During the progressive days of Rome they made wonderful advancement in jurisprudence, till the uninitiated is surprised to find so many of our laws simply copies. There were "wise men" raised up among them, but they were not sufficient to prevent the wealth and power finally settling into the hands of the few. And what reasons have we for believing that the wise men of our nation can or will be able to prevent the same thing? In fact, we see signs of its baneful influence already. There are but few industries that can be successfully engaged in by men with a small amount of capital. What chance for success would a man with a few thousand dollars have in the "oil business" in the East, or in the "packing business" in the West? This only illustrates every industry in the United States. The wealth is fast going into the hands of the few, and they are so hedging up the way that the masses are compelled to depend on them for a living. Already they are saying to their dependents, "Vote as we say, or we will starve your children." I was somewhat surprised in '96 to hear a railroad engineer say that "The company furnished him newspapers and campaign literature," and that he was not at liberty to express his views on politics; but thanks to the Australian ballot, he could vote as he pleased. This is too notorious to need proof here.

Our nation with all its grandeur and excellency does not, cannot prevent the growth of this noxious weed which gives man the power to tyrannize over his fellow man, thus robbing the masses of this "self-evident" truth that cannot result in anything but disaster. Yes, Bro. Kelley, this imperfection, this lack needs "breaking," as well as the rest of human inventions and schemes that contain only "grains of salt," and are insufficient to bring mankind to the proper condition. The question is asked:—

If he inspired the laying of the foundation of this government, is he thereafter to set up a "stone" to "smite" and destroy it?

The question is in such form as to convey the idea that he would not; but before we thus answer let us consider a few facts. When God led the Israelites from Egyptian bondage he came Down also upon mount Sinai, and spake with them from heaven, and gavest them right judgments, and true laws, good statutes and commandments.—Neh. 9: 13.

After this was done, Moses said:—

Behold, I have taught you statutes and judgments, even as the Lord my God commanded me, that ye should do so in the land whither ye go to possess it.—Deut. 4: 5.

I do not suppose that it will be argued that the political system given by the Almighty through the "wise man," Moses, was to be eternal in its character. If so what will become of the "inspired" political system of the United States?

We can readily admit that God did the best for the Israelites that could have been done under the circumstances; and the same may be said for the United States. But to argue that one is to be eternal, or is to "stand forever," because God directed in its formation, would be assuming too much. The preponderance of evidence would be in favor of the former.

And from thence shall the gospel roll forth unto the ends of the earth, as the stone which is cut out of the mountain without hands shall roll forth.—D. C. 65: 1.

Many knew of the statement in Daniel 2: 34 of the "stone" rolling forth, gaining strength and size as it went, "breaking in pieces" all that remained in its path "till it became a great mountain and filled the whole earth," but few knew what was symbolized by this stone. Daniel gives us to understand that it would be a "kingdom" set up by "the God of heaven," "which would never be destroyed," "but would stand forever."

This much was comprehended by all: that it was to represent something in the last days that was to go forth through and finally fill the earth. The revelation quoted says, in harmony with this understood fact, "the gospel" was to go forth "as" (in the same manner) that the stone cut out of the mountain without hands shall roll forth. There is undoubtedly a difference between the "gospel" and that which is to "roll forth," symbolized by the "stone." But is it the United States? As the gospel must be preached before the church can be built up, of necessity it must go forth first. The glorious principles of the "kingdom" that "the God of heaven" has "set up" are proclaimed in their pristine beauty, and which include all that is grand and good in the "foundation" of our government (which our patriotic brother so greatly admires—and by the way he seems to see more than I do), but a great deal more—enough to remove all the evils in society and prevent them from ever germinating again. This will attract all truth and justice-loving people, so they will enlist under the folds of its elevating banner, causing the church or kingdom to "roll forth" after, or to follow the preaching of the gospel in "all the world."

The Church of Jesus Christ has never "broken in pieces" even a township government.

Possibly not. But remember it is yet young. But, by the way, what kingdom has the United States "broken in pieces?" And it is much older. We do not understand that the church is ever to "break in pieces" any government by carnal force, but by teaching the citizens the more perfect way, giving them a higher conception of right and justice, till of their own accord they will move harmoniously together and form a more perfect system. The principles of this perfect system are included in and are a part of the "gospel of the kingdom."

Is not the "inspired" in the church, and the "inspired" in the State one, as affecting God's purposes and work?

To answer this question correctly we should consider the degrees of "inspiration" that are manifested by men at different times, as well as the object God had in view by giving the inspiration.

Nebuchadnezzar was surely inspired when he saw the wonderful scene in his remarkable dream, as were Pharaoh and many others; yet this inspiration was very limited, and the knowledge given thereby very meager. When Moses gave the "law" to Israel it came to him by inspiration; yet it was an "imperfect" system, and was destined to be superseded by a superior one. The superior included all of the good in the first, and a great deal more, without its imperfections.

There was a great deal of good accomplished by the "Mosaic law," and so there is by the government of the United States; but as the first was superseded or swallowed up by the second, so will it be with the latter; each serving its purpose "to bring us to Christ," the more perfect way.

And is it not the "self-evident" "truths" of Jefferson that lie at the foundation of the government which have wrought so wondrously and effectively, loved and cherished by a free and independent people, that are sweeping over the nations as a new inspiration, and "smiting the image"—the "divine right of kings" and an inherited aristocracy—liberating and planting hope in the people, to be considered in the work of the "stone kingdom" as well as the divine in the church?

From the above it seems that the "smiting" is to be done by moral influences, produced by the wonderful success of our nation, demonstrating to humanity that we have the most perfect system of government on earth.

Then follows:—

Go on Dewey, go on Schley, go on Sampson, go on Miles, go on Shafter, go on the great God-ordained American republic; "smite the image," if image it is; break the yokes of tyrants and let the people go free.

This is a beautiful sentence, but it leaves one in a quandary as to its meaning. It sounds too warlike. Dewey, Schley, and Shafter did not smite with a "new inspiration;" but with the old carnal weapons greatly improved. It almost leaves the impression that the brother has already "climbed upon the fence" and slid off on both sides.

By carefully reading Daniel 2:34-44, it will be seen that the kingdom that does the smiting will "fill the whole earth" and "stand forever." This surely exceeds the hopes of most people of the United States. Yet I was reading the other day of a patriot who, when expatiating of the need of a great navy, said: "We will soon have thirty-five thousand miles of sea-coast to defend."

Daniel saw the "Son of man" come in the "clouds of heaven."

And there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages, should serve him: his dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed.—Daniel 7:14.

I believe we can safely conclude that the "stone" represents the church or kingdom of God.

Selected Poetry.

A LITTLE LAD'S ANSWER.

Our little lad came in one day
With dusty shoes and tired feet;
His playtime had been hard and long,
Out in the summer's noontide heat.
"I'm glad I'm home!" he cried, and hung
His torn straw hat up in the hall,
While in the corner by the door
He put away his bat and ball.
"I wonder why," his auntie said,
"This little lad always comes here,
When there are many other homes
As nice as this and quite as near?"
He stood a moment deep in thought,
Then, with a love light in his eye,
He pointed where his mother sat,
And said: "She lives here; that is why."
With beaming face the mother heard;
Her mother heart was very glad,
A true, sweet answer he had given,
That thoughtful, loving little lad.
And well I know that hosts of lads
Are just as loving, true, and dear;
That they would answer as he did:
" 'Tis home, for mother's living here."

essary. Motion carried. Sunday morning prayer meeting in charge of Brn. C. Dixon and J. P. Calhoun. Preaching forenoon and afternoon by M. M. Turpen. As this was election day it threw the church affairs into confusion, and a smaller attendance and less reports were the consequence. The Bishop's agent and district clerk were both sustained. Bro. T. C. Kelley was sustained as district president. Preaching by E. L. Kelley, Joseph Luff, and Alexander H. Smith, which was very instructive. Adjourned to meet at Jonesport; the time to be left with the missionary in charge and the district president.

OKLAHOMA.

Oklahoma district conference met in John Minium's grove, August 31; vice president S. J. Hinkle in charge, assisted by A. J. Moore. The saints enjoyed a quiet, peaceful prayer meeting; Bro. No reports from Oklahoma, Stillwater, nor Oak Grove branches; report from Canadian Central branch was referred back for correction. Moved and carried that all scattered saints living in Oklahoma district should join the branch nearest or most convenient to them. The tent committee gave a verbal report. The following elders reported: A. J. Moore, C. R. Duncan, W. S. Macrae, R. M. Maloney, D. S. Crawley, S. J. Hinkle, and W. M. Aylor; each gave or sent remarks of encouragement and of willingness to aid the advancement of the latter-day work. Priest Thomas N. Berry sent report that he was willing to aid the work by preaching and also financially. Afternoon session. Bro. Moved that the amount on hand be used to pay off indebtedness on tent work. Remarks by W. S. Macrae, Sr. Mattie Hughes, R. M. Maloney, and C. R. Duncan. A substitute was offered, that the chair appoint a committee to solicit means to pay off indebtedness on tent. After some discussion the substitute was carried. Chair appointed Brn. H. B. Hart and George M. Hiles on committee. $4.75 was raised in the meeting. Moved and carried that Bro. Duncan be paid $1.50, which will settle the account with him. By motion, Bro. Hinkle was requested to make further effort to collect that which has been subscribed on the tent fund, and that it be used to pay off indebtedness on the tent; and if no indebtedness, it be used as tent fund. Adjourned to meet with Canadian Central branch, November 19 and 20. This ended the session of conference. The balance of the evening was given over to the Religio, which was ably represented by Brn. Hitchcock and Trowbridge. Sunday evening a specially prepared program, consisting of songs, oration, recitation, and the reading of our newspaper, the Sunday School Advocate, was well rendered. There was a good spirit present and all the workers seemed to be anxious to learn and to do what they could for the advancement of the work.

NOTICES.

To the Sunday school workers of the Northwest Kansas district, greeting:—Having been chosen to act as district Sunday school superintendent for the ensuing year, I wish to say that I am heartily in favor of the Sunday school. I believe Christ's injunction to Peter, "Feed my lambs," can be nicely carried out in Sunday school work. The seeds of gospel truth can be implanted in the minds of the young and youths that will be of lasting benefit, and bring them eternal life in the kingdom of God. I earnestly desire your cooperation in this work. Let us labor together to the end that some advancement shall be made in this noble cause throughout the district. Sr. Ella Landers, assistant superintendent, or I, shall endeavor to meet with each school sometime during the year.

Praying that our heavenly Father will bless each school, and the work in general, I remain yours in the interest of Sunday school work.

SOUTHERN WISCONSIN REUNION.

Beginning on Saturday, September 17, and closing on Sunday night the 25th, a reunion camp meeting was held near Janesville, Wisconsin, on the farm and near the house of Bro. O. N. Dutton. There were saints gathered from Janesville, Madison, Beloit, Evansville, East Delavan, Johnstown, and other points in Southern Wisconsin. The meetings were in charge of Elder W. A. McDowell, district president, assisted by Elder J. H. Lake, missionary in charge.

Each day a prayer meeting was held, lasting from nine to eleven o'clock or later. They were all of a very devotional character, and each one a favored occasion by the blessing of God's Spirit in the way of peace, joy, instruction, and as sources of strength in various ways. Also the gifts of prophecy, revelation, tongues, and interpretation were several times manifest.

There were twenty-one sermons preached, seven by Bro. J. H. Lake, eight by Bro. H. A. Stebbins, three by Bro. W. A. McDowell, two by Bro. C. H. Burr, and one by Bro. E. M. Wildermuth. The brethren who assisted and also had charge of the prayer meetings, besides the above were Brn. O. N. Dutton, W. P. Robinson, J. T. Hackett, J. B. Wildermuth, Peter Muceus, Leonard Houghton, and Frank Sanford.

The subjects preached upon were Faith, Repentance, Baptism, Laying on of Hands, Resurrection, Future State, Restoration of the Gospel, Coming of Christ, Signs of the Times, Millennial Reign, Tithing, etc. The size of the congregations increased each day, until on Saturday evening and Sunday the tent was crowded, and many sitting or standing about the edge of it. Excellent liberty in the Spirit was enjoyed by the speakers, and a good interest was manifested among the listeners. The best of order was had in the camp all the time. A large number were located and provided for in the home of Bro. and Sr. O. N. Dutton, whose hospitality was boundless, and in the camp all was likewise free to those who wished to partake. And, as the saints came for a feast of heav-only things, there was no pleasure seeking, but nearly a full attendance at every meeting, business or household duties only keeping any away.

On Saturday, 24th, the district conference transacted business, also through Bro. Lake, by the Spirit, were called Brn. Peter Muceus and J. B. Wildermuth from the priest's office to the eldership, also Bro. H. D. Stevens as a priest and Bro. Oliver McDowell as a deacon. They were ordained on Sunday, the 25th, by Elders Lake, Stebbins, McDowell, and Burr.

The Janesville Gazette published very excellent accounts of the meetings, giving space for a statement of the subject treated upon in each sermon. The saints separated with regret at having to part, but taking with them much joy and comfort because of the season of refreshing and of divine blessing. The weather was also perfect throughout the time.

She replied, "I am looking for Jesus; why I don't see where the Lord can be." Who can say the Lord was not a familiar friend to the dear old sister, whose life was full of goodness? She died September 9, 1898, aged 83 years, 1 month, 15 days. Funeral sermon by Elder S. W. L. Scott, an overflowing house heard the remarks with interest. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord."

THE JEWS AND THE HOLY LAND.

THE statement is made that: "A strong desire prevails now among the Jews of every civilized country for the rebuilding of Jerusalem, the acquirement of Palestine by purchase from the Turkish government, and for the colonization of the ancient Holy Land by the 'eternal wanderer.' They consider this idea as the best and most logical method of settling the Semitic question that is nowadays vexing Europe and worrying Israel throughout the world."

This is "important if true." For if a strong desire of that kind prevails there is no apparent reason why it should not be gratified. The Jews control a great deal of the capital of the world. They are singularly generous in the support of any cause which appeals to them. Furthermore, partly because of the great wealth of many of their members, they have influence at European courts. Anti-Semitic sentiments may prevail among ignorant or bigoted lower or middle classes, but rulers do not share them.

The only possible exception is in the case of the Russian government, which, either sharing popular prejudices or bowing to them, has in the past treated its Jewish subjects most harshly. If it wishes to see all the Jews out of the empire it ought to be willing to allow Palestine to be thrown open to them, so that they may go there instead of having to find new homes across the Atlantic. If Russia and the other powers were to insist on the sale of Palestine by Turkey, the Sultan would probably yield. He will be the more willing to do so because his treasury is bankrupt and the revenues of Palestine are insignificant. The loss of territory would be disagreeable, but money reconciles one to many disagreeable things.

Members of the Catholic and Greek churches, the Lutherans of Germany and Scandinavia, and the Protestants of England and the United States would rather see the Holy Land occupied by Jews than by Turks. And as Palestine has been badly governed by the Turks, the European powers ought not to object to the establishment there of a Jewish government, under which the country would be repopulated and become as productive as it was centuries ago. It may be, however, that one or more of the powers—France, for instance—have designs on the Holy Land themselves. In that event its sale at this time by Turkey would not suit their plans. Still, if the Jews are as much set on the purchase of Palestine as is reported, they should make the attempt. It will not take them long to find out if there are insurmountable obstacles.

CANADA'S FIGHT FOR PROHIBITION WILL CONTINUE.

OPINIONS OF PUBLIC MEN.

[Special to the Chicago Tribune by the Hon. E. King Dodds.]

TORONTO, Ont., Sept. 30.—The result of the vote on the plebiscite throughout the Dominion is a staggering blow to the prohibitionists. They have lost ground tremendously in Ontario, the banner province.

In 1894, when prohibition was submitted in Ontario alone, they polled 180,000, as against 108,000. This time their majority is not likely to exceed 10,000. The province they boasted they would win by 100,000 majority.

The leading centers of trade and intelligence give large majorities against them, only one small city, Brantford, giving a majority in their favor.

The Province of Quebec gives 40,000 majority against prohibition, Montreal City 2,000, and Quebec City over 6,000. Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, Manitoba, and British Columbia favor prohibition, but the vote recorded there was small. The total vote all over the Dominion is not likely to show more than 12,000 majority for prohibition.

SAYS THERE WILL BE NO LEGISLATION.

There can be no legislation by the federal government on prohibition lines. In fact, it is not likely that even the extreme wing of the Prohibition party will make any attempt to have a measure introduced in Parliament. The more moderate leaders of the temperance movement frankly admit that they are sorely disappointed over the result. In the wealthiest and most populous counties, where in 1894 they rolled up big majorities, they this time have either suffered defeat or won by only a few votes.

The Laurier government is relieved from a most embarrassing position, and politicians, both reformers and conservatives, are now satisfied that for long years to come prohibition is no longer a force to be dreaded. The temperance people made the fight of their lives. Clergymen all over the Dominion held nightly meetings in churches and halls, and a regiment of professional organizers were at work in all the provinces. Yet, despite this tremendous clerical pressure, the sense and intelligence of the people asserted itself, and the result is the obliteration of the prohibition question as a political factor to be dealt with by the leaders of either party. The years of anti-prohibition labor on the platform and through the press have been well rewarded.

CLEAR MAJORITY FOR PROHIBITION.

Ottawa, Ont., Sept. 30.—Sufficient returns of the prohibition plebiscite have come in to make it practically certain—and the liquor dealers admit it—that the rural vote in Ontario and the sweeping prohibition successes in the far western and far eastern provinces have carried prohibition in the Dominion at large by 20,000 majority, more or less. Later returns may reduce it to 15,000 or increase it 30,000.

Quebec is the only province of all Canada that has given a majority against prohibition, and it is a heavy one—40,872. The other provinces so far return the following majorities unofficially for prohibition: Ontario, 14,220; Nova Scotia, 17,679; New Brunswick, 12,540; Prince Edward Island, 6,186; Manitoba, 8,000; British Columbia, 220; Northwest Territory, 5,000.

In ministerial circles to-day it was said the plebiscite had received a knockout blow, the adverse majority in Quebec alone, to say nothing of the large cities in Ontario, making it unreasonable to effect the government to force any federal law destroying the liquor interests.

Various public men are outspoken against a prohibition law and say the government is not likely to press such a measure.

The Prohibition party will insist on the voice of the majority being obeyed, and are not likely to be in a mood to submit to complete neglect. If they cannot have prohibition they will aim at something not far removed from it. The fate of the ministry may be decided by the struggle. Indeed, party considerations had more to do than anything else with the queer twist the vote took in the large centers of population in Ontario.

PROHIBITION VOTE IN CANADA.

THE Rev. Duncan C. Milner spoke last evening at Armour Mission on "The Meaning of the Vote on Prohibition in Canada." He said, in part:—

"This vote as an expression of public sentiment is a recognition that in the minds of many of the best and most intelligent people the most important social and political question of the day is the control and suppression of the liquor traffic. It indicates clearer vision as to the abominations of a traffic in the bodies and souls of men, and a prevision of the coming day when the licensed traffic in intoxicating liquors will be on the level of the slave trade and other outlawed barbarities.

"The best light shows that intoxicating liquors as beverages are neither needful nor beneficial, but always harmful and perilous. This vote gives emphasis to the idea that 'what is physiologically wrong is morally wrong, and that what is morally wrong can never be politically right.'

"One Chicago paper claims that if Canada should exact a prohibition law, it will be but partially enforced, and a return will be made to license. When it is said that because a law against vice and crime is but partially enforced it should be abrogated we are saying to lawbreakers, 'Keep up violations of the law and you will soon compel the enactment of the kind of laws you want.' In spite of glaring violations to the laws against gambling in Chicago, we do not find reputable people or newspapers advocating their repeal and the legalizing of gambling hells."—Chicago Tribune, October 3.

BAD FLOUR HELPS DENTISTS.

"It is said that the invention of the new processes for making flour has done more for the average dentist than all things else combined," explained a dentist to a Star reporter, "and there is a great deal of foundation for the statement. The miller has found that he must make a flour that will please the eye rather than satisfy the stomach. To get his flour as white and fine as possible he has to discard the coverings of the grain of wheat, thus removing the phosphates. It is the phosphates that give strength to the teeth, and with them out of the flour it is not in any way wonderful that people's teeth wear out and decay. The miller knows this better than the people who eat his flour, but he has found that they will not buy flour that is not white. Should he use the darker portions of the wheat he could not produce a white flour, and so he makes what is demanded regardless of the consequences, and in doing so he is just pouring money into the pockets of dentists, though he may be suiting the esthetic tastes of the present day. The miller knows that he is throwing away the bone-producing and nourishing qualities of the wheat, but the miller, like nearly every one else in this world, is out for the dollars and his share of them. People can't buy flour the use of which will strengthen their teeth, for the reason that that kind of flour is not made any more. The family dentist is now as much of a factor in life as the purchase of shoes for the family, and frequently gets more of the earnings of a head of a family than is required to provide shoes for them, for good teeth are a rarity. If people knew it they can make up a great deal of what is thrown away in the making of flour by eating the skins of potatoes. I would advise everyone to eat the skins of baked potatoes especially. The skins of boiled potatoes do not contain much of the phosphates, for they are dissolved in the water in which the potatoes are boiled, but in baked potatoes they are nearly all saved. I don't know that it is esthetic to eat potato skins, though I am satisfied it is beneficial to the teeth to do so."—Washington Star.

EPIGRAMS BY DR. FRANK CRANE.

DR. FRANK CRANE preached at Trinity Methodist Episcopal Church yesterday on "Simon of Cyrene; or, Compulsory Crosses." Following are epigrammatic extracts from the sermon:—

"The touch of a famous man brings fame."

"How delicately balanced is the human heart! How slight a push can tip it into the abyss of woe!"

"Every strange blotch we see in the web of events is also in the divine pattern."

"There is one word which contains the essence of religion, philosophy, and experience—it is, 'Wait.'"

"Indifference is the satanic phase of selfishness; it was the Gadarene devils who cried: 'Let us alone!'"

"Christianity is a most meddlesome religion."

"The secret of a happy life consists in knowing how to accept inevitable responsibility as a privilege."

"No one can escape his cross. If he takes it up willingly it ennobles him; if he flees from it it pursues and crushes him."

"Nothing is so irritating as the opportunity to be noble and self-sacrificing when we want to be selfish and comfortable."

"We spend our lives striving for what would ruin us; what would enoble us God must thrust in our face."—Ex.

TRUTH RISES TO LIGHT.

It sometimes happens that the law of compensation in its operations acts like the fabled mills of the gods, which "grind slowly, but . . . grind exceeding fine."

Some time ago we received a letter from Bro. C. A. Albertson, Albion, Idaho, to the effect that a Utah elder by the name of Hyrum S. Lewis, a resident at Albion, and a returned missionary, had stated that while traveling in Idaho, he stopped at a house where a Mr. Thaddeus Cutler, son of Alpheus Cutler, showed him a printed copy of the plural marriage revelation published long before 1852.

We wrote to Cedar, Oklahoma, the home of Bro. Thaddeus Cutler, asking for the facts; the statement of Mr. Lewis having been made at a meeting, according to Bro. Albertson's letter. In due time the letter given below was sent us, and forwarded by us to Bro. Albertson for use and return. He returned it to us in a letter dated August 15, which we also publish in this connection.

What possible object Elder H. S. Lewis had in making the statement attributed to him we cannot see; unless it might be that he thought no one was present at the meeting who would call the statement in question, and that unquestioned it would serve the purpose of bolstering up the claim that the revelation, so called, was the production of Joseph Smith. "Be sure your sin will find you out."

We knew Alpheus Cutler when he was one of the Temple Committee at Nauvoo, and later while he lived at Manti, or Fisher's Grove, now Shenandoah, Iowa. We knew Thaddeus Cutler, son of Alpheus, both at Manti and at Nauvoo, where he for a time presided over the Olive branch of the church, about 1864 and '65. E. B. Webb, who wrote the letter given below, is a son-in-law of Bro. Thaddeus Cutler, which will account for the fact that Bro. Cutler was living at his house at the time of his death. E. B. Webb has lived in Utah, years ago, and is acquainted with some of the methods employed by the fraternity there. The elders may rely on his statement being substantially correct.

We were intimate with Bro. Thaddeus Cutler, had frequent and long conversations with him about the church, and are quite certain that if he had any such document in his possession he would have produced it for our information; for he despised lying, or the evasion of the truth.

ONEIDA, Oklahoma, March 27, '98.

Bro. Joseph Smith.—Your letter to T. Cutler, January 30, was forwarded to me from Cedar P. O. Father Cutler is dead. He was living with me at the time of his death. H. S. Lewis and some other Utah preachers came through there. I attended their meeting for cause. They let us strictly alone. I invited them home with me, and there is where Father Cutler, Lewis, and myself held quite a discussion. Father Cutler had no copy of the so-called revelation on celestial, or plural marriage, nor ever told him, Lewis, that he had. I was present all the time he was there. Mr. H. S. Lewis fabricated that story out of whole cloth. Father Cutler never affiliated with the Brighamite faction after 1847; but died strong in the faith of the latter-day message.

I will bring this epistle to a close by subscribing myself,

Yours in hope of rest in the resurrection,
E. B. WEBB.

P. S.—I received a letter from Bro. Culbertson at the same time, which I shall not answer.

ALBION, Idaho, August 15, 1898.

BRO. JOSEPH SMITH,

Lamoni, Iowa.

I have deferred long enough to send the statement of Bro. Cutler, as to that plural marriage relic. I enclose it in this.

I have been visiting among the people nearly all this spring from house to house, and talking to from one to a dozen at a time, besides holding meetings as I could get opportunity. They are more talkative at home, than elsewhere.

To my mind there is quite an under current of sentiment away from existing conditions and teachings, which can be discerned only by home chats.

There are many in that church though who would be of no use to the real gospel cause, unless their trend of thought could be entirely diverted from the present course. Nothing but worldly success, "temple building," "sealing for eternity," "propagating eternal lives in eternity"—a conglomerate mass of sophistry irrelevant to the gospel, or at best secondary in consideration, but head and shoulders above everything human and divine with them. It seems a great pity to surfeit the minds of the young people with such trash in the name of religion.

Satan has exhausted his store of logic to allure the mind and keep it occupied to no profit, or at least it seems so. Yet there are a goodly number who concede so much, it is hard to tell what holds them in line with such self-contradictions. One brother lately in one of our papers said he wished "the struggle was over;" but I am just getting nicely interested. The struggle must come closer and more earnestly, and to all who labor in humility and love for the truth's sake, overcoming evil with good, it must grow more intensely interesting. The eternal fiat is, Truth shall conquer error and evil. It means everlasting shame to stand as a neutral. If we properly sense the situation, or the battle for which we volunteered, as soon as we are "mustered in" by obedience, we pledge eternal, unswerving fidelity to the cause of truth and right; so purification of self is the armor, or uniform, and should shine as a beacon light, wherever our feet shall tread. But, how slowly is the "morning star" rising in the hearts of the children, "called to be saints."

"Come up higher," indeed, seems not so fully comprehended, yet is plain as English words can be. So many are absent, or unfit for duty; sin-sickness rages everywhere, yet all were expected to be "effectives."

Paul bemoaned, because many "walked as enemies of the cross," whose "belly" was their "god." "The world, the flesh and the Devil," are as potent to-day as ever.

"The helmet of salvation, and the sword of the Spirit" can only be effectual when used by clean hands nerved by a pure heart.

There is one sweet thought; the saints will wake up as the judgments of heaven become more severely felt. It is too bad that the "inhabitants" will be so slow to learn "righteousness."

I have been over the main part of this County, and it has been a profitable school to me too. I came home on the 13th from Marion to act as "master of ceremonies" at the marriage of a daughter of mine. But now, I wish I could have seen things as clearly thirty years ago, or from childhood rather. The best results are obtainable by cultivation and training, and there is no schooling like the spirit of the gospel.

The people in your father's day certainly did walk by sight, and saw things through a glass very darkly too, I think.

I want to be chosen of the Lord, and my prayer to God is that "Israel may be saved."

Yours fraternally forever,

CHARLES ALBERTSON.

THE SO-CALLED REVELATION AND THE TWO ZIONS.

THE Denver Republican for September 26 contains a half-column summary of a sermon delivered by Bro. J. B. Roush, of Denver, in which the lines of distinction between the Reorganization and the Utah Church are clearly drawn. Bro. Roush shows up the manifest origin of the revelation on polygamy, presented by Brigham Young on August 29, 1852, and called by Brighamites the revelation of July 12, 1843. It is passing strange that Joseph Smith, who had always been prompt in presenting revelations to the church and giving them widespread publicity, failed to present the so-called revelation of July 12, 1843, to the church during his lifetime; or, if, as asserted by the Brighamites, he presented it to the High Council of Nauvoo, it is strange that he did not cause it to be presented to the general church, to each quorum and to the general body, as he had invariably done with other revelations received as law and direction to the body.

Was he afraid so to do? Was there anything in the document of such a nature as to cause him to doubt the propriety of its teachings, or to fear that it might not be well received or not received at all by the people? Joseph Smith was a man of well-known courage; one who had borne his share of trial, suffering, and hardships all along the lines of the church's vicissitudes; who feared not to face great danger and possible death, and who finally went to Carthage knowing that death would probably be the outcome of his own and his brother Hyrum's incarceration under the guard of the Illinois militia.

The facts in the case look bad for the assertions of Brighamites interested in fastening the responsibility for the delectable dogma upon the name and reputation of Joseph Smith. Even Brigham Young, bold, daring, and self-assertive, had not the courage to present the wretched and worse than impious document before the people whom he had deceived and betrayed until he and his fellow conspirators had gotten their followers beyond the pales of civilization where they were practically obliged to "do" as "told" to do. No doubt the people under any other circumstances would have risen up against the proclamation of such monstrous principles as the so-called revelation contained.

The more the matter is examined the more apparent becomes the low and base designs of Brigham Young and his fellow conspirators. It has well been said by a prominent eastern editor that "Brigham Young has prostituted a religion." This verdict is being and will continue to be rendered by the American public; and not only by the American people, but by the world at large. The crime perpetrated (for crime and terrible crime it was and is) was perpetrated not only against the church and, in a personal sense against Joseph Smith, by laying upon him the reputation of introducing such wicked principles;—it was also a crime perpetrated against God and humanity. Those, therefore, who were and are parties to the crime, to the perpetuation of it by advocating it as a principle of the faith taught by the church under the presidency of Joseph Smith the Martyr, need not longer entertain the hope that the wickedness and falsity thereof will not be fully exposed. The Lord has said that "abomination shall not reign;" that wickedness and the secret acts of men should "be revealed." His purposes change not, and his forceful power is being exercised to the vindication of his cause, that it may be made glorious in the eyes of all nations, that the truth-loving among them may come to the truth and salvation that shall flow out of Zion—the pure in heart; not the so-called counterpart, the so-called Zion built upon the foundations of apostasy and polygamy in the mountains and valleys of Utah.

Already are seen the forces of disintegration and final death in the church of the wilderness—the apostasy that was "sent away" because of the rebellious spirit of its leaders and many of its people. It has come to pass that the world is having the true and the false under the name of Zion. The record of the true is consistent teaching, for the pure gospel and pure morality and true lines of administration in succession prescribed in the revelations given to the church in the days of the Seer—of the martyred Joseph and Hyrum, whom all true saints love and esteem, and whose memory they would shield and protect from cruel and undeserved and wicked misrepresentation and disgrace—are being held up by the Reorganized Church as an ensign to the people. The Zion being built up by the Reorganized Church will shine forth clearly in comparison with the error and darkness of Utahism, and the glory of the Lord will be seen upon and revealed through her; for the set time to favor her has come.

The record of the Reorganized Church is known and is becoming more widely known to the world. Its teachings have compelled respect, and commend it to the honest in heart. The record of the "Brighamite" Church is one of darkness, evil, departure—apostasy, both against the law of God and the law of the land. Like apostate Israel of old, the civil power has been obliged to put its strong hand upon her in punishment. She cannot consistently proclaim herself a light to and a teacher of the modern world, against the law and morality of which she has been a transgressor; not at least until she "repents" and "confesses" and "forsakes" her "sins," her false position.

The outcome of the present conflict will be well for the truth. Crushed to earth it has risen again and will continue to rise until its light penetrates and dispels the last vestige of darkness and death-producing philosophies that oppose or would evade its searching and purifying rays.

Both material and spiritual science teach that darkness produces disease and death, while light removes and dissipates them. So has it been, so must it ever be. Upon these lines the battle has been and must ever be fought; and those who do battle in the cause of light and truth will ever realize the superior force and power attending the service rendered, in contradistinction to the weakness of their opponents.

The wrong is to fail, the right to prevail under the reign of forces operated by him "who presides in the midst of all things." "For the word of God is quick, and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart. Neither is there any creature [nor anything] that is not manifest in his sight: but all things are naked and open unto the eyes of him with whom we have to do."

Watch the developments of our own times concerning the true and the false in the latter-day work. Mark the steady progress and rising influence of truth, and note the lowering and lessening influences of error and departure from God.

The so-called revelation on celestial marriage and other monstrosities and evils peculiar to the great latter-day apostasy will become universally known as such, and as such find and retain their proper legitimate place in the "blackness of darkness forever." The truth, on the other hand, will shine forth gloriously, and the redeemed of the Lord flow to and walk in the light of the true Zion.

THE following item of news is from the Trenton, Grundy County, Missouri, Republican, of September 29:—

The Mormons or Latter Day Saints have sent three very able elders into this neighborhood to expound the Scriptures as was taught by Joe Smith. These people have a beautiful little church building here, where they are stoutly defending their creed and faith against all comers and goers. They have just closed a two-days' debate with Rev. Fry, of the Holiness faith, against Rev. Chatburn of the saints. The general verdict was that Rev. Fry was outclassed. Elder Chatburn is a young, intellectual giant of Nebraska, and chaplain of the Nebraska State Senate. He is well educated and a fine speaker. The meeting still continues, aided by Elders White and Snively, who are proclaiming their peculiar doctrine with more than ordinary ability. Their hearers, however, are loth to believe that Joe Smith was any more an inspired prophet than was Joe Bowers, of Pike. DUSTY RHODES.

Due credit is given for the friendly or fair side of this notice. However, the correspondent, like many others, has failed to discriminate between the truth with the force accompanying it and the men representing it. It is possible, too, that Mother Grundy may be stalking abroad, even in Grundy County, hence that some folks need to wake up, brush themselves free from antiquated dusty accumulations and other accessories said to accompany or to light upon the confirmed Missourian, and catch up with progressive people, in their notions of things. Dust and other things that light down upon one are hindrances to progress if permitted to remain. They should be brushed off, both by physical and mental activity. From the substance of this correspondent's statements we judge there are none upon the brethren named.

THE Conservative, published at Nebraska City, Nebraska, contains the following note in its issue for September 22:—

A Mormon publishing house in Lamoni, Iowa, which sends a weekly paper to the Nebraska City Public Library, uses leaves from the English Bible as mailing wrappers. We fear that we do not quite see their point.

For the information of the Conservative and all whom it may concern or interest, the point is stated in brief: The publishing department of the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints prints and binds various books and periodicals, among them the English Bible. Like other publishers they at times use waste or spoiled sheets for wrappers. However, if the Conservative people will examine the publications sent out by the Herald Office, they will find an abundance of Bible in the columns, inside the mailing wrappers.

THE House of Bishops, of the Protestant Episcopal Church, which is to meet in triennial session, at Washington, D. C., October 4, will discuss some questions of importance to that church, according to the statement that follows from a Washington press dispatch:—

The convention is to last three weeks and some of the questions to come before the body will be of national as well as theological import. The proposed amendment on the canon of marriage and divorce will be one.

The question of changing the name of the church, which came up in a convention in Chicago over twenty-five years ago, will be again agitated. On account of the factions that exist in the church the Angelican and evangelical parties, it is expected, will create no end of discussion and perhaps dissension among the delegates.

OF the late Dr. John Hall, of New York, it was said at the late memorial service held in the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church: "Reality was the keynote of his character. His was a combination of faculties, large and strong, which gave him the uncommon greatness of common sense." It was said of Lincoln that, "In him common sense blossomed into fame." "Reality" and "common sense" are diverse from mere profession and simulation. They suggest the lines of Longfellow:—

"Let us then be what we are
And speak what we think,
And in all things keep Ourselves loyal to truth," etc.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

BRO. J. M. TERRY, wrote from Chicago, September 16:—

Church matters are moving smoothly so far, not a friction in the movements. We had an excellent meeting Wednesday night, when we spoke to over thirty in the parlor of a Presbyterian lady where we were invited to hold a meeting. Good attention and fine liberty were enjoyed. The lady had attended a cottage prayer meeting we had held in Father Culver's house near by. We open a new mission next Sunday on south side at 3411 Cottage Grove Avenue. This is for the general good of the cause we love so much, and for which I am happy to labor and sacrifice. I feel excellent in the work and the spirit within urges me onward and upward to greater achievements and higher ground. Bro. H. E. Moler is here; goes to Piper City to-morrow. Bro. Stebbins is expected to-day; goes to Janesville, Wisconsin, to-morrow. Had peaceful conference and profitable institute at West Pullman. Bro. Lake is at Janesville; is feeling quite well in body and spirit. Was here and preached Tuesday night. Saints quite well, save Bro. and Sr. Gillet, who are both sick.

Sister M. E. Bunyard and R. A. Anthony will welcome an elder of the one faith at Cook, Louisiana. She writes:—

I have a nice little country home with my brother. I know he would treat an elder very kindly, for so he did the Utah Mormons. He just read their books enough to become interested. I request the faith and prayers of the Sisters' Prayer Union, if it is God's holy will that I may get my little boy back. I have the promise that I will get him if I live faithful, and pray for me that I may be humble and faithful and that God will enable me to raise my children up in the love and service of the Lord. The nearest railroad station is Grandcane, or Mansfield, on that route; Logansport on the other railroad. We are well known at either place. You are not likely to have any trouble in finding us. We live half way on the Logan and Mansfield dirt road.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

BRO. F. J. PIERCE, Centralia, Kansas, sends us a clipping from a local paper, which contains a defense of the faith and a plea for toleration, in religious and general lines of thought and action. This effort to enlighten and educate the public mind is made in good spirit and ought to have a good effect.

At the monthly business meeting of the Lamoni branch held on Tuesday, the 4th inst., a resolution was adopted expressing the sentiment of the meeting that rates of board for college students or members of the faculty should not exceed $2.50 per week, including cost of room, fuel, and light. Those who contemplate attending college, also those desiring to send students, will see in this action a disposition to make prices for board as low as possible. It is the prevailing sentiment of the people of Lamoni to make the incidental expenses of students as low as possible, with a view to encourage and to help all students interested in obtaining an education. Every possible advantage is being offered to those who mean to avail themselves of the privileges afforded by the college and the general influences of the community for good.

Bishop E. L. Kelley arrived home from Jacksonville, Florida, on Thursday, the 6th inst. He left his son Winfred in the care of his second son Edmond, slowly improving and on the road to recovery, and who will be brought home as soon as able to travel.

Bro. G. H. Hilliard arrived at headquarters on Monday, the 3d inst., coming in from Western Iowa, where he has been laboring of late.

Bro. E. A. Blakeslee, of the Bishopric, reached Lamoni from Michigan on Thursday, the 6th inst.

Bro. David Dancer, of Lamoni, was taken seriously ill on Monday, the 3d inst., at his home, and has since been confined to his bed. His condition is critical, but hopes are entertained for his recovery. Late reports show improvement in his condition.

Bro. George Derry requests a correction in his late letter to the HERALD—last issue. In the fourth paragraph, ninth line, it should read, "that he must not administer the sacrament unless there be an elder present." It was erroneously given "no" elder for "an elder."

Bishop Kelley was called by telegram to Hastings, Iowa, on Monday, the 10th inst., by reason of the death of one of his nephews, a son of John S. Kelley.

Pres. Joseph Smith and Bro. W. H. Kelley left Lamoni on the 8th inst., to dedicate a church in Grundy County, we understand, in Far West district.

The Emperor of Germany, accompanied by a brilliant suite and a numerous retinue will start for Jerusalem and other points in Palestine on the 13th inst.

"One language held his heart and lip,
Straight onward to his goal he trod,
And proved the highest statesmanship Obedience to the voice of God."

"In the name of all you hope to know," wrote Phillips Brooks, "cling close to what you know already. Make much of it, live up to it, count it very precious, hold it fast in the bosom of a loving life." Ah, how much to one who knows the truth of Christ's gospel is embraced in these words! The mind cannot grasp in the smallest degree at a glance, neither after much thought and earnest reflection will the heights and depths of this knowledge be revealed. Paul enumerated many things which he declared should have no power to separate him from the love of God in Christ Jesus; what then should ever be allowed to separate us from the blessed knowledge of the divinity of Christ and the truth of his gospel? Let us then cling to this knowledge; "make much of it, live up to it, count it very precious, and hold it fast in the bosom of a loving life." Why should we stumble through regarding too closely the steps of any man or woman, and thus not taking sufficient thought for our own? "Who art thou," O man, "that judgest another man's servant? to his own master he standeth or falleth." "The world is hungry for God, and is dying for the want of the spirit of truth and love."

PAPEETE, July 11.—Back to the missionary house again. Well, glad and thankful. After waiting several weeks for a chance to come to Papeete in a vessel, we were obliged to abandon the thought and make up our minds to undertake the voyage in a boat. So the brethren set themselves to see what boat could be got—all were busy and using their boats. Since Tetuarere's could not go, Joseph suggested getting Torohia's. Putoa said he would go across the lake the next morning and see this brother. That night

Torohia saw in his dream a man coming towards him, and said, "I want you to go in your boat and take the Governor to Papeete," to which he readily consented. So when he saw Putoa and Pori coming toward him in a little canoe, he knew their errand before they spoke. Torohia is quite an elderly man, and his wife is more aged than himself.

She was at work across a creek from where he was, when the brethren reached him. Seeing them talking, she threw herself in the creek and swam across to learn what the news was, thinking nothing of wearing her wet clothes till they dried. "Yes," said she, "you go and take the Orometua to Papeete, and I will stay and make bufa."

We left Panau with its kind-hearted people on Thursday morning, June 16, accompanied by Putoa, wife, and child; Alfred Sanford, wife, and child; Taibia and wife, besides Torohia and boy. According to the law of these islands we were compelled to first go to Rairoa, where Torohia could sign papers as captain of his boat, since another man had been captain the last time she was entered at Papeete. Rairoa was some fifty miles out of our way. The sea was very rough, that is a heavy swell and not wind enough to keep the boat steady. She knocked about badly, rolling and dipping the end of the main boom and sail well under water; in consequence I was sick all day. The swell and occasional breezes were nearly aft, so we got along so as to make the lower point of Rairoa before dark. Then as we hauled around and got in the lee of the land, a nice little breeze sprang up and hauled a little so as to be on our quarter, and we ran along fine all night. Got to the first pass, "Tiputa," early in the morning. Had the wind continued as it was the day before, we could not have entered. The tide was running out in a manner that no one can imagine except those who see it. The boat crept along pretty close to the reef, where the tide was the most slack; but there was very little wind. We had one more little jut or point of reef to pass, then the men were going to jump overboard with a line, climb on the reef and tow her the rest of the way against the tide. Just opposite that point the tide was eddying strongly. As we entered the eddy pool the wind dropped away altogether, and we were turned around and borne out again. The men were plying a big long oar vigorously, to keep her off the reef. I remarked to Mr. Burton, "How necessary it is to have a long heavy oar with them."

He said, "That oar came floating down towards the boat yesterday morning, from nobody knows where, and got close by the boat just as we started, and the men picked it up."

We stayed out about an hour, and thinking the tide was a little more slack, tried again, there being a little more breeze. We got to the same place, were turned about, and were borne out again. This time we stayed out till ten o'clock, then tried again and rounded the point, when two of the men sprang into the sea and towed her inside. We recognized a Father's guiding hand again. Had we remained out ten minutes longer we could not have got in till after night, for a heavy wind and rain squall was already coming across the lake, driving right towards the pass.

Seeing that the village was entirely deserted, we knew that the government official must be in at the rahui. We made a start to cross the lake, but the wind was becoming so fierce we put back to the deserted village again, where there was one boat load of people and hogs, on their way to Tikahau. They had stopped there to catch some fish and cook themselves a meal on the shore. The canoe was just coming in with the fish, so they shared them with our crew—those others were saints too—and all hands cooked their meal ashore. We sat on the porches of some of the empty houses so as to be out of the rain. It ceased to rain towards night, and the boat started off for Tikahau, but we remained. The natives slept ashore; Joseph and I in the boat.

Next morning being Saturday, we got under way and started across the lake; beat all day against a strong head wind and high, short sea. The natives had not had anything to eat since their breakfast, and were getting very hungry; so about four o'clock when we perceived that we could not reach our destination, they watched out for a place to anchor near the shore, where the boat could be sheltered from the force of the wind, and soon came to anchor. Presently they rounded to; one man took the little anchor in his hands and sprang overboard and hooked it into a rock, and while he and another one were warping in and mooring the boat, Putoa's wife, Tetua, got a big knife, gathered her skirts about her, and plunged into the sea, scrambled up on a shelf of rocks and hunted clams. They are not at all like our Nova Scotia clams. She would dig them off the rocks, pry open the large heavy shells, and take out the clam—which resembled two large oysters on each end of a piece of black and white crimply tape about two fingers long. These she strung on her fingers till she could hold no more. One of the men was out on the rocks spearing fish. His wife—a young woman—let herself drop into the sea, swam to the rocks, and with dripping, clinging clothes went fishing with him. Alfred's wife gathered her skirts about her, stepped cautiously from the bows of the boat onto the rocks, tied a bundle of clothes on her head, set her little girl astride of her shoulder, and with one hand holding her clothes and another carrying a large bundle, and the child clinging to the one on her head, she waded ashore, where they made a fire, cooked their supper, built a camp, and slept all night, and breakfasted in the morning. Alfred and the captain and Joseph and I remained on the boat.

We got to the "rahui" about noon on Sunday, where nine of our Papeete and Tiona people were. We were very kindly received. Attended the afternoon prayer meeting, and Joseph preached in the evening. There was another rahui six miles beyond, where the Avatoru branch was. They heard of our arrival among the people, and the whole branch left their work on Monday and walked the six miles and back again to greet us, have a few hours' visit, and invite us to their rahui.

As the weather was still cloudy and windy, we accepted the invitation, and went with the boat on Monday afternoon and stayed till Wednesday. Joseph preached at seven in the morning, then we hurried off as soon as possible, for during meeting the clouds had broken away, wind hauled fair, and the sun shone out beautifully. Had a fine run up the lake over twenty miles.

Got to "Avatoru pass" about three p. m. A few people were at the village, who had been notified of our coming, and had a house all prepared, and a good soft bed ready. But we had lain on the ground and on the floor so long, I did not feel at home at all on a soft bed. During these visits I had become accustomed to the boat and was not seasick any more, also to being paddled about over the clear waters in the canoes, and enjoyed it keenly, feeling about ten years younger than a month before, and spent most of the time about the shore hunting shells. The pink topped shells, of which that shore abounded, looked so pretty when seen among the broken coral of various colors when not by the sea, it was a pleasure to seek them. The saints also—men, women, and children—furnished me with quite a quantity besides those I gathered. While at the rahui, I took one of the sisters and started out to scale the broad, dark, rocky reef, not the ledge that the sea breaks on, but those high above that which separate the ocean from the lake where the land is not. I imagined there were some beautiful large shells lying on the other side if I could only get there, and so wended my way around, between and over those sharp pointed rocks—taking care not to stumble—till I reached the ocean shore. But the shells were not there. The rocks were too sharp for the native sister's feet, and she remained waiting my return.

On Thursday afternoon the weather looked more promising again, the morning had been very stormy, and as we could not replenish with food again when that which we had was gone, we resolved to sail at once for Papeete, a distance of two hundred miles. The sea was nice while in the lee of the land, nor did we feel the full force of the wind, though the captain had reefed the sail and taken in one jib. About dusk we cleared the land, and had a rough night. At daylight Makatia was seen away behind on the weather quarter, and the high lands of Papeete were plainly seen in the afternoon. The reef was not shaken out of the sail during the day, neither the following night. At about twelve in the night they thought they were getting too near the land and stood off again about two hours. Then the sea became smooth and the wind dropped away, so we did not get in the harbor till midday on Saturday. And though we enjoyed our visit well everywhere, the saints remembered that we could not live on good wishes in Papeete, had provided the more substantial aid.

We are glad to get home again and settle down to more steady work, and feel much recruited in health. Mr. Burton has only had one slight attack of neuralgia, if such it is, since conference. The prayers of the saints have prevailed, we hope. Please forgive this lengthy letter, and retaliate one and all, in like manner.

NOTICE TO CHAIRMEN OF DAUGHTERS OF ZION LOCALS.

It is earnestly requested that the present chairman of each local organization of Daughters of Zion send her name and address to Mrs. H. H. Robinson, Box 437, Independence, Jackson County, Missouri, who has lately been appointed Corresponding Secretary of Advising Committee, our worthy and competent sister, Audentia Anderson, who has served so long, having resigned for want of more time needed for the work attached to this office. While we reluctantly lose her as Corresponding Secretary, her heart is in the work and we still have her valuable assistance as one of our Advisory Committee. Sisters, please give this request your immediate attention, as we wish a new list of the names of all chairmen of locals for aid in our work.

MRS. M. E. HULMES,

INTERMEDIATE WORK.

IT IS a little difficult for grown people to adapt themselves to the point of view from which children perceive things. Then, again, one may understand children out of school, yet scarcely know how to apply their knowledge in class work until several experiences have given them their cue.

MUST BE ACQUAINTED.

I find a teacher must be thoroughly acquainted, first, with those he is to teach; and second, with the matter he intends to bring before them. He needs to be prepared for the unexpected, which is always happening, where children are concerned. We are obliged to study them out of school to know what will interest them in school. Froebel, the great educator of child character, says: "If you wish to discover what will interest a child in its work, watch it at its play." I presume it is on the same principle that governs instinct in animals, a reaching out after that which will satisfy its natural cravings. He says each act is significant to the intelligent student of character, none being too small to engage his attention as to what prompted it. Then, too, by observing what the child lays hold of in satisfaction of its desire, we will know what especially appeals to it, and how to arrange our instruction accordingly. No fact, however true of itself, is of benefit to an individual unless that individual can understand and receive and know how to apply it. As all education is for the purpose of developing the innate character, by drawing out the inner man, and in making external truth his, we must first know what position he holds toward the outside world, whether he is near or far away from it. We all see truth from different standpoints, and our perceptions are modified by our natural qualities or disposition. Consequently, a teacher cannot make even a successful beginning until he has studied the material he has to work with. No two people are exactly alike. Because of this, what would appeal to one would make but little impression upon another.

MUTUAL CONFIDENCE.

It is our ambition, of course, to teach all truth; but we find it necessary to work to that end by various processes. The sympathy and tact born of good fellowship will usually give us an insight into the different dispositions with which we will come in contact in the relation of teacher and pupil, and when mutual confidence is established, the longest step toward education has been taken.

KNOW THE BIBLE.

The pupils should be encouraged in every way possible to prepare their lessons thoroughly at home, using not only the Quarterlies, but their Bibles as well; and when a point of dispute is raised, it should be decided by reference to the Bible and not the Quarterly. The children should be trained to turn to the various books or parts of the Scriptures without hesitation, and each member of the class, when in Sunday school, should have his Bible open to the lesson text during class work. In the Teacher's Class Book, there is provision made for the proper credits being given pupils for preparing their lessons during the week, for memorizing the Golden Text, and for good behavior. Every teacher should explain to his class the value of obtaining these credits, and try to have his class become the Banner Class. The proper kind of ambition is commendable, and, as a rule, is quite an incentive toward good work.

A PLAN FOR FUTURE WORK.

I have outlined a plan for the next quarter which I intend to try at least. Beside endeavoring to encourage my class to prepare their lessons thoroughly out of school, I mean to give each one some special matter to hunt up, such as, the character of the people under discussion; their home life; dress; features; habits; form of government; style of architecture; temples and modes of worship; condition of the surrounding country; and all those details which will tend to impress the children with the reality of the people about whom they are studying; and by becoming acquainted with their everyday lives, feel the distance between them materially shortened. I would like also to have each pupil provide himself or herself with a

the first page or two to be devoted to maps, and the remaining pages to brief notes from the information obtained by means of these slips. The maps need not be drawn all at one time, but I believe would be more enjoyed if the different towns or kingdoms were added as they appeared in the various lessons, and not before. For instance, Egypt would not be drawn on the map until the Children of Israel went down into that country, and as far as we can place them now, the towns and cities mentioned as lying along their route, could be inserted. This could be made more interesting where there were boys and girls in one class, for the girls would naturally be more interested in learning of the home life and all that pertained to it, while to the boys could be given all that related to the country, government, architecture, and kindred subjects.

QUESTIONS IN THE QUARTERLY.

In any event, the questions on the lesson should not be asked in just the form they appear in the Quarterlies, for in that case the children could learn them "by heart," to forget them by the next Sunday. Sometime the lesson could be told in story form, beginning with the teacher, each member of the class adding some incident as it came his turn, the teacher finally concluding it. In this case, the teacher should see that all the main points are brought in. It might be well to educate the children in what comprised the "main points," for they are apt to overlook them, otherwise, or give all the same value. Teach to hunt for them, occasionally calling upon the class to write out what appears to each one to be the central thought or thoughts. Have them compare the events of that time with what are transpiring in this; also draw parallels or point out the difference between the customs and general conditions of eighteen hundred years ago and those of to-day. Where points of principle or rules of conduct are brought up by the lesson, they may be given something of a personal application, or a small parable may be used to illustrate them. The idea throughout being to bring the remote past down to a live present, and put the subject and the child upon the same plane.

AMOUNT OF WORK.

A fact illustrated is a fact preserved, whether it be by personal application, black-board work, or charts. In picturing anything, use only the most simple ideas, and materials familiar to children. It should be more our aim to properly reach a child and get even one point firmly fixed in his mind, than to crowd a number, none of which will be remembered or be of any use to the receiver of them. A child has the right to demand that what he receives in his mind shall be worth something, and not only valuable in the abstract, but of value to himself.

CAUTION.

It is hardly necessary to say a teacher should never make a child conscious of a weakness or seeming dullness in class work. There are comparatively few who follow the teacher readily at first.

POSITION OF CLASS.

If possible, the class should be arranged so it could not see what was going on in other classes, otherwise it will take too active interest in affairs not its own.

I hope these few suggestions may prove of benefit.

MANSFIELD, Mass., Sept. 29.

Editors Herald:—The renewal of ministerial labors in former fields and among the scenes of our first labors or efforts in that direction has been one of pleasure to us, and we trust of profit to the old and new friends to the gospel cause that greet us in our travel in the Massachusetts district. We have preached so far in Providence, our former home, Attleboro, and Plainville; going the 10th of present month to Fall River. Was with the church there over two Sundays, visiting in company with Bro. John Smith, of New Bedford, in the afternoon of the second Sunday, speaking that and upon the following evenings in New Bedford.

Our visit to Fall River and New Bedford was made a very pleasant one by the hospitality and kindness of Brn. Ashton, Dr. Gilbert, and John Smith, at whose homes we were made welcome and nicely entertained. Returning from Fall River Wednesday evening of last week we met with the saints in Providence in social service, a large attendance and good meeting, a thing not uncommon in Providence. Friday evening we spoke in Auburn, a suburb of the city. Sunday morning, in company with Bro. George Gates, we went to Fiskville, about twelve miles distant, where a little company of saints had erected a chapel about two years ago, principally through the leadership and effort of Bro. Geo. Robley, who has baptized some excellent people there, and whose work is to be commended as of an abiding character, as we believe; and this people and mission need attending to by live, energetic, capable ministers, as indeed is very apparent in other places as well. Splendid social meeting and excellent liberty in proclaiming the word, with strong and urgent pleas for help and return, Sunday evening, back to Providence to fill appointment, in their chapel.

Monday evening, through arrangement with the district president, Bro. Bullard, we came here to Mansfield to assist Bro. Robley in an attempt to introduce the work. A storeroom, rather poorly equipped, in a one-sided place of a disinterested or preoccupied community has resulted in what seems to be so near a failure as to lead us to conclude that we have either struck the wrong time or the wrong place. We are, however nicely cared for at the home of Bro. and Sr. Abercrombie, who, expecting to soon move from this place, were desirous that a warning should be given at least of the gospel and its restoration; a worthy and conscientious motive and principle; and if the good sought fails to accrue to this people, the responsibility may not lie with them nor the missionary, who once in a while is forced by his experiences into sympathy with old Father Noah and his family. It's a beautiful thing, however, to be able to know of your whereabouts, even if you find yourselves outside of the crowd.

I find in Bro. Robley a congenial companion and a good preacher. Our visit has been pleasant and we are sure not altogether without profit. Some have been warned.

Big parade and celebration of A. O. U. W. order to-day and night, and that beats any gospel conception or interest which the masses possess.

We expect to speak in Boston Sunday, going to Brockton the week following, and Saturday, the 8th, to the district conference at Fall River. Brn. Luff and Alexander Smith are in Nova Scotia and Maine. I expect to see Bro. Smith at our conference, but am not certain of his presence.

Labor, instruction, warning, wise counsel needed, and to be heeded, in many places where the work has been permitted to languish and decay. Care and caution in building or reconstructing,—whether as to men's notions, or the law.

I am happy to meet the old friends and the new that have been made in my absence, and have been welcomed cordially enough everywhere, if that is all that is necessary to give one peace of mind. A present consciousness always with you that you are in the place and doing the work which heavenly wisdom orders, constitutes, however, the supreme satisfaction. Matters unexpected may compel our return west for a short time, in November.

The change for the better in the health of Sister Bond since leaving St. Louis will result in her remaining in Providence for this winter at least. My health is somewhat improved and am happy in the evidences of God's goodness toward his children, and in the possession of the "peace" promised through a knowledge of the truth and saving power and grace of the gospel restored.

M. H. BOND.

BARNES, Kan., Sept. 29.

Editors Herald:—Elder D. Collins, of Secor, Illinois, took down the Campbellite flag at Greenleaf, Kansas, at the close of the discussion there September 23. The ceremony, in part was: "Mr. Pender has had decidedly the advantage in this discussion. I suppose he understands all the dead languages; can read Greek and Hebrew; writes shorthand, etc., etc.!"

It is true Mr. Pender had decidedly the advantage in the discussion, as he had only truth to assert and maintain, while his opponent assailed truth and tried in vain to bolster up error. And into what straits it led him; into what confusion, into what contradictory positions, into what abortive efforts to malign the man of God who gave the world the Book of Mormon; into what shame and humiliation, when it clearly appeared that all the immorality brought up in the debate was located, not in the Book of Mormon nor in its translator, but in Mr. Collins himself! He was repeatedly caught in misreading the Book of Mormon. He would sometimes read correctly and then grossly misrepresent. To illustrate: He read from page 199, Book of Mormon: "Now this man [Korihor] went over to the land of Jerushon also, to preach these things among the people of Ammon, . . . but behold, they were more wise than many of the Nephites; for they took him and bound him, and carried him before Ammon, who was a high priest over that people." Mr. Collins declared they had bound him because he would not accept Mormonism! Yet the context shows he was bound and tried for criminality, and not on account of what he believed. A part of the account states: "Now, there was no law against a man's belief: for it was strictly contrary to the commands of God that there should be a law which should bring men on to unequal grounds. If a man desired to serve God it was his privilege; but if he did not believe in him, there was no law to punish him."

During the debate he assured the people he would not stoop so low as Braden had done. Yet, on Sunday night, the debate having closed on Friday night, he lectured on the origin of the Book of Mormon and reproduced the "Spalding story," and Braden was his chief witness!

During discussion of the Book of Mormon proposition, the Inspired Translation of the Scriptures was assailed. This was objected to, objection overruled by the chair, and decision of the chair was sustained by majority vote of those present. I then challenged Collins to put in one session of two hours with me in examining the Inspired Translation, and I would affirm it to be superior to either King James' Translation or Revised Version. Then, he suddenly remembered that he had come to Greenleaf for a different purpose. I then announced that on Saturday night, the evening following the close of the debate, I would lecture on the Inspired Translation, and invited Collins to use half of the time. He did not accept the invitation, and during the balance of the debate he was suspiciously quiet about the Inspired Translation.

When his own church was under examination, he wished to examine the apostles of the Latter Day Saints; wished to know whether they have "signs," etc. No matter what question was up for consideration, he was never ready for that, the business of the hour.

At the close of his "black-sheep," "stolen-peekstone," "Solomon Spalding story," lecture Sunday night, I asked for three minutes in which to address the people. This he would not grant until he ascertained that I only wished to announce a reply the evening following, though I had invited him to use half of the time of my lecture on the Inspired Translation the night before!

Only about half as many people were present on Monday night to hear the reply, as listened to Mr. Collins on Sunday evening. Sufficient numbers were present, however, to enable us to correct his stale and silly fabrications in the community.

With thoughtful and unprejudiced minds they needed no correction.

If the Book of Mormon is fraudulent and Joseph Smith imposed it upon the world, as claimed by the opposition, it is a matter of regret that the gentlemen who undertake to prove this feel themselves, as a rule, compelled to resort to all kinds of subterfuge, trickery, and dishonorable and dishonest methods. Is it possible the truth must be bolstered up by such shameless methods? If the truth in this controversy is lodged with our opponents, it has for once fallen into unfortunate hands.

"A certain man went down from Jerusalem to Jericho and fell among thieves." Innocence betrayed; but by whom, as concerns this contention? I find the Book of Mormon and the revelations and authentic statements of Joseph Smith condemn everything of a dishonorable or unjustifiable kind, while they enjoin unswerving integrity and the highest virtues. They create within heart and brain an aspiration to be the noblest of the noble; the bravest of the brave; the kindest of the kind; of patriots, the most patriotic; of the generous, the most generous of them all. While the controversy continues to be thus waged; "while virtue is lovely and vice is hateful,"—"sink or swim, live or die, survive or perish," let my voice and my pen be used in vindication of the Book of Mormon and in defense of the reputation of its translator. Let lying tongues be justly and witheringly rebuked; both he that maketh a lie and he that peddleth it abroad. Let confusion come upon both alike, and let their heritage be that of shame and remorse; let the voice of scandal be no longer heard in the land; let the "refuge of lies" be destroyed, O Lord, nor let thy servants' voices be stilled until the earth is filled with the knowledge of thy truth!

Ten sessions of two hours each were held, the first five being devoted to the consideration of Book of Mormon, the last five to an examination of the Christian Church. Two sessions were held daily; one beginning at two p. m., the other at 7:30 p. m. The interest was good throughout the debate, though the attendance was not large. Average attendance at evening sessions about two hundred and fifty; day sessions less than one hundred.

I was called to Baker by telegram, to discuss the Sabbath hobby with our Adventist friends. We held three sessions on the Seventh-day questions, with Mr. Bagby, an inexperienced minister. He felt competent to meet us on the Sabbath issue, and assured us he would secure a minister to debate church propositions with us. As the discussion of the Seventh-day question progressed, it became very apparent that Mr. Bagby had new matter and new issues to meet, and that to him the whole question assumed a new phase which he was not prepared to meet. The minister he had sent for came at last and occupied the negative the last night of the debate, on the first-day question. He used most of his time in an effort to revive the seventh-day theory, rather than to answer few but incontrovertible evidences of a first-day rest under the Christian system. But would he discuss church propositions? Not he. Upon a multitude of pretexts and flimsy excuses, Babylon, all along the line, when we ask to examine the texture of her theological fabric, politely and coyly answers, "Excuse me, please;" and, like the young man who received a similar reply from his "sweetheart," when he asked for her hand in marriage, we "gracefully" submit.

Bro. Editor, I am glad I am a Latter Day Saint. And as the battle is on, and the fight becomes thicker and hotter, I am happier in the thought.

W. S. PENDER.

LONDON, Eng., Sept. 19.

Editors Herald:—I believe it is only just that the church should be informed from time to time as to the work of its ministers; and knowing too how anxious some of our members are in America to receive news of the progress of the work in this country, it seems to me a duty to keep them informed, of the leading events at least, of my mission here.

I left Plymouth where I last wrote you, July 28, to attend the mission conference at Birmingham. Here I had the pleasure of meeting Bro. and Srs. Newton, and it was indeed a pleasure to shake hands with those so lately from our native land. We also enjoyed meeting Bro. Heman Smith and other brethren, from different parts. The conference passed off peacefully. The good Spirit was present; the gifts of prophecy and tongues were manifest, giving words of comfort and cheer. Then came the hour of parting. Wife went to Bristol, Bro. Newton to Plymouth, Bro. Smith, after a year's absence, back to his loved ones at home. For his sake we felt glad, but for ourselves we felt sorry that he could not have remained with us.

I had consented to remain in Birmingham to preach the following night, but as no one came to the meeting but the president and the two deacons, I was sorry I had not gone with the others; for there came over me such a feeling of bitter loneliness that was hard to shake off. There seemed to be no immediate demands for my services anywhere. I hardly knew what to do or where to go, and then it seemed as though all the powers of darkness combined in an effort to dishearten and discourage. Overcoming these feelings as best I could, my first visit was to Wolverhampton, where I had heard the Brighamites were meeting with some success, and at which place we had a few members. The way did not seem to open up to favor operations there at the time, but we left instructions with the brethren how to proceed, and as soon as an opportunity offered for opening the work there to let us know, and we would try and take advantage of it.

For some time I had felt drawn towards London. So joining my wife at Bristol, to which place I had a return ticket, we proceeded on to London, taking advantage of an excursion to Windsor, this affording us a cheap rate, as well as giving us an opportunity of viewing the Queen's home. After about three hours at the palace we were on our way to London, where we arrived late in the afternoon.

Wishing to avoid burdening the saints, our next task was to find a lodging house. We had been recommended to the neighborhood of Regent's Park, as it was necessary that wife should find as clean and healthy a location as possible; but we soon discovered that the rates were too high for our limited means, so we boarded a street car and soon found ourselves in a pretty part on the extreme north, known as Kentish Town. Here we continued our search up one street, down another, till wife's strength was about exhausted. All the time something kept whispering, "You see now God has not sent you here, or he would have prepared the way before you." "Could he not very easily direct your steps to the right place?" "Were you not told that the angels would go before you?" "What is the use of you trying to do anything in this country anyway?" "Can you not see how everything works against you?" etc., etc. At last, however, we found a place, not to suit us, but which would answer till we had time to look further and take in the situation. The next morning I received the comforting influence of the Holy Spirit assuring me that I was not forsaken and that all would be well. I said to wife, "It is all right, Ma; I have made no mistake in coming to London."

I met with the saints at their hall on Sunday and was kindly received. They were not only willing; but appeared pleased to have my assistance. I found some willing workers, fully alive to the interest of the work. Some of the members, however, have given way to a spirit of coldness and indifference, absenting themselves from meetings. The few, however, did what they could to advertise the meetings and arouse an interest. To my astonishment they had ten thousand bills printed, which they scattered far and wide. I began to calculate the results. Each bill it seemed to me, ought to be read by at least five persons; then supposing only half of those came who read the bills we should have a crowd of about twenty five thousand people; and whatever could we do with the crowd? But the brethren did not appear at all concerned, but scattered the bills rather recklessly. Well, time proved that there was no cause for alarm, as less than half a dozen appear to have been brought out by this effort. It is the old story: People will not come to hear.

Seeing that something must be done in order to reach the people, it was finally decided to try street preaching. Some of the brethren here have done considerable of this kind of work, and they agreed to break me in. Up to this time I had only preached a few times on the street; once in company with Bro. E. Dewsnup, and at another time in Wales. It has always been very distasteful to me? I was willing to overcome my own feelings and try almost anything in order to reach the people, and decided to give this method a fair trial. I am very glad I did, for thus far it has proven a success. People will stand from one to two hours at a time and listen very attentively. I have had excellent liberty in preaching, also in answering questions, and we are able in this way to reach hundreds where we would not reach one in our hall.

I did not expect the people would give such close attention as they do, but thought they would most likely stand but for a few moments and move on and others take their places. And it is very disagreeable to try to talk to a traveling congregation. Sometimes a little opposition develops, but nothing serious. Sometimes four or five will be asking questions at the same time, but this only makes the meetings all the more interesting and the crowds all the larger. One night a drunken fellow kept interfering. I tried in every way to quiet him, but without success. Finally he was by my side talking about as fast as myself. All I could do was to raise my voice and drown his. For a time it was a test of lung power. I had good liberty, and my disturbing companion soon subsided and we have not been disturbed by that element since.

Generally some of the members of other churches will interrupt us with questions, and at times so earnest are they that it is difficult to tear ourselves away, even though we continue till after eleven o'clock, and sometimes till nearly midnight.

Of course we cannot say how many will join the church, but I do know that every night numbers bear testimony to the truth of what is told them. Some have said it is just what they have been looking for for years. But, in this work we need lots of literature; we need tracts by the thousands. We gather up all the Heralds and Ensigns and tracts we can find, and then we do not have half enough. We even give them the children's paper, the Hope. This kind of work is very trying on the vocal organs, especially when continuing every night. I hope my voice will not give out, but I am very hoarse. I certainly was never more blessed with liberty in preaching, so I cannot help believing that good is being done. Questions on the Book of Mormon, Joseph Smith, Brighamism, etc., help us in bringing out these subjects all the more clearly.

I had a delightful experience yesterday. Chancing to see an account in a paper of the excitement the "Mormons" were creating in Tunbridge Wells, about thirty-five miles from London, I decided to visit that place; so early Sunday morning, accompanied by Bro. Howell, we boarded an excursion train, which landed us a little late to attend morning service; but we met the local preacher who had been opposing the Brighamites and from him learned about the true situation. We learned that some of the people were inclined to use mob violence, and if it had not been for the police the missionaries would have been rather roughly handled, as it seems some people had begun to believe their doctrine.

Believing it to be our duty to show these people what kind of a system they were entering, I stated my errand and was promised an introduction to those who would gather on the grounds in the afternoon. A message was sent to the Mormon headquarters for them to be present, but the message returned was that they were out of town. The news soon spread that a stranger from London was going to answer the Mormons, and a large crowd gathered—several hundred. I told the people that the best way to oppose error was with truth; that mob violence was bad as well as unnecessary, and that people did not generally learn much about any people by depending upon what was said about them by their enemies; that the very best way to defeat the Mormons was with their own weapons. All that I wished to present were extracts from sermons delivered by their own ministers, in order that they might know what the real inward workings of that system were. After reading to them what Brigham Young had taught on Adam-God worship, blood atonement, and polygamy, I read to them from the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants, and showed how they had departed from the original faith of the church; that Brigham Young, not Joseph Smith, was responsible for polygamy. I also read extracts from court decisions, and was able to draw the line between the faith of the Reorganization and the Brighamites quite clearly. Some of the people seemed a little surprised to hear this new phase of Mormonism, but showed us every consideration and kindness, one gentleman inviting us home with him to tea, which courtesy we accepted.

In response to our announcement that we would preach in the evening another large company assembled, and the deepest interest was manifest on all sides. Some were heard to say that they believed "every word of it." I told them in brief what the principles of the gospel were; that Christ was our leader; that this was the restoration the prophets referred to, to precede the coming of Christ; and that the latter-day apostasy which caused "the way of truth to be evil spoken of" was only the fulfillment of prophecy. I gave out all the tracts I had. I never saw people so anxious in my life; I could have distributed several hundred if I had had them, so many had to be turned away disappointed.

Well, I need not say I am feeling happy. The way seems to be opening. This is the best reception I have had yet, and I believe a good work can be done here a little later on. In other places as well I hear that interest is awakening. I am aware that it will not all be clear sailing; as the work opens up we may expect the enemy to rage, and we may expect to have to meet new methods of attack as old ones are overcome. But we have nothing to fear. If we only keep humble and retain the Holy Spirit, the truth must prevail.

At best, however, we may expect our progress to be slow, compared to what we might expect in some countries. People in England move slowly. They do not arrive at conclusions in a hurry; and there is very much prejudice to be overcome. But we are still hopeful, and hail every indication of progress with joy. Friends, kindly send us reading matter for free distribution. Some who cannot preach can perhaps furnish us with tracts. We thank those who have sent us the En- signs, but we want more, send us all you can, but do not neglect the postage, as we cannot afford to pay even that, and they double the postage when it is not prepaid. In case I may not be here when you send, address them in care of "Thomas Bradshaw, 48 Repton St., Limehouse, London, England."

We are now in comfortable lodgings, not far from the saints' hall. Weather has been very warm and dry. Wife is able to be about and is busy making up fancy articles for sale to assist in paying our way, but she is weak and cannot seem to gain strength. Kindly remember us. In bonds,

F. G. PITT.

CORTLAND, Ill., Oct. 1.

Editors Herald:—Beloved Herald, and all saints who may desire to hear from one who has for many years had a name among the saints of latter days; a name that the writer has ever been proud of. And he knows of no better way to celebrate his birthday anniversary than by writing a few lines for the encouragement of those of like precious faith; not that day (October A. D., 1821,) when he first saw the light of day; but his birth of the water, when first he legally entered into the domain or kingdom of King Immanuel; viz., October 1, A. D. 1843, when he yielded obedience to the angel's message, the true gospel of Christ.

Think you, dear reader, that fifty-five years is not enough time for a man to know whether Jesus told the truth or not when he said, "If any man will do his will he shall know." Dear saints, fifty-five years has not been long enough for the writer to regret the step he then took. Had he united with some popular church through selfish motives or otherwise, he might have given less heed to the words of Jesus above referred to. Indeed, he did only a short time prior (in April of the same year) to his entering the true fold of Christ unite with one of the most popular religious bodies in St. Joseph County, Michigan, the close-communication Baptist Church; but it was not for popularity or any selfish motives that caused him to so unite. And certainly it was through no such motives that caused him to leave that society and cast his lot with that sect (like as in Paul's day—see Acts 28:22) that is everywhere spoken evil of; which he did fifty-five years ago this day, and to which covenant then made he has ever endeavored to prove true.

As fresh in his mind or memory to-day, dear reader, is the circumstance that occurred on the evening before his offering himself for baptism as it was when he stood on the brink of old St. Joseph River, Michigan, prior to his receiving the water's birth, when in harmony with the covenant he had made with the elder, that he would make it a subject of earnest, devout prayer to that God whom he then believed, that he, as he does now most assuredly know, would listen to the prayers of his children when seeking him for light in the line of their duty; that I would do this before I slept. Think you that I shall ever forget the testimony I received that evening when on my knees, before retiring to rest, engaged in earnest, humble prayer to know concerning certain points of doctrine that I had been listening to of late, concerning baptism, and for what purpose (see Acts 2:38, 22:16); also who held the authority to administer in that and other sacred ordinances (Heb. 5:4); also concerning the gift of the Holy Ghost with the nine gifts of the gospel—who were entitled to it and them, and upon what conditions; also by what means imparted.

When I plead with my heavenly Father to know concerning the order and organization of his church; would he in every age or dispensation when he had a church on earth endow or prepare it for the same, with living apostles, prophets, evangelists, sevens, elders, bishops, pastors, teachers, and deacons as he did his church nearly two thousand years ago? For we can find all the above-named officers in that church, (if not in the order above-named.)

Let me say, dear saints, that while presenting my plea on that occasion there was such an array of scripture presented to my mind, supportive of every point of doctrine that I was seeking to obtain light upon, that I dare not refuse obedience to the gospel. There was no book presented before me, for my eyes were closed; but so plain and distinct were the Scriptures placed before me that I could almost read them. The above manifestation or testimony, dear Herald, call it what you will, has many times stood before me to sustain and encourage when darkness, trials, and doubts arose in my path, as many times they have. Not that I can ever doubt the truths of the gospel as taught by the elders of the Reorganized Church; for to doubt them it appears I never can. But I sometimes fear my acceptance with my Savior, and that through the weakness of the flesh and the disagreeable things I have to contend against that I may be overcome and fail to win the prize—eternal life.

But, dear saints, as the writer has many times, both orally and by pen, borne his testimony to the truths of the gospel as taught in the Bible and the Book of Mormon, I know as I know that I live, as I know that Jesus lives, as I know he has many times answered my prayers, as I know that he heard and answered the prayer of a young man offered unto him fifty-five years ago last evening as herein recorded, and as I know that I have many times enjoyed his Spirit, that the gospel we have embraced is true and of his right hand planting; that the angel of Revelation 14:6, 7, planted the first gospel seed in this dispensation, some seventy years ago or more, that in the planting of said gospel seed was fulfilled the prophecy or vision of the angel (or angels) and the young man, as recorded in Zechariah 2. Yea, and I also know that if we abide by all the conditions of said gospel and endure faithfully to the end, we shall rid our skirts of the blood of all men, and reap the reward of eternal life in the celestial kingdom of God; that kingdom typified by yon bright and shining orb of day that eclipses, nay, obliterates the light of the moon, the queen of night. No odds where in the midst of the heavens she may chance to be, or those bright and dazzling gems of night (the stars) that illuminate the same. When the celestial orb of day is shining we behold no moon or stars. This being so, will not the glory of the celestial kingdom (that glory that the gospel offers to all who will faithfully abide by all the conditions of the same) as effectually obliterate the glory of the terrestrial or the testitial kingdoms, as does the light of day, those of the night?

God's prophet and seer of this dispensation has told us that the glory of the testitial kingdom, the lesser glory of the three—let me quote: "And thus we saw in the heavenly vision, the glory of the testitial which surpasses all understanding; and no man knows it except him to whom God has revealed it."—D. C. 76: 7. This being so, what must be the glory for which saints are striving? That we may all strive lawfully and successfully and win the prize, is the prayer of Your brother in the Lord,

WALLACEBURG, Ont., Oct. 1.

Editors Herald:—It is with feelings of remorse that I write, as the work is apparently moving along very slowly here; but we have hopes, and trust that in the near future it will open up and a great work be done; for it has been given us through prophecy, "if" we were "faithful." So we have a good foundation for our hopes. It only remains with my brothers and sisters in Christ here, myself included, whether or not it will progress. We have every reason to believe and to confirm our faith in God, that if we do our part and live up to his commandments according to the light he has given us, he is always willing to do his part, and to pour out upon us such blessings as he may deem suitable for us; for when we look around and see the wonderful works he is causing to transpire in fulfillment of prophecies delivered hundreds of years ago, we can sum it all up and justly conclude that God is truly as he has said—an unchangeable being; the same yesterday, today, and forever.

Bro. Frederick Gregory has been laboring here for over a week since the debate in Chatham; and I am pleased to say that he delivered a series of very profitable sermons, on the fall and rise of the church; and although some of the services were not very well attended, we as saints feel doubly paid for his stay with us, as his discourses were very edifying, and I feel that much light has been given us through his preaching. He left us September 29 to attend the Chatham district conference which will be held with the Zone branch.

I feel that a greater work could be done if the mission presidents could consistently exchange elders of districts, even if they could only change one at a time; not because I think one is better than another, but different men have different ways of presenting their ideas, and therefore those who would not be enlightened by one might be by another, as it takes different kinds of bait to catch different kinds of fish.

Yours for success,

WALTER L. BENNETT.

CENTRALIA, Kan., Oct. 2.

Editors Herald:—It is with joy that I essay to write you in the interest of the true gospel of Jesus Christ. Brn. W. S. Pender and W. H. Mannering held a series of tent meetings in our town recently, and we believe good was done in removing prejudice. Bro. Pender made friends whilst here, and every house was canvassed, so that the people were left without excuse so far as invitations to attend meetings were concerned.

The Congregational and Methodist ministers were out. The first made his exit as suddenly as he had made his appearance. The latter remained to converse after meeting, and next day entertained Bro. Pender at his house. He also volunteered to try to get the use of his church that Bro. Pender might lecture upon the Book of Mormon when he returned again.

No sooner had the elders gone out of sight than a very unfair statement appeared in our neighboring papers, to which your writer sent in a reply, the best he could, and which was published the following week. It was no easy task to get the editor to publish it. Finally, after Bro. McDougal laid it to him awhile, he reluctantly consented to insert it. This was new work to me, therefore I never before realized how hard it is for our elders sometimes to get a hearing through the medium of the secular press of the day. After the article came out I thanked the editor kindly, and asked him if I could again write explanatory of our faith and practices. "O no," was the reply, "I have lost enough already by publishing the other." I wondered what had he to lose by giving the people the truth.

There is seemingly rottenness, trickery, and deception in the works of men everywhere. God forbid that the saints should ever get so low as to sacrifice principle in order to please men and to get gain. I see daily the necessity of a closer application of the divine edict, "Except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven." May the sincere and upright in heart be gathered out of Babylon, and a righteous people be prepared for King Immanuel, the Prince of Peace and the Son of Righteousness, when he shall appear.

FILLEY, Mo., Oct. 1.

Editors Herald:—Inasmuch as it has been some time since I have burdened your pages with anything, I thought no doubt some of your readers are wondering what had become of me. So lest they should think I had hung my harp on the willows, will say that on the 17th of September I left home and went to Sacville, where I have an appointment; but when I arrived I found Clark Braden, and a Mr. Jamison of the freethinkers, on the ground, ready for a discussion of twelve nights, commencing on the 19th of September. So I had the privilege of hearing Mr. Jamison lecture three times. "The Christian clergy are dangerous to the liberties of the American people," was his subject. On Monday I went over to Wheatland, Hickory County, and spoke six times. On the 28th I returned to Collins and found Brn. Silvers and Sory holding forth to a fair crowd. I spoke one night there, then the next day came home and found all well at home.

I was permitted to baptize two in Hickory County, the fruits of others' labors, however. The only thing that we need in this part of the country is more "good" elders to spread the gospel, and the church would increase in membership and knowledge.

Your brother in Christ,

J. B. GOULDSMITH.

GRINNELL, Iowa, Oct. 4.

Editors Herald:—I closed a very interesting meeting in the city hall of New London on the 24th. Bro. Charles Willey baptized one and I baptized three. Others wanted to obey, but were hindered. The local brethren, Lawrence Willey, and Geo. McComas assisted me nobly in opening and closing the meetings. Bro. Charles Willey, from Clark County, was with me and assisted me some. Bro. Lawrence Willey's wife, Sr. Tillie, is a great help to the New London branch; for she is a splendid singer and a good young saint. I believe a great deal of prejudice was removed, and many friends made to the cause of Christ.

I preached about twenty-one sermons while there, then I assisted Brn. Weld and Evans at West Burlington; spoke four times to large congregations. I believe some are interested there. Then I went to Burlington and tied the matrimonial knot for a couple. I then came home on the 29th, intending to go to the Baxter conference on the 30th, but when I got home I found my son George of Co. K, 50th Iowa, home on a furlough from Jacksonville, Florida, very sick with typhoid fever. He has been in bed two weeks now and no signs of improvement yet, but rather getting worse; so I will not be able to fill my appointments till he gets better.

So please have patience, dear saints, I will come as soon as I can. I am willing to do all I am able to do. May God bless his work and all the true laborers.

In hopes, I remain,

J. S. ROTH.

SUMNER, Ok., Sept. 30.

Editors Herald:—It may be in order for me to give a brief account of myself and my work. If any have wondered why I have failed to be at places appointed, or to respond to letters written me, I will say by way of explanation that my health has been too poor to do so. On September 5 I was attacked with a very severe hemorrhage of the lungs, and for several days following it was a doubtful question with my friends whether I would recover, but through "the prayer of faith and the use of that which wisdom directs," I am on the way to health again, and at present am out of serious danger I think.

I hope to be at my post again in a few days. Bro. and Sr. S. J. Hinkle kindly cared for me during my sickness.

In gospel bonds,

C. R. DUNCAN.

NEW LONDON, Iowa, Oct. 1.

Editors Herald:—We are a band of saints that are badly scattered, and the most of us are farmers, though we hold our regular appointments—prayer meetings on Wednesday nights, Sunday school at three o'clock, and preaching at four, with good attendance.

We have the house full when the weather is fair. In our Sunday school we have a membership of fifty-four. We have as many as eighty in attendance when the weather is good; and the work is progressing slowly, but surely.

Bro. J. S. Roth has been with us the last month, up to September 24, and preached twenty-one discourses; two at Union school-house, nineteen in New London at the city hall, with large congregations. And it was not in vain. He baptized five in this branch; two at Montrose while at the reunion and three here, and Bro. C. E. Willey baptized one here, while Bro. Roth's meetings were going on, making six baptized in all.

Bro. Roth has made many friends here, both in the branch and among outsiders, though everything was not pleasing to the Advents, who were holding meetings in the city park. One of their members said that after Bro. Roth's meetings commenced in the hall the most they had in their tabernacle was twenty-three, and next to the last sermon Bro. Roth preached the Advent preacher was in to hear him and took notes, and after the meeting was dismissed he announced that he would review that sermon in the future, but could not say when. Bro. Roth told him when he was going away and wanted him to review it before he left, but the pious man, to avoid any more on Bro. Roth's side, announced his review for the Tuesday after he had left. But Bro. J. R. Evans was with us when Tuesday night came, and the saints turned out to hear him; and Bro. Evans, L. Willey, and myself were there with tablet and took notes for two hours, and had the pleasure of hearing him acknowledge most all of Bro. Roth's sermon, though he took some exceptions to the gospel law and the Sabbath; and as we have no controversy on the Sabbath, and as the people had both sides of the question, we considered that he did us no hurt, as there was lots of talk to prove nothing; and it was so remarked by many of the congregation. If we could have Bro. Roth back here soon I feel sure there would be great good done here.

Yours for the advancement of truth,
G. W. MCCOMAS.

AUBURN, Iowa, Oct. 3.

Editors Herald:—I came to this place on the 30th ult., and yesterday had the pleasure of baptizing three sisters into Christ. The Spirit was with me in administering the rite, and also at the confirmation services. One of these sisters comes from the Seventh-day Adventists, and two from the Christian Church, so called. Elder C. J. Hunt, with others, was instrumental in the hands of God in converting these sisters to the truth. Bro. C. Scott's work on the Christian Sabbath helped our Advent sister to see the true light on that question. The Christian deportment and good work of Sr. Addie Rounds, of Newell, Iowa, had its effect for good. If all members of the church were as active in circulating printed matter as she, many more might be converted to the truth.

These baptisms furnish another evidence that tent work properly conducted is not a failure.

Hopefully yours,

C. E. BUTTERWORTH.

THE 2,300 DAYS.

IN the opinion of the writer, William Miller and all others who have adopted his mode of reckoning with regard to the beginning of the 2,300 days of Daniel eighth chapter, and also in connecting them with the 70 weeks of chapter 9: 24-27, have made a mistake. There is no connection between the two periods. That the 70 weeks were "cut off" of the 2,300 days or years is merely assumed, there being nothing in Daniel or any other part of the Bible, so far as I am aware, to prove it. That the 70 weeks commenced with the restoration of the Jews, after the Babylonian captivity, and ended with the introduction of the gospel dispensation is evident; but to say that the 2,300 days commenced with the same date, 457 B. C., is, I think, unwarranted. In Daniel 8: 1 we read:—

In the third year of the reign of king Belshazzar a vision appeared unto me, even unto me Daniel, after [according to] that which appeared unto me at the first.

The vision of chapter eight then relates to and was in some respects an expansion of that which he had seen before, and did not relate to that which was revealed later concerning the Jews.

In Daniel seventh chapter we are told that "Daniel had a dream and visions" concerning "four great beasts" representing, as we understand, Babylon, Persia, Greece, and Rome, pagan and papal, its persecuting the saints, its division and fall. In chapter eight the second, third, and fourth beasts are again brought to view. Concerning the third beast (the Greek or Macedonian kingdom) Daniel says:—

Therefore the he goat waxed very great; and when he was strong, the great horn [first king] was broken; and for it came up four notable ones toward the four winds of heaven.—Dan. 8: 8; see verses 21, 22.

And concerning the fourth beast he says:—

And out of one of them [the four kingdoms] came forth a little horn [Rome] which waxed exceeding great, toward the south, and toward the east, and toward the pleasant land [Canaan]. And it waxed great, even to the host of heaven [the saints]; and it cast down some of the host and of the stars [chief ministers, Rev. 12: 1] to the ground, and stamped upon them. Yea, he magnified himself even to the prince of the host [Christ, v. 25], and by him [Rome] the daily sacrifice was taken away, and the place of his [Christ's] sanctuary was cast down. And a host was given him against the daily sacrifice by reason of transgression, and it cast down the truth to the ground; and it practised, and prospered.—Dan. 8: 9-12.

When applied in the right place I think the facts here related become plain. That Christ is the Prince of princes will hardly be denied; that the truth is the gospel, must be admitted (see John 1: 17 and 1 Pet. 1: 22-25); that the host is his people—his saints, and the church the sanctuary, including, evidently, their final inheritance, I think may be proven by reference to Hebrews 8: 2; 1 Corinthians 3: 16; 2 Corinthians 6: 16; Romans 12: 1, and 4: 13.

The daily sacrifices ceased and the sanctuary was taken away when the apostasy was complete. Concerning this Daniel says in 12: 11:—

And from the time that the daily sacrifice shall be taken away, and the abomination that maketh desolate set up.

Now if you can fix the date of these two events, which undoubtedly are closely connected, you may find the date for the commencement of the 2,300 years. That the apostasy was complete towards the latter part of the sixth century, and that the "mother of harlots" obtained full sway over the nations soon after, or along in the fore part of the seventh century after Christ, may be acceded. Adding to this the 2,300 years, would bring us down into the last century of the existence of this earth in its mortal state.

The sanctuary to be cleansed is the one that was defiled. The Bible presents an account of the temporary triumphs and defeats of God's work in the earth; but a final, permanent, and complete triumph will come. Then shall the sanctuary be cleansed, and every vestige of sin and its results be removed from the earth and its inhabitants.

When Gabriel came to make Daniel understand the vision concerning the

2,300 days and the cleansing of the sanctuary, he says, "at the time [not 'times'] of the end shall be the vision" (v. 17). Again:—

I will make thee know what shall be in the last end of the indignation: for at the time appointed the end shall be.—Dan. 8: 19.

With reference to the last end of the indignation at the time of the end, we read:—

And when the thousand years are expired, Satan shall be loosed out of his prison, and shall go out to deceive the nations which are in the four quarters of the earth, Gog and Magog, to gather them together to battle: the number of whom is as the sand of the sea. And they went up on the breadth of the earth, and compassed the camp of the saints about, and the beloved city: and fire came down from God out of heaven, and devoured them.—Rev. 20: 7-10.

In verse three this "time of the end" is called "a little season." The following from the Book of Mormon relates to the same event:—

And when the time cometh that evil fruit shall again come into my vineyard, then will I cause the good and the bad to be gathered: and the good will I preserve unto myself; and the bad will I cast away into its own place. And then cometh the season and the end; and my vineyard will I cause to be burned with fire.—Book of Jacob 3: 28.

Again:—

And again, verily, verily I say unto you, that when the thousand years are ended, and men again begin to deny their God, then will I spare the earth but for a little season; and the end shall come, and the heaven and the earth shall be consumed, and pass away, and there shall be a new heaven and a new earth.—D. and C. 28: 6.

And when he [Satan] is loosed again, he shall only reign for a little season, and then cometh the end of the earth; and he that liveth in righteousness, shall be changed in the twinkling of an eye; and the earth shall pass away so as by fire.—D. and C. 43: 7.

To my mind the foregoing quotations seem to bring out the following successive events: 1. The rise and fall of the Macedonian kingdom. 2. The rise and fall of the Roman power. 3. The first coming of Christ and the establishing of the church. 4. The apostasy, and the triumph of abomination that maketh desolate. 5. The period of the 2,300 days or years, the events of which are not mentioned in Daniel eighth chapter; but, coming down to the beginning of that period, Daniel is told "shut thou up the vision, for it shall be for many days" (verse 26). 6. The "time of the end," or "little season." 7. The final cleansing of the sanctuary.

Then shall Christ deliver up the kingdom to God (1 Cor. 15:24), the earth and her worthy inhabitants undergo the final change—put on their celestial garment—and enter the place that Christ went to prepare among the celestial worlds (John 14:2 and D. and C. 95: 3).

And thus, so far as the sanctified of this earth are concerned, will be fulfilled the saying, "Thou hast taken Zion into thine own bosom from all eternity to all eternity."

THE WAY TO PRONOUNCE THEM.

THE Columbia and Century Cyclopedias are the authorities for the pronunciation of the following words, often used in defending the Book of Mormon from an archaeological standpoint.

KEY TO ACCENTS:

ā—mate, fate.	ō—note.
ă—mat, fat.	ô—move, smooth.
â—far, calm.	ô—similar to e in her.
â—care, fair.	û—pure.
ē—meat, feet.	Û—bud.
è—met, bed.	û—full, push.
é—her, stir.	Û—plume.
i—pine.	ch—chill.

x or j before a vowel pronounced like h.

It is well to keep the following instructions in mind when pronouncing Spanish words: a is pronounced ah; c before e and i, as th in think, elsewhere k; d, th as in though; e, as a in fate; g, before e and i, as h; elsewhere as in English, but gue and gui are pronounced gay and gee; h is not sounded; i, as ee in feel; j as h in horse; ll as li in million; n as ni in minion; o as o in go unless otherwise directed; qu as k; r with a long roll; oo as in fool; y as ee in feel; z as th in think. Each letter has its full sound. Spanish words ending in consonants are usually accented on the last syllable, except plurals of adjectives; words ending in vowels are accented on the next to the last syllable; where the accent is otherwise it is indicated.

IS THERE A NECESSITY FOR THAT WHICH IS TAUGHT?

THAT which is said by the servants of God, either in writing or otherwise, is certainly necessary, as we need to be instructed in that which has been taught, in order that our labors may be blessed with success. Sentiment alone should not be our rule of action; because by following our feelings we may transgress the law. Neither should we be controlled in our actions by conscience only, because conscience is dependent upon our education, and if our education be faulty, our conscience will be proportionally imperfect.

Now that which should be our rule, the only safe rule, is the law; for it is given that we may be instructed in the things necessary for our perfection. And if we do according to that, after having been instructed, we shall then act in harmony with our conscience also. It is highly necessary too that the one who teaches the law, should himself be a doer of the law, otherwise he will not be conscientious in what he does; and although he may not feel the sting of conscience, he cannot hope for that reason to escape the penalty of violated law. The only thing that will free us is a careful observance of the law; this too will give us influence among those whom we are teaching as well as produce that feeling of love and joy which comes to those who thus come in harmony with the Lawgiver. On the other hand, those who reject the teaching of the law become haters of the law, and haters of the Lawgiver as well, and also of those appointed to execute the law; therefore out of harmony with the entire body, and ought not in reason to expect to receive benefits promised to true members of the body; especially as the law is upon all, not only the members, but the officers from the highest to the lowest; otherwise a perfect government would be impossible.

The officers are appointed to teach and execute the law, and there is necessity for unity between those teaching and those taught; because the law is perfect in all its parts and seeks to benefit each one in his varied circumstances and conditions. Inasmuch as teaching and ministration are necessary for perfection, unity, and power, the officers need to be most perfect, because they need more power. It is therefore necessary that the officers practice their own teaching first, so they may be in condition to teach others. "Example is better than precept," is a true proverb. It is not merely teaching that influences people most, but it is the good example set in doing in harmony with the teaching; and it is those that receive the blessing of God.

The commandments of God are to be obeyed, not believed only. Baptism is a commandment ordained by the counsel of God and necessary to be observed, and in obedience to which there is a blessing attached. Laying on of hands is likewise a commandment of God, and like every other commandment of God is necessary and should be obeyed. Those who refuse baptism reject the counsel of God as much in these days as in the days of John the Baptist. Tithing is also a commandment of God; those who reject this likewise reject God's counsel. That which gives force and power to God's servants in influencing the people to be baptized is the fact that they themselves have been baptized; that which will most influence people in obeying the law of tithing is that those who teach it likewise will observe it.

Tobacco is "not good for the body," neither "for the belly," and is not good for man. So says the counsel of God; those who despise God's counsel are transgressors. He says its use is not good; therefore it must be wicked, and all wickedness is a sin. Sin is the transgression of law, and those who transgress the law are in opposition to the Lawgiver. Therefore it is impossible for such to be in perfect accord with either God or his servants. It is evident that tobacco is not good by its first effects upon man's constitution, making him too ill to stand upon his feet; it robs the stomach of the saliva so necessary for the digestion of food, resulting many times in chronic diseases of the body, often attributed to other causes, when the true cause of distress is the use of tobacco. The waste of money is also a sin, many spending the last shilling for the weed, and not a penny to spend to advance the work of God; and not a crust of bread in the house; and the little ones with their little feet most go bare, in order that the tobacco fiend may be satisfied; even though it bring cold and disease and they be made to suffer. And is it not a little inconsistent under such circumstances to call for the elders to administer to them when they continue in the sin that has brought the disease upon them.

Let us then heed the counsel of God, not only say, but do according to that which is written.

J. D. JENKINS.

"THE TESTIMONY." WHAT IS IT?

FOR us poor, finite mortals there is nothing better than free and full investigation. Let us turn on the light, without fear, no matter how much it may require us to modify, change, or renounce our positions.

First, it is important that we should understand each other; and right here is where much of the difficulty frequently lies. The writer does not deny that records made by men of the dealings of God with his people, anciently and modernly, are testimony, and as such is important as collateral proof; but he does deny the safety and propriety of using church history which has not been accepted by the body, as a standard of final appeal to the people of God. In all gospel work it sometimes becomes necessary to make a final appeal with a view to settling all controversy. In all such cases we need more than the "testimonies of Matthew, Mark, and Luke," Joseph Smith, or Oliver Cowdery. Nothing less than the testimony of God will do.

To the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them.—Isaiah 8:20.

The prophet refers to the standard of final appeal which, like many other things, is one; but for the sake of convenience and emphasis, it is believed, is divided into two parts. It should be borne in mind that the prophet makes the testimony just as valid, and authoritative, and binding as the law. We therefore consistently conclude that nothing less than the testimony which comes from God, and truly represents his character and will, was referred to by the prophet. Why? Because nothing else will do. No other thing under the heavens, known to the writer, will fill the bill, and may safely be associated with the written word, or the "statutes of the Lord's enactment," as a perfect guide and standard of evidence.

Sight is one, but we have two eyes with which to see; hearing is one, but we have two ears with which to hear; handling is one, but we have two hands with which to handle; walking is one, but we have two feet with which to walk; breathing is one, but we have two lungs with which to breathe. So, the law of God is one, but is composed of two parts, the word, and the Spirit. The prophet says, "If they speak not according to this word," not these words, "it is because there is no light in them."

In Psalms 19: 7, we have the following:—

The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul: the testimony of the Lord is sure, making wise the simple.

The word without the Spirit could never convert the soul; hence we conclude that the inspired writer refers, first, to the law as a whole, and, second, to that particular and important part of a complete and perfect whole which renders "wise the simple." Notice, it is the Lord's law, and the Lord's testimony, and nothing less than these can accomplish the work. Surely, it is the Spirit which makes wise the simple, and qualifies the illiterate and poor, as well as the learned and rich, to stand together on the great gospel platform, having "fellowship one with another," so that "the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us [them] from all sin." The law of God by which we are converted and saved is one, but composed of two parts; that is, it is a double standard. "If this be treason, make the most of it."

God's word is truth (John 17: 17), and the Spirit is designated "the Spirit of truth" (John 14: 17); so, as the body is dead without the spirit, (the spirit of man,) the word, too, is a lifeless thing when dissociated from this life-giving power. "It is the Spirit that quickeneth."

The office work of the Holy Spirit, it is believed, proves the position assumed in this article to be a correct one. The Spirit enables us to understand the things of God.

But there is a spirit in man: and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth them understanding.—Job 32: 8.

For what man knoweth the things of a man, save the spirit of man which is in him? even so the things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God.—1 Cor. 2: 11.

The Spirit teaches and brings to our remembrance the things of God.

But the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you.—John 14: 26.

The Spirit guides us into all truth; truly represents God and Christ to our own souls; shows us things to come; glorifies Christ:—

Howbeit when he, the Spirit of truth, is come, he will guide you into all truth: for he shall not speak of himself; but whatsoever he shall hear, that shall he speak; and he will shew you things to come. He shall glorify me; for he shall receive of mine, and shall shew it unto you. All things that the Father hath are mine: therefore said I, that he shall take of mine, and shall shew it unto you.—John 16: 13-15.

The Spirit testifies of Christ; bears witness that we are the children of God, through obedience to the gospel, and is a leader, or guide, to all the faithful children of God.

But when he the Comforter is come, whom I will send unto you from the Father, even the Spirit of truth, which proceedeth from the Father, he shall testify of me.—John 15: 26.

But ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you: and ye shall be witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth.—Acts 1: 8.

And we are his witnesses of these things; and so is also the Holy Ghost, whom God hath given to them that obey him.—Acts 5: 32.

And I fell at his feet to worship him. And he said unto me, See thou do it not: I am thy fellow servant, and of thy brethren that have the testimony of Jesus: worship God: for the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy.—Revelation 19: 10.

The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God.—Romans 8: 16.

For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God.—Romans 8: 14.

And at that day when I shall come in my glory, shall the parable be fulfilled which I spake concerning the ten virgins; for they that are wise and have received the truth, and have taken the Holy Spirit for their guide, and have not been deceived, verily I say unto you, They shall not be hewn down and cast into the fire, but shall abide the day, and the earth shall be given unto them for an inheritance; and they shall multiply and wax strong, and their children shall grow up without sin unto salvation, for the Lord shall be in their midst, and his glory shall be upon them, and he will be their King and their lawgiver.—Doctrine and Covenants 45:10, latter part of the paragraph.

The above evidences abundantly prove that the testimony of God comes to us through the Holy Ghost, and that it, in connection with the written word, was designed of God for our guide and standard of appeal. God, in his revealed character, word, and Spirit, is the only true and safe standard for his people.

The rumor having reached the people of Lamoni, Iowa, who are interested in seeing Graceland College succeed, that the report had gone abroad that those who intended keeping college students in Lamoni had raised the price of board and lodging, the Lamoni branch of the Latter Day Saints wished to counteract this so far as possible. At its October business meeting the following resolution was passed, and the branch clerk authorized to endeavor to give it as much publicity as practicable in such papers as will reach those likely to be affected by this report respecting the price of board:—

"Resolved, that it be the sentiment of this body that no more than $2.50 should be charged per week for board and room for college students and faculty."

THE "UPLIFT OF LIFE."

GIFT OF VISION MAKES THE DIFFER-ENCE BETWEEN REAL LIFE AND MERE EXISTENCE.

REV. T. ARTHUR FREY filled the pulpit at the first Congregational church.

His subject was "The Uplift of Life," and he found his text in Deuteronomy 34:21: "And Moses went up from the plains of Moab and unto the top of Pisgah, and the Lord showed him all the land of Gilead, unto Dan." He said:—

Here is the supreme moment in the life of Moses, reached after forty years of effort. While the multitude of Israelites in the valley below can see only the barren and sterile wastes, through which they have been journeying, he alone, above them on the mountain, sees the fertile valley of a great river, with its fields and vineyards, with its battlemented cities and great wealth. Yet there must have been a tinge of sadness in the heart of Moses as he looked over the fair land and knew that though he had been through the trials and struggles to reach that point, yet the attainment of them must belong to others.

Moses went down from that mountain to find a grave in the valley below.

MOSES' DREAMS FULFILLED.

Under the leadership of Joshua, the Israelites pressed on. They captured the battlemented cities, drove out the inhabitants. Their achievements caught up with the dreams of Moses, the visions which he saw from the summit of Pisgah.

Study the history of the Jewish nation and it becomes evident that in this visional power lay their strength.
Scrutinize the records of that nation with the utmost care, study every point in their history and you will be unable to discover any great painting, any great architectural achievements, as with the Egyptians; any great discovery in military tactics, as with the Romans; any enormous development of commerce, as with the Venetians, or any of the achievements in science and intelligence that have made the Anglo-Saxon race preëminent in the world to-day. They had none of these things that have constituted greatness in other nations; their greatness came from the possession of this visional power.

VISION OF THE REDEEMER.

Other nations had the traditions of the fall of man, but only this little nation had the vision that a Redeemer should come, and that the seed of woman would crush the head of the serpent.

Abraham had the vision that from him should come a nation that would be as a light to all other nations.
Joseph saw a vision that out of Egypt should be led a great nation. In the burning words of Isaiah and in the glowing sentences of Jeremiah we are told that with the loss of this power trouble fell upon the nation. As the visional faculty waned, the nation was shackled and in captivity; when the faculty was bright the nation rose in power and splendor. As one of their prophets expressed it: "When there is no vision, the people perish."

With all other nations the golden age has been ever in the past. The Israelites looked forward to a golden age in the future. The others looked back to a materialistic past. The Israelites had ever before them a visional future better than anything in the past. Nothing made the nation so grand as its visional element.

GIFT OF VISION.

We must not think this visional power is wholly supernatural—beyond the reach of you or me. God is more prodigal of his gifts than that. To the bramble in the forest the giant oak must seem supernatural. Homer, Milton, Dante, or Browning must seem invested with supernatural powers to him who can write only doggerel. But the prophets of Israel had their schools, in which this faculty was cultivated. They did not acquire it without work. It was not a natural gift.

Where the common mind sees only the lid of the tea kettle is lifting up, the visional mind of a Watts perceives the steam engine. Where the common mind only notes a swaying chandelier, the visional mind of old Galileo in the cathedral at Pisa, conceived the pendulum, in its regular beat measuring out the years of the ages. Where the common mind sees in a yellow primrose only a yellow flower, in the visional mind of a Wordsworth the meanest flower can arouse thoughts as infinite as the universe of God.

SPIRIT BEHIND MATTER.

The visional mind sees the spirit back of the matter. It has organs which lay hold of the features of the unseen world as the carnal eyes perceive color and form. We may say in this material age, the visional eye can see what the Lick telescope, the most powerful microscope, the laboratory of Liebig cannot bring to vision—it can look into the deep things of God.

We notice that when Moses stood on top of Pisgah and saw the promised land stretching out before him, like the very thought of God, the children of Israel did not immediately occupy this land. It was years before this was completed. Vision always outruns attainment. Our progress is always this way, a reaching out of a vision, and then the bringing up of the rest to it. We go ahead in thought and afterward catch up with our accomplishment. Browning said:—

Ah, but a man's reach should exceed his grasp.

Or what's heaven for?

MERE EXISTENCE AND REAL LIFE.

On this great world the dumb brute merely looks out. Man alone of all the creatures of God, dares to look up — the brute lives, man aspires.

Our greatest danger is that we catch up with our visions. That was the trouble with the Pharisee in the temple. His attainment had overtaken his narrow vision of spiritual progress. He was spiritually dead, while the Publican, standing upon a lower plane, looked up and beyond into the perfection which he hoped to attain, and he was filled with light. He who sees no peak above on which to climb is lost. It is not our duty to be satisfied, but our privilege to be forever unsatisfied.

TOO LOW AN AIM.

The reason there is so little in many of our lives is that our actual has been allowed to overtake our possible. We have aimed too low. Never let your vision fly too low; that makes a mediocre minister, a poor machinist, an unworthy lawyer; it makes a domestic out of a wife.

What we do simply measures our strength and opportunities. What we aspire to do measures the utmost boundary of our souls. Many a visionary, aspiring soul has wrested victory out of a defeat. An oyster, it is said, makes a pearl out of a wound.

How can I get perfect vision with the blind sight and the wandering lights? Perfect vision comes alone in the serene sight of God. Plato said that in heaven there was a perfect archetype of everything that is on earth. Jesus Christ has come down to earth from God, and in him there is a perfect archetype for us. We find a pattern for every inspiration in this carpenter of Nazareth.—Denver Republican, Sept. 26.

DOCTRINE OF "EVERLASTING FUTURE PUNISHMENT" DISAPPEARING.

It has been for many years now contended in these columns that the trend of sentiment in what are known as evangelical churches is ever strongly in the direction of the full and complete relinquishment of the obnoxious doctrine of everlasting future punishment. It is well understood that the percentage of those who hold to the doctrine is small and growing smaller every day. The following from last week's Congregationalist will tend to corroborate what has repeatedly appeared in our columns on this subject: "Those who have accepted the doctrine of the eternal punishment of the wicked have usually done so because they have understood Jesus Christ to declare that doctrine to be true. Those who deny that doctrine have usually tried to show that the words of Christ on that subject have some other than their natural and obvious meaning. But a more logical method is that of deciding the question of doctrine independently of Christ's teaching and thus showing that if he was as well informed concerning the future world as intelligent men now are, he could not have taught that future punishment is eternal. This method appears to be growing in favor. We think it is the most convincing form of argument yet advanced against a doom which many Christians cannot bring themselves to believe has ever been or ever will be authoritatively pronounced against any one." Is our serious neighbor becoming sportive and ironical, or is it really vouchsafing a crumb of comfort for those who cannot believe that any of their departed friends are suffering eternal torture? It certainly shows that the able editor of the principal organ of the Congregational denomination is in pursuit of some way out of a belief in a doctrine which will in the near future be abandoned by all intelligent Christians.—Boston Transcript.

ABANDONING THE REFORMATION? IS THAT SO?

It is said that there are 1,700 clergymen of the Church of England who are members of the Confraternity of the Blessed Sacrament, organized to destroy the work of the reformation. They are allies of the Church of Rome, and in belief and practice agree with that body (including confession to priests). Many efforts have been made to prevent these clergymen from continuing their Romish practices in the churches of the Church of England, but with only small success. The Bishops of the State Church are apparently indifferent to the attempts to Romanize the Church of England. It is claimed that the large majority of the membership is opposed to the efforts of the Confraternity and allied societies, such as the Holy Cross and the Ritualistic Sisterhoods, but can accomplish nothing because the Bishops thwart their endeavors or wishes. There is unquestionably a decided tendency among the clergy of the Church of England toward the Roman Church. The other denominations of Christians in Great Britain have formed a federation to oppose this sacerdotalism and endeavor to Romanize the Christian people of Great Britain. The membership of the churches of this alliance is now larger than that of the Church of England, and that majority bids fair to increase steadily. The prospect is that in a few years the Episcopal Church will cease to be the Established Church of Great Britain.—Christian Intelligencer.

CONFUCIANISM.

Dr. Arthur Smith, who writes about Confucianism, says:—

"Judging from a background of twenty-five years' acquaintance with China, one may pass through four stages in his estimate of Confucianism. Coming to it from the atmosphere of a study of comparative religion, he is prepared to find it the best system ever devised by the mind of man for solving the problems of the race. He reveres the sages and is anxious to conserve all that is good in their teaching. After some years of experience he becomes alive to cavernous depths of sorrow and misery for which Confucianism has no hope and no sympathy. The hollowness of its high-sounding but empty verbiage grates upon his ear, and he is weary of suspicion and insincerity masquerading in the garments of antiquity. What, after all, is the essential difference between the Orient and the Occident? In the former, where things are as bad as they can be, they get worse; in the Occident they slowly tend to an improvement. Confucianism has within it no further energy for the evolution of good, but it is a powerful conserving influence. China is in a far sounder condition morally than was the Roman Empire in the time of Christ. I believe that China is sounder morally than Mohammedan Turkey, or the polyglot, metaphysical India. But, great as has been its work, Confucianism is inert. It is dead. Sooner or later it must give way to something stronger, wiser, and better."—Tribune Book Review.

Carlyle, Goethe, and Sir Walter Scott placed the Bible above all other books as an inspirer of the intellect and creator of a lofty and brilliant style.

CHURCH DEDICATION.

AT the request of the officers of the Mount Hope branch of the church, located in the vicinity of Spickards, Grundy County, Missouri, about forty miles southeast of Lamoni, which request was supplemented by Brn. Alfred White and Frank J. Chatburn, missionaries laboring in the district, the editor, accompanied by Elder W. H. Kelley, visited the branch Saturday and Sunday, October 8 and 9, to be present and take part in the dedication of a neat little church building erected during the last year since August, 1897.

Notice had been extensively given and preparation made for dedication services at eleven o'clock, on the 9th. Saturday the weather was fine, but the skies were clouded Sunday morning, and rain began falling quite early. This was unexpected and resulted in keeping those not belonging to the church away entirely and with them some few of the members, so that when the hour arrived there were but few comparatively present. It was decided, however, upon consultation to go forward with the program.

After opening song service Bro. Alfred White led in prayer, which was spiritual, fervent, and comforting. The sermon was by the editor of HERALD, whose subject was: When the church is dedicated to the service of God, what shall be the character of the doctrines preached from its pulpit?

The answer to this question was given as extensively as the time permitted; The Doctrines of the Lord Jesus Christ as found in the New Testament, and as restored by divine revelation by angelic administration in these last days. The editor was blessed with a good degree of liberty, the congregation was appreciative and received the effort well.

The dedicatory prayer was offered by Bro. W. H. Kelley, who had charge of the service, and was feeling and full of humble trust and supplication.

The Mount Hope branch numbers about thirty-five members. These with some little help from their friends have built the church, efforts having been made to shut them out of the schoolhouses, against which they did not care to contend—thinking it wiser to build than to contend. The branch is in charge of Bro. M. F. Beebe president, E. Morrison priest, W. A. Coffey teacher, C. M. Morrison deacon.

The building is about 22x32, and cost about $450.00, and is neatly finished inside and out; and is now set apart for the uses of worship and education, with a sentiment prevailing for the motto, "A Free Pulpit and an Open Bible."

The church is located across the road south from the home of Bro. M. F. Beebe, some three miles west of the town of Spickards, already made famous by a discussion between Elder H. C. Bronson and Elder Padgett, some years ago, and more recently by a debate between Elder F. J. Chatburn and Elder Fry, heretofore noticed in the HERALD.

Brn. White and Chatburn have been holding meetings for some time in the church, and have been making a good impression. One was baptized Sunday by Bro. Chatburn; others had been before of late. The brethren were to make an effort in Spickards, on Tuesday evening, the 11th, to continue longer if conditions were favorable.

Brn. T. W. Chatburn, J. M. Terry, H. N. Snively, and other brethren who have labored in that region about Spickards, and in the Mount Hope neighborhood, will be pleased to learn that their labors were appreciated and conducive to the result shown in the building of the little church. May the good Spirit be with them all, heal their infirmities, and increase their union and usefulness to the cause.

Bro. Kelley and the editor were the guests of Bro. J. W. McVay and family during their stay, were made very welcome and royally entertained by them.

AT CARTHAGE.

By note from Bro. M. T. Short, we learn that he was to preach in the courthouse at Carthage, the county seat of Hancock County, Illinois, the place where the Martyrs Joseph and Hyrum were killed, on Saturday the 8th, and after, until notice was given.

The reception of the printed handbill, recalled to memory an effort the editor made in that same courthouse now many years ago, and how, standing in that court room in which Joseph and Hyrum Smith had been arraigned, and whence they went to the prison from whose doors they were to be taken in death, we told the story of the Book of Mormon, and the cross, and the restoration by angelic visitation, the heart grew sad and the eye moist with the recollection of the cruel treatment accorded those men, and, the sadness of feeling was chastened by the thought of exultation that where the fathers had stood arrayed for trial and to answer for their lives, the son of one of them was permitted to present and openly defend the doctrines which were a potent cause of the prejudice that doomed the fathers to die. It was also suggested then by that occasion, as by this in which Bro. Short will stand in that room, that successors to the dwellers at Carthage when that awful murder was done would gladly and honorably wipe the blood-stains from that jail floor and the statement of that painful scene from the record of the county—if it could be done. We are thankful that, seemingly, the bigotry and hurtful superstition of those times are passed away, we hope never to return.

The good behavior of the saints in Hancock County under the banner borne by the Reorganized Church has been one of the potent factors in bringing about this result of obtaining a hearing in Carthage.

May good results follow, is our prayer.

WANT PLYMOUTH CHURCH LIBERAL.

CREED MUST BE BROADER.

THE Rev. Dr. Frank W. Gunsaulus and the Rev. Artemas J. Haynes announced jointly in Plymouth Congregational Church yesterday the new, simplified creed upon which they are willing to accept the offer of the dual pastorate of the South Side sanctuary. The letters embracing their views will be acted upon at a meeting of the congregation on Wednesday night. From all appearances the action will be favorable to the pastors.

The new idea looks to a broadening and liberalizing of the church and the establishment of a purely ethical basis, doing away with theological dogmas and formal creeds. There will be a creed, but it will spring from the heart and represent the religion of real life. The only test demanded will be a belief in the broad ethical teachings of Christ.

These proposals were foremost among the conditions under which Dr. Gunsaulus said he was willing to renew his active work in the church, and which the church is expected to concede him.

His labors will be confined to preaching at the Sunday morning service, leaving the other duties of the church to devolve upon the Rev. Mr. Haynes.

LETTERS READ TO THE PEOPLE.

The letters were read in the morning by Orrin B. Taft, chairman of the committee appointed to extend the call to the two clergymen.

In his letter addressed "To the Committee Representing the Members and Congregation of Plymouth Church," Dr. Gunsaulus, after thanking the church for the confidence expressed in its invitation, set forth the conditions under which he would consent to preach from Plymouth pulpit each Sunday morning of the coming year, exclusive of the vacation beginning Oct. 16, 1898.

The first condition specified was that he must have as an assistant a man of first-class ability as preacher and administrator, preferably the Rev. Artemas J. Haynes, with whom he expressed himself as being in entire accord.

The second stipulation was that at the beginning of the year's work there must be a guarantee of a sum of money large enough to carry on the broad work of the church. The letter then proceeds:—

"Thirdly, it must be understood that my service as a preacher in Plymouth Church shall in no way interfere with the discharge of my duties as President of the Armour Institute of Technology. If Plymouth Church feels, as I feel, that the hour has come in the history of American Evangelical Christendom, for a large advance movement conceived in the deeper faith to which all recent thinking and devotion have brought the human mind, and to be forwarded in harmony with the highest and broadest ideals of Christian life we know, I am ready with what I have of voice and vision, of courage and faith, to again enter the dear old Plymouth pulpit.

WANTS CHURCH LESS EXCLUSIVE.

"But I must make my exact meaning clear, and therefore, I add:—

"Fourthly, and especially, I must be permitted to invite men into visible relationship with the kingdom of Christ upon the terms which Jesus insisted upon. The church's aim is not so much to gather and organize men and women of like theological opinions as to gather and organize men and women of like aspirations and purposes toward the faith and moral glory of Christ. I have no new gospel to utter; and, for myself, objection to our statement of belief; but I have new faith in the simplicities of the old gospel. I believe more in its right and power to marshal all forms and forces of Christlike manhood and womanhood under a common banner. It is my conviction that I have no right to put between Christ's church and any soul tests for belief or demands upon conscience which my master did not promulgate at the first as essential to his ideal of manhood or necessary for the upbuilding of his kingdom. I am convinced that the first necessity for my laboring effectively at Plymouth Church, indeed the absolute requirement made by my heart and conscience, is the simplifying and strengthening of the articles of faith upon which the church sets up her banner and invites men and women to unite with her in the common task and hope of making this a better world. I would make our statement less theological and more religious. I would insist upon the orthodoxy which Christ had in mind when he said: 'Not every one that saith "Lord, Lord," shall enter into the kingdom of heaven: but he that doeth the will of my father which is in heaven.' A true sorrow that one has been wrong, an honest turning from wrong to right, desire to be like the master, trust in him as one who has the right to guide and rule our lives, willingness to take his spirit and put it into all our life and labor—these are the fundamental and ethical ideals I would emphasize; and I would substitute these for theological statements.

MORE RELIGION, LESS THEOLOGY.

"I would have Plymouth Church open a door large enough to admit a man as religiously great as Abraham Lincoln, however small he might be theologically. I am not fearful of the consequences of this letting down of the bars. I would make the invitation and method of entrance into the church as wide and inclusive as her founder made them. In a word, I would make the Christian Church as Christian as Christ himself. Day and night I am joyfully laboring with men for the enlargement of the reign of Jesus on earth whose lives are the eloquent confession of his essential lordship over them, but they are not in the visible church. If I reach any heaven of God, I expect to gladly greet and be greeted by them. Why must we postpone the cordial acknowledgment until after we die? Shadowy and arbitrary lines will vanish then in the white light of essentials. I believe that now the church ought to be hospitable at least to all the energies and aspects of practical Christlikeness. It ought to be the home, training school, and armory unto all who would form or reform the world from wrong to right. It ought also to be the moral hospital, admitting learned spiritual surgeons and skillful religious physicians, but admitting them only because there are many sick and weak and wounded who need their help to the sound health they thus seek.

"The only line of division which is fundamental runs so deep and high that, on the one side, are those who feel in them no response to the moral divineness of Jesus of Galilee and who do not want to be like him, and, on the other side, are those who do feel the moral divineness of Jesus of Galilee and who do want to be like him. According to that line I would labor and pray. I would make the church as exclusive and as inclusive as the spirit of Christ. I believe it ought to have as large and firm a gateway on earth as it will have in heaven. I frankly say, I would make the portal here roomy enough to admit all goodness.

"Faithfully and affectionately yours,
"FRANK W. GUNSAULUS."

POSITION OF THE REV. MR. HAYNES.

The letter of the Rev. Mr. Haynes was brief, saying he would be pleased to work with Dr. Gunsaulus under the conditions the latter had set forth and would do so in case those suggestions met with the hearty approval of the church. It was in part as follows:—

"This, plainly, must be a church of Christ; guided by his mind and impelled by his spirit. We should have no other conditions of membership, or fellowship, than those which Jesus established. Those conditions were religious rather than theological; ethical rather than metaphysical; moral rather than dogmatic. We should emphasize the same conditions to-day, and no others. I firmly believe this would be the first step of a return to the simplicity and beautiful effectiveness of that early Christian fellowship."

Following the reading of the letters the Rev. Mr. Haynes delivered a sermon on "What Shall Be the Conditions of Church Fellowship?" His address was a plea for a return to what he termed the beautiful simplicity of Christ's way of receiving mankind.

COMMENTS OF DR. H. W. THOMAS.

Dr. Gunsaulus, asked for an interview after church, said his letter gave full expression of his views. The Congressional church is individual, each body being able and authorized to act for itself independent of dictation from other sister churches.

The Rev. Dr. H. W. Thomas, pastor of People's Church, said of the movement in Plymouth Church: "It is suggestive of the tendency of the times in religious thought. The effort has been to hold men to the thinking of the past. The whole movement of the world is in the direction of life. I think the pastor of Plymouth Church for years has seen the difficulty of getting men to believe the old theology, and felt the injustice of keeping men out because they can't believe it. There has got to be more independence in religious thinking; a larger acceptance of the larger faith and hope."—Chicago Tribune, October 10, 1898.

Several points may be stated, in connection with the foregoing. Dr. Gunsaulus, an experienced Christian minister, brought up and educated in the theology of the times, states, in effect, that the old theology, the system of the so-called evangelical churches, has largely been erroneous and ineffective; that the creeds have been wrong. There is therefore need for a change, a departure from old beaten paths, a facing about, a new line of march.

The basis of the new departure is outlined in the statement: "The hour has come in the history of American Evangelical Christendom, for a large advance movement conceived in the deeper faith to which all recent thinking and devotion have brought the human mind," etc. No direct instruction, such as was received by the apostolic ministry, is claimed by the Reverend Gunsaulus; he is moving with the popular conceptions and spirit of the times. In harmony with that conception he "must be permitted to invite men into visible relationship with the kingdom of Christ upon the terms which Jesus insisted upon." He has "no new gospel to utter," but has "new faith in the simplicities of the old gospel."

That the old creeds were stiff, rigid, formal, lifeless, and erroneous, no one acquainted with them and with the teachings of the word will deny. That the general drift of public religious sentiment has been in the direction of nearness to God, will be denied by all who have observed the general trend of the Christianized world; and this with due regard to whatever lines of development have been correct. Not long ago we published the statement of a popular Chicago clergyman that, over three millions of people in the State of Illinois were practically disinterested in the subject of Christianity and had no connection with the churches about them. Another popular religious worker, the secretary of an influential religious organization, which held its annual session at Battle Creek, Michigan, stated at that meeting, in effect, that the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor, the W. C. T. U., the Y. M. C. A., and the general work of the evangelical churches, were largely failures; that something must be done to infuse new life into the churches; that new and radical departures in church life and work were necessary.

Much as all true progress is to be appreciated, the Rev. Frank Gunsaulus has not discriminated closely, it seems, in his interpretation of the present religious movement and spirit of the age. The trend seems to be in the direction of a wide rebound from foundation principles. While it is true that the creeds of Calvinistic and other bodies were erroneous, the tide of popular disapproval has been setting and continues to run in the direction of the other extreme; and with the casting away of human creeds, the disposition to depart from Bible foundations largely exists and grows stronger. The so-called "higher criticism," much of it at least, would antedate the Mosaic cosmogony with fragmentary, Babylonian and other so-called myth-legends, would make them the basis of the Jewish cosmogony and take from Moses the authorship of the Pentateuch, likewise from the prophets much of their work and utterances. The ethical teachings of Jesus Christ would be separated from his doctrinal principles and be made into a system of faith. Indeed the drift, the tendency, of the times is to exalt a few of the moral and ethical teachings of the Bible and to disregard its doctrinal requirements. Christ as an ethical teacher is exalted; as teacher of theological principles he is "despised and rejected of men." The drift seems to be toward a refined, ethical paganism.

The same questions that the representatives of the latter-day message have been urging upon the world remain to be considered and answered by the religious world—those professing faith in God; viz.: If Christ was and is a Teacher sent of God, how is it possible to draw a line of distinction between his ethical and his theological or doctrinal teachings? How can men be consistent who accept his precepts that inculcate love for God and fellow-man, with deeds of charity, but who reject his commands to do and teach in harmony with the great commission of Mark 16, Matthew 28, and other precepts. Is Christ divided? If so, will his kingdom stand? Will he change in order to conform to the lines being laid down by popular religious movements? Is he "the author and finisher of our faith?" or does it remain for the modern theologians to correct the system of faith once taught by the Christ, by severing therefrom what in their judgment is defective and permitting to remain what suits their fancies? If so, would one be censurable for entertaining the conviction that the time may come when men may see fit to cast aside all the principles of Christianity and even the Christ himself and substitute therefor an entirely new conception?

These queries naturally present themselves to the observing student of the past and present. He is led to inquire whether truth be eternal or transient; whether Deity in his revealments builds upon temporary or permanent foundations; whether the system of faith that brought an Enoch, the Christ himself in his human nature, a Peter, a John, and a Paul into touch with God and to final salvation and perfection, will not do likewise for all the human family; whether it brought salvation because containing essential principles of truth, incorporated into the system because true and strictly necessary to the development of a perfect character and a perfect life. Is it true or false that in the gospel of Jesus Christ the righteousness (rightness) of God is "revealed"—brought to light, made plain, and accessible to mankind? Will departure from or ignoring of any doctrinal principle taught by the Christ result in a system of faith "more religious" and "less theological"? It may be less theological—that is, there may be less of the science of Godliness in such a system; but, is that what is wanted?

The new departure may be "the first step of a return to the simplicity and beautiful effectiveness of that early Christian fellowship," but we seriously doubt it. To be considerate as well as candid, the many steps taken in the dark by modern theologians do not, in their actual results, justify the hope nor the opinion that they are coming nearer to the primitive gospel system instituted by the Christ and his apostles. Church teaching, sectarianism, and religious and moral conditions, do not justify such expectations or opinions. The tendency is, as stated, to remove from ancient foundations—to cast adrift without chart, compass, or rudder in the popular tendency to follow changing, developing public opinion.

The question naturally arises, Has God, whose "Fatherhood" has been much and widely proclaimed in a nominal sense, has God, the Creator, left men and women no sure, no definite, no clear instructions upon such grave and important questions as those pertaining to the present and the future life? Has he left it to human invention, to human experience, to develop in the wisdom that is human what shall be done, what shall be the principles of action to attain the divine? He did not so do in the past, but gave "in the beginning" a rational, a consistent, a scientific expression of his Fatherhood, his love, for his children; and continued so to do in the dispensations of the past. Such is the God of the Bible, such the Father of humanity; such the manifestation of his eternal power and Godhead, such the revelation of his will through Jesus Christ, the light and the life of men, in whom is hidden "all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge."

God, our Father, the Father of the world, is not revealed as experimenting in devising methods of dealing with humanity. It is not denied that he has tried men, has through opportunity given them the privilege of measuring themselves by his standards. It is denied, however, that he has left it to human wisdom to develop a system of faith, to outline a rule of religious conduct for humanity. We do not read that man was permitted to change the natural order in the physical world, that he was ever qualified to substitute a different order in the natural, physical world about him. The same divine arrangement instituted of God continues, so far as unaffected by the sin of man; the same seasons come and go, the same fruitage and sequences appear in the various kingdoms of the world of sense and sight. Even of them the promise is made of higher things, of perfection of each in its sphere, but the enjoyment of such only through obedience to the revealed, the spiritual law—that instituted and given of God. How much more then the need of close adherence to what God has ordained and spoken to the world through his Son, "by whom also he made the worlds"?

It is not denied that men need to develop in and broaden their views in all true lines of development. It is denied, however, that human development can exceed the wisdom of God. Such a position is both illogical and absurd. It needs no argument to establish its erroneousness. It is not denied that modern developments in general should exceed those of the past. It should not be forgotten, however, that while God and those enlightened of him are developing and are to exceed by reason of the experiences of the past, in moral growth, in mechanic arts and utilities, in science and general civilization, God stands preëminently above and superior to humanity; that his truth is eternal—that truth is always truth. True human advancement consists of approximating to the standards of truth. Every movement out of harmony therewith is but temporary and unsubstantial. Truth only is eternal, hence to build in accordance with it is essential to permanency.

Every principle of truth is limited to certain bounds and conditions. No one principle of the divine economy can ignore or override any other; nor can one be removed without imperiling the whole. All so-called "broadness" of spirit or policy must be tested by the breadth and limitations of the truth itself.

There is no "largeness" in any system of faith and hope out of harmony with the Ruler of the universe. Man is finite, God is infinite. The limitations of man are the confines of his circumscribed position in his individual, narrow world. The broadness of the philosophy of truth is represented in the spacious avenues of the universe, the paths of which are definite, immovable, and unchangeable. It is upon the word of God therefore that the hope of humanity must be based if that hope would reach within the veil and be as an anchor to the soul, "sure and steadfast." "Therefore not leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on unto perfection."—Heb. 6:1, I. T.

EXPLANATORY, ABOUT WHO SHALL ADMINISTER.

IN writing about the priest administering the sacrament in the same issue of HERALD in which Bro. George Derry's article on the same subject appeared, we had no intention to forestall the effect which his quotations and the arguments based upon them might be intended to have on the readers of the HERALD. All we intended was that what light or understanding we had on the subject might be seen at the same time as his article asking for the light that others might have.

If we presumed upon our privilege as editor in writing as we did, we hope that the fact that we publish his letter bearing on the subject and what we wrote, without comment, will be considered as sufficient reparation for our error. See his letter in HERALD for October 5.

THE clipping, referred to in Bro. George Edwards' letter, and taken from the Philadelphia Ledger of recent date, is given herewith:—

A MORMON MINISTER.

ADDRESS BY A SON OF JOSEPH SMITH.

Rev. Alexander H. Smith, son of Joseph Smith, commonly called the "Mormon prophet," delivered an address to the congregation of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ in Huntingdon Hall, Fifth and Huntingdon streets, last night.

Mr. Smith took as his text these words of Matthew: "Beware of false prophets, which come to you in sheep's clothing, but inwardly they are ravening wolves." He said, in part: "My dear brethren, it is our good fortune to live in the glorious and enlightened nineteenth century, and yet, would you believe it, there are some persons living about us who, despite all their worldly wisdom, do not believe the most important and fundamental truths of religion? There are many who laugh at the idea of prophets existing nowadays, claiming that since the time when Christ came upon this earth there have been no prophets, Christ himself having revealed to us all that was necessary for our salvation. And yet in the Scriptures, in which they all believe, it is written: "Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secret unto his servants, the prophets." And if God does not speak to us now, as he did in the days of Moses, through the mouths of chosen prophets, why is it that we are warned to "beware of false prophets?" The Scriptures does not say beware of all prophets, but beware of false prophets, implying that there are true prophets and that they are to be believed."

He then went on to speak of the organization, trials, and final triumph of the church which was instituted by Joseph Smith, and the prophecies he had uttered, concluding with these words of Scripture: "When a prophet prophesies in the name of the Lord and the thing cometh to pass know that I, the Lord, have spoken."

BRETHREN are at work in California, as witness the following from the Livermore Herald for October 8:—

The meetings in the tent during the week held by the Latter Day Saints have been of an interesting character, as shown by the large attendance on the part of the townspeople. The singing, led by Mrs. Weldon, of San Jose, is no insignificant feature. Elders Sheehy and Daley are the principal speakers. The prayer service, from nine until the noon hour, is also well attended. Thursday afternoon was occupied by the Ladies' Society, known as the Daughters of Zion—something after the plan of the W. C. T. U. Friday was a session devoted to Sunday school work; addresses by several, including the ladies. To-day will be a business session. Preaching Sunday next at eleven a. m., 2:30, and 7:30. A number are expected to-day to stay over Sunday. Elder Parkin, of San Francisco, presiding elder of the Northern California district, came to-day.

NEW TRACT ON SUCCESSION.

BRO. HEMAN C. SMITH, of the Twelve, has been appointed to write a pamphlet on the subject of succession, in reply to the works issued by Elders B. H. Roberts and C. W. Penrose, of the Utah Church. The pamphlet will be published for the church by the Board of Publication. It will be issued first in the columns of the HERALD, after which it will be stereotyped and issued in tract form. Further particulars and prices later.

BRO. ALBERT T. DAVIS, Co. H. Eleventh U. S. Infantry, stationed at Aguadilla, Porto Rico, writes for tracts and other publications to distribute among the people. He writes, under date of September 27:—

This is a good place to introduce the pure gospel, as there is only one Catholic church here, and the people generally do not seem to take much stock in it. The people's minds have not been spoiled by many different doctrines. Some good elder that could preach and teach in the Spanish language could, I think, do an immense amount of good. Wishing and praying for the welfare of Zion, and asking for an interest in your prayers, I am as ever, your brother in gospel bonds.

It is gratifying to see brethren who have enlisted and gone to distant lands in the service of their country remember the church and its work.

We trust that with the downfall of Spanish rule and the superstitions that accompanied it there may come both political and religious liberty to the peoples freed from the yoke of despotism. Bro. Davis is endeavoring to plant the seed of truth in Porto Rico. May it be sown there and everywhere throughout the world that liberty and light indeed may be proclaimed to all who sit in darkness. The function of light is to shine, to penetrate, to illuminate, to dispel darkness and evil; to bring life and joy to those under the baneful oppression of error. It ought to be so widely radiated that no one be left to grope in blindness and superstition.

OUR readers will remember Rector Ahlwardt, the anti-Semitic leader of Germany, who urged the passage of anti-Jewish legislation in Germany, and also visited America in the interest of his fanatical crusade. The tide has set so strongly in favor of the Jew that Ahlwardt's occupation seems to be gone:—

Rector Ahlwardt, the Jewbaiter, has come to grief financially. His cigar store in Berlin has been closed by the Sheriff for nonpayment of rent. The saloons run by his son-in-law in his name were sold out some time ago. He intends to start in business again at Friedeberg, the chief town of the district that elected him to the Reichstag.—Ex.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

GOOD for Chicago. Bro. J. M. Terry writes October 8:—

We are struggling on with prospects of a bright nature before us, and even now accomplishing something for the cause. On Wednesday night between seven and eight p. m., Bro. George H. Graves and I baptized three in the lake; he two and I one; one an old colored lady of good spirit and understanding. Saints are usually hopeful and earnest in the cause, and the best feature is, they are united.

Of the work, Bro. Alexander H. Smith wrote from Fall River, Massachusetts, October 11:—

While at Jonesport I helped Bro. T. C. Kelley organize a Zion's Religio-Literary, and Sr. Walker writes that it is increasing in numbers and interest. Two baptized there lately, more who express faith in the work who may soon come. I held meeting in Philadelphia and Brooklyn. Good spiritual times. Came here last Friday. Saturday conference convened. First session a bit cloudy, same spirit manifest which has troubled the saints here for years; was here five years ago when I was here before, a spirit of division, but we got along with it safely, and Sunday we had a blessed time. At prayer service Sunday and also Monday morning, there was a feast of fat things from the Lord. I was blessed in speaking to the saints in reviewing the Roberts and Penrose pamphlets. Two Utah elders present. I did not know it till about a minute before I got up to speak. Held my audience two hours, or some said two and a half. Outsiders and saints very attentive. I had wonderful liberty. Was edified and entertained myself. I could see more than I could tell.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

THE brethren of the Massachusetts district in their late conference made a very favorable impression on the local press; at least so we judge from a column account of the proceedings published in the Fall River Herald for October 10. The attendance of Pres. A. H. Smith, Bro. M. H. Bond, and others is noted with favorable comment upon their sermons. The position of the Reorganized Church in contradistinction to the organization in Utah is clearly and forcefully stated. Bro. Smith, Gilbert, Bullard, Coombs, Nickerson, and others of the New England ministry also receive due mention.

Bro. Winfred B. Kelley, accompanied by his brother, Bro. E. L. Kelley, Jr., returned home, to Lamoni, on Thursday, the 13th, from Jacksonville, Florida, ill from the effects of fever, and emaciated. He is slowly gaining strength. Bro. Alma McCallum, a musician with one of the Missouri regiments, also returned on the same day. These, with Bro. W. S. Blair and Bro. Joseph Smith, son of Pres. A. H. Smith, who returned a short time ago, include all the Lamoni brethren returned on furloughs to date.

Arrivals during the past week include Bishop Kelley, from Hastings, Iowa, and Bro. G. H. Hilliard, from Independence, Missouri. Departures: Bro. E. A. Blakeslee to Galien, Michigan, and Bro. W. H. Kelley, to Chicago, Pittsburg, and the Eastern mission.

"For the pleasure of the clerical guests a large smoking-room has been erected next the church. Much sociability will be promoted thereby, although smoking-rooms are not altogether common at religious gatherings. The delegates are in the best of spirits and good stories are not wanting out of session. A smoker will be given at Rauchers' by the Washington churchmen to their guests."—Washington report of late Episcopal convention, October 5.

BEHAVING.—CONCLUDED.

ANOTHER thing: thoughtless girls often accept kindly courtesies from gentlemen in a matter-of-course way, or even as though they were conferring a favor by accepting them. This is neither polite nor right. The obligation is on your side, though your courteous attendant asks it as a favor, when he goes half a mile out of his way to see you safe home; you should acknowledge it by a hearty "thank you," when you bid him good night, and don't forget this "thank you,"—we like the form much better than the impersonal "thanks"—when receiving any courtesy, as well as any favor. Indeed, your manner of receiving, quite as much as your manner of doing, a favor, decides whether you are really courteous.

It has been truly said that treatment of inferiors is the real test of true courtesy. If you always remember to treat them with "real gospel manners," as a Quaker friend of mine expresses it, we may be sure you have the genuine article, not a thin veneering of good manners.

If you are visiting at other homes be as pleasant and entertaining as you can, and make as little trouble as possible. Conform to the regulations of the house. Before retiring, inquire the breakfast hour, and be sure to be ready at least five minutes before the time, so there shall be no danger of keeping the family waiting. We have known thoughtless guests throw the whole day out of time, and tunc also, by lack of punctuality. The breakfast bell rings and they are not ready; five minutes pass; ten minutes, and the whole family waits. Father and brother are impatient to go to business; perhaps they need to take their train, which does not wait for any one; the children are in danger of being late to school; breakfast grows cold and cook cross, all because you did not rise early enough, or dawdled around instead of dressing, after you were up. Be on time always; not to be punctual is to steal some one's time. Show that you appreciate the efforts made to entertain you. If an excursion is planned for your benefit, go to it pleasantly, even if you would prefer to curl up on the sofa and read a story book. If things do not turn out so pleasantly as was planned, make the best of it; your hosts feel the disappointment more than you can. Accept the courtesies tendered you in the hearty, kindly spirit they are offered. If you are asked to choose between a ride and a walk, between visiting a picture gallery or spending the afternoon with a friend, between going a fishing or a boat ride, choose, and say which you do prefer, instead of simpering, "I'm not particular," or "I don't care," when really you do care very much. Unless you do choose, you give your friends the trouble of choosing for you; it is not only polite but kind to save them this trouble by making a choice, even if you do not really care which you do.

When your friends show you nice or beautiful things, do not be afraid to express your appreciation of them lest you should be thought not to be used to nice things at home. I have known young people, and older ones, too, make themselves very disagreeable in this way; their friend takes them to a picture gallery filled with paintings much finer than they have ever before seen, but lest this fact should be suspected they say, "Yes, they are quite pretty, but you ought to see Mr. Brown's collection." Your friend takes you to ride round the very pleasant Western village where she lives, and pointing to a favorite view, says, "Is it not pretty?" "You have never seen New Haven, I presume," you respond, and the light dies out of your friend's happy face immediately.

A friend of mine lives in Washington and often has occasion to show the sights of this most beautiful of American cities to acquaintances visiting it for the first time. She has to do this so often that it becomes monotonous, and I expressed wonder how she could do it with such a good grace. She replied: "If people only appreciate the beautiful things they see, I enjoy it; but if people act as if nothing was quite as good as they expected, and try to impress me with the feeling they have seen much finer things at home, I feel like telling them to go home, and stay there."

While visiting, make as little trouble and work as possible; if there is no chambermaid, take care of your own room, and be sure it is well taken care of. It is very annoying to a hostess to see her parlor chamber, which she always keeps in "apple-pie order," in a littered, untidy condition. Do not strew your things around over bureaus and chairs, but keep them put away nicely in your trunk or the drawers assigned you. Do not bring unnecessary muss or dirt into your room. If you have been to the woods for mosses or wild flowers, do not bring them to your room to arrange. Do that out-of-doors, or on the porch where the muss you are sure to make can be easily swept up. If you have been walking or riding in the dust, brush or shake off as much of it as you can before entering the house. Amanda was visiting where the blue room was assigned her, all its appointments dainty and delicate in color. She came in from a long ride over a dusty road, and did not so much as take off her duster down-stairs, but went straight to her room; there she took both it and her dress off and shook them vigorously. The dust rose in clouds and settled all over everything, transforming the blue into a gray. After seeing this I could not feel that Amanda was quite the lady I wished her to be. If you have been out in the rain, be sure to put your gossamer and umbrella where they will do no hurt, and clean your muddy overshoes before bringing them into the house.

Do not scatter your things about the house, leaving your gloves on the piano, your hat on the porch where you sat down when you came in from riding. And when you return home take all your belongings with you, not leaving your nightdress under the pillow, your rubbers in the wardrobe, your brushes on the bureau. It is said of a lady who travels extensively, that she has sown her belongings from ocean to ocean. This does not matter so much when stopping at hotels, for then you, alone, are the sufferer; you lose your things and the chambermaid appropriates them. But at your friends' house the bother does not end with your loss, nor is any one the gainer; they do not wish to keep them, so must be to the trouble, and perhaps the expense, of returning them to you.

If you are a visitor in the city where you go about in street cars, always have your fare ready to pay the conductor, and do not wait to have your hostess pay it for you. It is never nice to put ourselves under money obligations to our friends. Often they insist on paying such little things; if they do, allow them to do so, but look out next time that you have the pleasure of paying for the party. Of course I do not mean that you should keep a debit and credit account with your friends, but I do wish you to cultivate a generous, independent spirit.

Before you go, thank your hostess for her kindness to you; it is a pleasant thing to give her some little token of your appreciation of her efforts to make your stay pleasant. It need not be anything expensive; indeed, some pretty piece of your own handiwork is better. Do not forget to thank the servants for what they have done for you; if with your thanks goes a bright tie, a handkerchief or some other little thing they will prize, so much the better. I am almost ashamed to tell you that you must keep sacred any family secrets that have become known to you during your stay, because every one knows that to divulge them is a sad breach of courtesy; but young people are thoughtless, and, from very thoughtlessness, often repeat things heard in one family circle that ought never to be told in another. For the same cause they are often guilty of "taking off" the peculiarities of their hosts, thus violating the oldest law of courtesy in the world. This is a sad return for kindness, and something you should never stoop to do. More trouble has been made by Miss Gad-a-bout's tale-telling than she can ever undo. We do not wish our young people ever to incur her guilt.

American arrangements for traveling are so admirable that children and young ladies can safely travel alone; if it is necessary for you to do so, you need have no hesitation about doing it. But in traveling, even more than at a friend's house, it is necessary that you behave yourself discreetly. Keep yourself to yourself. Do not strike up acquaintances, nor enter into conversation with anybody. If you wish any information, ask the conductor for it; he knows, and it is his place to tell you. He will do it pleasantly, if you ask him courteously. If anyone tries to open conversation with you, discourage it politely but decidedly. If he asks where you come from, where you are going, or any other personal question, do not give him the information; he has no right to know. You need not be rude about this; your wits are bright enough to frame an evasive answer which is not discourteous. You will not appropriate an entire seat to yourself and your bundles when the car is crowded, nor keep your window open to the annoyance of your neighbors, nor trouble the conductor with useless questions, nor do any other thing that shows you are thinking more of yourself than of others. You will not munch candy or peanuts from morning till night, nor strew your luncheon over the seat, to the detriment of the next dress that occupies it. If there are two of you together you will have a better time than if you are alone, but you will also be in more danger of doing unmannerly things. You will be tempted to do the things we have warned you against, besides others you could not do alone. You will be liable to forget where you are, and talk and laugh loudly, to publish your own and your neighbor's private affairs. You think the noise of the cars prevents people from hearing you, but when you are saying the most uncharitable thing about your neighbor, or the very thing you least wish others to hear, the cars stop unheeded by you, and every word you say is heard.

Traveling affords many opportunities for doing kindly things. You can give up your seat by the window to your companion who has never passed over that road before; you can rest that tired mother by amusing her baby and keeping it quiet; you can give your shady-side seat to that old lady, who will prize it more than you can, or yield your camp stool on deck to that old gentleman, who is not so well able to stand as you are.

