JOSEPH SMITH - - - - - EDITOR.
W. W. BLAIR - - - - - ASSOCIATE EDITOR.

Lamoni, Iowa, July 17, 1886.

THE following we find in the St. Joseph (Missouri) Daily Journal, of June 20th, which explains itself.

"MORMONISM.—Elder Joseph Smith, of Lamoni, Iowa, editor of the Saints' Herald, President of the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints, and son of Joseph Smith, the founder of that church, preached yesterday morning and evening at the hall of the Saints in this city, corner of Fourth and Felix streets. The hall is a comfortable and well furnished room, where the Saints of this city, and there are quite a good number, hold services every Sunday, under Elder Bronson. This the pure and original Mormon church, separated from the Utah Mormons by polygamy, which these do not practice. The hall was well filled last evening by the Saints and a good many visitors. The Saints are mostly elderly and middle aged people and are plain and honest looking, noted for plain dress and manners and cordial hospitality and would commonly be called "Old fashioned." Elder Smith took no text, but devoted his two discourses to the subject: "Mormonism, and What It Is." He said that in all ages men had investigated and established new churches, whence sprung all the branches of the Christian church, and claimed the same right for Joseph Smith, founder of the Mormon Church. He denounced polygamy, and stated the tenets of the Mormon Church and quoted a good deal of Scripture to establish them, principally the 16th chapter of Matthew and the 6th chapter of Hebrews. Mr. Smith is a pleasant and fluent speaker and evidently a deep student."

POLITICAL UTAH.

HE is a dull and faithless Latter Day Saint, who is not in the belief that one of the purposes had in view by God in permitting the discovery of America, its peopling and subsequent successful revolt from the rule of England, was that in this land he would cause to be established a political government under which "his act, his strange act," might be consummated;

as such act had been predicted in prophecy.

He who will trace the history of the several forms of Government, under which the several colonies and settlements from which the United States finally grew, will discover that from the settling of Virginia by colonists sent out by the London company in 1607, to the latest proprietary grant and chartered companies of settlers, from New Hampshire to Georgia, all of them finally crystalized into the representative, or republican form, typified by the House of Burgesses, of Virginia, and the General Assembly of Massachusetts. These gave place to the State forms and the Congress now characterizing the government of the United States.

From this, and from the prophecies yet to be fulfilled, it is not hard to conclude that a republican form of government, of some sort, similar to that now existing, will continue until the coming of Christ Jesus to establish the throne of his father David, no more to be thrown down forever. Until the establishing of that kingdom "wherein dwelleth righteousness" the people of God are assured; they "shall have no king in time." No kingly rule or dominion was to hold the reins of governmental power over the soil of the New World, the land "choice above all other lands" from the time the dominion of the British Lion over the Colonies of America was broken, until the King of kings and Lord of lords assumes righteous control and rules in equity "for the meek of the earth."

No surer guarantee for the perpetuity of the republican idea in government, using the term republican to mean the government of the United States as a whole and not a political party, could be asked than is given in the promises made to the Saints in the statement that they are to have no king "in time." The success of the experiment that God is making in establishing the church as a forerunner of and preparatory to the ushering in of that kingdom must depend largely upon the character and perpetuity of the political government under which it was to be established and to flourish.

Whether the angel that delivered the message of restoration knew of the design, or not; he certainly must have been sent by Him who did, and an opportune time was selected; and if the message was not prematurely declared, then must the political conditions have been favorable to the execution of the design. Will the conditions be favorable to the continuing of the work. We think so.

How any Saint, whether he live isolated from the church or any considerable number, or in the midst of many of like faith can be disloyal in word or deed to the land and Government chosen of God for the accomplishment of so much that is dear to the believer, is something strikingly singular to us.

Utah is occupying an anomalous position. Her religious element claims to be the church established in pursuance of the divine will upon the land of America, the precursor to that reign of Infinite love to begin at Christ's coming and his kingdom. Her men must know, if they are worthy the claim for intelligence they make for themselves, that the political government of the United States must continue to exist as God suffered or directed it to be established until the day hoped for by them shall come. If they do so know, how can they expect that so strange an antagonism as that now existing between them and the government can result, except in disaster to them and the frustrating or delaying their hope. It seems to us that the only safe and consistent course for the element in Utah, upon which the immediate political burden of the government of the territory must rest can pursue, is to take such steps as will bring the people of the territory and the government into harmonious relations, in order that the general and grand design so fairly shown in the bringing in of the latter day work may be accomplished. Joseph the seer said in 1844. "God hath set a flaming sword to guard the Tree of Liberty."

AMONG the many friendly press notices we are receiving, we give our readers the following from the June number of Health and Home, published in Washington, D. C., and Chicago, Illinois. We appreciate such kindnesses and shall seek to merit them by a faithful advocacy of the right and the true. The church has long been under clouds of reproach because of the heresies and evil practices which have found place among professed Latter Day Saints. But these clouds are lifting, the dawn has broken upon the church, those acquainted with the true Saints and their doctrine perceive it and are giving expression to words of cheer and favor. Truly, God is giving "grace and favor" to his people wherever they serve him in purity and faith, as he promised, June 22d, 1834, in Doctrine and Covenants 102:7.

"The Saints' Herald, published weekly at Lamoni, Iowa, sets forth the doctrines of the Latter Day Saints in a manner that is both agreeable and acceptable. The opposition that has been offered to this sect has certainly been prompted by either ignorance or hypocrisy. The Herald has been coming to our desk for the last several years, and we have perused each issue with both pleasure and profit. Did we have any advice to give to those political reformers, who seek the annihilation of this church, it would be to subscribe for the Herald. This paper is the official organ of the Reorganized Church, and its every column breathes a purity of expression, and a candor that is sadly lacking in the Christian press."

THE following clipping sent us of late contains some truths, much speculation, with not a little of detraction. Brigham Young left many millions in real estate, bonds, stocks, and personal values, about one million of which his heirs, on demand of their church authorities paid back to the church as tithings, etc., found in the hands of Brigham at his death and unaccounted for.

Some of the sons and daughters of Brigham Young are very excellent and intelligent people. It is true Utah "contains some of the best land in the United State," and yet it is a fact that the Mormons have made "the desert blossom like the rose." They had the soil, the climate, and the mountain streams, and with these they had the industry, skill, frugality, and indomitable will to accomplish it. No land can boast a more industrious, orderly, economical, persevering people than were and are the Utah Mormons. Their accomplished facts, beginning in poverty in 1847 in a wilderness one thousand miles away from civilization, speak for themselves. And had the millions of Brigham Young and other wealthy Utah Mormons been used by those who earned them by honest toil, instead of going into the hands of those who "fleeced the flock," the rank and file of that people would to-day compare well with any like number in the United States. Many of these toilers may well say: "The zeal of thine house hath eaten me up."

We believe with Judge Baskin that many of the Utah people are being purged of their polygamic notions, and that they will return to "Old Mormonism" as it was taught and practiced from 1830 to 1844, in the times of Joseph the Seer, when great grace and power and success attended the work everywhere the gospel was preached in purity. Joseph, the son of Joseph the Seer, has sought diligently and faithfully, especially since April 6th, 1860, to expose the heresy of polygamy and its kindred evils, and also the evils growing out of priestly dictation and intermeddling in civil and political affairs. Give all their just dues.

BRIGHAM YOUNG'S FORTUNE.

"Judge Baskin tells me that though Brigham Young left over a million, his children are fast going through it. Many of the girls have not turned out well, and in his opinion, none of the children have the ability of their father. I came across a curious fact in connection with Brigham Young the other day, and that is that his children acted in the Salt Lake theater when it first started. The Mormons are not proud of this, and when I asked Mr. Caine about it one day he evaded answering the question.

"Judge Baskin tells me that Utah would be a thousand per cent better off if it had never seen a Mormon. He says the territory contains some of the best land in the United States—land which will produce four hundred or five hundred bushels of potatoes to the acre, and other things in proportion. He says this talk of the Mormons making the desert blossom like the rose has been originated by the Mormons, and there is nothing in it. He says all the land needed was irrigation, and the streams of Utah are such that this could be easily gotten. Irrigation is better than rain, and any other class of Americans would have brought forth better products and a larger population than the Mormons. Had the Mormons kept out of Utah it would now have a thriving Gentile population. Salt Lake City would be larger than Denver, and the territory would be a state filled with some of the most enterprising men of the west.

"I asked Judge Baskin what was to be the future of the Mormons. He replied: "I believe that the Mormons will have Joe Smith's son as the head of their church within five years, and that they will accept his doctrine. This man is now in Illinois, and he teaches Mormonism as it was taught by his father before polygamy and temporal government by the church was mixed up with it. The Mormons of Utah are being converted to this doctrine, and if the government continues to legislate against polygamy, I think they will adopt it. The only thing that keeps the Mormon Church together now in a political way is the desire to uphold polygamy. This being taken away, the management of temporal affairs will pass out of the hands of the church, and it will become like any other religious denomination. Then Utah will grow, and it will take its rank among the western states as one of the most fertile and wealthy among them."

SIGNS OF THE LAST DAYS.

JESUS said:

"And there shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring; men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth: for the powers of heaven shall be shaken. And then shall they see the Son of man coming in a cloud, with power and great glory. And when these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh."—Luke 21: 25-28.

Scientists are occasionally pointing out strange appearances in connection with the sun, moon, and stars. Here is one in respect to the stars:

THE NOVEL APPEARANCES ON MARS.

"If we are to accept the theory just broached by a French astronomer, M. Maurice Lespiault, on the subject of the novel and unaccountable appearances discovered by Sig. Schiaparelli on the surface of the planet Mars, they read a lesson to ourselves," says the St. James' Gazette. "The discoverer took them for canals; but M. Lespiault refuses to believe in canals a thousand miles long and fifty broad in Mars or any other planet. The mathematical regularity of the outlines forbids us regarding them as natural phenomena, however; and his conjecture is that they are vast strips of forest created to remedy the inconveniences to which the people of the planet found themselves exposed after having denuded the surface of their globe of the provision made by nature for their defense against the fury of the elements, as we are on the high road to doing ourselves."

Whether the above astronomer be correct or wild in his theory, the fact remains, that peculiar and phenomenal conditions are seen in the planet Mars. Jesus foresaw that the planetary world would take on such conditions in the times prior to his second advent, and he gives them as "signs." All persons professing the Christian name should be instructed and comforted by these harbingers of the Bridegroom's coming.

THERE are a few Latter Day Saints in the Reorganized Church who are inclined to believe that the absolute prohibition of the sale of intoxicants is a bad thing, for reasons which seem to be good to them. During the strikes, broils and riots in St. Louis, Chicago and elsewhere this last spring, the following appeared in the Chicago Tribune, was read by many and has passed out of mind—it is full of significance, and we commend it to the careful perusal and consideration of those of our readers who are opposed to prohibition.

One of our reasons for thus commending it to our readers is that we are persuaded that however innocent a drink of beer may be, there is an expenditure of time and loss of muscle in haunting the places where it is sold and in drinking it that should appall the man of common brain and heart who stops to think of it.

Laboring men who are constant tipplers when disease and disaster overtake them, ought to have the decency to lay the charge at the door of the proper cause, instead of charging it upon the thrift and increase of the industrious and sober man and his methods,—read, read:

"THE ROOT OF THE EVIL.

"When a committee of the International Beer Brewers' and Malsters' Union, No. 1, of Chicago, called on the brewers last Saturday and submitted the terms upon which a strike might be averted for the time being, one provision was that 'every employe should have his free beer daily.' The brewers did not agree to this, but substituted an amendment to the effect that 'times for beer shall be 6, 9, 11, 2, and 4 o'clock, not to exceed three glasses at a time, or fifteen glasses during the hours of labor. How much free beer the men have consumed heretofore is not stated, but the Philadelphia Times says this in regard to the same matter among the brewers of that city:

"What," was asked of a prominent beer-brewer yesterday, 'is the meaning of the 'one hour daily in the tap room' to which the brewery employes are to confine themselves under the agreement last week with the master brewers?"

"It means that two hours only shall be allowed during each day for visiting the tap-room for beer and for meals. In all the large breweries there is a room to which the men are permitted to go for beer and drink as much and as often as they please without charge. Before this agreement was made the men could go to this tap-room when they pleased and as often as they pleased, without limit, and the result was an enormous waste of time, as many, if not most of them, would work a few minutes, then go for their beer, go back to work, go back to beer, and keep it up so all day, taking frequently a third of their day in going and coming from the tap-room. Now the time thus taken from their work is to be watched, and if it exceeds the agreed upon two hours the men's wages will be doctored accordingly."

"The quantity of beer they drink must be very large," was remarked.

"Enormous," was the answer. "Then, too, the drivers are apt to do an enormous amount of drinking. It is their business to put the beer in the cellars of customers, in the ice-box, or wherever required, and naturally, the customer asks the driver to take a drink or a cigar. The driver generally takes a drink and that generally whisky. He can get all the beer he wants in the brewery, but no whisky. Therefore when on his route he prefers the harder stuff. Drunkenness is therefore far more prevalent among the drivers than among the inside men. A good many drivers habitually return to the breweries soaked, and once in a while one of them falls off his wagon, sometimes with a load on, and the first that we know of it is by the police informing us that the team is standing on the street, and that the man is either in the station-house or the hospital."

"So much for the Philadelphia practice. The members of the Chicago Maltsters' Union are nearly all red-flag Communists, who may accept the fifteen drinks a day or they may not. If they accept, it will be to receive daily what is evidently considered the minimum supply of beer for men doing their work. They will get but a beggarly fifteen glasses each during the working hours. For the remainder of the arid day their lips must remain parched and their tongues must cleave to the roofs of their mouths unless they pay for the beer. It must be borne in mind, though, that the fifteen glasses alluded to are generous ones. In breweries the glasses used are of the 'schoner' pattern, and in breweries there is no palming off upon consumers belonging to the craft glasses of alleged beer made up one-half of froth. About three of these brewery glasses, it may be estimated, will make a full quart, and so the hands it is proposed to limit in their consumption during working hours will get, at most, only a gallon and a quart apiece each day. This beer, obtained at a saloon, would cost them 75 cents each. Of course it is not to be presumed that the Communist who drinks fifteen glasses of free beer within ten working hours will do without the beverage for the remaining fourteen hours of the day. He will still have on his hands six evening hours, aside from those devoted to sleep, and in these six hours spent in saloons and theatres he will drink, at a very moderate average, six glasses more, which will cost him 30 cents. Were he compelled to pay for all his beer, as men outside of breweries are, the cost would be $1.05 a day, or $6.30 a week. The average Socialist, so far as the records go, appears as thirsty as the brewery Socialist. In fact, the average 'Knight' of any occupation must be thirsty, in Chicago, for statistics stand out glaring with the deduction. Figures compiled with greatest care, say that, in this city, the sum of over $100,000 daily is spent on beer and other drinks and on tobacco. The tobacco is a heavy tax, but far less heavy than the drinks. Of this enormous sum of over $36,000,000 yearly two-thirds is probably expended by the workingmen—over $66,000 daily, over $24,000,000 annually! Three-fourths of this, it may be fairly judged, goes for whisky, beer, and other drinks consumed. Fifty cents a day for only 100,000 workingmen would make $50,000 daily. Make another computation. To the huge sum expended on whisky, beer, and tobacco, add the cost of halls, the expense of lodges and of unions, of meetings and processions, of 'walking delegates' and labor agitators, and what will be the total! Put this enormous sum into the pockets of the workingmen, whence it all came, and put there also the many millions yearly supporting the expense of strikes, and is not the root of the present labor troubles found?"

BRO. BROWN, of the Expositor, is a little inclined to be facetious at our expense. In the July number of his paper he says:

"Under the head of 'Communications,' in the June 5th number of the Saints' Herald, a standing notice that 'articles under this head do not necessarily receive the indorsement of the editor,' is followed by 'Sermon by President Joseph Smith.' The Herald would not have us understand that the 'Editor does not necessarily endorse his own sermon,' would it? By the way, we like the sermon first rate, and in view of the modesty shown above, we endorse it, and commend it to the careful consideration of all the Saints, and say give us some more of the same sort."

Had Bro. Brown quoted the rest of the heading to our communication column there would have been no place for the laugh, "writers are responsible for their own views." This holds good against sermonizers, as against writers. The HERALD as a church organ is no more responsible for a sermon by President Smith than for other Elders—the matter in all must stand upon its own merit.

A SAN FRANCISCO, California, Chronicle for June 21st, has the following notice of Bro. Heman C. Smith.

"THE 'CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST.'

"ANTI-POLYGAMOUS BELIEVERS IN THE BOOK OF MORMON.

"Heman C. Smith, a missionary of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, from Lamoni, Iowa, preached in Drew's Hall last night on 'What I know about Mormonism.' The doctrines which the missionary preached are founded upon the teachings in the Book of Mormon as originally written, according to the revelations claimed to have been made to Joseph Smith. Unlike the Utah Mormons, the followers of the Church of Jesus Christ are not polygamists. They, of course, believe, however, in the doctrine of continued revelations. The evangelist read a number of quotations from the Book of Mormon and the Book of Covenants, last night, to show that the true doctrines as revealed by Joseph Smith are not responsible for the abominations practiced by the men of Utah. 'The book declares,' said the preacher, 'Thou shalt not kill, and he who kills shall not be forgiven in this life, nor in the life to come.' If the followers of the faith believe thus, can the doctrine of continued revelations be said to be responsible for the Mountain Meadow massacre? I do not say who is responsible for that affair; I do not know. But our doctrines are not responsible for it. Again, the book says, 'Thou shalt not steal, and he who steals shall be cast out.' Can the doctrine of continued revelations be said then to be responsible for theft? In the Book of Mormon we read, 'Thou shalt love thy wife with thy whole heart, and shalt cleave unto her and none else.' And, again, the book says, 'Thou shalt have but one wife, and of concubines none.' Can the doctrine of continued revelations be said to be responsible then for polygamy? That doctrine did not lead to polygamy, but it was different influences which were brought to bear that did it. I have met men who have said to me: 'I would not preach the doctrines contained in those books.' Why, I ask? Because those men in the mountains have practiced abominations, should we cast off the whole system? We would do so if the doctrine is responsible for the abomination. But that has not and will not be shown. Men have stood on the platform on which I now stand, and after stepping down have practiced abominations and transgressed the laws of God and of the land. And because they have done these things are we to be asked to stop preaching and also to step down? I know as a fact that where men have espoused our doctrines they have become better, and those who have said that they had espoused them, and have not become better, are hypocrites. Do not condemn the creed and the Church on account of the acts of certain men, but read and judge for yourselves. As a church, we desire to be called the Church of Jesus Christ. Our teachings from the Book of Mormon may as well be called Mormonism, as teachings from the Bible may be Biblicism."

"Mr. Smith will preach at the same place next Sunday evening."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

THE Board of Publication has secured the services of Sr. M. Walker, of Lamoni, to take charge of the editing of the Hope; and it will be conducted by her, Sunday School lesson leaves and all, until other arrangements are made. Sr. Walker is a Sunday School worker, a teacher of some experience, a mother and lover of children, and anxious to see the cause flourish.

Elder Heman C. Smith's address is No. 1801, Polk Street, San Francisco, California.

Bro. F. C. Warnkey baptized two at Independence, Missouri, June 27th, and Bro. Luff one at the same place a few days before that. Bro. W. J. Smith, one at Armstrong, Kansas, June 30th, and Bro. Luff one at Independence, July 4th.

Bro. E. L. Kelley wrote us from Scranton, Pa., the 2d inst. He says Brn. Davis and Peak are engaged in missionary efforts in that region, but that present indications for success are not very flattering. Bro. Kelley will render such aid to that district as he can, and we hope he may reap as we once did in that field, for at that time there were many gathered to the church at Hyde Park, Continental, Pittston, Plymouth, Danville, Shenandoah City, St. Clair, Pottsville, Philadelphia, etc. May God revive his work mightily in all that region, and greatly bless his "fishers" and "hunters" for Israel.

Bro. George E. Harrington, wife and two children, of Armstrong, Kansas, spent a few days, including the Fourth, with Bro. Wm. Crick and family of this place. He is pleased with Lamoni and its people.

Bro. Thomas R. Allen, now residing at North Alton, Illinois, asks that the Saints pray for them, as they are full of sorrow and grief.

A certain sister writes us that herself and other sisters in the same locality have to suffer opposition and ridicule from their unbelieving husbands. We pity such wives. May heaven help them.

Bro. E. A. Steadman, of Lake Crystal, Minnesota, made his first effort in the ministry in Dodge County, Minnesota, where he had good audiences, and good liberty for beginning.

And now comes the Rev. Clark Braden, Minister of the Christian Church, and files his bill in the United States court against Leonard L. Luse for damages received and endured by the said Clark Braden, in a matter originating in and growing out of a debate on Mormonism with one Elder E. L. Kelley, in which debate said Braden sustained loss of money, reputation and feelings to the amount of $20,000. From the Wilber Nebraska Opposition, for June 24th, which quotes from the Omaha Herald, date not known.

Letter from Sr. Fidelia Calhoun, Cortland, Dekalb County, Illinois, June 28th, informs us that Bro. W. E. Cherry, on June 27th, preached a most excellent sermon to the branch, of which he is president, upon the subject: "Our duty to God." The effort was Bro. Cherry's first one and was well received.

Bro. Omer G. Lytle, who has lately located at Neil, Dundy County, Nebraska, writes us that he hopes a capable efficient minister may visit them and preach for the people.

Bro. George Montague, whose letter appears in the letter department writes us that his address for the present will be Soldier, Monona County, Iowa.

Bro. George S. Hyde emphasizes his advent into Temple, Texas, by an article a column and a half long in the Temple Times, published at Temple, Bell County, Texas, in its issue for July 3d, the receipt of which copy we thankfully acknowledge. May Bro. Hyde's "shadow never grow less."

Bro. W. W. Blair will spend a few weeks preaching in Western Iowa, dating from the 9th instant.

A COPY of the Weekly News Democrat, Belleville, Illinois, July 2d, is sent us, we presume by Bro. J. E. Betts, from which we cull the following:

"MORMON LITERATURE.

"Elder J. E. Betts, of the Mormon Church, has recently donated three books to the Belleville public library, and more than a passing notice should be given of the fact.

"Mr. Betts, who lives in the West End, has charge of a congregation which believes in the doctrines of Mormonism, but is entirely opposed to polygamy, and claims that such a doctrine is not taught by the 'Book of Mormon' or consistent with the spirit of the truths as proclaimed by the conservative element of the church of the Latter Day Saints.

"The volumes presented to the library are worthy of examination, inasmuch as that while the general public have opinions about Mormonism, very few people have a conception of either its history or doctrines taught, and Mr. Betts' donation to the library will enable those who may be curious or willing to inform themselves on matters relative to its origin, development and doctrines, to do so by reading the books now placed therein for their perusal.

"The most important of the volumes is the Book of Mormon, which the title-page says, was translated by Joseph Smith, Jr., and which, it is claimed, was written by the hand of Mormon as inscribed on the plates of Nephi. Attached to the manuscript as first shown to the early disciples of the church are the signatures of eight witnesses, who certify to having seen the original plates said to be discovered by Joseph Smith, who is supposed to have had a revelation as to where they were secreted.

"The construction of the books, some sixteen in number, are ingenious, and present a strange mingling of the mysterious with the plausible, calculated to impress such as are willing to accept the theory of divine revelation in modern times. It should, however, be borne in mind that well-substantiated claims are made that the entire work was written by a Presbyterian preacher of the name of Spaulding, after he had retired from the ministry, and that his original copy was stolen. For further information the student of this subject should consult the American Cyclopaedia.

"The Life of Joseph Smith, the Prophet, written by Edward Tullidge, and published by the publication board of Latter Day Saints, is the second of the volumes presented, and is well worth reading. It contains a full biography of the 'prophet' and a detailed history of the inception and early development of the church, with its vicissitudes, and some romantic episodes, which really form a part of American history.

"The third volume is entitled 'Doctrines and Covenants,' a series of lectures on faith, and the commandments.

"The fact that this church, since its existence of about fifty years, should have secured a membership of 250,000, is in itself a marvel, and to those who have leisure the subject is really an interesting one to study."

WHEN MESSRS. MOODY and SANKY were opening their revival campaign in England in the place where the justly celebrated Rev. Spurgeon was located and preaching, he refused to lend them any aid, or countenance, much to the chagrin and discomfort of his friends and congregation. The reason assigned by him for refusing was that he had no confidence in their revival methods. At the expiration of a year from the closing of Mr. Moody's services, Mr. Spurgeon, referring to the matter, called the attention of the people to the fact of his opposition to the revival, and then challenged them to point to the disciples resulting to the church from the effort of Mr. Moody the year before: "Where are the disciples made from the conversions then had?"

His congregation were startled by his question, and upon further reflection admitted that their pastor had some reason for his opposition to popular revival methods.

And now come reverends Goodwin, Davis and Lawrence, of Chicago, and file a report of a similar condition of things following the late wonderful revival of Messrs. Sam Jones and Sam Small. An editorial in the Chicago Tribune, of July 7th is given below:

THE SOUTHERN EVANGELISTS.

When Sam Jones left Chicago there were a number of projects looking to his return next fall. The most important was that of the West Side pastors, who held a general meeting and went so far as to select the Boulevard Skating Rink as the proper place for holding a series of meetings rivaling those at the Casino Rink, on Twenty-fourth street, under the auspices of the South Side preachers. A committee was selected which was empowered to call the West Side divines together in case it was thought advisable to call Mr. Jones back to the city, and also to have general supervision of the preliminary arrangements. This committee consisted, among others, of Dr. Goodwin, Dr. Davis, and Dr. Lawrence. Since the departure of the Georgia revivalist the preachers have apparently changed their opinions of his work as they have observed the permanent results in their respective charges, for at a recent meeting of the committee a resolution reading that the members did not "see their way clear to suggest any action in the premises" was adopted. This practically ends the matter, as it was understood when the committee was appointed that its decision would be final.

One of the causes leading to this result was the course pursued by the two Sams regarding tobacco, or, in the words of a member of the committee: "No one asked them to stop the use of tobacco. They did so of their own free will, but after all they said here they ought to have held out, and their course, to put it in the mildest way, was decidedly objectionable. Besides, on close examination of the church rolls, I do not see any great beneficial results to the church resulting from their work."

DRUGS UNNECESSARY.

THE celebrated Dr. Gregory declares that "more than ninety-nine parts in a hundred of all that has been written on the theory and practice of medicine for more than one thousand years is absolutely useless and worthy to be known but as a matter of curiosity, or a miserable warning and example of the worst errors to which we are prone." Authorities might be multiplied as to the mischief of medicine, and those physicians are wisest who use it least, and make physic "the art of amusing the patient, while nature cures the disease." The celebrated Sydenham is reported to have said, when on his death-bed, and surrounded by physicians who were lamenting his loss to the world: "Never mind; I leave three good physicians behind me." They crowded over him with eager looks, each hoping his name would be pronounced. He remained for some time silent, then said: "Yes, I shall leave three very good physicians—air, exercise, and diet."

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY SISTER "FRANCES."

"The healing of his seamless dress
Is by our beds of pain;
We touch him in life's throng and press,
And we are whole again.
Through him the first fond prayers are said
Our lips of childhood frame,
The last low whispers of our dead
Are burdened with his name."

A THOUGHT FOR MOTHERS.

Only a tired woman, pausing when day was done,
To think of the many duties which, from dawn till set of sun,
Had filled up the flying moments, taxing the hand and heart,—
Hand and heart which so simply and bravely had done their part.

Above, in the quiet chambers, five little sleepers lay,
Whose needs and joys and sorrows had filled up all her day;
Little wants had been tended, little griefs made light,
Little rights defended, and little wrongs set right.

Crowding one on another, the constant claims had pressed,
Till, musing now in the twilight, a thought, but half confessed, Arose and stirred in her spirit—"Everything seems so small;

I had meant to do so much for the Master; surely this can not be all!"

When, in the deepening twilight, fragrant with evening balms,
Over her drooping eyelids sleep laid caressing palms,
Into the land of shadows her spirit wandered free,—
Land where sometimes earth's children meet heavenly ministry.

The sound of low, questioning voices fell first on her spirit-ear,
Then a pause of hushed expectation, and following, soft and clear,
The silvery tinkle of water, as from a vessel poured;
And then, through a breathless rapture, floated the voice of the Lord, Falling in tender cadence, "Know ye what I have done?

Among you as he that serveth am I, the beloved Son.
Not being ministered unto lifts to the highest estate,
But in rendering lowliest service souls grow divinely great."

Slowly her eyelids lifted; the twilight had deepened to night,
But the thought that had dimmed her spirit had fled before the Light;

She arose, and ever unfaltering, uplifted by His word,
She walked in lowly service, strong in the "joy of the Lord."

The birthday of our nation has passed, but not without due celebration and rejoicing, throughout the land. In Lamoni all passed off quietly and pleasantly. The stand in which the ladies of the Sunday School were interested was a success, but not to such an extent financially as we had hoped, owing probably to the fact that stands were so numerous. Still we do not feel at all like despising the day of small things and return just as sincere thanks to our friends for the generous efforts put forth, as though we had realized dollars in place of pennies. The net profit from the refreshment stand and that obtained by private subscription amounts to nearly $8000. We are not prepared to give exact figures as some bills have not yet been settled. We ourselves feel the great need of the enlargement of the "Hope," but are far from wishing to press others into our views. If the membership of the church do not feel it, it is useless for any one or even dozens of individuals to feel it for them, consequently we shall cease to agitate the subject and quietly rest our faith in God's good time. The harvest is plenteous and surely there is always work for willing hands to do. If the Board of Publication decide adversely to the Hope being enlarged, we will return or transfer such money as has been paid in to us, as the parties interested may direct, using the net proceeds of the refreshment stand for enlarging the Sunday School library.

We are in receipt of letters from Sisters Ettie Gulenbe, H. E. Birchell and Emma W. Simpson. LAMONI, Iowa, July 10th, 1886.

PRIDE.

PRIDE is one of the great evils that is sinking humanity in the pit of sorrow and misery. It is of the world, and the world loves its own with all its pomp and vanity. Every one that is proud in heart is an abomination to the Lord. Proverbs 16: 5. The fear of the Lord is to hate evil, pride and arrogance. Proverbs 8: 16. Then can it be possible it may be found within the walls of the church, even within ourselves? Let each one answer. Entering into covenant with God, did we put off the old man with his deeds, and become new through that spirit the gospel brings, which is antagonism to the spirit of the world; therefore can not be in the enjoyment of both at the same time, for no one can serve two masters? The result of pride is seen in various ways to the close observer, in almost every occupation and condition in life, more or less; with the servant as well as her mistress; the daughter as well as the mother; often times in costly, fashionable apparel. See D. C., page 125. "And again: Thou shalt not be proud in thy heart; let all thy garments be plain, and their beauty the beauty of the work of thy own hands." Here can be learned two great lessons, plainness and industry, which accord with other commandments. Read also the word of the Lord through Jacob to the people of Nephi, Book of Mormon, page 115. A proud haughty spirit may be seen in poor attire. We sometimes look upon the qualifications and gifts of others as far more desirable than our own, and are led to say, If I could do so and so as well as A. or B., I would gladly do it. I well remember making the same remark and feeling condemned while yet speaking. I entered into a careful consideration, and after a calm meditation could arrive at no other conclusion but the root was pride, vanity of the flesh. Are we ashamed of the one talent and want to hide it in the earth? It is a gift from God, whatever it may be, and will certainly become more polished by using, and is as needful as those to whom are given five or ten, for where much is given much will be required. The Lord created all mankind, Jew and Gentile, bond and free. He is no respecter of persons inasmuch as they fear him and keep his commandments. It mattereth not whether they were born at the earth's extremities, or the equator, in a stately mansion or a humble cot, in riches or poverty; all are alike to Him. What an exalted character of justice and love; How worthy of the closest imitation!

Turn your eyes and look in the manger at Bethlehem and behold Mary with her sweet babe. Could not even have room in an inn. There was no pride there. No; a spark of heavenly love more precious than diamonds filled her bosom; and the tranquillity of mind, through the knowledge that a Savior was born, softened the rocks and made them a bed of ease. Let us trace the infant's footsteps until he was nailed to the cross. All along his pathway thorns and thistles were strewn, and the agony of his soul, caused through the sins of the world, often led him to weep. Tribulation and temptation were pressed to the uttermost; scorn and contempt surrounded him on every hand, and to his followers he said, "The foxes have holes, the birds of the air have nests, but the Son of Man hath no where to lay his head." Pride, bow down thy head with shame; think, Oh! Think of the humility of the Master's "I seek not to do my own will, but the will of the Father which hath sent me;" the simplicity and submission of these few words; the humble condition of his life; his purity of heart and purpose; his sufferings and death, that the world through him might have everlasting life. Mothers may mourn for the wrongs of their children, but their knowledge being so limited, they can not feel the depth of sorrow our Savior felt, who was one with the Father, knew the joys prepared for the righteous in the mansions above, and being filled with compassion which passeth all understanding, was willing to take upon himself our nature, setting us an example that we might follow in his footsteps. Take courage, examine yourselves, strive to faithfully eradicate all pride in whatsoever form it may be found, and blessings will be realized in this life and that which is to come. If we do not, shall we stand guiltless at the judgment day? O, pride, thou poisonous monster! thou wilt canker the very soul, if permitted to take deep root. Would thou couldst be cast into the lowermost pit from whence thou camest, bound with chains which could not be broken; having no more power over the hearts of the fair daughters of earth!

TROY, Illinois.

Dear Sister Frances:—I have often thought I would like to write to the "Home Column," but felt my inability to write anything of interest; but you have so kindly urged us to make the effort and leave the result with God, that I will try and write a few thoughts. The "Mothers' Home Column" has been a great comfort to me, and like Sister Fay, when I begin to read it I can not stop till the last word is read. I feel very thankful that we have a place in the Herald that we can make known our desires; and I can not help thinking, O that we had had such words of cheer and comfort in the years that are past and gone. I feel, dear Sister Frances, to bid you God speed in your noble work and I pray that the Lord will raise up many such earnest workers. I have often thought that we did not realize the great responsibility that rests upon us, and have been content to receive all, and think there was nothing that we could do. I hope that every sister will do all she can to aid you in your labor for the Sunday School. The harvest is large, but the laborers for the young are very few. We need more earnest workers for the young, more books and papers. If we expect our children to love the gospel we must make it attractive to them; let them feel the church needs them. I have been in the church many years, and have heard but one sermon preached for the young, and where they are found attending church and Sunday School it is the exception, not the rule. Too many of them are careless and indifferent. What is wanted is a greater effort on our part to gather the lambs that they may not wander. Look at the different churches, how they labor to keep the young interested. The best talent they have is employed in the Sunday School.

Dear sisters, if five hundred dollars is needed let us go to work with a will, and be determined that it shall be forthcoming. We can all make some sacrifice, and by a united effort it can be raised very easily. O, that we could all say with Frances Havergal:

"Take my lips and let them be Filled with messages from thee;
Take my silver and my gold,
Not a mite would I withhold."

I fear I have said too much for the first time. I pray that the Lord will help us to labor for the good of each other, and for the spread of his glorious gospel.

MRS. JOSEPH MANTLE.

WE HAVE A WORK TO DO.

WE often hear the complaint that if it was not for misfortune, bad luck, and so forth, that many who are now useless in this world would advance in life; as if we were the victims of chance, and helpless waifs of destiny. We are all in a certain degree the artificers of our own fortunes, whatever may be their character. We can enjoy ourselves and make others happy, or entail misery upon ourselves and those that are around us. We all have a work to do for the good Master, for he does not wish any idle hands in his vineyard, and if we do not put forth our energies, but allow them to lie dormant, we will sink into poverty and obscurity. If a man be intemperate he will suffer disease, while the temperate man enjoys health; if he be vicious he will undergo the pains and penalties of his misdeeds; while the man of integrity experiences the pleasures of liberty and a clear conscience. One may be intemperate, another indolent, another dishonest; but the will in either case is sufficiently powerful, if put into exercise, to impel to a different course of conduct, leading to entirely different results. We are all endowed with a knowledge of what is right and wrong, by which to direct our desires and inclinations, and with a will by which they may be controlled and kept within bounds. If people were truly impressed with the belief of their abilities and responsibilities, there would be far less complaining on the score of ill luck, poverty and unhappiness. Instead then, of relapsing into helplessness, and waiting for Providence to come to their rescue, or for "something to turn up" for their benefit, many would be led to put faith in God and put forth their own energies and cultivate the talents the Creator has given them.

Boys can not become the slaves of tobacco and strong drink and be free and independent men. The Creator placed them upon this earth for a different purpose than to spend their time drinking, chewing, gambling, etc. It is a mistaken idea, boys, that you can not be men unless you are addicted to those habits. The men that are slaves to these vile habits will tell you that they are a hindrance instead of a help to manhood. Here is what one young man says on the subject: "I feel that some of the best years of my life have been wasted. I thought when I was a boy that being a man was to learn to smoke and drink; and unknown to my parents I acquired these habits, which soon took strong hold of me. I tell you that smoking and drinking never made a man, but have made many fools among men."

If you give to a healthy young man, who has never drank either fermented or distilled liquors, a glass of beer, wine, or whisky, it will make him more or less dizzy, and perhaps give him the headache. If you persuade one who has never smoked to try a cigar it will probably nauseate him, and for a time make him sick. Now what is the conclusion from these facts? Simply that tobacco and liquors are in their nature medicinal; are, in brief, drugs; and that at least while the body is growing, while it has a superabundance of vital force, it does not need tobacco, wine, tea or coffee to keep it in health or well being. What a terrible responsibility then rests on us mothers when we allow our children to drink tea and coffee before the little ones would think of asking for it; tempting the little ones to sip it out of our cups. Mothers stop and consider if you are not doing wrong in this matter. We have no language vigorous enough with which to denounce the infamous traffic in intoxicating beverages, in this civilized and enlightened age. We see from Bro. T. W. Smith's letter that this serpent has found it way to "isles of the sea" to do its deadly work. No words in human speech are adequate to depict the burning shame of official authorities that license their sale, and of the vast multitudes of persons of both sexes and all classes who boldly persist in the sin of drunkenness. He who is the architect of his own good fortune, character and destiny, is always a man that amounts to something; and if we examine we will find that ninety-nine out of every hundred of such men begun life without any other aid than sound physical, moral and intellectual constitution, and have been through almost all the phases of life, tasting poverty, struggling with disappointments, living in obscurity, and undergoing all the kicks and cuffs of "outrageous fortune; and finally, by the development of their inherent energies in such a rough, hard school, rising triumphantly over all obstacles at last. Such ones, my boys, were not drunkards, nor tobacco users. Give your child a sound education in book learning, and morality, and then he will commence life with a greater wealth than a Rothchild or a Vanderbilt.

MRS. DANIEL JONES.

DECEIVE NOT YOURSELVES.

WHEN the midnight cry shall sound; oh foolish self to have written thus, for was not the cry sent forth in 1831? "Prepare ye, prepare ye, O my people; sanctify yourselves. Awake, arise, and go forth to meet the bridegroom." And there cometh a voice as of one crying in the wilderness saying, Hear ye, O my people and repent! As a father goeth out for the wandering children of his household, so also have I looked with compassion upon thee, and mine arm is stretched out; yea, by the power of mine arm will I deliver thee, that thou mayest know thy God; therefore return from the husks where on thou feedest, for behold thy substance is consumed upon thy lusts. O thou who hast borne my chastening hand, look! lift up thine eyes and behold thy king; ye whom I have digged from the rocks and holes, and have carried forth from among the nations return, put from off thee the yoke of thy captivity, where unto thou hast sold thyself!

O ye prodigal of my people, remember ye how I begat thee and brought thee forth from obscurity; how long have I looked in mercy upon thee, and plead with thee that I might gather in my bosom and bless thee, O house of Israel. Return that I may prepare a feast, and bind upon thee the goodly garments of my kingdom. Put away thine abominations from before my face, and come thou low in the dust that I may pour out my spirit upon thee. Behold whom servest thou? Why come ye to my house with mincing steps, with hearts upon thine idols, and eyes lifted up to the praise of the heathen; behold mine eyes are upon thee, I am in your midst and ye know me not from the hardness of your hearts, and see me not from the blindness of your eyes, but behold the day cometh when the meek shall rejoice, and the lowly shall be exalted and they shall dwell in safety and my peace shall be their reward, for I am a wall of defense to the righteous forever

Correspondence.

VORIS, Mo., April.

Dear Brother Joseph:—While reading your comments and reply to L. O. Littlefield's last effort, my whole soul went out in sympathy for you in your trying position. You stand as a mark, at which all opponents of truth exercise their skill. It is true that the Reorganization, as a whole, have to receive some of the shot; but you are made the central object, as your father was before you, and I presume it will always remain so until the Master shall come himself and put all enemies under his feet. I pray that you may ever be shielded with the breastplate of faith, that all the shafts of the enemy may be turned harmless away.

It appears to me now strange, that men who have from their youth up been acquainted with the history and usages of the church in its earlier years, should be so blind as to allow a pretended or real revelation to carry them with it without its first passing the thorough scrutiny of the quorums of the church assembled for the purpose; and especially one that purports to be of such vital importance in the salvation, exaltation, and eternal lives of those to whom it assumes to have been sent. I refer now especially to the revelation on polygamy. I am now satisfied that if it had been so presented it would have run against so many snags, the bottom would have been knocked clean out, and it would have sunk to rise no more. But instead of such a course, it was forced upon the people, with the declaration that they must receive it, or be damned.

So far as the affidavits produced are concerned, to me they amount to nothing. More especially from those who have entered its meshes; as I well remember the time when it was taught that there was no harm in lying about it, to deceive the Gentiles. And in support of the theory, the quotation was made claiming in the King James' translation to be the words of the Apostle Paul: "For if the truth of God hath more abounded through my lie, unto his glory; why yet am I also judged as a sinner."—Rom. 3: 7.

The above is fully established by the strenuous assertions of denial of the existence of polygamy in Utah by John Taylor, in France, in 1850. The endeavor so strenuously made to fasten the authorship of that infernal revelation upon Joseph the Secr, and it to be swallowed as from God, by men and women, who in their earlier days have certainly been blessed with the powers and spirit of the gospel, and still claim polygamy as an essential principle of their salvation, after its having proved itself, upon its face, one of the greatest of living frauds, is one of the curiosities of the age. It, however, only proves the truth of the words of Jesus:—"If the light that is in you become darkness, how great shall that darkness be."

If it were possible for them, by the strongest proofs of evidence to establish that Joseph did produce the purported revelation upon what is called celestial marriage, and practiced it, such evidence would be its own destruction without further proof; or ought to be in the minds of all honest men and women, from the fact, Joseph Smith was a true prophet of God, as evidenced by the fulfillment of many of his predictions; by the restoration of the true gospel of Christ through him, as proved by the blessings of God confirming its truth as promised, and as enjoyed in former dispensations; and if he, as a prophet, no matter under what influence he produced that bundle of absurdities, he did so presumptuously, and suffered the penalty of his presumption by losing his life within one year after its assumed date of reception, fully establishing the test as given through Moses, and the falsity of the pretended revelation, and therefore we need not be afraid of it. (See Deu. 18: 20-22).

The prophet here referred to, certainly means one who is and has been recognized as a prophet of God; and notwithstanding his presuming that in the name of the Lord, which may have been according to the desires of his own heart, and not that which the Lord had commanded him, it would not invalidate that which he had spoken before, which the Lord had commanded; but for this presumption he must pay the penalty, which is "that prophet shall die."

If then, those in Utah could produce such testimony as would be legally received in a court of law, and prove that Joseph Smith did give that polygamous revelation, can they not see that such a proof would completely overthrow their system, and be one of the strongest evidences of its falsity. But, sir, there is another strong test mentioned in the above reference: "When a prophet speaketh in the name of the Lord, if the thing follow not, nor come to pass, that is the thing which the Lord hath not spoken." That polygamous revelation proves itself doubly false under this rule. I read in that pretended revelation, as published in the Seer, paragraph 21, speaking of Joseph, it says: "I will bless him and multiply him an hundred fold in this life of fathers and mothers, [in-law, O. Pratt], brothers and sisters, houses and lands, wives and children." Par. 23: "Let no one, therefore, set on my servant Joseph, for I will justify him." Par. 19: "Go, therefore, and I will make a way for your escape." Par. 22: "And behold, and lo, I am with him as I was with Abraham thy father." Par. 21. Says of sisters Emma: "But if she will not abide this commandment, she shall be destroyed, saith the Lord. I am the Lord thy God, and will destroy her if she abide not in my law." Here then are five straight forward promises never fulfilled, and never can be, because those made to Joseph were never realized by him in this life, he being murdered in a little over ten months after the promises are said to have been made; and the curse pronounced against sister Emma, if she rejected this plurality business, was never realized by her; but instead, she lived beyond the allotted time of man, in fulfillment of the promise of the Lord to her, as found in Doc. and Cov., sec. 24, par. 1: "If though art faithful, and walk in the paths of virtue before me, I will preserve thy life." There was no requirement to abide any polygamous law in that promise, yet it was fully realized by her, while the other proved false. Therefore, it is not the thing which the Lord hath spoken, it has been spoken presumptuously, and we need not fear any of the damnation threatened in it for noncompliance. I could go through the whole thing, and show up its bundle of lies and absurdities, but any one can detect its foolery if they will only examine the thing for themselves, and compare it with the teachings of the books the Lord has given us for our instruction and learning.

I fully indorse the sentiment contained in the first paragraph of your answer: "The controversy that is being urged between the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints and the church in Utah is of such a nature that neither party can afford to resort to downright lying to foster and care for its own side of the case." No sir; there is no use dodging, if they can prove by legal evidence Joseph presumptuously fathered it, let them do it, and at the same time prove the overthrow of the accursed thing. If Brigham was its parent, as he said it was "revealed to himself and for himself," long before he states that he revealed it himself to Joseph, (See Deseret News, July 1st, 1874), why let him have the honor. And the only reason why he, for this presumption, did not die, must have been this, that neither God nor himself ever recognized him as a prophet to the church; and he was therefore allowed to remain and bring about the fulfillment of the prophecy of Paul to Timothy: "Now the Spirit speaketh expressly, that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils."

Fearing that I trespass too much upon your time and patience, I will withdraw myself, and remain your brother in the full hope of Zion's redemption, and thorough vindication of the honored name of Joseph Smith, the prophet of this the latter day dispensation.

WILLIAM HAWKINS.

AUDUBON, Minn., May 28th.

Bro. Blair:—I promised to let the Saints hear about Bro. Holt's labor done at Frazee City. The seed sown has brought one into the fold, and we are looking for more. Bro. Foss and I held some meetings there first of June, and a good interest is manifested by all. Our conference was a good one. Bro. Foss was down to-day. I could not go, but hope to return about the 8th of July and hold meetings for ten or twelve days, then pass on to our two days' meeting at Silver Lake, with the Silver Lake Branch, Ottertail county, Minnesota. The work up here is in good condition, all trying to do their duty, and the calls for preaching are on the increase. God is confirming his promises, "ye shall find favor in the eyes of the people." Bro. Foss has baptized four since he came up. Yours in the gospel,

H. WAY.

Most Worthy Editors:—In the Herald for the 19th of June, your explanation of that remarkable saying of father Lehi, that "Adam fell that man might be," was to me new and satisfactory. But as the editor said that the text did not establish the nature of the fall, I was pleased to entertain the hope that inspiration may give our worthy editors a comprehensive solution of 2 Nephi 1: 8. Lehi affirms that if they had continued in that state of innocence, they would have had no joy. Bro. "Ruth" will, in that book find that it was not only mother Eve that said that they would not have had children. This subject has long baffled my efforts to reconcile it to my comprehension.

I send you a clipping from the Eclectic Review, which seems to present an aspect of interest and encouragement in the prophetic truth of the Christian hope. If then the Jews as a people do, in the year 1900, fourteen years more, transfer their Sabbath (equivalent to the Mosaic dispensation) to the Christian Sabbath or dispensation, this would be a great acknowledgment. The Savior informed them that they should see him no more and their houses (or country) should be desolate until they honored him. When that acknowledgment shall by their general authority be ratified, then will the Savior's footsteps be approaching, and more ominous signs in the heavens above and in the earth beneath will be seen.

"The Jews are talking about transferring their Sabbath to our Sunday, beginning with the year 1900. The matter is exciting much attention in England."—Philadelphia Ledger.

I also send you a clipping in which we learn of the formation of a committee in Washington City to take steps for the celebration of the four hundredth anniversary of the discovery of America by Columbus. The committee received a hearty assurance by the President of his approval, and the pleasure he would take in it, and that in his next annual message to Congress he would call attention to it. The event will take place in 1892. During these next six years' preparation, the entire civilized world will have ample notice of the celebration. Now, as in America is gathered people from all nations, therefore all nations must feel deep interest in celebrating this great event. Will the intelligent orator, who on that memorable day shall trumpet the eulogy of such discovery, speak of a like previous discovery, and rejoice in the previous occupancy of the country by intelligent and civilized nations? Will not the Saints, in common with the nations, rejoice in the Columbian discovery, with additional rejoicing in their knowledge of whom and from whence the pre-historic nations came, paying them a tribute of respect and love for the ineffable riches they left behind to the nations now living. We may reasonably expect one of the grandest celebrations ever seen on earth. Will the intelligent orator on that memorable occasion ignore the pre-historic discovery of this same land which has made her teeming nations happy? As the Saints will doubtless join in this happy event, will not they, like the guest at the wedding feast, enjoy the best at the last, in remembering fathers Lehi, Nephi, Alma, Jared, Moroni and others.

"THE DISCOVERY OF AMERICA.

WASHINGTON, April 28.—The committee appointed yesterday to wait upon President Cleveland and request his co-operation in securing the commemoration in 1892 of the four hundredth anniversary of the discovery of America by Columbus, reported that the President assured the committee that he felt a deep interest in the matter, and intimated that he would take pleasure in bringing it to the attention of Congress in his next annual message. He did not think Congress at its present session would be able to give the subject the consideration it deserved."

TEMPLE, Texas, July 2d.

Bro. W. W. Blair:—After a journey of about sixty-five miles by rail and on foot, I find rest and refreshment at the home of our esteemed friend, S. B. Adair and his amiable companion who is a member of our church. At this early date I am greeted with the Saints' Herald for July 3d, containing letters from Brn. Derry, Anthony and others. As I read those communications my heart became full to overflowing. I can not tell you of the love that floods my soul. Sufficient to say that it compensates for the afflictions and scorn through which we have to pass as we plod on our way to bear the message of love to our fellowmen. I am so glad Bro. Derry has written what he has concerning the education of our children. I received a letter from my wife to-day from which I venture to copy this extract.—"As I lay the tender forms, the offspring of our union, to rest, my heart goes out in thankfulness to Him who has given me so much to love. We have a family to be proud of. The dear, honest hearted little souls all seem to possess such a noble trait of character in the abhorrence of wickedness in all the forms their young minds comprehend it. Even dear little Charlie has his idea of what is right, and what is not right."

I thank my heavenly Father for the light of his gospel. To this Divine message I owe my all. What would my life have been without it! It seems that I can not be thankful enough for the manifold blessings of God to me and mine. If I can leave to my posterity no other legacy than that of righteousness and the love of God, I deem these to be of more worth to them than the wealth of the Rothchilds or the world combined. The love and joy that thrills my being as I think of the dear little buds of promise is worth more to me than ten thousand worlds like this, and I can truly say,

"Nearer my God, to thee,
Nearer to thee,
E'en though it be a cross
That raiseth me."

O, that all my dear relatives and friends could know the love of God shed abroad in the contrite heart by the Holy Spirit of promise.

May the Lord prosper his work.

Yours,

GEO. S. HYDE.

WHEELERS GROVE, Iowa,

July 2d, 1886.

Bro. Joseph:—We have not denied the faith yet, although the Saints have been tried some what in the last three months on account of the loss of our church. I suppose you have heard it was destroyed in April last, by one of the whirlwinds that Jeremiah says should be considered more perfectly in the latter days. The storm passed across the corner of our farm, but done us no harm. It gave some of the rest of the Saints a close call, but done them no harm. I want to say to the Herald readers that there are a few God fearing, loving Saints at Wheeler's Grove yet, who are trying to keep the commandments of God, and hold fast to that rod of iron that Nephi saw, that will lead them to the tree of life.

Yours,

S. C. SMITH.

BLANDFORD, Ont.

Dear Brothers:—While I renew my subscription for the church papers, I feel to thank God that his church has such able defenders of the truth; and may their luster never grow less, and may God's choicest blessings be with you, and all in connexion with the publishing department. The Herald I could not do without, and it is a mystery to me how so many Latter Day Saints' fail to take the papers.

Your brother in Christ,

JOHN MCKENZIE.

OENAVILLE, Texas, June 27th.

Dear Herald of light, peace, comfort and good will to men. It may be my duty to impart some information with regard to my labors, having just begun a missionary tour in this land where gospel truth has been spread by the noble brethren who have preceded me in the good work. I sought no half-fare permits before coming, as I was informed that none could be obtained. However, at Council Bluffs I purchased a second class ticket to Hearne, Texas, for twenty dollars and eighty-five cents, thus saving nine dollars and thirty cents, which would have been added for first class; but was out a few dollars extra hotel charges, by being sent a round-about way. During my week's stay at Hearne the weather was intensely hot, giving me an unfavorable introduction to the climate; but I found a congenial element in the Saints of the Texas Central Branch. The brethren extended to me the courtesy of presiding over the business meeting, Saturday afternoon, and I felt that God was with me. Bro. John W. Wallace was chosen Teacher by the branch and ordained to that office. Bro. Nunley was confined, having been previously baptized by Bro. S. R. Hay, and the branch voted to recommend his ordination to Eldership to the conference which convened at Cook's Point, Burseson county, on the 16th and 20th. Arriving at the home of Bro. Wm. Sherrill on the evening before conference, after a journey of about twenty-three miles, the joys and sorrows of which were shared by several of the brothers and sisters from Hearne, we were greeted by Saints from different parts of the mission, and a better unity is seldom manifested than characterized the sessions of our conference. The Lord was with us, and our hearts were comforted. On Saturday night there was a splendid rain fall, which was very much needed. Now the prospect for corn and cotton, the chief articles of production in this state, is good everywhere that I have been. Bro. John Currie and myself held three meetings in Temple, at private dwellings, with fair results. One lady residing there came out with others from that place, and was baptized to-day at the close of our preaching service. The Lord is with us in our ministry, and we shall strive to extol his excellent name. Encouraging news from home inspires me with hope and courage to press onward as wisdom from above shall direct. I feel at home with the gospel harness on.

As ever yours,

GEO. S. HYDE.

SCRANTON, Miss., June 30th.

Bro. Joseph:—It has been several months since I wrote to you, during this time I have been trying to discharge the responsibility resting upon me as a missionary, presiding elder and Bishop's Agent, at the same time burdened with temporal cares.

I have received calls for preaching from many places which I can not attend too, as my hands are tied and the good Bishop is unable at present to materially unloose them. Pray for me, my dear brethren, that I may bear up under all my trials and patiently and faithfully serve the God we love.

The Herald is a great comfort to me, its mission is a glorious and good one. I believe that the "Mothers' Home Column," is doing much good. I think I can read many signs that portend good to us as a people; surely God will bless his church.

The Saints in this district are striving to keep the faith, though there are some exceptions. The general desire is to become pure in heart. The times are very hard and many of the Saints are struggling with poverty. This is said by some to be a good poor man's country, and it certainly seems to be difficult down here for a poor man to get better off. Saints in the "regions round about," be thankful for your pleasant surroundings, your rich soil and invigorating climate, and best of all your church and school privileges. Outside of the cities down here, the education of the children is neglected. The country is but thinly settled, the land poor, the money raised by taxes for school purposes is therefore necessarily small. Free schools are let out for three and four months in the year, but on account of scarcity of funds and sometimes partially with neglect of patrons and trustees some districts go two or three years without a school. There are counties down in this coast region where seventy-five per cent of the people can not read or write.

A loose sentiment prevails, more or less, among the people with regards to the social relations, and officers of the law neglect to do their duty. Constant pilfering upon the public domain, the cutting of timber off from government lands has lowered, or keeps down the moral standing of whole communities; one wrong act leading to others; thus sometimes trespasses upon the public domain do not confine their operations to the property of Uncle Sam. In communities where such things are winked at, the wise distinction between right and wrong is lost sight of, the moral sense is blunted and the tendency is not towards purity of thought or nobility of action.

All of these and others have hindered the progress of the work in this part of the mission. Several good starts have been made by different missionaries as well as local brethren, but the influences, the surroundings have been unfavorable. An impulsive and emotional people will start out well, but they are very apt when the missionaries and Elder who have aroused their feelings and emotions, are gone, to relapse into a state of lifelessness, and feel sensibly the influences that surround them. This is true of any locality, but the tendency in this direction is stronger in all southern climes. I do not say that such relapses are inevitable. I believe that even here under discouraging circumstances, with the blessing of God the work could have gone, can and will go forward. I only state the facts as I have found them. Brother Lambert said to me after I had been chosen president of the Florida District: "It will require a great deal of faith to labor here." Yes, that is it. "All things are possible to them that believe."

In view of these facts, is it to be wondered at that some of the Saints should look with longing eyes towards a better land, of which they have heard and sometimes sing.

The timber which has been the means of support to many in the past is about gone. The land is very poor and markets not good; provisions that must be bought are high, cattle compelled to graze upon unnutritious grasses, are small; from a dozen cows generally but a bucket of milk is obtained; but little attention is given them in the winter, and many of them starve to death, or die in the bogs where they have been vainly searching after something green, not having strength enough remaining in their attenuated forms to extract themselves from the mire. This is the dark side to the picture; but it is the view that presents itself to most of the Saints in the Gulf region.

As you go farther up in the states towards the north, the scene changes; the inhabitants are more of an agricultural people and better off, but they are a people of strong prejudices, and in new localities up there the work meets with great opposition—the missionaries must often make new openings with danger to their lives.

Notwithstanding all these discouraging circumstances, I believe a great work will yet be done in the South, and the power of God will be greatly manifested during its accomplishment.

I have been anxiously looking forward to the organizing of the company talked of by you in the Herald. (I believe you said one brother had $5,000 he was willing to put in to it), the object of which is to be the locating of brethren upon lands in the "regions round about." It would be a noble undertaking and those engaged in it would be blessed because "they would bless others who are of the household of faith."

Trusting in God and loving the work, I remain your brother in Christ.

FRANK P. SCARCLIFF

SOLDIER, Iowa, July 5th.

Dear Herald:—I wish to say to the Saints of the South-Eastern Mission that circumstances rendered it necessary that I should return home for a short time; and that, on arriving home I was taken sick and have not been able to write or do any labor. As soon as my health will permit, I expect to return to the field. My present address is Soldier, Monona county, Iowa. May God bless the faithful Saints, I pray.

Desiring to be remembered, I remain, yours in bonds,
GEO. MONTAGUE.

TIPTON, Iowa, June 28th.

Dear Herald:—Crows and daws, jays and cracaws, with all the rest of the tribe, from linnets to vulture have piped, whistled, sang, and screamed their various notes and calls among the cedars of this (Cedar) county for years without the power to charm. Till the sweet, inspired, soulful melody of the "speckled bird" broke the spell of discordant nightmare that long enthralled us, awakening glad answering songs from the hearts of Zion's few, who wear the "purple" beneath the guise of fustian (the world calls poverty) and recognize the overture notes of the glad gospel song, whose full text and volume will ring triumphant, long and joyously through the Royal Garden when the "glorious work is done."

The Friday following the Buffalo Conference, brethren Wm. T. Bozarth and J. S. Roth arrived at Bro. L. P. Russell's house, near Bennett; a church was secured; (Wesleyan Methodist); preaching announced for Sabbath at ten o'clock, and the evening also. The morning service was fairly attended considering it was Children's Day, and most other churches had made preparations for special services. The M. E. pastor, Bro. McCormack, took particular pains to advise his congregation to remain away, and not encourage the Mormons by their presence at the evening service. The pastor being a very affable good-natured gentleman, the people took the advice contrarywise as a joke, and gave Bro. J. S. Roth a nearly full house and close attention; and several expressed themselves as agreeably disappointed in hearing such sound Bible doctrine from the terrible "Mormon preachers;" adding a kindly hand shake and an earnest invitation to come again. We were made glad by the counsel, instruction, and social warmth of these worthy and able brethren, one of whom the writer met over thirteen years ago in Delana Banch, Missouri. May God bless their ministrations to all their honest hearers, as He has to us and others here, and continue unto them the use of their gifts and talents a long season is our heartfelt wish and prayer. We of the faith here, hope the church will send some one to follow up the attack, until Lucifer unfurls a flag of truce above his demolished ramparts. There is a harvest here; myself and family will do all in our power to aid an Elder, or Elders at this place (Tipton). We have a population of two thousand. The Court House can be secured for preaching and we can entertain an Elder; would like to have one come who could stay some time. There are some believing already who may ere long need the services of an Elder.

By the kindness of Bro. Peters, of Michigan, I have been able to circulate a large number of copies of Voice of Warning, one of the quietest, most effective preachers I know of; (now none of you Columbiads, and Gatling Guns must take offense). The book don't talk back, and people read it who would not (at first) hear an Elder. Saints, take advantage of Bro. Peters' offer; pray for good results and you will realize what the term "helps" mean.

Bro. Hinderks, please notice, I have received the tracts in German; and Bro. Bozarth will accept thanks for rectifying error in address. Can not some brother who belongs to a Grand Army Republic Post get a little space in the National Tribune, in which to explain the case of the Reorganization and its claims. They have a large post here to whom the New Translation is an oracle profundis.

The Savior said to Peter "I will make you a fisher of men." Fishermen, bait adroitly, angle craftily, take prey "by guile," &c. So let the ministry do now as hunters and fishers. I was painting at a place this week where a clock mender was at work. I quizzed and pumped him till I found out he had been in Buffalo, knew Brn. Ladner, Ruby, Reynolds, &c., had heard one sermon when he was a boy, said it seemed as a dream, did not know but we believed in polygamy, was a member of Disciple or Christian Church. Lived in Muscatine. I preached him a hop skip and jump sermon in five minutes time, interested him and he promised to go and hear the first chance he got. I had rather be snubbed a dozen times than let one honest-hearted truth seeker go untaught. I have been greatly blessed in this kind of work, rarely failing to interest tee person addressed when I have baited the hook in faith, the fish generally "nibbles" enough to condemn it if it turns away. I consider it is our business to bear the testimony in faith, humility and love, and the rest of the battle is between themselves and God. The gospel is to be preached for a witness. This act goes on record, and if they reject it we at least are at "quits" with them; if they accept, "how beautiful" &c. Love to all Saints and prosper Zion's cause.

Dear Herald:—Our little branch away down here in Egypt (Southern Illinois) is trying to hold on to the "rod of iron." We are poor in this world's goods, but we are trying in our feeble way to "keep our shoulder to the wheel." I baptized one on the 30th ult., C. P. Hurst. I think he will become known for good in the kingdom. Expect more in the near future. We can not think of doing without the Herald.

RISE OF THE REORGANIZATION.

BY H. P. BROWN.

In the Expositor for July, the editor when making comments on the leaflets sent him of late by Z. H. Gurley, gives some valuable reminiscences in respect to important facts preceding and connected with the rise of the Reorganization. We think they should be known and preserved, therefore we present them to our readers.

Z. H. GURLEY.

We have received a number of leaflets from Z. H. Gurley, the younger. We knew his father intimately, and although he was full of faults and weaknesses like the most of his fellow men, yet he was a devoted, praying man, and his "gift of faith" would humble and bring him out. He was a man who believed God was a rewarder of those who diligently sought Him, and acting on that belief, we and he, when darkness was on every hand, sought God for light; and God gave himself, in the winter of 1849, a vision of the "lineal priesthood" under the symbol of a "gold chain," reaching from Adam to the celestialized earth.

Brother Gurley had his trials and temptations, but his "gift of faith" led him to pray much, and whenever you saw him alone, whether in the house, or in the woods, or on the prairie, or leaning against the house or fence, you found him praying the Father of lights for light and truth. Thus he and ourself went out to Yellowstone in November, 1850, to preach the gospel. We showed him our vision of the "lineal priesthood," and we talked over the probable coming of "young Joseph." We had in our hearts rejected Strang, (and all other pretenders), but had not withdrawn from the fellowship of his organization. Ourself was one of "The Twelve," and he was one of the "Seventies." We commenced to preach the gospel of Christ, and awaited developments; and we agreed that if any converts should inquire of us who the prophet was, we would do as we did in the days of the Martyr; tell them to inquire of God, and when they got a testimony they would know for themselves.

We commenced to preach, and the Spirit of God was poured out wonderfully. Sister Reuben Newkirk was baptized, confirmed, and anointed and administered to for ganulated sore eyes, which had afflicted her for a long time. And, thank God, she was healed; although Bro. Gurley says nothing about it in his History of the Reorganization. Also old Sister Cline, when baptized, inquired who was our prophet, and she was told to go and ask the Lord, which she did off in the grove by herself alone, when she heard an audible voice say in substance if not in exact words, "Little Joseph, the son of Joseph, the Lord will bring in his own due time to set in order the Church." Bro. Gurley forgets to put this little piece of history in his work, but represents that little Julia had the first revelation on lineal priesthood. Why did Bro. Gurley leave Voree, the gathering place, and go to Jewellstone? Because he had got light that Joseph was coming; and yet he could not quite sever himself from the Strang organization. Sister Cline had the foregoing revelation about December 1st, 1850. Julia had hers some months afterwards.

How came your father during what you call "the formation period" to have for his topic "Lineal priesthood, rights of its lineage, and little Joseph?" How was it that when Julia said, "It is his right by lineage," that she only gave expression to what your father had talked and what he had previously believed? We answer, it was because he believed our vision on lineal priesthood, and in the revelation of Sister Cline. * * *

His son should "tell it all," and then people will learn that the work of reformation did not commence with, nor rest upon the foundation of little Julia Gurley; but that there were a cloud of witnesses besides what she said and did. Of course, Brother Gurley and all of us were poor, very poor, and we sometimes under the stress of poverty might have asked the Lord for things we ought not, to consume upon our lusts. It might have been with Brother Gurley like the boy after the woodchuck—he was out of meat. And Julia might have received a false spirit, and it might have taken her up and carried her, as tradition says it did Simon Magus, through the air, and planted her feet down, saying, "the great lead lode is there;" and Brethren Gurley and Newkirk might have been deceived in that regard by a false spirit. But how is young Zenas to prove that a lode of lead is not now exactly where Julia said it was? Of course we never believed in any such manifestation. * * *

We would like young Zenas to account for our vision of the lineal priesthood which we told to hundreds in 1849-50; also account for sister Cline's information, when she did not know that Joseph the martyr, ever had a son in his life; also to account for twelve or thirteen all coming to their feet at once and singing in tongues, extemporaneously, and immediately singing in English the interpretation. Please account for the prophecy of brother Gurley to Daniel Razy and G. W. Harlow on one evening in October, 1853, telling them that that night they would receive a testimony of this work that they would never forget; and on traveling home as they did that night, about twenty-one miles, have an open vision passing before them like a panorama in seven divisions, and lasting them until after sunrise. Then please tell us how to account for brother Newkirk's boy being healed of a deadly rattle-snake bite in the hot weather of August, 1853, almost instantly under our hands, if we were all under a delusion. Please tell us what gave Lizzie Cline the vision, after we asked the Lord to tell us where brother S. H. Gurley was who went to California in 1850, and your people had not heard from him since 1851, when she, (sister Cline), was wrapt in vision on the first of May, 1853, and was carried in the spirit to California, from there to Australia, and there at Sydney saw your brother take a vessel the name of which was given, and sail thence to Chili in South America, where he remained a week, and thence sailed for Panama, thence to Aspinwall, then to New York, then to Niagara Falls, thence to Zarahemla in Wisconsin; and it was fulfilled in July following to the letter. Don't you remember how he came into meeting at father Cline's one Sunday in July, 1853, and before he sat down we prevailed on him to relate his adventures? And did he not corroborate sister Lizzie to the letter? Whence this knowledge if we were all deceived and duped in the rising of the Reorganization? What about that corn field? [Preserved from frost.—Ed.] Was that a hallucination of your father's wonderful gift of faith?

How came it that little Joseph, ten years and more after sister Cline had her revelation,—that he left his law office and found the little insignificant Reorganization, numbering about three hundred souls, poor and poverty stricken, just as it had been foretold, when he might have gone to Utah and been lionized by their thousands?

How came it that we, who never had a description of Joseph Smith, except the one given in vision by Elizabeth Cline in October, 1853, in April, 1864 went into Golden's Hall, Amboy, Illinois, where were congregated six hundred souls, including the officers of the church, walk up to Joseph Smith and call him by name and introduced ourself to him, as he will very well remember.

If we were all wrong, how do you know you are right now? Please inform us how you came by keys superior to all of us?

* * * Try and cover his [father Gurley's.—Ed.] faults and emulate his virtues. He was not perfect; but he strove hard to be right. He clung to the Bible, Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants, and the Holy Spirit.

SERMON BY ELDER HEMAN C. SMITH.

OF OAKDALE, NEBRASKA.

In the Saints' Chapel, Lamoni, Iowa,
April 9th, 1886.

[Reported for the Herald and prepared by the Editor].

I WILL invite your attention to-night to a statement made by the Psalmist David, contained in the seventh verse of the nineteenth Psalm. "The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul; the testimony of the Lord is sure, making wise the simple."

I may mention that this text is a very peculiar one, especially when looking from a popular stand-point. It seems to me that we have not thought in regard to this subject as this text ought to lead us to think. We have not taken into consideration as much as we ought, that to convert the souls of men we must of necessity convert them according to law. I presume there are exceptions in the world, but the rule is that ministers desire to convert the souls of men. I do not care what their religious convictions are, or what may be the tenets of their faith, they have a strong desire, a commanding desire to see men and women converted to God. That seems to be the leading object of all religious denominations of people. They not only use persuasion with them to gain them to their will, but many of them use their means, and some have subscribed thousands for the purpose of converting the souls of men, and especially sending the gospel into the heathen lands, where they have not heard the truth as it is in Christ Jesus. But while we are seeking to convert the souls of men, it would be well for us to keep in mind, that if we ever convert them according to the statement made here, they must be converted in harmony with some law; that this work is not a promiscuous work; in other words it is not done by chance. We need not resort to this means or that for the purpose of converting them; for there is an established law whereby men must be converted. I am of the opinion to-night, and have been for sometime, that the reason why some conversions are not more permanent, is because the persons have not been converted according to the law of God. We have been satisfied often when we have succeeded in making an impression upon the mind, when we have succeeded in causing individuals to be sorry for their sins; when we have succeeded in causing them to believe that God had pardoned their sins, and have called this conversion. But whether such persons are converted or not, is a matter of serious doubt in the mind of your speaker. Many of them may have been reformed merely, and may have ceased from their evil doings and lived better lives; but whether they have been converted in the Christian sense of the word is a serious question. And if they have not been converted according to the law of God, I fear n regard to the ultimate condition that they shall arrive at. I fear they will not obtain all that is in store for those who serve God, unless the conversion is a proper one. Consequently I think it is a matter of serious consideration how we receive the gospel of Jesus Christ, and how we present it. If we shall present the doctrine of Christ according to the law of God, and men are converted according to that law, I believe that the conversion in a general sense will remain with them. But if we simply create an impression upon their minds, simply cause them to have some feeling in regard to the matter, work up their sympathies and convert them in that way, when they go out from the influence under which they had that conversion, and meet the same trials and the same minds and the same influences they met before their conversion, their conversion will most likely vanish away, and the impression that they have received will be succeeded by those that they received before their conversion.

The only question for us to decide then in regard to this matter, is, What law is referred to here? There are a great many laws that might be called the law of God. What law was spoken of here that will convert the souls of men, cause men to come into relationship with God, and make them subject to him?

What law does that? What testimony is it that maketh wise the simple? I have been told by some well meaning persons that this law is the law of conscience; that that is the law of God; and that God has given to every man a law, and has written it upon the tablet of the heart; and, that whenever he transgresses that law he is condemned; and whenever he lives in harmony with it, God justifies him; he feels that he is justified, and that they need no higher or better law than the law of conscience, their conscience approving of that which is right, and disapproving of that which is wrong. After serious consideration and reflection I am inclined to reject that law as being an infallible law. I do not believe that that law will convert the souls of men. I believe it is a good thing in its place; a good thing if rightly understood; but I can not accept it as a perfect law, and this law, mark you, that will convert the souls of men, is said to be perfect. I have no doubt in my mind that a great many people who are in error, spiritually in error, are living in harmony with the dictates of their conscience,—their conscience not reproving them for the erroneous acts of their lives. In fact we read here in the word of God, that the apostle Paul said, after he had been called to persecute the saints of God—after he had commenced that work and had persecuted them, and delivered them up to be beaten with stripes, and had done all he could do to injure the cause of Christ and his people—he says “I lived with a good conscience towards God all my life.” To Paul, then, this law of conscience dictating to him every moment of his life whether he was right or whether he was wrong, was a mistake. At least he came to the conclusion that his conscience had led him to do many wrongs when it dictated him to do many things against Jesus of Nazareth; that it caused him to do those acts which he would not do in the gospel. I well recollect how it was in my own case. I am not willing to risk my conscience to dictate to me at all times and under all circumstances the acts that I shall perform; or to restrain me from doing those things I ought not to do. I presume those who never heard of Christ, the heathen nations, are living in harmony with the dictates of their conscience. I will tell you what I believe conscience will do; it will prove true to its education every time. You can depend upon that. If it has been educated rightly, it will be true to that education; it will lead you rightly: but if your education has been faulty, your conscience will approve of what you have been taught, and disapprove of those things that you have been taught to believe were wrong.

I want right here to use an illustration that I have used several times; it is not one of my own, I borrowed it. Take for instance that clock. Turn those hands around to the hour of twelve o'clock, and the clock will continue to run, perform its functions exactly as it was created to do, yet it will never get right, it may have just the proper speed all the time, yet it will be just that much out of the way all the time, and will never get any nearer right if it was placed in a wrong position. What does it need then? It needs a hand from without to regulate it. It needs to have a hand from without to move those hands around to the right point. Then if it moves along according to its mechanism, it will point rightly all the time. That is the way with your conscience. If it has been educated rightly, if you are sure your teachings have been infallible, then you may depend upon it that your conscience will continue to point you rightly. But if you have been taught wrongly, if you have imbibed errors in the beginning, your conscience may approve of those errors. It needs a hand from without, it needs a power divine to regulate that conscience. You want to be taught in such a manner that you will be sure you are right, whenever you take the teachings of your conscience as a guide, unless your conscience has been dictated by the law of God. If you depend upon your conscience as a perfect law of liberty, you will find that it will not be liberty to you, but will lead you into bondage as often as into liberty; it will lead you into many errors, and lead you to do things against your own interest. That will have the effect not only to darken your mind for the present, but you become dark morally, until you shall reap the fruits of your mistake in after years in following that guide.

What law does the text refer to? Is it the law of Moses? From the language used, no doubt he was living under the law of Moses at the time he uttered these words. He said that the law of the Lord was perfect converting the soul. Did he have reference to the law of types and shadows that was then in force? If he did he is not in accord with Paul. Paul tells us that that law was not perfect.

That it was merely a schoolmaster to bring us to Christ. I want, in connection with this, to call your attention to a statement made by the apostle James. He says in the first chapter of his epistle and twenty-fifth verse, “Whoso looketh into the perfect law of liberty, he being not a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the word, that man shall be blessed in his deeds.” You will mark that there is one thought that they are in harmony upon. Speaking of the perfect law the Psalmist says: “The law of the Lord is perfect,” and the apostle James says: “Who so looketh into the perfect law of liberty.” I submit that they must have had reference to the same law. If one law is perfect, there can be no perfect law that is different from that; there can not be another perfect law. It is impossible for two laws to be perfect and be unlike each other. The Psalmist then must have had reference to the same law that James was talking about—the law of the gospel. He must have been enabled by the Spirit of God to lift the veil of futurity, and read upon its pages of coming events—the fact that Christ would come in the meridian of time and teach the perfect law of liberty that would convert the souls of men. I believe that if men were educated in regard to that law, they could not trust their conscience for a divine guide. They could not trust spiritual influences alone; but they would see that harmony, beauty, grandeur and excellency in the law that would engage their attention, and they would rejoice in it under all circumstances. We would not need to have revivals, would not need to be among those of like faith with ourselves to enjoy our religion. I care nothing about religion that I can simply feel when under the spirit begotten by association with kindred minds; I want something that I can depend upon under adverse circumstances; I want something that I can feel just as sensibly, and that I can enjoy just as much out and beyond the associations of others, when I bow before my God in secret prayer, as I can in associations with others. I want something that produces that kind of faith; that which is a conversion according to law; that our minds may be fixed upon it, and we may see the grandeur of it—see the perfection of it, see the effect of it, and feel the effect of it in our lives. Mark these things; for no doubt they are proof of a true character.

There is another thought here that some have advanced, and that is this: They say that notwithstanding you can not trust your conscience, you can trust the influences of the Spirit; that you may be governed, and you should be governed directly by the influences of that spirit in all that you do, should take that as a sufficient guide, and not question where it leads you, and not question what it permits you to do; that if you feel the influence of a spirit, go ahead and never mind law; never mind the outward ordinances or anything of that kind, do simply as the Spirit dictates. I am afraid of that, too. I am told here in the word of God by one of the apostles of the Lamb, that there are many false spirits gone out into the world, and I am afraid that I may get into possession of one of these false spirits if I am satisfied with spiritual influences alone. While I make that remark, I do not want you to understand that I do not believe in spiritual influences. I believe that every individual who has followed Christ has a right to be governed by the Spirit of God, in its proper and legitimate way. I do not believe that all men will derive the influences of that spirit. I however think that all men that are religiously inclined are governed by spiritual influences to some extent. I believe that the man who throws himself before the car of Juggernaut to be crushed to pieces to satisfy the demands of his imaginary idol god, may have some supernatural power in him, or spirit, call it what you please. I believe he is dictated by a spiritual influence. And the mother that sacrifices her child for the purpose of satisfying her god and throws her child into the river to be devoured or drowned is governed by some spirit. Some power prompts her. If I had been reared in heathen lands, if I had been taught that Mahomet was a prophet of God, or that Crishna was the Savior of the world, and had been educated in all these doctrines, I probably would have felt the spirit governing me in that worship, and I would have been worshipping God in spirit, and would have been true to the spirit influences which I had received. But would this prove that I was right? Not by any means. Jesus tells us, that "God is a spirit, and they that worship him must worship him in spirit." But what else? "and in truth." That is just the position. You may worship him in spirit and not in truth. You may feel that you are doing a kind of service, that you are worshipping acceptably without worshipping in truth; but I can not depend so far as I am concerned upon spiritual influences alone. That is not the law to convert the souls of men. That method has led men to commit some of the darkest crimes that have ever been committed. It has led men to commit murder, as in the case of the assassin who murdered our beloved president. He was actuated by some power, by some influence, and he believed it was the power of God. If he had tried that spirit, tried the works of that spirit by the word of God, he would have seen that no murderer can inherit eternal life. He could not have thought that because he was prompted by a spirit, that he ought to go and take the life of that man. If you depend upon spiritual influences only, you are liable to be wrong. I am not much interested in knowing just how a man feels in regard to his religion. I do not care whether he is happy or unhappy. He may be very happy and be wrong. He may be, (it is possible to be), unhappy and be right. His religion may be just exactly according to the law of God, it may be in harmony with the truth as revealed from heaven, and the circumstances surrounding him may make him unhappy. Do you not remember that the apostle Paul said, that if in this life only he had hope he would be of all men the most miserable. Happiness does not prove that a man is right. Feeling well does not prove that a man is in the right, or that he is converted thoroughly and righteously according to the way that God designed he should be converted. I would rather follow out the teachings that I read here in the sayings of Isaiah, when he is speaking in regard to this very subject, in regard to spiritual influences "that peep and mutter," and so forth. He says, "To the law and to the testimony; if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them."

I am told, however, by some of our friends, who are as honest as we are, that those things taught in the word of God were only for a time; that these commandments given by Jesus Christ and the apostles in the primitive times were done away, and that the Spirit of God now leads us to look upon them with no faith, simply because they are not for us. We are led now by the influence of the Spirit; this leads us to do what is proper to do under the circumstances, and not what was proper to do under the circumstances that they were living under in that day. I am not going to argue that point to-night, but just simply say that, if this is to be the rule as applied to that law referred to in the text, then take it away from me. Why? Because I have not sense enough to tell what is right and what is wrong. If there are things that do not apply to me, things of benefit, parts of the gospel, I can not tell by reading the book any more than I can without it what is right. If I am left to my own judgment, after reading the word of God, I might as well trust to my own judgment without any word of God. There may be some things that I would take, some things placed there that I think I ought to accept. Now I am told that that was for that people. The more I read the more I am in doubt regarding what I shall do. I read the word of God and I say, Is this for me? Is this commandment laid down in the word of God for me to perform? Well, I am told that some of them are and some of them are not. But which one is? The Spirit will lead you. But how am I to detect that spirit? I am to detect the Spirit by the word of God. If the word of God can not be relied upon as a test of the spirits, now what am I to do in regard to the matter, how can I tell what to do? The Spirit tells me that this part is for me, and that part for the Jews. I do not know whether this is a right spirit or a wrong one. I have no guide, and no way to detect it. If I can not rely upon that text of the book, if the book represents God as different now from what he was in the times of Christ, I do not want the book at all. I am very well satisfied however with that book, for it represents God as just the same now as he was then; and that there has been no change in regard to this law of the Lord that converts the souls of men; and that we can not depend upon the word of God alone; for the apostle says, "Our gospel came not in word only, but in power, and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance." And we do not know whether we have that Holy Ghost, unless it is in harmony with the word of God. We can not tell either one way or the other. The word is not the gospel of Christ, it is a component part of the gospel, but it needs the power of God with it. If I get a power without the word, I have only a part of the gospel, and it may not be that. I may have a wrong spirit, I have not sense enough to tell, I have not intelligence enough to tell whether it is right or wrong. When I get in possession of a spirit that teaches me to love this word, and to love it well enough to love the duties enjoined in it, I think it will be safe enough to follow it, that is, the law of God contained therein; it is not all the Spirit of God. The word and the Spirit must agree. If that is not the correct position, I do not know where it is. As I said before, if that word does not correctly represent God now, and represent him as he was eighteen hundred years ago, I do not want it. But it represents God as just now, and the same as he was then. Then I am perfectly satisfied to take it, read it, and pray God's Spirit to confirm the things that are therein. When the Spirit rests upon me, it makes me feel that this word, and the things that are therein, are true; and I believe that it is the Spirit of God; I do not believe that a false spirit would testify to anything that is right. It may once in a while for the purpose of deceiving testify to a little of the truth; but it will never teach you to love the whole of the gospel story; it will never teach you to live a life of practical religion that will include the things that are contained in the word of God. Religion that is not practical is not worth much to me, it may be to you. Religion that does not crop out in a man's actions, I have no confidence in. A man that professes to have faith in the gospel of Jesus Christ, and does not work in harmony with that faith—that is a profession that I have no confidence in. I have no confidence in his faith. He may be sincere, he may be honest, but his faith is not of the right character; it is not of the kind that God will justify; it is not the kind that God will accept. Now let me say further, if you go out into the world, be careful to teach the truth. God is in the work, and he will confirm the word by the power of his Spirit. Then men will learn to love the gospel of Jesus Christ, and love the word. One of the reasons that I have more confidence in this latter day work and in the doctrines taught by this people than in any other, is because there are less backsliders among the converts. There seems to be something in the nature of it that sticks better. Men do not lose the impressions they have received as readily as they do in any other I have been acquainted with. Yet there are exceptions to that rule. I am speaking of the rule. But it seems that these impressions remain with them. When they have been faithful; when they have been humble; when they have been diligent in keeping the commandments of God, notwithstanding that circumstances may be adverse in every other respect, these impressions remain. I have had a little experience in regard to this matter; and I find men and women everywhere that I have traveled, who have been isolated from the church for years, and they are not in any other, they say that they feel that they can not accept anything else than that which they had heard years ago. The sound of the gospel has not saluted their ears for perhaps forty or fifty years, yet they can not believe anything else. The impression has been made so indelibly upon their minds that it is fixed for time and for eternity also. When I see individuals everywhere saying, "There is nobody of our faith here, we will go somewhere else and have a home," I think the doctrine they have received has not taken very deep hold upon them. They could not endorse anything else if it had.

Then I am of the opinion as remarked before, that if the world had adopted this plan of converting men, instead of by telling them some exciting stories, instead of by telling them something that is calculated to excite their feelings—if they had taught them the law of God, they would have learned to love that law, and would have been obedient to it. Infidelity would not have had the hold anywhere that it has now. Some of the best minds of this generation, some of the brightest intellects are skeptical in regard to the religion of Jesus Christ. And why? They are not easily excited. They could sit under the sound of that which is called gospel, and there is nothing there to attract them, nothing to feed their logical minds. They go away disgusted, and take what they hear as representative of the gospel of Jesus Christ. That is their mistake. If men had taught the law of God, if they had been taught its beauty, men would have been led step by step to see how it would go onward and upward, by accepting first one principle and then another, until it would take them where nature found them, and lead them to higher, and grander, and better spheres of action than they could reach in any other way. The law of God would have been delightful to their hearts then, and infidelity would not have had the hold it has now.

Do you not know that a feeling can be produced by a lie just as well as by the truth. It does not take the truth to create an impression. We will suppose that some individual should go to the door to-night and cry with a loud voice that there had been a tragedy committed in the town; that some one whom the most of you knew, some respected fellow citizen, had been murdered on the street? It would cause a thrill to go through every heart. The individual might come here presently, and we would find that there was nothing of it, but the excitement would be produced all the same. Then it may be possible, that if we have friends that have gone and passed away from this world, if they are pictured out to us as being in glory, and surrounded with all desirable things, and in the presence of God and angels, it may cause a feeling of happiness, and we may shout with joy. And it is possible that they are not there, notwithstanding that that picture has been drawn. But on the other hand, if the terrors of hell beneath are pictured out to us in as strong colors as some ministers of the gospel can picture them in, it may cause us to look upon it with dread and horror. We are afraid of getting there if we do not do just as we are directed to do. It may cause a feeling to be produced, and yet hell may not be anything like what they have pictured it out to be. If we get scared and do something, that is not conversion. We call it religion sometimes, but that will not do. There must be some other way. That way is for the Spirit of God to act conjointly with the word of God. The word of God and the Spirit of God, the one testifying to the other. The Spirit of God testifying to the word, and the word of God testifying to the Spirit. If the spirit is contrary to that word, condemn it, let it go. I have felt spirits that I knew were not of God. I found it out afterwards in the case of some, and some I knew at the time. The feeling it produces will not always do to depend upon—that is, whether it makes us happy or unhappy. I have felt the Spirit of God when it has rendered me unhappy, from the fact that it pointed out things to me, and showed me that they existed, which caused me to be very unhappy. I have had some impressions I believe that were from a wrong source that that have made me very happy. They deceived me when they did this. I can not depend upon that. I must live by every word that proceeds out of the mouth of God. When we live devoted to the principles of the gospel as stated in that book, and this spirit brings a feeling of joy, peace and satisfaction, then welcome it. That is all you need. That you can depend upon. "The law of the Lord is perfect converting the soul." When you are converted by the law of God, you will stay converted. You may pass through trials; you may in the hour of temptation fall from your steadfastness; that power to some extent will remain with you. It will be with you here, it will be with you in eternity, because it is the power of God; and as has been expressed before you here, it will be a savor of life unto life, or of death unto death. It is a fearful thing. It makes me tremble sometimes when I think about it, when I think of the great responsibility resting upon us in this matter. I believe that every important action of life leaves its effect upon the mind, and will leave it there forever. I do not believe that the thoughts that pass through your minds to-night can leave you as you were before they came. They will have an effect and leave it there, though you may not perceive it. If they are good ones, they will leave you better for having had them; if they are evil ones, they will leave you worse. Every action of your life will leave its effect, and you can not erase it. Say some, do you not believe in the doctrine of forgiveness? If one does wrong, can not he repent? Yes, God will forgive you for the wrong done if you repent thoroughly, but will not put you where you might have been if you had not done that wrong, in my opinion. If you have done something to be recorded in the book of life up yonder, while you was doing that wrong, it would have been much better for you than it will be if you have done the wrong. To hold that after the commission of the wrong, simply because it is forgiven, we are just as well off as if it had never been done, is to put a premium on wrong doing. It seems to me that men make a mistake, when they think that by and by they will do better. They make a mistake when they think that by and by they will repent of their sins and serve God; when they think that they will perform some other duties that they are now neglecting in the time that is to come. You will find that when that day comes it will have duties enough, it will have cares and responsibilities enough. The things that you are leaving undone now, and the things that you are doing that are wrong will leave their effect forever. If I get as high in the celestial world as other men, notwithstanding the sins that I have committed, it will be because they have sinned too, and tarried by the way. If they have done better than I have in life, they will be in advance of me in eternity.

I do not desire to weary you to-night. I just simply wanted to lead you to these facts. I did not want to much either, but I had to do something. I ask you to take these things into consideration, and be sure when you are converted you are converted by the law of God and by the word of God and the Spirit of God working in harmony with each other, and you will be happy here so far as your general lives are concerned (there may be troubles and trials and grievous things to meet)—and you will be holy and happy in eternity and feel the full fruition of your hope then. May God bless you, and help you to walk in accordance with his law, is my prayer.

WHAT AILS MR. L. K. WASHBURN.

MR. WASHBURN:—I agree with you that there is but little of that good old ship, Christianity, remaining visible above the surface of the great sea of metaphysics save her rigging and some loose planks which have been torn from her during the past few centuries, to all of which thousands are clinging for dear life, many in despair. One thing you have overlooked, which is, that there is a new ship fully manned with a goodly crew fast taking passengers abroad. You no doubt think you have made some progress towards the solution of man's greatest problem—"man." I presume you regard him as a creature of circumstances. I agree with you thus far; but I do not agree with you as to what those circumstances are. Whilst you are a hero possessed of much more bombast than discretion; I am a cowardly cur possessing sufficient courage to fearlessly own that I fear God, and even have the temerity to pray to Him, and can give good reasons why.

The first circumstance that causes man to differ from the beast is his innate fear of God; the next is his hope of immortality, and the rewards and punishment connected therewith and dependent upon his conduct here.

You talk about selfishness. With all your learning are you so thick as to presume that you can perform one premeditated act, either in business, speaking, or writing, that is not intended for the special benefit of L. K. Washburn. Self is the propeller of us all, our nearest approach to the performance of a wholly unselfish act, is to perform it expecting our reward in the kingdom come.

You boast about manhood and womanhood. Take the God-fearing element out of our nation, and if possible remove all superstition from those who are left, and give you the ruling of what is left, what would you know? What would become of you? You would not even know when you were naked. All you would have to live for would be to eat, drink, sleep, and reproduce your species; consequently you would have no incentive but that which would naturally cause you to seek some genial clime, divest yourselves of your clothing, and pick up your living like the balance of the apes and monkeys.

"We are shadows, in pursuit of shadows."

We live in air castles, and oft when our little individual air castles fail, we find shelter in that great castle, "the immortality of our souls." You laugh at "kingdom come," and pursue a much more ridiculous shadow yourself. You would remodel the world, without at all considering the material you have to work with. I hope you have sense enough to know that happiness is what we all are in pursuit of. Such being the case, you are compelled to admit that he is in reality most successful who obtains most true happiness, even though he be a fool. Doubtless the wise man was exploring those regions of thought, when he concluded that "He who increaseth knowledge increaseth sorrow." Likewise, Burns, when he was constrained to exclaim; "O dullness! portion of the truly blest."

To every sane man life is sweet, consequently the thought of being annihilated is bitter. Your road to happiness is as reasonable as is the old prescription for curing toothache, by the patients filling his mouth with cold water and then sitting upon a hot stove until it boils.

You cast a slur at the fair sex, because they are more faithful than we. "Women without religion is like a ship at sea without an anchor." Take from our dear mothers and sisters that sacred awe with which they regard the violation of their chastity—leave nothing but the virtue and chastity of man to sustain our present high state of civilization, and, if I can see through a ladder, our nation would very soon become a most unenviable monkeydom.

You seem to think it is not right for servants to obey their masters. You appear to believe in universal insubordination, anarchy if you please. Your kind of religion is what led to the late bomb business in Chicago. You and I may have made shipwreck of religious faith, and lost the sweet hope of eternal life; please don't try to convince the people that all who have been thus unfortunate are such consummate asses as to think that in consequence thereof, they are better and happier men and women.

History repeats itself, and for aught you or I know, that memorable ride may be re-enacted, and since you have so plainly shown your hitching place, it might be that you would have conferred upon yourself the honor of playing the donkey's part.

Original Poetry.

"COMFORT YE, COMFORT YE MY PEOPLE."

Though now we roam as wanderers,
And are scattered far and wide,
Yet we cherish still the hope to Saints so dear,
That the time is fast approaching
When will all be gathered home,
To prepare for the great Sabbath year.

Sore, sore we have been tried
Since the church was led astray,
To sojourn in the wilderness so drear;
But we cherish still the hope,
And we know it will not fail,
T'will return for the great Sabbath year.

The Jews will gather home,
And the tribes will gather in
To the regions round about—from far and near;
For the prophets have foretold it,
And we know it will not fail,
They'll return for the great Sabbath year.

Then spread ye the tidings glad,
To the earth's remotest bound,
From India's sunny isles to Greenland drear;
That Jesus Christ is coming,
And we know they will not fail,
For to reign through the great Sabbath year.

FAR WEST (MO.) DISTRICT.

To the Branch Presidents and Saints, Greeting:—Not being able to see you personally, having lately been put in charge of the affairs of the district, and having a few thoughts to communicate which I think of importance, I take this method of reaching you, and address this to you.

In this day of strong battle between good and evil, light and darkness, faith and infidelity, wisdom and blind zeal, activity and slothfulness, it behooves every Saint to be awake to his best interest and that of the cause of God. The wise man says "wisdom is the principal thing." Coupling this with the great lesson "activity," taught both in nature and revelation, and it makes up that good saying, "Be sure you are right, then go ahead." Equal stress should be placed upon each part of this double injunction—"be sure you are right," and "go ahead." Inactivity is a detriment to any enterprise, the work of God not excepted. I would most strenuously urge upon each branch president to be very diligent and careful in caring for the flock. "The perfecting of the saints" is a work as necessary as "the work of the ministry." Be not harsh, but long-suffering and charitable, always striving to be prompted by the spirit of love in every official act. Help the Priest, Teacher and Deacon each to stand in his place, and thus in unity and wisdom labor for the upbuilding of the work. The great dragon that is strongly trying the Saints at the present time is "indifference," a spirit of "being at ease in Zion." Let each be a St. George and kill this enemy.

A few thoughts in regard to business. It is a difficult matter for a delegate to represent by vote in conference the wish of his constituents without knowing what their wish may be. To obviate, in a measure, this difficulty I propose the following: Let each member of the district take some thought as to the business they wish to have presented to the next conference—any business that may affect the district as such—and let them report the same to me at any time, and of this I will make a note. And just prior to the time of holding the business meetings of the branches I will write a second epistle to you, stating the nature of the business, giving the branches an opportunity to instruct their delegates; and by this means get the "common consent." This evidently will not reach all cases, but may be made to reach a great many.

To the Elders and Priests who are not confined by branch labor, I would counsel them to move out and do all they can to spread the work. Do something, say something, and above all act something for the truth. Shakespeare says, "He is a good preacher who follows his own advice. It were easier to tell twenty what is right, than to be one of the twenty to do it." The most effectual preaching can be done by setting a good example. The world, though wicked, will notice the righteous walk of the wise. I can not in person visit all the branches, but shall do all my circumstances may admit. I would encourage the idea of holding grove meetings through the district, and any help I can give will be cheerfully accorded. This truly is a work of sacrifice, and we may have many things to endure for Christ's sake. But let us so walk that every accusation, and act of persecution will be for "righteousness' sake." Too often accusations against the Saints have some foundation in truth. "I will give you favor" was a promise to the Saints, and is being realized where the Saints live for it. But this can not be construed to mean an entire cessation of conflict between the world and the Saints. The principles by which each are governed are irreconcilable. Let each elder find something to do, and then do it, and let all labor, praying much, and come up to the next conference bringing the Spirit of the Master, with a good report, that we may have a great outpouring of the Spirit of God. Bro. J. R. Lambert is solicited to labor all he can in our district. We will be will.

ing, however, to submit to his wisdom and circumstances in this matter. We thank him for past labor, and the wholesome words of counsel he gave us when in our midst.

With a prayer for your welfare, I am your brother in Christ,

J. M. TERRY.

Conference Minutes.

SOUTH PACIFIC ISLANDS MISSION.

The report of the General Conference of the above mission. Convened on Sunday, April 4th, 1886, with the Taronia Branch, Papeete, Tahiti. No business however was done till Tuesday, 6th inst. Preaching on the Lord's day at seven a. m. by Tehau of Avatoru Branch, Rairoa, P. E. of Pairoa and Tikahau District; at ten a. m. by Tehopea of Panau, Koukura, missionary; at two p. m. by Metuaore, president of Ziona Branch. Sacrament meeting followed. At seven p. m. preaching by Tutereihia, president of Tikahau Branch. Preaching on Monday, April 5th, at seven a. m., by Putoa of Moturaa, Koukura, president of Koukura, Aputai and Niau District. At ten a. m. by Taotu, president of Temaria Branch, Anaa. At seven p. m. by Tamaru, president of Avatoru Branch. Preaching on Tuesday morning, April 6th, by Terohia, president of Tahiti and Maatea District, after which a season of prayer was had in which many took part. At ten a. m. the conference business began, Thomas W. Smith, president of the mission, presided over the conference. Tehu of Taronia Branch, and Teihina of Temaria Branch, (Elders) were chosen to record the transactions. Elders present.—Tuturu, Terohia, Tehau, Putoa, Tehopea, Metuaore, D. Brown, Leipo, Faito, Tariirii, Tehu, Puaiva, Tamu, Paifa, Manava, Tamaru, Tainana, Matanui, Poaitu, Turia, Taotu, Teihina Putaa, Mahana, Tuteirehia, Merere, Taruhia, Tavahahi, Teau, H. Jonsen, T. W. Smith. Priests: Nono; Teiviu, Tare, Taihia, Teririha, Tahua. Deacons: Teahu, Faraturu. Reports were read from Ziona, Taronia, Tikahau, Avatoru, Tiputa, Panau, Moturaa, Aputai, Tuuhora, Temaria and Teire; none from Tubuai, Maatea, Manihi, Taroa, Tapoto, Niau, Faarava, Faaito, Matahoa, Marekau, Makemo, Tanga, Hau, Hiknera, Amanu, Tauere, and others. Tehopea had baptized 7, Teihina 3, Puaiva 2, T. W. Smith 84, Teahi had baptized about 59, so he informed the president of the mission some time ago, but was not present, nor had his report got in.

It was resolved that fasting on the sacrament day should be left to the choice or wish of the members. Purchasing food on the Lord's day was disapproved, as it encouraged unbelievers to keep open their stores on that day, and was not a necessity on the part of the Saints. It was resolved, to withhold the sacrament from every member who used tobacco, and to withhold licenses from official members, who indulged in the habit. Elder Merere of Tikahau was appointed to labor in Raiatea, Borabora, and Huahine, with Tapuni who is there now. Elder H. Jonsen, called by the natives Anatoni, was appointed to visit various islands where the church was not yet established, and that a Priest of Niau should help him. The mission of Teahi and Toaupu to Marekau, Makemo, Takuma, and Rororia continued. Also Tehopea and Metuaore to Tubuai. Wairaarao, president of Maatea Branch arrived just as conference closed, no opportunity to come sooner was found. Preaching Tuesday night by Putaa of Tuuhora, Anaa, and on Wednesday morning Puaiva of Maatea. A vote was taken as to the place to hold the October conference, and 25 votes were given for Panau, Koukura, and 22 for Temaria Anaa, and 1 for Maatea. So it was appointed to be held at Koukura October 6th.

It was intended to hold the April conference in Tubuai, but there was no chance to get there except by chartering a vessel for fifteen dollars per day, and the trip would have taken from thirty to forty days. The brethren could not afford the money, so it was held at Papeete instead. There is no certainty about reaching any appointment on time here. Many have been here since the first of March on expense, and may have to stay a week or two yet before they can get a chance to return home. Some Elders could not get here at all, no vessels coming from their islands. It is a bad thing that some of the brethren here do not own a small schooner, so we could get around with it. There are plenty of large sail boats, but they are not suited to be out in at nights.

NORTH-EAST MISSOTRI.

The above district conference convened at Bevier, Mo., June 20th, 1886. Elder J. R. Lambert presiding, and J. T. Williams clerk. The Saints met the day previous to arrange the order of proceedings preparatory for the conference session. Elder D. J. Powell, of Stewartsville, preached in the evening assisted by J. R. Lambert. Sabbath morning brother Lambert preached with fair liberty to a small congregation. At two p. m., had a good social gathering, Brn. J. Taylor and D. J. Powell conducting the meeting. The will of God was revealed in prophecy. All felt strengthened and encouraged to fight the good fight of faith. At 6:30, p. m., a good and lengthy sermon was delivered by Elder J. R. Lambert to a fair sized congregation, and much interest was manifested in hearing the word of God when Bro. Lambert was producing such strong evidence and arguments in favor of Joseph Smith being a true prophet of God. Monday morning at nine o'clock, business. The following branches reported:—Hannibal, 25 members, including two Elders and one Priest, with one Teacher whose whereabouts is not known, and one Elder of whom a separate report will be made. Ten of the members are scattered abroad. Renick 28 members, including four Elders, one Priest, one Teacher, and one Deacon; four ex-

ped. Bevier 129 members, including 48 scattered abroad, six Elders, four Teachers, and three Deacons; four removed by letter. Renick report rejected and sent back for correction. The following Elders reported:—J. R. Lambert of Twelve, John Taylor, Richard R. Jones, Evan Griffith, J. T. Williams, Samuel Reed, and D. J. Powell of Stewartsville. Priests:—Frank Mussell and N. M. Ridings. Bishop's Agent's report was read and accepted. Had received $24.37; paid out $24.60; due agent 23 cents. Elder John Taylor of Hannibal was elected District President, and Richard R. Jones Vice-president; J. T. Williams was sustained as District Clerk. Resolved that we hold our conference twice a year or semi-annually. The place of holding our next conference was left to the discretion of the president. All the officers of the church were sustained in righteousness. Resolved; that the Elders and Priests within this district labor as their circumstances permit. Adjourned subject to call of the president.

FAR WEST.

This district conference convened in the Saints' Chapel, Stewartsville, Mo., Saturday and Sunday, June 12th and 13th, at half-past ten o'clock. John T. Kinneman in the chair, Chas. P. Faul secretary. Bro. Joseph R. Lambert on invitation offered a few appropriate remarks; said he was with us in the work; felt thankful for the courtesy shown him. Among other things he said let every one learn his or her duty, let them work. Branch reports.—St. Joseph, 103 members, five received by baptism, and 8 by letter from other branches. Stewartsville 85 members, 7 removed by letter, 4 received by letter, one marriage. Pleasant Grove 49 members, one received by letter. Center Prairie 29 members, one received by order of president of district. Delano 75 members, 3 expelled, one ordination. DeKalb 72 members, 2 removed, 1 gain by error in former report. German Stewartsville 59 members, 4 removed by letter. Elders reports.—Wm. Lewis, D. E. Powell, J. M. Terry, J. R. Lambert and E. T. Dobson (by letter), Simon Smith, Samuel Alcott, James Drown, J. D. Craven, R. L. Ware (by proxy), Wm. Summerfield, D. J. Powell, A. J. Seely, John T. Kinneman, D. S. Crawly (held one discussion with an Adventist), J. D. Flanders, S. Butler. These all gave a good report, were not discouraged, but wished to continue in the vineyard of the Lord. Priests Reports.—Walter Head, Peter Peterson, John Hardacre, Fredric Uphoff, Jay C. Elvert and C. P. Faul. These have all labored in their respective branches. Teacher Willard Wells reported. Bro. J. M. Terry and Walter Head were appointed a committee on credentials. Bro. William Lewis, Bishop's Agent reports total receipts, with cash on hand, $226.31, disbursements $170.23. Balance due the church of $55.98. Brethren J. M. Terry and J. S. Constance were appointed a committee to audit the Bishop's Agent's book, and reported it correct. Bro. William Lewis said the Starfield branch has not met together for worship for months, and its prosperity is decaying and ought to be set in order. On motion the Starfield Branch was disorganized, and the Bishop's Agent was instructed to sell the property, (chapel and lots), as soon as possible, and that Bro. Summerfield be authorized to give letters of removal to the remaining members of said branch. Resolved, That this and all other conferences of this district elect their officers by ballot. Whereas; The business interests of this district do not necessitate the holding of the conferences quarterly; and whereas, considerable of time is used and quite large expense incurred every time the conference convenes, which might otherwise be used for the greater benefit of the cause; and whereas it is our duty to use our time and means, all in the best interests of God's works; therefore be it resolved; that hereafter we hold our conferences semi-annually instead of quarterly. Resolved, That the district hold two-days' meeting as it may be deemed wise. Conference declared the Mount Hope branch disorganized for the present, the members to receive letters of removal from the district secretary. Conference requested district authorities to visit the Breckenridge Branch and learn its condition between now and next conference. Bro. Kinneman in connection with Bro. I. N. Roberts, had visited the Saints in Grundy county and found rumors concerning certain members to be false. Had preached five times in that neighborhood. The following were sustained as officers for the next quarter: Bro. J. M. Terry, president; Bro. Wm. Lewis vice president; Chas. P. Faul secretary; Bro. Wm. Lewis Bishop's Agent. A vote of thanks was tendered Bro. John T. Kinneman for his long service as president of district. Bro. Joseph R. Lambert preached Sunday morning and evening two excellent discourses. At two p. m. held social meeting. Thus ended another peaceful conference. Adjourned to meet with the German Stewartville Branch, Friday, September 10th, 1886, at 2. p. m.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

WE are informed by card from Bro. Oliver Johnson, that we erred in our statement that he was appointed a Deputy United States Marshal in Utah, by Marshal Ireland, as he had not been so appointed. We were so informed, and beg pardon for having made so great a mistake. It might have been true without reflecting any discredit upon brother Johnson.

The city of Plano, from which the Herald Office was removed in 1881, celebrated the 4th of July, and it was estimated that fifteen thousand people were present. There was no drunkenness, and no accident. The Plano newspaper commenting on the fact says:—"Does any one suppose that so large a crowd could have been entertained with so much pleasure, and so little of danger and injury, if there had been saloons in our little town?" We answer certainly not. Hurrah for Plano.

Lamoni also celebrated—music, song, reading, oration and fireworks. It was dry and dusty; everybody seemed happy and no one was hurt or injured. We heard just one man swear, and he was a young chap with a small 4th of July flag stuck in hat-band. If a man can not swear on the 4th, when can he swear? It sounded strange, however, considering.

Bro. J. A. Stewart baptized one at New Park, Pennsylvania, July 4th, blessed a number of children and administered to three that were sick.

Bro. W. H. Barrett, Box Elder, Lamar County, Colorado, wrote July 8th, stating that Bro. James Kemp was coming to preach there, and desiring that the Saints would pray that his coming might be blessed of God to the good of the cause.

Bro. Eli Clothier is at Nance, Kansas, and writes that he has located there; that the country is a good one; people sociable, and he thinks willing to hear. He proposes to "thrust in his sickle;" if he can do so in harmony with local and general authorities. Bro. Clothier is a good man, and we presume the brethren in charge will be pleased to give him a laborer's welcome. His address is, Nauce, Phillips County, Kansas; and he wishes to correspond with brethren A. H. Parsons, H. R. Harder, E. M. Reynolds and G. W. Beebe.

Bro. Wm. Culbntson wrote from Chelsea, Nebraska, July 6th, of the organization of the Chelsea Branch, June 13th, by Bro. P. W. Premo. Meetings were held every Sunday.

ONE of the most difficult things that general church officers meet with in their ministry, is the attempting to reconcile and set right questions of dispute and quarrel in branches; strifes between brethren. And indeed it is not only most difficult, but it is also one of the most unthankful.

Elders pass into a neighborhood, begin to preach, create an interest, persons are won to the idea and obey by baptism, receive the Holy Spirit through the laying on of hands, and a branch is organized. The Elder moves on, anxious to do all he can, and thinking the branch can get along without him. He has labored as a man of God. He deems all to have been sincere and honestly converted to Christ, and feels assured that they should live in peace and progress in the knowledge of the things of God. Soon, or late there is something said or done by some one, to which another takes exception as being contrary to the law of the gospel, and for which the offender should be arraigned before his brethren of like faith. The objecting party talks about the offender and the offense and a war of words ensues, until bad blood is engendered, and the power of Elders courts is invoked. Both parties deem themselves in the right, and both want justice—only justice—and that they will have.

Decisions can not please both parties. The usual sentiment is that one or the other is in the wrong; the other as a consequence is in the right. Each is confident that he is the one. When the matter is tried the Elders decide; one is much displeased with the finding. He knows that he was right, and now he is injured by false brethren, who have found contrary to law, evidence, right and even decency. He appeals to the Elder in charge, for he is a man of God and will do him justice. The Elder hears the case, and reaffirms the decision of the other Elders. And now our objecting brother is absolutely outraged. The Elder in charge has judged from outside and hearsay evidence, &c. And so it goes.

All are striving to preach that it is better to suffer wrong than to do it. But when we are brought into trial, we declare vehemently, we will not suffer such imposition—never.

How strange this is. Christ was reviled, but he reviled not again. He was spit upon, but was not made angry by it. He was struck, but did not resent it. He was spoken evil of, but reproach was not offered by him. He was arraigned before the court but took no appeal. Our opinion is, and on this we think we have a portion of inspiration, that if we were as willing to follow the advice and submit to the finding of the judges to whom we appeal for the settlement of our grievances, as we are anxious, willing and certain that others should be, the settlement of troubles would be made much easier than they now are. We certainly should be as ready to pay the "pound of flesh;" as to exact it of others.

Personally the Editor thinks that continued wrangling on the part of church members in respect to their rights, is unbecoming, and indicates clearly that those who do so are lacking in the charity that "covereth a multitude of sins." While the right of appeal is granted, we think that in six cases out of every ten the better way of procedure, if brethren go to law before the brethren, is for them both to submit to the decision first had if both sides have been fairly heard and there let the matter drop. If a brother should say, "Well, that may be your notion Mr. Editor; but as for me, I am not made of such soft stuff. The brother wronged me, and if the church can not compel him to make it right, I want nothing more of the church." We answer; the church can not compel either of you to do any thing, he to make amends, or you to forgive him. It is a question of Christian qualities, that is all. He who is the better follower of Christ will choose the wiser, and more noble part.

Many of the troubles in branches between brethren are of small importance in themselves; and are only important as they are improperly magnified by self-esteem and undue zeal. If permitted to pass at the time they occur, the parties would not be hurt, and the church would be saved much trouble and reproach. Brethren when will we become "wise servants, harmless as doves."

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. J. W. Johnson writes from Mc Fall, Gentry county, Missouri, July 8th:

"Celebration here on the 3d; little boy was accidentally shot; yesterday (7th) a rain and hail storm, during which lightning struck the Presbyterian church, damaging it greatly from belfry down. The church was owned mostly by the man who opposed Bros. Lambert and Johnson last winter; lands are cheap around Mc Fall. Bro. Johnson thinks settlers could do well settling there.

Bro. Columbus Scott writes from Michigan.

"Weather very dry in this section of the state; corn, oats and potatoes suffering from the drouth; these crops will be cut short unless rain comes soon; hay harvest dry; heat 95-8 in the shade; wheat harvest at high tide."

By letter from Bro. B. V. Springer to his wife at Lamoni, dated July 2d, we learn that Bro. B. V. was preaching at and in the vicinity of Coldwater, Michigan three and four times a week, to good audiences, and in excellent spirits. He says:

"I have regular appointments every other Sunday at the Fowler School House, at eleven and eight o'clock, and every other Sunday at the Ball School House at eleven and eight o'clock; and at the latter school house every Thursday night; and at the Brick School House, on the Pike every Tuesday night. I have awakened quite an interest, and shall try and 'hold the fort' until I see results."

THE Salt Lake Herald for July 4th, has the following resolutions. Whether they are suggestive of the wishes of the Herald, or are to be the rallying cry of a popular sentiment to get into the Union of States must be determined further on.

Whereas, a colonial or Territorial form of government in the United States was never intended to be only temporary government—to continue until the people of the respective Territories were sufficiently numerous and capable of sustaining a State government; and

Whereas; To continue a Territorial form of government after the people are capable and willing to assume the responsibilities thereof is cruel, and moreover a breach of faith with American citizens of the Territories, and contrary to American principles; and

Whereas, Utah has a population sufficient, and is capable of sustaining a State government, and is anxious to assume the responsibility; and

Whereas, Her people are loyal to the American system of government, being devoted to republicanism; and,

Whereas, The general government has no reasonable excuse for keeping Utah out of the Union; therefore,

Be it Resolved, That Utah throw off the garments of Territorial vassalage, and that she is and of right ought to be a sovereign co-ordinate State in the American Union, on an equal footing with the original States in all respects whatever.

HERE is an item for Temperance reformers, the Drink Bill of England. Not long since we gave the aggregate Drink Bill of the United States. No wonder there is a "dearth for bread."

New York Tribune: Once a year the London Times makes room for a detailed statement of England's drink bill. That statement has just appeared. It shows a reduction from 1884 for last year, but not a reduction of a character to encourage the friends of temperance. For many years the statement has been made by Mr. William Hoyle, F. S. S., but this time another member of the statistical society, Mr. Dawson Burns, D. D., signs his name to the report. The British expenditure upon drink in 1885 was $616,343,800; a decrease of about $15,000,000 from the preceding year. But Mr. Burns says: "In regard to the causes of diminution we must, I fear, look to the continued—and in some quarters increasing—depression of trade rather than the growth of thrift and temperance in the country. With the removal of this depression we should most probably find the drink bill become heavier, and its social sequences become darker." This is a reasonable inference from the statistics of preceding years. The state of trade in England always reflects itself in the drink bill. Mr. Burns gives the footings from 1860 to 1885, inclusive, and they show this very plainly.

In that quarter of a century the drink bill has mounted from $425,000,000 to $616,000,000. Mr. Burns says: "The years of commercial prosperity brought with them a vastly augmented expenditure upon strong drink, and even when that prosperity began to decline the special impetus that had been given to drinking habits resisted for a time, and yielded but slowly to the stress of diminishing resources." That is to say that people began by economizing in other directions, and only cut down the drink expenditure when they were compelled to do so; even then continuing to consume largely. Of course the increase between 1860 and 1885 is partly accounted for by growth of population, but Mr. Burns holds that allowing for this, the increase in the drink bill shows a decline rather than progress in temperance. "It is clear," he says, "that the amount of the national drink bill is still enormous, being equal to the nation's expenditure for bread, butter, and cheese; is not far short of the rents paid for farms and houses in the United Kingdom; is three times the amount spent for tea, sugar, coffee, and cocoa; and is six times the amount of our expenditure on linen and cotton goods." Taking the families of the United Kingdom at 6,000,000, the gross expenditure for drink in 1885 gives an average expenditure per family of $102.50; or reckoning five persons to a family, $20.50 per head. Of course, if those who do not drink at all are subtracted, the average is very much greater, rising in fact to $170 per family of five persons.

A FAVORITE project with Peter the Great seems likely to be carried out at last, the Russian authorities having resolved to commence work this year on a canal between the White Sea and the Baltic Sea.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY SISTER "FRANCES."

"Art builds on sand; the works of pride
And human passions change and fall;
But that which shares the life of God
With him surviveth all."

WE think the "Column" may be safely congratulated upon the hearty response which is being made by the sisters from every quarter towards sustaining it by works as well as faith. The range of its subject matter becomes more varied with each number, and it seems winning its way to the hearts and confidence of Zion's daughters. The Savior said, "Come unto me all ye that are weary and heavy laden, and I will give you rest." Who these uncheered and burdened ones were, it was possible for the Master to know, even before they came; but for us it is not possible. We realize to the fullest extent that to no one, two or three, does the space in the "Column" belong. To the wives, mothers and daughters of Zion it has been granted, and while responses in the past encourage us, we still trust the unreaped fields of the present will yield richer harvests in the future. We would be glad to have the young sisters contribute, as well as the middle aged and the old. There has never yet been a want expressed through the "Column;" but the answer to the same has come from some source (often an unexpected one) "complete and rounded out in its fullness, and we now wish to say to the sisters, as we have said in the past, Lead the way—if there is any subject any interest to which you wish to call attention, do so and if it be within the sphere of the "Home Column," do not fear that it will not be welcome.

WE are in receipt of letters from Sisters Donaldson, V. V. Short, and S. A. Russell.

LAMONI, IOWA, July 12th, 1886.

HOLDEN, July 3d.

Dear Sisters of the "Home Column":—I have for several weeks thought that I would send greeting and thanks to you for your good and efficient work, already flourishing though so young; and something would always transpire to prevent until to-day when a nation is rejoicing over victories won, and liberties enjoyed—independence sustained, in short, celebrating the glorious fourth of July. Our town is still as on the Sabbath of our Lord; every one, nearly, having gone out of town, and I am left quite alone with my thoughts. I feel to offer my heartfelt thanks to you all for the good this department has done me; and though I love the dear Herald, and feel how good it was before, yet to-day how many rejoice that it is so rounded out and perfect in its fullness with the "Home Column" added. I am a mother as many of you are, and feel my inefficiency as many mothers do, to guide and lead my boy. He is all I have on earth, the good Father having taken my only daughter a sweet bud, to himself, "before the evil days came." She was the light of our since darkened household, the joy of her mother, the pride of her father, the pet of her brother. Since her death the mother has accepted and obeyed the gospel of Jesus Christ, and come into the light to walk no more in darkness. Oh how I look back to-day with tears of regret when I think of her dear little prattling talk during her last days. She said, "mamma, I know it will be nice up there where God is for, he takes good care of little children, and I'd be so glad if you'd be there." Mothers, what think you would I have been willing to give to be able to say to her "Lilly darling, mamma will come, she will be there." But though I had been a member of the Episcopal Church for years, I could not open my mouth. I could not say one word to her, and so she left me, and for years I was almost wild with grief. My child's last words were tugging at my heart, "Mamma, I'd be so glad if you'd be there." But thank God! the Comforter came, the spirit of truth; and now I am able to say that if I am faithful and keep God's commandments to do them, I shall not fear. Lilly and I will embrace each other in one of those mansions prepared for those who love him and keep his commandments. Dear sisters, excuse this wail of a mother's almost broken heart. I said you had done me good, so you have, more than I could tell you. You have made many dark passages of life brighter. You have solved for me many knotty problems; you have made many home duties more plain to me, and in short, you have made a path that has not hitherto been strewn with roses, very pleasant. I am a young Saint. I have not been in the church very long, not a year until the fourth of this month, so you see I have hardly come into the work; yet how I love it! Pray for me, dear sisters, that I may get great strength from on high, and be fitted to do a work for the Master that he will approve. There is a little band of Saints just started in Holden, seven in all, I think; very weak, very feeble; but all very earnest, I believe. Pray for us one and all, who read this, that we may grow and multiply and become a power in the midst of a sinful community for doing good. In gospel bonds, your Sister, EMMA W. SIMPSON.

NORBORNE, MO.

Dear Sister Frances:—With great interest have I read the "Mothers' Home Column." I felt impressed to write sooner, but hesitated because I don't know the American language well enough to express my thoughts in it, but since I read "The Appeal" I can restrain my desires no longer. It is to me very impressive, particularly the verse:

"To be saved is only this,— Salvation from our selfishness;—
From more than elemental fire;—
The soul's unsanctified desire;—
From sin itself, and not the pain
That warns us of its chafing chain."

Would to God that all engaged in the latter day work were thus saved! How beautifully would it roll on, all pushing and laboring to that effect; we would not only buy one yard less of costly lace or costly ornaments, but we would live strictly after the Doctrine and Covenants, where it says that our garments should be plain. How many dollars could be saved in that direction to help meet the demands of the church. It is necessary to be saved from our selfishness and from unsanctified desires of our souls. Truly if we are saved from selfishness, and if the desires of our souls are sanctified, then we are saved from sin, and ready to do the work that God wants us to do, keeping our eyes single that we have no inclination to keep up with the fashions of the world; for it takes all our time and talents to learn (study) the will of the Lord, and then to do it—in every respect to become fit subjects, adorned with all the Christian graces complete, with all manner of good works, so that at last we may enter into our Lord's joy.

I am glad the Sunday School is mentioned in the "Home Column." I have seen no Hope yet. I love to learn myself, so in answer to your request I will subscribe for two. May God bless you in your effort, and grant you success.

Now, in regard to raising children, I would like to make a few remarks. I have raised seven to maturity. One of them died an obedient son of fifteen years and a half; was initiated into the kingdom during his sickness. He stretched forth both of his arms when the messenger came, and his end was peace. In raising them I have had many trials, for it was my sincere object to raise them for the Lord. It would be too lengthy to tell my experience, but it has taught me that a mother must be herself what she wants her children to be. She must have self-knowledge, which she must ask and obtain from God. Then she will have to train and conquer herself, and this she can only do by letting God take full possession of her heart, so that the love of God is always burning in her soul. Thus prepared, she will study her children; for there is a difference, even in the same family of children. Some can be guided with words of love alone, while others of necessity at times have to be chastised. In most cases the mother will see her own nature in her children, and having experienced such an awful struggle to train and conquer herself, she is ready to use and exercise more patience. Love and patience work together. The first thing in the morning after rising by her bedside she will approach the throne of God and have herself well supplied with strength. If she neglects this, she will be wanting before night. There ought to be some rules. If the children shall be raised for the Lord they must hear something about him. My rule was, after breakfast, to have them all seated around to listen to the word of God when read, making some remarks to have them interested; after father's prayer the oldest one would say the Lord's prayer. Next time the next oldest, and so on till all had said it in turn. For the baby at the time I would say it, and have its little hands folded in mine. It soon understood what it meant, and its bright eyes would glisten. Now with an easy heart and clear conscience I leave the result with God.

MRS. JACOB KNIPSCHILD.

Dear mothers who read this letter, let us beseech you not to pass it by with one hasty reading. Bro. Butler said, "It is evident that the fire that refines and purifies, burns in the hearts of the mothers of latter day Israel." This letter in its quaint wording, its beautiful, touching simplicity, should be precious beyond measure to the heart of every mother who is striving for an inheritance "incorruptible, pure and undefiled," not only for herself, but for the children God has given her. We have read much upon the subject of home influence and home training, but here is the pen picture of a home, worthy to be set forever in our hearts and imitated in our lives. When such letters come to us we feel much like the British officers felt when they saw Gen. Marion dining off sweet potatoes, using the bark of a tree for a plate. "Such men," they said, "can never be conquered." When all our homes are consecrated to God, then will this cause move on, "Clear as the sun, fair as the moon, and terrible as an army with banners."—Ed.

CLEVELAND, IOWA.

Sister Frances:—When at conference last spring, I promised to write for the "Mother's Home Column." At that time I intended to put forth an effort to do so, but since then I have let household cares occupy my time and attention.

When I read your appeal in the Herald of May 29th, I said, "Thank God there is some one interested in the Sunday School work and willing to take charge of the Lesson Leaves, and if there were more such interested in the Sunday School, how great and useful a work could be done with the rising generation." Oh, if I could live my days over, with the experience of the past, I would teach my children very differently; but with the experience of the past I will try to improve the future. It is never too late to do better.

The Sunday School is something I have taken a great interest in ever since I came into the church, and have frequently spoken to some of our Elders about the church or those connected with the Board of Publication trying to get up a catechism or paper of our faith and belief—something to teach the young and rising generation, especially children whose parents are connected with the church. Let it commence with such questions as, Who was the first man? first woman? Who made you? and go from one question to another until finally it should drift into our faith and belief.

Some people tell me when I speak of such a work, "You are drifting into sectarianism." Well sectarians sing and pray; because they sing and pray shall we forbear to do so? Shall we cease to sing and pray because others do? The Bible tells us to prove all things, and hold fast to that which is good. If they have any good should we refuse it?

A short time ago I went to a Catholic meeting. At the close of the service the priest told his members he intended to bring out some Catechisms at the next time for service and he wanted them taught to the children. He told them he intended to come around after a time and see if they were taught to the children. Now if we have a greater light and more truth than others, and love the work as we ought to, and testify of its truthfulness from time to time, should we not put forth as great efforts to bring up our children in the principles and doctrine of our faith as other people do in their faith and belief?

A great portion of the Bible is entirely a mystery, and not understood by Sunday School children, while if there was a catechism of questions and answers on the Bible, an impression would be made. The Book of Mormon and Doctrine of Covenants are very little spoken about in our Sunday School. Bro. Cadwell did well, and a great deal of good for our school, and we appreciate it, but with the Hope being so small, he did not have a very good chance to do much; but it is not the great things we will be rewarded for, but the amount of good we do. I had intended when the lessons prepared by Bro. Cadwell were through in the Hope to use a catechism prepared by the "American Tract Society," coupled with a catechism that I have that teaches the belief of our faith; but as you have taken this matter in hand I will gladly use what you see fit to prepare; and will pray God he will bless your efforts. I will do my best, individually and in a financial way, to help you make this a success. Our Sunday School Superintendent appointed a committee to solicit aid, and I learn they are succeeding well. Your appeal in the Hope to the children is good. I hear several talking about how they will try to raise their fifty cents by the September month.

Now, sister Frances, I did not intend when I commenced to write any thing for publication, but if this will help the cause in any way I am willing my feeble efforts shall be used. Trusting you will be able to accomplish the good you desire, and that your appeal may bring about the desired result, I remain your sister in Christian bonds, H. E. BIRCHELL.

[Such a work as sister Burchell speaks of was carefully prepared for the church and published by them some twenty years ago. The edition was exhausted and has not been reprinted. Sister Birchell is not the only one feeling the need of such a work. We believe we may safely say that if we except the Bible and infant classes, there are very few classes in our Sunday Schools, whose teachers do not need such a book. When the Board of Publication were appealed to this spring to republish it, the answer was, "We are not able." We can not help feeling that the time will come when the church (the entire membership) will feel themselves able to meet greater demands than this. God says his people shall be a willing people in the day of his power, and mark you beloved Saints, that day is not far distant. We would answer those who object to instructing by questions and answers, Is there a better way? if so give it to us, for "Hear, O, Israel; the Lord our God is one Lord * * * And these words which I command thee this day, shall be in thine heart; and thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thine house and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up."—Deut. 6: 7-9. We commend to the careful consideration of those holding on with a tenacious grip to that which belongs to the Lord, while the lambs of the fold are unfed and uncared for, the following extract from one of Sam Jones' sermons in Baltimore. It can not be called sectarian.—Ed.]

"Get all the duties and privileges of life into harmony with your soul, and that's religion. I'm tired of hearing men talk about sacrifices they have made for religion. It's a lie. A man never sacrificed anything for religion. Thirteen years ago I got down into my pockets and pulled the dirt out and turned the pockets inside out, and before I could get them turned back God had filled them with diamonds. The cross part of my life is gone with me. The hardest work I ever did for the church made me the happiest when it was done. Virtue carries with it its own reward. It pays you as you go. I want to see a crowd religious while they are giving. Take God into partnership with you. He can make ears of corn grow fourteen inches long on sandy hillsides, and I've seen men gather nubbins on bottom land. This is all God's land, and you've got to pay rent. If you don't do it, he'll take ten bales of cotton out of your field.

"Just pass the hat around and see how quick the shouting will stop. The kind of religion some people have is spurious."

WEBB CITY, Mo., June 16th.

Dear Sisters:—When I think of the many who have the ability to write for our column, I almost shrink from the task, but I have learned that all have a work to do, and as my greatest desire is to see this work advance I will try to do all I can, and leave the results in the hands of the Lord. I know if I have his spirit to guide my thoughts while penning these few lines, I shall be amply repaid. I have been meditating all day on this great latter day work, and especially on tithing. I know if one principle of the doctrine is true, they are all true, and when we obeyed the gospel we were promised to receive a knowledge, and many testify they did receive that knowledge. Do not those who have obeyed the law of tithing testify they have been blessed, and if we expect the world to receive our testimony, how much more should we receive the testimony of our brethren? I have long felt the need of paying tithing. I have heard some say, "Such a one does not pay tithing, and why should I?" We can not receive blessings from the works of others sufficient to save us, nor can we clear our selves by not doing our duty and setting a good example for others; for if the weakest of God's children teach a truth it is as much of a truth as if it came from one in the highest office. I have often learned lessons from little children; so sisters, let us try to forward this work, and if we feel to write on any subject that concerns the welfare of the work or our welfare, let us write, and in so doing we may cause some to stop and think, and perhaps obey the laws of God more fully. I greatly desire to raise my children to be shining jewels in the kingdom of God. Two are already in; three are out, but I hope the time is near that we will be all a united family in Christ. Ever praying for the prosperity of Zion, I am your sister in the one faith.

R. M. BRADLEY.

NOVA SCOTIA, June 24th.

Dear Sister Frances:—I have often thought of writing a few words to thank you and other sisters for your kind encouraging words in the "Home Column." Many times have I received timely advice and comfort from reading the different letters, being inexperienced and having a great desire to do right by my three boys. I used to think it a responsibility that I was not capable of undertaking, my own imperfections seem to shine out so bright, impatience being my besetting sin; but I think I am learning wisdom from your pages, and trust by the help of the all-wise One to overcome more and more. I would I had talent to write for the "Home Column." I think it is so nice to talk to each other. Although so far apart and comparative strangers, yet how strong is the bond that unites us in this glorious work, and we feel that we are really and truly sisters. Hoping and praying for your advancement in the good cause, I remain your affectionate sister, KATE.

SHERMAN, Mich., June 25th.

Dear Sisters:—Although I do not feel worthy I would like a place in your "Home Column." It is something that was needed and it is splendid. I can say for one that it has done me a great deal of good. I have seven children to look after, and our branch is not in a very flourishing condition, and we live so far apart that it is almost impossible to have a Sabbath School, and when we have had one, the Methodists would not join in, or have anything to do with us. I want to tell you how good the Lord has been to me, and my trust is in him. The last time Elder E. C. Briggs was here two years ago this summer, our little Ethel was very sick and had never been very well. He came and administered to her, and from that time to this she has been well and hearty, and I took her to meeting that same evening. He spared my life through a great danger last spring, for which I am truly thankful. I have a great many trials to go through, but with him to help me I shall conquer. I tell you these Latter Day Saints are a good people, and I like them all so much. There is something that draws them together that other churches know nothing of. Your sister.

ETTIE GULEMBE.

HOW MANY children would it be possible for you to gather together on the Sabbath day? If other duties permit and you were only able to interest and instruct your own family in the gospel plan of salvation, you will be doing a work over which the angels will rejoice. Use the lessons now being published in the Hope, but read in and constantly refer to the word of God. Sing the sweet hymns of Zion with the children and the blessing of God will be with you and his Holy Spirit will help you. We earnestly wish every parent in the Church of Christ would try the words of the wise man and see whether they are not true. How glad the devil must be when he sees the training of innocent children committed to him, for he well knows what lasting impressions can be made upon the wax of their unformed minds. "Wax to receive, but marble to retain." Let us beseech the scattered ones, to gather their children together upon the Lord's day, and instruct them in his ways. Not only upon the Lord's day, but by the silent preaching of their example, upon every day of the week, and so surely as all the mothers in the church will do this, soon a mighty host of warriors will arise, fully equipped for the conflict of truth with error, of right with wrong, and there is no question upon whose banner victory will be inscribed.—(Ed)

June 30th.

Dear Sister Frances:—I thought I would write a few lines for the "Home Column," to thank you all for the good your letters have done me. I have learned great lessons from them, as how to bring up my children right, which is a great care on my mind. As God has given them to me I want to bring them up as would be pleasing to him. I am trying, in my weak way, to serve the Lord. I try to take Christ for my pattern, and study the gospel, and pray for knowledge and wisdom that I may be able to meet every temptation of the devil with the written word of God. I pray for light and guidance to keep my feet in the narrow way. Dear sisters, let us put on the gospel armor and work while the day lasts. May we let our light shine before the world, that they may see that we have the true gospel and have his holy Spirit to guide us into all truth. Let us be meek and humble, and try in our weakness to strengthen and comfort each other; and may you, sister Frances, be blest in your labor, and have his Spirit always to be with you is the prayer of your sister in Christ,
JENNIE TURNER.

Correspondence.

GRAND RAPIDS, July 8th.

Bro. W. W. Blair:—The people are getting quite interested in the work here. I was called to visit the Saints at Chelsea, about twenty-five miles distant; met with them May the 30th, preached twice; baptized one. Met with them again June 13th, spoke twice, and organized a branch to be known as the Chelsea Branch; ordained one Priest and one Teacher. Met with them again July 3d and 4th; spoke four times, baptized two; blessed five children. Those baptized were all adults, and are noble hearted Saints. If an Elder will visit them he will find a pleasant home. While the Spirit of God is with his children the devil rages without. While we were attending to the ordinance of baptism, after I had stepped into the water, a few young men who stood on the bank threw a dog into the water a few feet from me; and when they saw that it did not disturb us, they felt ashamed and left us. The Spirit is with me when I am trying to preach his word and I feel a strong desire to be in the work continually. May his blessing rest upon every effort in this glorious cause is my prayer. Yours in the one faith,

P. W. PREMO.

Brn. Joseph and Blair:—The conference of Spring River District was held on the 11th 12th and 13th ult., with the Mound Valley branch; the attendance was not so large as on similar occasions, owing to "busy times." Still we had good refreshing times by the presence of the Spirit. All the business sessions were peaceful and harmonious, and the preaching was good; two were added by baptism. One of the principal features was the ordering by the dictation of the Spirit the ordination of several good brethren to different offices of the Priesthood, in the different branches for the more complete organization of the same, which we think will result in great good to those branches; as also it will add to our strength in presenting the gospel by the additions to the offices of Priests and Elders of good worthy men. Our next conference is to be held at Webb City, Missouri, and the intentions of the Saints are to try to get one, or both of Ye Editors to attend if possible. You will get good crowds, and we believe you can do great good to the cause here. Our prospects are promising, only just now the hot season, and harvest interferes some. Bro. Charles Ragan is constantly in the field. Bro. Ed. Wheeler partly. Brn. J. Arthur Davis and J. M. Richards are talking of entering the field altogether this fall and winter, very probably J. Alfred Davis and others—the Spirit of willingness and self-sacrificing for to preach the gospel, seems to rest on these brethren, and others. May the Lord bless them for the work. We attended to the ordination of those among us, called to the Seventies, according to provision of General Conference with evident approval of the Spirit of the Master. We miss Brn. E. A. Davis and Warren Peak very much. We gave them as good a "send-off" as we could, and they have the prayers of all of us to go with them, and trust they will be greatly blessed in their distant field of labor, and that their absence from us will only give room to those of us that are left to grow more vigorously, and expand to greater proportions for the work before us.

Allow me to set brother W. S. Loar of Independence, Missouri, to rights on the "permission" question; for he must think we are selfish and uncharitable, if we judge from what appeared in his letter in the Herald a while back, in not taking notice of his letter asking permission to labor some in the district, &c. We inform Bro. Loar that we never received his letter, or we would gladly have given our permission, and invited Bro. Loar to help us. We thank him for his visit to Elk county. It was much needed, and Bro. Loar has left a good record there of many years of toil in early days under trying circumstances. Come again, Bro. Loar, any time, and all the time if it suits you, and we will be glad. The string of the district door "hangs on the outside" to all that love the cause of the Master. Would to God that all the Elders, like a great Salvation Army, as they are, could come and help us. An arrangement was made at our conference for every branch in the district to appoint an agent to communicate with Bro. Peters of Michigan, concerning the distribution of the Voice of Warning and other books from the Office. We think this a good way to help in the good work.

In bonds,

J. T. DAVIS.

LAMONI, Iowa, July 14th.

Editors Herald:—Since the General Conference I have preached a few times at home, and have spent about six weeks in the field, preaching and bestowing labor at Davis City and Lucas, Iowa; and at Stewartville (city and country), Cameron (city and country), and Bevier, Missouri. While at Stewartville, the case of E. C. Brand vs. L. L. Babbitt was heard; brethren Hawkins, Meriam and myself being the court. I trust that a finality to this unpleasant affair has been reached, and that all concerned have been made wiser by a peculiar and trying experience.

I spoke twice (Sunday morning and evening) in the South Methodist Church in Cameron. We felt grateful for the privilege, so kindly permitted by the trustees of the church.

As a rule it requires a vast amount of careful labor in order to secure any permanent good to the cause. We, as a people, are partially responsible for this state of affairs. I am glad, however, to witness a growing disposition upon the part of many of the Saints, at most places where I have labored of late, to be more prayerful and careful; and this conclusion leads to a more full compliance with God's laws, including the paying of tithes and offerings into the Lord's storehouse. Tithing, as taught in the Doctrine and Covenants, is in harmony with the teachings of the New Testament. Additional law, revelation or instruction, does not necessarily make a conflict. If it does, then the Bible is in terrible conflict with itself.

On account of ill health, it is with great difficulty that I am able to do duty in the field. How long I shall be able to continue, without a radi-change, God only knows. However, so long as I am able to do something for the advancement of the cause, I know what my duty is. I would much rather say to the missionaries and Elders, in my field, "Come," than to say "Go," but I can not always do it.

Will those who are not spending their time in the ministry, when they write letters which need to be answered, be so kind as to enclose a stamp?

Yours in the hope and love of the gospel,

JOSEPH R. LAMBERT.

STARVATION CREEK, Kan., June 2d.

Bro. Joseph:—Brother G. W. Shute and I have labored doing what we could to induce the people to embrace the truth. We have held two basket meetings, baptized four; and others are near the kingdom. Bro. Shute leaves me in a few days to return home to take care of his family. I am sorry such is the case, for we need his help. All the Saints in the district who want to assist in getting a tent will please send money to G. W. Shute, Blue Rapids, Kansas. We want to make a purchase by August first. We want to hold a camp-meeting in September, when all the Saints can come and take part. May God bless the work is the prayer of your brother in Christ,

A. H. PARSONS.

LIMERICK, Ohio, July 6th.

Dear Herald:—In your weekly rounds you bring tidings of truth and great joy to a few needy creatures nestling among the hills at Limerick, Ohio. You bring us food for thought. You strengthen us in our already formed resolutions. You cause us to reflect, examine, experiment; yes, in many ways have we been benefited by perusing your pages. We have striven to imprint upon our mind those lessons that have been most striking and far reaching to us as an individual. This morning, while sitting down a few moments to rest, I read a portion of Elder E. L. Kelley's sermon, of April 8th. I could not stop at, or with a portion, but read on to the end; but while doing so, would often pause and think. Grand, nobler and higher thoughts forced themselves upon our mind; even above that we have yet attained unto. The deepest feeling of my heart, my mind, my spirit, yea, all that is life within my being, is united with this expression. "To do my Father's holy will, by keeping all his commandments; observing the whole law; that his Spirit may abide with me, to lead and guide into all truth, and away from all error." Trials of various kinds arise in our pathway and we must learn to act wisely and well, according to the nature of the same. I realize that I have been very unworthy and have tailed many times, even in that that I desired not to; yet I can perceive I have made some advancement in the right direction. We often think it is good for us to fail sometimes; it brings us to that point to know that of ourselves we can not overcome. With divine assistance we can overcome all things and endure all things. The work in this region has an outlook for good. The Elders, the main working force, (aided and unaided by the Bishop), are going forth as best they can to save their fellow man, to help build up the great work of God. Souls are being added, and we hope such as will endure to the end. The Spirit of Tithing is making a deep impression upon the minds of many, if not all in this region, desiring to comply with the law. But how to begin, where and when is the question. We read, one individual said in answer to a question "How can I (understand) except some man should guide (or teach) me. And he desired the questioner that he would "come up and sit with him," no doubt that he might be instructed fully. So also is our desire. And more, we cordially invite one or more of the Bishopric to visit us that we may learn in both public and private our duties in this direction; so that we may not come behind in a good work or word. To the one that comes, sooner or later, we would suggest, to have quite a stock of patience and long forbearance on hand. For we are an inquisitive people. I write this from observation and trust it is not without weight. We read in the Book, "To everything there is a season and a time to every purpose under heaven." We are very much interested in the "Home Column," gather some noble ideas, and often my heart rejoices. Yet we do not feel to contribute to that Column. I have no children therefore do not feel competent for such an important duty. As ever a helper in our glorious cause.

ELLA R. DEVORE.

BIRD CITY, Kan., July 1st.

Dear Herald:—We have been honored with a visit from brother Thomas J. Smith, who was returning from his timber claim in Sherman county to his homestead in Dundee county, Nebraska. He reports good crops and seems elated over this part of the globe. We welcome all Saints who will come with the intention of letting their light shine; for the way sometimes gets pretty dark. Not wishing to complain, I am as ever your sister, MRS. DIAN CARTER.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., July 12th.

Bro. Blair:—At our late quarterly conference we had a time of peace. The Spirit of the Master was present and gave his children words of comfort; a time long to be remembered—to him be the glory. I am still striving to keep the banner of King Emanuel flying, and am glad to say his spirit is with me in presenting the word, and in the duties pertaining to the Eldership; by his Spirit and grace I hope to win the prize.

Yours in the true light,

NOAH NEPHI COOK,

TROUBLE AMONG THE SAINTS.

AFTER much reflection we have concluded that we have observed a very prolific cause of trouble, discord and hardness among the Saints, which might be easily avoided if the members at large were more fully aware of the extent and seriousness of the evil we desire to call attention to.

We first call attention to the words of Jesus, "Judge not that ye be not judged." Those words when properly understood, we think, are very full of meaning and counsel; and yet it must be evident that the injunction "judge not" can not be made to apply to those who are divinely appointed to act as "judges" "in Israel," as they are required to sit in judgment upon the transgressor; and from the further remark of the Savior where he points out the nature of that kind of judging that he forbids. The mote in the brother's eye was seen, but the beam in the observer's, or self appointed judge's eye, had not been observed. No reference was made to a legally seated tribunal, but to a common fault finder who could behold and magnify even a mote in his brother's eye; but was at the same time wholly unconscious of a more serious wrong in his own life and conduct—a beam in his own.

That the mote referred to could not have been sin, or "transgression of written law," is evident from the use of the term mote, a diminutive term and certainly Jesus would not so speak of violations of his law while acting as a public teacher, for he neither knew nor taught any compromise with sin; nor spoke of it as a diminutive or unimportant matter, but always arraigned it as such. A mote observed by us in any article, or on the face of any article, which in order to be perfect should be free from motes, would not be a very serious objection to it, as the term mote offers to us at once the idea of a very small particle of foreign matter, or objectionable substance; in fact, the smallest possible speck or particle would exactly meet our idea of a mote; and should our eyes be in any way clouded we might see an imaginary mote, or fail to see clearly a real mote, and injure the delicate tissues of the eye from which we as self appointed operators desired to remove it; and so the case would be made worse; hence the necessity of first being sure that our own eyes are perfect, that we may be able to act with certainty in removing the mote from the brother's eye, lest we injure rather than benefit the brother for whom we assume the right to correct his sight.

Now, it is evident to us that the eye was used by Jesus figuratively, and symbolized the mental, or spiritual, and the moral perception. That mote in that eye (moral perception) was a small, though real defect in such perception; and the beam a real and greater defect. It would be well to remember that the greater defect was not found in the eye of the one that was judged, but in the eye of the one who had beheld the mote in his brother's eye, and who in his over officious zeal had made himself a remover of motes; while he was himself a retainer of beams. May this not usually be found to be true, that the one who sees so many motes, which by his assumed superior wisdom he proposes to cast out is in possession of faults which, as compared to the faults of those he accuses as a beam compared with a mote. Is not this the moral of the parable, or the inference set forth.

That there are many defects (motes) to be found on the lens of our moral eyes, (or perception) is self-evident to us; and that it would be a great blessing that they were removed is certain, but who is it that is competent to do this exceeding delicate job. The answer comes clearly from the parable, and with force, "He alone, out of whose eye (moral perception) the beam of imperfection has been cast; He alone whose own eye is single to the glory of God. Cast the beam first out of thine own eye, and then shalt thou be more competent to cast the mote out of thy brother's eye." But what is it to have an eye single to the glory of God, or to have a single eye, in a gospel sense. The book of Doctrine and Covenants says: "If your eye be single * * then are ye sanctified; and your whole body shall be full of light." Such, and those alone are qualified to cast out motes or correct the defects in the moral perceptions of erring Israel. (I use the word err, not as of sin, but error in judgment, as to real and perfect propriety). But what is usually the spiritual status of the one who has and would fain cast the mote out of his brother's eye? Is he usually a holy man (or woman)? Is his body usually full of light? Is he usually one of those who is described on the last page of the Book of Mormon, who is blameless and without spot, or is he as declared in the parable under consideration, one that has a beam in his own eye? One who is more faulty than those whose motes he would erase? Let each Saint reflect and see that no such fault-finder has any influence over them against the brother whose mote they would gladly and eagerly point out, while their own light is dimmed by a more serious and hurtful fault, or beam.

There are those who seek to cast out motes who are not as honorable as the one Jesus described; for he went to the brother and said, "Hold and let me pull the mote out." But we have sometimes known of people who saw a real or supposed mote in a brother's eye, and then went away from him, saying nothing to him about it; but when they got from one to fifty miles away from him, they undertook to cast it out at long range, by telling the brethren and sisters, and possibly others also, that brother B. had a great mote in his eye; and they kept describing its proportions as viewed by an eye dimmed by the presence of a beam, and how at such terrible long range too, from the object described, that those brethren and friends concluded that the poor brother's eye must be very large, and the mote a veritable mountain (of faults). (Those beams are great magnifiers, especially at long range).

Finally, however, the brother who possessed the eye of motes, met those brethren who had been so kindly advised of his misfortunes in vision, (moral perception), and they, of course, feeling very sorry for him, watched very closely,—they wanted to see that mote. They are not quite so good, however, at long range observation as their illustrious informer who had described the mote to them; his eye, (moral attitude) seems about as clear as that of their informer's or their own. They don't find the mote, but the mote caster says: "Ah, but these motes can't be seen in full sunlight." The poor brother with the mote had the Spirit of love, and so had the brethren that day; the sky was clear, and strange as it may seem, we never see any motes those bright days when "charity never faileth." "But," says the mote-finder, "just wait till brother B. is seen in a cloudy day; then you can see a great spot on his eye. I know him, I tell you. His eyes are bad when a storm comes. When trial overtakes him, poor soul, he shows weakness. When weary and care-worn he is nervous." But brother Mote-seer has no such faults, or at least thinks so, though he has been known to get terrible mad; and it was not a very cloudy day either, when he showed the beam in his eye.

Another time, sister mote-seer and her husband went to visit brother X and wife. Brother X went down to the market, got the best he could find; tried to make them comfortable and welcome. His busy wife flew around and busied and over-heated herself in cooking for her guests. After breakfast they took a cab for the park; they went to an ice cream parlor and feasted; then they went to church; sung, prayed and started home, each to their own house. Sister mote-seer was very quiet; looked as grave as an owl; had but little to say, and her husband knowing what he would hear when the silence broke, cautiously evaded giving her any cause, or chance to commence photographing motes. But finally the wondrous heat caused on her brain by the focalizing power of her mote-seeing lens, burst into terrific flames, and from her vivid pictures of motes, specks and spots seen during her visit, you would suppose she had not eaten a meal, occupied a bed, or been the object of the least hospitality whatever. In fact, any one hearing her disparaging description of the brethren she had met, would suppose they were veritable dupes, or ignoramuses. It was not a part of her business to see good things done, but see and cast out motes, large ones they were too, for motes; and they were also being blown out at long range. Well the photographs of the faults and defects are finally all taken; the "long range" effort to blow out the motes however was a failure, and the relief obtained was that sister mote-seer had relieved herself of all the suppressed fault-finding she had hoarded up during her visit; coolly and quietly she resumes her domestic duties; takes long breaths for a day or two, and offers up the prayer, "Forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those that trespass against us. Be merciful to us wherein we have erred, as we are merciful to those we see err from straight paths." And after so praying, arises, takes another long breath and concludes she is a pretty good saint after all; while all around her breathe more freely with great sense of relief that the storm is now over, and a day at least of rest is at hand.

We do not claim that these identical circumstances have ever occurred, which we described; but we are assured that a very similar train of occurrences frequently transpires. We only aim to show how it is that we often find discord and trouble, division, contention and strife among the Saints, by some setting themselves up as judges over the acts of others in domestic affairs. One will find fault that brother Johns is not strict enough with his children, another that brother Smith is too strict with his. Another, that sister so and so is too precise, is proud and dons too much style; while another is too careless in her personal habits; that this one and that one does not do this and that; while of course the only standard of right thought is the personal habits of the fault-finder, the busy-body in other men and women's business. A fine standard this,—too.

Now what standard have we as to propriety in domestic government, in reference to cooking, general house-keeping, correcting and training children, &c. I know of none, only as it is found in the judgment and tastes of persons having charge of such matters. In fact there could be no code of laws to govern children by in early youth, as different modes of government must be adopted for differently constituted children; and for each of such, a separate code would be required. The matter must be left either to a special command in special cases, or to the judgment of persons in control, being restrained only from cruelty by statutory provisions; but for one professed Saint to interfere with, or reproachfully speak of another who differs from them in matters of taste, judgment, and so on, where no written law exists, is an unwarranted and hurtful assumption, wholly unworthy of a true Saint of God. It is in these matters that we may expect differences of opinion and taste, and from an indiscreet urging of personal opinion in such matters upon others, and censuring such as will not submit to our dictum arises a very large per cent. of branch troubles. Gossip of an unfavorable character, light and depreciating remarks, unkind comments upon the domestic habits of brethren and sisters, are all alike unchristian, unholy and unbecoming of Saints; and when we shall cease to be cursed with such things, a very hurtful enemy to our progress and happiness will have been vanquished. Why arrogate to ourselves the right to dictate to others in matters left wholly to individual discretions, judgment and taste? Why assume that our judgment is so far superior to that of our brethren as to allow ourselves to condemn them and speak unkindly of them, because they think and consequently act differently from us.

The only remedy it seems to us for such differences, is the highest possible culture as to taste, judgment, habit, etc. Our advantages, environments, early training, and teaching have been different; and from hence arises differences of taste, of sentiment and of judgment. But notwithstanding all this, the command has been given. "Cease to find fault one with another, cease to be idle, cease to be unclean." Above all, we should say, "cease to find fault one with another;" obey the written word, closely adhere to the "perfect law of liberty." Thus secure, the Spirit which will aid you to form proper conception of proper domestic rules, habits and governments, and also to attend to your own business, while you treat with kindness and love all such as differ from you in judgment, taste or opinion. "Cast first the beam out of thine own eye," and you will then be able to keep the command, "Cease to find fault one with another;" to bear each other's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ, then would there be no more cause for trouble among the Saints.

THE FALL.

THIS article was followed by a very concise statement by the editor on page 380, giving some very rare views (to us) in reference to the fall, among which we mention 1, That Eve, when she transgressed, must be cast out of the garden.

2, That Adam knew this before he partook of the forbidden fruit.

3, That he, because of this knowledge, and to avoid being robbed of Eve's companionship, did partake, knowing what would follow.

4, That the reason why he so elected, was that he could not keep the command to "multiply" if Eve should be cast out of the garden, (which was certain after she had sinned), and he by obedience should remain in the garden.

5, That he therefore violated the command "thou shalt not eat," in order to keep the command to "multiply."

6, That notwithstanding all this, Adam, though acting independently in the premises, was not deceived.

Now, as the above propositions cover some of the ground we had expected to canvas, we hope the editor will not think us impertinent if we should be bold enough to ask him some questions relative thereto, or should differ from him in some respects in the matter under consideration.

(1) Where may we find the proof that it was rendered certain that Eve must leave the garden in case of transgression, (or as a part of the penalty attached thereto?) (2) Where is proof found that Adam knew that Eve would be cast out in case of violation of the commandments given? (3) Where is the evidence that he, (Adam) acted under the considerations indicated? (4) This shows that Adam supposed that the command to "multiply" would be binding on him if he should remain in the garden through obedience, and be hindered from multiplying by Eve being cast out.

We claim this course of reasoning by Adam was false if he so reasoned, and find our justification for the conclusion in the principal as revealed in Doctrine and Covenants, where the Lord says concerning such cases, viz., where men are hindered from doing a work which he had commanded, that he will not require that work any more at their hands. Hence if Eve had sinned, and Adam had not, and God had cast Eve out and allowed Adam to remain in the garden, then because of Eve's sin, would Adam have been hindered from doing the work as indicated in the command to multiply, and therefore he not being the guilty party, would not have been held responsible for the non-fulfillment of the said command, it being no longer binding on him, could not be justly required at his hands. Now, in the light of the claim that Adam thought that he would be held responsible for the non-fulfillment of the command to multiply when inavoidably hindered by others, and the further fact that he according to proposition (5) thought it necessary to violate one command in order to keep another, how, in reason's name can it be claimed (if he so reasoned) that he was in no way deceived as found in proposition (6), provided the conclusions referred to be accepted as matters of fact. Such reasoning (if true) arrays God's laws against God's laws, and placed man where he had no choice but to violate one or the other of the two commands. Either he must violate the command "not" to "eat" or the one to "multiply." The idea of God placing man where he must sin, and then because of sin victimizing him to death, misery, and woe, is a monstrosity. Nay, verily; God never placed man in a position to destroy his agency and held him responsible for the exercise thereof. It was Satan who placed Eve where the accrued conditions made it look like man's agency was at an end, that he must sin and could not avoid it. (And such deception by Satan caused his primary humiliation and depravity). God has however revealed the truth, that he holds none responsible when obedience is inavoidably hindered. And that Adam would not therefore have been held responsible for the non-fulfillment of the command to multiply.

As to the text cited from 2d Timothy, 2: 14—"And Adam was not deceived, but the woman being deceived was in the transgression." This text if made to do service in the premises that Adam knew perfectly the results and was in no way deceived in the matter, would prove too much. For if the absoluteness of the text be claimed, it would also prove logically that Adam did not transgress, just as surely as it would from that he was not deceived. Now let us analyze it and see what such rules of interpretation would prove. 1st, We have the following—"Adam was not deceived." 2d. But the woman was. And 3d, that she, because of being deceived, was therefore in the transgression. Here the fact of the woman being deceived is made the basis of the argument that she was in the transgression. If therefore the being deceived was the foundation and proof of her being in the transgression, the absence of such foundation and proof would prove the converse of the conclusion, viz., that Adam not being deceived, was therefore not in the transgression, and this is what the text proves; and the closing remark—"but the woman being deceived was in the transgression"—shows that Paul so used it. Adam is in no way, not even by the slightest inference, connected with the deception or transgression. Was he therefore in no way and in no sense connected with the sin or deception? Did he not sin? He surely did, and was cursed for it. But the text quoted does not permit of such fact under the rules of interpretation now under consideration, but if we take the text as being used relatively, then does it become harmonious with the history of the fall in Geneses, viz., that Adam was not (primarily) deceived (by Satan), and was not therefore (first or primarily) in the transgression. This interpretation certainly agrees with the Genesis account, for it is shown that Eve was the one who was first to sin, and the only one who Satan deceived, beguiled. And further, that Adam hearkened to her voice, (she must have said something), and the word hearkened certainly means more than to simply listen with the ear. We are to hearken to the voice of the Lord, and this certainly includes belief and obedience thereto, and it seems reasonable to us that it was in this sense that Adam hearkened to the voice of his wife. If so, and she being deceived, was not Adam a partaker in the deception? Paul uses the fact of Eve being first deceived by Satan, and hence first in transgression, as a reason why she should be in silence and subjection to the man; and not teach or usurp authority. He had found by the record that women had once taught man, (in Eden), and taught him bad principles. That by her teaching she exercised power (authorthy) over him, and that while she was under satanic control as she was first and easiest overcome, and it was natural to suppose that she was less competent to be a ruler, therefore Paul said, "I suffer not a woman to teach nor usurp authority over the man," giving his reasons in verse 14, that the woman led in the transgression, and taking it for granted (it seems) that this fact was a sufficient reason why she should be in subjection and silence as to teaching and usurping authority over the man, still perpetuating the decree in Eden—"he shall rule over thee"—and for the same reasons given in Genesis, that is, that woman, and not man, was primarily deceived and in the transgression. But to claim that man was in no way deceived in the matter, and in no sense in the transgression, would be to array Paul against Paul, for he says in a certain place "as by one man's offense death passed upon all men to condemnation, even so by the righteousness of one shall the free gift pass upon all to the justification of life." Again: "By one man, sin entered the world, and death by sin." Again he speaks of Adam's transgression. (See Romans 5th chapter).

Now I insist that the text from Timothy proves just as surely, and in the same sense, that Adam did not "transgress," as it does that "he was not deceived," and if one part is to be understood absolutely, then also should the other. Hence the text if received as it was introduced, proves too much; but if received relatively, that is, that Adam was neither "deceived" nor yet "transgressed" primarily, we have harmony with all previous revelation, and with the author's more extensive writing on the same subject in Romans 5th chapter and elsewhere, and with all recent revelation thereon as well. We still, therefore, insist that Adam had no independent view, but acted under the persuasion of his wife—hearkened to her voice. I don't say that Adam may not have acted under the conclusions claimed by the editor, but that Adam knew all about the matter in a way and to an extent that Eve did not,—and that this difference was that in which she was "deceived," and in which Adam was not deceived—I have not the least evidence. Not only this, it is in our judgment a qualified denial of the statement that he hearkened to her voice if he knew these things would follow and she did not, and he acted under such knowledge, then he did not act under a hearkening to her voice. But it was Deity who said, "because thou hast hearkened to the voice of thy wife." We therefore repeat, and shall maintain till proof is shown to the contrary, that Eve's reasons were Adam's reasons for partaking of the forbidden fruit, and that it was not in this sense that the one was deceived and the other not; for their reasons were evidently identical, he accepting her reasons and acting under them, (hearkening thereto). As for me, I am prone to accept an interpretation that harmonizes the written word, in preference to one that arrays writers against each other, and even against themselves. That Adam may have been persuaded by Eve that it was necessary for him to sin in order for them to "multiply," we do not deny; and that Eve held such view after the fall is evident from Genesis 4: 11. But as to where she got such a notion is another question entirely. If it was God's will that they should "not eat" the forbidden fruit, it was as evidently his will they should "multiply." And as both commands were in force from the very first in Eden, it must be evident that both could have been obeyed, and that one was perfectly compatible with the other, otherwise God willed in opposite directions, and required man to act in opposite directions at the same time, thus requiring an impossible thing of man, and arraying commandment against commandment, law against itself, and making God "double minded."

Was it God's plan, and therefore his will, that man should fall or sin? And was it therefore rendered inavoidable that he must sin? If so, then was the whole matter of God, the Devil, and Eve, his servants doing his will. Can this be, that God by virtue of an unavoidable, imposed condition, became the author and finisher of our sins as well as "our faith?" Is this the sublime sense in which "all things are of him and by him." Shame on such reflection upon the great, beneficent, and loving Father of us all." John says "all sin is of the devil." And we say, "Let all the people say amen." The devil is the author of sin, first, last and all the time;" as much so as God is the loving, grand, noble and infinite author of all good—of all blessings and mercies. The devil was the author of sin, of the fall, of death, sorrow and mourning. But "Life and truth came through Jesus Christ." "Praise ye the Lord." The remedy was God's work; the disease the devil's work. The commandments were of God; the sin of the devil. The fall was of Satan, the "raising of many sons to glory" was of Christ. It will avail nothing to those who believe that the fall was a part of the plan of Deity to ask why propagation did not begin in Eden. If we could be sure of the length of time that Adam and Eve occupied Eden, then might such inquiry be legitimate. But until such knowledge is obtained, such inquiry is not pertinent. There are, however, some inquiries which may be legitimately made as to sin being necessary to the fulfilling of the command to "multiply," some of which we will here enumerate.

1.—Why could not propagation have taken place in Eden, since it is written that God "created them male and female" (complete and perfect was that work of creating—it was "very good.") What further was necessary in order to propagation.

2.—Are the prerequisites to propagation so low in the scale of purity that it required the presence and priesthood of Satan in order to the celebration of the first sacrifice made at the hymeneal altar? Was the inspirations of the Prince of Darkness the vital flame by which the reproductive powers must be fanned into activity and life? Are the marriage relations, as pertains to reproduction, the gift of his Satanic cunning?

Jesus was born of a woman, and his purity was not tarnished. How came it that Jesus came through a channel made by Satan and born of sin!

3.—How could Eve's "conception" be "multiplied" by Deity as a part of the penalty for his sin, unless her power of conception existed as a matter of fact before the fall? Could nothing be "multiplied?" If so, how? God said to her, "I will greatly multiply thy conception."

As carnality increased, conception would naturally be "multiplied;" and so it was doubtless by and through the fall; but that conception depended on sin for its existence to the degree God intended it to be exercised, we are not assured of, and would like to hear the defense of such position. That God at the proper time may have instructed Adam and Eve of his intention to people the earth by them, and how, and so ordered the comingling of sex, (if he had not already done so) is to us reasonable. Why could not God, who intended and ordered propagation, have caused his command to have been obeyed, thus holding it in honor as a divine institution with a greater show of propriety than to have called on the devil to officiate as the honored dedicator of the reproductive system to the use of man and the final use of "the power of the highest" in begetting the Lord Jesus Christ?

"Oh consistency, thou art a Jewel."

T. RUTH.

[Referring to the foregoing we have to say, we fully endorse Paul when he says,—“And Adam was not deceived, but the woman being deceived was in the transgression.” We also believe the Scriptures which say that for transgression, both Adam and Eve were driven out of the garden of Eden, (Gen. 3: 22–24), and hold that Adam had he not transgressed, would have remained in the garden and thus been separated from Eve, making it impossible for them to fulfill the command to “multiply and replenish the earth.” We further believe that Adam sinned knowingly and intentionally. “Adam sinned that men might be.” And we believe that God, foreknowing man's fall, provided the plan of redemption in Christ to just suit the case, that man by compliance therewith may be educated by precept and experience in perfect obedience to all the laws of his being—physical, intellectual, and spiritual—so that he may rightfully and righteously possess all “principalities, powers, things present and things to come, life or death,” with every other thing possessed by Jesus Christ our Lord; thus making “all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose;” for God is able to “make the wrath of man to praise him,” and to overrule the cunning craftiness of Satan, and cause it to promote the glory of God and the salvation and happiness of redeemed man. It is easy to ask questions and suggest theories. What we need to hold to faithfully are facts—genuine facts.—ED.]

THE REASON WHY.

BRO. JOSEPH.—The question has often been and still is asked me, How do you account for the rapid increase of the Mormon Church in Europe in the early years of its existence, and how could educated and intelligent men go forth and preach Mormonism? In reply I would state once for all, That it was due to the non-existence of a church professing and teaching the doctrines of Christ in their fulness. Had there been such an one there would have been no necessity for another to arise. When the early Mormon missionaries went forth it was on the apostolic plan, ordained by Christ, without purse or scrip. This of itself was calculated to set men thinking, and when they contrasted the teachings of Saints with those of the different sects, and then compared them with those of Christ and the apostles, the balance was altogether in favor of the Saints up to the time when the abominable was publicly taught as a tenet of the church.

Moreover, when the bickerings, jealousies, and conduct of the sects were observed, the dissensions prevalent among them, both in spiritual and temporal affairs, taken into consideration, the oneness of spirit exhibited in the Mormon Church was greatly, overwhelmingly in its favor. Again; the sects were divided on almost every point of doctrine, and it was simply impossible for the learned ones, let alone the unlearned, to find proof for much of their teachings in Scripture. And the ministers of those sects did not, and could not, appeal to the Scripture for confirmation of them, but went to their man-made creeds and dogmas; and at the same time they were then, as now, intent on getting the largest amount of salary they could. “No pay no preach,” being the motto.

The Elders came along preaching in the streets, lanes and fields, under a tree, in the city parks. Or perhaps some cottager would open his one-roomed cottage, calling on people everywhere to repent and believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and appealing to the Scriptures upon every point, and daring the ministers of the sects to refute them, and after the sermon they would ask, if there was any who would give them a supper and a night's lodging; for they were sent forth as the apostles of old, without purse or scrip. And oh, to the educated, sensitive man, it was hard, fearfully hard. Fancy preaching an obnoxious doctrine in a street corner, or under a tree on the village green, faint, weary, ill-clad, reviled, abused, contemned, and at the close of your sermon telling the people, “Friends I go forth without purse or scrip, as the Lord commanded. I am tired, hungry, and have no place to go to, would any of you have the kindness to take me home with you and give me a mouthful to eat, and a night's lodging?” And then to be left hungry, tired and homeless by the people who had heard you. Ah me, I have known many instances of this kind. Think of it, O, ye ministers receiving your salaries, great or small, and ask yourselves the question, “Is my faith sufficiently strong in what I preach to bear all this.”

Verily, the Elders had a cross to bear in those days. What wonder then that men possessed of such a grand, enduring faith would ultimately convert the masses and bring thousands into their church, where the ministers of the sects did not bring dozens into theirs. And not that alone, but they actually took away large numbers from those very ministers' congregations. Again; in every debate (and they were numerous) the Elders were victorious. They proved from Scripture that faith, repentance, baptism for remission of sins and the laying on of hands for the imparting of the Holy Ghost, together with the signs following, were permanent doctrines in the Church of Christ, and they confirmed their words by healing the sick and afflicted in numberless instances.

This mode of preaching and teaching was calculated to stir up a spirit of opposition and persecution against them; just as it did in the days of the Apostles, and the leaders of the different sects banded against them, as of old, and “False prophets, false teachers, heresy, beware of them,” was the cry in public; but the cry in private was “Great is Diana, ye know that by our teaching we make our living. Our craft is in danger.” Nevertheless the Mormons gained ground fast, and would have continued to do so had not the abomination which made the church desolate been proclaimed as a leading doctrine, and from that day to this the church has been suffering and pining, and the burthen has been hard, heavy, and grievous to be borne. Well may the old time Elders who passed through these trials exclaim in the bitterness of their souls, “How long, O Lord, how long?”

Taken as a whole, there never was a more devoted set of men than were these early Elders of the old country; men who lived conscientious, Christian lives up to the time polygamy was proclaimed. They were counted as the offscourings of earth, scorned, despised, maltreated, yet they went on doing their duty, and living in the spirit and genius of Christianity—and this is the key to the whole—the veritable “reason why.” True, they were finally deceived by Young, Taylor & Co., for thousands of them preached and labored for years in Europe ere they went to the cesspool in the mountains; but when once there,—faith, religion, joy soon went by the board. Their sturdy souls refused the dead sea fruit, and they either fell away altogether, or else remained passive and careless, never having the old time faith and spirit again. Some wandered away and joined other churches and sects; but, like Noah's dove they find no rest for the soles of their feet, and are roaming, restless, aimless, lifeless, in the world to this day. Some of them may perchance read these lines, and reading them will once again feel a flash of the old time spirit come over them; and their minds will go back to the days of the "Long, long ago," when with hearts burning within us, eyes dimmed with tears of joy and gladness, and "peace on earth and good will to all men," Jesus lives and I know it, the expression of our whole being we used to raise the glorious battle cry of victory and with heart and soul sing,

"The Spirit of God like a fire is burning;
The latter day glory begins to come forth;
The visions and blessings of old are returning;
And angels are coming to visit the earth."

These are the "reasons why" the church increased so rapidly in the early days. It preached nothing but a pure Christianity.

And now praying God to bless you all, you dear old soldiers,

I remain yours,

LAMONI.

JAMES J.

A LEAFLET.

IN epochs of ancient renown, busy hands stamped thought on leaves and bark, papyrus and parchment, brick and bronze, basalt and rock, banner and shield, also on the munitions of war and the implements of domestic tranquility. We wish to simply jot down a very few fragments upon the olive leaf of peace. My consort was stricken down with measles while at General Conference, my son took the malady also, but rallied rapidly, and regained his wonted health. Brother Samuel V. Bailey and family entertained us cheerfully, and bore the annoyance and contagion with sympathy, fortitude and Christian resignation. Our dear old home amid the maple arbor, was made vocal with sweet content on our glad return. While at home a few days caring for my enfeebled companion, I tried to advance the interest of the work in a series of meetings. Some few of the Saints attended regularly, but many were too busy, too poor, or too indifferent to attend.

"Honor and fame from no condition rise;
Act well thy part, there all true honor lies."

On the fifteenth of May I came to Rock Island, Illinois, and began meetings in the African Baptist church, situated on the line between this city and Moline. I delivered thirteen consecutive discourses there, the colored pastor and deacon in charge. The Swedish students from Augustena College, near by, attended and made a feeble attempt to antagonize the work. I challenged them to an honorable investigation, but they failed to pick up the gauntlet. Some white sectarian bigot asked the minister, Rev. Brown, if he was not afraid to let me occupy his stand, and threatened to inform on him. He gets a good portion of his salary from the Missionary Board, hence the dilemma. The organization took up and absorbed all collections, for incidental expenses and to liquidate church indebtedness on their house. The audience contributed freely along at the first, but the frequency of the affair became ineffectual. The Rev. seeing his bread and butter at stake, and observing the light contents of the hat, objected to my further use of the house, professedly on the ground that I was not orthodox on "The final destiny of all mankind!" Private houses were in waiting for me in that neighborhood, therefore the meeting is flourishing still, but withal on another basis. On Sunday the brethren, Larew and Reynolds, came from Buffalo, Iowa, a distance of ten miles or more. We were preaching the forenoon discourse as they appeared in our midst. At two p. m., the gentleman of the house, George W. Ranbarger, his wife and grown daughter were buried with Christ in the "Father of waters." An hour later we were again convened at his house, for confirmation and sacrament. Bro. Larew gave us a timely sermon on the necessity of obedience, in order that our temples, tabernacles or bodies may be purified for the confirmation of the Spirit. He proved conclusively that the reception of the Holy Ghost, through ordinances, was essential to the new life, and that the emblematical body and blood of Christ as shown forth in the broken bread and flowing wine were a means of grace and growth.

