in Voree, and on Beaver Island, as Widow or Mary De Mary. Though she suffered much through an abscess of the stomach, she passed away in peace. Peace be her lot. Funeral services by Wingfield Watson.

REUBEN T. NICHOLS.

RETURN TO THE OLD PATHS.

We present the following from the Salt Lake Tribune of February 11th, 1886.

"AN EARLY REVELATION.

"In the Book of Jacob, page 129, in the original Palmyra edition of the of the Mormon Bible, printed in 1830, will be found the following:—

"Behold, David and Solomon truly had many wives and concubines, which thing was abominable before me, saith the Lord. Wherefore, thus saith the Lord, I have led the people forth out of the land of Jerusalem, by the power of mine arm, that I might raise up unto me a righteous branch from the loins of Joseph. Wherefore, I, the Lord God, will not suffer that this people shall do like unto them of old. Wherefore, my brethren, hear me, and hearken to the word of the Lord; for there shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none: For, I, the Lord God, delighteth in the chastity of women. And whoredom is an abomination before me, thus saith the Lord of Hosts. Wherefore, this people shall keep my commandments, saith the Lord of Hosts, or cursed be the land for their sake. For if I will, saith the Lord of Hosts, raise up seed unto me, I will command my people; otherwise, they shall hearken unto these things."

"Probably not many of the younger generation of Mormons have ever been permitted to see the above, for it is apparent at a glance that it does not correspond with what they are being taught now. But that was from the pen of Joseph Smith; it was as much of a revelation as anything he ever wrote; it is far more sensible than many other things which he wrote, for it speaks of progress, and marks out a path of justice. When it was cast aside later, from that moment fell a curse upon the whole structure of fraud; half the then adherents apostatized, and the converts to the doctrine since have been, as a rule, from out the ranks of those who, through hardships of one kind or another, have lost the original sensitiveness of their natures. That stated plainly that the Lord would not suffer His people to revive the practices of old; that the having of many wives and concubines was an abomination before the Lord. The whole statement is very tough when we compare it with what is preached now by the followers of this same prophet.

"True, they claim a later prophecy, but in that case, what kind of a Being do they make the Creator out to be? If He is given to changing His mind; if, in His infinite wisdom, the taking of many wives was an abomination in 1830, and He changed His mind and made it necessary to full salvation ten or twelve years later, what may not be expected in the future? Would it not be a good time about now, considering the present situation of the Saints, to make another petition and see if He has not again changed his mind? Surely the success of the experiment has not been such as to encourage Saints to persevere.

"In a day or two the Tribune will give the full particulars of the effect of the system in one family, and if any one who reads it believes that it is God's will to have such things going on, either his faith will have to be very great or his heart exceedingly small. If we are to believe John Taylor and George Q. Cannon, only two per cent of the Saints have availed themselves of this only opportunity to obtain full salvation. Of course we believe no such things, but the saints must, for have not the keepers of the keys so stated? Well, look around and see the effects. We do not refer to the unrest and apprehension which exists, or to the confusion and loss to business, but to the polygamous homes of Utah. Is there a happy one? How many first wives will admit that it suits them? Go down to the remote settlements where Gentile influences have made no impression, and see how many children will acknowledge that their mother is not the legal wife of their fathers? Mark the effect on the rising generation; compare the condition of Utah—which has been drawing steady tribute from Gentiles for thirty-seven years, and which is blessed with sources of wealth more full than every other Territory—with all the Territories and States about her, and see how she is falling behind, and then answer if there is any other cause except this abuse of women which polygamy involves, and the degradation which comes to man when he, through the brutal law of might, stoops down to commit a wrong upon women?

"Young Utah should read that early revelation to the Prophet and reflect that it is just as true as any other revelation that he ever received.

It is not a little strange that those who read the Book of Mormon, of those outside of the polygamic hosts, can see the full force of the declaration of Jacob where the Lord through him forbids polygamy, and gives the reason why.

In connection with this editorial, it may be remembered that George Q. Cannon, one of the First Presidency of the Utah Church is under arrest for the practice of polygamy and for unlawful co-habitation. This is as it should be. When this same George Q. Cannon in connection with his chief wrote last fall to the confiding people of their mutual flock that only a few could be permitted to enter into the practice of plural marriage, and that only at the center stakes, or in Zion; and that the worthiness of those few was carefully ascertained, he must have been aware that the decision of such worthiness lay with Pres. Taylor, now almost senile with age, Joseph F. Smith, and himself. If so, he must have known that the view of the matter then presented was unlike the one first built up in defence of plurality, and one widely at variance with that which prevailed in the Church when the Book of Mormon was revealed as containing that which was to put down false doctrine.

No such exclusiveness of principle has a place in the gospel economy. And when Mr. Cannon lent himself and his life to such a cause it is fitting that he should be visited with the penalty such absolute divergence from God's law and the rules of the country where he dwells deserves. It is far more proper that a supposed leader like Mr. Cannon, who has so persistently urged his brethren into transgression, and to dare the punishment, should be caught and made to take the benefit of the advice he has so lavishly given to others, than that a whole host of dupes innocent and otherwise of lesser note should be made to suffer. For the innocently transgressing, one may be pardoned for feeling sympathy, but for him who betrayed them into their sinning it were folly to feel pity.

The Church in Utah have foolishly charged the persistence of Government, to bigoted sectarian influence brought to bear hitherto upon corrupt Republican politicians. The measures now bearing so heavily upon their transgression may have been conceived and adopted under Republican state rule; but the Mormons should have known that Democracy means a government by the people—the whole people—and not a minor two, or ten per cent of a population of a remote State or Territory. President Cleveland has so far shown remarkably good sense in his dealing with Utah affairs. He seems to have realized that one of the surest ways to create stability for Democratic administration is to enforce the supremacy of the laws which enable the common citizen to spell the word Nation with a big N.

The HERALD can not and does not engage in the political squabble; it is within the province of its duty, however, to hold the citizenship of the Saints free from every species of double dealing by which their relations to the law of God and salvation are disturbed and broken. And, while holding the duty of the citizen to be an observance of the law of the land, it is gratifying to us, and should be to all the Saints, that the revelations of God by virtue of which the church was organized in 1830 and by which the same church was nurtured and sustained for fourteen years of successful labor, in no single command require a disregard of the laws of the United States Government, but to the contrary enjoin it as a duty entirely compatible with every hope of eternal life held out in the gospel there authorized to be taught to obey such law. Had it been otherwise than this, then some sort of excuse might reasonably be found for such men as President George Q. Cannon having become alienated from allegiance to the institutions of the country. If the Church had been founded before the Revolution, and had it then had the tenet of plural marriage in its confession of faith, engaging in the propagation and practice of it, then it might have been construed into proscription and governmental intolerance for Congress to have passed any law restrictive of such practice, or punishing those engaged in it. But, when it is considered, as it must be by all who will think seriously with the real facts in their knowledge, that the Colonies were planted, the bulwarks of political liberty erected and strengthened, the declaration of principles made and the Government established long before the revelation to Joseph Smith gave permission to organize the church founded in 1830, then it must be conceded that it was the deliberate design of God, the Lord of Sabaoth to build that church in accord with the word and will revealed at its origination and immediately subsequent to that organization.

That this word and will was monogamic can not be denied, and the Tribune fitly states, "Young Utah should read that early revelation to the Prophet and reflect that it is just as true as any other revelation that he ever received."

Young Utah should do more than that. It would be equally as productive of real good to Young Utah to read the law specifically given to the church, after the Lord had commanded the little gathering at Kirtland, and reflect that the object for giving the law was that the people might be gathered unto the Lord, a righteous people, "without spot and blameless." It would then be in harmony to reflect that for the long period of six thousand years, whenever God has spoken concerning the domestic relations of man, he gave monogamic commands, and repeated himself in 1831 in striking accord with the record of those fateful six thousand years. Young Utah would then discover that the "early revelation" given by the Tribune is not only as true as any other coming through the Seer, but that the document claimed by the elder Utah, as a revelation from God through the same man, is unlike any and all the revelations given to him before and bears unmistakable marks of being untrue, and not from God, no matter what the source through which it came.

President George Q. Cannon has been long busy both by precept and example in enmeshing the membership of the church over which he now presides with his associates John Taylor and Joseph F. Smith, in the toils of a theory not warranted in anything known to the church as revelation, or commands of God before 1852, and thus leading them into enmity against and transgression of the laws of the country, under the plea perpetually and plausibly urged that whatever was commanded of God became the highest law known to the devotee, and the Government could not rightfully interfere. The feelings of devotion which worshipful natures hold have been played upon; the persecutions which have been visited upon the Saints have been constantly portrayed in a thousand ways, to fire the feeling of resentment against the Government; and this has been done to hold the people up to the conviction that the principle by which Messrs. Taylor, Cannon, Smith and others exercised the peculiar rights and privileges of plural marriage was legitimately a part of the religion brought into being in these last days by Joseph Smith.

If it once but finds its way into the consciousness of those who have honestly accepted the teaching of these polygamous chiefs that the religion of the church as instituted by Joseph Smith was the opposite of this plural dogma, enjoining the sacredness of the home as founded by God in the morn of creation, when he gave Adam and Eve the Divine sanction of his approval in marriage; and that there is not a line in the legitimately received commands of God that involves them in disobedience to national law, then will the bonds which hold them to the support of the ruinous policies now pursued by their leaders melt like the frost before the sun. But once let the people get the idea that the Son of the Martyr has told them the truth, they will turn from their allegiance to evil unto the "Law of the Lord which is perfect, converting the soul."

It has been the policy of the leading men to do what they could to keep the people from becoming acquainted with the views of the Reorganized Church as represented by its own elders. Its position has been misstated, its men misrepresented, the teaching and policy of its leading men distorted, and their motives impugned. But time and the good providences of God bring all things even, and the laws of compensation and adjustment gather up the scattered threads of the dispensation and weave them into the completed design of God's work; hence we feel assured that many will hear and heed, who now indignantly spurn us from their doors as unworthy of respectful consideration.

"FOR IF I WILL."

THE Salt Lake Tribune, Democrat, and News, with hosts of polygamous Mormons, have wrestled fearfully over this passage in Book of Mormon, Jacob 2:6: "For if I will, saith the Lord of Hosts, raise up seed unto me, I will command my people; otherwise they shall hearken unto these things." They seem to overlook the fact that this passage should be, and must be construed and explained in harmony with what immediately precedes and follows it; also that the word "for" is here a conjunction, and not a preposition, and is used to introduce the reason, and explain why the Lord had commanded, did then command, or might in the future command in respect to the matter of marriage. The contexts condemn polygamy and whoredom in the severest terms, denounces their practice by Israel and their eminent leaders, and the text in question simply asserts the will, the right, and the purpose of God to regulate the relation of the sexes, and declares in effect that if he gave no further or future commandment on the matter, they should "hearken" to what he had said already. The text is neither a provision for a contrary commandment, as foolishly claimed by polygamists, nor is it a loophole fixed up by Smith and Rigdon through which to introduce polygamy and the like, as claimed by others. No denunciation can be clearer and stronger against polygamy and its like than the first and second chapters of the Book of Jacob, and no portrayal of their evil results plainer and more striking. Whoever reads those chapters without previous bias in favor of polygamy, or prejudice against the divine claims of the Book of Mormon, will not fail to see that they unqualifiedly condemn polygamy and its like, first, last, and forever. And whoever can and will analyze the text in question in a scholarly and fair way, will find neither a provision nor an excuse for polygamy, nor will they find a "loophole" through which it can possibly be forced. But on the other hand they will find it stigmatized most thoroughly as vile, and that those who uphold it are in danger of cursings in this life, and "the pains of hell" and "the second death" in the world to come.

And further; if it be claimed that the text quoted is in any sense intended to be a prophecy that God would, in the future from the times of Jacob, give a "command" in respect to the matter in question, there is not the slightest ground for saying it provides that He would, or might give a contrary command, reversing or in any way conflicting with the one then and previously given, viz: "There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife and concubines he shall have none." But, on the other hand, if it be a prophecy of a future command, then we are bound to expect it will be similar to that given then, for God is unchangable—"I am God; I change not." (Mal. 3: 6). "With whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning." (James 1: 17). "He never doth vary from that which he hath said." (Mosiah 1: 8). "Wherefore, I speak the same words unto one nation like unto another. And when the two nations shall run together, the testimony of the two nations shall run together also. And I do this that I may prove unto many that I am the same yesterday, today and forever." (2d. Nephi 12: 7). "Neither doth He vary from that which he hath said; neither hath he a shadow of turning from the right to the left, or from that which is right to that which is wrong." (Alma 6: 3). "For do we not read that God is the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever; and in him there is no variableness neither shadow of changing. And now, if ye have imagined up unto yourselves a God which doth vary, and in him there is shadow of changing, then have ye imagined up unto yourselves a god who is not a god of miracles." (Book of Mormon 4: 6).

If the text in question is prophetic of a future command in respect to marriage, that command must be in harmony with what God had in the past given, and can only refer to such as was given to the Church through Joseph the Seer, February 9th, 1831, Doc. and Cov. 42: 7: "Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart, and shall cleave unto her and none else; and he that looketh upon a woman to lust after her, shall deny the faith, and shall not have the Spirit; and if he repents not he shall be cast out."

THE telegraphic column of the Chicago Tribune of February 15th, contained the following statement of the arrest of Pres. George Q. Cannon, which we give as being confirmed by despatches in the Tribune of the 16th.

"OGDEN, Utah, Feb. 14.—[Special.]—George Q. Cannon, Chief Apostle and the power behind the throne of the Mormon hierarchy, yesterday, arrested by Sheriff Fellows at Humboldt, Nev., is now in custody at Winnemucca, awaiting the arrival of the United States Marshal of Utah. Marshal Ireland and three deputies left here this evening to escort the prisoner back to Utah to answer to an indictment for polygamy. Cannon, of all the other offenders in this Territory, was most wanted, but he succeeded in eluding the officers for nearly a year. It now transpires that he was hiding at Logan, probably in the Mormon Temple, as the wily apostle boarded the west-bound overland train at a small station easily accessible from the mysterious precincts of this temple. A reward of $500 was recently offered by Marshal Ireland for any information leading to Cannon's arrest. This no doubt alarmed the high priest, and, fearing that some one might be tempted by the offer to betray him, in sheer desperation he tried to make his escape to Mexico. D. H. Peery, Mayor of Ogden, arranged for a little pleasure-trip to California. Peery invited a number of prominent Gentiles on this jaunt, none of whom accepted and it is now thought that this seeming generosity on the Mayor's part was Mormon diplomacy, as the fugitive was found in his company when arrested.

"Cannon's first salutation after hearing Sheriff Fellows' summons was to offer $1,000 for his liberty. This handsome bribe being declined, another thousand was added, which was also spurned.

"Groups of Mormons were gathered in the streets to-day discussing this latest sensation. The Gentiles are elated over the fugitive's capture. It is generally conceded that with Cannon in the penitentiary the Mormon Church domination in Utah will meet its Waterloo."

[Special to the Chicago Tribune.]

"OGDEN, Utah, Feb. 16.—Geo. Q. Cannon, the Mormon apostle, who, in custody of United States Marshal Ireland and three deputies, was being brought back from Winnemucca, Nevada, where he had been overtaken in his flight from the country, this morning jumped from the overland train, moving at a high speed, a few miles east of Promontory, Utah. Cannon was not seen leaving the sleeping car, but his absence was quickly discovered by the officers, who pulled the bell-cord and stopped the train. Two of the deputies got off the train and Marshal Ireland made a search through the cars while the train was moving to the next station—Blue Creek. Deputy Greenman overhauled and recaptured the distinguished prisoner alongside the track, Cannon having sustained injuries which prevented any attempt to escape his pursuers—if, indeed, his terrible leap from the moving train was fraught with such intentions. He was taken to Promontory. His injuries are not considered dangerous, and it is expected the officers will arrive here tomorrow morning with their sensational prisoner.

"Fully fifteen hundred sympathizing friends of the fugitive gathered at the depot here this morning, expecting to catch a glimpse of their famous leader while being transferred to the Salt Lake train. When it was made known that Cannon had jumped the train, excitement ran high, and many wild rumors were industriously circulated that the apostle had resorted to self-destruction to end further 'persecutions,' &c.

"A special train with Deputy Marshal Vandercook and twenty-six soldiers left here at ten o'clock for Promontory to take Cannon to Salt Lake to night. Superintendent Sharp's (of the Utah Central Railroad) private car is attached to the train for the use of the injured prisoner."

"Salt Lake, Utah, Feb. 16th.—The day has been full of excitement. Newspaper men and Mormon officials went to Ogden this morning to accompany George Q. Cannon to this city. Fifty miles west of Ogden he went to the water-closet and jumped off the train. He had given a pledge of honor to Marshal Ireland that he would not attempt to escape, and was not treated as if he was a prisoner, but was closely watched by the Marshal and deputy. As soon as he had betrayed their confidence by jumping from the train the fact was discovered, but the speed of the train had carried the officers out of sight before the train could be stopped. A party went back and caught him by the side of the road, bruised so badly that he could not get away. The news of this, telegraphed to this city, caused intense excitement, but did not prevent thousands going to the depot, expecting his arrival at noon. All day the streets were crowded with anxious people. Around the Tribune office crowds lingered to read the bulletins, while the rush to the Federal courtroom of those expecting to see Cannon there was so great that the doors were closed to keep them out. The streets were full of all kinds of rumors. The officers, deeming it best not to bring Cannon in on the regular train, sent a special this evening to Ogden, carrying a squad of soldiers and more officers to bring him in and prevent any attempt at rescue. They will arrive here towards morning.

"The Mormons are much cast down over the arrest. Women were seen wringing their hands with grief for fear Cannon would be killed. The Gentiles look upon his arrest and conviction as one of the last straws towards breaking the back of Mormonism. Certainly a harder blow could not have been struck. His jumping from a train running twenty miles per hour shows how desperate he considered his chances."

"Hiram Goff and W. J. Jenkins each testified to unlawful cohabitation today. The verdict was guilty. Isaac Langton was acquitted on the same charge, the indictment covering 1883."

[From Chicago Tribune.]

"SALT LAKE, Utah, Feb. 17.—The train with George Q. Cannon on board reached here at 8 o'clock this morning. He was promptly taken before Judge Zane and gave bonds in the sum of $45,000. The escort of two military officers and twenty-seven enlisted men accompanied the special train. There was no demonstration in the court room, although the entrance was densely packed. Marshal Ireland expresses an opinion that there is no doubt of Cannon's attempt to escape, and that he probably had confederates, but missed them by not jumping off at the right place. When recaptured Cannon was some distance from the track and had two loaves of bread and a bottle of water in his pocket. He fell on his face and shoulders. His nose was broken and he was considerably bruised, but not seriously hurt. Marshal Ireland confirms the offer of $1,000 made by Cannon to the Nevada Sheriff to let him go. Arnold, who was with Cannon, urged the Sheriff to accept, and offered him a life position at a good salary to let Cannon go.

"Thomas Birmingham was to-day sentenced to six months' imprisonment and $300 fine. Abram H. Cannon took the stand in his unlawful cohabitation case. When asked if two women were his wives, and if he had lived with them, he replied: "They are, thank God. I have lived with them as charged." Prompt conviction followed. Henry Dinwoody pleaded guilty withdrew his plea of not guilty of unlawful cohabitation, and promised obedience to law. Sentence was suspended. John Bowen, convicted on his own evidence, asked immediate sentence, and was given six month's imprisonment and a $300 fine.

CAUGHT AT LAST;

THE Salt Lake Democrat edited by Al-fales Young, a son of the late President Brigham Young, has this to say in its issue of the 15th inst., on the arrest of Geo. Q. Cannon.

"CAUGHT AT LAST!"

"What must have been the thoughts and feelings of the great majority of the people of this community when yesterday morning they took up the local newspapers and there, in big black type staring them in the face, read the announcement that George Q. Cannon, one of the First Presidency of the Church, had fallen into the hands of the officers of the law, and been placed in jail at Winnemucca to await the arrival of officers from this city. What dark forebodings must have rushed through their nearly-turned brains, what impressions must have been received and retained of a fast approaching crisis in which they must soon play an important part.

"As we look at it, the arrest of George Q. Cannon, against whom indictments for violations of United States laws are pending in the District Court, was a most desirable thing to accomplish, and the steps taken to secure his arrest have met with our unqualified approval. At every term of the District Courts for eighteen months past, punishment has been meted out to the credulous creatures who, accepting the utterances of this man Cannon as the word of the living God, and acting in accordance therewith, have flown in the face of a just government and mocked at and violated its laws. They were less guilty of crime than the men who counseled them, but while punishment has been and is being visited upon them, the more guilty ones, the men whose counsel and example have been such as to impress upon others the monstrous idea that God could best be served by violating the laws of the land—these men, among whom George Q. Cannon stands foremost in rank and influence, instead of being vomited out of society as indulgers in and teachers of absolute and unwashed license, have gone unpunished.

"Again, we say, these are the men whom society, for its own protection, most desires to see restrained and punished, and all law-abiding citizens will give their hearty approval of the vigorous measures resorted to by the officers to secure their persons in order that they may be arraigned at the bar of justice to answer for their misdeeds.

"Let the good work proceed, and if necessary, more rewards be offered. The beginning of the end has come at last, and the sooner the crisis is reached and passed, the sooner will dawn that era of good feeling and confidence between man and man in Utah which is absolutely necessary to the advancement of our social and material interests."

THE Territorial Enquirer of Provo, Utah, for February 12th gives the following advice to its readers:

"We trust that the People of Utah—we mean the Mormon people who number six to one as against non-Mormons—will bear in mind who the men are who sit on grand and petit jurors and as such consign men to the penitentiary as criminals for acknowledging and supporting their wives and children. Latter Day Saints, make a note of every such occurrence and ever afterward avoid and "boycott" them and all others who are not wholly, solely and whole souledly attached to the principles of true Christianity."

That's it, "Boycott" every man who chooses to serve as a citizen should, under the administration of the United States Courts—Boycott them, of course.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. C. P. Haskins of Dighton, Lane Co., Kansas, subscribes for the Herald and says:

"I have been isolated so long that I know but little as to how the Saints are getting along, but I hope by the blessing of God to be better posted hereafter."

Bro. Wm. J. Vaughan writes from Moberly, Mo.:

"I am glad that Bro. Joseph has been to Salt Lake and vicinity. I was for six months looking to see him go. I hope he raised the veil from before their eyes—a people who once enjoyed the blessings of heaven, but do not now. There is wrath against them on all sides, all over the land.

The only way for the Saints to prosper is to keep the law of heaven and the law of the land. I have been a member of the Church over forty years, and am determined to go on."

A writer signing himself "P. A." says:

"The prophet Strang got a little ahead of the times when he claimed to translate the "sealed" part of the Nephite record. For the prophet Isaiah, [also 2 Nephi 11:17, 18; Book of Nephi 12:1; and Ether 1:11; Ed.] teach us that it shall not be delivered in the days of the unbelief and wickedness of the people; and that when it should come forth it would reveal all things from the beginning to the end of the world."

Bro. James Caffall writing from Hutchinson, Colorado, February 11th, says:

"I have traveled very extensively since last April—what I could do I have done, I regret it has been so trifling. I see no guarantee of success for good but by doing and remaining in the good."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

TWO WERE baptized at Fanning, Kansas, February 14th, by Bro. C. St. Clair who writes: "but thanks be to God who giveth the victory; truth will and doth prevail."

Bro. D. S. Mills, in a late letter from Los Angeles, California, writes that he is reaching some of the honest hearted ones in that place. He also says he has had a talk with some fresh arrivals from Utah who are wedded to the doctrine of polygamy, and who never met a "Josephite" before. They seemed surprised to learn how closely the "Josephites" stick to the sacred books of the church, and were quite nonplussed when questioned as to the authority by which they administered their pretended "temple ordinances," and as to the legality of their "head of the church."

Just now there are many fleeing from Utah to escape arrest from polygamy and similiar crimes, or to avoid being subpoenaed as witnesses in that class of cases. We devoutly wish that such parties may hunt up the "Josephites," read prayerfully the sacred books and open their hearts to the evidences of truth. If they will do this, the scales will fall from their eyes shortly, and they will learn that their leaders have taught them the very opposite of God's written word, and that they have been made victims to that horrid apostasy foretold in prophecy, ancient and modern.

Those wishing to locate at Independence, Mo., and desiring to engage in milling business, may find a chance to purchase an interest in T. W. Chatburn's mill now offered for sale, if they apply soon. It is said to be essentially new from cellar to garret, well fitted up with the most modern machinery, and capable of making the best quality of flour. We hear that several are talking of purchasing a half interest in it, and those wishing to do so should "strike while the iron is hot."

Bro. S. L. Cooper writes from Buchanan, Tenn.: "I want my paper continued, for it is like drink to the thirsty, and food to the hungry."

Bro. George L. Matthews writes from Knoxville Boro, Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, February 13th, 1886, that Bro. Forscutt had been preaching there in the Public School Hall with increasing congregations and apparent good interest.

Bro. Daniel Donovan writes from St. Louis, Mo., sending a clipping,—"Lost Rivers,"—which will be printed in due time. It contains corroborative evidence of the claims of the Book of Mormon. Bro. J. W. Johnson of McFall, Iowa, testifies that he has witnessed many manifestations of the power of God in the "Josephite" Church. Referring to the late letter of Bro. Philander A. Page in the HERALD, he says he, too, read many of the old letters and papers in the hands of the Whitmers and others. He bears a striking testimony to the evils of using tobacco, how the Lord in a miraculous manner showed him that fact, and how he was morally compelled to quit it.

Bro. Hiram Rathbun wrote from Lansing, Miching, February 10th, that he left Galien and went to Dimondale, where he reports the prospects flattering, "more so than ever before." He feels to be stirring in the Master's cause.

Bro. J. H. Peters, of Midland, Michigan, visited Lamon, on the 11th of this month, and staid till the 15th.

Bro. Thomas W. Smith lately sent to the office some photographs of a large group of natives of the Island, himself and wife, his dwelling and a fine group of what we suppose are officers of the church, including himself. They are to be framed and hung in the office for the benefit of visitors.

Bro. J. F. Mintun writes from Magnolia, Iowa, February 7th, that he is laboring only locally, but is preaching as opportunity and circumstances permit. He says, "My faith in God's work remains, and my love for it increases. I feel jealous for the good name of the church, and believe the energies of God's servants should be spent in the direction of redeeming Zion."

Bro. G. H. Hilliard, by card the 10th inst., writes that he and Bro. Morris have just returned from McVey on the Jacksonville and South Eastern R. R. They succeeded in removing much prejudice. He requests that any Elder going that way should call on Bro. B. A. Morris, who lives close by and will make them welcome; and he thinks some good can be done there.

Bro. J. A. Currie, Jr., of Stockdale, Texas, says: "I had rather do without my coat than the Herald;" and Sr. S. W. Scoville, of Fremont, Nebraska, in a letter the 15th instant, says, "I don't know how to get along without it. I have taken it for six years, and intend to take it as long as I live."

Sr. A. Walmsley, of Dayton, Nevada, writes and says: "Can some good faithful Elder be sent to Nevada on a mission. I think some good could be done."

Bro. James W. Sacry, of Jefferson Island, Montana, says: "Please send the HERALD right along. I can not do without it very well;" and Mrs. Clark Barzee writes from Salem, Oregon, "We can not do without the HERALD."

Bro. C. D. Carter, M. D., (son of the late Jared Carter, who was among the first members and elders of the church), writes us the 16th inst., from De Kalb, Ills., saying "The cause is in a prosperous condition in these parts, for which we all praise the Lord, our Master."

Bro. J. W. Gillen and John Moore returned home from a missionary tour in Missouri for a number of weeks, in which they had good audiences and good liberty. They visited Allendale for a week; thence to Platte Branch; then Union Hill School House, near Valentine; the Freedom School House, seven times; Sweet Home twice, and near Alanthus eight times; houses crowded. They returned feeling well.

Bro. Briggs Alden, in his 89th year, writes from Fontanelle, Adair county, Iowa, February 9th. He is quite anxious that the city where he dwells should be visited by the good ministers of the gospel according to the Book of Mormon and the light of the latter-day dispensation upon the Scriptures. He concludes one sentence of his letter: "Love and respect for all who stand up for the truth as we find it in the books to be used in this the last dispensation."

Bro. Dickinson of Plattsmouth, Neb., informs us that their branch is now enjoying a large measure of the Spirit of God, and that he has within the last two years witnessed displays of the power of God. He thinks the branch will make progress from this on, and profit by the bitter experiences of the past. He expresses the desire that all may put away all causes of offense and strive earnestly to build up the work of God.

Bro. Stephen Stone of Stewartville, Mo., writes the 16th inst., giving assurance that he loves the work of God and desires to see it prosper.

Sr. M. E. Taylor, of Saco, Me., says of the HERALD, "I would pay double the price rather than do without it." She further says, "The Lord has blessed me since I obeyed the gospel."

THE snow fell heavily at Lamoni, during January, and the drifts lay deep on field, plain and road, waiting the melting rains and sunshine of Spring. Fears were entertained that heavy rains would carry off the snows in floods which would do damage along the water courses. But at present writing, (February 17th), the wasted snow banks are rapidly disappearing. The plowed fields are showing their warm surfaces; the hill sides have lost the glare of the glistening snow; the grassy meadows are losing the icy coating that winter had spread over them; the genial sun and balmy breeze have done their work, and the snow has passed into the soil to replenish its wasted energies, for the new and fast approaching summer season. We who dwell at Lamoni have put away our fears of floods from the snows, unless the few days remaining of the winter shall send a new supply. Floods may come, however, from the rains which spring may bring, as Boston, Massachusetts; Buffalo, New York; Joliet and other places in Illinois are already suffering from them. We shall wait, trusting for the best.

THE VOICE OF WARNING.

DESIRING to have the Voice of Warning circulated as much as possible, and having better facilities now for its publication than ever before, we offer those in paper covers for ten cents each, or one dollar per dozen, and the cloth bound, for twenty-five cents each, postage paid. This affords a splendid opportunity for circulating the doctrines of the church, by those who are not preachers, or where preachers have not been able to go as yet. Please see our price list.

THE following from the Utonian of the 5th inst., shows that "celestial marriage" is driving many of its devotees into exile. It is probable this list, long as it is, does not cover the one-fiftieth part of this class of offenders. All who go into hiding from the wrath of the nation's law do not lessen their chances for punishment in the future, if they are caught.

"AT LARGE."—In the criminal calendar of the Third District Court, the 'at large' parties are as follows: John Taylor, impleaded with another, stealing public property. C. W. Penrose, unlawful cohabitation. George Teasdale, polygamy. The following are for unlawful cohabitation: Joseph F. Smith, Anson V. Call, George Dunford, George Q. Cannon, Solomon Edwards, John Taylor, Helaman Pratt, George Naylor, James H. VanNatta, Joseph Dean, William Asper, T. F. H. Morton, James Eardley, M. B. Shipp."

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY SISTER "FRANCES."

"God's ways seem dark, but soon or late
They touch the shining hills of day;
The evil cannot brook delay;
The good can well afford to wait."

PLANO, Ills., Feb. 8th.

Sr. Frances:—I feel almost unworthy to contribute to the Mothers' Home Column, but have felt impressed by the Spirit of God to do so. How are we as mothers doing our duty by our children, especially those that have been baptized into Christ? Are we teaching them their duty toward God, or are we teaching them to disregard the law of God by playing cards and dominoes and all such games? I remember calling on a sister at one time, and to my astonishment, a deck of well worn cards lay on the center table. Beside them lay a Bible that was not so well worn. Now what did this tell me? Well when I hear that sister bear her testimony, the silent testimony of those cards will come to my mind in spite of myself; for every member of that family is a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Now, when we as mothers give an account of our stewardship, will we not be accountable for the precepts we have taught and the examples we have set before our sons and daughters.

Your sister in the one faith,

AMY DEMPSTER.

WE are free to confess that after first reading the above letter, we felt ashamed and humiliated. Could it be possible that such a thing as card playing, was for a day or an hour tolerated by any mother within the church. This letter demands a private answer, we said, for we never can speak of such things in the Column or Herald, it is a disgrace to the church.

The day after its receipt, by previous appointment, we were dining with a friend and indirectly referred to our difficulty. Our friend is a Dane, an elder in the church, and for ten years one of the most faithful laborers in the field. He is one of a large family of children, every one of whom is highly respected by people outside of the church as well as within. We hope he will pardon the liberty we take with a small portion of his private history.

"The Bible was the text-book which my father used when teaching his children to read, and by his knee I had read it through several times while yet a boy. Every night we were gathered around the family altar, and after reading a portion of the work of God each one in their turn joined in prayer, beginning with the father, and ending with the youngest member of the family old enough to call upon the name of Our Father."

We almost shut our eyes to picture to ourselves the scene thus described in that far away Danish home, and said to ourselves, no wonder these children are all walking uprightly before God and man. They have been trained from their infancy and now they are rising up to call their parents blessed.

"We venture the assertion there was never a deck of well worn cards lying beside the family Bible on your father's table," we remarked to him.

A quiet smile passed over his face as he answered, "Yes; there was, and not only this, but our father made them for us and taught us how to play them."

My father never thought of harm in connection with those cards. His object was to amuse and improve his children. Such games as we played demanded thought and a considerable amount of concentration of thought to play successfully, and it was not until we came to America, and were associated with a branch of the church here, that we knew any harm was ever attached to, or associated with a game of cards for simple amusement. We invited others to play with us, were reported to the branch and each one required to make confession before a branch meeting, which we did, and banished cards from our home forever."

May we not hope that just such a case as this, is the one to which sister Dempster refers? The manner of dealing with it and all such is in the hands of branch officers, and their duty should be discharged in the fear of their Master.

Just in this connection we want to call the attention of every parent who reads the Herald to one subject which has long been weighing upon our thoughts, and heart as well; It is this:

How shall we provide our children with the necessary amount of innocent amusement, and what shall such amusements be?

"To the pure all things are pure," wrote the man of God. But it seems to us that since his day the devil has been studying human nature, and is wiser than he was then. Supposing now our Danish brother had said, "There is no harm intended by this card playing; I can see no harm in it; my children love God and are obedient to me; I can not see why they should be called upon to make confession." What then? Simply this; that which before was pure to him, became a sin and a snare of the devil. By his avoiding "even the appearance of evil" he manifested that spirit of love and charity towards all men which caused the apostle to say, "Wherefore, if meat make my brother to offend, I will eat no flesh while the world standeth, lest I make my brother to offend. And again,

"But if thy brother be grieved with thy meat, thou walkest not charitably if thou eatest. Therefore destroy not him with thy meat for whom Christ died.

We have seen the strong scoff at the weak; we have heard them say, "What do I care?" But while the apostle knew that there was not to him, nor any one else, any wrong in eating meat, he being strong, was willing to "bear the infirmities of the weak." Not to please himself, but Christ.

When this man of God arose, and confessing his wrong forsook it, and not only this, but caused his children to confess and forsake it, he proved himself a descendant of him of whom God said; "I know him, that he will command his children and his household after him."

From infancy he brought them up by his knee with the word of God open before them, therefore even when grown they felt bound to honor him, and following his wise counsel confess their wrong and forsake it. If it was ever pure to them why was it not always pure? We answer, it is one of the devil's amusements, a means by which he drags his thousands to destruction, and can have no followers, no advocates among the Saints of God when they know its character. This is one of the lessons he has been learning since Paul's day.

"Look not upon the wine cup when it is red." Many of us can remember hearing our fathers and mothers say, "When we were young wine and liquor always stood upon the side-board in our father's house, and such a thing as a drunken man was seldom seen." In this day no one needs to be told, it was one of the devil's traps. Now the whole Christian world is awaking to the fact, and this innocent little lamb, which used to find shelter on their sideboards, they now discover, is every hour crushing more victims beneath his iron feet, than ever bled beneath the car of Juggernaut.

"Who hath woe? Who hath sorrow? Who hath contentions? Who hath babbling? Who hath wounds without a cause? Who hath redness of eyes?"

"They that tarry long at the wine; they that go to seek mixed wine."

Thus wrote the wise man, and had his warning been heeded, the devil would never have been able to count the millions of followers brought to him by his most faithful servant—The wine cup. How well his satanic majesty has learned this lesson since the days of Paul. Many a son, and daughter too, first acquired the habit of tasting strong drink from sipping the dregs left by father or mother in the cup from which they drank.

There are other cups in our day just as surely leading young and unsuspecting feet astray as ever the wine cup has done. Shall we stop to analyze them; shall we seek to know what their effect is to be, or shall we press them to the lips of our innocent children, and when in after years they are reaping the fruits of our sowing, charge it to the roaring lion.

PLANO, Ills., Jan. 6th.

Dear Sister Frances:—I have just received our Herald, and read the editorial in the sisters department with great pleasure. I am sure the field of labor is large, and its importance, to an observing mind, in this direction can not fail to be seen. The signs of the times seem to me to demand a wide spread awakening among the mothers and daughters in the church. It is true the Elders are clothed with authority, and sent forth to the world crying repentance, and obedience to God's will; but while our fathers and brothers are sacrificing home and comforts to carry the gospel forth, shall we open the doors and let their children depart into the wilderness, never more to return, and those children a part of our own body? Joshua says: "As for me and my house we will serve the Lord." He evidently saw the necessity, not only for him himself, but his family also, if they were to inherit "eternal life," doing the same. I know there are many who will say it is not right to compell our children to worship; let them have the privilege of exercising their agency. This is true, but when your children are around your knee, will you let them wander away at their own sweet will, into paths which you, with the wisdom given you, know will lead them away from home and heaven? Will you let ideas spring up in their tender hearts, and never make an attempt to teach them better, when those same ideas when fully developed will to your own actual knowledge shut those loved children out from God's mercy, and send them out into darkness? Do we love our little ones as we claim we do, and fail in teaching them in youth in such a manner that when they reach the years of accountability they will be sure to choose the right? I believe in training little baby boys and girls to love and notice beautiful flowers. Bright sunbeams fill their tender hearts with a love for nature, the handiwork of God, then point them lovingly to the giver of all these things, and so keep pace with their growing minds; holding before them the truth of the gospel in an earnest way; and let them see by your conduct and life that you believe, yourself what you are trying to impress on them. To sum it all up live with your children in "Spirit." Don't push them out to learn as best they can, but lead them yourself to the well of everlasting waters, and teach them to drink. The children that came up out of Egypt did not raze the walls of Jericho, but their children did; also the old pioneers and veterans in this dispensation pass away without beholding, except by faith, the walls of their beloved temple rise. Yet if the mothers in latter-day Isreal live true to their covenants, and train up their little ones in a right and acceptable manner before God, just so sure will their children witness the completion of that beloved temple, and also the coming of Him whose right it is to reign therein. If we will not do this, God will raise up a people that will do the work, and we will be shut out with the heathen. Let us arise then in the strength of Isreal's God, and work as well as talk. Long winded testimonies and sighs will never save the children. We must work for this ourselves. Live before your family in such a manner that they will desire to serve your God, and when your work is done they will call you blessed, and they will seek and love the old paths, and say: "My mother walked here and I love to keep my feet in the same narrow way." Go on dear sister and use the talents which have been given you to the best interest of Zion's children. May God bless and strengthen you for the work before you, is the prayer of your sister in bonds.

HATTIE WHITE.

We are in receipt of letters from sisters Atwell and Lucy Lloyd, which will appear next week. Will the aged ones, those mothers who are now gathering around their knees their children's children come to our aid? Many a pearl of wisdom lies hid away. Dear mothers we sorely need them;—bring them to the light, and send them to us. Don't fail to read Sister White's letter carefully and prayerfully, we hope to get many like it. Thanks to Sister Elvin for papers. We feel encouraged in our work and the blessing of the Spirit is with us.

DECKERVILLE, Mich., Feb. 8th.

Dear Herald:—January 25th, according to agreement, I met with Mr. John Chisholm, a Disciple preacher, at Ubyly, Michigan, to discuss the following proposition, viz.: "Resolved, that the doctrine of the Saints, as taught and promulgated by Joseph Smith, is right, and according to the teaching of Christ and his apostles." I affirmed.

Mr. D. McKeller, of Speaker, should have been the one to discuss with me, but two or three days before the debate came off he got three of his ribs fractured, and was unable to attend. He sent a Mr. Keffer, another minister of their faith, to take his place; but somehow Mr. John Chisholm took the negative side of the question. The agreement was that it should last three evenings, two half-hour speeches each for each evening.

We met in Mr. Pierce's hall, and the crowd was so large that there was not room to contain them. Finally the proprietor gave orders for some to leave the hall, as it was sinking. Some said the floor had sunk four inches. We then retired to Mr. Sparling's hall. It was larger and a more solid building. We organized by choosing Mr. W. Coran moderator. Mr. Coran is an infidel, or considered so by the other people. Mr. Chisholm chose Mr. —, a member of the Disciples for his moderator. The two moderators chose a lawyer, Mr. John Craten, as chairman. Mr. Craten is a Catholic.

I made the first speech, showing forth the gospel of Christ and his apostles, and declared that Joseph Smith taught the same.

Mr. Chisholm commenced by running down Joseph, taking all the old worn out stories to prove that he was a bad man, etc.

In the midst of this I arose to a point of order, and when the chairman asked me to state my point, I stated that we were not here to discuss as to whether Joseph Smith was good or bad; but "did Joseph Smith teach the doctrine of Christ"? I also said if my opponent wanted to discuss the character of Joseph Smith we would draw up different propositions after we were through with this.

The chairman saw it and kept him to the agreement; but in his second speech he declared that if he were not allowed to bring in all the books he pleased, he would go no further, and so it dropped there. The next day we went five miles west of Uby, where the most of the Saints of that place reside, and organized a branch of twenty members, A. Barr, J. J. Baily, and R. Davis assisting. We ordained one priest and one teacher. We were blessed by the Holy Spirit. Two more arose and asked to be baptized. That evening I was sent for to go to Uby right away, that the opposite parties would discuss the same points, and take the Bible for it. I went back, met a large crowd gathered, and we made arrangements to discuss that night, two half-hours each. They wanted the people to manifest by vote as to who, in their judgment, proved their points. I agreed to this, and we went at it again, I trying to uphold the gospel of our Master, Jesus Christ, and he trying to tear it down. The four speeches over, the vote was taken by the show of hands. They were not satisfied when so few raised their hands for them, and they would not allow them to raise their hands for me; but they would be satisfied to divide the house. This was done, and the majority was on my side. Then my opponent gave out that he would deliver a lecture the next night on "Mormonism." I then announced that I would reply to it the following night. He lectured on (or rather ridiculed) Joseph Smith and the Saints. I replied the following evening, and I am fully satisfied much good was done.

February 1st I went a few miles from there to Seagle, where I had done some preaching before, but had baptized none there up to that date. A sleigh load came of that same community who were at the debate in Uby; and on Monday, Feb. 3d, ten were baptized, and we had a good time. There was a great gathering to witness the baptism. We went to a place where there was a large mill, plenty of water, and a large boarding house. We put seats in the large room, and I talked to them a good while before baptism, preaching to them the gospel. I knew they would not go away until after baptism; and as many of them would not come out to hear us preach, I thought then was the time to tell the good old story to them. I always make it a point to catch them in that way.

On the 4th I went to organize another branch of twenty members, six miles south of Sand Beach. We had a large gathering there. This is where I did considerable labor a year ago. We organized them, and ordained one priest, one teacher, and one deacon, and spent the balance of the afternoon in speaking and singing. During that meeting another asked for baptism. The next day we baptized two more. And thus the great Latter Day work is rolling on here. Bro. Baily has baptized one more near Forestville.

This whole country is in an uproar. The press and the preachers are at work crying "Mormonism," "delusion," "Joe Smith," "Brigham Young," etc., etc. I try to answer them all as best I can.

The people ought not to be afraid of me; for I am only a little one. But, dear reader of the Herald, it is not I; it is the power of the Master that worketh in me! For truly I have been blessed abundantly by the Spirit of God, and by that Spirit the work is done.

Brother Wm. H. Kelley, I read your "address" in the Herald of January 30th with pleasure. I try to act in harmony with you, and with all other officers above or below me. I am the only elder in this district, sent out under general conference appointment, and you are president of this mission. I feel to say that in matters of ruling and governing, you are the one "to know best" how matters should be governed. And I also feel sure that, when you do not, then the "powers" above you will remove you from that office; and whilst I thus act, I feel free. I hope the time will never come when I will say to the head, "I have no need of you." Yes; I regret there are not more elders in the field; and I shall try to be more efficient and useful. I do, by the help of the Master, try to "preach the word and gifts." I try not to tattle or backbite. I keep up the family altar, at home and abroad, and encourage others to do the same.

I try to make my wife and family and every one around me as comfortable as possible.

I do aid the cause by gifts and tithes, not by paying my moneys into the hands of the bishop or his agents, for I have none; but by giving myself to the good of my fellow-man, to the discomfort of home and family and self. God is opening the windows of heaven and pouring out blessings upon me and my brethren, and we feel that our cups are almost running over.

I try not to deal hastily with my brethren, but to assist them to hold fast to "the rod of iron."

I have been pushing out into the new fields ever since I was appointed in this mission. I have spent but very little time in the branches, but have made eight new openings, two of which (forty have been baptized) are now organized into branches of twenty members each, another eleven, another nine, and still another five. Forty have been baptized, and I hope to yet see the fruits of my labors in other places.

I am not ashamed of the faith, nor its founders. The faith is of God. Christ taught it; his apostles taught it; Joseph and Hyrum taught it; and God has called me to assist in teaching it. I pray I may ever teach it in harmony with my brethren while I live. I do not fear. It is of God. Man cannot stop it. It will go on, and triumph; and at the end of the race we will receive our crowns.

JOHN J. CORNISH.

RENICK, MO., Feb. 12th.

Dear Herald:—I have been presenting the word of life to the people most of the time since you heard from me last. Since I was appointed district president of the northeast district of Mo. I have preached fifty-three discourses in ninety days, baptized six, administered to twenty-three sick persons, and blessed two children, besides doing other ministerial labors. I was confined to the house three weeks with sickness, and was just able to attend conference at Bevier on the 6th and 7th of the present month. I preached six discourses while there to fair sized congregations, who paid good attention. We had a very good conference, harmonious throughout the entire session, and I was unanimously chosen to preside over the district for the next three months, and to labor as best I can.

Times are very hard and money scarce, so I can't say how much I can labor, but pray the Lord for his Spirit to guide and bless me in all my labors. My health is very poor, but I still look to the Lord for help. I am in receipt of several letters, from various directions, inviting me to preach. One party, living eighty miles south of here, asks me to come and dispense the gospel, and he will send me means to pay my way with: so I shall go there next week. The name of the town is New Florence, Montgomery county, Mo. I ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints everywhere. Those wishing my services can address me at Renick, Mo.

I remain yours, W. H. BYBEE.

ELKO, Nev., Feb. 9th.

Brother Joseph:—I have been here since Christmas, with my family and friends, reading the Herald with more interest in each number. In the number for February 6th the articles on the ancient city in Mexico brings to mind what I saw a few days since.

The sheriff and his deputies of this county being fully occupied in court, a heavy mining suit going on. There were probably hundreds of thousands of dollars involved in the suit, and as a prisoner had plead guilty to manslaughter and was sentenced to ten years in the state prison, he was sent by me to the prison at Carson City. We arrived there the 4th inst. The prisoner had, while drinking, shot a fellow-man. As we were well acquainted with the warden, Mr. Frank Bell, he kindly showed us through the works. The prison is built at a warm spring at the base of a hill some forty feet high. This hill is principally of sandstone from the top to the level of the base of the hill. At that point (which is thirty-five or forty from the surface), there is, or was at some period of time, a stratum of clay or sediment from a few inches to several feet thick. Under this clay (now hard) is limestone. In this stratum of once clay are tracks of men going in every direction—some eighteen inches long, some small. All seem to have worn sandals or moccasins; but as the tracks were made in soft mud, no doubt they are much smaller than the foot indicates.

There are also tracks of the elephant, the horse and colt, of the dog, and of birds; all as plain as though they were only made a week or so ago.

The quarry has been worked back into the hill about a hundred yards. The last fifty yards have been covered with most all the tracks. If I could only read the rocks what satisfaction it would be to know in what period of the world these tracks were made.

There is one thing that I have noticed in regard to the hot and warm springs. While they are in active operation they form rock very fast, where the water runs or stands.

There are a hundred and thirty-four or five prisoners in the prison, most all of whom committed the crime for which they are confined while under the influence of strong drink. What a curse to weak mortals. While going through the prison we were led to think of the great prison that we can picture in our mind. May we be able to avoid or escape it.

I had a pleasant chat with Bro. Thos. Millard, at Carson. He said all were well; but as we are here, the Herald, Hope, Advocate, and Expositor keep life in us.

Brother Stauts and wife and my family are the only ones that are contented, or love to be known and called Latter Day Saints; and yet, I must confess, I sometimes feel like the little boy who would not eat when his father was away from home, and after sulking and pouting, said he wished "daddy was here to make me eat."

The people of this place care but little for religion. This winter has been very warm; has rained considerable, but little snow fall. Health good.

With love to all Saints, your brother for truth,
E. PENROD.

DELOIT, Iowa, Feb. 12th.

Dear Herald:—I crave space in your columns to express my feelings on two points, while the shutting of the church doors to Brighamite elders is an open question. I wish to place myself on record that I am entirely opposed to such policy.

I have preached in all parts of Utah Territory; and when excluded from their houses have denounced them, and have publicly proclaimed wherever I have preached that I was proud to say that I represented a church that opened its doors to all, even to their Elders, and hoped to see the time when they with their profession that they had the truth, would be as liberal as we, and that if our doors were shut I should blush for shame. I believed then that I was representing the Church. I yet hope that such is the case. But, whatever action the Church may see fit to take, I want it known that my house will be open for any Brighamite Elder that conducts himself decently, to set forth his views. And I do not fear that he will hurt the Church. We have plenty of boys able to refute all the heresy they can preach, and hold their false doctrine up to the light to their shame and contempt.

In bonds,

E. C. BRAND.

LOTUS, Cal., Feb. 6th.

Brother Blair:—I am glad to hear that Bro. A. Haws is about to start in the field. I believe he will do much good. I have heard his good teaching in Austin, Nev., and heard him prophesy, and saw many of the prophecies fulfilled to the letter. Please give one dollar toward paying for the 2,000 tracts to be sent him, and I will send the same soon, when I send more money to the Herald office. I am living on 160 acres of land alone, and there is more land open for settlers here, government and railroad. The railroad company sell their land for $3 per acre. It has plenty of wood on it, and some of it has running water. This climate is good for almost all kinds of fruit and small grain. Garden stuff grows all the year. We have not much frost here. Had but one small shower of snow since I came here, May, 1883. My place is six miles northwest of Shingle Springs, railroad station. Last summer was very dry here; crops of grain were small. I fasted and prayed for rain, and to know why we did not have it. One morning I thought I would water a piece of potatoes that was near the creek. I took my buckets and commenced. The Spirit told me that I should have rain. I stopped, and looking at a clear sky with not a cloud in it. In a few hours a cloud appeared in the southwest, and in a short time the rain commenced to fall heavy for about two hours. God warned the people by the voice of thunders and lightning and at the same time to repent. That night, about twelve, I saw a vision that I had plenty of food standing on my table ready to eat, and a lot of people came and sat down at the table and commenced eating the food, but did not ask for it. They were a dark and filthy people. They ate till they wanted no more at that time, got up and left, and never thanked me. The Spirit told me when they were gone, that they represented the world. They partook of the blessings of God but never asked nor thanked him for his blessings. I hope this will encourage the Saints to pray in faith and faint not; for inasmuch as we ask by the Spirit of God we will receive the desired blessings, for we cannot ask amiss. My Herald comes every week. Am glad to read its pages and hear from those I knew. I hope all the Saints will strive and get the Herald. If one is not able to pay for it, two or three or more of you who live not far apart, put your money together and get it. It is a pity presiding officers of a Branch do not take the Herald when able to pay for it.

Love to all the household of the one faith.

MITCHEL ARTHUR.

OXFORD, Idaho, Feb. 10th.

Editors Herald—Dear Brethren:—I have great pleasure in reporting the Oxford Branch. Bro. J. Luff left us this morning for Malad, his heart full of gratitude for the glorious success of his labors here of one week. Seven were buried in the liquid grave, and the holy influence of the Spirit was so great that, when he preached in the evening he appeared tired. There are more who will follow, but the spirit that has closed the doors of places of worship is alike throughout Utah and here, yet the angel that knocked off the fetters from Peter and opened the prison doors is able to change the state of affairs, and when the mighty work is accomplished, when they cry, "Babylon the great is fallen"! then will voices in heaven sing, "Alleluia"! And again they will say, "Alleluia." Rev., 19th chapter. Who can describe the darkness which bound us? The same only can describe the unutterable joy that "eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, nor heart conceived," to be ever with the Lord.

Messiah has set his hand a second time to gather his people. Yes; he brought many from Europe and now we are in the true fold, gathered again. Who makes us to differ? Oh, we see the scales falling from the eyes of our friends and neighbors, and we gladly ascribe our conquests to the Lamb, and our triumphs to his death. Our hearts are full of praise. I saw it in Brothers Anthony and Luff; I felt it through the pen of Brother Joseph when he prayed for the good Spirit to be with me, when he was at Springville, Utah. May the wisdom necessary to guide this great work be with you and all who labor in the field. Amen. And heaven says, "Amen."

Yours,
W. E. GOOCH.

PORT CARLING, Ont., Feb. 2.

Brother Blair:—I held a debate some eight days ago with a merchant in this place on the God-head. A Rev. of the Church of England and another of the Methodist fraternity, with a giant called Wrenshall, took counsel against me to confound me in the debate. When I had got our position cleared of rubbish and was beginning to build a little, the English Rev. accosted me. I turned and began asking him questions which silenced him. Then the learned Wrenshall stood up, but becoming ashamed, soon sat down. Then I invited the minister to take the stand in my opponent's place, but he would not do it. So I proceeded in peace, with enough liberty to make one feel perfectly at home and to give middling rapid delivery. Two of the judges gave it against me and the third refused to act. But I cared nothing for the judges; it was the people I wished to get at. About three-fourths of the entire audience believed I was right. They made me speak first, and would not give me five minutes review. After my opponent was through, the minister took his place. But the ground was pretty good, so they made a failure of it, and got out of the house as soon as possible, leaving "the wolf with the sheep."

I dreamed the other night that the Lord said to me the people would not be saved except they would receive the Book of Mormon; "for" said he, "you know you received it from God and not from man." And he said true, for so I did.

I am growing stronger, and by God's help I will never forsake Israel.

As ever your brother,

D. E. HOUGH.

CONFERENCE NOTICE.

Conference of the North-west Kansas District will be held with the Goshen Branch, commencing March 13th, at ten o'clock. Let each branch send their report early, to H. R. Harder, Clay Center, Kansas. Bro. James Caffall will be with us. Come one, come all, and let us have a good spiritual time. Praying for the ultimate triumph of Zion, I am yours in Christ,

A. H. PARSONS, Dist. Pres.

QUORUM NOTICES.

The members of the Third Quorum of Elders are hereby requested to report to the president, John T. Kinnaman, Stewartville, Missouri, by March 31st. Every member is expected to furnish a written report, whether he expects to be at the Annual Conference or not. Reports should be brief and to the point. Suggestions, &c., should be on separate sheets.

Dear Brother Laborers of the Fourth Quorum of Elders:—I am pleased with the reports I get from some of you. I have heard from quite a number and all seem to feel well and to have the Lord's work at heart. Lift up your heads, rejoice, and press your way on, for the day of deliverance is nigh at hand. We see by the signs of the times that our Master will soon come. Then we will receive our reward. Have a good report for our next conference. I want all to report by letter or in person, and all who have not a license report to me soon, send stamps, and I will send them one. Write to me, and I will receive it with pleasure. I am trying to do good; I love the work of our Master, and I love to hear of its prosperity.

Your brother,

J. D. FLANDERS, Pres.

JOSEPH THE SEER:

His Prophetic Mission Vindicated, and the Divine Origin of the Book of Mormon Defended and Maintained. Paper covers, 200 pages. . . . 35
This is a reply by Elder W. W. Blair to Elder William Sheldon of the Second Adventist Society, and is an important work to be in the hands of the ministry of the Church, especially; and it is a most excellent one to be circulated both in the Church and among those without, abounding in proofs never before presented in defense of Joseph Smith and the Book of Mormon.

REPLY TO LITTLEFIELD.

We have for sale at this office, in pamphlet form, containing 48 pages, the "Reply of President Joseph Smith to L. O. Littlefield in refutation of the doctrine of plural marriage." Price, post paid, single copies 10 cents; 75 cents per dozen to one address.

No Credit for moneys received on subscription will appear on the Colored Address Label of the Herald and Hope for this issue, as no changes have been made, except in case of persons desiring a change in P.O. address.

WHAT SHALL WE TEACH?

THE above question will undoubtedly be considered a curious one, and the answer will undoubtedly be "Teach the doctrine as found in the Bible, Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants." Yes, very true; but what part? and how much? A chance has been given for argument, and thoughts which perhaps would not have presented themselves will undoubtedly arise with many now, since the claim has been made that only a portion of the revelations given are genuine, or for the church. It is not for the sake of fault-finding that I write this, but because I am interested in the latter day work; and while the thoughts I offer may seem to some to evince a want of liberality on my part, or the fruit of a mind rather narrow, it is nevertheless a subject to which I have given much thought, and one that I would like to have some good and wholesome light upon.

It may perhaps be believed that the difference of views held by some and expressed through the Herald a few months ago, are perfectly in order, and will do no harm either to saint or sinner; that it is but a difference of opinion commendable to brethren, and one which all have liberty to exercise. While I believe in freedom of thought, and to a reasonable degree, freedom of speech, I can not but feel sorry that these differences exist; because of the claims and professions we make. It certainly proves that the church is in an unhealthy condition. It hinders the prosperity of the work, no doubt. It checks the interest of the honest investigator, who can not help to observe the likeness with other churches in theories and differences of opinion. It weakens the faith of the already weak saint, who observes that it is not the church of "one faith," as is preached. It obstructs the way of the Elder, so that when he teaches that "God has set in the church apostles, prophets," etc., for the perfecting of the saints, and for the purpose of guiding them into unity of faith, he does not know what moment some observer or reader of our papers may confront him, and point to articles, so different in teaching; and the brother would have to give in, and if consistent must admit that those so co-called men of God differ widely, and on important points too. That contention between brethren, or views that differ so widely, especially with leading men in the church, will create discord, division and coldness in congregations and families, seems to me must appear clear to every one. Branch officers, and indeed all whose duty it is to labor among the Saints, find it a great obstacle, very much in the way. That God called men and set them in his church in former days for the perfecting of the saints, there is no doubt. That he did the same in these latter days, we all profess to believe. In fact this is one of our strong points against the churches of to-day. After having called their attention to the many isms, we say, See the difference of having men called of men, or self-called men, and men called of God. Really, brethren, the difference seems to be so small that we can hardly observe it ourselves. Men called of God in former days did labor unitedly to guard against the various winds of doctrine and the cunning craftiness of men, and to tell the saints the whole counsel of God, as Paul said. And although false teachings and theories would arise, and although they foresaw the time would come after their departure when men would arise and teach perverted things, yet they themselves were faithful and of the same mind and judgment. Is there any good reason why we should not expect the same now? Is not the gospel restored with all its former gifts to men? Yes; and we sing, "Prophets are restored again, in the light," and blessings to the ancients given are again received from heaven. That, according to my understanding, means nothing short of the privileges enjoyed by the church in former days. Again I ask, May we not then expect and ask of these chosen messengers of God to teach unitedly, sound words, that can not be gainsaid, and to be of the same mind, and of the same judgment, that we may know they are led by the Spirit of God? Certainly, if it is expected that the Saints should be guided by them, (and that to my mind is one of the great objects of their calling), this ought not to be called an unfair claim. But, if the church has no such a right now to have such expectations, then let us know, so that we can change our mode of preaching, and not appear ridiculous before the world when there is no need of it. But let no one expect to find the Saints in a harmonious condition, or think that the laborer is not performing his duty, because he is unable to put together and heal up what leading men are pulling asunder. Let us have an understanding. It is time the church should know what it believes, what is the doctrine of the Church, and what is not.

If some claim the adoption by Conference of the books, Bible, Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants as the standard books, in which are contained the law of the church, only means a portion of each of these books, then it is of importance to know which part to discard, especially of the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants. If there are spurious revelations in the Doctrine and Covenants they should be pointed out—in fact they should never have been published, and if we point out certain of these revelations as not genuine, how much confidence do we expect will be had in any of the rest of them. If a man would tell me something of importance to-day, claiming to have it from the most reliable sources, and I should find out to-morrow that it was only a made up story of his own, and no truth in it, I doubt very much whether I would have any confidence in anything else he might say. How would it do to present the Book of Doctrine and Covenants to the world as a book partly true and part false, and tell them that they must not believe all that is written in it? Such claims remind me of an item in what I think was called the Messenger, a paper published in Utah, by Bro. J. W. Briggs. In proving his point he quotes the passage of scripture found in the 24th chapter of Luke, 25th verse: "O fools, and slow of heart to believe all that the prophets have spoken;" and in alluding to these words of Christ he makes them to mean that the disciples were called fools by the Lord for believing all that the prophets had spoken, whereas every reasonable man who reads the chapter certainly knows that the reverse was the case. Had they believed all that the prophets had spoken, they would have known their Master was destined to die, as he did; but being slow of heart to believe they were disappointed and confused in mind. I thought then that was a willful perversion of scripture, and I think so still.

Such brethren should remember that when we are testifying before the world that God has set in his church now, as of old, apostles and prophets, their testimony points to them, and really challenges the world to examine for themselves and see whether there is anything in the character of these men that will justify them in saying "Our testimony is untrue." And as conflicting doctrines certainly go very far to disprove our position, something certainly ought to be done, and that soon. Here are two important subjects, "tithing and gathering," believed in and taught by some, and disbelieved in and rejected by a few. All should know the truth or falsity of these and other doctrines and be perfectly joined together in the same mind and the same judgment; and yet either the one or the other is surely in the wrong, and those in the wrong are doing great injury to the cause, as must appear plain to every one. I am familiar with the claim usually made, that every man has a right to his opinion, and that freedom of thought, as well as of speech, belongs to every man. But that does not help the matter any. I suppose we might all branch out in theories and factions till the whole church is divided into many different isms. We can take that liberty, and at the same time take the consequences. I understand that perfectly well; but the question of importance seems to me to be now. What can be done, that the watchmen in Zion may see eye to eye, and teach unity, so that the church may have one faith? that the world may see we have what we claim and that we believe what we teach? that there may be no danger of one Elder coming along and tearing down what others have preached or built up?

We claim communication with heaven, the inspiration of the Holy Spirit which leadeth into all truth. Men called of God and set in their respective places in the church, who in accordance with the Book of Covenants, have the privilege to commune with God and angels, (which is no more than the same class of officers enjoyed in the primitive church), and yet here we are, year after year in the dark; every man groping his way as best he may, for all the world like any other men of the world who have nothing but the natural reasoning ability allowed to man, more or less. It is true we come together in conference occasionally, and after much debate and much calling one another to order, we finally settle vexed points by vote—the majority sometimes being obtained from children who have just become old enough to be members, which entitles them to vote, not taking any notice of the command which says: "The Elders shall meet in conferences," etc. But after these decisions in many cases, I do not see we are any better off. True, it is done by the majority present, which is all right if that majority was in possession of authority and the Holy Spirit at the time; but if not, it would be as likely to be against the interest of the Church, as for it. This is seemingly a rule which all assemblies have adopted. In that our church is only equal with other religious bodies, and there is nothing whatever in this that denotes that we have any advantage, or are ruled any more on the direction of God than they. We sing, "We thank thee O God for a prophet, to guide us in these latter days." These words were in order some forty years ago; but the voice of the prophet or his decision in matter of importance is seldom heard now; not however on account of his inability (This is believed by the writer to be the case). The church seems now to have become so fearful of what is called the one-man-rule, that it is considered by many to be unsafe to have the president give his opinion or decision on points of doctrine for fear of influencing the people; and so to be consistent, we should leave off singing that we have a prophet to guide us, it being a thing of the past. And as for some other leading men, their teaching leads in different directions; so the church must grope its way along as best it may, and make the best out of the written word the same as other denominations.

I am familiar with words so often used, to not put our trust in man; follow him no further than the law and the testimony warrant. Very true; I agree in one sense of the word in that, and at the same time I can not understand that if God intended the written word to be sufficient for man's guidance, why he should call men to teach his people, and tell those men that they should be taught from above. Can it be that they were only set as ornaments in the church? It will hardly do to take this ground; and yet what are they for if not to instruct in sound doctrine? and feed the flock of Christ? Then let us say nothing more about it, but do away with that part of our claim. That these men are ornaments to the church I will cheerfully admit when performing the duties of their calling, and when God is confirming their words with signs following, as of old.

Oh for a return of the time to the church, when God will be with his servants in power; when signs and wonders shall again be wrought by the name of his Holy Child Jesus. The Saints would then feel strengthened and edified; and there is no doubt but that many who have grown cold and careless in the interest of the cause would waken up to duty, and with joy perform their part, seeing, as they would, that God is with his people. The cry is now, "Let the Saints perform their duties, that the hands of the ministry may be loosened." Yes; that is right; but let us at the same time ask that the officers, and especially those who are at the helm do their duty, and pull together, so to speak, with sound words that can not be gainsaid. All should speak the same things, and be perfectly joined together in the same mind, and the same judgment. When this is done I will expect to see tenfold more peace and harmony in the church. I will expect to see branch officers labor with far more success, and certainly with a great deal more interest, being stimulated and encouraged by those above them. To me this seems as reasonable as it is to look for direction and guidance to come from the head of the natural body, and proceed down through all the members and parts thereof. We could then truly say the church had grown in favor with God, if not with man.

There has been a general rejoicing of late, over the fact that the church has gained in favor with man. It is well if that favor is not gained by sacrificing any part of the dignity of the gospel, or of the church of Christ. If we take heed that we are not drawn aside by philosophy and vain deceit, after the rudiments of the world, in order that we might become somewhat popular among them. If that favor is gained by giving in to any of the doctrines or theories, or forms of man, then I am sorry such is the case, for in such case the friendship of the world is enmity with God, and we would soon find that God would leave us to ourselves to share with the world in its sorrows as in its joys, which indeed we do not seem to be very far from now. Calamities visit the Saints as the sinners. All manner of diseases visit us, and few and far between are the cases where miraculous healings have been bestowed. In fact there are perhaps few Saints, comparatively speaking, but what would sooner think of sending for a physician than for an Elder in case of a dangerous disease; but we still preach, "these signs shall follow them that believe; they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover." They have to preach it, because it belongs to the gospel; and whenever we leave off, we take the stand that the gospel is not what it was, which is not in accordance with our faith.

It is when we reflect on these things that we very naturally are left to think, what is the matter? What has happened? There must be a cause for this. And as it can not be believed that the cause is with God, we must come to the conclusion that it is with man; and one very naturally looks out over the work, especially if he is interested therein; and if he finds that, instead of a Spirit of unity among the officers, there is strife, contention, and diversity of opinion, he certainly knows that it is not the Spirit of God that leadeth; because it leadeth into all truth; and it is therefore not strange if he should think that he had discovered one great reason why the church itself is in a sickly condition. I know that I am telling the truth when I say there are sincere and honest men in the church, who would endure more hardships, labor more untiring, and give more for the advance of the cause, if they could but see a harmony and oneness among the leading men of the church, see a greater proof of God being with them; but who, on account of the different views held and taught by some brethren feel discouraged in making any effort. When we take up the Herald and read an article by some responsible, and talented Elder, we find it well written, for some men are naturally talented, and like some men of the world, do not necessarily need the Spirit of God to assist them. Of course the article gains its admirers, as any views skillfully handled will always seem plausible to some; but in the next issue of the Herald we find another article, on the same subject, written by another brother, with an entirely different view, also skillfully handled. Both, like the learned Reverends of the day, prove their position by Scripture.

Now what has been done? The subject, which perhaps so far had created no disturbance, and perhaps but very little thought had been given it by any one, has now been held up to the light and thoroughly ventilated, which would be well if done only in the same mind, and the same judgment prompted by the Spirit of God; but instead of that, the diversity of opinion has created division in the church also, and has raised confusion among the Saints, instead of guiding them into a oneness of faith. These differences and contentions seem to increase, instead of decreasing, in the church; and still we must preach "one faith, one baptism," &c., and proclaim against the world for its "Lo heres and lo theres."

How shall we meet the people who notice these things? The importance of preaching the gospel, and making this latter day work known to our fellow men is strongly urged; but what shall we preach? When our attention is called to tithing, shall we reject or defend? In regard to gathering, which has always been a consoling thought to the Saints, shall we still defend that doctrine? or shall we say the Saints made themselves unworthy, at the proper time, and it is now a doctrine of the past? It will not do for an Elder to say that he "dont know anything about it," for it would be considered to be his business to know. We are asked to circulate the Herald as a means of bringing the doctrine of the church before the world; but I fail to see how any one will ever learn what the church believes in by reading the Herald. And so far as I am concerned, and so long as I have any interest in the latter day work I will never place the Herald in its present condition in the hands of any one outside the church; neither will I advise any weak brother or sister to read it until its teachings harmonize so that the mind may be edified, and not confused thereby.

And now in conclusion, lest it should be thought by some these lines are the production of some one ready to apostatize, I would say, and say it thoughtfully, that I have most assuredly an earnest faith in this latter day work. It does not seem possible to me now that I could ever believe in anything else. But while I am sure of the work being of God, and that he has called and put in responsible places men in his church; I am also sure that there can be a straying away from God, even to the extent that God may leave them to themselves, and to their own wisdom, instead of the wisdom that cometh from God, and I confess that I believe the church is suffering to some extent from that now

FRED. JOHNSON.

BURLINGTON, IOWA, April, 1885.

[In answer to the question of the foregoing article we reply: Teach the principles contained in the accepted standards of the church—the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants. These have been accepted repeatedly by its assemblies and conferences as authoritative; and whoever opposes their teachings as interpreted by the councils and conferences of the church, are to be avoided and resisted. Men have arisen in the church in various ages, and have sought to “draw away disciples” to their unauthorized notions, and as many as have yielded to them have suffered sorely. “Mark them which cause divisions and offenses contrary to the doctrine which ye have learned, and avoid them. For they that are such serve not our Lord Jesus Christ, but their own belly [desires]; and by good words and fair speeches deceive the hearts of the simple.”—Rom. 16: 17, 18.

The church is now well united in faith and doctrine, is gaining rapidly in many ways, and is enjoying largely of the gifts and graces of the Holy Spirit. What is needed is greater persistence in building on the accepted foundations, laboring with soul and body and Spirit every one in his proper place and position, and then the good work will roll on “conquering and to conquer.”—Editor.]

SHALL WE CLOSE THE DOORS AGAINST THEM?

“WE have nothing to fear from error, so long as truth is left free to combat it.”

Great injustice is done to us who advocate open doors by making it to appear that we permit the Utah Elders to use our pulpits simply and solely that we may use theirs. As I understand it, this is a very meagre representation of the facts in the case. We permit these men to be heard in our midst because it is right in harmony with the spirit and genius of our religion; and because it is the best policy. The greatest safety, in quantity and kind, always results from doing right; and the only true policy for the Saints of God to pursue is to seek the greatest good to the greatest number concerned.

These men come to us with the Bible in their hands, and claiming to be ministers of the gospel. What right have we, from a Christian standpoint, to say, “you shall not be heard.” They come to us, not as individuals alone, but as the representatives of a large body of people; and although the leaders of this people have become desperately corrupt, every fair-minded person will admit that the masses are sincere in their belief. By following corrupt and blind teachers their minds have been darkened.

“For with what judgment ye judge, ye shall be judged; and with what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again.”—Jesus. “God is judge, himself.”—David.

What right have we to stand in the place of the Almighty and say, “You teach heresy, and therefore, by our consent, you shall not be heard; but we teach the truth, therefore, open your doors to us.” Is it not vastly better, and more consistent to say to them, “Yes, you can speak in our churches, but if you teach polygamy or any other anti-Christian doctrine, we shall feel it to be our duty to expose and put down these heresies with the word of God. Allow us to preach in your houses of worship, and then judge for yourselves. If we do not preach the truth, expose our doctrine to the people.”

It is argued that if we allow the Elders of Utah to preach in our churches, or teach in our private dwellings, we become, “to some extent, parties in teaching against the law of God,” and also “the laws of the land.” I think not. By parity of reasoning, when we allow or invite ministers of other churches to teach their peculiar belief with regard to conversion and baptism, we thereby become, “to some extent,” parties in teaching contrary to the word of God, and shall have to answer to him for this sin, in the day of judgment! To me, this is a new and strange discovery. I had supposed that we were in no way responsible for the false teachings of others, unless we, “to some extent,” accepted or practiced them. We decide for ourselves, and act for ourselves; but not for others. “Who art thou that judgest another? To his own master shall he stand or fall.” We have diligently sought, for these many years, to get these Utah people to cease teaching and practicing polygamy and all its kindred evils. When we give them to understand that they can speak in our churches, but we will expose their false doctrine to the people, and do it with the very books which they profess to believe, it is safe to say that, in nineteen cases out of every twenty, they will not accept the offer. This is my experience and observation.

Again; what better opportunity could we have to show the difference between the doctrine of the Utah Mormons and that taught by the Reorganized Church, than the one afforded by their preaching in our churches? What tribunal would adjudge Dr. Newman a party to the practice of polygamy because he held a public discussion with Orson Pratt on that subject? Did not this act give Mr. Pratt a splendid opportunity to present and defend that abomination before the people? Do our Elders become accessory to the crime when they debate with the Utah Elders? The fair inference is that wherever we own and control houses of worship, the people have been made well acquainted with our faith, and all who were willing to learn have become thoroughly posted on the peculiar and distinguishing doctrines of the church as set forth in our sacred books. It is impossible that the good, intelligent people of such localities, can confound “Adam-God worship,” “Blood Atonement,” and polygamy, with the pure principles of our faith as set forth in the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Book of Doctrine and Covenants.

If it be said, “These ingenious emissaries will misapply and distort the word of God,” we answer, this will only help the honest, intelligent hearer to get at the exact truth. Is error more potent and attractive than the truth? But, you say, “People often love darkness rather than light.” Very well, let them have their choice by all means. When individuals “believe not the truth, and have pleasure in unrighteousness” God suffers them to believe “a lie” and “be damned.”