Have we answered all your questions about behaving? There are very many other things we might tell you, but instead we will direct you where to go for an infallible recipe. Study the thirteenth chapter of Second Corinthians; gauge yourself by its precepts, and whether you are at home or abroad, at school or in church, on the street, the railroad car, or the steamboat, we will insure your having real gospel manners, and finer manners than these no one can have.—Childhood: Its Care and Culture.

RHODES, Iowa, Oct 5.

Editors Herald:—Owing to affliction of a nervous and dyspeptic type, I was under the necessity of retiring from the active field of labor on June 18. From then till September 16 I was at home wrestling with nervous depression and fears and frequent discouragements, till the 15th of August, when our debate held near Lamoni, Iowa, with Mr. Allison began. I went into the discussion with some misgivings on account of physical condition. Many others feared for me as to personal results, but to the surprise of myself and others I grew even stronger as the contest progressed. A slow but gradual improvement has attended to this time.

I preached three times at Lone Rock, Missouri, and twice at Davis City, in August and September, and on September 17 I returned to my field of labor, after having visited the longest with wife and little ones of any visit at home in the twenty years of my married life; and, under the circumstances, I but added to her burden of care and labor. If any of those who think the missionary and his family are having "a good time," in the sense of having an easy time, will relieve us of our obligation to God to preach the gospel and will take our place in the field for life, come on, enlist, and we will retire, go to work, and joyfully pay our tithing that the gospel may spread abroad to gladden the hearts and revive the hopes, brighten the prospects and spirits of those longing for the joy of saints and the salvation of God. It is the consciousness of God's approval that strengthens and stays the hearts of the honest missionary and wife while duty separates them during the greater part of their united life. God keeps record of the sacrifice made; and the wife of the missionary is a laborer for God with him. Let her not despair; God's eye is over her for good and a reward of good and eternal glory. Her double responsibility fulfilled in the absence of husband and father entitles her to the greater meed of honor, when and where it will be justly measured to her.

I was with Brn. E. B. Morgan and W. H. Kephart in a series of tent meetings near Milo, Warren County, September 17 to 25, and was blessed in dispensing the word. While there we called the saints together, on Saturday, the 24th, at 2:30, and considered the propriety of organizing them into a branch. After consulting the saints and the missionaries, and offering such instruction as we were led to, and by recommendation, Brn. Robert W. Bare and Samuel Burgess were chosen unanimously, the former to be ordained to the office of priest, the latter a deacon. Sr. Mina Van Syoc, Milo, Iowa, was chosen secretary. On Sunday, the 25th, the brethren selected above-named, were ordained, C. Scott being spokesman in ordaining Bro. Bare, Bro. E. B. Morgan in the ordination of Bro. Burgess. The Spirit of the Lord was with us in the ordinations. Eighteen members identified themselves with the branch, and by vote the name given to the organization is, "Concord." The brethren ordained were chosen officers of the branch.

Monday, September 26, closed our efforts at Concord, and the next morning bright and early, in company with Bro. Morgan and Bro. and Sr. Willard Thomas, we left Bro. William Griffin's for the conference to be held near this place, October 1 and 2. Bro. Kephart remained with the saints at Concord, to labor in vicinities adjacent, rather than attend conference. By the kindness of Bro. and Sr. Thomas, of Centre Junction, Jones County, Iowa, who were on their way home from the Bluff Park reunion, by way of Lamoni, Van Wert, Milo, and our district conference, traveling by "hack," I was conveyed to this place, free of charge, which was appreciated greatly, in these days when the elder must study economy, or be "assigned."

We stopped at Runnels on the way and

Bro. Morgan and I preached once each, at evening, then came on, arriving in time for the Sunday school convention held on Friday, September 30.

The conference held at Clear Creek was well attended, a larger proportion than usual being young saints. This was encouraging, and they were deeply interested and enjoyed the services. The spirit of saintly love and kindness prevailed during all the sessions. At the opening session for business some forty minutes were occupied in social and devotional worship, which unified the minds and hearts of saints, better preparing all for the business to be done, and greatly facilitated its dispatch. Many present thought it to have been the best conference held in the district for a long time. At the Sunday afternoon social service, three prayers were offered, many verses sung, two children blessed, and thirty-six testimonies were borne; a heavenly place in Christ, indeed.

But, dear saints, the calls for the preaching of the word are so numerous throughout the district, many of them by those outside, and the laborers so few! It mars our joy to contemplate this matter. And Bro. E. B. Morgan thinks to retire from the field, and no one to take his place; also some difficulties exist in the district that must be adjusted or the work will suffer loss. We were disappointed to a degree in not meeting Bro. H. C. Smith at conference, but no doubt others were being blessed with his labors.

Our next conference will be held with the Runnels branch, February next, 1899, on the Saturday and Sunday nearest the full moon. Bro. George Shimel, though not permitted to be present at conference, is fervently remembered for his faithful work done in this region during the last year. Come again, Bro. Shimel. More anon,

C. SCOTT.

PEDRO, Ohio, Oct. 5.

Editors Herald:—On my way home from our district conference I baptized an invalid lady, the wife of our worthy brother and railroad agent at Union Furnace, S. B. Kriebel. Brn. Griffiths, F. C. Smith, H. E. Moler, S. J. Jeffers, J. L. Goodrich, T. W. Matthews, and others were present at the baptism. We left her rejoicing.

On the 23d of September I went to Lagrange and on the 24th at 2:15 p. m. I baptized Charles G. Williams, and at 7:45 p. m., in the presence of a large assembly of people, I said the words that made him and Sr. Maggie Smith one, and in about thirty minutes afterward they started to their home near Hanging Rock, where Bro. W. had a house ready with the necessary implements for housekeeping. May peace and happiness be theirs to enjoy.

I preached each evening while I remained at Lagrange, warning sinners and trying to encourage saints. While there I ordained Bro. A. Fugitt to the office of deacon. While I was at Lagrange our worthy young brother, James Haggarty, who went forward at the call of our country, returned home on a thirty days' furlough, hale and hearty and still in the faith of the great latter-day work.

On the 29th of September I came here, where there are fifteen or twenty saints. They are not organized, but the greater part of them are doing fairly well, although they have had but very little preaching in the last four years. I have preached seven times since coming here, and to-day I baptized four into the fold. There are some new openings in the district, but as we have but very little help, either missionary or local, we cannot reach many of them, as it occupies all my time looking after the work in the branches and among the scattered sheep. I go home on the 7th for a few days, then on to Perry and Hocking Counties, where there is work awaiting me, some of which is not of an agreeable nature.

O, how I long to see the time come when the saints will all be righteous, virtuous, and pure! Seeing the signs of the end appearing it seems so strange that so many are so careless. May the great God by some means arouse us to a keen sense of the situation.

Kindly yours, hoping and desiring to hold on to the rod of iron,
JAMES MOLER.

ALBION, Idaho, August 23.

Dear Herald:—To instruct unto edification in righteousness and give needed information should occupy the minds of all who write for thee. The trumpet should give no uncertain sound. Your destiny is to herald good news to all people; a signal of danger to thoughtless or willful sons and daughters of men. How careful we saints should be that the thoughts you scatter broadcast be the leaven of love and truth. If before clothing our thoughts as words for you to carry to the four winds of heaven we would in secret ask earnestly for the guidance of the Spirit of truth, much that is written would not be, and who can estimate the value of what would be?

"Where goest thou?" Sin is a vast wilderness with broad roads and lonely trails. There are popular sins as well as solitary vices. Multitudes indulge in sins which popularity gives license to walk in broad ways. Because the masses wander in the wilderness of sin, the way of life and peace—the "highway of holiness"—is considered a very "narrow way." Each of us for ourselves must answer the question. "Rely upon the things written." We are not crowned except we "strive lawfully." To saints it is written, "The Spirit giveth light to every man that cometh into the world; and the Spirit enlighteneth every man through the world, that hearkeneth to the voice of the Spirit."—D. C. 83:7.

Speculation is a field for research in which the carnal mind is ever exploring, yet ever afloat on a shoreless sea. To those walking in the "way of holiness" there is a sense of security for the future, a condition of peace and restfulness which nothing but the gospel brings each day to us. It was intended we should know for a positive certainty when we get out of the wilderness of sin into the "true light" and on the "highway." The true light "shineth more and more unto the perfect day." We should learn the truth of these things and "chase darkness from among" us. We are children being led by a loving Father's hand. As our day so shall our light be. So we do not need to speculate on the future, neither do we feel like doing so if fully walking in the "true light." This is bright millennial peace. Will not the Spirit reveal to us the blessed condition of all creation in that day, beyond any doubts or fears, and grant us the same sweet rest and "assurance forever"?

The millennial reign is a model republic, a government by "common consent." My brother's interest as my own. I am "my brother's keeper." Celestial law in practical, everyday affairs of life. "Zion cannot be built up unless it is by the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom," etc. "When the Lord shall build up Zion, he shall appear in his glory." All victory is brought to pass through obedience and the "prayer of faith."

Have we not volunteered in the army of the Lord? Are we "wedded" to the Lord? Do we love what he loves, and do we avoid every appearance of evil? How many "effectives" in the army of the Lord? Are we waiting for the Lord to modify, or shall we "line up" with him? "Be ye clean, that bear the vessels of the Lord." Are any of the Lord's commands too high for us to obey? If so, will our children be stronger than we?

Trials and temptations are strong, say some. Those are the battles we volunteered to fight. Soldiers who stand firm are heroes; cowards flee or yield the field; traitors surrender in this struggle. The Master never led his army to the foe except for a trial of strength. To test our fidelity to truth and right was temptation devised through the alluring of the world, the flesh, and the Devil.

All the promises are to those who "overcome." Shall we wear the victor's crown or endure the shame of defeat? Who among this mighty army was ever tried beyond his conscientious power to resist? "Resist the devil, and he will flee from you." Never do I expect to offer the least excuse for any side-step from the "narrow way" of my journey. There was a time when I was somewhat indifferent or not fully roused to sense the duty of a soldier, but it should be a constant pleasure to do the will of him we list to obey; and those who list to obey his majesty—to roam in the wilderness of sin—appear to be more interested than those who list to obey their only true, undeviating Friend. Our wounds and bruises are the result of unfaithfulness in "line of duty." He who was wounded in the house of his friends is sorely wounded to-day among that same careless, heedless people, his "friends." In all my references to our people let none feel unduly sensitive, as I feel that each soul feels and knows its own status with the Lord for itself, and I aim to examine myself. I expect to account for the deeds done in the body. If anyone feels to censure me, I will endeavor to look at myself through his glasses, and compare both views and profit by the lesson, from friend or foe. I am in for "the war," and by the grace and favor of the Lord I want to win and be of service in the "vineyard." I desire to walk up in the strength and light of the Lord and do faithfully, cheerfully, and lovingly, all the pleasure of the Lord, for the joy that is set before me.

Every calling has its shadow and sunshine, but I learned by experience in the past when clouds or the mists of night obscure my way to quietly and patiently wait their lifting; and in this fight against the "prince of darkness," when my way is obscured I shall endeavor to reach out both hands and heart to Him who is able to lead me through the mists and fogs, though they be horrors of darkness. There is always a divine purpose in this, too, and sunshine seems brighter after darkness has passed away. Many of the sweetest seasons of communion with God succeed this transient gloom if we do lovingly, patiently abide in faithfulness. Nothing ever comes to those who love the truth of God but what is for their advancement and growth in the knowledge of the Lord. This should ever rest with us as a blessed assurance, that we should never lose a chance to step up, "come up higher."

Since this year came in I have visited about two hundred and fifty homes in this county, and often spent from one to two hours at a place talking over the "things of the kingdom," profitably to myself spiritually, if not to others; but time will tell if I did good. If I made any enemies I have not as yet learned it. In humility and love I desire to do all my work that my testimony shall stand in my favor when I meet these dear people at the judgment bar of the great King. I never loved war, even when I served our starry banner in the campaigns of the old fifteenth A. C. from the time it was organized till disbanded in 1865. I never felt a wave of malice towards the "boys in gray." I was rather young then to feel aught of the real spirit of war, except to "hold the fort" at all hazard.

The more I see of this war against that fallen "son of the morning" the more intensely interesting it is. If we win, and win we must if we "yield not to temptation" and abide in the "true vine," we need not worry over "what shall the harvest be." To keep on the "highway of life" is perfect liberty in life, as well as on "yonder shore." It is good to be a "saint of latter days."

We do not feel like hiding from the presence of the Lord, neither the question, "Where goest thou?" Strange indeed that the sons of God should "seek deep to hide their counsel from the Lord." I hear people say if it were not for the future they would have a grand time of fun and frolic here. Religious restraint, fear of punishment may be good to save society from suicide, but life on that plane I neither envy nor desire. Love is the only factor which beautifies, purifies, and sanctifies. Duty drops below par when love steps to the front and assumes her sway. The "bond of the covenant" is love. To understand the nature of the covenant we have entered into and abide there brings the elixir of life. Are we waiting and working for the consolation of Israel? Suppose we all join hands and hearts for Zion's weal and see how soon the Lord will open up the storehouse of his treasures for her restoration.

Loyally, your brother,

CHARLES ALBERTSON.

PENNSBOROUGH, W. Va., Oct. 6.

Editors Herald:—I joined Bro. D. L. Shinn on the 14th of August, at Henderson, Mason County, West Virginia, a new opening, where he had been preaching for some time. I never saw a greater interest and as little prejudice anywhere. We baptized one there and went thence to Wayne County, where Bro. Shinn preached a funeral sermon and baptized two, on the 25th of September.

From there we came to Goose Creek and began on the 26th, holding over until October 2, and then came to this place. Bro. Shinn has gone home for a few days' rest and will join me on the 8th, at Cabin Run, where he will baptize one on Sunday. The work is onward in the West Virginia district. The trouble seems to be that the harvest is too large for the amount of laborers. I herewith send an order for a bundle of Heralds and such other literature as is suitable for a new place, to John Robbins, Henderson P. O., Mason County, West Virginia, for distribution. There is the greatest interest there I ever in a new place.

I am enjoying the hospitalities of old Bro. and Sr. Leason to-day. Bro. Leason has been blind for three years and confined to his home, but is strong in the faith.

Your brother in bonds,

SAUBLE FALLS, Ont., Oct. 5.

Editors Herald:—The Lord is still blessing us in this part of the vineyard. The spirit of investigation is rife everywhere. Some go at it honestly, others dishonestly. As a result of honest investigation twelve more have been baptized, nearly all heads of families.

The trustees of Oliphant school have given me orders to preach only one night a week, and that on a week night. Some of the rate payers have made a kick and demand a meeting called, so to-night rate payers have a meeting. A howling time is expected. Let them do what they will, it will only result for good to Zion's cause.

Yours in bonds,

DANIEL MACGREGOR.

FT. WORTH, Texas, Sept. 2.

Editors Herald:—The inclosed is copy of article which appeared in Herald. It is off balance ten years. 690—94=596, instead of 606, as the brother has it. Please call attention to the error. Yours truly,

J. E. NICOLL.

FT. WORTH, Texas, Sept. 3.

Editors Herald:—On looking over inclosed chart again I find there is another discrepancy of one year, as follows: 408 A. D. plus 434 would bring us to 26 A. D., instead of 27 A. D. as shown. Yours truly,

J. E. NICOLL.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., Oct. 4.

Editors Herald:—The error No. 1, pointed out by Bro. J. E. Nicoll, is correct. In the first space at left corner of chart, between the parallel lines, the figures 94 appear. It should be 84. The date 606 B. C. is as intended. By subtracting 606 from 690, would leave 84 years between the dates 690 B. C. and 606 B. C., which I find correct on my large chart. I have made the mistake in copying.

The error No. 2, pointed out, is not one in fact, though apparent. If the brother had noted carefully the reading on "cleansing of the sanctuary," he would have understood the apparent error. The date for the commencement of the 2,300 days and the seventy weeks is one and the same; viz, 457 B. C., fifth month (May), when the command is given to restore and build Jerusalem, etc. Then it follows—434 full years (62 weeks) from the fifth month 408 B. C. reaches the year 27 A. D. and 34 A. D., the end of the seventy weeks.

"Know therefore and understand, that from the going forth of the commandment to restore and build Jerusalem, unto the Messiah the Prince, shall be seven weeks, and threescore and two weeks."—Dan. 9: 25. Or, in other words, 69 weeks—483 years from 457 B. C., fifth month, reaches 27 A. D.

William Miller evidently made the same mistake, when he set the year 1843 for the cleansing of the sanctuary and the coming of Christ. Two thousand three hundred days—or years from 457 B. C. reaches the year 1843 A. D. To their sorrow and disappointment they realized they had made a mistake in reckoning time. They now claim that by this mistake of Mr. Miller he fulfilled Revelation 10: 10, "And I took the little book out of the angel's hand, and ate it up; and it was in my mouth sweet as honey; and as soon as I had eaten it, my belly was bitter." They were satisfied that Christ had not changed his mind so far as coming to his people was concerned, hence the mistake if any was on their part. They make the discovery that they should have reckoned from the fifth month 457 B. C., which reaches the year 1844, when the sanctuary was cleansed, but not in the way and manner they expected; hence they ate up the "little book" the second time with like results.

I thank Bro. J. E. Nicoll for calling attention to those points. Yours in bonds,

JAMES COCKS.

BELOIT, Kan., Sept. 28.

Editors Herald:—A few days ago our minds were saddened by news of the death of our beloved branch president, Elder Abraham Sears. After months of suffering he passed peacefully away the morning of September 17. For him death had no sting. He wanted to go quickly, and would ask his dear companion how long she thought it would be now.

He died in the hope of a glorious resurrection, and his faith and works have been such that we feel assured his reward will be great. Faithful in the discharge of every duty, his faith in the latter-day gospel never grew less, but the light of a righteous life ever shone round about him, a guiding star to those younger and weaker in the faith.

He lived fifteen miles from the branch, yet as long as health would permit he and his faithful wife met with us in our prayer meetings. We shall miss his counsel and fatherly care.

He leaves a wife and four children—two sons and two daughters. They will miss him from his accustomed place in the home, yet they can comfort each other with the words written by Paul to the Thessalonian saints, 1 Thessalonians 4: 14-17.

Blessed thought! How comforting to the sorrowing soul! It was Bro. Sears' request that Elder Kent preach his funeral sermon in the church near his home.

There is a vacant place in our branch now,
And a vacant place in the home;
There's a dear loved face we shall never see more
While o'er this sad world we roam.

Father and friend, how we miss you—
Miss your counsel and care;
Yet we trust that we shall meet you
By the river of life so fair.

"When the heavens and earth are shaken;
When all things shall be restored;—
When the trump of God shall waken
Those that sleep in Christ the Lord."

LAMONI, Iowa, Oct. 12.

Editors Herald:—After all it is not ease and thoughtless pleasure after a picnic style for every one attending reunions. There are the gravity of responsibility and burden for some one or more, and work for many. It is a kind of outdoor school. All classes are represented; the aged, middle-aged, and youth, each seeking comfort, relaxation, a better understanding of the right ways of life, edification, and pleasure, according as experience and power of appreciation have fitted them to recognize the importance of life and the full value of things with which they are surrounded. For it is true that one may be literally engulfed with things of greatest moment, but if they are not appreciated and properly sensed, their influence is lost and there is no growth.

Some enter fully into the services of every kind, from which they draw constant comfort and satisfaction, never tiring from morn till night, while others pine for frequent vacations, relaxations, open-air exercises, the pleasure of sight-seeing and frequent rest; so that it becomes a study in order to determine the proper course for the present sometimes, so that all interests may be properly conserved and complaint staid, as all are equally entitled to respect and consideration, the doctrine of individual rights and common consent obtaining at reunions as elsewhere. Diversity of age and experience, and those accustomed to regular service at home and are well fed, with those isolated and who are longing to hear the word preached and to meet in social communion with saints, call for the exercise and application of a large degree of wisdom in order that every want may be met and the right thing be done at the right time at reunions.

Religion consisting of education, enlightenment, and expansion of both head and conscience, with conformity to duty, in order to keep the individual in right lines of thought and travel, and a proper relationship with God and neighbor, there is a wide field to occupy in theory, doctrine, and exhortation, in order to reach desired conditions, the as-simulation and unification of saints in the one body with a view to a healthy growth. Out of diversity of life and opinions the gospel is to bring unity and oneness. As one starting to learn music, every touch of the keys of the keyboard is a help in attaining proficiency, so is every gathering of saints in social communion, the study of principle and doctrine reflecting upon the good of the past and present a help in attaining perfection of character and desired usefulness. There is no standstill in the line of usefulness and progress. Activity and a looking forward are demanded everywhere. There is no achievement in looking backward or pinning over mistakes. Enthroned hope, courage, and perseverance are great factors in attaining success in any department of life. The moodily despondent never achieves anything. Everything in the line of attainment cannot be reduced to a classified system of constant labor and accumulations along financial lines in money getting. Gold is good in its place and handy to have; but it does not develop mind and soul, neither adorn one with saints' robes. There must be time for relaxation, change, association, thought, education, expansion in order to healthy growth; and the time so devoted is not squandered time. So we find a place for every commendable work; day schools, Sabbath schools, Religios, music training, the complete work of the church, conferences, reunions, as means of proper education, discipline, edification, expansion, and growth. Then people will congregate together at whatever cost. Wisdom cries, "Invite them to a clean and attractive place, with healthy surroundings, where they will grow brighter and better by contact and association." David found a "time for everything."

The writer enjoyed the Bluff Park reunion. Saints esteem each other more from their experience there. The ministry know and prize each other better, as well. It was successful and contentment should reign.

Ere this reunion closed, September 1, the writer was on the way to Maysville, Missouri, reunion, as both reunions were to close on the same day. He joined the excursion party of about seventy cheerful faces that left Montrose by boat in the morning for Burlington, Iowa, where they arrived at not far from one p. m. The day was warm and bright, scenery attractive, associations pleasant, and all went well—a ride upon the great Mississippi. Left alone at Burlington, after an all-night's ride, Wednesday morning, the 2d found him at the objective point. Brn. H. O. Smith and Ammon White met him with private conveyance at the depot and in about ten minutes thereafter the camp of the saints was reached. Some fifty tents and a number of covered wagons were nestled in the shady grove, a commodious eating department attached, and a well of water handy by. Prayer service was in progress in the large tent pitched on an elevated and convenient place near by.

At 10:30 Bro. Frank Chatburn discoursed in a very logical and entertaining manner before a large and appreciative audience. Brn. I. N. White and H. O. Smith were in direct charge of the services and they acquitted themselves well; the whole assembly supporting them throughout. Other prominent participators in making the reunion a success were J. T. Kinnaman, D. A. Hutchings, Peter Anderson, Alfred White, M. F. Gowell, Arthur Allen, John C. Foss, John Davis, B. Dice, J. Constance, and others whose names were not secured, not to mention the long list of sisters. The Maysville reunion saints have no other thought but to make their cause a success; and stranger things have happened than for the "World's Reunion" to be yet held at Maysville. Enthusiastic interest was manifest in all the services by men and women.

The song service was excellent. The melody of saints' voices mingled with instrumental music swept out from the big tent upon the mellow air most charmingly. The audiences were large and attentive. Preaching was up to a good standard and the prayer services participated in with fervor. The meetings were the talk of the town, and a fine impression seemed to be made. The Sabbath school was in direct charge of C. P. Faul, and the Religio work in charge of Ammon White and Sr. Louise Palfrey. Bro. Ammon's effort was good. Sister Palfrey's literary deliverance given in favor of Religio work, object, etc., was full of meat, ending in a striking exhortation to the hearers that whatever duty led to do to "Dewey it well." The writer is largely indebted to Bro. and Sr. Taylor for care while there, though others were just as kind with opportunity to manifest it. They are old citizens of that country and stand well with their neighbors.

Considering that this great gathering of saints was only about ten miles from where Joseph Smith and companions were beset by mobs, arrested, and tried for their lives at an early day, just because they were saints, it shows that the world is marching on and that God's decrees are not likely to fail. Let the great gospel work go on.

From a casual view the conclusion was reached that the Maysville section of country is a good one to live in. The soil is good, timber plentiful, stone, water in abundance, and a desirable climate with fruit of every kind grown in northern climates, and the inhabitants very much as other folks. The Maysville reunion presents an interesting chapter in the writer's experience.

Editors Herald:—Since last writing to you I have held a number of meetings in Alabama and Florida, and am happy to report that my labors have not been in vain; for the Lord has blessed my labors to both saints and sinners. Seven have obeyed the ordinance of baptism at my hands, and reports coming to me from other laborers in the mission show additions by baptism.

Improvements are being made all along the line and we as a mission hope to be able to keep along with those of the saints who are daily trying to advance.

Editors Herald:—The saints of Philadelphia enjoyed a Sunday long to be remembered, on the 2d inst. Bro. Alexander H. Smith was with us and preached the evening sermon. He also assisted Brn. Parsons and Stone in blessing four children, two males and two females—something very unusual. Bro. Smith also preached on his office and calling on Monday night at the residence of Bro. Christy and offered much for the edification of the saints. He goes from here to Brooklyn.

PLYMOUTH, Eng., Sept. 28.

Editors Herald:—We arrived in England all right on the 17th of July, 1898. I visited the saints in London and labored for them until the last of the month. I baptized one while there. We then attended the conference at Birmingham, conferred with our beloved brethren, Heman C. Smith and F. G. Pitt, and came to this place on the 2d of August. I have been preaching about four times per week; not many attending the meetings, although there are some that are near the kingdom who I think will be a great help to the work. One man and his wife and family have been members of the Christadelphians for a number of years, have withdrawn from them. They are doing their best to get him back, but he states that he will never meet with them any more. He has been one of their main speakers; he seems to have the Bible by heart, and has been attending my meetings, and he says he cannot join anything else. I have him reading Orson Pratt's Works, the Book of Mormon, etc. He is telling his friends all about our work, so I am in hopes.

I visited Exeter week before last, and went and saw Mr. William Jarman, the ex-Mormon priest from Salt Lake City, who did so much harm when I was here ten years ago, at Broadclyst. I asked him what he was going to do about it to set me right before the people there, as I wanted him to make a patch equal to the wound. He seemed to be very humble and talked very fair, and said he was very sorry he was not more careful, and he wrote the letter, that I had printed, and I inclose a copy or two to you. I am in hopes we will be able to use it to good advantage among the people in this country, where he has done us so much injury in all parts of the country.

Your brother in bonds,

WILLIAM NEWTON.

Copy of letter from Mr. William Jarman to Elder William Newton, Missionary from America:—

EXCELSIOR VILLA, Elmside Park,)
Mount Pleasant, Exeter, Sept. 17, 1898. }
To the Inhabitants of Broadclyst, Devon.

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN:—Some years ago, while lecturing in the north of England, I learned that Mormons were preaching and proselyting at Broadclyst. Believing they were the Utah Brighamite Mormons, I sent tracts exposing them, which were distributed throughout the parish. This I should not have done had I known that the preacher was Mr. William Newton, of the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints, commonly called "Josephites." All who have my book "Hell upon Earth," will find on page 24 and page 181, that while opposing and exposing the Utah Murderers and Bigamists, I spare the "Josephites," who are good, law-abiding citizens, and despise the Utah abominations as much as I do.

I wish it clearly understood that the Reorganized Church, which Mr. Newton represents, is as free of the crimes and immoralities of the Utah Mormons which I depict in my books, tracts, and lectures, as is the Church of England, or any Nonconformist church.

WILLIAM JARMAN,
Ex-Mormon Priest,

BROOKLYN, N. Y., Oct. 7.

Editors Herald:—We, the saints of Brooklyn, were very agreeably surprised by the appearance of our brother and Patriarch, Alexander H. Smith, who on the evening of his arrival and the one following delivered to us a discourse that was highly appreciated by all. The saints were once more strengthened and edified by his cheering words of exhortation. He left on the 6th inst. for the Fall River conference.

May God bless all his people.

Your brother in Christ,

JOSEPH SQUIRE, Sen.

LAMONI, Iowa, Oct. 11.

Editors Herald:—Have not appeared in your "letter department" for a long time; not that I have been idle in the work, nor yet indifferent to its success: but opportunity and conditions have not been favorable for writing up events.

During last winter, in addition to what preaching I was permitted to do, I had the active oversight of the Decatur district. The month of March was spent in auditing the Herald Office plant, and the Bishop's books and accounts. Two weeks of April were spent in attending the General Conference, and the rest of the month in clerical work. I spent most of May in visiting and preaching in the branches, making my farewell official call, and regret that I was not permitted to visit all. While it was my misfortune to incur the ill will of a few, there hangs fresh upon the walls of memory the highly-prized pictures of cheerful words and acts of kindness of the many warm-hearted saints who so cheerfully aided in the struggle for the gospel.

The latter part of May and the first part of June was spent in my new field. Would state here, that when my name was read with the other appointees at the General Conference, I was surprised. In my application for permission to do missionary service for the church I set forth the peculiar circumstances and conditions that I thought were sufficient reasons to allow me to remain in my former field. If it was God's will that I should be transferred, he has carefully hid that will from me. At the Hite-man conference, not from choice or of my own volition, but under the force of necessity, I tendered my resignation as president of the Decatur district, which was accepted. I did so notwithstanding it had been satisfactorily manifested to me that it was the Lord's will that I should fill that position. My conviction was that those having the appointing power desired me to labor elsewhere.

I write thus by way of explanation for those who think I did wrong in resigning, as also, for those who chide me and find fault with me for doing as I did. I desire to work peacefully and in harmony with the servants of God to the uplifting of the standard of truth, but shall not hesitate to perform duty even if in so doing it should bring down upon my head ill will and opposition.

Perhaps it may be comforting and encouraging to Bro. T. W. Chatburn to hear that the undersigned can preach "half as well as he can, in the old Northeastern Missouri district."

To the saints in my new field, I wish to say that I am nowise responsible for being a missionary in that district, and will only promise to be faithful in seeking to advance the gospel truths for the salvation of those who will hear the angel's message, according to my ability, asking the cooperation and aid of all lovers of truth.

Although I have been acquainted with trials and misfortunes all my life, there came to me July 26, in the loss of my wife, that which overshadowed all past experience. I do not murmur, complain, nor find fault with Him who doeth all things well; neither could I wish her back to longer endure the suffering; for I feel assured that she was amply prepared for the rest prepared for the pure and the good, and with the soon-coming Lord my dear one shall return to wear the crown of eternal life, and bear the palm of victory. The integrity of my love will be manifest by my fidelity to her memory.

August 22 was the saddest home-leaving I ever made. The next evening I commenced a public discussion with Joab Padget, a minister of the Christian Church, at Pollock, Sullivan County, Missouri. We held twenty sessions on the three propositions, and we gained friends; continued meetings until the time of holding Sunday school convention and conference.

New experience was had by many of the saints in their efforts to be at the conference; not a jar or complaint that I am aware of. The people crowded the house and seemed surprised and pleased with the service, especially the sweet singing of the songs of Zion. Kept up meetings another week, one entered the waters of baptism, and although very frail I learn has been convalescent since the day of her immersion.

Bro. William E. Summerfield cheerfully and kindly assisted me in all labor while at Pollock, and I left him in that vicinity doing service for the Master. The long vigil during the hot weather, with a reaction, has to a degree impaired my health. I desire to be able to say truthfully with the gospel hero:

"Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword? As it is written, For thy sake we are killed all the day long; we are accounted as sheep for the slaughter. Nay, in all these things we are more than conquerors through him that loved us. For I am persuaded, that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord." The above is one of the most impressive expressions of confidence that I know of, and to me the gospel was never more precious, and the incentive to abide its requirements greater than at the present.

Sad, but hopeful,

ROBT. M. ELVIN.

SOMERVILLE, Victoria, Aus.

Editors Herald:—I have kept silent for some considerable time, not because of a lack of interest in the work or of desire for its progress; but nothing startling or out of the usual line of warfare has occurred; and besides I notice the Herald is overcrowded with more valuable and instructive matter than I am able to produce.

I am pleased to inform you that the mission, as a whole, is making an effort to hold the ground formerly gained, and make as much advancement as it is possible for the few, who are now in the field, to do. The field is large, and we have many things of a discouraging nature to contend with that are not found in other fields. The habits and customs of the people are much similar to those of the English mission, of which you are pretty well informed by the brethren there. In this country hall rent is high, schoolhouses are difficult to obtain, prejudice runs high, and one has an up-hill task to gain an entrance among the people and get a hearing. It's an endless warfare, but a sure signal of victory in the end, which gives marvelous courage and comfort to the standard-bearer of the restored gospel. And although the world may forsake and despise, we are assured, like those of old, that "there is a God in heaven that revealeth secrets" and has spoken "peace to his people, and to his saints." In this we feel to rejoice, knowing in whom our confidence is reposed.

We were in hopes that some assistance would be sent us from home last year, but as none came, we are now of the opinion that the Lord will raise up from our midst some to assist in the propagation of our cause, which would be very acceptable. Some are ready now, if the way were only a little more clear for the support of their families. The ways of the Lord are not always our ways; but I am satisfied that if we observe all his instructions the cause of truth will shine forth in power and triumph over all its foes.

This Colony suffered greatly last year, from drouth, and the cattle are dying now in great numbers, in some parts, from eating the young grass; but at present there is a splendid outlook for all kinds of produce. We are still with you in the trials and triumphs of life, and hope to "hold the beginning of our confidence steadfast unto the end," that when the saints gather home to Zion we also may come with songs of everlasting joy.

War, it seems, is inevitable; but a strange burden from my heart seemed to roll away when I heard of the declaration of peace. How we long for the great Sabbath day when peace shall cover the earth as the waters cover the mighty deep! Lord hasten it, we pray.

Yours in the gospel,

C. A. BUTTERWORTH.

GORDON, Ala., Oct. 11.

Editors Herald:—Am just recovering from wounds received from a gunshot on night of the 1st from some one in ambush, near the roadside, while I and Bro. Vickrey were returning home from meeting; and from quite a severe spell of sore eyes; both together quite trying on the nerves. We were four miles from home when the shooting took place. Were each in a separate buggy. When home, on examination, it was found that fifty-five shot had struck me, though small, one that fired only. Glad I had as good and kind a brother with me as Bro. Vickrey. Right arm suffered worst; thirteen shot struck my elbow. Be some days before I am well.

D. E. TUCKER.

CARTHAGE, Ill., Oct. 8.

Editors Herald:—I attended Rock Creek conference the 1st and 2d inst., and tarried over a few days to preach in the evenings. The session was harmonious and the services well attended. I preached also in the Adrian Christian chapel to a large, attentive audience, twice, and felt fairly well. I will return soon to the Kewanee district which is my field proper.

Bro. Frank Russell, of Grinnell, Iowa, and your humble servant have done much tent work recently in several places in the district. The local ministry and saints aided us freely in these endeavors.

I am stopping temporarily with Don Salisbury, who lives here now so that his sons and daughters can have the advantage of the college here as also access to the public schools. Roads are dry and weather fine. Your cousin and myself called on and visited with Judge Hamilton. While he was a young man he was enrolled as one of the Carthage Grays. He thought the guard at the jail was easily overcome, for Captain Smith was in league with the mob and had only six men on duty when the fatal double tragedy occurred. He heard the volley that killed your uncle and saw your father fall. Hyrum lay dead on his back and this curious young spectator straightened out his limbs and folded his arms. They were taken to his father's hotel, where two rude boxes were improvised, in which they were taken to Nauvoo the day after the unhappy fatality. Mr. Hamilton, Senior, furnished and drove one team and the saints the other. He did not sanction the act, but thought there was some cause for the rash deed in that society was unsettled and there was much outlawry that was abroad, etc., etc. He appeared frank, open, and pleasant. Yours truly,

M. T. SHORT.

THE STONE KINGDOM.

THE article written by William H. Kelley, entitled "Old Glory at General Conference," published in Herald of September 7, has caused considerable thought among many of the elders.

To my mind, no loyal American citizen with the blood of patriots coursing through his veins, can consistently object to the "Stars and Stripes" floating in the halls of General Conference. There is a certain majestic beauty about the old flag that inspires every soul and thrills every being who loves country and liberty. We see not the flag only, but as Henry Ward Beecher said, "the nation itself;" hence, the putting up of the flag, "the cheering," "the resolution," and "the telegram," were all right.

We do not enter objections with reference to the flag. The statements made concerning the "stone kingdom" is what we shall endeavor to examine. Is it possible that the elders of the Church of Jesus Christ have been in ignorance upon this particular point for nearly seventy years? Is it possible that a people claiming inspiration from the archives of heaven have been inspired to teach the nations of the world that the kingdom of God is that "stone kingdom," which will eventually break in pieces and consume all these other kingdoms and powers? Certainly God inspired them to so teach. To believe otherwise would be making our elders guilty of transgressing one of the commandments of God, contained in Doctrine and Covenants, to the effect that if the elders have not the Spirit, they "shall not teach."

Now I do not like to imitate the examples of our religious neighbors in the Salt Land too closely. The Lord (?) told them once that polygamy was a heaven-ordained principle; but finally the Lord told them to take in their "signboard." Now it may be necessary for us to take in our "signboard" and recant, if the United States represents the "stone kingdom."

Let us examine that stone, which became a great mountain and filled the whole earth:—

Thou sawest till that a stone was cut out without hands, which smote the image upon his feet that were of iron and clay, and brake them to pieces.—Daniel 2: 34.

The United States government was not cut out without hands, hence it cannot be that stone. We see the hands of the noble Washington, John Hancock, Patrick Henry, Paul Revere, etc., wielding the sword in the interest of our liberty and our country. No doubt God was with them. But in the organization of this government they did not have the material necessary with which to organize a kingdom, which would stand forever. The kingdom of God is the only kingdom that will stand forever. The authority of God had not yet been committed to the earth, therefore men could not pass through a spiritual birth. Thus this government had its conception in the hands of human flesh, unborn spiritually; not cleansed and purified by obedience to the gospel. This government is being carried on to-day with the same kind of material with which it was organized. Corruption is in high and low places. Talk about such an institution standing forever. The "signs of the times" indicate that this nation as well as all others is on the verge of moral, social, and political ruin. Pick up any daily newspaper, and every page is covered with the accounts of murders, suicides, and crimes of every conceivable character. The rich are getting richer, paupers are getting more numerous. People are crying for bread and only receive a stone. These are some of the conditions existing under the folds of the old flag—"the beautiful star-decked blue ground, with streamers gay—the red, white, and blue."

And my vineyard has become corrupted every whit; and there is none which doeth good save it be a few; and they err in many instances, because of priestcrafts, all having corrupt minds.—D. C. 32: 1.

Notwithstanding this corruption the old flag still guarantees to men the right to worship God according to the dictates of conscience; therefore every man should salute it and feel patriotic.

We notice in verse 44, of this second chapter of Daniel, that the "God of heaven" "shall" "set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed."

This kingdom is to be established by the great Jehovah, not by man. Now the question arises, How does the Lord work? He does all things through the instrumentality of a prophet:—

Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets.—Amos 3: 7.

The most conspicuous person who figured in the organization of this government was the "immortal Washington." His mission was not a prophetic one; he never made such a claim; therefore we will have to search elsewhere for the stone kingdom. The Book of Mormon plainly declares that no king shall rule in this land. Hence the effort on the part of some to make us believe that the United States is the stone kingdom is in contradistinction to the Book of Mormon. A republic cannot be a kingdom. Jesus Christ will be the only King who will reign upon this land. This will be after this government has been relegated to the archives of the past.

Compare the laws and the constitution of this government with the gospel of the kingdom—what a contrast? Christ teaches all things common—the highest condition of socialism. This republic teaches "the survival of the fittest;" "to the victor belongs the spoils."

Men with money can rob justice. Our judges and legislative bodies can be bribed. Certainly such an institution does not have a very close relationship to the gospel—only as a protector of our rights.

There is more than a few grains of salt in the claim that this "stone" represents the kingdom of God. It is salt from beginning to end. The Savior said: "Ye are the salt of the earth."

My opinion is that the kingdom of God has broken in pieces more than one township government. Through the preaching of the gospel, in the time of Noah the nations of the world were brought down and consumed. In those exciting times we do not see where the Lord used a Dewey, a Schley, a Sampson, or a Shafter; but through the preaching of the word and their rejection of it the judgments of God rested upon them.

How about Sodom and Gomorrah?

The Lord destroyed those cities by his Almighty power, by raining fire and brimstone upon them. Next comes the capture of Jericho. The Lord directs this siege, and chooses old General Joshua to engineer the business. The individual chosen for this work was a man of God—a prophet.

The Lord doesn't need a "gatling gun" or "dynamite mines" for the accomplishment of his work. Christ told Peter to put up the sword when he became indignant and smote off the high priest's ear.

The power of God is supreme. When Christ was crucified, notice how this power operated. It shook the very foundation of this world. Cities were sunk and thousands of lives lost; the earth quaked and trembled. The books teach that we will have another experience similar to this, only of a more serious character, when Christ comes in power and glory. It will be worse than a "mine explosion." Then we will see the nations, governments, principalities, and powers, crumble to the earth—shattered and blasted.

I understand this "breaking in pieces" of the different nations will occur in close proximity. It certainly will not take half a century to break off the toes of that metallic image. This little conflict between Spain and the United States cannot be construed to mean that the "stone kingdom" has "whacked off" one of the toes already. Spain has not been exterminated; her government still exists. The little "toe" has only been slightly wounded.

Because this nation whipped Spain is no evidence that we can subdue the whole world combined. That is what we will have to do, if Uncle Sam is the "stone."

Now if we have to wait till the "Stars and Stripes" float majestically in the blue ethereal skies over every nation before this gospel of the kingdom can be preached to every creature, we might just as well cease operations and give up in despair. To my mind it is not necessary to think about such a conquest for the promulgation and establishment of this angel's message. The gospel has made rapid progress in the dominions of old England, and one of the missionaries writes from far-away Australia that England's flag extends the protecting hand to him and the church fully as well as did America.

Dear reader, the stone kingdom carries with it the power to destroy and grind into powder.

Please read the parable of the vineyard recorded in Luke 20: 9-18. I will only quote the 17th and 18th verses:—

And he beheld them and said, What is this then that is written, The stone which the builders rejected, the same is become the head of the corner? Whosoever shall fall upon that stone shall be broken: but on whomsoever it shall fall, it will grind him to powder.

Christ is referred to here as the stone. This stone is the head of the corner. Surely the kingdom of God looks more like the "stone kingdom" than anything else. Turning to Matthew 16:18, we are informed that Christ built his church (kingdom) upon the rock. This kingdom is stone from base to summit. Again the Savior advances another important thought along this line, found in the parable concerning the wise man who builds his structure upon a rock. Then when the winds and storms come the building stands. It cannot be prevailed against.

We find that the Jews fell upon Christ (the stone) and they were broken. They were scattered in all the world. The sword was not the only instrument used in bringing about this condition; the judgments of God rested upon them as a nation, hence they were broken.

But the time is coming when the Gentile nations will meet death in as violent a form as did the Jews. The time will be when the "times of the Gentiles" will be fulfilled. These people are not accepting the gospel much more readily than did the Jews. While they cannot crucify the Christ in person, they are murdering and crucifying the philosophy he taught. As nations the Gentiles are rejecting the Messiah. Then when Christ makes his glorious appearance, he (the stone) will fall upon them and they will be ground into powder. Then it will be wise for Dewey and Shafter to put up their "guns."

We say to the "stone kingdom" "roll on and fill the whole earth." Send forth the God-sent messengers, to the ends of the earth. Lift up the gospel banner, bathed in the supernal glory of God, to the benighted creatures of men. Say unto them, "Repent, for the kingdom of God is at hand." It will smite, break in pieces, and consume, until wickedness is erased from our land and righteousness reigns supreme.

So saying I climb down off the fence.

Sunday School Associations.

NAUVOO.

Convention of Nauvoo district called to order by assistant superintendent G. P. Lambert. Reports of schools read and adopted; one was returned for correction. After the reports of officers present, the following resolution was adopted: Resolved that as the association has tried to get a better understanding of its financial standing, and passed the following resolution at its last session: "That the secretary notify the treasurer to have her books, together with her report, at next meeting," in order that they might be audited and a better understanding had; and as this has been utterly ignored by our treasurer; therefore, be it resolved, that the treasurer be requested to resign and hand her books and the money now on hand to the secretary, to act in the office until next session, which will be the regular election of all officers. Suggestions were made by F. M. Weld with regard to getting Sunday school workers out in the morning of our convention so we might transact business and have the afternoon for exercises that will benefit us as Sunday school workers. As the afternoon attendance was very small, it was decided to dispense with the class drills except that of the senior, which was conducted by James McKiernan, followed by short talks by those present. Many useful and instructive thoughts were given with regard to faithfulness and our appreciation of Sunday schools. A very delightful evening program was carried out composed mostly of selections rendered by scholars of Rock Creek Sunday school. A declamation, "Absalom," by Miss Carrie Stephenson. An instrumental piece by Arthur Lambert. Declamation by Miss Maud Pitt. A little artist, Dimple Lambert, was heard but not seen, for by mistake she went behind the pulpit. Essay by Miss Anna Lambert. BUSINESS INTERESTS OF IMPORTANCE TO THE SAINTS.

Once more we feel the necessity of placing before the readers of the Herald that the wants of the church are daily increasing and to meet all these wants it is necessary for us as a church to be fully organized and disciplined to meet these wants as they appear and supply them: and to do this it becomes every one to be actively alive to the interest of the work in all its departments, and each one to do their part that the work as a whole may move forward and occupy higher ground, as we as a church have been invited to come up higher. And when any part of the machinery fails to work the whole is hindered. The work that we are engaged in is increasing daily, and with the increase comes added responsibility to each department, and we are apt to get so interested in the part we are doing that we forget that we should keep in touch with all departments and ever lend a helping hand to the good of all. If we do not do this our interest is liable to grow selfish and others be hindered by reason of this.

REDUCED PRICES, CASH PAYMENTS, ETC.

As our special business is to look after the Publishing Department of this great work we are engaged in, we will present some things that should interest all. We have made a special effort to reduce the price of church publications that they might come within the reach of all. We desire to reduce the price still lower, but there are hindering causes that lie only in the hands of the members of the church, and we will try and show you some of them. First and most important is Prompt Cash Payment for all books and papers purchased at the Herald Office. Now if this is done, it enables us to purchase to better advantage and save three per cent a month on our stock, and enables us to keep up our credit before the world; and this is an important feature to a successful business of any kind. Now this is one of the features of our business that we are very much criticised upon, as no one likes to pay for anything before they get it. Now this may be all right in some places, but is it all right in the church where each member is a stockholder? And when asked for cash in advance it is merely furnishing your part of the stock to run the business. And, I don't know any business where you get your returns any quicker than in this.

Now as to the Herald being one dollar and fifty cents ($1.50) a year when paid in advance and two dollars ($2.00) if not paid until the end of the year: If we can save three per cent a month by reason of having the money to do it, it is easy to see that $1.50 is worth more to the Herald Office in advance than $2.00 would be at the end of the year, when we have to borrow money at six and seven per cent to carry the stockholders from year to year. We would request each subscriber of the Herald to examine the label on your next Herald and see how much of the unpaid capital stock you have failed to put up, and send it in at once, and unload your responsibility, and see how much better you will feel. There are yet over twenty thousand dollars due the office on old subscriptions. If each one will pay his or her part it will soon put the office in such shape that we will be able to further reduce the price of our publications and procure such machinery as will enable us to produce the papers and tracts at a much less cost than we are able to do at present, by reason of not having the means to purchase modern machinery, which we are badly in need of. Those therefore who have subscribed for the Herald at $1.50 will be charged at the rate of $2.00 if subscriptions are not paid by the end of the year.

HERALD OFFICE BRANCH AGENTS.

Book agents. The branches can help the office considerably by complying more generally with our former request, and appointing a good reliable party, either brother or sister, as agent for the branch, through whom they should order all church publications, both papers and books, also Sunday school supplies. It would lessen our labor here very much and the church would be at far less expense by reason of the many bills and statements we are compelled to send out. For instance, at one time this last year we sent out about two thousand bills and received returns on about fifty. The balance are yet to be heard from, and I am now engaged in sending out about fifty bills a day. And, this is quite an expense to the church, and in my judgment an unnecessary expense.

CHURCH AND NON-CHURCH PUBLICATIONS.

One other thing I find it necessary to mention: In some of our mission fields the Herald Publishing House is almost unknown and unheard of, and lately I received a letter from a brother who had been in the church for three years and did not know that he could buy a Book of Mormon, and did not know there was such a book as the Doctrine and Covenants, and the only way he found out was in his search for Sunday school supplies advertised by the Herald Office. He said in his letter that the missionaries there were very zealous of Sunday school work (and we commend that) and they had looked all over their supposed church paper—the Ensign—that they had been taking for years, and could find no such papers nor books advertised, and they never heard of any other paper except Zion's Ensign, and supposed the Ensign was published by the Church. And some of our late missionaries that have gone out to represent this latter-day work find in some missions the Ensign in almost every home, and for weeks at a time cannot find a Saints' Herald, but do find saints almost ignorant in regard to the church books and papers. The Saints' Herald is published in the interests of the church and is the official publication of the church and as such should be read by all the membership of the church. Zion's Ensign is a private enterprise, the profits from which go into private hands. The Ensign does not and is not authorized to represent the church in any way. Now some one is responsible for this condition of neglect to push the interests of church publications, and must have neglected at least a part of his duty, and by reason of this the church suffers. If the word of the Lord is worth anything to us as a people, and we believe it is the all-important feature of this grand work, we should heed the admonition to return to the books even the new covenant and make them the word of our counsel, and the saints must have and read church books in order to do so.

Now we believe that this condition of things can be improved upon by a little work on the part of those that go out to represent this work, and that the people of the church should be rightly educated concerning these things. It can only be done by placing before them the books and papers published by the church, and they are issued at a price that comes within the reach of all, and this we are constantly laboring hard to do, and we ask the assistance of all to unitedly help the work along. We have now a little less than 5,000 subscribers to the Herald and the number should be from 9,000 to 10,000 paying subscribers besides those who get it free by reason of their laboring continually for the church. We believe that with a little effort on the part of each member the subscriptions could be raised to that number. We believe that almost every one now taking the Herald could with a little effort get one new subscriber before Christmas, who would take it and pay one dollar and fifty cents in advance, and by so doing help the church as well as help educate themselves to occupy higher ground and be better able to defend the work we have espoused.

TRACTS AND TRACT FUNDS.

Much has been said about tracts and the great work they are doing in the missionary field. This is testified to by all the laborers in the field. We quote you a statement in a letter from Bro. F. G. Pitt, missionary in England, which you will find published in the Herald of October 12 which all may profit by reading. The statement is as follows: "Of course we cannot say how many will join the church, but I do know that every night numbers bear testimony to the truth of what is told them. Some have said it is just what they have been looking for for years. But, in this work we need lots of literature; we need tracts by the thousand. We gather up all the Heralds and Ensigns and tracts we can find, and then we do not have half enough. We even give them the children's paper, the Hope."

Now when we can find such zealous workers as this we should be very willing to throw in our part to supply them with the tracts they need. We have sent out upwards of three hundred thousand (300,000) tracts since last General Conference, and that is but a mite of what it ought to have been if a better and more united effort was made to do so. It costs considerable money to do all this, and some one has to put up the cash. Neither the church nor Herald Publishing House is able to do so without the aid of the members. About one year ago we appealed to the members through the Herald for the tract fund and received about eight dollars, returns not enough to pay postage for a couple of days. But the saints in Canada, by reason of that appeal, started a fund in each district, called a tract and missionary-supply fund, in which they took up a penny collection once a month, and out of that fund they supply their missionaries with Baptismal Certificate books, and tracts; and they are distributing more tracts to the square mile in their field than any other missionary field in the church, and that too from a fund that would not otherwise reach the church treasury.

AMOUNTS DUE US.

Now the office is in need of funds to meet its engagements, and we as a church should all be interested in keeping up the credit of our Church Publishing House. And we can do so by meeting our obligations to the office for books and papers, and as it is near the close of the year let each one see to it that his account is closed up by the first of the year. The year just closing has been prosperous in many respects, and we should see that we assist to make the work of the Lord prosperous as far as lies in our power to do. We as a people should understand that the Lord's business must be done on business principles, so we appeal to all the faithful to step forward and come to our relief and help us make a success of the publishing house.

Address all orders for books, tracts, and general publications, also all remittances to the undersigned.

Yours for success,

FRANK CRILEY,

Business Manager of Publishing Department, Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints.

LAMONI, Iowa, October 15, 1898.

APPOINTMENT OF BISHOP'S AGENT.

To the Saints of the Southwestern Texas district of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints:—

Please take notice that Bro. O. B. Johnson, of Bandera, Texas, has been duly appointed Bishop's agent in and for the district of Southwestern Texas, in place of Bro. L. L. Wight, resigned. We hope and trust that the saints of the Southwestern Texas district will give prompt and ready aid and coöperation to Bro. Johnson in his work as Bishop's agent so that the work of the same may be aided, and move forward in a manner that will reflect credit to the district and give holy reward to the saints who strive to move the same.

The Bishopric is thankful and gratified with the aid and coöperation given it in the work of Bro. L. L. Wight, and we trust that his ministerial work may now be more successful, aided by the assistance of Bro. Johnson in his work in the field.

If all will make an effort at once to aid in the finances of the district great good will be done and blessings will accrue to those who so help. Let it not be asked "Who has sent up an offering of some kind to the agent?" but let the inquiry be, "Who has not done so of all the brethren in the district?" May the Lord help those who move forward with faith in his cause.

In behalf of the Bishopric,

E. L. KELLEY,

Presiding Bishop.

DEDICATION.

Some three years ago the gospel was planted near Pollock, Sullivan County, Missouri. The first to enter the fold was Bro. John F. Petre, and at the time of his confirmation he was ordained to the office of priest, and at once he began to diligently teach and preach the principles of saving truth. A few being gathered in, a branch was organized.

The people of that locality thought to put a stop to the spread of the work by locking places of worship against the saints; but the seven families of saints, with some aid from friends, built a house of worship in the town of Pollock. The house is 28 x 40 feet, with an alcove for the pulpit. The material cost $344; all the work was donated. It is a neat and comfortable place of worship, and the only church house in town. During the session of conference, September 25, at eleven a. m., the dedication was had, the house was filled to its full capacity. The service was in charge of Elder J. A. Tanner, district president; music in charge of Prof. William J. Richards. The following program was executed without a jar. Harp 775 was sung; prayer by Elder J. A. Tanner; anthem by the choir; reading of 85 and 86 Psalms; Harp 772 was sung; sermon by Elder Robert M. Elvin; Harp 770 was sung; the dedicatory prayer was made by Elder R. M. Elvin; doxology by the choir; and the benediction by Elder J. A. Tanner.

Many of the saints testified to the presence of the Holy Spirit during the dedication, and all the people seemed well pleased. Another open Bible and free pulpit for the truth.

ROBT. M. ELVIN.

DIED.

MARSHALL.—At Luverne, Minnesota, September 6, 1898, Bro. Charles H. Marshall, aged 44 years. Bro. Marshall was born June 14, 1854, at Jersey City, New Jersey; was baptized August 18, 1893, at Lincoln, Nebraska, by Elder Baldwin. Funeral sermon at the house by Elder E. A. Stedman.

MUNRO.—In Brunswick, Georgia, September 28, 1898, Bro. George L., oldest son of C. L. and Carrie G. Munro, of Brockton, Massachusetts. He was born at St. John, New Brunswick, April 17, 1879; was baptized in Boston by Bro. F. Steffe. One year ago he ruptured his lung by overriding a bicycle. He went to Georgia two weeks ago with his aunt.

SEAGROVES.—Sr. Panelia A. Seagroves, was born in Rensselaer County, New York, January 9, 1816; died at her home in Beetown, Wisconsin, May 26, 1898. Funeral services in the M. E. church; sermon by Leonard Houghton. Remains laid to rest in Burns cemetery.

SEARS.—At his home, near Buel, Kansas, September 17, 1898, Elder Abraham Sears, aged 57 years, 11 months, and 6 days. Was born in Cowles County, Illinois; baptized at Weeping Water, Nebraska, July 5, 1863; ordained an elder, February, 1878, in Holt County, Missouri. He died firm in the faith of the gospel, and the hope of a glorious resurrection. Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord.

SEAGROVES.—Bro. John M. Seagroves was born in Tennessee, August 19, 1820; died at his home in Beetown, Grant County, Wisconsin, October 1, 1898. Funeral services in M. E. church; sermon by Leonard Houghton. Remains laid to rest in Burns cemetery.

GRIGSBY.—At Edwardsville, Illinois, August 31, 1898, Sr. Ada Grigsby, aged 32 years, 4 months, and 7 days. Baptized May 1, 1898, at St. Louis, Missouri. Sister Grigsby was a noble saint, and was loved by all who knew. After she had suffered for months she passed away peacefully; she bore her trials with patience and died with strong faith in the gospel, bearing a faithful testimony to the end of life. She left a husband and three children. Funeral sermon by Elder R. T. Walters.

WARDEL.—Hazel Wardel was born January 29, 1895, died August 14, 1898. Little Hazel was a lovely child; a father's hope; a mother's idol, and dearly loved by brothers and sisters. She sat at breakfast Tuesday morning, soon after complained of sickness, and at 7:30 p. m. the following Saturday the "grim monster" had left his mark upon the icy cheek and brow, and the pallid lips were forever voiceless to the pleading cry of a mother's riven heart. Such is the story of a life! Unaccountable are the ways of fate. That the family thus bereft was well esteemed was seen in the large concourse that followed the remains to the cemetery and listened to the theme—"Suffer little children to come unto me."—as presented by Elder J. W. Wight. Bishop Goff and two other elders of the Utah Church offered consolatory remarks at the conclusion of the sermon, and "little Hazel" was laid away in mother earth to await a glorious coming forth in the morning of the first resurrection.

HART.—In San Francisco, California, September 15, 1898, Mr. Noah Hart, a native of Hertford, England, and a son of Elder William Hart, of Oakland, California, aged 40 years, 2 months, and 5 days. Funeral services by Elder J. B. Price.

HISTORY OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS. (Volumes 1 and 2 now ready.) Provided for by action of General Conference of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Written and compiled by President Joseph Smith and Apostle Heman C. Smith. Invaluable as a correct historical narrative, as a means of conversion to truth, and as a defensive weapon in meeting old and new objections urged against the latter-day work. It contains important documents connected with the establishment, growth, and internal and external affairs and progress of the church. The revelations given in this dispensation are inserted, in connection with accounts of the circumstances under which they were given. Biographical sketches, illustrations, complete indexes, sidenotes for ready reference, etc., are some of the features of the work. Volume 1 begins with the birth of Joseph Smith, the Prophet and Seer, in 1805, and narrates the circumstances of his calling and ministry, the rise of the church in 1830, and until the close of the year 1835. Volume 2 continues the history up to June 27, 1844, —to the assassination of Joseph and Hyrum Smith.

PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH ON DIVORCE.

A SUBJECT of vast interest, both spiritually and physically, is that which now occupies the attention of the triennial session in Washington of the Protestant Episcopal Church of North America—Shall divorce be sanctioned by the church?

It is a subject which has always been more or less on the carpet, but tucked away in a convenient corner, where no overzealous clerical or lay delegate would be apt to stumble over it. Developments of the last few years, however, in what is called "our best society" have undoubtedly been instrumental in dragging this obstacle into such a prominent position that the church is now obliged either to jump over it or remove it altogether from its path.

The church, like the society it represents, is a house divided against itself on the subject. The "jump over" party follows Bishop Potter's views, that divorce is permissible on statutory grounds only, and that the innocent or nonoffending party should be permitted to marry again, and believes in retaining the church canon now standing to that effect.

The radical party would do away with divorce completely, believing with Bishop Doane that the Christian marriage consists in the union of one man with one woman until the union is severed by death, and the marriage law of the church should not permit the marriage of a person separated by divorce so long as the former partner be living, whether such person be innocent or guilty.

Powerful factions and influences are ranged on both sides of the controversy. The fight is now on a l'outrance. It is not possible for the church to continue to leave this an open question. It must be settled once for all at this session. The result will be awaited everywhere with the keenest interest; in certain quarters with fear and trembling.—New York Herald.

CHURCH ACTION ON MARRIAGE.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Oct. 10.—[special.]—Discussion upon divorce and marriage occupied both the houses of the Episcopal convention to-day at morning and afternoon sessions. As the revision of the constitution is in progress the canons relating to marriages will be reconstructed. The following sections in canon 34 were recommended by the House of Bishops:—

Section 1. No minister shall solemnize a marriage the parties to which are within the degrees of consanguinity and affinity defined in the eighteenth chapter of the Book of Leviticus.

Section 2. First—It shall be the duties of the ministers to admonish the people from time to time that the church discountenances clandestine marriage. Second—No minister shall solemnize the marriage of any person who is a minor under the law of the place of the marriage, unless the parent or the guardian of such minor is present or shall have given written consent to the marriage, or is permanently resident in a foreign country. Third—No minister shall solemnize a marriage except in the presence of at least two witnesses being personally acquainted with the parties.

church shall solemnize the marriage of either party to a divorce during the lifetime of the other party.

The joint commission entitled to act upon these sections are Bishop Doane of Albany, Bishop Dudley of Kentucky, Bishop McLaren of Chicago, Bishop Burgess of Quincy, Bishop Paret of Maryland, Bishop Potter of New York, the Rev. Eugene A. Hoffman, the Rev. James S. Stone of Chicago, the Rev. Charles A. L. Richards, the Rev. Hall Harrison, the Rev. F. P. Davenport, the Rev. J. H. Eccleston, the Rev. William Huntington, the Rev. W. H. Lightner, Edward C. Bradford, B. F. Swayne, Charles G. Saunders, John A. Beall, Frank H. Miller, and W. S. Ladley.

In the House of Deputies the question as to whether the subject of marriage and divorce should be discussed in secret session caused a spirited debate. The Rev. F. P. Davenport, of Tennessee, moved that when the discussion should come up the house should exclude all but members. The Rev. R. W. R. Taylor of Los Angeles voted against this.

Dr. Roberts of New Hampshire inquired: "Are the secretaries to be removed? Are all clergy and laity and women to be shut out because we discuss marriage and divorce? Surely nothing worse can be said than has already been said on the subject. There is a difference between purity and prudery. Are the women of a congregation asked to retire when the seventh commandment is read in our service? This subject has been discussed before in our general convention. It came up in 1868 and again in 1877. In the debates upon this subject not a word fell from the lips of the speakers that could not have been listened to by a pure woman."

The subject was referred to the House of Bishops to act upon. At the end of the afternoon session their decision was not reached. . . .—Chicago Tribune, Oct. 11, 1898,

TO WIDEN CHURCH LIMITS.

WASHINGTON, D. C., October 13.—The Chicago-Lambeth declaration was a term frequently used in the House of Deputies of the Episcopal Church at this morning's session. Its purport was to promote fraternal feelings with other denominational churches.

Supplementary to this leavening spirit that has been growing in the great body of the Episcopal Church the amendment of article 10 of the constitution proposed by the Rev. Dr. Huntington, of Grace Church, New York, has been again proposed at this convention.

It first took the form of a resolution in the convention at Baltimore six years ago, and is designed as a proviso to admit to public worship any minister or congregation which accepts the "Apostles' Creed and the Nicene Creed, and those ministers having received Episcopal ordination who shall covenant as may be prescribed by canon to use in public worship such form of directory as the Bishop shall set forth and authorize."

DR. STONE OF CHICAGO FOR MORE UNITY.

Dr. Stone of Chicago joined in the debate, expressing a hope for more unity in the church, but did not see that the resolution would promote it, and does not favor the admission into the church of congregations that did not subscribe to the prescribed form of worship in the prayer book.

The Rev. Dr. Leffingwell of Knoxville, Illinois, made a strong argument in behalf of increasing the universality of the prayer book. He wanted to see the words, "Protestant Episcopal" eliminated from the title page, so every Christian in the country could read it as his own. He would sooner see outsiders come to the prayer book before they come to the church door.

Dr. Faude of Minnesota spoke earnestly for D. Huntington's amendment.

In the discussion New England clergymen took the broadest possible ground. Dr. Parks of Boston said:—

"We have come to a period in the United States history when traditions of the past will no longer help us. We are dealing with islands, continents, and provinces."

An unusual sensation was created by Mr. Frank Spittle, a young lawyer of Oregon, who presented to the House of Deputies a resolution to appoint a committee consisting of one Bishop, one Presbyter, and one layman to draw up an amendment to the constitution of the United States empowering Congress to pass a uniform marriage and divorce law, which shall be effective in all the States and Territories. The resolution was referred to the committee on the subject. . . .

In the discussion of the canon of marriage and divorce Bishop Potter urged that the canon proposed by the majority of the commission was too extreme and ill-advised legislation, and would keep people out of the church and place a stigma upon many innocent members. It could not help being post facto, in moral effect at least, and it would be null and void because the great majority of the clergy cannot and will not observe it.

Bishop Seymour suggested that the majority canon be amended so as not to apply to parties to a divorce the cause arising before marriage. Bishop Doane was willing to accept this amendment. Bishop Potter took the amendment, incorporating it so that it read: "No minister of this church shall solemnize the marriage of either party to a divorce who has a husband or wife living, if such husband or wife be put away for any cause arising after marriage."

Bishop McLaren of Chicago offered an amendment to do away with any discipline for the innocent party in the case of adultery who was married by some other clergyman than one of the Episcopal Church. Other amendments were offered, but no action was taken on the completed canon. Dr. Battershaw of Albany moved in the House of Deputies that a deputation from the church be appointed to attend the next General Synod of the Canadian church.—Chicago Tribune, October 14, 1898.

DIVORCE CANON STANDS.

BISHOPS REJECT PROPOSED LEGISLATION ON REMARRIAGE.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Oct. 17.—[Special.]—Dr. Huntington of New York whose amendment to the constitution created more exciting debate in the lower house of the general Episcopal convention than it has known this session, saw the measure passed today with a proviso offered by Dr. Faude, of Minneapolis, which was so gracefully accepted by Dr. Huntington that as near an approach to applause as is permitted in the house was indulged in.

Dr. Huntington provides for any Bishop of the church taking under his spiritual oversight any congregation of Christian people not in communion of the church which accepts the apostles' creed and whose minister, having received Episcopal ordination, approved by the church, shall agree to use in public worship in his congregation such form or directory as the Bishop sets forth and authorizes.

Dr. Faude's amendment stipulated that provision may be made for the temporary use of other forms and directories of worship by congregations not already in unison with this church, who are willing to accept the spiritual oversight of the Bishop of the diocese. The amendment, if adopted by the Bishops, will go to the dioceses for action, and must be passed by the next general convention before it becomes operative.

The House of Bishops, by a vote of 31 to 24, rejected propositions bearing on the subject of remarriage of divorced persons designed to take the place of those now in existence. The present canons on the subject therefore remain in force.—Chicago Tribune, Oct. 18, 1898.

ECONOMY OF ITALIAN POOR.

Marvelous economy is practiced by the poor of Italy in looking after the wants of the inner man. Coffee grounds from the wealthy man's kitchen are dried and resold to the poor. In a similar way oil is twice and sometimes three times used, the drippings after each successive frying being gathered from the pan and sold to the poor.

The Rev. E. R. Fullerton, who has been appointed United States Consul at Nagasaki, Japan, is a Methodist missionary.

Professor Agar Beet, a distinguished theologian of the English Wesleyan Methodist Church, recently wrote a book in which it was asserted that the souls of the wicked are annihilated at death. His church has made him promise not to teach or preach the doctrine.

"Why don't you take steps to have this man who has traduced your character punished? He has unquestionably accused you falsely." "I know it," said Senator Sorghum, thoughtfully. "But I'm afraid that by making a fuss about things that ain't so I may stir up a lot that are."—Ex.

LAMONI, IOWA, OCT. 26, 1898.

DAVID DANCER.

ON October 23, at 7:15 in the evening, as the saints and citizens of Lamoni were gathering for the evening worship in the chapel, Bro. David Dancer, one of the strongest and best of the pioneers who located and settled Lamoni, breathed his life out gently, and now lies with closed eyes and hands folded in the sleep of death, waiting the coming of those who will bear his frame to the resting place of the dead.

Our brother was born nearly seventy-two years ago, in Oneida County, New York, whence his parents removed to Will County, Illinois, while he was quite young.

He was raised a farmer, and soon after attaining his manhood, turned his attention to the raising, care of, feeding, and buying and selling of stock, which continued to be his business to the time of departure.

When the church decided to attempt changing its business location, Bro. Dancer was one of the men chosen to visit the different localities thought to be eligible for such purpose.

The committee consisted of I. L. Rogers, W. W. Blair, David Dancer, E. Banta, and C. A. Beebe. Of these now sleep Brn. Banta, Blair, and Dancer; Brn. Rogers and Beebe remain.

Whatever may be written of such a man, the noblest and best is that he was helpful to his fellow men, had decided views as to his duty to God and men, and acted in accordance with them.

He was a man of striking characteristics, made many friends and some enemies. He was loyal to the church, to his political convictions, his family, and his friends. He was, as a man of his tendencies is liable to be, strenuous almost to harshness in dealing with men regarding the things of this world in business affairs, but kept his word to the letter of his promises, both to friends and enemies, but was true to his convictions of what was just. With him to be just was first; to be generous second, if conditions justified.

The community at Lamoni will miss him, as he was a public benefactor, being favorable to whatever would enhance the real good of the town and county.

The church will miss him, for he was a faithful and tireless worker in his way for its improvement and advancement, giving freely to its public enterprises, when need required. When the HERALD enterprise was started, Bro. I. L. Rogers was its stay; when it was growing and needed help, Bro. Dancer came to its aid, and more than once in connection with Bro. Banta, did he steady its fortunes by his financial strength. When the time came to build a place of worship at Lamoni, it was Bro. Dancer who stood by the effort and gave it aid liberally. When the time came for the HOME to be made, he gave it a place to stand. So all along the line of our labors at Lamoni, the quiet unostentatious help of Bro. Dancer has been felt; and we can well write of him, he judged professions of men's faith by the things they did, results being more to him than profession or promise.

Few men could have been taken from the community who would be more certainly missed than Bro. David Dancer.

INFORMATION ASKED.

A REQUEST for information concerning the action of the church with regard to the college has been made; in answer to which the following is given:—

On page 264 of HERALD for April 26, 1890, in the minutes of the conference held at Lamoni, April, 1890, the following resolution will be found:—

Resolved, That in the opinion of this conference, the time has arrived when it may be expedient to establish an institution of learning under the control or influence of our church organization, and to this end there shall be a committee appointed (by the body) to receive proposals for a location and take such other preliminary measures as may be necessary; and said committee are empowered after receiving such proposals to make all necessary arrangements for the establishment of such institution.

This resolution was presented on Friday, the 11th of April, the fifth day of the session, and was debated at some length and adopted.

After its adoption the names of the following brethren were presented by nomination from which the committee was chosen: E. L. Kelley, J. H. Wells, Robert Winning, I. L. Rogers, David Dancer, Daniel Hougas, J. A. Robinson, Sr. Marietta Walker, Bro. Alfred White, F. G. Pitt, and G. A. Blakeslee. Upon these being put to the vote the result was: G. A. Blakeslee received 104, I. L. Rogers 102, E. L. Kelley 98, David Dancer 93, Robert Winning 78, F. G. Pitt 62, J. A. Robinson 60, M. Walker 52, Daniel Hougas 28, Alfred White 17, J. H. Wells 14.

The first seven having received the highest number of votes, respectively, were declared chosen. This made G. A. Blakeslee, I. L. Rogers, E. L. Kelley, David Dancer, Robert Winning, F. G. Pitt, and J. A. Robinson the committee, to which was given the duty of securing proposals for a location for an institution of learning; and after such proposals were received the same committee was empowered to proceed and "make all necessary arrangements for the establishment of such institution."

From this it will be seen that the movement originated in open conference by regular motion and vote, and so far as the church could authorize any work it did the establishment of a college, or an institution of learning. That a building was contemplated is seen by the reference for proposals for a location. All other measures were made the duty of the committee.

The death of Bishop Blakeslee caused a vacancy in the committee, and at the conference of April, 1891 (April 13), Joseph Smith was appointed to fill such vacancy, the conference seeming to recognize the existence of the effort and the committee.

There was no call for the ye and nay vote at the session for 1890, and in 1891 the only question on which such a vote was asked was one on the releasing Presidency from editorial responsibility.

At the session of April, 1893, at Lamoni, on April 11, the question of the college was spoken of, the names of the committee were read, and a meeting arranged to be held that evening.

At the session of 1894 Brn. I. L. Rogers and David Dancer resigned and Brn. Ellis Short and E. A. Blakeslee were chosen to fill the vacancies.

The college committee made a report to the conference of April, 1895, held at Independence, Missouri. This report will be found on pages 23, 24, published minutes. This report gave a statement of the donation of forty acres of land; twenty acres by Sr. M. Walker, six and one third by Sr. M. Wickes, and thirteen and two thirds by Bro. W. A. Hopkins; and the purchase of twenty-six acres from W. A. Hopkins, making sixty-six acres devoted to the project. The report, also, stated that there were about $6,000, subscribed in money, and work, which with the lots laid off for sale, it was thought would enable the committee to secure a start for suitable buildings.

At this same session Brn. J. A. Robinson and F. G. Pitt resigned and Daniel Anderson and William Anderson were chosen to fill the vacancies.

At the same session of conference the subject of the appointment of a Board of Directors to manage the educational affairs of the college was agitated, and it was ordered by resolution that nine be chosen. This was on April 11, and on the 13th, eighteen different men were nominated from whom Joseph Smith, E. L. Kelley, W. W. Blair, A. H. Smith, J. H. Hansen, D. F. Lambert, E. A. Blakeslee, J. R. Smith, and P. P. Kelley were the nine chosen.

From this it will be seen that the church in its collective business capacity not only took active cognizance of the building, but upon the notice given of its progress, made preparation for the actual entering upon the educational part of the work.

The conference of 1896 convened at Kirtland, Ohio. On Thursday, the 9th, reports from both the Board of Trustees and the Board of Directors were presented. The report of the Trustees, including receipts of $11,150.39 and expenditure of $10,912.39; balance on hand $238.00, was adopted, and the places of E. L. Kelley, Daniel Anderson, and Robert Winning whose time expired, were filled by the choice of E. L. Kelley, Frank Criley, and Daniel Anderson. The report of the Directors showed that the school had run since the previous September 16, and gave tabulated statement of the Treasurer of the college fund. This "report was received, approved, and ordered published." Three Directors, Joseph Smith, J. F. Burton, and O. H. Riggs, were chosen to replace Joseph Smith, W. W. Blair, and E. A. Blakeslee, whose terms expired by limitation.

The Board of Trustees made a financial report to the conference at Lamoni, held April, 1897, in which the receipts and expenditures on account of building and running expenses for the current year were given. This report will be found on page 36 of published minutes. Notice was given in the report that the terms of Joseph Smith and William Anderson expired at the session. Report was read on the 12th and on the 15th Joseph Smith and William Anderson were reelected to succeed themselves as trustees.

The Board of Directors also made report, which was read on the 14th, found on page 51 of published minutes. Attention was called to the expiration of the terms of Alexander H. Smith, J. R. Smith, and D. F. Lambert; and as in the case of the Trustees the vacancies so made were filled by nomination and vote on the 15th; D. F. Lambert, I. W. Allender, and J. R. Lambert were elected.

The Board of Trustees made a full report on April 14, 1898, to the conference at Independence, Missouri, showing the financial condition to date.—Conference Minutes, p. 125.

By consulting that report it will be seen that the building itself cost $19,015.37, not quite twice the estimate of the architect and the proposition of the committee at the outset. The remainder of the report gives amounts about as follows: For improving grounds, surveying, purchasing trees, and setting them $1,260.63. Land bought by the committee, $2,600.00; land donated, $4,000.00. Furniture $805.43. Heating plant, $1,550.00.

These items, aggregating $29,231.43, represents the property called Graceland College belonging to the church, when the debt incurred by the committee, less the amount of land sold, and to be sold before the deal closes, is paid.

The grounds were beautifully laid out, streets graded, and grass seed sown on them, and trees planted, in variety, along the sides; a walk running from the town to the doors of the building; conveniences, including well, cistern, and outhouses.

The other items of the report represent the expenditures incurred in the process of building and the occupation of it for the purposes designed in its erection, and are none of them extravagant, and do not show a dollar lodging in the committee's hands unaccounted for.

The conference accepted the report, and provided for a single board to be chosen at next session of conference, to be consummated upon the resignation of the incumbent members of both boards at the time such conference shall convene.

Brn. J. R. Lambert and D. F. Lambert resigned as members of the Board of Directors, which resignations were accepted by conference. On the 15th, Ellis Short and G. H. Hilliard were chosen to fill the vacancies in the Board of Trustees caused by the expiration of the terms of Brn. Short and E. A. Blakeslee; "by a rising vote."

On the same day, vacancies in the Board of Directors caused by the resignations of Brn. J. F. Burton, J. R. Lambert, and D. F. Lambert, and the expiration of the terms of P. P. Kelley, J. H. Hansen, and E. L. Kelley, were filled by the choosing of J. H. Hansen, P. P. Kelley, E. L. Kelley, R. S. Salyards, William Anderson, and G. H. Hilliard.

Upon this and previous actions of conference the resolution authorizing the Bishopric to assume the task of raising the means and liquidating the debt was based; and in pursuance of which calls are now being made by both the Bishopric and the Faculty.

The question whether the church authorized the building of Graceland College, or the committee acted without such authority, is certainly shown by the foregoing recital of what has been done by the church. And if it should be said that there was no vote by "yea and nay," or what is called vote by delegates, upon this college building, it must be answered that at every conference for many years past the greater part of the business, important, or merely routine, has been done without the call, or need for the delegate vote; and if the failure to call such vote should be held to invalidate the church action on college affairs, then no legitimate business has been done for the several years the delegate system has been used, except the adoption of the system itself, the places at which conferences should be held, and a few cases of matters of grave importance upon which delay has been had for the purpose.

It will be seen that all the business done was in open conference, by the representatives of the church, including the delegates chosen by the different districts and branches. And, it does not detract from the validity and value of the actions that many of the "ex officio" members were, also, delegates properly chosen and certified to by district and branch organizations.

HERALD OFFICE NEEDS.

THE Bishop, who is ex officio, President of the Board of Publication, and Bro. Frank Criley, who is Business Manager, are anxious to have the present year close up with a long step forward in the finances of the office. They desire to make preparation for issuing the third volume of Church History by securing additional orders and sales for the second volume. Cheaper or more desirable and valuable literature is not available to the readers of the HERALD. Note the following, and other references to the third volume and you will see what is desired:—

THIRD VOLUME CHURCH HISTORY.

The General Conference ordered the publication of the third volume of Church History. But not that the Herald Office should run in debt to get it out when the second volume is not yet paid for. The third volume is needed badly. It will be specially interesting, but the office must get out of debt on the second volume first.

AN EXCHANGE.

THE Nauvoo Independent, which we have been privileged to receive in exchange for these many years, appears with a splendid souvenir number in opening issue for the beginning of its twenty-sixth year of newspaper life.

This souvenir number contains a brief statement of the names of the different newspapers and journals published at Nauvoo from 1839 to date, with the dates and periods of time covered by their publication, and the names of publishers and editors and different changes occurring in their ownership. It is very interesting to read, as well as instructive.

The Independent is of the opinion that the city where it is printed, though unfortunate in the earlier years of its occupation, and the long, hideous nightmare of its transition, has now reached the limit of the downward trend and is destined henceforward to rise and grow with the general growth of the country.

The souvenir number reflects great credit on the publishers and is a "thing of beauty" in the printer's arts. We wish it the heartiest success in its further usefulness as a journal for the people of the historic city.

THE CHURCH HISTORY.

THE Herald Office must have the money invested in the second volume of Church History before it can afford to publish the third volume. Look in your library; if you have not the second volume of the history you are delaying the third. Look at your neighbor's library. Has he the first volume? Has he the second? Urge him to help by securing these. The office cannot afford to run the church into debt to publish unless the people want the books.

EPISCOPAL CHURCH MATTERS.

TWO matters of interest will be found in our cover articles, which give reports from the late General Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church, held at Washington, D. C. They are the proposed legislation and final action on marriage and divorce and the action providing for congregations from other churches being received into the fellowship of the Episcopal Church.

Concerning the item last named, the report states as follows:—

Dr. Huntington provides for any bishop of the church taking under his spiritual oversight any congregation of Christian people not in communion of the church which accepts the apostles' creed and whose minister, having received Episcopal ordination, approved by the church, shall agree to use in public worship in his congregation such form or directory as the Bishop sets forth and authorizes.

It will be remembered that when Dr. C. A. Briggs of the Presbyterian Church was tried for heresy and dealt with by the General Assembly of said church, he identified himself with the Episcopal Church and accepted ordination into its ministerial ranks. Whether any of the laity in sympathy with Dr. Briggs followed him into the Episcopal body, we are unable to state. Other aspects of possible cases present themselves however: Granted that congregations of people, constituted as such by the official acts of other ministers, come into the Episcopal Church, why should such be accepted and be required to be under the tutelage of an Episcopal ministry if already possessing the standing of disciples of Christ? If the authority that admitted them to Christian fellowship without rebaptism is good, what more can the Episcopal Church do for them? why invite or encourage their coming to the Protestant Episcopal Church? Why require that any minister accept Episcopal ordination if his former official acts are acknowledged? And if this new phase of church expansion policy is to go on, where will it end? Already the Christians and some of the Baptists, if not others, are accepting converts from other churches, without rebaptism, practically indorsing the acts of other churchmen as authoritative, yet encouraging separation from former church fellowship. Such policy continued, which church, if any, will finally absorb all others? What the ground for hope of unity in such movements—where the consistency of them? Is the claim of the Episcopal Church to apostolic succession now to be compromised or abandoned?

CHURCH HISTORY.

Do YOU want the third volume of Church History? If you do, show it by sending in your order for the second volume at once. One dollar and a half will help you to this work and help defray the expenses of the work on the third volume.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

BRO. G. H. HILLIARD came to Lamoni on the 17th remaining in the interest of church business until the 21st, when he went to St. Joseph enroute to points in Nebraska.

Bro. Frank Criley, our Business Manager, requests us to state that one thousand subscriptions at $1.50 each will be necessary before the third volume of Church History is issued. It is the desire of the management to go ahead with the publication just as soon as sufficient response is received to financially justify so doing.

Please remember what we wrote about shortening obituary notices. We shall be obliged to shorten, or omit altogether; too much space is being taken up by notices unnecessarily long.

A report of the Northern California reunion, held at Livermore, that State, October 1-9, is sent us by Sr. M. A. Twaddle, secretary. Church work was represented in general—preaching, social, Sunday school, and Religion departments; much good accomplished among saints and outsiders; two baptized.

Bro. Reuben C. Elvin of the Herald Office force was married on the 19th inst. to Sr. Nellie N. Epperly, of Millersburg, Illinois, Bro. R. M. Elvin, father of the groom performing the ceremony. The HERALD, including its entire force, extends congratulations and good wishes.

Bro. David Hurbaugh, secretary of the Southern Indiana reunion, writes an account of its sessions, from which it appears that the gathering was a profitable one throughout. One was baptized; all present were edified and built up in the faith. Adjourned to meet again in '99. Our space is so limited that we ceased publishing reunion minutes some time ago.

Sr. Betsey Bonner, Belleville, Kansas, writes that saints there hold regular services, though unaided by anyone holding office in the ministry. They are blessed in striving to do what they can. She thinks all ought to be energetic workers.

Bro. F. T. Haynes, Aurora, Illinois, writes a good letter giving account of his efforts with those of others of the saints in trying to set the truth before the people. He finds the churchmen not greatly disposed to listen to the plain requirements of the word taught by the Master, but rather in love with their own peculiar religious notions.

Sr. Alice Simpson, of Orchardville, Illinois, writes urging that some of the ministry respond to the demand for preaching there. She asks prayer in behalf of herself and family.

Bro. James Moler, of Ohio, writes: "The brother referred to, whom I baptized and joined in marriage with Maggie Smith, whose name appears as Charles G. Williams, is not Williams, but Charles Gwilliams."

The work on Succession in the Presidency of the Church, now running in the HERALD, will appear until completed, after which it will be made up in tract form. Price will be announced in due time.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

"Our common mother rests and sings.
Like Ruth, among her garnered sheaves;
Her lap is full of goodly things,
Her brow is bright with autumn leaves."

Dear Readers of the Home Column:—It is the eye and attention of you who each week scan this part of our loved Herald that I wish to draw. The eye and attention once gained, I hope the Spirit of God will make known to you the very great need of aid that you in some way are able to give. Thoughtfully consider the title of this space devoted particularly to the interests of the home—Mothers' Home—Column. Homes of our children have been benefited by the excellent counsel and sensible advice given us in regard to the training of children in manners and morals, and many other ways. Where the mother has been helped in her work, the advice so applied as to work good, the fruit or reward of her labor will show in the lives of her sons and daughters. But while mothers are encouraged in improving themselves, so that the improvement will or may show in the lives of their children, the task or rather labor of instructing the child may be assisted by another method than solely through the word of mouth teaching by the mother, and that is by simple stories, teaching lessons plain enough to be applied to your little ones' daily life. It is natural for a child to love stories, and I believe there is no surer way of impressing truths upon the mind of a child than in this way.

I look back to the years of my own childhood, and as far as my memory can carry me (almost to babyhood itself), I remember the great desire (I was about to say appetite) I had for a story. I was one fortunate enough to have a father with a talent for story-telling, and whether it were a Bible story, or a fairy story, or a story of every-day life, there was always a lesson taught, and I feel that as long as I retain my memory I will retain many of those little childish stories.

Not every mother or father has this talent, and in order to supply something for the children of such parents, the church has undertaken to provide something to be used as a teacher by story-telling. Most of the mothers are familiar with the little paper issued by the church, called Zion's Hope. Three pages of this child's paper are devoted to children who are able to read for themselves; one page is used for little ones who love stories, but are not old enough to read for themselves. One small page for the most impressionable minds in the world!

You, dear reader of mature years, have your Herald and Ensign to keep you familiar with the prosperity of the gospel work. The youth of the church have Autumn Leaves for their portion, and all these pretty well supplied with original articles and letters. I know you would not be satisfied with less than the cream. Well, now I wish you would gather up a few Hopes and look over the fourth page, how many of the stories there are signed by a name, and how many are marked as selections? We as a people often take pride in the thought that we have the cream of the gospel truth, and yet our children's young and tender minds are forced to accept lessons from the pens of people who have not the truth as we know it.

I believe there are hundreds of our church people who could supply some little incidents of child life, and yet while I have had charge of this page for over five years, I could almost count on my two hands the number of contributors to this small space for the wee ones.

This shows just about the amount of interest taken; but I hope a brighter day will soon dawn. There are a few devoted ones who deserve praise, but they know their reward is sure, and they need no mention and expect none, publicly. Do not be afraid of oversupplying us with material for this page. Let us try, and never a fear but what we will succeed.

Mothers, fathers, brothers, sisters, uncles, aunts, and cousins, will you not respond to this call? Let us have some testimonies from some who have helped in this line of work, it may do good—it may encourage others to try. That God may bless us all in every good work is the fervent prayer of your friend and sister, Onslow, Iowa, Sept. 29, 1898. ELLA J. GREEN.

Dear Sister Frances:—This morning the October number of the Autumn Leaves came to hand, and I have been reading it for a great part of the day. It is a rich number in the best thought of noble minds; and as I realize that it is all to help our young people to grow, and become strong in those principles pleasing to God—righteousness and truth—the thought came to me, how much more this church realizes the responsibility of the young committed to its care than do any of the denominations known to me. Not that those others do not have plenty of moral teaching, but it seems to be all on general terms. No others so enter into the private and individual life of young boys and girls, and not only seek to correct the outward act and deportment, but to direct the inward secret thought into channels of purity and truth. And all this not from fear of flaming torment hereafter, but because it is right, and the only way to peace on earth and joy in heaven. I laid down Zion's Hope not long ago with the thankful thought that our precious little ones never have been frightened from its pages by threats of that fiery hell that used to be pictured in all its awful horrors to my infant mind. How much better that they are learning to love the good, and their little minds led into right thinking and action because it is good, leaving the future to its own awards of good or evil?

There is another thing that claims admiration for our literature, which I miss in every other. I refer to the true democracy of the gospel, wherein all whose lives are governed by its laws and principles are placed on the same level. There the wealthy with their presumed superiority, because of educational and social advantages over the poor, learn that if their lives are governed by those principles exemplified in the life of Christ, have no superiority or advantage over the hard-handed sons and daughters of toil, whose lives are likewise patterned after the same example. And that wealth with all that it bestows are but added responsibilities to those who possess them as stewards for Christ. They who learn this, whether rich or poor, have learned the great lesson of life which Christ came expressly to make known: One is your Father, all ye are brethren. A lesson which we look for in vain in the popular literature of the day, but which beams like a beacon light where the truth of Christ is taught. There is no education that can broaden and quicken thought like that which the Holy Spirit gives. How it develops and brings into action natural and latent talents of good, thus uplifting and ennobling the humblest of his followers, and bestowing the truest refinement to manners that are ruled by the love of Christ.

I thank God for our church literature, for the good it is doing for our own, and for the power it must exert in the world, if only as a protest against the overwhelming tide of evil.

I cannot speak from personal knowledge of the Home Column, for it has been a long, long time since I have seen it. Indeed, it is by favor only that I am permitted to read the Autumn Leaves and Zion's Hope, and I thought I must write if only to make known how I appreciate them. Eleven years ago there were a few true mother hearts who saw and felt the need of something that should come between the Hope and the Herald; and by their united prayers and efforts, with toil of mind and body, our beautiful little magazine was launched on the world. Can we forget what prayers were offered for its success? what earnest work and thought were given to it only the few know. And now as I look over the bright little volume before me, I begin to realize that it was not all in vain, though the instruments of its being did seem so feeble. And, Sister Frances, I would like to say to you, that though Providence has removed from your side most of those old-time helpers, who essayed to hold up your hands, I am glad to think that the divine aid still continues with you; and my prayer still is that it may continue with you, and to perpetuate the work after you are gone. You and I know that none of us, be our abilities what they may, are essential to the perpetuation of God's truth. This lesson was long ago borne in upon my mind, and I only feel thankful that I was permitted to be one of the pioneers in that work, and am glad that abler ones have carried it on to success when I was forced by circumstances to lay it down.

God bless you.

SPECIAL REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.

THE sisters of the Prayer Union are asked to remember the mother of Bro. Roy Newkirk, that she may have the opportunity of hearing the gospel preached and be led to accept the same. Mention is made elsewhere in the Home Column of her; please read.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LIBRARIES.

THE object of any library is to place books within reach of those wishing to use them. Books on every subject may be obtained in abundance, oftentimes at little cost. But the question with us is not altogether how many books, and how cheap can we fill our library shelves, but, Of what nature shall be the books we place in our Sunday school libraries, and how can we make the wisest selection. What shall be our aim as we say, Put this book in the hands of our children, it will do them good,—reject that book, it will harm him?

WHO SHALL CHOOSE?

From our experience with reading, we that are older must choose the best that we know so that those whom we may try to lead in right directions shall not have to wade through the worst to be able to decide what is best.

HABITS.

Habits formed in reading are not for a little season, but for a lifetime. If we elect to read only that which elevates, the whole character will be raised to a higher plane; contrary election producing contrary effect.

OUR AIM.

Our effort in this Sunday school library movement, is to raise the standard of our young people's reading. We desire that their habits shall tend to bring them up higher. Not simply to make them acquainted with what good literature is, but by placing in their hands the books that we know to be good, cause to be developed in them a real taste for the true, the beautiful, and ennobling in literature. We may know what we ought to read and from a sense of duty read what our judgment tells us is best; yet if we have not taste for it, much of the good to be attained is lost.

INTEREST

in any undertaking because of love for it accomplishes the whole object sought. Let us be careful, then, from earliest childhood to make a careful selection of the company we are anxious that the children shall associate with, whether it be his book-companion or otherwise.

A CHANGE OF TASTE.

With children, whose tastes for reading are partially or almost wholly formed we cannot say, You must not read that book, it is not good. In the average child such remark would only be an incentive to read the book. Our aim with such who are reading what we in our mature judgment might condemn, should be to use untiring zeal in trying to familiarize them with something that is better than they have been reading; and in that way they may be taught to take pleasure in good books.

PLEASURE.

That in which we take pleasure, unavoidably will result in the shaping and molding of our character. And how anxious we are, that our boys and girls shall stand unparalleled in purity and in knowledge; for I believe such is our right and privilege, if we make good use of that which we have.

To you, Sunday school workers, it has seemed to me wisdom to try and outline for you some of the work that is expected to be done by the librarian, some of the responsibilities that devolve upon this officer, and too, some of the resulting responsibilities that rest upon you, as workers in the Sunday school; for I believe that no work rests wholly upon one person in the position of officer.

A DEMAND.

Those actively engaged in the work, in their visits to the different schools and in letters asking advice as to what books to put in their libraries, saw that some one to look after the interests of this department would satisfy a growing demand and open a field to advance the interests of our young people. So, in the appointment of an officer, the object sought was that some one should have this particular feature of Sunday school work at heart, and be on the watch for good books, or for new ideas relative to furnishing the best reading for our boys and girls, to advise librarians as to the selection of good literature, and to gather together whatever materials may serve to throw light on the gospel, or any evidence that may tend to establish the truth of the Book of Mormon.

AN ERRONEOUS IDEA.

An idea seems to prevail, judging from the tone of some of the letters I have received, that no work of selecting books for Sunday school libraries now rests upon anyone except the librarian. The idea is hardly a correct one.

My idea is something like this: Whenever possible, to have the local schools appoint a standing library committee, whose duties shall be of similar nature to those of the librarian, that they may be constantly watching for the best literature.

Let the essential qualifications of one on this committee be that he is himself interested in reading; that he is interested in what is choice in reading matter; and that he realizes that much can be accomplished by good literature training.

SELECTING BOOKS.

Let us remember a few general points in selecting books. We do not want simply that which does no harm, not simply that which pleases, not simply that which does a little good, but we are seeking that which tends to open new fields of thought, and which will draw out and develop the very grandest faculties of our minds.

I, as Librarian, am not able to read all books. You, as workers, may read many, many books. Then, when something appeals to you as elevating, treasure it, and let us know about it. In making up a list of books that may serve as a guide for the different schools to use in selecting, I have written to many of the workers to give me a list of books that their judgment has told them were good and pure, and have been pleased with the responses that I have received and the lists of books that have been sent me.

I wish I knew more of you, but by means of this paper, I make a general request, that you may all become interested; that you who are older as well as you who are younger may become more careful readers; that our knowledge may be utilized to the good of our young people.

I believe that a wide field is before us.

LOCAL LIBRARIANS.

One thought further: Let me urge upon you the most careful selection of your local librarians. Not anyone will do for the office, but some one whose acquaintance with the reading matter he handles is far from meager. Let it be some one, too, who knows what boys and girls enjoy, and who takes interest in encouraging reading in right directions.

I am anxious that we should progress, and that our advancement be steadily upward, and that we may feel in working that our cause is just and that the Spirit of God is directing.

I would enjoy meeting with you, Sunday school workers, and hear your opinions, but it is impossible; but I pray God that his Spirit may direct you.

MAMIE A. ALLEN.

CHRISTMAS OFFERINGS.

IT is hoped that the Sunday school workers and scholars will not overlook the importance of the Christmas Offerings. A growth in the Sunday school should also be seen in the amount of offerings sent in. Means are needed to aid the work, and we respectfully urge the claims of the Christmas Offering fund upon the attention of all schools.

Let us do better this year than ever before. Send all remittances with names to the Herald Office, as heretofore. The names with amounts of offerings will be published in the blue Hope.

CASTLE ROCK, Wash., Oct. 11.

Editors Herald:—The gospel tent of the field is now furled and packed away for the winter, after a successful campaign of about four months, which is considered pretty good time for this climate; and we are just getting our first introduction to the Washington rain we have heard so much about, and I don't doubt that it is all it is said to be, for it does seem to me it can rain the easiest, and with the least preparation, and keep it up the longest, of any place I ever struck. But all you have to do is to provide yourself with an umbrella, mackintosh, and rubbers, and you may be out in it all day with very little discomfort, as it is warm and no wind with it, and in this place we have no mud to contend with, as the soil is very sandy.

This is our stopping place for the winter. We have a small three-room house rented for one dollar per month, and with a little second-hand furniture purchased coming through Portland, we are quite comfortably settled for the winter. After all, contentment in life is more than half the battle fought.

This is a very busy little place; it has four trains a day. Its streets and dwellings are lit up by electricity; it has four sawmills running, which give plenty of work for all.

The last Sunday before leaving Oregon, the gospel tent still standing at Dallas, A. M. was called to Independence on business. Business? Yes, and very important business, too. It was a wedding. Our esteemed brother, Bro. Jasperson, of that place, had concluded to "take unto himself a wife" and that fortunate lady proved to be the amiable and accomplished Sr. Jennie Wendall, late of Wisconsin. Bro. I. N. Roberts will remember her, as she is one of his converts, he having baptized her several years ago. Well, the ceremony was performed in a solemn and befitting manner, the best wishes of those present tendered the happy couple, the songs of Zion sung, being joined in by both bride and groom, and the delicacies and luxuries of the table partaken of with an added relish under the sociable, congenial spirit that was present and which always should prevail with brethren and sisters in Christ. Well, we considered the whole a success, even to the closing scene, which was enacted between Bro. Jasperson and A. M., the former placing an X in the hand of the latter. Well, we departed, wishing them many happy years in their comfortable and handsome abode, and that their lives might continue to be so occupied therein, that they might gain an abundant entrance to those glorious mansions we all hope to obtain.

Well, the last week was spent by our elders in preaching to the people of this place evenings and cutting wood in the timber through the day. By so doing I am provided with my winter's supply of wood, for which I am duly grateful. Last Sunday morning our worthy brother, Bro. Lobesene came as previously agreed upon and took them by team across the river to preach to the people at the Lank schoolhouse. There are a few saints in this locality. Three of the saints of this place, Srs. Crum, Aphleman, Davis, and myself also went over and were well paid for the effort by hearing two excellent sermons delivered to good and attentive congregations. We then drove back home, leaving the elders to continue the meetings this week. We hear they still have a house full last night. Well, we look for good results, as there are some near the kingdom there. May the Spirit of the Master attend this work generally.

Your sister in Christ,

MRS. A. M. CHASE.

SAN ANTONIO, Texas, Oct. 2.

Editors Herald:—We are at work, doing the best we can under existing circumstances. We are poor and have no house for worship, but go from house to house; have prayer meeting every Sabbath evening, preaching often as the circumstances admit.

Bro. T. J. Sheppard has been with us; was at the reunion; held ten days' services with good attendance and good spiritual meetings, and as fine sermons as I ever listened to. He baptized six members into the San Antonio branch, which now has a membership of thirty-five. There were fourteen additions while Bro. Sheppard was with us.

Yours in bonds,

I. E. TUCKER.

CONNEAUT Township, Pa., Oct. 20.

Editors Herald:—Elders Griffiths and Craig were in attendance at the dedication of the saints' chapel about four miles from Glen-easton, West Virginia, on Sunday, 16th inst. Dedicatory service was held at eleven o'clock a. m. Elder Tary, of Wheeling, presided, and offered opening prayer; Elder Griffiths offered the dedicatory prayer, a well-worded and spiritual one. He preached in afternoon. Audiences large and attentive throughout the day; singers from Wheeling branch furnished special music for the occasion.

The chapel is 30x40 ft., ceiling proportionately high; neatly finished, and good pews for seating; platform and aisles nicely carpeted; room well lighted; a belfry and bell adorn front gable; in all a credit to the saints of that locality. Elders Griffiths and Craig were to divide the present week in having preaching services at the chapel. Came here 18th, for a series of meetings.

Respectfully,

J. F. MCDOWELL.

RENO, Nev., Oct. 12.

Editors Herald:—Proselyting in this part of the country, so far as our faith is concerned, is very scattering indeed. I have done the best I could, but I am a long ways from being satisfied; I cannot do sufficient to arouse any considerable interest. One man, in a Brighamite-poisoned district as Nevada, is like a needle in a haystack. I find some saints who were converted to the man who brought the gospel to them, instead of to the gospel, and subsequent conversions when in the church are the most difficult to effect. Others have starved to death, a very prevalent disease, brought on by a dearth for preaching and presiding officers over the flock, as provided for in the revelations. It is suicidal to establish branches and then leave them to "starve out." It occurs to me this would be a profitable question for discussion in the "High Priest's Quorum."

Then there are a few saints who are very warm and congenial to the investigator, and as soon as he is baptized the cold side is turned towards him and he is soon frozen out. This, too, I think is largely due to a dearth of proper food administered by the proper ones.

I finished a week of services at the Truckee schoolhouse last week. This week I am preaching in the Congregational church in Reno to very small crowds. We shall try and do our part and leave it in the hands of God for the increase.

We like this mission for its wilderness, and to be fully in harmony have, with the aid of Bro. Gault, captured us a wild pony from the "range" of his mountain fastness. Will try and get him well broke and turn him in for "tithing" when we leave the mission. E. L. get your "hackamore" and "spurs" ready.

Uncle John, "To the law and to the testimony," referred only to those who "peep and mutter." W. H. K. neither peeped nor muttered, but spoke out clearly, as a man who had the courage of his convictions.

Our conference convenes on the 6th of November. Would it be possible for you to be with us, Bro. Griffiths?

In bonds,

CLARKSVILLE, Texas, Oct. 14.

Editors Herald:—I have belonged to this grand and glorious work for four years last August; have done very little good for the cause yet—and be that to my shame; but can testify to its truth and divinity. The closer I try to live to God the more glorious it becomes to me.

My wife and I were converted through the preaching of Bro. J. D. Erwin, at Douglass, Texas. She had belonged to the Baptists for sixteen years, and I to the Campbellites for fifteen years. We are now living in the neighborhood of Mabry schoolhouse. Our son and ourselves are the only saints in this neighborhood, but I think there will be more soon.

About one year ago Bro. I. P. Baggerly held a meeting here. He has preached a few times since, consequently there are some investigating our claims. Of course it is easy to guess what the result will be. "But hold on there," says the Devil, "that is all a hobby and a delusion." So off he sends for his vice-consul, J. W. Chism, to kill out Mormonism; so the time was set for debate on the 13th of September; but it failed to come off by some crook or turn of his Satanic Majesty, so they have set the time again for December 5, I think, without conferring with Bro. Baggerly anything about it. They also say that Bro. Baggerly will not meet Chism.

I also see a letter in the Herald from Bro. J. D. E., wherein he states that Bro. Baggerly is not the man to meet Chism. The people here all want Bro. B., say they don't want anyone else, so I think he is the man. God is just as able to defend his cause through Bro. B. as anyone else, and I believe is just as willing. It will take a meek and humble spirit to do any good here. All there will be to do will be to present the truth in a mild form. Chism will do more harm here among his own people than he will good.

I had a little experience with them in September. One Trimble was holding a big meeting, I had been attending, and he kept throwing dirt and talking about the Mormon Bible; so on Friday night I asked him to let me give in my testimony the next night. He said I could; so after he had talked about an hour and a half he announced my request and sat down. I got up, the first time in my life to try to talk to a large congregation; but I told them I was raised in the Campbellite Church, how long I had belonged to it, and why I was now a Latter Day Saint. When I sat down he got up and would ask me a question. Before I could answer he would ask another, or go to vilifying me, until one old gentleman told him to hush and let me answer his questions. But he did not heed him. Well, I will not try to tell what he did say, but when he got through he had about killed all the good he had done all the week, and some of the old men were so mad they just pulled for home to keep from jumping onto him.

MASON-GREGORY DEBATE.

TORONTO, Ont., Oct. 20.

Last Monday night Dr. Mason of Toronto, Christadelphian, and Elder Fred Gregory of St. Marys, Latter Day Saint, met in the saints' church, this city, according to previous arrangement, to discuss two propositions. The first three nights have been devoted to the first proposition, which reads as follows: "Resolved that the Old and New Testaments teach that man is mortal, and has no conscious existence between death and the resurrection."

DR. MASON, aff.

ELDER GREGORY, neg.

The doctor informed us that he "had been debating thirty years;" but if he ever was a bright one at the business, a great change has come over him. In his first speech he showed signs of nervousness, and made such fatal admissions that I whispered to Bro. Gregory, "Your man is whipped already." Here is a sample: "I admit man is a compound being, composed of spirit and body, the body goes to the grave, the spirit returns to God who gave it."

Bro. Gregory is a young man, and this is his first debate; but he is a clear-brained, close, logical reasoner. Most of the time he was calm and keen, wading through the doctor's tangled web with ease. Bro. Gregory admitted the body was mortal, but pressed the doctor to follow the spirit "to God who gave it," and prove it mortal. This the doctor failed to do, and Bro. Gregory's work in the negative was over. He put up a splendid alibi in the form of preëxistence and probation after death.

In the doctor's closing speech he said Bro. Gregory was a master at the work, and he had never met his equal on the debating platform. The doctor's moderator called him to order five times. I acted as Bro. Gregory's moderator, and did what I could to make the debate a profitable one.

The next three nights "our church" will be on trial. Will report next week.

PIPER CITY, Ill., Oct. 17.

Editors Herald:—I joined Bro. Moler here two weeks ago; we have continued meetings most of the time until the present. Interest was still good when we closed last night. A number are "near and yet so far" from the kingdom. Bro. Moler went to Sherburnville to-day; called there to administer to Bro. Colon Dickey who is very low with consumption. Bro. Moler will probably preach some while there; it is a new point. I will remain in this part of the district awhile and endeavor to effect some new openings. Bad weather prevents me from filling an appointment at Forman schoolhouse, six miles west of here (Sr. Heavener's) to-night. The saints here bear such a reputation with the world that it makes it a pleasure to preach.

SOUTH BOARDMAN, Mich., Oct. 5.

Editors Herald:—It has been a long time since anything has been written from this branch to the outside world, we have not been entirely dead, but it has been a struggle for life, though we still live and in hope.

We are trying to finish up our church and get it seated and comfortable for winter: we want to say to the brothers and sisters everywhere, we need some help, and we presume you have been taxed, and perhaps not a little, in like calls in the past. It has been so with us, but we have always responded as liberally as we were able; now we feel to give all an opportunity to return the compliment. A very small trifle from each one would help us out wonderfully, and aid in a good cause. Anyone who may feel disposed to help, be it ever so small, it will be thankfully received by Sr. Mary Hanson, president, or Sr. Frances Graves, treasurer, of the Ladies' Mite Society of South Boardman, Michigan, who will apply it as above, and God will bless you for the same. By the society,

MARION, Iowa, Oct. 11.

Editors Herald:—The Methodist conference of Northern Iowa held in Marion the past week, closed yesterday. There was good attendance, some good speaking, and eight elders and one deacon called by the M. E. Church and ordained by the authority of the Bishop and five elders, who laid their hands upon them and conferred upon them the authority of the church. There are many earnest, honest souls among them, with some of whom we had nice visits. Sr. Cator entertained one of their ministers and his wife, and one stayed at our house part of the time. They said they had a better understanding of the Latter Day Saints' belief and a better opinion of them than ever before.

One of the special features of the conference was the lecture by Bishop John H. Vincent, D. D., L. L. D.; subject, "To-morrow." Bro. J. W. Peterson and myself had the pleasure of hearing it, which is, in part, as follows:—

A casket was handed to a king, and as he opened it his boy prince, looking eagerly on, saw nothing but two or three peachstones, some plumstones, cherry pits, and some other seeds. "Who has insulted thee thus?" the young prince exclaimed, "Those are of no value." "They are for me," said the king, "I see in them fruits and foliage, and they shall be planted to-morrow." The king planted them, and the prince in future years praised the king for his foresight. We must look into the future and make preparation for it. The destiny of the race does not end at the grave, and it behooves wise men to plan wisely for the future. I have great faith in the future. See how the world has advanced in the sciences in the past fifty years! I sometimes fancy I would like one of my venerable ancestors to ride with me on one of the present palace trains with their magnificent sleeping cars, fine dining cars, and their cattle—Oh! smoking cars. But what are these compared with to-morrow? I never read Looking Backward without wishing I had chosen my occupation later in life; Mr. Bellamy's description of a room so arranged that if one is restless he has but to press a button and soft, sweet music fills the air and lulls one to sleep. Think of the pneumatic tube by which a man in Paris will return to New York for dinner! Inventions of the past only index the future. It is a sad thing to think of death as we contemplate the possibilities of the future.

I look forward to the church of to-morrow with a great deal of interest, not in the dim future, for I expect to reside here on the earth for countless ages when the New Jerusalem, the city of God, comes down from heaven to the earth and the tabernacle of God is with men. Some may not want to stay here then, but for me, I will be satisfied to remain after the ushering in of a new heaven and a new earth.

The church of the future will be a church militant and its mission will be to wage war against evil. The church of the future will be a church of revision in doctrine and polity. The Bible was not produced in heaven and handed down as a whole, but was written by men here on earth under the inspiration of the Spirit. The sun is not without spots, and these have their advantages; so with the Bible, it will be revised again and again, but will be more precious in a thousand years than now. We have the Book, and we must recognize the possibilities of human errors. I would not throw away an old daguerreotype of a friend, but would prize a recent picture more; but I prefer the original to either. The church of the future will place great emphasis on a personal Christ; to-morrow will not be ecclesiastical but it will be Christ. He experienced our infirmities; we will magnify his humanity, and then his divinity will have more power for us. More lives of Jesus have been written during the past twenty-five years than of any other ten persons of history. The church of the future will put emphasis on the original factor, Home. We have leagues, clubs, organizations, etc., etc., and are apt to neglect the home. The true Christian home is the model of the universe. My father believed in authority, and when he said: "My son, meet me on the barn floor, to-morrow morning at half past six." I used to be lost in the thoroughness of his effectiveness. Once my mother pleaded with my father to forgive me that once, and he yielded, and mother took me in the bedroom and told me that was the way God forgave his children for Jesus' sake. Is home to be lost in the club and the secret societies and the children to be let run and learn those things from irresponsible parties when the parents ought to be the ones to instruct in those things that tend to promote happiness? The church of the future will demand a qualified minister—one that is endowed with the true dignity. I don't believe in a church built with a place for the choir back of the pulpit where there may be some person who is an unbeliever who because of his good voice is employed by the church to sing. He may by the expression of unbelief on his face kill the effect of all the minister may say. So also may some of the ladies by some silly laugh or peculiar make-up attract the attention of the audience from the thought being presented. Put your choir to one side on a level with the congregation, and avoid such things. We ought to believe and recognize the sanctity of our churches and maintain a spirit of reverence in God's house. And in the church of the future, in the prayer meetings, there will be a change, where the Scriptures will be used more. The church of the future will be all-inclusive, the center of all movements where man will be lifted up and great ideas will be advocated, and leave men to decide, while Christ will be the center of all our efforts; not just work for the denomination only, for creeds are but human interpretation of Scripture; but for Christ and humanity.

The church of to-morrow will concentrate on humanity. I respect a servant girl that honestly toils for her living and the church of the future will have more interest in all the classes and conditions of humanity. Not external union, for that tends to stagnation; but unity of spirit, unity in the great work about the Father's business. Every minister should live in a town five years, and if every church in that town is not better, then there is a failure somewhere. Many people hold a thought that rests in the brain as a name, but Christ lives for all and died for all. I see in the distance a great church spire, Go on Presbyterians, build higher and higher! And again, a Congregationalist's building I see. We give you some of our members; may they be a blessing to you. There also is the Baptists' tower of strength, built not in the water, but on the rock of ages. Go on, old church, go on, do all the good you can! There also is the Episcopal church; narrow doors and windows select, building for eternity. Go on, build away! And there is the stately tower of Methodism. It trembles; shall it fall? No; it is spiritual power. And there in the distance I see a small steeple. I cannot say by what name they call it, but it may be they have more righteousness, and the Spirit of God, than all the rest. And as I turn I see the great Roman Catholic Church. I shall keep my eyes on you. There are some things I am afraid of, but we realize, as an American once said, it will be watched and no harm shall come.

The time will come when God, the great Master-builder will put great arches from tower to tower and all shall become a part of the temple of our God.

AUDUBON, Minn., Oct. 16.

Editors Herald:—We have, in our little branch, indeed had much to encourage us, and I often wonder how people can live without the gospel, the Comforter, and the heavenly Father, to go to in the dark hour of trial; and I feel to strive more earnestly to live in such a manner that he will be pleased to hear me when I call upon him.

One dear sister in our branch was very low. Doctors told her she could not live long, and when I stood by her bedside I felt that she was indeed very near unto death. She had called for Elders I. N. Roberts and H. Way to administer to her, and as she took me by the hand and said, "I want you all to pray for me." I felt that God would hear and answer our prayers in her behalf; and before Bro. Roberts had finished the first prayer every one in the room felt the power of the Holy Spirit, and after she was administered to she received a grand blessing, and was healed, to the joy of all present.

When Bro. Roberts returned from holding meetings in the city of Minneapolis he was so badly broken down in health that people shook their heads and said, "I am afraid Bro. Roberts' work is about over." But he had that faith that could not nor would not be shaken, and according to promise was healed instantly, after being administered to by the elders; and now people look and wonder, for he is his old, natural self and is gaining in flesh again. We all rejoice to know that the Lord will bless, and that these signs do follow them that believe.

We have a neat little building erected here in Audubon and hope to be able in the near future to have it dedicated to the Lord, free from all indebtedness; and I for one feel that inasmuch as we stand united in this glorious work the Lord will recognize and bless the sacrifices all have made in this direction; so let us not weary in well-doing, but press on, and through faith we will conquer and receive a crown of life in the end. I ask an interest in the prayers of all saints.

Your sister in Christ,

L. M. HAWLEY.

True Succession in Church Presidency.

PREFACE.

THE only apology needed for the appearance of this work is, that we have been attacked, and it is both a privilege and a duty to respond. Some have thought the church was too slow and should have replied long ago. But had we rushed into print when the work of Mr. Roberts first appeared, we would have done so unadvisedly. We did not know whether he was authorized to write or not; nor did we know whether the church he represented would indorse his positions; hence no one was appointed to reply; though it was not lost sight of, and several of the elders upon their own responsibility were carefully collecting material for use in such reply. Now that the representatives of the church in Utah, both in Europe and America, have made it their chief weapon of attack and defense, we think the opportune time has come, for they are thus pledged to its support. Further, we have the direct testimony of Mr. Roberts that the First Presidency in Utah indorsed his work. The book was copyrighted in February, 1894.

In the latter part of the year 1895 Mr. Roberts, together with Moses Thatcher, fell under the displeasure of church authorities for his political actions; while under the ban of disapproval he was interviewed, and the interview published in the Salt Lake Tribune for October 14, 1895. The following is an extract from the interview:—

STATEMENT BY ROBERTS.

CLAIMS THAT HE CONFRONTS A GRAVE CRISIS.

The following authorized statement by B. H. Roberts, in the form of an interview, was given out at the Democratic State headquarters last evening.

Being asked for his views upon the present political situation, Mr. Roberts said:—

"I have always regarded myself as properly respectful and attentive to church authority. In my labors in the church, whether in missionary or literary affairs. I have always consulted with the presidency when communication was possible; and their wishes have been respectfully followed. All the manuscripts of tracts and books of which I am the author, that have been written in advocacy or defense of the Mormon faith, have been invariably submitted to their personal inspection or to the inspection of committees appointed by them."

This, then, fixes the responsibility of an indorsement upon the Presidency; and in meeting the issues discussed by Mr. Roberts in "Succession in the Presidency of the Church," we are not simply meeting Mr. Roberts alone, but we are meeting the authorized positions of the church in Utah upon the issues involved.

In addition to this Mr. Roberts is one of the seven Presidents of Seventy, a leading minister, a popular lecturer, and an author of no mean repute among his fellows, being the author of the "Life of John Taylor," "Outlines of Ecclesiastical History," "The Gospel," and other publications.

Having then located our contestants and estimated the strength of their position, we advance to the examination confident of the final triumph of the right wherever found; and send forth this little book with a humble prayer that the erring may learn wisdom and the darkened mind receive light. We wish here to gratefully acknowledge the assistance rendered us by valuable suggestions given us by several.

With much confidence we submit the issues involved to the careful investigation of an indulgent, but discerning public.

THE AUTHOR.

CHAPTER I.

MR. ROBERTS introduces his treatise by quoting what purports to be language of Brigham Young used on August 8, 1844, as follows:—

All that want to draw away a party from the Church after them, let them do it if they can, but they will not prosper.

He assumes that this language is prophetic, then proceeds to show its fulfillment by citing the failure of the movements under Rigdon, William Smith, J. J. Strang, and others. In each of these cases he repeats this purported prediction as a climax to his argument. As Mr. Roberts has given this purported statement so much prominence, we will give it a brief consideration.

First, there is nothing peculiarly significant in the statement. It is but a sentiment which any person who had accepted the latter-day work would feel safe in expressing, and one which was generally held and doubtless frequently expressed at the time, and one which would have received the unqualified indorsement of Rigdon, Strang, and every other claimant to the Presidency of the church; a sentiment too which we most heartily agree to, for we most assuredly believe that no man or men will prosper in leading away a party from the church. But the questions were then and are now, Where was or is the church? Who represented or represents it? Instead of meeting these questions squarely and fairly, Mr. Roberts assumes the very point at issue by supposing that the party led by Brigham Young and his colleagues was and is the accepted church. This is illogical, and contrary to all rules of evidence, subjecting its author to an unenviable position as a controversialist.

In the second place, if we concede that the statement referred to was a prophetic one, the evidence of its correctness is not complete so long as there are two flourishing organizations contending for recognition; and Mr. Roberts admits that he cannot point to a fulfillment of his pet prediction as applied to the Reorganization. He says:—

Now that we draw to the close of our consideration of the claims of this "Reorganized church," we cannot point to its destruction as we have done in the case of Sidney Rigdon's church, William Smith's church, and James J. Strang's church; for the Reorganized church still exists. But its doom is written as distinctly as that of the other false churches that we have seen crumble to pieces into shapeless heaps of ruin. It is only a question of time with regard to its failure. MENE, MENE, TEKEL, is written upon its walls—God hath numbered thy kingdom—weighed in the balances—found wanting!—Succession, by Roberts, page 99.

Mr. Roberts forms his conclusion in advance of the evidence to support it, and then utters a prediction of his own upon the fulfillment of which depends the correctness of his basic prediction, a very unfortunate and unsafe thing to do. Were we, like he, to beg the question by assuming, in advance of the evidence, that the Reorganization is accepted of God, we could cite in confirmation the failure of Rigdon, Smith, and Strang, with as much consistency as does he. We could also bolster up our conclusion by predicting the downfall of the church in Utah with just as much flourish and with at least as much prospect of success. We hope, however, that if driven to such straits we will have the honesty to withdraw from the controversy.

If this purported statement of Brigham Young's is a true prediction, who can now tell whether it will be fulfilled in the destruction and dismemberment of the organization of the church in Utah or that of the Reorganization?

In the third place, the evidence that Brigham Young made this statement at the time and place claimed, is not very clear. Mr. Roberts quotes it from the Millennial Star, volume 25, page 216, a publication issued about 1863, nearly twenty years after the event. The account of the meeting published soon afterward, in Times and Seasons for September 2, 1844, does not contain these words or anything of like purport. Had such a sentiment been expressed and understood to have been prophetic in its character, it is but reasonable to suppose that some notice of it would have been included in the published account. (See Times and Seasons, Vol. 5, pp. 637, 638.)

So much then for this so-called prediction which is brought forward with so great a flourish of trumpets to form the basic thought of Mr. Roberts' great effort. Summarized, it amounts to this: (a) The statement if made is irrelevant and of no force. (b) It lacks evidence of complete fulfillment. (c) The evidence that such a statement was made is very questionable. If Mr. Roberts has not endeavored to make a mountain out of a molehill, who ever did? It was the custom then for these several factions to prophesy against each other, and if there was either evidence or argument in it, we could quote more remarkable predictions from Rigdon and others against the Brighamites. We have no inclination to defend either the claims or the acts of Rigdon and some others referred to by Mr. Roberts; but in the interest of common justice, and in behalf of historic truth, we feel called upon to notice some of Mr. Roberts' blunders and misrepresentations.

For the most of Mr. Roberts' assertions regarding Mr. Rigdon and what Joseph the Prophet said of him, he cites no authority, and for the remainder cites hearsay, or publications issued many years afterward. He quotes largely from the "History of Joseph Smith" as contained in the Millennial Star, volume 25. How came these events, transpiring after the death of Joseph Smith, to be made a part of his history? Who wrote them as such, and by what authority?

One of the most unkind things said of Mr. Rigdon by Mr. Roberts is the following:—

Moreover, it was known that he was in sympathy and even in communication with some of the avowed enemies of Joseph, among others with that arch traitor, John C. Bennett, who was plotting the overthrow of both Joseph and the church.—Roberts, page 2.

That Mr. Rigdon was suspected of this is true, but that he was known to be guilty, is very doubtful. On the contrary, he was exonerated. The supposed correspondence and conspiracy between him and Governor Carlin, John C. Bennett, and others, was fully investigated at the October conference of 1843; and at the conclusion of the examination, as the published minutes of the conference have it:—

President Joseph Smith arose and satisfactorily explained to the congregation the supposed treacherous correspondence with Ex-Governor Carlin, which wholly removed suspicion from Elder Sidney Rigdon, and from every other person.—Times and Seasons, Vol. 4, p. 330.

That Mr. Rigdon's conduct in some respects was blamable, we do not doubt; but how could Mr. Roberts assert that it was known that he was guilty of an offense of which the record says that suspicion was wholly removed from him to the satisfaction of the assembled church? Yet Mr. Roberts in his "Preface" explains the incentive that has prompted him in this work as follows:—

My desire to preserve from error those not acquainted with the order of the priesthood of God, and the facts of church history in the great dispensation of the last days, has been the incentive which prompted me to write it.

To misrepresent the facts of history is not the proper way to preserve from error those who are ignorant on the subject; and to falsely heap odium upon a man who is not here to defend himself, no matter what his failings may have been, is detestable. But it has been the policy of Brigham Young and his fellows, since 1844, to vilify, slander, and abuse every one who refused to indorse their measures. These tendencies to misrepresent the facts of history and to heap opprobrium upon opponents are painfully apparent in the work of Mr. Roberts now under consideration. We may have occasion to frequently invite attention to these tendencies, though we should not do so only in the interest of truth and justice.

After other reflections upon the character of Mr. Rigdon, Mr. Roberts introduces the meeting of August 8, 1844, which was called by Mr. Rigdon, but which, according to the record, was largely under the dictation of some members of the Quorum of Twelve with Brigham Young at their head. To the events of this meeting we wish to pay some attention, for it is important to know just what the church did in that critical emergency.

One peculiar feature of the meeting as reported by eyewitnesses needs close attention from the fact that Mr. Roberts and others have relied upon it as strong evidence that God had chosen Brigham Young to lead the people. It is asserted that on that occasion Brigham Young spoke with the voice of Joseph Smith and in personal appearance looked like him, which convinced the people that the mantle of Joseph had fallen upon him. Upon this point Mr. Roberts introduces three witnesses, as follows:—

George Q. Cannon, who was present on that occasion, says:—

If Joseph had risen from the dead and again spoken in their hearing, the effect could not have been more startling than it was to many present at that meeting; it was the voice of Joseph himself; and not only was it the voice of Joseph which was heard, but it seemed in the eyes of the people as if it were the very person of Joseph which stood before them. A more wonderful and miraculous event than was wrought that day in the presence of that congregation we never heard of.

In the journal of Elder Wm. C. Staines, of that date, the following statement is recorded:

Brigham Young said—"I will tell you who your leaders or guardians will be. The Twelve—I at their head!" This was with a voice like the voice of the prophet Joseph. I thought it was he, and so did thousands who heard it. This was very satisfactory to the people, and a vote was taken to sustain the Twelve in their office, which, with a few dissenting voices, was passed."

President Wilford Woodruff, describing the event, says:

When Brigham Young arose and commenced speaking, as has been said, if I had not seen him with my own eyes, there is no one that could have convinced me that it was not Joseph Smith; and anyone can testify to this who was acquainted with these two men.—Roberts, pp. 5-7.

Upon this but little comment is needed. If the testimony of the witnesses be true, it furnishes no evidence that God had chosen Brigham Young. In the history of God's dealings with men there is not found evidence that he causes one to change his individuality for that of another, or to imitate another so as to deceive his people into the belief that it is the one imitated. By the influence of his Spirit he enables men to develop and more fully equips them for usefulness in his service, but never causes them to deceive the people by appearing to be what they are not. Only hypocrites are guilty of this species of fraud. To make God the author of it is to make him a party to a hypocritical transaction of which no honest man would be guilty. Had God chosen Brigham Young he would have presented Brigham Young before the people clothed with authority and power to lead his people, but he would not have fraudulently passed him off as Joseph Smith. That instance if true would brand the movement as a deceptive one.

This kind of a trick was tried as early as the days of Moses. In a revelation given through Joseph Smith, in June, 1830, and now published in the Inspired Translation of the Scriptures, it is recorded:—

And now, when Moses had said these words, Satan cried with a loud voice, and went upon the earth, and commanded, saying, I am the Only Begotten, worship me.—Par. 12.

Paul gives us some light upon this sort of work. He says:—

For such are false apostles, deceitful workers, transforming themselves into the apostles of Christ. And no marvel; for Satan himself is transformed into an angel of light. Therefore it is no great thing if his ministers also be transformed as the ministers of righteousness; whose end shall be according to their works.—2 Cor. 11:13-15.

If the reader will carefully examine the above passages he will not be at a loss to determine by what power it is probable that Brigham Young could so transform himself that "it seemed in the eyes of the people as if it were the very person of Joseph which stood before them;" especially so when nothing of this nature can be found in the dealings of God. Mr. Young himself may have been deceived, but whether he was ignorant or conscious of the part he was playing, we cannot be ignorant in regard to the authorship of this deceptive transformation policy.

The counterpart of this transaction can be found in modern spiritualism, where a medium or a spirit assumes a familiar form and voice. This clew may enable us to account for some of the dark and mysterious things connected with the people who accepted, as from God, the peculiar phenomenon exhibited at Nauvoo on August 8, 1844. It was an opportune time for the spirit of darkness to step in, and was improved to the sorrow and disappointment of many. Oh, that he who had the influence to lead had possessed the discernment and strength of Moses to have said, "Depart hence, Satan!"

Just what did transpire at that important meeting it is very hard to determine, for the accounts are quite conflicting. It is quite clear that the meeting was called by Elder Sidney Rigdon for the purpose of presenting his claims, but it appears that Brigham Young took the active oversight of it, if he did not entirely monopolize it. By the account published at the time it does not appear that Elder Rigdon was permitted to address the meeting. Brigham Young "called the audience to order" and "arranged the several quorums." Prayer was offered by Elder Phelps. Elder Young then spoke, followed by Elders Lyman, Phelps, and Pratt; then Elder Young closed and during his remarks presented certain motions. Elder Rigdon is not mentioned as a participant except in his refusal to have his name presented to the assembly when the voting was had. See Times and Seasons, Vol. 5, pp. 637, 638. Yet Mr. Roberts states:—

The next day was the one appointed by Sidney Rigdon for the church to assemble and choose a "Guardian." The attendance was large, as intense interest had been awakened upon the subject to be considered. Sidney Rigdon addressed the assembly, setting forth his claim to the "Guardianship" of the church. He had full opportunity to present his case, and for an hour and a half spoke without interruption; but despite his reputation as an orator, he failed to convince the saints that he was sent of God.—Roberts, p. 5.

After this discussion the published account states: "Counsellor Rigdon refused to have his name voted for as a spokesman or guardian." In harmony with this Mr. Roberts explains in a footnote on page 10, as follows:—

The quorums had been arranged to vote separately and in their order, but when Elder Young put the question on accepting the Twelve to preside over the church, the question was put to all the quorums and the whole congregation at once. And since the vote to sustain the Twelve was unanimous, there was no need of putting the question on the acceptance of Sidney Rigdon either to the quorums or the people.—The facts in the text are quoted from the history of the prophet Joseph, Mill. Star, Vol. XXV., p. 264.

Yet Mr. Roberts makes President Woodruff to contradict this by quoting him as follows:—

Nearly all the quorum of the Twelve were on missions in the eastern States when the terrible tragedy at Carthage took place; and we did not hear of it for some time afterwards. We returned to Nauvoo. It has been repeated to you here tonight what was done in the conference in Nauvoo. I do not know whether there is anyone present here tonight but myself who was at that conference—there are but few living who were present on that occasion. Brigham stepped forth as a leader of Israel, as has been said here tonight by Brother Roberts, and Sidney Rigdon also tried to get the presidency; but when his name was put to a vote before the conference of the Latter-day Saints, and they were asked if they wanted him as their guardian, to guide them in the Celestial Kingdom, Brigham said: "All who do, raise your right hand," and I did not see a hand raised in his favor in that congregation.—Roberts, p. 119.

Now let us inquire what did that assembly vote for? It is important to know. The record as published in Times and Seasons gives it as follows: "'All in favor of supporting the Twelve in their calling, (every quorum, man and woman,) signify it by the uplifted hand;' and the vote was unanimous, no hand being raised in the negative." No wonder it was unanimous. No Latter Day Saint would refuse to support them in their calling. Very likely Elder Rigdon voted for that. In doing so no one was committed to the subsequent policy of the Twelve. But Mr. Roberts, on the authority of the Millennial Star published nearly twenty years later, gives the resolution as follows:—

"Do the Church want and is it their only desire to sustain the Twelve as the First Presidency of this people? . . . If the Church want the Twelve to stand as the head, the First Presidency of the Church, and at the head of this kingdom in all the world, stand next to Joseph, walk up into their calling, and hold the keys of this kingdom—every man, every woman, every quorum is now put in order, and you are now the sole controllers of it—all that are in favor of this in all the congregation of the Saints, manifest it by holding up the right hand. (There was a universal vote.) If there are any of the contrary mind—every man and every woman who does not want the Twelve to preside, lift up your hands in like manner. (No hands up.) This supersedes the other question, and trying it by quorums.—Roberts, pages 9, 10.

The reader I think will concede that the account published at the time is the more likely to be correct, and hence the church was not at that time committed to sustaining the Twelve as a First Presidency. If then Mr Rigdon did as Mr. Roberts states he did in the following quotation, the reason is quite clear:—

It may be interesting to the reader to know that Sidney Rigdon himself outwardly seemed to acquiesce in the decision of the church with regard to himself. The Sunday following the meeting above described he addressed the saints for a long time, "blessed them in the name of the Lord; telling them emphatically that he was with the Twelve. He wished to know the mind of the church in relation to his returning to Pittsburg, they said, "go in peace."—Roberts, page 12.

And if Elder William Marks and others, who afterwards opposed the Twelve, acquiesced at the time, it can be easily explained. But more of this resolution, its interpretation, and effects when we come to treat directly the claims of Brigham Young and his colleagues. We have followed Mr. Roberts in his comments regarding the movement under Rigdon, not because we have any sympathy with the claims of Elder Rigdon, but for the purpose of correcting certain misrepresentations because of the influence they might have upon the discussion of the question of Succession, which is the leading issue between us.

"PREACH THE WORD."

I CHARGE thee therefore before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom; preach the word; be instant in season, out of season; reprove, rebuke, exhort with all longsuffering and doctrine. For the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine; but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears; and they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables.—2 Timothy 4:1-4.

Although this instruction was given to a servant of God many centuries ago, I believe the advice is just as good for God's servants now as it ever was, and I am of the opinion that much injury is done the cause of Christ by zealous men reaching out too far and trying to exhibit skill in handling deep and controverted subjects. I have noticed that the most successful elders are those who keep Christ most prominently before the people. The great question is, "What shall I do to be saved?" and as Christ is the only Savior and his gospel the only means by which he has covenanted to save man, we are always safe in preaching Christ and his gospel. But when we wander off into the heads and horns and times and half times, we are only speculating, and the very best we can offer in this line is only guesswork, and the time and talent we use in this line of preaching could be much better spent in preaching "the word."

It is true we find an occasional one captivated by such preaching, but I believe as a rule they are few and unstable compared with those who are converted by the preaching of the word. And more especially is this true of introducing the gospel into new places. The people should be taught the principles of the gospel before we get into the deep and intricate subjects that some of us are wont to deal with. It is like feeding a babe on strong meat, or like teaching a young pupil the higher branches of mathematics before he understands the simple rules of multiplication or division.

Strong meat belongeth to them that are of full age, even those who by reason of use have their senses exercised to discern both good and evil.—Hebrews 5:14.

In my experience there is nothing that touches the heart and melts it into tenderness like the character, the love, and meekness of Jesus Christ.

I recollect attending a meeting many years ago and an intelligent German who was a seeker after truth attended. The elder took for his theme (which was his first effort in that place), "The mission of Joseph Smith." The discourse was a good one, I thought, and at the close of the meeting I asked my Teutonic friend how he liked it. His answer was, "They have borne my Lord away, and I know not where they have laid him."

I insisted on the seeker coming again in the evening that he might hear something that would do him good. He came, and the elder took for his subject, "The divine origin of the Book of Mormon." That was quite enough. The gentleman said he wanted to learn what to do to be saved.

I recollect on one occasion I had been preaching in a little town of Northern California and quite a little stir was caused among the people. The tenth night the subject was, "The mission of Joseph Smith," and it happened that that night some ladies who were the elite of the town came for the first time, and at the close of the meeting they opened a perfect cyclone of indignation, and told me if the Lord would forgive them for coming that night they would never be guilty of coming again. Perhaps if they had heard the previous sermons they would not have been so indignant. They seemed to think that we knew nothing but Joseph Smith and the Book of Mormon.

The wise man says there is a time to everything, and there are times when it is actually necessary to preach on the Book of Mormon and defend the mission of Joseph Smith, but I do not believe that that time is before the people have been taught the first principles of the gospel. But "preach the word" is always in season.

Some have taught that no person was eligible to membership in the Latter Day Saints Church who did not believe in Joseph Smith and the Book of Mormon. I was asked quite recently if this was the case and I answered most emphatically, "No! Believe in Jesus Christ and the gospel, and you shall be saved, is the doctrine of the church as I understand it."

I can point to more than one locality where the work has been killed and our influence for good has been destroyed by this unwise preaching of Joseph Smith and the Book of Mormon before the people learned that we had anything else to offer them.

About one year ago in company with Bishop Kelley I attended a meeting of the Christian ministry at Lebanon, Missouri, and when opportunity was offered our side to give a reason for our hope and Bro. Kelley took the stand and in a clear and masterly manner showed that our hope was in Jesus Christ and his gospel, the large audience was almost electrified, and listened with marked attention; and I am well convinced that his success was the result of his holding up Christ as the Savior of man; or, in other words, he preached "the word."

The next day some one put a question in the query box something like this: "Why is the Book of Mormon believed or placed on a par with the Bible?" (These are not the words, but I think the sentiment of the question.) Mr. McGarvey, the learned chairman, was courteous enough to invite Elder Kelley to the stand to answer the question, which he did in such a clear and forcible manner that I have no doubt many wished the question had never been asked. So I think we need not be in haste to delve into those subjects. God will give us plenty of opportunities to defend those things. Let us "preach the word."

We have often rebuked the spirit of man-worship that we have seen cropping out in the old church, and we should be wise and not subject ourselves to the same accusation.

Who then is Paul, and who is Apollos, but ministers by whom ye believed, even as the Lord gave to every man? I have planted, Apollos watered; but God gave the increase.—1 Cor. 3:5, 6.

Paul in his letter to the Romans says:—

The word is nigh thee, even in thy mouth, and in thy heart: that is, the word of faith, which we preach; that if thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved. For with the heart man believeth unto righteousness; and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation.—Romans 10: 8-10.

Another thing I think is by no means profitable in our work, and that is a fondness for debate. Many times ambitious young elders are so anxious to measure theological swords with somebody that they will challenge anybody to meet them, and sometimes I hear of zealous members offering to "furnish a man." Now it is perfectly proper for us to meet our opponents under proper conditions, yet I think it is in very bad taste for us to challenge every time anyone says something we do not believe, and I know of cases where some of our would-be valiant men have been ingloriously defeated, and of course the work has suffered in consequence. I have been approached of late with requests to hold debates here and there and all around, just because some one has agreed to "furnish a man," I want it distinctly understood that I am not subject to such calls, neither indeed will be. We cannot afford to accommodate every street theologian who is seeking notoriety by debating with them. We should "preach the word." There are times when debating is proper, but let those who are the accepted defenders of the faith decide when such times are, and judge whether any good is likely to accrue to the cause of Christ. I believe too much debating makes men arrogant and combative and to a certain degree deprives them of that meekness that should always be found in the followers of Jesus Christ.

It is true that some have been brought into the church by debates, but I believe as a rule that such are always wanting debates. If they are born of discussion they must be fed on discussion to be kept alive.

The gospel of Jesus Christ is aggressive enough, and if we contend earnestly for it we will have all the controversy we need without hunting men down and challenging them. It is quite a fad now to hunt up the Brighamite elders and be continually challenging them, although they tell us they are forbidden to debate with us. I believe it decidedly wrong to be hounding after them as long as they are going about their own business and not bothering us. They look upon this method as persecution, and so report it to headquarters, and it makes against our missionaries in the "salt land."

In the Herald for August 24 is a letter from Apostle J. W. Wight. You see that Elder Wight was favored with a good hearing. Elder B. H. Roberts had advised the people to treat Elder Wight kindly, for our people had treated him kindly in California. But I doubt not if the Californians had treated him as their elders are sometimes treated in other places, Elder Roberts would have given no such advice. But I do not wonder at California being ahead in all good works.

There is another practice that I think at least is a waste of time; that is picking away at other denominations and trying to expose and criticize their errors. I once heard a young elder spend a whole hour telling his congregation what this one and that one believed, and trying to show that such belief was not according to the Bible, and after his meeting was over an intelligent gentleman said, "Well, the young man has told us much of what other people believe. Why did he not tell us what he believes, if he believes anything?" O how much better it would have been for him to have preached the word. Elder J. R. Lambert said last spring in Lamoni that he heard a man say he had lived on the errors and wrongs of others until he was about starved to death. A man would never starve if he had plenty of the bread of life.

It is true that this picking and finding fault with other people suits some people, and they will go farther, perhaps, to hear a sermon of that kind than they would to hear a good gospel sermon. But the elder who panders to that disposition is only the cat's-paw for them, for he is doing only what they would do if they could, and if that class are brought into the church by such methods they bring the spirit of fight into the church with them, and in my judgment they make rather poor saints.

I have noticed in my travels of late, localities where once the preacher was greeted with large congregations, but now the benches are comparatively empty, and on inquiring into the cause I have been told that some elder killed the work by abusing other denominations.

I lately heard from good authority that an elder while mocking and mimicking a Methodist preacher actually fell out of the stand and made a most ridiculous exhibition of himself before a good congregation, and it completely killed the work in that locality. If the elder had preached "the word," no doubt he would have left an opening for his successor.

Another mistake, I think, is parading the beast with so many heads and horns, and figuring on the times and half times. I believe that if all that has been written and all the sermons that have been preached on that subject were gathered together it would make one of the most unique volumes ever printed, and would surpass all others in contradictions and far-fetched arguments, yet nearly all writers on those subjects start out with the statement that "the wise shall understand." I verily believe if God had intended that his ministry should use those things in defending the angel's message he would have disrobed them of so much ambiguity and doubt.

The other day I got a letter from a gentleman in Kentucky who is investigating our work, asking an explanation of Daniel; the 1,290 days; the 1,260 days; the horned beast; the sanctuary, etc., etc. I have answered this gentleman that I do not believe there is a man living who can explain Daniel without subjecting his work to severe criticism, and that our gospel is not dependent on an interpretation of Daniel. I have never read anything yet but what was founded on conjecture to a very great degree. There is no warrant for calling the "days" "years." This has to be assumed, and anyone reasoning from false premises will always reach false conclusions. Then "Let us preach the word,

And holy be beside;
Souls won to Christ
Full many a sin shall hide."—Hesperis.

BUSINESS INTERESTS OF IMPORTANCE TO THE SAINTS.

Once more we feel the necessity of placing before the readers of the Herald that the wants of the church are daily increasing and to meet all these wants it is necessary for us as a church to be fully organized and disciplined to meet these wants as they appear and supply them: and to do this it becomes every one to be actively alive to the interest of the work in all its departments, and each one to do their part that the work as a whole may move forward and occupy higher ground, as we as a church have been invited to come up higher. And when any part of the machinery fails to work the whole is hindered. The work that we are engaged in is increasing daily, and with the increase comes added responsibility to each department, and we are apt to get so interested in the part we are doing that we forget that we should keep in touch with all departments and ever lend a helping hand to the good of all. If we do not do this our interest is liable to grow selfish and others be hindered by reason of this.

REDUCED PRICES, CASH PAYMENTS, ETC.

As our special business is to look after the Publishing Department of this great work we are engaged in, we will present some things that should interest all. We have made a special effort to reduce the price of church publications that they might come within the reach of all. We desire to reduce the price still lower, but there are hindering causes that lie only in the hands of the members of the church, and we will try and show you some of them. First and most important is Prompt Cash Payment for all books and papers purchased at the Herald Office. Now if this is done, it enables us to purchase to better advantage and save three per cent a month on our stock, and enables us to keep up our credit before the world; and this is an important feature to a successful business of any kind. Now this is one of the features of our business that we are very much criticised upon, as no one likes to pay for anything before they get it. Now this may be all right in some places, but is it all right in the church where each member is a stockholder? And when asked for cash in advance it is merely furnishing your part of the stock to run the business. And, I don't know any business where you get your returns any quicker than in this.

Now as to the Herald being one dollar and fifty cents ($1.50) a year when paid in advance and two dollars ($2.00) if not paid until the end of the year: If we can save three per cent a month by reason of having the money to do it, it is easy to see that $1.50 is worth more to the Herald Office in advance than $2.00 would be at the end of the year, when we have to borrow money at six and seven per cent to carry the stockholders from year to year. We would request each subscriber of the Herald to examine the label on your next Herald and see how much of the unpaid capital stock you have failed to put up, and send it in at once, and unload your responsibility, and see how much better you will feel. There are yet over twenty thousand dollars due the office on old subscriptions. If each one will pay his or her part it will soon put the office in such shape that we will be able to further reduce the price of our publications and procure such machinery as will enable us to produce the papers and tracts at a much less cost than we are able to do at present, by reason of not having the means to purchase modern machinery, which we are badly in need of. Those therefore who have subscribed for the Herald at $1.50 will be charged at the rate of $2.00 if subscriptions are not paid by the end of the year.

HERALD OFFICE BRANCH AGENTS.

Book agents. The branches can help the office considerably by complying more generally with our former request, and appointing a good reliable party, either brother or sister, as agent for the branch, through whom they should order all church publications, both papers and books, also Sunday school supplies. It would lessen our labor here very much and the church would be at far less expense by reason of the many bills and statements we are compelled to send out. For instance, at one time this last year we sent out about two thousand bills and received returns on about fifty. The balance are yet to be heard from, and I am now engaged in sending out about fifty bills a day. And, this is quite an expense to the church, and in my judgment an unnecessary expense.

CHURCH AND NON-CHURCH PUBLICATIONS.

One other thing I find it necessary to mention: In some of our mission fields the Herald Publishing House is almost unknown and unheard of, and lately I received a letter from a brother who had been in the church for three years and did not know that he could buy a Book of Mormon, and did not know there was such a book as the Doctrine and Covenants, and the only way he found out was in his search for Sunday school supplies advertised by the Herald Office. He said in his letter that the missionaries there were very zealous of Sunday school work (and we commend that) and they had looked all over their supposed church paper—the Ensign—that they had been taking for years, and could find no such papers nor books advertised, and they never heard of any other paper except Zion's Ensign, and supposed the Ensign was published by the Church. And some of our late missionaries that have gone out to represent this latter-day work find in some missions the Ensign in almost every home, and for weeks at a time cannot find a Saints' Herald, but do find saints almost ignorant in regard to the church books and papers. The Saints' Herald is published in the interests of the church and is the official publication of the church and as such should be read by all the membership of the church. Zion's Ensign is a private enterprise, the profits from which go into private hands. The Ensign does not and is not authorized to represent the church in any way. Now some one is responsible for this condition of neglect to push the interests of church publications, and must have neglected at least a part of his duty, and by reason of this the church suffers. If the word of the Lord is worth anything to us as a people, and we believe it is the all-important feature of this grand work, we should heed the admonition to return to the books even the new covenant and make them the word of our counsel, and the saints must have and read church books in order to do so.

Now we believe that this condition of things can be improved upon by a little work on the part of those that go out to represent this work, and that the people of the church should be rightly educated concerning these things. It can only be done by placing before them the books and papers published by the church, and they are issued at a price that comes within the reach of all, and this we are constantly laboring hard to do, and we ask the assistance of all to unitedly help the work along. We have now a little less than 5,000 subscribers to the Herald and the number should be from 9,000 to 10,000 paying subscribers besides those who get it free by reason of their laboring continually for the church. We believe that with a little effort on the part of each member the subscriptions could be raised to that number. We believe that almost every one now taking the Herald could with a little effort get one new subscriber before Christmas, who would take it and pay one dollar and fifty cents in advance, and by so doing help the church as well as help educate themselves to occupy higher ground and be better able to defend the work we have espoused.

TRACTS AND TRACT FUNDS.

Much has been said about tracts and the great work they are doing in the missionary field. This is testified to by all the laborers in the field. We quote you a statement in a letter from Bro. F. G. Pitt, missionary in England, which you will find published in the Herald of October 12 which all may profit by reading. The statement is as follows: "Of course we cannot say how many will join the church, but I do know that every night numbers bear testimony to the truth of what is told them. Some have said it is just what they have been looking for for years. But, in this work we need lots of literature; we need tracts by the thousand. We gather up all the Herolds and Ensigns and tracts we can find, and then we do not have half enough. We even give them the children's paper, the Hope."