After the Lord's supper Elder C. C. Reynolds bore a thrilling testimony and exhorted to faithfulness, diligence and watchfulness. Since we have been here we have been refused the churches of the two cities, and the rooms of the Young Men's Christian Association, and now the negroes have turned us out. I think now we have struck bottom, or are at the foot of the hill, and if we go farther we will get up higher and fare better. It is contrary to my principle to stall at the bottom, or foot, hence something is to be done. The Saints of Davenport are rallying with their sympathy, and warm hearted friends are coming to the front here and there. A number more seem to be halting, and so you have a bird's eye view of matters and things. I attended the obsequies of John Deere, the great plow manufacturer; and also that of Mr. P. L. Cable, the great Railroad magnate and millionaire. Their ambition, energy, achievements and unrivaled success were the current topics, but if there were tears shed, I failed to see them flow.

We also took in Decoration Day in the city and around the floral enwreathed monument in the forenoon, and repaired to the Government Island in the afternoon. In a sequestered retreat, overshadowed by great trees, and carpeted with luxuriant grasses was the resting place of many of the late brave "Boys in Blue." An eloquent, thrilling tribute to the illustrious heroic dead was tendered by one Miss Mitchell, of Davenport, Iowa.

The refined, serene and gifted speaker took a cursory view of the rise of the nation; its military prowess; its benign institutions; its intellectual advancement and its temporal wealth. She observed that the Revolutionary war gave us a free land, and the war of 1812 gave us the liberty of the high seas. The Rebellion went down amid fire, and carnage, and the lash and manacles are things that lie buried with the "Lost Cause." The earnestness of the speaker, and the loyal fire of her soul took right hold of the heartstrings.

The next and last orator was the honorable Clark Carr, of Galesburg, Illinois. He referred touchingly to LaFayette's last visit to America. The aged marquis told a passenger on ship that Washington was dead, and the humble part he had taken was sleeping in forgetfulness with the old veterans. When the gallant ship, with its precious freight, hove into New York Harbor, a thousand cannons boomed a welcome, and swarming myriads of devoted people vied in homage and deep heartfelt respect. This American benefactor was not forgotten; neither will we forget those who perished in the great modern conflict. Our material wealth has increased four fold since slavery was abolished, and our population has nearly doubled within a score of years.

The Saints should understand in the light of revelation, why the nations of the world are so fully represented in our borders, and some of the causes that contribute to all elementary and physical blessings, that crown the prophetic land of Joseph. Ye are the salt of the earth, for "that nation and kingdom that will not serve the Lord will be utterly wasted," saith the prophet. Improve the golden moments ere the evil days come and you have no pleasure in them. Convert and ordain the foreigners and send them back as fast as the Lord wills it, so that the gospel will belt and permeate the globe.

UNFATHOMABLE ATTRIBUTES OF GOD.

MATERIALISTS frequently imagine that they make a point against Bible believers by holding up to ridicule the idea of God making matter out of nothing. Many believers try to justify themselves by arguing that the Bible does not claim creative power for God.

To my mind it does not seem necessary, in the face of the most profound reasoning, to admit that it is absurd to think that God may possess the ability to make something out of nothing. All admit the eternity of either God or matter. Yet so far as human interest is capable of judging it is just as absurd to think of anything having no beginning as it is to imagine how to make it out of nothing. For instance:

No times : 1 year : : 1 year : eternity.

Let any smart aleck tell us exactly how many times no time is contained in twelve months and I will admit that it is absurd to think that God may be able to create, otherwise let them forever more hold their peace respecting those things of which they nor we know no more than the dullest in the world.

THE Unitarians are at serious difficulty with themselves, the nature of which difficulty will be seen by the following extracts from the July number of "The Unitarian," kindly sent us by Bro. Joseph Luff.

THE REAL STORY OF OUR WESTERN DIFFICULTY.

More than a month has passed since the meeting of the Western Unitarian Conference,—time enough to dissipate any merely local or temporary irritation. Still, our conviction is unchanged that a serious wrong and mischief was wrought to our churches by the one-sided and sectional action then taken.

In order to understand the full significance of what was done, and to locate the real responsibility, it is necessary to recall something of the history of the conference.

Up to 1875 our Western Conference had been working simply under the original declaration of objects drawn up in 1852, viz.:

"1.—The promotion of the Christian spirit in the several churches which compose it, and the increase of vital practical religion.

"2.—The diffusion of gospel truth and the accomplishment of such works of Christian benevolence as may be agreed upon.

"3.—The support of Domestic or Home Missionaries, the publication of tracts, the distribution of religious books, the promotion of theological education, and extending aid to such societies as may need it."

In 1875 a desire was felt by many to widen this basis. It was shortly after the "Year Book controversy," and the Western Unitarians felt that, whether by the fault of one side or the misunderstanding of the other, some men had felt themselves ruled out of our body from a scruple about taking the name "Christian," whom the West at least would gladly fellowship. The writer was present at that conference for the first time, and well remembers how this feeling came out. It resulted in the adoption of the resolution, which from that time became the "platform" of the conference. This was:—

"Resolved, That the Western Unitarian Conference conditions its fellowship on no dogmatic tests, but welcomes all thereto who desire to work with it in advancing the kingdom of God."

There were some in the conference who did not like the old word "Christian" being left out. But it was pleaded that this resolution expressed the essence of Christianity, and they did not press their objection. They desired not to insist upon the expression which they themselves preferred, but to find one upon which all might be able to work together, and so this resolution passed unanimously.

Rev. W. C. Gannett, though not then in the west, was one of those to whom the Western Conference wished to indicate that its doors were freely open. It was in 1877 that he came west, to St Paul, Minn. And it was perhaps a year later that one of his ministerial neighbors told me that Mr. Gannett was dissatisfied even with that extended platform, insisting that the use of the word "God" in its second clause, was really one of the very "dogmatic tests" disclaimed in the first. My impression is that my informant, who had been one of the most earnest movers for this resolution, thought the objection groundless, but I well remember his adding that Mr. Gannett having once taken up the idea would never rest till he got that word "God" out.

He never has rested, and at last he has succeeded.

Unity was started. Its motto was "Freedom, fellowship and character in religion." By and by its friends began to press this as the proper watchword for all Western Unitarianism. In 1882, when the Western Conference was to be for the first time "incorporated" (at Cleveland) this pressure came to a head in a great effort made by the Unity men to have their phrase adopted as the official description in the articles of incorporation. This was resisted by many of us. The phrase, harmless enough in itself, had become identified with the extreme radical section among us. We pleaded that the old basis, of "working for the kingdom of God," not what we would have preferred, but agreed to as a common ground, ought to be sufficient, that it was not right for one party to try to substitute its own special formula. We pleaded in vain; and, after long discussion, as it became evident that there were no words descriptive of any religious object on which we could unite, it was agreed to give up the attempt; to let that religious object which nearly or quite all in one sense or another really affirmed, be taken for granted, and confine the terms of incorporation to the mere matter of fact phrase that the object was "the transaction of business" pertaining to the societies connected with the conference. I believe I was myself the mover of this proposal. I soon found that it was a mistake. It had been proposed as a sincere endeavor to stave off sectional action by falling back upon common neutral ground. But it failed almost from the beginning. It is important to remember this, because the Christian Register persists in representing this "business basis" as a sort of original solid ground which Mr. Sunderland is charged with disturbing. The fact is that that "business basis" was only a temporary stage in the movement which Mr. Gannett and his friends had been persistently urging for years. Its failure appeared almost immediately. Instead of being recognized as a tacit maintenance of the old religious purpose of the conference, it was at once widely quoted as a tacit dropping of any religious purpose as essential. I had certainly expected—I think others had—that with this mere business expression in the legal article, the old invitation of 1875 (welcoming to fellowship all who desired "to work for the kingdom of God") would still be used in public announcements. But this was at once entirely dropped, on the ground, Mr. Jones tells me, that the incorporation made a clean sweep of all that had gone before. This may have been correct, but none the less it helped the general feeling that the conference had abdicated its distinctively religious character, and Mr. Gannett has himself publicly claimed that business-basis as one of his illustrations of the tendency of Western Unitarianism towards purely ethical principles.

When Mr. Sunderland became Western Secretary, a year's experience of the actual field convinced him that our work throughout the West was greatly suffering from this misapprehension of our position, and at the St. Louis conference last year he urged that the misapprehension urgently needed clearing away. This appeal was denounced in Unity as inconsistent with Unitarian freedom and development, and ever since that paper has insisted more and more distinctly that Unitarianism ought to base itself on ethical principles alone. Again, at the recent conference, Mr. Sunderland urged the same thing as before. He expressly disclaimed any desire to limit fellowship. Declare our object, he said, and let the fellowship "regulate itself on principles of rational and natural co-operation." Nor did he ask for any sudden action; but distinctly and repeatedly, in his report and otherwise, he warned against haste, and more than once expressed it as his judgment, not that the matter should be forced to a sudden vote or any vote at all at the present meetings, but only that steps should be taken preparing the way for its adequate settlement by and by—preferably by the appointing of a committee of careful and trusted men to consider the matter thoughtfully for a year in the interest of all concerned, and report the best plan then.

The Unity men, however, were not only set against any such course, but resolved to push the matter at once to a decision, and another step in their own direction. They had a secure majority, for they were thoroughly in earnest and had brought up full delegations, while on the other side no effort whatever had been made, and forty out of the sixty-one churches of the West were not represented at all. Even after it had become evident that the matter must be decided then and there, Mr. Sunderland, Mr. Snyder and their friends did not ask for any favorite declaration of their own. They sought, as they had done in 1875 and again in 1882, for some ground that might be common for all. Personally, as in those previous years, their choice would have been some distinctively Christian statement; but they asked only for some religious statement, even of the most general kind. In vain. The majority voted down every attempt to declare any religious object or purpose at all for the Conference, and then carried a resolution, all the more offensive because modeled on that of 1875, only with the marked and significant omission of the word "God," reading thus:

"Resolved, That the Western Unitarian Conference conditions fellowship on no dogmatic tests, but welcomes all who wish to join it to establish truth, righteousness and love in the world."

I have given this narrative in order to link in these recent events with the original movement which explains them, and of which I had intimate knowledge during my seven years in Chicago. For that whole movement Mr. Gannett and his friends are responsible. It is they who insisted on unsettling the broad platform of 1875, chosen by their own party, and would not rest until it was re-enacted with the word "God" left out. It is they who have persisted at each step in trying to force their own sectional policy, and who have at last succeeded in a way which a large proportion of their fellow Unitarians feel to be so misrepresenting and injurious as to make co-operation no longer possible.

Some people say, "what does it practically matter after all? We all know that these men (Messrs. Gannett, Jones and others) are really working for religion, and what does it signify whether we definitely say so or consent to work as they prefer, under a few broad watchwords of "righteousness" and "truth."

Well, in the east it might not so much matter. There Unitarianism is known. Our great leading names are household words, and perhaps more significant of what we want to do in planting Unitarian churches than any terms we might place on our banner. But in the new and scattered West it is very different. There, to thousands and tens of thousands, Unitarianism comes as a new thing. They want to know what it means, what it stands for. "Righteousness, truth and love." Is that to be our missionary's answer? "Nonsense," the reply would be; "all churches stand for those; Ingersoll means those things; what do you Unitarians really mean?" Practically, the missionary has to explain that he religion, and a church, and such ideas means of broad Christianity as are constantly put forth in our various tracts. But what do these avail against the objection that our own Western Conference has distinctly disclaimed any specially religious object, and has expunged the very word "God" from its platform by deliberate and intentional action?

We speak what we do know. This very difficulty is being widely felt. Unitarianism is coming to be regarded in many parts of the west—and this not by orthodox people, but by liberal Christian people, who would naturally have many points of sympathy with us—as a destructive system of negations which is fond of flourishing big words, but really stands for nothing. The lead in Christian liberalism is already passing out of our hands in the west, except in a few of the great centers where our name has got rooted, as Dr. Eliot rooted it in St. Louis, and Robert Collyer in Chicago. There are plenty of people who are sick of orthodoxy, but they point to the more recent actions of our Western Conference and will have nothing to do with us. We know of ministers who have longed to come out from orthodoxy for a freer home, but they want to know what they are joining, and pointing to this action of the Western Conference they say, "We can't join that!" We show them Gannett's books and Hosmer's poems,—full of the tenderest piety—and try to make them see that "the thought of God" is what they mean, but it is seldom of any use. These are individuals, and no individual word can weigh much against such action on the part of a large corporate body. The fact is, that for one person who knows what Messrs. Gannett and Hosmer and Jones really say, there are a thousand who read what the Western Conference, at their instance, has deliberately unsaid.

It is not the least part of the trouble that this Conference action misrepresents the real work of those who have urged it, quite as much as it misrepresents the work of the rest of us. They are, personally, among our earnestly religious men, and are working in that spirit all the time. Yet they have expunged religion from the published objects of the Conference. No personal admiration and respect, and no certainty that their own personal work is safe enough, can blind us to the fact that that they are seriously injuring and pulling back the work of our churches at large.

What is to be done? Of course it would be possible to re-open the struggle next year, and we believe that the recent action would be easily reversed. But to what good? It would only be to have the wrangle perpetually renewed. The Western Conference as something to wrangle over is not worth keeping. It was settled once, by common consent, on a broad basis, omitting the word "Christian" so as to include all, and after a few years they would not rest in that because it contained the word "God." No settlement that could be made, but would be liable to be unsettled again on the first scruple of this sensitive word-scrutiny. No. These friends have captured the Western Conference for their own sectional work. Let them keep it and make the best of it, for that. Better for those who feel that they can not accept that position to fall back on our national organization, the American Unitarian Association, and work on its broad and hitherto never questioned basis—"to diffuse the knowledge and promote the interests of pure Christianity." B.H.

What others say of this may be seen by the following from the same paper.

OUTSIDE COMMENTS ON THE WESTERN ACTION.

Speaking of the vote of the Western Conference to make its platform that of Free Religion, so as to be "broad" and "inclusive," the Christian Leader says:

"The rule, to which there is scarcely any exceptions, is that platforms made broad and indefinite, in order not to exclude anybody, exclude nearly every body. Only the very small number of persons in any community whose opinions have no cohesive center will cross the street to get on such a platform."

The Independent says of the Cincinnati vote:

"There is certainly some excuse for the inference of one of the ministers, that the 'Conference put itself on a basis not only extra-Christian and extra-theistic, but extra-religious', notwithstanding the Christian Register's strong expression of dissent. * * A body that hesitates at 'pure Christianity', and regards the name of God as 'too dogmatic', may be ethical, but not much more."

Col. Bundy, the editor of the Religio-Philosophical Journal, of Chicago, comments on the action of the Conference as follows:

"It must be looked at as the ruling out of any statement of belief in Deity or in future life by a body calling itself Christian, and doing this so broadly that Robert Ingersoll as well as Rowland Conner, the athiest, the materialist and the agnostic, can become Unitarian clergymen any time they please.

"It is a singular position for such a body of men to occupy, and it looks as though consistency requires them to say they are not Christians. There is a shadowy lack of definite aim, a want of something clear to stand for and uphold. Do they think it useless to affirm great spiritual realities, as underlying principles, needed to help to the highest 'freedom, fellowship and character?' Will not their dim and aimless statement weaken Unitarianism?"

We quote briefly from Prof. Swing's sermon on "The 'Unitarian Controversy.'"

"Quite a number of the Unitarian clergy [in the West] deem it an intellectual servitude to be required to believe in Christ at all, or in a future life, or in a God as a personal, conscious soul. In the opinion of these men Unitarianism may, if the individual wishes, be a Christianity, but it need not to be any thing more than an ethical organization similar to that founded by Dr. Felix Adler. * * The early Unitarians wished to be nearer God and Jesus; this latest Unitarian thought wishes to draw nearer to simply the human part of the universe, and make optional a God, a Jesus, an immortality. The departure is so great that it is amazing any part of a Christian church could have traveled over this vast space in only a few years. * * Answer as we may the inquiry, 'What was Christ?' he is the most powerful leader of morals and religion we possess. With him as a central figure, religion has never been a cold philosophy, but a thrilling sentiment, an enthusiasm. To throw aside this long tried and most powerful impulse, so as to have a religion broad enough for the skeptic and the aimless, must be reckoned only an absurdity. It is as though our musicians should agree to throw away all art, all time, all harmony, so that everybody could sing."

NATURE AND GOD.

THERE are infidels who do not believe in a God who judges and punishes and afflicts. They believe in nature, and in nature's laws.

But what do they gain by the change? Are not the "laws of nature" as they term them, as immutable as those inscribed on stone? Do not fires burn, floods overwhelm, waters drown, earthquakes swallow up, lightnings blast, tornadoes desolate, tempests destroy, sunbeams scorch, frosts congeal, disease waste, pains rack, sorrows pierce, and calamities afflict mankind? Are not toil, and labor, and hunger, and famine, and pestilence, and all the nameless agonies of dying men in accordance with "the laws of nature?" Does not "the god of nature" do all this? Pray then, what do men gain by throwing away their Bibles which they will not believe, when they must find the same facts and worse ones, in the Book of Nature where they can neither doubt them nor deny them. The facts will stand. Skeptics may deny man's fall, but they can not escape its consequences. They may deny that God has cursed the ground, but they can not rid themselves of thorns and thistles, with all their arguing and with all their unbelief. And sorrow, and guilt, and condemnation, will follow them in spite of all their doubts and objections. What then do they gain by their efforts to get rid of God.

They gain just this: they put away the chastisement of a Father, and fling themselves amid the revolving gears of an Almighty Machine that crushes them in the dust, and then grinds them to powder. They have the same facts they had before, with no possible relief from them. They retain every trouble, and reject every consolation. They have the same realities of sin, and sorrow, and penalty; they have only blotted out mercy, made penitence vain, and forgiveness and peace impossible. They have kept the disease, and flung away the remedy. Let the Christian rejoice that he possesses every real blessing of which the ungodly man can boast, and, added to them all, he has the presence of a Divine Father, and the sympathy of an Almighty friend, who, while he reproves in righteousness and punishes in justice, yet pardons with such infinite and compassionate love, that the heart of the penitent turns with tears to Him as the only Savior, saying, "There is forgiveness with thee, that thou mayest be feared."—H. L. Hastings.

AMERICAN PYRAMIDS.

A TRAVELER in Mexico, writing to the New York Sun, describes some pyramids whose origin and age are unknown: "This pyramid of Papatla is built of immense blocks of porphyry, in the seams of which mortar may still be distinguished. The base of the pyramid is an exact square, each side eighty-two feet long, with a perpendicular height of sixty feet. Like all Mexican places of human sacrifice, it is composed of six successive stages, with a great stair-way leading to the truncated summit. Hieroglyphics and strange figures, such as serpents, frogs and crocodiles—are carved in bas-relief on the faced stones of each story, while a multitude of square inches (366 in number) have given rise to the conjecture that they had some religious connection with the ancient Toltec Calendar.

"For centuries after the Spaniards had possessed themselves of this country, the Indians jealously concealed from them all knowledge of these monuments, and they were accidentally discovered by a party of hunters as late as 1780. What manner of people built them and lavished the work of a lifetime upon their adornment, none can say with certainty, since they passed away in the morning of time, leaving no records except in undecipherable hieroglyphics. The most learned savants, after wrangling for years over the early peopling of America, have given up the point as an unguessable coudrum, and therefore we will not be so presumptuous as to hazard an opinion. Many wiseacres, seeking to find the roof of the human tree in the Bible, have ascribed the mighty monuments which are scattered all over Mexico and Central America to the sons of Noah, the Jews, Egyptians, Canannites, Phœnicians, and Carthaginians; others to the ancient Greeks, Scythians or Chinese.

"Some equally good authorities believe the aborigines of this continent to have been a separate race, not descended from the same father Adam as the rest of mankind, but created or 'evolved' on the spot, while others are certain that they sprang from ante-diluvian races which somehow escaped the great inundation by which most of the human family perished. Able writers have labored to prove that the two continents have been joined together and rent asunder by earthquakes, and that at some remote period the inhabitants of either could have crossed over dry-shod; that the sea and land have changed places, and that Atlantis, the great island which Plato says was the ancient cradle of civilization, has been swallowed in mid-ocean. Yet after ages of speculation and theory, the world is no wiser than before, so far as positive knowledge is concerned.

"The Papatla pyramid is remarkable, not so much for its size as for perfect symmetry, the polish of its stones, and the exact regularity of their cut. In his work on New Spain, Humboldt refers to the analogy of the brick monuments of Mexico to the temple of Belus, in Babylon, and the pyramids near Sakarhaf in Egypt. He says:—"There are in Anahuac pyramids, of several stages found in the forests of Papatla, at a small elevation above the sea; in the plains of Cholula, and at Teotihuacan, at elevations surpassing those of our passes in the Alps. We are astonished to see in regions most remote from one another, and under climates of the greatest diversity, man following the same models in his edifices, his habits, his ornaments, and even his political institutions." The whole state of Vera Cruz is rich in ruins, and doubtless others remain to be discovered in the depths of unexplored forests, or covered by lakes, like that submerged city of unknown antiquity which has recently been found at the bottom of the Laguna Tamiahuac. There are the great pyramid of Tusapan, forty-five miles westward from Papatla; the wonderful teocalli, called El Tajin; the extensive ruins of Coyutla, near the river Tecolutla; crumbling cities hidden in the hills of Tamlica; the colossal remains of Taillo; ancient towers and temples on the Rio Panuco; the pyramid of Misantra, thirty miles north of Jalapa, and another of surpassing interest at Mapilca."

On motion the secretary of the district was authorized to give letters of removal to members of Glen Alpine Branch, if found worthy by committee; committee to be appointed by the president of the district; Wm. S. Barbee and J. B. Williams were appointed said committee. On motion Wm. S. Barbee was chosen district president for the next three months. On motion Levi Gamet was chosen secretary. Bro. B. Kester was appointed to preach a funeral discourse of Jesse Valgamore's son at half past two on Sunday. Minutes of March conference corrected so as to show that letter was read appointing Levi Gamet Bishop's Agent for Central Nebraska District, and further corrected to show that a petition of Columbus Branch was granted. Whereas it has been claimed by some of the brethren that Benj. Kester treated lightly and with contempt the action of December conference, 1885, which was brought before the March conference of 1886, which tried B. Kester in his absence, and without sustaining the charges by proper proceedings, which present conference declares to be illegal and ordered to be expunged from the record for the reason of such illegal proceedings; therefore be it resolved by this conference that parties making said charges drop this matter referred to, and from this forward never mention the matter of contempt for the sake of reproach, and also that the disability placed upon B. Kester be declared null and void. Adopted. Adjourned to meet at Clear Water, 25th and 26th of September, 1886.

PHYSICAL EXERCISE.

ON the subject of physical exercise most people are fools. As man without muscle is as badly off in this rough and tumble world as a man without a brain. Parents take pride in their children when their heads are packed like a pawnbroker's shop with all sorts of odds and ends of information; but they do too little to encourage the symmetrical development of their bodies. They forget that robust health constitutes about three-quarters of the problem of human happiness, and that it is criminal neglect of the boy and girl to keep them at their books until they lose all appetite for out of door sports.

Half the men in the world are broken down with dyspepsia and the other half are broken up with rheumatism. The women, who are not supposed to have any muscles, indulge in the luxuries of sick headache and neuralgia. A half hour's vigorous exercise in the morning before the business of the day begins, a brisk walk of a dozen miles would sweeten the temper and make life worth living. Such is our physical condition, however, that if you should turn the gentlemen of Wall street into a gymnasium for an hour's torture with the parallel bars and fifty pound dumb bells and the inspiring trapeze, you would have to pick them up from the floor like chestnuts under a tree after a gale of wind. Our clerks, and their employers also, after a three hours' trot on a hard road, with a leap here and there over fence or ditch, would have to be brought home in furniture wagons and a large proportion of them deposited at the undertakers. We have not yet learned the secret of right living. No man lives well who does not spend hours every day out of doors. We are asthmatic, rheumatic, spleeny and hard to get along with at home because we believe in brains and not in bodies.—New York Herald.

The early Methodist ministers went forth to sacrifice and suffer for Christ. They sought not to places of ease and affluence, but of privation and suffering. They gloried not in their big salaries, fine parsonages, and refined congregations, but in the souls that had been won for Jesus. O, how changed! A hireling ministry will be a feeble, a timid, a truckling, a time serving ministry, without faith, endurance and holy power. Methodism formerly dealt in the great central truth. Now the pulpits deal largely in generalities, and in popular lectures. The glorious doctrine of entire sanctification is rarely heard and seldom witnessed in the pulpit.—Bishop R. S. Foster.

THE Euphrates River, once a mighty stream, seems likely to disappear altogether. For some years the river banks below Babylon have been giving way, so that the stream spread out into a marsh, until steamers could not pass, and only a narrow channel remained for the native boats. Now the passage is being filled up, and the prospect is that the towns on the banks will be ruined and the famous river itself will be swallowed up by the desert.

OVER one hundred works written within the past century have placed the time for the beginning of the millennium between 1885 and 1890.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. James H. Peters, of East Lake, Michigan, writes July 10th, about his venture in Voice of Warning:

"I have about fourteen hundred copies out. I get a shower of orders every time they are mentioned in the Herald. Some hold back, thinking they must be all gone. Others were afraid they would have to pay for the books, as they could see that they would all be either lost or worn out after a time. I receive some very encouraging letters from those who have the books.

Bro. I. N. Roberts, drops a note from Caldwell, Texas, July 14th, in which he says:

"There have been eleven additions by baptism, since General Conference; one, a Baptist preacher, a man of note and great prominence; he is now preaching what he once tried to destroy. The local ministry are doing a good work. It makes my heart rejoice to see the prosperity of the cause we love. Bro. Hyde and I are working separately; which enables us to fill the many calls we have. It also gives us more help from the local ministry. The weather is very hot, said to be the hottest season ever known in Texas."

Bro. W. W. Blair writing from Harlan, Iowa, July 19th, says:

"Notwithstanding the almost intolerable hot and dry weather, we have had fair and attentive congregations during the eight meetings we have held here. We trust the fruit of gospel work will follow both members and non-members. There are a number investigating the work we preach, who seem very interested and well nigh convinced of its divinity. The Saints are strong in the faith and full of hope.

You will be glad to know that Bro. Aleck McCord is much improved in his health. He and Sr. McCord seem faithful and hopeful. I go to Persia and vicinity to-morrow, and by request will hold services at Leland's Grove next Sunday, 25th inst. Brn. J. W. Chatburn and J. B.

Swain intend to open meeting places for Sunday afternoons at points outside of Harlan. We hope others may adopt that policy, and thus spread the gospel to all both near and far. God is blessing his word and his work.

Bro. M. T. Short, writing from Maquoketa, Iowa, July 16th, says:

"I came here by special invitation and have large audiences in a well lighted, beautiful grove, two miles north of town. I am stopping with Hurst brothers, the lime men, who are the sons of Sr. Stein, of Deavenport. I am to hold forth all week and three times Sunday, and then by urgent request repair to the city. Penetration of mind, liberty of spirit, and utterance of words have been forthcoming. I love this glorious cause and hope to abide faithful to its entire interests."

Bro. John Smith, of New Bedford, Massachusetts, has been duly commissioned by the Governor of that State, to the office of Justice of the Peace, upon a petition of the citizens of the town, no one of whom is a member of the church; the commission runs seven years. Bro. Smith writes, July 17th:

"The calls for preaching are more than I can fill. Once and twice every Sabbath I am trying to hold up the gospel banner, and I can truly say I have the help of the Master. I have already visited Fall River, Boston, Attleboro, Providence, Little Compton, and we are growing impatient at waiting the arrival of Bro. E. C. Briggs. If he is any where within your reach, send a whirlwind after him, which, without harm, will land him in Massachusetts.

Bro. Joseph F. Burton wrote June 11th:

"I have just got through a week's meeting in Newcastle; very few out to hear, but we have good hearing in the 'reserves,' and on the streets; and brethren Haworth, Lewis, Gregory, Broadway, Dickenson and Purvis, have made some stir by this mode of warfare. I will enclose some slips from the Newcastle papers that will give you an idea of the work for this last fortnight. After next mail I expect to leave for Nambucca for a while.

Bro. Joseph Lampert, of Oshkosh, Wisconsin, wrote July 13th:

"I would just whisper to you that the Herald, Zion's Hope, Advocate, Expositor, &c., are just splendid. O, what a change in the church for the better since 1870. Now is a time of sacrifice, while the nations are being convinced that we are on a higher platform than the Utah Mormons, and that we are trying to win honest souls to Christ. The better I live before God and man, the better success I have in business, and in receiving spiritual graces; so you see I can not afford to be only a half Latter Day Saint."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

By notice in the Hamilton, Australia, correspondence of the Newcastle Herald and Miner's Advocate, we learn that Bro. Joseph F. Burton has baptized fifty-two since January. Good.

Bro. John Dickinson wrote from Newcastle, New South Wales, Australia, June 11th, expressing joy and trust in the latter day work.

The Harmorial colony of Oneida communists, located at Ancora, New Jersey, and founded ten years ago by Dr. J. Madison Allen, is broken up and scattered by "misgovernment and starvation." Another misconception of the all things common idea gone wrong.

Joseph F. Burton's address is Wallsend, N. S. W., Australia.

Bro. W. W. Blair was at Harlan, Iowa, July 16th. He had preached there several times, and was to attend a two days' meeting at Leland's grove, on the 25th. He would remain at Harlan over Sunday, July 18th.

Three were baptized at Galien, Michigan, July 17th, by Bro. G. A. Blakeslee.

Bro. E. L. Kelley returned to Kirtland on July 12th, and will remain there for a few days.

Bro. John A. Robinson will spend two months in Texas, on business for the firm with whom he is engaged, with his headquarters at Dallas. Bro. John is a wide awake Elder, full of faith and love for the cause, and any of the Saints whom he meets will be pleased to see him, and he them. He may be addressed at Dallas. Bro. I. N. Roberts, of Cook's Point, minister in charge, please take notice.

Bro. M. T. Short is having a hot time at Moline. Some injudicious chap wrote a scurrilous attack on him in the Moline Republic, to which Messrs. Suman and Quick replied; but Bro. Short was for the time being under the necessity to quit laboring there. He sent us clippings showing the situation. He would hold forth, Sunday 25th, at Maquoketa, Iowa, in a grove north of town.

Sr. Sarah A. Rose of Graysville, Ohio, was thrown from a horse some three weeks since, resulting in a broken hip bone. She is in great pain, and desires the prayers of the Saints in her behalf. Please remember her; and also Sr. Lizzie E. McConnell, of Mt. Ayr, Iowa.

Bro. R. J. Anthony baptized three at Richmond, Utah, lately. He is at Milad, Idaho, present writing, (July 23d).

THE LAST OF THE ICARIANS.

THE Icarian community, founded in Texas, in 1848, by M. Cabet, and which removed from Texas to Nauvoo, in 1850-1, and from thence a subdivision settled in Adams county, Iowa, has finally met the fate of other common stock arrangements, as will be seen from the following dispatch from the Chicago Tribune, of July 17th:

"A case involving the dissolution of a singular social corporation founded on the communistic idea is before Judge Chaney in Adams county, Iowa. The corporation was one of those beautiful utopian dreams of the Socialist which may succeed when the millenium comes, but never can while humanity remains what it is. The story is the usual one in such cases of a party of men and women who had imbibed the attractive but wholly impracticable ideas of Owen, St. Simon, Fourier, and Cabet, and had founded a colony in the belief that they could live and labor together with all property in common. For a brief time in the first flush of their enthusiasm all went well, and Icaria was a sort of terrestrial paradise. Labor was a sweet name for the activity of sane minds in healthful bodies, and all enjoyed and were content to enjoy in common the bounteous harvest produced and gathered by the common effort. After a time, however, jealousies, suspicions, bickerings, selfishness of all sorts, and human passions of various descriptions made their appearance, and stories of the quarrels which divided the brethren began to noised abroad in the outside world.

"About ten years ago the younger men of the community accused the trustees of the organization, who were old men, of putting the funds in California lands for their own benefit, and other misappropriations; and, after a number of lawsuits, the colony split up into old and new Icaria. Things went from bad to worse; their differences of various kinds were constantly before the courts, and now the young members apply for a winding up of the whole concern and an equitable division of the whole property, which aggregates several hundred thousand dollars in lands and chattels.

"The settlement of the colony was commenced on the East Nodaway in 1853. The organization on the basis of a community of interest was the result of a social movement promulgated in France by M. Cabet and others about forty-nine years ago. In 1842, E. Cabet, one of the leaders of the proposed social revolution, published in Paris a book, the title of which may be translated as the "Voyage and Adventures of Lord Carisdal in Icaria." It was a fiction illustrating the organization of a great nation on the principle of community of interest. From "Icaria," M. Cabet's ideal utopia, comes the name of the community he subsequently founded in America.

THE Newcastle, Australia, Evening Call for June 7th reaches us, sent by Bro. Joseph F. Burton, or some other of the Saints in Australia, and contains a half column defensive statement of doctrinal subjects, a good idea of which may be obtained from the following:

The series of discourses delivered during the week by Elder Burton in the Hall of Science being somewhat peculiar, your many readers might be interested in seeing an epitome of them. The first evening the speaker designed to show the validity of the Bible as a true standard of evidence in questions of theology, and referred to 2nd Tim., 3, 16; Ps., 19, 6; Isa., 8, 20; Deut., 4, 2; Prov., 30, 5; Rev., 22, 18 and 2, 25, to establish that proposition, and that all commands of God of a general nature should be obeyed without changing them by adding to or taking from them; also that all promises, not local, made to mankind, may be received now as when first made. Consequently, by obedience to the Gospel commands, we should receive the Gospel promises. So to "believe and be baptized" is also to expect "the signs to follow the believer." He quoted Mark, 16, 16, and Mat., 28, 19, etc.

The second evening his theme was, "Christ's work in man's redemption," and he quoted John 1-29. "Behold the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world," which, he stated, was the original sin which brought death into the world. Christ died and conquered death, and will give to all men their bodies again in the resurrection. Therefore, to baptize infants to take away the original sin which is supposed to attach to them, is in effect to deny the efficacy of Christ's atonement and virtually to say: He did not "take away the sin of the world." Man is responsible for his own sins and not for Adam's, and to get remission for them he must obey the gospel. Christ's mission was not only for this, but to preach the Gospel to men on earth and in the prison also. He referred to Isa. 61, 1; 42, 6; Zech. 9, 11; 1st Peter 3, 18, 4, 6, as shewing the extent of Christ's mission.

"Seek first the kingdom of God," Matt. 6, 33, was the speakers theme the third evening. A kingdom means a king, officers, laws, and subjects. The New Testament gives Christ as king, and apostles, prophets, pastors, bishops, elders, teachers, deacons, priests, evangelists, as officers; the law of adoption into the kingdom, faith, repentance, baptism; by these remission of sins was received. The privileges of citizenship were the gift of the Holy Spirit by laying on of hands, and consequently the receiving the spiritual gifts, such as miracles, healing, prophecy, visions, etc. There is no other church organization, laws, or privileges provided for in the New Testament. Therefore to seek for the kingeom of God means to seek for such an organization, etc., Rev., 15, 3, 1 Cor., 12, 28; Eph., 4, 11; Heb., 6, 1; 1 Cor., 12, etc.

The fourth evening he used the parable in Matt. 20, as showing the different dispensations of the Gospel to earth. The "early in the morning" labourers meaning Adam and his co-labourers. The third hour being Noah, the 6th hour Moses, the 9th hour Christ, the eleventh the Angel as stated in Rev. 14, 6. The necessity for each dispensation arose because men in these periods had by transgression lost the privilege of communing with God. Adam transgressed, was thrust out from God's presence. In Noah's day it was the same. In Moses's time Isreal had been 400 years in bondage. In Christ's time, no communion had been enjoyed from Malachi's time, 400 years. And until this generation there had been no people receiving communications as formerly for many years. Therefore the necessity for restoration. Gen. 4, 4; 6, 12; Ex. 3; Nu. 1 and 11; Matt. 10; Luke 10; Matt. 24, 14; Luke 21, 14; Rom. 11, 25; Ep. 1, 10; Rev. 14, 6.

Faith was the speakers theme the next evening. Rom. 10, 17 shows how faith is first received sufficient to enable one to obey the Gospel, by which faith as a special gift is received, 1 Cor. 12, 9. The Bible shews that by faith God's power had been manifested in almost every conceivable way for man's good. In the first century the deaf, dumb, blind, lame and sick were healed, the hungry fed, devils cast out, tempests stilled, the widow's son and ruler's daughter raised from the dead, all by the mighty power of God through faith, which in the Bible is promised to us now, as then, to all who will comply with the conditions upon which it is promised, viz., faith, repentance, baptism, laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Spirit, then living upright, pure lives, bringing forth the fruits of the Spirit, love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, meekness, temperance. But the greatest of all gifts is eternal life through Christ. God is unchangeable, his commands and promises are still unchanged and are true and sure.

WE clip the following from the Provo (Utah) Enterprise of the 15th ult., the following extracts from a lecture by Dr. M. H. Hardy on "School Sanitation." They contain some valuable facts essential to be observed by all who would enjoy life and health.

"PUBLIC health means more than public wealth, it means public honesty and public morality; on the principle that physical culture is the basis of moral strength.

The fundamental principle of our government is to secure to the citizen life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. Life can not be enjoyed without health, and liberty is only desirable as it permits one to employ life in the pursuit of happiness.

Sanitary regulations should be established and thoroughly enforced when there seems to be the least need for them.

The maintenance of cleanliness is the root of all sanitary action,—clean air, clean water, clean premises, clean diet and clean habits, being about the beginning and the end of it. * * *

The sickness-rate is of far greater import than the death-rate.

The study of water-supply is one of the most important topics the sanitarian and public officers have to consider.

The relationship, if any, existing between vaults, cesspools, surface-washing or seepage, and the source of the water for drinking should be carefully noted and the contamination rendered innocuous by condemning such supply.

It is a common and dangerous idea that contaminated water percolating through the soil becomes thus purified; while as a matter of fact, ordinarily, it is simply strained of the coarser portions, holding the dangerous, deadly contaminations in a state of perfect solution, prepared, therefore, for its readiest possible entrance into the interstitial circulation.

The great majority of our dug-wells in this locality are impure, nay poison at best from surface contaminations; if they have a special poison as the virus of typhoid through seepage added, the result is criminally fatal so long as such wells are used indiscriminately. * * *

Uncleanliness must be reckoned as the deadliest of all removable cases of disease.

Vice and disease are merely different expressions of the same thing manifested in different degrees. * * *

If it will pay to have steady nerves and firm muscles, to have an erect form and elastic step, good digestion, refreshing sleep, be able to do life's work easily without the danger of breaking down before the middle period of life—to have a good temper and buoyant spirit which attend upon a vigorous, sound body, as naturally as warmth comes from sunshine, then will attention to school sanitation—to physical culture, pay.

"Any real increase of fitness to its end, in any organism, is an increase of beauty."

As a race is made up of many individuals, the effect of any measure on a race can be determined by the effect on the unit of the race, the individual.

A child should not attend public or "national" schools until about its eighth year, unless the "New Education" be adopted, for the reason that the brain grows extremely rapidly up to this time, attaining about the adult size. This epoch also marks second dentition and important dietetic changes that naturally supervene. And before this time the old "Educational cramming," pernicious at any period,—simply destructive at this,—must be absolutely avoided.

Privy vaults and cess pools should be abolished forever.

"Dry disinfection" and a licensed scavenger should keep our public yards, grounds and conveniences in a wholesome condition.

Typhoid fever has been called the "type of filth diseases"—and yet its virus is constantly allowed to percolate into the crystal depths of the neighbor's and the children's wells.

As with cell-life, so with the virus of contagious diseases—every case of contagious disease has an antecedent cause.

Strictly speaking, contagious diseases are infectious; infectious diseases are communicable; communicable diseases are preventable.

The old idea was that whooping cough, measles, and other diseases peculiar to childhood must be had by children, and that the sooner they had them and (apparently) recovered the better. Nothing could be wider from the truth. These diseases are not a necessity with infants and children; and it is our plain and imperative duty to protect our children from them as we would from any other form of accident.

Every tree planted—every convenience established—every improvement made is ten hoodlum acts avoided; a hundred noble, divine impulses given to our children, a thousand protective providences that find totality in the useful, happy life of the pupil-man and woman.

"What matter though we seek with pain
The garden of the gods in vain,
If hured thereby we climb to greet
Some wayside blossom Eden-sweet?"

SEEKING.

WHAT matter, says the poet, if we do not find that which we seek, if so be we find the good we sought not? Perchance it is a hard lesson to learn, as some of us may have proven, but nevertheless it is a valuable lesson, when rightly learned. It may be we have sought to do others good and have even sacrificed to that end, but anon we discover that we have failed of accomplishing that we desired, because we have not been understood, and wrong motives have been attributed to our actions. What then! Shall we because of this cease to strive? Shall we lose sight of that which we started out with a full determination of obtaining? We have heard such whisperings in the ear, and the voice of the tempter has been very plausible; but thanks be to God, we did not listen, and the wayside blossoms of courage and patience seem very lovely as they glance upon our sight, blossoming beneath the shadow of some trial or disappointment which has met us on our way. In many an hour of darkness, trial and temptation, have we found this reserve force of the soul come to our rescue. The mind and body weary, the soul weighed down with doubts and questionings because the angel wings were only dimly seen, we must walk by faith. Yes; we must summons all our courage to our aid, and reaching forth our hand lay firm hold upon faith and seek to do God's will. Believe me, dear sisters, we shall not seek in vain, if the thoughts of our hearts are right in his sight. Perchance like to those of old, the election may obtain for us that which we vainly sought through other channels, on the good we sought may come under another name; but it will come, and it will come to us, if we only have patience to wait for it. If we being evil know how to give good gifts to our children, will our heavenly Father give us a stone, when we cry to him for bread? Never, never! Heaven and earth shall pass away, but his word shall not pass away. Be of good cheer then and labor on, putting all your trust in him. In his grand and glorious sphere he is moving on, still seeking the good of all he has created. Let us too be seeking—seeking to become perfect in our sphere, even as God is perfect in his, and never forget that it is written, "He that seeketh findeth."

WE are in receipt of letters from sisters Foreman, Amanda Wood, and H. A., also selections from Almira.

AN EXHORTATION.

Dear Sisters:

Like Martha of old we're oft troubled,
And our cares like a burden seem,
Till we scarcely dare look beyond them,
To catch of that land a gleam.
Where with wearying cares no longer
Shall the dwellers be oppressed;
Where the sunlight of peace is dwelling,
In that home of rest, sweet rest.

Yet Martha's part doubtless is needful,
For where would the repast be
If she too all the while had loitered,
Like Mary at Jesus' knee?
Still let us at all times remember,
And each keep the words in heart,
For the dear Master said that Mary
Had chosen the better part.

So let us His blessed peace seeking,
To reign in our hearts each day,
Ere we to our daily toil going,
For this let us meekly pray.
Occasions of good need no seeking;
Around our pathway they lie;
With watchful eyes let us endeavor,
That none are passed heedlessly by.

There's a precious memory back yonder,
The day of our second birth;
The covenant was then entered into,
To walk in his footsteps henceforth.
If we have of this been forgetful,
Let's renew without further delay;
Then life will be fairer and sweeter,
And joy will illumine our way.

Then amid all of life's cares and duties,
Remember well this is the chief,
They shall come home with sheaves rejoicing,
Who went to the reaping in grief.
And while we rejoice in the blessings
Which daily upon us may fall,
Let us see that we love not the gifts
More than the Great Giver of all.

SISTER V. V. SHORT.

WE find the following words in a revelation given in 1873.

"Behold, if my servants and my handmaidens of the different organizations for good among my people shall continue in righteousness, they shall be blessed, even as they bless others of the household of faith. Let contentions and quarreling cease. Sustain each other in peace, and ye shall be blessed with my Spirit in comforting and strengthening you for my work."

We believe that "Mothers' Home Column" may be classed among the "organizations for good," and we hope to see the work established in a firm and sure way, by the Spirit moving upon the hearts of the women in Israel, and gradually bring together a large body of willing and energetic workers, for this organization requires many instruments to fulfill the design for which this work was brought about; and the ends can not be reached but by the faithful, zealous and continued efforts of the laborers, together with the requisite aid from the Author of the same. It therefore behooves every woman that is impressed with the need of this work, and feels to lay hold upon it, to lose no time in lending a hand to help execute the mission of the "Column," by getting up, as it were, Divine threads, and carrying them across the sacred threshold into "Mother's Home" and there forming a net work, by patiently weaving together our faith and works as the warp and woof of a beautiful and everlasting fabric, reaching to life eternal; ever seeking to harmonize the elevating principles of the gospel with our lives, practically, daily—nay hourly, and thus augmenting saintly conduct within the seclusion of home life, in view of that peace, equality and perfection that was sought and attained by Enoch's people; striving earnestly for that feeling of family relationship that will lead us to withhold no good from each other, but will help us bear and forbear and cheerfully impart of whatever we are blessed with, whether it be spiritual or temporal blessing. The Lord blessed former-day Israel with instruction in home-life, through Moses; and we find instruction in the Book of Covenants to latter day Israel, through Joseph, for home-life; and much of this may be taught by women to women through this department; and this includes valuable recipes, methods and all instruction that will serve to equalize and bring God's people upon a common plain, and thus cheer, encourage and stimulate to action in good works the citizens of the kingdom. When we can bring ourselves to live the gospel, we shall occupy a lowly, unselfish and at the same time the most exalted plane of existence; for this reaches out, gathering all good.

Now sisters, ask yourselves, Have we no responsibility?—no duties to perform at home save the work of Martha; is there no spiritual household to help keep in order within the four walls of our dwellings? Yea, let us awake to our duties and "privileges in connection with the great work of the last days." LUCY LLOYD.

BENNETT, Iowa, July 3d.

Dear Sister Frances:—As the door is ajar and all mothers are invited, please may I step in and contribute my mite to this interesting part of the Herald, which is ever a welcome visitor? I have been a reader of its pages almost from the first, and many of its contributors are old acquaintances. Perhaps a few leaves from memory's diary might be interesting.

To begin with, on the 6th of June sister Julia Maitland and little son, husband and myself started with horses and carriage a distance of twenty-eight miles over a beautiful country, with a bracing breeze. We all enjoyed it very much. Stopped at a friend's at noon to rest and after partaking of dinner, started on the last half of our journey in good spirits, and arriving in Buffalo about three o'clock; drove to the church where the Latter Day Saints were assembled in conference of eastern Iowa. When the afternoon session closed there came happy greetings, and for the first time I met brothers Bozarth and Roth. As we could accept of but one invitation, we became the guests of Sister Pauline Buby, and we enjoyed a sumptuous supper (I think we could almost call it a strawberry sociable). Brother Jerome would have enjoyed it. He is pilot on a boat, and was not at home. How good it is to enjoy the company of Saints, those we have known for many years. Our esteemed friend, Ma Ruby, who is hale and hearty and strong in the good faith, giving such a cheering testimony in prayer meeting Sunday morning, certainly should strengthen our desires to be faithful; and such soul-cheering sermons as we heard will not soon be forgotten. We stopped of nights and a part of the time at Bro. E. Ladner's. Sister Ladner's health is very poor. I do sincerely hope she is much better ere this.

Sunday noon took dinner at Bro. Charles Reynolds' where we had a pleasant time. Thanks to all for their hospitality. This was the first surprise—our privilege of attending conference. Our second was the promise of Brn. Bozarth and Roth to call and preach for us the following Sabbath. According to promise, my husband met them at the station of Bennett, and after a dusty ride of two and a half miles stopped at our home. We were all glad to see them and it was quite a treat, for our aged mother, who seldom has the privilege of hearing a sermon. Husband had secured the use of the Bennett Church, which was dedicated by two rousing sermons, morning and evening, attended by large and attentive congregations. The good Methodist pastor warned his flock not to go near, as it was a dangerous place, but only a pious few heeded the warning. Several have said they were the best sermons ever preached in that house, and they want two more, so the brethren will give us another call and stay longer next time. Grandma's sister, Mrs. Kaufman, eighty-one years of age, never heard a Latter Day Saint sermon before. She is visiting us this summer. Brother Maitland's wife came Saturday evening and stayed until Monday evening, so we had a day of rest on Monday, visiting, eating strawberries, and other good fare. Had a good indoor sermon on the prophecies by brother Roth; could not call it fireside preaching as it was so very warm; so you see, we had a picnic, as the children say. As we were sitting on the porch talking, we made the remark, we hardly knew why we stayed here, we were so isolated, with no church privileges, when brother Bozarth remarked, "It makes a good stopping place for the Elders." Perhaps that is what we are here for. All good Elders are welcome."

Another surprise was in store for us. Our neighbors had planned a surprise on grandma's birthday, June 29th. About forty in number, old and young, gathered at our home, bringing with them a sumptuous dinner, and an upholstered rocker for grandma, as a present on her 89th birthday; smaller presents were given. Lemonade and candy, besides other refreshments, were served in the afternoon. We had such a nice time, long to be remembered. The surprise was partly in honor of aunt, Mrs. Kaufman. Now this does not speak very badly for the Latter Day Saints. We have been known here for twenty-two years. Who will say this has not been a month of surprises to us? The Elders left Tuesday morning for Center Junction. Hope they will have a pleasant time, with God's Spirit to help them.

The "Mothers' Home Column" is a grand addition to the Herald. How many useful ideas and hints can be given through its pages. The mother's task is a hard one. With many tears, prayers and heartaches, it is performed. If the fathers would put their shoulders to the domestic wheel and help to bear the burdens of life, how much it would lighten the mothers' burdens. The men take their naps, hug themselves contentedly and say, "Your ma will see to it."

We do believe the husband is as a pilot to steer the domestic boat by his sound advice and reproof, and his good example, always remembering his is as great a responsibility as the mother's. I think the mother should be equal, and the two should be united in serving God, and always keep the family altar sacred.

Dear children, honor your parents; be kind to them and a staff for them in their declining years. My prayer is that we may all be worthy a part in the first resurrection.

A nice way to keep jellies without covers is to cut a piece of brown paper the size of the glass, butter well, pierce the center and press closely the buttered side down.

As ever your sister,

S. A. RUSSELL.

Correspondence.

STOCKTON, Cal., July 12th.

Dear Herald.—My mind often wanders back to Texas, and the familiar faces there, grown dear by years of mutual joy and suffering, pass before me, and I heartily pray, "God bless them." Though my mission there was beset with many trials and privations, yet I recall many scenes of joy, many times of peacefully quiet enjoyment spent with those who love the Master. With many whom I met there I fully expect to rejoice in the kingdom of God. Let me exhort you once more, dear Saints, to be faithful to the end. Soon the clouds will burst asunder and reveal him for whom we wait. Oh then let us be prepared to meet him in peace. May God bless my successor in that field, Bro. I. N. Roberts, and endow him with wisdom and patience to perform the work committed to him. I shall rejoice to hear of his success. The Lord loves that man for his integrity and devotion. And Bro. A. J. Cato, God bless him, for his only desire is to spend his life for the truth. May Bro. Hyde find peace and satisfaction in his new field. Bro. H. L. Thompson and the local brethren who have stood for the cause in the dark hour of trial, my heart goes out to them for I know their devotion and integrity, and the sacrifices and contumely they have suffered for the Master. Then I think how nobly some of our young brethren have come to the rescue, and made the burden lighter upon those who were overcharged with care; and then with what unselfish devotion the membership have sustained them in their labor of love. May God bless them all. But, dear Saints, some of you have been too careless and negligent at times; let me, as one who loves you, exhort you to be more faithful, and to renew your diligence in serving God. We can not afford to sleep in a cause where our souls' interest is at stake.

On March 1st I bid adieu to the Saints at Elmwood, to turn my face toward Lamoni, to be at the annual gathering of God's people. On my way I stopped and preached at Independence and Ridgeway, Missouri; Armstrong and Good Intent, Kansas.

After adjournment of conference I called at Galland's Grove, the branch of which I am a member. I enjoyed myself a few days, preaching for them during the time. Visited my two brothers and families at Logan and Missouri Valley. My next stopping place was at home, in Nebraska, to visit home folks, after an absence of nearly two years, and to attend to some business in which I was interested. My work and my short visit over, I again visited my brothers in Iowa, and made a short call at Galland's Grove. Then to Independence, Missouri, where, on June 2d, I was united in marriage to Vida E. Smith, daughter of Bro. Alexander H. Smith. The same day we started for my field of labor—the Pacific Slope Mission. The 4th, we arrived in Salt Lake City, Utah, where we spent four days sight-seeing; during which time we were the guests of Sr. Robert Warnock—Bro. Warnock being absent. Here we met brethren Anthony and Anderson, faithful men battling for the right against powers of darkness. The night of the 6th I had the pleasure of meeting and addressing a little band of Saints and friends in the neat little chapel belonging to the Saints. At the same time assisted Bro. Anthony in ordaining Bro. Anderson to the office of Seventy, according to the order of the last General Conference. We were much blessed in the ordination, and were more than ever satisfied that the Lord approved of the selection of Bro. Anderson for this sacred office.

On the 8th we left the city, and after a weary ride over the deserts of Nevada we entered California. Thursday the 10th, about eleven o'clock a.m., we approached Oakland pier, and while cogitating upon how we should be able to recognize the brethren expecting us there, a voice rang through the car, enquiring if Heman C. Smith was on board. We responded, and soon found the voice was that of Bro. H. P. Brown, of Oakland, editor of that spicy little sheet, The Expositor. Bro. Brown went right into conversation with us as familiarly as though he had known us for years. We soon felt as though we were not among strangers. Bro. Brown went with us across the bay to San Francisco, where we met and were made acquainted with Bro. G. S. Lincoln and T. J. Andrews. Soon we were shown rooms at Sr. Potter's, where we made our home while in the city. We were treated so kindly, it was with regret we left our comfortable quarters when we felt that duty called us elsewhere. We remained in San Francisco and Oakland nearly three weeks visiting and preaching. Were much pleased with the Saints; and especially with those who are entrusted with the responsibility of leading in measures for the advancement of the cause. On June 15th, assisted by Bro. H. P. Brown, I ordained Bro. Thomas Daley to the office of Seventy. May he become an especial witness, indeed; and like the Seventy of old, return saying "even the devils are subject to us in thy name."

We left the city on June 30th on board the steamer, T. C. Walker, and the morning of July 1st found us at the wharf in Stockton, where we were met by Bro. John Nightingale, president of the branch, and taken to his pleasant home, where we have been guests ever since. We have felt welcome and enjoyed ourselves finely. We have held twelve meetings, two for testimony and preached ten discourses. The attendance has been small, yet we have some new faces present each time. The branch here have a neat little chapel in which to worship, and the most of them are devoted to the cause. We have been treated very kindly by all. Bro. Nightingale is a man of sterling integrity and of great zeal. He will keep the work moving here if in his power to do so. Circumstances and the direction of the Spirit will govern my future movements. My address permanently will be No. 1801, Polk street, San Francisco, California. I wish those writing to me would be careful to write my first name in full. I find so many H. C. Smith's, but no Heman C.

In bonds of gospel love,

HEMAN C. SMITH.

TABOR, IOWA, July 18th.

Brother Blair:—Since conference held at Lamoni, I have labored in all the branches of the district, and visited all the Saints, and talked and prayed with them; also visited many who are not members, some of whom I think are very near the kingdom. I have baptized three, and earnestly pray that others who are already convinced of the truth may soon follow in the good way. I am not by any means discouraged; for I thought in consequence of the busy time among the farmers, and short nights, that it would be almost impossible to hold meetings more than Sunday, but to my surprise I held thirty meetings in six weeks, and had good fair audiences. Many express themselves satisfied that we have the truth. Our branches are somewhat diminished in consequence of brethren moving west, to find them homes; but notwithstanding all, I think we can compare favorably with other districts that are similarly situated.

The Elders are trying to do the best they can, according to their circumstances. Our host of preachers is not very large, and some of our branches are crippled for want of help. We are deficient for material from which to select efficient officers to labor in the different branches, which makes it burdensome for the few; but we do not feel like slacking our energies, nor shrinking from duty, but are determined to press on to the victory; and if possible, obtain the crown through the grace of our God. We have a small band of Elders who are ever ready to do what they can for the work, both in preaching the gospel and administering in its sacred ordinances; and in taking myself to any place if needs be, for the good of the work, or the benefit of the sick.

Dear Herald, we are strong in the faith of this great latter day work, and believe that it will move on, and in spite of all opposition accomplish all that the Master designed. Had we the same assurance of our own ultimate triumph, as we have of the work in which we are engaged, we should be happy indeed. All seem to be well pleased with the Herald. I hear of no complaint; the sisters column is read with stirring interest by nearly all the Saints. God bless sister Frances, and her coadjutors, in the laudable work they have undertaken. We have several Sabbath Schools, and I trust they will all try their best to patronize the Hope, and thus give impetus to the good work.

I hope as many of the Saints as can possibly make it convenient to attend our camp meeting, to be held at Wheeler's Grove, commencing September 4th, will do so. Let us take hold of the enterprise with heart and soul, and make it a success; and show to the world that we mean what we say when we testify to the truth of this great work. Yea, let us be valiant in the testimony of Christ, that we may obtain the "crown of his glory, to sit on the throne of his power, to reign forever and ever." May the Spirit of the Master be with all who love the truth, is the earnest prayer of your co-worker and brother,

HENRY KEMP.

LA CROSSE, Ill., July 17th.

Dear Nephew:—I am housed at your cousin's, Solomon Salisbury, for a few days of rest. I left home May 29th. Did not get the means sent me by the Bishop in time to get to the June conference at Montrose; but while stopping at Clinton, Iowa, I found plenty of work to do—on account of some local troubles existing in that branch of the church. I am in hopes that ere this reaches you, that a more settled condition of unity may prevail in that place. It was in Clinton that I met with Brn. Roth and Bozarth, who were engaged in mission work—setting in order the affairs of the church in the Eastern Iowa District; their labors were much needed in this district. I devoted my labors while at Clinton to preaching several discourses on the doctrine of love and unity; which I believe had a good effect among Saints and friends of the cause. By special request of some enquirers, I gave two lectures on the coming forth of the Book of Mormon, and some brief events connected with your father's mission and the finding of the so-called golden plates. These lectures were given at the house of a family who were members of the Methodist Church, and who expressed themselves well pleased with the evidences in favor of the prophet's mission and this latter day work. These friends with some others I labored with, while at Clinton, will undoubtedly ere long unite with the church. I did not have the privilege of preaching but once in the Saints' chapel at Clinton, as some matters about the building of the chapel had not been settled. I left Clinton in June for Rock Island, and arrived at Bro. Dungee's in time to hold forth on the Sunday following, to quite a full house; meeting at Bro. Dungee's; some relatives of old time Saints came in, and listened attentively to a recital of the history of the founding of this Church of Christ in 1830, by special revelation from God, and the renewing of the gospel dispensation as taught by Christ and his Apostles. These tidings, to listening ears, seemed to waken a spirit of interest in the hearts of these relatives of former Saints, to the extent the following day an application of some five persons was reported at Bro. Dungee's, for baptism. And, as Elder Short, who has been laboring in this vicinity, and in-and about Moline and Rock Island for some time previous, a line was sent to him at Millersburg by Bro. Dungee to return to Rock Island and gather in the sheaves that were waiting for their baptisms. While at Rock Island I had a pleasant visit with a brother Harson, an old Latter Day Saint, some 77 years of age. I stayed with him over night. It was quite interesting to listen to this brother's recital of his experience; how he obtained a knowledge of this latter day work; and I am glad to see this aged brother still blessed with the Spirit, and battling for the cause. On leaving Rock Island the last of June for Montrose, Iowa, I would not be justified in not making mention of the kind treatment I received at Bro. Dungee's, by both himself and wife. May love and blessings crown their days with much good.

My arrival at Montrose happened at midnight. In the morning I called at Sr. Eliza Newberry's, where I was received with a hearty welcome, and refreshed with a warm breakfast and a few hours' sleep. Sr. Newberry's health appears quite good; and at the prayer meeting on the Thursday evening following my arrival, her testimony in favor of this latter day work, together with many others at Montrose, gave me to understand that the Spirit of the Master was still in the hearts of the Saints in that place. This branch of the church keeps up regular prayer meetings every Thursday evening, and regular services on Sunday, presided over by a Bro. Hall, a Priest, who appears very spiritual and earnest. I held two services in the chapel on the 4th, preached in the forenoon and evening. The weather being very warm in the evening, it was rather slow work to get up a good discourse. I here met with Bro. and Sr. Thomson, of Plano origin; they now reside at Fort Madison. I was much pleased with this visit with them. Bro. Thomson presided over the sacrament administration in the afternoon service, and gave a good exhortation explanatory of the purposes and design of the Lord's supper. On Monday, July 5th, called on Major Bidamon, in Nauvoo, Illinois, and took tea with him and wife. The Major showed me ever the grounds where some of our relatives were laid away for their final resting place. Nauvoo is now a city of vineyards, with many houses still empty. The sad reminiscences that crowded my memory did not create in me a very strong desire to remain long in the city, so in company with Bro. John Lambert, I rode with him the same evening out into the Rock Creek branch of the church, where I remained during the week. The weather being very hot, I visited around among the Saints, and on Sunday preached in their chapel; and in the afternoon Bro. George Lambert with horses and buggy brought me over to Burnside, where cousin Don Salisbury resides. Don was gone out to Aunt Katharine's, helping Fred about harvesting; so I procured a conveyance and came out to Solomon's, where I am now writing. I expect to get out to you aunt Katharine's in a few days. Every body is hard at work in the harvest field, gathering in wheat, oats and hay. The crop is good of small grain in this part of the country; but there are bad omens for the corn crop. A drought has been raging for the last two months, corn fields all drying up, and no prospects of rain yet.

When and where there is a door open, and a people willing to hear that good may be done—in the proclamation of the gospel, so excellently fraught with the knowledge of light and truth in this latter day work, I do not fail to improve the opportunity to put a clincher upon every idea that goes to strengthen the cause of the church of which we both mutually have enlisted in life to sustain.

My nephew, Solomon Salisbury, is heart and Spirit in the work, and has by his influence and labors through portions of this country, been the means of putting down much of the prejudice existing against the doctrines as taught by the Re-organized Church of Latter Day Saint. He is a good talker, and possesses a natural genius to put the frame work of the gospel together as a workman that needeth not to be ashamed. I may give you a more full history of the state of things in this part of the Lord's vineyard after I have visited the church at Colchester. I subscribe, in gospel bonds,

Your uncle,

WILLIAM B. SMITH.

GALENA, Indiana, July 17th.

Bro. Joseph:—To the Saints of Southern Indiana District. Some inquiry has been made why I have not been in the field. First, my financial condition was such that I was compelled to stay at home for a time to care for my family. (2) The Bishop wrote me that he could not sustain me at present; and as there is no one acting as Bishop's agent at present in the district, if it is in keeping with the usages of the church under the present condition of the district, all the Saints who have a desire to assist me in the duties of my calling, they can do so at least enough to pay my traveling expenses, and I will at the proper time report to the Bishop. It is hoped that Bro. Kelley will be in this district ere long, and the work will be in a better condition. To the Saints let me say, don't be discouraged; remember that "man's extremity is God's opportunity." And it seems that God will have us to understand this: what we can not do for ourselves God will do for us, if it is according to his will. This great latter day work is a work of destiny and will be a success, and blessed is he who does not oppose it. O how can men of talent and experience in this work doubt it for one moment. Where is the consistency in them. Have they any thing better to offer to the world. If not where is the principle on which they justify their acts; can men reject a greater light and accept a less and be justified? If not, then comes the question, where is the church that is more in keeping with the laws of God, as revealed in nature and revelations than the Latter Day Saints' church, in point of doctrine and organization. Answer ye wise men. Take the wings of your imagination and fly over the wide fields of your fancy, and if you can not find a church that is more in keeping with the laws of God, are you justified? Remember that motive gives color to actions. If worldly honor, or fame and riches be our motive as there is an unseparable connection between action and condition, hence as a man "thinketh so is he;" and such will our future condition be. As the truthfulness of our system does not depend on the actions of men; therefore, this latter day work, or the principles on which it is suspended can not be judged by the actions of any of those who believe in them, unless the acts be the legitimate outgrowth of the system. Shall I condemn the statute of Indiana that condemns theft, because people steal? Nay, verily, nay. The law is right and the transgressor wrong; so is it in this latter day work. If men have run without tidings and testified to this latter day work, and are now stopping in the fogs of Babylon to investigate, let them see to that. If they made mistakes then the probabilities are they may again—and who can follow then. May God be merciful to them and us all. With a greater desire to spread the truth.

As ever, yours in bonds,

M. R. SCOTT.

WALLSEND, N. S. W. June 12th.

Dear Herald:—Again we find ourselves at Wallsend; and my heart fills with gratitude to God for His protecting care over us during our six months of traveling to and fro. Many times on the angry waters, which seems more beset with danger than the land since the Lord has said, "The destroyer had gone out on the waters, and the servants of God could only go in safety by faith." We felt to realize the fulfillment of those words during our trip from Melbourne to Sydney.

This life is indeed made up of changes. We form acquaintances and make friends only to part with them and seek others. During our visit in Victoria, we became acquainted with many excellent people. We are strengthened and refreshed by their love and good works, and hope we in our turn did them good also. The knowledge of being instrumental in the hands of God, in leading some to a knowledge of the truth, and seeing them rejoice in it, was joy and gladness to us; and gratifying also to know we had many warm friends among those who did not call themselves Latter Day Saints; and that all the places where my husband had preached are still open for more. And I believe there are many hearts in those places open to receive the truth. All seemed loth to have us leave them, and we also were sorry to leave; especially the Queensferry Saints. I never met a better people. There was no chance there for feeling ones self burdensome, or in the way. Each family not only willing but anxious to contribute to our comfort and happiness. We made prolonged visits, while at the Ferry, at Bros. McIntosh, Fleming and George and Robert Edens; but our home was at Bro. Stewarts. He is an exceptionally kind man, and much interested in the work. Five were added to the Queensferry branch while we were there; one a very promising young man, who, I think will be a help to the branch there, and also to the work at large. Before leaving we were made the recipients of many nice presents; especially from Bro. Stewart who gave us all three a new suit—Joseph's of black cloth, Addie's and mine of Irish poplin. A nice Winter hat for Addie, from Bro. Robert Eden, and a becoming little bonnet for myself from his wife—Bro. Stewart's daughter.

We reluctantly bid them good bye one bright morning, and stepped into Bro. McIntosh's boat on our way to Hastings. There was scarcely a breath of wind, we were all day getting to Cowes, Phillip Island, where Mr. Burton had baptized four a few weeks previously. We were made welcome and spent the night at Bro. Morrison's. Intended to call at Mr. West's, and look about the island a little during the fore part of the next day, it being my first visit on the island; but a northerly gale was springing up, and we were obliged to hurry off in the morning, and it was with much difficulty we reached the jetty at Hastings. Had a strong tide in our favor, but were five hours and more, beating our way against a head wind and heavy sea, that threatened at times to bury us up. However, we received no farther injury than an occasional shower-bath from the sea, and our clothes somewhat spoiled with the salt water. Were met on the jetty by Brn. Jones and Grayden. The latter giving us a welcome home at his house during our two weeks' stay, and Addie at Sr. Anderson's. The Saints there and at Somerville are endeavoring to live their religion, and rejoicing in the blessings received; especially the gift of faith to be healed. Two more were baptized, one being the Mrs. Unthank I spoke of in my last letter, who received us in her house in Somerville. On account of having baptism on the day we were to leave for New South Wales we were too late for the coach. So Mr. Prosser—the principal merchant of the village—kindly gave us a passage on his market wagon to Frankston, where we took the cars to Melbourne; got into town at ten o'clock in the evening. Had some difficulty in finding a place to stay all night. The hotels were all crowded. Next day at noon we took passage on the steam ship Bunningyong, for Sydney. Had a splendid run, the best the captain said, that he had had for a long time. During one day and night the wind blew nearly a gale, covering the ocean as far as the eye could see, with white foam from the breaking sea. But it was from exactly the right point of the compass to be the most benefit to us; so besides the steam all sail was set which kept the ship steady and also ahead of the sea. But it was terrible for the steamer we met; the sea was breaking over her like a half sunken rock. As fast as she would rise up out of one she would dip down and plunge through another. I have wondered if it just happened that we were the favored ones, or if it was the kind care of a loving Father that guarded us from harm and filled our hearts with peace and enjoyment, while others were tempest tossed and quaking with fear of being ship-wrecked. I accepted it as an especial blessing from his hand given in answer to prayer, and with my whole heart thanked Him for the same.

The ship stopped twenty-four hours in Sydney, so we had time to visit Bro. and Sr. Ellis; found them well, but quite lonely in the absence of their daughter who had been married and was then, in company with her husband, Bro. Morris, on their way to Lamoni, to make a home among the Saints. I hope they will find kind friends there, for such are appreciated by strangers in a strange land. Another night's steaming brought us to Newcastle. Spent a pleasant day with Sr. Webster, then came on to Wallsend. Could not get a house to rent, so Bro. Amram Lewis kindly gave us a home at his house, which is quite small for two families, only four rooms. We have to stow close and be good natured. We expect to go either to Foster, or Nambucra in two weeks. Mr. Burton organized a branch at Hamilton, where there seems to be quite an interest, two weeks ago, and also held a week of meetings in Newcastle. Hope the seed sown will in time bring forth fruits to the honor and glory of the Master.

SISTER EMMA.

[Newsy letters from far off laborers are eagerly read by all. Sr. Emma is welcome.—Ed.]

KINSLEY, Kansas, July 18th.

Dear Herald:—Some weeks ago we wrote a letter to Bro. D. H. Bays, Pratt County, Kansas, and as we have received no answer we conclude it did not find him, and I am taking this means of writing in your columns, hoping it will meet the eye of Bro. Bays, or some other Elder who can come and preach here. There are some people here who are acquainted with Latter Day Saintism, and one lawyer who is acquainted with Bro. Joseph Smith. We have had the promise of the use of a church for an Elder to preach in, and we two families are earnestly and prayerfully seeking for a branch of the church to be raised up here to the honor and glory of God. Bro. Anway and family live a short distance from us, and we have been meeting every Sunday for an hour's Bible reading and at the close prayer and testimony; and though we are all just lay members, we have taken vote each Sunday who should lead the next, and we have been made to rejoice, and it has been a source of strength to us. But how we long and hunger after the privileges of living where there is a community of Saints, for "The friends that most cheer me

On life's rugged road;
"Are the friends of my Master;
The children of God."

If we can be used as instruments in a branch being raised up here, or wherever we may be, we shall be thankful. How little one can see they have accomplished in looking back over the time we have spent in the church, and we feel and resolve that we will try to accomplish more in the time still allotted to us. We love the gospel of Jesus Christ, and thank God we have been permitted to hear and embrace it. We have received some of the blessings promised by obedience to the gospel. We wrote to Bro. Silas Madden, received no answer, but would like to hear from him. We ask the Saints to pray for us, especially those who are acquainted with us, hoping this call will be responded to, and promising to make an Elder or Elders as comfortable as we can, with love to all Saints, ever praying for the welfare and prosperity of the gospel of Christ, we are,

GEORGE M. & HATTIE WYMAN.

OIL CITY, Ontario, July 12th.

Dear Herald:—I love this latter day work, and know it is of God. I live in Oil City and the branch that I am president of is in Petrolia, which makes it eight miles for me to walk to meet with them. Yesterday I was there, and led two into the waters of baptism; one, a fine young man the husband of Sister Campbell, the other a daughter of Bro. Carnage. At the confirmation we were made to rejoice, for the portion of the Spirit present. After they were confirmed we partook of the Lord's Supper, and had a testimony meeting; and again we were all made to praise God for the latter day work. I have baptized three this summer, and others seem to be near the kingdom. Next Sunday, if all is well I will hold meeting on the green in our village; and the next Sunday I will meet with the friends on the Market Square in Petrolia, Lord willing.

Yours in the one faith,

JAMES N. SIMMONS.

CORMORANT, Minn., July 15th.

Bro. W. W. Blair:—In company with T. J. Martin, Joseph Chester and Charles Shepherd, we arrived at Luce School House, Ottertail county, Sunday morning, July 11th, where we met Bro. and Sr. John C. Foss, and many others. Bro. Foss has been laboring there for some time with good results. T. J. Martin addressed the congregation; afterwards four were baptized. Bro. Foss held forth in afternoon; at close of service one more offered himself for baptism, a man of much promise and a former Elder of some church. Quite a number more are said to be nearly ready. On our way home we called on sister Albertson, at Frazee City, the only member; being recently baptized; found her sitting by a table, Saints' Herald and Bible in hand, feeling well satisfied. There are four Brighamite Elders preaching at, or near Clitherall, who have made some converts. Arrangements are now being made for a discussion to take place July 21st, as to who should be the leader of the church. Bro. Foss will meet them, and may good be done. There will be a two days' meeting commencing July 24th at Silver Lake Branch. Ever praying for the welfare of Zion, W. W. McLEOD.

SERMON BY ELDER F. M. SHEEHY,

OF LISBON FALLS, MAINE,

In the Saints' Chapel, Lamoni, Iowa,

April 9th, 1886.

[Reported for the Herald and prepared by the Editor].

WE will read for our consideration a part of the Scripture found in the second epistle of Peter:—"Simon Peter a servant and an apostle of Jesus Christ, to them that have obtained like precious faith with us through the righteousness of God and our Savior Jesus Christ: Grace and peace be multiplied unto you through the knowledge of God, and of Jesus our Lord, according as his divine power has given unto us all things that pertain unto life and godliness, through the knowledge of him that hath called us to glory and virtue: Whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises; that by these ye might be partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust. And besides this, giving all diligence, add to your faith virtue; and to virtue knowledge; and to knowledge temperance; and to temperance patience; and to patience godliness; and to godliness brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness charity. For if these things be in you and abound, they make you that ye shall neither be barren nor un-fruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. But he that lacketh these things is blind and can not see afar off, and hath forgotten that he was purged from his old sins. Wherefore the rather, brethren, give diligence to make your calling and election sure; for if ye do these things ye shall never fall; for so an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. Wherefore I will not be negligent to put you always in remembrance of these things, though ye know them, and be established in the present truth. Yea, I think it meet, as long as I am in this tabernacle, to stir you up by putting you in remembrance; knowing that shortly I must put off this my tabernacle, even as our Lord Jesus Christ hath shewed me. Moreover I will endeavor that ye may be able after my decease to have these things always in remembrance. For we have not followed cunningly devised fables, when we made known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ; but were eye witnesses of his majesty. For he received from God the Father honor and glory, when there came such a voice to him from the excellent glory, this is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased. And this voice which came from heaven we heard when we were with him in the holy mount. We have also a more sure word of prophecy; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day-star arise in your hearts: knowing this first, that no prophecy of the Scripture is of any private interpretation. For the prophecy came not in old time by the will of man; but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost. According as His divine power has given unto us all things pertaining unto life and godliness."

The knowledge that we gather from the language of the apostle here in this epistle, calls us to the exercise and cultivation of genuine virtue in this life. And we hold that in the gospel economy the Almighty has prepared and arranged for us all things that pertain unto life and godliness; and we think that this life referred to here, has reference to this life, as well as that which is to come. We have heard it often spoken of when treating upon a question of religion, that it related only to the great hereafter; that everything that related to religion, and the great power of redemption, was to be postponed till after death. Now we feel that this text justifies us in the thought that religion is adapted to the present life, and to enable us to appreciate this present life. Inasmuch as this is a life unto life, and is closely connected with, and is a part and parcel of the life that is to come, and that the life that is to come is to be eternal, and all that relates to it is to be composed of things that are to be incorruptible and eternal, so the reference is made in the chapter this morning to the divine nature that we are to be made partakers of through the promises. We are to partake of a nature that is incorruptible; it will endure this life, and whatever the future life may develop. The fact is, there is no uncertainty connected with a character, or structure built up with the material referred to in this chapter. It is certain to endure in time and in eternity. "Whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises; that by these ye might be partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust." Now we are not to be deprived of that pleasure that is good; I am not deprived of anything that is calculated to benefit me, or that is calculated to benefit my fellows, my associates, and is calculated to enable us to do good; but if I inculcate such qualities as are referred to here, I am ready for any and every event in life, no matter what it may be. It is true that a man is made up largely of his surroundings; that is, he partakes of the nature of his surroundings, and these determine largely the kind of a man he is. The apostle says: "Evil communications corrupt good manners." Good influences have also their effect in making the individual good according to his surroundings. We may take the most excellent young man in the community, or young lady, brought up under very favorable surroundings. Let them leave their homes where they are guarded from many things that are pernicious in life; let them go out and meet life with all its stern realities, and become surrounded with evil, and with things that are unfavorable to righteousness, and they will sooner or later, if not very careful, partake of the nature of their surroundings. It is natural for them to assimilate with that with which they are brought in contact, and to finally partake of that nature. A man does this by first associating, and then assimilating.

At first the sound of blasphemy, the first sound of profane words, the tender ear of youth feels is repulsive, it grates harshly; but by constant hearing, by constantly being surrounded by associates from whom he is constantly hearing this language, it soon loses that harsh grating, and becomes not unpleasant to hear. So it is with regard to all other things. If we only become passive, we partake of them. This is according to the mind of man in regard to all things. We partake of evil things when we associate with them, and afterwards assimilate them. A similar principal is brought into requisition by which we partake of good things, of holy things, of pure things. As we partake of evil things and become evil, so we partake of good things and become good; we partake of the divine nature in the same manner as we partake of an evil nature upon the same principles, namely, association and then assimilation. With this we can become like the divine nature. By reading good books and learning good works we receive good. We are associating with good, and get good principles into our minds. Also by associating with good people we receive good and become good. But the thought that our attention is called to from a gospel standpoint, is this: Every man and every woman has to become good by association with the source of all good, and that directly; so that each one by associating with the center of good and receiving from this source of good, the good or divine nature, may become correspondingly good. If we associate with the good, we partake of that and receive that. Man can go no higher than his surrounding; a man can partake of the nature of his surroundings, but he can get no higher. When we read over the good things in the Bible, we get our faith, and we get our thoughts and our minds adjusted to their thoughts; by associating with them in this way, we get the good that they had, and receive their good, by first associating with that good and then assimilating it. Hence we are directed here to start our associations with the Almighty, the source of all good; and by association with him, and by assimilating the divine nature, we partake of the divine nature; and so far as we do this we become good.

So then the way is opened up clearly and distinctly for every one to follow; and the individual is responsible here, and will be held accountable for his actions. Certainly the proclamation is broad enough: "If any man will come he shall receive; knock and it shall be opened." If there is a promise within the lids of that Bible more emphatic than another, it is that one found in James: "If any man, [all], if any man lack wisdom, let him ask of God, who giveth to all men liberally and upbraideth not." So there is an opportunity for all men to come; they need not ask from any other source, but they may ask directly of God, and it shall be given them. And the more a man asks, or the more he associates with and assimilates good, the more he becomes like that good, whatever that may be. So we see the characteristics of the deities that different nations have worshipped correspond with the conceptions of the Almighty held by these different nations, and these conceptions are based upon the characteristics of the nations themselves. If they are narrow and contracted, He will partake of the nature of them, and as a consequence will be narrow and contracted. If a man's conceptions of the Almighty are narrow and contracted, as a consequence we find him narrow and contracted; we find him getting no higher than the object of his worship and that which he has associated with. To me one of the grand things of the latter day work is the broad, grand and eternal truth connected with it, representative of God. And the children of men from the standpoint we represent may learn that he is a God of mercy, justice, equity and love; and when we view him from this standpoint, and contrast this in our experience with the creeds of men, we see that these creeds have their effects upon the children of men, and make them pernicious in their habits; make them narrow minded and presumptuous with their fellow men, who do a great many things obnoxious and no doubt wrong; but they are doing the best they can, they are honest and sincere in these things; but honesty and sincerity do not determine the truth or falsity of anything. Honesty under and within the pales of creeds will produce its effects just the same as honesty and sincerity out side of them, no matter whether it is narrow or broad. The surroundings invariably govern the mind of the individual in this respect, the effect is just the same; he partakes of the nature of them and goes no higher. So that it seems to me that it is consistent for a man in the first place to go to the fountain-source of all good, and there partake of that good, and receive that good. And as he goes there he certainly must expect to develop gradually, each step taken successively, as in any other department of life. No man will develop all at once. We read that man "must be born again." This signifies that he must commence upon the fundamentals of life, the foundation principles, and there grow step by step, and each step taken in its proper time and in its proper place, neither of them to be skipped, neither of them to be taken aside, but every one of them in its place.

Now the apostle is addressing himself here to those who are in the faith; and while he says that we are "called to glory and virtue," he does not say that we have glory and virtue. He says that there are certain "precious promises" that we are called to, that pertain unto life and godliness; and that by these things we are "made partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust." Every man of reason who brings his judgment to bear upon these things would readily agree, that those things that are required there to be subjected, namely, the corruptible things, ought to be subjected, ought to be kept down; so that in obeying the injunction here, in trying to associate with these things enjoined in the New Testament, we are not to be deprived of the present life, with its enjoyments, and those things in nature that are pleasurable. There are a great many things that are bright and pleasurable to some men, that are satisfying to them, but that nevertheless have the nature of disruption, disintegration and decay; have the nature of corruptibility, are not lasting, are only transient, only remain for the moment, and last no longer than while under the special surroundings that gave them birth. These are opposite from what the Apostle Peter directs our attention to here, for the things relating to life are not the things relating to death, but the very opposite of it. Now notice the language used here; "Giving all diligence, add to your faith virtue." The starting point there is adding to your faith virtue. Now the nature of virtue is good, and this nature is incorruptible. That which is not virtuous is corruptible; it contains the seeds of disintegration and death. It makes no difference how much of it we may accumulate, how much we may surround ourselves with, it is destined to death. But virtue has in its nature incorruptibility. It will stand throughout the present life and give us all that that life can give, and will endure as well in the great hereafter. So that if we add to our faith virtue, we add to it an element of life, a quality that will endure forever; for there certainly can be no pleasure with the Almighty, or with Jesus Christ, only with that that will attain the highest eminence of virtue. Only virtue will qualify a man to inherit the great hereafter, the heaven spoken of by God's people all through the ages.

"Add to your faith virtue; and to virtue knowledge." The nature of knowledge is inviting. A wise individual enjoys the pursuit of knowledge. No one is satisfied without knowledge as a rule; and we are so constituted, that just as soon as we take one step upward to get knowledge, we then want to take another step in advance, and seek more knowledge. Just as soon as we obtain knowledge upon one topic, upon one point, we naturally take pleasure in advancing up and up and up, getting knowledge from every source and upon every topic; but especially is this so in relation to the spiritual part of man. Add to your faith virtue, and to virtue knowledge. Now if a man will exercise himself in this wise, he may expect to stand, and he will certainly endure. He will escape that that is of the nature of corruption in us through lust.

"To knowledge temperance, and to temperance patience." After a man has included in his make up here that which is virtuous, that which is good, and builds up by adding to it knowledge, it includes another quality, and that is temperance. Now you will discover that just preceding the grand acme of the Christian life, the things preceding the grand keystone in the arch of Christian experience, or Christian life, that a man is to develop upward in that which is calculated to make him fit for the presence of Jesus Christ. He certainly must have so much of that referred to here. For a man can not attain unto much from a gospel stand-point, if he neglects these things that precede this acme of Christian life. It seems to me to be very inconsistent for us to neglect developing and including these things. Temperance must be included, because temperance will qualify. Temperance is an element that fits us and prepares us for higher and greater and grander conditions. So to develop here, temperance must be heeded in the best expression of the term. It should be observed in all things. Not only as it may relate to alcoholic liquors, but in everything,—temperance in all things. Let your moderation be known unto all men. All our habits and customs, everything to which the rule may apply, must be temperate.

"And to temperance patience." After a man has added these former things, he must add the quality of patience. Who is there this morning but what will concede very readily that patience is a very desirable quality; that it is necessary in the grand make up, that it is a part of the divine nature, and that as we assimilate with the divine nature, these are the expressions of it? When we have not patience, we have certainly been giving way to impatience. Impatience has certainly produced a great deal of trouble and destruction. Every time it is manifested it is pernicious in its effect; it is always corrupt; and in no sense favors life—this life or that which is to come. The apostle is teaching us here the things that pertain unto life present and future. Now in impatience there is no true life, but there is corruption—everything that is despicable. Add to temperance patience, and to patience godliness, or the quality of goodness. We should exercise godliness, that we may become like God. This is partaking of the divine nature: and this excludes everything that can not be harmonized with him. Our highest and grandest conceptions of love and patience, godliness and virtue—all things that the mind of man can conceive of the Almighty—are comprehended in the term godliness. It is one of the things that we are to partake of; the nature we are to assimilate; that we are to become like; so it is included among those qualities that we are to add to our faith.

And we are to add to godliness brotherly kindness, and to brotherly kindness charity; and if all these things be in you, they shall make you that ye shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. Now the fact of these qualities being laid out here in this way, suggests that we avoid the opposite of these. It suggests labor also; it suggests continual work on the part of the individual in these things; "giving all diligence," that is we must be diligent in these things. Diligence always signifies labor and care. We are to be made like God through knowledge. God has "given unto us all things pertaining unto life and godliness through the knowledge of Him." We must obtain these things upon the principle of knowledge, not by an exercise of faith alone. We must not rely on faith alone; something greater is required. We learn in the Bible that faith alone will not save a man. We may have faith and confidence from now until doomsday that these qualities spoken of in this chapter are high and grand enough to produce all that is necessary, but if we remain there, no benefit will be derived from them. Faith alone upon these principles is not beneficial; there must be something else. Salvation is constituted of a "knowledge of the truth." As the apostle says, God calls all men to be saved by the knowledge of the truth. This knowledge is obtained only by obedience. Faith comes by hearing, and knowledge by obedience; so that a man can not become patient, he can not become virtuous, he can not exercise brotherly kindness, only by obeying. And now touching brotherly kindness: Unless circumstances are brought to bear by which man is brought into contact with the opposite and he overcomes by obedience to this injunction, he does not know what it is to have brotherly kindness. So with regard to patience. Unless there is something to arise likely to produce impatience, we will never know whether we have patience or not. We see man has knowledge only as he exercises it. These are evidences of his having partaken of the divine nature. So it is in regard to any and all of these other qualities—temperance, patience, godliness, brotherly kindness, charity. All of these are learned by proper obedience, and faith alone will not produce the desired effect. Herein is the righteousness of God revealed in the gospel. The brother referred us last night to the fundamentals of the gospel in an alphabetical arrangement of principles—faith, repentance, baptism, laying on of hands, resurrection of the dead, and eternal judgment. But we are aware that while a man may be a believer in these things, unless he continues on as Peter says, he has forgotten that he was purged from his old sins; has forgotten the grandeur of these first principles. If a man builds a foundation upon just principles, and there ends, and does not go on to perfection as is provided for in the architecture of this structure, he is like a man that is blind and can not see afar off,—"he that lacketh these things is blind, and can not see afar off, and has forgotten that he was purged from his old sins. Wherefore the rather, brethren, give diligence to make your calling and election sure; for if ye do these things ye shall never fall." The whole building seems to be constituted and made up of these things. The opposite of these leads to death and certain banishment from the presence of the redeemed. The apostle refers to this in Corinthians, where he says: "I have laid a foundation as a wise master builder; let another take heed how he builds thereupon." Now if we build upon that—these fundamental principles, these same principles which he tells us about in the sixth of Hebrews, as the principles of the doctrine of Christ, which he also laid there among the Corinthians—now take heed, says he, how we build there upon, for if we build upon this foundation with things like wood, hay, or stubble, these things that are corruptible matter, that can be destroyed, our structure will amount to nothing. It amounts to nothing here, and certainly will amount to nothing in the great hereafter. If we build upon that foundation with material of which the types are gold, silver and precious stones, it will abide. Now the apostle Paul here is nearly parallel with the apostle Peter, and no doubt refers to the same things. He uses a figure of speech to express his meaning; and certainly these qualities that were referred to by Peter,—knowledge, temperance, patience, brotherly kindness, charity,—might well be symbolized by the best materials known from a physical stand-point, and these are gold, silver and precious stones, while the elements of corruptibility are wood, hay and stubble. The most effective physical agent capable of being brought to bear upon these things is fire, but fire will not effect or destroy gold, silver, and precious stones.

This is also brought out in the proclamation, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, and he that believeth not shall be damned." A very simple act is referred to here, and some people have the idea that if we are baptized, have had our sins remitted, our soul's salvation is then guaranteed; and sometimes this thought arises when the brethren are preaching upon this principle, and urging it pretty strenuously as they sometimes do, it being a grand point, a central idea in the grand system they are presenting. But not so. It is a principle that fills its own place in this great work. "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." In this are brought out the same principles already referred to, which is faith, knowledge, etc. "He that believeth," is already exercising faith, and when he "is baptized," the principle of obedience is there. In this act of baptism a contract is entered into between the individual and his Creator, that he will keep the conditions of that baptism, and keeping these conditions, he will add to his faith the things that are like God. He covenants that he will keep the commandments of God; puts off the old man with his deeds, and puts on the new man. Now, being "translated from darkness into the kingdom" of light, he is now to build up in his character the divine virtues. He is to build up with different things from what he had been building with previously; they were transient, things that were corrupt, that will not endure, things that have in them the element of death. He must now include in his work the things that are divine, forsaking the things that are in the world through lust. And the Almighty will help him and strengthen him, and make him secure and certain, and give him the spirit of light and knowledge, as he has guaranteed to do. He sends the Comforter, to lead and guide us into all truth. There a great many who misunderstand this. They get the idea that the Spirit of truth is to produce a little feeling of happiness and pleasure, and when feeling pretty good they then receive the Spirit of truth. There seems to be something deeper, more grand and noble than simply a little transient experience; there is something there to lead and guide into all truth. Now we are to be sanctified by truth; we are to worship God in Spirit and in truth; and "this is the truth, which by the gospel is preached unto us" in the church of God, the grand conservator of truth. To people who have obeyed the first principles, to those who know by experience what it is to be baptized for the remission of their sins, to them there can come no salvation unless they keep up the conditions implied in that baptism. We can not neglect our practical every day living. Our works we can not hide. They show our every thought and motive for every act in life. And if these divine qualities are not found developed in us, if in our experience these things are not brought out, if our structure does not include these qualities, there is one thing certain, we shall come under the condemnation referred to there, and shall be like those who build with wood, hay or stubble; and unless we attain the possession of these things so indispensable to us, the apostle says we "are blind and can not see afar off, and have forgotten that we were purged from our old sins."

We are not to come into possession of these qualities suddenly by transposition from darkness to light. That they are included in our nature all at once, is a mistake. It is more than a slight mistake, it is a thought that is very damaging to us, as well as very discouraging. As we struggle along our spiritual life, we find our way hedged up at times, and we find obstacles. Like the child we find it difficult to learn to creep at first; we have to learn to stand alone, and then creep, and then walk. So it is in our spiritual life. We begin and start out in our spiritual life as little babes; and we have to add to our knowledge, "here and there a little, line upon line and precept upon precept." While it is so with us it is also a work for our brother and our sister, it is a sacred duty binding upon each, that they work, and that they work for each other's good, having charity. Hence the need of brotherly kindness; hence the need of our desiring their welfare as much as we do our own. In our experience with those associated with us in this spiritual development, the development of these divine qualities, we are aided and strengthened, so we may go out into the world and battle with its ills and not shrink from the contest. There is no virtue developed by shrinking from the contest of life; there is no real virtue but by coming in actual contact with life and all its realities. Those who commenced active life very young commenced battling with obstacles, not shunning duty, not shrinking from responsibility—they make the responsible men and women in all communities. So it is when we come into actual contact in the spiritual warfare; we ride above these inferior qualities, and develop the higher and the nobler ones.

While it may be impossible for us to do this work alone, while it may seem that men have not done it outside of the gospel, yet we are warranted in believing that the Lord will help us in this work. Now it is true that this gospel system is so high that it seems at times to be impossible to conform to it. The habits that we have established that are not right, it seems impossible to overcome. These are the results of bad associations and surroundings. But we are responsible for the nature of some of these surroundings. It seems to me it is a fixed fact for Latter Day Saints, that there is never going to be anything in life that is destructive to our spiritual well being that we can not overcome, that we can not subdue, no matter what it may be. Unless the gospel can do for us all these things it falls short of the main objective point, which is, to sanctify us and help us to worship God in spirit and in truth, partake of the divine nature. Anything that is opposite to these qualities mentioned by the apostle, is not of the divine nature. So our relation to life is one of work; it is a struggle, a constant trial, a constant effort. The forces of life, and the regulations by which we develop in life, are to be simply turned and applied towards development in spiritual things. We partake of the nature of these spiritual things by association, and then we assimilate them. It is true that we form our habits by our surroundings when we are passive to them; so of all the evil influences in life. There has to be a starting point. The divergence of the line is not always abrupt; it does not depart always in an abrupt manner, but runs for a while parallel with the straight way. So with evil, and so with good. Evil men do not go into evil instantly; they go gradually, step by step; and before they are aware they are far from the straight line. They have a starting point; in error it is of gradual development; a gradual work. So it is in spiritual and noble things. All have to make a start. We continue to grow, and grow; and as we grow we get stronger and stronger. It is like a man ascending heights. As he ascends step by step, he reaches a higher site, the scene becomes more beautiful, and the surroundings more desirable; and so he is incited on, and up, and up, and up; and every step upward, and every step forward requires labor and diligence. So it is with the human family in every department of the struggle upward. It is with work that we get away onward. Now the question simply is, Are we in that line? Are we partaking of the divine character? As we partake of his nature, so we build it into the structure of our characters and become like him; and these divine qualities that we are to assimilate are patience, godliness, brotherly kindness and charity; and as we gradually develop these, our whole being will become permeated with them.

BRANCHES—MEMBERS, AND DUTY.

THOUGH busily engaged since the April conference, I have been unable to respond to all calls made. The necessity for greater proficiency in branch officials to afford the traveling ministry greater opportunity to extend into new fields is very urgent. The conferment of authority for the consummation of requisite work among branches, and the preaching of the gospel is necessary; yet a proper discretion in ordination should not be overlooked; or necessity for ordination fail to be considered, nor should adaptability be overlooked. To ordain for a compliment would be reprehensible. The fact of God calling the weak of the earth does not justify the thought, that ordination is to be done at random, or congratulation be offered because of illiteracy, nor should it raise the expectation of a premium for ignorance. There is a possibility of Latter Day Saints becoming only surface readers, or thinkers, or looking far enough to find proof of some pet theory or hobby, and then stop. So a claim has often been made to ordination, because of the following clause:—"Yea, whosoever will thrust in his sickle and reap, the same is called of God." If a sickle is figurative representation of authority, it follows that the invitation to reap was to those, who had or were to receive a sickle. But let us look a little further.—See sec. 10, par. 8, D. & C. "Behold I command you, that you need not suppose that you are called to preach until you are called." How sensible? For man is an excitable being and being intent on accomplishing a cherished purpose, may mistake natural impulse for Spirit impression; and so for a time being, at least, make his claim appear valid. While some may do this unwittingly, others may do it designedly, hence the wisdom of such instruction.

Further. "Wait a little longer, until you shall have my word, my rock, my church, and my gospel, that you may know of a surety my doctrine; and then behold, according to your desire; yea, according to your faith, shall it be done unto you." Still further. In par. 10, we read: "Behold this is your work, to keep my commandments; yea, with all your might and strength; seek to declare my word, but first seek to obtain my word, and then shall your tongue be loosed; then, if you desire, you shall have my Spirit, and my word; yea, the power of God unto the convincing of men; but now hold your peace, study my word which has gone forth among the children of men," etc. In consideration of the fact that the kingdom of heaven is as a net cast into the sea, gathering of all kinds, good and bad; and the fact of the best of men being liable to be carried away by vain ambition, what wisdom such instruction reflects. And if nothing else is conclusive, the fact of men seeking justification to declare the word by seeking an understanding of that word by study, is most conclusive, and ought to serve as a preventive to too great anxiety to assume the power to preach. If any have thought a necessity existed to ordain any and every one, as a seemingly devoted sister of brother might suggest, by prophecy or otherwise, a calm reflection and study of the 12th par, of sec. 17, might cause them to pause.

A branch is an integral part of the body, with power to regulate its own affairs, and should have life in itself; and while this spiritual life is primarily from God, its retention is a result of individual and official perseverance in carrying out prescribed duties, and to argue the uselessness of the helps, gifts, and governments God has placed in the church is tantamount to questioning the wisdom of God.

Visiting, and so far as possible caring and providing for the needy, and the visitation being so thorough and systematic, that the moral status of every member is known, keeping a record worthy of all acceptance, constitute some of the labors of branch officials, and where this godly work is cheerfully and continuously done, the effects are visible; as is also the result of negligence. The fact of adjudicating power being committed to the church does not justify a standing still until trouble comes. So far from this, that officials are rather appointed to prevent than adjudicate trouble; and yet it is a significant fact that those who are most efficient in preventing trouble, will prove most effective in its adjudication, when a necessity exists. Trials among Latter Day Saints should never be thought of, until every other method of reconciliation has been brought into requisition and failed. Wise and diligent branch officials, by timely and legitimate interference, could settle many little squabbles and prevent litigation, which squabbles often are left to fester, and grow from a mole hill to a mountain, involving bitter litigation, which sometimes proves effective in severing the ties of union, and perhaps forever preventing a restoration of friendship. If a neglect of duty brings litigation, a study and performance of duty would do much to prevent it. A needed and required proficiency in branch officials is greatly helped in a frequent counseling and conferring together to get each others' confidence, and striving to understand and teach one another, that all may have a realizing sense and thorough knowledge of duties and responsibility, with the needed courage to perform them; for it often needs more courage to contend and stand for the right than to do wrong. The determination to be governed by principle rather than policy may be a cause for a failure to get and retain the good-will of all. But the practice of right now will bring might in the by and by. Nor need we be blatant in words of right, for our works decide that.

If the number of the members of a branch of their scattered condition render it impracticable for one Priest and Teacher to visit,—the branch might be districted and a Priest and Teacher have charge of each district. The combined wisdom of the officers should determine as to the frequency of visitation. For the thought that every official in his appointed place in diligently striving to apply himself has a better conception of his duties than others is quite compatible with the genius of the latter day work. No work requires closer study and diligence than that of dealing with the souls of men,—and that is what every official in the church to a greater or lesser extent has to do. In view of this important fact—the necessity to discriminate between officiousness and a godly zeal leading to the performance of prescribed duties should not be lost sight of. To avoid extremes and always pursue an even tenor, requires a studiousness and discretion that many of us fail to give evidence of. The necessity for such exhibition exists nevertheless, and with opportunities to acquire knowledge we shall not be excused if we fail. With the revealment of God's will comes a guarantee for wisdom to guide, inspiration or light to understand, strength to strengthen, and grace to refresh when a thirsting for these qualifications which God alone can give, exists. A constant care to evidence a harmony between precept and example should be had. The work of a presiding Elder of a branch is important, because of its necessity. And with himself, after being duly appointed, rests the power to obtain and retain the respect and confidence of those over whom he presides, to a very great extent. And yet, though wise enough to give reasonable evidence of having the welfare of all at heart, he may not escape being an object of spite to some, or a target at which they may hurl their poisonous darts. But to labor so as to evince an interest in all, is a solemn duty imposed upon every official. That power given of God should be prostituted for unholy purposes is lamentable; and yet the past is too pregnant with proof of it having been done, for any having even a limited conception of right and love for the truth to deny. But suspicion or surmising, or probabilities presented in glowing terms of what may be, by those who have the good or misfortune to be placed in positions of trust, is not the preventive to such abuses. Indeed there exists no power to suppress this or other evils, but there is a possibility of regulating evil and inflicting punishment for its perpetration. Hence we are taught that those holding power use it at their own peril. How compatible with the thought of man's moral agency! which must have entered largely into his fall, as it must in the vital question of his redemption. To exhort, reprove and teach, are among the duties of a presiding Elder of a branch; and to know when to speak, when not to speak, what to speak, and what not to speak,—is a proficiency we should all seek for, and give greater evidence of its possession than we do.

The time of social meetings should be given to the Saints; and while exigencies may arise justifying the presiding officer in occupying time, a general practice of consuming time would be incompatible and injurious. A brief prayer, and few, very few remarks by a presiding officer, should be the order. There is no order making it binding to sing two long hymns at the opening of a prayer meeting. In this, proper discretion should be used. Dismissal of a meeting after due time is allowed, and no disposition being exhibited to use the time, would often prove more effective for good, than a lengthy harangue by the president. The importance of social or prayer meetings should be better understood and appreciated; and as a lively interest therein speaks for the spirituality of a branch, so a want of or but a partial interest speaks against it. Large and fashionable Sunday night gatherings may do to judge of modern orthodox growth, but the growth of Latter Day Saintism can not be thus determined. We are told that an agreement upon Christ's word by the prayer of faith, that we may know how to govern the church and have all things right before God is necessary; and, as before intimated, frequent conferment by branch officials, not only to teach each other, but to know the moral status of the Saints, as well as to discuss and agree on measures in the event of trouble or misunderstanding, reporting the moral standing of Saints and detailing measures used by which troubles may have been adjusted in a business meeting, is not wise; when trouble arises, due efforts should be made to keep it within legitimate limits. And inconsistency would never be more glaring and wrong more palpable than for visiting officials to peddle, or make known to one family what they may hear or see in another.

One of the evil practices of the age is idle gossip. Saints, especially officials, should avoid it—"being wise servants, and harmless as doves." It is not expected that however wise and godly branch officials may be, they will please all, or sail along without criticism. But they should make it a study to give no just cause for complaint, for usurpation, or approaching and dealing harshly with the Saints. And Saints in turn should make allowance for them, and not expect too much; and never forget that the power of a visiting officer is as sacred as that of the presidents, and to wilfully reject it, would bring condemnation. To facilitate the work of keeping a correct record, it would be well to hold those in charge of stated meetings responsible for reporting any changes that occur to the branch secretary, (if he be absent), so that the burdens of the district, and the general church secretaries may not increase through the negligence of branch secretaries. There is very much more for a branch president and his fellow officers to do and think of than having charge of a meeting once or twice on Sunday. And in trying to reach it, system and order should be adopted and carried out, with a view to encourage and build up the Saints. Saints should never forget the promise that "where two or three are gathered in Christ's name," etc.; nor the injunction in sec. 59, D. & C. "And that thou mayest more fully keep thyself unspotted from the world, thou shalt go to the house of prayer and offer up thy sacrament upon my holy day," etc. The continuous dripping of the tiny drops of water wear the solid rock; and so a continuous observance of what to some appears simple duties, wears upon the carnal, subjugating it to the divine nature, making Saints appear consistent before the world, and brings them nearer heaven; and thus they contribute their part towards building up the cause so far as their moral conduct is concerned; presenting quite a contrast to those foremost at conference or camp meeting, but who seldom show themselves at branch meetings, unless some good, or strange Elder is expected; these are drones, the others are working bees; or occasionals, and the other regulars; which involves a necessity for officials to buckle on the whole armor and continuously strive to make all working bees, or regulars.

The gospel economy was not an experiment with God, hence there is no room for saying that a mistake is made in man, amid life's cares, being required to evidence fidelity to that economy; and thereby, in the light of God's love and justice be worthy of reward for a well spent life. Nor can it follow that an indifference in the performance of duties under the pretext of their becoming monotonous because of their sameness is justifiable. The din and noise of the world to-day can only be attributed to a repetition of that done yesterday, and thus it will be as long as time shall last—to get rid of the sameness is to stop entirely and suffer loss.

Branch officials should not turn a deaf ear to appeals for additional help for the Herald. Some members are imbued with the thought that if they can borrow and read the Herald, it is enough. This is an error. The weekly issue of the church organ ought not to be less than five thousand, and with the interest that ought to exist, it might reach six thousand; why not. Nor need the Hope, Advocate, Sandhedens Banner, or the spicy Expositor languish, as they ought not. Visiting officials need not make themselves officious, or intrusive; but may and should keep the Saints in lively remembrance of their duties and obligations. It would be useless to use time and space to show the great necessity of the printed word, or that the press is a power, for this is apparent. Nelson said at the battle of Trafalgar, "England expects every man this day to do his duty." And this is expected of every member of the church, and the "to-day" may be construed to mean while we live. The appeal of the Editor of the "Mother's Home Column," should ring on the ears, and move all officials to action to formulate measures that the Hope may be enlarged and its subscribers increased. Can not the church for once get credit for reaching a grand object through the mite system? I think it can. Ten thousand members paying or giving ten cents, would aggregate a thousand dollars. Let officials of the respective branches in the United States and Canada, and all others who choose, go to with their might, legitimately striving to induce every member to give ten cents or five cents if unable to give ten cents, and let the officials of each branch ascertain the exact number of scattered members reported, and for every one not comeatable, contribute ten cents too. This burden, in addition to giving ten cents a piece, can be equally divided among themselves. It is quite possible when this matter is properly presented and kept before the members and friends, that many will want to give more than ten cents, which privilege can be granted of course. This ten cent arrangement may appear a small business, and the seeing and laboring with ten thousand people may look a big thing; but the much and the big things are reached by the littles, while the visiting of ten thousand when the work is divided between four or five hundred is trifling, very. The will power is wanting, and when brought into lively requisition, it is astonishing what a dwindling of that which before appeared big takes place. In days of yore, when Latter Day Saints after mature consideration decided to unite for the consummation of a given purpose it meant success, and why not now?

If the Board of Publication shall deem five hundred dollars enough to enlarge the Hope to the dimensions suggested—with the subscription, (for of course it is not to be thought that this donation of ten cents is to prevent subscription by no means, this is extra, a sort of endowment), the balance can be used for other laudable purposes; a sort of, or a small endowment would not hurt, but give the needed, and merited help to the Expositor. Let us have the thousand dollars. Yes, Sr. Frances, made a plea for the little ones years ago in the Herald and was not turned away; and we can not afford to manifest indifference to her late appeal. Let the Hope be enlarged, and who can tell what good shall accrue to the rising generation by her infusions; who, who would want to confine her ability to the present narrow limits of the Hope? Every Latter Day Saint ought to feel a tinge of shame rise to his cheek as he looks at the diminutiveness of the Hope—not that I would despise the day of small things, or rest satisfied with the small, when the bigger is comeatable. There are few if any, I think, but will acknowledge that the "Mothers' Home Column" is a great acquisition to the Herald. How cheering in these days of debauchery to see the Editor bringing into lively requisition her more than ordinary ability to point woman to her legitimate sphere. Other noble wives and mothers are pausing amid their domestic cares—making luminous the "Mothers' Home Column;" and others will doubtless follow their example; so that a light shall radiate to guide the young maiden, and encourage those essaying to fill the God appointed positions of wives and mothers, as well as proving beneficial to the sterner sex. Of course our Editors will keep a gentle restraint on Sr. Frances, so that such free-thinkers as Washburn, etc., are not annihilated by her pen—when attacking God's economy. Believe me, kind readers of the Herald, vain as I may seem, my vanity does not prompt me to think that the above reference will impart to you any thing like an adequate idea of the ability and good that have in all the years come to the church from the pen of Sr. Frances. Nor do I apprehend that mortals can tell it. But we may all pray that her days and years may be lengthened out, that the church may still be benefited through her instrumentality. Let us have an enlarged Hope by all means.

I need scarcely suggest the necessity of co-operative efforts by branch officials to aid the Bishopric in carrying out the financial policy of the church; for, on reflection, the necessity will be apparent, which asks the one having a hundred dollars for ten, and a hundred from him having a thousand dollars, which is a plague to some and a puzzle to others; while a few are sad because of their inability to render more temporal aid. What a wonderful crucible is the gospel. Who shall enter and be perfected?

It were difficult to conceive of a more equitable system than tithing. And when we think that the law contemplates that the orphan and needy shall be cared for, through this financial policy, it seems strange that any well to do Latter Day Saint should keep so tight a grip upon his worldly possessions, as not to allow his portion to find its way into the coffers of the church, and yet say, "I love the latter day work." The caring for the widow and orphan is considered benevolent, hence beneficiaries. So thoroughly imbued with this thought are some Latter Day Saints as to give time and money to said beneficiaries to help the above objects of charity, and leave the widows and orphans in the church of God they claim to love above all things on earth to suffer and die, so far as their special efforts are concerned. "Where the treasure is, there will the heart be," said the Great Master. And then, consistency what a jewel thou art! How ridiculous we seem when with thee we part. One of the first sounds heard in the contemplated financial system by Joseph Smith, was that certain men shall be appointed to look to the poor and needy, and administer to their relief, that they shall not suffer.—page 137, D. & C. And then the following appears: "Behold I say unto you, that ye must visit the poor and needy, and administer to their relief, that they may be kept until all things may be done according to my law."—page 151. Again, "All children have claim upon their parents for their maintenance until they are of age, and after that they have claim upon the church, or in other words on the Lord's storehouse, if their parents have not wherewith to give them inheritances. And the storehouse shall be kept by the consecration of the church, and widows and orphans shall be provided for as also the poor. Amen." page 223.

This only shows that the financial system was but in its incipency; yet its object was made manifest. How strange that the name with the least signs of caring for the widow brings applause to all others; yet to Joseph Smith sinister motives are imputed; though giving such evidence of the introduction of a system by which the widow, the orphan, the needy and poor, were to be cared for. It is a little singular if Joseph Smith was one-tenth the rascal his calumniators would have him be, that he sought the establishment of a system that was to be of such benefit to the needy. But I do not intend a lengthy investigation on the financial system of the church, but wish to suggest, that to some the method of caring for the dependents of those sent to represent the church, is proof of drifting towards the orthodox system of preaching for hire, and divining for money. Let us see; from one to twenty thousand dollars annually paid to orthodox ministers, according to grade of talents or culture. When the church appoints an Elder, a statement is made of the needs of his dependents; if just, it is granted; if doubt exists as to the justness of the demand, inquiry is made; if proof is developed of its unjustness, it is denied. It may take from fifteen to fifty dollars per month to supply; and the less cultured may receive for his dependents more than the more cultured. It is well known that great proficiency is attained to torture language, to favor theories, but I think it would be difficult, with all the proficiency, to prove by the above method a drifting toward the orthodox method. The persistency of Latter Day Saints to carry a point is sometimes remarkable.

It would seem that the Bishopric are moving cautiously—and it is very proper that they should; for that which finds its way into the church coffers is from the sons of toil, and even widows' toil and sacrifice, and it were a sin to squander such sacred gifts. The Latter Day Saints, especially Elders, should study economy. Yet with all the caution, they fail to please all; hence I hear complaints; and it is possible that there may be just cause for the same. But I wish respectfully to suggest to branch officials and conference appointees, especially where the church grants me spiritual jurisdiction, that a practice of complaint against the Bishopric where and when they can not be present to defend themselves, is far beneath the dignity of manhood, much more the dignity of a representative of the church; all of which the least member of the church ought to know. Those men are approachable, and if any are suffering,—through a partial or unjust distribution of means coming into their hands, those suffering should go to or write the Bishopric and tell them of the matter, and thus move legitimately for the adjudication of supposed trouble, or get convinced that their complaint is groundless. This is a right belonging to every member of the body, and in thus moving to enjoy rights none are injured. While the miserable, dispicable practice of surmising and suspicioning officials of wrong and unjust doings, may make wounds whose cure may be hopeless; and while the perpetrators of such work may have pleasure therein for the time being, the fact that retributive justice is not slumbering, though it may sometimes appear tardy, together with the fiat of the great Master, "With what measure ye mete to others it shall be measured to you again," should cause us to pause, remembering the Scripture which saith, "If any man seem to be religious, and bridleth not his tongue, but deceiveth his own heart, this man's religion is vain." Nor should we forget "That the fruit of righteousness is sown in peace in them that make peace." "And blessed are the peace makers," etc. In view of these facts, though it is much easier to remind each other of this practical religion than to practice it; yet it can not be expected that a procedure which tends to prevent rather than to make peace can be tolerated.

In well regulated branches, the necessity for frequent business meetings will not exist; but they should be held when a necessity does exist. And when held, there is no reason why they should be otherwise than orderly, peaceful and interesting. The common consent order is not to change or modify given or recognized laws, but to effect an understanding and a unity of purpose on the adoption of measures to carry them out. In the very nature of the case it follows that branch officials have some discretionary power, between which and the rights and prerogatives of the branch members a proper discrimination should be made. There may be exceptions, but as a general rule the acceptance of the gospel is a result of a thirst for righteousness, and a more thorough understanding of duty owed to God and man. And subsequently to entrance into the church, the forty days' temptation comes; which by additional thirst for righteousness we overcome, or are overcome, and flounder among the rocks instead of giving evidence of a knowledge of our spiritual latitude and longitude, by sailing over the tempestuous sea of time without colliding with others.

There is a possibility I believe in discriminating between gospel liberty and absolute rule; and one evidence of this discrimination is seen in a proper appreciation of the former, and a thankfulness when no evidence of the latter is seen. But it sometimes crops out that the most blatant against absolute rule are those who confound liberty with license, especially when bent on reaching some point, or carrying out some cherished plan. Ungodly slothfulness is condemnable—so is ungodly haste to gain place or power; hence the saying, "make haste to go slow." Nothing would spoil the peace of a branch more effectually than for somebody to use undue efforts to influence absentees from all other meetings, to attend business meeting and correspondingly strive to create a party spirit, and exhibit an unholy boldness in insisting on children voting, from the simple fact of their being members. All should rather teach children to refrain from voting until they can vote understandingly, than insist on their voting to gain or reach an end. Gospel modesty would shudder at such outrages. Frequent calls involving time and money to adjust, furnishes evidence that however gratifying it might be to know the density of the earth and the distances of the stars, attention to the above suggestions are more essential, for the unraveling of these mysteries can be deferred without loss, while a negligence in present and law-imposed duties incurs a loss of spiritual prestige, and injures the work, which ought be benefitted by an intelligent obedience to the recognized laws of the church. And though I have far exceeded anticipated limits, the all has not been noticed. But if it is thought this effusion will not dim the light of the Herald, I will come again.

SOUTH-WESTERN MISSION.

Dear Saints:—As the responsibility of looking after the interests of the work in this field has been placed upon me, I wish to say to one and all, march to the front and let us put forth a united effort to build up the kingdom of God in this large field. I appeal to your faith and the love manifested by you in the past, that you fail not in assisting to roll on the work of Christ. Let us now prove our faith by our works. I trust that the local ministry will give us all the aid they possibly can in preaching outside of branches; we have so many calls for preaching, and laborers are so few. Come, come, let us put our mites together and agree as touching this one thing, and we are sure to accomplish great and lasting good. Any one wishing to write to me, will please direct to Cook's Point, Burlson county, Texas. Ever praying for the advancement of truth, I remain yours in bonds,

I. N. ROBERTS,

Missionary in Charge.

SAINTS' REUNION.

The Saints' Reunion, to be held at Wheeler's Grove, Pottawattamie county, Iowa, will commence on Saturday, September 4th, 1886, at ten a. m. Judging from our eminent success of last fall, together with the expectation of the presence of Bro. Joseph Smith and many other able speakers, the splendid accommodations, fine grove, boarding-house, &c., and the promise of many to attend who could not come last fall, we will have one of those real "old fashioned times," long to be remembered. The full particulars will be given further on. Come one and all, prepared to stay the whole nine days.

D. HOUGAS, Pres. of Committee.

REUNION MEETING.

The committee appointed to make arrangements for the Re-union meeting have decided to hold it at Garner's Grove, in the Little Sioux district, commencing on Saturday, October 2d, 1886. Negotiations are in progress to complete the arrangements in detail, of which due notice will be given. This is the same place at which the meeting was held two years ago, but has been made more accessible, and improved in various ways, so that every thing considered, the committee think they have made the best selection that could have been made.

DIED.

THOMAS.—Sister Ann Thomas was born November 14th, 1827, at Swansea, Wales. She was baptized in 1853 with her husband and family emigrated to Utah. Becoming dissatisfied with polygamy and priestly rule in Utah, she left Spanish Fork, and located at Camp Floyd, now Fairfield. When the Elders of the Reorganized Church entered the vallies calling wandering Israel to return, she heard the voice of the true Shepherd and in 1866 she was baptized by Jos. S. Lee, and from that time until her death, she has lived a devoted, trusting child of God. On July 19th she peacefully passed away, leaving three sons and a husband, with many sorrowing friends. Her good deeds and Christian example endeared her to all that knew her. May God sanctify the affliction to her bereaved family and friends.

DORSON.—At Hearne, Robertson county, Texas, May 28th, 1886, from congestion of the liver, Bro. James L. Dotson. Funeral preached by I. N. Roberts, June 27th; text, Job 14: 14. Another of our faithful ones has gone to rest. He left a wife and seven children to mourn his loss. May God bless them.

LEWIS.—At Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, July 13th, 1886, William H., infant son of Bro. Elias and Sr. Mary Jane Lewis, aged 8 months and 13 days. Funeral service by Joseph A. Stewart.

THE LAWS OF LIFE.

"DOCTOR!" said an enquiring man, "will you please explain to me what is meant by the Laws of Life or Health?"

I will most gladly. A law is an inflexible rule. For example: fire will always burn; air we must have to live. The laws of life are really only four, and relate to air, food, clothing and rest. We can survive if we obey these laws: breathe, eat, sleep, and have protection; but you see this is only child life. The laws of health for civilized adults are ten in number, and include the above with exercise, habitation, unconstrained employment, cleanliness and social relations—intermarriage, etc.

To be healthy, we must have pure air, especially at night. Wholesome food and drink we must also have, and they should be taken at proper intervals. The two heartiest meals should be breakfast and dinner. A light supper aids to ensure sound sleep. We must be properly clothed, especially in our cold climate, and have protecting dwellings both in winter and summer.

Exercise and employment, active bodies and minds, we should have. These must be adequate and uninjurious in kind or amount. Cleanliness is necessary to keep the body well ventilated and sweet, to prevent decay before our time. The social relations are surrounded by limits that must be observed to ensure health.

Sunlight is also essential to health. The laws of health may be violated, but the laws of life must be obeyed.

"Sickness then arises from our violation of the laws of health. We are responsible for our own health?"

Yes and that of our children, although we are of course often the creatures of circumstances. Epidemic diseases, calamities, weather and season changes, over which we have little control, affect us. Children's ailments, not hereditary, arise chiefly from exposure, overwork and excitement, to which might be added foul air and deficient nutrition.

MEDICAL USE OF SALT.

A POUltICE of salt and the white of an egg is a most powerful resolvent, and if applied in time will disperse a felon. Salt and cider vinegar will cure obstinate cases of diarrhoea. A solution of salt will relieve pain in bruises. Equal parts of strong salt water and spirits of camphor applied to the teeth is a cure for toothache. Salt will check bleeding of the lungs when other remedies fail. Salt is a remedy in catarrh.

EARRINGS, according to Biblical record, were worn by women from the earliest times, but by men more rarely. Hebrew slaves, indeed, suffered their ears to be bored as a figure of their optional servitude, but no ornament was worn in the holes thus made. Xenophon informs us the males of Lybia were often subject to reproach on account of their earrings, and that in Greece females alone wore ornaments.

LAW-BREAKERS.—No. 2.

REVIEWING our article on "Law-Breakers" published in the HERALD June 5th, the Deseret News of July 6th devotes nearly two columns in an attempt to justify violations of such civil laws as some may think to be un-constitutional. Why can not the News see that if one person has the right to violate one law which he may think unconstitutional, all others similarly situated may do the same thing. And thus trample down every law on the statute books and thereby reduce civil government to a state of anarchy and throw society into confusion.

Laws may be really unconstitutional, unjust, and oppressive, but until that is so decided by the proper tribunals and those laws legally annulled, no state, church, or individual has the right to resist or violate them. When individuals or societies, civil or religious, assume that the laws of the land are wrong, and that therefore they will not obey, but resist and disobey them, they subvert the very foundations of society and destroy its safeguards. All laws enacted by Congress are the supreme law of the land so long as they remain on the nation's statute books unrepealed and are not invalidated by the decisions of the Supreme Court.

The right to question the rightfulness and the constitutionality of our nation's laws is reserved to the individual; but the right to resist and violate such laws is denied. As before said, if one person has the right to resist and violate such laws as he may deem improper and unconstitutional, then all others have the same right; and this if tolerated would soon put an end to all government. Every claim to this effect is hurtful wherever it obtains; and there is not one passage in the three standard books of the church which can be made to justify it. God commands the Saints to "be subject to the powers that be," and Jesus both taught and exemplified it as did also his apostles, and this without reserve. Hear them: "Render to Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's, and unto God the things that are God's."

"Having your conversation honest among the Gentiles; that, whereas they speak against you as evil-doers, they may by your good works, which they shall behold, glorify God in the day of visitation. Submit yourselves to every ordinance of man for the Lord's sake: whether it be to the king, as supreme; or unto governors, as unto them that are sent by him for the punishment of evil-doers, and for the praise of them that do well. For so is the will of God, that with well-doing ye may put to silence the ignorance of foolish men: as free, and not using your liberty for a cloak of maliciousness, but as the servants of God. Honor all men. Love the brotherhood. Fear God. Honor the King."—1 Peter 2:12-17.

"Let every soul be subject unto the higher powers: For there is no power but of God: the powers that be, are ordained of God. Whosoever therefore resisteth the power, resisteth the ordinance of God: and they that resist shall receive to themselves damnation. For rulers are not a terror to good works, but to the evil. Wilt thou then not be afraid of the power? Do that which is good, and thou shalt have praise of the same: For he is the minister of God to thee for good. But if thou do that which is evil, be afraid; for he beareth not the sword in vain: for he is the minister of God, a revenger to execute wrath upon him that doeth evil. Wherefore ye must needs be subject, not only for wrath, but also for conscience' sake."—Rom. 13:1-5.

This duty was enjoined upon the Saints by the revelation through Joseph the Seer, August 1st, 1831.

"Let no man break the laws of the land, for he that keepeth the laws of God hath no need to break the laws of the land; wherefore be subject to the powers that be, until He reigns whose right it is to reign, and subdues all enemies under his feet. Behold, the laws which ye have received from my hand are the laws of the church, and in this light ye shall hold them forth. Behold, here is wisdom."—Doc. and Cov. 43:5.

In none of these commandments are found the rights claimed by the Deseret News to resist and violate laws which the individual may think improper and unjust. The laws providing for slavery were not in harmony with the genius of our nation, the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution, yet they were of force and were respected. Joseph the Seer, while he knew that slavery was a sin against God and man and in direct violation of the will of God given to him, yet he nevertheless submitted to the laws providing for it, and counselled the Saints to do the same thing and leave results with God.

The Lord had said through him in the Revelation of Dec. 16th, 1833, "It is not right that any man should be in bondage one to another;" but the laws of the land had provided otherwise—had provided for slavery—and the Saints must not resist those laws. These laws were supreme, and though contrary to the very foundations upon which the nation was founded as expressed in the Declaration of Independence, and though utterly contrary to the revelations given to the church through the Seer, yet the Saints must submit to them, and must not resist them whether for the reason that they were morally wrong, or were contrary to the revelations of God given to govern the Church. God required the Saints to "be subject to the powers that be." He never called them to regulate the affairs of civil governments. That was not their work. They were called to build up the kingdom of God in the midst of the nations in truth and righteousness, according to the gospel as contained in the accepted sacred books of the Church; and they were required to obey the laws of those nations, let them be republican, monarchical, or despotic. The Lord had not called them to make or unmake civil laws, nor to sit in judgment on what was or was not unconstitutional law. These prerogatives pertained solely to civil rulers, and not to the priesthood of God as such. In view of this, Joseph the Seer said in 1844, "Congress, sent to do the people's business, has all power. * * * Congress, with the President as Executive, is as almighty in its sphere as Jehovah is in his."—Times and Seasons, vol. 5:395.

Again he said: "In the United States the people are the government, and their united voice is the only sovereign that should rule; the only power that should be obeyed; and the only gentlemen that should be honored."—Ibid 533. And still further, he with the church said: "To the laws all men owe respect and deference, as without them peace and harmony would be supplanted by anarchy and terror."—Doc. and Cov. 112:6. And in no place in the authentic teachings of the Seer can it be found that he taught directly or indirectly that the Saints singly or as a body had the right to set aside, resist or violate the laws of the land; nor did he in any way teach that they would have the right to assume that any law of the land was unconstitutional and therefore void. But on the contrary his teachings required submission to civil rulers and the laws of the land, and this he exemplified by submitting to forty-eight vexatious law suits in the midst of his enemies, from all of which he was delivered, and then, obedient to this principle to the last, he maintained it in his tragic death at Carthage, June 27th, 1844. He knew the charges against him were unjust; he knew his life would be imperilled by surrendering to the officers of the law; but they demanded his submission, and true to the high purpose of his teaching as a servant of God, he obeyed "the powers that be" and met his cruel fate, obedient to the laws and rulers of his country. And if this lofty example of fidelity to civil government ruled the Utah Mormon leaders, they could then claim the sympathy of all right-minded people, and might reasonably expect the interposition of divine aid. But, until they and their followers "return to the old paths" from which they have strayed, and until they live in harmony with the plain teachings of the sacred books endorsed by the Church in the days of Joseph the Seer, they have no reasonable grounds to expect their tribulations to cease. The cure for the evils which encompasses them is found in the very books which the Seer and the Church taught. Let every doctrine and every principle and theory which are found to be contrary to them be put away, and let the principles, prophecies and promises in them be made the rule of faith and practice, and then the evils which now beset and threaten the Utah Mormons will pass away, and grace and favor will be given them.

The Herald does not necessarily contemplate "a Congress and a Supreme Court animated by strict justice, equity, and the spirit and letter of the Constitution," when it pleads with the Saints to honor the laws of the land; but it does contemplate the fact, that the Saints, whether singly or collectively, are not authorized to regulate the national government, rectify its mistakes, resist its laws, revile its rulers, nor revolt against the decisions of its courts of last appeal. And furthermore, the HERALD does not believe "the people of God" can "read and understand" the Constitution and laws of our nation and decide whether said laws are in harmony with or in antagonism to the Constitution. That authority is, by the Constitution, reserved solely to the Supreme Court; and the citizen has no right to "suppose" to the contrary.

And when God gives a command to his people to "be subject to the powers that be," he will see to it that no "Divine command" is given to his people requiring them to resist those "powers." God is "not the author of confusion," neither does he "vary" or "change" from what he has said. The HERALD does not hold that either Congress or the Supreme Court is always morally or legally right in their doings; but it does hold that the citizen—saint or sinner—must submit to them, and that if they will have seeming or real wrongs set right they must use such legal remedies as are provided under the Constitution and laws. Congress may enact unconstitutional laws; but the Supreme Court is the only legal tribunal to decide that fact, and it is fair to conclude that the said court is also the only tribunal capable of deciding it. Such seems to have been the mind of God when inspiring the framers of the Constitution to provide it and fix its powers and authority. And when churches or priesthood undertake to perform its functions, or resist its decisions, they in fact resist the ordinance of God and stand condemned of him.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. George A. Blakeslee wrote July 24th:

"There has been an addition to the church in this section of seven of late. I learn that Bro. B. V. Springer is doing a good work in and around Coldwater. We have just got through harvesting in this section; so far as I can learn the wheat is averaging twenty-five bushels per acre. One piece of my wheat yielded 43¾ bushels per acre. We have a splendid prospect for a good corn crop, also potatoes; have had plenty of rain up till within the last two weeks; it is now quite dry, but nothing suffering for rain, materially."

Bro. John T. Davies, of Pittsburg, Kansas, under date of July 19th, writes:

"The weather is very hot and dry here, no rain for nearly five weeks, with a hundred and ten in the shade. Our hope for corn is nearly gone. Surely it is the hour of God's judgment, and our temporal blessings are becoming conditional like the spiritual—and who will abide?"

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

BRO. I. N. WHITE of Clintonville, Missouri, sends us by Bro. J. R. Lambert a slip from the Clinton Eye of July 10th, 1886, in which Bro. White has over a half column of interesting matter concerning the church and its doctrine. The Saints of Clinton have rented the old South Methodist Church in that place and will occupy, there being a branch there now of nearly twenty-five members. Bro. I. N. is pushing the war all along the line in his district.

Mr. Henry Ward Beecher lately preached to the congregation of Dr. Parker, in the London City Temple, London, England. In doing so it appears that he caused to be erected in the near proximity of the pulpit, a platform from which he addressed the people. This platform did not please some of his hearers, for when he mounted it to begin his sermon they shouted, "Pulpit! Pulpit!" Mr. Beecher, however, stuck to his platform, and delivered his discourse. To speak plainly about it, Mr. Henry Ward Beecher asked an entire congregation to forego their preferences and prejudices, to gratify the caprice or prejudice of one man, that one the great American preacher. To us it is very doubtful if under such circumstances Mr. Beecher could have said anything that would seriously affect the mass of his hearers.

Bro. J. C. Foss wrote from Silver Lake, Minnesota, July 20th, and informs us that the Saints there had built a small house for his occupancy while in the field there, and a Mr. Ry Ingles has loaned him a horse, Bro. Wm. Herring a buggy and Bro. McLeod a harness, for use in the district. Bro. Foss was feeling well and desired to thank the brethren and friends for their kindness. He had baptized six at Luce and one at Cornorant; had ordained

Bro. Florence Omans a Priest, his brother a Deacon, and Bro. Dineheart a Teacher, and would organize a branch there soon. Bro. Foss was called to Clitherall to meet Elder F. P. Peterson, of the Utah Church, in debate, in reference to the question of organization and legal authority to lead the church. They met and discussed on the 19th at two p. m. Bro. Foss reports a good feeling and interest in the district. May it continue.

We printed in last issue a call from comrades Crum, Chatburn and Clemenson of Independence to the soldiers among the Saints who served during the late rebellion, to report and form a roster for publication in HERALD. In every branch where any of these soldiers are, let them move at once in the matter; get all the names of those living and those dead, their term of service, when and where, etc., and forward to comrade T. W. Chatburn, Independence, Missouri, as requested.

Bro. J. H. Peters writes us that he has over one thousand copies of the Voice of Warning yet on his hands unloaned. He wonders that the Saints are so slow in getting them loaned out. We are in receipt of information where one of these little preachers has started two men in one neighborhood to enquiry. It seems to us that Bro. Peters should not long be left to complain of lukewarmness in this work, when he labors so generously himself.

There was no Advocate printed for July, Bro. Joseph Luff's illness having prevented its issue.

THE Jackson Sentinel, published at Maquoketa, Iowa, in its issue for Thursday, July 22d, noticing the labors of Bro. M. T. Short, thus:

Sunday.—A cool delightful night for rest and a pleasant morning.—A good many people went to Hurst's Grove to-day to hear Elder Short preach. Deacon Wm. Hurst, they say, keeps excellent order.—Morning church services in the city were held at the several edifices as usual.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Ques.—Does the General Conference appoint Elders to preside over branches; and if so, do the said Elders receive pay from the Bishop for such labor?

Ans.—In extreme cases conferences have appointed Elders to preside over branches; but this is quite unusual, and out of the regular order. The principle governing in respect to all presiding officers is, that such officers shall be elected by those over whom they preside. It is not usual that those selected to preside over branches are paid for such labor by the Bishop, yet it may sometimes be found necessary. Wisdom should direct.

Q.—Can Elders get missions and not belong to a branch?

A.—They may; but they should have none if they live where it is practicable for them to be enrolled in a branch, and they refuse to be. The rules of the church require all its members to unite with the nearest, most convenient, branch. And if an Elder refuses to comply therewith he is not exemplary, and is not worthy of representing the church. The church can not afford to honor and sustain any minister who purposely dishonors its doctrines, rules, and regulations. Conferences may, through ignorance of facts, give missions to Elders who do not belong to branches. But this is not likely to occur, for the reason that all faithful and devoted ministers will be found enrolled in branches as the church requires.

2.—Is God a personage of spirit or a personage of tabernacle?

A.—God is a personage of spirit, having identity, and possessing attributes, a habitation and a place. Christ Jesus was the express image of his person.

THE following extract is from a Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper, for June, 1885:

"It seems queer, to say the least, that in this year of the Christian era any ecclesiastical body should be convulsed by a question relating to baptism, or any other external rite. Nevertheless, it is that staid and sober body, the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, that has been having a fierce discussion of the subject. Anticipating an appeal and complaint against the action of the Synod of New York, that was to be brought before the Assembly in due order of business, Judge Drake, of Washington, undertook to carry through the Assembly, by a sort of moral coup d'etat, a couple of resolutions affirming that the Roman Catholic Church has essentially apostatized, and, therefore, that Presbyterians can not consistently recognize the validity of baptism as administered by the priests of that church. The Judge avowed his purpose to commit the Assembly to this doctrine, in advance of the consideration of the complaint and appeal to be brought forward at a later stage of the proceedings. As was natural, this movement created a good deal of excitement, many members of the body holding it to be irregular, as well as premature. But the Judge supported his resolutions in a speech well stocked with those opprobrious phrases which a certain class of protestants are wont to use as applicable to the Roman Catholic Church, but which are far less popular now than they used to be. Sensible Protestants now are generally willing to admit that the Roman Catholic denomination, though fostering some errors, is yet a branch of the true Church of Christ, and that the rite of baptism as she administers it is valid, and ought to be so treated.

"Before Judge Drake's resolutions were disposed of, the appeal and complaint from New York came up, and was laid upon the table by an almost unanimous vote. When the discussion of the resolution was resumed, however, it became evident that there were two parties in the Assembly, each determined to win in victory. Amendments in the nature of a compromise were proposed, and the Assembly was getting into an unpleasant tangle, when a motion to lay the whole subject on the table was carried by a nearly unanimous vote, both sides thus finding relief from an embarrassing position. The effect of this is to leave each church session free to decide the question for itself whenever it arises in the reception of Roman Catholic converts.

"It is a pity that the time of such an Assembly, having before it so many questions of vital importance to the growth of the church and the moral elevation of society, should be wasted upon an issue having no relation whatever either to piety or morals. It seems like the "washing of cups," or the "tithing of mint, anise and cummin," when the moral and social condition of the world demands absorbing thought and vigilant action."

The main question, it seems to us, in the foregoing, is whether the Catholic Church as well as her protesting daughters is a branch of the true Christian Church; (assuming, of course, that the daughters are); and if it is, are the baptisms into the Catholic Church to be accepted as valid, and membership conferred by them to be accredited by the Protestant churches as entitling persons to fellowship as in the true Church of Christ. If this were settled affirmatively, what a world of controversy would be removed. The long effort to prove the Romish Church to be apostate and cast off of Christ; the constant iteration of its identity with the woman on the "scarlet colored beast" of the apocalypse with the cup of wrath in her hand, would be averted, and the search for traces beyond Rome into Jerusalem for apostolic succession and power would be at an end. Besides this, the claim made by Catholicism that the church is the universal church as the word catholic means must be conceded, and the spirit of this followed up would soon bring to pass a unity and that unity be Catholic.

The question of authority is a grave one and we conceive that those Protestants who are willing to concede that the Catholic Church should be considered as a branch of the Church of Christ, are much more consistent than those not willing, judging, from the common stand-point of both parties.

Latter Day Saints have a similar proposition before them for solution; and many have taken the shorter way out of the difficulty, by claiming the sole authority to rest in them, and denying the right to its exercise to all others,—reason assigned, others have departed from the faith, hence the authority, (right to act in Christ's name), has been withdrawn. Practically, it is "stand aside, we are holier than ye are."

We are not prepared to say how many err in this, or who are the entirely obnoxious ones, inasmuch as "many are called, but few chosen;" and though certain of the people of God are to judge the world, judgment belongs alone to God and Christ. The spirit of the conclusions reached by the elders in all the controversies hitherto had on the subject has been, whoever the Spirit receives, the church may safely accept.

In the perilous times foreseen by Paul and his contemporaries, and to be realized in the latter days, from the church "men of perverse minds" were to rise up "leading away disciples after them." The apostle said, "of your own selves" would these men be. These men who were to go away leading disciples after them, were to be of the church; when therefore they should go out from among the disciples would they take with them the delegated right to act in Christ's name and for the Church of Christ.

When the M. E. Church lost Rev. H. W. Thomas from its ministry by expulsion for apostacy, the secular press claimed that while the M. E. Church had lost a good gospeler the cause of Christ had gained a minister. The same was held when Rev. David Swing, after staying in the Presbyterian Church just as long as the rules of enforcing their discipline would permit him, took off his theological cap, and bidding his co-workers "Good-by," went out to "plead the cause of christianity." The churches from which these two men were forced out, agreed that if they should stay in they ought to conform to churchly discipline, and if they went out they did not take with them the authority of the church to which they had belonged. The men who went out evidently agreed that they had received authority to act in the name of Christ while they were in the church and received it from those in the church, and that when they went out they took with them the same authority to act, as both immediately began individual labor on his own responsibility. Many in other churches than the ones they went out from, and the secular branch of the same churches evidently agreed that whatever right the men had in the church they had out of it, and then agreed in sustaining the men in their individualized work. The principle involved in this seems to be that the right to speak and act in the name of Christ and to build up his church is an unknown, unrecognizable and imperishable quality that when once attaching to an individual, no matter what the channel of its transmission, or manner of its infusion, may never be taken from the person; whether he continues to acknowledge the body from which he derived it as the church of Christ, accepted and owned by Him, or denies it and its authority. If all Catholic and Protestant men are alike called of God, or act only on authority derived from human institutions, then such reasoning would be good. But if Christ personally supervises his work, by personal and divine direction, did in primitive church times and does now, such reasoning must be at fault.

We acknowledge the right of reformation within the church, using the word to mean a purifying and cleansing of the body, not in the sense of self-destruction and self-resurrection, but can see no consistency in men claiming to take what they obtained in a body to be used and honored only while in the body, and going with it out of that body with power to disrupt and rebuild that same body. Still less consistency do we see in men leaving a body ecclesiastic, openly acknowledged by them as the Church of Christ, and denouncing that body as not of Christ, but themselves only to be of Christ, and that too with nothing of more value in authority than what they received while in that body.

Whatever of authority Luther had was of Catholic origin; whatever Henry VIII had was of the Catholic; whatever John Wesley had, was of the Church of England; whatever, attached to John Rogers came of the Puritan revolt from the ruling church in England, and whatever was held by Alexander Campbell came from Presbyterianism and the Baptist; and whatever right to act other men who have gone out from these have held they derived from those from whom they went out. If the various sources whence these men all derived authority are now of the true church and are accepted of God, they must have been so accepted when these men went out of them and they are reprehensible for going out, for what could they gain in denying what God accepted. If baptisms now performed by the Catholic Church constitute men members of the "True Church of Christ," then the supposed great apostasy was a failure, and all claims for righteousness predicated upon the great departure from the faith of the original church, and the return to original commands and paths on the part of the reformers are a great mistake. There was no need of a reconferment of authority and the direct delegation of authority from Christ is a delusion. The saying of the apostle is being of eminent application—"all things are indeed lawful, but all things are not expedient;" only the principle is reversed—whatever is expedient to men's theories in regard to Christ, is necessarily lawful.

The following clipping from the London Daily News, may serve to show how this passage in the Apocalypse is having its fulfillment. "And I saw three unclean spirits like frogs come out of the mouth of the dragon, and out of the mouth of the beast, and out of the mouth of the false prophet. For they are the spirits of devils working miracles, which go forth unto the kings of the earth, and of the whole world, to gather them to the battle of that great day of God Almighty."—Rev. 16: 13, 14.

A FAMOUS SPIRITUALIST.

"Mr. Home, when I first saw him, was at the zenith of his notoriety. He had married into one of the richest families in Russia, was a favorite of the Tuileries, and courted by the most brilliant society of every capital perhaps in Europe. He had raised tables to ceilings without touching them, sent sofas dancing around rooms, made hands which were not apparently attached to bodies play pianos, and evoked the visages of the dead in the palaces of Naples, Rome and Florence, and then scared the emperor and empress of the French with his spirit manifestations at the Tuileries. The crown prince of Prussia and General Moltke were present at some of the latter, but the shrewd old warrior was not satisfied with all that took place when he was by and said he ought to have more to go upon, when the empress tried to persuade him into accepting Mr. Home's claims, if the spirits loved light rather than darkness. The Empress insisted on adopting the medium's sister and placed her in a convent school. Mr. Home told me that his mother was an eerie Scotch woman, and had, before he was born, a vision, in which she saw him seated with as many sovereigns as those who paid court to Napoleon at Erfurth. He said he had inherited her gift, which, he affirmed, showed itself when he was a child in a remarkable way in Scotland, and displayed itself in a greater degree after a vision in which she saw him seated at table with an emperor and empress, a grand duke and grand duchess, and two angels, whom she thought must have symbolized his future wives. She had, he also said, the gift of second sight, which he inherited. Be this as it may, he was admitted to associate with the emperor and empress of the French, King Louis I. and King Maximilian of Bavaria, the Duchess of Hamilton, the king and Queen of Wurtemberg, the Duke of Nassau, etc. M. Sardou believed in him, and I think Professor Crooks went to the trouble of studying the phenomena he produced, and thought they were not the effect of jugglery. Home had a tall, slight figure, a fair and freckled face before disease made it the color of yellow wax, keen blue eyes, which, however, looked sometimes dreamy, a rather snub nose, and curly auburn hair. He spoke with a Scotch accent. His manners, though forward, were agreeable, and he recited poetry with strong emphasis and striking effect."

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY SISTER "FRANCES."

"Wherever through the ages rise
The altars of self-sacrifice,
Where love its arms has opened wide,
Or man for man has calmly died,
I see the same white wings outspread
That hovered o'er the Master's head!"

OVERCOMETH.

To him that overcometh,
O word divinely strong,
The victor's palm, the fadeless wreath,
The grand immortal song,
And his the hidden manna,
And his the polished stone,
Within whose whiteness shines the name
Revealed to him alone.

To him that overcometh—
Ah, what of bitter strife,
Before he win the battle's gage
And snatch the crown of life!
What whirl of crossing weapons,
What gleam of flashing eyes,
What stern debate with haughty foes
Must be before the prize.

To him that overcometh
Shall trials aye befall.
The World, the Flesh, the Devil
He needs must face them all.
Sweet sirens of temptation
May lure with silver strain,
And cope he must with subtle foes,
And blanch, 'neath fiery pain.

To him that overcometh
A mighty help is pledged;
He wields a sword of purest mould,
By use of cycles edged.
And prophets and confessors,
A matchless valiant band,
Have vanquished earth, and stormed the skies,
With that triumphant brand.

To him that overcometh,
O promise dearest dear!
The Lord himself who died for him
Will evermore be near.
Here, dust upon his garments,
There, robes that royal be,
For "On my throne," the King hath said,
"Mine own shall sit with me."

To him that overcometh,
O word divinely strong!
It weaves itself through weary hours
Like some rejoicing song.
For his the hidden manna,
And his the name unknown,
*Which Christ the Lord one day of days
Will tell to him alone.

EXTRACTS FROM PRIVATE LETTERS.

SISTER CLARA C. SMITH writes under date of July 19th:—"When I read the 'Plea for the Hope' I felt that I would like to do something for it, if it was but a trifle it would still help some; so I asked Manly and Kate how much they would give, and they said they would pay for an extra copy to be sent to their niece. So I asked Elbert [David's only son.—Ed.] how much he would give to help the cause. 'All the money I have,' he said. I look back upon my visit at Lamoni as one of the bright spots in my lonely life, and the happiest time I have seen since leaving Sandwich. As I read your writing and the sermons in the Herald I can close my eyes and imagine I am in the Saints' Chapel, listening to your voices. I hope I may be again. Although I do not write for the 'Mothers' Column,' I pray for its success and am glad there are so many having the ability to write for it."

Dear Clara, we hope you will write, for we know that it would do you good. Many in the church who knew and loved David, would be glad to hear from you. We shall surly expect a letter soon, and one from Elbert for the Hope.—Ed.

AUNT PATIENCE writes:—"How often have I expressed the wish that I could do something more for the cause of Christ, that I could spend more time in his service, and were not so cumbered with the cares of life. How gladly would I do so because of the love I have for the Savior and his cause, and to return some measure of remuneration for the labor of love and sacrifice performed in behalf of one so weak as I am. Not only this, but that I might be an instrument in bringing back the erring, strengthening the weak, confirming the strong, and brightening the hope of those who are striving to gain the same rest, peace, and glory that I am striving for. I love this work; my whole soul is in it, and I would that all men and women could be brought to see its truth! Oh, could they but know and feel the joy and comfort that a knowledge of this work brings to the soul! Many are the testimonies that God has given me—testimonies which can never be erased from my soul. Though I should make shipwreck of faith, yet are those testimonies rooted and grounded; stamped never to be effaced; and though death should stare me in the face to make me deny the work, yet could I never do it. Man did not give me this knowledge, man can not take it from me; and unworthy as I am, he has chosen me out of the world, and has verified his promise, and given me the unquestionable knowledge of the One in whom I trust and whom I serve, and I hope to serve him to the end of my days, and make such a record as I shall not be ashamed to face. I have many trials and temptations to meet, but I trust to overcome them all and enter into rest."

Just in this connection we wish to say to the sisters, that highly as we prize, and dearly as we love the private letters which come to us, yet rather than the interest of the "Column" should suffer, we would do without our share. There are joys of time which can be postponed to the great hereafter. For our sakes the Savior became poor and homeless. Let us forget ourselves, and find our reward in that which we may do to cheer and comfort others; and while we confess that every word of encouragement helps and cheers us, if you will only seek to improve the talents given by the Master in sustaining that which we know is his cause, we will abide our time until here or in the mansion he has gone to prepare, we shall see you face to face. Let the "Column" be first, and then if you have still a portion, none will be more grateful than we to share it.

Yesterday's mail brought us a card, saying: "Do not be discouraged in regard to the Hope. We will send in our contribution just as soon as our grain is thrashed, and many others are just waiting a bit as we are."

To that tender-hearted, thoughtful one, we give our thanks, and we earnestly pray God to bless all such. If only half who have named the name of Christ were like the few, the cause would never languish. In turn we say to all who are interested, Don't be discouraged, but persevere, and that which we are striving for we shall most surely accomplish. Step by step our children will ascend, until the paths of Zion shall bloom with flowers of their planting, and they by the help of the Lord shall bear off the kingdom in triumph.

To those interested in the Sabbath School cause we wish to announce that we have secured an excellent likeness of the three special witnesses to the Book of Mormon. We will mail single copies of these (the three on one plate) for thirty-five cents each, or four copies for $1.10—the net profit to be used in aid of the Sabbath School cause. It will be a pleasant souvenir to have in our homes—a correct likeness of men whom God chose to be his special witnesses in the last days, and at the same time you will be aiding the work you love.

Who will order a specimen copy, and by using that sell others?

Our thanks are due to Bro. William Street and others for books and papers.
LAMONI, Iowa, July 30th, 1886.

PORT GREVILLE, N. S., July 18th.

Dear Sister Frances:—I have often thought when reading the letters from the sisters in the "Home Column," that I should like to write you a letter; not for publication, but merely as a word of encouragement from one of the scattered ones, letting you know how much we prize those words of council and cheer. I think we who have not the privilege of meeting with the Saints, or hearing the word preached by those sent of God, know how to appreciate the contents of the Herald perhaps more than those who have such privileges. For my own part I feel that I could not be without it; and since the "Home Column" has been started I enjoy it still more, you have undertaken a great work, and I believe you have the prayers and sympathies of all true Saints that you may have strength and wisdom to carry on the work so that it may be the means in God's hand of doing great and lasting good. Your appeal in behalf of the Hope I felt to be a just one, and it was my intention to have responded to it ere this, but owing to circumstances have neglected it. I am glad that some are coming to your aid, and hope that you may have no difficulty in raising the required amount. Enclosed please find one dollar; subscription for two Hopes. Hoping and praying that God will bless you with all needed blessings,

I remain your sister in the one faith.

IDA A. LAYTON.

Dear Sisters:—While it is given to some to sit at the feet of the Master, others must serve and labor exclusively, with scarce a moment of respite. Still the Marthas are necessary, since the cuisine forms a most important part of the household economy. Some one asks about leaven bread, how it is made, and were to get the leaven. Cumbered with much serving, we have been unable to respond sooner. Leaven consists of a piece of dough saved at the last kneading of bread before baking. Keep it in an earthen or china dish, in a cool place. Soak with water or milk and make batter yeast when you wish to bake again. This leaven will keep good three days in hot weather, if properly cared for; a week in cold, or cool weather, if necessary. Where are all the receipts, household hints and so forth, that we expected to find in our "Column?" Can't any of the sisters give us advice on some useful subject? Your way of doing a washing, mixing bread, cooking a chicken, or making butter or cheese, might differ from ours, and be both interesting and instructive. "The bread that perisheth" we must be mindful of, however much we prefer to engage in more congenial topics.

Yours for progress in all good words and works.

PERLA WILD.

DEFIANCE, Iowa, July 9th.

Dear Sisters:—As I read the "Home Column" it inspires me with a desire to say something too. It is over fifty years since I accepted this work. I accepted it when persecution ran high, and I clung to it when angry mobs threatened our lives, took from us our possessions, watched for the approach of our husbands that they might slay them, and threatened our children; but the Divine Power preserved us. My husband has long since gone to the Paradise of God, so I now live among my children and grand children; but I have this to comfort me. They, save a very few, belong to the church. Thinking that I am nearing the end of the race, as I am now eighty six years old, I desire to tell you a little of my experience with regard to an affliction which I once had. My suffering was intense. I felt in my heart that I wanted to die unless I could live to do good, and help build up the kingdom of God, and also be a comfort to my little ones. While I lay thinking thus, a heavenly messenger appeared at my bedside and spoke these words, "Woman, fret not thyself, for thou shalt live, and not die." I then knew that I should live to do some good. I am patiently waiting for the time to come when I shall leave this life to meet with those gone before. Oh that our young people would seek to do the will of God, ynd keep all worldly pride and vanity from their young hearts; this is my one great desire. I often think of the words of Moses the servant of God. "Oh that there were such a heart in them that they would keep the commandments of God always, that it might be well with them and their children." Hoping you will remember me in your humble devotion, I remain a sister in the church,

MRS. SARAH HAWLEY.

CHELSEA, Neb., July 13th.

Dear Sister Frances:—I have been reading the Saints' letters in the "Home Column" and I thought I would write a few words. I love to read the letters. It has not been long since I enlisted in this good and glorious cause. When we first came west there were only three members of us, my mother, my sister and myself; but thank God he sent his servants out here to preach to us, and we are now eleven in number, and the Lord has promised us great blessings if we are faithful.

Your sister in Christ,

AMANDA LEACH.

ESCANABA, Mich., July 12th.

Dear Sister Frances:—The Lord knows my heart, and how willingly I would give to help this blessed cause we are engaged in, if I could. I am so much helped by the "Mothers' Home Column," and it is very cheering to me. I am a mother, have two little ones, a girl and a boy. I am a widow and live with my father and mother. Mother and I are the only ones living here that belong to the church, and so we could not get along without the Herald, Hope, and Expositor. We are poor in worldly goods, but in health we are blessed, and are thankful for that. All I have is what I earn at hard work, and what is given me, and so I am by God's help going to try and give in my mite. I will send in this one dollar and you can send two of the Hopes for a year to who ever you feel is worthy of them. I trust to see the Hope prosper and be enlarged. May God's richest blessings rest on you, and may you be an instrument in God's hands in doing much good, is my prayer. I would like to live where I could go to church, and would like to have my little children baptized. I trust the way will be opened for me to go where there is a branch of the church, or else I would like to have an Elder come here. Remember me as a sister who is trying hard to live right, but all alone in this cold and selfish world; but God is O, so good to me! I give him the praise for all I have. With love to you, from a sister in the same faith,

VIOLA M. FORMAN.

CHELSEA, Neb., July 13th.

Dear Sister Frances:—I have been reading the Herald; it is a pleasure to us to read the letters from the brothers and sisters. We lived here for nearly one year without meetings, but thank the Lord we have meetings now. I would like to know where Bro. William H. Bradford is. He is my father.

I remain your sister in bonds,

LAURA LEACH.

CHELSEA, Neb., July 13th.

Dear Sisters:—Would it not be better to hear our children say our parents are very strict; pa asks a blessing every meal, and he has order; he will have order, and he calls us all together for family worship. We are not allowed to swear around the house, for he says we shall mind as long as we are at home. When you see such children as these you will see children who will love their parents, while on the other hand you will speak to some Elder's children about the church and how the Saints are getting along, and they will say "I don't go to meeting." And when asked Why don't you? "Oh, I don't believe there is much in the Saints; not as much as they claim." I ask, Why do you not believe what your father teaches? "Well he swears and gets angry and isn't any better than I am, so far as I can see. He don't have family worship, and he never comes home from meeting without something has gone wrong, and he gives some one a regular scolding, or even worse, so I don't see what's the use of any one belonging to the church if they are no better for it. The son says the father is no better than he is. I am afraid of such stumbling blocks; the blood of the children will rest on the heads of their parents.

H. A.

We have inserted a part only of this letter, and we now wish to say that we do not propose to mar the fair pages of our "Column" with slang expressions, let them come from the lip or pen of whomsoever they may come. If such things can truthfully be said of any one professing to be a Saint, to say nothing of an Elder, they ought to be reported to the authorities of the Church, and the children should read Ex. 20: 7; and to the earnest consideration of the fathers we would recommend Matt, 7: 22, 23.—Ed.

GREEN'S LANDING, Me., July 16th.

Dear Sisters in Christ:—Please allow me to come in with you and introduce myself to the "Mothers' Home Column," for I do esteem it a great privilege to converse with my dear sisters by the use of the pen. I do feel more than thankful for the space we have in the columns of the Herald. We can feel to make the acquaintance of the dear old mothers and sisters that are far away. I have read all of your letters, and they truly give us strength and courage to persevere in this glorious work in which we are engaged; and to let our light always shine before the world; and that we may occupy our talents, whether one or more, that we may gain more by our good works, that when the good Master comes we can all receive the welcome plaudit, "Well done good and faithful servant." I am a sister in the Church of Christ. I am trying to keep the law of the Lord as much as I possibly can. I am a widow fifty-nine years old. It has been about nineteen years since I obeyed this latter day gospel. I do know this is the true gospel of Christ, and do feel to trust in the Lord. I do know that the Lord has been a widow's God to me, and a Father to my fatherless children. I have had seven in all, but have none that is small to care for now, only to keep on praying for them. Three of my children were baptized into the church at one time. One of them the good Father saw fit to call to his home to live among the shining ones. I have the promise from the Lord that if I live faithful I shall live with all of my family in the kingdom of God. Oh that I may have grace and strength to live faithful until I reach home, where all will be well. I will say a word to the young mothers. Keep on praying, and teaching your little ones; you will reap if you faint not, for the Lord will answer your prayers in his own time; never fear. I will bid you all good bye, requesting your prayers. Will call again if desired.

Your sister in Christ,

HANNAH ROBBINS.

The invitation has been to all, and we are glad to welcome each one who wishes to come.—Ed.

FORT NIORARA, Neb., July 1st.

Dear Sister Frances:—I think the Home Column very beneficial to the Herald readers. I believe if we would all try and obey the instructions and good principles set forth in the "Column," we would be much happier, wiser, and better prepared for the Holy Spirit to guide us into truth and righteousness. Unless we prepare ourselves for the Holy Spirit, as God has commanded us to do, we need not expect to receive it. I have learned a great deal from the Home Column, which pertains to make me a wiser and better mother. I have only one child, a daughter, which I intend with God's help to raise in that way which leads to life eternal. What is more beautiful or pleasant than a home that is ruled by love, patience, and kind words? How cheerful and bright it is to the husband when he comes home from a hard day's work and finds the house in good order, the children clean and neatly dressed, his supper prepared and ready for him, and every countenance beaming with happiness, and kind words for all. Is not this dear sisters a pleasant home? How thankful the man ought to be that has such a home; and how watchful he should be over his family, that wolves did not enter in among the lambs and lead them astray. He should not leave all the care on his wife, for as we are the weaker ones, we need the help of the stronger ones. I love the Herald, for we have no other preacher. The nearest branch is Clearwater Nebraska. I ask an interest in all your prayers, that I may be faithful, and at last meet you all in the celestial kingdom, where there will be no more parting.

I remain your sister in the one faith,

ELLA DONALDSON.

WHEELER, Iowa, July 9th.

Dear Sister Frances:—Having heard your call for help to enlarge the Hope, and feeling that it is a much needed call, I herewith enclose a dollar, the children's mite and my own, for that purpose; praying that God will aid you in your good mission. The "Mother's Column!" How it gladdens my heart when I read such words of hope and comfort as the sisters express. It helps and strengthens me to go on with the duties of a mother, with renewed vigor. We have much to contend with in raising a family, and trying to keep them free from the vices of the world. We hear so many say, "When they grow older they will do better," but I think as the twig is bent the tree is inclined; therefore I shall strive to keep them from as many of the vices as I can; and think by so doing to save them a great many heartaches in the future; for I know that Saints can not look back upon a life of folly without many regrets. May the Lord bless every effort for the advancement of his cause, is the prayer of your sister,

AMANDA WOOD.

Dear Sister: You are right. Leave no known duty undone and then, but not before, may you safely entrust the result to God. Guard your children from every evil, and the time will come when they will rise up and call you blessed.—Ed.

Correspondence.

PERSIA, Iowa, July 26th.

Bro. Joseph:—I have held five meetings here, had fair and attentive congregations, and am to hold service at Leland's Grove and Union Grove this week. Have met with many of the old-time Saints and their children, and find that here is a wide and inviting field for ministerial labor which should be occupied without delay. Whenever it becomes practicable, I shall take pleasure in preaching the word throughout Western Iowa and Eastern Nebraska, where I had such interesting and successful experiences from 1859 to 1864, and afterwards. I meet with many of the children of the old-time Saints, and with friends also whom I knew in those times, and I feel a deep interest in their present and future welfare, and for that reason have earnest desires to see them all safe in the fold of Christ.

I expect to reach Council Bluffs and Omaha this week, and to reach Lamoni the first days of August.

Yours ever,

W. W. BLAIR.

No. 8, Warden St., NEW WORTLEY,
Leeds, Eng., July 24th.

Dear Herald:—I was baptized on the 28th day of February, 1885, and the day following brothers Joseph Dewsnup and Baty of Manchester, organized a branch here in Leeds. Peace and harmony prevailed throughout our brothers' stay, and the Spirit of God was richly felt. I shall never regret the step that I took, for I have felt ever since to walk in the newness of life, having been born, first, of water; secondly the Spirit. Now I can say that I am a child of God, and heir to the promise of eternal life if I continue faithful to the end of this probation. I thank God because he has cleansed me from all sin through the precious blood of his only begotten Son, Jesus Christ, and daily upholds me with his free Spirit. Dear Herald, my desire is to encourage all our brethren and sisters to keep faithful and hold up the light of the gospel, and give all honor and glory to God who is the author and finisher of our faith. I can now bear testimony to the truth of this great latter day work and its principles as taught by Joseph the Seer. It is a glorious work to me and to all who will embrace it; because it is the power of God unto salvation. I feel there is a work for me to do and I must do it. I mean to be a true follower of the Lamb. I pray that I may have the divine guidance of the Most High God to enable me to carry out the work I have been called to do, that is pertaining to the Aaronic Priesthood. I am conscious of my unworthiness and often feel unfitted for such a grand work as lies before us. By God's help I will study and learn to serve him faithfully to the end of the race.

May God continue to pour out his blessings upon the whole household of faith, is the humble prayer of yours in the gospel of Christ,

TOM ROBERTS.

AMITY, Mo., July 19th.

Dear Brother Blair:—Although having to labor very hard this summer, farming, I have still done what I could in the ministry. In April one of the leading ministers of the Seventh day faith, of the Marion, Iowa, division of that church preached two weeks in our vicinity, challenging every one to disprove his theory. I accepted and we were to debate in two places where the people wished to hear, six miles apart. But after a week's time upon the Sabbath question at the first place, he refused to debate at the other place, (which was to be a month afterwards), stating that he had not the time to spare from his preaching, causing much dissatisfaction. He afterwards sent me a challenge, to affirm that Dan. 2: 44, referred to events that transpired in 1830, and to also deny the unconscious theory and annihilation of the wicked, and that he then would also debate the Sabbath question at the place agreed upon before, three miles south of here, some time this summer. I signed the propositions. I have preached at different places since upon that question by request. Went eight miles north east into the Advent settlement, three weeks ago and heard my opponent, Elder Bunch who preached at eleven a. m. I preached at three p. m. Went there again last Sunday and preached twice, had a good congregation, although not an advent out, yet I was to preach in regard to the Sabbath, and their Elder was to be there to correct me if I made mistakes. I postponed that subject by request until next Sunday evening, which is their day to preach at eleven a. m., and four p. m., which meetings I expect to attend. And in the meantime their neighbors are going to visit them and ask what they are afraid of, as they have challenged every one for years to deny their Sabbath theory. I also want to have the time set to meet Elder Bunch on his challenge. Yesterday I preached at brother Myers' farm, in a grove. He lives two miles from me, and ten miles north of Stewartville. Had a good audience, and some of his neighbors seem much interested. Brother Bronson of St. Joseph, is to preach next Sunday (July 25th) at the school house, three miles south of here, where the debate is to be held, and I will try and continue the work there through the fall. I expect to visit a large Advent settlement thirty miles north of this, soon, and present the truth to them.

Your unworthy brother,

D. S. CRAWLEY.

NEBRASKA CITY, Neb., July 21st.

Dear Herald.—On the evening of the 10th inst., I began meetings in the Morgan school house, the meeting place of the Palmyra branch; continued for a week, with quite an interest, for notwithstanding the farmers were very busy finishing corn plowing, and were in the midst of the small grain harvest, at no meeting did all the people get into the house. For our conference we fixed up a grove, where we held five preaching services and the business session. The attendance of officials was limited, but that of the Saints was fair, while that of the people was large, and the order was good. We are hopeful that good was accomplished for the cause of peace on earth and good will to man. There was no jar or unpleasantness during the transacting of the business; therefore there was neither troubled mind nor aching heart. The waters were disturbed, and two of Bro. E. R. Hillman's daughters were added to the household of faith. No rain for almost a month, and crops will soon begin to suffer, unless we get rain. The demand for gospel work is upon the increase.

In gospel bonds,

GLEN ELDER, Kan., July 15th.

Dear Herald.—It has been about six years since I last wrote to you. We belong to the Elmira Branch (N. W. Kansas District). There are no Saints within twelve miles of us, except sister Williams and her daughter and two sons. We do not hear much preaching, only as some Elder stops with us occasionally. Bro. A. H. Parsons opened up the work here, and the people like to hear him preach very much. We attended the quarterly conference of this district in June. The meetings were held in brother Gabler's grove. The preaching was done by Elders G. W. Shute, A. H. Parsons and J. Jemison. There was a goodly number of the people of the neighborhood in attendance, also of the Saints. The best of order prevailed. We still love the latter day work as when we first heard it, for we know for our selves that it is of God; and, while there may be some things taught by some, that we can not endorse; yet we know we have the law and the testimony to appeal to in those matters. The weather is very dry now, the people fear a dearth.

Your sister in the gospel,

CASANDER WARREN.

EAST DES MOINES, Iowa, July 29th.

Editors Herald.—Bro. N. A. Baker has been in our midst with his earnest, God-fearing spirit, and has taught us to see our slothfulness in the work of the Lord. I thank God that he came here. I have been healed of a disease that from time to time for years I have been afflicted with. To my Father in heaven be all the glory. A sister came in through the door of baptism during Bro. Baker's stay. They had a little Pentecost at the confirmation. The "Holiness" people are not pleased to have any of our preachers come among them; although they gathered en masse at the river to witness the baptismal rite.

In gospel bonds,

L. B. MERRILL.

MOORHEAD, Iowa, June 19th.

Dear Herald.—As I was perusing your pages this afternoon, the influence of God's Holy Spirit pervaded my whole being, filling my mind with a holy calm, and that peace and joy which a child of God alone can feel; and I thank and praise his holy name for his loving kindness bestowed upon poor unworthy me from day to day. I do so desire to do what is right at all times to be a living epistle before my friends and neighbors; but alas! the weakness of the flesh causes me to err many times, and I fear I am too often a stumbling-block to others.

I have just finished reading brethren Blakeslee, Kelley and Banta's remarks on tithing and my heart responds a glad amen. O! could we as Saints realize the all important duty of taking God at his word and of tithing ourselves as he has commanded, the consummation of this glorious work would soon be accomplished, and Christ come in the clouds of heaven, and his saints be caught up to meet him in glory to reign with him forever and ever. I am sorry to say that my husband has not yet been made to realize the importance of the tithing law—he like many others not comprehending it; but I pray to God he may be brought to a full realization of the same that we may receive the promised blessings for time and eternity. I tithe myself of poultry, butter, eggs, &c., such as a farmer's wife is blessed with, as best I can; but it is very seldom I can get cash for such—generally have to sell it at the stores and take trade, but I keep a strict account and when I chance to get money I pay it as tithing. As it is, I am indebted to the Lord. Is there no way out of this difficulty? If there was a storehouse for receiving produce as tithing I feel sure a great many would tithe themselves who do not now for the reason that cash is so difficult to get hold of. But I trust the way will be opened in God's own time.

I consider the Herald meat and drink to the soul hungering and thirsting after righteousness. I could not think of doing without it. Often when weary with the cares of life the perusal of its pages give new impetus and seems to lessen life's burden. Christ has said, "My yoke is easy and my burden is light;" and I have indeed proved it to be the case many times in my daily toil. Were it not for the hope of the gospel I fear I should faint by the way. Life would indeed be hopeless. As it is, I still feel to press on, praying God for strength to aid me while life shall last. I pray God to bless his Saints everywhere, that they not only bear the name but be saints in the fullest sense of the term.

July 14th.—Since writing the above I continued to ask God to help my husband comprehend the law of tithing, and also read to him the remarks by the bishopric, and am rejoiced to say that he now understands more perfectly and thinks it the duty of Saints to comply with said law. We have made an estimate and as soon as possible shall pay our due. Money is a scarce article with us, but we make it a subject of prayer that we may be enabled to make a turn in the right direction and hope and fully expect in the future to be more blessed of the Lord inasmuch as we do our part faithfully and well.

Ever hoping to be found on the Lord's side, I remain your sister in Christ,

SARAH J. ROSS.

ASPEN, Colo., July 22d.

Dear Herald.—It does my heart good to read the testimony of the Saints in various parts of the land. My experience in the past is sufficient to justify me in corroborating the testimony borne by Saints as to their knowledge of the latter day work. The Lord has truly blessed me many times and in various ways, by which I know the work is true. I came here on the 19th of June, thinking to better my condition financially. I think I could accomplish this, but fear the altitude is too great. I find great difficulty in breathing, and may have to give it up.

On my way here I had the loneliness of the journey very much relieved by meeting with Bro. W. W. Blair and other Saints at Burlington, Iowa. It did me good after years of separation, to take the good old standard-bearer by the hand once more. There are no Saints here, and I feel the loneliness of the situation very much, being away from my family and the society of Saints, and not feeling free to speak my sentiments, on account of the existing prejudice against the Saints and my financial embarrassment. Could it be so arranged I would like to get my family into Iowa, where I could enjoy the society of Saints. This place is a silver mining camp of about 3,000 or 4,000 inhabitants. There are four churches here: Methodist, Catholic, Christian, and Presbyterian; a great many saloons and some other places of a soul-destroying nature. Very few people go to church. The snow-capped mountains are plainly visible from this place; some I passed over in getting here. The mission here of most people of this country is to get the precious metal, which is being taken from the "everlasting hills."

My wife sends me the Heralds as she gets them, which is my only preacher, and a welcome visitor from time to time. May the Lord bless you in your effort to do good, is my prayer.

Yours in love,

M. B. WILLIAMS.

LO HERE, LO THERE!

BY B. V. SPRINGER.

Amidst wild confusion, Lo heres, and Lo theres!
Of dogmas prolific, traditional snares,
Led and controlled by the powers of evil,
Which some will attribute to his honor, the devil,
And by their own inward cussedness show
That through him, as a scape-goat, to heaven they'll go;
But I have quite serious doubts, as you know,
And don't take much stock in that fellow below,
As a ladder on which up to heaven to ascend;
If I did, I should like them, make him my friend;
But I leave jarring sects to divert from the truth
The minds of the people, the aged and youth,
With dark superstition, tradition and slush,
Their reason dethroned with sensational gush.
Alas, for humanity! wayward and weak;
Ears turned from the truth, only fables they seek.
May God stay the tide, and cause them to see
That Christ is their refuge; in him they are free
From the bondage of death and the shackles of sin;
With the Spirit to guide, they'll eternal life win.
One who is observant may easily discern
That there is more to forget than really to learn.
To find the old path, and walk in the way;
Emerge from the dark to the broad light of day,
True conceptions of God and the Savior to know.
All our systems and schisms and notions must go,
And give place to truth, the glorious plan
Of human redemption vouchsafed unto man.
Enter in at the gate, walk the one narrow way
And rise with the dawn of celestial day.
And I, in my weakness, as well as I can,
Am pointing the way to my poor fellow man,
By calling attention to Jesus the Lord,
As recorded in Scripture, his own precious word.
And while I my time and weak talents employ,
The Spirit's sweet guidance I greatly enjoy;
Which urges me on to be faithful and true
To the trust, and the labor that was given to do;
And when it is done, and I lie down to rest,
I hope to arise with the pure and the blest,
And be with the Savior our great living head;
Who will reign king of kings when the d—l is dead.