When our wives and children have been properly taught by us; have heard the preaching of our Elders; have read our books and papers; have been benefitted by the Sunday School, and last, but not least, have beheld a wise and godly example by us, is there any danger of their being led into the meshes of Utah Mormonism, simply by hearing a few sermons delivered by one or more of their Elders, in which they may, or may not, have mentioned the loathsome doctrines which distinguish them from all true Latter Day Saints? If there are any who believe that such danger exists, “let them stand up and be counted.” The expressed fears of wives and fair daughters being deceived by the preaching of the Utah Elders, is not very well founded as we gather from the words of a writer who believes in closing the doors against them. After giving us a glowing picture of the possibility of the household being deceived, he finds another strong reason (?) why we should not allow them to speak in our churches. Here it is: “The congregations in the several churches throughout the country, as well as in our own, are made up largely of females, many of whom are young and tender in years, none of whom want to hear polygamy preached, and to admit it in our places of worship would not only drive them away from the same when it was preached, but they would get disgusted because of its being allowed, and stay away altogether; and who could blame them.” Not much danger of their being deceived by such preaching, then, is there, brother?

These Utah men, who are not permitted the use of the churches frequently get school houses in which to preach, the same as we do when a similar courtesy (?) is extended to us. Do the females become so disgusted at their doctrine that they stay away from all meetings subsequently held in these school houses? Do those who have children take them away from school! Is not the following about the truth of the matter? Those who do not believe in tolerating these Utah Elders will not go and hear them; while those who are willing to allow them the privilege of speaking for themselves will go and hear, whether they speak in our churches or somewhere else.

Right here I call attention to a few points which seem to have been overlooked. They will serve as pointers to others of a similar class. If we close our doors against the Utah ministry, what will be the effect upon that much to be pitied people, who have been deceived and led into darkness and sin? Would they not say, "Ah! I told you! You see they are afraid of the comparison. They are conscious of the weakness of their claims and the strength of ours." To them and their children this would be an established fact. The Utah priesthood would not miss this (to them) grand opportunity of binding the chains a little tighter. They have largely depended upon making their followers believe that all except Utah Mormonism is bad, weak and untenable, and this would be worth far more to them than the use of our churches. We know of some persons who have renounced the abominations of Utah and are now numbered with us, but whose sympathies are so strong for that people, that this ostracism upon our part would be very apt to drive them from the fold. And although it is not probable that they would practice polygamy or any of its kindred evils, it is more than likely that numbers of them would cast their lot and influence with the people of Utah. Thus the gain would be theirs, the loss ours. The probabilities are that where one individual might be deceived by allowing their Elders to preach in our churches, ten or more would be kept from the true fold, and confirmed in the belief of these monstrous heresies which they have accepted for truth! Is this charity? Are our wives and children more precious in the sight of God, than the wives and children of others?

What would be the effect upon other churches, and their ministry? Those who now say that we are one and the same, would continue to say it; and as evidence to their credulous followers, they would reason thus: "If polygamy, Adam God worship, Blood Atonement and rebellion against the government, are not parts of original Mormonism, why are the followers of Joe Smith afraid to let the Utah Elders preach in their churches?" To my mind, they would have much better grounds for believing these false doctrines to be part of the original faith than they now have.

2 John 9-11 verses is made to do duty on the other side. But the construction put upon this scripture proves too much for those who seek Bible support for this ostracism; and "that which proves too much, proves nothing." We are not permitted to say how much, how little, or what kind of heresy may be taught, and yet we be permitted to receive those who teach it, and "bid them God speed." But if they "bring not this doctrine," (the doctrine of Christ) "receive him not into your house," &c. Shall we close the doors of our private dwellings and churches against the ministers of all other churches? Yes, we must, if we accept the interpretation placed upon John's language as correct. The Papal church made use of a few such scriptures as this, put a similar interpretation upon them, (only they went a little further) and in order that they might effectually guard the church against heresy, they burned the heretics at the stake! John evidently did not mean that because persons are not sound in the faith, we shall refuse to feed them when they are hungry; or that we shall refuse to give them a bed upon which to rest, when they need it; or that we shall refuse to them the privilege of giving the grounds for their belief. The mistake occurs in the construction placed upon the word "receive." Jesus said to the Twelve, at the time he sent them out to preach, (Matt. 10: 40): "He that receiveth you receiveth me; and he that receiveth me receiveth him that sent me." In the light of this scripture it is not difficult to understand that when we receive any one who professes to be a minister for Christ, we accept him with the understanding that Jesus sent him to teach, that he is a properly qualified messenger of the gospel; and, therefore, we give full credence to the things taught, and render complete obedience thereunto. John simply taught (and the text is a very valuable one) that we are to try all who come to us as teachers for Christ by the doctrine they teach. If they bring not the doctrine of Christ, then receive them not as ministers of the gospel, neither bid them God speed.

When the devil came to Jesus in the wilderness, why did he not drive him away at once, telling him that he was an arch heretic and had no right to be heard? Jesus afterwards taught that this same devil was a liar and a murderer from the beginning! And yet he condescended to hold a remarkable discussion with him, and allowed it to be recorded for everybody to read! Is it not fair to infer that some who read this 4th chapter of Matthew, will conclude that the devil sustained himself very well by the Bible? That he is, indeed, a great Scriptorian and preacher? Ingersol thinks this scripture a ridiculous mess of stuff. I wonder if he would not have been a good Christian if Jesus had never held that debate with the dark Prince? "The watchmen upon the walls of Zion" are to guard and protect the flock. Very true, but they are not to do it by keeping darkness and sin beyond their possible reach. They are to teach the Saints to treasure up the word of God in their minds, and "take the Holy Spirit for their guide," that they might not be deceived. The leading duty of these watchmen is plainly set forth in the following scripture: "Take heed unto yourselves, and to the flock, over which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers, to feed the church of God, which he hath purchased with his own blood."—Acts 20: 28.

In my opinion, there is but little danger that our houses of worship will be desecrated by the heresy taught by strangers, and those who are not of us; but the practice of folly and abomination by those who own and control them, is more greatly to be feared. It is not the unholy thought, nor a proper examination of its character, which defiles the body and soul; but, rather, the giving to it a home within our hearts, and submitting to it as though it were a godly master, and greatly to be desired.

Religion is a matter of conscience between us and God. It is our privilege and duty to teach, but not to decide what shall, or shall not be believed. The law of the land does not interfere with our opinions, but it deals with our acts. There is a vast difference between an organization of "robbers," who have banded themselves together for the express purpose of committing crime, and escaping detection, and a body of religious people, the most of which embraced the peculiar faith in the belief that it was God's truth, and for the express purpose of obtaining salvation; and of whom but a small portion practice the abominations referred to above. There is more danger from other sources, more cause for alarm somewhere else, than from these Utah Elders. It may be that some will not discover this till it is too late; but all that I can say now is, Keep your eyes wide open, and your hearts right before God. Live so as to enjoy spiritual sight and spiritual hearing, else you will be deceived. Judge not after the sight of the eye, nor the hearing of the ear; but judge righteous judgment. "Watch and pray."

JOSEPH R. LAMBERT.

Selections.

WE reproduce from the Expositor for February, 1886, the following account of an effort made by Rev. George W. Sweeney, in Oakland, California.

REV. G. W. SWEENEY OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH ON THE 'MORMONS' AND THE 'LATTER DAY SAINTS.'

On the afternoon of Sunday, January 10th, 1886, we were handed the following notice: "Rev. Geo. W. Sweeney, pastor of Christian Church corner of Thirteenth and Market streets, will preach to-morrow night on 'The Right of the Government to suppress polygamy.' The Mormon doctrine will be reviewed—the orthodoxy and heterodoxy, and it will without doubt prove an interesting subject to his hearers." And as we like to "prove all things and hold fast to that which is good," we we took our better half, and a couple of sisters from San Francisco, and attended the lecture of the Rev. Mr. Sweeney. The president of our branch, W. Anderson, also attended.

As the doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in its purity have been hotly contested by the ministers of the Christian (or Campbellite) church, ever since it called from the ranks of that church the celebrated Sidney Rigdon, we were prepared for any kind of onslaught that might be brought forth from a prejudiced person. But judge our surprise, after singing, prayer and opening remarks, the speaker launched out upon his remarks with such apparent honesty and fairness, that we were indeed surprised. And when he said he held himself responsible for what he had to say, we took our pencil and note book to take a synopsis of whatever that might be.

We will not undertake to state all he said, or the manner in which he stated his propositions, or the beautiful language he used with which he richly embellished his remarks.

Substantially he said: "The Mormons began with Joseph Smith. The church was organized April 6th, 1830. The people were called Mormons, not so much from the fact that such was their name, as that they adopted the Book of Mormon as the Bible, they also use and admit the Jewish and Christian Scriptures. When the church was organized, it was called the Church of Christ, it was afterward changed to the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. I will now give you the doctrine of the Mormons, but will state in passing, that they are a better people than many of you think they are.

"Fundamentally considered they are orthodox. They believe in the trinity, in the divinity of Christ, in the fall of man, in total depravity, in blood atonement, in regeneration, in endless punishment, in the resurrection of the body, in baptism for the remission of sins, in the laying on of the hands for the gift of the Holy Spirit, in apostolic order, in apostles, prophets, etc., etc., in a miraculous call to the ministry.

"My views of a call to the ministry," said the speaker, "is common sense, a large brain, not a miraculous call. They believe in most of the orthodox doctrines.

"We should therefore be careful how we speak about suppressing the Mormons, because we might be the means of suppressing the orthodox as well.

"They have peculiar views in regard to the coming of Christ to reign on the earth.

"In crushing out a religion perhaps we should be careful.

"From 1830 to 1844 things with the Mormons went well. In 1844 Joseph Smith was murdered in Carthage Jail, Ill., and Brigham Young assumed the leadership.

"Up to this time polygamy had not been heard of as a fundamental doctrine. It was not a fundamental doctrine of the church.

"The Book of Mormon totally condemns and denounces it, as well as the Book of Doctrine and Covenants. In 1835 the church pronounced polygamy a crime.

"Joseph and Hyrum Smith both to the day of their death proclaimed against the doctrine, as you will see in their publications in the Times and Seasons, published at Nauvoo, Ills.

"In 1844 John Taylor, who at that time was the editor of the Mormon paper at Nauvoo, Ills., called the Times and Seasons, denounced that doctrine as infamous.

In 1850, John Taylor, in his famous discussion in France, made the same statement: 'The whole church, from 1830 to 1844, condemned it; it was therefore not a fundamental part of their religion, and no part of it.'

"In 1852, Brigham Young proclaimed that he had a revelation given through Joseph Smith in 1843, and had it published in the Deseret News and the Millennial Star. Young said he did not have the original, but had a copy.

"This was his only authority for its coming through Joseph Smith.

Mrs. Emma Smith, Joseph's widow, denied to the day of her death its authenticity; said that Joseph never had such a revelation, or taught such a doctrine.

"Brigham fathered it at first as Smith's; but after a great many went into it, and it began to be popular among the people, he then claimed that he in 1839-40 had the revelation himself, and gave it to Joseph after he came home from England.

"Polygamy, therefore, was not one of the original points of faith, nor a doctrine of the church Joseph Smith organized.

"Marriage being a civil as well as a religious institution, is subject to be regulated by law.

"The government has a perfect right to legislate upon the subject; and when such an institution as polygamy is introduced and sought to be practiced within the jurisdiction of this government, the government had the right, and it is its duty, to suppress it; and in so doing they do not interfere with a single doctrine or principle of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints as organized by Joseph Smith in 1830.

"The facts are, the original Mormons are not in Utah, but at Plano, Ills.,* where they have their publishing house and are publishing papers, tracts and books, and are doing a real Christian missionary work.

"The leader of this movement is Joseph Smith, the son of Joseph Smith, the founder of the church. He was brought up in the original faith, and has maintained a consistent warfare against polygamy, blood atonement, and other kindred evils."

The speaker then drew from the foregoing three practical lessons, and closed his most excellent oration with an exhortation to be charitable, kind, seeking after truth, and ready to accord to others what you would wish others to do for you. "How our hearts burned within us," while we sat spell-bound, to listen to such beautiful Christian teaching. While the speaker stated points of faith we do not believe in, such as total depravity, "blood atonement," etc., etc., yet, having drawn the line so completely between the original doctrine of the church and the perverted doctrine under Young and Taylor, and showed to his congregation that the Re-organized Church was the original church, and that she repudiated polygamy, blood atonement, Brigham Young and John Taylor, and was under the presidency of young Joseph Smith; we say when we heard such teaching we felt constrained, in behalf of the church and doctrine we had spent our lifetime and means to build up and promulgate, to thank the speaker for his clear, lucid and impartial way and manner of segregating us from the Utah people and doctrines, and for giving Joseph Smith, the founder, and his son, such a truthful and honest representation in regard to the work they were severally engaged in.

When we remembered the battles we fought with ministers of his church in years gone by, and how few of them, even up to the famous discussion between our Elder E. L. Kelley and Rev. Clark Braden, had ever given the founder of the church or any of her ministers their due, as regards their Christian character, learning or ability, or honesty of purpose; and now in our old age, when our head is whitening with the snows of sixty winters, where a man gives us at least a fair amount of credit, it is alas! too much for our sensitive nature. In the gratitude of our heart we arose, and addressing respectfully the minister, after he closed his discourse, asked him for the privilege of making a few remarks. We have heard of a "thunder-clap out of a clear sky," but we don't remember of ever hearing one before, and we pray God we may never again. "Sit down, sir!" came from the preacher; "sit down, sir! I will allow no dispute here, sir; I will see you at my room; I will not allow any debate here, sir." "My dear sir," said we, "we wished simply to thank you for—" "Sit down, sir!" and then went off in words we shall not reproduce.

After the choir sang he commenced another harangue about our interfering, when we stated we wished to be properly represented. "Sit down, sir, or I will call police!"

Well, the milk of human kindness began to curdle in our mammals, and looking around saw many of our acquaintances in the audience, many of them who have been friendly to us; we felt humiliated, and we said: "God forgive you, you know not what you are doing. If that is Christianity, we don't want any of it in ours. But we are aware it is no part of that blessed doctrine of Christ.

It was poor frail man. We pity him, for we see that he has noble sentiments, and we believe that he intends to be a good Christian. But he let the old man, Adam get the better of him for once. And although we were not allowed, as a representative Latter Day Saint, to thank him when he was fortified behind his pulpit, we take this opportunity of doing so now; for we feel that in his lecture he did us very much justice. And we feel like forgiving him for his personal insult to us.

We should have felt a little better if he had, when he found out who we were, and why we asked the privilege of speaking, came over to our office and made some apology, as he had but a few blocks to travel to find us. He might at least have said he took us for some religious crank, or lunatic, or something else he considered dangerous. If we had worn long hair, had it parted in the middle, or anything indicative of a crank, we certainly would not have blamed him. But we do not have any of these peculiarities. Our hair is cut short, and having been raised a Friend Quaker, we are not given to fighting, except with our tongue and pen.

We hope to become acquainted with Bro. Sweeney, and when we get well over the hill on the downward course of life, look back to this little episode as one of those incidents of life which better tries our Christian characters, and forces us to be better men and better Christians.

May we all learn that to be a Christian we must learn to subdue our passions and improve ourselves in Christian examples, to "deny ourselves, take up our cross and follow Jesus the Christ."

THE GOSPEL.—No. VIII.

KIRTLAND, O., June 1835.

FROM reflection we have been forced into the conclusion that the gospel was as well known among the ancients as among any other people, not even the ante-deluvians—the people before the flood—excepted. We are satisfied that, wherever the fruits of the gospel are or were found, there the gospel was also; for nothing else could produce the effects of the gospel but the gospel itself; or else the gospel was unnecessary; for otherwise men could have enjoyed all the blessings which it confers without its existence. And if anything besides the gospel could produce the same effects as the gospel, then it was vain, and worse than vain, for the Savior to say concerning it, "That he that believeth it not, should be damned;" for they could have been saved if it were admitted that something else could produce the same effect as the gospel. For instance; if men could have the spirit of prophecy, and prophecy without obeying the gospel, then it was in vain for the Savior to say, "That he that believeth not shall be damned;" for who does not know that a prophet could be saved. But the truth is, all the prophets from righteous Abel down until the present time had obeyed the gospel, and had their communion with God by virtue of their obedience to it.

We have evidence, I think, extant in the Scriptures, which is not easily set aside, though cavilers may cavil at it, that Abraham had a perfect knowledge of the gospel. We want it distinctly understood, that when we speak of the gospel, we mean the whole system, with all its ordinances and laws as proclaimed on "the day of Pentecost;" for we know nothing of the gospel distinct from baptism for the remission of sins, and the gift of the Holy Spirit by the laying on of the hands of those who are called and ordained unto this power. Take these things away and where is the gospel? We answer, No where—there is no such thing. For distinct from these things, there is no salvation. If there is salvation without baptism for the remission of sins, and the gift of the Holy Spirit, by the laying on of hands, we know nothing of it; for God our heavenly Father does not work at random, but by the strictest rule, even one established by himself for the rule of his conduct in relation to his creature man before the world was. By that rule he has worked, and will work, until time is no more.

In a former part of this treatise we examined the ground on which our opinion was founded that Abraham had a knowledge of the gospel. We shall now notice some things said in the Scriptures about Moses.

The Savior, in John 5: 46, says to the Jews, "Had ye believed Moses, ye would have believed me, for he wrote of me." And in Hebrews 11: 26, Paul says that Moses "esteemed the reproaches of Christ greater riches than the treasures of Egypt." From both of these quotations we learn this fact, that Moses had a knowledge of Christ, to some extent at least; and we think if examined a little it will be found that his knowledge was pretty extensive; probably as much so as any other man; for the Savior says, "He wrote of me." We think it is not probable that Moses wrote of Christ without understanding what he wrote; neither is it likely that he began to write on a subject which he did not understand most perfectly, particularly when we consider who Moses was, that he had both seen and covered with God and received revelations from him, and was in a situation to have both correct and extensive knowledge of all things which he desired to know. It appears also that in consequence of the knowledge which he had of Christ, he had to suffer reproach; for "he esteemed the reproaches of Christ, greater riches than the treasures of Egypt." But why the reproaches of Christ? Because he had knowledge of him and wrote of him, and for this knowledge, or for writing it, he had to suffer reproach. This is sufficient to show to any person who is willing to be instructed, that Moses must have understood the nature of Christ's office as the Savior of the world, or why suffer reproach for His sake?—Every man of any understanding must know, that nothing could have caused Moses to have suffered reproach for Christ's sake, unless he had knowledge of him; and all the knowledge that any being can have of Christ, is, as the Savior of the world; and if Moses suffered reproach for Christ's sake, he must have done so because he proclaimed him as the Savior of the world, and must have known as did Abraham, that it was in Christ that all the families of the earth should be blessed. For if he did not know this, he did not know anything about him; for it was in consequence of this, that he was then known to the world. Had it not been for this the name of Christ would not have been known in the world. And if Moses knew any thing of Christ, he could have known nothing of him but what was known of him as the Savior of the world. So that from all the light we can get on this subject, Moses must have had the same knowledge which Abraham had. Indeed there was no other knowledge to be had of Christ, but this. Take this away and the knowledge of Christ ceases; and so far as the knowledge of Christ extended, so far did the knowledge of the gospel extend; and so far as the knowledge of the gospel extended, so far did or does the knowledge of Christ extend; for they go together and neither of them is found alone. But what settles this question in the mind of every candid person forever is, that the fruits which are peculiar to the gospel and are found no where but in obedience to it, were found with Moses. He had the spirit of prophecy and of revelation; he also had visions, and the power of miracles attended him. All these are fruits of the gospel, and found among those who are baptized for the remission of sins who receive the gift of the Holy Spirit by the laying on of hands. If any should object, and say that the Scriptures never mention the baptism of Moses, we reply, Neither do they mention his writing of Christ—they only say he did write of Him; and we have no doubt if these writings were once obtained, we would in them find the account of his baptism; for every circumstance in relation to him tends to establish this fact in the mind, that he openly acknowledged Christ, and this can only be done by being baptized in his name for the remission of sins, and by receiving the Holy Spirit by the laying on of hands in His name; and having thus openly acknowledged him, he had to suffer reproach for His name; for it would be very singular indeed if Moses had to suffer the reproach of Christ when he had never acknowledged him. And let me repeat it again, that no person did, or ever will acknowledge Christ, only those who do it by being immersed in water for the remission of sins. This is the way and the only way by which any person ever has or ever will acknowledge Christ. They may acknowledge men, or some other beings in doing other things, but they can acknowledge Christ in no other way, and that for the best of all reasons, because there is no other way of acknowledging Him; for do all other things that any human creature could do, and leave this undone, and Christ would not be acknowledged. Seeing then, that Moses suffered the reproach of Christ, it follows of necessity that he must have been baptized for the remission of sins in his name, or he could not have been reproached for his sake.

Miscellaneous.

DIED.

REEVE.—At Mount Holly, New Jersey, September 22d, 1885, Elder Samuel M. Reeve. Bro. Reeve was born September 9th, 1803; joined the church in 1840, being baptized, as we are informed, by Benjamin F. Winchester; and was received into the Reorganized Church as an Elder, August 2d, 1868, under the ministerial charge of Elder John H. Lake, then presiding over the String Prairie Conference District. He removed from Keokuk, Iowa, to Mount Holly, some years ago to the home of his son, Samuel A., where he died strong in the faith of his life-time. He was buried in Mt. Holly Cemetery, September 25th.

RECORDER'S NOTICE.

If District Clerks who have branch reports in their hands not yet sent to me will send them in I will be greatly obliged. Also if Branch Clerks will take especial care to report to their coming

March conferences it will be an obligation both to the district authorities and to me, in the effort to make the records as complete as possible, then the District Clerks can make out more satisfactory Annual Reports to the General Conference.

H. A. STEBBINS,
General Church Recorder.

CONFERENCE NOTICES.

The conference of the Northern District of California will be held at Stockton, California, Friday, March the 19th, at ten o'clock.

THOMAS DALEY, President.

The Southern Indiana District Conference will convene with the Mount Eden Branch, Floyd County, Saturday, March 20th, at ten o'clock.

S. RECTOR, Pres. Dist.

HIGH PRIESTS' QUORUM.

The attention of the members of the above Quorum is called to the rule adopted by said body that each member should make a report in writing and send it in on or before the first day of March each year. The officers of the Quorum hope that this rule will be generally observed, so that when we meet in April the labors, intentions and purposes of each one in the Lord's work may be known, not only of those who may be present, but also of those who may not be able to attend.

HENRY A. STEBBINS,
Secretary of Quorum.

Conference Minutes.

NORTHERN NEBRASKA.

This district conference convened at Omaha, Nebraska, December 18th, 1885. W. M. Rumel, president; I. Sylvester, secretary. Evening session devoted to prayer and testimony. A good feeling prevailed. Elder's reports.—J. Caffall, E. C. Brand, W. M. Rumel, G. W. Walters, and E. Boulsen; Priests O. H. Brown, and E. Rannie. Financial report of district president received at last conference $4 30, since $3, total $7.30; paid for traveling expenses and stationery $6.75, on hand 75c. Branch reports.—Omaha 98; 3 received by letter. Lake Shore 25; 1 removed. Platte Valley 34; 1 expelled. W. M. Rumel was sustained as district president, and I. Sylvester as secretary. J. Gilbert presented a petition to abolish the rules of representation, which was sustained. Resolved, that the petition be not granted. Evening session. Resolved, that each speaker be limited to ten minutes argument, and O. H. Brown be allowed twenty minutes. The motion was carried. Bishop's agent reports, cash on hand last report $64.75, received $16—total $80.75; paid J. Caffall $10; on hand $70.75. Resolved, that we sustain our present Bishop's Agent. All Elders and Priests whose labors are not required in their branches to travel and preach as circumstances permit, under the direction of the district president. We appreciate the labors of brethren Caffall and Brand, and request them to spend as much time as possible in this district. Committee on O. H. Brown's case reported that he be requested to apologize to this conference, and be debarred from preaching until restitution to all parties be made. J. Caffall delivered a sermon on "Duties of the Saints"; after which O. H. Brown apologized, which was accepted and all parties concerned reconciled. Preaching in the afternoon by E. C. Brand, who continued the subject of Saints' Duties. Collection for the ministry $10.25. Preaching by J. Caffall in the evening. Collection $3.20. Adjourned to Fremont, Nebraska, the third Friday (19th) in March, 1886.

TAKE COUNSEL WITH YOURSELF.

Young men can not estimate too highly the advice of parents and friends. It affords them the benefit of experience, and is given from sincere solicitude for their welfare. It should be remembered, and weighed and acted upon. But, after all, every man has his own individual existence; he has his own life to live, for which he alone is accountable. He should derive all the benefit he can from the counsel of those older and wiser than himself. Then he should sit down and meditate by himself, and make up his own mind as to the course he wishes to pursue in the world. Having done this he should enter upon the execution of his plans with a determination to accomplish what he undertakes without reference to the opinions of others. No man is of any real account in the world unless he is something in and of himself. No man possesses real strength if he can not, after having heard all that others have to say, resolve, and resolve firmly, what to do, and carry his resolution into effect. Take counsel of others; profit by their experience and wisdom: but, above all, take counsel with yourself; make up your mind what to do in this world, and—do it.

MIND AND BODY.

HEALTHY body, healthy mind; or, healthy mind, healthy body. Keep the body healthy, the mind will be healthy; keep the mind healthy, the body will be healthy. A worried mind wears a young body into an old one.

Old age often comes of rust, treadmill, living in ruts, learning nothing new, insisting one is too old to learn. A young man marries at twenty-three; the woman ditto; they give up recreation, get into the social treadmill, turn their lives into business, housekeeping, calling and receiving calls. At forty they are mere machines. Now they begin to lay up for old age; they begin to feel old—get old; think old, and they are old. Ericsson is active with work and invention at eighty-four; Gladstone, in his seventies, is ruling England; DeLesseps, canalling at eighty. To remain young we must act, feel and hope like the young.

Wanted! At Once.

I WANT a partner to go in with me in the Bee Keeping Business, at once, as Spring is almost here, and it is time to begin soon. I want a brother in the church, with some capital (four or five hundred dollars). I have lots of Bees on hand, and am in a good location. Reference—J. R. Lambert of Lamoni, Iowa.

NUT for Utah Theologians to crack just now. August 8th, 1844, Brigham Young, the president of the Quorum of Twelve, said:

"You can not fill the office of a Prophet, Seer, and Revelator. God must do this. You are like children without a father and sheep without a shepherd. You must not appoint any man at your head; if you should, the Twelve must ordain him. You can not appoint a man at your head; but if you do want any other man or men to lead you, take them, and we will go our way to build up the kingdom of God in all the world."

"You can not take any man and put him at the head; you would scatter the Saints to the four winds; you would sever the priesthood. So long as we remain as we are, the heavenly head is in constant co-operation with us; and if you go out of that course God will have nothing to do with you." "Again, I repeat, no man can stand at our head except God reveal it from the heavens."—History of B. Young, pages 113, 114.

On October 6th, 1844, this same man said:

"Did Joseph ordain any man to take his place? He did. Who was it? It was Hyrum; but Hyrum fell a martyr before Joseph did."—Times and Seasons, vol. 5, page 683.

Again, Brigham Young, in a discourse delivered in the Tabernacle, Salt Lake City, April 7th, 1852, before a meeting of Elders and High Priests, said:

"A person was mentioned to-day who did not believe that Brigham Young was a Prophet, Seer and Revelator. I wish to ask every member of this whole community, if they ever heard him profess to be a Prophet, Seer and Revelator, as Joseph Smith was? He professed to be an apostle of Jesus Christ, called and sent of God to save Israel. If you know what the calling of an apostle is, and if there were ten thousand of them on the earth at the same time, you must know that the words of an apostle who magnifies his calling, are the words of the Almighty all the time. He never need be called in question whether he revealed the mind of the Lord or not." "Who ordained me to be First President of this Church on earth? I answer, it is the choice of this people, and that is sufficient."—Millennial Star, vol. 16, page 442.

By what rule known to the church in its published laws did Brigham Young become the man to lead the church in the place of Joseph Smith, and who ordained him?

BELOW we give an extract of an interview had with Col. S. A. Merritt, not long since a possible appointee to the office of Governor of Utah, by a Salt Lake Herald reporter, as appears in that paper for February 20th:

"He was in intercepted by a Herald reporter Thursday, who asked him what he thought of the probability of Edmunds' bill passing the House.

"I believe it will pass the House and become law," he said. "You can say in your paper that I believe the government is thoroughly aroused, and determined that the people here must give under. I profess to be a friend to the people of Utah, and I should not be, were I to tell them anything else than the truth. The feeling in Congress is such that the Edmunds bill would obtain a two-thirds-vote any day it were brought up. All the Republicans would vote for it, and most of the Democrats. Old Edmunds is a great power, and he says he will pass law after law until polygamy is crushed out."

"Do you not think Edmunds' bill will be amended before it passes?"

"In some degree, perhaps; not extensively. They will probably strike out the clause compelling the first wife to testify against her husband; but I look to see the bill pass in some such shape as will render things much the same here as they are in Idaho.

HE WILL GO TO THE PEN.

"The Church whip has again been wielded with telling effect, this time over the shoulders of one whom the law-abiding portion of the community were inclined to believe had manhood enough to withstand all the pressure that might be brought to bear upon him by the wretches whose aim seems to be to fill the penitentiaries of the land to overflowing, and all 'for Christ's sake!' But, alas! for the good resolutions which Henry Dinwoodey once indulged! The Church whip dissipated them at the first crack; and another name is added to the fast increasing martyr-convict list.

"What a beneficent institution the Mormon Church is, to be sure! Drawing men away from their allegiance to the best government on earth, teaching them in the name of God Almighty to violate laws which ought to be held as sacred as the decrees issued on Sinai, holding down their noses to the ever-revolving grind-stones of blind hate and superstition, and finally sending them to prison as common convicts! What an organization for civilized people to be proud of! What a beneficent institution to take root and flourish in the soil of a free country like America!

"Thank God, the Government has finally determined that it will no longer permit such outrages to be perpetrated on American soil, and the process of wringing apart the head and body of this politico-ecclesiastical monstrosity is only delayed that the most effective means of accomplishing the work may be devised."

The foregoing is from the editorial department of the Salt Lake Democrat, of Salt Lake City, Utah, for February 19th. This paper is edited by Mr. Alfales Young, a son of Pres. Brigham Young, which fact gives peculiar force to what is contained in the editorial.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

By letters from sisters Mary Bronson and Ruth Turner, Montrose, Lee county, Iowa, we learn that Bro. Hiram C. Bronson commenced a series of meetings at that place February 7th, in which he was assisted by Bro. J. S. Roth, of the Des Moines District, who came to his aid on the 8th. These meetings resulted in the baptism of eleven persons on Sunday, February 21st, eight of whom were heads of families. The sisters write that the meetings were well attended from the start. Bro. Roth has returned home, but Bro. Bronson still keeps his meetings going. The feeling is that there are others who are near to obedience.

The Galland's Grove District Conference convenes at Galland's Grove, Iowa, March 5th, 1886, at half-past ten. The Little Sioux District Conference convenes at Magnolia, Iowa, March 13th, 1886, at eleven. Elder W. W. Blair now hopes to attend both of these conferences, and also to spend a few days at Harlan, Iowa.

Elder J. Luff writes from Malad, Idaho, the 14th ult., that he baptized seven at Oxford, completed the branch organization there. He says: "Others were ready for baptism, but delayed in hope of their families coming forward soon." He says further that "Bro. Anthony made an unusually fine impression upon all classes except the bigoted Brighamites." "Of course," says Bro. Luff, "I was not comparable with Bro. Anthony there; and I felt proud of him and his work. Would to God that all laborers would leave everything as clean and clear as he did. I would gladly be second to any of them. I am billed for here (Malad) twice to-day, also for next Saturday and Sunday. During the week I am billed for Samaria."

The Kewanee Saints are proposing to have a reunion conference on the second Friday in March, and have kindly extended an invitation to the Editor's of HERALD to be present on that occasion, which invitation is hereby acknowledged. May God be with the Saints of that district as never before.

Bro. Edmund Ford writes of late from Curlew, Palo Alto county, Iowa, that Brn. Whiting and Salisbury have been there with good success. Some people at Silver Lake once threatened to throw the preacher out of the school house. This resulted from false reports.

Two others were baptized near Iola School-house, Kansas, February 20th. It is expected that others will unite soon. Mr. Samuel Herring, and Bro. and Sr. Gurwell, were doing all they could to aid the work there.

Bro. H. C. Bronson wrote February 24th, that their meetings at Montrose, (opposite Nauvoo, Illinois), were largely attended, the interest intense, the sectarian ministers greatly excited, the devil raging, and many believing. Eleven had just been baptized, two more had given their names, and more would come forward soon. He says, "God is with us in power, and the interest in our work gains."

Sr. Martha J. Bierly, long seeking the perfect way of serving God, and sorely persecuted by some who were once her associates in church communion, was baptized at Seligman, Missouri, in January last, by Elder M. T. Short. A press of matter excludes her lengthy and interesting letter from the HERALD. We trust she will find "rest," and full confirmation in her new and heaven-provided home.

Eleven have been baptized at Fanning, Kansas, since December. So writes Sr. A. L. Gurwell.

Bro. J. W. Johnson writes of the visit of Bro. J. R. Lambert to McFall, Gentry county, Missouri, which resulted in some disappointment owing to the shortness of his stay. Bro. Johnson reports property cheap there, and plenty of chances to buy. The country healthy, good for corn, vegetables, fruit, and water; not so good for peaches.

One of our exchanges, the Lamoni Gazette, has changed hands, being now owned and published by Brn. John H. Hansen and S. F. Walker, of Lamoni. They propose to devote the paper to the interests of the town and county, the promoting of their growth and development, their wants and necessities. The Gazette is not a church paper in the sense of being devoted to the advocacy and defense of a church; but proposes to serve the people as a newspaper for the welfare of all, without reference to partisan politics, or denominational religion. See advertisement.

Bro. John Pett writes from Dow City, Iowa, the 20th inst., that the past winter has been severe on them, and that "it has taken a wonderful amount of corn to keep the cattle alive and in good shape."

Some one sends us from Dakota fifteen cents toward a fund to send ministers to the Society Islands. This, with all funds of similar character, go to the Bishop.

Sr. Laura Eaton, of Green's Landing, Maine, asks the prayers of the Saints that she may be restored to health.

Bro. A. J. Kenison writes from Eagle Rapids, Kansas, asking that an Elder come and labor in that place and vicinity for a month or two. He says there are many enquiring after the doctrines of the Saints; but he thinks the work there will require an able, efficient worker.

THE following clipping is from the Fergus Falls (Minn.) Journal:

"Rev. Hiram Holt, of California, a Latter Day Saint, has been preaching in this section for the past few weeks, and on Monday delivered a lecture at the Gorman School House, in district 181, to a large audience. About a week ago a Seven Day Adventist gave a lecture in the same place, and the object of his lecture was to prove that Sunday was the day of rest and religious thought. He handled the subject well, but did not change the ideas of the Seven Day Adventists. He is headed for Fergus Fall, and gave a lecture at Battle Lake on Tuesday evening."

Bro. Holt, in a letter dated at Frieberg, the 21st ult., says the Saints where he has been laboring are "feeling well, and many are doing all they can for the good cause. There are plenty of opportunities for preaching. I leave this district the first of March. The cause is gaining ground."

Brother Blair:—I would be pleased to see in the Herald from your pen an explanation of Heb. 7:12. "For the priesthood being changed, there is made of necessity a change also of the law." I am desirous to understand this matter, but it seems dark as yet, as to why, when, and where the change.

Your brother in Christ,

L. R. DEVORE.

To this we reply, (1), That Israel, from Sinai, had been under the law of carnal commandments; (Gal. 4:22-31) which "was added because of transgressions;" (Gal. 3:19); and that it is evident it was "added" to the gospel covenant had by Melchizedeck, (Gen. 14:18, with Heb. 7:1-11, and 5:1-10) and by Abraham (John 8:56; Gal. 3:5-9; Rom. 4:7-13; Heb. 11:6-16; etc., etc.) and by Moses. (John 1:45; 5:46; Heb. 11:24-26; 1 Cor. 10:1-4; with Exodus 18:1-12). These quotations will not fail to satisfy every intelligent, unbiased mind, that these worthies knew of Christ, enjoyed the knowledge of his redemption, were partakers of the blessings of his gospel covenant, and that Moses suffered bitter persecutions and reproaches because he preached Christ and his redemptive work, and administered in the ordinances thereof. And it should be noted that others besides Israel had the knowledge of Christ and knew how to glorify him. (Rom. 1:2-28; Gen. 14:18; Exodus 18:1-12; Job. 1:1-6; 19:24-27; with Rom. 8:14-17; Gal. 3:26-29 and 4:6, 7).

When Israel refused to be governed by the gospel, they proved themselves unworthy of the ministrations pertaining thereto, the law of carnal commandments was given them from Sinai, and its ministrations were placed in the hands of that "order" of priesthood commonly known as the priesthood of Aaron, and so called because it was conferred by God's appointment upon that family throughout its generations. It seems there was much that properly pertains to the gospel which was embodied in the laws and statutes known as "the Law," yet there was no need that the higher offices of the priesthood, (such as are embraced under what is known as the Melchizedeck "order"), should longer remain, for Israel had refused the gospel.

Now, in "the beginning of the gospel of Jesus Christ, the Son of God" (Mark 1:1) it was competent and proper that it should be introduced, in the first of its principles, by John the Baptist, a lineal descendant of Aaron, and the son of an officiating priest. (Luke 1:5-23). With the further and more complete introduction of the gospel, (which was in fact and in effect a change from the law of carnal commandments to that of "the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus," "the perfect law of liberty,") there was "a change" in the authority to administer, by the introduction of that priesthood once held by Melchizedeck, Jethro, Moses, and others prior to the giving of the law from Sinai. Paul teaches that Christ held and administered in the Melchizedeck "order" of priesthood; and the Scriptures teach that as he was called and sent forth to teach and minister, so he called, ordained and sent forth his ministers. (John 13:20; 15:16; 20:21). In this way "a change" was then effected, both as respects the priesthood and the doctrines and institutions to be ministered. As some of the gospel principles were retained under that known as "the law," so also, when "the law" (as a code) was "abolished," and gave place to the gospel "covenant," many of the principles embodied in that "law" were retained and carried over into the gospel order, and under the ministrations of the higher, the Melchizedeck order of priesthood. In proof of this fact see Matt. 19:16-19; 22:36-40; Rom. 13:9, etc., etc. The Aaronic priesthood was that under which Israel received the ministrations of "the law;" but when the gospel in its fulness, and the Melchizedeck priesthood were restored, a mighty "change" was effected both in respect to doctrine and authority.

The Aaronic "order" was never known as the "royal," kingly, priesthood; but that of Melchizedeck was. In proof of this we quote "And Melchizedeck king of Salem brought forth bread and wine; and he was the priest of the Most High God." Gen. 14:18. Moses was both "priest" (Ps. 99:6) and "king," (Deut. 33:5). Christ, also, was both "priest" (Ps. 110:4, with Heb. 5:6, etc.) and king. (Ps. 2:6; Luke 19:38; John 18:37). The apostle Peter and his fellows held this kingly priesthood, for he says, "But ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood." 1 Pet. 2:9. John, the apostle, and his fellow ministers held the same. Hear him: "Jesus Christ, who is the faithful witness, and the first begotten of the dead, and the prince of the kings of the earth. Unto him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood, and hath made us kings and priests unto God and his Father; to him be glory and dominion forever and ever. Amen." Rev. 1:6.

When we consider the prophecies which relate to Israel in their redeemed and restored condition, it is not at all surprising that the "priesthood" is found with them in its entirety and fulness. Isaiah says of this,—“But ye shall be named the priests of the Lord; men shall call you the ministers of our God; ye shall eat the riches of the Gentiles, and in their glory shall ye boast yourselves.” Chap. 61:6. Again: “I will also take of them for priests and for Levites, saith the Lord.” 66:21. And still further:

“But who may abide the day of his coming? and who shall stand when he appeareth? for he is like a refiner's fire, and like fullers' soap: And he shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver: and he shall purify the sons of Levi, and purge them as gold and silver, that they may offer unto the Lord an offering in righteousness.”—Mal. 3:2, 3.

All these passages point out a great “change” in the “law,” and also a “change” in priesthood ministrations. But none of these passages point to the abolishment of either the Aaronic or Melchisedeck priesthoods. And be it remembered that, the Scriptures mentions but two orders of priesthood—that of Melchisedeck, and that of Aaron. All other kinds, or orders, are without the warrant of God's word, and are simply and only the inventions of men.

In conclusion we have to say that, the word “change,” in the text quoted by Bro. Devore, does not mean destroy, abolish, or anything of the kind, neither in science nor revelation. The heart, the conscience, the mind, the seasons, the moon, the wind, the earth, etc., etc., all have many “a change,” yet they continue to exist, though under different conditions, states, or arrangement.

When the gospel law was introduced, that was “a change” from the Mosaic law, and therefore a higher priesthood than that of Aaron was required to administer in some of its principles; hence there was “a change” in the priesthood when the “order” of Melchisedeck was introduced in Christ and his apostles and elders.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. James B. Collier, writing from Waterbury, Conn., the 19th ult., says:

“This is the hardest place I have been in to try to convince people of the true principles of the doctrine of Christ. To be sure, I work at the anvil every day to maintain my family, and can give none of my time to the cause, still I try to let my light shine. There are none of our people here except my wife and myself.”

A brother writes from down in Missouri:

“I can't rest; there is much to be done; and shall I be an idler? No, I can not be. Work is awaiting me; or it seems so to me according to my testimony. The angel said that I must pay all before I could go, hence I am determined to free me from debt.”

No Credit for moneys received on subscription will appear on the Colored Address Label of the Herald and Hope for this issue, as no changes have been made, except in case of persons desiring a change in P.O. address.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY SISTER “FRANCES.”

“The mystery dimly understood
That love of God is love of good,
That book and church and day are given
For man, not God,—for earth, not heaven,
The blessed means to holiest ends,
Not masters, but benignant friends.”

AMUSEMENTS.

WE propose in this number to present a few thoughts bearing directly upon the subject of amusements for the young. Age can not transfer to youth the experience it has gained in the hand to hand conflict of life; as the poet says:

“Each lip must learn the taste of truth,
Each foot must feel its way.”

But while age can not transfer, it can follow the example of the Father who has all wisdom, and whose love toward his children is represented by the purest, holiest, most unselfish love known to mortals, the love of a mother. “Precept upon precept, here a little and there a little.” The character of God as revealed to man in his attributes is perfect, therefore both by precept and example (if we are permitted so to speak) he goes before us saying: “This is the way, walk ye in it.” He bestows upon us blessings from day to day, and yet when it becomes necessary, he chastises us; and why? “Whom the Lord loves he chasteneth;” and Paul assures us, that though this chastening is not pleasant, yet it “yields the peaceable fruits of righteousness unto such as are exercised thereby.” Here then is the object of God's dealings with us, and should be the object of which we should never lose sight, in our attempts to train our children. All which we do or attempt to do, whether it be to gratify the child, or to cross his will and chastise him, but one motive should actuate us—the good of the child.

I remember reading, in years that are past, a test to be applied to a book, if we were in doubt as to whether it was really a good book or not. If after reading it we felt awakened within us, higher resolves for the future, stronger aspirations for good—in fact a determination to overcome evil by practicing good, we might safely say the book we had been reading was a good one; but if, on the contrary, all this was reversed, and we felt to look upon life as a theater of action where the happiest were those who appropriated the most of its enjoyment to themselves, we might be well assured the book was not a good one, it was one we ought never to have read, should never put into the hands of our children, or recommend to any one. It has been many years since I read this, but I have never forgotten it; and why should we not apply to every act of our lives the same rule? This however is not our present object, but we do want to know how far this rule will do to apply to the amusements we call innocent, and which we propose to give our free consent to our children's enjoying.

From the time of the first conscious glance which the babe gives its mother as it nestles in her arms, the mother becomes the teacher of her child. If you doubt it mothers, just watch your infant children closely for a few days or weeks, and you will not be doubtful long. How old are they before they know your face, your voice, and will smile when you smile, or purse up their little lips to cry if you frown upon, or speak sharply to them. O, mothers, if you are wise, you will strive to overcome self, that the pure soul looking into your eyes through the eyes of your babe, may never learn from your face that which your lips would not utter in its hearing when it is older.

All day long the lamb frolics around its mother, the young colt plays, and even animals grown older have their seasons of joyous frolic, when loosened from restraint. Man provides for domestic animals, or they would perish in nearly all countries. The horse, cow and ox will feed upon the grass in its season, but have no instinct to tell them there is a season coming in which there will be no food in the fields for them to eat. God made them to serve man, and the obligation to take care of them devolves upon him. The birds make no provision for the season when fierce storms are abroad, but their wings, guided by a God-given instinct, bear them to sunnier climes.

Not so however with a large class of animals who depend entirely upon their own efforts for support. Such animals begin when very young to seek for a living, by using the faculties with which God has endowed them. Let our observation extend as widely as it may, we find all things answering perfectly the object for which God made them, except man.

If this present existence was all of life, then to obtain the greatest amount of present happiness from day to day and year to year would seem to be the path wisdom would mark out, in which to encourage our children to tread; but, the Christian mother needs not to be told this is not all of life.

Life is solemn, because it is followed by eternity, and the pursuit of present happiness was not a part of the Master's teaching. The change which we call death, is but the ushering of the spirit into a higher state of existence, a broader field of labor; and can have terror only because of life. Life then is what we should fear, and not death. To teach our children from the hour the first conscious glance of the babe rests on our face, until they become men and women fully competent to choose for themselves the solemn responsibility of life, can alone free us from the duty which came to us when our children came.

“The mystery dimly understood,
That love of God is love of good.”

Can we apply the test to the amusements we grant them, which we apply to the reading matter put in their hands? We believe we can, and that any amusement which will not stand this test is a pernicious one, and should not receive our sanction. It is the dregs left in the bottom of the wine cup of dissipation, and if we ourselves have ever tasted this cup, let us beware how we offer the dregs to our children. If we have not tasted it, then let the peaceful flow of our own lives give us assurance that for them it is well to abstain even as we have done.

God has so ordered it (and O, how wisely) that during the first years of life the child is under the parents' control. Home, Sabbath School, and the house of God, are all nurseries in which these tender plants are to be cared for. There they are to receive such training as will enable them in years to come to choose the good and reject the evil. Our children have an agency, yes; but mark you, parents, it will be time enough for us to think we must subject them to temptation, when the devil is bound. He who has "come down in great wrath, knowing that his reign is short," will do enough of this for you, guard them as you will. What think you would be the result if the nurseryman were to say, That limb is growing crooked, but I will not tie it up now. The weeds are becoming thick around these young plants, but I know the seed was good; just wait a bit, weeds will grow, and plants must know how to master them. This sounds very absurd, positively ridiculous, and yet is it more so than to say of our human plants, during the tender years of their growth, "they have an agency?" "I know him, said God, that he will command his children and his household after him, and they shall keep the way of the Lord." "Train up a child," said the wise man, "in the way in which he should go and when he is old he will not depart from it."

It has frequently been asserted that if you want to see bad boys, just hunt up the boys of preachers, and those who have been brought up in an especially pious manner, and you can find them. Don't you believe this, mothers. It is a pitfall of the adversary laid for your feet, and for the soul of that innocent babe resting in your arms, giving to you its first conscious glance, and looking to you for the guidance and watchcare God intended you should give it during those trusting hours of infancy and childhood, while you carry it, as it were, upon your heart, and it knows no wish for any approval but that of father and mother. Don't be afraid, mothers, of tying your boys to your apron strings, if your influence can so be called. Are they not better than the fetters which Satan stands ready to tie them with? The wise man said, "when he is old he will not depart from it." Granting that some children who have been trained by pious fathers and mothers have been very wild as soon as the parental control was withdrawn, does that prove that restraint was the cause of it? Might they not have been tenfold worse without restraint? Again, every rule has its exceptions, and it is very unfair to argue from exceptions. But we are not willing to admit that these seeming exceptions are always true ones. Have you not known in your own experience more than one prodigal who has grown weary of swine's food, weary of the husks, and has come back to his Father's house, where was always bread to spare? How he remembered the sweet counsel of God he had learned at his mother's knee? The prayers his father had spoken around the family altar? He knew the taste of the bread of life, for his soul had been fed with it before he demanded his portion of his father, and spent it in riotous living. He was old, but through all those years wherein he had sought pleasure in sin, he remembered the happy hours of his youth—his father's house.

He had exercised his agency, and was able now to know the bitter from the sweet, and he arose and came back confessing his fault.

Let us suppose that in his father's house he had been fed upon husks. Would his soul have remembered the taste of bread which he had eaten there? How many a man has repented of his sins, and turned from a course of sin and crime, because the Spirit of God, in striving with his heart, brought to his memory the sweet lessons learned at his mother's knee in the days of his sunny boyhood, when his heart was pure. God pity the man or woman in their struggle with the cares and temptations of life, who have no such memories to anchor their souls upon.

Are we willing to send our children out into the world with no golden memories linking them to the past? Memories which may prove the strongest weapons of defense against temptation, with the aid of God's Holy Spirit calling them to mind!

We are in receipt of letters from sisters Phelps and Eleanor, also clippings from sister Lloyd, which will appear next week. Many of you are rich, therefore, sisters, don't send us empty away. The Spirit of God is with us. We feel its calm holy influence about us each hour that we give to laboring for the Home Column. Is it because you pray for its success? We believe it is, and we want you to work as well as pray. If it brings a lesson for good into any home, O, mothers, let it sink deep into your hearts, for the time in which we have to labor is now; of the future who can say, It is mine?

LAMONI, IOWA, Feb. 25th, 1886.

Are you waiting, waiting, waiting,
With a patience ebbing low,
For the fruit of many seedlings,
Planted in the long ago?
Wait and hope a little longer,
Know how richer far and stronger,
Those long hid 'neath winter's snowing,
Come to fruit in beauty's prime,
When the fields are rich and glowing
In the golden harvest time.

Are you praying? Still be praying.
Fullest joy will come at last:
Maybe we shall find an answer
When the gates of death are past;
When, with wings of faith no longer
Mount we up on pinions stronger,
In eternal freedom flying
From the shadows here that are,
From the working, waiting, sighing,
To the goal that shines afar.—Selected.

WORK WHILE THE DAY LASTS.

SAYS George Elliot: "What sort of a heaven can there be for souls pauperized by inaction?" And we may ask, What sort of a present is there for us if we recognize no responsibility in life. And yet how often we murmur, give our service half hearted, and grieve that our burdens are so great, when a meek submission, acknowledging the hand of the Lord in all things, would bring a balm to all our woes. Could we but mingle cheer and content with our occupations, there would be more satisfaction through our toil, and less worry. I know a woman who for comfort sings "How firm a foundation" when ever the cares of life weigh heavily, and everything seems to go wrong in the house. Did any of you ever try driving away clouds with song, while at work? We may all do something for the Master, and it is well if we find out what we can do best, and then work cheerfully with mind, might and strength for a spiritual and temporal salvation. "The idler, shall not eat the bread of the laborer." "The woman who works in some honorable way to maintain herself, loses none of the dignity or refinement of true womanhood, but is just as much an ornament to her sex as, and even more than, the woman whose days are passed in indolence and ease." It is not right however to abuse the mental or physical strength God has given us; let us try to be temperate in all things.

In order that we may economize both strength and time, may we not be greatly benefitted by exchanging methods of doing work. Some of the sisters have better ways, perhaps, of doing the same thing than we have, and when sure that our method is a good one, good may be done by communicating.

The best methods of making bread ought to be of general interest to us, and is worthy our attention, for this is a sore trial to some women while others seem to understand the art so well that they seldom fail. May we hope to equalize in culinary as well as greater things. And our girls should not neglect to drill themselves in the useful art of cooking and housekeeping, in their eager haste to acquire more fashionable accomplishments, and waste valuable time trying to paint, or listlessly thrum some instrument without the requisite gift of talent for success.

LUCY LLOYD.

THE FOUNTAIN OF LIFE UNSEALED.

It is with delicacy that I undertake the task of writing a piece for the Mothers' Home Column. A few words from each sister will go a great way toward bringing us more in unison with each other, and developing more fully the resources of our own minds. The fountain of life is a spring within us, which should be kept pure by our walk in life; like the magnificent fir-tree, standing upon the lofty and most rugged peak of the Alps, with not a vestige of soil to support it; yet there it stands, clinging to the rock in bold defiance. The grand old oak and her sisters would wither were they in its place, when the sun's piercing rays beat upon them. There it grows, defying the barren soil and the howling tempest, 'till its height and frame are worthy of the mountains from whose blocks of bleak gray granite its tiny bud sprang into life, and grew a giant tree. So the mind can be cultivated until it becomes like the fire tree, and like it may enjoy its healthiest and highest life amidst the most rugged features of external existence. Like this noble tree it may find invisible elements of support, not originating in itself, but springing up within it as from a fountain of living waters. The mind if left wholly dependent upon itself, could not find real enjoyment in an Eden of beauty; for in fallen human nature happiness is not an inborn spring. It is a living fountain, brought into the heart by a power which, when dwelling in the temple of the soul, is yet not of it, but infinitely above it; nor is it possible to attain real enjoyment without the presence of this living fountain. Every soul which has trusted to itself alone since the world began, "has hewn to itself broken cisterns;" wretched, empty things, which hold no water, a fair example of what the human mind is, when left to its own resources. What is that which must be brought into the mind to give genuine enjoyment? Stand for a brief space by the well of Jacob, and hear the wonderful secret in words of divine wisdom from the lips of Jesus. He says: "Whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst; but the water that I shall give him shall be in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life." "If a man love me he will keep my words; and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him and make our abode with him." "I will see you again, and your heart shall rejoice, and your joy no man taketh from you." "My peace give I unto you." Here, then, the great truth stands out before you. God received into the soul by faith. He is that fountain of living water whose streams refresh the weary spirit, and satisfy its immortal thirst. Where he dwells there abide peace, love, joy, and hope in all their beauty. O! desponding sisters, let us always look on the bright side of this visible world. It can be really and innocently enjoyed, because our Creator brings the internal faculties into harmony with external things. The relations of social life can be enjoyed, and our duties performed with efficiency and pleasure. Then our future is invested with grandeur and glory, and all the interests of life are felt to be safe; for they are in the keeping of God, not afar off in the clouds and darkness, but of God abiding in perpetual spiritual manifestations within the soul.

"So pass our lives that every hour
Shall die as dies the wild-wood flower,
A self-reviving thing of power;
That every thought and every deed
May hold within itself the seed
Of future good and future need."

Brother Joseph Smith:—Again were the waters of our convenient baptistry disturbed on last Sunday afternoon by the burial of an estimable lady—Madame Dr. Allison. This act united the couple in a sense that non-previously existed. I felt to say in the baptismal prayer: "Gracious Father, whatever may have been the affection of the past, however strong may have been the mutual ties of love, may this day's deed bind their hearts together in that higher, spiritual love, that emanates from thee; and may the remaining time of their earthly sojourn be the brightest, happiest and the best, and may they enter into the bright beyond to know as they were known, to see as they were seen." I feel there are yet others to follow.

I dreamed during our revival meetings the following: I was standing on an eminence from which I had a commanding view of a most beautiful landscape, o'er which a light of supernal kind was reflected. The scene filled me with great joy and peace, and I desired that others might see and feel what I saw and felt. I looked toward my left and saw a few folk standing in conversation. I determined to go down and speak to them. I did so, and they went with me; they, too, were filled with delight, and spoke of friends of theirs they should like might enjoy the scene, and asked me if I would go with and help them. I consented, and upon our return we encountered many obstacles in the pathway. Holding two persons by the hand, I helped them on and over many difficult places, and my first friends aided theirs. We reached the place, and all stood together and viewed the scene that filled us with perfect peace and joy.

Last Sunday's services were blessed with the Holy Spirit's presence, and all had a good spiritual time.

Not one Sabbath since I have been in this city have I stood at the "sacred desk" unblessed by the Spirit's power. This I say in humble acknowledgement of a promise God made to me last March. Ever has the mantle of his kindness been upon me, and, O! that these eyes may behold him in his glory, and these faltering feet pass through the portals into everlasting rest!

No theme is so dear to me as that of the gospel. No name so sweet to this frail heart as that of Jesus. No influence so gentle and guiding as that of the Holy Spirit. No word so filled with power and glory and tenderness as that of Father. No blessings so precious, pure and ennobling as those of the Spirit's bestowal. No joy so transporting as that of the "joy of the Lord."

"I love thy kingdom, Lord,—
The house of thine abode,—
The church our blest Redeemer saved
With his own precious blood.
Beyond my highest joy
I prize her heavenly ways;
Her sweet communion, solemn vows,
Her hymns of love and praise."

Dear Herald:—Seeing the account of that beautiful vision given by sister Healey of Boston, Massachusetts, I have a great desire to learn whether she might be related to my family, or if she or any of the Saints can tell the whereabouts of my brothers. My elder brother, Jabez Healey, joined the Church of the Saints about the year 1841 or 1842 in the Burslem Branch. He soon afterwards got a free passage in one of the earliest ships chartered to gather the Saints to America. My dear mother and myself joined the Burslem Branch, since which time I do thank my God that I have never had cause to repent. My brother Jabez was in the Mexican war, after which he sent for my mother and brother, William in the year 1849. The last I heard from them they were in Bunker Hill, Mangorpim, in the year 1858, since which time I have lost all traces of them. If by any means you can assist in discovering their whereabouts you will confer a great favor on your humble servant.

Bro. Joseph:—Your kind letter received some time ago. All are well at present. Our conference convened last Saturday. Brethren Lake, Anthony, Short, and I. N. White were with us, and will be the rest of the week. Five were baptized yesterday. Preaching will continue every night this week. We had some sharp shooting in conference; but every thing went off pleasantly. Bro. I. N. White was elected district president. We extended the limits of our district, south one hundred and twenty-five miles, or four counties; east to Coles county; west one county in Kansas; south four, making about one hundred and twenty-five miles south and east. Bro. I. N.

White now lives in our district. There is considerable inquiry about our church. Prospects for the coming summer are flattering for business of all kinds. We have had one month of cold weather; the weather has been pleasant for a while, our streets are dusty now. I see in the Journal, Cannon's capture. All will come out right yet.

Yours as ever,

J. W. BRACKENBURY.

Brother Blair:—I will try this Sabbath day to write a few words of cheer, as we are away from all church privileges, and in fact have never had any. In reading over the affairs of Utah I see Lorenzo Snow is imprisoned for unlawful cohabitation, and my mind is carried back some four or five years ago. One evening, about eight months after I was baptized, as we were sitting down to supper there came to the door a little old man, with long, white hair and beard, and asked if a family of MORMONS lived there. I rose up and said, "Yes, sir. Come in." He came in, and I said, "Will you have some supper?" He said he would, as he had walked quite a distance and was very tired. He sat down and ate, and we talked. He asked what faction of the Mormons I held to. I said, "We are Josephites." "Oh," he said, "You are all wrong." I replied, "I guess not. Are you a Mormon?" "Yes," he said, "but do you not know that Brother Brigham held the authority?" "No," said I, "not according to the teachings of the books." So he affirmed and I denied, and the discussion got pretty warm. I had asked him to stay all night, and he thought he would. But after a short talk he thought he had got himself in a tight place. After supper I said: "If you have the books of the church containing the law we will examine them, and if you will convince me that we are wrong, then all right." I had no books but the Bible, and a Book of Mormon that had been loaned me, and at that time I was not very well posted. But I put my trust in Him that is mighty, and in "the sword of the Spirit." But he said he guessed he would move on, as he had a work to do, and it would not do to tarry. I replied that I thought he was going to stay all night, and that we would look into this work. He said he was sorry, but he could not stay that night, as he wanted to get on as far as possible. I followed him out of the door and plied him with questions, and he said he had four wives. I told him he ought to be ashamed of himself to preach or practice, such a doctrine. Said he, "You are a noble looking woman, and if you would just believe this that I tell you, what a glorious exaltation might be yours." I replied that I did not believe a word of it, for God condemns it as an evil in the Book of Mormon in strong terms, and I would rather be a doorkeeper in the house of the Lord than a dweller in the tents of wickedness. So we bid him "good-by" but not "God speed" (with such a bundle of filth to spread over God's fair earth). He went his way, and we found out that he went only about a hundred yards from our house and staid all night. He told our neighbors with whom he staid that the woman in the house back a ways was a "good talker, and well posted," but that she was on the wrong side. He said great calamities would fall on the people, and that when they came the people should flee to Utah, for there would be "a refuge" for all. Well, I hope he will find refuge under the strong arm of the law of God and his country; for he was no other than Lorenzo Snow. He carried a valise marked on one side, "L. Snow." How are the mighty fallen! This occurred when living in Pennsylvania.

Your sister in the Gospel,

AMANDA S. YOHE.

RATCLIFF, Tex., Jan. 28th.

Bro. Joseph.—I am still alone, only Christ is with me. I am laboring in the gospel all I can. I have not been able to do much on the account of my health; I am mending some at present. I ask the Saints to pray for me that God will restore me to my health. Gospel peddlers are about played out in this vicinity. I met with a sanctified Methodist a few days since; he bounced me on the subject of baptism, said that baptism was not necessary; but before we separated he gave it up that he was wrong; then I sold him the Voice of Warning. There are a great many people here that believe our preaching, and some of them say they are going to read the Book of Mormon, and if it does not teach polygamy that they will join. Bro. Thompson can do more good here than any other elder that has ever preached in this vicinity; the people have confidence in him. I have been called on to marry a couple of freedmen next Thursday, and then in a few days to baptize them. I believe that when I baptize them, there will several be baptized. I hope that I shall soon be able to report a branch organized here. I ask the Saints to help me to pray for it.

Your brother in the gospel of Christ,

HENRY GRIM.

No. 86 Brunswick Road, Sparkbrook,

BIRMINGHAM, England,

September 19th, 1885.

To JOSEPH SMITH, President of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, Greeting; Dear Brother.—By the late Annual Conference of the English Mission held at Sheffield, May 23d-25th, 1885, I was instructed to call your attention to the fact that, no mention is made of this mission, so far as reported in the Herald, in the minutes of the late Annual Conference of the church in America, and to ask if you will be kind enough to explain why it was not.

The fact was strongly commented upon at our conference. Some of the brethren were inclined to take it as a slight to the mission. I was also instructed to assure you of our unbounded confidence in Bro. Thomas Taylor as a fit and proper person to preside over this mission.

It is now eleven years since he was appointed to take charge of this mission; and year by year it has prospered and progressed under his care, while the good will and respect of the Saints comprising the mission has increased towards him. We believe the Lord has blessed him in his calling, and therefore feel most keenly anything approaching slight on his services. No doubt you will be able to throw such light on the matter as will dispel our fears.

The work in this country is onward, with very fair prospects of progress being made during the present year. Your mission to Utah is regarded by all here as a step in the right direction, and we look for good results. We pray for you to that end. We had an excellent time at our mission conference. We are looking forward to the time when you will pay us a visit. I assure you of a hearty welcome, and feel sure that good would result to the church therefrom. May God bless you in the office and calling in which we sustain you by our faith and prayers.

Believe me your brother and fellow-servant in the cause of truth, awaiting your reply.

C. H. CATON, E. M. S.

We regret exceedingly that the English Mission, referred to in Bro. Caton's letter was omitted from the action of conference last Spring. We had not been aware that it was overlooked until Bro. Eaton called our attention to it, and assure Bro. Thomas Taylor, and the brethren of the committee, represented by Bro. Caton, and through them the Saints, that such omission was entirely unintentional and without intention to slight either the mission, or Bro. Taylor. For our part in the negligence by which such omission occurred we crave pardon. In regard to the conduct of the mission by Bro. Taylor we have had and still have the utmost confidence.

JOSEPH SMITH,
W. W. BLAIR.

February 18th, 1886.

CUBA, Kansas, Feb. 4th.

Editors Herald.—I read the reports of brethren and their labors at home and abroad, and am pleased to realize that there are so many earnest workers in the field doing all they can to spread the truth and build up Zion's cause; and when I read the expressed loneliness of those who are far away from the assemblies of the brotherhood of like faith, I yearn to witness the ushering in of that auspicious day when the land shall be redeemed, the temple reared, the stakes set, the curtains drawn, the quorums filled with tried and approved servants, chosen by the Master, and the school established, from which the watchmen may be selected and stationed upon the walls, seeing "eye to eye." The "hunters and fishers" are doing their work—in part—among the Gentiles. But many, like the seeds from the mustard stalk shaken by the mighty winds, scattered along the byways, lanes and stony places, are crying out for nourishment and the comforting influences of gospel truth, while Israel and Ephraim are still in the mountains and barren places of the earth. But while we desire and pray for this desirable result, we must work, and wait in patience the due time of Him who doeth all things well. As one of the laborers I am conscious that I have done all I could, giving much of my time and using every facility within my reach for the dissemination of the word; and while I am thankful for what I have been enabled to do, I am not ignorant of my own weak frailties, nor free from the influences that are wont to rise up, like lions in the way, to hinder and discourage.

When I last wrote to the Herald I stated that I had been called to defend the "conscious rest of the spirit between death and the resurrection," by a Rev. Wilkins; but as I have not heard anything more of it I presume the objection has been abandoned. Since then I received a card from a free thinker, asking if I would meet Mr. J. E. Rensburg in debate on the differences between free thought, (infidelity) and christianity, but neither question nor time of discussion was proposed. I made a conditional assent, and appointed Gomer T. Davies, Editor of Republic City News, to represent me in perfecting arrangements. In due time I received a communication which contained: 1st, Resolved that the Bible is of human origin, and abounds with errors. 2d, Resolved that the Christ of theology is a myth, and the four gospels which purport to give a record of his life and teachings are unworthy of credit."

The first proposition being too indefinite for critical investigation I could not accept without placing myself in a false and ridiculous position; because I believed the mechanical formation of the work, and the historical parts, to have been through the agency of human handiwork and intelligence, through which many errors have been interlarded throughout the work. In the second proposition are exceptions equally potent, for if the standard of defence were modern theology, I apprehend some difficulty in identifying the Son as the veritable Father; and doubt the possibility of nailing a personal, organic structure "without body or parts" to the cross, to be left to suffer the agonies of an ignominious death, and yet be devoid of "passion." In view of these considerations I amended, and in the absence of any proposed time, suggested January 15th, 1886, as a suitable time, and forwarded as follows: 1st, Resolved that the accepted version of the English Bible is wholly of human origin and abounds in errors. 2d, Resolved that the four gospels, viz: Matthew, Mark, Luke and John, of the New Testament, are unworthy of confidence or credit; and the Christ whose life and teachings are therein recorded is a myth." Rensburg to affirm Bennett to deny, except in last clause of first proposition which is partly conceded. This seems to have cooked their goose, as I have heard no more of it.

A "Rev." gentleman(?) of the Alexander Campbell order, took it upon himself to call me "a lying hypocrite" from the stand at the close of one of my meetings, because I had said that I was not employed by, nor in any way affiliated with the followers of Brigham Young. He declared that I was employed by the Utah Church and received a salary promptly paid each month, that when I declared otherwise I knew that I was lying, and wound up with a challenge to meet his representative in debate as he intended to prove that Mormonism was a fraud of the blackest dye from the "Kirtland Bank swindle" to the "Mountain Meadow massacre." I gave him my hand in presence of the audience, as a pledge that I should be there on September 19th, to meet any objection that he might offer against the doctrines held and advocated by the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ, or Joseph Smith and his associates as founders of the work. Agreeable to promise I was on hand, only to discover that my valiant denouncer had hastily joined a band of hunters and skipped to the mountains on the double quick, just prior to my arrival; but not until he had been notified that a second outburst of temper against an unoffending stranger or citizen would not be tolerated. I still am waiting his return.

At another place, same county, Thayer, Nebraska, after speaking a few times, the resident pastor objected to his flock accepting nourishment from strangers. The people were divided, part denying our right of occupancy; others favored a lock-out, while some declared in favor of universal toleration toward all men. The controversy waxed warm and the dear Christian brethren withdrew from the counsel firm in the conviction that "eggs" would be an excellent remedy. This of course was frowned down by cooler judgment, and we were not molested.

The minister healed the breach with the balm of a protracted meeting, and I left them to their fate. I visited Wilber, Nebraska, where I met the brethren with R. M. Elvin, who was doing a grand work in that hotbed of opposition. I spent two days pleasantly with the brotherhood and rejoiced with them at the prospects of prevailing truth, speaking twice for them. While there I enjoyed a pleasant chat with Mr. Luse, of Braden-Kelley Debate notoriety, and was pleased to see that he manifested only a kindly feeling toward the Saints. But I felt somewhat grieved to realize that like all others who had lent aid and sympathy in an endeavor to overturn the truth, he was slowly but surely on the down grade of social life and prosperity. God grant that he may not sink below the level of redemption.

I visited brethren Stephen Butler, T. J. Smith and others near Odell, where I spoke several times. Bro. Smith leaves them in the spring for western Nebraska.

Several times I worked the entire night, and twice left home without breakfast to meet my appointments. I have faced all kinds of weather, and traveled all hours of the night in the discharge of duty, in spreading the work or attending on the sick. I do not mention this by way of boast, but to signify my willingness to serve the Master and my brethren. In 1870, while contemplating a visit through western Illinois and Iowa, I asked Bro. Joseph if he thought such a tour in the ministry would "pay." He answered, "If pay was a financial consideration, it would be a failure; but if the good of the cause was the desideratum, good results might be expected." Sixteen years' observation and experience have proved this remark to have been a truism. I love the work and devote all the time to it that I can; but as it is not a source of ducats, I can only recuperate my wardrobe by other means, which other means being rather unprolific, I have not been able to provide comfortable, much less respectable apparel proportioned to the season, and the dignity of the church—therefore compelled to lay up for repairs.

I have been at considerable expense in starting and operating the "Cuban," which being devoted to temperance, social reform, and the advocacy of established law, has not built as large a pyramid of friends around me, as if I had drifted neutrally on the tide of popular opinion, consequently my list shows a large number of persons who have received the paper from the beginning (and some of them are brethren) but have not advanced a penny toward its support. But there are some worthy exceptions even to this rule. To such I say the Cuban has not failed, neither will it fail; it may be retarded for want of financial means occasionally, but success is the objective point of determination. Hitherto it has been, indirectly a means of reaching several fields of labor which otherwise had been a failure.

I see by the report of last session of the Northwest District Conference, convened at Blue Rapids, that I am represented or representing that my labors were outside the district "past, present, and future," and that I had been "blessed there." And the church is further informed that my report was censured by vote, as being "reprehensible." This is not the first time my brethren have seen fit to censure me. My reports have been oftentimes objected to, because they were too long, or too short, too concise, or not concise enough. No one, during my residence in the district, has labored more earnestly for the spread of the truth, nor contended more earnestly for observance of the law of the gospel than I have done, and am still willing to do. I have traveled thousands of miles within the district, in storm and calm; in the darkness and in light, oft sleeping on the open prairie as well as on the most comfortable beds. I have never asked, nor received one nickle in cash or value from the district treasury; but furnished my own conveyance and paid my own expenses,—depending on the good will of those among whom I labored for the rest. My brethren did not censure for this? No, but my report was "reprehensible." Why? Inferentially, because it said my "labors past, present and future are done outside the limits of this district, with plenty of calls for preaching, and my labors blest." Surely, brethren, you did not mean to censure those who asked for the bread of life; nor God, who bestows the blessing on his ministry for duty performed. Yet they are all rehearsed as they report, and unexceptionally voted "reprehensible." Surely the brethren would not think to reprimand me for laboring outside the district, if the spirit so directed, since the May term ordered that "J. D. Bennett and the Elders be requested to labor as the Spirit may direct;" (although the secretary failed to give this order in full to the Herald); and the brethren arranged for me to visit and labor in Nebraska, which is outside of the district, and having complied with this arrangement it become a part of my report. Add to this the injunction of my office to "labor as circumstances and opportunity may offer," I am at a loss to appreciate the wisdom or justice in passing a vote of censure on my report without assigning a reason therefor. Brethren, let us "live together in love," not seeking "occasion one against another;" each learning his duty and magnifying the office whereunto God hath called him, and avoid the penalties and examples recorded in Covenants, page 192, paragraphs 2, 3; perfecting the law of the Lord in ourselves, as per Covenants, page 136, paragraphs 5 and 6.

While I desire the fellowship and approbation of my brethren, I esteem it my duty to meditate upon, and keep the law God hath given.

Respectfully,

JOHN D. BENNETT.

KALO, Iowa, Feb. 16th.

Bro. Blair.—Thanks be to God for the health and strength which I now enjoy. A revival meeting is going on here among the Methodists and Congregationalists. My mother is a member of the latter. She tries to go every night, and sometimes I have to drive her there. When I do there are about ten of the members gather around and talk to me. Of course I defend "the doctrine" to the best of my ability, and get called all the hard names they can use. One young man said all Mormons were murderers, liars, thieves, swindlers, and all that is bad. Another, a middle aged man, called me a fanatic. Some say one thing and some another, but the most of them keep away from me, and say I am not worth talking to. Oh how my heart goes out for them! But, thanks be to God, what I have wished for is coming around; for my mother is beginning to see matters a little more clearly than she did. She says,—“If that is what you call christianity, I don't want any more of it.” And to me she said, “Ah! my boy, I must say you have behaved yourself more like a Christian than any other man in Kalo. To think that they would despise one of my boys just because he believes a little different from what they do!”

I have long wanted my mother and brothers to be as I am; and they are coming; thank God. As for myself, I am determined to show the people in Kalo who are the true followers of Christ, and who are not. May God open their eyes to see the light as it is in Christ.

If any Elder comes this way let me know, as one is wanted in Lehigh.

Saints, pray for me. Yours in Christ,

JOSEPH KNOX.

No. 6 North Second St.,

PRITTSFIELD, Mass., Feb. 16th.