Now when we can find such zealous workers as this we should be very willing to throw in our part to supply them with the tracts they need. We have sent out upwards of three hundred thousand (300,000) tracts since last General Conference, and that is but a mite of what it ought to have been if a better and more united effort was made to do so. It costs considerable money to do all this, and some one has to put up the cash. Neither the church nor Herald Publishing House is able to do so without the aid of the members. About one year ago we appealed to the members through the Herald for the tract fund and received about eight dollars, returns not enough to pay postage for a couple of days. But the saints in Canada, by reason of that appeal, started a fund in each district, called a tract and missionary-supply fund, in which they took up a penny collection once a month, and out of that fund they supply their missionaries with Baptismal Certificate books, and tracts; and they are distributing more tracts to the square mile in their field than any other missionary field in the church, and that too from a fund that would not otherwise reach the church treasury.

AMOUNTS DUE US.

Now the office is in need of funds to meet its engagements, and we as a church should all be interested in keeping up the credit of our Church Publishing House. And we can do so by meeting our obligations to the office for books and papers, and as it is near the close of the year let each one see to it that his account is closed up by the first of the year. The year just closing has been prosperous in many respects, and we should see that we assist to make the work of the Lord prosperous as far as lies in our power to do. We as a people should understand that the Lord's business must be done on business principles, so we appeal to all the faithful to step forward and come to our relief and help us make a success of the publishing house.

Address all orders for books, tracts, and general publications, also all remittances to the undersigned.

Yours for success,

FRANK CRILEY,

Business Manager of Publishing Department, Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints.

Written and compiled by President Joseph Smith and Apostle Heman C. Smith. Invaluable as a correct historical narrative, as a means of conversion to truth, and as a defensive weapon in meeting old and new objections urged against the latter-day work. It contains important documents connected with the establishment, growth, and internal and external affairs and progress of the church. The revelations given in this dispensation are inserted, in connection with accounts of the circumstances under which they were given. Biographical sketches, illustrations, complete indexes, sidenotes for ready reference, etc., are some of the features of the work. Volume 1 begins with the birth of Joseph Smith, the Prophet and Seer, in 1805, and narrates the circumstances of his calling and ministry, the rise of the church in 1830, and until the close of the year 1835. Volume 2 continues the history up to June 27, 1844, —to the assassination of Joseph and Hyrum Smith.

"PROMULGATING HERESIES."

THE following, a partial report of "the Rocky Mountain Baptist Association's" session, which was held in Capital Hill Baptist church, is taken from the Rocky Mountain News, of Denver, Colorado, issue for October 13, 1898. It shows something of the general drift of religious opinions:—

The afternoon session was opened with prayer and Bible reading by Rev. A. B. Carson. Dr. Vosburgh delivered an address and was followed by Rev. W. E. De Claybrook, the colored divine, whose discourse was scholarly. All this, and more, had moved along in the little church of Galilee without attracting especial note. Yet that something was in the wind which could not have failed detection from a blind man. Faces were flushed unusually so for men of God, whisperings were going on in all parts where champions of the expected battle had taken their stations of vantage. At 4:30 p. m. it came.

No sooner had smoke of the first gun died away than members were bobbing up from all parts of the house interposing objections or demanding the passage of a certain point. The speaker pounded away on the table with his clenched fist, but the preachers persisted in their entreaties to be heard. One man said: "It is too good an opportunity to miss a scrap; let's have it out." Another said: "You would advocate doctrines that have been dropped by the common people for fifty years, and it is time they were being dropped by the churches." The following resolution signed by Rev. David Reddick, Rev. Joshua Gravett, Rev. T. L. Steele, committee on resolutions, had been offered and caused all the trouble:—

PROMULGATING HERESIES.

We beg to deplore the fact that some of our preachers are departing from the true faith and that they are maintaining doctrines and heresies as follows:

THAT THE DEATH OF CHRIST IS NOT ESSENTIAL TO SALVATION.

THAT THE WORK OF THE HOLY SPIRIT IN REGENERATION IS NOT ESSENTIAL TO SALVATION.

THAT REPENTANCE AFTER DEATH IS POSSIBLE AND THAT ALL MANKIND WILL BE SAVED.

We recommend to the support of the Lord the work of the Anti-saloon league, to which Rev. Mr. Heisler, the efficient state and city superintendent, is devoting his efforts.

No sooner had the resolution been read by Rev. David Reddick than motions for its adoption, its rejection, its tabling, came from all parts of the little sanctuary like a shower of Mauser bullets. It was difficult to tell just where individual members stood upon the report. A match would have set them all off like a flame and then their position might have been better defined. As it was each seemed determined to stand by his convictions to the bitter end if possible. Order was finally restored and a motion to refer the resolution back to the committee with instructions to be more specific in their charges of heresy as well as of those guilty of preaching it, prevailed.

Even then it was with difficulty that the gentlemen of the cloth were restrained from waging war upon the originators of the fossil ideas set forth in the document. Rev. Mr. Reddick thought the resolution should be adopted without any specific charges, and said something about dissatisfaction coming only from those that were hit. No sooner had he uttered the words than the Rev. C. W. Williams sprang to his feet and gave utterance to the words quoted above.

The moderator then announced that he hoped the discussion would not "provoke" any personalities, and said he would cut the Gordian knot by deciding that the resolution had been sent back to the committee and that all discussion upon it was ended.

After adjournment the members assembled in little groups both in the building and outside, and discussed what attitude they would take when the resolution again comes up. Those opposed to its adoption were eager for the fray, and some lively times will be had when it is again presented.

The First Baptist church of Louisville, Colorado, was admitted into the conference and the right hand of fellowship extended its delegates by the moderator. Committee on enrollment reported 129 delegates.

The committee on state of religion reported, rejoicing in the progress made in church work during the past year, stating that such progress gives evidence of the fact "That there are many Christians whose hearts are wrapped up in the work: that there has been substantial growth in many individual hearts; that the Spirit of God is with our methods of work, that the report shows certain elements of weakness: selfishness in our appreciation of the motives of the church, and lagging finances."

BISHOPS LOSE POWER.

WORK OF EPISCOPAL COUNCIL.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Oct. 25.—The triennial convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church, which terminated this evening, has been notable in many respects and particularly for the development of a democratic sentiment and tendency in a denomination which has been patronized by the wealth and aristocracy of the country more than any other.

The high church, or ritualistic element, was not nearly so strong in Washington as in the convention of 1895 in Milwaukee, and whatever changes have been made in the canons have been directed toward congregational government rather than extending the powers of the house of bishops. It is asserted that whenever a test was made the bishops always backed down in favor of the house of deputies.

The deputies developed a decided disposition to direct the affairs of the church as soon as the convention assembled, and while they have treated the bishops with proper respect and deference they have nevertheless asserted their rights with a determination that has never before been shown.

While the convention has been notable for what it has not done, it has taken action upon several important topics. The proposition to change the name to "the American church," which has been urged by the ritualistic element, was killed by ridicule and a good deal of humor directed against the exclusive and aristocratic element in the convention. The proposition to elect a primate was received with no greater favor, although it led to a modification of the constitution, so as to provide for an important change in the internal structure of the church by permitting the consolidation of several dioceses into a province under the head of a senior bishop. These provinces will correspond to the archdioceses of Great Britain, and the senior bishop of a province will occupy a position analogous to that of an archbishop in the Episcopal and Catholic Church.

The purpose of this provincial system is to promote the efficiency of church government by the establishment of a higher system of ecclesiastical courts. At present diocesan courts are supreme and are constantly rendering judgments that conflict in identical cases. The new amendment to the constitution proposes a provincial court with powers to review and a final court of appeals on questions of doctrine, faith, and worship. The new judicial system is very much like that of the United States.

The efforts of certain Anglomaniacs to promote closer relations with the Church of England were not treated seriously.

The convention made a new depart-ture and a very important one in extending the protecting arm of the church over independent congregations, which, while not entirely orthodox, are willing to accept the spiritual oversight of an Episcopal bishop. This action was intended to meet several specific cases, but the amendment of the constitution was made broad enough to cover all religious congregations that are attracted to the creed and form of worship with the hope that they may gradually accept the tenets which they now respect and ultimately unite with the episcopal denomination. This is called "the church unity amendment," and some of its advocates are so sanguine as to consider it the first step toward the union of all protestant denominations.

Some years ago, after a long struggle, the episcopal church asserted its right to establish missions in Roman Catholic countries; a bishop for Brazil and another for Mexico were appointed, and now the work is to be extended in Cuba and Puerto Rico. In taking this action to convert Roman Catholics to Protestantism, the Episcopal Church separates itself entirely from the mother church and unites with other Protestant denominations.

The proposed canon on marriage and divorce, which has been so earnestly advocated, was loaded down with so many amendments as to defeat its purpose, and was recommended for report at the next convention. The bishops were disposed to accept the proposition as reported from the committee, which has been considering the subject for the last three years, but the laymen and many of the clergy in the house of deputies were not willing to deny the right of marriage to innocent parties who had secured divorces on scriptural grounds. —Special Dispatch to Chicago Record.

MANUAL TRAINING'S TEACHINGS.

"Manual training teaches no specific trades, but aims to give a knowledge of the principles underlying all trades," explains a writer in the November Ladies' Home Journal. "Literally, it means hand training. It teaches the young men the principles and practice of carpentry, pattern making, wood carving, blacksmithing, vise work, and machine construction, and it does it more thoroughly and in far less time than it is possible to do it in the manufactories themselves. The models are not finished articles, but are simply practice pieces intended to embody general principles in both wood and metal working.

"I am led to believe that manual training, by enlarging a boy's interests and outlook, not only helps him more surely to find his right vocation, but also tends to make that vocation one of nobleness and worth. And not only are these young fellows occupied, but they are also successful. As students, teachers, journalists, architects, engineers, electricians, draughtsmen, physicians, and lawyers they are steadily making their way to the front, which is encouraging to those of us who believe in learning by doing."

RELIGIOUS DIVISIONS IN EUROPE.

There has been no religious census in France since 1872. All religions are equal before the law, and the Roman Catholics, Protestants, and Jews have allowances from the public treasury in proportion to their numbers as follows: Roman Catholics, 41,126,923, francs; Protestant, 1,495,100 francs; Jews, 206,530 francs. According to the latest census of Russia, the religious division in 1892 was as follows: Orthodox Greek Catholics, 73,000,000; United Church and Armenians, 55,000; Roman Catholics, 8,300,000; Protestants, 2,950,000; Jews, 3,000,000; Mohammedans, 2,600,000; Pagans, 26,000.

The leading features of the American Monthly Review of Reviews for November are: the editorial comment on the State and Congressional campaigns (illustrated); an illustrated account of the work of the "Y. M. C. A." in connection with the army and navy during the war with Spain, by Albert Shaw; an article on "The Newspaper Correspondents in the War," with numerous portraits; Mr. Creelman's own story of his Santiago adventures; "Ouida's" "Impeachment of Modern Italy," with Signor Vecchia's reply; "The Nicaragua Canal in the Light of Present Politics," by Prof. L. M. Keasbey; and "The Nicaragua Canal and Our Commercial Interests," by Dr. Emory R. Johnson.

If a child in Switzerland does not attend school on a particular day the parent gets a notice from the public authority that he is fined so many francs; the second day the fine is increased, and by the third day the amount becomes a serious one. In case of sickness the pupil is excused, but if there be any suspicion of shaming a doctor is sent. If the suspicion proves to be well founded the parent is required to pay the cost of the doctor's visit.—Ex.

The doctrine of eternal punishment is discussed in this week's Congregationalist, and the editor states that "the more logical method is that of deciding the question independently of Christ's teaching about it, and thus showing that if he was as well informed concerning the future world as intelligent men now are, he could not have taught that future punishment is eternal. This method appears to be growing in favor. We think it is the most convincing form of argument yet advanced against a doom which many Christians cannot bring themselves to believe has been or ever will be authoritatively pronounced against anyone."

POLYGAMY STILL PRACTICED IN UTAH.

WHEN in Utah we were convinced by certain indications that polygamy was being practiced. We could not determine that plural marriages were being performed. That would be a difficult thing to do if it were so, as all such rites are performed in the Temple, to which the public does not have access; but that some of those having plural wives when the manifesto was issued were still living with them as wives, was plainly apparent. However, this was vehemently denied, and we were severely censured for doubting their good faith. That they intended that the United States Government and the public should understand that they had entirely abandoned this practice is evident from the following sworn statements reproduced in the Semi-Weekly Salt Lake Tribune of October 14, 1898:—

WHAT THE CHURCH LEADERS PROMISED.

THEY STATE, UNDER OATH, THAT THE MANIFESTO WAS MEANT TO STOP UNLAWFUL COHABITATION AS WELL AS POLYGAMOUS MARRIAGES.

After the seizure by the United States Government of the real estate and personal property belonging to the Mormon church in 1891, Judge C. F. Loofbourov of this city was appointed Master in Chancery by the Supreme Court of the Territory to take testimony and report as to the most advantageous disposition of the money then in the hands of Receiver Henry W. Lawrence. At the hearing, which was held before Master Loofbourov on October 19 and 20, 1891, a number of prominent church officials testified with respect to the sources from which the fund had been derived, as well as the disposition which had theretofore been made of it. Among the witnesses who testified at this hearing were Presidents Wilford Woodruff, George Q. Cannon and Joseph F. Smith, Apostles Lorenzo Snow and A. H. Lund and others. During the examination Presidents Woodruff, Cannon and Smith, and Apostles

Snow and Lund were subjected to a searching cross-examination by United States Attorney C. S. Varian, with respect to the exact meaning of President Woodruff's manifesto suspending polygamy, and particularly with respect to whether or not the manifesto referred to polygamous relations already formed, with the same force that it referred to and controlled the entering into of polygamous relations thereafter.

As the witnesses were all under oath, and the examination was a most thorough one, the following extracts from the testimony as given by the gentlemen at that time, upon the scope of the manifesto and its real meaning, will be read with interest. The manifesto was issued the year before.

The Government was represented upon the hearing by United States Attorney Varian and Joseph L. Rawlins; the Receiver by John A. Marshall and the church by Franklin S. Richards, W. H. Dickson, and Le Grand Young.

PRESIDENT WOODRUFF'S TESTIMONY.

By C. S. Varian—Q. Did you intend to confine this declaration (the manifesto) solely to the forming of new relations by entering into new marriages? A. I don't know that I understand the question.

Q. Did you intend to confine your declaration and advice to the church solely to the question of forming new marriages, without reference to those that were existing—plural marriages? A. The intention of the proclamation was to obey the law myself—all laws of the land, on that subject, and expecting the church would do the same.

Q. Let me read the language, and you will understand me perhaps better: "Inasmuch as laws have been enacted by Congress forbidding plural marriages, I hereby declare," etc.; did you intend by that general statement of intention to make the application to existing conditions where the plural marriages already existed? A. Yes, sir.

Q. As to living in the state of plural marriage? A. Yes, sir; that is, to the obeying of the law.

Q. In the concluding portion of your statement you say: "I now publicly declare that my advice to the Latter-day Saints is to refrain from contracting any marriage forbidden by the law of the land." Do you understand that that language was to be expanded and to include the further statement of living or associating in plural marriage by those already in the status? A. Yes, sir; I intended the proclamation to cover the ground—to keep the laws—to obey the law myself and expected the people to obey the law.

(By Dickson, of Counsel for the Church)—

Q. Your attention was called to the fact that nothing was said in that manifesto about the dissolution of existing polygamous relations. I want to ask you, President Woodruff, whether in your advice to the church officials, and the people of the church, you have advised them that your intention was, and that the requirement of the church was, that the polygamous relations already formed before that should not be continued; that is, there should be no association with plural wives; in other words, that unlawful cohabitation as it is named and spoken of should also stop, as well as future polygamous marriages? A. Yes, sir, that has been the intention.

Q. And that has been your views and explanation of it? A. Yes, sir, that has been my view.

APOSTLE (NOW PRESIDENT) LORENZO SNOW'S TESTIMONY.

Q. Do you believe that the association in plural marriage by those who are already in it is forbidden by this manifesto? A. Well, I cannot say what was in the mind of President Woodruff when he issued that manifesto touching that matter, but I believe from the general scope of the manifesto that it certainly embraced the plural marriage, because it is clearly an intention, as indicated in that manifesto of President Woodruff, that the law should be observed touching matters in relation to plural marriage.

Q. You mean now the law of the land? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you understand now that the manifesto conveys that prohibition—the prohibition against the association in plural marriage between those who have already entered into it at the time the manifesto was given as well as a prohibition against the contracting of future plural marriage relations? A. Well, I do; I thought I had explained that; perhaps I might be unhappy in my expression, but, as I said, the intention and scope of that manifesto was expressing President Woodruff's mind, in regard to himself and every member of the church, and that was, that the law should be observed in all matters concerning plural marriage, embracing the present condition of those that had previously entered into marriage. Is that a plain answer?

APOSTLE LUND'S EVIDENCE.

Q. How is it as to the people who have already formed those relations; is it right for them to continue to associate in plural marriage with their wives? A. The manifesto does not expressly state it, but the president of the church has said it was not.

Q. Was that the first time you understand that it was included? A. I understood his advice for the church from the presidency was to obey the law of the land.

PRESIDENT JOSEPH F. SMITH'S TESTIMONY.

Franklin S. Richards—Do you understand that the manifesto applies to cohabitation of men and women in plural marriage where it had already existed? A. I cannot say whether it does or not.

Q. It does not in terms say so, does it? A. No. I think, however, the effect of it is so; I don't see how the effect of it can be otherwise.

We thought then that the fruits of the practice would not permit them to conceal the true status of things always, and we were not deceived. Not only is it conceded, but the practice is now defended as we shall show.

The following extract from President Snow's statement as published in HERALD for September 21, current volume, plainly indicates that polygamous relations did continue after the manifesto was issued and accepted; and he brands anyone who expected them to cease as being unreasonable:—

It will not be expected by any reasonable persons that the plural family relations existing when polygamous marriages ceased by action of law and the inhibition of the church would be at once abolished.

Now comes the Semi-Weekly Enquirer of October 14, 1898, published at Provo, Utah, and owned and controlled by a company composed of members of the Utah Church, in which John Henry Smith, of the Twelve, is prominent, and says editorially:—

The old issues of Utah are again up for discussion this campaign, however much the majority of the citizens would like to see them left out of politics entirely. With their discussion, comes, of course, class alignment, to a great extent, as in the old days. This is very much to be regretted, but if the non-Mormons, through their churches and their leading organ, insist on bringing the old issues to the front, the Mormons will have to meet them on their own ground.

So far as polygamy is concerned, the pledge of the Latter Day Saints, in their manifesto and in the petition for amnesty, has been fully and faithfully kept. There has been an entire suspension of polygamous marriages. That was as far as the church could go, for it could not dissolve the marriages that had already been contracted, before it was believed that there was any civil law against the practice, and while the revelation on plural marriage was still in force. The advice of the church was and has always been for those who had entered polygamy to take care of their families. Should its advice have been otherwise, it could not have been heeded, for a greater power than the church tried for years in Utah to break up the family relationships that had been contracted contrary to law, and failed. Men were sent to the Penitentiary by the scores, some time and again, and yet they would not violate their sacred pledges to their plural wives.

After all that hardship, they are now to be put to the test in politics, it seems, and if they are living with their plural wives, and respecting them as wives, they are to be denounced as men unworthy of civil trust through the suffrage of the people. They may be citizens of the highest type, outside of this peculiar offending, and be men whom the people respect, but if they are named for civil office, they must be denounced. To us it seems very unfair, and an agitation along lines of that kind will only result in much bitterness, and will not relieve the situation in the least.

There is not another of the social problems of this country that is solving itself so thoroughly and rapidly as the polygamy question of this State. When another generation shall have passed away, with the manifesto as completely observed as at present, the polygamy question will have solved itself. Could only as much be said of the negro question in the South, for instance, what a happy future would be before that section of our country. Another decade, and a child born in polygamy in Utah, by the parents who entered it with the sanction of their church, would be rare, indeed. Those who intend to make Utah their home would willingly abide what wrongs may come from the system so diffused in Utah than the wrongs of the old strife. But it may be that opponents of polygamy will persist in keeping the issue to the front, and thus make prominent to their own injury, as well as to the injury of the State, political questions that had better be dead.

When polygamists of Utah accepted amnesty at the hands of the government they should have accepted in good faith the provisions and conditions attached, and as they were not granted pardon except upon conditions of their keeping the law, they should cheerfully abide the conditions of disfranchisement they were in before the amnesty was granted until they fully comply with the conditions so specifically stated. It is unreasonable to expect to reap the full benefit of the pardon now if it takes a decade to comply.

At the risk of being thought too lengthy we will here insert the two Amnesty Proclamations, that our readers may see that they do not apply to those now living in polygamy, hence such are still unpardoned criminals, and subject to prosecution. We quote them as published in Salt Lake Tribune, of October 14, 1898:—

PRESIDENT HARRISON'S PROCLAMATION.

Washington, D. C., Jan. 4, 1893.

Whereas, Congress, by a statute approved March 22, 1882, and by statutes in furtherance and amendment thereto, defined the crimes of bigamy, polygamy and unlawful cohabitation in the Territories and other places within the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States and prescribed penalty for such crimes, and whereas, on or about the 6th day of October, 1890, the Church of Latter-day Saints, commonly known as the "Mormon Church," through its president, issued a manifesto proclaiming the purposes of said church no longer to sanction the practice of polygamous marriages and calling upon all members and adherents of said church to obey the laws of the United States in reference to said subject matter; and whereas, it is represented that since the date of said declaration the members and adherents of said church generally obeyed said laws and abstained from plural marriages and polygamous cohabitation; and whereas, by a petition dated December 19, 1891, the officials of said church, pledging the membership thereof to the faithful obedience of the laws against plural marriages and unlawful cohabitation, applied to me to grant amnesty for past offenses against said laws, which request a very large number of influential non-Mormons, resident of Territories, also strongly urged, and whereas, the Utah Commissioners in their report bearing date of September 15, 1892, recommended that said petition be granted, and said amnesty proclaimed under the proper conditions as to the future observance of the law with a view to the encouragement of those now disposed to become law-abiding citizens; and whereas, during the past two years such amnesty has been granted individual applicants in a very large number of cases, conditioned upon THE FAITHFUL OBSERVANCE OF THE LAWS OF THE UNITED STATES AGAINST UNLAWFUL COHABITATION, and there are now pending many more such applications; now, therefore, I, Benjamin Harrison, President of the United States, by virtue of the powers in me vested, do hereby declare and grant full amnesty and pardon to all persons liable to the penalties of said act, by reason of unlawful cohabitation under the color of polygamous or plural marriage, who since November 1, 1890, HAVE ABSTAINED FROM SUCH UNLAWFUL COHABITATION, but upon the express condition that they shall in future faithfully obey the laws of the United States, hereinbefore named, and not otherwise. Those who shall fail to avail themselves of the clemency hereby offered will be vigorously prosecuted. BENJAMIN HARRISON.

By the President:

JOHN W. FOSTER, Secretary of State.

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND'S PROCLAMATION.

On September 25, 1894, President Cleveland issued the following proclamation:

Whereas, Congress, by a statute approved March 22, 1882, and by statutes in furtherance and amendment thereof, defined the crimes of bigamy, polygamy, and unlawful cohabitation in the Territories and other places within the exclusive jurisdiction of the the United States and prescribed the penalty for such crimes, and

Whereas, on or about the 6th day of October, 1890, the Church of the Latter-day Saints, commonly known as the Mormon Church, through its president, issued a manifesto proclaiming the purposes of said church no longer to sanction the practice of polygamous marriages, and calling upon all members and adherents of said church to obey said laws of the United States in reference to said subject matter; and

Whereas, on the 4th day of January, A. D., 1893, Benjamin Harrison, then President of the United States, did declare and grant full pardon and amnesty to certain offenders under said acts upon condition of future obedience to their requirements, as is fully set forth in said proclamation of amnesty and pardon, and

Whereas, upon the evidence now furnished me I am satisfied the members and adherents of said church generally abstain from plural marriages and polygamous cohabitation and are now living in obedience to the laws, and the time has now arrived when the interests of public justice and morality will be promoted by the granting of amnesty and pardon to all such offenders as complied with the condition of said proclamation including such of said offenders as have been convicted under the provisions of said act;

Now, therefore, I, Grover Cleveland, President of the United States, by virtue of the powers in me vested, do hereby declare and grant a full amnesty and pardon to all persons who have in violation of said acts committed either of the offenses of polygamy, adultery, or unlawful cohabitation, under the color of polygamous or plural marriage, or who, having been convicted of violation of said act, are now suffering deprivation of civil rights, in consequence of the same, excepting such persons as have not complied with the conditions contained in said executive proclamation of January 4, 1893.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

By the President:

WALTER Q. GRESHAM,
Secretary of State.

It may be interesting in this connection to know that at the late conference in Salt Lake City, Ruder Clawson was chosen an apostle of the Quorum of Twelve to fill a vacancy occasioned by the promotion of Lorenzo Snow to the First Presidency. Mr. Clawson was the first person arrested and convicted of "polygamy and unlawful cohabitation" under the provisions of the Edmund's act. At the time of his selection as an apostle he is reported to have referred to that experience as follows: "I have been placed behind prison bars for the testimony of Jesus, and that was a very trying situation." (Salt Lake Tribune, Oct. 11, 1898.) It seems then that in the opinion of this new-made apostle polygamy and unlawful cohabitation are the testimony of Jesus. It begins to look like the Utah people were determined to carry out the sentiment of Elder F. D. Richards, editorially expressed in March, 1855, as follows:—

WHAT SHALL BE DONE WITH UTAH?—
Shall Polygamy be tolerated in Utah? This question is daily assuming importance in the halls of the United States Congress. It being a matter with which its members have no right to interfere, the more they meddle with it, the more huge they will find its dimensions.—Millennial Star, Vol. 17, p. 169.

It remains to be seen whether the civil authorities will submit to such trifling, or whether they will execute the warning of President Harrison; viz.: "Those who shall fail to avail themselves of the clemency hereby offered will be vigorously prosecuted."

ONE of the causes for a weakness in the receipts to the church treasury is to be discovered in the fact that quite a number of the churches or meeting-houses, have been in process of building during the past two years; and as a consequence saints in those places where they have been laboring and striving to build such houses of worship have used the moneys they could spare in that direction, which must have shortened to some considerable extent the amounts paid from there into the church fund.

The Bishop's reports show an accounting for all moneys received by him, and the auditing committees have certified that they found accounts to be correct.

A careful examination will show that no moneys were paid by the Bishop to the college fund, or the expenses incurred by the committee; hence the reports and the auditing committee's certificate corroborate the Bishop's statement made last spring at Independence that he had not used a dollar of the tithing fund for the college.

Those who have been thinking and suggesting that the Bishop has been so using the tithing ought to be willing to credit the honesty of the auditing committee and exonerate the Bishop from suspicion.

Please turn to the reports of 1897 and 1898 and examine them.

THAT POND.

IN the prosecution of building the Home at Lamoni, and the improvement of the farm lands attached to it, it was found needful to provide water for farm and stock purposes. To do this it was decided to make a pond. Several of the brethren donated labor with teams and scrapers, and some others were hired. This help, with the labor of the teams belonging to the Home, made the pond at an outlay of some $50.37, in money; which competent judges will say was by no means an extravagant outlay for the benefit gained. Those who may have been told that the said pond cost $400 to $500, please take notice.

The donated labor is estimated at $25.00, which gives a total of $75.37 as the cost of the pond. The money was paid from the Home fund, and not from the general tithing fund. See items in published report.

THE WORK AT MONDAMIN.

THE following extract from a letter from Elder A. M. Fyrando, president of Little Sioux district, to Elder J. R. Lambert, is very significant when we consider that Mondamin is the place of the late discussion between Elder T. W. Williams on our behalf, and Elder D. H. Bays:—

I thought to send you a word respecting Mondamin, as you might wish to know. Some time ago the saints purchased the school building, fitted it up nicely, costing in all with lot about five hundred dollars. They also have new organ all paid but about seventeen dollars, and that in sight. The Christians imported a fifteen dollar a week preacher for a month's meeting. After two weeks, he left, without a convert, and told the members they were "a funny lot," and like "bumps on a log," because he could not enthuse them in social service. All our preaching in the new church has been well attended. Last night church filled. Yesterday three adults were baptized; Samuel Johnson and wife and Sylvia Johnson, all highly-respected, old settlers. We believe God is aiding in Mondamin and elsewhere.

This is especially significant just at this juncture, as Elder Bays has been boasting of late that we dare not repeat the Mondamin debate elsewhere. If the philosophy is true that the same cause produces the same effect, we can afford to repeat surely.

THE Literary Digest for October 1, 1898, contains a description of "an ethical Sunday school" now in operation in St. Louis, from which we make an extract:—

A Sunday school that does not mention religion to the children until they are about to be graduated from the school, that defers its teaching of the idea of God until the children are fifteen or sixteen, and that introduces the subject then by a discussion of Santa Claus, Queen Mab, in "A Midsummer Night's Dream," and other like characters, must have the attraction of novelty to most Sunday school workers. Such a school is in actual operation in St. Louis, in connection with the Ethical Society of that city. Mr. W. L. Sheldon, the lecturer of the society, outlines, in the September and October numbers of Ethical Addresses, the school's plan of work. The foundation of the school is a short "catechism" or responsive exercise. . . .

The "Life of Jesus" is introduced to the mind of the scholar when he reaches the age of eleven or twelve. The supernatural side of the life of Jesus is "left for the mature mind to grapple with." The "miracle side" is passed over or omitted. "We tell it," says Mr. Sheldon, "as a life, a beautiful and noble life."

We shall try to publish a fuller account of this ethical Sunday school, later. We venture to inquire, Would the teachings of the spiritual side lessen the force of the ethical teachings of Jesus? We note, also, that in this so-called ethical school the "Path of Virtue" of the Buddhists, the Koran of the Mohammedans, and a translation of the writings of Confucius, are introduced with the Bible. To what is "the world" drifting?

THE Chicago Tribune, late date, publishes the following:—

The Rev. Bruce Brown, pastor of West Side Christian Church, preached last night on "The Conflict of the Centuries." He said in part:—

"Contending for the mastery of the minds of men are three great forces. Romanism, Protestantism, and infidelity. It is not mine to say which is right and which is wrong. If infidelity is to win it must tell us how we can conquer sin. If Romanism is to be the victor it must be able to prove its teachings from the Scriptures. If Protestantism is to conquer it must return to the unity and simplicity of the apostolic church."

Will Protestantism return to the unity and simplicity of the apostolic church? Are there any indications whatever of such return?

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

BRO. U. W. GREENE, missionary by appointment to the Sandwich Islands, writing from Boston, Massachusetts, October 25, says:—

I leave to-morrow at 9:30 a. m.; will reach San Francisco Monday morning. Will rest, then continue my journey. Since deciding to go on alone, I have received several remarkable manifestations of divine approval, and I am enjoying an unusual degree of the Holy Spirit. I feel like singing all the time, "Praise God from whom all blessings flow."

Bro. Chas. A. Parkin, writing from San Francisco, October 22, reports that the work is moving onward in that city. He says:—

We are fighting to make the best showing possible, financially and spiritually. We have challenged the Brighamites to meet us in public debate through the San Francisco daily papers. Bro. Sheehy is "a whole team." I would like to spend all my time in the field, but cannot do so yet. But I am doing all I can.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

A LETTER from Bro. M. D. Lewis, of Hiteman, Iowa, recounts an effort made against our faith at Hiteman by one Clark Braden, who presented the customary challenges and appeared in the usual role—that of assuming to represent the citizens in his attack. It is said that he was imported by local religionists.

Bro. M. H. Bond requests his correspondents to note his address, now No. 103 Chapin Avenue, Providence, Rhode Island. Being called westward for a short time he expects to be at Brooklyn, over Sunday, the 30th, at Kirtland Sunday, November 6, and at St. Louis, Sunday, the 13th.

What do the brethren think of the statements made by a minister, before the Rocky Mountain Baptist Association, "That the death of Christ is not essential to salvation;" "That the work of the Holy Spirit in regeneration is not essential to salvation"? Some two weeks ago the probability of so-called progressive religionists denying the mission and personality of Christ himself was stated, based upon observations of the growing tendency to drift from and to disregard the teachings of our Lord. We were hardly prepared for such an early example of the kind from a professed minister of Christianity. To what is the modern religious world drifting? Is society to depart from present foundations and moorings almost or altogether?

Sr. Anna Nielsen writes of a visit to the Nebraska City branch by two Brighamite missionaries sent there to establish a branch of the Brighamite Church. They were treated kindly by our people, and were given some facts to think about.

Sr. R. Y. McKee, Watsonville, California, desires the address of Bro. Walter Scott, of the Santa Cruz branch.

Mr. R. B. Neal, of Kentucky, has been quite busy within the last year writing and lecturing against the Mormons, and including the Reorganized Church in the general term "Mormons." His efforts have resulted in turning some attention our way, as we are written to, making inquiry of our faith and our books; stating that they secured our office address from R. B. Neal's "anti-Mormon" tract. God will make the wrath of man to praise him. And we may so far thank Elder R. B. Neal, as aiding us to make converts.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

"Run if you like, but try to keep your breath,
Work like a man, but don't be worked to death,
And with new notions, let me change the rule,
Don't strike the iron till it's slightly cool."

DEAR SISTERS:—Like many others I love to read the Home Column. Its editorials, selections, and letters must prove a benefit to any mother who will read with proper diligence and prayer, and endeavor to heed its wise counsels. What an experience meeting we might have through this column if we but availed ourselves of its advantages!*

For one, I feel to especially thank Sister Frances for the selections from "Childhood; Its Care and Culture." Many of the sisters, no doubt, would be glad to own the book, but like myself are unable to buy it at the present time, so we are glad indeed to have the opportunity of reading it in the Home Column. What an excellent article that was on "Behaving." Respect for parents and older people is a virtue too frequently wanting in the young people of to-day. Surely the children of the saints should be better taught; but with precept must also go example. I have somewhere read that a rude woman is a curse to her children unto the third and fourth generations, because her lack of consideration for the rights of others would be indelibly stamped upon them. How careful then both fathers and mothers should be of their manners at home before the children.

I was especially impressed by the reading of Bro. Hilliard's article on "Sanctification," in the Herald for August 10, and I hope that not the sisters only, but the brethren as well, will carefully and wisely read it again and set about heeding its instructions.

The Word of Wisdom, which applies to our food, is too often disregarded by the saints,

*We felt as we read this sentence the full force of Sr. Ida's words, and we said: The present is the time. Why wait to do this good work until the reaper shall have gathered her who so much needs this encouragement home, and, perhaps, in various ways have deprived you of the ability to gather up the strands of thought which now you might so successfully weave together for the benefit of yourself as well as others! "The mill will never grind" with the drops of thought which have been swept by the current of time into the ocean of eternity. Our Column is not what it might be—not what it ought to be—and we have sometimes wondered if the members of any other church were so remiss in sustaining their literary departments.—Ed.

and as a consequence parents injure themselves both physically and mentally, and their children suffer with them, not only in inheriting the weakness and diseases of the parents, but in aggravating these conditions by the very same unwise course which produced them first in the parent.

Sisters, cannot we be more faithful in this also? Are we unwilling to live "by every word?" Are not the blessings of health, wisdom, great knowledge—even hidden treasures, and the passing by of the destroying angel, sufficient to induce us to give up injurious habits? Think on these things. Are we mothers teaching our children by both precept and example what is proper to use and what should always be avoided, because God had so directed? Will our children grow up to be doers of the word or hearers only? In childhood is the time to teach them.

And then in regard to tithing. Do we faithfully pay our own and teach our children to do the same, or are they allowed to do as they choose? paying little or nothing to the Lord, and spending their money on trifles and the mere pleasures of the world. Is it not wiser to require them while they are still under age and consequently under our control, to pay their tithing as fast as they earn anything for themselves? Even very little children like to earn money for themselves, and can be easily taught to lay by the tenth and send it to the Bishop or his agent; and thus in the early years of their lives form the habit of that obedience which brings its sure reward. "When ye do what I say, then I am bound; but when ye do not what I say, you have no promise." Are we diligently teaching these things to our children, that they may become established in the faith once delivered to the saints? If we are not, whose fault is it if they remain ignorant of the requirements of the gospel or become indifferent and are numbered among those who have no oil in their lamps when our Savior shall come again?

And then what about gathering to Zion according to the commandments and revelations? I have always wondered why the saints had not more generally gone to the "regions round about," instead of remaining scattered. Has not the Lord commanded? Why do we not obey? No use to say the way is not open. The Lord says, "If they hearken to this counsel they may buy lands and gather together upon them, and in this way establish Zion." "Hearken to this counsel." Ah, that's it! We have not hearkened to this counsel; we have just gone in our own ways, and some of our children have never even joined the church, and others have dropped out by the way. Are we teaching our children to pray: "Lord, when it is thy will, let us go to Zion?" Do we pray that way ourselves? Mothers in latter-day Israel, let us "hearken to this counsel;" let us gather our little ones around us and tell them God's plans for us; let us teach them to pray for these things.

It seems to me that if the saints would heed Bro. Hilliard's call to duty as they ought, there would at once begin a movement

Zionward. The prayers of the saints and their little ones would arise as an incense before the Lord; wise men would soon be found to direct the affairs of each and every branch; property would soon be sold and land in the "regions round about" be purchased, and the saints settled thereon; isolated saints would soon find an opportunity to sell out what they have, and their faces would soon be Zionward. No use to say, "we can't sell out, we are tied here;" or "we might not be able to make a living there." "Hearken unto this counsel." The Lord never yet gave a command that he did not also provide a way in which it could be obeyed. Are we willing to "live by every word,"—by this word?

Sisters, I feel moved to say, Let us begin now in secret, and with our children to pray for this gathering. Brethren, presidents of branches, what are you doing to forward this movement? Let us one and all "heed this counsel," and the way will open soon for our obedience. "Not in haste, nor by flight; but let all things be prepared before you." What are you doing towards "preparing" these things?

SISTER IDA.

RIVERSIDE, Cal., Aug. 21.

Sister Frances:—I have thought for some time that I would write a few lines to the sisters. Perhaps I might encourage some poor souls to keep on praying for strength to be given to the poor, weak, decaying body. I can say I have been wonderfully blessed. I feel that the Prayer Union has been praying for me. I have been very ill for a good while; but I am much better the past month, thanks to the dear Father above, that he has heard prayers in my behalf. I feel to praise his holy name for his loving kindness to me. Although I feel that I am not always as faithful as I ought to be, but the Lord knows the hearts of all his children. I am striving to keep his words, but come short of it sometimes. The nearer we can come to keeping his laws the more we are blessed. Oh how many times I have been suffering. The poor body is weak. I would look to God for strength to help me to bear all things with patience. I have received such a peaceful frame of mind; the clouds were all removed, and sweet sleep would come so refreshing that I could rise from my bed and make myself a little useful. I do miss the sweet communion of the saints. It is not so that I can go to hear their sermons, but I can read them. Thanks to the dear brethren for those grand words that we can read. I do not know how I could get along without them. I heard indirectly that a brother called at my house, but I was not at home, also a certain elder. I have distributed the papers to different parties; I hope they will be the means of doing some good. There is a good deal of prejudice here, plenty of Christians, many churches, but few real saints. It is my heart's desire to do some good while I live—say some words that may help some poor sorrowing soul to have more faith in our heavenly Father. We are living in the day of perilous times. Death and destruction are in the world. Oh, that we might live by every word that has been given us, then we have the promises that our Father will take care of us.

Dear Sisters, you have my prayers every day, that you may be blessed of God in your work, and that he will hear our petitions. How I would like to meet with you and hear your testimonies, but I must be content as it is. I need your prayers so much, that I may be kept in that straight way and have health to the poor decaying body.

Your sister,

H. B. GILBERT.

HERE is a beautiful truth, a soul-cheering thought for the meek of this earth, who suffer and grow strong in silence while the tendrils of their faith, loosened from many earthly supports, cling closer to God and his truth. "It is the lives, like the stars which simply pour down on us the calm light of their bright and faithful being, up to which we look and out of which we gather the deepest calm and courage. No man nor woman of the humblest sort can really be strong, gentle, pure, and good without somebody being helped and comforted by the very existence of that goodness."

MISTAKES IN SUNDAY SCHOOL.

Read at Midway Park Reunion.

BEFORE taking up the subject of mistakes in Sunday school we will touch on one of the most important mistakes outside of the school, in regard to Sunday school work. This is lack of interest taken by those who should be its most earnest and staunch supporters.

CHILDREN NEGLECTED.

Does it not seem strange that those who in all other ways are so anxious for the advancement of the Master's cause, should fail in zeal and become careless and neglectful when it comes to sowing the gospel seed in the fruitful hearts and minds of God's little ones? We would beg all such to remember that Christ himself was not unmindful of the lambs of the fold, but he has said, "Suffer the little children to come unto me." How can they do so if they are not taught the way to come?

A PARENT'S MISTAKE.

It is a mistake for parents who belong to the church not to attend Sunday school themselves, or send their children, or if they do, allow them to be so irregular that it becomes a detriment to both pupil and school. And here let me mention another mistake often made by parents: Children are often made to attend too many services on Sunday. If you send them to Sunday school you cannot expect them to sit quietly through morning, afternoon, and evening services too. The child will get tired of it and you will soon have to drive him to church to get him to go at all.

TARDINESS.

It is a mistake of the superintendent not to take up the school promptly on time, even if no one is present but himself, as it gives the pupil a chance to say, "It does not matter if I am a little late. They never begin on time anyway."

HUMILITY.

It is a mistake for the superintendent not to go before the Lord in humble prayer for his school before he leaves home Sunday morning, and to pray for it through the week also.

STUDY.

Another mistake is not to study methods, give your school a variety, something new every other Sunday or as often as you can find something new and attractive. Enlist the assistance of your collaborator, the assistant superintendent. (By the way, too many assistants are mere figureheads, not supposed to be made use of, just ornamental, that's all.) Do not make this mistake. Enlist his or her services, that you may have the liberty to visit other schools, to study other superintendents' methods of conducting the lessons.

COUNSEL.

Do not always run your Sunday school regardless of anyone else's opinions. You can be mistaken in this also. Many a new thought, idea, and plan may be obtained from the teachers in your school. Ask their opinions on different questions or methods; give them a chance to grow and develop their talents too.

CHURCH LITERATURE.

Don't allow other church literature to supersede that of your own church. If you cannot have your own use the Bible, get help from other sources if you wish, but use the Bible and your own quarterlies—if possible—as the foundation.

COLLECTIONS.

It is a mistake not to take up a collection every Sunday. Some of our people get the idea in their heads that this gospel work should run along as smoothly as a sled down a toboggan slide without anything to "grease the track." This is a great mistake and the saints should be educated out of it.

SOCIALITY.

The superintendent should be sociable, especially with members of his own school, also with strangers and new pupils. Sometimes the superintendent and school are not sociable enough with new comers and they, thinking they are not welcome, do not return to your school again.

ORDER.

One grave mistake in Sunday school work is lack of order in the school. Though much good is often accomplished where the order of the school is not the best, yet there can be no doubt that much more is accomplished where the law of order reigns. Children should be taught that "the house of God is the house of order."

PARTIALITY.

Teachers, do not allow yourselves to make the mistake of being a little partial and paying the most attention to the best dressed or brightest child in the class. It is often the case that the humblest one in the class will do the most credit to your teaching in the years to come, and as a rule they will most appreciate your kindness now.

"As the teacher is, so is the school," and if the teachers take especial pains to make welcome the poor and humble class of children, the other pupils will not be so apt to make slighting remarks, wounding the feelings of those who have not as fine clothes as they. If all parents would do as did one good sister in the church, the teachers would have no difficulty in this line. Two sister saints with their little daughters were attending some gathering of the saints, conference or two-days' meeting, I have forgotten which it was. One of the sisters was more abundantly blessed with this world's goods than the other. On Sunday morning they dressed their little girls in white dresses, the more wealthy mother's child having a beautiful new sash. As she met the other little girl she said, proudly, "You have got no sash!" "Neither have you to-day," quietly replied her mother, and unfastening the pretty ribbon and taking it off, she put it away, and the child did not wear it during the meetings.

MINOR OR UNIMPORTANT TOPICS

should never be allowed a place in the Sunday school during the lesson hour. Neither should the Bible class take up so much time in trivial discussion as to tire out the smaller classes. This is so often—yes, too frequently—the case in nearly every school.

THE REVIEW

should be conducted so as to interest the little ones. If they get interested and give bright, intelligent answers, the older ones cannot help being interested also.

I visited one large Sunday school (not an L. D. S., I am glad to say) where the entire review was conducted by the pastor and not one word was addressed to the little ones of whom there were numerous classes. I felt so sorry for them and I felt that pastor made a great mistake in not doing his duty by the little folks and that he, at least, did not understand the mission of the Sunday school.

Although we make mistakes in our own schools we feel that other churches often make more than we do; and if we as saints should do, strive to live up to the best light given us, we ought to lead the world in Sunday school work.

Let us then strive to profit by the mistakes made by ourselves and others; taking Longfellow's words as though they were meant for us and say—

"Let us then be up and doing
With a heart for any fate,
Still achieving, still pursuing,
Learn to labor and to wait."

MINA PERKINS KEARNEY.

CHRISTMAS OFFERINGS.

It is hoped that the Sunday school workers and scholars will not overlook the importance of the Christmas Offerings. A growth in the Sunday school should also be seen in the amount of offerings sent in. Means are needed to aid the work, and we respectfully urge the claims of the Christmas Offering fund upon the attention of all schools.

Let us do better this year than ever before. Send all remittances with names to the Herald Office, as heretofore. The names with amounts of offerings will be published in the blue Hope.

EDGEWOOD, Iowa, October 20.

Editors Herald:—I am at work and trying to keep things moving. Our conference at Clinton, September 24 and 25, was fairly well attended. The saints that came up from Rock Island and Davenport added greatly to our numbers and also the spirituality of the conference. Bro. W. A. Smith, our new missionary, was present and rendered valuable service. A very peaceable conference was held. If I remember right only one vote was carried in the negative, and that a vote to adjourn. The next conference is to meet at Arlington during the light of the moon in February, 1899. The first Saturday nearest before the full moon.

After conference I went to Viola and among other efforts I replied to the M. E. minister on baptism. Attended the two-days' meeting near Fairbanks and held a few meetings there. Rain prevented a large attendance. On Thursday, the 13th, by invitation I delivered a lecture in the opera hall in Arlington on the Sabbath question and arrived here in time for the two-days' meeting the 15th and 16th inst.

I hear that two Utah elders are at work around Waterloo and Cedar Falls. I will be headed that way in a day or two and then on to Powersville and Arlington.

J. W. PETERSON.

MANCHESTER, Eng., Oct. 9.

Editors Herald:—I have read in Herald, page 620, "T. W. C's" glorification of Bro. W. Kelley's "Old Glory" article, which I have also read in Herald, page 575, without being able to "testify to its inspiration." And I wish you to say for me, "Them's not my sentiments," and therefore "they are [not] pinned on my headboard."

By birth I am an Englishman, and a native of no mean city, but I trust that I am first of all a Latter Day Saint, and consequently believe that in the Church of Christ there ought not to be either Jew or Gentile, bond or free, male or female, Yankee or Britisher, Spaniard or Cuban, but we ought to be all one in Christ Jesus our Lord, confessing like St. Paul's worthies that we with them are "strangers and pilgrims on the earth."

"For they that say such things make it manifest that they are seeking after a country of their own. And if indeed they had been mindful of that country from which they went out, they would have had opportunity to return. But now they desire a better country, that is, a heavenly: wherefore God is not ashamed of them, to be called their God: for he hath prepared for them a city."—Heb. 11:14-16, R. V.

I bow in homage to the blood-stained banner of the cross, representative of a peculiar people, zealous of good works. But if I am compelled to march under any other banner, I prefer that it shall be the Union Jack of Old England. And in this matter I believe that I am truly representing the sentiments of hundreds of Latter Day Saints on this side of the great waters.

Yours in the one faith,
JOSEPH DEWSNUP, Sen.

WILBURTON, I. T., Oct. 18.

Editors Herald:—Our conference at Wilburton, passed off nicely. We had Brn. E. Short, E. A. Erwin, Russell, and J. W. Jackson with us. The saints have built a house unto the Lord to worship in, and quite a branch has been gathered here. I am continuing the preaching every night. Will go from here to Cove, Arkansas, to hold a meeting.

I have had fine meetings in Texas this year. The work is onward in this district. We were sorry to lose the labors of Dr. W. B. Toucy.

I was sorry to hear of Bro. Tucker's persecution in Alabama, but such things are good for us sometimes. All is for the best if we do right.
In bonds,
J. D. ERWIN.

RUNNELLS, Iowa, Oct. 22.

Editors Herald:—On Thursday, October 6, the saints at Clear Creek, Jasper County, Iowa, were convened by the president of the Des Moines district of the Reorganized Church, and C. Scott, missionary in charge, in said district, Bro. E. B. Morgan, of the missionary force, being present. The propriety of organizing a branch was considered. An expression of those present showed them to be favorable to the move. Bro. E. B. Morgan was chosen to preside. After due deliberation, High Priest W. C. Nirk was chosen to be president of the branch, which accorded with the views of Bro. Morgan and myself.

Brn. John Hidy and Walter Pitcher were chosen for teachers, W. W. Owens for priest, Bro. James Veach for deacon, and Sr. Lizzie Owens, Baxter, Jasper County, to be secretary; all by recommendation, motion, and vote, unanimous in almost every point.

The meeting was held at the house of Bro. James Veach, and was peaceful and harmonious throughout, and the Spirit of the Lord was present to enlighten, cheer, and guide. We did not forget to inform them about records, statistical blank reports, books, tracts, and our church organ, the Saints' Herald, and supplies in general, to be had at the Herald Publishing House, at Lamoni, Iowa.

On Sunday, October 9, at 2:30 p. m., at a service held at the schoolhouse, District No. 3, in Independence Township, Jasper County, I, by request, presiding, the brethren above-named were ordained according to previous selection, under the hands of W. C. Nirk, E. B. Morgan, and the writer, Brn. W. W. Owens and James Veach being ordained by C. Scott, assisted by the brethren; Bro. Walter Pitcher, by Elder Morgan, assisted by Elders Nirk and Scott; and Bro. John Hidy, ordained by Elder W. C. Nirk, assisted by Elders E. B. Morgan and C. Scott. These brethren were then chosen to be officers of the branch, and the Clear Creek branch of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints was declared organized. Bro. and Sr. Hickman, baptized the day previous, were confirmed, and the sacrament was administered.

I should not have forgotten to have mentioned in my previous letter to the Herald, when giving account of the organization of the Concord branch, that Bro. W. H. Kephart assisted in the ordination of Brn. R. W. Bare and Samuel Burgess. Nor must I forget now to note that the Clear Creek Sunday school exists, and has been progressing nicely for some months under the superintendency of Bro. W. W. Owens, whose post office address is Baxter, Jasper County, Iowa. Clear Creek branch will consist of some thirty-three to thirty-five members when the scattered remnants of the now disorganized Edenville branch become identified with it, as they expect to.

Rainy weather and mud have interfered with the work of the missionary in this part of the moral vineyard to a greater or lesser degree—generally greater—for the last two or three weeks; and it is very remarkable how fearful and terrified the people are when a few clouds appear or a few claps of thunder are heard, and the lightnings flash around! They will sometimes get hurriedly out of the meetings and rush for their homes, as though more safe there than elsewhere! Why is this? It was not so twenty-five years ago. They fulfill prophecy right in their own presence. (See Doctrine and Covenants, 85: 25.) But the divine testimony must ring forth. God has declared it.

The times seem rife with signs, and one of the growing signs is the unjust, unlawful concentration of power in the hands of the few, in both state and church. The leading churches, some of them, are liable to be rent asunder or to suffer great loss of numbers at any time. The Holiness movement is growing, is spreading among them. Some of the leaders in the denominations desire the Holiness Alliance to keep silence on the subject. But the Holiness refuse to submit to this much longer; and rather than be so closely bound, and not allowed to advocate their belief, and to shout, they propose to walk out from under the domination. This I learn from one of the liberty advocates who resides in Oskaloosa, Iowa. Also, the Episcopal clergy are engaged in an effort in Great Britain—more than a thousand of them—to subvert the foundation of the great sixteenth-century Reformation, and to lead their pastorates back under the bonds of rigorous Romanism. Is it possible that the "deadly wound" once inflicted upon one of the heads of John's beast is yet to be "healed"? And is this move by those clergy but a supplemental one to the effort of King William, of Germany, to restore the temporal power of Pius XIII.? And are all these moves together an effort by the powers combined to prop up the monarchical power that is getting ready to tumble because of intrinsic decay? That great masterly work done by the British people—laity and clergy—during the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries, in the interests of religious liberty, and culminating in the complete abrogation of Roman Catholic domination over the souls of so many, in 1534, A. D., and so splendidly maintained till the present;—is it all to be now reversed—admitted to have been wrong?

"Backward, turn backward, O Time, in your flight;"
Make us your slaves again, just for—it stops in our throat—the sight.

But, thank God, the results of that memorable movement will not attend the episcopacy in its wild return to Egypt! Perhaps when enchained in galling fetters again it will be an object lesson to other Protestant bodies who think a plunge into bondage again might be enjoyed (?) for a change!

Speaking of object lessons, that was one presented a few days ago in Utah, when, on the death of President Wilford Woodruff, of the Utah Brighamite Church, eleven of their Quorum of the Twelve met in private conclave, and, without consulting the body of the people concerned, by their eleven voices, aided by the voice of two other individuals only, and without any regard whatever to the law that should have been consulted in such cases, proceeded to place in office for the whole people a president. Having placed the incumbent in the office, in harmony with unlawful precedent, they proceeded to confirm the act and the incumbent; and later the duped followers will be required, per force of dread of living oracles of assumed power, to quietly, and without question or dissent, submit!

Alas for the personal liberty and responsibility of man, if the tide of the "sign" of the times does not change! Who will stand sponsor for him at the final decision? "O, our party leaders understand the questions involved; we need give ourselves no uneasiness; the leaders will have all things right." Yes, "The leaders of my people," says God, "cause them to err." "Common consent" by coercion may go to Utah, but not in Iowa; and until God revises his organic law of the church, confessing he was mistaken, and tells us, the First Presidency and the Twelve will have enlarged powers and do most of the work of the church, where the law now provides that others with them shall do such work, we shall ever be on our watchtower for infringements on the privileges of the people. And to our Utah religionists we can say that we have somewhat to glory in, on this behalf, in the Reorganized Church,

God and his law are supreme here, and the common consent is willingly given, when, and after the purpose for which it is sought, has been by the members considered. So let it continue.

For liberty and right,
C. SCOTT.

AUDUBON, Minn., Oct. 20.

Editors Herald:—On Saturday, the 17th of September I got a chance, as I thought, to go through to Bermidji, but failed, as the train only ran as far as Solway. Arrived there at 4:30 p. m., being then fifteen miles from Bermidji, the place I was going to; so I left my grips with a gentleman, and off I went for Bermidji, and Oh, such walking! I kept on the railroad track, and, it being new, you may judge what a walk I had. 'Tis a sandy country, covered with a dense forest of pine timber, without any settlers on the road. I was alone and saw no living being; could hear only the owls hooting in the darkness of the night, which made me feel very lonesome indeed. But on I went, tired and weary, arriving at Mr. Porter Nye's at nine o'clock at night.

Just before reaching Mr. Nye's place I called at a house to inquire how much farther I would have to go. The answer came back in the darkness from a lady, "I know you, Mr. Roberts, you can't fool me!" Well, I was somewhat surprised to think my voice was recognized, but I am thankful the surprise was a happy one, for it came from a friend who attended our reunion at Wadena last spring, the lady being the daughter-in-law of Mr. and Sr. Nye. She kindly led the way for a few hundred yards, and I was at the end of my journey. Tired, thirsty, and hungry, is only putting it mildly; but it was not long until my appetites was satisfied by eating a good supper of the different kinds of vegetables raised on Mr. Nye's farm.

On Sunday, the 18th, when I arose from bed I was so sore and had taken such a cold that I felt quite used up. At three p. m. I spoke to a fair crowd at the Carr schoolhouse, and continued the meetings on each night with increased interest, resulting in baptizing three. Others felt the need of doing likewise, but had not the courage to step out of the world and enter the ranks of the army of the Lord. On Monday, the 19th, I got horse and buggy and went after my grips. On arriving at Solway I ask some gentlemen if I could get some hay for my horse. A young-like man said yes, and called a man to put my horse out and care for it. I soon observed that I had struck a saloon, hence I made some excuse to walk around the new town, and soon learned that the place was about all saloons; so I went back and we were soon on the topic of religion. Well, to make a long story short, I never was treated more manly than there. I had a fine dinner and horse feed, all gratis, but he never once asked me into the saloon.

I will now go back a little; while laying over at Fosston I tried to secure a church to speak in, but soon found I could not get one, so the hotel man kindly gave me the use of the sitting room in the hotel. So I was able to give them one good sermon of near two hours' duration. All seemed pleased with my effort. A traveling man asked me how I got my pay for preaching, and when I explained to him, he said, "Well, you are the kind of preacher I can help," and handed me a big dollar, which came in very good play, I being a little short of funds.

I found the saints at Bermidji all well and firm in the faith. I visited with them, and on the first Sunday in October administered the sacrament, after which we had a good prayer and testimony meeting. I would have stayed longer with them, but our conference was to convene on the 15th and 16th of October, so I had to leave them. My prayer is that God will bless them. The time will soon come when we can organize a branch there. I have just returned from our conference, and a good one it was. The Lord was with us in power, making every heart rejoice. Saturday morning's prayer meeting will long be remembered by all. Every member present took part. The preaching was good, and all went home praising God for his blessings. We are on a firmer basis up here than ever before. The saints, most of them, are trying hard to do their duty; of course there are a few who are out of line and seem to like the pleasures of this world more than God.

We are having a very wet time here now. I was going to begin a series of meetings in Detroit City this week, but the inclement weather is against me. So I will take a little rest and then off to the city of Minneapolis for awhile.

Ever, praying and laboring for the redemption of Zion, I am still in the faith.

More anon.

I. N. ROBERTS.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, Oct. 21.

Editors Herald:—Saturday evening, the 15th inst., found me at Gallien, Michigan. Senator E. A. Blakeslee met me at the train and I was soon at home with his mother and sister at the Blakeslee residence. Later we joined the meeting at the hall and listened to a very logical and convincing discourse by Bro. Adam Smith, of Clear Lake, Indiana. The meeting was called by the Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana district conference. Brn. E. C. Briggs and L. W. Scott were in direct charge, George F. Weston secretary, and Sr. White organist.

Judging from a casual view, the district was fairly represented. There were members from Coldwater, Clear Lake, Grand Rapids, Hartford, Marcellus, and other places nearer by at least. There were too many to enumerate by name. A splendid feeling breathed out from the conference assembly.

It had been many years since the writer had the pleasure of meeting with the saints of this district, yet there are none who knew him better. Their reception was most cordial, more like an ovation than a mere friendly greeting. It is "sweet like honey in the honey comb" to live in the esteem and confidence of devoted defenders of the faith. Precious to commune with zealous saints.

The very air seemed to bloom with heartfelt greeting and glad refrain as we talked and sang of the saints' hope. The meetings were orderly and spiritual; so Michigan, as in the past, is in the line of progress and duty, ready to maintain the right at any cost. May she grow stronger as the days go by.

WM. H. KELLEY.

MONTEREY, Cal., Oct. 17.

Editors Herald:—I am not idle, but find plenty to do. Last Sunday I was called to San Jose to preach the funeral sermon of Sr. Jennie Jackson, which was largely attended, for she was a brilliant woman, loved and respected by all that knew her, and was one of those who turned "many to righteousness," and shall be "as the stars forever and ever." (Dan. 12: 3.)

I came here by the way of Santa Cruz, stayed with the better half one day, then came here. I have spoken nearly every night, but mostly in private houses, one night in the K. of P. hall. Two noble souls were added to the fold yesterday, and more are near the kingdom. I met here Bro. Walter Scott, in whom I find a congenial collaborer, one who is ready and willing to make any sacrifice for the Master's cause. He is doing a great deal of house-to-house preaching, and the two baptized are the fruits of his labor. These make eight baptized here. More anon.

SHERBURNVILLE, Ill., Oct. 24.

Editors Herald:—Bro. A. J. Keck and I were called here the fore part of last week to administer to Bro. Calvin Dickey who was afflicted with consumption. He realized his condition, and desired to trust in the Lord; but it evidently was not the will of the Lord to heal him, for he passed peacefully away on the 20th inst. The funeral was conducted in the presence of a large assembly of relatives and friends, and we believe there was a good impression made on the minds of many who were present.

We begin meetings to-night in a private house, and hope to accomplish something, as there are some here who seem to be looking for more truth and greater light. We held an interesting series of meetings at the Hevener schoolhouse, near Piper City, where quite a few seem interested in the work. There are also a number of saints there, who seem to be a credit to the work; they seemed much encouraged and strengthened by our efforts.

We made a new opening at the Foreman schoolhouse, Livingston County, but had only held three meetings when we were called here. We will tarry till we see what can be done, and then perhaps may return to Ford and Livingston counties.

We are feeling encouraged in the work.

H. E. MOLER.

LONDON, Ont., Oct. 25.

Editors Herald:—According to promise I send you a few lines regarding the last three nights of the "Mason-Gregory debate." Elder Gregory affirmed "that the Church of Christ, as described in the New Testament Scriptures, went into complete apostasy, and remained so until the present century, when the true order of church government, doctrine, gifts, and blessings, was restored by God through the instrumentality of Joseph Smith."

Elder Gregory presented a splendid argument for the affirmative. He showed: 1, the church described in the New Testament; 2, how that church went into apostasy; 3, the condition of the apostate church; 4, the restoration.

Our young brother was wonderfully blessed in presenting the truth of the angel's message. The Doctor admitted the apostasy and spent but little of his time on the affirmative argument; but from the first took up Ford, Beadle, Lee, and Dickinson, with a little of Law and Foster thrown in. I happened to have my written criticisms on all these works, on the platform, and our brother used them with effect. The Doctor's talk in the main was slander and tattle. He said that you said, that I said, that the other fellow said, that it had been reported by a stranger, whose story contradicts itself, that "Joe Smith" was awful. Why sir, that fellow, Joe Smith, was such a vile wretch that from "reliable" "first citizens" witnesses it is proven that he was guilty of marrying several women after he was dead and buried. Now then!

At times the Doctor's language was so coarse and disgusting that women hid their faces, while a few left the church. His moderator refused to serve for more than one night. By request of the Doctor I acted as chairman five of the six nights. Some thought I should have called the Doctor down for his vile talk, but I let him go it, and at the close I referred to it in a way that did the truth or Elder Gregory no harm. The doctor took my hand after my little speech and said: "Well, Elder, my talk was a little dirty; but I could not help it." I replied as soothingly as possible by saying: "O no, Doctor; I presume you can't help it; its a way some folks have!" Elder Gregory won the respect of all, and we think great good will result from the debate.

Last Sunday I addressed a priesthood meeting, presided over prayer meeting, preached at eleven a. m., gave an address on Book of Mormon in Sunday school at 3:30 p. m., preached at 7:00 p. m., after which by request I baptized and confirmed one and assisted to ordain one teacher and one deacon. Thus closed my labors in Toronto.

Elder Gregory will leave Thursday, he going farther east; I west, to Blenheim.

There is a white field ready to harvest in that city. Methinks with wisdom and prudence, the gathering there will greatly increase.

Yours in haste,

R. C. EVANS.

DETROIT, Minn., Oct. 19.

Editors Herald:—On Thursday, the 13th, Bro. and Sr. McLeod drove up for the purpose of Bro. McLeod attending conference. After a pleasant visit Sr. M. went home, and taking my team, accompanied by my children, we drove over to Bro. Keith's, where we unloaded, sending horses home, and Bro. McLeod and myself staying with Bro. K's family over night. On Friday we were on the road; the air was cold, a white frost covered the ground; but we were comfortable, and with talk and song passed the time till noon, when we camped and fed both man and beast. The journey was resumed after dinner and at four p. m. we reached the home of Bro. Martin, in the town of Maine, thirty-five miles from our starting point. Here we received a saint's welcome. Bro. and Sr. Martin and two older children are my children in the gospel, and they always have a warm corner for their father and the saints.

We went to bed early, but about four a. m. I heard a peculiar noise, and then Sr. Martin says: "Bro. Martin, come quick; Ed is dead!" I ran downstairs as quick as I could and found the brother in a fit, struggling for breath, his eyes fixed, and no power of speech or motion. The others soon came down and we worked over him, and I administered to him, and in about three-quarters of an hour he came to himself and we all rejoiced at his recovery.

At 10:30 we met for prayer meeting, which was much enjoyed, the Spirit of God being felt by all. The business of the conference passed off pleasantly; good advice was given by Bro. Roberts. The Bishop's agent's report showed that the saints were striving to keep the law of tithing. Some additions by baptism showed that the elders were still active. The preaching services were well attended and the speakers enjoyed good liberty—were helped by the Spirit.

Our thanks are due to Brn. Barnhard and Powers and their families for their efforts to make the meeting a success, and that visiting saints should be cared for. All the saints are noted for their hospitality, but the brethren mentioned live near the place of meeting and the burden fell on them. We drove home in a rainstorm, but suffered no inconvenience. The result of the conference we feel will be good.

Your brother,

T. J. MARTIN.

True Succession in Church Presidency.

CHAPTER 2.

MR. ROBERTS next introduces the work of William Smith, the brother of the prophet; and, true to the disposition manifested by him throughout his treatise, commences with a slanderous statement, for which he cites no proof. It is as follows:—

Following the attempt of Sidney Rigdon to become the "Guardian of the Church," we will consider the efforts of William Smith, brother to the prophet Joseph, to become its President. He was a member of the quorum of the Twelve at the death of the prophet, though for some time his conduct had been such as to bring him into disrepute among the Saints. He was of a turbulent, ungovernable disposition; a man of fierce passions and violent temper. When the saints were driven from Missouri, in 1838, and his brother Joseph cast into prison, such was his vindictiveness against the prophet that at a general conference of the church held near Quincy, Illinois, May 4th, 1839, he was suspended from fellowship; but was afterwards restored, mainly through the pleadings of that same brother against whom he railed with such bitterness of speech.—Roberts, p. 15.

He who seeks thus to prejudice a case against an opponent before the investigation begins, manifests an unbecoming spirit of bitterness or a conscious weakness; and when he afterwards assumes the role of a witness, as Mr. Roberts does in relating a personal interview with William Smith, we must consider and treat him as a prejudiced witness. The minutes of the conference of May 4, 1839, have this entry:—

Resolved 9th: That Elders Orson Hyde and William Smith be allowed the privilege of appearing personally before the next General Conference of the church, to give an account of their conduct; and that in the meantime they both be suspended from exercising the functions of their office.—Millennial Star, Vol. 17, p. 204.

So when Mr. Roberts asserts that William Smith was suspended from fellowship, he misstates the case, and when he assumes to give the cause for this action he goes outside the record. By what authority these statements are made, we are left to conjecture.

In the History of Joseph Smith, under date of May 25, 1839, occurs the following:—

This day I met the Twelve in council. The case of Brother William Smith came up for investigation and was disposed of.—Mill. Star, Vol. 17, p. 232.

Not a word about Joseph Smith pleading for him; nor are we informed how the case was disposed of. He was no doubt either vindicated or forgiven, as we find in the October conference minutes of the same year, the following:—

Orson Hyde to stand in his former office, and William Smith to be continued in his standing.—Times and Seasons, Vol. 1, p. 30.

What a fruitful imagination Mr. Roberts has!

In the very next sentence after the one quoted above Mr. Roberts says:—

Shortly after the martyrdom of his brothers, Joseph and Hyrum, William was ordained to the office of patriarch to the church, to succeed Hyrum Smith, who held that office at the time of his death.

Rather an unfit man for Patriarch, if Mr. Roberts represents him fairly. But to add to this absurdity, Mr. Roberts, on page 18, returns to the attack, and says:—

William Smith, however, did not command much of a following in this first attempt to make himself a leader. His profligate life was too notorious in Nauvoo to make it possible for him to wield much influence even as a schismatic.

Is this the character of men that Mr. Young and his associates placed in responsible positions? It was they who ordained William Smith a patriarch. At or near the time of this ordination, when John Taylor, of the Twelve, was "Editor and Proprietor," the Times and Seasons had this to say editorially of William Smith:—

Father Smith, the first Patriarch, and Hyrum, his successor, conferred many blessings upon the saints that made their hearts glad. But they, in the wisdom of God, have been called away, and William, the son and brother, succeeds them. How many, now will say, I wish I had my patriarchal blessing? This has been the lamentation of many since the death of Joseph and Hyrum. William is the last of the family, and truly inherits the blood and spirit of his father's house, as well as priesthood and the patriarchal office from his father and brother, legally, and by hereditary descent.—Times and Seasons, Vol. 6, p. 905.

Is this the way that disreputable and profligate characters are recommended by the church which Mr. Roberts represents?

In assuming to trace the career of William Smith, Mr. Roberts claims that after becoming estranged from the Twelve he set up claims to the Presidency in his own right, then became associated with James J. Strang, and—

After his failure in Nauvoo, and in Wisconsin in connection with Mr. Strang, we next hear of William Smith in the winter and spring of 1850, visiting those who had been members of the church in Illinois and Kentucky, teaching "lineal priesthood as applied to the Presidency of the church." That is, he taught that his brother Joseph's eldest son had a right by virtue of lineage to succeed to the Presidency of the church; but also taught in connection with this that it was his right as the only surviving brother of the former President, uncle and natural guardian of the "seed" of Joseph the prophet, to stand, in the interim, as president pro tem of the church.—Roberts, p. 23.

The inference conveyed in this language is that William Smith did not teach "lineal priesthood as applied to the Presidency of the church" until the winter of 1850. But to make it clearer that Mr. Roberts does so affirm we quote a positive assertion found on page 65:—

Not until 1850 did he begin to proclaim the right of "young Joseph" to be the President of the church; and then not by any virtue of appointment from his father, but by right of lineage; and with this movement on his part originates the claims of Mr. Smith to the Presidency.

That this statement is false appears from the following extract from a letter written from St. Louis, Missouri, November 22, 1845, by James Kay, and published in the Millennial Star for May 1, 1846:—

Doubtless you will have heard of William Smith's apostasy. He is endeavoring to "make a raise" in this city. After he left Nauvoo he went to Galena, when he published a "proclamation" to the church, calling upon them to renounce the Twelve as an unauthorized, tyrannical, abominable, bloodthirsty set of scoundrels. I suppose you have his pamphlet. I did think to send one the day he landed here, but felt inclined to hear and see his course a little while. Reports were daily coming from east to west of William's unmanly conduct; sorry I was to hear them, they seemed so well authenticated. He contends the church is disorganized, having no head; that the Twelve are not, nor ever were, ordained to be head of the church; that Joseph's priesthood was to be conferred on his posterity to all future generations, and that young Joseph is the only legal successor to the presidency of this church, etc. G. J. Adams is William's right hand man, and comes out as little Joseph's spokesman; they intend holding a conference here this week and organizing the church on the old original plan, according to the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, Book of Mormon, and New Testament. Discussions are to take place between the Rigdonites and Josephites on the claims of each to the "Mormon Throne." Two high priests have been disfellowshipped, one seventy, and a number of other officers and members from this branch I suppose will join the Smith party.—Vol. 7, p. 134.

Here then is William Smith preaching lineal priesthood and the right of "young Joseph" to the Presidency, as early at least as the next month after action was taken against him by that faction of the church remaining at Nauvoo.

It was on the 6th of October, 1845, that the conference failed to sustain William Smith as one of the Twelve, and as Patriarch (Times and Seasons, Vol. 6, pp. 1008, 1009), and he was soon after expelled from their fellowship. What then becomes of Mr. Roberts' statement just preceding the one last above quoted, which is as follows?

Had any idea prevailed at Nauvoo that "young Joseph" was to succeed to the Presidency of the church, this man, his uncle, would have known it; and would have strengthened his own claims at that time to the right of leadership, by proclaiming himself, as he did afterwards, in 1850, the natural guardian of the one who had been anointed and ordained to succeed to the office of President. But this he did not do. On the contrary, he claimed the place for himself by virtue of being the brother of the prophet. When he failed to secure the position of leadership for himself, he followed the leadership of James J. Strang instead of supporting the claims of "young Joseph."

Certainly he would have known it; he did know it, and immediately proclaimed it. Nothing but ignorance of history, or a willful desire to deceive, would lead a man to blunder as Mr. Roberts has blundered in the above. In either case, is he the proper man to "preserve from error those not acquainted with . . . the facts of church history"?

We do not appear as an apologist for Elder William Smith. We neither approve nor deny much that is said of him by Mr. Roberts and his associates; but enough has been said to show that neither he nor anyone else could consistently be condemned by the inaccurate evidence and false statements of Mr. Roberts.

In regard to Mr. Roberts' labored effort to convict Lucy Smith, the mother of the prophet, and others, of indorsing the claims of William Smith, we have but little to say. Mr. Roberts relies solely upon extracts from the private journal of John Taylor to sustain his allegation. We have not access to Mr. Taylor's journal, so cannot give this testimony a thorough examination; but after a careful examination of Mr. Roberts' work we cannot accept as conclusive his presentation of the evidence.

Again, it seems strange that if this is true no evidence is brought, except from this one private source. And again, if we admit it all to be true, what is there in it? Suppose that Lucy Smith et al. did indorse the claims of Elder William Smith, it does not prove that they had heard no other claims. Besides, as we have shown, William Smith's position then (June, 1845,) or soon after, was that of lineal priesthood. Mr. Roberts could have spared himself the mortification of "quoting" "this good and noble woman," for he has accomplished nothing by it.

CHAPTER 3.

In his third chapter Mr. Roberts introduces Lyman Wight and George Miller, as follows:—

It can scarcely be said that either Lyman Wight or Bishop George Miller sought to lead the church; but they were guilty of insubordination to the constituted authorities and lead [led] away parties with them, and illustrate the truth of President Young's prediction about the failure of such persons, hence we consider their course.—Roberts, p. 26.

Here Mr. Roberts makes his characteristic mistake of assuming the point at issue by concluding that the authorities whom Elder Wight and Bishop Miller opposed were properly in authority. With the same reckless assumption he continues:—

Lyman Wight was a strong, bold man; fixed in his friendship for the prophet Joseph, and true to him under many trying circumstances; but withal rather difficult to control, and after the death of Joseph soon manifested a disposition of insubordination to authority.—Ibid.

What caused this "strong, bold man," this man "difficult to control," to be fixed in his friendship and true to the prophet Joseph? Such characters are not controlled by fear or easily moved by influences. There is but one solution; viz.: Lyman Wight fully and sincerely indorsed the doctrine preached and the policy pursued by Joseph Smith. If then Mr. Roberts' estimate of the man is correct, it follows that if these so-called "constituted authorities" had been preaching the doctrine and following the policy which he had so ardently espoused, Lyman Wight would have been fixed in his friendship and true to them.

Mr. Roberts continues:—

As far back as February, 1844, he had expressed a desire to go to Texas, and after the death of the prophet seemed determined that the church should be removed there. For some time a number of persons had worked under his and Bishop George Miller's direction in the pineries of Wisconsin, getting out lumber for the Temple. In the latter part of August, 1844, President Young desired him to return to the pineries and continue his labors; but he refused and expressed a determination to carry out his own views, and be the controller of his own conduct regardless of the counsel of the presiding quorum. He therefore went to Texas instead of to Wisconsin, taking a small company of saints with him and settling in Texas, not far from the present site of Austin.—Roberts, p. 26.

So far as the issues between us are concerned, it does not make a particle of difference whether Lyman Wight went to Texas or to Wisconsin; but to show the utter unreliability of this champion of "the order of the priesthood of God and facts of church history," we will quote briefly from the journal of Lyman Wight, now before us. It is true that he and Bishop George Miller had been directing a company in getting out lumber in the pineries in Wisconsin, but he returned to Nauvoo about April 20, 1844, and at the time of the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith he was with others of the Twelve in the Eastern States. He again returned to Nauvoo, arriving August 6, 1844. In his journal under date of March 17, 1845, is this entry:—

From the 6th day of August, 1844, until the 28th, I was making preparation to start on the mission appointed unto me previous to my going to the city of Washington. Accordingly, on the 28th of August, I left Nauvoo accompanied by one hundred and sixty-four persons on board the steamer General Brooke, and landed at Prairie La Cross [Wisconsin], up the Mississippi River four hundred and fifty miles above Nauvoo, on the first day of September, 1844. From that time until the present we have been engaged in cutting wood, laboring in the pinery, and at various kinds of business to procure a living.

So he did go to the pineries just when Mr. Roberts says he refused to go; not by request of Elder Young, but to fulfill a mission previously given him.

If Mr. Roberts disputes the above we are ready to furnish names of men who were in this expedition, some of whom are communicants of the church which Mr. Roberts represents.

Again, Mr. Roberts says:—

For his insubordination Lyman Wight was excommunicated from the church, the action being taken in Salt Lake City, 1848. The company of saints that followed him were soon scattered as sheep that have wandered from the fold and the care of the shepherd; but some few of them finally found their way back into the church. Lyman Wight lived in obscurity in Texas, unknown by the world, unhonored, without a following, and died outside the church of Christ, with which he had suffered so much during the persecutions it passed through in Missouri.—Roberts, pp. 26, 27.

As we have said of others, so we say of Elder Wight, we do not appear as his apologist. That he erred in some things, is conceded. But to more fully get the measure of Mr. Roberts, let us compare a few facts with the above statement: Elder Wight retained a considerable following until his death. In the spring of 1858 he started to move with this body to the northern States, when death overtook him, on March 31, of that year, at San Antonio, Texas. After his death the company continued their journey, still maintaining an organization; and though their numbers were diminished from time to time, the organization was not entirely extinct until it was absorbed by the Reorganization; when the most of its members, true to the teachings of Elder Wight on lineal priesthood, accepted the presidency of Joseph Smith, the son of the prophet. Some few left Lyman Wight's following at different times and went to Utah, but a part of them have returned and are now members of the Reorganization. Two of the posterity of Lyman Wight now occupy positions in the Quorum of Twelve; two in the quorums of Seventy; several hold other offices; besides others of his followers hold responsible positions in the Reorganization.

At the time of Lyman Wight's death the Galveston News, then the leading paper in Texas, had this to say editorially of him and his following:—

We believe we have omitted to notice the death of Mr. Lyman Wight, who for some thirteen years past has been the leader of a small and independent Mormon settlement in Texas. As far as we have been able to learn, these Mormons have proved themselves to be most excellent citizens of our State, and we are no doubt greatly indebted to the deceased leader for the orderly conduct, sobriety, industry, and enterprise of his colony. Mr. Wight first came to Texas in November, 1845, and has been with his colony on our extreme frontier ever since, moving still farther west as settlements formed around him, thus always being the pioneer of advancing civilization, affording protection against the Indians. He has been the first to settle five new counties, and prepare the way for others. He has at different times built three extensive saw and grist mills, etc.

How is this for living in obscurity, unknown to the world and unhonored and without a following? So far as his dying outside the church is concerned, that is begging the question again. Was it the church that expelled him?

Where would this guardian of historic facts lead us if we were blind enough to follow?

Mr. Roberts' strictures on Bishop Miller are without material point, and the eloquent effusion with which he closes the chapter is only interesting on general principles. The application is farfetched.

It might be well, however, in this connection, to give Bishop Miller's version of why he separated from what Mr. Roberts is pleased to call the church. In June, 1849, Bishop Miller and Richard Hewett, then in Texas, each wrote a letter of inquiry to J. J. Strang, both writing on the same sheet of paper. (It is now before us.) Elder Hewett writes:—

Now I want to know what your mind is about men having the priesthood having more wives than one. The principle is taught amongst all that I have been with. Some have from 2 to 10 or 20, and some have none. If it is consistent I want you to let me know when you write to me, and I want you to write as soon as you get this so Brother Miller and myself will know what to do. You must excuse me for asking so much, but you must bear with me, as I confess I am ignorant. Bro. Miller says their whoring will send them all to hell. You can see Brother Hyrum's epistle to me on that subject in the Times and Seasons, 15th March, 1844, if I don't mistake. I don't find such things in the Book of Covenants, nor in the Book of Mormon, nor in the writings of the apostles, and I don't want to be deceived nor flattered any more.

Bishop Miller's statement, as given by Elder Hewett, is not elegant but very expressive, and gives us an idea of why he left Mr. Roberts' so-called church. The strong presumption is that when he penned these words Mr. Hewitt had not heard of the so-called revelation on polygamy, and if not, Bishop Miller, who writes on the same paper with Mr. Hewitt, certainly had not. It is rather an honor than a disgrace to be expelled from some churches, and if Bishop Miller was right, this is one of them. For an extract from Bishop Miller's letter here referred to, see Church History, Vol. 2, pp. 793, 794.

CHAPTER 4.

WE make these chapters to correspond in number with those of Mr. Roberts' for the sake of more ready reference, hence some will be very short. In his fourth chapter he treats of the work of J. J. Strang; but there is nothing in it to demand especial attention from us. This much can be said for Elder Strang—that he possessed the courage of his convictions and was both willing and anxious to discuss the issues between members of the Twelve who indorsed Brigham Young, and himself. And as these were living issues of the time, and as Mr. Roberts admits "he succeeded in deceiving many," it occurs to us that they should have been willing to have canvassed these points and thus protected those who were being deceived. Instead of this they adopted that craven, cowardly policy which they have followed ever since, of refusing to meet their opponents in honorable controversy, while boasting loudly of their own pretensions and seeking to slander their competitors.

Mr. Strang wrote two of their number, respectfully inviting a public investigation. They penciled a reply upon the same sheet of paper and returned it. In that reply they scarcely maintained the dignity of gentlemen, to say nothing of apostles of Jesus Christ. That paper is now before us and reads as follows:—

PHILADELPHIA, August 30, 1846.

Messrs. J. Taylor and Orson Hyde:—

Knowing from your public proceedings, as well as otherwise, that you and others appointed with you, claim the right and are attempting to use the power of dictating all the affairs of the Church of Jesus Christ in all the world, not under the direction of the First Presidency thereof, but independently, I suggest to you the propriety of your publicly showing by what means you are authorized to act as leaders of said church, and offer to publicly discuss that question with you in this city or any other proper place that will suit your convenience. Your answer to this left at the house of Jacob Gibson, N. E. corner of Third and Dock St., near the Post Office, will receive immediate attention.

Most respectfully,

JAMES J. STRANG.

Sir:—After Lucifer was cut off and thrust down to hell, we have no knowledge that God condescended to investigate the subject or right of authority with him. Your case has been disposed of by the authorities of the church. Being satisfied with our own power and calling, we have no disposition to ask from whence yours came.

Respectfully,

ORSON HYDE.

JOHN TAYLOR.

With this we dismiss Mr. Roberts' work, so far as it relates to J. J. Strang, with merely the suggestion, that after Elders Hyde and Taylor had thus declined to meet him while living, it is unmanly for Mr. Roberts, while representing the same organization, to attack him when dead.

THE WOMAN CLOTHED WITH THE SUN.

AND there appeared a great wonder in heaven; a woman clothed with the sun, and the moon under her feet, and upon her head a crown of twelve stars.—Rev. 12: 1.

This woman was pained to be delivered of something. And there was another power there that sought the destruction of the woman and her child, and when the child was caught away to God and his throne, he sought the destruction of the woman.

And the woman fled into the wilderness, where she hath a place prepared of God, that they should feed her there a thousand two hundred and three score days.—Rev. 12: 6.

And to the woman were given two wings of a great eagle, that she might fly into the wilderness, into her place, where she is nourished . . . from the face of the serpent.—Rev. 1: 14.

And the dragon being defeated in destroying her, made war with the remnant of her seed.

I call especial attention to the remnant, for we shall see that the dragon was successful in deceiving a large portion of those that once had been her adherents, by innovations of doctrine of the true woman or church, not destroying at once the true worship, but by degrees introduced pagan worship, until the beautiful gospel that the first woman that was clothed with the sun brought to the earth was all thrown away, and they had another form of worship and church organization very different from the first; but this adverse power succeeded in deceiving the people, and we find in Revelation 17: 1-5 another woman that has no resemblance to the first one, but is arrayed in purple and scarlet color and decked with gold and precious stones and pearls, having a golden cup in her hand full of abominations and filthiness of her fornication, and upon her forehead was a name written, "Mystery, Babylon the Great, the Mother of Harlots and Abominations of the Earth." And this woman was "drunken with the blood of the saints, and with the blood of the martyrs of Jesus."

Now we come to the parting of the ways. Nearly all of the so-called Christian world say this is the same woman of Revelation 12 that flew into the wilderness, because this last one was found in the wilderness. The first was from heaven and the last from the earth, and is composed of many of the people that were once of the first church, but had been deceived by false teachers, as spoken of by Paul, where he says:—

For I know this, after my departing shall grievous wolves enter in among you, not sparing the flock. And of your own selves shall men arise, speaking perverse things, to draw away disciples after them.—Acts 20: 29, 30.

This was literally fulfilled in the woman found in the wilderness. Now if we will follow this woman on down the stream of time we will find her located on the seven hills of Rome, and still spreading her pernicious doctrines over the whole world. And is this the woman that God is going to bring out of the wilderness of sin, as some would have it? Is not this Mystery Babylon that Christ will destroy when he comes again (Revelation 18: 1-7), where she sits a queen, and says I am no widow and shall see no sorrow? Surely this is not the woman that fled into the wilderness with the wings of a great eagle, to a place prepared of God for her, but is truly the Mother of Harlots; and if a mother then she has daughters, and may have sons. If the woman represents the church, which it certainly does, then this mother's children must be churches, and would partake more or less of the characteristics of their mother. And what do we find? a literal fulfillment of the prophecy of Revelation 17, and who can say that she will ever come out of the wilderness and become the bride, the Lamb's wife, after defiling herself with the kings of the earth, and bringing forth so many illegitimate children, and says that she is no widow, and shall never see sorrow.

Now let us turn on the searchlight of truth and look for the woman that fled into the wilderness, where she had a place prepared of God, where she should remain twelve hundred and sixty years in a literal wilderness, out from the habitation of man. To find when she will come out we will have to know when she went in, and our only way is to do as the Irishman did about the gopher hole, when asked what the gopher did with the dirt from the hole. He said that he began at the other end of the hole. We must either begin where history tells us the Papacy succeeded in overthrowing the last vestige of the true church, or where we find it coming out of the wilderness.

Mosheim tells us that the Papacy had full control of the whole world in 570 A. D.; then this added to 1,260 would bring us to 1830, when the woman, or church, should come out of the wilderness. And what is our evidence that she has come out? The Bible tells us she must remain in the wilderness a specific time, and when that time is fulfilled we must look for her appearance again. We will now turn to the latter revelations of God to his children, and we find in Doctrine and Covenants:—

And to none else will I grant this power, to receive this same testimony, among this generation, in this, the beginning of the rising up, and the coming forth of my church out of the wilderness; clear as the moon and fair as the sun, and terrible as an army with banners.—D. C. 4:3.

Now we see that God is doing just what he said he would do, and in his own way, for his ways are not man's ways. If we will take notice, there was a remnant of the seed of the woman that went into the wilderness that the great whore or apostate church made war with. These are those that had the testimony of Jesus, and their seed were to continue on the earth until the church came out again, for we find it cropping out all along the 1,260 years in the martyrs and Reformers. And when America was discovered, the seed of the heavenly woman came to this country to get away from the persecution of the old mother and her daughters, to a land where they could worship God according to their own consciences, in harmony with Revelation 12:6, where God had a place prepared for her. And in proof of this country being the place, we refer you to Doctrine and Covenants:—

And for this purpose have I established the Constitution of this land, by the hands of wise men whom I raised up unto this very purpose, and redeemed the land by the shedding of blood.—D. C. 98:10.

And in further proof of this being the land where the church was to come out of the wilderness, we cite:—

Therefore, thus saith the Lord unto you, with whom the priesthood hath continued through the lineage of your fathers, for ye are lawful heirs, according to the flesh, and have been hid from the world with Christ in God: therefore your life and the priesthood hath remained, and must needs remain, through you and your lineage, until the restoration of all things spoken by the mouth of all the holy prophets since the world began.—D. C. 84:3.

This with the testimony of living witnesses that the church has come out of the wilderness we see in the State of New York a church coming out of the literal wilderness by the hands of a young man that makes no pretensions to learning or having any of the qualifications of a church builder, but comes with a message from God delivered to him by the hand of an angel in fulfillment of Revelation 14:6, when John saw another angel flying through the midst of heaven having the everlasting gospel. This angel delivered to this young man authority and knowledge to bring forth out of the wilderness the church that had fled there 1,260 years before. Count back from this time it will take us to 570, when the woman flew into the wilderness. If the church of 1830 is not the true one, where is it, for the time is past for its appearance. The ancient church was clothed with the sun, typical of the glory of God; and the moon under her feet, typical of the law of Moses; and upon her head a crown of twelve stars, typical queen of the twelve apostles, and authority to administer in the church of God. Here we have the pattern of the woman that fled into the wilderness, and if the church that the young man brings out of the wilderness is just like it in every particular, why not accept it as the one that was to come in God's appointed time?

We invite the world to compare the work brought forth by Joseph Smith with the word of God, and if it is in harmony with what has been spoken by the prophets of old, to accept it; and if they find any objections to it to let us hear from them, for we stand ready to defend it against all comers. As we have shown that a great calamity befell the ancient church, that it fell away, and there was only a remnant left that had the testimony of Jesus, will not history repeat itself in the latter church? We find that history, true to itself, has been repeated, for after the coming forth of the church out of the wilderness she flourished for about fourteen years, when her prophet was slain by wicked men, and internal strife ensued, and the question of who should be leader of the church; and while there were many who sought to be leaders, there was one more successful than any of the others in getting a following, and that was one Brigham Young. And here we want to show that this man fulfilled the prophecy of Paul in the second chapter of second Thessalonians where he sat in the temple of God declaring that he was God, and exalted himself above all that is called God. This falling away was to be just before the coming of Christ, for Paul admonished the saints not to be troubled, for as that the day of Christ was at hand, for there must come a falling away first. We ask the world, was this the falling away when the church first went into apostasy? We answer that it could not have been, for the man of sin spoken of is called the son of perdition, which the Pope of Rome could not have been, for to become a son of perdition he must have received the Holy Ghost and have sinned against it, or he could not become a son of perdition, and this we are not willing to admit; and that the Pope ever sat in the temple of God we deny, for God never recognized St. Peters at Rome as his temple any more than Christ recognized the Pharisees as his people; but in the case of Brigham Young, he did sit in the temple of God, a temple that had been built by the command of God, and in that temple he fulfilled the prediction of Paul to the letter; and more than that, in it instituted the infamous endowment and plural wife system, for which God rejected it and them, and they fled into the valleys of the mountains, or the salt land of Jeremiah 17: 6, and as history continues to repeat itself, we find a remnant left as in the former church, that had the testimony of Jesus, that would not follow this brood to the mountains, but held fast to the rod of iron until the legal heir or proper seed should come, but remained faithful, and were blessed of God, and told by the Spirit to wait until he should come, which they did, continuing faithful in prayer until Joseph, the oldest son of the martyred prophet came forward by direct command of God and took his place at the head of the church; and we present to you the church that came out of the wilderness in direct fulfillment of the prophecies of the Bible, and say to you that God has set his hand again the second time to recover the remnant of his people. Look, ye ends of the world, for this is God's work and not man's.

In hope of eternal life,

E. KEELER.

THE 2,300 DAYS.

NOT intending to mix in with the brethren, but merely to draw the attention of Elder A. to his final summing up: If the 2,300 days or years did not commence until the first Universal Bishop or Pope of Rome was chosen, which, as I understand the brother, was the time when "the abomination that maketh desolate (was) set up," which transpired about or in the year 570 A. D., then if the 1,000 years' millennium and the little season do not commence until Zion shall be redeemed and Jesus come to reign, we have now left but 972 years to spread the 1,000 years and little season out upon.

Respectfully, your brother,

WILLIAM HAWKINS.

VORIS, Mo., Oct. 15, 1898.

About 750,000 Africans are in Protestant churches and 140,000 children in Protestant schools. It is stated that there is good reason to believe that Christianity will continue to spread in Africa at a much more rapid rate than ever before.

MARRIED.

WICKES—WICKES.—At Davis City, Iowa, on Sunday noon, October 23, 1898, Mr. Charles A. Wickes and Sister Minnie A. Wickes were united in marriage; ceremony by Elder H. A. Stebbins.

DIED.

DANCER.—David Dancer was born in Deerfield, Oneida County, New York, February 20, 1827, being the youngest of eleven children born to William and Phebe Dancer, four of whom died in childhood and seven came to maturity. Of the remaining five sons and two daughters all are now gone except the sister Esther, who resides with her niece, Sr. Jessie Smith, the daughter of George Dancer. Another niece, Sr. Alice Dancer, is matron of the Saints' Home. Bro. Dancer's parents removed from New York to Northern Illinois in 1837, when David was ten years old, and there he grew to manhood, laboring diligently and laying the foundation for the success that finally came to him in temporal affairs. On March 16, 1851, at the age of twenty-four years, he was united in marriage to Miss Rosalia H. Harvey, in the town of Wilton, Will County, Illinois. In 1852 and 1856 were born to them two daughters, but both died under three years of age. Also one son, Albert P., born in 1861, died in 1881, but two sons, Eugene H. and Walter H. survive their father. Sr. Rosalia died August 28, 1894, and on November 20, 1895, he married Sr. Anna, daughter of Bro. and Sr. A. K. Anderson. Two children born to them are left as comforts to the wife now so suddenly bereft. Bro. Dancer united with the church May 10, 1868, being baptized by Bro. David H. Smith. Of his own free will he at once came forward and, in a time of much need, aided the cause by giving several thousand dollars to the work. Even before he became a member he advanced a large sum towards publishing the Holy Scriptures. His business sagacity attracted the attention of Bishop I. L. Rogers, who desired him to accept office as one of his counselors, but he did not wish to be prominent, and declined until April, 1873, when he was ordained as an Elder and Bishop's counselor. In this work he served until his resignation in 1882. He had previously been ordained a High Priest in 1879.

In 1870 he became a stockholder and director in the United Order of Enoch, and assisted in purchasing lands in Decatur County, Iowa, as a nucleus for the settling of saints who might wish to locate westward, in the regions round about. In 1872 he was chosen a member of the Board of Publication, and by virtue of this office, and as one of the Bishoprific, he became one of the committee provided for by the articles of incorporation to locate a business headquarters for the church, and said locating board, being directed by the conference of April, 1876, to proceed and select such central place of business, he faithfully acted therein until a place was purchased and the removal was made to Lamoni in 1881. He brought his family to Decatur County in March, 1877.

In 1890, at the reorganization of the High Council of the church, he was chosen as one of said body and acted when need required. As a man and an officer of the church he willingly and cheerfully performed whatever he believed to be his duty, and many of his deeds were such as only men of his influence, generous character, and means can do. And all that he did was without display, for he made no effort to do things to gain either favor or applause.

He was a man of active temperament, always moving and always doing, within seasonable hours, for he was very regular in his habits. And he was never absent from home at night or over night, either far or near, unless urgent business or church affairs made it very necessary. On Sunday night, October 2, 1898, he was taken with paralysis, which made him speechless and all the right side of his body helpless. From that time every effort to speak was in vain, and he continued to decline during the three weeks ending Sunday evening, October 23, when his spirit departed, he having about noon become unconscious of everything around him. His age was 71 years, 8 months, and 3 days.

The funeral sermon was preached by Pres. Joseph Smith, assisted by Elders A. S. Cochran and H. A. Stebbins, one offering the opening and the other the closing prayer. Elder William Anderson had charge of the services, which were held at the house according to Bro. Dancer's previously expressed wish, and he was laid to rest by the side of his wife, and son, and sister Elizabeth. Elders Heman C. Smith, E. L. Kelley, H. A. Stebbins, A. S. Cochran, R. M. Elvin, F. M. Weld, R. S. Salyards, and Frank Criley acted as bearers. Bishop E. L. Kelley pronounced the benediction at the grave.

CHICAGO'S FIGHT ON VICE.

SPEECHES OF REFORMERS.

WE, the undersigned, do volunteer our loyal support in the war declared against vice and crime in the city of Chicago and solemnly pledge our time, money, and, if necessary, life itself to defending our flag, protecting our homes, and to defend our imperial city from lawlessness and dens of infamy which do now curse it.—Crusade pledge of the Young People's Christian Temperance Union.

There is no question whatever that the authorities of the city of Chicago are hand in glove with the plug-uglies of crime. I would not dare to tell all that I know and that I believe to be true. This question is the question of the hour. I believe the most important thing on the face of the earth is the redemption of the city of Chicago. If we cannot save Chicago we cannot save the country. Can it be done? Yes.—The Rev. J. Q. A. Henry.

The anti-vice crusade, begun by the Young People's Christian Temperance Union, and headed by the Rev. J. Q. A. Henry, was given a new impetus in a mass-meeting held in Central Music Hall yesterday afternoon, when 3,000 persons heard an arraignment of city officials, and disclosures of the existence of local plague spots, and contributed nearly one thousand dollars to a fund to carry on the work of purification. Many also signed pledges of general support.

It is planned to hold another large meeting next Sunday, of which announcement will be made later, and to bring about a consolidation of forces among all the organizations of Christian young people, including the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor, the Baptist Young People's Union, the Epworth League, and similar societies, to aid in carrying on the work of securing the enforcement of law in Chicago and ridding the city of vice, so far as possible.

The speakers at the Central Music Hall meeting were the Rev. Drs. Frank Crane, J. Q. A. Henry, and P. S. Henson, Jailor John Whitman, and Mrs. Charlton Edholm. The Rev. Dr. A. C. Hirst presided; Bishop Samuel Fallows offered the opening invocation.

The audience was made up largely of men, and though the movement is in the hands of the young people, the majority of those present were of middle age. Many grayhaired men and women were there. The occasion was marked by enthusiasm, the speakers being frequently interrupted by outbursts of applause, as they held out the hope that by united effort on the part of earnest men and women Chicago may be redeemed from its evils and made morally a cleaner and better city.

CITY OFFICIALS ARE BLAMED.

Dr. Frank Crane and the Rev. J. Q. A. Henry both declared the officials of Chicago are hand in glove with the forces of evil, saying the right-minded people of the city had neglected their political duties and allowed the thug element to elect the officials, and that the officials were compelled to administer affairs to the satisfaction of those who had elected them. No definite charges were made against any official in person, but Dr. Henry said evidence had been secured which he hoped would result in the indictment or prosecution of sixty saloonkeepers for keeping open all night, and that he had received complaints against many more saloons and other places of evil resort.

Dr. Hirst introduced Dr. Henry as the Roosevelt of the movement of moral Rough Riders in Chicago, who should lead his forces to victory under the banner, "Down with the Dives," with which, he said, the same leader had conducted a successful crusade against vice in San Francisco.

Dr. Henry, slight, wiry, nervous, and vigorous in his address, was listened to with close attention throughout, and was frequently applauded.

DR. HENRY'S ADDRESS.

"I am to speak to you," he said, "on the general topic of 'Down with the Dive' and by a dive I mean any immoral resort. It does not matter what may be the particular character of the crime or infamy that is carried on in any of these dens, they ought to be suppressed.

"It is worth while to remember that all these dens and criminal places in the city of Chicago are intimately, if not vitally and organically, connected with the 6,000 licensed dramshops. These are the centers of the scenes of violence and bloodshed and criminality which curse Chicago to-day.

"Something already has been done. The dives for the time being have ceased to be as bold and brazen and defiant as they were. The agitation through the press for the last ten days has been wholesome. But this is just the beginning of the crusade.

"It is difficult to deal with these problems of the dives, but we have secured evidence that we trust will result in the indictment or prosecution of sixty of these saloonkeepers who have been keeping their places open all night. We have had reported to us about forty houses and twenty-one hotels in the city of Chicago in the down-town district that are devoted absolutely and solely to improper purposes. We have found places in the city where criminal and impure literature is sold. We have found places where girls are being bought and sold, where purchases are being made of the souls of those boys and girls. We have information at hand to reach more than 100 saloons, known as dives in the localities where they are to be found, that have been reported to us."

WELL-TO-DO MEN INVOLVED.

"There is scarcely a resident street of Chicago that has not its gaming house or other place of crime. I tell you there is a fight all along the line, and any man who wants to do anything in the interest of virtue and does not do so is responsible for this condition of things. Evil and criminal and vicious elements have been back of this thing in the past and had determined to run things in the future. Let it run a little further and we will be resolved into original chaos and confusion. Only lawlessness and anarchy will remain.

"The authorities of the city of Chicago are hand and glove with the plug uglies of this phase of crime. I would not dare to tell all I know or that I believe to be true concerning the relation of these public officials with these dens of crime.

"We have a tab on some of the more respectable class of men, a good many of them well-to-do business men of the city of Chicago, and we purpose to brand every reputable man in the city of Chicago who has a wife and children at home and who is visiting places he should not. We want the community to know it.

"Out of these sixty men against whom we have secured evidence of keeping all-night saloons, three are Aldermen for the city of Chicago, men who have sworn to defend and enforce the law and to preserve the purity of the laws and keep order in the city or Chicago.

"I do not say that the Mayor or that any one man is responsible for it. I say the people who have the administration of public affairs, who are put there by these dive-keepers and scoundrels and thugs, are compelled to execute their will, and will continue to execute their will until the righteous wrath of this community will be so manifest that they know they dare not do it longer.

"The respectable people are largely responsible, the society people, the rich people, the good people; yes, and some of them, I am told, are church people. Let judgment begin at the altar. If the 600 or 700 pulpits in Chicago, without fear or favor, would support this crusade all hell would tremble. And if the minister in any of these pulpits has not the moral courage to do it, he ought to get out.

"What is the matter with the church in the city of Chicago? We are handicapped by reason of our association with sin, and a winking at crime and blinking at vice and sharing in the spoils, the profit of profligacy and bribery and bloodshed. I suppose there are some people who do not like that. That don't make a particle of difference to me. I am willing to die to tell the truth.

"Do you imagine, you respectable people who stay away from the polls, that rogues and criminals are going to give Chicago a clean government? You are badly deceived if you do. This question is a question of the hour, and I believe the most important thing on the face of the earth is the redemption of the city of Chicago. I don't believe that the redemption of London or of Paris or of New York from vice and crime can begin to compare with the importance of the redemption of Chicago. Chicago is in the heart of this great nation. God Almighty has planted it in the midst of that great Mississippi Valley upon which the future destiny of this country and the destiny of the world is dependent. Therefore we Chicago people ought to come together and clean house. It has been a good while since these stables were swept and the odor is terrible. If you don't believe it go down into these places. Do you think it is delightful work? It is most effective.

"Can we put down vice? Can we close these places? Can we better Chicago? The law provides that the saloons shall be closed at midnight and on Sunday; that no music shall be had in these halls; that there shall be no play, no exhibition, no performance, and no singing in these places; that no evil-doer shall be found hanging around these saloons, and that nobody shall make merchandise of womanhood and manhood and girlhood. I say, unless these laws can be enforced popular government is a fraud and a sham. If we cannot save the cities we cannot save the nation. If we cannot save Chicago we cannot save the country. Can it be done? Yes. We are not asking for the closing up of the 6,000 saloons. We do claim that there is reason for believing that this hydra-headed monster shall be driven back within the confines of reasonable and righteous law."

Dr. Henry then said the young people were ready and that there was enough consecration and enthusiasm. What was wanted was organization. He proposed making every young people's society, connected with any church, a nucleus for work. He then asked for all volunteers in the audience to sign the pledge card, but not unless they meant all it said.

The speaker said the work cost money and its continuance must depend on the support it received. His own time and what means he could spare, he said, were given, and he was aware spies were watching the crusaders and the work might prove dangerous. A collection was taken and nearly $1,000 secured.

ADDRESS BY DR. FRANK CRANE.

Dr. Hirst, in announcing the purpose of the meeting, said there were already foregleams of the triumph of the crusade and he congratulated the workers on having as a leader Dr. Henry, with whom the speaker had been engaged in a like movement in San Francisco. He then introduced the Rev. Dr. Frank Crane to speak on "Enforcement of Law." The speaker said in part:—

"We always have a tendency when we get together to degenerate into a mutual admiration society. This crusade may be successful. I have my doubts. You have tackled a nice job. [Laughter.] And before we get through with it there are a good many times when your souls will be tried—whether the gamblers are tried or not. [Laughter.]

"We have our churches open on Sunday. Those fellows in the other camp are running full blast every day in the week. They are organized constantly. They don't take summer vacations. We have a crusade once in a while and after the enthusiasm dies down we quit. They don't quit. They are organized in the constitution and framework of our municipal government.

"Our government is devised especially to give the criminal classes the control. They have it now; they always have had it, and as far as I can see they always will have it, and for these reasons: The first reason is the indifference of the large majority of the people. They are decent people and love law, order, and decency. They don't want the dives sending out their advocates through all the streets of the city ruining and debauching them, but the trouble is they are indifferent about it. They principally all want to get rich.

"Now, upon that indifference of the general public comes the next fact, which is that our city officials are elected by the national political party organizations. As long as that is the case they will be elected by the dives of the city. This criminal element makes its living out of the violation of law, consequently is compact, easily welded together, and perfectly under the control of its leaders, who can throw its vote either way. Therefore, it is the business of every national party organization in this city to keep hold of that easily controlled element. The Republican committee of Chicago and the Democratic committee of Chicago are banded together and are hand in glove with the gambling folks and the saloonkeepers and the divekeepers.

"And that is not because they are such bad men; simply because it is a matter of business. That element is easily swayed. While they are holding it they say to you: 'Good people, O, be loyal to your party. Never go back on the old party,' and if they can keep you from jumping the fence and then hold this rotten element compact they have the election.

"That is the element that has always elected the officials of the city of Chicago. Now, there is no more reason for the presence of these abominable districts which are springing up every day on the South Side than for burning down the town, and they could not be if we had officials that paid attention to the enforcement of the law.

"They send out their police officers, not to enforce the law but to supervise the violation of the law. That is what they want to do. We elect them to fight with crime. They compound with crime. We elect them to make war upon the criminal element; they are at peace with the criminal element.

"You never can abolish the bagnio and the saloon and the gambling hell. We don't expect to; and neither do we expect to terrify one single heart by law. We expect men will break out in crime as long as their hearts are evil. We hire the police officials to fight that element, and they have gone to the bad with the enemy.

"But the enemy is in confusion, for God is helping us. In spite of the insolence, of the absolute 'cinch' that the enemy is supposed to have on you, if we can get the young people organized in this country we shall create a wave of public sentiment, and public sentiment alone has been able to overturn the institutions of corruption in this country. It is an opportunity for patriotism. If America is ever destroyed it is not to be by a foreign foe, but by the by the rottenness at home.

"There is a vast army of criminals here. Go out and meet them. You can only do it with loving hearts and consecrated hands. Here is a vast army of scarlet women that must be overcome. You must go out and bring them to Christ, upon whose feet rained the harlot's tears. You cannot do this with your swords and staves; you can only do it by purifying your own hearts and going out with the Holy Ghost in your hearts. That is the kind of patriotism you want."

Jailer John Whitman read a paper on "Juvenile Criminals," in which he took the ground more effort should be made to prevent crime by caring properly for children and preventing them from growing up to lives of crime through the influence of evil surroundings.

Mrs. Charlton Edholm said that in the crusade efforts should be made to rescue women from lives of shame.

"Since I have been in this work of rescue," she said, "I have talked with thousands of these precious girls; I have talked with hundreds of policemen. I have found out that these girls are not in the life of shame because there is an organized system of vice in America. It is because of the traffic in drinking. That is what makes the demand for girls."

Miss Eva M. Shontz said: "Chicago is going to lead the American public onward and upward to victory against the worst slavery that the world has ever seen. I thank God that the press of the city of Chicago is championing this movement royally and grandly. I believe that God is going to bless this crusade and lead us on and on in his righteous cause."

Dr. P. S. Henson was called on, but said it was so late he would wait and speak next Sunday afternoon. "I haven't a doubt of victory," said he. "I believe the day is not far distant when our city, redeemed, regenerated, and disenthralled, shall be the glory of the whole land."

Dr. Henry then asked for a showing of the hands of those who thought another meeting should be held next week. Nearly every one present raised his hand.

Bishop Fallows of St. Paul's Reformed Episcopal Church preached last evening on "The Crusade Against Vice." He said in part:—

"That vice is rampant in our city no one with his eyes open can deny. Evidence has accumulated to prove that both State and municipal laws are flagrantly disregarded in the conduct of saloons, in the menacing influences of disorderly houses, and the prevalence of various forms of gambling. Great numbers of young girls

TEMPLE LOT SUIT.

THERE have been some rather disparaging remarks made concerning the prosecution of the Temple Lot suit, the cost of such prosecution, and the failure to gain the end sought. It may be of interest to all, and a possible reproof to those who have been trying to fix the blame of disaster on somebody, to learn the few facts upon which the Bishop proceeded in prosecuting the suit, and help to find who, if anybody, was in fault.

It had been pretty generally believed that the Reorganized Church, as the successor of the church of 1830, 1833, and 1838, was justly entitled to the piece of land in Independence, Missouri, known as "The Temple Lot."

It was known that an investigation by Bishop G. A. Blakeslee had resulted in the discovery of the heirs of Oliver Cowdery and Edward Partridge, and the purchase of a piece of the Temple Lot lying west of that portion claimed and occupied by the Church of Christ (called commonly, Hedrickites).

It was also known that about 1882 the brethren of the Church of Christ had fenced the lot which they held, thereby assuming actual possession, and that if the Reorganized Church had any title the statute of limitations was running against such title, and that unless it was intended to abandon any and all claims entirely, suit for possession must be begun without further delay.

The subject was brought up at the conference of 1891, held at Kirtland, Ohio, on the fourth day of the session, and the foregoing information elicited. There was a general exchange of ideas on the subject and the following formulated and presented:—

Resolved, "That the Bishopric be authorized to take such steps to remove the cloud of title to real estate in Independence, Missouri, as may be deemed wise and proper by them."

Upon the authority thus granted and in pursuance of the duty thus imposed the Bishopric proceeded, instituted suit within the statutory time after the Church of Christ had taken actual possession of the lot by fencing it.

During the prosecution of the suit and pending the final action of the courts, at the April session of 1894, at Lamoni (the 17th), the following was introduced, adopted, and became the order of the conference:—

Whereas, in the prosecution of the Temple Lot suit, questions and settlement of title and property interests are likely to further arise requiring attention, therefore be it

Resolved, that the Bishopric be authorized and instructed to look after the same, if found necessary, and to take such steps as shall be deemed necessary for the good of the body and in justice to all parties concerned.

This was designed, evidently, to empower the Bishopric to attend to such matters involving the interests of the church by reason of the Temple Lot suit and see that the church secured its rights and that no one was injured in so doing.

The result of the suit is well known; the church failed to get the decree for possession of the lot, and has met the loss occasioned by the costs attending the suit.

The subject of the Temple Lot again came up on April 14, at the session for 1896, at Kirtland, when the following was adopted:—

Resolved, that the First Presidency and Bishop be appointed a committee to protect the interest of the church in the Independence Temple Lot property.

The Presidency was consulted by the Bishopric on all measures adopted and steps taken in regard to the Temple Lot, and the effort to secure the place, both before the death of Bishop G. A. Blakeslee and thereafter. The President was present at all the important consultations with attorneys, and at the trials both before the Missouri court, at Kansas City, and the court of appeals, at St. Louis; and is satisfied that all was done that could have been done to secure a fair presentation to the courts of the claims of the church to the property in question. That we failed because the church did not begin soon enough, was not the fault of the Bishopric. Some blame may possibly attach to the Presidency for not urging procedure long before, but the Bishopric proceeded as soon as authorized to do so; and for the failure to succeed and the cost of that failure in money, the church as a whole is responsible, one as much as the other.

The church gained every point contended for but the possession of the land.

AN ELOQUENT PASSAGE.

THE following eloquent passages are from an address of the Primate of the Church of England, upon the occasion of a late visit to Canterbury Cathedral, sent us by some one in a slip from the Yorkshire Post for October 12, 1898. It will be found to be interesting from the subjects spoken upon, Invocation of Saints and Prayers for the Dead:—

Let it be granted that those who pray to the saints, if they be properly instructed, do not worship them but only ask for their aid, just as we may ask a living man to give us his prayers, yet the passage from asking an invisible being to help us is so dangerously near to putting such a being in a divine position that our church dare not and will not run the risk. There is nothing like such prayers in the Bible, and the Church of England will not permit them to her members; and for these reasons, and for other reasons like these, the Church of England has swept away all worship except the worship of God himself. No worship is allowed even to the Mother of our Lord, the Blessed Virgin; no worship is allowed to any apostles, no invocation to any saints, and in order to guard against all breaches and temptations to breaches of this rule even the appearance of such worship is forbidden. It is allowed to a man to adore Christ present in the sacrament if he believes him to be there present, but it is not allowed to anyone to use any other external mark of adoration except that of kneeling to receive the consecrated elements. The priest is not allowed to elevate the elements before the people lest perchance they should be tempted to worship those elements and not only Christ himself—a temptation of which the well-known case of Mr. Bennett shows that man may easily be liable. The worship of the saints prevailed in the church for many centuries, but the church has a right to learn by experience, and experience has shown that the practice is dangerous, and that our church is therefore justified in returning to the usages of the apostles and of the apostolic ages, when such practices were unknown.

The one thing that can be said for such worship of those good and holy men who have passed away from this present life is that it seems to give reality to the belief in the communion of saints, living and departed. It seems to substitute a whole kingdom of living and loving fellow members of the church behind the veil for the darkness which now seems to stand before us while we think of those who have departed this life. The other world seems easier to believe in when it is not only peopled with those who have gone there from among us—with apostles, with martyrs, with leaders of the faith, with holy men and women who have exemplified in their lives on earth their faith in the reality of heaven—but also the thought that all these are able to hear us and know what is happening to us, and possibly may be able to help us, if by no other means, at any rate by their prayers. This seems to make that other world so much more real, and the doctrine of the communion of saints so much more living, that no man can wonder at the strong attraction which has made, and still makes, some Christians long to join in apparently so beautiful a form of Christian devotion. But the basis of all this, after all, is not knowledge, but imagination. God's revelation has made known to us that this other world exists, but it has not pleased God to reveal its secrets in the fullness that we long for. We know that our loved ones are there, and that they are there in the hands of a tender Father and loving Savior. But we are told no more, and we have no right to lift the veil which he has not lifted. All prayers to any but God himself in the three persons of the Trinity, and all invocations addressed to those who are passed away from this present life, are alike condemned by the Church of England, and are not allowed to her members.

But to pass on. There is, of course, a very great difference between praying to the departed and praying for them. They are in God's hands, but it is possible that he may allow our prayers to help them; and we cannot point out any evil that is likely to come from such prayers, provided only that we do not allow ourselves to be led into adopting dreams and fictions concerning their condition. We do not know, we cannot know, for God has not told us, what is happening to them in that other world, and we have no right to set up inventions of our own and adapt our worship to such inventions. What they may need in order to be fitted for the final entrance into perfect happiness we cannot tell. We are told that there will be at the last day some whose work will be burned, but who nevertheless will themselves be saved, and we see men die who seem to be forgiven, but nevertheless are so full of imperfections that we can hardly believe them as yet fit for heaven. They are not sanctified, they have not that holiness without which no man can see the Lord. We have no right to invent accounts of the way by which they may be purified. We know that they will be changed when the Lord comes, but the nature, the manner, and the process of that change is not made known. To pray for the dead is not forbidden by the New Testament, and it is not forbidden by the Church of England, and our ecclesiastical courts accordingly have so decided it.

HERALD OFFICE NEEDS.

THE Bishop, who is ex officio, President of the Board of Publication, and Bro. Frank Criley, who is Business Manager, are anxious to have the present year close up with a long step forward in the finances of the office. They desire to make preparation for issuing the third volume of Church History by securing additional orders and sales for the second volume. Cheaper or more desirable and valuable literature is not available to the readers of the HERALD. Note the following, and other references to the third volume and you will see what is desired:—

THIRD VOLUME CHURCH HISTORY.

The General Conference ordered the publication of the third volume of Church History. But not that the Herald Office should run in debt to get it out when the second volume is not yet paid for. The third volume is needed badly. It will be specially interesting, but the office must get out of debt on the second volume first.

HERALD AND ENSIGN.

THE late apparent controversy in HERALD and Ensign about the official character of the one and the private enterprise of the other, was not a matter of the seeking of the HERALD editors. We have studiously endeavored to mind our own business in our own way, and leave the brethren of the Ensign to do theirs in their way.

The Ensign originated in a design to aid the work in the Missouri districts. No thought was entertained to make it the rival of the HERALD at the time it was started. Rivalry, however, resulted; possibly with no blame attaching to anybody; and in some places the Ensign displaced the HERALD.

We have, as editors, taken no part in this rivalry. We respected the right of the brethren to push their enterprise; believed that the intent was to do good work for the Master; and concede that many have been helped to the good way by the Ensign. We cheerfully concede this, without in any wise contrasting the claims of the two papers, overpraising the one or disparaging the other.

It will be seen by the notice given by Brn. E. L. Kelley and Frank Criley, of the Board of Publication, that they on behalf of the Board have carried the instruction of the conference into effect; and that it will remain for the conference to ratify their act, or leave the Ensign still a personal enterprise. We should dislike to see the usefulness of either journal broken; and trust that under the changed auspices good work may be done by both.

We cannot forbear suggesting, however, that the HERALD is the property of the church, has always been, and likely ever will be until its publication is abandoned, if that should ever be done, and being such property of the church, every member of the church should feel that he has a direct and personal interest in its success, and should aid it in every way he can. If anyone gets the notion that the HERALD and the office and plant belong to Brn. Joseph and Salyards, its editors, or the Bishop, or the Board of Publication, and for that reason he has no personal interest in the church paper, such person makes a mistake, and should correct himself at once.

BRO. RICHARD BULLARD, of Arlington Heights, Boston, has a two and a quarter columns presentation and defense of the faith in the Brockton Times, published at Brockton, Massachusetts, for October 29, present year. Bro. Bullard covers the ground of our belief and the difference between the Reorganized Church and the Utah Church pretty thoroughly, and in rather strong terms. Of Bro. Bullard's effort the "Town Talk," editorial column, has this:—

There is little distinction in the mind of the public generally between the Church of the Latter Day Saints and the Mormon Church. The article in to-day's issue of the Times, written by Elder Bullard, ought to prevent people confounding the two churches. They are radically different in their beliefs and practices.

THE CHURCH HISTORY.

THE Herald Office must have the money invested in the second volume of Church History before it can afford to publish the third volume. Look in your library; if you have not the second volume of the history you are delaying the third. Look at your neighbor's library. Has he the first volume? Has he the second? Urge him to help by securing these. The office cannot afford to run the church into debt to publish unless the people want the books.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

GOOD news from the South: Bro. J. G. Vickrey, of Garland, Alabama, writes us under date of November 1:—

Brn. Turpen and Tucker are here. We had a good conference; nineteen baptized on Sunday. The district is in better condition than ever before.

Bro. Amos M. Chase, writing to a brother in Lamoni, says:—

Our health is good. We are very busy, and consequently quite happy. My family is at Castle Rock, Washington, and the children are attending the winter term of school there. Baptized three at Roslyn last week.

Bro. C. R. Duncan, Lebeck, Missouri, October 31:—

Please note in Herald that my home address is now Neosho, Newton County, Missouri. I am gaining rapidly in health again and will be in my field for active duty in a few days.

Bro. I. M. Smith, writing from Hamburg, Iowa, the 3d inst., says:—

I am preaching every evening here at Hamburg, and expect to continue for the next ten days if all goes well.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

SOMETIME last winter, Bro. John Avondet sent us a half gallon of pure olive oil; but it reached the office in our absence and the object of its being sent was overlooked. Bro. Avondet keeps the oil on sale, and he wished, after the oil was received and tested, if found satisfactory, that mention of its being received should be made in HERALD, and its receipt thus acknowledged. The oil was excellent. It was used by quite a number, and gave good satisfaction to all, and is hereby cordially indorsed. We regret that the word concerning it miscarried; but such is sometimes the fate of human affairs. Bro. John Avondet's address is, 1315 California Street, Omaha, Nebraska.

The immediate family and relatives of President Joseph Smith took occasion to celebrate his sixty-sixth birthday on Sunday, November 6, by providing a general surprise for him in the form of a family gathering and dinner. Wife, sons, daughters, sons-in-law, daughter-in-law, brother, sisters-in-law, grandsons, granddaughters, nieces, nephews, etc., the juvenile portion in goodly number, repaired to "Liberty Hall," the family residence and hearthstone, where all joined in the spirit of kinship and good cheer in a gathering that meant an expression of loving good will. We are sure that all the saints will join in the sentiment voiced by the children and other relatives of President Smith—that he may reach the fourscore and ten, with more added if God will, to crown his life of usefulness to the church and to his fellow-man world-wide.

Our cover article, relating the efforts of reformers to cleanse Chicago from vice and other evils is presented as an object lesson concerning some of the signs of the times. It is necessary to know of conditions as they are in order to comprehend the situation with a view to understanding what could and should be done religiously or morally for the general good. The reading may not please, as do some items; but will certainly instruct and help the student of moral and religious problems. We should be educated as well as pleased.

Pres. A. H. Smith returned from the Eastern mission during the past week, after an extended absence along the Atlantic coast, and in New England.

Bishop I. L. Rogers, accompanied by one of his sons-in-law, a Mr. Wallace, visited Lamoni, remaining over from the 31st to the 2d.

Bro. J. C. Foss reports labor done at Rich Hill, Missouri, where he opened up the work some ten years ago. Saints doing fairly well, with room for improvement, as at other points.

We have received from the Bible Institute Colportage Association a copy of "Moody's Anecdotes," a paper bound book of about one hundred pages. It illustrates quite fairly the methods employed by Mr. Moody in his efforts to do good.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

TRIFLES.

"They are such little simple things to do:
To sweep a room, to bake a loaf of bread,
Kiss a hurt finger, tie a baby shoe,
To mend a crying school-boy's broken sled.

"Such little simple things; but they above
Who on our little world attendant wait,
And joyful wait, note only if through love
The deed be done, to count the work as great."

"DEEP" calleth unto deep," are sublime words of inspiration, which apply to the depths of the soul not less than to those unfathomed depths over which wash the mighty waves of the restless ocean. The words which have power to reach the heart when its depths are stirred, its fountains broken up, and over which the billows of sorrow are dashing, must come from the heart which has bled and suffered, and where the tempest of grief has swept as a mighty storm upon the ocean. But the storm and grief must have passed—the heart must be resting in the quiet of his "peace, be still," before the mind can concentrate its powers, and bring forth the stores of experience accumulated in suffering, to pour as balm into the bleeding heart of another.

RICH HILL, Mo.

Dear Mothers of the Home Column:—Having for some time been interested in the reading and instructions that I have received through your columns I have felt impressed with a desire to write. Although I realize that there are many who are more competent than I am, yet I feel that God lays a duty upon each one of us, whether young or old, and he expects us to do those duties, and he will always give us the needed grace and strength at the time when we feel the weakest. I am young in years, and have not the experience of older heads, but I feel that I am one of the mothers of Zion, and if I live faithful that I will ere long have to take the place of some older one, for I realize the time is at hand when the older soldiers of the cross are laying their burdens down and going to their reward, and that we younger ones must be preparing ourselves to fill the vacancies.

I feel that there are many good instructions in the Home Column to help us to so live and raise our families that we may be useful in the kingdom of our God. I have two precious little boys that God has intrusted to my care, and I am desirous of raising them up in a manner that will be pleasing to the Lord; but O, dear sisters, how very, very weak and unable I feel to do this. We cannot look around us in any direction but we see evil of every description, and without the aid of God's Holy Spirit we will not be able to raise our little ones aright; but my humble prayers are that God will grant his children the proper desires and love for this work to do only that which will be for the upbuilding of his cause here on the earth. I have the greatest desire to do something, but I feel my inability so greatly at times that I don't feel able to do anything, and my hands seem to be tied with the responsibility of my family, and at present my health seems to be failing me, and I feel discouraged in trying to do anything outside of my daily duties as a wife and mother; but I am going to try to do all I can to help roll on this marvelous work, for I can say of a truth that I know it is of God, and I want to watch and pray lest I enter into temptation, and if I can just keep my thoughts from the perishing objects of earth and center them on heavenly things, I feel that God will bless me even in the little things that I may be able to accomplish by his help.

My husband is an elder and the president of this branch, and all my folks belong to the church, so I have no opposition on that line to contend with. The greatest fault that I find with myself is impatience. I have not the needed patience with my little ones. I try to have it, but I find many times I am not as patient with them as God is with me. I humbly ask the sisters' prayers in my behalf, that I may become more patient, as I am trying each day of my life to come up higher and live more faithful, for I am desirous of doing everything within my power to help roll on this work. I want to see it prosper, but I can see that the saints are becoming somewhat sleepy spiritually, and I long to see them awake from their slumbers and arise in the strength of the Lord. I know that God has many rich blessings in store for his people, and it lies with us whether we receive them or not. But there is one thing, we must heed his laws, commandments, and admonitions to "come up higher," if we expect his blessings.

Your sister in the gospel covenant,
MRS. NELLIE SHARROCK.

LAMONI.

Dear Sisters:—How often I have been prompted to write I could not tell, but the desire to add my views to the numbers already given, has been great. I have come to the conclusion that no matter who shall criticize, I at least have done my part. Only those of us who have young families can realize what a help these letters are in the Home Column. A cheering word now and then helps us along and gives us new energy to try again. I have four little ones to care for, and only God alone knows how I desire to train and teach them those things that will make noble men and women of them.

What a vast meaning that word "train" has; there is no end to it. I often think what an undertaking it is to feed and clothe both soul and body—one without the other makes the training incomplete. I heard a woman say once while in conversation with her, that as soon as her children could walk they were no more bother to her. How sorry I felt for that mother. Yes; just as soon as they could walk the street was their playground and their home. Sad indeed it is to see so many sweet little lambs brought into the world to share the same fate.

I believe when we have them we should take care of them and not allow them from our sight unless we are sure they are in good company. I do not believe in allowing children to run around; but I do believe that home is their place, or about home, where Mother can see that all is well. I have always taught my boys to tell me what other boys have said to them, and when they have done so it has helped me to show them that the boys who would talk bad things were no company for them. I do not believe in keeping children in ignorance concerning things of a delicate nature. Who can tell them better than Mother can? I have seen mother's shocked because their children would say some things in their presence which they had heard from other children, and at once would be told to hush. I am willing to try the other way and talk to my boys and girls, and then when others speak to them of these things they can tell them that "Mother tells me those things and you don't need to."

I have been astonished at the small amount of interest taken in children by their parents, especially in religious matters. So long as they go to Sunday school it is all right. With me that is not satisfactory; I must see to that matter myself, and thus help the Sunday school teacher to make her work a success. And I believe, too, that until parents take more interest in their children's religious teaching that the Sunday school will not be what it otherwise would. Let us see that our boys and girls know their lessons before going to Sunday school, and when they are let them act as children should. Why should children be allowed to act up in Sunday school any more than in day school? I don't believe it is right, and when mine do not act as they should, I want to know it.

I think as a rule children are too leniently dealt with in these latter days, and a little of the old fashioned strictness would not go amiss; at least it would teach them not to think of walking out with a beau or a girl before they can speak plainly. To me it is too horrible to think about. Mothers, see to your girls and boys, and let them think they are children, and not men and women. Half your troubles would be at an end and you would have children to comfort you. I have noticed too the oft repeated expression, when alluding to children, of the "kids." Parents; did you ever stop to think when you used that word that you not only bring your child to the level of the animal, but yourself as well. I don't think I will single myself out as a goat yet, but will wait until the Master comes and let him do that. I have heard our Sunday school teachers use it also, and it has made me feel badly, for it did not sound the right thing. I could not use it, and will not allow my boys to. May God help us all to right the wrongs and come out conquerors in the end.

Your sister,
L. W.

SPECIAL REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.

SR. M. J. RYERSON requests that her daughter, Mrs. Charles Perkins, be remembered by the Prayer Union, that she be relieved of that dreadful disease, lung trouble.

I am requested by Sr. Alice Mitchel, of Plymouth, England, to ask fasting and prayers of all saints, November 17, for her daughter, Charlotte Mitchel, if it shall please God to restore her to her right mind, and to her parents, she being their only child.

Your brother in bonds,

Sunday School Department.

ELDER T. A. HOUGAS, EDITOR.
Henderson, Mills Co., Iowa.
(Send communications for this department to the Editor. Address minutes and notices of conventions, etc., to "Editors Herald, Lamoni, Iowa.")

THE third annual session of the Interstate Sunday School Institute will convene at Independence, Missouri, December 26, 1898, and continue four days. Zion's Religio-Literary Society will occupy with us again, and we earnestly urge all Sunday school and Religio workers to make it a point to attend.

These meetings are designed to meet a long felt want on the part of all workers. They discuss the practical problems that arise in the course of our work. And the experiences of the many workers there assembled, together with the advice of those of known experience in the many lines of Sunday school and Religio work, may help you to solve your problems and overcome your obstacles. And when we say all workers should attend, we mean it in the fullest sense of the word. The work will be made to reach the beginner, and at the same time strengthen those of more experience. These sessions of institute work are not simply a series of meetings for the reading of a few written essays, but rather for the working out of what may arise when the various subjects are introduced. It is a series of meetings in which the audience does as much of the work as the instructor. You have the opportunity to present your thoughts and to ask questions. To hear the thoughts of others and to comment on them. All under the direction of experienced leaders. In short, we try to get to the bottom on all questions and dispose of them if we can.

There will be work for the teacher—senior, primary, or intermediate. How to do your work in the class; how to overcome difficulties; and how to prepare for the work. There will be work especially for the Sunday school officer. How to manage the Sunday school; to build it up; to select and develop teachers; to increase its usefulness; in fact how to meet the many emergencies that are sure to arise. There will be work for the district officer. In this will be discussed the "how" of many phases of the work. There are schools to visit; others to organize; and still others to keep going after they are organized. And what about the convention, the institute, the circular letters, the general development of the work. The Religio will handle its work in detail in much the same way.

All these things and many others will be considered. Come. It will be to your interest, to the interest of your district and to your school. Is a duty you owe to yourself and to the work to equip yourself for the work that you are doing or ought, perhaps, to be doing. And from our experience with these institutes we believe there is no better opportunity for fitting yourself for your work than in these meetings.

It is set at a time when the railroad companies grant reduced rates, and when public schools are closed, and when many lines of business are taking a holiday. This with the fact that the saints of Independence have invited us to come, and have very kindly offered to entertain us while there free. The expense of attending is thus reduced to a minimum.

Begin now to prepare to attend. Look for the program in two or three weeks.

INTERMEDIATE CLASS WORK.

By Sr. R. W. Briggs, for the Pottawattamie district convention.

THE first and highest qualification for teaching an intermediate class is to have a thoroughly equipped teacher. A teacher must be taught herself before any really good results can be reasonably hoped for. "Study to show thyself approved," is no less applicable to the Sunday school teacher than to the actual ministry; and here lies the most difficult problem in the whole scheme of Sunday school work.

PREPARATION.

How shall such preparation be secured? The increasing demands of social life, and the never-ending duties of domestic employment seem to leave absolutely no time for such preparation, and yet it cannot be safely neglected.

AGE OF IMPRESSIONS.

The age and mental condition of the intermediate student is such that faulty impressions are so easily formed, incorrect ideas so readily imbibed that the conscientious teacher feels oppressed with the weighty importance of sowing the good seed of truth, and making the first impressions not only lasting but truthful and valuable.

SPECIAL PREPARATION.

After making the best general preparation for class instruction, the teacher should carefully examine the particular lesson assigned for the Sunday. Nor should this examination be deferred till the preceding Saturday night. On meeting the class the teacher's first effort should be to secure the personal attention of each member of the class.

A VARIETY OF METHODS

must be employed for this purpose. Their attention may be called to something that occurred, or something that was said in connection with the previous lesson, or by some incidental inquiry respecting home interests; possibly the end may be best gained by referring to something quite outside the ordinary routine work of class recitation.

CONDITIONS.

Much depends on the condition of the class at the time of recitation. Some children are always ready, always attentive; while others are always nervous, restless, and continually thinking of something quite remote from the lesson leaves and Testament before them. The well-being of the class, and the harmony and good order of the entire school, requires the attention and earnest interest of each individual class.

NONE TO BE NEGLECTED.

While it is much pleasanter and far easier to teach the attentive and interested ones, others must not be neglected. The rough diamond, or hidden gem is as likely to be found in a village Sunday school as anywhere else in this strange world of ours. No matter how listless or apparently dull a student may be, there is some point in his mental make-up that can be reached by the faithful and patient teacher. Frequently it will be found necessary to shape the questions and present the topics wholly independent of the routine method laid down in the Quarterlies.

SIZE OF CLASSES.

Classes of this grade should be small, not over six or eight, if other conditions are favorable. Mischief and inattention is said to be contagious, and for this reason large classes should be avoided. What is true of the student is in a much larger degree true of the teacher. Her attention should be wholly undivided.

A BEAUTIFUL HAT,

or a stylish dress over in the other pew should be wholly unobserved by the teacher who expects to do acceptable work in the Sunday school.

REVIEWING.

In presenting the lesson for that particular day, it will be found profitable to give a brief review of the leading points in the lesson of the preceding Sunday, and then point out the connection between those facts and the lesson in hand. It will be found highly useful to draw illustrations from familiar subjects outside the regular lesson, to enforce and simplify the matter intended to be taught; first, what are the facts contained in the text? Second, what are the moral and intellectual truths intended to be conveyed by them? The child should be early between historical facts, and those revealed through inspiration. Moses gave the details of the wars and conflicts between the Israelites and the idolatrous nations around them; he also gave the spiritual law, as delivered on Mount Sinai, direct from heaven. Both are important and should be taught; but the degree of importance to be attached to each is immense. One deals with the cruelty and barbarity of men; the other with the loving kindness of God. The space between these two departments of Bible study cannot be too early, or too strongly urged upon the attention of the Sunday school student.

TAUGHT TO DISTINGUISH

Letter Department.

RICHMOND, Mo., Oct. 13.

Editors Herald:—As it has been a long time since I wrote to the Herald, I will state that I am living in Richmond, the home of David Whitmer. I don't think the Whitmerites have a church here, at least I haven't heard of any. I hear the Whitmers well spoken of, and have had some dealings with nephews of David.

I have charge of Dr. M. C. Jacob's harness store, and also about eighteen or twenty buildings he rents. This is a great coal mining county, and any of the saints who are miners can do well in this vicinity, as rents are reasonable and wages good. A man who can do all kinds of building work could do well here. I could give some one work enough in this line to pay house rent. But wouldn't want anyone unless honest and a model saint. I am trying to live honorably and uprightly, so my life won't be a reproach to the church.

This town has about as many allurements to ensnare the young as any place. If any of the saints live in this vicinity I would be glad to meet them. I miss church services very much. I expect to take the Herald after the 1st of the new year, as I want to pay for it in advance. I would rather not take it than be a delinquent subscriber, as I know it takes money to run a paper.

Wishing the Herald success, I remain,

Your brother in Christ,

WM. C. CUMMINGS.

PAPEETE, Tahiti, Sept. 8.

Editors Herald:—We are quite busy lately, getting out our Sabbath school book; using for our guide and assistant some of the 1894 Gospel Quarterlies; but we are not able to get our book out exactly after the pattern, as we are short of necessary printers' material to do so. But we have found out that whoever did the labor at first in getting together the material and arranging it in all those lessons in the Gospel Quarterlies did far more work than is generally supposed, for very valuable information is collected and presented in the very best manner possible for condensation, conciseness, and clearness.

They have aided us materially in getting out our book; in fact, I have largely copied from them, and hope that before long we will have sufficient printers' material to translate and print the Quarterlies as they are printed at home and used with you.

At present we follow the example of our patient, toiling, and worthy predecessors, and make our lessons largely questions and answers. Bro. T. W. Smith had in his Sunday school book printed here five hundred and fifty-four questions and answers. Bro. and Sr. Devore had over one thousand questions and answers in their books, which were not printed but written; and Sr. Case copied very many of these for use in the schools.

To copy about one hundred and seventy-five pages of questions and answers of large, letter-size paper was a very slow and tedious process; and now as we have the press of our own, the church wanted them, or others, printed. Quite a number wanted T. W. Smith's book reprinted, and possibly it may be done after a little revision. But the church generally wanted a book something after the Quarterlies at home; so we are busy at work upon them, and at present over half of the lessons are printed and will be bound in paper covers and distributed to every branch in the mission. We have the "golden text," the simultaneous reading of the lesson of the day by the school, superintendent reading one verse, the school another and so on to the end; also the "memory verse." It is simply wonderful, the patience Sr. Devore must have exercised in her labor of love in arranging those lessons and getting them translated and written. And many a weary hour Sr. Case has passed copying those lessons into the books of the natives.

We still are of the opinion that a missionary or two should come and help us take care of and help the nearly two thousand church members scattered over many islands. To be a good singer or a teacher of singing, would be a good qualification in a missionary for this place. While visiting among the islands after conference, I was called upon to preach on Monday morning at eight o'clock. I had been conversing during the morning on gospel topics and felt very well as I stepped up before the branch and asked them to sing the opening hymn. They all stood up very reverently and sang their hymn to the tune of "Old Dan Tucker." By the time the brother who had been requested to open by prayer had said amen, I had regained my proper equilibrium, and therefore requested them to sing again, as is usual. This time they sang a hymn to an old sailor's chanting song. The first opportunity after this, I took myself to task for allowing myself to be the least bit ruffled by that singing. They worshiped as reverently and as solemnly in singing those hymns as I might have done in singing, "Broad is the road that leads to death," to old "Windom." And they never were sailor boys in a fore-castle singing to that abominable jingle (there I go again),

"Old Dan Tucker, he got drunk

And fell in the fire and burnt to a junk."

But they heard some boys singing it I suppose, liked it, learned it, and now sing it with all the reverence possible; and although I have to listen to it quite often in our meetings, I have never by wink or word disturbed their liking for their jingling, foolish tune to their song. And why jingling and foolish? I shall not enter into metaphysical reasoning to show a sufficient reason, even if I could. But it seems to me that there is an eternal fitness about things in God's kingdom between the spiritual and bodily things of man and his mind—his nature. But is there any fitness in music, in singing? Or does all or every kind tend to reverence in our houses of worship? I can only answer now for one, and therefore say, that of all powers and privileges of man on earth there are few if any of them which equals in fineness and in the exquisiteness of nicety the beauty of harmony, of accord, and of music, in accord with its surroundings which dwells within the bosom of him who is attaining unto an accord with the music of the heavenly spheres.

I do not understand music; I do not know the science of harmony and chords; but my perceptions were once quickened so that I heard heavenly music and singing that melted the soul within me in an adoration and reverence towards God and Jesus Christ which I never before knew, and it as far surpassed our singing here as the sun in his glory surpasses the dim star in the skies.

These people can be taught to be excellent singers, and they love to sing; and I think the Saints' Harmony is the book to teach these people music or singing from. Those faithful brethren who compiled it drew from the world's storehouse and compiled and arranged the very best collection of hymns and tunes on earth. Bro. and Sr. Case taught the saints here a number of beautiful tunes, which they sing occasionally. And to my ear, the one that faithful Bro. Devore translated and taught them is the best one they sing: "E farerei ia'na." It is beautiful, and shows that if they had an instructor they could learn these holier and more exalting hymns as readily as the jingle-jangle of street-corner singing.

We are printing occasionally some of the nice hymns Bro. and Sr. Case translated and taught the natives, and the saints are much pleased when they get the Te Orometua to see one of Alite's hymns in it.

We get lonesome sometimes to see California and its faithful bands of saints. No better saints are on earth than are found in the mountains, hills, and valleys of bright California, and the band of faithful missionaries on the Pacific slope have been most wondrously blessed of God. So also will those be who now are the servants of that God who loves the faithful child; and who, after the toils of life are ended, will crown with eternal life and glory all his faithful ones.

May peace be with you and all the Israel of God.

APPLEDORE, Ont., Oct. 21.

Editors Herald.—We had the pleasure of attending the Sunday school convention and conference. The business part of the sessions passed off very peacefully; the preaching was good and well attended; the prayer and testimony meeting on Sabbath morning was a spiritual feast, five spoke and one sang in the gift of tongues and all interpretations were given. Valuable instructions and warnings were given under the Spirit's power. Those called by God and ordained are one elder, three priests, and two teachers. One marriage took place on Sunday during the conference at the home of the bride, the contracting parties being Bro. George Vickery, of Plano, Illinois, and Sr. Emma A. Blakely, of Zone, Elder R. C. Evans officiating. Three were baptized. Adjourned to meet with the Lindsley branch next June.

Your sister,

TEMPLE, Ohio, Oct. 28.

Editors Herald.—The conference held at Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, last Saturday and Sunday was a success. Unity characterized the business transactions, and an excellent spirit prevailed throughout the session. The representative attendance was not large, but the hall was well filled with attentive listeners at the preaching and prayer services. The Sunday prayer service was spiritual and interesting, zealous devotion being manifest by the saints. Brn. John T. Davis and Gomer T. Griffiths, of the general ministry, were present. Brn. L. R. Devore and J. Frank McDowell, laborers in this field, were engaged at other points. The Fayette City branch, Geo. Hull president, and the Banning branch, Joseph Moxon president, were represented by a number, showing an increasing interest in that part of the district.

Bro. C. Ed Miller resigned the presidency of the district, being so closely confined to business that he could not attend to it. Brn. L. R. Devore and James Craig were chosen instead. Bro. Miller continues president of the Pittsburg branch and is stirring and capable. It would be a great help to the branch, however, was there some one resident there who could give more time to the recurring demands of the work. Bro. L. D. Ullom was sustained as Bishop's agent.

Pittsburg saints are aspiring to and are very anxious to secure a church building of their own. This is a very laudable ambition, and they are certainly entitled to sympathy and aid in this movement. It costs them three hundred dollars a year for the hall now in use, and since occupying it they have paid out over fifteen thousand dollars for rent. They seek a change. May they succeed. They should not lose interest in other important things, however, in order to reach it. When ready to begin, they should receive sympathy in the right way from all who can afford it.

Bro. James Craig, it is stated, has arranged his business so as to give his time to the ministry this winter—a good acquisition. Judging from what is in sight there is a promising future for the work in Western Pennsylvania. Hopefully,

COUNCIL BLUFFS, Iowa, Oct. 22.

Editors Herald.—Reports from conference workers in Nebraska and the Dakotas from the adjournment of the conference of '98, ending September 30, are meager, attributable to inclement weather, extra busy time of farmers, interest evinced in the war, with the anticipation of getting off to the great exposition at Omaha. For these and other reasons, the injunction; viz., "Seek not the world, but seek first to build up the kingdom of God and to establish its righteousness," etc., is put to one side; and one is led to consider the moral condition as referred to in the inception of the latter-day dispensation, "They seek not the Lord to establish his righteousness, but every one walketh in his own way, and after the image of his own god, whose image is in the likeness of the world, and whose substance is that of an idol which waxeth old and shall perish in Babylon, even Babylon the great, which shall fall."

The prospects for ingathering in parts of Nebraska where I have labored, are not flattering. The brethren in the Dakotas are sanguine. May their anticipations be realized. They appear to be working zealously. As to the spiritual progress, it is not what it should be, which I believe to be attributable to the laxity in the advocacy and enforcement of given and accepted law. To halt in its administration because of probable or possible effects would, as I believe, be a miserable mistake, if not tantamount to a belief, that God saw the necessity for just such a method of adjudication as he has revealed; but as we know better as to the effects flowing from its enforcement, than the Lord, we know when to enforce, and when not to enforce. Whither are we drifting?

It seems to me we have heard enough in the advocacy of leniency, mercy, going slow, etc., and that it is high time we began to practically demonstrate the fact of being godlike in the advocacy and enforcement of God-given and accepted law.

How could we have attained a citizenship in Christ's Church unless we had obeyed the method of adoption as God's word reflects? We could not. We accepted it in its entirety and praised God for its revelation. How then shall we retain our citizenship unless we evince the same faith and confidence in that which God has given for our government subsequent to our adoption? If God's law is perfect, how can we err in practically observing it? Will some one inform me? I am free to confess the anxiety and studiousness in order to carry out the injunction, "Ye [elders] shall see that my law is kept" is a sufficient strain upon my poor ability without halting to consider what the effect of a practical observance of his law may be. I think him abundantly able to take care of results attendant upon advocating and enforcing his law. If he does not, I am sure I can't.

Being approached as to the propriety of an elder believing and giving publicity to the belief that it was wrong to cut anyone off from the church, I have this to say, If anyone of the church so believes and so affirms, I would think him unfit to be a member, much less an official in the church. I believe if the advocacy and enforcement of Christ's law will set the church to tottering, the quicker she totters and falls the better. But I have no such fear. I had rather believe Christ's teachings which run thusly, "The kingdom of God shall be taken from you, and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof. And whosoever shall fall on this stone [kingdom] shall be broken: but on whomsoever it shall fall, it will grind him to powder."

I cannot promise the church the same activity and close attention to duty in the future as I have sought to evince in the past; but as the thought of inactivity is distressing, I think I may say, I will do what my physical strength and limited mental power will permit. In gospel bonds,

REED CITY, Mich., Oct. 27.

