the background,' says the Presbyterian Review 'and specious allurements spread out before the people. Many have been caught by the wiles of the missionaries, and meetings have been placed on a permanent basis. It is said that the people have been neglected by the regular churches, and as a result have become an easy prey to the Mormon propagandists. The Latter Day Saints are working mostly in western and northern Ontario, and it is said that within twelve months 100,000 or more will avow Mormonism in Ontario. The Presbyterians of Bruce, Markland, Sargeen, and other places are discussing means to stamp out the new sect.'

"One hundred thousand or more" within a twelvemonth! I hope it is our boys who are thus stirring the natives. But it seems too good to be true. The editor of the Presbyterian Review surely has not a lofty estimation of the intelligence of the people of Ontario in conceding that so many would ally themselves with such a "delusion." But possibly the Lord has "predestinated" these '100,000 more' to thus be deluded (?). If so, what is the use of all this stir? It's bound to occur, or Presbyterianism is wrong. Yes; the "people have been neglected by the regular churches," and having been fed on husks so long, they are ready to take up with that which promises better returns for money and time invested. But what would the good Presbyterian editor have the people do to "stamp out the new sect"? Shall they go back to the rack, the faggot, and the flame? Shall it be by brute force or facts? Shall it be by truth or prowess? By honor or subtlety? It sounds quite suggestive for a Presbyterian editor to talk of "stamping out the new sect!"

POLLOCK, Mo., March 26.

Editors Herald:—We are still in the fight and are doing all we can to forward the work in this place. We are building a church house in Pollock, twenty-eight by forty, with a bay window ten feet wide and six feet back, for the stand, which will make plenty of room. We have it ready to put up the rafters as soon as they are brought from the mill, which will be done to-day. Brn. Burch and Haywood are the carpenters, and others of our number assist in the work. The heathen rage and the people imagine vain things; many falsehoods and ridiculous stories are afloat. Some rumors say they are not going to let us finish the church, and some are trying to sell out and leave the place.

I sought to correct a false statement that was afloat about Bro. Turpen. It was stated by some member of the Campbellites that Bro. Turpen had been personally challenged by one of their ministers, G. B. Hancock, and had refused to meet him. Bro. Turpen got tired of their false reports, and wrote up church propositions for them to accept and they were published in the Milan Republican. Then one J. T. Wilburn wrote a reply to it, stating that Elder Turpen had been challenged by G. B. Hancock and he did it to dodge the issue. This was written after Bro. Turpen left here; but before he left, there was a written proposition brought to a schoolhouse, when Bro. Turpen was holding meeting, and presented as G. B. Hancock's proposition, which he would affirm that the revelation of the will of God made known through Jesus Christ and recorded in the New Testament is sufficient in order to the glory of God and the salvation of man. As this kind of a proposition was nothing but an insult to any Bible believer, it was passed by, and they continued to make all kinds of statements through the county paper. I saw Mr. Milburn and asked him who had told him that Bro. Turpen had been personally challenged by G. B. Hancock; but he failed to tell me who told him. I told him that it was false; but there were written propositions brought to the Anspach schoolhouse by one Mr. Williamson. Then I wrote to the Republican that the statement that had been published about a personal challenge by G. B. Hancock was not true.

I then was misrepresented and accused of publishing that that was false; and then the Republican refused to publish anything more, so I could not reply to their false statements. I had learned by a man at Pollock that this man Williamson and his fellow-workers of iniquity had manufactured those propositions, for he was eye witness to their trickery, and then they presented them as G. B. Hancock's propositions.

I suppose the Campbellites will say that this man has told a false story about them, and while Mr. Wilburn was speaking against Bro. Turpen and the church, and how elder Kincade with whom Bro. Turpen held the debate at Holliday, had showed up Joseph Smith and his conduct while building his church. And the very next issue of the paper had published the arrest of Elder D. L. Kincade as a blackleg for assisting his pretended brother, A. A. Kincade, in selling green goods, or counterfeit money. They are taken to St. Joseph for trial. So we are not afraid of being swallowed by Rev. D. L. Kincade, the Mormon eater.

Yours in the faith,

J. F. PETRE.

WELDON, Ohio, April 1.

Editors Herald:—Since last writing I have been quite active. In looking at my record for the month of March I see that I have preached thirty-three times, held eleven other meetings, and baptized six.

March 16 I baptized a lady at this place who had desired to come into the church for some time, but her husband had forbidden her; but on the evening of the 15th he gave his consent, and she was baptized early on the morning of the 16th, after which I started to the Highland branch, and labored for a time.

I went to Lagrange on Friday, the 25th, and began meeting the same night. Had large crowds and generally good attention. This is where Bro. Griffiths labored about a month ago and baptized six. The saints here, and those outside generally, speak well of Bro. Griffiths. I took up my abode with our beloved brother, J. C. Smith, where the Apostle domiciled while he held forth here. Bro. Smith and family do all they can to make the preacher comfortable, and so also do all the saints. They are all willing to share with the missionary, and as one good brother who was recently baptized expressed himself, "I am willing, as long as I have one mouthful, to give them half of it," and that spirit seems to characterize all there. While there I ordained Bro. Hiram K. Smith to the office of priest, who, if faithful and careful, will be useful. There is a young and intelligent element coming up in the church there that will soon be amply able to carry on the work at that place if they remain firm. While at Lagrange I baptized five, four of them heads of families. Peace and unity prevail among the saints of Lagrange, and there is quite an interest manifest outside, and I think in time a number of others will be obedient to the faith. The Lagrange saints are very anxious to have our next fall conference there.

I go home to-day, and expect to labor this month for my family. As the time of General Conference draws near I feel a drawing that way, but duty directs me to abide at home. May the Lord bless those that may attend the conference. Peace to the Israel of God.

Hopefully, your brother and colaborer,

JAMES MOLER.

COALGATE, Ind. Ter., March 28.

Editors Herald:—This town was visited by a cyclone on Saturday night; several houses were blown down and smashed to pieces. One family badly hurt; one died I hear. I was in the severest part of the storm, at the home of Bro. J. H. Butler; but I came out unharmed. The house I was in was left; but several all around us were wrecked. The weather has been against me ever since I begun meetings, but I am satisfied with the results. Some talk of being baptized before I leave. I hear considerable talk about the coming debate between Dr. W. B. Toney, of Standley, Indian Territory, and J. W. Chism, of Texas, which will come off in June, or is expected then. I will leave for General Conference in company with Bro. McClain on Friday.