Dear Herald.—Doubtless many of your readers would be pleased to learn of my whereabouts, as they have requested me to write them individually, but not having means wherewith to comply with their desires, I take this opportunity of reaching them. When I wrote last I was at Greenville, Pa. From thence I went to Wheeling, W. Va., found the little band of Saints there endeavoring to do their Master's will, yet there is ample room for improvement. While there I resigned the presidency of the branch, Bro. R. S. Salyards succeeding me. The said brother is being greatly favored of the Lord, and is much beloved by Saints and friends, and if faithful and prayerful will become an efficient laborer for the Master. I called next on the Saints of the Belmont Branch, O., who had been in a dormant condition for about two years; but while there we were enabled by the aid of the Spirit to affect a reconciliation between offended parties. We sincerely trust that the persons in question will strive to adorn themselves with the mantle of charity, which will enable them in the future to escape the sad experiences of the past. Our aged brother and sister Sheldon, whose hospitality has been shared by the Saints, and especially the ministry, are on the declining side of life, and it will not be many years before they, too, shall have passed the way of all the earth, and be permitted to enter upon their eternal rest. On the 2d of January, 1886, I arrived in Glen Easton, W. Va., where I remained until the 5th, and in the meantime enjoyed myself with the Saints, and felt much blest in administering the word to them. On the 12th, in company with Bro. D. M. Strachan I arrived at Washingtonville, Ohio, where we remained for some time, preaching and performing other ministerial labors. Prejudice was at its height when it was announced that a Latter Day Saint Elder was to preach; and notwithstanding all that was said and done by the enemy, a large audience greeted us; and he of whom the poet has said "Will never—no never, no never forsake!" was present by his Spirit to bless the word declared. Bro. Strachan had previously baptized three in this place. While there I had the pleasure of baptizing thirteen more, whom with four Saints who came from other places, we organized a branch of twenty members; we are of the opinion that others will unite in the future. On my way from here to Pittsburg, I called at Youngstown, Ohio. Bro. Wm. Harris accompanied me from there to Sharon, Pa., where we met with some "old time" Saints, who were much pleased to see us, two of whom Bro. John Baldwin and wife, attended the Pittsburg conference, and they were baptized during the conference by the writer, with four of Bro. Wm. Garrett's family.

The Pittsburg conference, which convened on the 30th, was a success in every particular, and I think much good will result to the district from it. Brn. W. H. Kelley and M. H. Forscutt were in attendance, and both did excellent preaching, which was very interesting and edifying. There were never brighter prospects for the church in Pa., W. Va., and Ohio—in fact through all the Eastern States, than now. Wide and effectual doors are being thrown open for the preaching of the gospel. Invitations both from Saints and friends are becoming so numerous that it is impossible to comply with all. The fact is, we need more of the ministry in the east to help roll on the grand work. Now is the time to "strike when the iron is hot," i. e., while prejudice is abating, and the masses are moved upon by the Spirit of God, to go in quest of truth. We feel that the time has come when we should pray with fervency for the Lord to send more laborers into his great vineyard. I expect to labor some here, and to assist Bro. W. H. Kelley in New York state before April conference.

Yours in the one faith,
G. T. GRIFFITHS.

ALBION, Idaho, Feb. 14th.

Dear Herald:—Though your readers are scattered far and wide, your food is sweet to all. Herald of truth, most welcome to our homes, how Saints can do without your precious words I fail to see. Harbinger of peace, breathe forth your love to every Saint indeed. We all need the bread of life; buy the truth and sell it not. Golden age is this to us. How can too much be done to usher in the reign of peace. Do we really wish to have thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven? Can we not cease from sin? Can we bow humbly to the whole counsel of the Prince of Peace? These are thoughts which must present themselves to every one who covenants with God. Wide differences in thought have exhibited themselves through our beloved Herald. We wish this were not the case, yet suppose so long as there exists both young and old in the fold, and in the life in Christ, so long will this be the case. While I favor T. W. Smith's concise logic of entire obedience to every word of God, to all the wisdom of God, yet we do not know all the hindering causes to which each other are subject. But it seems evident that what is left to our individual agency to decide, should be quickly, and lovingly yielded in favor of the law. No good can result to us by caviling with law, and especially is this true of that which we have covenanted to accept and obey. Every heart should respond, in one acclaim, Father, thy will, not mine will be done! Do we receive all the things of God? Oh, Saints of latter days! are we the "remnant" whom the Lord our God hath called? Do we "treat lightly the things" we have received? Paul feared exceedingly lest, after having preached the gospel to others, he himself should be "a castaway." Are we safe in diluting the holy word of God? While I accept the action of General Conference in not assuming the office work of the Spirit, as true wisdom, none are thereby excused in the least degree. God accepts no offering, or obedience which is not the free-will offering of a loving earnest heart. He that hath the hope of eternal life abiding in him, purifieth himself as God is pure, and we are not crowned except we strive lawfully. When will we learn what manner of men we should be? Holy in all manner of conversation! Who does not tremble to-day lest he fail of his reward? The pure in heart shall gather. How shall a young man cleanse his ways, but by taking heed thereto according to His word, the holy will of God? Let us be wise to-day.

Yours in hope,
C. S. ALBERTSON.

OLIVET, Iowa, Feb. 15th.

Bro. Joseph: By letters from Sr. S. E. Laughlin to Bro. J. W. Dumbauld of Rhodes, asking that an Elder be sent, we were called from Davenport to administer to Sr. Corda, who had been ill some two weeks. Among the items of the letter, was this: "We have no choice of men—whichever is most convenient." The sentiment was pleasant to us, and we believe approved by heaven. We have been preferred when God did not acknowledge it, we believe. We have also been called upon when made to feel it was so only because inevitable. Either of these saddened the heart, and the afflicted were left to bear the misfortune of their mistake. That there are times and places for preferences we fully believe; but many more are made than warranted in fact—to that we object. We give one to illustrate the principle in all demands for ministerial work and administration. During the stay in our field of that excellent laborer, W. T. Bozarth, tidings came that he was needed at a certain point—no one else would do—and much to be lost if he failed. The weeks sped on; our brother went home, and things must have spoiled!

Sr. Laughlin and family have dwelt alone, but not without faith. Neighbors and relatives counseled them to get a physician; but the afflicted sister Corda said "we preach faith in God, and will practice it." At our departure, the funds we had used were replaced, for which we think God was pleased, as the church treasury was aided. Many who would pay a doctor, are thoughtless when God's favor is sought. We left the sister improving.

On Sunday, February 7th, a party of ten—Clows, Dungees, Johnsons, and the writer—went from Davenport by D. W. Clow's sleigh, to Buffalo, to attend to the baptism of Sr. Nettie Clow and Bro. John B. Johnson. We had telephoned the Buffalo folks, and all things were ready. The baptism and confirmation afforded true pleasure to all the Saints, as expressed by them, and they entertained the Davenport and Rock Island delegation royally. Nettie had been somewhat skeptical, and her surroundings unfortunate. December 22d, when leaving that pleasant home, we bade her accept the work, and when going away on the train we were prompted to return, which we did on February 7th. We had reasoned with and prayed for our sister, and on the night of the 5th, a messenger came to her with "halo overhead," and told her that the Saints' was the true church—which ended the conflict.

Bro. J. B. Johnson thought he had several good reasons why he should not accept the work, but they waned till all were gone. Kewanee Saints will remember him with pleasure, and can now say "brother," instead of brother-in-law. We are glad to receive these two excellent people.

We visited that old veteran, William Harson, and were cheered by his interesting rehearsals; visited Mr. and Sr. Suman of Moline, Illinois; secured Mrs. Wetzel as a subscriber for Sandhedens Banner, and sowed some seed socially, as we could not have places for speaking, in either Davenport, Rock Island, or Moline.

Still toiling on in bonds,
R. ETZENHOUSER.

FANNING, Kan., Feb. 16th.

Dear Herald:—In justice to our friends we desire through the Herald to make mention of and acknowledge the kindness, and noble efforts of a Mr. Samuel Herrin, a gentleman of more than ordinary ability, who has with love for the truth, risked the criticisms of the opposition element, a man known in journalistic circles as Drumhiller, a correspondent of the Weekly Kansas Chief. We take this method of returning our thanks to the worthy.

Yours in the One Faith,
CLARENCE STCLAIR.

BENEFITS OF THE FALL OF MAN.

A PRIME feature of this remarkable dispensation has been the "confounding of false doctrines" which have blinded the minds of many who sought so know the truth. The Jewish record, prophetically called the "Stick of Judah," has been supplemented by the Book of Mormon, (Stick of Joseph), and the Doctrine and Covenants; the latter embracing many important revelations given to the church through the presidency, all of which are in harmony with and confirmatory and explanatory of the former sacred volumes.

Modern divines—some of them, but not all—have made claims for the Bible that are unwarranted in fact, and unauthorized by the tenor of its own teaching, and which when put to the test will necessitate a recantation on their part. Blatantly they have said: "A Bible, a Bible, we have got a Bible, and don't want any more Bible;" ostentatiously claiming personal profundity in ecclesiastical jurisprudence, dispensing fine-spun theories, captivating some, deluding others, and disgusting not a few. With proper deference for the good some have done, and sincere regret for the mischief others have wrought, I am led to remember and endorse a statement made by by Bro. R. J. Anthony, at Eagle Creek Chapel, Tennessee, to this effect: "There is a great deal of preaching done in the world, and but precious little gospel taught."

The Scriptures represent that "God so loved the world (mankind) that he gave his Only Begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him might not perish but have everlasting life." Yet how many teachers there are who have been and are now regarded as profound exponents of the divine economy who have blindly taught that the wrath of God, incurred by the transgression of our foreparents, was visited upon the head of Jesus of Nazareth; that God's anger was appeased by the cruel buffetings of his Son! Not only does such a view do violence to the written word, but the finer sensibilities and reasonable judgment of men are insulted by such a dogma. The complicated sorrow, misery and woe of a benighted world have been charged as being the result of the willful, malicious and intensely wicked refraction of the first human creation, Adam and Eve. Just how much or how little (if any) blame attaches to this celebrated pair, remains not for me to say—the sequel will show.

I believe the fall of man was a contemplated feature in the design of God. To cite passages of Holy Writ in support of the fact that, in the economy of God, Christ was the foreordained Redeemer and Mediator for fallen man, would be superfluous. Why a foreordained Redeemer, if the fall was an after consideration or casualty? It is impossible to attribute the serious consequences incurred by the fall to either mistake or lack of foresight. Foreordination and foreknowledge are not necessarily synonymous; but the fall being foreknown and a Redeemer foreordained and provided, in a sense at least, design, the design of God, is exhibited. The matter resolves itself into the ponderous question (and who can answer?) "Why did Adam fall?" Let bigotry stand abashed and prejudice hide his ungainly head, and let all men acknowledge their individual weakness and the possibility of their mistake, and remember that there is but one standard in cases of religious controversy—the revealed will of God. It can not be justly urged at this juncture that we are delving into mysteries, nor seeking to divulge the "secret things" which "belong to the Lord," for "the things that are revealed belong to us and to our children forever."—Deut. 29: 29. Let us record the answer to the foregoing interrogation given in the following words of inspiration: "Adam fell that men might be; and men are that they might have joy."—2 Nephi 1: 8. Now then, who was the originator of the design? Adam, who knew no evil? or God, who knew all things? To conclude that the magnanimity of Adam prompted him to the deed, in opposition to the will or design of God, places the Creator and the creature in adverse relation to that usually accredited them. I prefer to think that it was God's design and purpose that men, acting upon the agency given them, should "taste the bitter," that they might know how to appreciate the sweets of life, and all its enjoyments. Why should our temporary suspension in a probationary condition be a matter of regret or repining? In the light of Scripture and gospel truth, it is the necessary education, fitting the faithful for the joys of eternity.

Associated with the last quotation, which furnishes an answer to one of the great problems of life,—"Adam fell that man might be," is the following; "And men are that they might have joy." Two facts, then, are made prominent here. The posterity of Adam follow in their generations as a result of the fall; and, second, their earthly existence is brought about or effected "that they might have joy!" The aged Lehi, who had walked with God for many years, and who was the founder of a great colony on "Joseph's land," a descendant of the royal family of Abraham and a chosen vessel of the Lord, makes these concise, definite, and pointed statements in his farewell address to his "first born in the wilderness." The inspired poet pens his verse thus:

"Book of Mormon, hid for ages
On Cumorah's lonely hill;
Written by those ancient sages,
Whom Jehovah taught his will.
Glad we hail it,
Fulness of the gospel still."

Allow me to quote the language of Paul, (Rom. 8: 18-21 Inspired Translation), touching the question now pending: "For I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be named with the glory which shall be revealed in us. For the earnest expectation of the creature waiteth for the manifestation of the sons of God. For the creature was made subject to tribulation, not willingly, but by reason of him who hath subjected it in hope; because the creature itself also shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God."

Note the following points: first, our present probationary condition is one of trial and frequent suffering, while the future, reflected in the gospel, is to the faithful, one of glory and happiness, with which the sufferings of this life are not worthy to be compared. Second; our condition is one of suspense—"waiting for the manifestation of the sons of God;" which means evidently a glorious resurrection. Third, humanity is subjected to these present trying conditions, not willingly, but are subjected, doubtless for a wise purpose, "in hope."

Joseph Smith did not enunciate a new theory, nor preach another gospel when he presented in connection with other important facts the following: "And it must needs be that the devil should tempt the children of men, or they could not be agents unto themselves; for if they never should have bitter they could not know the sweet."—Doc. and Cov. 28: 10.

What! temptation a necessary factor in the development of the soul? Yes. James pronounces his benediction upon the faithful thus: "blessed is the man that resisteth temptation; for when he is tried he shall receive the crown of life, which the Lord hath promised to them that love him." Yet he exonerates the Father of lights from being in any sense the instigator of temptation: "Let no man say when he is tempted, I am tempted of God; for God can not be tempted with evil, neither tempteth he any man. But every man is tempted when he is drawn away of his own lust and enticed."—James 1: 12-14. Did you ever think of it? A little child never knows that fire will burn until this faculty or consciousness is awakened by actual contact with the element of heat. It is our duty to teach them this and many other things, but their understanding of many precepts is reached only by experience. The moral condition of an infant is that of negative simplicity. It does no voluntary good, "because it knows no evil."

Such I believe was the moral condition of Adam and Eve in the bowers of Eden before the fall. Read Book of Mormon, pages 58, 59, 60, from which the preceding and succeeding extracts have been taken. To be brief I epitomise thus: All things must have an opposite; otherwise there could be no development of either good or evil, but would remain "a compound in one, having no life, corruption or incorruption, happiness nor misery,"—hence, worthless, exhibiting no purpose in its creation. These opposites were first presented to man in the form of the tree of life and the forbidden fruit, (the one being sweet, the other bitter), he being allowed, upon his agency, to act and choose for himself rather than to be acted upon, so that he became responsible according to the degree of knowledge he possessed, and also that his faith might be meritorious. It follows that, the gospel being taught, if men are not redeemed and made glad and free by its power, their inestimable loss is the result of personal choice and unbelief.

God created the earth to be inhabited; nevertheless, had it not been for the fall, Adam and Eve would have had no posterity. You and I, dear reader, would have had no earthly existence. That solitary couple would have remained eternally in a negative state or condition, "having no joy, for they knew no misery; doing no good, for they knew no evil." Adam tasted the bitter cup, felt the wretchedness of his lost and fallen condition, heard and obeyed the gospel, and gives expression to the glad refrain, "Blessed be the name of God, for because of my transgression my eyes are opened, and in this life I shall have joy, and again in the flesh I shall see God." O what a luster is here given to the words of Lehi with reference to the subject under consideration: "Behold, all things have been done in the wisdom of Him who knoweth all thing."

Mother Eve also, moved upon by the divine consciousness of her improved condition, and inspired with the Holy Spirit of adoption, joins her husband in the praise of God, saying: "Were it not for our transgression we never should have had seed, and never should have known good and evil, and the joy of our redemption, and the eternal life which God giveth to all the obedient."—I. T., Gen. 4: 11. Talk about christian experience, and bearing testimony! In my humble opinion the experience and testimony of these two who had cast their lot on the Lord's side, "is unexcelled, if not unequalled. The observer will notice that both of them thank the Lord for the events that had served to "open their eyes," enabling them to know "Good and evil," without which they could not have appreciated the "joy of their redemption."

In conclusion, I wish to say that, by what our illustrious parents learned by choice, or a blunder of ignorance as you may chose to think, we gain by our involuntary "subjection to tribulation," which condition and our imperfect nature were transmitted through the generations of Adam as a result of the fall. And if we shall be so fortunate and happy as to "come out of great tribulation" to inherit the moral atmosphere of God's presence, we shall be the better prepared for that celestial abode. Further; if Adam, who by reason of his faithfulness upon the discovery of his fallen condition, and the mercy offered through the Holy Messiah, has been exalted to the position of "Michael the archangel, the Ancient of Days," why should we repine or think our lot is hard? If we follow the example of "the Ancient of Days" and his worthy consort by obedience to the everlasting unchangeable gospel, why should we not be enabled to re-echo their sentiments of praise to the Most High for the development of his marvelous purposes in us and all mankind? And now, in this seventh and last dispensation the authoritative cry is made: "Behold, the Bridegroom cometh; prepare ye, O prepare ye for the wondrous events of the last time! Arise, O Zion, and put on thy beautiful garments. Gird thee about with the righteousness of God, and clothe thee with the spotless habilaments of truth. For soon He that cometh will come and will not tarry; and who shall abide his coming?"

As one among many, who have obtained mercy, I bear my humble testimony to the divinity of the latter day work, and I would that all men might give place in their souls for the loving favor of God. For I know he is merciful to all those who call upon him in sincerity and truth. We are but men and our efforts are feeble; but God knoweth the hearts of all men, and will meet out justice to every soul, mercy to the merciful, and retribution to the unjust. It is vain for men to excuse themselves on account of the weakness of their fellow-men. Those who will come, may come; and none need hinder them. Every soul that is willing to forsake evil and deny themselves of all unrighteousness, going to God with a pure desire to know the truth, will receive wisdom and be led in the path of life eternal.

WE offer below a criticism upon the article "Use good language."—Next.

USE GOOD LANGUAGE

IS THE advice given in an article in the editorial of a late number of the Herald, with a criticism, and then advice to "begin at home." I am in full sympathy with the sentiment and therefore offer criticism upon the language of said article.

The words objected to are underlined. "The present usages of good speaking and good writing require that where any one proposes to use the noun one, man, fellow, or any other in the singular number to be followed by references in the use of representative pronouns, either in the possessive or objective case, those pronouns should be in the singular number. To illustrate: — should not be written or spoken in that way; it should be: any one writing to the Herald Office should give his name, his post office address, the county and state where he lives."

"usages" is plural, while the word present (denoting tense) will require it singular, "good" is a repetition of the same adjective, and should be omitted, as it is understood "any" and "one" are adjectives, (not nouns) "proposes" does not always do a thing. All pronouns are "representative," "his—see "good" post-office address—means the P. O., county, and state, and written in this way is a repetition, or else the words Co. and state become a repetition "where he lives" is an unwise use of printer's ink. Our version: Any person writing to the Herald Office, should give his name, post-office, county, and state.

WONDERS OF ASTRONOMY.

BY ELDER F. R. TUBB, LONDON, ENG.

CHAP. III.—THE DURATION OF COMETS' VISIBILITY.

THE duration of a comet's visibility varies from a few days to more than a year, but it most usually happens that it does not exceed two or three months. Much depends on the apparent distance of a comet in reference to the sun's place; on its distance from the earth; and particularly on its intrinsic brightness, or rather, we should say, on its capability of reflecting the sun's rays. Some of these bodies have been observed at a far greater distance from the earth and sun than others. The remarkable comet of 1729 never approached nearer to the sun than four times the earth's mean distance from that luminary,* yet it was seen without any great optical aid for nearly six months (or about one hundred and eighty-one days). The comet discovered by Colla, in May, 1847, was also followed by observers till its distance from the earth was three and a quarter times the distance of our globe from the sun;† and another found in the same year by Mauvais was visible in the large telescopes at several observatories in this country, till it had receded to nearly three times that distance.‡ In both these bodies, the comet's distance from the sun was equally great. Many of these bodies, on the contrary, fade away even in the most powerful instruments we possess, before they have attained a distance anything like equal to the diameter of the earth's orbit.

It would appear that out of the many hundred comets recorded in history, only six have been observed so long as eight months, and these six instances have all occurred during the present century. Amongst those comets which have continued longest in sight of the earth, I may mention the following.

Anno Domini.	Duration of Visibility.
60 (in China) . . . . .	135 days
64 (according to Seneca) . . . . .	180 days or more
247 (in China) . . . . .	156 days
1729 . . . . .	171 "
1773 . . . . .	184 "
1807 . . . . .	188 "
1811 . . . . .	510 "
1815 . . . . .	172 "
1825 . . . . .	358 "
1835 . . . . .	286 "
1844 (Mauvais' comet) . . . . .	246 "
1847 (Colla's comet) . . . . .	240 "
1847 (Mauvais' comet) . . . . .	285 "

The first three comets in the above list were of course observed without the assistance of a telescope; the others have all been followed with optical aid. That of 1835, as your readers now know, was predicted, and therefore discovered much sooner than it is probable it otherwise would have been. In several cases the comets have not remained visible during the whole period, but after disappearing for some days or weeks in the sun's rays, have become conspicuous again on the other side. In these instances, I have given the interval between the earliest and latest observations as sufficient for our present purpose.

There are some few comets which have only been seen once, unfavorable weather precluding further observation. In these cases we can not ascertain any particulars respecting their distances, or real orbits in space.

The lengths of the apparent tracks of comets in the sky, during the time of their visibility, varies greatly, being dependent on the distance of the body from the earth, and on the direction of its real movement, in reference to that of our globe. The comet of 1729, which, as already remarked, was always very remote from us, traversed an arc of only 15° (fifteen degrees) during the six months it continued in view, while that of 1769 passed through an arc of 240° in longitude; and another in 1825, which moved extremely slow at first, (the change of right ascension and declination in ten days being little over two degrees), subsequently quickened its rate of progress, and traversed an arc of 225°!

It is possible that a comet may be so situated in reference to the earth, as to appear to pass through no less than 140° in the space of an hour, or 178° in a day; but the combination of circumstances necessary to produce this enormous change in the apparent positions, has never yet taken place. The real motion of the comet in such an event must be retrograde, or contrary to that of the earth in its orbit, it must be in opposition to the sun, and in perihelion, moving in the plane of the ecliptic, and at a distance from us not exceeding that of the moon.

If a comet be moving in the same direction as the earth,—the distance of the two bodies being small,—its apparent position may scarcely change in the course of the day; and if it be advancing towards the earth, the same, or nearly the same place in the heavens may be preserved for many weeks, as in the case of the comet of 1825, to which we have just made allusion.

* The mean distance of our orb from the sun being 95,000,000 miles, the nearest approach of this comet to our earth was 380,000,000 miles (380 millions of miles).

‡ Nearly 926,250,000 miles (926 millions 250 thousand of miles!)

Thus, the apparent motion of a comet in the heavens is by no means always its real motion; as our earth is also in rapid motion.

THE MAGNITUDE OF COMETS.

We now come to speak of the real dimensions of comets as ascertained satisfactorily by the most eminent meteorologists and astronomers of the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries. When the distance of one of these bodies is known, and we have observed the angular diameter subtended by the nucleus or head, it becomes a very easy matter to ascertain the true diameter in the same way that we find the dimensions of the sun, moon, and planets. The actual length of the tail of a comet may be computed by trigonometry, when we know the distance of the nucleus (or head) from the earth, and its position in respect to the sun; always assuming that the tail is projected from that luminary in a line joining the sun and the head of the comet.

The following are the real diameters in English miles of the nuclei (heads) of some of the more remarkable comets, which have been satisfactorily measured within the last century:

	miles.
The comet of 1815, discovered by Olbers	5,300
The great comet of 1835	5,100
The great comet of March, 1843	5,000
The first comet of 1780	4,270
The first comet of 1847	3,500
The fine comet of July, 1819	3,280
The second comet of 1811	2,640
The comet of 1807	538
The first comet of 1811	428
The second of 1798 (according to Schroter)	125
The comet of 1805 (Biela's)	112
The comet of 1835	974
The comet of 1882	4,391

The comet which was visible to the naked eye in June, 1845, had a bright planetary-looking nucleus, which must have been nearly 8,000 miles in diameter, or about equal to that of the earth! On the 24th of January, 1836, Mr. Machear, at the Cape of Good Hope, saw a well defined disc within the head of the comet of Halley, which, from the apparent diameter assigned, could not have been less than 97,000 miles across; though in the previous autumn the very same comet had exhibited a brilliant kernel, or nucleus, varying on different dates from two hundred and fifty to one thousand miles in diameter. A more striking proof of the variable dimensions of a comet could hardly be adduced. The coma, or atmosphere of light enveloping the head of a comet is generally of enormous diameter and subject to the same variation, as the subjoined results will show.

	Diameter of the Head
The grand comet of 1881	1,125,000	miles
Comet of Halley, 1836	357,000	"
Comet of Enoke, 1838	312,000	"
The first comet of 1780	269,000	"
The first comet of 1846	248,000	"
The comet of Lexell, 1770	204,000	"
The third comet of 1846	130,000	"
The second comet of 1849	51,000	"
The first comet of 1847	25,500	"
The fifth comet of 1847	18,000	"

During the autumn of 1811, or while the splendid comet of that year was visible to the naked eye, the real diameter of the head appears to have differed but little from one million miles; or more than four times the difference that separates the moon from the earth. No other record has surpassed this. In most instances the visible atmosphere of a comet is less than 100,000 miles in diameter, and but very rarely exceeds 200,000. It must be remembered, however, that the nebulosity may extend much further than we can trace it from the earth, and, consequently, that our computations of the true magnitudes are very likely to be considerably below the actual facts of the case.

THE ACTION OF THE SUN ON COMETS.

It has been remarked in a former part of this essay that comets are found to vary greatly at different dates during the period of their visibility. Contrary to what we might have expected, there is no doubt that many of these bodies contract as they approach the sun, and dilate or expand on receding from that luminary. We have the strongest proofs of this in the case of Encke's comet, which is one of short periodic orbit, and has been repeatedly observed, as we shall notice more presently. This comet arrived at its perihelion, (or least distance from the sun), on January 10th, 1829, and the following were its actual dimensions on the various dates of observation during its descent towards our sun.

	1828.	Diameter in miles.	Distance from sun
October 28	312,000	1.46
November 7	257,000	1.32
November 30	119,000	0.97
December 7	79,000	0.85
December	46,000	0.72
December 24	14,000	0.54

The observations of the same comet ten years later furnish another instance. It was at its least distance from the sun on December 19th, 1838, and found to have the following diameters on different days preceding its arrival at perihelion.

	1838.	Diameter in miles.	Distance from sun
October 9	281,000	1.42
October 25	120,500	1.19
November 6	79,000	1.00
November 13	74,000	0.88
November 16	63,000	0.83
November 20	55,500	0.76
November 23	38,500	0.71
November 24	30,000	0.69
December 12	6,600	0.39
December 14	5,400	0.36
December 16	4,250	0.35
December 17	3,000	0.34

(The decimal unit, 1.42, &c. in above and following, also in the preceding table, represents or is based upon the earth's semi axis major taken as a unity).

The nebulosity surrounding the nucleus of the great comet of 1807 expanded as the distance from the sun increased. The measures of the Prussian astronomer Schroter, give the following diameters of the envelope surrounding the head of that comet expressed as before, in English miles.

The comet was nearest to the sun on September 19th

	1807.	Diameter in miles.	Distance from sun
October 20	117,900	0.92
October 21	125,800	0.93
October 22	133,500	0.94
October 23	138,400	0.96
October 25	156,200	0.99
October 31	159,000	1.08
November 3	198,400	1.12

Kepler first remarked this singular contraction and expansion of the nebulosity surrounding the nucleus of a comet as it approaches and recedes from the sun respectively, in the case of the fire comet which appeared in the year 1618.

LENGTH OF COMETS' TAILS.

We now enter upon a most important and interesting phase of our present cursory investigation into the form, nature, and construction of the cometary bodies. The tails of comets in some cases extend only over a few hundred thousand miles from the nucleus, while in others they are projected to the astonishing distance of one hundred, or one hundred and fifty million miles, or even more.

The train of the first comet of 1847 was 5,000,000 miles in length; of the beautiful comet of 1744, 19,000,000; of the comet of 1769, about 40,000,000. The third comet of 1618 had a tail more than 50,000,000 miles in length, when it crossed the plane of the earth's orbit about the 25th of November; and it was subsequently of still greater length. The great comets of 1680 and 1811, had trains considerably more than 100,000,000 miles long; and the second of the latter year was accompanied by a tail 130,000,000 miles in extent. Even these comets, however, were surpassed by the grand one which attracted so much attention in 1843, and which exhibited a brilliant train that on different dates was found to attain the enormous distances of 150, 180 and 200 millions of miles from the head! If such a comet had been seen in the plane of the ecliptic, and close to the sun, the train would have extended far beyond the orbits of the earth and Mars, terminating amongst those of the minor planets. Yet this wonderful appendage was formed in less than three weeks.

POSSIBILITY OF THE EARTH'S COLLISION WITH COMETS.

In the case of bodies like comets, moving in every conceivable direction through the planetary spaces, it can not be denied that there is a possibility of the earth's coming into collision with one of them in lapse of time; but we are able to show from legitimate reasoning, that the chance of such a catastrophe is very small indeed. M. Arago has calculated that the probability against it is greater than 250,000,000 to one. Klinkerfues put it at 250,500,000 to one. We know that the earth has had one or two very narrow escapes within the last two centuries; as in 1680 and 1832, when comets crossed the plane of the ecliptic almost on the part of our globe, though at these times we were fortunately removed many millions of miles from the dangerous part of the orbit. The comet of 1770 has approached nearer to us than any of these bodies whose elements have been sufficiently well determined. On the 1st of July it was distant only 363 terrestrial semi-diameters, or 1,438,000 miles. The great comets of 837, 1402, and 1472, must have come within a very short distance of our globe, and another small one, which was observed by Flaugerques in 1826, seems to have made a close appulse.

Olbers mentions several which have crossed the ecliptic at points not far removed from the annual track of the earth!

The comet of 1684 approached it within 216 terrestrial semi-diameters.

The comet of 1805 approached it within 261 terrestrial semi-diameters.

The comet of 1742 approached it within 331 terrestrial semi-diameters.

The comet of 1770 approached it within 347 terrestrial semi-diameters.

(The term "terrestrial semi-diameters" simply means semi-diameters of the earth. The earth's semi-diameter, or half diameter, is 3961 59-121 miles.)

We have thus far attempted to draw forth the devout and attentive gaze of your many readers to some of the most mysterious of all the celestial bodies.

In drawing this essay to a close, I am deeply conscious of having failed to do justice to so vastly intricate and complicated a subject; but if I have only succeeded in exciting in the minds of at least some of your readers a thirst to know more of this wonderful subject, as evinced by their interest in the few meagre details I have now placed before them, I shall feel more than amply repaid for my trouble in study, research and calculation.

There is a voice that says in stentorian tones to the anxious investigators of science when seeking more light on these mysterious heavenly bodies, "thus far shalt thou go, and no farther."

I am therefore reluctantly compelled to take my leave of your readers without giving them a word of information concerning the abstract material of which comets are composed, or of what is their function and mission in the telestial (or starry) world; but a kind voice whispers in reply to all our anxious questions on this and other great mysteries, "what thou knowest not now, thou shalt know hereafter."—John 13: 7.

CONTENTMENT.

"CONTENTMENT with godliness is great gain." He that is contented is truly rich. Not he who is contented to live in indolence, filth and poverty, but he who makes wise use of every blessing within his rightful grasp, and is contented with the same. Such a person is rich, whether his possessions are great or small. We often meet people who profess godliness, yet are far from being contented. Their surroundings and influences are not pleasant; so in consequence they yield to discontent. They let their desires go out after the pleasures of others and sigh, "O had I such a home, such children, I should be perfectly contented." It is decidedly wrong for one to spend time and strength in reaching after the blessings of others. They should be devoted to the care and development of our own blessings; and we should obtain the jewel so much coveted—contentment. If we will not try to be satisfied with our present blessings, we would not had we those blessings which seem so flattering.

St. Paul said, "I have learned, in whatsoever state I am therewith to be content." O, what a great lesson, and how few have learned it! 'Tis not to be learned in a day, nor by those whose minds are feasted on the pleasures of this life alone; but it is the lesson of years, learned only by those who come up through much tribulation. That is the way brother Paul learned it, and that is the way every Saint must learn it, if he learns it at all.

We meet with those who have great advantages for an education, while our own has been limited, and we do not feel satisfied on that point. But when we consider, we feel that He whom we profess to love knoweth what advantages are best adapted to our individual case. Not to say that an education is not desirable, but that we should not indulge in over anxious desires contrary to His will. It is our duty and privilege however, to make wise use of every available opportunity to add to our little stock of learning. We can profit very much by associating with those whose education is superior to our own, if we carefully learn from them.

We meet many who have better and more abundant earthly goods than we have, and we let this give us uneasiness and discontent; but that is all folly. If our possessions are small, our stewardship is small consequently we have less labor, less anxiety, and more time to occupy and develop the mind. That truly is life's greatest work; and we often find it very well done among the poor and unfortunate. It is well to have riches if they come by honest industry, and the blessing of God; and it may be well if we do not have them—our Master had none.

We may not be satisfied because our talent is less than many others; but if there is little given, there will be but little required. And if we rightly improve the one, we shall meet our Master's approval as well as he who improves his ten. There truly is great gain in possessing contentment with godliness. And as it may be acquired, dear Saints, let us strive for it. It will give us more happiness in this present life, and tend to have a better influence in the world, than the indulgence of discontent. Let us earnestly try in every proper way to make our homes pleasant and attractive, and thereby sow the seed of contentment in the heart of every member of our family. It will not be lost. The Father's blessing will rest upon every good effort, and we like Paul will be able to say: "Contentment with godliness is great gain."

"Of all the riches life may seek or measure;
A contented heart is the greatest treasure."

ALMIRA M. SNOW.

We have received a copy of a new march, by the composer, John Wiegand. The title page bears a fine portrait of the Commander-in-Chief of the G. A. R., to whom it is dedicated. Young musicians and teachers would do well to order a copy at once. Price, 50c.; Simplified, 40c.; Duet, 75c.; Brass and Reed Band, 50c. Mailed on receipt of price. Ign. Fischer, Publisher, Toledo, Ohio.

PROPHETIC TRUTH.

Confirmed in the appearing of the Book of Mormon, an Israelitish Record of a Fallen People; paper covers; five for $1. . . . each 25
Being the Subject of an Evening's Conversation Respecting its Origin. Its Divinity Proved by the Scriptures and Collateral Evidence. Prefaced with a Brief Sketch of the Life of the Prophet, showing the way and manner of his becoming possessed of the Record.

The date accompanying your name on the small colored label on each paper shows the time to which your subscription has been paid. When payments are made the date is changed, which answers for a receipt.

Miscellaneous.

CONFERENCE NOTICES.

The conference of Southern California District will convene at San Bernardino, March 19th, 1886, at 10 a. m. Let all the Saints who desire a blessing attend; and especially let all the officials be there; let every branch make full report, and let all scattered members report or be reported, either in person or by letter. And again, I call upon all the scattered of latter day Israel in this district, whose faith may have been shattered in "the dark and cloudy day," by corrupt practices or false teachings of assuming and designing men, not authorized of God to lead and teach. Oh! come ye, and meet with us; return unto God and he will return unto you. Remember the day when you entered into covenant with God, when he blessed you and filled your souls with joy unalloyed; and remember the loss of this, which you have long felt. Let then the remaining spark be kindled until you are again filled. You can obtain it again and be filled with unparalleled peace as in days of old. Hundreds have returned and are happy. Zion is even now being redeemed. Delay no longer. Frame no excuses that must fail at the bar of God, when each must answer for themselves. That covenant was an eternal truth when you made it, and it is the same to-day. "Return unto me, and I will return unto you, saith the Lord." Let every Saint come praying for an outpouring of the Spirit, that we may enjoy a time long to be remembered by all.

D. S. MILLS, Dist. Pres.

The conference of the Central California district, will meet at Saints' Hall in Hollister, on Friday, 26th of March, 1886, at ten o'clock, to last over Sunday, 28th. Hope all the branches will be well represented. Come all who can, and let us have a glorious time. Come bringing the Good Spirit with you, and success will be ours.

J. H. LAWN, Pres. Dist.

BORN.

KIRKENDALL.—December 15th, 1885, to Bro. Asa L. and Sr. Blanche Kirkendall, a son, named Aaron C; blessed December 20th, 1885, by Elder L. R. Devore.

MARRIED.

ADAMSON—BELL.—At Windsor, California, November 8th, 1885, by Elder J. Price, of Oakland, Isaac Newton Adamson, of Santa Rosa, to Lucinda Bell, of Windsor.

May their lives be long and happy,
As they journey along together,
And when this sphere of life is ended,
May they share a home forever.

DIED.

WILLIAMS.—At Frederick, Monroe county, Iowa, January 5th, 1886, of diphtheria-croup, Jane, daughter and oldest child of Bro. and Sr. Thomas D. Williams, aged 8 years, 6 months and 5 days. She had a good and obedient spirit, and when she knew that she must die she asked her parents not to weep, for she said that she was going to the angel-world. The funeral sermon was preached at Cleveland, Iowa, February 15th, by Elder H. A. Stebbins.

PARKER.—At Independence, Missouri, October 23d, 1885, Capitola Pearl, daughter of Bro. John and Sr. Emma Parker, aged 1 year and 2 months. Same place, October 26th, 1885, Sarepta, daughter of Bro. John and Sr. Emma Parker, aged 2 years and 9 months. Thus the little buds of promise have gone on before us into "the sweet fields of Eden." Funeral services by Elder F. C. Warnky.

MARTIN.—John H. Martin born September 1st, 1858, at Albany, Athens county, Ohio; baptized by Elder T. J. Beatty, August 10th, 1885; died of consumption January 3d, 1886, near Vale's Mills, Vinton county, Ohio.

WILLIAMS.—In Pottawattamie county, Kansas, March 19th, 1884, Sr. Susannah, wife of Elder Charles Williams, formerly of Amboy, Illinois, aged 66 years, 6 months and 24 days.

COTTRILL.—Andrew Cottrill, born January 20th, 1825, at Albany, Meigs county, Ohio; baptized November 30th, 1885, by Elder T. J. Beatty; died January 16th, 1886, near Radcliff, Vinton county, Ohio. Funeral discourse January 18th, 1886, by Elder L. R. Devore.

WILLIAMS.—Sarah Ann, daughter of Robert D. and Ann Williams, born October 10th, 1882; died December 25th, 1885, at Cleveland, Iowa. Blessed by Elder John R. Evans, who also preached the funeral sermon.

ALLEN.—At Cleveland, Iowa, January 17th, 1886, of inflammation of the bowels, Richard T. Allen, son of Bro. and Sr. Thomas R. Allen, aged 24 years, 3 months and 11 days. He was born in Kewanee, Illinois; was baptized at Alton, Illinois, July 14th, 1872, by his father. He left a wife and child. The funeral services were conducted by Elder J. R. Evans.

BASS.—In the town of Beloit, Rock county, Wisconsin, February the 16th, 1886, of consumption, Sr. Elizabeth Bass, aged 40 years, 2 months, and 15 days. Deceased was born December 1st, 1845, in Litchfield, Michigan; was baptized at Montrose, Iowa, September 21st, 1885, by Elder J. Roth. Funeral sermon by F. M. Cooper of Plano, Illinois. Sister Bass was prepared to go. After bidding each member of her family a tender farewell, she welcomed death as a sweet release from all her suffering. She has gone on to inherit the Saints' rest.

CALDERWOOD.—At Sacramento, California, September 22d, 1885, Job Calderwood, son of J. F. and Sr. Sarah T. Calderwood, aged 10 years, 11 months and 8 days. Elders A. H. Smith and E. L. Kelley officiated at the funeral. We greatly miss his smiling face in the Sunday School. He was a great lover of the hymn: "Jesus loves me, this I know." We are sure he has gone to Jesus.

SARAH HUNT.

HALL.—At Crescent City, Iowa, January 27th, 1886, brother Elijah Hall; aged 82 years, 2 months, 28 days. He has been a member of the Reorganized Church 20 years, and died in full faith, with a hope of a glorious resurrection. His Spirit has gone to meet his wife, who was called home some years ago. Funeral services conducted by P. Harding.

HOISINGTON.—At Liberty, Nebraska, January 28th, 1886, of lung complaint and catarrh in the head, Bro. Levi D. Hoisington; his sojourn on earth was 61 years, 11 months and 17 days. He was religiously inclined, and of a quiet, peaceful disposition; was born in Rutland county, Vermont, and accepted of the gospel March 24th, 1875, at Nebraska City. He leaves an aged companion and several grown up children. He was a consistent and devoted disciple of truth. The funeral was in charge of Bro. John Everrett, Sen., the attendance was large. The funeral sermon was preached February 14th, to a crowded house by Elder Robt. M. Elvin, from Alma 8: 10. Our brother passed away as peacefully as a child going to sleep; and may his arising be glorious.

SEARS.—At Elmira, Mitchell county, Kansas, February 18th, 1886, sister Sarah M., daughter of Bro. Abram and Sr. Mary Sears. Born December 4th, 1873; baptized May 22d, 1884, by Elder A. H. Parsons. She was a faithful Saint, taking part in all the prayer meetings. A few hours before death she said she was not afraid to die. Funeral discourse delivered by A. H. Parsons, at the United Brethren Church, to a full house. May we all be as well prepared as she was when the summons comes.

"Dearest sister, thou hast left us,
Here thy loss we deeply feel;
But 'tis God that hath bereft us,
He can all our sorrows heal."

Farewell, dear Sister, as we part to meet again,
In a land where death doth not enter;
In that fair Celestial city
Where our God shall make his home. A. H. P.

TOWNSEND.—At St. Louis, Missouri, January 30th, of diphtheria, Sarah Teresa, aged 6 years, 3 months, and 8 days. February 7th, of diphtheria, Samuel Richard, aged 4 years, 2 months, and 20 days. February 15th, of diphtheria, Henry Eli, aged 7 years 8 months and 11 days. Children of Mr. H. and Sr. L. Townsend.

"Jesus, while our hearts are bleeding,
O'er the spoils that death hath won,
We would at this solemn meeting,
Calmly say,—Thy will be done.
By thy hands the boon was given,
Thou hast taken but thine own;
Lord of earth, and God of heaven,
Evermore,—Thy will be done."

FIRST QUORUM OF PRIESTS.

I would like to have a report of the labors of each member of the Quorum. Tell us what you have done in the past year, and your desires and intention to labor in the future, before the Annual Conference. Please sit down at once, write out your report, and send it to J. B. Gouldsmith, Nebraska City, Nebraska, Pres. of Quorum.

ERRATA.

In the Herald of February 20th, 1886, page 118, my references to Zechariah should be to chapters 11 and 12, not 13 and 14. How I come to make that mistake, affords me some discomfort. That "idol," "foolish shepherd," was what I meant to refer unto; not "idle," but idol. One whom some would make too much of. If that has not yet been done, I am again mistaken. Once I said I was glad to find out my mistakes; but awful sorry and ashamed that I make so many.

Conference Minutes.

ENGLISH MISSION.

The annual conference of the English Mission was held at Sheffield, England, May 23d-25th, 1885. Elder Thomas Taylor, president; and Bro. C. H. Caton, secretary. Conference was called to order in the evening in the Saints' meeting room, Dun Lane, Shales Moor. After the usual preliminaries the president addressed the brethren on the rise and progress of the work in this country, dwelling chiefly upon its continued improvement. Delegates from branches and districts were: Birmingham district, G. S. Greenwood; Manchester district, J. Ramsey; Birmingham branch, C. H. Caton; Stafford branch, J. R. Greenwood. Report of the Birmingham district showed that good work had been done in that district during the year 1884. A new branch had been organized at Nottingham, and there were prospects for an increase in that place. The Saints composing the district are in the main alive in the work of God, and show great earnestness in advancing its principles. The district had suffered somewhat severely during the past through the emigration of some of its most active ministers to America. Besides the general good that is being wrought, there are auxilliary organizations in connection with some of the branches which are doing good. The mite fund in connection with the Stafford and Birmingham (Temple Row) branches, are sending fair sums of money to the Bishop annually. Then the Temple Row branch has its "Dorcas Society," established six years ago, which is still doing good service, by being ever ready to help the poor and sick, and in other ways assisting the branch. There is also a Bible Class which is proving a valuable help to the young brethren.

Report of the Manchester district showed that much valuable work had been done in that part of the vineyard during the year for which the report is submitted. Out of door preaching had been prosecuted considerably, and very good hearings had been accorded the various brethren who had taken part therein. Many had been led to say that, if the Bible is true, we as a people are the true Church of Christ. What the increase will be remains for the future to tell. A branch has been organized in the town of Leeds, where there is every prospect of a good work being done. The district generally is in good condition.

Bro. C. H. Caton, mission secretary, reported his labors in that office for the past year. As recorder of the English Mission he called special attention to the late arrival of annual reports from branches and districts; so late as to render it impossible for him to forward to Bro. Stebbins in time for the Annual Conference of the church in America. For many years he had labored with a view to get the records of the mission to agree with those of the general Church Recorder; but, up to now, without success. He hoped that those whose duty it is, will do their best during the present year to send in full reports of all changes and additions had in the branch.

Bro. Thomas Taylor, Bishop's Agent, presented a balance sheet of receipts and expenses, as sent to the Bishop, and published in the Supplement to Herald. On motion, brethren James Baty and William Shepherd were appointed to audit the same and report thereon to this conference.

Preaching services was held on Sunday forenoon in the new Vestry Hall, West Bar, in charge of the president. Brethren J. R. Greenwood of Stafford, and J. Ramsey of Bolton, addressed the congregation. Fellowship meeting in the afternoon, Bro. Joseph Dewsnup of Manchester, in charge. A good time was had; the Spirit helping the Saints in their devotions. It was certainly a time of refreshing. Preaching in the evening by brethren G. S. Greenwood of Stafford and C. H. Caton of Birmingham, to a large and attentive congregation. The services throughout the day were fairly well attended, and many enquiries were made. The efforts of the speakers were as much instructive to all.

Business session was called to order in the usual manner on Monday morning. The auditors found the agent's accounts quite correct. Report was received and the committee discharged.

Bro. C. H. Caton, on behalf of himself and the president, gave a resume of the year's work on the "Vindicator of Truth," to the following effect: Much time and trouble had been devoted by those having charge of it, in which they had been nobly seconded by some of the brethren. There had not, however, been that amount of energy shown by the brethren in general that we had a right to expect. This is perhaps more so in regard to contributions for its columns. Then the finances showed a balance due to the publishers; and unless, as was at first stated, the whole of each issue were sold, it will be impossible to pay our way at the present price. If thought proper by this conference to continue the publication, it would perhaps be wise to alter the arrangement in which the subject matter is set; and it is suggested that about four columns be set in smaller type. This would increase the cost, but would add to the appearance of the paper, and enable us to put more in.

On motion of brethren G. S. Greenwood and J. R. Greenwood, it was resolved, that the publication of the "Vindicator of Truth" be continued, and that to meet the extra expense, seven pence per dozen be charged for them from the next issue. Carried. One voted against the motion.

The following was offered by brethren C. H. Caton and J. Dewsnup: Whereas, in the opinion of this conference the time has arrived when steps should be taken to make the English Mission self-sustaining; therefore, be it resolved, that a committee of four be appointed to draft a scheme to effect that object, and that they report at this conference. The committee appointed consists of brethren T. Taylor, Joseph Dewsnup, C. H. Caton and Henry Greenwood. Subsequently the committee reported that for want of time they were unable to perform the work assigned them, and asked for more time. On motion of J. Baty and J. D. Davies, the committee were continued and requested to report at next conference.

The following was presented by brethren G. S. Greenwood and C. Tyler: Whereas, in the opinion of this conference, a visit of Bro. Joseph Smith, the president of the church, to this country would be conducive of much good to the work in these lands. Be it resolved, that a fund be opened with the object of providing for the expenses of such visit, and that as soon as practicable Bro. Joseph be invited to pay a visit to this country. That all subscription for this purpose be sent to Bro. T. Taylor, president of the mission.

On motion of brethren J. Dewsnup and J. Baty, the mission secretary was authorized to write to Bro. Joseph Smith to ascertain the reason why no mention was made of the English Mission in sustaining missions at the late Annual Conference of the church held in America, April 6th and following days, 1885.

The spiritual authorities of the church in America, as sustained by the April Conference of 1885, were sustained. Brethren Thomas Taylor and Bro. C. H. Caton were sustained president and secretary of the English Mission. The authorities of the Birmingham and Manchester districts were sustained by vote. On motion, the secretary was ordered to send an abstract of the minutes of this conference to the Saints' Herald, with request that the editor give as full report as possible. A vote of thanks to the Saints and friends of Sheffield for their kindness to visiting brethren was carried by acclamation. On motion, adjourned sine die.

Thus closed a most happy and enjoyable conference; the weak ones were strengthened, and the strong ones made stronger.

LITTLE SIOUX.

Conference of the above district met pursuant to adjournment in the public hall in Logan, Harrison county, Iowa, at eleven o'clock, on Saturday, December 19th, 1885. President of district, J. C. Crabb, in the chair. Prayer by Bro. Jo'n Hawley. Organized by electing Bro. J. C. Crabb, president; and P. Cadwell and C. Derry associate presidents of conference; and Wm. C. Cadwell and J. F. Mintun secretaries. Visiting brethren were invited to take part in the deliberations of conference. W. C. Cadwell and C. Butterworth were appointed a committee on resolutions during conference. Branch Reports.—Spring Creek, 53; 2 added by baptism, 5 children blessed. Magnolia 243; 3 received by vote on certificates of baptism, 3 received by vote on letter, 1 baptized, 1 cut off. Sioux City, 14; 2 baptized, 3 received on certificate of baptism, 1 received by vote on evidence of membership in first organization, 1 marriage. Little Sioux, 200; 1 died, 6 received by letter, 1 marriage. Union Center, 90; 1 expelled. Official Reports.—High Priests: C. Derry, J. C. Crabb and P. Cadwell; J. F. Mintun and John B. Lytle, of the Seventy; Elders: M. P. Berg and W. Chambers (by letter), J. W. Wight, J. Hawley, L. Merchant, E. R. Lanpher, C. Butterworth, H. Garner, W. C. Cadwell, T. Chapman, R. Farmer, and J. M. Putney; Priests: J. Merchant, W. T. Fallon, J. Emmerson, J. C. Johnson, and J. Gunsolly; Teachers: E. A. Townsend and W. R. Davison, reported.

President Crabb gave some wholesome instruction with reference to the ministry. The district presidency acting as a committee appointed by last conference to visit and labor with the Six Mile Grove Branch, reported having performed the work allotted to them, and by desire of the members of said branch had disorganized the same. Bro. C. Derry was by his own request released from any special missionary labor in the district. A motion prevailed to the effect that Bro. Milton Daugherty be placed under the direction of the presidency of the district; and that in similar cases in the future, persons not members of the district who desire to labor in the same, be also required to labor under the direction of the said presidency, unless they shall come properly recommended by the district of which they are members.

The following resolutions were unanimously adopted by a rising vote: Whereas; the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints has from its rise in 1853 taken a decided stand against polygamy, priestcraft, and all other kindred evils; and Whereas, the church at a General Conference held at Plano, Illinois, in the year 1870, did memorialize Congress to take some decided action against the above evils, they being no part of the original faith of the church; and Whereas, from the facts set forth in said memorial, and from the further facts of said evils being a reproach upon the good name of our glorious Republic, Congress did, in the year 1882, adopt what is known as the Edmunds Law, Therefore, be it

Resolved, That we, the Little Sioux District of said church, do hereby endorse the provisions of said law, and heartily approve what has been done by the Federal authorities towards the suppression of said evils; furthermore, we believe that the Saints, everywhere, should encourage in every proper way the complete enforcement of all just laws enacted for the government of the people. We hereby re-affirm our oft repeated expressions of opposition to the withering and soul-destroying curse of priestcraft, as exemplified in the apostate system in Utah, and would hail with pleasure any action looking to a more persistent effort in the direction of bringing the leaders of the Utah apostasy to justice; believing as we do, that they are to a large degree responsible for the abominations practiced there. We would also respectfully suggest, as giving expression to our views on the needs of the present situation in Utah, that a commission should be appointed by the United States government, as suggested in the report of the late Utah Commission to the President, into whose hands should be committed the general charge of the administration of laws there, as being the best and most practical means of solving the difficulties that surround the situation.

Resolved, That we note with sorrow the death, on October 25th, 1885, of our brother, C. E. Cobb; and are reminded that his pleasant countenance and cheering voice will hereafter be forever absent from our earthly councils.

Resolved, that we heartily endorse the tribute paid him over the signature of Bro. C. Derry in the Herald of November 14th, 1885.

Resolved, that we hereby extend to our beloved sister, the widow and children of the departed brother, our sincere expressions of condolence and sympathy in this their hour of bereavement, and recommend in all humility that they look in earnest prayer and full reliance to Him who is the stay and staff of the weak and downcast, as well as the Father of the fatherless, and the Provider for the desolate, for strength and comfort.

W. C. Cadwell, C. E. Butterworth, J. C. Crabb and J. M. Putney, were appointed a committee to visit and decide as to the advisability of organizing a branch at the Willow. David Chambers and Colby Downs were continued in former mission and Lehi Ellison was associated with Colby Downs.

J. M. Putney, J. W. Wight and W. R. Davison, committee appointed to audit Bishop's agent's report, submitted their report, recommending the approval of the same, as follows:—Receipts from July 1st to October 1st, 1885, total receipts $176.25, amount on hand July 1st $87.55, total $263.80; total paid out $110; amount on hand October 1st $153.80.

Preaching on Saturday evening by C. Derry. Sunday morning by J. C. Crabb, in the afternoon by C. E. Butterworth, and in the evening by C. Derry. Adjourned to meet at Magnolia, Iowa, at eleven o'clock, on the second Saturday in March [13th], 1886.

NORTH-EAST MISSOURI.

Conference convened at Bevier, February 6th and 7th, 1886, W. H. Bybee, president; J. T. Williams, secretary pro tem. Report of Branches.—Bevier, 133 members; 2 removed by letter, 1 received by letter, 1 died. J. T. Williams, president. Resolved, that all members of Bevier Branch who are scattered, be so reported at next conference. Hannibal Branch reported, 25 members; 1 received on original baptism, two died, 10 scattered. J. Taylor, president. Renick 33; 7 received by baptism, 3 received by letter. W. H. Vincent, president. Salt River 25; 14 scattered. Robert Thrutchley, president. Elders R. Thrutchley, C. Perry, J. T. Bishop's Agent's report was audited and found correct. On hand last report $3.80, received since $9.00, total $12.80; paid out $20.35; due agent $7.55. Elder W. H. Bybee addressed a large and attentive audience in the evening. On Sunday Bro. Bybee addressed a large audience. In the afternoon held a sacrament and fellowship meeting; a good time was enjoyed, God revealing his will to the joy of the Saints. In the evening Bro. Bybee spoke in power to a large audience who took deep interest in what was spoken. A good time was had through the entire conference; the spirit of peace being with us all the time. Adjourned to meet the first Saturday in May, 1886, at such place as the district president may choose.

CENTRAL MISSOURI.

This conference met with the Wakanda Branch, in the Saints' Chapel, January 15th, at two o'clock. A communication from the Church Recorder was read, and referred to the presidents of the mission and district. Bro. John S. Patterson reported his labors as district president for the past four months, had baptized 1, confirmed 1, assisted to confirm 3 others, blessed 7 children, ordained 1 Elder, and 1 Priest, also organized 1 branch with 14 members. Officials reported—I. L. Rogers; J. C. Foss, had preached 2 sermons at Chicago, 25 at Sandwich, 21 at Plano, 14 at Piper City, 11 at Streator, making 73 in all, had baptized 19, blessed 2 children, solemnized 1 marriage; W. Vickery, had baptized 9, blessed 5 children, solemnized 1 marriage; Odin Jacobs, S. C. Good, Jacob Stanley reported. Priest A. Tarling reported as president of Streator Branch. Moved, that the president of the mission be appointed a committee to investigate and set in order the Sandwich Branch. On motion, a vote of thanks was tendered Bro. John S. Patterson for past services in the district. On motion, Bro. F. M. Cooper was chosen president of the district for the next four months. Brn. I. L. Rogers, J. S. Patterson, J. C. Foss, and W. Vickery, were on motions chosen delegates to General Conference, to be held at Lamoni, Iowa, April 6th, 1886, and they were on motion instructed to cast the vote of the district. W. Vickery was sustained clerk of the district. Preaching Saturday evening by Bro. Thomas Hougas. Sunday morning Bishop G. A. Blakeslee occupied the stand and spoke to the Saints in regard to tithing, and was assisted by Bro. E. Banta. At 2:30 p. m. held fellowship and sacrament meeting, in charge of Bishop G. A. Blakeslee and his Agent, T. Hougas. A very spiritual time was enjoyed by the Saints. The Spirit's presence was felt and testified of by many. At 7 o'clock p. m. a large audience listened to Bro. F. M. Cooper as he presented the word. It was a quiet, peaceful session all through, and all seemed to feel strengthened in the faith. Adjourned to meet at Streator, June 12 and 13th 1886.

MOBILE.

Lamoni, Iowa, March 13, 1886.

THE LOYALTY OF THE SEER.

IN these times when both the Brighamite leaders and the hot-mouthed anti-Mormon agitators are claiming that the present state of affairs between the Utah Mormon Church and the Federal government is the legitimate outcome of the teachings of Joseph Smith the Seer, it becomes essential for all to honestly investigate such claims and see whether they are true or not. It is an easy thing to make assertions, but sometimes it is found very difficult to maintain them by proper evidence.

We undertake to say that in all the writings of Joseph Smith, there is not one sentence that can fairly be construed into favoring these claims; but that on the other hand, all his authentic teachings directly favor submission to civil law and civil rulers. The fact that he suffered forty-eight vexatious law-suits, when all the authority was in the hands of his persecutors, and came through these fiery trials unscathed, is exceedingly strong evidence that he only asked to be judged by the law, and to be tried before competent civil tribunals. The further fact that, when pursued with malignant purpose by his avowed enemies, he came forth and gave himself into the custody of the civil rulers of the State of Illinois, chief of whom was the Governor—Ford—is irrefutable evidence that he, at his peril, would honor the laws of his country and submit to the authority of its magistrates. His acts in the premises afford the highest proof that what he asked, and all he asked, was justice and equity according to the laws of the land. His integrity as a citizen, his devotion to the gospel he taught, and his love for the Saints, are seen in the fact that when threatnings and plottings and dangers were thick on every hand, he came meekly and boldly to the front, in order to respect the laws of the land and to shield the Saints from impending evil. He was no "hireling," but, actuated by the most loyal and the loftiest sentiments, he voluntarily and with ample forethought imperilled and finally gave his life for the Saints whom he loved. The revelations he gave to the church say:—

"Let no man break the laws of the land, for he that keepeth the laws of God hath no need to break the laws of the land; wherefore be subject to the powers that be [civil magistrates] until He reigns whose right it is to reign, and subdues all enemies under his feet."—Doc. and Cov., Rev. Aug. 1st, 1831.

One provision in the fundamental law he gave to the church requires that the church turn over all its criminals to the officers of the land for punishment; thus making the church officers to be active conservators of the civil law. It reads:—

"And again, every person who belongeth to this Church of Christ, shall observe to keep all the commandments and covenants of the church. And it shall come to pass, that if any persons among you shall kill, they shall be delivered up and dealt with according to the laws of the land; for remember that he hath no forgiveness; and it shall be proven according to the laws of the land.

"And if any man or woman shall commit adultery, he or she shall be tried before two elders of the church or more, and every word shall be established against him or her by two witnesses of the church, and not of the enemy; but if there are more than two witnesses it is better; but he or she shall be condemned by the mouth of two witnesses, and the elders shall lay the case before the church, and the church shall lift up their hands against him or her, that they may be dealt with according to the law of God. And if it can be, it is necessary that the Bishop is present also. And thus ye shall do in all cases which shall come before you. And if a man or woman shall rob, he or she shall be delivered up unto the law of the land. And if he or she shall steal, he or she shall be delivered up unto the law of the land. And if he or she shall lie, he or she shall be delivered up unto the law of the land. If he or she do any manner of iniquity, he or she shall be delivered up unto the law, even that of God."—Doc. and Cov. 42: 21, 22, Rev. Feb. 9th, 1831.

By these quotations it is seen that no one following the law of the church given through the Seer can violate or disrespect the civil law or its administrators, but that they are bound to be active supporters of both. That these sentiments were taught by the First Presidency of the church up to 1844, the year in which the Seer was murdered, may be seen by the following from the Times and Seasons, vol. 5: p. 519:

"It was, indeed, a pleasing sight to see such a vast concourse assembled to celebrate the fourteenth annual conference of the Church of Jesus Christ, and the unanimity and good feeling which pervaded the whole. Much instruction was given by President Smith and others, and the whole conference was edified by an appropriate and interesting address from Elder Sidney Rigdon, giving a history of the church from its first organization, and a sketch of the sufferings and privations of the first elders, and showing that the kingdom of God could be established in any country without infringing upon any law, or interfering with any government. That the saints of God lived far above all earthly laws; that the law of God was far more righteous than the laws of the land; that the kingdom of God does not interfere with any of the laws of the land, but is sustained by its own laws. He made many pleasing references to the manifestations of God at different times; how they had been annoyed by certain men who were wise in their own conceit, and opposed to the principles of virtue and righteousness.

Joseph the Seer said in respect to the relative position of civil rules to the people they govern, that they "are nothing more or less than the servants of the people." And of the source of civil authority, the power of civil officers, and the extent of national jurisdiction, he said:—"In the United States the people are the government; and their united voice is the only sovereign that should rule; the only power that should be obeyed; and the only gentlemen that should be honored, at home and abroad, on the land and on the sea."—Times and Seasons, vol. 5: 528, 533. By this we see he held that no church, and no priesthood, had any right to define or in any way interfere with the laws of the land or its proper administrators, but that as citizens they were bound to honor and submit to them faithfully.

In respect to the supreme power and the duty of Congress to regulate all matters for its citizens, he has this to say:

"Well may it be said that one man is not a state; nor one state the nation. In the days of General Jackson, when France refused the first instalment for spoiliations, there was power, force, and honor enough to resent injustice and insult, and the money came; and shall Missouri, filled with negro drivers, and white men stealers, go 'unwhipped of justice,' for ten fold greater sins than France? No! verily no!—While I have powers of body and mind; while water runs and grass grows; while virtue is lovely, and vice hateful; and while a stone points out a sacred spot where a fragment of American liberty once was; I or my posterity will plead the cause of injured innocence, until Missouri makes atonement for all her sins—or sinks disgraced, degraded and damned to hell—where the worm dieth not and the fire is not quenched.' Why sir, the power not delegated to the United States; and the states, belong to the people, and congress sent to do the people's business, have all power." * * * *

"And let me say, that all men who say that Congress has no power to restore and defend the rights of her citizens, have not the love of the truth abiding in them. Congress has power to protect the nation against foreign invasion and internal broil, and whenever that body passes an act to maintain right with any power; or to restore right to any portion of her citizens, it is the supreme law of the land, and should a state refuse submission, that state is guilty of insurrection or rebellion, and the president has as much power to repel it as Washington had to march against the 'whiskey boys of Pittsburg,' or General Jackson had to send an armed force to suppress the rebellion of South Carolina!"—Times and Seasons, v. 5, p. 395-6.

Certainly, if the nation, in its authority over the citizen, is superior to an organized state, it is also (and much more) superior to a Territory, and incomparably superior to any church or priesthood in either a Territory or a State. Nothing can be clearer than that the Seer held and ever taught that the National Government had the right, and that it is its duty to regulate all affairs with respect to its citizens when it shall find it expedient so to do.

With these facts before us, let no Brighamite leader, nor ignorant Mormon eater assert that the antagonism between the Utah Mormons and the nation are the practical and necessary results of the teachings of Joseph Smith the Seer. On the contrary, they should honestly admit that had the authentic teachings of the Seer been faithfully carried out, no such troubles as now vex the nation and curse and crush the Utah Mormons would never have arisen.

The "refuge of lies" is passing away, and the time is at hand when all will have the opportunity of judging of these matters in the light of recorded facts rather than from false teachings and traditions on the one hand, and the blinding mists of ignorance and malignant prejudice on the other.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

SOME one sends us the Idaho Reporter of the 12th and 19th ultimo, one containing a fair report of the late labors of Elder J. Luff at Oxford, Idaho, and the other some correspondence from Eagle Rock, which stupidly claims that "many of the identical paragraphs found in the Book of Mormon are exactly similar and evidently quotations from this romance of Solomon Spalding." (Found with Mr. L. L. Rice of Honolulu, Sandwich Islands. Ed.) This writer flatly contradicts Messrs. Rice, Fairchild, and many others who have examined both. He is either an ignorant or a dishonest scribbler who writes such false, flat trash, and would do well to wash the alkali out of his eyes and ears.

Bro. S. R. Berg writes from Haven, Iowa, the 23d ult., saying,—“We could not do without the HERALD. It is a great comfort to us. Success to it.”

Bro. Wm. Jacques of West Belleville, Illinois, informs us by letter of 23d ult., that the branch in that place “is in good condition.”

By letter lately received from Bro. E. B. Mullin, we learn that father David Whitmer, of Richmond, Missouri, has so far recovered from his recent extreme illness as to be up and walk about some. We wish he may live and be happy and prosperous for many years to come. It seems evident that God has spared him thus far as an especial witness of the truth of the Book of Mormon and the divine mission of Joseph Smith the Seer. His testimony on these matters is of the very highest class, for he saw, and heard, and felt in body and spirit, that which makes his evidence incomparably superior to all that offered by the enemies of the latter day work. He is a capable, competent, reliable witness.

Bro. R. M. Dungan of Santa Ana, California, sent us a notice for the HERALD of a Reunion Meeting to be held Sunday the 7th inst., in the Newport Branch; but it did not reach us till we had printed the issue for the 6th. We regret the lateness of its arrival, for we will most cheerfully do what we can to make our church Reunions successful.

Bro. Richard Coburn, of Blenheim, Ontario, informs us that Bro. A. Leverton had lately organized the Chatham Branch, and that the Lord by his Spirit called a Priest, Teacher, and Deacon as officers, also that Bro. George W. Shaw was chosen its presiding Elder.

S. Abbie A. Horton of Plano, Illinois, says the late district conference at that place was a very pleasant and profitable one, that the words of counsel and cheer by the Elders from abroad did much good.

By letter from Elder J. W. Stone dated at Springerton, Illinois, the 23d ult., we learn that our highly esteemed and aged brother and fellow-laborer in Christ, T. P. Green, had delivered four excellent discourses in that place of late. He further says,—“He had large congregations and good attention. He is in his seventy-fifth year, and his zeal for the Master's cause is unabated. He is one of the old-time Saints and stuck to his integrity during the dark days of tribulations to the church. At the conclusion of his labors here he complimented the young people for their good conduct.”

Eighteen have been added to the church at Montrose, Iowa, since brethren Bronson and Roth began their protracted services there. The conference of the district convened on the 6th, when Bro. Bronson will conduct a protracted service at Keokuk.

Sr. Cynthia Sparks of Los Alamos, California, writes to Bro. David Dancer: “Many thanks for your kindness in continuing the papers, as they are my only preachers, and I should feel lost without them. May the Lord prosper you all in your labors for Christ's sake.”

Bro. David M. Williams, writing from Bevier, Missouri, February 27th, states that things are very slow at that place, including church affairs. Bro. Williams advocates the holding of prayer meetings by the young, apart from the elder portion of the people, with the view that the young would feel less embarrassment, and speak and pray more unrestrainedly.

Bro. Hiram Rathbun, of Lansing, succeeded on February 24th, in organizing a branch at Webberville, of about eighteen, after receiving one old-time Saint on his original baptism. See Bro. Hiram's letter.

Bro. Erastus Anway, of Adelphi, Iowa, has been visiting his relatives in Franklin county, Iowa, and succeeded in getting some to hear him talk of the law of life in Christ Jesus; most however called him “Mormon,” and would not listen.

Sr. Nancy Davis writes from Siver Hill, Arkansas, that she is anxious to learn that the Elders may visit their country. There would be a nearing given them, as there is but little persecution there.

Bro. J. C. Clapp writes from Bozeman, Montana, February 24th: “God is moving in the work out here, for the work goes on widening and deepening continually.”

Sr. Harriet A. Bass, of New Florence, Missouri, is of the opinion that some in their neighborhood would obey the word if some Elder would come and preach there.

Bro. John Earnshaw, formerly of Sandwich, Illinois, now of Key West, Coffey county, Kansas, writes ordering tracts, and says: “I still contend for the truth. The people are not satisfied with the doctrines of men.”

Bro. F. M. Sheehy held a discussion at Tenant's Harbor, Maine, with an Adventist, on conscious existence after death; in which Bro. Seavey writes that Bro. Sheehy was quite successful.

Bro. John Eames writes from Cheyenne, March 1st, that he attempted out of doors preaching, but the wind blew too hard and too cold for either himself or congregation; so he abandoned it. He thinks Cheyenne ought to be warned, but states that it is doubtful if many will hear. Sr. Eames fell from a wagon and was seriously hurt, but was improving at the time Bro. John wrote.

Bro. J. B. Belcher of Knoxville, Ray county, Missouri, wrote us February 28th, that the Saints of the Central Missouri District, were trying to do well. Many are inclined to keep the whole law, as they understand it. The people round them are willing to let them live in peace and the enjoyment of their religion, except now and then one among the older inhabitants who fancy the Saints now are like what it is said by their enemies the Saints were in 1834 to 1838 in Missouri. The Reorganization demands righteous and law-abiding members in its ranks; Bro. Belcher may be assured that we shall do all we can to maintain the purity of the moral and social character of home and the church.

“Prohibition does not prohibit,” so say the votaries of the whiskey traffic; but see what it does in Missouri. Surely the State is redeeming itself. “Twenty-one counties in Missouri have banished drinking saloons from their borders.”

“MANUSCRIPT FOUND.”

We have for sale at this office the notorious “Manuscript Found,” written by Rev. Solomon Spaulding, about which so much has been said in connection with the theory that it furnished Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon the chief ground work and material from which to write the Book of Mormon. Has 144 pages 8 mo.; single copies, in cloth, 45 cents; 10 copies or more to one address, 40 cents each; in paper, single copies 25 cents; 10 copies or more, to one address, 20 cents each.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. Briggs Alden, of Fontanelle, Iowa, assures us that we erred in giving his age as in the eighty-ninth year, for if he sees March 4th, six months of his ninetieth year will be passed. Bro. Alden does not approve of the efforts of some writer who pesters him in trying to claim that Manasseh has a greater right than Ephraim; of this he says:

"Jacob said that Manasseh should be great, but his younger brother should be greater than he. Ezekiel says: 'The stick of Joseph was in the hand of Ephraim.' Jeremiah says: 'Ephraim is the Lord's first-born,' and yet there are some who want to make it appear that the old Saints do not know anything, or were poorly taught. I have heard Joseph Young, Elijah Reed, Jonathan Dunham, Bro. A. M. Wilsey, James Blakeslee, and some others preach, and slept two or three nights with Brigham Young before the close of 1839, and I never heard any man of them try to make out that Manasseh owned any part or share in the land that God gave to Ephraim. Will you say they are wiser now than then."

Bro. Henry Broadway wrote from Beaumont, Australia, January 12th, 1886, relating a dream of good significance, but for which we had not room. He also states:

"We have great blessings in our meetings held at my house twice on Sabbath, and also prayer and testimony meetings on Wednesdays. We received a letter from Sr. Burton, and they are well and having good times, with some opposition. I had the pleasure of adding two to the church by baptism; both have received the testimony of the truth; Bro. John Dickinson has been ordained a Priest, and Bro. J. Purvis a Teacher."

Bro. O. E. Cleveland, of Annex, West Virginia, has tried for a long time to get his neighbors interested in the word, by taking a number of the church papers and distributing them wherever an opportunity occurred to have them read. A great many still persist in classing every one believing in the latter day work with the Utah people and polygamy. He says:

"The last time I did any preaching was about three years ago, when I had a good congregation of attentive and apparently interested listeners, and spoke with fair liberty; I made several other appointments afterwards, and had nothing but benches to speak to. I believe, however, that if conference could send an experienced Elder here this summer, a small ingathering might be made. I have so often asked for help in this portion of the Master's vineyard and not received any, that I am becoming somewhat discouraged in asking any more. I do not know of any Saints in Virginia except our little branch; and one of our six is over one hundred miles away, in West Virginia. The foregoing will give you some idea of how matters are here."

EDITED BY SISTER "FRANCES."

SUGGESTIONS ON THE PRESERVATION OF DOMESTIC HARMONY.

"CAN two walk together except they be agreed? (Amos 3: 3). . . . I will speak to-day of the natural duties of husband and wife. . . . A church within a church, a republic within a republic, a world within a world, are all spelled by four letters—Home. If things go right there, they go right everywhere; if things go wrong there they go wrong everywhere. The door sill of the dwelling house is the foundation of church and state. . . . Domestic life overarches and undergirds all other life. . . . The rocking chair in the nursery is higher than a throne. Geo. Washington commanded the forces of the United States, but Martha Washington commanded George. . . . Our usefulness and the welfare of society depend upon our staying in just the place that God has put us, or intended we should occupy. . . . The institution of marriage has been defamed in our day, and influences are abroad trying to turn this earth into a Turkish harem, or a Great Salt Lake City. . . . Wrong notions on the subject of Christian marriage are the cause at this day of more moral outrage before God and man than any other cause. . . . If the husband be all impulse the wife must be all prudence. . . . Why is it that in some families they never get along, and in others they always get along well? I have watched such cases and have come to a conclusion. In the first instance, nothing seemed to go pleasantly, and after a while came domestic disaster, or estrangement. Why? They started wrong. In the other case, although there were hardships and trials, and some things that had to be explained, still things went on pleasantly until the very last. Why? They started right. My advice to you in your homes is to exercise to the very last possibility of your nature, the law of forbearance. Praying in the household will not make up for everything. Some of the best people in the world are the hardest to get along with. There are people who will stand up in prayer meeting and pray like an angel, who at home are uncompromising and cranky. . . . Some time it will be the duty of the husband, and sometimes of the wife, to yield. . . . Never be ashamed to apologize when you have done wrong in domestic affairs. Let this be a law of your household. . . . Find out the weak points of your companion, and then stand aloof from them. Do not carry the fire of your temper too near the gunpowder. If the wife is easily fretted by disorder, let the husband be careful where he throws his slippers. If the husband comes home with patience exhausted, do not let the wife unnecessarily cross his temper; but both stand up for your rights, and I promise the everlasting sound of the war whoop. . . . Cowper said:

"The kindest and the happiest pair
Will find occasion to forbear,
And something every day they live
To pity and perhaps forgive."

LUCY LLOYD.

"WHAT OUGHT HE TO DO?"