Editors Herald:—Our fall conference is over. It was one grand, good one, especially so was the meeting on Monday morning. It was held at Whittemore, Iosco County, near where many were enabled to attend who never before had the privilege. We enjoyed ourselves well, and went away strengthened and built up in the faith. Many expressed a desire to do more in the work than hitherto, both financially and spiritually.

Bro. E. A. Goodwin was called and ordained to the office of priest, and Brn. John Schreur and Amos Berve, one a teacher, the other a priest, were previously called to the office of elder and voted at the conference that their ordination be attended to; neither being present, as they reside in the opposite part of the district. These brethren are faithful men and capable of doing much good. Nine were baptized, and the same number were baptized at the last June conference. Nine were also baptized at the June conference in the Eastern Michigan district, besides others at other times.

This year has been a strange one in many ways; in some localities the people seemed unwilling to hear the true gospel, but seem willing to take with anything else no matter how shallow; while others in other places were willing to accept the truth. It has been a strange one for the farmers as well. In July we had a bad frost, which cut down corn and potatoes here and there all over the State, while others had in late potatoes just coming up, when the frost came; but we also had an early frost this fall which injured the crops badly; in some localities whole fields were entirely destroyed. And now for the last two or three weeks, when potatoes should be dug, we have had rains more or less nearly every day, which have hindered many from taking care of the potato crop; and yesterday there fell about six inches of snow; but we expect it to go off, and that we will have a few fine days yet. If we do, hundreds and thousands of bushels of potatoes will be dug; if not we will suffer loss. Still on the other hand we had good crops of grain, fruit, etc. In short, out of all, the saints are cheerful and hopeful. And we are in the faith in Michigan and striving to do our duty before God as his law directs.

Very truly yours,

J. J. CORNISH.

COVE, Ark., Oct. 26.

Editors Herald:—Eight years ago Bro. J. D. Erwin preached a few sermons near here, and since that time until last winter we know of no more work being done. Some time in February or March of the present year Bro. Short built us, at his own expense, a nice little churchhouse. It is nicely seated, he also giving the land on which the church stands. We have a bell, an organ, nice lights, a good stove; so are fixed for unpleasant weather.

Last winter Brn. E. Short, Earl Bailey, J. W. Jackson, and A. L. Newton did some preaching. We moved here on May 1. There were four members of the church, our family making eight in all. We tried to join the Union Sunday school held in the schoolhouse, but they would have none of us. While they were Union they didn't want Latter Day Saints in the Union. They didn't tell us quite plainly, but they had to do so much consulting, etc., that we finally took the hint. I then urged a school of our own, if only a few—a straight out and out Latter Day Saints' school with all our own literature, and we organized. After a few weeks some wanted us to turn our school over to the Union and meet at our building, but after we consulted we thought best to remain straight Latter Day Saints, then we could run our affairs as we thought best.

Bro. A. L. Newton was elected superintendent and we have been doing nicely. We have averaged over thirty-eight attendants from the beginning. Since August there have been families of saints of four at a time, moving in, until the missionary in charge, Bro. Jackson, decided it wise to organize a branch. We have been holding preaching services all spring and summer, Bro. Ellis Short speaking to us two or three times a month, Bro. Jackson off and on all summer, Brn. Earl Bailey, J. D. Erwin, Babcock, formerly of Montrose, Iowa, A. Z. Rudd, Toney, and J. A. Robinson preaching for us at times.

While Bro. Robinson was here in the summer we had a sacrament meeting. About six weeks ago we organized a prayer meeting for every Wednesday evening, and last Sunday was the time appointed for the organization of the branch. It was agreed that the saints would fast and pray for a blessing and that inspired direction might be given to those in charge of the organization. To our surprise Bro. J. A. Robinson walked into our midst at the morning service. The afternoon service was appointed for the organization of the branch. Bro. J. A. Robinson was called to the chair, Bro. Arthur Gillen secretary. The chair calling upon the missionary in charge to nominate, if the Lord had shown him who should preside. Bro. Jackson had made the matter a subject of prayer, and stated that the one presented to him as the best leader for the work at the present time was Bro. A. Z. Rudd, formerly of Lee's Summit and Independence. Several testified to the choice of the nomination, there being three elders in the limits of the branch. Bro. Rudd was chosen; Bro. Hogue was the choice for priest; Bro. Joseph Bedwell was elected teacher; Jesse Hogue deacon; Bro. Gillen sustained as secretary; Bro. J. D. Bomer chorister; so the branch officers were all chosen unanimously. Perfect order and harmony prevailed.

The chair gave each instructions as to the work required of each and the officers who were not chosen were to assist those who were elected as though they had been pushed to the front; the members were urged to sustain those they had chosen, by their faith and prayers, and by their presence; and if all did this we would be abundantly blessed.

The branch starts out with a membership of forty-eight. The instruction received both from the missionary in charge and the chair was of a spiritual and instructive order, the chair outlining all the work in the branch, setting in order as provided in the law the finances of the branch.

We feel thankful for such a peaceful and instructive time. We start out with a branch whose instruction and work are in the front rank among the branches of the church.

On Sunday night Bro. J. A. Robinson spoke to us. There was a crowded house. He was blessed with the Spirit of God. Bro. E. Short spoke on Monday and Tuesday. Bro. Erwin will continue the meetings the rest of the week. We desire the prayers of the saints that we may live in harmony and do a work for the Lord in this place.

Yours in gospel bonds,

JENNIE H. NEWTON.

IRVING, Minn., Oct. 31.

Editors Herald:—I have just closed a series of meetings at Manannah, a small place about ten miles from here, and have never left a place with a better feeling towards our faith than there. I preached twelve times in two weeks, and as the people took me by the hand after the close of the services, some said, "O, I wish you could stay and preach to us all the time!" "Why can't you stay here?" "When will you come back again?" "Be sure to come and see us when you come again;" and many more such expressions. I could see them wiping their eyes while I was speaking, and that the truth was falling upon good ground. And it will surely bring forth fruit.

But while all this is true, Satan has not been idle by any means and has stirred up the minds of some against me, and I expect to meet violent opposition and that too from the hireling priest of the people. My meetings were held in a union church, built by the Methodist and Christian people; and the Christian-Campbellite went among his members and told them not to go and hear me, and did all he could to hinder my work. He told them to run me out; that the sooner they did it the better; and if they could not get me out any other way to "freeze" out. This may be good advice, but it did not work with the people. It calls to mind the cry of the priests in the days of the Master. It was then: "Crucify him! crucify him!" Now it is changed just a little and is, "Run him out!" "Run him out!" "and if you cannot get him out any other way freeze him out! Freeze him out!" Both come from the "hireling priest" and from the same source—from "beneath."

One of the elders of the Christian church said he would as soon go to hear the Devil as to hear me; and I am just as willing that he should, for everyone has a right to "shout for own candidate." So let him shout. Another one of the members, a warm friend of mine, said concerning their preacher and myself, that I was as much above him (the Campbellite) as heaven was above hell; a great difference, I admit; but that was the way she felt about it; this because of his actions. He would not come to hear me, but took that cowardly way to injure me and my work. I sent word to him that if he thought I should be run out, he had better come and do it himself; that if he would let me know when he was coming I would be on hand so he would have no trouble in finding me; but I have not heard from him, so do not know what he will do. But I know one thing; that I am too old to run, and shall stand by the gun as long as I have any powder left; and I have lots in store yet, and more on the way.

I believe I never felt better spiritually than now and for some time past. The work is onward here and is sure to prevail. This is still a busy time of the year, finishing up the fall work and preparing for winter; but am under promise to come back as soon as I can after winter sets in, and hold meetings again; and I feel assured that some will obey.

For the truth's sake,

E. ABBOTT STEDMAN.

MARLIN, Texas, Oct. 28.

Editors Herald:—I left home near Elkhart Texas, on the 20th inst. and rode horseback sixteen miles to Long Lake, where I left my horse in pasture and took the train in a flood of cold rain for Reagan, Falls County, Texas, near which is Grange hall, in which I met the brethren of Texas Central district assembled in conference, and had the most enjoyable time I ever experienced with the saints of God. The prayer meeting was a real feast.

The writer preached on Saturday evening; Bro. A. J. Moore on Sunday, on Daniel's interpretation of the king's dream, illustrated by chart. It was appreciated by all who saw and heard. Bro. S. R. Hay, Sunday afternoon, preached a stirring discourse on the divinity of the mission of Joseph Smith; and the evening sermon by I. P. Baggerly on the restoration was clear, forcible, logical, and irrefutable, and for three nights succeeding that subject was continued by our brother, proving from the word of truth, the necessity for this great restoration, this preparation to meet the Son of God at his coming.

This morning I parted with Bro. Baggerly, as he goes to meet a Christian preacher in debate, in Red River County; and myself to continue my labors in this county. Thus we have to part too soon, but the enjoyment of this conference will not soon be forgotten by those participating in it.

The outlook here is encouraging. The saints, faithful, and earnest, give hope of a bright future for this Philadelphia branch.

Your brother,

JAMES W. BRYAN.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., Nov. 2.

Editors Herald:—Since August 1 my ministerial work has been done within the limits of the Massachusetts district, coming to this place last Friday. Our conference at Fall River was a good deal of a success, Pres. Alexander Smith being present and giving us a fine exposition of the differences existing between us and the people in Utah. The attendance was large, and local ministerial representation first rate, and the unity of feeling, notwithstanding a little ruffling of the waters, was, as it seemed to us, and considering the experiences of the past, quite satisfactory. To be at peace with God and in fellowship and harmony with the Holy Spirit, from an individual standpoint, tends to good nature and to minimize troubles of a general character; and while not necessarily blinding as to the evil necessarily to be seen and dealt with, it nevertheless softens asperities, prevents exaggeration of our neighbor's fault, or the tendency to become oblivious to our own.

The Sunday following conference met with saints in Providence, preaching morning and evening. The Saturday following this went to Plainville, where I met Patriarch Alexander Smith, who was there upon the errand and duty which his office and calling imposes. Bro. Smith leaving for Providence in the morning, I spoke morning and evening in the saints' chapel with good liberty and fair audiences; a sadness and depression caused by the death of the father of Bro. Charles Coombs on Saturday, the day of our arrival, however, and as a matter of course affecting us all. I was sorry to have missed a meeting with Bro. U. W. Greene, our missionary to the Sandwich Islands, and who was to have had charge of the funeral service; but the matter of a change of residence in Providence before leaving last week made our presence there a necessity. After a week of pleasantness in housecleaning and moving, Friday eve found our hand again upon the missionary grip and the spoken good-bye again to loved ones; we left for Stonington and New York via Sound Steamer, arriving at Bro. Squires' at eight a. m. Preached to the saints and strangers morning and evening, Sunday, and again last night.

The near approach of election day and the war being waged between the "ins" and the "outs" absorb public attention at the present time. In company with Bro. Ephraim Squire we went over to New York to attend a Republican mass meeting; were fortunate enough to get a good seat and place of hearing, by waiting an hour on the outside before the doors were open to the vast crowd that surged and jammed its way into the great building.

I should not have taken so much trouble or interest in the fight with Croker and Tammany Hall patriots or New York State politics as I did, but I was anxious to hear men whose names have become household words. We had the privilege, and I may say pleasure, of listening to Chauncy Depew, General Woodford, Col. Theodore Roosevelt, and other notables; but the most dignified, statesmanlike, and patriotic address of the evening was, to my mind, made by the able young Governor of New York, Frank S. Black. If I were able to judge the character of a man by a single speech, I should say that Mr. Black was not destined to permanent political retirement; and if not mistaken in this estimate I believe him to be better than any political party I now have any knowledge of; and why Colonel Roosevelt was substituted for his renomination, is not clear to my mind. Roosevelt, however, has a pretty good record for honesty and courage of conviction, and is, generally speaking, better than his political associates; and the sagacity if not the honor of his party, with the aid of the wretched history of Tammany and patriots of Croker's kind, will in all probability be vindicated in next Tuesday's election.

The interests of Utah Mormonism are being looked after all over the East by their missionary force, a house to house canvass being deemed the potent means of proselyting, rather more than by a public exposition of their doctrines; and as a matter of safety and precaution from curious questioners who may be anxious to know or have the people know the whole of their belief, history, and practice.

I am very glad the church is going to get after Elders Roberts and Penrose, in a pamphlet. Sometimes I am made to feel indignant at their subterfuges and cowardice, and at other times, am almost led to think, by results so far observable, that proselytes are, according to value, a costly thing for them, and not seriously damaging to us; nevertheless, they are, without doubt, mischief-brewers; they preach good principles—doctrinal tracts that have to be accepted in the letter at least, by every soul who treads the way into the kingdom of God. How far they go, and at what point the beguiled soul is switched off and sidetracked into the greatest and most subtle apostasy known in history, is another, and altogether different thing.

It does seem though, after all, that they should be followed up,—made to draw the line and come out into the open, and defend in honorable way their rights to a most sacred title, which we believe and feel confident we are able to prove is an assumption, and only needs an exposition of their record, made in their own handwriting, to forever disannul in the honest and intelligent mind the idea of heavenly authority or indorsement of their history or their claims. A large force of their missionaries, some fifty or sixty, have sailed for Europe within the past two weeks.

We leave to-morrow morning for Ohio, expecting to remain in Kirtland over Sunday, and the Sunday following to be in St. Louis. Am feeling some better as to bodily health, but still enough of disagreeable hints of failure and decay to make one the evidences which we have of being better "clothed upon"—a delightful study and a supreme satisfaction, prospectively speaking.

In bonds,

M. H. BOND.

DETROIT, Texas, Nov. 1.

Editors Herald.—I have just reached this place from Central Texas, where I have been laboring the most of the year. The interest throughout that region in our church is only moderate. There have been some gains by baptism so far this year. Prominent among the number I note the names of W. P. Franklin, who is known to many of the saints in Texas and to the ministry who have labored here. He lives in the city of Bryan; also Aaron Norcross, who has assisted the ministry for the last twenty years. Bro. H. C. Smith and others will remember both these men. They now have the privilege of extending their usefulness.

We just closed a conference near Marlin, Texas; had a fair representation of the ministry of the district. During the conference two of the brethren were ordained to the office of elder. Elder A. J. Moore, of Beaver, Texas, was with us and rendered valuable aid. Bro. Renfro also attended. This brother is very zealous in the cause and is doing good service for Christ.

Bro. S. R. Hay, of Hearne, president of the Texas Central branch and pioneer of this part of the field, was in attendance and delivered a fine discourse on the divine calling of Joseph Smith. Bro. Moore also delivered a good discourse; indeed, the preaching of the entire session was good.

There is a sister in this branch (Philadelphia) that has recently been converted from the Baptist Church, named Sarah E. Standper, who received the gift of tongues. The brethren remembered some of the words and a Jew in Marlin said it was the Hebrew tongue. I took down the words and on the way to this place I stopped at the city of Waco, and inquired for the best Jewish scholar in the city. I was directed to Mr. Sam Sanger, who received me very courteously. I presently made known my business. He translated one sentence; said it was genuine Hebrew. I send you the sentence as he gave it to me, but kindly ask you to preserve for me. I have not time to write in full in regard to this wonderful transaction, but I felt so glad the Lord was remembering us in Texas.

I. P. BAGGERLY.

CHAPTER 5.

MR. ROBERTS devotes this chapter to what he terms the history of the Reorganization. Though there are some inaccuracies in his statements we will not here pause to follow him minutely, as the facts of history will come out in the investigation of the issues. However, there are a few points which may demand a consideration as we pass along.

On page 42 of his work Mr. Roberts makes the following statement:—

This alleged revelation was given on the 20th of March, 1853, and at the April conference following an organization was effected on the above indicated plan. After a long discussion, about whose priesthood was the highest—in the course of which a great deal of ill-feeling was manifested—finally the controversy ended in favor of Mr. Briggs, and he was called to preside at the conference.

The above is misleading in this: it indicates that the decision was that Elder Briggs held the highest priesthood. The facts were as follows: They were commanded to choose seven to form a majority of the Quorum of Twelve, and the instruction provided that the senior of the seven should preside, or stand as the representative, not by virtue of the priesthood which he had formerly held, but by virtue of his apostleship then conferred. He did not hold a higher priesthood than the other six, but by virtue of being chosen he was the senior among them.

There was doubtless much misunderstanding and some confusion and feeling manifested, but the final conclusion was in harmony with the law; for as the Twelve were the highest in authority present, it was proper that their senior or president should preside or stand as the chief representative until higher authority came.

Some may inquire, Why do you then object to the Twelve presiding at Nauvoo after the death of Joseph Smith? The cases were different. In the one under consideration none of the First Presidency were present; at Nauvoo there was one of that quorum among them. Again, we do not object to the Twelve presiding at Nauvoo, or elsewhere, under proper circumstances; but when they do so preside it should be in their own calling, and not by assuming, as they did at Nauvoo, to be the First Presidency. In saying this we do not wish to be understood as advocating the right of Sidney Rigdon to preside at Nauvoo. The truth is that neither Rigdon nor the majority of the Twelve were content to preside in his or their calling, but each aspired to honors and position not guaranteed by the law.

On page 44 Mr. Roberts makes the following sarcastic, but characteristically contemptible statement:—

Meantime Joseph Smith who, according to his own autobiography, had failed as storekeeper, railroad contractor, in the study of law, in farming, and while keeping soul and body together by labor and from his fees as justice of the peace, was confronted with the question of his connection with his "father's work;" and in the winter of 1859, resolved to put himself in communication with the "reorganized church."

For confirmation of this statement he refers us to the autobiography of Joseph Smith in the "Life of Joseph the Prophet," by Tullidge, pp. 743-773. While it is true that Joseph Smith was not very successful in some of these enterprises, anyone who will take the trouble to read the reference will see that Mr. Roberts has overdrawn the picture for the evident purpose of casting a slur.

In consideration of this effort to reflect upon Joseph Smith we will here quote a statement from the Utah people regarding Joseph Smith and the Smith family, from one of their own works published a few years before the time referred to by Mr. Roberts. The following is from the "Illustrated Route from Liverpool to Salt Lake Valley."

Frederick Piercy, by arrangement with S. W. Richards, made a trip from Liverpool to Salt Lake in 1853-54 to make sketches for this work. It was edited by James Linforth and published at Liverpool, by F. D. Richards, in 1855. Mr. Piercy visited Nauvoo enroute, and among other things says:—

While in Nauvoo I lodged at the Nauvoo Mansion, formerly the residence of Joseph Smith, and now occupied by his mother, his widow, and her family. I could not fail to regard the old lady with great interest. Considering her age and afflictions, she, at that time, retained her faculties to a remarkable degree. She spoke very freely of her sons, and, with tears in her eyes, and every other symptom of earnestness, vindicated their reputations for virtue and truth. During my two visits I was able to take her portrait, and the portraits of two of her grandsons also. That of Joseph, the eldest son, was done on his 21st birth-day. He was born about 2 o'clock in the morning of the 6th of November, 1832, at Kirtland, Ohio. He is a young man of a most excellent disposition and considerable intelligence. One prominent trait in his character is his affection for his mother. I particularly noticed that his conduct towards her was always most respectful and attentive. The other portrait is of David, the youngest son, who was born five months after the assassination of his father. He was born about 9 o'clock in the morning of the 17th of November, 1844. He is of a mild, studious disposition, and is passionately fond of drawing, seeming to be never so happy as when he has a pencil and paper in his hand. The other two boys whom I saw, were very fine, strong, healthy fellows, and as it may be interesting to many, I will say, that during some conversations which I had with persons in the neighborhood, I found that the whole family had obtained a most excellent reputation for integrity and industry.—Pages 63-66.

Considering the amount of prejudice at Nauvoo against the Smith family and the church, this is a good showing. But Mr. Roberts must sneer. It is a manifestation of his nature or education.

On pages 46 and 47 Mr. Roberts quotes some detached extracts from President Smith's speech of acceptance of April 6, 1860, and especially criticises these words, as extracted therefrom:—

I pledge myself to promulgate no doctrine that shall not be approved by you, or the code of good morals.

Mr. Roberts' criticism is based upon the thought that a prophet should not be governed except by revelation to himself, and should not be bound by the voice of the body. He evidently has overlooked the fact that God himself does not force upon the church an edict without consent of the church. In the revelation of 1841 he names the men who should fill the leading offices in the church, and then adds:—

And a commandment I give unto you that you should fill all these offices and approve of those names which I have mentioned, or else disapprove of them, at my general conference, etc.—D. C. 107:46.

According to this, God himself would not force upon the church that which it did not approve; but Mr. Roberts' ideal prophet would have no regard to church approval. He has perhaps overlooked the further fact that according to Orson Hyde, Joseph the Seer had established a rule that revelations were to be approved by the quorums ere they were promulgated.

Mr. Hyde says:—

There is a way by which all revelations purporting to be from God through any man can be tested. Brother Joseph gave us the plan, says he, when all the quorums are assembled and organized in order, let the revelation be presented to the quorums, if it pass one let it go to another, and if it pass that, to another, and so on until it has passed all the quorums; and if it pass the whole without running against a snag, you may know it is of God. But if it runs against a snag, then says he, it wants enquiring into: you must see to it. It is known to some who are present that there is a quorum organized where revelations can be tested. Brother Joseph said, let no revelation go to the people until it has been tested here.—Times and Seasons, Vol. 5, pp. 649, 650.

Mr. Roberts also fails to notice the positive assertion of President Smith as follows:—

I have come in obedience to a power not my own, and shall be dictated by the power that sent me.

This indicates that he would not submit to any power other than the one that sent him, though he, as President of the church, would not promulgate any doctrine until approved.

Mr. Roberts should not overlook the further fact that Mr. Smith when he made the pledge complained of was acquainted with the views of those with whom he was to associate, as appears from these words found in his speech:—

I have my peculiar notions in regard to revelations, but am happy to say that they accord with those I am to associate with, at least with those of them with whom I have conversed.

Again, it is evident from the following words connected with the statement complained of, "or the code of good morals," that he had in his mind the fact that many of this people had been deceived by leaders who had stealthily introduced polygamy and other immoral practices; and he wished to assure them that they had nothing of this nature to fear from him. He has been true to that assurance.

Further, the son of the Prophet knew that after the death of his father several of those who had assumed the self-imposed task of leading the church had taught doctrines and practices which the code of good morals condemned; and he, feeling the necessity of putting a moral safeguard into the pledge which he felt called upon to make in accepting the position offered to him at Amboy, deliberately stated his determination not to teach, promulgate, or attempt to fasten upon the tenets of the church, dogmas, teaching, or practices which would not be approved by a righteous people, or could not be approved upon the application to them of the requirements of the "code of good morals."

When it is understood that the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and the revelations in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, were the acknowledged basis of the faith of the church in the martyred Joseph's time, and the accepted source from which the code of good morals for the church, including the church in Utah and the Reorganization is derived, the statement made by the son of the Martyr on that April day in 1860 to the people to whom he was sent by the voice of the Spirit, was a strong, not a weak pledge; was a safe, and not a compromising statement; one which reflected honor and not disgrace upon the name of his father; and a statement and pledge which all good, all decent-minded citizens of the world, and all Latter Day Saints of every shade of belief ought to accept in good faith and give "young Joseph" credit for being strong enough to make it.

Mr. Roberts then seeks to draw a contrast between this position of President Smith's and that assigned to his father in the following:—

Wherefore, meaning the church, thou shalt give heed unto all his words, and commandments, which he shall give unto you, as he receiveth them, walking in all holiness before me; for his word ye shall receive, as if from mine own mouth, in all patience and faith; for by doing these things, the gates of hell shall not prevail against you; yea, and the Lord God will disperse the powers of darkness from before you, and cause the heavens to shake for your good, and his name's glory.—Doctrine and Covenants 19: 2.

The reader will observe that the church was to receive his words as he received them from God, "walking in all holiness" before him; but according to the rule quoted above, the church was guaranteed the right to be satisfied that he had so received them, and they were not to be promulgated until approved.

Brigham Young's words, quoted in this connection, by Mr. Roberts, only reveal the boastful spirit of the man.

Mr. Roberts closes this chapter with the following peculiar paragraph:—

We have now followed the history of the "Reorganized church" as far as it is necessary. It only remains to remark that it is a stream formed by the confluence of two other streams; one of which, represented by Mr. Gurley and his following, flows from Strangism; and the other, represented by Mr. Briggs and his following, flows from the church organized by William Smith. We leave it for Josephites to inform us on what principle of philosophy two corrupt, apostate streams by uniting, make a pure one!

This conclusion is evidently based upon the supposition that when parties come out of one organization to affiliate with another, the one they leave becomes a part of the one to which they adhere.

How profound! According to this philosophy the church organized by Joseph Smith and others from 1830 to 1835, was a stream formed by the confluence of several other streams issuing from the several sectarian churches.

It may be said that the parties composing the former organization renounced their allegiance to other churches; but so did the parties composing the Reorganization. Emphatic as were the memorable words of the personage who addressed Joseph Smith, when he was told that he "must join none of them, for they were all wrong, and . . . their creeds were an abomination," they are no more emphatic than the words of revelation to Zenas H. Gurley:—

Rise up, cast off all that claim to be prophets, and go forth and preach the gospel, and say that God will raise up a prophet to complete his work.

The following resolution, adopted June 13, 1852, has no uncertain sound:—

Resolved, That this Conference regard the pretensions of Brigham Young, James J. Strang, James Collen Brewster, and William Smith and Joseph Wood's joint claims to the leadership of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, as an assumption of power, in violation of the law of God; and consequently we disclaim all connection and fellowship with them.—The Messenger, Vol. 2, p. 9.

What a wonderful acquisition this man Roberts will make to the United States Congress, if he succeeds in getting there. He can inform his illustrious colleagues that this government is a stream formed by the confluence of several corrupt streams which flow from all the despotic and priest-ridden monarchies of Europe. And we are called upon to reply to such profound philosophy. Lest such heights make us dizzy, we will just come down and simply inform Mr. Roberts that neither now nor at any time in the past has the Reorganization been composed of Strangites and William Smithites. Though some who were once associated with them have united with us, this is also true as regards members coming from the Brighamites and from every other society in the country, while many have come to us from the world.

CHAPTER 6.

MR. ROBERTS begins his criticism in this chapter by quoting the testimony of Lyman Wight as published in some publications of the Reorganized Church, as follows:—

In the private journal of Lyman Wight, . . . this is found: "Sunday, December 8th, 1850, bore testimony that Joseph Smith appointed those of his own posterity to be his successor."

And in a letter he wrote in July, 1855, from Medina river, Texas, to the Northern Islander, a Strangite paper, Brother Wight said: Now Mr. Editor, if you had been present when Joseph called on me shortly after we came out of jail, [Liberty jail, Missouri.—Ed.] to lay hands with him on the head of a youth, and heard him cry aloud, "you are my successor when I depart," and heard the blessings poured on his head,—I say had you heard all this, and seen the tears streaming from his eyes—you would not have been led [into following Strang] by blind fanaticism, or a zeal without knowledge.—Roberts, p. 50.

Upon this Mr. Roberts comments as follows:—

Of this testimony it is to be said, first on the entry in Mr. Wight's journal, that it is too general in its character to be of much service in supporting the claims of "young Joseph." We are not certain that he refers to him at all. Then if Lyman Wight knew in 1850 that Joseph the prophet had blessed his son Joseph to be his successor, as prophet and president of the church, Mr. Wight knew it in 1844; and is it not strange that he did not speak of it and advocate it when the question of a successor was warmly discussed in Nauvoo, during the autumn of 1844? Why is it that we have nothing from him on the subject earlier than 1850? And this silence on the part of Mr. Wight is the more significant when it is remembered that he was a bold, fearless man. It cannot be said in truth, that Brigham Young's influence was so masterly as to awe him into silence. As a matter of fact he violently opposed Brigham Young in some of his measures, and at last rebelled against him; but nothing is said by him until 1850, about the appointment of any of the prophet's posterity to succeed to the presidency of the church.—Ibid. pp. 50, 51.

It would be difficult for anyone to make more blunders in the same space than Mr. Roberts has made in the above comment. If he is so obtuse after all that has been published as to fail to understand who is referred to in Elder Wight's journal, he might read the following from a manuscript of Elder Wight's now in our possession, dated December, 1851, and published in Church History, Vol. 2, p. 791:—

The fifties assembled should have called on all the authorities of the church down to the lay-members from all the face of the earth, as much as was convenient, and after having taken sweet counsel together, in prayer and supplication before God, acknowledged our sins and transgressions which had caused our head to be taken from our midst; and then have called on young Joseph, and held him up before the congregation of Israel to take his father's place in the flesh.

Elder Wight was not at Nauvoo in 1844, as we have seen, after the death of Joseph Smith, except from August 6 to August 28. Certainly Elder Wight knew as much of this blessing in 1844 as he did in 1850; and if, as Mr. Roberts asserts, he "violently opposed Brigham Young in some of his measures," may not this have been one of the points of disagreement? If not, what did they disagree about?

But Mr. Roberts says, and repeats it, that Lyman Wight said nothing on the subject of Joseph's posterity succeeding him until 1850. Again Mr. Roberts is wrong. In the Gospel Herald, Strang's organ, published at Voree, Wisconsin, in its issue for August 31, 1848, is the following comment:—

Lyman Wight seems to cherish the idea that is ignorantly held out by some others, that Joseph, the prophet's son, will yet come up and take his father's original place in the church as the prophet to the church; whereas there is not one single word in all the book of Doctrine and Covenants to warrant the idea.—Prophetic Controversy, No. 2, p. 17.

Mr. Roberts has a theory that the claims of Joseph Smith to the Presidency originated with the movement of William Smith in 1850 (see p. 18), and seems determined to make everything bend to the support of that theory; hence he asserts in positive terms, both of William Smith and Lyman Wight, that they did not teach lineal priesthood as applied to the Presidency until 1850. We have exploded this theory by showing that William Smith is on record on that subject as early as November, 1845; and we have now shown that Lyman Wight was criticised as early as August, 1848, for teaching that Joseph Smith's posterity would succeed him; and he must have been teaching this theory some time prior to this date, for news did not travel rapidly in those days from the frontiers of Texas to Wisconsin.

We present the fact that these two members of the Quorum of the Twelve preached this so soon after their difference with the quorum, as strong presumptive evidence that this was one of the points upon which the difference arose. It must be remembered that neither William Smith nor Lyman Wight at that time had control of a press by which to preserve on record their views, and we are dependent upon statements of their opponents. The Times and Seasons, controlled by the Twelve and published in Nauvoo, Illinois, carefully avoids stating what the issues were.

It leaks out, however, through the Millennial Star, published in England, in the case of William Smith, and through the Gospel Herald, published in Wisconsin, in the case of Lyman Wight, that at least one of their contentions was that the posterity of Joseph Smith should succeed to the Presidency. Here then are two of the Quorum of the Twelve opposing the usurpations of their quorum from the beginning.

Nor were they alone in this. The above quotation states:—

Lyman Wight seems to cherish the idea that is ignorantly held out by some others, etc.

We are not told who those some others were nor how many there were of them, but it is evident that the feeling that "young Joseph" was appointed to some special position was quite strong, even among Elder Strang's followers, notwithstanding the adverse comment above quoted; for at their General Conference held in Voree, Wisconsin, April, 1849, the following resolution was presented and passed unanimously:—

That we give our prayers daily for Joseph, the son of Joseph, that he may be raised up of God to fill the station to which he has been called by prophecy.—Gospel Herald, Vol. 4, p. 16.

These evidences leave Mr. Roberts in a very unenviable position as an exponent of "the facts of church history;" and his theory that "the claims of Mr. Smith to the Presidency" originated with the movement of 1850 is pitifully at fault. Will Mr. Roberts, like an honest man, abandon that theory, and confess his error?

He next seeks to impeach the testimony of Lyman Wight by referring to a statement that Lyman Wight was said to have taught that "young Joseph" was blessed by his father while in Liberty jail, Missouri, and comparing that with the statement quoted above that he blessed him shortly after he came out of jail. This he claims is a discrepancy in time and place. It is only necessary in this connection to say that the evidence shows that Joseph Smith, the Prophet, blessed his son Joseph both in Liberty jail and after he came out, and Lyman Wight was with him both in jail and after his escape and arrival in Illinois; hence both statements may have been correct.

As evidence that two blessings were given, or rather the same blessing pronounced at two different times and places, corresponding with the statements of Elder Wight, read the following from the pen of President Smith, published in October, 1868:—

In Liberty jail the promise and blessing of a life of usefulness to the cause of truth was pronounced upon our head, by lips tainted by dungeon damps, and by the Spirit confirmed through attesting witnesses.

This blessing has by some been called an ordination, from the usual predilection to confound names and terms.

The blessing which marked Moses as the deliverer from Egyptian bondage, was not that which Jethro pronounced upon his head.

Subsequent to our baptism in 1843, upon two occasions was the same blessing confirmed by Joseph Smith, once in the council room in the brick store on the banks of the Mississippi, of which we have not a doubt there are witnesses who would confirm the present testimony; once, in the last interview Joseph Smith held with his family before he left Nauvoo to his death. A public attestation of the same blessing was made from the stand in the grove in Nauvoo, some time prior to the murder in Carthage.—True Latter Day Saints' Herald, Vol. 14, p. 105.

In the light of these facts these quibbles of Mr. Roberts amount to contemptible pettifoggery. After making another unsupported, slanderous statement, Mr. Roberts seeks to throw discredit upon the testimony published in the Northern Islander, in 1855, by affirming that this is not corroborated by Caleb Baldwin and Alexander McRae who were in the jail at the time, and who have left nothing on record regarding the occurrence. In answer we ask, If the statement published in 1855 was untrue, why did not Alexander McRae (who we believe was then living) contradict it? His silence was a tacit acknowledgement of its correctness.

THE GATES OF HELL.

UPON this rock I will build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it.—Matt. 16: 18.

These are the words our Savior once addressed to Peter; but what he really meant by the statement seems to be differently understood by religious teachers now, and is applied by some in a way which is far from right.

If the claims of the Roman Catholic Church are correct, then all other churches are wrong. But if our interpretation of the text is the true one, then we are right, and the restoration of the gospel in 1830 was a necessity, and all the religious world is in error.

We will present the teachings of the Catholic Church, as set forth by James Cardinal Gibbons, Archbishop of Baltimore, in a work entitled, "The Faith of our Fathers." He says:—

We have positive evidence from the scriptures that the church cannot err in her teachings. Our blessed Lord, in constituting St. Peter Prince of his Apostles, says to him: "Thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." Christ, makes here a solemn prediction that no error shall ever invade his church; and if she ever fell into error, the gates of hell have certainly prevailed against her. The Reformers of the sixteenth century affirm that the church did fall into error; that the gates of hell did prevail against her; that from the sixth to the sixteenth century she was a sink of iniquity. The Book of Homilies of the Church of England says that the church "lay buried in damnable idolatry for eight hundred years or more." The personal veracity of our Savior and of the Reformers is here at issue, for our Lord makes a statement which they contradict. Who is to be believed, Jesus or the Reformers? If the prediction of our Savior about the preser- vation of his church from error be false, then Jesus Christ is not God, since God cannot lie. He is not even a prophet since he predicted falsehood. Nay, he is an impostor, and all Christianity is a miserable failure and a huge deception, since it rests on a false prophet. But if Jesus predicted the truth when he declared that the gates of hell should not prevail against this church—and who dare deny it?—then the church never has and never could have fallen from the truth; then the Catholic Church is infallible.—Pages 86, 87.

We have placed certain words in italics, to call the special attention of the reader to the false rendering of the words of Jesus, and the misapplying of the text. In the quotation our Savior does not make "a solemn prediction that no error shall ever invade his church;" neither does he predict "the preservation of his church from error;" he simply says, "the gates of hell shall not prevail against it;" and we propose in this article to show what he really meant. But before proceeding we will give one more quotation from the Archbishop, to set forth more fully his claims, and the false position of the Catholic Church.

"Thou art Peter; and on this rock I will build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." "I, the supreme architect of the universe," says our Savior, "will establish a church which is to last till the end of time. I will lay the foundation of this church so deep and strong on the rock of truth that the winds and storms of error shall never prevail against it. Thou, O Peter, shalt be the foundation of this church. It shall never fall; because thou shalt never be shaken; because thou shalt rest on me, the rock of truth." The church of which Peter is the foundation, is declared to be impregnable, that is, proof against error.—The Faith of our Fathers, pp. 150, 151.

Again, the italics are ours, to call attention to the false claims of Catholicism. Christ did not say that the church would last till the end of time. He did not say that error should never prevail against it. He did not say it should never fall! He simply said, "the gates of hell shall not prevail against it," and we are ready to prove that they did not. We are also ready to prove that the world and sin did prevail against it, and that Jesus and the prophets knew they would.

The gospel of Jesus Christ was to be preached to every creature, living and dead. His commission was not only "to preach the gospel to the poor," but also "to preach deliverance to the captives," and "to set at liberty them that are bruised" (Luke 4: 18). When Jesus had nearly finished his work on earth, he said to his disciples:—

Verily, verily, I say unto you, The hour is coming, and now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God: and they that hear shall live. . . . Marvel not at this: for the hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation.—John 5: 25-29.

From the above it is clear that the mission of Christ was to extend to "all men," and that the time had arrived when he must go and preach the gospel to the dead—those who were in their graves; whose spirits were in paradise; and also to those whose spirits were held captive by Satan in the infernal regions. And Jesus here declares that they all shall come forth.

Peter throws more light on the subject, saying:—

Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God, being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the Spirit; by which also he went and preached unto the spirits in prison [the spirits of dead men held as captives in hell]; which sometime were disobedient, when once the long-suffering of God waited in the days of Noah, while the ark was a preparing, wherein few, that is, eight souls were saved.—1 Peter 3: 18-20.

According to this statement, Christ, after he was put to death, went and preached the gospel to "the spirits in prison," who had been disobedient to the gospel in the days of Noah, who had preached to them while they were alive on the earth, during the time he was building the ark. But as they had rejected the gospel, while they were in the flesh, and had died sinners, Satan took their spirits and locked them up in the prison—even in hell, and there they remained until the death of Christ.

It is pretty generally accepted by Christians that Christ went to the prison. "The apostles' creed," accepted by nearly all, says, "He descended into hell." Heaven has gates, the New Jerusalem has gates, and hell has gates; and in the gospel work of Jesus Christ, and his mission to the dead, even the gates of hell were not to prevail against or hinder it. He was to carry it beyond them, and into the dark corners and center of hell, that all confined there might hear his voice and come forth.

If we could accept the Book of Nicodemus, in the Apocryphal New Testament, we would find quite a pretty story of the conquest of Christ in hell. As Satan and his angels knew him, they feared his coming, realizing what his approach must mean, the prince of hell commanded:—

Shut the brass gates of cruelty, and make them fast with iron bars, and fight courageously, lest we be taken captives.

They fortified themselves as best they could to prevent his entrance, but it was useless.

When Christ approached those gates a voice was heard, saying:—

Lift up your heads, O ye gates; and be ye lifted up, ye everlasting doors; and the King of glory shall come in. Who is this King of glory? The Lord strong and mighty, the Lord mighty in battle. Lift up your heads, O ye gates; even lift them up, ye everlasting doors; and the King of glory shall come in. Who is this King of glory? The Lord of hosts, he is the King of glory.—Psalm 24: 7-10.

And then at his command the gates flew open and Christ entered in and performed his work; and afterward, "when he ascended upon high, he led captivity captive," or as the margin reads, "a multitude of captives" (Eph. 4: 8). Who were those captives? The spirits in prison, confined in hell. And the gates of hell were opened, never again to be closed against the ministers of Christ, who go clothed with his authority, because he holds "the keys of hell and death" (Rev. 2: 18). He had taken them from the enemy. He had conquered all. He had carried the doctrines of the church into the confines of hell, and the gates of hell had not prevailed against it. Christ's statement had proven true. But in that statement he never meant that the world would not prevail against the church; for, alas, he knew it would. He knew that a time of darkness was coming on the earth! He knew the gospel would be taken away! He knew the priesthood would be lost to men! He knew the church would be destroyed! He knew his "Spirit would not always strive with men"! but that they would be left alone in darkness, ignorance, and superstition.

He had said through his prophet, Isaiah, that he would make the earth empty; and make it waste; "and it shall be as with the people, so with the priest." They would all be in the same condition. "The land shall be utterly emptied, and utterly spoiled." Emptied of the gospel and spoiled for hearing it.

The earth also is defiled under the inhabitants thereof; because they have transgressed the laws, changed the ordinance, broken the everlasting covenant. Therefore hath the curse devoured the earth, and they that dwell therein are desolate.—Isa. 24: 5, 6.

This was accomplished since the "everlasting covenant" was made during Christ's life in the flesh. God had said through his prophet, Amos:—

I will send a famine in the land, not a famine of bread, nor a thirst for water, but of hearing the words of the Lord; and they shall wander from sea to sea, and from the north even to the east, they shall run to and fro to seek the word of the Lord, and shall not find it.—Amos 8: 11, 12.

They would seek it everywhere, but it would not be found, because it would not be on the earth. This was accomplished during and since the Dark Ages—since Christ was on the earth.

Jesus sent his angel to tell John many things concerning the church. In Revelation, chapters 12 and 13, he tells of an evil power that was to arise.

And it was given unto him to make war with the saints, and overcome them: and power was given him over all kindreds, and tongues, and nations. And all that dwell upon the earth shall worship him.—Rev. 13: 7, 8.

This Satanic power was to overcome the saints and compel everybody to serve him or be slain. This was done since the days of Christ, and he knew it would be. This evil power controlled all; "small and great, rich and poor, free and bond."—Verse 16. And after all this, John declares:—

And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people.—Rev. 14: 6.

After all people had departed from God; after the gospel had been lost; after the priesthood had been taken away; after the church had disappeared—John saw an angel bringing the gospel back, to preach to every soul on the earth.

The world and Satan had prevailed against the church, and it was necessary now for God to restore it again.

All this has taken place since our Savior died; and he knew it would, and sent his angel to show it unto John.

I Jesus have sent mine angel to testify unto you these things.—Rev. 22: 16.

All these arguments are in harmony with the statements of Christ, but out of harmony with the Archbishop. Which are we to believe, James Cardinal Gibbons, or Jesus Christ and the prophets?

What did Jesus mean when he said, "From the days of John the Baptist until now the kingdom of heaven suffereth violence, and the violent take it by force"?—Matt. 11: 12.

The kingdom of heaven was the church, and Jesus here says, "The violent take it by force." Then he could not have meant that it was to continue till the end of time. It suffered violence in his day, from Satanic influences—and he here predicts that that violence would continue until the violent would take possession of it—by force, by overpowering it; which meant that God would withdraw his power from it and leave it subject to the powers of evil, and they would overcome it. The violent did not take it in the days of our Savior. It had not been taken at the day of Pentecost. It had not yet been taken in the year 96, when the messages of Revelation were given to the different branches of the church. So, as our Savior's words must be fulfilled, we must look for their fulfillment after that; and when we see the terrible condition of things in the Dark Ages, we realize that the sad change had come. How it had been taken by force, the blood of the saints and martyrs may sometime tell. These statements of Christ have been fulfilled.

It seems strange that so eminent a man as the Archbishop should understand the words of our Savior so differently from us. When we think we can see what we believe to be the truth so clearly, it surprises us that such learned men as he should interpret God's words in such a different way. May the time soon come when all the honest in heart may see and understand the truth.

ANNOUNCEMENT.

To the Patrons and Friends of the Ensign, and all Saints:—

On November 7, 1898, the entire plant of Zion's Ensign, at Independence, Missouri, including building and business, was transferred by deed to the undersigned, and is now held for the use and sole ownership of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints; subject to the sanction and ratification of the remaining members of the committee appointed by the General Conference to take under advisement the purchase of the property, and finally the action of the body, the church.

To the patrons of the Ensign especially, we will state that in the event of the committee as a whole, or the church, adjudging the transfer to the church at the present time inadvisable, then the undersigned will continue the ownership of the property and publication of the paper, sparing no pains or time, which may be in their power to give to it, to make the Ensign a power for good in publishing the gladsome message of the gospel, preparing the way of Zion and the Messiah's glorious reign.

The committee appointed by the General Conference of the church has had a general agreed understanding as to the action it would take in the matter for some time, but until the present the way has not been open to effect the transfer without involving the church further financially, which it deemed unwise to do.

At the present time, by the death of Elder David Dancer, the committee has lost one of its members; another, Elder Joseph Luff, is in his official work in Nova Scotia; and the other, Elder Frederick B. Blair, likewise engaged in California. This necessitated action by the undersigned in an individual capacity, which we took, leaving our associates perfect freedom of action and expression in the arrangement, and without compromising in any way the church in its action.

We congratulate the church in that it has obtained a place in its work where it may, without embarrassment, at least have an opportunity of sending forth its paper missionaries as the ordained eldership, under its immediate supervision, and prosecute so fully as it may judge wise, the work committed to it of carrying the gospel proclamation to every "nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people."

Under the oversight of the body the church papers may circulate and each fill its sphere of good with as perfect harmony as may be possible between the chief missionaries sent out, and there will be found for each, more room than they can properly fill, so long as its columns are freighted with the "bread of life," dispensed in the spirit of forbearance and love to the stranger as well as the church.

The Saints' Herald at Lamoni, Iowa, does not by this move lose in any regard its place as the official organ of the church, nor is it possible for the Ensign to fill the Herald's place in an instructive capacity to the saints and the great thinkers of the age. The Ensign will fill its own place; and we shall be truly glad to see both journals made so important by their laden pages of the Christ life that no family of saints or friends can afford to deny itself of either.

Elder William H. Garrett is continued as editor of the Ensign, and we bespeak for him in his work the aid and coöperation of the eldership and saints everywhere.

Articles in the Ensign will not necessarily reflect the views of the church, but the views of the several writers; and where by reason of the many contributions the editor is compelled to make a selection for use, it may not be that always the finest and best shall be chosen, but rather, such as shall contain the food, or truth, in the judgment of those in charge, most essential at the time to the reader.

Without selfish or personal interest in any sense whatever, but in the love of the truth and promotion of harmony and legitimate competition and earnest labor in the kingdom of Christ, we submit our action, and remain,

Very respectfully,

E. L. KELLEY.

FRANK CRILEY.

LAMONI, IOWA, Nov. 7, 1898.

APPOINTMENT OF BISHOP'S AGENTS.

DECATUR DISTRICT, IOWA.

To the Saints of the Decatur District of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints:—

It becomes my duty to call attention to the great loss to the district of our greatly esteemed and worthy brother, David Dancer, Bishop's agent in and for said district, he having passed quietly over on the other side Sunday evening, October 23. Although Bro. Dancer lived and died in full hope of a goodly reward, yet for his constant labors here the loss is more readily brought home to us, and we mourn the loss. The past ten years he has served in the work of Bishop's agent for the Decatur district, in addition to his general church work, filling the position wisely and well. May we all imitate his life of industry and sacrifice for the truth.

By the advice of the missionaries in charge, Elders Joseph R. Lambert and Heman C. Smith, I have appointed Elder Frank M. Weld, of Lamoni, Iowa, Bishop's agent in and for the Decatur district of said church, and duly authorized him to act for the bishopric in and for the said district in all matters pertaining to said agency.

Bro. Weld will give his entire time and attention to financial and ministerial work in the district, and visit all parts of the district in the interest of the church in temporal matters. He should have the faithful and hearty coöperation of every member in the district, and each should make an effort to fulfill the entire law including that touching temporalities in the church, that he may be blessed and rewarded by the Master for faithful service.

There should be no member of the church in the Decatur district (except those absolutely dependent) who does not have his or her name upon the Bishop's agent's book, or in the general church account, kept by the Bishop. It is impossible for us to be accepted as children of our heavenly Father when we fail to comply with his law. The law in this, so far as the record stands, is as certain and needful as any other part of the gospel, and if we believe the teaching of the Savior, it is equal to any other part, so far as bringing perfection in life to the individual. Certainly Jesus, without equivocation, enjoined this as a duty in his instruction, and his words were never idle.

For the church to receive the blessings promised under the law it must (comparatively at least as a whole) keep the law. Let us all move forward earnestly in the performance of this part as any other, that it may be possible for us to receive the special providences God has provided for such as serve him in perfectness.

We trust that Decatur district, in which is at present located the seat of the First Presidency of the church, may be first in diligence before the Master in good works. "This is a faithful saying, and these things I will that thou affirm constantly, that they which have believed in God might be careful to maintain good works. These things are good and profitable unto men."—Paul (Titus 3:8.)

Please remember address of Frank M. Weld is Lamoni, Iowa.

DISTRICT OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA OF THE REORGANIZED CHURCH.

Upon notice and resolutions of the Southern California district, recommending Bro. Albert Carmichael, president of the said district, as Bishop's agent in and for said district, this is to give notice that Bro. A. Carmichael is appointed Bishop's agent of the Southern California district. Bro. Charles Baly, former agent, by reason of his pressing duties in business in Los Angeles has been unable to travel over said district, and hence the action of the conference in the matter.

Bro. Baly has been, during his term in office, an efficient and active agent in the work as far as his circumstances would permit, and the Bishopric feel obligated to him for his valuable and faithful services, and we trust that in his present situation he may be of great use and benefit to the cause of the Master.

We are glad also to be able to recommend Bro. Albert Carmichael as a worthy workman, and one who should have the active aid and cooperation of each and every member in his work. We trust that all saints may move forward in courageous labor in the Southern California district, remembering that difficulties and discouraging circumstances must be overcome, not yielded to, if we attain success in gospel work as well as any other. Let those who have a disposition to murmur, as did the children of Israel in the wilderness, be left without encouragement to return to the "flesh pots of Egypt," or "Babylon" for that matter, and may it be truly said of every one, "He has performed his full duty."

Address Albert Carmichael, Garden Grove, California.

In behalf of the Bishopric,
E. L. KELLEY,
Presiding Bishop.

LAMONI, IOWA, NOV. 7, 1898.

BISHOP'S AGENT'S NOTICE.

To the Saints of Eastern Michigan district:—After the 10th of November instant, please address me at Applegate, Sanilac County, Michigan, remitting all moneys by express money orders, or post office money orders, and oblige,
Yours very truly,

ANDREW BARR, Bishop's Agent.

To the Saints in Utah:—A word with you financially. I am required by the Bishop to pay out $16.50 per month for family allowance, balance to go to him direct. We are behind on the allowance. Elders are going home to work to keep the wolf from the door, and it looks as though others will need to! Can you afford it? But fifty cents or one dollar from you in tithing will help us, and be accepted of the Lord. Shall the elders and their families make all the sacrifice? To be plain with you, the very last crust in the house has had the blessing of God asked upon it! What a spectacle of faith! And to be still plainer, such is not an individual case! I speak thus plainly that you may know the actual state of affairs. We have kept four missionaries in Utah this year, so that the church at large is paying much more than you in the support of families.

Address me Fairfield, Utah, and it will be forwarded me. Elder D. W. Wight is authorized to receive tithing—address him at Provo, Utah. I hope to be in Utah by first of year.

J. W. WIGHT, Bishop's Agent.

CHURCH HISTORY, VOL. 3.

We want a list of subscribers in every branch of the church for the Church History, and will arrange with a good live brother or sister in each branch to get such list, if they will write for terms and give us their names, and state that they want to work. Let us hear from you at once. Address,

F. CRILEY,
Business Mgr., Lamoni, Iowa.

CHANGE OF FIELD.

In consequence of a special emergency, by virtue of which Bishop E. L. Kelley has appointed Elder F. M. Weld his agent for Decatur district, we hereby give notice that Elder Weld's field of labor has, by us, been changed from Nauvoo district to Decatur district. Bro. Weld will, however, retain the supervision of missionary labor in the Nauvoo district until other arrangements are made.

Elder J. S. Roth has also, by us, been instructed to labor in Nauvoo district until further direction.

Trusting that God's blessing may be upon the labors of these, as well all others of the brethren who labor for Zion's weal, we are their brethren in Christ,

J. R. LAMBERT.
HEMAN C. SMITH.

DIED.

GREEN.—At Jeffersonville, Illinois, October 15, 1898, at eight o'clock, passed away one of the oldest and best known citizens of the country, Bro. T. P. Green, aged 87 years, 1 month, and 6 days. He was born in Tennessee; was married to Miss Sarah Rosson, January 6, 1831; to them were born twelve children, ten with his aged companion are left to mourn. He joined the Latter Day Saints in the days of the martyred prophet, about the year 1840; was ordained an elder about the same time. He stood firm all through the dark and cloudy days of the church. All the factions, such as Young, Strang, Rigdon, and others, sent their delegates to him, but he would show them their error as he saw it. When he received some of the *Saints' Herald*s, he said the truth has come at last. The writer was present and heard him bear testimony to the Reorganization before he had read a single word. It was always a pleasure for him to talk of his religion, as long as he knew anything. His home was the home of the elders. So has gone one of the oldest saints, to await the resurrection of the just.

RIGGINS.—Toy Asbery Riggins, son of Sr. Mary Vanderbur, died October 8, 1898, in Springfield, Missouri. He would have been 21 years old January 1, 1899. Funeral sermon by Elder J. C. Chrestensen.

ALLDREDGE.—At Owego, Iowa, September 14, 1898, Maggie L., daughter of Bro. and Sr. B. D. and S. E. Alldredge, aged 5 years and 2 days. She was buried from the Christian church at Sloan, Elder Clemmer, of the Christian faith delivering the discourse.

HOLDSWORTH.—At St. Louis, Missouri, September 21, 1898, Sr. Hannah Holdsworth; born at Bristol, England, October 14, 1830; united with the church in 1864. The large attendance at the funeral bespoke the high esteem in which she was held by those who knew her. Services by J. C. Hitchcock.

and women are to be found in places where liquors are sold, and in other questionable haunts, to allure men to dissipation. These open dens of vice ought to be closed in the interests of common decency. The crusade must be waged against every defiant keeper of a saloon. It must be waged against unlawful gambling. There must be a union of the adherents of all religious faiths and political beliefs and of all lovers of good government. With this it will succeed."

"Should the church interfere with personal liberty?" was the topic of the evening sermon preached at Memorial Baptist church by the Rev. L. A. Crandall, who said in part:—

"A notorious violator of law is reported to have declared that he belongs to a church which does not interfere with his personal liberty. If this is true, then so much the worse for the church. It is a shame and a disgrace for any church to allow known enemies of society to remain unrebuked in its membership.

"What conception do these men have of liberty? Evidently that it is freedom to carry out their desires without regard to the effect upon society. The thief would have liberty to steal, the gambler to debauch manhood, the boodler to defraud the municipality, the saloonkeeper to turn men into beasts and take the bread out of the mouths of little children. The only liberty which the State gives must be found within its laws.

"The will of God is the law of the church. The indifference of a church to the sins of its members brings it into deserved reproach. It is the business of the church to interfere with the personal liberty of wrongdoers, both within and without ecclesiastical bodies. The church is here to build the kingdom of God on earth and can never accomplish its mission without antagonizing those who use liberty as a cloak for license."—Chicago Tribune, Oct. 3.

SUCCESS WHEN UNITED. WHAT WILL YOU DO?

TO THE SAINTS AND FRIENDS OF THE CAUSE OF TRUTH; GREETING:—

In the fact of our having been appointed a Finance Committee by the Trustees of Graceland College; and the further facts set forth herein, is to be found our apology for again appearing before you as we do at this time. That the church has an Institution of learning is plainly evident from information set forth in the Herald for October 26, 1898, furnished in response to a number of inquiries for the same. That this institution of ours is in need of substantial support and encouragement as indicated in the several appeals appearing in the late issues of the Herald is also true. These needs more specifically stated and in part repeated are the following:—

First. It needs the undivided moral support of every member of the church. While the College cannot be run on sympathy and good wishes, it is nevertheless true that it must merit and obtain these before it can receive of the more material support. In this connection this suggestion is offered: Let everyone who has not felt fully satisfied with reference to the College movement, either as to its being right or wrong, premature or otherwise, make it a matter of study and prayer. First investigate its claims, object, promises, etc.; then see if such a work is not in perfect harmony with the word of God, though not commanded, remembering that if not out of harmony it is justified; then honestly ask God to direct you in the course you shall pursue in relation to it; carry out honestly your convictions, praying God you may do no wrong, and God will bless you in your effort. This is certainly no more than every true saint should do, as, doubtless, many have already done.

Second. It needs students. The principal reason why so many calls have been made for financial support is because the enrollment of students is small. Many children of saints go away to colleges, farther away and more expensive than Graceland; some because they want to attend a school which has prestige and reputation. Of course that is something; but if all who could do so would come to Graceland, she would soon possess reputation and prestige to be envied by our foremost colleges of the land. Loyalty to our own institution will give it a place among colleges to be proud of, and at the same time relieve the present financial embarrassment to a large degree.

Third. It needs immediate financial aid to enable it to tide over the critical season and place it upon a firm footing. The present debt, if it had to be paid by one or two, is large; but if all who could would help, it would soon be lifted, and thus put the church in a better condition to meet a wicked and frowning world with a firmer and bolder front than at any time in her history.

Fourth. The college needs apparatus, laboratories, a better library, a collection of relics and curios, etc.

Some of the brethren when traveling about, by making the needs of the college known in this regard, especially as regards books and relics, could gather many such as would be of great value to the work.

We have a college site, as regards beauty and healthfulness of surroundings, surpassed by but few; and as regards morality and sobriety of association, equaled by none; and if the immediate needs referred to above, and perhaps others, could be supplied, in a few years or decades we could challenge the admiration of the world in the excellence of our institution.

Referring to the object of the College we wish to say that it is not to educate for the ministry, as some have supposed, but to educate for life; while it is hoped that our ministry may be educated as a result of our college effort. Does anyone doubt but that an educated man is more competent than he would have been uneducated? or that even those of our missionaries who are unlearned and have made phenomenal success would have been even more successful if educated, other characteristics remaining as they are? It is only fitting and right that our young men and young women should be qualified to compete with the most learned of our time in the various callings and professions. We need learned school teachers, learned mechanics, learned bankers, learned merchants, learned farmers, learned mothers of future generations, quite as much as learned preachers; and preachers will never be more than a small minority of the people.

Who then can be educated at Graceland? Every young man and woman who desires it. What! Yes, missionaries' children and all; if all will unite and labor as we can. "To be learned is good, if they hearken unto the counsels of God." (2 Nephi 6: 12.) They should not only be educated then, but under proper influences so that they may be led to "hearken unto the counsels of God." Does anyone doubt that the missionaries' children should be educated? Why should they not be? Would anything short of this be fair? The Lord said in 1887, "Let him that laboreth in the ministry and him that toileth in the affairs of the men of business and of work labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all." (D. C. 119: 8.)

Those who toil "in the affairs of the men of business and of work" are to aid in maintaining an institution so that the children of the missionaries may be educated, without money, under wholesome, moral influences, so that they may not forget to "hearken to the counsels of God," and thus all be placed upon an equality in this regard. And this can be, ought to be, and will be done. Are we willing each to do our part? is the question.

Of course the best way to contribute to the support of the College is to send us students. There are doubtless more than enough children of the saints attending college somewhere every year to maintain Graceland, if they could but be enrolled here. But the following plans and propositions are submitted by which it is hoped present necessities may be met, and the institution permanently established.

Estimating the average number of paying students at fifty, which is quite conservative, paying $30 per year tuition, the income would be $1,500. The lowest estimate of running expenses, with faculty on a reasonable ministerial allowance, of which more will be said later, is $2,500. This leaves a deficit of $1,000 in running expenses each year. If fifty subscribers can be secured who will guarantee $25.00 per year for five years, this deficit will be met and leave a small balance as an emergency fund. Those subscribing to this fund are privileged to send a scholar for five years at any future time, tuition paid by said subscription. Nearly forty per cent of these subscribers have been secured already from citizens of Lamoni.

Another plan is to sell scholarships for a full collegiate course, four years, for $90 cash, $22.50 per year. There are probably some who having money in hand would prefer the payment of such an amount at once rather than be troubled with five years' subscription; while again some not having so much ready money, but having a regular income, would prefer the former.

There are about four hundred branches in the church. Suppose each branch should by some special effort raise ten dollars, some would do more, and some less, but this is a low average; this would give us the neat little income of $4,000, which if repeated once a year, would leave in a short time but a small portion of the debt remaining, with what sales of lots could be made. And every branch could do this and no one individual feel the burden to any appreciable extent.

For instance, the $25 (£5 5s.) yearly subscription, in branches or societies consisting of fifty members, would be 50c (2s. 1d.) per year for each member, or less than 5c (2½d.) per month, less than 1½c (¾d.) per week, 1 4-5 mills (¼d.) per day. Or the individual subscriptions of $25 amounts to $2.08½ (8s. 9d.) per month, 52 1-12c (2s. 2½d.) per week, 7 5-12c (3¾d.) per day.

Branch Presidents, District Presidents, Sunday School Superintendents, Presidents of Religios, Mite Societies, Aid Sisters, and Missionaries are urged to call the attention of their respective societies to this matter and set it before them in the proper light and spirit. It is in reality only a little thing when distributed, while it appears quite large in the aggregate.

One Religio Society and one Mite Society took a five-year subscription, and many others might do so. Then there are Daughters of Zion, Mite Societies, Aid Societies, and Sunday Schools, which could do likewise. And again in some communities, two or more individuals could join in taking subscriptions, where one did not feel able to raise the whole amount—form clubs.

In order that the matter may not be delayed, and that a beginning may be made, and uniform action result, the above mentioned societies and branches are requested to make an especial effort on Christmas this year, by giving a dinner, supper, social, entertainment, or something of the kind, proceeds to be devoted to the running expenses of the College, and forward same by January 10, 1899, to Frank Criley, Lamoni, Iowa.

Brethren and sisters as officials above mentioned, please do not allow this appeal to pass unnoticed. If you cannot give this matter your individual attention, will you not appoint some active brother or sister to take the lead in getting it started?

Another matter we wish to mention is, that any who are not able to subscribe to the $25 subscription, but feel that they can aid in smaller yearly amounts, can have the privilege of doing so by writing the committee, stating how much you can promise to pay each year. Then there are many who can give various amounts, now, or at some stated time, who could not promise yearly amounts. To these we say, send in your offering, whatever it may be, and you will receive credit for same.

The names of all who aid by $25 subscriptions, individuals or societies, by subscriptions of lesser yearly amounts, or by donations of proceeds of dinners, entertainments, etc., or smaller individual contributions, will be published in the Herald, unless requested not to do so. And remember all this money is to be used to meet the running expenses by paying tuition of worthy young people who are not able to pay their way. Each individual or society taking a $25 subscription has the right upon payment of said amount, to send one student five years at any time when the same is paid; and those taking a four year scholarship may send the one student four years. The authorities of the college will select those who are to receive the benefit of the smaller contributions. If any society shall give amounting to $30 they may send a student for one year.

Another plan for aiding the College is to purchase one or more of the beautiful lots in Graceland Addition, and thus secure a nice home for yourself, or for your son or daughter. Prices have been reduced and they are reasonable.

Did some one say or think, we are asking too much? Suppose we got more than running expenses, let us see what would be done with the surplus. Of course the payment of our debt and stopping of interest would be the most sensible thing to do first. But what then? Well, we would pay the board and buy the books for the son or daughter of some of our worthy missionaries; or it might be of some worthy poor. Would anyone object to that? Certainly not. And then as has already been said we need better facilities, in the way of library and apparatus. Our beautiful building would be even more beautiful if the painting were finished, and more comfortable if shades could be supplied for the windows to screen teachers and students from the direct rays of the sun. We must advertise too, if we expect to secure any considerable patronage. All this costs money. So there need be no alarm sounded about "too much."

In conclusion, what we promised to say more about "ministerial basis" is this. Most of the members of the faculty have consented to work on this basis, esteeming themselves no more worthy than their brethren of the missionary force: And it is the intention of the management to put the entire faculty upon the same basis so soon and as rapidly as possible. This we feel sure is a feature which must commend itself to the approval of everyone, inasmuch as every department of the Lord's work can be successfully carried only by the principle of sacrifice; and it is not right that a few should do most of the sacrificing and many do nothing at all, or else how shall the rewards be distributed, for it must be in proportion to "works."

Dear Saints, we recommend to you a good and noble cause, and commend you to God, "who giveth to all men liberally and upbraideth not."

EMPEROR WILLIAM'S JERUSALEM TRIP.

BEYROOT, Syria, Nov. 8—Emperor William is much displeased over several jarring incidents of his trip to Jerusalem.

The reply of the Vatican to his notification of rights acquired by him at Mount Zion is considered extremely curt, while on all important occasions the French Consul General attended in order to assert France's guardianship of holy places.

Moreover, it appears that the Sultan practically took forceful possession of the land he presented to Emperor William, the owner objecting to sell ecclesiastical property.

The authorities here tried to clear the harbor of all shipping yesterday in view of the arrival of the German Majesties, but the steamers of the Messageries Maritimos, the French steamship company, refused to leave.

PALESTINE PUTS ON PAINT FOR WILHELM.

The Sultan has ordered a thorough renovation and cleaning up of every town and village in Palestine which will be visited by the Emperor William, and the indiscriminate zeal of the Turkish officials has led to curious results. Entirely new roads have been laid down all the way from Jaffa to Jerusalem, and from Jerusalem to the Dead Sea. This is all well, but historical buildings have been not only cleaned, but also improved and decorated up to date in a manner which will make pilgrims cry aloud, for even the "holy places" have not been spared, the mot d'ordre being to modernize everything. The historical house of Simon the Tanner, where St. Peter lived, has been painted bright blue throughout, and the floors have been laid with colored tiles, while the building is now inclosed in a gaudy paling. The superb iron screen over the Dome of the Rock, which dates from the days of the Crusaders, has been covered all over with yellow paint. This sort of thing has been going on everywhere, and people who visited Jerusalem a year ago will scarcely recognize the place if they go there again.—London Truth.

KAISER AS A COMMERCIAL TRAVELER.

According to rumor the Kaiser has assured the Sultan of his protection, and guaranteed the integrity of the Turkish Empire. This guaranty apparently does not cover Crete, whence the Turkish garrison is being bundled without ceremony in British warships, nor does it operate against Germany, which is to obtain the cession of the Port of Haifa, in Palestine, and other territory on the Syrian coast, besides the Island of Rhodes. Furthermore, Germany is to obtain the right to plant colonies in Tripoli, while exceptional industrial and commercial privileges are to be granted to Germans throughout the Turkish dominions, and the German railway from Broussa, in Anatolia, is to be extended through Asia Minor and Mesopotamia to the Persian Gulf.

If the rumor of the Kaiser's deal with the Sultan should prove true, Wilhelm's journey would have been marvelous in its results, and his imperial Majesty would be entitled to be regarded not merely as the most illustrious of modern pilgrims, but as the greatest of commercial travelers.—Philadelphia Record.

TURKISH HOSTILITY TO THE ZIONIST MOVEMENT.

It is said that the Turkish authorities in Palestine have received strict orders from Constantinople to see to it that no real estate in Palestine shall pass into the hands of Jews, even if they are Turkish subjects, and that in consequence of this order all transactions in landed property in the name of the colonies projected by Barons Rothschild and Hirsch and the Israelite alliance have been stopped. This harsh measure is connected with the Zionist movement and the resolutions of the two congresses at Basle, at which it was proclaimed that the Jews would once again constitute a nation and a state, and make Palestine their future home. As the establishment of a Jewish bank, with a large capital, was announced at the same time, the Sultan regards his Province of Palestine as a better asset now than it has ever been. Not only is the selling of land in Palestine to Jews prohibited, but impediments are placed in the way of Jews of different nationalities who may wish to visit Palestine as travelers. This touches the treaty rights of Jewish subjects of various Christian countries. It is, for instance, forbidden to Jews to proceed from Jaffa to Jerusalem, or to other places in Palestine, unless a non-Jewish resident of Jaffa guarantees that the visitors in question will leave Palestine again within thirty days of their arrival. Such guarantees must be paid for and will in many cases open a way to corruption and blackmailing. The European powers of course will protest in behalf of their respective subjects, but the Sultan cares little for protests unless they are backed by force.—New York Post.

JERUSALEM TO BE A GREAT RAILROAD JUNCTION.

Within three years a man will be able to get into the train at Ostend and travel straight through to Port Arthur. In five years a person will be able to travel in a railway carriage from the Cape to Alexandria. There is yet a third great world line from Constantinople via Palestine, Persia, India, and Burmah to Hongkong. The importance of these three great lines of communication cannot be sufficiently dwelt upon; it can certainly not be exaggerated. With the Siberian railway we have nothing to do now; with regard to the other two this is to be noted—they both of them meet in Palestine. Palestine is the great center, the meeting of the roads. Whoever holds Palestine commands the great lines of communication, not only by land, but also by sea.—Fortnightly Review.

REUNION OF METHODIST CHURCHES.

THE invitation of the Rock River Conference to Bishop Galloway of the Methodist Episcopal Church South to address the conference is an event of much importance as well as interest. Bishops of the Southern Methodist Church have been invited on a few occasions to address conferences of the Methodist Episcopal Church in the North as an act of courtesy when the Bishop happened to be in the city where the conference was in session, but the action of the Rock River Conference is the first formal invitation of the kind extended by a conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church to a bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. This is an act of fraternity that by many may be construed as a prophecy of the organic reunion of the two churches. Its influence may be increased rather than diminished by the inability of the bishop to be present, after having accepted the invitation, because of the presence of yellow fever in the city where he has his home.

The Methodist Episcopal Church South was organized in 1846. It separated from the Methodist Episcopal Church on the question of slavery. At the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church held in 1844 Bishop Andrew, whose wife held a number of slaves, which under the law of Georgia, where she lived, she could not set free, was requested to refrain from exercising the duties of his episcopal office until he had ceased to be constructively a slaveholder by his wife disposing of her slaves. This request raised a tremendous storm. The ministers from the South claimed that the General Conference had no right to take such action, it being contrary to the rights inhering in the bishopric as an order; that no limitation could be placed upon a bishop except after the presentation of charges affecting his moral character or episcopal conduct. In this view they were supported by a few ministers of the North. The opponents of slavery took the position that the bishopric in the Methodist Episcopal Church was an office, not an order, as in the Roman Catholic and Episcopal Churches, and that therefore a bishop could be dealt with as any other officeholder might be. This view prevailed and the career of Bishop Andrew as a bishop in the Methodist Episcopal Church practically closed. Two years later the Methodist Episcopal Church South was organized and Bishop Andrew became one of its first bishops.

The action of the General Conference of 1844 in declaring the bishopric an office instead of an order is considered by many to have been an epoch-marking event in preventing a dangerous centralization of ecclesiastical power in the Methodist Episcopal Church. The Methodist Episcopal Church South, on the contrary, recognized the bishopric as an order, and now that the animosities growing out of the war have subsided its position becomes the chief obstacle to a reunion of the churches. It is a common remark in Methodist circles that there must be a few funerals before there can be union. That is in a measure true, but there must be something more than funerals, and that something is not so certain to take place as are funerals. Either the Methodist Episcopal Church or the Methodist Episcopal Church South must change its view as to the character of the bishopric. The North favors reunion; the South favors fraternity. But the North is not so strongly in favor of reunion as to surrender its position in regard to the bishopric, and spokesmen for the Southern Church declare that they never will accept the Northern view. It is evident, therefore, that some years must pass and a new generation come into power in the South before reunion can take place. Then some event may pave the way for it, as the simple request made to Bishop Andrew brought about the separation.—Chicago Tribune.

Echoes from Graceland.

CONDUCTED BY GRACELAND COLLEGE.

VIVAT GRACELAND! Graceland's Column makes an inaugural bow to its readers. Graceland? For the benefit of the uninitiated we may state that Graceland is a college; no, the college, which bears upon its portals the proud inscription of "Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints." Ah! I know now. It is that Lamoni college over in Iowa. No, sir! Graceland is no more a Lamoni college, because it is located in that town, than General Conference, convened at the same place, is a conference of Lamoni. Well, what is it? The CHURCH COLLEGE, to be sure—the property of every branch, of every member, in the church. The church college! Why, I thought it was a non-religious institution. You labor under a great mistake, my friend, for Graceland is pre-eminently RELIGIOUS. Its students are persuaded to cultivate habits of integrity, morality, and righteousness, based upon an acquaintance with the precepts and practices of the Meek and Lowly One. Yes, but you do not teach the church doctrine there, for it is proclaimed to be non-sectarian. That is correct, sir. Well, then, why should I send my boy or girl to Graceland, hundreds of miles away, rather than to — college which is located in the next county? You should send your son or daughter because the moral and religious atmosphere of Graceland is purer, more conducive to the development of minds infused with the spirit and sense of the divine, as manifested in personal conduct and in nature. In it your offspring will be shielded from those corrupting and pernicious influences to which they are necessarily exposed in any other college, even though the latter be located within half a mile of your home. That is good, certainly, but since the college is a Latter Day Saint institution, why do you not teach doctrine? For this reason: The specific inculcation of doctrine is not requisite; our students ranging in age from sixteen years to thirty, have already been grounded in the principles of our religion, so far, as least, as these students are church members,—and, as the Latter Day Saints Church is the popular church here, there is no temptation to deviate from pre-established ways. The regular services of the church are extended by such attractive aids as the Religio, teachers' meetings (Sunday school), choir practice, Daughters of Zion, and many other occasional aids, held on weekdays. The college endeavors to instill the desirability and moral necessity of church attendance, combined with purity and holiness of conduct. In its unique environments, that is the unum necessarium. Graceland numbers members of the ministry among both its faculty and students, but it does not profess to be a theological school.

THE EVANELIA.

THE fund for the building, or purchase of a Gospel Boat, did not originate with the Bishopric; but was an effort made by some of the sisters and other workers through the Home Column. The fund when raised was put into the Bishop's hands, and he directed to visit San Francisco, California, and purchase or have built a boat suitable for the use of the missionaries. The Bishop sought counsel among our seagoing brethren and by their introduction had the privilege of consulting other seafaring men in regard to the sort of boat best calculated for the service in the Islands.

From the counsels with these men the Bishop set about his task, and the Evanelia was the result.

Shipbuilding is expensive, only the best of material being used, and skilled workers employed; nevertheless the Evanelia cost no more than was proper for the sort of boat she was.

The story of Bro. Joseph F. Burton's cruise in the little Gospel Boat has been told; so, alas, has the story of her loss. With these, however, it is necessary that it be told now, that the Bishop was from the first opposed to the turning of the little craft into an Island trading or trafficking boat. He refused his consent to such measure, and the President of the church knows that the Bishop wrote specifically to the brethren not to put the Evanelia into trade, and suggested that if it was so done there would be danger of her loss.

Whether this instruction reached the Islands before the decision to make a trader of the boat, or after the mistake was made, does not affect the case, so far as the Bishop is concerned; though it is probable that his letter was received after the thing was done.

The Bishop did not "squander" the money "raised by the mites" of the sisters and other "workers," nor misuse the trust. He acted upon the request of those interested, after the fund had grown large enough as it was supposed, and upon advice such as he was justified in asking for and taking.

Had the policy of the Bishop been pursued it is probable that the little Gospel ship would now be poking her nose into the different harbors among the Islands, carrying as cargo, "glad tidings of great joy," instead of lying on the sandy bottom of the Pacific Sea, a victim of mistaken faith as we believe.

As a boat devoted to the carrying of the gospel news, we all had a right to ask the Lord of earth and ocean to spare the Evanelia from the waves, the tornadoes, and the various accidents to which seagoing vessels are subject, and expect him to give her years of service in her destined calling. But when we turned her into the channels of traffic and trade, to fetch and carry to and from commercial marts the things that men barter and sell, we put her also at the mercy of wind and wave, subject to all the accidents of vessels engaged in such business, and had not the right to ask, or to expect the Lord to keep her from such fates as happen to vessels so employed.

This is written without impugning the motives of anyone, or a desire to cast censure or blame on any; and, while it is not intended to cast blame on the brethren of the church at the Islands; we think it to be quite unkind and against facts for some of the friends of the Master round about us to be casting implied blame upon the Bishop, because of the expense incurred in the building of the Evanelia and her subsequent loss. The Bishop is not justly blamable for the cost of the boat, nor in anywise responsible for its loss.

GOOD WORDS FROM THE SOUTH-LAND.

WE have received the Sunday Gazette, published at Denison, Texas, for October 23, from which we clip the following editorial pithy defense of our work. Under the head of "An Ignorant Critic," the editor says:—

A man named D. F. Fuller has taken it into his head to enlighten the readers of the Garland News regarding "Mormonism," but he is sadly deficient as to the facts. He has evidently drawn his inspiration from back number encyclopedias. He resurrects the old fake about Joe Smith stealing Solomon Spalding's fiction, known as The Manuscript Found, and palming it off on his credulous followers as an inspired translation of an ancient record now known as The Book of Mormon. Mr. Fuller says:—

"Solomon Spalding was wedded to the marvelous, whether it were history, romance, or else. In 1812 he wrote this book and while arranging for its publication 'the manuscript was lost in a printing office in Pittsburg, while under the hands of the printer's devil, Sidney Rigdon.' Rigdon became Joseph Smith's associate in 1829, and beyond a doubt this was proven the real origin and history of the book. It pretends to give a history of America up to the fifth century of our era, to account for the lost tribes of Israel, the American Indians, etc., and that Christ came to this continent and preached the gospel. It also contains very clumsy references to Calvinism, Methodism, Universalism, and Millenarianism."

The Spalding manuscript was not lost in 1812, and it was in the Spalding family until some time after the publication of the Book of Mormon.

In 1885 the Solomon Spalding manuscript was recovered, and it bears no resemblance whatever to the Book of Mormon. The original is now in the library in Oberlin College, Ohio, where anyone can inspect it. Its authenticity is beyond question, and the better informed no longer claim it as the source of Smith's "inspiration." Rigdon did not meet Smith until after the Book of Mormon was published. Fuller also charges that Smith introduced the doctrine of polygamy in the church, having received a revelation to that effect. This has never been proven, and his wife says he never published such a revelation and never countenanced the practice. It was Brigham Young who claimed to receive the revelation, and it was after the Mormons went to Utah. There has been a good deal of lying done regarding the Mormons. Joe Smith was the undoubted author of the Book of Mormon and he dictated the whole of it without a manuscript or written notes of any kind; of this there is ample proof.

"OLD GLORY."

THERE has been quite enough of laudation of the flag, and counter protest in the HERALD, and we shall call a halt and mark it as "an episode closed," using a trite political saying of the day.

There are some answers to Bro. W. H. Kelley's question asked at the close of his article on the flag, which may hold the boards for insertion for awhile; but these are not in essence relative to the flag-flying incident at last spring conference. "Let us have peace."

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Do you think it lawful to administer the sacrament to children ten to twelve years of age who have never been baptized?

Paul was of the opinion that there were some things which were "lawful" but not "expedient." The sacrament, the bread and the wine, are for baptized believers, those who are capable of discerning the Lord's body. No others are contemplated in the instructions in either the New Testament, or the Doctrine and Covenants. We have no authority for the giving of the emblems to children who have not yet reached the age to obey, or unbaptized persons, either children or adults, who have reached such age.

If therefore, the statements in the law which make it lawful to administer the sacrament to specified persons, or those specifically named, make it unlawful to permit others not so named to partake; it is unlawful.

We are of the opinion that the administration to such persons as those described in the question is not provided for, and for that reason, it ought not to be done.

We have, however, seen the bread and wine given to children under the age of obedience, and have not been aware of any harm resulting. It is not, however, the custom of the church, the nature of the ordinance being such as calls for the exercise of faith, and an intelligent belief in Christ, to make it effective to the object designed in its institution.

ARTICLES FOR HERALD.

ARTICLES written for the HERALD and sent to the editors cannot always be inserted on receipt. When some special topic is being discussed and has awakened a general interest, it is necessary to give place to the various views presented by writers, that a comprehensive statement of different phases of questions may be had, upon which to base conclusions. At such times other matter—and possibly of equal or greater merit—is held for the time being, but is inserted in due time. Good articles upon subjects not requiring pressing attention will keep until an opportune time. It is no discredit to such an article to await its proper time. The editors seek to exercise the best wisdom they have, making use of such matter as is suitable and available, and from a general discretionary survey of the field. Give us good carefully written articles and we will do the best we possibly can with them. We are also free to state that we have some matter on hand that lacks sufficient merit to secure insertion, hence the "survival of the fittest"—of the good—is a result. The presentation of good matter is invited.

PATTIE; OR LEAVES FROM A LIFE.

A STORY from real life; for young people; reduced from $1.15 to 75 cts.

THE Methodist Episcopal Church bishops ask for and propose to raise $20,000,000 before January 1, 1901, as a Twentieth-Century Thank-offering.

We hope they may succeed. We would be pleased to raise the hundredth part of that sum as a college relief fund.

Are the children of this world wiser than the children of the kingdom? It appears that they were in the time of Jesus; have they lost the prestige for the time that now is?

There was a fine gathering at the Saints' Home on the evening of Friday, November 4, under the auspices of the Religio. The object in view was the furnishing a parlor room in the Home. Twenty-four dollars resulted to the band of workers, to aid them in their work.

Sr. Bettie Haws, of Ogden, Utah, sent to President Joseph Smith last week, a Wells, Fargo Express check for twenty-five dollars to be devoted to the furnishing a room in the Saints' Home. It was placed in the Bishop's hands to be used for the purpose indicated.

A number of the lots in Graceland have been sold, and negotiations are pending for the sale of others.

MORE HEAT THAN LIGHT.

ONLY the love of truth can make a dispute profitable. The man who enters into an argument solely to get the better of his opponent is in no condition either to profit or to be profited. He is neither a teacher nor a pupil, but an artilleryman bombarding his neighbor's castle just to see him run up the white flag. No man is fit to enter into a debate who would not rather get at the truth than win a victory.—Trumbull.

HOLIDAY GIFT BOOKS.

THE Herald Office presents, on the fourth page of the HERALD cover, a list of publications suitable for holiday presents, for the consideration of patrons who would remember relatives or friends with useful and substantial tokens of regard. A gift of any of the publications advertised would be appropriate to almost anyone, and such as would prove useful in and worthy of constant use. The list includes the best of our publications, all, or most all of them at least. The reader is referred to the catalogue for others that may be desired.

Those who desire orders filled promptly,—especially where special orders in bindings are desired, with names engrossed, etc., etc.,—would do well to order in time to insure prompt forwarding to destinations.

Branch book agents and others acting in cooperation with church publishing interests are requested to call especial attention to our holiday list.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

BY advices from Bro. Morgan D. Lewis, November 6, we learn that the attack of Rev. Clark Braden, upon the faith and the saints at Hitman, Iowa, did not affect the branch. On the contrary, if any harm was done by Braden's effort it was the Baptist church, which employed him, that suffered. Bro. Lewis closes his letter thus:—

This is my first experience in hearing "Mormonism exposed," as "I, Clark Braden" terms it. And if his remarks can have any bearing on any unprejudiced mind I fail to see it. There is no Christian act in him to try and brighten the intellect of anyone; nor yet any effort to show any of that Christlike spirit to lift up the fallen one. May God be merciful to him, is the prayer and well wishes of your humble servant.

Bro. W. H. Smart, of Fairland, Indian Territory, writes the Bishop in a late letter:—

Baptized two Lamanites and four Campbellites.

Bro. C. Scott, Des Moines, Iowa, November 7:—

I go to Madison County to-morrow, having closed a series of eleven meetings here last night with full house.

Bro. T. J. Sheldon wrote from Friend, Nebraska, November 8:—

I baptize one to day. Am now at Friend; I expect to start home after dinner.

His home is at McCool Junction, Nebraska.

We are in receipt of an excellent private letter from Bro. William Roberts, of Leeds, England, giving a detailed and interesting account of a visit to Sheffield, Clay Cross, Leicester, and Stafford, and of some ministerial work at these places. Bro. Roberts is one of our promising young men, of which there are several in England. We are always glad to hear of their success, and we pray for their spiritual development. The letter breathes an excellent spirit throughout. Among other good things he writes:—

I enjoyed the conference [mission conference at Birmingham] very much, and I derived great spiritual benefit from it which I still enjoy, and I am happier in the work to-day than ever. I realize day by day as I grow older and my knowledge of things increases, that the most important aim and purpose in my life is to effect my salvation; and as my spiritual knowledge and strength increases temporal things have less interest for me, and the blessed hope I have in the gospel stands out clearer and brighter, and my whole life seems to become more and more enveloped in it.

Those who have felt the leadings of the Holy Spirit will not fail to discover the effects of its operation on the mind of this young man.

As cold waters to a thirsty soul, so is good news from a far country.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

BRO. J. C. HITCHCOCK, of St. Louis, secured insertion of an article in the Student Life, a publication issued by students of Washington University, St. Louis, in which the faith of the Reorganized Church is stated, and errors in a former article corrected.

Bro. Hitchcock wrote in good spirit and in good form throughout. We are indebted to Bro. S. V. Bailey for an opportunity to read both articles.

A clipping from the Springfield, Missouri, Tribune, recent date, an article from Bro. Henry Sparling, shows clearly that our interests in Southern and Central Missouri are being cared for when opportunity offers.

Bro. J. R. Evans, of the Nauvoo district called at Lamoni during the past week, in consultation concerning general work.

Bro. William Crick, of the Ensign, was at Lamoni and made us a call during the week of the 4th, of which we failed to make mention in our last issue.

A letter from Bro. Edward Miller, of Cleveland, informs us that Kirtland has taken another step forward, that Providence seems to favor her rejuvenation. Some time ago an electric street railway from Cleveland was run to Willoughby, two miles west, and which was to reach Kirtland and go on to Painesville and other towns. Now comes the word from Bro. Miller that natural gas has been found and is now piped into the residences of our people and others there; a good well having been bored which gives out a pressure of sixty-eight pounds. We trust other forces for good will be directed toward the revival and rebuilding of the old town. We do not believe in "booms," but simply wish it with other places worthy of it, a steady, reliable growth. Success to all that truly concerns the good of the old city and its people.

Olive oil should be kept in a cool and dark place, to keep it fresh and sweet. Wrap the bottle with blue or dark paper if exposed to light. Keep in a cellar or other cool place, and it will not become rancid.

Our Business Manager desires us to state that he has received a number of requests for bundles of HERALDS to be used for distribution with a view to extending the circulation of the paper. He desires that all who can aid in the circulation of the HERALD and of general church literature will do what lies in their power in that line. Orders for the Book of Mormon have increased of late to a degree that is gratifying.

And of the just effect complain;
We tread upon life's broken laws,
And murmur at our self-inflicted pain."

CORSET WEARING.

Dear Sisters:—I would like to present a few thoughts with the hope of arousing some careless, thoughtless ones among the saints to a sense of the dangers attendant with the habit of corset wearing. I am often reminded of Israel of old when I look around and see some of the sisters imitating the fashions of the people of the world, just as though they had no higher rule to live by than the worldlings desire to be like other people, forgetting that God's people were always a peculiar people and governed by better laws than the people of the world.

We may read any authority on hygiene and find that corsets are not healthy to wear; and God in his divine wisdom has given to his people a law, which if heeded will cause them to leave off corsets. He says, "Thou shalt not be proud in thine heart; let all thy garments be plain."

Some say that corsets do not injure one if not worn so as to be too tight, but who is to be the judge of this matter? yourself or some disinterested person? Of course it supplies one thing which is necessary; but then look at the evils attending the habit, and reflect awhile. Can you afford it? A corset, though it may be ever so loose, hinders more or less the free motions of the lungs, thus cutting short the supply of fresh air which is necessary to keep the blood pure; it also hinders to some extent the circulation of the blood. Now, "the blood is the life of the flesh," and it is necessary that it be perfectly pure in order that the body may be healthy. Health is necessary to enable us to do all the work for God that we can. The blood in its circulation is carried to the lungs, where impurities are cast off, and it is built up by plenty of oxygen and other elements which the air contains. Don't you see that anything which hinders its free circulation, and the free movement of the lungs, will have a tendency to prevent this purification, and if persisted in will bring about various forms of disease caused by impure blood? And you are sinning against God in this, as you are decreasing your capacity for work, and shortening your days; when you might by observing hygiene live to a ripe old age and do a vast amount of good in the world, and earn an exceeding great reward.

Tight lacing causes displacement of the internal organs and various forms of female complaints. The liver and stomach are forced downward, and given about half enough room for their work, and then we wonder why we have dyspepsia and liver complaint. We bring all these diseases on ourselves and displease God—for what? To tickle our vanity and gratify pride, and to look as well as or a little better than some one else. Does it pay? Sister, when you are a hopeless invalid and your usefulness destroyed, what profit will it be to you to remember that you once had a form like a doll? Will these thoughts comfort you in death and save your soul from punishment? Does it not look a little like selling your birthright for a few messes of pottage? Health and usefulness are our birthright given to us by the all-wise Creator: along comes Satan and promises a fair form and beauty if we will only give him our health and usefulness. Now we have the power to accept or reject as we choose. Shall we choose wisdom's path and secure vigorous health, long life, and usefulness, in both physical and mental work, and the reward of eternal life in the celestial kingdom? or shall we let vanity and the other works of the flesh prevail over our better nature and receive as a reward a few years of—shall I say happiness? Nay, it is not lasting happiness which will cause no development, either physically or mentally, and will cause the remaining years of life to be spent in misery, and cause us as a reward that spiritual death that is promised to all who yield to the desires of the flesh. The choice is yours; which will you take? It is really alarming to witness the extent of this habit; it is doing as much evil as alcohol and tobacco.

Children, both male and female, are made to wear corsets in some of our cities at the young and tender age of six years; and in the country as soon as a girl is ten or eleven years old she is crowded into corsets, and that often against her will, by the very person who should be most eager for her daughter's physical and mental health to be perfect. Thus the little body is deprived of that perfect development that is so necessary to health. As a result we have a generation of weak-minded and feeble women; and these women are to be the mothers of the next generation, and they will have all the infirmities inherited from a puny, sickly mother to contend against, in addition to all the allurements offered by Satan to sin. And these mothers will crowd their daughters, and sons too, perhaps, into corsets, thus adding imperfect development to the inherited weakness of the mother; and in a few generations the human species will have vanished from the earth and Satan and his angels will look up and rejoice to see the destruction they have wrought by pandering to female vanity.

Do not say Christ will come before that time and put a stop to the evil, for Christ will never come until there is a people prepared to meet him. And just suppose that he did come, would you dare to look him in the face and call him your Lord, when you had sinned against him by destroying your usefulness?

You young ladies, pause and think before you consent to thus destroy your health and happiness. On you depends a great work. You have need of health to enable you to do that work. You are young; your life is all before you; you may do a grander and nobler work than has ever been accomplished by human strength yet. Can you afford to miss your chance of earning a great reward? You mothers, can you run the risk of giving birth to a lot of puny, weak-minded children; or if your children are all healthy, can you risk their health and happiness by making them wear corsets and stunting the development of their bodies? Remember the tiny, helpless infant that came to you as pure as one of God's angels, and it is your duty to care for it in such a manner as to secure for it a sound physical and moral development, that it may be enabled to combat successfully with the evils of the world. That trusting little heart depends on mother for everything; it is as wax in your hands. You can make of it a useful citizen, or a helpless invalid, or a being as evil as one of Satan's imps. Can you risk all these things for the sake of a little pride and vanity?

One of the main causes of trouble is this desire of parents to push their children ahead; try to make grown people of them when they are really children. As soon as a girl gets up a little size she is put in corsets to "get her in some shape" as they say, forgetting that when she is old enough she will have the shape of a woman anyway. I say let our girls be taught to consider themselves as children, and let their clothing be loose and comfortable until they are eighteen or twenty years old, then let them dress as young ladies; but do not allow them to wear corsets. The corset waist is an excellent substitute for a corset, as it makes the dress fit smoothly without changing the natural shape. But if girls are allowed to purchase these waists themselves they will get them too small, and thus do themselves great injury. Teach your daughters to have confidence in Mother and be governed by Mother's advice, and see to it that Mother is worthy of this confidence too. When she gets old enough to dress as a young lady take her measure and buy a waist to fit her comfortably, and see that she wears it just as you buy it, and much of the evil will be done away. Teach her from childhood to value her health above all earthly things. Teach her that the mind and body are so intimately connected that any injury to the body is sure to be followed by an injury to the mind. That it is a sign of mental weakness to desire a small, pinched, doll-like waist; and above all things teach her to rely on God in moments of doubt and perplexity, and you will have little to fear for her safety and happiness. It would be well for you as a mother to leave off these dangerous corsets and wear the corset waist as a substitute; they are more healthful, and cheaper, and one looks just as neat with them. Or perhaps some one else can give us some better ideas on the subject of dress reform. I am not very well posted on this subject, and would like to receive information from anyone whose knowledge of it is greater than mine. That something must be done to remove this evil is certain; and where is a better place to begin than at home? We as a people are trying to live above the vanities of the world; and I for one would be glad to see the time when the sisters will come bravely out and lay off every injurious habit, regardless of what the world says. We would not lose influence by it; but people would have greater respect for our claims. Even if they did not, we would have the satisfaction of knowing that we had done our duty. Ever praying for the advancement of humanity, I am,

SISTER MARY.

Letter Department.

FT. BIDWELL, Cal., Nov. 1.

Editors Herald:—On July 27 Bro. Barmore and I left Adin for this place, expecting to return there in about thirty days. We first stopped at Canby, and after preaching six sermons Bro. Barmore led Stewart Losey and his aged mother into the waters of baptism. The Spirit was present in power, both at the water and in the confirmation meeting.

We next preached four times at Alturas, but the conditions forbade an extended effort. However, some became interested and we left a Book of Mormon with a lady there who was anxious to read it. If we had twenty-five copies of the Book of Mormon we could find employment for all of them, as the people in this section will read; but the lack of means hinders us from furnishing them the literature that we can see they need. Bro. Joehnk, of Sacramento, sent us a large supply of tracts, and I am sure that they did great good. We need a tract fund in the Northern California district, as the people generally are ignorant of our faith but willing to learn.

We held a few meetings at Lake City, at which place the writer was relieved of his satchel of books. It was a serious loss, but convinced me that God could enable a man to preach as well out of a borrowed Bible as out of his own. We have been here for over two months, but during that time have preached considerably in adjacent territory. We have baptized fifteen and there are many more very near obedience.

The Baptists have been considerably worried over the people going astray(?) and one of their preachers, when cornered in an argument by Bro. Barmore, threatened to assault him with his fists, but was prevented by other parties. Next Monday Bro. Barmore begins a debate with the Baptists to continue eight nights; in which they affirm that their church was established by Christ and has never lost its succession nor identity, while Bro. Barmore affirms that the church established by Joseph Smith is the church of Jesus Christ. We pray for good results, realizing our own weakness, but that the work is indeed the Lord's and that he is abundantly able to care for it.

A part of our experience here has been such as to give us great encouragement and added testimony that the work is of God. The most bitter opposer we had here, a former Baptist preacher, is now a warm friend. He has a daughter living at Nauvoo and wrote her inquiring about our people. She answered him that some of the best people in that vicinity were members of the Reorganized Church and as far as their lives were concerned were certainly true Christians. He made a public apology, reciting these facts, and the next day four were baptized. Words cannot express our joy and satisfaction, and it was hours after retiring before sleep came to us. Who would have thought that the influence of saints in Illinois would be felt here in California, thousands of miles away. How plainly and eloquently it teaches us the lesson that each day of our lives should be a sermon, and that our light should shine so brightly that those on the outside of the fold, seeing its radiance, would be attracted to make a covenant with God in his own appointed way. This gospel is the grandest thing ever intrusted to man, but we must live it to ever be benefited by our acceptance of it. There are sacrifices connected with it 'tis true, but how insignificant our trials are when compared with the saints of the days of Christ and the early apostles, or even of those who established this latter-day work. Let each one ask himself, "What shall it profit a man, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?" and then make a new resolution to serve God better than in the past. May God help us one and all to heed the admonition to come up higher, and I am sure that we will have the satisfaction of seeing the work advance with rapid strides.

Yours in bonds,

FRED B. BLAIR.

PORCUPINE, Wis., Nov. 4.

Editors Herald:—After the summer's campaign in tent work and the reunion near Janesville was over, I started for Grant County; spent about two weeks there, which seemed to be both profitable and enjoyable. There are about sixty-eight saints in Grant County scattered from one end of it to the other. It is therefore very difficult to get them together to hold a union meeting. There are many good kind saints among them who are still holding to what they heard and received several years ago; but as there is little opportunity for them to attend prayer meetings or even preaching service, their growth in the preparation for eternal life is very slow.

I visited several homes of the saints and held a very pleasant visit with each. While talking with them one could seem to see the little spark of hope and faith that had been smouldering within them for months grow into a blaze. Oh the need of good faithful men for branch and district workers! No wonder the Savior gave the command three times, "Feed my sheep," "Feed my lambs," and that Peter should earnestly exhort "the elders which are among you," in meekness, kindness, and with a love for God's children, "Feed the flock of God which is among you . . . not by constraint, but willingly; not for filthy lucre [praise of men], but of a ready mind. . . . And when the chief Shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away."—1 Peter 5:1-4. What use is it for men to go into the world and preach the gospel, convert men and women, and then leave them to perish for want of the bread of life? I for one hope the day may soon dawn when there shall be as many noble devoted men in the ranks of local workers as in the field; for I see the need of them on every hand. Why is it we see, week after week, such encouraging reports through the Ensign and Herald, from Chicago, St. Joseph, Lamoni, Independence, and other places? I do not say those places have gained the degree of progress it is possible for them to do; but suppose every branch in the church had devoted, prayerful men in it who were fulfilling the law of the Lord, how soon the command "come up higher" would be fulfilled. Greater power of the Spirit would be felt throughout the church and the ranks of the missionary force would be filled at twice the rate they are now being filled, and not only filled, but sustained.

In the mind of the writer there is not any more important nor honorable place in the church than that of a local worker. Let the saints encourage and honor them, be they whomsoever they may be. "Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he will send forth laborers into his harvest." I came to Northern Wisconsin about three weeks ago; found a very pleasant lot of saints here in Porcupine. Bro. A. V. Closson will soon have his new house completed and also one for his father. Bro. V. White, from Lamoni, has been engaged during the summer doing the carpenter work, assisted by Bro. A. V. They have done a good job. Sr. White has also been here and is doing a fine work in the Sunday school and aiding in the music and singing for meetings.

I have been preaching at Hay Creek the past week; had good attendance most of the time. A few seemed interested. Have also visited Ono, Wisconsin.

Your brother in bonds,

LEONARD HOUGHTON.

SPRINGFIELD, Mo., Nov. 8.

Editors Herald:—We are not dead yet, though we do not often write. Our district conference just closed and most of the saints have returned home. We had a very enjoyable time. There were not many branches represented, owing to the close time; but if a person would listen to these politicians they would make him believe that prosperity struck us two years ago; but judging from the tone of some of the letters in Herald, not many of the elders have felt it yet.

Inclosed you will find a clipping taken from the Springfield Tribune written by the writer in answer to a footnote to an article on "Utah Mormonism." The writer of the note tried to leave the impression that we and Utah were the same, and that it was only a matter of time when the two churches would be one. I visited the editor, whom I found to be quite frank and willing to give me an answer. The office of Carlin's Baptist Missionary is the same as the Tribune, and Rev. Carlin and we talked upon our debate which was to take place at Plew, Lawrence County, but I failed entirely to get him to promise to meet me.

He claims that when we signed propositions we agreed upon the rules to govern us, but he knows better; for when I asked him to now agree on rules he said there was no room on his paper. He had some rules there which his Baptist church and he had fixed up, which I would not agree to, and he afterward sent me four more rules to sign, and two of them were to the effect that we only discuss six days, which did not suit me at all; so I rewrote what we had already agreed upon with a little addition to make matters more plain.

The first read "agreement first," as we have agreed to be governed by "Hedge's Rules of Logic," it is our understanding in Rule 1 that each proposition or part thereof shall be discussed in the order as they appear and the time allotted, and any departure from such will not be permissible. The sixth agreement read, "In the discussion of these questions the Bible shall be the standard of evidence, but all standard histories, church books, and other writings which would be accepted as evidence in the courts of any land may be used for what they are worth."

He said the latter part of that was unfair, that the other was all right; so I offered to drop the latter clause of the sixth if he would meet me. But he says, "Read them again," and when I did he objected to the first, although I have his letter, which says that Hedge's rules cover that part. He said if I meant by that that when we were discussing one proposition he could not bring in the other, it would not suit him. I told him I meant all my words implied. I agreed to meet him on the three propositions simply because he would not do any better. I promised I would take lots of time; I told him I would give him all the chances on Smith he wanted in the first proposition, and all he wanted on the second, on the Book of Mormon; but he would not take it. In fact, he dare not take a fair proposition and fair rules and meet us; and for my part I think such a man should be beneath our notice. And I will say for those having any trouble with such, Don't sign anything they ask, but insist upon fair rules, and a man that is not willing to meet you on fair propositions and fair rules should be ignored.

The work here is growing despite the fact of Carlin's article on "Mormonism," which he prints every week in this town. Our hall was crowded Sunday night with many standing. Bro. Spurlock will remain with us a few nights and hold meetings. I trust we shall have interest.

I wish the saints not to forget that the Bishop's agent's book is balanced up for the present year on the last of December. Don't forget.

In bonds,

HENRY SPARLING.

VALLEY JUNCTION, Wis., Nov. 4.

Editors Herald:—Elder J. B. Wildermuth and myself arrived here a day or two ago and concluded to remain over Sunday, so have noticed through the local paper that we will preach in the saints' chapel Saturday evening and twice on Sunday. I tell the saints I am proud of their nice little church, and that they too may well be proud of it. It is through the untiring labors and push of Elder A. L. Whiteaker and his helpers, who have stood faithfully by him, that this work has been brought almost to completion, and when it is done it will add largely to the appearance of the pleasant little village. Those not members of our church have contributed quite considerably, which shows that prejudice does not run so high here as in some other places.

I am sure that quite a good deal of the prejudice we meet in the world is owing largely to the misconduct of those who profess to be saints but who do not live up to the law of Christ. I feel proud of the name of "saints" and it grieves me to find those who bring reproach upon that fair name. The Master said, "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." Then, dear saints, we must all be pure in heart, otherwise we cannot inherit the kingdom of heaven or dwell among the righteous in Zion—the pure in heart.

We expect to push on to the Northern part of the State the first of next week and will probably remain there the greater part of the winter. I am still striving with all my might to spread the gospel of Christ among the people. May the Lord bless and prosper his people.

In gospel bonds,
ELI M. WILDERMUTH.

LADD, Ill., Nov. 7.

Editors Herald:—On yesterday I had the honor of baptizing Bro. John Fitchpatrick, who was born in Ireland in 1812. This brother helped to guard Joseph Smith and his brother Hyrum from Nauvoo to Carthage, Illinois, where they met with death as the result of their testifying to the truth of the latter-day dispensation.

Bro. F. heard Joseph and others preach back in those times in which it took courage to stand for the right, and during all the years intervening from that time to this the impressions received at time touching the truth have stuck to him and have finally ripened into obedience.

On October 23 last I baptized two brethren and one sister in the Mississippi River near Cordova, Illinois. They live in Clinton, Iowa, and will be members of the Clinton branch.

Closed a series of meetings here on last evening with a fair turnout. The branch is small, but in it are some good workers. Hoping for the best I remain as ever,

In the one faith,
J. C. CRABB.

SHERBURNVILLE, Ill., Nov. 7.

Editors Herald:—We had just commenced meetings here when Bro. Moler was called home by the serious illness of his little girl. I continued alone until his return last Thursday. His child is fairly on the way to recovery, but now my eldest is reported quite sick and news from home is anxiously awaited. Such is the missionary's life.

We are continuing services in Bro. Dickey's house with quite a good hearing. Since coming here we have rescued one who was "drifting" and turned him into the fold. We think the undercurrent of divine providence is bringing others our way. A little back-alley opposition is manifested, a few mild lies are being told of us and the faith. We expect to continue over next Sunday.

Hopefully, your brother,
ADAM J. KECK.

LOWBANKS, Ont., Nov. 3.

Editors Herald:—After over two years' absence in the Chatham district I am returned to the London district and have labored about two weeks in this part. Our first effort to preach here again was greeted with a full house, but it is a busy time with farmers—this being a country place—storing fruit, plowing, etc. The continued attendance has been quite good on Sundays and fair to small week evenings.

On Sunday evening last I baptized a fine young man and expect to baptize two or three others before leaving this part. On Monday, October 31, Bro. Hiram McDonald and I were at Port Maitland and secured the use of a schoolhouse that was closed against me after holding three meetings there four years ago. Our first meeting will be there to-night. Port Maitland is about eight miles from Lowbanks branch and four miles from Bro. Hiram McDonald's home.

To any of the saints wishing my post office address I would say that if addressed to me in care of Elder M. F. Derby, Selkirk, Ontario, it will be forwarded to where I may be.

Your brother,
JOHN SHIELDS.

TORONTO, Ont., Nov. 4.

Editors Herald:—We had a debate here in our church last week, which lasted six nights, between Elder F. Gregory, and Dr. Wallace Mason, of the Christadelphian religion, on the immortality of the soul; for the last three nights on the prophetic mission of Joseph Smith. Our good-sized hall was packed full, and I am happy to say that though the doctor did his best to turn the Bible and our gospel inside out; he was ably defeated by Elder Gregory. I have never heard such a grand subject discussed before. The doctor boasted that he has debated for thirty-five years and never had been spoken to like it before. One night he used harsh expressions and I must strongly say, many untruths, to try and convince the people that we were Utah Mormons. It was not very elevating for us to sit and listen to such speeches, but nearly all his big pompous statements concerning our people he quoted from J. D. Lee and Beadle's works. He also took the trouble to write to the United States to learn more of our people so that he could expose us when the time came, but if some of the saints and the people in general were to read the "Church History" or the "Life of Lucy Smith" they would find that Governor Ford, whom he professed to quote, was an enemy to the saints, or he would not have left the martyrs, Joseph and Hyrum, to the small mercies of the mob at Carthage jail while he drove away.

Never shall I and others forget the able manner in which Elder Gregory defended the truth, which shone out the more it was polished. He was assisted by Elder R. C. Evans. I with others thought Dr. Mason was unfair in debate because he would not give chapter, book, and verse of his false statements till he was made to do so by our able chairman, R. C. Evans.

I think that by the way he was defeated he will think twice before he debates with Latter Day Saint elders again. Results are one was baptized and we hope more to follow.

Elder Gregory gave us a fine discourse on the difference between Utah Mormonism and our own Reorganization, to show the people that we have no connection with the former whatever. I love this glorious work; so does my wife. To try by our small efforts to put the gospel before the people is all we live for.

Your brother,
PHILIP J. WELLS.

A SCRAP FROM ELDER I. N. WHITE'S DIARY.

"Wednesday, March 2, 1898: At home; wrote letters; went to prayer meeting at night. Our meeting was dry, yet instructive. I spoke, lecturing the saints for their carelessness, and for their grumbling, and for not heeding the revelations given to the church—the Word of Wisdom, etc. I felt cut over my own remarks, but certainly they were sent of God. They were smarting on many of the saints. When dismissed a number spoke to me and acknowledged the truthfulness of the remarks and seemed to be glad to meet me. Bro. Harrington wanted me to preach Sunday at eleven a. m. All night at home.

"Thursday, March 3. Up at six. Last night I dreamed and awoke, slept and dreamed again, of telling my dream to an elder and that he would scarcely heed it. My dream was: I stood by an aged M. E. minister, who was of note among his people; considered a 'good man' by them. He seemed to be eighty-five years old and was breathing his last. I said, 'Well I will go with him to the spirit land;' and I did go. There was more of an interval between the time of leaving the body and getting to the spirit land than I expected. However, I got there and saw lots of people of different churches, that I knew. Saw many of the saints and knew them. This M. E. preacher was wonderfully disappointed. He had thought that when dying and going to heaven he would have nothing but enjoyment—playing upon the golden harps, etc. But, alas! it was not happiness to him—as he died so was he there. He had not obeyed the gospel in this life and could not enjoy its equivalent in the other life. He grumbled and complained so much over his disappointments that I took him to task for it. I told him there was some pleasure at least to him in the change—he did not have to die again; he could go on to a greater degree of perfection and earn his reward, as he had never done that while in earth life. God had to be honest and just with him and could only give to him according to his works. I saw many—yes many—of the saints there who had not been valiant in their testimony, and they had lost the reward they might have gotten; but all received a reward according to their works. It was wonderful indeed. I saw many wonderful things and then went back to earth again. I awoke and marveled and said in my heart, 'Is this not a warning to God's people?' Surely it is."

MUSCATINE, Iowa, Nov. 10.

Editors Herald:—I was at home and attended Woodbine reunion, and felt blessed there; but had to go to my field of labor before it closed. I started on the evening of September 23, accompanied to the train by my loving companion and children and a number of saints, going to Clinton, Iowa, to attend quarterly conference of Eastern Iowa district arriving there in the morning. As I stepped from the car there was our beloved brother Palsgrove, to meet me, and we accompanied him to his home, where Sr. Palsgrove had the morning meal prepared. And, lo and behold, we found our old friends, Bro. and Sr. C. G. Dykes from Muscatine, Iowa, formerly from Persia, Iowa, there. And then I felt at home indeed. After a few words we made ready for the meetings, and went to the hall. There we met Bro. J. W. Peterson, our district president, and Bro. J. N. Sutton assistant president, and many others from different parts of the district. A united feeling pervaded the entire session; not a harsh word during the meeting. We were permitted to speak to them in the afternoon and Sunday evening; felt blessed.

On Monday morning took the early boat for Muscatine, accompanied by Bro. and Sr. C. G. Dykes and Mrs. Johnston and Jennie Leland from Rock Island, and Sr. Hatton from Davenport. And that boat ride put me in mind of my Eastern mission two years ago. We changed boats at Davenport, and went with Sr. Hatton to her home, where she prepared dinner, and we enjoyed the same. Had a short visit; took the four p. m. boat. On to Muscatine in company with Bro. and Sr. Dykes; arrived there about eight p. m., when Bro. Dykes' hired man met us, and took us six miles north of the city to his home, where all the elders have a welcome home that come that way.

I have been holding meetings in this neighborhood for several weeks, but not much interest, because of busy times.

At present I am holding meetings in this city, in the church owned by the people called the Church of God. I was holding meetings north of the city a short time ago, and one of the leading members of the "Church of God" attended twice, and he told me that he thought that I could get their church to preach in. So last Sunday Bro. Dykes and I attended their morning meeting to lay the matter before the people. When we arrived they had received a postal from their minister, that he could not be with them that day, so they invited me to talk for them. With pleasure I accepted the invitation, and was blessed in so doing. At the close of the sermon I made my wants known in regard to getting their church to hold a series of meetings in, and they said that they would talk the matter over before they could give me an answer. They invited me to preach in the evening, and then they would let me know. I thanked them for the invitation, and one of the leading men invited me to go home and take dinner with him; after dinner two of the leading men would meet us at his place and they would try me, or examine our faith.

According to previous arrangements the other two judges came. But, dear brethren and sisters, I did not forget to invite our loving Father to be with me in Spirit. Then I was brought before this council, and was permitted to speak for myself, or for the work of God. And I felt happy for the privilege to defend the gospel of the meek and lowly Christ. I told them the simple story, or the message that the angel brought to earth, and what the Book of Mormon is and what it claims to be. Our loving Father was with me by his Spirit, and I was blessed in defending this work. They sat as though they were confounded, and at one time when I looked upon all their faces there were tears in their eyes, and my heart was full of joy, and I could tell them the simple story by the aid of the Spirit.

At the close of the evening meeting they stated to the audience that I could have the church for this week anyway, and then I announced meetings. I believe these people are good, honest souls, and if I am permitted to continue here I think that we can convince them of the truth. Remember me to our heavenly Father, that I may not be left alone.

Last night at the close of the meeting a lady came up to me and shook me by the hand, and said "Bro. Smith, I am glad I am here, for I never heard of that doctrine before."

So let us be valiant soldiers in the army of the Lord and endure to the end; we will meet by and by, where we will part no more.

SPRINGFIELD, Mo., Nov. 10.

Editors Herald:—Our district conference convened here last Saturday and Sunday and was one of peace and love from first to last. We were disappointed, however, in not seeing Elder John A. Davis, our good old standby and district president, present; and, in fact, not a soul from the southeastern part of the district. No wonder there has been some talk of dividing the district. Bruner branch furnished us a good representation, and among them Bro. C. H. Merrett, a priest whom I had not met for over twenty years, he having made his home with us one or two years near where Lamoni now stands. He is still firm in the faith and looks but a very little older, which may be accounted for, however, as he has since taken unto himself a most noble companion.

Elder C. J. Spurlock was in attendance and is now holding a series of meetings in our hall, where good attention is paid to his sound gospel sermons. Elder Sparling is holding the fort here against much questionable opposition. It is hoped that our elders will not condescend or stoop so low as to abuse other denominations directly or indirectly, from the pulpit or otherwise, as some abuse us.

The work in Springfield is moving slowly, but we hope surely. Two were added by baptism on the 8th, and others have given their names for next Sunday. There are some rumors to the effect that Elder W. R.

Pickering and family will move away from Springfield in the near future. This would almost prove to be a death blow to our branch, as he has been its stay and staff as well as president for years, and we hope they may change their minds and remain with us, as they have a very high standing in society as well as in the church proper. As for us, we like this city quite well; considerable improvement is going on this year, and more so since our new railroad outlet direct to Kansas City is completed.

In gospel bonds,

SAN ANTONIO, Texas, Nov. 6.

Editors Herald:—I arrived in San Antonio October 24, and to my surprise I learned that Bro. H. P. Curtis had passed on to his reward. Kind hands had borne him to the cemetery on the 20th. I visited the cemetery with his wife and mother-in-law, and while there I breathed a silent prayer to the good Lord that the work he had done in this district might bring forth many honest souls in the kingdom of God.

I find many honest saints in this city. They have passed through many trials, and some of them have been "tried as by fire," and I believe in time they will shine in the kingdom of God.

We need help in the Southwestern mission. Bro. Toney, for reasons best known to himself, stopped traveling and preaching the 1st of July. Bro. Curtis is with us no more on earth. Bro. Duncan is in very poor health, yet he is still traveling and preaching, and doing all the good he can, while all the rest of the brethren are doing gospel work and doing well; yet we need more laborers.

The district conference in Texas Central district was well attended and a peaceful spirit prevailed. We are now looking forward to the 25th, when the Southwest district conference will be held at Medina church. We trust the saints will take notice and come with a cheerful heart and that our prayers may be heard of our heavenly Father, that we may rejoice in his love.

Your brother,

A. J. MOORE.

BOZEMAN, Mont., Nov. 5.

Editors Herald:—Our district conference is past, and was one of the best held in the district for several years. Bro. Wight is with us and is cheering the saints by his earnest preaching.

There were six of the Utah elders in attendance at our conference. Bro. Wight discoursed on the successor. Of course they thought him unkind and unfair, but really, I think he was very fair and kind to them. They utterly refused to discuss the proposition, stating that they were forbidden to discuss with us, but said that next Sunday night they would state their position. They seem to look upon our attacks on their position as persecution.

I don't understand how they expect to explain their way out of the mists. They say they have taken an oath not to preach polygamy, and still say they believe it is of God. But Mr. Penrose did admit recently, in the presence of Brn. Wight, Davies, and myself, that there was a possibility that it was not of God; that it was an open question.

I believe Montana a far better field for gospel work than Utah.

In bonds,

GOMER REESE.

GRAND VALLEY, Pa., Nov. 8.

Editors Herald:—With the constantly reported condition of crowded columns it is easy for some of us to refrain from writing. If we desist we may be adjudged remiss in that, and perhaps as to other labor.

Since leaving my home on May 21 I have been steadily at work; first in Ottawa County, Ohio, where, through the instrumentality of Bro. Peter Peterson, from Canada, the work was first planted and by the efforts of several since eighteen saints anxiously await the day and condition for organization. F. C. Smith has labored there effectively; is held in high esteem.

Next it fell to my lot to second the excellent efforts of George W. Robley and I. M. Smith in Warren County, Pennsylvania, which I did from June 25 to August 4, speaking at five different points and baptizing five, who were ready before my arrival. From this inviting field I was called to attendance at the temple, Kirtland, Ohio, showing visitors through and telling them the gospel story as opportunity afforded. Here let me say, that having reported receipts there at seven dollars and fifteen cents on one Sunday, the whole time I was there averaged about one dollar per day; earlier than what is called the "outing season" and later as well receipts would be less.

A week at Akron with the struggling band there as well as the conference was enjoyed. At the conference, and Conneautville reunion Brn. Davis and McDowell's labors were valuable and appreciated by all. With Bro. McDowell I must say I do not remember attending any series of services where so uniformly in all sessions the Spirit and its peace so constantly attended. As the one reunion held in the Ohio district, at Limerick, was similar, would it be too much to assume that the Lord was pleased with such efforts. Shall they be repeated?

On September 28 I resumed again where Robley and Smith still hold the record as preachers and men of first class reputation. Lesser preacher though I be, I am always glad to follow men of clean lives and proper example. The baptism of two more at Goss-ville on last Sunday, one the direct result of R. and S's labors makes the sum total hereabouts twenty-one. Having reported the names of the first five at the time, Brn. R. and S. may be pleased to know the last two are Brn. Iva Thomas and John Vanguilder. Bro. Thomas' wife, an excellent lady, is among earnest investigators considering the matter.

I had the good fortune to deliver twenty-one discourses in the Whiteoak Methodist church, south of Excelsior Union, and hold the Record against Robley and Smith; but as they had not been there, the situation may be reversed some day. I was entertained at more than twenty family circles, and the friends of the cause still on the increase; but James Kelley, Joseph Reed, and others persist in being dry-land saints.

At Grand Valley no place available at present without expense. McGraw and Fagundus I have yet to revisit. The saints and friends there anxiously await more preaching.

Whether Cuba, Old Glory, or what was done at General Conference was responsible for it or not, two of the brethren got to telegraphing that there was or might be giants in the land up in New York. I tried to respond, put in three weeks of suspense, three dollars and sixty-six cents of expense, and about one hundred miles of travel, about half of it on foot through mud and dashing rains, to keep in touch by wire and mail. How happy I would have been had the giants said first off they would not appear. Not craving debate I dislike to do so much to get ready and then get so disappointed. Send for that brother brandishing his sword recently in Missouri, brethren, please, or send the giants there.

At Middletown, Ohio, Rev. Kuhlman, a Lutheran minister, assailed Dowieism and faith cure, but in his effort relegated all divine healing to the past. The Signal, of Middletown, with laudatory headlines published the effort. "A Christian-Scientist" replied. Sr. Edith Wren, a young lady, thought, and rightly too, the reverend gentleman should be corrected and instructed. She pitched the issue on such a plane and in such manner as to win the admiration of any fair-minded thinker. She made splendid arguments of her own, turned those advanced by the gentleman on him, spiked his gun with the Greek he got off, and in the fifth issue was last on the field of controversy and monarch of all there was to survey. May many others equip themselves and do battle when needful.

I hope with Bro. J. C. Clapp in his late excellent article, that the "time" "speculation" will some day be relegated to the past. Chronology is somewhat elastic; the unintelligible of some parts of Daniel and Revelation more so. While all scripture may be profitable for doctrine, reproof, correction, instruction, etc., it may be a later time when some of it will be so. The Savior once said, "It is not for you to know the times or the seasons." The angel who appeared to the Seer while referring to coming fulfillment of scripture left those out. The revelations through the seer and his successor also do not deal with them. The present President has advised leaving the "hoofs and horns" "alone" lest some one get "hooked." Why not just teach what can be made clear with undisputable evidence? The time question, t-i-m-e will surely work out and bring all events with it in their time. At work hopefully.

True Succession in Church Presidency.

Mr. Roberts' next attack is in the following language:—

(2) Mr. Smith further claims that he was called to be President of the church through his father by revelation in 1841.

The revelation referred to was given the 19th of January, 1841. The passage in it supposed to sustain the claim of appointment of "young Joseph" to be the President of the church is the following:

And now I say unto you, as pertaining to my boarding house which I have commanded you to build for the boarding of strangers, let it be built unto my name, and let my name be named upon it, and let my servant Joseph, and his house have place therein, from generation to generation; for this anointing have I put upon his head, that his blessing shall also be put upon the head of his posterity after him, and as I said unto Abraham concerning the kindreds of the earth, even so I say unto my servant Joseph, in thee and in thy seed shall the kindred of the earth be blessed. Therefore let my servant Joseph and his seed after him have place in that house, from generation to generation, for ever and for ever, saith the Lord.

This is not difficult to comprehend as it stands thus in the Doctrine and Covenants unmarred. It is simply this: a commandment was given to build the Nauvoo House, a tavern, for the boarding and lodging of strangers. Joseph Smith and his family were also to have a home therein; for he was commanded to put stock in the house, and as a matter of fact did put considerable stock into it; and his family after him, from generation to generation, was to have that inheritance in the house. It was to be theirs because the prophet Joseph had purchased the stock which secured to him, and his posterity after him, the right of a home within it. The passage does not in any manner refer to succession in the Presidency of the church. What it does refer to is clearly seen in the commencement of the paragraph—"And now I say unto you, as pertaining to my boarding house, which I have commanded you to build for the boarding of strangers, etc." That is the subject of the passage, not the priesthood, nor the succession of the prophet Joseph's son to his father's position as President of the church. How absurd the argument that because a man's posterity are to inherit his stock in a hotel, or succeed to the right of living in it as a return for having paid a large sum towards the construction of it, that therefore we must conclude that it means, too, that a man's posterity or at least the "head" of it—the eldest son—must also inherit the father's priesthood and calling as President of the church!—Roberts, pp. 53, 54.

Suppose we admit that the subject of this passage is the Nauvoo House, and that a special provision was made that Joseph Smith and his family were to have place therein from generation to generation; then the inquiry is pertinent, Why was this provision made? If we understand Mr. Roberts, his position is that it was because Joseph Smith held stock in the house and the Lord was providing that his posterity should succeed to his property rights. This was provided for by the laws of the land, and why should the Lord interfere in such a matter? The law of the land would also protect the property rights of the heirs of every other stockholder in that institution. If this is all he intended to do, why did he make a specialty of the family of Joseph Smith? Were their property rights more in jeopardy than the rights of hundreds of others? There must have been some special reason why his family should have a place in that house. That reason will become clear by quoting the remainder of the paragraph from which Mr. Roberts quotes but a part. Mr. Roberts' quotation ends at a comma. Commencing at the beginning of the sentence which he breaks and continuing it reads:—

Therefore, let my servant Joseph, and his seed after him, have place in that house, from generation to generation, forever and ever, saith the Lord, and let the name of that house be called the Nauvoo House; and let it be a delightful habitation for man, and a resting place for the weary traveler, that he may contemplate the glory of Zion, and the glory of this the corner stone thereof; that he may receive also the counsel from those whom I have set to be as plants of renown, and as watchmen upon her walls.—D. C. 107: 18.

Here we have the purpose of the house described as being a resting place for the "weary traveler, that he may contemplate the glory of Zion, and the glory of this the corner stone thereof; that he may receive also the counsel from those whom I have set to be as plants of renown, and as watchmen upon her walls." This being the purpose of the house, does it not follow that those whom God decreed should remain in the house, notwithstanding their property rights were no better than others, were "set to be as plants of renown and as watchmen" upon the walls of Zion? Some one may ask, Could they not "be as plants of renown, and as watchmen" without being in the Presidency? In a general sense they might be; but this indicates that their counsel was to be in a special manner sought by the investigator. Why should they be thus specially pointed out and located where their counsel could be had unless their position was to be a special one? Had Nauvoo been built up according to the command of God this provision would doubtless now be in force.

Let us now return to that part of the quotation furnished us by Mr. Roberts: "Let my servant Joseph, and his house have place therein, from generation to generation." Why? Because they have property rights? Their rights in this respect are just as good, but no better than others. Let the Lord tell us why: "for this anointing have I put upon his head, that his blessing shall also be put upon the head of his posterity after him." Then to remain in the house was not the blessing, but they were to remain in the house because of the conditions attaching to the blessing. What blessing were the posterity to have? Joseph's blessing. What was his blessing? The Lord gave a commandment on the very day the church was organized, April 6, 1830, and gave instruction that a record should be kept and that Joseph in that record should "be called a seer, a translator, a prophet, and an apostle of Jesus Christ," etc. (D. C. 19: 1.)

Again, the duty of the president of the office of the high priesthood is to preside over the whole church, and to be like unto Moses. Behold, here is wisdom, yea, to be a seer, a revelator, a translator, and a prophet; having all the gifts of God which he bestows upon the head of the church.—D. C. 104: 42.

Here then is the blessing given to Joseph to occupy in this position, and to discharge these duties and responsibilities. But some one objects that this is not called a "blessing;" but is it not a blessing? However, to silence this caviling we refer the reader to the blessing of Joseph Smith as pronounced by his father on the occasion of the ordination of the High Council, February 19, 1834. Joseph in his history says:—

"My father Joseph then laid his hands upon my head and said, 'Joseph, I lay my hands upon thy head and pronounce the blessings of thy progenitors upon thee, that thou mayest hold the keys of the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven, until the coming of the Lord; amen.'"—Church History, Vol. 1, p. 433; Times and Seasons, Vol. 6, pp. 994, 995.

Here the doctrine of lineal descent is recognized for the right to "hold the keys of the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven" belonged to Joseph's progenitors, and descended to him. Now mark you, "his blessing shall also be put upon the head of his posterity after him." So we have it clearly defined that the blessing of Joseph's progenitors was conferred on Joseph that he might "hold the keys of the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven;" and this blessing was to descend unto his posterity. Now what position in the church does this blessing guarantee? Hear what the Lord said to Frederick G. Williams in March, 1832:—

Hearken to the calling wherewith you are called, even to be a high priest in my church, and a counselor unto my servant, Joseph Smith, Jr., unto whom I have given the keys of the kingdom, which belongeth always unto the presidency of the high priesthood; etc.—D. C. 80: 1.

The question as to whether this special blessing always comes to the eldest son is not an issue between us and the people of Utah, hence it is idle to discuss it here. We agree that it was bestowed upon Joseph Smith the Martyr, and the above shows clearly that it should be in his posterity.

Summarizing the points in the paragraph under examination we get the following:—

1. The boarding house is the subject under consideration.
2. Joseph Smith's family was to have place in that house from generation to generation, forever and ever.
3. The reason for this is that they were to inherit their father's blessing.
4. That blessing entitles them to hold the keys of the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven.
5. These keys belong always unto the presidency of the high priesthood.
6. Hence the presidency should be in Joseph's posterity.

We grant that all these hereditary rights are contingent upon efficiency and worthiness, and a man or family may be removed from his or their place for transgression or unfaithfulness. But these disabilities must be proved, not assumed, in order to deprive one of his rights under the law.

Again, when it is considered that this revelation compares the blessing of Joseph Smith with that of Abraham, and affirms that in Joseph Smith and his seed "shall the kindred of the earth be blessed," how poor and mean appears the idea of Mr. Roberts and his echo, C. W. Penrose, that it has not the remotest application to Priesthood, or Presidency, or succession in anything, but the right of Joseph the Prophet and his posterity to have place in that house.—Priesthood and Presidency, by Penrose, p. 15.

Mr. Roberts resumes, as follows:—

(3) Mr. Smith claims that he was called through his father to be President of the church by a formal anointing in a council at Nauvoo, in 1844.

In support of this claim Josephites quote only the testimony of Mr. James Whitehead, who resides at Lamoni, Iowa, and who is said to have been one of the secretaries of Joseph the prophet. It is said of him rather than by him, that for the past twenty and more years he has Testified publicly that he personally knew that Joseph the seer, in the presence of a number of the ministry, in Nauvoo, anointed and set apart his son Joseph to be his successor in the prophetic office and Presidency of the church, and that soon after the seer announced publicly from the stand, on a Sunday, that his son Joseph would be his successor.—Roberts, p. 55.

When Mr. Roberts penned the words, "Josephites quote only the testimony of Mr. James Whitehead," etc., he evidently had forgotten that which he quotes on next page from the pen of Joseph Smith, as follows:—

Of this alleged anointing in 1844, when Mr. Smith was a lad twelve years of age, he himself can only say:

Before the death of my father and uncle Hyrum, I was blessed by the first, in the presence of quite a number of then prominent Elders in the Church, this blessing being confirmed just prior to the tragedy at Carthage.

Upon this statement Mr. Roberts comments as follows:—

This is the only personal statement of his that I have ever seen in all the writings of the Josephites in regard to his ordination and blessing by his father, and it appears that he has no recollection of the nature of this "blessing;" if he was anointed and blessed to be the future prophet and President of the church, he evidently has no recollection of it, etc.

This is not the fault of "the writings of the Josephites," but the fault of Mr. Roberts' information. We have already quoted in these pages another and fuller statement from the pen of President Smith published as early as 1868, (see p. 40). If we are to be held responsible for what Mr. Roberts has not seen, our case is indeed a hopeless one. In regard to the testimony of James Whitehead and Emma Smith, Mr. Roberts states:—

I would have more respect for this evidence if, instead of being the alleged statements of these several parties, it had been the very statements themselves—the statements of Mr. Whitehead and of Emma Smith, instead of a report of what they said by some Josephite writer. So far as Mr. George J. Adams is concerned he must very soon have forgotten his elation at finding out who the true successor of the prophet was; for he afterwards became a follower of Mr. Strang, and the very man who crowned him "king" at Beaver Island.—Roberts, p. 56.

These statements were published during the lifetime and with the knowledge of James Whitehead and Emma Smith, and received their tacit approval by not being corrected by them. However, we will here present the following direct statement of Elder Whitehead, given under oath in the Temple Lot suit:—

I recollect a meeting that was held in the winter of 1843, at Nauvoo, Illinois, prior to Joseph Smith's death, at which the appointment was made by him, Joseph Smith, of his successor. His son Joseph was selected as his successor. Joseph Smith did the talking. There were present Joseph and Hyrum Smith, John Taylor, and some others who also spoke on the subject; there were twenty-five I suppose at the meeting. At that meeting Joseph Smith, the present presiding officer of the complainant church, was selected by his father as his successor. He was ordained and anointed at that meeting. Hyrum Smith, the Patriarch, anointed him, and Joseph his father blessed him and ordained him, and Newell K. Whitney poured the oil on his head, and he was set apart to be his father's successor in office, holding all the powers that his father held. I cannot tell all the persons that were present, there was a good many there. John Taylor and Willard Richards, they were two of the "Twelve," Ebenezer Robinson was present, and George J. Adams, Alpheus Cutler, and Reynolds Cahoon. I cannot tell them all; I was there too.—Plaintiff's Abstract, p. 28.

Shall we now have more respect from Mr. Roberts? George J. Adams may have lost confidence in this appointment afterward; we do not know. But he did not forget "his elation at finding out who the true successor of the prophet was" so readily as Mr. Roberts would have us believe; for, according to the letter of James Kay, from which we have quoted (see p. 18), he was with William Smith at St. Louis, in November, 1845, advocating the right of young Joseph to the presidency. Emma Smith and James Whitehead agree that G. J. Adams was present at this anointing. We present the fact that Mr. Adams advocated the right of succession in young Joseph immediately after, as a strong corroborative circumstance.

In confirmation of the testimony of James Whitehead and in refutation of Mr. Roberts' statement that "Josephites quote only the testimony of Mr. James Whitehead," we cite the testimony of John H. Carter, of near Provo, Utah, taken in the Temple Lot suit, at Salt Lake, Utah, March 14, 1892. After relating that this took place when he was present, at a Sunday service held in the Bowery near the Temple, at Nauvoo, not long before Joseph was killed, he says:—

Joseph Smith came on the stand leading his son, young Joseph, and they sat him down on a bench at the prophet's right hand, and Joseph got up and began to preach and talk to the people, and the question he said was asked by somebody, "If Joseph Smith should be killed or die, who would be his successor?" And he turned around and said, pointing to his son, "There is the successor," and he went on and said "My work is pretty nearly done," and that is about all he said in regard to his son. He said in answer to a question that was asked as to who should be his successor in case he should be killed or die, and he pointed to his son, young Joseph, who was sitting there at his side, and said he; "There is your leader."—Plaintiff's Abstract, pp. 180, 181.

Upon this point the testimony of Mr. Whitehead and Mr. Carter agrees; and they corroborate the statement of President Smith published in 1868. (See p. 40.) Is it stupidity or dishonesty that causes Mr. Roberts to flounder so?

Mr. Roberts seeks to throw discredit upon the testimony of Charles Derry, D. S. Mills, Lucy Smith (mother of the prophet), George Miller, Louis Gaulter, Harriet E. Gaulter, Arthur Milliken, and A. B. Moore; but as in neither case does he introduce evidence in rebuttal or to impeach, we shall not follow him in his immaterial struggle. The testimony of the witnesses must stand until it is proved false or they are impeached. These witnesses are known by reputation, and some of them personally to many of our readers. They need no certificate of character.

We will however briefly notice the comment of Mr. Roberts on Bishop Miller's testimony. He says:—

If Bishop Miller had any testimony of any weight that Mr. Smith, the son of the prophet, had been appointed to succeed to the position of prophet and President of the church, will those who rely on his statements explain how it is that with such testimony in his possession he ran off after other leaders? First following Mr. Lyman Wight to Texas, and after quarrelling with him joining Mr. Strang in Michigan. Bishop Miller, like Lyman Wight, lost his honor, he was neither true to the church of Christ led by the Twelve after the martyrdom of the prophet Joseph, nor true to Mr. Wight, nor "young Joseph." He became a restless man after his apostasy, unstable as water. There is nothing either in the nature of his testimony or the character of the man after his apostasy which gives any influence to his statement.—Roberts, p. 61.

To say that the above insinuations are mean and despicable is to put the case mildly. Not one word of testimony that he and Mr. Wight quarrelled; that either of them lost their honor; that the church which he rejected was the Church of Christ; that he became untrue to Mr. Wight or young Joseph; that he became a restless man; that he apostatized; that he was unstable as water. All this is flaunted before us without proof with a recklessness that betrays that its author is conscious that his success depends on his blinding the eyes of the people to the real issue. In contrast with this, let us quote what the Lord said of George Miller in 1841:—

Let no man despise my servant George, for he shall honor me.—D. C. 107: 8.

The issue then is between the Lord and Roberts. We let it rest there.

As for the explanation asked for by Mr. Roberts, Bishop Miller probably went to Lyman Wight because Lyman Wight taught lineal priesthood, and afterwards to J. J. Strang because of the resolution passed by the Strangite conference in 1849. (See p. 39.)

Elder Roberts in his work page 66 quotes Brigham Young as stating (see Times and Seasons, Vol. 5, p. 683) that Joseph Smith ordained his brother Hyrum to succeed him. This claim made in October, 1844, by Elder Brigham Young, would, if true, destroy the prophetic character of Joseph Smith; for, as Elder Young informs us, Hyrum fell a martyr before Joseph did; hence if he was so ordained, it was a failure, and certainly God did not prompt it. We cannot accept this upon the unsupported statement of Elder Young.

The words quoted by Mr. Roberts from Tullidge do not convey the idea that Joseph ordained Hyrum to be his successor.

Mr. Roberts presents another division of the subject in these words:—

Having disposed of Mr. Smith's claim to the right of the Presidency of the church so far as it is based upon an appointment through his father, let us now take up his second claim, viz:

The position is his by lineage—his birth-right.

There are two offices and only two, in the church which descend by lineage from father to son: the office of patriarch and that of bishop.—Roberts, pp. 66, 67.

We do not object to the application of the law of lineage to the offices of Patriarch and Bishop. We believe, as a general rule, that what belongs to the father belongs to his posterity if competent, available, and worthy. Recognizing, however, that the son's right to his father's position is contingent upon these conditions, and that God alone is a competent judge of ability and worthiness, we hold that no man should be ordained to any office without a call from God. We believe, however, that, under favorable conditions, all other things being equal, God recognizes this principle in his selections. What we object to in Mr. Roberts' theory is the limiting of the application of this law to the two offices he mentions. This we believe to be erroneous.

We have already shown that Joseph Smith, the Martyr, held the keys of the kingdom by virtue of his having received the blessings of his progenitors, and that this blessing was to descend to his posterity after him. We now proceed to show that this law has a general application.

A revelation was received through Joseph Smith the prophet on December 6, 1832, which is addressed to the Priesthood without distinction as follows:—

Verily thus saith the Lord unto you, my servants, etc.—D. C. 84: 1.

In this revelation is found the following paragraph:—

Therefore, thus saith the Lord unto you, with whom the priesthood hath continued through the lineage of your fathers, for ye are lawful heirs, according to the flesh, and have been hid from the world with Christ in God: therefore your life and the priesthood hath remained, and must needs remain, through you and your lineage, until the restoration of all things spoken by the mouths of all the holy prophets since the world began.—D. C. 84: 3.

Here the law of lineage is specifically and clearly taught as applied to those holding the priesthood, and it is expressly declared that those who held the priesthood in 1832 did so in harmony with the rights of lineage. It is natural for some men in the heat of argument to inadvertently strain a point for the sake of a specific application, and if overzealous individuals have made this mistake with this passage we decline to be bound by such argument. We concede, and believe, that this passage does not have an exclusive application to Joseph Smith and his posterity, but that it is general in its application. We contend, however, that while Joseph Smith and his posterity are not the only ones referred to, they should not be excluded from the application of this general rule.

It is asserted, however, that this language treats only of the priesthood, and not to offices in the priesthood. It would be difficult for Mr. Roberts and his fellows to establish his exception in the case of the Patriarch upon this reasoning. However, we have shown clearly that Joseph, the Martyr, held his position in the priesthood by virtue of his having obtained the blessings of his progenitors, and that that blessing was to descend to his posterity. We believe that other families are subject to the same rule, contingent upon the same conditions and restrictions. Science has proclaimed a reason for this provision, not considered in former years, which demonstrates its beauty and consistency. The theory of prenatal influences, which provides that the child before birth is influenced in disposition and traits of character by its parentage, is now adopted by the best minds of the age. It follows then that if a man is thoroughly imbued with the spirit of his calling, and earnestly and zealously engaged in the execution of the duties of that office, the child born to him under these conditions is likely to possess pre-eminently the qualities necessary to succeed in the position filled by the father; more especially is this true when the mother is also thoroughly in sympathy with the father's work; hence the wisdom of removing the family from their place when the father fails to occupy properly, as declared in the following warning:—

And now verily I say unto Joseph Smith, Jr., you have not kept the commandments, and must needs stand rebuked before the Lord. Your family must needs repent and forsake some things, and give more earnest heed unto your sayings, or be removed out of their place. What I say unto one I say unto all: Pray always, lest that wicked one have power in you, and remove you out of your place.

My servant Newel K. Whitney, also a bishop of my church, hath need to be chastened, and set in order his family, and see that they are more diligent and concerned at home, and pray always, or they shall be removed out of their place.—D. C. 90: 8, 9.

According to this, not only the Smith family and the Whitney family had a place in the church, but all were in the same condition, their place depending upon their faithfulness.

The effect of prenatal influences will naturally be more marked and positive where the parent's work is of an inspired spiritual character, than where it is merely of a physical or unaided mental character.

It is conceded that God can use any man, who is willing, for the accomplishment of his purposes; but we urge that in providing a law or rule of succession he would evidently choose that law or rule most likely to produce the best results.

For some cause the church in Utah has found it advisable to practically follow this rule in many of the leading offices in their organization. As a result they have in the Presidency, Joseph F. Smith to succeed his father, Hyrum; as presiding Patriarch, John Smith, to succeed his father; in the Quorum of the Twelve, Brigham, the son of Brigham Young; John Henry, the son of George A. Smith; Heber J., the son of Jediah Grant; Francis M., the son of Amasa Lyman; John W., the son of John Taylor; and A. O. Woodruff, son of Wilford Woodruff. The late

Abram Cannon, of the same quorum, was, we believe, the son of George Q. Cannon. What then but the ambition of Brigham Young and his successors, real and prospective, has prompted this people to contend so strenuously against the application of the law of lineage to the Presidency of the church?

Mr. Roberts concludes his argument under this head as follows:—

As a conclusion to my argument against the claim of Mr. Smith, that the position of President of the church is his by right of lineage, I quote the words of his illustrious father. In a discourse delivered on the 27th of August, 1843, having for his text the seventh chapter of Hebrews, and explaining the phrase in the third verse—"without father, without mother, without descent," etc., he said:

The Melchisedek priesthood holds the right from the eternal God, and not by descent from father and mother; and that priesthood is eternal as God himself, having neither beginning of days nor end of life.

In the face of this how can Mr. Smith claim any right, by virtue of lineage, to the Melchisedek priesthood, much less to the highest office in that priesthood? His claim is denied by that very father from whom he claims to have received it by inheritance. It occurs to me here to ask a question: If the office of President of the church does descend by lineage from the fathers, through the line of the eldest sons, how is it that the "law" did not operate on the other side of the prophet Joseph as well as on this side of him? If that "law" had operated so—and there is no good reason why it should not so operate, if indeed it be the "law" of the priesthood—it would have left out not only the present Mr. Smith but even the prophet Joseph himself. For in that event it would have come first to Joseph Smith, the father of the prophet, who was a noble, righteous man; and then after his death to his eldest living son, Hyrum Smith, than whom there has been no more righteous man among all the sons of God who have lived in this generation; and from him it would have passed on to his eldest son, thus leaving out the prophet Joseph altogether, as well as Mr. Smith.—Roberts, pp. 71, 72.

For this purported quotation from Joseph Smith, upon which Mr. Roberts bases his argument, he cites us to the History of Joseph Smith, Millennial Star, Vol. 22, p. 55. This was published about the year 1860, twenty-six years after the death of Joseph Smith, and when we consider that the genuineness of some publications issued by the Utah Church in those times is doubted, we can attach but little importance to such testimony. As an instance of this unreliability we cite the resolution of August 8, 1844, as quoted by Mr. Roberts from Millennial Star, Vol. 25, compared with the resolution published in the Times and Seasons. (See p. 13.)

Besides this Mr. Roberts places a strained construction on the words of Joseph Smith as quoted. Without lengthy comment we simply submit that the views of Joseph Smith on this passage were doubtless in harmony with the rendering by himself found in the Inspired Translation, as follows:—

For this Melchisedec was ordained a priest after the order of the Son of God, which order was without father, without mother, without descent, having neither beginning of days, nor end of life. And all those who are ordained unto this priesthood are made like unto the Son of God, abiding a priest continually.—Hebrews 7:3.

This makes the order of the priesthood without father, or mother, or descent, and has no reference to rights of succession to offices in that order. So if Joseph Smith did use the language attributed to him by Mr. Roberts, he evidently intended to take the position that the order originated with God, and not by descent, etc. Any other construction would place him in opposition to his own rendering of the passage.

As for the question which it occurred to Mr. Roberts to ask, all we have to say is this: We have explained and maintained that, though God honors the principle of lineal descent both in priesthood and presidency, yet as God is the sole judge of fitness and availability, none should be elevated to office except by revelation from God. Just why the Lord did not restore this family to the position to which they were entitled because of the blessings of their progenitors a generation or more sooner than he did, is not to our knowledge revealed. The same is true regarding the Lord's reason for passing by Hyrum Smith. It is, however, idle to discuss these questions, for Mr. Roberts and his indorsers concede that the Lord did choose Joseph Smith; and the issue is: What provision did the Lord make for succession after him?

That Joseph understood that his posterity was to succeed him in his work is evident from the following extract from a letter written to John C. Calhoun, January 2, 1844:—

While I have powers of body and mind; while water runs and grass grows, while virtue is lovely and vice hateful; and while a stone points out a sacred spot where a fragment of American liberty once was; I or my posterity will plead the cause of injured innocence, until Missouri makes atonement for all her sins—or sinks disgraced, degraded and damned to hell—"where the worm dieth not and the fire is not quenched."—Times and Seasons, Vol. 5, p. 395.

OLD GLORY.

It appears to me that Bro. William H. Kelley has ventured pretty close to a hornet's nest with no friendly hand stretched out to assist him. The question propounded by Bro. Kelley appears to have been the point of irritation:—

Are you quite sure that the Church of Latter Day Saints separately considered is that "stone kingdom"?

I have emphasized the words "separately considered," as they appear not to have been considered by those who have thus far written. Perhaps that question might have been put at not quite so acute an angle; but as it stands when properly considered it will be found not nearly so dangerous as it appears.

Those who have written appear to me to have taken a very radical view in opposition. I have learned to believe that in God there is no change; that in him there is no variableness, neither shadow of turning, and that his course is one eternal round. This being his recorded character, both ancient and modern, and having full confidence in its truth, I believe that the same mode in which he has conducted his business in the past will also be his in the preparation for and carrying out of his purposes, with such additions as he has foretold by his prophets and fitted to the attending circumstances in this the eleventh-hour dispensation.

It is true, as has been quoted,

Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets.

This has been his mode in the ages past among his people Israel. And before their time there was a line of prophets, or men in whom the priesthood dwelt that may be traced from Adam down to Abraham. Through those lines the Lord did his work in the past ages, so far as warning the nations of punishment to come and of their final destruction, and calling them to repentance. In some instances punishments and destructions have been meted out exclusively by the power of God through the exercise of the elements of fire and flood and other means known to himself, others partly by elementary power and partly by the use of other nations. And sometimes by the military power of other nations favored by him specially for that purpose.

For one thousand two hundred and sixty years at least the line was broken entirely, until the Lord again united that line by raising up Joseph Smith as a prophet, seer, and revelator of the latter-day dispensation, for the purpose of raising up a people fitted to receive his Son; and also to invite mankind to become citizens of his kingdom and to prepare themselves for the time when his Son shall come to reign as King; and also to warn the nations of impending danger. The Lord, however, knowing before-time the conditions which would exist during the Dark Ages, made known to some of Israel's prophets some of his purposes in regard to this land, that should transpire prior to and preparatory for this uniting process.

Among the chief things foretold nearly two thousand five hundred years ago in regard to this preparation is the following in reference to this land of ours:—

And . . . the angel spake unto me again, saying, Look! . . . And I looked and beheld a man among the Gentiles, who was separated from the seed of my brethren by the many waters; and I beheld the Spirit of God, that it came down and wrought upon the man; and he went forth upon the many waters, even unto the seed of my brethren, who were in the promised land. [This was fulfilled by Columbus in 1492.] And . . . I beheld the Spirit of God, that it wrought upon other Gentiles; and they went forth out of captivity, upon the many waters.—1 Nephi 3.