WRAYVILLE, Ill., March 27.

Editors Herald:—I have just come from Tennessee and settled down in Illinois again, six miles from Muscatine, Iowa. The change has given us all dreadful colds, and one of my little girls is quite sick; but I trust the Lord will heal her and bless us all with health and a portion of his Spirit, that I may live nearer to him. I trust I will be able to meet with the saints this summer. If there are any near me, they will find me about a quarter of a mile from Wrayville post office. I would be glad to meet with the saints. I ask the prayers of all the saints in behalf of myself and family; and I trust they will send me some more Heralds to read. I live just across the road from a German church. I wish it was a Latter Day Saints' church.

Your sister in the faith,

MRS. L. M. HINKLEY

CANTON, Ill., March 27.

Editors Herald:—As the days, months, and years of our lives are passing away, we are often brought in contact with sorrows of different kinds, as well as gladness. Some five months ago Elder T. J. Sheldon, one of God's able defenders of the truth, came as it were as a Shepherd to care for a flock of weak brothers and sisters, who it seemed had wandered away more or less from the fold, not altogether intentionally, but mostly for the lack of faith and assurance; but as our young Bro. Sheldon believes in losing no time, he soon got the loved ones to thinking of these words:—

"O for a faith that will not shrink,
Though pressed by every foe;
That will not tremble on the brink
Of any earthly woe!"

So our brother has worked diligently, and has accomplished much good. Some two months ago he took a tour out west, and in the meantime a dear companion was bound to him by the ties of nature. Since returning, our young brother and sister have worked together with great success towards the upbuilding of God's kingdom. Four have been buried beneath the clear waters by our brother since his sojourn with us.

About one week ago we bade farewell to our brother and sister. It was hard to part with them, but if we do not meet again in this life, we hope to meet in the life beyond, where partings will be no more. And O let us give a comforting word to the young. It's the young generation that is growing and developing into manhood and womanhood that will sooner or later fill the vacancies of the older generation that soon will take their rest. I think these words are so grand:—

"Speak gently to the young,
For they will have enough to bear;
Pass through this life as best they may,
'Tis full of anxious care."

Dear readers, do not think because I speak of the young in this manner I have no regard for the aged. I often think what could we young do for instructions, if it were not for the older ones. Of course now we are young, but if we live we will some day be old as well as they. I will close saying to the young brothers and sisters, and I take it to myself as well, always respect old age. "God bless you all." As ever a sister in the one faith,

IDA L. JONES.

MACON, Mo., March 27.

Editors Herald:—I notice in the minutes of Far West conference of March 5, 6, 1898, a resolution requesting the Twelve to send Bro. T. W. Chatburn to that district. While I will not join in a request to the Twelve, I will most sincerely petition the Twelve that if they deem it wise to grant the request, that they also give that gospel hero our northeast district also. There has been so little work done in this district, it would be easy enough to find plenty for Bro. Chatburn and a good helper right here. But as I know the harvest is great, and am sorry to say the laborers few, I would be willing to share with the Far West district. While this matter was not considered in our last conference, I feel certain than I can vouch that this is the desire of all the good saints throughout this district. May God direct in all such matters, and that we may be humble and submissive to his will is my prayer.

Your brother in Christ,
F. PALFREY.

STEWARTSVILLE, Mo., March 27.

Editors Herald:—If the following is worthy of consideration will you please do with it as you deem best. I am ready and anxious to see some of the worthy poor get homes in the regions round about, and a united effort by the church would soon get homes for many.

My idea is to form or organize a stock company, called by whatever name they may work; and let the membership fee be two dollars, then pay one dollar per month into the fund. The object of this is to buy land which shall be given to the worthy poor saints, of forty acres each; they to have it as their homes, the only considerations that they remain faithful members of the church and pay to the Bishopric's hands tithing; that is, the tenth of the valuation of the forty acres, and the tenth of the increase thereafter, they to have two years time to pay the tenth.

No family shall have the homestead, unless they can be recommended by the branch or district where they reside; if not members of the district they can be recommended by the missionary in charge.

Now, suppose we can get five thousand members in the church; that would bring into the treasury in twelve months fourteen dollars each, or seventy thousand dollars a year. With that we could buy homes of forty acres each for sixty families.

Much might be said, but I leave it with an earnest desire that some measure be adopted to make a beginning. With a united effort we could in a short time have many of the saints on those homes, and they could help the church as ever.

I hope you will have a profitable conference.
WILLIAM LEWIS.

WASHBURN, W. Va., Feb. 22.

Editors Herald:—Our precious paper lifts me up and gives me courage to hold fast. O may its pages go forth to all nations of the earth, bearing the blessed news of the everlasting gospel to the children of men. The saints here have been permitted to enjoy the blessings and privileges of the gospel. We have been visited in our branch by Bro. G. H. Godby for a week, and Bro. J. L. Goodrich for two weeks; they are good speakers, full of love and zeal for the latter-day work; a good congregation turned out to hear them, paying good attention and courteous treatment. Some are interested and investigating.

As a result three persons became convinced of the truth and were baptized, while there are several who are near the door. We believe that good was done, and look forward to the time when they can come and stay as long as the interest lasts, preaching and teaching the full gospel of Christ and gathering out the honest in heart who desire the truth. Saints, let us do all we can for this glorious work, remembering that when a day is spent we cannot call it back, but will have to meet the works of it in that day when we stand before the great Judge, whether our works have been good or bad. Let us see how much we can do for the Master, not how little. Many souls would be glad to receive this work if they knew what it was.

I have been in this latter-day work two years, and I cannot be sorry for it, although we are persecuted on every hand; but I don't care; we have the gospel and plan of salvation to the human race, and we defy the world to overthrow it, for I believe God is in this work, and I know that he has all power both in heaven and on earth. To God be all the praise, and his name glorified for evermore, for the revelation of such a glorious plan through which all may be saved if faithful.