THE ONE WAY.

DEAR HERALD:—A saying that is frequently brought up as argument against the latter day work, which to those who utter it appears to be reasonable, occupies my mind this Sabbath morning. It is as follows: "It matters not by which road I take my wheat to market, it will not be asked of me by the purchaser, by what road I brought it, so long as it is wheat; that is all that is required."

This assertion is made on the strength of the assumption, that carrying wheat to a market approached by several roads, which wheat is received by the purchaser without respect to the road by which it came, is analagous to a soul being accepted of God as worthy of eternal life, without regard to the road it traveled to get there. That it is only an assumption on the part of those who assert it, is evidenced in the fact that there is not anything in the revealed word of God that will sustain them in it. The Savior says, "Strait is the gate,

[not gates], and narrow is the way [not ways] that leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it." "I am the way, the truth, and the life; no man cometh to the Father but by me."—John 14:6. The Savior declares in John 3d chapter, "God so loved the world [when in a perishable state] that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have everlasting life." Now, dear Savior, we are waiting to hear what you have to say that we may believe in your words and not perish. "I came forth from the Father and am come into the world."—John 16:28. What was your object in thus coming from the Father into the world? "I came down from heaven, not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me."—John 6:38. Of course then, that will of the Father was made known unto you in order that you might perform it? "The Father, which sent me, he gave me a commandment what I should say, and what I should speak, and I know that his commandment is life everlasting; whatsoever I speak therefore, even as the Father said unto me, so I speak." You came to do the will of the Father, and how did you commence to do that will? "By going to a man sent from God whose name was John [John 1st chapter] who was the one to prepare the way [not ways] before me, who was the "porter" to open the door [not doors] into the sheepfold, (John 10:3), which door I, the Good Shepherd, entered; and "he that entereth not by the door into the sheepfold, but climbeth up some other way, the same is a thief, and a robber."—John 10th chapter. Did John offer any objections to open the door to you? Yes, he refused, saying, "I have need to be baptized of thee and why comest thou to me? But when I told him to "Suffer it to be so now, for thus it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness," (Matt. 3:43), he consented. After you were baptized and came up out of the water, was there any particular manifestation of your Father's acknowledgment of the act? Yes, John "saw, and lo the heavens were opened unto him, and he saw the Spirit of God descending like a dove, and lighting upon me, and heard my Father's voice declaring me to be his beloved Son, in whom he was well pleased, as declared by Matthew in his 3d chapter and 45th and 46th verses.

We have presented the subject thus far in the form of questions and answers, in order to adapt it to the weakest capacity of understanding. We perceive that the Father was very strict in requiring the Son to do his will, so much so, that he commanded the Son what to say, and what he should speak. We see that the Son was very strict in performing that will. He came down from heaven purposely to do it, and one reason why he was so strict was, he knew that what was commanded him to say and do were the terms of "life everlasting." We may gather from this that God is not slack in his way of doing business. Isaiah declares by the Holy Spirit as recorded in 14th chapter, 24th and 27th verses: "The Lord of Hosts hath sworn, saying, Surely as I have thought, so shall it come to pass; and as I have purposed so shall it stand. * * * For the Lord of Hosts hath purposed, and who shall disannul it? and his hand is stretched out, and who shall turn it back?" That is a vital question with mortal man! Can we disannul what God has purposed; can we mark out ways of our own whereby we can obtain eternal life?

God hath purposed that we should gain eternal life in his way; can we disannul it? It is said of the Savior that he went about preaching the things of the kingdom of God. That was his great theme. We hear him saying, "The kingdom of God is likened unto a sower going forth to sow; is likened to a man finding a treasure in a field; unto a merchant hunting goodly pearls; unto a net cast into the sea; unto a woman putting leaven in three measures of meal," &c. He on one occasion at least spoke of it as the church; and upon the occasion we have been noticing, he represented the kingdom by the parable of the sheepfold. And it is worthy of remark here, that he always spoke, in either instance, in the singular number, using the definite article, the sheepfold, the kingdom, the church, I am the way, &c., thus acknowledging Himself to be the author of but one way, one church, or kingdom, or sheepfold, &c. The sheepfold must have had an existence on the earth at that time, or He could not have sought to enter it. It certainly had, for Jesus on one occasion said, "From the days of John the Baptist until now, the kingdom of heaven suffereth violence," &c. We have seen that Jesus went to the porter, John, who baptized Him, opening the door for Him to enter. We have seen that the act pleased the Father, who sent forth His Spirit upon Jesus, and acknowledged Him vocally from the heavens, a sure proof that he was doing the Father's will. Query, If it was the Father's will that his Son should be baptized, and that he should fulfill all righteousness, could he have pleased the Father in rejecting to do so, even in the least measure? We think, dear reader, your answer will be, no he could not. If the only begotten Son of God, who was without sin, and guile was not found in His mouth, could not please the Father, not doing His will, without entering the sheepfold, how do you think we poor sinful creatures can if we refuse to enter by the door?

But hold my dear sir, you make out quite a different door, to what Christ said was the door. He said, "I am the door, by me if any man enter he shall be saved," &c., you see by this that baptism is not the door. Well, and how was He the door? It is said in Philippians 2:9, 10, "God hath highly exalted him, and given him a name which is above every other name: That at the name of Jesus every knee shall bow," &c. Acts 4:7, reads, "Neither is there salvation in any other, for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved." In Hebrews 5:9, it reads, "And being made perfect, he became the author of eternal salvation, unto all them that obey him." If God highly exalted him, and gave him a name above every other, and the only name under heaven whereby man should be saved, and made him the author of eternal salvation, he certainly was the door, or only mode of entrance into relationship with God.

But it does not follow that He did not have to enter through the door, which he calls the door of the sheepfold, which door was something of his Father's appointing, for the Father had given commandment what he should do and he came to do what the Father commanded, and that command was relating to eternal life; hence, we hear him proclaiming, "Thus it cometh us to fulfill all righteousness." "Except a man be born of water, and of the Spirit he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." John came before Christ to prepare His way. Both came from God, and as Jesus was commanded what to say, and what he should speak, so we naturally conclude that John would receive his instructions how to proceed in preparing Christ's way before Him. It was called Christ's way, because the Father had given him for the salvation of the world, had placed all authority in his hands to secure that salvation.

He it was that redeemed mankind from the effects of the fall, by the atonement made in their behalf, through which atonement the plan of mercy or of salvation could be made available unto mankind, Christ having removed all barriers to the accomplishment of that object; hence we hear Him saying, "I lay down my life for the sheep . . . Therefore doth my Father love me because I lay down my life that I might take it again. . . . This commandment have I received of my Father"—John 10: 17, 18. In view of the foregoing He could well exclaim, "I am the door, by me if any man enter he shall be saved. I am the way, the truth, and the life, no man cometh to the Father but by me." We might ask the question here, "If any man enter, what?" And answer in the Savior's language "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit he can not enter the kingdom of God." Yes, no man could have access to the plan of mercy, as contained in the gospel, for the barrier erected was insurmountable by man, but Christ having removed that barrier could place before mankind that plan of salvation, of "everlasting life," which he was commanded of the Father to do. John came to prepare this way of Christ, as made known by the ministering of an angel sent from God to the father of John. How did John proceed to prepare that way? Let us examine the history of his proceedings. Mark in the first chapter of his book, records it thus: "The voice of one crying in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make His paths straight. John did baptize in the wilderness, preaching the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins. . . . There cometh one mightier than I after me, the latchet of whose shoes, I am unworthy to stoop down and unloose, I indeed have baptized you with water, but He shall baptize you with fire and with the Holy Ghost."

In this history of John's mission is inferred; first, that this way of Christ was not in existence on earth at that time, or otherwise John's mission to prepare it would have been superfluous; second, that there was no one on earth having authority to prepare that way, is evidenced in the act of sending one from God to prepare it. John preached the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins. That repentance was requisite before baptism is evidenced in John's demanding it before he would baptize. That faith in John's declaration of the word, was requisite before repentance, is also reasonable, as well as scriptural, which faith in John's word implied faith in Jesus Christ, for John declared he was sent to prepare His way, that He should come after him, that He should baptize with fire and the Holy Ghost those whom John had baptized with water. Faith in Christ implied faith in God the Father, for Jesus said that his Father had sent him with these terms of salvation.

Did the disciples that Jesus ordained, and sent out to preach His way, teach the same as John did? This is an important question, and in answering it we shall see that there is not the least allowance of many ways, not the least allowance for men to mark out ways of their own, that God has only appointed one way: Jesus says in his memorable prayer as recorded in John 17: 8, "For I have given them the words which thou gavest me, and they have received them, and have known surely that I came out from thee, and they have believed that thou didst send me." We see here how particular Jesus was to do the will of His Father, as well as how particular the Father was that Jesus should do so.

Query.—Would the father allow more license to any of the human family to do contrary to his will, than he would to Jesus, who never had broken any of his commandments? Would the Father be so particular with his only begotten, as to command him what he should say, and what he should speak, as the conditions of life and salvation, and then allow men to say respecting those conditions "This is nonessential, I can be saved without obeying it, that is done away and no longer needed," and then permit those rebels to dwell with Him? Preposterous! But to the question. We have seen that John preached faith, repentance, and baptism for the remission of sins, and the baptism of the Holy Ghost. Peter preached faith, repentance, and baptism for the remission of sins, and the baptism of the Holy Ghost. But says one, Peter said, when they enquired of him what they should do, Repent and be baptized, &c. True, but what caused the question? Peter had convinced them that Jesus was both Lord and Christ; they believed Peter and thus had faith in Christ, and hence enquired what they should do. We take Peter's discourse here as a sample of what all the rest of the eleven would preach, for they were present with him, and if he had so far forgotten himself, as to preach contrary to what they had all been commanded to preach, they would have corrected him, especially when the sound of their Master's voice, commanding them to teach all things whatsoever He had commanded them, had scarcely died away, and that command so strict, that the condition of His being with them always depended upon its being obeyed. We perceive that John and Christ's disciples preached the same gospel, Christ's way, or plan of salvation; and all agreed with what the Master had taught. He preached faith in his Father, God, as well as in himself as his Son. He preached saying, "Repent ye and believe the gospel."—Mark 1: 13. He told Nicodemus, "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit he can not enter the kingdom of God."—John 3: 3. Here is a positive declaration that baptism is the mode of entrance into the kingdom of God, which is synonymous with sheepfold; and if the mode of entrance, must be the door. And this does not militate against the idea of Christ being the door, for if Christ commanded it he is the author, and consequently is the door; the same is the way, the truth and the life, and that is, he is the author of the way, &c., and hence there must be a way authorized by him.

A way suggests a mode of entrance or commencement, and also suggests a travel in that way, as also an end, or place where the road leads to. This way of Christ leads to "eternal life;" and if we desire eternal life, if our feet are not treading that way, it is to our everlasting welfare that we seek the entrance, and after entering see that we keep in that way, and not follow by-paths which lead to destruction, but live by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God. Jesus set the example of entrance and said, "If any man will be my disciple, let him deny himself, and take up his cross and follow me." He has gone on before, and if we follow in His footsteps we shall certainly arrive at the place where He has gone.

The historian, in recording Peter's preaching on the day of Pentecost, did not specify the mode by which the Holy Ghost was received. But in the 8th and 19th chapters of Acts he did. In the 8th chapter he tells of Philip going down to Samaria and preaching Christ unto them, and the things concerning the kingdom of God, and they believed Philip's preaching, and were baptized both men and women. And he then says, "Now when the apostles which were at Jerusalem heard that Samaria had received the word of God, they sent unto them Peter and John. Who when they were come down prayed for them that they might receive the Holy Ghost, for as yet he was fallen upon none of them; only they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus. Then laid they their hands on them, and they received the gift of the Holy Ghost."

This ordinance is entirely ignored by professing Christians in our day. But the fact of the apostles sending Peter and John to administer in the ordinance of the laying on of hands to those who had been baptized by Philip, shows that it was a general practice in the church of God anciently, and the fact that these people had not received the Holy Ghost before, and did receive it after Peter and John had laid their hands on them, establishes its necessity, and also shows that it was approbated of and must have been established by God for that purpose.

Paul practiced this ordinance for the very same purpose as recorded in the 19th chapter of Acts; which proves as before said the general practice. We have briefly alluded to this ordinance, because our article has extended now, farther than at first anticipated, yet we wish to notice briefly, in the assertion we have been considering, the assumption of those who utter it that they are wheat, and though going to market by any of the different ways that men have set up, God will accept them as wheat.

The writer can not find recorded in sacred writ but one way to become the wheat of God, which he will gather in his garner. In the parable concerning the kingdom of God, in which he likened it to a man who sowed good seed in his field, but while men slept an enemy came and sowed tares, as recorded Matt. 13. He in his interpretation of the parable, says, "He that soweth the good seed is the Son of Man. The field is the world, the good seed are the children of the kingdom, but the tares are the children of the wicked one." According to the parable the good seed is represented to be wheat, which he will gather into his barn, but the tares are gathered in bundles to be burned. This good seed of wheat, being the children of the kingdom, were born of water and of the Spirit before they could enter the kingdom, or be born children thereof, so that the wheat God will accept, becomes wheat in his own way and none other. That you and I, dear reader, may be good sound wheat, carried to our heavenly father's market or granary, on the road that he has established, being accepted of him, and not found among the tares is the prayer of

ACCORDING TO THEIR FAITH.

LETTER TO RELATIVES.

DEAR SISTER — AND ALL.—I feel that your minister, Rev. Mr. W., is a good and zealous man, as you claim and believe him to be; but this may not be evidence that he can "see afar off," or that as a spiritual guide he is doctrinally correct on all points; nor that he has 'proved all things' pertaining to the "principles of the doctrine of Christ," and is not in some things following the "tradition of the elders," and teaching for doctrine the precepts and commandments of men, and thus making the world of God of none effect. The Jews had zeal enough to "encompass land and sea" to make a prosolyte, and though some of them were hypocrites, many of them probably were good men, and honest in their convictions and in their desire to save souls as Paul, before his conversion "verily believed he was doing the will of God." But those who followed them were following deceived and blind guides, nevertheless, and the result was liable to be disastrous, unless their eyes were opened to their error later on. "The honest in heart shall be saved." But such, unless trusting in man or held down by the power or cunning of priestcraft, will be always ready to receive more light and truth when shown to them, otherwise they would thenceforth be under some condemnation. Rev. John Robinson of Holland, "the father of modern Congregationalism," and pastor of the Pilgrim Fathers, instructed them thus in his farewell sermon:

"I charge you before God and his blessed angels. . . If God reveal anything to you by any other instrument of his, be as ready to receive it as you were to receive any truth from my ministry; for I am fully persuaded, I am very confident, that the Lord has more truth to break forth out of his holy word. . . I beseech you to remember that it is an article in your church covenant, that you shall be ready to receive whatever truths shall be made known to you from the written word of God." This has been termed "John Robinson's imperial message."

Prof. Austin Phelps, D. D., of Andover, writing in the Congregationalist about the "Rights of Believers in Ancient Creeds," says of their reverend authors:

"They evidently believed more than they have recorded for our instruction. . . Had they lived to our times, they would have received more truth, and proclaimed it authoritatively. . . The drift of their teaching necessitates the admission of more truth."

It was not my intention I believe in speaking of Rev. Mr. W., in my other letter, to "heap ridicule" on him, as you seem to regard it; unless telling the truth concerning him can be so construed. I admit that the facts as I stated them make him appear in rather a ridiculous light, or something worse. But I am not responsible for that. Ridicule, sophistry, and misrepresentation, are the weapons or arguments commonly resorted to and relied on by the advocates and defenders of works of evil and darkness, or of a bad cause. And though ridicule carefully used may sometimes be an allowable, effectual or just means of showing an erroneous position or a false or pernicious claim or doctrine, those in the right, may usually find better weapons to use, or arguments to advance in the defense of truth; while sophistry and misrepresentation, can only dishonor a good cause. And I hope I may never be found advocating any other. Sophistry is sometimes so deceiving that some may even use it without knowing it, from lack of deep thinking and logical reasoning. So prejudice, if allowed to prevent impartial investigation, often blinds us to our own best interests, or leads us to misjudge persons or cases. And if any allow prejudice or self interest to take the place of reason, they will sometimes be led into evil surmisings, misunderstanding, envy, malice and hatred toward those who have been actuated only by desire to do good or to counteract evil. There are times and occasions when truths and facts may and should be stated in plainness and things called by their right names. I am glad that you have received the religious experiences and testimonies that you have. They are evidence of your faith and of the grace and goodness of God. But I think they should cause you to question the correctness of some articles, precepts, or doctrines in the modern, popular church creeds and the commonly received opinions or beliefs.

Charles G. Finney, of Oberlin, a man of much light and faith, says in his "Memoirs" that he was blest with a heavenly vision and a divine revelation. And I do not doubt his words. But he was thus favored because of his faith in God and his word, and not because of faith in any mere human creed, dogma, or tradition that says these miraculous, divinely inspired gifts of the gospel are done away and not for us; but rather in spite of it, if he held to such views.

John Wesley held that the spiritual gifts in the early Christian church were for us, and only ceased because of apostasy; and evidently believed that the promise that "these signs shall follow them that believe" extended to our day.

This saying of modern christendom that these things were only intended to follow the apostles of that age, was the plea of a backslidden and apostate church, in the day of her "falling away," to excuse herself in her faithless, worldly and God-forsaken condition.

The adherents of the modern, popular religious beliefs so far forget themselves sometimes as to write, or sing, or pray in the following strain:

"Speak with us Lord, as to thy Saints of old;
Oh! tell us of thy kingdom yet to come,
Its beauties to our longing eyes unfold,
The peace, the glory of our future home."

These words and aspirations are beautiful and good. But their realization would necessitate a return of the anciently enjoyed miraculous or supernatural gifts of revelation and vision; which can not be according to the popular belief. For "the canon of scripture is full," we are told, and miracles and revelation ceased, since John wrote his book of Revelation, at the end of which he forbids any one to "add unto" the scriptures then in existence, or to the bible, at the end of which it stand, according to the commonly received views on the subject. But notwithstanding the curse pronounced by John upon any man that "shall add unto these things," he wrote his epistles afterwards, and if this view is correct, he must therefore himself have fallen under the curse that he pronounces upon those who should take away or add to—what? The Bible? No; for that as we have it was not then collected and in existence. The New Testament Scriptures have since been gathered up and compiled. And if the books and epistles in the New Testament were placed in the order of the times in which they were written, the book of Revelation would not be the last book or writing in the Bible. John alludes only to adding to, or meddling with his own book or writing, and means just what he says, "the words of the prophecy of this book," that he was then writing—the book he was commanded at the first to write. (Rev. 1:11). Or as he words it in the third verse of the first chapter, "the words of this prophecy." Thus leaving other inspired men who might arise after him at liberty to write the words of prophecy or revelation they might receive; just as those did who lived before him. And this would not be adding to John's words, or to the book of his prophecy, any more than he in writing the words given him by inspiration added to the words of Moses; who also said: "Ye shall not add unto the word which I command you, neither shall ye diminish aught from it."—Deut. 4:2. See also Deut. 12:32; Prov. 30:6. None will say that the New Testament Scriptures are not needed by us; yet Timothy had known enough scripture from his childhood, before the New Testament was written, to make him "wise unto salvation." And Paul says, "All scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine," etc., as King James' translation words it.

In fact, John foretells of "two prophets" to arise after him, to prophesy and work miracles in the winding up scenes of the last days, who will have and exercise similar miraculous power to that had by Moses and Elijah.—Rev. 11:6. And speaking of the closing events of the wicked world as they passed before him in vision, John says he heard an angel say of the wicked: "They have shed the blood of Saints and prophets, and thou hast given them blood to drink; for they are worthy."—Rev. 16:6. He also says of "Mystery Babylon," "that great city which reigneth over the kings of the earth," when it shall "come to naught" and be "made desolate." "In her was found the blood of prophets and Saints, and of all that were slain upon the earth."—Rev. 18:24. John also prophesies of miracles yet to be wrought by "spirits of devils," and by a "false prophet." Rev. 16:14; 19:20. In fact according to prophecy the age that will be emphatically the age of miracles, is yet in the future, but is now very near at hand.

That these miraculous gifts of the Holy Spirit were intended only for the purpose of establishing the Christian church at the first and then to cease because no longer needed, is the teaching of the precepts and traditions of priestcraft, but not of the Bible. For the teaching of the Scriptures of the east are substantially the same as that worded in the Book of Mormon, by the prophet Moroni, who thus addresses those of the present day and age of the world:

"Behold, I would exhort you that when ye shall read these things (in the Book of Mormon), if it be wisdom in God that ye should read them, that ye would remember how merciful the Lord hath been unto the children of men, from the creation of Adam, even down until the time that ye shall receive these things, and ponder it in your hearts. And when ye shall receive these things, I would exhort you that ye would ask God, the eternal Father, in the name of Christ, if these things are not true; and if ye shall ask with a sincere heart, with real intent, having faith in Christ, he will manifest the truth of it unto you, by the power of the Holy Ghost; and by the power of the Holy Ghost ye may know the truth of all things. And whatsoever thing is good, is just and true; wherefore, nothing that is good denieth the Christ, but acknowledgeth that he is. And ye may know that he is, by the power of the Holy Ghost; wherefore I would exhort you, that ye deny not the power of God; for he worketh by power, according to the faith of the children of men, the same to-day and to-morrow, and forever. And again I exhort you, my beloved brethren, that ye deny not the gifts of God, for they are many. . . . And I would exhort you my beloved brethren, that ye remember that every good gift cometh of Christ. And I would exhort you, my beloved brethren, that ye remember that all these gifts of which I have spoken, which are spiritual, never will be done away, even so long as the world shall stand, only according to the unbelief of the children of men. . . . And now I speak unto all the ends of the earth, that if the day cometh that the power and gifts of God shall be done away among you, it shall be because of unbelief. And wo be unto the children of men, if this be the case; for there shall be none that doeth good among you, no not one. For if there be one among you that doeth good, he shall work by the power and gifts of God."—Book of Mormon, Moroni, 10:1, 2.

IS IT TRUE?

IF SO, IN WHAT SENSE?

"AND now abideth faith, hope, charity, these three; but the greatest of these is charity."—1 Cor. 13:13.

There is something peculiar couched in these words, and we think it will be profitable for us to closely examine the statement and ascertain in what sense charity is the "greatest." There are statements which are true in one sense, with certain surroundings; but in another sense, with other surroundings the same words are false; and upon these grounds some accept many statements which they can not understand. They say, It does not appear credible to my understanding, but I will give it the assent of my mind, because it may in some sense be true. This is a fair manner of dealing, especially when they have no positive evidence of its error. But our text is one that should not be permitted to pass in this way; there is so much importance attached to it that it should receive more than a passive endorsement. Whereas, the text speaks of them as three separate elements, it is seemingly needful that we examine each one by itself; and that we analyze each one so far as may be needful to get at the genius and full truth of their relation to each other. They possess great vitality and are of great importance even in this detached condition; insomuch that without them every organization under heaven of either church, state, or society would immediately crumble to atoms and become things of the past. Despair in its blackest form would lay hold upon every individual, and all action would forever cease. It is not until we consider these facts that we have any just appreciation of these principles. But the wondrous strength which they gather to themselves, the magnanimous results which grow out from them when they are blended together in the gospel economy, have never been produced by any other cause. They have been the admiration of all Christendom for ages past. And in their union alone is it possible for the aspiring mind of humanity to find perfect satisfaction. Under their united influence men have been given the sagacity to see for a time as God sees, the end from the beginning, in consequence of which have escaped the most direful misfortunes. In short, there is no grand and good result that can benefit humanity but has been and may yet be brought about by a proper union of these three elements, "faith, hope, charity, these three, but the greatest of these is charity." If while separated from each other they have the ability to give rise to and sustain every institution on earth, who can calculate their stupendous strength when harmoniously blended together by the great author of their existence.

Taking them by course, faith claims our first attention. And to view it wholly detached from the other two, we will have to present it as the principle of belief, not in error, but in the truth. Belief in error is a simple negation of the truth. They are diametrically opposed to each other. A belief in the truth always tends to elevate, while the tendency of a belief in error is squarely the opposite. It clogs the wheels of progression; and we find no consistency in the idea of calling two principles so squarely opposed to each other by the same name, "faith." Who ever heard of two armies being drawn up in battle array being dubbed by the same title. Again we find no record in the Bible of any one ever having had faith in an error. Faith is susceptible of development, but as soon as an error is comfortably seated in the mind in the place where an important truth should occupy, development in that line is very much hindered. Faith is a title of a certain element in the Christian religion whose place can be filled by nothing else; and without which the gospel must fall far short of the object of its institution; and as a belief in error has no lot, place, or part in that heavenly system, but is opposed to it, we hold up both hands in opposition to it sharing the honors of being called by the same sacred title. It is not enough that we just believe that God exists; but we must have a correct idea of "his character, perfection and attributes." See 3d Lecture on Faith, D. and C. The author claims that more than this is "necessary in order that any rational and intelligent being may exercise faith in God unto life and salvation," (2d.verse). Hence, a misconception of his attributes, no matter how firmly believed, comes so far from being faith that it would actually hinder, nay prevent faith from being exercised.

Having learned that belief is the first ingredient of faith and that it must be predicated in the truth to become such, we are at liberty to proceed with our examination. We have however no antipathy against there being denominated false and true faith, proper and improper faith, etc., yet we find nothing in the Bible about false, improper, badly based, or defective faith.

We can go no farther with this principle by itself, for the next move blends faith with her sister hope, nothing can be more natural for any one having a proper conception of the great Deity than to desire his favor and protection; and just the minute a desire is mingled with belief that soon it becomes hope. At this juncture, if not before, faith becomes "the moving cause of all action in every intelligent being." When we believe certain ends can be reached and imbibe a desire to reach them, we naturally bend our energies in that direction. But we are strongly inclined to think the hidden forces of faith, those out of our reach to demonstrate, give rise to every motion, whether voluntary, or otherwise. Who can tell by what power they exercise their mind, if not by faith? We would lay the burden of proof upon the shoulder of the one who protests the lecture above referred to.

The importance of these principles and which is the greatest, is the problem we must not lose sight of; and to see the importance of faith is but to look at it as the "principle of action," or "moving cause;" the first principle of the gospel; and to consider the importance of starting right in every enterprise. If you have a whole day's journey to make and but one day to make it in, it will not do for you to start in a wrong direction. Again, it is not only the first principle of the gospel and to be exercised just in the start, for it figures conspicuously all through life; it is just as much the moving cause in the most devout Saint as it is in one who is just prompted to obedience. Our text places it as a separate principle from hope, "these three." You can not get the number three without first one and two. And when the writer considers that the term hope includes all of belief together with desire, he is driven to the conclusion that faith comprises vastly more than a mere belief. That in it is couched a power to produce an effect as well as to believe it will take place.

Is there any difference in the elements brought into use by two men; one believes a certain rock will be raised from its bed, and the other bows himself down and by muscular force turn the rock up? It is no more so in visible things than in the invisible; for there must be just the same difference in a belief that sight will be restored to the blind and the power of faith which removes the obstacles that obscure the vision. It requires a power to unite a broken bone, to reduce a burning fever, or to perform any surgical operation, and a power that does not exist in belief by itself. Some of our number have sickened; the Elders have been called to anoint them and pray, we have at times believed that such ones would be healed, but to our sore disappointment they were not. Query. Does such experiences prove this language of Jesus false? "If ye have faith as a grain of mustard seed ye shall say unto this mountain, Remove hence to yonder place and it shall remove, and nothing shall be impossible unto you." How are we to solve this problem? Who has ability to say we did not believe? Such things rise up within the thinking mind and demand some explanation. And on a careful examination we discover that belief is faith in its incipient state; and when it is more fully developed it becomes the demonstration, or proof, or "assurance of things" already believed, or "hoped for." Heb 11: 1.

The remainder of the chapter presents faith as the principle of power, and claims that whenever any of the divine manifestations, or miraculous power was manifest from the days of Adam to that time it was done by faith. The scripture which reads "God works among the children of men only according to their faith;" and again, "For if there be no faith among the children of men God can do no miracle among them."—Ether 5: 1, refers to both spiritual and temporal things; hence if ever a man has been or will be saved, it is brought about by and through faith. The blind, the lame, the leper, the afflicted of every description; the dead as well as the sinsick soul who have been, or will be restored by Divine interposition; faith is what has and will produce the effect. It was by faith that Abel, Enoch, Noah, Abraham, Joseph, Moses, Gideon, Barak, Jephthah, David, Samuel and all the prophets performed all the miraculous deeds recorded of them. Such are the claims of the record respecting the power and importance of faith. And with these statements before us some have been puzzled; while others doubt the claim of the text that charity is greater. But as such, we shall examine it with an effort to learn how it excels the magnitude of both faith and hope.

We have made a great leap in presenting faith as the principle of power giving rise to such wondrous results, previous to seeing by what means it became such. We have already seen that belief, the embryo of faith, can produce no such results. It is like the body of man without the spirit; for James 2: 26 says, "as the body without the spirit is dead, so faith without works is dead also." What "works?" The works of love certainly, for faith "worketh by love." Gal. 5: 6. Love and charity are synonymous terms. "Charity is the pure love of Christ," Mormon 7: 4, "filled with charity which is everlasting love." 8: 2. Right in this connection we present 1 John 4: 18, "There is no fear in love, but perfect love casteth out fear."

In these few quotations there are two important facts which stand out in bold relief. First, that charity is another and very important ingredient of faith, even its life principle. It requires no great stretch of mind to see that where fear reigns faith is not perfect. Oh, what an arch enemy is fear. Witness his dire effects in a thousand different ways. He had power to drive the last apostle from the presence of his Lord; he drove Peter to deny him with curses; he surrounds dead bodies, and appears in dark corners with frightful apparitions; until some having not charity could not be hired to approach them. But what is fear? He can not be found by one clad in the mantle of charity. They enter all the dark passages and see nothing of him; he vanishes like the darkness when the sun appears. What is darkness but the absence of light? And what is fear but the absence of charity? Fear is as foreign to faith as doubt is to belief. There is not room enough for full grown faith in the mental caliber which is occupied by a particle of fear.

While these three principles exist in the world separated from each other; and though we have tried to view them as such, yet it is not so in the gospel. Their union is what elevates the children of God above those of the world. If we ignore one we destroy all the superior force and vitality of the others; we render them barren and unfruitful so far as miraculous power is concerned. The other truth which is developed by the foregoing quotations is our first argument in favor of the superiority of charity. They show that charity is to faith what the spirit is to the body, or the electric force to the wire, or battery.

There is still one more element which must come in somewhere, before either faith or charity can be perfect. Some argue that this new element substitutes faith. Others that it only absorbs it. But it being a necessary appendage to faith, without which she must ever remain crippled, neither position can be correct. We speak of knowledge; and all the argument needed upon this point is that no one can exercise "perfect love" for any object until they have an actual knowledge of the existence of that object. Hence a knowledge of the Deity and of his character is necessary before "perfect love" can exist; and "perfect love" is indispensable in order that perfect faith may exist. It is not until all these principles are united in the gospel that faith can be relied upon as a principle of miraculous power. Hence, it is easily seen that it reaches far beyond a mere belief, for every move we make in the direction of developing it, but blends with it some other element.

Our second argument in favor of charity being the greatest, is hinged upon the Scripture presenting faith as "the gift of God." Which is the greatest, a "gift," or the source whence the "gift" comes. If one of us were to be reduced to poverty and dependence, and some kind heart from time to time should by certain gifts alleviate our necessities; which would we revere the most, the gifts or the benevolent soul who bestowed them? "God is love." He is so in the sense that love is the predominant attribute of his being; because every act towards his creatures savors more strongly of that principle than of any other. Humanity. As a crew of seafarers were wrecked upon the shoals with a troubled sea lashing madly about them, Jesus prompted by the motive of every beneficiary act secured a life boat (faith) and at the peril of his own life saves the perishing. Again, man was in a lost and isolated condition. God being moved by the most noble principle in existence, opened up an highway a "strait and narrow way," making it possible for them to return to his presence. Along this highway he had placed certain numerous helps called "gifts," faith being one of them. And while it is indispensable as a principle of power, as much so as the steam in the engine, or the electric force upon the battery, yet the important query at hand is, Which is the greater, the boat, the gift, the steam, or that principle in the mind of the Master Mechanic which moved him to devise the means and bestow the gifts. We deplore the fact, but we frequently see the gifts and beneficiary acts of a loving father extolled away above the perfect fountain of goodness which caused him to bestow those gifts. That perfect fountain is charity, as it exists with God. What! have we committed ourself by quoting that "faith is the moving cause of all action in every intelligent being;" and then claiming that charity moved the Lord to give faith to man? Let us see; faith must have something on which to rest. No one can have faith in something they have never heard of. "Faith cometh [to man] by hearing, and hearing by the word of God." No one can exercise it to the salvation of their souls unless they see the need of salvation, or believe themselves lost. No one could exercise it to the healing of the sick, the casting out of devils, etc., where the necessity for such things did not exist. God could not be moved by faith to prepare the means of redemption, unless he had before seen there would be those in a fallen condition to redeem. So it is not necessary for faith to exist before necessity in order to be the means by which said necessity is alleviated. Nor is it necessary that it should lose any of its power or prestige in order that the Deity may be moved by compassion to the saving of the race. And though it be "the moving cause of all action in man;" that fact does not prohibit us from cultivating in every lawful manner another principle which will figure conspicuously in the perfection of faith itself.

Thirdly.—We present charity as a never failing safeguard against false and delusive manifestations of which so many are fearful. Observation, as also the Scripture, warns us that every manifestation of superhuman power is not from the Father of light; but that the Devil is an expert counterfeiter who can "speak in tongues," or "appear as an angel of light." "Beloved, believe not every spirit, but try the Spirits, whether they are of God."—1st John 4: 1. "For false Christs and false prophets shall rise and shall show signs and wonders, to deceive if it were possible even the elect."—Matt. 24: 24. God placed the gifts in the church for a wise purpose, to accomplish an end that can be reached in no other way. But it is a serious fact, and deplorable as it is true, that very many quench the Spirit and come under condemnation, wholly through fear of being deceived. This should not be, since it is an uncontrovertible fact that where charity reigns, Satan has no dominion. All that any one who feels the workings of the Spirit prompting them to action need do, is to "try the spirits," try them by the law of love; and if it be found that charity exists in the bosom, that which is kind, and envieth not, which "seeketh not her own," and "thinketh no evil," it is the most indubitable evidence that the Spirit is from God, and no farther fear need be had. Indeed, if charity existed to any marked degree no fear would be known, for "perfect love casteth out fear." Again, "He that feareth is not made perfect in love. There is a love which does not come under this head. It is neither pure nor perfect, but a selfish, arrogant love. By this love the Devil was prompted to offer his service in saving the world, but he wanted all the glory to himself. This was what he loved, but it is no part of charity, for she "seeketh not her own."

The question naturally arises, How does love cast out fear? Which will bring us to a fourth consideration of the magnitude of charity. All things are governed by law, and all laws have their penalties attached, without which they would cease to be law. There are the laws of the land, and laws governing every society in existence. There are the laws of nature, which are divided into numerous classes. But all these are partial laws, that is, they affect, or include a part only. Then there is a "perfect law," perfect in the sense that it is without fault, or flaw; and that it is not partial, but embraces and makes provisions for all these minor, or partial laws. If you are acquainted with the law of the land and know that you have lived above that law, you can have no fear of a single penalty attached. And so it is with the perfect law which embraces all things. If you know you have lived above that law, pray tell us, is it possible for you to fear anything? We affirm that no fear can exist under such circumstances. Well, "love is the fulfilling of the law."—Rom., 13: 10. Again, "On these two commandments [of love] hang all the law and the prophets." "And this is love, that we walk after His commandments."—2 John 6. "And above all things have fervent charity among yourselves."—1 Peter 4: 8.

Let the reader remember that we have shown that charity is but another name for love. Now as we have learned that the works of love is the fulfilling of the perfect law; and as man can do no more than to fill full or fulfill that law, or he would be more than perfect—would transcend his bounds and become imperfect—it is a clear case that an observance of the law of love will elevate humanity to the highest excellency possible to reach. This places it beyond question away above the magnitude of both faith and hope. We will just suggest one more thought by way of a solution of the problem found in John 14: 12—"He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do because I go to the Father." "The works that I do" were evidently the works of faith, such as healing the sick, etc., for he usually attributed it to the faith of the individual restored; while the greater works must have been the works of love, for "love is the fulfilling of the law." To fulfill is to complete, and if you add ought to a complete thing you render it incomplete, so no greater thing can be done by man than to complete his service to the perfect law. And John 15: 13, shows what the greatest act of love is:—"Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends." A work He (Christ) had not yet done, but which he soon after did do, and not only he but those same apostles to whom he was speaking.

We would like to follow these thoughts farther, but have grown too lengthy now. Soliciting friendly criticism, we are yours, etc.

SALVATION AND ORGANIZATION.

THE great desire of the race is salvation from sin, its guilt and consequences. To obtain this, man must become subservient to the principles governing salvation, even the gospel of Christ, which is "the power of God unto salvation." Thus when he can realize that Jesus loves him, and that his love was so great that he left his Father's glory, and passing through Gethsemane's sorrow, gave his life on Calvary's cross that he might live, he may hope that such an one might indeed prove a sufficient Savior. How shall the weary, sorrowful, sin tossed one receive the assurance that when life's storm is ended, the dark river passed, he may emerge upon the other side in the bright and beautiful paradise of God. Is it a reality that the matchless Redeemer said: "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."

Yes, and how shall he go to him? He must believe the story of his life, death and resurrection, and determine not to do wrong; and presenting himself to the servant of Christ, be baptized in Christ's all potent name, that all his sins may be buried and blotted out by infinite power, then he may receive the great and wonderful gift of the Holy Ghost, and by the tender mercies of God through Christ, have the word of God confirmed to him by the Holy Spirit; then he is a child of God, an heir of heaven, and Christ has said if he "Endures unto the end he shall be saved."

In all this there is nothing necessarily apparent of organization, or laws governing organization; but he finds himself under new conditions—salvation was brought to him—and he is saved; but is he the last wearying, sorrowing, sinner needing salvation? Alas no, there are thousands, yes, millions on earth just as sin-weary as he was; shall they hear the glorious message? O yes, for whoever obeys Christ's message receives his Spirit, which causes him to desire the salvation of others even to leaving their homes, and going into all the world, as Christ left his Father's glory to come here to save man. And how shall this be best done?—without consultation? No, for then we might expect confusion, and order is the rule in our Father's house. There must be some harmony of action between all those who desire to help on the great work of salvation; so we find that there must of necessity be put in order and motion some machinery by which this work shall be best accomplished. The work of salvation is not man's. "God gave his Son to be the Savior of the world;" therefore the great work of redemption is Christ's and he is the King of Saints. But as he is not present in person he must have a representative on earth, an ambassador, who shall receive and dispense his word and blessings as he desires them to be. But why have an ambassador? Why not speak to the body of the Saints by any one of them? Because that would destroy harmony and organization, and create confusion. A king wishing to send a message to a foreign nation, sends it to his ambassador; not to any other of his loyal subjects who may be there. A government sending dispatches to its armies in the field or battle, does not send them to the soldiers, or captains, but to the commander-in-chief. A ship-owner, desiring his ship to charter for a certain port sends his orders to the captain; not to the mate or sailors. And this principle is recognized in millions of ways, in all the world, in every walk of life; and where it is not observed mobs create anarchy, and dire confusion is the result.

God's government on earth is a kingdom; Christ is the King. He either has an ambassador and order of government, or he has not. If he has, he will speak to his people by and through such ambassador. Admitting his government to be on earth, who should that ambassador be? Whoever holds the highest authority in that government on earth—be it an humble soul desiring salvation as in the case of the farmer boy, the Seer of Palmyra, or any one through all the officers up to the President of the High Priesthood. There is but one President of the United States at once, one Queen of England, one Czar of Russia, one Ambassador from Washington to the Court of St. James; one Ambassador from the government of Great Britain to the United States; and in the very nature of the case these orders could not be different. So of Christ's government—one Ambassador with his Council, one Quorum of Twelve, orders of Seventies, Elders, etc. And these could not be duplicated without causing confusion in the world. Therefore I profess my belief in revelations being received from the king, for the body—through one of the body; for I can not conceive how it could possibly be otherwise and order be maintained.

But what are all these orders for? Is it that men may be elevated to positions where they may exercise lordship over their fellows. Not by any means. But for the better carrying on of the work of salvation that every nation, kindred, tongue and people may hear the same glad sound—the glad tidings. But whoever goes forth, must leave some of those who were relying upon him for support, to be provided for by the brethren. Such providing should be as voluntary as the going forth is, and we all know that method in everything is best. But what method shall we adopt? All governments collect funds from their subjects at the rate of a certain proportion of the value of their property, the government valuing the property, and compelling payment of this rate, whether the subject has increased in wealth or diminished; whether they have interest or not; and if the subject does not increase or diminish in wealth, he is compelled to pay the same rate on the value of the same property over and over again. All the fixed societies in the world collect from their members a regular fixed rate called dues—which is an equal amount from rich and poor alike; whether they are increasing or diminishing in wealth; and it is also collected under compulsion—membership being forfeited if not paid. Neither of these would do, for both methods are unfair.

I am now prepared to say that the method of tithing, as given of God to his people, is the only fair, just, true, and equal principle of collecting means that is known to man on earth. In that it calls for a certain proportion of annual interest, after giving that proportion of what is on hand as tithes as a beginning. If this is done by all, no one will have a dollar in his possession which has not paid tithes, and he will not have a dollar which has been tithed twice. Therefore the burden falls on the prosperous who are most able to bear it, and is only paid by those who increase in wealth and in the Church of Christ is necessarily voluntary.

In reference to temple building, endowments of the Holy Spirit, and the gathering of the Saints. These may not affect my future destiny if I do not believe them, but if they are true principles I may lose in this life many blessings by rejecting them, and when I state that I believe the Prophet Malachi, that Christ will suddenly come to his temple, I must believe that his temple will be built before he can come to it; and that the counsel of the Psalmist David was good and applicable to the same time: "Gather my saints together unto me, those that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice." And if I am inclined to give a tenth of all my possessions, as faithful Abraham did, and one tenth of all my interest afterwards, as the Lord intimated would be correct, "paying tithes of mint and rue, not forgetting the weightier matters of the law;—I say, if I believe all this, and act in accordance with such belief, would it be so wrong in its nature as to nullify the power of the gospel of Christ? Supposing all this machinery was not ordained of God, does the belief in it constitute such a transgression as to destroy the validity of the gospel promises? I think not. If it is ordained of God and I reject it, I certainly will suffer loss. I may be saved if doing no evil, but so as by fire, suffering loss because of works undone which I might or ought to have done; whereas if it is not ordained of God I have this consolation, that it is the very best order of working known to man, the most complete and beautiful on earth, the grandest machinery among men. And this church speaking through all this machinery says, whoso repents and is baptized shall receive the Holy Spirit, and after—if doing no evil—shall be saved in the kingdom of God.

In the fall of 1873, I first heard and obeyed the gospel. I knew nothing comparatively of all the machinery of the church. I became a Latter-Day Saint because I believed the gospel, and loved Christ. I am a Latter Day Saint to-day for the same reason; and I can not help realizing the distinction between the gospel of salvation and the necessary paraphernalia for promulgating it in all the world, and for the edifying and instruction of the Saints. But I also recognize the difference in my condition, then and now, and that then I was made glad in receiving the joyous sound from those who were a part of that organization, and it was made possible for me to rejoice in the fulness of the gospel because of that very machinery which had been ordained before I knew ought of it. It brought to me eternal life; and now if after I have crossed the bridge from death to life I should turn and destroy the bridge behind me, I would be ungrateful indeed.

If I remember rightly, a resolution prevailed in the General Conference, held about 1880, the substance of which was, "that any person believing in Christ, repenting, being baptized for remission of sins, receiving the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Spirit, then living an upright life, should be accounted in full fellowship in the Church." Therefore, those who do and those who do not believe in all the order of the organization, might so walk together in harmony with the first principles, living upright and true to those covenants as to receive rest in the Paradise of God, after the cares and turmoils of life, though those who do believe in the fundamental principles of the organization must teach in accordance with them. And those who do not should not so present their disbelief as to be harmful, or distressing to that body by which they receive the blessings they delight in. The terms "dogmatic," "fanatic," "enthusiast," "dynasty," "hierarchy," etc., have no terrors for me. I have long since ceased to be frightened at words and freely avow my belief in the organization of the church with all its machinery as shown in the books; also in its laws, gifts and blessings; and although some smoke may have clouded the sight of some, can we not arise and "shake off the coals from our garments," and sing clearly, "We thank thee, O God, for a prophet," and "Let Zion in her beauty rise," and "The Saints shall wear robes as the lilies," and many more of those soul-inspiring hymns. Can we not rest safely on the promises of God, so that the body may receive divine counsel, our sick be healed, and we rejoice in prophecy and the word of exhortation, wisdom and encouragement by tongues unknown, or known; and live in the halo of brotherly love induced by the Holy Spirit, as enjoyed in no other way; thus receiving the glorious gifts of the gospel in this life, and eternal life in the world to come? I think so. Thus I judge that every legitimate means should be used for the salvation of our fellows, and that the design of God in organizing the church, and placing certain officers in it, with certain rules to govern them, was that they might teach and administer the certain and sure laws of salvation and redemption which came from Christ the king, and altogether is ordered for man's salvation, and is the best possible means to that end that could be devised.

Selections.

THE following from the pen of Bro. M. T. Short, appears in the Jackson (Maquoketa, Iowa) Sentinel for July 22d, 1886. It is pithy and pungent, and we commend it to the thoughtful readers of the HERALD.

PSEUDO CHRISTIANITY.

A christian profession without a Christ in it, is charity gone to seed. When these popular churches, with a stall-fed clergy and gullible laity turn away a weak servant of the lowly Nazarene they reject the divine appointments, and thereby array themselves against Divinity. A hireling priesthood careth for the flock in order to gather in the golden fleece. Should they let the engines of gospel truth play upon their false and corrupt systems they would waver and fall to rise no more forever.

Like the ancient shrine makers, by their craft they have their wealth; hence great is this hydra headed nondescript, presumptuously, impiously, and blasphemously self-named orthodoxy.

Like the Pharisees of old, they have "stole away the key of knowledge."

They beg for sympathy and support, but give worse than nothing in return. Their forms of devotion do not at all resemble the ancient order of things, or the true church, neither in the organization, ordinances, doctrine, experience, gifts, graces nor blessing.

Under their christian (?) influence men band together in bundles and rings to protect themselves. Infidelity, anarchy, communism, nihilism, oppression, theft, arson, murder and every noxious weed grows and flourishes in Christendom. Is this long train of evils the result of living the golden rule? Nay, verily. Is it because the religious people have one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one common interest, and one spirit by which they are all baptized into the one only, solely and true body?

Sixteen ounces make a pound avoirdupois, and twelve inches make a foot. In like manner there is a proper standard to regulate our moral or spiritual nature.

It is not prudent, wise, or true to aver that clashing theories, creeds, rules, and forms of church government emanated from, and are perpetuated by the God of order. Season, seed time and harvest, night and day, are periodical fixtures.

The "signs," "spiritual gifts," supernatural blessings, and "divers miracles," are as sure to accompany the children of God, as dampness will attend a rainfall. When you can gather plenty of fruit without the harbinger of blossoms and buds, than you can begin to tell me you are saved with no token or sign of acceptance. The babel of "I am saved" is piped forth on every hand, with the accompanying "Come to Jesus!"

The facts in the case are that a well defined institution, or church, was founded by the sweet child of Mary, with an inspired staff of officers, a wholesome code of laws, and a body of intelligent, willing, devoted, humble subjects. When one of the compact was honored all grew jubilant, and adversity, amid the feeblest, was a mutual burden. They rejoiced together, under the paraclete, and wept over the suffering and dying. The co-operative power of the Lord Jehovah attended their meek ministrations, and deadly diseases stood rebuked by the authority of a heavenly commissioned ministry. This glad era was succeeded largely by pagan Rome and supplanted by popery. The night of human woe was of long continuance, and the result was a wholesale apostasy from the experience and practice, the faith and doctrine of a chosen flock. Protestantism came out of the mother church like blind bats out of a dark cave. The mother called her in-subordinate children "heretics," while harlot daughters vent their spleen against their mamma. In this family quarrel governments severed the vinculum a matrimonium that bound church and state together, and thank fortune, nations arose without patron creed. This God appointed union was evolved from the spirit and shadow of monarchies, and that too, without a national religion. Open competition in the world of thought, with a free press and a pulpit, are the key notes to happiness and progress. Some people seem to be so narrow-minded, self-conceited and bigoted that they want to force everyone into their mazy lines of thought. These abnormal cranks too often stand behind the sacred desk, and live in a well furnished parsonage.

If we can ever dig down through priesthood and sectarian bigotry and orthodox rubbish, to the clear and refreshing water of life, in the name of candor and reason let us adventure. The Bible makes provision for something more than the modern reformation. It provides for the restoration of the gospel by angelic administration; its spread throughout sectarian Babylon; the redemption of Israel; the second appearing, and finally the restitution of all things. These so called evangelical churches, either singly or combined, would not make even a clumsy counterfeit to the one delineated and set forth in the New Testament. Joseph Smith, the martyred prophet, did receive the original and pure gospel by the disposition of angels, and was authorized, empowered and commanded to preach the same, administer the law of adoption to aliens, and build up the kingdom in all the world. Time nor space in the secular press would be expected to argue in points of our holy religion. Suffice it to say that we believe in an all wise, all powerful, personal God, the Messiahship, the omnipotence of the Holy Spirit, the fall and the consequent atonement.

The laws of adoption are first of an intellectual faith; 2d, a godly sorrow that produceth penitence; 3d, immersion by an authorized administrator for the remission of past sins; and 4th, the laying on of hands for the confirmation of the spirit. The resurrection of the just or righteous will occur first; but eventually all will be summoned to judgment to receive in proper proportion. The "one body" is to have each and every officer in his proper lot and calling, as laid out in holy writ, while all the communicants are to be confirmed by God himself. The Book of Mormon and the revelations given to the great seer of the new world are the true weapons to subdue polygamy. We regard the Utah people as being dead in sin, transgression, apostacy and adultery. They are living in violation to the laws of both God and man, while our society, with Joseph, the noble son of an illustrious sire at its head, is loyal, chaste and pure. Our organization has kept a missionary force in and around Utah since Col. Connor made it tolerable for us in 1863. I was a missionary to that thorny and dangerous field in 1881 and 1882; my life was threatened, etc. Some say we are feeders to the polygamous curse, but that unfriendly thrust is false. Our headquarters are in this state, and we have no fellowship with the lecherous hierarchy of the far west, and "don't you forget it." We honor and pray for all temporal authorities, and stand willing, and ready, and even desirous to give a reason for our hope, either in public debate, or private chat, on land or sea, through the press or from the stand, anywhere and everywhere.

Our services will convene each evening of this week in the Spiritualist's Hall, and Sunday, the 25th at Hurstville Grove, at eleven a. m., and three p. m., and lamplight in the evening. We seek the sympathy of all noble, virtuous and courageous people, and bear malace, hate and jealousy toward no one. We wish to put you into possession of saving truth, not stupid fanaticism; give you liberty, not chains; and happily you here and hereafter. The panacea for the leprosy of the soul is the ever old and the ever new gospel, which we have. May the spirit of all prudence enable you to doff your prejudice and receive the message on its merits. Let us be charitable and compare, learn to live and let live; and may God Almighty bless and save the people. Should any one wish to open a correspondence with me, my resident address is Millersburg, Mercer County, Illinois.

DIED.

THOMAS.—Mr. John F. Thomas was born at Neath, Glamorganshire, Wales, March 8th, 1842; came to America with his parents in the year 1854; died at Syracuse, Ohio, of dropsy, June 26th, 1886. Mr. Thomas was not a member of any church; was a man that had many charitable qualities about him; he belonged to the order of Odd-Fellows, and was buried by them; the attendance at the funeral was large. Funeral sermon by Elder Thomas Matthews, in the Presbyterian church, to a crowded house; text, Job 19: 23 to 27 inclusive.

COINER.—At Newton, Iowa, July 17th, 1886, little Harlie, the two and a half year old son of A. J. and Sr. Laurinda Coiner. Funeral services were conducted by J. X. Davis, Sunday, July 18th. He suffered and died with inflammation of the brain. He bore his suffering gallantly and died seemingly without pain. "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven."—Jesus.

SCOTT.—William Scott was born in Reading, Penn., September 29th, 1814; and brought up in Pottsville; went to Missouri in 1852, married there in 1854; came to California in 1856; and settled in Amador county. For the past fifteen years he has resided with his family in San Joaquin county, near Lockford; where, after ten days' illness, he died June 7th at the age of 71 years. He was in poor health three or four years before his death. He united with the church called Latter Day Saints (the Joseph Smith branch) in Missouri before his wife knew him. She thinks he also united with them here at Woodbridge, or Stockton. He was said to be a consistent, devoted man to his church, and was respected by all who knew him for his moral life, and his liberality towards all the people of God of every name; he attended with his family the means of grace under my ministry and loved to be in the house of God. It was my privilege to preach a funeral discourse upon his life and death from Psalms 23: 4, to a large congregation in the neighborhood where he lived. He died June 7th and was buried in the church-yard at Elliott. He leaves a wife and five grown children to mourn his loss; but if he could talk with them now he would say, Weep not for me, but for yourselves, until you are saved and ready to meet me; for my departure is gain. For to me to live was Christ and to die is gain.

JOSEPH SMITH - - - - - EDITOR.
W. W. BLAIR - - - - - ASSOCIATE EDITOR.

Lamoni, Iowa, August 14, 1886.

BRO. SAMUEL SHAW, from way down in Kansas, hits the tobacco habit a terrible rap in a letter which will be found else where. Read it. Some of the conferences of the Methodist Episcopal Church have passed resolutions in their annual conference not to permit a man who uses tobacco in any form to have charge of a congregation, as it was considered that such a man was not fit to represent the Church, or to break the bread of life to man. What can we say of ourselves, brethren, if men whom some of us have called "hireling priests" account themselves unfit to represent the cause of Christ when lips and breath are tainted with the filth of tobacco, how shall we justify our habit before the angels, Christ and God. Not more than two years ago the Editor was called to administer to a sister who was ill, and the elder who was chosen to assist him in the rite was in the habit of using tobacco, and when bowing in prayer over the sick woman the Elder's clothes, beard, hair and breath reeked with the strong effluvia of stale tobacco spittle and smoke. The incense of prayer and the praise of grateful, humble hearts may have overpleaded with God, but the Editor could not help the untimely thought—"surely such a stench as this can not be an acceptable offering to him who has commanded "Be ye clean who bear the vessels of the Lord." We repented of the thought, for aside from the habit the elder was a good man, so far as the Editor knows.

NO RAIN at Lamoni in sufficient quantity to wet the dust through since June 14th. Pastures begin to look brown and sere. Wells, cisterns are failings, pools and ponds are going dry, a most unprecedented drouth. A slight rain fell the last day of July, but not enough to fill the accumulated dust in the road. Notwithstanding this long continued dry spell cattle are doing well, the hay and oats are harvested, the former good in quality though short in amount, the oats of excellent quality and a fairly good yield. Last year the weather during harvest was "catchy" and wet, oats were set up and set out to dry three and four times before being stacked, grain was wet in swath, stook and stack, plenty of it becoming musty and almost unfit to use. People complained then, and they are complaining now—some folks are hard to please, anyway. Corn is doing well, and it is being remarked how well the land stands the drouth; corn on well worked land is suffering but little; on poorly worked land it will be poor unless rain helps it out. Potatoes have been nearly destroyed by bugs, not the striped Colorado fellow, but a longer larger bug; their ravages have left some fields stripped of the leaves; in other places they have quit and the vine is re-clothing its stalks with their leaves. Rain has fallen all round nearly at distances varying from twenty to sixty miles.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

WE give space this issue to a letter from E. H. Gurley, in partial reply to an extract from the Expositor, published by us in which some possible strictures were passed upon Mr. Gurley. We dislike personalities, and partisan warfare, and fairness demands that attack when made may be replied to; hence we give this letter of Mr. Gurley's insertion; by no means endorsing its statements or its spirit.

We print in this issue a peculiarly good letter from Bro. Robert M. Elvin, which, as its inscription will show was written for the "Mother's Home Column," but Sr. "Frances," thinking it more suitable for the general HERALD has kindly turned it over to us. Craving pardon of Bro. Elvin if we are trespassing, we commend the perusal of the letter to all.

The Advocate will be suspended, reason for which is given in Bro. Joseph Luff's notice. We call attention to this because it is our opinion that the Advocate has been fighting a good fight, and filled a needful place in our work. We regret the necessity for its cessation, but acquiesce in it. Those who are in arrears should pay up so that Bro. Luff can refund to those who have overpaid.

Sr. Lucy L. Lyons, Post Mistress at Lamoni, is visiting relatives and friends in Detroit, Michigan.

Bro. Columbus Scott wrote from Galien, August 2d, 1886, that four had been baptized into the branch there of late.

Bro. G. M. Jamison wrote from his home that a young man, son of a Reverend clergyman, living near Palmyra, Iowa, grew very angry at him in religious controversy, and was going to strike him because Bro. Jamison insisted that persons could not inherit the celestial kingdom unless obedient to God's law, administered by authority in it.

Bro. Joseph Luff, of Independence, Mo., visited Lamoni, August 3d to 6th. His health is being slowly reinstated. He reports that three have been added to the branch there lately.

Bro. T. J. Martin wrote us from Detroit, Minnesota, August 2d, noting the organization of the branch at Luce, of which Bro. J. C. Foss has given the HERALD readers items heretofore. Bro. Martin reports excellent prospects for the work in that region.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. I. N. White writes from Clinton, Missouri, July 29th:

"We organized a branch at Clinton on the 24th inst. Will make a hard effort to open the work here. Prejudice and superstition, with much ignorance is to be met right on the start. We have gone through the fire once, and hope we can stand the racket once more. The work can not be made popular, but may be made honorable. I leave to-morrow for Cedar county, to hold a four days' discussion, commencing on the 2d."

Bro. John Pett writes from Dow City, Crawford County, Iowa:

"We finished harvesting just a week ago, and have commenced threshing. The yield will average about ten bushels (Wheat?—ED.) to the acre; the quality is good, except in places where the chinch bugs worked, the damage with us is but trifling. Our long dry spell is at last broken; we had a nice rain last night, about 1 3/4 inches of rain fell, and this afternoon it rained again, about three inches of rain fell then. I never saw the pastures so bare and brown before, and vegetation generally suffer so much from drouth; but now everything looks fresher and greener. The early planted corn was doing well anyhow. Our hearts are again made glad and we feel thankful to the giver of all good."

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Ques.—Is an Elder fit to represent this church as an officer, who at the close of a discourse, when asked to bless a bottle of oil, after the custom followed in the church, declines to do so; also refuses to administer to the sick by the laying on of hands. Reasons for refusing, that "he has no faith in the method?" Should such a person continue to be sustained as an Elder?

Ans.—Such an Elder certainly lacks one essential qualification for a successful Elder, that of faith in the promise concerning healing; yet he may be of those mentioned in the Doctrine and Covenants, who have not faith to be healed by the anointing of oil and the laying on of hands; and who are yet permitted to be nursed and doctored with "mild herbs," &c. Such an Elder may believe that others have been healed, and that other Elders may be blessed in administering, but that he is not; in other words he may lack faith, and if so, it would be idle for him to administer, and so it would in a sense. He may be a good representative otherwise. We dislike to pass judgment on such a question. We know nothing of the causes that may underlie such a case. All we could do would be to say such a man would hardly labor successfully among Latter Day Saints, for they would as a rule have no confidence in his standing with God. Such a man could not truly say that he represented the church, for the church does have "faith in the method," as stated in the word.

Q.—Has the Priest a right to bless the bread and wine for sacrament?

A.—No.

Q.—Has the Priest a right to lay on hands for the healing of the sick?

A.—No.

Q.—When a member of the church joins another church (or denomination) and requests his name to be removed from the records, should we refuse to grant his request on the grounds that there must be charges preferred first against him?

A.—There is a resolution of Conference which states that no person shall be cut off, unless they have been properly labored with, charges made and trial had; and that a persistent request to have the name dropped from the church record shall be taken as prima facie evidence of apostasy.

Q.—Is it wrong for a teacher when visiting the members, (if he finds some that say that they can not be christians, they don't want to belong to the church, &c.) to advise them to send in their names and have them removed from the record in preference to having them cut off?

A.—It must depend upon circumstances and every case be decided on its merit, where it occurs. In the case referred to the Teacher should report to the presiding elder, and not give advice in the premises.

Q.—Sec. 3-4 of Lectures on Faith says we must have a correct idea of God, &c., in order to serve aright. Do the Scriptures and the doctrine of the church teach that God has a body like Christ's body? And will our bodies be like his when we become perfect?

A.—The general understanding of the elders is that God is a personage of spirit having form, occupying a habitation and having attributes. Paul, in Hebrews 1:3, states that Christ was "the express image" of God's person. And the same apostle in Col. 1:15 says that Jesus Christ is the "image of the invisible God." 1 John 3:2, states that when Christ shall appear "we shall be like him." Paul, also, in Phil. 3:21, states that our "vile body may be fashioned like his most glorious body." See Genesis 1:26, 27.

We give the following notice of the June number of the Ladies' Home Journal contains the opening chapters of a new domestic story, written for its columns by Harriett Prescott Spofford. Among other articles this number contains, "The Tea Table, and How to Make it Attractive," by Christine Terhune Herrick. Mrs. Louisa Knapp, as editor of the Philadelphia Ladies' Home Journal, has met with most remarkable success in building up that paper to a circulation of over two hundred thousand paid subscribers in less than two years, by her rare tact and genius in catering to the home instincts of her sex, in the rich feast of good things set before her readers every month. The Journal is a perfect gem, handsomely printed and illustrated, and employs only the best writers, such as Harriet Prescott Spofford, Marien Harlan, Rose Terry Cooke, Mrs. Christine Terhune Herrick, (Marion Harland's daughter), Mrs. J. H. Lambert, of Philadelphia, Mary Abbott Rand, Helen Winslow, John's Wife, Clarissa Potter, Helen Ayer, Charity Snow, and others.

THE Chronicle, LaCrosse, Wisconsin, for Sunday, August 1st, 1886, is laid on our table by a visitor, and from it we extract the following:

LATTER DAY SAINTS.

A CORRESPONDENT TELLS SOMETHING OF LAMONI, IOWA, THE HEADQUARTERS OF THESE PEOPLE—THE POPULATION WIDEAWAKE, WEALTHY AND INTELLIGENT—AN INTERVIEW WITH JOSEPH SMITH.

To the Editor of the Chronicle:

LAMONI, Decatur county, Ia., July 31st. —Decatur county is located midway between the Mississippi and Missouri rivers, on the line between Iowa and Missouri. The Des Moines & Kansas City branch of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy railroad passes from the north-east to the southwest through the county. Near its exit, from Bethany Junction a branch leads westerly. Three miles from the junction stands the bright little prairie city of Lamoni, the headquarters of the "Latter Day Saints." A business sojourn here of a few days has revealed much of interest to me. In 1871 at Council Bluffs, under the laws of Iowa, a company was incorporated under the name of "The First United Order of Enoch." In the autumn and winter of that year their agents, Elijah Banta, I. L. Rogers and David Dancer purchased 3300 acres of land in the southwest of this county. Soon after these lands commenced being occupied and improved, forming the nucleus of a colony which has made the prairie blossom with wealth, and to be regarded as one of the most prosperous districts of southern Iowa. In the midst of the colony, after the branch from Bethany Junction had been extended west in 1879, was platted Lamoni. Its growth has not been marvelous but steady, numbering now 500. The city is new and crisp, like a carpet just from the loom, and it needs putting together and bordering. Shade trees, grades, more and better sidewalks will come with time, for in enterprise, intelligence and liberality the business men of Lamoni are excelled by none known to me. Petty jealousies, slander, etc., seem to find no harboring place among them. All are connected with the Saints' church by membership, or marriage, and to an outsider, seem to dwell together in harmony. I must add, the city seems to be noticeably free from idlers; it would appear that there are no drones.

CHURCH DIGNITARIES.

Lamoni is the home of Joseph Smith, the president of the Reorganized Church, and also the home of many of the high officials of the church. All appointments to missions to different parts of the world issue with seal of the president from here. There is so much of "matter of course"ness about it, that the departure or return of a missionary to or from the opposite side of the globe, causes less of a ripple here than the leaving of a La Crosse citizen for a winter's sojourn in Florida.

SAINTS' HERALD PUBLISHING OFFICE.

Calling upon Joseph Smith at the Herald building, I found him busy at his desk. His cheery welcome and hearty grasp of the hand caused me at once to feel at home. His age I judge to be about fifty-three years; his countenance is clear, betokening health; his eyes, the windows of the soul, express as near as I can express my impression, mainly honesty. He is a worker—has no hours of idleness and but little time exclusively his own, but always enough to courteously receive and make welcome a stranger. He is assisted in his editorial duties by W. W. Blair, associate editor.

The Saints' Herald, a sixteen page quarto weekly, numbers a circulation of 4000. Zion's Hope, a Sabbath School weekly publication has a circulation of 3000. The Saints' Advocate (monthly) 2800. The Sandhedens Banner, (Danish) has a monthly circulation of 1000. Occasional publications for the Society Islands, are printed in the "Tahita" language.

THE BUILDING.

President Smith kindly invited me to look over the building, the walls of which are brick. The main building is 30x65, two stories in height, with an engine room one story added 16x16. A force of fifteen men are employed in the mechanical and compositors rooms. A twelve horse power engine furnishes the motive power. Two cylinder presses are used, one Taylor and one Campbell. Most of the compositors have been with the office from printer's devil up. John Scott, the genial foreman, though he learned the art in old England, has been on the Herald for eighteen years. William H. Deam, pressman and stereotyper, fourteen years, and compositor William Crick twelve years. All denominational literature is turned from this office, which was established at Plano, Illinois, in 1862, and removed to this place in December, 1881.

BUSINESS OFFICE.

I met in the business office Asa S. Cochran, cashier and secretary of the Board of Publication. For the accommodation of the business men of Lamoni, this office draws exchange on Chicago. The business cleared at the office for the year ending March, 1886, exceeding $182,000.

No place of the size in Southern Iowa, if in the state, equals Lamoni for wealth. David Dancer, who commenced life a poor boy in Will County, Illinois, about 1875, sold his property of 900 acres. Transferring his means to this county, he invested largely in lands and owns 1,900 acres of Southern Iowa's best improved farms.

Hon. E. Banta, who came in 1877 to the colony, was elected to the Indiana general assembly from Johnson county, in 1864, the first Republican from his county. Now a Democrat, he was elected in 1883 to the Iowa legislature, by a vote leading the state ticket 274. He is a man of large means.

"BY THEIR FRUITS YE SHALL KNOW THEM."

A liberal in religion, I recognize the power of all creeds for good, and while lieving that religious faith helps, I do not believe it makes a man. Men by their lives make the religion they profess beautiful or hateful, in the same way that a man ennobles or degrades his calling in life, as one of God's agencies, for hastening the coming of the "fullness of time" when all shall be "gathered in," I am impelled to say, God speed and upbuild "the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of the Latter Day Saints."

"Prayer is made and praise is given

THE GRACE OF SILENCE; OR, WHEN TO KEEP STILL.

SILENCE is often a most commendable grace. There is a time to speak out, a time to be heard—when muzzled lips would betray cowardice and treason to the truth. At such times "speech is silver;" but there are other occasions when "silence is golden." Let me indicate, in this article, some occasions in which it is wise to keep still before our fellow-men. Next week we will discuss the still higher grace of silence before God—such as the Psalmist exercised when he said, "I opened not my mouth because Thou didst it."

(1.) It is our privilege, in the first place, to hold our tongues when we are assailed by inquisitiveness. Some people have a chronic itch of curiosity; their very eyes are interrogation points. Instead of minding their own business they are "busy bodies in other men's matters." Now such people ought not to be encouraged by being gratified. There are many things which we have a right to keep to ourselves, and with which "that great brute beast the public" (as Cobbett called it) has no concern. My neighbor has no more right to peep into my pocket-book than he has to steal it; he may no more spy through my windows than break open my door. Every man's house is his castle; and a self-respecting family will keep to themselves all these matters about which the outsiders have no right to intermeddle. There are sore spots in almost every household, that delicacy ought to conceal; a thousand domestic difficulties would never get wind, if people were wise enough to padlock their own tongues in regard to their own family infirmities.

Let us be careful not to have too many confidants; a tale-bearer revealeth secrets, but he that is of a trusty spirit concealeth the matter. As for the crime of divulging what is entrusted to us in sacred confidence, it is a crime compounded of falsehood and treachery. Upon this whole subject two sound rules ought to be observed; one is never to ask what you have no right to know; the other rule is never to tell what your neighbor has no right to know. Abraham Lincoln was famed for his shrewd, sagacious speeches; he deserves equal credit for his talent of holding his tongue.

(2.) A second occasion for Christian silence is when you are strongly tempted to disparage others. Remember that the tongue is a keen instrument; it cuts deep, and often draws blood; you may commit murder with it as truly as with a dirk or a pistol. Alas! how many limp along wounded, or else carry the ugly scars which cruel slander has inflicted! Malicious slander we may all detest; but a peculiar temptation to detraction often comes in this wise. We hear somebody greatly extolled; perhaps the praise seems to us extravagant. Envy—that hateful spirit which often wears the mask of Justice—whispers to us, "that person is set up entirely too high, he or she ought to be taken down." So we bring out some deformities of character or some evil things that we happen to know about them. Grant that we do know that these things are true; why speak to them thus and fling a nasty fly into a box of fragrant ointment? Why thrust a daub of detraction over a fair portrait of character? In the name of generosity let us hold our peace. If we can not sincerely join in the chorus of praise, let not our envious tongues croak their discord; if we can not help to set another up, let us not help to pull him down. Silence is often as magnanimous as outspoken vindication. If we can not conscientiously say anything good about other people, is it not generally better to say nothing at all? Throwing mud is always dirty work; if you do not defile the individual you aim at, you are pretty sure to soil your own fingers. If we would all remember how we have smarted ourselves, and suffered ourselves from the razor-tongue of defamation, we would be more careful to bridle our own tongues. Of the man who keeps no such bridle the Apostle James says "that his religion is vain."

(3.) If silence be golden under these before-mentioned conditions, then does it shine with a peculiar lustre when it is maintained under sharp provocation. If our house takes fire, the first impulse is to run for a bucket of water. But if our temper takes fire, the impulse, too often, is to throw on more fuel. Now the best water-bucket for aroused temper is absolute silence. Just seal your lips tightly for ten minutes, and you will save yourself many a quarrel, many a heart-burn, many a mortification, and many a disgrace to your religious profession. Speech is often dynamite; it shatters friendships in a moment that are not repaired in a life-time. Silence is cooling. It cools us off; and it is often a more eloquent vindication than words. One of the calmest men I ever knew, told me that he used to be violently passionate, but that he broke his temper by resolutely bridling his tongue until he cooled down.

What answer that can be given to irritating words, or even to a just provocation, is as effective as dignified silence? How eloquent are sealed lips! What sublimity there is in silence, when innocence reviled, reviles not again? Marvelously beautiful was the mute patience of our Divine Lord when under all the insults and the buffetings of his brutal enemies, he opened not his holy lips. Those lips might have summoned legions of angels to his rescue. That tongue might have shot the lightnings of heaven into the cruel crowd of his murderers. "Answerest thou nothing?" exclaims the enraged High Priest. "But Jesus held his peace." Other men have died for what they have said. But, as Dr. Bushnell beautifully remarked, "here was a personage who died for what he would not say, and was silent." Wonderful silence of conscious innocence; truly this was the Son of God? He was brought as a lamb to the slaughter, and as a sheep before her shearers is dumb, he opened not his mouth.—Selected.

MOTHERS AND DAUGHTERS.

THERE is much force and truth, says the Michigan Farmer, in the remarks made by "One of the Girls," in a late issue of the Household, to the effect that mothers were many times responsible for the improper behavior of the daughters in the company of young men, inasmuch as they had failed to give them instruction, or enlighten their experience by proper counsel and warning. The mother by sad experience knows many pitfalls and snares hidden in the pathway youth must travel, and both love and duty should inspire her to point out the dangers and provide safeguards for her child's innocent feet; and it is only by iteration and re-iteration, line upon line, and precept upon precept, in season and out of season, that the youthful mind can be impressed. On the other hand it is sadly true that many girls give very little heed to the admonitions of the mother, no matter how wisely or kindly given, and with a perversity born of self-conceit, pride themselves upon following their own headstrong will, careless of the wounded heart of the mother, and the bitter consequences that too often follow to themselves. Happy indeed is the mother who is able to hold the confidence, and sympathy of her daughter, so that her kind and loving control may be willingly acknowledged, and her counsel sought through the years when most needed—the years when self-assertion is awakened and aggressive self-conceit the most prominent factor, unawed as yet by the humiliation of defeat, and with all the boldness of inexperience. How carefully must we move to save them from the perils they will not see and the dangers they can not comprehend, and yet not tighten to a strain that may break the bounds of control so necessary to preserve! How much we have to forbear, how much to forgive, how much to endure, only the conscientious mother can realize. While we are carefully avoiding the Scylla of governing too much, trying to teach the unfledged mind to try its own pinions that it may learn strength and feel responsibility, we may strike the other side, the Charybdis of too little control, and the weak but precious child of our affection falls wounded and broken at our feet. How often, too, at such a moment when overwhelmed with suffering, perhaps filled with undeserved self-accusings, comes the bitter sneers of self-constituted judges rasping the heart-wounds to supreme agony, asking, "Why did you do this?" "Why not do the other?" In the self-complacence of their arrogant arraignment no mistake could have occurred had they been at the helm. Mothers, you who have daughters reared to true womanhood, settled in happy homes or armored in matured experience and solid sense, taking up life's responsibilities, do not arrogate to yourselves superior wisdom or judgment, but reverently thank God who has led you and yours in the way of truth and virtue, and blessed your endeavors for the right. If your darlings, carefully as you have instructed and matured them, had been beset by the same temptations that have fallen to the lot of some others, they might not now have been so happy and blessed. It is only the sorely tried and tempted who have triumphed that are proved, and even these might have had an hour of weakness that found, might have caused their fall. Let us cultivate charity for faults, sympathy for the unfortunate, even the sinner, and, even while we sternly reprobate the sin: and while we gather our treasures around us, thank the giver of all good gifts that they have been kept and preserved from temptation, rather than sit in merciless judgment on some poor unfortunate who perhaps deserves more our pity than our censure. I think too, that mothers often arraign themselves and each other for sins of omission or commission, unjustly. If with the light we have, we each day do the best we may, we should recognize the fact that it is all that could be required of us; and we have no right or cause to make ourselves unhappy over what might have been. We should do our duty day by day, honestly, fearlessly, trustingly, and, whatever the result, know that we are blameless in the sight of him who searcheth the heart, and who will often bring light out of apparent darkness and good out of seeming evil. There will always be unwise mothers and disobedient daughters; but, happy thought, we don't find them in the majority, and let us hope their numbers may grow less.

Correspondence.

NEBRASKA City, Neb., July 26th.

Sister Frances.—Since reading your appeal, I have meditated much thereon, and mentally resolved more than once to attempt the writing of something commendatory or auxiliary. But the grave responsibility of being a minister of the everlasting covenant of peace, with the perplexity and anxiety caused by the continued indisposition of my wife, has divided my thinking powers to such an extent, that I have not felt myself adequate to the task. Your conclusions upon the results of the General Conference of 1886 are, or I believe to be, both intelligent and truthful. For one I think I perceive more clearly than at any former period of my life, the near and true relationship of the ministry of the church with Christ their living head; that the dignity, virtue, purity and character "altogether lovely," that was exemplified by the great Teacher should be emulated by every minister and follower of the "Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world." And just so far as we accept and practice the commandments of Christ are we the children of light, and all relapses therefrom are what Peter describes: "spots they are, and blemishes;" or as Jude puts it, "these are spots in your feasts of charity." These ancient teachers had their patience severely tried; and experience seems to confirm the statement that "history repeats itself," so that when we discover the task, trials and duties of the people of God, we may be quite sure of like or similar events developing subsequently to distract those who are willing and desirous to be ready, so that they "come behind in no gift, waiting for the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ." I trust you gain my meaning; namely, that those who undertake to teach and direct the lives of others, themselves should make the effort to square their own conduct and life by the rules prescribed for the pupils. As a father with the responsible care of three of Zion's Hopes, I have sought to be consistent with the law that I teach unto others, and to plant in their tender minds respect for God's requirements; to teach prayer, faith, repentance, baptism and laying on of hands; so that all these were complied with before their ninth year. This was a much easier task than to enforce upon their minds the everyday duties of a saintly life, the hindrances to which are, first, a deficiency on our part, and the endless temptations and invitations for our children to enter into wrong doing. Nine months of the year are our little ones in the school room, and we are very desirous for them to make headway in obtaining an education, but the public school seems to be a hot-bed, in which to hatch all manner of mischief and wrong, and even crime in its incipency; how to guard against all that our children are exposed to has greatly perplexed us. Paul's advice seems to be the only reliable safeguard: "Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good."

Let me give you a true account of a successful victory wrought by faith. Some years ago a family came into the church; the youngest of this family was a daughter, who drank deep from the fountain of truth in her childhood. About the period that young ladies fall in love, this girl went and did likewise. This caused a cloud to rest not only upon the family, but upon all Saints who knew of the event; for the object of her love was a saloon-keeper, and bitter opposer of her religion. Before the nuptial day arrived this saintly girl fell sick, nigh unto death, and when it was supposed that she was about to depart for the world of spirits, her betrothed urged upon her that before she passed over the river of death, that she renounce her religion, (or as he then termed it, delusion and foolery). But in the presence and shadow of death was this one firm to her faith in the gospel. After her recovery they were united in the bonds of wedlock; and notwithstanding the unpopular business of her husband, this young saint, under these adverse circumstances, kept up her supplications unto God for guidance and strength under her peculiar trials. The first fruits of success, was the abandoning the occupation of her husband and a removal to a farm. The husband now was at home at eventide, and he noticed that every night before their retirement the wife would withdraw for a few minutes. The continuation of this practice in all kinds of weather, aroused the curiosity of the husband and he sought for the cause. The discovery that it was to offer up her evening prayer, in which the grace of God was invoked in his behalf, was the beginning of the second stage of success; for when she next started out, he informed her she need not go out to do her praying. A new trial now was upon this struggling saint, for with the altar set up in the light of the lamp, and the head of the house sitting looking on, it was an additional task thus to pray in the presence of him who should take the lead in such worship. One more surrender was made by the husband, when he humbled himself to kneel with his praying wife, and shortly afterwards he took one more step in the right direction, when he proposed to his wife that he would read a chapter in the Bible, and she being a church member could do the praying. But this state of things did not long endure, for he was soon chosen the superintendent of a Union Sabbath School, and he conceived the idea that a man holding said position should be a praying man; that a praying wife was not sufficient, and home was a first class place to commence; therefore he informed his wife that he would do half of the praying. For something like a year this family worship was kept up, and well do I remember that at the closing of a series of meetings held in that vicinity, the Holy Spirit rested richly upon me as I urged the necessity of accepting the gospel of salvation; and as we sang that grand old hymn with a zest that made the very house tremble, and as we reached the second line of the last verse, this man arose, trembling as an aspen, advanced to the stand and extended his hand, signifying his desire to unite with the church. A thrill of joy went through many hearts, and the unbidden tear moistened many cheeks. The next day we buried him with Christ in baptism, and the Spirit of God was felt in power at the confirmation.

"Hark! listen to the trumpeters!
They sound for volunteers."

Permit a divergence, to say that the branch in which this took place had for some time prior to this baptism been in a languishing condition; but new life dated from this event, and better order obtained; renewed efforts were made, and a little while after his uniting with the church he was ordained a Teacher, and he went to work with a zeal that infused new life into many. After a time the branch saw proper to recommend to the district conference this brother for ordination as an Elder, which was duly done, and now that man stands as the presiding Elder of that branch; and so far as I know, peace and unity are within their borders; and a united effort for the cause of truth among the people, with a bright outlook for the ingathering of honest souls.

This we believe to be a positive demonstration of the rule "overcome evil with good." I might give other evidences of a like nature, but perhaps this will suffice from one so feeble. If it was permissible I would exhort ALL parents and Saints not to be so wrapt up in money-getting and selfish ends, that they have no time to devote to the personal education of their children; for the parent should understand better than any one else their dispositions. Let us devote more time for the good and happiness of others, than we hitherto have done, and may the God of peace and the protector of all Saints bless one and all, is the prayer of

ROBT. M. ELVIN.

OTTAWA, Kansas, Aug. 2d.

Bro. Dancer.—I wish to say a few words through the Herald to the Saints everywhere: Would it not be better during conference to dispense with Sunday School services, and have in its place prayer and testimony meetings, for the benefit of visiting brothers and sisters who come from a distance. I have twice attended conference, going each time over one hundred miles, and have had to go home disappointed by not having the privilege of partaking of the sacrament. As there is no branch here I am practically isolated from the church, only at such times as I can attend conference. Yours in the truth,

R. R. GAITHER.

PAINESVILLE, Ohio, July 29th.

Bro. Smith and Blair:—As week by week comes and goes, I am greeted by the Herald which brings with it comfort, joy and encouragement. It brings comfort and joy to every Saint in knowing the restored gospel is being preached in nearly every habitation of the globe. It is encouraging for us to know through its columns that malice, envy and prejudice are giving way before the mighty preaching of the true followers of the meek and lowly Jesus. I live nine miles from Kirtland (the branch to which I belong). I do not get to church as often as I like; and if I was without the Herald I would be blessed with but few sermons during the year. I have lived where I could hear the word preached from my infancy up to the present time (that of a man in the middle walks of life) and must confess I have been blessed more abundantly with spiritual light during the last three years, since hearing the restored gospel which is preached by my brothers, than during the former period of my life. I used to have doubts and fears as regarded my acceptance with Him who is judge of all flesh. To-night, I am "sweetly trusting in him," realizing that my name is recorded in heaven; and that I also have a title to one of those mansions which are prepared for those who love him. If any should ask why I am so confident now in my hope of heaven, I answer, I am not saved by the will of man, nor of the flesh, but by the law of God; which is "perfect, converting the soul."

I remain your brother in the one faith,

I. P. TITUS.

BEATRICE, Nebraska, July 30th.

Dear Brother Herald, Preacher:—I appreciate your sermons very much. I have been in your ranks about one year. I enlisted at Blue Rapids, Kansas, being enrolled by brothers Smith and Landers. I was keeping the faith and gospel about two and a half years before I enlisted in this glorious cause. I did not know at that time that any such society was in existence. I thought Latter Day Saint people were all Mormons, and I did not want "any of that in mine." I have been practicing the gift of healing the sick for three and a half years. God has blessed me in all my efforts. I have not had a failure yet. I have consecrated my life, soul and body to do God's will—to do his work. I have been spending some time with the brethren—the Latter Day Saints, but my feelings are often hurt to see how prevalent is the use of tobacco among our people. When God commands us to purify ourselves—for he says, "I am pure." I am praying and teaching, to the best of my ability to have this filthy habit thrown aside. When we desire purity, and ask God to cleanse us individually and as a people, we should not expect him to do it unless we, each one for himself, first make the effort and cast aside the habits that are wrong and a sin in his sight; and when we thus determine to be and to do, then will God reach down an arm of assistance, and not till then. I know that some of our Elders, preachers, &c., are slaves to their appetite in this respect, and I do not understand how they can reconcile this practice with purity of heart, and preach, or teach consecration of self, and at the same time indulge in this filthiness. As we are a different class of people from all others, and profess to have the power that God in his word gives to his people, let us therefore, live up to our professions, throwing aside all that is unclean and unnecessary, and become pure and holy as he would have us to be. I want to see the church have more power than is yet made manifest, and in order that this high object be gained, we must deny ourselves an indulgence that is degrading both physically and morally, and for my part I hope that at no distant day to see this pernicious habit of "chewing the weed" entirely done away with, especially among God's people. When my brother tells me he can not quit this habit I would like to ask him how much faith he has in God. Fearing that I may weary you I will bring my letter to a close, begging the prayers of the Saints that I may be faithful to the end.

Your brother in Christ,

SAMUEL SHAW.

Friend Herald:—As there are so many knotty problems solved in your columns from time to time, I send this, hoping some wise-acre may be able to throw some light on a sealed chapter—of consistency, e'en though it should be through a brick—or should raise the dead. In the year 1843 Elders Horace K. Whitney and Joseph C. Kingsbury were sent from Nauvoo on a mission to the New England States, visited Canaan, Conn., where Elder Gibson Smith lived, the grandfather of Horace K. Whitney and Sarah Ann Whitney, eldest children of Bishop N. K. Whitney by his first wife (then only one), Elizabeth Ann being the eldest daughter of Elder Gibson Smith, of Conn; upon their arrival, Elder Kingsburg was introduced to the old folks as the husband of Sarah Ann nee Whitney, and Elder Horace Whitney his declared brother-in-law, introduced him as such to two aunts and their families, Mrs. Polly S. Mills of Norfolk, Conn., and Mrs. Sarah S. Foot of Sheffield, Berkshire Co., Mass., by all of whom the two cousins were welcomed; and while there they received letters from Mrs. Sarah Ann Kingsbury, and they showed them; also wrote her, addressing her as Mrs. Sarah Ann Kingsbury, and letters from Mrs. Elizabeth A. Whitney, her own mother, stated the same fact that they were married shortly before the two brothers-in-law left home on their mission; also at New Haven, Conn., where they visited some more cousins, named Bishop. They stated the same, and were known and recognized by all their friends and relatives as stated. They both remained on that mission till the martyrdom of Joseph and Hyrum in June, 1844, upon receiving the news of which they left for Nauvoo in haste and in alarm, expecting very serious trouble there. They, the Whitney's, finally all joined in the exodus to Salt Lake, where Sarah Ann became the second wife of Pres. Heber C. Kimball, to whom she bore several children, having none before. Elder Horace K. Whitney married his first wife, Helen Bellate, eldest daughter of Pres. H. C. Kimball—and a noble woman. They had a family and lived happily together, while Sarah Ann was quite unhappy, though well provided for in necessities of life. She has been dead several years. This is well substantiated by living witnesses.

And now, so here comes Joseph F. Smith in a very tremulous voice from the tooms (tombs) and in an affidavit makes this veritable Joseph C. Kingsbury come to the rack saying, that at the self-same time Sarah Ann Whitney was his reputed wife, that he knew she was the wife of Joseph Smith. Shades of Lucifer; here is a gem of consistency; but probably this handy witness may be patented for such cases, if not we must conclude this little episode in his early life had escaped his memory; yes, the champion witness doubtless had amid the muchly married, forgotten he had ever married this much abused Sarah Ann Whitney-Kingsbury-Smith-Kimball. Of course such little things are liable to be overlooked in making such an affidavit as his; but likely Joseph F. can fix up the next affidavit for him so as to make it clear as mud, and with his ingenuity can make it quite amusing. Although the bottom has all been knocked out of this polygamy business time and time again, in vainly attempting to fasten it on the martyrs as its founders still, as we gaze on its death throes, we are prone to hit again; like the Irishman who had killed a snake and broken it all to pieces, and the headless, trunkless tail still squirmed as he struck earnestly at it, a passing friend remarks to him "Why, Pat, he is dead, and all broke up." "Sure an I know it, yer honor," says Pat, "but dye see the craythur is not sinsible of it." Neither is Joseph F. sinsible of it seemingly. But it is an easier work for him to raise his dead than to bolster up his origin of Utah polygamy with such affidavits.

By one who knows and has seen the parties, and read their letters at the time.

Brother Joseph:—The true gospel has been preached in this part of the world. We have a branch of eleven members, and we enjoy the Spirit very much, although we are persecuted some, which makes me stronger. Our blessed book says, "Blessed are ye, when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you, falsely, for my sake." Then we should rejoice and be exceeding glad, for great shall be our reward in heaven if we stand these temptations. Bro. Parley Premo has been here and preached for us several times. We think he is a worthy brother, and bid him "God speed." If any other brother who can, would come and preach for us, we will give him a welcome. We need some one to preach all the time. I prize the Herald very much.

Your sister in Christ,

PATIENCE M. LEACH.

SWEET HOME, Oregon.

Bro. Joseph:—I am doing the best I can, under the circumstances. Up to the present, my labors have been limited to Sundays, as I had no conveyance; but I have now a horse and cart, and shall commence work in a new place on Saturday next, and shall move on to others that are waiting for me. I baptized five, all but one heads of families; and there are more investigating. I have been blessed with the Spirit's power in presenting the word. My health has improved considerably; my faith in the latter day work is being confirmed; I am still fighting that same old fellow, Haws, and thank the Lord I can see that I am getting a little the better of him in some respects, and this encourages me to renew the fight. Ever praying for the welfare and redemption of Zion,

Your brother in the gospel,

A. HAWS.

GRAHAM, Texas, July 23d.

Dear Herald:—We are in the midst of a famine or drouth, which has caused an entire failure in crops of every kind; and when I say failure, I mean what I say. We had rain the 9th of April; no more to do any good until yesterday, (July 22d), we had a very nice little shower, too late to do any kind of grain good. Scarcely any one made any wheat, and I am satisfied there will not be one hundred bushels of corn raised in the whole county. People in this country are all poor. They made splendid crops last year, but being in debt they were compelled to sell all their grain, except scarcely enough to do them until harvest, which did not come, and the consequence is, that hundreds of people have gone to other parts, and hundreds can't get away that are actually on the verge of starvation. What we are all to do, God only knows. We can only trust him for help to come from some source. I have been afflicted so that I could not do a day's work this year, having to depend on my two little boys to make a crop. The little fellows have worked manfully, and cultivated the crop well, but made nothing. So we will have nothing to live upon and no money to buy anything with. For one time in life I have run aground, and I can only look to the Giver of all good gifts; but people say he is gone on a visit and don't care anything about us. I have never lost confidence in him since I have been a Saint, and though he allow me and my family to starve, yet will I trust him. Our country is not the only sufferer; there are eighteen others as bad as Young. This is a sad picture of things but it is an honest statement, and if we don't get help, and that soon, we are all bound to suffer. Hoping, dear Herald, you may live to preach to the Saints, I bid you adieu.

Editor Herald:—In your issue of July 17th, pages 441 and 442, is a reprint of a part of an article from the Expositor by H. P. Brown, touching the rise of the Reorganization. The original essay as published in the Expositor I have not seen. Having a few items of history in my possession I concluded to give them to the public; provided you will permit these lines to appear in your paper. But first, I wish to say that it is clearly seen in said article by H. P. Brown, that the golden time had come for him to put in his great claim of being guided and inspired by the right spirit, and that my father was taught and inspired by the teaching and visions of H. P. Brown. You will please excuse me, Bro. Brown; for although my father, like the rest of us erred, I apprehend he was not quite so foolish as to be guided by your visions; but he was somewhat acquainted with the Doctrine and Covenants, and having fair education and intelligence could well understand the principle of lineal rights from that book. Bro. Brown invites especial attention to his vision of a "gold chain." It, with other visions, etc., proves nothing. How do you account for the visions, spiritual manifestations, powers, healings, etc., etc., that are testified of as being in almost every faction of Mormonism; and also various Christian Churches, and a host of signs and wonders in Spiritualism? When I read Elder Brown's essay, and his appeal to his vision, I could not help thinking of Isaiah, 8:19, 20; for, let it be understood, that H. P. Brown was in Strangism at the time he had this vision of the "gold chain." Who, (except himself possibly) could accept it as a guide? More than this, a very few years after the date given by him of this vision, and during the early work of the "New Organization." Who was it that went from Yellowstone to Mineral Point, Wisconsin, and upon returning, was a "writing medium" and undertook to perform some of his writing antics in my father's house, and my father forbade him? H. P. Brown. I would not refer to this, as I very much dislike to be personal, but Elder Brown invites special attention to his vision; and he must learn, though he be far older than me, that a man's record must be spotless in spiritual phenomenon at least, before his vision should be accepted as a rule of faith and practice. Furthermore, he carries the idea, that the calling of "Little Joseph," at Yellowstone, was not corrected with the "Rock Shaft" manifestations. Be it understood that in June last I heard a letter read from Bro. J. W. Briggs, in which he bears testimony that the same manifestations sent the Elders to Joseph. And I had in my possession then, and have now, a letter from sister Elizabeth Bowser (formerly Cline, and one of the older ones, I believe about the third daughter) written last May 25th, in the which she in commenting upon our withdrawal from the church and the history of the past says: "The spirit of the Rock Shaft, and the same manifestation sent those Elders to wake up the prophet Joseph to a sense of his duty." Here now, without collusion, was corroborating testimony, coming from different quarters, and it was fair to conclude should be accepted as the truth. After reading in the Herald H. P. Brown's essay, I wrote to Sr. Bowser asking for information with regard to her mother's revelation, referred to by Bro. Brown in Herald, also sent her. She wrote me under date of July 14th and says: "We were Strangites, all of us; that is, those of the Saints living at Zarahemla at this time, and our faith was being quite shaken in the prophet Strang, on account of some things being taught by him. Your father came to our house, and wanted us to make this a subject of prayer. Talked of lineal descent, etc., etc. Talk about mother's not knowing anything about there being a young Joseph" (as Elder Brown says she did not; see Herald page 442, near top of second column) "now this was a common conversation concerning Joseph's successor, and whose right it was, and we all knew this, both young and old, and as fast as they talked Strang down they talked Smith up."

Now touching the so-called revelation of old Sr. Cline, it appears by her daughter's further testimony to have been only a "dream," and this after father had talked "lineal descent" and they all had more or less "talked Strang down and Joseph up," (which no doubt was the least of the two evils). I defy any one to show from New Testament "lineal descent" of the priesthood called Melchisedec. Christ "hath an unchangeable priesthood," and this was after the order of Melchisedec, and "passeth not from one to another." No doubt some good manifestations were had at Yellowstone, but I think it is evident to an unbiased mind, that the foundation stones upon which they sought to build at that time, as viewed from the manifestations had, partook of the color of which the place was called "Yellowstone." But be it remembered, that pioneer members testify that H. P. Brown had nothing to do with the Reorganization, except to oppose it until the lineal heir came; and evidently from the stand-point of Christianity this lineal heirship is one of the yellow streaks together with a Moses man mouth piece.

Yours for truth,

E. H. GURLEY.

Editors Herald:—On July 31st, I told some of my neighbors and friends, that if they would come to my house on Sunday evening, August first, I would preach to them. I supposed a few would come out of course, but to my surprise when dark came the house was full, and many were in the yard out doors. We gave them the best we had. One man and his lady stayed quite a while after meeting and said he was very much surprised to hear what he did; he did not think I could preach; said "its no use to talk, you can't tell what is in a man by looking at him. One old lady gave us the hand when she left. We think it possible that there is some show for a good work here yet; if they did kick at Bro. Lambert and me last winter. We are quite anxious for a branch here; and we want you all to pray for us that the Lord will open up the work here in power and demonstration of his Spirit.

To the Editorial Staff, and the worthy patrons, saluting:—A male person that was born the day I was twenty-one could celebrate his anniversary majority to-day. If I ever double up to four score and four I will do quite well; but whether many or few days are added I hope to abide, rejoice and do good. The weather is intensely and alarmingly dry, all through this section, but the corn looks fairly well. The north-west breeze rustles amid waving boughs, while clouds of dust arise from whirling vehicles. I am jotting down these thoughts in the former home of the late brother Edward and sister Nancy Larky, of life-long usefulness, and blessed memory. They passed away almost simultaneously, and repose adjacent to each other on the "warm hill side." A Corinthian shaft of alabaster whiteness marks their lowly bed, while sentinel columns are near. I came into this vicinity three weeks since, at the earnest solicitation of Sr. Shine, of Davenport. Her sons, Alfred and William Hurst, had each a child to bless, although neither belongs to the church as yet; but they and wives are favorable.

I delivered ten discourses, first and last, in Hurstville Grove, to large and sometimes immense concourses; and also spoke five times in the city. I am and have been holding forth at Nashville, seven miles west of the place, as above dated. Yesterday, in the afternoon, an orderly assembly convened on the river side, while we happily led Peter Larkey, and Dora his consort into the swift, clear sparkling fountain of Maquoketa River. I first thought to write to Ruby, Bozarth, Roth, Etzenhouser, Larew, Lambert, etc., about the happy affair and the more I thought the more came into my mind. Pete and Dore, as they are familiarly called are widely known all over the district, as elsewhere, and especially by the traveling eldership. They have been drilled by the illustrious dead; and inspired by the living God to take firm hold of the great latter day work. Brother Peter can not tell what an infernal rascal he used to be, Sam Jones like, because he was always a chaste, temperate, moral, model man, who tended strictly to his own business. Sr. Eliza and Dora talked about me, and wished I would come just before I came, and while I was near by, but my whereabouts was then all unknown to them. It has been said, "If you talk about the angels you will presently hear their wings flutter," but my big, fat body was transported on Nahum's fiery chariot.

My candid opinion is that our ministry ought to work twelve months in a year, or go lean and hungry. We can not afford to rusticate during excessive heat, or extreme cold, as do the heathen priests of Mystery Babylon; for people think, act and die all seasons of the year. If the toiler regards the clouds he can not reap, hence I have baptized six others in Rock Island since "the busy season began." I have not even heard from our missionary in charge since he went home, in April; and now I am in Bro. Joseph Lambert's jurisdiction. Sectarianism is fast waning and ebbing away in purity, prestige and power, for low lawn festivals, and the pious card table, and the fascinating dance, and an endless round of revelry draw the outside element and the giddy votaries together. Bands, and rings, and bundles in the forms of railroad pools, merchants unions, insurance companies, Free Masons; labor organizations, etc., etc., are all arrayed against each other and for the devil. The priesthood must stand on this troubled sea and say "peace be still." Let them work, with might and main, while the day lasts, and prove the world. Great penetration of mind, and refined decision are given to the studious watchman; while laggards, faultfinders and grumblers play out. May God Almighty bless the honest hearted, move the cause of Zion, confirm His word and work and redeem the contrite ones.

KIRTLAND, Ohio, August 3d.

Bro. Joseph Smith:—Our district conference held at Wheeling, W. Va., on the 24th ult., was said to be one of the best ever held in the district. E. C. Briggs was present and preached some very excellent sermons, which were very highly appreciated by the Saints and friends. I am sure that the spirit of his high and holy calling was upon him; for his entire labors while with us were blest by that spirit that evinced to all the Saints that he was one of God's true servants. Would to God that we had 1000 such noble men in the ministry. Come again Bro. Briggs, when you can, we shall be glad to see you. I baptized two at New Philadelphia, Ohio, not long since; also two at Wheeling on the 25th of July. All the Saints here are enjoying excellent health. Bro. E. L. Kelley is at home at present. Expect W. H. soon. I leave the latter part of this week, anticipate to be gone for six or eight weeks. My permanent address is Kirtland, Lake Co., Ohio, Box 42. Will the Saints who promised the writer that they would aid with their means to purchase a tomb stone for Bro. and Sr. Ells, please send the same immediately to the above address and oblige.

Yours in gospel bonds,

G. T. GRIFFITHS.

BENWOOD, West Va., July 30th.

Dear Herald:—We had our conference the 24th and 25th, and had an enjoyable time. Bro. E. C. Briggs was with us and preached twice, which was very strengthening. Our social meeting was also good. Bro. Griffiths, and Bro. Reese, from Pittsburg, presiding. Before meeting Bro. Griffiths baptized two. My desire is to live faithful and to overcome every failing and do the will of the Lord. I have been united with the work only three years, and it has been sweet to my soul. Many testimonies have I received of its truthfulness. Saints should remember the law of tithing, for it is grand. I never understood it till last year when Bro. E. L. Kelley was here; since then I have had better luck than ever, and when I have thought over the blessings I have received, I have realized the passage in Malachi where it reads about the law of tithing and offering: Prove me now, herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven and pour you out a blessing that there shall not be room enough to receive it." When I think of the blessings of the Lord it don't seem to me natural: it seems like I have passed through a dream; I can hardly realize it. It seems to me that the language of the Lord used here, ought to be engraven on every Latter Day Saint's heart. Just read the third chapter of Malachi; Saints need not be in the dark, for we have the truth; then let us abide in it. Our branch is getting along splendidly, and our conference was good. Pittsburg was well represented at the Wheeling City branch.

PICTURED ROCKS.

THE famous pictured rocks on the Evansville pike, Virginia, have been a source of wonder and speculation for more than a century, and have attracted much attention among the learned men of this country and Europe. The cliff upon which these drawings exist is of considerable size and within a short distance of the highways above mentioned. The rock is a white sandstone which wears little from exposure to the weather, and upon its smooth surface are delineated the outlines of at least fifty species of animals, birds, reptiles, and fish, embracing in the number panthers, deer, buffalo, otters, beavers, wildcats, foxes, wolves, raccoons, opossums, bears, elk, crows, eagles, turkeys, eels, various sorts of fish, large and small snakes, etc. In the midst of this silent menagerie of the specimens of the animal kingdom is the full length outline of a female form beautiful and perfect in every respect. Interspersed among the drawings of animals, etc., are imitations of the footprints of each sort, the whole space occupied being 150 feet long by 50 wide. To what race the artist belonged, or what his purpose was in making these rude portraits must ever remain a mystery, but the work was evidently done ages ago.

TIME.

One by one the years go by,
Days, weeks, and months do fade
Merged into night of the eternal past;
A stupendous record of these is made
By which man's destiny is cast.
Could men recall the days misspent,
And mould them unto useful time
So to correct the follies of misguided zeal,
How much of sorrow and sad repine
To avert would heaven reveal?
'Tis not so; the die is cast,
Nor moments gone can we recall;
The fleeting years relentless march along.
Our tears can not time's face appal.
Nor will he hear the giddy throng.
Sad refrain, "It might have been,
Had I improved my time on earth;
Death's icy hand could not have chilled my hope,
Nor robbed me of the second birth;
Alas! with death's embrace I can not cope."
Awake my soul, while life still lasts,
And gird thee on Christ's armor bright;
Nor wait until death's summons shall have come,
And pall and bier and dirge shall mark thy flight,
Ere God and Christ and love have made with thee a home.

SERMON BY ELDER W. H. KELLEY, OF KIRTLAND, OHIO.

Delivered at the Saints' Chapel, Lamoni, Iowa,
April 11th, 1886.

[Reported for the Herald and prepared by the Editor].

We find the following reading in the fifty-third chapter of the book of Isaiah:

"Who hath believed our report? and to whom is the arm of the Lord revealed? For he shall grow up before him as a tender plant, and as a root out of a dry ground: he hath no form nor comeliness; and when we shall see him, there is no beauty that we should desire him. He is despised and rejected of men; a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief: and we hid as it were our faces from him; he was despised, and we esteemed him not. Surely he hath borne our griefs, and carried our sorrows; yet we did esteem him stricken, smitten of God, and afflicted. But he was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities: the chastisement of our peace was upon him; and with his stripes we are healed. All we like sheep have gone astray; we have turned every one to his own way; and the Lord hath laid on him the iniquity of us all. He was oppressed, and he was afflicted, yet he opened not his mouth: he is brought as a lamb to the slaughter, and as a sheep before her shearers is dumb, so he opened not his mouth. He was taken from prison and from judgment: and who shall declare his generation? for he was cut off out of the land of the living: for the transgression of my people was he stricken. And he made his grave with the wicked, and with the rich in his death; because he had done no violence, neither was any deceit in his mouth."

We have read to the close of the ninth verse of this chapter. In the second letter and first chapter of the apostle Peter, commencing at the twelfth verse we read as follows:

"Wherefore I will not be negligent to put you always in remembrance of these things, though ye know them, and be established in the present truth. Yea I think it meet, as long as I am in this tabernacle, to stir you up by putting you in remembrance; knowing that shortly I must put off this my tabernacle, even as our Lord Jesus Christ hath showed me. Moreover I will endeavor that ye may be able after my decease to have these things always in remembrance. For we have not followed cunningly devised fables, when we made known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, but were eye witnesses of his majesty."

The sixteenth verse of this first chapter of the second epistle of Peter reads:

"We have not followed cunningly devised fables."

There is no one thing that enters into religious thought, that people demand as an essential element in that belief, more than that it is true, that it is right; and the apostle Peter in this last letter addressed to the believers, said he thought it needful to remind them that they had not followed cunningly devised fables. The thought as we gather from the reading, is with reference to the mission of Christ into the world in that age. That was the burden of the mission of Peter and his associates to present to the world the evidence that Christ had indeed come. That this character born in the land of Palestine, and that grew up among the Jewish people, and was so well known among them, was indeed the Christ. Notwithstanding the disposition to worship was found everywhere, the desire to worship was not only among the Jews but the rest of mankind, yet they were divided with reference to their methods of worship then as now. And it would seem from the history that we have, that it was just as difficult to get the people to believe in the mission of the Savior then, as it is in this age of the world to get those who have not been traditionated to receive him, to believe indeed that he was the Christ, or to get people to believe and receive as religious truth something that they have not been familiar with in the early experiences of life. Now in this age of the world we have some peculiar characteristics in human society, different from what we find in that age to any great extent among the worshipping class of people; and that is a class inclined to disbelieve not only in the mission of Jesus Christ in the world, but in the existence of God also; so that men's faith in the Creator of all things is being examined, and the evidences upon which they base such faith are being questioned; the evidences upon which they base their belief in Christ that has come are being questioned, and individuals deny that he has come, or that he will come again. And by reason of this research, this investigation, this controversy a great many people's faith grows cold, or weakens; and were it not for their early experiences perhaps, they would scarcely have faith and belief in the existence of God and the mission of Jesus Christ into the world. Their experiences have been such. A great many ministers have withdrawn from the ministerial associations, and have done so by reason of having become unsettled in their religious belief, or having questioned whether the evidence were strong enough to maintain a belief in the existence of God and the mission of Christ. It took a good deal in the times that the apostles whom Christ selected to represent his cause among men. I say it took a great deal of care and labor and sacrifices, and they passed through a great deal in order to present the truth of the gospel to the world. It was not an easy position then. Stripes and difficulties met them in the way wherever they went. The people did not desire to hear their message. They did not desire to become familiar with it. The people demanded the evidences at the hands of these messengers that they were in possession of in order to sustain their mission or their faith; so that we have this declaration, that in a certain place they entertained a belief in the Scriptures, because they searched the Scriptures daily to see whether these things were so. Then there was evidently among that class, individuals who recognized the Scriptures as containing the will of God to man. Now our faith in Christ as a matter of religious belief is in proportion to the evidences adduced in order to sustain that belief; and when we begin to examine the evidences upon which our faith rests, if we find by strict scrutiny that they are weak, our faith becomes weak in proportion. Such was the condition or nature of men in the days of the Savior, and in the time when Peter ministered among the people; so that he thought it was necessary to remind them after long years of experience to refresh their minds, that they had not followed cunningly devised fables, in order that they might be settled in their minds; that every man might be settled in his mind, and ready to go on, and make the different sacrifices needful in order to accomplish the purposes for which they had set out in the Christian race. They did not differ in that particular from the world to-day, and from you and me.

In the chapter which I read in your hearing to-night, it is specifically stated, as we believe under the direction of the Spirit of truth which came down from God, we find clearly delineated, almost as clearly presented, the peculiar characteristics of our Savior as a minister, as we find narrated in the gospels of those individuals associated with him during his ministry here; and this account was written by an individual who lived some six or seven hundred years or more, previous to his coming. He brought out the peculiar characteristics of his life, the nature of his mission among men. Now we know that there is nothing in mankind, we have learned this by our experience, that will enable them to forecast the life and character and the mission of one of their fellow men in the world by the wisdom within themselves. Hence we see why it was that the apostle Peter said that it was necessary for the people in his day to take heed, give consideration to the prophecies that had gone before. "We have a more sure word of prophecy, whereunto ye do well that ye take heed," meaning them that had received the gospel under the ministration of those men who were divinely inspired; that they had something to support their faith, something to strengthen their faith, and he refers them to the prophecies of the past. When a man speaks in the name of the Lord, and it follow and come to pass, no man believes it was otherwise than the Lord made it; unless the circumstances were such that the individual was enabled to forecast it by reason of the circumstances surrounding it, and by these surroundings it was suggested to his mind. Should you and I desire to grow skeptical here to-night, and disbelieve in the existence of a God, that he had sent a message to the world of mankind for their benefit, there is not an individual in this audience that could answer the claims of this fifty-third chapter of Isaiah. It has a demand upon the consideration of mankind. We could show no philosophy that would reach the case; and there is something in the general make-up of mankind that concedes it is right; that it is consistent and reasonable; that it addresses itself to the intellect and the conscience of the individual, or in the very nature of things admits that it is right, or rather a man can not help himself. He may deny it for effect's sake upon somebody else, but in his heart and in his very being he is impressed that it is right, that it is true. It was necessary then that the saints of old be kept constantly in mind that their faith was based upon facts, that it was the truth, that God had authorized it, and if they could be convinced that it was not true, then it would be right to break away and go elsewhere. The full sense of the reading probably is, that it is something to base a faith and hope upon, something that would give comfort and salvation after their earth experiences here. And when the Savior came fulfilling this prophecy and other prophecies here, he kept constantly urging before the attention of the people whom he ministered before, that he came in fulfillment of them, and that they spake of him. "Moses wrote of me. If you had believed Moses and the prophets ye had believed in me. He wrote of me." He insisted that this was true according to their record and their claims. You and I have the privilege of taking up these histories and examining them; and when we make an examination we find this is true. He made the claim before the people that he was the messenger and exponent of that law conceived in the divine mind for the salvation of men; that he came to reveal it, to make it plain to them, and it was made plain to them, at least to many of them. When he was administering to them, they had not the disposition to become educated into these things which he had to present to them. They manifested that peculiarity that belongs to mankind, to hear anything and everything that would come in harmony with their views and their ideas; but anything that would not sustain their preconceived notions, their peculiar views, they were willing to reject. They had not educated themselves into the habit and manner of proving all things and holding fast to that which is good.

God had created man and placed him in this world, and one of the purposes of this creation was that he should develop intellectually, spiritually and morally; and in order to do this he must improve every opportunity to gain light and knowledge, and get an understanding of things so far as he may be able to comprehend, and if he refused to do that he would necessarily fall short of attaining to that plane of life that he would otherwise attain unto.

We heard something this forenoon, or afternoon, or both, something about everything being governed by law, sustained by law. This character presented here in the prophecies, and that we now allude to, came in the interest of mankind. Our scars were laid upon him, by his stripes we are healed. He proposed to save the race. Then the great question naturally comes to the mind of man, how does he propose to save them? He had a disposition upon his part to do it. When he undertook to save them they resisted his invitation; so that we have that declaration made by him after some of his ministerial labor, "You will not come unto me that ye might have life." This suggests to my mind that the Savior of the world could no more bind outside of given law, than any individual could as a minister unto this world; that he came to bind by the powers that were given unto him of his Father in the redemption of the human family. Hence he says, "I came not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me. He gave me commandment what I should say and what I should speak." If men would not enter into that commandment, embrace that commandment, but stood on the outside, it was impossible for the Savior to reach them in this world. If this was not true, why the declaration made, "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, how oft would I have gathered thee as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, but ye would not." How in striking contrast is that idea with the prevalent one we have in the world to-day, that all an individual has to do in order to enter into life, be saved, is simply to recognize the fact that Christ came into the world to save sinners.

"Here Lord, I give myself away, Tis all that I can do."

He told them in view of the law which he came to teach, and of the nature and character of men in the world, "It is not every one that saith unto me Lord, Lord, that shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my father who is in heaven." He came to reveal his will. If an individual standing outside of that law which he came to represent does not embrace that law, he is outside of the pale of that redemption made by Christ. Then we can understand what was meant by the angel, "I bring you glad tidings of great joy which is to be to all people." Wherever the sons of men dwelt upon the earth, from the continents to the islands of the sea, this message was to do good. Outside of this message there is no absolute promise of an inheritance with the Saints. The thought then is presented that if the people of that day and that time paid attention to their best interests and their highest good, they would give particular attention to the teachings of this great character that was ready to minister to them. But they had no ears to hear, and because they would not embrace the truth, they necessarily stood condemned. Their condemnation was in this fact. "This is your condemnation, that light has entered into the world, and men love darkness rather than light." This shows that individuals ought never to allow themselves to be so biased as not to be willing to recognize any fact come from wherever it may, and wherever they may be in the world; but give it consideration, and let it have place in their affections because it is right.

Belief in the existence of God, and that he has sent his Son into the world to save the world, was not understood as thoroughly then perhaps as it is now; at least the majority of the people would not listen to the Savior. This is a strange feature in the work of the Savior of the world, that his influence was no greater over the minds of men than it was, when it is considered that in him dwelt all the fulness of the God-head bodily. He was a central figure too. Everywhere he went his majesty and power are made to appear, the more to call attention to what he had to say. But the people found a way not to believe, to reject and to disown; and by and by grew so bad, that they were willing to unite in the cry, "Let his blood be upon us and our children."

During his ministry he seemed to teach in a simple way. Let me call your attention to one short sentence, found I believe, in the eighteenth of Matthew, sixteenth or eighteenth. "Upon this rock I will build my church." He came here to effect, or not only to present principles by which individuals might work out their salvation by building up a character, but he proposed to build a church. He commenced to preach round about Jerusalem and other places, "Repent for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." By and by a little few was gathered out. Then he takes out of this little few that was gathered out, and commences to organize a society. He began to put responsibility upon certain individuals that they might help him in this ministerial work, so that many might be enabled to do more than the few. And while he sojourned among men here he called quite a number to his assistance and put this responsibility upon them, to say "Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." And this organization continued right along during his mission in the world, and afterwards, until the same has been completed. We have it set out in other places, that apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors and teachers were set in the church for the work of the ministry. A class of individuals selected by the Almighty to go out into the world, and represent the interests of this organization, the interests that Christ came to the world to present, the glad tidings of great joy. Wherever men became convinced that God rules above, and that he had sent his Son into the world to save the world, and believed the gospel, they gathered with them a few; and by and by we find a great multitude at Jerusalem, down in Asia, and in other parts of the world, that were denominated Christians. We find the Christian churches all belonging to one body, to one association, one great association. They were not many because there were persons down at Laodicea and at Ephesus, and so on; but they were all one body, all one church. In order to see this, we have but to follow out the history of the ministry of Paul, and Peter and so forth. Paul when in the ministry, and a controversy arose, a difference of opinion down among these churches that in their ministerial labors they were not prepared to settle, he could not settle these questions in any one of these churches at Ephesus or Laodicea, because the great body of people east and west and north and south that had embraced the Christian religion had an interest in them; so they went up to Jerusalem, and in that representation gathered there of delegates these questions were brought up and canvassed because the whole body was affected. This body had a distinction from every other body of people in the world. It could not be united with any Jewish faction; it could not be dove-tailed on to the Pharisal religion, nor on to that of the Sadducees. It could not be united with any other belief that was in existence among the Jews at that time. It could not unite with the heathens any more than you could unite oil with water; it stood alone, having Christ as its head, and with the inspiration that came from him. All that gathered with that, gathered right; all that gathered from it, went out any other way, as we believe, went in the wrong.

So far as we have the history of those times, they preached conversion and the building up of this church organization; and one of the purposes of this organization was the preparing of a people for the coming of the Savior; for they believed that he would come again. Peter reminded them of this fact in this admonition. He tells them, "Ye have not followed cunningly devised fables." It stimulated belief in them, that after their sojourn and conflicts in this life, that there would be a grand reunion on the other side. That Christ had just gone behind the veil; that the blessings and the light, and the inspiration attendant upon them here were but the evidence that he lives. And if he lived they should also live, and by and by he would come in his own time, and give to every man the reward of his works. Now if that thought can be substantiated, that this hope is not cunningly devised, then that greatest of all boons that can come to the human heart, that cheer and comfort demanded by every individual, to make him in his experiences and conflicts feel indeed that this world's experiences are not a loss to him; that after this conflict he may be privileged to join in that great reunion beyond; if Christ lives beyond the veil; if he came in the interests of humanity eighteen hundred years ago; that when our life in this world—which is simply for to-day or to-morrow—that when it is drawn to a close that does not end all, does not end our existence, that death does not end all, that we move along, and as we have to be governed by law here however much we may talk about liberty and freedom, there are a great many things that bind men. We are bound to each other in the family association, in the association as neighbors, and in our church association, and in our national association. There are a great many kinds of associations that we have to respect. Everything is governed and maintained by law here; and where there is no rule, no law, there seems to be no order. And if we are so governed here by right rule, we make progress according to our effort to have our works according to truth, according to that which is right, if we make progress in this regard, it stands to reason, that if we prepare ourselves for that great association by and by, there ought to be something to bring out and develop the moral character and the spiritual nature of man, to accomplish not only broad conceptions by the intellectual powers of what righteousness is, but the disposition upon our part to carry out the reality, to have a predominating interest in whatever is right, to manifest this in our lives, under whatever circumstances we are placed. We are then preparing for a higher degree of righteousness, whether in this world or in any other world. We take it then, that when the question is settled that Christ came into the world and fulfilled these promises, that he came down from the world above and we are to believe that declaration that "In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth," it is a fact; and that there are beings in the realms above, as truly and as literally and really as there are beings in this world. When we pass out of this world we pass out with the very character we make for ourselves; and if we can not rise any higher in that realm than we have risen here by a conception of truth and right and our compliance therewith, having been strengthened, encouraged, and developed by the influence of some power that lives, we can not rise at all. This was contemplated in the message; this was the intention of the gospel of Christ. But men found means to reject this, not take hold of it, not embrace it and believe that the power and effect was to benefit mankind. So in this organization, in this institution, men had to come into contact therewith or they could not reap the benefit of the same. Now in this first administration it was said, "Repent for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." In the preparing of an element to enter into this association, they had to get ready. It was conceded that they were not ready, not prepared, hence the declaration, "Repent for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." By and by when that became so perfected, when it was properly authorized with the gifts and powers to go and present this truth to the world of mankind, and when men desired to enter into it, this peculiarity appeared, that they could only enter in by rule, by law, by order, by a proper order. To this your attention was called this afternoon, and we refresh it now. When this association was presented to the world by its proper officers just after the resurrection of the Savior, the people believed that the great captain had been crucified, and that he had risen again; they believed these things by reason of the exhortation and preaching upon that occasion, and they desired to become identified with this association. When they were convinced that Jesus was the Christ, they cried out, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" They believed that he was the Christ. They believed that there was a God before Peter preached that sermon. It is said that they were Jews; and wherever the Jews were they believed in the Bible, they believed in Moses and in Moses' law. They believed in the one that created the heavens and the earth. And now after this discourse they believed that Jesus was the Christ. They wanted to enter into this fellowship, this new association, this spiritual compact. Could they enter in any other way only by law, by rule. Peter gives them the rule. "Repent, and be baptized every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins." He had no right to give them any other rule; for the Savior said to them, "As my Father, sent me, so send I you." "I came not to do my will, but the will of him that sent me. He gave me commandment what I should say and what I should speak." "As he sent me so send I you." They were sent to observe all things whatsoever Christ had commanded them; and they had no right to go outside of that rule. He gave them commandment; hence when men asked what they should do to be saved, they said, "Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins." Now we are urging upon the attention of the people in this age and dispensation of the world, the consideration of this practice, of this duty and practice among the Christians in olden times. And why? Because the idea has become prevalent in the world that it is not necessary. That an individual can enter into proper spiritual relation with the great head of the church and ignore the rule, outside of the rule. To illustrate: Down here in York State where I was a while ago, a place where I had been intending to go some two or three years. A few weeks before I arrived there what is known in the country as the Salvation Army arrived with their drums and their musical instruments, and had all the people drummed together by the time I got there; and their theme was, all that they desired the people to do was to get religion and be saved, to be religious, to come and get religion, and get other sinners to come and join the army; and it was said that they had men and turned them loose to go and hunt the church of God; and when they had found it, or when they had made up their minds that they had found it, they were to identify themselves with it. They were not sent where it was; they only wanted them to be saved, to be religious. Did you ever hear tell of anything like this? In conversation with a certain party I asked him what was their belief. Did not have any special belief. All that they wanted was for the people to be saved, to get salvation. Now that is a good thought when it is first presented to the mind. We are not divided upon the exercising of faith in God and in the Savior Jesus Christ; but we are divided upon the duties of the law by which our salvation may be effected. They did not tell them on the day of Pentecost, Believe in the Savior and your sins shall be forgiven you; you come and do according to your own notion, any way you please, it does not make any difference, churches are nothing, the Savior does not regard what organization you belong to or anything of this kind. But Jesus says, "Upon this rock I will build my church." It is independent and distinct from every other in the world; and the thought occurs that if the church is in the world to-day, that too is distinct and disunited from everything else in the world. It wont do to say that all are the churches of God. There may be good in all of them. There were such in the Savior's time. But he says a house divided against itself can not stand, it must fall. If the church of God is divided against itself it must fall. If one part of the church of Christ in the world will not allow another part to come in and worship in its place dedicated to the service of God, and be united with it, there is a division, and all must go down because divided against itself.

As to this popular idea that seems to be held out in the world to-day, that we need to do nothing to be saved: We present Christian truth and get people to enter this spiritual union, this great spiritual compact, and by obedience to law. All we have to do with in the Judgment day, are our acts. For instance, it is said that by and by the Savior will come and sit upon the throne of his glory; and you and I and all mankind will be brought there to answer for our deeds. He says, "My words will judge you." The law he gave will judge you then. If we have kept that law, by that law we can plead our cause before the Judge. If we have not kept it it will stand against us. It will not do to have the thought in our minds that some people away out in the mountains same time ago had. There was a class of people who said that they had a right to make the law and interpret the law, and they said that they would go on and do certain things. Men who had a right to say what the law was and what it is, said that their practice was contrary to the law; and they issued warrants for those individuals in transgression, who did not live within the pale of the law, and they brought them before the judge, and being outside of the law, the law accused them and they were condemned, and some of them are now working out their time. Their view did not stand by them, they were judged by law. Jesus says, "I will not judge you in that day, but my words will judge you." We are to appear before the judgment seat of Christ. It was necessary then for men, if they wished to be saved by the salvation which Christ had prepared, to seek that salvation within the pale of the law. What is that? "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; and he that believeth not (and is not baptized) shall be damned." That is the declaration of the law. Now suppose we say that we do not intend to yield obedience to that law, we will deny it, we will accept simply the idea that we must believe in Christ, and we will not yield obedience to ordinances, in the judgment day, when Christ will sit upon his throne by and by, will the law plead our cause? It does not make any difference whether we are much learned in the law or little; whether we can really understand it in all its bearings or not. "My doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me; he gave me commandment what I should say and what I should speak." What did he say and speak? "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." It does not say anywhere from Genesis to Revelations, "He that believeth and is not baptized shall be saved." Hence you see, being in harmony with himself he makes the declaration, "It is not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, that shall enter the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father who is in heaven." Down there in York State when that people seemed to cry out, "Men and brethren what shall we do?" "Come right here and we will pray for you, and the Lord will forgive your sins; you just come and get religion, and you can join any church you please. All churches are the church. All we want is your salvation." Now we can see the necessity of the angel coming as signified in the revelations of Saint John, having the everlasting gospel to preach to the inhabitants of the earth, and to every nation, kindred, tongue and people, because something else was being preached that was leading men's minds away from the consideration of the real facts of the law. I thought of this when I was down there and those instruments playing had such a charm upon the minds of the people, that it was impossible to get them to give consideration to the facts of the law. Among other things the Savior said to the apostles, "Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you." This injunction was laid upon them after they believed in Christ. Now see how beautifully this is carried out by one of the ministers of that time. He was going to a certain place and the Spirit said to him, "Go and join yourself to a certain chariot that there was, and in that chariot sat a man reading the same passage of scripture that I have read in your hearing to-night, that 'he was led as a lamb to the slaughter, and he opened not his mouth, and in his humiliation his judgment was taken away, and who shall declare his generation?' He says to him, 'Is the prophet speaking of himself or some other man? He did not understand it.' He was a pious man, and had come up from Jerusalem to worship after the manner of the Jews, and was returning home, and peradventure he had a new Bible, and being very much encouraged from his worship at the appointed place, he was perusing it 'Understandest thou what thou readest,' says this man of God. 'How can I understand except some man guide me.'" I do not understand whether the prophet is speaking of himself or some other man. Philip commenced at the same scripture, he took a text, he commenced at the same scripture and preached unto him Jesus. Then he knew about Jesus, knew about his life, his character, the object of his mission into the world. That did not save him. He did not tell him that just as soon as he believed in Jesus that his sins were forgiven, make a prayer and tell him to go and join somebody else. It is necessary to bring this up in conversation and preaching, to get people to see and to think about it, this is the object of preaching to the people to get them to think and get the right and the truth. And just as soon as he had done preaching unto him Jesus; just like the people on Pentecost day when Peter got done preaching Christ to them he told them what to do, this man says, "Why here is water, what does hinder me from being baptized?" "If thou believest with all thine heart thou mayest." And he commanded the chariot to stand still. You remember what occurred, he was baptized and went on his way rejoicing. He entered into the compact through obedience to the law given by Christ through which he should enter the compact, the Christian association, so that we find this to have been the rule wherever this Christian administration was had in any place in the world in that age and dispensation.

Well thus we see here in the examination of our faith to-night, from what has been suggested by the thought, "we have not followed cunningly devised fables." In the examination of our faith we have not tried to build by fancy, or a freak of the imagination, but in strict harmony with the law as we find it contained in the scriptures of divine truth; and notwithstanding the people in olden times or in the time of our Savior and in the administration of the apostles, believed in God, and worked with the ministry and with the people, they worked in harmony with the law, and belief alone was not sufficient. Philip preached from the same scripture; showing indeed that the manifestations of the Spirit to the people then were not contrary to the law, were not contrary to what God had given, but in harmony with it, and with that statement made by John, "Whosoever transgresseth and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God; but whosoever abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath both the Father and the Son."

Now in regard to this revival that I was telling you about—you have heard of their claim that they make about spirit and spiritual manifestations. It is my privilege right here to-night to say whether I will be controlled by a spiritual influence that presents itself or not. We have a right to try these spirits for ourselves, and say when carried away with that influence, controlled by the influence of what those people believe to be the spirit. You can try it. But they had no means of trying it because they ignored the law. They have no means of trying them by anything recognized by them. When in the presentation of the gospel among men to-day, a spirit manifests itself, and it is claimed to be Spirit of God, the claim and its presentation must be in harmony with the law according to the declaration, "He that abideth not in the doctrine of Christ hath not God." Now the apostle Paul having a forecast of that condition of things in the world to which we refer to-night, says, "The time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine." They will reject, if you please, this true doctrine, and say that they do not want anything to do with it. If truth and right are essential elements in a religious body in order to give comfort and encouragement, it is necessary to make an examination of the facts given in the law. And if it be true, that "Whosoever abideth not in the doctrine of Christ hath not God," when men pretend to be governed and influenced by the Spirit of God on high, and ignore this rule, it ought to be satisfactory evidence to every one that they may mistake. They may be sincere, but seriously mistake. It is our privilege to call the attention of the people to belief in God and in the Savior, to repentance, baptism, laying on of hands, resurrection of the dead, and eternal judgment, as the principles of the doctrine of Christ. Strange that everybody and every society in the land does not recognize this. These are facts beautifully set out here. Clearly and beautifully set out here in the New Testament that an individual may take up and read, and it is a pleasure to find that they are commandments given by these inspired men of old.

We can now see the necessity for the revelation and the establishment of that institution known as the Church of God in this age of the world. We can see the evidence of it in the revelations of God. We have not time to show that there was a turning away from this order of things which existed in olden times; but we find an organization here, and it has been here for over fifty years, and what I desire to say—I see that I have deviated somewhat from my purpose when I set out—is that we, as in olden times have not followed cunningly devised fables, but the facts of the law as contained in the New Testament, and the facts of the law as contained in the Old Testament. The fact stands in all that is recognized by us as being inspired, going to support or sustain the thought that we have not followed cunningly devised fables; but that God in the reinstating of his work in this age and dispensation has acted in harmony with himself, in authorizing men to represent the same truth that was presented to the people in olden times, and to revive in the minds of the people the thought that the law that governed in ancient times should govern now; and if they are to be saved they must be saved by living within the pale of that law that saved men in olden times, and prepared them for the joy and peace of God's presence here, and the reward to be given in the great hereafter. What the world wants to-day is some tangible evidence, some means of support for the thought that underlies their faith, some evidence with reference to the reality of the world above. This claim comes to us in the thought that the gospel is instituted among the race of mankind, and that in the establishment of God's covenant in this state of existence that these facts shall be preached to every nation, kindred, tongue and people. "This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world as a witness." We make the same claim upon the attention of the people, make the same promises to men, so far as peace and comfort here are concerned, as were made in olden times; and the same assurances not only with reference to the life which is now, but the life which is to be revealed. The thought that we have in connection with this is that it is so difficult for individuals to believe in. You know in the Savior's time they objected to the chief character. They object to-day in some regards to the best evidence that we have that there is a material and real world beyond. There is something from the mouth of the same individual that I read from that I intended to say more about, but I have not time, but will just allude to it in this connection. It says that the time would come when the "Vision of all would come unto you as the words of a book which is sealed, which men deliver to one that is learned, saying, Read this I pray thee." Isaiah makes the prediction that something of this kind would take place in the history of the world. It is a prediction just like the prediction concerning the Savior that is made in the fifty-third chapter of Isaiah's prophecies; it was not to be fulfilled until long after its utterance. It is addressed to our notice, and the claim is made by witnesses that have been tried and tested, and that are as good as any that have ever testified, that they saw with their eyes, and heard with their ears the facts of this prophecy fulfilled as declared by a being who descended from the midst of the angelic hosts above, who had this material thing. This being came before men and handled it with his hands and when through with it went back to the realms from which he came. Now it is a fact that the angels of God came down and handled this material record. That realm then exists, it is a reality; and these men testify to the fact, testify to what they saw, and heard uttered, that it is true; and their testimony never has been successfully assailed any place or anywhere. No man we have seen has been able to successfully contradict it. It is the greatest boon to-day, so far as evidence is concerned, direct evidence, concerning this spiritual realm that it is a reality; that it is a fact that our remaining in this world is but short, and when we go out of this world we recognize each other beyond, we still belong to this great compact, this spiritual union, and that we will have experiences there as truly real as we have now. And this subject tells us that this spiritual being awaits us on the other side; tells us of Christ, of his mission in the world; and when the angel said that that mission was for all the world, all mankind, every kindred, it was a material manifestation, an absolute thing in our day, come down from heaven to fortify our faith. We have seen it tried in many regards and no one should object to this. For a good many years the people of this country have gathered around circles and places in order to get something from the realms above; they have inquired of their dear friends, and their grandmothers and their grandfathers because they were in doubt about the future. They were in doubt as to whether they would have an existence beyond the grave; and therefore it seems that this evidence comes in a time when it is most needed; and the evidence that clusters around us to-day is of such a character, that it fortifies our faith beyond question. That connected with the experiences of the Christian in this great spiritual compact makes all sure and confident that by and by we will be associated with the friends that have passed on; and we will be permitted to live in that great association with the moral character that we have made for ourselves here, and with nothing better. We will be just the kind of beings we have sought to be in our lives and in our experiences here.

I was struck forcibly by the conduct of our co-laborer, Josiah Ells. The old man before his death marked out and told them what to do, how to dress him and where to lay him. He says, "I am not afraid to die, it is all right. I am going home." Old soldier, just as confident, just as sure, just as positive, by reason of his faith and the evidences that clustered around his faith, that his hope was not built upon cunningly devised fables. No, when this life and his life work were drawing to a close, when the Master called him home, "I am not afraid to die, brother Griffiths. I am ready to go. My work is done." He awaited the future just as though it was but the work of to-morrow; because he knew that he had not followed cunningly devised fables. This is what we want. When we are sure of the facts of our faith, that they are true, then are we firm in our hope. Men are trying these things. I have been in a great many States since I met with you before, and they are trying them everywhere; and every now and then they try one of our representatives, and try to get hold of something that is feeble, something that they can show is not true, is not a fact with the skeptical world. They push on and try to get something of this kind to demonstrate that it is not true. But they have not been able to overcome a single fact yet. I want to encourage you with the great thought in this latter day work, we have not followed cunningly devised fables, but can sustain in an examination before the world the position we hold, and show that it is true, that it is all that we claim for it. If these things are true, my brethren, then it seems to me that our course so far as the future is concerned is clear. Every man and every woman has a work to do, a work that will do to think about, to stand still and look back upon, to the triumph of this great cause. It has triumphs, and the Saints associated in this great work have looked and may look for the salvation that is to come with confidence and faith, being built upon so sure a founation. Let us be encouraged, let us be comforted to go on, and work and labor in the interests of the work and in our own interests, that we may partake of his Spirit and assimilate his character, and enter into his rest. I thank you for your kind attention.

HETERODOX ORTHODOXY.

A LETTER TO R. G. INGERSOLL IN CHICAGO TRIBUNE.

I HAVE been a constant reader of your public utterances from the Cincinnati Convention to the present time. As most of them have been upon religious questions, I have diligently compared them with the teachings of the Bible and the current theories of existing orthodoxy, and in some instances found them eminently satisfactory. As a young man seeking after the truth, only unfettered by strong orthodox ties and predisposed to the theories of the school of free thought, I think I studied your lectures with a moderate degree of favor.

It is but proper to say that in connection with "Mistakes of Moses," "Skulls," "What Must I Do to Be Saved" ect., I read the Bible, Butler's "Analogy," "Horne's Introduction," Hopkins' "Evidences of Christianity," Wilford's "Problem of Human Life," Mr. Darwin's and Prof. Haechel's works on "Evolution" and "Spontaneous Generation," with several other effusions of less scholarship and merit, including Paine's "Age of Reason." The "replies" to your lectures by the clergy are most of them unworthy of special mention, more than they hoisted the orthodox flag, shouldered their shotguns, blazed away, and—proved themselves only a little less infidel than yourself.

I made up my mind on reading your first lecture that if the Bible doctrine was true, it was my privilege to know it; if there was no heaven, hell, devil, or future, it was my religious duty to investigate the subject and deny it.

After fully tracing the various channels of evidence, I was forced to the very unwelcome but candid conclusion that your lecture contained more self-negations, contradictions, and intellectual aberrations and absurdities, than were to be found in the Old and New Testaments together.

You are a public man lecturing upon subjects of vital interest to the public, and as such I deem it but just that I should publicly address you.

I THEREFORE INVITE YOUR ATTENTION TO THE FOLLOWING QUESTIONS AND CONCLUSIONS.

FIRST. If self-contradictions or interpolations are of sufficient force to invalidate the Bible claims to authenticity and authority, will not contradictions, slanders and falsehoods do the same for your lectures?

SECOND. If I were to deliver a lecture on "The Mistakes of Moses" in the City of Chicago, and in the close of that lecture assert that Christianity puts men in Hell whose characters are pure and others in Heaven who are polluted and mean, when the Bible teaches the exact opposite, what would you consider me? A libeler, a slanderer, a heartless caricaturist, or a pestiferous ass? which?

Would you not consider that I had failed to distinguish between infidel orthodoxy and unadulterated Christianity? Or would you define me as a ranting ignoramus unworthy of confidence? Suppose a church—or the church for that matter—teaches a doctrine directly adverse to that taught in the New Testament, would not that church, in point of fact, be infidel to the author or authors of the Christian Scriptures, and should not attack be made, if made at all, upon the church for apostasy instead of upon the system it stultifies?

THIRD. If the Author of Christianity teaches that "faith without works is dead, being alone," and that condemnation follows as a consequence of immoral and perverse dealing, and salvation is the ultimate of a just and merciful life, and in the face of this "the church" should teach salvation upon the basis of "faith only," would not such teachings and such church be infidel to Him and His doctrine? By critical investigation I found that the Christian Scriptures teach that faith, independent of a pure, upright life, will not save a solitary soul of the race, and that salvation comes only to the pure in heart, the just, the merciful, and the upright in life. On the other hand, I found much of the orthodoxy of the day based upon the doctrine of "faith alone." I also found that you were charging this "faith alone" theology upon the genius of Christianity, instead of branding the doctrine and its advocates as legitimate and approved members of the school of infidelity to Jesus Christ.

Men who preach that "faith only" is the correct doctrine of salvation, are not disciples of Christ, and the man who charges their aberrations upon Christianity itself is "orthodox" with them, ignorant of Gospel teaching and correct rules of logic or a willful perverter of the truth.

FOURTH. Can you show positive evidence in the New Testament of "infant damnation," baptismal regeneration, or Hell as the final habitation of a single man, woman, or child whose life has been or will be devoted to the happiness and welfare of others? I can not find such doctrine taught. To the contrary, I find salvation for unbaptized children and eternal life promised every soul of the race grand enough to fill life with sunshine and peace.

Are not the men, then, who teach these monstrous perversions as parts of the Christian religion, infidels and apostates?

FIFTH. During what is known as the "Dark Ages" wasn't the persecuted party always a professed follower of Christ—a member of some small church which held tenaciously to the New Testament as its only creed—and were not such persons tortured for antagonizing the doctrine of infant damnation or some other infamous innovation of the Church of Rome? And are not men who as individuals or churches, to-day or any time, past or future, preach for doctrines the commandments of men, and enforce them upon others, either by unjust legislation, forcible means, or instruments of torture, in open violation of the very spirit of the Christian Lawgiver?

SIXTH. In your lecture on "What Shall We Do to Be Saved," I find you in one paragraph subscribing to the doctrine, "If ye forgive men their trespasses," by pronouncing it "good." In another paragraph you declare your doctrine to be "No forgiveness. Eternal, inexorable justice." Now the question in tolerable English is, What am I to believe? Must I believe that you lied when you subscribed to the doctrine of forgiveness, or that you told the truth then and lied further on when you threw forgiveness aside and declared for eternal, inexorable justice? Or am I to believe that you lied both times, or that you did not lie at all, or yet you were so full of oratorical twaddle that you forgot the last time what you had said the first time, or that you really believed what you said both times, or just said it all for fun?

SEVENTH. Since Christ taught that bloodshed and murder belong to the catalogue of crimes, and that cruelty is inhuman and impious, was not John Calvin an infidel—denying Christianity in his practice—instead of a Christian believer when he caused the burning of Servetus?

EIGHTH. Were not the authors of the Spanish Inquisition enemies to Him who said, "My kingdom is not of this world, else would my servants fight," "Love your enemies, do good to them that hate you, despitefully use you, and speak all manner of evil against you." Every shriek, and groan, and wail that went up from the rack and stake was from the lips of men or women who became martyrs and suffered death rather than bow to the superstitious traditions and innovations of an apostate church; and did not this church do for the Bible and legitimate cause of Christ, with fire, and sword, and rack, and stake, and thumb-screw, that which you are seeking to do to-day by sarcasm, slander and abuse—viz.: supercede them with human productions and speculations?

Is not this about the only difference? They burned Bibles wrested from the hands of Christian believers and replaced them with catechisms and human enactments. You destroy confidence in the Bible by falsely attributing the corruptions of hypocritical priests to its teachings, and by ridiculing the Gospel through theories and dogmas for which it is in no way responsible.

I am not a defender of "the church." I believe it was infidel to the spirit, purpose, and teachings of the Author of Christianity, and that instead of loyalty to Him its whole history has been one of apostasy, and fraud. And further, that the liberty that you enjoy is the product of Christianity, and every vassal and instrument of intellectual slavery was born of the devil, with the express purpose of crushing freedom of thought and action; and more, it was the spirit of Christianity that turned the starless night of doubt and fear into the assurance of belief by the thrilling declaration, "Prove all things; hold fast that which is good." This was the watchword and the guiding-star of the early Christians, and it has been the Christian Gibraltar all through the ages of the past. Shakespeare, Newton, Leibnitz, Copernicus, Herschel, Milton, Morse, and all the inventors and discoverers who have enriched science, and art, and literature, persisted, toiled and wrote under its sheltering wings. Until the infidelity of the past, which in the shape of "the church," bullied, cursed, and denied thinkers and unfettered believers the right of life and liberty and the pursuit of happiness, was lashed into impotency by the ponderous strokes of mind and reason. Christianity said at the first, and it says to-day, "Prove all things and hold fast to the good." Infidelity by hypocrisy first entered the church, slowly gained power, and when strong enough, under the name of Christianity made unholy decrees, obedience to which would destroy Christian vitality, and then "capped the climax" with the edict that men must cease to think and investigate or be damned, and the probabilities are that most of them were damned that did. To-day when its old tactics of binding the consciences and minds of the populace to the leadership of the few, have been paralyzed it changes base, and sets up the rabble-inspiring howl of liberty.

Do you know, Mr. Ingersoll, that your vociferous twaddle upon "liberty and development" is worse than a misnomer? Do you know that theoretically your plea for liberty is one for that which no sensible man denies, and your denunciation of oppression is that for which no man pleads? Practically the liberty of the gospel of the infidelity of the day is social ostracism and coercion for the Christian clergy and community. Stephen Girard, an infidel of Philadelphia, founded the Girard College, and by the terms of the bequest there are a class of American citizens who can not enter its gates forever. Why? Are they outlaws? No. Are they covered with the leprosy of crime? No. Got the small-pox? No. What have they done? Why they have committed the heinous sin of preaching the Gospel of Jesus Christ. And besides this, it has been heralded through the public press, that America is to have one free town. Its name is Liberal, situated in the State of Missouri. The basis of its freedom is liberty from the clergy and churches. No church or minister of Christ is to be granted a house within its corporate limits. Adopt your familiar phrase, stop now and "Think of it." Yes, think of this in free America, and that too under the oratorical balderdash of "free thought" "liberty" and "humanity." Then, too, you will find a twang of this from your own lips in your "Mistakes of Moses," where you urge that not another dollar shall be given to the missionary cause or to erection of a Christian church. You will find the practical liberty of infidelity in homes in this free land, where infidel husbands made a hell on earth for their wives and children because of their relations to the church and Sabbath School. If this is not enough, turn your eyes over the history of France, find the "Goddess of Reason," a nude harlot—a fitting emblem—carried through the streets of Paris, the land filled with terror and human gore, the white scared face of the trembling child wailing over the rigid form of the Christian dead and none to hear the wailing cry; mothers torn from their homes, and husbands from their wives, all in the name of "Liberty." Do you want anything more? Go to the infidel school of free love and hear its denunciations of the sanctity of marriage, and its plea to make man and woman as the unmated savage beasts; go down still lower, to the foul and licentious literature that appeals to all the baser passions of passionate men, and hear the Liberal League plead for its transmission through the United States mails until it loses the name of decency and is compelled to disband.

Go to Voltaire and Diderot, the infidel apostles of France; contemplate one as a chronic adulterer, the other as having discarded a noble self-sacrificing wife for two successive mistresses. If this is not enough, come home once more to our own land, follow into the saloons and slums of any city the young profligates and hoodlums who denounce Christianity; and from decks of greasy cards, over glasses of bitter beer, and amid fumes of sickening smoke eulogize your lectures as the light of the nineteenth century.

I do not believe that you have seen this in its true light. If not, stop and consider—"think of it;" "think of it."

If the Bible is the foul and obscene book you would fain make men believe, how does it come that the most immoral, and grossly indecent people despise, abhor, and turn from it, while the moral, refined, and pious read and revere? and how does it come that the Christian church and clergy are in the front ranks of every moral reform, while free-thinkers, so far, have been the last to fall in line, and then only a few of the more noble of them at that? How does it come that nearly all drunkards, adulterers, murderers, thieves, liars, and harlots, when facing death, admit their lives as having been infidel to the teachings of the New Testament of Jesus Christ. And how does it come that the happiest homes are those where Christian gentleness dwells supreme? And how does it come that you invariably turn to the moral code of the Gospel when you utter anything substantial and good? Can you show a solitary moral truth you ever uttered that has not its life germ in the moral code framed by Christ? I will now, before I close, show you a Christian home. "Husbands, love your wives as Christ loved the church, and gave himself for it." "Wives, obey your husbands." (No trouble to obey such a husband as that. He'll do all the hard work himself.) "Children, obey your parents, for this is right." "Parents, provoke not your children to wrath." See if you "Be affectionate one toward another." The most thrillingly happy place this side the perfumed garden of God is such a home—happy laughter, happy song, happy childhood there; no fear of the Devil, and not the thinnest shadow of Hell.

In one of your lectures you declare it to be inhuman to be happy in Heaven, with others away off in Hell. If this is true, don't you think, honor bright, that it is almost criminal and brutish for you to be so boisterously happy with the pinched lips of wo, the thin fingers of famine, and the human misery that are every where so close around you unrelieved and unloved in this life?

Now, three more questions, and then I am done for the present.

You affirm that all our conceptions are dependent upon external objects; that we can only conceive of things as we see them in the external world. Can you tell me from what external object or objects comes our conception of truth?

You deny the immaculate conception of Christ. Does not the history of his life in its purity, perfection, and doctrines comport with the idea of immaculate conception? Can you explain the immaculate purity of his life upon any other hypothesis? Would you consider my remark specially personal if, after reading your lectures and comparing them with the Bible and evidences of Christianity, I should say that your dogma may be cream and butter for you at $500 per night, but for me at 50 cents a lecture it is mighty thinly-skimmed milk made into a tremendously poor quality of green cheese?

Miscellaneous.

ADVOCATE NOTICE.

The eighth volume of the Saints' Advocate closed with the June number, and with its issue the publication of the paper ceased. Severe illness compelled us to leave the Utah mission in April, and our recovery up to the present does not justify the hope of return there in the near future. We regret this for various reasons, but must submit to the inevitable.

A number of subscriptions have not yet expired, and all who have thus overpaid we request to notify the undersigned by card at once as to how they desire settlement—whether a return of the amount overpaid to them in cash or stamps, or whether by credit on the Herald. We desire to close the list immediately.

There are also a very large number who are delinquent, some for months and many for years. In order that we may settle promptly with those who have overpaid we must have prompt returns from those in arrears. To all such we earnestly offer a request that they immediately upon reading this notice, look at the yellow label on their June Advocate, learn the amount of their indebtedness, and forward the same to the address given below. We appeal for prompt action in this matter that our credit may be kept good with all.

The Advocate has not been published with a view to making money, but for benefit of benighted Israel in the west. It has done good. Hundreds of copies have been circulated gratis monthly. On account of our illness we have been dependent upon the kindness of the Herald editors in preparing the last three numbers, and our thanks are hereby tendered them for their generous help, also to all who have aided us in any way in our labor of love.

As the Advocate is the private property of the undersigned, he has taken the lists into his personal charge, from the basis of which to settle with all indebted to him, or to whom he is indebted. If, however, it will prove more convenient for any to send money to the Herald office, they can address David Dancer, Box 82, Lamoni, Iowa, as before; but to save the Herald office all the trouble we can, we advise that all business possible be done direct with the undersigned at Box 372, Independence, Jackson Co., Missouri.

NORTH-EAST MISSOURI.

To the Saints in the North-East Missouri District.—As I can not leave home at the present, owing to sickness, and the church needs means for the poor and other things, I take this method of asking you to try and help by obeying the Lord. Section 42, paragraph 8, Doc. and Cov.: "If thou lovest me thou shalt serve me and keep all my commandments; and, behold, thou wilt remember the poor and consecrate of thy properties for their support that which thou hast to impart unto them." Brethren, I hope that each one will do what he can, and God will bless you for the same. Hoping to hear from you soon, as I need help. Yours truly,

ROBERT THRUTCHLEY, Bishop's Agent.

MACON CITY, Macon Co., Mo., Box 474.

FREMONT.

Please give notice that the Fremont District conference that was set for August 15th, has been continued until October 16th, at Shenandoah. Respectfully yours,

W. C. MATTHEWS,

Secretary of Dist.

MARRIED.

SORENSEN—MOLDRUP.—At the residence of Bro. J. H. Hansen, Lamoni, Iowa, August 2d, 1886, by Elder Joseph Smith, Bro. Soren K. Sorenson, of Kearney county, Nebraska, and Sr. Trena M. Moldrup, of Lamoni, formerly of Plano, Illinois. The young people started for a home in Nebraska the same day, with the good wishes of the Saints to follow them.

DIED.

WILMOTT.—In Carson City, Nevada, April 24th, 1886, of pneumonia, Edward Wilmott, a native of England, aged 65 years.

WILMOTT.—In Fairview, New Mexico, April 22d, 1886, of rheumatism of the heart, Fanny Wilmott, wife of Edward Willmott. Bro. and Sr. Wilmott were faithful members of the church; he was a Teacher in it. They were baptized at Gravois, St. Louis Co., Missouri, February 23d, 1867, by Elder Wm. Hazzledine. Bro. Wilmott was born June 30th, 1821, Sr. Wilmott February 19th, 1827. The funeral was conducted from the Presbyterian Church, by its Pastor, at the request of Bro. Wilmott's son, April 29th, 1886. So pass the aged and the good.

DRISCOL.—At Fremont, Nebraska, July 24th, 1886, Sister Polly Driscoll, aged 63. Deceased at the time of her death was visiting her daughter, Sr. James Huff. On the 22d, while assisting in household duties, she complained of feeling ill; her daughter requested her to quit; she then attempted to walk across the floor, staggered and sank into a chair. It was a very warm day, and she was overcome with the heat; on the above date she quietly passed away. Her remains were conveyed to Springfield, Nebraska, near which place she was laid to rest, beside her husband. She was greatly loved by all who knew her. The great number that followed her remains to her resting place was a better eulogy than the most gifted orator could have given her. Funeral sermon by Edward Rannie, Jr., from Acts 26:6-8.

WILSON.—At Max, Dundy County, Nebraska, June 26th, 1886, Mary M., wife of Charles Wilson, aged 26 years and six months, lacking five days. Deceased was a daughter of the late Samuel Badham; was baptized at Galland's Grove, September 21st, 1877, by her brother, of J. R. Badham. She removed with her husband to Max in January last, but was brought home for interment in the Farm Creek Cemetery. She leaves two daughters, the youngest four weeks old. Funeral services by D. Hougas. Another faithful friend and sister gone to rest.

SHARPE.—At her home, near Eagleville, Missouri, after a lingering illness of fifteen months, Mrs. Elizabeth, wife of Mr. Preston Sharpe. Mrs. Sharpe was born at Pontefract, England, January 15th, 1830; was married to Preston Sharpe, February 4th, 1853; to whom she bore two sons and two daughters, all of whom survive her; at her death she was 56 years and 5 months old. She was a consistent and worthy member of the Christian Church, of eighteen years' experience. Funeral sermon by Elder James W. Gillen, assisted by Elder George Adams.

HOPKINS.—David Hopkins, Jr., son of Bro. David and Ann Hopkins, was born at Syracuse, Ohio, October 13th, 1864; was baptized by Elder T. W. Smith, March 24th, 1875; died June 20th, 1886. Bro. Hopkins was a young man of promise in business. At the time he was taken sick he was clerking in the store of the Winefried Coal Company, on Kanawha river, West Virginia; was taken sick coming from the funeral of a fellow clerk. He took the same fever that his partner had died (typhoid), and in a couple of days started home; when reaching home the fever was on him; he suffered much. He was the very picture of health; but when this monster, fever, took hold of him, he was buried in less than two weeks after he arrived home. The funeral was held in the Presbyterian Church, it being larger than the Saints' Church; notwithstanding this, a great many failed to get in. Mr. John W. Vaughan of the Presbyterian, and Thomas J. Lawrence of the Methodist church, conducted the singing. The sermon was preached from St. John 5:24, by Elder Thomas Matthews.

WALKER.—At Newton, Iowa, July 22d, 1886, George Walker; born in Heronthorp, Yorkshire, England, July 2d, 1817, being sixty-nine years and twenty days old at his death. He united with the first organization 1843; came to Newton, Iowa, in 1859, and subsequently united with the Reorganized Church; was an Elder of more than usual ability in expounding the first principles of the gospel, a clear, distinct, forcible speaker, at once impressing the hearer with a sense of his deep conviction of the truths he presented and of his unswerving faith in the cause he had espoused. He declared on his death-bed, "There is no fear." The brethren who knew him will feel that sense of regret which must accompany the loss of a tried and true Elder and Saint of God. He leaves an aged wife to mourn his loss. Funeral services by J. X. Davis. A consolation meeting to be held next Sunday afternoon, August 1st, at Saints' Hall.

BENNET.—At Bevier, Macon county, Missouri, August 23d, 1885, from billious fever, Bro. Edward Bennet, at the age of 73 years. Funeral service by Ephraim Rowlands. Bro. Bennet united with the Brighamite faction in Wales, in the year 1848 or 49, and continued with them a good man until the year 1863; when he was baptized into the Reorganized Church, at Nantyglo, Wales, by Elder John Watkins, Sen.; from which time he continued to be a faithful witness for the truth, until his death. He left a daughter and son-in-law to mourn his loss. May they emulate him in life, that when they die they may have a hope to meet him again at the resurrection of the just.

SHUMATE.—At Galland's Grove, Shelby Co., Iowa, June 12th, 1886, sister Julia M. Shumate. Deceased was born in Adams county, Illinois, November 4th, 1845, was baptized in April, 1866, by Wm. Anderson; was firm in the faith, and died in hope of coming forth in the resurrection of the just. Funeral services by Bro. I. Hansen.

SATTERFIELD.—Near Xenia, Sarpy county, Nebraska, July 28th, 1886, from the kick of a horse, Henry J., son of Mr. William and Sister

Rachel A. Satterfield. His suffering was only about twenty-four hours; he was 18 years, 7 months, and 28 days old at time of his departure; was an excellent young man and a faithful, dutiful son, favorable to the faith, but not obedient thereto. Funeral sermon by Robert M. Elvin, from Job 14:14, to a large gathering. Many followed the remains in the rain, four miles to the grave.

TENT NOTICE.

The committee appointed to procure a tent for the use of the Saints of the Little Sioux and Galland's Grove districts of the church, desire to say that the tent has been purchased, and is now ready for delivery. It is therefore requested that all who subscribed will as soon as convenient forward the amount of their subscription to either Bro. Wm. C. Cadwell, Logan, Harrison county, Iowa, or Bro. John Pett, Dow City, Crawford county, Iowa. If more convenient, the money may be handed to either one of the members of the committee in person. Let the brothers and sisters be prompt in this matter, so that there may be as little delay as possible in closing the matter up.

SAINTS' REUNION.

The Saints' Reunion, to be held at Wheeler's Grove, Pottawattamie county, Iowa, will commence on Saturday, September 4th, 1886, at ten a.m. Judging from our eminent success of last fall, together with the expectation of the presence of Bro. Joseph Smith and many other able speakers, the splendid accommodations, fine grove, boarding-house, &c., and the promise of many to attend who could not come last fall, we will have one of those real "old fashioned times," long to be remembered. The full particulars will be given further on. Come one and all, prepared to stay the whole nine days.

D. HOGAS, Pres. of Committee.

REUNION MEETING.

The committee appointed to make arrangements for the Re-union meeting have decided to hold it at Garner's Grove, in the Little Sioux district, commencing on Saturday, October 2d, 1886. Negotiations are in progress to complete the arrangements in detail, of which due notice will be given. This is the same place at which the meeting was held two years ago, but has been made more accessible, and improved in various ways, so that every thing considered, the committee think they have made the best selection that could have been made.

CORRECTION, PLEASE READ.

In answering the question "Can a Priest bless the bread and wine?" we inadvertently wrote, No. This was a mistake on our part, for which we crave our readers' pardon. We were burdened at the time, not like Martha with "much serving," but with many thoughts. The law provides that it is the Priest's duty to "preach, teach, expound, exhort and baptize, and administer the sacrament." We therefore answer, Yes; the Priest has the right in administering the sacrament, to bless the bread and wine. It is usual when any of the Elders are present for them to ask the blessing upon the emblems. When an Elder is in charge he may request the assistance of the Priest in the duties of the meeting. In the absence of the Elder, the Priest being in charge, he should perform the service of the occasion without any hesitancy.

On the 9th inst. we reached home, after an active preaching tour in Shelby, Harrison, and Lucas counties, Iowa, averaging nearly one meeting per day for the thirty days we were out. These meetings were well attended, and some of them very largely. Estimating the interest of the people by these gatherings in such times of hurry in business, short nights and hot weather, we are led to think prospects are very excellent for building up the Church of Christ in those regions. At Harlan, Persia, Leland's Grove, Union Grove, Little Sioux and Lucas, the Saints and friends manifest deep interest in the prosperity of the marvelous latter day work. Labor, wisely and persistently done there can not fail of much precious fruit, and we were glad indeed to find that the local ministry were determined to seek and make opportunities for preaching the gospel of the kingdom.

It was most gratifying to hear from many how God had in wonderful ways blessed them in healings, visions and many other heavenly manifestations, confirming their souls. One sister at Little Sioux relates how she was healed of chronic liver disease in 1861, which had sorely afflicted her for many years previous, and said that while the Elders' hands were yet upon her head, she felt the thrilling power of God's Spirit throughout her body, relieving her entirely, and that from that time till now she had been wholly free from that affliction. We stopped one night at Council Bluffs and attended a blackberry festival at the Saints' Chapel, given in the interest of the Sabbath School. The brothers and sisters and friends in charge, vied with each other in making the hours delightful to the houseful of Sabbath School children and the numerous guests in attendance. Bro. J. F. McDowell and his able helpers spared no effort to make the occasion enjoyable to all, and they seemed happy in making others happy.

The Spirit constrained us to stop off at Lucas, and it was not long before it was perceived best for us to tarry over the next four days, which we did, and had five profitable meetings. One man was baptized, and others there are almost persuaded to be. At no very distant day we shall, if the Lord so wills, seek to labor in these localities again.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

THERE is a liability for some to mistake the Reunion at Wheeler's Grove, September 4th, with the Annual Reunion at Garner, to convene October 2d. The latter is the continuation of the first Reunion, held after the Fall Conferences ceased. We have no desire to write what might prevent any one attending either, or both of the reunions, but we discover from the way the notices are worded that there is a possibility that some who might wish to be at the annual meeting mistaking the Wheeler's Grove meeting to be that one.

A brother writes us strongly protesting against the idea of the sacrament being withheld from persons using tobacco, as adopted by the brethren in Tahiti. The brother, we believe, does not himself use tobacco in any form, but he is of the opinion that to exclude persons from the fellowship of the sacrament because they are in the habit, is making the test too rigid; and that such a rule should be first agreed upon and enforced among the leading membership before being put into exclusive operation. We are decidedly opposed to the use of tobacco, but we feel no hesitancy in partaking of the emblems with a brother who uses it. If he receives the testimony that Jesus is the Christ, and the fellowship of the Spirit in token of peace, we can eat and drink with him; because if the Lord do not reject him, neither will we. We hope none will mistake us now and say that we are in favor of the use of tobacco, because we are not; we dislike it in any form, think its use damaging to mind and body, but we do not propose to put straight jackets on weak people, or impose burdens of restraint, when it may be avoided.

Bro. James Kent of Hutchinson, Colorado, was to preach at Brighton, twenty miles from Denver, August 7th, no preventing providence.

Bro. J. A. Burnham wrote from Independence, August 6th, that he believes that Zion, (so far as the land is concerned), is so far redeemed that any who may choose to come into the "regions round about," bringing righteousness and the spirit of correct living with them, may live in peace and prosper there. He reports that crops are injured by the drouth, but that provisions are as cheap as elsewhere, and are plenty.

Bro. E. C. Brand had created some excitement at Rolfe, Pocahontas county, and was going to Des Moines on the 10th to assist Bro. N. A. Baker in an effort there. May God bless them.

Bro. T. W. Chaburn is getting along well in securing the names of those serving in the war. We suggest that some one in each locality secure the names of those they can reach, at once and send them in to Bro. Chaburn.

Bro. W. E. Gooch writes from Oxford, Idaho, that Bro. R. J. Anthony had been there, and good had resulted; six were baptized and from the conditions surrounding the parties the influence must inevitably spread.

Bro. Olsen, of St. Louis, Mo., sends us a letter received from Bro. Mads Anderson, of Aalborg, Denmark, relating to the loss of Bro. Peter N. Brix. Bro. Brix had been unwell all winter, but was confined to his bed only five days, and fell asleep March first passing peacefully, and quietly away.

In September, from the 3d to the 10th the state fair of Iowa will be held at Des Moines, the capital of the state. The Premium List has been sent us by the secretary, and makes an excellent showing for the advancement of the industries in the state. The fare on the lines of railway running into Des Moines is "one fare for the round trip," which includes all points on Iowa lines. The roads named in the list are the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific; Chicago, Burlington & Quincy; Chicago & North-Western; Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul; Illinois Central; Des Moines & Ft. Dodge; Burlington, Cedar Rapids and Northern; Wabash, St. Louis &

Pacific; Wisconsin, Iowa & Nebraska; Central Iowa; Minneapolis & St. Louis; St. Louis, Des Moines & Northern; and Des Moines, Osceola & Southern. Articles for exhibition at the fair will be carried for full rates to the fair, return free, on certificate of secretary of the fair, that the articles have been on exhibition.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Sr. J. J. Gould writes from Vassar, Michigan, August 2d:

"I am still striving to keep my feet in the narrow way, though I have made mistakes since I started to do the Master's will. I feel many times lonely without the Herald, it is such a strength. I mean never to be without it while I am able to work. In our branch only one takes it and we can not all have it. I rejoice in this latter day work."

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Ques.—Is it the duty of the Priest of the branch to visit the houses of the members exhorting them to pray vocally and in secret, and to attend to all family duties, when there is a presiding Elder in the branch? Or is he only to assist when occasion requires?

Ans.—It is the Priest's duty to visit, whether there is a presiding Elder in the branch or not. He may visit with the presiding elder, or without him. It is his duty to assist in any matter in which the presiding elder may need, or ask for his assistance, pertaining to church work.

THERE has been a sort of "tent revival" at Council Bluffs, Iowa, in the course of which the minister in charge one evening, a Rev. Mr. Bell, extended an invitation for "all accredited ministers" to be present at a meeting in the enquiry room to talk to the penitents. Bro. Joseph F. McDowell was present and had reason to believe that Rev. Bell knew that he was there, and presented himself at the door of the inquiry room according to the request, but was politely excluded—the invitation did not include him. Of course he stayed out. This is latterly contradicted by the Bee.

A writer in the Nonpareil, Council Bluffs paper, for the 10th, gives the following graphic account of it. The Omaha Bee of the 10th notices one of Bro. McDowell's efforts quite favorably.

NO ADMITTANCE.

HE KNOCKED AT THE DOOR, BUT IT DID NOT OPEN UNTO HIM.
To the Nonpareil.

COUNCIL BLUFFS, Ia., Aug. 9.—I would like to use a little space in your columns to make mention of a slight mistake, or if you please, a seeming lack of courtesy on the part of the management of the pavilion. I am not going to find fault with religion because Sam Jones wanted something like $5 a minute for his recent talks in Maryville. But my complaint is one that relates to man as an entity, and not to money. I learn that when the ministers at the tent were invited to go back into the inquiry room at the rear, to talk with penitents, an exception was made, and the invitation was worded so as to exclude a certain pastor who was present. The pastor referred to is a popular and rather brilliant young man, but his sect or denomination is not of the strictly regulation pattern of orthodoxy. So the young pastor, although he preaches the Bible and revealed religion and morality with a vim that reminds the hearer of Johnathan Edwards, if not Chrysostom, is not a "credible minister." Now, according to the founder of Christianity, a man who is not against Christianity, is for it. But here is a young man of blameless character and fine ministerial ability and success, who everywhere proclaims the Savior, and yet he don't suit some of the cloth. Really I am almost ready to question the religious sincerity of believers who are more wrapt up in the form than in the simple spirit and humanity of our religion. I at least question their intelligence. "All ye are brethren." When doctors meet in convention, all doctors are equal in privilege in the meeting. The fellow who runs his dispensary over the country in a pair of saddle bags, with all his talents loaded up on a long-eared mule, if his diploma is written out in ink and manufactured in the proper medical college, has equal privileges with the doctors who run around in a two-horse carriage and feed their brains with electricity. I don't expect to be called out again during the revival. Don't wake me up again.

NERO.

THE learned Dr. Buckley, editor of The Methodist Christian Advocate, gets off the following in a late number of the Century at the close of a long article called an "exhaustive" one, on "Faith-healing."

"The faith-healers represent God as interfering constantly, not by cause and effect in the order of nature, but affecting the result directly. Their want of superiority to those who were not Christians, but use either false pretenses or natural laws, and their inferiority to Christ and the apostles, condemn their pretensions. Nor does it avail them to say, 'Christ would not come down from the cross when taunted by unbelievers.' They might, perhaps with propriety, refuse a test for the test's sake, though Elijah forced one. But in a close observation of their works the radical difference between them and those who they say have no divine help should be manifest. Some of them affirm that the Mormons, Newton, and others do their mighty works by the aid of devils. If so, since casting out devils was a miracle-working power of a very low grade, it is wonderful that none of these persons have been able to cast out the devils from any of the great number who are working in this way, and thus demonstrate their superiority as the apostles vindicated their claims against Simon the sorcerer and others.

"Faith-cure, technically so called, as now held by many Protestants, is a pitiable superstition, dangerous in its final effects.

"It may be asked, what harm can result from allowing persons to believe in 'faith-healing?' Very great, indeed. Its tendency is to produce an effeminate type of character, which shrinks from any pain, and to concentrate attention upon self and its sensations. It sets up false grounds for determining whether a person is or is not in the favor of God. It opens the door to every superstition, such as attaching importance to dreams, signs, opening the Bible at random, expecting the Lord to make it open so that they can gather His will from the first passage they see, 'impressions,' 'assurances,' etc. Practically it gives great support to other delusions which claim a super-natural element. It greatly injures Christianity, by subjecting it to a test which it can not endure. It directs attention from the moral and spiritual transformation which Christianity professes to work, a transformation which wherever made, manifests its divinity, so that none who behold it need any other proof that it is of God. It destroys the ascendancy of reason in the soul, and thus, like similar delusions, it is self-perpetuating; and its natural, and in some minds, its irresistible tendency, is to mental derangement.

"Little hope exists of freeing those already entangled, but it is highly important to prevent others from falling into so plausible and luxurious a snare, and to show that Christianity is not to be held responsible for aberrations of the imagination which belong exclusively to no party, creed, race, clime, or age."

It is almost certain that Rev. Dr. Buckley, if he is half radical Methodistical in his faith, has seldom passed a day in which he has not in thought or word presented God as "a very present helper in every time of need;" and he can not have preached as other Methodist preachers have done, unless he shall have presented the subject of, and a belief in "special providences," in which interferences in human affairs have been presented in such a way as showed God to be engaged in active supervision and careful, loving watchcare over his people. The very principle of prayer, one of the pillars of the Methodist cause, is based upon the cognizance of human affairs by the Deity and his answering the cries of those who faithfully pray.

We presume that Dr. Buckley would admit that the apostles and earlier disciples following the Christ and immediately succeeding the days of his departure, were stalwart Christians, and by no means effeminate in their faith; and yet these men, all of them, not only believed in divine interposition in human affairs, but accepted the philosophy and the fact as matters of course in every day's experience. The walls of the Phillipian jailor might have stood intact till long after the death of the disciples once incarcerated there, had not there been a divine interposition of power, by which they were sent. The man at the gate to whom came the saying, "Silver and gold have I none; but such as I have give I unto thee," would not have been healed had the philosophy of Dr. Buckley been true.

The Doctor, learned though he be, forgets that while he is asking men to believe on the Christ, and placing the Bible in their hands as a good Methodist parson should do, he is inviting men to accept the ministrations of Christ, who said directly and positively, "these signs shall follow," "they shall lay hands on the sick and they shall recover." And it can not be possible that he would say that it was not by faith that men were healed in Christ's time when it is distinctly affirmed, "thy faith hath made thee whole." "I have not found so great faith; no, not in Israel," was the comment of the Master, upon an occasion of one man's healing by faith. And how can this man, Reverend Doctor though he may be, so confidently state that casting out of devils was of a low order of miracles. The Savior said of one such occasion, "This kind goeth not out save by fasting and prayer." Prayer was then and is now an invocation of divine aid, a putting oneself into the hands of a wonder working God. If the Doctor is right it is better not to pray. If to be humble and dependent upon God; to depend upon the Spirit promised by Christ to the believer in the words, "Lo I am with you until the end of the world," is to be in "danger" of producing "an effeminate type of character," it is better that the Doctor quit trying to induce men to become praying christians.

No, the Doctor has certainly forgotten himself, and his desire to throw discredit upon the faith of those differing from him has caused him to lose sight of the claims of primitive christianity and its acknowledged force and power to create stalwart lives and character.

THE State fair for Iowa, will be held at Des Moines, September 3d to 10th, inclusive. We give the Secretary's circular below:

DES MOINES, July, 1886.