This was fulfilled by the Pilgrim Fathers; and both these classes were wrought upon by the Spirit of God, inspired, if you please, to move and act as they did; but neither class recognized themselves as prophets; nevertheless, I have no doubt that in their communications under the Spirit's influence they uttered many strange and, to their hearers, new truths; especially so with Columbus during the years of trials he endured before the accomplishment of his hopes.

And the following has been fulfilling by the coming of those peoples from the lands across the many waters ever since,

And . . . I beheld many multitudes of the Gentiles upon the land of promise. . . . And . . . I, Nephi, beheld that the Gentiles who had gone forth out of captivity, did humble themselves before the Lord; and the power of the Lord was with them; and I beheld that their mother Gentiles were gathered together upon the waters, and upon the land also, to battle against them; and I beheld that the power of God was with them; and also that the wrath of God was upon all those that were gathered together against them to battle. And I, Nephi, beheld that the Gentiles that had gone out of captivity, were delivered by the power of God, out of the hands of all other nations: And I beheld the Spirit of the Lord, that it was upon the Gentiles; and they did prosper, and obtain the land for their inheritance.—1 Nephi 3.

These prophetic utterances bring us down from the days of Columbus to the close of the American Revolution and show that for three hundred years the Spirit of God had been exercising his power in their behalf and had brought them through their trial with George Washington as their leader; and although he made no prophetic claim, the Spirit of God had moved upon his spirit, inspiring him with a conquering power for the right, and that too by the use of sword and gun. They were now in a condition to organize and establish a government for themselves, based upon the principles of liberty for which they fought.

We will now see what the Lord has said of those intrusted with the power of organization:—

I established the Constitution of this land, by the hands of wise men whom I raised up unto this very purpose, and redeemed the land by the shedding of blood.—D. C. 98:10.

It appears from the above that the Lord made use for swords and guns in the time of the Revolution and caused them to be used with good effect. And the purpose the Lord had for the choice of these wise men was that the laws and Constitution of the people which I have suffered to be established, and should be maintained for the rights and protection of all flesh, according to just and holy principles, that every man may act in doctrine, and principle pertaining to futurity, according to the moral agency which I have given unto them, that every man may be accountable for his own sins in the day of judgment. Therefore it is not right that any man should be in bondage one to another.—D. C. 98:10.

The above reasons ought to be considered sound socialism, and it was the Lord's doing. If men have gone wrong, they have done so under the moral agency which God gave them, and each will be held accountable for his own sin in the day of judgment.

All, then, that was done up to and embracing the organization of this government was done under the inspiring influence of the Spirit of God moving upon men. Many men did and have done wrong, both before and since the organization, but the purposes of God have not and cannot be set aside, and the Constitution of this land was of divine origin and based upon true principle.

Do these brethren think that in the migrations to this land and the establishment of this government the Lord had no other object in view than a child has in setting up his tentpins and when he gets tired knocks them down just for the fun of seeing them fall? Anyone reading the articles published might easily conjecture that that was all.

I understand the matter differently. My mind, from all that I have learned from the word written in the books given for our instruction and learning, leads me to believe that there has been a grand design in all the operations of the Spirit of God upon men, from the days of Columbus to the present; and which will continue in the future until Jesus the Christ shall come, and outside of, but preparatory for the establishment of and future building up of Christ's kingdom under the gospel; and has all been done and will be done to prepare the way for the progress and final triumph of the work we as a church are now engaged in. As we have seen, all was done under the operations of the Spirit, and they did prosper and obtain this land for their inheritance, which was not fully accomplished until after the war of 1812. And during the progress of this work of the Spirit I am inclined to believe that the Spirit also operated upon the minds of those who produced our national ensign, "Old Glory;" which is now bowed to and respected by all the nations of earth.

There are now a few questions I would like the brethren to ponder in their minds:—

1. As the Spirit of God has, so far as we have progressed, been the moving power, do you not feel that his power also moved upon those who agitated the question of slavery, and that he also lent his aid unto its utter overthrow by the use of gatling guns and other war material, thus removing from the land one of the worst enemies to the principles of true liberty as embodied in the gospel?

2. Do not your hearts go out to the thought that the Spirit of God moved upon the spirits of the leading minds of France and England and gave assistance in the use of the sword and gun to the breaking down of the cannibal propensities of the South Sea Islanders preparatory for and in its time bringing about under the influence of the restored gospel such scenes as we read of in Sr. Burton's letters, which preparation also may be applied to the progress of the truth in Australia?

3. Is there not in the war with Spain the evidence that the same power has been at work and assisting our armies and navies in breaking off and bursting the shackles of Jesuitism from the shoulders of ten million or more slaves from the oppressions of that body of so-called Christians, and making it possible to implant among them by this government the principles of liberty, opening up their minds to a future reception of the glorious light of truth—the sword and gun having been the weapons used?

4. And also are not the signs of the times and moving events, coupled with the presence of warships and big guns, pointing to the time when the ignorance and superstitious blindness of the hundreds of millions of China, Turkey, and India shall be broken up, and the time soon come when it shall be possible to carry the truth to the ends of the earth preparing those peoples for the time when the great and eternal Father shall present to his glorified Son the heathen for his inheritance?

Among the chief instruments that will be used to bring about the opening steps for their exaltation will be, in my opinion, the swords and gatling guns of what is known as civilized peoples, the United States doing her full part. It is also true that God will also use, as he has in the past, and as is specially foretold shall be used in the day of preparation, all the powers of the elements, from the lightning's flash to the desolating scourge, for the purpose of cleaning up the earth that it may be put in proper condition for the reception of the lost tribes of Israel, when they shall come to Zion upon a visit, while on their way from the North Country to their own land, which was given to their fathers for an everlasting possession; and also for the time when Enoch's city, or its inhabitants, shall come to Zion and the greetings promised between them shall transpire:—

And there shall be mine abode, and it shall be Zion, which shall come forth out of all the creations which I have made, and for the space of a thousand years shall the earth rest.—Gen. 7:72, f. T.

We will now turn back a little and find out what the chances are for the people of this nation:—

Nevertheless thou beholdest that the Gentiles who have gone forth out of captivity, and have been lifted up by the power of God above all the nations upon the face of the land, which is choice above all other lands, which is the land that the Lord God hath covenanted with thy father, that his seed should have, for the land of their inheritance, will not utterly destroy the mixture of thy seed, which are among thy brethren; neither will he suffer that the Gentiles shall destroy the seed of thy brethren. . . .

Behold, saith the Lamb of God, after I have visited the remnant of the house of Israel, and this remnant of whom I speak, is the seed of thy father; wherefore, after I have visited them in judgment, and smitten them by the hand of the Gentiles [with sword and gun]; and after the Gentiles do stumble exceedingly, because of the most plain and precious parts of the gospel of the Lamb which has been kept back, by that abominable church, which is the mother of harlots, saith the Lamb, I will be merciful unto the Gentiles in that day, insomuch that I will bring forth unto them in mine own power, much of my gospel, which shall be plain and precious, saith the Lamb. . . . And blessed are they who shall seek to bring forth my Zion at that day, for they shall have the gift and the power of the Holy Ghost. . . .

And it shall come to pass, that if the Gentiles shall hearken unto the Lamb of God in that day that he shall manifest himself unto them in word, and also in power, in very deed, unto the taking away of their stumbling-blocks, and harden not their hearts against the Lamb of God, they shall be numbered among the seed of thy father; yea, they shall be numbered among the house of Israel; and they shall be a blessed people upon the promised land forever; they shall be no more brought down into captivity; and the house of Israel shall no more be confounded.—1 Nephi 3.

But if the Gentiles will repent and return unto me, saith the Father, behold, they shall be numbered among my people, O house of Israel; and I will not suffer my people, who are of the house of Israel, to go through among them, and tread them down, saith the Father.—Book of Nephi 8:2.

But behold, this land, saith God, shall be a land of thine inheritance; and the Gentiles shall be blessed upon the land. And this land shall be a land of liberty unto the Gentiles: and there shall be no kings upon the land, who shall raise up unto the Gentiles. And I will fortify this land against all other nations; and he that fighteth against Zion, shall perish, saith God. . . . For I the Lord, the King of heaven, will be their king; and I will be a light unto them forever, that hear my words. Wherefore, for this cause, that my covenants may be fulfilled, which I have made unto the children of men, that I will do unto them while they are in the flesh, I must needs destroy the secret works of darkness, and of murders, and of abominations; wherefore, he that fighteth against Zion both Jew and Gentile, both bond and free, both male and female, shall perish: for they are they who are the whore of all the earth: for they who are not for me, are against me, saith our God. . . . Wherefore, my beloved brethren, thus saith our God: I will afflict thy seed by the hand of the Gentiles, nevertheless, I will soften the hearts of the Gentiles, that they shall be like unto a father to them; wherefore, the Gentiles shall be blessed and numbered among the house of Israel. Wherefore, I will consecrate this land unto thy seed, and they who shall be numbered among thy seed, forever, for the land of their inheritance.—2 Nephi 7:2.

From the foregoing quotations it appears to me the chances are good for us who are designated Gentiles upon this land. Of course there are conditions which must be lived by those who shall be found worthy of an inheritance here forever, for the Lord, as we have seen above, reserves the right and must needs destroy the secret works of darkness and of murders and of abominations, and of course all those who persist in following such works and will not repent must perish.

And now please do not get scared at what may follow. From the foregoing I conclude that the time of preparation for the spiritual or gospel portion of the latter-day dispensation commenced tangible work with Columbus. That when the proper time had arrived for the setting up of the government of the United States, God established the Constitution of this land based upon the eternal principles of the second great commandment, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." And again, when the set time had come the 6th day of April, in the year of our Lord 1830, the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints was organized upon this goodly land under the protecting wing of the first, having as its constitutional principle,

"Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, might, mind, and strength;" and combining with it the constitutional principle of the first organization; thus becoming one as the body and the spirit united are one, just as Jesus said the second commandment was like unto the first.

The Spirit of God is the indwelling life principle of the second organization while that same Spirit moves upon the first organization, and that organization having now arrived to National stature, has commenced its work of breaking down in the world the fungus growth of the past ages, preparing for the cleansing and uplifting work of the second, and thus united in their labors are as one body, and in this sense the constitutional principle of both having been brought into force upon this land, by the power of God, to my mind it is clear that the question asked by Bro. Kelley is a very pertinent one. Notwithstanding there are many in both the nation and the church who are not filling the demand of the royal commands embodied in the two leading principles upon which both are based, each individual is using the moral agency which God has given him, and will be held accountable each for his own sins before the bar of God.

Under these considerations I can then with a good will reiterate the thought expressed by Bro. Kelley, "Go on Dewey, go on Schley, go on Sampson, go on Miles, go on Shafter; go on thou great God-ordained American Republic; 'smite the image,' if image it is; break the yokes of tyrants, and let the people go free." And make it possible to elevate them by the heaven-given perfect law of liberty to a citizenship in the kingdom of God, that they may be entitled to an inheritance upon the land blessed above all other lands forever. God will attend to the outcome. I am,

Your brother for the uplifting of humanity into the light of God.

Association met at Thurman, Iowa, October 27; J. Roberts superintendent. Thursday evening the time was devoted to a model Sunday school; the lesson for October 16 being used. Friday morning; reports of schools and superintendents were read. Following this was a discussion of teachers' reports, which was very instructive. Next an impromptu discussion, led by Emma Hougas, "Previewing the work." Institute work by J. Roberts was interesting and profitable. Officers: (1) Who they should be; (2) Duties and work; (3) Relation to each other, discussed. Discussion, "Why a district librarian," which led to the election of Blanche Andrews as district librarian. Classification and promotion, Emma Hougas instructor. By motion the librarian was authorized to confer with the superintendent, and if advisable to collect church literature and send to England. Evening program, consisting of recitations and a lecture on temperance, interspersed with vocal and orchestral music.

BISHOP'S AGENT'S NOTICE.

I wish to remind the saints of Minnesota that my post office address is now and has been for some time, lock box 7, Cormorant, Becker County, Minnesota. I know as a rule the saints are poor; I also know a small amount from each one is only complying with the law as it is written in the books. We cannot afford to let our names pass along as a blank, and have nothing to our credit on record. The Lord approved of the widow's offering; he will also approve of our offering the same as he did hers.

Now, dear saints, let us contribute as the Lord has blessed us, much or little. The same is needed to pay expenses of the elders' families, that the work may not be hindered. We cannot afford to be drones these times; we want to be coworkers in bringing honest souls to the knowledge of the truth. The report to the Bishop of our stewardship is drawing near, December 31. The saints did nobly last year, which was proof that a sacrifice on their part was made which is all on the books. Remember we are to be judged out of books. To branches I cannot visit, an opportunity will be given for small amounts to be handed in to the presidents of branches, taking name and amount given by each member, that all may be properly recorded. Please call attention to members not taking the Herald, and you will also become coworkers in this.

As ever for the truth,
W. W. MCLEOD, Bishop's Agent.

PASTORAL.

To the Saints in South Missouri District, Greeting; Dear Brethren and Collaborers in the one Faith of our Lord Jesus Christ:—Having enlisted in the glorious cause of truth, let us bear in mind that there is a wonderful responsibility resting upon us as ministers of Christ. And in view of the fearful array of opposing forces, both seen and unseen in this world and from beneath, it stands us in hand to watch as well as pray; and as the flesh is weak and the opposing interests strong, we are in need of great wisdom and inspiration from on high that we may yield the peaceful fruits of righteousness, and ever be willing to labor and to make all needful sacrifice for the advancement of truth and the salvation of souls. Every officer and head of a family in the district should study all good books, and by all means the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants, thereby becoming steadfast and immovable as well as strong defenders of the truth; proof against Brighamism, Hedrickism, or any other ism, having the books and church papers—Herald, Autumn Leaves, and Ensign—in your homes, you will be able to keep pace with the work, and ever be able to give a reason of your hope. If not able to secure all the books at once, buy one at a time; if not able to take the papers by the year, take them six or three months, as they are all reasonable in price now.

Let the presiding elders of branches look after these matters, and see that the laws are kept. Let the priests visit the house of each member once a month if possible, instructing them to pray vocally and in secret, and to keep within the bounds of the law. Let the teachers see that there is no iniquity in the church, in which duties the deacon can assist, and attend to such other duties as the law directs.

And if circumstances permit and the Lord wills, I will try to do my duty, and if possible visit each branch in the district one or more times before our next quarterly conference; and any assistance that I can render the presidents of the several branches will be cheerfully given, if you will but write me and make your wants known. And if so be that I cannot come or go myself, I will (by his consent) send my worthy assistant, Elder C. J. Spurlock, who is well known, and needs no recommendation.

And now I make a request, namely, that every elder or priest in the district, that can and will give their time to the ministry, outside of branches in the district, that they report to me at once, stating what you will and can do to advance the progress of the South Missouri district, that she may be brought up on higher ground. And may the Lord prompt you to act at once is the prayer of your humble servant. Address me at 911 East Dale Street, Springfield, Missouri.

J. C. CHRESTENSEN,
District President.

REUNION AND CONFERENCE BAPTISMS.

Owing to the fact that at nearly all the reunions, grove or camp meetings, conferences, etc., some persons are baptized who do not soon unite with any branch, and some never do; therefore the secretaries of all such general meetings should make a complete record of such baptisms, or by agreement with them, it may be done by the ministry who officiate in baptizing and confirming such members. Then a copy should be sent to the General Church Recorder for entry on the general books of the church, and that such names and complete items may be known when sought for entry upon some branch record.

I mention here that no copy of names and items of those baptized at Woodbine reunions of 1897 and 1898 have been received. Am informed that in 1898 Brn. J. W. Wight, C. E. Butterworth, W. A. Smith, and D. R. Chambers did the baptizing, and I hope they will send me complete accounts.

Also only partial accounts have been received of those baptized at the Fremont, Montrose, and other reunions, and it would be of interest to the cause if the ministry who officiated would send in a copy of the stubs of their baptism certificate books.

At district conferences baptisms also occur that are not reported from any branch; and the attention of all presidents, secretaries, and the ministry officiating, is again called to the need of the desired record being made at all reunions, grove meetings, tent meetings, conferences, etc.

In the past I have urged the local and traveling ministry to report all baptisms that they know will not be placed upon some branch record, and I have offered to send blanks for this use. Some have applied and faithfully reported, but many have not done so. There is no need of their reporting baptisms in a branch, for in that way some members are placed twice on record, having to be removed from the record of scattering members to that of some branch. Therefore report only those not likely to be enrolled in any branch. Please do all that you can, in order that all names may be upon the General Record, and that when names and items are called for they can be found, otherwise there is trouble and delay, perhaps not even the year of baptism to be found, nor who officiated.

Your brother for order and completeness,
H. A. STEBBINS,
General Church Recorder.
LAMONI, Iowa, November 11.

NOTICES.

To the Saints in the Eastern Mission:—By reason of some added responsibility, I will not be able to reach points intended in the mission as early and promptly as outlined, and notice served; but will do so as soon as practicable. The sooner the more satisfactory.

TEMPLE, Ohio, Nov. 8.

DR. DOWIE.

Dr. John Alexander Dowie began faith healing in Australia years ago; thence, he came to California and various parts of North America, finally locating in Chicago, where he is building a church in many respects simulating the Church of Jesus Christ. From those saints who have conversed with him at any time I desire some accurate written information as follows:—

1. When and where did you talk with him?
2. Who heard the conversation (give name and present address of one or two witnesses).
3. What points of doctrine, organization, and practice were canvassed; and about what was said on each side? If you cannot give all these details, give such information as you can. We wish to place Dr. Dowie's work in its true light.

HISTORY OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS. (Volumes 1 and 2 now ready.) Provided for by action of General Conference of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Written and compiled by President Joseph Smith and Apostle Heman C. Smith. Invaluable as a correct historical narrative, as a means of conversion to truth, and as a defensive weapon in meeting old and new objections urged against the latter-day work. It contains important documents connected with the establishment, growth, and internal and external affairs and progress of the church. The revelations given in this dispensation are inserted, in connection with accounts of the circumstances under which they were given. Biographical sketches, illustrations, complete indexes, sidenotes for ready reference, etc., are some of the features of the work. Volume 1 begins with the birth of Joseph Smith, the Prophet and Seer, in 1805, and narrates the circumstances of his calling and ministry, the rise of the church in 1830, and until the close of the year 1835. Volume 2 continues the history up to June 27, 1844, —to the assassination of Joseph and Hyrum Smith.

WHAT ROYALTY COSTS EUROPE.

THOSE who rail against royalty as a useless and costly luxury will find food for reflection in the fact that the rulers of Europe are a burden on their subjects to the extent of from four and two-thirds cents to 52½ cents a head, an impost at which even the most thrifty can scarcely grumble.

The thrones of Europe require every year for their maintenance a sum of $30,000,000, or three times the annual income of the richest man in the world. Even this stupendous sum, says Tit-Bits, could be comfortably packed in three large trunks; although the constituent sovereigns would form a pathway of gold nearly a yard wide, on which the Kings and Queens of Europe could walk in stately procession from Charing Cross to St. Paul's.

In view of this display of gold, it certainly seems scarcely credible that it only represents a yearly contribution of 7½ cents for each subject throughout Europe.

As might, perhaps, be expected, the Sultan is the costliest of monarchs, but even in his case a contribution of 52½ cents from every subject would furnish his annual exchequer.

The Kings of Belgium and Greece rank next to the Sultan in costliness, but at a great interval. Ten cents a year is all the claim they make on each subject's loyal generosity.

Austria ranks next, with a contribution of 9½ cents each towards maintaining its imperial throne; Italy is fifth on the list, with 9 cents; Sweden sixth, with 8; then come Russia, with a modest 7 cents for the "Great White Czar;" Germany, with 6½ cents for its almighty Emperor; and the United Kingdom, with an individual 4½ cents.

Between the cheapest of sovereigns and the dearest of Presidents there is a great gulf. Two cents from each Frenchman would meet the yearly cost of three Presidents, and each Swiss with the same modest coin could secure the services of twenty Presidents.

Victoria is thus the cheapest of all European sovereigns if a tax were levied on the United Kingdom alone; if, however, it be distributed over the whole of her empire the tax would amount to half a cent for each of her subjects.

As Victoria is the least costly of monarchs she is also among the poorest. Her total income available for private use is not much more than $1,000,000 a year, or $115 an hour—a revenue less than some of her subjects enjoy.

Her entire private fortune is, roughly, $10,000,000—a capital which, converted into sovereigns, might be stowed away in a trunk six feet long and three feet in height and width.

Compared with these modest sums the Czar's income and fortune are alike stupendous. His private fortune, including his mines, forests, and his 1,000,000 acres, may safely be estimated at $150,000,000, and his total yearly revenue at $12,500,000, or about $24 a minute.

The Emperor of Austria is "passing rich" on $7,500,000 a year. His daily allowance is $20,550, or a pile of sovereigns three and a half times as high as himself.

William, the German Emperor, has $2,500,000 a year less than his imperial brother of Austria, but even this limited allowance admits of an expenditure every two days of as many sovereigns as a strong man could carry to his palace at Potsdam.

All these incomes, however, look foolish and small when compared with the $30,000,000 a year which the Sultan is credited with spending. This sum, by the way, is more than ten times as much as his official income; a fact from which some idea may be gleaned of the vastness of his private fortune. This monarch contrives to spend twice his own weight in sovereigns every day. For pocket money he allows himself three hundred-weight of sovereigns a week, and the same amount for delicacies for his acres of tables. Four and a half hundred-weight of sovereigns vanish every week in presents, and the same weight of gold is required to clothe the many beauties of his harem. Compared with this lavish expenditure, it is really wonderful how the poor man contrives to clothe himself on a paltry $7,500 a week, to which he rigidly limits his tailors.—New York Herald.

CHICAGO SERMONS.

"THE Church's Future" was the theme on which Dr. P. S. Henson preached at the First Baptist Church in the morning. He said:—

"The early church, guided with God-given power, shook Jerusalem like an earthquake, and swept through the world like a cyclone. After a little while, making an incestuous alliance with the state, it fell into a degeneracy, and there closed about it the pall of the dark ages.

"Awakened by the trumpet blast of the Reformation, it sprang forward on a new career of prosperity and power, and all the glories of our modern Christian civilization tell of its triumphs in the later centuries. But that it has come to a crisis in its history is only too painfully palpable.

"It is constantly proclaimed that the church is losing its grip on the masses by reason of its lack of a spirit of humanitarian helpfulness, and on the classes by reason of its obstinate adherence to medieval dogmatics. And the churches, to rid themselves of reproach, are frantically rushing into institutional methods, establishing soup kitchens, kindergartens, cooking schools, gymnasium, and even dancing classes, to meet the manifold needs of the masses, while others, to propitiate the classes who hate dogmatics, are hewing away at the creeds, and are even taking down the sides of the house, to make their sanctuary as broad as all outdoors, hoping thus to save the church from utter wreck and ruin.

"When the disciples of old, who had been baffled in the case of a devil possessed, had asked our Lord why they could not cast the demon out, he replied that 'this kind cometh not forth but by prayer and fasting.' And so to-day, when the church is baffled by the distempers of a devil-possessed world, what is needed is not so much new methods, or a new kind of gospel, but a consecrated church that lets go of the world and lays hold upon God."

At the Union Christian Church in the evening the Rev. J. H. O. Smith's prelude to his sermon was as follows:—

"The time has come when the whole creed question must be opened up, not for the theological gymnastic exercise, but to find a practical basis upon which Christians can unite to evangelize the world. This is made imperative not because of protest by those calling themselves liberal, but by the rising tide of faith within the church. It is life protesting against arrested development.

"Opinion is mental conviction of the truth of some statement founded on a low degree of probable evidence. The creeds of Christendom are the concensus of opinion of their authors. Faith is the belief of reliable testimony. There may be evidence without faith, but no faith without evidence. The resurrection of Christ is a question of fact. He either rose from the dead or he did not. What he did between his death and resurrection is a matter of opinion. What Christ was, what he taught, and commanded are questions of fact and not opinion. It will not meet the demands of the time for a church to claim liberality because its members are not required to subscribe to the creed. That is an admission that the creed is not essential at a vital point, but if not essential, then why necessary at all?

"One million three hundred thousand members of the Christian Church in America have given assent to the creed, 'I believe with all my heart that Jesus is the Christ, the son of the living God, and accept him as my Savior,' but they must show by consecrated lives the sincerity of their confession of faith. In the contest between faith and infidelity the struggle is greatest around the claims of Christ to be divine. In the discussion between denominations the authority of Christ is the final appeal. Around him we can rally and reunite."

The Rev. Bruce Brown at the West Side Christian Church preached in the evening on "The Making and Makers of Creeds." He said:—

"When one of the great political parties makes an issue of any question the other feels duty bound to take the other side. If either party makes a declaration in its platform the other will oppose it. This has ever been the history of the church and has been the cause of innumerable divisions and strife. Truth that ought always to unite its adherents has been broken into fragments and mixed with error, and good people have been divided into warring factions. Every creed contains much truth, but no creed, made by man, embraces all the truth of his relation to God and to his fellow men. The church of the living God ought to be big enough for men to think in it. To anchor the church to a man who has been dead three hundred years is like an attempt to go riding with a horse tied to a post. The grandest men that have ever lived have been the makers of creeds, but not one has been able to bridge the centuries and build a theological system that meets the changing conflicts of the passing years. With love for all let us meet on the common ground of accepted truth, forgetting the controversies of the past, and labor for the betterment of man."—Chicago Tribune, Nov. 14.

Echoes from Graceland.

CONDUCTED BY GRACELAND COLLEGE.

WE trust that our readers gave careful attention to the appeal, "Success when United," in the last issue. The movement originated with the Faculty of the College, and afterwards received the fervent approval of the Boards of Directors and Trustees. The latter Board appointed a representative committee to take the matter in hand, and place it officially before the saints and those interested. In their deliberations, the committee felt the approving influence of the Holy Spirit, and hence have confidence in bringing the appeal before every saint in the church. The constitution of this committee is as follows:—

- Frank Criley, Chairman.
(Board of Trustees.)
- William Anderson.
(Boards of Directors and Trustees.)
- Sr. Ruth L. Smith. }
Sr. Viola Blair. } (College Faculty.)
J. A. Gunsolley. }
- E. R. Dewsnup. (President of College.)

The Committee wish the College to be placed in such a position that it may be able to educate the rising generation within the church, and throw open welcome portals to those that could advantage by higher education but are at present prevented by financial hindrances.

Is there a single one of our readers that can do anything but heartily approve of the aims of Graceland? Can you refuse to follow the example of sacrifice so cheerfully set by several of College Faculty? Even if you have no children, think of the benefit you may confer upon the children of our faithful missionaries and others by answering this appeal generously.

Let every church member, every officer, local or general, help forward these noble aims! If you cannot pay down your year's subscription at once, send in your name and forward the money as soon as you are able. If it suits your convenience to pay your subscription in installments, do so. Let us have a long list of subscribers' names in the Herald, by January 10. Now do not forget, communicate with Bro. Criley right away. If you require further information, the committee will gladly furnish the same.

LET THE LIGHT SHINE, OF COURSE.

To the law and to the testimony; if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them.—Isa. 8:20.

In the foregoing text there is a specific instruction referring to what might possibly result from an appeal to familiar spirits, wizards, or those that peep and that mutter. The instruction is evidently this; if the thing spoken, directed, or advised by revelation obtained from an appeal to such sources is not in accord with the law and the testimony, such revelation should not be followed, or be observed.

The terms "if they speak not according to this word," show that the law and the testimony are both included to make one, the word by which the test is to be made. It shows further that the law and the testimony will agree.

The testimony obtained under and by observance of law, will in no wise contradict or contravene and take the place of the law.

There should be a clear distinction between the law and the teachers of the law, the teacher and the thing taught. The teacher is not the law, nor indeed can be made the law. In like manner, and for similar reasons, a distinction should be made between the testimony and the witness who bears the testimony.

John, in his fifteenth chapter relates the teaching of Jesus like this:—

But when the Comforter is come, whom I will send unto you from the Father, even the Spirit of truth, which proceedeth from the Father, he shall testify of me: and ye also shall bear witness, because ye have been with me from the beginning.—John 15:26, 27.

The first definition of the word testimony is:—

A solemn declaration or affirmation made for the purpose of establishing or proving some fact.

The fourth is:—

Witness; evidence; proof of some fact.

The definition of the word Witness, noun:—

1. Attestation of a fact or event; testimony.
2. That which furnishes evidence or proof.
4. One who testifies in a cause.

Of the verb transitive:—

1. To see or know by personal presence; to have direct cognizance of.
2. To give testimony to; to testify of something; to attest.

Of the verb intransitive:—

1. To bear testimony; to give evidence; to testify.

We have been thus careful to give the meaning of the words testimony and witness; because that in the two verses quoted above from John, the words "testify" and "bear witness" are used, as meaning much the same thing: in the one case, the Spirit should testify; in the other, the disciples were to bear witness.

In the controversy between Jesus and the Pharisees, recited in the eighth chapter of John; Jesus makes declaration: "It is also written in your law, that the testimony of two men is true. I am one that bear witness of myself, and the Father that sent me beareth witness of me.—Vs. 17, 18.

We italicize the words "one" and "Father." Jesus himself was one witness, the Father was another; so he had cited the law of those who were contending against him which provided that the testimony of two men, agreeing one with the other, was true. He had furnished the two witnesses; but neither of the two witnesses was the testimony; that which the two testified, bore witness of, was the testimony. In the case in point and upon which the contest occurred was the affirmation, the attestation made by Jesus in the twelfth verse:—

I am the light of the world: he that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life.

Upon this the Pharisees sought to confound him by saying:—

Thou bearest record of thyself; thy record is not true.

Jesus met this by stating that he was not alone, that the Father was with him; that their law provided for two witnesses whose testimony should be taken as true. He had appealed to the law and the testimony; the law providing for the witnesses, the testimony given by himself that he was "the light of the world," and the testimony of the Father agreeing with his own. In this case neither the Father nor Jesus is called the testimony, or the law.

In Acts 2:40 there occurs this saying:—

And with many other words did he testify and exhort, saying, Save yourselves from this untoward generation.

That which Peter had so far testified to those referred to in the verse quoted is found by reading from the 14th verse to the 39th inclusive; and may very properly be called the Testimony of St. Peter, on Pentecost Day.

Peter was with the others of the disciples when the Holy Spirit was given, and was thus a competent witness to what took place, and could safely testify. And he boldly called the attention to what he proposed to bear witness to, thus:—

Ye men of Judea, and all ye that dwell at Jerusalem, be this known unto you, and hearken unto my words.—Acts 2:14.

Then follows his discourse, supposed by some to be the first gospel sermon ever preached. This discourse is his, Peter's testimony, his affirmation, his attestation in regard to what the Lord had done, the prophecies of the past, the message of Jesus, the work of the Spirit, the promise of salvation, and the command authorized by the Spirit, "Be baptized . . . and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." (See Acts 2:38, 39.)

Here we have a series of things testified to by the apostle, of which he was witness, he bears witness, gives testimony; but neither himself nor the Spirit by which he spoke was the testimony. When we seek for the law on baptism we go to the words of the Savior, as for instance, Matthew 28:19, 20; Mark 16:16, 18; and other places where Jesus by word and example enjoined baptism; but when we seek for the testimony we go to such passages of scripture as this one from Acts 2, and Acts 8, and Acts 19, John 3, and such others as show the apostles at their work, and the record that they made.

In the story told in Exodus occurs the command to make an ark; and in verse 16 the following direction is given:—

And thou shalt put into the ark the testimony which I shall give thee.

And in chapter 34, verse 29, we learn what that testimony was:—

And it came to pass, when Moses came down from Mount Sinai with the two tables of testimony in Moses' hand, when he came down from the mount, that Moses wist not that the skin of his face shone while he talked with him.

In chapter 40, verse 20, it is stated that the testimony (the two tables) was put into the ark; and in verse 21 that the ark was taken into the tabernacle and covered.

Here we have the establishing of a covenant, or the giving of commands and it is called by the Lord the testimony, but the witness of the transaction and who records it was not the testimony, neither was the Spirit by which the face of Moses was made to shine, nor the Lord who gave the commands. The testimony was put into the ark, but not the witnesses, nor the Spirit.

If for any reason we should seek to discover what might have been the law of which so much has been spoken and written, called the Ten Commandments, we should not ask information of Moses, or the Spirit as being the law, but we would search the testimony given by Moses through the Spirit, and would then be in a condition to know, having kept the direction and gone to the law and the testimony.

A clear distinction between the witness who testified and the subject matter of the testimony given, is seen in 1 John 5:5:—

Who is he that overcometh the world, but he that believeth that Jesus is the Son of God? This is he that came by water and blood, even Jesus Christ; not by water only, but by water and blood. And it is the Spirit that beareth witness, because the Spirit is truth.—1 John 5:5, 6.

Here it is the Spirit that testifies; the subject matter testified of, or borne witness to, is that he that believeth that Jesus is the Son of God, overcometh the world, and that Jesus came by water and blood and was Jesus Christ, the Spirit bearing witness to the fact.

John further testifies that

There are three that bear record in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost: and these three are one. And there are three that bear witness in earth, the spirit, and the water, and the blood: and these three agree in one. If we receive the witness of men, the witness of God is greater: for this is the witness of God which he hath testified of his Son.

In support of this testimony of 1 John 5:5-9, citation is made in the margin to Matthew 3:17. In this passage it is stated that when Jesus was baptized the Spirit of God attended the rite, and in confirmation of the act, a voice testified, saying,

This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased.

Here the voice is the testifier; the testimony was that Jesus baptized by John was the Son of God, and that God was pleased with him as his Son.

No one would think to call the voice the testimony, nor yet the dove; it was an evidence to the sight, but the words spoken was the thing testified.

In the relation by Matthew of the occurrence when Jesus desiring to test the nature of the testimony which his disciples had received, asked them concerning the opinions held by the men around them as to who he was, thus:—

Whom do men say that I, the Son of man, am?

To this various answers were given showing that men did not recognize who he was. But in reply to the question put directly to the disciples themselves, "whom say ye that I am?" Peter, answering for himself and the others of the Twelve, said:—

Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God.

Jesus, knowing whence the evidence came by which Peter was able to make so direct and so positive an affirmation, made this characteristic reply to Peter's statement:—

Blessed art thou, Simon Bar-jona: for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven.

In this occurrence the Father is given as the testimony-bearing one; and the testimony was, that "Jesus" was "the Christ, the Son of the living God."

The Father was not the testimony, neither was Jesus. Both were actors in the scene; the one an active minister about the Father's business; the other the great source of light bearing witness to the other, his character, identity, and work.

This is in direct harmony with what Jesus himself stated as found in John 7:17:—

If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine.

And it is also in accord with what Jesus said as recorded by Matthew, in 11:27:—

All things are delivered unto me of my Father: and no man knoweth the Son, but the Father; neither knoweth any man the Father, save the Son, and he to whomsoever the Son will reveal him.

Further than this, Jesus discoursing regarding himself and his mission, has this to say:—

If I bear witness of myself, my witness is not true. There is another that beareth witness of me; and I know that the witness which he witnesseth of me is true. . . . But I have greater witness than that of John: for the works which the Father hath given me to finish, the same works that I do, bear witness of me, that the Father hath sent me. And the Father himself, which hath sent me, hath borne witness of me.—John 5:31, 32, 36.

In all these passages the word "witness" is used in the sense of testimony, but the thing testified of was that Jesus had been sent by the Father.

From these, and many other passages in the Testament which might be cited, we conclude that it was intended by divine authority that the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit, were to be witnesses who should at times and under conditions determined by divine wisdom, bear witness and give to the disciple, the believer, the obedient saint and inquirer after salvation, testimony which should fully establish him in the faith, having received such convincing evidences that he knows whereof he affirms.

But, from none of these do we gather that the Father, Jesus the Son, or the Spirit is the testimony referred to in the command "To the law and to the testimony."

In these last days there are many who are seeking "unto them that have familiar spirits, and unto wizards [and witches] that peep and that mutter;" to learn of things unseen and unknown, both of the past and of the future. If any such as these are to be found among the saints; then the warning given by Isaiah may be applicable. For saints should seek unto the Lord for knowledge of those things needful for them to know, and in the conduct of their affairs should seek to become acquainted with the law, which according to the revelation of God to us, has been given, and in which there is a fullness; and by obedience to the commands of the gospel receive the testimonies which God, the Father, Jesus Christ, the Son, and the Holy Ghost have been authorized to be the witness bearing messengers of; and find in these their safety here and final salvation and reception into glory hereafter.

SOME MODERN RELIGIOUS METHODS.

Is it religious indifference upon the part of the masses and for which they are solely to blame, or is it a lack of spiritual truth and power in the modern churches that obliges or compels resort to use of special attractions to draw congregations? The student of modern theological methods and tendencies will note that something is peculiar in the general situation, as he gives thought to the varied evolutions now being performed, not only in creed making, but also in the general weekly social and religious programs of popular churches.

We present the following for the information and benefit of all interested. What does it mean? Is it incorrect to conclude that men and women can be saved only by love of and adherence to truth—"the truth" as revealed in Jesus Christ, and that "whatsoever is more or less" than the truth cometh of evil and vanity and is but human experiment? We think so. But the reader will draw his own conclusions from these lessons in modern religious movements:—

The Rev. John L. Scudder, pastor of the Tabernacle and First Congregational Church in Jersey City, who has started a dancing class in connection with his church work, has done so not only as a means of keeping the young people away from other worldly amusements, but because he believes dancing under certain conditions, is perfectly proper. Mr. Scudder when seen to-day regarding the dancing class, said:—

"We have biblical authority for dancing. Dancing is all right within certain limitations. In the crowded section of the city, where the young people are cooped up in tenements, the desire to dance is as great as among the wealthy, who can entertain their friends and hold receptions in their own homes.

"There is no place for the poor to go to dance but to the public halls. What harm can there be in their dancing beneath the eyes of their pastor and the deacons of the church? While I believe that dancing is perfectly proper in its place, there are three limitations I would place upon it.

"The first limitation relates to time. Young people should observe proper hours. There is a time to dance, and in my judgment it is not later than eleven o'clock at night.

"The second limitation concerns the manner of dancing. A man should hold his partner at a respectful distance, using his arms to steady and guide her, and the woman should see that these instructions are adhered to by the man. When dancing degenerates into peripatetic hugging it becomes disgraceful.

"The third limitation is to be careful where and with whom you dance. Confine amusement as much as possible to the home circle and personal acquaintances."—N. Y. Cor. Tribune, Oct. 6.

The clergymen of Jersey City are divided upon the question of church dancing classes as a means of furthering Christian work. The subject was discussed in four churches yesterday.

In St. John's Episcopal Church and in the Tabernacle which is a Congregational church, the dancing class was upheld and invitations were given to the members of the congregations to join the classes. The Rev. Elmer Forbes, curate of St. John's, announced that the St. John's dancing class would begin its fall work in November. The Rev. J. L. Scudder in the Tabernacle said:—

"We shall have dancing at the parish reception to-morrow. Those who approve of dancing may attend: those who are opposed to it are at liberty to stay away if they so desire."

The other side of the question was taken up by the Rev. Walter Thompson at the Westminster Presbyterian Church and by the Rev. Walter J. Swaffield at the Summit Avenue Baptist Church yesterday. Mr. Swaffield said:—

"The 'church dancing class,' the title used is sufficient to preclude any reference to it as a factor in Christian practice. I look upon the modern church dancing school as one of the Devil's missions of amusement and the gilded saloon as another."—N. Y. Cor. Tribune, Oct. 17.

Grace Methodist Episcopal Church, Locust and La Salle avenue, inaugurated last night the wide-open church policy, which is to be the leading feature of its activities this winter, by giving the first of a series of semi-monthly free popular concerts. More than eight hundred persons present listened to a program of Irish national airs and Irish folk songs and ballads, interspersed with choruses from Beethoven, Liszt, and Schubert. The church choir was supplemented by pupils from the North Chicago College of Music. W. Bentley Hilton was director and organist. The program for the next entertainment, to be held on December 1, will be made up of German airs and melodies. It is the purpose of the church management to make the series of concerts as national as possible, so that each concert will be advertised ahead as Scandinavian, Slav, French, etc., according to the arrangements which are to be published shortly.—Chicago Tribune, Nov. 18.

If we are to judge from local newspaper notice, the Peak-Anderson debate at Brownville, Nebraska, was a peculiar affair.

Bro. A. L. Lightfoot, sends us from Auburn, Nebraska, clippings from the Granger for November 4 and 11, and from the Herald, for November 11, copied from Brownville Sun; the latter of which we insert; with thanks to Bro. Lightfoot for all:—

The debate between Elders Peak and Anderson is said to have been the most thrilling thing of the kind that has happened in Brownville since Robert Lindsey and William Davies held a large audience spellbound with their matchless eloquence as they discussed the momentous question, "Resolved, that old bachelors should be taxed to support old maids," before the Brownville literary society, back in '94.

The religious debate closed Thursday evening, a large crowd listening to the closing arguments by Elders Peak and Anderson. The debate has been quite interesting, each gentleman holding up his side of the argument to the best of his ability, but unprejudiced observers are inclined to think Brother Anderson bit off a little more than he could conveniently chew when he tackled Brother Peak. This is not saying Brother Peak had the best side to talk on, at all. But after all, what good was accomplished? Did either brother make any converts to the cause he represented? Were any souls drawn nearer to Christ? Did anyone resolve to lead a better life as a result of the debate? On the contrary, hasn't there been considerable bitterness and ill feeling engendered between members of the rival denominations? On the whole, isn't a preacher in mighty poor business when he engages in a "religious" debate? If we were the Devil, we'd encourage them. At the close of the debate, Elder Peak challenged any minister of the Christian Church to a debate on the same proposition, anywhere in Southeastern Nebraska any time between now and April 1, 1900, and Elder Anderson accepted the challenge.

RECENT events indicate an increased interest in our work and a wider dissemination of gospel principles in Hawaii, judging from passing events. For instance the Honolulu Diocesan Magazine for October, 1898, contained an article written by "a Hawaiian member" of the Episcopal Church, in which attention was called to the peculiar creed of that church on the question of the Godhead, the writer stating that certain inconsistencies had been pointed out by a member of the Reorganized Church. To that the Bishop replied, in learned but drastic language. Bro. Edward Ingham, of Honolulu, replied to the Bishop—Bishop Willis—at length and with excellent effect, in the Honolulu Independent, of October 31. Bro. Ingham succeeded in putting the Bishop to rout and also stated the contrasts between the Reorganized Church and the Utah organization. We would be pleased to publish both articles entire, did space permit. Bro. Ingham, in his argument, presented the following (Articles Nos. 1 and 4 respectively) of the Articles of Religion of the Church of England, in contrast to one another.

Article 1. There is but one living and true God, everlasting, without body, parts, or passions; . . . and in the unity of this Godhead there be three Persons, of one substance, power, and eternity; the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost.

Article 4. Christ did truly rise again from death, and took again his body, with flesh, bones, and all things appertaining to the perfection of man's nature; wherewith He ascended into Heaven, and there sitteth, until he return to judge all men at the last day.

The Honolulu Bulletin of the 29th ult., contains an account of a party of eight Brighamite missionaries who left Vancouver for Hawaii in charge of J. D. Young, a descendant of Brigham Young, with a view to proselyting in Hawaii. Active opposition tends to bring truth to light. We have no fears as to results. Brn. Waller, Greene, and Ingham with others of the brethren will doubtless render a good account for the church. "Truth endureth and is always strong."

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

BRO. U. W. GREENE wrote from the "steamer City of Rio de Janeiro," San Francisco, November 10, as follows:—

I leave at one o'clock for Honolulu. Am well and happy; never felt more of the Spirit's presence in my life. Shall earnestly labor that my efforts may be approved of God and man.

We are glad to know that Bro. Greene enters upon the work assigned him in his new field with such manifest evidence of approval concerning his appointment; such is encouraging, both to him and for the cause. We trust his labors with the work of others who have labored or yet labor in Hawaii may result in more permanently planting the work in the islands, from whence its influence may be felt in other lands for good. Much is being said by the churches about new mission fields in our newly-acquired territories. We have occupied in the Hawaiian Islands for some years and will doubtless be able to reach other possessions in due time. The Catholic and Protestant missionaries if first on the ground may aid in preparing the way. Certainly much has been done by those people as civilizing and moral forces in educational and religious work. Hawaii is a way station between the United States, Japan, China, and other portions of the Orient. May the planting of the truth there prove helpful to the extension of the work to other lands—"to give light to them who sit in darkness and in the shadow of death, to guide" their "feet into the way of peace."

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

BISHOP E. L. KELLEY returned from Chicago on the 17th inst., after an absence of several days in the interest of church work.

P. P. Kelley, Esq., of Glenwood, Iowa, was at Lamoni for a few days during the past week in connection with legal business and attendance at a session of the College Board of Directors.

A clear statement of the position of the Reorganization, with an indication of willingness to defend it, appears in the Denver Evening Post of the 8th inst., from the pen of Bro. J. B. Roush, and sent us by him. The article was called out by public efforts of the Utah elders making claims to be the Church of Latter Day Saints. Our Denver folks are making their status and ours known to the general public. Lines of just and necessary distinction are being drawn and noted the world over, for the cause of truth.

News from the Sandwich Isles, via Bro. G. J. Waller, of Honolulu, is good. Bro. Waller was getting anxious to see Bro. U. W. Greene, in the island, but at the date of his writing, November 2, Bro. Greene had not arrived. Note from Bro. Greene, however, indicates that he is probably with Bro. Waller at present writing. Bro. Waller has been very prosperous this past year, and feels somewhat encouraged over the situation.

DOMESTIC ECONOMY.

DOMESTIC economy, both in its broader and in its more restricted sense, is a fitting household study. The word economy in its very derivation points to the home as its center, coming as it does from Greek words meaning the managing of a household. A vital truth is here indicated, that all true economy, in business or in government, must have its center in the home. Unless there be wise management here, training in correct principles and methods, there will be mismanagement everywhere. Webster's first definition of economy is, "The management of domestic affairs; the regulation and government of household matters, especially as they concern expense and disbursement."

The first lesson to be learned in managing American homes is, that true economy is honorable. Many people seem to be ashamed to be thought economical; it is because they confound the two things, economy and parsimony. Economy avoids all waste and extravagance, applying money to the best possible advantage, and thus becomes what Dean Swift aptly terms it, "Parent to liberty and ease." Parsimony involves meanness of spirit and a sordid mode of living, and is a vice. Between the two stands frugality, leaning to one or the other, according to its actuating motive. Home life should train children to a wise economy, as far removed from niggardliness as from extravagance.

Have method in economy; aimless, spasmodic saving is no good, either in itself or in its results. Some people's idea of economy never goes beyond saving a few cents here and there, without any regard to how it is saved, or what principles are involved or sacrificed in the saving. This is a penny wise, pound foolish policy, and "the penny soul never comes to twopence." Never sacrifice the more precious things—time, health, temper, strength—in attempting to save the less precious, money. For money can be replaced, but these once gone are lost forever. It is very poor economy to save money by doing work beyond your strength which you can afford to hire done; in some cases such saving degenerates into extravagance and selfishness. I know two sisters similarly situated in life, but getting different degrees of good out of it because of their different convictions upon this point. The younger sister's economy leads her to do everything she can possibly do herself, thus saving money which would otherwise be paid out for help. She also economizes on books and papers, borrowing them of her neighbors on the plea that she cannot afford to buy or subscribe for them. Here her economy ends. Her house is more elaborately furnished, and she and her children much more expensively dressed than their neighbors on whom she depends for reading matter. But to have them so she works early and late, far beyond her strength. Being overworked, she is chronically nervous and fretful; is often sick enough to require the doctor's care, and is growing old before her time. As she never has time to read or study, her children are growing away from her and turning to strangers for congenial companionship. But—she saves a hundred dollars a year in servants' wages, and boasts of her economy, never dreaming it is extravagant parsimony, as you and I know it to be.

Her sister has altogether different views of life. Her income is not as large as the other's but she hires more work done, justifying this course by the twofold argument that her time is of more value to her family when spent in doing things which no one but a mother can do; that those she hires need the money more than she does, and the kindest thing is to let them earn it. Her sister considers all money spent in hiring labor, wasted; and that spent in making a show, clear gain; but she reverses this opinion. Her children are always neatly dressed, but so plainly that their cousins quite look down upon them; but this they do not mind, for they know that their home, plainly furnished as it is, is much happier and brighter than the more elegant residence of their cousins; and, best of all, their mother is not a fretful invalid, but their companion and friend.

Economy of time and strength is more important than economy of money. To secure this, work must be systematized, and children trained to do it in the very best way and with the least expenditure of force. This is no easy lesson to learn; many wise men have failed to learn it, and because of this failure have sacrificed a higher good to a lower. Albert Barnes thought he was economizing time by writing most of his "Notes" before breakfast, but the last years of his life were spent in blindness, resulting from thus using his eyes in insufficient light.

Perhaps no one thing more seriously antagonizes true domestic economy than the struggle in many families to keep up appearances. "I must live and dress as well as my neighbors," is the bane of many households. It leads to ignoble striving to appear richer than we are, and results in scrimping and saving to make a great show. It is peculiarly an American vice, and one that free-born Americans should be ashamed of. It leads to all sorts of shoddy and sham, eats all genuineness out of family life, and undermines the very foundations of noble character. It is hardly possible for children brought up in such homes to grow into sturdy honesty and integrity, for the family life is but an acted lie. False estimates of value become ingrained in their natures; to seem, grows to be more important than to be. Truth and honesty are second, in their estimation, to keeping up an appearance. Never be ashamed or afraid to say, "I cannot afford it," and to live within your income. As Spurgeon says, "Living within your income is the essence of honesty." Accustom your children from their earliest years to this honesty; to feel that there is no disgrace in being poor, but much in being in debt; that the "borrower is servant to the lender." Never allow them nor yourself to consider debt as only an inconvenience; it is a calamity, and such you should train them to consider it. There is an old motto, "Better to go supperless to bed than to rise in debt." We are not sure it is not a good one for our bedchambers. "A man who earns a dollar and spends ninety-nine cents is rich, while he who earns a dollar and spends one hundred and one cent is poor." That is, the one is on the road to wealth, the other, to poverty. Hence, living within one's income is an important lesson to be taught in domestic economy. This lesson is not one of mere dollars and cents, it reaches deeper and develops power to resist present gratification for the sake of future gain. Those who learn this lesson can always afford to be generous, for they always have a fund in store to draw upon. It also develops an independent spirit, for there is no true independence until we can say, "I owe no man anything but love." This independence in spirit leads to independence in purse. If we spend less than we earn we are accumulating, however slowly, and making provision for future need. Any class of persons living from hand to mouth must be a dependent, hence, an inferior class. Under such circumstances it is very hard to prevent the development of a servile spirit.

A familiar story illustrates how the possession of money tends to an independent spirit. A Scotch pastor living on a very insufficient salary, was accustomed each Saturday night to borrow a five-pound note of a wealthy parishioner, and return it Monday morning. Noting the fact that the identical note borrowed was always returned, the gentleman's curiosity was aroused, and he asked an explanation. "Ah, mon," replied his pastor, "dinna ye ken I can hit harder knocks at your rich folk's sins when I have money in my wallet; and ha'in noon o' my own, I maun borrow some." If borrowed money has such an effect, money earned and saved, safely invested where it adds to the comfort of the household, must exert a beneficent influence upon development of character. To a working man a store of savings is not only a barricade against want, enabling him, when work fails, to live without suffering till better times; it also gives him a standing among men and a self-respect that helps to tide him over all shoals and quicksands. The very endeavor to gain a firmer position in the world has an innate dignity in it which tends to make a man stronger and better. All this reacts upon household life, and helps the children grow into stronger men and women. —Childhood; Its Care and Culture.

Sr. M. A. Christy, Akron, Iowa, desires your earnest prayers that if it be God's will to restore her to health she may be able to do the work that he said by his Spirit she should do when coming from the South to the North, as she has done, which fulfill that part of the prophecy.

Letter Department.

INDEPENDENCE, Mo., Nov. 15.

Editors Herald:—The debate I now have going on with Rev. C. W. Sewell, in the Gospel Advocate, printed at Nashville, Tennessee, is creating no little stir among that class of Disciples. Our second proposition commenced in that paper June 16, but for some reason the debate ended all on a sudden. I waited about six weeks for it to reappear, but waited in vain. At length I wrote Mr. Sewell to ascertain the reasons why, and he forwarded my letter to the editor of the Advocate, and he wrote Mr. Sewell, saying: "You can inform Mr. White we are not trying to crowd him out, but that we felt all along that we had better material to put in the Gospel Advocate than his articles. His articles are so full of error and sophistry that our readers take little interest in them." I had asked them in my inquiry if they intended to crowd me out till they had more fully paved the way for my articles by prejudicing the minds of the readers of the Advocate against what they pleased to call Mormonism, as I see they have introduced a series of articles on "Mormonism," written by Rev. R. B. Neal, right away after discontinuing the debate. There was scarcely an issue of the Advocate but what contained an article on "Mormonism" by some one of their writers from the time they dropped the debate to the time it commenced again. This, no doubt, was done to help Mr. Sewell out by prejudicing the minds of the readers against my rejoinders. I cannot see it in any other light.

I took the liberty to remind the editor through Mr. Sewell, that the cause I had the honor of defending needed no such unfair measures by my editors to sustain and bolster it up; but that, on the other hand, my editor had spoken in high and eulogizing terms of both disputants and of the tact and ability that accompanied both of their articles, which was the very opposite to that which was indulged in by the editor of the Gospel Advocate. Last week's issue (November 10) contains my second on the third proposition; to-wit: "In order to a New Testament church, like that organized by Christ and his apostles, there must be, necessarily, living apostles in it." The next column following my article is an article from the editor's pen on, "What are we to believe?" In this the editor says: "The man who accepts Joe Smith as a true prophet from God is a Mormon in heart; if he is true to the teachings of Smith and practices in harmony therewith, because Smith so authorizes, he is a Mormon in life and practice." Mr. Smith taught explicit faith in God and Christ; he taught faith, repentance, and baptism for the remission of sins (Acts 2: 36-38); taught the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Spirit (Acts 8: 12-17; 19: 1-6); taught that man should "have but one wife: and concubines he shall have none." (Book of Mormon, p. 116.) He taught that in order to have a church like that organized by Christ and his apostles it must have living apostles, prophets, and teachers in it, and should enjoy the gifts of the Spirit, etc. (1 Cor. 12: 28.) Therefore, if a man is true to the foregoing teachings it will make him a Mormon, if this editor's logic is worth anything. Therefore, Christ, Peter, and Paul were all Mormons.

Now, I ask what would a man be, if he taught the very opposite of what I have shown that Mr. Smith, Christ, and Paul and Peter taught? Mr. Campbell "authorized" the elders of his so-called Church of Christ to preach against the laying on of hands for the reception of the Holy Spirit; to preach against apostles and prophets and gifts of the Spirit being in the Church of Christ. Therefore, if a man is "true to the teachings of Campbell and practices in harmony therewith because Campbell so authorized, [as no such authorization ever came from Christ, Paul, or Peter,] he is a Campbellite in life and practice." No amount of logic will enable the editor of the Gospel Advocate to escape this conclusion. I would rather be called a Mormon and be in harmony with the teachings of Jesus Christ than be called a Campbellite and be an opposer to what Christ taught.

The editor was still unwilling to let my article go to the public without further airing Mormonism, hence another article follows his in which this last writer advertises a coming tract: "The Stick of Ephraim vs. the Bible of the Western Continent; or The Manuscript Found vs. the Book of Mormon." He says: "This is what may be called 'mighty interesting reading.' The writer, like Dewey at Manila, 'smothers the guns' of the enemy. . . . Such plain statements of the truth as the tract bears about Mormonism should be circulated everywhere. The people should have light. A diligent use of such rapid-fire guns as this tract will accomplish what all the great twelve-inch and thirteen-inch breech-loading rifles have failed to do." (Italics mine.) "The author will soon be able to say to civilization, in the immortal words of Bill Anthony: 'I have to report that the ship is blown up and is sinking.'" So you see, brethren, it is either "sink or swim," as the campaign is on with this disciple of Campbell with his "rapid-fire gun" to do what the "twelve" and "thirteen-inch breech-loading" Alexander Campbell, Clark Braden, D. H. Bays, et al., "have failed to do!" How the mighty have fallen! We say to "our boys" to "keep in the ditch"—"steady boys"—keep your powder dry, and this "rapid-fire gun's" basswood bullets will fall at your feet as harmless as the barking of a little poodle dog.

It is good to know we have the truth—happy thought!

There is still a third article in this same issue of the Gospel Advocate. Somebody signing his name "X," is puzzled over this "Mormon debate," and asks the editor, "Is there any more difference between Mormon apostles and those of the New Testament than between your elders and those of the New Testament?" The editor answers: "The only elders I advocate are New Testament elders, are ordained and approved in the New Testament. They differ nothing whatever from New Testament elders." Does this editor expect to always be able to blindfold his questioners while an open Bible lies before them? Paul called together the elders of the church, and said unto them: "Take heed therefore unto yourselves, and to all the flock, over the which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers, to feed the church of God," etc.—Acts 20: 17, 28. Doesn't this editor know that he has not an elder in all his church that was called by the Holy Ghost? The Bible speaks in definite terms as to how the Holy Ghost calls elders. It says: "As they ministered to the Lord, and fasted, the Holy Ghost said, Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them."—Acts 13: 2. Paul speaking in 1 Corinthians 7: 17: "But every man hath his proper gift of God, one after this manner, and another after that. . . . But as God hath distributed to every man, as the Lord hath called every one, so let him walk. And so ordain I in all churches." As to church work, this meets every emergency in life; everything is done "decently and in order." If men "having then gifts differing" (Rom. 12: 4-8), they are called of God by the Holy Ghost to that special work and ordained (if called to be an elder) by imposition of hands, and sent forth by the Holy Spirit to do the work of an elder, etc. (Acts 13: 3, 4.)

The Christian Evangelist for May 28, 1896, lies before me, and in the question column it has this to say on calling to office: (1) "What is the scriptural way of appointing elders and deacons of a congregation of disciples?" Ans. "They should be selected by the church at a special meeting called for that purpose, in any way that will secure a fair expression of the choice of the members. It is usual to appoint a committee of discreet brethren a week or two before the election to present names for the different offices," etc. I could have but little objection to the work of these "discreet brethren" in making a "choice," were they governed by the "spirit of revelation;" but this they wholly ignore, hence their choice for elders is wholly human, not recognizing God as the source of all calls and that by the Holy Ghost, as seen in above scriptural precedents. Therefore, the editor's answer is unscriptural and an attempt to mislead his questioner.

He answers in regard to the "Mormon apostles": "The Mormon apostles differ as much from the New Testament apostles as false pretenders differ from divinely-inspired apostles of the Lord Jesus Christ." Let the editor apply this answer to the elders of his church, and he has answered his questioner on that part of his question truthfully. Mr. "X" wants to know why James 5: 14, 15, cannot apply now, and have the "prayer of faith" "save the sick." This seems to perplex this editor and he closes his answer to Mr. "X," thus: "The asking such questions shows a man does not understand what the New Testament apostle or elder was."

I am glad to know that my debate with Mr. Sewell upon some of these vital points is reaching into many nooks and corners where we cannot expect to reach by our traveling elders. Before entering into this debate I had a written contract (by letter) from the editors of the Gospel Advocate, that the debate would be printed in the Advocate, and then put into book—pamphlet form. I am now glad to say that work is now under way and two thousand pamphlets will be out by January 1. I have one thousand to my share and will be able to sell them for fifteen cents, or eight for one dollar.

Hoping and praying that God will give me health and ability to push this work forward, both by pen and voice, I am,

Yours, believing in the triumph of this gospel truth,
I. N. WHITE.

LEXINGTON, Tenn., Nov. 14.

Editors Herald:—I have just had a little experience that calls the mind back to the days of the inquisition; but I am still alive, and have got the banner of Christ flapping in the breeze. I had an appointment at a certain schoolhouse, and when Bro. Miles Little (who by the way is one of the trustees of the house) and I arrived at the house we were met by ten or a dozen armed men, led by one Mr. George Gurley, who by the way is a son of a Presbyterian preacher, and told that we could not go in the house. They told me if I undertook to enter they would kill me; and for me to leave the country "as soon as God would let me." I told them I would not go into the house, but as for leaving the country I would go just when I got ready, and not a day sooner. They said I should not preach in any house in the county, and warned me again to leave immediately. I again told them that I would preach as long as I could stand up; that I was not afraid of them, I was there in the discharge of my duty, and was going to stay with it.

These brave (?) men were angry on account of several of the people having been baptized a week or two ago, and at that time they posted a notice for us to leave the country; but on this occasion they had posted a notice at the schoolhouse and fastened it to a tree with cartridge shells, and then came themselves, I suppose, to see the effect it would have. I am expecting every time I step out to hear the report of a gun or pistol; so I wish to say to all, if I am shot in the back, don't take it as an evidence of cowardice, for that is the side these gentlemen (?) generally attack.

Bro. Sam Mayo predicted many years ago that I would have to suffer martyrdom for this work, so if this is the time and place for the fulfillment of the prophecy, I say let it come. One of the braves had a big hardwood club in his hand and a pistol in his pocket, another drew out a knife and flourished it; but I don't know that he intended to do anything worse than cut his tobacco with it. I got the epitome of our faith before them, and showed them what they were fighting against; and as they were all Christians (?) it may do them some good; but still they did not revoke the command for me to leave the country. I don't want anyone to think that I am seeking the glory of martyrdom; but I am going to stay right here and preach longer and louder than ever.

SPRING VALLEY, Minn., Nov. 15.

Editors Herald:—Bro. Eli Hayer arrived in Spring Valley, October 4; brought with him the graces of the gospel of the saints. That evening we had music, song, prayer, and fire-side preaching, and all seemed to enjoy his visit here. Next morning we visited the pancake preachers of Spring Valley, to get the use of their churches at times, but were quietly informed that they had plenty of preachers for all the yellow legged chickens in the city. Distributed some tracts and talking enough to let the people know that an elder was among us. October 8 took train for Rushford, distributing tracts by the way; hall rent too high. From there to Newburg; had the privilege of the town hall, preached four times, had a tilt with a Lutheran preacher. May have knocked off some of the stars and bars of Lutherism by the argument that God and not Luther is our guide. Came home after an absence of several weeks, looking as if he had not been fooling away his time.

A letter from his wife stated that she was building sidewalk, little at a time, in front of their residence. With this news from home the elder turned his face northward, in the direction of Chatfield, Fillmore, Root River Valley, where Bro. W. H. Kelley in years gone by voiced the love of peace in conjunction with Father E. C. Briggs in my boyhood days. Elder Hayer has a home most anywhere in Fillmore County. When he came he did not know that he could stay over night.

Fraternally yours,

C. H. CROSBY.

IRVING COLLEGE, Tenn., Nov. 12.

Editors Herald:—I am still trying to advance the good cause in this section, though we have lots of opposition to meet; every one most is bound by a creed of some kind; no matter how wicked they are. Yet there are none among them who seem to be interested in the truth as it is in the gospel. The Brighamites have been in this section for about four years; have been at nearly every house and left some of their tracts. They never leave anything upon the marriage subject until they get the people to join them, and then they wait for some time before they leave anything upon that subject. I visited one family that had belonged to them for nearly four years before they left any book or tract upon the subject of polygamy; and when said family found out that they believed in the doctrine of polygamy they went back on them, and are very bitter toward them. Many people seem to believe that Utah Mormons and the Reorganized Church are the same, because we are called Latter Day Saints.

By the grace of God I am determined to continue until the battle is over. I am blessed very much in these days; I know God is in this work; I feel stronger than ever in life. I have preached at fifteen places since I came to Tennessee, to good turnouts and had good attention. There are many places open for preaching in this section. I have not made application for a single place that I have been refused. I mean to go to South Pittsburg soon; there is a branch there; it will be a treat to us, wife and I, to meet with a branch of the church in meeting, as we have not had such a privilege since we left Texas. We have met but two members in the state of Tennessee.

I must tell you that we have in this section an organization called the Ku Klux; they have whipped three persons of late near where we are, two men and a negress. They claimed that these persons were not doing right, in that they were not making a livelihood by their industry. A number of men have been hung by these mobs at night. This beats Texas, for there as a rule the men hung by mobs are negroes, and such as insult white ladies; but here all that I have heard of being hung are white men. The Devil is still raging in the hearts of the people.

Yours in bonds,

E. W. NUNLEY.

LENOX, Mich., Nov. 10.

Editors Herald:—I have been reading some of the letters from isolated members of our good and true church, and I find that there are others like us, seemingly alone amidst those who look in scorn upon the few who dare to do right in the face of many obstacles. I am proud to be able to help hold up the banner of truth, though the battle rages fiercely around us, and the shells are falling thick and fast. I term them shells, for they present the appearance of being filled with something, but when probed are found to contain nothing but wind, proving to me that they are shells indeed.

For many years there were but two in our town who had heard and accepted the gospel in its fulness, Bro. and Sr. Howison. There are now four of us; my wife and I were added to the number on December 12, last. Since we have been added it seems to be a hard matter to get enough preaching to go around. I sometimes wonder how it would seem if I could be where I could hear a sermon or two each Sunday, and have a chance to attend a weekly prayer meeting. I hear from some of the saints who are so situated, that the weekly prayer meeting generally proves to be a weakly prayer meeting indeed.

Why is it? Why do those who have the privilege of attending meetings regularly become so careless or indifferent? Who but themselves are the losers? With the argus eyes of the world upon them, is it any wonder that we as a church do not draw others within the fold more numerously? Can we expect to awaken an interest in the work while we are asleep ourselves? Will our work show to the world its beauty and truthfulness as long as we permit it to drag so slowly on?

Some of us may hide behind the fact of the scarcity of workers (elders) in the field, when if we look around for the reason, we may well blush with shame. With purse strings tied in hard knots, and crowded down so tightly into the pocket, how can it be otherwise? We who are isolated would be very glad to hear the gospel more frequently, but under existing circumstances, we cannot.

Remove the blocks from beneath the wheels and the chariot will roll smoothly along, and isolation will cease; branches will spring up and grow, and the world will see that the church is alive, for it will move; its influence will be felt, and souls will be brought into the kingdom. May God awaken his people, is the prayer of your humble brother,

PACIFIC GROVE, Cal., Nov. 8.

Editors Herald:—You have been bringing us tidings from afar, of how the gospel wins its way. Now we can say it is winning some to its way here. We have been made glad this summer by having more elders come to this first capital of the golden State, Monterey, and preach the word. Elder Daly came and preached and baptized five, and left others believing. Then came Elder Scott, and soon Elder Keeler, and they are preaching all around this side of the bay at old and new Monterey and Pacific Grove. Have just returned from a meeting where Bro. Keeler held forth grandly; he has baptized one and left Bro. Scott five, so we feel encouraged indeed. We rejoice that there are others investigating, and we hope soon to see the fulfillment of the promise of many more obeying. We were four members here, one new one went away; some others talk of going, but we hope for more to come in, and have a branch here, near where the famous Juniperro first planted the Catholic faith, if not in the old town. The winter rains have begun, and nature is wakening with joy, putting on her green robes. So do we rejoice in the gospel.

In the faith,

HULDA BLACKLEACH.

CLEAR LAKE, Ind., Oct. 30.

Editors Herald:—On July 23 I left home for Grand Rapids, Michigan; to attend grove meeting at Englishville. Were made to feel at home on meeting Bro. Bronson and some sisters whom we knew. Meeting at ten a. m., Bro. Bronson in the stand; at two p. m. Bro. Briggs occupied with encouragement; at seven p. m., Bro. Baggerly in the stand. On the 24th, at ten a. m., Bro. Briggs again; at two p. m., your writer tried to talk. In the evening Bro. Leonard Scott cheered us with one of his eloquent sermons. On Monday we moved back to the city, after spending two days very pleasantly. In the evening Bro. Bronson occupied in the hall in the city. Tuesday eve your writer made another attempt to talk to the saints. Thursday found us on our way to Chester, where Bro. I. M. Smith and others had labored. We occupied three times in the Congregational church. On Tuesday on our way to Lansing, where we were entertained by Bro. and Sr. Kelley. On Wednesday we visited the Statehouse and Industrial school. Next we attend the Hall's Corners meeting; then Jamestown, Indiana; then Flint, all in company with Bro. Scott. Next comes South Scott, Indiana. When we got there we found Bro. Scott had been called to Coldwater to preach funeral. Bro. Briggs came in time for evening meeting, and did some excellent preaching; old time ring to it.

At Clear Lake had one of the best meetings in all the two day's series thus far attended. September 28, started for Coldwater to meet Bro. F. Granger; on Thursday to go to Hartford, and on Friday, in company with Bro. Granger started for Hartford, arriving there on the afternoon of October 1. Two o'clock found Bro. Granger in the stand (in a nice little hall situated on a beautiful lot, all paid for and given to the Lord) talking to the saints of Hartford. Seven p. m. your writer occupied. The morning of the 2d found Brn. Briggs and Scott in the stand conducting dedicatory services. Two were baptized by Bro. Scott.

Tuesday found us on our way for Hoppertown, where one of my brothers has lived for twenty-eight years. We visited and did some fireside preaching. Had the promise of a church to commence meeting on the Monday following, when the pastor concluded we could not have the church. While there we found one old-time elder, his name is Lewis Muetze; his license is dated in 1840; signed by Joseph Smith and Willard Richards. He requests the saints to send him papers, Heralds, and tracts; his address is Hoppertown, Allegan County, Michigan.

Now we start for conference at Gallien. Stayed one night near Bangor; next night at Hartford, then on to conference by way of Benton Harbor. It was raining and we were in an open buggy, and I think fourteen miles from Dr. Royce's; but we moved on along the bank of Lake Michigan, on the east shore, the wind blowing from northwest very hard. After some chilling we found the doctor's home, and a welcome such only as Latter Day Saints can give.

Next morning Dr. Royce was immersed by Bro. Granger in a little lake near his home; his son was baptized with him. The services seemed unusually impressive—so grand. His companion was filled with joy at the confirmation of husband and son.

The conference was good; we were entertained by Brn. White and Clark. Arrived at Coldwater, October 19, and home the 20th. On the 26th baptized the husband of the sick sister, John S. Allshouse.

We are not discouraged with the outlook in this district. The conference was excellent, and we believe good resolutions were made. After awhile the mists will clear away, and all rejoice in the truth. Our faith is strong, and we believe better times are near at hand. Yours for the truth,

G. A. SMITH.

SULPHUR CITY, Ark., Nov. 10.

Editors Herald:—By request of brethren and friends near this place, I am here to counteract if possible the misrepresentations of Utah Mormon elders now canvassing this country. They have refused to meet me in public debate. I have delivered a lecture showing the difference between the apostasy of Brigham Young and the true church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. They deny that any children have been born to plural wives since the manifesto was passed, and offer $50 per head for all proven to be such. Here is a chance brethren to make a stake. They also circulate the report that Bro. W. B. Toney of Indian Territory, has joined them. Their style is to make a bold appearance, but when confronted by us they puppy down, till it looks like it is a shame to say any more to them. We have a good interest here. I wish I had some tracts on their crookedness to distribute among the people. I will remain here for some time, preaching at nights.

T. J. SHEPPARD.

NEBRASKA CITY, Neb., Nov. 10.

Editors Herald:—Last Sabbath was a beautiful day, and at the close of morning service nearly all the audience went to the river to witness the baptism of seven persons, Elder J. W. Waldsmith baptizing them all. They were confirmed at the sacrament meeting by Elders J. W. Waldsmith, Mark H. Forscutt, and W. M. Self. One girl of ten years and a man past fifty years got up after confirmation and spoke showing the Spirit of the Lord had attended the baptism of water, so they could bear testimony at once to the work of God. In the evening Elder Forscutt preached to a good sized audience in our church.

October 23, we had a visit at our Sabbath school and preaching services by two Brighamite missionaries, who had arrived the 18th, to establish that church in this city, if they could get a place to preach in.

Elder G. H. Hilliard preached here two evenings; Thursday evening he had among his fair sized audience the two Utah missionaries and our Congregational minister of this city. The sermon was more than ordinary; in power and plainness it could not be changed by any; the Spirit surely accompanied the words expressed by Elder Hilliard.

The Utah preachers must have left, as we have not seen them around here any more. Got to the wrong place, I suppose.

Elder James Caffal preached in our church three sermons, full of light and instructions; but there were hardly any out to hear him. The highest number present was 25, the lowest 22, and yet the weather was nice and moonlight. I felt somewhat sad to see the few, and was wondering when was the most opportune time to reach the people with the gospel message, as there was always something going on to keep them away on week nights, so they would not come to hear, no matter who preached. My desire has ever been to use my time, talents, and means for the support of this work, and let theaters, dancing halls, and all worldly amusements take care of themselves; for such places I have not a cent, nor a desire to go. It is a mystery to me how the so-called saints can attend such places, and spend their means, and make a lavish display of style and neglect the services of God, and never show up five cents for its support. What reward will they get in the day of account? I am afraid their lot will be disappointment, as they will then see that having their names on the church books did not give them any inheritance or eternal life. Because they did not do any work that should merit any glorious prize hereafter, as they had patronized tobacco and cigar shops, all kinds of worldly amusements, and let the church go, and paid no heed to God's servants' warnings to keep away from such places, but fit and prepare themselves daily for the coming of the Lord, who shall reward every one according to his works. Whatsoever we sow, that shall we also reap. So it behooves me to see what I sow, that I may not reap the whirlwind when I had the chance to reap eternal life and glory, and be with Jesus and his saints eternally.

My desire is that I may be able to keep my gospel covenant faithful to the end of my life.

ANNA NIELSEN.

WILLIAMSDALE, N. S., Nov. 9.

Editors Herald:—It is but natural that the minds of some may be turned to our part of the "harvest field" just now, for several reasons; and to those who may be wondering how the work is prospering, would say that so far as work is concerned, there is no trouble about that; favorable results are the scarcity that bother us.

On arriving home from Rhode Island and Massachusetts about the 20th of September I found matters progressing favorably under the efforts of Elder S. O. Foss, who returned to Maine about the 20th of October. As I travel over the points occupied by him while here I find a good record, and it is gratifying to note that a good work has been done; and many friends, both in and out of the church, attest to the appreciation of his labor and will welcome him back again in the spring. At Digby on my way home I was joined by Bro. Luff, who accompanied me home, where we held one meeting then proceeded to Hants County, where we held our conference in South Rawdon, which was a very enjoyable occasion; Elder Luff doing the preaching, which was very highly appreciated.

After the following Sunday we returned to Lockhartville, and at my house continued a week, holding meetings and endeavoring to awaken in our neighbors an interest in this work. The indications though were not of the flattering kind, although we are not without hope as to good results.

The next point of operation was Delhaven and Blomidon—the Sumpter of Nova Scotia. Here it was that Elder Burton fired the first shot for the Reorganization in this country. Here is where the most severe opposition has been manifest, to which F. M. Sheehy and others can testify. We cannot say what the result will be, but Elders Luff and Foss had fair audiences and good interest. About two weeks of meetings were held there; then

Bro. Foss left for Maine and Bro. Luff and myself crossed the bay to Cumberland County, where we have been at work some three weeks, in Williamsdale and River Philip Center, where we are now, performing the carpenter act by day and "Carpenter's Son" act in the evenings, and on Sunday. Bro. Ripley, at whose home we are staying, is building a new house upon which is an opportunity for physical exercise. Elder Luff's health has not been very good, nevertheless he has succeeded in doing about all the preaching. I'm afraid my preaching record for the past month will show "whitewash;" but I presume there are times when silence is golden and a man will get rewarded for holding his tongue. It is so voted by the people, and this time I am with the majority.

We are glad to report an increased earnestness all along the lines among the saints, notably among the younger ones. May the kind Father bless and strengthen those who are making efforts in the right direction and help others to do likewise.

One word with regard to the "Old Glory" matter: I have not replied; neither shall I reply to Elder Kelley, as I see no necessity for it. With all deference to the worthy brother I freely confess that I have not seen one scintillation of evidence why any national flag should be hoisted to wave over the Church of Jesus Christ, but the feelings and sentiments aroused as heard along the line is good evidence why it should not. I do not wish to be misunderstood in this matter, as some are inclined that way. I would protest just as energetically were it the Union Jack or British Ensign, instead of "Old Glory." Believe me, I have great regard and veneration for the stars and stripes, and God forbid that I should seek to diminish aught from its rightful luster. No, indeed! In her proper and legitimate place, "long may she wave."

Hoping and praying for the welfare of Zion I am,

Your brother,

H. J. DAVISON.

True Succession in Church Presidency.

CHAPTER 6.—Concluded.

Mr. Roberts proceeds as follows:—

The third claim made in behalf of Mr. Smith is:

He was called to the position of President of the church by "revelation" to himself.

Of this it is not necessary to say very much. It could only be important if sustained by the other two claims, viz: that he was appointed by his father to succeed to the office of President of the church; and secondly, that the office is his by lineage. Since these two claims have been disproven, it renders his third claim of no effect.—Roberts, pp. 72, 73.

Certainly Mr. Roberts is getting reckless! Does he intend to concede that an appointment from Joseph the Seer and the claim of lineage are of such vital importance that where they are wanting a revelation would be insufficient? It seems incredible that Mr. Roberts would give his case away by such a concession; yet this is just what he says: The claim that he was called by revelation "could only be important if sustained by the other two."

Mr. Roberts concedes more than we claim. We hold that if he had never been appointed by his father, and if there had been no such doctrine announced as lineal priesthood, a call from God by revelation would have been important. The first prophet and President of the church was called by revelation through himself, and that too when the doctrine of lineal descent was unknown, and when he had no immediate predecessor to appoint him, as the following will show:—

Behold, there shall be a record kept among you, and in it thou shalt be called a seer, a translator, a prophet, an apostle of Jesus Christ, an elder of the church through the will of God the Father, and the grace of your Lord Jesus Christ; being inspired of the Holy Ghost to lay the foundation thereof, and to build it up unto the most holy faith; which church was organized and established, in the year of your Lord eighteen hundred and thirty, in the fourth month, and on the sixth day of the month, which is called April.—D. C. 19: 1.

However, we may have misunderstood Mr. Roberts. He may mean that unless Mr. Smith was appointed by his father, or that it was his right by lineage, his claim to be a revelator would not be valid, and hence his revelations would be of "no effect." If he concedes so much, we thank him. We shall have need for this concession when considering the claims of Brigham Young.

He then refers to the manifestations received by President Smith, and adds:—

These are all the "revelations" spoken of by Mr. Smith in his autobiography, or quoted by his supporters, hence these must be the "revelations" to himself by which he was called to be President of the church! Just where the "call" can be found in them is the thing which the writer of these pages cannot see: and he challenges anybody else to point it out.—Roberts, p. 74.

We accept this challenge and in evidence produce a revelation to President Smith quoted by Mr. Roberts from Joseph Smith's autobiography as follows:—

The Saints reorganizing at Zarahemla and other places, is the only organized portion of the Church accepted by me. I have given them my spirit, and will continue to do so while they remain humble and faithful.—Roberts, pp. 73, 74.

Here is a definite and specific acknowledgement of the Reorganization forming at Zarahemla and elsewhere. Now it only remains to show what was the position on this point of the people thus strongly indorsed, and Mr. Roberts' challenge is met. It will be remembered that this manifestation to President Smith came in 1859.

Elder Jason Briggs claimed that as early as November 18, 1851, he received a revelation containing this statement:—

In mine own due time will I call upon the seed of Joseph Smith, and will bring one forth, and he shall be mighty and strong, and he shall preside over the high priesthood of my church, etc.—The Messenger, Vol. 2, p. 1.

Elder Z. H. Gurley, Sen., claims that in 1852 a manifestation came to him as follows:—

The successor of Joseph Smith is Joseph Smith, the son of Joseph Smith, the prophet; it is his right by lineage, saith the Lord your God.—Ibid., p. 9.

Upon this and like information these men and others proceeded to renounce all other leaders and to teach that the right of presidency was vested in Joseph Smith, the son of the prophet. If Mr. Roberts cannot see that the indorsement of the Reorganization received by President Smith in 1859 carried with it the position occupied by the Reorganization on the subject of Presidency, the reader can.

Again, the indorsement of this position was not confined to these two men, for in June, 1852, the body adopted, among other resolutions, the following:—

Resolved, that the successor of Joseph Smith, Junior, as the Presiding High Priest in the Melchisedec priesthood, must of necessity be of the seed of Joseph Smith, Junior, in fulfillment of the law and promises of God.—The Messenger, Vol. 2, p. 9.

Mr. Roberts' next statement is as follows:—

It should be observed here, perhaps, that "revelations" to a man personally, that he is called to be President of the church, even when clear and definite, do not constitute him the President. Something else is necessary. As observed elsewhere, not only must a man be called of God, but he must be accepted by the church—"chosen by the body, appointed and ordained to that office, and upheld by the confidence, faith, and prayer of the church."—Roberts, p. 74.

To this we agree, and shall insist in all our controversy that we cannot accept as President of the church any man not filling these requirements. Of course, Mr. Roberts denies in this connection that President Smith was accepted and chosen by the true church; and that he was appointed and ordained by proper authority. But his denial is scarcely worth the space required to notice it.

However, is it consistent for Mr. Roberts to insist upon these requirements in the case of Mr. Smith while he defends the claims of Messrs. Young, Taylor, Woodruff, and Snow to the Presidency, none of whom was ever ordained by anyone to the office of President of the church? Or, if they were, we have seen no record of it; nor have we been able to get any information on this point from the authorities of the Utah Church. Some time ago we made an effort to obtain data upon this and other points, but the result was very unsatisfactory.

That the reader may know just what our effort was, and how treated, we here give the correspondence.

The following letter which explains its own purpose, was addressed to Elder F. D. Richards, their Church Recorder and Historian:—

LAMONI, Iowa, October 2, 1896.

F. D. RICHARDS,

Dear Sir:—I believe you are Church Recorder, and so write you for historical information. Will you favor me by stating what the approximate or exact numerical strength of the church was at the time of the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith.

I desire this simply to get at correct historical data.

Respectfully,

HEMAN C. SMITH.

To this we received the following reply:—

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, Oct. 12, 1896.

MR. HEMAN C. SMITH, Lamoni, Iowa.

Dear Sir:—In reply to yours of the 2d inst. as to the numerical strength of the church at the time of the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith.

The nearest we can approximate the number was about 26,000 to 27,000 souls.

Respectfully,

F. D. RICHARDS.

To this we replied as follows:—

LAMONI, Iowa, Oct. 17, 1896.

F. D. RICHARDS,

Dear Sir:—Yours of October 12, 1896, is at hand, stating the approximate numerical strength of the church at the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith to have been "about 26,000 to 27,000 souls."

I am surprised at the number being given so small by you. How do you explain the statements of Joseph Smith on this point? In a historical sketch written by him and published by I. Daniel Rupp in 1844 he writes: "There are no correct data by which the exact number of members composing this now extensive, and still extending, Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints can be known. Should it be supposed at 150,000 it might still be short of the truth."—History of Religious Denominations, p. 409.

In his reply to Henry Clay, May 13, 1844, he writes: "Why, Great God! to transport 200,000 people through a vast prairie; over the Rocky Mountains, to Oregon, a distance of nearly two thousand miles, would cost more than four millions!"—Times and Seasons, Vol. 5, p. 547.

These two statements would closely agree if we include in the latter statement dependents who were not members, but there is a very wide difference between your estimate and his.

I do not quote these statements by way of argument against your figures, but to get your explanation of the difference. Upon what basis did you make your estimate? Have you the record of names kept at the time? I want to get at the truth of the matter for the sake of historical accuracy.

I would like to ask another favor of you; namely: to inform me when, where, and by whom were Brigham Young, John Taylor, and Wilford Woodruff ordained Presidents of the High Priesthood, or Presidents of the church, if so ordained?

Or if it is the position of your people that they needed no other ordination than that to the Apostleship, will you please so state.

I am engaged in writing history and do not wish to misrepresent you.

Respectfully,

HEMAN C. SMITH.

Awaiting until November 19, and receiving no reply to our inquiries, we wrote Mr. Richards as follows:—

LAMONI, Iowa, Nov. 19, 1896.

F. D. RICHARDS,

Dear Sir:—On October 17, I wrote you in reply to yours of October 12. I am very anxious to receive answer to inquiries made. If you have not received it please let me know and I will send you a copy.

I am, respectfully,

HEMAN C. SMITH.

Still receiving no reply, we awaited until December 16, when we mailed him a copy of our letter of October 17, together with the following note, registering them:—

LAMONI, Iowa, Dec. 16, 1896.

F. D. RICHARDS,

Dear Sir:—On October 17 I wrote you in answer to yours of October 12, and made some further inquiries. Waiting until November 19, and receiving no reply I wrote inquiring if you received it. Still I have no reply.

I now inclose a copy of my letter of October 17, as you may not have received the original. Will you please give it your early attention, as I am anxious to get the information sought.

I inclose stamp for reply.

In bonds,

HEMAN C. SMITH.

In due course of mail we received the "Registry Return Receipt," signed "F. D. Richards, per John Jaques;" but up to date, November 15, 1898, no answer has been received.

When two of their own representatives, J. H. Stout and U. G. Miller, made the same inquiry they were just as unsuccessful, as the following will show:—

"Will you please answer the following through the News: Who ordained President Brigham Young to the office of President of the Church, and also the date of the organization? The Reorganized ministers are making the statement that he never was ordained, and that the people never made the claim that he was. No doubt it will be of use to others of the elders as well as ourselves."

"For the information of those who send the inquiry, we will state that the event referred to is carefully recorded in church history, and has been published frequently. President Brigham Young was installed as the President of the Church, in the quorum of the First Presidency, by the Council of the Apostles, on December 5, 1847. Not a ceremony necessary to the performance of that solemn duty was omitted—everything was done in perfect order, and by the united voice of the Twelve. President Young had been President of the Church in his position as President of the presiding quorum, the Twelve Apostles, for more than three years previous to the date given, or ever since the martyrdom of the Prophet Joseph. When, on the date mentioned, President Young had been duly installed as the chief in the First Presidency, he selected Heber C. Kimball and Willard Richards as first and second counselors respectively, and they were also duly set apart, being sustained by the unanimous vote of the Twelve. In their case, as with President Young, no ceremony was omitted."—Daily Deseret News, October 5, 1896.

Comment is useless; but we still insist upon answers to these inquiries, and until they are received we shall maintain that the gentlemen named, to whom we now add the name of Mr. Snow, were not at any time ordained to the office of President of the church; and hence according to Mr. Roberts' position stated above, were not properly constituted Presidents of the church.

Again, Brigham Young admits by the strongest kind of inference that he was not ordained to the office of President of the church. He says:—

Who ordained me to be First President of this Church on earth? I answer, it is the choice of this people, and that is sufficient.—Millennial Star, Vol. 16, p. 442.

But Mr. Roberts says it is not sufficient, but that he should be ordained. In this Mr. Roberts is right; but how can he sustain Mr. Young who is wrong?

With President Smith the case was different. He was ordained by what he considered proper authority; a record of that ordination has been made and published, and is open for investigation. We are prepared to defend the authority by which the ordination was performed, when legitimately questioned, but in this connection we pass it by for the reason that Mr. Roberts' objection to the apostolic authority exercised upon that occasion is based upon his own affirmation. Hear him:—

Now, I affirm that among all those seven men who were "called" to form the majority of the quorum of the twelve, in the "Reorganization" not one of them held the apostleship; that they could not give what they did not possess; that therefore neither the seven men called to be apostles, in April, 1853, received the apostleship, nor any whom they subsequently ordained.—Roberts, p. 77.

The only answer that this deserves is a counter affirmation; but we may consider the question of authority more fully in another part of our investigation.

Mr. Roberts makes a labored effort to show that whatever authority may have been possessed by Zenos H. Gurley and William Marks prior to the death of Joseph Smith, they lost by indorsing the claims of J. J. Strang and others. But this is only an assumption. We have the same right to assume that all who followed Brigham Young thereby lost their authority.

Proceeding upon the basis of his affirmation that those claiming apostolic authority in the Reorganization did not possess it, Mr. Roberts seeks to show a contrast between this organization and the one effected in 1830 by endeavoring to show that Joseph Smith, Oliver Cowdery, and others acted in the last-named organization by virtue of apostolic authority. Any position, no matter how sound, could apparently be overthrown if the objector is allowed his own affirmation as a basis from which to argue; but it takes a great amount of assurance and impudence for a man to offer his own assertion as basic evidence.

The next thing in Mr. Roberts' argument which we deem necessary to notice in this connection is the following:—

Josephites lay much stress upon the following passage in one of the revelations:

I say unto you that ye have received a commandment for a law unto my church through him whom I have appointed unto you to receive commandments and revelations from my hand. And this ye shall know assuredly, that there is none other appointed unto you to receive commandments and revelations until he be taken, if he abide in me. But verily, verily, I say unto you, that none else shall be appointed unto this gift except it be through him, for if it be taken from him, he shall not have power, except to appoint another in his stead; and this shall be a law unto you, that ye receive not the teachings of any that shall come before you as revelations and commandments; and this I give unto you that you may not be deceived, that you may know that they are not of me. For verily I say unto you, that he that is ordained of me, shall come in at the gate and be ordained, as I have told you before, to teach those revelations which you have received, and shall receive through him whom I have appointed.

Josephites insist that this revelation provides that the successor of the prophet Joseph must be appointed by him.—Roberts, pp. 82, 83.

This is quite a fair statement for Mr. Roberts to make, yet a more careful man would have stated our position more accurately by saying, that we insist that this revelation recognizes the authority of the prophet Joseph to appoint his successor, and that if he did so appoint, the appointment is valid.

After relating some of the circumstances under which the above revelation was given, none of which would in anywise change the import of the language, or modify its meaning, Mr. Roberts proceeds to give his understanding of this passage, in the following language:—

The information thus given officially to the church was calculated to preserve the saints from following unauthorized "law-givers." Through it they learned that Joseph, if he remained faithful, would be the law-giver to Israel: if he transgressed he should retain sufficient of the power of revelation to designate whom the Lord would have to succeed him; and in that or any other event the man who becomes President must come in at the gate and be ordained as described in one of the laws of the church previously given. There was surely no need after this that any should be deceived. But to argue from what is set down in this revelation that the only possible way for a successor "in any event," to be appointed to the church was through Joseph Smith the prophet, is clearly an error; for the only provision made in this revelation for him to appoint his successor is in the event of his own transgression; and I affirm that Joseph Smith was faithful to God and the church up to the day of his death.—Roberts, p. 84.

We cannot avoid being amused at Mr. Roberts' propensity for settling a question with his characteristic "I affirm." It reminds us of a comment made by one of his church associates, but political opponents, to the effect that Mr. Roberts never appeared before the public without saying by his manner, "I am B. H. Roberts." However, our chief objection is to the following:—

The only provision made in this revelation for him to appoint his successor is in the event of his own transgression.

We do not so comprehend the language. The words, "Verily, verily I say unto you, that none else shall be appointed unto this gift except it be through him," admit of no modifications or exceptions. The words following: "for if it be taken from him he shall not have power, except to appoint another in his stead," etc., simply convey the impression that this right, vested in him by virtue of his office, he would retain, even in case of transgression, to avoid confusion and uncertainty. To take the position, as Mr. Roberts does, that Joseph Smith was not authorized to appoint his successor except in the event of his transgression, is to make the authority to appoint contingent upon transgression.

We can readily see the possibility and even advisability, for this specific purpose, of a man retaining a part of his authority, already bestowed, after transgression; but the idea that God would bestow authority not before held, upon a transgressor, which would be denied him if faithful, is absurd. We have long been taught that God bestows authority, honor, and power as a reward for faithfulness; but it remained for this illustrious guardian of the "order of the priesthood of God, and the facts of church history," to inform us that God reserves certain authority for the transgressor alone.

What to us seems very peculiar is that notwithstanding Mr. Roberts' claim that Joseph Smith had no authority to appoint his successor except in the event of his transgression, and notwithstanding he affirms that Joseph did prove faithful, yet he asserts, on the authority of Brigham Young, that Joseph did appoint his brother Hyrum to succeed him. (See Roberts' book, page 66.)

Certainly God would provide for succession and the perpetuity of his work in case of Joseph's death, as much so as in case of his transgression.

We are impressed to close this chapter with these words of Mr. Roberts, which we commend:—

Can it be that God, with whom all things are as present, had not foreseen this fate which overtook his servants Joseph and Hyrum, and failed to provide for such an emergency? O, charge not the Lord with such lack of wisdom, or his church with such imperfection in its organization!—Roberts, p. 85.

CHAPTER 7.

THOUGH what was done in the case of Sydney Rigdon at Nauvoo is not of special importance to this discussion, we wish briefly to note the discrepancy in Mr. Roberts' own account, and also his clash with his own witnesses. On page 88 of his book Mr. Roberts states of Mr. Rigdon:—

He sought to be appointed Guardian of the church, but was unanimously rejected by the assembled quorums of priesthood and the saints at Nauvoo.

This agrees with the statement of Elder Woodruff (see p. 13), but unfortunately it conflicts with Mr. Roberts' own statement that no vote was taken on Rigdon's claims. (See p. 12.) This is Roberts versus Roberts. At one time he agrees with the record as published in Times and Sea- sons (see p. 12), and at the other time with Wilford Woodruff. It will not do; no man can agree with the record and with Woodruff too.

In regard to the vote on the sustaining of the Twelve, he is in just as bad as a muddle. He states that the vote was unanimous (see p. 12), and quotes the Millennial Star to the same effect (see pp. 13, 14); but he had previously quoted from the journal of William C. Staines, that the "vote was taken to sustain the Twelve in their office, which with a few dissenting voices, was passed. (See p. 10.)

Do not forget, reader, that this man Roberts is a zealous defender of the "facts of church history."

Mr. Roberts enters into a long dissertation to show that the Twelve were next in authority after the First Presidency, and hence should preside in their absence, and that the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith did not disorganize the church. We agree that the Twelve are next in authority to the First Presidency. We have no objection to their presiding at any proper time and place, providing they do so in their own office and calling. We object not to their doing, but to their manner of doing, and to what they did, as will appear before the close of this investigation. Nor do we claim that the church was disorganized by the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith. The church, we claim, was rejected because of its own acts of transgression, and its failure to comply with the commands of God.

But Mr. Roberts in speaking of the church asserts:—

There is nothing in all that God has revealed to indicate that he ever contemplated its disorganization; but on the contrary, there is every encouragement to believe that it will go on from grace to grace, from faith to faith, from one victory to another until, like the little stone of Daniel's vision, it shall become a great mountain and fill the whole earth.—Roberts, p. 89.

Mr. Roberts may possibly make some play upon the word "contemplated," but the careful reader cannot fail to see that God warned the saints that there was danger of the church being rejected by him if they did not perform the work appointed. In a revelation given January 19, 1841, this warning was given in specific and plain language, as follows:—

And again, verily I say unto you, Let all my saints come from afar; and send ye swift messengers, yea, chosen messengers, and say unto them, Come ye, with all your gold, and your silver, and your precious stones, and with all your antiquities; and with all who have knowledge of antiquities, that will come may come, and bring the box tree, and the fir tree, and the pine tree, together with all the precious trees of the earth; and with iron, with copper, and with brass, and with zinc, and with all your precious things of the earth, and build a house to my name, for the Most High to dwell therein; for there is not a place found on earth that he may come and restore again that which was lost unto you, or, which he hath taken away, even the fullness of the priesthood; for a baptismal font there is not upon the earth; that they, my saints, may be baptized for those who are dead; for this ordinance belongeth to my house, and cannot be acceptable to me, only in the days of your poverty, wherein ye are not able to build a house unto me. But I command you, all ye my saints, to build a house unto me; and I grant unto you a sufficient time to build a house unto me, and during this time your baptisms shall be acceptable unto me.

But, behold, at the end of this appointment, your baptisms for your dead shall not be acceptable unto me; and if you do not these things at the end of the appointment, ye shall be rejected as a church with your dead, saith the Lord your God.—D. C. 107: 10, 11.

There was then a possibility of the church being rejected, and the conditions under which it would be rejected are plainly set forth. None can misunderstand this. It forcibly teaches that a sufficient time would be granted to build a temple at Nauvoo, and that if it was not built at the end of that time the church would be rejected. The pertinent inquiry then is, Was the temple built?

On page 102 Mr. Roberts says:—

The Temple was completed.

But Mr. Penrose admits that it was not completed, and argues that a completion was not necessary. He says:—

Now it is a matter of history that notwithstanding the opposition of the enemies of the Church, the murder of the Prophet and Patriarch, the threatenings and plots and ragings of mobocrats, and the scantiness of means for the great work before them, the Saints went to with their might and built that house according to the commandment of the Lord and the pattern revealed to Joseph Smith, which with all the keys and authority and power of the Holy Priesthood he had given to the Twelve, and that it was so far completed before the exodus from that city that it was dedicated to the Lord, and baptisms for the dead were performed in the sacred font, and washings, anointings, endowments and other ordinances were solemnized therein, both for the living and for the dead.

But, it is objected by the "Reorganizers" that the Temple was not fully "completed," and Brigham Young is quoted as saying after his arrival in Utah, that the Saints would attempt to build a Temple, and that "This has been attempted several times, but we have never yet had the privilege of completing and enjoying one." Our very technical and disputatious opponents are never tired of repeating in this connection the words "complete" and "completed." But a careful examination of the word of the Lord fails to discover those words or anything equivalent to them. The Lord told his people to build a house to him; they did build and use it for the purposes he designed. They were not permitted to remain and enjoy it. There were, probably, some additions which would have been made to "complete" the edifice in the full sense of the term, if the builders had remained to enjoy it. . . .

It is surprising that sane people, however biased and prejudiced, could entertain the notion that the just and merciful Father and the tender and loving Christ would reject the people who had toiled so faithfully to obey the commandment given them to build a Temple, because, before they could perfectly finish the structure after building it, in consequence of the inroad made upon them by their enemies they were compelled to forsake all their possessions for the Gospel's sake!—Penrose, pp. 6, 7, 8.

The evidence shows that Mr. Penrose is right, and Mr. Roberts wrong, so far as the facts are concerned regarding the completion of the temple.

On June 26, 1897, President Joseph Smith made a statement on this subject from which we quote the following:—

I knew of the work being done on the temple at that place from the time it began until the building was burned in 1848. It was not finished. The basement was fitted for occupation, and the baptismal font was ready for use. The auditorium on the first floor was completed sufficiently to be seated and occupied for assembly purposes. The stairway on the south side was completed for use. The auditorium on second floor, the stairway on north side, nor any other portion of the building except those above-named were completed; though the small rooms above the second floor auditorium were used by President Young and the resident church authorities for various purposes.—Church History, Vol. 2, p. 563.

Patriarch A. H. Smith also made a statement on July 2, 1897, a part of which is as follows:—

"The offices in the corner to the left of main entrance on the ground floor were finished, but not furnished. The auditorium or main meeting room was temporarily finished; the seats and pulpit were only temporary.

"The upper auditorium; the plastering was not done, the floor was only the rough boards, intended only for the lining, was laid, and from this floor upward the stairs, except in the tower, or circular main stairs, were also temporary; the upper floor which was to have been divided into numerous rooms was laid, and partitioned off with cotton factory cloth, and used for some purposes before the saints were driven away. . . .

"To my knowledge the temple never was finished, and those who have been led to believe it was, have been deceived. I make this statement freely for the benefit of the present and future generations."—Church History, Vol. 2, pp. 564, 565.

Elder Brigham Young is reported to have used the following language in St. George Temple, January 1, 1877:—

Joseph located the site for the Temple Block in Jackson County, Missouri, and pointed out the southeast corner of the temple in the year 1831; also laid the corner stone for a temple in Far West, Caldwell County, Missouri. These temples were not built. We built one in Nauvoo. I could pick out several before me now that were there when it was built, and know just how much was finished and what was done. It is true we left brethren there with instructions to finish it, and they got it nearly completed before it was burned; but the saints did not enjoy it. Now we have a temple which will all be finished in a few days, and of which there is enough completed to commence work therein, which has not been done since the days of Adam, that we have any knowledge of.—Journal of Discourses, Vol. 18, p. 304.

These testimonies are sufficient to show that Mr. Roberts was in error about the temple at Nauvoo being completed. According to the first two statements it lacked very much of being complete; and though Mr. Young is not definite as to just what was done, he expresses the thought as late as January, 1877, that from the days of Adam until then there had not been a temple sufficiently finished to commence work in.

However, Mr. Penrose raises the point that the word "complete" or its equivalent is not found in the revelation, and argues that if they built the house they had complied with the requirements whether they finished it or not. We give Mr. Penrose credit for having discovered this ingenious method of defense. It certainly was never thought of in early times, by the people to whom the revelation was given.

The leading men of the church understood it otherwise and were somewhat exercised over the urgent need of completing the temple speedily. In December, 1841, not quite a year after the date of this revelation, an epistle was published signed by Brigham Young, Heber C. Kimball, Orson Pratt, William Smith, Lyman Wight, Wilford Woodruff, John Taylor, George A. Smith, and Willard Richards, which begins with these words:—

The building of the Temple of the Lord, in the city of Nauvoo, is occupying the first place in the exertions and prayers of many of the saints at the present time, knowing as they do, that, if this building is not completed, speedily, "we shall be rejected as a church with our dead," for the Lord our God hath spoken it.—Times and Seasons, Vol. 3, p. 625.

On October 1, 1842, when Joseph Smith was editor, the Times and Seasons published an editorial under the caption of "The Temple" which commences with these words:—

If there is any subject in which the saints of the Most High are interested more than another, it is in the completion of that edifice, etc.—Times and Seasons, Vol. 3, p. 937.

In the same article occurs the following:—

The word of the Lord is build my house, and until that command is fulfilled we stand responsible to the great Jehovah for the fulfillment of it, and if not done in due time we may have to share the same fate that we have heretofore done in Missouri.—Times and Seasons, Vol. 3, p. 939.

These statements serve to show how this revelation was understood by Joseph Smith and the Twelve. We present them as clear and reliable proof that,

1. The idea of church rejection did not originate with the Reorganization.
2. The authorities of the church at the time were conscious that they were required to complete the temple, and understood the dread consequences of a failure.

The temple not being completed, the church stood rejected, and neither the false statement of Mr. Roberts nor the specious pleading of Mr. Penrose will avail to cover this serious result from the research of the honest investigator.

Mr. Penrose, however, falls back upon that part of the revelation of 1841 which says:—

Verily, verily I say unto you, that when I give a commandment to any of the sons of men, to do a work unto my name, and those sons of men go with all their might, and with all they have, to perform that work, and cease not their diligence, and their enemies come upon them, and hinder them performing that work; behold, it behooveth me to require that work no more at the hands of those sons of men, but to accept of their offerings; and the iniquity and transgression of my holy laws and commandments, I will visit upon the heads of those who hindered my work, unto the third and fourth generation, so long as they repent not, and hate me, saith the Lord God. Therefore, for this cause have I accepted the offerings of those whom I commanded to build up a city and a house unto my name, in Jackson County, Missouri, and were hindered by their enemies, saith the Lord your God; and I will answer judgment, wrath and indignation, wailing and anguish, and gnashing of teeth, upon their heads, unto the third and fourth generation, so long as they repent not, and hate me, saith the Lord your God.—D. C. 107: 15.

This, it will be seen, has a special application to the work which was to have been done in Jackson County, Missouri. It may also have a general application, and we believe it does; but it will be observed that a release from obligations is based upon their going "with all their might" and ceasing not "their diligence." That the saints at Nauvoo failed to do this may not generally be known; but that they cannot avail themselves of the provision made, for release from obligations enjoined, is evident from the following words in the revelation itself:—

I grant unto you a sufficient time to build a house unto me.

If the Lord, according to this promise, did grant unto them sufficient time, and they failed to accomplish the work within that time, then it is evident that they did not use due diligence, and hence must accept the consequences of rejection, and of the same fate they shared in Missouri. This latter consequence is too terribly true to be denied, and happy is he who will accept the first-named consequence and take proper steps to restore himself to the favor of God.

William Smith and Lyman Wight, two of the signers of the above letter, recognized the consequences; viz., of disorganization, which they, in 1841, were apprehensive of. As proof in the case of William Smith we cite the letter of James Kay, written in November, 1845. (See p. 18.)

In 1851, Lyman Wight wrote:—

"The church mostly went from there [Kirtland, Ohio] to Missouri, where they commenced another house from which they were driven to the State of Illinois, where we were commanded to build a house or temple to the Most High God. We were to have a sufficient time to build that house, during which time our baptisms for our dead should be acceptable in the river. If we did not build within this time we were to be rejected as a church, we and our dead together. Both the temple and baptizing went very leisurely, till the temple was somewhere in building the second story, when Bro. Joseph from the stand announced the alarming declaration that baptism for our dead was no longer acceptable in the river. As much to say the time for building the temple had passed by, and both we and our dead were rejected together. . . .

"The church now stands rejected together with their dead. The church being rejected now stands alienated from her God in every sense of the word."—Church History, Vol. 2, p. 790.

What but blind ambition to rule prevented others of the signers from recognizing the consequence so apparent?

Again, Parley P. Pratt, though not one of the signers, recognized that the church had been disorganized and that a reorganization was necessary. Elder Pratt relates that as he was returning to Nauvoo after the death of Joseph and Hyrum, while "weighed down as it were unto death," he cried unto the Lord for direction, asking these two questions:—

Shall I tell them to fly to the wilderness and deserts? Or, shall I tell them to stay at home and take care of themselves, and continue to build the temple?

The answer was as follows:—

"Lift up your head and rejoice; for behold! it is well with my servants Joseph and Hyrum. My servant Joseph still holds the keys of my kingdom in this dispensation, and he shall stand in due time on the earth, in the flesh, and fulfill that to which he is appointed. Go and say unto my people in Nauvoo, that they shall continue to pursue their daily duties and take care of themselves, and make no movement in church government to reorganize or alter anything until the return of the remainder of the quorum of the Twelve. But exhort them that they continue to build the House of the Lord which I have commanded them to build in Nauvoo."—Autobiography of Parley P. Pratt, p. 371.

This recognizes the necessity of a reorganization, which carries with it the recognition of a disorganization.

We regret to notice that Mr. Roberts in quoting the above revelation omits the prefix "re" and makes it to read "organize." (See his book, p. 94.)

It will be observed that Elder Pratt claims this to be from God. If so, God recognized the necessity of a Reorganization. Further, the answer to the above questions is clear that the people were to remain in Nauvoo and continue to build the temple, instead of flying to the "wilderness and deserts."

It is not necessary in this connection to discuss whether the Twelve had authority to go into Nauvoo and regulate or not. We agree that their mission was in all the world and that no part of the world was exempt from their jurisdiction; but there was no part of the world where they might become a law unto themselves. Wherever they might be they were required to act in harmony with the law of God and in accordance with the duty of their calling, or their acts would not be valid. The issue between us depends upon what they did, not upon where they did it.

LATTER-DAY EVENTS.

In regard to finding out the events to take place in our day or in the future, I have no fault to find, on condition that proofs be given which can be defended. We see in the Williams-Bays, in White-Braden, and in other debates, that our interpretations of the gospel have to be proven beyond the shadow of a doubt before we claim victory. In Herald of August 17 and 24, Bro. James Cocks has presented a few thoughts on events which he considers past, and a reflection of a something to occur in 1905. He takes the year 690 B. C. as the starting time to begin the fulfillment, and ending in 1830. Of the seven times of chastisement, indicated by Moses (Leviticus 26), there are a number of threats given there as God's punishment to the Israelites if they failed to keep his covenants,—such as making them few in number, and not going to fight their battles for them; if disobedient, their enemies should have power over them.

Then I will walk contrary unto you also in fury; and I, even I, will chastise you seven times for your sins. And ye shall eat the flesh of your sons, and the flesh of your daughters shall ye eat.—Lev. 26: 28, 29.

I cannot see the right to fix the year 690 B. C. as the right place to commence the reckoning of the fulfillment of the prophetic reckoning 2,520 years or seven times. A few quotations will convince that we cannot defend 690 B. C. as the start of Israel's chastisement or threats in Leviticus, chapter 26.

But as for you, your carcasses, they shall fall in this wilderness. And your children shall wander in the wilderness forty years, and bear your whoredoms, until your carcasses be wasted in the wilderness.—Num. 14: 32, 33.

See also Numbers chapter 16, where 250 men were destroyed who burnt in-cense, also 14,700 who were killed by the plague; and the many battles of the kings. They were slain before their enemies several times—those times that they failed in keeping the commandments. These quotations have a tendency to fulfill the above mentioned times of chastisement. See one other instance in 2 Kings 6: 29:—

So we boiled my son, and did eat him, etc.

Another point which I claim, with my present understanding, is not defendable. Bro. J. C. says the complete cleansing time of the sanctuary, (as stated in Daniel 8:14: "And he said unto me, Unto two thousand and three hundred days; then shall the sanctuary be cleansed,") or what is termed 2,300 years prophetically.

Now I say "sanctuary" meant, in Daniel, the holy place, or a set appointed place, known as the place in the tabernacle or temple of the Jews, where they performed some of the Mosaic commandments. Daniel heard a saint saying:—

To give both the sanctuary and the host to be trodden under foot.—V. 13.

Sanctuary therefore could not be the saints, because it mentions the host being trodden under foot; namely, the host of Israel. And one other thing to be observed is, if the cleansing process began 457 years B. C. at Jerusalem, it ought and must end there, or show the reason for that process, jumping to Zion in 1844; before the Jews or the sanctuary there is cleansed, it cannot be cleansed before it is built; and I am of the belief that Zion is not yet perfect, purified, nor cleansed; and it seems that it remains with us yet, individually, by the help of God to cleanse this church ourselves by being observers of the full and complete law of the Lord that is perfect, to the converting of the soul. Daniel may come to share in the final triumph of God's work, but I see nothing in Daniel to warrant his appearing. It reads:—

But go thou thy way till the end be; for thou shalt rest, and stand in thy lot at the end of the days.—Dan. 12: 13.

We must be careful in our doings, so as not to be found lying, like Dr. Talmage, Miller, and various writers to the Christian Herald, who have named the year of the end so many times without authority, by those pretended prophetic reckonings. But let us pray God to reveal to us by the sure word through his prophet, and all will be well.

Yours in Zion's cause,

THOMAS JONES.

Parsons; also, in the evening he discoursed on Sunday school work, an instructive lesson. Adjourned to first Saturday in May, 1899, place left to district superintendent.

MANCHESTER AND SHEFFIELD.

Meeting in North Manchester October 1; Elder Mather presided, assisted by Elder H. Greenwood. Schools represented: Farnworth, by D. Hope and J. Harper; Wigan, by W. Hankin; Hunslett Carr, by E. Tordoff; Manchester, by W. Towers, J. Foden, and T. Coux; Salford, by J. Taylor; North Manchester, by T. Mills; Sheffield, by Sr. A. Austin. Letters were read from J. Arber and W. Roberts, explaining their absence. All workers present were granted voice and vote. It was resolved that we do not use "Winnowed Songs," but wait until the church publishes its own school tune book. The question of establishing a branch of Zion's Religious-Literary Society in England was discussed; it was finally resolved to defer the matter, as no one appeared to have time to devote to it. All are fully occupied with Sabbath school and branch work. The financial question was next considered, when it was resolved that all schools pay a levy of three shillings (72 cents) per annum, except where they are too poor to pay, when if the superintendent sees fit he may cancel the amount. Resolved that we hold annual gatherings at Whitsuntide in future, the first to be held May 20 and 21, 1899; a committee to be formed to make arrangements for location, preaching, exercises, lessons, singing, etc., and that this gathering with God's help shall be a success. Notice of final arrangements will be given, and all Sabbath school workers in England are called upon to cooperate in the movement.

The web of human life is spun with tremulous fears and misgivings interwoven with affection, charity and resignation.

Like the sunlight which fills the air all around us, and enters wherever there is an opening, so does the presence of God fill the whole universe, and enters every heart that opens to receive him.

BISHOP'S AGENT'S NOTICE.

To the Brethren and Sisters throughout the two Dakotas, Greeting:—The time has come when I feel it my duty to again address you upon the subject of tithing. The time of the year to lay by our produce and provide for our temporal necessities is in the fall, and it is a good time to remember the Lord's treasury. (1.) Because we can only give when we have it. (2.) We have practically only one pay day in a year, and that is at this time.

Dear saints, would it not be well to remember our duty? the need is urgent; let us not be so inconsistent as to discharge all our indebtedness to our fellow men and neglect our duty to God. I shall be happy to receipt for any amount, small or great; do not be deterred from sending because you cannot pay all at once, but put forth an effort and make a commencement. Where there is a willing heart and mind, God will bless and open up the way. We should make this a subject of prayer. Our heavenly Father has invited us "In all things by prayer and supplication to make our requests known unto God."

As a body we have been blessed of the Lord the past season. We are called upon to sacrifice, and the greater the sacrifice in patient continuance to the end, the greater our eternal reward. General Conference has kindly favored us with three missionaries; they are toiling as best they can in so large a field. Let us all labor diligently in our separate capacities, that we may all rejoice together when the final harvest of souls is gathered into the garner of the Lord.

Yours in brotherly love,

THOMAS LEITCH,

Bishop's Agent.

BOUNDARY LINE.

DES MOINES AND EASTERN IOWA DISTRICTS.

The following resolution was passed at last General Conference, a record of which is found on page 124 of minutes of General Conference for 1898:—

"To the General Conference of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints:—At the last conference of the Eastern Iowa district, the following preambles and resolution was ordered to be presented to your honorable body, asking you to grant the request herein contained:—

"Whereas, there are certain branches whose membership and territory are partly in the Des Moines and partly in the Eastern Iowa districts; and

"Whereas, there seems to be some misunderstanding with respect to some parts of the boundary lines; therefore,

"We ask the permission of the General Conference to so alter the boundary lines that said branches may be either entirely in the Des Moines or Eastern Iowa districts."

In harmony with the above, both districts appointed a committee to confer with each other concerning the matter. Des Moines district also suggested the following line and division of territory:—

"Beginning at the northeast corner of Butler County, thence south to Tama, thence east to the northeast corner of Benton, thence south to the north line of Washington, thence east along the south line of Johnson County to the old boundary line."

Eastern Iowa Committee thinking the proposed line too crooked, suggested that the line be run south from the northeast corner of Tama County to Keokuk County, thence east along the southern line of Iowa and Johnson counties to the old boundary line.

The latter suggestion was referred to a committee of Des Moines district, and the following recommended: "That the proposal of the committee of the Eastern Iowa district be adopted," which was done.

So the matter of boundary line is finally agreed upon, which would include the following counties in Eastern Iowa district: Bremer, Blackhawk, Benton, Iowa, Johnson, Linn, Buchanan, Fayette, Clayton, Delaware, Jones, Cedar, Muscatine, Scott, Clinton, Jackson, and Dubuque; seventeen in all. And the following in Des Moines district: Butler, Franklin, Wright, Hamilton, Story, Boone, Dallas, Madison, Polk, Warren, Marion, Mahaska, Keokuk, Washington, Poweshiek, Jasper, Marshall, Tama, Grundy, and Hardin; twenty in all.

There are a few counties yet lying north of both districts that are in unorganized territory. According to the petition from Des Moines district we expect General Conference will extend both districts to Minnesota line and establish the boundary between them.

Respectfully,

C. SCOTT, of Des Moines

District Committee.

J. W. PETERSON, of Eastern Iowa Committee.

HOW TO POSTPONE OLD AGE.

ANATOMICAL experiment and investigation show that the chief characteristics of old age are the deposits of earthy matter of a gelatinous, fibrinous character in the human system. Carbonate and phosphate of lime, mixed with other salts of a calcareous nature, have been found to furnish the greater part of these earthy deposits. As observation shows, man begins in a gelatinous condition; he ends in an osseous or bony one—soft in infancy, hard in old age. By gradual change in the long space of years the ossification comes on; but, after middle life is passed, a more marked development of the ossific character takes place. Of course, these earthy deposits—which affect all the physical organs—naturally interfere with their functions. Partial ossification of the heart produces the imperfect circulation of the blood which affects the aged. When the arteries are clogged with calcareous matter, there is interference with circulation, upon which nutrition depends. Without nutrition there is no repair of the body. None of these things interfere with nutrition and circulation in earlier years. The reparation of the physical system, as everyone ought to know, depends on this fine balance. In fact, the whole change is merely a slow, steady accumulation of calcareous deposits in the system. . . . When these become excessive and resist expulsion, they cause the stiffness and dryness of old age. Entire blockage of the functions of the body is then a mere matter of time. The refuse matter deposited by the blood in its constant passage through the system stops the delicate and exquisite machinery which we call life. This is death. It has been proved by analysis that human blood contains compounds of lime, magnesia, and iron. In the blood itself are thus contained the earth salts. In early life they are thrown off. Age has not the power to do it.

Hence, as blood is produced by assimilation of the food we eat, to this food we must look for the earthy accumulations which in time block up the system and bring on old age. . . . Almost everything we eat contains more or less of these elements for destroying life, by means of calcareous salts deposited by the all-nourishing blood. Careful selection, however, can enable us to avoid the worst of them. Earth salts abound in the cereals, and bread itself, though seemingly the most innocent of edibles, greatly assists in the deposition of calcareous matter in our bodies. Nitrogenous food abounds in this element. Hence a diet made up of fruit principally is best for people advancing in years, for the reason that, being deficient in nitrogen, the ossific deposits so much to be dreaded are more likely to be suspended. Moderate eaters have in all cases a much better chance for long life than those addicted to excesses of the table. Fruits, fish, poultry, young mutton, and veal contain less of the earthy salts than other articles of food, and are therefore best for people entering the vale of years. Beef and old mutton usually are overcharged with salts, and should be avoided; a diet containing a minimum amount of earthy particles is most suitable to retard old age, by preserving the system from functional blockages. . . . The daily use of distilled water is, after middle life, one of the most important means of preventing secretions and the derangement of health. As to diluted phosphoric acid, it is one of the most powerful influences known to science for shielding the human system from the inconveniences of old age. Daily use of it mixed with distilled water helps to retard the approach of senility. By its affinity for oxygen the fibrinous and gelatinous deposits previously alluded to are checked, and their expulsion from the system hastened.

To sum up: Avoid all foods rich in the earth soils, use much fruit, especially juicy, uncooked apples, and take daily two or three tumblerfuls of distilled water with about ten or fifteen drops of diluted phosphoric acid in each glassful. Thus will our days be prolonged, old age delayed, and health insured.—Dr. W. Kinnear, in The Humanitarian.

THE THREE WISE MEN.

SIGNIFICANCE OF THEIR PRESENCE IN BETHLEHEM AT THE TIME OF CHRIST'S BIRTH.

"IN the appearance of those men (the three wise men) in Bethlehem at the time of the birth of Jesus, there was something singularly significant," writes Rev. Amory H. Bradford, D. D., of "The First Christmas Present," in the December Ladies' Home Journal. "They represented the long aspiration and hunger of the nations. Something more than curiosity caused their journey. The Messianic expectation had pervaded the East and probably had much to do with their presence. The immediate occasion of their visit may have been the wish to pay reverence to earthly Royalty, but more probably it was inspired by what has been beautifully called 'the desire of all nations.' The ideals of the past had failed, and spiritual and prophetic souls among many peoples were looking for some new and better faith. The East, as well as the West, was without any rational religion, but the lives of men were as dreary and their hearts as hungry as ever. The ancient faith spasmodically revived, then flickered, and then died away. It was the end of the old and the beginning of a new dispensation in other lands than Judea. The longing for some new and brighter light on human life's mystery was intense and universal. The melancholy of 'the seekers after God,' like Epictitus and Marcus Aure-lius, was typical of a long-continued and widely prevailing sadness which was mixed with a dim yet prophetic anticipation. The wise men came out of nations from which in later times many were to do homage to Jesus as King in the realm of the Spirit. They were the precursors of the untold millions who were to find in him 'the desire of all nations,' as was prophesied by the prophet: 'And I will shake all nations, and the desire of all nations shall come.'"

SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

BRUSSELS, Nov. 24.—Prince Louis Napoleon and a number of the most prominent leaders of the Bonapartist movement in France are here in consultation with Prince Victor Napoleon, who resigned all claims to the throne of France in favor of his youngest brother. Many secret consultations have been held, principally upon the subject of raising funds for the cause.

Nearly all the participants are confident that the time is rapidly approaching when the French government can be overthrown by a coup.

It is reported that the conspirators have obtained a loan from Paris bankers, operating through Geneva agents, to the amount of $5,000,000.

Prince Louis will start back to St. Petersburg at once to resume his military duties as a Colonel in the Russian army.

Rome, Nov. 24.—The anti-anarchist conference was opened this afternoon in the Corisini Palace by Vice Admiral Canevaro, Minister of Foreign Affairs. All the European nations were represented.

In an address of welcome to the delegates on behalf of King Humbert Admiral Canevaro said he recognized the difficulties before the conference, but the universal recognition of the necessity for common action against the Anarchists presaged a happy issue. Admiral Canevaro was elected President.

It is expected that the conference will be prolonged until Christmas.

King Humbert, of Italy, "has largely invested in English consols and has much real property in America as security against revolution." Even monarchs themselves are reading the writing upon the wall.

"Uneasy lies the head that wears a crown."

London, Nov. 23.—Several local newspapers publish almost identical stories of the desperate and deliberate attempt to wreck the Czar's train on his last journey from Copenhagen to St. Petersburg. The miscreants piled a massive barricade at a point on the East Prussian railroad where the track passes over a small, rather low bridge. The wreck would have been complete, but the watchman discovered and removed the obstacles in the nick of time.

King Carlos, of Portugal, is in danger of losing his crown or his colonial possessions.

Don Carlos, the Spanish pretender, is said to be well equipped and ready for war.

Trouble between Norway and Sweden seems imminent.

DICTIONARY OF HIEROGLYPHICS.

FOUR of the great German universities are now at work on the preparation of an actual dictionary of the hieroglyphic languages of the ancient Egyptians. The hope is entertained that printing may begin in 1909. The meaning of a vast number of words has to be found from comparison of texts containing the words sought. By a system of exclusion a probable meaning may be reached for each word.

OLDEST SINGING MASTER IN THE WORLD.

The oldest singing master in the world is Manuel Garcia, who, at the ripe age of 94, still gives lessons in the art.

TARRING AND FEATHERING ONCE LEGAL.

"Tarring and feathering was once a legal punishment for theft. It is said to be found in the statutes of both England and France about the time of the Crusades."

THE STILL HOUR.

O Master, let me walk with thee
In lowly paths of service free;
Tell me thy secret: help me bear
The strain of toil, the fret of care;
Help me the slow of heart to move
By some clear, winning word of love;
Teach me the wayward feet to stay,
And guide them in the homeward way.

Patient, hopeful waiting is hard work when it is the only work possible to us in an emergency. But patient waiting is in its time the highest duty of a faithful soul.

CONDUCTED BY GRACELAND COLLEGE.

HOW MANY are going to reply to the appeal this week? How many branches are going to have a concert, entertainment, or dinner in aid of Graceland?

How many people find fault without occasion for the same? Do you? Yet some are found complaining that tithes and offerings are used for the college fund, notwithstanding the fact that at last conference, and recently, the Bishopric declared that not a dollar of those funds had been appropriated to the college. "Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbor." Let us hear no more of these fictitious rumors.

Graceland is vigorously prosecuting her mission. Propects are encouraging. Prospective students in January, from Dakota, California, Kentucky, and Alabama. Now Pennsylvania, Ohio, and Michigan, how many students are you going to send? Which is going to head the winter list of students, Missouri or Illinois?

Graceland is making a name for thoroughness of work; she is aiming at a high standard. The commercial course keeps developing. Collegiate, Normal and other departments are flourishing. It is rumored that a philosophical course will be introduced next session.

Professor Mills resumes duties on January 3, 1899. Musical Department, take notice! The Elocution Department is going to favor us with a public rehearsal, Thursday evening, November 25, in the college chapel. Quite an array of talent is anticipated.

The morning chapel exercises are considered quite interesting by many; they have a good effect upon the students.

Several Graceland students are taking quite an active part in church work.

Bro. Seigfried, of Illinois lately presented the College with several interesting geological and Indian mound specimens.

Who are going to help us build up a museum of Lamanite relics, wherein American archæology can be practically studied? Send on your discoveries, also appropriate maps, charts, pictures, and photographs; always mention location and time of discovery. We require BOOKS AND MAGAZINES, dealing with scientific, classical, philosophical, literary and historical matters. If you will send us books on American archæology, we will place them along with our Museum.

CRITICISM.

UNDER this head, Bro. D. F. Lambert, of the Independent Patriot, of Lamoni, has a fine editorial upon the subject of just and unjust criticism.

All public men, all movers upon the many-sided phases of human action, are subjects of criticism. And those things in which men employ their time, talents, and strength are made the subjects upon which the critics exercise their powers.

No honorable man who makes his action conform to his own convictions of right should fear intelligent criticism; indeed, he should not fear criticism of any sort; but the passing of an intelligent opinion upon himself or his methods should be listened to by him, and if found to be just upon an examination he should profit by the opinion expressed.

However, it is too often the case that much of the criticism which is passed upon men who by reason of their positions in the public eye are subjects to be criticised, is not of the kind to be called intelligent; therefore it cannot be just. Such criticism is hurtful, is difficult to endure; and no matter how strong in his conception of his own sense of right and purity of motive the man may be, he cannot help but feel keenly the sharpness of the critic's tongue or pen.

The ordinary citizen feels himself to be qualified to sit in judgment on the most of the wide range of human affairs which engage men's attention and to pass sound opinions regarding the conduct of them, whether the fellow citizen criticised be high or low, in the public or the private walks of life.

The editor of the Patriot takes good ground against improper criticism, and suggests what all must concede, that criticism to be of value and effective, must not be made except upon a knowledge of the thing, man or measure, to be criticised.

We commend the excerpt from the Patriot for November 17, which we give below, to the reading of the thoughtful patron of the HERALD, with the suggestion that the closing paragraph be read slowly, carefully, with a view to the self-examination referred to in it.

The Patriot is sorry to have the sad thought impressed again and again, that there is a disposition anywhere to discourage criticism. Instead it should be heartily and earnestly encouraged. The safety, defense, and spread of truth; the development of characters of eternally enduring material; the love of justice and right in their most enlightened form, are the natural outgrowth and product of just criticism. A people that persists in critically and justly examining all things with which they are connected, both men and principles, may be expected to stand for the right, and hence always resist the wrong; but a people who can be persuaded to close their eyes, cease to justly criticise either men or principles, or both, is in a favorable condition to be misled by ambitious and unrighteous men. Such a condition it is the duty of all to avoid.

But criticism to be valuable must be just. The carping croaker is a pest to any community. The very evils at which he strikes are aggravated by his own injustice.

But such unjust criticism can never be avoided by an equally unjust wholesale condemnation of all criticism. Such a course aggravates and spreads the disease, the cure of which it essays to perform. If hammering the tree laden with ripened seed, is a good way to prevent the spread of such seed, then continually hammering and scolding tattlers, backbiters, and critics generally, without any distinction as to the kind of criticism, is a good way to stop such work.

He who is strong in the consciousness that he is right, usually has neither need nor disposition to cry out against criticism, nor any fear of its consequences; hence such outcry only serves to create the fear, in the minds of those intelligent persons previously free therefrom, that probably there is something that needs to be guarded from a close examination.

Just criticism cannot be made without knowledge. Hence, he who desires to criticise justly and in no other way, will find upon a careful examination of himself as a rule, that the number of the things he criticises will be materially, and in the cases of many strikingly, reduced, and the character of the criticism touching others radically changed; all of which tends to the betterment of the critic, and the improvement of the conditions to which his attention is given. Criticism, therefore, properly indulged, will condemn that species of condemnation not based upon proper information, just as much as it will condemn the failure to condemn that which is proven wrong by competent and material evidence. It will lead to more careful research, to fuller information, to nicer discrimination, to a greater and keener love for the right. It will make better men, better women, better citizens. Indeed, it is the up-lifter of the race, the purifier of the world; and the brightest and most consoling hope held before all the race, is that at last, justice will be done to all, that is, just criticism or judgment, will be passed upon all.

GLENDENNING, "WHERE ART THOU?"

THE following is an extract from a clipping from the Adams County, Iowa, Argus, for November 17, 1898, sent us by Bro. W. E. Messenger, M. D.:

The Adams and Union counties Christian convention, which convened with the Church of Christ at Cromwell November 9 and 10, was one of unusual interest. The Church of Christ in Adams and Union counties numbers over 1,100. A majority of the churches were represented at the convention and the building was comfortably seated at each session. Great interest was manifested at both days' session. The first afternoon was occupied by the C. W. B. M. ladies, who gave a lively missionary program. Mrs. Ella Huffman, of Prescott, was to have given the leading address, but was not able to be present. At 7:30 p. m. of the 9th, W. B. Crewdson, of Corning, preached to a full house on "The Worthiness of the Christian Calling;" text, Ephesians 4:1. At the close of this impressive service the Rev. Mr. Glendenning, of the Advent Christian Church, was given the hand of fellowship and received into the Church of Christ. Elder Caudle, of Glenwood, was present and delivered a very able sermon. It was based on three questions: 1. "Where art thou?" (addressed to Adam); 2. "Where is thy brother?" (to Cain); 3. "Where is he that is born King of the Jews?" (the question of the wise men.) Thursday afternoon was given up to the Bible school and endeavor sessions. An interesting feature of the endeavor session was an address by Elder J. F. Snider, of Creston. This address dealt with the origin of the Endeavor movement and its power to unite the youthful hosts who rally under the banner of the cross.

The HERALD readers will remember that this Rev. Mr. Glendenning has held three public discussions with Bro. O. B. Thomas and one with Bro. Joseph R. Lambert. In addition to this the missionaries in charge of Iowa have now under advisement a proposition from Mr. Glendenning in which he offers to affirm in public discussion "that the Advent Christian Church is the Church of Christ."

Under these circumstances we think the subject of Elder Caudle following the reception of Mr. Glendenning into the Church of Christ was very appropriate: "Where art thou?"

OPPORTUNITIES AND MORAL AGENCY.

THANKSGIVING Day services were held in the saints' church, Lamoni, on Thursday, the 24th inst., in harmony with the spirit of the occasion and in accordance with the proclamation of the President and the Governor of the State. Bro. Heman C. Smith preached the sermon, which was instructive and timely.

The attendance was fair, but in the judgment of the writer not what it should have been; we think a larger number, all who could reasonably attend, should have been present and received the benefit of the opportunity to hear, to think upon and realize the benefits of the service. There is a "spirit of the occasion" that accompanies every good observance, of which all may receive and profit from. Those whose calling is unto life should partake of all educational privileges. Neglected, spiritual opportunities are to a degree lost sight of and inspiration leading to higher and added attainment is to an extent unrealized or insufficiently apprehended. Men and women and children are influenced largely by the conditions of this world's affairs. In addition to the earthly tendencies received through the transmission of mortal life, all are largely influenced and circumscribed by the low conditions of this world's affairs. Its demands and habits tend to keep the mind upon the passing things of time and sense, and which left to freely absorb the attention, would effectually hinder the development of the spiritual nature. It is therefore manifestly in the wisdom of our heavenly Father that he has made provision for the impress of the divine Spirit, and that spiritual and general opportunities be improved. As the impress of the earthly is constant, we seem to require as constant or more constant impression of the divine, if we are to grow into an apprehension and appreciation of higher things. For this reason no doubt, among others, the regular spiritual services of the Lord's house have been provided and his children admonished to neglect not their assembling together unto him. It is in the house of God that the peaceable things of the kingdom are more especially presented, impressed, and realized for the general good. All things have been done or provided in the wisdom of him whose work is to perfect humanity. We think it well therefore not to fail to avail ourselves of the means of development in which we shall find "more abundant" life and nearer approach to the divine character and presence of the Father and the Son.

In this connection appears another phase of the matter in contemplation; viz.: The children should also be brought to the regular and special services observed by the church. They should be brought to understand and appreciate the events and the spirit of each occasion that prompts the people of God or the nation to commemorate the leading features of our spiritual and general economy. The children of Zion are to be drawn to and become in fact "the children of the light," not the children of the world. If left untaught, unguided, undirected, uncontrolled, uninfluenced by their natural and spiritual guardians, contrary and illegitimate influences will operate to teach, to guide, to direct, to control, to influence and hold sway—to bring them into bondage to the darkness and folly of the spirit of the world.

What the church fails to do, what parents neglect, is seen and known by him "who reigns in the hearts of the children of disobedience;" and indifference to or positive dislike of all necessary restraining and educational influences connected with the spiritual life, is often the result, as all too many parents and observers know.

We have felt, to some degree at least, the spirit of our annual Thanksgiving Day, and have thought it well to present these general thoughts. The theme is not elaborated. What it suggests is far-reaching; we leave the fuller contemplation to those to whom a suggestion should be sufficient to awaken and deepen thought; to the spiritual-minded, who welcome every thought or intimation of good. Such study and seek to comprehend all phases of questions that apply or may apply to themselves, their children, or humanity in general. They are but partial students who hear only what others say. Independent individual personal thought should be given to all presentations or questions, that individual knowledge and discrimination be cultivated.

Finally, all advancement of the church, the race, of any, seems to be conditioned upon ability and willingness to know and apply the means by which development and progress are promised, realized, and maintained. The spiritual and secular history of all peoples teaches and emphasizes the truth that self-help, self-apprehension and personal doing comprise the only pathway and guarantee of success. God places before us means and opportunities and sets in motion and controls that which is beneficial to man; but it is a law of being that man must learn to discern and use through personal and general effort that which is essential to the attainment and preservation of his liberty—liberty from spiritual, moral, or other evils.

All development is from within and grows out of personal power to absorb, to make our own, and to act upon principles of truth. Though God provides, man must be responsive to receive and make use of the good within his reach. All human experience demonstrates the truth that liberty and progress are conditioned upon an intelligent use of personal and collective moral agency. For that reason, no doubt, the law of "common consent"—the voice of the people—has been included and made prominent in the statute law revealed to the church.

We need to study and to apply the principles of truth, as a church, and as a nation. We are also under obligation to teach them to our children. Let us not neglect our opportunities, our mission, our responsibilities to God and man. When we do our best,

God is pledged to give us success. Upon such conditions we are made heirs of his promises and power. There is so much to learn and so much to be done that we cannot afford to neglect any reasonable opportunity, even though it involve some sacrifice.

GOOD NEWS FROM WESTERN IOWA.

WE are in receipt of a letter from Bro. J. F. Mintun written from Mondamin, Iowa, November 22, giving an encouraging account of the condition of the work, and the prospects of a branch organization at that place soon. He and Bro. I. M. Smith were there when he wrote, having full houses and good interest. He inclosed the following clipping from a recent issue of the Harrison County News, published at Missouri Valley, Iowa, from the pen of Mr. Linus Bassett, an attorney and an old resident of Little Sioux, Iowa. As Mr. Bassett is not of our faith it will give the HERALD readers an idea of how the effect of Elder D. H. Bays' work is viewed from without:—

Since the debut of the Rev. D. H. Bays and his attack on the L. D. S. Church, the saints have rallied around their sacred standard and, firm in the faith, have been strengthened in every quarter. Their church never thrived better here, its membership increasing and the church strong and active. They have fitted up and painted their church building, purchased a building at Mondamin, and have an active membership. It would be a good thing for the church if the Rev. D. H. Bays was sent around every few years.

THE San Francisco Call, of November 7, published a special page report of interviews with leading churchmen on the subject of "the greatest problem of the church," in which we find the following from the pen of Bro. C. A. Parkin. We are pleased to note both the statement and the disposition to recognize the Reorganized Church and permit it to speak for itself instead of being misrepresented by those ignorant of or opposed to its faith:—

C. A. PARKIN, REORGANIZED CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST.

The greatest problem of the church is how to make people see Christ as he is, and realize the benefits that are to come to them for rendering complete obedience to the divine law as presented through him.

"God gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should be saved." He gave his Son to be a "witness," "leader," and "commander." The great problem is to teach people to recognize him "as he is." Paul said: "Beware, lest any man spoil you through philosophy and vain deceit after the traditions of men . . . and not after Christ."

The philosophy of men will not do as a means of pleasing God. God recognizes his own doctrine and not the doctrines of men.

"In vain do they worship me, teaching for doctrine the commandments of men." Notice, it is "vain" worship, invalid, void, without effect.

So many people admire Christ as a moralist and do not heed his teachings in regard to doctrine, when that is the all-important thing. "I know that my Father's commandments are life everlasting." "If any man will do his will he shall know of the doctrine." God gave his Son to be a "witness," and he told Pilate that he came into the world to "bear witness to the truth." To the Jews he said: "If ye continue in my word ye shall know the truth." "He that rejecteth me and receiveth not my words, hath one that judgeth him; the word that I have spoken . . . shall judge him in the last day." Peter gives us the key to understand scripture by, "No prophecy of the scripture is of any private interpretation." This is important. "He that believeth on me, as the scriptures hath said." How have they "said?" Why, that he is to be believed as a "witness," followed as a "leader," and obeyed as a "commander." "If any man will be my disciple let him take up his cross and follow me."

We all want the best in this world, but it is not within our reach, but it is in the next, by accepting Christ as God gave him to the world. The great problem then is to so present Christ to men that they may recognize that it is to their best and eternal interest to be his disciples "in deed."

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

BRO. F. C. KECK, Blendsville, Missouri, November 11:—

I have had unusual liberty in preaching and fine interest in all the places where I have been. I preached one hundred and four sermons in last quarter, so you can see I have not been idle. I have enjoyed the peaceful influence of the Spirit as I never have before. The work is onward in the Spring River district. I am having large congregations to listen to the restored gospel.

Bro. Henry Huston, Forest, Ontario, November 19:—

I herewith renew my subscription for the Saints' Herald, for we cannot do without it. It is more than eight years since we were baptized and we have taken the Herald ever since, excepting one year—the year in which we lost our house by fire. We live twenty-five miles from a branch, Petrolea branch being the one nearest us. It is not often we have the pleasure of meeting with the branch; it is seldom too that we have an elder with us. There are six of us here and we meet frequently and try to learn God's will and get encouragement to press onward toward the prize. We rejoice to hear of those who are being brought into the fold. We love to read the letters in the Herald, especially from the brothers and sisters whom we know.

Bro. D. W. Wight, Provo, Utah, November 2:—

Baptized five yesterday.

Bro. G. J. Waller wrote from Honolulu, November 17, closing his letter with this item of interest:—

Bro. James Kelley (51st Iowa), is here at present; was at our services yesterday; says he enjoyed them and was surprised with some of the natives. He was also out to dinner and to-day Mrs. Waller is driving him around and showing him the views in and around Honolulu. His mother and other relatives will no doubt be pleased to hear this. He saw Bro. Greene in San Francisco; we expect him Wednesday, this week.

Bro. Waller has published the Book of Mormon in Hawaiian. Particulars next week.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

SR. ELLA F. RICH, now employed in Bliss Business Institute, Rome, New York, as instructor in shorthand and typewriting, has been secured as instructor in those studies in Graceland College, to begin with the winter term, January 2 next. Miss Rich is a competent instructor in every respect, and students wishing to take up the branches named will have first-class opportunities so to do. She teaches the Pitman-Dement system of stenography, recognized as one of if not the most generally approved systems in the country. With Prof. J. A. Gunsolley and Miss Rich on the teaching staff the commercial department of Graceland offers inviting facilities to commercial students.

Elders in that part of the field are requested to call on Bro. Eber Hawley, at San Pasqual, San Diego County, California. Bro. Hawley is isolated from a branch, in an Adventist neighborhood. He thinks a hearing would be given the elders.

Mr. John Farley, accompanied by his brother James, engaged in the copper mines, at Bisbee, Arizona, visited Lamoni and was baptized into the church on Thanksgiving Day. The brethren return to the west and carry the spirit of the gospel with them.

Bro. G. W. Edwards, of Philadelphia, writes hopefully of the outlook locally, judging from the number of active young people who are taking up the work. He commends a number by name, for their efforts in the Religio and the Sunday school cause.

For the past week Lamoni with much of the middle western region of country has been clothed in a garb of snow and ice. Early in the week a storm of snow and sleet encased the surface of the ground—including buildings, trees, and shrubbery—in a heavy coating of ice; clear as crystal, chaste as purity itself; sparkling like diamonds and other precious gems as the rays of sun and moon brought out the various colors of ruby, sapphire, amethyst, and emerald. The garb of whiteness and crystal emitting scintillations of light and beauty as beams of sun or moon brought out its prismatic colors, suggested the city of God, the New Jerusalem, the place of the redeemed of the Lord—the beauty of her adornments, the light and grandeur of her people, in whom God's Spirit shall dwell in fullness to glorify and illuminate, as described by the Seer of Patmos. It is written of that holy city that "there shall in no wise enter into it anything that defileth, . . . but they which are written in the Lamb's book of life." Though the forces of Nature fall heavily upon earth in storm and cold, yet they bring blessings of health and good manifold, and from which we may learn of Him who smiles upon our earth, though storm clouds hover about it, and dissipates its gloom. In the severer and dreaded aspects of trial incident to earth-life we meet experiences that should serve to develop appreciation of the good God gives us here, and to rejoice in hope of the greater blessings of the future life. May Zion in due time be arrayed in the purity and beauty suggested by the adornment in which Nature has recently enrobed her. It is "the pure in heart" who are "blessed" to "see God." May the lessons taught by his works in Nature be seen and recognized, as in the message of his written word, and from all may we learn to know God and out of that knowledge to imitate the divine character revealed in our Lord.

By recent letters from Bro. J. C. Clapp, we learn that the mob, fourteen in number, which recently waited upon and threatened himself and Bro. Little, near Lexington, Tennessee, have been indicted. For the safety of the brethren, the peace of the community, and as a needed lesson to the parties themselves, we trust that justice, though seemingly harsh, may be administered to each one.

Bro. J. W. Smith, president of Shelton branch, Nebraska, informs us under date of November 22, that he has recently baptized five at that place. This makes fourteen additions to this young branch in less than a year. There is urgent demand there for labor and the saints of Shelton branch are ready to render assistance as they may be able. We trust that some of the missionary force may be able to occupy there soon, as the time seems opportune.

Bro. Edward C. Bell, son of Elder T. J. Bell of the missionary force, and who for some years past has been stenographer to Bishop Kelley, left Lamoni on the 26th for St. Louis, where he has accepted a similar position in a railroad office. May success attend him.

Bishop E. L. Kelley went to Carson, Iowa, during the week to attend conference of the Pottawattamie district, the 25th and 26th.

Some letters and other matter already in type are held over till next week because of unexpected demands upon our space—report of Graceland College subscriptions, etc.

Bro. A. B. Pierce, of Attleboro, Massachusetts, writes that several local brethren comprising a vocal quartet are giving concerts for the benefit of Graceland College. Their efforts to aid the college work are commendable.

Bro. E. R. Dewsnup, of Graceland College, visited St. Joseph and Independence, Missouri, from the 25th to the 28th, visiting the branches in those cities in the interests of Graceland.

South Dakota is the first State in the United States to adopt the initiative and referendum, which it did at the late election. "Under the provisions of the new law if any law is passed by the Legislature objectionable to the people, a petition may be circulated and if five per cent of the voters sign it the act must be submitted to the people for ratification before it is spread on the statutes."

The annual report of the Secretary of the Interior shows that the Indians have made substantial progress during the year.

True Succession in Church Presidency.

THIS is a book just issued by the Board of Publication of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, from the pen of Elder Heman C. Smith, Church Historian. It is a complete answer to and refutation of Elder B. H. Roberts on "Succession in the Presidency of the Church," and to Elder C. W. Penrose on "Priesthood and Presidency." It follows Mr. Roberts closely and points out his false statements, misrepresentations, historical inaccuracies, illogical arguments, and untenable interpretations; while answering Mr. Penrose directly and incidentally.

It also takes into account the official acts and teachings of Brigham Young and his associates from June, 1844, to the present, showing conclusively that they departed from the faith, and taught immorality and criminality.

The work of the Reorganization is also presented from an affirmative standpoint, and her standing as the acknowledged Church of Jesus Christ is clearly maintained and the authority of her priesthood and presidency convincingly defended and conclusively established.

There has long been a demand for this work, in consequence of the Utah missionaries having used the book of Mr. Roberts, wherever their ministry have operated. This book in the hands of all who desire the truth will be effectual against the influence of their sophistry.

It will make a book of about 160 pages and will be sold at the lowest possible price, as we are more interested in the circulation of the work than in the profit derived from its sale.

Bound in neat paper covers. 35 cents each.

Church History, Volumes 1 and 2,

BY PRESIDENT JOSEPH SMITH, AND APOSTLE HEMAN C. SMITH.

THIS work is the most authentic and complete history of the church ever published. No effort has been spared to obtain information from every reliable source, and the information thus obtained has been impartially presented. It is therefore indispensable, not only to the membership of the church, but to all interested in obtaining reliable information concerning the thrilling events preceding and leading to the organization as well as the history of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, which has attracted the attention of the world.

These two volumes cover a period of time including the events we have mention up to the death of the martyrs, Joseph and Hyrum Smith, June 27, 1844. These volumes contain a compilation of important and official documents never before published in so concise a form, many of which have been so rare and difficult to obtain that the public has not had access to them.

It is contemplated to publish a third volume by the same authors, containing the important and critical events transpiring after the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, so soon as the sale of volumes 1 and 2 will justify. This will be the most interesting of all because it will contain the history of events from which issues arose that have resulted in rival organizations among Latter Day Saints. It will trace so clearly the causes leading to the great apostasy represented in Utah, that all who read can locate the responsibility for the result with unerring accuracy.