Our branch is thriving nicely under the care of Bro. J. H. Huffman. He is always full of the Spirit, and willing and ready at any time to do all he can for this latter-day work. Two years ago there were but eight in this branch; now we number twenty-two. We pray for our heavenly Father to abundantly bless the few saints in this branch, and earnestly pray that the time will come when we can build a church, and sincerely believe our prayers will be fully realized in the Lord's due time. I rejoice indeed in this glorious light of the latter-day gospel; and may God give me strength to continue faithful.

I pray and ask the interest in the prayers of the saints, that I may be guided by the Lord in bringing up my little ones. I feel the responsibility of training their little minds, that when they reach the right age they will see the way and go in. Will you please remember me at the throne of grace, that I may have grace given me to overcome the temptations and trials of life, and see my children faithful workers in the cause of Christ. He is able to grant this request. Trusting that God will bless me in my efforts for good. May the saints strive as never before to live by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God, and that many may be added to this branch, and that I may always watch and pray.

Your sister in the faith,
MRS. ELLA WILSON.

MILO, Iowa, March 25.

Editors Herald:—Two years ago to-day I was baptized into the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints by Elder W. H. Kephart, and I feel to thank God that I accepted the gospel message when I did; I only wish I had accepted it sooner. I live in an isolated place; have only been to preaching services twice since I joined the church; but I am strong in the faith. Last Sunday I had the pleasure of seeing two of my neighbors, Bro. and Sr. Burgess, led into the waters of baptism by Bro. Kephart. I do think he is a true servant of God, and I hope he will be sent here again next conference year. The saints here are few in number, but I think they are all striving to do the Master's will. I try to be prayerful and humble, for I think the more humble we are the more blessings we will receive from on high.

Ever praying for the welfare of Zion,
Your sister in Christ,
SUSAN J. TURNER.

GREEK JOTTINGS.

NOT a few of our ecclesiastical antagonists, when routed at all points on the standard of the 1611 translation of the Bible, fall back upon their knowledge (?) of the original text.

Such is the course of those who argue that the New Testament scriptures do not warrant any ordained ministry, that all believers have a right to administer in the ordinances of the gospel, and that the consecration by the laying on of hands of a select class of persons, who alone have the right to perform the said administration, is heretical. To this end, they assert that the verbs translated "ordain" in the King James' Version, ought to be rendered "appoint," since they imply a total absence of all ceremonial consecration or change of condition. They point in triumph to the Revised Version of 1881, in which the word "appoint" is frequently substituted for "ordain," assuming gratuitously that the use of the word "appoint" presupposes of a necessity the negative meaning pointed out above.

The precise reasons why the translators of the 1881 version substituted the word "appoint" for "ordain," we cannot state; and while in some cases the alteration is an improvement, in others it seems to us the reverse, allowing all due respect to the masterly talent engaged on the revision. Accordingly we append a few notes, which, though not welded together in the form of a complete argument, will help to justify our objection.

The word "ordain" is used in many connections in the King James' Translation, but for our purpose we can dismiss all references except those that can be taken as relating in any way to ministerial selection, thus leaving for our consideration the following verses: Mark 3:14, John 15:16, Acts 14:23, Titus 1:5, 1 Timothy 2:7, Hebrews 5:1. Let us inquire whether these passages really imply an absence of all change in condition, an absence of all ceremonial inauguration into ministerial office.

In the first reference the text runs, "Kai epoieese doodeka hina oosi met'uatou," which the Revised Version translates, "And he appointed twelve, that they might be with him." If we consider "appoint" to be no more than equivalent to "name" or "nominate," then it is misleading to so translate the verb "epoieese," which signifies literally "he made, produced, shaped," etc., and conveys the idea of an organic change of condition and use being wrought. How the change was achieved is not stated, but it is sufficiently clear that the negative sense urged by the party of anti-ordination is wanting in this verse. The phrasing of Mark was selected so as to convey the impression that Christ wrought an actual change in the condition of the twelve disciples, endowing them with new rights, "in order that [hina] they might be with him, and in order that he might send them forth to preach and to have AUTHORITY to cast out devils."

Again the same word "appoint" is used in translating John 15:16—"Kai etheka humas, hina humeis hupageete kai karpon phereete."—"(Ye did not choose me but I chose you) and appointed you that [lit. in order that] ye should go and bear fruit" (Revised Translation), as also in 1 Timothy 2:7—"Eis ho etetheen egoo keerux kai apostolos"—"whereunto I was appointed a preacher and an apostle." (Revised Translation.) "Etheke" and "etetheen" are parts of the verb "titheemi," which means to place, put, set, and, like the Latin "ponere," denotes, in addition to a change in condition of the object, the further sense of placing one thing down upon another, and this interpretation is supported by the fact that the same verb is used when referring to the placing down of the ballot upon the table, of money upon the banker's bench, of arms upon the ground. So in Hebrews 5:1 we read "Huper anthroopoon kothistatai to pros ton Theon"—"For every high priest being taken from among men is appointed for men in things pertaining to God" (Revised Translation), and in Titus 1:5—"Kai katasteesees kata polin presbuterous hoos egos soi dietaxameen"—"and appoint elders in every city, as I gave thee charge" (Revised Translation), in both of which passages a word—kithisteemi (to set down or put down, to bring into a certain state)—is used, which not only supposes change of condition, but also emphasizes, by prefixing kata (down, down upon), the idea of placing one thing upon another, as already observed in the case of titheemi.

Now if the writers of the above epistles and gospels had wished to convey no suggestion of the placing of hands down upon the head of the selected candidate for ministerial office, or that those performing ministerial functions had merely to be appointed; i. e., nominated, etc., or that such a nomination effected no change in the condition and rights of the one concerned, why did they trouble to select words conveying these very ideas? Why did they not, as reasonable men would surely have done, choose other words, in common use, which would have exactly conveyed the required meaning and left no chance of misinterpretation? If we grant the sacred writers the possession of intelligence and common sense, we must conclude that they used these words because their meanings harmonized with the method of ministerial selection; and so when we read in Romans 13:1, "Let every soul be subject unto the higher powers. For there is no power but of God: the powers that be are ordained of God," where of course it is evident that ministerial ordination is not referred to, we discover that the apostle employs a phrase different from those used above: tetagemnoi esin, exactly expressing the word "appoint" in the limited connotation allowed it by our opponents; namely, to simply place or post in a position.