"FATHERS provoke not your children to wrath." Parents give their stubborn unyielding dispositions to their children, then unmercifully punish them if they show half the temper they do, when trying to correct it. Oh, they are enough to make an angel weep! Many a cross child would be good if father or mother would rock it, softly sing, or tell a little story. Try it, weary mothers. I once had a darling boy. Coming home from a visit he came quickly to my side, and leaning his head lovingly on my shoulder he said, with his eyes full of tears: "O mother, you do not know how mothers scold and fret their children. If you should do so I would not stay here; I would run away." This has been a comfort to me in the many years past. That home was the pleasantest place he could find. My regret is that I did not give more mother-love to my precious child when with me. RUTH CHESTER.

DOMESTIC TRAINING FOR GIRLS.

NOTHING is more significant of the social condition of a people than the training of its girls in domestic life. In Germany the daughter of a nobleman, of the prince, and of the small shopkeeper, learns alike to cook, to sweep, and to keep house. After the training in books is over, Fraulein Lena and her Royal Highness, Princess Sophie, both begun their home education. There are establishments where they are taken by the year, as in a boarding school. In one month they wash dishes and polish glass and silver; in another they cook meats; in another bake; in the next "lay down" meat for Winter use, or preserve fruit, make jellies and pickles, sweep and dust. Plain sewing, darning, and the care of linen are also taught, and taught thoroughly. The German "betrothed" is thus almost always a thorough housekeeper, and spends the time before marriage in laying in enormous stores of provisions and nappery for her future home. In France a girl begins at twelve years of age to take part in the household interest. Being her mother's constant companion, she learns the system of close, rigid economy, which prevails in all French families. If there be but two sticks of wood burning on the hearth, they are pulled apart when the family leaves the room, even for a half hour, and the brands are saved. The nourishing soup, the exquisite entrees, and the dainty dessert are made out of fragments, which in many an American kitchen would be thrown away. The French girl thus inhales economy and skill with the air she breathes, and the habits she acquires last her through life. English girls of the educated classes seldom equal the German and French in culinary arts, but they are early taught to share in the care of the poor around them. They teach in the village school, or they have industrial classes; they have some hobby, such as drawing, riding, or animals, to occupy their spare time with pleasure or profit. Hence the English girl, though not usually as clever or as well read as her American sister, has that certain poise and aplomb which belong to women, who have engrossing occupations outside of society, beaux and flirting.

LAMONI, IOWA.

Dear Sisters:—I am willing to try and bear a share of the "burden," but my poor little rush light has seemed so small and dim that I have hesitated to offer it. It may be that others feel the same, but rather than our dear sister should lay down the burden so soon we must bestir ourselves.

We are glad there are those among our sisterhood who out of their rich experience can speak comfort to the cheerless, hope to the hopeless, and instruction to all; but who may speak for those who have learned to suffer and be still, those on whose lips the seal of silence has been set by the very depth of their experience, which makes it unutterable? Though the Son of God walk with them through the fiery furnace, human language must fail to describe their wonderful deliverance; they must leave it as did the three Israelites—unrecorded; as saith the Psalmist: "I was dumb with silence, I held my peace, even from good." Some of us may be able to comprehend the full meaning when we hear one of those silent ones say, "If I had the gift of speech that I might tell that which I know and feel." And I have thought, O, for the histories unspoken, unwritten; but no, they are not "unwritten." God knows, and in his eternal records on high, it is surely written: "I know thy works, and labor, and patience. Courage, then, dear ones, in your silent labors of love, unseen of men, and unknown in its results even to yourselves. When He shall come to make up his jewels there shall appear, blazing like stars of the first magnitude, many of the—here—unheeded, unknown. I love to think of the surprise that our Father has in store for some in that day when the histories, unwritten here, are read in the hearing of all, and in answer to the surprised inquiry, "Lord, when?" to hear Him answer: "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least of these, ye did it unto me."

"Heard melodies are sweet, but those unheard
Are sweeter, therefore ye soft pipes play on;
Not to the sensual ear, but more endear'd
Pipe to the spirit dittles of no tones."

Lovingly to all the sisterhood, greeting.

ELEANOR.

Deeper than written scroll
The colors of the soul.
Sweeter than any sung
My songs that found no tongue;

My wish that failed to act."—Whittier.

AMUSEMENTS CONTINUED.

WE remarked in our last that all things except man answered perfectly the object for which God created them. How much of this imperfection in man is due to the fall who can say. The fall affected all creation, even the earth itself. For every effect there is an adequate cause, and why is it that man in this respect falls short of the brute creation?

To the dregs given our children in the wine cups of amusement we are prepared to charge some of this deficiency, and further we are prepared to say that in respect to amusement we should exercise just as much control over our children, and, perhaps more thought, than we do in any other department of their training. Relaxation and exercise are just as needful as study and work. Night follows day. A mantle of darkness is folded over the earth and all nature rests. Frost and snow bind the earth in fetters that she may yield the more when her season of fruitage comes. But much of what we call amusement is simply nervous excitement, which when indulged in to any extent, unfits the child as well as the person to follow any useful employment with either zest or pleasure, and when this is done, the door is thrown open for every other evil to follow. Parents shall we open this door. There is some excuse for those who burn the midnight oil in pursuit of knowledge, or who find themselves so burdened with work and cares that they feel they must work while others sleep, but there can be no excuse for parents who suffer their children to fall into such pitfalls of the devil. Who encourage them in such habits, by allowing them to go to these places, and even helping them to give such entertainments in return, and dignifying them with the name, amusement. We should write on them rather, dregs of the wine cup of the world's dissipation. What mother then among us, would want to help her boy or girl to drink the mixture. Innocent amusement? There is the snare of which the wise will beware.

But our children must have amusement of some kind. "All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy." We grant you this cheerfully, but let the amusement come in the light of day. Let it be innocent games in the open air, but above all if it must be in the early evening, don't let the time extend beyond nine o'clock, and at all times let us endeavor to know what kind of company our children are in.

Mothers, watch your little ones from this time forth, and then let the result of your observation be communicated to the Home Column. Watch, we say, to see if almost the first disposition shown by them is not to imitate. Do they see you busily employed, they will want employment also. If mother washes and dresses the baby, the little daughter will want to do the same for her doll. All the garments made for baby brother or sister she will in turn try to manufacture for her own baby, while her little brother will endeavor to imitate all he sees his father do.

Keep the little hands busy. When they are tired of one thing furnish them something else to do, and thus by what is really play to them, the foundation of the best safe-guard you will ever be able to give them against the temptations of the devil will be laid. Habits of industry will be formed, and there will be no idle hands for Satan to invent mischief for.

Are you working with the laws of their being in this respect? Working in harmony with the child as God has made it? Dear mothers, we leave you to watch, to try, and then to answer. Don't put the child off with excuses when they offer their untried strength and inexperienced help to you. We remember having done this to our after sorrow and regret. Now we encourage our grandchildren to help in every way their strength will allow, and the result surprises even ourselves.

Winifred, our little four year old grandchild, can sweep and dust a room, wipe the dishes for her mother, put each dish in its place in the pantry, and will go about it as proud as a queen and happy as a lark. She often leaves her play and asks for work. Tired mothers, how long before such a little one will be able to help to such an extent as to lighten your labor, and to enliven the time, and make lasting impressions upon their minds. Tell them the sweet story of the shepherds and the heavenly host, and the strangers who came from the East to bring gifts to the babe in the manger at Bethlehem. When night comes they will be ready to asleep fall in your arms or at your knee, and awake refreshed with the sweet sleep of innocence to begin another day, as busy and as happy as the last. As each day develops their untried powers adapt their employments to their needs, both physical and mental, and mark the result. You will be astonished at it, if you have not tried it before. All will be harmony simply because you are working in harmony with their natures.

"Not for earth and heaven
Can separate tables of the law be given.
No rule can bind which he himself denies;
The truths of time are not eternal lies."

When Moses came down from the mount upon the table of stone was written "six days shalt thou labor," and we believe when parents fully understand the wisdom of this commandment, and "train up a child in the way he should go" in respect to this, not forgetting the other things needful to be done, they will have joy and gladness in their children, when many times now they have only sorrow and tears. To our mind it is the foundation without which any superstructure will be more or less a failure.

This same law of industry applies to mind as well as body. From the time the little tongues can first form a question, how incessant is their prattle, they are constantly seeking to know the meaning of all they see. When these little questioners come to you, O mothers, as you value their souls, don't send them away empty, or what is worse, when they ask for bread don't give them a stone; but give them all the food for thought their young minds can digest, and don't let the evil one have any chance to make a "workshop" of their brain.

Let every mother, who reads this, and who when the warm days of Spring shall come will go out into the sunshine and put seed into the dark bosom of the earth, observe the feelings with which she will care for and tend the plant when the gentle showers, dews and sunshine shall have caused the seed to germinate, and it lifts its head above the earth. Are those the days and hours in which to neglect it, if you expect to enjoy either fragrance or fruit from it? Are they!

"Six days shalt thou labor," and as a tree is known by its fruits, so is the good of labor known by the peace and content it brings. Amusement as now so eagerly sought for, if closely analyzed, will be found only a selfish desire to have a good time. To such an extent is it carried in the world that health is undermined, and in many cases life becomes a burden. Wife and mother is entirely unfitted to discharge the duties designed by God to rest upon her. Dearly indeed do they pay for the feverish excitement of a few brief months or years at most.

Shall we give to our children the dregs of such a cup. Shall we allow them night after night to be away from their homes, mingling in promiscuous company, with no earthly object in view than "having a good time?" Our life upon this earth is the first part of existence, eternity is its continuation, and with the poet we do not believe, "that for earth and heaven separate tables of law have been given. If such a way of spending time is right for the young, it is right for the old. If it is good to day it will be good for all time and in eternity.

We had thought to have ended this subject with this issue of the Herald, but it opens up to us in a way which compels us to write at least one other page. We are cheered in our labors, not only by encouraging letters, but by the influence of the Spirit, and as to do good, to cheer the dispondent, to speak a word of comfort to the sad and lonely ones is all we labor for; we feel richly repaid when assurances come to us that we have been enabled to do this. A letter received to-night from Moss Point, Miss., contains this welcome assurance: "Prayers have gone up from my heart for you and the Mothers' Home Column, and the glad assurance has come to me that God will bless you in your labors." Let the mothers in their homes and the sentinels upon the lone out posts of Zion, lift up their hearts and rejoice. Let us be faithful in the discharge of every duty, for we feel that by this means, and only this, can we hope for the blessing of God upon our efforts.

We are in receipt of letters and clippings from A. P. Also from sisters Scott, Hyde, Simmons, Horton, Lloyd and Almira, which will appear in due time. We want to ask each one who writes us, to be very careful in the use of quotation marks. Don't fail to put them in, if it is only a stanza you are quoting. Dress your own thoughts in plain, simple English, and if the Spirit of God moves you to write, be sure it will be blessed to do the very thing God saw was needful to be done. The voice of the Spirit, through one of the sisters of this branch speaks to us thus:

There is a home of peace above,
There is a God of truth and love,
Who to his children sends the light
And to salvation all invite.

There is a work for each to do,
The Lord of Host will help us through,
And God will lead us with his hand;
Let us be faithful to the end.

LANSING, Mich., Feb. 27th.

Bro. Joseph Smith: Yours of the 13th instant was received on the morning of the 16th. On the evening of the 18th I went to Webberville, some six miles east of Williamston. I visited and preached from house to house until Sunday the 21st, when we had preaching meeting. On Monday the 22d, we baptized and confirmed four, and up to this date blessed three children, and had sacrament of the Lord's supper in the evening. On Tuesday the 23d, we all met at one of the families of the Saints and had an excellent repast. I took occasion specially to talk the gospel to them. We met on Wednesday evening, had prayer and testimony meeting which kept up until eleven o'clock at night. At this meeting, by a unanimous vote, it was decided to proceed at once to organize a branch. Bro. Thomas Horton, an old-time Saint and well-to-do merchant from Williamston, having investigated the Reorganization for two or three years, and being desirous of uniting with the same, was received by a unanimous vote on his original baptism, and ordination to the office of an elder, and afterwards was elected president of the branch. It was decided by vote to call the branch the Webberville branch. We then proceeded to administer to a sister sorely afflicted with the rheumatism. Sister Matilda Billinsky was sustained by vote as the Bishop's appointed clerk or agent of the branch. On Thursday morning we went to Williamston in company with Bro. Horton, who gave me a book for a branch record. From their certificates of baptism and confirmation I recorded seventeen names. Previous to this organization there were some who had moved away whose names were not recorded, except one whose certificate has been sent in to sister Brown for record, if such an occasion ever occurred. This was sister Lucy Elliott of Beach, Michigan. On Friday the 26th, we blessed Bro. Horton's little five month's old son, and at one o'clock p. m. took our leave for home, leaving all happy and hopeful. May God bless them all in Jesus' great name. Amen.

WALLSEND, N. S. W., Jan'y 21st.

Bro. Blair: I organized the Hastings branch a few weeks ago, and have been in Somerville a week holding meetings every evening but one. I got a letter to-day from a brother saying his wife wishes baptism, and he thinks more will soon follow. We have excellent liberty in preaching the word, and are all well. We will reorganize the Queensferry branch next week. I preach in the Bass school-house this evening and Sunday, there and here. I have more calls than I can attend to. Will try to get the branches here reported to conference, if possible. The Heralds come as regular as clock-work. The Advocate misses occasionally, being small it is easily mislaid in transit. I hope you may have a good time in conference, and we pray that God may bless you with the spirit of revelation, and that Zion's armies may be more united and efficient in conquering sin in every phase.

Your brother in Christ,

JOSEPH F. BURTON.

WASHINGTONVILLE, O., Feb'y 24th.

Dear Herald: I am much interested in reading over your pages, especially the correspondence. I like to read the testimonies of my brothers and sisters in the various parts of the Lord's vineyard. I find that their experience is my own to a great extent. The power of God has the same effect in stirring up Satan's kingdom in one place as it has in another. I lost my good name in the world, but I have had the pleasure of seeing over twenty-three baptized into the kingdom of God in this place. Bro. G. T. Griffiths was here and baptized thirteen, and organized a branch of twenty members and two officers, a Priest and a Deacon, and did some very good preaching. We had to pay a dollar a night for the hall.

Last Sunday, after sacrament meeting, I baptized three more, two of them promising young men who may yet strike old Satan's kingdom some hard blows. They are educating themselves for the work. We have some very promising young sisters and brothers in the church here. We hope they may yet help to make "the armies of Israel very great." I was the only one in my family that belonged to the Latter Day Saints, and had almost given up in despair of ever winning them into the kingdom; but on Sunday one of my sons, aged eighteen, came forward for baptism, and another is very near the kingdom. I think this will have a great influence over the others.

The Canfield and Youngstown papers class us with the Utah Mormons saying we are followers of "Old Joe Smith and Brigham Young," and that Elder Griffiths was gathering a colony to go to Salt Lake, and that if he had not left town when he did they were thinking of treating him to a coat of tar and feathers. Still for all this, we find the words of our blessed Master true, (Matt. 11: 30), "For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light." We desire an interest in the prayers of all the Saints. The name of our branch is the Washingtonville Branch.

Yours in the everlasting covenant,

JOHN McMILLEN.

GRAND RAPIDS, Neb., Jan'y 5th.

Bro. Blair: There is a little branch of eleven Saints here who are alive to the Lord's work. We are blest with the manifestations of God's Spirit. Dear Saints, let us be up and doing while it is called to-day, for the Lord says he is soon coming to gather his children. The Lord has promised us that if we live Godly in Christ Jesus, he will raise up a large branch here. I am trying to do what I can for the cause of Christ. I desire to work for Jesus in my office and calling, so that I may clear my skirts of the blood of my fellow men.

Yours in the bonds of the gospel,

JAMES M. MILLS.

QUEENSFERRY, Victoria, Australia,

Jan'y 20th, 1886.

Dear Saints: Another four weeks has rolled around, bringing with it the ever welcome Herald. It cheers and gladdens our hearts to hear of the prosperity of the work in various parts. And while the Lord is blessing many in the land of Zion, he is not unmindful of those in distant lands. We have been refreshed, and blessed with an outpouring of the Holy Spirit, in Hastings. Truly the power of God accompanied the preaching of the word. During our first and second visit the interest was so universal, I began to think the arch-enemy had forgotten to make war against us. We had many excellent meetings, ten had been baptized, but the enemy also had got to work. (He was only away after a supply of "Beadle's works.") Since then it has been a repetition of our South Rawdon experience,—not quite so bad as that of Delhaven.

The first Sunday in January the Hastings Branch was organized, consisting of eleven members. Bro. Evan Jones, whom Bro. Gillen baptized and ordained, was chosen presiding Elder, Bro. Woolley was ordained Priest, and Bro. McGurk Teacher. Several others are very near the kingdom. A Mrs. Graden is anxious to be baptized, but is waiting for her husband. May she not have to wait long. Others who are now of the Salvation Army are almost persuaded. At one sacrament meeting there were three confirmed, nine children blessed, and two administered to. Then there was prayer, testimony, tongues, interpretation, and prophecy. Those who were present, (though not of us), were deeply impressed with the solemnity of the occasion, while the Saints rejoiced with a joy they could not express. And now the good work is started in Somersville, a settlement about seven miles from Hastings, and at the "Bass," also, about five miles from Queensferry; and the Saints at the ferry are renewing their interest in the work. All seem to be interested, and the work is moving on in Victoria as fast as could be expected with only one missionary. Hastings is a flourishing and tidy little fishing village in the western part, twenty-five miles by water from Queensferry. A small passenger steamer stops at the jetty every day, from Phillip Island, bringing and taking more or less passengers. One and often two coaches come in at eleven o'clock every day and go out at twelve. Our mode of traveling between Queensferry and Hastings is in a sail-boat, either with Bro. McIntosh or Bro. Jones. With a good steady breeze we can make the trip in four or five hours; but once we were all day and till eleven o'clock at night.

Before closing I must say we rejoice with Bro. Hiram Holt (our son in the gospel) in his blessings, and the success that crowns his efforts. May he continue faithful. But while rejoicing with those who are filled, we also sorrow for the hungry ones in Nova Scotia. May God help them to "hold the fort" till reinforcements appear.

SISTER EMMA.

MCPAUL, Iowa, Feb'y 15th.

Bro. Joseph: We attended conference yesterday and the day before, at the Gaylord school-house in Plum Hollow branch; had fair sized congregations considering the roads, and had good meetings. We also enjoyed the comforting influence of the Holy Spirit. Yesterday the Elders were called to visit and administer to brethren John and William Leeka. They were too ill to attend conference. I will close by wishing the Herald and its editors good success. The Herald and Hope are welcome guests to our home. We look for them every Thursday as much as we would for a visit from any of our earthly friends.

Your sister in Christ,

M. E. BENEDICT.

NEWPORT, Cal., Feb'y 21st.

Bro. Blair: At a business meeting the 14th inst., Bro. Daniel Garner was chosen and ordained an Elder to preside over the Newport branch. Bro. R. M. Phennegar was chosen and ordained Priest; Bro. Stephen Penfold was sustained as Teacher; Bro. Samuel Dungan was chosen and ordained Deacon; and Bro. R. M. Dungan sustained as clerk.

Editors Herald:—Our hearts were indeed made glad by the presence and labors of G. H. Hilliard and I. A. Morris, Latter Day Saint Elders, from Wayne county, this state. Elder Hilliard is an old neighbor of ours, and Morris is a brother of my husband. According to previous arrangements, services had been announced for them, and they on the night after their arrival began a series of meetings in McVey Hall, the use of which was kindly tendered without money or price, and an organ furnished also. Young lady McVey, whose real worth is beyond estimation, came forward each night and greatly aided the worship by the excellent music she gave us. This being in a place where there are no Saints nearer than fifty miles, save myself and husband, was indeed highly appreciated. Prejudice for the first few nights was very high. Many used all their powers to prevent the Elders having a hearing, for I. A. Morris had, three years ago, preached several discourses here, and they felt well assured that their craft was in danger; but notwithstanding all this the hall was well filled each evening with attentive listeners, who with one accord acknowledge they never heard more able preaching, yet they say they can not believe with the Elders.

The Elders delivered seven discourses in the McVey Hall, and two in Girard. The Campbellite preacher of Girard, in a public discourse, made a challenge which Elder G. H. Hilliard accepted, but the challenger immediately backed out.

The last night Bro. Hilliard preached one and one half hours, with such power as must have sent conviction to many a heart. One man remarked that he was never before interested, but could have listened all night. Another said, "That was the best sermon I ever heard." And still another, "I would not have missed it for ten dollars." Altogether we consider it a grand success. During services in Girard on Sunday night last, the congregation was disturbed by an occasional "Amen" from a drunken man in the back part of the hall, who was by the city officials fined ten dollars. This is the second time this doctrine has been proclaimed in this part. This place being easy of access, we think quite strange that the traveling ministry do not call on us. We would be highly pleased to have some one call and water the seed sown by these Elders, that their labor be not in vain. Call for B. A. Morris, one and one-half miles south-east of McVey. McVey is on the Jacksonville and South-eastern Railroad, between Jacksonville and Litchfield. We have been taking the Herald four years and prize it highly. Remember us in prayers.

HEPPIE MORRIS.

LOS ANGELES, Cal., Feb. 22d.

Bro. W. W. Blair:—It has been some time since I have written to the Herald and thinking that many of the Saints would be pleased to hear from me as I am to hear from them, I venture to write. Of course as far as climate is concerned we can not speak too highly of this country. Indeed, I do not know where we could go to make it better. I am very well satisfied in that regard, and constantly hope and pray for the welfare of Zion, and trust that the time is not far distant when God's people will enjoy the promised "rest." I arrived at this place on the 4th of May, 1883, and I have not been idle any from that time to this, although the lack of the things of this world which perish with the using, has prevented me from doing what I would like to have done. I have traveled over the principal part of this southern country, from San Diego to Ventura, preached in all the branches, and many new places; have held over one hundred and fifty-five preaching meetings, baptized ten persons, blessed a number of children, and have presided over the Los Angeles Branch since the 25th of February, 1884. Last year I received the appointment of Bishop's Agent for this district. So you see I have not been altogether idle. And yet after we have done all we can, we can only say "we are unprofitable servants." I feel as though I can not do too much for the cause, and am willing to continue to contend for the faith. At the beginning of this winter Brn. A. H. Smith and D. S. Mills commenced public services in this city. It took quite an effort to get an opening, but we succeeded in procuring a neat little hall at ten dollars per month, where we meet regularly each Sabbath. I came home on the first of this month and have been occupying the stand each Sunday since; also each alternate

Sunday evening. Yesterday two gentlemen were present, strangers, who wished an interview in regard to our faith as a church. Accordingly I agreed to meet them at eleven o'clock on the 22d day of this month. The gentlemen were Dr. A. J. Arbely and his brother, of Damascus, in Syria. I furnished the Doctor with statements occupying sixteen pages of common note paper, setting forth the rise of the latter day work, from 1820 up to the present time; showing the call of the prophet, the coming forth of the Book of Mormon; the message of the angel; the progress of the work during the fourteen years of the prophet's lifetime; the martyrdom; the confusion and apostasy of the church; the Reorganization; and the differences between us and the Utah people; a synopsis of our faith and church organization, besides entering into considerable argument and explanations of points as they occurred. The statements, as I presented them, he intends to translate into Syriac, and send them to Palestine for publication. He has a brother who is United States Consul to Palestine, appointed by President Cleveland. In conversing with him I took occasion to make some inquiry in regard to that part of the Old World. He stated that Damascus was a city of about one hundred and eighty thousand, of which from five to seven thousand were Jews, the balance Mohammedans; and that there were from twelve to fifteen thousand Jews at Jerusalem. I regretted, very much, that our interview was so short, the two hours having passed away so rapidly.

I am quite anxious to see the work placed on a permanent basis here at Los Angeles, for I don't believe there is a better point on this coast for the work to spread, as there are people here from all parts of the world. A fine opportunity presents itself for gospel laborers all over this country.

That the brethren and Saints will be greatly blessed in the coming Conference, is the prayer of your co-laborer,

J. R. BADHAM.

GALENA, Ind., Feb. 20th.

Bro. Joseph:—Here is a specimen of some questions used by those dissenting from the latter day work as an offset to the faith, which might be of some benefit to the readers of the Herald. Did Christ organize the church originally capacitated for its own continuance. If so, they say, when once set up and put in running order, its continuance is certain. If not, the church is chargeable.

In reply to the first question we would say that, God has made ample provision in the organic law of the church for her continuance, and if the church had complied with it, she never would have "transgressed the law, changed the ordinance, and broken the everlasting covenant," divorced herself from Christ and married the kings of the earth. Will our querist take the conclusion of their own reasoning, that the capacitated church must continue, and was so designed? Paul said to Timothy 2: 2, "And the things that thou has heard of me among many witnesses, the same commit thou to faithful men, who shall be able to teach others also." Where is their church as provided for in the constitutional law, since the sixth century? Will they take the church of history, that which has continued since the sixth century as the original church? If not by succession, their capacitated church has not continued since it was organized, and their reasoning is false. It follows then, that if it exists at all according to the constitutional law, it must be by restoration; for reformation is out of the question, since succession is what is affirmed. Therefore, we conclude that those who "transgressed the laws" are chargeable, and not God.

What may be affirmed of man originally, may also be affirmed of the church. Man was capacitated to continue in the presence of God as a free moral agent, and on his free agency rests his accountability. And in the exercise of his agency he transgressed and fell. So did the church.

2. If its continuation depended on the miraculous or physical power of God, then God is chargeable if it does not continue. "Many other signs truly did Jesus, which are not written. But these are written that ye may believe; and in believing, you might have life through his name." These miracles which was wrought by the Savior as a basis of our faith in him as the Son of God, was for all time to come. Men believe this, and accept the gospel with all of its promised blessings. But not all are received as yet. "Tarry ye at Jerusalem until you are endued with power from on high." When he ascended up on high "he gave gifts to men." Some the gift of an apostle, others the gift of prophecy, and all these were constitutionally provided for in the church, and their continuance in their respective office depended not on the physical manifestation of God's power to hold them there; but their continuance depended on the Saints keeping from transgression; see Acts 1: 25.

It was the ministry and apostleship from which Judas by transgression fell. Here, then, is a precedent in the constitutional law where Judas, in the exercise of his agency, transgressed and fell from the office of an apostle. God did not exercise his physical power to hinder him from transgression. Therefore, what is affirmed of the agency of Judas may be affirmed of the entire twelve; and hence an entire apostacy may occur, and yet God not be chargeable as our querist affirms.

3. They claim that there is but one priesthood in the church, and that it is not lineal. They further say the Aaronic priesthood was a type of the Melchisedeck, and ceased with the ceremonial law.

In reply I would say, the first thought that is presented to my mind from the reading of Heb. 3: 6, is that the priesthood is lineal (See also Heb. 4: 14). "Jesus, the Son of God." What is the order of this priesthood? It is kingly (Heb. 7). King of Salem, and priest of the Most High. Priesthood is the name of a certain kind of office, or authority. Is there but one grade of authority in a kingdom? Do all the officers of a kingdom hold the same grade of office? Do all the officers in the United States hold the same grade of office? Common sense teaches better. There are no two offices in the United States that are the same, from the general government down to the state government. If so I would say, better dispense with one and save expense. Do all the officers in the church hold the same priesthood? Yes, says our querist, for the priesthood being changed, there is made of necessity a change also of the law. (Heb. 7: 12). The inference drawn here by the querist is that the word "change" means to go out of use, or cease to exist. Reconcile the following by that view when I say, I change my horse from the near side to the off side; does the horse cease to exist as a useful animal? When I change my shoe from one foot to the other, though changed, yet it remains in use. If there is but one grade of authority in the church, why could not Philip lay on hands for the gift of the Holy Spirit. If the word change means to cease, or go out of use, how shall we reconcile the following, 1 Cor. 15: 51: "Behold, I show you a mystery; we shall not all sleep; but we shall all be changed." Cease to exist, or go out of use; wonderful logic! Old theory of Campbellism, but newly varnished. I should have not noticed these questions, had they not been used against the Saints to paralyze their energies in the work. May the erring ones be reclaimed and the faithful blessed, is my prayer.

In bonds,

M. R. SCOTT.

ARMSTRONG, Kan., Feb'y 23d.

Bro. Joseph: Since the conference at Independence the meetings have been kept up nightly by J. H. Lake, M. T. Short and myself. The attention has been good; seven have been baptized, and it is thought others will obey soon. From what I have been able to see and hear, and as I survey the situation, I see no reason why the Saints should not abide on the "goodly land." Bro. Pitt seems to understand the situation, and tries at least to discharge his responsible duties with care and in good faith. I expect even Latter Day Saints will always talk; even if they are the favored ones to lay the foundation for the rebuilding of the "waste places." If I could have any influence it would be for their eternal peace and rest in this the "goodly land," and do and hope to continue to labor and pray until they see the "towers of Zion glitter like the sun in yonder sky;" yes, until the heavens shall reveal the coming Lord, and "glory shall dwell in the land;" but yet it is not all "peace in Zion." The weather is lovely, the land and scenery fair to look upon and the world moves: and we are glad it does.

Yesterday Bro. Short and your scribe left Independence and came to this place—about twelve miles. We took a kind of a bird's eye squint at Kansas City as we passed through. Last night Bro. Short preached the everlasting gospel and the kingdom of God to the people here. He is an able minister and a kind-hearted man. He is the son of his mother, and remains the same blue eyed missionary as I knew him in the "fat valleys of Ephraim." May he continue to scatter seeds of kindness, until the perfect day. I am billed to blow the trumpet here to-night. Bro. Short returned this morning to Independence, to aid Bro. Lake.

On the 23d of December I arrived home, after an absence of sixteen months; and was compelled to take up the the line of march on the 16th of January, and all along the line, the Saints have made me glad with words of kindness and cheer, and with generous hands ministered unto me, making my heart glad. I love the Saints, and my soul goes out in love to them; and I feel now that I can only dwell with them, that where they live, I will live also; and their God shall be my God. In mourning I would mourn with them, and in rejoicing I will rejoice with them. My own dear ones, who have sacrificed much for Zion's weal, are the life of my soul; and when I say they are first in my affection, I mean our lives are doubly linked together; fraternal ties as a family on earth and born together in the gospel life that binds forevermore, we have been given strength to abide the tempests of life, and feel to-day our life is dedicated to the service of the Master still. Through weary years and lonely watches, the companion of my early manhood has been a tower of strength to me. She has witnessed the little buds of promise given to us taken by the silent messenger before they bloomed into man and womanhood; and in humble submission has said, "Thy will be done." And in the long, silent and weary watches of the night, she has watched alone the jewels spared to us, under burning fevers and the many ills that come; a silent prayer has ascended to the God of love, until some have been spared to enter the threshold of man and womanhood, and still the burden is there. By and by, if by the Master spared, they will like others enter upon the great arena in the battle of life. We hope that their hearts may be stayed on Christ, that when the glorious day shall come, and the jewels gathered, we may all dwell together in the land of the blessed.

R. J. ANTHONY.

BROCKTON, Mass., Feb. 27th.

Bro. Blair:—I know that the gospel that is preached in our days is the same that was taught by our Savior and his Apostles. We are quite a small band here, about twenty-eight souls; but we are trying to raise the standard of truth higher, and I think the prospect is good for a number more being added, I hope, such as shall be saved. Our brother, M. H. Bond, district missionary, has been with us the past week; preached some six or seven times with good effect, and baptized two, heads of a family, and there are others asking after the right way; and may the time soon come when all the honest in heart will hear the glad message, which is to be preached in all the world for a witness, that they may be gathered into the fold. I believe that I state the sentiment of the district when I say that Bro. Bond is the right man in the right place, and I hope the Conference will continue him in the mission. It also seems to me that it would be productive of much good if he could have some one to work with him.

Ever praying for the prosperity of the work, I am your brother in the one faith,

J. N. AMES.

BEVIER, Mo., Feb'y 22d.

Bro. Blair: I like to read the Herald and Advocate. They are good to help one to be a Saint. I hope that Bro. J. J. Cornish wont be long till he will have that good book ready; I think such a book as he proposes will be worth much for every Saint to have. Yours in the one faith,

JOHN T. RICHARDS.

ELMIRA, Kan., Feb'y 20th.

Dear Brethren: We have had a blustering, cold winter, up to February 5th, when it began to moderate some; very pleasant now. Wagon roads have been the worst and continued so longer than I have seen in ten years I have lived in this state; they are almost impassable now. It has been the poorest winter to labor in the ministry. Roads so bad people could not get out very much of the time. The work is onward slowly. Some lack of a proper understanding of the law of tithing is not advantageous to the work. Some few still persist in attending parties and dances, and neglect prayer meetings, which we hope will not last long. My labors have been in the Northwest district the past year. I am confident we are growing slowly in divine life. We have increased in numbers sixteen. I hope and pray that we may grow faster in divine life the coming year than we have in the past. Praying for the ultimate triumph of Zion, I am your brother in bonds,

A. H. PARSONS.

BLLENHEIM, Ont., Feb. 19th.

Editors of the Herald:—I have been laboring in West Tilbury for the last six weeks and I trust have done a little work for the Master. When I first went there the mud was very deep and it was bad getting around, but before I was there long it froze up and remained so till a day or two before I left. The first meeting was held at Bro. Walter Carless', and from there I felt impressed to go to Mr. Henry Atkinson's, (where I held four meetings last winter, and was obliged to quit on account of diphtheria breaking out in the family), some three miles farther west, and commenced holding meetings with small numbers at first, but as the interest began to increase my congregation got larger. After I had been laboring about three weeks I was joined by Bro. R. Coburn. One afternoon shortly after he came, we went out to the Post Office, and called in to see a family near there that were quite interested who thought they believed in some church, but when they heard the true gospel hardly knew what their former belief was. While we were there the Presbyterian Minister called to see them for the first time, as he had only been a short time in that locality. He made a few remarks about the weather, and what kind of weather the weather prophets were predicting, he then addressed the good lady of the house, and said, "How old is your boy?" She replied, "About three years." He then went on to say how wise little ones were and tried to show that their five senses were fully developed, and that they were accountable for their actions even at that age. Bro. Coburn said he did not consider them accountable until eight or ten years old. He then told how a child four or five years old, that had been in a room alone, and said to its ma that it had seen God in heaven, and the idea he wished to convey was that it was necessary for little children to be baptized, or sprinkled, which we opposed. After talking a few minutes, he saw that we were running him into a corner, and said he did not wish to enter into an argument, and if the good lady of the house would hand him the Bible he would read a chapter, and pray with them and pass on, for he was in a hurry. She told him that they had not been attending his meetings, lately, and that these gentlemen (alluding to us) were ministers and had been holding meetings at her son's, and herself and family had been attending their meetings for the last three weeks. Turning to us he asked what denomination we represented, I replied, the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. He said, "Oh, then, Jo Smith's your leader then." I corrected him and said, "Joseph Smith, if you please." He then commenced as though he was going to tell something terrible about him and the Saints, but I stopped him by asking him what he knew about Joseph Smith, and he had to acknowledge that he knew nothing at all about him. We told him that we believed in the same gospel as taught in the Bible and the signs following as promised by Christ. He said,

"You believe in present Revelation," and tried to show that there was to be no more revelation and that the canon of scripture was full, by reading with great pomp the last of John's revelation. But we maintained that revelation from heaven was necessary; also the same church organization. He said "Prophecy did not mean foretelling future events, but it was merely the ministers explaining the word of God from the pulpit." Bro. Coburn cited him to what he had said about the weather prophets when he first came in, and wished to know if he did not mean us to understand they were foretelling something to take place. This worked up his nerves, and he demanded to see our credentials, in order to find out if we had any right to preach according to the laws of the land, and we turned the rule and tried to examine him by the word of God to see whether he was called of God or not. He said "he knew he was called of God for he had God in his heart." We replied that the good book tells us that God made man in his own image, and if he had God in his heart he must have a very large heart. He said further that the kingdom of heaven was in his heart, and when asked what it took to constitute a kingdom, said that it took a king, officers, laws, territory and subjects. We said that we wished to get into the kingdom of heaven, but if it was in his heart we did not see how we were going to get in. After he saw that he was beaten on every point, he said he was floored three or four times, and finally after we had kept him at it for two hours he read a chapter and asked me to pray, which I did, and went away saying we would agree to disagree.

After Bro. Coburn came we held meetings for three weeks, each speaking night about as we felt impressed, and enjoyed good liberty. Mr. Milliken, a neighbor of Mr. Atkinson, opened his house for us to preach in and we held six services with good liberty and crowded house. We baptized six, Mr. Atkinson and wife and sister-in-law, and three Misses McKewn, and blessed three children. Those baptized are well versed in the scriptures and able to defend the doctrine, and we believe others will obey in that part in the near future. The weather got warm and the roads thawed out, and got almost impassable so we deemed it wise to leave for the present. I find Bro. Coburn a genial brother to labor with, and will eventually make a useful man in the work if faithful, and that the Saints of this (Kent and Elgin) district should not fear to entrust him with their tithes and offerings, for he is a suitable man for Bishop's Agent. I intend moving to St. Marys about the first of March to occupy what the people call "the Mormon parsonage," beside the Mormon church.

To the Saints of the London District greeting: At the conference held October last at Corinth, you as a body saw fit to choose me as president of the district and that I should devote my whole time to the work, and in counsel with Bro. Lake and others deemed it wise for me to move to St. Marys, as that was near the center of the district, so as to save expense in traveling to conference. After conference I went to St. Marys and commenced to build me a house, my father furnishing the means to build with. I worked at it and preached every Sunday till the middle of December, when the weather became so cold that I could not finish, so I returned to Blenheim for a time. So the Saints of the district will see what I have been doing. Asking an interest in your faith and prayers, and hoping to be sustained in righteousness, and praying for your welfare and the promulgation of the gospel, I remain your brother and co-laborer,

SAMUEL BROWN.

My address will be Box 329, St. Marys, Ontario.

INDEPENDENCE, Mo., Feb. 26th.

Brother Blair:—We are rejoicing here, and of course you wish to know the cause, that you may rejoice with us. We have had the best series of meetings here that we ever had, General Conference not excepted. Our District Conference convened on the 13th of this month. Brn. J. H. Lake, R. J. Anthony, and M. T. Short were with us. The conference passed off well, had preaching every night until Wednesday, when the conference adjourned, but preaching continued every night except last Saturday. An excellent interest is awakened among the Saints and non-members. We all feel blessed, edified, and built up in the holy faith. The preaching has not only been in the wisdom of man, but in the power and demonstration of God's Holy Spirit. Bro. Lake baptized five, Bro. Short one, Bro. Pitt one, and more are standing at the door of the kingdom.

I was glad in my heart to read in the Herald to-day the letter from Bro. J. R. Lambert on closing the doors of our churches. Having traveled much and preached wherever I could, I believe I have learned to know what is right. I once heard of an old lady, who of necessity borrowed a washtub, but after a time she was able to buy one; after which she concluded she would neither borrow nor lend.

Our new little church in Kansas City is finished, so that Bro. Lake and I held three meetings in it last Sunday. As a whole this district is in an excellent condition. Branch meetings are well attended, and well presided over in all the branches. The Elders with but few exceptions reported well. The Universalist Minister who tried to devour me while preaching on the square in Kansas City, but decided that I was too tough, and a few days later got hold of Bro. E. L. Kelley, and has now concluded that he is not hungry. Well, truth is mighty and will prevail.

Your brother in Christ,

F. C. WARNKY.

RIVER SIOUX, Iowa, Feb. 19th.

Brn. Joseph and Blair:—I want to bear my testimony to the gospel of the Son of God. I am a lone widow, and not alone either; for I know in whom I trust. I am established in the fact, and in him through whom all the kindred of the earth is to be blessed. I got this testimony from him who doeth all things well, and I hope he will help me through. I want to live by every word that proceeds from the mouth of God and walk in the straight and narrow path that leads to eternal life. I live a good ways from the Saints' meetings, and feel sometimes that I could not live without the Herald. I know it is something from the true fountain. I hope you will excuse my writing and inabilities. I feel it such a cross to go to any business since my husband died. I do desire to aid the work, and work for Zion, and be found putting in my mite. I desire all the Saints to pray for me, that I may merit all the choice gifts.

In gospel bonds,

MARGARET HOAGLAND.

SCOTTSVILLE, Ind., Feb. 26th.

Brother Blair:—I have just returned from a short tour in the central part of district, held aloft the "Royal ensign" fourteen nights successively in New Marion, Ripley county, in opposition to Baptist and Advent dogmas. The Advent chieftain of Battle Creek, Michigan, was in attendance four nights, and the first night, I can't say opposed us; but asked questions. This gentleman (Mr. Huffman by name) politely declined our proposition last fall, after his challenging the world, remarking that "the spirit of debate was not in his church." The interest increased at that point, and on the last Sunday night there was not enough standing room in the Hall. Many are investigating, and prejudice allayed. Some Catholics were in attendance for over seven nights. We hope much good was done and feel like pressing on. Yours in hope, LEONARD SCOTT.

SINNETT'S MILLS, W. Va., Feb'y 4th.

Dear Herald: We feel lonesome here as far as meeting is concerned. The Herald is our preacher. I love to read it, for it is bread when hungry, and drink when thirsty, to hear a gospel sermon. I don't feel discouraged in the work; yet I think if a gospel minister would come here and give us a few sermons, that with what has been done and what we are doing, there yet would some unite with us and be company for us, and be a light to those that are yet in darkness. It seems that the light is breaking forth with some—work and words—are doing good. Your sister, REBECCA GIVENS.

CULTIVATION OF THE MIND.

OBSERVATION teaches that a large percentage of mankind neglect this important duty. Not so much for want of opportunity, as from failure to wisely improve the spare moments of each day in useful study. Many who have attained to positions of high honor and sacred trust in the economy of government and elsewhere, have struggled up through adversity to the acme of their self-acquired ability. Perhaps those who have shown as the brightest lights in the realm of literature have been, as a rule, the favorites of fortune, but I think it equally true that the men who have honored the positions of political activity so essential in the jurisprudence of our country have as often risen from conditions of comparative want. Ability to meet successfully the stern realities of life, and to measure accurately the length, breadth, and feasibility of proposed measures in the policy of state, is as likely to be acquired through actual contact with pinching poverty as to be purchased at the price of inexhaustable wealth. The means of self-culture are within the reach of all classes. Institutions of benevolence have flooded the land with religious literature. Gigantic enterprises in the interest of printing have brought the weekly journals, science of commerce, history and education, within the reach pecuniarily of nearly all who choose to read them. And books containing the best literature of the age may be obtained for a nominal sum as compared with their worth and usefulness.

In seeking to become proficient in education, we shall do well to propose to ourselves definite ends to be reached, so as to adapt our studies to our evident wants. Promiscuous, careless, or superficial reading may serve to amuse, but can not materially instruct. Moderate variety serves to greet the mind with agreeable and profitable change, but our studies should be select. If we would be good men we have need to read good books. Constant contact with the purest minds that have illumined the ages can not but serve to heighten our conception of the good and true, to elevate us to a higher standard of moral excellence, and to cast our character in the mold fashioned by the Prince of Life. Excessive reading is injurious to the memory and tends to a confusion of ideas. Some are capable of greater and more constant mental exercise than others; hence, we must weigh our own ability and avoid an excessive taxation of the brain.

Meditation is an auxilliary to mental research. One selects, the other digests. It is vain to tax the mind with subjects in a moment to be forgotten. Hence, as a rule, it is best to read only what we desire to remember.

Practical education means far more than is couched in the idea of passive acceptance and rehearsal of thoughts and theories found in text books. We should make sentiments and ideas our individual property before we rehearse them as being true. It has long ago passed into a proverb that, "men never become too old to learn." The gospel contemplates a continuous, unceasing growth of character, which is made a verity only as we gain increased knowledge of the world, its conditions, its history, and what is far more important, the economy of life—the gospel. Paul gave exhortation to Timothy to "study to show himself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed." Evidently it was intended in this admonition to enjoin upon this evangelist dilligent application in the acquirement of such knowledge as would serve to qualify him for the work committed to his charge. From the inception of the latter day work the grave charge has been made by some people of adverse belief that the Saints are "superstitious and ignorant." We believe that, with the scope intended in this assertion, the charge is false and malicious. If in any case the statement should prove true, such development is not the legitimate outgrowth of our faith. In the early history of the church the Lord gave revelation authorizing the institution of "the school of the prophets." A similar plan is referred to in section 94, Doctrine and Covenants, given August 1833. "Verily I say unto you my friends; I speak unto you with my voice, even the voice of my Spirit, that I may show unto you my will concerning your brethren in the land of Zion, many of whom are truly humble and are seeking diligently to learn wisdom and to find truth; verily, verily I say unto you, blessed are such, for they shall obtain; for I, the Lord, showeth mercy unto all the meek, and upon all whomsoever I will, that I may be justified when I shall bring them into judgment. Behold, I say unto you concerning the school in Zion, I the Lord am well pleased that there should be a school in Zion."

By this reference we learn, first, that in the land of Zion there were many of the brethren who were "truly humble," and were seeking diligently to learn wisdom and find truth. Second, that because of this desire on the part of the brotherhood, the Lord was "well pleased that there should be a school in Zion." And in view of this they were commanded, or advised to build a house in the land of Zion. The object of their joint enterprise under the direction of God was, "that there may be an house built unto me for the salvation of Zion; for a place of thanksgiving for all Saints, and for a place of instruction for all those who are called to the work of the ministry, in all their several callings and offices, that they may be perfected in the understanding of their ministry, in theory, in principle, and in doctrine, in all things pertaining to the kingdom of God on the earth."

In this sacred edifice were to be found the elements of education and purity. The precious promise was made, "now behold, if Zion do these things she shall prosper." These facts serve to show that ignorance is no qualification for the ministry. Others may view the matter as they will, I believe it required the education of experience and diligent, thoughtful and prayerful application, to prepare the apostles of the Lamb for their subsequent ministration to "every creature" in "all nations."

I see no necessity for men in the church, who are called to the itinerant work of the ministry, tarrying to master Greek and Latin, or to study elocution, with all the attendant graces of excellent oratory. I think that in the Inspired Translation of the Holy Scriptures we have fully as correct a version as any might render, provided they had access to the original manuscript and had acquired some ability in this line. Ability, grace, and power of speech are most likely to attend those who seek in humility to fulfill their heaven-ordained appointment.

It is by the education of experience, chiefly, that men of limited natural or acquired ability become a power in the land for good. It will not, I trust be regarded as a panegyric to revert to the fact that men of modest worth in the church who, a few years ago, would have blushed by reason of the thought of standing before a public audience to expatiate upon the word of life, have, in some instances become men of excellent wisdom and persuasive power in their calling as ministers for Christ. There is no tuition equal to that of the Holy Spirit, given as a gracious boon to all the faithful in Christ. If the interrogation is made, "Do we need an educated ministry," I think consistency, if allowed to speak, would answer "yes."

Not necessarily college graduates (though this kind of training will not disqualify them) but men of thought, of principle, of mental and physical activity. Men who are loyal to their convictions and will stand by the right in prosperity or adversity. Men who are willing to cultivate self-denial, and make the sacrifice that wisdom demands for the furtherance of the mandates of peace—men of righteousness, men of God. The great issue of the work that engages our profound attention, are now pending; and the thought arises in many anxious hearts, "Shall the cause of Zion prosper?" Brethren, let us awake to the responsibilities of our sacred trust. Let us thrust in our sickles, and reap, girding on the whole armor of God, and as watchmen on the towers of Zion we shall see "when good cometh." In bonds,

GEO. S. HYDE.

A GENERATION.—WHAT IS IT?

WHEN we mean by a generation the average duration of the life of man, it is a difficult thing to ascertain. It is admitted that thirty years is a generation; this is a higher estimate than the facts known to us will warrant. The writer has more than once visited a graveyard for the purpose of obtaining some data, to go by. He has gone through those resting places of the dead and taken the ages of those whose bodies have been laid away to rest, as he has found them inscribed on their tombstones, has then added the whole together and then divided by the number of tombstones from which he got his sum total, and has usually found his estimate thus obtained fall short of thirty years; and on one occasion it only footed up sixteen years; and here there were several quite aged and one who was over ninety years old. When we add to this that there is a greater percentage of children than of adults whose resting places were not marked by a tombstone, it only lessens the average length of the life of man. Again. When we read in Scripture that certain blessings or curses shall be visited upon man unto the third and fourth generation, according to their merits or demerits, there need not necessarily be any definite length of time. The child, his parents, grandparents, and great grandparents may all be living to-day and suffering the penalties of some broken laws of God, or nature, and hence be cursed in those generations, or they may be reaping the reward of a well spent life, and thus four generations may all be blessed or cursed at the same time.

We now approach the object that has prompted to this task; a task that we have long waited hoping that some abler and more competent mind would have attempted. It is where any event, or events have been predicted by the spirit of inspiration to take place, or to be accomplished within a given generation, or any number of generations. Such predictions can not in justice be determined by either of the above rules of defining a generation. When a prophet of God declares that a certain event shall take place in "this generation," (the generation in which the prediction was uttered); as the prediction is supposed to be by revelation from God, then all who profess to believe that prophet to have been the servant of God to bring forth his words unto them if he either brought forth, or translated by the power of God any revelations later than the Bible, defining what a generation is, then all who endorse that prophet and what he has brought forth; when he declares that a certain event shall take place in any given time, then we must measure his prediction by his definition of the time in which it was to occur. For example: when a prophet has brought forth anything, either by revelation, or translation defining a generation to be fifty years; and then predicts that any event shall take place in "this generation," it is equivalent to saying that it shall take place in fifty years. You may criticise his definition of what a generation is, but you can not in justice declare his prediction a failure for the want of time, until the time that he has stated was a generation has expired. The latest estimate that we can find in the Bible touching this question, is in Psalms 90:10; which places a generation at from seventy to eighty years.

We have said that we have long felt the need of some one canvassing this subject; and for the reason as members of the church of Jesus Christ, we believe that God called Joseph Smith the founder of said church under God, to be a prophet, seer, revelator, and translator to this generation. We believe that he uttered many prophecies, received and gave many revelations, and through the office of his seership by the power of God translated the Book of Mormon. This book, with the Bible, contains the fullness of the gospel, and is designed for the confounding of false doctrines and the laying down of contentions; hence to us is as much a text book as is the Bible, and as such we intend using it in examining this question.

Our first quotation, which is the occasion of this article, and which has been the occasion of many attacks upon the prophetic mission of Joseph Smith; is from Doctrine and Covenants, 83:2: "Verily, this is the word of the Lord, that the city New Jerusalem shall be built by the gathering of the Saints, beginning at this place, even the place of the temple, which temple shall be reared in this generation; for verily, this generation shall not all pass away until an house shall be built unto the Lord, and a cloud shall rest upon it, which cloud shall be even the glory of the Lord which shall fill the house."

The words "in this generation" are the ones upon which great stress has been laid by our opposers, who claim that the prediction has proved a failure for the want of time; measuring a generation by thirty years; and therefore its author is a false prophet. We next quote from "Joseph the Seer;" where the author replies to an attack on our faith from the above stand point; or that thirty years is a generation.

"Not exactly, Mr. S. The conclusion to which you jump with such eagerness is not a very sensible one, and does great injustice to the text. The text says 'this generation shall not all pass away until an house be built,' etc. This implies that the most, or greater part of it would pass away; i. e., that the house would not be built until the closing times of this generation. The word 'generation,' as here used, plainly signifies the life, or age of man, and not the average age of man, as is urged by Mr. S. The Lord said to Abraham, concerning the deliverance of his posterity from Egypt: 'In the fourth generation they shall come hither again.'—Gen. 15:16.

"Now if Mr. S. had lived in the times of Abraham, and had reasoned as he now does, he doubtless would have said that the above revelation to Abraham was false, because Israel did not 'come hither again' in just four of his generations of thirty years each,—or one hundred and twenty years. The 'fourth generation' from the time of promise, measured, as we see, four generations of almost one hundred and eighty years each."—The Seer, 74.

The writer prefers the rule that he has given above, to determine how long a time the Lord had to fulfill his promise to Abraham: viz. the latest Scriptural definition of what a generation is. The latest that we can find in the Bible, till many years after the promise of God to Abraham, and its fulfillment, is in Gen. 6:3; this would give the Lord four hundred and eighty years to make good his promise to Abraham, instead of one hundred and twenty years; or 4x30, or even four hundred and thirty years. We have said that if a prophet, either by revelation or translation, should define a generation to be fifty years; etc. We have found no such rule given, and only gave it as a rule governing us in our investigation of this subject.

We will now define what a generation is, in length of time, and endeavor so to set our stakes tamping them well down with truth, sound logic, and scriptural evidence, that it will be no easy matter to pull them up. We take the revelation from which we have once quoted for a starting point; "For, verily, this generation shall not all pass away until an house shall be built unto the Lord," etc. No one will deny that all who now live are included in and belong to the present generation, "This generation." This being true, if in A. D. 1896; there be one thousand persons living of those who now draw the breath of life in the United States; will this generation have all passed away? Certainly not. For one thousand persons who are living to-day will be living then. If this is true, it is equally so of those who were living in September, 1832, the date of the revelation under examination. So that if in September, 1932, there shall be hundreds or thousands living who were living when that revelation was given, then that generation will not ALL have passed away. We emphasize the word "all," but a revelator has a right to the benefit of every word that he professes to give by revelation from God. And if God shall give a revelation to-day, to any of the sons of men, have we the right to take from that revelation, one letter, or one word, without laying ourselves liable to the penalty named in Revelations 22:18, 19? We do not rest our arguments alone on those who may live to be an hundred years old. Webster defines a generation, referring to time, to be "a century." So we have Webster giving one hundred years for a generation. We will examine the Book of Mormon on this subject, to see what we can learn. We quote from the Plano edition giving page and paragraph: "Behold, I perceive that this very people, the Nephites, according to the spirit of revelation which is in me, in four hundred years from the time that Jesus Christ shall manifest himself unto them, shall dwindle in unbelief; yea, and then shall they see wars and pestilences, yea famines and bloodshed, even until the people of Nephi shall become extinct; yea, and this because they dwindle in unbelief, and fall into the works of darkness and lasciviousness, and all manner of iniquities; yea, I say unto you, that because they shall sin against so great light and knowledge; yea, I say unto you, that from that day, even the fourth generation shall not all pass away before this great iniquity shall come." Book of Mormon 324:2. Here we have the same words that we have in the revelation in Doctrine and Covenants that we are defending, viz: "Shall not all pass away."

Our next are the words of Samuel the Lamanite. He says: "Behold, I, Samuel a Lamanite, do speak the words of the Lord which he doth put in my heart; and he said unto them behold he doth put it into my heart to say unto this people, that the sword of justice hangeth over this people; and four hundred years passeth not away save the sword of justice falleth upon this people; yea, heavy destruction awaiteth this people, and it surely cometh unto this people, and nothing can save this people, save it be repentance and faith on the Lord Jesus Christ, who surely shall come into the world, and suffer many things, and shall be slain for his people. And behold, an angel of the Lord hath declared it unto me, and he did bring glad tidings into my soul. And behold I was sent unto you to declare it unto you also, that ye might have glad tidings; but behold ye would not receive me; therefore thus saith the Lord, because of the hardness of the hearts of the people of the Nephites; except they repent I will take away my word from them, and will withdraw my Spirit from them, and will suffer them no longer, and I will turn the hearts of their brethren against them; and four hundred years shall not pass away, before I will cause that they shall be smitten; yea, I will visit them with sword and with famine, and with pestilence; yea, I will visit them in my fierce anger, and there shall be those of the fourth generation, who shall live of your enemies to behold your utter destruction; and this shall surely come except ye repent, saith the Lord: and those of the fourth generation shall visit your destruction."—Book of Mormon 411:1. We here also learn, that a generation, and a hundred years are synonymous; and are frequently used the one for the other.

We next quote the words of Jesus to his disciples on this continent: "And now, behold, my joy is great, even unto fulness, because of you, and also this generation; yea, even the Father rejoiceth, and also all the holy angels, because of you and this generation; for none of them are lost. Behold, I would that ye should understand; for I mean them who are now alive, of this generation; and none of them are lost; and in them I have fulness of joy. But behold, it sorroweth me because of the fourth generation from this generation, for they are led away captive of him, even as was the son of perdition; for they will sell me for silver, and for gold, and for that which doth corrupt and that which thieves can break through and steal."—Book of Mormon 473:1. Again: "And how blessed were they, for the Lord did bless them in all their doings; yea, even they were blessed and prospered, until an hundred and ten years had all passed away; and the first generation from Christ had passed away." Again: "And it came to pass that two hundred years had passed away, and the second generation had all passed away, save it were a few."—Book of Mormon 479:3, 5.

We have consumed more space than we at first supposed that this article would require, and our only excuse is that the nature of the case, and the seeming advantage that has many times been taken of the revelation under examination seemed to demand a refutation of the arguments that have often been arrayed against the Doctrine and Covenants; and that revelation in particular, even by friends within and foes without. For strange as it may seem, there are many who profess to believe that Joseph Smith was called to usher in this latter day work, and to translate the Book of Mormon and profess strong faith in that book, but are quite shaky on the Doctrine and Covenants. We will now sum up and see what we have proved.

1. That the length of a generation, when given in prophecy can not in justice be measured by the average length of the human life, nor yet by thirty years.

2. That the average length of life will fall short of thirty years (a) as can be shown by visiting any grave yard of note where there is a large percentage of those graves with tomb stones, giving the ages of their occupants, especially when we take into account the fact, that there is relatively many more adults thus memorialized, than there are of children. Then add to this the statistical fact that more than one half who are born into the world, pass away before the age of five years, and it still lessons the average age of man.

3. We have shown that when several generations are spoken of, as that certain blessings, or curses are to be visited upon the third and fourth generations; that no particular length of time is necessarily required.

(a) [It is now we believe stated by statisticians that the average duration of life is something over thirty years; there having been a marked increase in longevity during the last thirty to fifty years.—Ed.]

4. Again, when a prediction is given, as: "For verily this generation shall not all pass away until an house shall be built unto the Lord." etc. When a prediction is thus particularized, that the generation then existing must all pass away; become extinct, or nearly so before the prediction has proved a failure for want of time. Then let us wait that extinction.

5. We have shown by Gen. 6:3, that the latest Bible estimate given of a generation, from the flood until the days of King David, or for about twelve hundred years, was one hundred and twenty years. The latest Bible estimate that we can find is Psalms, 90:10, which gives from seventy to eighty years; which from the date (A. D. 1832) of the revelation we are defending will not expire till some twelve years after this century is ended.

6. Again; we have shown that when a prophet shall define the length of a generation, either by revelation or translation; (as in Book of Mormon) and then prophesy events to take place in "this generation," that he is justly entitled to his own estimate of what a generation is, especially when he shall agree with the highest (dictionary) authority that there is.

7. We have proved by his own translation from the Book of Mormon that a generation is one hundred years; and that the terms, generation and hundred years are synonymous terms, and often used the one for the other; then when we see how the revelations and the translation of that young man "who was not learned," (Isa. 29:12), harmonizes with Webster, is it not another link in the unbroken chain of evidences in the divine mission of him that "one angel told another angel to go and tell him, that Jerusalem shall again be inhabited."—Zech. 2:3-5. For Joseph Smith was the first man in his generation to proclaim that the Jews should again be gathered to their own land.

Then a generation, what is it? It is a century.

INTELLECTUAL HELL, AND THE WAY TO GET THERE.

THE Saints' Herald represents a religious body whose faith and teachings are the very essence of all that is God-fearing; nevertheless it is sufficiently liberal and in keeping with the spirit of the times that it fearlessly publishes scientific astronomical articles which so plainly and forcibly portray the vastness of God's universe that they make my head swim, and cause me to stop occasionally while reading them to ascertain whether I have not dwindled into such extreme insignificance that I can not find myself. I am constrained to ask, Am I an entity or is it only imaginary? How wide the contrast between the sentiment expressed by the authors of this paper and that of the public three hundred years ago, shown in the burning of Bruno.

What a wonderful science astronomy is; nevertheless, something within me frequently asks, Wherein has it enhanced my happiness? Was I not fully as happy with childhood's idea that the earth was a great disc, that I was in the center, and that the sun, moon and stars were simply hung in God's dome that overshadowed us, expressly for the benefit of the inhabitants of the earth? To the researches of science, and the making of books there is certainly no end, yet if the health of the masses be not improved, their happiness enhanced, nor their hope of eternal life and well being made more sure, must we not conclude with Solomon of old, "All is vanity?" If I knew all that is known by all the thinkers and thinkeresses of this world combined, yet was not happy and did not possess a well founded hope of eternal happiness, were not my success a failure?

The ancients said, "Doubt is the portal to truth." Now if Beecher, Swing & Co. have entered a sufficient distance within this portal to be convinced there is no hell, it is merely a question of time until some of their crew possessing more intellectual ballast and less gas shall have continued his descent through the gate, until, O horror of horrors, he discovers that his heaven is just as great a myth as was his hell. If a man does not believe in hell and future punishment, where is his fear of God? and if he have no fear of God, where is his wisdom? It has not yet begun; nay more, those popular teachers have not yet reached the end of their increasing folly; they are as it were, flitting about in the atmosphere of the intellectual world, but unlike the Grecian sages they float about in uncertainty, lacking that specific gravity necessary to bring them to intellectual terra firma. But, supposing that like those ancient heathen they should descend right through this don't-know-stratum and arrive at a clear conclusion that they did know just as well as they knew that twice two are four, that man is only an imaginary identity, and consequently heaven with all its sugar plums, and hell with its horrors are all a farce. Would their condition be bettered? So far as the effect upon the moral is concerned I think a religion without any hell in it has the worst possible, it is a downy bed for iniquity.

If I am convinced there is no future punishment what shall be the guide to my conduct? What use is the matrimonial contract? What need I fear from committing adultery providing the ladies are willing and I have confidence that they will keep our secret. A popular religious teacher who teaches that there is a heaven but no hell, administers the identical mental drug best calculated to lead astray silly women. And in case my iniquities should become known, what is there to restrain me from perjuring myself in order to escape the consequent odium, &c. If I believe there is no hell what good is my oath on the Bible.

If the Bible does not teach that there is a place of punishment for the wicked after death, it does not teach that there is any heaven, its evidence of the former affects that of the latter, consequently the only basis those heavenly christians can have for a hope of eternal life, is an ardent desire that it should be so.

By denying the essentiality of the Christian plan of salvation we simply break loose and fly our kite without a string and very soon gravitate into the very depth of doubt and darkness and if we be so constituted that we can stand the climate; we may by the aid of the lights of hell, be enabled to see the elephant, which is "Man is an imaginary identity." What do we mean by that expression? We mean simply this, that man is not responsible for either thoughts, words, or actions; that he is purely a creature of circumstances, a mere machine, of nature and by nature he is made and by nature surrounded, consequently nature and nature only deserves either credit or discredit for all he is, has and does.

This, dear reader, is what is to be seen at the circus to which Beecher, Swing and company, are leading their armies just as fast as the devil can show the way. You may ask how I know. I in answer would say, I've been there, have seen the whole show, yet was not content but floundered round like a fish out of water. I inquired of those sages, who lived in the outskirts of the place since before Christ, wherein can I find comfort and happiness? Confidence they tell me is the great boon; but alas! in what shall I confide. I am nothing, or only an imaginary something, and God is not. Is it surprising that Aristotle, the keenest thinker of the crew should exclaim when near his end: "I have lived in anxiety."

A man may be reasoned to the conclusion that he is not a responsible being, yet so long as there is a spark of manliness, or sanity left within him he can not rid himself of the feeling that he is responsible, that he is a free agent. Hence since this feeling or Spirit is all that makes us men, do we exercise good judgment by trying to quench it, by endeavoring to "rid our minds by reason of all the terror of the unknown." Is it not wisdom to develop this feeling by our manliness, by cultivating a fear of God? What confidence can I have in, or respect can I have for a God whom I can not offend?

PHILOS.

UPON WHOM DOES IT REST.

UPON a much discussed and to some an unpopular doctrine, we wish at this time to address you, dear Herald, and from the brethren and sisters who peruse your columns with such interest from week to week we ask a prayerful consideration of what we have to say. It may be we have nothing new to say, but we are never tired ourselves of hearing how the light of truth dawned upon other minds, and perhaps we are not, in this respect, so very different from our brothers and sisters.

We have no doubt that a friend of ours, when reading this, will recall to mind an occasion when we were led to say, "Without the doctrine of tithing, could that stupendous iniquity in Utah ever have been carried to the extent it has? I do not know about tithing, but one thing is certain, if it is not taught in the gospel—was not re-enacted by the Savior, I will not believe it, neither obey it."

At the time of speaking this, it was not only the expression of our lips, but was the sincere thought of the heart; and later than this we recall saying to Bishop Blakeslee, "If we ever obey the law of tithing (unless our present state of feelings change) it will be because we are well assured that it is right to return to the Lord a portion of what he has blessed us with, and not because we believe in tithing as a law; for the New Testament Scriptures seem plainly to indicate a different plan of giving." In the mean time, however, we have thought much about it, and read the Book of Mormon and the New Testament Scriptures with reference entirely to this matter, and we may just as well confess at once that we wanted it proven by writings with which Joseph Smith had had nothing to do. If it was so proven in our mind the matter would be settled forever; it would henceforth become to us as much a part of our faith as repentance or baptism for the remission of sins; but if not so proven, then there would always remain a doubt—a question open for the devil to help us discuss—as to whether it was not an addition to the gospel.

Thus reading and thus thinking, we came to the third chapter of Paul's letter to the Hebrew brethren, and in the first verse we read: "Wherefore holy brethren, partakers of the heavenly calling, consider the Apostle and High Priest of our profession, Christ Jesus."

In this consideration of our great High Priest, we were first led to inquire: How came he to be exalted to this office? "So also Christ glorified not himself to be made a high priest; but he that said unto him, Thou art my Son, to-day have I begotten thee."—Heb. 5: 5. If then Christ is our High Priest, to what order of the priesthood does he belong?

"Called of God a high priest after the order of Melchisedec."—Heb. 5: 10. Christ was made a high priest after the order of Melchisedec. We came next to ask what peculiar features especially distinguishes this priesthood from all others, and we found, "But this man, because he continueth ever, hath an unchangeable priesthood."—Heb. 7: 24.

Now, if Jesus Christ is the Apostle and High Priest of our profession, his priesthood being after the order of Melchisedec, which priesthood is unchangeable, then it follows as a conclusion from which we can not escape, that whatever ordinances pertained to this priesthood in the days of Melchisedec, pertain to it in our day. Like the gospel of which it forms a part, it is everlasting. Like God whose order it is, it is "the same yesterday, to-day and forever." Superior to the law? Yes; far superior; and the chief argument used by Paul in proof of its superiority is the fact that Abraham, to whom the gospel had been preached, "gave a tenth part of all," thereby confessing its superiority. And not only from Abraham did this high priest receive tithes, but receiving them of Abraham was equivalent to receiving them from Levi, or the Levitical priesthood, for they were his descendants, and as Paul expresses it, still in his (Abraham's) loins. It has been said, and truly, that it was a tenth part of the spoils taken by Abraham from the ten kings, which he gave to Melchisedec when he was returning from their slaughter, as recorded in Gen. 14: 18. But this does not invalidate the statement made, "To whom also Abraham gave a tenth part of all;" nor yet,—"And verily they that are of the sons of Levi, who receive the office of the priesthood, have a commandment to take tithes of the people according to the law, that is of their brethren, though they come out of the loins of Abraham. But he whose descent is not counted from them, received tithes of Abraham, and blessed him that had the promises."—Heb. 7: 5, 6.

So far from invalidating, it proves most conclusively that, if tithing pertained to the law of Moses, it also and first pertained to the gospel of the Son of God. We have purposely used King James' translation of the Bible, and find it abundantly strong upon this point.

Once Paul says, "a tenth part of all;" once he writes, "received tithes;" and once, "a tenth part of the spoils." Now, granting that at the time he met Melchisedec, Abraham paid him a tenth of the spoils, it is only in perfect harmony with the law of tithing. After having paid "a tenth part of all," he was faithful to give a tenth of his increase,—the spoils he had just taken, —and we would not have to draw very largely upon our imagination to suppose that he returned by the way of Salem for that express purpose. Thus following our great High Priest, it seems that the way has been very short in reaching a positive conclusion upon the matter. It was short after the light of truth dawned upon our pathway; but to this subject we have given days and weeks of thought; and the prayer of our soul before we sat down to write this was, If we are going to defend the wrong, O God, darken our minds; but if it is right, give us light, and lead our thoughts!

To our minds this conclusion is unavoidable: Either we must deny all divine authority as connected with the call of Christ's ministers, or we must acknowledge that with that authority to preach the gospel, God has connected the means for supplying the temporal wants of his ambassadors, just as surely as their spiritual ones, and we stand condemned as one who has robbed God. Tithing we have never paid. Now, in what we have further to say, we do not want to be understood as wishing to screen ourselves, but simply to state a few facts, and leave those upon whom they have a bearing to ponder upon them.

We are aware that from time to time through the Herald and the medium of conference reports, this subject has been discussed; but in all the conversations we ever had with the elders of the church, in all the sermons we ever heard, (with one exception), in the church, never yet had it been said to us, You are under obligation to pay tithing, until Bishop Blakeslee, some two months since, in a Christian spirit, and yet in a plain and fearless manner, as one who felt that he had a duty to discharge regardless of man or the face of man, explained to us the law and our duty in connection therewith. For this we honor him, because he was not ashamed of the gospel of Christ before a dying worm; and it may be that in the judgment day, he himself will be astonished to know the influence resulting from his straightforward, fearless, christian talk with us. Go on, Bro. Blakeslee; we entreat you, in the name of the Master. Souls are perishing all around us, who but for the neglect of the execution of God's law might be gathered as sheaves into his garner. The work before you is one of the most ungrateful ones which could possibly be assigned to a human being, especially in the present condition of the church; but if God be for you, what matter who is against you!

The command of God has come to the Twelve and the bishopric of his church upon this subject in a more solemn and binding manner than any commandment in this dispensation. "As I live, saith the Lord, in the manner ye execute this matter, so shall ye be judged in the day of judgment."

Because there was none higher, God hath sworn by himself. We are firmly persuaded that the people, as a rule are willing to obey the law when they understand it, and therefore, if it is not executed, the responsibility will rest upon the ministry who fail to teach it, and the twelve and bishops who fail to execute it.

We are almost persuaded that there are those who are afraid to plainly assert and teach this as a part of the gospel order. They are afraid to demand from the children of the kingdom the small amount of one tenth of their possessions towards carrying on the work of God. If any such there be, to our mind the feeling they have is all there is to be ashamed of. Earthly institutions, earthly potentates, politicians, kings and priest-craft have to stop and consider these things; but the man of God never. What is the will of God? should be the only question ever in his mind. Neither popularity with the world nor the church, can come within the range of the vision of that servant whose eye is single to the glory of God. Fear of man can have no place in the heart of one who truly fears God and desires to give to him all the honor and glory.

Before closing we wish to refer to a few passages of scripture bearing upon free will offerings, but which at one time seemed to our mind to be opposed to tithing: "Take heed that ye do not your alms before men, to be seen of them; otherwise ye have no reward of your Father which is in heaven." The reason for this warning is very obvious—"to be seen of them"—but apart from the vanity which in this case would underlie the act, thus entirely annulling its virtue, it has no bearing whatever upon tithing. Tithes are not alms, nor is God a beggar, that we should think of bestowing alms upon him! "Render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's and unto God the things that are God's."

It has never been once supposed that we must not pray in public because the Savior in the same connection says: "But thou, when thou prayest enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut thy door, pray to thy Father which is in secret.

By alms we understand a free-will offering—that which it is optional with us bestow or withhold, as circumstances may govern us. But not thus with tithes; "Render to God the things that are God's."

Again: "Now concerning the collection for the Saints, as I have given order to the churches of Galatia, even so do ye. Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him, that there be no gatherings when I come. And when I come, whomsoever ye approve by your letters, them will I send to bring your liberality unto Jerusalem."—1 Cor. 16; 1-3.

This collection which the Saints were to lay by in store against the time Paul should come, is called by him their liberality; and if we turn to the 24th chapter of Acts and 17th verse we there find the specific use to which it was put. Paul says: "Now after many years I came to bring alms to my nation and offerings."

Again let us remember that neither alms nor offerings can take the place of tithing. These apparently were contributions, sent by the generous Saints of Corinth and Galatia to their poor brethren at Jerusalem; but were not a part of what Christ commanded to "Render unto God."

We know that earthly governments can not carry out the object for which they were instituted without money; therefore, every one who has any taxable property is taxed for the purpose of supporting the Government. "Render unto Caesar," said Jesus, "the things that are Caesar's." That it is often misused does not excuse us from rendering. God's kingdom, even though as yet set up only in the hearts of his people, requires money to enable his ministers to preach the gospel; and those who are so fond of quoting the Savior's injunction to "take neither purse nor scrip," should remember that afterwards he said unto them: "But now he that hath a purse let him take it, and likewise his scrip."

Twenty-three years ago the Lord spake to his servants through Joseph Smith in regard to the law of tithing. To-day the conference has thirty accredited elders in the mission field whose average support amounts to two hundred and forty-five dollars per annum. By accredited we mean those who have taken appointments from the Conference and draw upon the Bishop for support.

There is a membership of twenty thousand, (at a low estimate), and if each member gave the small sum of fifty cents a month, the result would be one hundred and twenty thousand yearly, which would sustain four hundred and ninety ministers of the gospel of Christ in the field, when now there are only thirty. We merely state facts, but it is a solemn thought, and the question comes home to us: How many souls might have been gathered in by these four hundred and sixty elders in the space of twenty-three years?

Of one thing we are firmly persuaded in our own minds, which is this, that the present condition of the church is largely owing to the neglect of this one revelation. Think of it, you who were called upon to execute it, as you may; had not God foreseen the trouble which was coming, he would never have deemed it necessary to give a charge in a manner so solemn, calling the especial attention of the Twelve and Bishopric to their duties in connection with his law. Thousands have had the testimony of the Holy Spirit confirming to them the truth and divine authority of it; and although we have not had this, we believe it was given by the Holy Spirit, and we should look upon any one as a very bungling deceiver indeed, who upon his first accession to the leadership of a free people, would pull so strongly upon their pockets, as many esteem the law of tithing pulls, and yet from that time until he has grown gray in service of this same people, labor with both hands and brain for the support of himself and family, never striving to put that law into execution. Does this conduct savor of self interested policy?

Again we say, Think of it, not only you who were called upon to execute it, but you who are members of the body, and consequently bound to obey it, and we who have not obeyed it will see to it that our conscience is made clear of longer continuing in the sin of disobedience, just as soon as God will open the way before us.

EXAMINE YOURSELVES.

"EXAMINE yourselves, whether ye be in the faith. Prove your own selves."