To the Editor:—Recognizing the power of the press to disseminate information that the mass of the general public are interested in, we take this occasion to present you with the following items relative to the Iowa State Fair. We respectfully request that you publish, or give such notice as you deem proper, that will interest your people.

This Society has now a permanent home at capital of State—Des Moines. The first fair on the new grounds, which contain 266 acres of fine timber and prairie lands, will be held September 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9 and 10. Magnificent buildings have been erected to meet the increasing demands of exhibitors. Every arrangement has been made to meet the wants, comfort and convenience of all who come to visit this great fair of the west. A brief outline of these buildings may interest the reader.

The main Exposition Hall is built in the form of a Greek cross, beautiful in design, and lighted with 4,000 lights of ground glass. The extreme lengths of building, are 166x230 feet; the four wings each 64 feet wide; height 110 feet; the towers 64 feet in diameter; amount of floor space in the hall 20,864 feet.

Fruit and Floral Hall is 50x110 feet with side and end projections of 16 feet. To top of roof 46 feet, and of tower 68 feet. The building is well lighted, a beauty in design, and covers 5,800 feet of floor space.

Dairy Hall is 40x75 feet, built on the most approved plan, with power to run machinery, cold storage room, glass case for butter exhibit, that will be a novel attraction to all, offices, etc.

Power Hall is 64x150 feet, substantially built, with two lines of shafting, and covers 9,600 square feet of floor space.

In addition to this 17 lots, with a frontage of from 50 to 100 feet, and 100 feet deep, have been engaged by private firms, on which to erect buildings to show their exhibits of machinery, etc.

The Amphitheatre is 320 feet in length, two stories high; 29 tiers of seats with a seating capacity for 6,000 people. It is built with reference to safety and comfort; there are five entrances and exits; its construction consumed over 300,000 feet of lumber.

Poultry House is 36x60 feet with a capacity for 200 coops.

There are ten horse barns, each 44x96 feet, built in a semi-circle with exhibition ring in the center. These will accommodate 320 head. Three speed horse barns 24x100 feet.

Ten cattle barns, each 32x96 feet, capacity 480 head, and built on same plan as horse barns

The track, half mile, is 70 feet wide on the home stretch, 40 feet on the back with 60 foot circular turns. Is heavily coated with black sandy soil, and will make one of the finest and fastest tracks in the West.

There are forty wells on the grounds, and with the addition of a system of water works built, there is every assurance that water will be plentiful.

Everything is being done by the management to make the Iowa State Fair Grounds the finest and best, and not to be excelled by any.

A cordial invitation is extended to all to come and see this grand exhibition, to see the finest stock that can be produced on this continent, and it is hoped that your coming will result in a season of pleasure and profit.

"Wisely and well said the Eastern bard:
Fear is easy, but love is hard;
Easy to glow with the Santon's rage,
And walk on the Meccan pilgrimage;
But he is greatest and best who can Worship Allah by loving man."

I AM going to say a word to-night, Mr. Editor, to discouraged women, wherever this letter of mine may find them between the two seas; to the army of women who every Monday morning fall to at work which no Saturday night shall ever see completed; to the army of dish-washers and floor-scrubbers and baby-tenders; the army whose backs are bent and whose limbs are weary in the ceaseless burden-bearing that life imposes upon them. For these discouraged ones, these troubled, yearning "Marthas," I have a word of comfort in my heart. It is as useless to preach and advise sometimes as it would be to read a manual of etiquette in the ward of a fever hospital, or distribute tracts among the maimed and wrecked in a railway disaster. Comfort comes only in the word of love, the close hand-clasp, the unchecked tear of sympathizing comprehension. You are troubled, dear heart, because you are often irritable and impatient; you doubt much whether you will ever go singing through heaven's gates with such a brood of angry moods and rebellious thoughts—quick words of impatience and fiery-winged tempers—in your heart. If "the captain" here, has the ear-ache, do I stand over her and exhort her to laugh and sing songs? Do you think the Tender Heart up yonder asks more of us than we in our imperfection demand of our children? If, for some good reason of his own, he lays sorrowful burdens on our life, think you he will expect us always to be songful and serene and sweet? Where, think you, the tender thought of God hovers nearest, like a white cloud brooding above the earth? Where, think you, the angels poise oftenest their pure wings, as they go flying to and fro, watching the sin-sick old earth groping its heavenward way through the mist of tears? Not where the graves lie, white-stoned and silent, under the tender new moons; not where the watchers bend above their dead; but right here above your heads, ye host of toilers and weary ones, for whom, years since, hope passed into long eclipse, and the crushing presses of disappointment and regret yield, drop by drop, their red wine of heart-sick misery. Not with Saints, at rest, nor yet with the quiet dead, does the Infinite Heart dwell nearest. It is to those who are called upon to live, and not to die; for those who are called to labor thanklessly, enduring hidden sorrows bravely, and wearing ever the thorn of an unavailing regret turned inward to their heart, that He draws nearest. And I wonder that we ever forget that, watching closely and knowing all, he understands completely. What is a cross word now and then, or a frown, or a flash of temper? Merely the dust by the way; it can not hinder the onward march. Only a little cloud that slips across the sun a moment now and then, but never affects its shining. Why, bless your poor, tired, discouraged hearts, God doesn't look at what we do, but rather, at what made us do it. If behind the cross word lies a faithful, struggling heart, that is striving hard to be sunshiny and sweet, the word will be forgotten like the shadow of a crow's wing across a summer meadow.

Rest assured, although we stumble on the way, like barefooted children walking over stony roads, if we but keep our faces turned to the shining of love, who will remember that we stumbled, when the gates have once closed behind us that swing between our hearts and heaven? What if the sparkle of life has gone out like a fisherman's light at sea, wind-blown and adrift; what if the bloom of youth has fallen like the petal of an over-ripe rose; is there nothing better in life than just to be happy? Does not a dutiful life yield more than a beautiful life? Because poverty grinds and legions of uncongenial tastes camp before the morning hours of each day, nor raise the siege at evening time, nor ever shall, until death sends out his white flag of truce along the line; because the walls of an unlovely home, made unlovely by no fault of yours, close like a dungeon about you: all this is no reason why you should despair. The root lies long in the darkness and the dirt before it trembles into bloom and sweetens the air of Summer with its balm, but no human power can delay its growth from root to blossom. So, whatever your limitations, whatever destinies confront, or make afraid, it will be June to-morrow, and heaven shall bring your flowering time.

When I see one scrubbing or bending over the washboard who was created with an artist's tastes and a poet's song in her heart; when I see a bright woman, in whom the frolicsomeness and drollery of youth die hard, amid a life of drudgery and unrest; when I see one patching trousers and darning socks who was intended by nature to reign the crowned queen of some high vocation; when I mark the pallor and the lines of tell-tale care on the cheek that in girlhood outblushed June's sweetest rose, or note how the hands that once drew divinest music from obedient keys have warped and twisted in the faithful performance of homely duties, I feel like kissing the faded cheek and folding the poor hands in a reverent grasp, for, I tell you, though she may sometimes falter by the way, though a fretful word or a discouraged mood may sometimes overtake her, not queens are more royal in the inheritance of their purple robes, not cloistered Saints folded away from the world's turmoil so faithful, not dying martyrs so brave—for it is not dying that tells. To die is easy enough—but living! There's the test. Anybody can die, but ah, the infinite difficulty of living!

I am not talking to-night, or ever, to whimperers or cowards—to those who find the road rough, and sit down by the wayside and refuse to go forward. I am talking to the brave, the true-hearted, the host of the disappointed, the legion who suffer for another's sinning, and bear in their own lives the punishments of another's transgression—to loyal wives, wedded to clods and drunkards; to tired mothers, who, for the love of little children, endure their martyrdom to the end and make no sign. Pursue your way a little longer, brave hearts and true! Yet a few more days confront the grey monotones of life; your tears, your sighs, your aspirations, your renunciations, are all remarked and remembered. To-morrow the sails of your long voyage shall be furled, the black bread and bitter wine of earth be exchanged for the festival years of heaven.—Amber.

THE above selection from the Chicago Journal, to our mind, contains much that is true and comforting, and gives expression to just and noble sentiments, and yet it falls short of one of the grandest, most soul-sustaining elements brought by the gospel to fallen humanity: "If you love only those who love you, what reward have you?" When in the meridian of time the Son of God was manifested in the flesh, the one great distinguishing feature of his gospel was, "In the world you shall have tribulation, but in me peace." "Peace I leave with you, my peace give I unto you." He warned his disciples that they must not expect to be above their Master. His kingdom was not of this world, and neither were his rewards. Tribulation they were to expect, and any one not having counted the cost before enlisting in the army would be very liable to make shipwreck of faith. It was through sinners that this trouble was to be heaped upon them. The apostle referred them to what Christ himself had suffered through this channel, when he says, "Consider him who endured such contradiction of sinners against himself, lest ye be weary and faint in your minds. You have not yet resisted unto blood, striving against sin."

The great, merciful, loving heart of the Father is yearning towards us; and all day long his arms are stretched out,—those great strong arms in which he would so securely shelter us; if only we would flee to them, lean upon them, and lay down at his feet the burden too heavy for us to carry without his help, then would come to our souls the peace he promised to leave us, promised we should find in him. "Six days shalt thou labor!" Blessed fiat; and notwithstanding the fact that the frail body is often overtaxed, until life itself seems scarce worth the price we pay for it, yet far, far better is it for that brave army of "dish-washers, floor-scrubbers and baby-tenders," than for that other army, who when heart trouble seizes upon them, must fold their hands in idleness, concealing from all the world their grief, and at the behests of fashion go out into the world bedecked with costly robes and jewels, their outward selves a very mockery of what they really are. In this world care, disappointment and sorrow come to all, and while the Christian need not expect to be free from them we have the promise of peace, if only we will trust him. How shall the father or mother comfort that son or daughter who never open their hearts to them, never go to them for the comfort they need? God in his infinite mercy often does comfort and bless us when we are unmindful of him, but the weary and heavy laden must hear and answer his call, if they expect to find rest.

AS THE time is rapidly approaching for the Reunion Meetings, we wish to ask a few of the sisters who are willing to act as agents for the sale of the "Three Witnesses," to send us their names and we will try and send a supply by parties going from here. The opportunity will be a good one, and we hope the sisters who love the cause will not let it pass unimproved. These pictures are 8 x 10, a suitable size for framing, and are excellent likenesses of the originals. They sell readily and every family or individual who obtains one will, we feel sure, thank us for having called their attention to them. Act promptly, for the time is short.

WE are in receipt of letters from Sisters Hartwell, Kate Currey and A Sister, also papers from Bro. Street.

A PRAYER IN BEHALF OF THE MOTHERS' HOME COLUMN.

Our Father in Heaven here honored be thy name,
And may thy truth be taught as in olden days, the same;
Guide thou each mind and gently breathe the theme
That in each lowly heart joy and love may teem.

As on the bud and flowers the dews from heaven fall,
Give thou thy Spirit's cheering rays, in answer to our call.
They each one feel their duty before the closing hour,
And bear a testimony of the gospel and its power.

From the fountain of thy treasures, thy richest blessings give,
That the sorely weak and erring ones may see the way and live;
No human hand can scatter the clouds of doubt and fear;
'Tis thou, Oh Lord! can succor, imparting hope and cheer.

May mothers' rear their offspring with tenderness and care,
And wisdom from thy bosom be their precious boon to share.
Look down upon each household of thy daughters, far and wide;
Comfort the lone and weary ones, and let thy peace abide.

When earthly scenes are over, and all their work is done,
Like the falling of the autumn leaves, and setting of the sun,
May they rise in glorious triumph, with their bodies still the same,
But clothed with immortality, we ask in Jesus' name.
C. ACKERLEY.

July 25th, 1886.

Dear Sisters:—As some have given their experience in raising children, I will add a little of my own, although I do not claim to be a model. I have many faults, yet I think I have succeeded so far in teaching and instilling into the minds of my children some principles that will, I hope, be traceable in after years to a mother's influence, although my work is not yet completed. In regard to the two that are married and settled in life I am perfectly satisfied with the result of my care and labor. All mothers know too well the anxiety we have to raise our little ones to be useful. It was in the winter of 1860 and 61—a winter well remembered by Kansas settlers, for had it not been for the relief sent to Kansas many would have starved—and in that place and time I became a mother, at the age of twenty; and when I folded my darling to my breast I asked God to help me to be worthy the name of mother, and give me wisdom to raise my little girl to be a useful woman; and from that time I began to feel the greater need of religion. But oh, how rough has been a part of the path I have traveled! yet my greatest aim has been to teach my children honesty and truthfulness, and this can not be done without labor and care. We have to enter into it with our whole soul, and if we find our children in a fault we should not try to blame some one else, and cover up their faults, but try to get at the bottom of it and teach them to speak the truth at all times. Good children will often tell little stories, but if they are let alone they will get used to this, and it will grow as the child grows. Some may think they will quit it. Are you willing to risk it? This will not do; it ought to hurt a mother's feelings to hear a child speak falsely, no matter how trifling the matter may be. I once found my little girl had told me a story when she was only five or six years old, when for fear of being punished she denied the truth. I took her one side and told her I was so sorry, but if she would confess I would forgive her and we would pray God to forgive her, and there we prayed the Lord to make her a good and useful child. We both shed tears, and it gave me courage and impressed the lesson I so desired upon the mind of my child. This is only one out of many circumstances we pass through in raising children.

That child is now training little ones of her own, and I know she loves the truth, and every one has confidence in her, because of this. There was another principle also, which was, to live according to their means, and keep out of debt if possible, and pay all they owed, let it be ever so little; and these principles are so instilled and grafted in their lives that there is nothing now that can change them; and I hope I may be able to raise the rest to be just as good; and if they are not, I feel I have done all I could do; but with the gospel to assist me and faith in the Lord, why should I fear? We are ever in danger, and can not at once sit down at ease until our work is done, and if I can instill these principles in the others, I think I can say I have finished the work entrusted to my care: for until they are settled in life they are our care; and when they begin to think they are men and women, then is the time there is danger in many ways. We should see what kind of company they keep, and that they do not stay out late at night. How often we have felt, Oh if we could once more ask mother's advice, when we are struggling with the cares of life! But her memory is all we have; yet that memory will live in our breast as long as life lasts. We read in the Book of Mormon of two thousand young men who went to war trusting in the faith their mothers had taught them, and while many others were slain, through their faith in God, and the prayers of their mothers, all returned. A mother in Israel told me when the war called for volunteers her son said, "Mother, will I come back?" She said, "Yes, my son, the Lord willing, although you may be in danger, I think you will come back." That son is now one of the Seventies. Those words cheered him, and when in danger he thought of his mother's faith. Oh, that the Lord would help us to raise our children to love and serve him. This is the desire of my heart.

SISTER IN THE ONE FAITH.

Sister Frances.—I rejoice so much in reading the Mothers' Home Column, that I wish to say a few words, although I am weak and feel my inability to write very much, or very well; still I can say this much, that I feel helped by reading the Home Column, and with all my heart I wish you God speed. My heart's desire is to bring my little ones up, to love and serve the Lord. I want them to feel that the church needs them. Oh sisters, let us as mothers, realize the responsibility that rests upon us, and let us all remember that our little ones watch us, and try very hard to be like mamma; therefore it stands us in hand to set a worthy example before them. Fearing that I will once more find the waste basket, I will close. Hoping to be remembered in your prayers, I am your sister in the gospel,

EMMA PAYNE.

There must be some mistake Sister Emma, as we have no knowledge of any former communication.—ED.

Dear Sisters:

"Cast thy bread upon the waters,
Thinking not 'tis thrown away;
God himself saith thou shalt gather,
It again some future day."

I often think it is bread thrown away in regard to a mother's prayers for her children. Oh! what disappointments and heart aches a mother often experiences in trying to rear her little ones in the fear and admonition of the Lord! Many times her heart fails her for fear, when she sees how much faster the evil seed will spring up and bear fruit than the good seed, but God who knoweth all things, heareth her prayers, and he blesses her in giving her children hearts to obey his gospel. Sometimes in this life a mother is not permitted to realize the fruits of her labors, but in the great day to come when all things shall be made known, then shall it appear that she did not labor and pray in vain; but that the seed that seemingly for a while was dead, sprang up after many days, and bore fruit unto the glory of God. I believe that the Mother's Home Column will be the means of doing much good, and helping many of the sisters to make an earnest effort in the cause of Christ; and as Sr. Francis says in the Home Column let us be seeking—seeking unto the end. My prayer is that we may endure unto the end, and obtain the reward—Eternal life.

Correspondence.

OXFORD, Idaho, Aug. 3d.

Bro. Joseph Smith.—I received your letter of 23d ult., sent to Malad. I thank you for the encouragement given me, and the interest you have in this difficult field. What my effort amounted to at Malad and Samaria I am unable to say; but from the attendance at Malad I still have hopes for that place. The attendance in Samaria was small, the Macedonian cry has not come up from that village yet.

I have spent a profitable week here; meetings have been well attended, yet it is in the midst of the hay harvest.

Last Saturday and Sunday the Brighamites held their stake conference at this place. Apostle J. W. Taylor and Elder John Morgan were the chief speakers. Saturday evening Elder Morgan delivered a very good discourse. I was pleased with the spirit of it. Some of his conclusions I thought to be wrong; but he gave the people good advice. He told them to be quiet and peaceful, and endure their persecutions in patience; said the Lord would in his time stretch forth his strong arm and deliver them; that this was one of their trials. He said "this little excitement had made the weak strong, and the strong stronger; that this had harmonized all the inharmonious elements and more perfectly united them.

Elder Taylor followed him and said he could bear testimony to all Elder Morgan had said; that every word was true; and yet he said that when he was here nine months ago he told them that persecution was coming, and that half of the church would apostatize; and now at this time he found great dissatisfaction; very many were shaken, many showing a disposition to court favor with popular sentiment, and stated that half of the church would apostatize. Here an "apostle" and a president of their Seventy disagreed. The "apostle" said, "When we point our finger at the corruption in the world we make a mistake; we should look at the wickedness and corruption within. Every place I go, complaints of adultery are presented to me—it is all through the settlements. Our trouble has come upon us because we have not been punctual in paying our tithes, and for fostering sectarian schools. Nineteenths of the people who have left this church have committed adultery. If proof is wanted, come to me; I will furnish it. All such will apostatize and unite with our enemies. You, fathers and mothers: you, young men and maidens: keep away from all such: have nothing to do with the enemies of this people: have nothing to do with the Gentiles, and keep your children from all schools not taught by our own people, unless you want them contaminated. They are forcing us to draw the line. Let them draw the line deep and black. You will yet see blood trickle down the streets in every valley in these mountains; the United States will send troops that will go from north to south through all these vallies. I don't speak these things of myself, but by the Holy Ghost that is in me. I speak it in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ."

By the time he got to this point he was in a complete frenzy, and looked more like a maniac than a meek "apostle" of the Lamb. Some would say "he had blood in his eye."

At the close of his exhortation and prophecy-ing, the brass band struck up a martial air, to prepare the brethren to meet the foe, I suppose, for they had two bands to enthruse the Saints. The conference was largely attended, especially on Sunday. The audiences were called together by music; and the American flag was gracefully floating from the liberty pole, while in front of the bands they had a standard bearer gently waving the flag in the breeze.

I listened to Elder Taylor again at two p.m., Sunday. The house was full to overflowing, and it was by the kindness of Mr. Crawshaw, who was fined when I was here before, that I was furnished a seat. He came outside and ushered me in. I felt to thank him in my heart, and to pray God to "pluck him as a brand from the burning," for he is good at heart, but spiritually blind.

I really felt sorry for Elder Taylor in the afternoon. His effort was the weakest I ever listened to. He evidently wanted to say something that he was restrained from uttering. After he had spoken for over an hour, he asked them to vote him fifteen minutes longer. During that time he tried to work himself up to blood heat again, but signally failed, only so far as to advise the Saints to go to the polls this fall and vote,—saying: "Let no man or set of men interfere with your rights. Defend them to the fullest extent; test every inch of the ground; carry your case to the Supreme Court of the territory and to the Supreme Court of the United States; fight for every right and privilege that belongs to you. You that are not in polygamy have broken no law. I am a polygamist's son. I believe in it, and I mean to practice it, too."

He challenged any man to disprove polygamy, and said, "If any one undertakes to lie about this and twist the scriptures from their true meaning after I am gone, you, brethren, defend it."

On Saturday he said he could prove that no man could be saved in the kingdom of God, unless he accepted it. I thought that while he was here I would give him an opportunity to defend or affirm his proposition, and immediately sent him the following note:

OXFORD, Idaho, Aug. 1st, 1886.

"ELDER J. W. TAYLOR, Dear Sir.—In your discourse this afternoon I understood you to say no man could refute the doctrine of polygamy by the scriptures. If you will affirm that proposition in public debate, taking the Bible, Book of Mormon, and the Nauvoo edition of the Doctrine and Covenants, and the history of the church as found in the Times and Seasons, as standards in evidence, we will be pleased to undertake to refute it. If you are willing to discuss the proposition that polygamy is a direct commandment of God to the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, please answer this at your earliest convenience and we will meet and arrange for the discussion when it will suit your convenience. Awaiting your answer,

I remain yours for truth,

R. J. ANTHONY,

President of the Rocky Mountain Mission of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints."

To this he sent no reply, but said a brother Cowley could attend to that if he felt like doing so. But "brother Cowley" said my course here had been unbecoming and unchristianlike, and for that reason he thought best not to do anything with it. I presume if I had been "a good Christian," or conducted myself like one, Elder Cowley would have had no excuse! Such boasters and blasphemers never found a man pure enough

(?) to meet them. This may be a little severe, but when men preach a lie and ask God in the name of His loving Son to sanctify it, to me it is blasphemy. At night on Sunday I preached the gospel to an appreciative congregation, and last night I spoke on the fruits of polygamy, to a house full of people. I tried to deal as gently with them as possible. There were no polygamists present, so I could not hurt them much.

To-day I baptized five—four women and one girl—making the branch number thirty, and I think we shall gather out more if the Saints only continue faithful and in the unity of the Spirit.

It does my soul good to know that you could tell me where the Lord would give us sheaves before you knew of it from us. I feel quite confident that later on we shall have plenty to do in Idaho. When I return I shall open up in Franklin, if the Lord will give us an entrance there. To-morrow I go to Montana for a little season. The Utah church still puts on a bold front, but it is plain to be seen that such a spirit of unrest was never known among them before. The leaders are all hid away, and in prison, with no one to give advice. If such men as J. W. Taylor voice the sentiment of the fleeing shepherds, the day is near when the people in Idaho will test his prediction. Such irresponsible men may induce the people to commit some overt act that would cause many innocent and trusting ones much trouble. If Mr. Taylor had as much experience with the Army as I have, he would not talk lightly of them. Just one Cavalry raid through these valleys would lay them waste until there would not be sufficient left to feed a jack rabbit. His prediction may come true as to the soldiers coming, but if they come there will be no more polygamy left, they will wipe that out as clean as they did slavery. If it comes to that, there will be no longer any need for courts and prisons. May Heaven pity the poor priest-ridden, spiritually sick and blind in this land, I pray.

NOTES BY THE WAY.

Since the General Conference I have labored in Little Sioux district, and have spent a week in Richland, Union county, Dakota. There seemed to be a fair interest with some in the latter place, and several expressed a desire to attend our Reunion at Garner's grove. If they do, I trust they will be led to see the necessity of obeying the gospel. One Norwegian gentleman who attended our meetings, as he has done for years when we have preached there, has a clear and comprehensive view of the gospel; I believe he was once a member of the Lutheran church, but that system seemed so barren of soul-saving truth, and so full of empty formality, that he sought something better. The Seventh-day Advent presented their theory to him; there appeared broader truths, and a deeper earnestness in this system, and he embraced it; but it failed to satisfy the longing of his soul; but "half a loaf was better than no bread;" so he tried to be content, yet was not satisfied. He met with a Latter Day Saint who was willing to give a reason for the hope that was in him. This reason attracted the searcher's mind. It seemed like "an apple of gold in a picture of silver," and he hungered for more light.

Your humble servant and Levi Wilson preached in Richland some years ago; he heard and invited us home, told us of his experience, enquired about the latter day work. And when any of the brethren have preached there he has been an earnest listener. Besides, he has had the benefit of the example and teaching of that God-fearing woman, Sr. Lilly Smith; and when I was there this summer, he assured me that the Latter Day Saints had more truth than all the churches beside. Feeling very unwell physically, he asked me if I would consider it proper to administer the healing ordinance unto him. I told him if he believed in the promise of God and desired to be administered unto, I was free to comply with that desire. I did not bring him under any covenant to join the church, for I know of no such rule in God's word, nor of any precedent set by the Prophet, or authorities of the church. I administered with freedom, and I believe it was accepted of God. I know nothing of the results to his physical nature. He could hardly see the necessity of being baptized, because he believed he was accepted of God; but I am persuaded he would have yielded had I urged him so to do. I simply told him to wait till he saw the necessity of obeying the heaven-ordained ordinance. I further told him that he stood where Cornelius stood when Peter came to him; and when he, like Cornelius felt the absolute necessity of obeying the ordinance and did so, he would receive the blessing; but "Whatsoever is not of faith is sin." I left him in the hands of God. It is useless to build "Hay, wood and stubble" on the foundation Christ has laid. We must search for the "gold, silver and precious stones," then our work will not suffer loss.

I was amused at one gentleman who said: "Mr. Derry, how is it that you, who might be uniting with the popular churches of the day, stand in prominent and profitable positions and be honored and respected by those churches, content yourself to remain with a people so despised as the Latter Day Saints; and that, too, without pecuniary reward?" I tried to answer his question, and every true Latter Day Saint knows the answer. He too promised to be at our Reunion if he could. I visited the Sioux City branch; found the Saints alive, under the kind watch care of Elder M. P. Berg, and Teacher E. A. Townsend. They had not been able to spread out extensively; their meetings being confined to a private house. I broke the bread of life to them, and speaker and hearers were blessed. Occasionally I preach in Magnolia. I have preached a number of times in and near Six Mile Grove, good attention is given. The few Saints there desire to have meetings more frequently, but I think they neglect privileges within their reach, such as prayer meetings, and lack spiritual strength in consequence. I heard of President Blair's presence at Persia, and availed myself of the pleasure of his society. I attended two meetings with him, one at Salem and the other at Union Grove. The Saints were greatly pleased to see and hear him, and I am certain they will be blest if they heed his instructions. I preached near Six Mile Grove and Persia on Sunday; also on Monday, and expect to this evening. We should have more spiritual life in this district if we lived to the light we have. The lack of spiritual life is not caused by the want of preaching so much as the neglect to practice what we know. Spiritual life does not depend upon him who conducts the prayer meeting altogether. It depends upon our individual earnestness and faithfulness to our covenant with God; a wisely tempered zeal and Christlike humility. Let us live to our privileges. One word for the Editorial pens. It is no disparagement of their efforts in the past, to say that the Herald is continually improving. I love to acknowledge true worth. The Mothers' Column is also a gem of the first water; may its brilliancy ever increase, to illumine the pathway of the children of God.

CHARLES DERRY.

SUPERIOR, Neb., Aug. 2d.

Dear Herald:—The good book says: "Thou shalt not covet." When I read the many testimonies of others who meet with crowded houses, and have such wonderful freedom of both thought and speech, and how prejudice melts away, I feel to covet such sweet bliss; hope I am alone in this. It may be those like me are not permitted to darken your pages, or they may feel ashamed to tell how cold they are treated when they attempt to preach. And while the world stands and sneers, the hand of affliction rests upon my companion, until I am completely tied at home. We want one united prayer sent up in our behalf. We are some distance from a branch, and since last fall have seen but few of the Saints. Bro. E. M. Reynolds, and father and mother Beebe, (brother and sister in the faith), were up from Cuba. We had a prayer meeting, in which it was good to be. Bro. Reynolds read the 493d hymn and exhorted to a firmer faith; after which the hymn was sung with the Spirit and understanding. Crops light, (that is corn). We hope in the first resurrection to join with all the Saints in the song of redeeming love.

As ever, your brother in Christ,

G. W. BEEBE.

FONTANELLE, Iowa, August 4th.

Bro. Joseph Smith:—My love and respects to all who are in the faith of Jesus Christ and the doctrine he taught when he was in Jerusalem, in the flesh, and also the principles he taught after his resurrection from death; the same on this continent, when he commissioned his disciples to preach the gospel to the sheep on this land, which had been given to Joseph and Ephraim. See Ezekiel 37: 15-21, with what is seen in St. John's gospel, where he says, "Other sheep I have which are not of this fold; them must I, the Lord, gather also; and there shall be one fold and one shepherd."

This, to me, is good sense, and has been, ever since I read it in the Book of Mormon. It is far better sense than the idea of making it appear that it meant the Gentiles, which many of these wise ones have claimed it to mean. If any want proof of what I say, let them turn to the Book of Nephi, where the Master is commenting on what is to take place when, or what will be done, when the remnant of Jacob is to be among the Gentiles; then the Lord shows who the sheep are, and who the remnant of Jacob is.

I claim that without the Book of Mormon, there is not a man in America or England who could tell where the remnant of Jacob can be found, or where Ephraim's superior blessing would be found. (See 5th chapter of Micah, from 8th verse to end of chapter.) If this is permitted to take place in this land, sin, iniquity, in Zion, or America, will come to an end.

Fontanelle is like many other places in Iowa, dry and barren, for the want of a little of Noah's water flood. But she suffers more for the want of the true doctrine as taught on the day of Pentecost than for any other essential principle I am acquainted with. I know of none that are hungering for righteousness, but a few of the old Saints; and they, some of them, have been trying to find rest among, or with the false teachers, but they get no rest as yet. We have been looking for Bro. Stebbins for a long time, but he has not come yet. Bro. Stebbins, or any one the Lord will send, will find something to do. If the brother intends to make us a call, let us have it before the meeting at Wheeler's Grove.

I learn that you called on Orson Pratt's widow, when at Salt Lake. She has a brother and a sister here, a brother's widow, also. They and some others are anxious to see and hear, once more, what they say is true. Tell Bro. Stebbins to come on; his expenses will be met and paid, and I have been told again the house can be had.

Aug. 5th.—We have one woman here that was married, February 22d, 1847, to your uncle Hyrum; she has not heard a sermon by our people since 1845, I think. Here I close, feeling more and more the infirmities of old age—one month from yesterday closes my 90th year. So farewell for this time. Love and respects to all.

AMITY, Mo., Aug. 6th.

Bro. W. W. Blair:—I wrote you a few lines yesterday on last page of manuscript. Since that time have received a few dollars, and when I go where I can get exchange will send my dues to the office. I would not do without the papers for five times the subscription,—had rather live on scant fare. O, the folly of using tobacco, or any unsavory food, and yet not feed the soul with the spiritual food so essential to its growth, as many do. My Advent friends will debate no more here, and I wish for them all to know my declaration, that no man can prove any such doctrine as they teach in regard to the Sabbath, nature of man and the kingdom of God; and if they give any challenges I am ready to meet them any where I can go. I want the Elders to know this, that when they boast of following Christ, therefore keep the Sabbath as he did, that there is not a particle of evidence that Jesus or an Apostle ever kept the Sabbath law—ever kept it better than any other day. Jesus tells them, when persecuted for breaking the Sabbath, that it was "lawful to do good" on that day. So it was on any day, and unlawful to do evil on any day as well as on the Sabbath. Read the fourth command—no work to be done on the Sabbath—but Jesus, often working on that day, justifies it thus: "My Father worketh (on that day) hitherto, and I work (on the Sabbath). Wherefore the Jews sought the more to kill Jesus because he had not only broken the Sabbath, but also said that God was his father."—John 5: 17, 18. He paid no regard to it as a law of God, and yet was no sinner. And why? Because the law and the prophets were [only] until John,—ceased then by limitation—and the better law of the Spirit preached to Abraham before the law governing only the flesh, or law of flesh was given. See Luke 16: 16. That spiritual law was given in his first sermon. This position is terrible to them; and in my last debate when driven to the wall on John 5: 18, the answer was, "Well, how do we know John told the truth, or that the translation is correct?" I have never seen that it differs in other translations; and it harmonizes with all other Scriptures. Yours in the love of all truth,

Bro. Joseph.—I reached home Friday evening, July 30th. As we got out of the hack, just before I reached the door of my house, two gentlemen stepped up and requested me to preach a funeral discourse the next day at ten o'clock, in the city. As I got ready to go to the funeral, Dr. Mead, from Dimondale, called and solicited me to come and spend the Sabbath at Dimondale. I made the arrangement and did so. I found that there had been some little sparring among the members, so I made the arrangement for a business meeting for the next Saturday. I spent last Saturday and Sunday with them, and left them with a better state of feeling. While there the branch made arrangement for a grove meeting which will be announced in the papers here. The announcement will run as follows:

NOTICE. There will be a grove meeting in the grove of Franklin J. Spafford, at Diamondale, Eaton County, state of Michigan, held by the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, to commence on Thursday evening of August 26th, 1886, to continue over the 27th, 28th and 29th days of said month. It is expected that Wm. H. Kelley and E. C. Briggs, of the Twelve, George A. Blakeslee, the Bishop of the church, together with all the missionaries appointed to the state of Michigan by the General Conference will be present. All good, peaceable and law-abiding citizens are respectfully and earnestly solicited to attend the meeting.

Committee: { HIRAM RATHBUN,
WM. R. MEAD,
GEORGE MCCLINTOCK.

P. S.—Will you be so kind as to say at once through the Herald that the brethren referred to in the above notice are indeed very much desired to be in attendance, with all others who may be able to attend. Come one! Come all!

Brother Blair:—Can you inform me where Elder J. J. Cornish is? Four have been baptized here by brother Thomas Whitford, Priest of the St. Thomas branch, and they now await confirmation. We hope some Elder may come here. We would be pleased to see any Elder, at any time.

Your brother in the faith,

ROCKWELL CITY, Iowa, Aug. 4th.

Bro. Joseph.—I have had a knowledge of the restoration of the gospel in its fullness and power; have been made to rejoice with inexpressible joy by the peaceable influence of the Holy Spirit, which draws my affections out towards my dear Savior. I commenced to open up the work in Calhoun county on August first. Bro. N. Stamm and I held a few meetings here three years since. I have been feeling the Spirit of late, prompting me to thrust in my sickle; so I have made one effort, and was truly blessed with light and liberty. I had good turn out. I ask your prayers, I have a work to do.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Aug., 4th.

Dear Brother Joseph:—Boot trade. Wanted, by a man of thirty-four years, a situation in the above trade; is practical in the following branches of the business; Cutting to measure, fitting, salesman, stock-keeping, etc., can also make and repair; would like to meet with a brother who could find a permanent situation where I could be useful to him, and be able to honestly support myself, wife and family. Any one having such a vacancy can obtain a useful man by applying at once to R. BULLARD, No. 1 Ware-st.

P. S.—Would accept employment in any light business. Brethren don't be afraid to answer this as I am greatly in need of the above.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., August 7th.

Dear Herald:—I feel with my brethren and sisters to express a few thoughts through your valuable columns, although my lack of wisdom, and my short experience in this great latter day work will prevent me giving any instruction to the many readers, contributors, and critics, who from week to week, scan the pages of this noble "herald of truth." Yet we as Saints in this last dispensation, have an individual work to do, which our brother or sister can not do for us. And let that work be small or great according to the talents given, let us each see to it that they are used in a way that will bring the "well done" from the Master at the great settling of accounts. My desire, yea, my earnest desire, is to build with such material as will stand the test, such as gold, silver, and precious stones, that not only I may be "saved though as by fire," but my works may be saved also.

I have been led of late to think a great deal of the present state of the church, to see that the labor and toil of the servants of God who have been so patient and persistent in bringing to the front the laws that are to govern this the church of Jesus Christ are accomplishing their purpose and aim. And we have indeed much to be thankful for, as we see unmistakable evidences of that unity of the faith which Paul speaks of, being in the near future. This, my brethren, has been brought about through individual labor, each one taking a part, with the one common aim. And although I may not be able or be called to perform such a noble work as they are performing, yet by manifesting an appreciation of their faithfulness it may be the means of at least encouraging them in their labors. Again, if the Lord blesses me with times of refreshing by his Holy Spirit's teachings, can not I convey to some one, by the medium of this paper, some word of comfort and encouragement by asking my heavenly Father to direct my thoughts and pen to write something under the influence of his Spirit which will find a heart that will drink in those words with joy, with an heart full of joy unspeakable and praise to the Redeemer's name. Yea, this has been my experience, and the happy experience of many others through the same means. Then, I feel we shall not labor in vain if we do it for the benefit of others—not to get honor to ourselves—but to be the means of leading others by our good works to glorify our Father who is in heaven. What a pattern for individual labor we have in the Savior's life! how he toiled; how he suffered; how he prayed; yea, how he died to benefit man; how his heart yearned for those who rejected him! Listen to his accents, "O, Jerusalem, Jerusalem, which killest the prophets and stonest them that are sent unto you, how often would I have gathered thy children together, as a hen doth gather her brood under her wings, and ye would not." What pathos; what love; what an expression of affection in that cry, "O, Jerusalem, Jerusalem!" The look of soul-anguish depicted in that meek face seems vivid before me. No tongue can express the feelings of that almost bleeding heart as he gazed upon that then beautiful city and knew, alas, how soon it was to be an heap of ruins. And what a dreadful carnage awaited those who then were full of life and hope. "O, Jerusalem, I would spare you this, but you will not!"

"The holy angels who heralded my advent proclaimed the message. I have brought peace on earth, good will towards man; glad tidings to you, my own, and to all people, but ye will not heed it. Behold your house is left unto you desolate, not a stone shall be left upon another of this beautiful temple. Your beautiful, fertile country, shall become a parched and barren waste."

This, and the knowledge of what they were then plotting, namely, his death, must have pressed painfully upon him, and not only for Jerusalem was this great sacrifice to be made, but for you, and for me, my brethren and sisters: yea, for the sins of the whole world. Let us then do what we can to help on this great work which our Savior sacrificed so much to bring to earth, that we may at last be among those wise virgins ready to go in to the marriage supper of the Lamb, with vessels filled with oil, lamps trimmed and burning, and rejoice at the shout, "Behold, the Bridegroom cometh," is the prayer of

Your brother in Christ,

WHEELLOCK, Texas, July 24th.

Editors Herald:—I have just enlisted in the army of the Lord, strictly speaking, as I am quite sure I never belonged to the Church of Jesus Christ until I joined the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. I was baptized on the 18th of Last April, by Priest Hay, was confirmed by George S. Hyde; and ordained an Elder by Elder I. N. Roberts. I have preached twice since I was ordained. I have been a Baptist preacher for about fifteen years past; never met any doctrine claimed by men to be the doctrine of the Bible, but what I could see the defects, when I tried them by the word of God, until I heard Brn. Roberts and Smith preach the doctrine of the Latter Day Saints, or rather the doctrine of the Lord Jesus Christ. I could not find any defects in that. I have tried it by God's word and Spirit, and both tell me it is true. I am glad that I can say for myself that the doctrine taught by the true Latter Day Saints is the truth. I feel like saying to all Saints wherever they may be, stand firm, earnestly contending for the faith once delivered to the Saints, and victory is sure to be ours. I pray God's blessing upon all, but especially Saints. I never saw such a stir about religion among people as there is in this immediate section especially among Baptists and Campbellites. They are cooperating together against the Saints. They seem to think since I left the Baptists, they are in great danger of falling. They call upon the Campbellite to help them; but they have enough to do to help themselves. I left four Baptist churches without a Pastor when I joined the Church of Christ. I would love to see Bro. Smith again. The last time I saw him was last January, near Hearne, Texas. I did not think at that time I would be a member of the church he belonged to. Yours in gospel bonds,

E. W. NUNLEY.

Bro. Joseph Smith:—Our Two-days' Meeting at Silver Lake was very well attended, and the good Spirit was with us in the gifts of the gospel. We thank our heavenly Father for confirming his word to us in these latter days, which gives us the evidence that God's word is true; and imparts to us a knowledge of the prophetic mission of your father, and the restored gospel through him. I have baptized ten since I came; and on Sunday last, in company with Bro. T. J. Martin, vice president of the district, Bro. W. W. McLeod, and Joseph Chester, we organized a branch, known as the Luce Branch. Also, organized a Sabbath School. Bro. Florence Omans is president of the branch. He was a minister in the Church of God. Last Sunday evening in our testimony meeting he received a great power of God's Spirit, and said that he could now say, "I know the work is true, and that I can cry, Abba, Father."

SWEET HOME,, Oregon, Aug. 13th.

Dear Herald:—When I read your noble teaching I often think how much I, too, should like to say something of the great work in which we have enlisted; but always feeling my inability to write anything of interest to your pages I have never made an attempt in that direction, knowing there were so many other pens more able than mine to fill your bright columns. However, we all have a work to do, and none are exempt from duty; and the more willingly we take up our cross the earlier we will advance in the ways of righteousness and truth. Though our first efforts may be feeble, we should not feel discouraged, since God has promised to be helpful to the weak. Inasmuch as they put their trust in him he will make them strong, in all the good desires of their hearts and prosper them in their every noble undertaking, both spiritually and temporally. Hence with the Psalmist let us say, "Praise be to his great and holy name, for his mercies endureth forever." I do so much desire to love and serve him better every day, that I may be of service in his kingdom.

Our beloved brother Haws left our home this morning for Independence, a distance of fifty miles or more, to visit brother Jasperson and some other Saints living in the Salem hills. I think he will do a good work here in Oregon. He has already done a great deal of good among us all in this part, for he is one that truly practices what he preaches, and is a pattern worthy of imitation; just such as all should be that has professed the name of Saint. How careful, and prayerful too, we all should be when so much depends upon our daily walk here. The influence we exert around us may have a great deal more to do with others than we know or think of now. Our every day acts have their effect, let them be good or evil. As we sow, so shall we reap—either in joy or in tears. Oh! that we may all so live united in heart and prayer that, when the Lord comes to gather up his jewels, we may with the ransomed shine in the kingdom of our God, is the prayer of your sister in Christ,

FALSE PROPHETS.

DEAR HERALD:—My mind seems drawn out this morning to examine the saying of the Savior, as found in Matthew 24th chapter, "For in those days there shall also arise false Christ's, and false prophets, and they shall show great signs and wonders, insomuch that if possible they shall deceive the very elect; who are the elect according to the covenant. Behold I speak these things unto you for the elect's sake." We perceive by this language that the Savior looking down through the vista of time, saw what would take place, and warned the elect, or covenant people of God, of those characters who should arise personating himself, and others professing to be prophets of God, that they should beware of them, and not be deceived.

We presume that all, whoever have professed belief in the latter day work will agree, as to the time these characters were to appear to act their part as predicted; viz., in the days just prior to the coming of the Son of man. But for the benefit of professing christians, or those making no claim to such a position, whose minds might not be so clear on this subject, we would advise them to turn to the chapter and read, and they will find that Christ predicted great tribulation to come on the inhabitants of Jerusalem, such suffering as had never been known to that time, nor ever should be sent upon Israel again. And in Luke 21st chapter, he declares that the Jews "shall fall by the edge of the sword, and shall be led away captive among all nation; and Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled." The trouble, or tribulation brought upon the city at the time of its destruction, Josephus gives a graphic description of; the reading of which, by any sympathetic mind, would produce sorrow and pain, at such calamity and suffering endured by that people. The tribulation to be endured by that people after being scattered among all nations, as depicted and predicted by Moses in the 28th chapter of Deuteronomy, has been demonstrated by many historians to have been fulfilled upon their heads, but according to Christ's prediction (and many of the prophets before Christ), those days of tribulation were to cease, and that in the days just prior to Christ's second coming.

It is a matter notorious to the public who are posted from time to time through the medium of the press, that the Jews are beginning to enjoy equal rights of citizenship in the different nations in which they reside, some of them being raised to the highest positions of trust and posts of honor accessible to the citizens of those nations, and the persecutions of that people are being confined within a small limit. We conclude then, that the days of their tribulation have ceased, or are ceasing very fast. In these days then, we may look for these characters spoken of to arise.

We give credit to some of them for sincerity and honesty in their belief that they are the true servants of God, and their credulity so acted upon by the arch-deceiver may be so secured, and they believe honestly to the time of the end, until Christ shall come, and their honesty in their belief may cause them to be amongst that number, who will go with such confidence to the Savior and say, "Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name, and in thy name cast out devils, and in thy name done many wonderful works." But poor souls, they will find out that although they had been so grossly deceived, as to believe they were acting in the name (authority) of Jesus Christ, as his servants, he will declare unto them that they never knew him, and they will have to depart from him. Sad, sad indeed, their condition, but what a warning to us, not to receive all who profess to come in the name of the Lord.

The Savior declared that he spake those things for the elect's sake, and they were the elect according to the covenant. Of course the elect are then upon the earth when these false prophets shall arise. The word elect signifies choice, the elect, or chosen people of God. Chosen how? According to the covenant. They were then brought into this condition by conforming to the conditions of the covenant, that covenant by which people enter into relationship with God, are born of him, become his elect, which is nothing more nor less than the everlasting gospel, as shown by Peter in his first epistle 1st chapter, 23d and 25th verses, "Being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God which liveth and abideth forever. * * * But the word of the Lord endureth forever. And this is the word which by the gospel is preached unto you."

The elect, we perceive, are upon the earth when these false prophets arise. This is as natural a consequence, as for the effect to follow a cause of which it is the effect, and therefore could not precede it, and also of a counterfeit, which could not precede a genuine of which it is the counterfeit, so also must the false prophet follow the true prophet of which he is the counterfeit. We can not apply the name of false prophet to professing Christians in general, for they do not believe in prophesying in these days; and hence would not be apt to prophesy in the name of the Lord. We must look therefore to some other source for these pretenders. We know no better way to detect a counterfeit than to place it in juxtaposition with the genuine; hence will have to determine the rise and establishment of true prophets in these days, in which their counterfeits will act their part.

The prophet Isaiah declared in the 24th chapter of his book that the whole earth, priest and people, servant and master, maid and mistress, buyer and seller, borrower and lender, taker of usury and giver of usury, were under the curse of a broken covenant, having as he says, "transgressed the laws, changed the ordinance, and broken the everlasting covenant," and the time that this should take place was just prior to the time when "the inhabitants of the earth shall be burned and few men left;" and to the time when "the moon shall be confounded and the sun ashamed, when the Lord of Hosts shall reign in Mount Zion, and in Jerusalem and before His ancients gloriously." The time, we perceive, must be in the same days spoken of by the Savior, but must have been prior to there being any elect, or God's people, or their counterfeits, the false prophets; or it could not have been said truthfully by the prophet, "The earth also is defiled under the inhabitants thereof, because they have transgressed the laws, changed the ordinance and broken the everlasting covenant." The elect are so according to the covenant, hence are obedient to its provisions and could not fall under the curse of a broken covenant. But when this burning of the inhabitants of the earth takes place, a few men are to be left. It is to be as the gleaning of grapes when the vintage is done, few men left in comparison to the great bulk of mankind; and these few are to glorify God in the fires, which fire will have no more effect upon them than that of Nebuchadnezzar had upon the three Hebrews. But if there were to be a few men left, and who were not under condemnation so as to suffer with the rest of mankind, they must not have been under the charge of breaking the covenant, and if so, after all the inhabitants of the earth enumerated in the second verse, as priest and people, &c., had been charged with breaking the everlasting covenant, then the covenant or gospel must have been restored, or otherwise there could not be any elect according to the covenant to need the warning of the Lord.

John the Revelator says in the 14th chapter of his book, "I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach to them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, kindred, tongue, and people, saying with a loud voice, Fear God and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come; and worship him that made heaven and earth, the sea, and the fountain of waters." Here, we perceive, is a sweeping charge, like as in Isaiah, against all the inhabitants of the earth, that they were not worshipping the God that made the heavens and the earth, the sea, and the fountain of waters; hence were under a broken covenant, for the message was to all the inhabitants of the earth." To every nation (none excluded) and kindred, and tongue, and people, to them that dwell on the earth. If there be any who happen not to dwell on the earth, they are excluded, but if they dwell on the earth it is to them at the time spoken of, which time was the hour of God's judgment (therefore not the time in which John lived, but a subsequent period) the time of the end. This gospel covenant then, had been broken, and here was the mode of restoring it, that all the inhabitants of the earth might avail themselves of its provisions, if they will obey its conditions and become the elect according to the covenant. Who, in these days, when the tribulation of the Jews was about to cease, ever claimed that they had received such a message, before Joseph Smith announced that a holy angel had brought the everlasting gospel to him, to be preached to every nation, kindred, tongue and people that dwell upon the earth. Professing Christians, prior to his time, and ever since, have claimed that angels had ceased to visit the human family, that the awful voice of prophecy was forever hushed; and raised the cry of fanatic, false prophet, impostor, because he, desirous of serving his God, could not decide which of the many conflicting churches then extant, professing to be the church of God, was accepted of Him.

Enquire of which one he would, they would bewilder him more and more, for each one declared they were right and the others were wrong. In this frame of mind he went to the word of God to see if he could find any help out of this dilemma, and sure enough he received the help needed as his eye fell upon the saying of James, "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally and upbradeth not, and it shall be given him." Strengthened by this scripture, perceiving that no man who lacked wisdom was exempted from going to God with his case, and he certainly was in that situation, assured that he would receive liberally and not be upbraided for asking, he sought to the Lord in secret prayer, and in a heavenly vision received the answer that none of the churches extant upon the earth were of God; that they were drawing near to Him with their lips while their hearts were far from him; that their fear towards Him was taught by the precepts of men, and he was commanded to go not after any one of them, that his sins were then forgiven him, and ere long the true gospel of the Son of God would be made known unto him.

He claims that in fulfillment of this promise, as well as the prediction of John as before quoted, that a holy angel did restore unto him the gospel as preached by Jesus and the apostles, and gave him authority to preach it, and to ordain others to preach it to the inhabitants of the earth; and also gave authority to organize the church of God after the original pattern as contained in the New Testament, and to promise to all who would obey the gospel as preached by him and his colaborers, that they should receive gifts, graces and blessings, that the children of God enjoyed anciently; that the signs enumerated in Mark 16th that were to follow the believing of the word, were to follow believers in this age. Professing Christians styled him an impostor. Is it like the work of an impostor to place within the power of those sought to be imposed upon, the means of detecting the imposition? If liable to the charge of imposition because declaring the same church organization. The same gospel to induct people into that organization by reason of which they sustain a relationship with God through Christ, as Christ and His apostles declared in their day, then the same charge by the same parity of reasoning, could be fastened upon Christ and the apostles for performing the same act. They have charged him with being a false prophet; but the same line of argument will serve against this as against that of imposition. They seem to lose sight of the fact that when they charge him with being a false prophet, they virtually acknowledge the existence of true prophets for a false prophet trying to represent a true one must follow, not precede that which he is trying to imitate or counterfeit. But say they, any man professing to be a prophet of God in these days is a false one, because there was to be none after John's day; the scripture declares, "The law and the prophets were until John, since that the kingdom of God is preached, and every man presseth into it."—Luke 16: 16.

My Christian friends, you ought not to jump to such a conclusion as this so quick, you ought to have searched the scriptures more carefully. A more thorough search of them would have saved you from having to recall your hasty decision. If you had reflected a little you would have remembered that the Savior is that prophet who was declared by Moses should be raised up among his brethren, who should be like unto him, and was to be heard in all things; or that soul that would not hear him should be cut off from among the people. If you had turned to the 12th chapter of first Corinthians, you would there have found that "God set [in this kingdom that every man pressed into] in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, etc.," and to the fourth chapter of Ephesians, you would have found that when Jesus "ascended up on high, he led captivity captive, and gave gifts unto men. He gave some apostles, and some prophets," etc. If you had turned to the 21st chapter of Acts you would have found a prophet, Agabus, who prophesied about Paul being bound at Jerusalem; and that there were four daughters of Philip, which did prophesy. And also to the 11th chapter of Revelations, you would have found that just prior to Christ's coming to reign on the earth, when it should be declared that "The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and His Christ;" two prophets were to live upon the earth; and in the days of their prophesying they should "have power to shut heaven so that it rain not, and have power over waters to turn them to blood, and to smite the earth with all plagues as often as they will." So that according to the New Testament history, prophets were not done away at John's time, but were set in the church by God, and that they exercised the functions of their office and prophesied. It was designed in the economy of God that they should remain in the church. If as the apostle Paul declares, the church as organized in his day was the work of God, all church organizations differing from that necessarily can not be of God; unless the parties interested in those organizations can show from God's revealed word, that He ever intimated that such changes would take place. And if it was possible for that to be done, how could we poor souls place confidence in Him for life and salvation, such a vacillating being he would have to be, to be the author of all the church organizations now extant, represented as His church? But having arrived at different conclusions with respect to the character of the God we worship from the reading of his word, we rejoice in the character He sustains there. He is represented as a "perfect God," one that "changes not," "without variableness or shadow of a turning," "who knows the end from the beginning," etc. Being perfect and knowing the end from the beginning there would be no necessity for experimenting in His case, so as to make any improvement upon any of His works if any portion should fail. No, without variableness or shadow of a turning, whatever He did establish to bring about His righteous purposes would remain the same until those purposes were accomplished.

Paul, in the fourth chapter of Ephesians, declares that the church organization which God had established was given for a certain purpose, namely: "For the perfecting of the Saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ. That we henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness whereby they lie in wait to deceive." The time of the continuation of this organization is stated plainly in the 13th verse. "Till we, in the unity of the faith all come to the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ." Is there a sane person belonging to any church, professing to be the church of Christ, that will say that the above conditions have been arrived at by that church? We think not. If then those conditions are not arrived at which God established his church to accomplish, and especially in view of the character he bears, how can it be said that God is the author of any church organization differing from it? It is man that vacillates and changes, that experiments and sees a necessity for improving upon his plans, limited in judgment, finite in capacity, ever changing. We need not trace the church history from its establishment by Christ, through its devious windings, heretical teachings, and final departure from God, and culminating in the Popish hierarchy. Place the two church organizations in juxtaposition, "God set in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers, after that miracles, then gifts of healing, helps, governments, diversities of tongues."—1 Cor. 12: 28. Who are set in the church that claims to be the continued church of Christ? First a Pope, after him cardinals, archbishops, etc. A change is made, but it can not be charged to God. He changes not! Who changes? Finite, short sighted, erring man changes, and the change must be accounted to him, consequently man is the author of the church organization known as the church of Rome. Numerous offspring of this church, allclaiming to be the church of God have come forth, and notwithstanding their good intentions, and we are free to confess they have done much good in moralizing the world, their church organization can have no higher claim than the mother.

This was the condition of things, with the exception of the offspring not being so numerous as at present, sixty years and upwards ago, when the young man sought unto his God to know which of these churches was accepted of him, and received the answer that none of them were. The condition of the religious world at that time warranted this declaration that none of the churches were accepted of God, and also of the necessity of the angel's message with the everlasting gospel, the organizing anew the church of God, which must include the authority from God to do it, the preaching of the gospel and the administering of its ordinances by which men and women are inducted into the church, or family of God. These things have been done, the church of God established to the truth of which thousands of its members have borne testimony, having proved the truth of the Savior's saying, "If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God or whether I speak of myself." The latter day Seer gave the same test to the world in the name of the Lord, to prove his calling, and by it he has been proved through the manifestations of God to thousands to be a true servant of him, and his message the truth of heaven. Not only has he received that Spirit which Christ said should show his disciples things to come, but many in the church have been shown things to come, which things have come to pass, and which fills the bill of a true prophet according to Moses' test, Deut. 18: 22. Thus true prophets are established in the church, and there are none who have ever embraced this latter day work, even those who dissented from us, but believe that Joseph Smith was called of God to inaugurate it upon the earth.

We have found the true prophets, and our object now is, to find out the false prophets who will deceive the very elect if possible. As we have before stated we can not look for them among professing Christians of other churches, for they do not believe in prophets, therefore can not be rightfully accused of being either true or false. The spiritualists may profess to prophecy, but the elect would not be in danger in the least by them, because they have no church organization, to our knowledge; therefore can not have any claim to even a counterfeit; and as to Christ, they ridicule the idea of his being the Savior, but they believe him to have been a fine spiritualistic medium. By the rule which says, "There is no other name given under heaven, or among men whereby man can be saved," they are condemned and we pass them by as not filling the bill. To what source then shall we look for the rise of these false prophets, who shall deceive the very elect if possible? We must look to those who have a very close counterfeit of the genuine in all their aspects,

A false prophet must assume the character of a true one, even if he did not believe that he was one, both in the message that he professes to be sent with, as well as in church organization, and authority to act in the premises, or the elect would not be very apt to listen to him at all. We must look among those, some of whom, having left the genuine church, and for some alleged reason or other believe that the original has gone astray, and is now rejected of God; or we must look among those who have departed from the original faith of the church, but still believe that they are the original church of God, for their organizations resemble the genuine church in apostles, prophets, &c., they believe in prophets, and must when acting as such, be false.

The reader will remember in the examination of the different churches from the church of Rome to her multiplied daughters, that no claim of a counterfeit even could be established, it was therefore useless to examine their teachings, for if not the church of God their teachings could not be accepted of God. But here are some whose church organizations imitate the genuine very closely, and their doctrine in many respects is the same, which to fill the prediction of deceiving if possible the very elect, must necessarily be so; but applying the great detector, the word of God, their true position is made manifest. The Lord, speaking through John the Revelator, to that portion of the church residing at Ephesus as recorded in 2d chapter, 2d verse, says: "I know thy works, and thy labor, and thy patience, and how thou canst not bear them which are evil, and thou hast tried them who say they are apostles, and are not, and hast found them liars." It seems by this that the people of God have it in their power to try those who claim to be apostles, whether they are entitled to that name or not; and if so, they must have it in their power to try the validity of the prophet's claims. Evidently they must be tried by the word of God. The Savior says, John 12:48, "He that rejecteth me, and receiveth not my words hath one that judgeth him; the word that I have spoken shall judge him in the last day." If men are to be judged by the word of God in the last day, surely men are to be tried by that word now. After the death of the Martyr many men arose professing to be called to fill his place, and as it is said that history repeats itself, it did so at this time, they "drew away disciples after them," composing many factions, organized after the form of church government, professing to hold on to the original faith in its first principles.

One of the factions, the largest in point of numbers, through its chief representative, or prophet, said publicly on the stand, in Nauvoo in 1846, that the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Book of Doctrine and Covenants had answered their purpose, like a little boy's vest, who had outgrown it, and consequently the vest was useless, even so these books, containing the word of God, were useless to them now. Peter said the "word of the Lord abideth forever," Brigham said it was useless, and therefore had ceased. Jesus says, "by their fruits ye shall know them." Here is manifest fruit, discarding the word. And well they might try to discard the word, or they could not successfully introduce the pernicious practice of polygamy (another species of fruit) for that word of God condemned it as abominable in His sight. By their fruits therefore they are known not to be the church of God, although they have the form of church government agreeing with the original pattern, and they have deceived to a certain extent many of the elect, or people of God, but thanks to his holy name, many have had and many at present writing are having their eyes opened, and are coming out from among them, into the true fold of God.

Charles B. Thompson (Baneemy) discarded the organization of the church, and the principles of the gospel; said that we had risen above them, and that he had received a higher law to govern God's people. This higher law developed resources to fill his private coffers, the design of which unfolding to the minds of his dupes, caused him to have to flee for his life to escape their vengeance. The life of this faction was of short duration, and it was the only one that did not recognize the necessity of the church organization, to our knowledge. These two leaders, by their fruits, are condemned as false prophets. Rigdon, if he started right, (as some say), soon went astray, introducing into the worship of his followers that they should ask for blessings in the name of Jesus Christ and the "Days man of Zion," when the word of the Lord says that the name of Jesus is the only name in which we are to address the Father and receive of His blessings. This is a particular fruit that does not grow on the gospel vine, and the word of God condemns the one that bears it as not genuine. But the faction he was at the head of culminated in polygamy, or its equivalent, and by the word of God this practice is condemned as abominable in the sight of God, and places Rigdon as a leader among the false prophets. The leaders of the balance of the factions (there may be some exceptions) went into that iniquitous practice, and therefore are condemned by the word. If David Whitmer had observed closely that book he has so persistently testified to as being true, the truth of which he so stoutly, and continuously declares was made known unto him by the voice of an holy angel from heaven, he would not be found among that number who deny a portion of the revelations of that man, who under God, brought forth the Book of Mormon, for that book positively declares of him; "and I will give unto him a commandment that he shall do none other work, save the work I shall command him. And I will make him great in mine eyes; for he shall do my work."—2 Book Nephi, 2d chap. 2d par. Here the Lord makes known unto Joseph of old what will take place; no guess work, no room for a failure to come in. The Lord who foreknew all things, declared that that man should accomplish His work, the declarations of apostates to the contrary notwithstanding. If that Seer should have fallen and given revelations that were spurious, he would not be doing the work of the Lord, and thus the word of the Lord to Joseph would have failed, and the foreknowledge of God be at a discount. The Lord says of him, "I will make him great in mine eyes." If he was great in the eyes of the Lord, no matter how small he may be in the eyes of those who calumniate him; if he, as the Lord said, was to do his work, and men who once walked with him a part of the way and then sat in judgment upon his doings, and condemned a part of the work which he did as not of God, which is true, God, or man?

But says one, do you mean to say that God would destroy his agency? No sir! But being taught in the word of God, that he knoweth the end from the beginning; we can easily perceive that God knowing the end of the Seer's life, from the beginning, could predict through his servant Joseph of old, that he would use that agency in accomplishing the work of God. The Lord in this connection declares that they who seek to destroy that Seer, shall be confounded. How many times has this been fulfilled on the heads of men seeking to destroy his character. This ought to be a warning to all those who are going about, seeking in their puny strength to destroy the character of this man, who have left the light of the gospel brought forth by his instrumentality, and are walking in the light of the fires of their own kindling, and compassing themselves about with sparks; but says the word, "This shall they have from my hand, they shall lie down in sorrow," and if they lie down in sorrow, what will their rising, or resurrection be? The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ is what its name suggests, a re-assembling of the solid fragments of the old church, which was disorganized at the death of the two chief shepherds. Reorganized by the command of Almighty God, composed of the same offices and ordinances, and teaching the same faith or gospel as did the old church, striving to live by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God, whether contained in the Bible, Book of Mormon, or latter day revelations. Thousands have done and are still testifying that God has made known unto them the truth of these things. They are therefore the elect according to the covenant; and although history may repeat itself, and men may arise speaking perverse things to draw away disciples after them, claiming to be apostles, or prophets, yet the elect need not be deceived, for they can try them by the word of God, and prove that they are not the true apostles or prophets of God.

TITHING.

DEAR HERALD:—I do not often trouble you, but as a member of the body I desire to be heard with reference to the question of tithing. While I have sought to understand the law, learn my duty, and make myself a workman to teach in harmony with the law of God and to truly represent the body, I have paid less attention to the law of tithing than any other, believing that it was the peculiar duty of the Twelve and Bishopric to execute, and their agent to teach, that law. And as I was devoting all my time and energies to the ministry, I felt that I certainly was paying my own tithing. But as a representative member of the body, and believing that the work of the promulgation of the gospel is being hindered by many influential persons withholding their tithes and offerings because, as they claim, "there are so many theories being taught;" "no unity between the ideas of the first Bishop and Twelve;" "the two Bishops and their council teaching differently;" a "difference in the views of the Bishopric and First Presidency;" "the Bishop's Agents not teaching alike, and unequal disbursement;" I have been led to pray, and search, and try to understand the matter. I am desirous to present it, that if I am wrong I may be corrected. I find as many ideas and opinions on this matter as there are quills on the back of the porcupine; that the various writers and teachers have confounded in their quotations parts of law which relate to the law of consecration with those that relate to the law of tithing, two distinctly separate laws, hence much confusion; also that in the various writings and teachings there are four words that have been strangely perverted and variously applied—I refer to the words "consecration," "tithing," "surplus," and "execute." Now the true meaning of these words must be determined, universally understood, and taught alike, or we might write volumes, the multiplicity of which only darkens counsel.

Section 1, paragraph 5, tells us the law is given in the English language, adapted to our weakness, that we might understand; and when we come to a word not understood, instead of going to a wicked apostate like W. E. McLellan, let us go to the only standard, the dictionary. There we find that "consecration" does not mean tithing, nor one-tenth; but to "set apart as sacred" anything, much or little. "Tithing" does not mean consecration nor all your surplus, but "a tenth of anything," or "taxation to that amount." "Surplus" does not mean consecration, nor tithing, nor a tenth, but "excess beyond what is necessary." "Execute" is not alone to teach, but to carry into effect." In the first law given to govern the church, section 42, the gathering of the church unto the land of Zion is contemplated, and in this gathered condition the law of consecration; 8th paragraph teaches as of primary and immediate importance a consecration of property for the poor. The 9th paragraph teaches consecration of property; 10th paragraph teaches a second consecration of surplus—"more than is necessary for their support." In this consecration we understand that the individual was to place all, not one-tenth of their properties by an "inventory" before the bishop, and was to receive back such portion as was mutually understood as necessary, (not one-tenth), and they received a deed of this as their inheritance. And all over and above this, (which was surplus), was placed in the Lord's Store House. In May, three months after this, comes instruction (sec. 51: par. 1) how they were to be organized under this law, (consecration), that the Bishop should appoint unto every man his portion "according to their families, according to their circumstances, and their wants, and needs"—not according to one-tenth, and the residue, the surplus, was to be so deeded that the transgressor could not withdraw such consecrated property. And in the 5th paragraph this is made an example unto "Edward Partridge, in other places in all churches—this would include Martin Harris also. The reason why he is mentioned in section 58: 7, is, that the law of consecration given to Edward Partridge is now beginning to be executed. They have just arrived in Zion; and as the first consecrating in Zion under this law, he becomes "an example unto the Church" by "laying his moneys before the Bishop," according to the example shown to the Bishop, Edward Partridge, in sec. 51: 5.

The next revelation we notice so often quoted—Section 64: 5—"Behold now it is called to day . . . a day of sacrifice and a day of tithing." This day we find extends from September, 1831, till Christ comes, a period of sacrifice, (consecration), and a period of tithing, (a tenth of your increase annually). Consecration in the gathered condition, and tithing while scattered. And what is conclusive that the law at that part of that long day was consecration, and not tithing, is found in a later codicil, or supplement, given three months later—Section 72: 3—"The word of the Lord in addition to the law which has been given; for according to the law, every man that cometh up to Zion must lay all things before the Bishop in Zion." (This included Martin Harris, who must also lay all things before the Bishop in Zion). This was the law to govern Zion, is not repeated, and will again govern Zion when the land is redeemed, as we will try to show before we conclude. In Times and Seasons, vol. 6, page 801, in a letter dated Kirtland, as late as July 2d, 1833, signed by the First Presidency, we have as follows:

"Bro. E. Partridge; Sir:—I proceed to answer your question concerning the consecration of property. First, it is not right to condescend to very great particulars in taking inventories. The fact is, a man is bound by the law of the church, to consecrate to the bishop, before he can be considered a legal heir to the kingdom of Zion; and this, too, without constraint; and unless he does this, he can not be acknowledged before the Lord, on the church books: therefore, to condescend to particulars, I will tell you that every man must be his own judge, how much he shall receive, and how much he should suffer to remain in the hands of the bishop. I speak of those who consecrate more than they need for the support of themselves and their families. The matter of consecration must be done by the mutual consent of both parties. For, to give the Bishop power to say how much every man shall have, and he be obliged to comply with the Bishop's judgment, is giving to the Bishop more power than a king has; and upon the other hand, to let a man say how much he needs, and the Bishop be obliged to comply with his judgment, is to throw Zion into confusion, and make a slave of the Bishop. The fact is, there must be a balance or equilibrium of power between the Bishop and the people, and thus harmony and good will be preserved among you. Therefore, those persons consecrating property to the Bishop in Zion, and then receiving an inheritance back, must show reasonably to the Bishop that he wants as much as he claims. But in case that the two parties can not come to a mutual agreement, the Bishop is to have nothing to do about receiving their consecrations; and the case must be laid before a council of twelve High Priests, the Bishop not being one of the council; but he is to lay the case before them."

In 1861 the Lord gives instructions to the Twelve and Bishopric "to execute the law of tithing"—not consecration. In 1833, the Saints were driven out of the land of Zion because they were too covetous to keep the law of consecration. They had not "purchased the lands" as commanded in section 63: 3, and from this time were driven from "city to city, and from synagogue to synagogue," as this same paragraph declares would be the penalty of violation of this law. And in section 98 the Lord plainly tells them this, and also promises that they shall return after patiently enduring this chastisement. And he shows them in a parable, in paragraph six, how they had gathered, how they had acted, and how they should be redeemed;—they began to say, "what need hath my Lord of this tower? . . . might not the money [consecration] be given to the exchangers." The redemption was sure, but far off. Read paragraph eight—"When shall these be?" . . . "When I will." And in section 102: 8, of the redemption, "It is my will that these lands should be purchased, and after they are purchased that my Saints should possess them according to the laws of consecration which I have given." And in paragraph ten we read: "Let those commandments which I have given concerning Zion and her law be executed and fulfilled after her redemption." * * * And inasmuch as they [the Elders] follow the counsel they receive, they shall have power after many days to accomplish all things pertaining to Zion." For three and a half years after the expulsion we find them "driven from city to city," torn with dissensions, division and apostasy. And in Far West they asked the Lord, in sec. 106, "How much [in our present condition] thou requirest of the properties of thy people for a tithing." They could not at this time consecrate if they would; but they were required to contribute according to the necessity of the case at that time, "for unto every law there are certain bounds and conditions."—Sec. 85: 7. The condition at this time was, 1, There was a house to build; 2, A heavy church debt on the presidency; the families of the ministry to sustain; a large number of destitute poor, etc. Therefore the Lord answers the question, that he requires "all their surplus property;" if that meant everybody to give one-tenth it would have been oppressive to some who had not enough to feed their children to require one tenth of their property! What an absurdity! And after this they were to pay one-tenth of all their interest, annually. The church has decided that these conditions do not exist to-day, that there are no "debts of the presidency," and no house (temple) to build just now; and that if the Saints will "pay one tenth of their interest annually," it will amply sustain the families of the ministry, and the poor. But instead of the church doing that much, the reports of the Bishop show that while the church numbers about twenty thousand the tithing paid is very meagre. The Saints might say with the old Deacon, "Thank the Lord for the Mormon Church, it has only cost us — cents per annum!" But the objection is raised, Does not section 106 say that paying all their surplus is "the beginning of the tithing of my people," "and those who have thus been tithed shall pay one tenth of all their interest annually." I answer that when they paid all their surplus, whether much or little or nothing, if in their heart they had the will, is the entrance fee into the order of tithing—they were in the eye of law tithed from that time till their first annual installment—one-tenth of interest—was due; that the payment of this "all surplus," although not at present exacted is not repealed, but in force at any future time when the conditions require it, "for the building of my house, for the laying of a foundation in Zion, for building a Tithing Store-house in Independence, [or anywhere else.—Ed.], to quarry marble, etc., this surplus could be again required; and if then exacted from those who are not now paying any tithing, and from those coming into the kingdom at that time it would only place them on an equality with those who have paid tithing annually for years. And as the Lord liveth if the Saints will prove the Lord "to-day" by paying the tenth of their interest we shall cease to hear the continual cry,—I can not pay anything this year, for my hogs have all died, and my cows have died, my corn crop did not turn out as I thought it would, I have been sick all summer and had to hire help and pay a doctor." But they will be so far blessed that when the call comes they will not only be ready to pay "all their surplus," but to lay all before the Bishop in Zion. But now many are waiting to do some big thing, (that they will never accomplish), when if they complied with this light, easy "yoke," Zion's cause would flourish. The drops make the ocean. "Despise not the day of small things."

BAPTISM ESSENTIAL TO SALVATION.

INASMUCH as the necessity of baptism for the remission of sins is often denied, because the claim is made that the thief was pardoned, consequently saved without baptism; I will give my opinion also in regard to the matter. I have heard the claim made that he must have been baptized, because it is written, "Then went out to him Jerusalem, and all Judea, and all the region round about Jordan, and were baptized of him in Jordan confessing their sins."—Matt. 3: 5, 6. This I think is not good evidence that he was baptized then, as the Scribes and Pharisees were not baptized of John, and the thief might have been one of them. Again, he might not have lived in the region referred to, as it did not include all the land of Israel.

Again; he might have been of another nation.

Again; the claim is made that he must have been a baptized believer, as he knew Jesus and called him Lord, and that "no man can say that Jesus is the Christ (or Lord) but by the Holy Ghost." This I think also untenable, from the fact that the Holy Ghost was not yet given, as Jesus was not yet glorified, (John 7: 39), and was not as a witness until Pentecost.

Again: we are told that there is no evidence that he was pardoned, or saved, as Jesus the third day had not yet ascended to the Father, and that the promise was, "This day shalt thou be with me in paradise." and that Christ went and preached to the spirits in prison that day, and that the thief must have gone to the prison, to have been with Christ that day. This is also untenable as it locates paradise in the prison-house of disobedient spirits; called hell in Ez. 32, and elsewhere. And from Rev. 2: 7, we learn that the tree of life blooms in the "midst of the paradise of God." And in Rev. 21: 22, it is located beside the river of life in the Holy Jerusalem.

"Well," says one, "if you reject all these, what reason shall we give?" Answer. The word of the Lord. That Jesus had the power and legal right to forgive sins without baptism while here before his death, is evident from Matt. 9th chapter, Mark 2d, and Luke 5th. But the law, the gospel covenant, of which Jesus was mediator, which enjoined baptism as essential to salvation; to the remission of sins, as taught in Mark 16: 15, 16, Acts 2: 38 and elsewhere, was not in force when the thief was answered by the loving Savior. As proof, read Heb 11: 15, 17, "And for this cause he [Christ] is the mediator of the new testament, that by means of death, for the redemption of the transgressions that were under the first testament, they which are called might receive the promise of eternal inheritance. For where a testament is, there must also of necessity be the death of the testator. For a testament is of force after men are dead, otherwise it is of no strength at all while the testator liveth."

This needs no comment. Before his death he could forgive sins without baptism; but after he had put that covenant in force by his death and then taught the law, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, and he that believeth not (and consequently was not baptized) shall be damned;" then it was in force, binding upon all mankind for Jesus could not lie, and thus dishonor the law his father sent him to teach. As Moses, mediator of the first covenant, when his sister Miriam was stricken with leprosy, cried out, "Heal her now, O God, I beseech thee." Num. 12: 13. When God called his attention to the fact that there was a law given recently for the cleansing of leprosy, and she must comply with that. This law is found in Lev. 14th chapter. Of course, there are exceptions to all laws. I once had a noble man, a true believer in Christ beg of me to baptize him, in January, when the ice was very thick, and no water near, whilst he lay at the point of death, passing away a few days after. Will not God accept the earnest desire of that heart to obey him for the act? I think that he will, especially when circumstances prevented obedience.

THE FAITH OF THE SAINTS.

"Beloved, when I gave all diligence to write unto you of the common salvation, it was needful for me to write unto you, and exhort you that you should earnestly contend for the faith which was once delivered to the Saints."—Jude 3.

This Scripture introduces to my mind a series of thoughts and reflections which I submit for the consideration of those who choose to read. The epistle in which this language occurs is peculiar; consisting of but one chapter, and, seemingly directed to meet a peculiar crisis in the history of the primitive church. Jude had previously written to them an epistle, in which their attention was called to the impending danger of departing from the faith. This important document has been lost, so the canon of Scripture, supposed by many to be complete, is not full, for God's will respecting the Church as reflected by the Apostle Jude—a document of evident importance—is missing, and its contents unknown. The prophetic foresight of Christ and his apostles detected the invasion of the enemy, and in repeated admonitions warned the brethren to hold fast to their profession, and the gospel by which they were made free. At an early period the apostle Paul had occasion to draft an epistle to the Galatian churches. (How many churches, or branches there were in this Province I have no means of knowing), in which they are reproved for the sin of apostacy. "O foolish Galatians, who hath bewitched you, that ye should not obey the truth, before whose eyes Jesus Christ hath been evidently set forth, crucified among you? This only would I learn of you, Receive ye the Spirit by the works of the law, or by the hearing of faith? Are ye so foolish? having begun in the Spirit, are ye now made perfect by the flesh? Have ye suffered so many things in vain? if it be yet in vain. He therefore that ministereth to you the Spirit, and worketh miracles among you, doeth it by the works of the law, or by the hearing of faith."—Gal. 3: 1-5.

It seems by this that the gospel had been properly ministered to them, and they had "begun in the Spirit," realizing the fulfillment of the promise of Christ; yet, tradition with its iron hand sought to drag them back into the beggarly elements of the world. The whole emphasis of the epistle of Jude with which we are favored, is directed to meet this invasion of the enemy that threatened the destruction of the churches, not only in Galatia, but in every part of the world, whither the gospel had been carried and proclaimed. Apostacy, like a dread specter, followed the footsteps of truth, closely contesting every inch of ground. "Another gospel" had served to "bewitch" the Galatian Saints. After having "begun in the Spirit," they sought to be made perfect by the flesh. After the wearisome years of journeying and toil, to build up and establish the work of God among the people, the Apostle to the Gentiles, gave utterance to expressions indicative of the fact that a general disaffection had entered the churches throughout Asia. We note the most prominent forms of seduction, presented by the arch enemy foe the overthrow of the churches of God.

First, the attempted re-establishment of the "law of works."—Acts 15. Gal. 1st, 2d, 3d and 4th chapters. Second, denial of a future resurrection.—1 Cor. 15: 12. 2 Tim. 2: 17, 18. Third, perversion of the Eucharist. 1 Cor. 11. Fourth, perversion of the marital relation.—1 Cor. 5: 1. Rev. 2: 13, 14, and 20. Repudiation of Christ, Jude 4. 2 Peter 2: 1. Doctrine of celibacy 1 Tim. 4: 3.

Jude concludes his letter by exhorting the Saints to live in the love of God, keeping themselves from the evils of the world.

GEORGE S. HYDE.

TRY THE SPIRITS.

How is man, unaided, ever prone to perversion! To put darkness for light, and light for darkness; good for evil, and evil for good; that which is of God for that which is of the adversary, and contrariwise.

Are there many false spirits in the world? Are they to be detected as such? How is it to be done? What is the rule? Though the powers of discernment be ever so general amongst the Lord's people, is that their sure remedy against spirit deceptions? Does the inspired word so decide?

In 1 John 4: 1-3, the token of kind or character, is evidently one not of manner, but of doctrine referred to the intelligence of those who ought to know what the truth is. Does any one teach that "Jesus Christ is not come in the flesh," the spirit he is of is known, not by its traits though ever so sweetly endued, but by the doctrine taught. But if there are those who would have him (Christ) no more than a man, what of those who seem to confess him, but who are not of him? In Doc. & Cov., sec. 52: 5, we have: "Wherefore, by this pattern ye shall know the spirits in all cases under the whole heavens." "By this pattern" and not by a gift, other than an intellect trained to understand what is plainly said.

But is there not a power by which the children of the kingdom may know the truth of all things? There is. But what about the pattern? Is it not a thing of inspiration? Was it only given to show what might be revealed? Or is it indeed the way to try the spirits? Why should it not be if it be so infallible and so universal, that no spirit under the whole heaven shall be able to evade its terms? If to the pattern we must go, we have: "Wherefore, he that prayeth whose spirit is contrite, the same is accepted of me if he obey mine ordinances. He that speaketh whose spirit is contrite, whose language is meek and edifieth, the same is of God if he obey mine ordinances. And again, he that trembleth under my power shall be made strong, and shall bring forth fruits of praise and wisdom, according to the revelations and truths which I have given you."—Doc. and Cov., Sec. 52: 4. But instead of having to remember all this would it not be less trouble to sift this matter directly through our discernment? To answer interrogatively, suppose while we are exercising our discernment we also are found under an influence not of God? How then? But what is a contrite spirit? What is meek language? Except we accord here in our decisions, we might never agree in regard to any manifestation purporting to be divine.

Is a contrite spirit one that is well satisfied with its own perfections, and the charms of its dear ones? Is it apt to tell of the excellencies of the world it is in? Is it not more apt to mourn for the blight of sin, and the suffering and woe of its fellows? Is it not given more to regret than to levity? What has it to rejoice in but the truth? What has it to praise, but the doings of its God who shall the curse remove?

"Now the man Moses was very meek, above all the men which were upon the face of the earth."—Num. 12: 3. In Heb. 11: 24, 25, Paul has him thus:—"By faith Moses, when he was come to years of discretion, refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter; choosing rather to suffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season."

If such deeds were the result of his faith, were they not also of his meekness? What if faith were only a compound of belief and meekness? What if the mightiest faith were only the strongest convictions combined with the greatest meekness? In the gospel sense, was there ever one of mighty faith whose meekness was not comparatively strong? Were it in Moses, a token of his faith? Why not of his meekness, that he should come down from his honors and pleasures to share the afflictions of his people? And what of his Ethiopian wife? Do proud men ignore the honors of blood? Were it not for his lack of pride, why should not the fairest of his tribe have been his own? And except at the waters of Meribah, who shall say he ever aspired above the good of his people? And though he did thus once speak unadvisedly, how soon was he the same Moses again!—the same in his farewell to his people, and in his ascent of the mount to die "there before the Lord!"

Meekness seeks not itself to please.
Nor spends its time for selfish cause.
To know it truly, and what it is,
We've only to know what Moses was.
And while its manner is not aspiring,
Its language is not high-sounding,
It ne'er seeks to make its words attracting,
Or its tone or subject towering.
Not as verbal pomp to some so charming,
Though, ever bold, 'tis yet retiring.

Miscellaneous.

BISHOP'S AGENTS.

To the Saints in the state of Colorado greeting: Whereas, we have some calls for preaching in this state and New Mexico, and seeing it not only takes a sacrifice of time, but it takes means to reach all these places, I therefore call upon all the Saints that are interested in the spread of the gospel truths in this state, to come up to the help of the Lord by bringing in your tithings and freewill offerings, or sending the same to my address, that there may be meat in the store-house of God, so as to send the gospel to those that are hungering and starving for the bread of life. And as the coffers of the church are low, I hope the Saints that are scattered throughout this state will respond to this call by sending in whatever they can afford, as the Lord may have blessed them. Let every one remember that every little helps; and not forget that the Lord loves the cheerful giver, and has promised to open the windows of heaven and pour out a blessing that there shall not be room to hold it. Yours in gospel bonds, JAMES KEMP, Bishop's Agent for Colorado.

HUTCHINSON, Jefferson Co., Colorado.

Having been appointed Bishop's Agent for the state of Oregon, I request the Saints and friends living in said state to forward all tithing and free will offerings to my address.

J. F. MORRIS, Sweet Home, Linn Co., Oregon

T. RUTH REPLIES TO PEDAGOGUE.

Dear Herald:—On page 446 of your issue for July 17th, we find the "Criticism on T. Ruth," and a very peculiar one it is indeed. We will here reproduce the words objected to by "Pedagogue," with its accompanying text and words. Genesis 6:49: "Because that Adam fell we are." Here "are" is used as "the present indicative plural of the substantive verb to be." It will be noticed in the article that the defining words are quotation marked, and are thereby shown to be the words of an author. And please permit me to tell you, brother Pedagogue, who that author was. It was none other than Webster, as you may find on page 23 of Academic Dictionary. You may also find on page 72 of his Unabridged Dictionary, the latest edition, the same definition of the word "are," viz.: "The present indicative plural of the substantive verb." Also on page 115, same work you may find the following in the defining of the verb "be." "This verb is defective, and its defects are supplied by verbs from other roots. * * * The case is the same with the substantive verb in most languages." But Pedagogue says, "There are no substantive verbs." Webster thinks differently. Which is most likely to be right is a matter for each to decide for himself. I believe I can afford to adhere to Webster.

PACIFIC MISSION.

To the Saints of Pacific Slope Mission, and whom it may concern:—This will notify you that in accordance with the direction of the Annual Conference of 1886, I have appointed Elder James R. Badham missionary to the city of Los Angeles, California, and vicinity. I trust the Saints of that locality will sustain and aid him in the prosecution of his missionary work, and pray that God may bless his labors to the salvation of souls. I cheerfully recommend him to the church and all others interested, as a representative of the Faith of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

HEMAN C. SMITH,

Pres. of Pacific Slope Mission.

DIED.

BRILL.—At the house of his son, in Harrison Co., Missouri, July 27th, 1886, of disease of the heart, Mr. August Brill, aged 64 years and 6 months. He was born near Berlin, Prussia; came to America in 1865, living eleven years near Chicago and in Streator, Illinois, and the past ten years in the neighborhood where he died and with his son-in-law, Bro. Lewis A. Fowler, in Lamoni. His wife died nine years ago. He leaves three sons and two daughters. He was a Lutheran in faith and lived a moral and upright life, orderly and peaceful in his ways, according to his understanding of his profession. He fell asleep as quietly as does a child. Funeral sermon by Elder Henry A. Stebbins.

DARWIN'S IDEA.

THE following has been given to the public as a letter written by Charles Darwin, in 1873, to a Dutch gentleman, in reply to an inquiry as to his belief in regard to the existence of a God:

"It is impossible to answer your question briefly: I am not sure that I could do so, even if I wrote at some length. But I may say that the impossibility of conceiving that this grand and wondrous universe, with our conscious selves, arose through chance, seems to me our chief argument for the existence of God; but whether this is an argument of real value I have never been able to decide. I am aware that, if we admit a first cause, the mind still craves to know whence it came and how it arose. Nor can I overlook the difficulty from the immense amount of suffering through the world. I am also induced to defer, to a certain extent, to the judgment of the many able men who have fully believed in God; but here, again, I see how poor an argument this is. The safest conclusion seems to be that the whole subject is beyond the scope of man's intellect; but man can do his duty."

This letter, it is stated, first appeared in a Dutch Free-Thought journal. Its genuineness has not, to our knowledge, been called in question.

INCREASE OF CRIME AMONG CHILDREN.

FRENCH statistics just published contain alarming information concerning the increase of crime among children of both sexes. The number of offenders under 16 years of age has augmented in five years from 2,235 to 5,579 for boys, and from 418 to 908 for girls. From 16 to 21 years of age the number of criminals has increased from 5,936 to 20,489 for boys and from 1,046 to 2,839 for girls. The ratio of crime among offenders under age has therefore considerably more than doubled during the last five years. The statistics register for the first time numerous cases of suicide committed by children.

PERSECUTION AND ITS CAUSES.

WE have thought for some time past to present our readers with the chief facts, so far as we can obtain them, in respect to the persecutions and drivings of the Saints, from the beginning of this last dispensation. In doing this we shall draw largely on the testimony of those who were the persecutors as we find it published in non-Mormon documents, and from those not members, but friends, and in this way enable the reader to reach fair and just conclusions as to the causes leading to, and the motives which prompted, these persecutions.

We have long believed that, when the facts were properly presented, it would be readily seen that Latter Day Saints have been as greatly misunderstood, their doctrines as badly misrepresented, their intentions and purposes as wrongfully construed, and their conduct and character as falsely represented as any people in all past time. But this is not to say that the Latter Day Saints were without fault, for we are aware they were and are imperfect in many ways, and also that much of their persecution was and is the result of their own sins and follies. What we have to say is, that the recorded facts prove that they were and are a far different and much better people than commonly supposed to be, even their enemies and other non-members being witnesses. As for Joseph Smith and his family, the Whitmers, Harrises, Knights, O. Cowdery, and others who first united with the Church, it is a recorded fact that they were orderly, industrious, and intelligent. Prior to the coming forth of the Book of Mormon, many of the Smiths were members of churches. Lucy (the mother of Joseph the Seer), Hyrum, Samuel Harrison and Sophronia were members of the Presbyterian Church, as also were some of the Knights, while Joseph was "somewhat partial to the Methodist sect."

But when the claims of the young seer and his associates in respect to the Book of Mormon, the restored gospel and Church of Christ were made known, the air was filled with strange and false rumors concerning them; their sincerity was questioned, their motives impugned, their claims misrepresented, their designs misstated, and their reputation villified. Persecution under the form of slander soon took on violence, and for years the young seer and his immediate associates were in danger, and some actually suffered violence because of their religious professions. Of these Saints Mrs. E. M. Austin, a late anti-Mormon writer, who claims to know from personal observation, says, "There were now [1831.—ED.] hundreds who were called people of good sense and judgment, men who were valued in good society, yet they were firm believers in Mormonism."—Mormonism, page 62. Of those in Kirtland, Ohio, in the first days of the Church (1830-1) she says, "The members now numbered about one hundred persons, the greater part of whom were the brightest and best of the community, merchants, lawyers and doctors. All were united in the belief that God had set his hand again—the second time—to recover the house of Israel."—Ibid. 58, 59.

We now give below some statements of Hon. John S. Reed, Esq., made before the State Convention in Nauvoo, Illinois, in 1844, in respect to the character of Joseph Smith the Seer, and some of his associates, also some of their early persecutions. Mr. Reed was not a member of the Church. Here is what he says:

Mr. Chairman:—I can not leave this subject and do justice to my own feelings, and the character of Joseph Smith, without giving a short history of the first persecution that came upon him in the counties of Chenango and Broome, in the State of New York, commenced by that class of people calling themselves Christians.

The first acquaintance I had with Joseph Smith, was about the year 1823. He came into my neighborhood, being then about eighteen years of age, and resided there two years; during which time I became intimately acquainted with him. I do know that his character was irreproachable; that he was well known for truth and uprightness; that he moved in the first circles of community, and he was often spoken of as a young man of intelligence and good morals, and possessing a mind susceptible of the highest intellectual attainments.

I early discovered that his mind was constantly in search of truth, expressing an anxious desire to know the will of God concerning his children here below, often speaking of those things which professed Christians believe in. I have often observed to my best informed friends, (those that were free from superstition and bigotry) that I thought Joseph was predestinated by his God from all eternity to be an instrument in the hands of the Great Dispenser of all good, to do a great work; what it was I knew not. After living in that neighborhood about three years, enjoying the good feelings of his acquaintances as a worthy youth, he told his particular friends that he had had a revelation from God to go to the west about eighty miles, to his father's, in which neighborhood he should find in the earth an old history written on golden plates, which would give great light and knowledge concerning the will of God towards his people in this generation, unfolding the destiny of all nations, kindreds and tongues; he said that he distinctly heard the voice of him that spake. Joseph Knight, one of the fathers of your church, a worthy man, and my intimate friend, went with him. When I reflect upon our former friendship, Mr. Chairman, and upon the scenes that he [Mr. Knight] has passed through in consequence of mal-administration, mobocracy, and cruelty, I feel to lift up my voice to high heaven, and pray God to bless the aged veteran, and that his silver locks may go down to the grave in peace, like a shock of corn fully ripe.

In a few days his friends returned with the glad news that Joseph had found the plates and had gone down to his father-in-law's for the purpose of translating them. I believe he remained there until he finished the translation. After the book was published, he came to live in the neighborhood of father Knight's, about four miles from me and began to preach the gospel, and many were pricked in their hearts, believed and were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus. He soon formed a church at Colesville; his meetings were numerous attended; the eyes of all people were upon him with astonishment. O, Mr. Chairman; the world was turned up side down at once, and the devil always ready to assist and help along in all difficulties that arise among men, personified in some of the religionists, begun to prick up his ears and jump and kick and run about like Jim Crow, calling for rotten eggs to help in the wake. You would have thought, sir, that Gog and Magog was let loose on the young man. He [the devil] called upon the world's people, (as they were called) but got no help; he then flew about in the sectarian churches like lightning, and they immediately came to his aid, and uniting their efforts roared against him [Joseph] like the thunders of Mount Sinai. When those fiery bigots were let loose, they united in pouring the red hot vials of their wrath upon his head. The cry of "false prophet! false prophet!" was sounded from village to village, and every foul epithet that malice and wicked ingenuity could invent, was heaped upon him. Yes, sir; the same spirit that influenced the Presbyterians of Massachusetts about one hundred and fifty years ago in their persecution of the Quakers when they first began to preach their doctrines in that State, was fully manifested by those religious bigots who were afraid if they let them alone their doctrines would come to nought. What was the result of the persecution in Massachusetts?—Why, Sir, warrants were made out by those churches having authority, and the Quakers were tried for heresy. But what was the result of those trials? The sentence of death was passed upon the Quakers for heresy by those religious fanatics, and three of them were hung by the neck on Bloody Hill, in Boston, to make expiation for that unpardonable crime. "Tell it not in Gath" nor publish it on the tops of the mountains in this boasted land of freedom, that the Puritans of New England, who had fled from the Old World in consequence of religious intolerance that they might enjoy the sweets of liberty, so soon became persecutors themselves and shed innocent blood which still cries aloud from the dust for vengeance upon their heads. Let shame cover our faces when we mention the name of freedom in our grand Republic.

O my God! when in one portion of our country blood is flowing for the crime of worshipping our Creator according to the dictates of conscience, or as the Spirit directs, and in the other are great rejoicings in consequence thereof, where I ask, is that boasted freedom for which our fathers fought and bled? O thou who holds the destinies of all things in thine hands here below, return these blessings unto us, that we may keep them as precious jewels, till time is no more. * *

These bigots soon made up a false accusation against him and had him arraigned before Joseph Chamberlain, a justice of the peace, a man that was always ready to deal out justice to all, and a man of great discernment of mind. The case came on about 10 o'clock, a. m. I was called upon to defend the prisoner. The prosecutors employed the best counsel they could get, and ransacked the town of Bainbridge and county of Chenango for witnesses that would swear hard enough to convict the prisoner; but they entirely failed. Yes sir, let me say to you, that not one blemish nor spot was found against his character. He came from that trial, notwithstanding the mighty efforts that were made to convict him of crime by his vigilant persecutors, with his character unstained by even the appearance of guilt. The trial closed about twelve o'clock at night. After a few moments deliberation, the court pronounced the words 'not guilty,' and the prisoner was discharged. But alas! the devil not satisfied with his defeat, stirred up a man not unlike himself, who was more fit to dwell among the fiends of h—l than to belong to the human family to go to Colesville and get another writ, and take him to Broome county for another trial. They were sure they could send that boy to h— or to Texas, they did not care which; and in half an hour after he was discharged by the court, he was arrested again and on the way to Colesville for another trial. I was again called upon by his friends to defend him against his malignant persecutors, and clear him from the false charges they had preferred against him. I made every reasonable excuse I could, as I was nearly worn down through fatigue and want of sleep; as I had been engaged in law suits for two days and nearly the whole of two nights. But I saw the persecution was great against him. And let me here say, Mr. Chairman, singular as it may seem, while Mr. Knight was pleading with me to go, a peculiar impression or thought struck my mind, that I must go and defend him, for he was the Lord's anointed. I did not know what it meant, but thought I must go and clear the Lord's anointed. I said I would go; and I started with as much faith as the apostles had when they could remove mountains, accompanied by father Knight, who was like the old patriarchs that followed the ark of God to the city of David. We rode on till we came to the house of Hezekiah Peck, where a number of Mormon women had assembled, as I was informed, for the purpose of praying for the deliverance of the prophet of the Lord. The women came out to our wagon, and Mrs. Smith among the rest. O my God, sir; what were my feelings when I saw that woman who had but a few days before given herself, heart and hand, to be a consort for life, and that so soon her crimson cheeks must be wet with tears that came streaming from her eyes. Yes, sir; it seemed that her very heart strings would be broken with grief. My feelings, sir, were moved with pity and sorrow for the afflicted; and on the other hand they were wrought up to the highest pitch of indignation against those fiends of h— who had thus caused the innocent to suffer.

The next morning about ten o'clock the court was organized. The prisoner was to be tried by three justices of the peace, that his departure out of the country might be made sure. Neither talents nor money were wanting to ensure them success. They employed the ablest lawyer in that county, and introduced twenty or thirty witnesses before dark, but proved nothing. They then sent out runners and ransacked the hills and vales, grog shops and ditches, and gathered together a company that looked as if they had come from h—l and had been whipped by the soot boy thereof, which they brought forward to testify one after another, but with no better success than before, although they wrung and twisted into every shape, in trying to tell something to criminate the prisoner. Nothing was proven against him whatever. Having got through with the examination of their witnesses about two o'clock in the morning, the case was argued about two hours. There was not one particle of testimony against the prisoner. No, sir, he came out like the three children from the fiery furnace, without the smell of fire upon his garments. The court deliberated upon the case for half an hour with closed doors, and then we were called in. The court arraigned the prisoner and said: "Mr. Smith, we have had your case under consideration, examined the testimony and find nothing to condemn you, and therefore you are discharged." They then proceeded to reprimand him severely; not because anything derogatory to his character in any shape had been proven against him by the host of witnesses that had testified during the trial, but merely to please those fiends in human shape who were engaged in the unhallowed persecution of an innocent man, sheerly on account of his religious opinions.

After they had got through, I arose and said: "This court puts me in mind of a certain trial held before Felix of old, when the enemies of Paul arraigned him before that venerable judge for some alleged crime, and nothing was found in him worthy of death or of bonds. Yet, to please the Jews, who were his accusers, he was left bound contrary to law; and this court has served Mr. Smith in the same way by their unlawful and uncalled for reprimand after his discharge, to please his accusers.'

We got him away that night from the midst of three hundred people without his receiving any injury; but I am well aware that we were assisted by some higher power than man; for to look back on the scene, I can not tell how we succeeded in getting him away. I take no glory to my self, it was the Lord's work, and marvellous in our eyes.

This, Mr. Chairman, is a true history of the first persecution that came upon Gen. Smith in his youth among professed Christians, and in a country heralded to the ends of the earth as a land of freedom where all men have the constitutional right to worship as they please, and believe what they please without molestation, so long as they do not interfere with the rights and privileges of others. Yes, sir, a persecution got up through the influence of religious bigotry by as vile a set of men as ever disgraced the family of man. But their devices against him were brought to nought by that overruling power that controls all things and brings to nought the councils of the wicked. Mr. Chairman, little did I think that I was defending a boy that would rise to eminence like this man, a man whom God delights to honor as a prophet and leader of his people; one to whom he has given the keys of heaven and earth, and the power of David, and said to him whatsoever you bind on earth shall be bound in heaven, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against you. And may he live to put his foot upon the neck of his enemies in love and meekness. I know, sir, that God has made him a leader of many thousands of people, and may he teach them in meekness, and with that wisdom and judgment that God shall direct.

I add no more.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Sister Ruth K. Dennis, late of Sandwich, Illinois, writes to Sister Walker from Eden, Weber county, Utah:

"I would just say if any Elder is coming from Lamoni, tell him to come to Eden and give us a call, and we will entertain him to the best of our ability. I feel free to ask them here."

Eden is twelve miles from Ogden, and a letter to Sister Dennis in care of Elisha Wilbur, will meet with prompt response, should an Elder see fit to accept the invitation.

By courtesy of Bro. J. F. Burton we furnish our readers with extracts from a letter written him from Hastings, New South Wales, June 27th, by Bro. Evan Jones, who says:

"The aliens have not left a stone unturned since your departure to recover, as they say, their stolen sheep. . . . Last night there were Salvation Army demonstrations. We had meeting this (Sunday) afternoon, and also had testimonies from Saints. All seemed alive to the work. Some arrangements are being made for preaching at Frankston by brethren Wooley and McGurk. We hear from pretty good authority that Mr. John Carr, Methodist exhorter, intends to come down and 'wipe out the delusion.' Amen! Let him do it if he can. We know we are surrounded with hidden opposition, and we would like to see some of it emerging from its covert, even if it be in the person of this 'son of the Methodist connection.' We think it begins to dawn on some of their minds that these sheep have not now their brand at all, but that of another which they have tried hard to rub out, and in so doing they have only made it appear all the plainer.

. . . If any of the Saints are about, and any one dare attack the principles of our faith, I have only to look on now and hear them defend them; and I tell you they do stand up well for them. It seems to make us think we were always Latter Day Saints. It certainly seems strange to think we were ever anything else. There seems to be a shaking among sectarian 'dry bones,' for there are many wishing to hear something of this new doctrine we teach. Ministers and lay members run and warn the people against 'the coming delusion.' But this seems to be but only opening the way for the honest to hear and obey the truth, for we hear there are many interested at Frankston and Mornington, who prefer to hear for themselves and then judge."

On Friday the 14th we sent a specimen copy of the "Three Witnesses" to Elder B. V. Springer, and on the 20th received an order from him for sixteen copies (all sold) and the promise of another order soon. Now we venture brother Springer did not do one bit less gospel work while he was doing this, and if others in the field would only aid us in this way, the question of the HOPE being enlarged would not long be a doubtful one. Who will offer us their aid? The picture is worth double the cost.

M. WALKER.

We cheerfully give place to the above, for while the HOPE interests are being advanced thereby, those who purchase the picture get in it the full worth of their money.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

THE Editor visited St. Joseph, Missouri, August 15th, to supply the pulpit of Bro. H. C. Bronson, while he stood for the defence of the cause at Spickards, Missouri, against Rev. Padget, who watches over the interests of the Christian Church, as we understand. We sincerely hope Bro. Bronson was as much blessed as the editor was depressed. The Germans held a Turn Fest, with a street parade, Turn Verein societies, butchers and Brass Bands—these drew the people, for those not interested in the society direct, were attracted by the music of the bands which was excellent. It was also intensely hot, the hall was close and it was almost a stretch of courtesy that kept the audience awake either morning or evening. We hope that when Bro. Bronson returns he will find that the editor did the flock no harm either in word or doctrine.

The hymn, "I love thy church, O Lord," lately printed in HERALD was a copy, or plagiarism from one written by Dr. Dwight, so say several correspondents. It was probably intended as a selection—at least we prefer to think so.

Bro. Samuel Brown, writing from St. Mary's, Ontario, says, "The work is onward here."

We are receiving letters, cards and articles from all quarters about our answering "No" to the question, "Can a Priest bless the bread and wine?" We corrected this answer of ours just as soon as we possibly could, after discovering our blunder. We trust all those who have so earnestly read and noted the mistake will as earnestly read and note the correction. Truly we were an offender for just one "word." Technically God alone can bless the bread and wine; but the question was asked in our own dialect and we did not intend any covert or reserved meaning; it was simply a mistake, for which the senior editor was alone in fault. One word in reference to questions: no answers will be made to anonymous questions, no matter who sends them; and we will not be held to answer any, but will use our own judgment whether we answer or leave unanswered.

Bro. A. H. Parsons wrote from his home in Kansas, that the work was moving on slowly. Five have been added to the church since Bro. Parsons returned home from Conference.

Two were added to the Lamoni branch by baptism, August 15th.

Rain has fallen at Lamoni, beginning August 13th, but not enough to raise the pools and creeks. Vegetation of all sorts seems to have been aided. The drouth broke up in very severe storms in parts of Illinois and Iowa; we are in hopes that no such storm may follow at Lamoni.

Bro. J. W. Johnson, of McFall, Gentry County, Missouri, wants a brother to come there and take a half interest in his Bee-keeping and shoe-making business. Any one wanting further particulars, write him.

We have received a ringing letter from Bro. B. V. Springer, written from Fremont, Indiana, August 12th. He is having most excellent liberty, and good audiences. He was to baptize one, a German lady the evening he wrote, and others were but waiting the moving of the waters. He reports excellent results from the good faithful living of the Saints in that country.

Bro. Joseph F. Burton wrote from Wallsend, Australia, July 11th. He was about to start on a four through the northern part of the colony. He reports an evident desire for improvement in some of the branches.

By letter from Sr. F. Smith, Galesburg, Jasper County, Missouri, we learn that Bro. Orson Sutherland is preaching there every two weeks, and that there seems to be a prospect for doing good as a result. Sr. Smith has children living at Clay Center, Kansas, and wishes the Elders to look them up and visit them.

Brn. John McKenzie, of Jefferson City, and C. St. Clair, of Independence, Missouri, are making an effort together at the former place. Bro. McKenzie is a staunch, reliable man, of good repute among the citizens where he dwells. He has long been anxious to secure help to open the work there; and we shall earnestly pray that good may result from their labors. It was expected that meetings would be held all the week beginning August 10th.

Bro. Isaac Wilson writes from Nobesville, Nebraska, asks the prayers of the Saints in his behalf, and claims he has been led into suffering and sorrow by the wrong doing of another, and he wisely suggests that Saints should withdraw from associations with the wicked.

A Mr. — writes August 14th, from Pinnebog, Michigan, that he is a believer in the latter day work, is sick and in want of temporal aid for himself and family. He should make his needs known to Bishop G. A. Blakeslee, Galien, Michigan, if he expects aid from our church officers.

WE received from Bro. Joseph F. Burton, a very kind and pressing invitation to visit Australia and the Saints in that distant continent, on the much talked of "visit and rest vacation," so kindly proposed by the brethren at the April session of Conference. Almost simultaneously with Bro. Burton's invitation came one from Brother T. W. Smith and the various brethren at Tahiti, a most courteous and brotherly invitation, and one which has excited feelings of interest to see the "isles of the sea." Over in Old England the brethren have been actively agitating our coming to see the "old country;" this is also an attractive invitation. We have been also solicited to visit Maine, Massachusetts, Ohio, Kansas, Minnesota, Northern Illinois, Western Iowa, Utah, Montana, Idaho and California—to spend the vacation, preach, visit and—rest.

These invitations are all couched in the kindest of terms, and are laden with the finest sentiments of personal regard and brotherly affection. And while we reciprocate the regard and affection, our experience is against that sort of a resting spell. Besides that, ubiquity for man, is in our opinion as unlikely as infallibility, and we can not possibly visit more than one of many localities, and that one must for obvious reasons, be not too distant from the place of business of the Church, and our home at that place. As to rest, the preacher who preaches, visits, sings and passes from place to place among the Saints must be of tough material, as it is a restless life he leads—unless he is lazy.

It may be that many of the brethren in some of these localities are expecting us to appear in their midst at some time in the near future; to those we say, be not over anxious, as it is possible we may not be able to leave home at all.

RUSSIAN SERFS.

THE Russian papers announce the emancipation of the last Russian serfs. It appears that the peasants on the estates of the foreign convents in Transcaucasia were until quite recently the serfs of the dioceses of Jerusalem and Constantinople. This abnormal situation has attracted the attention of the authorities, and since last summer the enfranchisement of these serfs has been in progress in the Governments of Tiflis and Kutais. The Brotherhood of the Holy Sepulchre possesses more than 6,000 serfs, and the Patriarch of Constantinople, as representing the Convent of Iversky on Mount Athos, has about 500 more.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY SISTER "FRANCES."

"I have no answer for myself or thee,
Save that I learned beside my mother's knee;
'All is of God that is, and is to be;
And God is good.' Let this suffice us still,
Resting in child-like trust upon his will
Who moves to his great ends unthwarted by the ill."

"AND IF A MAN ALSO STRIVE FOR MASTRIES, YET IS HE NOT CROWNED EXCEPT HE STRIVE LAWFULLY."—2 Tim. 2: 5.

THE apostle Paul here illustrates the subject which he had been speaking about, by reference to the games of ancient Greece and Rome, instituted in honor of their gods. These games were celebrated at stated times, with great pomp. Their greatest statesmen, as well as legislators and kings, engaged in them; and to be crowned victor in these games was considered the very highest honor, though the crown was simply a chaplet of laurel or olive. Not only was the preparatory training very severe, but they were governed by the strictest rules or laws, and the violation of any one of these rules or laws of the game subjected the offender to the loss of the crown, even when otherwise entitled to it. It is this particular feature of the game which Paul uses in his exhortation to Timothy, and warns him that he must not expect to be crowned unless he strive in accordance with the rules of the race he has started upon. This, all understood to be the gospel race, and eternal life the prize in view; for Paul calls him "my own son in the faith," and not only this, but he was the first bishop of the church of the Ephesians, and that with reference to which Paul exhorts him seems to bear upon the duties of his office as a bishop. Paul says: "No man that warreth entangleth himself with the affairs of this life; that he may please him who hath chosen him to be a soldier. And if a man strive for masteries, yet is he not crowned except he strive lawfully. The husbandman that laboreth must be first partaker of the fruits. Consider what I say, and the Lord give thee understanding in all things."—2 Tim. 2: 4-7.

When Paul wrote this second epistle to Timothy he was in prison at Rome, and knew that he was shortly to seal his testimony with his blood. It may therefore be called his dying charge to this beloved son. With it there could be mixed no grain of selfishness, neither of that pride which to some sensitive natures is so hard to overcome; but it was the wise counsel of one who had learned by experience that the kingdom of God is a kingdom wherein law and order should reign, and if we expect to be crowned we must strive lawfully. We infer that Paul may have been sensitive upon this point of the church being under obligation to support the ministry, from the way in which he expresses himself in his first letter to the Corinthian saints; he says: "Mine answer to them that do examine me is this: Have we not power to eat and to drink? Have we not power to lead about a sister, a wife, as well as other apostles, . . . or I only and Barnabas, have we not power to forbear working. Who goeth a warfare at any time at his own charges? . . . or who feedeth a flock, and eateth not of the milk of the flock?" Having reminded them that he had the power and the perfect right to do all these things, he declares to them that he had not done so.

But we want you to notice particularly what he declares in regard to the law, and to remember that he was a preacher of "the perfect law of liberty." "Say I these things as a man? or saith not the law the same also?" Referring then to the law of Moses which forbade them to muzzle the ox, he declares that it was not spoken altogether for oxen, but of the ministry, and concludes thus: "Even so hath the Lord ordained that they which preach the gospel should live of the gospel."

We recently remarked that we rejoiced in many of the results of our late conference. One of them is the fact that the church has been doing what Paul exhorted Timothy to do. Consider what has been said, and the Lord is giving them understanding, for they are beginning to feel that if as a church they ever conquer, they will do so by observing the law as God has given it. The sacrifice of the past has been made by the few, and doubtless there always will be those who stand ready to sacrifice more for the cause than others; but thank God we believe the time has gone by when our Elders in the harvest field can not eat their food without longing to send a part of it to the loved ones at home. How can a heart thus divided between anxiety for the welfare of those left behind and a desire to labor for the cause of God,—how can it, we ask, be wholly given to the ministry? Paul was writing to a bishop when he said, "The husbandman that laboreth must be first partaker of the fruits." In the early church the twelve said to the disciples, "It is not reason that we should leave the word of God and serve tables," therefore men were chosen and set apart for the special purpose. Thus we are led, after a careful consideration of this matter, to the conclusion that in temporal matters as well as in spiritual, if we expect to be crowned we must strive lawfully. If we have entered upon the Christian warfare and desire to be crowned at the end of the race, we need not concern ourselves in the least in regard to why such and such things are lawful, and such other things are not lawful. Jehovah is the general under whom we have enlisted. Through the gospel, the perfect law of liberty is made known to us, and if we strive according to that law, we shall be led from victory on to victory, until the kingdoms of this world become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ, and he shall reign for ever and ever.

Not only these, but from east, west, north and south, come the most cheering letters to us, telling how this department is winning its way to the hearts of the Saints, even from the islands of the ocean, and from the brethren as well as the sisters. Take courage then, you mothers, wives, and daughters of Zion. Is it not a grand thing to be able to help on this work, by cheering and encouraging those who have left every comfort of home and friends to spread the glad news abroad? There are times when glimpses of the great work you are doing and that which is yet to be done reflects upon our souls from the far off hills of light, until we feel a foretaste of the joy reserved within that beautiful city where the redeemed shall walk. Those who have gone forth and those upon the battlements hear our voices as we call unto them from their quiet homes, "Watchmen, what of the night?" Then are their hearts strengthened, for they know that our lamps are burning, and we with them are waiting the coming of the Bridegroom, when the glad shout shall ring from earth to heaven.

"Watchman, let thy wanderings cease,
Hie thee to thy quiet home;
Daughters, lo, the prince of peace;
Lo, the Son of God is come."

LAMONT, Iowa, August 21st, 1886.

PLANO, Ill., August 7th.

Dear Sisters in Zion: The toil for the week is over, and as I lay aside my needle and thimble, these words run through my mind: "Come unto me all ye that labor and I will give you rest." The lengthening shadows of the declining day and knowledge that for the time being my work is done, tend to throw me into a meditative mood, and I ask myself, "Have I labored in such a manner as to bring to me that rest; have I all through the week toiled to bring comfort to some one else more burdened with care than myself; have I been loving and patient in my bearing towards those who are unkind to me; have I striven to say kind words and cover the faults of my brothers and sisters with a mantle of charity?" If I have, then I am progressing in my race for eternal life; and I am performing that labor spoken of, and shall enjoy that rest. But alas! I fear I have not. My own cares and trials have blinded my eyes to the burdens of others, and the spirit of retaliation has often overcome me; so where is my rest? According to God's law and promises I must walk through life forever tired with my earthly labor, burdened with cares from which I can not escape; neither can I hope for relief when life's journey is ended, because I have not labored in love to the end that would bring unto me rest; and I resolve earnestly, while I write, to earn the coveted boon by conforming my will unto the spirit of that law which will bring about my liberty.

In reading Sr. Simpson's letter in the "Mothers' Column," I found a sentiment that touches a silent chord in my heart. I too have stood by and seen the angel death snatch a loved one away; and when I kissed the lips so dear to me, and knew that they would never in this life return my caress, I felt that my heart-strings could stand but little more tension ere they would snap asunder. Those terrible days, and not one ray of light came to me! After a time the light of the gospel dawned upon me, and I realized that if I bore its fruits I should not only dwell in the celestial glory of God, but I should have my dead restored to me. John the Revelator says, "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord, henceforth," and little children are alive in Christ Jesus from the foundation of the world; so of a necessity they must come up in the first resurrection; and will we not strive to be there to greet them? Will we refuse to bear fruits that will not only entitle us to rest, but also the companionship of our loved ones, never more to be separated? Tears of joy dim my eyes while I write, born of hope that I may be worthy.

I have read the "Mothers' Column" with increasing interest, for I see that the hope of latter day Israel is not dead in the hearts of the moth ers and sisters throughout the church, and I earnestly pray that you may be blessed with the religion that is able to control your every day walk and conversation? It is a grand thing to be able to speak in prophecy, but it is a grander one to be able to love one's enemies, to refrain from saying anything that would injure or hurt one another's feelings; and when I see a person that always has a kind word for the absent one, I think to myself, Here is one that truly understands what the spirit of the gospel law is, and what it requires of us as being members of the body of Christ. I fear many times that I shall be cut off from the vine as being unprofitable, and if I am I know that it will be because I do not bear the fruits of the gospel, and not because of the failings of my brothers and sisters. May you all be enabled to strive lawfully, labor lovingly, receive the crown of eternal life, and in your Redeemer at last find rest, is the prayer of your sister, HATTIE WHITE.

We are glad to hear from Sr. White again, and we pray the dear Father to sustain and bless her, and help us with her to so live that we may enter into that rest which remains for the people of God. As one of earth's toilers, we can enter into every phase of experience known to them. How the mind becomes absorbed in its own cares, and we forget the cup of cold water we might many times offer, in the name of a disciple, to thirsty lips and hungry souls around us. Well is it for us, dear sister, that our God is merciful and full of sweet compassion; and yet he is pure and holy, and we must be like him if we expect to dwell with him.—Ed.

DORCHESTER, Neb., Aug 9th.

Dear Sr. Frances: I have taken the Hope the past three years, for my children. We like it very much—the lessons, stories, and interesting letters from the little ones. While I do not find any fault, I would like it much better if we could have the same lessons in the Hope they have in other Sunday School papers. We never have the privilege of attending the Latter Day Saints' Sunday School, living as we do twenty miles from a branch. The branch of which myself and little girl are members, is the Blue River located at Wilber. I know many of the Saints are similarly situated. If we could have the same lessons prepared in the Hope, which other papers have, it would be a great help both in asking and answering questions in the Sunday Schools we attend, for I suppose other Saints do as we do in this respect: when they can not attend the Saints' Sunday School they go to some other.

A Church of God preacher and Sunday School worker, (the one that baptized me about ten years ago when I joined that church, and thinks now I am so badly deluded), in talking with me about our Sunday School paper last winter said, if we had the same lessons in them others had, he was quite sure we would have subscribers from other Sunday Schools, as they would like to read our explanations and compare them with ours. He said he would like a copy himself. (I had with me among other papers and books at the time, Saints' Advocate for January, 1886, which I read to him. He confessed it changed his mind somewhat in regard to what he had thought we believed.)

too highly commended. If the lessons were the same, and teachers of other Sunday Schools would take them, it might save them from teachings errors to their pupils. If that plan is adopted, I hope to be able to subscribe for a few copies where I think they would do good. Of course this is but a suggestion that may or may not meet the approval of either Editor or subscriber, but I would like to know what objection there could be?

But three Latter Day Saint Elders have ever preached in this town. Elder E. C. Brand, who baptized and confirmed me three years ago last December, and Elders R. J. Anthony and R. M. Elvin, have each preached a sermon here. No members of the Reorganization reside in town, but Bro. and Sr. Thomas Peterson, who belonged to the church in the days of Joseph the martyr, live here and are strong in the faith. They love to read the Herald and Advocate, as well as myself. Sr. Hendersen, an old-time Saint, and member of the Reorganization, has made me two long visits, and I hope will soon come again. Other of the Saints have been here occasionally. I attend meetings at Wilber and other places quite often, (so my neighbors think at least), besides attending two re-unions, the falls of 1883 and 1884; so you see I have much, very much to be thankful for.

I must tell you, Sr. Frances, you are not the only Sr. Frances I read letters from. I wish you could see the precious letters I have received from Sr. Frances Ernst, who received her sight at baptism, September, 1870, at Park's Mills; and who is now so sorely afflicted—her husband having had a stroke of paralysis a few months ago, rendering him helpless, and herself worn out with watching and waiting on him in her poor health. I had hoped to see a letter from her in the "Home Column," but now she is hardly ever able to write. When she is not able to answer my letters some of the dear sisters answer for her. They tell me her husband's recovery is very doubtful, and she is quite feeble. Many of our brethren and sisters are acquainted with her, and know how she has been afflicted so long. Let us all pray for them. I will not weary your patience longer. Your sister in the covenant,

RACHEL S. COATES.

IN regard to the suggestion of Sr. Coates, we would not have the least objection to preparing lessons from the same portions of scripture used by other denominations, and indeed think we may do so, if we continue for any length of time to prepare the lessons; but we could not change at this time as we already have in course of preparation an extended Sabbath School work, intended to put both teacher and scholar in possession of a thorough understanding of the gospel of Christ as taught by Former Day as well as Latter Day Saints; and this work we purpose to run through the Hope, if we succeed in enlarging the paper, and our life is spared. When this shall have been completed, if the church think best to continue lessons in the Hope, we think we would really like to use the same passages others do, because there could not help bring a strong contrast between light and darkness, which the juxtaposition would render more conspicuous. First, however, we wish to supply more fully the wants of the household of faith, for we do believe that what the apostle said in regard to temporal things holds good in spiritual things also, even if it be not of a more binding character in proportion as the wants of the soul are of vastly more importance than the wants of the body:—"But if any provide not for his own, and specially for those of his own house, he hath denied the faith and is worse than an infidel." The language is not ours, but we think Paul knew what he was writing about, and we are well assured that in the day of final accounts many of us will know that to testify of the gospel by works is far better than lip service. Is not the earth and all upon, above and beneath it, the Lord's? Why do we render unto Cæsar his due—Cæsar whom we make no profession of loving—and yet act so niggardly toward him who so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son to suffer and die for it. Compulsion is not the law of love, neither does love need compulsion. Think of it as Saints of God.—Ed.

Correspondence.

CLINTON, Mo., August 12th.

Bro. Joseph:—Home from the Cedar county debate. Commenced on Monday at ten a. m., and ended Saturday at three p. m. From three to five hundred in attendance; good order with little exception throughout. Commenced lively and lasted to closing. I felt worn out as to bodily strength—far too much for one man to debate all day, and attend side issues every night where his church and work were assailed. All these things had to be answered to. Almost every dishonorable means were resorted to to defeat me, but alas, to their chagrin our cause was maintained, and we came out of the fight without the smell of fire on our garments. God stood by me throughout, and the victory achieved was almost unprecedented, quite so in all my labors for the Master's cause. There were about fifteen ministers present, and it was apparent from the commencement that I had about one-half dozen of that number to contend with. Notwithstanding our agreement was that I should have one-half of all the time that would be occupied between sessions, and that nothing pertaining to the discussion should be sprung at these meetings, yet for all this the agreement was broken, and Joseph Smith, Book of Mormon, Book of Covenants, and nearly all the trashy tales that christendom has hatched up against our people for the last fifty years were ventilated and set forth by Elders Porter and A. G. Weeks. (This Weeks once belonged to the church). When the discussion ended I answered this whole affair and carried the war right into their camp with such "shells" of argument that the lying frauds against our work were exposed until friends were raised up on every hand. The victory was the most complete that has ever been witnessed by the writer. At the close the congregation pressed me on every side, and "God bless you," "good by" and "come and preach for us," were heard from every side. I grasped friendly hands until almost exhausted, and parted with many while that token of love could be easily discerned in the silent tear on the cheek. O, how often I have thanked God for his help during such conflicts! The M. E. pastor of Cedar Springs came to me and urged me to come and preach in his church—he offered to give me his own hour. The M. E. brethren at Roscoe, ten miles away, sent me word I could have their church at any time. Since coming home I have received a letter from another party who says he is a stranger to me, yet he attended my debate and noted my manhood in meeting men that resorted to everything but fairness, and he says he has secured an M. E. church for me, and has it for once or twice every month. He asks me to come, as they are interested in my claims. I had circulated about one hundred Epitomes at the close of my lecture, and they went like cold water to a thirsty soul. When they were exhausted it was on every side, "Any more? Any more?" The Christian people now claim that their defeat was because I had the advantage in the statement of the questions, and that I had bound my opponent too close on written rules of debate! What a pity! Both questions were of their own forming—I was not allowed a word in them. When they presented them it was, "This or nothing." The rules were those found in the Braden-Kelley debate. The text-books, King James' translation, and all other evidence received upon its merit as evidences before our civil courts.

I found my opponent much more of a gentleman than we usually meet with in debates, although he resorted to almost everything but the Bible for argument. What else could the man do? He is not the first man that has learned that the Bible is a poor weapon to bring against the Latter Day Saints. During the debate some of their ministry were turned topsy turvy. I was called to a private caucus where one said plainly, "From this time on I am going to preach the gifts as Bro. White explains them." This man is very prominent among them. He gave me his address and desired that I should send him some reading matter, which I have done, and have also written the brother. Another one who treated me as an enemy at the commencement, came at the close and gave his name and address, saying, "I am not bound to any party, but am open for an investigation of your work." I was told this man was brought to attack me, provided they lost their cause. Another minister remarked, "I have raised my hand for the last time against the Latter Day Saints." I have been sending tracts and Voice of Warning to interested ones, and will await for God and time to give the increase.

Elder Blalock, of considerable note as a debater among the Christian people, became very much dissatisfied with the debate, and now he and I have agreed upon propositions, each affirming his church, and in the near future will try our hands in a theological tilt, time and place not yet agreed upon.

I am now holding a series of meetings in the Saints' Chapel at Clinton, with considerable interest. I feel overworked every way, and can't fill one-half of the calls. We want more laborers. My last debate has opened a dozen doors. Who will fill them? The local brethren in Cedar county promise to do what they can. Brn. Jarvis and Adamson are there now. They are good, faithful men, but will not remain to do the work necessary.

Now as the Advocate has been discontinued, should we not in honor to the cause, patronize that spicy sheet, the Expositor? It is one of the noblest works of our church. No honest man can read one number of it without being convinced of its great worth to our western cause. It presents an ability away above the average newspaper.

The "golden chain" is not broken, though many of its links may have been marred. The good work will go on, notwithstanding the few that get into the mire by the wayside. I feel a weeping sympathy for those who step down from the platform of "the pillar and ground of the truth." We will try and "be subject to the powers that be until he reigns whose right it is to reign." We do not expect it all our own way. It was God's good pleasure to give the kingdom to his "little flock," and my interest is there until we can "all see eye to eye"—then we will reign, remembering no more our trials in a church militant that an everlasting entrance might be administered unto us in the everlasting kingdom of our God. So might it be.

I. N. WHITE.

HEARNE, Texas, Aug. 15th.

Dear Herald:—Your issue for August 14th is before me and contains so many words of cheer and consolation that I feel like expressing the gratitude of my heart for the mutual benefit received through this medium. Brother Elvin's letter is excellent. I think Ebenezer Twist deals infidelity a masterly stroke. His letter possessed the genius of careful thought, deep research, prayerful consideration, and unbiased conclusion. It seems to me that he takes Mr. Ingersol's favorite cudgel and completely demolishes him. His position that Christianity proper, or the Bible, is not responsible for the horrors of the inquisition, nor yet for the hue and cry of salvation by "faith only," is certainly correct, and I am jubilant that others than the Latter Day Saints are beginning to see that point. Does it not portend the dawning of a better day? The light of God is breaking forth upon some of the most intellectual minds of the age, and these are auxiliaries to the great work of this last dispensation.

I hail with joy and gladness every indication of God's favor and munificence, let the channel or source be where it may. The wonderful and precious promise to latter day Israel of finding "favor and grace" in the eyes of the people, has a remarkable fulfillment in the occupancy by others of the positions maintained by the Saints from the first establishment of the Church. One of the strong evidences of the divinity of this work is in the fact of its being commensurate with the design of God, and does justice to his character. Those who have conceived the work to be narrow, have mistaken its import. Conservatively, it embraces all things. It rises in preeminence above every other system of religious worship. It is stamped with the spiritual impress of the Alpha and Omega, and I do rejoice that I have been counted worthy to endure privation for the work's sake. To the diligent and faithful the promise is made that their understanding shall "reach to heaven." Surely these are days of benign favor when the Holy Ghost is sent down from heaven, and men of God are inspired to do His wondrous work. The Jews required a sign, but the Greeks sought after wisdom. Paul preached Christ and him crucified, to the Jews a stumbling-block, and to the Greeks foolishness. Our mission is to a mixed populace. Signs and wonders serve their purpose in the great economy, but wisdom is preferable in many instances, and better adapted to an educated and skeptical age.

Since coming to this mission I have been blessed. Bro. Roberts is a most congenial associate and spiritual director, though I have not seen his burly form, nor heard his cheery voice for a month or more; but I learn by proxy that he has on the war trappings, and is hunting down the enemy. He claims to fill the bill as "big" Elder, so far as avoirdupois is concerned, and he preaches the gospel, largely, too. Bro. Currie, Junior, was with him, and was supplementing the good work by teaching the Saints and others to make melody, systematically. Your humble servant spent a month up at Elkhart and Cheeseland. Five were baptized at Elkhart; a few others are believing; but with few exceptions the interest there is practically dead. There are some good souls there who love the cause, and I earnestly hope and pray that the Lord will favor them with wisdom and appropriate zeal. At Cheeseland, (this was the name of the branch which Bro. Grim says was disorganized), I felt uncomfortable during my short stay. I was kindly treated by Bro. Grim and his wife and others, but my mission seemed to be elsewhere. On Sunday I spoke with liberty to the small congregation who assembled at Bro. Grim's house. These good people say they want a "timber preacher" to come and stay long enough to do some good.

I felt directed to come here from Elkhart, and immediately was "summoned on the jury," in the form of an Elder's Court of inquiry, and "the end is not yet, but by and by."

Yours truly,

GEO. S. HYDE.

WALLESEND, N. S. W., Aus.,
July 11th.

Brother Joseph:—I am about to start for a trip through the northern part of this colony in a schooner. My first landing will be at Foster, where Bro. Wright lives, then to the Manning River, where Bros. Glaud Rodger and Gillen labored so much, then to Laurieton and Nambucca.

There is quite an interest in this region at present, many are investigating, and I can hardly suppose that all the seed sown should have fallen on thin soil or rocky ground. We had the best meeting last Sunday in this branch that we have had since I first came here. Still some of the members are not living as worthy Saints, and it is difficult to discipline them. My opinion, founded upon experience, is, that the branches are, in general, too lax in discipline, and offences are allowed to grow from small sins to greater transgressions until reproach is fastened upon those members who live nearer the law. I do not mean by discipline, that members should be harshly dealt with and cut off, but a part of the covenant is that if I am going astray I am entitled to the earnest spiritual counsel and help of my stronger brethren that I may be saved in the day of my weakness; and then when I get strong (or converted) I may strengthen my brethren who may be weaker than I. Thus the officers are as shepherds to feed the lambs as well as the sheep. Surely there can be no better method devised than for the officers to visit the members regularly, and see that there is no iniquity among them. If these officers would perform their duties punctually and the members would honor them in such performance, the branches would be more spiritually minded and righteous, and be, at least free from gross evils.

I receive good news from Victoria. The brethren there are growing in strength and enjoying the gift of knowledge, (one of the best for young Saints), for when the Spirit brings to our remembrance the word of the Lord and unfolds it to our mind and leads us out into the light, there is such a confirmatory spirit with it that suggestions are fastened upon our minds as a nail driven in a sure place.

Last Friday I had the pleasure of baptizing a Utah Elder—a fine young man. He has been investigating our position ever since I first came here. We had an excellent meeting at confirmation, in which he was also ordained an Elder by voice of the branch, to which I also gladly acceded, and the Spirit bore witness.

Your brother in Christ,

JOS. F. BURTON.

UNION, Ind., August 3d.

Bro. J. Smith:—Since July 3d I have been in southern Indiana endeavoring to meet some of the demands of the work here. The weather has been excessively warm and there is no better way suggested than to "make haste to go slow." It has been very seasonable, and I have never seen finer crops growing in this section of the country. Fruit in abundance—berries and apples. The yellow hills and knobs famed for the growth of sassafras and green briars, now, with the richer valleys are made to bloom and luxuriate with meadows, wheat, oats, potatoes and corn. Just now the "Hoosiers" are in all their glory, except that Grover has not distributed quite bountifully enough of their "daddy dollars." Holman and the "tall sycamore" will doubtless bring these around in due time, if patience can have her perfect work.

In our work there has been no great advancement made nor special effort put forth to forward it for some years—a rather neglected field. Brn. Moses, Monroe, James, Harbert, Leonard and David Scott, Wm. Kelley, S. Rector and the Brn. Baggerly have done something, according to circumstances, but mainly in the vicinity where the work had been formerly planted. The older Saints adhere with fidelity to the faith, although the standard of spirituality and devotion might be advanced without serious detriment to any. Occasionally one is gathered into the gospel net, and the spirit of interest and enquiry still lingers with the people—more than half convinced as to where the truth lies, yet they wait and watch—the Saints. When "iniquity abounds, the love of many waxes cold." This is as true now as at any other period. Even Saints, looking on the great world of sin and folly are too apt, at times, to think a little indulgence in current evils will scarcely be noticed, but soon find that they have drifted much farther away than they thought they could be influenced to go when they took the first step, which sometimes ends in shame and disgrace, bringing the cause into reproach. There will doubtless be as many as "five foolish" ones along with the "wise" when the Bridegroom comes. "Watch and be sober, for the days are evil," is now a good exhortation. But everything has not been the most beautiful and lovely with the Saints. Storms of trial in one way or another have broken through their ranks, producing disquiet, discord and grief. The issues have been met as best they could, and the faithful will be wiser and stronger by the experience. "The devil killer" has been down here, but his Satanic Majesty still lives. He will need to come again. The brethren have learned, however, what others have had to learn, that the gospel net gathers readily, but that Christian character and grace are a growth which does not take place in a twinkling, but requires adequate time with a determined purpose and effort in adhering to the right with as few failures as one may be able to make under trial.

At Union I met with Bro. Leonard Scott, who was holding a series of meetings in the Saints' Chapel, and I assisted him in the services while there. Bro. Leonard bids fair to become a potent factor in the work, and is a good defender now. It was a pleasure to meet the old friends and Saints in this place. There is some unsavory leaven at work, however, that disturbs their peace and communion: time as well as patience may be required to meet it. In order to right all wrongs in this evil world, it will need the Great Judge, who will not "judge after the sight of his eyes, or the hearing of his ears," upon the judgment seat. What a day that will be. The secrets of all hearts and motives manifest, at least to one. It will be a hard day for the wrong doer, but a joyful one to him who does well and has been made to suffer wrong.

Brethren Ford and Fewel were kind enough to give Bro. Leonard and me a buggy ride to Hall's Ridge, where we were cared for at Bro. Perry Lee's. We held five meetings, dividing the time. There is a nucleus of believers there, trying to hold on to the faith, but the hope of the cause is with the rising and more advanced generation. Some men are determined to die on the other side of Jordan, "just because I said I would," when Canaan is in fair view. The Saints and young people gave us a good hearing on Sunday. Leaving Bro. Leonard at the Ridge, Bro. Lee was good enough to convey me to Madison, where I stayed over night in the old home house, kept by our good English sister, Woodburn. The following day I landed at New Albany, and at the house of Bro. David Scott, to learn that since last I saw them they had "gathered" to Stewartville, Missouri, but retaining a longing for "old home associations," if not "leeks and onions," returned. And yet a little restless, and wiser by experience. They are liable to be seen moving westward at almost any time. David is in the faith, and has a pleasant family who chatter and sing as none but Indiana Scotts can.

The next day, via New Providence and a three miles walk over the knobs, under a burning sun, I arrived at Bro. James G. Scott's, and received a cordial greeting from all of the family, including that of Bro. Munroe. They are exemplary, and the faith is their main theme. I tarried here several days, and in the meantime held four meetings at Mt. Eden. Some sweeping changes have been wrought here of recent years, and a feeling of melancholy and sadness moved me deeply as I sat in the old church on the hill and noted and reflected upon the incidents and changes associated with our Mt. Eden experience. A good element was gathered out here years ago, who became a tower of support to the cause, which alarmed the communities around about, because they could not meet the logic and facts of the faith. But some of those gathered out, have emigrated; some are indifferent, and others asleep—a remnant being left. It is said that Satan soon made his "seat" there. Let this be as it may, fierce winds and wild beasts have raged against the little flock. But the truth has found its way to the hearts of some, and the agitation still goes on. Here, too, there is more hope of the young than the old.

I had a pleasant stay and visit with Bro. Harbert Scott and family. Harbert was in one of his philosophical moods—in a quandary—puzzled, and trying to get at the root of the matter. We were content to allow space to continue investigations. The world was not made in a minute, and who can better afford to note the deep furrows of thought than the Saints? Aunt Nancy stands firm with her fifteen children by her side—one in a thousand. May her happiest days have just begun. Bro. Moses has been in hard luck of recent years, having lost his wife and some of his children; yet he has been a main defender in the district for some time; is in the faith, and is desirous to aid the cause as he may be able. May his way open up.

Returning to Union, I thought to visit Ripley, New Trenton, Seven Mile and Amanda, but the extreme warm weather, busy time, short evenings, with sickness at home, rendered it advisable to postpone these visits to another time: so, August 5th I returned home, where I finish this, and now await the coming of the Bishop, the other committeeman to take under advisement the further repairing of the Temple. Work will commence soon. Send in your contributions. Some have responded; but more is needed. No preventing providence, I will visit Southern Ohio and Indiana in September, and Michigan and Western Ohio in October and November, and York State and Pennsylvania in November and December, &c. Things are going well here. It is very warm, however. Fruit in abundance.

Bro. Griffiths and wife are in West Virginia. Bro. E. C. Briggs did the Saints good at Wheeling on his way to the East to join the "wise men" thereof; and Brn. C. Scott and B. V. Springer are working with two days' meetings in Michigan and Northern Indiana. God bless the courageous workmen. Address me at Kirtland, Ohio.

In the faith,

WM. H. KELLY.

BAY CITY, Mich., Aug. 11th.

Bro. W. W. Blair:—I have been in this city now about one month, and thought of laboring here most of the time through the summer if an interest could be awakened, and if not I would go somewhere else. I find in starting the work here it is very much as it was when we first made a start in London, Ontario. It is hard to get the people out. When I first went to London after obeying the gospel, I was there nearly three years alone before there was any preaching done. And I remember well the first effort I made in getting the Elders there, and in trying to open out the work. I expended about twenty dollars in paying the fare of the Elders, their board, hall rent, etc., and was almost made sick at seeing only six out to hear in a city of (then) about 28,000. I went down from the hall and spoke to several of the passers by, telling them of the meeting, and did what I could to get them to come up and hear, but they turned a deaf ear. I finally went back and sat down with the six, the two Elders in the stand making nine in all. I sat there and wondered why the people would not come to hear after we had advertised it so well, and gone to such expense. However they soon began to turn out a little better, and we spent a week. After about three months time I tried it over again, and a few were baptized, I was called and ordained a Priest and at once commenced to preach and baptize. Shortly after I was ordained an Elder, and in about two years there were about one hundred and fifty members in the London Branch.

And looking over the history of the past, I do not feel discouraged here. There are eight members here, but they are scattered. We have met for preaching, but no one came. We kept it up and preached to the few, and the number keeps increasing, and finally we began to receive opposition, until last Friday night we met one of the Simite order whose head quarters are in this city. We occupied two half hours session each. He affirmed that the gospel of Christ, as taught by him and his apostles, did not cease or fall away, and hence needed no angel to restore it. I denied. After the debate was over, the chairman put it to vote to see who (in the opinion of the people) had gained the point—the vote was taken by standing to their feet—but no one stood up for my opponent. The chairman then called for those who thought I had gained the point to arise, and nearly all stood up. Since that time we have had a large turn out to our meetings, and I am satisfied that good is now being done.

Bay City is a large place—about thirty thousand inhabitants. There is also West Bay City, and three or four other little villages near by, all kept up (or nearly so) by the lumber business. I expect soon to see some come into the church in this place. Those tracts are doing much good, also the Voice of Warning received from Bro. J. H. Peters of East Lake, Michigan. I would here state to the Saints concerning the Voice of Warning, that the first day I started to lend them out I lent eight, and have been lending them ever since to those who I think will take interest enough to read them. Two or three days after the first was lent a man came to me and wanted to purchase one, and also the Book of Mormon. Another man that night bought two Voice of Warning, as I keep all the church books on hand for sale. I feel satisfied that Bro. Peters' work is good, and will be the means of getting the truth before the people, make sales for that little work, and also for the Book of Mormon.

And now, Bro. Blair, permit me to say, as many have written me to know when my book will be for sale, that owing to an accident to the printer and other things, we have been hindered, but we think it will be in the hands of the binders in three or four weeks' time. This "Synopsis of the Bible" will be a grand work for all, both in and out of the church.

Yours in hope,

J. J. CORNISH.

NEW HARBOR, Maine, August 10th.

Editors Herald:—Returning from General Conference last Spring by way of Michigan, where I spent a month with friends, and arranging my business affairs so as to make my stay in the ministry a possibility for another year, I came to Ohio, spending a few days at the place of my birth. At request of Bro. Kelley, spoke in Methodist chapel morning and evening; felt something of the Spirit's power in testifying to the members of my father's family and the old neighbors of the truth of our gospel message, Returning to my field of labor, I preached in the Massachusetts District until July 21st, when, by previous arrangement, instruction of Bro. Kelley, and I believe advice of the Spirit, I left Boston on steamer for Portland, from thence to Lisbon Falls, the home of Bro. F. M. Sheehy, who was waiting for me.

The following Saturday found us at Tennant's Harbor the home of Bro. Seavy, who for many years faithfully and alone has stood as a witness to our gospel. With the exception of two stormy nights, meetings were held every evening during our stay, either at the Harbor or vicinity, in places called Long Cove, Wild Cat, Long Neck, and in the Union Chapel at Martinsville, this latter place is the scene of Bro. Sheehy's conflict last winter with the redoubtable Elder Plummer of soul-sleeping Advent fame. The testimony of the utter rout and complete overthrow of the Rev's boastful claims was everywhere manifest, and as a result, I found many warm friends which Brother Frank had made for the cause by his humble and wise deportment, and also that adventism—especially the soul-sleeping part of it—had received its death-blow in that vicinity. An effort on the part of a few bigoted ones to close the doors of the Union Chapel upon us only resulted in opening the eyes still farther of non-partisans to that detestable doctrine—to the fact that their boastful challenges and loud claims were unwarranted by the facts and failed of support when the word of God was really made the test. As a result, Rev. Plummer has lost that part of his salary, which the Martinsville people, in and out (largely out of the church) have been paying him, and I believe he has quit those parts entirely and is now in Nova Scotia. We have many friends in that country, serious investigators of our claims, and a good work may be done there next winter, in my opinion. The Lord was with us in preaching the word, and the number of people that are spoiled for sectarian doctrine are not a few.

Leaving there last Thursday, we came here across the water, a distance of twelve miles, in a sail-boat, were warmly welcomed to New Harbor by our faithful sister Eliza Poland and her husband, whom we hope and expect to see buried to-morrow with Christ by baptism in the waters of the Atlantic. It is impossible for those who have not been initiated and become a part of Christ's real body—the true church—to know of the joy Christ gives to his own when conversing about the things that pertain to his everlasting kingdom. The light of God which our sister received long years ago when she became obedient to the law of the Spirit of life has never given out, and still burns brightly, as she fervently testifies to the knowledge she has received of the truth of our gospel and this great latter day work. Would that all isolated Saints had borne so faithful and consistent testimony amid their dark spiritual surroundings as she.

We are here holding forth every night in the large and fine Methodist church. I suppose this is only made possible by the fact that, outside parties of liberal tendencies in thought have largely contributed towards its erection with the understanding that the pulpit should be free to all "evangelical" denominations. And if they will only let us continue to use their nice church while we declare the testimony of God and the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ, until they and the world settle in their confused brains as to what is evangelical—safe and proper—we shall be content; for I am sure this will never be done until Gabriel blows his trumpet, or our work be done. From here we go to be present at the Western Maine Conference at Green's Landing, next Saturday and Sunday. In the faith,

MYRON H. BOND.

Brother Joseph:—I am still in the land of the living and doing what I can for the cause. I have put in full time since writing last to the Herald. The weather has been very hot and evenings short, but we have good attendance and excellent liberty, far beyond our expectations. The last week in July we were forced into debate with one Madison Spencer, a minister of the Advent faith, on Consciousness of the soul after death. We agreed to meet him and did so at the Ross school house on Plum Creek; I affirmed, he denied. We debated for three nights; two hours each night, two speeches each. We had the majority on our side of the question. The cause suffered no loss.

Sunday, August 1st, Mr. Spencer wished me to speak on the spiritual gifts, and allow him the privilege to reply which I did cheerfully, and nearly all thought he made a miserable failure in his reply. Since that time I have preached at McPaul, Bartlett and Egypt, to full houses. I preached eight consecutive nights at Bartlett and Egypt, and never had better liberty. Bro. Gillen will be with us and speak at Bartlett on Wednesday night. He will spend his time with us in the district until the camp meeting to be held at Wheeler's Grove.

Four have been added by baptism in Plum Creek, and have the names of four for baptism at Bartlett for Wednesday, 18th. So may the good work move on until it shall accomplish the designs and purposes of God, who has power to save to the uttermost. Most of the Saints are alive to the work. — In gospel bonds,

Bro. W. W. Blair:—On the morning of August the 10th, I saw in the north-east a wonderful scene, one that made my heart glad. There appeared a bright spot in the heavens, near the size of the moon. It had the appearance of fire and lasted about one minute. It did not move, and was as bright as the Sun. It was a grand sight to me, and I thought of what is written in the word of God, for it was to me one more testimony that we are living in the last days.

A WAY TO SETTLE SCANDAL.

Dr. M. D. Hoge of this city, tells of two Christian men who "fell out." One heard that the other was talking against him, and he went to him and said: "Will you be kind enough to tell me my faults to my face, that I may profit by your Christian candor and try to get rid of them?" "Yes, sir," replied the other, "I will do it." They went aside, and the former said: "Before you commence telling me what you think wrong in me, will you please bow down with me and let us pray over it that my eyes may be opened to see my faults as you will tell them? You lead in the prayer." It was done, and when the prayer was over the man who had sought the interview said: "Now proceed with what you have to complain of in me." But the other replied: "After praying over it it looks so little that it is not worth talking about. The truth is, I feel now that in going around talking against you I have been serving the devil myself, and have need that you pray for me and forgive me the wrong I have done you." Dr. Hoge tells the story very well, and here and there in almost every community is a man or woman who might profit by it.—Richmond (Va.) Religious Herald.

LEAVEN—THE OLD AND THE NEW.

"Love your enemies," is one of the commands of Christ our law giver, and one, too, against which objection has been urged. Even among those who profess to be the followers of the meek and lowly Jesus, we sometimes hear the complaint that this command is a "school-master" imposing a heavy burden, hard to endure, and almost impossible to be borne. Looking at matters from a gospel stand-point, such murmuring evinces a lack of submission to the will of God, a disposition to cherish thoughts, sentiment, and motives, not in complete harmony with the righteousness of Christ. The gospel contemplates that men shall be made free by the ennobling, soul-inspiring, God-given influences of regeneration. No man is free who cherishes in mental reserve the desire to hold a grudge, a prejudice, or ill will in any form against his fellowmen, no matter what their offenses may be. "Love worketh no ill to his neighbor." "Charity suffereth long and is kind, * * * is not easily provoked, * * * beareth all things." It is the one grand attribute of christian character that "never faileth."

Said the man of God,—"Though I speak with the tongues of men and angels, and have not charity, I am become as sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal." Perhaps a more striking simile could not be employed to illustrate the important fact that the heart's emotions of tenderness and love evince a greater regenerative work and stronger evidence of divine favor than the demonstration of "gifts" where the needful charity is lacking. The "signs" promised by the Savior are needful auxiliaries in the work of God, nevertheless in the mind of Paul, who "spake with tongues more than ye [Corinthians] all," these were secondary in work and importance to Christian charity.

The command, "love your enemies," shows the gospel standard to be unsurpassingly high. Did Christ come short of fulfilling his divine behest? In the agony of the cross he said,—"Father, forgive them; they know not what they do." I believe that everyone who embraces the gospel with full purpose of heart to serve God, will, if they continue faithful, receive grace enabling them to say with reference to offending parties, "Father, forgive them; they know not what they do." A strange anomaly is that of people straying out of the Church because, forsooth, there is some one in it they don't like. Which should concern us most, our own sins, or the transgressions of another? For whom are we responsible? Ourselves or some one else? Is it wise to become so deeply concerned about the follies of other people that we fail to be conscious of our own individual sinnings, and to secure forgiveness through the one and only way offered? In the Church organized under the immediate supervision of Christ, there were disaffected members. But this fact did not rob the gospel of its saving power, nor deprive the faithful of the promised blessings. Some who obey the gospel are as seed bringing forth an hundred fold, some sixty, others thirty. There are still others whose condition is represented by the seed sown by the wayside, and upon stony ground; the former devoured by the fowls before it even germinated, the latter making a speedy growth until the scorching sun which it could not endure, withered it and it perished. It is very evident that while all men might be saved, some will be lost. Sad conclusion! But who can help it? No one but themselves.

What hinders people who are convinced, from obeying the truth? If God is for us, who can be against us? The kingdom of God survives in a world of sin and spiritual darkness. Its numbers are small because of the wickedness of the people who dwell upon the earth. It presses its way in the midst of fierce and persistent opposition. Who will come to strengthen the army of the Lord?

Yours for the right,
GEO. S. HYDE.

SERMON BY ELDER CHARLES DERRY, OF MAGNOLIA, IOWA,
Delivered at the Saints' Chapel, Lamoni, Iowa,
April 11th, 1886.

[Reported for the Herald and prepared by the Editor].

In rising before you this afternoon I feel my weakness; and it is with no formality that I ask an interest in the prayers of this congregation. I am called to stand before you as a minister of the gospel of Jesus Christ, and I realize that to preach that gospel I must be aided by the Spirit of God.

I have tried ever since I heard my name called for this appointment to fix my mind upon some portion of God's word. The term gospel has been ringing in my ears and in my mind, but this is so broad and so comprehensive that I could hardly fix my mind upon any particular portion of the gospel to present to you, and if I shall edify you to-day, it will be because the Spirit of God aids me. I do not know any better theme to present than the gospel of Christ. I think it was said by our beloved martyr in answer to a question as to what the Elders should preach, that they were told to preach the gospel; and when they had got through with that, then again preach the gospel. It was the gospel first, the gospel last, the gospel all the time. Now I have no mind for anything else. I remember that when a boy, I listened to one who claimed to be a minister of the gospel, and there was a desire implanted in my heart that I might do something for God and His truth. And after night, when my labors of the day had ceased, I retired from the world, and before I knew what the gospel was, I kneeled with this prayer upon my lips: O Lord here am I, send me to preach thy gospel. It was the one desire of my heart. I never asked for anything else. I never asked for power or position in the world, or in the church, but simply to preach the gospel of Jesus Christ. Let me tell you friends, if I live to fulfill that mission, if I do that and no greater work than that shall rest upon my shoulders, I shall rest content and feel that I have filled the mission to which God has called me, to preach the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. I will tell you why,—because I realize as did Paul that is the power of God unto salvation to them that believe it. The gospel of Jesus Christ is infinite in its nature, boundless in its power, and comprehends all the wants and conditions of humanity, and comprehends the great purposes of God with respect to humanity. Such is the object, such is the purpose of the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. And realizing that this is the object and purpose of this glorious gospel, I can have but a very small conception of its power, its glory and grandeur, only just as I have partaken of them, just as I have bowed in obedience to it, and realized its power and its blessings, and can comprehend its truth. It opens up to my mind still greater fields of truth to be explored, still greater degrees of life and joy to be obtained, but I have to attain to that knowledge, attain to that light by living in obedience to it. As I have walked in obedience to that which I have received I have obtained knowledge of those truths. So I must attain the knowledge of every other truth, and finally be enabled to comprehend the gospel of Jesus Christ in all its greatness, and in all its grandeur.

But this afternoon we will talk for a while upon the purposes of the gospel, or the purposes of God in the gospel, rather. We hear a great deal about gospel matters in this day and age of the world. Almost every man and woman seems to have the idea that they have the gospel, and that the gospel has been always among the sons and daughters of men, is well understood and well known, and by many practiced and enjoyed. Now that they have had some light, and that inasmuch as they have walked in accordance with that light they have been blessed, we do not question for a moment. But we can not admit that the light of the gospel as it was revealed by Jesus Christ and taught by his apostles has been enjoyed, and been comprehended, by the world at large. For we find that the effects that should have been produced by that gospel have not been produced; and hence we can not admit that it has been enjoyed by the world at large.

God revealed the gospel in the beginning; it was revealed to our first parents; they were made acquainted with it. It was made known to their children in various ages of the world; but the grandest revelation of it that has ever reached the minds of men—that has ever reached the world—was when it came forth in the life, in the teachings, and in the character of Jesus Christ. Then it burst forth with greater effulgence, greater light and grandeur and glory than it had appeared unto the world before. Then there was a perfect ministration of that gospel, not in word only but in power, in deed, in all the effects which the gospel was to produce among the children of men. It was ministered in his life; he was the embodiment of that which he set forth—the embodiment of that gospel. It shone out in his acts, in his walk, in his conversation; it was ministered in him; hence we say it was a grander revelation of the gospel to the world than had ever been given. There had noble men walked the earth; they had obeyed the gospel, and some had walked with God; but with none, or in none had there been such perfection seen, such perfect obedience rendered to the principles of the gospel as was seen in the life and character of the Son of God.

The gospel was revealed to the world for a purpose, and that purpose is to redeem an alien world, a world that had become alien to God and had become the subjects of another power, the subjects of sin, the slaves of every evil. It was to redeem these and bring them from a state of darkness into the light of God, to bring them from a state of corruption into a state of purity and blessedness, and to fit them for all the glory of God, all the glory that God has to give, or which intelligence refined, redeemed and perfected by the power of God can possibly receive. It was intended for this purpose, to redeem mankind to this degree and condition of blessedness.

It is admitted by all mankind that the world had transgressed the law of God, and through the breakage of that law of God had become aliens to God, foreigners from the commonwealth, or strangers from the family of God. That is admitted by all who claim to believe in any sense, the divine truth in any wise. It was then to redeem from this state of alienship, from this state of thralldom, from this state of sin, and from the state of death that the gospel was revealed and taught. If the breaking of God's law had rendered us aliens to his family, and had shut us off from all rights and privileges so far as being entitled to his blessedness is concerned, then it follows of necessity, that inasmuch as we are to be received into his favor, it must be through obedience to law. If the transgression of law renders us aliens, we can not come back and become the children of God, we can not become adopted into the fold and family of God and be redeemed from our sins until we have obeyed some means which the Divine Author of our being has devised whereby we may become the adopted children of God. And hence when we hear people talking of the gospel as though it was in every conception of the human mind, susceptible of being in your own and in all men's hearts—when we hear people talking of the gospel in this way, we are forced to the conclusion that they understand not the gospel, and have no just conception of it. The very fact of the transgression of law rendering us aliens, is evidence that if we are to return it must be by obedience. And if by obedience to anything, then certainly that to which we must render obedience must be divine; it must be set forth, it must be declared, and that too in a manner that we can comprehend it.

Now I understand as we heard this morning, that order is heaven's first law, and that God was and is a God of order. The very fact that to-day we are in a state of sin, that the world has been in a state of sin, and that the world needs a Redeemer to come from heaven to earth—that very fact is evidence that we have broken the law of God. He had an order established, and man has broken that order, hence this state of thralldom into which we have come. If it is an order, or a system of order—as it is declared in terms to be "The plan of salvation"—then there are first principles in that system, there is a commencement whereby we can return unto our God, there is a means whereby we shall take first steps on our return home. This must of course be the case, inasmuch as it is an order, and that order devised of God. There must be a first step for you and me to take—for every man to take—in order to return into this state of citizenship and become the children of God.

Well, now, what is the first step? Why, almost every soul here perhaps comprehends it. It is to have faith in God, they must believe in him. Belief in God, or believing in him is the first step that mankind can possibly take to approach him. In order to approach him acceptably it must be done in a certain way, "He that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him." Now the gospel of Jesus Christ presents God to us; it presents him to us in a state of love; it presents him to us in his mercy; it presents him to us in his kindness; It presents him to us in his justice; it presents him to us in all his divine character so we may see that in him is embodied all excellence, all that we can possibly desire to find in any being upon whose arm we shall rely for that salvation. The gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ presents him to us in this light. By this means it makes it easy for man to exercise faith in God. When we see a character presented to us so beautiful, so excellent, so noble, so grand as the character of God revealed in his divine word, we can never fail to have faith in him, we can never fail to have confidence in him, we can not fail to have a desire to come unto him, nor fail to have a desire to be clothed upon with his likeness. No man has ever had an intelligent conception of the character of God but who has had a desire to be like him, has had a desire to become better acquainted with him and to partake of his divine nature. Everybody who has had this intelligent conception of him has had this desire wrought in his mind. This is one of the blessed effects of faith. O what a glorious principle is this! It is the first step in the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ.

But while we gaze upon that ineffable character, while we admire that glorious character as it stands revealed, and then look upon ourselves, how very low, how degraded, how little we seem in our eyes! We are as nothing; we are powerless; we are corruption itself when compared with that divine character. There seems to be an impassable gulf between our condition and his, and between our character and his. How can our character become changed? how can it become so transformed as to be clothed upon and become like his divine character? How can this be done? This comes to the mind when we contemplate the character of God. The object and purpose of the gospel of Christ is to show us how this can be done. We can approach unto him—not perhaps in a moment of time—and be rendered sufficiently worthy to be clothed with that divine character. Not perhaps by working a day or a week or a year shall we be prepared for that divine character. O no. There is a gulf, as we said, between us and him; that is, so far as the comparison of our characters is concerned. It seems to be an impassable gulf that we can never build over. It seems to be so. But in the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ the way is made plain, the effectual plan is laid, and steps have been arranged for man to walk in.

When we have this intelligent conception of God, his divine character and his will toward us, we have a better conception of our own nature, and of our own character. We can see ourselves then as we are; we are enabled to look into our own hearts and see the deep corruption that is there, and we then wish to put this corruption aside—to throw it off. How shall we overcome it? The word comes ringing from the throne of glory through the lips of the Son of God, and ringing down the ages through the lips of the apostles, and through all God's servants, that we are to repent of our sins; repent of our disobedience; forsake everything of an evil nature. Faith prepares us for this repentance; for it enables us to see the necessity for this repentance; it probes the pit of darkness and enabled us to see our own nature; it shows the great distance between our character and the divine one, between our character and that of God, and that if we desire to dwell where he is, to partake of his blessings, and to share in His glory, we must be clothed upon with that divine character. And this can not be done unless some means are provided in the gospel for the human family. Hence the necessity of means whereby man can raise himself from this state of degradation to that state of blessedness and glory. God provided it then in his gospel; and he tells us to repent of our sins, forsake everything that is of an evil nature, put off the old man with his deeds. "O," says one, "we have heard that a thousand times! Is there nothing better than this to present?" Let me tell you, friends, it is one of the steps in the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ that we must take. It is one of the duties all have to perform before they can return back to the family of God. We can not come into his family with our filth and our corruption hanging to us; O no. We must be cleansed from these; we must put away all these. And this is an act, not alone of the Spirit of God in cleansing us from this evil nature, not alone of the hand of God in stripping us of these evils whether we are willing or not. No, friends; it is an act of our own. Listen to the apostle Peter when upon the day of Pentecost he answered the question propounded, "What shall we do?" "Repent every one of you," was the cry. We have to perform something upon our own part; it is a work of our own. We have been made sinners by our own acts; and we must be made righteous by our own acts. We have got to do something in this great work of preparation in being clothed upon with the righteousness of God. We can not come into His presence with our own sins and our own corruption upon us. We can not put on robes of righteousness until the filthiness with which we have been clothed has been put away. The garments of righteousness and truth will not be given to us while this filthiness is yet upon us. We must put away everything that is evil. And, friends, we are all to repent; that is something that has to be done; it is a work of the individual, and not the work of God. Where the world has been mistaken then, in regard to this great question is, that they have thought that God had all the work to do; whereas it is man that has a part at least of the work to do. God will aid in that work, strengthen for the task—strengthen for the work by the power of his Spirit. We are to repent of everything that is of an evil nature, and throw aside all that is offensive to God or destructive to humanity—all that tends to separate between man and his God—we must put it all aside. If we do not do this, we can not come into His divine presence. But when we do this we have taken another step which brings us nearer that divine character by which we shall be enabled to enter into His presence above.

I need not dwell upon the necessity of repentance. All men should realize that they are sinners, realize that there is a necessity for their ceasing to do evil, and learning to do well.

But there is another duty, a duty in the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. What is it? This entire audience knows it.—it is baptism for the remission of sins. We are to be baptized for the remission of our sins. Why preach baptism? Why not tell us something else? Simple question! Why preach the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ at all? The gospel presents duties to mankind in their order: We are to repent of everything that is of an evil nature, and be baptized for the remission of sins. Why do you suppose it is necessary for us to be baptized? Let me ask you, friends: Are we desirous to come into the presence of God? Are we desirous to be adopted into our Father's family, and be accounted as His children? Are we desirous of this? O yes. Can we possibly come in any other way than He has marked out? If God has laid down a plan, is there any other means by which you and I can come into his presence and be clothed upon with His divine nature, other than that means which He has marked out? This is the question to be answered. If we believe the gospel is indeed the perfect law of liberty, if we believe that it is indeed a perfect plan, we must certainly recognize this truth—get faith and be baptized for the remission of our sins.

But I want to look at the grandeur of this ordinance, and the fulness of its scope, so far as we can comprehend it, and compare it with something else that in the world is called by the same name. Mark you, in the law of God the rule is, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God, with all thy heart, and with all thy might, and with all thy mind and strength." With all the heart, might, mind and strength! Is there any power of man that is excepted in this language? Is there any exception of any part of man's being, from the crown of his head to the soles of his feet? Is there anything excepted and not to be devoted to God—that we must not love God with? Is there anything excepted here? No! not a particle. "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, with all thy might, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength."

It seems as though the Eternal God had sought to embody, and to impress upon our minds the necessity of embodying the whole being—all our powers and all our minds, in our service to Him. But what has this to do with baptism? You know that some people tell us that baptism is "an outward sign of an inward spiritual grace"—that it is simply a sign, and that there is no power attached to it particularly. Hence they have their forms corresponding to their view of that sign—sprinkling, and pouring, and so forth; these they have as a sign or thing they call baptism; and now we want to contrast them with the order which God has established.

Now, it is supposed that when a person comes into any church, when they are received, whether they are received as infants or as adults; whether they are sprinkled, or poured, or by whatever means baptism is administered unto them, it is supposed that they are then dedicated to God—devoted to him and consecrated to him. But that sign hardly fills the bill. Sprinkling a few drops of water would hardly be expressive of any consecration. Pouring a few drops of water would hardly be a sign of consecration to God. But God has devised means whereby we shall bear witness to heaven; whereby we shall bear witness to earth; whereby we shall bear witness to hell, that we have devoted ourselves to God. What is God's means? "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, and he that believeth not shall be damned." What is this baptism? Why, Paul tells us that we are to be buri- ed with him in baptism. Here, then, the believing and repenting sinner comes and says, I want to consecrate myself to God; I want to devote my being to Him; I want to consecrate all the powers of my mind and body to Him; now what shall I do? "Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ." And the servant of God takes him and leads him down into the water, and there his entire being is "buried" beneath the liquid wave as a sign to heaven; as a sign to earth; as a sign to all the powers of darkness, that from that time forward that individual is consecrated to the service of God. There is not a power of that body; there is not a power of that mind that is excepted in this consecration. There is beauty and meaning in God's mode of consecration. There is beauty in God's mode when devoting ourselves to him. There is beauty and grandeur in God's method of adoption into his kingdom. There is nothing left out when we have entered into that covenant. Friends, we are not from this hour to use any part of our beings for that which is evil or corrupt, No; they have been consecrated to God, and being consecrated to God they must remain so, or we shall suffer loss. If we break the covenant we make with God, which we enter into in the waters of baptism in the most solemn way that heaven and God can devise or humanity comprehend, we must suffer loss. We there give our bodies in submission to his divine will, and we say farewell to everything that is of an evil nature; farewell to all the powers of evil; farewell to all the sweets—if there are any—of sin; farewell to everything that is not of God; for there upon the consecrated altar, there beneath the liquid wave, I lay down my all as in consecration to His divine service. I devote myself unto Him. Here I am telling my God that from this day on I will love him with all my heart, with all my might, with all my mind and strength. I say this in this act of baptism. You have all gone through this ordinance; you have submitted to this ordinance; you have consecrated yourselves to God. Have you been true to your vow? Have you been true to your act of consecration? Have you found that you have been entirely devoted to God from that day to this? Have you realized this? If you have not, then you have broken your vow already—that most solemn of all vows that man can possibly make. I thank God that He asks of me no other vow than that. When men sometimes bring promises, or rather bring oaths and rules and laws, with covenants and pledges to me to submit to, I tell them that I made one covenant with my God, and in that is involved the pledge that I should forsake every evil, that I should eschew everything contrary to his divine will; that I would practice righteousness and truth; that my life, my entire being from henceforth should be devoted to nothing except that which is just, pure, holy and clean in the sight of God. Friends, does not our covenants do all that? Do we comprehend that? If we do not, it is time that we did. Sometimes I think a great many get into the church who do not comprehend the solemnity of this ordinance. They see others going—others are obeying—and they think they must obey because they do not like to be left behind. I do not say this is the case in the majority of cases; no, God forbid; but I fear this has been the case in too many cases. If it has only been in one, that is one too many. But we should try to comprehend every step that we take. God marked out these steps, and we are trying to understand the steps and take them. Let us ask God for strength, that we may never take a step backward, but forward—onward, always onward.

Well now, when we have thus been adopted, and have received the seal of adoption, what then? You know there is a "seal" of adoption. I was once an alien to this country. I heard of your beautiful land and government here, and I wanted to become a citizen. I found that there were laws of adoption. I obeyed, went through the formality of obedience to the laws of adoption, and when I had done so, I received a seal or certificate of my adoption that I can present wherever I go, and if any man challenges my citizenship I have it to show to him that I am a citizen, legally adopted. Now, after we went through the form that God has laid down, we received the seal of our adoption. You all know what this is. Every Latter Day Saint knows that the laying on of hands is the means whereby we are to be to rest upon us, to be "sealed" (Eph. 1: 13, 14; 4: 30; 2 Cor. 1: 22; Rev. 7: 2, 3) sons and daughters of God; the grand certificate that we may have to present in our lives, in our walk and in our conduct everywhere, that we have that Spirit of God, that spirit of adoption whereby we are enabled to cry, Abba, Father. My Lord and my God. We recognize, then, that He is our Father, and that we are His children. Now then, we have become children. It is the grand purpose of the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ, to make us children of God, to adopt us into His fold and family. John in writing to the people in his day—those that had been adopted—says:—"Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, in that we are become the children of God." Become children of God! How did they become the children of God? Through the means of adoption which God had provided. Here was the love that God had bestowed upon them, in that they were enabled to become the children of God. And not only this, but he says: "It doth not yet appear what we shall be." We now are the children of God, adopted into His fold and family; but it does not yet appear what we shall be; "for when he shall appear, we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is." Without holiness no man can see the Lord. We have become His children now; adopted into His fold and family now; but it doth not yet appear what we shall be, for when he shall appear we shall be like Him, shall be clothed upon with His divine nature.

For this purpose the gospel of Jesus Christ was given.

And it is said that he ascended up into heaven and gave gifts unto men. These gifts were "for the perfecting of the Saints, for the working of the ministry, and for the edifying of the body of Christ, till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, to the stature of a man in Christ Jesus; unto the fulness of the stature, to the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ." This is what we are to attain to by the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ, for it is to bring us up to this "measure." Did you ever take into consideration "the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ?" Just contemplate, if you please, the divine character of Jesus Christ as it stands revealed in his word, clothed upon with all the excellencies, with all the grandeur that it was possible for intelligence to be clothed with. Behold the excellence of that glory! You and I are to be brought up to that same measure, "the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ." It seems infinitely above our reach. When we compare mortality, and contemplate the height and glory of that stature, we imagine we never can attain unto it. But the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ was given for the purpose of bringing us up to this. It will accomplish its work if we are true to that gospel, if we comply with its teachings. If we remember the covenant that we made when we consecrated our whole being to him, it will bring us up to "the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ." And when we have come to that measure, do you think there will be anything to keep us out from his presence? Do you suppose there will be anything that will be able to hide his face from our view? O, no! When the valleys shall be rent in twain, we shall see him as he is; we shall be with him; we shall reign with him. We have become his children, his sons and his daughters today. And friends, the apostle Paul says, "If we are the sons of God, then are we heirs of God." Heirs to all the blessings; heirs to all the glories; heirs to all the advantages that God purposes or has to bestow upon man. We are heirs to all these, and "joint heirs with Jesus Christ." What is Christ heir to? To all the glory of God, the Father. "Father, glorify me with the glory that I had with thee before the world was." "In him is the fulness of the God-head." And we are to be "filled with all the fulness of God," says Paul. O, how great the height, and how grand and glorious the prospect before the child of God, inasmuch as he walks in obedience, true to the covenant that he has made; inasmuch as he swerves not to the right nor to the left, but keeps his whole being subject to the mind and will of God. O, what grandeur, what excellence, what glory there is for us to attain to! Listen to John on the isle of Patmos. The Lord was conversing with him, and keeping the vision before his view, showing him the great work of redemption, the rough paths we have to travel, the storms and tempests we have to battle with, and what a great work we have to engage in, a conflict that seemed almost too much for us. The words ring out like this: "To him that overcometh will I give to inherit all things; and he shall be my son, and I will be his God." To him that overcometh will I give to inherit all things; and he shall be my son, and I will be his God! Can we ask more? Can God give more? O, no. We shall "inherit all things," says the divine promise; "and he shall be my son, and I will be his God." This is the purpose of the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. Thank God, it is revealed in his truth.

No, friends; nothing less than following in the divine pathway which God has marked out will entitle us to these things. We must see to it that our steps are right; that our thoughts are pure; that our ways are God's ways; that we do not follow our own pernicious ways, but that we follow the ways that God has marked out. If we do these things, then the gospel will accomplish its work in us, and we shall be enabled to say with the apostle Paul, "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ; for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth, to the Jew first, and also to the Greek. For therein is the righteousness of God revealed from faith to faith; as it is written, The just shall live by faith." This first principle, faith, gives us beautiful views of God. It follows God in every step. It is a light to our feet and a lamp to our pathway. It enables us to comprehend better and better every step we take. It strengthens us for the conflict; it strengthens us to endure all that we have to endure. It brings us closer to our God; it causes broader conceptions of the divine character and of his purposes in us day by day. Thus it leads us until we merge into the vast sea of knowledge, and know things as we are known, and see things as we are seen. To this end may we live, is my prayer for Christ's sake, amen.

ASTRONOMY.

BY ELDER F. R. TUBB.

(CONCLUSION.)

WHILE gathering together the materials for my essay on volcanoes, which requires a great deal of calculation and research, I forward you a few remarkable facts which have recently come under my observation in reference to my last letters upon astronomy.

I feel deeply grateful for your encouraging remarks concerning my former humble endeavors to interest and to instruct the Herald readers. It affords me peculiar gratification to find that you, at least, are not in sympathy with those who say that such subjects as music, phrenology, astronomy, or natural and physical science are unsuited to the pages of such a magazine as the Saints' Herald. While fully believing that the major portion of the Herald pages should be devoted to good and reliable articles and letters upon the principles of the gospel of Christ, (though not to perplexing and mystifying essays upon the doctrine from various members who only succeed in contradicting one another and mystifying their readers), yet I think that a portion of your valuable journal should by way of variety be devoted to the wonderful and amazing facts which science and astronomy are daily bringing to light. This would render the Herald more valuable to the general public, and not less glorifying to our heavenly Father by calling attention to other parts of his mighty handiwork, thereby commanding the devout worship of many who perhaps never heard before, or read these things; and they will feel constrained to exclaim, with the sweet singer of Israel,—“Great is the Lord, and greatly to be praised, Fearful in praises, doing wonders. Yea, and his understanding is infinite!”