The passages just considered form their strongest positions, yet how weak and miserable a protection is afforded them in reality; and when we come to consider the words of Luke in Acts 14:23, the validity of our deductions is strengthened and established, and their last shelter is utterly demolished. "Cheirotonesantes de autois presbuterous kat'ekkleesion." "And when they had ordained them elders in every city."

In order that the mode of procedure of Paul and Barnabas might be clearly marked, the chronicler uses the verb cheirotoneoo (Eng. ordain) which is derived from cheir and teinoo, and means, literally, to stretch out the hands. No single word in the Greek language could be found more illustrative of the laying on of hands.

Our very brief investigation has ascertained for us that, in referring to ministerial selection, the New Testament writers employ such words as signify either organic change of condition or superposition or both, whilst in other instances—translated "ordain" in 1611 version—they take strict care to use words which cannot convey such meaning. From which facts, combined with the striking phraseology of Acts 14:23, we conclude by a simple logical process that—

1. The ministry of New Testament times was distinct from the laity, inasmuch as selection to its ranks caused an organic change in condition, whereby rights and prerogatives were secured which the laity could not exercise.

2. This change from laity into ministry was accompanied by the superposition of hands, or ordination, as popularly termed. BRITANNICUS.

THE GOSPEL AS IT WAS, IS, AND MUST EVER BE.

THE diagram represents a ladder reaching from earth to heaven.

Each round of the ladder represents a principle of the doctrine of Christ. (See Hebrews 6: 1, 2.) These foundation or fundamental principles are:—

1. FAITH.—Without faith it is impossible to please him: for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him.—Heb. 11: 6.

2. REPENTANCE.—The Lord is . . . long-suffering to us-ward, not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance.—2 Peter 3: 9.

3. THE DOCTRINE OF BAPTISMS.—He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved.—Mark 16: 16. Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the son, and of the Holy Ghost.—Matt. 28: 19. Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit he cannot enter into the kingdom of God.—John 3: 5.

4. THE LAYING ON OF HANDS.—Then laid they their hands upon them, and they received the Holy Ghost.—Acts 8: 17. And when Paul had laid his hands upon them, the Holy Ghost came on them.—Acts 19: 6.

5. THE RESURRECTION.—The hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation.—John 5: 28, 29.

6. ETERNAL JUDGMENT.—It is appointed unto men once to die, but after this the judgment.—Heb. 9: 27. For the Father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment unto the Son.—John 5: 22.

Can any one of those principles be cast aside as nonessential to salvation?

He that rejecteth me, and receiveth not my words, hath one that judgeth him; the word that I have spoken, the same shall judge him at the last day.—John 12: 48.

Whosoever transgresseth and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God. (See 2 John, 9, 10, 11 verses.)

Having learned what the foundation principles of the doctrine of Christ are, and that they cannot be set aside, we will now discover by what means they were to be delivered to all the world, and subjects gained to the kingdom of God:—

And God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers, after that miracles, then gifts of healing, helps, governments, diversities of tongues.—1 Cor. 12: 28.

And he gave some apostles; and some prophets; and some evangelists; and some pastors and teachers.—Eph. 4: 11.

And there were some ordained elders, (Acts 14: 23). Bishops, (Titus 1: 7. 1 Tim. 3: 1-6.) Deacons (1 Tim. 2: 8-13 give their qualifications.)

What were they all placed in the church for?

For the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ.

For how long?

Till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ.—Eph. 4: 13.

And this is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent.—John 17: 3.

Thus we see that God placed in the church those several grades of officers from apostles to deacons for the work of the ministry, that the world might hear, that the saints might be perfected, edified, and unitedly contend for the faith once delivered to the saints. (Jude 3.) If such a course of procedure was then necessary upon the part of God to bring about those grand results, through which the saints might obtain eternal life, it certainly will require the same in this age under the same gospel system to produce the same effect. For in God there is no variableness, neither shadow of turning. (James 1: 17.) Therefore if the same causes or means are not in existence now, the same effects cannot now be produced; and the fault must lie with man. It does not do in this age to say that such grades of officers are not now needed, from the fact, that while no change can be made in the principles or doctrines of Christ, they being in their nature everlastingly unchangeable, as is their author, yet the conditions, circumstances, and work to be accomplished are far different, and will equally require the overruling power of God.

In the ninth hour dispensation, when Jesus came as the babe of Bethlehem, one of the objects to be accomplished was the destruction of the power of death, and thus make it possible that man might be redeemed from death; which condition was the wages of sin and transgression of the law of God. He, Jesus, endured all the trials and difficulties of this life; enduring hunger, and thirst, and poverty, so much so that he said, "The foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests, but the Son of man hath not where to lay his head;" but this was not all, those among whom he went doing good, persecuted him to the death; but, by the power of the Spirit of his Father he burst the bands of death and arose triumphant from the grave, and to the Apostle John could say:—

Fear not; I am the first and the last; I am he that liveth, and was dead; and, behold, I am alive for evermore, Amen; and have the keys of hell and of death.—Rev. 1: 17, 18.

But this was not all. While he lived among men he established that code of principles known as the gospel of Christ, the fundamentals of which are shown in our diagram; obedience to which, coupled with a righteous life, will bring man back to the presence of God to dwell with him and his Christ throughout the endless ages of eternity, while rejection of them will bring condemnation and an endless life of shame and contempt. But alas, the perversity of man cast aside the offered mercy, and persecuted to the death those who accepted and adhered to it, and thus brought to a close the ninth hour dispensation, leaving the world to pass through what is now known as the dark ages.

While it is true that grand and glorious foundation was laid for the final redemption and full salvation of all those who would receive and obey it, by Jesus the Christ, it has been reserved for this the eleventh hour dispensation to prepare for its final triumph. And for this reason, the conditions, the circumstances, and labors to be performed are of a far different nature. The ninth hour in which Jesus came was a scattering dispensation; Jesus said:—

Think not that I am come to send peace on the earth: I came not to send peace, but a sword.—Matt. 10: 34.