Now to examine myself according to the text, I must confess myself poor, sickly, and, still worse, I am a little in debt.

Some time ago, in the dead of the night, as I was studying on the cause of my poverty, I thought I saw the Bishop's Agent with satchel in hand coming right in the house, and in the satchel he had a book, and he wanted the names of every member in the church in it, with some little change (be it ever so little), opposite the name. As quick as thought it struck me with sorrow that my name was not in his book, and could not be put there just now for want of means. I began to show him the reason why. I showed him the large family I had to maintain, and how ragged they were, and showed him the four beds we had to sleep in, and that they did not have more than enough to keep the occupants of two warm in cold weather. Now when he saw the situation he changed the topic of conversation. Still I felt sorry that my name was not on his book, for I wanted to see the progress of the good work; means will help it. I often think what can be the true cause of my poverty and sickness, and consulting my conscience she thinks she can tell me the cause and remedy. Hear her:

Conscience.—"Just a few weeks ago, as you were talking with a neighbor, you told him that more than half of the preachers of the present day are rank infidels; and you are an Elder, and in part, anyway, an infidel. And I should think it wise for those who live in glass houses to first see who they throw stones at."

Elder.—"Stop, Conscience, stop! If any body else's conscience put such a charge against me I would put him out of the house; but as it is my own conscience, I beg for the proof of that charge."

Conscience.—"Turn to Doctrine and Covenants 86, and read the 'Word of Wisdom.' It says that tobacco is not for the body, and is not good for man. Now you must confess that twenty-five cents worth of it is consumed with you every week, and about the same amount in coffee, too. A man's deeds speak louder of what he is than all his words can do. Now leave off using tobacco, tea and coffee, and it will raise you one little step from poverty, and remember that the saying is that charity commences at home, and that the Lord helps those who try to help themselves. Now, if you had the twenty-eight dollars you spent last year for tobacco and coffee, you could go to the store to-day and buy boots, shoes, clothing and stuff for bedding that would cheer up your wife and children. And consider that the coffee and tobacco were not food nor raiment; they did not nourish anything but lust. I must say with the good book, 'They are not good for man.'"

Elder.—"I must admit that I am guilty of the charge. But I see others and more prominent Elders than myself using it, freely, too."

Conscience.—"Hold on! That will not do. Examine yourselves; not your brothers, sisters, nor neighbors; but every one himself must give an account of the deeds in the flesh, whether good or evil."

Elder.—"I am truly puzzled as to what to do. There seems nothing for me to do but to seek for repentance, and do better from henceforth; and peradventure I may be able to find it."

Conscience.—"The next thing in order for you, if you want to help yourself out of that muddle is to let two or three of your largest children be put out to the neighbors to work. Remember the old saying, 'A boy is a boy, two boys are half a boy, and three boys are no boy at all.' You have hardly anything for them to do at home, and your oldest boy can be hired out for fair wages next year, and be clothed and schooled in winter in the bargain. The girl will be good for her board and clothing and winter schooling, too. The next boy may find employment on the same terms. Now, you need not go five nor ten miles to find them good homes. Would not that help you—three less to feed and clothe? Yes; verily."

Elder.—"O my Conscience! That is something an American can't think of! Let my children out as slaves? If I do this I will be out of fashion; and—and—I think you are not right there, any how; for I consider even a good conscience is not a genuine criterion to go by; for I consider Saul of Tarsus' case. He worshipped the Lord with all good conscience, even when he persecuted the Saints. He called it good conscience."

Conscience.—"You are a slave to your lusts, and tax yourself to be in bondage. So I beg you to quit it, so the gospel can make you free. You see it is contrary to good reason and logic for a slave to offer freedom to anybody. Offering something you do not enjoy yourself, is absurd. O quit it, and your little ones will have cause to rejoice and your wife to praise the Lord."

Elder.—"Well, my Conscience; I do not dispute your word. To put my children out may help me to get out of poverty; but it sounds strange and ridiculous to me."

Conscience.—"You need not look at it in that way at all; for circumstances create necessities. You have nothing hardly for them to do; and if you had, it would change the case. In the old countries they put the little birds out of the nest just as soon as they are able to fly, and earn their living, because it is a necessity. The old birds have more on hand than they can attend to. So take a lesson from the fowls of the air."

Elder.—"Well, well, my conscience, that does sound somewhat like good logic, sure; and it puts me in a quandary what to do. I pause and consider, but find nothing will do but repent and do better in the future. Therefore I kneel and pray:—'O God, my Heavenly Father, I have sinned by my lusts and have deprived my family of the needs of life thereby. Father, I pray for the spirit of repentance. Bid me see and consider well my case, and let me abhor the weed for evermore. I confess that I am not worthy to have what I ask thee, but, Father, Jesus thy Son is worthy,—the Lamb that was slain on Calvary for me, and not for me only, but for the sins of all this world. He said, whatsoever we should ask in his name, it would be granted unto us, if we would come in faith, and doubt nothing. And, Father, thou knowest that I have confidence in thy promises; for I have found thee true and faithful to all thy promises to me. Therefore I doubt not. Grant me the desire of my heart, in true repentance; and from henceforth give neither poverty nor riches either; for thou knowest that I desire to serve thee to the end. Pass by all of my imperfections, short comings and sins of mind, words and deeds. Give thy Spirit to me, that I may be led and guided into all truth and righteousness, and glorify thy name from henceforth and forever. Amen.'"

Reader, I have examined myself; proved myself; and found myself not in the faith altogether. So pray for me, and I will do the same for you; for in unity is strength. I remain yours humbly, JOAN MONROY.

OUR WORDS.

OF all the gifts which the creator has bestowed upon his creatures, perhaps there is none greater than the power of speech, and it is certain that no blessing has been more sadly perverted and abused. "The tongue is a little member, and boasteth great things."—James 3:5. The wise man informs us that life and death are in the power of the tongue; and our Savior says that by our words we shall be justified or condemned. "If any man offend not in word, the same is a perfect man, and able also to bridle the whole body."—James 3:2. When we realize that "out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." We see the need of a thorough cleansing of the fountain, that the stream issuing from it may be pure. Jesus has left us an example that we should follow in his steps. He "did not sin, neither was guile found in his mouth." "As he which hath called you is holy, so be ye holy in all manner of conversation." Our precious Savior "was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin." He endured trials and sufferings such as we can never know; but no words of murmuring, or impatience ever fell from his lips.

When he was reviled, he reviled not again; when he suffered, he threatened not, he was ever ready to speak words of love and tenderness, to sympathize with the afflicted, and to kindly reprove the erring; and even in the agonies of death he prayed for his murderers. Are we followers of this perfect example of holiness, and do words of anger or impatience and fretfulness ever pass our lips? Do we try to injure those who have injured us, instead of obeying the instruction of the Master in Matt, 18:15? Do we talk of the faults of others in their absence, and judge them harshly? Read James 4:11, 12: "Speak not evil one of another, brethren. He that speaketh evil of his brother, and judgeth his brother, speaketh evil of the law; thou art not a doer of the law, but a judge. There is one law giver, who is able to save and to destroy; who art thou that judgest another?" Do we indulge in foolish talking and jesting, forgetting that for every idle word we speak we must give account in the day of judgment? Or if we have, through the grace of God put away these things, are there not still greater victories for us to attain? Is our conversation in heaven from whence we look for the appearing of our Savior? "Seeing then," says the apostle, "that all these things shall be dissolved, what manner of persons ought ye to be in all holy conversation and godliness." We are not our own; Jesus has bought us with his own precious blood. All the talents which he has given us belong to him and he expects us to use them to his glory.

O, that we might realize this, that our tongues might be sanctified to his service. If we truly love the Lord with all our heart; if he is to us "the chiefest among ten thousand, and altogether lovely," we shall delight to speak to others of his charms; we shall long to "tell to all around what a dear Savior we have found." His praises will flow spontaneously from our lips. "Whoso offereth praise glorifieth me; and to him that ordereth his conversation aright will I show the salvation of God."—Ps. 50:23.

If we realize fully the shortness of time, and the greatness of the work before us, we shall feel that we have no time for idle or unprofitable conversation. If our treasure is laid up in heaven; if our hearts are there, we shall love to talk of our heavenly home. The glories in reserve for the people of God will so enrapture our hearts that it will be our greatest pleasure to speak of them to others.

Oh! let us no longer talk about the trials of the way. Let us not talk of darkness and discouragement; but let us talk of the "blessed hope," and inspire in our own hearts, and in the hearts of those around us, faith, hope, and courage. "Let the words of my mouth, and the meditations of my heart be acceptable in thy sight, O Lord, my strength, and my redeemer."—Ps. 19:19. Let us as Latter Day Saints think and talk more of that

"Happy day, when earth so bright
In Eden robes shall bloom again."

The Christian's hope is soon to be realized; our heavenly home is almost in sight, and it is time that we learn to speak to one another in regard to these things.

"The Lord is coming! let this be
"The herald note of jubilee;
"And when we meet and when we part,
"The salutation from the heart."

Miscellaneous.

DECATUR DISTRICT.

The March conference of the above district will convene at Lamoni, on the 13th inst., at ten o'clock, as previously appointed. It will be necessary that suitable arrangements be made about caring for those attending the General Conference, April 6th, and that delegates to that conference be then chosen.

H. A. STEBBINS, Dist. Pres.

NOTICES.

Whereas the resolution of general conference, in reference to members of the church removing to a distance requires that the parties so removing connect themselves with the branch nearest to where they reside, and as there are the following parties whose whereabouts are unknown to the Eden branch, we hereby request them to report to us by the 24th day of June, 1886, or their name will be transferred to the scattered list on the district record. The following are requested to report: Wm. W. Scott, Tillman Hollis, Clarinda McCutchen. Report to James M. Scott, at New Providence, Clark county, Indiana.

JAMES M. SCOTT, Pres.

LEONARD SCOTT, Clerk.

The shock holders of the First United Order of Enoch will meet at Lamoni, Iowa, April 12th, '86.

The branches and parts of branches of the Kewanee district are hereby earnestly requested to report to our district conference, convening at Kewanee, March 12th, at two o'clock. We wish to transact such business as may come before us on that day, and devote the other two to the preaching of the word. Let us know your wishes and desires in regard to the work in your respective localities. Let all who can accept the cordial invitation of the Kewanee Saints, and be present.

J. W. TERRY, Dist. Pres.

I feel impressed to request the Saints of the Pittsburg district to fast and have a special prayer service on Sunday, March 20th, 1886, for the benefit of the sick in our midst, especially Sr. Eve Smith and Bro. Parsons, of Pittsburg, Pa. Bro. and Sr. Sheldon of Warnock, Ohio, also for the prosperity of the work in the district, that the special blessing of God may attend the coming session of General Conference.

G. T. GRIFFITHS.

CHURCH SECRETARY'S NOTICE.

The attention of district presidents and clerks is called to the resolution of the General Conference of September, 1875, which resolution was again affirmed in October, 1876, as follows:

"Resolved, that each organized district of the church, and each branch not in an organized district, throughout the world, be requested to make out an annual statistical report, covering and designating all changes up to the last day of each year."

It is desirable, in fact quite necessary according to this rule, that district officials should see to this matter in good season, and that they should make an extra effort to obtain reports from delinquent branches, such as will cover the dates specified in the above resolution, and that they keep such an account from year to year as will enable them to make such annual reports correctly. It requires some care and labor, but if the rule is lived to, the results will be very satisfactory to the whole church, as well as to the districts themselves. And the earlier these reports are sent the better it will be for me in my work before conference convenes. Send early in March, please.

The ministry would also confer a favor by sending their reports in good season; and those who attend if they will make out and hand in at the beginning of conference, or a day or two previous, they will oblige.

H. A. STEBBINS.

MARRIED.

MIDDLETON—SALTER.—At the residence of the father of the bride, Bro. John W. Salter, near Harlan, Shelby county, Iowa, February 28th, 1886, by Elder J. W. Chatburn, Mr. Charles Middleton and Sr. Ida May Salter. May peace, contentment, and the love of God be theirs to enjoy through life.

DIED.

ROBERTSON.—At West Belleville, Illinois, February 3d, 1886, Ellsworth, infant son of Andrew E. and Elizabeth Robertson, aged 23 days. Funeral services by brethren Thomas Angel and William Jacques.

McGLAUGHLIN.—At Keokuk, Iowa, February 14th, 1886, sister Katie, daughter of Bro. John G. and Sr. Sarah McGlaughlin, aged 25 years and 7 days. She was a member of the Keokuk branch, a true Saint, waited patiently her Savior's call, and passed peacefully away in hope of a glorious resurrection.

"Another hand is beck'ning us,
Another call is given;
And glows once more with angel's steps,
The path that leads to heaven.
Unto our Father's will alone,
One thought hath reconciled—
That He whose love exceedeth ours,
Hath taken home his child."

Conference Minutes.

CENTRAL KANSAS.

Hopkins, reported by letter. J. B. Jarvis, Wm. Gurwell, D. Munns; Priest J. McDougal; Teacher W. Thatcher, reported. Bishop's agent's report for the last three months: sent to the Bishop $17.75, on hand $8.75. W. Hopkins was continued. A license was granted to Elder W. Gurwell. Griffith George was appointed delegate to General Conference, his expenses to be paid by the district. Preaching on Saturday evening by Elder J. Buckley, assisted by G. George. Sunday forenoon preaching by D. Powell, assisted by H. Parker. Prayer and testimony meeting in the afternoon, conducted by W. Hopkins and D. Williams. Preaching in the evening by H. Green, assisted by D. Williams. The authorities of the church and district were sustained. Adjourned to meet at Fanning, Kansas, May 15th and 16th, 1886.

WESTERN WISCONSIN.

This district conference convened at the Excelsior branch in Richland county, Wisconsin, January 9th, 1886, at ten o'clock. Bro. A. L. Whiteaker, president; W. A. McDowell, clerk. Branch reports.—Excelsior 12; 1 baptized, 3 received by letter; A. V. Closson, president. Wheatville 13, J. S. Whiteaker, president. Elders' reports.—A. L. Whiteaker, W. A. McDowell (baptized 1), F. M. Cooper, A. V. Closson, J. W. Whiteaker and J. S. Whiteaker. Bishop's agent, A. V. Closson: on hand last report $9.45, received $1.50; paid out for district expenses 55c, balance on hand $10.40. A. L. Whiteaker and A. V. Closson, committee appointed to visit delinquent members of the district, reported: In visiting those members we found the most of them quite firm in the faith. Some are not letting their light shine before the world, and think such lack faith and works. If they lived up to duty, it would make them alive in the work of God. Report received and committee discharged. A. V. Closson was appointed delegate to report this district in the next General Conference. A. L. Whiteaker was sustained president, and W. A. McDowell clerk of this district. All the spiritual authorities of the church were also sustained. Preaching in the evening by J. W. Whiteaker and A. V. Closson. On Sunday forenoon preaching by F. M. Cooper. Sacrament and testimony meeting in the afternoon, in charge of A. L. Whiteaker and W. A. McDowell. Preaching in the evening by A. L. and J. W. Whiteaker. Adjourned to meet at the Wheatville branch, Crawford county, Wisconsin, June 12th and 13th, 1886, at ten o'clock.

EXIT L. L. LUSE.

REV. L. L. LUSE of Wilber, Nebraska, the man who obtained the services of Rev. Clark Braden to come to Wilber and kill, lay out, bury, and preach the funeral of Mormonism at that place, and aided in the process, may be traced by those who desired to know of his fate and whereabouts by the following from the Nebraska City, Nebraska, News, of February 20th:

"LIT OUT.—Wilber, Nebraska, Feb. 19th.—The Rev. L. L. Luse, late pastor of the M. E. Church, and the "responsible" editor of the Blade, quietly packed his grip and stole away between two days, leaving numerous creditors to mourn his loss. The First National Bank is forcing a chattel mortgage of about $2,000 on $600-worth of property. Hon. F. I. Foss, of Crete, is reported a suffering creditor. Since his wife left him last summer he has kept "batch" in his office, cooking his own "sow-belly." Of late he has circulated among our people, on account of reports about certain nocturnal visits to his office. So secluded had he become the last two months that he was known as the "Wilber ground hog."

We waited until March 10th before concluding that there might be truth in the dispatch; but on the 10th we received a copy of the Opposition, published at Wilber, for February 25th, when the rumor was confirmed. The same paper contains the notice of a chattel mortgage sale of the presses and material of the Blue Valley Blade, Rev. Luse's paper, to be made in April 21st, to pay the sum of one thousand nine hundred and ninety-one dollars and twenty cents, in favor of Messrs. J. A. Paddock, O. H. Smith, H. Cole, C. W. Meeker, and J. N. Van Duin on an assignment to the First National Bank, Wilber.

We were assured by Mr. Luse when at Wilber that over twelve hundred dollars of this amount was for money and expenses incurred by him in getting Rev. Braden to Wilber and in an agreement with Braden to publish the Braden-Kelley debate. Mr. Luse's statement to Bro. Robert M. Elvin and myself was: "I gained nothing out of the affair, but lost prestige and money; you people gained both honor and numbers. You have no need to complain." Comment is needless.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Ques.—Can a person having withdrawn his name from the church because of unbelief and dissatisfaction, be received again without rebaptism, if he so desires?

Ans.—We so understand. By vote of the church that granted the withdrawal.

CALLS.

WE are constantly receiving letters from the various fields occupied by the Elders, and the branches, stating the desires of the writers, and others whom they represent, that an Elder, or Elders should be sent to labor in the places whence they write. Some of these letters are from brethren and sisters who are living remote from any branch, and who have not heard a sermon by the Elders of the church for months, and even years; others are from those who live in branches, some of them for years, and in which there are Elders.

Bro. O. E. Cleveland writes from Annex, West Virginia, that the little branch of six, to which he belongs is widely scattered. He has tried to interest the people and keep the work in motion, but apparently with little effect. He has repeatedly asked for aid from the travelling ministry, but no help has been sent him. He feels discouraged in asking further.

Bro. Cleveland is only one of numbers in similar condition; and the calls, are seemingly equally urgent every where. Not long ago Bro. James Scott wrote from Indiana; most earnestly pleading that some one would be sent, but especially that either Bro. W. W. Blair, or the Senior Editor would come. He deemed it important that the work should be cared for there, and there is no doubt he was correct.

Thus from the north to the south, the east and the west, these letters calling for help in the ministerial field come to us. We read them anxiously; and are by no means indifferent to them. But we are utterly powerless to respond to them in accordance with the requests they make.

We rejoice that the people are waking up to the necessity of hearing the truth. We are glad that the Saints, as a rule, are doing what they can to adorn their profession; and thus to preach by example as well as by precept. We are pleased that the Elders and Saints are moved by anxiety when they perceive the willingness to hear.

We are not pleased, however, when we reflect how unequal seems the means at our command to supply the urgent calls for preachers. We are not glad when we consider the lone condition of many of the Saints who are so diligently striving for good to come to their fellows, and we are sad when we know that in the awakening of the people, so few, comparatively, would obey the truth, or even hear it complacently when preached to them.

We sometimes think, (and we hope that the Saints will pardon the thought), that some of these urgent calls are made without sufficient consideration of the matter involved in them. The most of the HERALD readers know about how many elders are at the disposal of the conference, and in the missionary field. Many know who the laborers are; and from the HERALD, are informed from time to time where they are laboring. To take any one of these men from the field where he is at work, to send him to another in which the demand is no more urgent than in the place where he is, requires time and money. When established in the new field another call is to be filled and another change requires the same change, time and expense. We can not personally control these changes, and we sometimes feel that the brethren who write us do not consider the difficulties we labor under, or rightly appreciate our reasons for not complying with the calls they make, or they would not feel that we neglected them or ignored their requests. Gladly, too gladly, would we send the gospel messengers from the rivers (Missouri and Mississippi) to the ends of the earth, were men and money at our command. It ought to be a matter of congratulation to some who are peculiarly tenacious and fearful about the danger of the exercise of the "one man power," that so far as we are concerned, we control neither their brains, nor their pockets for gospel work. However much anxiety we may have to force the army of elders forward, it is only by slow degrees and easy marching that the phalanx moves.

But what a field does their enquiries for laborers open up to the younger portion of the men of the church; those whose years are before them; those who can put force and fire into their gospel work. We would that the Lord's Spirit might rest upon these by the score, that they would enter and occupy. We hope sincerely; and indeed, we have the right to expect that the local elders will use every laudable effort to increase the army of laborers, being careful only to avoid choosing whom the Lord does not call.

One most effectual way for the local ministry to preach the gospel is for them to stop quarrelling among themselves. We can think of a branch being sadly deficient of Spiritual life, because that the Elders are at loggerheads about something, each side claiming that the other is wrong, and so killing the influence of all.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

WE received a long letter from Bro. F. B. Moyer, Conejos, Colorado, highly commendatory of the HERALD, and expressing strong faith in the stand the church has taken in accepting the three books as standards. Bro. Moyer states that the polygamists of Colorado are quite enraged because of the arrest of Pres. George Q. Cannon, and the persistency of the Court in enforcing the Edmunds law. We have not room for the letter.

A great number of questions for the Query Column have been sent in since our return home, many of which require considerable time to answer, which we have not yet had to give to them. One, a series of questions of wide range, on church policy and government, from a good brother in the field would require answers that we are not prepared to give, and have not the time to look up at present. We hope none will be offended by our failure to answer their questions as no offense is intended.

Sr. Hannah Huffman writes from Bainbridge, Ohio, March 8th, that she has tried to get her neighbors interested in the work; but they are greatly prejudiced, even not permitting any reading matter she may offer them to have place in their houses.

The Expositor for March, came in smiling this month, its pages glowing with thought and defensive warfare. We welcome it as a co-worker, as from the start we wished it to continue.

The Lamoni Gazette, Lamoni's secular newspaper, is much improved in its issue for March 11th. It really looks like it had come to stay.

The Weekly Censor, edited by Mrs. E. A. Harriman, and published at Los Angeles, California, in continuation of the Western Wave, was laid on our table this week by kindness of Uncle Samuel, and our cousins of the Route Agencies. The copy sent us is the 23d number of volume 3; and, if we judge the purpose of the paper by this copy it is a red-hot temperance sheet, devoted to that cause in California. Good. Let the Golden State redeem itself; and at no more fitting place could the work begin than at "the Angels;" and woman as the most interested and affected by the curse of drunkenness, is a trusty missionary for the work.

Bro. Austin Olson writes from the Mission Branch, Lasalle county, Illinois, that Bro. Lull would be there during the week beginning March 7th, to give them a few sermons. The winter has been hard at the Mission.

Bro. Sherman I. Smith, writes from Hopkins, Allegan Co., Michigan, March 5th: "We are still trying to keep the faith. We know of no other that will save.—We have not been looking for another. * * * We still rejoice in the truth."

We have Welsh Hymn Books bound in full leather with marbled edges, containing 393 hymns in Welsh language and 30 in English, for sale at the office, price 60 cents postage paid.

Bro. R. M. Bradley writes from Webb City, Missouri, March 6th, that the Saints of that place were still worth persecution. Rev. Hacker, of the Baptists, had publicly stated that the Saints there were "all polygamious Mormons." Bro. Evan Davis had been preaching there. Two were baptized on February 28th.

Many evidences reach us of the visitation of God's people by dream, by manifestation and by vision. Sr. M. Williams, of Cheney, Washington Territory, reports a manifestation in which she recognized the Savior, which while it awed her, yet filled her heart with love, joy and peace.

Sr. Maggie Kelso, writes cheerfully from Braidwood, Illinois. She says that Elder C. C. Frisbie of Streator, had been over and spoken to them several times, as she thought with good liberty of the Spirit. It is evident that the labors of Bro. J. S. Patterson in the Northern Illinois District has wrought good to the Saints.

Bro. J. W. Vernon, of Oakland, California, sends us a copy of a letter said to have been written by the Savior, eighteen years after the crucifixion; but as it is rather catholic in its provisions we have not room for it. It may have been written by a man named Jesus; but as there were and are many of these among the dwellers in Catholic countries, we are not safe in supposing it to have been Christ, or Jesus the Christ.

Bro. George W. Ames writes from Brockton, Massachusetts, March 3d, that the branch there numbering twenty-eight is doing what they can to keep together and exemplifying the word by example as by precept. Bro. Ames states that Bro. M. H. Bond has been doing an excellent work as a missionary in the district; that he is a discreet counsellor and an excellent expounder of the Scriptures.

Bro. F. C. Warnky writes from Independence, March 5th, that the labors of Brn. John H. Lake and R. J. Anthony were productive of good to the Saints there.

Bro. Columbus Scott was at St. Joseph, Missouri, for a number of days, returned the week ending March 8th, and reports a pleasant time of labor in the city. Five were added to the Church during his stay there.

The minutes of the North-East Missouri District should read: "Bro. Robert Thurchley sustained as Bishop's Agent for the ensuing three months" instead of Bro. W. H. Bybee, as now found in said minutes. Correction is made by order of Bro. J. T. Williams, of Bevier, Missouri.

Bro. G. W. Carter, of Richmond, Ray county, Missouri, sent us an extract from the N. W. Christian Review, a scurrilous rehash of old-time scandals rewritten for this most religious Review. We do not wonder that Bro. Carter told them that such "stuff came from the evil powers," and that the Scriptures state that "just such men would arise in the last days."

Bro. John Shippy, Dental Surgeon, has removed his office from the north side, to two doors south of Bro. Wilson Hudson's store, on east side of Linden street, where he will take pleasure in attending to all calls in his profession.

We have received from Bro. James A. McIntosh, Alliston, Ontario, a neat little pamphlet of sixteen pages, entitled "Baptism, or a view of the many objections urged against Immersion," written by himself. It is good, argumentative article, and well adopted to meet a class of men everywhere met with. They may be obtained by addressing Bro. McIntosh, Box 7, Alliston, Ontario; price five cents each, or six for twenty-five cents.

THE Rockland (Maine) Opinion, for March 5th, has the following:

"THEOLOGICAL EXCITEMENT IN ST. GEORGE.

"There is great excitement in this town over a four nights' debate between a Latter Day Saint Elder by the name of Sheehy and a preacher for the Advents by the name of Plummer, in the free church at Martinsville. The question in dispute was whether people are unconscious between death and the resurrection. Plummer affirmed, Sheehy denied. King James' translation of the bible to be the standard of proof. Men to fight to a finish. The debate was instructive and interesting and brought people out to hear that had not been to meeting for years, and vowed that they would not go. The Latter Day Saint is a smart speaker, and the sailors say that have been to hear the big guns in our large cities that he is the smartest they ever heard, H. W. Beecher not excepted. His doctrine is so much different from that preached by the different sects that the people are getting interested, and the old bibles that have lain on the shelves for years all covered with dust come down now with a bang. This Latter Day Saint Elder has no connection with the polygamous Mormons of Salt Lake, but the church that he represents stands high with the Government and is coöperating with it to put down polygamy by sending missionaries to preach to them to give up their evil practices and be obedient to the laws of the land.

"OBSERVER.

"TENANT'S HARBOR, February 28."

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. Hiram Rathbun of Lansing, Michigan, wrote a card March 10th:

"I am in the depot expecting to start for Clear Lake, Indiana, to administer to the sick, and to baptize, having been sent for in haste. I have just received a letter from Ann Arbor, that I am wanted there last of next week. Two of the M. Ds. want to hear me on the latter day work. Monday-afternoon I baptized Bro. and Sr. White and Bro. George McClintock, of Dimondale. This will be good news, especially to brethren Kelley, Scott and E. C. Briggs. We are busy and hopeful, and, thank the Lord, strong in the faith."

Bro. A. Guinand says:

"I do not know which it is, whether the Herald is progressing in interest, or that it is I that is growing in appreciation of its cheering contents; for each number received seems to be the best. During my stay in Nebraska, Missouri, and Kansas, my neighbors knew that I took the Herald, from the fact that I made it a point, prompted by the pleasure derived therefrom, to circulate it in their midst. All seemed to be pleased with it, though they were all not of that profession. I take much comfort in searching the sublime truths of those sacred books; and feel that we need not be afraid, or ashamed of such good reading as the Herald."

Bro. Roderick May wrote from Independence, Missouri, March 8th:

"We are getting along very well here, considering the size of our branch. We have very good meetings; the Lord is blessing us much with his Spirit, and oft gives us counsel and consolation. We have sickness and deaths among us; some of the noble ones have left us and gone to rest. Who next? Echo answers Who! Several have been baptized lately; others are at the door. Our preaching meetings are well attended by outsiders, and good interest is manifested. Our church is too small now. We need a church to hold about fifteen hundred people; we will have to come to it after awhile. There are a great many Latter Day Saints in this country, but have not got their names yet; the scales are getting loose and I hope will soon fall off their eyes. We don't want to buy out all the people, but we do want to convert them. I don't believe that there was ever a time when the Saints were more favored than they are at this time in this country. The consoling promise that the Lord made to the church through the Prophet Joseph is felt here very much; that is, that the Saints should find grace and favor in the eyes of the people, and may the Lord help us to be still more worthy, is my prayer."

THE condition of feeling and diplomacy between the Prime Minister of the German empire, Prince Bismarck, and Pope Leo XIII, may be seen from the following, which we reproduce from the Chicago Tribune of February 16th:

"GOING PENITENTLY TO CANOSSA."

HAUGHTY BISMARCK BENDING TO THE POPE—
THE MAY LAWS TO BE REVOKED.

London, Feb. 15.—One of the numbers of the Fortnightly Review, published last September, contained an article calling attention to the evident relaxing of the strained relations existing between Prince Bismarck and the Pope, and predicting that the influence of Baron von Schloezer, Prussian representative at the Vatican, would ultimately bring about a complete reconciliation and establish an amicable understanding. This prediction has found justification in the proceedings of the Prussian House of Lords to-day, where a bill was deposited providing for an almost complete revocation of the May laws. True, there were a few reservations, but they were so insignificant that they can have no weight against the conclusion that the Chancellor has capitulated to the Pope. The Liberals are frantic, and unani- mously declare that "Bismarck has gone to Canossa." The Clericals are complacent, outwardly at least. They accept Prince Bismarck's Popish policy, and expect the restoration of silver in return. Their support is necessary to the suppression of Socialism, and the recent London outbreak, which can not fail to encourage the German Socialists, will necessarily tend to strength-the alliance between the Chancellor and the Clerical party, which was formed with a view to mutual assistance in legislation looking toward the establishment of a Government monopoly of the traffic in spirits and a bi-metallic currency.

The bill enacts that young Catholics destined for the priesthood shall be admitted to the Royal Gymnasias, where they will receive a gratuitous education and be provided with a residence free of charge. Similar privileges shall be granted to Catholic theological students in the universities and ecclesiastical seminaries, but in the latter cases the students will remain subject to the State supervision. Meanwhile the ecclesiastical tribunal has been abolished, the Ministry of State deciding dispute between the inferior and superior clergy when required.

Berlin, Feb. 15.—There is great excitement in the Landtag over apparently well-authenticated reports that Prince Bismarck is preparing to yield entirely to the Vatican in the religious dispute which has been waged by Prussia against the Papacy for the last fifteen years. A bill has been deposited by the Government with the Upper House of the Landtag revoking, with a few trivial exception, all the features of the May laws which have been so odious to the Catholics of Germany.

[The controversy between Bismarck and the Vatican dates from the foundation of the German Empire in 1871. As soon as the new Empire was established it became necessary to take decisive measures in dealing with the Vatican. If the infallibility of the Pope was accepted the independence of the Empire must be forfeited. Catholic Bishops and other clergy were subsidized by the Government; the question then arose: Should they be amenable to it, or to the Roman Curia? Should the Church or should the Empire control the school? The answer was first given July 8, 1871, when the Roman Catholic department of the Cultus Ministry was abolished, soon followed by a law intrusting education to the State. The emissaries of Pius IX.—called Ultramontanes because they came from beyond the mountains, that is, from Rome—struggled to retain their influence; but a "pulpit paragraph" was inserted in the existing law prohibiting ultramontane agitation. The Pope was not long in retaliating. May 2, 1872, he refused to receive Cardinal Hohenlohe as German Ambassador, thereby openly severing diplomatic relations between himself and Kaiser Wilhelm. Twelve days later Prince Bismarck openly declared in the Reichstag: "Of this you may be sure: we will not go to Canossa, either in our ecclesiastical or political relations." Nothing could be more explicit than this allusion to that famous episode in the Middle Ages when the Emperor Henry IV., after years of stubborn warfare, went penitent and barefoot to Canossa to ask pardon of haughty Hildebrand.

Bismarck boasted that such humiliation should never come to him. He recked not of Pope Pius, for at that time he did not need Pope Pius' help. On the contrary he could best serve his own ends and he could bind more firmly the imperial fetters upon the not altogether willing German States by openly warring with the Vatican. In order to put his victory to a practical test, laws were introduced into the Prussian Parliament in which specific measures were proposed for counteracting the past influence of the Romish clergy and for cutting off its opportunities for work in the future. These laws, known by the name of Dr.

Falk—Bismarck's Minister of Public Worship and Education—were four in number. The first forbade making of a punishment incurred for a religious offense a civil and social stigma; the second attacked the clergy in their stronghold by obliging all candidates to ecclesiastical offices to be graduates of a State gymnasium and university; the third prescribed the steps to be taken by a person wishing to leave the Roman Catholic Church; and the fourth established a royal court for the settlement of clerical difficulties. These laws were passed in the month of May, 1873—whence they are frequently called the "May Laws"—and their promulgation at once widened the chasm between Berlin and Rome. A further statute which was accepted by the Reichstag in the following year achieved the supremacy of the State. The clergy were forbidden to discharge their functions without civil permission, and the Imperial Government assumed the power of imprisoning those ecclesiastics who having been removed from any office, persisted in performing its functions.

Jan. 25, 1875, another law was passed making civil marriage obligatory and binding, and giving permission to the Romish clergy to marry civilly. The arrest of numerous clergymen who transgressed the May Laws, and the stringent enforcement of those laws, warned the Pope that he had nothing to hope from Prince Bismarck. Pius was consistent in denouncing this anti-clerical legislation, and he was consistent in refusing to reopen any tentative diplomatic negotiations, because to have done so would have been to contradict his favorite belief in his own infallibility. For five or six years there were no official relations between the Vatican and Berlin. In the interval Pius IX died, being succeeded by Leo XIII. The situation in Prussia changed. As the Empire grew more cohesive, the enemies of Prince Bismarck became bolder, and the Chancellor, who had laughed at a Papal alliance, began to find that even that might be necessary for him. In 1873, to curb the power of clericals had been purely a question of principle; in 1882 there was no talk of principle. It was expedient; and with Bismarck expedience is the sole motive. Justice and truth he uses, just as he uses injustice and tricks, when he believes that they will serve his purpose.

Therefore, during the last two or three years a gradual reconciliation has been going on between him and the Vatican. At first, in 1881, a modus vivendi was established, and since that time the cordiality has grown, causing negotiations toward the resumption of diplomatic relations in 1882; the introduction in 1883 of a new Prussian Church bill materially modifying the regulations imposed upon the Catholic clergy; the selection of the Pope last year as the mediator in the Spanish-German dispute over the Carolines; and in the last few weeks by the decoration of Bismarck at the hands of the Pope and a general interchange of "taffy." The Iron Chancellor has at last gone penitently to Canossa.]

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY SISTER "FRANCES."

"A life of beauty lends to all it sees
The beauty of its thought;
And fairest forms and sweetest harmonies
Make glad its way unsought."

AMUSEMENTS CONTINUED.

IN view of our own experiences, of the facts which from day to day come under our observation, we are firmly persuaded that the only amusement we can innocently offer our children are such as will help to develop upon this earth, the talents and faculties which will fit them to be true subjects and ornaments of the kingdom the Lord will establish, when he comes to reign with his Saints. All the vast realm of thought is open before them, and the "cultured brain" is capable of boundless action. The earnest age in which we live demands earnest action, and we do feel that parents are much oftener to blame than children, for the paths in which they walk. If we begin by allowing the years of tender childhood to slip away without teaching our little ones the beauty of industry (not by precept or homilies which they can not understand) but simply by helping them to obey the laws of the nature God had given them, and as soon as they are old enough to be contaminated by the influence of others, yield to the unthinking requests of other parents no wiser than we are—dress up our children and send them out night after night, simply to idle away the best hours of their existence and learn to love the momentary excitement which shatters their nerves and unfits them for the real duties of life, sapping the foundation God himself has laid for their happiness here and hereafter—if we do this, what can we expect?

As we may guide the physical faculties of the children, patiently assisting them to perform the little acts of helping they are so anxious to do, thus laying a firm foundation for habits of physical industry, so may we in like manner establish mental habits which will follow them through all time. Mothers, in the fear of God, we beseech you, don't defer the hour of this training one moment beyond the time when the babe in your arms looks up into your face, and by its conscious glance appeals to you, silently asking "Is it right?"

This is the instinct God himself gave the child, and it is as if from that time into your hands the sacred trust had been committed, even as Jesus upon the cross committed his mother to the care of the disciple he loved.

If each parent in the church to-day were individually asked, "Don't you want your children to be saved in the kingdom of God?" do you think any one would answer, No! So far from it, we believe there does not live the parent on earth who would want to bear and bring up children for the devil.

But say many, "Let them have a good time while they are young, cares will come soon enough! Let them sow their wild oats, they will settle down in good time!"

We claim that by following the way the Lord has plainly indicated, they will have double the amount of unalloyed happiness, and when they come to these cares they will not be the cares to them that they would have been, for they will be fully prepared to meet them, and as to the wild oats, the devil will do enough of that kind of sowing for ourselves and children too without any help from us.

Shall we then have no social gatherings, where the boys and girls may meet together, enjoying mutual intercourse to the benefit of both? Assuredly, yes; but let them be of an elevating character, such as shall cultivate the talent God has given them.

Music, reading, declamations, lectures, concerts, dialogues—what a boundless field for the scope of the intellect; and at home, how many games, such as chess, dominoes, authors, and countless others will furnish them recreation when alone and amusement when young friends drop in. If birthdays, &c., must be honored by social gatherings, at least let the hours be suited to the age of our children.

We have written more than we intended upon this subject, but have scarcely touched upon even the most important points. May we not hope to draw forth from many of our sisters, expressions of their views upon it. If we differ in opinion we may gain light, by comparing our views. The "Home Column" is for mutual benefit and improvement, and in presenting its readers with such letters as follow we feel that we are giving them gems of Christian experience—jewels which the aged have found as they passed, sorrowing and suffering, along the journey of life. They are not the trifling articles such as pass current in many departments of this kind, but have been baptized in prayer, and the spirit of prayer is following them. May God bless the writers, as well as those for whose benefit they were written!

THE articles proffered us by "Almira" will be very acceptable indeed. We hope to hear from her often. We have been waiting for a letter from "mother Landers," it will surely come, also from a host of others who are coming up "to the help of the Lord against the mighty." Some we know by name, some we do not, but we shall know them at no distant time. Those in the church who have the ability, can not afford to look forth with indifference "upon the fields already whitening to the harvest." They will do their share.

We are in receipt of letters from L. Lloyd, Perla Wild, Aunt Ruth, and sister Margaret Head.

ONE word before we close, of the meeting from which we have just come in (testimony meeting at the chapel in the afternoon of March 7th) God was pleased to meet with his people and poured out such a blessing as there was scarcely room to contain. In prophecy, tongues and Spirit of prayerful humility, were the Saints baptized anew and made to rejoice in the God and Rock of their salvation. The scattered ones, the straying ones, were brought into remembrance before God and his blessings promised richly to the faithful.

Lift up your heads ye that are lonely and bowed down, for as God liveth, your redemption draweth nigh. Be faithful, for though none of like faith may be near you, the Master is very near unto those of his fold who call upon him in faith, and he who numbers even the hairs of your heads will never leave nor forsake you!

LAMONI, IOWA, March 11th, 1886.

RIGOR FOR YOUNG LIFE.

"How much the fond friends of young folks need this home word from Dr. Bellows:

"Life is an earnest battle. It is no trifle to have a nature fearfully and wonderfully made—strong desires that must be avoided, fatal proclivities that must be resisted and overcome. And therefore it is that we so much need that early training, that early discipline which it is hard to see whether parents and governors are more slow to apply, or children and youth more reluctant to receive. Let the fault lie where it will, it is a fatal fault: Success, usefulness, virtue, happiness, peace, salvation, heaven—all depend upon our entering life fitly armed in suitable moral harness; with proper convictions as to what the exposures, dangers and temptation of body and soul are, and with such settled rules, habits and principles, such a trained conscience, such an established reverence for God and duty, as must deprive the world of all its power to deceive and betray.

"Those of us who are parents, should remember that it is we who put the harness on our children. They don't gird themselves. It is we then who are mainly responsible for its want of strength, its loose, ill-fitting character. In our tenderness, we refuse to draw the buckles where they will hold, and if the shoulder chafes or reddens ever so little with the strap, we are the first to remove it. We are sorry to think that the young bosom must contract its inspirations beneath so sturdy a coat. We lift the sandals and plead for the feet that are to press their rough seams; but where are our recollections, that we do not think of the sharpness of the spear that that heavy corselet is to resist, the weight of the battle-axe that leathern head-piece is to annul, the roughness of the road those stout shoes are to make smooth? Is it not because of the tenderness of the flesh that we need our leathern mail, and are we to dread our armor more than our enemy? That is the miscalculation of life; the sacrifice of our life-long safety, to our immediate convenience; of our whole usefulness and honor and triumph as men and women to our short season, careless, self-indulgent, negligent happiness, and freedom from self-imposed restraint as boys and girls, as young men and maidens."

BEING a wife and mother I feel especially interested in this portion of our much valued paper, the Herald, and any thought or word of encouragement I might pen, I would gladly contribute. But while in offering my help I feel my poverty of ability, still I have the thought to encourage me of the acceptance of the poor widow's mite, and I realize if all who might by putting forth an effort, would cry inability, that which would be both interesting and beneficial we would fail to get. I have this word of encouragement to write this time. I have felt much benefitted in reading this column already.

Many times as I have been meditating over the greatness of the duty of bringing up a family, my heart has almost sank in despair. Truly there is a great responsibility resting upon all mothers. Think of the different dispositions to govern. The many positions we are fitting men and women to fill. Are we as mothers giving this most important thought a prayerful consideration? Are we all putting our thoughts at work to see what we can do that will make them most useful in life? I hope this is our daily thought and prayer. I see more and more as the days pass by that the clothing and feeding our children well is but a small part of the great duty resting upon us; the parents develop their mental and moral characters. To illustrate my idea, If I have the watchcare of one of the little lambs of God, and do not seek to understand its disposition, its capabilities to become useful, and seek to nourish its God-given talents, I have sadly neglected my duty, which will tell plainer as the child advances toward manhood or womanhood.

If we have some choice evergreen or flower root, we will use every means to preserve it from the frost, from insects or anything we know would do our treasure injury. To express how much greater the care for our dear little ones should be than for our choice plants or flowers, I will call your attention to the language of Christ in St. Matthew 10th chapter 26th and 27th verses; and in connection with the foregoing let me say, I have a passionate love for flowers, in fact for all the lovely scenes of nature, and had it not been for the good the gospel has been to me, such things would have been the treasure of my heart, which treasure would have been earthly and out of place, for we are instructed to lay up treasures in heaven where moth and rust do not corrupt or thieves break in and steal.

In the country where we live, (Nebraska), the prairie is a beautiful picture to behold in the season of roses. Their beautiful tinge of pink of every shade, and sweet scent, make the earth seem most beautiful. But their life is short, and it would seem to me that their purpose was only to make us appreciate the Great Giver of all good. And while he has told us what there is for us to enjoy that is lasting and its joy ceases not, He has surrounded us with everything here to make our lives pleasant and happy. Let us as mothers try to draw a picture of the home God has provided for his children, and try to come as near making such a one for ours as our best efforts will enable us to do.

Your sister in the one faith,
MRS. GEO. S. HYDE.

THE DUTY OF PARENTS.

In the article on Home Government in the Herald of February 6th, the writer speaks of habits of disobedience and giving away to temper becoming fixed. In the same manner I believe habits of idleness will become fixed. We should bring up our children to be useful, that they may be a benefit to society and not a nuisance to those around them. I believe it a Christian duty to teach our children to work. If they are brought up without it, it will be hard for them to learn it when they get older. Habits of idleness like all others habits are easier formed than broken. A writer has said "as is the daughter, for a general rule (to which no doubt there may be exceptions) so is the wife and the mother." I often wonder how mothers can bring up their children in the way many do. Instead of having the children help them, they will wait on their children. Some will say, "It is easier to do the work themselves than bother with children. Every one to their own opinion. For my part I prefer their help. But, if it were as they say, we should teach them no matter what the trouble may be. God has given our children to us for a blessing. We should try to do our duty by them in every respect. Some will make the excuse that their girls are not healthy enough to work. We need not give them heavier work than they are able to do, and it will be far better to do some light work than play all the time. If we do not bring up our children to work, how can we teach them the course of a Christian life? I once heard a man say he did not believe there was such a thing as a lazy Christian; I am of the same opinion. If we bring our children up to be industrious; our girls that they may make good wives and mothers, our boys that they may make good husbands and fathers, then we will be leading them a step at least toward a Christian life.

OVERCOME.

"The moated wall and battle-ship may fail,
But safe shall justice prove;
Stronger than greaves of brass or iron mail
The panoply of love."

Dear Sister Frances:—I feel to rejoice in your work, and am willing to cast in my mite, occasionally. Hope that others of the sisters feel it a privilege as well as a duty to do likewise. Happy are we if we have learned wisdom by what we have suffered in the things of the world; and if such is the case, it is only reasonable duty to counsel others. The household is unmistakably our kingdom, and happy shall we be, as well as our subjects, if we rule with a scepter of love. Some may feel to repulse this idea, because their husbands and children, to their view, are of a cold unyielding nature. We would say to such, you are laboring under a fearful mistake, and one that will leave its impressions through time and eternity. We believe that steady unflinching kindness, that springs from love, will tame the cold stern nature of both man and beast. Some may feel that this idea will work good in all places except their own household; but it will even there make ninety-five per cent difference in the doings of husband and children, and more than that in the happiness of the wife and mother.

"But," says one "perhaps you have not had such trials as I have, so you can afford to talk." Show me a person of mature years who never had trials, and you will show something that never did, and never will exist on this earth. Our Creator designed that we should have trials in this life, for he has said that he would have a tried people. Those who do not marry have their trials, and may wish to change situations; but the married have their trials too. So in either situation, it is wisdom to discipline ourselves, and the inmates of the household, by calm unflinching kindness in the performance of every duty, no matter how menial or how trying to one's nature. We all have unpleasant duties, but when we compare them with what Christ has done for us, how can we remain unyielding?

"A wise woman buildeth her own household," so of course an unwise one teareth down her own household. No doubt the reader has seen illustrations of both kinds. May it be our joy to illustrate the former. Our land is cursed with many fearful wrecks of humanity, the fruit of injudicious building of the household—all caused by the parents neglecting to overcome the evils that sprang up in their own hearts, and in their household. He that over cometh has the promise of the "white robes," and access to the "tree of life."

How then about those who do not overcome? The reverse, of course. "Overcome, overcome what?" enquires one. "O, some mighty obstacle by which one may win a name," replies another. But we are inclined to think that the little trials, such as we all meet each day are included, and in the end are more weighty than those which the world call mighty. "How can we overcome them?" Meet each one as it presents itself, with steady nerve and undaunted eye, and perform every duty as though we saw the eye of God fixed upon us. His grace is sufficient for every emergency, and if by it we overcome that which is placed before us, we shall surely be rewarded, whether our trials are great or small.

He that is faithful in little would be faithful in much. Then sisters, let us be mindful of the little things. May heaven's choicest blessings rest upon the Herald and its supporters, and also upon all the periodicals of the church. The light seems to be shining more brightly on their pages, and it will shine forth to the world through them, breaking down prejudice and error, and building up truth.

ALMIRA.

DENNISPORT, Mass., Feb. 10th.

Editors Herald.:—I am still trying to hold up the light of the gospel to the people according to the measure of faith and intelligence that I possess. I can truly say that God has blessed me with his Holy Spirit in many ways as I have tried to dispel the darkness that covers the minds of the people in relation to the truth as it has been from before the foundation of the world, as it does now, and eternally will exist in the mind of "Him who inhabiteth eternity," and who hath decreed according to the counsels of his own will that which has been, and is, and that which will be, and to whom he revealeth his will and purposes through the law of faith in Christ his Son. My last was written at Plymouth, Massachusetts. Since then I have visited Little Compton, Rhode Island, also with the assistance of Bro. Charles Coombs and the visiting brethren from Attleboro, Mass., opened a new place at Adamsville, R. I., concerning which I see by Herald, Bro. Pearce has written. We continued the meetings after these brethren left, until the following Monday, with good audiences, excellent attention, and liberty in presenting the word. The extreme cold, exhaustion, etc., counseled and governed, with the Spirit's warning voice, and we left them hungry for the word, which may be sometimes the better way than to exhaust and wear away a congregation until but few are left. Have preached since in Attleboro and Providence, also visited Newport, the great and fashionable watering place of the east. While viewing the stately grounds and palaces of the Bennetts and Lorillards of New York, and merchant princes of this country, we might, had our faith been that of the infidel, (that it is all of life to live in this imperfect and unsatisfactory state), have been a little envious, and have mourned that the ways of men in this life are so unequal. But we did not, for we knew that we were in possession of a hope well grounded in practical evidences, to which, we had every reason to believe, the princes of this world, with all their wealth, are strangers. The grace and "fashion of this world passeth away," and the glory of man is "like the flower of grass which withereth and falleth away, but the word of the Lord endureth forever; and this is the word, which by the gospel is preached unto" us. Happy is the man who believeth this word, and who has learned to put his trust in the living God.

One week ago last Saturday our conference convened at this place, closing on the Monday following. Its sessions were marked by spiritual power and evidence of God's favor. Ocean Hall was packed on Sunday while the word was preached. I am still here "holding the fort" every night to good audiences, with excellent attention and serious interest on the part of many. Have baptized five since the conference, more are almost and altogether persuaded of the truth of our message, and we hope to trouble the waters of the Atlantic ocean again ere we depart.

I am a firm believer in the gathering in "the dispensation of the fulness of times." "Out of Zion the perfection of beauty," God will shine, sometime in the future. In Zion and Jerusalem will yet be a people who shall honor and dignify, by their wisdom and their holiness, the Creator and their God. But it does not seem to be so near for us, at least as a people. When I look over the history of the past, even from the time when God undertook under Moses to purify a people through faith and trust in Him who so oft had proved their Almighty Friend and Father in the past, whose will it was to give them a land filled with every delight, blessed with the counsels of heaven and the surety of the possession of a life of loftiest ambition and ideals, when they turned their backs upon the counsel of Moses, the servant of the Most High, who said, "I call heaven and earth to witness against you this day, that I have set before you life and death, blessing and cursing, * * * for I know that after my death ye will utterly corrupt yourselves," &c. And why did he know. Because they had proved themselves stiff necked, a rebellious and faithless people. "How often would I have gathered you," said the Savior weeping. Why is not my faith so strong concerning ourselves as a people? Because of our indifference in the study of the word of the Lord to us, our lack of diligence and faith in the promises of God. "The word spoken did not profit" the ancients, because "not mixed with faith in those that heard it." How much better, after the history of these long and bitter experiences before us by which to profit, are the saints and people of God in our day? "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth from the mouth of God."

After all, however, the work of salvation is an individual one. Zion will be built, and her scattered children gathered. Jerusalem shall be inhabited according to the word of the Lord. But the day of our trial will not have been accomplished, and the eternal reward secured, until we shall have learned to conquer self! "He that overcometh shall inherit all things, and I will be his God and he shall be my son; but the fearful and unbelieving," &c., shall be partakers of the second death, and shall not know the glorious quickening power of the first resurrection, nor participate in the great millennial.

"Now the works of the flesh are manifest, which are these: adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, strife, seditions, heresies, envyings, murders, drunkenness, revelings, and such like, of the which I tell you before; as I have also told you in times past, that they which do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God."—Gal. 5:19. "Know ye not that the unrighteous shall not inherit the kingdom of God? Neither thieves, drunkards, nor extortioners." * * * "And such were some of you; but ye are washed; but ye are sanctified," &c. Can this be said of us, and that we are "justified by the Spirit of God, in the name of the Lord Jesus," in all we do? We shall never reign until we first learn to submit to discipline. He that is unfaithful in that which is least, can not be trusted with true riches. "Have thou authority over ten cities," will never be said of the individual that can not control one person. "No covetous man, who is an idolater, hath any inheritance in the kingdom of Christ and of God." The work of God is languishing; souls are perishing; there is a famine in the land—not of bread, nor of thirst for water; but of hearing the words of the Lord." Men are running to and fro, seeking the word of the Lord, and are not able to find it; while the servants of God are being forced from the field, in many places, that they may not incur the censure referred to by Paul in 1 Tim. 5:8. "Now the just shall live by faith, * * * we walk by faith." We say our religious sectarian neighbor is inconsistent because he does not believe nor practice that which he accepts as the word of God. How easy to

"Compound for sins we are inclined to,
By damning those we have no mind to."

The treasury is empty of tithes because the word spoken to us is not mixed with faith." We dare not trust the word of the Almighty who said "prove me." I seriously doubt whether a present from outside sources of a million of dollars would substantially benefit this church. Faith in, and obedience to, the law of God, a conscientious and honest deal with our heavenly Father concerning the law of increase, and of giving without grudge or covetousness as God has prospered us, would at once relieve the Bishop, send every man who can intelligently represent the kingdom of God in the field, and feel that his home was protected from legitimate want, while the blessings of God's Holy Spirit would bless the cheerful giver of God's bounty to him who thus proves himself a "worker together with God" and his brethren in the field, and his faith—not alone by his testimony in prayer meeting—but by his works. "If any man build upon this foundation, hay, wood," &c., "the day of God will reveal" how and with what material he has builded, for "the fire shall try every man's work." We ought, and it will be well for us if we have the courage, to make the practical test of our faith here, and eliminate from ourselves, by obedience to God's counsels, the dross and refuse before it passes into the final crucible. "Many shall be purified, and made white, and tried." "For behold the day cometh that shall burn as an oven, and all the proud," &c. How much more are we laying up treasures in heaven by helping to spread the gospel of salvation to an ignorant and sinful world, than we are spending on superfluities of dress? We may, and some of us will, gather to Zion; but that's not all,—the eternal law of cause and effect will prevail there as elsewhere, and the transition will not be sudden, nor eternal bliss secured, save through obedience. "Moreover the Lord saith, because the daughters of Zion are haughty, and walk with stretched forth necks, and wanton eyes, (deceiving with their eyes, Heb.), mincing as they go, (tripping nicely, Heb.) In that day the Lord will take away the bravery of their tinkling ornaments, their changeable suits of apparel, their mantles and wimples, and crisping pins, (or irons), the glasses and fine linen, and hoods, and veils." Instead of health, and sweet smell shall be offensive odor, "instead of well set hair, baldness; sackcloth and burning instead of beauty. Thy men shall fall by the sword," &c. Zion shall not escape punishment any more than Jerusalem. God will have a tried and a pure people, and the final "rest" will not be obtained until we learn obedience. And "In that day shall the branch of the Lord be beautiful and glorious; and the fruit of the earth shall be excellent and comely for them that are escaped of Israel." "And it shall come to pass that he that is left in Zion, and he that remaineth in Jerusalem, shall be called holy," etc., "when the Lord shall have washed away the filth of the daughters of Zion, and shall have purged the blood of Jerusalem from the midst thereof by the spirit of judgment, and the spirit of burning. And the Lord will create upon every dwelling place of Mount Zion, and upon her assemblies, a cloud by day and the shining of a flaming fire by night."—Isaiah 3d and 4th chapters.

God, through Moses, undertook to sanctify his chosen people through obedience, unto this glorious accomplishment, even in the wilderness at Sinai; Moses was obedient, and sanctified by faith, meekness, and purity, unto the beholding the face of God. Aaron, Nadab, Abihu, and seventy of the Elders com'ng—not near—yet saw the God of Israel, and there was under his feet as it were a paved work of sapphire stone, and as it were the very body of heaven in his clearness. This, through faith and obedience, I apprehend was something of the glory which Peter says "the angels desire to look into;" and which Paul says "we rejoice in hope of." "Gather my saints together unto me"—all of them?—those that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice;" for God will judge his people.—Ps. 50. It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God.

Out of Zion, the perfection of beauty, God will shine. The law of attraction—of like towards like—will there prevail, as certain and more clear than ever before. Are we being perfected in the beauty of holiness—so that we may endure the brightness of the glory to be revealed to the pure in heart? celestial law, and celestial glory? The trial of our faith will bring upon us many sorrows, and cause many bitter tears to flow; but we shall have never attained unto the ideal estate portrayed in the Apocalypse, when the days of sorrow and crying shall have been placed eternally behind us, and tears shall be forever wiped away, until we shall have overcome ourselves, our unlawful appetites, our covetousness, our envy and our pride. Zion can be perfected save through the law which God has given her.

How little do some of us heed the wisdom of God, or exercise living faith in his counsels, or try to do that which he has said was "pleasing" to him, that we may prove, still farther if need be by experiment, that which is reasonably true upon the face of its statement. Let us "search the Scriptures," and be not deceived, for God is not mocked. "Hear, ye that are afar off, what I have done; and ye that are near, acknowledge my might. The sinners in Zion are afraid; fearfulness hath surprised the hypocrites. Who among us shall dwell with the devouring fire? Who among us shall dwell with everlasting burnings?"

He that walketh righteously." "Look upon Zion the city of our solemnities. Thine eyes shall see Jerusalem a quiet habitation; a tabernacle that shall not be thrown down. Not one of the stakes thereof shall ever be removed; neither shall any of the cords thereof be broken; but there the glorious Lord will be."—Isa. 33: 15, 21.

FORT NIOBRARA, Neb., March 8th.

Dear Herald:—I have been a member of the church three years the twenty-fourth of next October. And I can say that I have never regretted the step I have taken, for I know this to be the work of God. I live eight miles from Fort Niobrara, and twelve from Valentine. We have no branch of the church here. There is only our family that belong to the church; we are seven in number; all belonging to the church except two, and they are too small. We have loaned the Herald to our neighbors, and some of them like them very much, and some do not. I think they have done some good and no harm. Bro. G. S. Hyde is proaching here in the school house; has a very good audience; has preached five sermons. There seems to be a few very much interested, and we think some will obey the truth. I ask an interest in all the Saints' prayers.

I remain your sister in Christ,

ELLA DONALDSON.

DANWAY, Ills., March 2d.

Brethren and Sisters:—If you will turn to the second chapter of Genesis you will find that God Almighty, after he had created Adam in his own image (that is, with a mind and a will, and moral feeling, which, though finite, were like his own), placed him in a beautiful garden. There, we are told, was every tree that is pleasant to the sight, and good for food; four rivers ran by it and the land was rich with gold and precious stones. When we think of a garden we think of a place that requires care and skill and attention to keep it in order. Place an unskilled man or a savage in a garden and he will soon turn it by his carelessness, or ignorance into a wilderness. We are not then to suppose that Adam, in the early days before he fell, had nothing to do in the Garden of Eden. On the contrary, we are told that he was put there to dress it and to keep it. Doubtless Adam had his time fully occupied, in order to keep the garden as beautiful as it was when God gave it into his care. He planted and watered, and weeded, and God gave the increase. He was the first man who labored together with God. There was nothing between him and his maker, Master and father. No jealousy, no envy, no fear, no sin. But after a while, as you know, Adam fell. And, though he was still allowed to labor together with God, he could not do his work with the same delight, nor with the same success. He no longer worked in the pleasant garden, but toiled in a field which brought forth thorns and thistles. His bread was earned by the sweat of his brow, and eaten in sorrow.

Now brethren, as it was with Adam, so it has been with all men since he was upon earth. We are his sons, but at the same time we are sons of God, and laborers together with God, as St. Paul tells us. It is true that we are fallen and sinful. There is no one here who has not sinned against God. But our sin does not shut us out from the privilege of being fellow-workers with God, but is the cause why our work, like Adam's, is attended with toil and sorrow and disappointment. The more we fall away from God the more toilsome and meaningless does our work become. The more we draw near to Him, not only in church on Sunday, but in daily life, the more will our work become like to that blessed work which Adam was given to do in the days of Paradise.

Bro. Blair:—I am sorry to say that the advantages for preaching the gospel are not so good here as in some other parts of the Lord's vineyard. Our congregations are small; but notwithstanding, I feel that the gospel must be preached as long as there is one soul to hear. For the Master has said, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned."—Mark 16: 17. Therefore the gospel will prove a "savor of life unto life" to those that hear and obey; and on the other hand it will prove a "savor of death unto death" to those that reject it. For God will judge all men by Jesus Christ, according to the gospel. Rom. 2: 16. We must work while the day lasts, for as Christ has said, the night will come when no man can work. As we have opportunity let us do good unto all men, especially unto them who are of the household of faith. We have a small church here in which we hold services every Sunday, and prayer meeting once in the week for the young folks. We have been blessed with a visit from our worthy brother, James Caffall, which has done us much good. His teaching was appreciated by the Saints and those not members of the church. We are in hopes that some were brought near the kingdom; near enough any how, to send for a Saints' Harp; and we trust the good work begun by him will still go on; and ere long some be added to the church. If there is any person, or persons wishing preaching in the State of Colorado, let them address me as above and I will try and answer the call.

Ever praying for the prosperity of Zion's cause,

JAMES KEMP.

INDEPENDENCE, Mo. March 2d.

Bro. Joseph:—I have been at this place since the 4th of February and have tried to be useful. I met with the brethren in district conference and had a pleasant time. The spirit of peace seemed to be enjoyed by all.

It was thought best by the officers of the district and branch to continue the meetings for a week; the preaching was done by brethren M. T. Short, R. J. Anthony and your humble servant. Seven were baptized. I trust the Saints were encouraged in the Christian warfare; as I presume, the Saints of this branch will admit the warfare is not ended, nor the crown given. But I can say that nearly all seem to be trying to be faithful so that they may be worthy to wear the crown when it shall be given by him that rewardeth all. There has been considerable sickness since I have been here. I have been called to assist to administer to several and to some with marked effect. So far as I am informed the branch is in fair condition and enjoying the Spirit of the Lord in their meetings. I have enjoyed my visit with the Saints and hope that love and peace may ever dwell with them, that truly they may eventually become the pure in heart that shall inherit Zion; that by and by the pure and the good of every land may rejoice to come and dwell with them in Zion when she shall enlarge her borders. Property is increasing in price very rapidly and all the land that can be bought between here and Kansas City is being bought at high prices. I was shown twenty-nine lots lying near the corporation line of this town that have been sold for fourteen thousand dollars, and they who bought them have refused twenty-five thousand. As the land of Zion is to be redeemed by purchase, and as the time has passed when the Lord said "here is wisdom," that the Saints should purchase all the land unto the line between Jew and Gentile, it would take a great amount of money to do so now. There are a few chances where the Saints that may wish to get a lot can do so at reasonable prices. Bro. Stephen Maloney has about forty lots in the south addition near the Chicago and Alton and the Missouri Pacific stations. He told me he could sell them readily if he would sell to the land speculators of Kansas City. But he wished the Saints to have the benefit, if they were not too slow about buying, for he could not hold them very long at the present prices. It is for the Saints to think of the matter and do as they may deem best. He offers his lots from $250 to $350; they are cheap in comparison to what other lots are selling for that are near them.

I have received good news from Canada, of some baptisms, and one marked case of healing. Hope the Lord will continue to bless the labors of his servants in the mission.

Yours in bonds,

JOHN H. LAKE.

NETAWAKA, Kan., March 6th.

Bro. Blair:—Please give me room to say that I fully endorse the article of brother F. Johnson under this head, "What Shall We Teach." If your answer is correct, then it is not safe to quibble or misconstrue the commandments to suit our foolish notion, being fully persuaded that it hinders the prosperity of the work of God. It will create discord, division and coldness; hence, the sooner we stop the better. We ought to fear God and learn wisdom, so that we become united together as Christ is in the Father. But some sing that we have to be merciful. Yes, that is right; when mercy is forced to the extreme it is out of place, and why; because it robs justice. The word of the Lord through the choice Seer, "Hearken and hear, O ye my people, saith the Lord and your God, ye whom I delight to bless with the greatest blessings; ye that hear me, and ye that hear me not will I curse, that have professed my name, with the heaviest cursings. Hearken, O ye elders of my church whom I have called; behold, I give unto you a commandment, that ye shall assemble yourselves together to agree upon my word, and by the prayer of your faith ye shall receive my law, that ye may know how to govern my church, and have all things right before me. And I will be your Ruler when I come; and behold I come quickly; and ye shall see that my law is kept. He that receiveth my law and doeth it the same is my disciple; and he that saith he receiveth it and doeth it not, the same is not my disciple, and shall be cast out from among you; for it is not meet that the things which belong to the children of the kingdom, should be given to them that are not worthy, or to dogs, or the pearls to be cast before swine."—Book of Covenants, sec. 41, pars. one and two. Surely this should put an end to all opinions of men; we are not safe to trifle with the things of God. Neither will the Spirit trifle with man. As for myself, I am satisfied with all the commandments God has given. I find no fault and shall believe all that will be revealed in the future through the proper channel. In conclusion, shall say, "Whosoever transgresseth and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ hath not God; he that abideth in the doctrine of Christ hath both the Father and the Son. If there come any unto you and bring not this doctrine, receive him not unto your house, neither bid him God speed. For he that biddeth him Godspeed is partaker of his evil deeds."—2 John 1:9-11.

Dear Herald:—I think you are rather slow in lauding our beloved President's mission to Utah, and how he has filled the bill in being mighty and strong, controlling himself, a fountain of truth, tenaciously clinging to what is written, uttering eternal words, holding the scepter of power to make them honorable men and women, &c. Oh, Utah, Utah! thou that killest the emigrants, and sendest across lots the poor, frost-bitten Saints of 1856. How oft would we have gathered you into honorable citizenship with God and man, but ye would not. Now your houses are being left desolate, and ye shall not see such a good opportunity again. J. W. ### STORY OF UTAH LIFE.

BY ONE WHO KNOWS.

OF the many tales told about the workings of the polygamic theory illustrative of the peculiar force brought to bear on first wives that proved to be opposed to the system, the following is given; of which ample proof may be presented if need be.

"Dear Herald:—You are, as I am aware, a welcome messenger to lovers of truth; and your pages are scanned faithfully for news, light and truth. I herewith send you a brief recital of the experience of one woman of many, a mother in Israel; told to me by herself not for publication, but to the sending of which to you I gained her consent; she stipulating only that the names of herself and others more directly interested in the events as they transpired should not be given; because the feelings of some would be wounded if their names appeared. In her recital of what is herein stated she told me that she had never related the matter to any outside of her own family. For this reason the names of her family, her husband, herself, and those connected with them in the scenes are not given; I being contented to refer to her as a mother in Israel; for she is most worthily entitled to that honorable distinction.

This now aged woman embraced the gospel in the early days of Nauvoo; was a witness to the trials and drivings of the Saints from there. She was also a witness of the first introduction of polygamy, with its heart-burnings and oppression. It was forced upon scores with all manner of "lying and deceiveableness of unrighteousness in them that perish." It came to the people as a "strong delusion." It came like the serpent that beguiled Eve in the Garden of Eden, with fair words and golden promises; and like the great anacanda he would first charm his victim, then get him in his slimy coils; once there he could compel submission, or crush at his will. Like Satan tempting the Savior of the world when he presented before him the kingdom of the world and the glory thereof, the Savior refused his generous offer with the words, "Get thee hence, Satan!"

But when he presents himself to frail humanity with the golden fruits of eternity of thrones, kingdoms, principalities and powers, he finds willing minds.

The first gilded promise which dazzled the eyes of the innocent at the introduction of the theory, was to select here, on the earth, a suitable companion for eternity, not to be a wife and companion here; but for holy companionship in the "sweet by and by."

This was the first step, according to the statement of this sister, taken toward the fastening of the great abomination of the last days upon the people of God.

Prior to the death of Joseph and Hyrum, she went to her father's home in the state of Missouri, to visit her people. During her stay there, Joseph and Hyrum were killed; and the Saints at Nauvoo were sorely pressed by the mob. Her husband visited her there and returned to Nauvoo, leaving her at her fathers. The people were then making preparation to leave. She finally returned to Nauvoo, to share the joys and pleasures, or the distresses and sorrows of her husband and her people, having no desire other than to meet whatever fortune or fate might await that people. When she reached Nauvoo she found the Saints pressed on every hand; the only alternative seeming to be to take departure for the wilderness of the far west.

All was bustle, confusion, preparing for an early exodus from the Beautiful City. Work was being urged on upon the Temple, the design being to complete it with the view to receive the endowment and the keys, so long talked of and hoped for. All were anxious to pass "through the Temple," before leaving the city and the state. Rooms had been fitted up, and it was currently reported that men and women occupied those rooms as husbands and wives. Unions were effected for eternity only, but those who had entered into them could not wait until time had passed, but desired and sought to enjoy those pleasures here before eternity began, and did so, using the Temple as the excuse and the occasion. This condition of things to this sister was a defiling of the temple of the living God, more heinous than was the temple defiled at Jerusalem, when the Savior said they had made it a den of thieves.

She learned that her husband had during her absence taken a second wife. This to her was the severest and saddest trial of her life. Her experience had been sad enough without this; but this cruel wrong; this invasion of the sacred precincts of her home; this wanton destruction of the peace, the pleasure, the joys of a hitherto happy home; this blight of confidence; this dethroning of love and placing in its stead jealousy, sorrow, heart-burnings; this, all this was too cruel to believe. To realize that instead of the hope and peace of the gospel of the crucified one, once the joy of the believing household, there were offered to her thirsty soul the gall and wormwood of this taunting cup. Under these changed, these cruelly changed then trying conditions she must make decision. Far from her kindred. Four little children, born under happier influences, to call her mother. What could she do. What should she do. Her love for her husband was unbounded. Was he not the husband of her youth, the father of her children. To leave him was to break her heart and die. To cling to him, like the tender ivy to the sturdy oak, was to suffer the torture of outraged affection. But she chose this rather than separation. She was his wife, he her husband; she could not, she would not relinquish her right, however keen the pangs abiding with him brought her. She elected to stay with him still.

Together they became exiles with others, and took up the line of march toward the setting sun. On the way, and before the company reached Winter Quarters, she was left with her four children to struggle along the best she could. Her husband had furnished her a team; but, careless of her needs, he took the special watchcare of his spiritual wife, leaving to her the care and anxieties of the journey with the four children. On the journey her little girl was taken sick. In her anxiety she sent for her husband. She wanted aid, sympathy; and looked to him in her need for both. He gave no heed to her message. Like the tender plant, exposed to the hot sands and burning sun, without the rain and the dew, must wither and die; so her little darling, she grew more and more ill. Her mother heart yearned over the fragile frame. She watched over it as none but a mother could. Slowly but surely the little life went and came until wasted and worn the frail body gave up the battle and died. Who shall describe the pain, distress, the anguish of this mother. No pen save that of the recording angel has ever written them. Years have passed since then, but her heart bleeds afresh at the remembrance of that experience.

At the death of her child she again sent for her husband. He came, his excuse for not coming before, being that he thought she was jealous of the woman with whom he was supplanting her. He was touched with grief and he wept over the body of his little girl. To make the narrow house to which the little one was to be consigned, a box belonging to the "spiritual wife" was taken. To this the owner objected; and a scene that pity says should not be depicted occurred. Enough to write, that the husband, and the objecting "spiritual wife" were rebuked by the authorities. In this box so wrangled over, the body of the little girl was laid away in a grave made at Garden Grove, Iowa; a few miles, dear Herald, from where your office now stands. From the time of this occurrence until the family reached Winter Quarters, the husband was more attentive to the mother and her children.

Of the trials endured at Council Bluffs, and other places; the strange events and works occurring there, much might be written. The woman first chosen as a "spiritual wife," to grace connubial life in the celestial world—in eternity—grew tired of the association on earth, and left her spiritual husband. The people had reached the valleys of the mountains; and with them our sister and her husband and family. The rules of uniting and separating had grown lax, and change was made easy. The pleasure of her husband's association untrammelled by what she had now learned to dread, yet bear as inevitable, was not permitted our sister long. Another woman (spiritual wife) in the place of the one that had fled from him was espoused. With her he settled in Salt Lake City. The wife, lawful, loving and true, he placed on a "ranch," (a farm) at Cottonwood; there to look after her children, and the stock, as best she could.

At this time there occurred a circumstance not possible except under the system then prevailing in Utah. The wife, stung by neglect, and outraged by contumely and scorn, had learned to hate polygamy, and became bitterly opposed to its practice by her husband, as well as outspoken against those who advocated it. The second woman by whom she had been supplanted in her husband's affections, known as wife (plural number two) number three, was a believer in the doctrine, in favor of its practice, and a believer also in the theory of "blood atonement." She believed, or affected to believe, that it was a great wrong for the first wife, with her hatred of polygamy and opposition to its practice by her husband, to have the charge, care and culture of her own children. Accordingly she and the husband went to Pres. Brigham Young, laid the case before him and asked for counsel. What Pres. Young told them the wife did not know, but she does know that her husband was counselled to execute the law of "blood atonement" upon her; or as she stated it, to "blood atone her." And if he would not, or felt that he could not, to appoint some other one to do it. At this the wife and mother revolted. She knew of the counsel and was faithfully guarded by day and night. One man holding a prominent position in the apostolic office, told her that she ought to be burned at the stake. That she was a rebellious woman and her proud spirit must be crushed, even if it required the terror of blood atonement, or the fagot.

This now persecuted wife knew that her husband had been set apart and ordained by the authorities of the church to do work of the sort named and threatened. That he acted under the direct counsel and command of those authorities. She had resolved to keep her own secrets and distress, and the knowledge of the deeds of her husband inviolate. This she had done. By no word or sign had she betrayed him; nor would she. There was but one way apparent for her to escape from the death she believed to be impending. That way she took acting upon the presentiment. She went to President Young and stated her case to him. He listened pleasantly and patiently, and when her story was done, he told her that he realized that her trials were great; that he sympathized with her; that she should go home and keep her children; that it would not be long until her husband would find out the difference between the pure gold and the dross. Not long after this interview, President Young, H. C. Kimball and J. M. Grant called at her house to visit and talk with her. Her trials and condition were again referred to by her, and talked over by all. Again Pres. Young spoke words of kindness and cheer to her; and told her that she was not the only one who had trials to undergo and endure in living according to the order of plural marriage. That it was a great trial to all who had entered into it. That the Lord must have a tried people. That they must be tried in all things, and that this was the greatest of all. That it was the greatest trial that Joseph had to endure. He told her that when Joseph received the revelation commanding polygamy, he refused. Then an angel appeared to Joseph with a drawn sword, and commanded him to teach and practice it. Joseph was still loth to comply, when the angel appeared the third time; and this time like the thunders of Mount Sinai, he commanded him. Joseph said that it was enough. After some other talk, Pres. Young and the others left her.