You cannot afford to do without this work, so if these volumes, or either of them, are not in your library, send us your order for volumes 1 and 2 at once. You could not make a more profitable present to a friend.

Price, $1.50, $2.00, and $2.50 per volume.
Address orders to FRANK CRILEY, LAMONI, DECATUR CO., IOWA.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

"Help me love my neighbor
As thou lovedst me;
Help me share his labor
In thy sympathy.
Let thy Spirit only
All my footsteps bend
To the faint and lonely,
For thy sake, a friend."

BAZINE, Kan.

Dear Sisters:—It is some time since I wrote to the Home Column, and as I sat meditating and comparing past with present, I was greatly impressed to drop a few lines, hoping they may encourage some isolated one. We were isolated and alone, for nineteen years without the companionship of saints, and being forty miles from our branch we oftentimes became discouraged. But we have prayed earnestly that our neighbors might hear and have the privilege of obeying the gospel.

About June 27, Bro. Pender put in an appearance with the gospel tent, at Bazine. He held services one week, when Bro. Mannering came to assist him. Services continued two weeks longer. They then removed the tent to Ness City. Bro. Pender left an appointment for every two weeks as long as he remained in this part of the country. He was assisted a few times by Brn. Mannering and Lund. The result was the baptizing of seventeen persons, which makes our hearts rejoice with praise and thanksgiving to our Father above. But withal our hearts are made sad, and the tear comes unbidden, for last Sunday we parted with Bro. Pender.

We meet next Sunday to organize a Sunday school and prayer meeting; but Bro. Pender will not be there to cheer us by his kind words of wisdom and cheer. He is greatly respected and loved by many here. He baptized some that were convinced about four years ago by the preaching of Bro. Brown. There are others believing who have not obeyed. May the Spirit of the Master attend Bro. Pender in his mission of love. We patiently wait the return of Bro. Mannering. Pray for us, as I fear there are severe trials for some here that have lately obeyed. My pen is too feeble to express the great joy and thanksgiving which we feel. May God bless and comfort his children, especially the isolated ones is my prayer.

Your sister,

CLARA M. EBERT.

P. S.—August 25. Our school was organized last Sunday; the prospect is good.

GIVE ME THE BABY.

Give me the baby to hold, my dear—
To hold and hug and to love and kiss;
Ah, he will come to me, never a fear—
Come to the nest of a breast like this,
As warm for him as his face with cheer.
Give me the baby to hold, my dear.

Trustfully yield him to my caress;
"Bother," you say. What! A bother to me?

To fill up my soul with such happiness
As the love of a baby that laughs to be Snuggled away where my heart can hear!
Give me the baby to hold, my dear.

Ah, but his hands are grimed, you say,
And would soil my laces and clutch my hair.

Well, what would pleasure me more, I pray,
Than the touch and the tug of the wee hands there—

The wee hands there, and the warm face here?

Give me the baby to hold, my dear.

Give me the baby? O, won't you see?

Somewhere out where the green of the lawn

Is turning to gray, and the maple tree
Is weeping its leaves of gold upon
A little mound, with its dead rose near,
Give me the baby to hold, my dear.

—James Whitcomb Riley.

THE MAN IN HIS HOME.

THE seclusion of a home gives to a man a certain freedom and attendant privileges which no other place in the world affords, and it is right that it should. But it is not right that this freedom and those privileges should be abused to the disadvantage of the wife. Too many men seem to have the idea that they can drop into constant disconsolate and churlish moods at home with their wives, which in any other place and by any other person would not be tolerated. It is when a man is within the walls of his home that he is himself. Then it is that he should be at his best. When a man gives the best that is within him to those closest to him, his home will be the ideal place that he wishes it to be. No man has a right to expect from his wife what he on his part does not give her. If he wants her sympathy he must give her his consideration. If a man lacks the element of consideration he should cultivate it, and cultivate it not for the benefit of his friends but for those in and of his home. Consideration should begin at home; not in the homes of friends, as it so often does—and ends there, too. The atmosphere which a man creates in his home by example becomes the rule by which his children live. The husband and father strikes the keynote for right or wrong living.—Ladies' Home Journal.

LYDNEY, Eng., Nov. 9.

Editors Herald:—Since last writing you our district conference has convened in Cardiff, Wales, of which no doubt you have received items ere this. I was among the number who were privileged to be present and can assure you it was a good spiritual feast for all. Our worthy mission president was in charge, Bro. Pitt, and in the 2:30 prayer and testimony meeting a brother was confirmed who has been an elder in the Utah Church. For the benefit of your Brighamite friends it gives me pleasure to inform you that six more of their number are now convinced that the Reorganization is the accepted Church of God, and they are now ready to be immersed in Jordan's stream. Outsiders are also investigating and I believe a good work will be done in the city of Cardiff. Bro. Pitt continues his labors there and we have every confidence that through his ministrations the marvelous work and a wonder will flourish.

The work of our God is making sure progress in England, and if the saints will hearken diligently to the law of God I verily believe the time will soon come when there will no longer be use for many of the sectarian places of worship which are now so plentiful here.

The Lydney branch has not increased in number of late, but the faithful few are coming up to a higher standard, and although we don't get many outsiders into our assemblies, we give them food for thought, and no doubt they talk about us. Trusting that the day is near at hand when more branches will be added to the great vine in this district, and that the Lord will call more laborers into the vineyard I remain as ever,

Your brother in Zion's cause,

H. ELLIS.

"Oh! 'tis pleasant—'tis reviving
To our hearts to hear each day,
Joyful news from far arriving,
How the gospel wins its way."

PAPEETE, Tahiti, Oct. 11.

Editors Herald:—Our Gospel Quarterlies are finished, and the binder is putting them in paper covers. In them there are twenty lessons which have been arranged from the Quarterlies of 1894, and five which I have arranged upon the subject of the two covenants.

We will now resume our work on Te Orometua (The Teacher).

On the 18th inst. we expect to leave here for a two months' visit to Anaa, as some time has elapsed since a white missionary visited that island.

Elder Grouard was the first missionary of our church who visited them. He went there early in 1845 and reported about four thousand inhabitants on that island. There are about six hundred there now, and many of them are Catholic.

By letters from our missionaries, Elders Kehauri and Tuteirhia, we learn that they have baptized twenty or more persons in Raiatea and Huahine, and have organized a branch at the village of Opoa, in Raiatea, and are building a chapel on a piece of land that one of the new converts has given to the church for that purpose.

A young woman in Rairoa who was a leper, was ordered out of the village by the government officials. She was to live separate from all her relatives and friends until death should release her bright spirit from the body, so afflicted with that dreadful and loathsome disease. She is a member of the church. The saints sympathized with her, and the branch appointed a day of fasting and prayer, and the blessed Jesus who said ages ago to the leper, "Be thou clean," also cleansed this woman of her leprosy, and caused much joy to her and all the saints. Praise God from whom all our healings come.

I was very much blessed and aided by the Holy Spirit on Sunday in preaching to the saints here. They said to me, "You made us feel very happy, and very sorry; for you showed us plainly the glory of all who are saved, and you also showed us that we are not living as we ought to receive that glory."

Who is coming to help us?

Peace be with all the Israel of God.

JOSEPH F. BURTON.

GREENVILLE, Conn., Nov. 17.

Editors Herald:—I wrote you last from Attleboro, Massachusetts, in September. Our tent services at the above place, I believe, resulted in good to the work, although no baptisms can be reported. By the way, baptisms are the exception and not the rule in our beautiful eastern country. Of course I do not mean that none are being baptized, because at Boston, Plainville, Providence, and other branches the local authorities have done some baptizing, and the work looks bright for a steady increase in the future if all do their duty.

From Attleboro we went to West Mansfield and began to preach in the tent, but after holding four services we obtained the Union church and began services there, the change from tent to church being necessary on account of cold weather. We continued preaching until September 18, then went to Mansfield to see about opening the work. Bro. Bullard remained at Mansfield to make arrangements, and I went to Providence. Sunday afternoon I preached at West Mansfield and at Mansfield at night.

I ought to mention the kindness of the good brethren at West Mansfield, as they did all in their power for our comfort, and in fact everywhere we went the saints were good. May the Lord bless them all. Bro. Bond joined the writer at Mansfield and we preached, mostly to ourselves however.

Sunday, October 2, found me at Fiskville, Rhode Island, in afternoon and at Providence in the evening. Saturday, the 8th, went to Fall River to attend the district conference, accounts of which you have had already. The 14th found me in Boston, where I met the district president and spent a few hours in looking over the wonders of the Mechanic's Fair (complimentary tickets). Attended the prayer meeting at Arlington in the evening and had the pleasure of meeting Bro. Greene, our missionary to Uncle Sam's new possession. Went to Haverhill next day and began meetings there, but interest not being good, did not stay long. There is a time, I presume, to reach every place, and God knows the time and the place. There is one thing I am always sure of: whenever I go to Haverhill—or perhaps I ought to say two things—one is a welcome from the saints and the other is not so welcome; namely, a cold. The one I got while there last, sticketh closer than a brother, and I have it yet.

This writing finds me on "Zion's Hill," from whose lofty height I view the surrounding country, not quite monarch of all I survey; in fact my possessions at the present time are confined to a Congregationalist church known as the Long Society, about two miles from Norwich, Connecticut. I have an audience, fair in quantity, good in quality, and interested withal. I am sojourning with saints, the only ones in this end of the State, and three families live in the same house. I can eat breakfast with one, dinner with another, and supper with another. Bro. Arthur Phillips is assisting me in the services at the church. I do not know what the result will be, but am hopeful.

Yesterday afternoon Bro. Phillips and the writer attended the two-hundredth anniversary of the Congregationalist society at Preston City. Oratorical eloquence, a crowded church, beautiful songs, a written prayer (somehow that written prayer seems to stick by me—not that I remember the words or the sentiment, but the fact of its being written), old age, youth and beauty, flowers and music; yes, it was nice, especially the singing—but then that prayer.

Well, good day,

GEO. W. ROBLEY.

SHENANDOAH, Iowa, Nov. 12.

Editors Herald:—We were at the reunion at Woodbine five days; all seemed to enjoy themselves hugely; preaching was excellent; prayer meetings good; Sunday school work hard to be excelled. We visited a short time with the dear saints of the Galland's Grove branch; preached four times; some of those old-time warriors and soldiers of the cross are still strong in the faith and pressing toward the mark of their high calling as best they know.

Spent one week with the saints at Crescent, and had excellent liberty in breaking the bread of life to the saints and friends, and rejoiced with them as in days of yore. They seem to be alive to the interests of the work.

From there we passed on to Council Bluffs and put in two Sundays and one week, preaching and visiting the saints of that branch, some of whom we learned to love and greatly respect over thirty years ago, when with them we struggled together to hold the banner of King Immanuel. We felt satisfied with the effort put forth. We were gladly received, kindly treated, and sent on our way rejoicing. May God bless the dear ones there and help them to triumph over every opposing power and be strengthened with might in the inner man to do the Master's will.

Our conference held with the saints of the Thurman branch, also Sunday school convention, commencing October 27 and ending the 30th, was a joyous time. The business was done in the unity of the Spirit. Preaching under the power of God and in much assurance, by Bishop Hilliard and I. M. Smith. Bro. Smith went out to Hamburg to dispense the word of life. He is the right man in the right place, laboring where the wisdom of the Spirit may dictate, to the best of his ability, and satisfactorily to all, both members and nonmembers. I stayed with Bro. Hilliard, assisting him at Plum Hollow, McPaul, and in the Tabor branch during the following week. On Saturday, November 4, he went to Shenandoah, where he put in five more of his rousing, practical sermons with telling effect. All were stirred up to a sense of duty. He passed on to the Nodaway district, and the writer to Riverton and Hamburg, in the interest of the work. Shall tarry here over Sunday, and on Monday, the 16th inst., go to Bartlett to meet Bro. I. M. Smith, where we anticipate holding a series of meetings.

We pray that the blessing of the Master may attend the labors of all his ministering servants to the salvation of many souls.

Yours in the faith,

HENRY KEMP.

BROWNVILLE, Neb., Nov. 21.

Editors Herald:—Arrangements were made for me to meet Rev. J. Anderson, of the "Christian Church," at Brownville, Nebraska, October 24, in public debate, to examine the following propositions:—

"Is the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in harmony with the teachings of Christ and his apostles in faith, doctrine, organization, and practice?" W. E. Peak, affirmative; J. Anderson, negative.

"Is the Church of Christ, commonly known as the Christian Church, in harmony with the teaching of Christ and his apostles, in faith, doctrine, organization, and practice?" J. Anderson, affirmative; W. E. Peak, negative.

We began according to agreement and devoted six sessions to each proposition. The interest was good and the attendance large from the beginning. I felt well in presenting and defending our positions. It was readily perceived that we had but few sympathizers or friends in the audience at first, but we gained from the start, till at the close of the twelve sessions it was clearly demonstrated that far the majority of that vast crowd was in our favor. This was shown during some parleying which took place after the closing speeches, when I challenged any minister of their church to meet me in debate on the same propositions anywhere in my mission. In a reply to this the members of the Christian Church cheered their man, and my reply brought cheers from the other side of the house. This was kept up till all seemingly cheered one side or the other.

Rev. Anderson is not posted, neither is he a debater; but he had a good supply of comic stories and by contorted features and hideous grins he succeeded in amusing—especially the boys—for awhile. But intelligent thinking people soon tired of such apish actions, as the following from the Granger, a county paper will show:—

"The debate is still on, the last session of the twelve to close Thursday. As we said last week, the gentlemen are both able men and good talkers, but we cannot add, fair in their arguments; or, rather, we will say that one of them is unfair. Elder Anderson, who represents the Christian people in debate, is a man possibly fifty years old, and is a fluent and rapid talker, and has up to this time of writing met his opponent only with ridicule and comic faces calculated to shift the drift and serious thought of his audience from any special biblical point his opponent had made. Although not in sympathy with Elder Peak's religious views, we can say this in his favor, that what to him must have been a trying ordeal, his deportment has been that of a Christian gentleman throughout it all. He is a young man not to exceed thirty-two or three years with a finely shaped head [here the words are blotted for three or four lines as it is at the bottom of the column] shall say nothing of the religious views of either. We believe that every man has a right to his own doctrine, whether it seems right or wrong to us."

The following appeared in the Brownville Sun, from the editor, and was copied in the Nemaha County Herald: "The religious debate closed Thursday evening, a large crowd listening to the closing arguments by Elders Peak and Anderson. The debate has been quite interesting, each gentleman holding up his side of the argument to the best of his ability, but unprejudiced observers are inclined to think that Brother Anderson bit off a little more than he could conveniently chew when he tackled Brother Peak. This is not saying Brother Peak had the best side to talk on, at all. But after all, what good was accomplished? Did either brother make any converts to the cause he represented? Were any souls drawn nearer to Christ? Did anyone resolve to lead a better life as a result of the debate? On the contrary, hasn't there been considerable bitterness and ill-feelings engendered between members of the rival denominations? On the whole, isn't a preacher in mighty poor business when he engages in a 'religious' debate? If I were the Devil, we'd encourage them. At the close of the debate, Elder Peak challenged any minister of the Christian Church to a debate on the same propositions, anywhere in Southeastern Nebraska, any time between now and April 1, 1900, and Elder Anderson accepted the challenge."

The challenge to Elder Anderson direct was to meet in Auburn, Nebraska, in December; but he could not do this for several reasons. As to the good the debate has done I am satisfied it has been quite a help to us. We made a host of friends and our positions are better understood and much prejudice is removed. The saints were edified and greatly built up in the "most holy faith," while the writer sees another evidence to prove the truthfulness of the statement, "No weapon that is formed against thee shall prosper." I was hoarse when I began the discussion, having been preaching in a tent. While it bothered me some, I was enabled to go through all right, but concluded I had better go home and rest for a few days. I left on the 5th inst. and returned on the 17th and began a series of meetings. When the editor was requested to announce my return he did so in the following notice:—

"Elder W. E. Peak, the nice little preacher who made many friends while here, left for his home in Netawaka, Kansas. He will return November 17, and commence a series of meetings in the Latter Day Saints' church here. His appointments for Saturday evening and Sunday will be filled by Elder Cushman."

My meetings, since my return, have been better attended than before, and by some who never attended before. The M. E. minister's wife attended my meeting last night and heartily indorsed my sermon on "The work of the Holy Spirit in the church." I do not desire from this that the brethren should conclude that I am apostatizing. For I assure you I presented our views straight. The few saints here are striving to keep the light of truth shining, in a commendable way. May God bless their efforts and his work in every clime.

Yours in gospel bonds,

W. E. PEAK.

FT. BIDWELL, Cal., Nov. 16.

Editors Herald:—Bro. F. B. Blair and I came to this place August 11. We held a series of between forty and fifty meetings and baptized fifteen. Since then one of us, most of the time Bro. Blair, has preached on Saturday and Sunday evenings, the other being engaged in Warner Valley, Oregon, assisted by the former during the week. We have also held a prayer meeting here every Thursday night. The valley mentioned is only twenty-three miles from here but is in another State. Nevertheless, we occupied at two points therein. Brn. Holt and Chase cannot any more say there are only two missionaries in that State.

Just before we came here we held a few meetings at Lake City, California, a little town near by. While there the Baptists asked me if I would meet their favorite preacher, one Elder Simmons, in debate. I consented. Propositions were also presented which I accepted, but when their preacher was consulted he suggested other propositions and wanted the debate held here. I agreed to his desire in regard to place, also to his propositions, which are as follows:—

1. The church with which I stand identified, known as the Landmark Baptist Church, is the church organized by Jesus Christ, and has never lost its identity or succession; and its preachers are scripturally qualified administrators of the ordinances of the Lord's house to the exclusion of all others. T. J. Simmons, aff., A. C. Barmore, neg.

2. The church with which I stand identified, known as the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, is the Church of Jesus Christ and came into existence through one of the Lord's prophets, Joseph Smith. A. C. Barmore, aff., T. J. Simmons, neg.

The propositions as given above are not exactly as he wrote them, for I had to correct the wording. We agreed upon eight evening sessions, four for each proposition, each session to consist of four alternate half-hour speeches. The reader can easily see that I was limited as to time.

The discussion began the evening of the 7th inst., and closed the evening of the 14th. Instead of identifying his church with the church of the New Testament, my opponent started out with the assumption that the church Christ organized has been perpetuated, and then merely asserted repeatedly that the Landmark Baptist Church is that church. Anyone can easily see that my proposition requires that I show first that the church I represent is identical with the church of the first century, and second that Joseph Smith was inspired of God to give it origin. He objected to the way I started out on my affirmative, claiming that Joseph Smith's prophetic mission was the only question at issue. Our chairman ruled in my favor, but he didn't regard the decision. On the second night he stated, "He is trying to conceal his prophet." Notwithstanding this he never tried to answer but two of my arguments on the second part of my proposition. He objected to my application of the parable of Matthew 20:1-16 upon the plea that the hours were too long, but failed to sustain his position. He put off his answer to my argument on Revelation 14:6, 7 until his last speech. His effort in trying to meet it involved new matter and the chairman ruled him out of order. I consented to its introduction if he would let me answer, which he would not do.

Elder Simmons is not a debater, but does tolerably well as a quibbler. He relies upon rant, bombast, and misrepresentation instead of sound argument. He has like every other man his class, and would do fairly well among the people who inhabit the backwoods of Missouri, Indiana, Arkansas, or Tennessee, and succeeds elsewhere just to the extent that class of people is represented in his audience. The discussion will be repeated at Lake City but they object to more than four evenings for both questions. The time is, I think, too short; but I suppose I'll have to agree to it.

Bro. B. and I are expecting the arrival of Bro. T. W. Chatburn any time. All goes well.

In bonds,

ALMA C. BARMORE.

True Succession in Church Presidency.

CHAPTER 8.

MR. ROBERTS opens his eighth chapter as follows:—

LET us now proceed to the proof that Joseph Smith, the prophet, did not take the keys of authority with him from the church, when he fell a martyr to the truth, but that said keys of authority remained with the church, more especially with the quorum of the Twelve.

On March 8th, 1833, the Lord said to Joseph Smith:

Verily, I say unto you, the keys of this kingdom shall never be taken from you, while thou art in the world, neither in the world to come; nevertheless, through you shall the oracles be given unto another; yea, even to the church!

Joseph and Hyrum, then, did not take with them the "oracles" of God necessary to make the church efficient in accomplishing the work that God designed it to perform. Though the keys given to the prophet were never to be taken from him, either in this world or that which is to come—though for ever he is to stand as the President of the great dispensation of the fullness of times—yet the keys of authority and power committed to his hands may be given to another, "even to the church," not to his posterity, mark you.

This revelation makes it easy to believe that there was inspiration in the declaration of Brigham Young, uttered when he heard for the first time of the martyrdom of Joseph and Hyrum. He was at Peterboro, N. H., when the sad intelligence reached him:—

The first thing that I thought of was whether Joseph had taken the keys of the kingdom with him from the earth. Brother Orson Pratt sat on my left, we were both leaning back in our chairs. Bringing my hand down on my knee, I said, the keys of the kingdom are right here with the church.—Roberts, pp. 93, 94.

Why Mr. Roberts should be anxious to prove the negative of that which we have not affirmed, we do not know; but we have not affirmed that Joseph took the keys of authority with him from the church.

Mr. Roberts' explanation of the above quotation is not very clear, but he evidently confounds the words "keys" and "oracles," making them to have the same meaning. This is evidently erroneous. We give the definitions of the two words as defined by Webster:—

Key:—

1. An instrument by means of which the bolt of a lock is shot or drawn; usually, a removable metal instrument fitted to the mechanism of a particular lock and operated by turning in its place.
2. An instrument which is turned like a key in fastening or adjusting any mechanism; as, a watch key; a bed key, etc.
3. That part of an instrument or machine which serves as the means of operating it; as, a telegraph key; the keys of a pianoforte, or of a typewriter.
4. A position or condition which affords entrance, control, or possession, etc.; as, the key of a line of defense; the key of a country; the key of a political situation. Hence, that which serves to unlock, open, discover, or solve something unknown or difficult; as, the key to a riddle; the key to a problem.

Those who are accustomed to reason have got the true key of books.

Who keeps the keys of all the creeds. Tennyson.

5. That part of a mechanism which serves to lock up, make fast, or adjust to position.

Power of the keys (Ecc.), the authority claimed by the ministry in some Christian churches to administer the discipline of the church, and to grant or withhold its privileges:—so called from the declaration of Christ, "I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven." Matt. xvi. 19.

Oracle:—

1. The answer of a god, or some person reputed to be a god, to an inquiry respecting some affair or future event, as the success of an enterprise or battle.

Whatso'er she saith, for oracles must stand. Drayton.

2. Hence: The deity who was supposed to give the answer; also, the place where it was given.

The oracles are dumb;
No voice or hideous hum

Runs through the arched roof in words deceiving. Milton.

3. The communications, revelations, or messages delivered by God to the prophets; also, the entire sacred Scriptures—usually in the plural.

The first principles of the oracles of God. Heb. v. 12.

4. (Jewish Antiq.) The sanctuary, or Most Holy place in the temple; also, the temple itself. 1 Kings vi. 19.

Siloa's brook, that flow'd
Fast by the oracle of God. Milton.

5. One who communicates a divine command; an angel; a prophet.

God hath now sent his living oracle
Into the world to teach his final will. Milton.

6. Any person reputed uncommonly wise; one whose decisions are regarded as of great authority; as, a literary oracle. "Oracles of mode." Tennyson.

The country rectors . . . thought him an oracle on points of learning. Macaulay.

7. A wise sentence or decision of great authority.

A careful inspection will convince the reader that no amount of straining will under any circumstances give them an equivalent meaning. A key is an instrument by which a person unlocks, while an oracle is that which is obtained by the unlocking; or in some cases may be applied to the person who uses the key. The above passage being figurative, the "keys" evidently represent the authority, while the "oracles" mean the revelations of God received by him who holds the keys, and is to be understood in the same sense as the following:—

I give unto you my servant Joseph, to be a presiding elder over all my church, to be a translator, a revelator, a seer, and prophet. I give unto him for counselors my servant Sidney Rigdon and my servant William Law, that these may constitute a quorum and first presidency, to receive the oracles for the whole church.—Doc. and Cov. 107:39.

The evident meaning, then, of the passage in question is that Joseph held the authority to receive revelation and that through him the revelations thus received were to be given to the church. However, if we grant that the word "oracles" in this passage is to be applied to the persons who deliver the revelations of God to the people, then it follows from the language, "through you shall the oracles be given to another; yea, even unto the church," that Joseph Smith was to appoint his successor and through him his successor was to be presented to the church, thus sustaining our contention that Joseph Smith was to appoint his successor.

Further, if we were to admit Mr. Roberts' claim, illogical and untenable as it is, that "oracles" and "keys" are synonymous, and that the word "oracles" in this revelation refers to the keys of authority delivered to the Twelve, still the issue between us is not settled; for that part of the paragraph which Mr. Roberts does not quote administers a solemn warning unto those who "receive the oracles of God." It reads as follows:—

And all they who receive the oracles of God, let them beware how they hold them, lest they are accounted as a light thing, and are brought under condemnation thereby; and stumble and fall, when the storms descend, and the winds blow, and the rains descend, and beat upon their house.—Doc. and Cov. 87:2.

Then, whatever the "oracles" may be, God's approval of those receiving them depends upon how they hold them. So that in any event, and upon the basis of any interpretation, the issue still rests upon what was done, and how it was done. We propose to hold these gentlemen to this issue and to demand that they answer for their acts.

Mr. Roberts next introduces the revelation of P. P. Pratt, which we have noticed on page 75; but there is nothing in it to help his case. As we have shown, there are two points in it that are against the people he represents; viz.: the necessity of reorganization, and the discouragement plainly given to fleeing into the wilderness and desert. The only comfort he can possibly get out of it is that the Twelve are recognized, and the reorganization was to be postponed until they returned. This we do not object to. We think they should have been respected and their proper authority recognized, and that it would have been decidedly improper to take any steps towards a reorganization before their return; but this does not carry with it the approval of what they did after their return.

After some immaterial wanderings Mr. Roberts approaches the point as follows:—

It now remains for me to prove that the prophet Joseph did give the "oracles to another"—and that they remained with the church.

On the 7th of August, 1844, at a meeting of the Twelve Apostles, high council of the Nauvoo stake, and high priests, held in the Seventies' Hall, in a speech following one made by Sidney Rigdon, Brigham Young, speaking of the Twelve, said:

Joseph conferred upon our heads all the keys and powers belonging to the apostleship which he himself held before he was taken away, and no man or set of men can get between Joseph and the Twelve in this world or the world to come. How often has Joseph said to the Twelve, "I have laid the foundation and you must build thereon, for upon your shoulders the kingdom rests."

Upon this statement of Brigham Young, quoted from the doubtful authority of Millennial Star, volume 25, and supposedly supported by the testimony of others, Mr. Roberts bases his case that Joseph Smith conferred all the keys held by himself upon the Twelve. If such an occurrence ever transpired it is impossible to determine by the testimony of the witnesses just what Joseph did say on the occasion. Evidently they do not remember, as no two of them give the same words, and where any one of them speaks twice he fails to reproduce the same language.

That the reader may compare them we reproduce such of them as we have at hand. We have one above from Brigham Young; here is another:—

Joseph told the Twelve, the year before he died, "there is not one key or power to be bestowed on this church to lead the people into the celestial gate but I have given you, showed you, and talked it over to you; the kingdom is set up, and you have the perfect pattern, and you can go and build up the kingdom, and go in at the celestial gate, taking your train with you."—Millennial Star, Vol. 10, p. 115.

Parley P. Pratt renders it as follows:—

"I know not why; but for some reason I am constrained to hasten my preparations, and to confer upon the Twelve all the ordinances, keys, covenants, endowments, and sealing ordinances of the priesthood, and so set before them a pattern in all things pertaining to the sanctuary and the endowment therein."—Millennial Star, Vol. 5, p. 151.

Orson Hyde's version is as follows:—

Brother Joseph said some time before he was murdered, "If I am taken away, upon you, the Twelve, will rest the responsibility of leading this people, and do not be bluffed off by any man. Go forward in the path of your duty though you walk into death. If you will be bold and maintain your ground the great God will sustain you."—Times and Seasons, Vol. 5, p. 650.

Wilford Woodruff has spoken of this several times, but not using the same language twice. Here are some of his statements:—

Or has the Prophet Joseph found Elder Rigdon in his councils when he organized the quorum of the Twelve, a few months before his death, to prepare them for the endowment? And when they received their endowment, and actually received the keys of the kingdom of God, and oracles of God, keys of revelation, and the pattern of heavenly things; and thus addressing the Twelve, exclaimed, "Upon your shoulders the kingdom rests, and you must round up your shoulders, and bear it; for I have had to do it until now. But now the responsibility rests upon you. It mattereth not what becomes of me."—Times and Seasons, Vol. 5, p. 698.

This was in 1844, but the language was not strong enough to answer the purpose in 1892, so Mr. Woodruff gives it as follows:—

I remember the last speech that he ever gave us before his death. It was before we started upon our mission to the East. He stood upon his feet some three hours. The room was filled as with consuming fire, his face was as clear as amber, and he was clothed upon by the power of God. He laid before us our duty. He laid before us the fullness of this great work of God; and in his remarks to us he said: "I have had sealed upon my head every key, every power, every principle of life and salvation that God has ever given to any man who ever lived upon the face of the earth. And these principles and this Priesthood and power belong to this great and last dispensation which the God of Heaven has set His hand to establish in the earth." "Now," said he addressing the Twelve, "I have sealed upon your heads every key, every power, and every principle which the Lord has sealed upon my head." Continuing, he said, "I have lived so long—up to the present time—I have been in the midst of this people, and in the great work and labor of redemption. I have desired to live to see this Temple [at Nauvoo] built. But I shall never live to see it completed; but you will." . . . [If he said this the prophecy failed. Not one of the then Twelve lived to see it completed.—H. C. S.]

After addressing us in this manner he said: "I tell you the burden of this kingdom now rests upon your shoulders; you have got to bear it off in all the world, and if you don't do it you will be damned."—Roberts, pp. 118, 119.

In April, 1898, Mr. Woodruff is reported as quoting Joseph Smith, as follows:—

You Apostles of the Lamb of God have been chosen to carry out the purposes of the Lord upon the earth. Now, I have received, as the Prophet, Seer and Revelator, standing at the head of this dispensation, every key, every ordinance, every principle and every Priesthood that belongs to the last dispensation and fullness of times. And I have sealed all these things upon your heads. Now, you Apostles, if you do not rise up and bear off this kingdom, as I have given it to you, you will be damned.—Penrose, p. 23.

Examine these several statements carefully, and one thing will be very evident; viz., that we are not sure that we have the words of Joseph Smith, for the language is not given twice alike. If we have his words, tell us in which statement they are, that we may consider it. Another point we notice; that is, that the further we get from the time spoken of the stronger is the language used. This looks suspicious, manifesting as it does a disposition upon the part of the witnesses to exaggerate, which grew upon them with time. Brigham Young first speaks of that which was bestowed being the keys of the "apostleship." Later he mentions it as the keys to lead into the celestial gate.

Elder Pratt says nothing of keys or leadership.

Elder Hyde is a little more modest than Brigham; he does not say a word about keys, but simply that the responsibility to lead was upon them.

In 1844 Elder Woodruff speaks freely of keys in his prelude, but does not quote Joseph as using the word, but simply that the responsibility of the kingdom rests upon the shoulders of the Twelve.

None of these testimonies is inconsistent with our position. But when this growing tendency to exaggerate manifested itself in 1892, how was it? Then it was made to appear that Joseph bestowed upon the Twelve every key, power, and principle which he (Joseph) had held. Yet this is too indefinite for the purpose, in 1898, and hence it is stated that every key, ordinance, principle, and priesthood belonging to the last dispensation, and which Joseph Smith held as Prophet, Seer, and Revelator, was bestowed upon the Twelve. This story has not lost anything; but if any man can tell what Joseph Smith said upon that occasion, let him come forward with it and we will give it respectful consideration.

In the meantime we will concede the probability that Joseph Smith told the Twelve that the responsibility of the work would rest upon them, and that by the legitimate exercise of the authority vested in them the people could be led into the celestial gates; but if so it would not justify them in assuming to act outside the duty of their calling as defined in the law.

Further, if in addition to the duty of the Twelve, as defined in the law, Joseph bestowed upon them as a quorum all the priesthood, power, and authority of the First Presidency, what need had they for a First Presidency? And what advantage was gained to the church by the forming of a First Presidency in 1847, and upon three different occasions since?

Mr. Roberts then introduces a statement from William Marks to the effect that he had been convinced that "the Twelve were the proper persons to lead the church." Suppose he did so state. He may have been mistaken. Again, his indorsement of their being the proper ones was not an indorsement of their subsequent acts as leaders.

We do not affirm that Elder William Marks never erred; according to the prediction made of him by Joseph Smith, published by the Utah people themselves, the enemy was seemingly to gain some advantage over him, but he was finally to overcome because the hand of the Lord would be on his behalf. Here is the passage:—

I would just say to brother Marks, that I saw in a vision while on the road, that whereas he was closely pursued by an innumerable concourse of enemies, and as they pressed upon him hard, as if they were about to devour him, and had seemingly obtained some degree of advantage over him, but about this time a chariot of fire came, and near the place, even the Angel of the Lord put forth his hand unto brother Marks, and said unto him, "Thou art my son, come here," and immediately he was caught up in the chariot, and rode away triumphantly out of their midst. And again the Lord said, I will raise thee up for a blessing unto many people. Now the particulars of this whole matter cannot be written at this time, but the vision was evidently given to me that I might know that the hand of the Lord would be on his behalf.—Millennial Star, Vol. 16, p. 131.

Will our opponents explain from their standpoint in what way God raised up William Marks to become "a blessing unto many people"?

Mr. Roberts exclaims as a climax:—

Since the church has never been disorganized, any organization claiming to be the "Reorganized church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints" is a counterfeit, and writes fraud in the very title of it.—Roberts, p. 99.

To this we simply reply by a counter assertion, for which we have laid the foundation, and say: "Since the church has" "been disorganized, any Latter Day Saint organization" not "claiming to be the 'Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints' is a counterfeit, and writes fraud in the very title of it."

CHAPTER 9.

MR. ROBERTS opens his ninth chapter with the following declaration:—

THERE is yet another line of evidence to be adduced in support of the great truth that the church has never been disorganized in this dispensation, and therefore has never stood in need of a "reorganization." That evidence is based upon the favor and blessing of God which has followed the church of Christ led by the Twelve Apostles from Nauvoo, and their successors in the leadership of the church.—Roberts, p. 100.

This opens the real issue, and most cheerfully do we meet it. By way of preliminary, however, we suggest that Mr. Roberts is unfortunate in having to represent a people on this issue who have conceded the necessity of a reorganization. This we have already shown from the purported revelation of Parley P. Pratt. (See p. 75.)

In addition to that we present a statement from a General Epistle of the Quorum of Twelve, written at Winter Quarters, Omaha Nation, December 23, 1847, and signed by Brigham Young, President, and Willard Richards, Clerk, as follows:—

Since the murder of President Joseph Smith, many false prophets and false teachers have arisen, and tried to deceive many, during which time we have mostly tarried with the body of the Church, or been seeking a new location, leaving those prophets and teachers to run their race undisturbed, who have died natural deaths, or committed suicides; and we now, having it in contemplation soon to reorganize the Church according to the original pattern, with a First Presidency and Patriarch, feel that it will be the privilege of the Twelve, ere long, to spread abroad among the nations, not to hinder the gathering, but to preach the gospel, and push the people, the honest in heart, together from the four quarters of the earth.—Millennial Star, Vol. 10, p. 86.

Mr. Roberts tries to dispose of this by asserting that it was the First Presidency that was to be reorganized, and not the church.

We can afford to leave this with simply placing the exact language upon record. The language cannot possibly be distorted to make the reorganization apply to the First Presidency alone; but it is clear and explicit, "reorganize the Church according to the original pattern, with a First Presidency and Patriarch."

Again, according to Mr. Roberts' own interpretation how can he escape connecting the Patriarch with the First Presidency, instead of limiting it to the Presidency?

But that we may not seem to misrepresent Mr. Roberts we append his comment, that the readers may see him and his methods in their true light:—

Josephites try to make it appear from a statement in the general epistle of the Twelve issued in 1847, to the effect that they were about to "reorganize" the church with a President and two counselors, that President Brigham Young and his associates considered the church disorganized, (see discourse by Alexander H. Smith, The Saints' Herald supplement of June 24th, 1893.) But it will be observed that the reorganization contemplated in the epistle of the Twelve is limited to reorganizing the First Presidency, the only quorum that was disorganized.—Footnote, p. 100.

We are now ready to consider in their order Mr. Roberts' specifications in support of his theory that God's favor and blessing have followed the church which he represents. He says:—

The first thing to be considered as indicating the favor of God which attended the church under the Presidency of the Twelve Apostles, is the fact that the church was held together through that trying period immediately following the martyrdom of the prophets Joseph and Hyrum.

If this were true it would not be sufficient proof of God's approval, as many corrupt organizations are held together under trying circumstances. But let us inquire how much truth there is in the assertion that the church was held together. We do not know just how many held to that organization, but they cannot claim more than their Church Historian and Recorder, Mr. Richards', estimate of the entire number of the church at the time, less the thousands who followed Rigdon, Strang, William Smith, and others. He says:—

The nearest we can approximate the number was about 26,000 to 27,000 souls.

(See his letter, p. 59.)

In making his estimate Mr. Richards would add to the number they had with them a fair estimate for those who followed other leaders; so their number must have been several thousand less than the above figures. To be exceedingly liberal we will say they had twenty thousand. What proportion was that of the whole? Joseph Smith's estimate in 1844 was 150,000. (See answer to Richards, p. 60.)

Wilford Woodruff, in April, 1845, reported the number of saints in America alone to be above one hundred thousand. This estimate would not be far from Joseph Smith's, who included the whole church. The following is the report of Mr. Woodruff:—

Elder Wilford Woodruff then rose to represent his conference, to which he had pledged himself at an early part of the day. He said that he represented about twenty-eight states of the American Union, above one hundred thousand saints, a quorum of twelve apostles, the various quorums in the stakes of Zion, fifteen quorums of the seventies, a conference with two temples of the Lord, one long ago completed, and one fast hastening to its completion.—Millennial Star, Vol. 5, pp. 170, 171.

So they held together about two fifteenths of the entire church. And we are asked to accept this as an evidence of God's favor!

His next reason for adopting his conclusion he gives in the following:—

Thus trusted by the saints the Twelve went on building upon the foundation laid by the prophet Joseph. They took steps to push the building up of Nauvoo, but their chief interest and their most strenuous efforts centered in completing the Temple and Nauvoo House.—Roberts, p. 101.

In all this they failed, neither building Nauvoo, nor the Temple, nor the Nauvoo House to completion, as we have shown. Surely this is not an evidence of God's favor.

After making the assertion regarding the temple, which we have before noticed, Mr. Roberts continues:—

This accomplished, and mobocracy again raising its horrid front, to plague the church, the Twelve turned their faces towards the west; for they remembered that Joseph himself had prophesied that the saints would yet be driven to the Rocky Mountains, and there become a mighty people.—Roberts, p. 102.

In connection with this he explains in a footnote as follows:—

Under date of August 6th, 1842, Joseph writes in his history: "I prophesied that the saints would continue to suffer much affliction, and would be driven to the Rocky Mountains, many would apostatize, others would be put to death by our persecutors, or lose their lives in consequence of exposure or disease, and some of you will live to go and assist in making settlements and build cities, and see them become a mighty people in the midst of the Rocky Mountains."

Mr. Roberts gives us no citation to aid us in finding a record of this purported revelation. For years they have been referring to such a prediction, but those using it either did not know or would not tell where it could be found. We have repeatedly asked that they produce it, but the only version of that prophecy that we have seen is found in the Biography of Anson Call published in the "History of Northern Utah and Southern Idaho," Vol. 2, by Tullidge. It is a little lengthy, but as so much has been said about this purported prediction we quote it in full as given by Mr. Call, an accredited minister of the church which Mr. Roberts represents. The Historian says:—

On the 14th of July, 1843, with quite a number of his brethren, he crossed the Mississippi River to the town of Montrose, to be present at the installment of the masonic lodge of the "Rising Sun." A block school house had been prepared with shade in front, under which was a barrel of ice water. Judge George Adams was the highest masonic authority in the state of Illinois and had been sent there to organize this lodge. He, Hyrum Smith and J. C. Bennett, being high Masons, went into the house to perform some ceremonies which the others were not entitled to witness. These, including Joseph Smith remained under the bowery. Joseph, as he was tasting the cold water, warned the brethren not to be too free with it. With the tumbler still in his hand he prophesied that the Saints would yet go to the Rocky Mountains; and, said he, this water tastes much like that of the crystal streams that are running from the snow capped mountains. We will let Mr. Call describe this prophetic scene: "I had before seen him in a vision and now saw while he was talking his countenance change to white; not the deadly white of a bloodless face, but a living brilliant white. He seemed absorbed in gazing at something at a great distance and said I am gazing upon the valleys of those mountains." This was followed by a vivid description of the scenery of these mountains as I have since become acquainted with it. Pointing to Shadrach Roundy and others, he said, "There are some men here who shall do a great work in that land." Pointing to me he said, "There is Anson, he shall go and shall assist in building cities from one end of the country to the other, and you," rather extending the idea to all those he had spoken of, "shall perform as great a work as has been done by man, so that the nations of the earth shall be astonished and many of them will be gathered in that land and assist in building cities and temples, and Israel shall be made to rejoice."

"It is impossible to represent in words this scene which is still vivid in my mind, of the grandeur of Joseph's appearance, his beautiful descriptions of this land, and his wonderful prophetic utterances as they emanated from the glorious inspirations that overshadowed him. There was a force and power in his exclamations of which the following is but a faint echo. 'Oh the beauty of those snow capped mountains. The cool refreshing streams that are running down through those mountain gorges.'" Then gazing in another direction, as if there was a change and locality: "Oh the scenes that this people will pass through! The dead that will lay between here and there." Then, turning in another direction as if the scene had again changed; "Oh the apostasy that will take place before my brethren reach that land!" But he continued, "The priesthood shall prevail over all its enemies, triumph over the devil and be established upon the earth never more to be thrown down." He then charged us with great force and power, to be faithful in those things that had been and should be committed to our charge, with the promise of all the blessings that the priesthood could bestow. "Remember these things and treasure them up, Amen."—Biographical Supplement, pp. 271, 272.

It will be observed that the date given by Mr. Roberts and that given in this sketch do not agree, but evidently the same prediction is referred to. There is not a material point in this prediction that conflicts with our position. We concede that they went to the Rocky Mountains and did a great work in that land; that Mr. Roundy and Mr. Call assisted in that work; that the nations of the earth were astonished, and from the nations of the earth men gathered there to assist; and we have urged and do urge that there was a great apostasy before they reached that land. We believe that the priesthood will prevail over its enemies and triumph over the Devil; and that Joseph's exhortation to be faithful was timely and appropriate. The fulfillment of this prediction, if prediction it was, is to the credit of the Prophet, but no credit attaches to those who fulfilled the prophecy; for there is not a word in it to indicate that God had any more to do with their going to the Rocky Mountains, or with the work they did there, than he had with the apostasy that took place before they reached there.

Further, whether Joseph Smith predicted that they would go or not, it is evident that he did not approve of their going, or at least had not appointed that the church should locate in the West, for on June 23, 1844, four days before his death he wrote his wife:—

I do not know where I shall go or what I shall do, but shall if possible endeavor to get to the city of Washington.—Church History, Vol. 2, p. 770.

According to the purported revelation through Parley P. Pratt, God's instruction was for them not to fly to the wilderness and desert, but to stay in Nauvoo. (See p. 75.) Evidence can be produced in abundance that it was the intention of the leaders after the death of Joseph to remain and build up Nauvoo; but one statement from Elder Parley P. Pratt will be sufficient for the purpose of this work. In an epistle addressed "To the Saints in the Eastern States," and dated July 20, 1846, over two years after the death of the Prophet, Elder Pratt writes:—

Yes, my friends, think it not strange, if before ten years roll round, Nauvoo is the largest and most wealthy city in America, diffusing wealth, comfort, peace and knowledge through all parts of the West, and more or less to the whole world.

Think it not strange if a million of industrious Saints are congregated in that and the neighbouring cities, all acting in union, with one heart and mind, while every market in the world is supplied more or less with the productions of their skill and industry.

Think it not strange if kings, princes, nobles and great men come there with their rich presents in the name of the Lord, and to his sanctuary to seek knowledge, and to receive endowment and salvation, for themselves and their dead.—Millennial Star, Vol. 6, p. 92.

Had it been decreed before Joseph's death that the body of the church should be removed to a location in the Rocky Mountains, would Mr. Pratt have written thus, more than two years afterward?

Certainly not. Then we cannot accept the fact of their being "driven to the Rocky Mountains," even though Joseph predicted it, as an evidence of God's approval. They had been warned through the Prophet that if they did not build the temple in due time they might share the same fate that had befallen them in Missouri (see p. 72); and now when the truth of that warning has been realized we are asked to accept it as an evidence of God's approval. Strange philosophy!

In support of his interpretation of the above prophecy Mr. Roberts introduces the following:—

Isaiah, too, long centuries before this time, had declared that it should come to pass

In the last days, that the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established in the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills; and all nations shall flow unto it.—Roberts, p. 102.

Mr. Roberts is careful not to comment much upon this passage; but to make it apply as his context indicates he must give it a strained interpretation. He must make the word "mountain" to mean the church or kingdom of God; but its plural "mountains" to mean literal elevations of the earth's surface. If the word "mountain" means kingdom then the word "mountains" means kingdoms, and the plain, simple, and we believe correct rendering of the passage would be that God would establish his kingdom among the kingdoms of the world.

But if Mr. Roberts insists on interpreting the word "mountains" in the passage to mean literal mountains, to be consistent he should interpret "mountain" to be literal and have God raising a mountain of earth and stone upon the top of the Rocky Mountains. Perhaps we can assist Mr. Roberts a little here. We suggest that a more consistent interpretation than his would be to apply the word "mountain" to those piles of rock which the Mormons erected on the Rocky Mountains to push down on the United States army as it passed.

But, seriously, this passage does not in its main features apply to the American Continent. The verse preceding the one which Mr. Roberts quotes reads:—

The word that Isaiah the son of Amoz saw concerning Judah and Jerusalem.—Isaiah 2: 1.

Well may Mr. Roberts exclaim in the language of Bishop Warburton, Orthodoxy, my lord, is my doxy; and heterodoxy is some other man's doxy!—Roberts, p. 75.

Miscellaneous Department.

PASTORAL.

To the Saints in Nauvoo District, Greeting:—I presume all have seen by the Herald ere this my appointment to labor in the Decatur district; also, of the notice that I would still retain charge of the Nauvoo district until further arrangements could be made. While I have not been in the district in person the last three weeks or more, I have been keeping a close watch and doing considerable corresponding and assisting in several places. I hope the saints will still try to do all they can to forward the work, and when anything takes place I should know of, write me at Lamoni, and it will be forwarded to me.

As was announced, Bro. Roth will do what he can in the district until permanent arrangements are made. Thus far he has been confined at home, owing to the sickness of his son, we are informed, but hope may soon be with you.

Bro. Snively has recovered sufficiently to again be in the field, began his work at Dumas, Missouri, thence Saint Francisville, and will probably, if his health will permit, work the south end of the district, and then on up north to our district conference.

Bro. Evans, you understand, is located at Burlington, as the objective point; but, for the good of the work, necessity has caused us to draw on the patience of the Burlington saints, and send him down to New Canton, and meet a couple of Brighamite elders in discussion, unless they yet fly the track after they have agreed to meet us in public debate. Will inform you later.

A word to the local brethren: Let me urge you to do all in your power to spread this great cause; you know the district is large, laborers few, and lots of work to be done. Many calls for preaching that can't be filled as one would like. Don't think you can't do anything; go in faith, with a humble prayer in your heart, and if you have been living right, and the necessity demands, God will make you strong. Any desiring preaching in their neighborhood, address me here, stating the conditions, why they ask, etc., and we will do the best we can for you with the help at hand.

I hope and trust the saints won't forget to aid the missionaries, from time to time as they visit them, with the necessary clothing, means to get from place, etc. Be wise in this matter, and not because one is not as good a preacher as another, or you don't like him as well, withhold your means and give to the one you like best. Remember they are all God's servants, and doing his work in their own individual way. We all have our faults.

If all goes well, I will be at our conference at Montrose, Iowa, the third Saturday and Sunday in February. I hope to meet a large representation of saints there. Come out, saints; I want to meet you all and clasp hands once more, as this will probably end my charge of the district. Let us come together prepared with the Spirit of God in our hearts, and I am sure we will have a good time.

As ever your brother in bonds,

F. M. WELD.

NOTICES.

To saints of Northern and Eastern Michigan Districts; Dear Brethren: Inasmuch as you are aware that about two years ago we were shut out of a certain schoolhouse in Michigan, and that suit was entered against said school district; and whereas the judge of Circuit Court claimed he had no jurisdiction in said case, but at the same time claimed that in his opinion the majority in any school district had a right to exclude any denomination they wished, etc. Believing this to be unjust, we thought wise to make an appeal to the Supreme Court of the State for a hearing in the case, and our action was sustained by the conference in each district, and you also voted to assist in carrying it out, by raising the necessary means for that purpose.

Now, dear brethren, we have gone as far as we can, and have properly placed it before the courts, and have expended about $50, and now ask that you make up and send that amount to J. J. Cornish, Reed City, Michigan, between now and the 20th of December, each branch doing its part, which is not much for each branch, and we think we will not need to make another call. Should any more be sent than needed, it will be credited to you by your Bishop's agent.

J. J. CORNISH, Pres.

C. B. JOICE, Sec.

C. E. BUTTERWORTH, Dist. Pres.

BROWN.—At Lamoni, Iowa, June 21, 1898, to Bro. George V. and Sr. Victoria Brown, a daughter, named LaJune Frances. Blessed October 30, by Elders Robt. M. Elvin and E. R. Dewnsup.

LIST OF RECEIPTS — GRACELAND COLLEGE.

LIST OF RECEIPTS, CONSISTING OF 10 CENT OFFERINGS, $1 OFFERINGS, GENERAL SUBSCRIPTIONS AND REAL ESTATE SALES FOR BENEFIT OF GRACELAND COLLEGE SINCE APRIL 1, 1898.

This does not include donations for running expenses of college under charge of special committee.

In all cases where there appears a mistake in amount or name herein, please notify the undersigned at once and oblige.

We are thankful to the saints and friends for the aid furnished and readiness with which so many have given to aid this institution of learning. When we consider the blessing this is to be to the young men and women who need a higher and better education than can be had in the public schools, nor well attained in other institutions under such safeguards as may be in Graceland College in a moral and spiritual way, it is a question if there is anything else where persons may do more real good to humanity and the church by giving to it a part of their means than this new college now in its first years, a time when all institutions of the kind are in need of friends and aid.

A goodly list of names are here presented, but the name of every member and friend should be enrolled upon the record, either in helping in the 10 cent offering fund or the $1 and upward subscription.

Look over the subscription list and if your name is not on this please send it in at once. Do not be misled by the thought that but few in the church will be benefited by this college. If but one fiftieth part or less of the young men and women of the church should receive culture and training here, their work and association among others will disseminate in a great degree its blessings to all. The selfish spirit that is manifest sometimes touching a work like this is like the spirit of selfishness when found elsewhere from the wrong source.

The doctrine affirmed by the apostle concerning the workings of the church development that, where "one member be honored, all the members rejoice with it," has no finer application than in the general diffusion of knowledge through educational influences. By a faithful and united effort in an educational way much wisdom will come to the entire body, and this is our great work. The wise man truly said, "Wisdom is the principal thing; therefore get wisdom: and with all thy getting get understanding."

Let us hear from you and send your help in whatever way you may select.

1st, Subscription, $1 and upwards.

2d, Purchase of a lot, $100 to $200.

3d, Purchase of scholarship to aid some poor boy or girl whom you may greatly bless by paying tuition or taking scholarship, $10 to $100.

Let us hear from you in time for January published list, 1899.

Very respectfully submitted,

E. L. KELLEY,
G. H. HILLIARD,
E. A. BLAKESLEE, Committee.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK.

HISTORY OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS. (Volumes 1 and 2 now ready.) Provided for by action of General Conference of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Written and compiled by President Joseph Smith and Apostle Heman C. Smith. Invaluable as a correct historical narrative, as a means of conversion to truth, and as a defensive weapon in meeting old and new objections urged against the latter-day work. It contains important documents connected with the establishment, growth, and internal and external affairs and progress of the church. The revelations given in this dispensation are inserted, in connection with accounts of the circumstances under which they were given. Biographical sketches, illustrations, complete indexes, sidenotes for ready reference, etc., are some of the features of the work. Volume 1 begins with the birth of Joseph Smith, the Prophet and Seer, in 1805, and narrates the circumstances of his calling and ministry, the rise of the church in 1830, and until the close of the year 1835. Volume 2 continues the history up to June 27, 1844, —to the assassination of Joseph and Hyrum Smith.

NEEDS OF CHURCH AND PEOPLE.

VOICED in the pulpit and pondered in the pew, the question most prominently before the Chicago religious community during the last month has been, in some form, "Is the church failing to reach the people, and, if so, what needs to be done anew that the church may become the great elevating force in the community which of right it should be?"

Seeking to this question a comprehensive answer, which should present both the problem and its solution under the various sidelights which variations of creed or method might shed, the Tribune has asked of representative ministers of the great Christian denominations their conceptions of the present greatest needs of the church and of the ways in which those needs can be most amply met and made a means of growth rather than a chance of waning. The statements which follow, it will be observed, all agree in one point—that the power of the church among the people is to-day greater, broader, more vital than ever before.

THE QUESTION.

"Is the church failing to reach and to hold the people, and if so what needs to be done anew that the church may become the great elevating force in the community which of right it should be? Are new creeds needed or desirable?"

The Rt. Rev. William E. McLaren, Episcopal Bishop of Chicago: There is no doubt that in Chicago more largely, as in all large cities to a less extent, and in many hundreds of smaller places, which take their form from the great centers, there is a diminished attendance upon public services. There is in our nature as men an inextinguishable hunger for God, but its intensity varies at different times. At present there is a tidal wave of indifference inundating the country, which is in part grounded in irreligion, and in part in dislike of phases of religious belief, which have dominated the minds of millions in this country in the past, and which in the present have lost or are losing their hold. The prevailing indifference is much more largely due to the decline of these systems than to any widespread positive rejection of the religion of Jesus Christ. Their decadence is not the defeat of Christianity, but, on the contrary, the token of a better day.

The perpetuation of the policy of separatism, which is the opprobrium of Protestantism, is not likely to bring in a better state of religion among the people. The idea that any man has a right to make a church is repealed when any individual undertakes to make it over again. That is not the road to better, but to worse conditions. The bottom trouble is that the world will not take stock in a house that is so sadly divided against itself.

The Christian forces must be visibly one if the world is to believe, and this is the solemn declaration of the founder of the church himself. Present divisions invite defeat, and you have only to go to the smaller towns all over this continent to discover that the invitation is accepted.

What we must come to is the divine idea of community, homage, and praise to the Infinite One, the Supreme Majesty, the great God, as a means of honoring him, attesting our faith and fortifying our wills in the ways of virtue, and honor, and obedience. The God idea is at the root of civilization, social science, family life, and is the conservator of all that makes life worth living. Worship is the public recognition of that idea; the neglect of worship is the sure road to religious indifference and final atheism, that is to say, to anarchy and barbarism. No nation can stand long which forgets God, and he will be forgotten if we do not worship him. Worship does not consist in talking about it, but in doing it. It is the revival of true reverence alone which will reanimate the religious instincts of our people and cause them again to respond to that hunger for God which is a part of their nature, and dormant now only for a season.

The Rt. Rev. Samuel Fallows, Episcopal (Reformed) Bishop of the West and Northwest: The church must not be confounded with Christianity. The latter is infinitely grander and larger than the former. The spirit of Christianity is not only not confined to the church, but may be dormant within it, while it may move in the hearts of men outside the church inclosure and the church confession. It may live and does live in organizations, in institutions, in movements full of good to mankind which are not distinctively carried forward under any church ægis.

The church itself (putting a part for the whole as to name) may be disloyal to the spirit of Christianity, and those who do not even bear the Christian name may transcend in their influence and activity the church membership in promoting Christian objects. The Earl of Shaftesbury had to carry the factory act, so important to the welfare of English children, against the apathy and determined opposition of the English Church.

In other great reforms the church, as a body, has been derelict. Outsiders have had to bear the standard and sound the war cry. It was so in the slavery contest. The church is not united to-day in the temperance reform. But the truth I wish to affirm is this, that the Christian religion is leavening society, however unfaithful the church may be. It is the hand of Jesus Christ that is writing elevating laws upon our statute books, rearing hospitals and asylums, building schools and reformatories. It is his voice which is lifted up in the cry of the oppressed, in the passionate demand of the poor for their rights in the earth he has created, of the laborer for his just share in the profits of his toil.

And always from the church some one comes to incarnate the spirit of the divine human Christ, and marshal those within and without for the contest for the rights of men. Always will be found earnest ministers of his who are trying to bring the church into vital relationship with the people, and the people into the church. They are striving for the coming of the kingdom, of which the church is only a portion, and yet its most important portion. It is to be its preserving salt. It is to be its undimmed and ever glorious light.

The Rev. Dr. L. A. Crandall, Memorial Baptist Church: All will agree that the Church of Jesus Christ ought to exert a larger influence upon the people, but all do not agree upon the methods to be used in gaining this larger influence. I am not vain enough to assume the task of declaring who is right and who is wrong among those who differ thus radically, but will content myself with a few suggestions:—

1. Stress of life is much greater than it used to be. This is especially true in our cities. Vast numbers of people have no time for rest except on Sunday, and prefer spending that day with their families or in the parks to attendance upon church services. The man who is anxious that the church should reach a larger number of people will do well to help those who are trying to secure a Saturday half-holiday for wage workers.

2. This is an intensely practical age, and the people have little patience with fine spun theories. The great truths of Christianity must be shown in their application to present conditions, and the teaching of Jesus must be related to daily conduct and choices.

3. The church must pattern more closely after her Lord and seek to promote the welfare of the whole man, body as well as soul.

4. The attitude of the church towards the people must be such as to plainly reveal an unselfish interest. So long as the people have a suspicion that we are more interested in making converts to our denominational beliefs than we are in building the kingdom of God, so long will they fight shy of the church. So long as the church contents itself with opening its doors and inviting men to come in, so long will great masses remain outside. The people must be sought if they do not seek the church. This is the work of the whole church—not of the pastor only. The seeming indifference of the rank and file of the church to those outside robs the church of power. Somehow a personal relation, a relation of mutual confidence and friendship, must be established between the church and the people. This relation, in its initial stages at least, must be formed in the homes of the people. Every city church should have at least two pastors—one to preach and the other to meet the people in their homes.

5. Christian churches of all denominations in this city should form a federation for the purpose of districting territory, securing systematic visitation of nonchurchgoing families, consultation concerning the serious problems which confront the church, and a larger measure of coöperative effort.—Chicago Tribune, November 6.

Echoes from Graceland.

CONDUCTED BY GRACELAND COLLEGE.

CONTRIBUTIONS to our Archæological Museum have been received from Elder R. M. Elvin, and Sr. Nellie Elvin, to whom the thanks of Graceland are due. Who will be the next to help along this collection?

Our President paid a visit to Independence and St. Joe immediately after Thanksgiving. As a representative of Graceland, he received a hearty welcome. Independence showed its practical sympathy by sending him back with several names for the Subscription List. St. Joe has helped some already, and, along with Independence, intends to help more. Do you love the work, do you appreciate the efforts of the traveling ministry, do you believe in purity? Then send along your subscriptions. Remember! each $25 subscription (for five years) carries a five-year scholarship with it, at your disposal. Look out next week for the first installment of the subscription list!

We are pleased to announce the inclusion of Sr. Ella F. Rich, now of the Bliss Business Institute, Rome, New York, amongst our faculty. Sr. Rich intends to commence duties with the opening of the Winter Term, January 3. This addition to the faculty will make our Stenography and Typewriting Department equal in quality of work to any in the West.

There is still room for students in Graceland. Send your sons and daughters along, come yourselves if you have leisure. Send for catalogues, and special announcements, and see what we offer to one and all.

If you know of any likely students, whom you cannot reach, send along their names and addresses to President Dewsnup, and the college will write them.

The Athenian Literary Society had a pleasant and interesting time at their last meeting. New members are being added all the while, and progress is the order of the day.

IS REMONSTRANCE AVAILABLE?

WHEN the effort was being made to secure statehood for Utah, such promises and protestations of sincerity and good faith on the part of the Mormon Church regarding plural marriages were made as induced the friends of the church not Mormons, and the outside barbarian as well, to believe that the dogma of plural, or polygamous marriage and the practice of it had been honestly abandoned by the church, through the advice and active efforts of its leading officers. President Woodruff's manifesto issued in September, 1890, was interpreted by the leading orators of the church to mean that both the contracting of plural marriages by ceremony and the living together by such as had been previously married in polygamy, were to be abandoned.

The United States Courts so took the meaning of the church action. Politicians of all parties so understood and so construed the manifesto. Anti-polygamous believers in the doctrines and practices of the church before the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith were fain to accept that understanding of President Woodruff's action and the vote of the church on the manifesto, and saw a ray of hope for long erring brethren, and rejoiced that at last the opposition they had been making to the introduction and continuance of the doctrines they believed to be evil, and knew to be contrary to the commands of God given to the church, had found a measure of success and a possible stopping place. Alas! for man's uncertainty; alas! for failing hope.

The following from the Chicago Record for November 22, expresses what a host of wellwishers for the good of Utah will regret to see in the public prints, and much more regret to know is true, if it proves to be a fact.

THE SPECTER OF POLYGAMY.

The country learns with chagrin that one of the newly elected members of congress from Utah is charged with being a polygamist, the husband of three wives. The man is Brigham H. Roberts, and the question has been raised as to whether he ought not to be excluded from the house by the majority of that body. The possibility of Utah being represented in Washington by men of many wives was one of the things sought to be guarded against in admitting that territory as a state.

The contention of Congressman-elect Roberts and his friends is that the enabling act of congress simply prohibited future polygamous, or plural, marriages, and that he was possessed of all his wives before Utah was admitted and before the enabling act was passed. Though this point may be well taken, the spectacle of a man of many wives sitting in the national legislature at Washington will be anything but desirable. Utah has played a sorry prank on the nation.

What will the Congress of the United States do? Will the members of that august assembly of national lawmakers which so long sought for a way to relieve the nation of the evil practices of citizens under the Territorial laws of Utah, passing stringent enactments by which hundreds of law-breakers, such as Mr. Roberts is charged with being in the paragraph we take from the Record, were arrested, tried, fined, imprisoned, and finally disfranchised, now suffer one of them who has persistently defied the public sentiment which made laws against the practice of polygamy possible, to take his seat among the honorable and honored men who in Congress represent the American people? Will they?

In an interview published in the Chicago Tribune for November 23, Mr. Roberts is stated to have expressed himself thus:—

Salt Lake City, Utah, Sunday.—Brigham H. Roberts, Representative-elect from Utah, in an interview on the question of polygamy, said: "The settlement of that question, after years of strife and heartache, left upon men moral obligations from which no decree of the church could release them and no act of the State absolve them. The demand of the American people, as expressed through their Representatives in the American Congress in the enabling act, went no further than this: 'That perfect tolerance of religious sentiment shall be secured, provided that polygamous or plural marriages are forever prohibited.' Thus the demand went so far as to prohibit future polygamous marriages, but no further."

It seems hardly possible that a man of Mr. Roberts' general ability should so manifestly misunderstand or misconstrue the demand made by the American people. Does not Mr. Roberts know, and know full well, that the thing aimed at by Congress in the Edmunds-Tucker law, and every other enactment passed in regard to the domestic relation of the people in Utah, was the practice of polygamy, not the mere ceremony of marriage performed in a temple or tabernacle, but the cohabiting and living together as husband and wives, upon the doing of which so many of Utah's leading men were arrested and punished? It seems to us that the dignity and self-respect of the members of Congress who helped to pass what Mr. Roberts calls the "enabling act," would demand in unmistakable terms that no man who thus mistakes the situation and his duty as an honest citizen of the Republic should be permitted to sit in the halls of legislation to help make laws while he himself has no respect for law when applied to him.

Were we in Utah we should certainly have remonstrated against the choice of such a man to represent the State; and when such a man was chosen we should remonstrate against his title to represent the people, the whole people, whether such remonstrance would be of any avail or not.

In a census taken some years ago the statistics show that the "Josephites" had some eight hundred communicants. And as these eight hundred of Utah's citizens are uncompromisingly anti-polygamous, Mr. Roberts, nor any other man who may be living in the practice of plural marriage, or polygamy, will represent them in Congress or elsewhere. Hence, these citizens, few though they be, have the right to remonstrate against the seating of a polygamist in the halls of Congress.

The press and public men of the Utah Church took it in high dudgeon that the people outside of the Territory, and the press, should feel and express any doubt of the honest intentions and sincerity of the church in the endeavors of its members, with others, to get statehood, for Utah, and the HERALD shared in that doubt and consequent censure.

In conversation with Rev. Iliff, of the M. E. Church in Utah, whom the editor met on a railway train shortly after the manifesto had been issued and endorsed, he expressed the sentiment that he thought that the professions of abandonment of polygamy by the church in Utah were sincere, and that it was intended to mean the abandonment of the practice, as well as the abstaining from the performing of the ceremony in temple or endowment house. He seemed to think that the men making the protestations of good faith really meant to conform to the general sentiment of the people of the Union in and out of Utah, and to answer the expectations to which the manifesto and its subsequent endorsement gave rise at home and abroad. It now appears that such confidence in the good faith of Utah was misplaced, and such expectations formed only to be disappointed.

If, as has been frequently stated by Utah men, there has not been more than two per cent of the men of the Utah Church who practiced polygamy, and that there are not now more than that ratio in its practice, it is passing strange that the other ninety-eight per cent should stand idly by and let one of the guilty two per cent be chosen to represent them in Congress; and stranger still, that this same ninety-eight per cent should actively engage in electing such an one.

But what is that to the HERALD? may be asked. It is this. The HERALD represents some half a hundred thousand believers in the principles of Mormonism, so called, as the same are found in the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Book of Doctrine and Covenants (the revelations of God to the church), and these know that these books in their teachings give no legal sanction to the dogma, or the practice of plural marriage, or polygamy; that these books as left by Joseph and Hyrum Smith as a heritage of teaching and knowledge condemn both dogma and practice; and that the people of whom Mr. Roberts is one, profess to be the true believers in those books and the teachings of Joseph Smith; and for these reasons these believers called Josephites, whom the HERALD represents have the indisputable right to protest against any possible legalizing of the obnoxious dogma and practice, though it may be covertly done by sending Brigham H. Roberts, a polygamist to Congress.

BOOK OF MORMON IN HAWAIIAN LANGUAGE.

WE have received from Bro. G. J. Waller, of Honolulu, Hawaii, a copy of the Book of Mormon in the Hawaiian language, the result of three years' labor and care of Bro. Waller. The translating of the work up to and including the first three chapters of the Book of Alma was done by Bro. J. M. Poepoe. The remainder by a Hawaiian named G. M. Kameakua.

Under date of November 9, Bro. Waller wrote:—

An edition of the Book of Mormon was issued by the Utah Church (G. Q. Cannon being the translator) about the year 1852, but that has now run out, and we ought to be able to find a ready sale for the five hundred copies we are now issuing, amongst the numerous Hawaiian members of the Utah Church, unless they refuse to buy as seems to have been the case with the Book of Doctrine and Covenants which we published a few years ago.

Well, I am thankful that the work is finished. I hope that if not now the time will soon come when the Hawaiians will appreciate what has been done for them. I felt it was the duty of the church to provide them with the translation of this Book in their own tongue, so that they might have an opportunity of reading the record of the Nephites themselves; and I hope and look for an extension of the work as a result; and if the Master approves and accepts of it I shall feel amply rewarded for what I have done in connection with it.

All that I feel that I need say in connection with my labors in getting out this edition, in the work of translation and other matters is that I have noticed that the same power that was made manifest in opposition to this work when it was first started, was active here, trying to discourage and delay; while on the other hand the wisdom and power of the Lord were plainly shown forth in meeting emergencies and providing a translator when otherwise it seemed it would have been almost impossible to have completed the work, at any rate for a very long time.

From a recent letter from Bro. Kelley I learn that Elder Greene will soon be here. I am thankful for this, and hope his and our labors together may be productive of good.

With kind regards, etc.

Referring to the foregoing letter; it is not likely that the same objection to this issue of the Buke a Moramona, will be made by our Utah coreligionists that they make to our edition of the Doctrine and Covenants. The Book of Mormon used by the Utah Church and our own are alike, unless a change has been made by them in the last few years, which is not likely; but there is a very wide and significant difference between their Book of Covenants and ours, such change and difference in these books dating from the fall of 1876, when President Brigham Young caused Section 111, the Article on Marriage, to be taken out and the so-called revelation on celestial marriage to be put into the book, together with a lot of other things, sayings of President Joseph Smith, B. Young, etc. All other editions of the Book of Covenants issued by the Utah Church and the Reorganized Church, from the first edition in 1835, 1845 down to 1869, and until 1876, were alike.

The zeal and successful labors of Bro. Waller and his helpers are deserving of all praise.

The Book sent us is a large, fine edition in excellent print.

SUCCESS IN UTAH.

THE following extract is from the Semi-Weekly Enquirer, of November 29, published at Provo, Utah. The Enquirer, though not a religious paper, is edited by and under the management of members of the Utah Church; and hence this friendly notice of the labor and success of Elder Wight is appreciated; the more so on account of a disposition manifested by many in that country to ignore or ridicule the work of our brethren. We are pleased to hear of the success of our young brother; and hereby extend our thanks to the Enquirer for this respectful notice:—

Elder D. W. Wight, of the Josephite Church, reports seven baptisms during the last week, mainly in the small wards north and west of Provo. He says that there are two or three other candidates, but they will probably not be ready until his return, as he is going into another county. Mr. Wight has been laboring alone for the past month, and has preached thirty-two sermons in that time.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

BRO. WILLIAM H. KELLEY writes from Coldwater, Michigan, November 26, that he is making his first visit there for ten years. He reports himself as feeling quite well, but says Bro. Gomer T. Griffiths was sick at last account. Bro. Kelley says:—

That is right; knock Roberts out. Go on and be happy.

Under date of November 22, Bro. J. C. Clapp writes from Chesterfield, Tennessee:—

I have seen your last chapters on B. H. Roberts, and you are just driving center every shot. It is just what I knew ought to be done and could be done if the right man took it in hand.

Bro. Henry C. Smith, writing from Orting, Washington, November 16:—

The saints here—seven all told—I believe are doing all they can for the work, in their patronage in the literary, temporal offerings and consecrations, as well as faithful deportment and prayers; and we bespeak for them in sentiments of love and highest esteem a useful future to the extent of their ability. And I am pleased to say they have the good will and esteem of the people living here; and quite a goodly number not of the faith, through their influence, contribute to the good of the work by supplying our personal wants in house rent, money, and life's necessities; in fact, every one is friendly to us, and are not slow in showing their respect from the truck wagon, the counter, and even the post master in giving us a lock box; and while we feel grateful for such favors, yet we are led sometimes in our cogitations, to ask, "Isn't your pathway strewn with too many flowers to be the same one which your Master trod?" There are about one hundred and fifty veteran soldiers located at this point, supported by the government, and some of them attend our services and seem quite interested. Brn. Enge, John Davis, J. C. Clapp, have the honor of opening up the work here. Brn. H. L. Holt and A. M. Chase are strengthening the cords that lead heavenward. Bro. Chase made us a short call of late and preached five times for us, leaving a good impression; and that little portable organ that he carries with him, together with the musical proclivities of its possessor, does much to interest the people. Bro. Amos is progressing finely in clerical accomplishments, and through humility and faithfulness will make a useful advocate for the Master. Brn. Holt and Enge made us a flying call, leaving with us words of comfort and good cheer. Bro. Holt is diligent in his services for the church notwithstanding his affliction, and beloved by all who know him.

Bro. M. R. Scott, Jr., Correct, Indiana, November 26:—

Please state that I am quite poorly, having wrestled with congestion of the lungs. I took a severe cold while holding forth at Cross Plains, Indiana. I hope, however, to be all right soon, and then will strive to answer some of the many calls for preaching. Let this serve as an answer to the many who have written me in relation to the work.

Bro. John Avondet, of Omaha, Nebraska, 1315 California St., has oil to sell in either half gallon or gallon lots. It is of the same quality as sent us last winter. Those who live in proximity to Omaha, could easily arrange to get it by some one going into the city to trade. Parties who send for it to be carried by express can do so and have express charges added. The oil is worth $4.00 per gallon, $2.00 per half gallon. If sent by express Bro. Avondet will pay one-half the charges. He writes:—

I feel well for my age. The good Lord is kind to me to support me in this glorious work that I love, and I hope to be able to be faithful unto the end of my life.

Bro. J. D. Stead, writing from Southern Illinois, says:—

I have baptized six since last writing to the Herald. Our conference was a good one. I feel well, feel hopeful, and can see signs of improvement in some of the branches.

Elder F. C. Warnky, Argentine, Kansas, November 25:—

I am making nice progress here preaching the gospel; have opened quite a number of new places, as well as here in Argentine. Am well received and many are investigating. To-morrow I go again to Holliday, ten miles west, where I preach four times a month. There I am always royally entertained and provided for. I have seven regular appointments per month, and preach some week evenings as opportunity presents.

Elder W. B. Toney, Kennady, Indian Territory, November 25:—

Please state through your columns, to the members of the "Reorganization," that the "Salt Lake Elders" who told Elder T. J. Sheppard I had joined that church told a "bare-faced falsehood" of the first water, and oblige me.

Bro. E. W. Nunley, South Pittsburg, Tennessee, December 1:—

I am here; aim to commence meeting to-night. We are stopping with Bro. Jacob Gross. He is a good elder; has a nice family. There are about ten members in town, and several belong to the branch who live quite away from here. Aim to be at Sequachee City soon.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

BRO. T. W. WILLIAMS' address is No. 718 San Julian St., Los Angeles, California. He writes quite encouragingly under date of November 21.

The Dynamite Cruiser, published at Leon, Iowa, county seat of Decatur County, devotes over three columns of space of its issue of the 30th to a writeup of Graceland College. The article sets forth the character and general benefits of the institution and commends it to the patronage of the general public. Thanks for good words.

Brn. William Anderson, Frank Criley, Frank M. Weld, and Asa S. Cochran, have formed a Real Estate company, at Lamoni, for the purpose of aiding those saints who may desire to learn of locations in the regions round about, and to give reliable information regarding Lamoni, the lands about it and the conditions attending. Write them for particulars.

Some one has sent us copies of Leaves of Healing and "I Will," publications issued by "the Rev. John Alex Dowie, of Chicago, General Overseer of the Christian Catholic Church." Thanks for the issues.

Sr. Addie Robinson writes that she and her husband, the only saints there, would be pleased to have elders call at Atkinson, Illinois. They desire that the truth be presented to friends and neighbors.

Sr. R. L. Goreham, of Jamaica, Iowa, ten miles west of Perry, extends an invitation to Bro. C. Scott, J. S. Roth, or some other of the traveling ministry, to labor there. She will pay carfare and furnish a home. She desires to aid the work of which she writes in earnest spirit.

Our cover matter this week, with its statements of prominent Chicago ministers, furnishes much food for thought. The ministry and the studious among the laity will note and analyze the matter given. Study and thought are essential to comprehension of conditions. We understand it to be the privilege and duty of the church in general to know, to be "in the light," concerning the general developments of the times. It requires "work" to keep up with the rapidly moving current of events in which is shown forth the signs of "the end;" but the faithful intelligent disciple is eager and earnest in his interest in the cause. It is by development that anyone is qualified for larger and capable service. The Lord uses men and women according to their several abilities. "Talents" increase by use, but decay or lessen if buried in napkins. Growth is the order of nature. "Life" is a significant and frequent word in holy writ. Spiritual life no less than mortal life suggests and demands activity; and, one live man is worth many more than a hundred dormant, half-dead, or practically dead ones. Activity is essential to life. Stagnation, as sin, conduces to death.

Some one sends us a copy of the Chicago Chronicle, of November 18, which contains a report of a sermon by Rev. Minot J. Savage, pastor of "the Church of the Messiah," New York, who says the Bible is not the word of God. While the statement is qualified by references to historical and other inaccuracies, the trend of the sermon, as reported, is like many others, now popular, in that it tends to cause unbelief in the sacred record. While the reaction now taking place largely grows out of opposition to the former "orthodox" idea that "every word of the book is inspired," the reaction has gone and is going to the other extreme, and doubt and unbelief follow as legitimate results. The issues between the popular churches and the so-called "freethinkers" are narrowing, and it seems more than likely that they will grow narrower, if they do not altogether disappear. The importance of the great latter-day work looms up as faith lessens in the world.

A press dispatch states that a committee of the National Live Stock Association, which is soon to meet in Denver, Colorado, is arranging if possible to enliven the convention by a "Gran Corrida"—a bull fight; that said committee is considering the proposition, and if fifty thousand people can be accommodated on the grounds will import men and women bull fighters from Mexico for the occasion. We mention this as one of the indications of the times. The world moves; Babylon also moves—to its fall. With the growth of so-called Liberalism there is also a growth of much that is pure (or impure) heathenism. The trend is in some respects backward toward the spirit of callous love of sport that disgraced and degraded and finally overturned ancient pagan Rome.

Bro. E. Maxwell, formerly of Aplegate, now of Central Lake, Michigan, writes stating that some of the elders could do a good work in that region. The people knew the Strangites, but he desires that they learn the true faith of the church. He thinks they would hear and that much good might be done in a general sense for the church. Brn. David Smith and J. J. Cornish had preached some and the people would be glad to see them again.

Bro. E. W. Nunley writes from Increase, Tennessee, the 26th ult. His late letter which read, "none are interested," should have read "some are interested." He is preaching to attentive hearers and looks for an increase in membership.

"Places Mormonism in its true light" is the title given by the editor of the Janesville, Wisconsin, Gazette to an article written by Bro. C. H. Burr, and which was published in the issue of that paper for November 26. Bro. Burr set forth the leading points of interest in good form.

"Emperor Francis Joseph, of Austria, upon the fiftieth anniversary of his accession, issued an order to the army thanking the soldiers for loyalty and fearless valor during his reign, declaring that he would ever look upon the army as the shield and protector of the throne and fatherland."

"Press on!—the triumph shall be won
Of common rights and equal laws,
The glorious dream of Harrington,
And Sidney's good old cause:
Blessing the cotter and the crown,
Sweetening worn Labor's bitter cup;
And, plucking not the highest down,
Lifting the lowest up."

EMERSON said: "What is excellent, as God lives, is permanent. . . . Each man is a hero and oracle to somebody, and to that person whatever he says has an enhanced value." If this be true, how ought the thought to stimulate us to unceasing effort, that what we do and say should be worthy of having influence upon the life of another. Yes; might we not even aspire to making our influence excellent, that it might be permanent? This can only be done by sitting at the feet and learning of him who "spake as never man spake."

MAPLETON, Iowa.

Dear Sisters:—The Home Column has been such a help to me; the Ensign and Autumn Leaves, the Hope and Primary Quarterly are treasures to me by the help they give in teaching the children. I live far from a branch of the church. I regret very much that I cannot take the children to Sunday school, but do the best I can teaching at home. I am trying to instruct my little ones so they will be ready for baptism when old enough. Roy was eight in June; he often says he wants to be baptized, and I am anxious he should if he understands well enough. I think he does, but do not want him baptized unless he does. I have tried to teach him. Have neglected other work when I could not do both, thinking it was the most important to instruct my children so they would be ready for baptism. I try to take an hour each day to read the church papers and Bible. To-day, I was singing hymns, Dora and Maud were sitting on my lap, and Maurice was standing by my knee.

Pray for me that I may set a good example before them. It is hard for me to always speak in a kind and pleasant voice; I fail so often, and I know it does the children harm by hearing them speak in the same tone of voice to each other. I shall never be satisfied until I can speak kindly at all times, but sometimes fear that will never be. I try to excuse myself at times with the thought, if I could go to church and Sunday school I would do better. Then I think, if I am not faithful now I would not be anyway, so strive still harder to do right. I feel that I will be greatly blessed if I am faithful. To-day while singing No. 703 in Saints' Harp, when I came to the words,

"Cheer up, brother, there's a blessing
Waiting for thee; never fear;
Foes forgiving, sins confessing,
Trust in God and persevere," the Spirit came upon me and caused my eyes to fill with tears, and I felt so happy and at peace. And I have felt the same many times while reading the church papers, or Bible, or singing hymns. Now I have confessed a great fault, that I haven't enough patience. Remember me in your prayers, for I need them.

When Roy was about four years old, he was playing in another room, I thought I heard him swear. I was surprised, as I had never heard him use such language. I asked him what he had said. At first he did not want to tell. He wanted me to tell him; but in a little while he told me, and it was what I thought he said. I talked to him and told him how wrong it was to use God's name in such a way. He seemed sorry. In a day or two after that, he was playing by the side of the house and I heard him say the same words again. I asked him if he was not sorry. He said, No. I never thought it did any good to whip children for swearing. I hardly knew what to do. Tears came to my eyes, for I could not endure to have him use the dear Lord's name in such a manner. In a little while I said, "Let us go and pray about it." We went into the bedroom and I prayed. When I was through, Roy looked like he was ready to cry, and said he was sorry. I have never heard him swear since. I have often gone where he was playing, when he would not know I was there, to hear if he did swear when out at play, and have asked others if they ever heard him swear, but they have always said they never had. I try to teach them not to use slang, it is so common, and I dislike it almost as much as swearing.

ENTERTAINMENTS AT DISTRICT CONVENTIONS.

THE question of whether or not it is wise to hold entertainments as a part of our district conventions occupies the minds of many district officers and workers. And it is worthy of careful consideration. For to discard entirely the feature of entertainment would be a hasty and possibly a rash act. And to adopt and continue the giving of entertainments as a part of the district convention would be equally as serious a mistake if not a fatal blunder.

There are points both for and against it. In favor of it there are amongst others these points: (1) It is encouraging to children and to older ones, and keeps them under the influences of home and the gospel. (2) Children and youth will have amusement. If you do not furnish it, the world will. Which shall it be? (3) You can often draw persons into the Sunday school by entertaining them that otherwise would not enter. Some of these may stay with you and learn to love something better.

Against it are these: (1) It occupies time that is very much needed by the workers to study what will improve their work. Time is precious when persons have left home and business to attend convention and conference. Too precious to spend in being entertained. This had better be done at home. We go to these meetings to improve others and to be improved. The time spent in entertainment is largely lost to both these purposes. (2) With the entertainment ever before them, the children (and older ones too, sometimes) get the impression that these meetings are for amusement only or chiefly. Not only these district gatherings, but all the Sunday school work.

In the foregoing remarks we refer to meetings that are purely for entertainment. In many places they have, as a part of the program, papers on useful subjects bearing on Sunday school work. Also blackboard exercises, chart work, etc. This, to some extent, removes the objection of a waste of time, and serves to instruct; and, if rightly managed, becomes profitable.

In disposing of this question we must use considerable wisdom. If the entertainment feature has won a place in your convention, better to not drop it at once, even though you wish to in the course of time. If you meet on Friday morning for convention, let your entertainment be given on Thursday evening. This will supply both the demand for an entertainment and for convention time.

We do not, as an officer of the General Sunday School Association, encourage the giving of entertainments as a part of the program for a district convention. However, there may be circumstances under which it would be perfectly proper and wise. And, too, they may be managed so as to make them profitable. They may be held on the evening previous to the opening of the convention with good results.

What is for the greatest good of the cause is what we should aim for at all times. And whatever this is let us discover, then do it.

May God give us wisdom in all our work.
THE GENERAL SUPERINTENDENT.

THE following are selections from the Galland's Grove, Iowa, district Sunday school newspaper, edited by Sr. Dora Young:—

Every progressive teacher is searching for helps to aid him in the work. Do you read well the Sunday school columns of the Herald? Did you read carefully the article in issue of October 12, on Intermediate Work, from Sr. Marie Clark of Chicago? And what is more important, did you try to apply any of those plans in your next Sunday's work. Many of us complain we haven't the means to buy books on methods of teaching, and if this be the case we should prize most highly the columns of the Herald. Let us encourage our editor of that column by reading well the matter contained therein.

SCHEMES.

HOW DO YOU TEACH CHILDREN TO USE THE BIBLE?

Have both teachers and scholars hold up their Bibles. Compliment classes in which everyone has a Bible. Request them to open their Bibles as near the middle as possible, and ask them what they find. They will generally open to Psalms. Ask a few questions about Psalms, such as: Who wrote Psalms? Who was David? What beautiful Psalm do you know that David wrote? Read or repeat the 23d Psalm. What letters are placed over the Psalm which stand for 23? Who can write 23 in Roman numerals on the board? Can the class tell me how XXIII represent 23? What does X stand for? If X means 10, XX would stand for what number? Now we will count on the III's and the XXII's complete means 23. This is sufficiently long for one exercise.

For another exercise ask them to open to the New Testament. Again, turn to the first book of the Bible. What is it? What does Genesis mean? What is the first verse in the Bible? What is the last verse in the Bible? Class, tell how to write the abbreviation for Genesis, the 3d chapter, the first 5 verses. Capital Gen., period, figure 3, colon, figure 1, dash, figure 5, period. (Gen. 3: 1-5). A weekly drill of this kind soon gives a familiarity to the Bible.

HOW TO GET NON-CHURCHGOING PARENTS INTERESTED.

Have little concerts once or twice a year. The parents come to hear their children.

HOW TO GET CHILDREN TO MEMORIZE SCRIPTURE.

Give out a word such as "love," "faith," "life," and the class finds and learns a verse that contains the word.

Again, give the initial letter of every word in a verse selected. Tell them what book it is in. They will attend to this with a good degree of interest, and will remember the verse.

PLAN FOR A TEACHER'S MEETING.

Study of lesson, thirty minutes.

Study of how to teach the lesson, fifteen minutes.

Study of some scientific work on teaching, fifteen minutes.

1. What of doctrine should be taught to children.
2. What qualities should characterize a primary teacher.
3. Ways of interesting the home in the work.
4. Promotion—How shall it be done.
5. How I study my lesson.
6. How to teach prayer.
7. Reception of new scholars.
8. When crime and bloodshed enter into a lesson, is it wise to go into detail?
9. Memorizing scripture.
10. Suggestions for opening exercises.

The world's Sunday school convention met in London, July 12, 1898, with an enrollment of over 2,500 delegates. One of the ever to be remembered features of this convention was a concert one afternoon by 5,000 junior Sunday school children, under the direction of the London Sunday school choir. After these had sung, 4,000 of the senior children took their places and rendered more advanced music, but no better in execution than that of the little ones.

CLITHERALL, Minn., Nov. 16.

Editors Herald:—I write to correct a mistake which is found in the Herald, which might be brought up against you in such a way as to show that the Herald was not to be trusted.

A month or more ago there was printed in the Herald a letter from Elijah Webb, of Oklahoma, stating that Uncle Thaddeus Cutler was living with him at the time of his death; which is a mistake. Uncle Thaddeus was no doubt living there at the time that Utah elder was there; but for a year or two before his death he had been living with his son, Erastus Cutler, in Summerfield, Marshall County, Kansas. The account of his death, also of the death of his wife, will be found in Herald for May 11, 1898.

Erastus Cutler is a cousin of my husband, and his wife is my cousin, and our oldest son was at Summerfield when Uncle Thaddeus died, and assisted in caring for him in his last sickness.

If you wish further proof write to Mrs. M. J. Cutler, of Summerfield, who is the only Latter Day Saint in the family, unless others have joined the church lately.

Yours for the truth,

EMMA L. ANDERSON.

P. S.—The Cutlerites have always told that when Alpheus Cutler first saw that polygamous revelation, as given out by Brigham Young, he told the people that revelation was no more like the revelation to Joseph Smith upon the subject of marriage than black was like white.

COLFAX, Iowa, Nov. 16.

Editors Herald:—The glorious work moves on and on, as the time and tide that waits for no man. And as God's servants faith and repentance cry, like the power that moves the waters of the mighty ocean, so his power—the gospel—moves the hearts of honest men and women to heed the warning of God's word, leaving on the shores of fleeting time the debris of a misspent life. And in the crisis of the transition take voyage in the lifeboat of God's kingdom to sail successfully over the shoals and breakers of life's stormy way, to anchor at last in the great haven of eternal and blissful rest. How glorious the work that embraces the destiny of man. How magnificent the glory that awaits him, and how powerful the omnipotent hand that created man and the place of his rest, as also the means to obtain it. And how miserable and intense the suffering, how long and dismal the days of sorrow and remorse that awaits the soul of him that knows not God, because of not having obeyed the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. The understanding of man—natural, carnal, and unborn—at the best cannot comprehend these very important and stupendous questions, save only the means employed to accomplish his salvation; so to the extent that this provision requires and demands the understanding, man is permitted to see that intelligent obedience may be rendered in the accomplishment of his salvation. But the knowledge of prerogatives and blessings of citizenship in God's kingdom, and the enjoyment of them, are to the saints in tasting of the heavenly gifts and the good word of God and of the power of the world to come, being made partakers of the Holy Ghost, which things the eyes of wicked and disobedient cannot see, neither their hearts rejoice, because of perception. (1 Cor. 2: 8.)

The faculty of saints for tasting of the power of the world to come is increased and developed by making applicable to their lives in their endeavor to conform to the rules of righteousness all things that may as the result of never ceasing and persistent prayerful study of God's word be revealed by the light of the him who shall teach you all things. So in this the reign of the latter-day glory. Sons and daughters of God's redeeming grace are rejoicing to witness the birth of new creatures in Christ Jesus, and to hear the voice of the Spirit in testimony of the angel's message. Rejoice, O ye saints of latter days, in visions and blessings restored; and pray for me that the infusion of the Holy Spirit, as my abiding comforter, I may not grieve away out of my fleshly temple.

I now begin to realize the life of a missionary in actual service continuously, and to realize the necessity of duty out on picket, and that there must be no sleeping soldiers, and no laying down the implements of our warfare, and to use them enough to keep rust off the sword of the Spirit. In missionary work one does not dare to get away from gospel moorings, for the power that will wreck the now wriggling ship of sectarianism, tossed to and fro and carried about by every wind of doctrine, with its anchorage of uncertainty dangling around the tendrils of spiritualism — "Satanic power," that power that now shakes her from foremast to stem, is God's power, "the gospel," and the word of the gospel is the word of the Spirit.

So, my colaborers in the ministry, let us not be caught and entangled in the flapping sails of the old stranded wreck, lest the same sword that sent the doomed vessel to ruin pierce the body of our spirit, letting its life-blood ooze out in stains upon the Lamb's book of life, that will testify in heaven's court to our folly. So I hope to live spiritually by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God, latter-day revelations included, in the standard books of the church. So when I stand before the people of this generation, with whom I have associated, I, like Paul, can take them to record both in this world and the world to come that I am pure from the blood of all men of my association because I have not shunned to declare the whole council of God.

On the 13th, at Adell, I baptized one honest soul thoroughly converted to the doctrine upon a careful investigation of our claims, who now rejoices and will be a help to the cause, being able upon her continued study, by the help of the good Spirit, to defend the cause; her name is Anna Beam. She is the fruit of our tent effort there last July, and her husband will be the next to follow soon, I believe. And now the Adell saints a part of Perry branch have a fair show. On the 16th of October last, by order of district conference, I ordained Bro. Boatwright, who now as priest takes the lead of their meetings just organized, imparting advice and spiritual food to eager and willing to receive saints. In my effort just closed there, on the 13th, he preached his first sermon, a credit to the cause and source of joy to the saints; and will, if humble, be a good preacher yet. So as a branch we are in pretty good health, spiritually, allowing its president to say it; and our rule is and has been to baptize no one unless they have our position thoroughly explained to their comprehension, for to keep back any of the claims until after the union with us, is to take advantage of them, which is not right.

Elders, priests, and teachers, put the books before the people; don't fear if you saw Book of Mormon or Joseph Smith that some one will not come into the church; honest ones will, and dishonest ones will not, and better settle it before and save trouble, for if persons will not believe those things before they come in, the chances are they will not afterwards. Some, however, with all our caution, have been baptized in our branch who said they never heard of the Book of Mormon until they heard it in ridicule by an evil disposed person; and now say it turned them against us and our claims, and they will not attend our meetings, neither our Sisters' Prayer Union; our Literary Society was advised to leave it out of their study by the same one that was afraid to say Joseph Smith or the Book of Mormon to them, who now have denied the claims of them (Joseph Smith and the Book of Mormon). But the book has been retained in the class, notwithstanding the advice to discard it on account of outsiders. The book stays, and so do the outsiders, and so do all the saints that by the book were converted; and since their coming into the church last April, their love has increased for it, and they now recite whole chapters of both the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants. Sr. Martin, formerly Hawley, has done by her talent in the use of these books what would have required a great deal of preaching without their use, that puts it mildly. If any of the elders can visit this class, and see the way it wins the admiration of the visitors not of the church, if they have any fear, it will surely depart and go to where it belongs.

I am now at Colfax. A few good saints live here, that are doing what they can. There are some here who united with the church in '47. Bro. and Sr. Batty, who now are standing as the giant oak, never shaken by the storms of dissolution. I am in the harness to help pull the load; not for a mere show. So God give strength to all thy saints, and courage give them too. In gospel bonds,

J. W. MORGAN.

ANGOLA, Kan., Nov. 28.

Editors Herald:—I left home about the first of November, for this place, where I have been laboring in connection with Bro. James Davis. We have been preaching in several schoolhouses in the region round about. Most of the time our crowds have been small, excepting Sunday night. At present we are laboring at the McCannon schoolhouse. This is the most favorable prospect we have struck.

Since coming here Bro. William France has departed for the spirit land. He passed away very suddenly November 23. Many came out to the funeral service, which was held in the Methodist church, where we discoursed to them on the future condition. Bro. France had the esteem and respect of the neighborhood. Kind hands laid his mortal remains to rest in the village cemetery, to await a glorious resurrection. Life is fleeting; time is passing—how necessary it is to improve the golden moments as they appear before us.

This leaves me rejoicing in the gospel of God's dear Son. The Spirit's presence sends cheer and comfort to my soul when standing to declare the word, or when performing the various duties devolving upon an elder. May God bless the ministry everywhere, that we may have the favor and recognition of heaven.

Yours for the right,

A. M. BAKER.

ANACORTES, Wash., Nov. 24.

Editors Herald:—Thanksgiving evening, and the third in rotation that I have not been permitted to be at home with my family; yet my lines have always fallen where there was no lack of good cheer and plenty to eat; so I am still thankful.

Since writing you we have taken a trip from our base—Castle Rock—into the regions of Roslyn (where three were baptized), Orting, Tacoma, Seattle, and Bay View; all in the State of Washington. To-night finds me turned homeward with about four hours to put in here waiting for the boat. Bro. Holt and I left Castle Rock for Roslyn, October 18, I believe. At Roslyn we found about a score of saints, who made us welcome and with whom we passed a very pleasant week, closing our stay there by celebrating the nuptials of Bro. J. P. Hanson and Sr. Donna Holmes; Bro. Holt tying the knot. This seemed to be a union that was fitting in every sense, and with our hearty good wishes we bade the wedding party adieu and started for other fields; Bro. Holt going to join Bro. Enge in an effort near Ellensburg, while we paid the saints at Orting a visit. Here we were welcomed by our old friends Henry C. Smith and wife, of Lamoni. I find that they are doing a good work and it is a pleasure to labor where the work has been recommended by such workmen.

A pleasant and profitable four days are spent here, five sermons preached, and we go on to Tacoma, where for a week or nine days we are very busy, preaching and looking up the saints. Here we were privileged to meet another of our Lamoni families, Bro. and Sr. Sherman Wightman. They are also "living epistles" of the gospel, and their neighbors do not fail to "read" them. Here, after much search, we found about a dozen saints, to whom, with a limited number of outsiders, we endeavored to "break the bread of life," and felt that the Master gave his blessing in so doing. There are noble saints here, who were very lonely; but we succeeded in getting them together, and in our meetings at South Tacoma, and also on Eleventh and N. streets, we feel that they are better acquainted with each other, and that life will not need to be quite so lonely hereafter.

From here we went to Seattle, where we are met by Bro. Holt, Bro. Enge going on to Fair Haven. We spent a few days looking up the saints, and finding that there was sufficient and the right kind of material, at our Sunday meeting (which began at eleven a. m. and lasted until nine p. m.) we organized them into a branch with Bro. George E. Ward president, Bro. J. H. Reynolds teacher, and Sr. Florence Wolfinden as secretary. Bro. Reynolds was ordained teacher at our evening service. This branch will probably number about twelve or fifteen at first. May it increase until it lightens the entire city.

Monday evening we take the steamer for Anacortes, where we are unloaded about five o'clock Tuesday morning. Here we take a rowboat for Bay View, eight and one-half miles distant across Padilla Bay. Here we receive a hearty welcome from the few saints living there and from various friends who had listened to the preaching by Bro. Holt last year, and in former visits of one or more I believe. Here we secured the use of a store building, the owner of the hall that was spoken for by the saints and contracted for verbally having yielded to his spiritual adviser and decided not to let us preach in his building, even though he had given us his word that we might have the use of it for a small rent. But I suppose, as the Book of Mormon says, he thought it no harm to "lie a little" that we might be prevented from preaching in Bay View; and borrowing a lamp and benches from the city hall we commence the services the same night. Friday Bro. H. is called to join Bro. Enge at Fair Haven, and so, Saturday, I am left alone once more "in my glory;" but not for long, for Sunday evening we are agreeably surprised by meeting Bro. Graham, formerly from Nova Scotia, but now of Avon, Washington. He is a priest, and rendered me good help. Well, when Bro. H. left the people seemed to think that the attraction was gone, and for a few nights our attendance was slim. Those who did come seemed to be very much interested, and our audience gradually increased until it was, at our last meetings, almost as large as when Bro. Holt was there. We had a fair degree of liberty in presenting the word, and feel that good was done.

By card received from Bro. Holt I was informed that he would be in Seattle yesterday; I expect to see him in Castle Rock Friday or Saturday next. We expect to spend a day or two at home and then to the work in Eastern Oregon for the balance of the winter. Our health and that of our family is good, and we are trying to "occupy" till we are called to other fields, or until he shall come whose coming we wait. May the work go on in triumph.

Your colaborer,

A. M. CHASE.

CARDIFF, Wales, Nov. 17.

Editors Herald:—England is now becoming thoroughly aroused over the agitation on "ritualism in the churches." It seems that the Church of England is fast drifting back to Roman Catholicism and the people are beginning to realize what is before them, if something is not done. Lecturers, religious and political, are giving the warning cry and endeavoring to arouse the people to action, and the daily papers are full of it. Ex-Priest Slattery is over here from America, telling what he knows about the Romish Church, and he talks plain. I attended his lecture. The hall was crowded and the Catholic element was out in force. Several times the speaker was interrupted and it looked at one time as though there would be a riot. When the police, whom he had paid to preserve order, refused to act, he jumped off the platform and rushed into the crowd, and in a few minutes the noisy element were on the outside. A large mob gathered outside the hall, which the police with difficulty dispersed.

An editorial in the South Wales Daily News calls attention to the condition of some of those countries where Roman Catholicism holds sway. Quoting from a Spanish government report, it says concerning that country: "In a population of about 19,000,000 there were 8,727,519 persons having no occupation and 91,227 professional beggars, of whom 51,948 were females. There were 43,328 priests and 28,549 nuns; and in this population of only 19,000,000 there were absolutely 6,104,470, or nearly one third of the whole population who could neither write nor read. See Bardeker's Spain, 1898, page 26." No wonder "Uncle Sam" had such an easy victory.

Another rather serious matter that is agitating the people over here is the loss of trade. Germany has been and is still in sharp competition with England, and now America is stepping in. It has nearly ruined the tin trade here in Wales, but I fear with little benefit to anyone in America except the manufacturer, as the workmen simply have to go to America instead of working here. They are willing to work cheap, and by combining as the manufacturers do, by means of the tariff, they are able, so we are told over here, to clear ever one dollar per box above the cost of manufacture. The city of Glasgow recently advertised for bids on one thousand tons of iron pipes for its water works. An American firm's bid was £675 less than the Glasgow firm of contractors. It was then decided to readvertise. This they did, and published the first bids, and although the Glasgow firm made a big drop from their first bid, the Philadelphia firm was still under them, and it is thought will receive the contract. The reason assigned for the Americans being able to underbid the English is that the Americans are able to get twenty-five per cent more labor from their workmen." How do these facts strike those who favor a high tariff because of competition with pauper wages in Europe? I notice in to-day's paper too that American coal is coming into sharp competition with the Welsh. But perhaps you would rather hear news on other lines.

I have been in Cardiff about six weeks and have been laboring in connection with the local brethren in this city most of that time. For some time the branch here has only numbered six members, composed of two families; but these by upright lives have laid a foundation for a good work. My work has been largely among the Brighamites. The first to join us was one of their local elders, a man full of zeal, who had been quite a worker among them, but who is now doing all in his power to point out their error. Seven more were baptized last Saturday, and on last Monday Elder Gould had the pleasure of leading two more into the "watery grave," making ten in all, nine of whom had been members of the Utah church; two of them officers. Some of these people were very firm against us at first, and it looked as though nothing could turn them; but where we failed the Spirit of God stepped in and by vision, and dream, and in the gift of tongues and prophecy, every opposing element was overcome and these souls saved. To God belongs all the praise. But O! isn't it good to work when the Holy Spirit works with us; or, as Bro. Hilliard puts it, "when we take God into partnership with us!" I am convinced more and more every day that if this latter-day work is to succeed it can only do so by God's power accompanying it. The preacher, no matter how powerful he may be, amounts to nothing, so far as saving souls, without the help of God's Spirit. Then may God help his servants to be humble and faithful and not be overcome by either prosperity or adversity. Though the clouds may be thick around us and the powers of darkness manifest on every hand, yet I firmly believe that prosperity is just ahead, and final victory certain to those who will endure. But we need to constantly beware of pride and vain ambition.

Of late I notice what seems to me an unnecessary display of official titles in connection with the names of some of our ministry. It may be all right, but to some of us it looks like a tendency in the wrong direction. Do we honor a man more merely because he is an apostle, a high priest, or a seventy? God says all his servants are "equally honorable" in his sight, and we should gladly give all honor to God. It is good deeds, not position, that merit our esteem. Let us beware of the "heaven" of this world.

"Rumors of war" continue to agitate the people. Sometimes it looks very serious. There is no telling what a day may bring forth. Surely "all things" are "in commotion," and the Lord is working to bring to pass his great work, according to his word. The intimations of the Spirit seem to point to a great work in this land in time not very far distant. In the meantime God's children need to grow and develop in all that is pure and Godlike, and be broadminded as well as full of love, so that the honest may be brought in from all classes and conditions. Some don't like the term "classes," but classes there are here, whether we want to admit it or not. The gospel, however, should make us all one.

The good Spirit is still manifesting its power in the Manchester district. Word comes that Bro. Dewsnup has lately baptized twelve near Leeds. This is cheering to us all, and especially to the busy workers of that district. May others be infused with like zeal.

I expect to remain in these parts till the end of next month. Weather unsettled; plenty of rain; no frost yet.

Still hopeful,

F. G. PITT.

VEVE, Mo., Nov. 30.

Editors Herald:—I have been in the Clinton district since October 15; and last Friday the Sabbath school convention met here. It is grand to know and see how the saints are advancing in the training of the little lambs, thereby preparing them to enter the kingdom of God. Sr. Ella Miller was in the chair. She acted well her part.

Conference convened on Saturday, the loving Spirit dwelling in the brethren, moving in transacting the business. On Saturday evening Bro. D. C. White gave us a splendid sermon. At eleven Bro. F. C. Keck delivered a funeral discourse to a full house, in respect and honor of the child of Bro. and Sr. Segman. At two o'clock, found a full house for prayer and testimony. It seemed to me that if any one present did not belong to the church before the meeting closed he ought to offer himself for baptism, for such testimonies ought to set people to thinking. No doubt they did. The Lord spoke to us in an unknown tongue, the Spirit also giving the interpretation. The writer spoke in the evening to a full house. I continued preaching Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday evenings, assisted by Elder R. T. Walters, and left for Eldorado Springs to hold a series of meetings there.

I have given away one hundred Heralds and a goodly number of Ensigns, and have done some collecting for the silent preacher. The saints are poor, but are dividing and paying up their dues.

I have been wonderfully blessed by the Spirit of the Master in setting forth the truth. May God bless his people.

Yours truly,

J. C. FOSS.

TEMPLE, Mich., Nov. 26.

Editors Herald:—I have just returned from Boyne City, where, in company with Bro. J. A. Grant, we dedicated the saints' church building. We had a fair turnout and a goodly degree of the Spirit to aid. The building was purchased by the brethren, from the Methodist people, about three years ago; a payment made; so much with interest to be paid each year for five years until all would be paid; with the privilege of paying more each year, and oftener; thus stopping interest and the sooner paying the debt. So all went at it, the majority with a will, and in three years they have paid for it and have the deed, which is on record and will immediately be forwarded to the Bishop.

The church building is fair sized and comfortable. They purchased it with organ, bell, seats, furniture, etc.; the cost, all told, about five hundred dollars. This they have paid, besides paying their tithes and offering equal to the other branches of proportionate number, and more than many who have not been paying for churches.

Elder R. W. Hugill, formerly of Five Lakes, who moved to Boyne City and has been with the branch almost from the first, has been of great benefit to the saints in that branch; also to the scattered ones near by. Bro. Hugill has endeavored to do well his part as president of the branch. He enjoys the Spirit of the Master, and is respected by the brethren and men of the world.

I left the saints at Boyne City rejoicing in the work, with Bro. J. A. Grant to deliver a few more discourses, I to come to this place to confirm two baptized by Bro. A. Burr, and do a little more preaching, etc. Temple is a new place opened up by Elder J. R. Beckley last winter, while working here with his team, logging and lumbering. There is no church building of any kind; the schoolhouse is open to all, except on the evenings of school days, and several are favorable to the gospel.

About two weeks ago I was at Freesoil and attended to the ordination of Bro. John Schreur according to arrangement of our last conference. We were wonderfully blessed by the Spirit in the ordination, and in fact in all the meetings on Saturday evening and Sunday. Bro. John is a good man, much blessed by the Spirit, and capable of doing much good. The branch at Freesoil is in fair condition, under the presidency of Bro. Jacob Kaplinger, the priest, teacher, and deacon also doing their part.

The work with few exceptions is moving on nicely, although it seems that all the branches (and especially some) are in need of more missionary help. I believe it would be wise for the missionaries in this district for the winter to spend the most of their time among the branches, and assist the local officers in building up and strengthening the members, as they are in need of such help. Sometimes we get too many new openings, and the members, especially the young, are neglected.

Kind regards to all.

MOUND CITY, Mo., Nov. 27.

Editors Herald:—I was baptized into this church in 1876 by Elder William Powell, of Sweet Home, Missouri, and am thankful that the angel's message was sent this way. Elders Bays, Jason W. Briggs, and B. V. Springer were among the first to bring the message this way; and it grieves my spirit to think of such men falling away from the faith of which they bore such faithful testimony; but as I have seen, felt, and tasted of the blessings of God since I have been in his church, I cannot think of turning therefrom. Dear brethren and sisters, where would I go to find anything better to prepare me for the future reward that is awaiting us? Then, knowing as we do, let us ever strive to keep the faith.

The Ross Grove branch, of which I am a member, has had its ups and downs like many other branches. Sometimes we flourish, and sometimes almost perish; but I feel to thank God that we are getting along very well at present.

We have built us a house to worship in; size 26x36, which will be dedicated on the second Sunday in December, 1898, by Pres. Joseph Smith, if no hindrance occurs. Will notify you if any change is made.

R. K. ROSS.

NEOLA, Iowa, Dec. 1.

Editors Herald:—At present writing I am at Neola, Iowa, trying to preach the gospel to the inhabitants of this small city. Bro. Isaac Carlile has hired the city hall, and there we are holding forth. It was not built for preaching, but as we have fully one hundred "outsiders" for an audience, and the best of attention, we can well afford to put up with some inconveniences for the gospel's sake. What the outcome may be I can't tell, but so far I have felt very much encouraged over the interest manifested.

The Pottawattamie district conference was held at Carson last Saturday and Sunday, and was fairly good. All seemed cheerful and hopeful. I have found this mission—Pottawattamie and Fremont districts—a pleasant field for labor. Am very busy now, and shall expect to be, if the Lord wills, till the farmers begin work in the spring. Missionaries can't do much here during the farming season, but during the fall and winter months opportunities for preaching the word are so numerous that we can't meet half the demands. Our missionary force is not large, but all seem to be willing and desirous of doing all the good possible.

There is much to learn, much to overcome, and much to do, before we can receive many of the most precious blessings that our heavenly Father has promised his saints. The Lord is ready and willing to give, but his saints are not prepared to receive and use for the glory of God, and hence the richer blessings of the kingdom must be withheld till we "come up higher." May the Lord hasten his work in his own due time.

Yours in the field,

GARDEN GROVE, Cal., Nov. 22.

Editors Herald:—Your issue containing circular appeal for the college just received. If there is a Latter Day Saint who has entertained any prejudice concerning the college, they should be swept away by the magnanimous spirit and liberal policy outlined by committee. The position taken is what I have hoped and prayed for since last spring. It must not fail of success. Success to Graceland! All well. Ever yours,

T. W. WILLIAMS.

MAGNOLIA, Iowa, Nov. 30.

Editors Herald:—I believe that if we could all see facts in their true light with reference to Graceland College we would work together and easily "lift the burden." What we lack most is "push" and "system." That the college should be of practical value to our young people, none can truthfully deny; that as honest men and women we can repudiate a debt, is incompatible and wrong. Talking of mistakes made in "expense of building" is crying "over spilled milk" and our only way out is pay out. Shall we, like some, do all the grunting at the small end of the log, or sweat if needs be, to find satisfaction in the end? We believe the church to be the "body of Christ;" shall we thus dishonor Christ's body? If through a mistake you injure your body or contract disease, do you say, "Well, I'll just suffer and die, because it's through mistake"? No, you seek healing, perhaps the more.

I confess that the greatest grumblers, so far as I have observed, are the lovers of the dollar, and the best able to pay. Some have said to us, "Preachers' boys are tough" and "saints not all they should be" in Lamoni. If true, too bad; but it argues naught against the enterprise; it does not pay the debt, and best of all, if your sons and daughters want education and religious development, where are the opportunities as good as there? And, if they want the evils, they can get them anywhere on earth; and, too, it sounds like arguments of some outside the church—"Don't want to join because you have such and such in your church;" forgetting what they have outside for associates.

But now as to what can be done: On Tuesday evening, November 29, the Magnolia branch gave an oyster and general supper. Ice cream, popcorn balls, etc., were sold, netting us $35.32 for "Graceland." All entered in heartily, shoulder to shoulder. The people received value for their cash and were highly pleased. The supper answered two purposes: First, saints all contributed a little and enjoyed "a good thing;" second, about one half of amount received was from "outsiders." The latter were heard to say, "It's fine;" "When will they have another?" "Our people do not succeed, as yours do, in a supper, because they go in to see how much they can make, while you see how well you can please." Anything wrong about helping to "enlarge our borders" that way? No; not when they come willingly and go away happy. So we hope to see this, or something else observed, by all branches and give to Graceland success, and also to observe our whole duty, to do it.

GREENLAND, Col., Nov. 21.

Editors Herald:—Myself and wife united with the church at Little Sioux, Iowa, in 1894. Since then four of our children have been baptized. We removed in March, 1889, to Elizabeth, Colorado. Had a very pleasant trip, with the exception of a few stormy days.

This is a very fine country, about forty-five miles southeast of Denver. The principal features are stock raising and dairying. Wheat, oats, and potatoes can be raised with good success without irrigation. We have united with the branch at Denver. Have not been able to attend church services on account of distance.

Bro. J. B. Roush, of Denver, was here the latter part of July; preached several interesting sermons with good interest. Should any elders be passing we would be glad to have them call and preach. No trouble in securing a place to preach.

We are striving to do all we can for the good of the church. Pray for us.

BOYNE, Mich., Nov. 29.

Editors Herald:—The Boyne City branch has completed paying for its church building, price three hundred dollars, in three years—two years ahead of the contract. Bro. J. J. Cornish preached the dedicatory sermon and Elder J. A. Grant breathed the dedicatory prayer. I might say that both efforts were grand successes, being made very effective by a goodly portion of the Holy Spirit.

Bro. Grant has also occupied the stand four times while here, with telling effect we think. The infidel, the Christian, the saint, and the sinner, I believe were all made to feel the force of the Scriptures mingled with the Holy Spirit. May these noble defenders of the cause of Christ live many years in the work they are enlisted in.

The Boyne branch is in a fairly good condition, with fifty-eight members—not all live ones though; one presiding elder, one priest, one deacon, and one visiting elder. I think the desire of the larger part is to "come up higher," while some are careless and indifferent to the covenant made with God. It really looks as if a good many people do not realize what they have done when they made that covenant. Hardly a so-called saint would think of breaking a contract with his fellow man, yet I fear so many, many forget the contract (covenant) made with the great God at the water's edge in the morning of their life in the kingdom of God. Working and praying for the cause of Zion, I remain,

Yours in bonds.

CHAPTER 9.—Concluded.

MR. ROBERTS next with great flourish points out how that people were led in the face of difficulties across the plains to the Rocky Mountains; the forming of colonies in Utah, Idaho, Arizona, Wyoming, and Colorado; the establishing of stakes of Zion; relief societies; improvement associations; Sunday schools; etc.

Though he has doubtless overdrawn the picture and painted its leading features in more brilliant hues than the facts would justify, we will not follow him, for all this is immaterial in establishing his claim that God's favor has followed that people, unless it is shown that the works cited were performed either by the direction or the approval of God.

Mr. Roberts next comes forward with the following:—

Among the first acts of the Twelve after the martyrdom of Joseph and Hyrum was one to greatly increase the numbers of the seventies—the quorums of the priesthood which more especially constitute the foreign ministry of the church. At the October conference in 1844 the quorums of seventies were increased from two to ten. Since that time the seventies have been increased, until now they number one hundred and seven quorums, comprising a body of seven thousand men, whose special calling it is to preach the gospel abroad. Josephites complain against the church for thus increasing the number of quorums of seventy; and mark it down as a violation of the order of the church, and quote as proof the following from the Doctrine and Covenants:

And these seven presidents are to choose other seventies, besides the first seventy, to whom they belong, and are to preside over them; and also other seventy, until seven times seventy, if the labor in the vineyard of necessity requires it.

This they say limits the number of quorums to seven, and therefore no more than seven ought to be chosen. The prophet Joseph, however, when the first quorums of seventy were being organized said:

If the first Seventy are all employed, and there is a call for more laborers, it will be the duty of the seven Presidents of the first Seventy to call and ordain other seventy and send them forth to labor in the vineyard, until if needs be, they set apart seven times seventy, and even until there are one hundred and forty and four thousand thus set apart for the ministry.—Roberts, 105, 106.

Yes, the Twelve did at that time increase the number of seventies, not only to ten, but to eleven full quorums, and about forty of the twelfth quorum. (See Times and Seasons, Vol. 5, p. 696.) And truly it was the Twelve that did it. The law providing that the Seven Presidents of Seventy should choose was ignored, as the following extracts from the minutes of the conference will show:—

Elder G. A. Smith moved that all in the elders' quorum under the age of thirty-five should be ordained into the seventies, if they are in good standing, and worthy, and will accept it. The motion was seconded and carried unanimously.—Times and Seasons, Vol. 5, p. 695.

He [Brigham Young] also selected a number more to go into the seventies, after which the remainder of the morning was spent in calling out the several quorums of seventies, and giving charges to the several presidents.—Times and Seasons, Vol. 5, p. 696.

This indiscriminate ordaining of men without regard to the law or a calling from God is one of the things we complain of.

One thing is certain; there is no provision in the law for more than seven quorums of seventy. If Joseph Smith did say what Mr. Roberts quotes him as saying, his unsupported word is not law; especially when he is out of harmony with the law. Again, there have been so many things written into his history since his death that we are slow to believe him guilty of writing that not warranted in the law, until we have more proof than can be found in doubtful publications.

Mr. Roberts quotes this purported statement of Joseph Smith from the Millennial Star, volume 15, which was published in 1853. This is especially suspicious when we consider that nine years before its publication they had transcended the bounds of the law in an irregular and indiscriminate way; and something of this kind was needed to bolster up their past acts.

Then, while we do not accept Joseph Smith's word in preference to the law, we refuse, upon such testimony, to place the responsibility of this departure at his door.

Mr. Roberts proceeds to enumerate the countries where they have done missionary work and the periodicals and books they have published, all of which could have been done without God's approval, hence it is irrelevant.

After an introduction on the necessity for and the great benefit of the doctrine of baptism for the dead, Mr. Roberts gives us a tabulated statement of the number receiving this ordinance in the temples of St. George, Logan, Manti, and Salt Lake, as an evidence of the great work done by the people of Utah; but in addition to this he gives a statement of the number of "Ordinations to the priesthood for the dead;" "Endowments for the dead;" "Sealings (husbands and wives) for the dead;" "Sealings (children to parents) for the dead;" none of which is contemplated in the law of God; nor does Mr. Roberts attempt to show any justification for these additions.

Baptism for the dead is only legal and acceptable when performed either in Zion, or her stakes, or in Jerusalem, and in a house dedicated to and accepted by God, as the following will show:—

For, verily I say unto you, that after you have had sufficient time to build a house to me, wherein the ordinance of baptizing for the dead belongeth, and for which the same was instituted from before the foundation of the world, your baptisms for your dead cannot be acceptable unto me; for therein are the keys of the holy priesthood ordained, that you may receive honor and glory. And after this time, your baptisms for the dead, by those who are scattered abroad, are not acceptable unto me, saith the Lord; for it is ordained that in Zion, and in her stakes, and in Jerusalem, those places which I have appointed for refuge, shall be the places for your baptisms for your dead.

And again, verily I say unto you, How shall your washings be acceptable unto me, except ye perform them in a house which you have built to my name? For, for this cause I commanded Moses that he should build a tabernacle, that they should bear it with them in the wilderness, and to build a house in the land of promise, that those ordinances might be revealed which had been hid from before the world was; therefore, verily I say unto you, that your anointings, and your washings, and your baptisms for the dead, and your solemn assemblies, and your memorials for your sacrifices, by the sons of Levi, and for your oracles in your most holy places, wherein you receive conversations, and your statutes and judgments, for the beginning of the revelations and foundation of Zion, and for the glory, honor, and endowment of all her municipalities, are ordained by the ordinance of my holy house, which my people are always commanded to build unto my holy name.—Doc. and Cov. 107: 11, 12.

Therefore, before introducing this line of evidence Mr. Roberts should have laid the foundation for it by showing that St. George, Logan, Manti, and Salt Lake City were in Zion, or her stakes, or in Jerusalem. This he has made no attempt to do, and we might leave it here, as it has not properly come before us, hence is not entitled to consideration. However, we will make a few references which will aid the reader in getting at the true status of their temples and temple building, of which they boast so much.

The clause in the above quotation concerning the house of God "which my people are always commanded to build," is interpreted to mean a standing commandment, always in force, to build a house unto the Lord. Mr. Penrose says of this:—

That was a commandment which the Lord says is always given to his people.—Penrose, p. 5.

The Lord says no such thing. There is a difference between a commandment "always given," and the words of the book "always commanded." "Always commanded," evidently means that they are not authorized to build without a command. That it is to be so understood is evident from the fact that in each case a separate and distinct command was given regarding the building of the temples at Kirtland, Independence, and Nauvoo. The circumstances attendant and instruction attending the attempted temple building at Far West are also very plain upon this point, as the following extracts will show:—

The same day, August 5th, the Presidency, High Council, and all the authorities of the Church in Missouri, assembled in council at Far West, and unanimously resolved to go on moderately and build a house unto the name of the Lord in Far West, as they had means, and appointed Edward Partridge treasurer, to receive all the donations and subscriptions for the erection of the House of the Lord; Isaac Morley to be his secretary.—Millennial Star, Vol. 16, p. 54.

Here was an attempt to build a temple without revelation. How did it terminate? Read the following:—

Also voted unanimously, that it is the opinion of this council, that there is sufficient room in this country, for the churches to continue gathering from abroad; also that the building of the House of the Lord be postponed, till the Lord shall reveal it to be his will to be commenced.—Millennial Star, Vol. 16, p. 89.

Mr. Andrew Jenson, a voluminous writer of the Utah Church, says of this:—

When Joseph arrived there he counseled that the building of that house should be postponed until the Lord should reveal it to be his will to have it commenced.—Historical Record, Vol. 7, p. 434.

In the above we see the counsel of Joseph Smith on temple building, which plainly controverts the erroneous idea that a commandment to build is given in perpetuity, justifying the building at any time without special direction. Compare with this the utterances of Brigham Young on February 14, 1853, when the ground was consecrated for the temple in Salt Lake City:—

Some might query whether a revelation had been given to build a house to the Lord, but he is a wicked and slothful servant who doeth nothing but what his Lord commandeth, when he knoweth his master's will. I know a Temple is needed, and so do you; and when we know a thing, why do we need a revelation to compel us to do that thing? If the Lord and all the people want a revelation, I can give one concerning this Temple.

In a few days I shall be able to give a plan of the Temple on paper, and then if all heaven, or any good man on the earth will suggest any improvements, we will receive and adopt them.—Millennial Star, Vol. 15, p. 391.

Brigham Young not only proceeded then without revelation, but boastfully and blasphemously notified the Lord that if he wished a revelation Brigham could give one. Brigham was first to give his plan, and then if heaven or any good man would suggest any improvements they were to be adopted. And we are asked to accept such work as an evidence of the "favor and blessing of God" upon a people, and to believe that the house builded under such circumstances is the temple of the Most High.

Nor are we given any assurance that the edifices called temples at St. George, Manti, and Logan are built by any better authority.

To-day the title to the Kirtland Temple, the only one now standing in the world which was built by the command of God, is in the Reorganization, and we hold ourselves in readiness to build, or assist to build, any other house when directed to do so by the command of God; but our souls revolt at the thought of accepting as God's house a building the plan of which was devised by Brigham Young and announced to the church in such boastful and disrespectful language. We can scarcely conceal our indignation at the impudence that asks us to accept works done in such places as evidence of the "favor and blessing of God."

Mr. Roberts next seeks to make a point by claiming that the people of God were to be persecuted, and quoting passages of scripture to that effect, and then adding:—

Since the death of the prophet Joseph, the same Powers which pursued him and the work he established have continued their hostilities against the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. It is the elders of that church, not the elders of the Reorganized church, who have been hunted by mobs, and beaten for no other crime than calling men to repentance. It is the blood of the elders of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, not of the "Reorganized church," which today unavenged crimson the soil of the states of Georgia, Tennessee and Mississippi.

It is the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, not the "Reorganized church" which has been constantly assailed, despoiled of its property, its members driven into exile, hundreds thrust into prison, whole communities terrorized—and all this through the administrators of the government acting under a mistaken zeal created by the persistent misrepresentations of sectarian priests and religious bigots—some of our "friends" of high standing in the "Reorganization" joining in the hue and cry against the saints of God and aiding in the work of misrepresentation.—Roberts p. 111.

This is partly true and partly untrue. More than once has the writer of these lines faced lawless mobs; several of his brethren have done the same. We "have been hunted by mobs, and beaten for no other crime than calling men to repentance." But, thank God, the opposition we have met, like that which was encountered by our fathers in the days of the martyr Joseph, has been lawless opposition. We have not been convicted of crime by courts of justice; nor are the leading offices of the Reorganization filled by ex-convicts from the penitentiary. If there is any glory in a criminal record, Mr. Roberts and his associates are welcome to it; but we prefer the sentiment of the apostle Peter:—

For it is better, if the will of God be so, that ye suffer for well doing, than for evil doing.—1 Peter 3: 17.

That since the early days of persecution we have gained some favor where we are best known, is true; but we have done so in harmony with and in fulfillment of the following promise of the Lord given in 1834:—

And let all my people who dwell in the regions round about, be very faithful, and prayerful, and humble before me, and reveal not the things which I have revealed unto them, until it is wisdom in me that they should be revealed. Talk not judgment, neither boast of faith, nor of mighty works; but carefully gather together, as much in one region as can be consistently with the feelings of the people: and, behold, I will give unto you favor and grace in their eyes, that you may rest in peace and safety, while you are saying unto the people, Execute judgment and justice for us according to law, and redress us of our wrongs.—D. C. 102: 7.

The Reorganization has by action of the body, as well as through its committees and representatives, favored wholesome legislation against the crimes of polygamy and unlawful cohabitation; but we challenge the proof that we have aided "in the work of misrepresentation."

Having now followed Mr. Roberts to the close of his attack, and considered every material point, we submit our answer to the careful consideration of the reader, and pay our respects to Mr. Penrose, after which we will treat the subject from a more direct standpoint.

CHAPTER 10.

Now COMES Mr. Charles W. Penrose with his "Priesthood and Presidency;" but our reply to him will be brief, as in replying to Mr. Roberts, and in incidental mention of Mr. Penrose's work, we have considered the most of his material points.

Mr. Penrose, like Mr. Roberts, whom he apes, generally contents himself in assertions for which he offers no proof. We have in these pages so frequently called attention to this method that it is only necessary here to ask the reader to carefully discriminate between that which is asserted and that for which proof is offered. We shall therefore not reply to many of his unsupported assertions. Here is one, however, which we wish to notice. Speaking of the Reorganization he says:—

Its leading spirits are chiefly persons who have been excommunicated from the Church of Christ for apostasy and other offenses.—Penrose, p. 3.

We suppose that by the "Church of Christ" Mr. Penrose means the church he represents; but, like Mr. Roberts, he assumes without proof that it is the Church of Christ.

If, with this explanation, his assertion is true, according to Mr. Roberts' philosophy (see p. 34) the Reorganization is a stream flowing chiefly from the church in Utah, and partaking of its nature and characteristics. Of what then can Mr. Penrose complain? However, his assertion is not true. Of the fifteen composing the First Presidency and the Quorum of Twelve Apostles, but one was ever connected with the church in Utah; and he was never expelled for any criminal offenses, if indeed he was ever expelled at all. Just how many Mr. Penrose would include as leading spirits, we do not know; but an examination will disclose, we think, about the same proportion; viz., that no more than one in fifteen, in the other quorums, have communed with the church Mr. Penrose represents. We challenge the proof that any of these few were ever legally expelled or ever regularly charged with criminal conduct; or that any action was ever taken against them by this so-called Church of Christ prior to their having united with the Reorganization.

Mr. Roberts has us all Strangites and William Smithites, and Mr. Penrose has us all Brighamites; and yet they have the audacity to say that we are not persecuted!

The testimony of Mr. Woodruff, as quoted by Mr. Penrose, on page 23 of his pamphlet, is faulty, and would not be accepted in a court of justice. He says:—

Joseph Smith never ordained his son Joseph, never blessed him nor set him apart to lead this church and kingdom on the face of the earth. When he or any other man says he did, they state that which is false before high heaven.

Mr. Woodruff could not possibly know what he here affirms. To suppose that he did is to suppose that he was constantly with Joseph Smith, and especially so at the times and places where it is claimed that the blessing was pronounced. At the time Joseph Smith was in Liberty Jail Mr. Woodruff was not there, nor was he in the State of Missouri at all during the perilous times of 1837 and 1838, according to Brighamite publications. Further, he was not always present in Nauvoo, and hence could not know whereof he affirms. We feel a profound sympathy for Mr. Woodruff, and we are sorry that Mr. Penrose has had so little respect for this old man in his dotage as to drag him before the public by quoting his childish utterances.

Mr. Penrose says:—

In the true church there are order and discipline under competent authority; in the "Josephite" society there are disorder, confusion and continual contention, which Christ says is of the devil (III Nephi xi: 29).—Penrose, p. 29.

In this connection allow us to produce two statements from leading men in the Utah Church, and we could produce much more of the same sort.

Here is what B. H. Roberts says of Governor Wells:—

"When the sow that has been washed returns to her wallowing in the mire, we smile at it.

"When the dog turns to his vomit, we sicken at it.

"When the bird fouls its own nest, we are filled with disgust.

"But when a man—and that man a Governor of a State—discredits the marriage system which gave him birth, stamps the brand of dishonor on his own parents, and assumes an attitude that carried to its legitimate conclusions, would put his own sisters beyond the pale of the law and mark them as outcasts, then there is no comparison that can express one's contempt and disgust for such a craven.

"I knew Gov. Wells's father. An honorable man he was, possessed of broad views and statesmanlike qualities. When I think of this noble character, I can only wonder that he begot so unworthy and craven a son."—Salt Lake Semi-Weekly Tribune, Nov. 8, 1898.

And here is Wells on Roberts:—

Aside from the trouble his election would create, a man whose character is marked by every act that may define a demagogue and who seems to be in constant need of a guardian to keep him in his party and in his church, is scarcely worthy the suffrage of his people.—Ibid.

Until Mr. Penrose can point to something among us approximating to this, he should cease to draw comparisons and to boast of pacific conditions. The above are only fair specimens of many of the kind that have attended their career from 1844 until the present.

As all material points in the body of Mr. Penrose's work are answered in the foregoing pages, we leave it; but we wish to give brief notice to his appendix, which purports to contain an account of an interview that S. G. Spencer et al. had with President Joseph Smith at Independence, Missouri, March 18, 1896. On page 33 Mr. Penrose makes Mr. Spencer to say:—

All the foregoing questions were formulated and written, with space left for answers, before we called on Joseph Smith; and the answers, although in one or two instances necessarily abbreviated (when they were long, and insufficient space had been left), are word for word as answered, finally, by him.

On page 35 he makes Spencer et al. to say:—

We declare in words of soberness, knowing full well that no "liar" shall inherit the kingdom of God, that the answers are complete to the questions asked in said interview, entirely free from any misleading feature.

There is something wrong here. These answers cannot be both "abbreviated" and "complete."

In Mr. Penrose's closing remarks he says:—

The unbiased reader will perceive that Mr. Smith does not make any specific denial or refutation of the statements furnished to the News by the four Elders who conversed with him.—Penrose, p. 36.

Had Mr. Penrose given President Smith's version of that interview, the unbiased reader would see quite differently. We here give his statement that the "unbiased" reader may compare:—

STATEMENT OF INTERVIEW.

"LAMONI, Iowa, May 19, 1896.

"BRO. J. M. STUBBART,

"Octavia, Nebraska.

"Yours of 15th received. In reply, Messrs. S. G. Spencer, E. S. Hart, A. G. Young, and W. E. Criddle, were at Bro. Joseph Luff's house, and Mr. Spencer did the talking. He asked me several questions; the form of which I do not remember. If he had them written, I did not see them; but he certainly has not given the answers as I gave them. He had asked me for an interview, and I granted it. He brought the others with him at his own motion, and without consulting me. I had no thought he would misrepresent me. If he had the questions numbered and set-down, I did not see them; nor were his minutes of what I said submitted to me for correction. I hoped that neither he, nor either of them, would go away and lie about me.

"1. Do you claim to be a prophet of God?

"Ans.—I claim to occupy the position and office my father did.

"2. Did your father ordain you to be a prophet to lead the church?

"A.—Not in the sense of installing me in the leadership, for he was living and occupying. But in the sense of conferring on me by his blessing and the laying on of his hands whatever appertained to me as his son and his successor, he did, using the word 'ordain' to mean blessing, conferring and confirming upon me whatever he held that could descend to me as his son by right of lineage. He did this in Liberty Jail, in Missouri; and again at Nauvoo, some time before his death, after I was baptized, in the Brick Store and in the presence of witnesses, of whom James Whitehead, now of Lamoni, was one. Whether he used the word 'ordain' I do not know. He again laid hands upon me and blessed me to the same blessing, just before he left Nauvoo for Carthage, in the north room of the Mansion, at which time a number were present. Whether this may be considered an ordination or not; it was a setting apart by blessing; and I have so considered it.

"3. You say a voice told you to join the Reorganized Church. Is it not possible that the voice was from a seducing spirit—a transformed devil—instead of from God?

"To this question, though I believe the latter part respecting a transformed devil has been added since, I replied in substance:—

"That is not a fair question, Elder Spencer, and is asked with a view to make capital out of a possible answer. I went to God, earnestly asking for direction, as my father did. The conditions were similar; and I believed that if there was a man on earth who had the right to believe that God would deal fairly with him, I was that man. I believe that now. I asked in sincerity, "Where shall I go?" And I was told as plainly as I can hear you speak to-day, to "join the Reorganized Church." I am not prepared to admit, in any sense, that I was deceived; or that the voice was that of a seducing or evil spirit. I am not prepared to say or to believe that God would either deceive me or suffer any evil or lying spirit to deceive me. To admit that would be to throw doubt on every manifestation said to have been received during the rise of the church. It would subject the statements of Joseph Smith, David Whitmer, and others who said they saw angels, and heard them, to grave discredit. No, sir; I do not admit that there was, or could have been, any deception or deceiving spirit in the case."

"Mr. Spencer tried in several ways to get me to admit that it might have been a deception; but I did not at any time make such admission. He has given in two lines what I did not say;

except that I told him I 'heard a voice.' That much is true. I would not and did not say that it could be, or was deceptive. I fully believed it to be true and from God, in answer to my prayer.

"He asked me if I claimed to be an apostle, and I told him 'Yes;' that as my father and O. Cowdery were apostles, after the ordination that made them the first and second elders of the church in 1830, so was I an apostle.

"4. Who ordained you? (The word 'apostle' was not used in this question at that time.)

"A.—William Marks, who was president of the High Council at Nauvoo, and president of the stake at Father's death; William Blair, and Zenas H. Gurley. Elder Gurley was a seventy in Father's lifetime. Elder Blair had been baptized by my Uncle William, who was one of the Twelve at Father's death; these men ordained me to be an high priest; I was then chosen to be president of the church, and set apart to the office.

"I furthermore told him that neither Marks nor Gurley had ever been divested of the authority they held in Father's time.

"5. Did they hold the office of apostle?

"A.—Marks was not an apostle, in the sense of being one of the Twelve; Blair and Gurley had been chosen to the apostleship.

"6. If not, how could he give something he never had?

"A.—Anyone holding the Melchisedec priesthood, could, at the command of God, ordain to any office in the church; and could in case the necessity required it, perform any duty that the apostle might under the same conditions. It is provided for in the revelation on priesthood, section 104, of our book. Don't know what section in yours.

"7. Question and answer about correct.

"8. Have you ever seen an angel or heavenly personage?

"A.—I have seen personages that I believe to have been angels. I then cited to some instances, among them the one referred to; but not in reference to 'getting a doctor.' It was in regard to my administering to those who being sick employed a doctor. I had about concluded not to do so; when I received the visitation referred to. I believed it to be a messenger sent by the good powers above, to show me my duty. It had no more reference to my sending for a doctor than it had to whether I should hire a horse, or buy a dog. I would not say whether this was an angel, as the word 'angel' is sometimes used; but it was certainly a messenger, and not a human personage, such as a living man in the flesh, like you and me. This was in substance the answer I gave in my talk on the subject. I referred him to the men who appeared to Abram as he sat in his tent at the close of the day.

"9. I think in this question Spencer used the words 'practiced polygamy.' To this I replied as stated, adding, 'She always denied it; not only to me but to others.'

"10. Did she, Emma Smith, ever deny to you that he ever had the revelation on spiritual marriage?

"A.—She said that so far as her knowledge went he never had that revelation. That she believed that he did not have it, or give it to the church. That she never saw it, never heard it read, never burned it, or had it burned, and never had anything to do with it whatever. Personally, I do not believe that he did give such revelation; though I do not know.

"11 and 12. There was nothing said about the practice of polygamy in the millennium. The question had reference to the 'resurrection;' and I replied that I knew nothing about the laws that would govern in the resurrection. That I accepted what Jesus said that in the resurrection there was neither marrying nor giving in marriage. That I knew of no authentic teaching that defined what the conditions there would be in detail; but that personally I was contented to accept the conditions of the laws ordained of God to govern there when I got there. That I had lost one wife and had another, and that I was not troubled about whether I should have one, both, or none at all over on the other side. The revelation referred to by Bro. Luff was that in answer to prayer upon the question of plural marriage, or polygamy, I was commanded to 'have nothing to do with it, only to oppose it.' And I stated that I had kept the commandment to the best of my ability.

"13. Do you believe that you will assist us in building this temple—the one to be built here in Independence?

"(Here Bro. Luff suggested, 'Had you not better ask whether you will assist us? We claim to be the church in succession.')

"There was no question whether I thought we would unite with the organized church in Utah; except in the idea of assisting to build the temple in Independence.

"I replied: 'As to the question of who will build or assist to build the temple here (at Independence), I have no opinion to express. I am quite willing that the people indicated by God as his people shall build it. If I and my brethren with me shall be thought worthy of building, or even assisting to build it, all right; I shall be satisfied for the will of God to prevail in the matter.'

"14. The question of authority in Utah came up, but I do not believe the question was in the form of number 14. I think it was simply, 'Do you believe the church in Utah has authority to administer in the ordinances?'

"I replied; that we of the Reorganized Church had always held that there were those in the church that went to Utah and affiliated with that body who held priesthood derived from the church in Father's time. That undoubtedly there were some there still who had not forfeited their priesthood by transgression, and had the right to act for Christ; but that this did not attach to them as a body; only as individuals.

"Elder Spencer here interjected, 'President Woodruff, for instance?'

"I continued: 'Excuse me; I do not care to answer the question as to the individuals by name. Each case must be determined by the conditions when the questions as to individuals may arise for consideration; if such contingency occurs.'

"16. 'Do you say [I think the word "hold" was used] that you have authority to administer in the ordinances of the gospel?'

"A.—Yes sir. I fully believe that I have such authority. And the evidences of the Lord's acceptance and indorsement of my ministry during the last thirty years are quite numerous. I then related some of them.

"17. In reply to the question of who would lead the Reorganized Church in case of my death, I told Mr. Spencer; that the care of the church would devolve upon the Twelve as a quorum, until my successor was pointed out by revelation. That the same rights that I held as the son of my father would descend to my sons. But that the calling of anyone depended on worthiness, as well as lineage, or birthright. That the question of the succession of a son to what his father held would turn on the question of worth, other things being equal. But that the Lord by his Spirit would determine the call.

"18. I have no recollection of any such question as No. 18; certainly, not in that form. It was evidently a forcing of the text referring to the turning of the hearts of the fathers to the sons, and of the sons to the fathers, etc., and the delay referred to was in reference to the baptism for the dead, etc. I had nothing to say why the Lord had not given a permissive command since the stoppage in such ministration mentioned in the revelation of 1841; and I so told Mr. Spencer.

"19. Mr. Spencer's question about endowments and baptisms for the dead was answered by me in this way: 'I know of nothing in the books, nor published teachings of Joseph Smith and his fellow ministers teaching or authorizing endowments. Nor do I know whether any endowments were given in Nauvoo during my father's lifetime.' I knew of none, I did know that there were some baptisms for the dead in the river at Nauvoo for I saw them performed. I did not tell him that there were endowments, for I knew of none. My answer as he gives it makes me to say there were endowments as well as baptisms for the dead; which is not true.

"20. Have you ever inhabited the Nauvoo House?

"A.—I have not lived in the house as a residence. My stepfather finished a part of it, and my mother lived there with him for several years, and died in it in April, 1879. I cannot say what my posterity may do. Personally, I do not expect to live in the Nauvoo House, in its present condition and ownership. It is now occupied and owned by the widow and son of my stepfather, Lewis Bidamon. My stepfather tore down a part of the building and built up another.

"22. I do not think this question was framed in this way. I think the question was fixed up after the men left me. The question was, 'If what is promised, that is, a residence in the Nauvoo House, has failed to be fulfilled, might it not be possible that any other promise made in the same revelation may fail also?'

"To this I replied: 'Yes, it is possible that any promise made to man may fail so far as he is personally concerned; for the reason that all the promises of God to man are conditional, and worthiness or unworthiness has much to do with such things. But I am not aware that the loss of any priesthood right I may have been entitled to as the son of the prophet is involved in the loss of a residence in the Nauvoo House.'

"23. There was no question asked me in regard to my father leaving the keys with me. The question was, 'Did not your father take the keys of his priesthood with him; as the revelation says they shall not be taken from him?' I answered that the revelation stated that the keys of this kingdom should not be taken from him, neither here, nor in the world to come. That unless he transgressed, what was his and what accrued to him because of his faithful work, should be continued his. But that this did not affect the fact of his place being made vacant, nor the right of myself, or another to occupy, if God so willed it. And that the oracles were to be given through him to the church. That men, whether apostles or prophets, were not oracles in the sense of the term used in the revelations. That the oracles there named were the commandments of God contained in the books, or the books themselves for that matter; and the revelations of God to the church. That the revelations and commandments of God were given to the church as a whole, and not to the Twelve alone; and that was one of our reasons for the course we had taken. That, in our judgment, those oracles had been treated as a light thing, and condemnation had resulted, as the revelation stated.

"Mr. Spencer then asked me whether the apostles were not the leading quorum after the Presidency, as the Savior said, 'first, apostles,' etc.

"To this I answered, 'Yes.' I then added: 'I have always held that, had the Twelve, as a quorum, taken the lead at the death of Father and Uncle Hyrum, and carried on the work righteously, and in accordance with the gospel as given to Joseph Smith by the angel, continuing in their places as missionaries to the world, until the Lord had revealed, or called on the one he chose to lead, or become president in its time, there would never have occurred such a scene of apostasy as took place. Nor would there have been a doctrine so evil introduced as we believed had been forced upon the church. That the Twelve, as a quorum, should have taken such steps as guarded the church from imposition, until such time as the one chosen of God to lead had been called, as that quorum was next in authority; but that the Twelve in authority of decision was only one of three, which were equal, as the section on priesthood clearly stated—the Presidency, the Twelve, the Seventy.' (See Sec. 104.)

"It was in this connection that I said the Twelve were the proper ones to lead after Father's death; and I qualified it as I here have stated. I did not, at any time nor in any way indorse the idea, nor the fact that the right to lead the church, at the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, devolved unqualifiedly on the Twelve; though Bro. Luff stated after they were gone that Spencer would so report me.

"I know of no revelation to me on the relation to married people, as asked of in question 12, other than the ones referred to by me in my biography, in which I was told that polygamy was not of God. And I stated to Mr. Spencer, that as I had asked the Lord which church I should join; so had I asked in regard to polygamy, and had been as clearly and positively told that polygamy was not of God. I recollect of no other revelation. If Bro. Luff referred to any other I know nothing of what it was he referred to.

"This interview lasted from about 9 a. m. to nearly half past 11. Mr. Spencer was the talker; the rest scarcely joining in the chat. The talk was long and apparently friendly. I made no statements and took no positions that were either untrue in themselves, or if understood were damaging. That Mr. Spencer and his men may distort and twist what I did say appears to be possible. Mr. Spencer expressed the hope that there might be a unity of the two, 'you and us,' as he expressed it. To this both Bro. Luff and I expressed assent, if it could be done on the lines laid down of the Lord in the works of the church—his word and his will.

"I do not take the position that both the Utah Church and the Reorganized Church are baptizing into the same body of Christ. I took no such grounds with Mr. Spencer. Both Bro. Luff and I gave them to understand that we claimed to be the church in succession. That we had nothing to conceal; and were willing what we had done to be investigated.

"I believe the 'set time' referred to, cannot be properly applied to the practice of endowments and baptisms for the dead. I know of no endowments being practiced in Father's time. There were baptisms for the dead for awhile in the river until stopped, as referred to in section 107, revelation of 1841. I am satisfied that the endowments practiced in Utah were not had in Father's time; they may have been in Nauvoo after he died; though personally I know of none then.

"I never lived in the 'Nauvoo House.' I did live in the Nauvoo Mansion. It would be possible to build the Nauvoo House, and me live in it yet if God so ordered it to be done.

"I did not say the leadership vested in the apostles; I did say that had they remained in their places, and iniquity kept out of the church, the great confusion and wrong that resulted would not have been possible. The conversation on the leadership question was quite long; and some of the answers as sent by you are not only not full, but are absolutely incorrect; as in question 23, which has three in one; and the answer to one, 'Yes,' referring to the keys being taken by Father, etc., is right; but wrong to each of the others. My answers were full, and plain; at the same time, guarded from incorrectness, especially so in regard to the priesthood and lineal right. They have cooked both questions and answers.

"You are at liberty to withstand Elder Criddle or any of them, all over Kansas, so far as I am concerned. Bro. J. R. Lambert is in charge and will give help if needed. But they will not meet you. Those men are not at liberty to use or misuse an interview with me which Mr. Spencer said was for their own private benefit. Besides this, the elders are not bound by any absurd answer of mine to baffling questions, contrary to the books of the church.

Yours in bonds,

"JOSEPH SMITH."

The foregoing, in connection with Mr. Spencer's version, is published in tract form, and can be obtained at the Herald Office, Lamoni, Iowa.

The following letter from the pen of Elder Joseph Luff, who was present at the interview, is important:—

STONINGTON, Me., Sept. 4, 1898.

ELDER ROBT. J. PARKER, Springville, Utah;

Dear Bro.:—Upon my arrival here this morning, yours of the 16th of August was found awaiting me, having been forwarded from home. It finds me with somewhat improved health, for which I feel thankful to God.