And history has demonstrated its truth. He also said:—

O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets, and stonest them which are sent unto thee, how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not! Behold your house is left unto you desolate.—Matt. 23: 37, 38.

And they shall fall by the edge of the sword, and shall be led away captive into all nations: and Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled.—Luke 21: 24.

For I say unto you, Ye shall not see me henceforth, till ye shall say, Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord.—Matt. 23: 39.

But the eleventh hour will be a gathering dispensation, as shown by the prophets, that in the dispensation of the fullness of times he might gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven, and which are on earth; even in him.—Eph. 1: 10.

It is written,

The Lord appeared to Abram, and said unto him, I am the Almighty God; walk before me, and be thou perfect. . . . Neither shall thy name any more be called Abram, but thy name shall be Abraham; . . . and I will establish my covenant between me and thee and thy seed after thee in their generations, for an everlasting covenant, to be a God unto thee, and to thy seed after thee, and I will give unto thee, and to thy seed after thee, the land wherein thou art a stranger, all the land of Canaan, for an everlasting possession; and I will be their God.—Gen. 17:1-8.

But because of their transgression and stiff-neckedness we have seen they should become a scattered people. But that the above was an enduring covenant will be seen from the following:—

Then will I remember my covenant with Jacob, and also my covenant with Isaac, and also my covenant with Abraham will I remember; and I will remember the land. . . . I will not cast them away, neither will I abhor them, to destroy them utterly, and to break my covenant with them: for I am the Lord their God.—Lev. 26:43, 44.

For, lo, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will bring again the captivity of my people Israel and Judah, saith the Lord: and I will cause them to return to the land that I gave to their fathers, and they shall possess it.—Jer. 30:3.

Thus saith the Lord God, Behold, I will lift up mine hand to the Gentiles, and set up my standard to the people: and they shall bring thy sons in their arms, and thy daughters shall be carried on their shoulders. And kings shall be thy nursing fathers, and their queens thy nursing mothers.—Isa. 49:22, 23.

The standard which the Lord God will set up to the people to bring about these purposes will be the same which the Jews and people of the ninth hour dispensation finally rejected and departed from, which was his Christ, and his gospel or doctrine, for Jesus said:—

And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me.—John 12:32.

He came to the Jews who rejected him, and took his life, and lifted him up upon the cross; his gospel was taken from them and given to the Gentiles; the Gentiles in turn cast his precepts from them, and set up the man of sin. These were the beginning and the end of the ninth hour dispensation. But we learn from the prophet Isaiah, that in the due time of the Lord for the gathering of his people back to the land of their fathers, he will lift up his standard to the Gentiles, and they shall assist in bringing about the purposes of God, in the fulfillment of his covenant with Abraham, with Isaac, and with Jacob. And thus by the lifting of this standard preparing a people to whom the command shall be given,

Gather my saints together unto me; those that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice.—Ps. 50:5.

Thus you will perceive that there is a great deal of work to be performed in the eleventh hour, or the dispensation of the fullness of times. And as is abundantly proven by the Scriptures given for our learning, from the early morning, or the days of our father Adam down, whenever the Lord God had a special work to do among the children of men, he always commenced that work in the same manner; there being in him no variability, neither a shadow of turning. And we read, Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but [until] he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets.—Amos 3:7.

And this having been his mode in the past, certainly at the close of the eleventh hour he will call his servants together, when the labors of the day shall be completed, and he shall compensate each according to his own will; at the commencement of that hour he would certainly follow the precedents he has set in the past, from the first hour unto the ninth hour dispensations. The people of the ninth hour dispensation having departed from the truth by a general apostasy from the principles of the gospel of Christ, and lost the power thereof, as foretold by the Apostle Paul, 2 Timothy 3:1-5, which has been fully recognized by many of the leading reformers, who under the influence of the Spirit of God, which moved upon, and was with such men, caused Charles Wesley, in the fullness of his soul, to write:—

Almighty God of love,
Set up the attracting sign,
And summon whom thou dost approve,
For messengers divine.

From favored Abraham's seed,
The new apostles choose;
In isles and continents to spread
The soul reviving news.

O send thy servants forth
To call the Hebrews home;
From East, and West, and South, and North,
Let all the wand'ers come:

With Israel's myriads sealed,
Let all the nations meet;
And show the mystery fulfilled,
The family complete!

The first thing the Lord God would do in the times of the restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began, Acts 3:21 would be to reveal his secret to some one whom he would raise up as a prophet, through whom he can issue his will and commands unto the children of men, that his purposes may be accomplished according to the plans and designs formulated by him before the foundations of the earth were laid. And thus in fulfillment of his purposes shown to the Apostle John when upon the isle of Patmos, he says:—

I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come: and worship him that made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters.—Rev. 14:6, 7.

If such a thing were possible as claimed by modern Christians, that there will no more prophets be raised up such as of old to lead the people of God, but that the world will continue as now unto the end, with all its diversities of creeds and opinions, I wish to ask a few questions, the answers to which I desire shall be supported by Scripture evidence, and not by the opinions of men.

1. How shall the religious world be brought to a unity of the faith?

If it were possible for men to formulate a church in the semblance of the ancient pattern by their own wisdom, and designate their officers by the same names which Jesus placed in his church for the work of the ministry, please tell us by Scripture evidence.

2. Which of those grades of officers had the authority to baptize believers?

3. Which of those grades of officers had the authority to lay on hands for the gift or reception of the Holy Ghost?

4. Which of those grades of officers had the authority to break the bread, and administer the sacrament of the Lord's supper acceptably to God?

5. Which of those grades of officers had the authority to take up in their arms, or lay their hands upon little children, and bless them after the example of Jesus?

6. Which of those grades of officers had the authority to officiate in the marriage ceremony, it being ordained of God?

7. There were also helps and governments growing out of those grades of priesthood. What were they, and what were their duties?

8. In what did the special duties of the several grades of officers placed in the church of Christ in apostolic times differ from each other?

As we have before seen, these different grades of officers were placed in the church by the Master,

For the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ [the church]: till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ: that we henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about by every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive; but speaking the truth in love, may grow up into him in all things, which is the head, even Christ: from whom the whole body fitly joined together and compacted by that which every joint [officer] supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, maketh increase [growth] of the body unto the edifying of itself [the body, the church] in love.—Eph. 4: 12-16.