She knew the man and the men she had to deal with. And from what she knew of them and what she had learned concerning the counsel regarding herself, she saw but one way to escape the dread consequences threatening her. That way was to submit, as quiescently as she could, to the conditions under which she was placed. She resolved and acted according to that decision.

At the place where she was living there was a young woman, an orphan and friendless, left alone to battle with adversity as she could, alone and unassisted. Her husband wanted this woman, and perhaps only waited for the wife to cease opposing, or to be silenced, to take her as wife number four. To this orphan thus placed at the mercy of these unfortunate conditions, did this perplexed and envied wife turn; and with what good grace she might she did talk with her and learned of her willingness to enter the family, and to be sealed to the husband. In making the compact with this young woman, this wife of the husband's early manhood, proffered to yield the queenly right supposed to attach to the first wife in eternity, unto this later choice of her now exacting husband. Could arrogant treachery demand, could helpless submissiveness give more than this? The proffered queenly right was accepted by husband and maid. The wife submissive to the last excruciating measure of sacrifice, and in order to comply with the forms prescribed, went to Pres. Brigham Young, and asked of him whether it would be right for her, the wife, to give this young woman to her husband, like as Sarah of old gave her Hagar to Abraham. The President was pleased and told her: "Yes; come at your pleasure with your husband and the woman, and she should have this desire of her heart." Could travesty on the affection of the heart of woman be more complete than this?

The wife returned to her husband, told him of the arrangement she had made, and the three went together to the place where such sacrifices were made; and there this faithful, wronged companion, gave the selected victim to her husband as a token of her submission. Great God! If human hearts can feel sympathy for devotion and fidelity, and bleed at the recital of cruel wrongs inflicted on the innocent and helpless—weep now, for more cruel wrong was never perpetrated. Here on this altar of two-fold sacrifice this wife gave up to the third favorite of her human lord, the title of first wife; and according to the rule of polygamic wifehood resigned into these younger hands the queenly scepter, that she held by divine right as being the wife first chosen. "This was considered a sufficient sacrifice to atone for her rebellion, a sufficient restitution to avert the atonement of her blood." Forced to submit to a system that her soul abhorred, unknown to any but the searcher of hearts the anguish she endured, the pain of her torn and bleeding heart.

This woman had loved the gospel of the Redeemer in its purity. Her soul had in her youth been filled with joy and gladness in the hope of the life lying beyond the dark river. Light and peace here, and the prospect of eternal happiness over there, had made the world brighter and better. The principles of loving kindness by which a race were to be redeemed and crowned gave zest to life and peace passing under standing. How changed the condition.

That soul into whose life the principles of eternal justice had been impressed by the divine hand; upon the tablet of whose heart the law of God had been written, was subjected to the cruelest wrong. An outrage so gross that the pen hesitates to record it had been perpetrated upon that trusting soul. The sunlight of domestic hope faded; the spirit of peace departed from her hearthstone; her woman's regard for the holiness and purity of home had been crushed. One spark of hope and one only remained. She had been true to her allegiance to Christ. It was her love for him and his promise of life that had been used as the means to compel her sacrifice. In this she waited for relief.

It is not practicable to write the terrible trials, sad and bitter experiences that our sister passed through for years; until her husband had repeated his marriage experiment for the tenth time. Nine spiritual wives called him husband. To all these children were born; and in this family, as in all others of a similar bond, there were jealousies within and fightings without. In place of union there were division and constant strifes. What this sister tells in relation to her own family and experience is true of all the polygamic families known to her; and she was intimate with the families of all the leading men of the church. Tears in copious showers fell from overcharged hearts; until like clouds driven by the wind, the fountains were dried, the well springs of affection were sealed and failed, hearts and eyes grew hard and dry; bitterness only remained. Each mother felt that she had rights, and that these were not properly regarded; and from the time her offspring began to prattle it tried to stand in defense of its mother against others; and as it was decreed in olden times, "his hand was against every man, and every man's hand against him."

Amidst all these distracting scenes the faith of our sister in the gospel remained as the one spark of divine light and life in her broken heart. The spirit which had borne witness that Jesus was the Christ whispered patience and hope, and bade her trust on. While her constant, earnest, and fervent prayer was that the Day Star, now almost below the horizon of her hope, might rise in glory again and banish the mist and the darkness from the valley of her humility and despair.

By and by President Brigham Young and her husband became enemies. After thirty years of service, in which he had come and gone at the bidding of Brigham, he was turned over to the buffetings of Satan. He became an exile and fled for his life. For his faithful fidelity and service, and as a reward in recognition of the devotion with which he had obeyed commands, President Young had sealed ten women to him that his kingdom might be great in eternity. But Brigham turned upon him, and revoking the favors conferred, takes the keys, enters the "holy of holies," breaks the seals binding these ten virgins to the man he now strove to destroy, looses the women from their allegiance to him to whom they had been sealed by his own sanction, approval and direction, comes out and turns the key and closes the kingdom of heaven against him. His wives and his posterity were to be conferred upon one more worthy—the worthiness to be tried as his had been, and by the same man. The unsealed women all left him. The only companion that staid by him to comfort and cheer him, and to bear with him the displeasure of altered fortunes was his first, his only wife in God's sight, the one he had cruelly wronged in his day of mad adherence to sin and folly, she remained true to him, and to her he turned in his distress and misfortune. His property was scattered and squandered. When hunted and driven from place to place, his wife, now his only wife, the wife of his youth and her children remained faithful and true to him. In his hours of lonely watching they could and did speak cheerily and comfortingly to him by word and deed.

In this exile signs of light came to the afflicted family; hope sprang into being in their pathway; omens of the dawn of a better day appeared. Through the years of clouds and terror, she had retained her faith in the latter day work. The mission of Joseph the Seer was to her a reality. The gospel without polygamy had once been her stay and her staff. The hope that Joseph, the son of the martyr, would ultimately sound the recall to scattered Israel, and take up the work of his father, had buoyed her trust in many a dark hour. And when she and her family heard the news of the Reorganization, it was to them glad news indeed. Hope, the blessed hope of restored confidence and trust in the Christ as first received by her, lifted the shadows from heart and brain. They received the message carried by the Elders and are rejoicing in its truth, its majesty, and its glory.

Our sister has lived to lay her husband, restored to her undivided companionship, away in the grave, commending the man to the mercy of his God. And now she waits the coming of Him who seeth and taketh record, awarding rest to them who are faithful and endure.

All that need to be said in concluding this recital is, such devotion to an earthly companion has seldom been found. Our sister now in the close of three score and ten years allotted to man, "has fought a good fight, has kept the faith," and has honorably won the title, "a mother in Israel."

THE HABIT OF SCOLDING.

THE fact, universally admitted, that to theorize is easier than to practice, should not militate against a vindication of the right, to the discouragement of whatever mars the happiness and disturbs the tranquility of the peace-loving soul. My apology for writing this brief article is that I love to enter protest against every phase of evil, and hope to crucify its existence in the members of my own body. Comparatively but few in this probationary life are free from the sin and moral weakness of habitual "scolding." Many kind, affectionate, tender-hearted people give way to the pressure of this temptation and allow the organs of speech to become a scape valve for the unwholesome effusions of a troubled spirit. Unfortunately some seem to think that the circumstances under which they are placed are so trying as to justify this course. This I think is a delusion and a snare. Yielding to this habit deepens trouble, distracts the elements of peace and destroys domestic felicity. Every one who comes within its influence feels its blighting touch. It overshadows with gloom where cheer and sunshine would otherwise dwell. Every heart is saddened and joy dies upon the threshold of our hope as this deceptive phantom invades the sacred realm of domestic relationship. How shall we purge ourselves from this besetting sin? What evidence have we that to-morrow will be more propitious than to-day? Is the habit likely to become less without an effort to overcome it? Or is it not rather likely to increase with age and prove itself to be a great hindrance to our spiritual advance in life. Patience and gentleness were traits of the meek and lowly Jesus, and are of necessity features in the economy of redemption through Christ. The Holy Spirit will aid us to overcome. With those who are in Christ "old things" are to pass away and all things "become new," habitual scolding included.

WHAT SHALL WE TEACH.

"WHAT shall we teach" is suggestive in this day of skepticism. But I had supposed it a question pretty well settled in the minds of professed Latter Day Saints, as to the fundamental principles of the gospel; and that the specific details to accomplish the desired end for which we seek, would gradually evolve into a more perfect and substantial unity. From our experience we discover that some are not making progress in the direction anticipated; but have lost faith in doctrines for which they were once strong advocates; and now take offense if those doctrines are advocated by others; which I regret. It is evident to the wise that truth and right alone will prevail in the great day. Truth properly applied will give liberty. Jesus says: "Abide in me and you shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."—John 8: 31, 32.

In Book of Covenants sec. 42: 5, "And again, the elders, priests and teachers of this church shall teach the principles of my gospel, which are in the Bible and Book of Mormon, in the which is the fulness of the gospel, and they shall observe the covenants and church articles to do them, and these shall be their teachings as they shall be directed by the Spirit."

The question arises, what are the covenants and church articles to be observed, other than the Book of Covenants, and such explanatory injunctions and details by the conferences, to carry out the requirements of law.

Some object to the Book of Covenants, because of gathering, consecration and tithing; on the grounds that the Bible and Book of Mormon are a fulness; hence all else is superfluous, and that tithing is not mentioned in the New Testament, or the Book of Mormon. And as these books do not enter into details on these subjects they reject them as not applicable, and postponed indefinitely. To this class of reasoners who profess to believe the Bible and Book of Mormon, as they both tell us that Christ's disciples on the Eastern and also Western Continent had all things common and equal, as recorded, Acts 4: 32-37; Book of Mormon, Nephi, page 478; the last continuing for one hundred and sixty-nine years; and as the details are not given, will some of these wise men tell us the details of such co-operative societies, from any source, to compete with the instructions in Book of Covenants, as the history of those events was intended as an example to us; as Paul informs us "All scripture given by inspiration of God, is for doctrine, and reproof, and correction, that the man of God may be furnished unto every good work." And will they tell us any better way to exemplify the love of God and neighbor?

The Bible and Book of Mormon are the Constitution of God's people; but do not enter into all the details of government. But, like the constitution of the United States, gives landmarks to steer by, to regulate our legislation on principles of love and equity.

Some claim the right to dance, play cards, drink whisky, and play billiards, as these things are not specifically forbidden in the law. But are these things spiritual, and do they entice to do good, or evil? If the latter, the church has the undoubted right to regulate it by contingent legislation. Who shall decide what shall be the contingent legislation to meet new cases as they arise. Reason and the books decide that the body, or the voice of the people have the right, and are less likely to make mistakes than the minority. Book of Covenants, sec. 17:4; 25:1; 27:4. Book of Mormon, Mosiah, chapter 13:4. If the minority think the action illegal, they must change the majority by an appeal to reason and experience; for, if the individual may set aside the action of the body on one point, others may on other points; then where is our boasted unity of faith. Would we not be on the high road to a thousand more creeds; and finally dissolve into our own individualities. It is true that majorities may make mistakes, and may become tyrannical; so our hope rests in right motives and intelligent action. Let love and prudence reign, and all will be well.

LYMAN LITTLE.

REPRESENTATION, AND THE TWELVE.

THE necessity for rules of representation results from the command given by revelation, "let all things be done by common consent," and as it is impossible for all the Saints to convene annually from Europe, Canada, Society Islands and Australia, or even from states contiguous to places of holding General Conference, there must be of necessity some way by which their voices and votes may be heard, that such consent may be obtained from all who are governed by it. The General Conference is the highest legislative body in the church, legislates for Saints in all the world, and consequently is, or ought to be a representative body in fact. To meet these conditions the rules of representation were formed and as amended provides for three orders of delegates; first, "perpetual official delegates," consisting of the First Presidency, the Twelve, Seventies, High Priests, and Elders under Conference appointment, these being general church officials are appointed by the body, are amendable to the body for their acts and labors, are servants of the body, and reflect honor upon the body if their acts are honorable, and discredit if dishonorable. Second; delegates appointed by the branches or district conferences, who by them are authorized to cast one vote for every six of their membership, themselves being counted in this enumeration; they also have voice and vote in their own right as delegates. Any member in fellowship with the body may be such delegate. Allowing the full vote by these to be cast, it would number about 4,000 including their own, while the official vote would be about 200, it would therefore seem that the body is pretty fully represented. But there is yet another order, the third, which is Elders other than those under conference appointment. These are not servants for the body, conference can not call upon them for labor, or for explanation of their acts direct, they are not to report to conference, and are not amendable to it for their acts or labor, and of all the delegates are the only ones claiming a seat in the body of representatives upon their personal or individual right, for they are not representatives of the body direct, as are all the other delegates.

The necessity for rules of representation rests in the impossibility of convening all the Saints annually. The same impossibility lies with the Eldership. Then why should Elders because of living near the place of convening conference legislate for Elders who by reason of residing afar off have no voice or vote with them? Why of all the church membership should they have the privilege of voice and vote because of local official position. By the present rules the Saints of Europe, Australia, etc., may be equally represented as the Saints of Lamoni, with the single exception of the Elders, for those Elders who can attend conference will legislate for those who can not for reasons named attend, not only by delegate and one-sixth vote, but also by their individual voice and vote, which those at a distance can not have. This destroys the equality of representation, and annuls the aim of the "rules" to provide for obtaining the common consent of all members. And I as an Elder request of my brethren in conference equality of representation for myself and brethren who can not attend the annual conference, by expunging the rule allowing local Elders voice and vote. This will permit Elders in all the world to be equally represented. But if it is thought that the Elders by reason of their office should have voice and vote in General Conference; then amend the rules to read in substance as follows: All Elders (except those under conference appointment) may have voice and vote in General Conference by proxy, who shall vote by their instruction, be permitted to read any document from such Elders upon subjects under consideration, and may present to conference any motion for their acceptance. Voice, to mean only documentary statements which they desire to present to conference. Vote, to be only such as shall be stated in writing and presented by the proxy. All of which must be written by the Elder represented, and signed by himself, the proxy to present proper credentials of his appointment.

This may seem rather combersome at first sight, but I think all Elders might be allowed this privilege through their Quorums under proper restrictions. This rule might be extended with benefit to all quorums of representative officials of the first order of delegates, who may be necessarily absent, also to delegates from foreign lands. In reference to the resolutions of the Twelve affirming their authority, I wish to say, as it stands it seems to subvert the authority of two orders of government, the First Presidency and the branch and district officers. Certainly a true order of government can not exist if any officer might at any time subvert the authority of any other officer. A harmonious government exists where all members perform the duties of their respective position uninterfered with by any other. The three quorums of apostles are the governing presiding officers of the church in all the world. (D. & C., sec. 104-111.) The first quorum consisting of three presiding High Priests, form a quorum of the presidency of the church. The second quorum, the Twelve, are a traveling presiding High Council to officiate under the direction of the presidency of the church, to build up the church and regulate the affairs of the same in all nations. (par. 12). The third quorum, the Seventy, are to act under the direction of the Twelve in building up the church, and regulating all the affairs of the same in all nations. (par. 13). It certainly seems clear enough if these quorums are to regulate all the affairs of the church in all nations, their authority to do so must be recognized, and submitted to by the church in all nations; and an officer without authority is an official nullity. But the Twelve in affirming their authority, need not have seemingly ignored the authority of the first presidency under whose direction they are to regulate the affairs of the church. If they do so because of the law which says they are "to build up the church and regulate the affairs of the same in all nations," then the Seventy may present for acceptance a like affirmation, ignoring the authority of the Twelve, for the same law precisely is given to them. But the Seventy are to act "under the direction of the Twelve," and in the same manner the Twelve are to act "under the direction of the presidency of the church," which certainly places the authority to build up the church and regulate its affairs in all nations; first in the First Presidency, second in the Twelve, and third in the Seventy; or rather in all these together, but each in its order, and neither without the other. Neither is it necessary that they should subvert the authority of the offices of branch or district. The first quorum and all other officers in the church can perform their duties without ignoring the authority of officers under them, why not the Twelve also? And if a branch or district will not listen to the instruction of these quorums designed to regulate the affairs of the church, would not it be better for them to call a special meeting, either in branch or district over which they shall preside, and the business so transacted be equally authoritative as though enacted in regular branch or district conference, with the General Conference as an appellant court for either party.

Obedience to authority is an eternal principle, and every member of the church including the officers, should assist in maintaining the authority of every other member and officer in the church, in the performance of their duties according to their respective callings.

"MORMONISM"—LETTER TO RELATIVES.

Dear Brother and Sister:—In the fourth paragraph of this letter I tried to tell my experience in leaving the body, as I suppose, for a few moments. I am not fully satisfied with the way I have told it. One sentence is made long and diffuse by the introduction of many classes and subjects. If I was to write it again I would be more brief and stick closer to the subject in hand.

This reminds me of something that occurred while I was staying with you there at Chester Center (Poweshiek Co., Iowa), and of which I would not speak but with seriousness. That my account may be better understood, a few preliminary words will be necessary.

I once said to a Royal Arch Mason who is a Mormon and who had insinuated that the exposures of Free Masonry, mentioned in an anti-secrecy catalogue that I give him, were similar in character to the would-be exposures of Mormonism.—"When they will show Mormonism to be evil and a work of darkness by quoting from our acknowledged standards, as we do (and can do) in exposing Masonry, then all right, I say, and go ahead!"

No effort of any consequence was ever made, as I have seen, by the enemies of "Mormonism," to expose and show up that work to be of evil tendency and of darkness, by quoting from its acknowledged standards of faith and doctrine. And no one can successfully assail or refute the doctrines held by the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints, as laid down in its authoritative and sacred text books—Bible, Book of Mormon, and Book of Doctrine and Covenants, by an appeal to Scripture—the proper standard in such cases. Although I had received sufficient direct divine testimony for myself concerning true Mormonism, in accordance with the promise of Christ, to "know of the doctrine" that it was of God; and though the very opposition that it met with there was a fulfillment of what had been foretold, and was therefore evidence of its truth, for I had been told by way of inspiration in the one who confirmed me by the laying on of hands after baptism, among other things that, "Men shall seek to ridicule thy faith; yea brother, they shall assail thee even more than others." Yet for some time previous to the occurrence of which I am about to speak, I had been much troubled in mind over the accounts—second or third handed mainly—of Joseph Smith's "money-digging," etc., for I did not then know how much foundation there might be to these reports, and therefore could not meet them with denial. Of course the ridicule that was sought to be heaped upon my faith in the truth of what was termed "Mormonism," had a tendency to aggravate, though done as I knew through ignorance and for groundless cause, and with the best of motives.

I knew that all men, of themselves, were weak and liable to blunder and go wrong, now as of old, and of old as now, for as the poet says, "We find unthought of frailties in the wise." Those who lived in the days of the ancient prophets found many real or imaginary faults in them, for they were mortal and were of "like passions" to others. And of Jesus and the former-day Saints "all manner of evil" was spoken falsely. And every blunder or misstep was taken advantage of to cast discredit on the principles that they propagated and advocated. They were made offenders "for a word," and no charity was found in their enemies or the enemies of their faith, to "cover their sins."

I asked myself, was it possible that Jos. Smith—the Lord's chosen Seer of these last days—had, by such pitiable weakness and disgusting conduct as related of him in the "exposures" and accounts gathered up for my especial benefit from all available sources and read aloud to me each day for many weeks—was it possible that by such acts as "money-digging"—though no real crime of itself,—he had given an excuse or occasion to the devil and the enemies of the truth to speak evil of it, and an opportunity to poison with prejudice and blind the eyes and mislead the minds of many who were honest in heart, concerning the great latter-day work? And were they who were thus deceived and misled to blame for doubting? When thus troubled over these things, I asked in all the earnestness of my soul, "Lord, how is it!" and greatly desired some divine token or communication touching these matters. The next day, after going out from the noon meal, I think it was, where I had heard read from Tucker's Rise and Progress of Mormonism as usual some heavy doses of "expose" touching the early days of Mormonism, and being much troubled but feeling only pity and charity for those who were thus zealously laboring to rescue me from what they supposed to be a great delusion, I looked up to God in Spirit, having no other source to turn to for sympathy and consolation; and while thus exercising faith, as I stood by the well, I was given these comforting words of revelation: "Ye know the doctrine is mine; be not troubled." This divine communication was accompanied by a deep spiritual peace and joy that words will not describe, and which I suppose was a foretaste of the joys of heaven,—the "rest" that remaineth for the people of God. My mind was no longer so troubled about these things. This was on the 30th day of June, 1877. After putting the horses in the stable again,—for I had them at the well to drink when I received the words recorded above, —I went to the corn-crib to get corn to feed them, thinking over the blessed experience, when, as I got to the crib door, it occurred to me to write down the words; not that there seemed any possibility of my ever forgetting them in this world or the next, but I was then in the habit of writing considerable, as you know, and always went prepared for taking notes. After getting paper and pencil in hand ready to write, it seemed to me as I repeated the short sentence that it ought to have the word that inserted in it, to be fully proper and correct, according to my notion of good grammar—which was a branch I had never studied. I thought, why not write it "Ye know that the doctrine is mine," etc. This would not change the meaning any. That instant I received a shock, from some invisible presence, and though no words were given as in the first experience, I was given to understand that what I had thought of doing was wrong, and that I must neither add to nor diminish aught; but must write the words of the Lord, if at all, just as I received them. And this I had ought to have known and thought of before. These things also proved another promise that I had received to be true and divine—that of receiving knowledge "by the Spirit of revelation." In all this there is something for me to be thankful for, but nothing for me to boast of. Though so favored in my weakness and time of need, I had brought myself under some condemnation at the last. But there is a lesson also for others in all this; which lesson I have hesitated to add because of its seeming severity to others, and self-justification.

While I was enabled by the marvelous kindness and condescension of God to receive of the gifts of the gospel, promised to "them that believe—even the gift of revelation,—because I believed or had faith that I could receive as well as they of old, and had with them done the will of the Father by obeying the gospel requirements; my faith being in the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, and of the Saints of former days,—a God of miracles and revelation, and who changes not, and travels not in crooked paths, but is one eternal round, the same yesterday, to-day and forever: You, who hold that these inspired gifts and blessings were only intended for the "apostolic times" and ceased many hundred years ago because no longer needed, and that they are not for our time—in fact that "the day of miracles and revelation is past,"—could not receive, or would not be likely to receive; for by your disbelief you cut yourselves off from receiving that in which you did not believe. Your faith was in your man-made (Congregational) creed and traditions, and the precepts of men, and in a God that is changeable and is no longer a God of miracles and revelation, and who is therefore not the God of Abraham, and the saints and prophets of old; for he was a God of miracles, and he says, "I change not." Was not your faith, then, in some respects, at least, in that which is false and vain? And you were very anxious that I should reject the true and living God, and believe with you in the dumb and changeable God that you had imagined up to yourselves. Yet I have heard you pray—quite inconsistent with your professed faith it seems to me,—“O Lord, answer us, we pray thee, as though didst Daniel.” Daniel worshiped the God of Abraham and Moses, and received answers from him through inspired gifts,—as visions, revelations, interpretations, ministering of angels, and miraculous preservation,—which you say are not for us, and ceased because no longer needed; instead of having ceased because men ceased to be worthy to receive them, because there had come a “falling away” and many had waxed cold in their love and ceased to exercise faith, without which it is impossible to please God.

Your minister—educated for his profession and a returned missionary to Turkey, and a kind, well-meaning and most estimable man, whom all must respect because of his good qualities—came to me desiring to convince me of my error in embracing such a delusion as “Mormonism;” and he brought with him as his strongest argument a bottle of strychnine. As I claimed to believe the promise in the 16th chapter of Mark, and that it extended to our day, which says “if they [them that believe] shall drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them,” he asked me if I could take some of that strychnine without receiving harm. I replied, “No, not presumptuously, nor any other man.” For that would be tempting God, as much so, and in the same way, as for Jesus to have cast himself down from the pinnacle of the temple, at the devil’s suggestion, to prove to him the truth and correctness of his faith and profession, or claim. The reverend gentleman was so blinded by priestcraft, traditions, and the “commonly received” and popular opinions of men, that he did not know he was in the same rut with the Jewish sign-seekers of old, and was aiding or following the devil, by using the same line of argument in opposing the faith and doctrine taught in the New Testament—now counted as a strange thing and called Mormonism,—that the devil used in opposing the teacher and founder of that faith. On the pinnacle of the temple the devil said to Christ, “If thou be the Son of God cast thyself down; for it is written, He shall give his angels charge concerning thee; and in their hands they shall bear thee up, lest thou dash thy foot against a stone. Jesus said unto him, it is written again, Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God.”—Matt. 4: 6, 7. Although such was the promise, in case of accident, and that he might be preserved till his work for the good of man was finished, he did not propose to tempt God by any such presumption, as purposely and needlessly placing himself in such danger, and then expecting God or the angels to interfere to save him from harm.

As Jesus claimed to believe the Scriptures promised, Satan asked him to prove it true or that it applied to him, by recklessly and presumptuously imperilling his life by casting himself down, because there was a promise of being preserved from harm, written so and so. And as I claimed to believe a similar scripture promise, the Rev.

Mr. W. asked me to prove it true or at least that it applied to me or to my time, by purposely and presumptuously and without the command or will of God, imperilling my life by taking deadly poison, because there was a promise written so and so of being preserved from harm, in case of accident, or evil design of enemies of the truth, that those sent of God might finish the work and mission whereunto he had sent them. Of course the promise will also bear a more extended application, especially when taken in connection with the promise of healing by the laying on of hands and prayer.

In closing I will say that I have tried here to set forth these things in plainness, as I see them; and tell and testify to what I know to be true as to my experience there; desiring not to needlessly give offense nor wound the feelings of any. And I can meet these accounts and statements at the great and last day.

PREHISTORIC.

DISCOVERIES BY THE GEOLOGICAL SURVEY.

“THE archæologic and ethnologic researches which have been prosecuted during the past four or five years,” says Captain Stevenson, of the National Geological Survey Bureau, “in different localities on our continent, especially in our Southwestern Territories, have thrown much light and information, not only upon the history of the present aboriginal inhabitants, but also upon their predecessors, or the prehistoric races which inhabited that portion of our country. As each year’s explorations are prosecuted, with the additional experience of the previous year, the web of information is broadened, and a more definite and comprehensive knowledge of these people is obtained. The bureau extended its researches into more remote and less known localities during the past season with most gratifying results. One locality visited and explored by a party under the direction of Prof. Powell last summer is worthy of special mention.

Near Flagstaff, in Arizona, is a mountain called San Francisco Mountain. This mountain is of volcanic origin, and around it, extending for many miles in all directions, are prominent volcanic cinder cones, ranging from five hundred to two thousand feet in height. The outer crusts of these cones are quite hard, while beneath the crust is a compact body of cinders or tufa. The party visited a number of these cones, on which they found a series of ancient cave houses artificially excavated by a post of a rude character, which was evidenced by the implements and domestic utensils left in these caves. One of the most conspicuous of these villages was found to occupy a large area, from the top far down the side of one of these mountains. The cave dwellings are of an oval shape, about twenty-five feet across the base, and perhaps fifteen feet high. The entrance or doorway consists of a square hole cut in the crust, from which a shaft descends fifteen feet to the bottom. Alongside of the entrance shaft is a groove about one foot in depth, which served as a chimney. The dwellings were without windows and the occupants must have learned to grope their way through the dwelling in the dark. In many instances there are side shafts, which lead into connecting chambers. The party also found many small chambers excavated into the side of the dwelling, which were used to store away corn and other food stuffs.

“In one cave, which was plastered, a small niche was discovered which had been hermetically sealed up and which contained several small objects or clay stands, in which were stuck fragments of finely woven cotton fabric so nicely twisted up as to show that they were carefully arranged and placed in this niche and sealed up for some sacred purpose; quantities of corn-cobs, charred beans and squash seeds and other objects of vegetarian character, also many stone implements of large and small size, some weighing two hundred pounds, all of which gave some idea of the people who made and used them. There are many of these cave villages situated on these volcanic cones.” Prof. Powell considers them the oldest and most primitive habitations on this continent. Notwithstanding this fact, he feels confident from the evidences presented by these caves that the occupants were the direct ancestors of some of the Mesa dwelling tribes now inhabiting portions of Arizona and New Mexico, and he also feels assured that future researches will clearly reveal the history and relationship between these tribes that have passed away and those now living in that region.—Philadelphia Times.

Miscellaneous.

DECATUR DISTRICT.

The following resolution was adopted by the conference held March 13th, 1886, at Lamoni:

Resolved that members of the branch and district, residing in the country who are willing to assist in caring for visitors at General Conference be requested to put money, provisions and bedding in the hands of the Committee of Arrangements, to be supplied to those in town who are willing but not able to care for many at their own expense.

The Committee of Arrangements and Reception consists of Brn. S. V. Bailey, Wilson Hudson, Moses McHarness, Frank Dillon, Jos. Upton, A. J. Moore, Valentine White, Wm. Hopkins, Geo. Adams, and R. G. Clum.

GENERAL CONFERENCE NOTICE.

In consideration of the extra large attendance that is expected at the coming session, and the probable limited supply of such things compared with the anticipated demand, even by our doing the very best we can, I am instructed by the Lamoni Branch to publish a notice saying that it would be well for those who can do so, especially those living not too far away, to bring quilts, comforters and such other covering or bedding as may be convenient to put in trunk or bundle. A committee wearing badges will be at the train to meet and locate visitors.

Branch President.

NOTICES.

Two Days' Meeting will be held in the Hazel Dell Branch Branch, Pottawattamie District, commencing on Sunday, March 28th, at 10:30, A. M. Also in North Star Branch, commencing Sunday, April 25th, at 10:30 A. M.

H. N. HANSEN, Pres. of Dist.

Hello! fellow laborers of the First Quorum of Elders, permit me to put you in mind, that the wheel of time brings the annual gathering near, and once more has the time arrived that you should "give an account of your stewardship," as to the use of the talent or talents that you each possess, and I most earnestly trust and pray that none have been so thoughtless, or negligent as to attempt to hide the gift that has been given by our Heavenly Father, in this the dispensation of warning unto all people. Never in the history of this Church of Christ, were there more favorable and inviting opportunities for preaching the word. God seems to be working among the people in preparing their hearts and minds to receive the pure and sincere milk of the word. Fond hopes are entertained by many that the approaching General Conference will be of much importance to Zion's cause. And that we shall not be behind in any good work, and that we may be party to, in sharing the good results and victories of the gospel, therefore let all be prepared to submit a cheerful and encouraging report of our efforts in seeking to bring souls unto Christ. Do not be offended with me when I state that since you gave me the watchcare of the quorum, that I have found some who are faithful in reporting at every gathering of the body, while some only report occasionally, and some few have never made a report, that I am aware of. I therefore address you severally and individually, asking that immediately upon the reading of this, that you will prepare a report of your doings for the advancement of the work in your vicinity or charge. We prefer that all should report in writing, and those who send their report by letter will please do so by sending the same to me, on or before April 6th, to Lamoni, Iowa. Please be kind enough to give items in reporting, as it is from these that we make our annual report to the general body. Trusting that the Lord has blessed you in the year closing, and that he may continue to let the light of his countenance shine upon you, until you shall report acceptably before the great White Throne.

In priesthood covenant,

ROBT. M. ELVIN,
President First Quorum.

The stockholders of the First United Order of Enoch will meet at Lamoni, Iowa, April 12th, 1886.

DAVIS.—PAGE.—Near Hollister, in San Benito county, California, February 4th, 1886, Bro. Alroy C. Davis to Sr. Emily W. Page; Elder J. M. Range officiating.

DIED.

DAVIS.—At Mound Valley, Kansas, February 2d, 1886, of pneumonia, Sr. Charlotte, wife of Richard H. Davis; aged 49 years, 1 month, 26 days. She embraced the latter day work in Sweden, and emigrated to Utah; got dissatisfied with their perversion of the work, and joined the Reorganization at Goshen, Utah; baptized by her husband, R. H. Davis, in 1868; and soon after moved to Kansas, where the family has lived ever since. Sr. Davis was an extraordinary good mother in Israel, and her loss is mourned by all who knew her. She was a consistent Christian, a loving wife and tender mother. Funeral sermon by Elder Ola Olson.

Dear sister, the race thou hast faithfully run,
They crown with the Savior, lawfully won;
Methinks you bid us from the mansions above,
Pray and continue in brotherly love.
We are left for a moment to mourn and to weep,
But soon, one by one, in Jesus will sleep;
And if we walk in the path she faithfully trod,
We'll meet again in the City of God.

OLA OLSON.

OLSON.—At Mound Valley, Kansas, February 14th, of lung fever, Father Ola Olson; aged 76 years. He joined the church in 1878, and has been a very faithful member ever since. Funeral sermon by R. H. Davis, to a large assemblage of neighbors and friends, that followed Father Olson to his last resting place.

Our dear aged father is gone to his rest,
And in Jesus has fallen asleep;
His spirit now dwells with the pure and the blest,
Then why should we mournfully weep?
Soon we'll meet again over on the other shore,
And join the Saints—great happy throng;
Glory to the Lamb—we'll not part forevermore,
But join their everlasting song.

JONES.—Near Eagleville, Harrison county, Missouri, February 16th, 1886, of pneumonia, Addie Nellie, infant daughter of Bro. C. A. and Sr. Ada L. Jones; aged 3 months and 29 days. Blessed by her grandpa, C. H. Jones. Funeral services at the house by Elder J. W. Gillen.

Darling Nellie thou hast left us,
O, thy loss is so hard to bear;
But we feel thou art with the angels,
O Lord, help us to meet her there.

BURNHAM.—At Independence, Mo., March 4th, 1886, sister Caroline, wife of Bro. James Burnham, aged 44 years, 10 months and 14 days. She was born in Santa Rosa county, Florida; was baptized June, 1872, by Elder Thomas W. Smith. She left a husband and six children to mourn her loss. During her six months' painful sickness, she was patient and steadfast in the faith. She had many remarkable manifestations of the Spirit to confirm her faith. Before she died she was permitted to behold the beautiful city of Zion. She fell asleep with a hope of a glorious resurrection. Funeral sermon by Elder H. C. Smith.

EVANS.—Near Council Bluffs, Iowa, January 12th, 1886, of diphtheria, Joseph, son of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Evans. Joseph was born January 15th, 1881. Services by Elder H. N. Hansen.

PITKIN.—At Viola, Iowa, March 1st, 1886, Helen Newlin, daughter of Wm. N. and Mary Pitkin; born in Buchanan county, Iowa, July 31st, 1855. Married to John N. Newlin, December 21st, 1876; baptized by I. N. White, May 14th, 1884, confirmed by I. N. White and W. C. Nirk, same date. Sr. Helen's affliction had been long and heavy; first spinal affection, subsequently a terrible tumor. During a term of years she had some relief from physicians, also some remarkable blessings by administrations, life being extended beyond physicians' most sanguine hope several times. She lived her faith; was extremely patient in affliction; spent her last conscious moments in devotion to God, and assured her attendants she was ready and willing to go. She rests in the paradise of God, leaving a loving, faithful and most worthy husband. The Methodist friends proffered their church for funeral service, which was accepted. Elder Jerome Ruby pronouncing the sermon to a full house from Acts 3:19-21, which was timely and well received; Mrs. Viola Crew in charge of music, very appropriate selections being made.

ROBERTS.—Near Weston, Iowa, March 2d, 1886, Sr. Mary Roberts, born February 7th, 1804, in Leeds county, Upper Canada. She embraced the latter day work at an early day, and together with her husband, John Roberts, who also sleeps, she passed through the trials which were the lot of the early Saints.

ROBERTS.—At Buchanan, Henry Co., Tennessee, January 24th, 1886, of membranous croup, Annie C., daughter of Bro. Frank and Sr. Lucy Roberts. Deceased was born July 3d, 1883; blessed by Elder F. P. Scarcliff. Funeral service by Elder George Montague, assisted by Elder P. B. Seaton.

MCLAUGHLIN.—At Hannibal, Missouri, February 14th, 1886, of consumption, Sr. Katie McLaughlin. She was born in Hannibal, February 7th, 1861, and was baptized there by Elder John H. Lake, December 6th, 1877. Hers was one of those amiable and happy dispositions, which win the love of all. An exemplary Saint, she was of an age when life seems to hold forth flattering prospects; nevertheless the summons found her ready and willing to depart. She was a member of the Montrose (Iowa) Branch.

Conference Minutes.

TENNESSEE.

This district conference convened at Foundry Branch, on February 27th and 28th, 1886. Meeting was called to order by P. B. Seaton. Geo. Montague was chosen to preside and John F. Davis was sustained missionary of this district. Two days' meetings to be held in each branch, in charge of the president of the district. E. A. Davis was sustained president of the district, and W. Peek as clerk for the coming term. J. T. Davis was appointed delegate to the next General Conference, to represent this district. Wm. H. Smart and John T. Ross were referred back to the branch for ordination to the office of Deacons. Preaching by E. L. Kelley on Sunday forenoon. Prayer and testimony meeting in the afternoon, in charge of J. A. Davis. Preaching in the evening by E. A. Davis and E. L. Kelley. Adjourned to meet at Mound Valley, Kansas, June 11th, 1886.

MALAD.

Malad District conference convened at Malad City, Oneida county, Idaho Territory, February 20th, 1886, at 2 p. m. Elder Joseph Luff chosen to preside; John Vanderwood, clerk. Numerical strength of the district was reported by John Lewis, consisting of 93 members, including 13 Elders, 1 Priest, 1 Teacher and 2 Deacons. Elders John Lewis, William Richards, John Vanderwood, Henry John, Morgan Jones, and Owen Thomas reported. John Lewis gave Bishop's Agent's report having received and paid out $76. John Lewis tendered resignation as Bishop's Agent, which was accepted. The following resolutions were adopted: That Henry R. Evans be recommended to Bishop George A. Blakeslee for Bishop's Agent for Malad District. That Henry R. Evans, Morgan Jones, and Owen Thomas be our representative committee to the Mission Conference. That our representative committee are hereby instructed to intercede at the Mission Conference for the return of Joseph Smith, Joseph Luff, R. J. Anthony, and also the appointment of John T. Davies to this mission. That R. J. Anthony be our delegate to the General Conference at Lamoni, Iowa, and that in the event of his being ineligible because of having been chosen by some other district, that he is hereby authorized to make selection of a delegate for us; and we respectfully request the General Conference to ratify and approve such selection as he may make. That the district president take steps toward organizing the Elkhorn Branch as speedily as possible. That John Lewis act as president of the Malad District till next conference, and John Vanderwood as clerk. That the District clerk procure a record book for the district. That we sustain by our faith, prayers and means, the spiritual and temporal authorities of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. That we sustain Joseph Luff as president pro tem. of the Rocky Mountain Mission. The preaching was done during conference by Joseph Luff. Adjourned to meet subject to call of the president.

FAR WEST.

Conference of the above district convened with the St. Joseph branch, Saturday and Sunday, February 27th and 28th, at ten and a half o'clock, a.m. 1886, in the Saints' Hall. J. T. Kinneman in the chair; C. P. Faul and W. Booth, secretaries. Branch reports.—St. Joseph, 91; no change. German Stewartville, report 63; 3 baptized, one removed by letter. Center Prairie, no change. Stewartville City, 89, no change. Far West, 34; two removed, two received by letter, one by vote. De Kalb, 73; 3 received by letter, 1 removed. Delano, referred back to branch for correction. Pleasant Grove, no change. Ministerial reports.—S. Butler, J. H. Merriam, G. Smith, D. E. Powell, J. D. Flanders, E. T. Dobson by letter, W. Hawkins, J. T. Kinneman, M. T. Short, I. N. Roberts, Columbus Scott being present reported, Wm. Lewis. Priests A. W. Head, W. H. Kelley, and C. P. Faul. J. T. Kinneman, W. Lewis, J. D. Flanders, W. T. Bozarth and S. Butler, were elected delegates to General Conference. All statistical branch reports sent to the conference of this district hereafter, if lacking any items, require the reasons, therefore, such lack be forwarded to the branch secretary with the reports. Joseph R. Lambert was sustained, and a request made to General Conference to return him to this mission. Any mode of getting gain unjustly, and dancing as currently practiced, is contrary to the word and spirit of the gospel; and that members of the church persisting in these practices, may be dealt with as transgressors of the law of God. A committee of two Elders were appointed to visit Mount Hope and Breckenridge branches, for the purpose of setting those branches in order; and that funds be raised by this conference to defray their expenses. Bro. John Burlington, Jr., was appointed to collect money for the above purpose. The district officers were sustained for the next quarter. The next conference will convene with the Stewartville city branch, at ten a.m., on June 12th, 1886. The delegates of St. Joseph branch, introduced a statement to the effect that they, the Saints, wish the co-operation of this conference to the following: "Believing it to be to the best interest of the work, do request the General Conference to send a missionary to labor exclusively in the city of St. Joseph." This conference instructs its delegates to use their influence in accordance with the expressed desire of the St. Joseph branch. W. H. Kelley preached on Saturday evening; M. T. Short Sunday, at ten and a half, a. m. Social meeting at two and a half p. m. Columbus Scott preached at seven and a half p. m. The Saints were greatly blessed; the good spirit prevailed throughout the conference.

THE CITY OF LONDON

Rev. Dr. Fish, in an interesting letter to the Watchman and Reflector says of London: "The city reminds me much of Berlin. It is certainly like it in many particulars—solid rather than showy. Here is a dense mass of humanity covering seven hundred square miles. Taking the immediate suburbs, the city is about thirty miles in diameter; it is therefore a distance of ninety miles around it. The population in this area is 4,000,000. And there are more than 10,000 policemen to keep the inhabitants in order. The streets are wider, cleaner, and smother than New York. The general aspect must impress a fair-minded person favorably of the city of London.

London consumes in one year 1,600,000 quarters of wheat, 300,000 bullocks, 1,700,000 sheep, 28,000 calves, and 35,000 pigs. One market alone (Leadenhall) supplies about 4,500,000 head of game. This together with 3,000,000 of salmon, irrespective of other fish and flesh, is washed down by 43,000,000 gallons of porter and ale, 2,000,000 gallons of spirits, and 65,000 pipes of wine. To fill its milk and cream jugs 14,000 cows are kept. To light it at nights, 360,000 gas lights fringe the streets, consuming every 24 hours 13,000,000 cubic feet of gas. Its water system supplies 44,383,328 gallons of water daily; while its sewer system carries off 9,502,720 cubic feet of refuse. Here are 2,500 bakers, 1,700 butchers, 3,000 tea dealers and grocers, 1,260 coffee rooms, 1,500 dairy men, 1,350 tobacco stores, and 2,400 licensed surgeons and physicians. W. S.

IS THIS SO?

No believer can read the New Testament and imagine it any part of the original plan of the church that it should be split up into an almost innumerable body of opposing sects. The idea of a Holy Catholic church, though it has no present realization, is neither narrow nor unscriptural. Followers of Christ were to be one—one in doctrine, one in practice, one in fellowship. There are many Christians who hold that the existence of sects or denominations is a blessing to the world. We can not so believe. It is an evil that followers of Christ should spend more time and effort in strife among themselves, and in costly rivalry, than in the conversion of the world. No doubt there are compensations for this evil. This very rivalry that is to be deplored possibly stimulates the different denominations to give more money and to spend more effort in evangelizing work than would be forthcoming if they were united in a single Christian body. Most evils are accompanied by some compensations, but they do not cease to be evils on that account. It is scarcely possible for anyone to doubt that it would be a great gain to the cause of Christ and to the welfare of the world if all Christian people were brethren in fact, as well as in name, and were united in the worship and service of God.

AN OLD PROPHECY.

SOMEBODY has unearthed an old prophecy for the year 1886 of a decidedly uncomfortable nature, writes a Rome correspondent of the London Globe. It appears that in the church of Oberemmel, near the city of Treveri, in Germany, there is a stone tablet some centuries old, on which is cut the prophetic verse—in prose it may be rendered: "When Mark shall bring us Easter, and Anthony shall sing praises at Pentecost, and John shall swing the censor at the feast of Corpus Domini, then shall the whole earth resound with weepings and wailings." Now it so happens that next year Easter falls on St. Mark's day, Pentecost on that of St. Anthony of Padua, and the Corpus Domini comes on St. John the Baptist's day, June 24th. Here, then, are the first conditions of the prophecy fulfilled, so that now believers in prophecies and anxious-minded persons generally have only to sit down and think of everything disagreeable that can possibly happen to this poor old planet and the dwellers thereon between January and December, 1886. And really it the cyclones, and earthquakes, and epidemics, and "wars and rumors of wars" of the years 1882-3-4-5 are to be eclipsed, the prospect is not an agreeable one.

JOSEPH SMITH
W. W. BLAIR

EDITOR.
ASSOCIATE EDITOR.

Lamoni, Iowa, March 27, 1886.

SAINTS east of Chicago, coming to conference, will come to Chicago, thence over the Chicago, Burlington, and Quincy road, by way of Burlington, to Chariton, Iowa, thence over the Albany Branch, C. B. & Q., to Bethany Junction and Lamoni. Those living on roads connecting with the C. B. & Q. should make the connection as direct as possible. From the station on the C. B. & Q. ticket to Lamoni, changing cars at Chariton for the Albany Branch, and at Bethany Junction, three miles east of Lamoni, for the latter place.

It will be well to remember that there is but one train a day each way at Lamoni, going east at 1:47 and coming west at 3 in the afternoon. Trains on the main line coming west reach Chariton at noon and midnight; coming east reach Chariton in the afternoon. The train for Lamoni leaves Chariton at noon, making connection with trains on the main line from the east; whoever then reaches Chariton after the train leaves at noon will have to wait till the next day at noon. Men folks and women who are able and don't mind a three mile walk can come from Chariton to Bethany Junction on a freight train which leaves Chariton in the morning, reach the Junction about ten o'clock and walk from there to Lamoni. Others will need to wait until the regular train time.

THE associate editor has been at Dow City, Galland's Grove, and Deloit, Iowa, from the 4th to 12th inst., and reports fair progress and good prospects. Some additions to the church are being made in these places, and the general tone and condition of church interests at these points are steadily improving. The conference held at Galland's Grove from the 5th to 7th, was spiritual, peaceful and profitable, and was said to be the best held in the district for years past. A disturbing element which hitherto annoyed their assemblies more or less was conspicuously absent. The Spirit of God was present, confirming the word preached, and its gifts and manifestations gladdened the hearts of all. The church was filled to its utmost capacity, the Sunday evening congregation being the largest ever held in it. The ministry of the district are zealous, devoted, and intend to do all in their power to forward the work as best they can. The times are bad financially, for crops were rather poor, prices for produce are low, and all this tends to make money scarce for church purposes. Wise and faithful work in this matter will enable the ministry to occupy their time without hindrance, and the blessed work will roll on with increased power and rapidity. All should help when and where they can, and to the best of their ability—minister and member—for it is an individual work.

This district is making fair gains. The writer remembers when there was not one member in it. But now it contains numerous branches, one of them numbering over two hundred. The Saints in this region have influence with surrounding society that is commanding and full of promise, and open doors invite them to come and occupy.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. John Lewis, writing from Malad City, Idaho, March 5th, says:

"The work is onward in this district. Brother Luff here from Oxford, baptized seven at that place; went to Samaria, baptized three there; came to Malad City, baptized five here. I went to Samaria last Sunday, and found two more had been added, man and wife, so we have five there. When I go there next time, I have faith we will organize a branch there. Many more are believing in Samaria, and when we get them, there will be no brain left to oppose us. We want Bro. Smith back next Spring. There is no use to leave the work only just begun. Many will come into the church in these parts, and we are willing to help in supporting a missionary in the field. Bro. Anthony, Bro. Luff, J. T. Davis, and President Joseph Smith; I hope to see the brethren here soon after conference. Remember me kindly to Bro. Blair and his good lady; Bro. and Sr. Gaulter, not forgetting yourself and family."

Sr. Bell Pickle writes from Antigo, Wisconsin:

"Can we have an Elder here? There are two ready for baptism now, and we think there will be more soon. Antigo has 3000 inhabitants. Surely God must have some among that number, but where are the reapers to gather them in. Sectarian divisions enraged when the truth is pointed out. I interpret their anger in this way; see the scriptures arrayed against themselves.

When the enemy of righteousness gets so wrathful, I consider it good evidence that there is something to be either lost or gained that is worthy of making an effort to secure. Who will come to rescue the perishing? My daily prayer is that God will send some one soon. Alive in the latter day work.

Bro. I. N. White, writes from Clinton, Missouri, under late date:

"I have been busily engaged in the field since our district conference at Independence. Just returned from Cedar county, near El Dorado Springs, where I had an interesting time—speaking ten times and met with the few good-hearted Saints, where we were blessed with God's Holy Spirit. Two men were baptized, and one old brother received the Reorganized Church. I commence a series of meetings at Holden, on the 13th; thence to Kansas City, St. Joseph, and on to General Conference.

Bro. H. C. Bronson, writing from Montrose, Lee Co., Iowa, March 17th, says:

"Bro. Lake is now with us. Our meetings still continue. Two more were baptized yesterday; and three more gave their names last night for baptism to-day. And so they come. This will make twenty-one baptisms in all since our effort began.

ELDER B. H. Roberts, of the Utah polygamic church, delivered a discourse in the Tabernacle, Salt Lake City, Sunday afternoon of March 7th, in which occurs the following expressions:

"Whether it be right in the sight of God to hearken unto you more than unto God, judge ye. We ought to obey God rather than man.' These words are recorded in the Acts of the Apostles, 4th chap., 19th verse, and 5th chap., 29th verse. This declaration holds good to-day, for the Saints have been commanded in the revelation of December 16th, 1833, that they should conduct themselves "According to the laws and constitution of the people which I have suffered to be established and should be maintained for the rights and protection of all flesh, according to the just and holy principles." And in another revelation given August 6th, 1833, the Lord said, "And now verily I say unto you concerning the laws of the land, it is my will that my people should observe to do all things whatsoever I command them; and that law of the land which is constitutional, supporting the principles of freedom of maintaining rights and privileges, belonging to all mankind, and is justifiable before me. And as pertaining to law of man, whatsoever is more or less than these cometh of evil.' These are the words of the Lord unto the Saints. It is true that the law against plural marriage, which we declare to be unconstitutional, has been decided upon by the United States Supreme Court to be constitutional. We have a right, however, as American citizens, to disagree with the decisions of the Supreme Court, which are not infallible, and have been in other instances subsequently reversed and declared invalid. We are in the power of the United States government.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

Bro. Henry L. Benner wrote from Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, date not given, highly commendatory of the ministry of Bro. M. H. Forscutt, at Pittsburg, the past winter. He reports fifty-one, or two, baptisms as the result of Bro. Mark's labors in Pittsburg and vicinity. Bro. Benner addressed his letter to the Hope, but we take the liberty of making this reference to it which we hope will be satisfactory.

Bro. John J. Cornish writes a card from Sand Beach, Michigan, March 13th: "All goes well here; Saints are alive to the work; eight more were baptized by me to-day. The weather has been severe here this winter."

Bro. Joseph Luff is quite sick at the house of Bro. Joseph Clark, Salt Lake City. Bro. Clark's daughter wrote us at Bro. Luff's request that it will be advisable for his friends and correspondents to refrain from writing him until assured of his recovery, for letters worry him, as he is unable to attend to them.

The statistics of the United States show by the reports of the internal revenue, that the receipts for spirits in 1885 fell off nine million dollars as compared with 1884; and that since 1883 there has been a steady falling off in the number of persons engaged in the manufacture of liquors. And yet "prohibition does not prohibit (?)"

The Supreme Court of the United States has lately decided by a vote of five to four, that the property of corporations can not be exempted from taxation by legislative authority. The ground taken is that no preceding legislature can bind the action of succeeding sessions, in this matter.

Bro. W. H. Smart wrote from Galesburg, Jasper county, Missouri, March 14th: "We are striving to do our duty here as much as possible."

JOSEPH THE CHOICE SEER.

In order to a proper understanding of the latter day work, and to establish an intelligent unity among the Lord's people, the relation of the Seer to that work needs to be known and comprehended.

He gave revelation and prophecy from 1827 down to the time when he was led away to his death in Carthage Jail, and these revelations and prophecies set forth the claim both directly and indirectly that the church must hear and heed them as the word of the Lord, and yet they provided that they were to be received and accepted as authoritative by the voice of the church through its ministry. (Doc. & Cov., Rev. Feb. 4th, 1831, with Rev. Feb. 9th, 1831; Rev. Jan. 19th, 1841, in last part; also the Church History for 1829, on the ordination of Joseph and Oliver, etc.) And the action had by the organized quorums in 1835 when they were presented in a compiled form and formally endorsed and accepted confirms this position.

Nothing can be plainer than that God required the Saints to accept and observe the revelations of the Seer when he presented them to the church in the way ordained, unless they, upon due examination, were found to be defective and unreliable. The quorums of the ministry, and the body of the Church, were alone to be the judges, as God should give them light and knowledge as to what was or was not the word of God to them; or, in other words, as to what they would accept as the word of God. In this the Lord reserves to man his personal agency and the right of private judgment, and holds him responsible as to the manner in which he exercises it. If he judges wisely and properly, all is well; but if not, then he rejects the counsel of God, suffers loss, and reaps the fruit of his wrong-doing.

Israel when the law was read to them, acting upon their agency to accept or reject it, entered into covenant to receive it for themselves and their children; (Ex. 24: 3-8); and this law was binding upon them throughout their generations.

No man; no faction; no priest, prophet, or king, had the right to disobey, resist, evade, or question it. They who did either, did it at their peril, and to their damage, as the Bible fully proves. To this we add the fact that all revelations and prophecies of Moses and the prophets and seers who were sent of God and accredited by him were received as authoritative and valid, and were endorsed, quoted and maintained by all of God's faithful servants in after times. We never read of any but the wicked, aspiring, self-conceited, and unfaithful ones, seeking to invalidate, nullify, or reject any portion of the work delivered by God's seers and prophets. Jesus and his faithful ministry and people never did anything of this kind. The "Thus saith the Lord" of all God's chosen and accepted prophets and seers, especially after such was received by God's people as his word, was always held to be true and of full force and authority, and was never resisted or dishonored by the wise and faithful people of God. We never find one of the Lord's appointed servants, nor any considerable number of them, questioning or rejecting a clause, sentence, paragraph, or section of any of the authentic and commonly accepted revelations and prophecies of heaven's duly accredited prophets and seers. God's people, when blind and wicked, have done this great evil; but upright and wise ones never did.

Now that Joseph the Seer comes to us with the clearest, strongest credentials, approved of God by prophecy, history, and the marvellous testimony of the Holy Ghost, why will individuals and factions claiming to be Saints treat the word of God given through him with neglect, contempt, and resistance? No one excepting Jesus of Nazareth has had such numerous and decided evidences of divine authority and approval as Joseph the Seer. God has borne witness by the gifts and manifestations of His Spirit to hundreds of thousands of souls that the gospel work sent to the world through him is of heaven, and that the church and ministry established by him is of divine authority. God has also confirmed the revelations and prophecies of the Seer in a most complete and conclusive manner. He has likewise given the highest class of testimony, varied in kind and great in extent, in proof of the divine origin and character of the Book of Mormon. And that book speaks in the clearest and most decisive terms of the divine calling, inspired authority, and exalted work of Joseph the Seer. And to those who profess to believe that book we say, Harken and hear and heed its testimony in respect to the Seer, his priestly appointment, and his work as ordained of God. Hear and heed what the Lord testifies in respect to the character, extent, and scope of the "choice Seer's" work, and then resist and reject every tale and theory, and surmise that in any way opposes or conflicts with these divine promises. "Cursed be the man that trusteth in man, and maketh flesh his arm;" but "blessed is the man that trusteth in the Lord, and whose hope the Lord is," (Jer. 17: 5, 7); therefore cease from the theories of men and hear what the Lord says of the Seer, his authority and his work.

"For Joseph truly testified, saying: A seer shall the Lord my God raise up, who shall be a choice seer unto the fruit of my loins. Yea, Joseph truly said, thus saith the Lord unto me: A choice seer will I raise up out of the fruit of thy loins; and he shall be esteemed highly among the fruit of thy loins. And unto him will I give commandment, that he shall do a work for the fruit of thy loins, his brethren, which shall be of great worth unto them, even to the bringing of them to the knowledge of the covenants which I have made with thy fathers. And I will give unto him a commandment, that he shall do none other work save the work which I shall command him. And I will make him great in mine eyes: for he shall do my work. And he shall be great like unto Moses, whom I have said I would raise up unto you, to deliver my people, O house of Israel. And Moses will I raise up, to deliver thy people out of the land of Egypt. But a seer will I raise up out of the fruit of thy loins; and unto him will I give power to bring forth my word unto the seed of thy loins; and not to the bringing forth my word only, saith the Lord, but to the convincing them of my word, which shall have already gone forth among them. Wherefore, the fruit of thy loins shall write; and the fruit of the loins of Judah shall write; and that which shall be written by the fruit of thy loins, and also that which shall be written by the fruit of the loins of Judah, shall grow together, unto the confounding of false doctrine, and laying down of contentions, and establishing peace among the fruit of thy loins, and bringing them to the knowledge of their fathers in the latter days; and also to the knowledge of my covenants, saith the Lord. And out of weakness he shall be made strong, in that day when my work shall commence among all my people, unto the restoring thee, O house of Israel, saith the Lord.

"And thus prophesied Joseph, saying: Behold, that seer will the Lord bless; and they that seek to destroy him, shall be confounded: for this promise, of which I have obtained of the Lord, of the fruit of thy loins, shall be fulfilled. Behold I am sure of the fulfilling of this promise. And his name shall be called after me; and it shall be after the name of his father. And he shall be like unto me; for the thing which the Lord shall bring forth by his hand, by the power of the Lord shall bring my people unto salvation; yea, thus prophesied Joseph, I am sure of this thing, even as I am sure of the promise of Moses: for the Lord hath said unto me, I will preserve thy seed forever. And the Lord hath said, I will raise up a Moses; and I will give power unto him in a rod; and I will give judgment unto him in writing. Yet I will not loose his tongue, that he shall speak much: for I will not make him mighty in speaking. But I will write unto him my law, by the finger of mine own hand; and I will make a spokesman for him. And the Lord said unto me also, I will raise up unto the fruit of thy loins; and I will make for him a spokesman. And I, behold, I will give unto him that he shall write the writing of the fruit of thy loins, unto the fruit of thy loins; and the spokesman of thy loins shall declare it. And the words which he shall write, shall be the words which are expedient in my wisdom, should go forth unto the fruit of thy loins. And it shall be as if the fruit of thy loins had cried unto them from the dust; for I know their faith. And they shall cry from the dust; yea, even repentance unto their brethren, even after many generations have gone by them. And it shall come to pass that their cry shall go, even according to the simpleness of their words. Because of their faith, their words shall proceed forth out of my mouth unto their brethren, who are the fruit of thy loins; and the weakness of their words will I make strong in their faith, unto the remembering of my covenant which I made unto thy fathers."—2 Nephi 2: 2, 3.

In this we find the Lord's opinion and estimate of the Seer, also the commands and promises of God as to what the Seer should and would do. In his authority and work he was to be somewhat like both Moses and Joseph the son of Jacob. He would translate sacred records; he would establish the "work" of the Lord in the last dispensation; he and his spokesman were to send forth the "work" committed to their trust, and this would make church organization and church rules of government necessities. They who would seek to destroy him in his work as a prophet and seer would be confounded. And the Lord says of him, "I will make him great in mine eyes; for he shall do my work."

EDITED BY SISTER "FRANCES."

"In the great mystery which around us lies,
The wisest is a fool, the fool Heaven-helped is wise."

"HOW IS THIS?"

We are placed in a world where from the first moment of our entering into life, until we "gather up our feet to depart" we are surrounded by mystery. To the living only one thing in this world is certain, and that is death. "It is appointed unto man once to die." Man never yet found out God by his unaided wisdom. The wise man has said "the fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom."

The question has been asked us, "How is this?" Asked, after certain well attested and remarkable facts of what the world are pleased to denominate "Faith Cures" had been narrated to us. "How is this?" Are they stealing our thunder?"

"And John answered him, saying, Master we saw one casting out devils in thy name, and he followeth not us; and we forbade him, because he followeth not us. But Jesus said, Forbid him not; for there is no man which shall do a miracle in my name, that can lightly speak evil of me. For he that is not against us is on our part." "Stealing our thunder!" Would God then, there were more thieves of that stamp in the world! In the days when our Savior "came unto his own" because God had made a covenant with Abraham, and they were the descendants of Abraham, according to the flesh, they were lifted up in the pride of their hearts. They felt themselves the chosen people of God, and all not of their nation were "Gentile dogs." It was true that as a nation, they were the only ones professing a knowledge of the true God, and it was equally true that God was not then, is not now and never can be a respecter of persons. Justice goes hand in hand with every act of Jehovah! In his wisdom he chose them as a nation, to be the guardians of his truth. As a nation, to them was the Redeemer sent; but when he himself went down to his own country, what do we hear stated? "And he could there do no mighty work, save that he laid his hands upon a few sick folk, and healed them. And he marvelled because of their unbelief." The Son of God was not able to work among the sons of men, except by faith, and the want of faith in these children of Abraham was such as to cause even the Savior to wonder.

Change now the time and place. The Master has just come down from the Mount, and among the multitude following him as he entered into Capernaum was a certain Centurion, an officer in the Roman army, commanding one hundred men. Being a Roman he was a Gentile, and yet he had a request to make of the "King of the Jews." "Lord, my servant lieth at home sick of the palsy, grievously tormented." "And Jesus saith unto him, I will come and heal him." "The Centurion answered and said, Lord, I am not worthy that thou shouldest come under my roof; but speak the word only, and my servant shall be healed. For I am a man under authority, having soldiers under me, and I say to this man, Go, and he goeth; and to another, Come, and he cometh; and to my servant, Do this, and he doeth it." When Jesus heard it, he marvelled and said to them that followed, "Verily I say unto you, I have not found so great faith, no, not in Israel." * * * "And Jesus said unto the Centurion, Go thy way, as thou hast believed so be it done unto thee." And his servant was healed in the self-same hour."

"As thou hast believed," said Jesus, "so be it done unto thee." Faith in this man was strong. He evidently must have known the Savior, must have witnessed his wonderful works upon other occasions, and have listened to his divine teachings. He was an officer of one of the most powerful governments the world ever has known, and he knew that no command issued in the name of that government would be lightly regarded in any part of the earth where its jurisdiction extended. Therefore when he saw the humble Nazarine going about among the children of men, doing good unto all, and performing such works as his eyes had never before witnessed, he said to himself: "He must have authority and power over agents unseen to me. Here are my agents—these men whom I behold with my eyes are they who execute my orders; but this man works by another power." "Speak the word only," was the faith begotten in his heart, and the record is, "his servant was healed in that self-same hour," and yet he was a Gentile and knew not the "one living and true God." The record assures us upon two vital points in this narrative. The Centurion believed Christ to be a good man—"Lord I am not worthy that thou shouldest come under my roof;" and he had implicit faith in his power—"but speak the word only and my servant shall be healed." But mark this, while we are assured upon these points there is one of a different character upon which it is silent as the grave. The Savior marvelled at his faith, but his only answer to him was, "As thou hast believed so be it done unto thee." Thou hast believed in my goodness and power, and therefore thy faith shall have all the reward thou hast asked for; thy servant shall be healed. This man came not to him seeking the way of life and salvation. His words were not "Rabbi we know thou art a teacher come from God;" nor yet; "Good Master what must I do to inherit eternal life?" It was a temporal blessing he wanted, and he received it according to his desire, and faith was the medium through which it came. Not the faith inherent in the Savior, for we have seen that because of the unbelief of his kindred—those of his own country—"he could there do no mighty works," but the faith of the Centurion himself. Confirmation of this fact will be found in Acts 14: 9.

Review the history of Cornelius. "A devout man, and one that feared God with all his house; which gave much alms to the people, and prayed to God always." Turn to the 10th of Acts and read it, marking well the conclusion, "And now send men to Joppa and call for one Simon whose surname is Peter; * * * he shall tell thee what thou oughtest to do." Here was a good man, one who attained unto the ministration of angels, and yet he was not in the kingdom of God; there was something to be done.

Upon another occasion when the Master was at Capernaum, the friends of a sick man uncovered the roof of the house where he was teaching, and let him down through the roof with the bed on which he was lying. "When Jesus saw their faith, he said unto the sick of the palsy, Son, thy sins be forgiven thee." Was the faith which Jesus perceived in these men of a character different from that of the Centurion? We are certainly constrained to believe it was more comprehensive, else he would not have said, "Thy sins be forgiven thee."

Let us say to our questioner, do not be troubled, because the angel is moving the waters and they who first step into them are not following with us; neither suffer this to lead you for one moment to suppose that in obeying the gospel, you have done anything which you might have left undone. Of the ten lepers who were cleansed there was but one who returned to give God the glory, and that one a stranger. We do not read that Naaman the Syrian ever found out the God of Israel, though he was cleansed of his leprosy through obedience to the prophet's command. For fifty years and better, the organized church of God has been contending that God was as willing to bless mankind in this day as ever he was. It is time the heaven should begin to show itself, and if the world has greater faith than the church, their blessing will be according to their faith. This was one of the first declarations promulgated in these last days. "God works among the children of men according to their faith." But let us remember that while the Gentile centurion had greater faith than Christ had found in Israel, this fact did not change the relation in which the covenant people stood to God. The Gentiles could only become children of the kingdom through obedience to the laws of adoption, even if like Cornelius they were ministered to by the angels. Dear sisters of like precious faith, what we need is to be "Heaven-helped" in order to be wise, and as our mind has been deeply drawn to this one thought we will write of it next week.

We are in receipt of letters from Sisters Gifford, Bradley, Ruby and Charlotte. We wish to call especial attention to Sister Jones' letter in this issue, and to express a hope that we shall hear from her often. We thank all who are remembering, and our determination is to labor according to the very best of our ability while life remains.

WOMAN'S WORK.

"Consider first, that great
Or bright infers not excellence; the earth
Though in comparison of heaven, so small,
Nor glist'ring, may of solid good contain
More plenty than the sun that barren shines,
Whose virtue on itself works no effect,
But in the fruitful earth; there, first received,
His beams, unactive else, their vigor find."
—Milton.

Ever since Sister Frances commenced her work as Editress of the "Mother's Home Column," we have been looking over the pages of the Herald for further expressions of gratitude for the thought that inspired and desire that prompted her to undertake so worthy an object. That the time has fully come for woman to make good use of the privilege which are extending proportionately with the march of civilization, that she is worthy to be an active participant in some of the most advanced reformatory movements of this age, that she is endowed by her Creator with special qualifications that render her fit to be engaged in the worthy effort of bringing before the minds of those around her the necessity of a closer, more searching investigation of their highest needs, and God-given responsibilities,—all this and more has at length been conceded.

Sr. Frances says, "Do not let us wait for great things to do." This monition brings to us the thought that in the humble home, in the school-room, in the prayer meeting, wherever her footsteps tend and her voice is heard, the little words in kindness spoken, the soft answer that turneth away wrath, the confirming testimony of the gospel, the heartfelt prayer that brings down blessing from above,—all shed their wide extending influence upon the human heart.

We can not, if we would, live without exerting an influence either for good or evil over those around us; and when the fact presents itself in all its dreadful reality that the arch enemy of mankind is making desperate effort to thwart every good purpose, knowing full well how and where our works can be shaken, we ought to make sure that we not only receive this gospel in faith, but also work righteousness, for to such only is the promise of eternal life.

Sometimes we feel that a spirit of peaceful slothfulness, which is not peace, is within us; we may be waiting for God's Spirit to impel us to do some deed of love; if so, let us wait with the thought that He surely lives, and firmly trust in him, knowing that in every effort for good, though ever so feeble, he will keep us, and show his divine appreciation by giving his Holy Spirit, by whom is shed abroad in our hearts, the love of God.

The same voice that uttered these words, "Behold the field is white already to harvest, and it is the eleventh hour, and for the last time that I shall call laborers into my vineyard," spoke these, like those in days of old, "Continue in the spirit of meekness and beware of pride." "Let all thy garments be plain, and their beauty, the beauty of the work of thine own hands." "Keep my commandments, and ye shall inherit the kingdom of heaven." May we not by heeding these words be enabled to do more for the cause. We are encouraged by words of cheer through the Herald and from the sacred desk, as with the voice of a trump, telling how the gospel is wending its way; how precious souls are awakening to a consciousness of diviner needs; how some are waiting, almost persuaded, at the door; and that many have been, through words mighty to save, stirred to action, like troubled waters, until we begin to hear from the salt land the mournful plea, "We have sinned; we are all as an unclean thing, and all our righteousness is as filthy rags."

If "righteousness and truth are to sweep the earth as with a flood," what a glorious incentive, sisters, for our work in behalf of misguided woman in Utah, in all their afflictions we being afflicted, lifting up our hearts unto Him in prayer for their deliverance. We know not but that through them the case of truth there might be advanced; therefore we ought to do something, be it ever so small an offering for them, and strive by every means in our humble sphere, in good will, to do service as to the Lord; knowing that whatsoever good any man doeth, the same shall he receive of the Lord, whether he be bond or free.

ABBIE A. HORTON.

PLANO, Ill.

LAMONI, Iowa, Feb., 22d.

Dear Sister Frances:—In reading the Mother's Home Column this evening, I felt pleased to think we had a place in the Herald where we could exchange thoughts with each other. I feel pleased with the two letters from those sisters in Plano. I quite agree with sister Hattie White in regard to having our children baptized when they are young. We can teach them as much as their young minds can understand while they are young. It also acts as a check against their mixing with the world's people. If we let them mix with the young people of other churches, they will form ideas that it will be hard to break away from. Now, sisters, let us see to it that we do our duty by our children, for they are to take our places when we are gone. And I also believe we will have to give an account before God as to how we have done our duty towards them. May God bless and strengthen you for the work before you, is the prayer of your sister in bonds,

SISTER JOHN SCOTT.

[We are sure sister Scott did not mean to say that she objected to her children going with those whose parents differed from her in religious views, but simply such associations as would be harmful to them. "I pray not that thou shouldst take them out of the world, but that thou shouldst keep them from the evil." Let us earnestly endeavor to so instruct them; so walk before them that when they go among their young companions, their light may shine. But in the Lord's fear, let us restrain them from all evil associations, no matter where found.—Ed.]

THE Mothers' Department is what we have long needed. Now are we equal to the task of doing our share in making it practically beneficial and interesting? We're not going to sermonize. That surely is not in our line. There is more in life than theory. "Practice what we preach," is easily said, but not as readily accomplished. "The hand that rocks the cradle rules the world," 'tis said. Rather a small world, we think, and a weak hand; nevertheless, a mother's influence often continues through life with her children.

Why may not the wife be called Madame, instead of Mrs.? How much more elegant and appropriate. Did you all read that clipping from the Chicago Tribune in our Herald for January 30th. If not, turn back and read it now. And did you, sisters, read Dewitt Talmadge's sermon No. 2, on the Marriage Ring? If you didn't, you ought to, old and young. There's a whole bundle of truth in it, and a good deal of healthy, sensible advice. Why couldn't our editor copy it, or a part of it at least?

And why don't the sisters send us some hints on household affairs, good practical recipes, &c.? Bread is the staff of life; what better subject to talk about? Perhaps all of us find difficulty sometimes in making good bread. Did you ever try leaven bread, when yeast failed to produce the desired result? Some flour will not make good bread with yeast, by any ordinary method, and yet rises white, sweet and feathery with leaven. Flaky pie crust looks very nice, and bakes beautifully, made of lard and water, equal parts, (flour and salt, of course), but adding good baking powders to the ingredients, and reducing the quantity of lard surely makes the pastry more healthful, and also very palatable. Omit half the quantity of water, using sour milk and soda instead, is very good, and requires less shortening than the old method. Take a ring from old suspenders and sew to one corner of your ironing holder to hang it by. Freeze your hulled corn before boiling. It is much nicer. We never use it unless it has been frozen before boiling.

Fearing we may be made acquainted with the waste basket for expansiveness, we will conclude with an extract from Gail Hamilton on Woman Suffrage:

"Woman suffrage is an artificial cause, and is just as hard to keep up as slavery was to put down. Convention, discussion, legislation, fail to arouse any enthusiasm for woman's rights, because there is no organized, insistent, radical woman's wrongs. Individual women suffer, and concrete laws are unjust, but men as a class are not unjust to women as a class. As men increase in refinement and virtue, women share in the improvement—inevitably because man is compounded of men and women. Whatever women suffer they suffer from the imperfection of human society, not from any combined intentional oppression by the stronger sex. Woman suffrage languishes not because men will not grant it, but because women do not wish it. Women can not be made to wish it, because they do not suffer from the lack of it. Whenever they want it they will have it. There is more danger that they will have it without wanting it than that they will want it without having it."

What do you think of it? Give us your opinion.

Yours devotedly,

PERLA WILD.

RELIGION IN THE HOME.

THE home is the cradle and nursery where human immortals begin life which shall last forever; therefore, great preparation ought to be made by parents to make home a haven of rest and a place of Christian culture. Family piety elevates the family relation here, and then when we cultivate family piety we have the assurance of a family united forever, and forever happy.

David says "I have never seen the righteous forsaken, or his seed begging bread." This message of David we believe, for we can see that it is true. When we look out upon the world and see the drunkard, and those that are on the verge of pauperism, we find that they are those that ignore religion, and in most cases have not been under the influence of religion at home.

If there is no family religion, there is no religion at all, for we can not be Saints abroad and devils at home, and we can not be indifferent to the spiritual condition of our families if we have true piety. If we do not serve God at home he will not say of us as he did to Abraham, "I know that he will command his children and his household after him."

There is little hope for our children being religious if we allow them to seek their pleasures away from their parents' guardianship. Being out late nights is at the root of nine-tenths of all family trouble. If children are to grow up godly they must have the shelter which God provided for them, HOME.

REESE, Mich., March 14th.