Regarding the statement which you say is being circulated there, to the effect that I would not deny the correctness of the report published in the Deseret News regarding the interview had in my house and in my presence, between President Joseph Smith and Elder Spencer and three other elders of the Utah Church, I have only this to say and I put it plainly: IT IS FALSE. I have denied its correctness more than fifty times, and many of the Utah elders whom I have met in various places know that I have denied it with emphasis to them and pointed out some of its almost self-evident falsities. It is a garbled thing in some of its parts. It is disarranged as to the order of the real interview, and in other instances it states the very opposite of what President Smith said. When the thing was first shown to me I denounced it as a vicious misrepresentation of the interview and wrote to President Smith to that effect. I pointed out several of its bad features to different parties.

The statement afterwards published by President Smith relative to the interview is correct, and a copy of it can be had at Herald Office. Surely those people who account President Smith to be a knave will not pretend to believe him to be a fool; yet such he must needs be if in that interview he said what those elders published over their names, for it sets forth a direct contradiction of his public and private utterances and all his writings on the subjects involved, as can be easily discovered by reference to said writings. If Elder Spencer intended to honestly represent President Smith, he ought to have pursued a different course from that which he followed. He pretended to have some questions down in writing and would ask one at a time, then begin writing when an answer was given, and, that too without hearing the answers in full. He never showed us a line he had written nor read a line of it in our hearing. As these men left my house door I turned to President Smith and said: "The next time you hear from that interview you will scarcely be able to identify it," and the sequel proved that I was correct. It was a scandalous piece of work and far beneath the dignity of men, to say nothing of elders of a church, and you are perfectly at liberty to use this statement from me wherever and however and whenever you please, and to let everybody know that I brand the Deseret News' published report of said interview as an unprincipled thing and as bearing the indications that characterize the work of unscrupulous men.

Experience of several years among men who have been seeking to bolster up Utah Mormonism has confirmed me in the belief that I was slow to accept at first; viz., that it would require more than an ordinary lifetime to follow up and expose the malicious misrepresentations of the Reorganization that have been created and peddled by advocates of the Utah Church philosophy. It may be possible that in Utah, Elder Spencer's word may be taken in preference to ours; but the all-seeing God of truth knows who are publishing the naked facts, and to him my testimony is committed, awaiting the judgment hour.

Yours for truth,

JOSEPH LUFF.

—Saints' Herald, Sept. 14, 1898.

In the Deseret News for October 15, 1898, Mr. Spencer seeks to find a conflict between President Smith and Elder Luff, by quoting President Smith as stating,

Mr. Smith says, (Saints' Herald, July 29, 1896) "The questions were not written in my presence, nor did I see them if written; neither were the answers shown me, nor written in my presence to my knowledge."

He then quotes Elder Luff as writing the following:—

"He pretended to have some questions down in writing and would ask one at a time, then begin writing when an answer was given, and, that, too, without hearing the answer in full!"

To make out his case of conflict Mr. Spencer construes President Smith's words, as given above, to mean that President Smith did not remember that Spencer wrote in his presence, while Elder Luff admits that he did write. It will be observed that President Smith does not say whether he did or did not write, but he states that the answers given in the interview were not written in his presence to his knowledge.

We leave these statements without further comment that "the unbiased reader" may read and compare.

Miscellaneous Department.

THE REAL ESTATE ASSOCIATION OF LAMONI.

Notice is hereby given that the name of the association formed by brethren, advertised in last issue of the Herald as "The Lamoni Real Estate Exchange," has been changed from that name to "THE REAL ESTATE ASSOCIATION OF LAMONI."

The change in name is made because the former name is claimed by other parties.

However, the new title better expresses the purposes of the REAL ESTATE ASSOCIATION, which is an association formed for the common good, for the proper conduct of real estate transactions and incidental business; such as insurance, taxes, rents, sales, etc., etc., for the good of all concerned.

WILLIAM ANDERSON, Pres.

F. M. WELD, Sec.

LAMONI, Iowa, Dec. 3, 1898.

BISHOP'S AGENT'S NOTICE.

To the Brethren and Sisters in Decatur District, Greeting:—As I have been appointed Bishop's agent for this district, as as you have all seen by the Herald ere this, I feel it my duty to address you upon the subject of tithes and offerings. The time of year for casting up accounts and settling of bills being upon us, that we may start out the new year '99 with a fresh start, we trust none will forget their indebtedness to their heavenly Father. Surely we all owe him a greater debt than it is possible to owe man. Would it not be wise to pay him in proportion with men at least? If you are owing a neighbor or even several, wouldn't it be treating our Father more nearly as we would like to be treated or have others treat us, if we would divide our means and pay him some too? Can we hope to pay any of our indebtedness unless he blesses and prospers us to whatever degree he may see fit? All is his, and we are his stewards. Will we be wise and just ones? Some may say they can't pay all, without crippling themselves. Pay what you can, if only a few cents, and many are giving their notes for the balance, realizing it to be as much a debt as any. There is no need of me telling you the bishopric has decided the proper way to count tithing is first to pay one tenth of all you are worth, then one tenth of your increase annually, as you have heard this time and again, through the pages of the Herald and from the pulpit.

By our way of thinking, there are but few who have no tithing to pay.

If you think you do not come under the law of tithing, having no tithing to pay, remember all come under the freewill offering clause.

All saints surely feel the special need of means to meet the immediate demands upon the church, and I have no need to urge you to do your duty, especially when we are rewarded only for what we do, and not for what we would like to do. I believe there are many that would pay some if they could only pay enough that it would be worth while to bother the Bishop or his agent. Now saints, don't hesitate on this account. I will be pleased to receipt any amount, and God knows your heart, circumstances, and all, and will reward your mite as well as the rich man his hundreds.

What God wants is for us to be honest to the covenant we have made to keep his commandments. I hope ere long to find every member's name in the district recorded on my books.

Address all communications to me at Lamoni, Iowa. May God bless and prosper you spiritually and temporally, is the prayer of your brother, F. M. WELD, Bishop's Agent.

DEDICATION.

The saints' neat chapel at Mondamin, Iowa, was dedicated on Sunday, November 20, at eleven a. m. The building was crowded. Elder Alma M. Fyrando in charge, sermon by Elder Isaac M. Smith, dedicational prayer by Elder J. F. Mintun. Singing in charge of Bro. S. B. Kibler. Many saints from "regions round about" had come to rejoice with the brave little band of workers in Mondamin, who, struggling against odds, purchased a building, moved, repaired, and made it inviting at $500.55 expense, all paid with $18 20 on hand to be applied on an organ. A collection of $19 05 was taken up. The saints from local points then repaired to G. A. R. hall, to enjoy luncheon, and again met in church at two p. m. for social service. The Spirit gave encouragement for future good to saints there, with suggestions of branch organization in the near future. With present surroundings and encouraging features, we look for great good to Mondamin and vicinity.

ALMA M. FYRANDO.

NOTICES.

To the Saints in South Wales, Greeting:—Pursuant to a resolution passed at the late district conference of the Eastern district of Wales, requesting the missionary in charge to provide for the transfer of three branches; namely, Aberaman, Penygraig, and Nantymoul, from the Eastern to the Western district.

Also, in answer to a request from the Western district that I should so define the line between the two districts, that the three branches above named shall be within the limits of the Western district. The following is presented, which we hope will meet the approval of all concerned.

The dividing line between the Eastern and Western districts of Wales shall be a line running directly north from Cardiff to the county line of Monmouth, and then continuing north along the west county line of Monmouth to the county of Brecknock, ending for the present, or until otherwise provided, at the intersection of the three county lines; namely, Glamorgan, Monmouth, and Brecknockshire. Cardiff to remain in the Eastern district. Officers and members of the above named branches will note the change and report accordingly.

Respectfully submitted,

F. G. PITT.

President of European Mission.

Losing his companion, he was married again November 17, 1862, to Mrs. Caroline Hants, who survives him. Two children born to them. At the age of 22 he joined the Lutheran Church; then tried the Evangelical Church; leaving that he united with the Methodists; not satisfied there, he joined the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints, in March, 1893. He lived a consistent, faithful member ever since. He was the priest of Blendsville branch. He left a wife and two daughters and many friends to mourn. He was loved by all who knew him. The saints will long remember the testimonies he bore in regard to the angel's message. From the word we believe his spirit is in paradise at rest. A large concourse of friends met at the saints' chapel to pay the last tribute of respect to the deceased. Funeral sermon by Elder F. C. Keck, assisted by T. S. Hayton.

HISTORY OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS. (Volumes 1 and 2 now ready.) Provided for by action of General Conference of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Written and compiled by President Joseph Smith and Apostle Heman C. Smith. Invaluable as a correct historical narrative, as a means of conversion to truth, and as a defensive weapon in meeting old and new objections urged against the latter-day work. It contains important documents connected with the establishment, growth, and internal and external affairs and progress of the church. The revelations given in this dispensation are inserted, in connection with accounts of the circumstances under which they were given. Biographical sketches, illustrations, complete indexes, sidenotes for ready reference, etc., are some of the features of the work. Volume 1 begins with the birth of Joseph Smith, the Prophet and Seer, in 1805, and narrates the circumstances of his calling and ministry, the rise of the church in 1830, and until the close of the year 1835. Volume 2 continues the history up to June 27, 1844, —to the assassination of Joseph and Hyrum Smith.

NEEDS OF CHURCH AND PEOPLE.

(Concluded.)

THE Rev. Dr. Frank Crane, Trinity Methodist Church: As to "the needs of the church," that is a broad question, and, broadly answered, I should say that its needs are twofold: first, a true insight as to the purpose of religion, and, second, an organization upon a different economic or financial basis.

1. Religion in a nutshell, is to be preached more as a divine power to transform men on this earth than as a divine "scheme" to transport men to another world.

2. So long as the church depends upon any one class it cannot prosper. To-day it is supported by the well-to-do. As a consequence churches follow the prosperous class, deserting the crowded down-town districts and the regions settled by the poorer classes and going after its supporters into the wealthy suburbs. There is only one remedy for this. It is to adopt the scriptural plan of tithing as a financial basis, placing a tithing vow in the form of admission into its membership. That is one part of the remedy. The other part is to abandon the "neighborhood" church idea, whereby a wealthy community has a fine service and a poor community a wretched one, and adopt the "democratic" idea, placing fine church buildings and able workers and preachers indiscriminately among rich and poor neighborhoods, exactly as the public schools have as capable teachers and as fine schools where the slum children go as they have in Hyde Park.

I consider "missions" among the poor a fraud. Of course they are better than nothing, but the basal idea of them is wicked, for the church with the best it has to offer ought to be among the poor as among the rich. There is no avenue to this but the tithing system, which places all on an equality.

The Rev. J. H. O. Smith, Union Christian Church: Christianity is a system of right personal relations. It reconciles men to God and brings about peace between men. The early Christian church was the grave of strife between classes, and the rich and poor, the Greek and barbarian, met together in sincerest love for God and men.

Every association must have a constitution expressing the faith of those in the organization, and we might expect Christ to give the church a creed, since it exists by his authority. When the apostle said, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God," Christ said he would build his church upon this confession and the gates of the unseen should not prevail against it. Paul said: "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and you shall be saved."

Faith in a personal Savior, the Son of God, was all that was required, but this included all that was necessary to salvation. It was not so much a question what as in whom the convert believed. A theory of the atonement is of less importance than the fact of Christ's suffering for the world.

The church is coming nearer Christ than at any time since the glory of the first centuries of its history, when pure. I suggest a new study of the New Testament, a return to the simple faith, the life of love taught by Christ. In the struggle to live in the fierce, continued business battle men have no time for philosophical speculations. The church more and more is translating into human life the love of God.

The Rev. Dr. Howard A. Johnston: In answer to the question, "Do you see that the church is failing to reach the people?" I would say yes and no. At the beginning of this century the church membership in this country was one in thirteen of the population; now it is one in four of the population, notwithstanding the marvelous growth of the population.

"Is there anything more the church can do to reach the people?" Yes, and there always has been since the time of Christ. Never yet has the church done its full duty.

"Has the church gone away from religion?" Yes and no. The church is imperfect. Members of the church are largely selfish indifference, unfruitful. Thousands who have taken the name of Christ are unconcerned about the salvation of other souls than their own. In so far it may be said a church has the name to live, but is dead. In spite of this element of failure, the church has evidence of a true religious life. Never was the spirit of missions so vigorous as now, at home and abroad. We need broad lines of comparison. Compare the church of a century ago with the church of to-day. The larger influence of the church immediately appears.

There is one test which to my mind is final, after all the church's failures have been confessed—that is the fact that the ideal character in the Christian community is nearer to the character of Christ than ever before. A century ago churches were begun with lotteries. Eighty years ago the ministers always had the best liquor offered to them in the homes of the people. Forty years ago the Christian was not discounted because he was a slaveholder. Forty years ago a statesman's private life was not allowed to affect his public career, but witness Parnell and Breckinridge to prove the higher demands of the people. The man who may command the highest regard of his fellowmen to-day must be nearer the ideal Christ has given than he was ever required to be in the past. This is the final test. And who will deny that these influences which mark the movement to the higher levels center in the Church of Christ, and radiate from that center? The church never meant as much to the community as it does to-day, and it will go on, slowly perhaps, yet steadily, to continue to gain in power for good.

The Rev. Dr. A. J. Canfield, St. Paul's Universalist Church: Adaptation to environment is a prime necessity of all living organisms. Continuity of life can be secured only by constant changes and variations. Christianity, the highest ideal of individual and social life is subject to the same necessity. Hence it has from the beginning shown extraordinary adaptability to the varying needs and experiences of mankind. Transcending the limits of race and clime and the scenes of its origin, it claims to be the sufficient and final instructor of the religious sentiment in every quarter of the globe. Consequently its verbal statements and methods of administration have perpetually changed in order to meet the multiplying requirements of the growing minds and hearts of men.

Nations at different times have need of different forms of government. So with the church or churches. Forms of administration and even credal statements may without ignominy adapt themselves to local circumstances and environment. Indeed they must do so or cease to be effective factors of real life. As a rule, each Christian nation has its national church. Here in the United States an official ecclesiasticism is properly prohibited by the fundamental law of the land, yet the aspirations of our ablest thinkers are in the direction of some sort of an agreement along lines that shall embody the American polity on its spiritual side. It is felt by not a few among us that dogmas and methods of religious instruction based on medieval ideas concerning God and man and the social organism are at least inconsistent with a governmental polity whose existence depends upon faith in natural manhood and democratic ideals.

A new birth of genuine enthusiasm for the redemption of society through American Christianity doubtless will occur, for to outgrow a creed or form has never been and never can be the outgrowing of the gospel.

My own contribution to the current discussion is a substitution not of ethics for theology, but of a change in emphasis. I believe in American Christianity and long for a church that answers to every human aspiration after betterment—an every-day church of humanity in the name of the Highest.

For the five points of Calvinism I would substitute five points of common sense, formulated thus: 1. The universal fatherhood of God. 2. The brotherhood of mankind. 3. The redemption of society through the vicarious character and office of love. 4. The leadership of Christ. And, 5, the final triumph of good over evil, brought about by the faith that works righteousness in this present world as a fitting preliminary to whatever the future hath "of marvel or surprise."

—Chicago Tribune, November 6.

REAL LESSON OF CHRISTMAS.

"Too often in our Christmas religious observances is this thought almost entirely lost sight of, or not sufficiently emphasized," writes Edward Bok in the December Ladies' Home Journal. "There can be no love for God which is unattended with love for man. The final test of a Christian life is not the worship of God, but always the love of man for man. If the message of Him whose birth we celebrate at Christmas teaches us one thing above all others, it is not that we shall try to do for Him as a person, but that we shall seek to do for one another. That is knowing Jesus and clearly understanding Him. And wherever this true conception of His life and teaching is reached, there we find men and women thrilled with the passion for giving. The little child wakes on Christmas morning with its heart full to overflowing with gladness, and by every gift in stocking, or beside cradle or bed, is taught anew the old, old lesson of love. Husband and wife, brother and sister, lover and sweetheart, friend and friend, as they receive their gifts are reminded once more that love is not a dream, but a reality—and a reality which grows more vital, more precious and more enduring with the years. The sick, in chair or in bed, as they open their Christmas packages are almost reconciled to loneliness and pain. The friendless, the poor, the outcast, the waifs on the streets; those who have sinned and seem shut out from God and from man, all begin to feel strange thrills of hope and renewed aspiration as they are taken up and enfolded in the richness and fulness of the Divine love as it comes to them through human love or attention on Christmas Day. That is knowing Christmas in its highest and noblest sense; in its truest conception; knowing it in that spirit from which we derive the surest happiness."

Echoes from Graceland.

CONDUCTED BY GRACELAND COLLEGE.

MORE additions to our Museum! James Farley, of Arizona, has kindly contributed several interesting specimens which will be labeled and placed, under name of donor, in the collection.

Requests to be placed on the subscription list of the appeal, "Success When United," are coming in all the time. One brother from Washington writes, this last week, to be placed down for three subscriptions; another brother, a young man, wishes to be enrolled forthwith for a dollar a month as long as ever the college requires it.

Have you noticed the first batch of names in this week's Subscription List. Watch that list every week and see it grow! Are you not going to follow the noble examples already set, and have your name engraved on the Roll of Honor?

The public rehearsal of the Elocutionary Department was a great success. All taking part performed their tasks exceedingly well, and secured merited applause. The college chapel was full to overflowing.

Lamoni intends to give a Graceland scholarship to one of its rising generation, and to this end a stereopticon lecture will be given at the saints' church on the evening of December 24; subject, Passion of Christ and the Acts of the Apostles. A small charge for admission will be made, and each one attending will be entitled to cast one vote, the only restrictions being that no vote must be cast for one already a student of Graceland, and that the preference is to be given to one unable to meet all the costs of tuition.

New students entered Graceland last week. Quite an addition to the enrollment is anticipated for the winter term.

Our '99 graduating class seem to be steadily progressing, and will no doubt give us a brilliant display at next June's commencement.

It is rumored that a bequest will be made to the college of a fund to be appropriated for work in practical chemistry.

Winter term commences January 3.

SEARCHLIGHT ON BOOK OF COVENANTS AGAIN.

WE had supposed that when the Searchlight, the organ of our fellow churchmen of the Church of Christ (Hedrickites), had stated their position as accepting and believing the Book of Doctrine and Covenants comprising the revelations given through Joseph Smith the prophet up to February, 1834, such statement could be relied on, and that in our intercourse after such declaration of belief we could confidently reason on the things of our belief with an understanding of how these men stood.

It would now appear from what we quote below from the Searchlight, for November, 1898, that we are not at liberty to say that these men of the Church of Christ accept any part of the Book of Covenants as the word of God. For if the "right of inspection and revision," is to be exercised by them, then what they accept to-day they may inspect, and revise to-morrow.

THE BOOK OF COVENANTS AGAIN.

There seems to have been some misunderstanding regarding our position on the Book of Doctrine and Covenants. We have heretofore stated that we accepted the 1835 edition of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants; we still accept the book, but not, perhaps, in a manner that some think. We accept it as a book, just as we accept the King James' Version of the Bible. We know there are errors in the Bible; yet as a whole, we think it contains the word of God.

The 1835 edition contains some things that we do not endorse, yet taken as a book, we think it contains the best collection that can be found of genuine revelations of God to the church. Not that we endorse every line and every sentence it contains, but we think there is a general harmony between the most of its sections which would justify us in accepting them, yet we ever reserve the right of inspection and revision if necessary.

This seems to say, Yes, we accept the 1835 edition in so far as it suits our notions; but if not, we shall inspect and revise it, rejecting what don't suit us. Where does the "Church of Christ" stand?

HAWAIIAN NEWS.

BRO. G. J. WALLER, sends us a copy of the Pacific Commercial Advertiser, for November 12, from which we quote the editorial below.

The Hawaiian Gazette Company has just completed the publication of several hundred volumes of the Book of Mormon which has been translated into the Hawaiian language by the representatives of the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints. It may be a revelation to some to learn that these people do not affiliate with the church of Utah, but cling to the original doctrines and tenets of the church as believed and practiced under Joseph Smith, through whose instrumentality, it is claimed, the Book of Mormon was first offered to the world.

The representations made in this book are considered extravagant by some but it is found that there are still others who accord to it the same reverence as to the more generally accepted word of God found in the Bible.

The Book of Mormon claims to give a brief history of a people who came by divine command and direction to the land of America when the confusion of tongues took place, and who flourished there for about 1,500 years, but who were afterwards, about 600 years before Christ, destroyed for their wickedness. They were, according to this history, succeeded by another people belonging to the house of Israel, chiefly descendants of the tribe of Joseph, whose progenitors were also led under divine guidance to their "land of promise" from Jerusalem about 600 years B. C. In their history, which is continued down to about A. D. 420, an account is given of their rise to a mighty and highly civilized nation and of their subsequent downfall; and the present condition of the American Indian, who are said to be a remnant of that people, is accounted for. The object of the book, as stated in the preface, is to convince "Jew and Gentile that Jesus is the Christ, the Eternal God, manifesting himself unto all nations."

It was to be offered first to the Gentile and afterwards to the Jew, and by uniting its testimony with the Bible is to be instrumental in bringing about the restoration of scattered Israel to the lands of their inheritance.

It may be surprising to many to hear that the Book of Mormon is not responsible for the introduction of polygamy, but condemns it and all such practices in the strongest possible terms.

This will get the Book of Mormon, and with it our work, in a measure before the people of the late territorial addition to the United States.

Bro. Waller also sent us a copy of the same paper for November 11, in which a certain Dr. Bishop seriously deplores that about one-half of the Hawaiians have become Mormon or Catholic, these two churches having outstripped the Protestant denominations in securing converts. But the editor accounts for such gains of the two churches by the spirit in which they have proselyted.

POPE LEO IN MOVING PICTURES.

POPE LEO XIII. has posed before a moving picture machine. In pictures now he may be seen to walk, bow, take off his hat, smile, drive in his landau through the alleys of the Vatican gardens, and give, with his right hand raised, the apostolic benediction.

To the faithful that apostolic benediction reproduced in pictures will have the same effect as if it were conferred directly, personally. The camera was blessed.

In Baltimore on Tuesday, in Washington on Wednesday, before Cardinal Gibbons, the Apostolic Delegate; Mgr. Martinelli; Dr. Garrigan, rector of the University of America; the rector of the Georgetown University, and many other dignitaries of the Roman Catholic Church, the moving pictures are to be shown.

They are to be displayed on these two occasions before they are displayed elsewhere. They may not be displayed elsewhere if they are considered adversely there. The exhibitions are to be absolutely under the control of the church in America.

The foregoing is from New York correspondence published in the Chicago Tribune of November 25. It may be as stated that "to the faithful that apostolic benediction reproduced in pictures will have the same effect as if it were conferred directly, personally;" and that "the camera was blessed." Aside from the theological questions involved, some might find psychological queries arising in the mind,—whether a moving picture could have the same effect as a personal presence, etc., etc., though the phonograph has been suggested as a substitute for a living agent in the pulpit and elsewhere,—and even though it be claimed that the effect in the personal sense is more imaginary than real. To some the proposed exhibition, in connection with the sale of indulgences under Catholic rule, might also suggest strongly the idea of "for revenue only;" while to another the camera business might appear as a kind of "proxy" arrangement. The Brighamites of Utah are credited with belief and practice leading to the conclusion that the proxy feature is considered important by them. If the picture movement is indorsed, the Catholics may share with them in the proxy idea.

AN AGED WITNESS.

ON the 2d inst. we called upon and had an interview with Mother Hartwell, who resides with her son-in-law, Elder R. M. Elvin, in Lamoni, Iowa. Mother Hartwell is now in the ninetyeth year of her age. She united with the church in 1837; the next year went to Far West, Missouri, and shared in the perils of the exodus from Missouri in 1839; after which she resided in Nauvoo until after the death of the prophet. She was acquainted with the prophet during the last six years of his life and relates many interesting incidents of church history. Mother Hartwell has arrived at the waiting time of life, and now with patience, unwavering faith, and earnest desire she awaits the invitation to "come up higher."

EDMUNDS ON ROBERTS.

EX-SENATOR GEORGE F. EDMUNDS, who was the author of the act of congress, by which it was sought to put a stop to the practice of polygamy in Utah, is credited in the press of the country with the following opinion:—

He said that when Utah was admitted as a State it was with an understanding that this practice of polygamy would cease, and the return of a polygamist to the House, would, in his opinion, warrant the House in taking notice of it. Mr. Edmunds declared that were he a member, he would vote to expel him.

"Under the Constitution of the United States," Mr. Edmunds continued, "the House has the right to pass upon the qualifications of a member. That is, whether he is a resident of the State from which he was elected, is of the required age, and the question of the number of votes received. Beyond this it cannot act, but there is a provision which states that by a two-thirds vote of its members the House, after a member is sworn in, has authority to expel him upon grounds that might be construed as justifiable. Beyond the question of polygamy, Mr. Roberts' claim for a seat is admitted to rest on solid ground."

In Mr. Edmunds' opinion, it would be a serious mistake to allow the matter to go unnoticed; as it is not only a moral, but also a national problem. The difficulty that now presents itself, as seen by Mr. Edmunds, is that Utah, having become a State, the Federal statutes relating to polygamy in that section become inoperative. Congress could only charge breach of faith against the State, Mr. Edmunds said, but he failed to see how it could take any further action.

BOXING CLASS AS A CHURCH ADJUNCT.

NEW YORK correspondence to the Chicago Tribune of December 2:—

A boxing class has been started in connection with the Institute of St. John's Episcopal Church, Jersey City, of which the Rev. Dr. E. L. Stoddard is the rector. It is announced in St. John's Bulletin to meet every Friday night. Ten cents will be charged for each lesson.

The class will be instructed by John L. Kirk of this city. Mr. Kirk is a skilled boxer and a brother-in-law of the Rev. E. S. Forbes, vicar of the parish, under whose personal direction the institute has been placed.

Mr. Forbes believes in young men learning how to use their fists, even though the occasion may never arise when they will be obliged to put their knowledge into practice. He does not believe that taking boxing lessons will inspire a love for prize fighting. He will permit no public exhibitions by members of the class. The Rev. E. L. Stoddard has decided views on the boxing question.

"It is not worse than dancing," he said to a reporter, "and I see no reason why the young men in the church should not have an opportunity to learn how to use their fists.

"I believe that it makes a fellow more manly to feel that he can use his fists if he is forced to it."

We submit the foregoing to our readers in further evidence of the "broad" views now being entertained by some clergymen(!), though we have read something in the word to the effect that "broad" is a certain way that leads in a wrong direction. Breadth or broadness, we believe, has both its proper and improper meaning and application. However, according to the item given herewith, the Rev. Stoddard seems to have original ideas about "going on to perfection." It may be that "Dr." Stoddard is more interested in drawing the crowd than in converting them to the gospel. But possibly we are not as "progressive" as he is represented to be.

COLLEGE CONTRIBUTIONS.

BRO. J. W. WIGHT, writing from Deer Lodge, Montana, forwards a goodly subscription to college fund and makes a practical business matter of this as any other work. What he with the other brethren mentioned have done, all may, and we will have the college question settled. We give his letter:—

DEER LODGE, Mont., Dec. 5.

Bro. E. L. Kelley:—While conversing over college matters this morning we concluded that the per capita debt of church members is 60 cents, which would make a total of $24,000; and Bro. Christofferson, Bro. Moore, and I concluded we would pay our debts. To that amount I have added the amount of your call ($1.10) to my wife's and mine, and ten cents to Leslie; as the other children are not members I send ten cents each. Would be glad to send a dollar for each if I could.

In bonds,

J. W. WIGHT.

THE following letter was received recently by our Business Manager, and we gladly comply with the request, and thank Mr. Saxey for the courtesy offered to our elders. We hope they will make a note of this and avail themselves of the privilege so courteously extended:—

Benjamin Cluff, Jr., President; A. Saxey, Librarian.

President's Office,

Brigham Young Academy,

PROVO CITY, Utah, Dec. 5, 1898.

MR. FRANK CRILEY;

Dear Sir:—We would like a copy of the "Saints' Herald" to keep in this library. A number of religious journals have kindly contributed their papers. I thought you would be pleased to do so also.

Any of your elders who may wish to consult this library, I should be pleased (as I have) to extend them the courtesy.

Respectfully,

A. SAXEY.

IN the Chicago Sunday Inter-Ocean, of December 4, we find the following in the "Sabbath-services" column, and with good bold-type heading:—

LATTER DAY SAINTS.

No. 1267 North Halsted Street; preaching at 7:30 p. m. by the Rev. J. M. Terry, pastor. Lang Mission; No. 3411 Cottage Grove Avenue.

Preaching at 10:45 a. m. and 7:30 p. m. Union service at 3:15 p. m.

Zion Mission; No. 1802 Armour Avenue, the Rev. George H. Graves, pastor. Preaching at 7:30 p. m.

No. 12025 Union Avenue; F. J. D. Earl, pastor. Preaching at 11 a. m. and 7:30 p. m.

Bro. Terry and his associates are evidently operating under the open-house policy. That is right; the people of Chicago and other cities where the church is represented should know where to find us. Bro. Graves, we note, is reaching out in behalf of his colored brethren. Would that we were in position to establish missions among the many nationalities in Chicago. It seems to us that an excellent way to reach foreigners is to convert them in America, where we are practically unhindered in the field of operations, and send them to foreign countries as missionaries, when conditions permit and it is found advisable. No need to wait to cross the seas to convert the foreigner, with millions in the groups of foreigners located in free America.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

IN a letter from Bro. P. P. Stark, Richmond, Virginia, December 1, he wrote:—

I cannot say that I am discouraged, as the Lord is the best judge of who and how many souls should be gathered. For with my limited observation I am of the opinion that too great eagerness to add numbers to the church has resulted in the prostitution of almost all faiths, our own not excepted. Yet I look forward to a greater separation and purification both in and out of our church, and hope and try and believe that the time is very near for the fulfillment of the promises which have been made. May the Lord prosper and hasten the work and its completion, and may you receive a reward which shall fully satisfy you for all the labors and trials through which you have passed.

We baptized Bro. Starke a year ago December 1, in the historic James River; felt much blessed of the Spirit in administering the rites to him; and it gives us much pleasure to learn of his spiritual welfare. He is a practicing dentist, and expected from the indications that he would meet with much opposition, and possibly persecution. But, to his surprise, and his pleasure as well, he has met with nothing worse than the withdrawal of some from his company and patronage, in a professional way, there having been no violence, abuse, or injustice against his rights. For this Bro. Stark feels grateful that the Lord has not permitted him to so suffer. We ought to feel to praise God that the day of persecution in many places is passing; and rejoice when free; though in other places we may have to suffer,

Bro. Samuel Weldon, Encinal, California, November 27:—

To any of the ministry passing through or near Fletcher, Fulton County, Indiana: If convenient please call on Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Hollenback, as they are favorable to the work.

Bro. J. W. Loach, Hiteman, Iowa, December 10:—

Will you please request the prayers of the saints through the Herald in behalf of Bro. John Orr, who met with a very serious accident. A piece of roof in the mines fell on him, and dislocated his back and broke his left leg.

Bro. F. G. Pitt wrote from Canton, Cardiff, Wales, the 30th ult., as follows:—

We are moving along quietly here. New members appear fully alive and seem pleased with their association in the Reorganization. Some of the Brighamites are very bitter towards them.

Bro. U. W. Greene has arrived at Honolulu, Hawaii, and enters upon the labors of his new field in good spirits. He wrote, November 29, as follows:—

Arrived here the morning of 17th, paying my customary tribute to Neptune all the way. This is a delightful part of the earth, surpassing even Zion in climatic conditions. Temperature averages from 70 to 80 daily. Rather warm for a down easter. Will become used to it in time. Bro. Waller is a companionable, spiritual laborer, ably assisted by Bro. Ingham in his efforts. They with Bro. Poepoe as branch priest and interpreter are doing well. I hope to second their efforts and merit the Master's blessing while here.

A letter from Bro. Waller, dated November 29, reads as follows:—

Elder U. W. Greene arrived here on the Rio de Janeiro on Thursday, the 17th, and we like him and his preaching very much. We started the Sunday following his arrival to hold an English service in the evening at which he preached, and although the number present was not large, yet we feel encouraged and have no doubt but that we shall now be able to create an interest in our work among the English-speaking population. We send for tracts for use in our efforts.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

WE learn that Bro. G. T. Griffiths has been sick with appendicitis since November 20, but though still confined to his bed December 6, the date of advices, was some better. Correspondents will please take notice that he will answer all communications as soon as possible. He expects to leave for the Pacific Slope mission as soon as able.

Bro. W. A. McDowell sends us the Delavan, Wisconsin, Enterprise, of December 1, which contains a half-column article friendly to the Reorganized Church, under the caption of "Mormonism Defined." The article is the result of a former article written by Bro. C. H. Burr, mentioned in a late HERALD. The writer speaks in high terms of our people in the Badger State.

Pres. Joseph Smith went to Mound City, Missouri, on the 9th inst., to dedicate a chapel erected by the Ross Grove branch. He expected to return by the 12th or 13th.

Bro. D. C. White, of the Clinton Missouri district, visited Lamoni of late, during which he made the editors a pleasant call. Bro. White reports things moving in his portion of the field, with good prospects for general growth.

Some one has sent us a copy of the Boston Globe for November 27. It contains an article on "China's Jews," an account of a synagogue in Kae-Fung-Foo, the origin of which is a mystery; also a sermon by "Rev. Mary T. Whitney before the National Scientific Family Culture Institute on the Religion of the Future, whose Temple will be Home, whose Altar will be the Fireside." Mrs. Whitney says some good things, but like many others, dazed and lost in the results of the apostasy, runs after some special practical features of mortal life, and loses sight of the divine economy revealed in the word of God to govern man here and to qualify him for the future life.

Bro. E. R. Dewsnap went to Council Bluffs, Iowa, and Omaha, Nebraska, to remain over Sunday, the 11th, in the interests of Graceland College and its work.

The man who "lives up," who casts aside or prostitutes his moral nature, finds it a hard task to "live down" the reputation his folly makes for him. "The way of the transgressor is hard"—hard on himself and on the community. It seems to be easier for humanity to be careless and do wrong than to be self-restrained and walk uprightly, tendencies and inclinations seemingly being downward rather than upward. However, right ways are primarily normal ways, and promote happiness and general good; while transgressions inevitably bring dire consequences. "Whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap." One may scatter or waste in a day what may require years to regather, if indeed he can regather the lost.

One would think, judging from some theological and moral theories now being exploited from so-called liberal pulpits, that the doctrine of Jesus Christ as taught by him and his apostles was lacking in some essential features, or weighted down by unnecessary requirements. If there is any principle of good taught by the modern theologian that is not taught in the system revealed through Jesus Christ, it has not yet been made manifest. The tendency of the times is to select a few moral or general principles to the exclusion of others also important in the comprehensive economy of God. Men are finite—limited, while God is infinite. They fail to discern even the things of time in a comprehensive sense, while he sees the end from the beginning. "Known unto God are all his works from the beginning of the world." "Who hath directed the Spirit of the Lord, or being his counselor hath taught him? With whom took he counsel, and who instructed him, and taught him in the path of judgment, and taught him knowledge, and showed to him the way of understanding?" (Acts 15: 18; Isa. 40: 13, 14.)

Authentic reports have reached Washington to the effect that Aguinaldo, the Philippine insurgent leader, has denounced the Catholic religion in an open proclamation to his followers, and has espoused the cause of the Protestants. The Filipinos have received some good from the Roman Catholic religion, but also much of evil under the blighting influences of the Spanish and monkish system. The exchange to Protestantism means a better order of things religiously and in general.

The address of the Matron of the Saints' Home is Miss Alice Dancer, Lamoni, Iowa; this in response to request therefor.

Sr. Jennie M. Leland, of Peca-tonica, Illinois, who has accepted a position as stenographer in the Bishop's office, reached Lamoni on Saturday the 10th inst.

After being set in type we sometimes hold birth and death notices and other matter that can be held, to insert matter of special interest requiring prompt attention. The HERALD patrons will hardly complain because of this. We endeavor to do our best for our readers.

Bro. R. Etzenhouser, laboring at McGraw, Pennsylvania, sends in a substantial donation to Graceland College; contributions of friends of the cause at that place, only part of whom are saints.

It is not yet too late for Herald Office patrons to be supplied with gift books and other attractions advertised in our holiday list; see last page of HERALD.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

"The stream is brightest at its spring,
And blood is not like wine;
Nor honored less than he who heirs
Is he who founds a line."

THERE are thoughts which never grow old, but which like the fragrance from the rose, distil afresh the sweet perfume of faith and hope every time we open the mind to their reception. "The glory of Christ," said Professor Swing, "was not that he knew much, but that he loved much." Dean Stanley said, "You never get to the end of Christ's words. They are the freshest things to-day in this old world; the fullest of life and power. There is something in them always behind. They pass into proverbs, they pass into laws, they pass into doctrines, they pass into consolations; but they never pass away, and after all the use that is made of them, they are still not exhausted."

ORIGIN OF THE KINDERGARTEN.—NO. 1.

WHEREVER prattling voices of little children are heard, some one is certain to pronounce the magic word "kindergarten," which is the signal for numberless questions and criticisms on the part of the interested parents of the wee ones, more especially from mothers, and it is to them that I appeal for a larger interest in the true kindergarten, knowing full well that whatsoever of thought, belief, and energy is required to secure the best training for children must needs come from the mothers, however busy they be.

Many mothers have a vague idea of the kindergarten as a place where children play and have a good time, while they learn pretty songs with pretty motions, and, as it is frequently expressed, "fritter the hours away." This prevalent opinion is easily traced to two causes; one, the tendency of parents to absent themselves from the kindergarten except on special festival occasions, as Christmas, May Day, etc., when the very nature of the case demands that the greater portion of the work shall be omitted and only the more general phase of it be presented, because visitors usurp the space necessary for the regular work. Another cause is the tendency on the part of kindergartners to present the happiest phase of the training, which certainly shows forth in the songs and games to the greatest advantage. However, to appreciate the value of any cause, we must know the character and work of its author, so I ask you to glance at the life of the founder of the kindergarten movement, Friedrich Froebel.

The month of April, 1782, brought to many a German home across the sea the blessing of a baby boy, but one home in particular is interesting to us, because in it was cradled the babe whose possibilities developed into great powers for the uplifting of the human race through its children.

Left motherless at the age of nine months, the little Friedrich Froebel early learned the loneliness of a life without companionship, for his father was pastor of a church which demanded his entire attention and service, so that he soon forgot the hungry little child-soul in his own home, leaving him to the care of the busy housemaid until he provided for him by introducing a stepmother, whose hardness of heart repelled the child day by day, and he turned to that larger mother, Nature, and came into the inheritance of his own, where everything became fraught with a wonderful meaning to him—the odor of flowers, the singing of birds, the humming of bees, the rippling of brooks, as well as pebbles, crystals, and grains of sand, glowed with strange interpretations, which his ever ready imagination furnished; and the perfect harmonies of beauty and use, which his older brother led him to observe in nature, served to explain and clear away impressions of the discords of humanity which he saw as he accompanied his father on parochial visits. It was the memory of such a childhood hovering over his later life that impelled Froebel to plead for the introduction of the element of joy into the education of children, and he bids us utilize the desire for play by molding the child through his play.

After an unhappy childhood as well as an unsatisfactory youth, he at last met a director of a Normal School who offered him a position as an assistant teacher; and when for the first time he stood before a class of thirty or more boys he felt that he had found his vocation, and from henceforth devoted himself to the solving of educational problems. Wherever he labored he was constantly confronted with the necessity for uprooting false ideas from the minds of his pupils, until he was at last led to formulate the belief that every stage of development depends for its perfection upon the perfection of the stage which precedes it; and in the endeavor to find the stage where he could begin to educate without uprooting, he was led back into the realm of childhood, until he stood with reverence by the side of the MOTHER, at the cradle of the child, where power is as yet possibility, and from this point he sent forth the bugle call for education from the beginning of life, summoning women to his aid in establishing the kindergarten movement.

This then is the common ground upon which mothers and the founder of the kindergarten meet; a reverent love for little chilchildren and a desire to unfold their possibilities.

He was the first to fully realize the power and extent of the mother influence, and the first to seek to awaken the latent mother love in every woman who followed the vocation of teaching, setting the example in his own school in truly abiding by the spirit of his motto: "Come, let us live with the children."

His close study of the law of growth in the natural world made him stand firmly for similar application of the law of development for humanity; therefore the kindergarten stands for natural unfolding of individual possibilities, and natural adjusting of individual relationships, as the standard of highest development; in other words a kindergarten is simply a beautiful collection of human plants, carefully watched and tended by a loving gardener who desires that each plant may produce the best of which it is capable, and to that end provides the necessary conditions.

PRAYER UNION.

SPECIAL REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.

QUARTZ, Cal., Dec. 1.

Dear Sisters of the Prayer Union:—Will you kindly pray for a sister, myself, who has for many years been a great sufferer from headache caused by chronic nasal catarrh. I have tried about every known remedy, but none afford even relief. The nerves of my eyes are so badly affected as to hinder my reading. I am a great lover of Bible study, and of our church literature, but I am denied the privilege of reading for the instruction of myself and also of my children. Will you dear sisters by your united petitions ask God to heal me, if it be according to his holy will, that I may be brought into ways of usefulness and the glory and honor shall be his.

Your sister in the one faith,

MRS. L. S. DE SALLIER.

A sister and family writes: "In behalf of our father and husband we, as a family, desire and earnestly request the united faith and prayers that, God willing, he may be restored to health again."

Sunday School Department.

ELDER T. A. HOUGAS, EDITOR.
Henderson, Mills Co., Iowa.

(Send communications for this department to the Editor. Address minutes and notices of conventions, etc., to "Editors Herald, Lamoni, Iowa.")

WHAT are you doing? This is a question we do not expect you to answer to us, but to yourselves. Long winter evenings are now upon us. How do you pass them? Is it in idle talk? Is it in reading the continued story in the county newspaper? Is it in some game? Do you have time to prepare your Sunday school lesson? One teacher that we knew, would spend from one to two hours several evenings in the week at the crokinole board, and go before her class on Sunday morning with no preparation on her lesson. A superintendent would read the papers fifteen hours in the week, but could not possibly find time to get his Sunday school lesson till he got to the church Sunday morning. It requires but a single thought to explain, in your mind, where the fault lay in these cases. If you are in the habit of not having your lesson, look into the facts in the case, and see where your trouble is. The best way is to set a certain hour of a certain day of the week to begin the lesson, and then keep it as certainly as you do your hours for meals. Regularity and system are helpers that have no equals in study.

Districts, take notice. If you have not elected a district librarian, you should do so at your next district convention. This of course will be for the remainder of the year, which will end with your last district convention before April 1, no matter when such meeting may be. The Constitution and By-laws require that "all elections of officers for the district shall take place at the last meeting of the district prior to April 1. All districts have not made this correction, but should do so as soon as convenient.

Sr. Dora Young has recently been elected librarian of Galland's Grove, Iowa, district Sunday school association, and is setting about her work in a resolute and practical way. She contemplates recommending that each school purchase, "as a starter," three books as soon as they have the means at hand. One is to be selected to benefit the teachers, and will be either a work on didactics or a Bible Dictionary. Another will be for the youth of the school, and a third for the primaries. The plan is certainly a practical one, and if proper selections are made, and we think they will be, each school that abides the recommendation will have the nucleus of a good Sunday school library.

Sr. Blanche Andrews has recently accepted the same position in Fremont, Iowa, district and sets about her work with a circular letter. In the letter she inquires the condition and extent of the existing library, of what it is composed, the use that is now being made of it, and various other items of interest. This is to get an accurate idea of the material now on hand, and something of the esteem in which the Sunday school library is held in the various schools of the district. This is, we presume, preparatory to further work in extending the usefulness of the libraries now in the schools, and improving them or establishing new ones where none exist.

As the library work is entirely new in many places, and as the office of district librarian did not exist till April of this year, the district librarians must work under the disadvantage of a new work. We would therefore suggest that more of them furnish us with a few thoughts as to how they are setting about their work. It will be of great benefit to many. Librarians, please take notice, and let us hear from you.

Have you carefully read the Institute program? And did you note that there are many of the most important topics in the management of both the Sunday school and Religio to be discussed during the session?

It will be remembered that this will not be a meeting for the reading of a series of essays, although it is probable that there will be a few; but rather a series of discussions upon the various subjects mentioned in the program, in which every one is permitted to participate. Those who have been privileged to attend one of these meetings have expressed their great appreciation of the privileges of exchanging thoughts with their fellow workers from the many parts of the field. The general officers of both the Sunday School Association and the Religio and also many others of the prominent and able workers of the two organizations will be present, and will help to make the occasion one of true worth to those who are so fortunate as to be able to attend. You will pardon us for calling your attention to the fact that at that season all railroads grant reduced rates, usually one and one-third for the round trip, and the brethren at Independence will care for us free, thus reducing expenses to a minimum. We feel confident that much good will be done to the workers, and we want as many as possible to get the benefit of it.

For the Southeast Nebraska district convention.

THE Sunday school holds an important place in church work. It does not take the place of home training. God designed the home to be the first and best agency in the moral and religious training of young children. The Sunday school is only a help, and I account it a great help. The Sunday school is and should be recognized as such everywhere. If the older people need the watchcare of a pastor or shepherd, do not also those who are growing up need to be taught and guarded as well? And if we would have our girls and boys respectful to the church and in the house of God, should they not have some such place to be trained? By observation we can learn the wide difference between the child who has this opportunity to attend Sunday school and the one who never enters a Sunday school room. Be it understood that the Sunday school does not take the place of the church, but is a help thereto. . . .

Our great free American country boasts of how much is raised yearly to send the

when we might say that in our own dooryard are people as ignorant of the gospel as the unconverted savage, simply from the fact that they do not study the Bible. Then how can we better teach them the truths of the gospel than to bring them into our Sunday schools? And by our own presence there each Sabbath show to the world, the church, and the Lord that we believe the Scriptures should be studied. There are some whom I have heard say it is better to stay at home on Sunday morning after they have sent the little ones to the Sunday school and that they were well enough satisfied to settle back in a comfortable rocker and read a rousing sermon from the Ensign. I wonder how much glory or reward they will receive for such an effort! We are glad, O so glad, to have them send their little ones, but our hearts would be made more glad if these same ones would themselves come. The Sunday school of today should be composed of the parents first, then the children.

And now a word to the Sunday school teachers. It is as much your place to sow the seeds of truth as it is any other set of officers. Your work may seem to be little—instructing children. But it is the way to begin, the proper time to sow the seed.

"SOME FELL ON GOOD SOIL."

Where are we most likely to find the good soil in which to sow the seeds of truth? If there is anywhere soil to bring forth one hundred fold, it is in the Sunday school and in the children, where it has not been contaminated with evil. Be patient. Do the little things well, and God will own and bless the efforts. And if this Sunday school work seems little, remember God works that way. By and by we will see these children and young people occupying positions of great responsibility among men, because we did our duty towards them when they were young. And if at any time we feel that this work is hard, and that we are not making the strokes count as we would like, remember the story of the old Scotch lady; some one sympathized with her because she had to scrub the rough floors in a large house, she said, "Dinna fret. We'll get it done. We're a working together, Him and me." If we can only work patiently with Him, results are sure to follow which will make our hearts "to burn within us by the way."

JONESPORT, Maine, Dec. 5.

Editors Herald:—This will post you as to my recent movements and present whereabouts.

On the evening of August 3, after a long delay at home, caused by physical debility, I started out to try and fill the mission assigned me. My railroad ticket called for a ride to Boston, Massachusetts. On the way I spent half a dozen hours visiting my sister (Sr. Thomas Hattey) in Chicago, and a day and night visiting my mother, (Sr. E. Devine) and another sister (Mrs. Thomas Smellie), in Toronto; arriving in Boston on Sunday morning, just too late to secure train passage to Dennisport, where the reunion was under way. I started on a search for the home of some of the saints. By good fortune I met Bro. Bowers, who escorted me to the hall where many had gathered for service and where I was welcomed and invited to preach. Feeling too bad, physically, to attempt any mental effort, I declined, and was escorted to the home of Bro. Bowers, where several hours of rest and a little sleep patched me up, so that I made an attempt to occupy the stand at the evening hour. With the Lord's help I succeeded.

Next morning Dennisport was reached and I found myself among as happy a lot of saints as one would expect to meet. The reunion was progressing finely and Patriarch A. H. Smith was up to his ears in the joy that was attendant. He had arrived the day before, and our gladness in meeting was reciprocal.

Others have written you regarding the reunion, and I will not recanvass their ground. The Lord blessed both preachers and hearers and good was done. We had sea bathing nearly every day between meeting hours. Bishop E. L. Kelley arrived in a couple of days, and what with the Presidency, Patriarch, Bishop, apostles, seventies, elders, and such a retinue of brethren and sisters as belong in those parts, spending part of their time in religious exercises and part in voluntary and involuntary immersions in the surf, it was an exceptionally delightful time, and the writer enjoyed it hugely; it was all too short, and camp was finally broken amid regrets on that account. The Dennisport people, regardless of religious affiliation, treated us nobly, and we will long remember them.

Three meetings were held in the chapel after the close of the reunion; then Bro. Smith, Kelley, and self left, the former for Boston direct, and the two latter to call at Brockton and Plymouth on the way there. Filling out this programme we again met in Boston, where Sunday was spent.

On the following Thursday, leaving the Patriarch to fill the appointments in Providence and other points and to join us later, the Bishop and I started by steamer for Lamoine, to attend the Western Maine district conference. Arriving there we found a gathering of saints that surprised us, and with whom we spent a couple of days in saintly intercourse to the profit of all. Bro. U. W. Greene, W. W. Blanchard, and T. C. Kelley, of the general ministry, were there, besides the local workers, and we realized the meaning of the words, "Iron sharpeneth iron; so a man sharpeneth the countenance of his friend." We were glad to meet and sorry to part. Bro. Blanchard started for New York.

President of the district, Bro. Cunningham, drove us thence to his home at West Surrey, where we held two meetings and I baptized Bro. Cunningham's daughter, Bessie A. We enjoyed a short spell at fishing in "Toddy Pond," with Bro. Cunningham and his son. Whether it was because the wind was "contrary" or a Jonah was on board, I cannot tell; but the waters became turbulent and the fish didn't bite, and we had to put back for shore and home.

From thence the Bishop and I sailed to Little Deer Isle, thence to Bray's Mountain, and next to Stonington, holding services at each place and finding a welcome among the saints. Space forbids a mention of all the Eatons and Knowitons and other equally good saints, but hospitality and saintly sociability were everywhere. At Stonington I baptized Mrs. Idella Barter.

The conference at South Addison was our next place of operation, where a goodly number of saints of the Eastern Maine district assembled and a profitable season was enjoyed. On our way thither we stopped at Jonesport, where the Bishop preached to the few who gave him audience. His intention was to return there and labor further, and to accompany the writer thence to Nova Scotia; but Providence ordered or permitted otherwise. While at the conference at South Addison, he received a telegram, calling for his return to Lamoine, Iowa, and he left the same day. Happily for all, the form of our smiling Patriarch materialized at our morning service, and it was a case of "enter Smith and exit Kelley," and the people "smiled amid their tears." To me it was a case of more tears than smiles, for Bro. Alex. H. was not impressed Nova Scotiaward, and I had to take my chances alone.

From Addison to Indian River, and thence back to Jonesport, I had the pleasure of his company, and of hearing him blow the gospel horn at each of those places; and last, but not funniest, of having him oversee me as I followed the receding tide and dug a couple of bushels, or less, of clams to flavor the chowder with which Sr. Eliza Walker regaled us. Alex likes chowder all right, and I don't blame him, for that was good enough for a king or a patriarch either. I don't believe that the dish which was set before Abraham's holy guests could have tasted better. Time would fail me to tell of the Kelleys and Smiths of Indian River, and the Walkers and Mansfields and Nortons and others, of the Jonesport region, and equally hospitable ones all around Eastern Maine; who, through their generous hospitality subdued want, quenched the violence of cold, stopped the mouths of hungry elders, turned to flight the forebodings of suffering, and did many other good things, such as the Bible tells of, as did also the saints of the other district. The Lord reward them.

Through the kindness of Mr. Ed Mansfield an opportunity was secured for me to ride with his brother in a buggy to a point within two miles of Lubec, which was the place where I was to take the boat for New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. It necessitated my starting on Sunday morning and a couple of days ahead of my former calculation; but it was an almost free ride of forty-six miles, and I availed myself of it gladly. So, turning my back on the Patriarch and the folks who were making him happy, I started, and about five p. m. landed at a point where I had to climb out of the buggy and carry my satchels the remaining two miles into Lubec. The load was all I could lift, feeling as I did, and to make matters pleasanter the rain began to fall pretty rapidly; but by resting every hundred yards or so, Lubec was reached in due time and a bed in a hotel was secured for the night.

Next morning, by ferry, Campobello Island was reached, then by larger steamer, St. John, New Brunswick; and the following morning by still larger steamer, I sailed into Digby, Nova Scotia. Wending my way along the railway depot platform, at Digby, I almost dropped into the arms of Elder Holmes J. Davidson, who arrived by train at that moment from Yarmouth, whither he had come the night before, by boat, from Boston. Neptune had "held him up" on the way and he had readily "given up all he had", and was now looking around him with an appealing gaunt-like stare, as if in search of an appetite or something equally bracing or serviceable. Well, he "took me in" to the car and we rode together till we reached his home neighborhood, where he soon righted up and was ready for battle when the table was spread.

After holding one meeting at his home, we started for the conference at South Rawdon, where the saints have a neat chapel, in which a small but happy company, with their sparkling eyes, rosy cheeks, and "blue noses," met and gave us a cheery greeting. The Spirit of the Master pervaded the services, and words of encouragement were spoken thereby for the edification of the humble few who were bearing the burdens of the work in the Province. Elder S. O. Foss, who had been laboring in Nova Scotia for several months, was present, and we heard his labors well reported of. While nothing strikingly important occurred during the conference, yet it was a season of profit and peace. By the special kindness of the saints, provision was made to "send the missionaries to Halifax," to attend the exhibition during the week. This was a pleasure which met with our grateful appreciation, and though rain interfered somewhat with the enjoyment of our visit to that city, we nevertheless had a good time and saw much that interested us. From Halifax Bro. Foss went to Delhaven and Bro. Davison and self returned to South Rawdon (he by the home route and I direct), where we held three more meetings with good interest. We were hospitably entertained at the home of Bro. Alfred Wood and family, and received kindly attention and ministrations also at the homes of Brn. O'Brien and Dimnock, and the widow Mason. Everybody was kind to us, and in turn we rendered them the best service we could. May the heavenly dews be distilled upon the hearts impressed, and fruit unto eternal life abound.

Returning to Lockhartville, (the home of Elder Davison,) where appointments had been made ahead, we held five meetings in all, in his house, with what results we know not. It was a week well spent however, for Sr. Davison has the faculty of making a body feel happy and at home in her company and it seemed as if we had been acquainted for years and the rank and file of juvenile Davisons spent many of the day hours with me on the beach catching tommy cods, smelt, and eels. The only other family of saints in the place consisted of Bro. and Sr. Sol Lawrence, and a couple of visits at their home added to the measure of enjoyment experienced. Without having more than time to get acquainted there, we left for Delhaven, where we were domiciled at the home of Bro. and Sr. Robert Newcomb. (The latter is a sister of Sr. Emma Burton and of Holmes J. Davison and here is where "Sr. Emma" was born.) Here we again met Bro. Foss, who after preaching three times, left for home, to labor in Maine for the winter. Five sermons by the writer tell the tale of his preaching work at that place; but during the daytime, by Bro. Newcomb's kindness, we were privileged to visit Look Off Mountain and to ascend to the summit of Cape Blomidon, and traverse much of the ground immortalized in poetry as the Land of "Evangeline." Here again the clams came into play (?) and we enjoyed the distinction of digging a bucketful of the bivalves in company with a senator from Colorado, who was visiting his old-time home. Perhaps it was the sight of a Missouri preacher in a jumper, overalls, and rubber knee boots that excited his curiosity and brought him out to meeting at night; but if so, we hope he enjoyed the clams better than the sermon; for he came not again—one meal surfeited him.

Bidding good-bye to Bro. and Sr. Newcomb and daughter Clara, whose home surroundings had a decidedly "moreish" taste to us, we boarded the ferry at Kingsport and crossed Minas Basin to Parrsboro, passing the famous Cape Blomidon and other picturesque coast features on the way. After a night in Parrsboro, we boarded train and hurried on to Oxford Junction where Bro. James Ripley met us with a buggy and conveyed us to his home at River Philip Center, about six miles away. After one night there we were taken by him to Williamsdale, about seven miles farther away, where the few saints residing near have built a beautiful chapel—23x35 with an outside porch—a credit to any place, all paid for and dedicated. On the transom window over the outer door are painted the words, "A free pulpit and an open Bible;" and over the pulpit hangs a framed motto: "Our Creed All Truth;" while opposite to it, over the entrance, hangs another, bearing the inscription; "God and His Truth." The whole building is paneled and painted artistically and made the writer feel a something akin to pride (holy pride of course) as he surveyed it. Not more than a dozen saints, and they without branch organization, assisted by a few generous outsiders, did it—Elder Davison putting in time and skill in the painting line as well as aiding otherwise by work. I wish I could publish all the names as a roll of honor; but they will have better reward than that, at the hands of Him to whose praise their work was dedicated. During the time spent there, the writer preached twelve times at Williamsdale and eight times at River Philip.

It is not more than just to here mention that the first influences favorable to our work at that place were started by the efforts of Sr. Albert Page, of San Benito, California. This was the country of her early days, and where she taught school. Visiting here a few years ago, after the gospel had found her, she talked it, and secured promise from her friends of shelter for an elder should one come. She then set to work to get an elder there. Elder Davison went, and since then others have made brief calls and have labored, among whom are Brn. F. M. Sheehy, W. H. Kelley, M. T. Short, G. W. Robley, U. W. Greene, S. O. Foss, and the writer. The little chapel and the worshippers therein are a monument to the credit of such devotion and zeal.

At Williamsdale my home was with Bro. Leander Johnston, whose mother, though not a member with us, spared no effort to make my stay a delight. While there I was a victim of neuralgia for a time; but Mrs. Johnston by such extra kindnesses and thoughtful arrangements as true sympathy suggests, contributed to my relief and comfort, and her attention will not soon be forgotten. May our heavenly Father reward her. By the way, Johnston is a popular name there. Uncle Ralph and Henry and then Hazen and John and others, with their families, make a great part of the population; and when in addition to them I mention the name of Mr. and Mrs. Paine, whose daughter (Mrs. McKeen) is with us in church fellowship and an active worker, and who treated us royally, as also did Bro. and Sr. Fillmore and Bro. Murphy, I have only paid a feeble tribute to genuine hospitality. While laboring at River Philip we shared home cheer with Bro. and Sr. James Ripley and family, whose hearts are as big as their houses, (if we are to judge by the generous treatment we received,) and the experiences throughout were of a character to make us entertain a high opinion of the "Blue Noses" generally, and wish for an opportunity to visit them again. Elder Davison acted as escort, and helper, and leader, and all-round manipulator during my stay in the Province, and made me wish that I could be always as pleasantly associated. He dwells in the hearts of the saints where he has labored, and good words for him are all on their lips.

Before leaving them I was handed twenty-two dollars, which had been raised among the people towards buying me a fur coat to protect me from the cold of this eastern country. I received six dollars in all besides this, out of which I met some incidental expenses, and I started with my face towards Uncle Sam's dominions with a warm prospect in my pocket; but the terrible storm that visited the coast just then changed the conditions. I failed of connection with the line steamer at St. John upon my arrival there on Monday, November 28, and the other steamer had not arrived, and there was no certainty as to her arriving or leaving, so a hotel became a necessity. Next morning, by train, I started, and by dodging from cars to a boat and from boat to train, and then to wagon, and lastly to a sleigh, I made the distance to Jonesport, Maine, in four days, aided by hotels as intermediates. The sea was heavy and the winds were terrific while I waited over at Eastport, and I felt like a "landlubber" as I saw the waves sweep over the wharf and the little ferryboat dance to the whistling winds. A western "prairie schooner" and its course would have been more to my taste; but I scrambled aboard and tried to put on a wise and brave seaman's look, and talked to the passengers about there being quite a "chop" and used one or two other words I had heard along the coast, while the little boat rolled and pitched along her short journey to Lubec, calling at Campobello. It was only twenty-five minutes sailing; but I will take mine hereafter in walking or by wagon, when practicable, if it takes ten hours. The wagon part that followed was for twenty-four miles, facing a blizzard of snow, then came a hotel respite and then twenty-four miles of sleighing, part of the way through beautiful snow monuments, and part over nice gravel that burnished the sleigh shoes and made my store-teeth feel like the poles of a battery. On landing at Jonesport, I took a look at my

"once-fat-pocket-book," and found that fourteen dollars had melted out of that fur-coat fund, and yet I had fasted from two meals along the way to avoid unnecessary expense. But I was alive and in time for district conference, which began on December 3. I also met Bro. T. C. Kelley here, and therefore had somebody to "look up to" and feel safe with. I tumbled into bed at night feeling grateful and very happy. I find our faithful veteran—Joshua Walker—is poorly. Will the saints pray for his recovery.

Conference was attended by quite a number from contiguous points, weather considered, and was a pleasant season. I expect to leave here in a couple of days for Massachusetts and adjoining States. Bro. T. C. Kelley, who is in charge of Maine, and S. O. Foss, to assist as laborer for the winter, also W. W. Blanchard, should he return, will take care of the Pine Tree State interests.

Should this letter seem outrageously long, please remember that over a year has passed since I crowded my autograph into your columns; and if you pardon this lengthy intrusion I may not trouble you again for—oh, so long! My health is some better and gospel work is bliss to me. Your brother,

JOSEPH LUFF.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Dec. 2.

Editors Herald:—My last I think was written in Brooklyn, New York, November 3. I left for Ohio, where a week was spent in and around Kirtland, visiting friends and saints, preaching in the Temple Sunday evening, the 6th, and meeting with Brn. W. H. Kelley and G. T. Griffiths; the former expecting to leave for Pittsburg about the time I left; Bro. Griffiths hindered in his mission work somewhat by the sickness of Sr. G., although doing ministerial work in Ohio mission since General Conference.

There seemed to be nothing of greater interest in old Kirtland than the discovery of natural gas in large quantity, by Mr. McFarland, and everybody who can afford to sink a gas well is thinking of tapping Nature's store of fuel and light on Temple Hill. It certainly looks like a good thing for Kirtland, temporally speaking, and that seems to be the principal want, although when it comes to a discussion of need, as applied to men's best and permanent welfare, there, as well as elsewhere, there is too much gas, and of an explosive and dangerous kind as well; often destroying the peace and spiritual growth of saints, and fitting communities with elements and conditions that make it a desirable place to move from for the peace-loving and godly-minded.

On Friday morning, November 11, we left Cleveland, turning out on the streets from the hotel at three o'clock in the storm and cold for the station, only to wait an hour and a half for a late train. A long, tiresome ride, landing us here in St. Louis at seven p. m., where warmth and comfort and greeting from daughter and saints of the old-fashioned St. Louis kind relieved us of unpleasant pressure of mind and body somewhat. On Sunday morning we faced again from the pulpit the dear saints of St. Louis, whose memory must ever be perennial with the fragrance of friendships and of a love and confidence born of trial and associations in the days that are gone.

St. Louis people are in many respects an easy crowd for us to talk to, as we have tried to stimulate a demand and hunger after right and saving things for the people in the past. We have been met with a response that gladdens the preacher's heart and makes him to feel that his life and effort amounts to something after all.

Wednesday, the 16th, we were called to attend the funeral of Sr. Mary Pearson, a woman of lovely character, who passed away in the faith of the gospel restored.

We have preached in this place, Cheltenham, and Oak Hill, two and three times on Sundays, attending calls from the sick, which are quite numerous, and have been very busy overhauling and repacking household goods and effects for shipment eastward, where we soon expect to go.

Last Wednesday evening at seven o'clock my daughter Bessie was united in marriage with Bro. Richard Trowbridge, the writer officiating at the ceremony, the chapel being filled with saints and friends of the young people. The occasion for me was not only impressive, but to a great extent a sad one; for the memory of the past, with cares, and prayers, and tears, oft for the preservation of my child, had now brought us to the parting of the ways; that I must give her over into other hands and care, and in a sense the word "childless" should be written against my name; and as I followed them with the wedding party, down the aisle, after the ceremony, it somehow partook of the spirit and nature of a funeral to me.

Others said it was an impressive, not to say sad performance, but they could not feel as I did or do about it; but they and everybody else seemed so happy afterward that my little cloud seemed to be dissolved, at least from common view. The gifts and wedding presents were numerous and valuable, from the kind and good saints here in St. Louis, and friends and relatives elsewhere.

Through the kindness of Bro. and Sr. Hitchcock a wedding supper was given them before their departure, at eleven o'clock that night for Parsons, Kansas, where they are now visiting relatives and friends, but are expected home to-morrow morning, at their cosy and comfortable place, which they will find fitted for their reception, on Warren Street.

Beautiful sunshine weather here now, and in strong contrast to the kind reported in a letter received from Sr. Bond, from Providence, Rhode Island, yesterday, where snow, fence high, and weather that prohibited travel or business, almost entirely, was making things pleasant for New England people. I hope the weather man will quit that before I get there, as decreasing vital powers rob a moderately warm climate or atmosphere of its terrors for me.

The awful reports of loss of shipping and life on the New England coast remind us of the Seer's warning concerning danger by journey on the waters in these last days.

Reports from the East show activity on the part of the Utah emissaries and a need of looking after their work as affecting our interests and keeping the public properly informed. Before leaving Providence I with others attended their Sunday afternoon preaching service in the hall we used to occupy on High Street. There were seven Utah elders present, and all engaged in the local work save the missionary in charge, President Whitaker, who did most of the talking. A collection of hymns compiled by Brigham Young, P. Pratt, and John Taylor was used and handed around to us and the few strangers, the opening hymn starting out thus:—

"Up, awake ye defenders of Zion,
The foe's at the door of your homes;
Let each heart be the heart of a lion
Unyielding and proud as he roams.

"Remember the wrongs of Missouri,
Forget not the fate of Nauvoo
When the God-hating foe is before you Stand firm, be faithful, and true.

"By the mountains our Zion is surrounded
Her warriors are noble and brave,
Opposed by a proud boasting nation
Their numbers compared may be few," etc.

I give you this as a sample style of what I called a sort of jingo, boastful worship all through, with but little argument and no semblance of spiritual aid or power; but they have, nevertheless, an influence with the public, and do succeed by their subtle and evasive methods in infusing the public mind. We shall try and look after them when we return.

The answer to Roberts and Penrose now being made in Herald should be published in tract form as soon as possible, and scattered broadcast in Utah and the West as well as East and everywhere. Many of them will furnish fire fuel, no doubt, and never be read; but some will read them, and enlightenment will follow, and more trouble for their leaders to try to fix up with the rapidly-growing number of discontented ones.

An apology may be needed to Bro. I. N. White for getting over the fence, but the demand for work is so urgent that I have answered calls.

Bro. Hitchcock is doing excellently, but needs help. St. Louis is not behind in the procession. Fine prayer meetings; a good one at Religio last night.

Expect to return East within ten days.

In gospel bonds,

M. H. BOND.

MONDAMIN, Iowa, Dec. 5.

Editors Herald:—Since anything has appeared from my pen I have been to Elwood, Gosper County, Nebraska, where I met a Mr. H. A. Jenkins, who pretended to be a representative of the Seventh-day Adventist Church and of the Church of God. It was found that he was not a legal representative of either. The discussion which was to have continued for seventeen nights, closed at the end of the second night.

After its close I preached at Eustis, Flowery Dale schoolhouse near Bro. S. D. Payne's, Shelton, Columbus, and Omaha on my way home; at all of which places I found need of labor and kind friends to care for my necessities.

Since arriving in this mission again I have been occupied principally at Missouri Valley and here, preaching at Missouri Valley over two weeks, leaving the work apparently in a much better condition than it has been for some months.

The Sunday school convention and district conference of this district was held at Little Sioux, the 4th to 6th of November, both being well attended, and a peaceful, spiritual season enjoyed.

On the 20th of November, the church of the saints was dedicated here, the services marking an advanced step in church work here, and showing to the church and the world that the wonderful "child of Providence," D. H. Bays, has left no marks of his destructive intentions behind; but on the contrary there is a more hopeful feeling enjoyed by the saints, and a much more social feeling shown to the saints by the citizens of Mondamin and vicinity. The dedicatory sermon delivered by Elder Isaac M. Smith was replete with instruction, plainly showing the organic structure of the religious body to occupy the building being dedicated, as said organization is foreshadowed in the Old Testament and partially outlined in the New Testament. While the writer offered the prayer setting apart the building and furnishings for holy purposes, the Lord manifested his approval by the overshadowing of his Spirit. The services were in charge of Elder A. M. Fyrando, Bishop's agent.

The building overflowed with apparently eager listeners, who seemed to appreciate the entire service, some especially enjoying the excellent music rendered by a choir of voices, accompanied with organ, violin, horn, and clarinets, led by S. B. Kibler, of Woodbine, Iowa.

Bro. Smith occupied the church at night, while the writer occupied at Little Sioux, expecting to begin a series of services on the 21st, but on account of the storm postponed till the 23d; since which time I have continued services here on evenings and Sundays, with only fair attendance most of the time, last night there being present a large attendance. Have concluded to continue the services this week, the prospects being bright for some permanent good to be done; and even now I can say that the Lord has approved of the efforts. Yesterday forenoon was occupied in receiving the sacrament, and a social service at which the Lord's Spirit was present to give joy and encouragement, and to foreshadow the future.

A good session of Sunday school was held yesterday, of which Bro. James Gunsolley is superintendent, and the prospects are that the school, as it has already done, will yet result in much good.

A dearth of Christian energy exists here; but few aside from the saints taking any active interest in the building up of church interests having for their object the salvation of souls. The attention of the people generally in this mission is now occupied in preparing for holiday entertainments, so that spirituality in places is lost sight of partially.

I urge the saints to be careful to make their efforts in harmony with the suggestions of general church authorities that have spoken upon these matters, and not permit any part to be that which will have to be apologized for, or acknowledged afterwards to have been a deception, as is frequently done in having what is called a "Santa Claus."

With good wishes for all, and ill desires for none, I am, In the faith,

J. F. MINTUN.

INDEPENDENCE, Mo.,

Thanksgiving Day, 1898.

Editors Herald:—We offer to the Herald "Thanksgiving praises with a short prelude."

Rev. Morgan says: "The Bible is not read by the world, and as we judge Mohammedanism from Turkish atrocities, and not from the reading of the Koran, so men, by our lives, judge Christ."

A writer from Kansas asks the question why, if preachers now are satisfied with their creeds, they are so careful to say nothing about them. He says you hear little but "smooth, artistic, eloquent discourses;" and adds: "The old divines used to hurl those doctrinal sermons forth with great zeal." He asks why it would not be well for an enlightened people to understand their creeds and to agree as to what is truth. We hear and read many sermons, but none appeal to the reason, and touch the heart, and inspire the soul, as do those preached with the spirit of revelation "and by the power of God."

We listened to an excellent sermon last Sunday evening. It is a little tedious to sit an hour and a half and longer, even under a most gracious dropping of the sanctuary, and wait for the last point to be reached in the peroration. "Take sleep," says the commandment, "in the hours set apart by God for the rebuilding and strengthening of the body and mind; for even now there are some . . . who have disregarded the advice of the Spirit to retire early and to rise early," etc.

To be sure, we may carry away but a small portion of good after a short discourse, but is not the assimilation of a few thoughts spoken in season and by the Spirit likely to produce the most beneficial results?

At the long service referred to the congregation, near its close, began to retire by twos and threes. We overheard an interested listener in front of us whisper "That's a grand thought!" "Oh!" replied the seatmate, "I'm too sleepy for thoughts;" and the pressed lips were more closely pressed in a restless repose, until the doxology was given out, in vigorous tones, which had the effect, intentionally no doubt, of arousing the weary assembly.

At the close of the service we were glad to wend our way out from the noisy crowd into the open air. In the vestibule it was really pitiful to witness the half-asleep two and three-year-old babies, with faces awry, running here and there, clutching at the gowns of strange sisters, and crying to be taken somewhere. Like poor little waifs, they were looking for their mothers to take them home, where they should have been, and abed, long before that hour. We all agree in believing that old folks and children need much sleep.

An aged missionary once was invited to the house of a well-to-do brother, and, after partaking of supper, was escorted to his room. The preacher thought it to be the correct thing to retire early, and sought his hospitable pillow with a glad heart; but he was aroused from his quiet slumber all too soon. There was a great racket below, and on going into the hall he looked over the banisters just in time to see a party of silver wedding folks strut into the dining room to be "royally entertained" at just half past ten o'clock. Like good knights-errant, who from sheer exhaustion would feign unbuckle hauberk and spurs, they spurned the weary labors of the day and issued forth to renew their services in the night.

The world of fashion, they say, needs more beauty sleep; and we all need more time for rest and meditation.

Let us gather together earlier, and disperse in season; not at ten, eleven, and twelve o'clock, as is often done at business meetings, preparatory wedding practices, and other social functions. We are heartily in sympathy with the Go-to-bed-early Club which has been lately organized by the ladies of Washington.

Although only about forty out of eight hundred attended service this morning, those who did attend, like the Puritans, threw their whole souls into the national holiday. The thirty-third psalm was read and then the congregation sang a hymn of praise, the choir being "otherwise engaged." The presiding priest having announced that we would have "a short sermon," and afterward a fellowship meeting, Bro. Short proceeded. "We ought," he said, "to honor the President's proclamation, especially this year." He spoke of victories won, and of the enemy's opportunities (yet the God of Jacob was with our arms), and of peace negotiations nearly completed.

Another thought: as a people, we ought not only to give thanks at home, but "in good Puritan way we ought to assemble together to give thanks;" not like a certain reverend, "to Sampson and Schley" for our successes; but to God.

Bro. Brackenbury, with a true patriotic heart, struck up his favorite pibroch, "Remember that God armeth the patriot."

A worthy brother in the full flush of early manhood was thankful for health, for friends, and the temporal blessings of life; and one who has just returned from a trip for his health's sake was thankful for the privilege of being there. He felt to praise God that we as a nation champion the cause of the down-trodden and oppressed. He could see that the Lord's hand had been over the land in a "marvelous manner," and he rejoiced to know the time is at hand when he is about to endow his people with a double portion of his Spirit.

With words of fervid thankfulness Bro. Mills desired that we live in unity, "be tenderhearted, forgiving, and living in love, one with another."

Two sisters essayed to speak in kindly words of praise; one for the increased opportunities of woman as a helper in the many beneficent and educational activities. She expressed thankfulness for the great advantages available to woman in the realm of art and science; and both expressed their joy in a work so comprehensive of all that is exalting—as the latter-day work.

One has said, "This is a pivotal age in the Christian era." The world moves apace, and the Theosophists say, "Blessed is the man whose dogmatism wears the smile of tolerance, brotherly love, and respect for the opinions of his fellow men."

It welcomes the story of the hero, even if it is not told in the masterly style of the great authors. Even Lieutenant Hobson has raised six thousand dollars in four months, they say, as the result of literary diversion; but George Dewey, Admiral, is not to be so easily decoyed, for in vain is the offer made of five thousand dollars for a magazine article from his pen.

There is an abundant literary harvest now for the war-hero, the actor, the traveler, the musician, and the scientist; and it is to be hoped that the world will awake from its apathy, open its eyes to see the great work, the wonderful revelations of heaven, and step forward at once now in the closing of this century and claim that it is full time for the martyrs and representatives of the Christ-doctrine to be heard with an impartial ear.

Joseph Smith and his fellows, even in these latter days, had such a wonderful story to tell that it will continue to be told till time is ended, and, let the world criticise as it may, withhold its hearing from their testimony, and close its eyes to the glories that attend it; yet they will ever live in the hearts of God's people, beloved and honored as martyrs for the gospel's sake. We all offer our thanksgiving for this.

"And yet we rise by obstacles surmounted,
By burdens bravely borne and foes o'erthrown;
Each seeming hindrance ever may be counted
Unto the higher realm a stepping stone." C.

COLON, Neb., Dec. 7.

Editors Herald:—I came here some time ago and preached a few evenings; found much prejudice, and was unsuccessful in getting people out to hear the truth. I felt very much impressed to return, which I did the first of last week, when upon arriving I found Sr. David Fraser earnestly at work to make our feeble efforts a success this time. Would to God there were more such earnest workers in the church!

Our meetings are well attended; a good interest is manifest. We also found two young men who had united with the church when children, by the name of Burl, who claimed to be backsliders. We praise God for helping us to strengthen them by bringing the hope to their remembrance. May the Lord help and bless them to march faithfully onward toward the mark of perfection.

This is a new point, and the outlook is good for future work. May the God of Israel continue to bless and direct his work.

True Succession in Church Presidency.

CHAPTER 11.

It may be well now to trace the leading events of the movement under Elder Brigham Young and his associates after June 27, 1844, the date of the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith.

At that time Sidney Rigdon, the only remaining member of the Presidency, was in Pennsylvania; Brigham Young, H. C. Kimball, William Smith, Orson Pratt, Wilford Woodruff, Orson Hyde, and Lyman Wight, of the Twelve, were in the Eastern States; P. P. Pratt was near Utica, New York; J. E. Page was at Pittsburg, Pennsylvania; and G. A. Smith was in Michigan; John Taylor and Willard Richards being the only members of the Twelve at Nauvoo.

The anxiety was great, as the people were unprepared for such an event, and so with much trust did they look forward to the return of these officers, anticipating that they would be able to lead them out of their dilemma.

Parley P. Pratt was, we believe, the first of these absent officers to appear upon the scene. His attitude can be understood from the communication which he claimed to have received, quoted on page 75.

In a few weeks, however, Elder Rigdon and several of the Twelve were in Nauvoo, but the anxiously waiting saints found no union among their officers. Elder Rigdon made certain claims, not necessary to define here. Elder Brigham Young and others disputed these claims, and a bitter rivalry ensued. Elder Rigdon with the consent of local authorities appointed a meeting for August 8, 1844, to present his claims. The time came and Elder Brigham Young assumed control of the meeting. This meeting resulted in a vote to support the "Twelve in their calling." (Times and Seasons, Vol. 5, p. 638.) This seemed innocent enough, and, of course, the majority of the people voted for it, and Rigdon's claims were not placed before the assembly for their vote.

However, in the issue of the Times and Seasons for September 2, the very paper in which the minutes of the above meeting were published, the Editor, who was John Taylor, of the Twelve, made a statement in which he does not pretend to quote the language of the resolution, but relates the incident in rather stronger language than the minutes justify. We give the notice here both for present use and future reference:—

Great excitement prevails throughout the world to know "who shall be the successor of Joseph Smith?"

In reply, we say, be patient, be patient a little, till the proper time comes, and we will tell you all. "Great wheels move slow." At present, we can say that a special conference of the church was held in Nauvoo on the 8th ult., and it was carried without a dissenting voice, that the "Twelve" should preside over the whole church, and when any alteration in the presidency shall be required, seasonable notice will be given; and the elders abroad, will best exhibit their wisdom to all men, by remaining silent on those things they are ignorant of. Bishops Whitney and Miller have been appointed trustees, to manage the financial concerns of the church, and will soon enter on the duties of their calling.—Times and Seasons, Vol. 5, p. 632.

Not forgetting this promise of "seasonable notice," let us see how this idea of presiding grew, and how gradually it was introduced to the notice of the people. As we have seen, the Twelve were first sustained "in their calling." Two months later, at the October conference, the Twelve were presented and sustained separately. In the case of Brigham Young he was sustained as the "President of the Quorum of the Twelve, as one of the Twelve and First Presidency of the church." (Times and Seasons, Vol. 5, p. 692.)

At the General Conference of April, 1845, they ventured a little further, and "Elder Phelps moved that this conference accept the Twelve as the First Presidency and leaders of this church. Carried unanimously." (Times and Seasons, Vol. 6, p. 869.)

At the October conference of 1845, "Father John Smith, the President of the Stake, then arose and presented the Twelve as the Presidents of the whole church; which was seconded and carried unanimously." (Times and Seasons, Vol. 6, p. 1008.)

Thus step by step did they proceed, claiming more and more, until by a succession of events, not necessary to mention here, they found themselves in the Salt Lake Valley, in August, 1847, when strange events took place.

Tullidge, in his "Life of Brigham Young," quotes Mr. Woodruff as follows:—

"On the 6th of August, the Twelve were rebaptized. This we considered a privilege and a duty. As we had come into a glorious valley to locate and build up Zion, we felt like renewing our covenants before the Lord and each other. We soon repaired to the water, and President Young went down into the water and baptized all his brethren of the Twelve present. He then confirmed us, and sealed upon us our apostleship, and all the keys, powers, and blessings belonging to that office. Brother Heber C. Kimball baptized and confirmed President Brigham Young. The following were the names and order of those present: Brigham Young, Heber C. Kimball, Orson Pratt, Willard Richards, Wilford Woodruff, George A. Smith, and Amasa Lyman. Ezra T. Benson had been dispatched several days before to meet the companies on the road.

"In the afternoon of the next day, the Twelve went to the Temple block to select their inheritances. . . .

"During the same evening the Twelve went to City Creek, and Heber C. Kimball baptized fifty-five members of the camp, for the remission of their sins; and they were confirmed under the hands of President Young, Orson Pratt, Wilford Woodruff, George A. Smith, and Amasa Lyman; President Young being mouth.

"On the next day (Sunday, August 8), the whole camp of Israel renewed their covenants before the Lord by baptism. There were two hundred and twenty-four baptized this morning, making two hundred and eighty-eight rebaptized in the last three days."—Life of Brigham Young, pp. 180-182.

Why should these men who years before had made a covenant with God in baptism and whose hands had baptized hundreds of others be rebaptized? Did they not feel in their own souls that they had broken their covenant? Was not this effort the result of a conviction that they had lost favor with God and a desire to regain his approbation? Mr. Woodruff says: "This we considered a privilege and a duty." "We felt like renewing our covenants before the Lord and each other."

Under what circumstances is the renewal of a covenant in baptism necessary? We will let Orson Hyde, of their own number, answer:—

When members of our church have become cold and indifferent by the neglect of duty, and have fallen into a lukewarm state, but afterwards cherish a desire to be rebaptized, and covenant anew to keep the commandments of God, it is their right and privilege to confess their sins, humble themselves before God, and do their first work by being immersed in water, and thus their second baptism is no less for the remission or forgiveness of sins than their first; yet to break a solemn covenant by becoming cold, indifferent, or lukewarm, so as to render rebaptism often necessary, is certainly dangerous, for repeated neglect of duty, and the frequent breaking of your covenant, will render you unworthy the protection of God's Spirit, and you will find yourselves caught in the snare of the Devil in some unexpected moment.—Millennial Star, Vol. 8, p. 136.

If Mr. Hyde was right, these men had broken their covenant. His warning was timely; and, as subsequent events proved, the dire consequences which he pointed out were realized. Subsequently they not only extended the privilege of rebaptism, but enjoined it upon all who came there, as many can testify, and as the following counsel from Brigham Young, given on October 23, 1853, indicates:—

I will refer again to the brethren and sisters who have lately come over the plains. My counsel to them to-day is, as it has been on former occasions to all who have come into these valleys, Go and be baptized for the remission of sins, repenting of all your wanderings from the path of righteousness, believing firmly, in the name of Jesus Christ, that all your sins will be washed away. If any of you inquire what is the necessity of your being baptized, as you have not committed any sins, I answer, it is necessary to fulfill all righteousness.—Journal of Discourses, Vol. 2, p. 89.

If, as Mr. Hyde affirms, the breaking of the covenant necessitates rebaptism, and as Mr. Young affirms, all who came "into these valleys" needed rebaptism, then it follows that in the act of going there and indorsing that institution the covenant made in baptism before going there was broken.

Right here permit us to inform the reader that in the Reorganization baptisms administered by proper authority in the days of Joseph Smith are considered legal and sufficient. In Utah one having only this baptism would be asked to renew it, thus either throwing discredit upon the former baptism or acknowledging that the former covenant had been broken by their act of accepting the Utah church. Why, then, should we be censured for accepting the logical conclusions of their own teachings; viz., that they are a rejected and covenant-breaking church?

Returning to the strange acts of this band of pioneers in August, 1847, we learn that they not only renewed their baptismal covenant, but that the apostleship conferred upon them under the administration of Joseph Smith was considered inadequate, and the keys and powers by Joseph conferred, of which they now boast so much, were considered insufficient for their purpose. Mr. Woodruff says: "He [Brigham] then confirmed us, and sealed upon us our apostleship, and all the keys, powers, and blessings belonging to that office."

If anything more is needed to convince one that these men had turned from the church over which Joseph the Martyr presided, follow them back to Winter Quarters on the Missouri River where they arrived October 31, 1847.

Note the following:—

On the 3d of December a conference was held on the east side of the river; but, after having resolved to build immediately a large tabernacle for the congregation, it adjourned for three weeks.

There was a feast and a grand council, December 5, at the house of Elder Hyde, who had been in charge at Winter Quarters during the absence of the pioneers.

In this council of the Twelve Apostles, their President first expressed his views concerning the reorganization of the Quorum of the First Presidency, and wished those present to do the same in their order, when Heber C. Kimball, Orson Pratt, Wilford Woodruff, Willard Richards, George A. Smith, Amasa Lyman, and Ezra T. Benson, spoke to the question. President Young closed.

Orson Hyde then moved that Brigham Young be President of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and that he nominate his two councilors to form the First Presidency. Wilford Woodruff seconded the motion, and it was then carried unanimously.

President Young then nominated Heber C. Kimball as his first councilor, and Willard Richards as his second councilor, which was seconded and carried unanimously.—Life of Brigham Young, p. 188.

In this council of the Twelve, December 5, 1847, Brigham Young first expressed his views on this movement, then immediately, without further consideration or notice, this council proceeded to elevate three of their number to the Presidency. In this council there were only seven of those who composed the quorum at the death of Joseph Smith; viz., Brigham Young, H. C. Kimball, Willard Richards, Orson Pratt, Orson Hyde, Wilford Woodruff, and G. A. Smith. It is well known that William Smith, Lyman Wight, and John E. Page, had not acted with them for some time, and were never at Winter Quarters. John Taylor and P. P. Pratt were in Salt Lake Valley. These five were not only absent, but could have known nothing of such a thing being contemplated. So that to get a majority vote of the Twelve, as left by Joseph, to elevate Brigham Young, he must vote for himself. Yes, more; his election depended upon his own vote.

Then, too, what becomes of the solemn promise made just after the death of Joseph, when the saints were bidden, "Be patient, be patient," under the assurance that "when any alteration in the Presidency shall be required, seasonable notice will be given?" (See page —.)

Nor was this seasonable notice given before this action was presented to and indorsed by the body on December 24, 1847. The only possible time for notice was the nineteen days between December 5 and December 24. So when we consider that this took place on the frontier, where there were neither railroads nor telegraphs within hundreds of miles of the scene of action, we must conclude that the great mass of the church knew nothing of such a move being anticipated.

They claim that there were one thousand present. Suppose there were that many, which is very doubtful, that was about one out of every one hundred and fifty composing the church in 1844—one representing one hundred and forty-nine others, without the knowledge or consent of those represented, and that too when no intimation had been given of the business to be done. Thus did Brigham Young and his colleagues “reorganize the church” as he (Brigham) terms it (see p. 85); and yet Mr. Roberts comes forward and asserts that, “Any organization claiming to be the ‘Reorganized church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints’ is a counterfeit and writes fraud in the very title of it.” (See p. 84.)

Again, while Mr. Roberts indorses the above proceedings he files a complaint against the Amboy Conference of 1860, alleging insufficient notice and small attendance (see Roberts, p. 74-5), though the Amboy Conference had six months’ notice, the October conference of 1859 having “adjourned to meet at Amboy, Illinois, April 6, 1860” (see Saints’ Herald, Vol. 1, p. 27), and that too when means of communication were ample to spread the news to every part of the world where saints were found. Surely Mr. Roberts must be thoroughly imbued with the theory that “Orthodoxy, my lord, is my doxy; and heterodoxy is some other man’s doxy!”

But how did Mr. Young procure the indorsement of so many of the leading men? After that transformation procedure, spoken of in the first chapter of this work, when he found himself in the favor of a large number, and when those whom he could not lead had manifested their independence, he began gradually to remove from office and places of influence all whom he had any reason to fear would oppose him. First, Sidney Rigdon, of the First Presidency, was disposed of; then William Smith, John E. Page, and Lyman Wight, of the Twelve, were either expelled or placed under censure to destroy their influence.

To supply their places Amasa Lyman was presented, together with Sidney Rigdon, as a counselor in the Presidency, and offered the same position to the Twelve. (Times and Seasons, Vol. 5, p. 638.) Lyman accepted; Rigdon objected. Rigdon was expelled; Lyman was received as one of the Twelve. (Ibid., p. 692.)

Later (July 6, 1846), Ezra T. Benson was received into the Twelve, but just how he was designated for the position we have not learned.

George Miller, who was called of God to succeed Edward Partridge as Presiding Bishop (Doctrine and Covenants 107: 8), was relegated to second place and N. K. Whitney placed over him. (Times and Seasons, Vol. 5, p. 693.)

William Marks was removed from his position as President of the Stake of Nauvoo, and John Smith installed in his place. (Ibid., p. 692.) Elder Marks was also removed as President of the High Council, and was succeeded by Samuel Bent. (Times and Seasons, Vol. 6, p. 870.)

Josiah Butterfield, of the Presidents of Seventy, was cut off the church (no reason stated for the act) and Jedediah M. Grant chosen to succeed him. (Times and Seasons, Vol. 5, p. 693.)

Lyman Wight and John Snider were removed from the Nauvoo House building committee, and Amasa Lyman and

George A. Smith put in their places. (Millennial Star, Vol. 6, p. 91.)

Several changes were made in the High Council.

Nine extra quorums of Seventy were created; a part of them at least were the nominees of Brigham Young. (See p. 94.)

Several were expelled from the church without trial, and without a statement of the cause being given. (Times and Seasons, Vol. 5, p. 687.) Some were suspended without labor or trial for voting for Elder Rigdon, and some even suspended on anticipated acts of displeasure. (Ibid., p. 686.)

These and other changes too numerous to mention reveal that the tendency was to place men in positions of trust who could be relied upon to obey counsel regardless of the teaching of the law.

As early as September, 1844, when Elder William Marks in his defense of Elder Rigdon appealed to the written word, Elder Brigham Young replied and in that reply said:—

If this people have no evidence but the written word, it is quite time to go to the river and be baptized, etc.—Times and Seasons, Vol. 5, p. 666.

As to a person not knowing more than the written word, let me tell you that there are keys that the written word never spoke of, nor never will.—Times and Seasons, Vol. 5, p. 667.

This was early paving the way to teach that which the word of God did not contain.

In harmony with this thought Elder Brigham Young said on April 6, 1845:—

Joseph in his lifetime did not receive everything connected with the doctrine of redemption, but he has left the key with those who understand how to obtain and teach to this great people all that is necessary for their salvation and exaltation in the celestial kingdom of our God.—Times and Seasons, Vol. 6, p. 955.

This was preparing the way for the introduction of principles which Joseph had not taught. Many like passages can be produced from their record all through the years until now, of teachings which had a tendency, if believed, to train the people to obey counsel and follow their leaders without asking whether Joseph taught it or not, or whether it was taught in the word of God. This led to the condition of things described by Brigham Young on September 11, 1853:—

If I have any knowledge touching the condition of this people at the present time, and the way they are taught, led, counseled, and dictated by those who go before them to open up the way, it is directly opposite of that we saw in the days of Joseph the Prophet.—Journal of Discourses, Vol. 1, p. 78.

Mr. Young may have intended that these words should have a very limited application, but the tendency of his teaching was to bring about a general condition of departure from original principles. This made it easy for him to introduce doctrines and principles not taught under Joseph Smith’s administration, nor in the word of God. Some of these departures we will notice briefly, as the space designed for this work will not admit of an extended examination.

Nowhere in the standard books of the church or in the teachings of Joseph Smith can anything like the following from Brigham Young be found:—

Now hear it, O inhabitants of the earth, Jew and Gentile, Saint and sinner! When our father Adam came into the garden of Eden, he came into it with a celestial body, and brought Eve, one of his wives, with him. He helped to make and organize this world. He is MICHAEL, the Archangel, the ANCIENT OF DAYS! about whom holy men have written and spoken—HE is our FATHER and our GOD, and the only God with whom we have to do.—Journal of Discourses, Vol. 1, p. 50.

Here is another illustration of where a departure from the written word led Mr. Young and those who sustained him:—

I have given you a few leading items upon this subject, but a great deal more remains to be told. Now, remember from this time forth, and forever, that Jesus Christ was not begotten by the Holy Ghost. I will repeat a little anecdote. I was in conversation with a certain learned professor upon this subject, when I replied, to this idea—"if the Son was begotten by the Holy Ghost, it would be very dangerous to baptize and confirm females, and give the Holy Ghost to them, lest he should beget children, to be palmed upon the Elders by the people, bringing the Elders into great difficulties.—Journal of Discourses, Vol. 1, p. 51.

We feel to apologize to our readers for even quoting that which approaches so nearly upon the vulgar and obscene; but the depths of degradation and shame to which this departure from God's word led this man can only be realized by letting him speak for himself.

Contrast the above with the word of God:—

Now the birth of Jesus Christ was on this wise: When his mother Mary was espoused to Joseph, before they came together, she was found with child of the Holy Ghost.—Matt. 1: 18.

Reader, will you follow the leadership of a man who holds the keys by which such filthy and disgusting things are revealed, and thus place yourself in opposition to the word of God?

Here is another rich treasure brought to light by this holder of special keys:—

I wish to impress another thing upon your minds. An Elder, who is willing to preach the Gospel, borrows a hundred or a thousand dollars from you, and you never breathe the first complaint against him, until you came home to this valley, but after you have been here for a few days, you follow me round and fill my ears with complaints against this brother, and ask me what he has done with your money? I say, "I do not know." Thus you are distressed and in misery, all the day long, to get it back again. If an Elder has borrowed from you, and you find he is going to apostatize, then you may tighten the screws upon him; but if he is willing to preach the Gospel, without purse or scrip, it is none of your business what he does with the money he has borrowed from you.—Journal of Discourses, Vol. 1, p. 340.

Surely there is nothing in the written word nor in the teachings of Joseph Smith like this.

Another specimen:—

I have many a time, in this stand, dared the world to produce as mean devils as we can. We can beat them at anything. We have the greatest and smoothest liars in the world, the cunningest and most adroit thieves, and any other shade of character that you can mention.

We can pick out elders in Israel right here who can beat the world at gambling; who can handle the cards; can cut and shuffle them with the smartest rogue on God's footstool. I can produce elders here who can shave their smartest shavers, and take their money from them. We can beat the world at any game.—Deseret News, Vol. 6, p. 291; Journal of Discourses, Vol. 4, p. 77.

We can hardly believe that Mr. Young intended to indorse all this rascality and corruption, and yet the reason which he assigns for this deplorable state of affairs seems to commit him to an indorsement.

Here it is:—

We can beat them because we have men here that live in the light of the Lord; that have the holy priesthood, and hold the keys of the kingdom of God. But you may go through all the sectarian world, and you cannot find a man capable of opening the door of the kingdom of God to admit others in. We can do that. We can pray the best, preach the best, and sing the best. We are the best looking and finest set of people on the face of the earth; and they can begin any game they please, and we are on hand, and can beat them at anything they have a mind to begin. They may make sharp their two-edged swords, and I will turn out the elders of Israel with greased feathers, and whip them to death. We are not to be beat. We expect to be a stumbling block to the whole world, and a rock of offence to them.—Deseret News, Vol. 6, p. 291; Journal of Discourses, Vol. 4, p. 77.

It would be idle to dispute the claim of Brigham Young that he held "keys that the written word never spoke of, nor never will." But whence came they? From heaven, or from beneath—from God, or from Satan?

Let Moroni answer:—

Wherefore, all things which are good, cometh of God; and that which is evil, cometh of the devil; for the devil is an enemy unto God, and fighteth against him continually, and inviteth and enticeth to sin, and to do that which is evil continually. But behold, that which is of God, inviteth and enticeth to do good continually; wherefore, every thing which inviteth and enticeth to do good, and to love God, and to serve him, is inspired of God. Wherefore take heed, my beloved brethren, that ye do not judge that which is evil to be of God, or that which is good and of God, to be of the devil. For behold, my brethren, it is given unto you to judge, that ye may know good from evil; and the way to judge is as plain, that ye may know with a perfect knowledge, as the daylight is from the dark night. For behold, the Spirit of Christ is given to every man, that they may know good from evil; wherefore I shew unto you the way to judge: for every thing which inviteth to do good, and to persuade to believe in Christ, is sent forth by the power and gift of Christ; wherefore ye may know with a perfect knowledge, it is of God; but whatsoever thing persuadeth men to do evil, and believe not in Christ, and deny him, and serve not God, then ye may know with a perfect knowledge it is of the devil, for after this manner doth the devil work, for he persuadeth no man to do good, no not one; neither doth his angels; neither do they who subject themselves unto him.—Book of Mormon, Moroni 7:2.

Let us apply the above test to some other items of the teaching of Elder Young and his colleagues. Here is something that, had it been reported of them by their enemies, we could not have given credence to; but it is found in their own publications:—

All mankind love themselves; and let these principles be known by an individual, and he would be glad to have his blood shed. That would be loving themselves even unto an eternal exaltation. Will you love your brothers and sisters, likewise, when they have committed a sin that cannot be atoned for without the shedding of blood? Will you love that man or woman well enough to shed their blood? That is what Jesus Christ meant. He never told a man or woman to love their enemies in their wickedness. He never intended any such thing. . . . I have known a great many men who have left this church, for whom there is no chance whatever for exaltation; but if their blood had been spilled, it would have been better for them. The wickedness and ignorance of the nations forbid this principle being in full force; but the time will come when the law of God will be in full force.

This is loving our neighbor as ourselves; if he needs help, help him; and if he wants salvation, and it is necessary to spill his blood upon the ground in order that he may be saved, spill it. Any of you who understand the principles of eternity, if you have sinned a sin requiring the shedding of blood, except the sin unto death, would not be satisfied nor rest until your blood should be spilled, that you might gain that salvation you desire. That is the way to love mankind.—Journal of Discourses, Vol. 4, p. 220; Deseret News, Vol. 6, p. 397.

The above is the language of Brigham Young; the following the language of Jedediah M. Grant, his counselor:—

I say there are men and women here that I would advise to go to the president immediately, and ask him to appoint a committee to attend to their case; and then let a place be selected, and let that committee shed their blood.—Deseret News, Vol. 6, p. 235.

Efforts have been made of late years to explain this language away by making it appear that it only had reference to those who should be executed for crime by the laws of the land. If this is what Brigham intended, what did he mean by "The wickedness and ignorance of the nations forbid this principle being in full force," etc.? Surely he had reference to something which now the law of the land forbids. What did Jedediah M. Grant mean by advising that certain parties "go to the president immediately, and ask him to appoint a committee to attend to their case"?

To occupy more space upon this point is unnecessary. The reader can readily see that this language cannot be explained away; and that Messrs. Young and Grant intended to justify individuals in taking the lives of others, thus encouraging murder; and that too in the name of God and religion. We do not wonder that the advocates of the Utah system blush with shame to meet this, and would gladly close their eyes to the purport of these words of their leaders so full of darkness and horror. Oh, had the keys that unlocked these things been lost, in how much better condition would latter-day Israel be to-day! Oh, tell us not that the anointed successor of Joseph the Seer should have been ordained under such hands, and by such polluted lips!

Much more of this character could be produced from their own records, but we will invite attention to but one more principle into which the people of Utah were led by the deceptive theory that their leaders possessed keys to unlock things never known to Joseph or the written word.

On August 29, 1852, at a Special Conference held in Salt Lake City, Utah, the doctrine of polygamy or plurality of wives was first introduced to the church for indorsement. That it had been practiced to some extent prior to this is evident. By whom, or how many, is immaterial; for our conduct should not be governed by the acts of men, but by the principles of truth. The existence of this practice had been both admitted and denied by those who were in a position to know, until it is very difficult to locate the responsibility for this departure from the law of God; nor is this the purpose of this treatise.

But one point is admitted by all; viz.: that the church as a body was never asked to indorse plural marriage before August 29, 1852. The responsibility of the body began with that date, and Brigham Young was the responsible party for its introduction. No matter who may or who may not have practiced it privately, it is legitimate to hold Mr. Young responsible for introducing it to the public as a tenet of faith.

It is not our purpose in this work to discuss polygamy. It is well known that the Reorganization is and ever has been uncompromisingly opposed to it; and the ministry everywhere is well prepared to meet the advocates of this pernicious innovation. We present it here as another item of doctrine given to the church by these boastful keyholders, and which was not presented to the church in the days of Joseph Smith.

As evidence of this we cite the following from their own men:—

G. Q. Cannon, in a sermon, June 11, 1871, Journal of Discourses, Vol. 14, pp. 165, 166, says:—

"A prevalent idea has been that this prejudice against us owes its origin and continuation to our belief in a plurality of wives. . . . Joseph and Hyrum Smith were slain in Carthage jail, and hundreds of persons were persecuted to death previous to the church having any knowledge of this doctrine."

H. B. Clawson says of the time they were driven from Nauvoo:—

"Polygamy at that time was unknown among those of the Mormon faith. . . . The doctrine of polygamy was not promulgated until they got to Salt Lake; not, in fact, until some little time after they arrived there." (See Salt Lake Herald, February 9, 1882.)

Being interviewed by United States Senator Trumbull, in 1869, Brigham Young said:—

"As to our institutions, we know we are right, and polygamy, which you object to, was not originally a part of our system, but was adopted by us as a necessity, after we came here."—Alta Californian.

The Deseret News of December 11, 1881, or December 7, 1882, says:—

"The 'Mormon' church existed for many years without polygamy. Indeed, correctly speaking, polygamy is not new and never has been even a tenet of the 'Mormon' faith."—"Books and Utah Mormonism in Contrast," pp. 22, 23.

We present further that the prophecy uttered by Brigham Young in August, 1852, has utterly failed.

Here is what he said:—

You heard Brother Pratt state, this morning, that a Revelation would be read this afternoon, which was given previous to

Joseph's death. It contains a doctrine, a small portion of the world is opposed to; but I can deliver a prophecy upon it. Though that doctrine has not been practiced by the Elders, this people have believed in it for years. . . .

The Revelation will be read to you. The principle spoken upon by Brother Pratt, this morning, we believe in. And I tell you—for I know it—it will sail over, and ride triumphantly above all the prejudice and priestcraft of the day; it will be fostered and believed in by the more intelligent portions of the world, as one of the best doctrines ever proclaimed to any people. Your hearts need not beat; you need not think that a mob is coming here to tread upon the sacred liberty which the Constitution of our country guarantees unto us, for it will not be.—Supplement to Millennial Star, 1853 (Vol. 15), p. 31.

The people who accepted this principle, and the sentiment expressed above, maintained their position for years as best they could against an overwhelming and ever increasing conviction and sentiment against it. Instead of its riding "triumphantly above all the prejudice," etc., it was evident from the first, to all but the Brighamites, that its doom was sealed, and that the failure of those who advocated it was but a question of time. Laws were enacted against it, men were fined, imprisoned, disfranchised, and exiled; and yet they held out, contending that it was a part of their faith and that they could not abandon it without renouncing that faith. As late as the 15th of April, 1889, Mr. George Teasdale, then as now one of their Twelve Apostles, published editorially the following:—

The assault against the church is made on the line of the marriage question because it seems to offer at present the greatest prospect for the success of hostile effort. The saints in general are less firmly united on this principle than on many others belonging to the gospel, and it is hoped by our enemies that this circumstance will conduce largely, if not successfully, to bring about its renunciation by the people in a church capacity. Such an act would be tantamount to an apostasy, and the consequent destruction of the power and authority of the priesthood would be consummated. This is the great object aimed at.—Millennial Star, Vol 51, pp. 232, 233.

The very next year, 1890, President Woodruff issued a manifesto forbidding the solemnization of any more plural marriages. This was adopted in "church capacity," and so according to Mr. Teasdale they committed an act tantamount to apostasy and the destruction of the power and authority of their priesthood was consummated. And that is the way it triumphed!

Mr. Young has been proved a false prophet; and the institution he founded is tottering to its fall. In the language of Mr. Roberts, "It is only a question of time with regard to its failure. MENE, MENE, TEKEL, is written upon its walls—God hath numbered thy kingdom—weighed in the balances—found wanting!"

In rejecting the family which God has chosen, the followers of Elder Young have repeated the mistake of ancient Israel, and they might with great profit read and be admonished by the following:—

Thus saith the Lord; If ye can break my covenant of the day, and my covenant of the night, and that there should not be day and night in their season; then may also my covenant be broken with David my servant, that he should not have a son to reign upon his throne; and with the Levites that minister, my ministers. As the host of heaven cannot be numbered, neither the sand of the sea measured; so will I multiply the seed of David my servant, and the Levites that minister unto me. Moreover the word of the Lord came to Jeremiah, saying, Considerest thou not what this people have spoken, saying, The two families which the Lord hath chosen, he hath even cast them off? thus they have despised my people, that they should be no more a nation before them. Thus saith the Lord; If my covenant be not with day and night, and if I have not appointed the ordinances of heaven and earth; then will I cast away the seed of Jacob, and David my servant, so that I will not take any of his seed to be rulers over the seed of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob: for I will cause their captivity to return, and have mercy on them.—Jeremiah 33:20-26.

Conference Minutes.

OKLAHOMA.

Conference with Canadian Central branch, at Guy schoolhouse, November 19 and 20. D. S. Crawley in charge, assisted by S. J. Hinkle, R. M. Maloney clerk. Branch reports: Stillwater 26; gain 7. Canadian Central 22; gain 8. Oak Grove 12; gain 5. No report from Oklahoma branch (a written report was received after conference adjourned). Ministry reports: Elders D. S. Crawley, S. J. Hinkle, Frank Vrooman, R. W. Davis, R. M. Maloney, H. C. Hughes, C. R. Duncan. Priests: L. A. Hall, James Yates. One feature of Bro. Duncan's report is worthy of mention: "I suggest that a committee be appointed to erect a suitable mark at the grave of our departed brother and missionary, G. W. Shute, who honors our mission field by making his last resting place there, and who died in the active missionary service in our field. I think the family should be consulted if such committee be appointed, and that the Northwest Kansas district be notified of our action, and that the family and district be permitted to contribute to the fund. District, do this act of love for the memory of a faithful old warrior, who has gone on before. In case the camp meeting is held near Bro. Hinkle's place next year, it will be a fitting feature of it to have a formal 'unveiling' of the monument upon that occasion." The following motion offered by R. W. Davis and R. M. Maloney was unanimously carried: "Moved that a committee be appointed to confer with the family of G. W. Shute and the Northwest Kansas district in regard to procuring a monument to mark the last resting place of our brother; and that this committee be authorized to purchase said monument, and if possible have it unveiled at our next district reunion." The following brethren were chosen as said committee: R. W. Davis, R. M. Maloney, W. S. Macrae, H. Bivens, and C. R. Duncan. Each branch and all scattered members in Oklahoma district are requested to contribute to a sinking fund for the purpose of running and sustaining the tent work; and also that each branch make report of amount on hand or sent in at each conference. D. S. Crawley, S. J. Hinkle, James Yates, and R. W. Davis dispensed the word. Adjourned to Oklahoma branch, Friday, February 17, 1899, at ten a. m.

Sunday School Associations.

CLINTON.

Convention convened at Veve chapel, Missouri, November 25. Lucy Wright secretary. District officers all present. Superintendent, Sr. Dr. Miller, reported: Five visits made to church schools, one by request to a Union school, and superintended school work one week at Midway Park reunion; traveled 361 miles in interest of schools; formulated blank reports for superintendents, assistants, and teachers, and wrote 59 letters. Assistant superintendent, Mina Kearney, reported:

Visited two schools, prepared a paper for Sunday school day at Midway Park reunion. Also, as librarian, she reported: One library located at Rich Hill, containing 41 volumes. Soliciting aid, collected and distributed 178 Heralds, 82 Hopes, 28 Ensigns, and 32 tracts. She, together with Anna Jordan and Ollie Keck, purchased a neat paper holder and placed it in the union depot at Nevada, and keep it filled with church papers. Although distributing papers at first seemed a cross, it grew to be a pleasure. Officers chosen: Superintendent, Sr. Dr. Miller, Verdella; first assistant, Mina Kearney, Nevada; second assistant, Curtis Silvers; secretary and treasurer, Lucy Wright, Nevada; librarian, Mina Kearney. Six schools reported, showing a total enrollment of 183, average attendance 136, Hopes taken 25, Senior Quarters 33, Intermediate 39, Primary 31. On the golden text work Rural Home school stood first on the roll of honor. This is a small school at the home of Bro. and Sr. Chezem, about twelve miles southwest of Nevada. The enrollment was 11, and all learned the texts. While the work is not up to the standard desired, yet most of the schools are in their infancy and the interest seems good, so by proper care we believe much good may be accomplished.

CHATHAM.

Mary M. Green, secretary, Appledore, Ontario, December 6, writes: "I unintentionally omitted Ridgetown Sunday school in the items of our last convention; am pleased to say their school is in a fair condition, and so reported at our last convention. I have also received reports from Longwood and Wallaceburg since my arrival home. A number of our schools are preparing to give an entertainment at Christmas, for to aid along in the gospel."

APPEAL.

To all who may feel an interest, and the saints and friends in Montana in particular, I hereby appeal for funds to purchase tent for use in Montana. My reasons for making the appeal thus early is that we want the tent at the opening of the season; we are sure to get it cheaper by ordering in the winter when tent makers are not rushed; at this season people are more apt to have ready cash than in the spring. I would not make the appeal a general one only that saints in Rocky Mountain mission are comparatively few.

Our tent work in the mission has been a decided success, and Bro. D. W. Wight is now doing his winter work on the ground canvassed by him and Bro. R. J. Parker last summer, and is baptizing. The success met with in Utah in tent work is flattering; Montana can repeat it. We are too poor to hire halls. Will you help us? "He that helpeth the poor lendeth to the Lord." Just as soon as you read this feel that it means YOU, and send me your nickel, dime, dollar, or more as you can spare. Fairfield, Utah, will reach me. If money order, draw on Salt Lake City. Express orders preferred.

J. W. WIGHT.

NOTICES.

The undersigned would like to get names and addresses of secretaries of all quorums of priests, as we have important matters as priests to consider, and wish to notify all priests to weigh matters carefully pertaining to same; so confer a favor and reply at once. Also, will all members of the Fourth Quorum of priests promptly write to the undersigned and give address plainly written so you can all be informed on the subjects presented to me. Brethren, let us get into line and move along in our calling, and endeavor to serve God aright, and help to benefit mankind.

Yours in bonds,

EBEN MILLER.

TEMPLE, Lake County, Ohio.

Home is home no longer,
For mother is not there;
Angels bright have taken her
From all this worldly care.
Dark and lonely is her room,
And empty is her chair;
But now she dwells with him she loves,
In that world so bright and fair.

SANDALL.—Mrs. Ann Sandall was born in Surry, England, October 21, 1820; died at Layton, Utah, October 6, 1898. She emigrated to Utah, and reached Salt Lake City in October, 1860. Was baptized into Reorganized Church by Elder E. C. Brand, May 19, 1871. Funeral sermon by Elder D. W. Wight.

It was our brother's earnest wish to live to raise his two little grandsons, that they might be strong in the faith, and fitted to work for the Master. Grandpa Raper was a pensioner, having been a soldier in the Mexican war. He was a deacon, and will be missed in Santa Maria branch.

THOMPSON.—At Hearne, Texas, October 31, 1898, Bro. Ben F. Thompson, aged 20 years, 4 months, 26 days. He was confined to his bed three years and suffered much, but died rejoicing in the gospel of our Savior. Funeral services by Elder E. A. Erwin.

HUNTSMAN.—Near Lamoni, Iowa, November 27, 1898, passed away one of the oldest citizens of the county, Sr. Catharine Huntsman (wife of Jacob Huntsman), aged 81 years and 9 months. She was born February 27, 1817, in Richland county, Ohio. She joined the church in 1863, in Lasalle County, Illinois; was baptized and confirmed by Elder John Landers. She and her husband were members of the old church, and went through many of the persecutions that came upon the saints of those times, including those at Haun's Mill. She was strong in the faith to the last. Leaves three sons and one daughter, and a number of grandchildren to mourn. Funeral sermon at the home, by Elder T. J. Bell.

REESE.—Mary Davies Reese was born April 20, 1811, at Morristown, South Wales; died November 15, 1898, at Courts, Montana. Deceased married John E. Reese, December 17, 1840, at Morristown, Wales. Religiously she became connected with the Latter Day Saints in 1850, and afterwards came west [to America]. In 1863 came to Montana. The following year she settled on what has since been named Reese Creek, where and since when they have lived. As pioneers they had many trials, and at times were menaced with the Indians. After a married life of 57 years, 11 months, and 17 days, "Grandma Reese" passed peacefully away as one going to sleep, at the ripe age of 87 years, 6 months, and 27 days. She leaves a husband, one daughter, and four sons, with numerous grandchildren and great-grandchildren to mourn her demise. Her funeral obsequies were conducted by Elder J. W. Wight, of the Reorganized Latter Day Saints, she being a faithful and consistent member of that organization. The services were from the saints' chapel, Courts, Montana, a host of relatives and friends being present as a tribute to her memory and good deeds. Her remains were laid to rest in the Reese Creek cemetery, on the p. m. of Thursday, the 17th inst.—Avant Courier, Bozeman, Montana, November 19, 1898.

VICKERS.—At North Scituate, Rhode Island, October 7, 1898, Sr. Abigail Paine Vickers, in the 74th year of her age. She was the widow of Elder Erastus Vickers, who died some eighteen years ago at Dougless, Massachusetts, at which place he had labored faithfully for the Lord. Father and Mother Vickers were both direct descendants of the Narragansett Indians, of which tribe she was a member at death. She was for many years a faithful saint and died firm in the faith. Funeral services at her home and at the grave by Rev. Durgeon, also a descendant of the Narragansetts.

LIDDINGTON.—Arthur Beaumont Liddington fell asleep in Jesus September 15, 1898.

We while mourning o'er our lost one,
Have no visions of despair;
For seated on thy tomb faith's angel
Saith thou art not, art not there.

Where then art thou with thy Savior,
Blessed forever—blessed to be;
Amid the sinless little children,
Who have heard his "Come to me."

Past the shades of death's dark valley,
Thou art leaning on his breast,
Where the wicked cannot enter,
And the weary are at rest.

RUBY.—At the home of her son Sheldon, Rock Island, Illinois, November 13, 1898, Sr. Mary Ruby, aged 86 years and 2 months, having been born September 13, 1812, in Hartwick, Otsego County, New York. Wheeler Baldwin, who died May 11, 1887. Among her friends generally she was known as Ruby, even after her last marriage. Two sons and a daughter survive her, as also eight grandchildren, and ten great-grandchildren. Her son, Jerome Ruby, and daughter, Charlotte Pruden Staggers, died a few years ago. Elder J. S. THE RELIGION OF THE FUTURE.

AN address was delivered before the church congress recently held at Bradford, England, by the Rt. Rev. W. Boyd Carpenter, Bishop of Ripon, containing some passages which have excited a great deal of comment. Bishop Carpenter was president of the congress, and his subject was "The Opportunities, Needs, and Characteristics of our age." The closing passage, on the "Religion of the Future," which is copied from the report of the London Chronicle, is as follows:—

"The future of the world does not belong to sectarianism, and so the dream of Catholicity will be fulfilled. Of another thing I am certain. As increasing light falls upon great problems, and men begin to realize how much of Judaistic, Pagan, and scholastic thought is mingled with popular Christianity, how many accretions due to human weakness and race prejudice have been incorporated in our conceptions, they will distrust the church. For every new epoch has added new dogma to faith, and with every new dogma has gone further from the simplicity of Christ. The future of the world does not belong to Latinism, and so the vision of Protestantism will be fulfilled. But of a third thing I am convinced even more surely. The religion of the future will neither be Protestant nor Catholic, but simply Christian. The dogmas of the churches which have separated communion from communion will fall off as autumn leaves before the fresh winds of God. Many views which in the very providence of God have played their part in clearing the thoughts of men will pass into forgetfulness. Men will not grieve to see the old things go, for a larger faith will be theirs; they will not think God's world will fall apart because we tear up parchments more or less. The Church of God will renew its youth. It will be content with a simpler symbol because it will have learned Christ. It will not need any longer Trent, or Westminster, or Lambeth, or the Vatican to lead it. It will be satisfied with simpler thoughts and a purer faith. It will be satisfied to realize that there is one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all."

PHYSICAL TRAINING IN PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

THE care of the body has been, up to comparatively recent years, strangely neglected in the public schools of this country. It has been considered a quite sufficient educational training for the young to cram and overload their brains with a quantity of matter difficult to digest, and in too many instances even when assimilated of little use in after life. Numbers of delicate, highly strung children have broken down under the strain, and the dreary daily grind of the monotonous cramming system, undergone in unhealthy surroundings, have developed many of the nervous diseases to which the present generation is so peculiarly susceptible. What does knowledge profit a man, if in the gaining of it he loses the still more precious gift of good health? The nations of the old world, notably Greece and Rome, understood and appreciated much more clearly than do the people of these times the harmfulness of unduly forcing the mind to the lasting hurt of the body. The gymnasiums of ancient Greece probably reached, in their methods of training the young, a higher ideal than have any of the educational systems now in vogue. In the face of this condition of affairs, it is pleasing to note that the people of America are rapidly becoming alive to the pernicious effects of developing the mind at the expense of the body. The more rational mode of educating the young would appear to be that of so training the body and mind that both advance as far as possible at an equal rate. Thus, if a child is of weak constitution but possessed of unusual mental capacity, it should be the aim of his teacher to strengthen his physical powers, and until that object is accomplished to let the mind take care of itself; on the other hand, if the reverse is the case, to adopt contrary methods. The individuals should be studied separately, and children should not be lumped together in a body and put through the same course without regard to their different temperaments, dispositions, and constitutions. It is now about ten years since German gymnastics were introduced into public schools of this country. Since then physical training has held a place in the curriculum of almost all the large cities of the East. The report of the director of physical training in public schools of Washington has lately been published. According to this report, the beneficial results of systematic daily exercise have been marked; but, as the writer of the paper truly remarks, "It is impossible to test the full measure of success or failure of our efforts. It is in the remote future, with school days long past, that the lasting influence of such work will be felt by the individual child." However, one thing seems certain, viz., that the introduction of physical training into the public schools of America is a step in the right direction, and, if intelligently carried out, should result in producing a stronger race mentally and physically. The fact should not be forgotten, though, that physical training may be abused. Gymnastics should not be permitted to take the place of play, but rather the two should go hand in hand.—Medical Record.

PROF. HAECKEL ON EVOLUTION.

AT the Cambridge Congress of Zoology Prof. Haeckel read a fascinating paper on the descent of man. He does not hesitate to say that science has now definitely established the certainty that man has descended through various stages of evolution from the lowest form of animal life, during a period of a thousand million years. The New York Sun with commendable enterprise cabled over quite a full account of the paper, and goes on to say: Lamarck, Darwin, and finally scores of other investigators won the knowledge which must now be accepted as the crowning achievement of science during the nineteenth century.

Recent discoveries of fossil remains in Java, Madagascar, and Australia have made still more complete the evidence, available proof, and discoveries wherewith Darwin's name is most commonly associated. Prof. Haeckel thus summarized the steps in evolution:—

"The monophyletic origin of all mammalia—that is to say, their origin from one common parent form, from monotremata upward to man—is no longer a vague hypothesis, but an established fact. All the living and extinct mammalia which we know are descended from a single common ancestral form which lived in the Triassic or Permian period, and this form must be derived from some Permian or perhaps Carboniferous reptile allied to the Progonosauria and Theriodontia, which was derived from a Carboniferous amphibian of the group Stegocephala. These amphibians in turn descend from Devonian fishes, and these again from lower vertebrates. The most important fact is that man is a primate, and that all primates—lemurs, monkeys, anthropoid apes, and man—descended from one common stem. Looking forward to the twentieth century, I am convinced it will universally accept our theory of descent. I have no doubt that the strong influence of anthropogeny upon other branches of science will be most fruitful."

A member of the congress said that Prof. Haeckel had spoken of one thousand million years as necessary for his evolution tree, while Lord Kelvin supposed himself to have proved that this world as the scene of life could not be more than twenty-five million years old. It seemed unwise to complicate Prof. Haeckel's theory by assuming that a thousand million years would be required for proof.

Prof. Haeckel replied that the computation was not his own. He took the time from one of the most eminent geologists. For himself he confessed that he had no intuition as to the length of time required for the evolution.

The congress received and discussed Prof. Haeckel's paper with the greatest enthusiasm.—Scientific American, September 10, 1898.

In celebration of its twenty-seventh birthday, beginning with the January issue, The Church Union of New York City becomes a magazine and, at the same time, reduces its subscription price from One dollar to Fifty cents a year.

The prominent features of the January issue, aside from the short and pithy editorials and articles in lighter vein, are contributions by Washington Gladden, D. D., on "England at School;" by Charles S. McFarland on "The Life and Teachings of Professor Budde" of Strasburg University and a sermon by Dr. Madison C. Peters of New York on "The John Storms of the Church."

We understand that sample copies of the paper will be sent to any one free on application, to The Church Union Co., 18 Wall St., New York City.

Echoes from Graceland.

CONDUCTED BY GRACELAND COLLEGE.

CHEERING news for the college comes in from all around. Our branches are waking up to a sense of their responsibility towards the educational policy of the church. Did you note the letter of A. M. Fyrando in recent issue of the Herald? That's the right kind of spirit. Well done, Magnolia!

Omaha held a box supper last Wednesday but one, in the interests of Graceland. Lamoni gives a stereopticon lecture on Christmas eve for the same good cause. Rumors of activity are heard from the East.

Numerous inquiries about college lots have been received, and several lots have been sold recently. The subscription list is still growing. Have you looked at this week's list? Is your name there? Every ardent Latter Day Saint is going to have his name on that roll of honor—the roll of sacrifice. One brother from Illinois is going to pay $5.00 a month; another brother sends along a bequest of $5.00, asks for his name to be placed down on the "Appeal" list, and inquires the price of the lots. Remember the cause of the church, the education of our children, and the families of our missionaries. January 10 is coming, and do not forget that your name must be in the hands of Bro. Criley by that time.

Our President was noticeable by his absence last Friday but one, and on investigation, we found that he had gone on a college missionary tour. The Wednesday following marked his return to Graceland, and with great joy we learned that St. Joseph, Council Bluffs, and Omaha were united in their intentions to give substantial aid to our beloved college. Council Bluffs' Religio thinks of undertaking a subscription. Now, you Religians, stir up your various societies.

Bro. J. Charles Jensen has been appointed as the Bluffs representative of Graceland.

During the past week or so, our students have been hard at work preparing for their terminal examinations. The Fall Term closes this week. The Winter Term begins January 3; tuition fee for the term $10.00.

ADAM-GOD.

It is evident that the authorities of the church in Utah, whether they have changed their views or not, are a little more reserved than formerly, and refuse to commit themselves on this theory.

The Deseret Weekly for December 3, 1898, in commenting editorially concerning the proceedings of a Sunday school convention recently held in the Assembly Hall in Salt Lake City, over which George Q. Cannon, General Superintendent, presided, states that several questions were read by Elder Reynolds.

President Cannon said in relation to them that often such questions, concerning which there is no written revelation, came up from Sunday school workers who desired answers. Yesterday some young man asked the speaker if Adam was the father of Jesus Christ.

It is not wise for us to puzzle ourselves over questions concerning which the Lord has withheld full knowledge from us. Theosophists teach the reincarnation of the human soul, and some elders in our church have indulged in similar speculations. To have our Sunday school classes indulge in such theorizing will produce darkness. They should be confined to what the Lord has revealed. Pupils will ask questions on abstruse subjects, which is well enough, if they can be answered from revelation, but it is not well to try to find out mysteries. Where individuals have had mysteries revealed to them, which the President of the Church does not make known to it, they should hold their peace respecting the same. The First Presidency do not deem it wise to agitate certain questions concerning Adam, and the Savior. At the time when the Prophet Joseph was giving endowments in Nauvoo abominable doctrines were taught and circulated, some of which the speaker stated, saying that they would destroy those who practiced them. Speculation and argument about questions not made plain by revelation tend to darkness and are dangerous. The speaker urged those present to labor to impress purity and virtue upon the young, and to teach them that they had better lose their lives than their chastity.

The young man who asked this question had doubtless been reading, a commendable thing to do, and in his investigations had found the following from Brigham Young:—

Now hear it, O inhabitants of the earth, Jew and Gentile, Saint and sinner! When our father Adam came into the garden of Eden, he came into it with a celestial body, and brought Eve, one of his wives, with him. He helped to make and organize this world. He is MICHAEL, the Archangel, the ANCIENT OF DAYS! about whom holy men have written and spoken—HE is our FATHER and our GOD, and the only God with whom WE have to do. Every man upon the earth, professing Christians or non-professing, must hear it, and will know it sooner or later. They came here, organized the raw material, and arranged in their order the herbs of the field, the trees, the apple, the peach, the plum, the pear, and every other fruit that is desirable and good for man; the seed was brought from another sphere, and planted in this earth. The thistle, the thorn, the brier, and the obnoxious weed did not appear until after the earth was cursed. When Adam and Eve had eaten of the forbidden fruit, their bodies became mortal from its effects, and therefore their offspring were mortal. When the Virgin Mary conceived the child Jesus, the Father had begotten him in his own likeness. He was not begotten by the Holy Ghost. And who is the Father? He is the first of the human family; and when he took a tabernacle, it was begotten by his Father in heaven, after the same manner as the tabernacles of Cain, Abel, and the rest of the sons and daughters of Adam and Eve; from the fruits of the earth, the first earthly tabernacles were originated by the Father, and so on in succession. I could tell you much more about this; but were I to tell you the whole truth, blasphemy would be nothing to it, in the estimation of the superstitious and overrighteous of mankind. However, I have told you the truth as far as I have gone. I have heard men preach upon the divinity of Christ, and exhaust all the wisdom they possessed. All Scripturalists, and approved theologians who were considered exemplary for piety and education, have undertaken to expound on this subject, in every age of the Christian era; and after they have done all, they are obliged to conclude by exclaiming "great is the mystery of godliness," and tell nothing.

It is true that the earth was organized by three distinct characters, namely, Eloheim, Yahovâh, and Michael, these three forming a quorum, as in all heavenly bodies, and in organizing element, perfectly represented in the Deity, as Father, Son, and Holy Ghost.

Again, they will try to tell how the divinity of Jesus is joined to his humanity, and exhaust all their mental faculties, and wind up with this profound language, as describing the soul of man, "it is an immaterial substance!" What a learned idea! Jesus, our elder brother, was begotten in the flesh by the same character that was in the garden of Eden, and who is our Father in Heaven. Now, let all who may hear these doctrines, pause before they make light of them, or treat them with indifference, for they will prove their salvation or damnation.

I have given you a few leading items upon this subject, but a great deal more remains to be told. Now, remember from this time forth, and forever, that Jesus Christ was not begotten by the Holy Ghost.—Journal of Discourses, Vol. 1, pp. 50, 51.

This young man probably knew that Mr. Cannon and the church he represents indorsed Elder Young as the mouthpiece of God to the church; and hence his question was legitimate and in order. It occurs to us that Mr. Cannon should have had the frankness to have answered this question in harmony with Mr. Young's theory, or have had the courage to repudiate such theory notwithstanding the teachings of Elder Young.

His remarks regarding the wisdom of puzzling over things not revealed would have been appropriate and commendable had not the President of the Church previously boldly declared himself upon the subject; but after the leading authority of the church had placed himself upon record on this point, it was certainly a legitimate subject of inquiry, and the young man asking the question was entitled to an honest, straightforward answer.

It occurs to us to be both evasive and cowardly for the First Presidency to avoid either the approval or disapproval of their predecessor by saying that they "do not deem it wise to agitate certain questions concerning Adam, and the Savior."

We are gratified, however, to note that leading men of Utah, such as Mr. Cannon, are advising that teaching "should be confined to what the Lord has revealed." Had such teaching, followed by corresponding practice, obtained in Utah in the past, what evils would have been avoided! Even now, if Mr. Cannon and his colleagues had the courage to renounce the mistakes of the past and plant themselves squarely upon what God has revealed, they could do much towards leading wandering Israel back to the favor of God. It is a hopeful indication too when we see Mr. Cannon conceding that "in Nauvoo abominable doctrines were taught and circulated." This is right; we cannot afford to stand by wrong, no matter by whom taught or practiced.

"Courage, brother do not stumble,
Though thy path is dark as night;
There's a star to guide the humble;
'Trust in God, and do the right.'
Perish policy and cunning!
Perish all that fears the light!
Whether losing, whether winning,
'Trust in God, and do the right.'
Trust no party, sect or faction;
Trust no leaders in the fight!
But in every word and action
'Trust in God, and do the right.'
Some will hate thee, some will love thee,
Some will flatter, more will slight;
Cease from man, and look above thee,
'Trust in God, and do the right.'"

The words of Mr. Cannon as contained in the closing sentence of the above extract cannot be too highly commended. Yes, "labor to impress purity and virtue upon the young, and to teach them that they had better lose their lives than their chastity." Mortal life is but a fleeting, temporary blessing; virtue is an eternal treasure. Man may rob you of life without your consent; virtue is in your own keeping. Guard it sacredly, keep it untarnished, and it will not only sweeten your life and the lives of all those who touch yours; but with increased splendor it will shine o'er the sea of eternity, when mortal life shall be no more, making heaven more happy and eternity more blessed.

But Mr. Cannon should know, if he does not, that an evasive secretive policy is the parent of vice, not virtue.

A "BIOLOGIC CONFLAGRATION."

WE have given at times some of the most notable or sweeping predictions made by the modern forecasters of coming events, and present herewith another. It is quoted from Human Nature, a San Francisco publication, but is said to have appeared first in the Flaming Sword, of Chicago, a publication issued in the interests of Koreshianity. It serves to show some of the peculiar ideas that have influence with some:—

"We are now approaching a great biologic conflagration. Thousands of people will dematerialize, through a biological electromagnetic vibration. This will be brought about through the direction of one mind, the only one who has a knowledge of the law of this bio-alchemical transmutation. The change will be accomplished through the formation of a biological battery, the laws of which are known only to one man. This man is Elijah, the prophet, ordained of God, the Shepherd of the Gentiles and the central reincarnation of the ages. From this conflagration will spring the sons of God, the biune offspring of the Lord Jesus, the Christ and Son of God."

CHURCH DEDICATION NEAR MOUND CITY, MISSOURI.

THE saints of the Ross Grove branch, Holt County, Missouri, were last summer shut out of the schoolhouse where they had for a long time held services. Whether this was intentionally directed at the saints, it is not for us to state, but this was the result. The directors "resolved" that the schoolhouse should be closed and not be used except for educational purposes. Of course, being in general terms and excluding others as well as themselves, the saints had no disposition to "make a fuss." But, what to do? was the question. They had no place to meet in; so, a few men of enterprise set the idea going to build a house of their own.

There are forty-eight of a membership in the branch; so William Rowlett, (a nonmember,) J. Rowlett, and R. K. Ross were appointed a building committee, lists were circulated, money and labor donated, and the work begun in September last. The result was that a house 26x36, well appointed and finished, was ready for dedication December 11, 1898, and the Senior Editor was invited to be present and assist in the services.

On the morning of the day set, at eleven a. m., there was a houseful of saints, their friends, and neighbors in attendance.

Bro. Peter Anderson, missionary, was in charge. Bro. F. M. Gowell offered the opening prayer; the song service was in charge of Bro. E. S. Fannon, Sr. Lettie Byergaard, of Guilford, at the organ, and a fair chorus of young voices to assist in the singing. The sermon was delivered by President Joseph Smith, who also offered the prayer of dedication by request.

The Ross Grove branch is presided over by Elder R. K. Ross, Jr.; Teacher John Vanderpool, and Deacon Isaac Ross.

The church is located in an excellent country and neighborhood, nine miles north and east of Mound City and two miles north and east of the farm and residence of Bro. R. K. Ross. It is the same locality where Bro. Hyrum O. Smith, of St Joseph, lately met Rev. Bamberger, of the Dunkard sect, in debate; the general verdict being favorable to Bro. Smith's effort in defense of the faith.

Bro. R. K. Ross, Sen., who will be ninety years old in February, 1899, was in attendance. He was with the church and a resident of Nauvoo, before the Martyr's death. He is strong in the faith but feeble in body, and will soon pass to his long waiting reward.

The building cost, estimated, some nine hundred dollars; six hundred cash, three hundred labor. Land donated by John Knowles, whose wife is a member, he believing but not yet united.

So passes another building into the service of the Master.

The Editor had the honor as well as pleasure of preaching the first discourse in the building on Saturday evening, December 10. He also preached the Sunday evening sermon. Services were to continue during the week, probably by Bro. Peter Anderson; although Bro. I. N. White had been expected to be there.

From what we heard we learned that Rev. Bamberger was quite bitter against us; it being stated that he uttered the following: "The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is under the curse and anathema of God for believing the Book of Mormon, and will be damned and go to hell."

Rather harsh decree.

THE RIGHT VIEW.

BRO. JAMES BRADLEY, of Amber, Iowa, now ninety-four years of age, writes to Bishop E. L. Kelley, inclosing five dollars, with the saying.

You have asked for one dollar? I send you five. I am now pretty old, but I hope to see the college fully established before I die.

We commend Bro. Bradley's decision and hope to all who may be in a situation to do likewise.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

WHEAT AND TARES.

ON account of what is said in Matthew 13:24-30 some of the saints think we ought not to expel or cut off refractory members, no matter what they do. We would like to hear from you through the Herald on the subject.

In the 84th section of Doctrine and Covenants the church has an official explanation of the parable of the wheat and tares. Please read.

No one should hesitate to enforce proper church rules concerning the upright conversation and good behavior of the membership of the church, because of this parable.

The explanation shows that the "field" was "the world," not the church; the apostles were the sowers, sowing the good seed among those of the world. At the end, when the harvest is fully ripe, then the Lord will send angels to gather out the wheat from among the tares; the wheat to be saved and the tares, the world, to be burned.

The law by which church rule is to be administered is found in section 42. In this law provision is made for the bringing of offenders to answer for their offenses; and after a number of wrongs are named, a general rule is given, as follows:—

If he or she do any manner of iniquity, he or she shall be delivered up unto the law, even that of God.

That this is not out of harmony with the teachings of our Savior, is seen by reading paragraph 16, which directs the church to "take the things" written in "the Scriptures" to be the law of God to the church. In consulting the Scriptures touching the dealing with transgressors, directions are given how to deal with certain evildoers; and with what is given in Doctrine and Covenants would seem to be enough to enable the church to keep its borders clean of the worst cases, at least.

We are of the opinion that what is said about the gathering out of the wheat from the tares in Matthew 13:24-30, cannot justify letting wrongdoers remain in the body to do injury to the whole.

SR. ANNA NIELSEN, of Nebraska City, Nebraska, sends us a copy of the News, for December 13, from which we clip the following. We regret that there is a necessity for any such extreme measure.

CLOSE THEM ALL.

Mayor Nelson, pursuant to the request of the citizens, has issued the following proclamation:—

Nebraska City, Nov. 9.—In view of the fact that we have cases pronounced by Dr. Crummer, of Omaha, Secretary of the State Board of Health, as well as the physicians of Nebraska City, to be smallpox, and for the protection of the public health, and in order to stamp out and get control of said disease, I hereby order that all schools, church congregations, public library, theaters, and other places of public gatherings be closed and suspended on and after this date until such time as the proper authorities may deem it wise to resume.

I recommend that every person who has not been vaccinated to do so at once. Those not able to pay for same call on the Board of Health who will make ample provision for such vaccination.

O. N. NELSON,
Mayor of Nebraska City, Nebraska.

THEOSOPHY LEGALLY NOT A RELIGION.

ACCORDING to the unanimous decision of the Massachusetts Supreme Court theosophy is not a religion, neither is it a charitable or educational institution, and consequently the New England Theosophical corporation must pay taxes on its real estate.

It may seem to be a question by what rule of law or right the courts would be justified in deciding that the principles which constitute the philosophy of theosophy are not of such a nature as to make a system that should be identified as a religion; and the believers in them a religious body to which protection should be accorded by peace officers.

We do not know, of course, what may have been presented to the courts in behalf of the Theosophists, or what against them, so are not in position to know the bases from which the judges reasoned in forming their opinions, hence may neither condemn, nor commend; but we would really like to know on what ground the decision rested. For, if one profession of belief may be declared "not a religion," it follows that another may be, and the question may be finally asked, What is a religion? And, ours and our neighbor's faiths may possibly come in for a similar verdict.

The courts of Massachusetts declare that Theosophy is not a religion. The courts of Michigan may declare that the faith of the Reorganized Church is not a religion; and so one after another faiths may be broken on the wheels of justice before human judges, and men be left bereft of judicial protection in the United States.

The United States in dealing with the question raised by the seizing of the Philippine Islands will have to decide as to what sort of treatment shall be accorded to the Catholic faith and that church, because of its having been hitherto the church of the ruling government. That government overthrown, the protection of the devotees of the church and the question of its revenues are forced upon the American Congress for settlement! Is it to be counted as a religion, and entitled to the protection of the courts? And what is to be the disposition of it?

We confess to more than an ordinary interest in this question. We may well pray, as is our habit, O Lord, grant to give wisdom to them who are placed in power in our government. Give wisdom to our rulers and law-makers.

DANCING MASTERS OBJECT TO MINISTER'S COMPETITION.

THE dancing masters of Jersey City have called a meeting to take some action to check, if possible, the growth of the Rev. John L. Scudder's dancing school.

They haven't any idea how this is to be attempted at present. They only know, they say, that their business has been much affected by the Rev. John L. Scudder's dancing school.

The Jersey City dancing masters find themselves in a position they never dreamed a terrestrial dancing master would ever occupy—in a cut rate war with a minister.

The Rev. Mr. Scudder only charges ten cents a lesson. The dancing masters cannot afford to teach for less than twenty-five cents a lesson.

The meeting will be held next Thursday night.

"We have to do something," said Mr. Ettinger, one of the dancing masters to-day. "The church dancing school, with its cheap prices, is hurting our business more and more every week."

We think it well to give our readers this additional chapter concerning Rev. Scudder's church dancing class. Think of it, a Christian (?) church in competition with dancing masters and instructors in pugilism! We read of Israel's low condition at one time during the reign of the Judges, when every man did that which was "right in his own eyes," being largely influenced by heathenism with its rites and orgies. Concerning these last days, and of which the apostle Paul said men would be "lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God," we are instructed as follows:—

They have strayed from mine ordinances, and have broken mine everlasting covenant; they seek not the Lord to establish his righteousness, but every man walketh in his own way, and after the image of his own god, whose image is in the likeness of the world, and whose substance is that of an idol, which waxeth old and shall perish in Babylon, even Babylon the great, which shall fall.—D. C. 1:3.

"OUTLOOK FOR DISARMAMENT."

ROME, Dec. 14.—An interview was obtained to-day with Visconti-Venosta, ex-Foreign Minister, on disarmament. He said:—

"The noble attempt of the Czar will remain without effect. If the conference meets it will arrive at no practical conclusion. One cannot speak sincerely about disarming when European interests in the far East are in serious collision. The present condition necessarily provokes armaments."

The Pope has prepared an encyclical on disarmament, but has suppressed it, believing there will be no satisfactory result from the Czar's movement.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

BRO. I. N. ROBERTS, Minneapolis, Minnesota, December 15:—

I am hard at work here in the city and meeting with fair success so far. Am visiting from house to house, talking and praying with the saints. Am feeling well in so doing, and am quite sure it will be of benefit to the saints. I am well and am back to myself again; I now weigh 241 pounds. Thank the Lord for his healing powers. I expect to spend the winter here, as I believe much good can be done by so doing. I am trying to establish missions in different parts of the city, but so far have not found anything suitable, but will continue on in searching for some place, hoping it will be opened up by the Master. I have called on some outsiders and with some have been kindly received; others have shut the door in my face; so I thanked them for their politeness and went on my way rejoicing. We have plenty of snow and the weather cold and bracing.

The following note from Bro. James Bradley, upon Graceland College, is worthy of being read by every lover of learning. Bro. Bradley is ninety-four years of age, of ripe experience in the affairs of life, and his anxiety for the consummation of the college work in his own time is a worthy pattern.

AMBER, Iowa, Dec. 12.

Dear Brother:—I see by the Herald that you are in great need of funds for Graceland College. You asked for a dollar, I send you five, although I have no children to send to school. I want to see that it is our own before I go to my last home. I want to see our dear church in a better condition to meet a wicked and frowning world, but I am getting old—ninety-four next March—and the cause of Christ is dearer than ever to me.

Your brother for truth,

JAMES BRADLEY.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

THE work "True Succession in Church Presidency will not be ready for mailing until completed. The last chapter will appear in next week's HERALD. It will then be made up immediately and all orders promptly filled. New matter lately received adds an important chapter to the work.

By letter from Bro. William Roberts, of Leeds, England, we learn that twelve persons have recently been baptized there, and that the branch which has hitherto had considerable trouble, is "working more harmoniously." One feature worthy of notice is that most of these twelve converts are young people from Hunslet, a suburb of Leeds, where some members of the Leeds branch organized and conducted a Sunday school among those not of our faith. These young people, or the greater number of them, are the fruits of that effort. Success to the Sunday school work.

We have an unsigned letter from Santa Maria, California, from a non-member, who commends the preaching of Bro. B. W. Pack, and confesses belief in the latter-day work. He asks prayers in behalf of the "seekers after truth."

Rev. Charles W. Shields, a professor in Princeton University, was ordained a deacon in the Protestant Episcopal Church, at New York, December 14. "Professor Shields has been for many years a minister in the Presbyterian Church. Some time ago he resigned from the New Brunswick Presbytery because of the incident relating to Princeton Inn. Professor Shields defended the existence of the inn."

The treaty of peace was duly signed by representatives of the United States and Spain, December 10, at Paris.

General Calixto Garcia, the distinguished Cuban patriot and leader, died at Washington, D. C., December 11, of pneumonia. Garcia was "the highest type of the true patriot. His whole life was devoted to the welfare of his country."

The National Armenian Relief Committee, George P. Knapp, Secretary, Barre, Massachusetts, sends us a circular asking aid in its work of caring for the oppressed Armenians, thousands of whom are homeless, and persecuted by the Turkish Mohammedans. The Relief Committee is doing a much needed work for fellow Christians and humanity. Circulars giving information sent on request.

Card from Bro. F. G. Pitt, dated the 7th inst. His mission address is No. 14 Council Street, Hulme, Manchester, England. Papers sent to London should be addressed to No. 48 Repton Street, Limehouse, London E. If sent to Cardiff, No. 84 Wyndham Crescent, Canton, Cardiff, Wales. Either address will reach him. "Please do not send to Burdett Road."

SEE that there is no waste in the household. Do not let children grow up feeling that it is stingy to save. Careful saving and bounteous giving is God's way. He who could miraculously feed the five thousand, commands, "Gather up the fragments, that nothing be lost." The fragments wasted in many homes would relieve distress in as many other homes. Children are allowed to waste their food, to crumble their bread or cookies, without eating them, to make a mess of their meat and vegetables, and in other ways to waste as much as they eat. Children allowed to form such habits in childhood seldom grow into thrifty men and women. These habits prove hard to eradicate, but it can be done. We know a wise father who cured a boy of ten of wasting his food, by having him raise a half acre of corn, planting, tending, and picking it himself, then taking it to mill and noting all the processes of grinding and making into bread. Learning by this experience how much hard work was involved in producing food, he was careful how he wasted his Johnny-cake. Girls trained to mend their own clothes and to wash them, when torn or soiled through carelessness, will be much more careful about tearing or soiling them than if mother or Bridget was always ready to repair damages. As Burns says,

Though losses and crosses be lessons right severe,
There's wit there, you'll get there,
You'll find no other where.

Teach children the value and the use of money. Bulwer Lytton says: "Never treat money affairs with levity—money is character." It certainly has much to do with the formation of character. Train children to earn, to save, to spend, and to give, thus cultivating industry, economy, thrift, and generosity. Teach little children the value of money and the duration of time by occasionally paying them for working an hour. Do not spoil your lesson by allowing your love to set a fictitious value upon their time, but pay them just what their work is really worth. Let work thus paid for be something outside the regular routine of daily life; this the child should do without pay as his rightful contribution to the family weal. Habitually paying children for doing such work makes them mercenary and selfish; they grow up to consider their personal interests as apart from, and paramount to, the well-being of the family. We know a boy thus trained who habitually replies to his mother's requests for a pail of water or an armful of wood: "What will you give me for bringing it?" Nothing is more disagreeable than the characteristics thus being developed, yet they have been fostered unconsciously by his parents.