Thus we perceive that under the everlasting gospel economy of God, the several grades of officials are a present, living necessity for the purposes stated, and without them, the church, the body of Christ cannot be perfected nor brought to a unity of the faith. Surrounded as the saints have been in the past ages, and as we have seen they must and will be in the present and future, by circumstances of such vastly different character; and the eleventh hour labor being the culmination of all other dispensations; therefore, as in all the dispensations of the past, the Lord has revealed his secrets to his servants the prophets; and his modes being unchangeable, and of one eternal round, in this the closing dispensation as in all others, he will also reveal his will and secret unto his chosen prophet. For, where there is no vision, the people perish.—Prov. 29: 13.

Then apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, elders, bishops, priests, teachers, and deacons, helps, etc., having been set in the church by Christ as the governing power during his absence, and faith, repentance, the doctrine of baptisms, and the laying on of hands having been the first foundation doctrines of Christ, by which subjects were initiated into his kingdom; ever remember that, whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God. He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath both the Father and the Son.—2 John 5: 9.

INTROSPECTION.

GENERAL BOOTH, in his speech before leaving England for America, said: "One of my sons has separated himself from us, and is working in his own way. I bear him no ill-will; for though I think he is wrong, he is still my son."

These words sounded so much like what is recorded in Luke fifteenth chapter, He is still my son. I sometimes think that we saints forget at times that some of those around us are still our relations, although they may have sinned. I well remember our deceased brother, Z. H. Gurley, Sen., at a council meeting; the branch officers were reporting their labors, and one of them had a bad case on his hands, and thought that the person ought to be cut off from the church. Bro. Gurley questioned the teacher about how much he had labored with the offending one; and he said he had visited him a good many times, but it did no good. Bro. Gurley told him to go again, and take the Spirit of God with him, and plead with him, and get him to come and ask forgiveness, and if he still refused to come, to go again; perhaps in the end he might win him.

And in speaking to the officers of the branch, in regard to their duties, he, Bro. Gurley, said they were called to be saviors of saints. He also spoke of them having great patience in seeking to bring back those who had or might go astray. I shall never forget some of that good old man's words; they have helped me when laboring as teacher or priest among the saints, and I believe they will stay with me to the end of my days.

I have sometimes thought that it was possible that we as a church might get too self-righteous, like those of old who brought the woman to Jesus. But what a scathing rebuke he gave them. Let him that is without sin cast the first stone. Their eyes were opened, and they saw themselves, and left the place. And I sometimes think it would be good for all of us to have our eyes turned on ourselves a little more, so that we could have a little more mercy for the poor sinner; for most of them knew their condition, and a little help might do them good. HERALD READER.

HABITUDE.

AMONG the scholarly, as well as among the unlearned, there is a common belief that all prophets are old men; and the practice seems well-nigh universal, when either speaking or writing of a prophet, to refer to them as aged and experienced men. To encourage the young men and correct error, I pen these lines. Job had three counselors, and it would seem they were advanced in years, whether possessed with great wisdom or not; and the advice offered provoked a young man to speak "out in meeting":—

And Elihu the son of Barachel the Buzite answered and said, I am young, and ye are very old; wherefore I was afraid, and durst not shew you mine opinion. I said, Days should speak, and multitude of years should teach wisdom.—Job 32: 6, 7.

My sympathy is with the young men, for I most assuredly believe that we miss many precious things given by the Holy Spirit, and much valuable instruction, from the same reason that kept the youthful Elihu silent. "Afraid" in the presence of aged men; "durst" not speak when the old veterans are at meeting. I cheerfully adopt the words of Paul:—

Let no man despise thy youth; but be thou an example of the believers, in word, in conversation, in charity, in spirit, in faith, in purity.—1 Tim. 4: 12.

I would exhort all the young men of the church to seek with godly zeal to comport their lives in harmony with the above wholesome instruction, and may the God of our fathers grant unto the church a host of Timothys!

So much as a prelude. Now for my subject. Lyman Abbott says of the preaching of John the Baptist:—

It is easy to conceive what power the words of this stern old prophet possessed as he denounced the iniquities of these successors of Ahab and Jezebel.—Jesus of Nazareth, p. 295.

Again, he says:—

Whatever court blandishments could do, was done, to swerve John from his uncompromising allegiance to the truth; and, if the old hero could have been made to keep silence concerning kingly wrong, the opportunity was rare for preferment, and, cou-science might also whisper, for extended usefulness.—Ibid. p. 299.

In both of these quotations Mr. Abbott impresses his readers that John was an old man, and there are thousands who are imbued with the idea that a man must be old to be a prophet; so without questioning, believe the statements, "old prophet" and "old hero" to be absolutely true. The facts are John was but a few months the senior of his cousin, Jesus Christ, and was beheaded some two years before the crucifixion of the Savior, which event took place about the time Christ was thirty-three years of age. John was still younger at the time of his unfortunate death.

The evidence of Christ was:—

For I say unto you, Among those that are born of women there is not a greater prophet than John the Baptist.—Luke 7: 28.

And yet he was comparatively a young man. Jesus Christ, the greatest of all the prophets, was a young man at the time of his crucifixion.

Of Josiah it is written:—

For in the eighth year of his reign, while he was yet young, he began to seek after the God of David his father.—2 Chron. 34: 3.

This good man began aright, and that in his youth.

Here is something that will meet with the approval of all those who wish to encourage the youth of the church to seek the loving kindness of God:—

And it came to pass that I, Nephi, being exceeding young, nevertheless being large in stature, and also having great desires to know of the mysteries of God, wherefore I did cry unto the Lord; and behold he did visit me, and did soften my heart that I did believe all the words which had been spoken by my father; wherefore I did not rebel against him like unto my brothers.—1 Nephi 1: 17.

God was very kind to the youthful Nephi and made of him an instrument of great worth to his father's family, guiding them successfully to Joseph's promised land.

The servant under God who began this great latter-day work, says:—

I was at this time in my fifteenth year.—Church History, vol. 1, p. 7.