Many readers will purchase a journal for the sole and express purpose of reading or studying the scientific or historical contributions; and is it not a distinct gain to our divine cause, and at least worth a little effort, if, by a perusal of such articles in the Saints' Herald, some may be thereby led upward to desire that greater and holier light, which the Supreme will never deny even to the very humblest and most deluded who but seeks, however feebly, the great “light which cometh from the Father of lights. Remember, dear reader, that no ignorance is so dense and impenetrable as learned ignorance; the ignorance of those “ever learning but never coming to a knowledge of the truth.

But surely, as we are commanded to sow “beside all waters” let us not neglect the cry of this large class of our fellow-mortals, who plead that light may be vouchsafed to them;—that light which by unfolding to their reasoning faculties as sentient beings, and to their imaginations as men made in the image of God, may exclaim, with wondering rapture, as the inconceivably vast panorama of astronomical and subterranean powers and wonders are opened to their astonished gaze, (though only the thousandth part can be unfolded to them),—“My Father’s hand made all these things. He bids me look on them and praise his handiwork,—tho’ my poor, frail imaginings cannot discover how just his ways.”

While fully and freely admitting that the purely spiritual and religious element should undoubtedly predominate in all the organs of our Church, as well as in the Herald, I am, nevertheless firmly convinced that the occasional introduction of scientific and historic researches as illustrations of higher and grander truths of a spiritual nature, can not but exercise a beneficial effect upon this grand latter day work of God in all its endless and extensive ramifications.

Nothing could possibly be of greater value to the Church at the present important crisis in its affairs, than the publication by the Head Office, of a neat, elaborate, and above all, attractively written brochure or pamphlet upon the Book of Mormon, dealing exclusively with the scientific, geological, and archæological testimony to the authority and authenticity of that truly marvellous book. Much has been written, and I may add exceedingly well written, upon the strictly spiritual and theological aspect of the volume, dealing mainly with the intrinsic and internal characteristics of the work;—proving it genuine upon purely Biblical and internal evidence. But a book relating exclusively to the abundant scientific and external testimony in corroboration of the genuineness and authenticity of the Book of Mormon, is what I regard as one of the greatest desiderata on behalf of God’s true Church; especially in the increasingly enquiring and undoubtedly scientific bias of the present, and particularly the rising generation. Such a book, especially if pursued in a persuasive and pleasant style of diction, would undoubtedly reach a circulation of many thousands, and prove in all probability an incalculable blessing to the Church in extenso. You have many Elders there in America most admirably adapted for the task, and fully competent to undertake it.

I am aware that there is an objecting disposition in the minds of some, who simply, if they do not say downright, that they consider all such scientific and geological proofs and statistics as a more or less wide departure from the grand old gospel. If that is the case, then David departed widely from the gospel when he invited his attentive hearers to “consider the heavens, the work of God’s hands, even the moon and stars which he had ordained. Ezekiel, Jeremiah, Isaiah and Malachi ought, also, to be greatly censured for the introduction of considerable scientific matter of an indirect character into the deep and wonderful books which bear their respective names. The Apostle Paul must also “pass under the rod” of these censors, for did he not upon a most memorable occasion quote to his hearers one of the most sublime scientific truths from the mouth of certain of their own heathen poets (Celsus and Aretas) to-wit, that man is the offspring of God; and that in him we live and move and have our being. Nor is the Eternal Teacher himself free from this alleged fault of appealing to scientific facts and hypotheses in support of great spiritual truths, for did he not point out a great and important lesson by alluding to the condition and appearance of the sky at sunset and at early morning. The structure and habits of even the insignificant hedge-sparrow, and other “fowls of the air,” afforded our beloved Master materials for some of his most valuable disquisitions. Nor did the pure humble lilly of the valley escape his gentle and thoughtful observation; for out of its artistic hue and mathematical proportions, he educed such a lesson upon the wisdom and love of Jehovah, that the fragrance of that sweet lilly, and, above all, the grand lesson conveyed in it, will descend to generations yet unborn.

While hearing or reading objections by persons both in and out of the church, against the diffusion of education and the spread of scientific and other useful knowledge, I am frequently reminded of an anecdote recorded in the life of that talented and eccentric preacher, the Rev. Rowland Hill. It is related that upon a certain occasion, in the course of his travels, (in Shropshire, I think), he happened to hear a young man discoursing upon religion by the wayside; and being considerably impressed by the singular beauty and piety of many of the preacher’s ideas, and the unmistakable sincerity of his demeanor, he remained to the close, and could not but be pained to observe that the entire discourse of the young evangelist was greatly marred owing to his repeatedly making use of erroneous words and ungrammatical expressions. When the audience had dispersed, leaving only the aged and learned Doctor of Divinity and the young preacher face to face, Dr. Hill advanced to the young man, and, laying a hand kindly upon his shoulder, said, “Young man, I have been greatly pleased at much that I have just heard from your lips, but will you permit me as an old hand, to remark that the whole discourse would have been more easily understood, and therefore more effectual, if it had been clothed in grammatical language, and all the incorrect words eliminated.” The young man at once replied that the Bible said that God was pleased “through the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe.” True, my son, replied the aged veteran. “Through the foolishness of preaching, I grant, but not through the preaching of foolishness.” Just at this point a man who had arrived and heard the doctor’s report, said, “But then, God has no need of man’s wisdom.” “No, my friend, God does not need man’s wisdom, truly, but he certainly has no need of man’s ignorance,” replied the doctor.

Struck by the wise and witty character of the great preacher’s replies, the young man decided to act upon his sensible suggestions, and at once commenced to study grammar and etymology to such purpose, that in less than twelve months the Rev. Rowland Hill besought the young man to occupy his (Mr. Hill’s) own pulpit, which he did; and in great time became celebrated as almost as great a preacher as the learned doctor himself. Of course I am not concerned to defend the peculiar tenets of the Rev. R. Hill, or of the younger preacher; as your readers all know what the doctrines of sectarianism usually are; but I think the earnestness and diligence of that young man in seeking to acquire a grammatical style and a fluent and polished delivery, is unquestionably worthy of imitation by Elders and other preachers within the pale of our own church.

Indeed, if my memory at the present moment is serving me correctly, we have in our own “Book of Covenants and Commandments” an injunction from the very highest authority, to “study all good books,” (not merely the publications of our own church, for not many of our own tracts or pamphlets were at that time in existence), but all or any good books which elevate the thought, satisfy the mind, energize the brain, and purify the speech and diction of all who will with earnest purpose “read, mark, and inwardly digest them.”

Trusting that your readers will forgive this digression by way of introduction, I will at once place before them the wonderful additional facts which I have deduced in the conclusion of my astronomical essays; trusting at no very distant date to be in a position to place before them my humble researches and calculations upon "Volcanoes and Volcanic Eruptions;" the materials for which I am compiling at date of present writing.

SOME ADDITIONAL ASTRONOMICAL FACTS.

The earth moves along in its orbital sweep through space with a speed of eighteen miles every second. This is more than one thousand times the velocity of an express railway train traveling sixty miles an hour, and one hundred times the velocity of the rifle bullet when it leaves the mouth of the gun. It takes the earth eight minutes to pass over a space equal to its own breadth. But light travels with a speed nearly one million times as great as that of the bullet, and would pass around the equatorial girdle of the earth seven times in a single second. It is well understood that it is the momentum inherent in this speed which sustains the ponderous mass of the earth in the void regions of space, and which prevent it from being drawn into contact with the sun.

All the vast orbs of the firmament are sustained by the same influence. They are all rushing along in their own proper journeys through space. This is the true meaning of the "drift," or proper movement of the stars. It is not possible in the existing state of man's knowledge of the arrangements of the universe, to think of the stars as doing anything else. This star drift, indeed is an inevitable necessity. The star "61 Cygni," which has a proper motion in space of five seconds in the course of a year, is in reality traveling along through nine hundred and twenty millions of miles in that time! It passes through between two and three millions of miles in the course of a day, at the rate of thirty miles a second. It would, nevertheless take 40,000 years to traverse the 40 billions of miles which intervene between it and the sun. It was just twenty-five times as far away from the earth a million years ago as it is now.

The fixed star marked as "1830," in Groombridge's catalogue, is now known to be something like five times as far off as "61 Cygni;" and to be performing in space every year a journey which is seventy times more vast than the distance of the earth from the sun.*

With this rate of speed, it can not be moving along with a velocity of less than 200 miles every second, and would accomplish the distance between the earth and the sun (about 97 millions of miles) in five days. The sun itself, with its vast family of dependent orbs, is performing a similar drift through space. It moves through an interval equal to its own breadth every two days. It is speeding along towards the sparkling host which now constitutes the star group known as the constellation "Hercules." But it would have to travel a full million of years before it could join the Hercules group of the sidereal firmament.

Moorehead, third Saturday in August, J. C. Crabb in charge. Motion to change the order of our conferences from quarterly to three times a year lost. Missions were assigned as follows: Henry Garner, on the Willow; Colby Downs and Lehi Ellison, at Six and Twelve Mile Groves; and David Chambers in present field of labor. Nine children were blessed during conference. Preaching Saturday evening and Sunday morning by Bro. C. Derry and Sunday afternoon by Bro. G. S. Hyde. ## Miscellaneous.

BORN.

DOBSON.—At St. Joseph, Missouri, August 13th, 1886, to Bro. Eli T. and Sr. Louisa Dobson, a son. Mother and child doing well.

CRICK.—At Lamoni, Iowa, August 13th, 1886, to Bro. William and Sr. Maggie J. Crick, a son.

DIED.

TIGNOR.—At Independence, Missouri, August 11th, 1886, of dropsy, Elder Wiley B. Tignor. He was born in Johnson county, Illinois, February 10th, 1839; baptized November 30th, 1874, at East Rulo, Holt county, Missouri, by J. W. Brackenbury; ordained August 6th, 1876, by C. F. Stiles and J. W. Brackenbury, at White Cloud, Kansas. He retained his firm faith in the gospel until the end. His last words, regarding his feelings were,

"I am not afraid to die." Funeral sermon at the Saints' Chapel, August 12th, by Joseph Luff. A large procession, headed by the Grand Army of the Republic, of which deceased was a member, followed the remains to the grave. A wife and four children remain to mourn his departure; but they mourn not as those who have no hope.

HUDSON.—At Armstrong, Kansas, August 18th, 1885, Elder Thomas Nichols Hudson, aged 61 years and 11 months. He was born in the town of Cohasset, Massachusetts, and was buried at Independence, Missouri. He united with the church in 1843, was baptized by father—Nickerson; went to Utah in 1861, and joined the Reorganized Church, June 14th, 1870. His widow, five sons and two daughters, mourn his loss. He was a faithful, noble, devoted Christian, and we are confident he rests in the paradise of God.

DITTERLINE.—In Philadelphia, Pa., August 5th, 1886, sister Elizabeth Ditterline, in the seventy-fourth year of her age. She was faithful and true to the latter day work to the last, and died with hope in Christ. I had a lengthy conversation with her four days before she died, and from what she said, I felt satisfied her faith had never failed. She was one of the early Saints in Philadelphia,—was baptized in the days of Joseph the Seer, some forty-five or six years ago. Her house was always open for any Elder traveling through Philadelphia. Funeral services conducted by Elder John Stone, assisted by Elder J. Stewart, to a full congregation.

SAINTS' REUNION!

The final arrangements for the Reunion to be held at Wheeler's Grove, Pottawattamie county, Iowa, commencing Saturday, September 4th, 1886, have been made. The meeting will commence at ten a. m. of the above named date, and close Sunday evening September 12th.

The grounds are situated in the grove of Bro. Carlos Smith, five miles south-east of Macedonia, Iowa. They are cool, shady, and beautiful, with a good well and spring thereon. All down wood will be free to all. Hay and grain will be furnished at very reasonable rates. Table board at 25c per meal, or 50c per day by the week; bread, fresh meat, and all kinds of provisions will be kept for sale on the grounds.

All who come to Macedonia by rail on Friday and Saturday, the 3d and 4th, will be conveyed to the grounds free, thereafter, 25c. Those coming over the C. B. and Q. Railroad must time their departure from home so as to arrive at Hastings, Iowa, before noon, as there is but one train per day up the branch, which leaves at 12:30 p. m., and none on Sunday.

Reduced rates have been secured on the above named road from all stations between Council Bluffs and Chariton, and all branch roads connected therewith; but to get the benefit thereof, you must adhere strictly to the following conditions:—You pay full fare for a ticket to Macedonia, and take from the ticket agent at your station a certificate to the effect that you have paid one full fare to Macedonia, and that you are going to attend the meeting; the clerk here will give you another certificate; you present the two to the ticket agent here, and he will sell you your return ticket at one-third fare, thus making the round trip for one and one-third fare.

A good corps of our best preachers will be there. We extend a cordial invitation to all to lay aside their every day affairs and come. Yes, come. Come prepared to stay from the commencement to the close, and enjoy the spirit of union and brotherly love.

D. HOUGAS, Pres. of Committee.

EPISTOLARY.

TO THE SAINTS OF THE NORTHERN CALIFORNIA DISTRICT.

Brethren and Sisters:—Conscious as I am that by associating ourselves with the cause of Christ restored in "the great dispensation of the fulness of times," we also assumed an obligation to help sustain it, in its spiritual and temporal workings, it causes me no little regret that necessity requires me to approach you with an earnest and solemn reminder of the fact that you are forgetting, or perhaps carelessly neglecting that obligation by withholding your temporal support to the cause.

This should not be. The great Master has foreshadowed as an inducement to us to be constantly and earnestly engaged, a reward that none but the valiant co-worker is worthy of, or can ever obtain. Let no person deceive himself with the supposition that a mere formal association with the cause will entitle him to it. Nay! that is like faith without works, of no avail. In the great vision of rewards according to works, as seen by God's servant, and of which he was commanded to write, he has written for our learning and benefit the things which he saw in these words, speaking of the inhabitants of the terrestrial world he says, That amongst other classes those who had attained unto that glory, he saw this one there also. "These are they who are not valiant in the testimony of Jesus, wherefore, they obtained not the crown over the kingdom of our God." Comment is unnecessary; but that the actions of our lives will determine our future condition is evident. Providential circumstances have created our present conditions; and as we are found so are we required to be co-workers. The cause presents itself to us in two aspects, spiritual and temporal, each indispensable to the other. But from the standpoint of dependency the former lies at the feet of the latter. A moment's reflection must convince all of this fact, and without any veritable "open sesame" to furnish the former's requirements! it is entirely dependent upon the good will and pleasure of those who are called to be co-workers.

God has specially provided for this department in the tithing law; and that it is a present truth and in force we verily believe. During the visit of the Bishop and his Counselor to the coast, the meaning and workings of this law, were fully set forth, but we may be pardoned if we attempt to outline them again for the especial benefit of those who had not the pleasure of hearing them.

Firstly.—This law in its application is not intended to be burdensome, nor in any manner whatever oppressive to those for whom it is intended. Its requirements simply ask the sacrifice of one tenth of all property belonging to individual members of the church. This of course excludes all household effects and implements of industry required for comfort and living; and also for the procurement of all such. A just discrimination in these matters should be made by all persons in defining property. Where property, real estate and improvements, is so situated that it is not and can not be at present made available without great sacrifice, and inasmuch as there is with the owner a disposition to keep, or to commence keeping the law, an inventory of all such should be made and reported to the Bishopric. The basis of valuation should be well considered. We can only suggest that it be made from the latest local or municipal assessments where said property is located, or any other basis the wisdom, honesty and experience of the individual may think best, or the church Bishop provide, and the one tenth of said valuation be entered against the owner. And providing such tenth in an undivided condition with the remaining property should bring an annual return, the pro rata be given to the church.

Secondly.—That the one tenth of the annual interest or accumulation of property, over and above that which has already been tithed and expenses for living shall be paid into the treasury. Unless other provision was made the whole burden of the temporal needs of the church would rest upon a few and would prove inadequate. Associated with the tithing law is that of offerings, to which no person in the church is an exception. No person can be poorer than the widow, as found recorded in the scriptures, who threw her last mite into the treasury, which in the act, if not in its intrinsic value was a greater offering than those of the rich.

Offerings belong especially to those who have no properties to tithe, but applies to all others as circumstances demand or require. The Lord's day is named and seems the most fitting of all occasions when offerings should be made at the time of sacrament. At no time does an oblation of money seem more appropriate to express humility and devotion to God's cause as when commemorating the sufferings and death of God's great gift for man, even Christ the Lord. Our opinion is that all such offerings should be exclusively used for the poor and missionary purposes, after passing to the Bishopric as a branch offering. The question as to how tithes and offerings should be used is still perplexing to some. They are for two purposes only; the poor, and missionaries' families at home. They are both proteges of the church.

The poor of every branch of the church should be known to its officers, and they with all the surroundings of their condition should be ascertained and reported to the Bishopric. The abstract poor, without any visible means of support or capable relatives, should receive all possible help from the fund; but when aged persons have children whose surroundings are plentiful, from the church only a partial, if any relief can be given. All beneficiaries must bear in mind that their help from the fund is a contingent one only, depending as the fund is continually upon the Saints for replenishment.

There is a prevalent supposition amongst the various branches and scattered Saints, that the missionary's needs are all supplied from the church fund, and that such relieves them from responsibility from rendering him any help. This is a mistaken view. The missionary in his field is entirely dependent upon that field for all his necessary personal needs and traveling expenses, and only in dire necessity can he make applications for personal relief. The missionary's family at home are the proper recipients, and their wants are looked after by the Bishopric, as funds come into its hands from the body.

Brethren and Sisters of the Northern California district; your liberality in the past has become proverbial, at a time when no definite financial system in the church was known nor observed. Your indiscriminate generosity then perhaps was unwise in some instances, and perhaps even now may cause unpleasant memories to arise. If so, such should not be, nor is it a valid reason why you should refrain from assisting now, temporally, our great cause. The fund which is in my charge, is nearing depletion; a few, and only a few, whose honorable names and deeds are recorded, have hitherto carried it along cheerfully with proper aid. This is not right! God never intended that such should be, but has wisely provided a system of tithes and offering which embraces in its operations every soul that has named the name of Christ. Our cause is a common one, but even now assuming magnificent proportions, and its needs are increasing to the perfect embarrassment of the Bishopric, because neglected by the body. May I implore you to stop and consider how many cares it has and how little it has to meet them. May I ask you to contribute, as God desires you should do. It may seem a small matter to glide along smoothly in utter indifference and neglect, but there is a fearful responsibility and consequence attached to such, and will surely in time bring every one face to face with the justice of God. If there are any that can not comply with the tithing law from the lack of property, there is none surely that is more distressed than the widow, and who is there then that may not hearken unto the inscrutable Master. No matter how small your offerings may be, if measured by your ability to do, he will recognize it and possibly arrange his kind providences in your behalf.

Of what profit will a life long association with this cause amount to if a person perpetually ignores his duty by refusing to render it the slightest temporal aid when in his power to do so. There should be no lack of disposition to help; where this is found, there also is found the ability to do with, and the pathway of life is considerably smoothed. On the other hand it is horribly rugged and hedged around continually; and so might we ever expect it to be, until our church life is a living manifestation of a strong, genuine, practical faith in the cause.

In conclusion we may say, how sad it would be to have to report a depleted treasury, and consequent inability to meet the monthly benefits the poor are receiving, yet without your speedy help there will be no other alternative. May God give you grace and willing hearts, is the prayerful desire of your humble servant,

T. J. ANDREWS,

Bish. Agent, Northern Cal. Dist.

CHURCH RECORDER'S NOTICE

It is essential in the recording of the scattering members of the Church that Branch and District officials should give me their aid, namely by preparing lists of those in their regions who are members of the Church but not members of their branches, and also lists of those members who have been dropped from the records of branches because of their absence from the branch, or because their residences are unknown. In cases where branches have been reorganized and names left off the new record please send all such names to me; also, where branches have, during the past twenty-five or more years, been disorganized altogether, will those who have knowledge of it, or who have such old records, please send me the names of such persons as have not joined other branches and thus become enrolled again, so that they may now be enrolled. Where it is known that such members have died, or otherwise been lost, it should be stated that it may be put upon record. Any members who see this who do not know that they are on record, or are reported by some one else to me, please send name and items of birth and baptism. Where persons have died please give dates as near as may be. Presidents and Clerks of Branches and Districts are also hereby reminded that if they have any branch reports, or information about records, that I would like such reports or information to be forwarded to me as early as may be. Do not keep them because of the little postage required to send them, but let me know. The Government now sends one ounce of such matter for two cents where formerly only a half ounce was carried for three cents, hence the cost is little, and the reports are essential in order to keep the law of God in this matter.

H. A. STEBBINS,

Church Secretary and Recorder.

APPEAL.

To Superintendents of Sabbath School, or Branch Presidents, Greeting; Dear Brothers:—We wish to make this last personal appeal to you, in behalf of the Sabbath School cause in our church. Have you read our appeal in the Herald, and can you cheerfully and heartily endorse it? On account of your connection with the Sabbath School work, you of all others are the ones to put forth a strong personal effort, not only in behalf of the Hope, but also that the Board of Publication furnish to our schools such books as are seemingly indispensable to teachers, in carrying on the work successfully. We wish to make the Hope a paper to supercede all others in our Sabbath Schools, in fact, just what it ought to be, one of the best instructors which can be put into the hands of our children. In order to do this it must be enlarged, and this enlargement can only be accomplished by an enlarged subscription list, of promptly paying subscribers. The Board of Publication find that too heavy a reduction has been made to clubs, (having been one-half in clubs to Sabbath Schools,) consequently, when enlarged, the price will be advanced on club rates —; no advance will be made on single subscriptions, and a reduction of — will be allowed to all clubs of — or more subscribers.

If the cause is worthy, we trust you will make an effort to interest every parent and child connected with your school or branch to help carry it on. Let each one put their shoulder to this wheel and see how easily the cause will move, and then when it is moving rejoice with us that we have been accounted worthy to be co-workers with those whom Jesus of old commanded to feed his lambs.

For the purpose of aiding the Sabbath School cause of the church we have secured an excellent likeness of the three witnesses to the Book of Mormon. They are upon one plate, and will be just such a picture as Latter Day Saints should have in their families. In order to place them within the reach of every child and parent desiring to have one, we have put them at the very low price of twenty-five cents. When sent by mail, ten cents extra must be added to cover cost of mailing. Please send the money for one for yourself, and then try to sell more. Bro. Chase, who gets them out for us, is doing the work at bottom prices in order that the cause move on. Will you help us?

Your sister in Christ,

PERSECUTION AND ITS CAUSES.

It will now be proper to hear from Joseph the Seer in respect to the persecutions mentioned by Mr. Reed in our last issue, and in order that the reader may clearly perceive the motives which prompted them, and learn who the chief instigators were, we subjoin some important portions of church history descriptive of those times and events: It will be observed that the statements of Joseph and Mr. Reed are essentially the same on those points of which they both speak; but those of the seer are given with greater fulness, besides he mentions many things which Mr. Reed does not, and these items furnish a key to the great excitement caused by the claims and experiences of the seer and his fellows. Joseph says:

Whilst the Book of Mormon was in the hands of the printer, we still continued to bear testimony, and give information, as far as we had opportunity; and also made known to our brethren, that we had received commandment to organize the church, and accordingly we met together for that purpose, at the house of the above mentioned Mr. Whitmer (being six in number) on Tuesday the sixth day of April, A. D. one thousand, eight hundred and thirty.

Having opened the meeting by solemn prayer to our heavenly Father we proceeded, (according to previous commandment) to call on our brethren to know whether they accepted us as their teachers in the things of the kingdom of God, and whether they were satisfied that we should proceed and be organized as a church according to said commandment which we had received. To these they consented by an unanimous vote. I then laid my hands upon Oliver Cowdery and ordained him an elder of the "Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints." After which he ordained me also to the office of an elder of said church. We then took bread, blessed it, and brake it with them. We then laid our hands on each individual member of the church present that they might receive the gift of the Holy Ghost, and be confirmed members of the church of Christ. The Holy Ghost was poured out upon us to a very great degree. Some prophesied, whilst we all praised the Lord and rejoiced exceedingly. Whilst yet together I received the following commandment.

Revelation to Joseph Smith, Jr. given April 6th, 1830. (See Doctrine and Covenants, Sec. 19).—Times and Seasons, vol. 3, p. 944.

We now proceeded to call out and ordain some others of the brethren to different offices of the Priesthood, according as the Spirit manifested unto us; and after a happy time spent in witnessing and feeling for ourselves the powers and blessings of the Holy Ghost, through the grace of God bestowed upon us, we dismissed with the pleasing knowledge that we were now individually members of, and acknowledged of God, "The Church of Jesus Christ," organized in accordance with commandments and revelations given by him to ourselves in the last days, as well as according to the order of the Church as recorded in the New Testament.

Several persons who had attended the above meeting and got convinced of the truth, came forward shortly after, and were received into the church, among the rest, my own father and mother were baptized to my great joy and consolation, and about the same time Martin Harris and A. Rockwell.

[At this time the revelation in Doctrine and Covenants, sec. 20, was given.—Ed.]

The following persons being anxious to know of the Lord what might be their respective duties, in relation to this work, I enquired of the Lord and received for them the following.

Revelation to Oliver Cowdery, Hyrum Smith, Samuel H. Smith, Joseph Smith sen., and Joseph Knight sen. Given at Manchester, New York, April, 1830. (See Doc and Cov., sec. 21).

On Sunday, April 11th, 1830, Oliver Cowdery preached the first public discourse, that was delivered by any of our number, our meeting was held by previous appointment at the house of Mr. Whitmer, Fayette, large numbers of people attended, and the same day the following were baptized; viz.: Hyrum Page, Katharine Page, Christian Whitmer, Anne Whitmer, Jacob Whitmer, Elizabeth Whitmer, and on the 18th day Peter Whitmer, sen., Mary Whitmer, William Jolly, Elizabeth Jolly, Vincent Jolly; Richard Z. Peterson, and Elizabeth Anne Whitmer, all by Oliver Cowdery in Seneca Lake.

During this month of April I went on a visit to the residence of Mr. Joseph Knight, of Colesville, Broom county, New York, with whom and his family I had been previously acquainted, and of whose name I have above mentioned as having been so kind and thoughtful towards us, while translating the Book of Mormon. Mr. Knight and his family were Universalists; but were willing to reason with me upon my religious views, and were as usual friendly and hospitable. We held several meetings in the neighborhood, we had many friends, and some enemies. Our meetings were well attended, and many began to pray fervently to Almighty God, that he would give them wisdom to understand the truth. Amongst those who attended our meetings regularly, was Newel Knight son to Joseph Knight. He and I had many and serious conversations on the important subject of man's eternal salvation; we had got into the habit of praying much at our meeting and Newell had said that he would try and take up his cross, and pray vocally during meeting; but when we again met together he rather excused himself; I tried to prevail upon him making use of the figure, supposing that he should get into a mudhole would he not try to help himself out? and that we were willing now to help him out of the mudhole. He replied that provided he had got into a mudhole through carelessness, he would rather wait and get out himself, than have others to help him; and so he would wait until he should get into the woods by himself, and there he would pray. Accordingly he deferred praying until next morning, when he retired into the woods; where (according to his own account afterwards) he made several attempts to pray but could scarcely do so, feeling that he had not done his duty, but that he should have prayed in the presence of others. He began to feel uneasy, and continued to feel worse both in mind and body, until upon reaching his own house, his appearance was such as to alarm his wife very much. He requested her to go and bring me to him. I went and found him suffering very much in his mind, and his body acted upon in a very strange manner, his visage and limbs distorted and twisted in every shape and appearance possible to imagine; and finally he was caught up off the floor of the apartment and tossed about most fearfully. His situation was soon made known to his neighbors and relatives, and in a short time as many as eight or nine grown persons had got together to witness the scene. After he had thus suffered for a time, I succeeded in getting hold of him by the hand, when almost immediately he spoke to me, and with great earnestness requested of me, that I should cast the devil out of him, saying that he knew he was in him, and that he also knew that I could cast him out. I replied "if you know that I can it shall be done," and then almost unconsciously I rebuked the devil; and commanded him in the name of Jesus Christ to depart from him; when immediately Newel spoke out and said that he saw the devil leave him and vanish from his sight.*—vol. 4, p. 12, 13.

The scene was now entirely changed, for as soon as the devil had departed from our friend, his countenance became natural, his distortions of body ceased, and almost immediately the Spirit of the Lord descended upon him, and the visions of eternity were opened to his view. He afterwards related his experience as follows: "I now began to feel a most pleasing sensation resting upon me, and immediately the visions of heaven were opened to my view. I felt myself attracted upward, and remained for some time enwrapped in contemplation, insomuch that I knew not what was going on in the room. By and by I felt some weight pressing upon my shoulder and the side of my head, which served to recall me to a sense of my situation, and I found that the Spirit of the Lord had actually caught me up off the floor, and that my shoulder and head were pressing against the beams."

* This was the first miracle which was done in this church or by any member of it, and it was done not by man nor by the power of man, but it was done by God, and by the power of godliness; therefore let the honor and the praise, the dominion and the glory be ascribed to the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit for ever and ever. Amen.

All this was witnessed by many, to their great astonishment and satisfaction, when they saw the devil cast out, and the power of God and his Holy Spirit thus made manifest. So soon as consciousness returned, his bodily weakness was such that we were obliged to lay him upon his bed and wait upon him for some time. As may be expected, such a scene as this contributed much to make believers of those who witnessed it, and finally, the greater part of them became members of the Church.

Soon after this occurrence I returned to Fayette, Seneca county. The Book of Mormon, ("The stick of Joseph in the hands of Ephraim") had now been published for some time, and as the ancient prophet had predicted of it: "It was accounted as a strange thing." No small stir was created by its appearance; great opposition and much persecution followed the believers of its authenticity; but it had now come to pass that truth had sprung out of the earth; and righteousness had looked down from heaven—so we feared not our opponents, knowing that we had both truth and righteousness on our side; that we had both the Father and the Son, because we had the doctrines of Christ, and abideth in them; and therefore we continued to preach, and to give information to all who were willing to hear.

During the last week in May, the above mentioned Newel Knight came to visit us, at Fayette, and was baptized by David Whitmer.

On the first day of June, 1830, we held our first conference as an organized church. Our numbers were about thirty, besides whom many assembled with us, who were either believers, or anxious to learn.

Having opened by singing and prayer, we partook together of the emblems of the body and blood of our Lord Jesus Christ; we then proceeded to confirm several who had lately been baptized; after which we called out and ordained several to the various offices of the priesthood. Much exhortation and instruction was given, and the Holy Ghost was poured out upon us in a miraculous manner—many of our number prophesied, whilst others had the heavens opened to their view, and were so overcome that we had to lay them on beds, or other convenient places: among the rest was brother Newel Knight, who had to be placed on a bed, being unable to help himself. By his own account of the transaction, he could not understand why we should lay him on the bed, as he felt no sensibility of weakness. He felt his heart filled with love, with glory and pleasure unspeakable, and could discern all that was going on in the room; when, all of a sudden, a vision of futurity burst upon him. He saw there represented, the great work which through my instrumentality was yet to be accomplished. He saw heaven opened, and beheld the Lord Jesus Christ seated at the right hand of the Majesty on high, and had it made plain to his understanding, that the time would come when he would be admitted into his presence, to enjoy his society forever and ever. When their bodily strength was restored to these brethren, they shouted "Hosannas to God and the Lamb," and rehearsed the glorious things which they had seen and felt, whilst they were yet in the Spirit.

Such scenes as these were calculated to inspire our hearts with joy unspeakable, and fill us with awe and reverence for that Almighty being, by whose grace we had been called to be instrumental in bringing about for the children of men, the enjoyment of such glorious blessings as were now poured out upon us. To find ourselves engaged in the very same order of things as observed by the holy Apostles of old; to realize the importance and solemnity of such proceedings, and to witness and feel with our own natural senses, the like glorious manifestations of the power of the priesthood; the gifts and blessings of the Holy Ghost; and the goodness and condescension of a merciful God, unto such as obey the everlasting gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ, combined to create within us sensations of rapturous gratitude, and inspire us with fresh zeal and energy, in the cause of truth.

Shortly after this conference David Whitmer baptized the following persons in Seneca Lake, viz: John Poorman, John Jolly, Jerushee Smith, Katharine Smith, William Smith, Don C. Smith, Peter Rockwell, Caroline Rockwell, and Electa Rockwell.

Immediately after this conference I returned to my own house, and from thence, (accompanied by my wife, Oliver Cowdery, John Whitmer, and David Whitmer) journeyed again on a visit to Mr. Knight's of Colesville, Broom county. We found a number in the neighborhood still believing and anxious to be baptized.

We appointed a meeting for the Sabbath, and on the afternoon of Saturday we erected a dam across a stream of water which was convenient, for the purpose of there attending to the ordinance, but during the night a mob collected and tore down our dam, which hindered us of attending to the baptism on the Sabbath.

We afterward found out that this mob had been instigated to this act of molestation by certain sectarian priests of the neighborhood, who began to consider their craft in danger, and took this plan to stop the progress of the truth, and the sequel will show how determinedly they prosecuted their opposition, as well as to how little purpose in the end.

The Sabbath arrived and we held our meeting. Oliver Cowdery preached, and others of us bore testimony to the truth of the Book of Mormon, the doctrine of repentance, baptism for the remission of sins, and laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost, &c., &c. Amongst our audience were those who had torn down our dam, and who seemed wishful to give us trouble, but did not until after the meeting was dismissed, when they immediately commenced talking to those whom they considered our friends, to try to turn them against us and our doctrines.—Page 22, 23.

Amongst the many present at this meeting was one Emily Coburn, sister to the wife of Newel Knight. The Rev. Mr. Shearer, a divine of the Presbyterian faith, who had considered himself her pastor, came to understand that she was likely to believe our doctrine, and had a short time previous to this our meeting, came to labor with her, but having spent some time with her without being able to persuade her against us, he endeavored to have her leave her sister's house and go with him to her father's, who lived at a distance of at least ten miles off; for this purpose he had recourse to stratagem, he told her that one of her brothers was waiting at a certain place, wishful to have her go home with him. He succeeded thus to get her a little distance from the house, when, seeing that her brother was not in waiting for her, she refused to go any further with him; upon which he got hold of her by the arm to force her along; but her sister was soon with them; the two women were too many for him and he was forced to sneak off without his errand, after all his labor and ingenuity. Nothing daunted however, he went to her father, represented to him something or other, which induced the old gentleman to give him a power of attorney, which, as soon as our meeting was over, on the above named Sunday evening, he immediately served upon her and carried her off to her father's residence, by open violence, against her will. All his labor was in vain however, for the said Emily Coburn, in a short time afterwards, was baptized and confirmed a member of the "Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints."

However, early on Monday morning we were on the alert, and before our enemies were aware we had repaired the dam, and proceeded to baptize, when the following thirteen persons were baptized under the hands of Oliver Cowdery, viz: Emma Smith, Hezekiah Peck and wife, Joseph Knight and wife, William Stringham and wife, Joseph Knight jr., Aaron Culver and wife, Levi Hall, Polly Knight and Julia Stringham. Before the baptism was entirely finished, the mob began again to collect, and shortly after we had retired, they amounted to about fifty men. They surrounded the house of Mr. Knight (where we had retired to) raging with anger and apparently wishful to commit violence upon us. Some asked us questions, others threatened us, so that we thought it wisdom to leave and go to the house of Newel Knight.

There also they followed us, and it was only by the exercise of great prudence on our part, and reliance on our heavenly Father that they were kept from laying violent hands upon us, and so long as they chose to stay we were obliged to answer them various unprofitable questions, and bear with insults and threatenings without number.

We had appointed a meeting for this evening, for the purpose of attending to the confirmation of those who had been the same morning baptized; the time appointed had arrived, and our friends had nearly all collected together, when to my surprise, I was visited by a constable, and arrested by him on a warrant, on charge of being a disorderly person; of setting the country in an uproar by preaching the Book of Mormon, &c., &c. The constable informed me (soon after I had been arrested) that the plan of those who had got out the warrant was to get me into the hands of the mob, who were now lying in ambush for me; but that he was determined to save me from them, as he had found me to be a different sort of person from what I had been represented to him. I soon found that he had told me the truth in this matter, for not far from Mr. Knight's house, the wagon in which we had set out was surrounded by the mob, who seemed only to await some signal from the constable; but to their great disappointment, he gave the horse the whip and drove me out of their reach. Whilst driving along pretty quickly, one of the wagon wheels came off, which left us, once more, very nearly surrounded by them, as they had come on, in close pursuit. However we managed to get the wheel on again, and again left them behind us. He drove on to the town of South Bainbridge, Chenango county, where he lodged me for the time being, in an upper room of a tavern, and in order that all might be right with himself and with me also, he slept during the night with his feet against the door, and a loaded musket by his side, whilst I occupied a bed which was in the room, he having declared that if we were interrupted unlawfully that he would fight for me, and defend me as far as in his power.

On the day following a court was convened for the purpose of investigating those charges which had been preferred against me. A great excitement prevailed on account of the scandalous falsehoods which had been circulated, the nature of which will come out in the sequel.

In the mean time, my friend, Joseph Knight, had repaired to two of his neighbors, viz: James Davidson and John S. Reed, Esqrs., (respectable farmers; men renowned for their integrity, and well versed in the laws of their country), and retained them on my behalf during my trial. At length the trial commenced amidst a multitude of spectators, who in general evinced a belief that I was guilty of all that had been reported concerning me, and of course were very zealous that I should be punished according to my crimes. Among many witnesses called up against me, was Mr. Josiah Staal (of whom I have made mention, as having worked for him some time) and examined to the following effect. Q. Did not the prisoner Joseph Smith have a horse of you? Ans. Yes. Q. Did not he go to you and tell you, that an angel had appeared unto him and authorized him to get the horse from you? Ans. No, he told me no such story. Q. Well; how had he the horse of you? Ans. He bought him of me, as another man would do. Q. Have you had your pay? Ans. That is not your business.—The question being again put, the witness replied, "I hold his note for the price of the horse, which I consider as good as the pay; for I am well acquainted with Joseph Smith Jr., and know him to be an honest man; and if he wishes I am ready to let him have another horse on the same terms."

Mr. Jonathan Thompson was next called up, and examined. Q. Has not the prisoner, Joseph Smith Jr., had a yoke of oxen of you? Ans. Yes. Q. Did he not obtain them of you by telling you that he had a revelation to the effect that he was to have them? Ans. No, he did not mention a word of the kind concerning the oxen; he purchased them the same as another man would.

After a few more such attempts, the court was detained for a time, in order that two young women (daughters to Mr. Staal) with whom I had at times kept company, might be sent for, in order, if possible to elicit something from them which might be made a pretext against me. The young ladies arrived and were severally examined touching my character and conduct in general, but particularly as to my behavior towards them both in public and private, when they both bore such testimony in my favor as left my enemies without a pretext on their account. Several attempts were now made to prove something against me, and even circumstances which were alleged to have taken place in Broom county were brought forward; but these, my lawyers would not here admit of against me, in consequence of which my persecutors managed to detain the court, until they had succeeded in obtaining a warrant from Broom county, and which warrant they served upon me at the very moment in which I had been acquitted by this court.—Times and Seasons, vol. 4, p. 39-41.

The constable who served this second warrant upon me, had no sooner arrested me than he began to abuse and insult me, and so unfeeling was he with me, that although I had been kept all the day in court, without anything to eat since the morning, yet he hurried me off to Broom county, a distance of about fifteen miles, before he allowed me any kind of food whatever. He took me to a tavern and gathered in a number of men, who used every means to abuse, ridicule, and insult me. They spit upon me, pointed their fingers at me, saying, Prophecy, prophecy; and thus did they imitate those who crucified the Savior of mankind, not knowing what they did. We were at this time not far distant from my own house. I wished to be allowed the privilege of spending the night with my wife, at home, offering any wished for security, for my appearance, but this was denied me. I applied for something to eat.—The constable ordered me some crusts of bread, and water, which was the only fare I that night received. At length we retired to bed; the constable made me lie next the wall: He then laid himself down by me, and put his arm around me; and upon my moving in the least would clench me fast, fearing that I intended to escape from him; and in this (not very agreeable) manner did we pass the night. Next day I was brought before the Magistrate's Court of Colesville, Broom county, and put upon my trial. My former faithful friends and lawyers were again at my side; my former persecutors were arrayed against me. Many witnesses were again called forward and examined, some of whom swore to the most palpable falsehoods, and like to the false witnesses which had appeared against me the day previous, they contradicted themselves so plainly that the court would not admit their testimony. Others were called who shewed by their zeal that they were willing enough to prove something against me; but all they could do was to tell some things which somebody else had told them. In this "frivolous and vexatious" manner did they proceed for a considerable time, when finally, Newel Knight was called up and examined by lawyer Seymour, who had been specially sent for on this occasion. One lawyer Burch also was on the side of the prosecution; but Mr. Seymour seemed to be a more zealous Presbyterian, and appeared very anxious and determined that the people should not be deluded by any one professing the power of Godliness, and not "denying the power thereof."

So soon as Mr. Knight had been sworn, Mr.

Seymour proceeded to interrogate him as follows: Ques. Did the prisoner, Joseph Smith, Jr., cast the devil out of you? Ans. No sir. Q. Why, have not you had the devil cast out of you? A. Yes sir. Q. And had not Joe Smith some hand in its being done? A. Yes sir.—Q. And did not he cast him out of you? A. No sir; it was done by the power of God, and Joseph Smith was the instrument in the hands of God, on the occasion. He commanded him out of me in the name of Jesus Christ. Q. And are you sure it was the devil? A. Yes sir. Q. Did you see him, after he was cast out of you? A. Yes sir, I saw him. Q. Pray, what did he look like? (Here one of my lawyers informed the witness that he need not answer the question). The witness replied, I believe I need not answer your last question, but I will do it provided I be allowed to ask you one question first, and you answer me, viz: Do you, Mr. Seymour, understand the things of the Spirit? No, (answered Mr. Seymour) I do not pretend to such big things. Well then, (replied Knight), it would be of no use to tell you what the devil looked like, for it was a spiritual sight, and spiritually discerned; and of course you would not understand it, were I to tell you of it. The lawyer dropped his head, whilst the loud laugh of the audience proclaimed his discomfiture. Mr. Seymour now addressed the court, and in a long and violent harangue endeavored to blacken my character and bring me in guilty of the charge which had been brought against me. Among other things, he brought up the story of my having been a money digger; and in this manner proceeded, in hopes to influence the court and the people against me. Mr. Davidson and Mr. Reed followed on my behalf. They held forth in true colors the nature of the prosecution, the malignancy of intention, and the apparent disposition to persecute their client, rather than to afford him justice. They took up the different arguments which had been brought by the lawyers for the prosecution, and having shewed their utter futility and misapplication, then proceeded to scrutinize the evidence which had been adduced, and each in his turn thanked God that he had been engaged in so good a cause as that of defending a man whose character stood so well the test of such a strict investigation. In fact, these men, although not regular lawyers, were upon this occasion able to put to silence their opponents, and convince the court that I was innocent. They spoke like men inspired of God, whilst those who were arrayed against me trembled under the sound of their voices, and quailed before them like criminals before a bar of justice.

The majority of the assembled multitude had now begun to find that nothing could be sustained against me: even the constable who arrested me, and treated me so badly, now came and apologized to me, and asked my forgiveness of his behavior towards me; and so far was he changed that he informed me that the mob were determined that if the court acquitted me that they would have me, and rail-ride me, and tar and feather me; and further, that he was willing to favor me, and lead me out in safety by a private way.

The court finding the charges against me not sustained, I was accordingly acquitted, to the great satisfaction of my friends, and vexation of my enemies, who were still determined upon molesting me; but through the instrumentality of my new friend, the constable, I was enabled to escape them and make my way in safety to my wife's sisters's house, where I found my wife awaiting with much anxiety the issue of those ungodly proceedings: and with her in company next day, arrived in safety at my own house.

After a few days however, I again returned to Colesville, in company with Oliver Cowdery, for the purpose of confirming those whom we had thus been forced to abandon for a time.—We had scarcely arrived at Mr. Knight's when the mob was seen collecting together to oppose us, and we considered it wisdom to leave for home, which we did, without even waiting for any refreshment. Our enemies pursued us, and it was oftentimes as much as we could do to elude them; however, we managed to get home, after having traveled all night, except a short time, during which we were forced to rest ourselves under a large tree by the wayside, sleeping and watching alternately. And thus were we persecuted on account of our religious faith—in a country, the constitution of which guarantees to every man the indefeasible right to worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience; and by men too who were professors of religion, and who were not backward to maintain this privilege for themselves; though they thus wantonly could deny it to us. For instance, Cyrus M'Master, a Presbyterian of high standing in his church, was one of the chief instigators of these persecutions; and he at one time told me personally, that he considered me guilty, without judge or jury. The celebrated Doctor Boyington, also a Presbyterian, was another instigator to these deeds of outrage; whilst a young man named Benton, of the same religious faith, swore out the first warrant against me. I could mention many others also, but for brevity's sake will make these suffice for the present.—Vol. 4, pages 61, 62.

I will say, however, that amid all trials and tribulations we had to wade through, the Lord, who well knew our infantile and delicate situation, vouchsafed for us a supply, and granted us "line upon line, here a little and there a little;" of which the following was a precious morsel.

A revelation to Joseph Smith, Jun., given June, 1830. [Doc. Cov., sec. 22].

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

PRES. JOSEPH SMITH started last Tuesday, August 24th, for Nauvoo, Burnside, and other points in Hancock County, Illinois, to "preach the gospel of the kingdom," and tell the people of the Lord's marvelous latter day work. Some who have formerly been bitter enemies, now join with others in inviting him to come, promising free halls and good treatment. He attended the G. A. R. Reunion at Leon in this county, and on invitation delivered in behalf of the county the address of welcome to that body on Wednesday the 11th of August. And this is the way he takes his "vacation."

Bro. Isaac Hogaboom writes from Bloomington, Dakota, that he is anxious some one will come to labor there, they will find a home and a place to preach while there. White Lake station on the Milwaukee road is the station.

It is stated in the Chicago Tribune for August 20th that a veteran pilot on the Mississippi, says that this river has not been so low in thirty years as now.

Sr. Luvenia, wife of Elder I. N. Roberts, says in a letter lately to us, that on arriving at Texas, herself and family were greeted with a hearty welcome by Bro. Sherrill and family, and that by their kindness in aiding them they are now fixed in a home of their own. She also expresses much gratitude to the Saints at Lamoni, (especially the family of Bro. A. S. Cochran), and also to many at Stewartsville, Mo., for aid and sympathy they extended to her and her husband in the sickness and burial of their little daughter last April.

Bro. and Sr. J. M. Terry, of Stewartsville, Mo., express gratitude to the Saints, and friends at Nebraska City for kind words and substantial tokens of regard given them when removing from the latter to the former place, not long since. He says he has been laboring with Bro. Wm. Lewis, Bishop's Agent, in presenting and setting in order the law and usages of the church in respect to finances, and that they meet with fair success. Bro. Terry baptized six August 4th, and he thinks the ministry are vigilant and active in the Master's work.

Bro. W. W. Hodge writes August 20th, from Beaver Falls, Pa., and expresses ardent desires to serve God aright and aid in forwarding his work. Some there are willing to investigate the faith.

Sister Mary Fisher writes from Harrisville, Utah. She is seventy-one years of age, was baptized in Greenock, Scotland, January 19th, 1841; went to Utah in an early day, left her husband sixteen years ago because of polygamy, but is strong in the faith of the gospel as she received it at first. Like many others in Utah and vicinity, she regrets she did not see President Joseph Smith when he was in Utah last year, but hopes to be spared to see him yet.

Bro. James Binney writes from 1322 N. Grand Avenue, Springfield, Illinois. He had been sick for nearly one year, up to three months ago. His friends will be pleased to know he is now improving.

Bro. B. V. Springer baptized three near Fremont, Indiana, prior to the 14th inst. Elder L. D. Hickey was out in the Coldwater Republican in defense of the claims of J. J. Strang.

Write only on one side of the communications intended for publication, otherwise they may never be even read. Typesetters dislike to set such documents, and will not if they can well avoid it. Draw your cross-lines directly through, and not over your "t's;" also put the dots exactly over the i, instead of over some letter one, two, or more removes from it. In this way mistakes can hardly occur in getting at the sense, and in correctly setting copy.

Bro. D. S. Crawley writes from his home, Amity, Mo., the 19th, that his "heart is in the cause," and that he is battling for the truth as best he can, but says, "a good rain came yesterday, but too late to make even a half crop of corn."

Bro. C. M. Fulks writes us from Girard, Kansas, and his letter is dated "April," but presume it should read August. He expresses good desires for the work of God and hopes to see the ministry and leading members "set their houses in order" and thus "preach by example."

Sister Sarah Headrick, writing from Hanford, California regrets that no meetings are convenient for her to attend.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

A very worthy brother and able minister writes that he does not believe it is true that "there is not a particle of evidence that Jesus or an apostle ever kept the Sabbath—ever kept it better than any other day," as stated by a writer in the HERALD for August 21st. He further says:

"I think that both Jesus and the disciples did keep the Sabbath, and that a failure to have done so would have been a violation of the sanctity of God's command."

He claims also that "the law of Moses, including circumcision" did not cease to be in force till Jesus was crucified. He further holds that when Jesus said "Wherefore it is lawful to do well on the Sabbath days," he did not mean thereby that the law was no longer in force, but that he simply "gave a proper definition of its design," and confirming its binding authority.

Elder A. Haws writes from Yamhill, Oregon, August 13th, that he has many places opened to receive the gospel and others are offering invitations, and he says:

"Joseph, I see no reason to falter, and no place to stop. So, as the great work opens out more and more to my view, my faith increases day by day."

BRO. CHARRES T. HOWLAND sends us this clipping from a late Coldwater (Mich.) Courier.

"A profoundly interested audience listened to Miss Kate Field's thrilling exposition of Mormonism at the M. E. church last Wednesday evening. Strong argument, history, politics, followed in rapid succession, holding the listener for an hour and a half. Miss Field clearly proved that the great crime of Utah is treason and not polygamy, and advocated as a panacea the disfranchisement of the entire territory and the establishment of a Legislative Commission, such as governed the Northwestern Territory for thirteen years. Miss Field's peroration was remarkably eloquent and included a heretofore unknown anecdote of Abraham Lincoln. Certainly this brilliant writer and speaker is doing a national service in appealing to the people on the vital subject of a Mormon polygamous theocracy. She was careful to exempt from her denunciations the Josephites who go by the name of Mormons, a number of whom are respected citizens of this county, saying 'they repudiate polygamy and teach obedience and loyalty to the laws of the land.' She thought the present administration made a mistake in not sustaining Governor Murray."

Bro. Howland has been traveling with Elder C. Scott of late, and feels "very much encouraged." Good!

"Little baby, thou camest into the world weeping, whilst all about thee smiled; so live that thou mayst depart in smiles whilst all about thee weep."

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY SISTER "FRANCES."

"Darkness in the pathway of man's life
Is but the shadow of God's providence,
By the great Sun of Wisdom cast thereon;
And what is dark below is light in heaven."

WEARY, yes she was weary as she watched the fiery sun sinking to his rest amidst beds of flame, red clouds and the parched earth lying so still and shriveled beneath the intense heat. She was weary and her soul cried out for rest; not soul alone, but body, and she said, "Why should I strive, why should I endeavor to labor longer? Of my labors I can see no fruit, and my name is not so much as mentioned where others are spoken of and in praise. Is not a part of this work, at least, mine, and why should not others be able to see it, and be willing to acknowledge the fact?" The shadow was heavy upon her, and wrapped completely in its gloom she sat unmindful of scenes passing around her until her attention was attracted by the wayworn figure of one approaching her in the twilight, and who as he drew near accosted her kindly, and asked for a cup of water to quench his thirst. This she kindly gave him, and bade him rest for a time, as the day was well nigh spent, and the shadows of evening closing around them. "I will rest," said the stranger, "for I have that which I wish to communicate to you, before I pass on my way, and I charge you give heed to it, for I learned it not of mortals, neither did I see it by the light of earth, but was shown it in realms beyond this, and by the light of heaven saw it revealed."

"But," said the weary one, "thou art but a man, a dweller upon the earth like myself, how then canst thou know what is beyond this life or speak of that which is within the veil?"

"Thou sayest truly I am but a man and a dweller upon the earth, yet hast thou never read of any mortal permitted to enter within the veil; one who has heard things not lawful to utter, and yet has returned for a season because his labors were not yet completed? Thou dost not remember; well, it matters not, I am here and I have somewhat to tell you of that place and what I have seen there. It has been resting on your mind and disturbing your soul that while you were laboring for others, your name was not mentioned by them, but praise was given to others; and while you were not envious, yet was you cast down, and felt in your soul that it was unjust. Dost thou not know O, daughter, that this earth is not where justice is meted out, neither is the light of this earth the light by which things are seen hereafter? I once felt even as thou feelest now, and I said, 'I will eat, drink and be merry, for to-morrow I die.' Then the angel bore me away, and when he had given me a lighted candle from off the altar of God, he bade me number the names in the Lamb's Book of life. What a strange transformation wrought by the light from the throne. There I saw names which were shining lights upon earth and spoken of reverently even in the church of God, almost covered with dust which had accumulated upon them since they were inscribed, and I stretched forth my hand as if to shield them, lest they should be blotted out forever. Other names I saw shining as with the light of the stars, which upon earth were cast out as evil, and some entirely unknown upon earth, beaming there with a radiance lovely to see, and the angels spoke of them and what they had been doing as though they were household words. Then said I, 'Lord, it is enough,' and I remembered the words of the Master to his disciples, 'Rejoice rather that your names are written in the Lamb's Book of Life.' Then the angel gave me to see by the light from off the altar, talents which had been entrusted to mortals for their use, but which had become rusted and useless through being long hid away, and he said sadly, 'Of these the Master will not obtain so much as his usury.' Then I was sad, for I knew some of those to whom these talents had been entrusted, and I besought the angel that I might take to the earth with me the candle by whose light I saw these things, but he said, 'Nay; they have Moses and the prophets, they have the teachings of the Son of God, and if they heed not these it is because the light which the Spirit once kindled within their souls has gone out in darkness, and if they themselves do not listen to the wooings of God's Spirit and seek to rekindle that light, their last estate will be worse than their first.' It was appointed to me to return to earth, but daughter, believe me, if thou couldst once see the things of earth, by the light of eternity, thou wouldst never need to be told that among the pure and beautiful sayings of the great teacher, none could be purer, none more calculated to bring joy and peace than when he said, 'Let not thy left hand know what thy right hand doeth! do what thou doest with an eye single to the glory of God, and forget not that thou canst not be hid from that great cloud of witnesses which compass thee around.'

The vision was ended and the dreamer awoke and found it had been a dream, and yet not as a dream was it to pass from her spirit. The words of the aged traveler lingered in her heart, and in her soul she hid away the lesson. Well was it for her that she did, for the time came when it was sorely needed by her, as who shall say it may not be by some of us before life's journey is ended. "If thine eye be single thy whole body shall be full of light."

Read what Ella Wheeler Wilcox says:

If your purpose is high, and your aim is pure,
And you toil with patience, and wait and pray,
I tell you that work will endure—endure—
And it matters little what men may say.

A swarm of insects may dim the skies
Till the Sun seemes shadowed and overcast;
But clouds that are only the wings of flies
Must yield to the power of light at the last.

Nothing noble can be duntrod,
And nothing worthy long hidden from sight;
Back of this Universe stands a God,
And he moves all things by the lever of Right.

It takes true motive to make true art—
Art without motive lives but for a day—
And where there is purpose, and feeling, and heart,
It can not perish through worlds decay.

Keep up your courage and work and wait,
O, toilers who toil with an aim sublime!
The eyes of the years shall discriminate,
And read your purpose aright in time.

To dear sister Jennie H. we want to say, "Tell that mother to take courage and trust God with implicit faith. Let her remember how Job was tried and how his comforters sought to make him acknowledge that he was being punished for his sins; and while he would not do that, he never once lost sight of trust in God." Perhaps she may think it is easy to speak words of comfort, when we ourselves have never been tried. Take Jesus then as your comforter and consider what he endured. In the very midst of his terrible sufferings the face of his Father was hid, and in agony he cried out, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" God had not forsaken him, neither has he nor will he forsake that dear one, only let her lean hard upon his bosom and trust him, for

"Back of this universe stands a God,
And he moves all things by the lever of Right."

The Son who was once scourged, mocked and crucified, will return in the clouds accompanied by the angels of God. Be comforted then and importune like the widow at the feet of the unjust judge, nor withdraw thy plea until he gives the blessing.

Upon application to the secretary of the Board of Publication we find that up to the present date the number of new subscribers to the Hope amount to three hundred and twenty-six; amount contributed in donations $52 40.

We are in receipt of letters from Sisters Eleanor, P. Matthews, M. E. Benedict, Emma L. Anderson, Simpson, Emma V. Oliver, Aunt Patience, M. son, H. E. Birchell, Margaret J. Head, Lilly Smith, Lucy Lloyd, Jannett Strauss, M. A. Atwell and L. F. Williams.

ALL day our road has led past the well-filled fields, pasture lands and busy bustling towns of Kansas, and now the warm June sun is dipping low across the wide green plains; the soft grey twilight comes creeping on, and we are far from home. With the gathering gloom of night come thoughts of loved ones, and then the thought, "To-morrow we shall see the mountains sure." That of which we have dreamed, have sang and read, will soon be no longer a dream of our childhood; so in the morning light we press our faces closer to the window to get a better view of the low blue line along the horizon, which we are told is the mountains. To one whose life has been spent amid those towering peaks, our anxiety to be nearer might seem a trifle foolish, but we watch that blue line with unabated interest. Our train rushes on; we advance towards it, but seem to grow no nearer. Now we reach the large bustling city of Denver, Colorado, where we change cars for the narrow gage line of the Denver and Rio Grande, and are whirled rapidly away into the foot-hills; now on through the great health resort, Colorado Springs; past a lovely little body of water, Palmer Lake, on the bosom of which floated many dainty little boats. Speeding on, still on, 'neath the very shadow of Pike's Peak, the mist hides it from our view; we still hope to see it as the day goes by, but are doomed to disappointment. A clever little newsboy betook it upon himself to give us what he called the "tip." We were a little out of patience that the views from our side the car were so poor, but he told us that beyond by the other side would be but one great wall. We were glad to know that our lot was not so bad; but as the day advanced, began to think he was mistaken; but after dinner, at Pueblo, another engine was added to the long train of twelve cars, and we were again carried onward, in sight now of the snow-capped mountains, into their very midst, through the rocky gorge, the Grand Canyon of the Arkansas, where mountains tower far above on either hand, so far that they seem to touch the fleecy clouds of heaven, while down at their base they have left a narrow pass on the left of which the train is bounding on; but to the right the Arkansas sweeps over its well washed, rocky bed; now dashing in fury at a boulder in its way, or lashing in anger the mountain side that hems it in so close. The sunshine gleams from far above, and sparkles upon its waves while

The thundering tones of its waters,
Like some grand anthem arose
In major strains, sounding God's praise,
In minor chords breathing its woes.

We lean from the window while the spray from those mad waves cool the flushed, excited face, and now the sudden curve brings the engine close to the rear, and then dashes suddenly to the right, almost taking our breath lest we be snapped from the train.

What grandeur. Talk of foreign wonders! while in our own dear land of "free and brave" exist such glories of the handiwork of God! It fills us with a rapture that is not equaled, neither in the ascent of the mountain, while gazing down on the vales below—the iron-rails that gleamed in the sunset in their zig-zag, winding path to the summit, nor the delight while breathing the pure air of those hills of snow, where dainty flowers put up their face to drink the light of day 'mid snow and ice so near—when we gaze down upon the fleecy clouds, till now so far above, and think of the conjectures of childhood, when those clouds were often fields for wondrous dreams, wrapt in mystery far above. But joy can not be with us always and with minds full of God's glory, as viewed in the work of his hands, we pass down the other side. The last rays of the sun gleam over foot-hills near, and light up the snowy caps, and fill with radiance the mountain stream, until we are gone from that glorious day on the mountain top down into the valleys where the shadows of night are deepening; and after the glory of seeing, comes the thought that that same wondrous beauty is a great rocky wall between us and our loved Mount Zion. VIDA.

O'FALLON, Aug. 17th.

Dear Sister:—When reading your appeal for the Hope I determined to do what I could to help, so I went among the Saints, and friends of Alma Sunday School and collected six dollars and sixty-five cents, to be used for the enlarging of the Hope. We could have done better if times were better, but I always think that every little helps; and I pray God to bless you in your undertaking, for I know it will be a great help to the little and big Hopes, and more especially to the Sunday School; and may God bless the "Mothers' Home Column;" it is a source of comfort and strength, and I like many more, am trying to do my duty. I have my share of trials and also a good share of blessing, for which I thank my heavenly Father, and strive by his help to obey every commandment, that I may be worthy of a place in his kingdom.

Your sister in the gospel of Christ,

ISABELLA SCOTT.

Sister Isabella says, she always thinks every little helps. I wonder if she thought that hers would be the largest contribution received at any one time. She tells to each one the secret of her success, without intending to do so. "I went;" there it is in two words, and we tell you that it saddens us to think how few have done likewise. The Alma Sabbath School is not different from the Sabbath Schools of other Saints, only none have gone to them. If each School had done this much, we would have enough and to spare. "Why stand ye all the day idle?" We can not truthfully answer, "No man hath hired us," but we may remember when too late, that he "who reapeth receiveth wages."—Ed.

MARSHALLTOWN, Iowa, Aug. 7th.

Dear Sisters:—I can not suppress the desire to express in words the comfort and satisfaction the Herald affords me. At first I was doubtful of the improvement the "Home Column" would be to it, but such testimonies as sisters Hawley's and Salisbury's—old veterans in the cause; they speaking from experience—both cheer and strengthen us; and others are profited by those giving their experience in regard to raising children. I have no children of my own, but I think the enlargement of the Hope a move in the right direction. Undoubtedly the impressions which the mind receives while young, more especially religious impressions, have much influence in after life; therefore how necessary that we begin aright! I will try and give of my substance. I send fifty cents for one copy of the Hope; possibly may do more if I can see my way clear. I pray continually that the firm and abiding faith I have in this work may never grow less. Although I may not achieve the victory myself, I am trying to do the best I can under existing circumstances. In a city of ten thousand inhabitants, sister and I are alone, surrounded by unbelieving friends and relatives. Dear Saints, when you are all met together to hear the preached word, and otherwise enjoy yourselves, will you kindly remember the scattered ones at a throne of grace?

Your sister in gospel bonds,

LOU BERRY.

BEATTIE, Kansas, August 1st.

Dear Sister Frances:—Feeling my inability to write anything worthy the "Home Column," I have hitherto kept silent; but I feel it would be little short of ingratitude not to attempt to thank you for the words of encouragement and cheer that we look forward to so anxiously each week in the Herald. When I read your words of encouragement to the scattered and lonely ones, it strengthens and encourages me to persevere in striving for the faith enjoyed by the Saints in the days of our Savior. Oh dear sisters and Saints, if I had not possessed abundant testimony of the truth and divinity of this work, I am sure I should not have been able to bear the many trials I have to endure through prejudice and unbelief. I have been a member of the Reorganized Church four fourteen years. I have never had the pleasure of living in a branch yet, and it has been six years since I have heard a sermon or been with the Saints in meeting. Only think of that, with every other trying thing to bear one down. I feel the need of your prayers, I have earnestly sought for the faith that was once delivered to the Saints. I am the mother of seven children and some of them well grown up. I ask an interest in your prayers that I may be an instrument in the hand of the Lord to do much good even in my own family. Asking an interest in the prayers of the Saints, I remain your sister in Christ,

EMILY HIGHTOWER.

Sister Emily:—Let the thought of that "great cloud of witnesses" by which you are compassed about cheer and sustain you under every trial. Consider what they endured while passing through this life, and never for one moment doubt that the Father will give you the victory through our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.—(Ed.)

SALT LAKE CITY, August 9th.

Dear Sister Frances:—I have seen no letters in the "Home Column" from this part of the country, so I will venture one. I live in a Mormon neighborhood, (Utah Mormons), and about two miles from the Chapel where we hold our meetings; therefore I do not get to attend the meetings very often. I have a little girl three years old, and I think the "Column" a great benefit to all mothers, but more especially to us younger mothers. I will tell the sisters how I test my fruit-jars while putting up fruit. After filling the jar with the hot fruit and wrenching the top on tightly, I turn the jar bottom side up, and if it is not air-tight it will leak. I let the jars stand bottom side up until they cool; they can then be put away standing on the top, or turned right side up again. If they leak the fault is generally with the rubber. I get new rubbers about every two years, and with this method of testing the jars I never lose a jar of fruit.

In response to the "appeal" I have sent $1.50 for Hope subscription. The cause is a worthy one, and is bound to succeed.

Your sister in the gospel,

PAULINE HIGGINS.

Correspondence.

HAMILTON, Australia, July 14th.

Dear Herald:—I now write you that the Saints may know how the work is getting on in Australia. We like very much to hear from all. When we get the Herald we have to sit up very late at night to get well filled with the food it brings. It is four weeks from one mail to another. We get faint waiting so long; but thank our heavenly Father it is not the only food that we get, for the blessed Savior said that man should not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God. Since I obeyed the gospel I have received that word, and oh, how it made me rejoice in the truth, the word of God. The prospects were never so bright here before as now, and the people wonder at the doctrine of Christ, after living in tradition so long, hearing "the commandments of men." I have preached out doors twice, thrice, and four times a week for the past eight months, to large congregations; but we meet with some opposition.

We have Bro. J. F. Burton with us very often, and he is quite an able man. We were on the Public Reserve on Sabbath last, and the Salvation Army was there as well. We have always waited till they have finished, but of late they have been so wise as to keep their meetings on till every one have got tired; so we thought it wise to begin as soon as we could get there, and the consequence was that when Bro. Burton began to preach the "Army" lost all their hearers. So you see after all the people like the truth the best. We feel more determined that they shall have the truth if they wish. I have received many testimonies of the truth, and many dreams as well, to confirm me in this work.

And as we have a branch organized here at my house, I feel more and more the necessity of letting my light shine in everything I do, for we stand conspicuous in every one's eyes. They watch us very closely. We have nine members in our branch, and they are men and women that love the truth, and want to do that which is right. We feel that we as a body of Saints will receive more blessings from our heavenly Father than we have in the past; for if we keep the law that God gave through Joseph the Seer, he will cause many to come to the truth.

HENRY BROADWAY,
President of Hamilton Branch.

HAVEN, IOWA, August 8th.

Bro. Joseph.—I went to Rhodes to see brother Nirk, but not finding him there I went to Valley Branch, preached three sermons. I went from there to Des Moines and found the faithful strong, and rejoicing in a Savior's love. It did my heart good to meet these "veterans" and grasp them by the hand, and find the principles of the true faith so firmly implanted in their hearts. May the God of love and mercy ever be their comforter and guide. While there had the unalloyed pleasure of laboring with Bro. W. A. Baker, found him an able and efficient worker in the gospel. We ministered to quite a number of sick, some of whom were instantly healed. We had a glorious time, for God's Spirit was made manifest to a great degree.

Bro. Baker preached a splendid sermon on tithing, full of good sound advice, which was well received. By the grace of God he is bound to make his mark in the ministry. While here we met Brn. W. C. Nirk and J. W. Dumbauld. May God bless and prosper brother and sister Dumbauld in the future as he has in the past. We visited some of the isolated Saints and found them strong in the faith. We went to Boone and found the faithful feeling well and strong.

On Saturday evening our worthy president, W. C. Nirk, gave us a stirring discourse; held Saints' meeting on Sunday forenoon; and what an enjoyable time we had! God's Spirit was present and filled each heart with joy and thanksgiving. Preaching in the afternoon by your humble servant, and at night by Bro. Nirk. Returned home; found family reasonably well, and myself much strengthened, with a full determination to labor for Zion's welfare.

Yours for truth,

GEORGE SHIMEL.

[Sr. Jane Robinson sent us the following letter from Bro. J. A. Robinson].—Ed.

ROANOKE, August 17th.

Dear Jane.—Meetings over at Callinsville. I never had a better time. The very eloquence of the heavens was at my command. The house was packed at every meeting; in the evening it would have put you in mind of Buffalo Prairie; at afternoon meeting it was 108 in the shade, yet the house was full; but at night it was packed. When I landed I was informed that I had better leave, as I would be mobbed or egged. The devil had commenced to rage, even before I arrived; this I took for a good omen. I knew if he was mad before I went there, his kingdom was about to be assailed, and I would have friends; it would not have been healthy for any one to attempt to misuse me. I never stopped talking, even Monday morning at daylight, a wagon stopped at the house and I administered to a man that is going blind; I hope the Lord will bless him, and get himself a name there; it is his business, I did my duty. Men followed me every place, it was question after question on the Bible, and I got hoarse with talking. The church house is open for us. I have written to Bro. I. N. Roberts, the President of the Mission, to go there. One old Advent preacher tried to be very pompous and would get on the stand, although I felt the opposing influence, and got the stand and around it filled with little boys; yet he crawled through, but I shot him in the neck at last. I had learned that he was loaning money at 3 per cent per month; so I read the 15th Psalm, to show what was to be the character of those who should dwell in Zion; and I told them that the man that put out his money to usury (unlawful interest) never could get there, unless he repented and gave back that which he had robbed, even if he was a preacher. Every eye in the house shot a look at the man. One old fellow who did the same, came to me afterward and said; well, Bro. Robinson, you hit me hard, but I took it, so the old preacher caught it.

J. A. ROBINSON.

No. 43 York Street, Cheatham,

MANCHESTER, Eng., Aug 6th.

Dear Herald: I trust that a word or two from this part of the labor field will prove acceptable to your readers; many of whom, I have no doubt, still cherish tender recollections of the scenes and surroundings of their childhood, and therefore love to hear of the success of God's work in the land of their birth. Since last I wrote you I have had the privilege of attending the mission conference, which was held in Birmingham on the 12th, 13th, and 14th of June last. The tone and temper of those taking part in the business proceedings of said conference were admirable, and speak well for the future relationship of the Saints of this mission with one another, providing the same charitable disposition be maintained. There were several subjects presented that contained within themselves much that required cautious deliberation, strongly impregnated with charity and that perfect love which casteth out all fear; and I am pleased in being able to say that there was more of forbearance and less of irritation exhibited than has been the case at some similar gatherings in the times that are past. I believe this may be accounted for from the fact that, speaking generally, the law of the church and its relationship as between Saint and Saint, is becoming better understood, and consequently more honored in the observance. The teachings of the Herald has had an influence in this direction; and so far as I can judge from the expression of Saints and friends who are readers thereof, the interest increases with the issue of each number; and this will apply with double force to the spirit breathed in the teachings given in the Sisters' Column.

The conference services on Sunday the 13th, were highly enjoyable, and seemed to be much appreciated both by membership and friends, the latter of whom were present in much force; many attending both afternoon and evening, and at the close expressing their delight with what they had both seen and heard. We had quite a large contingent of Saints present from the Manchester district, every one of whom expressed their satisfaction at the success of the arrangements made by the brethren and sisters of the Birmingham branch for the comfort and pleasure of the visitors.

Soon after our return home we were favored with a visit from Bro. James Halstead, of the Fall River (American) branch, who is now over here on a visit amongst his friends and relatives. We were glad to see him, and upon comparing our views upon the gospel, were pleased to find that perfect harmony obtained. Our brother has labored amongst us while here, in a very acceptable manner; and we have reason to believe with good results.

I had the pleasure on Wednesday the 4th inst., of leading six more into covenant with God, through baptism. The interest in the work seems to increase daily, and the brethren and sisters, with few exceptions, are indefatigable in their endeavors to spread the gospel amongst their friends and neighbors; and the description here given will apply with equal propriety to the brethren and sisters in each part of the district. Therefore, I may safely say that inasmuch as we so continue to live and work, as a district, and branches of the church, our Father's blessing will attend our efforts, and the success of his work be assured.

I remain, dear Herald, your co-laborer in the truths of the gospel, which alone will establish on earth peace and good will to man.

JOSEPH DEWSNUP,

President of the Manchester District.

NAPANEE, Nebraska.

Bro. Blair.—I arrived here on the 14th, and was received with kindness by Bro. Moore and family. Father Moore had given out appointments for meetings tomorrow. I was pleased to see the interest that the family take in the work of God, and I will do all that is in my power to hold the banner of the Lord so that the neighbors may see the good the Lord is willing to do them. Sunday morning we went about six miles to hold forth, and when we arrived I was pleased to see the children and teachers earnest in reading and answering questions. I think that evolution surely can be with safety applied to Nebraska, for nowhere that I am acquainted with has progress made so rapid advancement as in Nebraska. I do think the church should keep a few elders in the field out here. The church in time would be adding to her numbers. A wise general will place his men in positions to do the most good. But I do wonder sometimes why the church sends so many elders into organized districts, leaving such country as I have passed through without an elder. I preached to the people and had good liberty, with a fair degree of light from the Spirit of the Master, and they requested me to preach on Wednesday evening, which I will do, the Lord being my helper. In the evening I had the pleasure to speak to a large gathering that turned out to see the "Mormon Elder." The minister who preached there in the morning told the congregation that we were not Mormons, nor believed what the Mormons did; so I had nothing to say on that head, but applied the force of my sermon to the principles of faith and repentance. At the close of the meeting I was requested to come on Monday evening and speak to them again. What the outcome will be of my coming out so far west time will tell. At present I have hopes. I would like to get the names of the scattered Saints out here, with their postoffice address, so that I could write to them, and by this means I could do a greater work. I received half a dozen of the Voice of Warning, with a good supply of tracts, for which I will remit just as soon as I know the amount. Address all letters to R. C. Elvin, Napanee, Franklin county, Nebraska, with a stamp in it if the parties wish me to answer the same. I find the settlers as a rule are kind and intelligent. Intoxicating drink is sold only at the county seat.

Your brother in the gospel of Christ,

R. C. ELVIN.

PROTON, Ont., 16th August.

Bro. David Daucer: On being made acquainted with my re-appointment on recommendation of Bro. J. H. Lake, endorsed by the appointing committee, I began preparations for the field in May. Commenced labors in Ailliston branch by reorganizing the Sabbath School and bringing that branch into a better feeling than had been manifested for some time; finally left there with the satisfaction of seeing most of the members, especially the sisters, doing their duty. May God bless and help them. Some of the brethren are spiritually not in good condition, and indeed I fear unless they greatly change, will not be counted worthy in the great last day. Some comfort was given to the right doers by the addition of another brother who was baptized in June. Soon after his baptism I took a trip to Dufferin county, helped the few brethren there as best I could. We have nine or ten brethren there, among them a brother and gentleman, John Wilson, who is a noble representative of the family, and not ashamed of the gospel of Jesus Christ—one possessing a large share of common sense and experience in human affairs, and a man well reported by all who know him, except it may be in his religious views, which, however, he is able to defend, and does. He has a good general understanding of the doctrine, faith, organization of the quorums, &c., and the nature and division of the work assigned to the general offices of the priesthood. This priesthood question, and authority, was the question of most interest to him at first, and he gave it no rest till he became very well posted in the general duties of the various offices of the two divisions of the priesthood. His family are all with him in the faith, but one daughter.

After leaving Masonville I came to Grey county, preached in a place where I had done labor during the last eight years, where we now have a good branch. Have baptized ten here of late, blessed a number of children, confirmed, administered the sacrament, and done such other work as my office demands. I have also opened some new places in regions ranging from five to sixteen miles north, south, and west of here. At one place in Egremont township I got the use of a school house lately, and though short notice was given by Bro. Wm. Calvert, who is a very zealous brother, the house was well filled, and I had so much to say that I could not find a stopping place till I had spent over two hours. Well, the result was, as I learn, that a fire was kindled, and many wish to hear more; but some few bigots mocked. This is the particular field where Bro. W. J. Smith is expected to labor if he gets here; he will find plenty to do. By the way, I and all others who know him wish he would hurry up and get here soon, as I need help very much, for the calls are more numerous than I can fill. There are three points in Dufferin county, three more in Proton township, and four in Egremont township. Two of these last are new openings—one is not altogether opened, but we are requested to do so by several, and especially by a gentleman named Legate, a man standing high in society; has been for years municipal clerk, and is now a good member of one of the orthodox societies, but is not altogether satisfied, is well versed in the theological problems of apostolic succession, &c., and admits that such succession can not be correct if our position of an apostasy and a restoration is correct. He asked what other evidence we have of the truth of our doctrines of restoration than the mere interpretation of the word as we present it. My answer was, "We have the same kind of other evidence as the ancient church, for they had the Lord work with them and confirm the word by signs following. So have we; and cited Mark 16:18, 19, and Heb. 2:1-3. I expect to baptize a number more this week, and am preaching almost all the time. I generally try to have every evening except Saturdays occupied, and on Sundays one or two services. I also visited the Egremont Branch and found all well, with the exception of four or five members who had been aggrieved at some things past. All were doing well in a general spiritual way. I feel to solicit an interest in the prayers of all, and mine are ever for the good of the cause. I remain your brother in hope and unity and faith,

Dear Herald:—We, who formerly belonged to the church under the leadership of John Taylor, are often asked why we withdrew from said church and joined the Reorganized Church. We answer,—We have been greatly deceived; and that too by men who held the word of God in their hands, intermixed with spurious laws of their own make, claiming all to be revealed from high heaven for the salvation of the human family. They succeeded in deceiving thousands of honest hearted people; nearly all, or we might say all not understanding the Holy Scriptures as well as they should; otherwise, it would have been difficult for them to have led so many people under the yoke of bondage. The writer is of the opinion that as soon as a useful man in the church learned the fraud that the leading men was imposing upon him, he was offered high position in the church, where merchandise could be made of the people, for fear he would leave the church; and many accepted, and soon became wealthy. We all understood this that when we found the Church of Christ we would find it organized after the pattern laid down by our Savior when he was upon the earth, the same as was revealed through the prophet Joseph. Finding the Utah Church complete in its organization, as we supposed, we concluded that it was the gospel which was to be restored to the earth in the last days.

After being told that we were being deceived we could not believe it, and we were so sure, that we thought it of little importance to examine the church books with a view to disprove what we thought we knew to be right. In fact we scorned the idea of men claiming to be prophets and apostles of the Most High adding to the word of God, thereby making his word of none effect. We could not believe man would dare to attempt such a fraud; and in the face of all this, place the name of the prophet Joseph to it, making it genuine.

Could Joseph Smith, or any other man, after reading the scripture, have the audacity to ask the Lord why he justified certain practices, when it was so plain to be seen that he had forbidden it. We answer, No. At length we were made acquainted with the facts in the case by the sons of the Seer, with Joseph the legal heir to preside, and whose indisputable right it is to stand at the head of Christ's kingdom; as was taught by Brigham Young and all the Twelve; in fact, the entire Church looked for the time to come when he would take the kingdom. But when the appointed time came, B. Young said Joseph would never lead the church, so long as grass grew or water run. Why was this? Joseph was too honest with his Maker to hold out to the world the word of God intermixed with fraud and deception, telling them that in case they rejected it, eternal damnation should follow; placing the greatest stress upon laws of man's manufacture. And because he rejects such laws he is treated with contempt and lied about; and to-day he is teaching the gospel in its purity, and calling upon wandering Israel to return to the gospel which was once delivered to them, and pointing out to them the error that has been imposed upon them by men to whom they looked for council pertaining to their eternal salvation.

We were taught that to attain to the highest glory in God's kingdom would require as many wives as we could possibly get; and that it was only for a few. B. Young claimed the right to bestow this blessing or reject it. Where did he obtain this authority? Who conferred it upon him? Did the God of heaven? No. Did Joseph Smith? No. Then please tell who did. If God is going to hold such guiltless, what need had he to send his only begotten Son to die for the sins of the world. The human family can lie, steal, rob and sell temples of God, to their hearts' content, and still be justified before the bar of judgment. If women and wealth will purchase the highest glory in God's kingdom, the leaders of the Utah Church have won the prize. But the doom of all those who are not allowed to enter into celestial marriage is sealed up unto eternal damnation. It is deemed unsafe to allow all to enter into this ordinance, peradventure some would divulge the secrets of the endowment house; and then escape the judgments of the leading men. Nevertheless we are told in the Holy Scripture, that vengeance belongeth to the Lord and he will repay. What can be expected of men who have held out the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Book of Covenants to the world, telling them they were not worth the "ashes of a rye straw;" and at the same time claiming to hold the prophetic office in the kingdom of God. Oh, what deception!

The question why we left the Utah Church is easily answered; in fact, it is so plain the answers need not be specially given. The question with us is, Why could we not see it long ago; as it is so plain? We are told in the Scripture that the gospel is so plain that a "waffaring man, though a fool, need not err therein." But we see intelligent looking men teaching Brighamism, who seem to understand the Scriptures and the church books. They can quote extensively from them; and by putting a double meaning to that which is written, justify themselves. We ask, is it possible that men possessed with such knowledge can be so blinded; or do they lack courage to step out and come back to the gospel. O, wandering Israel, repent and turn to the Lord your God where you will find mercy extended unto you; and teach no more the principles which are strictly forbidden in the new and everlasting covenant, even the Book of Mormon; not only to say, but to do according to that which is written. May those who have erred in judgment investigate the true principles of the gospel and turn to them and obtain grace from God and good will from all good men.

THE TREE OF KNOWLEDGE OF GOOD AND EVIL.

WHY WAS IT PLANTED IN EDEN?

In the morning of Creation when all was fair and beautiful, our father Adam was placed in the garden of Eden to care for and tend it, with the command that he should not eat of the fruit of the tree of knowledge of good and evil. But in an evil hour he disobeyed his Father's command and did eat of the forbidden fruit, and was driven from the garden to earn his bread by the sweat of his face. The ground was cursed, and in sorrow, it was said, he should live the days of his probation, and that he should die and his body return to the dust of the earth.

Now the question is, How was it that such an Almighty Father, who is merciful, just and kind to all his creatures, and knowing all things whatsoever should come to pass, should have planted such a tree in Eden as the tree of knowledge of good and evil, when he knew that Adam and Eve would not keep His command, but would eat of the fruit of the tree? This is a question worth consideration, for it is evident that it was the tree and its fruit that played the mischief; and had it not been there, the devil could not have tempted Eve, neither could she have been able to give to Adam.

Now this "forbidden fruit" question has troubled mankind a long time, and good Christian people have ever been making excuses for God, about the agency of man, the temptations of the devil, the wonderful wisdom of Adam and his great sacrifice, he being made to go out with his wife. But still the question is not answered. It was an unkind act to set a stumbling block in the way of a man and woman and then send them out of his presence for stumbling over it. As such it appears to human wisdom, and if we are to believe that God the Father is the allwise creator, full of mercy, goodness and truth, we must find out to what end, and for what purpose was that tree planted in Eden. All around this beautiful world we see the goodness and handiwork of an Allwise Creator, but what can we tell of Him or his acts except through his revelations? And if we are to understand those revelations aright, it must be by understanding them just as they read, and not by twisting this or that word so as to show our skill and learning and to suit our own opinions. True, many men have many different ideas, but it is evident that the revelations of God were given to be understood even by the simple and unlearned. And the nearer we confine ourselves to the words just as we find them, the nearer we will come to the truth of the matter under consideration.

Through revelation we learn that God the Father created the heavens and the earth and all that therein is, and said it was all very good; that the earth was designed for a dwelling place for man; that there were spirits of men in heaven who would be permitted to come to this world and receive a material body, an agency to act, within certain limits, as they chose. It was a great event, for we learn that "the morning stars sang together, for the reason that, when spirit and matter are united, there can be "a fulness of joy." Now, it is evident men come to this world to live and learn; and how could they learn except by contrasts or opposites? Could we tell there was a day if there was no night? Could we tell there was a summer if there was no winter? There is seed-time, then a harvest. Everything has its time and season; everything has its opposite. There is the good, and there is the evil. Take away the evil and where would be the good? Thus, then, there must be an element of evil as well as good; and without which there could be nothing but innocence. There is one thing that God the Father could not give Adam, nor any of his children; and that is experience. And so it is that this world is the schoolroom where men and women come to learn the evil that they may know the good; to taste the bitter that they may know the sweet; for even if father Adam and mother Eve could have had children, they could only have been as themselves, innocents, doing no good, for they knew no evil, and could not know the truth of anything, not even what God the Father told them. Thus, then, the truth begins to dawn upon us that it was for a wise purpose that the tree of knowledge of good and evil was planted in Eden.

Who is this wonderful character, the devil, who seemingly is ever upsetting God's plans? He is not a creator, but a destroyer, and so must be as dependent on God for his existence as we are. He then is simply the scavenger of nature, the parasite of the human soul, the embodiment of evil, the opposite of good, and was permitted to enter Eden and did entice our first parents to disobey their father's command. They were then driven from the garden, the days of their probation were given, also "another commandment" to worship the Lord their God and offer sacrifices. With the eating of the forbidden fruit the good and evil were sown in their bodies, and they were at liberty to choose for themselves. As they now knew good from evil, they could not again be enticed to disobey and be in ignorance of the consequences. The gospel was now preached unto them and the Holy Spirit bore record of the Father and Son. They rejoiced because of their transgressions, as the Father had forgiven them. Now their eyes were opened; they were able now to truly see the goodness and tender mercies of their Lord to them and all their seed.

Much has been said about what might have been had not Adam and Eve transgressed God's laws in the garden of Eden. Why not spend a little time on what might have been? Now that men had a knowledge of good and evil they should have been wise and all received the new covenant and lived in obedience to the gospel, as father Adam and mother Eve did with joy, rejoicing in the great plan of redemption. With the preaching of the gospel, Satan was now permitted to come again, he also declaring he was "a son of God," and that they should believe not the words of Adam. And they would not believe—partaking of the spirit of evil, becoming carnal, sensual and devilish. The Lord calls on men everywhere to repent and be baptized with water and the Holy Spirit, and as many as obey and live in obedience he calls his sons, and reveals his mind and will unto them by sending holy angels, also through the Holy Spirit. Satan also establishes an order gaining mastery over the hearts of the children of men as they loved the vanities of earth, and to get gain and power rather than the truths of heaven. For we learn that "Cain loved Satan more than God," and so listed to do evil and became "a son of perdition." And from the days of Cain there have been secret combinations; their works were in the dark, and "they knew every man his brother." Thus, then, we see the two orders at work in the hearts of men, the light and the darkness, the true and the false—one and all choosing as they would.

There could have been no advancement among men without a knowledge of good and evil, but with that knowledge they then had power for good or evil, each and all to reap the fruits of their choosing. Thus is the agency of man established, and he is now no longer a child under his father's care, but has become as gods to know good from evil, truth from error and so is responsible for his own acts. By this we see that it was for a wise and glorious purpose that the tree of knowledge of good and evil was planted in Eden. Adam fell, and we are that we may have joy and be able to see and know the good from the evil and understand the wonderful works and power of the great I Am. We, too, may rejoice because of Adam's transgression; for our eyes also are open to see the great goodness and glory of God the Father, and the redemption of mankind. It is evident that it was the design of God in placing men on the earth that they should be happy. And as he knows the beginning and the end, he also knows in what way they should live and act in order that they should be happy, and so the gospel has been preached unto them as the true way to happiness. Yet he will not force the will of man or woman, but inasmuch as they will seek to do good, so are they led and guided by the spirit of truth. But if they reject the truth, they are then left to themselves and the buffeting of Satan. Man comes on this earth in ignorance; he has a will of his own, and the liberty of choice; the seeds of good and evil are within his body; the spirit of truth presents to him the true and good; the spirit of evil presents the false and wicked; if he will listen to the spirit of truth and entertain the good thoughts that are ever presented he receives the "line upon line" the "precept upon precept" and builds the good within, "growing in grace and the knowledge" of the truths of heaven, and so doing becomes an instrument of God for good on the earth and will so continue till at last he arrives at that perfection which is in Christ. Should he reject the good thoughts and entertain the evil, his mind becomes narrow and darkened, he lists to do evil; and if so continuing he will also go down with the sons of perdition.

Men may be weak and faltering, poor and ignorant outcasts, but let them always remember the gift of their father, Adam—the knowledge of good and evil—and make a good use of it in the way of the truth and light, learning the watch words of Christ when the evil is presented, "Get thee hence Satan; I will worship the Lord my God, and him only will I serve."

No man can be led or tempted unless he is willing. Hence he is the servant of whosoever he listeth to obey, and so makes use of his agency for good or evil, of his own free will. Thus then we learn that "the tree of knowledge of good and evil" will figure only for the good of mankind if they so will; and that that great character, the devil, is permitted a part in the great economy of God to show mankind how miserable they will be if they walk not in the light of truth and be obedient to God, and that he is here only by the permission of God the Father, and that it is wisdom in him that he should show men the false that they may learn the true so that all may be tested, tried and proven of what worth they may be. It is also good to know that there can be no evil befall even the weakest of God's children if they will only believe the gospel of truth and trust in God. Let us all rejoice therefore in the day of salvation and strive for the good and true, that all may be found worthy to be numbered with the faithful.

THE ROCK; THE FOUNDATION; AND THE BUILDING.

Text: "And I also say unto thee; That thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my Church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it."—Matt. 16: 18.

IS PETER THE "ROCK"?

If there was any force in the assertion that the majority are generally right, then we would answer the above question in the affirmative, because the Church of Rome, numbering millions of adherents, stoutly affirms that he was the rock referred to. But I wish to offer a few reasons why I, for one, can not accept that doctrine, whether few or many hold it.

1. Peter was an apostle, and as such formed a part of the Church which was to be built upon the rock. Paul in his letter to the Corinthians, (1 Cor. 12; 28), states that God had set in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, etc. Now he does not say, that apostles were put under the church, as the rock thereof; but were put in it, as parts of it, or as some of the "members of the body."

2. Peter received from Christ the keys of the kingdom of heaven; or, in other words, authority to act in the name of Christ, in opening the door of the kingdom and admitting those who had been "strangers and foreigners," into the fellowship and communion of the church; or in other words, bestowing citizenship upon them; in the kingdom of heaven; also the power of expelling rebels, and traitors from the kingdom, as well as refusing to admit to citizenship those whom he discovered to be unworthy.

These keys, signifying authority or power to act in the name of Christ, as an agent or representative of Christ, (for Christ gave him the keys, or intrusted him with the oversight of the Church); these keys, I say, may be called, (a) the key of authority to preach the gospel of the kingdom; (b) The key of authority to baptize for remission of sins; (c) the key of authority to lay on hands for the gift of the Holy Spirit; (d) the key of authority to administer bread and wine as emblems of the body and blood of Christ; (e) the key of authority to ordain all other officers in the church; (f) the key of authority to regulate all the affairs of the church in all parts of the world; (g) the key of authority to declare ordinations null and void, and to cast out unworthy citizens of the kingdom. Whatsoever he should bind on earth, (not in heaven), should be bound in heaven; and this was to be the case with his loosing. It means, simply, that the principals in heaven would endorse and confirm the acts of their agent on earth. But says one, this very authority, or these extraordinary powers—this almost absolute authority—would make Peter a very proper foundation to build the church upon, or to constitute him "the rock." But that will not hold good as an argument, for Peter would of necessity stand alone in possession of these keys, to make him individually the rock. But was that true? Did he alone possess these keys? Could he, and he only preach, baptize, lay on hands, administer the Lord's supper, ordain, etc? No one will be so foolish as to claim it for him. And be this binding and loosing what it may, Jesus expressly declares that the other apostles should possess this power to do the work. Hear him, "Verily, I say unto you, whatsoever ye shall bind on earth shall be bound in heaven, and whatsoever ye shall loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven." That he was speaking to his apostles, and not to Peter only, is seen from the first verse, and also by the language of the verse following the quotation.—Matt. 18: 18, 19.

The binding and loosing was to be performed by virtue of the "keys of the kingdom of heaven." Right here I would like to say that, I doubt the application of the 19th and 20th verses, to the church at large, any more than the 18th verse.

But suppose the possession of the "keys of the kingdom" constitutes Peter the rock; than all the rest of the apostles, equally, compose the rock, for they hold similar powers, or possess the same keys.

Therefore it would be more proper to say that all the apostles are "the rock" and not Peter only as one of the number, even as he was their president at that time. But there is no reason for calling the whole class or any one of the number "the rock," as we will see hereafter, and particularly so when their proper place in the kingdom of heaven is understood, which please hereafter notice. The giving of Peter the "keys" would constitute him an overseer of the church after it is built, and not the rock to build it upon. He had charge of the church.

IS CHRIST THE ROCK.

In denying this query, far be it from me to take from the Divine Son, the ever blessed Jesus, one iota of honor or glory belonging to him. That he is the founder of the church, is unquestionable; and that he is the foundation, in the sense of being the rock, I don't so understand. The position that he gives himself in this matter of the church creation, is that of the builder. "On this rock I will build my church." Did he understand the case? This "rock" is one thing, the building is another; and the builder is still another, and distinct. The tools, or implements that he works with have also their part to play.

Christ can not be separated from the church, nor from the rock on which it is built; for he is the creator of the rock, as well as the builder of the church. The church could not build itself, and the builder is also the head of the church, for it is his "body."

But Christ is the foundation, says one, for Paul says so. The foundation of what? Why "the church." Paul does not say so. He is not writing (1 Cor. 3) about the foundation of the church as an organization; but the foundation of individual, personal faith, personal character, personal experience, and personal hope. Who lays this foundation, viz., Jesus Christ? Paul says "I have laid the foundation." And how? By preaching Christ to them. Who builds? "Let every man take heed how he buildeth thereon." Builds what—churches? No; but "gold, silver, precious stones, hay, wood, stubble." What can they represent; true faith, true doctrines, godly works, experience, hope, and holy character, would be gold, silver, or precious stones; a false faith, dead works, an unlawful experience, a baseless hope; a character unlike Christ are "wood, hay, stubble."

Ah! Paul and Christ have different subjects in mind when they talked about their foundations and buildings. "Every man," builds in one case; Christ builds in the other. Paul laid the foundation in one case, Christ in the other. Paul laid the foundation in one case, in the other he is a part of the foundation himself. What! is Paul the rock—or part of the "rock"—says one? No; he is not. Well; how can he be a part of the foundation? Because the foundation is not the rock, but is laid on the rock. What an idea! says one. Yes; quite an idea, and one that Jesus himself had. When, and where? When he was on earth talking to the Jews, as recorded in Luke 6: 47, 48. Hear Him:—"Whosoever cometh to me and heareth my sayings, and doeth them, I will show you to whom he is like; he is like a man which built an house, and digged deep, and laid the foundation on a rock." Any distinction here between the foundation, and the rock on which the foundation rests? What is the foundation? you ask. But we have not settled what the rock is yet, and we must begin at the bottom—at the bed-rock—at the beginning; We will find the foundation on the rock when we discover the "rock."

WHAT IS THE ROCK?

We answer—the principle and fact of revelation. That is; the principle of revelation, and the truth-word-revealed; or in other words,—Truth revealed by the Holy Spirit. We cannot separate truth from revelation, nor revelation from the Holy Spirit. There is no divine truth without revelation; and there can be no revelation without the Holy Spirit, and therefore I have chosen that expression,—"Truth revealed by the Holy Spirit,"—for I can not accept the idea that "all truth" is revealed by the Holy Spirit, for there is much that is true, that is revealed by our senses; for it is a truth that the sun is warm, the sea is salt, that sugar is sweet and the grass green. Multitudes of facts we know of which are not revealed by the Holy Spirit through the prophets. The truths to be believed, the commandments to be obeyed, the form of church government, the name and nature of the work of the officers of the church, the blessings here and hereafter to be enjoyed by the church, are all subjects of revelation by the Holy Spirit. Had there been no "truth revealed by the Holy Spirit," there could never have been a beginning, and of course no progress nor completion of the church—there could have been no church. But we can not take the ground even that all truth revealed by the Holy Spirit is the rock on which the church now stands, or that on which it stood eighteen hundred years ago. The key of the situation is explained by the Savior in Matt. 4:4—"Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." And in 2 Peter 1:12, Peter exhorts the church to be "established in the present truth." That is just it,—the "present truth." Jesus well knew that the church could not be built on every word that had proceeded from the mouth of God; for the plain reason that many words spoken or truths revealed before, were designed for, and applicable to the men and circumstances existing at the time when given. It was "truth," (for the word of God is truth,) that was revealed to Noah concerning the impending destruction of the world by the flood and the work required at his hands of building an ark, and that too of the material and dimensions such as God had designed. But who can say that the revelation to Noah is to guide us to-day? Or that it was authority for a similar work, or a law to the church eighteen hundred years ago? God commanded Moses to make a serpent of brass and put it on a pole, and commanded the people bitten by the fiery serpents to look and live. It was the word of God to Moses and the people of Israel at that time, and adapted to the circumstances then existing; but it is not a law to us to-day. The command to Joshua concerning Jericho was God's word,—truth,—and proceeded from his mouth: but we are not to live by that to-day, for it is not "present truth." So of the word of the Lord to the leper Naaman, also the word of God to Jonah concerning Ninevah; the command of God to Ezra and Nehemiah concerning rebuilding of Jerusalem, and multitudes of other truths revealed in Old Testament days which were no laws to the New Testament Saints, nor are they laws to us to-day. The word of the Lord to the Apostles to not go among the Gentiles or the Samaritans, and afterward, to "Go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature," was not the word of God to anybody else, then or now, and is no authority for any one to act under to-day. But if it is, then they must preach just what these men preached, go just where they were commanded to go, and the same results must follow, namely, the "signs that were to follow the believer, such as speaking in new tongues, healing the sick, casting out of devils, &c. &c. So of many commandments of a local character given to the various churches in Paul's day; they were truths, and the word of the Lord to the church—local or general as the case may have been. These various commandments of the past may serve as useful lessons to us from which we may learn wisdom and understanding, and be benefitted thereby in different ways.

There are however, truths revealed in the past—even at and since the foundation of the world—which are binding upon us to-day, because they are general in their character, and universal in their application; and conspicuous above all is "the gospel of the kingdom." The gospel of Christ which is "the power of God unto salvation, to every one that believeth," must of necessity have existed from the foundation of the world, or as soon as man fell and needed to be saved. And we are informed by the word of the Lord in the Inspired Translation of the Scriptures, that the same gospel which was in the beginning of the world should also be on earth in the end of the world, and as Jesus said that the "gospel of the kingdom" which he preached should be preached in all the world as a witness to all nations before the end of the world, it follows, therefore, that the gospel of the kingdom was preached in the days of Adam.

Abraham also believed it, so also the children of Israel in the wilderness. (Gal. 3:8; Heb. 4:2.) Jesus and the apostles preached it, and it must be preached, and is preached now, and will be in the world or age to come, or till the end comes. Now, as the gospel is the gospel of Christ, it must unfold all things concerning Christ. It is the gospel of God, and reveals therefore the character and attributes and mind and will of God. It is "the gospel of the kingdom," and reveals all things concerning the kingdom of God, whether it be its Israelitish feature, its ecclesiastical character, its world-to-come feature, or the kingdom of the Father. It embraces all truth concerning the name of Jesus Christ, and the kingdom of God. This fact includes all the prophecies concerning Israel's redemption; all things concerning Zion and her redemption; all things concerning Christ's coming and reign; the resurrection of the dead, and eternal judgment. In simple words, all truth that concerns our present and future well being—or our temporal and eternal salvation—is, to my mind, the rock on which the Church of Christ is built, or "truth revealed by the Holy Spirit." Does that include the "word of wisdom," the principle of gathering, and the commandments now in force concerning it; the "law of tithing," as well as faith in Christ, repentance, baptism, &c., &c.? I answer, Yes; for these matters are subjects of present revelation, and are "present truth." "Present truth," that is truth revealed by the Holy Spirit, or the "gospel of the kingdom" is, to my mind, "the rock." On this, the apostles and prophets of the New Testament, and the patriarchs and prophets of the Old Testament were builded. Now let us see how "the books" will bear us out in our idea of the "rock."

WHAT SAITH THE LORD?

"Build upon my rock, which is my gospel; deny not the Spirit of revelation, nor the Spirit of prophecy, for woe unto him that denieth these things."—Doc. and Cov. 10:11. "Behold, verily, verily, I say unto you, this is my gospel, and remember that they shall have faith in me, or they can in no wise be saved; and upon this rock I will build my church; yea upon this rock ye are built, and if ye continue, the gates of hell shall not prevail against you."—Sec. 32:3. "And this is my doctrine, and it is the doctrine which the Father has given unto me; and I bear record of the Father, and the Father beareth record of me, and the Holy Ghost beareth record of the Father and me; and I bear record that the Father commandeth all men everywhere to repent and believe in me; and whoso believeth in me, and is baptized, the same shall be saved; and they are they who shall inherit the kingdom of God. And whoso believeth not in me, and is not baptized shall be damned. Verily, verily, I say unto you, that this is my doctrine; and I bear record of it from the Father; and whoso believeth in me, believeth in my Father also; and unto him will the Father bear record of me; for he will visit him with fire and with the Holy Ghost; and thus will the Father bear record of me; and the Holy Ghost will bear record of him unto the Father and me, for the Father and I and the Holy Ghost are one. * * * And again I say unto you. Ye must repent and be baptized in my name, and become as a little child or ye can in no wise inherit the kingdom of God. Verily, verily, I say unto you, that this is my doctrine; and whoso buildeth upon this, buildeth upon my rock, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against him. And whoso shall declare more or less than this, and establish it for my doctrine, the same cometh of evil, and is not built upon my rock, but he buildeth upon a sandy foundation, and the gates of hell standeth open to receive such, when the floods come, and the winds beat upon them."—Book of Nephi 5:8, 9.

How about the Utah "new and everlasting covenant," alias, revelation on polygamy, is it "more or less than this?" Here we see that "truth revealed by the Holy Spirit is the rock." What was it that Jesus said was revealed to Peter, Matt. 16:17? The great and all-important truth that Jesus was and is the "Christ, the Son of the living God." Right here let me say, that there is vastly more included in that short expression than is commonly understood. Had I space I could easily show that it embraces the whole gospel—the gospel of the kingdom—"Thou [Jesus] art the Christ," the Messiah, the Redeemer of Israel, David's son and David's heir, Abraham's "seed," through whom all nation's shall be blessed. "The Son of the living God"—his pre-existence, his birth in the flesh, his mission and work on earth, his ascension to heaven, his mediatorial work, his exaltation and future glory, his divinity, his unlimited power and authority, his second coming, his millennial reign, his character as Judge of the quick and dead—all this and much more follows, if he is "the Son of the living God." Truly on this rock—the "fulness of the gospel," the "gospel of the kingdom," the "truth revealed by the Holy Ghost"—on "this rock" Jesus did build his church. Can the gates of hell prevail against the "truth?" No; for "truth is eternal." Can God's word fail? No; heaven and earth may pass away, but God's word never!

WHAT IS TRUTH?

"Thy law is the truth," "Thy commandments are truth."—Psalms 119:142, 151. "Sanctify them through thy truth; thy word is truth."—John 17:17. "Of his own will begat he us, with the word of truth."—James 1:18. So then, the law of God, the commandments of God, the word of God is the "truth." Revealed by the Holy Ghost? Most assuredly. Prophets spake as they were moved upon by the Holy Spirit; apostles wrote and spoke as the Spirit inspired them. No one questions this among Bible believers, so we will not take time to prove it.

Does the Bible contain all the truth, i. e., all the law, commandments, or word of God? We answer, Nay; for in the Book of Mormon is found the "truth" which was to "spring out of the earth;" "the great things" of God's "law" written to Ephraim concerning his brethren of the seed of Manasseh who were led out of Jerusalem to America. In this book also is to be found the law, the commandments, the word of God. The truth therein revealed, by the Holy Spirit, forms therefore a part of the "rock" on which the church was to be built. It contains also the "fulness of the gospel." But are the Book of Mormon and the Bible the only records of truth? Nay; for in the revelations of God to the church in these last days, given through Joseph the Seer, and also through his son who is his successor as president of the church, having "all the gifts of the Spirit" through these men has the truth been revealed by the Spirit, and therefore "present truth." And the church to-day, as well as in Peter's day should be "established" in the "present truth."

Why are the dead to be "judged out of those things which were written in the books?" (Rev. 20:12). Because of "present truth," or the laws and commandments of God given to the people in their day, for their faith and obedience. The antediluvians can not be judged out of the law of Moses and the prophets, nor the early Christians, who lived after the law and the prophets ended.

The people of the Lord in America in the days of Book of Mormon history, will not be judged by what Christ and the apostles taught on the eastern continent, but by what was spoken by their own prophets and by the Savior to them personally, and by the teachings of their own apostles.

We of to-day will be judged by whatever was of a general, or universal character revealed to the ancients both in Asia and in America, but more particularly by "present truth," the laws, and commandments, the word of God to us given by revelation in our day.

They may be new truths, but not conflicting truths. Whatever was truth once, remains forever a truth, even if not applicable in other ages as a law. But God can not contradict himself, or make what was once sin and offensive to him, at another time to be righteous and agreeable to him, because he can not change, unless he ceases to be God. If he does change, he is no longer God. If he remains God, he can not change. Having positively condemned polygamy in the days of the Nephites, about 2,400 years ago, he could not authorize it to-day; because if "abominable," a "crime," and an "iniquity" then, it must be so to-day, for God can not change. If God has changed and therefore ceased to be God, we may have the solution to the problem why Brigham Young substituted Adam for him.

Man must have a God of some sort, and as the God who created Adam passed away, having changed if Brigham's theory be true, Adam may do as well as any body else.

Christ is as unchangeable as the Father, and so also is the Holy Spirit; and as they are all of the same mind and judgment, if the Father changes, so must the Son change, also the Holy Spirit, and then they must all cease to be; therefore we can understand that not only is Adam God, but "the only God with whom we" (the Utah Mormons) "have to do."

But our God does not change, therefore he remains as ever, the Only True and Living God.

Present truth must therefore be truth in harmony with ancient truth. That which is truth now, and conflicts in principle—in spirit as well as letter—with what is called former truth is not truth if the former was. For if the latter revelation is truth, then that which contradicts it in principle, in spirit and letter given in former times was not truth, unless indeed the circumstances or conditions were radically and totally different to those at the present time. If polygamy is "present truth," then the circumstances, the surroundings, the conditions, and the necessities, of the church to-day are radically, even totally, different to those of the church from 1830 till 1844—we might say till 1852. Not being the same church, nor worshipping the same God, it may be true after that there has a revelation come to the Utah Church. But with the same God who spoke in 1831 and forbade polygamy, and the same church, the revelation is simply impossible. Polygamy being "present truth" to the Utah Church, then its "rock," is a different one, to that of the Pauline Church, or the Josephite Church of 1830 till 1844, or the Reorganized Church from 1852 till 1886. But with a new God, and a new rock, or in other words a new gospel it can not possibly be the old church. The name does not prove anything. Mrs. Truelove may have been once the lawfully wedded wife of Mr. Truelove, but because of her repeated adulteries, she has been divorced by the laws of God, and of the land, still she may fancy the name of Truelove for some reason satisfactory to herself, and insist on calling herself Mrs. Truelove, but she is not Mr. Truelove's wife for all that. Nor is the Utah Church, with its new God, and new gospel, the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Now the Book of Mormon positively declares that a church called in the name of Christ is his church, if built upon his gospel. He says "But if it be called in my name, then it is my church, if it so be, that they are built upon my gospel."

That gospel is the doctrine of faith in Christ, repentance, baptism, and the reception of the Holy Spirit. Any thing "more," such as polygamy, is not the gospel. Any thing "less," (such as that "baptism is not essential") is not the gospel. It is another "rock." Polygamy being a "new" and everlasting covenant, is of course not the rock or gospel covenant that Jesus built his church upon; for that covenant was four thousand years old when he built his church, having been preached to Adam. But look here,—If Adam understood the gospel as Jesus taught it, (and the Inspired Translation by Joseph Smith shows that he did understand the same gospel and obeyed it, by what authority has he changed it and revealed to Brigham Young the "new and everlasting covenant," alias polygamy? He must have rebelled against God; for God can not change, and therefore could not commission Adam to change the gospel covenant—the rock.

What then? Why, Adam rebels, becomes a servant of the devil, and is the "only god" with whom the Utah Church has to do. No; the Utah Church does not stand on the "rock"—on "truth revealed by the Holy Spirit"—therefore it is not the Church of Jesus Christ. What church does stand on that "rock?" What church is built on it? Not those who deny present revelation, that is certain; and the majority of so called Christian churches do deny that. But they say, We believe in truth that has been revealed! Oh, the devils can beat that, for they believe that and more too; and they know a few things, that thousands of church members do not know, even if they believe them. They said—"We know who thou art." Peter could not say that till God revealed it to him. But the devil's faith and knowledge, no matter how superior to modern church members, won't save them. The reason is, they do not prove their faith by their works. But of course modern Christians, as they fondly call themselves, do; they believe all the Scriptures teach, and obey all the commands of Christ, and do it just as he would have them do it; they neither add to, nor take from!

They prove their faith by their works. This last item is not sarcasm. They prove their faith by their works. For instance, they believe that baptism is not for remission of sins, nor essential to salvation, therefore they are not baptized. They believe that the "signs" do not follow the believer to-day; therefore they do not "covet earnestly the best gifts."

What church is built on the rock of "truth revealed by the Holy Spirit," or on "present truth?" I answer, the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Do not get alarmed about our claim for "present truth." Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God, and is present truth; yet it is an eternal truth, as far as the Spirit is concerned; and is eighteen hundred and eighty-six years old as pertains to the flesh of Christ. It was true that he was the Son of God, when he created Adam.

Abraham, and Moses, and Daniel, John the Baptist and Peter, and thousands of others understood it, yet it is the same truth to-day, as much truth as it ever was, and is a "present truth" therefore. How many churches claim to be built on the truth that "Jesus is the Christ," who, however reject the doctrine of the literal gathering or restoration of Israel to their own land, and the rebuilding of the kingdom and throne of David, with Christ as the heir of David's throne?

Those who do not believe in the restoration of Israel, and the rebuilding of Jerusalem, and the salvation of the whole house of Israel, do not and can not preach Christ.

How many believe that Christ is the Son of the living God? Those who believe that Joseph was his father? or those who believe he was the "very eternal Father, whose Son he is? or in other words, his own father?" Nay. How are they then built on the rock? If not on the rock, on what then? On the sand? If so, their house must fall; it can not stand the storms that will attend and signalize the day of judgment.

PRIDE.

By request we reproduce the following article:

The wise man has said, "Pride goeth before destruction, and a haughty spirit before a fall." This harmonizes with what the Lord has said to the Church in the last days: "Beware of pride, lest ye become as the Nephites of old." By tracing the history of this ancient people, we learn that although they were truly an enlightened people, and had the Church of Christ established among them, yet they were so given to pride that many afflictions were brought upon them from time to time, till at last they were destroyed from off the earth as a people, and one of their prophets, Mormon, declared that "pride hath proved their destruction." How kind the Lord was to forewarn us of this great evil; for if pride destroyed the church and people of God in one age of the world, why will it not do the same in another, or in the present age, if indulged in by the church or people of God?

But, says one, "We do not have pride in the church now, so there is no danger." Perhaps so. But we will ask, What is pride? and let the prophets and inspired writers answer. Then we shall be better able to judge in regard to the matter. We read in the Book of Mormon that Alma, the great high priest, at one time, desiring to visit the churches in different parts of the land, gave up the judgment seat to another, and started again to preach the word. Some of the people he found firm in the faith, and rejoiced in their steadfastness, while there were others whom he found indulging in very singular customs, which caused him to mourn exceedingly, and to put up this remarkable lamentation before God:

"Behold, O God! they cry unto thee, yet their hearts are swallowed up in their pride. Behold O God, they cry unto thee with their mouths, while they are puffed up even to greatness with the vain things of the world. Behold, O my God, their costly apparel, and their ringlets, and their bracelets, and their ornaments of gold and all their precious things which they are ornamented with."

We are left to conjecture whether, if Alma were permitted to meet with us in our Saints' meetings at the present day, he would find sufficient cause for making such a lamentation as is here recorded of him; and whether the Saints would not consider him a queer sort of a religionist to "take on so" about their costly apparel, and their ringlets, and their bracelets and their ornaments of gold, etc.

In the second chapter of Alma we read:

"And it came to pass in the eighth year of the reign of the judges that the people of the church began to wax proud, because of their exceeding riches, and their fine silks, and their fine twined linen, and because of their many flocks and herds, and their gold and their silver, and all manner of precious things which they had obtained by their industry; and in all these things they were lifted up in the pride of their eyes, for they began to wear very costly apparel."

In the following chapter the prophet Alma, while teaching the people on the subject of repentance, said:

"And also the Spirit saith unto me, yea, crieth unto me with a mighty voice, saying, Go forth and say unto this people, Repent, for except ye repent ye can in nowise be saved, in the kingdom of heaven. * * * And now I say unto you, my beloved brethren, can ye withstand these sayings; yea, can ye lay these things aside, and trample the Holy one under your feet; yea, can ye be puffed up with the pride of your hearts; will ye still persist in the wearing of costly apparel, and setting your hearts upon the vain things of the world."

But Alma is not alone in his views on pride. In the last book of Nephi, first chapter, the prophet in writing of the prosperity of the Church, said:

"Now in this two hundred and first year there began to be among them those who were lifted up in pride, such as the wearing of very fine apparel, and all manner of fine pearls, and of the fine things of the world."

Another prophet, Moroni, was permitted to look down the stream of time, even to the present day, and wrote to the believers in Christ after this manner:

"I know that ye do walk in the pride of your hearts, and there are none, save a few only, who do not lift themselves up in the pride of their hearts unto the wearing of fine apparel, * * for behold ye do love money, and your substances and your fine apparel, and the adorning of your churches, more than ye love the poor and the needy, the sick and the afflicted."

In the first chapter of Alma there is a striking contrast between those who are walking in humility and faithfulness before God, and those who are walking after the manner of the world. The writer says:

"And thus they were all equal, * * and they did impart of their substance every man according to that which he had to the poor, and the needy, and the sick, and the afflicted; and they did not wear costly apparel, yet they were neat and comely; and thus they did establish the affairs of the church. * * For those who did not belong to their church did indulge themselves in sorceries, and in idolatry or idleness, and in babblings, and in envying and strife; wearing costly apparel; being lifted up in the pride of their own eyes."

We might quote other passages from this "Fullness of the gospel," but these will suffice. The prophet Isaiah must have viewed the subject in a similar light, when by the Spirit of God he pronounced a curse upon the "daughters of Zion," because of their haughtiness, and even mention the names of their ornaments and useless articles of apparel, nearly all of which are in common use—shall I say, among those who ought to be considered the daughters of Zion at the present day? The apostle Paul might have been contemplating modern fashions and follies when he said:

"I will in like manner that the women, also, adorn themselves with modest apparel, with shamefacedness and sobriety, not with braided hair, or gold, pearls, or costly array, (but that which becometh women professing godliness, with good works."

Agreeable to all these sayings of the prophets, is the commandment of God, given through the prophet Joseph Smith, to the Church in these last days, which reads thus:

"Thou shalt not be proud in thy heart; let all thy garments be plain, and their beauty the beauty of the work of thine own hands."—D. C. 42: 12.

But, says one, (a good Elder, perhaps), "I know the book reads so, but I like to see the women well dressed." Says another, "I think we have a right to dress as we please, so long as we furnish our own money." Another says, "I dress fashionable to please my husband." And thus the reasons and excuses multiply, until we cheat ourselves into the belief that we shall obtain an inheritance in the celestial glory, whether we abide the law of a celestial kingdom or not.

Sisters in Christ, and brethren too, let us cast aside the veil of darkness which is spread over us, and view these things in the light of God's Holy Spirit. "Be not deceived; God is not mocked; for whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap."—Gal. 6: 7. If we sow pride, and selfishness, and folly, will not our reward be of proportionate value? or, in other words, shall we not be in danger of losing the great reward of eternal life altogether, except we repent?

Christ said, "A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another." Can it be truly said that we love our sister, when we buy twenty yards of cloth and try to put it all into a dress for ourself, (to wear to meeting of course), while our sister and neighbor has to stay at home from meeting for the want of even ten yards to make her a plain dress of; and her children have to stay away from Sabbath School, while a small portion of what we lay out for neckties, and ruffles, and other "vain things of the world," would make them comfortable and tidy to attend both Sabbath School and meeting?

What would we think of a circumstance like this: A sister goes to town with a very little pocket money to buy a few supposed necessities. Before buying, however, she calls to see the "widow and the fatherless," and her heart being moved with compassion for them, she gives her money, a dollar, to the sister, and goes home, thinking she will get along without the necessities a while longer. The widow is thankful for the money, of course, and goes immediately and buys a dollar flower for her hat; while the sister who gave the dollar continues to wear a sun-bonnet to meeting—the best she is able to have. "O consistency, thou art a jewel!"

Sisters, do we realize how much it costs in money, to provide ourselves with these useless articles and ornaments of dress, and to say nothing of the money, how much unnecessary time it takes to make, prepare, and keep in order our clothing, made and trimmed after the fashions of the world; and how much our affections are placed on these "vain things," when the Lord has commanded us to love him with all our heart, might, mind, and strength? Do we realize how may poor and needy there are among us, many of whom suffer for the common comforts of life—while we have nothing to give them? Well did the prophet Isaiah say, "Ye rob the poor because of your fine clothing." Do we visit the sick and the afflicted, and strive to comfort them and do them good? Indeed we have no time, it is so much work to keep all things prepared that we may appear as well or better than others, that we can scarcely even get time to pray, to say nothing of treasuring up the commandments of God, to do them. Do we realize, also, how the work of God languishes? The church treasury empty, the Bishop's hands tied, "good Elders" staying at home to "provide for their own, lest they become worse than an infidel," and the fields white on every hand—but the laborers are few. Can we do nothing?

O, my sisters! let us rise, Sampson like, (see Judges, 11: 28), in the strength of Israel's God, and break the fetters that bind us. Let us renew the covenant we made when we went down into the waters of baptism, remembering that God has said: "He who is not able to abide the law of a celestial kingdom can not abide a celestial glory." Let us set our hearts to do good, and not falter in making the necessary sacrifice. We are told that we "should not follow a multitude to do evil." Let those who know not God go their own way, till we can persuade them to embrace the gospel; but as for us, we will take hold of the "rod of iron," and serve God with our house. Truly, we ought to have a higher, holier aim in life, we who have come to the light and knowledge of the truth, than simply to follow the fashions and keep up appearances.

I have been led to contemplate: What if the Savior should come in his glory, just when we are assembled in our houses of worship for a Sabbath meeting. Would he look with complacency on the display of fancy hats with their veils, and ribbons and flowers, and gewgaws; upon our ruffs and collars, and neck-ties, and bibs, and jewelry, and necklaces, and sleeve buttons and cuffs, and frills and flounces, and innumerable bias folds, and "tie backs," and puffs, and corsets (stomachers), etc? Or would he turn away with sorrowing pity and disgust, saying, "These are none of mine! Notwithstanding the costliness of their apparel, they have not got on the wedding garment, and where I am they can not come?"

Sisters, there is a great responsibility resting upon us. As wives and mothers we have a great influence over those with whom we continually associate. It can not be otherwise. As for our children, they are continually with us, and from infancy we may begin to teach them right and wrong, and as they grow older, we may instruct, and instil into their young minds and tender hearts those pure principles both moral and religious, which shall shape their future lives, and lead them to become righteous men and women.

We have other duties: Never have I felt so deeply impressed in regard to this particular point, as during the present sickly season. We should study the laws of health, how to care for these frail bodies, "so fearfully and wonderfully made;" how to avoid sickness and how to treat disease, when perchance we have failed to avoid it, and how to nurse and care for the sick; also we should learn the use of herbs, and the difference between a pickled cucumber and a dish of cooked rice for a sick person—for we are permitted to use "herbs and mild food" when our faith is weak, which, by the way, is not uncommonly the case. We should also instruct our daughters especially in regard to these duties, having first taught them to avoid the errors into which girls and young women commonly fall, such as wearing thin shoes in damp weather, thin clothing in cold weather, and the use of those terrible "consumption strings," which, notwithstanding all that may be said in their favor by the devotees of fashion, still remain a curse, not only to the female sex, but to the human family. There is much else we should do which I have not space nor time to mention. But how can we perform all these various duties, or scarcely any part of them while our time and attention must be given to the study of fashion plates, and in striving to keep up with the world, in all its fashions and follies.

In laying aside our vanity, and folly, and extravagance, however, it is not necessary that we become eccentric, nor will there be any great danger of our becoming proud of a plain dress, for such a thing would be unnatural, to say the least; neither will it be necessary that we should retain a particle of pride to enable us to be "neat and comely." An eye single to the glory of God will do this, as far as circumstances will permit. If a family of children have but one suit of clothes apiece, and scarcely that, it is impossible for them to be always clean and tidy, no matter how hard the mother may work, to have them so.

Much more might be said or written on this subject, but I will leave it for others, more capable, to say or write. I wish to add, however, that I trust my sisters will, with me, take this matter into earnest, prayerful consideration; and in contemplating the subject, let us not say, "There are other sins as great as pride," "The brethren are just as proud as the sisters," &c. For that, you know, is no excuse for us. If we have other sins, we should repent of them, and if the brethren are proud they ought also to repent. It is a solemn fact that we have each to stand or fall for ourselves.

My earnest desires and prayers are, that we may be able to replenish the oil in our wasted vessels, and trim our lamps anew and have them burning; or in other words, that we may put on the "wedding garment," that when the cry is made, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh," we may be permitted to enter into the "marriage supper of the Lamb."

Miscellaneous.

ADVOCATE NOTICE NO. 2.

Since publishing the notice which appeared in the Herald of August 14th, a host of letters have come by mail from those who have overpaid, asking that their surplus be credited on the Herald, Hope, or be sent them in cash, and only one letter has been received from those who are indebted to the Advocate, though the number of those indebted to it is very much larger than the number of those who have overpaid. Now the 50 cents that came in that one letter will not pay back the crowd who are asking for what we owe them. Will those who are in arrears come to our help at once by paying up, so that we may keep our credit good with all. Two whom we owe have anticipated the above condition of affairs, and have written us to allow the sum they have overpaid to stand and offset the loss we will sustain by a failure to pay on the part of those owing us. We offer them thanks for their consideration and generosity.

Let all who have been taking the Advocate rally to our rescue in this matter, as we desire to straighten out everything connected with it as soon as possible, and then, if possible, make an effort to labor in the ministry again. Who will be the first to respond. Address, Box 372, Independence, Jackson Co., Missouri.

In bonds,

JOSEPH LUFF.

CONFERENCE NOTICE.

The Central California district conference will convene at Watsonville, California, October 15th, 1886. A cordial invitation is tendered to all missionaries and brethren of adjacent districts to be present. By the District President,

I. F. KINGSBURY.

DIED.

BALKA.—At Bartlett, Iowa, August 15th, 1886, our much esteemed and beloved sister, Susan Balka, she was born in Ayrshire, Scotland, June 12th, 1827; emigrated to Utah, and returned with her first husband in company with the writer and others, in 1865; she was a consistent Saint, a faithful wife, a loving mother; she leaves a husband, three sons and three daughters, and a host of friends to mourn her loss. Funeral sermon in Mr. Potter's Grove, to a large assembly of Saints and friends by H. Kemp.

WARDLE.—At Sacramento, California, July 17th, 1886, Elder Ralph Wardle; born March 16th, 1812, in Cheshire, England; received the gospel in England in the early days of the church, was ordained to the office of an Elder, and was an earnest and faithful worker in the cause of his Master. He was baptized into the Reorganization, March 28th, 1867, by Elder A. H. Smith, at Sacramento, California, and was ordained an Elder, July 5th, 1868, by Cornelius Bagnall. He died firm in the faith of the latter day work. Funeral sermon by Elder J. R. Cook, from the words, "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints."

HARRIS.—At Arcadia, Kansas, March 27th, 1886, of abscess of the brain, Milton L. Harris. He was born in Mechanicsburg, Ohio, July, 1847, and was baptized about thirteen years ago by Elder B. V. Springer. He leaves a wife and seven children, also a large circle of relatives and friends.

WARD.—At Lamoni, Iowa, August 13th, 1886, of typhoid fever, Martha J., daughter of Mr. and Mrs. David Ward, aged 10 years, 4 months and 15 days. A bright child and greatly loved by the family. Funeral sermon by Elder H. A. Stebbins.

SHELLY.—In Sherman, Mason County, Michigan, August 10th, 1886, Clarence A., aged 3 years and 4 months; and E., aged 6 months; youngest children of Bro. Ethan A. and Sr. Amanda M. Shelly; their deaths were only about nine hours apart.

"Little ones, how well we loved them,
How they twined around our heart;
Little Canna, baby Emma.
Oh, how hard it was to part."

SHAFFER.—At Lamoni, Iowa, August 24th, 1886, George, child of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Shaffer, aged 5 months and 12 days. He was ill but a few hours, and his face was fair and lovely even in death. A sweet child, a bud of promise, but transplanted to the Paradise of God. Funeral sermon by Elder H. A. Stebbins.

NOTICE.

Allow me to say that some of the ideas I held when I wrote the article "On Tithing," published in the last Herald, I discovered to be erroneous while at April Conference; and I promised to withdraw it and not let it be published, which I forgot to do. I hereby apologize to Bishopric and any that might be offended.

GO TO THE EXPOSITION AND STATE FAIR AT CHICAGO.

For the Inter-State Exposition to be held at Chicago, September 1st to October 16th, 1886, and the Illinois State Fair to be held at Chicago, September 6th to 10th, 1886, the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad have made a low excursion rate from all local stations in Illinois and Iowa, tickets to be sold on certain specified dates during the continuance of the Exposition, and every day (in Illinois) during the continuance of the Fair.

It will also run special daily trains between Chicago Union Depot and the Fair Grounds during Fair week.

Special pains have been taken both by the Exposition and Fair people to make the attractions this year greater than ever before, and everybody should attend.

The excursion rate and date of sale can be ascertained on application to any ticket agent of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad.

FRUIT.

"Strawberries and all sub-acid summer fruits purify the blood. Tender vegetables suit well the human stomach. They who eat freely of both never need drugs. The French do well with their 'grape cure;' we can do quite as well with our strawberry cure, keeping on with all the succeeding fruits. No ship's crew supplied with fruits or their substitutes, green vegetables, ever had the scurvy. All kinds of blood poisoning are cured by fruit, or by a vegetarian diet into which fruit largely enters. Some who can get well no other way do so by living wholly on fruit. With it even cancer can be held at bay. Wise doctors hold that neither cancer or consumption, nor ulceration of the stomach can be cured on a flesh diet. We are not writing of a plate of strawberries after a full meal of fish, flesh and fowl. Then fruit is likely to cause indigestion."

Reports from Texas indicate that Saturday's storm was the most destructive ever known there. The wind attained a velocity of seventy-five miles an hour, and continued for eight hours. Every town along the Western Gulf coast suffered severely. In Fort Worth forty houses were completely demolished and hundreds had their roofs blown off. From Indianola comes the saddest news. The signal office was blown down, carrying with it two men, both of whom were lost. Fire broke out among the ruins and extended for blocks, destroying thirteen houses. The total loss to Texas is: Thirty-eight lives, $1,000,000 to crops, $3,400,000 to city and town property, and $90,000 to shipping and harbor improvements.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

BRO. E. DeLONG wrote from Tawas City, Michigan, August 22d. Their branch numbers thirty-six, and they met with some opposition from unbelievers. He mentions the efforts of a Rev. from Canada to prove immersion was not the correct mode of baptism, and who claimed that Jesus did not come up straightway out of the water as recorded in Matthew 3: 16. This is but another among many proofs that they do not follow the plain testimonies of the Bible they profess to believe and love. Some party questioned Bro. DeLong's authority to solemnize marriages. But Bro. D. had the proper credentials to the discomfiture of the intermeddler. The Elders should be well certified in such matters so that officious, tricky persons can get no advantage over them. They were expecting Elders J. J. Cornish and Willard J. Smith in attendance at their Two-days' Meeting the fourth and fifth of September.

The Associate Editor spent Sunday, the 28th of August, with the Saints at Lucas, Iowa; attended three services, preached at two of them. That branch is reviving.

Bro. John Scott, our foreman in the printing department, left Lamoni, August 30th, accompanied by his wife, and will visit friends at Plano, Sandwich, and other points in Illinois.

Bro. Alexander H. Smith was at last advices at Burnside, Illinois, preaching at that place, LaHarpe, and Shakerag School-house. Uncle William Smith was at, or near Colchester.

Bro. T. T. Hinderks, of Stewartville, Missouri, gives notice hereby, that all who wish German tracts can write to Henry Hinderks, at the above place, and obtain them.

To-day (August 28th) we received by telegram from Bro. C. A. Parkin of San Francisco, California, the very painful news that Bro. T. J. Andrews died yesterday, (27th), suddenly. The church has lost thereby a worthy member, society an active useful citizen, and the family a wise, kind, and devoted husband and father. We await particulars. We also to-day received telegram from Bro. M. T. Short, requesting Elder Joseph Smith or W. W. Blair to go to Millersburg, Illinois, and preach the funeral sermon of his father-in-law, Bro. James Vernon. Sorry we could neither of us go.

A Sr. D. R. Davies expresses the wish that a Welch Elder could go and labor at and near Dausman, Waukesha county, Wisconsin.

Sr. Dingle writes that Brn. Anthony and Clapp are doing well and are liked very much in Deer Lodge Valley, Montana.

Bro. J. W. Gillen writes from Glenwood, Iowa, August 27th; had been to Bartlett and found Bro. Henry Kemp who had just baptized five, and had assisted him in preaching there and also at Shady Grove, Ross, Gaylord's School-house and Glenwood, would go on to Keystone Branch and thence on to the Wheeler's Grove Reunion; had been greatly blessed of God, and found abundant opportunities for preaching the word of life.

Bro. E. W. Lloyd writes us of late that the cause has been advanced in his region by the faithful labors of Brn. J. B. Jarvis and Peter Anderson of Scranton, Kansas. He has received ten copies of "Voice of Warning" from Bro. J. H. Peters of East Lake, Michigan, which he at once put in circulation. This is well.

Bro. D. E. Hough of Port Carling, Ontario, wishes to know the address of Elder J. H. Lake.

Some one sends us from Eldorado Springs, Missouri, a brief and glowing account of the late debate between Elder I. N. White and Elder H. R. Price, but fails to give us his name.

Bro. E. A. Carlton in a letter from Petrolia, Ontario, August 18th. He feels encouraged to press forward in building up the church; has held two meetings in the woods with fair attendance, and invitation to come again. He is anxious some of the Elders should come there and preach the word. Three had been baptized, and more were nearly ready. Bro. George Masters of Del Roy, Ohio, expresses a lively interest in the gospel work and aids it with his means. He thinks the Elders visit the old branches when they ought rather to labor in the new and tender ones, and in other places. He thinks new members in the church are like young trees—they need a great deal of attention. And he advises that all Saints keep the "eleventh commandment," and that they dwell together in love and unity and in the Holy Spirit.

Bro. Jacob K. Chaney of Tower Hill, Snelby county, Illinois, writes us under date of August 30th expressing his love for and confidence in the work of God. He was a private in Co. D, 38th Indiana veteran volunteers, Infantry. He has of late secured his pension and intends to pay titling.

THE EARTHQUAKE.

MISFORTUNES never come singly. They have followed each other in rapid succession during the last two weeks. First came the great storm which swept the coasts of Newfoundland, wrecking scores of vessels and drowning over one hundred seamen. Then Galveston was partly submerged by a flood, and forty lives were lost, besides much property. Two or three days ago an earthquake swept over Greece, and was felt in Italy and Egypt and all along the Mediterranean region. Several towns were destroyed and many hundred lives lost. Fresh upon the heels of these calamities comes the news of the partial destruction of Charleston, S. C., by earthquake and fire, accompanied by a sad loss of life and great destruction of property.

Last Saturday morning there was a slight shock of earthquake felt in the doomed city, and it extended north and west into North Carolina and Georgia. It was evidently a warning of the calamity to follow, but of course was not recognized, as slight earthquake shocks are not infrequent in the United States. The final shock came from the southeast and struck the city at 9:55 p. m. Tuesday. Between that time and ten a. m. yesterday there were ten distinct shocks, but they were only the subsiding of the earth waves. The disaster was wrought by the first. Its force may be inferred from the fact that the whole area of country between the Atlantic coast and the Mississippi River, as far to the north as Milwaukee, felt its power to greater or lesser degree. Charleston, however, was the special victim of this elemental destruction. The city is substantially in ruins. Two-thirds of its houses are uninhabitable. What stores are left are closed, and the people dare not go to them. Churches and other public buildings are in ruins. Railroads and telegraph lines are torn up and destroyed. At midnight twenty lives were known to have been lost, and it was feared that the list would be greatly added to as the search among the ruins proceeded. Fires have added to the terrors of the scene. The panic-stricken people are in the streets and fields in dread expectancy of what fresh horror may come next.

It is needless to speculate on the causes which led to this terrible visitation except as a matter of scientific curiosity. It is more to the point that the people of one of our large and enterprising cities have lost their homes and property without warning, and that in a second of time death and destruction have been let loose upon them by one of those mysterious convulsions of nature which are all the more terrible by reason of their suddenness and awful power. The most expert knowledge can not predict their coming or tell us how to guard against their danger. Human weakness is most apparent in such terrible moments. Help and sympathy are the only consolations at such times.—Chicago Tribune.

THE above reminds us of what we have often pondered for similar reasons since 1860; for the Lord had said to the ministry, through Joseph the Seer, December 27th, 1832,—“And after your testimony, cometh wrath and indignation upon the people; for after your testimony cometh the testimony of earthquakes that shall cause groanings in the midst of her, and men shall fall to the ground and shall not be able to stand. And also cometh the testimony of the voice of thunderings, and the voice of lightnings, and the voice of tempests, [storms—including wind—of extreme violence], and the voice of the waves of the sea heaving themselves beyond their bounds. And all things shall be in commotion; and surely men's hearts shall fail them; for fear shall come upon all people.”—Doc. Cov. 85: 25.

The revelation on the rebellion of the Southern States, &c., given two days before, (Dec. 25th, 1832), had stated similar things, all indicating that God would have the people know what awaited them in this generation, for these prophecies locate the events they mention in this present generation. It is a well attested fact that earthquakes have been far more frequent since 1860 than ever known before within the limits of written history. The predictions of the Seer are having a rapid and most perfect fulfilment, and in them we see the harbingers of “the desolation of abominations” of all kinds, the second coming of Christ and the ushering in of his peaceful, glorious reign.

AID FOR THE MINISTRY.

IN HERALD for August 28th, page 543, Bro. T. J. Andrews, Bishop's Agent for Northern California District, very properly calls attention to an important fact when he says: “There is a prevalent supposition amongst the various branches and scattered Saints, that the missionary's needs are all supplied from the church fund, and that such relieves them from responsibility from rendering him any help. This is a mistake. The missionary in his field is entirely dependent upon that field for all his necessary personal needs and traveling expenses, and only in dire necessity can he make application for personal relief. The missionary's family at home are the proper recipients, and their wants are looked after by the Bishopric, as funds come into its hands from the body.”

This is precisely in harmony with the unrepealed law of the Lord to the church, in all ages and in all places. The Lord will have his gospel preached in his own way, for it is always, when preached in his way, “a witness unto all nations.”

Matt. 24: 14. But if the mere letter of the gospel is preached, and is preached in some other way than God has ordained, then it is not his “witness” to “all the world;” for whatsoever is not ordained of God in these matters is not of any force or virtue. When Christ sent forth his traveling ministers, he required them to rely upon God, and upon the people among whom and for whom they should minister, to supply their temporal needs, for the reason that “the workman is worthy of his meat.” (See Matt. 10: 9-15; Luke 9: 1-6; 10: 1-9). This order was continued after the crucifixion, as may be seen by reading 1 Cor. 9: 7-14; Gal. 6: 2-6; Rom. 15: 27; 2 Tim. 2: 6, 7.

God will prove his ministry; and he asks them to try him and prove him by faithfully trusting in his promises and providential care. His faithful ministers did so, and reported that in these things they lacked nothing. Luke 22: 35.

The following from the Inspired Translation is very plain as to Christ's requirements of his missionaries, and also as to his promise that he would see to it that those to whom they were sent would supply their incidental temporal needs:

“And he said unto his disciples, Therefore I say unto you, Take no thought of your life, what ye shall eat; neither for the body, what ye shall put on. For the life is more than meat, and the body than raiment. Consider the ravens; for they neither sow nor reap; which neither have storehouse nor barn; nevertheless God feedeth them. Are ye not better than the fowls? And who of you by taking thought, can add to his stature one cubit? If ye then be not able to do that which is least, why take ye thought for the rest? Consider the lilies, how they grow; they toil not, they spin not; and yet I say unto you, that Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these. If then God so clothe the grass, which is to-day in the field, and to-morrow is cast in the oven; how much more will he provide for you, if ye are not of little faith? Therefore, seek not what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink, neither be ye of doubtful mind; for all these things do the nations of the world seek after; and your Father who is in heaven, knoweth that ye have need of these things. And ye are sent unto them to be their ministers, and the laborer is worthy of his hire; for the law saith, That a man shall not muzzle the ox that treadeth out the corn. Therefore seek ye to bring forth the kingdom of God, and all these things shall be added unto you.”—Luke 12: 24-34.

After this manner did Christ's traveling ministry serve on this continent, for “they did separate themselves one from another, taking no thought for themselves what they should eat, or what they should drink, or what they should put on. And the Lord provided for them that they should hunger not, neither should they thirst; yea, and he also gave them strength, that they should suffer no manner of afflictions save it were swallowed up in the joy of Christ.”—Alma 16: 17. See also book of Nephi 6: 1.

And when this last dispensation was opened and established, the same things were required of the traveling ministry, and the same wonderful promises were made; in proof of which we have the following:

“And again I say unto you, my friends (for from henceforth I shall call you friends), it is expedient that I give unto you this commandment, that ye become even as my friends in days when I was with them traveling to preach this gospel in my power; for I suffered them not to have purse or scrip, neither two coats; behold, I send you out to prove the world, and the laborer is worthy of his hire. And any man that shall go and preach this gospel of the kingdom, and fail not to continue faithful in all things, shall not be weary in mind, neither darkened, neither in body, limb or joint; and an hair of his head shall not fall to the ground unnoticed. And they shall not go hungry, neither athirst.

“Therefore, take no thought for the morrow, for what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink, or wherewithal ye shall be clothed; for consider the lilies of the field, how they grow, they toil not, neither do they spin; and the kingdoms of the world, in all their glory, are not arrayed like one of these; for your Father who art in heaven, knoweth that you have need of all these things. Therefore, let the morrow take thought for the things of itself. Neither take ye thought beforehand what ye shall say, but treasure up in your minds continually the words of life, and it shall be given you in the very hour that portion that shall be meted unto every man.

“Therefore, let no man among you (for this commandment is unto all the faithful who are called of God in the church, unto the ministry), from this hour, take purse or scrip, that goeth forth to proclaim this gospel of the kingdom. Behold, I send you out to reprove the world of all their unrighteous deeds, and to teach them of a judgment which is to come. And whoso receiveth you, there will I be also; for I will go before your face: I will be on your right hand and on your left, and my Spirit shall be in your hearts, and my angels round about you, to bear you up.

“Whoso receiveth you receiveth me, and the same will feed you, and clothe you, and give you money. And he who feeds you, or clothes you, or gives you money, shall in no wise lose his reward: and he that doeth not these things is not my disciple: by this you may know my disciples. He that receiveth you not, go away from him alone by yourselves, and cleanse your feet, even with water, pure water, whether in heat or in cold, and bear testimony of it unto your Father which is in heaven, and return not again unto that man. And into whatsoever village or city ye enter, do likewise. Nevertheless, search diligently and spare not; and wo unto that house, or that village, or city, that rejecteth you, or your words, or testimony concerning me. Wo, I say again, unto that house, or that village, or city, that rejecteth you, or your words, or your testimony of me; for I, the Almighty, have laid my hands upon the nations to scourge them for their wickedness; and plagues shall go forth, and they shall not be taken from the earth until I have completed my work, which shall be cut short in righteousness; until all shall know me, who remain, even from the least unto the greatest, and shall be filled with the knowledge of the Lord, and shall see eye to eye, and shall lift up their voice, and with the voice together sing this new song, saying: * * *

"And again, verily, verily I say unto you, it is expedient, that every man who goes forth to proclaim mine everlasting gospel, that inasmuch as they have families, and receive moneys by gift, that they should send it unto them, or make use of it for their benefit, as the Lord shall direct them, for thus it seemeth me good. And let all those who have not families, who receive moneys, send it up unto the Bishop in Zion, or unto the Bishop in Ohio, that it may be consecrated for the bringing forth of the revelations and the printing thereof, and for establishing Zion.

"And if any man shall give unto any of you a coat, or a suit, take the old and cast it unto the poor, and go your way rejoicing. And if any man among you be strong in the Spirit, let him take with him he that is weak, that he may be edified in all meekness, that he may become strong also."—Doc. & Cov. 83: 13, 14, 15, 16, 18, 19.

And, that none of the traveling ministry are exempt from this order may be further seen in section 23: 7. And of those traveling ministers who have families, the Lord further says:

"Behold I say unto you, that it is the duty of the church to assist in supporting the families of those who are called and must needs be sent unto the world to proclaim the gospel unto the world; wherefore, I the Lord, give unto you this commandment, that ye obtain places for your families, inasmuch as your brethren are willing to open their hearts; and let all such as can, obtain places for their families, and support of the church for them, not fail to go into the world; whether to the east, or to the west, or to the north, or to the south, let them ask and they shall receive; knock and it shall be opened unto them, and made known from on high, even by the Comforter, whither they shall go. And again, verily I say unto you, that every man who is obliged to provide for his own family, let him provide and he shall in no wise lose his crown; and let him labor in the church. Let every man be diligent in all things. And the idler shall not have place in the church, except he repents and mends his ways."—D. C. 75: 4, 5.

In what we have quoted and cited is seen what the Lord requires of his traveling ministry, and also the glorious promises he has made them if they prove themselves by faithfulness, humility, diligence, wisdom, patience, and charity. We also see just what he asks this ministry to expect of Him. We further see what the Lord requires of the Saints and the world in respect to these ministers and their needy families. God asks this ministry to prove him and the Saints and the world; for on the other hand, He will prove and discipline this ministry, and by them He will prove the Saints and the world—and it must be done in the Lord's own way; for Christ will say,—“Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me.”—Matt. 25: 31–46. “I the Lord am bound when ye do what I say, but when ye do not what I say, ye have no promise.”—D. C. 81: 3.

When a faithful, wise, and spiritual minister goes forth preaching the gospel of Christ in the manner ordained of God, the Holy Spirit will inspire those who love truth and right to love that minister, and they will esteem it a privilege as well as a duty for them to care for him and minister to his needs; and when they so minister in wisdom, the giver is blessed of God and feels a sense of gratification in doing such service which compensates him largely for the aid given. Besides this, the giver is laying up treasure in heaven against the time when Christ will judge man by his works. And who is there who will interpose against such giving and thereby obstruct or oppose the will of God in this matter? For those who thus aid the ministry are partakers in the spread of the gospel and in building up the kingdom of God, and will have their reward.

In this way much assistance is given which otherwise the church in no way would receive. For if the opportunity is not used when offered, the aid that then might be obtained is lost to the minister, and consequently to the Church of God. When persons wisely aid Christ's traveling ministers, they aid his church. And such persons will feel an increasing interest and love for the work of God, and will also feel that they have material part and lot in its prosperity and progress; therefore opportunities should be given to them to render aid as they may feel willing to.

The minister, when he may have occasion to say he preaches the gospel “without purse or scrip,” should neither say nor intend to say thereby that God does not expect those who hear the gospel to assist his needy ministry and his church. And when aid is offered him properly, he should not refuse it, for he thereby may be found resisting what God has provided and also prevent persons from securing blessings and rewards for rendering aid to Christ's ministry and church. Neither should the minister take exceptions to the manner in which such aid comes, if it comes honestly, orderly, and cheerfully.

When the travelling ministry are aided by those for whom they minister, they feel that they are appreciated by the people, and that God is kindly caring for them, and so their faith and zeal are increased. And when the people aid these ministers, they feel they are giving substantial evidence of respect and love and interest, in them and in their work. Those who can, but who will not aid God's ministry and church, in a wise and proper way—God's way—when and where it is needed, are not worthy of blessing, but will receive condemnation, both here and hereafter, from Christ, the Righteous Judge.

And any minister who imposes upon the people, in or out of the church, in respect to these matters, is condemnable, and should be dealt with as promptly and sharply as if guilty of abusing his power and opportunities in other things. But God desires and will have opportunities in which to manifest his special care and love for the faithful, wise, and diligent minister; and he desires and will have opportunities by which the Saints and the world can prove themselves worthy of his love and favor. God says of his faithful ministers,—“Thou shalt not muzzle the mouth of the ox that treadeth out the corn.”—Cor. 9: 9. And Paul says,—“Let the Elders that rule well be counted worthy of double honor, especially they who labor in word and doctrine.” For the Scripture saith, Thou shalt not muzzle the ox that treadeth out the corn. And, The laborer is worthy of his reward.”—1 Tim. 5: 18, 19. And he further says to this “good soldier of Jesus Christ,” in 2 Tim. 2: 6, “The husbandman that laboreth must be first partaker of the fruits.” All should heed these teachings of the Scriptures, for all will be judged by them.

“ZIONS' HOPE.”

SISTER WALKER is meeting with fine success thus far in her efforts to enlarge the Hope. The zeal and promptness with which many have rendered aid in this direction is most commendable. The interests of the church demand a larger Sunday School paper than the Hope now is, so that the good seeds of life and salvation may be scattered far and wide with a liberal hand. We feel confident sister Walker and her helpers will give satisfaction in their loving work of feeding “the lambs of the flock,” and leading the young in the ways of purity, peace, and life eternal.

From what we know of her tastes, attainments, experiences in church-work and general affairs of life, devotion to the interests of the young and the Church of God, we take pleasure in commending her and her work for the Hope to all lovers of that which is good.

This church has grown from near one hundred members in 1860 to over 20,000 now, (and including the children of its families, to probably more than twice that number); its prospects were never so bright and full of promise as now, and with its increase comes greater responsibilities. Progression must ever be the watch-word of the Church of Christ, and its people should promptly keep step with its ever increasing demands. God is able and will make us equal to the work required if we are willing and faithful. The interests of the Church of Christ commands us to move forward! All should heed the voice, leaving results with Him who is able to give great success to weak but willing workers and wring victory from seeming defeat. Let us move forward.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. A. J. Moore writes from Sweet Home, Mo., Aug. 28th:

“We had large attendance at our district conference, some were baptized, others are believing. I spoke three times on Sunday, and was blessed of God. I believe this district is improving well.”

Bro. John S. Parrish, of 1445 Madison street, St. Louis, Mo., writes August 30th:

“The work is moving slowly but surely in this place. Some seem to be a little sleepy, but there are wakeful and watchful ones among us. Bro. Beard and I have opened a new place in Laclede county, and think some good may follow an earnest effort. I would like to correspond with some brother who is studying law.”

SISTER M. Walker sends us the following:

LAMONI, Iowa, September 3d, 1886.

Bro. Blair:—Through your columns this morning we wish to ask the readers of the Herald (those who have overpaid upon the Advocate) a question. Is there any one of you who can not afford to send Bro. Luff a postal card, saying to him, "Let the balance in my favor go towards loosing you hands, that the blood of souls be not laid to my charge?" In the silent watches of the night this was the voice of the Spirit unto us, and with it was brought to our memory the parable of the ungrateful servant who threw his fellow servant into prison, when he was not able to pay him, notwithstanding he himself had been released by his Master of a much greater debt. All will remember the result. In bonds of hope, your sister.

Writing from San Francisco, California, the 16th ult., Bro. Geo. S. Lincoln says:

"Bro. Heman C. Smith spoke for us here last Sunday evening to a good and interested audience, quite a number of strangers among them who were much pleased, and will come again. We baptized one two weeks ago, and are sowing much good seed in this part of the vineyard which is springing up in many places and fruit is beginning to come forth more plentifully."

Sr. Alice Strickland says:

"The Herald is the best paper I ever read. I think it improves all the time, and I can not think of doing without it."

THE following taken from the Drawer of Harper's Magazine for September, tells its own story; does anybody know of anything of a similar character within their own experience.

RELIGIOUS INTOLERANCE.

DEACON PETTYBONE (TO HIS TWENTY-ONE YEAR OLD SON).

"James, you know my love of liberty, right of conscience, freedom of speech and worship; you have heard me proclaim them in public, time and time again. You seem to prefer the other church to our own, notwithstanding my arguments and persuasions. Well, this is a free country, you are a free citizen; far be it from me to coerce or influence you in any way. Go, my son, go; if your heart tells you you are seeking the right path, go. But if you do go, may I be struck deaf, dumb, and blind, if I don't drive you from my home like a dog. I'll follow your path, and take from you all means of earning an honest livelihood. I'll drive you to want and crime, and I'll die cursing you with my latest breath. I am determined to do my duty as a Christian."

E. READ.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Ques.—I wish to ask a question; and as a prelude cite some of the causes for the enquiry. Gen. 17, the covenant of circumcision, with a promise, was made to Abraham; while in Gen. 48, we have an account of Joseph bringing his two lads to Israel for his blessing, and it appears that a greater blessing was bestowed by the right hand. Next, when Christ came among men, he took little children up in his arms, put his hands upon them and blessed them. The several churches discovering that some importance or God appointed duty attached to this covenant by circumcision, and blessing by the laying on of hands, substituted infant baptism and infant sprinkling, while the church of Latter Day Saints profess to believe and practice the identical things that were taught by Christ, and in Doctrine and Covenants, sec. 17, par. 19, parents are directed to have their children blessed by the laying on of hands. Now, please answer, what is the relationship of children thus blessed to the church and the kingdom of God, and what will be the relationship of the children of Saints who are not blessed as commanded?

Ans.—Children are by their birth natural wards of their parents. If correctly instructed in the faith of Christ they will at a suitable age be not only willing, but anxious to receive baptism. Prior to that the blessing by the laying on of hands creates them wards of the church, members of the "church triumphant," but not the "church militant." Should children who have thus been blessed die before being baptized, the atonement has made them "of the kingdom," and it is evident that such will rise with the just in the resurrection, heirs of the kingdom, of eternal life, because wards of the Spirit.

2.—Who is meant by the believer, Mark 16: 17, 18?

A.—It relates to those who, in a gospel sense, believe in Christ.

LOOK AT THIS.—There has not been a saloon for the sale of intoxicants in Hancock county, W. Va., for over forty years, and it is also true that during the year 1885 the grand jury did not find a single indictment, and there was not a prisoner in the county jail during that year.

The largest library is the Bibliotheque National in Paris, founded by Louis XIV. It contains 1,400,000 volumes, 300,000 pamphlets, 175,000 manuscripts, 300,000 maps and charts, and 150,000 coins and medals. The collections and engravings exceed 1,300,000, contained in some 10,000 volumes.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY SISTER "FRANCES."

"The truths ye urge are borne abroad
By every wind and every tide;
The voice of nature and of God
Speaks out upon your side.

BY WASHINGTON GLADDEN.

In the bitter wave of woe,
Beaten and tossed about
By the sullen winds that blow
From the desolate shores of doubt,
Where the anchors that faith has cast
Are dragging in the gale,
I am quietly holding fast
To the things that can not fail;
I know that right is right;
That it is not good to lie;
That love is better than spite,
And a neighbor than a spy;
I know that passion needs
The lash of a sober mind;
I know that generous deeds
Some sure reward will find;
That the rulers must obey;
That the givers shall increase;
That the duty lights the way

For the beautiful feet of Peace;
In the darkest night of the year,
When the stars have all gone out,
That courage is better than fear;
That faith is truer than doubt;
And fierce though the fiends may fight,
And long though the angels hide,
I know that truth and right
Have the universe on their side;
And that somewhere beyond the stars,
Is a love that is better than fate;
When the night unlocks her bars,
I shall see Him—and I will wait.

A WORD FROM AN EXILE.

This is only a word from an exile
Who once had a happy abode,
And shared with the children of Zion
The gospel in fulness restored.

In the year forty nine I obeyed it
When sweet peace and joy to my heart,
Came with the rich gifts of the Spirit
Which form of the gospel a part.

I was then in my dear native Scotland;
Where the gospel was taught pure and bright
As it came from the Savior and prophets,
In its radiance my soul took delight.

How short was my season of gladness;
It was just in the year fifty-two
When doctrines enshrouded in darkness
Came forth which I knew were not true.

I never can tell you my anguish;
Every fiber and nerve was on strain;
The hope of my beautiful Zion
Was gone, and my striving seem vain.

I then was ambitious and selfish;
Of bigotry had my full share;
But experience taught me a lesson,
When the Father his strong arm made bare.

My faith in the great restoration
Was shaken, but saved in the shock,
For behold I had still the foundation
For lo, it was built on the rock.

The rock of eternal salvation
Revealed by the Father of light,
Who promised in this dispensation
That a Prophet should stand for the right.

And now fourteen years in Ohio,
Baptized in the covenant anew,
Neither preache nor Elder from Zion
Has ever come under my view.

We are willing to pay their expenses,
And also will give them a home,
If they will but come with God's blessing
And cheer our sad souls when they come.

There are six of us here who are thirsting
For the river of life—does it flow?
The old ones can draw from the fountain,
But the young without milk can not grow.

We long for the voice of the Shepherd;
With Zion united to be,
In the kingdom and order of heaven
Engrafted a branch in the tree.

FLORA HANNAH.

BUCHTEL, Allens County, Ohio.

MAY we not hope that God will put it into the heart of some of our Elders to visit this family? It comes like a wail from one lost in the desert—like the captives in Babylon when they hung their harps upon the willows. It reminds us of our own sainted mother, who for nearly twenty years was alone in the world, waiting to hear the voice of an earthly shepherd and heard it not. But it came at last and she was permitted to rejoice with the people of God—to die with, and be laid away to her rest by them. May it be thus with our sister. "Whom the Lord loves he chastens." Can you believe this, do you realize it? May that which has fallen to your share, yield the peaceable fruits of righteousness, and may the blessing of God be upon your loyal sons.—[ED.]

A PLEA FOR THE SCOLDING WOMAN.

It is claimed there are two kinds of every thing; and as one having had some experience I will venture to say that there are also two kinds of scolding; and one of the two, I myself, do most heartily approve. I would not wish to be exempt from receiving a good "one," when given in the right spirit. All there is about it that is humiliating is to deserve it; and the one who has the bravery to thus manifest their loving care for my eternal welfare, I can indeed, esteem as my benefactor; and this genuine tonic "kind," such as we find in the Herald of May 22d, at the bottom of last column on the first page; also that furnished by John D. Jones, in the July 10th, is just what we spiritual invalids require; and I can not comprehend how we are to succeed with out this mode of correction. If we are the true wheat we will not get offended, but will love the admonition referred to in the above, and take it all down with a relish and receive benefit therefrom. Who is it, that loves truth and right, that needs to fear the sword of truth because it is sharp? or, what true soldier fears to wield "it" lest he may hurt some one? More might be said, but I will pass on, and relate some of my own experiences. As I am naturally inclined to worry and fret, when our little family bark was not being steered clear of the rocks, or when the cargo on board was not in exact order, I have felt that if I did not speak, the very ground would cry out with anguish. And what could I do? Must I shut my eyes and keep silent, and in this manner give sanction to the wrong? No! conscience would not allow it, and while in this struggle I would try to be very careful to guard against uttering a word that I might afterwards regret, and would feel justified in my course because my motive was good. But, after this irritating cloud had passed, "the sun which had hidden its face for a moment," (while my strength was being tested) would come to my rescue, and tell me that I did wrong to allow myself to become irritated, that I might have said the same in substance in a more gentle way. Then would come friend remorse (his remedy is bitter, but cleansing,) and put me on guard when the next trial came; and without him I could not have known the sweets of a clear conscience. In my zeal for the right, I could not fully comprehend this evil of fretfulness, until recent years, when God, in his tender love and mercy, chose to prove me, by placing me in the fiery furnace; and I have no desire to come out thence, until every evil propensity has been subdued. I do not fear to trust him, for the more severely he chastens me, the more I appreciate the greatness of his love for me. There are none who can know, only those that have tasted the sweet consolation that I have enjoyed since I have thus far gained the victory over this great fault; and I wish to say to the sisters, if there are any who indulge in the same, that you have my deepest sympathy, and I feel assured that if you could see it as I have been made to see it, you would cease from it forever. "Oh, it is so easy to do right when we are walking in the true light." It also begets confidence in ourselves towards God when we go to him. Nevertheless, I have said, that "I would not give a cent for either man or woman, who would not scold when they have a just cause to," and I am of that opinion still; but it should be of the right quality. Now I ask, Did not our loving Savior scold when he drove the people out of the temple? also Peter, and others? But Peter, with his noble heart filled with that "perfect love" was above taking offence when his Master said "Get behind me Satan." Satan never scolds, the weapon he wields never wounds; he is very careful. His devotees not having the love of God in their hearts, therefore, are very selfish, and easily offended. Now we are to become like our Savior by following his example. Then how is our spiritual system to be cleansed and purified without the use of this "genuine tonic?" But the latter "kind" (named Faulty peevishness) as somebody has said, "is poison to every household;" and may God help us to overcome it, and shun it as we would a viper. And to conclude, I will state that it is out of my power to express my appreciation of God's mercy to me; and that in his service I have found the only source of true happiness.

JENNETTE STRAUSS.

PORTSMOUTH, IOWA, August 14th, 1886.

P. S.—I can only say amen to what has already been said in favor of the "Home Column." It is only to be regretted that so much talent has laid dormant so many years; though having come at the "eleventh hour," can be more duly appreciated; and I can say with others, that I have received great benefit from the instruction therein given, and bid it God speed. J. S.

Dear Sisters:—I fear you will think I am growing rather reticent, so I come again; but I would not take up the space allotted to my sisters, some of whom I am well acquainted with, and whose names I have been anxiously watching for, I would rather see them occupy; feeling sure they are capable. It has been so plainly put before us we can not mistake; the Home Column is not for two or three only, but for all. None feel more weak than I. Where are Sisters Emma Gouldsmith, Christina Thomson, Emma Elvin, of Nebraska City, Jane Ross, of Independence, Annie Holt, of Rhode Island, and others too numerous to mention? Was glad to see Sisters Amanda Wood and Susan Burgoine. Come again, Susan. Some may excuse themselves for lack of time. I have much to do, so many little ones to care for, and I am so tired and weary I am not fit for anything. I too have plenty to occupy my time (not even giving a thought as to the non-essentials), and were I to study that first, should never find time to chat with my sisters. Like Mary of old, I sometimes feel it inspiring to choose the better part. It brings that joy and comfort and peace to my soul which I should not otherwise feel, and gives me greater strength and vigor to again resume the duties of life. I have often felt weary in body, not only at the close of day, but at the beginning, before my daily task was begun, and have glanced around with languid eyes at the amount of work before me, and thought it next to an impossibility to even take hold and begin. And right now my mind reverts back to days gone by when I felt thus: O, I am so tired, I am so weary, I must have a cup of coffee or tea, (as the case might be). So on went the coffee pot or tea pot, and of course after drinking the beverage I felt strong, but then it wasn't genuine strength; it only artificial, and it did not last. I seemed to was forget that there was any other source to derive my strength from. Not that I was ignorant of God's ability. I am happy to say these things are beginning to be reckoned in the past, for tea I do not drink any more; but I must confess I have not quite overcome the coffee, though I drink but very little, a cup half-filled and the rest milk, and that for breakfast. If I feel that I need warm drink after that through the day, I use T. W. S.'s plan, hot water, milk and sugar; I find it very stimulating and nourishing. I have another plan by which I work when I feel tired and haven't yet accomplished my work that has to be done—I run to my closet and tell the Lord just what I want, and he has never failed me in one instance when I have done my part. O yes, but don't you think, Aunt Patience, that the Lord knows just what you want without running to your closet every time? Yes, most certainly he does, but you know the Lord has a way of his own; and he will be asked; he must be enquired of; and we are only doing our part to ask, and it is His part to answer. I find prayer the most effectual remedy for all my ailments. Then don't be discouraged sisters, nor grow weary of doing good. If you can cheer but one weary heart you have done that much good to another, besides to yourself. If you trust in God he will help you. When you have striven to help yourself and he sees you are lacking, he will come to your aid. He knows our every need, and his arm is no shorter to-day than in former times. It is only a lack of confidence in him that we do not do better many times. O, this want of faith in God, how prominent it is; how much is left undone that ought to be done, because of it? I often wonder if we as a people shall ever be in possession of such a faith as was once delivered to the saints.

Let us for this faith contend,
Sure salvation is its end,
Heaven already then begun—
Everlasting life be won.

I, in connection with my husband have been on a visit to Sister Lucy Lloyd's. She like many others, lives quite alone—that is from any of the Saints; but she does not feel alone while God is her friend; though she would love the society of the Saints. We enjoyed ourselves very much, and encouraged each other in the divine life the best we knew how, and I must confess in our enjoyment we Marys almost forgot that Martha had any mission. My continual prayer to God is for the Home Column, that it may grow and increase in goodness, and fill every purpose to which it was intended.

AUNT PATIENCE.

LITTLE SIOUX, August 12th.

Dear Sister Frances:—I feel a desire to assist those whose communications I love to read in the "Mothers' Home Column." We live in a very pleasant little town where it is but a short distance to church and close to a large and well regulated school, where there are many accommodations. But I am sorry to say there is not that united effort among all who have embraced the gospel, to advance its glorious works, that there ought to be. Mothers, look to your families, to the interest of those tender lambs coming up around us. I can plainly see if we do not educate our children the world will. Will we stand firm in protecting them from the vices of this sinful world. If we do we must be constantly on our guard. We must see that their associates are of a moral kind, that their young minds are not filled with a portion of the many evils that they are subjected to. Make home a pleasant place for them, always praying God to help us to live right before them every day. Oh! the importance of a strict walk before those whose characters we are helping to develop. If our teachings are right and our actions are not in harmony therewith, it is folly for us to teach. It is my greatest desire to fully comprehend my duty to God and my family. I have four dear little ones whose care is left wholly on me, as their father is a missionary in the vineyard of God. My heart is burdened many times under the weight of the all important duty incumbent upon me, but I continually look to God for strength and wisdom; and although I may err I feel God's assistance. As a sister has truly remarked in her letter in the Herald of August 7th, when burdened with the cares of life I pause and peruse the Herald my whole being is strengthened; I feel to take new courage. I truly rejoice in reading jottings from the pens of those whose minds have been quickened and expanded by God's holy influence. What would our lives be without the gospel? Can we estimate its worth? Impossible, our finite minds will not enable us to. Then let us all make it our daily thought to conform our lives, and the lives of those over whom we have charge, to the gospel. Ever praying for the interest of God's great cause, I am your sister, MRS. G. S. HYDE.

Sister Hyde was one among our first contributors, and we are thankful to hear from her again. May the Lord give to her a double portion of his grace, which truly is needed by every mother left with the entire charge of her family.

PETROLIA, Ontario, August 9th.

Dear Sister Frances:—It is with feelings of gratitude to my heavenly Father that I read the "Mothers' Home Column." I truly believe it is a glorious work. It makes my faith stronger, it helps me to see the great necessity of putting my perfect trust in Him who loved and died for us. It is not without some fear on my part that I now write, as I have never before written for our much loved paper, but being led by the Spirit to take up my pen, I trust it will find a place in the "column." I love this latter-day work, and I know it is of God, and it will stand. I know the blessings do follow the believers if they walk humble and faithful before God, and it is my prayer to Him that he will keep me humble and give me wisdom and grace to bring my children up in his fear. I have two children, a boy and girl, both in the church. How thankful I feel to think the Lord has shown them the light of his true gospel, in their young years. It is now nearly three years since my husband and myself embraced this gospel, and we are still striving to walk in the narrow path; and we do receive the Spirit of God both in gifts and prophecy. Asking the prayers of the Saints, that the Lord may direct us by his Spirit to do those things well pleasing in His sight, I will close.

Correspondence.

HILLS DALE, Ohio, Aug., 25th.

Dear Herald:—It has only been two years since I yielded obedience to the perfect law of God which converts the soul. Since then I have enjoyed many happy moments, for the Lord has blessed me many times. I have been healed by his mighty power, by obeying his commands. Never shall I forget the morning I was baptized by the Spirit, a time long to be remembered, when all darkness was dispelled and my mind enlightened, the Scriptures opened up to my understanding, and all things brought to my remembrance that were needful; my tongue was loosed so that I was not afraid to talk to the wisest and best educated of the sectarian people. I have had many dark seasons, but the Record says these things must come, as we must be a tried people. I am determined by the help of the Lord to prove faithful, bearing all persecutions with patience, rejoicing in the hope of eternal life. Truly, God has set his hand the second time to gather his people, and he has given me the knowledge that this is his work. May we all be faithful and gain a home in our Father's celestial kingdom.

Your sister in the one faith,

STEWARTSVILLE, Mo., August 28th.

Dear Herald:—I appreciate your teachings very much. I have been in the church about five and a half years, but as yet I have done but little to assist in it, but I trust that whatever I do, I may bring no reproach on the cause and thereby cause some good soul to stumble. I desire to live faithful, yet I fear many times lest I should be overcome by temptation and fall by the way. I know there is a God, and that he does hear and answer prayer when we ask in faith believing. Born in "the vallies of the mountains," He has delivered me from that wicked and adulterous people, and has shown me the true light. I pray God that the honest ones may be gathered out, and that my three uncles there might be among that number. Although I know there is a God and realize his kindness and mercy, this will not save me unless I am living pleasing in the sight of my heavenly Father; for we find He commanded John to write to the seven churches in Asia saying that he was ready to spew them out of his mouth because of their lukewarmness. He further said he would rather that they were either hot or cold. What! rather that they were cold than lukewarm? Yes, read it for yourselves. The children of God who shall judge the world should improve their talents, and if we have received five, gain other five.

Yours in gospel bonds,

JOHN W. PETERSON.

CLEVELAND, Iowa, Aug. 25th.

Bro. W. W. Blair:—I am glad you paid us a visit, for you did much good. You have imparted strength and light to many, and I notice that since you left there seems to be quite a disposition to inquire within themselves, "What is the law?" And there seems to be a disposition to work together. We have some of the very best people in this branch. Perhaps no one was more benefited by your efforts than I, and had I not felt a degree of the Spirit in connection with your words I question very much if your labor would have been effectual in doing me good. You have increased my confidence in you as a man, for I saw you were exact upon every point that it should conform to the word of the Lord, and not according to tradition. Admitting of any bad precedent will soon carry us into tradition and blindness so that we thereby may resist the Holy Ghost. I feel a greater desire now to live faithfully than for some years in the past. My confidence is increased in the mission of Christ. I read the predictions made by him and find them literally fulfilled as recorded by historians who were not Christians, and the very words of Jesus made use of in narrating the events in history. So also I believe in the mission of Joseph Smith. You remember in the preface to Doctrine and Covenants the Lord says "peace shall be taken from the earth." Have we not now ample proof of it? Crime is rapidly on the increase. Statistics show that during the last seventy years it has increased in England seven hundred per cent, in Ireland eight hundred per cent, and in Scotland three thousand six hundred per cent. The present condition of society convinces me of the truth of the word. And again: "I the Lord knowing the calamity that should come upon the inhabitants of the earth, called upon my servant Joseph Smith Jr., and others." All this goes to show that God intends to leave the world without excuse; and no doubt but what he wishes the same missionary work continued to its consummation.

I will now close, wishing you God speed and his mighty arm to sustain you in your high and holy calling. The Saints, several of them, spoke of the good feeling experienced with you.

Your brother in hope,

EVAN B. MORGAN.

HELENA, Iowa, August 23d.

Dear Herald:—We are much pleased with your weekly visits. We should feel lost without it. We have a branch here of about fifty members, but can not meet as we would, on account of being scattered. But the Lord will bless according to our faith, for He knows the hearts of all. I once said the Latter Day Saints were the same as the Salt Lake people, but thank the Most High, I have been made to see quite differently by the Spirit and power of the Father he will give to all that will diligently seek him. The Lord has blessed us in our family in different ways. My wife had a bad cough for two or three years before we came into this church and work. The neighbors and friends said she would go into consumption. We had doctored for it but all to no good. We were convinced of the truthfulness of the latter day work, and the necessity of obeying the same. We were baptized by Bro. Nirk, who told my wife she would be over her cough in about four weeks. The people said her baptism when ice was over two feet thick would be the means of her death. But I can truthfully say before God, that before the appointed time, the cough was gone, and it has never returned since, as many of the Saints and others can testify to as well as ourselves. It has now been two and a half years; and we have been blessed with other evidences by way of vision and dreams which has been literally fulfilled. Dear Saints, this is the work of God. Let us try to be faithful while the day lasts for the time is short at the most that we have to prepare in.

Your brother,

C. E. HAND.

ANNEX, Virginia, Aug. 26th.

Editors Herald:—When a person enters through the door (baptism) into the kingdom or Church of God on earth, such person my belief is, whether conscious of it at that time or not, enters into a solemn covenant with his Maker to live by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of the Lord. Now, I believe that the law of tithing as revealed to the Prophet Joseph and recorded in the book of Doc. and Cov. proceeded out of the mouth of the Lord, and though not compulsory, is binding as the law of the Church. I presume there are scarcely any of the Saints whose faith is different from mine on the law of tithing, yet there may be many who like myself have not put the belief into practice, and therefore have not realized the benefits to be derived. The Lord has called on his people to try him and see if he will prove faithful to his promise. If we do what he requires of us, he is bound; otherwise we have no promise.