In every family there are plenty of extra jobs which the children can be paid for doing, thus teaching them to know the value of money by earning it, without incurring the risk of fostering the mercenary spirit. Train them to systematic business habits by allowing them a small stipulated sum monthly, which they are to spend as they choose, and for which they are to give strict account. In some families I have known, this commenced on their fifth birthday with five cents; this was increased one cent each year, so that the monthly allowance equaled the years of the child's age. When the child reaches the age of twelve, the proportion is increased, and some stipulated things, as his car fare, if he must ride to school, are paid out of his pocket-money. I know a family of four bright children, Robbie, five years old, Bertie, ten, Willie, twelve, and Jennie, fourteen, who receive respectively, five cents, ten cents, fifty cents, and seventy-five cents each month. During the first few months most of Robbie's money went for candy; he is now learning to invest it in something which will last longer. Bertie has quite outgrown the candy age, his heart being set on a singing top and something nice for Mamma at Christmas; while Willie and Jennie are becoming quite financiers. Each one gives something, no one can run in debt, and all must make an itemized report of receipts and expenditures at the end of each month, the next month's allowance not being paid until this is done. It was amusing and interesting to look over their account books, Robbie, who cannot write, keeping his in tally fashion of his own invention. Of course they made bad bargains sometimes, but they learned from these blunders, and did not generally make the same one twice. A queer little mark against some of the entries in Bertie's he interpreted to mean, "Don't do so any more," and he didn't. Often we would see the little ones counting over their pennies and thoughtfully puckering up their foreheads, or their older brother and sister diligently figuring on a bit of paper, and we knew they were counting the cost of some new investment. Thus they were learning prudence and foresight, to regulate expenses by income, care, and accuracy in keeping accounts. They are also being trained to systematic benevolence, as a share of each month's allowance is sacredly devoted to mission work of some kind.

A twelve-year-old friend of mine who has been thus trained, is now entrusted with an allowance sufficiently large to cover his clothing. This he selects himself, always asking his parents' advice about it. Last winter he was converted and united with the church, one in which the expenses are paid by voluntary contributions. Nothing was said to him on the subject, but on the day preceding his first communion, he sat down and carefully calculated what one tenth of his weekly income was, and every Sabbath since has put that sum into the contribution box. He had studied the tithing system of the Old Testament, knew that his father gave one tenth of his income to the Lord, and, without a suggestion from any one, commenced his own religious life by doing likewise.

Pocket money is a sore subject in some households. Given too freely and used without rendering any account therefor, it has proved the ruin of many boys and girls. This ought not so to be; it should be the means of training them for future life-work, not of unfitting them for it. In almost every case two precautions will prevent injurious results: see that the amount entrusted to children is not too large, and that it be given, not spasmodically, when they tease for it, but regularly and systematically; and secondly, require them to keep accurate account of receipts and expenditures, this account to be always open to the inspection of parents. A third point should be fixed: no child should run into debt. With these safeguards we see no danger arising from giving children spending money, and great good can and ought to result from the training thus given in its use. We especially urge the plan of monthly allowances because of the training it affords. During the year, most fathers do give their children more money than would be required by this plan, but when given haphazard it has no educating influence.

We are also in favor of a monthly allowance to the mother. It enables her to plan her household expenditures wisely, gives her a sense of freedom and independence, and is, for many reasons, the right and proper thing to do.

Some children are trained to earn and to save, but are never taught to give or to spend judiciously. The result is, they become either spendthrifts or niggards. The one line of training is just as important as the other. Teach them to give systematically and generously, not hoping to receive or to make gain, but to give without expecting reward. For this teaching, giving to missions or other benevolences is better than giving to friends, and this habit should be early formed. As we study the lives of men and women noted for their benefactions, we almost invariably find they have had this training in childhood. The money thus given should be, as far as possible, the product of the child's own industry or self-denial. This gives rise to many pleasant employments—on the farm, the care of the missionary hen or pig, raising missionary corn or potatoes; in town, doing disagreeable tasks without grumbling; raising plants or flowers for sale, and other things that an ingenious mother can devise.

Let the children know for what they are working, not leaving them to feel that all their missionary pennies have dropped into a "rat-hole," as one little girl expresses it.—Childhood; Its Care and Culture.

(Send communications for this department to the Editor. Address minutes and notices of conventions, etc., to "Editors Herald, Lamoni, Iowa.")

I KNOW of nothing nobler than a Sunday school teacher devoted soul and body to her work."—Elder Isaac M. Smith, at Pottawattamie, Iowa, district Sunday school convention.

[THE following extracts are from a paper written by Sr. Jessie Wyckoff, for the Southeast Nebraska district convention. But for lack of space we can present but a portion of it. She writes on the subject of "What is teaching?"—ED.]

"Merely formal or so-called teaching is not teaching. The supreme aim of Sunday school teaching is to develop the spiritual life of the being, and the teaching that does not do this is not good teaching. . . .

"Teachers should take an interest in their pupils. Show your pupils that you have more than an ordinary interest in them. Use such ability and opportunities as you have. Teachers should encourage their pupils. . . . Teach them to love each other. To be there at the time appointed. . . . No teacher should be tardy. They should be there to greet each pupil as they come in.

"Children should be taught to think. Give them thoughts expressed in simple words. Do not hurry over the lesson too fast. Select the most important points, and explain them in a simple, comprehensive way.

"Teachers cannot do the best work unless they are thoroughly in love with the work. They should love their pupils, and teach the pupils to love them. . . . Teachers that confine themselves to the printed questions do no more than the scholars. . . . Teachers should be prompt in looking after absent pupils. The pupils should be made feel that they are expected to be present, and are missed when not present.

"Teachers should be patient. Should take special interest in the beginners. Make a special effort to teach the principles of the gospel, showing the necessity of a Savior, and of obedience to the gospel law.

"Teachers should prepare their lessons before going to class. . . . By example teach them to bring their pennies every Sunday. To bring their Bibles, and how to use them. Teachers should be kind in their language, pleasing in their manner, and loving in disposition. Should vary their modes of teaching. Should be prompt but not hasty. Firm but not obstinate. Talk to all. Do not let a part do all the work and others do nothing. Have no favorites. . . . And remember that the aim at all times should be the moral and spiritual growth of the individual."

WHAT THE HOME CAN DO FOR THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

WHILE our Sunday schools are great factors for good, and while through them the childish heart may be turned to thoughts of Christ, and directed in the "straight and narrow path," it is to the home we must look for the primary training in the moral and spiritual guidance of the little one. But with a perfect sympathy and complete harmony between the home and the Sunday school, in the workings thereof, we may expect splendid results—results over which we might all rejoice. It is our desire to show you, as clearly as we can, what the home can do to secure this harmony, and aid the Sunday school in attaining the grand end to which it was designed.

The home we have in mind is the home in which is heard the innocent prattle of little children, who in later years become the girls and boys who fill our schools and colleges; and, again, in their turn become the heads of families in homes of their own making. First, let us see to it that we begin

OUR MORAL AND RELIGIOUS TRAINING early; waiting no longer than the time when the little ones understand what we tell them. For example; no doubt you tell your children bedtime stories. Let us beg you to omit the bear hunt and kindred stories, and tell them, instead, some sweet story of Jesus. They will love to hear them. Tell them about Daniel in the lion's den, Moses in the bulrushes. O, there are many nice stories in the Bible! And be sure to keep uppermost in these stories the care and love of God for us. A story should be told for the lesson it teaches.

TEACH YOUR CHILDREN TO PRAY reverently. Explain to them what prayer is, and why we should pray. They will better understand the Sunday school superintendent when he says: "Children; let us bow our heads and fold our hands in prayer." When the child is three years old or more, he should begin attending the Sunday school. Now if you have builded well thus far, you will find the little one eager and willing to go and learn; you will also find your duties increasing.

Do not send your children to the Sunday school with their lessons unprepared; it dulls their interest, and imposes upon the teachers more work than is their due. And in doing this, you have shirked a task which it was your duty to perform. Let us remember that our superintendents and teachers are but human like ourselves, and that their patience may be tried and their tact and ability taxed to the uttermost in their attempt to do their work. Therefore, it behooves us as parents to lend them our aid, working faithfully to make the Sunday school what we all desire it to be—a success. Let us offer

A SUGGESTION, which is not original, on the study of the Sunday school lesson. Make it a part of the family worship. For instance, on Monday morning, after prayer, read the Lesson Text; talk it over; look up a few leading points, and so on. Tuesday morning, take up the lesson still farther, and so on through the week. I will not outline the manner of studying the lesson, since perhaps all of you have some plan of your own. Suffice it to say, we believe your family will be well prepared for the Sunday school lesson when the Sabbath comes, if this plan is faithfully pursued.

At a recent Sunday school convention the question was discussed: "What the Sunday School Expects of the Parents." There was quite a diversity of opinion as to what we should expect. One lady thought we should be satisfied with some parents if they only allowed their children to attend the Sunday school; but of course that could surely not apply to any family of Latter Day Saints. A middle aged gentleman, a German, arose, and in his broken English said we should expect the parents to send "lovely children, obedient children;" and perhaps that expressed a large share of what we should expect.

Have we been saying for the parents to send the children? O well, we meant all the time that they should bring them. Yes, parents, it is not enough that you send your children, but you should come yourselves and lend what aid you can by your presence and approval. The superintendent will be glad to have you there, your children's teacher will be glad to see you and receive your counsel. Your teacher will be pleased to welcome you. O yes, dear parents, we need you. We want you in the Sunday school. Let us make

A BRIEF SUMMARY of what you can do to aid the Sunday school. Teach your children the gospel. Teach them to pray. Study the lesson yourself, and teach it to your children. Teach them to be loving and obedient. Go to Sunday school yourself, and take them with you. Aid the officers and teachers by your presence, by kindly suggestions, by your faith and prayers; and in every way that it is given you to help. That we may all do this and more, is ever the desire of your sister in the one faith,

BLANCHE I. ANDREWS.

For Fremont, Iowa, district convention.

"It is our duty to qualify ourselves the best we can to do the best work we can. . . . I do not think it proper to ask God to do for us what he has endued us with power to do for ourselves. We must use the talent he has given us before asking him to give us more." —G. H. Hilliard, in a sermon at Bluff Park reunion.

The thoughts contained in the above remarks are in perfect harmony with what we have often said when advocating the principle of preparing for the work at hand. We do not wish to be understood as casting any cloud upon dependence upon the Holy Spirit to qualify us for our work. It is not only proper and right, but absolutely necessary, if we would do good and acceptable work. It is not the thought, in the above quotation from Bro. Hilliard, that we are to go independent of the Holy Spirit. No; far from it. But that there is a work that we must do before we can consistently ask God to help us. There is a necessity for great effort on our part, if we would become a "workman that needeth not to be ashamed." We must "study to show ourselves approved of God." Let every Sunday school officer and teacher put forth an earnest and persistent effort to fit themselves for their work, asking God to guide them and give them knowledge wherever needed. This done, and the work as a whole will move as it has not done before.

GALIEN, Mich., Dec. 12.

Editors Herald:—Returning from Three Oaks this a. m., where we attempted to inaugurate the work of the restored gospel on Saturday and Sunday evenings, we jot you a line. Bro. Thurston had purchased the German (Lutheran) church building at that point, and it is a splendid structure 50 x 24. The real value of building is far in excess of purchase price. We occupied with interest to a moderate-sized audience and think to continue after the holidays. It is an important point, and the ministry passing through should stop off and avail themselves of the opportunity of an acquaintance with Three Oaks. Bro. Thurston and his estimable lady will royally entertain.

The town is not exceptional, but a thick, 4 x 2 strata of coxcomb vanity will bear the heavy blows of gospel power for a time. There is a liberal element, however, and that is an essential factor. The inhabitants think a great deal of the efficiency and scholarly ability of the town, for we attended the Y. M. C. A. in the evening and learned that "should the Bible—the word of God—be destroyed, blotted out of existence, it could be reproduced in Three Oaks!" I took occasion to ask if we would trust the wisdom of man to bring it back as free from errors as it is now? The presiding officer said he thought "we could." I then said "the King's translators were the best scholars of the realms and translated from copies of the original manuscript with said copies before them, and the learned men of both eastern and western continents constituting the late Anglo-American New Testament revision committee found one hundred fifty thousand various readings in the King's version as late as 1884 A. D." We finally heard the confessions that if Three Oaks were in possession of that Spirit which originally indited the word of God, they could reproduce from all errors; also, that if the Spirit of God indited his word, we would necessarily have to possess that Spirit in order to a proper understanding thereof more essential still, considering the admitted errors.

The work moves slowly in our district from a lack of laborers. The few that are here are doing what they can. The laity seem to move along in duties necessary, and hunger for the "bread of life" broken by the ministry. The calls and "new openings" are increasing, and established branches urge reviving work done. The lull must be broken or the "foolish virgins" will receive accessions to their ranks. Persecution from without buoys up, invigorates, and unites within, persecution from within, weakens, divides, renders powerless, and destroys.

Elder William H. Kelley paid Coldwater and other points a brief visit, and in his inimitable manner encouraged and cheered as "in days of yore." Few such champions with "the little stone" in their fists, would take not only Spain, but the "whole earth."

Winter quite early and brisk in these parts, but why not? Everything enlarges nowadays; its an "expansion" era.

Hopefully,

S. W. L. SCOTT.

PORCUPINE, Wis., Nov. 25.

Editors Herald:—Seven months ago I left Lamoni for northern Wisconsin, to meet and sojourn for a time with saints and friends in Porcupine. It has been a very busy summer with us all; Mr. White has been building a house for Bro. Closson and father. I have been trying to lay a spiritual foundation for the "lambs of the flock"—have in weakness been doing Sunday school work. Our Sunday school is small, but I was taught when young never to despise the day of small things. The Lord has blessed my efforts, and our school is out of debt, and saints and friends say we have a fine school. It is increasing in numbers also. Some of our Methodist and Spiritualist neighbors have left their schools and are now coming with us. Their sisters of the churches to which they formerly belonged sent word that they would have no more to do with them, as they had joined the Mormons as some call us; but it makes no difference how much the enemy of all righteousness tries to hinder or destroy this work, it is of no avail, because the more this work is opposed the more it will grow, until the time shall come when the stone that was cut out of the mountain shall fill the whole earth.

We have been blessed this summer with good preaching from our local and traveling ministry. Brethren Lake, McDowell, Whiteaker, and Ball have preached to us, and last but not least, Bro. Houghton came among us and fed us upon that spiritual food which encourages us to strive harder to heed the injunction so often given to the saints, "Come up higher."

Our chapel has had a small indebtedness upon it for some time, and wishing to commence the new year out of debt, some of the sisters talked and suggested that we get up an entertainment, and it came off last Friday night. The sum of $16.30 was realized from our efforts. Our admission fee was only ten cents. The school-teacher was so well pleased with it that he gave us a silver dollar; and expressed a desire to help us. The Lord is softening the hearts of those who once opposed us. We only owe a few dollars now, and expect to raise that and more when we have our oyster supper.

The Spiritualist lady I spoke of, raised enough by collection to buy two street lamps for the platform in front of the church, which is a fine thing when the nights are dark. This work is surely and steadily gaining ground in northern Wisconsin. I believe Wisconsin is the birthplace of the Reorganization.

Hoping and praying for the redemption of Zion, I am your sister in the gospel,

MARY A. WHITE.

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, Nov. 26.

Editors Herald:—Changes are being wrought here for commercial interests, far faster than I can see by my glasses what would be infinitely more to the credit of any people professing faith in God. I cannot say whether or not the people "called saints" are giving more heed to "the great things of my law" as announced by the "choice seer" than they gave twenty or more years ago. If my eyes do not deceive me much of the old-time social intercourse between all classes is being sadly chilled and starved out by avarice and the almost universal desire to keep pace and the alignment with devotees of fashion and pleasure. We love and yearn to see the people full of the "milk of human kindness." I may not see as clearly as I did in earlier days, but it does look to me that the social changes are not reflecting credit on the operations of the "gospel law." Just the reverse seems true.

It was my privilege to attend our reunion at Ogden, in October last, the first one I ever did attend. From there I came to Salt Lake City for a tour of observation, as well as to visit a little with a married son, and get acquainted by contact with those "of like precious faith." I shall leave this city with a firmer determination than ever, if it were possible, to perfect holiness in the fear of the Lord. If the Master will kindly forgive my past blindness and indifference (which he says he will), though all men turn from him, I shall plead for grace and strength from early morn till lost in that sweet restorer (sleep) to find my sweetest pleasure in the bosom of his love.

We have a few names here and regions about and in Ogden, striving to keep "the campfires blazing." May the blessed Master, who was and is so cruelly slighted, wounded, and crowned with thorns in the house of "his" friends, favor with his guiding hand and care those whose hearts beat warm for Zion's cause. To see those who make a covenant with the Lord and who live where they can have "communion with saints," so indifferent as not even to desire to come to the "table of the Lord," is so sad to think of.

"Vacant chairs," oh, so many! "Lo here," and "lo there," seem to lull the people to sleep when even the name of religion is broached; "Circle all," this giddy whirl, saints as well, hand in hand with the world. Henceforth I want to be wedded to the Lord.

It always occurred to me that the Christian life should be the most pleasant and joyous one on earth; yet who can look upon the world as it is and not feel a continual pain. "A man of sorrow and acquainted with grief!" "Strive to enter at the straight gate." Many indeed will "not be able." Thank the Lord there is some in the "upper circle," as so few "strive lawfully."

Thank the Lord of glory you and I will get the wages we earn without hindrance from man. I am not writing with the least desire to criticise adversely or offer blame on anyone for what I most deeply regret. Wherever my lot may be cast I want my voice and earnest efforts to be to unite and strengthen in the work of the Master of the vineyard. It needs pruning and fertilizing—cleaning up in general; and it is no holiday task. As the Lord liveth, he will visit, renovate, and cleanse with the "fire of his jealousy." It will indeed be very "tempestuous around about him." But the Lord will judge righteously, and all who "overcome," a crown of life shall have. As it was in Noah's day, so is it to be at the Lord's coming. Lift up your heads, O ye who are watching tearfully the coming of your Lord. It shall be well with you. Ye messengers of the covenant, how beautiful upon the mountains shall be your feet if faithful to that precious trust confided to you!

Where I have been among the saints of God, all have been kind in spirit. Yet, Bro. Wight's appeal should touch the tender impulse of the heart, if the gospel leaven is there. Where love is, there the purse opens to its call. How much do we love the gospel? Where our treasure is, there our heart is also. I am not pleading for myself, but for what is needed for the spread of truth. It may seem vain for me to refer to this arm of the service when those having it in charge do not succeed. I have written of it because it should not be so; praying, that we may all labor together for Zion's weal, with the solicitude of a loving family for one another's good and the spread of truth and righteousness throughout the realm of man. To be children of God, we must obey in love's sweet, warm embrace the whole counsel of God.

Trusting and waiting for Zion's redemption,

I am,

CHARLES ALBERTSON.

MCNEILL, Miss., Dec. 5.

Editors Herald:—It is with pleasure I address you in the name of saints, for the name has a world of meaning. Live the life of a saint indeed, and not in name only. The world is looking to you for more light, they are watching your ways and deeds. Do not let them be disappointed; always remember that every day's walk in this life may preach a grand sermon to the world. It matters not how poor your circumstances are in this world; if you live the life of a saint your deeds will convert those that are watching you.

I do not want you to think I am trying to teach you; nay, be it far from me; for I am the least of the least of saints. I am not worthy to be called a saint. I might say that I am of the world, as I belong to no denomination.

I have been watching the strides of the Reorganized Church for fifteen or twenty years, and if I am any judge, for the last few years they have made some wonderful strides for the better. I have been thoroughly convinced by dreams, etc., that the Reorganized Church is the right one. I have seen Jesus Christ in a dream and talked with him, and the things that he showed me will ever remain fresh to me.

The Lord has put it in my mind to pay an offering to the church another year, and I do think that all the saints from the least to the greatest should strain every nerve in that direction. When you have done all you can, you have only done your duty to God; you cannot do too much; you need not be afraid of that.

Inclosed find ten cents for Graceland.

I would like to correspond with some saint who lives in Chicago, as I could give them a fine chance selling vegetables on commission. Let me hear from some one.

Very respectfully,

A. L. LIVINGS.

P. S.—It seems that what few Brighamite members are here are lukewarm in their opinion of being right.

HECLA, S. D., Dec. 7.

Editors Herald:—Owing to constant "moves" I do not get to see your interesting pages as frequently as I wish, but desiring to keep in touch with the general "body," I pen you a few lines from the land of blizzards. This is one of the many new openings which Bro. Swenson and myself are endeavoring to illuminate with the light of the restored gospel. We cannot boast of what great things we have done. Many obstacles present themselves; the people are carried away with so many isms. Spiritualists take the lead, being credited with fifty per cent of the population; Catholics come next; then Methodists, Baptists, Adventists, Dunkards, etc.; and, over all, such a pall of secret societies, from the ancient "Mason" to the modern "Woodman," that it would seem there was no room for the true church of the living God. However, by the help of God we intend to batter away at Babylon's walls.

Bro. Swenson first started the work here by baptizing our now worthy brother C. H. Lampert, universally admitted to be one of the best citizens of the place. Through his kindness and aid we have been enabled to plant the seed more plentifully. Several are investigating and a few will undoubtedly join us when weather conditions are favorable.

This is the home of one of the old-time saints, Sr. Susan A. Head, formerly Goddard, sister to the wife of Lorenzo Snow, of Utah fame. While at her house I asked the following questions, informing her that I intended to publish:—

"How old are you?"

Ans. "Seventy six years."

"At what time were you connected with the church?"

Ans. "From 1842 to the breaking up of the church."

"Were you personally acquainted with the Prophet?"

Ans. "Yes, and the whole family; I lived in their house part of the time; was teaching a select school. Young Joseph was one of my pupils."

"Do you still believe as then?"

Ans. "Yes, I believe that Joseph Smith was a true prophet of God and as pure a man as ever lived. I wish there were more like him to-day."

"Then you don't believe he was killed for actual crime?"

Ans. No; that whole country, especially Warsaw, was jealous of the prosperity of the saints. Had Nauvoo continued to prosper as then it would have been a town forty miles square by this time."

God speed the "truth,"

WILLIAM SPARLING.

CLARKSVILLE, Texas, Dec. 11.

Editors Herald:—The long talked of debate between myself and Elder J. W. Chism, of the Christian Church, began on the 5th of this month, at the Mabry schoolhouse near Clarksville. It closed on the 10th. The propositions were the usual church propositions of the respective churches.

There seemed to be considerable interest in this debate with quite a number. I came into this neighborhood a little over one year ago, and on the second discourse I preached I was challenged to debate. They finally secured the services of Mr. J. W. Chism, of Dublin, Texas. He is believed by them to be the strongest man they have in the State. He is mediocre as a theologian. He is a fluent speaker and very aggressive. He disregards the rules of debate, or he did with me. He is strong in John Hyde's, and Beadle's, and Howe's works. I was sorry indeed to find him dealing in this unreliable and false evidence. I did hope he would meet us on our own doctrines, but perhaps he has found out that to do so would be his eternal defeat. One rule was that no evidence should be introduced that would not be received in a court of law; but he pays no attention to it. Still he may serve us in many ways: For instance: There was a continual rumor here that I was a Mormon preacher of the Salt Lake variety, as the editor of the Detroit paper put it; but Mr. Chism told just who we were. We scored a good point in this in this neighborhood.

There were many of the members of his church that knew nothing as to how the Christian Church came into existence, and some of them have informed me since the debate that they were done with Campbellism. He held up the Bible on one occasion and said the Holy Ghost talked to him every day. I asked him if it was the Bible. He said yes. In my reply he arose and positively denied it. He lost heavily here.

He seemed to be surprised at my having so many friends in this country, and made the point that I was honeying among the people to deceive them. He lost here again. Indeed, it seemed I was as popular here as he was himself the first days of the debate. We had fine crowds while discussing his question. A death of a prominent lady (a friend of mine) which occurred on the third day of the debate, cast a gloom over the entire community, and a heavy snow falling the same night interfered with the attendance of quite a number, so there were not so many at the close. Priest B. F. Pollard, of Isaca, Texas, was my moderator, and presided with dignity. Bro. Rathbun rendered valuable services in assisting me in the debate.

I will relate an incident that occurred on the morning of the 5th. I was out in the woods praying and there passed before my eyes pages of the Scripture in succession. I arose from my praying and went into this debate realizing that the hand of Christ was with me. I received a letter from the Cook's Point branch from Bro. William Sherrill, that they were fasting and praying for the success of the truth in this encounter. I feel certain that the prayers of the saints have prevailed. One of the ministers of the Christian Church prophesied that our doctrine would never be heard of after Mr. Chism met me at Mabry.

We lost nothing in this debate. All that were interested in the "angel's message" still stand with us, and some will unite with us at no distant day. To God be all the praise.

Yours in bonds,

I. P. BAGGERLY.

HIGBEE, Mo., Dec. 13.

Editors Herald:—I am not lost, neither have I forgot that you like an occasional letter from the laborers in the vineyard of the Lord.

During October I made a flying trip to Millersburg, Illinois, resulting in the life union of two young saints, an increase to the population of Lamoni, and a corresponding loss to Millersburg. While in the "Sucker State" had a pleasant visit with the jovial M. T. Short and family, and in the evening preached to an attentive audience, with fair liberty. Had the privilege of a short talk with the veteran gospeler, John H. Lake.

In the early part of ultimo I visited Independence, Missouri, and while there was invited by the branch president to preach. I stood under the gas jets at eleven a. m. and 7:30 p. m.; attention and order good. I return thanks for the consideration extended me, and am especially grateful to my heavenly Father for help divine received.

Disappointed and hindered, I came here, and commenced preaching the evening of November 18, and up to date have preached twenty-nine times.

Thanksgiving was the first time the saints here have observed the day set apart with preaching service, and I am of the opinion that the occasion will not soon pass out of memory, as both speaker and hearer were moved to moistness of eye. Some half dozen who drill in the infidel school submitted the following written question: "Creation of time," with request that I preach on the same, and at an appointed time I complied with their request, spoke for an hour and a half, and wonderful was the endowment of light granted, so much so that those unbelievers confessed that science and religion were solidly welded, and new evidence produced that no objection to our position could be urged. I had recourse to the Inspired Translation and Doctrine and Covenants; several thoughtful men are investigating.

While in faithfulness we may be willing to make the sacrifice to preach the restored gospel, there comes in our experience hindrance and discouragement as well as that which cheers us on in the conflict; and were it not for the grace bestowed from on high, the heart would faint and we would abandon the race; but there is more in this work than the manism that manifests we are not yet in possession of the full fruition of all that is promised. There is still an open and a golden opportunity for saints to prove that their righteousness exceeds that of other professors.

I can assure Bro. T. W. Williams that the appeal of the college committee was not sufficiently convincing as to remove all faithlessness and opposition. When I read what the committee has accomplished in raising means, I was not ashamed that I was a citizen of Iowa, and a member of the Lamoni branch.

Weather changeable and the people are complaining of a severe winter.

I believe it would lower the standard of honor and good government to permit Brigham Heber Roberts to take a seat in the House of Representatives.

WILBURTON, I. T., Dec. 12.

Editors Herald:—Since last writing I have labored in Cove, Arkansas, Winthrop, and mostly in Northern Texas. I find Northern Texas ripe for the gospel. I left Bro. I. P. Baggerly in Red River County. I hope ere this time he has J. W. Chism's scalp, and many honest hearts converted to the truth. I am now located at Wilburton, Indian Territory, for the winter.

We have quite a branch in this town, but no house to preach or worship in at present. The saints erected a nice little church, but before it was finished a cyclone completely demolished it. They have gone to work to rebuild it. In a short time Bro. Peter Adamson has taken the balks and wants a fine church built or none. The Devil gets after us all at times. We will do the best we can now, hoping to grow.

The saints need all the help they can get to rebuild their church. Emigration is rapidly coming in every day to this fast growing town. Many want to hear the gospel. I shall put forth a royal effort to reach them just as soon as I get a house to preach in.

I hear Bro. W. B. Toney has joined the Missionary Baptists and gone to preaching for them. The Campbellites claimed he had come back to them. The Utah Mormons claimed him; but now I am informed by one of his neighbors that the Missionary Baptists have captured him. I hope this will prove false also. Dr. Toney is a brilliant young man, competent to occupy any pulpit, and if he has gone to preaching for the Baptists I predict for him a thousand dollars a year and a nice time—and a prison house in the world to come. However, if he continues with the saints and to preach the truth he will get persecution, all manner of lies in this life, and a crown of everlasting life, a part in the glorious millennium in the new heavens and the holy city.

MALAD CITY, Idaho, December 10.

Editors Herald:—As I sit of evenings and read the Herald I often wonder why our little branch is in such a condition. We have about twenty-eight members, and it is not often we have more than six or eight out to meeting; but I hope the time is near at hand when people will come to understand and realize the need of religion more than they do at present.

We have a bright lot of members, who would be a great help to the work if they would realize the benefits derived from this beautiful work. We have had Bro. E. A. Davis among us during the summer for the period of a month or six weeks. He is a very nice speaker, would like to see his face again very much.

We are in hopes Bro. J. W. Wight will visit us on his return from Montana to Utah.

Your brother,

ELIAS E. RICHARDS.

BOONSBORO, Iowa, Dec. 8.

Editors Herald:—The cold weather finds me here in fairly good health, and with enough work on hand to keep us out of mischief and to occupy full time.

On the 8th of October I visited the vicinity of Winterset, Madison County, making headquarters at Bro. C. J. Peters' who resides midway between that city and the town of De Soto. Five saints reside there; Bro. and Sr. Peters and son and Bro. Willus Chandler and wife. They desired preaching and I responded to the call. The people of that township being somewhat in the dark yet as to the strides of modern civilization, and the advances being made by the light of the gospel's golden rule, at first felt averse to allowing Bro. Peters the use of the schoolhouses, and so objected. Whether this was owing to the low religious educational tide there prevalent, we need not here declare. But Bro. Peters, with characteristic and determined enterprise, went before the autumn meeting of school directors and pressed the question of opening the doors to the proclamation of the gospel, and with such pertinent consideration that until the next regular meeting of the directors the schoolhouses of the township are open to our ministry.

I remained there till November 22, occupying two houses not occupied by our elders before. Prejudice there is strong, and audiences small as a consequence; but believing the gospel seed, like sound wheat, planted in good ground, cannot help growing when the circumstances favor, and trusting the Lord of the harvest on this point, tried by divine grace to sow the gospel seed as liberally as possible and, as has been my lot largely, so far, wait results, with possibly others to do the reaping.

I once, when but a child, dreamed, and a voice said: "I will speak unto you as I did to my servant Paul." I never did just understand that dream, but often when found laboring in some out-of-the-way place, with small audiences and other circumstances unfavorable and the way seems trying, Paul's experience when "no man stood with" him, and being as "one born out of due time," come before me; and the further consideration that his grand work did not conclude with his brief personal career, but while the name of his executor Nero, though emperor of a world, is only remembered with contumely, Paul's enduring, strong, logical, and infinitely instructive epistles, and the history of his great missionary efforts, diffused as they were with almighty power, shine along down the ages with a glorious and inextinguishable light irresistible.

Paul, however, struck at the seat of kingdoms where glory, opulence, arrogance, and pride adorned palatial greatness and beauty, while we move along the alleys, hedges, and byways of the plodding commoners. If, therefore, I cannot illumine the world and the ages, if I can be faithful to the trust imposed, I may cast the dim borrowed starlight to those of the immediate vicinity for the time, and so conduct that "my feet shall tread the fields of light, not now, but by and by," but be content to "plant," while some eloquent Apollos waters, while, best of all, our Father gives the thirty, sixty, and the hundredfold.

Saints near Winterset did all they could to make one welcome and my stay pleasant. They succeeded. Many thanks. Bro. Peters meets the opposition waged against him and the work there with saintly courage, which for the present is his reward in part, for his effort to place within their reach heaven's greatest gift to fallen man, eternal life through the gospel of God's Son. But our brother is courageous and so renews his efforts. This is right; the final reward is at the end of the race. The closing in of the stormy, cold winter weather closed out our further effort there for the time.

"Thanksgiving" found me at the city of Des Moines, and in company with Brn. George Thorburn and George W. Johnson, dined with Srs. Thorburn and Allen, and feathery tribes appropriate to the occasion—statesmen's holiday—were a principal factor at service; and the birds were served right by Srs. Bessie and Alice; and for the time my daintiness experienced last summer seemed to be forgotten or had retired to a seat in the rear. I was thankful, too.

Preached twice while in the city, with Bro. V. Gunsolley in charge, during the week, and November 26, found me at Pleasant Plains schoolhouse, thirteen miles northwest of Des Moines, where, with Bro. Shelton Inman finding the oil for the light, coal for the warmth, and doing most of the janitor work, I preached six times to quite small but interested audiences. Prejudice there has an almost undisputed sway. Disciples, so called, predominate, and dominate, and for sure we found "certain disciples" there who really thought the schoolhouse ought to be closed against the preaching of all except their dear, sweet selves. They were not near so tolerant nor free from bigotry as those Paul found at Ephesus, not near so ready to investigate as those ancient Asiatic, idolatrous Greeks, and, withal, they would not let us teach them better; would not hear. Surely some of our moderns are living under the shadow of the clouds of the Dark Ages yet. Verily, the gospel of Jesus Christ is not in some places yet in demand.

The gospel of "Do unto others as you would have them do unto you," has not yet penetrated the labyrinths of darkness of some realms called Christian; and it now seems so strange to one who in earlier life was fed on the theory of our Disciple friends as I was, and now can see through its weakness and shadowy mazes. In bonds,

C. SCOTT.

LIBERTY CENTER, Iowa, Dec. 15.

Editors Herald:—Since last writing I set up the tent in Warren County, and in company with Brn. E. B. Morgan and C. Scott held a week's meetings, which were well attended considering the busy season of the year. During that time a branch was organized, where three years ago the people had never heard of the Reorganized Church.

When I requested the use of the schoolhouse one of the directors asked me if I represented any particular church. I told him I did and gave him the name of our church. He did not want to let me know he was ignorant of the existence of such a church, and when I left him he consulted the encyclopedia, and his wife, horror-stricken, exclaimed, "Now you have gone and let the Mormons in our schoolhouse."

I shipped the tent to Clear Creek to be used during conference. I then commenced a series of meetings at North Liberty, preaching there one week. Three years ago I was not well received by many, but during this fall some of the best citizens got together and sent me an invitation to come again. I could not stay any longer on account of my eyes giving out, resulting from overwork with the tent. At the close of the last service I received many invitations to return. One of the oldest and most respected citizens in the neighborhood, who has been classed as an infidel, came to me and told me the schoolhouse would always be open for me and he desired me to make his home my headquarters, going or coming, day or night. He had just listened to me talk for an hour and a quarter on the justice of God, and he said that was what his father taught him fifty years ago. I find many of the best and strongest-minded people are called infidels on account of the unmerciful manner God is presented to them by the hell-fire scarecrow preaching we hear.

I then went to Runnells, where I stayed a few days, trying to get a place to preach eight miles east of there, but they informed me they did not want a series of meetings until the corn was gathered; but on the next Sunday evening the M. E. preacher announced that he would commence a series of meetings there two weeks from the following Monday. I then went to Vandalia, where I held eighteen services with good interest and congregations. The Christian preacher attended most of the time. I left several near the kingdom. One man declared his intention of obeying. I was shut out of the Baptist church at this time and three years ago, but the deacon who shut me out and whom I asked if he thought no one but Baptists would get into heaven, and answered that the Lord could let them in if he wished, but he would not, has gone to try the realities of a selfish life. I returned to Runnells and remained over Thanksgiving, and took part in a Union Thanksgiving service held in the saints' chapel.

From here I went to Sandyville, where Bro. Joseph Knox and family reside, thinking he could get the Christian church; but in this he failed. He then rented a hall, but owing to the expense all falling on him, I only held a few meetings, but do hope they will get the tent there another year. I then held five services at Concord; found the saints all doing the best they can. Bro. Robert Bare, president of branch, is in earnest, and when he talks this latter-day gospel he speaks from the abundance of the heart. I will commence meetings at Roundtop schoolhouse, December 17.

Ever praying for the spread of the gospel,
W. H. KEPHART.

PHELPS, Minn., Dec. 14.

Editors Herald:—I never wrote for the paper, but I will try and let you know about the work in this part of the moral vineyard. I am a teacher, and with Bro. Pierce, the branch priest, we visited the branch. We traveled about one hundred fifty miles, and visited twenty-two houses of saints, and forty-nine members. We found the saints in splendid faith, working for their Master. They are in a scattered condition, a long ways from house to house. But they attend meetings quite regularly for the distance they have to go, and are blessed with the Spirit of God.

May God bless them and give them strength to continue in the good work.

R. L. POWERS,

Teacher of the Union branch of the Northern Minnesota district.

[This is a splendid instance of visiting work.—Ed.]

DOWNES, Okla., Dec. 9.

Editors Herald:—My wife and I are the only saints here. We had the pleasure of entertaining Elder R. W. Davis and secured the Harmon schoolhouse near by, for three nights the first of the week. He had a fairly good turnout each night, and spoke with good liberty, and had extra good order and attention. The last night he was requested to change his subject, and tell them why he believed in inspiration, why he was a Latter Day Saint, and where in the Bible the Mormons got the teaching of polygamy. He did the best anyone could do on the subject in one hour and fifteen minutes, and the man who requested him to change subjects arose at the close and thanked Bro. Davis for the clearness with which he had answered the questions, and thought he was expressing the voice of every one present, and requested that if he (Bro. D.) ever returned, to stop and preach for them.

It makes one rejoice to hear the truth as it is found in the Scriptures and as set forth by the inspiration of the Holy Spirit. The echo comes to us, "He is a fine speaker;" "He is a good preacher;" "Best preacher in these parts."

Bro. Hinkle and wife and baby, Bro. Davis, the writer and family, drove from here to the Oklahoma conference which convened with the Canadian Central branch on the 19th and 20th of November. We did enjoy the association and hospitality of the saints, and realize what we miss by being isolated or very nearly so. We ask an interest in the prayers of the saints.

Your brother,
GEORGE M. HILES.

HUNTER, Ohio, Nov. 30.

Editors Herald:—We are having preaching here. Bro. James Craig, wife, and little girl are here, and he is having good liberty in presenting the gospel. The interest seems better among the people.

I am rejoicing in this latter-day work. We have no branch, but long for the time when there will be one. I ask an interest in all your prayers.

Your sister,
ANNA BARNES.

SALINAS, Cal., Dec. 6.

Editors Herald:—I came here from Monterey, where fifteen have been baptized, all heads of families; one man seventy years old. He is vigorous in body and mind. Nearly all of these came out of the M. E. church. I left Bro. Walter Scott there to look after the work, for fear the wolves might get in and scatter the lambs. There are several more at Monterey and Pacific Grove who will soon obey, if not hindered. The prospect is that there can be a good branch organized there, for those that have obeyed are the best of citizens—not a goat among them.

I came here hoping to find an opening, but so far no doors have been opened, and the prospect is that none will be, except for revenue only.

For the truth,
E. KEELER.

"Rev. Dr. R. M. Patterson, after a study of reports, finds that more than half the Presbyterian churches of the country have a membership of less than 100 each. One seventh of the Presbyterian and one fifth of the Congregationalist have less than twenty-five each."

"Our grand business undoubtedly is, not to see what lies dimly at a distance, but to do what lies clearly at hand."

True Succession in Church Presidency.

CHAPTER 12.

In the foregoing pages we have established the following points:—

1. That the blessing of Joseph Smith the Prophet belongs to his posterity, according to the law of lineage.
2. That this blessing includes the right to the keys of the kingdom.
3. That these keys belong always to the Presidency of the High Priesthood; hence the posterity of Joseph should preside over the high priesthood.
4. That Joseph, the eldest son of Joseph the Seer, was blessed, set apart, and appointed by his father to succeed him.
5. That the authority to appoint his successor was vested in Joseph Smith by virtue of the position he held.

The only relevant question remaining to be solved is this: Did Joseph Smith, the son of the Prophet, pursue the proper course in proceeding to occupy in the sacred office to which he had been called and appointed?

1. Were the people with whom he identified himself the acknowledged people of God?
2. Did they have authority to choose and ordain him?
3. Has his subsequent teaching given evidence that he is the true successor of Joseph Smith his father?

On the first question, Were the people with whom he identified himself the acknowledged people of God? We present as evidence that when he the anointed and appointed of God went humbly to the Lord, he was directed to the "saints reorganizing at Zarahemla and other places." (See p. 57.)

We invite attention also to the position occupied by that people; viz.: They recognized the true situation—that the church had been rejected, and that a reorganization was essential; they took a position in harmony with the law and the promises of God in regard to succession, as we have clearly shown in these pages.

Further, they adhered to the law of God as found in the written word, and were not led into abominable and immoral practices by the delusive theory that God had bestowed upon men "keys that the written word never spoke of."

The following is a part of their declaration as adopted by the June conference of 1852:—

Resolved, that as the office of First President of the Church grows out of the authority of the Presiding High Priest in the high priesthood, no person can legally lay claim to the office of First President of the Church, without a previous ordination to the Presidency of the High Priesthood.

Resolved, that we recognize the validity of all legal ordinations in this church, and will fellowship all such as have thus been ordained, while acting within the purview of such authority.

Resolved, that we believe that the Church of Christ, organized on the 6th day of April, A. D. 1830, exists as on that day wherever six or more saints are organized according to the pattern in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants.

Resolved, that the whole law of the Church of Jesus Christ is contained in the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Book of Doctrine and Covenants.—The Messenger, Vol. 2, p. 9.

This last resolution harmonizes with the law which says:—

Hearken and hear, O ye my people, saith the Lord and your God, ye whom I delight to bless with the greatest blessings; ye that hear me: and ye that hear me not will I curse, that have professed my name, with the heaviest of all cursings. Hearken, O ye elders of my church whom I have called: behold, I give unto you a commandment, that ye shall assemble yourselves together to agree upon my word, and by the prayer of your faith ye shall receive my law, that ye may know how to govern my church, and have all things right before me.

And I will be your Ruler when I come; and, behold, I come quickly; and ye shall see that my law is kept. He that receiv-eth my law and doeth it the same is my disciple; and he that saith he receiveth it and doeth it not, the same is not my disciple, and shall be cast out from among you; for it is not meet that the things which belong to the children of the kingdom, should be given to them that are not worthy, or to dogs, or the pearls to be cast before swine.

... These words are given unto you, and they are pure before me; wherefore, beware how you hold them, for they are to be answered upon your souls in the day of judgment. Even so. Amen.—D. C. 41: 1, 2, 3.

Section 42 indicates that they had assembled together and that the promised law by which they were "to govern my church and have all things right before me [God]," was to be given them.

A part of that law reads as follows:—

And again, the elders, priests, and teachers of this church shall teach the principles of my gospel which are in the Bible and the Book of Mormon, in the which is the fullness of the gospel; and they shall observe the covenants and church articles to do them, and these shall be their teachings, as they shall be directed by the Spirit; and the Spirit shall be given unto you by the prayer of faith, and if ye receive not the Spirit ye shall not teach. And all this ye shall observe to do as I have commanded concerning your teaching, until the fullness of my scriptures are given. And as ye shall lift up your voices by the Comforter, ye shall speak and prophesy as seemeth me good; for, behold, the Comforter knoweth all things, and beareth record of the Father and of the Son.—D. C. 42:5.

To this the Reorganization committed itself. The Utah people were induced by their leaders to adopt strange and questionable things not taught by Joseph nor found in the written word, under the delusive impression that their boasted keyholders were unlocking the treasure-house and handing out celestial gems.

Again, the instruction given to Jason W. Briggs on November 18, 1851, which was one of the influences leading to the Reorganization, was in harmony with the foregoing. The following is an extract therefrom:—

Therefore, let the Elders whom I have ordained by the hand of my servant Joseph, or by the hand of those ordained by him, resist not this authority, nor faint in the discharge of duty, which is to preach my gospel as revealed in the record of the Jews, and the Book of Mormon, and the Book of Doctrine and Covenants; and cry repentance and remission of sins through obedience to the gospel, and I will sustain them, and give them my Spirit; and in mine own due time will I call upon the seed of Joseph Smith, and will bring one forth, and he shall be mighty and strong, and he shall preside over the high priesthood of my church; and then shall the quorums assemble, and the pure in heart shall gather, and Zion shall be reinhabited, as I said unto my servant Joseph Smith;—after many days shall all these things be accomplished, saith the Spirit.—The Messenger, Vol. 2, p. 1.

This leads us to something else. The reinhabiting of Zion and the words of the Lord to Joseph Smith in connection therewith are referred to—"After many days shall all these things be accomplished." Where in the revelations to Joseph Smith do we find this sentiment? In a revelation given December, 1833.

It is important. We quote as follows:—

And now, I will show unto you a parable that you may know my will concerning the redemption of Zion. A certain nobleman had a spot of land, very choice; and he said unto his servants, Go ye into my vineyard, even upon this very choice piece of land, and plant twelve olive trees; and set watchmen round about them and build a tower, that one may overlook the land round about, to be a watchman upon the tower; that mine olive trees may not be broken down, when the enemy shall come to spoil and take unto themselves the fruit of my vineyard. Now the servants of the nobleman went and did as their lord commanded them; and planted the olive trees, and built a hedge round about, and set watchmen, and began to build a tower. And while they were yet laying the foundation thereof, they began to say among themselves, And what need hath my lord of this tower? and consulted for a long time, saying among themselves, What need hath my lord of this tower, seeing this is a time of peace? Might not this money be given to the exchangers? for there is no need of these things! And while they were at variance one with another they became very slothful, and they hearkened not unto the commandments of their lord, and the enemy came by night and broke down the hedge, and the servants of the nobleman arose, and were affrighted, and fled; and the enemy destroyed their works and broke down the olive trees.

Now, behold, the nobleman, the lord of the vineyard, called upon his servants, and said unto them, Why! what is the cause of this great evil? ought ye not to have done even as I commanded you? and after ye had planted the vineyard, and built the hedge round about, and set watchmen upon the walls thereof, built the tower also, and set a watchman upon the tower, and watched for my vineyard, and not have fallen asleep, lest the enemy should come upon you? and, behold, the watchman upon the tower would have seen the enemy while he was yet afar off, and then you could have made ready and kept the enemy from breaking down the hedge thereof, and saved my vineyard from the hands of the destroyer. And the lord of the vineyard said unto one of his servants, Go and gather together the residue of my servants; and take all the strength of mine house, which are my warriors, my young men, and they that are of middle age also, among all my servants, who are the strength of mine house, save those only whom I have appointed to tarry; and go ye straightway unto the land of my vineyard, and redeem my vineyard, for it is mine, I have bought it with money. Therefore, get ye straightway unto my land; break down the walls of mine enemies, throw down their tower, and scatter their watchmen; and inasmuch as they gather together against you, avenge me of mine enemies; that by and by I may come with the residue of mine house and possess the land.

And the servant said unto his lord, When shall these things be? And he said unto his servant, When I will: go ye straightway: and do all things whatsoever I have commanded you; and this shall be my seal and blessing upon you; a faithful and wise steward in the midst of mine house; a ruler in my kingdom. And his servant went straightway, and did all things whatsoever his lord commanded him, and after many days all things were fulfilled.—Doc. and Cov. 98: 6-8.

Without occupying space to discuss all the minor points in the above parable we invite attention to the following leading points:—

1. The subject of the parable is the redemption of Zion.
2. The servants of the nobleman (the people of God) were to be directed to occupy a choice piece of land.
3. They were to do as they were commanded.
4. While they were yet laying the foundation they were to get at variance one with another and become slothful.
5. As a result of this unfaithfulness their enemies were to come upon them and destroy their works.
6. They were to become affrighted and flee.
7. The nobleman (God) was to remonstrate with them for their unfaithfulness and to hold them responsible for allowing his vineyard to be destroyed.
8. Then he was to call upon one of his servants to gather together the residue of his servants (not the body which had fled).
9. This servant at the head of this residue was to go straightway into the vineyard and redeem it, break down the walls of the enemy, throw down their tower, scatter their watchmen, etc.
10. This servant was to inquire when these things should be, but was simply to be told, "When I will."
11. He was told that if he performed his part he should be a faithful and wise steward and a ruler in the kingdom.
12. He was to do whatsoever he was commanded and after many days all things (concerning the redemption of Zion) were to be fulfilled.

The revelation to Elder Briggs connects this latter point with the work of the Reorganization.

We are aware that it has been understood that this revelation of December, 1833, applied to the work of "Zion's Camp" which went up the next year to Missouri to relieve their brethren. That the participants in that movement should hope and expect to fulfill it, is quite natural; and that it may in a sense have had reference to that movement, we admit. But it did not have a complete fulfillment then. The Camp of Zion was not composed of the residue left after the church fled from Jackson County, in 1833. Zion's Camp did not scatter the enemy, but were themselves disbanded ere they reached the land whence their brethren had been driven. However, there came a time, as has been made apparent in the preceding pages, when the church became slothful and failed to do the work commanded within the time appointed; when their enemies came upon them and they became affrighted and fled, not simply to another part of the choice vineyard, as in the case of former moves, but entirely outside of the appointed Zion. Since the body has fled, one of God's servants has been sent to gather together the "residue," or remnants left behind; and they have gone straightway into the waste places of Zion and are redeeming them; are breaking down the wall, throwing down the tower, and scattering the watchmen of the enemy; not by use of carnal weapons, but by fearlessly defending the faith against opposition; by consistent honorable lives, and square dealing; and by adhering to "the code of good morals," taught in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and the Doctrine and Covenants, and to which President Smith pledged himself on that memorable April day of 1860.

This has disarmed the enemy, and the Reorganization is realizing, in a measure, the fulfillment of the promise that the church should find "favor and grace" in the eyes of the people. (See pp. 99, 100.)

Mark it well, this servant who was to be sent to lead this movement was not only to be "a faithful and wise steward" in the midst of God's house, but he was to be "a ruler in my [God's] kingdom."

In this connection observe the fitness of the following words of this servant of God as he called upon Latter Day Israel to renew their allegiance:—

In the name of the God of Abraham, of Isaac, and of Jacob, I now call upon all the scattered saints, upon all the broad earth, to arise and shake off the sleep that hath bound them these many years, take on the armor of the just, calling on the name of the Lord for help, and unite once more for the emancipation of the honest in heart from the power of false doctrines and the shackles of sin.

In the name of bleeding Zion, I call upon all those who have been wandering in by and forbidden paths, and have been led astray by wicked and designing men, to turn from their scenes of wickedness and sins of convenience—to turn from their servitude to Satan, in all his seductive devices; from vice in every phase, and from the labor of sin, the wages whereof are ever death—unto their true and delightful allegiance to the principles of the gospel of peace—to the paths of wisdom—to the homage of that God that brought the children of Israel out of bondage; to turn and remember the new covenant, even the Book of Mormon; to lay hold anew upon the rod of iron which surely leads to the tree of life; to remember that those who live to the Lord keep his commandments, and that the promises are unto the faithful, and the reward unto those that endure unto the end.

And in the name of the Lord of Hosts, I call upon all the inhabitants of the earth to repent, believe and be baptized, for the time cometh when the judgments of God are to be poured out upon all nations, and the besom of God's wrath shall smite through the land; when men shall know that there is a God in Israel, and he is mighty to punish or to save; that the prayers of those under the altar have been heard, and a swift retribution is to come, when the despoiler will be despoiled; when those who denied justice shall be judged, and the measure meted unto others shall be meted unto them; when the prisoner shall go free, the oppressed be redeemed, and all Israel shall cry, "Glory to God in the highest be given, for he that is longsuffering and slow to anger, has arisen, and shall bring again Zion." Amen and amen.

JOSEPH SMITH, President,
Of Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.
NAUVOO, Illinois, July 19, 1861.

—Saints' Herald, Vol. 2, pp. 123, 124.

As further evidence that God has accepted the Reorganization, we invite attention to God's promise concerning the Holy Scriptures as translated and corrected by Joseph Smith the Prophet.

Thou shalt ask, and my scriptures shall be given as I have appointed, and they shall be preserved in safety; and it is expedient that thou shouldst hold thy peace concerning them, and not teach them until ye have received them in full. And I give unto you a commandment, that then ye shall teach them unto all men; for they shall be taught unto all nations, kindreds, tongues, and people.—D. C. 42: 15.

The manuscript of the Holy Scriptures was carefully preserved in the hands of Emma Smith, whom the Brighamites brand as an apostate, and was by her delivered into the hands of the Reorganization, whose exclusive property it is to-day. Then according to God's decree the place of safety for that which he would preserve is with the Reorganized Church, and not with the church in Utah.

Then indeed were the people with whom the son of the Prophet identified himself the acknowledged people of God.

Second: Did they have authority to choose and ordain him?

So far as the choosing is concerned, the foregoing evidence that this people were accepted of God as his church, is sufficient; but on the subject of ordination, and the question as to whether there was authority among those composing the Reorganization to ordain, we offer a few observations.

We agree with Mr. Roberts that an ordination was necessary. Then to whom should this man, called and appointed of God, go to receive his ordination? To a rebaptized, a reordained apostleship? To men who claimed to lead the church by virtue of "keys that the written word never spoke of, nor never will"? To men who were led by such keys into the idolatrous doctrine of worshipping Adam as God, and denying the Scriptures concerning the birth of Jesus Christ? To men who taught the repudiation of honest debts, justified and advised murder, and taught that the priesthood of God gave power to men to become expert thieves, gamblers, and rogues? To men who had themselves usurped the authority to preside without an ordination of any kind to that position? To men who by deceit and fraud had fastened the practice of polygamy upon the credulous? To men who were the acknowledged representatives of a rejected and covenant breaking people? O no! certainly not. God would not send his chosen prophet to receive ordination from such a source.

Then to whom should he go? When, because of apostasy and spiritual darkness, God had rejected the once Christian Church, and he desired to again establish his church on earth, he gave direction how to organize, and provided among other things for the selection of a Quorum of Twelve Apostles. What provision did he make for this? A committee was appointed by revelation, consisting of Oliver Cowdery and David Whitmer (D. C. 16: 6), to which Martin Harris was subsequently added, and to them the Lord gave authority to select the Twelve according to specific instruction given. In 1835 the Twelve were selected by these men. Neither of the three, though they were in a general sense Apostles; were ever members of the Quorum of Twelve; and though they did not then nor thereafter hold any office equal to it, yet they ordained these men Apostles of the Quorum of Twelve and gave them their charge.

To this Quorum of Twelve thus chosen and ordained God delegated the authority "to ordain and set in order all the other officers of the church." (D. C. 104: 30.)

When the quorum thus appointed so far departed from the law of God as to suffer themselves to be rebaptized and reordained by one who was openly acting by the authority of "keys that the written word never spoke of, nor never will," and by the authority and dictation of this same man were led into the abominations we have referred to, thus proving themselves unworthy to act in the sacred office to which they had been previously called,—when they no longer represented a people governed by the word of God, but a rejected and covenant-breaking people,—how would we expect God to renew the apostolic authority, how reorganize the apostolic quorum, and restore the authority to ordain and set in order? We would, of course, expect him to be consistent with himself, and another quorum would be chosen in like manner as the first was chosen.

In this the instruction given to the Reorganization was consistent. It was as follows:—

Verily, thus saith the Lord, as I said unto my servant Moses, see thou do all things according to the pattern, so say I unto you. Behold the pattern is before you. It is my will that you respect authority in my church; therefore let the greatest among you preside at your conference. Let three men be appointed by the conference to select seven men from among you, who shall compose a majority of the twelve apostles; for it is my will that that quorum should not be filled up at present.—The Messenger, Vol. 2, p. 21.

Members of this quorum were chosen exactly as were the quorum installed in 1835, and were ordained by those holding authority in the days of Joseph Smith, and who occupied positions in the priesthood as high as did Oliver Cowdery, David Whitmer, or Martin Harris. Men from this quorum thus chosen and ordained according to the pattern, officiated at the ordination of President Joseph Smith in April, 1860.

No wonder that Mr. Roberts could find no valid objection to this authority, but could only say in a bombastic manner:—

Now, I affirm that among all those seven men who were "called" to form the majority of the quorum of the twelve, in the "Reorganization" not one of them held the apostleship; that they could not give what they did not possess; that therefore neither the seven men called to be apostles, in April, 1853, received the apostleship, nor any whom they subsequently ordained.—Roberts, p. 77.

Then, as if to make assurance doubly sure, Elder William Marks who was President of the High Council at the seat of the Presidency, and President of the Nauvoo stake at the time of Joseph's death, and whom the Lord had said he would raise up as a "blessing unto many people" (see p. 84), assisted in that ordination.

In this connection it will be well to remember that William Marks as a high priest held the same authority that was held by those who ordained Joseph the Martyr as President of the High Priesthood, as the following will show:—

"On the 26th I called a general council of the church, and was acknowledged as the president of the high priesthood, according to a previous ordination at a conference of high priests, elders, and members, held at Amherst, Ohio, on the twenty-fifth of January, 1832. The right hand of fellowship was given to me by the bishop, Edward Partridge, in behalf of the church. The scene was solemn, impressive, and delightful. During the intermission, a difficulty or hardness which had existed between Bishop Partridge and Elder Rigdon was amicably settled, and when we came together in the afternoon, all hearts seemed to rejoice."—Church History, Vol. 1, p. 244; Times and Seasons, Vol. 5, p. 624.

This was before there was a Quorum of Twelve Apostles.

Thus does it appear that President Joseph Smith and his father were ordained by the same authority; viz.: by those holding the office of high priest; and in addition to this, President Smith's ordination was participated in by those who were regularly called and ordained to the office of apostle, Notwithstanding all this, Messrs. Roberts, Penrose, and their associates will scoff at the authority of this ordination; while they indorse the presidency of Brigham Young, John Taylor, Wilford Woodruff, and Lorenzo Snow, not one of whom have ever claimed an ordination of any kind or by any authority to the office of President of the High Priesthood.

"O consistency thou art a jewel;" but thy home is not in Utah.

In answer to this conclusive presentation of the case they can only call William Marks hard names, and affirm that the apostles of the Reorganization had no authority.

While there are general rules for the church to be governed by, yet so far as authority is concerned, the command of God is authority for anything. By virtue of his command authority is bestowed; yet we expect him to act consistently with himself, as in the selection of the Quorum of Twelve in 1835, and in the Reorganization.

But our friends say that the lesser ordaining the greater is "contrary to the order and contrary to nature—a stream cannot rise above its source."

If their reasoning was good it would condemn the apostolic ordinations performed in 1835; the ordination of Joseph the Martyr by high priests in 1832; and, strange to say, that what they condemn they ask "young Joseph" to accept, claiming that he should have had his ordination to a position in the first quorum (the First Presidency) under the hands of those whom they claim retained their authority as members of the second quorum (the Twelve).

That a stream cannot rise above its fountain or source, is true; but it is also true that a stream cannot sink so low that it may not rise again to any height not exceeding that of its source. Those who employ this analogy and compare the priesthood to a stream of water, make the mistake of locating the source of the stream of priesthood in the man who ordains, or in the office that he holds.

This is manifestly wrong. The source of the priesthood is in God; and so long as the source retains its strength, though the stream may flow through lower channels at times, such stream may rise to any height not exceeding that of its source—God himself. The danger lies not in the channel being low, but in its becoming unclean and unworthy to contain the pure waters of life. In such a case the Intelligent Source of the stream of priesthood would withdraw the waters and leave the channel dry, or but a refuge for filth and uncleanness.

The language of Joseph Smith and his companions in bonds, written from Liberty Jail, Missouri, in 1839, is significant, and in this connection we commend their words to careful consideration:—

There are many called but few are chosen, and why are they not chosen? Because their hearts are set upon the things of the world, and are aspiring to the honors of men; they do not learn the lesson that the rights of the priesthood are inseparably connected with the powers of heaven; and that the powers of heaven cannot be controlled nor handled, only upon the principles of righteousness. That they may be conferred upon us, it is true; but when we undertake to cover our sins, to gratify our pride, vain ambition, or to exercise dominion or compulsion over the souls of the children of men, in any degree of unrighteousness; behold the heavens withdraw themselves, the Spirit of the Lord is grieved, then amen to the priesthood, or to the authority of that man; behold ere he is aware, he is left to kick against the pricks; to persecute the saints, and to fight against God.—Times and Seasons, Vol. 1, pp. 131, 132.

This is a serious consideration. Too often men have been lifted up in pride and boasted of their high prerogatives, while they have paid too little attention to purity of life and meekness of spirit. That is indeed a sad condition of things when men high in authority use that authority as a license for uncleanness, or as a cloak to cover corruption. And when men boast of acting by virtue of keys or authority that the "written word never spoke of, nor never will," they are like a vessel at sea without a rudder; they will drift upon the rocks and be wrecked. Adam-God, blood atonement, polygamy, and other theories and crimes, fostered and encouraged by Brigham Young and others, are but the legitimate results of this peculiar key doctrine, and of considering the office a man holds of more importance than the purity and righteousness of his life.

Christ in his extreme trial appealed to what was written. Should his servants fail to do so, they will not represent him, but misrepresent him.

Those who use the stream as illustrative of the priesthood in the manner referred to above have not considered it. We doubt if there could be found a man, even in Utah, who would claim that the fountain of the priesthood was in the man who ordains, or in the office he holds. If there should be such an one, he has obtained his information by the use of "keys that the written word never spoke of, nor never will."

Those who will examine the subject carefully will, we are sure, be able to discern that no man is this dispensation has been ordained by authority more defensible than was Joseph Smith, the son of the Prophet. By virtue of birthright; by virtue of calling, blessing, and appointment; by virtue of being chosen by the Church of God; by virtue of a regular and authoritative ordination, he is President of the High Priesthood and of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

Third: Has his subsequent teaching given evidence that he is the true successor of Joseph Smith, his father?

An appeal to the revelations of God will settle this point. The Lord as early as February, 1831, informed the church what the work of the successor of Joseph Smith would be. He says:—

But verily, verily I say unto you, that none else shall be appointed unto this gift except it be through him, for if it be taken from him he shall not have power, except to appoint another in his stead; and this shall be a law unto you, that ye receive not the teachings of any that shall come before you as revelations, or commandments; and this I give unto you, that you may not be deceived, that you may know they are not of me. For verily I say unto you, that he that is ordained of me, shall come in at the gate and be ordained as I have told you before, to teach those revelations which you have received, and shall receive through him whom I have appointed.—Doc. and Cov. 43: 2.

This suggests that there would be danger of being deceived by purported revelations that would be presented after the removal of Joseph Smith, and the Lord gives a key whereby they could be detected and by which the church could know they were not of him. The test was this: that the one chosen of God to succeed Joseph was to come in at the gate, be ordained according to God's instruction, and he was "to teach those revelations which you have received, and shall receive," etc. Then the revelations that were to be received after this one must agree with those that had been received before, or the successor of Joseph Smith could not teach both. The church was warned to "receive not the teachings of any that shall come before you as revelations, or commandments; and this I give unto you, that you may not be deceived, that you may know they are not of me." If any reliance can be placed in this language, then can we know that the revelation introduced in August, 1852, was not of God, and that the teachings of those who then came before the church with revelations and commandments were not to be received. The son of the Prophet should not be blamed for rejecting the doctrine of plurality of wives, for one of the conditions of his appointment was that he was to teach the former and the latter revelations. He could not accept polygamy and still teach: "Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart, and shall cleave unto her and none else," etc. (D. C. 42: 7); "There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife: and concubines he shall have none," etc. (Book of Mormon, Jacob 2: 6.)

Others may feel at liberty to believe and advocate that God has abrogated this law and commanded a departure from it, but the successor of Joseph Smith cannot. Upon him the obligation is laid "to teach those revelations which you have received [before the one contained in Doctrine and Covenants section 43] and shall receive."

The son of the Prophet took the only course open to him, as his father's successor, in rejecting that which was opposed to the former commandments. Not only is this true regarding polygamy, but on all points of doctrine and church government he has appealed for authority to the revelations of God, in harmony with the commandment which says: "And these shall be their teachings, as they shall be directed by the Spirit." (D. C. 42: 5.)

Then his teaching has given evidence that he is the true successor of Joseph Smith, his father.

Our task is done. This treatise is not an exhaustive one, for much more might be said upon the several points treated upon. We have been especially moderate in quoting the abominable teachings of the Utah authorities, having chosen but few of the many passages so shocking to the moral sense of honest people, and relating none of the many reports (some of which are well authenticated) of their practicing as they taught. Upon this as upon other points we have only used what we considered sufficient material to meet the issue. The investigation has convinced us more thoroughly than before that the Utah Church is a rejected church, and that the Reorganization stands upon an impregnable rock of defense.

Humbly we send forth our conclusions, and our reasons therefor, praying that they may prove encouraging and confirming to the faithful, and warning and convincing to the erring.

Though we expect to give an account for our teaching as well as our conduct at the bar of God, we do not hesitate to present to the reader the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints as the Church of Jesus Christ, and Joseph Smith the son of the Martyr as its Prophet and President.

The foregoing I intended as the closing chapter of my work on "True Succession in Church Presidency," but since concluding, some correspondence between Utah authorities and other parties has fallen into my hands which throws additional light upon the position of the Utah Church. We have applied to the parties furnishing the correspondence for permission to publish. If this permission is obtained we shall add another brief but important chapter.

Respectfully,

HEMAN C. SMITH.

HERALD, HOPE, ENSIGN, AUTUMN LEAVES, AND BOOKS FOR THE BRITISH ISLES.

To the saints and patrons in Great Britain:—Our very worthy and devoted agent and brother, Thomas Taylor, of Birmingham, some time ago notified us that by reason of his advanced age and infirmities he would be compelled to resign the agency for church publications for the above-named territory, such resignation to take effect January 1, 1899. We have since sought to fill the position but have not as yet found any party who could give the time to it, and have therefore arranged to supply the church publications upon the plan had in America, by appointing an agent in each branch who will transact the business for the office with the people.

By turning to the late Herald catalogue you will notice on first page, special instructions touching the appointment of these agents. Please read carefully.

1. We ask the saints in the different branches of England, Wales, and Scotland to select one of their number whom they are satisfied can and will attend to the business, and forward to this office his name and address at once. Please do not delay as we wish the address so as to forward supplies by the first of the year.

2. We also ask each person so selected to forward to us at once a list of all those who wish the church papers and the number; also books and tracts.

3. When practicable the cash should accompany the subscription. The prices of the church publications have been reduced so as to come within the reach of all if they will make an effort; they are placed at as low figures as it is possible to publish for cash until subscription lists are enlarged.

It has been charged that this payment in advance is only in the interest of the rich. A little thought will, however, convince you that it is not. To return to the old system of credit, it must not be forgotten that those who are well able to pay, take advantage of this as well as the poorer classes; and this deprives the office of the use of the money and we must borrow to run on, and pay interest; nor can the money always be had. If the money is paid in advance, we can use it in purchasing supplies, and discount all bills at from five to ten per cent in ten to thirty days, thus saving much to the office during the year. To begin the credit system ad libitum, would lose heavily to the office each year, and we would be compelled, for safety of the business, to raise upon the price of the publications instead of lessening prices.

There is no power in this office by which we may pass judgment upon individuals and say to one, you are able and must pay in advance, and to another, you need not do so. All too, both rich and poor, would resent such an act. We are then to be governed by general rules applicable to all, and every reasonable mind must see that if the poor man is to pay for his reading at all, the cheaper he gets it the better it is for him. All that we need, to make a successful work of this, is to make the effort at once, and not let it drag to the end of the year, when it is often found that we are not as well prepared to raise the means as we were at the beginning. In cases of great misfortune or sickness, special application can be made to the Board of Publication and justice had.

In the interest of all we urge promptness in payment; it is better for the work, better for the people; we form better business habits thereby, and are educated upon right lines, so that if we are poor, we need not remain so; and if well to do, or rich, we shall readily perform our work so as to advance the cause of Christ as we should.

We congratulate the saints and friends upon evidences of better prospects for the cause of truth, and all who sacrifice and labor therefor.

In the hope of Christ, we are your collaborators in his gospel,

HALF-FARE RAILROAD PERMITS.

General Conference appointees still in the field and who come within the rules of General Passenger Associations by which they are entitled to half-fare permits, have been duly recommended to General Associations, to facilitate prompt issuance of half-fare permits for 1899.

It is understood, of course, that if any have left the field or engaged in secular business, they will not make application.

All other ministers who may be entitled to permits should obtain indorsements from their respective general missionaries in charge. Association officials are instructed to that effect.

HISTORY OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS. (Volumes 1 and 2 now ready.) Provided for by action of General Conference of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Written and compiled by President Joseph Smith and Apostle Heman C. Smith. Invaluable as a correct historical narrative, as a means of conversion to truth, and as a defensive weapon in meeting old and new objections urged against the latter-day work. It contains important documents connected with the establishment, growth, and internal and external affairs and progress of the church. The revelations given in this dispensation are inserted, in connection with accounts of the circumstances under which they were given. Biographical sketches, illustrations, complete indexes, sidenotes for ready reference, etc., are some of the features of the work. Volume 1 begins with the birth of Joseph Smith, the Prophet and Seer, in 1805, and narrates the circumstances of his calling and ministry, the rise of the church in 1830, and until the close of the year 1835. Volume 2 continues the history up to June 27, 1844, —to the assassination of Joseph and Hyrum Smith.

CZAR ON COST OF ARMIES.

LONDON, Dec. 18.—At a great public conference, held this afternoon in St. James' Hall, favoring an international ratification of the Czar's peace proposals, William T. Stead said that, though he could not give the exact words of the Czar in a recent interview, the substance of what his Majesty said was as follows:—

"I look out over the world; I study our civilization, and I do not find it entirely good. I see nations all engaged in seizing, or trying to seize, all territory not yet occupied by European powers. I look at the results. They do not seem to me to be good.

"For the native races what does imperial expansion mean? Too often opium, alcohol, and all manner of foul diseases; a great gulf between the governed and those who rule; and crushing taxation upon the natives for the blessings of this civilization.

"And for the nations who seize, what does it mean? A continual increase of suspicion, jealousy, and rivalry; the heaping up of fleets and armies in order to take part in a scramble with the world, with the result that the army and navy are swallowing up more and more millions that should be used for the welfare of the people and the advancement of the world.

"On top are a few rich and comfortable. Down below, with an ever-increasing pressure of taxes for armaments, is the great mass of poor people whose position is not good. There is an ever-increasing multitude of those below, with their brooding discontent ripening into socialism and developing into all kinds of anarchy.

"No, I don't find our civilization good. Why do we make it so? We have at the present moment arrived at this state that we have put our best manhood in the army. So much is this the case that we cannot mobilize the whole of our troops in European countries without dislocating the whole fabric of the social community.

"War has become so expensive that no state can stand the strain of protracted war without having to look bankruptcy in the face, and we are so perfecting our modern weapons of destruction that no army can go into the field without losing so large a proportion of its officers that when the war is over, even if that army be victorious, the war will have inflicted irreparable loss on the country. What with disconnection caused by mobilizing; what with an empty exchequer; what with decimated ranks of leading and governing men, I see nothing before any nation but a terrible heritage of revolutionary anarchy."

"HEART HUNGER IN THE MIDST OF OUR PLENTY."

THE Rev. Dr. Thomas C. Hall, formerly of Chicago, and recently chosen to the chair of applied Christian ethics in Union Theological Seminary, New York, preached yesterday morning at Central Church, Chicago. . . .

From the text, "Behold I stand at the door and knock," Dr. Hall delivered a sermon depicting the advance of the highest civilization through the forces of unrest. The power underlying discontent, he said, was not in man himself, but in God. Contending that Canon Farrar's phrase, "Seekers after God," applied to men, was wrong, he said that God was seeking continually after men, spurring them to renewed mental and spiritual endeavor.

"In the progress of history," he continued, "certain eras stand out as times of culmination in human activity and of more abundant fruitage. I believe men will look back from the high places of future history to the nineteenth century as one of the most wonderful and fruitful of them all. Among all lines the nineteenth century has achievements of which to boast. We are increased in good, but are we content?

"We suffer from heart hunger in the midst of our plenty. The prosperity of the present has, I hope, not utterly banished the numerous wails of discontent at the feverish proposals of the past. We dare not forget that that discontent demanded things that to the judgment of many imperiled the moral integrity of the nation. But not here alone do we notice unsatisfied hearts. The prevalence of strange revivals of forms of semi-heathen philosophies and superstitions make such names as spiritualism, Christian science, etc., mark the heart hunger of the closing days of the nineteenth century. It is vain to argue with these forms of perverted faith. They are merely symptoms of mental unrest.

There are many elements of hopefulness as we look forward into the future and backward to the past. Human liberty has a scope never before granted to it. Real thought is free, and we have come to a more fearless facing of life's deep problems. The atmosphere is more prepared for God's messages to man.

"The written revelations never had a higher place in the life of the world or a more extended sway. The world's current tongue is soaked with the thoughts and phrases borrowed from the old Hebrew literature. But we feel, nevertheless, that something lacks. We are increased in goods, but we are poor and blind and weak. Has the old love waxed cold?

WHY THE FEAST FAILS.

"Christ stands at the door of our churchly life. He knocks. No music or ritual or splendid progress in material things has any weight whatsoever if he is without. And he is, alas! all too often banished without. We admit philosophy; that is well. We welcome ethics; we would not have it otherwise. We drag education within our doors. This also we would not have otherwise; but he, himself, we leave to wait, and all the feast fails to satisfy our souls.

"Before the splendid edifice of our commercial life Christ stands and knocks. Christ stands at the door of our political life and knocks. Politics may become a solemn service of the Almighty; nay, must become such if the aspirations and hopes of the founders of this republic are to be realized.

"I have thought often that Chicago presents the climax of the energy of the age; that the restless forces which surge down its streets are molding the end-of-the-century national character. The wonderful power may have its spiritual use. Above the roar of the streets and the grind of its industrial mechanism may be heard the voice of Christ. He stands and knocks, waiting to be welcomed in, to guide the resistless pressure."—Tribune, Dec. 19, '98.

METHODISTS BAR SURPLICES.

WHITE-SURPLICED boys will march into the First Methodist church Christmas night and perhaps afterward they will take their places regularly in the choir to lead the music if the plans of the pastor, the Rev. J. P. Brushingham, are carried out. It will be an innovation in a Methodist church to have a surpliced choir, and many of the church members are holding up their hands in horror at such a reversal of time-honored customs.

"You're an Episcopalian, that's what you are," one of them said to Dr. Brushingham when he broached the subject to some of his flock.

"It was on account of just such a surpliced choir that John Wesley left the church of England," another remarked.

"No, no, my friend," the pastor answered. "John Wesley had more weighty reasons than a little ritualism for founding the Methodist Church."

Boys from the Forward Movement are to sing at the church Sunday night, and the fact inspired Dr. Brushingham with the idea of having a regular boy's choir. He found the little fellows somewhat shy about appearing before a congregation in their homely habiliments and thought they would feel easier if the church should supply them with a garb that would cover their own clothes.

"I am a firm believer in the efficacy of good music," Dr. Brushingham says, "and so far as I am concerned I have made up my mind that a surpliced choir would be a good thing. It now remains to be seen whether or not I can put the matter in such a light to my congregation that it will be adopted."

SPIRITUALITY VS. HYSTERICIS.

THE Rev. Dubois H. Loux, in preaching on "Spiritual but Not Hysterical Religion" yesterday at Crerar Chapel, concluded a sermon on the text, "I, John, your brother, was in the Spirit," in these words:—

"If 'spirituality' is to become a part of the girdle of truth men are weaving for themselves we must first disentangle it from a skein of ensnarled meanings. What have we made 'spiritual' to most men but a softer name for an abnormal state of consciousness known outside of religion as 'hysteria'? 'The narrow land between sanity and insanity' would be a fair definition equally applicable to both terms in the judgment of many who watch us. Now the presence of the counterfeit is the cause of the suspicion cast upon that which has a right to be current.

"The hysterics of religion must go if the spiritual is to be received of men. A word as to the symptoms. In hysteria proper partial anæsthesia, one sided paralysis, depraved appetite, as for slate, clay, extreme emaciation, love of gaunt exhibition, inordinate desire for sympathy, absent-mindedness, conceit. The similitude of each has crept into the idea of spirituality. Beware of apostleship to what your fellow men see is at once self-righteousness and stagnation. The largest whistle ever heard on the Mississippi belonged to the smallest craft on its waters; in order to blow it the engine had to be stopped."—Tribune.

LITERARY NOTE.

Iowa's naval hero, Osborn W. Deignan, U. S. Navy, helmsman of the Merrimac, will graphically tell the complete story of the sinking of the Merrimac and the capture and imprisonment of the crew at Santiago, in the January Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly, now ten cents, and to be published December 24th. The story will be fully and richly illustrated with authentic portraits of Hobson and all the crew, besides many new drawings specially prepared under Mr. Deignan's personal supervision—thirty-three in all. Other features promised for the January Frank Leslie's are: Bret Harte's new story, "Jack Hamlin's Mediation"; Joaquin Miller's "In a Klondike Cabin"; Thomas R. Dawley's "Campaigning with Gomez"; Joseph C. Groff's "Signaling at Sea."

Echoes from Graceland.

CONDUCTED BY GRACELAND COLLEGE.

THURSDAY last our Fall Term came to an end. Quite a respectable crowd gathered out to enjoy the closing exercises, which lasted for over an hour. An admirable programme was provided by the students' committee, which was much enjoyed by all present, and as the proceedings came to an end the male portion of the students gave utterances to their feeling in the college cry, which made the rafters reëcho.

The Winter Term commences January 3, 1899; Registration 8:30-9:45 a. m., opening exercises 10 a. m. Lectures will recommence on the morning of January 4. We hope to see our roll of students greatly increased. Those who have taken up subscriptions should send along their scholar. Remember that you send along the student as soon as the first installment of the year's amount is forwarded. Those who can meet tuition fees, or can obtain a free studentship, but cannot afford to pay for board should apply to the President, with a full statement of their desires, capabilities, and past work, educational and otherwise. No definite promises can be made, but an effort will be made to secure board in return for help, for as many worthy students as possible.

A brother and his wife wish to obtain the help of a young lady, who could assist in taking care of the home. In return they offer free board, and also a scholarship, entitling to free tuition at Graceland. Thus the only cost, as regards the college education, would be a small amount for books. Send in applications to X. Box 4, Lamoni, Iowa.

The rumor has become fact. The President of the College had $40 placed in his hands a few days ago to help towards the establishment of a Chemical Laboratory. Who will add to it? Remember that if we do not equip a Laboratory, the college will never be able to take up courses in the practical arts of Dyeing, Textile Colors, Adulteration of Foods, and so forth.

The committee has decided that the $25 subscriptions may be paid as follows: January 1, $8.50; April 1, $8.50; September 1, $8.00.

Subscription cards are being sent out. Now, do not wait any longer. Send your name in right away. England, Australia, Pacific Islands, you all can help.

THE CHANGING YEARS.

THE moments are hastening to the coming end of the year, and soon the days of the closing year of the century will be at the disposal of the living—the dead know not the years as they pass—and yet all are tending to the silence of the past.

What of the year now closing at our doors? It has been one of the most eventful, if indeed not the most eventful century since the advent of Jesus. No other has been so full of achievement and progress, advancement and improvement, in the conditions under which man has been living.

The inscrutable ways of the Almighty—the mysterious influences by which the designs of the Divine Mind are carried forward to their accomplishment—all unseen in their working and recognized only when the results have been reached, have marked the century as one of extraordinary import in the affairs of humanity.

The "wise men from the East," found a babe in swaddling clothes in a manger, the babe became a man, the man by virtue of growth and obedience became a God in knowledge, wisdom, and power, and undertook the redemption of the world. Satan, the enemy of man, the adversary of God, wrought evil among those whom love would have sanctified, and power was withdrawn from earth; and then in time God sent an angel to minister to man, and the century now closing was chosen as the period of time when the work of restoration should begin. And while the century was yet young when "Peace on earth; good will to man," became again the shepherds' song, and messengers were chosen to warn the world that "obedience is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams," Satan has hindered, and in his cunning wrecked the hopes of many, filled the minds of many others with fear and doubt, drove some to wickedness and others to apostasy as a consequence, and nearly despoiled the work begun by the angel visitant from the realms of light. But, the memory of God fails not, and though he had once sworn that some should not enter into his rest because they had "changed the ordinance, broken the everlasting covenant," he had reserved to himself a few who would not bow the knee to the modern Baal set up for modern Israel to worship, become entangled with the devices of, stumble and fall before in impotent helplessness, or rebel and make war against. We, of the Reorganized Church chose the latter, and the year just closing has seen a gallant contest; and, thank the Lord of the warfare, the result of the conflict has been in favor of those who refused to pay tribute to Belial. In places the contention has been necessarily sharp. The defenders of the faith have been hard pressed by antagonists who have cared more for the success of their opinions and creeds than for the triumph of the doctrines of Christ; but the brave disciples of the new-old-dispensation have been steadfast, nor have their faces waxed pale.

Persecution has been manifested in some localities. Bro. Tucker in the far South was shot at and hurt and at the present writing Bro. J. C. Clapp, in Tennessee, is the center of a riot of mobocracy. Men threaten him with death if he returns to a locality where he had baptized some, and where others are waiting the moving of the waters. In the far South protection was given by the lawabiding citizens; and some of Bro. J. C. Clapp's assailants have been complained of, but these assailants threaten to punish with death those who may testify against them. Bro. Clapp is in a strait betwixt two. Shall he stay, appear before the jury, testify and preach as is his wont; running the risk of lawless violence; or shall he avail himself of the saying; "When they persecute you in this city, flee ye into another"? Shall he stay, claim the rights of freemen from the administrators of the law and take the consequences even to martyrdom, or seek localities where the people desire the word and will hear? It would seem to be the better to adopt the latter policy; but it is galling to a citizen's pride in the exercise of his rights. It may be set down that if the brethren where Bro. Clapp has labored are put into jeopardy he will share their dangers as a true man ought; and so of the messengers of the cross, in this closing century as in the earlier ones, when to be a Christian was to bid for the faggot and the arena where the wild beasts were.

Two lads, both named Smith, volunteers in the army of occupation, now located at Greenville, South Carolina, have written for books and reading matter to begin a campaign of gospel work as soldiers of the cross as well as soldiers of the United States Army. Will they weaken when professed Christian believers assail their faith? We hope not; but trials must come to all.

All over the field in the United States and Canada (Upper Province) there has been an active service for the year; so of the fields in Australasia, Society Islands, and Hawaii. Bro. Joseph F. Burton is caring for the work nobly in the Isles; and Brn. U. W. Greene and G. J. Waller are making a canvass in Honolulu, and we believe will be successful. Brn. C. A. Butterworth, Gomer Wells, John Kaler, and their native helpers are doing well in Australia. Brn. Williams, Blair, Barmore, Keeler, Harris, and others in the far West; Brn. Chatburn, Wight, Gillen, Roush, Caffall, Duncan, Porter in the Middle West; Brn. Maloney, Macrae, Moore, Nunley, Baggerly, Tucker, Clapp, and Turpen in the South and Southwest; Brn. Briggs, Lake, Griffiths, Kelley, Luff, Moler, Craig, Sheehy, Robley, Roberts, and a host of others in the North and East. Foss and Davison "way down East;" Lambert and Smith and White in the Middle States with their hosts of helpers doing most excellent service everywhere, and doors are opening everywhere. Bro. Pitt, and the local English brethren are still holding the banners in the breeze.

But, how can we enumerate all? Suffice it to write that the year has been replete with effort. Of course there are difficulties still occurring, trials to encounter, disturbances to settle, ruffled feelings to appease; but the retrospect is instructive.

What of the year incoming? Who can tell where and in what part of the field lies the greater good or the greater peril? where the failures or the successes? where the defeats or the victories? If we can but partially estimate the things of the year now passing to the accounting, how shall we prepare to meet the things of the one to come?

We can only look forward in hope. The memory of what the year has brought to us of good or of ill should materially aid in our character building during 1899. And notwithstanding there may have been things unpleasant to contemplate, and harder still to bear, during our life work in 1898, and though there may now be things we do wish were otherwise than as they are; let us look confidently forward and be ready for the present duty, knowing that although the years may change, God changes not, nor do his intention and watchcare for his people flag nor his mercy grow weary; and that sooner or later the right will prevail.

There is much to be done, but as it is not possible for us to do all that is to be done at once, it is only by doing one thing at a time and so well that it need not to be done again, that all will be finally accomplished.

We congratulate the patrons and readers of the HERALD on their careful watchfulness in regard to what is taking place, far and near, and in keeping us informed of what they note.

We request the ministry, traveling and local, to take joint interest with us in the events transpiring, and invite them to give us articles on current topics such as will make the HERALD better than it is. And while it may not be possible to put all into use, we shall use the best as our judgment shall determine and be for all.

The compliments of the season to all. And as we shall celebrate the recurrence of the Savior's natal day, let us remember to give our life-service to the Father in the Son's holy name.

BY LETTER from Sr. Anna Nielsen, of Nebraska City, Nebraska, we are requested to ask that the saints remember Bro. Claud L. Gouldsmith, priest of the branch there, who has taken the prevalent malady now raging in Nebraska City, and by the health officers there held to be smallpox and has been placed in the emergency hospital for isolation and treatment.

Sr. Nielsen notices, also, that while the Mayor of the city has seen fit to order the churches and schools to be closed for fear of the spread of the disease, the saloons are allowed to remain open and are running day and night as usual. Sr. Nielsen is quite indignant at the idea that the Mayor should restrict the liberties of the children and church-going people by closing the churches and the schools, and yet permit the saloons to remain open and those who frequent them be subjected to the danger of the contagion by reason of the clientage of the saloons congregating there.

Sr. Nielsen's criticism on the Mayor's peculiar foresight in closing the churches and schools, leaving the saloons to continue their business with open doors, is a bit of fine sarcasm; and is open to the following measure of comfort. Those who frequent the saloons are not the women and children of community; hence these are not materially in danger of contagion from the congregating there; although it might be that now and then there might be one who was liable to take the germs of disease home with him taken from the habitues of the dram shop. But, again, if it is possible that those assembling at the saloon for the purposes for which saloons are kept, should be thus exposed to the disease against which the Mayor seeks to protect the people by his precaution in closing schools and churches, it is a consoling thought that many of those who thus assemble are not among the noblest and best of society, and as a consequence the loss to community would not be so great if these should be taken by the malady, and death result. The Mayor may reason that those people who attend the churches and the schools are of the better class and should be protected, while those who attend the saloons are of the worse class and are not worthy of protection. Or he may pursue the thought that to close the saloons would consistently require him to close the post office, the groceries, the stores, butcher shops, and other places of business where citizens do assemble in pursuit of their daily business and bread.

WHAT DOES IT MEAN?

THERE seems to be a general looseness and lackness in church discipline that is simply appalling. Card-playing, theater-going, going to horse-racing fairs, having card parties, signing saloon petitions, visiting saloons, drinking, and other sins too numerous to mention, are rapidly increasing among church members without let or hindrance. In many congregations no rebukes are administered. In some not even the slightest corrections from elders or deacons are attempted. The officers of the church, who should set a wholesome example and exercise discipline and correct the wavering ones, are often partakers and at times even leaders in these sins. The voices in many pulpits have become timid. Instead of treating these cancerous sores in the most vigorous manner and using the surgeon's knife when necessary, they are still treating symptoms. It may have been all right to treat symptoms at one time and to administer blood purifiers now, but in many cases the cancers and running sores have appeared, and unless the very best remedies are applied locally the body will suffer death. In some cases blood purifiers have been administered from the pulpit until the patient is so white and his blood has become so thin, he is so sickly and weak that he may peacefully pass away at almost any time. It is card parties instead of prayer meeting, going to theaters and other entertainments instead of attending to the Lord's business, and a general laziness and at ease in Zion instead of devotion to the house of God.

Now brethren, this is a dark picture. If it is a true one, the question will come up in many hearts, What does it mean? To show that it is true, we call your attention to the fact that in a recent district meeting the district evangelist stated that thirty churches in his district had no regular meetings. In a county meeting in another district a minister stated that six churches had gone down in their county. In another district it was said that about fifty churches had either gone down or ceased to meet. This clearly indicates that there is something wrong. Then if you have read the reports of protracted meetings and noticed the results of pastoral work of our preachers in the additions reported, and watched how meager all these results have been, you were compelled to ask yourself, Why so few? Then you have noticed that in some cases the worship of the church is becoming mere entertainment and formality. We sing a lot of "camp-meeting jig"gy songs that would have outraged the spiritual needs of our fathers. We often rush through with the Lord's Supper with little or no thought or preparation for this all-important feast of the children of God.

What does it mean? You say, it simply means that the church has become powerless, the officers weak and careless, and the pulpit hampered with worldliness and sin in the pew. The weak churches will go down and disband and the strong ones will glory in everything but the cross of the Lord Jesus Christ. It simply means that the church must be awakened, proper discipline must be exercised, and the man of God in the pulpit should condemn sin in unmeasured terms. Judgment must begin at the house of God. And if the work of reclaiming and proper discipline does not begin soon many churches will lower themselves with sin and shame. "Every branch in me that beareth not fruit he taketh away. . . If a man abide not in me he is cast forth as a branch, and is withered." John 15:2-6.—Register-Review, Dec. 15, 1898.

The foregoing is from the organ of the Christian Church, published at Kansas City, and may safely be taken as a fair exposition of the condition of the churches, more especially of those who are claiming affiliation with the higher criticism cult or fashion, as it is possibly exact to call it.

The puny efforts of man to change the standard of morality, either in the Church of Christ or out of it, are strikingly rebuked by the showing this writer in the Register-Review makes of the churches. But, Paul's prophetic vision saw just such things which would be in the last days; and we may confidently expect that there will be an increase rather than a decrease in just such departures from the faith. The Bible is being robbed of the fiery denunciation of the fathers against sin, iniquity, and wrongdoing, and "spiritual wickedness in high places," until old-fashioned piety and real positive trust in the infinite triumph of the good in behavior is about weeded out of the church, and sensationalism, pleasure-seeking, giving and taking, are installed as adjuncts to the worship of God in a too open travesty on religion.

It makes the heart sick to think of it, but if it was "necessary that Christ should die, that the Scriptures might be fulfilled," then is it also necessary that such thing should be for the same result.

The saints should see to it that they fall not into the meshes of the same evil condemnation.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

ATTENDANCE AT OTHER CHURCHES.

IS IT right for the members of the church to associate and take part in the prayer and testimony meeting of the different sectarian churches?

A.—The question of right in the inquiry above is one that would depend upon the effect wrought on the individual who did as suggested.

The church has made no attempt to restrict the personal liberties of the church members, as no right has been granted the church to do so; and so long as a member retains his own self-respect, the respect of his family, fellow members and his neighbors, he must be left to exercise his best judgment in regard to matters of the sort mentioned in the question. Personally, we can see no wrong in a person belonging to the church in attending the meetings of other believers, and if opportunity serves and they are permitted to do so, to take part with them in worship, testimony, and preaching, if circumstances favor. We have done so, and would again under similar conditions. But we have never neglected a meeting of our people to consort with others in theirs.

Does a priest have authority to act in the office of teacher or deacon, if he is appointed to act in either of those offices by a branch business meeting?

Yes, decidedly.

"Above, below, in sky and sod,
In leaf and spar, in star and man
Well might the wise Athenian scan
The geometric signs of God,
The measured order of his plan."

THERE is a habit cultivated by many as though it was worthy of the cultivation bestowed, but which indeed is hurtful and pernicious to the last degree. It is the habit of decrying "enthusiasm;" and to many no more slighting epithet, in their estimation, can be applied than to say of an individual he is an enthusiast. An eminent writer has said, "I would give nothing for a young man who did not begin life with an enthusiasm of some kind;" and Beecher wrote, "Don't let us be afraid of enthusiasm. There is oftener a lack of heart than brain. The world is not starving for need of education half as much as for warm, earnest interest of soul to soul."

Two neighboring crones, antique and gray,
Talked together at close of day;
One said, With brow of wrinkled care:—
"Life's cup at first, was sweet and fair;
On our young lips with laughter gay,
Its cream of brimming nectar lay;
But rapid then it grew and stale,
And tiresome as a twice-told tale;
And here, in weary age and pain,
Its bitter dregs alone remain."

The other, with contented eye,
Laid down her work and made reply:—
"Yes, life was bright at morning-tide,
Yet when the foam and sparkle died,
More rich, methought, and purer too,
Its well-concocted essence grew;
E'en now, though low its spirit drains,
And little in the cup remains,
There's sugar at the bottom still,
And we may taste it if we will."

ORIGIN OF THE KINDERGARTEN.—NO. 2.

WOULD you know how the founder of the kindergarten would have you begin the education of your child? Just as the careful husbandman begins the cultivation of his plants: plant the germs of living truth and watch carefully the natural unfolding thereof, providing the conditions which will supply necessary strength and purpose, just as you would place new soil upon the exposed roots of a plant or remove the weeds which seem to choke its life and sap its strength. To this end he would have you ever alert to make use of any power which the child exhibits, turning it into a channel of right before it has expended its force in pursuing the wrong; so you will find him constantly reminding you of the necessity of furnishing outlets for the activity of the very young child, because that is the strongest phase of his nature and the avenue whereby he expresses his inmost self. If your little children are not active, see to it that you arouse them to wholesome activity, giving it definite purpose and a positive nature rather than a negative. For example, suggest that your little three-year-old boy, in his play, be the happy, prancing pony of the barnyard rather than a driver of a team, who uses a whip and harsh discordant tones to hurry his horses along; rest assured that your boy will observe the latter quite soon enough without suggestion. If it be your good fortune to live in the country, you should be at no loss to find a host of innocent activities to be imitated: the frolicsome lamb, the quacking ducks, the flying birds, the swimming fish, all of which the city kindergarten brings into the lives of her children through their imaginations, in obedience to the principle taught by Froebel that the child enters into sympathy with the life of nature, and so truly comprehends its meaning, by participating in the activities of nature's children.

Throughout every department of the true kindergarten you will see this careful direction of the activities of the child, and you can have no better test of the success of a kindergarten than the fact that the children are intelligently busy whenever you see them actively living out some definite experience through which the teacher has led them.

I beg each mother to let her little ones enter into the joy of the fresh new life of the year by having a small garden of their very own. Make the space small so that the body will not be taxed by too much exertion in caring for the plants. Let them do every part of the work; be sure to select for them some hardy variety which will flower early, and insist that the children attend to the plants regularly. Many a mother would be surprised at the happy effects of garden work, if she would but try it with her little weak, nervous child, letting the child lose consciousness of its nerves in the happy abandon of outdoor life. For the babies, have a load of clean sand emptied into a convenient corner of the yard in sight of your window, and send brother, sister, and baby out to burrow, dig, and LIVE.—Selected.

ELDER T. A. HOUGAS, EDITOR.
Henderson, Mills Co., Iowa.

(Send communications for this department to the Editor.
Address minutes and notices of conventions, etc., to "Editors Herald, Lamoni, Iowa.")

A SHORT time ago the General Superintendent visited a school which was at one time a very flourishing one. It was well attended, prompt, systematic in its work, and wore the appearance of a modern and live school. A change in the officers took place, and a consequent change in its general management and condition. The blackboard was not used; the reviews did not connect in any way the past lessons with the present lessons; no mention was ever made of the future work; in fact, each day was one to its self. If a day was missed, the lesson was missed too. As a result of this, a loss of interest in the work was apparent; finally, a loss in attendance was the result.

Such changes in conditions are not always chargeable to the management of the officers, but it very frequently is; or at least it is not often that earnest and persistent work on the part of the superintendent will not prevent any such decay. The difficulty with too many is that it requires a little extra exertion and time to keep the work in the best of order, and they do not seem to care to apply themselves thus hard and constantly. Many plead inability or lack of time, when if it were given its right name it would be nothing less than a greater liking for something else, or a dislike for real work in that line. Too many of us prefer to sit down and read the newspaper or magazine or novel, rather than to take our Bible and quarterly and prepare the work for the coming Sunday.

'Tis pity 'tis true. The officer or teacher who neglects to prepare as they can and should for the work demanded of them is committing a neglect of far more serious nature than they possibly may imagine. They have too low an estimate of what is in their charge, and of the personal responsibility that is theirs. "Think on these things."

During the past year the General Superintendent has had the privilege of visiting several schools, and has observed many things from which we can draw some very good lessons. And from time to time we will recite what we saw here and there, and let you profit by the criticisms. In the above-related instance, we consider it an example of neglect. Shall our schools decline because of our neglect? Do you wish to think that the Sunday school had suffered because you had not done as much and as well as you could have done? I trust not. And now as the new year is starting in, and many new officers will be elected and old ones continued, let us see if in our work for the coming year we cannot eclipse anything that has been done before by way of thorough work and much of it.

The Saints' modest chapel at Mondamin, Iowa, was dedicated November 20, 1898. This is to some extent the result of the Sunday school work that has been carried on there for some years. The work has been one of sacrifice and struggle for the existence of the Sunday school. To Sr. Christie Stuart largely belongs whatever of credit there may be to persons for carrying a work to a successful end. In her testimony given in a meeting at the late reunion at Woodbine, Iowa, she recounted some of the discouraging experiences of their work in keeping the Sunday school alive. But the school has served as a drawing or centralizing force, and has held the church work together when no other services seemed practical or possible. There is yet no organized branch of the church there, but they now have their own house of worship, and have dedicated it to the service of God. That there will ere long be a branch there, there seems no doubt. We are always pleased when we can witness the help that the Sunday school is to the church. But a very large percentage of the benefits accruing to the church from Sunday school work is not so plain as this.

Almost the same story could be told of the Sunday school and church at Carson, Iowa. A small school was started in the house of Sr. Ann Fenn, which in the course of a few months outgrew a private house, and seemed to demand a church in which to meet. The saints set about the work and a neat little chapel was the result. They, too, are without branch organization, but they have their regular services,—Sunday school and social and preaching meetings.

We have reports from other places of very similar circumstances, but it is not necessary to recite them. These are sufficient to point clearly to the fact that we as Sunday school workers can be of service to the cause so precious to us all. We can build up the interests of the church in general by faithfully discharging the responsibility resting upon us in the Sunday school as well as in other places. May the good work move on.

Like the star
That shines afar,
Without haste
And without rest

Let each man wheel with steady sway
'Round the task that rules the day,
And do his best!—Goethe.

MORRIS CHAPEL, Tenn., Dec. 6.

Editors Herald:—I came to this part to assist Bro. Clapp, who I knew needed help; for he was in the midst of persecution and greatly afflicted. He had been ordered to leave the county by an armed mob, and they also threatened his life, and had forbidden him preaching again in the county; but I found him at his post, doing all he could.

I came by way of Foundry Hill, where I preached to a good house on the Lord's Day and also solemnized two marriages. It was quite an undertaking to start on a trip of a hundred and fifty miles with but one dollar in my pocket (a dollar handed me by one of the young men I had made happy) and over bad roads and in bad weather, and the case was made worse by my buggy being so badly broken that it would hardly bear me up.

There was a brother at Foundry Hill who had an extra set of buggy wheels, and if I had had a cow and calf I could have gotten them for the trip, but as I had none I came on with my broken wheels till I got to Bro. Reed's in Hardin County, and here Bro. Reed's son Zenos (who has got the right kind of religion) kindly offered me the use of the wheels off his buggy for the trip, which not only gave evidence that he was one of the Lord's disciples (D. C. 83: 16,) but that the Lord's promises to his ministry are sure.

I find a great many saints who know all about an elder's duty, but comparatively few who seem to know that they also have a duty to perform. They know it is a day of sacrifice and that it is through that principle a triumphant entry into God's kingdom is secured; but the elders are expected to do all the sacrificing, and they will finally enter into and enjoy the fruits of their labors; at least the action of many seem to indicate this.

And when I hear saints praying for the Lord to teach them their duty and at the same time knowing that the work of God is hindered and is languishing for help that they are perfectly able to give, I am very doubtful about the sincerity of those people. There is no excuse for any saint being ignorant of the needs of the work; all know the law of tithes and offerings. If they do not it is because they have not heeded the council of those that the Lord has appointed to instruct them.

I am now traveling with Bro. Clapp in Tennessee. I find him willing to push out as the Lord has directed, if the people do rage and threaten him. I feel sorry for him, having to travel under so many adverse conditions—sickness and poverty; but as this is the way the kingdom is to be built up, I suppose it is all right.

I cannot say that the work is in a very prosperous condition in this country. There is great lack of system on the part of many of the branch officials. Prayer meetings and sacrament meetings have been greatly neglected, and I am of the opinion that this is the cause of coldness and indifference; but we still hope there is a bright future for the South. But I fear that good time will not come until the missionaries learn that their calling is to the world and not the old branches. A missionary who spends his time going from one branch to another as a rule does more harm than good, or at least it has worked that way in this mission, and I hope to see the time when the Twelve will take action on this matter and refuse to appoint anyone to a mission who is not willing to push out into the untried fields as our old veteran pioneers have done. These are a few of my thoughts, but I have taken more space than I intended. Please pardon.

Your brother in bonds,

C. L. SNOW.

EMERSON, Iowa, Dec. 10.

Editors Herald:—Have delighted myself reading Bro. Heman's answer to Roberts' work. As Roberts' arguments (?) vanish away before the withering criticism of "proof," one voluntarily asks, "What in this wide world can successfully oppose the Reorganization?" May God stretch forth his mighty arm of power to bless it.

After the late conference at Carson I decided to hie away to Union County and open up some new places. "Uncle Henry" thought it best for me to stop off at Emerson and labor in and near Keystone branch, on my way. In harmony with his directions I went to Hasting and then walked out to Keystone. Arriving at Emerson about noon I remembered that here were two mothers in Israel, Srs. Graham and Davis, and being hungry invited myself to go there for dinner. To make a long story short, Sr. D. has a household of boarders, and as they were anxious to hear us, I must stop and preach "one night anyway."

As a hint as to how I felt, I will repeat something said at Woodbine, (it makes me feel good to know it was genuine,) that angels would bear up those who would do their duty. One man went to bed at church time the first eve. I believe he heard me, for he has staid up every night since, when possible. I have enjoyed liberty, but "never" has such a flood of light respecting the glorious work accomplished by Jesus Christ and comprehended in his promises to man been granted to me as I have received since coming here. The third evening the contractor, who is building a new schoolhouse in town, took his hat and said to his men, "Let's help this man;" this because I had said we were laboring for humanity, that money cut no figure in the matter.

This morning I visited the new schoolhouse, and going into one room where three men were busy laying the second floor, one said, "We are hurrying to get this room ready for you." "What is that?" I asked. He continued, "We thought we would fix up this room and have you preach in it, so more can hear you." This was the man who went to bed the first night. The school board would not let us use the old one. Last summer it went away in a smoke, but now while the new one is controlled by a man (God bless him if he is wicked), who has a heart, figuratively speaking, "as large as a wash tub," we can occupy publicly while we warn the denizens here. Perhaps I better "put a flea" in the contractor's ear, as there may be trouble when the house is to be accepted.

People may say, "I am not going to send my children to a room that has had 'Mormonism' preached in it." Why, as they sit in it they will say, "In this room Mormonism has been preached," and will begin to wonder what it sounded like, and when they grow up will be so curious that they will go and hear and then they will be ensnared! Don't laugh when you read this, for I have heard of people lacking that much common sense to say this.

A few years ago the brethren held tent meeting in a certain town in Northern Iowa. One lady said to her daughters, as they started down town, "Don't you go by that Mormon tent!" They replied that if they went any other way they would have no sidewalk, but would need to walk "through the wet grass." The former order then was countermanded and this took effect: "Well, then, stuff your handkerchief in your mouth and look the other way"

I feel thankful to God that my parents had enough confidence in their brains not to fear to hear anything.

A few years ago the president of a certain church said he would go and hear his Satanic Majesty preach. He certainly has learned of Jesus, as Christ allowed the Devil to preach to him. Who don't want to march under the leadership of a man so liberal as this? May many years be added to his earthly existence and usefulness. By the example of Jesus every man "that hath ears to hear" ought to listen to everything that comes to us as religious.

Between twenty-five and thirty were out last night, and as the sisters had just sent private invitations, we thought it quite good.

Have felt somewhat discouraged in this mission and queried why I was sent here, but it appears that the tide has turned. The rest of the missionaries seem to have done a great amount of work, but I found it rather difficult to occupy much this past summer.

Hopeful of good,
C. J. CARLSON.

SPRINGFIELD, S. D., Dec. 16.

Editors Herald:—I came here about a month ago; preached Sundays until December 4, when I commenced a series of meetings northeast of town in a schoolhouse. The people turn out well; interest is good; several have manifested their belief in this latter day work; so I find a home with them.

The saints have done extra well by me; they gave me a nice fur coat, for which I am thankful. They shall by no means lose their reward.

Some of the people asked me if I would accept a donation; I told them I would, and to my surprise they announced an oyster supper at the residence of Mr. H. R. Smith, on Friday evening, December 16, proceeds for my benefit. This is by people out of the church, and some belong to other churches.

I have been invited to take part in the opening services at the M. E. church on Christmas eve. This is near where I am holding meetings.

Do not think I am apostatizing; I have never preached the gospel any plainer or with more power than I have here. Truly God is working with the people here. I believe several will obey the truth ere long.

Where is Elder Swenson? I would like to look at him before he goes home.

Sr. Sarah J. Allen is anxious to have J. W. Wight or any other elder to call on her daughter, Mrs. Bell Rollins, Kallispell, Flathead County, Montana, as the Utah Mormons have been holding meetings there and are making a good impression on the people, claiming to be the true followers and successors of the church since Joseph Smith was killed. You will find shelter at the above named place.

Yours for the spread of the gospel,
W. H. WALLING.

WESCOTT, Neb., Dec. 10.

Editors Herald:—I was driven nine miles from Arcada, Nebraska, where I arrived November 10, by Bro. E. W. Knott, and was in time to do justice to an evening meal at his residence, made more relishable in view of a warm reception. Up to date, have held twenty-five meetings in Custer and Valley counties, at five different points, assisted by Bro. Prettyman, to which, in a general way, the attendance has been meager. Though the weather up to November 20 was tolerable, on the afternoon of that day that known as wind began to and did blow furiously, freezingly, and distressingly, without cessation, driving the fine snow through the smallest crevices, until Tuesday, when a lull came, but not sufficiently effective to eliminate the cold. Hence self and Bro. Prettyman traveled fifteen miles in a buggy, without fainting through intense heat, arriving at the objective point at 7:30 p. m. to fill a published appointment.

Nebraskans don't venture out to attend a meeting if an indication of a blizzard is visible, hence preachers are not censurable for failing to fill an appointment for a like cause; yet it behooves elders to be punctual in filling appointments, and not to drift into the foolish practice of waiting long after the appointed time for an augmentation to those arriving on time, though but two or three. Elders should be foremost in promptness as in other godly examples.

I make no attempt to assign a cause for the meager attendance, for then I might possibly be charged with sitting in judgment on men's motives; but this much I affirm, whether in spring, summer, fall, or winter, much aptness is evinced in formulating excuses for nonattendance at branch stated meetings, as well as at special meetings held at times by missionaries in places where comparatively little is known of the work; which is either evincive of ignorance as to the great necessity for coöperation for the consummation of God's purposes through the preaching of the gospel, or a nondisposition to evince the requisite diligence, which a lively and continual coöperation necessitates. Gospel modesty rather suggests a practical evidence of knowledge than a vain boasting never failing to keep up a sharp distinction, in a similar manner, between what we know and what we don't know. A studiousness with a view to a full comprehension of the fact that the success of the body is effected by a gospel imposed diligence of the several integral parts of the body, will prove an effective stimulus in the above godly work.

The everlasting gospel does not lead to or justify sensationalism, undue excitement, or impulsiveness; but to educate every integral part of the body, that they act intelligently and therefore effectively, preventing instead of creating misunderstanding, division, etc. And lest some should so transcend their bounds, the method of adjudication to prevent innovations, etc., is revealed, and it being brought into requisition when a necessity, it is therefore as essential for the wellbeing of the cause as bringing into requisition the method of adoption, when some are waiting for adoption; for were it otherwise, then the revelation of the method of adjudication, to say the least, was useless.

Representatives of Christ's gospel are to reprove the world of sin, and of righteousness, and of judgment, etc., which fact involves a necessity for constant watchfulness and corresponding diligence by branch and district officials, to prevent sin and wrongdoings in the church, that when despite their efforts such things come to the surface, they meet and adjust it as law directs; this being done the efforts of representatives, will prove more effective. But should they be confronted with the fact, that professed Latter Day Saints are guilty of similar wrongs and no efforts made to correct or adjust, the efforts of representatives are neutralized and the impression may obtain that the church is a nursery for crime. But if due efforts are made to reprove and reclaim the erring ones, sober thinkers would be differently impressed. None therefore, ought to be indulged in practices by which the church may be reproached.

This, I think compatible with teaching found in Doctrine and Covenants 104:44, and if the slothful are to be detected and dealt with and the law is reflective of prerogatives, duties, etc., I suppose some one would be authorized, to approach, and deal with the slothful. But we remember to have heard condemnatory remarks of too great haste, etc., and have thought we ought to properly discriminate between that known as undue haste and gospel imposed promptness. The brother whose duty it may be to light and warm the house of worship is not too hasty if having all prepared at the time appointed; nor does the diligent teacher show too great haste if knowing that his labor is needed with a brother or sister in embracing the earliest opportunity to meet the exigency; as the presiding elder is not too hasty in the event of ones breaking the solemnity of a prayer meeting by an unbecoming speech by which some one is arraigned or indirectly accused, by instantly calling such a one to order, though it may be a delicate matter; as he would not be guilty of undue haste if ob-words of Doctrine and Covenants 46:1, when a necessity exists therefor. No, but he would give evidence of a godly zeal in the discharge of a law-imposed duty. But it often requires more goodly courage to do the right than to wink at the wrong.

I remember hearing a loud protest against nepotism, and wondered who or what nepotism might be, so essayed to inform myself, which anyone possessing a sound mind may do; and have since thought, that while the goring of the ox may be all right, it makes some difference whose ox is gored and who does the goring.

It was a little stimulating to learn from a late Herald the effort made to meet the college debt, as it evinces a desire to foster the fair fame of the church; but when it is remembered that forty thousand ten-cent contributions would aggregate four thousand dollars, it is made to appear, despite the liberality some have evinced, that there are many which have done nothing, the cause thereof I pretend not to divine, but believe that if a greater determination was evinced for a more thorough and general coöperation for the general weal of the church, it would be most effective for good. But as it is, it often happens that a few bear the burden. Then I think care should be taken to prevent financial burdens being greater than necessity demands. If Christ was true and perfect in other matters, I do not for a moment believe his caution and advice relative to tower building at all faulty. (Luke 14:28-30.) What Christ might have been from a human standpoint as a financier, I do not know, but think ourselves, as well as the greatest financiers, might have profited by paying more heed to the above instructions.

SOUTH PITTSBURG, Tenn., Dec. 17.

Editors Herald:—I am here and have been for several days. Have preached some in a private house and visited some of the people at their homes and taught them the gospel. As a rule they seem willing to hear at home a great deal more so than away at meetings.

There are some people I find who are afraid for their neighbors to see them going to hear us preach, because we are evil spoken of on account of the Utah Mormons. Many good, honest people believe that all people called Latter Day Saints are Utah Mormons, and so speak evil of us. I am tired of being called a Mormon by those who mean Utah Mormons, as they have acted so badly.

I preached some at Sequachie City to small congregations,—not more than thirty persons at a time,—but they seemed very much interested. I aim to stay here next week, then go to Higdon to see one of my brothers and preach some in his section.

It has been very cold in this section, colder than for several years at this time of the year, though my wife and I have stood it very well so far. We have not been confined to the house one day on account of sickness of any kind since we came into the State.

INDEPENDENCE, Mo., Dec. 8.

Editors Herald:—Old age we trow is anything but flattering to the senses. One may try to appear kittenish and exuberant as children, and to feel that we're enjoying ourselves just as much as the rest of 'em; but to grow old isn't all sunshine, "neither is it a waltz nor a schottische," as the woman said to a man in a shop who, infringing on her right to keep to the right or not as she chose, and who dancing around trying to get out of her way, doffed his beaver and politely inquired, "Madam, is it a waltz or a schottische?" Shopping isn't a man's vocation anyway.

We learn a good deal as we push along. Horse chestnuts are good for the rheumatism, to be worn, one in each pocket, and neuralgia is a stomach trouble. To cure it, find out what kind of herb is good for it and then persist in its use, and nothing else. We haven't learned yet, however, how to get the ptomaines out of the milk.

We grieve to think, when we would like to serve our weary old stomachs, and nourish them in a way befitting the keeping of the Word of Wisdom, that "there's death in the pot" no matter what one eats.

Old age is not without its sunny spots, however. One of our greatest pleasures has ever been reading, and we find that the desire for the instructive sort is still with us, thus enlivening and enriching the hours which otherwise might seem long and tedious.

There is much valuable and entertaining matter on the editorial page of the Herald for which we are greatly indebted to the astute and enterprising editors.

The selections from the leading publications, too, are full of rare and important information which all would do well to carefully read and thank "ye editor" who employs his silent partner so skillfully for our benefit.

On this, our sixty-second birthday, we are looking over a package of letters, some written in "a lady's hand," and dated fifty years ago; others of more recent date written in "a bold round hand" are full of words expressive of friendly and noble sentiment. In the package is a little book presented by our Sunday school teacher in 1841, and judging from its contents couldn't have been appreciated by one so young as its owner. Our books for children have been very much simplified since then. One letter in the package contained an invitation to our relatives to meet at our house in Charlestown on the occasion of the completion of the Bunker Hill Monument.

A little pressed bouquet of wild flowers next claims our attention, and on them we imprint a kiss in remembrance of the hand that gathered them; but the letters signed "mother" "break us all up."

One unique document written to her by "Mrs. Angelique Le Petit Martin" (dated in 1846) on the subject of woman's rights is interesting. We never attempted to decipher it entirely before, and we quote a paragraph or two.

"Of all the movements which now agitate society, woman's rights is by far the most important in magnitude, and in the wonderful influence it is to exercise over the moral character of the human race.

"Man will withdraw from the hideous and unnatural position in which the iniquitous consequences of war have placed him,—that of the tyrant, usurper, and oppressor over woman, where he stands alone among all the males of the creation, a monstrous anomaly.

"He will resume the one assigned to him by Nature,—that of lover, companion, and helpmate of woman, his female, like all the other males are to theirs.

"Woman will cease to be an ignorant, poor, cringing, degraded slave, who looks on man as a capricious tyrant, whom she must deceive and cheat to secure herself from his wrath.

"She will stretch forth with frank confidence her hand to man as the friend provided for her by Nature. She will resume in the social organizations the dignity belonging to the Mother of Mankind; that is, the proxy of the Universal Creator for her race, as all the other females are for theirs.

"To produce these splendid effects we need only the will of woman to obtain her will. We must enlighten her, expose the truth, before her eyes." "Will you help to do it?"

Thus writes this lady who was born in France, was educated in England, and came to this country in order to help open up the way for woman's suffrage.

There are many original ideas expressed almost too plainly for these columns; so we will quote no more of them, but express our thankfulness that the Madam no doubt has long since seen some of her fond hopes realized, in the increased opportunities for woman's enlightenment and advancement.

Although the authority of "the church" is vested in a priesthood, we are proud to know it bestows upon woman all the honor, respect, privilege, and prestige which mortals may desire or deserve. The social condition of woman has certainly been much improved within the last fifty years; and, judging from the past and from what we see around us, woman's hope for and faith in woman will ere long blossom into full fruition.

Many have been self-appointed to bring messages of social peace and equality; but the gospel is the only message that will bring perfect conditions to the home as to the church, and we read, "All those who receive my gospel are sons and daughters in my kingdom."

Our heavenly Father has honored his every daughter in every age, and promised her a divine inheritance. He marks out her course and covenants with her to bestow upon her his greatest gift.

She may consecrate all her God-given powers to his service, and what more exalted labor is there than that?

"O daughter of Zion," we hear the divine voice calling to each woman of his church, "Lift up thy heart and rejoice." "Keep my commandments continually, and a crown of righteousness thou shalt receive!"

The Martyr's honored wife, to whom these words were spoken, sealed her lifework by a testimony of saving help to every true woman of the church and to the exalting of the most worthy man and woman of their times.

Frances E. Willard's love for humanity was limitless say her friends, as exemplified by her motto: "For God and home and every land." She did a great work and merited and received great honor. But as the wife, friend, and helper of the Martyr and as the chief witness in a cause affecting the salvation of thousands of the human family, by the opportunity which she nobly embraced of pleading the cause of injured innocence and bearing aloft the standard of virtue and chastity where it might have been trailed in the dust, Emma Smith was the most honored of God and the most worthy of man's esteem and gratitude. CANTON, Cardiff, Dec. 7.

Editors Herald:—Kindly publish my address in the Herald again, as it is evidently not understood, as follows: My mission address is 14 Council Street, Hulme, Manchester. Papers sent to London should be addressed to 48 Repton Street, Limehouse, London E. If sent to Cardiff, 84 Wyndham Crescent, Canton, Cardiff. Either of these addresses will reach me.

Thanks to our kind friends for sending papers but please do not send them to Burdett Road.

We are still pushing forward in Cardiff and meeting with some success. We had our first Sunday school meeting last Sunday. Hope to organize first Sunday in the month. Can you afford to send us free one dozen Intermediate Quarterlies and one half dozen Primary, to introduce them and help us in getting started? All are feeling well. NEW CASTLE, N. S. W., Nov 19.

Editors Herald:—My present missionary trip up the north coast was interrupted at Tuncurry by a breakage and other defects in my bicycle. I took it to Sydney for repairs on a coasting timber schooner. Three days of seasickness and starvation came very near putting me in bed. Had not been well anyway. Plenty of food on board, but I couldn't partake. I am now on my return, mostly by land.

I found a warm-hearted band of Saints in Sydney whose welcomes I appreciated much. "Fond memory brought the scenes of other days around me."

Elder Kaler and wife were happy over the safe arrival of a beautiful daughter.

I find things moving along as usual in New Castle. One of the Sunday school boys, Master Thompson, is to be baptized to-day.

Since I left here last for the above-mentioned trip, I labored (sixty miles north) in Bulahdelah for one week and baptized one. We have a noble band of some six members at that place with prospect of more. With the help of Sr. Wells, who sings, and a torch for light I got right out on the street, and gave open air addresses. Will return there in the near future. My wife and baby Lena travel by coach or private conveyance, while I go on the bicycle. We will not soon forget the trip from Bulahdelah over rough mountainous hills to Coolongoolook in company with Mr. Ben Burdekin. A storm had felled many trees across our track which we had to chop out of the way; or (as with one large bee tree) find a way around them. The back wheel of my bike picked up a loose branch and broke two spokes, throwing it "out of true."

The doctor informs your humble servant that he must work less, or nervous exhaustion will be the unhappy result. He feels just at present that the invigorating air of his native Rocky Mountain home would be just the thing. GOMER WELLS.

MOLINE, Ill., Dec. 16.

Editors Herald:—Why do the heathen rage and the people imagine vain things? Bro. J. S. Patterson and myself have been trying to get the gospel before the people of Rock Island, Illinois, but have had rather poor success, as the hired shepherds have done all they could against us. They delivered a lecture against us, and held prayer meetings, asking God to crown our efforts with defeat, stating that we should be mobbed and driven out of the town. We have called at Rev. Marquis' house five times to see him, but he is always out. He is the one who lectured against us. Bro. J. W. Peterson will reply to him on the 17th at three p. m.

We closed our meetings on the 11th and began in Moline on the 12th. We have been treated very differently here; the M. E. minister assisted in getting a hall; the papers have represented us quite fairly. I inclose a clipping from the Moline Daily Journal for December 15, which we are very thankful for.

Bro. Patterson has gone home, and Bro. J. W. Peterson is with me now.

LYONS, Wis., Dec. 19.

Editors Herald:—Bro. Muceus and the writer came to this place on the 14th and began meetings that evening in the home of Bro. Charles Davis. The turnout is not large, but interest fair. This town is within four miles of the once headquarters of the noted J. J. Strang, and some of the same stamp still live in the regions round about. Among others is Wingfield Watson. We called on him at his home and he has been out to our meetings twice; but the old Strangite fire still burns within the old man and he would try to ignite everything he would come in contact with; but as his fire is not very combustible far or wide, so the fire is not very disastrous, only the fumes seem to trouble some in this locality; and because of the doings of Strang and others, it is hard to get the people to listen to the gospel or obey the word.

But we still labor on and on, and hope to live to see the day when the old smoke of apostasy will have cleared away, and the light of the gospel shall shine forth clear as the noonday sun.

VERA CRUZ, Mo., Dec. 17.

Editors Herald:—I am now at Vera Cruz. Bro. Henry Sparling, of Springfield, is also here. He and his wife are returning home from Howell County. Bro. H. says the work is not in as prosperous a condition as he would like to see it.

Since the district conference I have preached at Springfield, Rogersville, Ozark, Bruner, John's Mills, and other points; for one I am not tired of the work, neither do I think the journey too long, but I find it necessary to depend on the Lord for daily bread.

I hope the saints in the district will rally to the support of the work by aiding the Bishop's agent in seeing that the financial part of the law is kept. Saints, let us be up and doing while it is called "to-day."

It is to be hoped that our worthy district president, Bro. J. C. Chrestensen, will be found among the branches in the district soon, and that the saints will receive him gladly and heed his counsel.

KIBBIE, Ill., Dec. 17.

Editors Herald:—I can conscientiously say we had a good Thanksgiving entertainment the last Thursday night in November in the Kibbie branch. The saints' church was almost full of intelligent people, who do not attend our meetings and Sunday school, and the best of order prevailed. Young men who can hardly be quiet in meetings sat spellbound for two hours and listened to the writer's five children and Sr. Campbell's six children, and Sr. Ellrod's five, and a few outside of the church took a part; reciting about fifty recitations in a polite and attractive manner. I think there was much prejudice removed and glad tidings carried to other parts of this community.

It has been reported that we were all dead here. I can gladly say there are some here who expect to come forth at the dawn of that millennial morn when Gabriel blows the trumpet; but there are some who hope to live faithful till the Savior appears.

I think having entertainments is a good way to let our light shine to the world. The most interesting recitation was by nine young ladies marching in position to represent the year 1898, at the beginning of the exercises, and they sung a song as they took their places in line representing figures and each one had a good sentence to thank God for.

I would have reported sooner, but on the 28th of November the writer's house and about one hundred and seventy-five dollars worth of its contents were burned to ashes. We got out most of the contents, losing nearly all our provision and underclothing—got nothing out of the cellar or smokehouse and closet, only insurance enough to cover a little over half of the loss and damage, if I am only lucky enough to get it; but I think I will get it all right.

Inclosed find one dollar for the college and Christmas offerings, fifty cents for each cause.

Question: Is this one of the ways that we are to be tried as by fire? If so, I have surely had my part of it; but I don't expect to let anything separate me from the love of God and the church, thanking God it was no worse. It could have been much worse.

True Succession in Church Presidency.

CHAPTER 13.

SINCE concluding the foregoing chapters the following correspondence has come into our possession, and as questions are answered therein which we had vainly attempted to have answered before, we will present it. We give the correspondence in full that these men and their methods may be presented to the reader in their own words.

It appears that Mr. Long was under the impression that Mr. Penrose was Editor of the Deseret News, and so addressed him. The News answered the first two communications without the knowledge of Mr. Penrose. The last letter Mr. Penrose received and answered in person. This will account for the misunderstanding. Mr. Richards is the official Historian of the Utah Church, and Mr. Penrose is connected with the same department, hence their statements on historical points will doubtless be considered official.

The letters read as follows:—

HIGDON, Ala., Nov. 19, 1897.

To the Editor Deseret Evening News, Salt Lake City, Utah;

Dear Sir:—I write you as an investigator, seeking to know the truth. I am a member of the Baptist Church, but I am interested in what is called by your people and others, the latter-day work.

I have kept and cared for elders of the church under the presidency of Wilford Woodruff, commonly called "Brighamites." I have also kept and cared for elders (or an elder) of the church under the presidency of Joseph Smith, of Lamoni, Iowa, commonly called "Josephites" or the "Reorganized Church."

These elders do not agree as to the calling and ordination of Brigham Young as President of the Church after the death of Joseph Smith in 1844. The Josephite elders claim that he never was properly ordained; only elected as President of the Church.

Will you please tell me if this is true or not? If he was ordained, please state by what authority and who officiated, that I may be able to answer the "Josephites" if it be a false claim.

By answering the above and giving me any other information you may feel led to give, you will greatly oblige,

Yours respectfully,
J. O. LONG.

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, Dec. 6, 1897.

J. O. LONG, Esq., Higdon, Ala.;

Dear Sir:—The Mormon Elders have frequently to meet the misrepresentations made by the Josephite Elders, and in order to meet this matter fully without entering into private discussions, Elder B. H. Roberts has written a book called the "Succession in the Presidency," in which he sets forth all the particulars in relation to the succession of President Brigham Young to President Joseph Smith, and we think he has covered the ground very successfully and has left nothing whatever for our opponents, the Josephites, to base their claims on. We forward you to-day a copy of the book, the price of which is 30 cents, and we trust you will kindly remit the amount to us by return mail.

Yours truly,

MR. C. W. PENROSE, Editor Deseret News,

Salt Lake City, Utah.

Dear Sir:—In reply to yours of December 6, 1897:—

After examining the book "Succession in the Presidency," with some care, I yet find no answer to the question in my former letter of inquiry to you; viz.: "Was Brigham Young properly ordained as President of the Church after Joseph Smith's death, and if so, when and by whom?" which you will please answer if you have the data at hand.

As before-stated I am not a "Brighamite" or "Josephite," but a Baptist; but I am interested in this question, hence my importunity.

Enclosed is 30cts. to pay for book and also self-addressed, stamped envelope for your reply to me.

Trusting my importunity will not weary your patience, and hoping to have an early reply, I am,

Yours respectfully,

HIGDON, Ala., May 12, 1898.

MR. C. W. PENROSE, Ed. Deseret News, Salt Lake City.

Dear Sir:—On November 19, 1897, I wrote you asking for information as to who ordained Brigham Young as President of the Latter Day Saint or Mormon Church.

My reasons for writing you, as then stated were: I had been a friend to both the elders of your church and those of the Reorganized Church; had lodged and fed them both; had heard them talk; and as an honest man, wanted to know if the claim made by the "Josephites;" viz.: that Brigham Young was never ordained at all, as President of the Church, was true; and asked you the question, "If he was ordained, where and by whom was it done?" Your answer to my letter was a charge of misrepresentation by you against the "Josephites" and you also sent a work entitled ——— by Elder B. H. Roberts, which you thought "covered all the grounds."

The book I carefully read and found no answer to my question, and wrote you again on the 26th of January, 1898, so informing you, and repeated my question in the following form: "Was Brigham Young properly ordained as President of the Church after Joseph Smith's death, and if so, when and by whom?"

To this letter you was pleased to make no reply, or at least I received none, although I sent you self-addressed stamped envelope.

I write again, hoping you will reply, and, if you do not, I shall be forced to believe the charge of misrepresentation, so far as this point is concerned, should not be lodged against the "Josephites."

As before-stated, I am a Baptist, but I want to know the truth in all things, and as for this point, I thought one letter from you would settle it; but so far you have evaded the matter, and I must say that the impression you have made on me by this evasion is not for the best for your side, as it leads to the conclusion that the claim of the Josephites is true.

May I hear from you soon, please?

Respectfully,
J. O. LONG.

Historian's Office, 60 E. South Temple Street,
SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, May 18, 1898.

J. O. LONG, Esq., Higdon, Ala.

Dear Sir:—I have this moment received over your signature a very imperative and peremptory letter. My first impulse was to treat it as insulting letters should be treated, but on reading it carefully I regard it as the result of some mistakes on your part, and lest it might be a fact that you are honestly seeking for information, I reply to it without ill-feeling. I am not aware that I have ever received a communication from you before. I am not the editor of the Deseret News. I have not sent to you a work entitled "Succession," nor have I received from you any "self-addressed," stamped envelope; nor have I, as you so bluntly charge, "evaded" any matter which you claim to have presented. And further, I am not aware that I am under any obligation to answer letters addressed to me in the spirit of the communication now before me. So much for that.

Now my dear sir, to your question: "Was Brigham Young properly ordained as President of the Church after Joseph Smith's death, and if so, when and by whom?"

In asking that question you are evidently under a misapprehension as to the order of Priesthood and Presidency in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. That arises, doubtless, from an idea that has been entertained by persons in the "Reorganized" Church as to the meaning of the revelation given March 28, 1835, Section 107; 21, 22. D. and C.

"Of necessity there are Presidents or Presiding offices growing out of, or appointed of or from among those who are ordained to the several offices in these two Priesthoods."

"Of the Melchisedek Priesthood, three Presiding High Priests chosen by the body, appointed and ordained to that office, and upheld by the confidence, faith and prayer of the Church, form a quorum of the Presidency of the Church."

Brigham Young at the death of Joseph was the President of the Twelve Apostles, so designated by revelation. Apostles are Presiding High Priests, appointed and ordained to that office. He having been so appointed and ordained was in due time chosen by the body and upheld by the confidence, faith and prayer of the Church, and with two counselors, each of whom was also a Presiding High Priest, having been appointed and ordained to that office, thus became the First Presidency, according to the revelation.

No man is ordained President of the Church. He is ordained to that Priesthood which qualifies him for the position of President when chosen and sustained by the Church. The question might be asked, when was Joseph the Prophet ordained President of the Church? He was ordained an Apostle and thus being a Presiding High Priest was accepted by the Church and sustained in that capacity.

Priesthood is conferred by ordination; Presidency is another thing. It does not come by ordination, using that term in the same sense as in reference to conferring Priesthood, nor does it come by lineage. It is by choice and appointment and the common consent of the Church; but the person so chosen must have been ordained to the proper Priesthood to be qualified for the position. The word "ordained," however, is sometimes used in another sense, as anything that God appoints or orders or ordains, but in the revelation referred to signifies evidently just what I have stated. If I have not made this sufficiently plain, I shall be willing to respond to any courteous inquiry.

Respectfully yours, etc.,

C. W. PENROSE.

EULA P. O., Jackson Co., Ala., Feb. 26, 1898.

MR. F. D. RICHARDS,

Dear Sir:—You will excuse me for writing to you; I want to ask you a question. Your elders that are doing preaching here or have been doing preaching here seem to be nice men, and we have another kind of preachers that come here; they call them Josephites. They say Brigham Young never was ordained to be President of the Church, therefore your elders haven't got any right to preach nor baptize.

Now, if you will answer my questions you will oblige.

Was Brigham Young ordained to be President of the Church? If so, who ordained him—when was he ordained and who did it?

I am asking these questions for information. You will please write and give me the information I so much want. I belong to no church.

There don't seem to be much difference between your elders and the Josephites in the way they believe, only the President of the Church.

I hope to hear from you soon and have an answer to my question.

Respectfully,

JEHU B. CLARK.

EULA P. O., Jackson County, Alabama.

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, March 7, 1898.

JEHU B. CLARK, Eula, Alabama.

My Dear Sir:—There are no dissenting branches of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. There is an organization calling itself "The Reorganized Church," but it is in no sense a branch of this Church. It is composed of persons who follow Joseph Smith, son of the deceased Prophet, and who claim that when the latter died, having been martyred for the word of God and the testimony of Jesus Christ, the Church thereby became disorganized; a palpable absurdity. The Church founded, under God, by Joseph Smith the Prophet has continued without interruption to the present time, with the Apostleship, doctrines, ordinances, gifts and powers as established and revealed from the Lord.

In the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, no one has ever been ordained to be President of the Church. In the beginning the Lord sent Peter, James and John, and they ordained Joseph Smith an Apostle and he was instructed how to organize and build up the Church in this dispensation. When the Prophet and Apostle Joseph Smith was taken from us, Brigham Young, being President of the Twelve Apostles, it devolved upon him to preside over the Church, as the Apostle is the highest office known in the Church of Christ. So also, when the Prophet and Apostle Brigham Young died, John Taylor, being President of the Twelve Apostles, it devolved upon him. In the same manner, when he departed, Wilford Woodruff, being President of the Twelve Apostles, the Presidency devolved upon him. Neither Joseph Smith, Brigham Young, John Taylor nor Wilford Woodruff were ordained Presidents of the Church. It is not according to the order of the Church to ordain Presidents of the Church, for there is no such order of the Priesthood known in the Church. When the Savior departed, the Presiding Apostle Peter took charge, as it was his right of office, and James and John were his counselors, and that is how they seemed to be pillars in the Church, the same as it is now in the true Church. Offices in the Church are conferred by ordination, but offices of position to honor and labor are conferred by calling or appointment, and not by ordination. May the clear light of truth enable you to understand the things of God, and preserve you from being deceived by any other than the true doctrine of Christ.

Success to you in your prayerful search for the way of the Lord.

Yours in the Truth,

F. D. RICHARDS.

We are heartily glad that these men have at last taken a position on this point, and we thank Messrs. Long and Clark for having kindly furnished us this important material.

It will be seen that both Mr. Richards and Mr. Penrose take the position that Presidents are not ordained as such, but chosen from those previously holding office by virtue of which they are eligible to the position chosen, and that they then occupy without further ordination. They apply this rule to the President of the Church, and Mr. Richards affirms that, "In the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, no one has ever been ordained to be President of the Church."

The Reorganization has taken the position (see p. 133) stated in the following:—

Resolved, that as the office of First President of the Church grows out of the authority of the Presiding High Priest in the high priesthood, no person can legally lay claim to the office of First President of the Church, without a previous ordination to the Presidency of the High Priesthood.

So the issue is squarely before us, and we are pleased to meet it.

It will not be necessary for us to enter into an exegesis of the law, which would admit of a difference of opinion. We will simply give a few universally acknowledged historical facts which will clearly show that our learned opponents are wrong. On February 15, 1836, at Kirtland, Ohio, Presidents were chosen to the High Priests, Elders, Priests, Teachers, and Deacons quorums, and each of them duly set apart by ordination. The record is as follows:—

After one hour's adjournment of the Council, Elder Don Carlos Smith was nominated and seconded to be ordained to the High Priesthood, also to officiate as President, to preside over that body in Kirtland. The vote of the respective quorums was called in their order, and passed through the whole house by their unanimous voice.

Elder Alva Beeman was chosen in the same manner to preside over the Elders in Kirtland.

William Cowdery was nominated and seconded to officiate as President over the Priests of the Aaronic Priesthood in Kirtland.

The vote of the Assembly was called, beginning at the Bishop's Council, and passing through the several authorities, until it came to the Presidency of the High Council in Kirtland, and received their sanction, having been carried unanimously, in all the departments below.

Oliver Olney was unanimously elected to preside over the Teachers in Kirtland.

Ira Bond was unanimously chosen to preside over the Deacons in Kirtland.

Elders Don Carlos Smith and Alva Beeman were ordained to the offices to which they had been elected, under the hands of Presidents Joseph Smith, Junior, S. Rigdon, and H. Smith, with many blessings.

Bishop Whitney, of Kirtland, then proceeded to ordain William Cowdery, Oliver Olney, and Ira Bond, and pronounced many blessings upon them according to their offices and standing.—Millennial Star, Vol. 15, pp. 593-594.

At Nauvoo, Illinois, in 1841, George Miller was chosen to succeed Don C. Smith as President of the High Priests Quorum, and of this he says:—

And at the fall conference after the death of Don Carlos Smith, I was called and set apart as President of the Quorum of High Priests, with my counselors Noah Packard and Amasa Lyman.—Church History, Vol. 2, p. 793.

In Millennial Star, Vol. 16, p. 342, we find the following: "Stephen Chase was ordained President of the Elders Quorum in Far West." This was on October 6, 1838.

Again, on March 1, 1835, "Joseph Young and Sylvester Smith were ordained Presidents of the Seventies." (Millennial Star, Vol. 15, p. 230.)

These are but few of the many instances that we could cite to show that in the days of Joseph the Martyr Presidents were set apart by ordination, hence Mr. Penrose is wrong when in speaking of Presidency he says: "It does not come by ordination," etc.

Not only were Presidents ordained in the church in the days of the Martyr, but the Utah Church has adopted the practice. Andrew Jensen in his "Historical Record," Vol. 5, pp. 82, 83, speaks of the ordination of Presidents of Seventies as follows: Jedediah M. Grant, in 1844; Horace S. Eldredge, October, 1854; Jacob Gates, October, 1862; William W. Taylor, 1879; Abraham H. Cannon, October 9, 1882; Seymour B. Young, October 16, 1882; Daniel Fjeldsted, April 28, 1884; and John Morgan, October 7, 1884.

Pages could be filled with instances of ordinations to Presidency, but surely these are sufficient.

By the above we learn that when the quorums were first set in order under Joseph Smith the Seer, that Presidents were set apart by ordination in the quorums of Seventy, High Priests, Elders, Priests, Teachers and Deacons. Even if ordinations to Presidency were unnecessary in the apostolic quorums of First Presidency and Twelve Apostles, our opponents are too extravagant in laying down the rule that Presidency "does not come by ordination." They should have admitted the rule and claimed an exception.

Having disposed of their interpretation of the rule, it might be more in keeping with order to rest here and await the filing of their claim of exception; but as this is our closing argument, we will meet their position by showing that it is neither the rule nor the exception.

Mr. Richards makes the direct claim (to which Mr. Penrose by inference agrees) that, "In the beginning the Lord sent Peter, James, and John and they ordained Joseph Smith an Apostle, and he was instructed how to organize and build up the church in this dispensation."

They then argue that by virtue of the apostleship then conferred, (not later than September, 1830, D. C. 26: 3,) he was President of the Church. Both of these gentlemen either ignorantly or dishonestly ignore the fact that notwithstanding Joseph Smith had been an apostle since 1830, he did, on January 25, 1832, receive an additional ordination, at Amherst, Ohio, to the office of President of the High Priesthood, (see this book, p. 143,) and that on April 26, 1832, he was received by the church in Missouri in that capacity.

It is only necessary here to cite the language of the law to show that this was tantamount to an ordination as President of the Church:—

And again, the duty of the president of the office of the high priesthood is to preside over the whole church, and to be like unto Moses. Behold, here is wisdom, yea, to be a seer, a revealer, a translator, and a prophet; having all the gifts of God which he bestows upon the head of the church.—Doc. and Cov. 104: 42.

The assertion, then, of Mr. Richards, that "Neither Joseph Smith, Brigham Young, John Taylor, nor Wilford Woodruff, were ordained Presidents of the Church," in so far as it refers to Joseph Smith, is false. The position of the Reorganization as set forth in the above resolution is in harmony with both law and precedent. The ordination of Joseph, the son of the Martyr, to the office of President of the High Priesthood, was exactly in harmony with the ordination of his illustrious father whom he succeeds. Strange that the Utah authorities question the validity of this ordination, and yet defend the claims of Brigham Young and his successors in office, while they concede that they nor either of them had an ordination of any kind to the office of President of the Church; and Mr. Richards goes so far as to say, "It is not according to the order of the church to ordain Presidents of the church, for there is no such order of the Priesthood known in the church." This is unquestionably true as regards that church represented by Mr. Richards. But this office is provided for in the law given to the church organized by Joseph Smith and others in 1830. The Prophet and his colleagues were in practice in harmony with that law; and the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints as the lawful continuation of the church organized in 1830 accepts that law and practically carries it into effect.

If, as Mr. Richards states, Brigham Young was not ordained President of the Church, then the contention of the "Josephites," as set forth in Mr. Long's letter, is sustained, and the charge of misrepresentation made by the Deseret News should be retracted. These men are in desperate straits and their struggles excite in us a mingled feeling of pity and contempt. The floundering of Mr. Penrose is especially pitiable. After quoting the law and seeking to construe it to mean what it does not say, he plunges into a self-contradictory tangle from which he can never disengage himself. He says: "Apostles are Presiding High Priests, appointed and ordained to that office." Again, he says of Joseph Smith: "He was ordained an Apostle and thus being a Presiding High Priest was accepted by the church and sustained in that capacity." After thus affirming that Joseph Smith was a Presiding High Priest by virtue of an ordination, he immediately flops and says Presidency "does not come by ordination." The truth is that these men realize that neither Messrs. Young, Taylor, Woodruff, nor Snow ever had an ordination to the office of President of the High Priesthood; which office, according to law, entitles a man to the right to preside over the whole church (and virtually such ordination makes him the President); and hence they conclude that Presidency "does not come by ordination;" and yet they must find some plausible excuse for Young et al. assuming to preside, and so they say they were ordained Presiding High Priests. The only consistent way out of this dilemma is to resolve that, Whereas, Joseph Smith, though an apostle, was ordained to the office of President of the High Priesthood; therefore, Brigham Young et al., though apostles, had no right to assume to preside over the whole church without such ordination.

When these gentlemen can establish their position that an apostle can preside over the church by virtue of his ordination as a Presiding High Priest, and at the same time sustain their contention that Presidency "does not come by ordination," we would be pleased to hear from them again.

We sincerely thank Mr. Richards for his frank acknowledgement that the Reorganization "is in no sense a branch of this [their] Church;" and congratulate Messrs. Long and Clark on their success in drawing out of these men a statement of their position where others have failed.

Again, we conclude by presenting to the reader, with renewed confidence, the Reorganized Church as the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Its President is of the lineage pointed out in the revelations of God as entitled to that position. He was appointed of God through his father according to the direction given in the revelations. He was called of God by revelation according to the law which says:—

The president of the church, who is also the president of the council, is appointed by revelation, and acknowledged, in his administration, by the voice of the church.—D. C. 99: 6.

He was regularly ordained to the office of President of the High Priesthood, as was his father before him, by virtue of which he is entitled "to preside over the whole church, and to be like unto Moses." Not one of these requisites can be claimed by Lorenzo Snow, nor his predecessors, Elders Woodruff, Taylor, and Young.

We exhort and admonish Latter Day Israel everywhere to hear and heed the inspired message of this servant of God that was addressed to them so many years ago (see pp. 138, 139), and remember that "he that heareth him that is sent, heareth the Lord who sent him."

HERALD, HOPE, ENSIGN, AUTUMN LEAVES, AND BOOKS FOR THE BRITISH ISLES.

To the saints and patrons in Great Britain:—Our very worthy and devoted agent and brother, Thomas Taylor, of Birmingham, some time ago notified us that by reason of his advanced age and infirmities he would be compelled to resign the agency for church publications for the above-named territory, such resignation to take effect January 1, 1899. We have since sought to fill the position but have not as yet found any party who could give the time to it, and have therefore arranged to supply the church publications upon the plan had in America, by appointing an agent in each branch who will transact the business for the office with the people.

By turning to the late Herald catalogue you will notice on first page, special instructions touching the appointment of these agents. Please read carefully.

1. We ask the saints in the different branches of England, Wales, and Scotland to select one of their number whom they are satisfied can and will attend to the business, and forward to this office his name and address at once. Please do not delay as we wish the address so as to forward supplies by the first of the year.

2. We also ask each person so selected to forward to us at once a list of all those who wish the church papers and the number; also books and tracts.

3. When practicable the cash should accompany the subscription. The prices of the church publications have been reduced so as to come within the reach of all if they will make an effort; they are placed at as low figures as it is possible to publish for cash until subscription lists are enlarged.

It has been charged that this payment in advance is only in the interest of the rich. A little thought will, however, convince you that it is not. To return to the old system of credit, it must not be forgotten that those who are well able to pay, take advantage of this as well as the poorer classes; and this deprives the office of the use of the money and we must borrow to run on, and pay interest; nor can the money always be had. If the money is paid in advance, we can use it in purchasing supplies, and discount all bills at from five to ten per cent in ten to thirty days, thus saving much to the office during the year. To begin the credit system ad libitum, would lose heavily to the office each year, and we would be compelled, for safety of the business, to raise upon the price of the publications instead of lessening prices.

There is no power in this office by which we may pass judgment upon individuals and say to one, you are able and must pay in advance, and to another, you need not do so. All too, both rich and poor, would resent such an act. We are then to be governed by general rules applicable to all, and every reasonable mind must see that if the poor man is to pay for his reading at all, the cheaper he gets it the better it is for him. All that we need, to make a successful work of this, is to make the effort at once, and not let it drag to the end of the year, when it is often found that we are not as well prepared to raise the means as we were at the beginning. In cases of great misfortune or sickness, special application can be made to the Board of Publication and justice had.

In the interest of all we urge promptness in payment; it is better for the work, better for the people; we form better business habits thereby, and are educated upon right lines, so that if we are poor, we need not remain so; and if well to do, or rich, we shall readily perform our work so as to advance the cause of Christ as we should.

We congratulate the saints and friends upon evidences of better prospects for the cause of truth, and all who sacrifice and labor therefor.

In the hope of Christ, we are your collaborators in his gospel,

From the following districts reports are past due, as given:—

Reports have not been received from Northern California since those for March, 1897, nor from Central California since April, 1897, nor from Southern Indiana and Southern Missouri since September, 1897.

For 1898 they are now due as follows:—

Choctaw and Northeastern Texas for July and October; Kewanee for June and September; Northern Minnesota for June and October; Oklahoma for August and November; Independence and New York for September; Spring River, Northern Michigan, Montana, and Southern Nebraska for October; Florida, Clinton (Missouri), Southwestern Texas, and Northern Wisconsin for November. From all these I would like the branch reports.

Also would like to receive full reports from all branches not reporting to any districts, such as those in Oregon, Washington, Western Nebraska, or elsewhere.

By this notice I simply call attention to the situation, so that if any reports have been mailed and not reached me it may be here known and steps be taken to correct affairs by other reports.

Your brother in the gospel,

H. A. STEBBINS,

General Church Recorder.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK.

HISTORY OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS. (Volumes 1 and 2 now ready.) Provided for by action of General Conference of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Written and compiled by President Joseph Smith and Apostle Heman C. Smith. Invaluable as a correct historical narrative, as a means of conversion to truth, and as a defensive weapon in meeting old and new objections urged against the latter-day work. It contains important documents connected with the establishment, growth, and internal and external affairs and progress of the church. The revelations given in this dispensation are inserted, in connection with accounts of the circumstances under which they were given. Biographical sketches, illustrations, complete indexes, sidenotes for ready reference, etc., are some of the features of the work. Volume 1 begins with the birth of Joseph Smith, the Prophet and Seer, in 1805, and narrates the circumstances of his calling and ministry, the rise of the church in 1830, and until the close of the year 1835. Volume 2 continues the history up to June 27, 1844, —to the assassination of Joseph and Hyrum Smith.