Another youthful servant called to the work of God. He was not yet two and twenty when intrusted with the sacred writings of the ancient Nephites, and less than twenty-five when he organized this church. Our present beloved president was not twenty-eight when God called him to the watchcare of the church. It is a mistake to think or refer to the called of God with the adjective — "old prophet," or the "old hero."

ROBT. M. ELVIN.

ON LAW AND AUTHORITY.

LAW is a rule of action, and as such compiled is considered a body of rules governing the state or nation. It is by these rules that order can be established among the people. Without law there could be no order; it is only by living in obedience to law that order can be maintained. It is said that all things are governed by law. The stars in their course roll and abide in their sphere of action in obedience to the laws of their Creator. The apple falls from the tree, the brick from the chimney, and the water running over the falls all act in obedience to the law of gravitation, and so on all throughout God's creations, all things must obey law and abide in the order of their creation.

Man being born in innocence, a child of ignorance coming to earth to live and learn, had need of a teacher, and God the Father hath appointed unto him a teacher and a law-giver, even Jesus Christ. Law is twofold; the higher and the lower, or the religious and the civil. The religious law comes to us from God, through Jesus Christ, and treats of our duties to God, to ourselves, to all mankind, and what we must do if we desire to live so as to enjoy his blessings. The civil law originates with mankind, and treats of our relations to each other in marriage, land, laws, money, weights, measures, and all that goes to regulate the dealings of men with each other.

The highest of all laws are the laws of God, who is the Supreme Ruler of all mankind, and the Judge of all, as he has decreed that they shall come to his judgment seat to be judged by him on the last great day of judgment. His laws are forever the same—unchangeable, as it is written, "The law of the Lord is perfect."

Then there is the law of the king who rules as an absolute monarch in the kingdom or empire which he governs. His word is law, and there can be no appeal from his decrees. He punishes or rewards as he pleases, and the life of each and all of his subjects are in his hands. He grants favours to whom he may, and claims rights divine to rule over the people of the land as far as the boundaries of his empire extend. His laws are ever changing, sometimes very tyrannical and oppressive, which cause the people to mourn; but disobey they must not, for it has long since been established that might makes right, and the king is the mighty one.

In the United States it is said the people rule, and that the voice of the people make the laws; but what great good has been gained for the people as a whole it would be hard to determine, for the simply reason that the ways and usages of the kings still hold good. The lands have been given away by the million acres, but not to the people. The laws are forever changing, the rich have many advantages over the poor in much of the law that now is. The wrongs of the poor are oftentimes overlooked, the rich go unpunished oftentimes when they are guilty; but the poor who cannot buy the law must take the punishment, so that the rule of the kings still holds good, and the right of might prevails.

The kingdom of God may be likened unto a kingdom within the kingdoms, empires, and states of the world, and has its officers appointed by God's authority; and wherever there are any found who of their own free will are willing to obey God's laws by living in obedience to them, they are the people who form a part of the church or kingdom of God. A person may be a subject of state or nation and yet not be a subject of the kingdom of God; for the laws of God declare that all mankind are aliens, and they can only become subjects by the laws of adoption in accordance with the law given by Jesus Christ. Anyone may be a subject of the kingdom of God, and be a good subject of the nation or state wherein he dwells; for God's commands are to his people to obey the laws of the land, and he who obeys not the laws of the land wherein he dwells transgresses the laws of God and is not accounted worthy of the blessings promised, for it is only unto them who remember the whole of the laws of God, not only to say but to do, who can have claim on the benefits that are given to the obedient.

living in obedience to the laws of men are all severed at death; but the promises and blessings received by those who become the children of God by the laws of adoption are not only good and beneficial in this life, but reach away into the world which is to come, when the meek shall inherit the earth, and Christ shall be their king, and his kingdom shall extend over all the world.

The laws of the kingdom of God as taught by Jesus Christ, are: Faith in God to believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of those who diligently seek him. Repentance in turning from all that is evil or forbidden in God's laws. In being born again of the water and of the Spirit; or, in other words, in being baptized in water, and having hands laid upon them for the gift of the Holy Spirit by those in authority in God's kingdom. In complying with these laws gives men and women a right to be called the children of God, and subjects of his kingdom, and may be called God's laws of adoption. The higher laws which the children of God must obey are: Love your enemies; do good to them that hate you, and pray for those who despitefully use you; think no evil; whatsoever you would that men should do unto you, do you even so unto them. If thou knowest thy brother has aught against thee, thou must go thy way unto thy brother and be reconciled unto him. And if thy brother offend thee, thou must first take him between thee and him alone and seek to make peace before thou tell it to another. And love ye one another so that the world may know that you are mine; or, in other words, the children of God's kingdom must so live towards each other that all men who see and know them can say that those people by their deeds and acts of a truth prove themselves to be the children of God. These laws have never been surpassed by man with all his claims to intelligence, learning, and wisdom. Their beauty lies in the fact they are so plain, so simple, so easy to be understood, that the least and simplest of mankind may be able to understand. They are so grand and complete that simple as they seem to be they include everything that would make men happy in the enjoyment of "peace on earth good will to men," if they only comply with the conditions herein named.

Men are forever making excuses, and saying, "Why! the idea of loving my enemies! I can't do it; no natural man can. It is against nature so to do."

Yes, that is a fact, as we see. No man—no natural man—can love his enemies, and God knew this; hence it was needful for the good of natural man that something should be done for him, and that was to reveal a plan unto him which if he obeyed he would be changed from a natural to a spiritual man. Men, we say, come naturally upon the earth; they are the children of their earthly parents; they learn the evil and the good, taste the bitter and the sweet, and confess that they of their own selves are so weak they cannot obey the laws of God, plain and simple though they may be. Hence the need of God's laws of adoption, and of man obeying the same, so as to understand the meaning of the words, "You must be born again, of the water and of the Spirit," and so become a child of God. He will plant within the mind or soul that spirit which is of the Spirit of Christ, which, if man will cherish in seeking to do the will of God by living in obedience to his laws, will enable him to say, "I know of a truth that I have indeed been born of the Spirit of God and his Christ, and now indeed I love my enemies, and can truly pray for them who despitefully use me, and know that it is the Spirit of Christ within me that has enabled me to do these things, that I now have a joy that they who obey not know not of, and have received of the spirit of 'peace on earth good will to men,' and a lively hope to dwell with the redeemed in that world which is to come."