Mr. W. W. Blair; Dear brother in Christ:—I have just returned home from where I have been laboring. January 16th, myself and wife arrived in Tawas, where we found a branch of the Saints. We found them all well and enjoying the blessing of God. I commenced holding meetings, and finding good interest I remained there five weeks; preached eighteen times and baptized nine. While there we had some little difficulty with the Salvation Army, but nothing serious. One of our sisters expressed her gratitude to God in their meeting for sending one of the Saints Elders into that place. They responded: "Yes, and we hope God will bring him out of darkness." I spoke once on the Book of Mormon, showed what it was and proved its divine origin from the Bible. One lady, a school teacher, came five miles to hear me, and gave me credit for being fair and scriptural, but still she could not believe it; I felt to pity her. In two or three days she sent me a statement concerning the three witness-ses to the Book of Mormon, (a) I will send it with this. Feeling that I had done my duty in that place I left for Whittemore and commenced holding meetings. Before reaching Whittemore I dreamed I saw a large snake, probably six feet in length,—I felt scared at first. However, I picked up a scythe and started after him; he ran till he came to a certain place and then darted straight down into the ground. When I arrived in Whittemore I found six of the Saints living there. They got the school house and I commenced holding meetings. The M. E. minister tried very hard to help me along; but some way we did not work good together. I preached the first on baptism, of course, it was a little too strong; he did not believe only in two births; one the natural birth, the other a spiritual. But that was not all the difference, the next time I preached I showed the necessity of laying on hands. He said this laying on hands did not amount to anything, it came out of the Roman Catholic Church. I showed that through every dispensation of time, that the laying on of hands was practiced by God's people for various purposes. When I showed the organization he went into the ground; the truth cut like a two edged sword. However, I baptized one, and then started for home.

I remember the Saints there for their kindness to me, and pray that God will abundantly bless them. I feel to say that God blessed me much in presenting his word. Pray for me that I may yet become useful in declaring God's eternal truth. I remain your brother in Christ,

E. DELONG.

(a)—Neither of the three witnesses ever denied his testimony. Oliver Cowdery died in 1850, near Richmond, Missouri, where David Whitmer still lives, and to his dying day continually asserted the truthfulness of his testimony. David Whitmer still makes the same statement he did at the time. Martin Harris died in the valley of Salt Lake, affirming the correctness of his testimony to the last hour of his life. What a persistent life the lie that these three witnesses denied their testimony has.

SANTA ANA, Cal., Feb. 24th.

Dear Herald:—I have just been conversing with Elder B. F. Grouard (now resident of Santa Ana), in regard to his Island missionary work; and thinking a brief account as he tells it, might interest many, I give the following: October 15th, 1843, Elders B. F. Grouard, Addison Pratt, Noah Rodger and Henry Hanks sailed from New Bedford, Massachusetts, for Tahiti, having been ordained and set apart by Joseph and Hyrum Smith, at Nauvoo, for that mission, and also by special conference appointment. They landed at Tahiti April 15th, 1844. Elder Hanks died of consumption on the passage; Elder Rodger remained but two years, doing no native preaching, then returned home; Elder Pratt made one visit home and returned, while Elder Grouard remained in active hard labor nine years, or till June, 1852. On his arrival at Anaa there was a protracted and bloody war raging between the French and the Islanders, and he often found himself in peril between the contending parties; and also saw many native conflicts, and frequently acted as peace-maker, settling violent contentions, and preventing much bloodshed; until his word and counsel were regarded as law by the most of them. He taught them the duties of every day life; helped them to establish their boundary lines, make agreements and contracts; taught the men how to do all kinds of mechanical work in a simple way, and farm work, making every thing to work with; the women how to cook, keep house, sew, cut and make their own clothes, and children's apparel; also how to read and write, and in his many schools he had both old and young.

In going on foot from one settlement to another on some of the islands he had to wade, or swim the many bayous, or sloughs, that run back from the sea. Often the natives would follow along with him, and keep gathering on the way. While thus on the way he taught them, then upon crossing a slough he would stop and baptize from fifty to one hundred, then on to the next, a few miles, and baptize as many more; so all day, and when they arrived at the town all would be there; he would then hold a great meeting and confirm them all, organize them in the simplest possible manner for them to improve; stay a week and on again in like manner, working to the next town.

For years he labored in this way, barefoot with only drawers and shirt for clothing; cocoanuts and fish for food, eating with fingers, no money to buy any thing with. Finally he built a schooner of eighty tons burthen, on the Island of Tubuai; had not a cent to commence with; cut the timber, whip sawed it, designed the vessel, got natives to help do some of the roughest and plainest work, and after overcoming all kinds of difficulties with eighteen months' hard labor, completed the vessel, and sailed from one island to another, in his missionary work. Finally, in 1850, Addison Pratt returned to the Islands with four Elders from Salt Lake, all in the faith of polygamy, though they did not teach it to the natives, but told Grouard for the first time that the spiritual wife business was in the church. The statement made him almost crazy, with other things they told him; and at first he felt that he would not have it so; but ere long he was made painfully aware of the great change that had taken place since he left Nauvoo in 1843, under the appointment of Joseph the martyr, of whose death he did not learn for over two years after his assassination.

It now seemed to him as he scanned the field of his long, arduous, self-sacrificing labors for seven years, that his brightest hopes were blasted, his glorious sun had set; and he must now surrender his charge so well kept, and growing, into the hands of false teachers and shearers of the flock, instead of the feeding shepherds; said he would rather have died, than continue in that condition.

So in June, 1852, he returned, or left the Islands for home.—"Home did I say—Good heavens! I had no home; I was alone in the world. Shipwrecked worse than when I was once wrecked upon an uninhabited island. But I lived aloof from all forms of religion. Now am an old man, with a grown up family, but to-day am not sorry for the work I did on those Islands over thirty years ago; for I taught them the truth, and nothing else. I should like to visit them again, and confirm to them that which I then taught them; and hope that I may. I feel that I have done my share, and that God does not require such sacrifice at my hands again. If He does he will have to tell me so. Am now making a living for my family, and it is my duty; but hope to be able to take a rest ere long; then I will go down there again if all is well, visit and try and unite them in the one faith again; but I would not take the charge of the mission. My standing, I claim is not changed, but is the same it was in 1843."

A schooner of fifty to one hundred tons burthen is much needed among those Islands, and would pay well every way. Bro. Grouard also says he would help take one down if the Saints should send one; and would go from Island to Island instructing in regard to the best routes to be taken as he is well acquainted with that business there. He speaks native fluently, and although thirty years is a long link to be broken in the chain of a man's life; he is still hale and well kept, for notwithstanding he was shipwrecked, he still preserved and maintained his nobility of manhood; and in conversation on this, his eyes flash fire when he speaks of the Brighamite departure and its dirty results.

My prayer is that the Spirit of God may richly endow him and lead him into useful and happy paths in the great latter day work in which he has toiled and suffered so long and so well, for assuredly he will reap the reward of that masterly sowing in the long past. I feel deeply interested in the welfare of Elder Grouard, and of all such; and I believe that God does also, and that his days have been prolonged, that he might again behold the rising light of Zion's sun rising to set, no more.

Should the cut rates continue, doubtless several of the Saints will attend coming conference, from this district, as well as the northern districts.

Yours in the field and labor of love,

D. S. MILLS.

RIDGETOWN, Ont., March 14th.

Dear Readers of the Herald:—I see good letters and pieces of good advice from the many brethren and sisters in the new covenant of these last days; so I thought tidings from this place would not come amiss. The work here is still moving; and the authorities of the land are giving us our rights; for the town council here gave me a remittal of taxes last year for doing ministerial labors. There was quite a share of talk over it, some said our religion was not acknowledged by law; but when the town council gave me the remittal of taxes it changed the tide, showing we are just as good as any one else, if we behave ourselves. You can rest assured the above would not have been granted to me if I had taught plurality of wives. God has promised us favor in the sight of men, and the above is a great evidence to me. I feel encouraged to see the zeal of some in sacrificing what they do, but think it better if we could all pull alike. If all were true to the gospel harness the work would gain more ground. Saints very often cripple the work by moving, especially from a branch few in number. We ought to see if we have sufficiently warned our neighbors; and whether by our going away we would cripple the branch that we are connected with. Saints seem to have so much move on the brain. If we would hold the fort, try to push out laborers in the field and live consistent lives in the places where we reside, more good could be done; not move to places where large branches of the Saints are, there to get rid of battle. Large branches can get along without us just now. Let the call come first. Brethren, let us step out in the broad, open field, and wave the banners of the everlasting gospel. We are liable to have the gathering to extremes, "There is a time for all things." I had the moving spirit once; but a good brother gave me quite a setting out, saying the Saints here in Canada, have nearly spoilt the work by moving. Forts abandoned have to be retaken. I would like to be with a large body of Saints just as well as any person; but in a great many large branches now, where there is a number of officers, the laity holds their money; keep the officers at home; then each officer tries to pick flaws in every others sermon, like a lot of little children. If they would get out in the open blaze of the battle, there would be enough to do to fight the enemy without finding fault with our brothers speech. Saints, give in your tithes and offerings to keep the boys out, so when they come back they will be as my dear old mother used to say, "Hunger is good sauce. Victuals very often do not taste right, or suit the boys, while around home (I was a boy once), but while away they get brought to their senses, so coming back, they find home is the best place yet." And such will be the case with those who wave the gospel banners.

Yours in the Everlasting Gospel,

JAMES H. TYRRELL.

TENANTS HARBOR, Me., March 4th.

Bro. Blair:—The last from these parts you had was from Bro. Kelley after our tour of Maine last fall. When we separated I went to Lisbon Falls where my family are residing for the winter. While at home I was favored with the privilege of preaching twice in the Baptist Church there, as "supply" for the pastor who was ill. I was somewhat surprised at the invitation, for I told them distinctly what I was denominationally. It was the means of giving me a start before the public there which I hope to improve at some opportune time. Some have called for and received reading matter relative to our faith.

January 1st I left home for the east, my field of labor. The stormy weather prevented the steamer from making connection at Rockland, which would delay me over Sunday. I thought to improve the time by calling to see Bro. Seavey at Tenant's Harbor, some twelve miles away. I came upon him rather unexpectedly, for he had not seen an Elder for several years, is isolated from church privileges, being the only one of the faith in the town, is highly respected and esteemed as a citizen, and is town clerk. The Baptists control the only church of the place. The minister being away, Bro. Seavey applied for the chance for me to preach, but was refused, notwithstanding I had just been adorning the pulpit of a sister church. The people were anxious to hear, but the stiff antiquated Deacon said "Nay," and I presume thought "he deceiveth the people." In this case it turned out to be the best thing he could have done for me. The liberal minded people of the place, not wishing to have such a reputation as to be called intolerant, opened the school house, where I preached eleven discourses to good audiences. An effort was made by some of the poor creed-bound ones to even stop that, but to no purpose, only to agitate the subject of building a church that will be free to all, which may yet be done by them.

From there I was invited to Martinsville, two miles off, where they have a Union Church. The minister there for this winter is an Adventist. I was allowed to occupy when he did not. Good audiences greeted me there. The minister also publicly announcing that he knew of me and the people I represented, that they were good Christian folks. This favor was due to the kind treatment rendered him by Saints where he had traveled; "Kindness makes friends." The Adventists have preached considerably around this place, and as a consequence their hobby, the soul question, was made prominent. After I had preached a few times it became evident that it would not do to let me go on unmolested, so of course the hobby was presented to know how we viewed the matter, which resulted in arrangements for a four nights' debate on the subject.

From there I went to New Harbor, where resides our old heroine and veteran, Sister Poland, who for over forty years has maintained her confidence in the final success of the great work of this dispensation. How sublime the faith that will hold fast so many years in the face of all opposition and in isolation from those of like faith. For upwards of thirty years she never beheld the face of a Latter Day Saint outside of her own family, until a young sister, Ella M. Clough, was traveling by team with her father through that section, was led to ask if there were any Latter Day Saints about there, (not for a moment thinking there were), was directed to her. The prophet's reference "How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings," can be well accommodated to this case, for the old lady had not heard up to this time of the work of the Reorganization. To say that they talked all night is to put it mildly. Bro. Foss subsequently visited her and preached there. I occupied the Union Church during my stay, and preached to attentive listeners who attended, the weather part of the time being twenty degrees below zero. While there the Methodist minister's turn came; he comes twice a month for Sunday afternoon. I gave way for his benefit and attended his meeting. He was appreciative of my act towards him and invited me into the pulpit with him. The Methodists have a nice new building there, the pulpit alone cost three hundred dollars.

He preached a good discourse containing so much truth held by us relative to the literal gathering of Israel and restoration of the land of Palestine, that I felt to shout amen in real Methodist fashion. The subject of Israel's favor is becoming so apparent that many, other than us, are taking notice of it. It is pleasing to think that we stand at the head of the class, it being a prominent feature of the "marvelous work and a wonder." In attended a meeting in Rockland, held by one Elder Cummings, who is engaged in getting up a colony to go to Palestine, and be on hand for the advent of the Messiah, who he says will come to Mt. Olivet. He had rather a unique way of explaining the two sticks of Ezekiel 37; which he interprets to mean the uniting of the Kingdom of Israel and Judah.

He takes a round stick about eighteen inches long, one and a half inches thick, splits it into two pieces, with one half in each hand illustrative of the divided state of the two kingdoms; then joins them together in one hand and exclaims here they are united. He has a plaster of Paris hand standing upon the pulpit into which he thrusts the sticks, and there they remain in view of the audience during the discourse. Elder Cummings claims he is a literal Israelite, his followers also make the same claim.

In case it should be discovered that they are not of the literal seed after the kingdom is set up there at Jerusalem, they will be better off there in the kingdom even if they have to be hewers of wood and drawers of water, than to be outside. I preached one Sunday in Rockland in a hall occupied by the Adventists, through the influence of Mr. George McComber. The Saints of Little Deer Isle will notice the fruits of their kind treatment while there among them.

Feb. 6th, I entered into a debate for four nights with Elder Plummer, referred to above, on the question: Resolved, That the Bible teaches there is no conscious entity between death and the resurrection. Elder Plummer maintained a fair demeanor, generally, during the time, although some of our friends thought otherwise. He might have been so much worse that I find no fault. I was somewhat verdant on the topic to start with, but by the help of the Spirit I was enabled to keep down temper, thereby gaining the good will of many of the audience for such deportment. I was led to pray very earnestly that the truth might be made clearly manifest before the people, so that none need be deceived. My opponent was quite jubilant at times and confident of victory, informing me at the close of the third night that he would "fix me" the next night. The next night came; the house was full to overflowing. The people wondered what was the trouble with Elder Plummer, his ardor had abated, and during his last speech when he ought to be doing his very best, he gave out completely, and sat down ten minutes before his time expired. Together with the chairman I urged him to go on, but to no purpose; he would not. As my opponent's mouth was closed, mine was opened with all the liberty needful. The debate was undoubtedly productive of much good. There were many that were inclined to think favorable of the other side that now see the true side of the question. After this I went to Clark's Island and preached several times, where an interest is being awakened. I returned to the scene of the debate and preached again, and was received by a large audience. Our Advent friends being conspicuous by their absence, including the minister. I came here intending to stay a day or so and visit Bro. Seavey, but instead have stayed over two months, and opened up six new points for preaching, which bid fair to prosper when attended to, which we hope to be able to do.

Yours in hope,
FRANK M. SHEEHY.

WILBER, Neb., March 15th.

Dear Herald:—Subsequent to my last writing I left home and labored for a week in the vicinity of the Moroni Branch. The outside people gave us good attention, and a full house at nearly every meeting. Can not say as much for those called Saints, they seem to be under a cloud somewhat, or at least some of them do.

Sabbath, the 21st ult., I spent at home; spoke once and was permitted the privilege of hearing Bro. J. M. Terry give a very practical discourse upon the present and the hope of the future. In the presence of a goodly and orderly company I administered the ordinance of baptism. My next point of labor was in the Palmyra Branch. I went there by the request of our district president to aid him in some official business. We spent from the 25th ult., till the 8th inst., and most of the time the house was crowded. Quite a number manifested deep interest in the work, and made enquiry concerning our faith and doctrine. Three were added by baptism. I was the spokesman, but was aided and encouraged by Brn. Levi Anthony, Thos. Nutt and Robt. White. The latter has been a successful "Sankey" for me more than once; and I earnestly pray that the time is near at hand when the church will be able to comply with the law, so that we may go "two and two." I came here on the 8th inst., and through the kindness of that good disposed man, Rev. George E. Dye, pastor of Baptist Church, we held six meetings in said church. The attendance was fair, the condition of the roads considered. Bro. R. J. Anthony, having returned, he pulled the laboring oar once, and yesterday we divided labor at the school-house, two miles from town.

Last May I was present at the Sheriff's sale of the books and clothing of Clark Braden, and last Friday I was present when the Blue Valley Blade office, property of the Rev. (?) L. L. Luse, was sold under the hammer. The execution was for $1,991.20, and the expense of the sale. The office, building, and the contents thereof, sold for $695. Those who are the sureties upon Luse's paper, will have to meet the deficit. One of the spectators who wore a satisfied look upon his face, was Clark Braden. Some three weeks ago Luse turned up missing; and, O, what a change, those who once were his friends and ready to applaud, are now cursing him. Once more are we led to exclaim, "How are the mighty fallen?" All these events but confirm me in the belief, that no arm, voice, or weapon raised against the truth can prosper. It is the Lord's work and he will care for it. Desiring to be worthy to stand and be crowned in the Father's bright kingdom of glory, I pray for patience, humility and faith, that I may abide, keep the law in all its requirements, that in all I shall prove my willingness to be a true follower of the Prince of Life.

To-day the Saints here were made to rejoice when I buried in baptism Wm. M. Preston. Let me say to all the dear Saints and friends, within my extended mission, whom I have not been permitted to visit, that I have done the best I could, and have spent no idle time. Should the good Lord and the church allow me to continue in this glorious work, of a watchman on Zion's walls, I shall seek to do the best I can to help those scattered, and bring others to the knowledge of saving truth. I have been greatly blessed and have been fairly successful in adding to our numbers, for all of which I give the honor and praise to our Heavenly Father.

God bless and sustain sister "Frances" in her noble work of teaching. Nothing cripples the good an Elder might do, as the unwise and foolish actions of the members of the church, and I felt that there has been too great an anxiety to increase our membership, to the neglect of properly instructing them in all their duties. A weighty responsibility rests upon branch officers, in caring for the flock under their watchcare, for the evil one is ever upon the alert to cause us trouble and sow the seeds of division.

Snow is nearly all gone, and no floods. The farmers are getting ready for their spring work.

In gospel bonds,
ROBT. M. ELVIN.

CHRISTIAN UNITY.

"Ye are all one in Christ Jesus."—Gal. 3:28.

One God and one Father we own,
All sprung from the same common stock;
We acknowledge one Savior alone,
Who laid down his life for the flock.

No ties upon earth can be found
So tender, endearing and strong,
As those with which brethren are bound,
Who to their Redeemer belong.

His blood their full ransom has paid,
Their trust is alone in his name;
United in him as their head,
Their hopes and their joys are the same.

May we all of His Spirit partake,
That our interest in him we may prove,
And abound, for the Savior's dear sake,
In gentleness, meekness, and love!

Names, parties and sects, disappear,
Their schisms, their creeds, and their laws;
No name but of Christ would we hear,
No interest but that of his cause.

O! how do we long for the hour,
When each kindred, nation and tribe,
Salvation and glory and power,
Shall to their Redeemer ascribe!

These predictions, dear Jesus, fulfill;
Thy apostles, thy elders do own,
And through thy servants reveal that thy will
May on earth, as in heaven, be done.

SERMON AT LAMONI,

BY ELDER C. SCOTT,

ON SUNDAY, MARCH 7TH, 1886.

THE Scripture that I will read for our morning lesson will be found in the first letter of Paul to the Thessalonians, chapter five:

"But of the times and seasons brethren, you have no need that I write unto you. For yourselves know perfectly, that the day of the Lord so cometh as a thief in the night. For when they shall say peace and safety; then sudden destruction cometh upon them, as travail upon a woman with child, and they shall not escape. But ye, brethren, are not in darkness, that that day should overtake you as a thief. Ye are all the children of light, and the children of the day; we are not of the night, nor of darkness. Therefore let us not sleep as do others; but let us watch and be sober. For they that sleep, sleep in the night, and they that be drunken, are drunken in the night. But let us who are of the day be sober, putting on the breastplate of faith and love, and for a helmet the hope of salvation. For God hath not appointed us to wrath, but to obtain salvation by our Lord Jesus Christ who died for us, that whether we are awake or asleep, we should live together with him."

We have read ten verses of the 5th chapter of Thessalonians. You will readily conclude from the very lesson itself, that it is our intention to try to use it with reference to the hour of Christ's coming. The lesson treats of that period of the world, known in the Bible as the harvest of the world, the end of the world, the time of the end. There are to be times and seasons, and there are to be peculiar times and seasons, in the days referred to in the language of the text, and it is indicated that one of the peculiar features of the age will be a manifestation of wrath. "God hath not appointed us to wrath, but to obtain salvation by our Lord Jesus Christ."

I presume that there are none of you who would differ touching the thought, that in some sense, there are three salvations contemplated in the great grace of God given to us through Christ. God hath not appointed us to wrath, but to obtain salvation by our Lord Jesus Christ. The salvation that is here referred to by the Apostle Paul, is evidently that salvation, which we may for the sake of convenience term a temporal salvation.

In addition to this temporal salvation there is what is known in the Scriptures as the salvation from sin. The great object of our Savior's mission to the world is that he shall save his people from their sins. It is evident that this salvation is also referred to in the commission given by our Savior to the apostles, as recorded in Mark 16 chapter. "He that believeth, and is baptized shall be saved, but he that believeth not shall be damned," &c. Again in second chapter of Acts, 38 verse, in one of the first gospel sermons that was preached by the Holy Ghost after the glorification of Christ, when the multitude cried out "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" The answer is, "Repent and be baptized every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." In the third chapter of Titus, Paul writing, says, "Not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to His mercy He saved us, by the washing of regeneration and the renewing of the Holy Ghost." These Scriptures are sufficient, on this point, we think. They teach that there is salvation from sin, contemplated in the gospel.

While we may for the sake of convenience, and to a better comprehension of the divine purposes and works of God, and his dealings with the children of men by the gospel, consider that there is in the gospel that salvation which is termed a salvation from sin; yet there is a temporal salvation spoken of in the text, even a salvation from the temporal judgments to be manifested in the day of God's wrath, at the time of the end.

It is evident that the great salvation from sin is to be realized in this life by the children of men; but in the world to come, salvation from death and its stupendous consequences, to some extent, may be learned by reading Paul's letter to the Hebrews, 5 chap. As touching the mission and service of Christ when he was upon the earth, he says; "Who in the days of his flesh, when he had offered up prayers and supplications, with strong crying and tears, unto him who was able to save him from death, was heard in that he feared. Though he were a son, yet learned he obedience by the things which he suffered; and being made perfect, he became the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him."

But in the first chapter of the book of Revelations, eighteenth verse, is announced the fact, "I am He that liveth and was dead; and, behold, I am alive forevermore, Amen; and have the keys of hell and of death." Christ then is the one appointed to hold the keys of hell and of death, and hath the power to close and no man opens; he opens and unlocks, and no man shuts; he is appointed to unlock the tomb by and by, and to bring forth all the children of men from the grave and save them from death and its imposed power. The gospel is designed to bring about, not only this salvation from death, not only a salvation from sin, but as we remarked a few moments ago, what might be termed a temporal salvation. God has discrimination over all his people. And whatever our views may be with regard to the fact of his being a God of immediate interposition, the Bible in its historical account of God's dealings with his people, abounds with evidence establishing that fact; so also do the teachings of our Lord Jesus Christ demonstrate that our Heavenly Father does immediately interpose, and does send manifestations of his divine power to the salvation of his people who trust in him and keep his commandments.

Whoever are in the mind to investigate this question and know of its truthfulness, can do so by turning to the seventeenth chapter of Luke, where the Savior speaking of the days of his coming assured his disciples that the time would come, when they would desire to see one of the days of the coming of the Son of Man and would not have that desire gratified. And right here I desire to drop a thought for our consideration. I look upon this event, or day of the coming of the Son of Man, as comprehending a brief period, that shall be prior to the immediate removal of the veil cast over all people, when he shall come to save his people with an immortal salvation and bring to pass the resurrection of the dead. Hence, the Savior goes on to say that it shall be in this day of the coming of the Son of Man, as it was in the days of Lot, and as it was in the days of Noah.

God visited the children of men with special judgments, that then He provided a special temporal salvation to His people, as in the case of Lot, pointing out a Zoar for his salvation; appointing an ark for the salvation of Noah and his house. So the Heavenly Father would make special appointments in the day of the coming of the Son of Man for the salvation of His people who believe and trust in him. Jesus foresaw the overthrow of Jerusalem, the desolation of the house of Israel, or of Judah, and speaking of the time when the wrath of God would be visited upon it to the uttermost. He knew that notwithstanding His disciples had obeyed the gospel and had a claim on immortality, that if they did not after the command to flee to a place of safety separate themselves from those children of men who were devoted to a temporal death, that the salvation they had obtained from their past sins would not save them from this temporal death. He foresaw that if His disciples abode in Jerusalem they must take the consequences of its destruction; hence He says unto them: "When ye shall see Jerusalem encompassed with armies, let him that is in the city depart out of it, let him that is in the field not return to take anything out of his house," etc; as much as to say, Flee for your lives. We see in these instances of divine interposition of the past, examples of the circumstances in which the children of God will be placed in the latter-days. Our text says, "Let us not sleep as do others. But let us who are of the day be sober, putting on the breastplate of faith and love, and for a helmet, the hope of salvation," indicating to us that there would be an occasion for a special exercise of faith in God.

Now let me invite your attention to the twenty-first chapter of Luke, twenty-sixth verse. We deem it essential that every one should be interested in the language I now am about to read. Jesus had been talking to them about the desolation that should come on the earth prior to his second advent. He had been giving to them the signs of His second coming, when He should come in glory and in power. He had been speaking to them about men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking for these things which are coming on the earth. He foresaw that men of the earth will be able to see when the powers of heaven begin to be shaken, and the results will be disastrous in their effects; He says that their hearts shall fail them for fear, and for looking for these things that shall come on the earth, for the powers of heaven shall be shaken. So far as my honest conviction is concerned in the application of this text, I venture it as an opinion that the powers here styled the powers of heaven are the governments of the earth, but they are wielded by the Savior whose powers are of heaven; and they are to be shaken in consequence of peculiar circumstances, the revolutionary state of things existing among the kingdoms of the earth, and for other reasons that shall be in these days, and because of this, men's hearts shall fail them for fear of the things coming on the earth. Do you not remember reading of a war in heaven when Michael and his angels fought? Now there is not a sane mind present who believes that this war occurred where God is! But we may reasonably conclude that when the devil and his angels fight against Michael the archangel (whom we believe to be Christ) and his angels, Michael will lead his disciples on to victory.

This was a war "against principalities, against powers, against the rules of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places." The devil, represented as the dragon, we are credibly informed by competent historians, pressed into his service Pagan Rome to destroy the followers of Christ, for it is an historical fact that she waged ten general persecutions against them. In these persecutions the enemy made use of carnal weapons, but the followers of Christ are not allowed to use carnal weapons, theirs are spiritual weapons, which are mighty to the pulling down of strongholds. "And He spake unto them a parable. Behold the fig-tree and all the trees. When they now shoot forth, ye see and know of your own selves, that summer is now nigh at hand. So likewise ye, when ye see these things come to pass, know that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand. Verily I say unto you, this generation shall not pass away until all be fulfilled. Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my word shall not pass away. Take heed unto yourselves, lest at any time your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting, and drunkenness, and cares of this life, so that day come upon you unawares. For as a snare shall it come on all them that dwell on the face of the whole earth."

Now here comes the text that I wish to call your attention to: "Watch and pray always, that you may be accounted worthy to escape these things that shall come to pass, and stand before the Son of Man."

You perceive then, that some of the conditions are here laid down through the observance of which the children of God, at this time, shall be counted worthy to escape. What is the object of this language here recorded? Is it not for the purpose of inspiring faith in those who shall be on the earth at that time, with the thought that the observance of the conditions would bring peace and safety? While a fair conclusion would be, if we fail to watch and pray as here enjoined, we shall not escape, neither shall we be counted worthy to stand before the Son of Man when he shall appear. This language then inspires man with faith. This seems to be its intent and purpose, to inspire him with faith in the warning of the Savior of men, to the end we might hail his coming with joy, being worthy to stand. But the Bible in many places points out the fact that the children of earth, and earth's leading cities will be overthrown, being visited with famines, plagues and earthquakes, and sad distress of nations with perplexity, causing the hearts of men to fail them with fear. Think you, though we may, like the ancient disciples, obey the Savior, like them watch and pray, if we remain among the people of the cities which shall be destroyed, where the famine and plague were reigning, that we shall escape more than those who chose to remain there? We could no more do so, than the ancient disciples could escape the calamities coming upon Jerusalem, after being warned to flee. Let us look to this twenty-first chapter of Luke once more, twenty-fourth verse. Speaking of Jerusalem and the Jews, Jesus says: "And they shall fall by the edge of the sword, and shall be led away captive among all nations, and Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled." You will notice that Daniel, when he saw beforehand in vision the treading underfoot the sanctuary, and the scattering of the holy people, was troubled as much as anything else, over the length of the vision. "How long shall be the vision concerning the daily sacrifice? How long shall they be trodden underfoot?" No wonder that the wrath of God upon the Jewish nation had no parallel up to that time, neither is it possible to have a parallel hereafter. The punishment for their iniquity does not terminate with the single destruction of their city. No; it extends as long as Jerusalem is trodden under foot of the Gentiles. It extends to the days of the fulfillment of the times of the Gentiles.

When the times of the Gentiles has been fulfilled, then what? Jerusalem is, to some extent, trodden down of the Gentiles now. Gentile power is exercised to some extent it is true. Jerusalem is extending, being built up by the Jews at this present time. It is true they are gathering into, and purchasing land in and around the city, so that they are building day and night. I am acquainted with some brethren who went with George J. Adams, when he went to establish a colony in the land of Palestine at Joppa, near to Jerusalem. I was not knowing to the fact of their having been there, till one evening when preaching in the section of country where they reside, upon the same subject that is now occupying our attention, they came forward and stated that they could verify the facts that I had advanced about Jerusalem, for they were eye witnesses having been there. There are four of them, and they belong to the Brocton, Massachusetts, Branch. You can write to them if you choose. One of them, Bro. Ames, built pretty much all of the houses that were built in the colony. It seems that the times of the Gentiles are not quite full, and Jerusalem is to be trodden down, and the Jews scattered, until those times are fulfilled.

Bringing our minds down to Gentile times, or rather after their times have expired, there are to be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars, and upon the earth distress of nations with perplexity. You will notice that Mark, thirteenth chapter, in his rendering of the sermon of the Savior brings our minds down to the expiration of the Gentile times, and that is after the days of the tribulations of the Jews has ceased, which time of tribulation is extended until now, to some extent, but is greatly on the wane; very few of the nations of the earth persecute them now. Luke in the twenty-first chapter brings the minds of the disciples down to the fulness of Gentile times, which fulness, he says, takes place when the Gentiles shall cease to tread down, or rule in Jerusalem. Right immediately after that transaction, he states, "there shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars, and upon the earth distress of nations with perplexity, men's hearts failing them for fear of what is coming on the earth," &c. If I am required to believe in the inspiration of prophets that have spoken in the name of the Lord, I can not but believe that the Jews will gather out from among the nations, sooner or later, and when they do, in the divine providence of God, they will gather in their bosom, so to speak, the financial basis of the firms, or associations, banking institutions and societies of those nations. I wonder if their gathering out from the nations, and withdrawing their financial support will not be one of the very means why the powers of earth will be shaken?

If the Jews should gather out of Iowa and out of Illinois; in fact, out of the United States, and from all the nations of the earth to Jerusalem, taking the basis of all currency—their silver and their gold—with them, I wonder if there would not be a collapse in many affairs throughout the earth, and great perplexity among the inhabitants, and men's hearts failing them for fear of what is coming on the earth? I think we can readily see what such a move would result in. The far seeing statesmen are contemplating such a move with dismay. In connection with this, let me invite your attention to the language of Joel, one of Israel's prophets who spoke upon these days, and upon this very question. In the second chapter of his prophecy, speaking of the period our Savior refers to, in those days after the times of the Gentiles should expire, when there shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars, he says; "I will restore to you [Israel] the years that the locusts hath eaten, the canker-worm, and the caterpillar, and the palmer-worm, my great army which I sent among you. And ye shall eat in plenty, and be satisfied, and praise the name of the Lord your God, who hath dealt wondrously among you, and my people shall never be ashamed, and ye shall know that I am in the midst of Israel, and that I am the Lord your God and none else, and my people shall never be ashamed. And it shall come to pass afterward [after this restoration] that I will pour out of my Spirit upon all flesh; and your sons, and your daughters, shall prophecy, your old men shall dream dreams, your young men shall see visions; and also upon the servants, and upon the handmaids, in those days, will I pour out of my Spirit." What can be more logical than this? That after the times of the Gentiles are fulfilled, and when in the language of Paul, after speaking of those times being come in, he says, "And then, all Israel shall be saved, as it is written There shall come out of Sion the Deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob. For this is my covenant with them when I take away their sins." What can be supposed to more logically follow, than when they shall have their sins taken away through obedience to the gospel, being turned away from ungodliness by such obedience, that the same blessings should follow the obedience to the same gospel, as were enjoyed by the ancient people of God, that Israel should enjoy the Spirit of wisdom and revelation in the knowledge of God? Hence, Joel says: "I will pour out my Spirit upon all flesh, and your sons and your daughters shall prophecy, your old men shall dream dreams, your young men shall see visions," &c. And in connection with this he says, "And I will show wonders in the heavens, and in the earth, blood, and fire, and pillars of smoke. The sun shall be turned into darkness, and the moon into blood, before the great and terrible day of the Lord come." What beautiful harmony! How wondrously the Savior seems to connect the time of the fulfillment of the things predetermined, that had been spoken by the prophets, that should take place before he should come.

Joel says: "There shall be distress of nations, and signs in the sun," &c. Luke represents the Savior in speaking of the latter days, as saying, "There shall be distress of nations with perplexity." Their distress will be so great that it will be a wondrous distress unto them. It will be so great as to melt the hearts of men. We have before mentioned one particular source of distress, the gathering of the Jews out of the nations, leaving the different moneyed associations in a perplexing condition. There is one perplexing question that seems to occupy the attention of the powers of the earth. I refer to this wondrous Eastern question.

The nations of necessity seem to be concerned about it, and the Gentile governments are powerless in its solution; and to-day, the Jews in the land of Palestine are so closely connected with this question that they are a material factor, or element in the solution of the problem.

But in these days the sun is to be turned into darkness, and the moon into blood, before the great and terrible day of the Lord come, "And it shall come to pass, that whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be delivered." "Watch ye therefore, and pray always, that you may be counted worthy to escape these things that shall come to pass, and stand before the Son of Man." "And it shall come to pass that whosoever calleth upon the name of the Lord shall be delivered." Delivered from what? Why from those things that distress the nations, and that press the souls out of men; from famines, pestilence, earthquakes, blood and fire, that shall visit the children of men. Are we to look upon this prophecy as I heard of one man looking upon the prophecy of Isaiah second chapter, first to fourth verses, as a myth, because he could not see the philosophy of it? He entirely overlooked, and absolutely lost sight of faith, like many who have for a time been "looking unto and hastening to the coming of the Lord" have done. Jesus implies that there is a possibility of some becoming weary and faint, turning away, making shipwreck of their faith; that some will actually be asleep when Jesus comes, and be found among the foolish virgins, unprepared. Yes, only those who call on the name of the Lord shall be delivered. It seems to me that the prophet's language would indicate what they should be delivered from. And it also seems, by the text referred to, that there is a peculiar deliverance pointed out; but it appears that it will be to some extent by the people of the Lord coming out from these influences spoken of. "And it shall come to pass that whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be delivered, for in Mount Zion, and in Jerusalem, shall be deliverance, as the Lord hath said, and in the remnant that the Lord our God shall call."—Joel chap. 2.

It will not be our province to talk so much of the state of Mount Zion, as to establish the fact of its existence. It appears from the language of the prophet, that it is not only in Jerusalem that there shall be deliverance, but in Mount Zion and Jerusalem, deliverance is to be had. The conjunction, and, would indicate that the preceding place pointed out, substantiated the fact of existence, and existed at the same time as the other; and that affirming deliverance in Jerusalem, is just as true a statement, as that there is to be deliverance in Mount Zion, one as well as the other. I presume that this deliverance of the people may be termed that temporal salvation Paul speaks of, as having relation to the times and seasons at the coming of the Lord. All who gain this salvation will have to have faith in the promises of God, and in the requirements in which this salvation is promised. Among the many visions our Savior was pleased to show unto his servant, John, as recorded in the book of Revelations, given to the ministration of things which must shortly come to pass, I read in the eighteenth chapter that John saw, not only the revelation of a wondrous power that should have particular influence for a time, and reign in glory; but he saw the time of its failure, the time of its wane, when it had become the hold of every foul spirit, and the cage of every unclean and hateful bird, and that this great power had accomplished great wickedness, and had been guilty of every crime mentioned in the moral or spiritual code, becoming very corrupt, so that its corruption would be its downfall. There is a people in the world, if they only had an opportunity to know God, would be willing to know him. There is such a thing as the Lord having a people, and yet they are not his people as yet by obedience to the gospel. Do you not remember in Paul's travels he came to ascertain city, and it seems he was rather in doubt whether to speak there or not, but the Lord spake to Paul in the night by a vision. "Be not afraid, but speak, and hold not thy peace, for I am with thee, and no man shall set on thee to hurt thee, for I have much people in this city." In the vision seen by John, concerning the judgments that will bring the visitations of destruction upon the wicked, producing the downfall of Babylon, he hears a voice from heaven, saying: "Come out of her my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues. For her sins have reached unto heaven, and God hath remembered her iniquities.

It seems to me that this prophecy would imply more than a mere separation of the people from communing with the various religionists of Babylon. While that is implied, it seems to me that more than this is required, in order that God's people may not be partakers of these plagues, or to receive of the various judgments which are to come upon her for her sins. For after he had seen the earth lighted up with the glory of the angel, who cried with a mighty voice, "Babylon the great is fallen, is fallen, and is become the hold of every foul spirit, and the cage of every unclean and hateful bird," &c., he heard the voice to God's people commanding them to come out of her, that they receive not of her plagues. If we should ask the question what are her plagues? The answer is given, "Therefore shall her plagues come in one day; death and mourning, and famine, and she shall be utterly burned with fire, for strong is the Lord God who judgeth her."

It seems to me, according to the revealed word of God, that he has commanded his people to come out of Babylon. Is there a place prepared? The prophet Joel indicates, that in Mount Zion and Jerusalem shall be deliverance, as the Lord hath said, and in the remnant that the Lord our God shall call. This is as far as we are able to follow this subject now. We leave these things for you to think about. It sufficeth us to know and understand that the Scriptures hold forth the idea that there is such a salvation as a temporal one from the plagues that are coming on the earth; and when the time comes for the Deliverer to make known His will concerning this deliverance, He will be equal to the occasion; and when the time comes for the people of God to enter the ark, an ark will be ready. When the command comes for the people of God to come out of Babylon that they may not be made partakers of this death and mourning, God will appoint the place where deliverance will be found. Let us trust in the providence of God. "Watch and pray always, that we may be counted worthy to stand" when the Son of Man cometh.

THE ORIGIN OF LANGUAGE.

THE learned have given birth to many conjectures in their endeavors to solve mystery. Skeptics who see no light and truth in the accredited word of God, chase the shadowy phantoms of vague hypotheses in fruitless research for the "origin of all things" The word of God is ridiculed under the alleged claim of inconsistency; but those who make this claim exhibit their own folly, either in utterly refusing to give through their superior wisdom a better version as to the genesis of earthly things and conditions, or by the presentation of abstruse, conflicting and absurd theories, which for one to believe would necessitate a blind credulity far in the advance of what is charged sarcastically upon the believing saint, or Christian.

G. P. Quackenbos in his text book of composition and rhetoric, treating upon the "origin of spoken language" says, "It is a question that has been much and ably discussed whether spoken language is a divine or human institution; whether God gave it to man, as he gave the mental faculties; or man invented it for himself, stimulated by the desire of communicating with his kind. Those who think language is a human institution believe, with the ancient philosophers and poets, that men were originally 'a dumb and low herd;' that they were in all things rude and savage, totally ignorant of the arts, unable to communicate with each other except in the imperfect manner of beasts, and sensible of nothing save hunger, pain, and similar emotions. Cicero, alluding to the human race in primeval ages, says: 'There was a time when men wandered every where through the fields after the manner of beasts, and supported life by eating the food of beasts.' Diodorus, Lucretius, Horace, Pliny, Juvenal, and other ancient writers agree with Cicero in this opinion, and hold that it was only after a long and gradual improvement that men came to their present enlightened state.

"Lord Monboddo, who, in his work on 'The Origin and Progress of Language,' labors to prove that man is but a higher species of the monkey, think that originally the human race had only a few monosyllables, such as ha, he, hi, ho, by which as beasts, they expressed certain emotions. Dr. Murry gives it as his opinion that all language originated in nine monosyllables, ag, bag, dwag, gwag, lag, mag, nag, rag, swag. 'Each of these,' says Dr. M., "is a verb, and indicates a species of action. Power, motion, force, ideas united in every untutored mind are implied in them all. They were uttered at first, and probably for several generations, in an insulated manner. The circumstances of the action were communicated by gestures and the variable tones of the voice; but the actions themselves were expressed by their suitable monosyllables.' Rousseau represents men as originally without language, as unsocial by nature, and totally ignorant of the ties of society. He does not, however, seek to explain how language arose, being disheartened at the outset by the difficulty of deciding whether language was more necessary for the institution of society, or society for the invention of language. Maupertuis, however, overcome this difficulty by holding that 'language was formed by a session of learned societies assembled for that purpose.'"

It is but justice to Mr. Quackenbos to say that those absurd theories are not endorsed by him. He says "Language is, beyond doubt, a divine institution, invented by the Deity, and by him made known to the human race."

This conclusion agrees with the word of inspiration which represents that the first pair were endowed with the faculty of communicating thought through the medium of spoken language. We think, though, that Mr. Q. is in error on the next point wherein he claims that "Written language was devised by man" originally. The Inspired Translation of the Bible shows that language both oral and written was of divine origin, hence in its present state bears the marks of early degeneracy as well as modern improvement.

God revealed to Moses an account of the creation, the fall of man, the revelation of the gospel, its acceptance by some and rejection by others; also the following facts in point: "And then began these men to call upon the name of the Lord, and the Lord blessed them; and a book of remembrance was kept in the which was recorded in language of Adam, for it was given unto as many as called upon God, to write by the spirit of inspiration. And by them their children were taught to read and write, having a language which was pure and undefiled."—Gen. 6: 5-6.

By transgression man has lost all knowledge of the perfect language of Adam. We have no account of any change, or division in language until the attempt to build the tower of Babel, which according to chronological data, was about one hundred years after the flood. There was a concentration of means, talent and energy for the accomplishment of an unholy purpose. The Lord, displeased with this transgressive act, confounded their language, resulting in their dispersion to the different parts of the earth to engage in employments more praiseworthy.

The prophet Zephaniah forecasts a time when "The earth shall be devoured with the fire of my [God] jealousy." At that particular time the promise is to be realized. "For then will I turn to the people a pure language, that they may all call upon the name of the Lord to serve him with one consent."—Zeph. 3: 9. A universal and pure language is to facilitate the worship of God at that time by "all" people.

DOUGHT WE TO CALL OURSELVES MORMONS?

IF that had been the name of the church in the beginning then there would be reason why we should do so. But as it was not—but was first called the "Church of Christ" or the "Church of Jesus Christ," and afterwards was appended "Latter Day Saints," (to which appendage we have no serious objection, because it brings no reproach), we think it therefore quite out of place, to drift into the habit of calling ourselves "Mormons," and we ought to use every endeavor to prevent others from doing so; because the name "Mormon" to those who have read nothing but exposes and comments, and heard sermons on the practices of the Utah faction of the church, means all manner of iniquities and very materially hinders the preaching of the word by the Elders of the church. And worst of all, our elders and church publications have been materially to blame for the people not knowing the difference between us—as the church—and the Utah faction—because they have allowed that we were "Mormons" of the Reorganization. Elders would say "Latter Day Saints, commonly called Mormons," and expressions of that kind, which would lead the people to believe that we were all the same people. Whereas at the present time, and under these conditions of circumstances, it makes it more difficult for us to show the people that we are not all the same.

The President in his late message, recommends to Congress more stringent measures against "the Mormons," without making any distinction between us and them; and should such recommendations be adopted, and no one makes the distinction, the law will be sweeping in its character, and will necessarily take with it all who are known by that name. While, if the Reorganized Church had, from its rise, through its Elders and its church publications, said that we were to be known as the "Church of Jesus Christ," there would have been no need of any distinction being made at the present time. For the public journals generally, in speaking of us, call us by our proper name; and had it not been for our own negligence, in this regard, we would have stood better to-day.

It is treating, too, with disrespect the good name of Mormon, as a man; taking into account the fact, that he was commanded to compile the records from which the Book of Mormon was translated—and that in that book it is particularly set forth that the church—in order to be Christ's Church must "needs be called after his (Christ's) name." It would seem, therefore, proper that we, in order to show respect where respect is due, should be particular likewise; and neither acknowledge, in word or deed, that the name of the church is Mormon.

Neither does the writer think it proper, in speaking of the Utah faction, to speak of them as "Mormons of Utah," or names to that effect, because if there be "Mormons of Utah" it suggests that there must needs be "Mormons" elsewhere, and if elsewhere, who are they? As the Reorganized Church is the only other organization extant, that amounts to anything for numbers. But, if said faction is known all over the world by such name, and we are not responsible for the nick-name; so that when the name is spoken the mind naturally centers in Salt Lake, it relieves us very materially, from a great deal of unnecessary prejudice. And as this is quite essential to the spread of the gospel, we ought to take advantage of the situation, and as we have made mistakes in this regard in the past, let us correct up and begin anew.

I don't want any one to think that I am finding fault, only so far as to enable us to do better in the future.

J. C. CRABB.

DELOIT, Dec. 26th, 1885.

"FORGIVE AND NOT FORGET."

FORGIVING one another brings mankind back into the same relationship the parties were in before the offences were committed. The same ties of friendship and love should exist after forgiveness as there were before the trespass. But it is said by some, "I can forgive, but I will not be able to forget." Those that say this in a measure deceive themselves; they say with their mouth, "I forgive," and with their hearts, "I can't;" and nurse this feeling on account of the offence being so great, they say, "I never can love them again." O how cunning the evil spirit, to place such argument in the minds of the Saints, with the mouth to forgive, while the wound caused by the offence is daily irritated by unholy thoughts in nursing the remembrance of the offence which had been given. Thus we see the heart does not forgive, and the enemy of our souls deceives us when we are led to say, "I forgive, but I can not forget."

But be assured, my dear friend, and more especially "Saint" of God, the healing balm of the Holy Spirit can heal every wound that has been caused by sharp cutting words of those we loved, and although the wounds have been long standing, until pus and proud flesh have entered, and the enemy have assured us time and again of the incurability of the wound; yea, God by the indwelling of the Holy Spirit in this wounded heart can heal and make it whole. But remember that the Holy Spirit does not dwell in unholy places, but always seeketh holy temples for its habitation. Therefore if you do not properly get down in humiliation, the Holy Spirit can not enter, and therefore the wounds remain sore and grievous.

Dear wounded heart; let me occupy your attention a short time to illustrate by supposing. Many men during their busy life let the cares, toils and troubles of this world blunt their finer feelings; and their deep love for the wife dies out to a certain degree, the honey moon has set, the oft pressure of the hand, and close embrace have ceased, and the love expression of the eye has died out; then comes off, sharp cutting words because of some slight offence on the part of the wife; words that cut deep, that make deep wounds. (O! my Lord, what an ugly weapon this tongue is, what ugly wounds it makes. O, that more Saints of God would say, "I will take heed to my ways, that I sin not with my tongue.") And how often; yea, far to often, instead of the husband trying to heal those wounds by asking forgiveness and by acts of kindness, it will be but a few days the unruly member will fling its stinging, poisoning arrows into that already sore heart; again it is made to bleed. And thus it goes from year to year. Too long, O! how often too long, until the wife's finer feelings also are lost, and in some cases (and we hope to God they be few) the wife seeks the company of other men, and offers her love to them. When this comes to be known to the husband, he seeing the state of affairs, his own "sins ever before him," whereby he caused her to sin, in most of cases there will be discovered an undercurrent of deep love and affection towards the wife to that degree that he will forgive, not only by the mouth but from the heart; he offers his forgiveness and acknowledges his wrongs. The wife accepts and asks forgiveness. But habits once formed are hard to break. O, how weak is mankind. O how oft the spirit is willing but the flesh is weak. Now if either one of these two persons transgress it is like that one who had "his house swept and garnished. Then goeth the evil spirit and taketh with him seven other spirits more wicked than himself, and they enter and dwell there." Now what is the result. If this be on the part of the wife, this one spirit will say I can't forget, the seven spirits will magnify all the husband's cutting words and wrong doings seven fold for the purpose that she may have an excuse not to love her husband. And the evil will say, "If you can't love your husband it is cruel to deny you the privilege of loving; so if you keep yourself from adultery, you may love others." Thus the wife is deceived. Those ugly wounds the husband caused by his words are not healed, but as foreign matter enters, are made seven fold worse, although the husband is doing all he can by kindness, by love and true affection to heal; but to no purpose; all his healing perfections have no power. From the fact the evil leads her to look to others for sympathy, to others to tell her grievances, even to all that will listen and sympathize. With the mouth, forgiveness is manifest, but the heart can't forget. And because of the not forgetting and the magnifying of the offences, she continues from time to time according to opportunities to offer her love to others by way of embracing and kissing, also in words of love: "I can't love my husband, and I want to love some one."

Now, dear wounded woman, wife, how do you think you can have that sore heart cured with all that foreign matter and with those spirits there, if your husband who knows of your waywardness and disloyalty to him, if his extended arms, his outpouring entreaties and pleadings of love will not heal, what will? In answer let me assure you your case is not hopeless. Look unto the law. First resist the evil. Pray for the indwelling of the Holy Spirit, and in order that you may gain the Holy Spirit, of necessity you must see your own sinfulness, and when you see that, the law directs you to confess, and as you have sinned against your husband, it is to him you have to confess, and it will not do to say "If I have done wrong I want you to forgive me," but say I have done wrong. Stating many of the times, places and circumstances, nor try to conceal anything; also, you must feel there is nothing too humiliating for you to do, for the Spirit seeks the penitent, contrite heart for its abode. This will give you a longing desire to do the will of God. You will have that yearning desire that will cause you to say, "Wash me, O Lord, and I shall be whiter than snow." Quicken me according to thy loving kindness; so shall I keep the testimonies of thy mouth. Then "with my whole heart have I sought thee, Oh let me not wander from thy commandment." Give thyself no rest until you feel all those evil influences are gone far from you; and in their place that holy, peaceful lightness, joyous Spirit. Let me say, when you receive that Spirit that is able to heal all those wounds, you will feel no more heaviness of heart and, O, what peaceful, heavenly feeling and what pure love to all, and you will have that heavenly beaming expression of the eye, no animosity to a living soul. You will feel there could be nothing too great for you to do for the happiness of others, let the act be ever so humble in a word the wounded, bruised and long unnatural feeling heart would be made whole; and again you would be happy in the "desires of your husband," and your children and people "would call you blessed," and you would thereby save yourself from a lost condition in this world and the necessity of a work of redemption in a world to come. Would you dare to repeat the Lord's prayer with your husband? "Forgive me as I forgive those that trespass against me." You forgive while you remember in bitterness his trespasses. Would you wish him to forgive but remember your infidelity and adultery. Don't you see there could be no love, and where there is no love there is no Holy Spirit. Remember that delay is dangerous. "Time and opportunities are unto all men." If your life has been an unhappy one for many years, turn that it may not continue in the life hereafter, for as we sow that we shall reap. Now, dear reader, you that have ignorantly and unthoughtfully given place to these spirits, let me say to the husband, be ever so careful not to wound the feelings of the loving, devoted wife. Be careful "when you speak and how you speak" and in what manner of spirit you speak. To the wounded, sore-hearted wife that has thus or in part so acted, let these thoughts lead you to immediate action for the right, for salvation. I have written them for your good, for your salvation. To your consideration I commend it, to your good I dedicate it.

THE GOSPEL OF CHRIST.

Being a letter to a medical friend who has since embraced the gospel, in which the writer seeks to illustrate the principles of the gospel through his profession.

BELOVED FRIEND:—I write thus often to you, not through egotism or desire to be heard; but to do good. To instruct in the gospel of Christ. Of what value to me are my time, pens, ink, or paper, if I can be the means of leading one soul to obey the gospel, to embrace the truth?

My thoughts dwell on this subject, not only much of my time when awake; but often when asleep I find myself contending for the same. A few nights after receiving your letter asking me to explain certain passages of Scripture, I awoke contending with some one, for the New Testament plan of gospel ethics. I was repeating aloud, either 1 Cor. 12:28-30, or Eph. 4:10-14; and had been repeating the other in my dream. I well remember asking this question in my dream: If God had placed these things (1 Cor. 12:28-30), in the church, who had the right to take them out? Or, who had the right to repudiate Christ's gifts to men? Eph. 4:10-14. Those gifts being given for a certain purpose; until that purpose was accomplished?"

Then, Doctor, let us search to find for what purpose they were given before answering the question of my dream. In Eph. 4:8, we read, "Wherefore, he saith, when he ascended up on high, he led captivity captive, and gave gifts unto men. 11th, And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers." What for, Paul? 12th, "For the perfecting of the Saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ. 13th, Till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ." And further: 14th, "That we henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive."

In this letter I do not design preaching a sermon to prove that the gospel that I have embraced is true, so much as I intend stating and analyzing certain historical facts concerning this latter day work. But first, Doctor, let me ask you a few questions in connection with your calling as a physician, and I want you to keep them in view, till I have made my points.

First. Were you to conceive the idea of starting a new medical school expressly to build yourself up as a great medical man, would you not retain in that school as many of the most popular ideas as possible? That is, if self-aggrandizement and popularity were the main objects in view. Or would you throw them all away and thus render yourself as unpopular as possible.

Second. Would you do away with any popular medicine until you had proved its utter unreliability? Or would you substitute in its place, a decidedly unpopular drug that you knew had no healing virtues whatever? e. g., calomel has been a very popular medicine in its day, as the old song of "Doubling and thribling the dose of calomel," gives evidence; so was bleeding popular in its time.

Then, if you would not renounce all the popular ideas of the healing art, nor throw away any popular medicine, if good, and thus defeat the object you had in view, viz.: your popularity; would an aspirant to some new school of religion, whose only object was similar to what we have supposed yours to be, to build himself up as some great religious divine; would he, we ask, throw away all the popular ideas of religion, and thus defeat the object for which he was striving?

Joseph Smith was either called of God to do the work that he did do, or he was not. This no sane man will deny. Were his church government, officers, ordinances and doctrines, as a whole, popular, or unpopular? If he was called of God, then we will let the one who called him take care of that part. We will endeavor to answer this question directly. We wish now to introduce our second proposition or query, but how to do it is the question.

We will suppose the gifts of the gospel and the officers of the church as found described in the New Testament, to answer for the calomel and bleeding referred to above. The Church of Christ established near two thousand years ago, never repudiated their calomel till they found that it had lost its virtue; never denied the gifts of the gospel, till they by transgression had lost them. No odds how popular any medicine may have been in its day, when it loses all its curative properties, there will more unpopularity accrue in the continued use of the same, than in its disuse.

Just so, when the former day saints found that the gifts of the gospel did not follow them, the wisest course for them to have pursued was to disclaim them; to say that they were no longer necessary. Their calomel and bleeding for every thing had lost its virtue.

Go back in your profession, Doctor, a half a century or more, bleed and give calomel for every thing, and then deny water to patients burning up with fevers as they did then, and see how long you will retain your popularity.

But when God says give calomel and bleed; or as he told Joseph Smith, "Go forth and preach my gospel, declaring that the gifts shall follow as in days of old; baptize for the remission of sins; lay on hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost; lay on hands to heal the sick; also, send for the elders, as in James 5: 14, 15; they shall speak with tongues, (that they have never learned), by the Spirit of God, as in Acts 2: 1-5. They shall interpret those tongues by the same Spirit, as in 1 Cor. 12: 4-13. Together with all the other gifts mentioned in the chapter last cited. Declare that you have seen angels; also, that they gave you instructions in my gospel." (Rev. 14: 6). Nay more, "Declare that the canon of scripture is not full." "Tell them that God has again spoken from the heavens, and with an audible voice, has called men and sent them forth with authority to act in his name, and to build up his church, as in former times." Declare that God has set in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers, then gifts, helps, governments."—1 Cor. 12: 28-30. Or, as we have before cited, "He gave gifts to men." Such as apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors and teachers." In the Douay translation this text reads: "And some indeed he gave to be apostles, and some prophets, and others evangelists, and others pastors and teachers." The words italicised are those only which differ from the common version. Thus he gave gifts to men. He gave them to be these officers, and then he set (placed) them in his church. Tell them "That these gifts, or officers were set there, 'Till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ.'"

It seems necessary to diverge a moment from the main thread of this subject, to learn why those officers were given that we might obtain this knowledge; and how we are to obtain the same. "And this is life eternal that we might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent."—John 17: 3. Again: "And no man knoweth the Son, but the Father; neither knoweth any man the Father, save the Son, and he to whomsoever the Son will reveal him."—Matt. 11: 27. Now we will turn back to see for what further purpose those officers were placed in the church. Verse 14, "That we henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive." We ask; have the professed religionists of our day all come in the unity of the faith? A oneness of the faith? Is there but the one church? The one body of Christ? Not many bodies.

In the last verse quoted we learn some of the objects for which those officers were given; is there no windy, shaky, unreliable doctrines in our day? O, yes, says my good Methodist, Baptist and Adventist neighbors. Mormonism (?) O! Ah!! Windy, shaky and unreliable, because it lays claim to all the unpopular items above named. Then if we (the Latter Day Saints) are the shaky ones, is it because we lay claim to apostles and prophets, with all the other officers and gifts that God, or Christ has set in his church; for they were given to set us right in the things of God. "Oh! They are no longer needed," you say. "We have outgrown them; like the little boy's coat that he has outgrown." Yes, yes, Doctor, I understand, we will dispense with the things that Christ has decreed shall remain in his church and kingdom, as long as, and wherever he has one on the earth, because they have become unpopular. Is that it? There is said to be twenty-seven different denominations of Methodists. Only think, twenty-seven different bodies of the one Christ! We wonder if some of them are not a little shaky, or windy with not an apostle, nor a prophet to set them right.

Here is another big dose of calomel, ipecac or bleeding, call it by what name you chose, that we came near forgetting; and it is so unpopular. As said above, the angel told Joseph to declare that the canon of Scripture was not full. That there were other scriptures yet to come forth. That there were sacred records to come forth, one of which was hid up in the earth; the words of which were to go to the learned for him to read; but upon his declaring his inability to read it, an uneducated youth (called by his enemies an ignorant vagabond) was to read it by the power of God. (See Isaiah 29: 9-16).

Ah! This book, "the Book of Mormon," contains another unpopular pill. It declares that the Jews, God's ancient covenant people, shall again be gathered to their promised land, the land of Palestine; that they should again build up their capital, the city of Jerusalem, more beautiful than before. At the time that this book came forth, none of the popular sects held that the Jews would ever gather to Jerusalem again. There may have been individual exceptions. There was not a book of any note published, at that date, (A. D. 1830), holding forth their gathering. If there was, the writer never saw it.

Here is another unpopular item that we must not forget, because it touches a tender spot; it comes in contact with their bread and butter. When one angel told another angel to "run and tell that young man [Joseph Smith] that Jerusalem shall again be inhabited. (Zech. 2: 3, 4). That young man was instructed in relation to his question: "Which of all the churches is right? Which church is it my duty to join?" He was told: "None of them is right; join none of them." He was told that if he was faithful, that he with others should be the means of building up the true church of Christ. Was this such a pill as a pretender who only sought to build himself up as some great religious divine would think of dealing out? Let us see how many of these bitter unpopular pills we have found. See if they are such as a religious pretender, deceiver and impostor, if such he was, would think of ingrafting into a new code of gospel ethics: 1st, Baptism by immersion for the remission of sins. 2d, The laying on of hands for confirmation and the gift of the Holy Ghost. 3d, The gospel gifts all restored as in days of old. 4th, They shall lay hands on the sick and they shall recover. 5th, They shall speak with unknown tongues, by the power of the Holy Ghost. 6th, Shall by the same Spirit interpret them. 7th, Let the sick call for the Elders to pray over them, anointing them with oil. 8th, They shall see visions, and prophesy. 9th, Shall see and converse with angels. 10th, They claim to have seen the Father and the Son, and talk with them. 11th, And to have received revelations from them. 12th, Finding sacred records hid up in the earth. 13th, Translating them by the power of God. 14th, Translating the Bible by the same power. 15th, They claim to have apostles and prophets. 16th, That the Jews should again gather back to Jerusalem. 17th, That they should rebuild it more beautiful than before. 18th, That there was no true Church of Christ upon the earth at that time. 19th, That there was no one on the earth at that time (A. D. 1820 to 1830) called of God to preach his gospel and administer the ordinances of the same. 20th, But that he, Joseph Smith, and others if faithful should be instrumental in building up his church on the earth.

The above, dear friend, are some of the unpalatable, unpopular religious pills that Joseph Smith dealt out over fifty years ago, to those unto whom he was called and sent of God to preach His gospel, and to minister in all the ordinances of the same. And despite the apostacy of latter day Israel and all the persecutions of him and the Saints, the success that attended the gospel during his life time, and the success that has and is attending the Reorganized Church of Christ, are proofs positive that the work that he inaugurated is of God and will stand.

As ever, yours in the faith of the gospel of Christ,
W. R. CALHOON.

PUBLIC DEBATE AT LAMBTON.

ON Thursday and Friday evenings last, the Music Hall was very fairly attended by ladies and gentlemen to hear the debate between Elder J. F. Burton, late of America, and Mr. Fred Mogg, of New Lambton, one of the Christadelphian persuasion. The subject debated was "Is there a spirit in man which is a conscious and intelligent entity, and may exist apart from and independent of the body?" The chair was occupied by Mr. R. Hughes, of Plattsburg. Mr. Burton opened the debate in the affirmative, and spoke for half an hour. Mr. Mogg then followed in the negative for half an hour, after which the debaters spoke for intervals of a quarter of an hour each. Two hours were occupied each evening under the same rule. To give in detail the numerous propositions of each gentleman would occupy too much space.

They were patiently listened to, and applauded whenever either made a particular point. The chairman, however, asked the audience not to indulge in any demonstrations of the kind, so as not to hurt the feelings of either side, but to weigh well and judge in their own minds. Mr. Burton laid down about seventy propositions in favor of his opinions, and quoted extensively from the Scriptures in support thereof, the gist of his contention being that man had always an existence from the beginning of all things, an existence which, he argued, never would be exterminated, and was the conscious and intelligent entity apart from, and independent of the body. Man existed in this form always, and the body was the mere clothing of this conscious entity. Spirit, he argued, could not come from matter, but matter from spirit; the greater could not come from the lesser. One point he made may be mentioned by way of illustration. He referred to an American senator who was so weak and emaciated in body he had to be wheeled in his chair to Congress, at which place, notwithstanding his bodily weakness, he fairly electrified his hearers by his sound logic and powerful eloquence. It was not the body that gave this man the power, he argued, but that which was within him, and which was the conscious entity apart from the body.

Mr. Mogg, in combating the arguments of Mr. Burton, quoted numerous passages of Scripture. He contended that man had no spiritual entity, but was a creature of the dust, into whose nostrils God breathed the breath of life, and who would return again to the dust, being regenerated only through the redeeming power of Christ; those outside of, or who refused to accept Christ, becoming extinct, his argument apparently being against a future punishment, and in favor of extinction only. The Scripture had, he held, nothing in favor of this conscious entity, and if the wise, inspired writers of all ages had any knowledge of it, they had led us astray by not telling us of it. Moses and the prophets told us nothing of it, neither did St. Paul; and he submitted that to accept such a doctrine would simply make them all false teachers.

The chairman, at the close of the debate, said he thought it best on such occasions not to take a show of hands, but leave the audience to judge in their own minds as to who had used the best arguments. He thanked them for the patient hearing and fair play they had shown to each debater. He also explained that the amount of the collection was £2 15s, and that after the expense of the hall and printing had been paid, the balance would be handed to the Newcastle Hospital. The Old Hundredth Psalm was then sung, and the proceedings terminated.

JOSEPH THE SEER:

His Prophetic Mission Vindicated, and the Divine Origin of the Book of Mormon Defended and Maintained. Paper covers, 200 pages. . . . . 35
This is a reply by Elder W. W. Blair to Elder William Sheldon of the Second Adventist Society, and is an important work to be in the hands of the ministry of the Church, especially; and it is a most excellent one to be circulated both in the Church and among those without, abounding in proofs never before presented in defense of Joseph Smith and the Book of Mormon.

Correspondence.

LEON, Kan., March 9th.

Dear Herald.—I was baptized and confirmed a member of the Church of Latter Day Saints, November 2d, 1885. Have never had any reason to regret doing so, but can say, Praise God for the gospel in its purity, simplicity and fulness, as believed, taught and practiced by the Saints. Our little branch is endeavoring to live in accordance to the will of the Master. We try to have our preaching and prayer meetings regular. One person not long since signified a willingness to be baptized, while there are others, I believe, are almost persuaded. Ever praying for the success of the principles of the gospel of Christ, and that God will guide, comfort, and sustain each of us.

I remain yours in Christ,

GEO. W. HOBART.

RHODES, Iowa, March 16th.

Bro. Joseph.—Conference held here on the 13th and 14th was a good one, both in its immediate solace to the Saints and precedents laid for future. Bishop's Agent's receipts better than any previous quarterly report. Some have misconstrued, unintentionally, my late letter to Herald. Bro. Bozarth's going home was imperative, because of sickness, and fully justifiable. What I wanted to convey was that unwarranted preferences in favor of one and against all others had been thwarted, as it usually is. Bro. Bozarth filled all engagements and demands while with us; and all say to him, Come again. In bonds,

R. ETZENHOUSER.

EMERSON, Iowa, March 6th.

Dear Herald.—I joined the church October 2d, 1881, was baptized by Bro. G. T. Griffiths, and I am not sorry for the step I have taken, for I know it is the true work of God. We know that the blessings are for those who put their trust in him. We have had sickness moved from our family by the prayer of faith. I know nothing in this world to entice me to turn away from this glorious work which we are engaged in. I ask the prayers of the Saints that I may hold out faithful to the end, and ever praying for the welfare of Zion, I remain your sister in the one faith,

SARAH L. CLITES.

DEFIANCE, Iowa, March 15th.

Dear Herald.—We are living away one side of the Galland's Grove branch, but circumstances are such that we don't get there very often; so you see that you are about all the preaching we get. We hail your coming with delight. Bro. Short was the last Elder that we heard. We did not get over to Galland's Grove to the conference, on account of the weather. At the close of the re-union, last fall, Bro. Short came out here and preached four discourses; I wish he could come again. While here he baptized our last one into the church. About seven years ago Bro. G. S. Hyde baptized our first one into the church, which was L. Gunsolly. He was baptized here at Defiance; in a little over a year, at the same place, my husband, myself and oldest daughter were baptized by Bro. Hyde, and at the re-union at Garner's Grove, four more were baptized, three by Bro. J. S. Roth, one by Bro. P. Cadwell, and last re-union at Galland's Grove, three more were added to the church, baptized by Bro. P. Cadwell. May we all live as it is our duty to live, and ever discharge the same whenever it is made known to us, is the prayer of your sister. I hope when Bro. Hyde gets to Little Sioux he will come out to Defiance, and spend a few weeks with us. Any other Elder passing anywhere near, please give us a call.

Ever praying for the cause of Zion;

Yours in Christian love,

M. G. GUNSOLLY.

Miscellaneous.

General Conference Notice.

GALIEN, Mich., 12th March, 1886.

Bro. Joseph Smith.—The Chicago, Burlington and Quincy R. R. Co. will return for one-third ( $\frac{1}{3}$ ) fare rates those attending the conference over its line to the several stations at which the persons took train to go to the conference, paying full fare there. Hastily yours,

G. A. BLAKESLEE.

MARRIED.

BISHOP—CURTIS.—At the Saints' Chapel at Independence, Missouri, on Sunday, February 7th, 1886, Elder F. G. Pitt officiating, Bro. Adolph Bishop and Sr. Elizabeth Curtis. On Monday evening a reception was given at the residence of Bro. and Sr. Albert Bishop, the groom's parents, and a splendid time was had by the many friends who filled the home. Music and pleasure were indeed the order of the hour. Eighty-five persons graced the festal board and partook of the royal feast prepared for the occasion. Quite a number of nice and useful presents were made; Bro. Pitt gracing the scene with a presentation speech, neat and happy. The young couple enter upon the voyage of life with the best wishes of their many friends.

WASHBURN—HOWELL.—At Galien, Michigan, March 23d, 1886, E. L. Kelley minister officiating in ceremony, Bro. Cyrenius W. Washburn and Sr. Laura A. Howell (formerly Miss Laura A. Bronson), both of Galien, and among our best and most faithful workers to establish the gospel light in this part of Michigan. Their friends wish them the utmost happiness and joy as they make the journey together.

DIED.

NEUENHAM.—Ammah, wife of Sylvester Newenham, of Brown County Illinois, was born in Brown County, Illinois, December 15th, 1851, and died March 6th, 1886, being at the time of her death thirty years, two months and fifteen days old. In February, 1874, at the age of 17 years she was united in marriage to Sylvester Newenham, in December, 1879, she united with the church of the Latter Day Saints. She belonged to the North Bend branch, and was a faithful worker in the Lord's vineyard.

STILLWELL.—At Ashton, Osceola Co., Iowa, February 4th, 1886, of rheumatism of the brain, Bro. Payne Stillwell, aged seventy-five years. Bro. Payne was sick some time, had the best of medical treatment from Dr. O. L. Gurney of Sheldon, but his skill was unavailing. He was "faithful unto death." His wife, Sr. Stillwell, writes of him: "He passed through his last sickness and out and beyond, without any expression of fear, and calmly, as when one lies down to sleep, he closed his eyes in the last sleep, that to mortal knows no waking. He continued as long as he lived to have faith in God, and in the church. He read the Bible, and was always interested in the news of the church of his choice, as he found it in our church paper—the Herald.

JOHNSON.—At Galien, Michigan, March 5th, 1886, at half-past ten o'clock p.m., Sr. Luella Christina, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Klanner, of Galien, and wife of Mr. A. C. Johnson. Sr. Johnson was born November 12th, 1860, in Berrien county, Michigan, and united with the church May 8th, 1881, under the ministrations of Elder William H. Kelley. She was a diligent and faithful member, and much loved by the Saints and her acquaintances. She leaves an infant daughter—Mabel Luella. Funeral services directed by Bishop Blakeslee, and discourse by E. L. Kelley. She was "faithful unto the end."

SWIFT.—At St. Louis, Missouri, February 9th, 1886, Bro. Joseph Swift, aged 63 years, 8 months and 11 days. Deceased was born in Sheffield, Yorkshire, England, May 29th, 1822; baptized at Sheffield in 1847; came to this country in 1848, and was one of the earliest members of the Reorganized Church in St. Louis. He was a sufferer from epilepsy for many years; was patient in his affliction, and lived a consistent Saint to the last. Funeral services were conducted, February 14, by Elder William Smith.

INDEPENDENCE LOCALS.

The spring time has come, and all nature is putting on her beautiful garments.

We have been enjoying a feast of fat things in the form of a protracted meeting, conducted by brethren Lake, Anthony and Short; several have been baptized in consequence.

Quite a number of the Saints here are making arrangements to visit your city during the coming conference.

Brethren A. H. Smith and J. Luff are expected home in a few days; loved ones are anxiously waiting and watching.

The great railroad strike is on here, mills and all places of business are stopped; dissatisfaction is generally felt in consequence.

T. W. Chatburn & Co. have sold one half interest in their mills to Sophus Holstein of Burlington, Iowa. They too also have sold to a stock company, composed of T. W. Chatburn, Sophus Holstein and Chas. A. Bishop, to be known as "Chatburn and Holstein Milling Company," with a capital stock of ten thousand dollars. Bro. Holstein will move his family here in the near future.

Bro. A. White has resolved to labor in the "vineyard" this summer, on his beautiful ten acre residence lot just north of the city.

Conference Minutes.

FREMONT.

This district conference convened at the Gaylord school-house, Fremont county, Iowa, February 13th, 1886. Henry Kemp, president, in the chair; J. B. Cline secretary pro tem. Branch reports.—Shenandoah 85; removed by letter 1. S. S. Wilcox president, Eva Redfield clerk. Union 55; received by vote on evidence of membership in old church 1; J. W. Calkins president, L. C. Donaldson clerk. Keystone, referred back to branch for correction. Membership last report 54; E. S. Weed president, J. B. Cline clerk. Elm Creek 37; H. Hershey president, J. M. Stubbard clerk. Plum Creek 84; W. Leeka president, M. W. Gaylord clerk. Farm Creek not reported since March 8th, 1884, when it contained 30. Ministry reports.—Elder S. S. Wilcox reported by letter that he had labored in the branch as presiding elder, and is still desirous of working for the cause of God. H. Hershey had presided over the branch, but had not done much work on account of moving their hall. Geo. Kemp had answered many calls, and had done all he could for the cause. J. Goode had done what he could under the circumstances, being old and in poor health. W. Gaylord, E. Benedict and S. Dyke, reported. J. W. Waldsmith brought good news from Nebraska City; all felt well, and desired to help on with the cause. Henry Kemp had preached at Keystone, Farm Creek, Shenandoah, Wheeler's Grove, Hamburg, Bartlett and Glenwood, and felt well in the cause, and desired to do all he could to help on the cause.