For the last twelve months or more I have been tossed upon the tempestuous sea of financial trouble; have worked and prayed, and prayed and worked; but all seemed to be of no avail until about six months ago I began to make covenants with the Lord. I promised the Lord that if he would give me a good crop this year, I would give to him one tenth in tithes and offerings. I was soon blessed with the prospect of a good crop of wheat, rye, corn, and hay. But during harvest, and sometime before and after, my prospects seemed about to be blasted by excessive wet weather. He had given me good crops, and I prayed that he would permit me to save it in good condition, which by his providence I have been enabled to do. And now as I sell my crops, I lay away ten dollars of every one hundred for the Lord's treasury, and shall make a remittance soon.

Again; I had a hundred acres of land on which I owed seven hundred and twenty dollars, besides some interest, and I had little or no prospect of paying unless I could sell the land, and that seemed very hard to do. I put it in a land agent's hands in the month of March last. After some time he told me he could not sell it at all. On the 24th day of last June I advertized the land myself in one of the Staunton papers, and promised the Lord, that when I sold the land I would set apart for him one tenth of all I got for it, over and above what I owed on it. Well, on last Saturday I sold the land for six hundred and eighty dollars more than I owed on it. Five hundred and fifty in cash, and one hundred and thirty in thirty days. I will now by the help of the Lord continue to tithe myself in the future, of one tenth of my increase.

Yours in the Lord,

O. E. CLEVELAND.

RIDGETOWN, Ont., August 23d.

Dear Brethren and Sisters:—I feel thankful for the zeal I have for this kingdom "set up never more to be thrown down." We realize this when we battle against the walls that the wisdom of men have erected. When I see the "little stone cut out of the mountain without hands" breaking in pieces Babylon's greatness, it causes me to praise the God of heaven for lifting the veil that I might see the light of the gospel of his dear Son. It's over fourteen years since I was led into the waters of baptism by Bro. E. C. Briggs. I have never forgotten his fatherly instruction, and was glad to see his name appearing for the right in General Conference. "Watch and pray," is the admonition of the Master. I find my lamp very, very soon goes out if I neglect his wise counsel. But what weak mortals we are when we neglect to "live by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." We then get off into the dark and say we can not see this or that, therefore we will leave the church. These are the words of those who have not watched, but have entered into temptation, therefore let us as latter-day Israel be on our watch. The Saints here in the Kent and Elgin District have done a good work in repairing the Lindsley meeting house. Believing there was a people of God there yet, an effort was put forth, and the little church now looks well and speaks well for the latter-day work. Your humble servant has preached twice there and felt well. Bro's Vickery and McBrayne are keeping the people awake around there, and quite an interest is being manifested.

Yours in hope,

JAMES H. TYRRELL.

OSHKOSH, Wis., August 23d.

Bro. Joseph, Blair and Dancer:—I feel sad to think that the Saints' Advocate had to be stopped, but knowing the power of the press and the fitness of the Herald, Zion's Hope, Expositor, etc., I would not miss these papers for a good deal. I consider it a great duty for every Latter Day Saint to uphold these papers by their means as well as their prayers. They can not be printed without money, and people's eyes can not be opened without them. Therefore, let us all who bear the name of Saint hand over our cash to support them. We, as a Church, can not possibly afford to lose ground. We have gained, and surely will gain, if we are faithful. But all can not say truthfully, "We are faithful," if they treat lightly the word of God. We should be like a light upon a hill, that shineth far and wide. But if we treat lightly the word of God the blessings of God can not rest upon us in full. I remember a branch that was once in flourishing circumstances. I was a member thereof. The Spirit of God was there for a while, in prophecy, tongues, interpretations, healing, etc. Tears were shed for joy at many times, and souls came into the branch by baptism. But did it stay so? Nay, verily. But why not? Men that treated lightly the word of God were elected its president, one whose breath, clothes and face, would look and smell horrid with the tobacco stench, was elected president. The stove and floor were so full of tobacco juice that it took a person of strong nerves to mop the floor; and as women of strong nerves was not always at hand, the weaker ones mopped, and at times were almost overcome. Yet these very tobacco slaves would disfellowship young people for dancing. They wanted young people to repent of a sin and pleasure; but they themselves were not willing to repent, yet they was expected to be, on account of high standing, a pattern to go by.

Where is the branch? Scattered to the four winds, just as Bro. Hiram Bemis prophesied it would, unless they would speedily repent. When a man in this church will not repent of things which he knows are displeasing in God's sight, as is the use of tobacco, dancing as is now common, quick temper, a tyrant at home, a busy body meddling with other peoples affairs when uncalled for, a liar, "a story-stretcher," a Sabbath breaker, sells goods on Sunday needlessly, justifies himself in saying: "We all have our failings," sees a mote in his brother's eye, when a beam is in his own, is not a very good Saint. Any branch that will uphold such a man will not stand the storms that we have to go through. If some will say, "We must take those that are good speakers, and can handle themselves good, that are polite," etc., I answer, May God give such genuine repentance, humbleness of spirit, wisdom from above, knowledge and faith, that we may have something better than "wood hay or stubble." We can not tamper with untempered mortar and be Christ's children. We can not stick to things which we know by the standard church books are displeasing in the sight of God, angels, and good people. May God speed his work and bless his true Israel.

In bonds of love,

JOSEPH LAMPERT.

WILBER, Neb., Aug. 25th.

Dear Herald:—This summer certainly will go upon the page of history as a very dry and hot season. However, generally speaking, the fruit and grain products of this state will be reasonably good. I came to this part of the Lord's vineyard on the 14th inst., and have been active about the Master's business; only missed one evening. Held seven meetings in the Baptist Church, the Teachers Institute being in session for this county there was quite an attendance of teachers at our meetings. Last Sabbath was a busy day with the Saints and friends here, with the mercury dancing at 104° in the shade. At eleven a.m. the Baptist Church was crowded, and the Lord richly blest us with the Spirit while we spoke to the people the word of life. A birthday surprise dinner for Bro. Robert White and Mr. Isaac T. Anthony had been arranged at the house of Bro. White, and about a hundred of the Saints and friends were permitted to partake of the feast of good things. The wives of the surprised had for each a copy of the "Holy Scriptures," and it fell to our lot to make a "flowery little speech" in presenting them. Immediately after dinner we repaired to the Blue River, and in the presence of some two hundred witnesses four were added to the "household of faith."

Rev. G. E. Dye met with a severe accident last Saturday evening in the dislocating of his right ankle. One of the questions now perplexing the Saints in this wide west is, "Where are we to obtain ministers to meet the increasing demand for preaching?" Now assuredly is a golden opportunity to spread and establish the saving truth of the gospel. As people become settled and form themselves into church society, we will experience more hardship in getting the truth before them. One thing, however, I am satisfied of, if we will do that which is right and keep God's law, we need not be without friends. My wife is with me, and somewhat improved. Desirous of being active and useful in Zion's cause, I remain in gospel bonds,

ROBT. M. ELYIN.

MILFORD, Mass., August 15th.

Bro. Joseph Smith:—Since my last letter to the Herald three have been baptized in the Attleboro mission. Bro. John Robbins was one of the number, the ordinance being administered to him last Sunday. I feel glad to have the privilege of reading the Bible and the Voice of Warning which I have with me, although I can not hear the glorious gospel in its fulness as usual on the Sabbath. I have attended service here at the Baptist church, where I listened to earnest preaching, and, as I presume to some that are honest-hearted, and yet they are not being saved. We think that God's Holy Spirit does not accompany the word, or else the church machinery is not right. Jesus left the gifts and blessings for the work of the ministry and the perfecting of the Saints, but they do not have them, say nothing about them. O! how I wish that the light of the everlasting truth might be published to this congregation. I have heard one of our Baptist friends speak of the persecution of their missionaries in Burmah, with the intent of reaching the sympathies and sentiment of the public.

But how about the affairs of innocent people right here in civilized America in this generation that are preaching the gospel and that have been slandered, misrepresented and persecuted even unto death. Are not their work and lives worthy of consideration, even though they are called Saints.

I hope to make an opening here in Milford for some of the ministry. I can not but feel grateful to my Heavenly Father and to the Church of Christ in these times for what it has done for me. This gospel of the kingdom will commend itself to every honest, intelligent man or woman, as its principles will stand upon their merits. Let us take courage in the promise, "I am with you always," and continue the warfare manfully, hoping to gain the fruit of our labor.

With the best wishes for this cause and all of God's Saints, I remain yours for eternal life.

ARTHUR B. PIERCE.

BAINBRIDGE, Ohio, Aug. 11th.

Dear Sister Frances:—I have been impressed for some time to pen a few lines for the "Mothers' Home Column," but feeling my inability, I have deferred it until the present. I am here alone; not one of our faith in this part of the country, and have not had the privilege of meeting with the Saints or hearing the elders for over four years. But I am so glad that the good Spirit is not confined to any one place, but I, unworthy though I be, can have a portion of it, even here, to comfort and cheer, and sometimes to reprove,—for I am so liable to step aside. I am trying to hold on to the "rod of iron." Prejudice runs high here. They say any other ism but Mormonism. I have been trying to enlighten the people somewhat with regard to our claims, standing up for the truth and defending it as best I can in my weakness. It is quite a reproach here to be called a Mormon. That is not our proper name, but I have to bear the reproach all the same, and am doing it cheerfully, and can afford to do it for the light and knowledge I have received of this work. I love it more and more. It is the fulness of the gospel of Christ, restored. Paul says it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth.

I could hardly stay in Bainbridge without the Herald; it brings such words of cheer and comfort, such themes for thought. I am so glad to know this work is onward. May it advance more and more until the honest in heart everywhere may be bathed into the fold of Christ. I have been much interested in reading the "Home Column." Much has been said in it to edify and inspire the Christian's heart to greater diligence in training the young minds. I am glad there is being a greater effort put forth in this direction. It is of vast importance. Impressions made on the mind in childhood are not easily erased; and so much depends upon their home training and culture with regard to their success in this life, and their happiness beyond. I think of the many mothers who are toiling through cares and privation to bring up their little ones. May the Lord give them wisdom and every needed grace to fit them for the responsible position they occupy. I have raised two who have grown to maturity—a son and a daughter. When they were small—six and three years—death entered our dwelling and removed the head of the family. I was left alone to care for those dear ones. I felt my insufficiency if left to myself. I need not attempt to describe the deep feeling of my heart in this sore trial. I sought the Lord in prayer for wisdom, the help needed and grace to endure. I have always found Him a very present help in trial. I tried to teach those little ones, by precept and example, the way they should go. My son has passed away. He died strong in the faith of the gospel, having been baptized some years ago.

I do desire so much to know the will of God concerning me, that I may do it, and be counted worthy a place in the celestial kingdom of our God.

Sister Frances, may the Lord continue to bless you in your good work and labor of love, is my prayer. Please send the Hope to me. I have never seen it, and am ever a learner.

MARMATON, Kan., August 1st.

Bro. Joseph:—I received a letter from my brother Ira, July 26th, of which I will give an extract, with my reply, and ask that it may find a place in the Herald. He says: "I hope you are not preaching the Mormon doctrine yet; I would like very much to see you, but if you are preaching that polygamy doctrine, or miraculous gifts, such as the healing the sick by the imposition of (your apostles') hands, I don't want to hear any of the preaching that tends to such as I have mentioned."

To this I reply. Dear brother Ira, As to your expressed hope concerning my preaching, I have this to say. If preaching the doctrine of Jesus Christ, as taught in the New Testament by his ministry 1800 years ago, and claiming the fulfillment of the prophecies of the old Testament, (which have not yet been fulfilled); and also the doctrine, church organization, and church government, as set forth by Joseph Smith Jr.; and which you can find an account of in the Old and New Testaments, the Book of Mormon, and Book of Doctrine and Covenants; I say, if this is what you are pleased to call "Mormonism," I am still preaching it. But as to that "polygamy doctrine," I say, it is no part of the doctrine of Christ, neither is it any part of the true doctrine of the church of Jesus Christ, which was organized by Joseph Smith Jr., in 1830; neither is it any part of the doctrine of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ, which organization was brought about in 1860, to which I belong, and rejoice in hope, waiting for the appearing of Jesus Christ. But polygamy is a false doctrine of Brigham Young, and others of Utah; made public in Utah in 1852, and taught by them there for the doctrine of Christ, and was taught abroad by them; and finally, in 1876, the revelation they claimed concerning it was placed in their Book of Doctrine and Covenants, and became a tenet of their church doctrine. But now, if you are fair-minded, you are bound to see and admit, that we are not responsible for this false doctrine; and have a right, by virtue of God's law, as contained in the Book of Mormon, page 116, Jacob 2 chap. par. 6; book of Doctrine and Covenants, sec. 109, par. 4, page 330; with also the teaching of Jesus and Paul: yes, I say, we have a right as well as you, to protest against it and teach that it is no part of the doctrine of Jesus Christ, and should not be taught nor practiced. But, laying hands on the sick in the name of Jesus, and praying God to heal them and asking him to forgive their sins is the instruction in the New Testament, Book of Mormon, and book of Doctrine and Covenants. Now if we protest against polygamy because we can not find it to be the true doctrine of Christ, I ask, is it not as virtually right for the church of Christ, (her ministry) to teach and practice the true doctrine of Christ when we find it recorded? and when occasion requires follow the instruction in God's word? If not, why preach the gospel; why call on men to repent; why confess Christ; why baptize, or be baptized; why eat the bread and drink the wine, why organize into congregations and call them the church of Jesus Christ; or in fine, why teach or practice any thing for the true doctrine of Christ? If it is not because we first find it recorded, and in obedience thereto, submit ourselves to do God's will that he may bless us? Will you tell me how it can be otherwise? I hope when you read this you will not say, "I don't want to hear any of your preaching, that tends to such as I have mentioned."

My dear brother, I hope you will never again class the false doctrine (polygamy) with the true doctrine of the Church of Jesus Christ, as taught in the Holy Scriptures, (laying on hands and praying to God to heal the sick), and say you "don't want to hear any such preaching;" for it is the true doctrine of Christ, that will bless and save us. But if you can cast aside a portion of the true, little or much, I fail to see why one church can not have as good a claim as another, that they are the church of Christ. I hope you will learn after a while that we want no more than the true doctrine of Christ (although you may be satisfied with less), and to be saved. Would it not be more noble to live by every command Christ gave, and be saved also? Any man ought to decide and say for truth, even if it causes me to be called a Mormon.

In bonds,

L. H. EZZELL.

THE ROCK; THE FOUNDATION; AND THE BUILDING.

THE FOUNDATION.

THE wise man laid the foundation on a rock. Can man be wiser than Christ? He will also lay the foundation of his building, his temple, his church, on a rock—on the rock of divine truth, i. e. the "gospel of the kingdom of God"—revealed truth. What forms the foundation, the beginning of his church? Whom did Christ first put in the church? Let Paul answer: "First, apostles, secondarily, prophets." 1 Cor. 12:28. "Now, therefore, ye are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow citizens with the Saints, and of the household of God; and are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone." Eph. 2:19, 20. Now while the apostles and prophets are called "the foundation" (a) they are parts of the building, which is composed of "stones" it seems. "Ye also, as lively stones, are built up a spiritual house, an holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God by Jesus Christ." 1 Pet. 2:5. It is therefore a stone house. The first stones laid were the apostles and prophets, Christ being included as a chief corner, in order to give form and symmetry to the building. A corner stone, especially a "chief corner stone" is used to square, and plumb, and level the building by, and therefore Christ is very properly represented as filling that position to the church. It is appropriate that he should be found as "the chief corner stone" among the apostles and prophets, being an apostle himself, (Heb. 3:1), and a prophet, (Luke 24:19; John 7:40). Now upon this foundation the whole building soon was reared and completed with Christ as the head of the corner.

Now, were the apostles built upon the rock of divine truth,—"truth revealed by the Holy Spirit?" Were they called by revelation through the Spirit to be apostles? 1. Jesus received the Spirit without measure. 2. He says he came from heaven to do his Father's will, not his own. 3. In doing that will he called and ordained men, whom the Spirit revealed to him as being called of God. He spake the words of God; he performed the works of God; all that he said and did were what he was inspired to say and do by the Holy Ghost. That Paul and Barnabas were called to the apostleship by revelation is clearly stated in Acts 13:1-3. Timothy was supposed to be an apostle—an evangelist, at least. He received his gift by prophecy, and by the laying on of hands of the presbytery. 1 Tim. 4:14. Paul considered that himself and Timothy were called by revelation. 2 Tim. 1:9.

(a) [We do not understand the passage, (Ephesians 2:20), to mean that the "apostles and prophets" were the foundation, but that the foundation referred to by Paul was the same foundation upon which the apostles and prophets had builded their work; the same that had been laid by the Infinite One, the one upon which the apostles and prophets of to-day may build and trust forevermore. "And are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone." Emphatically the apostles' foundation.—Ed.]

Prophets were made such by the revelations of the Spirit given to them, and declared by them, either in writing or orally. "God, who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in times past unto the fathers by the prophets, hath in these last days spoken unto us by his son," said Paul to the Hebrews. But as there were prophets in the church after Christ had gone to heaven, God spoke by them also, as in the case of the Old Testament prophets.

In fact, prophets are necessary in the church in every age, when God has anything to reveal; as, for instance, if he desires men to be apostles, seventies, elders, bishops, teachers, deacons, &c., in the church, or wants men to do any especial service to the church. What his divine will is, we can only know as he reveals it; and he has declared to us what the agency is that he will use; for Amos says, "Surely, the Lord God will do nothing but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets." So, to receive "present truth," or an understanding of God's will, there must be prophets in the church now, as much so as at any past time. With the gospel of the kingdom being declared again, or the rock of divine truth—"truth revealed by the Holy Spirit," being again planted, or rather uncovered from the rubbish of ages which had obscured and hidden it—the Lord has placed upon that rock, the old time foundation viz.: apostles and prophets, and as before, the chief corner stone, Christ himself; and above the foundation, or built on it, as it in turn is built upon the rock, is seen the whole building, or the church complete.

THE BUILDING—THE TEMPLE.

The Church of Christ is represented by the figure of a body, also a building, temple, and house, because it is an organization, an organized government with a head and executive authority. It has members and laws to govern their action. It is not a building composed of literal brick, stone, wood, iron or some other material such as is commonly used in building houses; nor is it a body of flesh and bones, although the members of the body are human beings. It is a real, but "spiritual body," a "spiritual house." Either figure most clearly establishes the fact that the church is an organization, and has a form, and is not therefore composed of true believers in Christ found in all the various churches in the world, and not any one church as an organization is the Church of Christ, as some declare. But the fact of the church being a body and having members who have different offices, with a head to that body which of course directs the movements of the body, clearly shows it to be an organization. But the fact that God is a God of order, and system as is seen in all His works, is an evidence that the church would not be without form and order. The same God who made the sun, moon and stars, the trees and flowers and grain, men and beasts and birds and all animate creation also formed the church. The same God who made man and placed the members of his body in their proper place and gave them their different offices or functions, also placed the members of Christ's body—the church, "every one of them as it pleased Him." And he gave the body its form, and to its various members their respective work. Now, says Paul to the Corinthians, "Ye are the body of Christ and members in particular. And God hath set some in the church, first Apostles, secondarily Prophets, thirdly Teachers, after that miracles, then gifts of healings, helps, governments, diversities of tongues."

"Are all Apostles?" he asks; we answer, No; and why not? Paul answers himself, "The body is not one member, but many," and because "all the members have not the same office." If the whole human body were an eye, where would be the faculty of hearing? the sense of smelling, tasting, or the power to walk, talk, or feel? It could not be a body, and have but one member of the body. All, therefore, are not Apostles; nor are all Prophets; nor are all Teachers, nor any other one office or gift. "There are many members, yet one body." The members have different forms, different names and different uses, yet they all belong to, form a part of, and are essential to the general good of the whole body. God who created them, is infinitely wise and would therefore create nothing in vain. Some members may be more necessary to the general good of the body than some others; and the body would suffer a greater loss, more inconvenience, and the general good of the body would be more affected, and perhaps the existence of the body more seriously threatened and endangered by the removal or destruction of some members more than with some others. Yet if any member is hurtful or even useless to the system or body, it would never have been placed in the body by the Creator. Nay; the least esteemed member of the body is important in its own place and sphere, and is really more important in that sphere than any other member of the body can be, because no other member can fill its place or do its work, each having its own work to do; and when performing its legitimate work, the work designed for it by the Creator, then the whole body is edified, benefitted and blessed. The ear can not be justified in saying to the tongue, "Because you can not hear, as I do, therefore you are of no use;" for the tongue might retort and say: "Neither are you any good, for you can not talk." The hands can not say to the feet: "The body does not need you; I handle tools and hold the plow, and carry messages and do all sort of work;" but the feet would say, "You would do very little handling, very little work of any kind without my aid to carry you about to and from your workshop, and while you hold the plow handles; nay you depend on me;" and the hands could reply: "If I did not work and earn food and carry it to the mouth, you would soon perish." "Yes," the mouth replies, "if I do not receive your food, but shut my teeth, and refuse to take it, you would perish as well as the feet." "And if I refuse to digest the food, even if you did receive it, friend mouth," says the stomach, "you would soon perish too." "Yes," says the heart, and the lungs, and the liver, and the kidneys, "we are all dependent on one another, and it is foolish to talk about doing without each other." Some of our members are more important than others; some are absolutely essential to the very existence of the body, as the internal organs particularly, and we might live without legs or even arms, eyes and ears; and we might lose in connection with these, the sense of smelling, and talking; but a miserable life it would be, and a poor, helpless, and almost worthless body we would be; a burden to others, and a burden only; receiving good, but unable to return the slightest favor. Such a useless body—if such it could be truly called—had far better be dead than alive. In like manner we may view the "body of Christ." Has it lost its members; the members that God placed in it eighteen centuries ago? Where are the Apostles? Did not God place them in the body? Truth says, Yes. Where are the Prophets? Where are the Teachers? Where the gift of miracles, the gift of healing, the helps, the governments; the diversities of tongues—where are they? Where are the gifts of prophecy, discerning of spirits, and the interpretation of tongues? Sectarianism replies,—“All gone; done away with; no longer needed. Nothing left but faith and wisdom and knowledge.”

But the devils have a faith, and “the children of this world are wiser in their day and generation than the children of (the so-called) light. And knowledge of God and Christ and scriptural things, can only come by revelation, and that is done away also in these days. But suppose faith and wisdom and knowledge remain, are they “members” of the body, or are they rather experiences, gifts and faculties enjoyed by the “members?” And suppose they are members, how many are enumerated in 1 Cor. 12th chapter? Apostles, prophets, teachers, miracles, healings, helps, governments, diversities of tongues, and before this, faith, wisdom, knowledge, discerning of spirits, interpretation of tongues; (we refer not to what Paul speaks of elsewhere, but in this one chapter); in all thirteen, and three are said to remain; fully three fourths are lost. What sort of a body would it be if three-fourths of its members were destroyed! But do these three gifts remain in the churches of Christendom? We reply, they do not; for the reason that they are gifts of the Holy Spirit, and it is a fact that those who claim to have the most faith, and the best kind of faith, and the most wisdom, and the most knowledges are churches which deny the operation, manifestation, or work of the Holy Spirit separate from the written word. They do not believe in gifts of the Holy Spirit in the sense that they are spoken of in the New Testament, and as they were experienced by the early church. “We have been there,” as a common saying is, and know whereof we speak.

The faith Paul speaks of is not the faith that comes by hearing the gospel, and which is exercised by thousands who never have obeyed the gospel; but it is the “gift” of faith—one of the gifts of the Spirit, as is also the “wisdom” and the “knowledge” which they claim. Paul says, “For to one is given by the Spirit the word of wisdom; to another the word of knowledge by the same Spirit, to another faith by the same Spirit.” If these parties, therefore, have any faith, or wisdom, or knowledge, not received by the direct agency of the Holy Spirit, it is only such faith, and wisdom and knowledge that any body can get by reading the Bible, and is the result simply of exercising their thinking and reasoning faculties which they enjoy in common with mankind in general, and not as faculties or powers received from God because they have professed faith in Christ to the extent of dipping one another in water to follow a former day form, without any special authority from heaven, however, for their work of mutual plungings.

Paul informs us elsewhere of other members of the body of Christ, for he writes about evangelists, pastors, Elders, bishops, and deacons. “Ah!” says some, “we are all right then, for we have evangelists, even if we do not have apostles, and prophets, and many others of the members that God placed in the church formerly; yes, we have evangelists, and are all right so far.” That depends on what an evangelist is. “Well, an evangelist is one who travels continually and preaches the gospel.” Granted. But whether your evangelist preaches the gospel, or a gospel, of course we can not determine as yet till we know what he preaches; but from what we have seen and heard we think most of them preach the middle of the gospel, measurably correct, but leave off both ends, and therefore it is too short to fill that measure called the fullness of the gospel. Christ’s death, burial and resurrection are gospel facts; but they are not all of the gospel, by a good deal. But we may look at that at another time, in another form. It is good to have evangelists to preach the gospel, that is if they preach the gospel—if they preach all of it, instead of a few facts only.

Well; we have pastors, says many. Granted; there are various kinds of sheep, and many different owners of sheep. There are shepherds, of course, hired at various salaries to watch over the sheep, and to see they are properly f—fleeced. Of course there are many pastors, but the folds of the sheep are different, and the pastures furnish variety of food; but how much of it is the “sincere milk of the word,” the word of God in purity, and fidelity, the judgment day must reveal.

Whether Christ will recognize the sheep that these pastors rule is dependent on this consideration, that they heard the voice of the Good Shepherd. “My sheep” he says, “hear my voice.” That voice must be heard to-day, either in his revealed and written word, or by the administration of angels, or by the mouth of prophets, seers, and revelators.

But we don’t want anything but the written word, say our friends. All right; as you have placed yourselves under that rule, you will discover that, in the end, you will be judged by the things written in the books. If the written word is your rule of faith and practice, then do not be surprised when you are weighed in that balance. We judge you not. Christ’s word shall judge you in the last day.

Well; we have elders. Good! We hope a Paul and a Barnabas ordained them in every city, or if not, that a Titus did the work by command of a Paul, i. e. an apostle of the Lord Jesus. We hope the elders will be found holding fast the faithful word as he hath been taught, that he may be able by sound doctrine both to exhort and to convince the gainsayers. We hope the elders will not give heed to Jewish fables and commandments of men that turn from the truth.

We have bishops. Yes; some of you have; a sort of substitute for apostles. Many of you have not any Bishops, and why not, as you all have equal authority to make them? You can start the machinery as Wesley did, though not a bishop himself. A stream can rise higher than its fountain, if forced.

Well; we have deacons, too. Yes; that is good; let them study well Paul’s teaching concerning deacons, and then we hope they will have “great boldness in the faith which is in Christ Jesus.” Now if these evangelists, pastors, elders, bishops, and deacons, are members of the body of Christ, it will be all right. But there are several points yet to be considered. Christ’s church has but one name, while these men represent churches of various names. Christ’s church had but one faith, and one doctrine; but these men represent various and conflicting faiths, and much that is clearly the doctrine of men. Timothy, an evangelist, if no more, received his authority by the gift of prophecy, and by the laying on of the hands of the presbytery. Do these evangelists of the presbytery receive their call and ordination that way? Ah! too much of the calls to the bishopric, the eldership, the pastorship and deaconship, have a metallic ring, and are so greasy, (on the back at least), that they appear earthly.

But what is the “temple,” the building, that Jesus built? Ah! ’tis his body; his church with all the members in their proper place; every stone “lively” and in its legitimate place. Being “built on the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone; in whom all the building fitly framed together groweth unto an holy temple in the Lord. In whom ye also are builded together for an habitation of God through the Spirit.”—Eph. 2:20-22.

Every office, every gift, every principle, every ordinance, every law, and every experience that characterized the church of Christ, or which composed the body of Christ, the habitation of God, the temple of the Holy Ghost, must be found to-day, and then placed on the rock of divine truth, or "truth revealed by the Holy Spirit," starting with apostles and prophets as a foundation or commencement, the walls and windows and doors and flooring and ceiling and roof and the various apartments will the house of God appear. The Holy Spirit abiding in the body, will give it life and energy and successful operation, and continual usefulness. Without that Spirit it will die, as it once did. The church being the temple of the Holy Ghost," the habitation of God, through the Spirit, that Spirit will dwell in the house; but it will not dwell in an unholy temple.

A church that is defiled with the precepts of men, the traditions and commandments of men, or the doctrines of devils, can not be "a habitation of God through the Spirit" no more than the body of a Saint (so-called) is fit for the Spirit of God to dwell in if defiled by strong drink, tobacco, or anything that God has said is not good for the body.

There is but one rock; but one foundation; but one building; but one builder; and but one occupant of the building. God laid the "rock" in its place by the power of his Spirit, and upon that rock Christ has built his church, and the gates of hell can not prevail against the rock of divine truth revealed through the Holy Spirit; nor can they prevail against the church while it remains the church of Christ. What is the rock? Revealed truth. Where is truth revealed, to be found? In the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Book of Doctrine and Covenants. Is all that which is called truth and that has been revealed in the past, the rock on which we now build? No; but that which is called "present truth." And what is "present truth?" All truth not of a local character; but that which is general in its character, and universal in its application, such as the gospel of the kingdom of God; "the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of the Lord Jesus Christ." Is not truth of a local character, or the commandments of God of a local nature binding on us? Yes; such as were given as commandments to us certainly are binding; for they are particularly "present truth." What do you mean by local truth or local commandments? Such as were evidently designed to be accomplished by another people, or in another age; as, for instance, the command of God to Abram to leave his home and friends and go to a strange land. What God required of certain men to do, and it was done by them, or what may in the future be required of certain individuals, is not "present truth" in which the church as a body is to be established to-day.

We are to live by what proceedeth from the mouth of God. And who may speak the word of God? As law to the whole body, or revelations to the church, it must come through him who is prophet, seer and revelator to the church.

Can no one else speak in the name of the Lord? Yes; the Lord said to Orson Hyde and others. * * * "And behold, and lo, this is an ensample unto all those who were ordained unto this priesthood, whose mission is appointed unto them to go forth; and this is the ensample unto them, that they shall speak as they are moved upon by the Holy Ghost; and whatsoever they shall speak when moved upon by the Holy Ghost, shall be scripture; shall be the will of the Lord; shall be the mind of the Lord; shall be the word of the Lord; shall be the voice of the Lord, and the power of God unto salvation."—Doc. and Cov. 68:1. As this is the promise of God, "unto all faithful elders," it of course follows that if what they speak when moved upon by the Holy Ghost is scripture, the will, the mind, the word, the voice of the Lord, and the power of God unto salvation, then it is truth revealed from heaven, and hence a part of the rock on which the church is built, namely, revelation as a principle, and the truth revealed as the fact. The ministry has been preaching for fifty years at least, that there were apostles and prophets in the church to-day; yet how much are their words respected even by the church, when delivered in the name of the Lord, when compared with what the word of the Lord through Peter or Paul or John is? Now; opinion on any subject that all are entitled to speak upon is of equal weight among all. But opinion concerning what, in the nature of the case, Joseph or his counselors in their place should understand better than others, is of more value and weight than others. An apostle's opinion of matters pertaining to his calling is of more value and force than the opinion of those not so situated. But what is spoken by the power of the Holy Ghost is not opinion; it is scripture, the will, mind, word, and voice of the Lord.

I understand that the apostles of old were likewise prophets. This can not be gainsaid. I understand that the chief prophets in the church, (called by us the First Presidency) are also apostles, and can do Apostles' work if occasion requires. The Twelve were Apostles only, till they received the baptism of the Holy Ghost. They then received the gift of prophecy, and were then apostles and prophets, and of course they could not receive the prophetic calling before they received the gift of the Holy Ghost, which they obtained on the day of Pentecost. The necessities of the case, or the nature of the work, demanded a localized head, a centralization of some of the apostles, and out of the necessity of a supervising head, grew the First Presidency composed of three Apostles—Peter, James, and John. And as the office of the others was to go into all the world and preach the gospel, or to open the door of the kingdom, the number would of necessity be twelve. We have but a meagre history of the work of the former day church, but we must either take the ground that our latter day organization is in harmony with that of the first century, or else question the inspiration of the prophet Joseph; and when we have once begun doubting on the subject of Church organization, can we put the brakes down at the precise spot where a stop should be made? It would need inspiration to determine that, and who shall decide whether the higher or new inspiration is infalible or not! That would have to be done by a higher inspiration still, and that by a higher still, and so on ad infinitum. To say that we must follow the New Testament course in the matter of Church organization, requires the possession of all the records or history of the early church, which no one can prove that we have got. The originals of what we have were not in existence in the days of Origen; and we have evidence that we have not got all that was written; and how much more has been lost, Deity alone knows. Accepting the principle of revelation to-day, we must accept what is revealed that does not squarely clash with what has been heretofore revealed. It will not do to say that we know that what has been found written in the Bible is infallibly correct; for we could not know it short of a revelation from God; and if any one knows by that rule that we have a full and correct history of the doings of the early church, we would be glad to have some of that class tell us whether we are in harmony with that church in its organization or not. Of course, we hold the right, and should exercise it, to criticize the channels of inspiration, and the facts revealed, as others do Joseph's claim and his work. But while waiting for the ancient records and the revising inspiration, and not finding any conflict between our church organization and that of Paul's day, we conclude that, being built on the foundation of apostles and prophets, (two offices in one person), and with them resting on the rock of revealed truth, we are the Church of Christ to-day, and as much so as that which we read of in the New Testament. So for one, I am satisfied with the "rock," with the "foundation," and with the "building."

AYATONU, Rairoa, Paumotu, February 27th, 1886.

SERMON BY ELDER HIRAM RATHBUN,

OF LANSING, MICHIGAN,

Delivered at the Saints' Chapel, Lamoni, Iowa,
April 12th, 1886.

[Reported for the Herald and prepared by the Editor].

"AND they said, Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ." This is a part of the thirtieth verse of the sixteenth chapter of the Acts of the Apostles.

The text presents for our consideration for a few moments the Lord Jesus Christ as the proper object of our faith—our belief. "And they said, Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ." There must be some reason why the apostle presents Christ, the Lord, as the proper object of our faith. In the first place we remark, that, upon his advent into this world it pleased the Father to give him a very admirable and worthy name. The Father named his own son. He commissioned the angel whom he sent to the maiden, who said "his name shall be called Jesus, and he shall save his people from their sins." In another place it is said, "Unto you is born this day, in the house of David, a Savior, who is Christ the Lord." This was from the embassy of angels at another time. In these two quotations we have the full name of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, coming down from heaven, given to the Son of God by the angels. And the apostle Paul, speaking to the Phillipians with reference to his name, says: "To him is given a name which is above every name in heaven; and every knee shall bow, and every tongue shall confess that he is Lord to the glory of God the Father."

We are aware that Mr. Graves of Indiana, in his work entitled "The sixteen crucified Saviors," goes back upon this expression of the apostle Paul and says, that every man and woman knows this is false, and will never come to pass, when it is said that every tongue shall confess that he is Lord, to the glory of God the Father. While we comprehend that the good Lord in his providence has brought it about that it is absolutely true to-day, we will simply refer to a few facts that you know are insurmountable and stubborn in argument and in logic,—and we may refer to some simple facts that are very familiar to every individual in proof of the fulfillment of this text that we have referred to, that "every tongue shall confess that Jesus is Lord, to the glory of God the Father." It is a fact that all civilized nations enter into contract with each other; and all persons, in every civilized nation, who do this, if it be merely a transfer of real estate from one to the other, as a deed, or a mortgage, or any other instrument or article of writing, that transfer is of no worth to any individual, but is entirely void, unless it has a date. What does a date mean? In Latin, anno domini, in English, year of our Lord. In this transfer the individual must go before a Justice of the Peace, a Notary Public, or some other person in authority, before whom the individual must acknowledge and subscribe his name to that acknowledgement, and then sign or date that "the year of our Lord." In it is this year, "one thousand eight hundred and eighty six." There is not a skeptic in the land, there is not an infidel in America, that would accept from me a transfer of real estate, however nice and full I might make it, and even sign my name to it, unless it was dated; and in that date is the acknowledgement of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, as being Lord. And in this acknowledgement it is not for the honor and glory of the individual; but the good Lord in his infinite providences, his wonderful providences among the nations of the globe, has brought that fact around, that everywhere, every individual, in the transaction of business, must date their contracts, must date their articles of agreement, even down to the receipt given from one to the other. If it is not dated, it is of no value. And in that date is an acknowledgment that Jesus is the Lord, to the glory of God the Father. In view of the fact, then, that this wonderful heaven-born name which the Father has given unto him, (and God in his own providence has brought it about so that it must be acknowledged by every tongue), they must acknowledge that he is Lord. We comprehend in view of this consideration that he becomes an object worthy of our consideration; worthy of our belief; worthy of our trust; and worthy of our confidence.

And again we remark, in the second place, that he is infinite in his wisdom, which renders him again the proper object of our faith. In the second chapter of the Savior's gospel by Saint John, about the 24th and 25th verses, it is said of Jesus that he did not commit himself—he knew all men. And again that "he knew what was in man." In the sixteenth chapter of the same gospel the disciples stated that they were sure that he knew all things, and needed not that any man should teach him. Again, the apostle in his letter to the Colossians says that "in him are hidden all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge." This is a very remarkable expression, if you will only stop to think about it. In him are hidden not only a treasure, but treasures of wisdom; and not only treasures of wisdom, but treasures of knowledge; not only treasures of wisdom and knowledge, but "all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge" are hidden in him. That is, exclusively in him as the embodiment or manifestation of infinite wisdom. In view, we remark then, of the infinitude of his wisdom, he is too wise to possibly err in the interests—the great interests—of the human race, or in devising for the interests of the human race, or for the interest of any individual of the race. Infinite in wisdom, he is the being upon whom we may rely to devise for the interests of the entire race; for the interests of every nation of the race; for the interests of every individual of the race. Being infinite in wisdom it would be impossible for him to err in devising. In view of this consideration, we remark that he is presented as the proper object of our faith.

And again we remark, that he is the proper object of our faith because he is infinite in power—omnipotent in power. This is manifested not only in healing the sick and casting out devils and exercising power over unseen agencies as we heard yesterday, but also in raising the dead. You remember that in the eighteenth chapter of the gospel by Saint John, he gives a history of the arrest of Jesus who inquired of them, and said, "Whom seek ye? They replied, "Jesus of Nazareth." He responded, "I am he." And the very moment these words dropped from his sacred lips, they all—those who had come out with swords and staves against him—they all "fell back" flat on the ground. Such power was in him, that when he manifested that power and spoke the words, "I am he," they all fell backward." They ought to have been convinced then; but having eyes they saw not; and having ears they heard not, and hearts, as we are told, but they understood not; and hence they arose to again attempt to arrest him. But it was not until he seemingly gave consent, that it was possible for them to arrest him. Well, when he was taken, you know that Peter drew out his sword, and smote off the ear of Malchus, and Jesus picked it up and put it on again, and told Peter to put up his sword. Matthew tells us he said, "Could not I ask the Father and he would give me twelve legions of angels?" Did you ever think of the power of an angel? You remember when the Assyrian army, as we read in the Old Testament Scriptures, came against the children of Israel. The Lord sent down an angel in the night time while they were encamped against them, and that angel in one night, in a very short time in one night, slew a hundred and eighty-five thousand of the chief men in the Assyrian army. Jesus says that he had at his command not only twelve legions of angels, but "more than twelve legions of angels." How many were a legion? Well, some authors differ from this, but the best authors and the nicest critics tell us that six thousand six hundred and sixty-six were a Roman legion. Compute if you please, the number. Multiply one hundred and eighty-five thousand by one legion, and then multiply the product by twelve legions, and you will have a number that will equal all the inhabitants, not only of this entire globe, but about fourteen globes like this, all put together. And he tells us that he had at his command over twelve legions of angels.

We are informed that "In the beginning was the word, and the word was with God, and the word was God. * * * The word was made flesh and dwelt among us," referring to the Son of God. "All things were made by him; and without him was not anything made that was made." In the first chapter of Colossians the apostle Paul says, "For by him were all things created that are in heaven and in earth." That would include all these mighty angels. "By him were all things created that are in heaven and in earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers; all things were created by him and for him. And he is before all things, and by him all things consist." By the direct energy of his power all things, whether in heaven or in earth, consist. And the apostle Paul in his letter to the learned Hebrews, informs them that he was the maker of "the worlds." Heb. 1:2. Hence you discover that his omnipotent power is beyond the possible conception of mankind. It is impossible for the human mind to grasp or take in the omnipotent power of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. No wonder, then, that he is presented in the scriptures as worthy of our faith. No wonder that the apostle says, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ."

In connection with this thought, we remark that he is infinite in love. It is said in one chapter of the letter by Saint John, that "God is love." We have heard the vengeance of God spoken of sometimes, that it was an irresistible tide, impossible to overcome, and overwhelming against every individual that he was not pleased with. But it is nowhere recorded in this bible that God is vengeance. It is nowhere recorded in this bible, in regard to any of the attributes in the abstract, as we have the word used when it is said that "God is love." And in the infinitude of his love, in the greatness and heartiness of his love, "He so loved the world that he gave his only begotten son, that whosoever believeth in Him might not perish, but have everlasting life." Hence, in his mission from his Father to earth, he became the embodiment of the Father's love. And if the expression is applicable in any sense whatever, we are more inclined to think that it is in regard to the love of God manifested in giving his Son Jesus Christ for the redemption of the human race. And if there is to be an irresistible, overwhelming tide in any one of his attributes, it should be the love of God manifested in the Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. Hence, "God commends his love to usward, in that while we were yet sinners, in due time Christ died for the ungodly." While we were fighting his name; while we were imbuing our hands in his life-blood, so to speak, he poured out his life, poured out his blood, laid down his life, that through his sore death we might have life, and have it more abundantly. We remark that the infinitude of God's love has been manifested in the Lord and Savior Jesus Christ; so that he is the embodiment of the divine love toward the children of men. And it is said in regard to this very feeling upon the part of God, "He that spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all, how shall he not with him also freely give us all things." If he would cut asunder the strongest cord in the great bosom of the Creator, and deliver up his only begotten son for the human race, how is it possible that he would not give us any gift that we might need, under any circumstance, or in any emergency! The infinitude of the love of our Lord Jesus Christ would lead him, in the infinitude of his wisdom, to devise for the best interests of the human race, and use the omnipotence of his power to secure those interests of the human race, not only for time, but all through the cycles of a never-ending eternity; so that, indeed, he may be presented as the proper object of our faith. Don't you begin to feel in your hearts that you would like to believe in such a Jesus as this? such a Christ as this? Infinite in wisdom, omnipotent in power, infinite in love. And in connection with this thought we are glad to say, also, that in each and every respect we have referred to, there is no variableness nor shadow of turning. He is the same yesterday, to-day and forever. What He was to the Hebrew children in the fiery furnace; what He was to Daniel in the den of lions; what he was while here upon earth healing the sick, casting out devils, and raising the dead, He has promised to be to us, as He is unchangeable, the same yesterday, to-day and forever, so that we may rely upon Him, and depend upon Him. Hence, in our gathering to-gether in our conference meetings we see the wisdom, yes, we see it is binding upon us to acknowledge ourselves as finite, and call upon God to give us wisdom, to give us understanding, to direct us in our deliberations, by the divine inspiration. If any man lack wisdom, if he ask of God, he will give him, and give him liberally. And hence we may approach him and find wisdom, and find grace and strength and all needful blessings for both life and godliness during our earthly pilgrimage, but especially in our necessities and emergencies.

Jesus Christ is the proper object of our faith, and this faith is inseparably connected with obedience; for He is no more the proper object of our faith, than He is the proper object of our obedience to all His requirements, to all His mandates whatever they may be. Hence the apostle in speaking upon this matter says:—"With the heart man believeth unto righteousness." You discover that in this expression righteousness and belief are inseparably connected. "With the heart man believeth unto righteousness." It is true that an individual may say, "I believe," and may say, "I have faith." The apostle James says that the devils also believe, and tremble. "But we will have you know! O man, that faith without works is dead. Show me thy faith without thy works, and I will show you my faith by my works; for as the body without the spirit is dead, so faith without works is dead." Hence you discover that the kind of faith in the Lord Jesus Christ that is acceptable to God and profitable to us, is inseparably connected with obedience; with righteousness; with good works.

Again we remark, that he is the proper object of our love, our affections, because it is said as set forth yesterday in the afternoon, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, with all thy soul, with all thy mind, with all thy strength." But while it is said, or intimated here, that he would be the proper object of our love, we remark also that our love towards God in the person of Jesus Christ is inseparably connected again with obedience, with the observance of all the requirements that Jesus has given to us. For while it is said "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, with all thy mind, and with all thy strength," it is also said by Jesus, "He that hath my commandments and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me." And again, in one of his epistles John says, "This is love, that ye keep his commandments." Here you discover that our love to God is inseparably connected with our obedience; for he has given his commandments for our observance; and it will not do for us even to get down on our knees and say, Lord, Lord, and expect simply thereby to enter into the kingdom of God. For "not every one that saith unto me Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of God; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven." Hence we remark, love towards God and obedience are inseparably connected, precisely the same as faith and obedience are inseparably connected. The apostle Paul, the chief apostle of the Gentiles, was pleased to formulate the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ and give us the necessary requirements and mandates of our Lord for our obedience, to bring us into favor with God and to become sons and daughters of the Lord Almighty. And in addition to this; while it belonged to the apostle Paul, the chief apostle of the Gentiles, to formulate and give us that perfect gospel that would bring us, by our obedience to the same, into favor with God, and make us sons and daughters of the Lord Almighty, it seemed to belong to the apostle Peter, chief apostle of the Jews, to further formulate and give us additional requirements for our observance in order to the full development and making up of our love and faith in our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. And he says, "Add to your faith virtue, and to virtue knowledge; and to knowledge temperance; and to temperance patience; and to patience godliness; and to godliness brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness charity." Charity you know is the bond of perfection. "If these things be in you, and abound, they make you that ye shall neither be barren nor unfruitful, but always abounding in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. But he that lacketh these things is blind, and can not see afar off, and has forgotten that he was purged from his old sins; wherefore the rather, brethren, give diligence to make your calling and election sure; for if ye do these things, ye shall never fall, for so an entrance shall be administered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ."

Whereas, in regard to this time of entering into glory, it is said: "The Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven, with all his mighty angels, taking vengeance upon them that know not God, and obey not the gospel"—that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ. But again; "If the word spoken by angels was steadfast, and every transgression and every disobedience received a just recompense of reward, how shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation," provided for us in the person of Jesus Christ by obedience to his requirements, as he expressed it just before his ascension into heaven, after his death and resurrection, while the scars of Galgotha were still fresh upon his sacred person! Only hear him in that very sacred hour: "Go teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you." And finally, "If you know these things, happy are you if you do them." May God bless these remarks for the good of each, and that for his name's sake. Amen.

MAY SEVENTIES PRESIDE.

THIS subject has agitated the minds of the Saints to a considerable degree at times. Sometimes it apparently dies, but is again revived, and it may not be amiss to offer a few thoughts just now.

The Lord said in 1841, "The difference between this quorum and the quorum of Elders is, that one is to travel continually and the other is to preside over the churches from time to time; the one has the responsibility of presiding from time to time, and the other has no responsibility ty of presiding, saith the Lord your God."

Upon the authority of this passage is based the claim made by some that it is improper, and contrary to the organic law of the church for a Seventy to preside under any circumstances. This is correct or else this passage is to be understood in a limited sense. Which? Evidently the latter; for in the same passage (D. C. 107: 44) it is said: "I give unto you Joseph Young, Josiah Butterfield, Daniel Miles, Henry Herriman, Zera Pulsipher, Levi Hancock, James Foster to preside over the quorum of Seventies." And again: "It is according to the vision, showing the order of the Seventy, that they should have seven presidents to preside over them, chosen out of the number of the Seventy."—D. C. 104: 43.

These passages show plainly that the saying, "no responsibility of presiding," is to be understood in a limited sense, and that the right and authority to preside is vested in the Seventy. In what sense, then, have they no responsibility of presiding? "Over the churches," certainly; for that is the subject under consideration in the passage referred to.

The churches here referred to are, no doubt, branch organizations; for such a division of territory as a district was not referred to in revelation to the church until 1873, and the mission not until 1882, when these divisions, first made for convenience, were sanctioned by the Lord.

Then we have these two points clear: first, in the Seventy is vested the authority to preside; second, he has no responsibility of presiding over branches. Why? The reason is evident, it is not because he has not the authority, but, having been called to travel in all the world, a local charge would hinder him in his missionary work.

If a Seventy holds no authority to preside, he evidently does not belong to the Melchisedek priesthood; for it is written: "The Melchisedek priesthood holds the right of presidency. D. C. 104: 3. To what priesthood does he then belong? The question not being settled by this passage as to whether a Seventy should preside over a district or mission, we are left to decide it by circumstances and the duties of his calling as revealed in the organic law. I would maintain that a Seventy has the authority to preside over a district. Legal ordination confers authority, but I have yet to learn that it ever removes authority. If, then, an "Elder" possesses authority to preside, an additional ordination to the office of Seventy will increase his responsibility, but does not remove any authority which he before possessed. It then legitimately follows, that, if an Elder is authorized to preside, a Seventy is also so authorized. But whether it is the best policy for a Seventy to preside over a district or not, is another question.

It is the opinion of the writer that it is better, as a rule, that he should not so preside. The district is a union of branches, and is local in its character; consequently it comes under the head of the work over which he has no responsibility, and may interfere with his ministry. However, if it does not so interfere, and the district thinks it will best serve its interest for him to preside, I see no reason why he should not. He has the authority, can accomplish good in so doing, and his other work is not compromised thereby.

It is well, though, for us to honor those who have this responsibility, (Elders.—Ed.), if the cause can be as well served thereby; or where there is a High Priest qualified for the position, and it is practicable, he should not be ignored. The duties of a High Priest and Elder are similar, as will be seen by reference to D. C. 104: 5, 6. "High Priests after the order of the Melchisedek priesthood, have a right to officiate in their own standing, under the direction of the presidency, in administering spiritual things, and also in the office of an elder, priest, (of the Levitical order), teacher, deacon and member. An elder has a right to officiate in his stead when the High Priest is not present."

Local presidency, then, belongs of right to the High Priest and Elder. But who shall preside over missions? It will be conceded without argument that the twelve Apostles should, under the direction of the presidency, have charge of the missionary field; taking the active oversight thereof, and directing the laborers therein. But in the absence of the Apostle, who shall preside? The High Priest, or Elder? If so, by what authority? We have found that a High Priest may officiate in his own standing, also in the standing of an Elder, Priest, Teacher, Deacon, or member, and the Elder may officiate in these callings in his stead. But is it anywhere said that they may act in the stead of an Apostle? We do not now remember of such a passage. Who then should act in the stead of an apostle in his absence? Evidently those who possess similar authority, and upon whom like responsibility rests. Who are they? Let us see:—"The Twelve are a traveling, presiding high council, to officiate in the name of the Lord, under the direction of the presidency of the church, agreeably to the institution of heaven, to build up the church and regulate all the affairs of the same, in all nations; first unto the Gentiles, and secondly unto the Jews."—D. C. 104: 12. And "The Seventy are to act in the name of the Lord, under the direction of the Twelve, or the traveling high council, in building up the church, and regulating all the affairs of the same in all nations; first unto the Gentiles and then unto the Jews." Ibid. 104: 13. What, then, is the calling of an Apostle? To "build up the church and regulate the affairs of the same in all nations." What is the calling of a Seventy? To build up the church and regulate the affairs of the same in all nations.

Where, then, is the difference? Only in this:—the Twelve are a presiding council; the Seventy are not. Mark this, it is not speaking of individuals, but of the quorums. The Twelve are, by virtue of their calling presidents; the Seventy act under them, assisting them in their work, and in this they differ from all others. See Doc. and Cov. 104: 43.

Then does not reason teach us that, in case there are fields which the Twelve can not reach, they should call upon those whom God has selected to assist them? When at the late conference the Twelve recommended certain of the Seventy to take charge of certain missions which they themselves could not reach, they were acting in harmony with the law which says: "It is the duty of the traveling high council to call upon the Seventy, when they need assistance, to fill the several calls for preaching and administering the gospel, instead of any others."—D. C. 104: 16. And these Seventies, so recommended and endorsed by the body, go out clothed with the authority of Apostles, and may, in their individual capacity, officiate in any duty in which an Apostle may officiate, except he is not a member of the presiding council, and can not partake in its deliberations.

Had the Twelve called upon High Priests or Elders when Seventies were available, they would have ignored those whom God especially called to aid them in their important work. They really have no right to call upon the High Priest, for he is to labor under the First Presidency, and not under the Twelve, except in cases where he places himself in the missionary force; and then the Twelve should first call upon the Seventy, as we have seen.

It is claimed however that a Seventy should not preside over a mission where there is a High Priest, because the High Priest is the highest in authority, and so the lesser should not preside over the greater.

That might do if correct; but the position that the High Priest is the higher, is only assumed. The books do not say which is the higher, and so we should be slow in deciding.

"We believe in the eternal fitness of things," and consequently contend that every man should discharge the legitimate duties of his calling, and not contend as to which is the greater.

One thing is certain, no man, be he high or low in authority, has the right to step between the Twelve and Seventy and presume to direct the latter in their labors. God himself would not do so. He would not direct the Seventy by revelation independently of those under whose direction He has placed him. Then, should a High Priest acting under the direction of the Presidency have charge of a mission in which there are Seventies, they (the Seventy) would be removed from the supervision of the Twelve, and the direction to them, though coming indirectly from the presidency, would not come through the legitimate channel.

The writer, for one, if acting as a Seventy, would respectfully decline being removed from his legitimate place. He would be willing to acknowledge those whom God had made his presidents or those so made by the body; providing such making by the body did not interfere with the rights of those whom God had appointed.

AN APPEAL.

To the Saints in all the branches of the Church of Christ:—We, the Saints of the Armstrong (Kansas) Branch, hereby make an appeal to you, to aid us in paying for our church house here. It will cost us when paid for $1,220, of which we have paid $720, leaving a balance of $500 to be paid next Christmas. Feeling unable to meet the debt, we appeal to the charity of the Saints, trusting that you will help us as you feel disposed, knowing that any such aid rendered will be devoted to a good cause. We would especially request branch presidents to solicit means. We are situated twelve miles west of Independence, Missouri. All means sent by post office order, or registered letter, will be duly receipted for, and published in the Herald.

THIRD QUORUM OF ELDERS.

Arrangements were made last April to send each member of the quorum a blank report on which to report at next setting of the quorum. The blanks are ready to send. We now want the post office address of each member of our quorum, and the blanks will be forwarded. We also wish to prepare a list of names and addresses of each member, a copy of which will be forwarded as soon as prepared. Please give this your immediate attention, that a complete list may be made and that each may be provided with a blank. ### NOTICE.

To the Saints of the North-East Missouri District: It would give me great pleasure if I could devote more time to the gospel of our Lord and Master Jesus Christ, which brings peace on earth and good will to man. I earnestly trust that we as a people who covenanted to be the true followers of the meek and lowly Son of God, have not done so in vain, but in deed and in truth, and will show forth our faith by our works, remembering the prayer of our Lord recorded in the 17th chapter of St. John. Thus may we all be one, doing our duty as Saints, so that our Master, Jesus, will have occasion to say to us in that day, Well done thou good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord. We should all work to the end with a good will, and gain that rest that remaineth for the people of God. That peace and the blessings of God will abide with all his Saints is the prayer of your brother in Christ,

REUNION.

The Saints of New Port, California, will hold a Reunion Meeting at the Saints' Church in New Port, beginning September 12th, 1886. The Saints of San Bernardino, Los Angeles, Laguna and Green Meadows are all respectfully invited to attend, hoping we may have a good time.

DANIEL GARNER, Pres.

CHURCH RECORDER'S NOTICE

It is essential in the recording of the scattering members of the Church that Branch and District officials should give me their aid, namely by preparing lists of those in their regions who are members of the Church but not members of their branches, and also lists of those members who have been dropped from the records of branches because of their absence from the branch, or because their residences are unknown. In cases where branches have been reorganized and names left off the new record please send all such names to me; also where branches have, during the past twenty-five or more years, been disorganized altogether, will those who have knowledge of it, or who have such old records, please send me the names of such persons as have not joined other branches and thus become enrolled again, so that they may now be enrolled. Where it is known that such members have died, or otherwise been lost, it should be stated that it may be put upon record. Any members who see this who do not know that they are on record, or are reported by some one else to me, please send name and items of birth and baptism. Where persons have died please give dates as near as may be. Presidents and Clerks of Branches and Districts are also hereby reminded that if they have any branch reports, or information about records, that I would like such reports or information to be forwarded to me as early as may be. Do not keep them because of the little postage required to send them, but let me know. The Government now sends one ounce of such matter for two cents where formerly only a half ounce was carried for three cents, hence the cost is little, and the reports are essential in order to keep the law of God in this matter.

H. A. STEBBINS,

Church Secretary and Recorder.

LAMONI, Iowa, Aug. 20th.

BORN.

BROLLIAR.—Near Wilber, Nebraska, July 14th, 1886, to Bro. Daniel and Sr. S. C. Brolliar, a son. Blessed August 18th, 1886, by Elder Robert M. Elvin, and named Roy Anthony.

MARRIED.

RABIDOU—CONOVER.—At the residence of Bro. John Scott, Lamoni, Iowa, August 29th, 1886, Joseph J. Rabidou to Sister Mattie Conover, both of Lamoni. Asa S. Cochran officiating.

DIED.

SCHMIDT.—At Milwaukee, Wisconsin, on the 9th day of July, 1886, Bro. George H. Schmidt Aged 25 years, 8 months and 11 days. By request of his parents who reside here, near Stewartsville, Missouri, a funeral sermon was preached at the DeKalb Branch on the 15th inst. by J. M. Terry, assisted by Wm. Lewis. This young man died in the faith—was baptized May 18th, 1879, by Elder J. T. Kinneman. The following lines were selected and arranged by his brother, Joseph, and dedicated to him.

He has gone from the earth; we will no more behold him,
Till we meet at the shore where the blessed ones abide;
But the wide arms of mercy are stretched to unfold him;
May joy with his spirit forever abide.

He has gone from the earth and its troubles forsaken;
Perchance his weak spirit in doubt lingered long;
But the sunshine of heaven beamed bright on his waking,
And trouble and sorrow forever are gone.

He has gone to the grave, but we will not deplore him,
Since Christ was his ransom, his guardian, his guide;
He gave him, He took him and He will restore him,
For death has no sting since the Savior has died.

NOESSER.—At the house of Bro. Jacob Dice, in Stewartsville, DeKalb county, Missouri on the 24th day of July, 1886, Mr. C. Noesser, aged about 22 years. Through his sickness of eight days he was tenderly cared for by Sr. Dice and Drucilla. Taken from health and vigor to the grave in so short a time. "Remember thy Creator in the days of thy youth"—was the text from which a few words were spoken by J. M. Terry, who conducted a short service in the morning prior to starting with him by his father to his home in Nauvoo, Illinois.

WEEKS.—At Collyer, Kansas, August the 5th, 1886, of flux, George Arthur, son of Mr. Charles and Sr. Emma Weeks, aged two years, eight months and twelve days.

"Go to thy rest fair child,
Go to thy dreamless bed;
While yet so gentle, undefiled,
With blessings on thy head."

KNAPP.—At the home of his parents, Beloit, Kansas, August 13th, 1886, Bro. James E. Knapp, of dropsy. Aged 40 years and 23 days. He leaves a wife and six children, father, mother, brothers and sisters to mourn his loss.

But oh! 'tis hard to give him up,
To say, Our Father's will be done,
And know no more his face we'll see
Till we our pilgrimage have run.

ATTENTION, COMRADES.

I see a request in late Heralds by Bro. T. W. Chatburn that all members of the church who placed their lives and services on the altar of their country in the hour of its late peril should be enrolled. It may seem to some like putting the church on a war footing, and altogether out of place. I for one have been opposed to the war spirit that has been made to do duty for so many years in the political campaigns of our Nation, and I hope the time is forever past when the "bloody shirt" will be made to do duty again; and I hope that because of this enrollment the church will not put on military airs, for if it does I am opposed to the movement. But believing as I do, that the church has raised an "ensign of peace," and made "proclamation for peace unto the ends of the earth," and that she will prove faithful to the proclamation, I favor the call for more reasons than one: first, it is claimed by many that from the inception of this work that a great scheme had been laid to overthrow all forms of republican government by the founders of the church, and that the teaching and practice of the church under B. Young and J. Taylor in Utah have gone far to confirm that opinion.

The claim of the church under the presidency of Joseph, the son of Joseph Smith the prophet, has been that all members of the church are, and must be subject to the laws of the land and "powers that be." And to-day the two churches are prominent before the Nation and the world; each one is now struggling to gain the proper recognition from the national Government, where only legal protection shall be fully guaranteed. The question now is, Which church is right, if either? If we can show by precept and example that we represent the true church and that our loyalty can not be impeached, then the strong arm of the Government will sustain us, while that that is disloyal must wither and perish at the touch.

In the Reunion of the G. A. R., held in San Francisco a short time ago, a resolution passed that they would demand of Congress to suppress polygamy and disloyalty in Utah. That resolution, if carried into effect, will materially affect the Church; and for that reason I believe it to be right to let the nation and the world know that the Church is loyal to God and the nation. By these comrades, let the rest of their comrades know the true status of the Church; and when Congress is petition, honorable mention will be made of the true Church. These names will show to the world that loyal and true men represent Zion's weal. The line must be clearly drawn between the polygamous church and the true; "for it shall come to pass, that the inhabitants of Zion shall judge all things pertaining to Zion; and liars and hypocrites shall be proved by them; and they who are not apostles and prophets shall be known."—Doc. and Cov., sec. 64. I believe this move will reach farther than many may think it will.

I fully endorse Bro. T. W. Chatburn's call, for another reason; and that is, we have set before Congress as well as the public generally in a memorial, our views theoretically, and last December when speaking in Ogden, Utah, our beloved President boldly and publicly declared he was proud he was an American citizen and knew no law higher than that of his country, and until Christ come to reign on earth Zion's children should be loyal to all their country's laws. Let all comrades in the Church enroll their names, showing that its president presides over a people among whose members, Elders, and representative men may be found those whose lives were placed on their country's imperiled altar. And in Israel's triumph let it be read in letters of living light, "Zion's sons were true to the God they served, true to their country, and true to humanity," that under the sheltering tree of liberty they may "stack arms" and rest in its refreshing shade with good will to all and sing, "In Zion we'll be free."

PROGRESS.

It is the opinion of some, members and Elders, that the cause of Zion will not flourish, nor the coffers of the Bishopric will not be replenished; until all the people of the church are not partly, but are wholly righteous; until all the unrighteous are removed from the body and the rest altogether free from blame; both before the law of God and the law of man. Some of those who think so, are no doubt sincere in so thinking, and mean well in so stating their opinion. But does it escape their attention that they themselves must be absolutely free from any blame, or in other words, must themselves be righteous if they would be among those who should stand.

There can be no question in regard to the general expectation that in some period of the existence of the church, cleanness of body and purity of character will attach to the church. It is the duty of all to endeavor to attain unto this personal cleanliness and purity; but we see no consistency in the belief that there is to be now, or at any time in the near future such a wholesale casting out of officers and members as is shadowed forth in some of the strictures and screeds respecting the time when the blessings of God are to be with the church, or with its members. It is to us somewhat inconsistent for some to be constantly pressing it upon the notice of the Saints that God will not bless the church, because there are some, few or many, unworthy ones in it, when the every day's experience of hundreds affirm positively that God is blessing the membership and Elders in a marked and cheering manner. We know personally and most positively, that God does hear and answer prayer in our exigencies and in a way that challenges our best reverence and love for him and his law, both for ourself and for others; and we acknowledge that we are not altogether righteous, in the sense of being altogether free from that which is blameworthy, as the word righteous is used by these who write and speak in regard to the matter.

If these men mean that the church, as a corporate body, will not attain unto the high station to which it is proper to aspire, until there is that unity of understanding and righteousness of character that Christians may attain to, we may concede it; but we are not now in the belief, nor do we soon expect to see the church militant and triumphant, the kingdom in progress and development and the kingdom perfected at one and the same time.

That some would set about a severe and vigorous pruning and with what wisdom they have, push one out here and another there, as unworthy to be in the church because unrighteous, may be a fact; but who must first decide upon their own qualifications to so decide and push out. We have believed that the "wheat" and the "tares" were to "grow together until the harvest;" and if so, and the tares are all plucked up before the field is done growing, it is such an anticipating of the work of the angels as we find no warrant for, in either ancient or modern scriptures.

Men haste when they should go carefully, and some are as liable to overstep just bounds in condemning the church for individual unworthiness, as others are to too highly extol the beauties of the work; extremes in both should be avoided. We see neither sense, propriety, nor justice in an Elder indulging in wholesale charges of unworthiness against the church, as a reason why he is not blessed with advancement, or progress according to his desires. If he knows of such individual shortcoming as so far affects the standing of the person as to make him unfit for effort to save, it should be his business to attempt to reclaim the one in error, or take steps to have him cast out. Throwing spiritual mud at the church is too much like political mud throwing. Individual cases of transgression may be dealt with if specifically defined; but vague charges are either splenetic, scandalous, or the over-growth of undue zeal; we think that they are sometimes made without reflection. "Charity thinketh no evil," certainly can not apply to croakers, who see only the shadows of impending ruin in every passing cloud, and constantly prelude evil from their own gloomy thoughts; and evolve condemnation to the whole because they individually do not advance in power and blessing,—is it a relic of the "I am holier than thou" spirit,—we hope not. From our standpoint, the church—members and Elders, as a mass, have made progress. We see the field as a whole, and can see that material changes for good have been wrought in many, very many places, and men have increased in power and spiritual worth.

Men are far too apt to charge their own lack of blessings upon the short coming of some one else; or, as in the case of some of these Elders of whom we write, their lack is charged by them upon the whole body, and they say that there will continue a dearth until the whole is made clean. The Scripture states that there were many lepers in Israel and none healed save Naaman, the Syrian; there were many widows in the city but to none of them was an angel sent, except unto Sarepta. It is foolish to charge our own lack upon the members of the body; if we are of the body and are sick, the whole body suffers on our account, better get well ourselves, this will help the whole.

PERSECUTION AND ITS CAUSES.

FROM what we have already presented it is seen, (1) that the first persecutors of Joseph Smith and his fellows were religious bigots, priestly zealots, and some of the "baser sort" whom they used for helpers in their villainous work; (2) that these persecutions were prompted primarily by as vile sectarian intolerance as ever plied the thumb-screws of the Inquisition, kindled the fires of Smithfield, burned the witches of Salem, hung the Quakers, or banished the Baptists. And, secondarily, they were also prompted by the floods of falsehood set afloat by these leading persecutors, prominent among whom were sectarian preachers, deacons and exhorters. To further prove this, and to confirm much of the testimony of Hon. John S. Reed and Joseph Smith, and also to show that Joseph and his companions were not criminals, we now add testimony from pages 39-44, of a late work entitled "Mormonism" written by one who personally knew of the facts she relates, because she was a party concerned. Here is what she says:

"It was one Sabbath day, beautiful and bright. We had been to church. Several had assembled at Newell Knight's, as was the general custom, for he was an Elder. A message was sent to me that Esick Lyon wished to see me at the grove, which was some distance from the house; that he wished a friendly interview with me. I felt reluctant in granting his request, but through the advice of my sister I ventured to go. I at this time attempted to make plain to him the reason of my tarrying at my sister's, and I then believed he understood me perfectly. While in the midst of our conversation, who should come but the Rev. Mr. Sherer, pastor of our church in Sandford. He came and took my hand, and holding it so long and firmly I thought it odd. I had tried to disengage this unwelcome cordiality, but had no success. I then asked by brother's assistance; but he declined, saying I would do well to listen to Mr. Sherer's council. However, we were not in the least surprised to find every member of the Mormon church on hand. My sister hastened to me, and soon wrenched off the hand that held mine. "What are you doing with my sister?" she asked with an authoritative expression. "What are you doing with my sister?" again she asked, her face looking white as snow as she uttered these words. There were about sixty Mormons now in close contest with my brother and Mr. Sherer. I left them to settle the matter as best they could; I cared not how if I only obtained my liberty. I then enjoyed a few moments of sweet, uninterrupted tranquility, having the house to myself for at least one half hour. This might probably have been a little skirmish in the christian warfare; but if this is the case, O, tell it not in Gath.

The members of the household were gathered in again from the field of strife, together with quite a number of Elders, and also members, and were once more seated composedly, talking and singing, when my uncle rode up to the door on a white, stately, beautiful horse, and as he drew up he exclaimed, "You are happy now you have accomplished your purpose, and I hope you enjoy it; but this will not be of long endurance, let me tell you." "O, yes," said one of the elders, "you are an attorney, probably you will take steps in this matter, but not to-day." "Sir," said another Mormon elder, "you are mad; you look as white as the horse you are riding; to-day is the holy Sabbath, and you are a deacon; don't indulge in such a passion." Many hard words were used on both sides; and here the subject ended, by putting spurs to the white steed, under a two hundred and twenty burden, which seemed light and easy for the noble animal. That night was dark and rainy. A messenger was plodding through darkness, mud and rain, and dead of night, to my father's in Guilford, thirty miles distant. The messenger said he did not spare the horse. He arrived at Guilford some time in the night, and, waking them, told the story. After getting permission, he went to a lawyer and obtained the power of attorney. Arriving at Colesville, he came to me saying he now had authority to take me away. I told him "I could go without all that trouble, and did not think it necessary to use the law in the case; and now, as I have a good opportunity, I will speak a few words for myself—this was my brother-in-law, whom I will call P—T—. Probably you are somewhat unacquainted with the affair altogether; I will say, that I came here for the purpose of talking with my sister about the absurdity of believing in Mormonism, and finding it useless to say more on that subject, I concluded to return to my brother, Esick Lyon, and let her enjoy her own opinion. But Newell Knight was busy, and could not spare the time or the team either to take me home, and he desired me to tarry a few days, he would then go with me.

"Not long after this it was circulated that I intended to go into the Mormon church, and a copy of the complaint which was entered against me to the church in Sandford, was handed me. It read as follows:

"To the Church of Christ in Sandford:

"WHEREAS, E. M., a member of said church, embraces a most wicked and dangerous heresy; and whereas, we have taken with her the first and second steps of gospel labor, without obtaining satisfaction, we therefore make complaint to the church of which said E. M. is a member, praying that the brethren of said church would bring her to an account for her unchristian conduct; and, as in duty bound, your servants will pray.

H. M.
B. S."

"Those are the names of the officers in our church who signed this copy of complaint. And now you are here with authority to take me away. What does all this bustle signify? Explain to me, if you can? It is all plain to me; I am willing, yes, more than willing, to go back to my brother's." "Can you go to-morrow?" asked P—T—. "I can go to day, if you like," I answered; "but let me ask, what did you understand in this affair? Probably you understood that I was obstinate in this matter, did you not?" "I did," said P—T—, "and I believe what you have stated to be true as gospel. I also know who the instigator is, but I shall decline telling at present, for certain reasons." I know who you allude to, but it would not be proper to mention his name; the church have great confidence in him, so let the matter rest."

Put with these statements what we quoted from this same anti-Mormon writer in Herald for August 28th, where she says of those early members, "There were now hundreds who were called people of good sense and judgment, men who were valued in good society," yet they believed in Mormonism, and the conclusion is irresistible that Joseph and his companions were persecuted, not for crimes they had done, not because they were base and vile in their lives, but purely because of their peculiar religious sentiments which were creating wide-spread interest, attracting general attention, making many converts, and that, too, from the leading churches. Such were the causes of those early and atrocious persecutions; and from these seeds then sown we trace the animus and inspiring causes of most of the persecutions which followed, until the fearful politician struck hands with trembling priestcraft and with those who traded in "slaves and souls of men" when the Saints as a body were driven from their homes in the inclemency of winter under the exterminating order of Lilburn W. Boggs, Governor of Missouri, in violation of all that is humane and Christian, and in defiance of the constitution and laws of both the Nation and the state of Missouri. We do not wish to be understood as saying the Saints were always persecuted for their well-doing, for we are aware they—at least some of them—did much to excite, irritate, and provoke their troubles. But we do say, that in no case were their enemies justified in their slanderous, lying statements, their vexatious law suits, their threatenings, their oppression, outrages, and violent drivings. The Saints were then few in number, persecuted, and without influence favorable to them. On the other hand, their enemies were legion, were rich and strong, had the whole machinery of civil government in their own hands, and yet, to their everlasting shame and disgrace, the only way in which they prevailed against Joseph and his people was by false and vile accusations, mobocratic threatenings and criminal force. These were the chief weapons with which they harrassed and drove the Saints, as we shall further find in the evidence yet to come. A wise man has said, "God is just, and his justice will not slumber forever." We may hope, then, that when the blinding dust of excited bigotry is laid, when the hideous darkness of sectarian hate and political jobbery shall be driven out—then the people will see, in the clear light of truth and right, the baseness and badness and cruelty of the persecutions of the Saints, and also the causes which led to them.

IN THE PEN.

THE following clipping illustrates in a measure the fact that, "transgressors shall be taken in their own naughtiness;" also "And if the blind lead the blind, both shall fall into the ditch." These men, and others in prison in Arizona, Idaho and Michigan, claim to be worthy Latter Day Saints, and yet all the sacred books taught by Joseph the Seer and endorsed by the church up to the time of his death, treat polygamy and unlawful cohabitation as crimes. Abraham who went into it in unbelief, put away his polygamy by the command of God; (Gen. 21: 12); Jacob's polygamy originated in the villainous fraud of an idolatrous extortioner; (Gen. 29: 15, 21, 25, 28; 31: 15, 19); the polygamy and concubinage of David and Solomon, and all "them of old," including that of this same class among the Nephites, stands condemned of God as crime, iniquity and gross abomination; (B. M. Jacob 2: 6-11; Mosiah 7: 1; Ether 4: 5, 6); and the word of the Lord given to the Saints for a law till Christ comes (See Rev. Feb. 4th 1831, Doc. Cov.) says:—"Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart, and shall cleave unto her and none else; and he that looketh upon a woman to lust after her, shall deny the faith, and shall not have the Spirit; and if he repents not, he shall be cast out."—Doc. Cov. 42: 7, Rev. Feb. 9th, 1831. These men are reaping the fruit of their own doings. They are not martyrs for truth and righteousness, but the opposite. We do not say they are corrupt in their desires and intentions, but we do say that the Lord has always condemned as evil the very things for which they have been convicted. Our earnest heartfelt desire for all such is that they may put away these evils and return to the law of the Lord.

"Following is a complete list of names of the brethren at present confined in the Utah Penitentiary under sentence for polygamy, or unlawful cohabitation, mostly the latter, the polygamy cases being limited to four or five. The dates of commitments and other particulars are likewise herewith given:

BECOMING A NATION OF FRAUDS.

WE are fast becoming a nation of frauds. The day is coming rapidly when the most popular crusade that can be waged will be against this fraud in the shape of adulteration. You can hardly find a single article now that is what it is represented to be. It used to be confined to putting big apples, potatoes, berries, etc., on top, but now it spreads to actual and dangerous mixing. Take it in candies, which we allow our children to pile into their stomachs, the results of some of the adulterations are simply frightful. Tea, coffee, spices—everything is the same way. When you buy a pound of sugar or a quart of molasses you can hardly tell what you have got.

The farmer is just as bad as any one else. He is after the almighty dollar with the same greed as his city neighbor. It is now not an uncommon thing for him to go to a mill, buy a lot of screenings, take them home and mix them nicely with his wheat. The miller buys it back as wheat, paying several prices for it. There are three evils to result from all this. As well as ruining our stomachs, we are degrading our morals and cutting off the market for good goods.—Globe Democrat.

It is not an uncommon thing to find people purchasing "cheap" goods of all kinds, "cheap tea," "cheap clothing," "cheap flour," "cheap furniture," also cheap farm machinery, and cheap everything else which they purchase, who never stop to consider that their purchases are you;" and we may add, Let no false spirit, in the end the very dearest and worst. Honest reliable, worthy goods are not the cheapest in price, but are the cheapest when measured by their intrinsic value. A pound of tea at fifty cents may not be as cheap as one costing one dollar. A pound of sugar at five cents may be in reality dearer than one costing eight cents. A sack of flour costing one dollar may be much dearer than one costing one dollar and a half. A yard of cloth at any given price may be much dearer than that which costs double that price. Very much depends upon quality. If the quality is poor, the goods purchased may be dear at most any price. The inherent worth of an article should be first considered, for on that depends its real value, and it is this that should govern prices. But so long as people will purchase "cheap" things, just so long will they foster, encourage, and build up "shoddy," "cheap John's" and all the various kinds of adulterated goods of every name and grade.

Beware of "cheap" things lest you in the end pay dear for the whistle. Honest goods are worth fair prices. Cheap sugars, coffees, teas, cheap flour, etc., etc., are adulterated, and nine times out of ten with hurtful ingredients. Hosts of instances are occurring where adulterated goods are causing sickness and death. When persons offer you goods of any kind at rates below fair market prices, you may well suspect a swindle of some kind, for they will hardly do business at less than living profits.

A GIRL WONDER.

THERE has been going the rounds of the papers a sensational story concerning a thirteen-year old girl dying and going to heaven for one hour the 24th of last June. It is said she resides in or near Vernon, Lamar county, Alabama, is of obscure parentage and without education, and is not specially bright in intellect. It is said much excitement has grown out of her teachings and doings, for she claims to explain the Bible and also to heal the sick and afflicted. She is reported as saying that in "the beautiful city of the angels," * * * "she recognized her friends and relatives there who had gone before," and that "they were the size of a two-year-old child; that they were not winged, [that is good!—Ed.], but moved around, each one crowned and singing praises to God. She said they were not flesh, but spirit, and described God as being the size of an ordinary man. When asked if heaven contained rivers and trees, she seemed surprised at such an interrogation, and interpreted that part of Revelations wherein it describes heaven as containing rivers and trees, and said the trees were God's throne and the rivers his love."

It is proper to remark in this connection that some parties who have seen this child report that her pretended explanations of scripture texts are vague and contradictory, and also that her extraordinary claims are not sustained by facts.

These are "perilous times" in more ways than one, and the Saints would do well to heed the admonition, "Let no man deceive no humbug, no "lying wonder," nor wondrous lying, deceive you. The present age is prolific in deceptions of various kinds, and all should beware of them.

A WONDERFUL MIRAGE.

SOME brother sent us a copy of the Carthage, Jefferson county, New York, Republican, for July 27th, from which we extract the following account of a wonderful mirage.

"A sight which in this country greets the eye seldom more than once in a lifetime was enjoyed by the people of Carthage on Thursday last between the hours of 12 a. m. and 2 p. m. On elevated points about the village, looking directly north and north-west, could plainly be seen in a mirage the St. Lawrence river and the beautiful Thousand Islands. These objects were as plainly visible to the naked eye as if they were barely a half-mile distant. The water, the islands, and at times steamers plying on the river, the cottages, the village of Clayton, the Round Island House and city of Odgensburg were discernable. One party recognized the cottage of ex-Lieut. Gov. Thomas G. Alvord, opposite Clayton, and pointed out to bystanders points on the same by which he recognized it. This beautiful sight was presented to the view of hundreds of eager and excited people for several hours, many of whom had never witnessed any thing like it before. It was one of the grandest spectacles ever witnessed and filled all with wonder and admiration. The distance by rail from Carthage to Clayton, the nearest point on the St. Lawrence river, is thirty-six miles.

Many whose attention had never been directed to a similar occurrence were at a loss to account for the cause to their entire satisfaction. Webster defines a mirage as "an optical illusion arising from an unequal refraction in the lower strata of the atmosphere and causing remote objects to be seen double, as if reflected in a mirror, or to appear as if suspended in the air." It is frequently seen in deserts, presenting the appearance of water.

A similar phenomenon was observed at Oswego. An Oswego paper says that those who were on the heights which overlook the lake in that city at about eight o'clock in the evening of the same day were treated to a mirage which brought the Canadian shore for a long distance within plain view. Its bays, points, bluffs, headlands and islands remained plainly visible for some time until the wind shifted and disturbed the atmosphere. Many witnessed the beautiful scene, the land looming up very distinctly and the only thing regretted in connection with the exhibition was that so few enjoyed it, for it appears that only those on the heights got a good view. The distance across the lake at Oswego is at least sixty miles.

CORRECTION.—PLEASE READ.

IN Bro. Briggs Alden's letter, in HERALD for August 21st, 1886, page 519, there is a very serious blunder. It is most likely our mistake in proof reading. Bro. Alden is a very old man and his writing done with a lead pencil, and apparently on some rough surface, like a linen bound book, is very hard to make out. We are sorry for such mistakes, but so long as men abide in the flesh doubtless they will continue. The paragraph should read as follows: "Aug 5. We have one woman here that was married, February 22d, 1844, by (not, to) your uncle Hyrum; she has not heard a sermon by our people since 1845, I think." Bro. Briggs Alden wrote us about this mistake August 22d, and is much distressed to think it has occurred.

BRO. ALEXANDER H. SMITH has been preaching in Hancock county, Illinois, for some weeks, uncle William B. Smith being with him for a time. It was thought that it might avail for good if the Editor would step over and help a little; so on August 24th the Editor left the office, and on the 25th reached Burnside, Hancock county, Illinois, where he met the brethren above named at Brn. D. C. Salisbury's and W. McGahan's. Arrangements had been made and we held services in the park, in a shady grove, where a stand and seats had been improvised, on Friday and Saturday evenings and on Sunday morning and evening; having good audiences and attention. From there under the care of Bro. Alexander we went to LaHarpe, where on Monday and Tuesday evenings we spoke in Coulson's Hall, which was given free of charge. We had good audiences.

Uncle William left Burnside for Rock Creek, en route for home, on the 28th, called home by letter from his wife for reasons given, which were deemed sufficient.

We met Bro. Richard Lambert, from Rock Creek, one of the veteran soldiers of the cross of the early days of Mormonism. Others from the neighborhood round about attended the meetings, Brn. Solomon J. and Frederick Salisbury, J. H. Lambert, and W. and Alfred McGahan, and D. C. Salisbury who reside at Burnside.

WE commend to the readers of the HERALD the following pithy presentation of a much mooted subject.

THE FOURTEEN GREAT MISTAKES.

Somebody has condensed the mistakes of life, and arrived at the conclusion that there are fourteen of them. Most people would say, if they told the truth, that there was no limit to the mistakes of life; that they were like the drops in the ocean or the sands of the shore in number, but it is well to be accurate. Here, then, are fourteen great mistakes: It is a great mistake to set up our own standard of right and wrong, and judge people accordingly; to measure the enjoyment of others by our own; to expect uniformity of opinion in this world; to look for judgment and experience in youth; to endeavor to mold all dispositions alike; to yield to immaterial trifles; to look for perfection in our own actions; to worry ourselves and others with what can not be remedied; not to alleviate all that needs alleviation as far as lies in our power; not to make allowances for the infirmities of others; to consider everything impossible that we can not perform; to believe only what our finite minds can grasp; to expect to be able to understand everything.—New York Star.

BRO. G. W. GALLEY, of Columbus, Nebraska, has a sharp article in the local press of Columbus in reply to a Mrs. Martha Barrow, which he closes in these words:

"She says, 'I enjoy my religion—it is more than life, my hope, my heaven, my all.' If what I have written above, can be called religion, I shall continue in the future—as I have in the past—to pray to God to deliver me from such blasphemy. What I want is the pure, unadulterated religion of Jesus Christ; nothing more or less than this can save the human family. Give me this, and the polygamist, the murderer, the anarchist, the thief and the robber may all have their so-called religion. What I want is, not my own, but that of Christ."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

By letter from Bro. Jas. Whitehead, of Alton, Illinois, we learn that on Aug. 11th, his wife, with whom he had spent fifty years of married life on the 25th of last January, was called hence by death. Bro. Whitehead is well stricken in years, one not given to much change of his surroundings; and the loss of his wife tells heavily upon him. He was a clerk in the office of President Joseph Smith the martyr, for some months before and at the time of his death, and will have the sympathy of the Saints in his bereavement.

Bro. Alonzo E. Nelson writes from Campello, Massachusetts, expressing great desire for the good and triumph of the work. He sends poetry which we must decline for want of room.

Bro. W. M. Rumel wrote August 31st from Omaha, Nebraska, that the branch were changing the location of their church building, having sold the old small one and secured a lot in a more eligible locality, they were putting forth energies to build a larger, better building. We hope that the branch may succeed fully in their purpose.

Bro. George S. Lincoln of San Francisco, California, writes, August 30th: "We buried our much esteemed brother, T. J. Andrews, from our hall, yesterday. Elder H. P. Brown preached the discourse. Many of the relatives and friends attended, filling the room to its utmost capacity. His death is a great loss to us, leaving our branch in the full charge of young men. He was our adviser, counselor, and support. Most any one could have been spared better than he."

Brother John Allen, of Cleveland, Iowa, wants to know the address of Thomas Curtis.

Sr. Polly L. Hyde of Belmont, New York, in a recent letter assures us that she is "firm in the gospel that was revealed to Joseph the Seer and is now preached by his son." She is anxious for elders to visit and labor in that region.

Brn. G. A. Blakeslee and W. H. Kelley, the committee upon Kirtland Temple repairs, have decided to proceed upon the work to the extent of the fund on hand and received during the progress of the work. They have also decided to put in a good heating apparatus, and have contracted for one, to be put up immediately, so that it may be properly tested before the April Conference.

Sr. L. M. Richards, writing from North Platte, Nebraska, August, states that she is making all the efforts she can to spread the glad news. She has been circulating tracts, Voice of Warning, and Book of Mormon. She is anxiously looking for some Elder qualified to preach to visit the place and open the work there. We wrote Bro. Henry J. Hudson, of Columbus, Nebraska, about visiting them, and he wrote encouragingly regarding it.

Bro. R. J. Anthony was at Deer Lodge, Montana the 1st inst., and intended to visit Willow Creek, Reese Creek and Bozeman, and to be at Oxford, Idaho, from October 1st to 10th, and after that go to Salt Lake City.

Bro. E. D. Bullard writes us the 5th inst., from Wray, Colorado, where he has located 320 acres of land. His prospects he thinks are good, as everything in the way of farming is promising.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Bro. B. V. Springer wrote from Dimondale, Michigan, September 2d:

"Our meeting here was a success, notwithstanding the bad weather; we only missed one session. One was baptized, others near the kingdom. I leave to-morrow for Clear Lake to finish up my work there for the present. I baptized one more there the morning I left, (Aug. 26th). Bro. Scott will remain here a while."

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Ques.—It is right for the Teacher who has the oversight of a branch to ask a brother or sister their reasons for refusing the sacrament?

Ans.—Yes; most certainly. For his duty is as follows:—"The Teacher's duty is to watch over the church always, and be with and strengthen them, and see that there is no iniquity in the church, neither hardness with each other; neither lying, backbiting, nor evil speaking; and see that the church meet together often, and also see that all the members do their duty, and he is to take the lead of meetings in the absence of the Elder or Priest, and is to be assisted always, in all his duties in the church, by the Deacons, if occasion requires; but neither Teachers nor Deacons have authority to baptize, administer the sacrament, or lay on hands; they are, however, to warn, expound, exhort and teach, and invite all to come unto Christ."—D. C. 17: 11.

KEWANEE, Ills., Aug. 23d.

Mr. Editor of the Herald:—In order to meet the sceptic successfully I send the following to be answered in the query column, if your better wisdom considers it wise as well as prudent to do so:

First.—Inasmuch as good and righteousness have an eternal existence, does it not follow, as a natural consequence that "evil" and "unrighteousness," exist eternal, and that independent of "the devil."

Second.—Inasmuch as "eternal life" consists of gaining through Christ a celestial glory in the presence of God and his holy angels—while eternal death denotes eternal banishment from God's presence, (spiritually speaking), will the occupants of the terrestrial and celestial glories, enjoy "eternal life," when at the same time they are supposed to be never permitted to enter the presence of God; but rather to be administered unto by those of the higher unto those of the lesser?

In gospel love, yours,

JOHN D. JONES.

A.—Here is a theme; let the gospel workers answer these queries. It will be better than haggling at each other.

Q.—Is it wrong for any member of the church to believe in the seventh day (Saturday) as their Sabbath?

A.—Yes; doctrinally it is wrong, and for the reason that God has commanded the Saints to keep the Lord's day as their rest-day (Sabbath). It is wrong to believe in what is not true; for such belief tends to contention and division. The intention and desire of those who believe the seventh day to be the Christian Sabbath may be good in a moral sense, yet in a doctrinal sense such belief be utterly wrong. This was Paul's experience in respect to Christ and the Christian faith. He afterwards realized the importance of correct faith, and said to the Saints, "God hath from the beginning chosen you to salvation through sanctification of the Spirit and belief of the truth."

Q.—Is it wrong to buy or sell on Sunday?

A.—Yes; unless it be a case of necessity; for the Lord has commanded, saying,—“And that thou mayest more fully keep thyself unspotted from the world, thou shalt go to the house of prayer and offer up thy sacraments upon my holy day; for verily this is a day appointed unto you to rest from your labors, and to pay thy devotions unto the Most High; nevertheless thy vows shall be offered up in righteousness on all days, and at all times; but remember that on this, the Lord's day, thou shalt offer thine oblations, and thy sacraments, unto the Most High, confessing thy sins unto thy brethren, and before the Lord. And on this day thou shalt do none other thing, only let thy food be prepared with singleness of heart, that thy fasting may be perfect; or in other words, that thy joy may be full. Verily this is fasting and prayer; or, in other words, rejoicing and prayer.”—Doc. Cov. 59: 2, 3.

Mother's Home Column.

EDITED BY SISTER "FRANCES."

"One in our faith and one our longing
To make the world within our reach
Somewhat the better for our living,
And gladder for our human speech."

THE sisters will have to call up their patience now, for while we feel thankful to be so rich in matter for the "Column," we can not help regretting that some will necessarily have to wait for a length of time before their letters appear, and from some letters we will only be able to make extracts. Let patience have her perfect work and we shall be gainers thereby. We have received many since our last issue, but none demanding especial notice as most, if not all have been acknowledged by card.

Sister Sarah A. Rose of Graysville, Ohio, who was thrown from a horse and very severely injured some ten weeks ago writes us, "Will you please ask in the "Home Column" that special prayer be made for me, that I may soon be restored to walk again." She states to us that her sufferings have been intense all these weeks, but at three different times she has felt that the Saints were praying for her. All pain would leave her and the Spirit would fall upon her, bringing such sweet peace and calm, and she would feel as though she could get up and walk. She is still a great sufferer, and we beseech each one who reads this heart wrung appeal from her to seek their God in secret prayer—the prayer of faith, that if it is his holy will he will grant her desires. You who have suffered and have been healed under the hands of the Elders, bear up at a throne of grace this sister, who has not the privilege of calling upon the Elders, nor has she the comfort of communing with or being strengthened by any of like faith. The only one of her family in the church and opposed by all the rest. Will not some of you who have the leisure write her a comforting, sustaining letter? "Bear ye one anothers burdens and so fulfil the perfect law."

LAMONI, Ia., Sept. 18th, 1886.

THE "HOBBLE-DE-HOY."

A boy of fifteen lately turned to his father as they came out of church together and said abruptly,—

"I wonder if clergymen ever think that boys have souls to be saved. There is Sunday-school for the little children, and church for the grown-up folks. But there's nothing for the boys."

His father was startled. He was a leader in great religious movements; but his own boy! It never had occurred to him that the church should take specific action to Christianize lads—hobble-de-hoys, who were neither children nor men. He now began to look into church affairs more closely with regard to their influence on Tom. He saw that the machinery of Sunday-school training—tickets, little prizes, teaching of facts in Bible history—was not the influence which the boy needed.

The pastor was a famous pulpit orator and logician; the father listening to him critically, saw that there was not one of the sermons preached in the year which was suited to Tom's capacity. They passed far above his head. The boy, like other boys of his age, could not breathe in the high intellectual or spiritual regions to which the pastor drew his hearers; his knowledge consisted pretty much of base-ball rules, Cæsar's doings, and the price of cravats.

Yet he was at the age when the young immature man is forming convictions, when he feels loneliest, peers most eagerly into the mysteries which lie about him, and is seeking a leader for life, to good or evil; when a little help from a wise friend may lift the struggling soul forever up into certain sunlight. The age of hobble-de-hoyism is, in fact, the most critical point of a man's life, both in body, brain and soul.

Every clergyman who reads the Companion should ask himself what he is doing to give a high, pure, religious faith to the boys of his flock.—Youths' Companion.

LAMONI, August 29th.

Sister Frances:—The enclosed clipping is on a subject that for years has lain near my own heart, and I doubt not of other solicitous mothers. When my boy was small the Hope satisfied him, but he has outgrown it, and has not yet reached the age when the Herald's long sermons can be a delight to him; yet he must have reading. He is one of those to whom reading is a pleasure and recreation; and he wants not only something to read, but something fresh, and in sympathy with his own life—a boy's life—not above it nor beneath, and in sympathy with the world about him, yet with the guide-board of truth pointing upward. Said Christ, "I pray not that thou take them out of the world, but keep them from the evil." And so it should be with our teaching. I remember a little girl who told me that she did not like her Sunday-school books and papers, "because," said said she, "they don't tell about children just like me, and nothing seems just as it does to me." She, too, had passed the point when childish things no more delighted, but whose feet had not yet entered the paths of grown up people. I, also can remember that season of expectancy and unrest, when childhood and its sweets were left behind, and the realities of womanhood, unknown, untried, and nothing seemed in sympathy. And now that I have a boy, not yet a man and no more a child, what shall I do to gratify his taste for reading? You say, help enlarge the Hope. Well, will it then be what our youth require? For if it is not I shall still have to go outside for it, and for those of limited means it is hard. Meantime, "while the grass is growing the steed starves." What shall I do?

ELEANOR.

Sister Eleanor is not the only one who has felt this need and to whom the question has presented itself. An Elder remarked to us just after the close of conference last Spring, "We need a publication in the church to fit in between the Hope and Herald. The Hope is too juvenile for our older boys and girls, and the Herald too mature for them." We felt the truth of the remark then and we feel it now, but are powerless to remedy the deficiency. We have faith to believe that the time will come when this will be remedied, and we surely are going to strive to remedy it to some extent in the enlarged Hope; but of course it will be to a very limited extent. How much however, will depend largely upon the hopes themselves. We trust they will not prove forlorn hopes, but will come up to our help in a solid phalanx, take an interest in their paper and thus make it interesting. If parents will interest themselves and draw out the interest of their children, we promise to give them something to think about, and something to do, even in the limited space of the Hope. Of course no one paper, were it even the size of the Herald, can furnish mental food sufficient for an active brain. What then? The Lord has said, "Get knowledge from all good books." Good books are like good companions; they exert no evil influence. But we warn all parents that they can not be too careful in regard to what their children read. Every week we distribute through the post office such papers and magazines as we would be sorry to know our own children were learning to like, and yet in those papers and books are many good things; but until a taste for pure good reading is formed, it becomes the duty of parents to select for the child, and not leave the child to select for itself. Many a beautiful and truthful lesson is taught by fiction, even as the Savior illustrated his teachings by parables; but fiction which is not pure, not true to life, and the hard realities of life is a sure and deadly poison, which will sap the foundation stone of all useful knowledge, and throw upon the world men and women, with crude and false ideas of life, and for whose existence the world will be very little better. Sister Eleanor, the Sunday School library will help some, and if the Father spares our life, we have not yet done all we have it in our heart to do for the young people of Lamoni. Oh! for just a few hundred dollars to carry out what we can not do, because we can not do it without money. But mark you, it will come. The Hope is going to be enlarged, and then we will pull upon the knotted purse strings for another work right here in our midst, and if a few pockets were turned inside out, the individuals themselves would be the better, as well as the community.

ED.

JACKSON COUNTY, Ohio, Aug. 4th.

Dear Sisters:—I desire to bear my testimony to the truth of this latter day work for I know the work is of God, and I desire to do all things according to his holy will, letting my light shine before the world; and to encourage my dear sisters in this glorious warfare. Two years ago this month I was baptized and confirmed a member of the church, and I have never for one moment regretted the step I then took, for on that day I became through obedience to the law, an heir to an inheritance in the kingdom of God and his Son Jesus Christ; and I know if I am faithful in keeping the whole law, I shall at the end of the race obtain eternal life; therefore dear sisters, I feel it my duty to work for the Master while the daylight lasts. My heart is in this work and my determination is to press onward and upward until I obtain the crown, and have conquered every foe. I have been a great sufferer for several months. This last winter I was very near death's door for some time, but my faith in God was strong, and even in the midst of my greatest sufferings I saw the hand of my loving Father, and was made to praise his holy name. I obeyed the law, sent for the Elders and was administered to, and the Lord has raised me up, though I am somewhat afflicted yet. My faith in God is strong. My desires are to honor his cause in all things, bearing my afflictions with Christian patience. I feel like Job to exclaim, Though he slay me, yet will I trust in him.

Dear sisters in the bonds of Christian love, my prayer ascends daily for you that God will give you wisdom in ruling your households, training the lambs for the true fold, setting before them an example worthy their imitation, that they seeing your good works may be constrained to glorify our Father who is in heaven. For the scattered Saints, the lone ones, far out in the wilderness as it were, my prayers ascend in your behalf, asking the kind Father to watch over and keep you by his power safe from all the darts of the wicked one; so that when the angel is sent forth to gather his people, you may be found ready with armor on, having your lamps trimmed and burning, ready to go out and meet the Bridegroom when he cometh.

With love to all Saints, ever praying for the prosperity of Zion, I subscribe myself your sister in the one faith,

MARY L. ELLIOTT.

NEBRASKA CITY, August 1st.

Dear Sister Frances:—Feeling weak and not able to attend public worship, I will try and write a few lines to the dear "Home Column." I read it with pleasure and my heart rejoices when I see the interest that is being taken in regard to the training of the young and tender plants of Zion, and also the cheering, encouraging and instructive words of advice to the weary and care-worn mothers, who are striving to bring up the little ones that are entrusted to their care, in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. I feel my inability to write but can not forbear. When I look back to the time my children were young, depending upon me for food, both for the body and the mind; how well I remember the anxiety of mind, the tears that often coursed down my cheeks, the prayers I offered in their behalf, that they might grow up in the truth, and their names be written in the Lamb's Book of Life, never to be blotted out. How much I prized the counsel of the wise, experienced and judicious mothers in Zion. I was the mother of six children, four boys and two girls; raised them all to be men and women, and had the joy and satisfaction of seeing them all initiated into the fold and family of God. Since then two of the dear ones, my oldest sons, have peacefully passed away, as also their honoured father, who left me in grief to mourn their love; but not without a hope. Four still survive to cheer and comfort me in my declining days. O may the Lord bless and help them to live holy and devoted lives, that their last days also may be peace! I am now seventy-seven years of age, not able to meet with the Saints often. I feel lonely many times, and don't know how I could get along without the church periodicals; they cheer me when sad, and often revive my drooping spirits. I am spending the summer with my daughter and worthy son-in-law R. M. Elvin. He has been prevented by sickness in his family most of the time since the Annual Conference, from preaching in his field of labor; but I trust ere long he can be released, as his companion is convalescent. He was called away the 28th, to preach a funeral sermon and has not returned. I want to see the Hope enlarged and will do what I can in the direction. I pay for three numbers now, and will send one dollar to help on the glorious work, hoping that all, old and young, will feel it a duty to respond to the call, so as to make it a final success. Now dear sister, may the Lord bless you in your noble and laudable undertaking, and all that put forth a helping hand to contribute to its columns, is the desire and prayer of your unworthy sister in Christ,

L. A. HARTWELL.

Dear Herald:—There is nothing like sweeping the snow from your own door, for if charity should begin at home, certainly reformation should begin there, too. It is a waste of time to go far away to make a clearance. We should look after the training of our children while young, for we may bend the sapling, but not the tree. Lads should be trained before the down comes on their chins. Girls as a rule are not so hard to train as boys. If you want a bullfinch to pipe, whistle to him while he is young, he will scarcely catch the tune after he has learned the wild bird's note. We must begin early to teach, for children begin early to sin.

"Ere your boy has reached to seven,
Teach him well the way to heaven;
Better still the work will thrive
If he learns before he's five."

Weeds will come up when you give them half a chance. When a child is rebellious, conquer it, and do it well the first time, that there may be no need to do it again. A child's first lesson should be obedience, and after that you may teach it what you please; yet the young mind must not be laced too tightly or you may prevent its growth, and too heavily tax its strength. They say a daft nurse makes a wise child, but I do not believe it; nobody needs so much common sense as a mother or a governess. A child's back must be made to bend, but it must not be broken. He must be ruled, but not with a rod of iron. His spirit must be conquered, but not crushed. Nature does sometimes overcome nurture, but for the most part the teacher wins the day. Children generally are what they are made—the pity is that so many are spoiled in the bringing up. A child may be rocked too hard; you may spoil them either by too much cuffing or too much kissing; still a child can be treated to hardly, and especially he can be shut up too many hours in school, when a good run and a game of play would do him more good. A child can be driven to learn till it loses half its wits; forced fruits have little flavor; a man at five is a fool at fifteen. If you make veal of the calf he will never make beef. Yet learning may be left so long that the little dunce is always behind hand. There is a medium in everything, and he is a good father who hits upon it, so that he governs his family with love, and his family loves to be governed by him. Some are like Eli, who let his sons sin and only chided them a little; these will turn out to be cruel parents in the long run; others are too strict, and make home miserable, and so drive the youngsters to the wrong road in another way. Tight clothes are very apt to tear, and hard laws are often broken; but loose garments tear too, and where there are no laws, at all, things are apt to go amiss—so you see it is easy to err on either side, and hard to dance the tight-rope of wisdom. In these days children have too much of their own way, and often make their mothers and fathers their slaves. It has come to a fine pass when the goslings teach the geese, and the kittens rule the cat; it is the upsetting of every thing, and no parent ought to put up with it. It is as bad for the boys and girls as it is for the old folk, and it brings out the worst side of their characters. I would sooner be a cat on a hot brick, or a toad under a harrow, than let my own children be my masters. No, the head must be the head, or it will hurt the whole body,

For children out of place
Are a father's disgrace;
If you rule not you'll rue,
For they'll quickly rule you.

Bro. Joseph:—I am in good health to-day, and have been for some time, after the great suffering which I had some few years ago, so great that I never expected to see these days. The Lord has shown me that I have yet a work to do before I can get rest. He has given me health, and I feel that I can yet live for another sixty years. I have been in different parts since you heard from me last, and have not been with mouth shut as to the gospel concerns. I love to tell the world that a salvation is promised to all that will come to the gospel covenant of Christ. I have no greater pleasure than to speak, and hear others speak of the kingdom of Christ. Bro. Hawkins at Santa Rosa has meetings in his house every Lord's Day, with those few Saints in that city, and once in the week day evening. I have been to Santa Clara since then, and am now here. Bro. Brown preached last Sunday evening, on the two covenants the Lord made with Abram, and will continue next Sabbath, I believe, the same. People get interested everywhere if we only are bold enough to sound the trumpet of the coming king. One was baptized in San Francisco Branch lately. Bro. Andrews was in bed as he was not well. Bro. Philips had come back from the south and is about as he was when he went away for his health. Bro. Anderson also seems to be better, as he was very busy yesterday in Brown's office on Broadway, with the Expositors, turning them in to be scattered round, while a young man was packing them in from the printer, one pack after another. I believe that you will see the Expositor in your office before this letter. I wish the Expositor was a weekly. The Saints here made the hints that a chapel would be built soon. I told them that I had no money to give but would give work as many days as I could, for my share; and may the Lord grant us the blessing. It is very necessary that we should have our own house of prayer here in Oakland. The San Francisco Saints should unite to do this?

I will now close for the present by asking the prayers of all the faithful. Believe me your brother in bonds of the gospel,

J. A. STROMBERG.

BURLINGTON, Iowa, September 3d.

Dear Brother Blair:—Brother George. L. Spencer had previously done some preaching in a school-house near Centerville, the county-seat of Appanoose, but the discourses in the opera hall there on Sunday, August 29th, was the first preaching ever done in the city. And, although the congregations were small, forty to sixty persons only, yet we had a respectful hearing, and the most of them seemed to be thoughtful and intelligent people. A former Circuit Judge, the county Recorder, two lawyers, two doctors and two ministers were in attendance at one or both services. Brother Archibald and family have lived there for years, and both parents and children are honorably known in the place. It is such records that make good foundations which the ministry may build the gospel work upon. My first discourse was upon the Epitome of Faith, taking it up point by point, and, with liberty for an hour and a half, presenting the doctrine of Christ and his Church, with enough upon each to make it plain, then to the marriage question and Judge Sherman's decision concerning the Reorganized Church being the legal successor in doctrine and government of the original church of 1830. In the evening I presented the statistics concerning the "Signs of the Times," the calamities and woes predicted and coming to pass, telling them at the close that we had but seen the beginning, and that we were authorized to say that yet every eye should see, every ear should hear, and every heart should be penetrated by facts and experiences that we lived in the day declared to be "a time of trouble," when "distress of nations" should be the characteristics of the time. When at Montrose on Wednesday,

I read of the wide-spread earthquake shocks throughout the United States, which occurred two nights later, and I thought of what I had said. Brother Spencer intends to continue his meetings south-east of town. Brother and Sister Joseph Knowles and old sister Knowles (formerly of Cheltenham, Missouri), now live at Centerville as also does brother Jeter of East Cleveland and brother John W. Fisher once of Farmington, Iowa, so that, if all remain we may organize a branch at no distant day.

From Memphis, Missouri, eastward, the abundant rains had made green pastures, quite in contrast with those westward to Lamoni and much further. Was at Keokuk a few hours only, calling on the Saints. Came to Montrose, and, at the wish of the people spoke that evening. Unexpectedly met uncle William Smith at Montrose, and had some pleasant chats. He spoke on Tuesday evening, and next morning left for Rock Island, Clinton and his home. I staid and preached on Wednesday evening, then here on Thursday.

Am feeling better in health, and think that I shall improve still more, especially if I take the intended trip up the Mississippi for the benefit of the same, as I think now I shall do the coming week. Yours in the truth,

H. A. STEBBINS.

LOWER LAKE, California, Sept. 1st.

Dear Herald:—Our 'last communication to your columns was written from the city of Stockton, in the beautiful San Joaquin valley, where we were surrounded by miles of waving, golden grain, reminding us of the beautiful, figurative language of the poet:

"The golden grain is waving, Inviting us to reap,"

and also of the saying of the Master,—"Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he would send forth laborers into his harvest." To this end we prayed earnestly. Now we find ourselves in the romantic hill country adjacent to Clear Lake, which with the surrounding mountains and rugged rocks reminds us of the saying of the prophet, "I will send for many fishers, saith the Lord, and they shall fish them; and after will I send for many hunters, and they shall hunt them from every mountain, and from every hill, and out of the holes of the rocks." We find ourselves this morning praying for the hunters and fishers, and comforted by the recent promise of the Lord, "I will hasten my work in its time."

I have been in a measure disappointed in the laborers who were to bear off the burden of this mission as per appointment of the General Conference. I censure no one, but regret the circumstances. Of the five appointed, but one is constantly engaged, viz., Bro. Albert Haws, who is doing a good work in Oregon, and giving splendid satisfaction. Bro. Thomas Daley has been compelled by force of circumstances to work his mines in Eldorado county, California, but is preaching each Sunday. Bro. H. L. Holt I learn is building, and not yet ready for the field. Bro. D. S. Mills is spending all the time possible in the field, but is much hindered by a bad leg. In his behalf I ask the prayers of the Saints everywhere, that he may be healed. You all know him in person or, by reputation. We can not spare him from the field without serious loss to the Pacific Coast. Bro. E. J. French is compelled to go east to market his honey. Of the five referred for appointment, only Bro. J. R. Badham has been provided for who will labor in Los Angeles and vicinity, but can only have Sunday for the ministry.

We have just received the sad news of the loss of one of our most efficient and able local laborers—Elder T. J. Andrews of San Francisco, who was called away in death August 27th. We fully concur in the sentiment expressed by Bro. H. P. Brown in a private communication, viz. "an irreparable loss." Few, if any who belong to the church but what have heard of the "good works" of Bro. T. J. Andrews. Many hearts will be made sad by the intelligence of his death. Those who have known him best will miss him most. We mourn, but not as those who have no hope. May God comfort the bereaved, and keep them to the end of the race.

I continued preaching in the Saints' Chapel in Stockton until I had preached eleven discourses, then went to the town of Peters, about twelve miles from Stockton, where I preached three times to small audiences. While at Peters we were the guests of Bro. Blake and family, who treated us very kindly. Went back to Stockton again for a few days, during which I preached two more discourses, then went to Mr. Copeland's near Burneyville, Stanislaus county, whose wife, (formerly Sr. Robbins) is a member of the church. I am indebted to Bro. Nightingale for conveyance to both Peters and Burneyville. He remained with me at Peters, and remained two days at Burneyville, rendering much needed assistance. At the latter place the union church, belonging to the Methodist and United Brethren was procured for us, and we enjoyed ourselves well while for eleven consecutive nights we broke the bread of life. This was a new place, none of our faith had ever been heard. The attendance was fair, considering that it was harvest time.

When the busy time is over that will be a splendid opening. We left some investigating. We were the guests of Mr. and Sr. Copeland and were well cared for. Mr. Copeland is not with us in faith, but is one of nature's noblemen. We shall long remember our stay on the banks of the Stanislaus. I preached twice more in Stockton en route to San Francisco, where we spent a few days, preaching once on the night of August 15th. When we met for the last time in earth-life our lamented Bro. Andrews, he administered to our wants; perhaps the last act of many of that kind. The 16th, at 12 o'clock, we were at Calistoga, en route for this place. Bro. John Cobb met us here, and soon we were on board his wagon and off for the mountains. Our route lay over the Saint Helena mountain, which we ascended by a zigzag road, occasionally getting a grand view of the valley below, and the town which we had left nestled at the foot of the opposite hills. That night we stayed and felt welcome at the house of Bro. George McKinly near Middletown.

The 17th we were at Bro. Cobb's about five miles from this place, by two o'clock p. m., where we rested a few days, and then held a series of nine meetings in Lower Lake, during which we were the guests of Bro. W. H. Adamson, who is the Principal of the High School here. We enjoyed his company, also that of his generous companion, (who is not a member), and our stay was very pleasant. We are now stopping at Bro.

J. M. Adamson's, near town, having an enjoyable rest. Hope to open a new place in Long Valley next Sunday. Not a drop of rain since we came to the state. Oh for a refreshing, dust-dampening shower.

In bonds,

Brn. Joseph Smith and W. W. Blair:—It is not often I trouble your columns to convey a few thoughts to the readers of the Herald; and for ought I know some of my brethren who have labored with me in the "old country," but who are now on your side of the great water, think me dead. Well, this will disabuse their minds, should any such idea have entered. Far, very far from being dead, so far as the work is concerned, and I hope that for very many years I shall be spared with full powers of mind and body to take active part in that which I love—the sowing of seeds of life eternal.

Our annual conference for 1886 is now a thing of the past; but it has left lasting memories of joy and gladness in the minds of all who were present. The general expression was, "It is the best conference held in this country." This expression always reminds me of my experience in the postal service. Whenever we received a fresh supply of uniform, the first thing we did was to examine the cloth as to quality, and the first thing we used to say was, "It's better than the last." And so it was, until it had been in wear awhile. Present experiences are often more appreciated than those of the past; but in the matter of our late conference this is not the case. The fact is we are getting better in all respects, year by year. Why, the other day I had occasion to refer to Herald, January 15th, 1872, and in turning over its pages for what I required I found it contained my first contribution to your pages. My letter was written November 23d, 1871, and in it occurs this passage: "If we could support our own mission, I doubt not a good work might be done here, with Bro. Thomas Taylor at our helm."

The present position of the English mission proves that my vision was not very cloudy at that time. Then there were but three branches in this country—England, viz. London, Birmingham and Hanley. Now there are fifteen. Of course Bro. Taylor has not done all the labor that has resulted in these fifteen branches, but he has been at the "helm," and his co-laborers have had confidence in his ability to steer, and that is one of the essentials to success. Well, lest some one should think I am unduly praising his past service, I will quit the personal aspect of the case and go on to give a resume of our late conference. It was held June 12th, 13th and 14th, the business part being held in the Saints Meeting Room, Temple Row, and the Sunday services in the Small Lecture Theatre of the Birmingham and Midland Institute. And here let me say, that the Institute is the next building to the Town Hall, and one of the most popular in Birmingham. It is the first time we have had the use of a Hall of any moment in Birmingham. So strong has been the prejudice against Latter Day Saints, because of the Utah abominations, that you could scarcely get intelligent people to listen to the claims of the Reorganization. We not only had to do battle with "voice and pen," but by living examples of the claims we make. Thank God we have been somewhat successful. We had the refusal of one of our Board Schools in which to hold conference, also the Masonic Hall. We could not hold it in all three, and so chose the above mentioned. No doubt you will agree with me that these are indications that prejudice is breaking up.

The meetings on Sunday were well attended. Morning and evening were preaching services. Afternoon, fellowship meetings. The word was meted out in due season by Brn. Joseph R. Greenwood, of Stafford and Joseph Ramsey of Bolton at the morning service, Bro Taylor being in charge. The brethren acquitted themselves as servants who are not ashamed of their calling. The discourses being grand in point of argument and force of expression, the Spirit's power was with them. Comparisons are odious. They were both good alike.

The afternoon fellowship meeting was in charge of "yours truly." It was indeed a time of refreshing from the Lord. Quite a number of brethren and sisters told their experience in the work and Church of Jesus Christ. The Spirit through tongues and interpretation spoke words of encouragement. There was no need to sing "I must not wait, for while I wait another waits for me," for it frequently happened that two, and sometimes three, rose at the same time. The general regret was, that circumstances and time did not admit of the meeting being prolonged to give all a chance of speaking. Well; we can't crowd all things in a nut-shell.

The evening meeting was in charge of the president, Bro. Taylor. Brethren George S. Greenwood of Stafford, and Joseph Dewsnap Sen., of Manchester were the speakers for the evening. Those present had the pleasure of listening to two well pointed discourses, such as could not fail to show anyone not willingly blind the right way into the kingdom of God.

Sister Emma Taylor presided at the Harmonium at each service in an efficient manner. The day was well spent, well appreciated, and will long be remembered. The Temple Row Meeting Room was transformed into a banqueting hall. To avoid much running about and to give all a chance of being present at each meeting, it was arranged that all who chose to could dine, etc., at the meeting Room. To that end we had catered for the inner man. Those of your readers who know what an English party is will be able to understand the thoroughness with which we enjoyed our "common meal." As I took a glance at the brethren and sisters around one "common table," each enjoying the food the more because blest by each others presence, I thought of the glorious time to be realized in the future, where our Lord and Master shall increase the joy of the festive board by his presence, and we shall feast at the supper of the Lamb. I believe that to eat in the society of one's closest friends is good for digestion. It is due to other parts of the mission to say that for years it has been our custom to so "banquet" at our annual conference I don't want you to know what we eat, nor how we eat, but thought I would let you know how we enjoyed ourselves. The business portion of our conference passed off in good style. We finished up with greater love for one another than we felt when we first convened, and we had no small portion when we commenced. Judging from the minutes of your general conference, as published in the Herald, we beat you in this respect. On some questions, debate waxed warm, but soon cooled down again, leaving no pain behind it.

Among the business done was the winding up of the Vindicator of Truth. We shall wind it up without much loss to any one, at least I may say there is no absolute loss on the issues, if we can sell those we have on hand. Perhaps it will interest some of your readers to know why it was ordered wound up. Well; the main reason is, because the badness of trade has so affected the brethren here that they could not sustain it. We have found that pecuniary irritations are the worst afflictions which any society can have; and so we decided not to embarrass ourselves. The Vindicator has done good, and if it could have braved the storm of these hard times would no doubt have become a powerful help to us. If circumstances in the future should warrant us taking it up again, we shall have another try. We are all sorry to abandon it, but its death will hurt no one.

The authorities of the church as sustained by the Annual General Conference of the church in America, April 1886, were sustained in proper order by vote. Bro. Thomas Taylor was sustained for the thirteenth time, as president of the English Mission. The resolution was carried with raising both hands and with acclamation. Had you been present you would have thought we had caught the enthusiasm of politics. Why should not Latter Day Saints be demonstrative in their appreciation of the services of their officers? I verily believe that we as a people fall short in our manner of showing approval of each others services. Some seem to think that the only thing we have to do with those who accept positions of responsibility from the hands of the people, is to be on the tiptoe of expectation that those so appointed can't perform the duties of such office. The best word some can say for one who fulfills his duty is, "Well, he has only done his duty; he'll have his reward." If we appoint men to do that for us as a body, which we can not do for ourselves in a collective capacity, we are in duty bound to honor those who faithfully look to our interests. It is useless to tell me that we ought not to pass "votes of thanks," and "of confidence" with enthusiasm because they are worldly forms. "Enthusiasm is to the efforts of man what oil is to the machine—it reduces the friction and prolongs it working powers. Who has not felt encouraged to renew a fight which had sickened the heart, by the kind and timely appreciation of his efforts. It will be a glorious day for us when we learn to trust the brethren we choose to lead with that healthy confidence which casteth out all unnecessary fear. With best love to all who have once labored amongst us, and for all the servants of God, I am as ever,

Your brother,

C. H. CATON, M. S.

BAPTISM.

SINCE having become a child of God through obedience to the gospel, I have found no greater pleasure than is afforded in prayerful meditation upon the word of God; and it has been a source of comfort to me to formulate the thoughts suggested to my mind in relation to the various subjects which serve in their respective places to constitute the entire gospel economy.

The development of recent circumstances have led me to a maturer reflection, and a more critical examination of the object of baptism, as shown forth in the three standard books of reference endorsed by the church of Christ. It will be admitted that the immediate and great design of the gospel is to rescue man from his fallen and sinful condition, and lead him back to his first estate. We are authorized to believe that in the councils of heaven it was determined how this could best be done, and just what means would prove most effective in reaching and rescuing the sons and daughters of men from the varied and various phases of sin that have in the past, and do now hold men in bondage, separated from the knowledge of God and the enjoyment of his presence. Authoritatively we have heard of one plan only, one gospel only which we have been led to believe contains, in its fulness and entirety, "the power of God unto salvation." We hail it as the messenger of peace which, without addition or subtraction is just equal to the emergency. Its analysis we think may be properly given thus:—The gospel is a message from God to man, by which the latter is apprised of his condition and made acquainted with the hope of a better life. It consists of facts and principles to be believed, ordinances and commandments to be obeyed, and promises to be fulfilled and realized. The great prototype of gospel ministration said: "For I have not spoken of myself; but the Father which sent me, he gave me a commandment what I should say and what I should speak. And I know that his commandment is life everlasting."—John 12: 49, 50. Chief among his co-laborers and successors in the divine service were the apostles whom he had chosen as the especial witnesses of his name. To these he "gave commandments," says Luke, "through the Holy Ghost." Acts 1:2. Matthew records:—"And Jesus came and spake unto them, saying, All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Go ye therefore and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost," &c. And Mark says: "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned."

Some very important conclusions then are easily and safely reached. (1) It was the mission of Jesus to teach his Father's commandments. (2) The Twelve were commanded to go into all the world and "teach the nations," "preach the gospel." (3) Among other things they were commanded to teach and administer the rite of baptism. (4) As the gospel is an authoritative message, the "nations were commanded to observe this ordinance. (5) Those who rejected this message of life and believed not, were condemned. "The conclusion of the whole matter" seems inevitable, that as baptism is a factor in the gospel economy and is binding upon all who hear it authoritatively declared, there is no salvation without it promised to men.

In speaking of essentials, Jesus said a man must be born again. "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he can not enter into the kingdom of God."—John 3:5. Peter, laboring under the strict injunction of his Master, and in fellowship with the Holy Spirit, said, "Repent and be baptized every one of you." No exceptions were made. Ananias commanded the repentant Saul, "And now why tarriest thou? Arise and be baptized." Lest there still should be doubt upon this matter, we present the language of Jesus found in John 14:21. "He that hath my commandments and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me; [by this we are to know whether we love him or not]; and he that loveth me shall be loved of my Father, and I will love him and will manifest myself to him." Let this suffice as to the necessity of baptism.

Next we shall collate some scriptures having relation to the object of this ordinance, and the relationship it bears to the forgiveness of sins. There was no greater prophet born of woman than John the Baptist. This man was "sent from God." "The same came for a witness, to bear witness of the light, that all men through him might believe." His wondrous proclamation was, "Repent ye for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." On the banks of the flowing Jordan this man of God proclaimed the wonderful words of life. Hark! Floating down through the ages we hear by the ear of faith the heavenly tidings of life and peace. No discordant sound breaks upon the ear, for it is the music of heaven; its vibrations thrill our souls with joy. As the pellucid waters issue from the high mountain, flowing in bounteous volume to the valleys below, so is the matchless love of God revealed, and like the crystal flood it wends its way in search of lowly places to comfort the poor in spirit and to enrich the treasure of the soul with the jewels of hope, faith and charity. O, then let us listen to the behest of heaven! Surely it shall be good news, and tidings of great joy to all people. Yes, tidings from the "summer land," the heaven of heavens where God and Christ are judge of all, are friends to all, and whose radiance illumines every eye and penetrates the recesses of every heart. John came preparing the "way of the Lord." How many now are in search of the "way of the Lord?" How many are willing to walk in the narrow way that leads to life? How many are willing to obey God rather than man? Who is it that dares to do right and face a frowning world? Let every man examine his own heart, and determine his own good pleasure in this matter. None are compelled. "Tis all free grace and all free will," and "whosoever will may come." Men have "sought out many inventions," but John the forerunner of Christ came with tidings from the Most High. Note the following: "The word of God came unto John, the son of Zacharias, in the wilderness." This denotes a call or commission from God. "And he came into all the country about Jordan, preaching the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins,"—which signifies obedience on the part of John to the Divine call. See Luke 3:2, 3. The inference then is justifiable, that in teaching the people "the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins," this lowly messenger was fulfilling the commands of God to him. The clause "the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins" is a condensed summary of what John preached, and its solution must be had by reference to other authorized statements which explain its meaning. Please read Matthew 3d chapter, the leading features of which we give as follows: First; the appearance of John as a spiritual commander to the people. Second; his command to the people to repent. Third; the baptism of the people following, they confessing their sins, showing that they felt the force of his command and the necessity of baptism. Fourth; Jesus responds to the general call, not because he had sinned; but because it "becometh us [himself and others] to fulfill all righteousness.

In the history of these remarkable events as given by the four evangelists, the distinct ideas of faith, repentance, and baptism for the remission of sins, are so clearly presented that their import and relation are not easily misunderstood by the truth loving. There is much caviling with reference to the use of the preposition "for," showing the relation of "baptism" to the "remission of sins;" some claiming that baptism may be administered because our sins are previously remitted or pardoned through faith on the Lord Jesus Christ. We are willing to submit the matter to Peter, whom we adduce as competent authority. Acts, chapter 2, should be read carefully, from which with other scriptures, we glean these prominent points: (1) the disciples were gathered in one place to receive the promised endowment of the Holy Spirit. (2) When this visitation came upon them, it not only confirmed them, but convinced others, many of whom began to inquire the way of life. (3) That these anxious enquirers had felt the quickening, confirming and convincing power of the gospel it would be folly to deny, yet they did not feel themselves saved, nor did the apostles encourage them to so believe. Further, they were not instructed to seek salvation by faith exercised only in prayer, notwithstanding the Lord was nigh them, and his presence was felt in the assembly; but rather the plain and stern facts of obedience were presented as the only way of escape from spiritual bondage, and way of entrance into the light and liberty of the gospel.

With proper deference for the feelings, views, and religious experiences of others, we can not well forbear contrasting the present mode of teaching with the primitive rule of action in religious seeking. "Then said Jesus to those Jews which believed on him, If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."—John 8:31, 32. This shows conclusively that the mere "apprehension of Christ" did not save those Jews. They must continue in Christ's word ere they had the promise. The word "then" as here used is an adverb of time, pointing to the future to be determined by their faithfulness and obedience to the law of life, and fixes the time of their acceptance with God as the followers of his Son, to correspond with the date when they should honor his word as well as to extol his name. Those enquirers on Pentecost day were not encouraged to think themselves "disciples indeed" simply because of their belief in Christ as the Savior of men. Far from it. They were taught to continue in his word, with the promise of receiving the Holy Ghost upon the common terms of the gospel. "Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." This language of Peter corresponds with the spiritual import of Jesus' teaching to those Jews who believed on him. Jesus' "word" was no more nor less than the gospel as taught by Peter. By continuing in this word they were to "know the truth" and be made "free," a gift and a condition that can be realized through the Holy Ghost only. Supposing that Peter had been orthodox according to modern interpretation and prejudice; doubtless he would have said to those who "were pricked in their hearts," "Pray on, and continue to pray until you receive the Holy Ghost, and then you are saved. Baptism may follow then as a profession or confession of faith; not because it contains any saving qualities, however," &c.

We are compelled by the preponderance of evidence to think that modern orthodoxy, so-called, is heterodoxy in fact, because it is simply the state of affairs after their "turning of things upside down." They have "got the cart before the horse."

The objector to a rigid gospel economy will urge that Cornelius and his household received the Holy Ghost prior to baptism. And so they did, but why mistake an exception for the rule? And who is authorized to preach to people anything but the rule as a guide to life eternal? The right of exception belongs to God who gave the rule and to no one else. It is becoming to us to enter the sheepfold "by the door," and not seek to "climb up some other way."

We may engage to work for some wealthy employer who, seeing our poverty is moved to compassion and out of the bountifulness of his heart is led to advance us a sum of money, before we have done anything to merit it; but would this lessen our obligation? No, surely not,—increase it rather many fold. Would it be considered a mark of honesty to seek to evade the just terms of the man who had befriended us? For one to feast himself continually upon the extreme charity of any institution is reprehensible. A willing hand and heart are very essential in the acceptable service of God. If our study has been "What must I do in order to evade the just anathema of God?" we would do well to amend by the self-interrogation, "What can I do to please my Heavenly Father who has done so much for me?"

The following has been given to the church as the rule of action for inducting people into the kingdom of God:—"All those who humble themselves before God and desire to be baptized, and come forth with broken hearts and contrite spirits, and witness before the church that they have truly repented of all their sins, and are willing to take upon them the name of Jesus Christ, having a determination to serve Him to the end; and truly manifest by their works that they have received of the Spirit of Christ unto the remission of their sins, shall be received by baptism into the church."—D. C. sec. 17, par. 7.

Jesus taught Nicodemus that a man must be born again ere he could see the kingdom of God, but notwithstanding this spiritual birth or transition from a condition of darkness into one of light and understanding, it was further necessary to be "born of water and of the Spirit as a means of entrance into the kingdom of God's dear Son." Could a man enter the church properly without having received the spirit of the work? I think not. "The goodness of God leadeth thee to repentance." But how is the goodness of God to be known or believed without the spirit of the gospel operating upon the mind and heart?

Faith in God is born of evidence portrayed in the plan of God—the gospel. By the preaching of the word the seed or germ of life is sown or planted in the human heart. It is the voice of God to those who hear and understand—the assurance from on high that God is, and that he is the Savior of men. And any effort whatever that may be made in the way of gospel ministration unaccompanied by the convicting power of the gospel, is no gospel at all. The word need not necessarily be proclaimed in thundering tones to signify the presence of the Holy Spirit. "Faith, hope, charity and love" together with a prescience and discernment that enable the man of God to present "meat in due season" evidences the wisdom of the Spirit. "The peaceable things of the kingdom" are the ordinary and most digestible food promoting spiritual growth and stability in the service of God.

The Book of Mormon reflects additional light with regard to the design of baptism. "And Nephi did cry unto the people in the commencement of the thirty and third year; and he did preach unto them repentance and remission of sins. Now I would have you remember also that there were none who were brought unto repentance, who were not baptized with water; therefore there were men ordained of Nephi, men unto this ministry, that all such as should come unto them, should be baptized with water, and this as a witness and a testimony before God, and unto the people, that they had repented and received a remission of their sins."—Book of Nephi 3-10.

A fair interpretation of this it seems to me is, that in the gospel covenant God had so pledged himself that the people were to understand that in the act of baptism the sins of the repentant were pardoned. This ordinance stood as a witness in the sight of God and men of voluntary acceptance of the gospel and consequent pardon.

Alma taught the same in substance: "Now I say unto you that ye must repent, and be born again; for the Spirit saith, if ye are not born again ye can not inherit the kingdom of heaven; therefore come and be baptized unto repentance, that ye may be washed from your sins, that ye may have faith on the Lamb of God who taketh away the sins of the world, who is mighty to save and to cleanse from all unrighteousness; yea I say unto you, come and fear not, and lay aside every sin which easily doth beset you which doth bind you down to destruction; yea come and go forth and show unto your God that ye are willing to repent of your sins, and enter into a covenant with him to keep his commandments, and witness it unto him this day by going into the waters of baptism."—Alma 5:3.

"And now, why tarriest thou? Arise and be baptized and wash away thy sins."—GEO. S. HYDE.

SUNDAY SCHOOLS—HOW SHOULD THEY BE CONDUCTED?

In a former article I endeavored to show that the Sunday schools as now conducted were very largely a failure in laying the foundation for Christ-like character; and that in order to make them helps and governments in the church it would be necessary to make radical changes, not only in the way of conducting the schools, but also in the character of the literature used; for it is a well established fact that the literature read enters largely into the warp and woof of the character formed. And the Christ-like character being the whole design of these schools the ways and means used in founding this character should be carefully selected, and it should be seen to that no fictitious trash, no moral or religious lie, be it great or small, though well spun and lined with truths should be suffered. The fact that such are simply fabrications and not solid truths should totally debar them from the Sunday School, and from the home also.

A reformed Sunday School with its reformed literature must be brought into the family, and the family must be brought into the Sunday School, for it is utterly impossible for the school to counteract in one hour the home influences of a week. The question resolves itself into this, that the Sunday Schools in order to become helps to the church must first be brought into the the home and commence their work there, and there lay the foundation with both old and young that is to be built upon. And as I write methinks I hear some say, "This is all very good logic, looks well on paper, but how are we to take these reformed Sunday Schools with their reformed literature into the homes?" Well, if we can not find some means to accomplish this, our Sunday Schools are only a farce and are simply an hour's Sunday amusement and a plausible excuse to the children for non-attendance at our sacrament and other meetings with their parents.

How shall we connect the Sunday School with the home? In 1 Cor. 12: 28 it is said there were teachers, helps and governments; and in Ephesians 4: 11, 12, "pastors and teachers, for the edifying of the body of Christ;" and in the Book of Covenants we find one of the Priests duties is to visit the house of each member and exhort them to pray vocally and in secret, and attend to all family duties; and the Teachers and Deacons are to assist the Priests in all their duties. The Teacher is to be with the church always, and to see that there is no iniquity in the church. As the children are a part of the family, so the family are a part of the church, the body of Christ. And is it not the duty of the Priests, Teachers, and Deacons, in conjunction with the parents and the Pastor to see that the children of every family in the church are laying a foundation for this Christ-like character that is so essential to membership in the church when arriving at the age of discretion? Now, in order to accomplish this, I believe that it is the duty of the church when in General Conference assembled to take such steps as will produce a thorough and radical reform, not only in the way of conducting the schools, but also in the way of conducting the homes, and their literature, and I further believe that it is the duty of Pastors, Priests, Teachers, and Deacons in every branch of the church, to take charge not only of the branch, (i. e., being in their places in their meeting two or three times a week), but they should take charge of the Sunday Schools also, and see to it that the church government is carried into every home, and there, by the grace of God and prayer, when the family are called together, lay the foundation for this character with both old and young. And there in the family circle, in conjunction with the parents, "Thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up. And thou shalt bind them for a sign upon thine hand and they shall be as frontlets between thine eyes and thou shalt write them upon the posts of thy houses and upon thy gates."—Deut. 6: 7, 8, 9.

Thus we connect the church, the homes, and the Sunday Schools inseparably together. The Pastors, Priests, Teachers, and Deacons should not be allowed to shift this most important duty of the church in formation of true Christian character upon the shoulders of some inexperienced young brother or sister, but they should learn a lesson from the Jew and Catholic who have been the most successful in holding and controlling their people. And how have they accomplished this end? Was it by separating the church, the homes, and the Sunday School? No; that would have done for them just what it has for the Protestants and is doing for us. The Jewish Priests, by entering into the homes and there with the influence of the parents and by example and precept, teaching the law of Moses to the children and the parents have indelibly stamped the Jewish character upon their children, both in church and nationality, for over four thousand years. The Catholic Priests have not only carried their doctrine into the home and family, but have carried it into the Sunday and parochial schools also. And thus their character is stamped upon their children; and they make their boast that "once a Catholic, always a Catholic." "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he reap. He that soweth thistles in youth, must reap the same in old age."

A GLANCE AT THE PAST, PRESENT, AND PROBABLE FUTURE.

FROM profane history we learn that civilization has at different times and in different places attained a great height, and also that just as often as it has risen it has likewise fallen. From sacred history we learn that a great portion of humanity has always lived in expectation of "a good time coming." The same history also informs us that the wisest man who ever lived, the great temple builder, said, "All is vanity," "man has no pre-eminence above the beast, as the one dieth, so dieth the other, all go to one place." In another place he tells us, "There is a time to tear down and a time to build up." Again, he asks, "Who knoweth the spirit of man that goeth upwards, or the spirit of the beast that goeth downward to the earth?" In another place he says, "There is nothing new under the sun, nothing but had been and would be again."

What did Solomon mean by saying "all is vanity." To me it appears he meant about the same as Shakspeare in his "We are shadows in pursuit of shadows;" that the great happiness to which most of us were looking forward, never did and never would materialize. Whilst we gain in one respect we lose equally in others. All our preachers, lecturers, public men and women generally are working for the benefit of humanity; nevertheless, taking the people of our country in the aggregate, the relative proportions of good and evil, joy and sorrow are, I have no doubt, just about the same now as they always were. "A time to tear down and a time to build up." By that doubtless he meant a time for civilization to decline and a time for it to rise again. "Nothing new under the sun, nothing but had been and would be again." A not very "dark saying" which appears to plainly mean that civilization is one eternal round. Some will ask, Do you mean to say that the condition of humanity within the pale of christianity is no happier now than it was in the days of the Inquisition? I do most emphatically.

In the days of the Inquisition people were tortured and often had their bodies destroyed for heresy; nowadays thousands are having their souls tortured and frequently destroyed by heresy, or the distracted condition of religious faith. We find physicians by the dozen in all our large cities who make a specialty of treating the various physical weaknesses which form the stepping stones to insanity; and those among them who are best able to know, deplore the fact, that notwithstanding our high state of civilization, insanity is largely on the increase, yet they can not divine the cause or causes. The insane suffer thousands of deaths. It is generally admitted by thinking people that there is a growing weakness attendant upon rising civilization; through this most of us are by birth predisposed to one affection or another. It was my misfortune to come into this world with a nervous, active, inquiring, ambitious mind and a weak body. I had a marked tendency for the study of mathematics, afterwards for human nature, and later for metaphysics. The thinness of the religious faith to which I had been brought up caused it to lose all restraint upon me. I cut loose and on my own hook endeavored to solve the great questions: What am I? Whence did I come? and whither shall I go? About the time I had those questions solved to my entire satisfaction I turned up missing, one fine morning and did not find myself again for about four days. What comfort or consolation others, with thicker hides, may find in atheism, I know not. There was nothing there for me, though I explored the regions thoroughly. I am not afraid of any of her advocates of to-day being able to show me any new beauties in her. About that time I came to the conclusion that the shadow I had been pursuing proved to be not even the shade of a shadow. A kind providence had so constituted and circumstanced me that I was enabled to turn and court what I had been pleased to call the shades of superstition. "Doubt may be the portal to truth," happiness is what I want and I prefer risking my chances on basking in the smiles of faith, hope and love, even though they have often proved delusive, mere castles in the air. In the storms through which I have passed, I have lost my hope of immortality, yet a kind providence seems to comfort me. I feel my loss is great, nevertheless I feel there is a divinity rules all things; one who is cognizant of and interested in my individuality; one who hears and answers prayers. If this be a delusion my prayer is, Good God, permit me to retain it. Happiness is what I want. If I'm deluded, then it is better to be bamboozled into happiness than reasoned into wretchedness. I know I am dependent upon something over which I have no control, for life and all I have. It is pleasant to feel that that something is a living intelligence which can be supplicated though not compelled by men. There are but few of us when in a tight place who will not silently, if not aloud, call upon God for aid. Are we not miserable cowards? If afraid to acknowledge him when we are in health and enjoyment. Life is a blessing even to me and from my inmost being I thank God for it. Nothing would please me better than to see all people who are thankful for their existence, whether they believe in a future state or not, unite in praise to our common Creator and supplicate him for temporal blessings. I am confident it would create a good feeling. "The mills of the gods grind slowly." Whether civilization be in the ascendant or descendant at the present time, I do not know; one thing I am sure of is that a spirit of beastliness is fast taking possession of the people, which will take humanity downward to the earth again. It is quite probable that the new beast may in course of time see the necessity of religion, establish a church and promote ignorance and superstition. PHILLOS.

THE BIBLE THE KING OF BOOKS.

IT IS CORRECT IN ITS STYLE, FOR IT TELLS A CONTINUOUS STORY FROM GENESIS TO REVELATIONS.

LAKESIDE, O, Aug. 1st.—Vast throngs of people came here to-day from all parts of the country to hear the Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, D. D., of Brooklyn, N. Y. This place is a summer encampment on the Chautauqua plan, where meetings are held for several weeks, and the visitors employ their time in bible study and in listening to scientific lectures. Many of the guests spend the whole summer here. The subject of Dr. Talmage's sermon was, "The King of Books," and the text from Psalm 19: 8; "The statutes of the Lord are right." Following is the sermon in full:

Old books go out of date. When they were written they discussed questions which were being discussed; they struck at wrongs which had long ago ceased, or advocated institutions which excite not our interest. Were they books of history, the facts have been gathered from the imperfect mass, better classified and more lucidly presented. Were they books of poetry, they were interlocked with wild mythologies which have gone up from the face of the earth like mists at sunrise. Were they books of morals, civilization will not sit at the feet of barbarism, neither do we want Sappho, Pythagoras and Tully to teach us morals. What do the masses of the people care now for the pathos of Simonides, or the sarcasm of Menander, or the gracefulness of Philemon, or the wit of Aristophanes? Even the old books we have left, with a few exceptions, have but very little effect upon our times. Books are human; they have a time to be born, they are fondled, they grow in strength, they have a middle life of usefulness; then comes old age, they totter and die. Many of the national libraries are merely the cemeteries of dead books. Some of them lived flagitious lives and died deaths of ignominy. Some were virtuous and accomplished a glorious mission. Some went into the ashes through inquisitorial fires. Some found their funeral pile in sacked and plundered cities. Some were neglected and died as foundlings at the door of science.

Some expired in the author's study, others in the publisher's hands. Ever and anon there comes into your possession an old book, its author forgotten and its usefulness done, and with leathern lips it seems to say: "I wish I were dead." Monuments have been raised over poets and philanthropists. Would that some tall shaft might be erected in honor of the worlds buried books! The world's authors would make pilgrimages thereto, and poetry and literature and science and religion would consecrate it with their tears.

Not so with one old book. It started in the world's infancy. It grew under the theocracy and monarchy. It withstood storms of fire. It grew under prophet's mantle and under the fisherman's coat of the apostles; in Rome, and Ephesus, and Jerusalem, and Patmos. Tyranny issued edicts against it, and infidelity put out the tongue, and Mohammedanism, from its mosques hurled its anathemas, but the old bible still lived. It crossed the British channel and was greeted by Wicliffe and James I. It crossed the Atlantic and struck Plymouth Rock, until like that of Horeb it is gushed with blessedness. Churches and asylums have gathered all along its way, ringing their bells and stretching out their hands of blessing; and every Sabbath there are ten thousand heralds of the cross with their hands on this open, grand, free old English bible. But it will not have accomplished its mission until it has climbed the icy mountains of Greenland; until it has gone over the granite cliffs of China; until it has thrown its glory amid the Australian mines; until it has scattered its gems among the diamond districts of Brazil; and all thrones shall be gathered into one throne, and all crowns by the fires of revolution shall be melted into one crown, and this book shall at the very gate of heaven have waved in the ransomed empires. Not until then will this glorious bible have accomplished its mission.

In carrying out, then, the idea of my text—"The statutes of the Lord are right"—I shall show you that the bible is right in authentication, that it is right in style, that it is right in doctrine, that it is right in its effects.

I. Can you doubt the authenticity of the scriptures? There is not so much evidence that Walter Scott wrote "The Lady of the Lake;" not so much evidence that Shakspeare wrote "Hamlet;" not so much evidence that John Milton wrote "Paradise Lost," as there is evidence that the Lord God Almighty, by the hands of the prophets, evangelists and apostles, wrote this book.

Suppose a book now to be written which came in conflict with a great many things, and was written by bad men or impostors, how long would such a book stand? It would be scouted by everybody. And I say if that Bible had been an imposition; or if it had not been written by the men who said they wrote it; if it had been a mere collection of falsehoods, do you not suppose that it would have been immediately rejected by the people? If Job, and Isaiah, and Jeremiah, and Paul, and Peter, and John were impostors they would have been scouted by generations and nations. If that book has come down through fires of centuries without a scar, it is because there is nothing in it destructible. How near have they come to destroying the bible? When they began their opposition there were two or three thousand copies of it. Now there are two hundred millions, as near as I can calculate. These bible truths, notwithstanding all the opposition, have gone into all languages—into the philosophic Greek, the flowing Italian, the graceful German, the passionate French, the picturesque Indian and the exhaustless Aoglo-Saxon. Under the painter's pencil the birth and the crucifixion and the resurrection glow on the walls of palaces; or under the engraver's knife speak from the mantel of the mountain cabin; while stones, touched by the sculptor's chisel, start up into preaching apostles and ascending martyrs. Now, do you not suppose, if that book had been an imposition and a falsehood, it would have gone down under these ceaseless fires of opposition?

Further, suppose that there was a great pestilence going over the earth, and hundreds of thousands of men were dying of that pestilence, and some one should find a medicine that cured ten thousand people, would not everybody acknowledge that that must be a good medicine? Why, some one would say: "Do you deny it? There have been ten thousand people cured by it." I simply state the fact that there have been hundreds of thousands of Christian men and women who say that they have felt the truthfulness of that book and its power in their souls. It has cured them of the worst leprosy that ever came down on our earth, namely, the leprosy of sin; and if I can point you to multitudes who say they have felt the power of that cure, are you not reasonable enough to acknowledge the fact that there must be some power in the medicine? Will you take the evidence of millions of patients who have been cured, or will you take the evidence of the skeptic who stands aloof and confesses that he never took the medicine?

The bible intimates that there was a city called Petra, built out of solid rock. Infidelity scoffed at it. "Where is your city of Petra?" Buckhardt and Laborde went forth in their explorations and they came upon that very city. The mountains stand around like giants guarding the tomb where the city is buried. They find a street in that city six miles long, where once flashed imperial pomp and which echoed with the laughter of light-hearted mirth on its way to the theater. On temples fashioned out of colored stones, some of which have blushed into the crimson of the rose, and some of which have paled into the whiteness of the lily—aye, on column, and pediment, and entablature, and statuary, God writes the truth of the bible.

The Bible says that Sodom and Gomorrah were destroyed by fire and brimstone. "Absurd," infidels year after year said. "It is positively absurd that they could have been destroyed by brimstone. There is nothing in the elements to cause such a shower of death as that." Lieut. Lynch—I think he was the first man who went out on the discovery, but he has been followed by several others. Lieut. Lynch went out in exploration and came to the Dead Sea, which, by a convulsion of nature, has overflowed the place where the cities once stood. He sank his fathom-coming line and brought up from the bottom of the Dead Sea great masses of sulphur; remnants of that very tempest that swept Sodom and Gomorrah to ruin. Who was right, the bible that announced the destruction of those cities or the skeptic who for ages scoffed it?

The Bible states there was a city called Nineveh, and that it was three days journey around it, and that it should be destroyed by fire and water.

"Absurd," cried out hundreds of voices for many years, "no such a city was ever built that it would take three days' journey to go around. Besides, it could not be destroyed by fire and water; they are antagonistic elements. But Layard, Botta and Keith go out, and by their explorations they find that city of Nineveh, and they tell us that by their own experiment it is three days' journey around, according to the old estimate of a days' journey, and that it was literally destroyed by fire and water—two antagonistic elements—a part of the city having been inundated by the river Tigris, the brick material in those times being dried clay instead of burned, while in other parts they find remains of the fire in heaps of charcoal that have been excavated, and in the calcined slabs of gypsum. Who was right, the bible or infidelity?

Moses intimated that they had vineyards in Egypt. "Absurd," cried hundreds of voices; "you can't raise grapes in Egypt; or, if you can, it is a very great exception that you can raise them." But the traveler goes down, and in the undergrounds vaults of Eilithya he finds painted on the wall all the process of tending the vines and treading out the grapes. It is all there, familiarly sketched by people who evidently knew all about it, and saw it all about them every day; and in those underground vaults there are vases still encrusted with the settlings of the wine. You see the vine did grow in Egypt, whether it grows there now or not.

Thus you see that while God wrote the bible, at the same time He wrote this commentary, that "statutes of the Lord are right," on leaves of rock and shell, bound in clasps of metal, and lying on mountain tables and in the jeweled vase of the sea. In authenticity and in genuineness the statutes of the Lord are right.

2. Again: The bible is right in style. I know there are a great many people who think it is merely a collection of genealogical tables and dry facts. That is because they do not know how to read the book. You take up the most interesting novel that was ever written, and if you commence at the 400th page to-day, and to-morrow at the 300th, and the next day at the first page, how much sense or interest would you get from it? Yet that is the very process to which the bible is subjected every day. An angel from heaven, reading the bible in that way, could not understand it. The bible, like all other palaces, has a door by which to enter, and a door by which to go out. Genesis is the door to go in, and Revelation the door to go out.

These Epistles of Paul the Apostle are merely letters written, folded up and sent by postmen to the different churches. Do you read other letters the way you read Paul's letters? Suppose you get a business letter, and you know that in it there are important financial propositions, do you read the last page first, and then one line of the third, and another of the second, and another of the first? No. You begin with "Dear sir" and end with "Yours truly." Now, here is a letter written from the throne of God to our lost world: it is full of magnificent hopes and propositions, and we dip in here and there and we know nothing about it. Besides that, people read the bible when they cannot do anything else. It is a dark day and they do not feel well, and they do not go to business, and after lounging about a bit they pick up the bible—their mind refuses to enjoy the truth. Or they come home weary from the store or shop and they feel, if they do not say, it is a dull book. While the bible is to be read on stormy days and while your head aches, it is also to be read in the sunshine and when your nerves like harp-strings thrum the song of health. While your vision is clear, walk in this paradise of truth, and while your mental appetite is good pluck these clusters of grace.

I am fascinated with the conciseness of this book. Every word is packed full of truth. Every sentence is double-barreled. Every paragraph is like an old banyan tree with a hundred roots and a hundred branches. It is a great arch; pull out one stone and it all comes down.

There has never been a pearl diver who could gather up one-half of the treasures in any verse. John Halsebach of Vienna for twenty-one years every Sabbath expounded to his congregation the first chapter of the Book of Isaiah, and yet did not get through with it. Nine-tenths of all the good literature of the age is merely the bible diluted.

Goethe, the admired of all skeptics, had the wall of his house at Weimar covered with religious maps and pictures. Milton's Paradise Lost is part of the bible in blank verse. Tasso's Jerusalem Delivered is borrowed from the bible. Spencer's writings are imitations of the parables. John Bunyan saw in a dream only what Saint John had seen before in apocalyptic vision. Macaulay crowns his most gigantic sentences with scriptural quotations. Through Addison's Spectator there glances in and out the stream that broke from the throne of God, clear as crystal. Walter Scott's best characters are bible men and women under different names, as Meg Merrilies, the witch of Endor. Shakspeare's Lady Macbeth was Jezebel. Hobbes stole from this castle of truth the weapons with which he afterwards assaulted it. Lord Byron caught the ruggedness and majesty of his style from the prophecies. The writings of Pope are saturated with Isaiah, and he finds his most successful theme in the Messiah. The poets Thomson and Johnson dipped their pens in the style of the inspired Orientals. Thomas Carlyle is only a splendid distortion of Ezekiel; and wandering through the lanes and parks of this imperial domain of bible truth, I find all the great American, English, German, Spanish, Italian poets, painters, orators and rhetoricians.

Where is there in the world of poetic description anything like Job's champing, neighing, pawing, lightning-footed, thunder-necked war horse? Dryden's, Milton's Cowper's tempests are very tame compared with David's storm that wrecks the mountains of Lebanon and shivers the wilderness of Cadish. Why, it seems as if to the feet of these bible writers mountains brought all their gems, and the seas all their pearls, and the gardens all their frankincense, and the spring all its blossoms, and the harvests all their wealth, and heaven all its grandeur, and eternity all its stupendous realities; and that since then poets, and orators, and rhetoricians have been drinking from exhausted fountains, and searching for diamonds in a realm utterly rifled and ransacked.

This book is the hive of all sweetness. It is the armory of all well-tempered weapons. It is the tower containing the crown jewels of the universe. It is the lamp that kindles all other lights. It is the home of all majesties and splendors. It is the marriage ring that unites the celestial and terrestrial, while all the clustering white-robed denizens of the sky hovering around rejoice at the nuptials. This book, it is the wreath into which are twisted all garlands; it is the song into which are struck all harmonies; it is the river into which are poured all the great tides of hallelujahs; it is the firmament in which suns and moons, and stars and constellations and universe and eternities wheel and blaze and triumph. Where is the young man's soul with any music in it that is not stirred with Jacob's lament, or Nahum's dirge, or Habakkuk's dithyrambic, or Paul's march of the resurrection, or John's anthem where the elders with doxology on their faces respond to the trumpet blast of the archangel as he stands with one foot on the sea and the other foot on the land, swearing by him that liveth forever and ever that time shall be no longer?

I am also amazed at the variety of this book. Mind you, not contradiction or collision, but variety. Just as in the song, you have the basso and alto and soprano and tenor—they are not in collision with each other, but come in to make up the harmony—so it is in this book; there are different parts of this great song of redemption. The prophet comes and takes one part, and the patriarch another part, and the evangelist another part, and the apostles another part, and yet they all come into the grand harmony—"the song of Moses and the Lamb." If God had inspired men of the same temperament to write this book, it might have been monotonous; but David, and Isaiah, and Peter, and Job, and Ezekiel, and Paul, and John were men of different temperaments, and so, when God inspired them to write, they wrote in their own style.

God prepared the book for all classes of people. For instance, little children would read the bible, and God knew that; so he allows Matthew and Luke to write sweet stories about Christ with the doctors of the law, and Christ at the well, and Christ at the cross, so that any little child can understand them. Then God knew that the aged people would want to read the book, so he allows Solomon to compact a world of wisdom in that book of Proverbs. God knew that the historian would want to read it, and so he allows Moses to give the plain statement of the Pentateuch. God knew that the poet would want to read it, and so he allows Job to picture the heavens as a curtain, and Isaiah the mountains as weighed in a balance, and the waters as held in the hollow of the Omnipotent hand; and God touched David until, in the latter part of the psalms, he gathers a great choir standing in galleries above each other—beasts and men in the first gallery; above them hills and mountains; above them, fire and hail and tempests; above them, sun and moon and stars of light; and on the highest gallery arrays the hosts of angels; and then, standing before this great choir, reaching from the depths of the earth to the heights of heaven, like the leader of a great orchestra, he lifts his hands and crying: "Praise the Lord. Let everything that hath breath praise ye the Lord;" and all earthly creatures in their song, and mountains with their waving cedars, and tempests in their thunder, and rattling hail, and stars on all their trembling harps of light, and angels on their throne, respond in magnificent acclaim: "Praise ye the Lord. Let everything that hath breath, praise the Lord."

God knew that the pensive and complaining world would want to read it, and so he inspires Jeremiah to write: "Oh, that my head were waters and mine eyes fountains of tears!" God knew that the lovers of the wild, the romantic and the strange would want to read it, so he lets Ezekiel write of mysterious rolls, and winged creatures, and flying wheels of fire. God prepared it for all zones—for the arctic and the tropic, as well as for the temperate zone. Cold-blooded Greenlanders would find much to interest them and the tanned inhabitant at the equator would find his passionate nature boil with the vehemence of the heavenly truth. The Arabian would read it on his dromedary, and the Laplander seated on the swift sled, and the herdsman of Holland guarding the cattle in the grass, and the Swiss girl reclining amid Alpine crags. Oh, when I see that the bible is suited in style, exactly suited, to all ages, to all conditions, to all lands, I cannot help repeating the conclusion of my text: "The statutes of the Lord are right."

3. I remark again: The bible is right in its doctrines. Man, a sinner; Christ, a savior—the two doctrines. Man must come down—his pride, his self-righteousness, his worldliness; Christ, the anointed, must go up. If it had not been for the setting forth of the atonement, Moses would never have described the creation; prophets would not have predicted; apostles would not have preached. It seems to me as if Jesus in the bible were standing on a platform in a great amphitheater, as if the prophets were behind him, throwing light forward on his sacred person, and as if the apostles and evangelists stood before Him, like footlights, throwing up their light into His blessed countenance, and then as if all the earth and heaven were applauding auditory. The bible speaks of Pisgah, and Carmel, and Sinai, but makes all mountains bow down to Calvary. The flocks led over the Judean hills were emblems of "the Lamb of God that taketh away the sins of the world;" and the lion leaping out of its lair was an emblem of "the lion of Judah's tribe." I will in the next breath recite to you the most wonderful sentence ever written: "This is a faithful saying and worthy of all acceptance, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners." No wonder that when Jesus was born in Bethlehem, heaven sympathized with earth, and a wave of joy dashed clear over the battlements and dripped upon the shepherds in the words: "Glory to God in the highest and on earth, peace, good will towards men." In my next sentence every word weighs a ton: "God so loved the world that He gave His only begot son, that whomsoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life." Show me any other book with such a doctrine, so high, so deep, so vast.

4. Again. The bible is right in its effects. I do not care where you put the bible, it just suits the place. You put it in the hands of a man seriously concerned about his soul. I see people often giving to the serious soul this and that book. It may be very well, but there is no book like the bible. He reads the commandments and pleads to the indictment, "guilty." He takes the Psalms of David and says: "They just describe my feelings." He flies to good works. Paul starts him out of that by the announcement: "A man is not justified by works." He falls back in his discouragement; the bible starts him up with the sentences: "Remember Lot's wife;" "Grieve not the Spirit;" "Flee the wrath to come." Then the man in despair begins to cry out: "What shall I do? where shall I go? and a voice reaches him saying: "Come unto me all ye who are weary and heavy laden and I will give you rest."

Take this bible and place it in the hands of men in trouble. Is there anybody here in trouble? Ah, I might better ask, are there any here who have never been in trouble.

Put this book in the hands of the troubled. You find that as some of the best berries grow on the sharpest thorns, so some of the sweetest consolations of the gospel grow on the most stinging affliction. You thought that death had grasped your child. Oh, no! It was only a heavenly shepherd taking a lamb out of the cold. Christ bent over you as you held the child in your lap, and putting His arms gently around the little one, said: "Of such is the kingdom of heaven."

Put the bible in the school. Palsied be the hand that would take the bible from the college and the school. Educate only a man's head and you make him an infidel. Educate only a man's heart and you make him a fanatic. Educate them both together, and you make the noblest work of God. An educated mind without moral principle is a ship without a helm, a rushing rail train without brakes or reversing rod to control the speed. Put the bible in the family. There it lies on the table, an unlimited power. Polygamy and unscriptural divorce are prohibited. Parents are kind and faithful, children polite and obedient. Domestic sorrows lessened by being divided, joys increased by being multiplied. O father, O mother, take down the long-neglected bible, and read it your selves and let your children read it!

Put the bible on the rail train and on shipboard till all parts of this land and all other lands shall have its illumination. This hour there rises the yell of heathen worship, and in the face of this day's sun smokes the blood of human sacrifice. Give them the bible. Unbind the wife from the funeral pyre, for no other sacrifice is needed since the blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth from all sin.

I am preaching this sermon because there are so many who would have you believe that the bible is an outlandish book and obsolete. It is fresher and more intense than any book that yesterday came out of the great publishing houses. Make it your guide in life and your pillow in death.

After the battle of Richmond a dead soldier was found with his hand lying on the open bible. The summer insects had eaten the flesh from the hand, but the skeleton finger lay on these words: "Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death I will fear no evil, for Thou art with me; Thy rod and Thy staff they comfort me." Yes, this book will become in your last days, when you turn away from all other books, a solace for your soul. Perhaps it will be your mother's bible; perhaps the one given you on your wedding day, its cover now worn out and its leaves faded with age; but its bright promises will flash upon the opening gates of heaven.

"How precious is the Book divine,
By inspiration given:
Bright as a lamp its doctrines shine,
To guide our souls to heaven.

"This lamp, through all the tedious night
Of life, shall guide our way,
Till we behold the clearer light
Of an eternal day."

In Salt Lake the sidewalks are twenty feet wide. This, the Troy Times thinks, is to permit a man's widows to walk abreast instead of in couples when going to his funeral.

RESTORATION OF THE JEWS TO PALESTINE.

The Jewish restoration, which commenced so visibly under the Divine hand in 1881, still continues to progress favorably, the various colonization schemes started about that time being but small beginnings of God's modern plan for restoring the Jews to their own land.

The restrictions imposed on Jews in Russia, Roumania, Germany, etc., are so great that thousands leave these lands for a more genial atmosphere. Not long ago there was quite an influx into this country, overcrowding the labor market, and greatly impoverishing the poor Jews resident in London. Though glad to escape to any land that offers them liberty, and freedom from persecution, the Jews naturally look to their own land in this crisis of their history, as they are becoming doubtful of the conduct of the nations towards them. Some returned to Palestine, who have since formed small colonies of their own, where they have gone through great hardships, and shown astonishing perseverance, till they have succeeded. Every such little company settled in Palestine speedily becomes a centre around which others gather, and they help one another. Thus the land is being surely re-peopled by the colonization plan.

From an eye-witness we learn that "Jews continue to flock into Palestine from Roumania and Russia. The reasons for this continued accession are always the same. When their life in the countries of their dispersion is made intolerable, either by the laws of the land specially designed against them, or by the popular prejudices from which they suffer, they think of Palestine as of a country in which they have a right to make homes for themselves. The difficulties they have to contend with when arriving in Palestine are such as would deter the bravest heart from settling there, and yet, knowing these difficulties beforehand, they come. Christ's watchmen can not help feeling that this singular migration, so contrary to the rules by which emigrants are everywhere guided, is part of God's present dealings with the Jews. The tide of Jewish emigration to Palestine during the last four years warrants the statement that the return of the Jews to their own land is taking place before our eyes."

DRIFT OF MODERN FICTION.

THE libraries of the land bear witness to the fact that the books read by the masses of the people are works of fiction, novels, love-stories. The people are of necessity influenced by what they read, influenced not only mentally but morally. Knowing these things to be so, and that light literature reaches ten people where the church reaches one, any far-thinking, keen-sighted Christian philosopher inquires into this influence, what it is and what its effect will be. To give moral power and vigor, wisdom must be inculcated, not man's but God's wisdom, the wisdom that is given by direct revelation from heaven. Modern fiction is full of moralizing, free-thinkers' theories. Their sentiments are dangerous. There is an insidious poison of rationalism—though for the most part sugar-coated—lurking in thousands of volumes on our library shelves, and in cultured homes, and it is even found in many of the pulpits of the land. By a simple weakening of the grand old faith of the martyrs, the faith that has wrought revolutions in church and state, the faith that bade Martin Luther stand up alone against the world, the simple taking away one's title of purity is sufficient to gradually undermine our Christian civilization and help to drift our nation toward the rapids and whirlpool of revolution. There is safety in one direction only: that is in conforming to the highest standard, the drift of modern fiction is in a direction opposite to this. Ingersoll's endeavor is to take from human souls all stay and comfort and to give nothing in return. The light literature of the present day performs much the same office.

EPISTLE.

Officers and Saints of Pittsburgh and Kirtland District, Greeting:—Having been sustained by you as president of your district, I feel prompted to communicate to you a few thoughts, in regard to your duties.

To branch presidents and their co-laborers: Dear brethren. In accepting the above positions, you assumed a grave responsibility, and virtually consented to become leaders and shepherds to the Saints under your respective charges. Hence, those who elected you to the said offices expect you to adorn yourselves with all the attributes that characterized Christ; viz., virtue, wisdom, patience, charity, &c. In order for you to have the requisite influence with the Saints you should not give way to the evil habit of fault-finding and criticizing each other, nor allow yourselves to indulge in unbecoming habits, such as the use of intoxicants of any kind, or tobacco; for it is written, "Be ye clean that bear the vessels of the Lord."

It is to be hoped that by the exercise of prudence, and the prompt performance of duty, you may be able to keep the branches clear of all trouble and grievances. In case of difficulties you can not adjust, please apprise the president of the mission thereof whose right it is (in the opinion of the writer), to set in order, and to regulate the affairs of the branches under his supervision, either direct or indirect, according to Sec. 104, par. 12, Book of D. C. To Elders and Priests who are not branch officials: Perhaps on a re-examination of your license you will discover the fact that you are required by reason of your calling, to preach, teach, &c. Doubtless you are aware it is recorded in Doc. & Cov. 104: 44.—"Wherefore, now let every man learn his duty, and to act in the office in which he is appointed, in all diligence. He that is slothful shall not be counted worthy to stand, and he that learns not his duty and shows himself not approved, shall not be counted worthy to stand." (In his office). Hence, with the understanding we glean from the above in regard to our respective callings, we hope none will interfere with branch affairs, but will ever manifest a willingness to give counsel when asked for and preach when called upon by those in charge. Those of you who are capable of preaching the gospel should put forth an urgent effort to warn your neighbors and friends by making appointments which you can conveniently reach on the Sabbath day. Those of you who think you are not able to take the pulpit in defense of the truth, will please purchase tracts and other reading matter and distribute them among the people, and if any of you come to the conclusion you can do nothing for the Master, we trust you will have the manhood to proffer your license at our next conference. Brethren, let us strive to love each other, as Christ loves us; for in so doing we will be enabled to keep down jealousy and avoid the evil of speaking disparagingly of one another. There has been such a thing as brethren going in to branches and criticizing and undervaluing the labors of those who have preceded them. If in our travels we discover a brother has erred, go to him and acquaint him—not the Saints—with the fact. When such a course is pursued by the ministry it will be conducive of much good to the work; for the time allotted us to work for the Master is too brief to consume in wrangling and fault-finding. I wish it distinctly understood that, if any within the limits of the district are guilty of the above evil, they shall be brought to justice as the law of God directs.

Brethren, there were never brighter prospects for the church than at present; all that is necessary to accomplish good and to make the work a success in the district, is a simultaneous effort on our part. Bro. R. S. Salyards is to take the field the 1st of October. Brn. J. Brown and J. Craig anticipate helping us what they can this coming fall and winter. We trust the Saints will not forget that there is a Bishop's Agent in the district, F. Criley, 33, Fifth Avenue, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, and that it is necessary to have funds to carry on the work.

Yours in gospel bonds,
G. T. GRIFFITHS, Pres. Dist.

NOTICE.

The Southern Indiana District conference will convene the 9th of October at Union Chapel, Jefferson County. We request all the officers of the District to attend, with as many travelling Elders as can. God has but one kingdom, one body, and one people, one Holy Spirit, one faith, one hope, the eternal anchor that keeps this one body from making shipwreck of the one faith. Branch officers will please see that their branches are fully reported.

JAMES G. SCOTT, Pres. Dist.

FIFTH QUORUM OF ELDERS.

Dear Brethren:—Efforts to complete the circular letter you asked at my hand have not reached the conclusion of the matter. The changes in our quorum consequent upon the work of the late conference hindered somewhat. Lack of addresses of some, notwithstanding our continued effort to get them, has hindered. We had hoped the quorum would be full when we issued the circular letter, but as it is not, and to wait till it is, may be too long, we shall issue it in the near future, so that any change of addresses should be sent at once. We still lack the addresses of B. B. Anderson, John D. Jones, G. W. Lush, Arnold Neeser and Thomas Galley. Will these brethren please send their address at once, or any one who may know one or more, please send them. The record shows that John Taylor, Oliver Johnson, John Larsen, Jasper M. Tousley, Henry Southwick, F. R. Tubb, E. A. Steadman, and F. E. Anderson, have no license. They will please send full items of birth, baptism, confirmation and ordination, to W. S. Loar, Independence, Jackson County, Missouri, who by virtue of an act of the quorum at the late conference has been appointed secretary of the quorum by its presiding officer.

Our efforts have been less than hitherto, but busy cares of many kinds have been the cause. We purpose to make our best efforts for the advancement of the quorum, as also the work in general. Should the time come, near or in the distant future, when one who can better serve the quorum can be selected of the several more efficient, let it be done. Do not delay longer and thereby hinder us in our work. We shall each have to account as to how much we have assisted to set in order the house of God.

In bonds of peace,
R. ETZENHOUSER, Sec.

SHEEHY.—At Lisbon Falls, Maine, August 24th, 1886, to Moses and Susie Sheehy a son, named Frank Edmond.

DIED.

VERNON.—James Vernon was born August 5th, 1812, in Lebanon, Warren County, Ohio, and died at Millersburg, Illinois, of sciatic rheumatism August 27th. Elder John Chisnall, of Kewanee, conducted the funeral services, and delivered a timely sermon Sunday morning, the 29th, an immense assembly paying the very best attention. He was married to Eliza Duncan, August 25th, 1836, in Marion, Shelby County, Indiana. About 1844 they became probationers in the Methodist Church, but soon after they heard Elder G. M. Hinkle preach, and were baptized by him. Elder J. W. Gillen baptized them into the Reorganized Church February 8th, 1863. Sister Vernon heard two Elders sing, pray and talk half a century ago, as they were returning from west to east. Their habitation has ever been a resting place for the weary gospel pilgrim till the infirmities of age shifted the pleasing burden to other willing hands. They aided in erecting our commodious chapel, and assisted in many ways to send forth the great latter day work. He was of a meek and quiet spirit, and the law of kindness was in his heart. A pleasant light has been removed from the village home, to a galaxy of immortals. While the drapery of sadness and grief hang over our souls, we sorrow not as those who have no hope. He was industrious, honest, and indulgent almost to a fault. He would sooner serve than be served; was ever in favor of peace and order, therefore he brought honor and glory to the cause of Christ. Sweet tendrils of affection cluster around the memory of the dear old veteran. He had no dark and painful forebodings of death, and said to the writer, his son-in-law, that he had "lived above the law of our common country." May his virtues and example live on, and may the Father's hand temper and sanctify this bereavement to our best good.

PETTERSSON.—Died, at Trenton, New Jersey, Florence L., daughter of brother W. P. and Maud M. Pettersson, July 4th, 1886, aged 2 months and 22 days. Was born in Brooklyn, New York.

THE MORMON CHURCH.

Mr. Editor:—The item in last week's News, clipped from the Wheeling Intelligencer concerning Mr. A. B. Vernon and Mrs. — of Taylor county, eloping together does injustice to many persons in this county if it does not to them. The article in question represents the said Mr. Vernon as being a "Mormon Missionary," &c., and this unfortunate separation of Mr. — and his wife as being the necessary result of "Mormon" teaching, etc. Now, the said Mr. Vernon is not a "Mormon Missionary." He has no connection whatsoever with the Utah Mormon Church. He belongs to the original system of Latter Day Saints called the "Reorganized Church," of which there is a branch here, organized in the year 1880, by Elder Josiah Ells of Pittsburg. There is also a church in South Wheeling or Benwood, of which the Intelligencer can not possibly be ignorant. This church is Anti-Polygamous and Christian in faith and practice which the Intelligencer very well knows, and should have made the proper discrimination in favor of these facts in justice to innocent and loyal citizens. There are many members of this church in West Virginia; viz.: in Marshall there is a considerable congregation comprising some of the best citizens of the county, also there are Saints in Wetzel, (or those who adhere to the faith), Marion, Doddridge, Ritchie, Harrison, Jackson, Mason and Wayne counties. This faith is spreading in the state. What can the Intelligencer reasonably do or say against it? Are we not free? Would the Intelligencer stigmatize the members and the faith of a whole church or denomination of Christians with the odium attaching to the shameful affair above referred to, because forsooth the parties, either one or both were members, or had their names on its books, &c. How many churches could be condemned as being unworthy of respect by this rule? Mr. Vernon is not the exponent of this church, neither is he an authorized missionary in the county of Taylor. He is not an Elder. Neither is his work acceptable to the church at this time. But as to his guilt in this case we know nothing. We are not inclined to believe it from this report, as there seems to be a disposition to lay this charge upon others who are known to the Intelligencer to be innocent. Vernon might be accused falsely, too. If there is any truth at all in the item, it is found published in company with that which, if not directly false in itself, makes a false impression for a purpose.

Let us now, in conclusion, submit to our brethren of the clergy, (orthodox), two propositions for discussion:

First:—Polygamy is not now, nor never was, a doctrine of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints which was organized by Joseph Smith and others, April 6th, 1830.

Second:—The Book of Mormon is not, as claimed by many public teachers and historians, a plagiarism of the writings of the late Rev. Solomon Spaulding.

This is a standing challenge to Ministers, Historians or Theologians. JUSTICE.

SACRAMENTAL WINE.

"It is estimated that 60,000 gallons of wine are yearly consumed in the churches of the United States for sacramental purposes alone. Only think of it; 60,000 gallons of be-drugged, intoxicating wine. How dare the churches of Christ to ask for the prohibition of the liquor traffic, while encouraging that traffic to the amount of 60,000 gallons every year to be used in their most sacred institution? If it is a good thing to use there, it can not possibly be a bad thing to be used and recommended "in moderation" elsewhere. And, mind you, we have not the slightest warrant from our Savior or any of His disciples for its use on such occasions. In not one single instance in the whole Bible is the word wine used in connection with the Lord's Supper. The words are simply, "the fruit of the vine," which is and can be only the pure, unfermented juice of the grape, just as it comes from the hand of God, and not the substance that has been manipulated by man into a narcotic deadly poison."—Issue.

How thoroughly the above confirms the wisdom embodied in the following revelation given to Joseph, the young Seer, fifty-six years ago? This revelation was given under the following circumstances described by Joseph the Seer in his history: "Early in the month of August, Newel Knight and his wife paid us a visit at my place in Harmony, Pennsylvania, and as neither his wife nor himself had been as yet confirmed it was proposed that we should confirm them, and partake together of the Sacrament, before he and his wife should leave us. In order to prepare for this I set out to procure some wine for the occasion, but had gone only a short distance when I was met by a heavenly messenger, and received the following revelation, the first paragraph of which was written at this time, and the remainder in the September following."—Times and Seasons 4: 117.

Here is that portion of the revelation which relates directly to proper Sacrament wine:

"Listen to the voice of Jesus Christ, your Lord, your God, and your Redeemer, whose word is quick and powerful. For behold I say unto you, that it mattereth not what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink, when ye partake of the sacrament, if it so be that ye do it with an eye single to my glory; remembering unto the Father my body which was laid down for you, and my blood which was shed for the remission of your sins; wherefore a commandment I give unto you, that you shall not purchase wine, neither strong drink of your enemies; wherefore you shall partake of none, except it is made new among you; yea, in this my Father's kingdom which shall be built up on the earth. Behold, this is wisdom in me; wherefore marvel not for the hour cometh that I will drink of the fruit of the vine with you on the earth, and with Moroni, whom I have sent unto you to reveal the Book of Mormon, containing the fullness of my everlasting gospel."

PERSECUTION AND ITS CAUSES.

As the church increased in numbers and influence, the opposition became more extended and intensified. What has been true of all prominent movements that came in contact with hoary error and canonized evil, whether in civil government, philosophy, medicine, the arts and sciences in general, and also in religion, with whatever else pertained to human progress, was and is true of the rise and progress of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. All have been in their time misrepresented, maligned, despised and resisted. The apostles of progress have ever succeeded only by virtue of the real merit of what they advocated, and by sincere devotion and persistent effort in what they knew to be true and right. But their devotion was accounted fanaticism; and their persistence, blind obstinacy.

In 1830-31, the press became active in its opposition, and of this the church historian says: "At this age of the Church many false reports, lies and foolish stories were published in the newspapers and circulated in every direction to prevent people from investigating the work, or embracing the faith."

In the mean time the talented, popular Elder Sidney Rigdon, of Mentor, Ohio, and a large portion of his numerous flock, left the "Christian" (Campbellite) Church and united with the Saints. This began late in the fall of 1830, under the administration of Elders Oliver Cowdery, P. P. Pratt, Peter Whitmer and Ziba Peterson. This, and the further fact that large numbers at Kirtland and other places in that region soon after joined the Saints, created a whirlwind of excitement and aroused bitter persecution against them. In 1831-2 an apostate, Ezra Booth, at one time a Methodist preacher, published a series of scandalous letters in the Ohio Star, at Ravenna, which brought trouble upon the church, until March 25th, 1832, when the following dastardly outrage occurred in the town of Hiram, Ohio, which we give in the exact language of the church historian and Joseph the Seer.

February 22d, 1832.

According to previous calculations, we now began to make preparations to visit the brethren who had removed to the land of Missouri. Before going to Hiram to live with father Johnson, my wife had taken two children, (twins) of John Murdock, to bring up. She received them when only nine days old; they were now nearly eleven months. I would remark that nothing important had occurred since I came to reside in father Johnson's house in Hiram; I had held meetings on the Sabbaths and evenings, and baptized a number. Father Johnson's son, Olmsted Johnson, came home on a visit, during which I told him if he did not obey the gospel, the spirit he was of would lead him to destruction; and then if he went away, he would never return or see his father again. He went to the southern states and Mexico; on his return took sick and died in Virginia. In addition to the apostate Booth, Simonds Rider, Eli Johnson, Edward Johnson and John Johnson, jr. had apostatized.

On the 25th of March, the twins before mentioned, which had been sick of the measles for some time, caused us to be broke of our rest in taking care of them, especially my wife. In the evening I told her she had better retire to rest with one of the children, and I would watch with the sickest child. In the night she told me I had better lay down on the trundle bed, and I did so, and was soon after awoke by her screaming murder! when I found myself going out of the door in the hands of about a dozen men; some of whose hands were in my hair, and some hold of my shirt, drawers and limbs. The foot of the trundle bed was towards the door, leaving only room enough for the door to swing. My wife heard a gentle tapping on the windows which she then took no particular notice of, (but which was unquestionably designed for ascertaining whether we were all asleep), and soon after the mob burst open the door and surrounded the bed in an instant, and as I said, the first I knew I was going out of the door in the hands of an infuriated mob. I made a desperate struggle, as I was forced out, to extricate myself, but only cleared one leg, with which I made a pass at one man, and he fell on the door steps. I was immediately confined again; and they swore by God they would kill me if I did not be still, which quieted me. As they passed around the house with me, the fellow that I kicked came to me and thrust his hand into my face, all covered with blood, (for I hit him on the nose), and with an exulting horse laugh, muttered: "ge, gee, G—d— ye, I'll fix ye."

They then seized me by the throat, and held on till I lost my breath. After I came to, as they passed along with me, about thirty rods from the house, I saw elder Rigdon stretched out on the ground, whither they had dragged him by the heels. I supposed he was dead.

I began to plead with them, saying: you will have mercy and spare my life, I hope. To which they replied: "G— d— ye, call on yer God for help, we'll show ye no mercy;" and the people began to show themselves in every direction: one coming from the orchard had a plank, and I expected they would kill me, and carry me off on the plank. They then turned to the right, and went on about thirty rods further; about sixty rods from the house, and thirty from where I saw elder Rigdon; into the meadow, where they stopped, and one said: "Simonds, Simonds" (meaning I supposed Simonds Rider), "pull up his drawers, pull up his drawers, he will take cold." Another replied: "a'nt ye going to kill 'im? a'nt ye going to kill 'im? when a group of mobbers collected a little way off and said: "Simonds, Simonds, come here;" and Simonds charged those who had hold of me to keep me from touching the ground, (as they had done all the time) lest I should get a spring upon them. They went and held a council, and as I could occasionally overhear a word, I supposed it was to know whether it was best to kill me. They returned after a while, when I learned that they had concluded not to kill me, but pound and scratch me well, tear off my shirt and drawers, and leave me naked, one cried, "Simonds, Simonds, where's the tar bucket?" "I don't know" answered one, "where 'tis, Eli's left it." They ran back and fetched the bucket of tar, when one exclaimed, "G— d— it, let us tar up his mouth;" and they tried to force the tar-paddle into my mouth; I twisted my head around, so that they could not; and they cried out: "G— d— ye, hold up yer head and let us give ye some tar." They then tried to force a vial into my mouth, and broke it in my teeth. All my clothes were torn off me except my shirt collar; and one man fell on me and scratched my body with his nails like a mad cat, and then muttered out: "G— d— ye, that's the way the Holy Ghost falls on folks."

They then left me, and I attempted to rise, but fell again; I pulled the tar away from my lips, etc., so that I could breathe more freely, and after a while I began to recover, and raised myself up when I saw two lights. I made my way towards one of them, and found it was father Johnson's. When I had come to the door, I was naked, and the tar made me look as though I had been covered with blood, and when my wife saw me she thought I was all mashed to pieces, and fainted. During the affray abroad, the sisters of the neighborhood had collected at my room. I called for a blanket, they threw me one and shut the door; I wrapped it around me and went in.

In the mean time, brother John Poorman heard an outcry across the corn field, and running that way met father Johnson, who had been fastened in his house at the commencement of the assault, by having his door barred by the mob, but on calling to his wife to bring his gun, saying, he would blow a hole through the door, the mob fled, and father Johnson seizing a club ran after the party that had Elder Rigdon, and knocked one man, and raised his club to level another exclaiming: "What are you doing here?" when they left Elder Rigdon and turned upon father Johnson, who, turning to run towards his own house met brother Poorman coming out of the cornfield; each supposing the other to be a mobber, an encounter ensued, and Poorman gave Johnson a severe blow on the left shoulder with a stick or stone, which brought him to the ground. Poorman ran immediately towards father Johnson's, and arriving while I was waiting for the blanket, exclaimed, "I'm afraid I've killed him!" Killed who? asked one; when Poorman hastily related the circumstances of the encounter near the cornfield, and went into the shed and hid himself. Father Johnson soon recovered so as to come to the house, when the whole mystery was quickly soived concerning the difficulty between him and Poorman, who, on learning the facts, joyfully came from his hiding place.

My friends spent the night in scraping and removing the tar, and washing and cleansing my body; so that by morning I was ready to be clothed again. This being Sabbath morning, the people assembled for meeting at the usual hour of worship, and among those came also the mobbers, viz: Simonds Rider, a Campbelite preacher, and leader of the mob; one McClellie, son of a Campbelite minister; and Pelatiah Allen, Esq., who gave the mob a barrel of whisky to raise their spirits; and many others. With my flesh all scarified and defaced, I preached to the congregation as usual, and in the afternoon of the same day baptized three individuals.

The next morning I went to see Elder Rigdon, and found him crazy; and his head highly inflamed, for they had dragged him by his heels, and those too, so high from the earth he could not raise his head from the rough frozen surface, which lacerated it exceedingly; and when he saw me he called to his wife to bring him his razor. She asked him what he wanted of it, and he replied to kill me. Sister Rigdon left the room, and he asked me to bring his razor; I asked him what he wanted of it, and he replied he wanted to kill his wife, and he continued delirious some days. The feathers which were used with the tar on this occasion, the mob took out of Elder Rigdon's house. After they had seized him and dragged him out, one of the banditti returned to get some pillows; when the women shut him in and kept him some time.

During the mob one of the twins received a severe cold, and continued to grow worse till Friday, and died. The mobbers were composed of various religious parties, but mostly Campbelites, Methodists and Baptists, who continued to molest and menace father Johnson's house for a long time. Elder Rigdon removed to Kirtland with his family, then sick with the measles, the following Wednesday, and, on account of the mob he went to Chardon on Saturday, April first. Sunday, April second, I started for Missouri, in company with Newel K. Whitney, Peter Whitmer, and Jesse Gauze, to fulfil the revelation. Not wishing to go by Kirtland, as another mob existed in that neighborhood, (and indeed, the spirit of mobocracy was very prevalent through the region of country at the time), brother George Pitkin took us in his wagon, by the most expeditious route to Warren, where we arrived the same day, and were there joined by Elder Rigdon, who left Chardon in the morning; and proceeding onward; we arrived at Wells-ville the next day, and the day following at Stubenville, where we left the wagon; and on Wednesday the fifth of April, we took passage on board a steam packet for Wheeling, Virginia; where we purchased a lot of paper for the press in Zion, then in care of W. W. Phelps.

After we left Hiram, fearing for the safety of my family, on account of the mob, I wrote to my wife, (in connection with Bishop Whitney), to have her go to Kirtland and tarry with his family till our return. She went to Kirtland, to brother Whitney's, and sister Whitney's aunt, Sarah Smith, (who was then living with her), inquired of her niece if my wife was going to stay there; and on being answered in the affirmative, said she should go away, for there was not room enough for both of them; accordingly sister Whitney invited my wife to leave, which she did immediately; having enjoyed about two hours visit. She then went to brother Reynolds Calhoon's, and father Smith's, and doctor Williams', where I found her, very disconsolate on my return.—Times and Seasons, vol. 5: pages 611, 612, 624.

WE reached the pleasant camp ground of the Reunion at Wheeler's Grove, Pottawattamie county, Iowa, located on the premises of Brn. Carlos and Hyrum Smith, on Thursday, September 9th, and found a happy people holding the spiritual fort with song, and prayer and speech. Bro. Henry Kemp was speaking from the stand when we arrived; and when he ceased and the meeting was dismissed we were surrounded by eager, and relieved faces, because we had come.

The meetings had been in progress from the 4th, Bro. Daniel Hougas, presiding, with Bro. Henry Kemp as second in charge. The committee of preparation had done their work well, and a pleasanter, more suitable spot would be hard to find; indeed, none need be desired. The preaching had been done up to our arrival by brethren J. W. Gillen, Henry Kemp, and Daniel Hougas, labor being done in the order named; but we failed to get a minute detail of the exact manner of its distribution—we understood, however, that Bro. Gillen had been the chief speaker. We spoke at the request of the brethren in charge, Thursday evening, Friday morning in the Grove, and in the evening in the M. E. church in the town of Macedonia; Saturday evening and Sunday, morning and evening, Bro. Gillen occupying the Sunday afternoon service. The services at the Grove ended Sunday evening, and on Monday evening we spoke in the church in town. The services after our arrival on the ground were: prayer service at the stand from 9 to 10:30, intermission of fifteen minutes; preaching at 10:45 to the noon hour. Dinner and visiting and social converse till 2:30, when the people were called to the stand—preaching till 4, then preaching again at 7:45. The afternoon service of Friday was by Bro. J. W. Gillen, Saturday morning by Bro. D. Hougas and afternoon by Bro. Henry Kemp. Brn. Wm. Cooke, Wm. Gaylord, and others assisted in opening service and prayer. A number of excellent singers were present, and the song service was good.

We saw numbers of the Saints for the first time, and many whom we had met in years past, and were pleased to make new acquaintances and renew the old ones. We met Elder Jason W. Briggs and his family, who attended a number of the meetings. Sr. Briggs, Jason's mother was present, and though in her 91st year, seemed to enjoy the meeting and the association with old time friends in the gospel cause. On the first Sunday the crowd was large, we were informed, and on the last Sunday it was estimated that there was at one time near 2000 persons in attendance. We heard no loud, indecent, or profane language from any, at any time during the meeting; the crowd though large was orderly and well behaved; the exception being a few thoughtless ones who would get together on the outer edges of the crowd, and talk and chat without seeming regard to those who wished to hear the preaching, they were but few, however. There was less than the usual amount of tobacco smoking and chewing, and we note this with gladness, "Be ye clean," is a "charge to keep."

We were the guest of Bro. Carlos ("Lot") Smith during our stay on the ground, and of Bro. J. M. Kelley when in town. The Saints were all hospitably inclined toward the Editor and his fellow preachers.

We learn from Bro. Gillen that the district, Pottawattamie, in which the meeting was held is in a much improved condition; as is also the Fremont, in charge of Bro. Henry Kemp.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

DON'T forget that Bro. J. H. Peters, of East Lake, Michigan, offers to furnish 1,000 copies of the "Voice of Warning" to the Sabbath Schools. Up to the 10th inst. he says, "but one school has written for books up to this date." It is wisdom for those schools that can use them to get them at once. Bro. Peters will give instructions how to use and dispose of them.

It is very notable that the most extended and ruinous earthquake of these latter years had its center in Charleston, South Carolina, as did the most terrible war—the war of the Rebellion.

Bro. J. B. Jarvis writes the 8th inst. from Fort Scott, Kansas, that his address until further notice will be Crebs P. O., Indian Territory, and orders his HERALD there, saying, "I can not be satisfied without having access to it, [the HERALD], the best of all papers for the Saints of latter days."

A Mr. S. Bugg writes from Deanville, Michigan, expressing thanks that some one has sent him a HERALD, and saying he intends to learn the faith and work of the Saints. He asks questions of importance, which we will answer in due time.

Bro. Joseph Luff wrote from Independence, Missouri, the 13th inst., that some one wrote him a card from Columbus, Nebraska, requesting him to apply overpaid subscription on Advocate to the Advo- cate deficiency fund, but that the person failed to sign his name; and he now asks that the party will write him again so he may know whose account to transfer.

Bro. W. A. Bennett, sends us a Graham, Texas, paper, for September 1st, containing a gloomy account of the drouth and its effects in the regions about Graham. There are many destitute people. In certain counties there has been no rain for fourteen months.

Bro. J. T. Reynolds wrote from St. Thomas, Ontario, September 6th, that though Bro. George Henly had moved away from them, Bro. T. A. Phillips had returned from Chicago. They had been cheered by a moving case of healing in their midst.

Bro. J. J. Cornish was at Bay City, Mich., September 13th; had lately baptized one, many seemed to believe, though some of these evidently loved the world more than God. Bro. Cornish intends to leave there, as the place is unhealthy.

Bro. R. J. Anthony was at Reese Creek, Montana, the 10th of September, and intended to visit Willow Creek, Butte City, Deer Lodge.

A Mr. M. G. Chapman writes from Utica, Nebraska, for Church publications and says:—"I am not a member of the Reorganized Church of Christ, for the want of an opportunity." The ministry in that region should see that a proper opportunity for membership is afforded this gentleman at an early time.

Bro. James H. Cameron writes from Kenosha, Wisconsin, that the HERALD is his only preacher now, also that he takes pleasure in sending up his free-will offerings "to be used in the support of the gospel."

The Herald readers, such as do not take the Hope, will find specimen copies sent them of its current issue. The Editor will spare no pains to make it what it should be, and to make it in its enlarged form a complete success.

THE "ADVOCATE."

VERY many in the church are not aware of the value of the Advocate in the past in reaching and saving blinded, bewildered, and perishing Saints, while it at the same time informed and confirmed those who read it in regard to the fact of the terrible latter day apostasy, the remedy for the evil, and the source from whence deliverance must come.

We take the liberty of presenting in this connection a letter from one of "the escaped of Israel," (and this case is only one in many thousands), whose words are full of the sweet cadences of a grateful heart saved from the gloomy, pitiless, rayless night of infidelity. Read the letter:

UTAH, August 21st, 1886.

Bro. Luff:—It is with deep regret I learn through the Herald of the discontinuance of the Advocate. It is like parting with a tried and trusted friend. We of the Reorganized Church who live among the Utah Mormons scarcely know how to get along without it. I have nearly the whole of seven volumes, and I consider them very valuable. I owe it mainly to the Advocate that I am not an infidel to-day. I was reared in the Utah Church, but when I arrived at years of discretion I discovered that the teachings of said church differed so materially from the teachings of Christ, that I concluded religion was all a farce and resolved to have nothing to do with it. About that time a friend advised me to subscribe for the Advocate; through reading that I learned what Mormonism really is. Three years later I obeyed the gospel, for which cause I rejoice every day of my life.

My subscription for the Advocate does not expire until March, 1887; but I don't wish the money refunded. I wish to contribute it as my mite toward the many copies which have been circulated free."

"AN INDECENT AMERICAN COMMUNITY."

"THE expulsion of John Q. Cannon from the Mormon Church on a charge of adultery is, of course, only a sham, and designed to avoid a prosecution for polygamy in the criminal courts. This singular proceeding on the part of the Mormon authorities, instead of advertising their regard for morality, ought to direct public attention to the extraordinary fact that in Utah there are no statutes for the punishment of adultery, fornication, or incest, all laws of this character having been furtively repealed by a Mormon Legislature several years ago. In the indecent community dominated by the Mormon Church there is no penalty whatever for these crimes, and the Edmunds Act applies to a distinct class of offenses, being designed to punish polygamy as such, and, as the Supreme Court has said, to forbid flaunting before the community "the ostentation of a bigamous household." The proof under the Edmunds Act is complete when it shows the maintenance of such a household with an open claim or pretense of plural marriage. Immorality perpetrated without any pretense of civil or "celestial" marriage is left to be punished by the laws of the Territory, and, as the "saints" have repealed all these statutes, Utah has the most shameless code of any community inside of civilization.

"Cannon (who is a son of George Q. Cannon and First Counselor of the presiding Bishop) pleaded guilty, knowing there was no law in Utah for the punishment of adultery, and hoping to escape an indictment for polygamy. What do the people think of this spectacle, showing as it does the existence of an American Territory lacking laws of common decency such as are enforced by half-civilized tribes and in many cases by barbarians? The severity of the Edmunds act, which applies only to cases of plural marriage, has blinded the public to the true character of the local laws of Utah, and the Cannon performance may well serve to disclose the truth. Let the people call on the Congressmen now up for reelection to explain themselves and show if they can that they were not responsible for the failure last winter of the measures looking to the establishment of decency in Utah. Eden, the Illinois Congressman who assisted in smothering one of these bills, has been handsomely decapitated by his constituents, and the example is one that should spread. Despite the Edmunds act the local laws of Utah are still in many cases loathsome and intolerable. Let the people see to it that another Congress shall not adjourn without an effort to make adultery, fornication, and incest crimes even in Utah."

The above is what the Chicago Tribune of the 8th inst. has to say of the Utah leaders and their ism. We recommend to them the following prayer, advising that they stick to it till proper relief come:

"O wad some power the giftie gie us,
To see oursel's as others see us!
It wad frae mony a blunder free us,

TIMELINESS.

We respectfully suggest to those writing for the Herald and Hope to give us something besides articles or letters on topics that are worn out with too frequent use. The church and the world need information on subjects which are important and timely. They need "meat in in due season." Therefore, those who write should be careful to study suitableness in what they write, both as to matter and timeliness. Faith, repentance, baptism, laying on of hands, church organization, and kindred subjects are all good in their place, but we need much besides.

Food for the instruction of the race should be, first, of the right kind; second, be properly prepared; and third, be supplied at proper times. Too much of a good thing at a time is harmful; for "The full soul loatheth a honeycomb." Many otherwise excellent sermons have proven fruitless because not timely. Let divine wisdom direct.

THE Criminal Docket for the September term of Court in Salt Lake City contains nearly one hundred cases against polygamous Mormons, some of whom are "at large." This means in plain English, that they have taken an undefined and unlimited "vacation"—for their own personal convenience. Among these whom "Uncle Samuel" wants to catch but can't, is President John Taylor, his two counselors, (Joseph F. Smith and Geo. Q. Cannon), C. W. Penrose, (News editor), George Teasdale (apostle), Anson V. Call, Helaman Pratt, George Dunford, etc.; while H. W. Naisbitt and scores of others of the rank and file are caught in the toils and must answer to the offended law.

"A fine and slender net the spider weaves
Which little and slight animals receives;
And if she catch a summer bee or fly,
They with a piteous groan and murmur die.
But if a wasp or hornet she entrap,
They tear her cords, like Sampson, and escape:
So like a fly, the poor offender dies;
But like a wasp the rich escapes, and flies."

Bro. John Single writes of late from Fremont, Indiana, and says:

"There is so much good sound, sensible reading in the Herald that I don't see how I could get along without it."

We are glad to know the HERALD is appreciated, and we hope its friends will do what they can to extend the circulation. Let each subscriber seek to get others to take it; for in this way the gospel news goes wider and wider, the church obtains greater influence and power, and the powers of darkness and evil are beaten back and give place to saving light and truth. Every subscriber is expected to be prompt in keeping his subscription paid up, for it is by this that the printer is kept happy.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY SISTER "FRANCES."

"Beauty that eludes our grasp,
Sweetness that transcends our taste,
Loving hands we may not clasp,
Shining feet that mock our haste,—
Gentle eyes we closed below,
Tender voices heard once more,
Smile and call us, as they go
On and onward still before."

The following was written by the youngest daughter of Bro. Glauud Rodger, and will be read with interest by many of her father's friends.

FATHER, WAS IT THY GOOD-BYE?

I am sitting by the window,
'Tis a lovely eve in May,
As the quiet, pleasant twilight,
Closes up a sunny day.

Cool the gentle breeze is blowing,
Rustling through the leafy trees;
And the shadows growing darker,
Lull to sleep the birds and bees.

O, how welcome is the evening,
To the tired, care-worn breast,
When upon a dreamless pillow
For a while the head can rest.

As I sit and look around me,
And my thoughts are flying fast,
I recall to mind an evening
That has many months gone past.

I was playing on the organ
In the church, when suddenly,
My fingers stopped their moving,
And my eyes refused to see.

For a shadow fell around me,
Thin and cold, and deathly white.
Oh, if I should live forever
I could not forget that night.

'Twas the shadow of a moment,
Then the misty veil was o'er,
But upon the chords of memory
Left its strain forever more.

How I wondered what the meaning
Of that misty veil could be;
For it seemed to trouble no one
In all the church,—only me.

Never once the thought came o'er me,
That upon that very day,
In Nevada, far from loved ones,
Father on his death-bed lay.

Oh, it must have been so lonely;—
Not a kindred face was near;
O my father! had I been there,
Your last hours of earth to cheer!

But our Savior did not grant it,
So my tears I'll try to hide;
Just the hour that I was playing,
Was the hour that father died.

Do you understand the shadow?
Do you wonder, then, if I Say I think it was the spirit
Of my father passing by?

P'raps on his heaven-ward journey
He paused a while to rest,
Or to listen to the music;
I was granting his request.

He had bade me play the organ,
For the Saints of God to sing;
Said that to some sad and lone one,
It might joy and comfort bring.

Now his earthly cares are over,
And he shares a better land,
And I sometimes think I hear him
Singing with the heavenly band.

Oft when I am sad and lonely,
Life seems but a troubled dream;
Swift my thoughts are carried upward,
Cross the rapid silver stream,

To the loved ones gone before us,
To that home where all is fair;
And the heart is never weary,
For there is no sorrow there.

When our voyage here is ended,
And on earth we toil no more,
May we meet those loving faces
On the bright, the heavenly shore.

That all Saints who here have wandered
May find solace over there;
Ever more to dwell with Jesus,
Is my earnest fervent prayer.

DOLLIE RODGER.

LAMONI, 1886.

To THE mothers of little Hopes we wish to make a few suggestions, by the carrying out of which, simple as they may at first appear, much good will be accomplished, and teachers in the different Sabbath Schools where the Hope is used will be very greatly aided in their work. First, provide your children, or see that they provide themselves with a ready binder for their paper. This need consist of nothing more than a stiff paper cover, such paper as is used for mailing or expressing heavy articles in, to enclose the Herald, upon the inside of which has been pasted fifty-two narrow strips of paper, or thin cloth just in the middle, to which the Hope can be pasted as each number is received. Lest some of the children should not understand just what we mean, take some book you do not value and cut out the leaves within an inch of the binding, then you will have left in this remaining inch the narrow strips upon which to paste your papers. Don't forget to get these binders ready this week, and make them just as neat and attractive as possible. When this is done, mothers, fathers or elder sisters and brothers, will you not each week help the younger Hopes, to get their Sabbath School lesson? We make this last request especially of the parents of the Lamoni Sabbath School, but we doubt not it is a request every superintendent will thank us for making. Will you grant it?

We are in receipt of letters from sisters Maggie Kelso, Nellie Williams, Vida Smith and Orilla Sheehy.

LAMONI, IOWA, Sept. 25, 1886.

HENDERSON GROVE, Sept. 3d.

Dear Sister Frances:—I feel to thank you again and again for the kind and loving words in the "Mothers' Home Column." God bless and prosper all the noble workers who have enlisted in the cause, for it is the work of God. I feel that no one could give such wise counsel, unless moved by the Holy Spirit. How many times have I been cast down, yea into the very dust, as it were, and have felt I was almost forsaken by God and man, when something in the dear "Home Column" has strengthened me and whispered to my troubled heart, "Peace, be still." How comforting the thought in this time of trouble and doubt, when the evil one is striving so hard to gain a foothold even among our strongest and bravest, that the sisters have banded together to fight him, as well as the brothers have. The prayers of the righteous avail much, and with the weapon of prayer we must fight him. Will the battle be hot? Will many fall? Alas! yes, "A thousand shall fall at your side and ten thousand at your right hand." Do you ask the cause of so many falling and the means by which the few shall stand? Because the Apostle's words have not been heeded: "Take unto you the whole armor of God, that you may be able to withstand in the evil day." Alas! how many in the ranks have nothing but the shield of faith. This shield is very valuable, but we need the sandals, the preparation of the gospel, which leads us to expect, and enables us to endure, the sharp difficulties of the narrow way unflinchingly, as good soldiers. How much we need to be girt about with truth, with the precious promises of God's word, lest we become weary and faint. How much we need to have well in hand the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God, that we may be able to keep the adversary at a respectful distance. How much need there is also for the breast-plate of Christ's righteousness, his merit, recognized as covering our life, our vitals. How much need too for the helmet—an intelligent hope of salvation. And having the armor all on we will be sure to conquer.

"Beloved, think it not strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try you, as though some strange thing happened unto you; but rejoice inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings, that when his glory shall be revealed, ye may be glad also with exceeding joy." Notwithstanding this exhortation very many of the beloved of the Lord do think it strange when the fiery trials strike them; doubtless because they do not appreciate the Lord's design. While we understand that present evil in general shall be overruled of God, and made to minister good, yet we are far from thinking that "all's for the best." I have six girls, all in the church but one, and I desire the prayers of the sisters that I may have the gift of wisdom to enable me to raise them for God. Your sister in the gospel,

MRS. NELLIE WILLIAMS.

GIRARD, Minnesota, August 11th.

Sister Frances.—Having looked in vain for a letter from the sisters in this part of the land, I thought it time to tell you that you have sisters here who desire to be one with you in every good work. For one I have found much encouragement and good advice in the Herald, and especially in the "Mothers' Home Column," which I wish I might heed. In this land we have plenty of poverty, and hard work to endure, as well as all the other trials and crosses common to the lot of man. Sometimes we feel that we can take up our cross and bear it bravely, trusting in the arm of the Lord, at other times we feel discouraged and almost like giving up in despair, and think we would vastly prefer to prove ourselves faithful without being tried. How easy it would be to keep the commandments if we were only commanded to do just as we pleased! We could be patient if there were nothing to try our patience; we could love our neighbors if they were perfect; we could do good to those who were good to us; we could let all our garments be plain, if it were only the fashion; and we might be wise in some things if it was not for the "word of wisdom;" but all of these "ifs" are in the way. The Lord and his commandments on the one hand, pointing the way to everlasting life; the evil one and his wiles on the other hand enticing to destruction; and it seems to be easier to travel the broad road with plenty of company, than to take up our cross and follow the Savior in the straight and narrow way along with a few; and I am persued that of our own strength we shall not be able to overcome, but the Lord being our helper we shall come off conqueror; and he will help us if we will do as he tells us to do. Let us then try to take his advice. Brother and sister J. C. Foss are making their home at present in Becker county, some fifty or sixty miles from us. Bro. Foss is doing a good work in this part of the land, and I think they are trying to live according to the precepts of their religion, which is the best preaching that any one can do.

I think we ought to have charity for all who are in darkness or are deceived. I don't think it is fair because we have received a little ray of light and been helped out of the darkness a little, for us to turn around and point our fingers at some one else and say, "here you're in darkness; you don't know anything. If you were honest in heart you could believe as I do." I think it must be possible for people to be honest in heart, and still not believe right, else the Lord had not said, "they that are honest in heart, and are deceived shall be reclaimed." We ought to believe this and not feel too bad because some of our loved ones are deceived, but learn to trust the Lord for ourselves as well as all the honest in heart. Well, I am glad that the Hope is to be enlarged. We like the Hope as well as the Herald and Advocate. We are arranging to send in our mites soon. May the Lord bless his Saints and speed the work for the salvation of souls. Your sister,

EMMA L. ANDERSON.

Dear Sister Frances.—I take the Herald and would like to help you if I could. I have raised a large family of children, and all but one are members of the church. We need patience and plenty of faith and prayer to bring them up. Children as they grow in years go through various stages of carelessness and irritability, which would only be increased by constant fretting and reproof. The period between childhood and youth is a very trying one, and needs the sustaining help of loving, gentle words. Therefore mothers, do not be discouraged at that which is more the result of physical than moral weakness, while good counsel, judicious prayer and gentle forbearance will strengthen and help the child through these breakers, into a genial, tolerant, soothing atmosphere. The boy or girl will go through the various stages of growth from childhood to adult age, gradually becoming strong and fixed in correct habits of thought and action, and the forbearance and loving patience of the wife, father and mother will have brought their reward.

From a sister in Christ.

STEWARTSVILLE, Missouri,

August 7th, 1886.

Dear Sister Frances.—The reading of the "Mothers' Home Column," and putting to practical use the good instruction, advice and counsel we receive therefrom, tends to elevate our minds, develop the good qualities our common Father has given us. It diminishes the evil that has been sown within us by the enemy of all souls, leading us to higher and holier aims, and aspirations, and causes us to love one another more dearly, as sisters, and to love the glorious work in which we are engaged, more intelligently and fondly than ever. It also begets within our minds a greater desire to bring our children up "in the nurture and admonition of the Lord," and to strive to set before them such examples as will be worthy of their imitation; for to my mind good example is a great help. Let us be fretful and cross, and see if our children are not very soon the same. On the other hand, let us be calm, resigned and prayerful, performing patiently the daily and hourly duties lying in our pathway; striving to retain the peaceful and sublime spirit that we received in our morning supplications, which came in answer to our secret pleadings, when our souls were drawn out in prayer, and praise, thanksgiving and love to him who listens to our petitions, asking him to guide us through the day in wisdom's ways, to help us to be firm in the right, to impart needful counsel, in short to help us to perform every duty of a mother to her child through the day. Doing this while the little lambs and those of maturer years are still lying in the bands of sweet slumber that hath bound them during the night; thus obeying the injunction or command to "arise early in the morning"—doing thus our children will partake of the same spirit. Dear sisters, we can never afford to do without the "Home Column" again; then let us stand by it, helping our dear editor to uphold and sustain it, by contributing our mites, no matter how small they may be. They may perchance cheer some weary one; impart some consolation to some sorrowing heart, laden with the cares and trials of life; strengthen the weak; impart some new pearl of wisdom to the already wise, strong and faithful ones. I read with intense interest the Appeal, and am a firm believer in the great good that can be accomplished in the Sunday School cause; and also believe the Hope to be a great help to us in our families. The instruction the children receive by reading it aids them to perform their duties to God. I do hope it will be enlarged. To this good work I am willing to give my mite, as you will find herein enclosed. Then let us, dear sisters, be alive, and ready to aid in every good cause, by accompanying our children to Sunday School every Sunday; there striving to lead or teach them in the way of life and salvation. I think it better, if possible, to accompany them to the school, for it must seem nice to little ones to see dear mamma's face there at the place they have learned to love; and then we can say, Come, children, let us go to the Sabbath School to learn of the Lord, seek wisdom and be happy. I have always done this, and find it very easy to have them go with me. In order to do this, or that we may be advanced with our work so as to go with them, requires great energy and thought on our part. We must have our lives devoted to God, ever striving to live to his honor and glory; and be willing also to do that which will be for the good of those entrusted to our care. May God bless and strengthen us for every duty, and give us that pleasure that is designed we should have in the performance of the same, that at last we may have finished our work "and be prepared to enter that rest that is being prepared," is my prayer in the name of our dear Savior, who loved the little ones and took them in "his arms and blessed them." By doing this he "took their part," as the children say; and I am thankful there are to this day those that will put forth a "Plea for the Little Ones," and hope we may listen to this plea and honor the noble work by giving to the enlargement of the publication they love. By so doing we are helping to build up the kingdom, for we read "of such is the kingdom of heaven;" and we certainly expect them, in after years, to help roll forth the kingdom of heaven, that the kingdom of God may come. Then let us, dear sisters, be willing to give, even as God has blessed us, knowing that it takes means in order that the work may go on; and let us be willing to respect and honor the law of tithing and free will offering. Let us begin this year, those that have not already begun, and tithing ourselves. Let us not think because our principal is small, or what we own is so little that it is not worth while to give. Let us give one tenth this year, and then one tenth of the increase yearly afterwards. By doing this we might accomplish much good, and send means to the Bishop that he might loose the hands of many elders, that they could spend their time in the ministry, and by this means souls be brought into "the fold." I must close lest I should weary your patience in reading this long letter.

Your sister,

MARGARET J. HEAD.

PAWTUCKET, R. I., August 27th.

Dear Sister Frances:—I feel interested in all that is said for the good of mothers, and I know that if we desire our children to become useful men and women we must accustom them to assume responsibility, to exert their wills, to act as well as to learn; then life will be a succession of steps following each other, each one of which will prepare the way for the next, each one of which will bring new light, broader views and higher abilities to bear our increasing duties as they arise. Then as mothers let us have a care for our households, for we are aware that slight circumstances are the stumbling blocks in families, and cold, unkind words check and wither the blossoms of the dearest love. The miseries of a life may be born of what appear to us to be trifles. Nothing rankles in the heart like an injustice. Then mothers let us have a care over the small things of life.

Ever yours in sisterly love,

ANNIE HOLT.

BELFAST, Iowa, August 15th.

Dear Sister Frances:—I can not close my letter without wishing you Godspeed in the great and glorious work that you have undertaken. I feel thankful, and wish to add my mite. I also feel thankful for the "Mothers' Home Column;" I have received strength and encouragement therefrom. The Herald has always been a welcome messenger, now it is doubly so; the "Home Column" seems to fill a place vacant before. O how I love to read the letters from those dear mothers that have stood firm during the dark and cloudy day and are still rejoicing in the gospel of the Son of God. My heart has been made to rejoice this day while reading Sister Salisbury's letter, and I do hope she will be spared to write many more before she enters into that perfect rest that I feel sure awaits her when her work is done here. Ever praying for God's blessings to be with you, I subscribe myself your sister in gospel bonds,

M. P. MATTHEWS.

Sister Frances:—I thought I would pen a few thoughts for the "Home Column" upon home and home influences. I think it is the duty of every wife and mother to make home as pleasant and comfortable as it is possible for her to do, by keeping everything neat and tidy, and make it attractive, not by spending large sums of money for expensive furniture, but to adorn home with the work of our own hands. We can make many very pretty articles of furniture and fancy work, with which we can make our homes pretty and attractive, and the cost of material will be very trifling. We should also strive to let love reign in our homes. We see many husbands and sons when the day's work is done going to the saloons and stores, to have a little enjoyment, where they can throw off the cares of daily life. Dear sisters, should we not, each one of us, try to make our homes so pleasant and attractive that as the day of toil draws to a close their thoughts will turn to home, where a smiling face and loving words welcome them.

Ever praying for the welfare of Zion, I remain,
your sister,

AMY.

Correspondence.

NEBRASKA CITY, Nebraska,

September 13th.

Dear Herald:—When I last wrote, I was sojourning at Wilber. The next day after I wrote, the brethren obtained the use of the "G. A. R.'s" large tent, and from that till the 5th inst., we held tent meetings. Considering the short nights, hot weather, and the busy season for the farmers, our attendance was good, and much interest manifested by several. Bro. Caffall came and spent a few days in behalf of the Master's cause, and we are hopeful that his visit will prove timely and beneficial. There is much to be learned from the trials we are called to pass through, and good is sure to accrue if patience have its perfect work. But, oh, how hard it is to endure and murmur not. I am constrained to believe that our ignorance of God's law and misapprehension of duty, are oftentimes the fruitful cause of evils that perplex and distress us. Truly, silence is golden, when we are not in possession of the Spirit of peace and good will to all men. I opine that it is a sad thing to learn experience by the things which we suffer, neither do I accept, without qualification, that all our misfortunes and disappointments in the world result on account of our profession. I can not pray to God, "lead us not into temptation," while the apostle James bears a faithful and consistent witness. "Let no man say when he is tempted, I am tempted of God: for God can not be tempted with evil, neither tempteth he any man: But every man is tempted, when he is drawn away of his own lust, and enticed." The more noble part is for each to shoulder our own individual responsibility, and then manfully work and sacrifice for the crown of eternal life.

On the 5th, I was permitted to trouble the waters of Blue River, and the wife of brother Ludwig Klein entered the "narrow way," to walk in unity with her husband in Zion's path to the Eternal City of our God. What a joy it will be when we enter the gold paved streets of the New Jerusalem, and eat the twelve manner of fruit from the Tree of Life. But the toil proving our faith, and the trials preparing our soul, lie between the present and our hoped-for triumphant entrance into our promised home. Brother Caffall came this way and spoke on the evening of the 6th instant. There could not possibly be any misunderstanding of his disapprobation of "Stationed Pastors." If an innovation is ever foisted upon the Reorganization, it will not be with the consent and approval of brother Caffall.

In our temporal affairs we are all shook up and unsettled by reason of the Missouri Pacific, R. R. running a line of road into this city, and if I do not lose my home, it will be uncomfortably close to the track. Property has advanced about fifty per. cent. in value during the past two weeks, and is still on the rise. Several of the Saints are in the line of the road and will have to move, and it is a case of "Hobson's choice." Yesterday two of the members of Zion's Hope Sabbath School were added to the flock by baptism. Surely, God will look with kindness and blessing upon the parents and Sabbath School teachers who labor diligently to instruct the children in the true doctrine of Christ. But what will be the consequence to those who neglect? The revelations of God are not silent upon this topic; and he is wise that improves by warning.

In gospel bonds,

Bro. Blair:—Brother Peek and I have been busy about three months with the Saints here. Found the work in rather a deplorable condition, owing mostly to the want of laborers in the field. Have been able by the aid of the Lord to get most of the Saints feeling well. Have been compelled to do our preaching in the open air, and have done so about four evenings each week, and have found it a good way during the warm weather. Have had large crowds to listen to us in this way. I think a good work can be accomplished after a while. Pray for the work in this part. I will write again soon. Your brother,

E. A. DAVIES.

MAGNOLIA, Iowa, Sept. 10th.

Dear Herald:—Here is my hand and my heart for the noble, scriptural and cheering article, "Aid for the Ministry," in your this week's issue. I congratulate you, not because I am coveting that aid, for the question of individual aid troubles me far less than the honor of the cause of God. But the article has the true ring, as does also the remarks of our lamented brother T. J. Andrews, referred to in the same. I am pleased with it also, because it will allay the fears of hundreds of the true friends of God's glorious cause; for there are many who have feared the church was going to forsake the good "old paths" and gradually slide into sectarian footsteps by preaching for hire and divining for money. But that plain and stalwart article from your authorized pen is a guarantee that the good "old ship Zion" is not near being wrecked on the sands of human folly; but that she will continue to answer to the helm of her divine Pilot, and breast the waves of adversity or prosperity with fearless trust and confidence in Him who has promised to be with her to the end. Truly, the wisdom of God is infinite. By what means could he expect to build up a pure church on the earth, only by calling and sending out an unselfish and self-sacrificing ministry; a ministry whose only aim should be to glorify him by seeking to lead souls into his kingdom; a ministry who are willing to follow in the steps of their divine Head, and like him "count all things dross" compared with the excellency of the kingdom of light. Like him content themselves to endure adversity and shame, and while "the foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests," they, like him, may not have place to lay their heads. Under God's order of ministry there can be little or no inducement for corrupt and selfish men to creep in, for there is very little chance to "make merchandise of the souls of men." Empty fame without worldly gain will hardly be inducement sufficient to lead men to sacrifice the sweet society of wife and children, home comforts and loving friends, in order to preach a hated, but divine gospel. To be scouted as a "tramp" for Christ's sake; to be branded as an outcast for the gospel, requires a spirit of meekness which few men naturally possess, and a moral courage greater than that which leads the warrior to face the cannon's mouth. It requires purity of motive, too, also unswerving trust in him who has called, and a love for truth which consumes earthly lust of pleasure or gain, and is itself divine. In the hands of such men, truth will be uncorrupted. In their lips it will be sacred as when written in the Record of Life. From those lips it will fall upon the ear of the sinner, and burn deep into his heart, as the holy fire from the altar of Jehovah. Such men called into God's vineyard understand that it must be their life's work; hence not only present pleasures, but future prospects of earthly wealth are sacrificed, and while those to whom they minister may grow rich in this world's goods, as well as in the "true riches," they, the ministry, are called to trust continually the promise of him who has said, "Seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you."

When men preach for hire, little or much, there is great danger of them seeking to please those who are to pay them, and of their wresting the word of God from its true meaning lest they should fail to find employment. There is indeed danger of them "having men's persons in admiration because of advantage;" but if they realize that the reward is at the time of harvest, or when their task is done, and that God is the great paymaster, then the hireling will skulk away in bitter disappointment; but the faithful, self-sacrificing laborer will continue to sow the seed, water it, and till the soil until the Master says, "It is done: Gather the wheat into the garner;" and then he will patiently wait the glad, "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

Yes, dear Herald, God will prove the ministry, the church and the world; and truly he invites us to prove him. And after many years of feeble efforts and trembling trust, I can bear my testimony that he is true to his promise; and I am satisfied that he will never fail to provide for those who go forth trusting in him.

We have just had another pleasant, and I trust profitable quarterly conference. Several members have been added during the last quarter. The word was dealt out in plainness to both Saint and sinner. Elder Crabb preached twice, and we had a very spiritual prayer meeting. The laborers are few and feeble, and it almost seems at times as though we were nearly dead, but there is an abiding love for the truth in the hearts of the Saints.

I want to say to brother "Lawabider," whoever he may be, that I am not aware that the Quorum of High Priests have ever called in question the right of a Seventy to preside, nor am I aware that they are troubling themselves as to which is the greatest, the High Priests or the Seventy; nor do they deny the right of a Seventy to preside when a High Priest is present. The Martyr said, "The High Priests and Seventies hold the same priesthood, but not the same calling." I trust every High Priest is more concerned to know his duty and perform it, than to know whether he is greater than a Seventy. He will be greatest in the sight of God who does his duty best. The Book of Covenants in paragraph 43 of section 104, confirms the martyr's decision. "Lawabider" has not directly charged the High Priest's Quorum with the above acts, but others may infer from his statements that they are troubled about those matters; hence I claim the right to disabuse the minds of such in defense of the High Priest's Quorum. With love to all and malice toward none, I remain in gospel bonds,

CHARLES DERRY,
Pres. of H. P. Quorum.

GALIEN Mich., Sept. 13th.

Dear Bro. Blair:—The cause is moving out in this part of the vineyard. During the last five weeks two days meetings have been held at Coldwater, Michigan, Clear Lake, Indiana, and at Dimondale, Michigan. All were well attended, and a good interest manifested by a goodly number at each place. Brother Springer is doing a good work at Clear Lake and has baptized four there lately. Two have been baptized recently at Hartford, and others there are near the kingdom. The Lord has signally blessed the ministrations of brother Rathbun lately, in healing the sick. With these evidences of divine goodness manifested toward us, we feel encouraged to go on in the good cause. May the Lord move his glorious work, is prayer of your brother,

C. SCOTT.

PIN OAK, Ill., Sept. 6th.

Dear Herald:—We are still alive in the South-East Illinois District, and are trying to roll on the work in these parts. Our conference has just closed in this (Dry Fork) branch, and we feel that our assembling was not in vain. We had a good time and truly felt that "it is good to be a Saint" and enjoy the favor of our Heavenly Father. The work seems to be on the increase here at present. It is true we are gaining slowly, but so long as there is assurance of some improvement we feel encouraged to struggle on, hoping that God will give the necessary increase in his own good time. We think the Saints all returned home strengthened, encouraged, and more determined to continue to strive for the crown over the kingdom. May God bless them and help them to put their good resolutions into practice.

Bro. G. H. Hilliard and myself have been holding forth in Franklin county the past two weeks, and find the interest at that place is still good. Bro. Hilliard baptized four, and many others seem to be just ready to obey. There are eighteen members at that place now, and we hope to be able to report a branch there soon.

Near the close of our meetings there, a school teacher of the neighborhood gave out that he would lecture at the Methodist Church on the "Rise and progress of the Latter Day Saint Church." I attended, (Bro Hilliard had gone home), and at the close I replied to his would-be argument; had good liberty and think much good was done. The lecturer was very fair and gave the Saints of that place a good name; says he knows them to be honest, upright, truthful people. He also said he would lecture another night when we get back there, and let us reply. I wanted him to take some subject and divide the time, but he wants the first speech and the last one, and says he "must have all underholds, or he won't wrestle;" so I will try to be on hand when he lectures, and reply if permitted. The Methodists will not let us preach in their house; but if any one wants to lecture against us, their doors are always open, or have been so far. I think, however, that they will stop that if their lecturers do not stop us from replying, for they can see, notwithstanding their blindness in other respects, that the comparison is always damaging to their cause.

Bro. Hilliard and I expect to return there the latter part of this month, if nothing prevents. The calls for preaching are coming in from all quarters. Many places where the gospel has never been preached are open, and the people—not the righteous (?)—are asking for some one to come over and instruct them in the way of life. May the Lord raise up more efficient and zealous laborers to work in his vineyard here in Southern Illinois! My heart's desire is to see the work prosper; and I want to throw in my mite to help move it on to its final triumph.

Yours for the truth,
ISAAC M. SMITH.

MOORHEAD Iowa, Sept. 9th.

Dear Herald:—I was appointed to labor by the last General Conference, and to-day find myself in a position not to comply with that appointment,—except locally. Having informed my quorum that I was not prepared for the field, the recommendation was a surprise to me; and had I not felt at the moment that there was a possibility of my laboring, I would not have remained silent while the appointment was being ratified. While I shall labor as much as possible locally, I do not expect to travel as per appointment. In bonds,

J. W. WIGHT.

LAKE CRYSTAL, Minn., Sep. 7th.

Brother Blair:—I came here two weeks ago by request of brother E. A. Steadman, and the desire of Mr. Cookson to administer to his wife, who was a member of our church. She was very sick. Brother Steadman and I administered to her, after which I told Mr. Cookson he must make up his mind to give her up, for she would die soon. Three days from that time she passed away without a struggle, as though she was going to sleep. She was a woman well liked, and has died in hopes of a better home beyond.

I have preached seven times since I came here, and on Sunday the 29th of August I baptized one, and on Sunday last, September 5th, I baptized two more; others are believing. This is the old hunting ground of William H. Kelley, where the Methodist preacher and a few of his converts bowed in the street one evening near where brother Kelley was stopping, and prayed God to drive out all the Mormon devils there were around here. Brother Kelley is well liked here, and the Saints would like to see him again, as also T. W. Smith and J. R. Lambert. All are spoken highly of. The work in Minnesota is on the advance. I leave for Cormorant, my home, to-night. I find a good class of Saints here under the watchcare of Bro. E. A. Steadman, and

I think they will work their way well along through the trials of life. Brother Whitney, who lately came in, is a worker. He got a Catholic out to hear me on Sunday evening. He said if he had known that I was preaching such a doctrine as he heard on that night, he should not have missed a meeting.

Yours truly,
JOHN C. FOSS.

Bro. Joseph:—We have been here nearly a fortnight, holding meetings, and Sunday we expect to baptize fifteen or upwards; some of them the fruit of the seed sown by Brn. Rodger and Gillen, and nurtured by Bro. J. Wright. Since the conference I have been more greatly blessed in presenting the faith than before, and my labors are more blessed also—at least it seems so to me. The work seems to be increasing quite fast on this continent, and I am trying to utilize some of the ministerial aid of this land for missionary work, but there are yet many difficulties in the way, and I desire to act cautiously and more in harmony with my brethren; so I suppose I will still have to labor on as heretofore.

There are plenty of calls for preachers in this land, and we endeavor to fill as many as possible, and to divide the year among them as we best can. How fast time flies! nearly two years ago we left California; another year and the time for which I came will have expired. What will the record be? May God help me to be faithful and diligent.

We are all well. With love to all Saints, and an earnest desire to see Zion arrayed in her beautiful robes of purity and righteousness, I remain your brother in Christ,

Bro. Blair:—All goes well here; nearly all are alive in the work. I have confirmed the four named in Herald some time ago; others are believing. Two debates are expected to take place soon; one with a Methodist, and one with a Seven Day Adventist on the Sabbath Question.

Yours,
J. J. CORNISH.

Bro. Joseph Smith:—The church is gaining ground in this district. We have had some glorious good meetings in the different branches this summer, that were largely attended by those in and those out of the church. I have baptized seven since the first of July have opened up some new places for preaching where we hope good will be done. I have been greatly blessed in preaching, in confirmation, and in administering to the sick. God is confirming the word with us as in days of old, for which we desire to give Him all the praise and honor. Some of the brethren and sisters are nobly standing by and doing battle for the cause as opportunity offers. Their reward is sure. Some seem to be cold and indifferent, others persist in dancing and do not try to set a worthy example. Some talk altogether too much. Others are greatly aggrieved over what some may have said. Bro. Andrew Barton and wife—sister Martha—have joined the Christians, or Campbellites, so we learn from reliable source. They have often been heard in public and in private to bear faithful testimony to this work. We have our ups and downs in this part of God's vineyard as well as the Saints in other places. I never have known such efforts to have been made before by the different sects in this country to make proselytes or disciples as have been made this summer. Prejudice is very great in some places. I am trying to do my duty and leave the result in the hands of God.

Dear Bro. Blair:—I was pleased to see the article in the Herald, "The reason why." It took me back to the days of long ago; for I can testify to the fact that we did enjoy the gifts and blessings of God's Spirit, and did sing with heart and soul:

The Spirit of God, like a fire is burning,
The latter day glory begins to come forth.
The visions and blessings of old are returning;
The angels are coming to visit earth.

I did hear one Elder ask for something to eat and a nights lodging; and a man in the crowd said, "I'll give you a bowl of milk and bread, if you will come home with me." The Elder thanked him and went with him. This was in Manchester, England, I think about the year 1838. It did me good to read those articles, also Bro. Joseph Dewsnup's letters. They take me back to the past when we did enjoy more fully the holy Spirit. I feel very weak in myself, but not in the everlasting gospel of Jesus Christ.

Your sister,
SARAH HUNT.

Brother Joseph:—After almost one year's absence from Lamoni and the association of the Saints, some may like to know of our whereabouts. We live five miles due west from the State Reform School, and six miles due west from Eldora, the county seat of our county, and in the vicinity where Elder Jason Briggs lived and preached the gospel some years ago, shortly after the close of the Rebellion, and where he held the debate with Bro. T. W. Smith converting him to the faith of the gospel; but the seed sown by him has vanished; we are here alone in the faith, so far as earthly association is concerned. I have been to preaching meeting but once since we left Lamoni, and that was conducted by the baptists. They were so much disagreed among themselves that in order to hear him preach, it cost me a trip with my team to Eldora to bring him out; and while I was hungry and prepared to digest a good gospel sermon, I returned home empty, and still hungry, as there was no spiritual food in his sermon for me. Emma and myself have often longed for and wished that one of our Elders would drop in here and preach a few sermons. I think there is a splendid opening here, and we cordially invite any who should be passing through central Iowa, or any who may come direct to call on us. I will meet them at Eldora at any time, by half day's notice, and I think a good work could be opened. The sectarian churches here stand badly divided. If any of the Elders who attend the Reunion would come this way before they return home, we will try and keep them a while. I attended the Soldiers' Reunion of this county, held at Eldora on the 26th and 27th of August, and in that immense crowd, said to be between ten and twelve thousand people, I thought it strange that I could not recognize even one whom I could greet as a fellow traveler in the one faith.

The season here has been extremely hot and dry, until the 27th of August we had a heavy rain; corn is quite light. We are striving to live in harmony with God's divine will, and law.

Brn. J. Smith and W. W. Blair:—God is very good to us. We have been greatly blest and strengthened. Brn. W. Nirk, George Shimel, N. Stamm, E. C. Brand, N. A. Baker, and others have labored with and visited us. God has visited us with his holy Spirit. Bro. N. A. Baker has located in our city, in answer to our prayers to God to send some one who was not afraid to tell us just what we needed and ought to do.

BEATRICE, Neb., July 15th.

Dear Herald:—We are of the scattered ones, there being only three of us in this place, viz., Sr. Annie Fitton, my wife and myself. We have had no preaching here but once, in March last by Bro. R. M. Elvin, who preached two discourses in my house to a few of my neighbors. I have been doing what I could by the way of distributing tracts. Of late, since Bro. Peters sent me ten copies of the Voice of Warning my labors to get the people interested have been more successful than formerly. There are at least two who are very much interested, the verdict of each is it is the best thing they ever read, and they wish to hear more. One of them is very zealous in his efforts to get others to read it. He has loaned three books. I have given them my papers besides visiting them by invitation, and explaining the word to the best of my ability. One man thought the reason I could defend my position so well was that I knew the scriptures by heart. Of course that is far from true, the secret in the matter is we have the truth on our side; hence the readiness with which we may turn every scripture to account and make of it a weapon with which to rout the enemy. I hope all who are isolated will secure some of the books of Bro. Peters and go to work; and don't stop with loaning the books, talk and expound the word to the best of your ability, not forgetting to ask God's blessing and his Spirit to guide; and I assure you we shall each be able to do something to help on the good work. There is a good field here awaiting some faithful Elder equipped for sowing the seed of life; to whom we shall be glad to extend a hearty welcome.

Yours in the faith,
G. A. FOLDEN.

JONESPORT, Maine, August 30th.

Brother Joseph:—Am preaching every night with excellent audiences. Hall full last night, and the interest seems wonderful. God is with us in very deed, and we are rejoicing under the power and testimony of the Spirit. Our tour in Maine, has been, by the grace of God, an unqualified satisfaction, and we believe, success. Good audiences and interest everywhere, and the work without doubt is onward, and the church prospects are highly encouraging. In the faith,

ETERNAL LIFE.

"AND this is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou has sent."—St. John 17:3.

What is life, its purpose and its object? Are we creatures of chance, or of an intelligent, all powerful prescience and will. We are; we do exist; we do think; we have to exercise the faculty we call memory, the vehicle which carries us back to where we have been, and this, coupled with the commonest kind of analogy, satisfies us of what we have been and are so far as this world is concerned; of our advent into it, our development out of the almost purely animal life that once only recognized by an instinct gross physical pain and suffering, into the higher and more complex order of life; of intelligent consciousness; of a power and capacity to suffer and to enjoy—by the exercise of the qualities our experience has taught us to denominate reason, affection, hope, fear, &c., &c. Standing here and at this point, what does the accumulated wisdom and experience of this world's history furnish us? Nothing but this,—a few more toilsome days and years of changing sorrows and unstable joys, and if by reason of strength and physical endurance the line shall stretch away to three score years and ten, what more is there for us who have passed to the summit to hope for in this life? What answer to us do those make who have already trod the long, dusty, tired road, and are within a few days' journey of the final place prepared for all the living? Oh life! oh mystery! whether the unfortunate, the outcast, or the homeless, friendless and starving, dying in a garret, whose only hope perhaps is that life and consciousness and suffering will soon be forever and forever a thing of the past; or a Solomon who attained to all of glory and riches and honor that earth could bestow, untrammelled and unrestrained in his pursuit of pleasure and sensual delights by any law, either human or divine, all testify and exclaim at the close, "All is vanity."

What quality in man is it that is dissatisfied with human experience? Not the material, or sensual, certainly; for that is wedded to its own, is of the earth, earthy, and belongs to the realm of physical sense and feeling and is satisfied in the exercise of its functions. Why this dissatisfaction and protest and reaching away at times of the other part of our conscious being, if there be not another part? Why do the forces of reason, thought, intuition and conscience, these subtle, immaterial, yet all-powerful qualities that belong alone to man—rush over and array themselves against the fleshly law and its exercise in our bodily members, if there be not "a spirit in man," a something superior to the flesh and the law that governs and forces its action? If death ends all, why then this law destructive, and law preservative, existing in the same body and being. If death ends all, then the sum of life and death are, and always will be equal, and the ends of creation are below our standard of justice and reason, and existence a failure so far at least as concerns us. If death does not end all, if there is a spirit in man that shall survive the change and wreck of matter, it is likely that there is a law governing, or should govern that spirit. Jesus, expiring upon the cross, exclaimed, "Father, into thy hands I commit my spirit." Stephen, at death, cried, "Lord Jesus, receive my spirit." Was this tradition, education, or fact? Centuries have rolled away, and the great majority of mankind are in doubt or open disbelief, and of the many who profess, few seemingly are able to give a reason other than traditional for their belief. To Mr. Darwin, Haeckel, or Ingersoll, it is all material, with no evidence sufficient upon which to predicate a belief or substantial hope that death for us does not end all; that we are resurrected only in our children and live only in the memory of our deeds. What is life? Whither are we drifting? A mystery—over and above, around and about us—a deep, unfathomable mystery, and no suggestion of proof from the past.

The Jew required a sign and got it, and is more of an infidel to-day than at any period in his history. The Greeks sought after wisdom, and they have left us entertainment for an hour in their poetry, their song, and their sculpture; but the great secret is covered, like their ruins. The priests have proved their fallibility in the past, and the church to-day is honey-combed with doubt and dissension. The Concord School of Philosophy evolves nothing for belief or hope in the future, and the evolutionists have interrogated the monkey, the tadpole and the moner, in regard to our origin and have given up the chase apparently to Mr. Beecher. And are we helpless, floating along unknowingly to soon mingle in the great stream of death that pours its waters into the ocean of eternity, as the drop from heaven loses its identity in the great sea of oblivion. Are we helpless? Not entirely. Sometimes we think, for reason—blessed light—takes us up and bears us along by times, a little way, hope is begotten, and oftentimes outgrows its parent. But alas! death snatches our loved ones and uses our weapons of analogy and reason to mock our tears across the grave of our dead.

An actor, in a brief address over the remains of a fellow actor, quoted the dead man's opinion of the future as "a dark, impenetrable curtain which no human being has ever drawn aside and come back to tell the tale." Over his own dead brother Ingersoll said, "After all, it may be best just in the happiest, sunniest hour of all the voyage, while the eager winds are kissing every sail, to dash against the unseen rock, and in an instant hear the billows roar a sunken ship. For whether in mid sea or among the breakers of the farther shore; a wreck must mark at last the end of each and all. And every life, no matter if its every hour is rich with love and every moment jeweled with a joy, will at its close become a tragedy as sad, and deep and dark, as can be woven of the warp and woof of mystery and death. Life is a narrow vale between the cold and barren peaks of two eternities. We strive in vain to look beyond the heights. We cry aloud, and the only answer is the echo of our wailing cry. From the voiceless lips of the unreplying dead there comes no word."

Again; he once telegraphed—"A few tears, a few words, a few flowers, are all the living can give to the dead. The tragedy is ended, the curtain is fallen. Applause can not lift it up again." Over a dead infidel the great orator said, "Again we are face to face with the great mystery that shrouds the world. We question, but there is no reply. Out in the wide waste of seas there drifts no spar. Over the desert of death the sphinx gazes forever, but never speaks. What can we say of the dead! Where they have gone, reason can not go, and from thence revelation has not come." Ah! poor sorrowing, suffering, sin-stricken humanity! Is there for thee no sympathy larger than that thy brother can bestow? no arm more potent to save? no light amid the caverns of dead hopes? naught to repair the wasted life and make the spirit young again? Has no one ever heard the song of life, the music that awakens every chord in beautiful and responsive harmony as it sounds the notes of reason and affection and appeals to our sense of the just, the beautiful and the true, and as it rings out the knowledge of our wants and answering, says, "I have the supply?" Where, O God! if there is one, shall we grope toward the light?

We have heard of a story, (there are many stories) in a Bible, (there are many bibles), of a babe—nothing but a babe—in a manger at Bethlehem. The wise men said that the star had led them where the hope of the world lay—that "the desire of all nations" had come. Even the bosom of a Plato had burned with its unsatisfied longing, and voiced the unfulfilled desire as he said—"It is necessary that a law-giver be sent from heaven to instruct us. Oh, how greatly I desire to see that man," said he, "and who he is. He must be more than man; for since every nature is governed by a nature superior to itself, as beasts and birds by man, so must this law-giver, who is to teach man what man by his own nature could not know, be of a nature superior to man, that is, of a divine nature."

The Babe of Bethlehem has filled the world with its fame. And the statement of Paul (1 Tim. 3:15, 16) that "the pillar and ground of the truth is, that God was made manifest in the flesh, justified in the spirit, seen of angels, preached unto the Gentiles, and received up into glory," covers the claim of supernatural, divine intervention in human affairs in regard to the child of Bethlehem. And although Paul admits "without controversy" the greatness of this "mystery of godliness," yet he gives us to understand, in Eph. 3:3, 4, that this great mystery was made known unto him by revelation. With Paul and Plato, then, we must conclude, that if man is ever to receive knowledge or satisfaction concerning things which he can not by his own nature or wisdom give to his fellow man, that the superior revelation must come from a superior source. The world by its wisdom knew not God eighteen hundred years ago. No testimony is needed to further show that the situation is not changed to-day. Here, then, we stand a countless infidel host, weeping over our dead as they pass away eternally and forever from our sight, mourning over dead hopes, shattered idols, impossible ideals, or surging along with the restless and resistless tide of pleasure-seekers to drown in a life made up of Platonic philosophy, sensual delight, stoicism, and the prophetic and warning instinct of the higher and possible future life. "God, who at sundry times and in divers manners spake unto the fathers by the prophets, hath in these last days spoken unto us by His Son." Who is His Son? "Everybody," we have heard say. But what saith the word: "This is my beloved son, hear ye him." This once was Bethlehem's babe. Hear him. "I am the resurrection and the life; he that liveth [in] and believeth in me shall never die." "I came from heaven to do the will of him that sent me; and if any man will do the will of God he shall know of the doctrine." "Heaven and earth shall pass away; but my word shall not pass away." The promises of men and self-constituted priests have and do pass away unfulfilled; but has the word of God which was preached eighteen hundred years ago by Paul and Sylvanus and Timotheus to the Corinthian saints become yea and nay; or, are all the promises in Christ Jesus yea and amen, to-day, always, and forever?

Let us hunt up some of these pledges of his. "The revelation of Jesus Christ, which God gave unto him to shew unto his servants things which must shortly come to pass, and sent, and signified by his angel unto his servant John, who bare record of all things that he saw, saying, 'Blessed is he that readeth, and they that hear the words of this prophecy.'—Rev. 1:1, 2, 3. What did he see? Many, many things of interest, but time does not permit us now to speak of but this: "And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people."—Rev. 14:6.

Time has rolled on; some wondrous power has moved the nations and kingdoms and thrones and governments—ecclesiastical and civil—to a fulfillment of these predictions of this once humble fisherman and follower of the despised Nazarene once the babe of Bethlehem. Banished to that lonely island in the Ægean sea for what he has asserted to be the word of God and the testimony of Jesus Christ. God unrolled the panorama and showed him faithful portraits of scenes that time and nations unborn should act upon this world's stage, ending with a glimpse of the eternal state and condition of man. The picture german to our time and subject and interest, is that of an angel coming to this earth long after John's day with the everlasting gospel.

Let us turn back a half century from to-day. The scene is laid in western New York, in the land of America. A young man of as humble origin and occupation as was John when called to his ministry from fishing nets on the shore of Galilee; behold him proceeding to the woods after the advice of another servant of Jesus Christ, the apostle James; and while kneeling in prayer and supplication for information which the world with all its wisdom could not give, suddenly the heavens open, and a glorious angel in a conduit of light supernatural descends literally and really as John saw him do nearly eighteen hundred years ago on Patmos' lonely isle in prophetic vision. No "private" interpretation of the old or new testament scriptures are permitted. It is an awful perversion, a travesty on all sense, an insult to our God-given reason to say, as man-made priests do say, that this angel is the Young Men's Christian Association of our day! the American Bible, or Tract, or Missionary Society or the Salvation Army! The word of men whose testimony has never been impeached, is that in our day this angel was seen of men and his voice heard by them declaring the restoration of the ancient gospel—an angel such as the disciple and Mary saw at Jesus' tomb; a literal, veritable, Bible angel, the angel also who delivered "the book that was sealed," which Isaiah saw (Isa. 29:11-18) to this "unlearned" young man, who was to be the instrument in the hand of the Lord to inaugurate this "marvelous work and a wonder" that for over fifty years has so faithfully and signally demonstrated that "the wisdom of our wise men has perished and the understanding of the prudent men has been hid." "This day is this scripture fulfilled in our hearing," although uttered twenty-five hundred years ago, and it demonstrates the existence and faithfulness of the eternal God, with whom one day is as a thousand years, and of the safety there is in relying upon his eternal promises. If all this can be proved false, if Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery and Martin Harris and David Whitmer separately or conjointly, always and everywhere have been deceived in what they saw and heard, or have persistently lied in this matter, still you have the fact to account for of the existence of this book, as to its origin. Joseph Smith did not write it from the suggestion of his own brain. This in the very nature of the surroundings was an impossibility. Where did he get it, if not from the plates of "the book that was sealed?" Did and does David Whitmer still lie when he says, with others, that he witnessed the process of transcribing, and saw and handled the plates?

Setting this all aside, and how shall we account for the fact that cotemporary, and almost simultaneously, "a very little while" indeed, and Lebanon has "become a fruitful field," after eighteen long centuries of drouth and dearth and desolation? How shall we account for the fact that, though rising from so humble an origin, through belief in this work, so many have ceased to err in and have come to such a unity of spiritual understanding, and that murmurers at creeds and dogmas of men have learned a doctrine with which an unlettered ministry are confounding the wisdom of the mighty with their high sounding ecclesiastical titles and bringing to naught the things that are of human assumption? On the other hand, if these things be true, then there are intelligent bodies, with superior powers, outside of this planet of ours, who have the power of descending into and through our atmosphere, and of making themselves visible in broad day-light to mortals. Then angels are facts; ministering spirits true, and Joseph Smith and David Whitmer and Oliver Cowdery's testimony is a joyous message, and the Book of Mormon is of God and Jesus is true and the Bible contains the word of God and Isaiah did not predict falsely. These are some of the things of which we are called to testify in our ministry, that faith, by hearing of the word of God, may be begotten, and that people may be induced by hearing the word of God preached to be led to obey and to know. "Faith cometh by hearing," and knowledge by obedience.

"Simon Peter, a servant and an Apostle of Jesus Christ, to them that have obtained like precious faith with us, through the righteousness of God and our Savior, Jesus Christ, according as his divine power hath given us all things that pertain unto life and godliness, through the knowledge of Him that hath called us to glory and to virtue." "By his knowledge shall my righteous servant justify many," prophesied Isaiah of the Messiah.

"I have not spoken of myself, but the Father which sent me, He gave me a commandment, what I should say, and what I should speak, and I know that His commandment is life everlasting." Not only do I know this, "but if any man will do his will, he shall know" also. "Whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises, that by these [promises] ye might become partakers of the divine [superior] nature." "Now these (my disciples) have known thee, and that I came out from thee." "And this is life eternal, to know thee, the only true God and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent." "Can a man by searching find out God?" Yes; if he searches in the right direction.

I write for the benefit of those of my friends who know not God and have not obeyed the gospel of His Son, but who are yet mourning in darkness and ignorance, without God and without hope in the world, (as I once was), who have heard of the dispensation of the grace of God which has been given unto me, and toward them, if happily I might persuade them, how that by revelation he made known unto me the "mystery of Godliness," whereby they themselves may be led to understand my knowledge in the mystery of Christ, which in other ages was not made known unto the sons of men as it is now revealed unto us by his Spirit, just as it was to Paul and the Ephesian Saints.

I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth, "for therein is the righteousness of God revealed."

M. H. BOND.

JONESPORT, Maine, August 27th, 1886.

SERMON BY ELDER R. J. ANTHONY, OF WILBER, NEBRASKA,
Delivered at the Saints' Chapel, Lamoni, Iowa,
April 13th, 1886.

[Reported for the Herald and prepared by the Editor].

Since we have met together here we have heard a number of discourses delivered, and the way of life and salvation has been presented in clearness, and in such a way that it seems to me it ought to give encouragement to those who have obeyed it, and bring those who have not obeyed it to the light of the truth. We talk a great deal about this latter day work; and there is a statement in the word, that out of the mouth of two or three witnesses every word shall be established. And it is claimed by his people that the gospel has been restored, and that means that the gospel as it was preached by Christ and his apostles had not been always preached to men; for as it was truthfully remarked here last Sabbath morning, when we refer to the idea of a reformation in the world, I think it was well presented that the Lord God had a plan, and that which God had given could not be reformed by man. The many different theories that have been alluded to here, which have been presented for the consideration of men and women, have grown out of a system of reformation; and we believe that we have taken the safest way, and that our feet have been planted firmly upon the rock of eternal life. Upon this we present to the world a restoration of the gospel of Jesus Christ; and claim that the very fact that there has been a reformation in the world, proves conclusively that those entering into that warfare have accepted the thought that the gospel as preached by Jesus and his apostles, had not been always taught to the children of men. We think this needs no argument whatever. It is admitted by all bible believers that Jesus Christ gave a commission to men to go and preach the gospel; and the reason why he did so was that all power was given unto him, both in the heavens and in the earth. His commandment to his disciples was, to go and preach the gospel to every creature; and men were to be saved by the gospel. We have the testimony of one of the chief apostles, that the gospel was the power of God unto salvation to every one that accepted it—to every one that believed. Now last evening Christ was presented to us, his power and his majesty and his glory. I simply refer to this because Jesus made the declaration himself, that all power was given unto him, both in heaven and in earth. Then recognizing him as the Savior of mankind, and looking upon him as he has been revealed to us in the scriptures of truth, we believe that he has power to save and redeem the sons and daughters of earth.

The question arises now in the minds of men, whether or not in the restoration of the gospel of Christ he has given the same authority to men to go and preach the gospel that he gave to those men when he made the declaration that this power was given unto him. There is one way that we shall be able to determine this, and that we believe to be a safe way, and that is to go directly, as the elders have everywhere advised, to the law and the testimony. The claim is made by us and maintained, that Jesus Christ has so commissioned men now, and that they have been sent to preach the gospel with authority from God and from Christ. When Paul and Silas down at Phillipi preached the gospel of life and peace, they preached of Jesus Christ, the risen Lord. And because of this they were beaten with stripes and cast into prison. But when once the power was manifested there, when the prison doors were thrown open, the jailor came in and asked the question directly, "Sirs, what must I do to be saved?" Now our brother gave us last evening the reasons, and why they should believe in that divine being. And we believe that the reasons given last night were all powerful, and all-sufficient. Now is it not true, as has been urged and maintained everywhere, that the same cause produces the same effect? and therefore that the means of life and salvation in the days of Jesus Christ and his Apostles must be the means of salvation to-day?

We now come back to the thought of the great restoration, and we ask, are we prepared to meet the inquiries that may be made, and the question when asked, "What must I do to be saved?" As a minister, how should I answer the question? The Savior to my mind laid down the rule we should follow, the rule by which men should know the way in which an individual had been sent who came presenting the way of like and peace; and the question asked of him was this: How shall we know that you have been sent of God? The answer of the Savior was, He that speaks the word of God is sent of God.

I take this Book of Covenants, one that has been questioned by a few men in the church, and by men out of the church, and I read the statement concerning this matter of life and salvation on the 138th page: "And verily, verily, I say unto you, he that receiveth my gospel, receiveth me, and he that receiveth not my gospel, receiveth not me." Is this declaration in harmony with the sayings of the Lord Jesus Christ? In the twelfth chapter of St. John's gospel I read: "I came not to judge the world, but I came to save the world. He that rejecteth me, and receiveth not my words, hath one that judgeth him. The words which I have spoken shall judge him in the last day." The revealed will of God to the children of men in this dispensation by the instrument that God called to restore the gospel and preach that gospel in all the world says: "He that receiveth my gospel receiveth me, and he that receiveth not my gospel receiveth not me." I read further: "And this is my gospel; repentance and baptism by water, and then cometh the baptism of fire and the Holy Ghost, even the Comforter, which showeth all things, and teacheth the peaceable things of the kingdom." I will read another clause—the last one: "And again, it shall come to pass, that on as many as ye shall baptize with water, ye shall lay your hands, and they shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost, and shall be looking forth for the signs of my coming, and shall know me; and behold, I come quickly, even so, amen." I discover here an important thought, and that is this: "And this is my gospel." He further says that those who are baptized with water shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost, and when they shall have received that Spirit, he shall teach them the peaceable things of the kingdom of God. In all the revelations made to this church of Latter Day Saints, we find that wherever the gospel of Jesus Christ has been referred to, the kingdom of God has been clearly represented in connection with it. Note this fact:—"And again it shall come to pass that on as many as ye shall baptize with water, ye shall lay your hands, and they shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." Compare this now with the New Testament Scriptures, and see its harmony with them. But this is only a tithe of similar doctrine in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants.

But it is the gospel of Jesus Christ we are looking for, and following up the thought that "in the mouth of two or three witnesses every word shall be established," when this jailer at Phillipi asked Paul and Silas, "Sirs, what must I do to be saved," we have their answer; "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved, and thy house." We are aware that many have stopped right there, and have not considered the force of the commission given of Christ to these men when he said, "All power is given unto me, both in heaven and in earth; go ye, therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you; and lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." Do you not suppose, my brothers and sisters, that the apostle Paul understood the force of that commission? He knew when the question was asked that he must answer it in harmony with what had been given him; and he knew that Jesus Christ had said: "As the Father sent me into the world, so send I you into the world." "I speak nothing but what my Father commanded me to speak." Besides, they were to "teach them to observe all things whatsoever" Jesus had commanded them. Let me call your attention to another fact right now, and that is this: After Christ had been resurrected, he was with his disciples and was seen of them forth days. During those forty days he was instructing them in the things that pertain to the Kingdom of God. And in the last chapter of Luke we are told that He explained to them the law and the prophets, and the psalms, and in all the Scriptures concerning himself; hence they were certainly prepared to answer the question intelligently. We now leave this saying of the Apostle Paul, and will see whether we stand right in theory. We have read in the Doctrine and Covenants, that you must preach faith and repentance, and we also find it there revealed that when men believe on the Lord Jesus, when they have been convinced in their judgment that Jesus is the Christ, the Elders are then to baptize them in water, and lay their hands upon them, that they may receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. Peter is a good witness, and we read what Peter preached on the day of Pentecost. By some he has been called the pleasant preacher; he was a plain one, certainly. He did not go around the bush in answering questions pertaining to life and salvation, but came directly to the point. And when he preached, the very first thing he told the people right there and then was, You have killed the Prince of life and peace; you have crucified the Lord of life and glory. He reasoned with them, appealed to their judgment; he called their attention to the scriptures concerning Christ; and directly we find a number of men and women who have just been convinced that Peter was right, that he was preaching the gospel of life and peace, and they propounded the question, "Men and brethren, what must we do?" Now some claim that there is a conflict between the answers of Paul and Peter. Let us see whether they differ. The answer of Peter was this: "Repent and be baptized every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins, and you shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." We have always thought Peter was correct in giving this answer, for I believe that the gospel was then preached by the Holy Ghost sent down from above. We are told that when these servants of Christ were thus assembled, that the Holy Ghost came into that house as a rushing mighty wind, and he there sat upon them as cloven tongues of fire. And, mark you, when this power came upon them, they were brought directly into communion with the third personage of the God-head, and it was ruling in and reigning over them, and bringing to their minds all that Jesus had taught them, and they were fully prepared to answer. Peter answered the question directly by the Spirit sent down from heaven, and he said "repent and be baptized, every one of you." His instructions from the risen and glorified Lord were, "teach them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you," and he could do nothing less as a servant of Jesus Christ, therefore he said to them, "Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and you shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." We have discovered that he preached this under the power and gift of the Holy Ghost. We believe he was faithfully carrying out the instructions of his Master. Go back now to the prophets who declared that God would send one who should "prepare the way of the Lord and make his paths straight." Jesus Christ recognized this messenger, John the Baptist, and came directly to him, and demanded baptism at his hands. You all know what John said, as recorded in the third chapter of Matthew; "I have need to be baptized of thee." But Jesus said, "Suffer it to be so now, for thus it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness." John suffered it, Christ was baptized, and when he came up out of the water—now mind you he was baptized—and when he came up out of the water, the Holy Ghost descended upon him in the form of a dove, and God, the Eternal Father, bore record that he was his son, both in heaven and on earth. Thus, beloved Saints, there was a witness. We believe that Peter taught the people just right upon the day of Pentecost. Peter said Jesus had been given to us for an example, and we should walk in his footsteps, and you see that is the way that Jesus went. That is the straight way. And we read here that when Jesus began his ministry, and when he preached that wonderful and beautiful discourse upon the mount, he made the declaration, and laid it down as being binding upon the people, and said, "Enter ye in at the straight gate."—"I have entered in, and enter ye in at the straight gate." He gave the reason why they should enter in at the straight gate, and the reason was, that this was the way unto eternal life.

I now take up the Book of Mormon, given to the people here and now in this dispensation, and I read something here in reference to a gate, and it is in perfect harmony with what I have quoted from the Savior. I read in chapter 13, 2 Nephi, "Enter ye in at the straight gate." What was it? "For the gate by which ye shall enter is repentance, and baptism by water, and then comes the remission of sins by fire and by the Holy Ghost." It is not necessary to read more here, because we laid down the rule this morning, that out of the mouth of two or three witnesses every word shall be established. We have found two witnesses, the Book of Mormon and the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, and we now take up the Bible and find the gospel was taught precisely the same. How did Peter teach it? "Repent and be baptized every one of you." Peter understood that this was the straight gate by which they were to enter in. The Savior understood it too, for he further said, "He that entereth not into the sheepfold by the door, but climbeth up some other way, the same is a thief and a robber." What kind of talk would that be for a man to-day! We are not responsible for it. We have no authority to make any change whatever in this statement. We find it here recorded in the words of everlasting life, and we believe that Jesus Christ spake no vain or idle word. He that entereth not into the sheepfold—he that entereth not into the church—by the door, he that entereth not by the straight gate, what is he? Well, the answer of the Savior explains the matter, and I shall go no further. Now we discover that our brethren to-day are preaching the gospel precisely as the Lord Jesus Christ instructed, as he taught it, as he spoke the law of life, and as he instructed his disciples to teach.

Now that we have found Peter's answer, let me call your attention to what Philip did. Philip went down to Samaria, as we read in the eighth chapter of the Acts of the Apostles, and he preached the gospel to the Samaritans. We all talk about that. What did he preach to them? We are told that when the people at Samaria believed the things concerning the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, and the kingdom of God, they were baptized both men and women. What do you think Philip preached when he went to Samaria? I will guarantee that he preached to the people the name of Jesus Christ, told them of his name as well as his power; told them that he was the risen Lord, and furthermore told them they must enter into life by the straight gate, and this was the gospel of life that he taught. "Now when the apostles which were at Jerusalem, heard that Samaria had received the word of God, they sent unto them Peter and John; who, when they were come down prayed for them, that they might receive the Holy Ghost; for as yet he was fallen upon none of them." When these apostles came, they laid their hands upon them, and they received the Holy Ghost. We find in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, that God appointed and commissioned a ministry to-day, and says, Go and preach the gospel to the children of men, baptize them in water, and when you have done that, lay your hands upon them, and they shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. Now that was the doctrine of the gospel. In the history of Philip's preaching, we hear the voice of God speaking to him, and the voice of the Spirit was, "Arise and go toward the south, unto the way that goeth from Jerusalem unto Gaza;" and he was willing and obedient; and went right along just as the Spirit commanded him, and he went under the power and influence of the Holy Spirit. As he went along he saw a chariot, and a man reading the sayings of the prophet about Jesus Christ. And when Philip went up to the chariot, as the Spirit told him to do, he heard this man reading, and said, "Understandest thou what thou readeest?" The man replied, "How can I except some man guide me?" Here comes in the thought that the gospel must be preached. Philip was invited to take a seat in the chariot, and he went up and began directly to teach the scriptures that this man was reading, and he preached from them that Jesus was the Christ; and though it does not say here that Philip preached to that man repentance and baptism for the remission of sins, yet the statements made by this man warrant us in the belief that he taught him fully the gospel of Jesus Christ. And as they journeyed along this man said, "See, here is water, what doth hinder me to be baptized?" Do you think Philip had not said anything to him about baptism? He understood it just as our brother told us here last night in the answer given by Paul and Silas at Philippi—he understood it clearly, that if belief was not followed with works it was vain. Then he instructed this man in the thought that man shall give his body a living sacrifice to God, which is his reasonable service; and not only that, but he must serve him with all his might, mind and strength, he was to love him with all his heart, all his might, all his mind, and with all his strength. Then he commanded the chariot to stand still, and both went down into the water, and he baptized him, and they both came up out of the water straightway.

Let me call your attention again in regard to Paul. I now refer to the claim that there is a difference between the promise made by Paul and that made by Peter. Let us see. "Then he (that is, the jailor), called for a light, and sprang in, and came trembling and fell down before Paul and Silas," "and brought them out, and said, Sirs, what must I do to be saved. And they said, Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved, and thy house." Is this all Paul said to this man? We find here that Paul, like Peter and the other servants of God, stated clearly to this man what he should do. We further read: "And they spake unto him the word of the Lord, and to all that were in his house." When Paul spake unto them the word of the Lord, he spoke to him just what Peter did on the day of Pentecost, because Peter spoke the word of the Lord there certainly. Then they took the man and those that were in his house, and they were baptized. When he spoke to all that were in the house the word of the Lord, he spoke to them that could understand the word; they knew what he was talking about. I will guarantee he preached life in Christ; that he preached the risen Lord, preached faith in that Lord, repentance and baptism for the remission of sins, and the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost, because they come in the commission, in the teaching to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you." Belief is not enough; is not sufficient. Paul had been converted in a marvelous manner when he was on his way to Damascus. We are told that a great light came, and Paul was stricken down, and he heard a voice saying, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? And when he heard the voice, he said, Who art thou Lord? He was going down to persecute the followers of Jesus Christ, and he heard a voice, and that voice said, Saul, why persecutest thou me? Who art thou Lord? What was the answer? I am Jesus of Nazareth whom thou persecutest. Here we find Saul talking directly to the Lord Jesus Christ. Jesus said to him, I am Jesus of Nazareth whom thou persecutest. Paul, trembling before Jesus said, Lord, what wilt thou have me to do? Did Saul believe in Jesus Christ? What is your idea in regard to that belief? He certainly believed now that Jesus was the Christ, and he admitted that Jesus was the Lord, Jesus told him to go into a street called Straight, and there it shall be told thee what thou must do. I have not time to notice this, but I just call your attention to the fact that Jesus spoke to his servant Ananias and told him about Saul. Jesus explained the matter to him, told him that he knew Saul, had had a little talk with him on the way, but you go down there and tell him what he must do for my name's sake, what he shall have to suffer for my name's sake. Paul tells this himself, when he stands before the great ones of earth. No wonder Paul could say, "I know the gospel is the power of God unto salvation." No wonder he did not tell the people that simply to believe in the Lord Jesus Christ was enough. For when the servant of God came to him he came according to the instructions of Jesus Christ, and said, "Brother Saul, the Lord, even Jesus, who appeared to thee by the way, hath sent me that thou mightest receive thy sight and be filled with the Holy Ghost." Then he laid his hands upon him and he received his sight in the same hour. Saul was tarrying a little yet before being baptized. Ananias had evidently explained the matter to him. Then he said, Why tarriest thou? you do not only believe in Jesus Christ, but you know that Jesus Christ is the Lord; you admitted that as you came here, "Why tarriest thou, arise and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord." That was the way they preached the gospel in those days. That is the way the gospel has been given to us in our time. When we take up the testimony of the three records, we find them agreeing. When you place these records together, we find the gospel preached away back yonder by the power of God to those that should be saved; and they entered into the church by the straight gate, which was baptism by water, and the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost. That is the way that Jesus Christ ministered to the people on this continent, as we find in the Book of Mormon. And when we come to the gospel as restored in the latter times, we find the revelations made to the church have opened up the grandest door, have thrown in a flood of light upon the word of life away back yonder, have brought out directly the fact that God has commissioned men and sent them to preach the gospel and tell men and women they should be baptized.

Let me call your attention in conclusion to baptism. Nicodemus came to the Savior by night, and the very first admission is, "I know that thou art a teacher sent from God." He wants to know something about the gospel of the kingdom of God. "I know that thou art a teacher sent from God; for no man can do the miracles which thou doest, except God be with him." We have but very little in the history here recorded of what they said; but this we do find, "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, except a man is born of the Spirit"—how is that? "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, except a man be born again, he can not see the kingdom of God." A man can not be born again when he is old. I see old men and old women before me, and it is more than probable that this thought has been presented to them some years ago, and they had an opportunity to marvel at the statement just the same as Nicodemus did.

How can it be? How can a man be born again when he is old? "Jesus answered and said unto him, except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he can not enter into the kingdom of God." Now then it is true that no man could be saved outside of the kingdom of God. Man was to be saved in the Kingdom of God; and he could not be saved without being born again. I take the ground that Jesus Christ laid down an eternal principle there; he wanted to impress that thought upon the mind of this ruler, and the fact as I understand it was, that the gospel was to be preached to every nation, to all the kindreds of the earth. Well now, the statement is made in the Scripture that they were all outside; they were strangers and aliens from the commonwealth of Israel and from the promises of God, without God in the world, and with no hope; that covenant promise was the gospel of life, and they were outside of that; hence the fact that they must be born again. The Savior told them that they must become as little children, and if they did not they could not enter into the kingdom of God. How can a man be born again? That is the question. The Lord and Savior said, except he be born of water and of the Spirit he can not enter into the Kingdom of God. In baptism the old man dies, and then he is "born again." Paul teaches in his letter to the Romans, that as many as had been baptized into Christ had put on Christ, and he says that they were buried and raised in the likeness of his death and resurrection. Jesus Christ died, was laid in the grave, and after he had lain there the time appointed he was raised to glory and power. Then he was alive; that body was glorified, it was redeemed from the power of the grave, and Jesus entered into a new life. When a man or woman believed that Jesus was the Christ, he was to die to sin in baptism. When the man or woman is buried in the liquid grave they die, and when they come out of that they rise to "newness of life" and pledge themselves to serve God, to live in the light of truth and try to become like Jesus, to be good; to be pure; to be righteous, that they may walk in the ways of everlasting truth. The Savior has it right; it was a birth. They were born again. A man or woman that has been baptized by water according to the commandment of God, has been born into the kingdom of God; they become as little children. Paul in fifth of Ephesians makes a comparison—an illustration rather. Christ is the bridegroom, and the church the bride, the Lamb's wife. He shows the relation that exists there, an eternal principle. It is one of the simple, plain things, easily understood. The fruit of that union is begotten of God, bone of their bone, and flesh of their flesh. That was the thought in the language, "we are his bones, and we are his flesh"—of his bones and of his body. Says Paul, "This is a great mystery. I speak concerning Christ and the church." He wanted to impress this thought upon men and women, that having been buried in the water, they had been born into the gospel covenant; they had been born into Jesus Christ. Then they had a right to partake of that divine nature; then they had all the rights and privileges to become the children of God. And until they entered in by the straight gate, they did not have that right. But when they had entered in, mind you, they were then become the children of God; they were then to be made partakers of the divine nature, just as a child partakes of the nature of its father and mother. Just as a child is nourished and strengthened by its father and mother, so the child of God. Though a man had grown old, and his hair gray; though he was tottering upon the verge of the grave, he "must be born again." And when born again, he was a little child in the kingdom of God, and should have that nourishment, should receive that life, should look directly then to God for light, and trust in the power of his grace and in his Holy Spirit.

May God bless and keep us, brothers and sisters, that we may have claim upon God and Christ; and that we may feel as one of old when he said, "The Spirit says come, and the bride says come." This, brethren, is the church of the living God. Our feet are upon the rock—the rock Christ Jesus—we stand upon his word; and out of the mouth of two or three witnesses every word shall be established. May peace and love abide forever more. Amen.

THE WOMAN AND HER CHILD.

"A WOMAN clothed with the sun and the moon under her feet, and upon her head a crown of twelve stars. * * * And she brought forth a man-child who was to rule all nations with a rod of iron: and her child was caught up unto God, and to his throne."—Rev. 12: 1, 5.

This woman is the true church of Christ. The clothing is the priesthood of the Son of God, which is the Melchisedec priesthood. Paul says that he and all they that were in Christ's Church—meaning the officers—were of the same profession. This priesthood is the priesthood of the Son of Righteousness, of which Jesus is the chief corner-stone, as the priesthood of Christ's Church must be "clothed with robes of righteousness."—Isaiah 61: 10; Psalms 132: 9. This "robe of righteousness" is the sun. "So let all thine enemies perish, O Lord: but let them that love him (the Lord) be as the sun when he goeth forth in his might."—Judges 5: 31. "Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father."—Matt. 13: 43. "Ye are the light of the world." "Ye shine as lights in the world."—Matt. 5: 14; Phil. 2: 15. They are called stars in Daniel 12: 3. And not only the officers but all the members of the church must be righteous. Isaiah 60: 21.

I think that I have proofs sufficient to show that the woman's dress, in Revelations 12th chapter, is the priesthood of the Son of God, and nothing more; while the moon under her feet is the Aaronic priesthood. As the moon, with the stars borrow their light from the sun, and as we are in need of moonlight and the stars in the night time, so the church is in need of the Aaronic priesthood.

"The head (Melchisedec priesthood) can not say to the feet (Aaronic priesthood) I have no need of you."—1 Cor. 12. Doc. and Cov. 104: 2, "There are two divisions, or grand heads—one is the Melchisedec priesthood, and the other is the Aaronic, or Levitical priesthood." The officers in the Melchisedec priesthood are as follows: (1) Prophets, or the Presidents which is the head. (2) Apostles—seeing. (3) Seventy—hearing. (4) High Priests—smelling. (5) Bishopric—test. (6) Elders—speech. The Aaronical (Levitical) are as follows: (1) Priests—knees. (2) Teachers—legs. (3) Deacons—feet. Hence there are nine quorums in the Church of Jesus Christ. The other parts of the body are the members of the body of Christ. The first, or Melchisedec priesthood is represented by the sun-light. The second by the moonlight, and the stars in the crown are the apostles. Their duty is to go forth into all the world to preach the gospel to every creature; and when they convert them they must be received into the church by baptism and confirming them members of the church. Then, if need be, organize branches and ordain officers to look after them, to take care of them. Elders and others, all such as love righteousness—that they may become one body and shine forth as the sun.

"But," says one, "is not that clothing on her the light of revelation?" Not exactly. For there were revelations in the Mosaic church, and before it. Some one will again say: "Is not the man-child the priesthood?" I answer once more, No; for he is the Christ; our Lord Jesus; the Son of God; as he is the one who is to rule all nations with the iron rod (word of God). He is the same as in chapter 19, sitting on a white horse, coming to rule all nations with his iron rod, only the difference that in chapter 12 he is a child, while in the 19th chapter he comes to rule and conquer. In 12th chapter he is "caught up to God's throne." In 19th chapter "he comes with the heavenly armies from that throne to make war with righteousness," to sit upon his own throne. "His name is the faithful and true. His name is also king of kings, lord of lords." Hence he can not be the priesthood. The priests are the servants and not the rulers, and the servant is not above his master."

But, as Christ organized his church after he came into the world, and as this woman is the church, and the church brought him (this child) forth, how could the church bring him, before she had her existence? or before she was in the world herself first? Before I answer that question, I will first bring a parallel question found in Matt. 22: 42-46. "What think ye of Christ? Whose son is he? They said, The son of David. He saith unto them, How then did David in spirit call him Lord? saying, The Lord said unto my Lord, sit thou on my right hand, till I make thine enemies thy footstool? If David then call him Lord, how is he his son? And no man was able to answer him a word."

I will make no comment on the above as all think they know it, but will now answer, how the church could bring this man-child, or Christ. In Revelation 19: 10, we are told that "the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy." Well, did not the prophets of the old testament have this testimony when they foretold his coming? See Isaiah 7: 14; Micah 5: 2. "Behold, a virgin shall conceive, and bear a son." "But thou, Bethlehem * * * out of thee shall he come forth unto me that is to be ruler in Israel; whose goings forth have been from of old, from everlasting." Were not these men members of Christ's church? or did not they have the testimony of Christ Jesus? which is the spirit of prophecy. And not these two only, but Moses, Jacob, Joseph in Egypt, Abraham, yes, Adam, the first man, had this testimony and were therefore members of Christ's church, as the word church means people. Hence, the church demanded his coming, and he (the man child, or Christ) therefore came to fill their demand. Hence the woman, or church brought him forth. Before I dismiss this subject, I will give a few more evidences to show that the glorious clothing of this woman is also the law, as well as the priesthood (for no priesthood can exist without a law) see Matt. 22: 36-40. Christ did not come to abolish the law but to fulfil. Matt. 5: 17. We are commanded to keep the law. Matt. 19: 17; Luke 10: 27. The law is a spiritual law. Rom. 7: 14. Now as we are commanded to keep this law, if we do, every member, officers and all; then we will make the church to shine forth as the sun in her might, and the dark world round us will glory God through us, when they see our righteousness. By permit, I subscribe myself your humble brother in this most glorious gospel.

THE FULLNESS OF TIMES.

THE fullness of the times has surely come for the last great crusade against the powers of darkness. Everything is providentially ripe and ready. Nearly fourscore missionary societies enclose the globe in their golden network. The walls of nations lie flat, and challenge us to move from every quarter, and move together and at once, and take the very capitals and centres of Satan's dominion. The Word of God may be had in every leading tongue, and the miracle of Babel is reversed, and the miracle of Pentecost crystalized into permanence! The coffers of disciples contain wealth so vast that a tithe of it would furnish all the funds for a world's evangelization, and the numbers of disciples are so vast that a tithe of them would give one missionary to every one hundred of the population of the globe. Time and space are practically annihilated, and all nations are neighbors. And in addition to all, from out the shining pillar of a luminous and leading Providence rings out the trumpet voice of God, bidding us "go forward!" What opportunity and what inspiration. We need only organization and consecration to carry dismay and defeat to the allied powers of hell. William Carey's grand motto of 1792 should be emblazoned on the banners of a church that gathers all her hosts for one final, resolute, and overwhelming charge: "Expect great things from God. Attempt great things for God." All around the signs are appearing which indicate to him who watches that a more momentous era is at hand than historic pen ever chronicled or artistic pencil ever illustrated.—Sel.

The branch president should see to it that they have their reports sent in time. Send all communications to J. B. Gouldsmith, Wilber, Saline County, Nebraska, care Robert White.
J. B. GOULDSMITH, Dist. Sec'y.

We hereby give notice to the Saints of the Wyoming district, also all others who may have a desire to attend conference, that the conference has been removed from Naticoke to the Hyde Park branch. It will convene November 26th, 1886. We trust all will consider this due notice, and we request a report of the officers in the district either in person or by letter. Hope attendance will be large. ### BORN.

FREMMING.—At Nebraska City, June 12th, 1886, to Bro. H. C., and Sr. Anna K. Fremming, a daughter, named Arena. Blessed August 1st, 1886, by Elders J. Armstrong and R. C. Elvin.

JENSON.—At Nebraska City, June 13th, 1886, to Mr. Andrew and Sr. Anna Jenson, a son, named Marion. Blessed August 8th, 1886, by Elders J. Armstrong and J. W. Waldsmith.

OAKS.—At Silver Lake, Minnesota, August 12th, 1886, to brother Wm., and sister Emma Oaks, a daughter.

DIED.

STUART.—At Alliston, Ont., July 27th, 1886, Edward E., only child of brother and sister Thomas and Louisa Stuart. Edwin was born on the 4th of March, 1874 at Good Intent, Kansas. Was baptized on the 8th of July, 1883 at Alliston, Ontario, by Elder J. A. McIntosh. Funeral sermon was preached by Elder J. A. McIntosh on the 5th of September, 1886, from Rom. 14: 7, 8, and Acts 16: 30. Previous to his departure to the land of spirits, Edwin manifested great faith, and engaged in earnest prayer. A physician had been summonsed as no Elder was near, but little Eddie refused finally to take the doctors medicine and cried for an Elder. Finally Elder McIntosh was telegraphed for and came immediately, and administered, with immediate relief to the sufferer, and left again, but a relapse took the sufferer home in full faith, being 12 years, four months and 23 days of age; and three years and nine days from his baptism. Dear parents your loss is his gain. He fell asleep in Jesus.

COOKSON.—Sister Rebecca A. Cookson died September 2d, 1886, strong in the faith at the age of 66 years. She was baptized August 30th, 1876 by W. H. Kelley. Funeral services by Bro. J. C. Foss.

KNIPSCHILD.—At, or near Norborne, Carroll county, Missouri, September 10th, 1886, Emma Melosina, daughter of Bro. Jacob and Sr. Mary Knipschild. She was born at the above place August 18th, 1870. A telegram to Independence brought Elder Joseph Luff, who preached the funeral discourse to a large audience in the German Methodist Church. He was assisted by a minister of the neighborhood, formerly a Baptist, but now a member of the Holiness society. Emma was not a member of the church, but we learn she was becoming favorably impressed with the doctrine, and would probably have obeyed had she remained. Bro. and Sr. Knipschild have the deep sympathy of all the community.

CHURCH RECORDER'S NOTICE

It is essential in the recording of the scattering members of the Church that Branch and District officials should give me their aid, namely by preparing lists of those in their regions who are members of the Church but not members of their branches, and also lists of those members who have been dropped from the records of branches because of their absence from the branch, or because their residences are unknown. In cases where branches have been reorganized and names left off the new record please send all such names to me; also where branches have, during the past twenty-five or more years, been disorganized altogether, will those who have knowledge of it, or who have such old records, please send me the names of such persons as have not joined other branches and thus become enrolled again, so that they may now be enrolled. Where it is known that such members have died, or otherwise been lost, it should be stated that it may be put upon record. Any members who see this who do not know that they are on record, or are reported by some one else to me, please send name and items of birth and baptism. Where persons have died please give dates as near as may be. Presidents and Clerks of Branches and Districts are also hereby reminded that if they have any branch reports, or information about records, that I would like such reports or information to be forwarded to me as early as may be. Do not keep them because of the little postage required to send them, but let me know. The Government now sends one ounce of such matter for two cents where formerly only a half ounce was carried for three cents, hence the cost is little, and the reports are essential in order to keep the law of God in this matter.

JOSEPH SMITH - - - - - EDITOR.
W. W. BLAIR - - - - - ASSOCIATE EDITOR.

Lamoni, Iowa, October 2, 1886.

THE Business Manager, Bro. David Dancer, wishes us to say that the progress the affairs of the Herald Office has been making the past few months warrants him in assuring the patrons of the HERALD that a few more months of equal prosperity will go far toward redeeming the office from the loss and consequent debt incurred by reason of Mr. Conover's defalcation. Bro. Dancer takes pleasure in stating that the constant renewal of subscriptions and the payment of arrears of long standing by those to whom the HERALD has been continued, as well as the fair increase in new subscriptions, give unmistakable evidence that the HERALD is appreciated, and its work understood to better degree than ever.

He feels confident that, though the policy of the Board respecting the tone and character of contributions to the columns of the HERALD has been sharply criticized, the good sense of the readers recognizes the stability of the work, in the interest of which the HERALD is published; and is willing that some strictures shall be suffered for the good of the body, as a whole. Bro. Dancer is of the opinion, which he feels pleased to express to the HERALD readers that at the present rate of increase and prosperity it will not now be long until a further reduction in the subscription price of the HERALD may safely be made. There are also some other matters of great worth to the church that are being considered and will be taken up and consummated as soon as conditions will warrant. "The Voice of Warning" (excellent preacher) is now being sold for ten cents, and it is hoped to put an edition on sale at five cents per copy—it ought to be done. Tracts ought to fall like forest leaves before autumnal frosts, harbingers of the good time coming. All that is needed to make these and some other desired things accomplished facts is patient, persistent "hang on" and work.

Bro. Dancer wishes that all those who are behind hand in the payment of their subscriptions for HERALD would pay as soon as possible; and those who may not be in a condition to pay, would notify the office whether, or not they wish the HERALD continued to them; as without such notice the names are liable to be taken from the list at any time under the impression that it is not desired that the HERALD should be continued.

PERSECUTION AND ITS CAUSES.

IN June, 1832, after his return from Missouri, Joseph the Seer wrote as follows:

As soon as I could arrange my affairs I recommenced the translation of the scriptures, and thus I spent most of the summer. In July we received the first number of the Evening and Morning Star, which was a joyous treat to the Saints. Delightful, indeed, was it to contemplate that the little band of brethren had become so large and grown so strong in so short a space as to be able to issue a paper of their own, which contained not only some of the revelations, but other information also, which would gratify and enlighten the humble enquirer after truth. So embittered was the public mind against the truth that the press universally had been arrayed against us; and although many newspapers published the prospectus of our newspaper, yet it appeared to have been done more to calumniate the editor than to give publicity to the sheet. Editors thought to do us harm, while the Saints rejoiced that they could do nothing against the truth, but for it.—Times and Seasons vol. 5, p. 626.

It is well in this connection to present the reader with two leading editorials in the first number of the Evening and Morning Star, the first paper published by the Church, that they may see the objects and purposes had in view by the Church and taught by it in those times; for this will better enable us to judge as to the real causes which led to the persecutions of the Saints, and why it was that religious bigots and political demagogues joined in raising the hue and cry against them.

INDEPENDENCE, Mo., June, 1832.

TO MAN.—With the help of God, the first number of the Evening and Morning Star comes to the world for the objects specified in its prospectus, which was published last winter. That we should now recapitulate some of its leading objects and briefly add a few remarks will naturally be expected and we cheerfully do so that this generation may know that the Star comes in these last days as the friend of man, to persuade him to turn to God and live before the great and terrible day of the Lord sweeps the earth of its wickedness; that it comes not only as the messenger of truth to bring the revelations and commandments of God which have been, but to publish those that God gives now, as in days of old; for he is the same God yesterday, to-day and forever; and if, after he was taken up as mentioned in the first chapter of Acts, he through the Holy Ghost had given commandments unto the apostles whom he had chosen, what possible reason is there to suppose that he would neglect to do likewise now—before he comes in his glory; before he gathers his elect, (the house of Israel; see Isaiah 45: 4); and even before John the revelator must prophesy again before many peoples, and nations, and tongues, and kings, (see Rev. 10), we know of no reason in the Bible. That it comes as the harbinger of peace and good will to them that serve the Lord with a determination to have a part in the first resurrection and finally become kings and priests to God, the Father, in the celestial kingdom, where God and Christ are, and where they will be for eternity; and where will be also the general assembly of the First Born, the church of Enoch, who walked with God and built up Zion in the first days, which Zion and Enoch the Lord translated to paradise before the flood. But Isaiah says: "Thy watchmen shall lift up the voice; with the voice together shall they sing: for they shall see eye to eye, when the Lord shall bring again Zion." That it comes according to the will of God, from those who are not ashamed to take upon them the name of Christ, and walk lowly in the valley of humiliation and let the solemnities of eternity rest upon them, knowing that the great day of the Lord will soon usher in the Sabbath of creation for the rest of the Saints, that the Savior may reign his thousand years of peace upon the earth, while Satan is bound. That it comes in meekness and mercy to all mankind that they may do works meet for repentance and be saved in the first resurrection, and afterwards dwell with the spirits of just men made perfect in the celestial kingdom, which transcends the glory of the terrestrial as much as the terrestrial transcends the telestial, or the telestial transcends the prison of the imperfect. That it comes to bring good tidings of great joy to all people, but more especially the house of Israel scattered abroad, that the day of their redemption is near, for the Lord hath "set his hand again the second time" to restore them to the land of their inheritance ready to receive the Savior in the clouds of heaven. That it comes to show that the "ensign" is now set up, unto which all nations shall come and worship the Lord, the God of Jacob, acceptably. That it comes when war, and the plague or pestilence, as it is called, are sweeping their thousands and tens of thousands, to show that the days of tribulation spoken of by our Savior are nigh at hand, even at the doors. That it comes to repeat the great caution of Paul: "Beware lest any spoil you, (the disciples of Christ), through philosophy and vain deceit, after the traditions of men and the rudiments of the world. That it comes to prepare the way of the Lord, that when he comes he may have a holy people ready to receive him. That it comes to show that no man can be too good to be saved, but that many may be too bad. That it comes to declare that goodness consists in doing good, not merely in preaching it. That it comes to show that all men's religion is vain without charity. That it comes to open the way for Zion to arise and put on her beautiful garments and become the glory of the earth, that her land may be joined, or married, (according to the known translation of Isaiah), to Jerusalem again, and they be one as they were in the days of Peleg. Thus it comes.

Man, being created but little below the angels, only wants to know for himself, and not by another, that, by obeying the commands of his Creator he can rise again after death in the flesh and reign with Christ a thousand years on the earth without sin; be changed in the twinkling of an eye, and become a king and a priest to God in eternity—to forsake his sins, and say: Lord I am thine!

The first words of which we have account that Jesus Christ spake concerning the things of eternal life, were: "Suffer it to be so now: For thus it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness." Then he was baptized. And truly, if it became the Savior of the world, holy as he was, to be baptized in the meridian of time, to fulfill all righteousness, how much more necessary is it for man to be baptized, upon the very eve of the Sabbath of creation, to be saved? Let the heart answer the head, that the body may save the soul. As this paper is devoted to the great concerns of eternal things and the gathering of the Saints, it will leave politics, the gainsaying of the world, and many other matters, for their proper channels, endeavoring by all means to set an example before the world, which, when followed, will lead our fellow men to the gates of glory, where the wicked cease from troubling and where the weary will find rest. There may be errors both in us and in the paper, we readily admit, and we mean to grow better, till, from little children, we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ, which we pray may be the happy lot of thousands, before he comes with the hundred forty and four thousand that are without guile.

TO THE CHURCH OF CHRIST ABROAD IN THE EARTH.

It is the duty of the Church of Christ, in Zion, to stand as an ensign to all nations that the Lord hath set his hand the second time to restore the house of Israel to the lands of their inheritances &c., and it behoves the members of this church to manifest before the world by a godly walk, by a noble example, as well as by sterling precept; by prudence in living, by plainness in dress, by industry, by economy, by faith and works, and above all by solemnity, humility and patience, that this is a day of warning and not a day of many words.

This being the order in Zion, how much more necessary is it that the churches of Christ which have not yet come up to this land, should show the world, by well ordered conduct in all things, that they are the children of the living God? It is all-important and the salvation of many souls depends upon their faultless example. They will therefore, knowing that the Lord will suddenly come to his temple, do their part in preparing the way by observing the Sabbath day, and keep it holy; by teaching their children the gospel and learning them to pray; by avoiding extremes in all matters; by shunning every appearance of evil; by studying to be approved, and doing unto others as they would have others do unto them; by bearing trouble and persecution patiently, without a murmur, knowing that Michael, the archangel, when contending with the devil, he disputed about the body of Moses, durst not bring against him a railing accusation, but said, The Lord rebuke thee. They will not only set an example worthy of imitation, but they will let their light so shine as that others, seeing, may go and do likewise. Example is the great thing that defies the world with its vain glory by letting their moderation be known unto all men, both in dress and in living; in words, and in deeds; in watching and in praying; in love and in labor, and in works as well as in faith, they preach the world a lecture, they set the enquirer a sample, and teach all Christendom a lesson that studied preaching and pulpit eloquence have failed to accomplish.

BRO. M. T. SHORT closes a column and a half presentation of the gospel in the Record, Aledo, Mercer county, Illinois, in the following glowing summary of belief:

"In conclusion let me say we hold to a divine call, and a lawful ordination to the ministry; loyalty to the powers that be; monogamy in wedlock; fidelity to the shrine of virtue; judgment in just ratio; new or continued revelation; a literal resurrection; the second appearing; the millenium reign; the overthrow of the adversary; the subjugation of death; the restitution of all things; a baptized, resurrected, celestial, glorified, redeemed earth, with the Lord Jesus Christ as the sole monarch. Now the saints are wanderers and pilgrims, but then each will love his neighbor aright, and dwell under his own vine and fig-tree. We will then not only greet our relatives, and know our friends, but the pure and good of all time, the bright angels, the great moderator, and the Supreme Judge of the universe. May God speed the plow and save the people, I pray. Read carefully and think kindly of the Latter Day Saint missionary.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

By card from Bro. T. E. Lloyd, of Independence, Mo., we learn that that aged veteran, brother in arms, Hiram Falk, formerly of California, latterly of Ashtabula, Ohio, and more lately of Independence, passed from that place over to the great majority, through death, on the afternoon of the 17th of September.

Bro. W. M. Rumel wrote from Omaha, Nebraska, September 20th, that the branch there had their new meeting house nearly completed, and that there seemed to be a much better spirit prevailing in the branch than formerly; that there seemed to be a better interest manifest both with the Saints and their friends than has been for a very long time. God grant that this condition of things may continue. The Omaha Branch has been tried almost as by fire.

Bro. T. M. Parr of Minneapolis, Minn., says he lately received ten copies of the 'Voice of Warning' from Bro. J. H., Peters, and that within twenty days he had them all in the hands of persons reading them.

"Chronic Sore Throat, and Hygiene of the Voice" is the title of a small work laid on our table by W. A. Chatterton, No. 9, South Canal Street, Chicago, Ill. Price, bound in cloth, 60 cents, postpaid to any address. The information contained in this little work is of high importance, and its value to public speakers and singers is next to invaluable. The book is written in a clear comprehensive style, and the author, E. B. Shulldham, M. D., has made his work very pleasant reading as well as profitable.

Sr. Marberry Copeland of Burneyville, California, sends us a poem by "Vida." Bro. I. M. Lane also sends a poem; but we do not think either suitable for HERALD. The Hope we do not control.

Bro. Richard Coburn, of Blenheim, Ontario, thinks that the Elders should preach the temporal as well as the spiritual law. He says: "It would be foolish to tell the people that this gospel is to be preached in all the world as a witness; and at the same time that we did not need means to carry it there."

Bro. George Masters writes from Dell Roy, Ohio, September 12th, expressing excellent confidence in the work. He thinks it wrong for members who fall into comparative distress to at once apply for help to the church. He relates his own struggles in Nebraska, when losing much by fire and the grasshoppers, and believes that energy and determination will help many times when sitting idly down in grief and despair would further impoverish.

By letter from Bro. W. W. Hodge, of Beaver Falls, Pa., dated September 8th, he expresses the ardent desire that some Elders may soon reach there to labor, for he thinks prospects for their success are excellent now. He thinks a fine public grove might now be obtained for meetings, free.

Bro. John Eames of Cheyenne, Wyoming, writes us September 19th that the city was still alive, but that only a few wanted the gospel in its fulness. He had preached three times of late on the streets. One man asked him who made God, and he advised him to go at once to his closet and ask the Lord for that information, and assured him that the Lord's answer would be correct. Sick persons, not of the church, had asked for his prayers and been blessed with healing. When coming to Omaha, Neb., of late, he talked with seven Utah Mormon Elders, and thinks he did them some good. He preached on the same train by permission, and had the attention of many. Bro. Eames paid Lamoni a visit the 12th and 13th of September. May his ample shadow continue as long as he desires.

The Interstate Publishing Company, Chicago and Boston, have kindly laid upon our table three educational works, which we have examined and find excellent of their kind. The "Making of Pictures," by Mrs. Sarah W. Whitman, price 60 cents, is a series of short talks upon art intended for young people. To the young reader with a taste for art it will be valuable. The other two are "Entertainments in Chemistry," and "Through a Microscope." The first is an apparently successful effort to tell the young student what chemistry is from familiar objects and the detail of simple processes, without elaborate instruments and at little cost. Price 60 cents. The second is a treatise in Language easily understood, upon the Microscope and how to use it, is entertaining and instructive. Price 60 cents. For either or all of these works address The Interstate Publishing Company, Chicago, or Boston.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

BRO. J. CAFFALL writes us from Waterloo, Nebraska, September 19th, that he is striving to get subscribers for church publications, and says:

"I believe the Herald is giving pretty good satisfaction; and some are striving to help bring out the Hope in its contemplated enlargement, while others fold their arms, quite willing that others shall bear the burden. * * * The press is indeed a power. I candidly think the Herald at least ought to have a thousand new subscribers; and if the needed interest was felt, it might be reached."

Precisely. If the ministry and membership would make the effort that increase could easily be reached. Let all try it, and begin now.

Bro. Joseph Dewsnup, Jun., wrote from 42 York St., Cheetham, Manchester, England, September 8th, 1886:

It is my desire to go on in this work and do my best to help build up the Church of Christ, so that I might gain for my reward a goodly portion of his holy Spirit, to enable me some day to preach with approbation this glorious and truthful gospel that has been revealed in these latter days. We had the pleasure of hearing Bro. J. Halstead (Priest), from Fall River, Mass., U. S. A., preach a sermon in our meeting room, on August 1st, which I believe did good to the Saints in this part of the vineyard. I pray that the seed sown will not return void, but spring up into everlasting life. (Dear Bro. Halstead, we have had good news from Rawtenstall). Bro. Conner of Independence, Missouri, also called here, on August 23d, whilst on a visit to his friends in Bedfordshire, bringing with him that spirit of the gospel, which we like to see in Saints. May the Master bless him and keep him faithful. Dear Herald, kindly ask the Saints to pray for me, that I may act an honest, faithful, and humble part as a minister of the gospel of Christ.

THE clipping and "dodger" referred to by Bro. John Smith, in his letter from New Bedford, we give below:

"Elder John Smith, of the Reconstructed Church of the Latter Day Saints, came here from New Bedford, and preached last Sunday, in Forrester's Hall, afternoon and evening. There was a good audience, who listened to an able, though somewhat lengthy discourse, with much interest. These meetings, it is understood, will be continued every Sunday evening, under the management of Mr. Charles Soule. A baptism of one candidate took place at Fort Greene, last Sunday evening, under the light of the stars. It was in connection with Elder Charles Soule's Mission in Forrester's Hall."

"HEAR BOTH SIDES!—Elder Thomas Whiting will review the lecture of Rev. M. T. Lamb, on the so-called 'Mormons and their Bible,' in Hall No. 9 Waite's Building, William St., next Sunday, August 22d, 1886, at 3 and 7:30 p. m. Come and hear for yourself."

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Ques.—Is it right and lawful for a member of the church, when removing from an organized and working branch to another branch to not bring a letter of removal, but ask the branch to take him in by vote? Or, in other words, has a branch a right to take in a member by vote who came from an organized branch, without a letter?

Ans.—The Doctrine and Covenants states that a "member removing to a branch where he is not known, may take a letter" signed by some officer of the branch from which he removes. The church has stated by resolution of conferences that members removing from one branch to another should take a letter; and all members are requested to unite with the branch nearest to the place where they reside, or the one in which it is most convenient for them to meet with the church. It is our opinion that members removing from one branch to another should take letters of commendation and membership, and present them at as early a time as practicable to the nearest branch and be received into membership thereof. Branches may receive persons known to them to be members of the church without letters from their former branches, if they choose so to do. Should branches so receive members, they must be concluded by their own act and accept such members as they may be proved to be should question as to their standing arise. When branches so receive members, the clerk of the branch into which they are so received should at once notify the president or clerk of the branch whence they came, that the names may be properly marked on the branch record as "removed." This is a matter of fellowship, and no hardship is forced upon church members by complying with the rule. Confusion is sure to occur to branch records if the rules are neglected. No person ought to feel aggrieved when asked to comply with the rules of good fellowship in the church.

No. 9 Hazel Street,
PITTSBURGH, Sept. 13th.

Editors of Herald; Dear Brethren:—In questions and answers of the last issue I read an answer relating to a question concerning blessing of children, which to me conveys so different conclusions to those I had always understood as being taught by the church that I desire further information. The part of the answer I allude to is: "Should children who have thus been blessed die before being baptized, the atonement has made them of the kingdom, and it is evident that such will rise with the just in the resurrection, heirs of the kingdom of eternal life, because made wards of the Spirit." I would like to ask:

1. Do not these conditions without the ordinance of blessing, belong to little children who die before being personally accountable.

2d. Does not another view seem to place little ones at the mercy of the accidents of birth or the belief or unbelief of their parents.

3d. Does not the view implied in the answer assume a similar position to that claimed for infant baptism, which same positions have always been urged by our ministry with great force as being wrong.

4th. Is the view that the blessing of children is intended as a blessing for this life and not as an ordinance essential to salvation, entirely erroneous.

Yours respectfully,

GEO. H. HULMES.

If brethren will read the question and answer respecting the blessing of children as a whole, and not in isolated parts, it will help them to comprehend the answer more fully. We at present leave these added questions for the consideration of the readers of HERALD; and in connection therewith the following: How is a man's membership in the Church of Christ affected by partaking of the sacrament? Or what relation does the ordinance bear to his membership?

Our brethren of the south-east Ohio and West Virginia district are busy, as the following extract from the McArthur, Vinton county, West Virginia, Democrat and Reporter, sent us by brother A. B. Kirkendall, of Creola, Ohio, will show:

"The Latter Day Saints' Church at Vale's Mills was formally dedicated on last Sunday. Although the inclement weather withheld a great many from attending, the church was crowded to its utmost capacity, while many could not gain admittance. As some of the readers do not understand the term Saint, as they apply it, it might be well to give a few words of explanation. The headquarters of this Church of Latter Day Saints, and residence of the Seer, young Joseph Smith, son of the Mormon Joseph Smith, is at Lamoni, Decatur county, Iowa. They differ with the Mormons not only on polygamy, but on several other points. There are twelve Apostles, besides Priests and Elders. The church at Vale's Mills belongs to the S. E. Ohio and W. Virginia District, one of the many into which the territory is divided. Now the dedication. Conference lasted Friday and Saturday; preaching by the elders in the evenings. Apostle W. H. Kelley, one of the Twelve, preached in the forenoon on Sunday. Early in the afternoon the church was again filled with anxious listeners. In the beginning of the afternoon exercises, the young infant of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Hunter was handed to the Apostle, who performed the "laying on of hands," praying God to bless and protect it, and that it might grow up in the faith. At 2:30, Apostle Kelley delivered the dedicatory address, after which three persons expressed a desire to become Saints and were baptized. The officials present were: Apostle, W. H. Kelley, Kirland, Lake Co., Ohio. Priest, H. E. Moler, Limerick, Ohio. Elders L. R. Devore, T. J. Beatty, and James Moler, Limerick; Jacob Double, Elm Grove; A. B. Ervin, Jackson; L. W. Torrence, Beaver; David Thomas, Minersville; David Hopkins and Thomas Mathews, Syracuse. The church just completed is a very nice one and is nearly paid for. It is free for all other denominations when not in use by the Mormons. Mr.

Theodore Cluff, of Sinking Spring, Highland Co., being expelled from another church on account of his belief, walked to Vale's Mills, a distance of eighty-five miles, to join the Saints. Three hundred and sixty members belong in this District, of whom sixty-two are members of the church just dedicated. Thanks to my friend, Mr. A. B. Kirkendall, of Creola, Secretary of the Conference, for facts in the above.

A MR. S. BUGG, of Deenville, Burnside township, Michigan, writes us Sept. 6th, as follows:

Editor Saints' Herald:—A copy of the Herald has fallen into my hands, for which I am thankful; for I hope it will be the means of enabling me to get a better knowledge of the people known as Latter Day Saints. If your paper is open to questions I would ask the following:

1. Does God give his Spirit to wicked and impenitent persons to make them repent and believe, or for any other purpose?

2. Does God give his Spirit to any but those who love and obey him?

3. Did Joseph Smith, the President of the Reorganized Church, go to Utah and ask Brigham Young to hand over the presidency which he (Brigham Young) unlawfully held, and did Brigham Young acknowledge Joseph Smith to be the proper person to hold that office yet refused to hand it over to him?

I ask this last question because I have thought that the Utah Mormons and the Reorganized body of Latter Day Saints are identical.

In reply to the above we have to say:—

1. God strives with the wicked, at times, by his Spirit,—“My Spirit shall not always strive with man.”—Gen. 6: 3. It reproves and convicts the sinner—“And when he is come, he will reprove the world of sin, and of righteousness, and of judgment; of sin, because they believe not on me; of righteousness, because I go to my Father, and ye see me no more; of judgment, because the prince of this world is judged.”—John 16: 8-11.

“Ye stiffnecked and uncircumcised in heart and ears, ye do always resist the Holy Ghost; as your Fathers did, so do ye.”—Acts 7: 51.

It reveals the secret things of God to the wicked, at times; to Abimelech; (Gen. 20: 3); to Pharaoh; (Gen. 41: 1-25); to Balaam; (Num. 22: 20-22, 31, with Ch. 23: 16, 26); to the Midianite soldier; (Judges 7: 13-15); to Nebuchadnezzar; (Dan. 2: 27-30); to Pilate's wife; (Matt. 27: 19); and to Caiaphas, a wicked High-Priest; (John 11: 49-52).

It invites to Salvation,—“The Spirit and the bride [Church.—Ed.] say, Come. And let him that heareth say, Come.” (Rev. 22: 17). See also Acts 10: 44-48.

2. God gives his Spirit in the manner and for the purposes mentioned above, but not that it shall “abide” with them “forever,” for “the word” can not receive it as an abiding, indwelling gift, except and until they become the children of God:

“If ye love me, keep my commandments; and I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you for ever; even the Spirit of truth, whom the world can not receive, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him; but ye know him; for he dwelleth with you, and shall be in you.”—John 14: 15-17.

“But ye are not in the flesh, but in the Spirit, if so be that the Spirit of God dwell in you. Now, if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his. And if Christ be in you, the body is dead because of sin; but the Spirit is life because of righteousness. But if the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you. Therefore, brethren, we are debtors not to the flesh, to live after the flesh. For if ye live after the flesh, ye shall die; but if ye through the Spirit do mortify the deeds of the body, ye shall live. For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God. For ye have not received the spirit of bondage again to fear; but ye have received the Spirit of adoption, whereby we cry Abba Father. The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God; and if children, then heirs; heirs of God and joint heirs with Christ; if so be that we suffer with him, that we may be also glorified together.”—Rom. 8: 9-17.

“Let that therefore abide in you, which ye have heard from the beginning. If that which ye have heard from the beginning shall remain in you, ye also shall continue in the Son, and in the Father. And this is the promise that he hath promised us, even eternal life. These things have I written unto you concerning them that seduce you. But the anointing which ye have received of him abideth in you, and ye need not that any man teach you; but as the same anointing teacheth you of all things, and is truth, and is no lie, and even as it hath taught you, ye shall abide in him.”—1 John 2: 24-27.

“And he that keepeth his commandments, dwelleth in him, and he in him. And hereby we know that he abideth in us, by the Spirit which he hath given us.”—1 John 3: 24.

“Hereby know we that we dwell in him, and he in us, because he hath given us of his Spirit.”—1 John 4: 13.

3. Joseph Smith, the President of the Reorganized Church, did claim and does yet claim that God called him by revelation to the presidency of the Church of Christ, and that in accordance with that call he took the presidency of said church April 6th, 1860, at Amboy, Illinois. With the concurrence of the church he sent two missionaries to Utah in 1863, who called personally on Brigham Young at his office in Salt Lake City and did there state the fact of Joseph Smith's call to the Presidency of the Church, and Brigham refused to accept of their testimony and of Joseph Smith's claims. Brigham after that declared that “Little Joseph will never lead the church while grass grows or water runs, but David will.”

Brigham Young had told the people at Nauvoo, Illinois, in 1844 and afterward, also in Utah, that it was “young Joseph's” place to lead the Church of God, and that God would bring him to that office and calling. He also taught them, August 4th, 1844, that the church must not attempt to put a man in that office. He said: “You can not fill the office of a prophet, seer and revelator. God must do this.” * * “I again repeat, no man can stand at our head except God reveals it from the heavens.” See Life of Joseph the Prophet, page 535. But December 5th, 1847, five of their Quorum of Twelve appointed three of their quorum to be the First Presidents of their church, viz, Brigham Young, Heber C. Kimball and Willard Richards. This was accepted by those Mormons living at Winter Quarters, December 27th, 1847,—just three and a half years after the death of Joseph the Seer.

Brigham Young and most of the Utah Mormons reject the claims of President Joseph Smith, while President Smith and the church under his presidency reject the leadership and heretical doctrines of Brigham and his fellows. The two churches are separate, and different from each other in many respects.

“THE JESUITS MUST LEAVE ITALY.”

THE Government, incensed at the action of the Pope in restoring all the former privileges of the Jesuits, has decided to strictly enforce all existing laws. The effect of this will be to expel all Jesuits from Italian territory.”

All those nations in Europe which once rendered homage to the Romish Church, and were her mighty support, are now turned away from her. So also are Peru, Brazil, Mexico, etc., in this western hemisphere. And now Italy, the home and center of Romanism, is “incensed at the action of the Pope in restoring all the former privileges of the Jesuits,” the main stay and chief reliance of that church. Well did John the Revelator foresee these things: “And the ten horns [Kingdoms. Ed.] which thou sawest upon the beast, [Roman empire. Ed.] these shall hate the whore, [Romanism. Ed.] and shall make her desolate and naked, [afflict, ravage, ruin; expose, uncover, make bare. Ed.] and shall eat her flesh, [material wealth and political power. Ed.] and burn her with fire.” [Torment, vex, purge, destroy. Ed.] Rev. 17: 16. All these things have come, and are coming, upon the Roman Catholic Church. These are unmistakable signs of the last days, and proofs of the divinity of the Holy Scriptures.

Mother's Home Column.

EDITED BY SISTER “FRANCES.”

“We need love's tender lessons taught
As only weakness can;
God hath his small interpreters;
The child must teach the man.
We wander wide through evil years,
Our eyes of faith grow dim;
The child is freshest from his hands,
And nearest unto him.”

THE selection found below was sent us by Bro. Stebbins, who says: “There is a touching pathos about some of the writings of Robert J. Burdette, but I know of nothing from his pen that is more tender than the piece I enclose herewith. It might be entitled, ‘A sermon for parents,’ and be acceptable for the Home Column.”

While we thank Bro. Henry for his kindly remembrance, we wish to commend to the mothers a careful reading of this beautiful selection. In our own heart it touches a very tender chord, and whispers of duty undone, and like the writer, we love not the books or the work which come between us and the tender hearts and immortal souls of our little ones. A friend once remonstrating with us said: “Don't try to put a girdle round the earth in twenty-four hours. You work so hard that when your little ones come to you to be petted and caressed, you are so tired that you feel inclined to put them away from you, and thus deprive yourself of one of the sweetest pleasures of life." We felt the truth of this admonition then, but we feel it more keenly to-day, when those who were then but little birdlings, fluttering in the home nest, are now pluming their wings and balancing themselves to try their strength in the battle of life. Ah, how sadly we feel and know they will never be little children again, and so we stretch our empty aching arms towards our grandchildren, and are wiser and tenderer with them than we were with our own. Dear mothers, are any of you now as we were then, cumbered with cares, and striving constantly for the meat which perishes? We can not tell you what portion of your work may be left undone, nor indeed whether any of it may be, but we do beseech you to look upon the faces of the babes you love, the little ones gathered about your knees, and remember that the time and labor given to them is labor for eternity, and shall endure when all things else shall pass away.

A SERMON FOR PARENTS.

"How quiet the house is at midnight. The people who talk and laugh and sing in it every day are asleep, and the people who fell asleep in it long ago come back into it. Every house has these two classes of tenants. Do we love best those with whom we can laugh and talk and sing, or the dear silent ones who come so noiselessly to our side and whisper to us in faint, sweet, far away whispers that have no sound, so that we hear only their very stillness?"

"I am not tired, but my pen is weary. It falls from my fingers and I raise my head. I start to leave the table and my eyes fall upon a little book lying on the floor. It is a little First Reader. He left it there this afternoon. I remember just how I was impatient because he could not read the simple little lesson—such an easy lesson—and I told him it was a waste of my time to teach him, and pushed him away from me. I remember now. I see the flush come into the little tired face, the brave, cheerful look in his eyes—his mother's brave, patient cheeriness, struggling with his disappointment and pain. I see him lie down on the floor, and the little face bend over the troublesome little lesson, such a simple, easy lesson, and baby might read it. Then, after a little struggle alone it has to be given up, and the baffled little soldier, with one more appealing look toward me for re-inforcements, sighs and goes away from the lesson he can not read to the play that comforts him. And there lies the little book just as he left it. Ah, me! I could kneel down and kiss it now as though it were alive and loving.

"Why, what was my time worth to me to-day? What was there in the book I wanted to read one-half so precious to me as one cooing word from the prattling lips that quivered when I turned away? I hate the book I read. I will never look at it again. Were it the last book in the world I think I would burn it. All its gracious words are lies. I say to you, though all men praise the book, and though an hour ago I thought it excellent, I say to you there is poison in its hateful pages. Why, what can I learn from books that baby lips can not teach me? Do you know I want to go to the door of his room and listen; the house is so still; maybe he is not breathing. Why, if between my book and my boy I choose my book, why should not God leave me with my books? My hateful books.

"But I was not harsh. I was only a little impatient. Because, you see his lesson was so easy, so simple. Ah, me, there were two of us trying to read this afternoon. They were two easy, simple lessons. Mine was such a very simple, easy, pleasant, loving one to learn. Just a line, just a little throb of patience, of gentleness, of love that would have made my own heart glow and laugh and sing. The letters were so large and plain, the words so easy, and the sentences so short. And I! Oh, pity me, I missed every word. I did not read one line aright. See, here is my copy now, all blurred and blistered with tears and heart-ache, all marred and misspelled and blotted. I am ashamed to show it to the Master. And yet I know He will be patient with me; I know how loving and gentle He will be. Why, how patiently and lovingly all these years He has been teaching me this simple lesson I failed upon to-day. But when my little pupil stumbled on a single word—is my time, then, so much more precious than the Master's, that I can not teach the little lesson more than once?"

"Ah, friend, we do waste time when we plait scourges for ourselves. These hurrying days, these busy, anxious, shrewd, ambitious times of ours are wasted when they take our hearts away from patient gentleness, and give us fame and love and gold for kisses. Some day, then, when our hungry souls will seek for bread, our selfish god will give us a stone. Life is not a deep, profound, perplexing problem. It is a simple, easy, lesson, such as any child may read. You can not find its solution in the ponderous tomes of the old fathers, the philosophers, the investigators, the theorists. It is not on your bookshelves. But in the warmest corner of the most unlettered heart it glows in letters that the blind may read; a sweet, plain, simple, easy, loving lesson. And when you have learned it, brother of mine, the world will be the better and happier."

JACKSON, W. Va., Aug. 10th.

Dear Sister Frances:—I love to read the letters of cheer and comfort from the sisters. The Herald is a welcome visitor; we could not do without it. This is my forty-fourth birthday. I am the mother of eleven children—nine of whom are living, one married, the balance are with me; and I do feel that I have received instruction through your column, in trying to set a godly example before my children; and only regret that I did not receive this great work sooner, that I might have been more competent of instructing my little ones. I have belonged to the church over five years. I am yet weak, but still hope that I will become strong in the cause of Christ. Ever praying for the cause of the Redeemer, and the upbuilding of Zion, I remain your sister in the one faith, LOUESA F. WILLIAMS.

SHENANDOAH, Iowa, Aug. 16th.

Dear Sister Frances:—I feel impressed by the Spirit to try and write a letter for the "Mothers' Home Column," as I have never seen anything from any of the sisters in this part of the Lord's vineyard, and realizing we can all help in this great work, I wish to make the effort. I for one have been greatly benefitted by the light it has imparted to me. I have been the mother of five children, but God in his mercy has seen fit to call them all home but one—a son nineteen years of age. I desire to so live as to set an example before him that will be worthy of imitation, that he may become a bright and shining light in the Church of Christ. I desire to do all I can to aid the great work of these last days; but I feel my weakness, and without the Spirit of God we can do nothing. Then dear sisters, let us all be valiant in the testimony of Christ, praying that the Spirit of the Master may be with all who love this work, I remain your sister in the gospel of Christ,

MRS. ETTIE RAY.

I HAVE often thought I would like to say a few words to parents, of what I conceive to be a neglected duty of many of them, towards their children. This has relation to the Sabbath School, and as you, Sr. Frances, are a strong advocate of Sabbath Schools, will you please insert this in the "Home Column?"

We are admonished to bring up our children in the way they should go—we, and not some one else. Now this I have observed all my life, though it should not be with Saints, that they are willing their children should go to Sabbath School and there be under the charge of some one else while they remain at home to rest and have a good time, or perhaps they do not even make an effort to get them ready to attend regularly, and often by being late, disturb the entire school by coming in at the wrong time. Now these persons would think it awful if we had no Sunday School where there is a band of Saints. Well now who does it devolve upon to run successfully a school? Surely not upon one individual or two, or even a half dozen. Why then not look the thing squarely in the face? Do you want your children raised without the influence of church or Sabbath School; running about the streets or through the country on the Lord's Day; desecrating the day he has said should be kept holy? No; you Saints don't want this; but you allow it to be done for the lack of a little energy on your part, and many times unthoughtedly. How many a mother would be glad if her boy would be more religious who perhaps would now be walking in wisdom's way if that mother had never neglected her duty. Can any such father or mother recall the time when "A little more slumber, a little more sleep, a little more folding of the hands" caused them to be too late for Sunday School, but gave them abundant energy to go visiting; thus violating the law of God and teaching their children to do the same. Why did not those parents get ready and say, "Now come children, let us go to Sabbath School to-day."

To run successfully a Sabbath School, every one who can must assist, and consider that all have something to do. Get up as early, or a little earlier, on Sunday morning as any other day, and get all ready, and then say, "Come now, children, we are off to Sunday School." Don't leave your children to wander here and there, and lay upon your God-fearing neighbor the burden or labor of love God has assigned to you; they are your children; you and not he are responsible for their being in this world, and you can not realize this fact too fully nor too soon. Go and assist to bring up your children in the spirit of our Master. Teach them to read and investigate the Scriptures. Think over the matter; assist them as you would in doing a piece of work of any other kind. This is work for eternity and will assist in time also. Is not this one of the means of bringing them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord? to whom the promise is, "When they are old they will never depart from it." I like to see parents go ahead of their children in things of this kind, and not expect some one else to go ahead for them, or the child to go ahead for the parents. "Study to show thyself a workman" approved by our Father in heaven, who is pleased when we try to elevate the cause of christianity.

ONE WHO LOVES THE CAUSE OF CHRIST.

COOK'S POINT, Tex., Aug. 14th.

Dear Sisters in Christ: When I read the letters in the Herald it does me so much good to know that I have an interest in this great and glorious work. I shall never forget the last conference that was at Lamoni, it being a sorrowful time to me in having to give up my darling baby. The thoughts arise in my mind, What are we here for? Then I say, For the good we may do others; but not our will, but the Lord's will be done. This is hard for us to say, when the Lord demands of us a treasure that we love and cherish above all others. While I have many things to be thankful for, this is one thing, The Lord is merciful; he knows what is best, and right. I can say I do feel grateful to the Saints and Elders for their kindness, and more especially Bro. and Sr. Cochran, who were so kind to us in our affliction, that I can never forget them. When we arrived at home in Stewartsville, the Saints there had made ready, and were so kind to us in helping us to lay away our darling. It was with a sad heart that I left all the Saints in Missouri, not knowing any one here; but my heart was made to rejoice; when we got off the train at Bryan, Texas, we were greeted by Bro. Sherrill, accompanied by my son. We remained at Bro. Sherrill's until we could build us a house, in which labor they assisted us. I am as ever your sister in the one faith.

LUVENIA ROBERTS.

McPAUL, Iowa, August 14th.

Dear Sr. Frances: I can not give any advice as a mother, for I am not a mother, but the same responsibilities are resting on me as on a mother. We have a little boy with us who is an orphan, and we expect to try to raise him and teach him as near right as we know how. He needs the same attention and care that one's own children need. I often think how much must be the cares of a mother to raise a family of several children, —to know how to instruct them rightly. I pray that all fathers and mothers may have wisdom to instruct their children in their duties, so they may be better prepared than the present generation is to do the work our heavenly Father has for them to do. For this end we should labor to bring about a better understanding of what is every one's duty. I am very much inclined to think it makes a material difference in the character of the child, what kind of an example is set before it, and the way it is instructed.

Dear sisters and mothers, let us not neglect one thing, and that is, to try if possible to keep the young and rising generation from the use of tobacco. It is an expensive, useless and filthy habit. I have often studied and wondered if I could do any good by writing and talking to stop this improper use of tobacco. Just think how much could be paid in to the Bishop's hands to help the church if all the money that is spent for tobacco was used for the cause of Christ and the promulgation of the gospel; and the givers would receive a blessing instead of a curse. I hope we all may see eye to eye in spiritual things, if not in temporal things. I suspect I am different in many respects from many of my sisters. We live on a farm, and I suppose I have about the same cares as other farmers' wives have.

How I like to read the letters from the old mothers and old-time Saints. It strengthens my faith to read how strong was their faith through all their trials and persecutions. How thankful we ought to be that we have such good and peaceful times, I pray that God will bless you in your labor of love, and all engaged in this good and glorious cause.

Your sister in the one faith,
MRS. MARY E. BENEDICT.

Pres. Joseph Smith:—I have just received a newspaper from my uncle in England, and the enclosed I have cut out and sent you, that you might see what it cost to run a false religion; while the true religion of Jesus Christ, built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, receives but little attention even among those whom God has given a knowledge of its divinity. Could the sum it costs to run the Church of England one year be for one time placed in the Bishop's hands, how long would it be before the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ would reach the ends of the earth? Not long.

£11,000,000 is what it cost to run the Church of England annually. It does seem that every false religion is making greater headway; especially in a financial point of view, than the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ. Then if the people generally are willing to make great sacrifices to uphold a false religion, what ought we to do who have the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ, which we know is the power of God unto salvation today, as much so as it was when our Lord was preaching it upon earth himself. These are questions which every Latter Day Saint should ask himself. Do I belong to the Church of Christ? If so am I willing to look on and see the people of the world make greater sacrifices to sustain false religions than I am willing to make to sustain the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Dear Welcome Herald:—Feeling inclined to write a few lines from this part of God's vineyard I will first tell you of a short debate. The Saints all seem more encouraged since the late debate between a Mr. Sewell of the Christian Church, and Bro. J. A. Currie, jun. Bro. John was so young some feared he could not successfully meet Mr. Sewell; but when the Spirit of Christ is with his servants they can meet any error. People here think it very strange that a young man of his age could put down such a strong defender of the Campbellite faith. I rejoice in the restoration of the gospel, and I would be the most miserable creature if I did not know that I belonged to the true Church of Christ.

The more I hear other denominations, the firmer I grow in the latter day work. Brother Hyde visited our branch twice. We are well pleased with him. Bro. Roberts and family have been visiting the branch. We think much of Bro. Roberts and family. All miss Bro. Heman, and hope he will some day return here.

Yours,
FLORENCE JENKINS.

Bro. Joseph Smith:—For about a year I have been watching for a favorable opportunity to visit Newport, Rhode Island, which I did Sunday, September 5th, arrangements having been previously made by Bro. Soule, who resides there, for public meetings. I enclose a printed slip from one of the local papers there, which shows that by the blessing of God I had a good reception. At this place brethren Scott, Bond, and Whiting have labored to good effect.

About sixteen years ago, brother Soule heard the gospel preached, and was away from its influence for fifteen years, and united himself with another religious body but was not content; and after all these long years he heard again the "testimony of Jesus," and it made "his dry bones quake," and he hastened to obey the truth, and is now trying to show his fellow man the way to the kingdom. At the close of our preaching services, several persons came to me and said that if I would send preachers they would help to pay the expense of the hall. One believed the gospel, and like the jailor, was baptized the same hour of the night, and "went on his way rejoicing." This is the first person baptized in Newport into this church; others must follow, will follow, "for they have not all bowed the knee to the image of Baal." Sunday, September 12th, found me at Plainville, the home and field of labor of the good Elder C. A. Coombs; at which time he led three into the waters of baptism, the result of his untiring efforts in holding meetings at East Attleboro. The writer spoke at the former place in the afternoon and at the latter place in the evening. The Lord blessed the word to the comfort of those who heard; and the indications are that soon others in that locality will "trouble the waters."

I listened to some good faithful testimonies from those who had tasted the "joys of the world to come;" and wherever I have been to labor the brethren and sisters have kindly received me and ministered to my wants as best they could; and we have parted with heart expressed words, "Do come again."

Calls are numerous and on the increase on every hand, and I am unable to supply the wants of those who are "perishing for the bread of life" in our own district. After twenty years experience in the gospel, and on examination of everything that has been said and written against this work, that has come within my reach, I find that it stands the test of men and things, and so must say, that it is true and will remain true. And as Paul said to Timothy, if I "give heed to the doctrine it will save both me and them that obey it."

I desire to call the attention of the travelling ministry to a person calling himself Reverend M. T. Lamb, who claims to hail from Salt Lake, who is going about the country and lecturing upon "Mormons and their Bible." He has been to New Bedford; to him the book is a "mess of nonsense." One Sunday evening our meeting was closed so all the Saints could go and hear their faith abused, and it did them good, for they pitied the man for his ignorance. Brother Whiting was present and challenged him to a public discussion of the merits of the book; but he declined and left town. He has written a work against the Book of Mormon and is trying to sell them at his lecture; brethren look out for him, but do not be afraid, though he is not so much of a Lamb as his name would imply. I enclose a dodger which was circulated, asking the people to "hear both sides," and I am informed by those who heard Bro. Whiting's reply, that he did well. I was laboring elsewhere and so could not be present.

I have no evil report to write; have no time to listen to them, so much work needs to be done, as the "signs of the times," which are gathering around us indicate that the Lord is near. Who amongst us will be ready to meet him? "The wise men of the west have not reached the east" yet; when are they coming?

Yours in the faith,
JOHN SMITH.

WEST FORK, Ind. Sept. 15th.

Bro. Blair:—The Heralds of Aug. 28th, and Sept. 4th are before me and read. I think it is grand,—to say that it is good, and very good, is not exaggeration—improving all the time. Will Sr. Frances receive my thanks for words of comfort and cheer received through the Mothers' Column. I bid her "God speed." May we all improve and grow in grace with God, and receive of his Spirit, so we may do the work assigned us in this last dispensation, so that we may have the right to enter into the rest that remains for the people of God. Although we meet with trials, with temptations and sometimes almost despair; but when we do his will we receive strength of him to abide; knowing that these things worketh patience, and patience worketh hope; yes, blessed hope, anchor to the soul that enters within the veil, that buoys us up to stand firm in this present ungodly world.

The resurrection is true; all will be brought from the enemy; death does not end all; we will live through ceaseless ages, and his faithful ones in peaceful glory with diadems of beauty; a crown of everlasting immortality on the brow. O, how beautiful this was presented to the writer in a dream when tired and weary, discouraged with the cares of life, and the disappointments that beset us on every hand, when those that we have leaned on for help, for instruction in the work, which seemed to be pillars, when it seemed all was gone. But the great I Am has, always true to his word, vindicated his truth. "You shall know." "Peace to your troubled soul." "I still am the same, yesterdav, to-day and forever more. My grace is sufficient for you. I fail not, though through the deep waters I cause you to go."

If Joseph Smith was weak, and the revelations through him are not according to our own understanding of the wisdom of this world, does not the revelation given in Christ's day, say that the world by its wisdom could not find out God. And if we see or seem to see some things in the present revelations that we do not understand, does it not argue that he chose the weak to do his work, and is it not in perfect keeping with his acts in all past ages. It seems to me in perfect harmony with himself; so, onward, brothers and sisters, be not weary nor discouraged, for we shall reap, if we faint not. May God bless his people and work is my prayer.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Sept. 4th.

Three hundred and one Mormons passed through this city to-day en route for Utah and Idaho. They were converted to the Mormon faith under the teachings of Elders sent out from Utah two years ago, who were with them, and were acting as emigrant agents. They were mostly families, from the lower and upper walks of life and came from England, Scotland, Denmark and Sweden. They changed cars here, which detained them a few hours, and gave opportunity for conversation with them. In conversing with some of them I learned they were well posted on the polygamy question, and also of the fact of what our government is doing to suppress it.

I stated that our government was not passing laws to break up the Mormon Church, but to suppress one very offensive feature of their practice which was not of the original faith, and stated that our government would protect the Mormons of Utah, (even if it took arms), in the worship of God according to the doctrine of the church as it was at first, but as for polygamy, the government says it shall not exist, and I was fully persuaded that it must go to the wall. The reply to this was, "When polygamy is broken up, then the whole church will of necessity go also, for they are inseparably connected; the church is built upon this doctrine as much as any other."

I learned that their general impression was that the government is having but very little success in suppressing polygamy, and that they are taught this is persecution. Thus we learn these missionaries go to foreign countries and there teach polygamy and disloyalty to the government of the United States. Truly the spirit to deceive if possible the very elect has gone forth, and some are being deceived; but the word is, "those that are deceived shall be reclaimed, but the deceivers shall be cut down either in life or in death," and I pray that it may come speedily.

MARCUS SHAW.

HORNINGS MILLS, Ont., Sept. 14th.

Bro. D. Dancer:—Since my letter in Herald for September 4th, dated August 16th, I have been kept very busy in my calling. I have baptized fourteen more since August 16th, and from June till that date eleven, making twenty-five since June, with good prospects for several more, some of whom are promised. I was called home to administer to the son of brother and sister Stuart, July 26th. Since then, I have been called away from my field again to preach the funeral sermon of the lad, and am now again back in my field for the third time. Calls to come here and there are more numerous than I can attend to. I made an opening in Shelburne, a rail-road village on C. P. R. in Dufferin County, at two p. m., Sunday, 12th September. Had a large attendance, spoke for two hours and twenty minutes, and could hardly find a stopping place. After the assembly was dismissed some of the leading gentlemen in town took me to task, prominent among them one lawyer, one insurance agent, one grist miller, one merchant and others, I had to stand a perfect storm of all kinds of questions, and after spending two hours I concluded they wanted to teach me instead of being taught. They drew up a written statement wishing me to affirm it, about as follows:—"Mr. McIntosh will prove from the Bible (King James) that Christ did appear in person on the continent now called America, and established his Church. Book of Mormon not to be allowed in evidence, for which we promise to pay for use of town Hall if proved. If not, Mr. McIntosh pays for the Hall. This is not a very hard case to prove, and if they do not get Book of Mormon and Joseph Smith defended it will be because the Spirit of the Good Lord will not be with me, but I have had all the liberty necessary heretofore, and expect more than will please them this time, as there is not a subject in connection with the Zion's cause that I feel better at home on or enjoy more liberty. Immediately following this I propose opening with a few subjects of my own propounding, as the apostasy of the primitive church; divine authority; how, and in whom vested the restitution and restoration of the gospel; the Latter day apostasy, (Brighamite); church organization, and other points.

Your brother in gospel bonds,
J. A. McINTOSH.

LONG BRANCH, Mo., Sept. 16th.

Dear Herald:—With joy I read your columns, and rejoice to hear of the prosperity of the latter day work which has caused the wise of the world to wonder, and has made the simple wise. In company with Bro. J. W. Gillen I visited eastern Iowa and western Illinois, which I have hitherto longed to see, for there were once the homes of our fathers, and the place where God's prophet sealed his testimony with his blood, and where his body now sleeps in the silent tomb, awaiting the day when "Christ shall descend from heaven with a shout, and with the voice of the arch angel, and with the trump of God." I can not express my thoughts as I viewed the supposed place where the martyrs lay. The temple is not; I saw one building which was erected out of stone once in the temple.

While viewing these matters and the condition of the people who once inhabited this city, I fervently desired God to have mercy upon them and return them back to the old paths to follow the revelations given to the church through the "choice seer." After spending some time in that district assisting Bro. Gillen, we returned home to Lamoni, and on the 5th of August I started alone for Nodaway district, called at Allendale, found the little band living in hopes of building a house of worship. Some were scattering tracts through the country. A few days later I arrived at Sweet Home; found that Brn. James Thomas, and William Powell had been preaching the word, and anxiously looking for my return. We had large attendance at our conference; some were baptized, and many say we have the truth if the Bible is true. Bro. Ole Madison has charge of Long Branch. He is favorably known far and near. During the trials which this district has passed through, some have done well. May the Lord "reward them according to their works." Since district conference Bro. James Thomas accompanied me, holding meetings in different places. We visited the little branch at Eureka, ten miles from St. Joseph, and left them rejoicing in the gospel. Bro. Arthur Halley watches over the little flock there. We then went to Savannah, the county seat of Andrew county, and the Christian Church was opened for us. We had a large attendance of those believing in the Bible, and some that disbelieved. At first we were viewed with curiosity; but when we presented to them the doctrine of Christ, and told them what we believed, they seemed ready to accept the truth. We had pressing invitations to continue, but our pockets were empty and hotel bills high.

We were told that the Methodist Church was almost broken up, and that their members had turned to infidelity. This was told us by a Methodist minister. And the Christian minister said he had a congregation of sisters; but that the brethren had turned aside, or did not attend meetings. Some bid us God speed, and some grasped our hand as though the spirit of love filled their hearts; we expect to return there if the way opens. We do not find many places like this, but we can see the fulfillment of God's word, "You shall find favor in the eyes of the people." We expect to hold meetings in Barnard, Long Branch, Alanthus, Ross Grove, Forest City, and other places. We are now among the Saints, doing what we can to encourage and assist in bringing about brotherly love. May the Lord bless us all to do our part in this work. The people of the world are turning to infidelity; and what will the end be?

HEARNE, Texas, Sept. 13th.

Saints Herald:—It may be well to note the general features of the work in Texas. Our conference convened here on Saturday and proved to be one of the best ever held in the district. "Give us room that we may dwell" seemed to resolve itself into a moral necessity. Zion's children are increasing. Measures were set on foot for the purchase of a gospel tent for the mission, and fifty-seven dollars subscribed. The object of this is to reach prominent points of interest where the use of churches is denied us, also to be used in times of gathering for conference, etc. The practicability of the movement remains to be proved, but the brethren are hopeful of its success. There was no dissenting voice at the time of its adoption. The work is widening and new fields are opening for the sowing and harvest. Brother J. A. Robinson was in attendance and left the impress of his genius and gospel experience upon the minds of all. We regret that his departure is so near at hand.

I went to Thornton, Limestone county, on the 4th inst., appointment having been made by brethren Stone and Sherrill for me to preach in the Union Church on Sunday at eleven o'clock. A full house greeted me, and I felt the power of God in testimony of his work, as I broke the bread of life. The people came out also at three p. m., and at night to hear the word. On Monday the Christian minister was sent for to defend the flock. He came and listened Monday and Tuesday nights. He told me that he intended to oppose the objectionable points of our doctrine; but would seek to take no advantage of me—in fact he proved himself to be a gentleman. Arrangements were made accordingly to gather on Wednesday at two o'clock, he to reply to my former efforts, and I to review him if so desired.

Dinner was brought on the ground, and Methodist, Campbellite and Latter Day Saint mingled peacefully during the day, and all seemed to enjoy the occasion. At the close of his second speech the minister, Mr. Carley, gave me credit for being as gentlemanly as any opponent it had been his fortune to meet. The prominent features of difference between us were closely canvassed, all with good feeling and due respect.

I am well satisfied with the results. The field is still open for the contest, which will come, and the issue must be met. Mr. Carley is a man of extended experience, high mental culture, and a prominent minister of his profession. Himself and the people of the community are worthy of profound respect for the courtesy shown to us as a people. I pray that God will bless them with the light of his Spirit to comprehend the truth. I hope the little band of Saints there will be encouraged, and those of the priesthood continue to magnify this sacred calling.

Bro. Roberts will go south soon to encourage the work there. I go to Dallas county, to follow the labors of Bro. Robinson there. We are sad to learn that Bro. Cato and family have been suffering from affliction. I must not omit to say that Bro. Roberts baptized ten in Burnett county, all married women I believe he said; also that at Pendleton, eight miles from Temple, full houses attended the efforts made by brethren Currie, Roberts and myself. So you see the work, though not done, is onward. Bro. Robinson will be at Albany on the 17th and 18th, to present the faith where no preaching has been done; also, will meet me at Collinsville on the Sunday following, where a good opening was made by him some time ago among entire strangers to the cause. He is a genial, warm-hearted companion, and an earnest, devoted worker for the cause.

MONDAMIN, Iowa, Sept. 8th.

Dear Herald:—I wish to say I heartily endorse the article on "Pride" in your late issue. I have long since thought that there ought to be more said in the Herald about pride and from the pulpit than there is. Being an evil, it ought to be fought the same as any other evil. It is evident from the Book of Mormon that the people in those times suffered many afflictions because of pride; and if pride was the cause of afflictions then, may it not be the case now. Profane history makes this statement in regard to primitive christianity,—"that as outward adornment of the church increased, inward purity decreased. But says one, "I have not got any pride, if I do follow the fashions." True, you may not get above others in your estimation, but what is it that prompts one to follow the fashions of the world? Is it not worldly pride? Another thing; we should set examples for others to follow instead of following the example of others, especially those of the world.

Parents who have children growing up, by their example instil principles into their minds which will remain for life. Then how careful we ought to be that those principles are right ones. Children are great imitators. They think what papa or mamma does is right and will want to do the same. I wonder what the Savior would say should he enter a congregation of Saints, and they all attired in the latest styles, when he has said, "Let all thy garments be plain." And I wonder how the Saints would feel in his presence with their artificial deformities, and ridiculous fashions? For my part, I do not wish, or intend to adorn this body with anything that I would be ashamed to appear in before the pleasing bar of God. I dare say that all who wear artificial deformities would, if they had a natural one, travel to the ends of the earth, and spend a fortune, if there was any chance to get it removed. In conclusion let me say, let us not spend so much time adorning these bodies, but adorn the mind. We will not make any too much improvement if we should spend all of our time in that way.

Yours for truth,
J. L. GUNSOLLY.

NEW PHILADELPHIA, Ohio.

Dear Herald:—I was baptized on the 8th of May. I have been united with the work only for a short time, but it has been sweet to my soul. Many testimonies have I received of its truthfulness. Bro. Griffiths came to this place in April, 1885, and preached the true doctrine of Jesus Christ in its fullness. God blessed the day when he came. He is a faithful worker. Our branch contains fifteen in number. We are doing the best we can under the circumstances. We have been persecuted for righteousness sake and had all manner of evil spoken against us. This is a proof that ours is the kingdom of heaven. I shall never regret the step I took, for I have felt ever since to walk in newness of life, having been born, first of water, secondly of the Spirit, and now I can say that I am a child of God and an heir to the promise of eternal life if I continue faithful to the end. My desire is to hold fast, God helping me. I can bear testimony to the work of Joseph the seer. It is a glorious work to me, because it is the power of God unto salvation. I feel there is a work for me to do, and I must do it, and I mean to be a true follower of the Lamb. May the Lord bless every effort for the advancement of this cause, is the prayer of your brother in Christ,

C. E. WARNER.

LINESVILLE, Pa., Sept. 12th.

Dear Herald:—I don't know how I could get along without reading your pages, for they cheer, comfort and strengthen me. I wish the pure in heart everywhere could be permitted to hear the gospel preached. I have not been in the church very long—not a year until the 25th of next May—so you see I have just come into the work, yet how I love it. I desire that I may get great strength from on high to do a work for the Master that he will approve. There is a little band of Saints here, (eight in all I think), very weak, but all very earnest in this Latter Day work. Pray for us. Bro. E. L. Kelley was with us over last Sabbath and preached two excellent sermons. We are expecting him back again some time in October to stay with us a while. Your sister in the one faith,
ELLA. L. HOLMAN.

SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

In your issue for September 18th we noticed an article upon the subject of Sunday Schools, from the pen of Bro. A. Haws, which we are fearful will not be fully understood, and as a consequence will be taken advantage of by our buisy adversary, the devil, to work against our schools, and furnish an excuse for the indifferent to be still more indifferent and the lukewarm to grow still colder.

While we fear, we know that our brother had no such thought in his heart when he wrote, and we believe God will bring good to the cause from what he has said. Of one thing we feel sure, if the fathers and mothers are led to inquire of themselves, whether they are doing their duty to their children or whether they are entirely neglecting their duty—hiding behind one flimsy excuse after another and deceiving themselves, but not deceiving God in the matter, then will more good than we can estimate be done to the cause by what Bro. Haws has written. Brethren and sisters in Zion, the standard of vital piety must be elevated in our midst. It is time that we ceased to boast of being Abraham's children, and bring forth the fruits of righteousness. The children of the gospel covenant while contending for the faith once delivered to the Saints—the gifts and blessings of the gospel of the Son of God, ought to be the last ones to manifest barren lives and indifferent hearts. If the home life, the home training, is not right, how can we expect any other training to fully overcome this? The Sunday School was never intended to supplant the home school, any more than the assembling together of the Saints for public worship was intended to supplant the family altar or the prayer in secret. All these means of grace should work in harmony, and they will do so, if we as Saints of God live in harmony with the precepts of the divine Teacher. Just here we desire to throw out one thought for any who may wish to strip religion of everything which should render it pleasing and attractive to the young. God never placed within the soul of man a desire, or capacity for enjoying any thing that he did not create in the world outside of man the objects for, and the means of, gratifying that desire. These means used as God intended they should be used, are innocent and pure. Corrupted, as the best gifts of God may be and constantly are corrupted, they are sinful and injurious. Clothe truth in her most attractive garments, and when in these she has won her way to the heart, is her nature changed? Is she less truth because clothed in raiment suited to her charms? Beautiful and truthful lessons of wisdom may be uttered by lips never having had an existence save in the imaginations of some pure minded one of earth, and if in this way the heart may be won and chained, why not as well as if from lips of clay. Trashy reading and trashy talk abound in the world and in the church. From these I would that every Saint of God could guard their children; but if the book which makes them better is the word of God taught direct from the sacred page, or the same teaching illustrated and made plainer and more attractive to their young minds by being woven into a narrative which is not beyond the bounds of possible occurrence, why may they not read it, and from the reading learn to love the principles of virtue, truth and holiness? The religion of Christ is a religion of the heart. The family relation is a sacred one; and when the father and mother have indeed consecrated their all to God, and seek to him for the wisdom which they need, are not they the heaven appointed guardians of the immortal spirits entrusted to their care; and can any one assume this responsibility for them.

We repeat again that vital piety, entire consecration to God and his cause, is what we need as a people. No one has any right to undertake to teach the young who does not feel the solemnity of what they are doing, and who does not strive to fit themselves for the duty by seeking help from God in earnest and oft repeated prayer that He will enlighten their minds, be to them a teacher, even as they desire to teach the little ones. Next to the office of a minister in sacredness, we hold, is the office of a teacher—especially of a Sunday School teacher. We can not, if we would, disconnect the home from the Sunday School, any more than we can disconnect the home from the church, or our life, the life we lead daily, from the religion we profess. If the heart is right before God, the actions will be right, and if we err in judgment God will forgive; but if the heart is not right, we think God will be very slow to forgive the hypocritical actions of those who profess him in words, but deny him in works. Children are not easily deceived. They watch our actions and take account even of our looks. Let them see Christ in us the hope of glory, and they will listen to our teaching; but they soon detect the true from the false, and have no respect for those who do not strive to walk according to their own teachings. We speak as a Sunday School worker, and we say to each faithful worker in the schools, "Be not discouraged, but of good cheer. Seek to conform your daily lives to the gospel of Christ. Pray to God for wisdom and the guidance of his Holy Spirit from day to day. Visit at their homes each member of your class, and talk with them freely in regard to the warfare they with you have entered upon. Be neither afraid nor ashamed to speak of God's goodness and his love, neither to confess your love for him; but beloved Saints, let us strive to profess him in works as well as words; for the deep feeling of the heart of the writer to-night, is that if our Sunday Schools are a farce, then is our home life a farce; and if this be the case, we can only expect it to end in tragedy. "Many will say unto me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name? and in thy name have cast out devils, and in thy name done many wonderful works. And then will I profess unto them, Ye never knew me; depart from me ye that work iniquity."

For one we have enlisted in this cause. That this school with which we stand connected is not all we desire it to be, we very freely confess; and no one, we think, feels it more deeply than we do. Shall we therefore disband it, and wait until parents, pastors, Teachers, Priests and Deacons come forward and discharge their duty? Not so; but looking to God for help we will strive more earnestly than ever to discharge ours; for so long as the children will come out upon the Lord's day, so long will we strive to point them to the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world, and show to them the straight and narrow way which leads to Him. It is not ours to enter into the homes of the children. Each father is his own Priest, and each mother a priestess. To the officers of the church God has appointed a duty, and each one will have to render to God his account. If those officers are qualified to become teachers of the young in our Sunday Schools, let them teach; but for one we do not understand this as being a part of their specified duty, but as what they may do, the free will offering after the tithes have been paid. It is the duty of the Sunday School officers to provide the different classes with the very best teachers they can obtain, and the first requisite of a good teacher is "The love of God shed abroad in the heart." Who can direct an immortal soul upon a path which they themselves have never trod? This first and greatest requisite being found, the minor ones are not few. Can they communicate the knowledge they have? Can they make the truth not only plain, but attractive, simplifying it to the capacity of the child? All have not the same gifts nor the same calling, and many a man and woman too, who can talk with those of riper years, and render their meaning not only plain, but instructive, have no faculty of placing themselves on a level with the little ones, whereas some young and blushing daughter of Zion can gain their attention and win their hearts. We hope the article of our brother will arouse the ministry, from the first Elder of the church down to the humblest official therein, to a sense of the duty they owe the young of the flock, and lead each one to enter into the sanctuary of his own soul, and answer before his God as to how he has discharged this duty. Still more, that parents—fathers as well as mothers—may enter into the same investigation in regard to this matter; have they seen to it through the week, that the lessons for the Sabbath day have been studied and prepared? Have they prayed with and for their children, and striven by all means in their power, to work hand in hand with the Sunday School? There will come a time when these questions will be asked, not by a feeble mortal like the writer of this, but by the Judge of the quick and dead. Let the inquiry be made at the right door, and the ax laid at the root of the barren tree. We have in our mind now while we write one Sunday School teacher who gathered her class about her on Saturday, that she might fit them for the duties of the coming Lord's Day. She was not physically a strong woman, and had a family of her own to work for, but such was her zeal in the cause that she was willing to take upon her not only the duty of a teacher, but that of a parent also, and this because she could not bear to have her class come to the school with their lesson unprepared. Was the barrenness in the Sunday School, or the home tree? It is never safe to reason from exceptions; but to our knowledge this is not an exception; but we could point you to very many others equally devoted to the cause, and we have no reason to believe they are not found in every school.

A SUNDAY SCHOOL WORKER.

DIALOGUE BETWEEN DR. TWINE
TEXT AND ELDER D.

BOOK OF MORMON AND AMERICAN ANTIQUITIES.

CONTINUED.

DR. TWINE TEXT.—Friend D., I am glad to see you. It has been a long time since our last interview, and I am anxious to renew our investigations. I believe our last interview closed with the testimony of the three witnesses. Were these all who saw the golden plates?

ELDER D.—No, sir. On the same page containing the remarkable testimony of the three witnesses will be found the additional testimony of eight other witnesses, with their names appended, declaring that they did handle with their hands the said plates, and saw the engravings thereon, but they make no claim to having seen or heard any supernatural manifestation at the time. They simply state that Mr. Smith had shown them the plates on which were the engravings.

DR. T. T.—Might not Mr. Smith have made those plates and engraved them, and thus have palmed them off upon these men for sacred relics. Or, again, might he not have got them made and engraved?

ELDER D.—It is too late in the day, Doctor, to resort to such an argument as that. His bitterest foes have never ventured such a charge in all the fifty-six years that have passed since the publication of the book. It is admitted by his friends, and always loudly declared by his foes, that he was unlearned, plebeian in his manners, and that his stock of knowledge was confined to the common routine of a plebeian life, that he had never had an opportunity, if he had been supposed to possess the ability, to understand any thing of the arts and sciences. He had not even had the opportunity to learn a mere smattering of a trade, hence he could not have manufactured the plates, and much less could he have engraved them; for it would have required great skill to have given them "the appearance of curious and ancient workmanship," as these eight witnesses declare these plates had. And as for the insinuation that "perhaps some mechanic had made them for him" and engraved them, it is hardly likely that such accomplished mechanics or artisans were very plentiful in the backwoods of New York, sixty years ago. And further, if such an one had been found to perform this work, he would have been heard from long ago, for when he came to hear, as all the world has heard, about the Book of Mormon being written on golden plates, and translated and published as a divine record, he would have been apt to tell what he knew about those golden plates, and the question would long ago have been settled and a stop put to the spread of this so-called delusion. Doctor you must see that this argument, if you call it such, is like all the rest you have produced; it is like a broken cistern, it will hold no water. I do not think any thing is gained by speaking lightly of the arguments of my opponents; but it is my duty to be plain and truthful.

T.—I confess that the testimony of these eleven witnesses can not be impeached. But there are other difficulties to be removed before I can accept it as a divine record. If it is what it claims to be, a history of a people who once dwelt and flourished upon this continent, there must be some archeological evidences that will harmonize with its claims. Do you know of any works of antiquity, or any traditions among the aborigines, that seem to substantiate the fact that such a people as it describes once inhabited this land, and that confirm the claim that they once enjoyed a knowledge of the gospel of Christ?

D.—Doctor, you must have read the works of Catherwood and Stephens giving an account of their "Travels in Central America, Chiapas and Yucatan," published in 1841 and 1843; or "American Antiquities," by Josiah Priest, published in 1831; Delafield's "Inquiry into the Origin of the Antiquities of America," published in 1839; "Baldwin's Ancient America," published in 1876; Short's "North Americans of Antiquity," published by Harper Brothers, in 1882? All these and many others prove beyond all doubt, that America has been inhabited by highly civilized peoples many centuries ago. Moreover, without any intention on the part of these authors, they fully sustain the Book of Mormon when it declares that two great peoples have inhabited this continent, and that the latter of these two nations was divided into two great factions, and these again subdivided into smaller factions, or tribes; and that these factions were often arrayed against each other until the more barbarous exterminated the others. For these facts, please read the above named works; and as you read bear in mind that there can be no possible collusion found between these authors and Joseph Smith, for they ridicule the Book of Mormon as a "stupid imposture," and would undoubtedly consider it a disgrace to be thought as even contributing a single line in evidence of its divinity.