W. C. Mathews reported by letter that he had completed the record of last conference as best he could; found the district record in bad shape, and recommended that a new record book be procured. Whereupon he is hereby instructed to procure said book at once, and report the cost of same at next conference, which will be promptly met. Teachers A. Hills and J. B. Cline, and Priests E. Weed and J. F. Wolsey, reported. The following members are to represent the district at the next annual conference: Henry Kemp, John Goode, W. Gaylord, S. S. Wilcox and W. C. Mathews. Each branch to raise two dollars to defray the expenses of Henry Kemp to the annual conference and back; said amounts to be placed in the hands of each branch president to be sent to George Kemp, Tabor, Iowa. Bro. H. Kemp was sustained as district president and W. C. Mathews as secretary, for the next three months. Report of William Leeka, Bishop's agent, from March 1st, 1885, to February 13th, 1886: receipts $265.75, disbursements $222.88, balance on hand $42.87. Preaching on Sunday forenoon by H. Kemp, assisted by J. W. Waldsmith. Social meeting in the afternoon in charge of E. Weed and J. Goode. Preaching in the evening by H. Kemp, assisted by George Kemp. Adjourned to meet at the Keystone branch, on the 15th day of May at ten o'clock. Thus ended one of the best conferences the Fremont district ever enjoyed; there was not a dissenting voice, neither a negative vote, during the entire session. God's Spirit was manifested in the gifts of the gospel in tongues, interpretations and prophecy.

GALLAND'S GROVE.

Conference convened at Galland's Grove, Iowa, on the 5th, 6th, and 7th of March, 1886. W. W. Whiting, president; Charles E. Butterworth, assistant president; John Pett and Charles E. Butterworth, secretaries. Branch Reports.—Galland's Grove 252; 4 baptized, 2 received by letter, 19 by vote, 1 removed by letter, 1 died. Coalville 21; 2 removed by letter. Camp Creek 19; 2 received by vote. Boyer Valley 57; 12 baptized, 2 removed by letter, 2 ordained. Mason's Grove 125; 4 baptized, 2 received by vote, 2 ordained. North Coon 25; 4 baptized. Ministerial Reports.—James Wedlock, James Turner, Benan Salisbury, William Shirk, W. W. Blair, W. W. Whiting, John Hawley, John Pett, E. C. Brand (baptized 1), Charles E. Butterworth (baptized 8), Ingvert Hansen, Chauncy Williamson, James Pearsall, John Cross and Robert Woodcock reported in person, William A. Carroll by letter. A request was made by the Camp Creek Branch, for a camp meeting to be held there at some time during the summer. The request was on motion granted, the president to take charge and have control of the meeting, the time to be determined at the June conference. The Shelby Branch was reported by Brn. Charles E. Butterworth and John Hawley, who had lately visited it, to be in a bad condition. It was resolved that a committee be appointed to set in order the Shelby Branch, the president to be one of the committee, and he to select one or more Elders to assist him. Preaching in the evening by Bro. E. C. Brand, assisted by Bro. Salisbury. Saturday morning. Bishop's Agent, John Pett, reported cash on hand and received $158.86, paid out $61.60, balance $97.26. It was resolved that the ministry in this district be requested in the future to report that part of their labor in writing that they wish to have put on the record. The delegates appointed to General Conference were W. W. Whiting, John Hawley, Benan Salisbury, Charles E. Butterworth and James T. Turner. The traveling expenses of Brn. C. E. Butterworth and J. T. Turner, and half the expenses of Bro. John Hawley to be paid by the district. Bro. C. E. Butterworth to collect and hold the moneys for that purpose. It was Resolved, that we request the General Conference to appoint Bro. E. C. Brand to labor in this district. It was on motion adopted, That this conference request the president of the district to supply the different localities in the district with a suitable ministry. The following preamble and resolution was unanimously adopted, That inasmuch as Elder Eli Clothier has recently left this district for north-western Kansas; and, Whereas he has labored in the Galland's Grove District for the last twenty-five years, very earnestly, carefully, and wisely; therefore be it Resolved; That we in conference assembled tender him our heartfelt thanks for his labors, praying that financial success may attend him in his new home, and that the Spirit of the living God may be with him to bless, strengthen and comfort him in all his labors for the truth. Brn. W. W. Whiting and Charles E. Butterworth were sustained as president and assistant president of the district till after the close of the next conference. The authorities of the church were sustained in righteousness. The Bishop's Agent and secretaries were also sustained. Preaching in the evening by Bro. W. W. Blair, also on Sunday morning and evening. If the afternoon an excellent prayer and testimony meeting was held and the sacrament administered. The gifts of the gospel were manifested and the hearts of the Saints filled with holy joy. There were full houses at all the preaching meetings, and a more earnest and intense interest was seldom witnessed, resulting in further enquiry for the way of life. Adjourned to meet at Deloit, Friday June 11th, at half-past two.

JOSEPH SMITH . . . . . EDITOR.
W. W. BLAIR . . . . . ASSOCIATE EDITOR.

Lamoni, Iowa, April 3, 1886.

WE publish the following letter from Mr. L. L. Rice who, in the providence of God, unknowingly held the notorious "Manuscript Found" for nearly fifty years just as it came into his hands with the printing office he purchased from the Mormon-eater, E. D. Howe. It will be seen he endorses the printed copy as being correct, "and well preserving the character of the original." His views in respect to the labors of Pres. Joseph Smith in Utah and Idaho last year are just and sensible.

HONOLULU, Feb. 21st, 1886.

Mr. W. W. Blair:—I received from yourself, or some one connected with your establishment, as I suppose, ten copies of the "Manuscript Found," printed in good style, and well preserving the character of the original. I have disposed of them all "where they would do the most good," as the phrase is, except a single copy I have preserved for my own use. I very much want another copy, to send to a friend in New York. You will further greatly oblige me, if you will send a copy of it by mail, addressed to James A. Briggs, Esq., 177 Washington St., Brooklyn, New York.

I have read with great interest, in the Saints' Herald, the accounts of President Smith's tour in Utah, &c., to propagate Anti-Polygamic Mormonism. It seems to me his mission augurs the way in which the polygamous Mormons are bound to relieve themselves of their present difficulties.

Yours truly, &c.,

L. L. RICE.

GEORGE Q. CANNON'S CASE.

THE following clipping from the Deseret News of the 17th inst. serves to show how Mr. Cannon evades trial by the laws of our nation. Comment is not needed—the facts speak for themselves.

"To-day, March 17th, being the date on which President George Q. Cannon was to appear for trial in the Third District Court, on a charge of unlawful cohabitation with his wives, more interest seemed awakened than by any occurrence since the arrest was made, and everyone seemed to be on the alert for some unusual developments. Shortly after the court room was opened, people began to flock in through the doors, which were carefully and strongly guarded by a large force of deputy marshals. At the inner door several deputies were engaged in searching those who entered, to find whether any of them were armed, and when inquiry was made as to the cause of such an unusual proceeding in a quiet and peaceable community, one replied that it had been considered probable that something desperate might be attempted, and as it was not known what might occur, this precaution had been ordered taken. The court room was soon jammed to overflowing, and ingress stopped.

The first business before the Court was the sentencing of A. H. Cannon, an account of which will be found in another article.

When this was completed, District Attorney Dickson called out that the trial of the United States vs. George Q. Cannon, indicted for unlawful cohabitation, was set for to-day.

The Court asked the attorneys for the defense, F. S. Richards, LeGrand Young and Sheeks & Rawlins, if they were ready, and a few moments' delay was asked.

Mr. Rawlins reminded the Court that an argument in a case continued from yesterday was to have been made, and asked whether he should proceed, but this the Court was not disposed to permit.

Mr. Dickson then impatiently demanded that the witnesses in the Cannon case be called, and the following answered to their names: Martha Tellie Cannon, Emily Little, Mary Little, Sarah Jane Cannon, Ella Little, Georgiana Little, Abraham Little, Mary Alice Cannon, Hester Cannon and Sarah Ann Butterworth.

The Court then ordered that the name of the defendant be called, and "George Q. Cannon" was shouted three times by the bailiff, but there was no response.

Mr. Dickson then eagerly demanded, "Call the sureties."

Mr. Rawlins arose, and stated that the counsel for the defendant did not know where their client was, and that they had not seen him since the bond was given.

Mr. Richards said he had last visited Mr. Cannon with the Commissioner, at his home, on Feb. 27th, when the last bonds were given.

Mr. Young suggested that a continuance be had until 2 p. m., as the defendant's residence was out of town, and the weather and roads being very bad, he might have been delayed. This provoked a burst of laughter among the "officers of the court," and a glance around the officials and deputies present was enough to convince one that there was sufficient malice in the ring to make a "Mormon's" life of but little worth, should any opportunity arise.

Mr. Dickson insisted that the bonds should be declared forfeited, and the names of the bondsmen, John Sharp and Feramorz Little, were each called three times, but no answer was made.

After some discussion, lasting about five minutes, on the matter, by the attorneys, the Court granted the order asked for by Mr. Dickson, forfeiting the bond of $25,000, with the provision that if President Cannon was in Court at 2 p. m. the forfeiture should be set aside. The witnesses were then excused until 2 p. m., and the large audience filed out of the court room.

A few moments afterward Mr. Dickson entered the U. S. Marshal's office, and on getting inside of the door exclaimed, viciously, "The cur! G—d—n him! He hasn't got the courage to stand his trial!" Then suddenly discovering that John Q. and Abram H. Cannon and a number of their friends were in the room, he hastily retreated.

At 2 p. m. the court room was again crowded, and many were in the street, unable to gain admission. When the court was called to order, Mr. Dickson asked the attorneys for the defense, with a sneer, "Is your client here?" To this Mr. Sheeks replied, "Not that I know of; I haven't seen or spoken to him."

The Court then instructed the bailiff to call the defendant, and the arm of the court shouted, "George Q. Cannon! George Q. Cannon! George ——" The Court, hastily interrupting—"That is all. I don't think he is here."

After a short pause, the Court remarked to Mr. Dickson that there was no necessity for the witnesses remaining, and the District Attorney replied, "No, I presume not. They may be excused for the term." Then he added, jeeringly, "He may, as the defense suggests, get here in a day or two."

Just then Marshal Ireland relieved himself of a loud "guffaw," and larger portion of the audience departed, the Court taking up the usual routine of business.

When it became finally known that President Cannon had not appeared, the event was the subject of general comment. It has been freely rumored that the District Attorney boasted that he had enough against President Cannon to keep him in prison for life, and in connection with this it may be said that it is understood the officers from Nevada are now here, prepared to swear that an attempt was made to bribe them."

SPECIAL CONFERENCE NOTICE.

THOSE designing to attend Conference at Lamoni, April 6th, will do well to read our notice in regard to rates in this number on the last page. It will save them some money, and any amount of disappointment and vexation. The Railway Company is very kind, and also takes care to avoid being imposed upon. We who propose to avail ourselves of their kindness must not make mistakes and then find fault with the company.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

THE Associate Editor returned on the 23d inst., from a pleasant three weeks' trip to western Iowa conferences where he met many old time Saints and friends. Time and faithful effort have wrought great and cheering changes in the Galland's Grove and Little Sioux Districts since 1859—when he first visited those localities—while the pale reaper has gathered away "beyond the river" many whose prized associations and kindly greetings he once enjoyed. Where, in 1860, there were but a very few connected with the church, now there are large branches and commodious chapels, with fine prospects for large gatherings in the near future. We look to see the work in western Iowa extend and increase far beyond its present conditions. Faithful, patient, prayerful effort as the Lord directs will secure this.

By letter and notice from Bro. Peter Anderson, of western Iowa, we learn that Bro. Peter N. Brix, our missionary minister to Denmark died March 1st. It is with great sorrow that we chronicle this event. Bro. Brix has shown himself to be a most worthy and faithful laborer, so far as any information has ever reached us. He was most anxious that the work should prosper in his native land and labored unselfishly to that end. His rest is peaceful and his reward sure.

Bro. M. P. Berg of Sioux City, Iowa, sends up $5 to aid the Banner; $4 for himself and $1 for O. E. Oafsen—and says that paper is well liked where read. He further says, "We are getting along pretty well here, and the Lord is blessing us in our endeavor to serve him."

Bro. D. F. Crane of Lake Crystal, Minn., under date of the 19th inst., says, Brn. Shaw, Holt, and Anderson have visited there and have done the work there much good. He hopes for a good gathering if judicious labor is continued. He speaks very highly of these visiting elders, and prays for their success everywhere they minister.

Bro. F. M. Cooper was at Streator, Illinois, March 23d. He had held eight meetings at Piper City, Ford county, Illinois, and baptized two. He was to begin meetings at Streator in a church controlled by the "Church of God," on the 24th.

Bro. M. H. Forscutt was at Kewanee, Illinois, at last accounts, and would be there over Sunday, March 21st.

N. W. and H. C. Smith have town lots for sale, ranging in size from one fourth of an acre to seven acres. Those who may wish to buy may do well to consult them.

We cheerfully make the correction requested by Bro. C. D. Carter, of DeKalb, Illinois, by inserting his letter rectifying our mistake. Dr. Carter is the grand-son of Elder Jared Carter, of Missouri and Nauvoo record, with the church, and not the son as stated in HERALD.

Bro. Geo. Matthews speaks in high terms of the work did by Elder M. H. Forscutt at Knoxvilleborough, near Pittsburg, Pa., and regrets his departure for other fields of labor.

Bro. Joseph Clapp was at Deer Lodge Valley, Montana, March 14th, he writes: "I never before enjoyed so much of the Spirit of God in my preaching."

THE Mite Society, of Lamoni, gave a concert, on the evening of March 19th, the proceeds of which, amounting to $33.10, are to be appropriated by the society with other sums raised by them, for the building of a plank walk from the business part of the town to the church, the walk being badly needed.

Mr. John W. Ockerman, Station Agent, a lover of music and a teacher of singing volunteered to drill the corps of singers and conduct the exercises. He was seconded by Sr. Lucy L. Lyons, our post mistress, a good musician and excellent aid in an enterprise of the sort. A number of singers, middle aged and young were selected and volunteered, and drilled persistently for weeks, under the tuition and care of Mr. Ockerman.

The music and songs selected were excellent, and the presentation and rendition of them were very creditable both to Mr. Ockerman and the entire body of singers. Every one strove to do the part assigned well, and did so cheerfully. The weather for a part of the time during the meetings for practice was stormy and bad, which resulted in some of those who began with the corps taking cold and becoming wearied out before the evening for the concert arrived; but those who were strong enough to stand the drill were quite ready when the hour came for the opening of the concert.

Mr. Ockerman is not a member of the church, but is fond of music, vocal and instrumental, and is beside, a citizen who wishes success to the community where he dwells and is willing to help forward every laudable enterprise to that end.

Those who were present at the concert were universally well pleased, each portion of the exercises receiving commendation, according to the particular bias of the hearer; the whole being spoken of as excellent. Of the efforts of the singers Mr. Ockerman said: "I am pleased with them. They did well both in their practice and in the final performance. I have not fault to find. Considering the disadvantages some labored under, I do not see how they could have done better."

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

THE report of sister Abbie Horton, secretary of the Rising Star Sunday School, Plano, Illinois, and published in the Hope for April 1st, is quite suggestive. When the Herald Office removed from Plano, it took fifty-seven, large and small out of the branch, among them some Sunday School workers. The branch has regained its membership to more than quoted when the Herald office left the place, and this report of Sr. Horton shows that the Christmas entertainments given by the school still retains their hold on the people. Sr. Horton says in her report:

"On Christmas Eve we had an entertainment which passed off very successfully. A fee of ten cents was charged at the door, from which was realized $11.38. The Stone Church presented a very pleasant appearance; the children's singing and speaking were all that could be desired, and all seemed satisfied and happy at its close."

Bro. George Montague, writing from Garland, Butler county, Alabama, March 18th, says:

"I arrived here on the 9th; have been preaching almost every night. Through the influence and efforts of Bro. G. T. Chute an empty store room was procured in Garland for services. A fair attendance has been present each night, and we have enjoyed excellent liberty as a rule. The interest seems good. My health is greatly improved, and I feel encouraged in the work."

Bro. S. D. Hannab, writes:

"There used to be a branch here in Buchtel, (Ohio), until the great coal mine strike of the Hocking Valley. Since that time there have been no meetings, as our branch was composed of three families and one young Bro. Stratton. Bro. Wiper and family and Bro. Ray and family moved away, so that all that were left were Bro. Stratton and myself. There are three or four people that used to belong to the church; I have got them to come together and have prayers, and do the best we can. We would like if one of the traveling ministry would come here. We will bear the expense, and there is a good chance. There is a strong desire for Bro. G. T. Griffiths."

Sr. Broadhead of Ellenville, New York, renews for the HERALD and says:

"I should feel lost without it, it keeps me informed of the progress of God's work. * * * I am still waiting for an opportunity to join the Latter Day Saints' Church."

Will Bro. W. H. Kelley please provide the "opportunity" desired.

Bro. A. L. Soule of St. Joseph, Mo., writes us that he feels "like a new man" since he obeyed the gospel, and that he has "received many blessings from heaven." He further says:

"My desire is to go forward in the good work, for I can say I know it is true. I have been filled with the Spirit of God, and I want to do all I can for the upbuilding of Zion. Six have been baptized since you were here, and there are many inquirers about this work."

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Ques.—Is it a Deacon's duty to visit the Saints and keep harmony in the branch when the teacher is absent?

Ans.—Yes, if desired by the branch.

Q.—Can the branch lawfully authorize a Deacon to visit Saints in an official capacity without electing him to the office of teacher.

A.—Yes, by vote.

Q.—Do you think, according to Doctrine and Covenants, sec. 23, par. 6, that Joseph and Oliver were to drink poison if it was desired of them so to do?

A.—No. The revelation is to the whole church, and for the guidance of all the ministry, and really explains itself.

EDITED BY SISTER "FRANCES."

"The joy that comes in sorrow's guise,
The sweet pains of self-sacrifice,
I would not have them otherwise.
And what were life and death if sin
Knew not the dread rebuke within,
The pang of merciful discipline?"

"HOW IS THIS?"

[Concluded.]

In our last we remarked, that while the Gentile centurion had greater faith than Christ had found in Israel, this fact did not change the relation in which the covenant people stood to God. To Abraham God had said "In the fourth generation thou shalt come hither again, for the iniquity of the Amorites is not yet full," so to the covenant people there remained yet a space of time to fill up their cup. When Jesus sent forth the twelve he commanded them, saying, Go not into the way of the Gentiles, and into any city of the Samaritans enter ye not; but go rather to the lost sheep of the house of Israel. But the time came when the last drop had fallen into the cup, and Paul and Barnabas waxed bold and said, "It was necessary that the word of God should first have been spoken to you: but seeing ye put it from you, and judge yourselves unworthy of everlasting life, Lo, we turn to the Gentiles." * * * "And when the Gentiles heard this they were glad, and glorified the word of the Lord." At first we see the Gentiles glorified God, but the time came when they too grew vain of this preference, became lifted up in the pride of their hearts; appropriated to themselves all the promises made to the literal seed of Abraham, and spoke of his descendants as Jewish dogs. Human nature is much the same in all ages of the world.

There is yet one other cup to be filled, and this Paul tells us is the "Gentile fulness;" he says: "Blindness in part is happened to Israel, until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in." This is no new idea to us, who are of the household of faith, but as it is a time in the near future, the question should come home to each one of us, if the natural branches were broken off because of unbelief, and we were grafted in, what then? "If God spared not the natural branches, take heed lest he also spare not thee." Thou standest by faith. Be not high minded, but fear.

The knowledge which God has condescended to give to us concerning his gospel and the divinity of his Son, while it should fill our souls with gratitude for his mercy and goodness, should at the same time cause us to feel how much greater is our responsibility than the responsibility of those who are walking in darkness. Having bestowed upon us the earnest of our inheritance, how careful should we be to retain this from day to day. His coming is not far distant. Some of us may sleep in the dust of the earth, but it will not be for long if so be we are faithful to the end. "Thou standest by faith," said Paul; "Be not high minded, but fear." Fear, lest "a promise being left us of entering into his rest," any of us should "come short of it."

There is a natural tendency to pride, in reflecting upon the fact that we have more light than others—a tendency to feel that in some way, we are favorites of heaven, forgetting or overlooking the solemn fact that so much stricter will be the account we must render at the last day. Instead of being "high minded" because of this, we should be humbled as in the dust with our sense of gratitude to God for his mercy towards us. Let our lives be living epistles, known and read of all men, and if it is possible that in the world there exists greater faith than can be found in the church, let us awake to the fact that it is high time for us to "contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the Saints." Do we realize that the church is composed of individual members? That as individuals we must stand or fall for ourselves. When we walk humbly and uprightly before our God, we are sure that one at least is walking in the straight and narrow way, and that one too, the only one whose faults we are called upon to correct or criticise. If then each member is perfect, will not the body be perfect? But if we can not claim perfection for one member, how can we demand it of the body? The poet has most aptly expressed this idea as follows:

"Search thine own heart. What paineth thee
In others, in thyself may be;
All dust is frail, all flesh is weak;
Be thou the true man thou dost seek!"

Paul was not a poet, but the injunction, "Make straight paths for your feet lest that which is lame be turned out of the way," is in harmony.

After the expiration of the "fourth generation," the complete filling up of the cup of the Amorites, God brought up from the land of bondage the children of the covenant, guided them with a pillar of cloud by day and fire by night; cast out the wicked nations before them, (not, mark you, in order to give Israel room, but because he had borne with those nations until justice to the groaning earth itself demanded of him to bear no longer), and planted them in the land of Palestine. Hundreds of years God bore with them there, sending prophets to warn them, punishing them in various ways until they humbled themselves before him, when he restored his blessings and favor again. In reflecting upon this—God's long forbearance—we are often led to wonder if we are not frequently hardened by God's mercy and forbearance towards us! But there is another phase of this history, this favoritism, if we are pleased to term it such. Would it not be well for us to stop and reflect upon it, if at any time we should feel disposed to think ourselves favorites, because we have greater light, more truth, and a better understanding of God's plan of salvation than any other people upon the face of the earth.

Go to Josephus and read his description of the horrors of the siege of Jerusalem. Clasp your smiling infants to your breast, let the mother love swell up in your heart beneath its soft breathing, and then remember that in those terrible days—days which were only the beginning of nearly two thousand years of dispersion, misery and calamity—the Jews knew in reality what it meant to be favorites of heaven. "We have Abraham to our father" they had mockingly said, but the Savior plainly answered them, "God is able of these stones to raise up children unto Abraham."

Turn backward upon the stream of time, this morning, backward to the judgment hall of Pilate and behold one staggering upon its threshold, bending beneath the heavy timbers of the cross to which his hands and feet are shortly to be nailed. Through the long watches of the night he has known no rest. From the Garden of Gethsemane from the terrible agony of wrestling prayer, in which he sweat great drops of blood, saying, "If it be possible let this cup pass from me;" dragged like a thief or malefactor to the judgment of this earth. Behold a murderer steeped in crime, his hands dripping with the blood of his victim set at liberty; and one of whom the governor said, "I find no evil in this man," condemned to die. See as he walks faint and staggering beneath his load, the blood dropping from the wounds made by the cruel thorns with which they have crowned him! Is he alone in this terrible hour? Where are all those whose "infirmities he has borne, whose sickness he has healed!" Where are his mother and the sisters beneath whose roof sits the brother restored to life by this bleeding one? Where are they? "And there followed him a great company of people." Yes; but these were not they who loved him—they were only the rabble, with the Jews who had cried "Away with him! Crucify him, crucify him!" "And of women, who also bewailed and lamented him." "But Jesus turned unto the latter and said: Daughters of Jerusalem weep not for me, but weep for yourselves and your children." Oh! the matchless tenderness of such love! How can it but reach our hearts, through all the centuries during which those daughters of Jerusalem have been weeping for themselves and their little ones! No thought then of the agony he was suffering, no thought of the fainting, bleeding body, shortly to endure the agony of the cross, and to even feel that God himself had forsaken him, but "weep for yourselves and your children."

Sisters in Christ—who have been baptized into this death which he died for us, into this suffering which we never bore, are we to-day fully alive to the height, length, and breadth of the solemn covenant into which we have entered. "I have trodden the wine press alone, and of the people there was none with me." It was not possible for "the cup to pass away," but he drank it even to the bitter dregs. The work which the father gave him to do was done by him and not by another, and in the darkest hour he thought not of what he was enduring, but his great heart reached out after suffering humanity. His travail and sorrow he knew would soon be ended. "And now I am no more in the world but these are in the world, and I come to thee. Holy Father, keep through thine own name those whom thou hast given me." This prayer was for us, each one of us just as much as if we were the only one for whom it was uttered. "For their sakes I sanctify myself that they also might be sanctified through the truth." All his work, all his travail and agony, all his thought and prayer, were for "those who should believe on his name." To perfect the plan of redemption was his work, that he might say with authority, "this is the way, walk ye in it;" to follow his footsteps is ours.

"To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne." Can we overcome without faith? Faith leads to works, the two go hand in hand. To separate them is death. As the body without the Spirit is but a corruptible, decaying mass which we bury out of sight, so is faith without works. Are we overcoming by faith, then it is faith which works by love, and self is the tyrant we are striving to bind! Our own salvation is all we can work out, but blessed are we if we forget our own trials and sorrows in weeping for those of others. When the cup of the Gentiles is filled, the deliverer will come out of Zion, and turn away ungodliness from Jacob. Are we ready for his coming?

WE are in receipt of letters from sisters Neal, Jones, and Salisbury. Don't hesitate to direct your letters simply "Frances," Lamoni, Decatur Co., Iowa. If sent to the Herald Office they have to be remailed. All directed as above will reach me. Let each one cast in her mite; write solely with an eye single to the glory of God and fear not, God will take care of the result.

LAMONI, IOWA, March 25th, 1886.

CAMERON, Mo., Feb. 23d.

Dear Sister Frances:—It is with feelings of gratitude to my heavenly Father that I read the "Mothers' Home Column" in the Herald, for I truly believe it was through the inspiration of the Holy Spirit that the idea of such a thing first originated. I have often wished that we could have something of that kind but did not think my wishes would ever be realized, and it only makes my faith stronger, and helps me to see the great necessity of putting our perfect trust in Him, for it proves to us that he knows the earnest desires of the hearts, and that he has heard the petitions of the many tried mothers. He alone knows the great responsibilities resting upon those mothers; being required as they are to train up those little ones that he has given them, in the fear and admonition of him. He also knows how weak we are and that it is impossible for us to do this of ourselves; and as he has promised to give unto some the gift of wisdom, and others do not receive this gift; those who do receive it can write and instruct and explain many things to the rest of us that will help to make us wiser and better, and thereby be the means of doing much good. I also believe that there will be many who will write for this column that will write by inspiration many things that will prove great blessings to all who will read and profit by them. Dear sisters let us all try and help Sister Frances; there are many good and instructive pieces that can be selected and sent to her from different papers and books; and let us not all wait too long before we try to do something, because we are sure there are so many that are better qualified to write than we are, for it is not always those that are qualified that are willing; and although we may feel our weakness and inability to do anything, we may receive a little encouragement from Paul's words to the Corinthians, first chapter 24th verse, "For God chooseth the foolish things of this world to confound the wise, and God chooseth the weak things of this world to confound the things which are mighty." I firmly believe that all who will try to help sustain this column, in meekness and humility, giving our heavenly Father the honor for every blessing, will receive strength and wisdom from him, and will be instruments in his hands of doing much good. And that our kind Father in heaven may bless every effort that is put forth for the purpose of accomplishing good, and for the prosperity of this latter day work, is my earnest prayer,

GUILITA F. SIMMONS.

Dear Sisters:—It is not without some fear on my part that I now write, as I have never before written for our much loved paper. But I have been reading Sister Frances' appeal to us to have courage, so I thought I would have the courage to pen a few lines for our Mothers' Home Column, as I wish to help make it attractive and helpful to others. I am very much pleased to have a place in the Herald expressly for ourselves. It may seem to a good many toiling mothers that they have no time to sit down to write anything, for their minds are often so worried with household cares, that they can not settle them to paper, pen and ink. But never forget, dear sisters, that the humblest effort will be rewarded by our Father in heaven. I am a wife and mother myself, and I know what it is to feel tired and worn out at night; and sometimes it seems when evening comes that I have not accomplished much. But then if mothers did not work, how would our homes look when husband and children come in at night? They would soon lose their pleasure in home. I believe that we hold the reputation of the church in our hands, to a great extent, and let us see to it that it loses nothing through us; but let us strive to keep our lamp trimmed and burning all the time. We are told to do good unto all men, and that surely means saint and sinner; and the least among us can do something for others. If we see a neighbor in trouble over some household affair, assist her if we can, if it is no more than assisting to cut out some garment for one of the children, which inexperience makes troublesome to her. Or if we find her sick and tired and the baby crying, and some particular thing that must be done, just help her do it if it is possible for us to do so. This may not happen often, but let us watch for opportunities of doing good, and we will find plenty, and in ways that will not put us behind with our own work. The feeling that we will have of helping some one out of difficulty and of doing right ourselves, will give us a light heart and a quick step; for surely it is not right to pass our fellow mortals heedlessly by when they are in trouble, though it may seem trifling things to fret about; yet our life is made up of seemingly small things. But if we will not minister in small things we are not fit to control great things. Do every thing that comes to our hand to do as if we did it unto the Lord. If we are kind to others who are not of our faith, they will appreciate it, and we can gain an entrance into their affections thereby, and that will open the way for presenting the gospel. They will listen far more attentively to one they care for, than to those to whom they feel indifferent. I have heard it said of a sister I know, "Well if she is a Mormon she is a Christian any way, for she is always willing to smooth over rough places for others." Don't let us be in too much of a hurry to teach gospel truth. Be content with "line upon line, precept upon precept; here a little and there a little," and soon they will want to hear more. (I speak of those who have never heard the gospel). Let us be faithful in performing all our duties, and the God of peace and love will give us his Spirit in abundance, and let us also go to him in secret prayer; we can tell our wants in plainer language when we are alone with him. Secret prayer is the most powerful weapon we have, or at least it gives us a powerful weapon, that of the Spirit, in whose strength we can talk to the outside world infinitely better than we can in our own strength. Well sisters, perhaps I shall write again if I have the opportunity. I am one of the scattered ones, but I do not feel that that is any excuse for me not doing my duty; on the contrary I feel more than ever the necessity for righteous living. Ever praying for the redemption of Zion, I remain your co-worker in the gospel,

SISTER CHARLOTTE.

STEWARTSVILLE, Feb. 28th.

Dear Sister Frances:—I have read with intense interest the sisters' department in the Herald, and I am thankful we are permitted a place within its pages to communicate our thoughts to one another, that by so doing we may be enabled to more fully discharge the duties that are resting upon us, as "mothers and daughters." I believe this will be for good to the glory and honor of God, and a help toward the furtherance and final triumph of the cause we love, the bringing to pass of all that has been promised, and the final redemption of Zion.

A sister wisely asks the questions, How are we as mothers doing our duty by our children? and so forth. Are we teaching them their duty toward God, or to disregard his law by playing cards, and all such games? I have thought of this a great many times; have prayed and labored that wisdom might be given to me to bring up my children in the fear, love, and admonition of the Lord; and I have always been impressed, and arrived at the conclusion that such games draw their minds away from that which is good; that they tend to evil; consequently, we should use our influence against them. Yet how timely and prudently our attention is called by our dear editor, in the questions asked us as parents. How shall we provide our children with the necessary amount of innocent amusement, and what shall such amusements be? This has been a solemn question in my mind for years. All will agree with me, I think, that such amusement should be that which will satisfy the longings of the mind in that respect, rest their minds from their hourly duties and labors, and yet it should be of that nature that would tend to brighten the intellect and enlighten the mind, and promote good health. I believe it to be the duty of parents to study the different amusements their children shall partake of, and seek wisdom from our heavenly Parent, and select such as will be best adapted to their different temperaments and tastes, or desires; always considering the circumstances under which both parents and children are placed. The joy, consolation, and encouragement received by reading and contemplating Sr. Emerson's advice and words of comfort "To the weary mothers," none can tell only those to whom that consolation and advice is most fitly adapted. Such heart-felt sympathy certainly merits our thanks and esteem. I too hope to read many such excellent letters as Sr. White has written, and believe also in teaching the tender and loving minds of our dear little ones all the beauties of the workmanship of God, that they may love him the dearest of all, and learn to honor and obey his commandments, as they grow in years and wisdom, that when they arrive at the age of accountability they may be willing to yield obedience to the requirements of the law, and learn to overcome evil by good. To this end is my prayer, that the young and rising generation may grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ; that they may do the work assigned them. That many of them will live to see the ultimate triumph of the work I have no doubt. May strength and wisdom be given to us to perform every duty, is my prayer. I do hope the aged mothers will write and give us their advice and counsel on these important matters. Your sister in the bonds of Christ, MARGARET J. HEAD.

DECISION with children is of the utmost importance. Whatever you think best to consent to, do cheerfully and as though it gave you pleasure to grant the request. Let it never be the result of teasing. School yourself into deciding at once what is right and best. Give your decision firmly but pleasantly, so it be fully understood that when "mamma says no; it means no," and not a signal for a series of whines, frettings and teasings. This decisive course will show its result in more obedient, respectful, and in every way, more agreeable children.

MOTHERS of sons, do you ever think that you are probably training just so many future husbands? Then carefully, and day by day, cultivate those qualities of thoughtful consideration which make up a wife's happiness in her husband. Your sons are impatient of restraint, think more of play than their duty in lessening your burdens and cares. You feel it easier to "let them go" than restrain them, and think you would rather do everything yourselves than fuss to make them help, never thinking the while that you are training them in all kinds of self-indulgence and selfish ease, from which some other women will some day suffer untold inconvenience and disappointment.

MY NEEDS.

WHEN I examine the pattern of our Savior, containing so much love and self-denial, I feel to exclaim, Alas how needy I am! "Let no man seek therefore his own but every man another's good." How far short of this my selfish nature leads me daily; O that I could say like Paul, "I know nothing against myself;" but I can not, for I know that I lack much in brotherly love, yet hope by a constant watch of self, and prayer, to steadfastly work nearer the standard. I need the exercise of more "practical living faith" in every day life. I need patience when I am falsely accused, and the little ones cry, and the bread burns, the milk spills—right here I must needs stop and courageously nurture the spirit of peace. I need the spirit of meekness to help me lay aside pride when I have done wrong, and promptly ask the forgiveness of my sister, with the simplicity of a child. I need charity at home, and sisterly kindness and love for those with whom I associate, that a lowly spirit may characterize my conduct at all times. I need faith to sustain me through sickness, sorrow and tribulations. I do not need food or clothing, but I do need the spirit of liberality to help me impart of my substance to the unfortunate, (although it be their own fault, apparently, or otherwise), there is no acceptable excuse for me to withhold.

Alas, I see my needs, and how base and slow my efforts in the race appear; and how oft doth Satan buffet me, and harshly sift; for it is only by suffering that my stiff neck can be humbled. Through bitterness only could I appreciate the sweetness of his love. Dear sister, may I not hope, with you, that after we have suffered a little while He may make us more perfect, establish, strengthen and settle us, that by grace we may don, like a beautiful garment, the bond of perfectness—Charity.

Correspondence.

INDEPENDENCE, Mo., March 19th.

Brother Blair:—I desire to bear my testimony to the readers of the Herald. I know that this Reorganized Church is the Church of the Lord Jesus Christ, by the gift of the Holy Ghost. The most of the Saints who have come here are striving to live faithful. There have been some deaths here among the Saints, and several others are sick at this time. Business is a little dull on account of the railroad strike, but there are better prospects for business here this summer. Lands are very high now, and still rising. I had the misfortune to lose my wife, which has been the hardest trial I ever had to meet; but I hope I will meet her again in the sweet by and by; for she left as good a testimony as ever was given. I am left alone with six boys. Yours in the faith and hope of the gospel bonds of Christ.

JAMES A. BURNHAM.

TABOR, Iowa, March 20th.

Brother Blair:—Our last Conference held at the Gaylord School house was a success. The business was transacted without a dissenting voice; our meetings were well attended; we expected Bro. Anthony to meet with us, but circumstances prevented, so we had to do the best we could without him. Bro. J. W. Waldsmith of Nebraska City, was with us, and assisted us in preaching the word of life. We had good meetings, all hearts were made to rejoice in the goodness of God. The brethren in this part are, mostly trying to do the best they can. We have had good audiences in every place that we have held meetings, and the best attention paid by those not of our faith. And we never experienced more of the Spirit of God in presenting the word than during the past six months. May God give an increase of souls for our hire, is our earnest prayer. I have visited Wheeler's Grove twice since our Camp meeting last fall. The Saints and friends turn out well. The last time I went Brn. George Kemp and William Gaylord accompanied me. We had a splendid time, and notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather and bad roads, our meetings were well attended, and we all felt spiritually renewed, and were strengthened in faith. The people for miles throughout the country are very anxious for another Reunion. I honestly believe that if the general reunion could be held at that place, it would result in more good to the cause than it would at any other point in the west. There are the very best of facilities for camping, a great abundance of well, and spring water; a superabundance of down timber free; and fifteen to twenty acres of room. A band of faithful brothers anxiously waiting to prepare the grounds, and hundreds of honest souls ready to hear the "word of life." There are several of the brethren in this branch unwell, and some are passing away. On the 17th, I preached the funeral of our highly esteemed Sister Ann Penney; on the 19th was called upon to officiate in behalf of Rayly Hardy, son of Bro. and Sister Hardy of this branch. Both services were largely attended, by professors of other denominations. May God comfort the bereft is our prayer, and help the motherless in their distress. Our old, worthy, and ever faithful veteran of the cross, father John Leeka, has been very ill of late, but through the mercy of God has partially recovered, also Bro. William has been confined to his bed and the house for some weeks past, but is on the mend. Our earnest prayer with all the Saints is for their entire recovery. Old father Orton, an old time Saint, eighty-four years old, was stricken by paralysis causing him to lose the use of one side of his body.

God be merciful to all; and help us to stand the trying day; give us patience to endure, and strength to overcome that we may obtain the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ, amen.

Your Brother in bonds,

HENRY KEMP.

NORTH ATTLEBORO, Mar. 13th.

Bro. Joseph Smith:—I believe the opportunities for enlightening the people about the everlasting gospel here are good. I took pleasure in reading Bro. H. Griffith's letter in your issue of March 6th. The Herald is an ever welcome instructor in the gospel truth to its readers here. I see by the letters and extracts from communications that it is universally appreciated among the Saints and their friends. The Mothers' Home Column is quite an accession to the Herald. May God's choicest blessings attend its editor. It is a well acknowledged fact the Sisters are important factors to the success of any well ordered organization. The ladies are assisting in sewing capacity to help build up the work here. I hope that General Conference will be directed to return Bro. M. H. Bond to the Massachusetts District, as I believe he is better acquainted with the needs of the work in this district than any laborer in the field. The same conviction is universal among the Saints in this State. The prospects of the work at Attleboro is brighter, and many of the people are ready to lay aside prejudice and tradition and investigate our claims. Bro. C. A. Coombs preached last Wednesday evening at the residence of Mr. Thomas Shallcross to quite a large company, and was blessed with liberty.

Hoping for the advance of the glorious latter day work and the ultimate redemption of Zion, I remain,

Yours in the faith,

ARTHUR B. PIERCE.

DE KALB, Ill., March 18th.

Dear Herald:—In your issue of February 27th, page 133, you state that I am the son of Jared Carter; and I am in one way, but it is only a grandson. My father, Orlando Carter, was the oldest son of grandfather Jared Carter. Those of the old church who knew all about Jared Carter and his family, may be at a loss to know how I came to be his son; and they may think me an impostor, or something else, and perhaps it would be well for you if it is convenient, to make the correction.

Our little branch,—consisting of fourteen members, which has lately been organized at Cortland,—is in a very good and healthy condition, spiritually; and by the help of our Lord and Master, we hope to soon have a larger and more thrifty branch. And as there has been seed sown here in former days which has not all died, or withered away, we are very hopeful, and pray that our Father will yet continue to strive with them by his Holy Spirit, and finally bring them within the fold of Christ.

Yours in gospel bonds,

C. D. CARTER.

MONDAMIN, Iowa, Mar. 21st.

Dear Herald:—I see in your columns flattering reports from different parts of the world, of the progress of the great work, and the blessings enjoyed by the Saints in divers places. At our quarterly conference the 13th and 14th inst., at Magnolia, there was a goodly degree of the Spirit present, and especially at the prayer service in the afternoon of the 14th. Although there were no outward manifestations of the gifts, the peaceful, gentle influence of the Spirit was felt and enjoyed by all. The glistening eye and the tear stealing down the cheek, spoke of hearts too full for utterance. Brethren Blair and Brand were in attendance, and were the dispensers of the word of life. In the branch of which I am a member, the cause is languishing. There are a number of causes for this state of affairs, the most prominent one, perhaps, is a lack of labor by the branch officials, (of which I am one). Another cause is the spirit of speculation, which has placed some in a position which requires every effort of their mind and body to keep from sinking financially. These together with a neglect to assemble at the house of worship on the Lord's day, agreeable to the commandment found in the Doctrine and Covenants, sec. 59: 2, 3, has brought about this state of affairs. Some excuse themselves because of the conduct of others. Saints, this will never do; it is a true saying, that "every tub must stand on its own bottom." By our own works we stand or fall. In the day of final accounts it will be asked of us individually, Have you done your duty? It will be too late then to try to justify ourselves because of the wrong doings of others. An idea has obtained in the minds of some, that one may neglect duty here, and that, in the world to come, after paying the utmost farthing, we will be admitted into celestial glory, and receive as great a reward as those who have sacrificed time, talent, money, home, friends and all that is dear to them by earthly ties, to do the will of the Master. This, I think, is a mistake, and is calculated to deceive. Suppose I should believe this; it would give me license, or the privilege, to do nothing except that which is no task for me to do. In other words, I need not make any sacrifice whatever, and then in the sweet bye and bye, after having paid the penalty of my sins of omission, I shall be permitted to clasp hands and rejoice with those who have come up through much tribulation.

"And again, we saw the terrestrial world, and beheld and lo; these are they who are of the terrestrial, whose glory differs from that of the church of the first-born, who have received the fullness of the father, even as they of the moon differ from the sun in the firmament. Behold these are they who died without law; and also they who are the spirits of men kept in prison, whom the Son visited, and preached the gospel unto them, that they might be judged according to men in the flesh who received not the testimony of Jesus in the flesh, but afterwards received it; these are they who are honorably men of the earth, who are blinded by the craftiness of men; these are they who receive of His glory, but not of His fullness; these are they who receive of the presence of the Son, but not of the fullness of the Father; wherefore they are bodies terrestrial, and not bodies celestial, and differ in glory as the moon differs from the sun; these are they who are not valiant in the testimony of Jesus; wherefore they obtained not the crown over the kingdom of our God. And now this is the end of the vision which we saw of the terrestrial, that the Lord commanded us to write while we were yet in the Spirit."

In gospel bonds,

J. L. GUNSOLLEY.

KEWANEE, Illinois.

Fellow Saints,—one and all, especially those who read the Herald, keeping posted in Zion's (now scattered) prosperity. Let me say to you—that you may rejoice with us in the Lord. Since the coming of Bro. Mark among us some two weeks before our conference and "re-union" as seen in the minutes of same. We have had the most soul cheering and instructive times, that ever ere this we have been favored with. A great number of outsiders rallied at the call, and paid great attention to what was said, while the words of life flowed like a stream, making the hearts of the Saints glad; while the inquiry arose in the minds of others as yet alienated; "Can these things be? What, are we living in a day when God is speaking to man as in the days of yore? They take their position from the Bible, proving the truthfulness of their sayings from the sayings of Christ and his apostles. Why! I thought our ministers were the most able of any to rightly divide the word of God, expounding and showing to the people its truthfulness. But alas, we hear more Bible truth from this man Forscutt in one discourse than from our ministers in a month of Sundays—and when you get into conversation with their male members, yes, and may I say their women, whom I thought generally speaking were ignorant, why they know more of the Scriptures, I was going to say, than our preachers—and I will say it too. Why, the Scriptures are to them like an old familiar sonnet, 'The old oaken bucket that hung in the well,' or our national air 'The star spangled banner,' &c.

So it goes, brother, what may finally be the result I can not say; but this I do know, that prejudice is yielding, and rising like some misty fog, passing away to some more congenial bigoted quarters. I should like to have been able to have given synopses of Bro. Mark's discourses; I am sure they would have edified; and this is what we want, so that we all may labor for the master intelligently.

While listening to our brother as he seemed to unravel some apparently knotty portions of Scripture, within myself and to God I would say, Father, O we do thank thee for raising up such Pauls and Appoloses to spread far and wide thy "eleventh hour" message. Two gave their names for baptism, and we are hoping that the good Spirit may fully incline others to obey. Yea, those whose hearts are honest, men of spiritual nerve, muscle, bone, and sinew; that will by the power of Israel's God help batter down the walls of bigotry, superstition and priestcraft, that has for ages, and at present fetter and bind the souls of men in sin and death. When

I think of the falsehood that has been published broad cast in the world to hinder the eleventh hour message, I feel often times sick at heart, to think that so intelligent minds do not know the things that tend for their peace. How truthful the apostle's word—"Man through wisdom knows not God." And certainly if they know him not, how can they become versed in his law, his will.

I must not be too tedious—but ever remain yours for poor scattered Zion,

J. D. JONES.

42 York Street, Cheetham, MANCHESTER, England,
March 12th, 1886.

Dear Herald:—The Manchester district (English Mission) bids fair to excel the progress of the past, if we may judge of the future from present appearances. The spirit of enquiry seems rife in several of the branches, resulting in the attendance of numbers of strangers at the ordinary services each Sabbath evening. Five were added to the church by baptism on Friday evening last, in the Manchester branch, still leaving a number almost ready. Unity and consequently peace prevail in the church here; thus efficiently aiding. There are several enquirers who are about ready for baptism, residing at Lyldslly, a town about ten miles from here, in which a little labor has been done during the past season. At Leeds in this district the work is onward. The Brethren and Sisters are battling manfully for the faith once delivered to the Saints, and are succeeding almost beyond their most sanguine expectations. From advices recently received, I am informed that four or five are awaiting baptism.

I met with the Saints at Sheffield on Saturday and Sunday the 27th and 28th, February last, Elder Armstrong and myself enjoying a very pleasant time indeed with the brethren and sisters and friends of the above named branch. Sister Gell and her most kind and estimable husband adding every thing necessary for our comfort and happiness during our short stay amongst them.

The work is onward in Sheffield, and the Saints under the presidency of Elder John Austus and his faithful coadjutors, Elders Henry Hoole and Priest Fredrick Beaumont, are indefatigable in their efforts to build up the Church of Christ. May God bless and prosper them.

On Saturday the 6th of March, I visited and met in tea party with the President and Saints of the Farnworth branch, spending a very pleasant time with them. The brethren and sisters were all alive to the interests of the Church and I believe prospects are brighter than they have been for some time past. The local ministry is leading into sympathy with the church those who are honestly searching after the truth. Experience teaches us that one of the chief characteristics of the people of God consists in dwelling together in unity. We have had a decided revival of the Lord's work here in Manchester; and our present condition is clearly traceable to the self denying and praiseworthy efforts of a band of noble young men, chief amongst which may be mentioned the name of Elder Wm. Armstrong, Jun'r. The efforts of these brethren have resulted in the bringing of quite a number of people into sympathy with the Gospel; several of whom have already become united with the household of faith, and bid fair to become valuable as well as reputable members of the Church. And though "dark clouds of trouble," have just passed over them, threatening to destroy the peace of the church, Hope is now smiling brightly before them, and the hour of their deliverance has come.

I visited the Saints at Wigan on the 17th of January last and found the few that are left there fully alive to the importance of the work, and earnestly endeavoring to work for the Master. The branch has suffered somewhat of late owing to the removal of several of the brethren and sisters to other towns a distance away. They are becoming scattered about like the mustard seed, and I trust to the leavening of the people amongst whom they are called to labor.

I may here say that we have flourishing Sunday Schools in connection with the churches in Sheffield and Manchester, and in the latter place we have also a "Band of Hope" society, which with our Heavenly Father's blessing we trust will accomplish much good.

In the foregoing I have presented a brief outline of the condition of God's work in this part of his vineyard, and may fitly conclude with a stanza from one of our poets:

"The Lord is extending the Saints understanding—Restoring their judges and all as at first.
The knowledge and power of God are expanding;
The veil o'er the earth is beginning to burst.
We call in our solemn assemblies, in Spirit,
To spread forth the kingdom of Heaven aloud;
That we through one faith may begin to inherit,
The visions, and blessings, and glories of God."

With love to the whole household of faith, I remain. Yours in the Gospel covenant,

JOSEPH DEWSNUP, Sen.

LOWER LAKE, Cal., March 16th.

Dear Herald:—The Lower Lake Branch being somewhat isolated we are consequently not encouraged by visits from travelling Elders so often as those on or near the main routes of travel. Brn. A. H. Smith and Kelley cheered us by a visit last September, and preached several very interesting discourses, leaving a favorable impression. But other fields of labor demanded their attention and they were compelled to leave before much of an interest was created. Again we have been cheered by a visit from Elders J. S. Oman and Thomas Daly, who lectured fourteen nights in a large, commodious hall, and although there were other services in two churches part of the time, the hall was generally well filled. On Sunday, Feb. 20th, Bro. Daly preached the funeral sermon of Sister Hester Cobb, taking Rev. 14: 13 as his text—"Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord." The discourse was very impressive, and the audience listened to the doctrine of future reward and punishment with almost bated breath. They apparently had never understood the different degrees of glory before.

Your humble correspondent lectured one evening on Daniel's visions of the kingdoms, explaining the different kingdoms in their chronological order from Adams' synchronological chart, which pictures out the history of the world and verifies the Scriptures. In the lecture I was compelled to allude to the apostasy of the Catholic Church and the authority held by the Protestant Church in order to show the necessity of setting up the kingdom, etc. The lecture came very nearly costing me my position as principal of Lower Lake P. S. But I never paid any attention to their talk, and the result was a written notice from the trustees to commence school next Monday, March 16th. Rev. Mr. Taylor, a good Baptist Brother dropped in just on the eve of Elder Dalys' departure and engaged in a street discussion which resulted in a challenge on the part of Bro Daly, who said he would remain one week longer. Mr. Taylor would not meet him, but finally agreed to debate some time in April. I am now negotiating terms of debate. Don't know whether Mr. Taylor will respond or not.

VALE'S MILL, O., March 15th.

Dear Herald:—Since the 19th of December last I have been telling the people what they must do to be saved. Some believe the message while many reject it. Often these words come to my mind, "Why do the heathen rage, and the people imagine vain things?" But after all it reminds us of the tribulation through which the Saints of old passed. Up to the present I have delivered fifty-eight discourses, baptized eleven and blessed twenty-five children, and gained an entrance into some new places. Enjoyed excellent liberty on most occasions. From the 27th of January until the 1st of February was permitted to labor in company with Bro. Thomas Matthews from Syracuse. I appreciated his aid very much, as also did the Saints of the Vinton Branch. Come again Bro. Matthews—you can find work to do in this region. My wife traveled with me until the 13th of February, at which time she returned home. The "United Brethren" and "Bible Christians," (so called) have been proselyting scores in this region, during this winter; but from the hatred they manifest against the truth, they seem to be "two fold more the children of hell than they were before." Now and then they hint about discussing the faith, but Bro. W. H. Kelley's fame has reached these hills and vales, and about all I have to say to them is "Get your smartest man and we'll send for Bro. Kelley, and lo! the music stops. The Saints of this branch are erecting a church 26x36, which they need very much. There has been upwards of sixty baptized in this branch within the last year, though a few have withdrawn. The work is onward, the Saints gaining strength, numbers believing, may their faith not waver is my prayer.

To Bro. Joseph Smith:—I take up my pen once more to give my testimony unto the world, through the Saints' Herald; knowing that this is the work of God and not man's invention. I ask my readers to fancy that they are with me and seeing the working of the hand of God with his obedient children. About one year ago having just got home from my daily toil, I was about to sit down to my tea, when a still small voice came unto me; "Hasten down to my servant Rooke he requires thee." I rose up at once and started on a four mile journey to his abode; and when I arrived found the dear aged brother had been given up by the doctors, whose verdict was that he would not last many hours; and that he had prayed that God would send his brethren unto him. This was the report given me by his son and daughter. I hastened up and found him very low, not being able to speak. His hand caught mine, and while his eyes lighted up with holy faith, he placed my hands upon his head. I, in answer to that earnest entreaty, administered unto him; and the promise by the Holy Spirit to him and them was that the Lord would raise him up and renew his strength within him, and he should be an instrument in His hands unto the convincing to some people the truth of His everlasting gospel. In about a fortnight's time that brother was able to attend the meetings, and with his brethren and sisters in the one faith, return thanks to Almighty God for his loving kindness and his tender mercy; also for giving him strength to follow his daily labor though eighty years of age. Since that time I have visited him with one exception once every week, and have seen the word of the Lord fulfilled in him, for his words have convinced some good people that God liveth today and will speak to all that obey him. By their invitation I went with him to their place of abode; met with kindly treatment, and can say they are earnestly seeking the kingdom. I pray God to soon choose them and call them in. Unto those of his own household has God also through him shown light. Our prayer is that he will cause it to burn brighter within them, until they shall have to cry like one of old, "Thy people shall be my people, thy God my God." Being afflicted myself last Christmas time I was unable to be with him for the space of three, or four weeks; then I received a message to come at once as he was taken again very ill and had been so for two weeks. I went as soon as I could bear the journey and found him again laid down, and then knew that he would not rise again, though wrestling in prayer that if it was God's holy will that he would let him tarry with us yet awhile longer, that he might cheer and guide us on the way by his wise council in the cause of our Lord Jesus Christ. He had full faith in his God and Savior that he was able to again raise him up even in a twinkling of an eye, but leaving all things in His hands his words were, "Abba Father, thy will be done." He used to say often during the thirteen weeks he laid, sometimes in great bodily pain, that he thought it was our prayers that were keeping him here. He charged us to tell the brethren and sisters in the faith, to hold fast unto the truth, because it was from God and not from man, and to prepare themselves to be strong in their faith because trying times would soon be upon us, and if we were not faithful we should fall. But if we were watchful and prayerful God would help and deliver us from all things, if we would hold fast to the rod of iron. God's holy word, the Bible, Book of Mormon, and the Book of Doctrine and Commandments which God had given unto his church in these last days. Myself and Elder Thomas Bradshaw went down to see him on Sunday, February 21st inst., and found him very low. He wished to be anointed, and prayed that God would make his mind and will known unto him. We granted his request and so did the Spirit of God likewise, for it made known to him that the Lord had purified him through affliction, and he would soon take him hence unto himself. With the administering all pain ceased, and in about twenty-two hours after he fell asleep in Jesus; in the full hope and assurance of coming up at the resurrection of the just, made perfect at the appearing of the Lord Jesus Christ in the clouds of heaven to live and reign forever with the Lord. He lived and died a saint, and a true servant of the Most High, and has gone to receive his reward, a crown of immortality, the reward of all those who endure with Christ Jesus our Lord unto the end. I pray that God our Eternal Father, and our loving merciful Savior will guide and lead his church and people in all things that pertain unto his most holy will, and guide our beloved president whom He has called to preside over His church, and pour out upon him His Holy Spirit's power from above. And that by his Holy Spirit we may be delivered from all temptation, that at our passing away we may, as our dear departed Bro. Rooke, have the same testimony to leave and can say, "O death where is thy sting, O grave, where is thy victory." Ever praying for the church and welfare of Zion, and for the mighty endowment of her priesthood, I strive to obtain that faith that was once delivered to the Saints.

Your brother,
WILLIAM HENDRICK.

Brother Blair:—I thought a word from this part of the vineyard would not be amiss. Not a word has been said or written in favor of brother Kemp's earnest three years' labor of love. He has faithfully performed the labor that was assigned him, in the fear of God. Wherever a word of comfort and cheer were needed, they were freely given. The work is onward. There is nothing to hinder the work from moving on if the gospel labor is kept up. We desire that brother Kemp be continued in this district, and I believe I state the feelings of all this district.

Bro. Joseph:—On the 9th inst. I left home with satchel in hand, and walked some twenty-one miles, and arrived here on the 11th; found the Saints as a rule with a desire to go ahead. Bro. Rector had resigned and some of the rest of the officers were under charges, therefore they did not want to act. The branch called a meeting, and by vote I presided. Bro. Burter, the priest, made such acknowledgments as were acceptable to the branch, and the charges were withdrawn and he was reconciled to the branch, and has the confidence of the Saints, and will try to magnify his calling, and act as Priest of the branch.

I am sorry to see here many who are throwing the responsibility off when the crisis is on the church. If there was ever a time when the work demanded a determined effort on the part of all concerned, it is now. Then be encouraged brothers, and let us come to the front, and as we unitedly march under the blood-stained banner of life let us sing.

"I am coming Lord,
Coming now to Thee,
Wash me, cleanse me in Thy blood,
That flowed on Calvary."

If these are the real sentiments of our hearts there will not be much use of Elders' Courts, or lording it over God's heritage. If we do not preach ourselves, but Christ Jesus, and ourselves servants, not masters but servants in the same state of mind, in humility and meekness, like Jesus said to his disciples when he took the child and showed them how child-like they must be to be His disciples; then let us work together to build up, and not try to tear down. Tearing down is not the work of a Saint. God knows what we have done is for the general good of all, and the spread of this glorious work in southern Indiana. I hope that we may be benefitted by our experience in the past, and see to it that our teaching is not repulsive and our religion, that we draw the lines so tight that we drive all away from us and the church; and we lose our influence, or salt, and the work stop under our care. May God bless all the Saints that we may renew our energies in the divine life; and hold on to the rod of iron until we are saved in the eternal state, is my prayer.

Paris, 18th.—On my way to conference I tarried at this place, held meetings last night at the school-house with fair attendance and with good liberty, and many a request to stay longer, or come again. All strangers to me here, but the Lord has led the way.

SOME OBJECTIONS TO MORMONISM ANSWERED.

AS WE go out into the so called orthodox world, and converse with them on this latter day work, we meet with many objections to it. One that we come across very often is this, this work can not be of God for Joseph Smith the founder of it was an ignorant man and could neither read, nor write; his parents walked in the lowest paths of life, and certainly the Great Father of the universe would not chose such a contemptible being to be the herald of glad tidings of salvation, to a sin dying world. For an answer to this objection we can only turn with them to the Bible and read in John, 7: 15. "And the Jews marvelled, saying, How knoweth this man letters, having never learned." 1st Cor. 1: 27, 28. "But God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise; and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty." "And base things of the world, and things which are despised, hath God chosen, yea and things which are not, to bring to naught things that are." Acts 4: 13. "Now when they saw the boldness of Peter and John, and perceived that they were unlearned and ignorant men, they marvelled; and they took knowledge of them that they had been with Jesus."

Taking the Bible for evidence, my friends, we plainly see that God anciently called men to do important work for him that were uneducated. Of the twelve apostles that Christ ordained for the ministry, all came from the lower walks of life. The Apostle Paul was the only one we read of in the Bible that was highly educated. We think this is evidence enough to show that it was not anything marvelous that God called ignorant Joseph Smith to present the gospel in its fullness in this eighteenth century.

Again they say, if the religion you profess to follow is true you would have more followers, and the best minds of the age would grasp after it eagerly. My friends, what the world call the wise have never in any age of the world received a prophet or a messenger of God. In ancient times none received the message of Noah; and they had many plausible reasons for not obeying his warning; and thus they were led along in blindness and darkness to destruction. Elijah, the prophet, the world hated so much that they sought his life and he was obliged to flee for safety into the wilderness, and was there fed by a bird. That does not look as though his religion was popular with the world. Isaiah was sawn asunder. Jeremiah was accused of being a traitor and flung into a pit of mire and filth to die. Indeed, most of the Lord's prophets have been opposed, slandered, misrepresented, and lied about until it has become a well known proverb "that a prophet is not without honor, save in his own country." So it is not strange that Joseph Smith, the founder of our religion, has also received the same treatment from the hands of the world. Even Jesus Christ the Great Prophet was accused of being a glutton and wine bibber, of being born of fornication, of being of low birth. He was so slandered and lied about that at length they gathered into a mob and demanded his life, and all on account of lying lips. And the prominent leaders in this move against Him pretended to have great piety and were learned and wise men, as the world called them. So my friends, it seems that Jesus himself was not any more popular while upon earth than Joseph Smith.

We read in Acts 25: 5. "As concerning this sect we know it is every where spoken against." So my friends, you can not condemn our religion upon that ground for if you do you must condemn the religion the ancient apostles taught. And if you believe in the Bible you will have to admit this religion is right, because it compares so well with the religion that Christ taught.

Again, another objection is that Joseph Smith could not be a prophet of God and do the wickedness that he did, such as lying, practising polygamy, stealing, &c. We do not admit that he did these things. But suppose he did, he did no worse than Moses who killed an Egyptian and hid him in the sand, and left his own country through fear. Then there was Noah, who got drunk soon after he touched dry land; and still again there was David and Solomon who had many wives and concubines; and yet who of the so-called religious world say they were not prophets of God. Peter cursed and swore, and yet you do not discard his epistles as not being the word of God, and why is it you will not show any mercy to Joseph Smith the founder of our church. No witnesses have yet been found that personally saw Joseph Smith commit the crimes you accuse him of, and until you bring them forward we will say there is no proof. In relation to proving them by such books as Beadle's, Kidder's, or Ann Eliza Young's histories, we will say they were not personally acquainted with Joseph Smith, so their evidence will not be accepted. If our religion is to be rejected because some one has slandered the characters of those that brought it to light, then the teachings of the Bible must be under the same hypothesis; that if God would only select pure and holy characters, such as would at no time of life do wrong, through whom to reveal his will, then pretty much all of the Bible is to be rejected.

Again it is said, "Your church teaches the laying on of hands for the spiritual gifts is one of the ordinances of God's house in the present day. This we can not believe, for the laying on of hands ceased with the apostles, and we believe none but the apostles laid on hands. Well, my friends, you must be mistaken, for Ananias laid hands upon Saul of Tarsus and he received the Holy Ghost; and Ananias was not an apostle. And now go with me to church histories and see what they have to say on the subject. Tertullian, A. D. 200 de Bap. c. 6, writes that "After baptism the hand is imposed by blessing, and calling, and inviting of the Holy Spirit, who willingly descends from the Father on the bodies that are cleansed and blessed." Eusebius Pamphilus (not the pope of that name) who lived about three hundred years after Christ, in his work, book 7, chap. 2, says: "The ancient manner of receiving members into the church was with prayer and the laying on of hands." Augustine in the fourth century writes: "Still we do what the apostles did, when they laid hands on the Samaritans and called down the Holy Ghost upon them."

This is evidence enough to prove that it was the doctrine of the church down to the fourth century. And now in Heb. 6:1 Paul says that the laying on of hands is one of the principles of the doctrine of Christ, and as we can not find any where within the lids of the Bible that God has commanded it to be discontinued, we must conclude that it still remains. So, my friends, we think your last objection is overthrown, and that you will be compelled to say that all of them have been overthrown by that grand old book the Bible.

MRS. DANIEL JONES.

WAS JOSEPH SMITH AN IMPOSTOR?

A CLEAR CASE.

In the Bible it is clearly affirmed that God is an unchangeable being, in the following language: "I know that, whatsoever God doeth, it shall be for ever; nothing can be put to it, nor any thing taken from it; and God doeth it, that men should fear before him."—Eccl. 3:14. "God is not a man, that he should lie; neither the son of man, that he should repent: hath he said, and shall he not do it? or hath he spoken, and shall he not make it good?"—Num. 23:19. "So shall my word be that goeth forth out of my mouth: it shall not return unto me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it."—Isa. 55:11. "The counsel of the Lord standeth forever, the thoughts of his heart to all generations."—Psa. 33:11. "Forever, O Lord, thy word is settled in heaven."—Ps. 119:89.

"For I am the Lord, I change not; therefore ye sons of Jacob are not consumed."—Mal. 3:6. "Every good gift, and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights, with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning."—James 1:17.

The same doctrine is taught in the Book of Mormon, which it is said was translated from Reformed Egyptian hieroglyphs by the aforesaid "impostor," Joseph Smith. It says: "God is the same yesterday, to-day and forever: and in him there is no variableness, neither shadow of changing." Again, "He changeth not; if so, he would cease to be God."—B. of M. 6:6, 7.

Now having, we think, established the doctrine that God is immutable, by these two witnesses, we find Joseph Smith giving a revelation in July, 1828, which reads as follows: "The works, and the designs, and the purposes of God, can not be frustrated, neither can they come to nought, for God doth not walk in crooked paths; neither doth he vary from that which he hath said; therefore his paths are straight, and his course is one eternal round."

Now, out of his own mouth we propose to judge him. Remember he says, speaking as he claimed by the Spirit of God, that God "doth not vary from that which he hath said." And also, that "his course is one eternal round." But there is another rule by which we have the right to judge him, and test his claims, and that rule is given us by Paul, in Galatians 1:8. "But though we, or an angel from heaven preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed." Now in Mark 16, we read that Jesus said: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized, shall be saved: but he that believeth not, shall be damned. And these signs shall follow them that believe: in my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them: they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover." And then Mark says: "And they went forth, and preached every where, the Lord working with them, and confirming the word with signs following." That is, that as Jesus said that the signs named should follow them that believed the gospel, and that as, in the very beginning of their great mission, in Jerusalem, and on the day of Pentecost, they declared "in the name of Jesus Christ" that upon the ground of repentance and baptism for remission of sins, the people should "receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." "And we are told by Paul in 1 Cor. 12, that the "signs," or "gift of tongues," "healings," &c., were the manifestations or workings of the Spirit; so we learn that when the apostles preached the gospel, and baptized the penitent believers therein, they did so in the name, or by the authority of Jesus Christ, they being his ambassadors or representatives, or agents. On this ground we repeat, they promised the holy Spirit to these believers, when they obeyed; and the Lord confirmed "the word with signs following;" that is, the "word of promise," which he gave, namely, "These signs shall follow them that believe."

These signs being the gift of the Holy Ghost, it follows that when the apostles promised the Holy Spirit to the obedient believers, it was an endorsement of their word of promise, which they made in the name, i. e., by the authority of Jesus Christ, and an endorsement of the claim that they were sent of Christ, or his true apostles, and proved, we say, that Christ had sent them, and that they were acting under his direct authority, when he gave the Holy Ghost, to those to whom it was promised. No one will be likely to dispute this. These apostles could not give the Holy Spirit as they could give a present of a piece of money, or a garment, or anything that they possessed and controlled; but God gave it through them, they representing him and his Son Jesus Christ, as a commercial traveler represents a firm whose goods he is selling by sample, or as a Minister Plenipotentiary represents the government of the United States at London, or Paris, or Vienna, or St. Petersburg, or at the capital of any foreign government to which he is sent. God gave the Spirit in those days through the "laying on of hands" of the apostles; and those who received it knew by the very fact of their receiving it that God had truly sent these men, and that they truly spoke in the name of the Lord, when they said, "ye shall receive the Holy Ghost," or, "these signs shall follow them that believe."

Now, Joseph Smith came forth, and preached, (so he claimed), "the gospel of the kingdom" just as Paul did, and taught as he did—faith in God, in Christ, in the things of the kingdom of God; and repentance, and baptism for remission of sins, and the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost. He had the boldness to say to the people, that if they believe the gospel and repented of their sins, and were baptized for remission of sins; that they should receive the gift of the Holy Ghost, and these "signs shall follow them that believe." What presumption! An illiterate, ignorant, daring "impostor," having the audacity to pledge the Almighty to give his Spirit, his gifts, his divine power, to people who would believe his (Smith's) doctrine! Awful, truly awful. And now notice how God resented the insult, how he ignored, and exposed this impostor(?) to the world. Every honest soul should know it throughout the world; all should understand it. And how did he do it? Ah, indeed how? Well, thus: The Lord worked with him, "confirming the word with signs following." As the apostle Peter would have said had he witnessed what others have to-day, "the Holy Ghost fell on them as on us at the beginning." The most incomprehensible feature of this matter is, that as no man can give the Holy Spirit only as an agent, an instrument, a medium in the hand of God; and that it is God himself, or the Lord Jesus Christ who gives, and they only can give the Holy Spirit, the astounding feature of the case is, that they endorsed this "impostor's" claims by giving, as thousands to-day testify, the Holy Spirit, in "signs and wonders," in "divers gifts," "operations," "manifestations" of the Spirit, just as they gave the believers eighteen hundred and fifty years ago. How could God and why did he confirm "the word" of Joseph Smith, when he said what Martin Luther, John Calvin, John Wesley, Alexander Campbell, William Miller, nor any other founder of a church did not presume to say because they knew they had no authority to say it, viz: "Ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." "These signs shall follow them that believe."

A receiver of stolen goods, who receives them knowingly, is as bad as the thief who stole them it is said. If Joseph Smith was an impostor in his claim that angels from heaven visited and ministered to him; and that through them he received apostolic authority, and because of this authority he promised the gift of the Holy Spirit to those whom he preached to; baptized and confirmed by laying on of hands, then did not the Almighty Father, and Jesus his Son, do a very reprehensible act in sending in answer to this promise of an impostor, the Spirit of truth, and through it the various "gifts" that were promised the ancient believers by the Savior; and which were enjoyed by the early christians so bountifully?

Joseph Smith did certainly predict, and promise in Jesus Christ's name the baptism of the Holy Ghost, and the "gifts of the Spirit," and the same were bestowed upon all true believers in the doctrine he preached. And not only so, but others whom he ordained to the Eldership, also found the "Lord working with them and confirming the word, with signs following." And such was the case with others whom these men ordained to the same office and authority. The writer is a witness of many evidences that the "signs" do follow those who believe. A few cases will be mentioned, not by way of boasting, for to God alone belongs the glory. In 1869 in the month of August, in Little Kennebec, Maine, (near Machias), a little child three years and two or three months old, named Mary Hooper—whose mother was in the church, but her father was not, at that time; was so afflicted, that she could not walk, stand alone, or even creep, nor had she ever been able to speak, nor to cry, only to utter when in pain a single sound, like a single note in music. By request of her mother she was anointed with Olive Oil, consecrated or set apart by prayer for the purpose of anointing the afflicted, and the sick. Her thro it and ankles were anointed, and hands were laid on these parts and the blessing of God invoked. The next day her father came home, having been away from home the morning of the day before; and at the same hour that she had been administered to the day before, he (being influenced he said "by some strange power," spoke to the child who was sitting on the floor some six to eight feet, and said, "Mary, come to pa." She instantly sprang to her feet without putting her hands to the floor, and walked directly to him, which so startled him that he came near falling to the floor, so astounded was

he. The writer saw the child next morning walking about out doors; and she has ever since been perfectly able to walk. Her vocal organs were also made perfect, and speech was given her. She was at this time as before mentioned over three years old. If this case had occurred eighteen hundred years ago, and been recorded in the Acts of the Apostles, it would be considered by Bible readers to have been a "miracle."

Another case illustrating the existence to-day of another and different "spiritual gift." In the Spring of 1881, when the writer was laboring in Chicago, he was called by a stranger to go without delay to the house of Mr. and Mrs. Gillette, as she was as he said in an "awful condition." He went, and upon entering the room, discovered the woman lying upon the floor, evidently possessed by an evil spirit; for she was beating her head on the floor with astonishing rapidity, and with great and unnatural force. She was also striking the floor with her arms in like manner, and also with her feet; at the same time she was speaking with great force in an unknown tongue, which was evidently a language and not mere gibberish. The writer made an effort to catch her hand, but failed the first time, but in a moment or two caught it, and then in the name of Jesus Christ he commanded the unclean Spirit to come out of her, and to trouble her not. Instantly she ceased her movements and her speaking, and lay on the floor completely exhausted. We lifted her upon a chair, and the writer prayed that she might speedily regain her strength, and in a few moments she opened her eyes, and spoke to us in her natural manner, and soon was strong as ever. She is probably the same one, whose case the Chicago papers have been discussing recently.

The writer has been the instrument in the hands of God of bringing fully six hundred persons into the church, by baptism and confirmation; he has seen through different ones, of this number, the manifestation of the gifts of faith, of wisdom, of knowledge, of prophecy, of healings, of working of miracles, of discerning of spirits, of other or new tongues, and the interpretation of tongues, in fact all the gifts mentioned in the New Testament as being given to the believer of the gospel in the early days of the church—or eighteen centuries ago. Having been an ordained minister before he became attached to the church organized by the "impostor" Smith, in the year 1830; and had baptized scores of good, honest and earnest people, he is not aware of any of them receiving any thing more than joy and peace, in believing in Christ; that is, that no one received what is called in the Scriptures, "spiritual gifts," and "these signs" that Jesus speaks of, did not "follow them that believed" what he preached in all good conscience as the gospel of Christ, but which was that gospel only in part. And Jesus did not say that these signs shall follow them that believe a part of the gospel, but "that believe the gospel," i. e., the fulness of the gospel.

The writer accepted the claims that Joseph Smith made concerning the authority conferred on him by angels to reorganize the Church of Christ, and to preach the gospel by the authority of heaven, and in fulness and power, and in demonstration of the Spirit, because he had no alternative. This statement will need explaining. On the 13th day of March, 1866, the writer had been discussing with Elder Jason W. Briggs, at his home, in Hardin county, Iowa, the various points of doctrine held by the Church of Jesus Christ, commonly called Latter Day Saints, and sometimes the Mormons; and after some six hours of earnest, and honest discussion, he had not an argument left to oppose to said Briggs' position, and as he never believed in debate for mere talk's sake, or to gain the mastery, he ceased to talk, but suddenly he became oblivious to his surroundings, and a voice was heard over his head quoting in clear tones, these words, "Repent and be baptized every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." The voice said, "Have you received the Holy Ghost?" He replied "Nay, the Holy Ghost is not given in these days." The voice said, "If not, the only reason is, that there is no one called, for the promise of the Spirit is to all them whom the Lord shall call. Is there any one called to-day?" He answered, "Yes, God is calling a people from among the Gentiles by the gospel." The voice said, "If there are none who are called, it is because the gospel is not preached, and if the gospel is not preached, there are no believers, and if no believers, then no church, and if no church then no salvation." It then said, "How was the Holy Spirit given in former times?" He answered, "By the laying on of hands of the ministry." The voice then said, "You are an ordained minister, have you authority to lay on hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost?" He said, "No I have not." It answered thus: "Your ordination is as good and of as much worth, as that of any other minister of the various churches of the day, and if you have not this authority to lay on hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost, who has?" He replied, "No one." "But," said the voice, "There must be this authority on earth, or the Holy Ghost will not be given, and if not given, it is because there is nobody called, and if nobody is called, then the only reason is, because the gospel is not preached; and if that be so, then there are no believers, and therefore, no church, and no salvation." And then he realized his position, he heard no more of the voice, but turning to Bro. Briggs' he said, "Have you authority to lay on hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost." He replied "I have." Then came before him the fact that his (Briggs') authority came from or through Joseph Smith, and it was asking him to concede too much, to believe that such important, and even divine authority, could come through that channel.

But again, all things else passed from before his vision, and there before him, about ten feet away, and a little higher than his head, and a little to the left, was seen in large and clear letters, the words