T.—Is it not possible that Joseph Smith may have seen some of these works, and from them conceived the idea that brought into existence the golden Bible?

D.—Hardly; from the fact that none of the above named books were written until years after the Book of Mormon was published. It is true that some few travelers had discovered some of these remains and had recorded what they saw; but the jealousy of the Spaniards had suppressed these accounts, or kept them hid from the eyes of the world. Mr. Stephens, on page 296 of his second volume informs us that the first notice of the discovery of these ruins was published in London in 1822; "And instead of electrifying the public mind, either from want of interest in the subject, distrust, or some other cause, so little notice was taken of it, that in 1831 the Literary Gazette, a paper of great circulation in London, announced it as a new discovery made by Galindo, whose unfortunate fate has been before referred to." Then he justly remarks; "If a like discovery had been made in Italy, Greece, Egypt or Asia, within the reach of European travel, it would have created an interest not inferior to the discovery of Herculaneum or Pompeii, or the ruins of Paestum." On page 297 Stephens says, "The work of Dupaix was not published until 1834-5. * * * When it was brought out in Paris, in four volumes folio, at the price of eight hundred francs." He further says,—"Lord Kingsborough's ponderous tomes, so far as regards Palenque, are a mere reprint of Dupaix, and the cost of his work is four hundred dollars per copy." From the above it will be seen that works of this character were not within the reach of a poor illiterate boy like Joseph Smith; hence the impossibility of such antiquarian works being the foundation of the Book of Mormon, or even the cause of such a work.

T.—When did Joseph Smith claim to have received his first vision, or supernatural visitation?

D.—In the year 1820, and his second vision in 1823, at which time he was first made acquainted with the fact of the existence of the Book of Mormon, or the plates upon which its contents were written. In the year 1823 he was permitted to see the plates; also at different times afterward, but he was not given possession of them until September 22d, 1827; and the Book of Mormon was first published in 1830. (See Life of Joseph the Prophet, by Tullidge; also Biographical Sketch of Joseph Smith, the Prophet, by Lucy Smith, all for sale at Herald Office, Lamon, Decatur County, Iowa.)

T.—What was Joseph Smith's age at the time of his first vision?

D.—He was born December 23d, 1805, and consequently was about fifteen years old when he received his first vision, about twenty-two when he obtained possession of the plates, and about twenty-five when the Book of Mormon was first published, in 1830. This boy was born according to the testimony of all, in the humblest walks of life. Circumstances over which neither he, nor his parents had control, prevented him from obtaining even a common education. His acquaintance with the ways of the world, and consequently his experience, were as deficient as his education. Of these facts there is no question. And you know, Doctor, that in those days—eighty and even fifty years ago—even a common education fell to the lot of only the favored few, even in populous cities, to say nothing of the backwoods of America. Hence I repeat, that all his circumstances and surroundings rendered it next to impossible that he should have been made acquainted, in any degree, with the costly tomes that described the various works of antiquity that had been discovered; nor could he have used such information as the foundation of a book, for the want of both skill and means. But the fact of his bringing forth the Book of Mormon, which agrees so perfectly with every discovery that has been made, and the further fact of its perfect agreement with the word of God in the Old and New Testament, amounts to absolute proof that he was instructed of God with respect to the plates, was divinely inspired to translate them, and that the character of the book is divine.

T.—Could you furnish me with evidence of agreement between the works of Archeologists and the Book of Mormon?

D.—It would be better that you should read those works mentioned and compare them with the Book of Mormon; but I will now mention a few of the instances of agreement. First, the Book of Mormon claims to give a history of two civilized races that formerly inhabited this continent. (See B. M., pages 1, 2, 500, 501). Bear in mind that the idea of two civilizations existing at two distinctly different periods, had not entered the mind of even the learned antiquarians of the nineteenth century at the time of the publication of that book; hence the author could not have drawn such an idea from antiquarian sources. Nevertheless, the book tells of two distinct peoples, one coming from the tower of Babel more than two thousand years before Christ; and the other coming from Jerusalem six hundred years before Christ. Short, in "The Americans of Antiquity," page 27, says: "The eras or ages which have been observed to mark the different stages of pre-historic man in Europe (in the manufacture of implements and the construction of places of abode) are apparently reversed in America. The Neolithic and Bronze ages preceded the Paleolithic, at least in the Mississippi Basin—not that the last inhabitants deteriorated and lost the higher arts which are well known to have been cultivated upon the same soil occupied by them, but that they were preceded by a race possessed of no inferior civilization, who were not their ancestors, but a distinct people with a capacity for progress, for the exercise of government, for the erection of magnificent architectural monuments, and possessed of a respectable knowledge of geometrical principles." Baldwin in his, "Ancient America," page 14, says:—"Remains of ancient Civilizations, differing to some extent in degree and character, are found in three great sections of the American Continent." On page 226 he further says:—"It is now agreed that the Peruvian antiquities represent two distinct periods in the ancient history of the country, one being older than the other;" and on page 198 he says: "The Toltecs are said to have come into the country about a thousand years before the Christian era. * * * They were preceded by the Colhuas, by whom this old civilization was originated and developed." Short says:—"In considering the origin of the Nahua nations, especially of the Toltecs and Aztecs, it is common to look upon the former as the first inhabitants of Mexico. Such a conclusion is however erroneous, since the Toltecs were preceded in Central Southern Mexico, and even in Anahuac, both by people of different extractions from themselves, and by scattering tribes of their own linguistic family, the Nahuas."—"North Americans of Antiquity," page 232. The Book of Mormon, commencing at page 500, and continuing to page 533, gives an account of a people who left the Tower of Babel and journeyed by land and sea to this land, being led by the direction of God. They crossed the sea in eight vessels, or barges, and landed on this continent over 2000 years before Christ; "and it came to pass that they began to spread and multiply and to till the earth; and they did wax strong in the land." (B. M., page 511). The Book of Mormon bears record that when they were faithful unto God, the people prospered abundantly, but when they rebelled they were punished with wars and scourgings, until eventually they were destroyed from off the land, about 600 years before Christ.—Mosiah 5: 9; Ether 1: 1; 6: 9.

T.—Does there exist any tradition that appears to confirm this story of the Book of Mormon respecting a people coming here from the Tower of Babel? Mark you, I want no Mormon tradition.

D.—Short, on page 203 of his "Americans of Antiquity," says: "Here in this picturesque valley region in Tabasco and Chiapas we may look for the cradle of American Civilization. Under the shadow of the magnificent and mysterious ruins of Palenque, a people grew to power, who spread into Guatamala and Honduras, northward toward Anahuac and southward into Yucatan, and for a period of probably twenty-five centuries exercised a sway which, at one time, excited the envy and fear of its neighbors. We are fully aware of the uncertainty which attaches itself to tradition in general, and of the caution with which it should be accepted in treating of the foundation of history; but still with reference to the origin and growth of old world nations, nothing better offers itself in many instances than suspicious legends. The histories of the Egyptians, the Trojans, the Greeks, and of even ancient Rome rest on no surer footing. It is certain that while the legendary history of any nation may be confused, exaggerated, and besides full of breaks, still there are some main and fundamental facts out of which it has grown, and this we think is especially true of the new world tradition. Clavigero says: "The Chiapanese have been the first peoplers of the new world, if we give credit to their traditions. They say than Votan, the grand-son of that respectable old man [Noah? Ed.] who built the great ark to save himself and family from the deluge, and one of those who undertook the building of that lofty edifice [Tower of Babel? Ed.] which was to reach up to heaven, went by express command of the Lord to people that land." Short continues: "The tradition of Votan the founder of the Maya culture, though somewhat warped, probably by having passed through priestly hands, is nevertheless one of the most valuable pieces of information which we have concerning the ancient Americans. * * * According to this tradition, Votan came from the east, from Valum Chivim, by the way of Valum Votan, from across the sea by divine command, to apportion the land of the new continent to seven families [see Ether 1: 1, 2. Ed.] which he brought with him." (The italics are mine. Author) Delafield, in his "Inquiry into the Origin of the antiquities of America," presents a chart copied from ancient ruins which represents eight barges crossing the ocean carrying eight families to this continent from the eastern continent. This chart which is copied from the ancient hieroglyphics found on the walls of those vast but ruined temples very nearly agrees with the traditions as given by Clavigero and published by Short as above. I ask you now to compare these traditions with the Book of Ether, found in Book of Mormon, beginning with page 500, and then tell me how an unlettered boy could have been acquainted with these facts sixty-five years ago, when not one in a million among the masses, nor one in ten thousand among the learned knew of the existence of such ruins or such traditions.

T.—I confess it is passing strange. To me it is an unfathomable mystery, except upon the hypothesis which you present, viz, the discovery of ancient records claimed by Joseph Smith. But what about this second colony? What evidence have you that there were two distinct peoples occupying this continent at different periods?

D.—I have already shown that the Book of Mormon gives the history of two different peoples, who inhabited this continent, the first coming from the tower of Babel about two thousand years before Christ, and the second leaving Jerusalem about six hundred years before Christ. The fact of the first colony's migration here, and also their occupation of this continent, is proved by the antiquarian evidences so abundant in Central America, Chiapas and Yucatan, etc., and also by the traditions to which we have just referred as agreeing so closely with the Book of Mormon. I will now present further evidence of the second occupation of this continent by another civilized people; but I will here remark that the antiquities and traditions of these ancient peoples give evidence of divisions and subdivisions, and especially among the later colonists. This also agrees with the Book of Mormon, for on the first, seventeenth and ninety-fifth pages of that book, Lehi is represented as being warned of calamities coming upon Jerusalem, and of being commanded to flee from thence, at the time of Zedekiah's reign over Judah, about six hundred years before Christ. It also represents a division among them, and a separation as occurring about thirty years from the time they left Jerusalem. (See pages 63, 64, 65). Again a division occurs about 400 years B. C., and Mosiah and "as many as would hearken to the voice of the Lord," left the land of Nephi, and went to a land called the land of Zarahemla, and there they discovered another people, or colony, who left Jerusalem about the same time that Lehi did. See page 137. These last people had discovered the ruins and remains of the first colonists who came from the Tower of Babel. Thus the different nations, tribes or people, represented by the antiquities and traditions, and found at the time of the discoveries by Columbus and others, are accounted for in the Book of Mormon; one as coming from the Tower of Babel, two thousand years B. C., and the others as coming from Jerusalem six hundred years B. C. We have already quoted Short who says the latter people "were preceded by a race possessed of no inferior civilization, who were not their ancestors, but a distinct people with a capacity for progress, for the exercise of government, for the erection of magnificent, architectural monuments, and possessed of a respectable knowledge of geometrical principles." Baldwin says,—"The Aztecs were manifestly something very different from Mexican savages. At the same time, they were less advanced in many things than their predecessors."—Page 221.

On page 246 this writer, referring to the assumption that the old American civilizations had a common origin in South America, says: "It preceded not only the history indicated by the existing antiquities, but also an earlier history, during which Peruvians and Central Americans grew to be as different from their ancestors as from each other." On page 156, he quotes Bressaut de Bourbourg, as follows: "Among the edifices forgotten by time in the forests of Mexico and Central America, we find architectural characteristics so different from each other, that it is as impossible to attribute them all to the same people as to believe they were all built at the same epoch." In perfect harmony with the foregoing, the Book of Mormon as we have shown represents two distinct peoples, with their divisions and wars, their prosperity and adversity, until, on account of their wickedness, they were successively destroyed as peoples, and the remnants of the later race have sunk into the wild, degraded and barbarous condition in which we see them to-day. For the history of the first nation, (Jaredites), See Book of Mormon, Lamoni edition, commencing on page 500. See also pages 137, 159, 185, an account of the discovery of the records they had left. And for the history of the second nation, Israelites—(Nephites), read the entire book. Thus you will see that in spite of the cry of "delusion," "golden bible," etc., etc., from press and pulpit, the antiquities discovered, and the traditions found inscribed in hieroglyphics on the walls of their ruined temples, are found to agree very closely with that much despised but divine record. Compare also that record with the Bible, and if you seek guidance from on high you will rise from your researches prepared to accept them both as of divine authority, each bearing witness of the changeless wisdom, love and mercy of God.

T.—It seems almost impossible that the present Indians can have descended from a people so highly civilized as these antiquities would indicate their authors to have been. Can it be possible that the savage Indian is the descendant of the mighty minds that built Palenque, Copan, Mitla, Uxmal, etc., etc.? Can humanity fall from such a height to such a depth of degradation? The philosophy of the nineteenth century represents man as rising from a state of barbarism—this is a much more pleasing view. Take the Anglo-Saxon race as an example. Our fathers were steeped in the utmost barbarity, but their descendants have risen step by step until they have nearly compassed the empire of the world, and their achievements outshine the splendors of Babylon, Egypt, Greece, Rome, and all the nations of olden time. But if your Book of Mormon is true, this is reversed on this western continent. And yet these ruins of splendid cities remain before us the evidences of a once glorious civilization, and challenge our admiration, and we are at a loss to know who were the authors of such magnificence, the students of such profound sciences as they had a knowledge of.

D.—I can not answer you better than in the language of Rev. Ed. Fontaine in his work, "How the world was peopled." On page 161 he says: "Both Hemispheres have had their bright and dark eras. Empires of these men, like those of Nimrod and the Incas, the Cushites and the Colhuas, have risen and fallen in both." And on page 204; "It is said that 'history repeats itself.' The vast British Empire may share the fate of other great empires, and fall in ruins, from which may rise future empires, kingdoms, republics, anarchies and clans of savages. If such great revolutions shall occur in the British Empire as have marked the history of all the great empires of antiquity, the descendants of Englishmen living on opposite sides of the earth will probably exist in governments of various kinds, more or less civilized, while some of them sink into the condition of the most savage and degraded. There is not a land which has long been the birthplace and grave of nations, whose history, from its well attested annals, back into its misty myths, and far into the oblivion which shrouds the ruins of the past, is not saddened by the evidence of such fearful and melancholy changes of the condition of its inhabitants from high grades of civilization to the lowest depths of barbarism. The Yzeddies, or devil worshippers, who inhabited the valley of the Euphrates, in the neighborhood of Babylon, are the descendants of the ancient mixed races who successively occupied Mesopotamia, and became blended together in this home of the patriarch of all nations.

Their ancestors were the Assyrians and Babylonians, the Medes and Persians, and the Greeks ruled by such men as Shalmaneser, Nebuchadnezzar, Cyrus and Alexander the great—famous nations who discovered much, and possessed all that was known in past ages of science, literature and art. These ignorant and wretched pagans pitch their tents, and perform their diabolical rites in honor of Abaddon, amid the mighty ruins of the temples, palaces, and tombs of their forefathers, and they have no history or tradition of their origin better than other savages have retained of the renowned lands they inhabit. The wild Arabs know nothing of their ancestors who gave us our algebra and numerals, and attribute all the Cyclopean ruins of Heliopolis and Laba, constructed by them, to the works of giants and Genii. The savage and semicivilized Abyssinians gaze with ignorant wonder upon the obelisks and broken columns of Axum, where the renowned Queen of Sheba was enthroned and swayed the powerful empire of Ethiopia. The wretched Copts of Egypt, the degraded Hindoos of Elephanta, the stupid Quichnas of Cuzco, and the half naked savages of Yucatan and Central America, are all the wrecks and remnants of a 'nobler and better part.' Such shadows now flit where the ancient light of civilization once shone; and they warn us that, on all the spots where the wisdom of the present age beams brightest, the deepest darkness of the future may fall." On pages 264, 265, he gives the very reason for this decline that the Book of Mormon gives as the cause of the ruin of these ancient American nations. "What is the cause of the terrible revolutions? Why does the wigwam of the savage, or the tent of the demi-civilized nomad, stand upon the ruins of the palace of the Monarch? And why does the wild forest, or the cheerless deserts spread where cultivated fields and cities flourished? The solemn answer is given in these inspired words, 'Righteousness exalteth a nation, and sin is a reproach to any people, and "the nations that forget God shall utterly perish.'" Fontaine properly adds: "They forgot God and his law, and they perished." With this, the Book of Mormon perfectly agrees. On page 503, we read, "That who so should possess this land of promise, from that time henceforth and forever, should serve Him, the true and only God, or they should be swept off when the fulness of His wrath should come upon them." On page 53 is this:—"Wherefore, I Lehi, prophesy according to the workings of the Spirit which is in me, that there shall none come unto this land, save they shall be brought by the hand of the Lord. Wherefore, this land is consecrated unto him whom he shall bring. And if it so be that they shall serve him according to commandments which he hath given, it shall be a land of liberty unto them; wherefore they shall never be brought down into captivity; if so it shall be because of their iniquity; for if iniquity shall abound, cursed shall be the land for their sakes; but unto the righteous, it shall be blessed forever." * * * But behold, when the time cometh that they shall dwindle in unbelief, after they have received so great blessings from the hand of the Lord; having a knowledge of the creation of the earth, and all men knowing the great and marvelous works of the Lord from the creation of the world; having power given them to do all things by faith; having all the commandments from the beginning, and having been brought by his infinite goodness into this land of promise; behold, I say, If the day shall come that they will reject the Holy One of Israel, the true Messiah, their Redeemer and their God, behold the judgments of him that is just shall rest upon them; yea he will bring other nations unto them, and he will give unto them power, and he will take away from them the lands of their possessions, and he will cause them to be scattered and smitten, yea, as one generation passeth to another, there shall be bloodsheds and great visitations among them." Thus the word of God agrees with the facts as they have transpired, for both the Jaredites and Nephites have proved the severity and justice of God because they have rejected his goodness and despised his precepts; and their ruined cities and buried palaces, their splendid temples and towering pyramids are so many monuments of their wicked pride and crumbled greatness. The Antiquarians of the nineteenth century are bringing these things to the gaze of all mankind, and are thus unconsciously proving the divinity of that remarkable book which had been hidden for ages, but is now brought to light in this generation by the instrumentality of an holy angel. That book which Isaiah said, "The deaf shall hear, and the eyes of the blind should see," (chapter 29: 18), and of which the Psalmist said, "Truth shall spring out of the earth; and righteousness shall look down from heaven;" (Ps. 85: 11); the book which Ezekiel calls "The Stick of Ephraim." (Ezek. 37: 16, 28). And stranger still, if possible, just after its coming forth, Lebanon is becoming fruitful, after the curse of barrenness has blighted her lovely valleys and sacred mountains for many centuries; and Israel may now say, "Our land is yielding her increase." The sons and daughters of Ancient Israel are feeling the influence of this divine movement, and they are setting their faces Zionward. "The poor among men are beginning to rejoice in the Holy One of Israel," and "the meek increase their joy in the Lord." Verily, God is gracious to his covenant people, and remembers the promise made to their forefathers; and the despised Book of Mormon is one of the greatest evidences of that goodness and love. It is indeed "one with the stick of Judah," bearing testimony with it of the unchanging nature, justice, mercy, truth and boundless love of God to all mankind. Let His holy name be praised for ever, and ever. Amen.

BRAN is a capital ingredient to be included in the ration of breeding animals, as it contains so large a percentage of phosphate of lime, a thing very essential from which to grow the bones of the offspring.

THE BRONSON-PADGET DEBATE.

BRO. JOSEPH.—To answer many, a word in the Herald about the Grundy county, Missouri, debate may be timely. The debate commenced on Monday, August 16th, at ten a.m., and lasted six days. From three to five hundred were in attendance. Bro. J. R. Lambert acted as moderator for Elder Bronson, and Elder Edwards of, "Christian" fame, for Elder Padget. A Methodist man of ability and fairness was chosen for the third and acted as president.

Elder Bronson opened on the affirmative by reading the Epitome of our faith; thought we had the right to say what we believed as doctrine. He said there was a church in the wilderness, (Acts 7: 38), and in that church God set officers; Moses acting as presiding officer, with Aaron and Hur as his counselors; (Ex. 17: 10, 11, 12? 24: 13, 14); a Twelve; (Deut. 1: 22, 23; Num. 13); a Seventy; (Num. 11: 16); and all these men administered by authority through the priesthood. This order, or type, was closely followed by Christ under the New Testament dispensation. Christ chose Twelve Apostles; (Matt. 10: 4); a Seventy; (Luke 10: 1, 2); they administered under priesthood authority; (1 Pet. 2: 5, 9); Christ himself acting as the great High Priest and Apostle over the church. This order was to continue, for it has pleased God to set these officers in the church for a specific purpose; (Eph. 4); that purpose has not yet been accomplished; and there were some eighteen, or more, apostles, and never more than twelve in the quorum at any one time. Christ had under contemplation a first presidency after his departure. (Matt. 17: 1; 26: 37), James, Peter and John were chosen from the original twelve to act in a higher position, and they were called "pillars" in the church, (Gal. 2: 9), and after this were not numbered with the twelve. (1 Cor. 15: 5, 6, 7). James acted as presiding officer of that three. (Acts 15: 13-19; Gal. 2: 12). Vacancies that occurred by reason of removing these men from the twelve were filled by calling other men to that position. (Acts 13: 2; 14: 14; Rom. 16: 7). The doctrine of that church so officered was: 1, faith; 2, repentance; 3, baptism for the remission of sins; 4, the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost; 5, resurrection; 6, eternal judgment. (Acts 2: 36-39; 8: 12: 17; 19: 1-6. Heb. 6: 1, 2). That the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints was in harmony with that church in doctrine and church organization. Men and angels were debarred from preaching a gospel different in doctrine and promise, or with less power than the apostles taught, (Gal. 1: 8, 9). That gospel was not in word only. (1 Thess. 1: 5). Elder Bronson showed an apostasy from this faith, which had been clearly predicted by Jesus, Paul, Daniel, and others. They should "wear out the saints of the Most High."—Dan. 7: 25. There was to be a restoration of the kingdom of God, and it would be "given to the Saints of the Most High," and they would "possess it forever and forever." (Dan 7: 18, 27; 2: 44). This restoration would occur in "the hour of God's judgment."—Rev. 14: 6, 7.

Elder Padget was "cut and dried" with his "unimpeachable testimony" of Brigham's 19th wife, John D. Lee, "Hell on Earth," (which contained the so-called revelation on polygamy), and a host of the lying frauds against the Smith's. The Book of Mormon had such phrases as, "supposes me," "he may write somewhat," "nevertheless a small voice," and, "such language can not be found in the Bible, therefore Jo Smith was a false prophet."

The promise of the miraculous gifts were promised to none but you, the Apostles, and none never had them but apostles or those whom they laid their hands on. Paul warned the church in Acts 20: 28, 29, about the danger of claiming the gifts of the Holy Spirit as he had them. He had revealed unto them "the whole counsel of God," hence all miraculous gifts had ceased. No man dare to add to or take from; (Rev. 22: 18); and there never had been, nor will there ever be, such a manifestation again as was on the day of Pentecost, as that was the fulfillment of Joel's "last days;" as Paul said in Heb. 1: 2, "God has spoken by his Son in these last days."

Elder Padget, on the fourth day, opened upon his affirmative speech in favor of the "Christian" Church. He spent almost two days on what he called the foundation—trying to prove that the Church of Christ in the days of Christ was in harmony with the teachings of the New Testament! Elder Bronson got tired waiting for A. Campbell's church to put in an appearance, and came to the front with the "Restored" Campbellite Church. This brought Elder Padget to time. His church had twelve apostles; (all dead); had a seventy; (all dead). All were priests in their church,—(men, women and children).

Elder Bronson being an apt scholar learned for the first time that a woman could be a priest. Elder Padget informed him that the Scriptures said, "They are all one in Christ Jesus." Elder Bronson was still more anxious to know if this "all one" made them all males, or all females, as he was not acquainted with this transposing arrangement. Elder Padget then explained, that "they are neither male nor females—but one." This put them into the neuter gender. At this the Campbellite priesthood wilted. Elder Bronson wanted to know, if the Campbellite Church claimed that the twelve dead apostles were in their church, what would they do with their brother churches—the Methodist, Baptist, &c.? for there was not enough to go around unless they could be divided up. Elder Padget wanted it understood that he had nothing to do with these side shows. Elder Bronson claimed he had just found the Campbellite Church, i. e. the Methodist, Baptist, Congregationist, &c., were the "side shows" and the Campbellites the main circus.

The "Christians" rather thought they had been tricked by us sending a "St. Jo. lawyer" to meet their man. Elder Bronson was able in his defence, and truth lost nothing during the conflict. The Methodist people kindly offered us the use of their church house during Sunday. Bro. Lambert spoke twice and Bro. Bronson once to crowded congregations, and the work was left in good condition. Many enquired for preaching, which should be looked after by those in authority, at no distant day. Bro. Lambert's work was considerable during the time of debate. The Christian Elders pretended to want to renew the debate upon the Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants, and Joseph Smith, Jr. Some three long, tedious preambles had to be prepared in answer to their evasive formulated questions. Bro. Lambert's answers were so fair, argumentative and complete that it seemed to turn the key on Campbellism, at least for the present.

One battle after another brings the victory for the cause we so much love. "Study to show yourselves workmen." Living a humble and pure life will bring a complete victory over error, prejudice and superstition, by and by.

Bishop's Agent's report: on hand last report $14.93; received since $27; total $41.93; paid to ministerial labor $22; balance $19.93. Report accepted. The following officers reported: Elders M. T. Short, J. Chisnall, E. T. Bryant, J. D. Jones, D. S. Holmes, J. W. Terry, and S. Adams, Priest. J. W. Terry appointed at last conference a committee to visit Father Jesse L. Adams reported somewhat successful. Bro. Adams being present was requested to express his feelings, and did so. After some little changing of views the following motion was presented and finally adopted. Resolved, That the report of J. W. Terry on the case of Bro. Jesse L. Adams be recommitted, and that he be advised by this conference to call others to his assistance, and to report results to this conference. Afternoon session, 2 p. m.—J. W. Terry having called upon J. Chisnall and A. H. Smith to examine more fully into the father Adams difficulty, reported, reading as follows:

BUFFALO PRAIRIE, Sep. 11th, 1886.

We, your committee appointed, do hereby report; Whereas, The action of the Quorum of Seventy, in referring the matter of accusation against Bro. Jesse L. Adams places the matter in such a shape, and the length of time the brother has rested under said accusation—We your committee believe to be sufficient punishment already. Therefore we do hereby recommend, that the proceedings in the matter be dropped, and that Bro. Jesse L. Adams be released from further blame. Also that he be and is hereby requested to act in harmony with the local authorities wherever he may labor in the future, agreeably to the ruling of General Conference decisions on such matters.

J. W. TERRY,

J. CHISNALL, A. H. SMITH.

After some little discussion the following was passed. Resolved, That we not only accept the report and discharge the committee, but concede to its spirit, and its intended workings. The question in minutes of last June conference as to the advisability of changing our time of conferences from quarterly to semi-annual was called up, put to vote, and lost. Bro. J. W. Terry as president, and J. D. Jones as secretary, were re-elected for another term of six months. Bro. John F. Adams presented a request to have this conference reconsider his "case" and difficulty with this district, as seen in former conference minutes. John D. Jones moved and A. H. Smith seconded; That a committee be appointed by this body to take into consideration the request of Bro. John F. Adams for a rehearing of the case. After a little clashing of views, the motion was put and carried. Resolved, That John F. Adams have the appointing of one out of three on the committee. Conference appointed John Chisnall and J. D. Jones; J. F. Adams appointed A. H. Smith. The committee asked when they were expected to report. The chair answered, Investigation to proceed as early as possible, and committee to report at close of next meeting. Resolved, That when this conference adjourn it does so to meet again in the coming December, at Kewanee, Illinois, the presiding Elder to fix date. The spiritual and temporal authorities of the church were sustained in usual form. Evening session.—Elder J. Chisnall addressed the audience. At the close of sermon committee on case of John F. Adams reported as follows:

BUFFALO PRAIRIE, Sept. 11th, 1886.

To the Conference Assembled:—We your committee, upon examination do find that the record does show that action was had in the case of Bro. John F. Adams; and while such action was pending that Bro. John F. Adams "did ask forgiveness" for the wrong he had done, in the following language; (see conference minutes, held at Millersburg, December 12th, 1884, page on Record 72): "Brethren in Christ, I hereby say that wherein I have offended, or sinned, in word or deed, I do most humbly beg for forgiveness." And that upon motion, this statement was laid upon the table, and subsequent action was had without consideration of said request. And, whereas, "the law of Christ" requires us to forgive a brother even unto seventy times seven; we believe his request for forgiveness should have been honored, and the brother forgiven. We recommend that the conference take up this confession or request, and dispose of it. And further, that his licence be restored, and that henceforth Bro. John F. Adams be and is hereby requested to labor in union and submission to local authorities, in all righteousness, as the rules and laws of the church direct.

JOHN D. JONES,
JOHN CHISNALL, } Committee.
A. H. SMITH,

It was then resolved that we accept the report and discharge the committee. And further it was resolved that we concede as a conference, in full accord with the committee's report. Six years, and one day. After which it was resolved that this conference take from the table the request for forgiveness made by John F. Adams at the Millersburg conference of December 12th, 1884, (which request was then tabled by motion), and that we grant the request, and forgive the brother. It was further resolved that we comply with the last clause of committee's report, that is, that we restore unto John F. Adams his licence. Sunday services.—At 9 a. m. prayer and testimony and sacrament; two were administered unto, 1 child blessed, 1 confirmed. At 11 a. m. preaching by A. H. Smith. Between the hours of twelve and two, two were baptized by D. S. Holmes. Two o'clock p. m., preaching again by A. H. Smith, and the two baptized were confirmed by Brn. Holmes and Bryant. Minutes read and accepted as correct.

Miscellaneous.

REUNION INFORMATION.

Parties coming to the Reunion will remember that it is to be held at Garner's Grove, eight miles north of Missouri Valley, and five miles east of Mondamin, Iowa, and will commence on Saturday, October 2d, 1886. Parties coming from the direction of Sioux City, can, if they prefer, get off at Mondamin, where teams will be in waiting to convey them to the grounds.

The Illinois Central; Sioux City and Pacific; Chicago and North Western; Chicago, Burlington and Quincy; Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific; Minneapolis and St. Louis, and Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis and Omaha Railways, will carry passengers from all points in Iowa for one and one third fare for the round trip, on the following conditions:

1st. At least twenty-five persons must obtain tickets over any one road to entitle them to a reduction. Should the Secretary of the Reunion see that there are twenty-five who hold certificates showing that they have paid full fare in coming, he will certify that they have been in attendance, and they can then obtain a return ticket at one third the regular rate. 2d. Persons desiring to take advantage of this reduction Must Remember that on all the above roads, except the Chicago and North Western, they must apply for a certificate from their home Ticket Agent (or starting point as the case may be) showing that they have paid full fare to Missouri Valley; or if more than one road is used, then to the point where change of road is made and another from thence to Missouri Valley. Unless such certificate is obtained, when starting, to be shown to Agent when procuring return ticket, no reduction will be made. This condition is not required by the Chicago and North-Western Railway. 3d. This reduction will not be available for a longer period than one day after the adjournment of the Reunion. 4th. No reduction has yet been obtained for persons getting off at Mondamin, though an effort will be made to make a similar arrangement there. Parties getting off at Mondamin will have to take their chances on such an arrangement being made.

Teams will be in waiting at Mondamin and Missouri Valley, to convey delegates coming by rail to the grounds, on Saturday and Sunday, October 2d and 3d, and persons having charge of such teams will be designated by a blue ribbon in their coats.

Persons coming by team can get hay for ten cents for forty pounds, and grain at the usual rates; down wood free; cord wood at the rate of two dollars per cord; meat and provisions will be furnished on the grounds at reasonable rates. It is likely that there will be a boarding house on the grounds, though nothing definite can be promised.

It will be remembered that the effort started at the last Reunion by the Galland's Grove and Little Sioux Districts, to procure a large tent has been successful; a tent with a capacity for seating one thousand people has been purchased, and will be on the ground.

The committee confidently believe that they have as fine grounds and as convenient arrangements for a successful and pleasant gathering as could reasonably be expected, and they hope all who are reasonably accessible to the place of meeting will attend.

The deceased had long been a resident of this city, living by herself the past few years. Last week she concluded to visit her sister, where she was attacked with cholera morbus in so severe a form that she soon became unconscious, and died without recognizing her children. Her funeral was attended at the stone church, Elder W. Vickery conducting the services.—Plano Pivot.

Wilder, who died September 9th, 1883. For fifty-four years they shared one another's joys and sorrows; seven children were born them, one of which in infancy preceded them to the other shore; the other six, three sons and three daughters, remain to mourn for them. She died giving the evidence of good faith; as she often remarked she was ready and willing and was only waiting the sommons to go.

"Why do we mourn departed friends,
Or weep at death's alarms;
'Tis but the voice that Jesus sends
To call them to his arms."

LIVELY.—At Independence, Missouri, August 27th, 1886, of inflammation of the stomach, Bro. Joseph Lively, aged 24 years, 5 months, 8 days. The funeral sermon was preached by Elder Joseph Luff, in the Saints' Chapel, on Sunday morning, August 29th. The building was crowded with sympathizing people, and a very large concourse of people, headed by the city fire brigade, of which deceased was a member, followed the remains to the grave. His last conscious moments were spent in prayer for those around him, that they might be prepared to meet him hereafter.

WELCH.—August 30th, 1886, Harriet Rose, wife of Moses Welch of Shell Creek. Deceased was a native of England, having been born at Dorsetshire, December 29th, 1811. The funeral services were held Wednesday from the German Church near the Mill, Elder H. J. Hudson officiating, and a very large number of sorrowing friends of the family following the mortal remains of their friend to the grave. Sr. Welch was baptized in 1846, at Pilsden, England; came to America in 1849; united with the Reorganization in Columbus, Nebraska, in 1865; continuing firm in the faith, testifying shortly before her departure, to Bro. Welch and her family: "I am not afraid to die." Her cold features were sweetly expressive of repose and rest.

Was baptized into the Reorganized church at San Francisco, California, April 14th, 1865, by Elder Henry Burgess; confirmed April 16th, 1865, by H. Burgess; Ordained an Elder April 16th, 1865, by H. Burgess. Died Friday, August 27th, 1886, at his residence, 436 Brannan street, San Francisco, of pneumonia, after only six days' sickness. At time of death he was Bishop's Agent for the Northern District of California, and secretary of the San Francisco branch of the church.

SALYARDS.—At Wheeling, West Virginia, September 16th, 1886, after a short illness, Emma, daughter of Richard S., and Zaide V. Salyards, aged two years, one month and eight days. She was born at Pittsburg, Pa., August 8th, 1884, and was the grand daughter of Pres. J. Smith, of Lamoni.

THE MULLEIN TEST IN CONSUMPTION.

THE success attending the treatment of consumption with mullein-leaves by Dr. Quinlan of Dublin, and which has been so widely published, has led him to make a formulated statement showing briefly that in the earlier and pretubercular stage of pulmonary consumption mullein has a weight-increasing and curative power greater than that of cod-liver oil and equal to that of Russian koumiss; in cases where tubercles are well established, or cavities exist the mullein has great power in relieving cough; phthisical diarrhea is completely obviated by the mullein; but it has no power or effect on the night-sweats of consumption, which are to be combatted by atrobria sulphate. Three ounces of the fresh green leaves, or about ten times as much of the dried, are boiled in a pint of fresh cow's milk, and after boiling a moment the infusion is allowed to stand and "sipe" for ten minutes, when it is strained, sweetened, and drank while warm; this quantity is taken twice or three times a day. It is generally much relished by the patients, who regard it as a pleasant article of diet rather than as a medicine. The smoke of these leaves, inhaled into the respiratory passages, relieves irritation and spasmodic coughs.

CONFERENCE NOTICES.

The next session of the Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana district will be held with the Coldwater branch, Branch county, Michigan, commencing October 16th, at half-past ten o'clock. A large number of Saints and friends are expected to be present, and a time of spiritual refreshing is anticipated. Come all who can; and come praying the Lord to move the cause. Brethren W. H. and E. L. Kelley, Bishop Blakeslee, H. Rathbun, J. J. Cornish, B. V. Springer, Leonard Scott and other ministers will be with us to help "roll the car along." Elders and Saints of adjoining districts are cordially invited to "come over and help us." Those coming from the east by rail will be met by brethren with conveyance at Quincy, those from the west at Coldwater.

C. SCOTT, Dist. Pres.

The fall conference of the Kent and Elgin district will be held in the Blenheim Branch, commencing on Saturday, October 9th, 1886, as per adjournment. Presidents and clerks of branches please take notice, and report the standing of your several branches. Saints coming from the north can take the Erie and Huron R. R. as it is finished through to Sarnia. Come and bring the spirit of love and peace with you.

Conference for the Northern Illinois and Southern Wisconsin District will convene October 9th and 10th, at Mission Branch, LaSalle County, Illinois. Every branch in the district should be reported by personal presence of branch authority, or by letter. If by the latter, please forward reports to Bro. W. Vickery, secretary, Plano, Illinois, in ample time before conference. Elders whose circumstances will not permit them to attend, are earnestly requested to report their labors by letter, as we are anxious to have a complete and full report of the local ministry of the district. We trust a good representation will be had from all of the branches; and that each one will come with the earnest prayer in their hearts that the Spirit of the Master will be there to administer grace, that the strong may be made stronger, the weak confirmed with a glorious spiritual renovation which will revive the district. As a people we have no selfish aims to conserve; no sectional ambition to gratify; but we should be identified with Christ, our united efforts should be to maintain a closer walk with God and attain a higher plane of spirituality, and individual righteousness, keeping in our hearts that principle of charity without which we are nothing. The steady and persistent efforts of the faithful Saints in different parts of the district are being felt for good. Worthy souls continue to come into the Kingdom, and we rejoice as the holy Spirit bears witness of their fellowship in Christ the living head. Brother A. H. Smith, president of the mission, will be with us, no preventing providence. We trust all will be benefitted by his ministrations. We would be glad if any of the traveling ministry would favor our conference with their labors. Now is the time, dear Saints, to unite our prayers and to employ all our powers in the advancement of "Zion's weal" in this the crowning dispensation of the ages. The earnest prayer, the humble walk, the consistent Christian life, and the forgiving heart, are essential elements in developing the spirituality of the Saints, and in bringing life and salvation to the sinner. May God help all to realize that, from the oldest to the youngest, from the richest to the poorest, each one has their individual work to perform, a character to make, a soul to save; and that this most important and beautiful of all works—building for eternity—will be our rich and everlasting inheritance "when Jesus comes in Glory." If we perform our duties faithfully in the Spirit, and love of Christ, we will realize that Zion's peace will flow as a river, and her righteousness as the waves of the sea.

The North Michigan District Conference will commence October 16th, in the Saints' Church in the Delaware branch, Sanilac county, Michigan. We wish the officers to have full reports of their branches, and we hope to see a large gathering of the brethren. Those coming by boat will get off at Forestville, (church three miles south), and those coming by railroad get off at Palms. Trains will be met by the brethren with teams on Friday afternoon and Saturday morning, 15th and 16th.

The semi-annual conference of the Southern District of California will convene at Newport, near Santa Anna, in the Saints' Chapel, October 8th, 9th, and 10th, 1886. All are earnestly invited to come praying for a time of refreshing from the Lord, and the enjoyment of a profitable season. Let us each strive to do our duty to God, to ourselves, and to our fellow-men. All are expected to report.

JUDGING SPIRITUAL THINGS.

A BROTHER writes us of late that, five years ago he heard the gospel, and that it came with "great convincing power." He claims to be now as firm as ever in the faith and knowledge of God, for he can not forget "the heavenly power" by which he received the gift of prophecy; yet he is tried because when some one speaks in prophecy he does not have the power of God's Spirit to bear witness of some things prophesied of.

Well; Paul said, (1 Cor. 14:29), "Let the prophets speak two or three, and let the other judge;" and he also warns those who have the gift of prophecy to "prophecy according to the proportion of faith." Rom. 12:6. If they have not that "proportion of faith" (not fanaticism) which brings that measure of the Holy Spirit necessary to prophecy truly and properly, then they should not attempt to prophecy. For if they do, they may deceive both themselves and others, and thus weaken the faith and confidence of both. The Saints should "covet to prophecy, and forbid not to speak with tongues," and use the gifts wisely.

It is a great evil for any one to say "Thus saith the Lord," when the Lord has not spoken. God is not to be mocked; and those who do such an evil thing will be detected in due time. It is a wicked thing to speak in the name of the Lord without authority. But prophecies and tongues and revelations and visions may be truly manifest to individuals, and yet some persons present may not then have the evidence of the Spirit in confirmation, or they may have it in part only. If any one is in the fault about it, it would not be the one having the gift.

Again; the Lord might have a wise purpose in withholding the witness of the Spirit. The writer remembers that when the revelation of May 4th, 1865, was read in the council when first given, he and others had no testimony of the Spirit witnessing its truth; yet many others claimed they did. But within two days from that time, when quietly, carefully reading the revelation to Bishop Rogers and others, the Holy Spirit bore conclusive evidence to them that it was true and of God. It is no evidence that what reports to be the manifestation of the Spirit is not such, because we do not have the testimony of the Spirit bearing witness to it. If we have no testimony all we can say is, that we don't know. Be careful; be wise; be spiritual; be patient.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

The following extracts from a letter written by Bro. A. H. Smith, dated at Eliza, Mercer county, Illinois, September 22d, will show what he is at present doing in his field:

"On Friday, after leaving you at LaHarpe, I had the pleasure of baptizing our cousins Mary and Flora, in Crooked Creek. It was a solemn occasion, all were made to feel the softening influence of the Spirit. Cousin Lucy who does not belong to the church, with tears streaming o'er her face bore testimony to the work, that it was true, and of God. Returned to Solomon's, and had a blessed time at confirmation. Again were in tears by the Spirit's holy presence. Saturday in company with Solomon and Lucy, I started for conference at Rock Creek. Saturday September 11th, at 10:30 a. m., we met the brethren in conference; and the minutes will give you particulars. I spoke twice to large audiences, Sunday, at Buffalo Prairie Chapel, and once in evening at Millersburg in Saints' Chapel there. Intended to have held meetings all the week, but was too ill Monday and Tuesday; so Bro. M. T. Short filled my appointments very acceptably. However, I came to the front again Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday evenings, and Saturday Bro. Samuel Adams came from this neighborhood to bring me over to fill some appointments Uncle Jesse Adams and Bro. Stephen Adams made for me here. Held two services on Sunday, one Monday, and one Tuesday eve, and will hold forth to-night. I find a people willing to hear, and I believe as willing to investigate. A few of the business men here have erected a fine hall and made it welcome to all. They give to us free, and light it for us. The room is an excellent one, to speak in very easy, the trouble is to keep from speaking too loud. The hall is a credit to the community and speaks in tones of praise to the liberal hearts and hands which have erected it for the public good. I am the guest of Dr. Reynolds, one of the proprietors of the hall, a pleasant, sociable gentleman. I wish the Elders may all find as kind friends in their travels as I have here. May God bless this people, and all Saints. My appointments are Sunday the 26th, at Kewange; Sunday the 3d of October, at Sandwiche, and the 9th at Mission, LaSalle Co., Ills. Am in moderate health only, but have excellent liberty in speech, for which I thank God."

Bro. D. S. Mills wrote from his home, Santa Ana, Los Angeles county, California, September 8th, 1886, mentioning the return to the church of one of its earliest defenders, many years ago; and who now testifies that the Spirit is with the Reorganized Church. He says:

"I am wholly engaged in the work and expect to continue in it; have no other desire; I love to bring souls to Christ, and help to bind up the broken-hearted, and comfort those who mourn, and in all things rejoice with the Saints, and in the redemption of Zion now being accomplished; we are gaining here steadily and surely—the good Spirit is with us. I am holding a series of meetings on the Book of Mormon and divine call of Joseph Smith; have good attendance and am much blessed; some are believing, and some obeying, and the Saints are strengthened greatly and are striving for the victory. We expect more help in this field soon; may God grant it, for it is needed."

As we write, September 24th, we are pleased to acknowledge that we have much to encourage us in the work we are essaying to do. Some of the present things calling us to be thankful are:

1. Bro. Joseph R. Lambert returned from a few days' labor expended in the vicinity of Pleasanton, Iowa, and at points previously occupied by Bro. Duncan Campbell, and in which Bro. Campbell desired the help of a co-worker, expressing the satisfaction that he felt at receiving in his labors liberty of the Spirit and the fullest aid from the brethren in spiritual things. Bro. Abram Reese, from the same neighborhood corroborates the statements of Brn. Lambert and Campbell.

2. In the neighborhood of Eagleville, Missouri, where much labor has been expended from Brn. Z. H. Gurley, E. Banta, and Charles H. Jones, years ago, to the latest by Brn. S. V. Bailey, J. S. Snively, John Johnston and Jones, several have been baptized who have borne the spirit of conviction for a long time, and have finally yielded to the gentle monitor. May God's blessings be with them who so lately join the army of the Lord.

3. Away down in Southern California an old-time warrior, noted in years ago for excellence of speech in defence of the truth, but for many years upon the verge of ruin because of the course pursued by them who should have been pillars in the church but were untrue to their high trust, has decided to once more put his trust in the God of Israel and has renewed his covenant in the rite of baptism at the hands of that excellent witness, Bro. John Brush, another old-time Saint.

4. Up from the land of Dixie, (Texas), comes the grateful news that a child in gospel armor, has safely defended the truth in discussion against a veteran in the army of the paid ministry of the church of the world. Contemporaneously with this, quite a number of baptisms have crowned the labors of Bro. I. N. Roberts, possibly the seeds of which obedience to the word were sown by Brn. Bays, Heman C. Smith, Cato and others in that part.

5. Down from Maine and Minnesota ring the words: "Good cheer, brothers, the Lord blesses his word here; numbers hear and obey."

6. Over in Canada, twenty-five have been added through baptism performed by Bro. James A. McIntosh, since June; and others by brethren Lake, R. C. Evans and others.

7. Bro. J. J. Cornish is at Bay City, Michigan, and is doing valiant service. Tried by sickness in his family, a dear and loving little one, he still fights on bravely.

8. Local laborers in Ohio, West Virginia, Massachusetts and the regions about Philadelphia, are aiding and abetting brethren E. C. Briggs, W. H. Kelley, Sheehy, Bond, John Smith and others.

9. In the west, the Lord is working wondrously with his ministry, though the laborers are few. Brn. R. J. Anthony, Peter Anderson, J. Larsen, and J. C. Clapp, are all being signally blessed in Utah, Idaho and Montana, while Brn. Heman C. Smith, P. Daley, D. S. Mills, Hiram Holt, H. P. Brown, Geo. S. Lincoln are keeping up the warfare in California. Bro. A. Haws in Oregon, is doing much under great disadvantages, and all these laborers acknowledge the good offices of the Spirit aiding them. Bro. T. W. Smith in far off Society Islands; Bro. J. F. Burton in Australia; Bro. J. Taylor and his helpers in England and Wales; Bro. James Caffall in Nebraska and Kansas, with his co-workers; Bro. Alexander H. Smith in Illinois—all doing the best of service for the Master and his cause in the regions where they are called to labor, according to the ability which has been given to them.

It was not our intention to name the different laborers in all the fields where God's harvest is being reaped, to do honor to the laborers, but it was to call to the minds of all the fact that in many, or all of those fields, near or far, faithful labor was being met with reward; and that in spite of untoward things and events that made men sad in their happening, the Lord was remembering his people, and this was encouraging and strengthening to us.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

The Saints of Omaha Branch, will dedicate their new church, corner of Clark and Twenty-first streets, on the 17th inst. See notice and invitation. We expect to be present and aid them in their dedication.

WE elsewhere publish a purported communication from the Ancient of Days, which we present, not because we believe that it came from the Ancient of Days, or accept the Messenger through whom it came as authorized to give it publicity; but because there is much good, sound, common sense in the article itself, possibly inuring therein from the channel (the messenger) through which it came; as according to some new ideas with some people, "inspiration partakes largely of the medium through which it is manifested;" and "revelation takes on the character of the channel through which it reaches us."

The person to whom we are indebted for the article is one who has long been acquainted with the Utah phase of Mormonism, and has become by inquiry conversant with the work of the Reorganized church; and is competent to write of his own knowledge respecting the claims that Utah plurality has upon members of the genuine Church of Christ. He is a personal friend to us, and interested in the fight we are making; we are therefore free to present the article without in any wise endorsing it, or the manner in which it is said to have been given. Some of the positions set forth in it, we have years ago took grounds upon, and stated them fairly that there was no safety for so called Mormonism except in an abandonment of polygamy, a dissolution of the church and state idea, and the meddling with the political opinions of the people and a cessation of the cry of persecution because of things long since appealed to the throne on high.

"WHAT WILL THE MORMONS DO?"

"THIS question has more significance with the Mormons than many people suppose. The hope has all the time been on the part of the Mormons that some way would be found to evade the Edmunds law against polygamy. They believed that a change in the administration would in some way relieve them from prosecutions, or at any rate a few cases or subjects given up to the law, as martyrs to the cause of their faith, was all that would be asked. In this they are sadly mistaken. The administration of Mr. Cleveland gives them no particular comfort. Prosecutions have gone on and the enforcement of the law does not seem to have any respect for the highest as well as the lowest in the Mormon church. Public sentiment is growing stronger, and the practice of polygamy can no longer be hidden from the public view. The church can not be run and held together and polygamy preached as the highest cardinal virtue of the church, when the president and leaders of the church are away in hiding from the officers of the law. George Q. Cannon and John Taylor must stay with their people and suffer martyrdom if necessary, or they must have a new revelation and relieve the church from the odium of polygamy. The faint hope that Utah will soon be admitted into the union as a state, and possibly with a clause in her constitution prohibiting polygamy, with the possible chance of changing the constitution after admission, is all that is now pending on the side of these leaders. The bare possibility of saving polygamy under such circumstances is far in the future; with a strict enforcement of the Edmunds law during this time, it will break up the church root and branch. * * * Mormonism is an institution founded on polygamy, and in opposition to any and every other government except its own."—Idaho Statesman.

When the Statesman asserts that "Mormonism is an institution founded on polygamy and in opposition to any and every other government except its own," it may be true when applied only to Brighamism—an institution springing from the lusts and brains of Brigham Young and his fellows; but it is totally untrue when applied to "Mormonism" (if people will call it such) as originally founded.

The Book of Mormon, and the authentic revelations given to the church by Joseph Smith up to the time of his death, denounce polygamy and its like, also disloyalty, sedition and rebellion, in the most plain and vigorous terms. Why not assert that Christianity is an institution founded on priestcraft and vice, because such evils have been taught and fostered by some professing Christianity? It would be equally just and equally sensible for the Statesman. Christianity proper and Mormonism proper condemn these very evils, and yet there are those who ought to know better, but who nevertheless ignorantly or maliciously assert to the contrary and say they teach them.

The Book of Mormon and the Nauvoo edition of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants—books endorsed and taught by the church, and by Joseph Smith during his life-time—teach clearly the principles upon which Mormonism was founded and built up, and we assert, and will maintain it by incontestible proofs, that in these books there is not one fact nor one sentence favorable to polygamy, disloyalty, or anything of the kind; but that on the contrary they everywhere treat them as rank evils.

The Book of Mormon, page 116, says:

"Behold, David and Solomon truly had many wives and concubines, which thing was abominable before me, saith the Lord. . . . Wherefore, I, the Lord God, will not suffer that this people shall do like unto them of old. Wherefore my brethren, hear me and hearken to the word of the Lord; for there shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none."

The Nauvoo Book of Doctrine and Covenants commands the Saints thus:

"Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart, and cleave unto her and none else."—Sec. 42:7.

In respect to loyalty, the Book of Doctrine and Covenants commands thus:

Add to this the following from the same book, section 112, and the proof is complete that Mormonism proper can not be chargeable with polygamy and its like, neither with disloyalty in any form, and that these assertions to the contrary are false to the facts of the written records.

The Book of Doctrine and Covenants, sections 112, pars. 1 to 9, says:

"We believe that governments were instituted of God for the benefit of man, and that he holds men accountable for their acts in relation to them, either in making laws or administering them, for the good and safety of society.

"We believe that no government can exist in peace, except such laws are framed and held inviolate as will secure to each individual the free exercise of conscience, the right and control of property and the protection of life.

"We believe that all governments necessarily require civil officers and magistrates to enforce the laws of the same, and that such as will administer the law in equity and justice should be sought for and upheld by the voice of the people (if a republic), or the will of the sovereign.

"We believe that religion is instituted of God, and that men are amenable to him, and to him only, for the exercise of it, unless their religious opinions prompt them to infringe upon the rights and liberties of others; but we do not believe that human law has a right to interfere in prescribing rules of worship to bind the consciences of men, nor dictate forms for public or private devotion; that the civil magistrate should restrain crime, but never control conscience; should punish guilt, but never suppress the freedom of the soul.

"We believe that all men are bound to sustain and uphold the respective governments in which they reside, while protected in their inherent and inalienable rights by the laws of such governments, and that sedition and rebellion are unbecoming every citizen thus protected, and should be punished accordingly; and that all governments have a right to enact such laws as in their own judgments are best calculated to secure the public interest, at the same time, however, holding sacred the freedom of conscience.

"We believe that every man should be honored in his station: rulers and magistrates as such—being placed for the protection of the innocent and the punishment of the guilty; and that to the laws all men owe respect and deference, as without them peace and harmony would be supplanted by anarchy and terror; human laws being instituted for the express purpose of regulating our interests as individuals and nations, between man and man, and divine laws, given of heaven, prescribing rules on spiritual concerns, for faith and worship, both to be answered by man to his Maker.

"We believe that rulers, states and governments have a right, and are bound to enact laws for the protection of all citizens in the free exercise of their religious belief; but we do not believe that they have a right, in justice, to deprive citizens of this privilege, or proscribe them in their opinions, so long as a reverence is shown to the laws, and such religious opinions do not justify sedition nor conspiracy.

"We believe that the commission of crime should be punished according to the nature of the offense; that murder, treason, robbery, theft and the breach of the general peace, in all respects, should be punished according to their criminality and their tendency to evil among men, by the laws of that government in which the offense is committed; and for the public peace and tranquility, all men should step forward and use their ability in bringing offenders, against good laws, to punishment.

"We do not believe it just to mingle religious influence with civil government, whereby one religious society is fostered and another proscribed in its spiritual privileges, and the individual rights of its members, as citizens, denied."

Wherein the Utah Mormons have violated these teachings, they are non-Mormons, and should be so represented by all. We think the Statesmen does itself and those it represents, also all genuine Mormons, (and there are hosts of such), a great wrong, working mischief, when it falsely asserts what it has in respect to Mormonism. It should rather draw the line sharply between Brighamism and Mormonism proper, and credit each with just what belongs to it, and no more. We have before us at this writing a letter from one of its prominent and influential readers deploring its unjust and hurtful course in charging that Mormonism is founded on polygamy and opposition to civil government.

"SIGNS OF DECAYING RELIGIOUS INTEREST.

"HEAR what the noted Rev W. C. Prime says in the New Princeton Review: Perhaps memory deceived me, and there was not so much more devotion in the Sunday gatherings of fifty years ago than now. But as a rule there is very little now. The people do not appear to come together for worship. The experiences of ages teach that people who are religiously educated will habitually assemble regularly for the worship of their God, doing it both as a pleasure and a duty. It is not easy to induce men and women to assemble once or twice a week, for months, years, lifetimes, to hear lectures, essays, sermons, however instructive or eloquent. This is specially true of the young. In the large majority of country congregations it is quite evident that the people assembled have little idea of any purpose of personal worship. There was a time when controversy ran high about the proper posture in prayer. It proved that men had at least the conviction that some specific outward sign of inward humility was proper. It is now the general custom to ignore all outward formalities. It is rare, in "orthodox" churches, to see any one even bow the head or close the eyes while the minister prays. In many churches all the congregation sit bolt upright and stare at the man in the pulpit, or looking around. A striking custom prevails in many churches, where a choir, located at the end opposite to the pulpit, does the singing. All the people, old and young, rise, turn their backs to the pulpit, and look at the choir in silence while that part of the service is performed. One is tempted in this connection to speak of the doggerel stuff which has taken the place of psalms and hymns which were once the grand liturgy of the church of every denomination. But whatever it is the people stare and listen. It is evident that they have come to see and hear, to use eyes and ears only; not to take part in the services."

These things are not at all surprising to the Saints, for they were warned of them by revelation through Joseph the Seer over fifty years ago, in these words: "I, the Lord, am angry with the wicked; I am holding my spirit from the inhabitants of the earth."—Doctrine and Covenants 63:9. Again: "He that repents not, from him shall be taken even the light which he has received, for my Spirit shall not always strive with man."—Doctrine and Covenants 1:5. While the spiritual light and power of Christendom decreases, that of the restored Church of Christ should increase.

PERSECUTION AND ITS CAUSES.

IN order to further inform our readers as to the religious, social, educational and industrial sentiments and methods of the Saints in those early times, and especially when they were gathering to their intended home in Missouri, we add some more of the authoritative teachings of the church, published in its organ at Independence, Missouri, July, 1832. These, with the former facts we have presented, will enable all to properly measure the atrocity of the persecutive outrages which fell like a wrathful desolating storm upon the Saints gathered in and about Independence, in 1833.

The disciples should lose no time in preparing schools for their children, that they may be taught as is pleasing unto the Lord, and brought up in the ways of holiness. Those appointed to select and prepare books for the use of schools will attend to that subject as soon as more weighty matters are finished. But the parents and guardians in the Church of Christ need not wait—it is all important that children, to become good, should be taught so. Moses, while delivering the words of the Lord to the congregation of Israel, (the parents), says; And these words which I command thee this day shall be in thy heart: And thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thy house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up. And thou shalt bind them for a sign upon thy hand, and they shall be as frontlets between thine eyes. If it were necessary then to teach their children diligently, how much more necessary is it now, when the Church of Christ is to be an ensign, yea, even a sample to the world for good? A word to the wise ought to be sufficient, for children soon become men and women. Yes, they are they that must follow us and perform the duties which, not only appertain to this world, but to the second coming of the Savior, even preparing for the Sabbath of creation, and for eternity. * * *

THE ELDERS IN THE LAND OF ZION, TO THE CHURCH OF CHRIST SCATTERED ABROAD.

Brethren, we think it proper to give you some general information respecting the present state of the church in Zion, and also the work of the gathering. Notwithstanding that nearly all Christendom doubt the propriety of receiving revelations for the government of the church of Christ in this age, and generally adopt the scriptures of the Old and New Testament as the only rule of faith and practice, yet we believe, from the scriptures of truth, that to every church in the past ages, which the Lord recognized to be his, he gave revelations wisely calculated to govern them in the peculiar situation and circumstances under which they were placed, and to enable them by authority to do the peculiar work which they were to perform. The Bible contains revelations given at different times to different people, under different circumstances, as will be seen by editorial articles in this paper. The old world was destroyed for rejecting the revelations of God given to them through Noah. The Israelites were destroyed in the wilderness for despising the revelations given to them through Moses; and Christ said that the world, in the days of the apostles, should be condemned for not receiving the word of God through them. Thus we see that the judgments of God in the past ages have come upon the people, not so much for neglecting the revelations given to their forefathers as for rejecting those given immediately to themselves. Of the blessings of heaven it may be said, they have always rested upon the heads of those to whom they were promised. Therefore, seeing that it not only was, but as long as God remains the same always will be, the privilege of the true church to receive revelations containing blessings and cursings peculiarly adapted to itself as a church, we conclude that it is a mistaken notion that the scriptures of the Old and New Testament are the only rule of faith and practice. Nevertheless, inasmuch as the precepts and examples contained in them are truly applicable to us under our particular circumstances, we are bound to be governed by them; and we also can receive much benefit from such prophecies as point out the events that shall take place in our day and age. Of these there are many, both in the Old and New Testament. They speak plainly of great things that shall be accomplished in the last days, such as the preaching of the everlasting gospel to all nations; the gathering of the elect from the four winds of heaven; the building up of Zion and Jerusalem, or the ingathering of the remnants of Jacob and the planting them in the lands of their fathers' inheritance; the necessary preparation to meet the Savior at his second coming with all his saints to dwell with them in the millennial reign. And now, who, with the Bible in his hand, can suppose that these great and marvelous works can be accomplished by the church without more revelations from the Lord? We can not, for we worship the God of Israel, in whom there is neither variableness nor shadow of turning; consequently as in days of old, so in these last days, he has given us revelations by which we may know how to organize the Church of Christ, and how by his authority to perform the work which he has enjoined upon us. And now brethren, if we wish for blessings upon this church, we must walk humble before the Lord, and observe to keep all his commandments. Notwithstanding we believe the work of the gathering will be accomplished in a speedy manner; yet the Lord has commanded that it shall not be done in haste, nor by flight; but that all things shall be prepared before you. And for this purpose he has made it the duty of the bishop or agent in the land of Zion to make known, from time to time, the privileges of the land, to the conferences, which may determine and make known how many can be accommodated. And the saints will remember that the bishop in the land of Zion will not receive any as wise stewards, without they bring a recommend from the bishop in Ohio, or from three elders. The elders therefore will be careful and not recommend and send up churches to this place without first receiving information from the bishop in Ohio, or in the land of Zion, that they can be accommodated when they arrive, so as to be settled without confusion, which would produce pestilence. Therefore, if a church is desirous to come to the land of Zion, we would recommend, that first, by letter or otherwise, they make known their desires and their situation to the bishop in Ohio or in the land of Zion, and receive information from them before they start. Brethren will perceive as well as we, that where churches of fifty or a hundred souls each are coming to the land of Zion from different parts of the nation, and, as soon will be the case, from different nations, without a knowledge of each other, they would, when they arrive, be in a state of confusion, and labor under many disadvantages which might be avoided by strictly observing the rules and regulations of the church. Moreover, by being in haste and forcing the sale of property, unreasonable sacrifices have been made, and although this is a day of sacrifice and tithing, yet to make lavish and unreasonable sacrifices is not well pleasing in the sight of the Lord.

It is about one year since the work of the gathering commenced, in which time between three and four hundred have arrived here and are mostly located upon their inheritances and are generally in good health and spirits and are doing well. The expense of journeying and settling here, together with the establishing of a printing office and store, have probably exceeded the expectations of our brethren abroad, and although Zion, according to the prophets, is to become like Eden or the garden of the Lord, yet, at present it is as it were but a wilderness and desert, and the disadvantages of settling in a new country, you know, are many and great. Therefore, prudence would dictate at present to the churches abroad, to come not up to Zion until preparations can be made for them, and they receive information as above. The prospect for crops in this region of country, is at present, tolerable good, but calls for provisions will undoubtedly be considerable, for besides the emigration of the whites, the government of the United States is settling the Indians, (or remnants of Joseph) immediately to the west, and they must be fed.

Brethren, we drop the above remarks for your benefit, until you can have the revelations to peruse for yourselves, which will be published as soon as they can be consistently.—Although the Lord has said, that it is his business to provide for his saints in these last days, yet, remember he is not bound so to do, unless we observe his sayings and keep them.

TO THE ELDERS OF THE CHURCH OF CHRIST, WHO PREACH GOOD TIDINGS TO THE WORLD.

Brethren, as stars of the "ensign" which is now set up for the benefit of all nations, you are to enlighten the world; you are to prepare the way for the people to come up to Zion; you are to instruct men how to receive the fulness of the gospel and the everlasting covenants, even them that were from the beginning; you are to carry the ARK of SAFETY before the wondering multitudes, without fear, entreating and beseeching all men to be saved; you are to set an example of meekness and humility before saints and sinners, as did the Savior; and when reviled you are not to revile again; you are to reason with men as in days of old, to bear patiently and answer as the spirit of truth shall direct, allowing all credit for every item of good. You are to walk in the valley of humility and pray for the salvation of all; yes, you are to pray for your enemies, and warn in compassion, without threatening the wicked with judgments which are to be poured upon the world hereafter. You have no right to take the judgments which fell upon the ungodly before the flood and pour them upon the head of this generation; you have no authority to use the judgments which God sent upon Pharaoh in Egypt to terrify the inhabitants of America; neither have you any direction by commandment to collect the calamities of six thousand years and paint them upon the curtain of these last days to scare mankind to repentance. No; you are to preach the gospel, which is the power of God unto salvation, even glad tidings of great joy unto all people.

Again, you are not to take the blessings of an individual, or of a church, from the days of Enoch to the days of the apostles, and place them upon an individual or a church in these last days; but you are to teach all men that they are to be judged according to their works. For, if God is the same yesterday, to-day and forever, his reward is always with him, and his revelations and blessings and judgments before the flood, were fitted for that people and that time; in the days of Abraham, for that man and that time; in the days of Moses, for that man and that time; in the days of David, for that man and that time; in the days of Paul, for that man and that time; and now, for this generation and this time. You therefore, must reason from the Bible and the Book of Mormon with great care, and not pervert the meaning of God's sacred word. If our heavenly Father saw fit to destroy Sodom and Gomorrah for their wickedness, Nineveh for its abomination, and Jerusalem for a transgression of his commandments, what have their destructions to do with the salvation of the world now? The Lord says vengeance is mine, and I will repay. Teach all men to trust in God and not in man, and do works meet for repentance. Again, teach all men that God is a God of the living and not of the dead. Finally, whatever you do, do it with an eye single to the glory of God. You are the light of the world in matters of pure religion, and many souls may be required at your hands. Let the idea not leave you, that, not only the eyes of the world, but the eyes of the angels and of God are upon you.

FOREIGN NEWS.

It is a day of strange appearances. Everything indicates something more than meets the eye. Every nation is opening up events which astonish mankind: Even the heart of man begins to melt at the prospect before it. The unquenchable thirst for news; the continuity of emigration; the wars and rumors of wars, with many other signs of the distress of nations, from the old world—as it is called across the ocean—whispers so loud to the understanding, that he that runs may read the label on the eastern sky: The end is nigh. France is filled with a spirit of rebellion, and when the cholera was sweeping its thousands, mobs were collecting to slay their tens of thousands. While the hospitals were crowded with the sick, and the groans of the dying filled the air, the fashionable French were holding cholera balls and dancing at the judgments of the Almighty.—In England, where an anxious multitude have been waiting for a reformation in government, disappointment is destruction. The House of Lords has rejected the Reform bill, and the proud-hearted Englishman says—Reform or Revolution! No stop there: for the sound comes across the Atlantic. Reform or ruin!—All the kingdoms of the east seem to be preparing to act the part allotted to them, when the Lord rebukes the nations. As on a morning of some great festival, the church bell, the cannon, the small arms, the music, and the cheers of the multitude, arouse all to what is going on, and thunders to man: Behold the day! so also earthquakes, wars and rumors of wars, the distress of nations, the constant tide of emigration to the west, the wide spreading ravages of the cholera morbus, and the joy of the saints of God as they come out of Babylon, alarms the world, and whispers to every mortal, Watch ye, for the time is at hand for the second coming of Jesus Christ, the Redeemer of Israel, with peace on earth and good will to man. Watch the signs of his coming, that ye be not deceived.

In connection with the Star, we publish a weekly paper entitled the Upper Missouri Advertiser. It will contain sketches of the news of the day, politics, advertisements, and whatever tends to promote the interest of the great west.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY SISTER "FRANCES."

"No longer forward nor behind
I look in hope or fear;
But, grateful, take the good I find,
The best of now and here."

The article found below was sent us some time since, but we do not remember to whom we are indebted for it. When we remember that the very first requisition of the gospel of the Son of God is self-denial, we may well pause to ask ourselves, "Which kind are we exercising?" Let us read it carefully, examine ourselves and seek to know whether we need the lesson therein contained. If indeed we do, may we take it from the silent page, treasure it up in our hearts and manifest it in our lives.

HOUSEHOLD RELIGION.

SELF-DENIAL.

There are two sorts of self-denial in the world, and the peace and comfort of a household depend very much upon which sort is exercised by its religious members. These two sorts are as follows: either self-denial to make one's self uncomfortable, or self-denial to make one's friends comfortable.

There is no subject more thoroughly misunderstood than this subject of self-denial. Our human thought concerning it is, that it consists in making ourselves miserable; and in our effort to do this we are almost sure to make the people around us miserable also. We set self up on a pinnacle where all the house can see it, and then walk around it and berate and revile it, and stick prongs into it, and call everybody's attention to its ugliness and its sufferings, obtruding and inflicting our misery upon all that are in the house. So that it is rather customary for the other members of a household to feel that the presence of the member given to self-denial casts a sort of gloom over everything, and is likely to make them all uncomfortable.

The true Scripture idea of self-denial is very different from all this. The life of Christ is an exemplification of it. He sacrificed himself, not for himself but for others. He saved others, himself he could not save. He came not to minister to himself but to others. The whole secret of life was an outpouring for humanity.

In Isaiah 58: 5, we have given to us the Divine idea of true self-denial. "Is it such a fast as I have chosen? A day for a man to afflict his soul? Is it to bow down his head as a bulrush, and to spread sackcloth and ashes under him? Will thou call this a fast, and an acceptable day of the Lord? Is not this the fast that I have chosen? To loose the bands of wickedness, to undo the heavy burdens, and to let the oppressed go free, and that ye break every yoke? Is it not to deal thy bread to the hungry, and that thou bring the poor that are cast out to thy house? when thou seest the naked that thou cover him; and that thou hide not thyself from thine own flesh?"

Just what that last clause means I do not know, but all the rest is as clear as daylight on the subject of self-denial; that it is not to make ourselves miserable, but to make some one else happy. It is a denial of self, not for the sake of self, but for the sake of others. It is not asceticism in any form for its own sake, but asceticism, if it is necessary in order to help some one else. For instance, it means to take the least comfortable chair or the least inviting bit at table, not in order to mortify self, but simply and only that some one else may have the better bit or the more comfortable chair.

The truth is that we are all so absorbed in the idea of saving ourselves, that we make even that aspect of salvation which was meant to extinguish and annihilate self, the very means for prolonging its existence. We can not even sacrifice self for any other object than to exalt self the more finally; and any real generous, self-forgetful outpouring of self for others, seems to us a useless and quixotic thing.

We talk about "taking up the cross," and not have the first idea of what taking up the cross means. We think it means doing and enduring things that cause us to suffer, things we hate and would avoid if we could. Whereas, it really means being so dead to self that these disagreeable things do not hurt us; and being so "alive to God" that they really become pleasures to us. It means putting self to death on the cross, not keeping it alive. And the self-denial that springs from this divine idea of the cross, will be a real denying of the claims of self in every form, as of the claims of a dead and hated thing. It means shutting the door promptly in face of self at its very first approach, and a contemptuous assertion, "I do not know you and am not interested in you, and will not give you a single farthing's worth of attention or consideration."

This sort of self-denial makes people lovely to live with, for it leads them to think of and consider the claims of others, since they have none of their own to consider; and it makes it easy and quite natural for them to pour out their lives in serving those around them. I think Miss Waring expresses it better than any one else in these two lines:

"A heart at leisure from itself
To soothe and sympathize."

The household where any member of it has a heart really "at leisure from itself," possesses a treasure richer than all the gold of Ophir.

And to that heart itself will come a far more abundant reward than it could ever have dreamed of. "Then shall thy light break forth as the morning, and thine health shall spring forth speedily; and thy righteousness shall go before thee; the glory of the Lord shall be thy rearward. * * * And the Lord shall guide thee continually, and satisfy thy soul in drought, and make fat thy bones: and thou shalt be like a watered garden, and like a spring of water, whose waters fail not."—Isa. 58: 8, 11.

All this is promised to the soul that keeps the "fast which God has chosen."

And all this and far more in a spiritual sense becomes the portion of that soul now who knows and lives a life of true, divine self-denial.—Mrs. H. W. Smith in Union Signal.

OUR thanks are due to many friends, both sisters and brethren, who have aided us in our efforts for the Hope, by the sale of the "Witnesses." One sister while upon a short visit to friends, sold twenty copies, and both sisters and elders are ordering them by the dozen. We do hope that their best reward will be in seeing the paper made all they could desire it to be.

We are in receipt of letters from Sister May, Cora Russell, Eva M. Bailey, Frances Emmett and Flora Hannah.

THE ROOT OF THE NATION.

Before nation or State or tribe comes the family, says the New York Independent. The only security for a well governed State is well governed families. It is in the family that the coming citizen or ruler comes to learn how to rule by learning how to obey. One is not fit to rule until he has learned thoroughly how to obey. This is the beauty about military discipline, that it teaches absolute, unquestioning obedience. We understand that it is not simply the fatherly care of God that makes the figure or the family appropriate as embracing him and his children, but also the obligation of honor and obedience which we, as his children, owe him. He says, "If I am a father, where is my honor?" If it be true, as sometimes said, that respect for parents in dying out in this country, then patriotism will die out and religion will die out. A firm but affectionate family government, which really controls children, keeps them off the street and out of vicious society, and which commands them to walk after their parents in obedience to God, must be maintained or we are lost.

ARMSTRONG, Kansas, Sept. 15th.

Dear Sisters in the Lord:—Seeing so many nice, encouraging pieces in the "Mother's Home Column," I feel that I would like to pen you a few thoughts. About three years ago, I was attacked with kidney disease, and when almost desponding over it, I felt that if I could move the sympathy of God, I could be healed. I thought upon what I heard the Spirit of God tell my mother when she was afflicted, which was "To observe the Word of Wisdom." But sometimes it would seem to be such a great sacrifice that I was afraid to undertake it, and at other times it would seem to me that it was not great enough to expect to be healed through. But, at last, I took the "Yoke upon me," and truly found the burden lighter than I had expected. And through this simple means I realized health and strength. And since that time I have received more power in prayer, especially in case of sickness, than I ever could, if I had not kept it. And, although I have been opposed for holding up this light, especially by those who had received and borne testimony to it and then turned away from it; yet I find that God's promises are true, and nothing can obliterate them. And I am afraid, dear sisters, unless more attention is paid to God's word in this, the "Temporal salvation" of his people, that many will be cut off when the destroying angel is sent among the wicked. And now, as many as have received the light of God's Spirit on this matter, should be careful that it may not be turned into darkness, for "behold, how great is that darkness." Your sister,

FRANCES EMMETT.

I HAVE often wondered if I could be of any service if I should enter the "column," and the only answer that presented itself was, "Try." We live a long way from any Saints. I have not seen one except my husband for two years; but we are in hopes that in the near future some Elder will come and break the bread of life to the dying sons of men. We are trying to raise our three little ones for the Lord, but it is very discouraging when we think of their associates at school; but with the help of God, and with that only, we can teach them to "Be not overcome with evil, but overcome evil with good."

We have had a very good receipt for making bread, and as the sister did not give her way of making yeast, I will give you mine. Take one cup mashed potatoes, one half cup flower, one tablespoonful salt and one of sugar, water enough to make a thin batter; stir in a little yeast to start it; this will keep three days in warm weather and two weeks in cold. I will close.

Your sister in Christ,

MAY.

CAMERON, Mo., August 17th.

Dear Sister Frances:—The Mothers' Home Column, is indeed, a source of great comfort and encouragement to me, and I don't believe there is anything printed in the Herald that is read by the majority with as great satisfaction as it is. My heart is often made glad while reading it, for I am satisfied that many things written in it have been inspired, and have been given for the benefit of the mothers and sisters in the church. But sisters, if we do not remember the good advice and wise counsel we have received, and profit by it, the reading alone will not be of very great benefit to us; for it is not what we read but what we remember, and put into practice, that will be the greatest benefit to us or any one else. There is one thing that is, I fear, neglected by many of the tired and over-worked mothers in the church, which would prove a blessing to them and their little ones also, that is, reading the Bible and Book of Mormon, also the Doctrine of Covenants. I think that all who obey the gospel in its fullness, should be able to give a reason for the hope that is within them; and in order to teach their children they must study and seek wisdom and understanding from God. We may think we can not spend time to read when we have so many household duties to perform, but I think this is one of the duties that is quite as essential, and far more beneficial to ourselves and to others, than very many things that are done about the house which take hours to perform. It has been said, and I believe there is some truth in it, that if every person would read (and meditate) one half hour every day in the Bible, they could not help being Christians. I do not believe any of us can read the word of God too much, if we remember what we read; and how much more good can be accomplished if we only begin while young. The memory of the past often brings with it many regrets. Now I can partially realize what I have lost through neglecting to read the word of God while I was young, instead of reading so much that was of no benefit whatever. May our kind Father give us wisdom, also an earnest desire to use the precious moments which He gives us here, in that way that will prove in the end, the greatest good to all; is my prayer

VALPARAISO, Ind., Sept. 12th.

Dear Friends of the Herald:—Many of us might be stronger in the faith, if we would but put forth a little more energy and have more confidence in our own work. Sometimes I think it is better to be this way than to be too fast with our thoughts. It is best for us to consider well before we act; but too many quench the Spirit, which the Scripture says we should never do. We all have a certain work to do; so let us rejoice in the good work of the Lord and battle manfully on for the right. We should feel proud, if we ever do, to think and know that we were ever led to know the truth in its purity; also, that we may be able, if we will, to teach and help others to do the right. Time is passing by very swiftly and we should not stop to complain, but work on with willing hands.

My brother Cole and myself are the only two left of our family circle. Our parents both died when we were small boys, but well do I remember my parents before they joined the Latter Day Saints church. What a change, I can not forget. We two boys have been thrown out into the world as it were, but we both joined the church before our parents died, and what the whole world might say, ought not and I believe will not turn us against this good work. Although I have been seemingly still in the work of Christ, my thoughts have been greatly directed toward the work I should do in the future. For the past six years my brother and I have been working our own way through school. We have been much discouraged at times, when we have had to work so very hard to gain an education. Both of us have been here at the Normal for about four years in all, inside of six years. We have, and have had many friends while in school, for which we are very thankful. Cole is now in Rock Island county, Ill., expects to teach school there this winter. I expect to leave this place the 14th of this month, to Illinois also, but I am undecided how long I will remain there.

My object, while in school, has not been to see how high I could get in the line of education, but it has been to prepare myself for usefulness in life; whatever my work may be in the future, I desire to do that well and it not only be a credit to myself, but also to my fellow beings. I think it the duty of every young person to fit himself for the life's work which is before him. We as Latter Day Saints must not expect great blessings unless we do our part first. We must ourselves be wide awake, with willing hands to do and prepare ourselves for life's actions. Times are demanding this of us, young brothers and sisters; therefore let us awake from our slumbers, put on our coat of armor and work for that which is good, and blessings will be our reward. I think it makes no difference how much we ask the Lord to help us in life; unless we are faithful to our work and put forth our greatest efforts to do our share, we need not look for blessings; this the Lord will do, if we only prove faithful to his commandments which are before us.

Since I have been in school, I have taken the Herald and the Hope most of the time, although I am not taking the Hope at present. They have been very welcome visitors to me, for I have not heard any Saints' preaching since I have been in school only through the Herald. O how my heart longs to be with the Saints. I feel the need of the prayers of the Saints, that my brother and I may prove faithful to the end of our lives' work, so that it may be said of us, "well done, thou good and faithful servants."

After so long a siege in school, I feel the need of money, but however, I will send one dollar for the benefit of the Zion's Hope, trusting that my little mite will do much good toward the upbuilding of Zion. I feel glad that I have been so saved from the wicked ways of this world and hoping to meet you all beyond the veil.

CLEAR LAKE, Ind., Sept 27th.

Bro. Joseph: Prospects are bright in this section. I am continually on the move. Have been holding a series of meetings eight miles south of Fremont, in an entire new place, and had large and attentive audiences. You may expect good news from there ere long. Have appointments out for three different points this week. October 4th I am billed for Antwerp, Ohio, to hold forth till the 16th. Health good; spirits ditto. On the 19th inst. I preached a funeral sermon to an immense crowd of people, including seven preachers. O dear, how they did squirm while I set forth the hope of the Saints. In bonds,

B. V. SPRINGER.

INDEPENDENCE, Mo., Sept. 22d.

Dear Herald:—I have been a constant reader of your pages since I united with the church eighteen years ago. I then received the evidence from God that the Reorganization was a tree of God's own planting. I have received much instruction from the Herald, and would not have been able to learn God's will concerning his children without it. And while I received so much spiritual food and instruction, I confess that I as a standard bearer have been slothful in contributing to your pages.

When I united with the Church I received such a testimony that, from that day until to-day there has not a doubt come in my mind, nor a stumbling block in my path, and I could as easily doubt my existence as to doubt the position that we occupy as an organization. I have rejoiced greatly over some of the actions of our last General Conference; in fact, to me, it was the best conference we ever held. Whereas God raised the ensign to all the world in 1830, it was at the 1886 conference that those who were called to unfurl the blood stained banner of King Emanuel should take their stand either for or against that which God had revealed and established. And as Bro. Joseph preached in regards the watchmen seeing eye to eye, those who were on high were lowered, and those in the low places were raised; and my soul rejoices that now we are more able to see eye to eye.

After conference I again met with the Saints at St. Joseph, preached twice for them, was pleased to see them so nicely established, and the good Spirit that prevailed among them. I have preached round about Zion as best I could, with some visible good results. By request went to Armstrong, and there I ordained Bro. Joseph Emmett to the office of an Elder. The Spirit's promise is, that if he continued to be humble he will be of excellent service in the army of the Lord. Preached once for the Hedrickites upon the Revelations which they reject. A good spirit prevailed, and we trust that good will result. On the 3d I preached near Richmond, Ray Co. I met Bro. Booker, Pres. of Central Missouri District, who took me with his team to Wakanda. Stayed there nine days and preached eleven times. During these meetings the speaker as well as hearers were blessed; and some not of the fold were brought nigh unto the kingdom, so that they were able to see and comprehend the truth. While there we had invitations to other places, which we will try and comply with in the future. We consented to return in three weeks. We went to Norborne and made partial arrangements for meetings there in a future day. It is a new field. There has been no preaching there except the funeral sermon by Bro. Luff. I also visited the Saints at Carrolton. There are some good people there who have it in their hearts to do right and keep all the commandments of God except one; St. John 13:34. I then went to Moberly and visited with my brother. He belongs to the Lutheran Church. Last Sunday I preached for the Saints in Kansas City. There are but few Saints there, but they are getting along very well, have a nice little church house of their own in which they have preaching every Sabbath. Every thing seems to move along pleasantly in Zion, and that makes us rejoice.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., Sept. 22d.

Bro. W. W. Blair: We are doing quite well in our city. I had the honor of baptizing three last Sunday, the first I have led into the water. In the evening, with the assistance of Elders William Potter and Charles a Parkin, we confirmed them members of the church. The Spirit was present in power, especially while our hands were upon the head of George T. Andrews, son of our departed brother T. J. Andrews; and we could feel its sweet, hallowed influence burning within us, while choice blessings were being pronounced upon him, and his future work being foretold by the Spirit, by the mouth of Elder Parkin. Oh, how we love this latter day work while the Spirit of God is upon us; and how we praise his name for the many times he has witnessed unto us that we are still his children and our works accepted by him.

We are growing more united in our branch, enjoy more of the Spirit than ever, and the members seem more willing to take hold and do their duty. Our meetings are well attended, and quite a number are interested in our claims, and are investigating them. We look for more to be added to our branch soon. The future outlook for our cause seems bright here, and we are becoming better known. The Expositor is a great help to us and is advertising us wonderfully. It draws many to our meetings, where they learn the difference between truth and error. Our field in this city is large, and we are in great hopes of yet making an honorable showing of labor done and fruit gathered. May God bless every effort made for the advancement of his glorious cause.

TEHICHPA, Cal., Sept. 17th.

Dear Brother Heman:—If you, or any others in this mission, can find time to stop at this place, you will find a welcome with me. If you will send me a card we will meet you at the depot, and will try to get a place for you to preach. The gospel has never been preached at this place to knowledge of any one living here. There was a Methodist preacher who has been holding forth until within the past two months; he could get no converts (or convicts) and no congregation, except a few women and small children; he got discouraged and quit. We have a very good climate here and good land; the amount of grain raised here this year was about 1,200 pounds, and of hay 3 000 pounds per acre.

Your brother in the one faith,

M. HAWLEY.

LAMONI, Iowa, Sept. 23d.

Editor's Herald:—Bro. Duncan Campbell, of Pleasanton, Iowa, has been doing good service for the cause this summer, in the regions round about his home. He has experienced no difficulty in finding plenty of work to do, and people who would listen to the word of life. And in addition thereto he has witnessed with pleasure such an increasing demand for the preaching of the word, that he was, and is, by himself, unable to supply it. Some have thought the restricting of missionaries to a smaller range of territory to be one of the dangerous innovations of latter times. I do not so regard it. In this case, at least, it has worked well, and we have strong reasons for believing that Bro. Campbell has accomplished more good with much less expense than had he traveled over a wide range of territory. In his labors he has certainly been blessed of God.

Friday, September 10th, found me at the "Rager Springs House," in Mercer county, Missouri, and three miles from Lineville, Iowa, in company with brethren Campbell and Greer. Brother Campbell had previously received an invitation from the "Higgins Brothers," proprietors of the hotel, to hold meetings in the grove near by the hotel and springs. He had also made arrangements to begin at this time at four p.m. I spoke a short time to a small congregation. We soon learned that the meetings had not been well advertised, and that the people were busy putting in wheat. The next day at 10:30 a.m., brother Campbell spoke to a very few, on the principle of love, as set forth by the Great Teacher. His remarks were timely and good.

On Sunday we held two services, at 10:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m. The attendance was very fair, and the interest good. As Bro. Campbell's voice is not well adapted to speaking in the open air, it fell to my lot to fill both appointments. The Lord was with us, fulfilling his promises, and we all felt to rejoice. We left two appointments for Sunday, September 19th.

From the next Tuesday till over Friday, we held evening meetings in the town of Pleasanton, headquarters of the Pleasanton branch. The attendance was small; many of the surroundings somewhat untoward, and some things which had to be met and coped with—peculiar and strong! How pleasant it would be (?) if we were required only to preach that which pleases the Saints and the world! When we wanted to talk about practical duty, which, by the way, is pretty certain to hit somebody, why we could just "preach against the Jews, they haven't got a friend in town!"

Dear Saints, let us so live that when the grand provisions of God's word, which require work and sacrifice at the hands of all his people, (not the ministry alone, for God's ways are equal), are presented to us, our souls will not want to rise up in rebellion against them. Feeling well towards the Pleasanton Saints, and trying to comprehend the situation as well as we could, we felt satisfied with the work done, and thankful to God for another valuable experience in favor of the work. If we labor alone for the glory of God and the salvation of the people, we labor not in vain; and he who does this, does only what is common duty of all who have been called into the ministry of Jesus Christ.

Sunday found Bro. Wm. Anderson and wife, Greer and wife, Bro. James Anderson, Owen Hall (a kind friend), Sr. Nellie Hall and myself, at the "Mineral Springs," ready to worship God in the grove, and fulfill our engagement as the Lord might give us strength. We drove three teams a distance of eleven or twelve miles, and with one exception, reached the Springs in good time for the eleven o'clock service. The attendance was good, interest splendid, and more than ordinary liberty was enjoyed in presenting the word. The interest created by these few meetings is more than I shall attempt to describe. It was hard to get away from the people. It is well, that in the midst of this hard struggle against darkness and sin, we enjoy seasons of deliverance, liberty and power. Though they last but for a short time, they are sufficient for this probationary state, and they serve to cheer and rest our tried spirits, leave us without excuse before God for not properly caring for his work. They also tend to confirm the divinity of the work in the minds of others, and if we struggle on faithfully to the end, we shall be permitted to enter into an uninterrupted enjoyment of never-ending bliss.

Bro. Greer worked with us in all these meetings, taking active charge of the singing, and was blessed in his labors. The last meetings held on these grounds were opened and closed by Bro. Wm. Anderson, and the good Spirit was with him. The proprietors, together with the owner of the house and springs, treated us kindly from beginning to end.

From what was seen, heard and felt, there can be no doubt but what the word spoken was generally well received. And we have this consolation, that no prestige was gained, or favor secured, by shunning to "declare all the counsel of God." We felt that we needed, and therefore sought, the Master's help, that we might be able to declare the gospel in its beauty and plainness.

Allow me to express an opinion concerning an article in a late Herald—I mean the one under the caption of "May the Seventy's Preside." In my opinion the writer has shown himself to be equal to his task, and has manifested a careful and impartial study of the revelations of God relating to the varied duties of the ministry of the Church of Jesus Christ.

Yours for the establishment and spread of the truth.

JOSEPH R. LAMBERT.

COOKS POINT, Texas, Sept. 17th.

Dear Herald:—Since last writing you, I have labored in Robertson, Brazos, Burleson, Bell, McLellan, Lampasas and Burnett counties. The result is, fourteen more were added to our Master's kingdom. All are heads of families. Opposition is strong in some places. We may have to test our grounds in some places before long. The religious priests are doing all they can to stop the monster (Mormonism) as they call it, but have failed to do so. In some places the spirit of mobocracy runs high, it being encouraged by the hired priests, who are warning the people against us. The Lord has blest me with strength to stop some of their mouths, and others would share the same fate, if I could get close enough to them; but catching is before hanging. Our quarterly conference came off the 11th and 12th inst., and truly we were all blessed of the Master; the good Spirit bearing witness with our spirits that we are the children of God. Yes, it was with us in our business meetings, preaching and prayer meetings; all were good. Reports from brethren Hyde and Robinson were encouraging. Never was the work more promising than now. In many parts of this mission the branches that I have been with are in good condition. I am now getting ready to visit the Saints in the southern part of Texas. Bro. J. A. Currie, jun., will go with me. He is a young man, but full of the Spirit of Christ, and is an able defender of the truth, which was proved a short time ago while in Bell county,—a Rev. Mr. Sewell of the Christian order, made a public attack on the doctrine of Christ, no doubt thinking he could have his own way; but thanks be to God, Johnnie was armed with the word of God, backed up with the Holy Spirit, and the victory was a complete one in favor of truth.

Brother Hyde is gone north to look after the work there. He is a faithful man; God bless him, is my prayer. Bro. Robinson is a wide-awake Elder, and is doing good work, preparing the way for others. Bro. S. P. Sherrill is also waking up some of Babylon's daughters. God bless you, Bro. Sherrill, go on. Brethren J. W. and J. A. Currie, jr., have been teaching the elementary principles of vocal music in Bell county, through July and August. They have removed a great deal of prejudice. I believe vocal music is a grand auxiliary to the work, and the opening up the way for the preaching of the truth. We are now trying to raise means for the purchasing of a tent, to be used in the South Western Mission, for the purpose of preaching the gospel. I am satisfied that it will be the means of our reaching cities and towns, that we can not reach otherwise; because we have no houses to preach in. I suggested this enterprise at our last conference, and I am glad to say it met with universal approval. Myself and Bro. Wm. Sherrill were appointed a committee to solicit means, and make the purchase of said tent. All Saints, who are interested in this great work, and who feel in their hearts to aid us in this enterprise, will correspond with either of the above named committee, at Cooks Point, Burleson county, Texas. Come Saints, one and all, and give us your help, and God will bless us all. There is now subscribed $57.50. This was raised on the conference grounds. I am glad to see the work of God increasing. I am as ever, yours in bonds,

I. N. ROBERTS.

AMITY, Mo., Sept. 6th.

Dear Herald:—The brother referred to in September 4th number as not believing my statement that Jesus, nor an apostle ever kept the Sabbath better than other days, or his thinking, "that both Jesus and the disciples did keep the Sabbath, and that a failure to have done so would have been a violation of the sanctity of God's command," is no evidence that I was wrong. And I hope that none will accept of my belief or his, as doctrine, unless it is substantiated by "the law and the testimony." Able ministers of the Seventh-day faith have so far failed to disprove my position, and I think the brother will also fail, for I have three books to bring as evidence accepted by him, and only one with the Seventh-day friends. Circumstances have caused me to give the matter in question very careful and prayerful consideration. I doubt not your statement in regard to his ability in matters that he has searched out; but to my mind it certainly shows want of scriptural research when he claims also that "the law of Moses, including circumcision, did not cease to be in force till Jesus was crucified," when Jesus, quoting from the law, positively in effect, forbids its observance, (see Matt. 5: 38-48); and why? Because of its imperfection, having been received under the Levitical Priesthood, (Heb. 7: 11). And Jesus, being sent a great High Priest, at once condemns that law, "finding fault with them," and proceeds to change it, giving a perfect law instead thereof, telling them to be perfect even as God was perfect. "For the priesthood being changed, there is made of necessity a change also of the law." (Heb. 7: 12). Matthew, chapter 5, tells us when this law was changed. Were both the imperfect and the perfect law in force from that time? If so, they could serve two masters. That "the perfect law" was in force from that time is evident from the fact that an imperfect law could never enable them to become perfect, as Jesus exhorted them. Again; Christ's law, then given, "shall judge them in the last day." (John 12: 48). In another place he forbids observance of Moses' law, and enjoins upon the Pharisees the better law, that which was "from the beginning." He says that, because of the hardness of their hearts, Moses gave them such a law. (Matt. 19: 3-9).

The brother's next claim that Jesus said, "Wherefore, it is lawful to do well on the Sabbath day," did not mean that the law was no longer in force, but only gave a proper definition of its design, and confirmed its binding authority, is also unscriptural; for its design is made so plain in the law that it will admit of no other definition, "In it thou shalt not do any work." Sons, daughters, servants, strangers, nor cattle. (Ex. 20: 9, 10). They must do all their work in six days. "Whoever doeth any work in the Sabbath day shall surely be put to death." (Ex. 31: 15).

For gathering sticks (no doubt to kindle a fire) they were put to death. (Num. 15: 32).

We have shown there was a change made in the law—this was not only in the judgments, but also in the constitutional law, which said, "Thou shalt not kill; but I say unto you," &c. Read the change made in Matthew, chapter 5, &c. "Thou shalt not commit adultery; but I say unto you," &c. This is another and a higher law.

We have no account of all Jesus' teachings here. If he quoted the old time saying—"keep the Sabbath holy"—no doubt he said, "Keep every day holy—do good on every day, and evil on none." Hence he tells them, when continually harrassing him for working on the Sabbath, that he was Lord also of the Sabbath day, (Matt. 12: 8; Mark 2: 28; Luke 6: 5), that he gave them that day, was ruler of that day, and had the right to work upon that day. If he "confirmed its binding authority," why did he work that day, and "break the Sabbath"? (John 5: 17, 18). The truth is, that law ended with Christ's ministry. Jesus said he came to fulfill the law. Therefore it hath an end. (Book of Mormon, page 451). Why did it end? Because Jesus came to fulfill it. When was that time? When he first began his ministry. (Matt. 5: 17). "The law that was given to Moses hath an end in me; behold, I am the law and the light." (Book of Mormon, 45). When did Moses' law have an end in him and he become the law and the light? As soon as he came to fulfill and give a better law. He was then the light. (John 1: 4). Hence he tells them, "The law and the prophets were until John; [not after that]; since that time the kingdom of God is preached and all men press into it."—Luke 16: 16.

Jesus was from that time, the "law and the light,"—or the gospel of the Kingdom was. Compare this with Book of Covenants, 83: 4, where it says that the lesser Priesthood and the Law of Carnal Commandments (Moses' law), continued among the children of Israel till John, whom God raised up, and was ordained by an angel to overthrow the kingdom of the Jews, and to make straight the way of the Lord. This does not mean the temporal kingdom, for that was already overthrown by the Romans, but their priestly authority which had remained amongst them, to minister the law. And this overthrow and "disannulling of the commandment going before, for the weakness and unprofitableness thereof," (Heb. 7: 18), was before, and to prepare them for Jesus' ministry. See the beautiful harmony of the three books—witnesses. See also Gal. 3: 19-29, where the law was only until Christ. As soon as "the faith" had come, they were no longer under that law. Faith was had in him by John the baptist, and others with him. Paul said the ministration of the law written and engraven in stones gave way to the gospel ministration. (2d Cor. 3: 7-12). Two such antagonistic laws could not exist together.

I would not detract from the glory of Moses or his law—that first covenant—but it "waxed old," decayed, and "vanished away" before the surpassing beauty, grandeur, and glory of the ministration of righteousness as presented in the first sermon of the Great Mediator of the New Covenant; and it will take more than the opinion of any man, let him be ever so able, to move me from this faith. With respect for the belief of all, I remain your brother and co-laborer in the gospel.

SERMON BY PRES. J. SMITH, OF LAMONI, IOWA,

Delivered at the Saints' Chapel, Lamoni, Iowa,
April 11th, 1886.

[Reported for the Herald and prepared by the Editor].

I HAVE chosen as a theme this morning, one in the interest of which we all have a part. One that in its reach is wide, and in its significance, sooner or later, of infinite importance to us, as your speaker regards it. One of much controversy. One upon which various conclusions have been reached by different individuals and classes of individuals. And while presenting the thoughts that shall be presented to your speaker concerning this subject, it ought to be understood, and I presume will be, that no personal reflections are intended, and that no invidious comparisons are to be supposed. It happens that in the discussion of any and all mooted questions upon which differences of opinion exist that are widely apart, more or less of those who discuss them and who listen to the discussion of them, are so constituted that their feelings lie near the surface; and we are largely creatures of emotion, and frequently mistake sentiment for the decisions of the judgment. While your speaker would not be willing to risk his salvation upon a religion of sentiment only, he is not willing to risk his salvation upon a religion of judgment only; but that in all vital questions affecting human destinies, the relation between sentiment and judgment, or what is known as the results of conscientious reasoning from acknowledged bases, is and should be so intimate, that there could not be a divergence between them in any individual which should long remain unsettled, so far as his religious convictions are concerned; for he who created man has created likewise his physical nature, and has commanded his spiritual nature; the same has fixed the realms of reason in which man can safely operate, and himself has set the secret springs from which arise the sentiment, and the whole being conjoined together must ultimately answer to its creator. One of the difficulties that your speaker labored under in an early day of his life, was precisely that under which many a man is laboring now, and that was the endeavor to separate the spiritual from the physical man in a religious sense, by which the two should stand identified, apart, separate and distinct the one from the other, and make the one serve God, and let the other serve the devil, or human interests only.

It seemed to him then, and it seems to him now, after years of such deliberation and consideration as he has been able to give to the subject, whether those years be poor or rich in their labor or fruit, that one mistake which the world is making to-day, and one that largely affects all classes of religionists, is the endeavor to keep up this supposed identification of the two natures of man, separately the one from the other; with his spiritual nature to serve God unto salvation, and with the flesh, or with the physical man still continue his condition in the world and serve the interests of the world alone. It has also seemed to him that somewhere in creation, at all events somewhere in the designs of the Almighty, at the time of the creation or since the creation, there should have been some means devised by which there could have been brought to bear upon human hearts such an influence that the whole nature of man might be involved in the controversy, and the being prepared to serve God faithfully, in his spiritual and in his physical nature conjoined in one. That both might be made to serve God if God's service was demanded of the individual, and through this service there might be complete emancipation ultimately from the laws under which the spiritual nature of man has been compelled to serve in this probationary state, and afford the individual a triumph which should give both satisfaction, peace and glory. I may be told that this means has been accorded unto man in Christ. If it be permissible for me to grant the statement that it is in Christ that this means is found, there remains the question as to how this means may be made to affect the individual. I believe that when this statement is made, it involves the whole ground of controversy, the whole ground of religious controversy between what we have called classes of religionists to-day. We all agree that Christ may be the means which has been instituted of God, so far as an individual personating that means or that influence by which this reconciliation of these two natures that may be found in man is to be brought to pass, is concerned. And once when an individual charged upon this body in open attack before a ministers' assembly, one of the reasons why he made objection to what was called Mormonism, was because that it did not have any Christ in it, or did not base the salvation of the human family upon faith in Christ, it was successfully answered by one of the representatives of this body, also publicly, and shown distinctively, that so far as Christ was concerned, we were not only wheeled into line with all Christians so far as the salvation of the human family could be possibly effected by Christ; but that there was such a joint relation between the three books which had been accepted by the church, that Christ was found, not only as the underlying base upon which human destinies might rest individualised in the mind, but that the idea of Christ was absolutely crystalized, and made the center and circumference of this system of religion. But when this is done it does not end the controversy, because there remains the question as to the application of the remedy. You may have ten thousand times ten thousand remedies for a disease that I may be affected by; but before those remedies or any one of them shall be made efficacious to relieve from the influence of that disease, those remedies, or some one of them, must be brought to bear upon me in such a way that the disease itself is reached, or that the dormant energies which have been destroyed by the action of that disease operating upon my system shall be aroused, and the disease thrown off. You may serve me with physicians until I can scarcely breathe; they may carry medicine chests until they groan with the weight of them, and I may die of that disease which is afflicting me unless by reason of some wisdom within these, or by some philosophy which has been taught in the systems which they practice, they can reach the disease which I am suffering under. This sin-sick world is surrounded partially with a great many spiritual doctors, and they are absolutely loaded down with remedies for the disease which is afflicting this sin-cursed world, and they are quarreling about the application of the remedies which they have, and all are respectable when they are for the accomplishment of the end had in view; and we are engaged in the quarrel too.

I present you this morning the subject of discussion and of these thoughts in two words. I might have added a third one, and possibly shall do before the examination is concluded. Those two words simply are, The Church. I ask the question, What is it? Who can tell? If it is to be answered from one standpoint, it is this: It is a mythical, invisible, and yet concreted force in existence, which is to accomplish something for the human race, and under the operation of which individuals are brought into relationship with each other, both here and hereafter; here in a conflict between the influences of sin, the disability of man, weakness physical and spiritual; in the day which is to come, the hereafter, in a state of absolute beatification or glorification, in which the individual shall not only be free from contact with these things which now degrade and destroy, but shall absolutely come into such a condition, that they will not and can not affect them, provided they were present with them. I may possibly have overdone that statement; but if you will take the whole history of this religious controversy from the very first, you will discover that that must have been one of the underlying reasons, one of the underlying principles upon which the church has been ever based.

I am not disposed to quarrel about technicalities with any man; yet it must be conceded that with everything which we can possibly have and enjoy, there is a principle within itself; and if we can but get at the central figure, or the central thought or principle, we may disabuse ourselves of all the superfluities which men may put upon that principle.

We may strip it of all the verbiage with which it has been covered; we may strip it of every particle of dust which it has gathered from the ages in which the principle may have been before the world or recognized among men; and yet if we answer the question from one standpoint, we must answer it this way:—It is an organization in which this particular principle named as an underlying force may be made manifest and developed. That when the principle is manifested and developed, individuals shall be permitted to pass into connection with this organization, that they may have this influence at work upon them; and that when this shall have been done, it shall work out for them just what has been designed in the sending of Christ as the means, and the church as the instrument adopted by Christ in which he proposes to make this application unto the souls of men. I believe the latter answer is the true one. I will give you some of the reasons why. When Christ came as the extraordinary ambassador from God, he made the statement to those unto whom he presented himself, that he came there to do his Master's work, that work which the Father had assigned him to do. The very expression work, and Christ's connection with work, intimates that there should be organized effort at work, because that the individual himself traversing the earth as a man could by no possibility affect as an individual all them that were supposed to be affected by him in doing this work which he had been commissioned to do, consequently it became absolutely necessary for the development and accomplishment of that work which he was sent to do, that he institute a means, or secure instruments to go out unto the accomplishment of the end for which he was sent. Second, that it must have been known to this individual when he came as this extraordinary messenger, that there had been instruments chosen or preordained; not using the word preordained to signify that which was predestinated; and that in these instruments which had been so preordained by the divine economy which had sent him, there should be invested power to bind the individual who had been selected as the messenger for its development. You can not present Christ, and the church in connection with Christ, without presenting the power by which he shall accomplish his work, the means derived from his Father, or Jehovah who sent him. You can not preach an agent of any organization, of any power with which you are acquainted, without preaching the power, that principle which sent the agent.

The third reason is this: That when this messenger came, he came acknowledging that he was sent to accomplish a work against a power which was in the world which it was intended to destroy. He came for the purpose of overcoming and destroying him who had the power of death. If this had only been for a physical death, or for the accomplishment of the redemption of man from the physical death, it was wrought upon all men without effort upon their part; and the very fact that Jesus Christ as this royal messenger from God took upon himself a body that was subject to death, and by the influence of the power which had commissioned him so wrought while he was in the possession of that body, that he received power from that individual, or from the forces which sent him, to take that body from the grave, is indicative of the fact that he must necessarily make this redemption applicable to all flesh; and not only that, but it indicates to all flesh that there should be given power by which it could be redeemed just the same as was this one. Or to place it in another form, if there is to be a redemption from the grave of that which has been for and to man, the physical body, it must be granted unto man through this messenger Jesus Christ, and that by reason of the power which had sent him, and it must be available unto all men.

The fourth reason—and I will try and not elaborate at too great a length—is that when Christ came he came to wage war against an invisible enemy that he recognized was at work in the world. And that in this conflict he was endowed with extraordinary powers. Upon him rested the generalship of the entire forces both of nature and that were known to men, and of those forces of the Almighty, not known to man, over which man had no power. If all the powers of redemption, or the powers of conflict had been confided to man as man, then there had been no necessity for such a mission as that which Jesus was sent upon. If there were no powers which could not possibly be made subject to them, that is over which they may have had control, and they have redeemed themselves virtually, then there would have been no necessity for sending Christ, and the whole theory which has been builded upon Christ would have vanished away. In a recognition of this fact we see the necessity for the church as an arena in which the conflict may be made by associated individuals against these powers of evil, through delegated powers from him who was made this messenger, and as a consequence we have the secret underlying principle, the point recognized everywhere, the priesthood. Your speaker believes, and he does not state his view because he wants any individual member to be compromised by the statement, that it was for this express purpose that Jesus Christ was constituted a Priest after the order of Melchisedec forever, that it was delegated to him by his Father who is in heaven, and that he will answer for it at the end of the resurrection, when he shall stand by in the great judgment day, and certify that such and such persons were received by him out of the world by reason of their previous belief and trust in him, and through faithful servitude are fitted and prepared as acknowledged by him to receive just what the Father had promised to those redeemed—everlasting life.

Having reached so far in the controversy, making the inquiry as to what the church is, let me call your attention unto what must have struck some of you in the days of the past as it has struck me, and that is that when Christ came teaching, he should have selected individuals for the accomplishment of the will which may be said to be his will, and they thus chosen were to consider himself as the commissioner sent of God, and that his power was delegated to him. I will give you my idea in a quotation I think found in the seventh of Matthew—it may be in the seventh of John. It don't matter, you will recognize it, and if it is challenged we will find it.

"He only hath life in himself, and he hath given this life unto his son, and unto as many as his son may give it." In other words, this eternal life is in God, and that it is in his Christ by having been given unto him, and delegated by him unto whomsoever the Son will; and there is no promise that this eternal life shall be given unto any except those who shall believe in him. That is the promise. This gift of eternal life unto those who shall believe in him is spoken of in the New Testament Scriptures in this way: "Unto them who received him gave he power to become the sons of God." This shows the precise gift. The apostle recognizes the same principle when he makes the declaration: "Unto whomsoever ye yield yourselves to obey, his servants ye become." The gift, or "wages of sin is death; the gift of God is eternal life."

I acknowledge Christ as the center. He is the means by which God designs to regenerate the human family. In this effort to reconcile, or bring out the unity between the spiritual and the physical man, I also recognize that the instrumentality which is in Christ, must have been fitted for the accomplishment of this design. And if we recognise the church, we discover it certified to in the statement, "there were added to the church daily such as should be saved."

The church then is made the arena, one of the instruments through which the salvation of the children of men is effected. I presume there is not a single man before me that would dispute that thought in theory. I presume that all would acknowledge that principle existing as a part of the idea, and recognize it as a principle. If that be true, why is it, I ask it in the expectation that every person will answer it to himself if he can, why is it that it is not perfectly practicable that individuals are justified while they recognize that principle. I notice still further, if the instrumentality was appointed has been and still is in Christ, will it not be such as shall be recognized of him, first, last, and all the time, as his church. Think, and think closely before you answer that question even to yourselves; for let me warn you that it is a question asked for the purpose of entangling you, I give you warning beforehand. Just as soon as you answer this question affirmatively, right upon the footprints of that answer must come the question in, Where is that church? If you answer me that it exists in the world in an unorganized or chaotic condition, you answer me that God is not a God of order. You disannul the proposition that the first law of heaven is order. You can not find a single exception to this rule in any of the acknowledged creations of the Almighty, from the formation of the lichen unto the highest tree that points heavenward; from the smallest to the grandest; from the grain of sand to the earth itself, you will find all things completely in order, and compacted by order; and just as soon as you make a conclusion in your own mind, that the church, the instrument which is in Christ for the redemption of man, is in a chaotic and unorganized condition, you destroy at once that attribute of the Almighty which he has fixed upon all his creations, that is absolute in its nature, complete order, and organization.

This difficulty has met me all the years of my life. I would years and years ago have fain believed that every man and every woman who by reason of that underlying instinct, or what is called intuition, or by the decision of his own judgment and reason, should have chosen to do that which was good to his fellow men, should have been given indisputably a passport into the gates of glory, if I could have so believed! I tried, and tried to believe it. But just as soon as I started to follow out this particular thought, I was met at the threshold by difficulties which it seemed impossible for me to surmount. I could not conceive of the idea; that the creator of all things, who had so infused into all his creations this inter-dependent relation of order and organization, this inter-dependent relation, this co-existence of all things, should have left the spiritual realm unmarked by order. If this attribute did not exist, my confidence was destroyed in his power to redeem me. Hence it became a matter of personal interest to me, it became a matter of such personal interest to me, it was absolutely necessary that I should somewhere recognize that there had been something devised of God in which this attribute should be completely developed, manifested unto the children of men, for the absolute purpose of redeeming them from their sin-cursed condition. It seemed to me that there should have been something devised upon which every man should have the power as well as the liberty to define what the basis of his actions should be concerning his service.

In connection with this thought is this, that this instrumentality to be chosen of God should be of such a character that when it should be in existence it should be recognized of Christ, and that the manifestations of his recognition should be within the body called the church. Without an organization these manifestations are not to be found. Without an organization recognized of Christ in such a visible manner that the individuals of Christ's church, this great instrument for the accomplishment of this design, shall be permitted to identify themselves with Christ, identify themselves with the church, with such a conscious understanding of their relationship with the church and with Christ, as to be assured that they, if they continue to abide with him, shall be permitted to enter into all that is promised in the gift of God in giving Christ unto the world in all its completeness according to the order or rule in the places, or place, or conditions into which these men are tending. There is not one person, I do not care what his religious faith, nor what denomination he represents or with which he is associated; I think I am perfectly safe in making the assertion, that there is not one but when he thinks of heaven, thinks of a condition, or a place, in which absolute order and power are manifest; where there is organization; and the very heart that sings the song in which the angelic hosts are named, recognizes those hosts as beings subject unto some power by which they are created or permitted to exist as angels. And the idea of a place or condition, with a chaotic mass of identities without order and without organization is a thing of which man's brain is not susceptible of taking cognizance. Angels, archangels and seraphim, are found in methodical arrangement in the statements of the Old Testament Scriptures. All the grandeur with which the Jewish Scriptures have been invested, clothes the grand occupants of these heavenly regions with order; all of them are named and have a vocation when they are named, and are placed in the completest system of the nicest order of the grandest relation and inter-relation that can possibly exist between organized beings. Just by so much as these individuals bear a distinct relation to the power which controls them, by just so much are they manifestations of that control and that order and that power which must be found in the church, which is the means of redemption, or the instrument by which God proposes through Christ to effect the redemption of the human race.

If it be a fact that angels are to have wings, and if I am to become an angel, and there is no means given me by which I may develop wings, I will never be an angel. If angels do not have wings, but are created angels because of service by which they approve themselves unto him who has the power to make them angels, then if there is no means by which they may be fitted to enter into that condition in which we suppose the angels are, then neither you nor I will ever become angels. I see that in the church which is something more than it seems to me some others have seen. For I can not recognize them only as man-made institutions, and then believe that God who is the author and the finisher of our faith shall be compelled to respect the service of individuals in these associations by virtue of which they claim relationship with him. Unless he shall have given them the opportunity of entering into relationship with him by this means I can not believe that he is bound by it. Mankind will perhaps be the better that they have entered into relation with these organizations, have commended themselves unto the Father to be received by him; but when we come to use the term, The Church, it does not have the idea of the church in heaven. When we use the expression, Family of God in earth, we recognize the body which is in relationship with God, by whatever means they may have put themselves in relation with him. But when we use the term The Church we mean something, and that is this: something with which we may have an intimate relationship in the flesh. When we use the words, The Church, in connection with the statement, "There were added to the church daily such as should be saved," we carry the inference and the conclusion at once, that it was a church here existing among men that was recognized of Christ. Paul the apostle recognizes this when in the fifth of Galatians if my memory serves me right, he makes this statement, that Christ proposed to sanctify and cleanse the church, and present it unto himself without spot or wrinkle, a perfect church. This Christ proposed to accomplish, and present the church unto himself, but I can not possibly read that "the churches." I do not know that I can understand the apostle Paul when he presents a difficulty out of which he merges by making the statement, that God was in Christ reconciling the world unto himself; but I have never been able and can not now reconcile to my consciousness the idea that God was in Christ endeavoring to reconcile himself unto the world. And it must be thus; for I can not use the words "the churches," making them plural, and consider all the various organizations so called churches of Christ, as being the church of Christ, so diverse and dissimilar are they.

I present the thought here, and inject it for the purpose of the argument, and that is this: There has been a controversy in the world as before named, between the church and individuals. There always have been persons that have come into the church and have gone out of the church, some for one reason and some for another. Every act of dismemberment on the part of the church has been laid at the door of bigotry and intolerance and superstition. I have yet to learn that any man who has gone out of the church because of a difference of opinion between himself and the church, has ever been charged with intolerance, bigotry or superstition. I want to ask you the question, Why is it that in every act of expulsion, every act of dismemberment, every act by which a man has been dismembered from the church or body of Christ, from the days of Paul clear down to now, such person expelled has turned around and charged upon the body of assembled believers that they have been persecuting him, or that they have been filled with intolerance, or that their expulsion of him is very bigoted or superstitious. The body was simply unable to reconcile itself to the member's belief, and he has gone out. If this is true, I want to ask you if the principle is not the same when it is set forth in the mind of the individual who comes out of the church because he can not stand with the church by reason of a difference of belief between them, as well as it lies in the charge against the body politic who can not walk with the individual. Where is the difference? For instance, take those people who ceased to follow after Christ; take those individuals who forsook Paul in Asia; take those individuals who are named by him as going out from them, take them. The question of belief which marked those individuals who went out as heretics in the eyes of the church, also marked the individuals who remained in the church as heretics in the eyes of those who went out. Precisely. Hence when an individual arrays himself against me and my brothers in the flesh, and withdraws fellowship from us because of a difference of belief, does he not withdraw himself because the belief is a pernicious one in his judgment, and I and my brothers in the flesh are heretics? Of course it is. Now suppose the terms were reversed, and he being a member of the family by adoption and of the family by the flesh, we excluded him from fellowship because of something in him in which he believed differently from myself and my brothers in the flesh, is it because we considered him to be a heretic? Why yes. Where is the difference in the principle that underlies the two? I want you to think of it, and tell just what you think about it.

Some make use of this expression: This that you represent is a reform that has been going on in the Christian body from the first. Do you propose to reform that which has never been broken? It is impossible to talk about reformation unless there has been formation; and if that first formation had been perfect in its character, and had never been broken, then where is the necessity for a reformation? But says somebody, there has been a breaking up of that formation. Pray tell me when it took place. Why away back yonder in the mysterious past somewhere, this breaking up took place. Very well. If there has been a process of reformation going on all the time until now, is it not a reformation of a reformation, and the further it gets away the less it is like the primitive organization. Is not that true? Yes. If there be this process of reformation and reformation, these re-reformed organizations have so reformed themselves that they bear no distinct relation with each other. That which was, according to that proposition, the first formation has been reformed and re-reformed, as they have proceeded from the primitive organization, then what about the first formation? I will give you an illustration of this, one that I have often used. It is old to the most of you. A professor was addressing his class, and he made the statement that nothing was ever lost; if it was once created it always remained created. It never could be lost. After he had elucidated this idea to some extent he gave liberty for questions. One of the students asked him if he would allow him to ask him some questions, and he said yes. The student took out his knife and asked him what it was. He said it was a knife. Now, he says, you say nothing can be lost. This knife has three blades? Yes, sir. Suppose now after a while I break this blade off, is it the same knife? Yes, sir. I get a new blade put into it, is it the same knife? Yes, sir. After a while I break this blade out, is it the same knife? Yes, sir. I then break this one out, is it the same knife? Yes, sir. I get these blades replaced, is it the same knife? Yes, sir. Suppose after a while I lose this handle and retain the blades, is it the same knife? Yes, sir. Suppose I get these blades put into a new handle, is it the same knife? Yes, sir. Now, says he, suppose somebody finds the old handle and the old blades and puts them together, what knife will that be? I only do this for the purpose of illustration.

Now the question comes right home. There is to be found somewhere the ideal Church of Christ; that is to say, an organization which is to be recognized by Christ as being that that was in the days when he lived here, which is continued somewhere in existence, and is to be found out as triumphing away yonder in the good land toward which we are looking. There has been a falling away, a breaking up of the original formation, and it has been reformed and re-reformed until the particles representing the knife blades and the handle, have become so widely separated that they do not recognize each other as parts and particles of the original formation. So complete has been this disintegration that it is urged that there is now no absolute necessity for such a thing as the church, recognizing it as an organization; but that God recognizes the particles wherever they may be, and they represent the church.

When I look at that body beyond I do not mean the creeds of men, it is placed beyond the creeds. There will be a summing up of all the dispensations, and what is known as the Church of the First Born, the Family of God in heaven, shall be united with the family of God on the earth, and they shall be one people in God's hands, and God shall be their God henceforward and forever. Until this is accomplished this arena called the church must of necessity continue for the purpose for which it was sent; and if this reformation that we have spoken of has distinct relations which this church or organization did not bear unto the work for which it was intended at all, and that is not productive of the results intended by the instituting of that first formation, then there must come a time somewhere when he that sent Christ must either by himself, or by Christ himself, or those whom he has chosen to accomplish this work, must see to it that that church is restored. It is for the purpose that Christ, the head of the Church, may be made manifest, that his work unto the reconciling of the world unto himself may be accomplished, and fully accomplished. If I look out upon the world at the present time I regard it as significant. Those who may have made a profession of belief in Christ in church associations, are not reconciled unto themselves, how can they be reconciled unto God and Christ? How can they by the work of Christ be reconciled unto God? The work of reconciliation devolves upon the part of those away from him, not upon the part of God and Christ, who have not changed upon their part; not upon the part of the means by which he has designed that this reconciliation shall be effected, but upon the part of the individuals who shall comprise or constitute the church. Hence the idea of exclusion. If I propose to become identified with Christ as a member of his church I must put myself into relationship with his church through instrumentalities which himself has chosen; and if I can not find them, I can not find my way into the sheep-fold, of which you heard considerable spoken this morning; I do not desire to enter that now, but you will remember when Christ came to war against the powers of sin that he referred to this idea, and pointed out the way that we should war against any sin or power which we could not control. They are surrounding us upon every side; they underlie a great many of the crimes found amongst men; we are liable to fall into the evils around us. Danger is surrounding us upon every side, because sin and evil influences are at work which we can not war against successfully in our own strength. If there be no strength given us of Christ we can not accomplish our own redemption. If there is a power which has been accorded by Christ because he came to fight against these unseen forces, it must be a paramount power to that which we are battling against or we can never accomplish a successful warfare. This is the power of redemption. The Centurion was wiser than some who profess belief in Christ at the present time. He knew full well the powers that underlay this being which I am trying to present this morning, when he said, "I too am a man under authority, having soldiers and servants; and I say unto this man go here, and he goes; and I say unto that man come, and he comes; but speak the word," speak the word, "and my servant shall be healed." What did he mean by that? He meant to recognize Christ as the Lord of life, and as a consequence all that which ministered unto life was at the command of Christ. He was not only the Priest, having the visible priesthood delegated to bear upon the earth; but he was within himself the embodiment of the power of God against those forces that were at work in the evil world. And while this was the case he held in his knowledge and in his authority the right to use that power that redeemed his own person from the power and grasp of death. That power of Christ has not yet waned. If that force is to be made manifest, if according to that Jesus Christ proposes to revive his work in the world, to accomplish the redemption of men from the grasp of the adversary, Christ in his own forces is to do it. He will work with his children, and protect them, strengthen them, and give them power. And he has the right still to say unto the forces of life, Come from wherever you may come, from air, from earth, come from the waters above and the waters below, and minister unto this work and roll it along, and give them the power that lives here, and the power of the life hereafter. Preach Christ to me in any other sense than as holding the forces of life, the forces vital to the salvation of man, and your preaching is absolutely in vain. Preach Christ to me in such a manner as this I have presented and I can recognize him. Preach Christ to me as the Redeemer of the world; preach Christ to me as the author of the church; preach Christ to me as not only the author of the church, but as the benefactor of those who fight in this arena of the church, and the one who has constituted this church as the arena in which men may apply this means of redemption to themselves and fight the great fight against the powers of evil, and you can reach me, but if you do not preach Him in this way you can not.

I recognize the church as the arena of this conflict. For this reason I do not say to him that approaches me, however poor in spirit he may be, however sin-cursed or covered he may be, (unless he has consciously sinned against the Holy Spirit), I can not say to him stand aside, but I will make room for him upon the platform upon which I myself am fighting. If I can put a hand under any one that is failing in the fight of redemption, I am under necessity to do so. But if he proposes to go off this arena and fight his fight alone, I may labor with him, I may fight with him as long as he chooses to remain, but he having been endowed with that which he feels is better, he must go out and at the final settlement of consequences abide his act. I speak of this simply to justify that sentiment that while we stand together upon this arena, and fight against these unseen forces, we must fight the way God proposes, and according to the principles which he has imposed, or made binding upon man, like he has with us.

While fighting in this arena called the church, I recognize that all that can pertain to it, must be given of God through Christ. That all that is necessary for individuals, strength and moral power, must be accredited unto the individual as having been provided of Christ. But while there is in store every one of these forces, and they are open to the individual, he must put himself in a receptive condition in order that he shall have them. His conversion as ably presented by our brother there, must be in accordance with law; for unless he shall be converted by law, he will not be saved by law.

Again as a final thought in the consideration of this subject, I recognise that there is somewhere on this earth a church, that shall be seen and known as the Church of Christ. That there is in existence in the world outside of all other organizations and species of churches, so-called, the seed of the church, and these will answer unto the Shepherd's voice when they hear it. Wherever this element may be found, whether it be in the so-called churches, or whether it be at large outside of any church, there is he at work with them; and when the proper time shall come that Christ shall be presented to them as the means which God has devised for the redemption of the race, and the church shall be presented as the instrument through which this is to be effected, and the arena wherein the conflict between themselves and the powers of darkness shall take place, then will they hear the voice of the Good Shepherd, and obey that which it commands. But while men are engaged in presenting the church with such exclusiveness of thought, and there may be some of these from among ourselves, with such exclusiveness of character that they drive men from it, they are not saviors of their fellow men. While I shall rejoice that the gospel may be thus preached, it makes my heart infinitely more to rejoice, when I recognise Christ preached by his accredited servants in the full glory in which he proposes and in which he has proposed that they shall do it, as an assistance to their fellow men, to incite them to come up on this platform, into this arena, and themselves fight against the powers of evil, and to believe that Christ by his strange instrumentalities has put the forces of life at work for their help and guidance, their comfort and their control.

I preach Christ as I understand him. I speak of his application, not the application of the principle found in the common idea, but as Christ seems to have contemplated it, when he which holds all power sent them out and said hear them. To hear them is not to hear the ideal which only represents the idea, but is to hear and become converts to that which they present, and when hearing yield obedience to that by which they shall be accounted as the children of God by law, made the children of God through the law of adoption, through which they become heirs of everlasting life, when they shall be acknowledged by Christ in that day of judgment, when the great Judge shall sit and judge the whole world.

Now prepare yourselves for that judgment day. These thoughts I have presented, crudely it may be, but nevertheless sufficiently connected to give you an understanding of just what I am attempting to show—I am not particular about the dress in which they may appear if I get the idea sufficiently before you—may God sanctify to each that which each may receive, through the influence of the Spirit by which he shall be led into all truth.

MESSAGE GIVEN BY THE ANCIENT OF DAYS

ABOUT THE CHURCH AT UTAH TO HIS MESSENGER.

I AM by you, not because I wish to give any new commandment; but because I want to call attention to what already is well known. I do not want to dissolve but to build up and strengthen what already exists. I wish the people of Utah, and of the church of Messiah, to understand more fully the necessity of being of one accord in regard to what they have called the church of God. Joseph Smith was young and not experienced by any ripe age in earthlife,—even he was an inspired prophet,—and it caused much vibration in the church at his days, and his premature death, which was all the legal consequence of his want of caution and not of courage. He did not entirely absorb the idea that the government of the church is a spiritual power to be exercised over all nations, and not a power of this world, nor a principality after the world's pattern. Therefore, he had the pain to see the church driven out from Independence Mo., and from Nauvoo; therefore, he had to fight and contend with the political power of the world; therefore has the same spirit been pursued at Utah, and things and affairs have got into a focus, and fight is going on.

The government of this earth has a right to exist, and the church has a right to exist; but each one on its own platform. Collision is not necessary, when each remains at each (in its Ed.) own domain; as once has been told you to render that to God, what is to be rendered him, and to the world, what has to be rendered to the world. In that respect there can be no collision, and the church has no legal right from heaven to override the governments of the earth, nor has this government such liberty given it from above. The contest at present, headed with the fight about polygamy, has the church forced upon the United States Government, as the church intended to compel the people of the United States to recognize polygamy, a recognition very arbitrary as a command to legislate on. No such power can be invested, or has been invested in the church, nor has the church any such command from heaven to preach polygamy as an institution to be recognized of the world, which in fact must appear as such by claiming it to be recognized by the congress of the people. This is the bottom of the evil from which there is no outlet but defeat or retreat. If the priesthood were wise men in the wisdom of heaven, something they claim to be, they would at once discover that they have gone too far, and would be willing to retreat in good order. Good order would be wisdom, as a state against a state within a state is disorder in that state, and rebellion in the heart of the government. All and every government must fight the battle of self-defence, or be broken asunder.

It was not intended that the church of God on earth should be annihilated within and amongst a free people as this government represents; therefore, was the church organized here, and the gospel has been preached and believed and established here. There is laying the great failure of the church, which has dwarfed its growth, that it became mixed up with this world's institutions not worth fighting for, nor aspiring to. If the church at once could divest itself from all political power or aspiration, then the contest could and would cease. As it is, the fight will go on till another exodus will take place, and then again another exodus, and the movement will dwindle down to few families, and the church will fail in its mission, which is the spiritual development and domain in the hearts of all nations. Only in this way and manner can it possibly be the stone; which cut off from (out of) the mountains shall fill the earth with a superior governing power. This petty quarreling about the supremacy is unworthy the church of God, as it does not serve any person's or pretender's individual interest; nor does it represent any power or government on earth.

Polygamy has publicly been made a disgust to the people of the United States and Government; therefore, let it not be so any longer by putting it before the world as an institution practiced in the world's domain, or imposed on the world, and the governments of the world to decide upon. The world has the power to put it down as obnoxious and disgusting to its governments. Only in such an acceptance is the power in the voice of the people, that the church must keep all such practice as offences given to the world, and has to remain within its own domain of love and not of lust.

The spiritual companionship in heaven stands as the Omega, or the last; never understood by the Saints and less by the world, and it became a curse to the Saints more than a blessing. Be not confounded. Conquer first the world by the living word of truth. Teach the world the first principles, and the letters of the alphabet belonging to the gospel, but do not commence with the last letter. Keep the last to the last. You can not teach a child the alphabet in the manner you have acted, and much less the Executive, and officers and Congress of the United States government. Some of you have contested Congress to enact laws against a church institution, even the church of God. This has not been done, as you have not lived accordingly to my laws, which went out from Zion. Therefore your polygamy is of the world and not of me, nor according to the spirit of my law, and as your deeds have been, so also, have you defended them. Therefore, repent, and let the world have the right to judge its own institutions; because what is of the world belongs to the world, and the world has the right to judge it and do with its own as it will. God's love was not within it, and polygamy was practiced according to the spirit of the world. The world claims it, (to control.—Ed.), which rightfully belongs to the world.

Some persons have ideas that they are wronged and their spirits get filled with bitterness and gall against the world, which they should love and convert from darkness to light; but you are fighting darkness by darkness, being yourselves in darkness, and from that is nothing derived; as darkness can only be fought by a superior light, as the only method by which you can conquer the world.

A warning voice is reaching you from the patriarch of heaven, and the Father of mankind and Ruler of the earth. The Ancient of Days speaks to you with his own voice and you ought to listen, because of its superior truth. He is warning you to abolish what power you have borrowed from the word, because all flesh is only grass, and all unions, which are not in the spirit shall perish as grass. Polygamy came into the church, and the spirit of the world, which is the spirit of the flesh, it crucified the church in the world. Let that curse be banished, and the world will honor and respect you. If you are the friends of Messiah, you are the friends of peace, and as such salute each other. Leave politics alone. Spread the gospel over all the world. Build temples over all the world. Preach life, peace and truth over all the world. Monogamy or polygamy does not concern the gospel in the world, as all marriage belongs to the world, but the gospel is the life eternal. It does not solve governments, but was preached alike to the Jews in polygamy as to the pagan Romans and Greeks in monogamy. Governments are not affected by it except by what truth there is in it to give light and life to new ideas. The heavenly companionship is not the monogamy, nor the polygamy of the world, but belongs to the gospel of freedom, as it is understood in heaven, and as it will be understood in the second coming of Messiah, but now is misunderstood on earth; therefore, let polygamy be abolished. Let all political terror and prestige be abolished, because you are a chosen people, and not a people of the world. My name is forever, and will last forever.

The Ancient of Days, the patriarch of heaven is the God of Abraham and Isaac and Jacob and Daniel. With my warning voice he says in time to you, abolish polygamy; and do it before my warning voice do not speak any longer, or you shall feel the force of the world put upon you, and there shall be no escape, and another people shall step into your place and do your work, and you shall be left outside the door, and in darkness and in pain.

Give unto Caesar that which is Caesar's, and render unto God that which is God's. Amen. The world shall not hate you if you do not steal from the world.

P. S. of the messenger.—According to command this message was copied and sent to John Henry Smith and to George Q. Cannon, Salt Lake City, at the conference of October 6th, 1882.

BORN.

FROST.—At No. 1143 B street, Lincoln, Nebraska, December 23d, 1885, to Bro. William H. and Anna Frost, a daughter. Blessed at home, September 22d, 1886, by Elder Robert M. Elvin, and named Lucy.

DIED.

Joy.—At Grimes, Polk Co., Iowa, September 13th, 1886, of inflammatory rheumatism, sister Jennie Joy, aged 28 years and 10 days. She was baptized January 30th, 1883, by Elder W. C. Nirk, at Des Moines, Iowa, and lived a devoted and exemplary Christian life. She left a husband and two little boys to mourn her loss. The funeral sermon was preached to a very large and attentive congregation, in the Presbyterian church in Grimes, by Elder J. S. Roth, from 1 Cor. 15: 35. The large concourse of people which followed the remains to the grave, and the tears which were shed by them, showed the esteem in which sister Joy was held by her friends and neighbors. Shortly before she died, and about the last words she said, "If the Lord is willing, I am ready to go." She had the blessed assurance of coming forth in the first resurrection.

SYLVESTER.—At the home of her parents, Omaha, Nebraska, after a year's sickness, Emma E. Sylvester; faithful in life, and in death delivered from earthly woe. She was born at St. Louis, Missouri, March 16th, 1857, and as she died August 21st, 1886, she was in the 29th year of her age. She was baptized by E. C. Brand, September 22d, 1870. She, or the earthly part of her inhering to the body, lies in the beautiful Prospect Hill Cemetery. Her old friend, Elder M. H. Forscutt, visited and prayed with her during her sickness—as did many others—and conducted her funeral services in the Christian Church, and at the grave, on August 24th.

Patient in life, restful in death,
Resigned alone thine earthly breath—
Emma, thou livest still.

Could we, we would not have thee here,
But in thy presence would appear,
When 'tis the Master's will.

ANDERSON.—At Pleasanton, Iowa, September 24th, 1886, Charles G., son of Bro. James and Sr. Joan Anderson, aged 3 years, 5 months and 29 days. Funeral services conducted by Elder Reese, assisted by Elders Moffat and Duncan Campbell.

WHITEHEAD.—Rhoda S. Whitehead was born June 7th, 1822, and died September 8th, 1886, being in the 65th year of her age. She was the daughter of Gardiner and Submit Hagar, who moved from the state of Vermont into New York state about the year 1821, and settled on the farm now occupied by Charles Whitney, in the town of Mexico, Oswego Co., New York. Here the deceased was born. Her life was all spent in this state, except about two years, in which she resided in the state of Indiana, where the father and his family had removed, and where the father died. She was united in marriage to Ezra T. Whitehead, January 8th, 1854, to which union four children were born, two sons and two daughters, all of whom survive the deceased; and with one exception were present to follow the remains to the grave. The health of Mrs. Whitehead had been fairly good through life, her principal bodily affliction being neuralgia of the stomach, which was the cause of death. In the paroxysms of this disease she was a great sufferer, and especially in the last attack, consciously being tortured with excruciating pain from Sunday forenoon to Tuesday afternoon, at which time she seemed to pass into an unconscious state, and appeared like one in a heavy sleep until life was extinct. In these attacks she often expressed a desire to be relieved by death, and in the last she said to her daughter: "I am living for some one, I guess it must be for you." She devoted herself to the interests that engaged her attention, uncomplainingly. She has borne her share of earthly care, and performed her share of hard work. She has maintained such a reputation in the community where she resided, that she departed this life with the respect of every one to the last. She was a member of the Mormon Church, but of that branch that opposed Brigham Young, and the objectionable features he sought to introduce into Mormonism. It is fairly to be supposed that she was induced to take this religious step by the influence of her husband, who investigated with a great deal of thoroughness the above mentioned faith, and became convinced that more divine truth found expression in this system of belief, than in any other with which he was acquainted. He became a member of this church in 1840, and was commissioned an elder in 1842. Naturally enough he taught his family his own convictions. He would not have regarded himself as true to them, as a father and head, if he had not. All the family have become believers in the doctrines of Mormonism; in these doctrines they have given every evidence of living happily together, and in these doctrines the wife and mother seems to have triumphantly died. Not very long since I visited the family, and after a most enjoyable conversation I was requested by the deceased to lead in prayer. The hearty responses to prayer all about that domestic altar that morning, produced the conviction in my mind that Jesus of Nazareth had not passed by that home without leaving his blessing. Her last words were "If you could give me up and let me go, why do I linger." When she supposed no one heard, she said: "Take me home." She evidently felt: "If this earthly house of her tabernacle were dissolved she had a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens."

"O change! stupendous change!
Here lies the senseless clod;
The soul from bondage breaks,
The new immortal wakes,
Walks with her God."

WHY THE CHURCH DECAYS.

THERE has been of late years a decided falling off in the attendance upon the country churches of New England, and a gentleman who has been trying to find out the cause writes at length on the subject. He believes that much of the responsibility of the decrease in religious worship can be attributed to the inferior standard of the clerical profession. A large majority of the sermons are below the intellectual level of the people to whom they are preached, he says, and this preaching tends to disrespect for religion and disregard for the church. It is especially injurious to the young, who grow up without reverence for the faith of the fathers. Many young and some mature men in the pulpit are so fond of their own speculations and of preaching their own notions about religious things that they are unsettling instead of grounding firmly the faith of their young hearers. It is barely possible that the gentleman's logic could be made to apply outside of New England, and even in some of the large cities. In a word, there are more churches talked to death than die from any other cause, and more congregations that are "starved out" than are given food to spare from the pulpits of the day.

THE swelling caused by the sting of hornets, wasps, bees and spiders may be generally arrested by the application of common salt and bicarbonate of soda (a teaspoonful of each) dissolved in warm water, and well rubbed in on the place bit or stung.

"THE world without religion," so Montefiore once said, "would be like a garden without flowers. You might grow plenty of useful cabbage heads and beans. But there would be no fragrance in it, nothing to please the eye or satisfy the heart,"

HIGH PRIESTS.

THERE are some who have held that there never was nor ever was to be but one High Priest after the order of Melchizedek in the Church of Christ. How can they reconcile this idea with the fact that Melchizedek held the same office of priesthood? Moses and David and Paul bear witness of Melchizedek and his priesthood. (Gen. 14: 18; Ps. 110: 4; Heb. 7: 1-22). If there were never but the two orders of priesthood, namely, the Melchizedek and Aaronic, and if the Aaronic order did not exist till Aaron was called and ordained, and further, if there were but Christ and Melchizedek in the Melchizedek "order," what kind of priesthood did Moses hold? Moses was a priest, and officiated as such. Ps. 99: 6; Ex. 24: 4-8. Able administered in the Priest's office; (Gen. 4: 3-5); so did Noah; (Gen. 8: 20, 21); so did Abraham; (Gen. 22: 13); and Jacob; (Gen. 31: 54; 46: 1); and Job. 1: 5; 42: 8); and so did Jethro; (Ex. 18: 1-24).

Samuel, (1 Sam. 7: 9); David, (2 Sam. 6: 18); Elijah, (1 King 18: 30-38), these, with others, officiated as Priests, though not of the family of Aaron, and God approved their ministrations with extraordinary blessings. Is it not then consistent to claim that these Priests were after the order of Melchizedek? Certainly they were not after the order of Aaron; and inasmuch as there are but that and the order of Melchizedek mentioned in the Bible, we are bound to conclude they belonged to the latter.

Peter tells us that the Christian Church possessed a "royal"—kingly—priesthood. (1 Pet. 2: 9). John the Revelator teaches similarly. (Rev. 1: 6). These being facts, there must of necessity be a gradation of its authorities and offices; hence there must be high and lesser Priests.

This is just how the matter was understood by the early Christians; for Bingham in Ant. Chris. Ch., says: "St.

Jerome observes, They [the early Christians] reckoned that to be no church, which had no Priests." And further: "St. Jerome, who will be allowed to speak the sense of the ancients. . . . says that both in the Old and New Testaments, the High Priests are an order, the Priests another, and the Levites another."—Page 50. "Tertullian, in his book De Baptismo, says: The right to baptize belongs to the Chief Priests." Of these "Chief Priests" he further says: "It was no human invention, but an original settlement of the apostles themselves, which they made by divine appointment."—p. 54.

Again Bingham says:

"Now this is most expressly said by Theodoret, that he [Ignatius] received the gift of the high priesthood from the hand of the great Peter."—p. 60.

These testimonies prove that the early Christians claimed to have in their midst both the Levitical and the "high priesthood."

We are now reminded by a tract sent us, that David Whitmer thinks that Christ was the last great High Priest after the order of Melchizedek. If so, these early Christians and their immediate successors were badly deceived, and were miserable deceivers, and further, Joseph the Seer and Oliver Cowdery were likewise base deceivers, for they both taught as did the early Christians in respect to the high priesthood being in the Church of Christ. The difference between David Whitmer and Joseph and Oliver lies in the fact that the latter were called and ordained of God to found and build and set in order the Church of Christ, and David Whitmer was not. And when he undertakes to do that to which God has not called him, we may expect he will make mistakes and mislead others. We respect Bro. D. Whitmer in his proper calling, but not out of it. Here is proof that the office of High Priest in the church in this age is approved of God, from the Times and Seasons, vol. 5, page 738:

"On the 18th of March, the High Priests assembled in the school room of the prophets and were organized according to revelation, in prayer, by S. Rigdon. Doctor Hurlbut was ordained an Elder; after which Elder Rigdon expressed a desire that himself and Bro. F. G. Williams should be ordained to the office, to which they had been called, viz: that of presidents of the high priesthood, and to be equal in holding the keys of the kingdom with Brother Joseph Smith, junior, according to the revelation given on the 8th of March, 1833.

"Accordingly I laid my hands on Brother Sidney and Frederick and ordained them to take part with me in holding the keys of this last kingdom, and to assist in the presidency of the high priesthood, as my counselors; after which, I exhorted the brethren to faithfulness, and diligence in keeping the commandments of God, and gave much instruction for the benefit of the saints, with a promise that the pure in heart would see a heavenly vision; and after remaining a short time in secret prayer, the promise was verified; for many present had the eyes of their understandings opened by the Spirit of God so as to behold many things.

"I then blessed the bread and wine, and distributed a portion to each, after which many of the brethren saw a heavenly vision of the Savior, and concourses of angels, and many other things, of which each one has a record of what they saw, &c."

Both Joseph and Oliver testify to the fact of both the Aaronic and Melchizedek priesthood being in the church, and of their being conferred by the ministration of angels. See letter of O. Cowdery in Messenger and Advocate page 15, also Supplement to Mill. Star, vol. 15, also Mill. Star 15: 211. Oliver Cowdery fully endorsed the fact of there being High Priests in the church, as may be seen in his writings. See Messenger and Advocate, pps. 265-268, 281. The full history of the endowment received at Kirtland in the winter of 1835-6, Mill. Star, vol. 15, pps. 518-739, in all of which Oliver participated, fully attests the fact of the Melchizedek and Aaronic priesthood being in the church.

How did it then occur that God so wonderfully blessed and endowed his people, including High Priests, if this order of priesthood was not authorized and ordained of God? The fact is beyond dispute, that God most signally endorsed and approved by his Spirit the arrangement of the priesthood in the Kirtland endowment. And it is likewise a fact, that the ministry during and after that endowment had greater grace and power and success than ever before. We follow them to Canada and the various states, also to England, Scotland and Wales, and we find their labors are wonderfully blessed of God by signs following, and this continued till the blighting doctrines of polygamy, priestly oppression, and other evil things were introduced. The fact remains, and its lessons should be heeded, that after the Book of Doctrine and Covenants was compiled and endorsed by the General Assembly, and after the full organization of the Church and its priesthood in the years of 1835 and 1836, the work of the ministry was blessed to a greater degree than ever before. How could this be, if the Church was being corrupted by a false priesthood, a false organization, and false revelations! Think of it. Who is it who now proposes to regulate and set in order the Church upon these matters? Have they been called and sent of God to do it? What and where are their credentials? Where in the accepted word of God are they even hinted at as the Lord's servants to set in order his Church and regulate those things they claim are in disorder? Again we ask what and whence are their credentials?

In respect to this matter of High Priests of the order of Melchizedek being in the Church of God, the Book of Mormon is very plain, and its teachings harmonize with those of Joseph and Oliver. The prophet Alma says:

"And now my brethren, seeing we know these things, and they are true, let us repent, and harden not our hearts, that we provoke not the Lord our God to pull down his wrath upon us in these his second commandments which he has given unto us; but let us enter into the rest of God, which is prepared according to his word. And again: my brethren, I would cite your minds forward to the time when the Lord God gave these commandments unto his children; and I would that ye should remember that the Lord God ordained priests, after his holy order, which was after the order of his Son, to teach these things unto the people; and those priests were ordained after the order of his Son, in a manner whereby the people might know in what manner to look forward to his Son for redemption. And this is the manner after which they were ordained: being called and prepared from the foundation of the world, according to the foreknowledge of God, on account of their exceeding faith and good works; in the first place being left to choose good or evil; therefore they having chosen good, and exercising exceeding great faith, are called with a holy calling, yea, with that holy calling which was prepared with and according to, a preparatory redemption for such; and thus they have been called to this holy calling on account of their faith, while others would reject the Spirit of God on account of the hardness of their hearts and blindness of their minds, while, if it had not been for this, they might had as great privilege as their brethren. Or in fine: in the first place they were on the same standing with their brethren; thus this calling being prepared from the foundation of the world for such as would not harden their hearts, being in and through the atonement of the only begotten Son, who was prepared; and thus being called by this holy calling, and ordained unto the high priesthood of the holy order of God, to teach his commandments unto the children of men, that they also might enter into his rest, this high priesthood being after the order of his Son, which order was from the foundation of the world: or in other words, being without beginning of days or end of years, being prepared from eternity to all eternity, according to his foreknowledge of all things. Now they were ordained after this manner; Being called with a holy calling, and ordained with a holy ordinance, and taking upon them the high priesthood of the holy order, which calling and ordinance, and high priesthood, is without beginning or end; thus they became High Priests forever, after the order of the Son, the only begotten of the Father, who is without beginning of days or end of years, who is full of grace, equity and truth. And thus it is. Amen.

"Now as I said concerning the holy order of this high priesthood: there were many who were ordained and became high priests of God; and it was on account of their exceeding faith and repentance, and their righteousness before God, they choosing to repent and work righteousness, rather than to perish; therefore they were called after this holy order, and were sanctified, and their garments were washed white, through the blood of the Lamb. Now they, after being sanctified by the Holy Ghost, having their garments made white, being pure and spotless before God, could not look upon sin, saye it were with abhorrence; and there were many, exceeding great many, who were made pure, and entered into the rest of the Lord their God. And now, my brethren, I would that ye should humble yourselves before God, and bring forth fruit meet for repentance, that ye may also enter into that rest; yea, humble yourselves even as the people of the days of Melchizedek, who was also a high priest after this same order which I have spoken, who also took upon him the high priesthood forever. And it was this same Melchizedek to whom Abraham paid tithes: yea, even our father Abraham paid tithes of one tenth part of all he possessed. Now these ordinances were given after this manner, that thereby the people might look forward on the son of God, it being a type of his order, or it being his order; and this, that they might look forward to him for a remission of their sins, that they might enter into the rest of the Lord."

"Now this Melchizedek was a king over the land of Salem; and his people had waxed strong in iniquity and abominations; yea, they had all gone astray: they were full of all manner of wickedness; but Melchizedek having exercised mighty faith, and received the office of the high priesthood, according to the holy order of God, did preach repentance unto his people. And behold, they did repent; and Melchizedek did establish peace in the land in his days; therefore he was called the prince of peace, for he was the king of Salem; and he did reign under his father. Now there were many before him, and also there were many afterwards, but none were greater; therefore of him they have more particularly made mention. Now I need not rehearse the matter; what I have said, may suffice. Behold, the scriptures are before you; if ye will wrest them it shall be to your own destruction."—Alma, 9: 6; 10: 1, 2.

In this quotation we learn that this priesthood is eternal, and continues forever in the Church of God; that there were many High Priests both before and after the days of Melchizedek; that this was Christ's "order;" that this order was ordained of God to teach "the plan of redemption"—the gospel—and administer its "ordinances," including the law of tithing. And Alma, in chapter 2: 1, teaches as follows:

"And they began to establish the church more fully; yea, and many were baptized in the waters of Sidon, and were joined to the church of God; yea, they were baptized by the hand of Alma, who had been consecrated the High Priest over the people of the church, by the hand of his father, Alma."

The same is said in Mosiah 13: 6. Here we have "the Church of God," and a "High Priest" presiding over it. These testimonies plainly show that living, active, ministering High Priests are proper officers in the Church of God. And that "Priests" are properly church officials may be seen still further in 2 Nephi 4: 5; Alma 10: 14; 14: 2; Moroni, chapters 3 and 4. It follows as a necessity that where there is priesthood, there must be a gradation of officers in it, hence high and lesser Priests.

In conclusion. When we are assured that God called and ordained Joseph and Oliver to organize, build, and regulate his church, it is much safer to trust in what they did in that direction than to heed the doubts and cavils and quibblings and opposition of those whom God has not called to that work. It is wise and safe to trust in the church and priesthood of God as founded and set in order by Joseph the Seer and Oliver his "spokesman." "Wisdom is justified of her children."

PERSECUTION AND ITS CAUSES.

FROM the foregoing publicly avowed sentiments and purposes of the Saints, it seems incredible that they, soon after, would receive such treatment as civilized people impute alone to barbarous savages, and receive it, too, from those who professed to be an enlightened, Christian, American community.

We now submit the following facts from which it will be readily seen that it was not for crimes against the law of the land, nor for vicious conduct against the moral purity of society that these Saints were contemned, derided, threatened, plundered, and driven from home and country, but simply because they professed the same kind of religion as that taught by Christ, his apostles and the early Christians; also because they were free-state people and anti-slavery in sentiment; and for the further reason that the Jackson county politicians and their followers were determined that these anti-slavery Saints should not have the rights of migration, of domain, of home, of trade, of religion, and of the elective franchise—the rights sacred to every American freeman! These were the chief causes, as will be seen by their self-convicting "address" which we now introduce, taken from the Western Monitor of August 2d, 1833, and edited by Weston F. Birch, at Fayette, Missouri. Here it is:

MORMONISM:—At a meeting of the citizens of Jackson county, Missouri, called for the purpose of adopting measures to rid themselves of the sect of fanatics, called Mormons, held at Independence on the 20th day of July, 1833; which meeting was composed of gentlemen from every part of the county, there being present between four and five hundred persons.

The meeting was organized by calling Colonel Richard Simpson to the chair, and appointing James H. Flournoy and Col. Samuel D. Lucas, secretaries. It was resolved that a committee of seven be appointed to report an address to the public, in relation to the object of this meeting; and the chair named the following gentlemen, to wit: Russell Hicks Esq., Robert Johnson, Henry Chiles Esq., Colonel James Hambright, Thomas Hudspeth, Joel F. Chiles, and James M. Hunter. The meeting then adjourned; and convened again, when Robert Johnson, the chairman of said committee, submitted for the consideration of the meeting, the following address, &c.:

This meeting, professing to act not from the excitement of the moment, but under a deep and abiding conviction that the occasion is one that calls for cool deliberation, as well as energetic action, deem it proper to lay before the public an expose of our peculiar situation in regard to this singular sect of pretended Christians, and a solemn declaration of our unalterable determination to amend it.

The evil is one that no one could have foreseen, and is therefore unprovided for by the laws, and the delays incident to legislation would put the mischief beyond remedy.

But little more than two years ago some two or three of this people made their appearance in the Upper Missouri, and they now number some twelve hundred souls in this county; and each successive autumn and spring pours forth its swarm among us, with a gradual falling of the character of those who compose them; until it seems that those communities from which they come were flooding us with the very dregs of their composition. Elevated as they mostly are but a little above the condition of our blacks either in regard to property or education, they have become a subject of much anxiety on that part, serious and well grounded complaints having been already made of their corrupting influence on our slaves.

We are daily told, and not by the ignorant alone, but by all classes of them, that we, (the Gentiles), of this county are to be cut off, and our lands appropriated by them for inheritances. Whether this is to be accomplished by the hand of the destroying angel, the judgments of God, or the arm of power, they are not fully agreed among themselves.

Some recent remarks in the Evening and Morning Star, their organ in this place, by their tendency to moderate such hopes and repress such desires, show plainly that many of this deluded and infatuated people have been taught to believe that our lands were to be won from us by the sword. From this same Star we learn that for want of more honest or commendable employment, many of their society are now preaching through the states of New York, Ohio, and Illinois, and that their numbers are increased beyond every rational calculation; all of whom are required as soon as convenient, to come up to Zion, which name they have thought proper to confer on our little village. Most of those who have already come are characterized by the profoundest ignorance, the grossest superstition, and the most abject poverty.

Indeed, it is a subject of regret by the Star itself, that they have come not only to lay an inheritance, which means some fifteen acres of wild land for each family, but destitute of the means for procuring bread and meat. When we reflect on the extensive field in which the sect is operating, and that there exists in every country a leaven of superstition that embraces with avidity notions the most extravagant and unheard of, and that whatever can be gleaned by them from the perleus of vice, and the abodes of ignorance, it is to be cast like a waif into our social circle, it requires no gift of prophecy to tell that the day is not far distant when the civil government of the country will be in their hands; when the sheriff, the justices, and the county judges will be Mormons, or persons wishing to court their favor from motives of interest or ambition.

What would be the fate of our lives and property, in the hands of jurors and witnesses who do not blush to declare, and would not upon occasion hesitate to swear that they have wrought miracles, and have been the subjects of miraculous and supernatural cures; have converse with God and his angels, and possess and exercise the gifts of divination and of unknow tongues, and fired with the prospect of obtaining inheritances without money and without price, may be better imagined than described.

One of the means resorted to by them, in order to drive us to emigrate, is an indirect invitation to the free brethren of color in Illinois, to come up, like the rest, to the land of Zion. True, they say this was not intended to invite, but to prevent their emigration; but this weak attempt to quiet our apprehension is but a poor compliment to our understandings. The article alluded to contained an extract from our laws, and all necessary directions and cautions to be observed by colored brethren, to enable them upon their arrival here, to claim and exercise the rights of citizenship. Contemporaneous with the appearance of this article, was the expectation among the brethren here, that a considerable number of this degraded cast were only awaiting this information before they should set out on their journey. With the corrupting influence of these on our slaves, and the stench both physical and moral that their introduction would set afloat in our social atmosphere, and the vexation that would attend the civil rule of these fanatics, it would require neither a visit from the destroying angel, nor the judgments of an offended God to render our situation here insupportable. True, it may be said, and truly no doubt, that the fate that has marked the rise and fall of Joanna Southcote and Ann Lee will also attend the progress of Joe Smith; but this is no opiate to our fears, for when the fabric falls the rubbish will remain.

Of their pretended revelations from heaven—their personal intercourse with God and his angels—the maladies they pretend to heal by the laying on of hands—and the contemptible gibberish with which they habitually profane the Sabbath and which they dignify with the appellation of unknown tongues, we have nothing to say; vengeance belongs to God alone. But as to the other matters set forth in this paper, we feel called on by every consideration of self-preservation, good society, public morals, and the fair prospects, that if not blasted in the germ, await this young and beautiful county, at once to declare, and we do hereby most solemnly declare:

That no Mormon shall in future move and settle in this county.

That those now here, who shall give a definite pledge of their intention within a reasonable time to remove out of the county, shall be allowed to remain unmolested until they have sufficient time to sell their property and close their business without any material sacrifice.

That the editor of the Star be required forthwith to close his office, and discontinue the business of printing in this county; and as to all other stores and shops belonging to the sect, their owners must in every case strictly comply with the terms of the second article of this declaration, and upon failure, prompt and efficient measures will be taken to close the same.

That the Mormon leaders here, are required to use their influence in preventing any further emigration of their distant brethren to this county, and to counsel and advise their brethren here to comply with the above requisitions.

That those who fail to comply with these requisitions, be referred to those of their brethren who have the gifts of divination, and of unknown tongues, to inform them of the lot that awaits them.

Which address being read and considered, was unanimously adopted. And thereupon it was resolved that a committee of twelve be appointed forthwith to wait on the Mormon leaders, and see that the foregoing requisitions are strictly complied with by them; and upon their refusal, that said committee do, as the organ of this county, inform them that it is our unwavering purpose and fixed determination, after the fullest considerations of all the consequences and responsibilities under which we act, to use such means as shall ensure their full and complete adoption, and that said committee, so far as may be within their power, report to this present meeting. And the following gentlemen were named as said committee:

Robert Johnson, James Campbell, Colonel Moses Wilson, Joel F. Chiles, Hon. Richard Fristoe, Abner F. Staples, Gan Johnson, Lewis Franklin, Russell Hicks, Esq., Colonel S. D. Lucas, Thomas Wilson, and James M. Hunter, to whom was added Colonel R. Simpson, Chairman.

And after an adjournment of two hours, the meeting again convened, and the committee of twelve reported that they had called on Mr. Phelps, the editor of the Star, Edward Partridge, the bishop of the sect, and Mr. Gilbert, the keeper of the Lord's store house, and some others, and that they declined giving any direct answer to the requisitions made of them, and wished an unreasonable time for consultation, not only with their brethren here, but in Ohio.

Whereupon it was unanimously resolved by the meeting, that the Star printing office should be razed to the ground, the type and press secured. Which resolution was, with the utmost order, and the least noise and disturbance possible, forthwith carried into execution, as also some other steps of a similar tendency; but no blood was spilled nor any blows inflicted. The meeting then adjourned till the 23d instant, to meet again to know further concerning the determination of the Mormons.

Resolved that a copy of these proceedings be posted up at the post office in this place, for the information of all concerned; and that the secretaries of this meeting send copies of the same to the principal editors in the eastern and middle states for publication, that the Mormon brethren may know at a distance that the gates of Zion are closed against them—that their interests will be best promoted by remaining among those who know and appreciate their merits."

—Times and Seasons, vol. 6: 832, 833, 834.

Of these base and cruel transactions the Evening and Morning Star had this to say:

On the 20th, [July], the mob collected, and demanded the discontinuance of the printing in Jackson county: a closing of the store: and a cessation of all mechanical labors. The brethren refused compliance, and the consequence was, that the house of W. W. Phelps, which contained the printing establishment, was thrown down; the materials taken possession of by the mob; many papers destroyed, and the family and furniture thrown out doors.

The mob then proceeded to violence towards Edward Partridge, the bishop of the church, as he relates in his autobiography: "I was taken from my house by the mob, George Simpson being their leader, who escorted me about half a mile, to the court house, on the public square in Independence; and then and there, a few rods from said court house, surrounded by hundreds of the mob, I was stripped of my hat, coat and vest, and daubed with tar from head to foot, and then had a quantity of feathers put upon me; and all this because I would not agree to leave the county, my home where I had lived two years.

Before tarring and feathering me, I was permitted to speak. I told them that the saints had had to suffer persecution in all ages of the world; that I had done nothing which ought to offend any one. That if they abused me, they would abuse an innocent person. That I was willing to suffer for the sake of Christ; but, to leave the country I was not then willing to consent to it. By this time the multitude made so much noise that I could not be heard; some were cursing and swearing, saying, call upon your Jesus, &c.; others were equally noisy in trying to still the rest, that they might be enabled to hear what I was saying.

Until after I had spoken I knew not what they intended to do with me, whether to kill me, to whip me, or what else I knew not. I bore my abuse with so much resignation and meekness, that it appeared to astound the multitude, who permitted me to retire in silence, many looking very solemn, their sympathies having been touched as I thought; and as to myself, I was so filled with the Spirit and love of God that I had no hatred towards my persecutors, or any one else."

Charles Allen was next stripped and tarred and feathered, because he would not agree to leave the county, or deny the Book of Mormon.

Others were brought up to be served likewise or whipped, but from some cause, the mob ceased operations, and adjourned until Tuesday the 23d. Elder Gilbert, the keeper of the store, agreed to close that; and that may have been one reason why the work of destruction was suddenly stopped for two days.

In the course of this day's wicked, outrageous and unlawful proceedings, many solemn realities of human degradation, as well as thrilling incidents, were presented to the Saints. An armed and well organized mob, in a government professing to be governed by law, with the Lieutenant Governor, (Lilburn W. Boggs), the second officer in the state, calmly looking on, and secretly aiding every movement, saying to the Saints, "You now know what our Jackson boys can do, and you must leave the country;" and all the justices, judges, constables, sheriffs, and military officers, headed by such western missionaries and clergymen as the Reverends McCoy, Kavanaugh, Hunter, Fitzhugh, Pixley, Likens, Lovelady, and Bogard, consisting of Methodists, Baptists, Presbyterians, and all the different sects of religionists that inhabited that country; with that great moral reformer, and Register of the Land Office at Lexington, forty miles east, known as the head and father of the Cumberland Presbyterians, even the Reverend Finis Ewing publicly publishing that the "Mormons were the common enemies of mankind, and ought to be destroyed;" all these solemn realities were enough to melt the heart of a savage; while there was not a solitary offense on record, or proof that a Saint had broken the law of the land.

And when Bishop Partridge, who was without guile, and Elder Charles Allen walked off, amid the horrid yells of an infuriated mob, coated like some un-named, unknown biped, and one of the sisters cried aloud: "While you, who have done this wicked deed, must suffer the vengeance of God, they, having endured persecution, can rejoice, for henceforth for them is laid up a crown, eternal in the heavens." Surely there was a time of awful reflection, that man, unrestrained, like the brute beast, may torment the body; but God, in return, will punish the soul.—Times and Seasons, vol. 6:818, 819.

Three days after this shameful outrage the following oppressive, lawless, persecutive terms were forced upon the peaceful Saints:

"The citizens again convened on the 23d day of July, 1833, which was composed of gentlemen from all parts of the county, and much more unanimously attended than the meeting on the 20th instant.

The meeting was organized by the chairman taking his seat, when the following gentlemen were appointed a committee, to-wit:

Henry Chiles, Esq., Doctor N. K. Olmstead, H. L. Brazile, Esq., Zachariah Waller, Samuel Weston, Esq., Wm. L. Irwin, Leonidas Oldham, S. C. Owens, Esq., George Simpson, Capt. Benjamin Majors, James C. Sadler, Col. Wm. Bowers, Henry Younger, Russel Hicks, Esq., Aaron Overton, John Harris, and Harmon Gregg, to wait upon the Mormon leaders, who had intimated a wish to have a conference with said committee.

After an adjournment of two hours, the meeting again convened, when the committee reported to the meeting that they had waited on most of the Mormon leaders, consisting of the bishop, Mr. Partridge; Mr. Phelps, editor of the Star; Mr. Gilbert, the keeper of the Lord's store house; and Messrs. Corrill, Whitmer, and Morely, elders of the church, and that the said committee had entered into an amicable agreement with them which they had reduced to writing, which they submitted; and that the committee have assured Mr. Phelps that whenever he was ready to move, that the amount of all his losses should be paid to him by the citizens. The written agreement is as follows:

"Memorandum of agreement between the undersigned of the Mormon society, in Jackson county, Missouri, and a committee appointed by a public meeting of the citizens of said county, made the 23d day of July, 1833.

It is understood that the undersigned, members of the society, do give their solemn pledges, each for himself, as follows, to wit:

That Oliver Cowdery, W. W. Phelps, Wm. McClelland, [Lellin], Edward Partridge, Lyman Wight, Simeon Carter, Peter and John Whitmer, and Harvey Whitlock, shall remove with their families out of this county, on or before the first day of January next, and that they, as well as the two hereinafter named, use all their influence to induce all the brethren now here to remove as soon as possible—one half, say, by the first of January next, and all by the first day of April next. To advise and try all means in their power to stop any more of their sect from moving to this county; and as to those now on the road, they will use their influence to prevent their settling permanently in the county, but that they shall only make arrangements for temporary shelter, till a new location is agreed on for the society. John Corrill and Algernon Gilbert, are allowed to remain as general agents to wind up the business of the society, so long as necessity shall require; and said Gilbert may sell out his merchandise now on hand, but is to make no new importation.

The Star is not again to be published, nor a press set up by any of the society in this county.

If the said Edward Partridge and W. W. Phelps move their families by the first day of January, as aforesaid, that they themselves will be allowed to go and come in order to transact and wind up their business.

The committee pledge themselves to use all their influence to prevent any violence being used so long as a compliance with the foregoing terms is observed by the parties concerned, to which agreement is subscribed the names of the above named committee, as also those of the Mormon brethren named in the report as having been present."

Which report of the committee was unanimously adopted by the meeting, and thereupon the meeting adjourned, sine die.

—Times and Seasons, vol. 6:834, 835, from Western Monitor, August 2d, 1833.

The foregoing facts, the most of them taken from the mobbers' own organ, The Western Monitor, are quite sufficient to show that the Saints did nothing to provoke this persecution beyond what any orderly American citizen might have done. They had moved from the eastern States into Jackson county, Missouri; had purchased and were improving lands extensively, both in town and country; were engaged in merchandizing, printing and publishing, as also in various other mechanical arts, and in agriculture; all of which they had the right to do, including that of worshipping God according to the dictates of their own conscience in so far as that worship did not infringe upon the laws of the country, nor the natural rights of others. These rights the Saints held in common with every other class of American citizens. These they held by natural endowment from God, and they were likewise guaranteed to them by the Constitution and laws of the Nation, and also by the Constitution and laws of Missouri. But the same spirit, and many of the very same persons, that in 1854 to 1857 made "Border Ruffianism" possible, and which sought by craft and falsehood and violence to force the blighting curse of slavery upon free Kansas, rose up in its brute force, and trampling down the dearest rights of Christian freemen, and violating the most sacred pledges and guarantees of American citizens, drove out from home and property and country, a body of over twelve hundred peaceful, industrious people, whose only offence lay in the unpopularity of their Bible religion, anti-slavery politics, and their free state social sentiments and customs.

In calmly reviewing these facts one feels that a section from the dark ages has been transplanted into the proud history of free America, and that the hateful persecutions of the primitive Christians and noble protestant reformers had been revived.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

SEPTEMBER 21st, Bro. J. A. Robinson wrote from Albany, Texas, where he had preached three times in the Court-house, with good attendance and interest. He was kindly entertained by "Pete Holcombe, (a big-hearted cattle man), and his excellent wife." On the 27th he wrote from Pilot Point, saying that because of the sickness of Bro. G. S. Hyde their meetings at Collinsville were not up to their expectations. Bro. Hyde had the Dengue fever, which seems epidemic in Texas this year, and it was thought best that Bro. Hyde return home at once. Therefore Bro. Robinson purchased for him a ticket to Omaha and fitted him out with needful et ceteras, for his trip home. Owing to sickness and the past drouth, Texas is not now a very inviting field.

Bro. J. T. Davis writes us September 26th, that crops are poor in south-eastern Kansas, times hard, but calls for preaching are increasing and pressing.

Sr. J. S. Howard write from Moscow, Idaho, September 20th, saying: "I have been circulating the Voice of Warning for Bro. J. H. Peters, and this is the result"—eight dollars sent for HERALDS.

Bro. Dorman Lewis, in a letter renewing for church papers, states that his health is poor, and that he has removed from River Sioux to near Preparation, Ia.

In a letter dated Buffalo Prairie, Illinois, September 28th, Sr. Mina Epperly tells of the excellent labor done by Bro. A. H. Smith in that place of late; also of the profitable meetings had at their chapel, and of their pleasant and progressive Sunday School, and thinks we should no longer call the Hope "little," since enlarged.

Bro. J. W. Johnson, of McPaul, Missouri, has been seeking to enlighten the "wholly sanctified" ones of his town, who reject baptism for remission of sins; but they did not seem to heed his efforts, though well sustained by Bible texts. Bible religion in these Babylonish times is sadly at a discount.

Bro. F. C. Gough assures us in his late letter from Hearne, Texas, that "The good work moves right along;" and says: "Priest S. R. Hay baptized four the 19th inst., and others are investigating the doctrine."

Sr. M. Mansfield, of Houlton, Maine, writes Bro. D. Dancer, September 27th, and says of "the good HERALD," "I can say that we prize it very highly, and enjoy reading it very much. There is no branch of the true church near us, so the HERALD brings us all the sermons we have from those of our faith. We hope it may be well sustained and continue its welcome visits to our home for many years to come." And Bro. C. Perry, of Bevier, Missouri, says, "I would not like to be without it." And we may add, No member of the church should fail to read its current publications.

The junior Editor is to go October 5th or 6th, to be gone ten or twenty days, calling at the Reunion for a few days, and then spending some time with the branches in western Iowa.

Elder J. W. Gillen will go at once to eastern Iowa and Missouri, to labor for the fall, winter and spring. He may also labor some in eastern Illinois, if desired by the authorities in charge. Brother James enters upon ministerial work abroad with a clearer, keener conviction of duty, if possible, than ever before. He evidently has on the armor of the Christian soldier until the war is over. May heaven direct and greatly favor him and all his fellow-laborers, that as wise spiritual ambassadors for Christ they may successfully persuade all to be reconciled to God. It is cheering to see how deeply many feel the need of working with their might in the Lord's harvest field while it is yet called to-day. God speed the reapers.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Elder R. J. Anthony, writing from Deer Lodge, Montana, the 30th of September says:

"I have just returned here this morning from Willow Creek, Montana, where I held some of the most interesting meetings I have attended in Montana. . . . I leave here next Monday for Oxford. Bro. John Lewis has driven the entering wedge in Franklin. We shall with God's help use the sledge there for a time."

Elder J. C. Clapp, writing from Deer Lodge, Montana, September 30th, says:

"Elder R. J. Anthony just came from Gallatan Valley, and reports good times; all well here. The Elder will preach in our new chapel next Sunday."

Bro. T. E. Jenkins in a late letter from Wales, says:

"Where is Elder J. D. Jones, of Kewanee? He promised to be here in June. July and August is past, but where is brother John? Come, brother; come."

THE Bluff Park Journal of Montrose, Iowa, just opposite Nauvoo, Illinois, is now reprinting from the Times and Seasons an account of the persecutions of the Saints in Missouri, and we trust it will continue to spread the facts of that wretched affair until its readers and exchanges shall be fully posted in respect to it.

We have confidence that Missouri and Illinois and our Nation, will yet see and recompense the wrongs inflicted upon the Latter Day Saints in their various persecutions from the first. These are times of progression. God has decreed the "desolation of abomination." Slavery has gone to the wall; priestcraft is perishing; intemperance is becoming odious and limited; labor is asserting its right to enjoy its earnings; woman is being exalted to an equal place with man; polygamy and its like are writing in death throes, under the light of religion, law, and moral science; bigotry and the barbarism of the creeds are loosing their clammy hands from the heart and intellect of the race, and the times of adjustment and compensation are dawning upon an enlightened world.

The Latter Day Saints have rights in common with others, and the masses will see this fact and will feel the need of honoring and protecting them. We hope the Journal and hosts of other publications will bravely battle for the right, see that the Latter Day Saints have a just and fair showing, let the God of our fathers take care of results, and thus help to relegate religious intolerance, sectarian hate, and political craft and pandering, to the inhospitable regions of oblivion.

"Not on one favored forehead fell,
Of old, the fire-tongued miracle,
But flamed o'er all the thronging host,
The baptism of the Holy Ghost;