Yet again men make excuses by saying, "Yes, look at such a one. He says he has been born again, yet we see none of the fruits of the Spirit in him."

That may be true, and be no fault of the planter, or the seed planted. His soil may be barren; he may find more pleasure in doing his own will than the will of his heavenly Father, and so become a disobedient child. He may forget the admonition to ever watch and pray, and so fall into temptation. He may be weak in faith in God and his promises, and have a great struggle within himself, till the spirit of love and truth grows strong, then he will bear fruits. Men oftentimes expect too much of others, especially they who do nothing of themselves. We do not plant seed and expect fruit next day; we must abide in patience the time till harvest. So it is with those who are born of the Spirit of God; he knows all his plants, and if they in patience seek to abide in his love, they will surely triumph over all evil. It is for men to judge not, but to prove all things, holding fast to the good, and in so doing receive and learn of the blessings of God for themselves.

Men who love law and order have but to learn the law that they may know and obey; but there are many who do not love law nor order, hence there are officers appointed and authorized by the powers that be to execute the laws in empire, kingdom, and state, that offenders may be punished, that justice may be administered, and all wrongs righted.

There are also many churches in state and nation, the officers of which claim to be teachers and executors of the laws of God; but the churches are so numerous, and of so many different kinds, conflicting claims, and creeds, that they confuse the minds of men, and by their acts cause many to think that the whole is all a traditional story, and that the main thing and chief aim among them all is the dimes and dollars, so that the whole thing is set aside by many as a matter not worth their consideration, and the result now is that many have become skeptics and infidels, while many others who believe that there is a God, entirely reject the claims and teachings of Jesus Christ.

A piece of money to be genuine must be stamped by the authority of the powers that be in state or nation. There may be many imitations more or less like unto the real, but they are all counterfeits and impositions upon the people, and yet some of them are so like the real coin that it takes an expert with the aid of a detector to determine between the true and the base.

Now the detector of the false teachers is the Book of books—the Bible.

It is a sure guide for all who wish to know the truth for themselves and detect the errors of men. It is true men say the Bible is like an old fiddle on which men can play any tune they please. This is because men who claim to be teachers of God's word have taken parts of the Bible and nailed it to their opinions, while those who hear such opinions and Bible proofs care not to examine the book for themselves. Like any other law book we must seek to understand it as it reads.

When we ask men who claim to be teachers of the laws of God whence came their authority to act in the name of Jesus Christ, they say they get it from the Bible, and tell us to read the sixteenth chapter of Mark, where Jesus Christ instructs his apostles to "go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." Whoever heard or knew of anyone receiving authority from a book of laws? If a man has a full knowledge of the laws of the State he lives in, that would not give him the right to be a justice of the peace. Supposing he would be foolish enough to try, he rents an office in town and gives notice to the public that he is such. Some one would soon be asking him who gave him the right to be a justice of the peace. He might reply, "Why, I know all about the laws of the State, and consider myself well qualified to act in such a place." None might dispute his word, but they would all plainly tell him till he was elected to such an office, he could not be what claimed to be. A man might know all about the postal laws, and much desire to be postmaster of the city he lives in. Many of his fellow citizens may also desire that he should so act; but they all know that unless he was authorized by those in authority he could not act in such an office. Men may form associations and churches, having laws and creeds that best please themselves, and elect such officers to teach and execute their laws as they think they need, but when men claim to teach the gospel of Christ, how can they act in his name without his authority; for authority rules everywhere? No man can go into mine, factory, mill, store, or field and employ himself. He must have the consent of the owners, or of the agent they have intrusted with the management of their business; and then when employed, they cannot do as they please, but must labor under the rules and instructions of owner or agent. Must it not be so with those who desire to act in the name of Jesus Christ?

Again we find the sixteenth chapter of Mark reads thus: "And these signs shall follow them that believe; In my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover." Those who claim authority from the words, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel," tell us that all the rest of this is done away with; non-essential; no longer needed. Why no longer needed? Would not the healing of the sick by the laying on of the hands of the ministry strengthen the faith of the believer to-day as in the days of the first apostles? And is not good health to members of the church of Christ as great a need and blessing to-day as in former ages? Without examining further is it not clear to the mind of every reasoning man and woman that there is an error somewhere with those who deny these things, since all was to be done in the name of Jesus Christ, and by his power? It is written they went forth and preached everywhere, the Lord working with them, and confirming the word with signs following.

When the agent of a milling or manufacturing company employs men to labor for them, he promises them so much wages each day they work. At the end of each month the days of work are summed up, and the full amount of wages is paid. Whose money is used to pay them? Not the agent's; for as a rule he also works for pay. Then it is the company's money that pays the workmen. In this way they know that the company makes good the word of the agent, and that he stands in its stead and acts for it as if he was the company. Reasoning thus we may be assured that all those who claim to be teachers of the gospel of Christ, but who say that those signs are done away, have no authority from Jesus Christ to act in his name, and are therefore teaching the doctrines and commandments of men. In this way we discover the false and true among religious teachers; for when Christ lived among men he healed the sick, raised the dead, and did many mighty works, and sent forth his apostles to act in his name in all the cities and country of the Jews. When their work was done they returned rejoicing that even the devils were subject to them in his name. When he arose from the dead and ascended up on high, the same power is made manifest among the believers. So, then, the conclusion of the whole matter is that Jesus Christ is indeed the teacher and lawgiver of the people of God, and that it is in vain to call him Lord, and do not the things which he says; and that the admonition is still good to search the Scriptures and learn the truth of the word and commands of God for themselves, and so be free from the errors and traditions of men, and live in the enjoyment of the spirit of peace, and the gifts and blessings he has promised to all who will hear the call and obey, even in these the latter days.

Conference Minutes.

POTTAWATTAMIE.

Conference convened at Crescent City, March 26, 1898; John P. Carlile presiding, James D. Stuart secretary pro tem. Statistical reports from all branches were read as follows: Boomer 25; no change. Council Bluffs 256; gain 6. Crescent 138; loss 13. Hazel Dell 67; gain 1. Fontanelle 42; no change. North Star 95; gain 1. Wheeler's Grove 85; loss 5. Loss for the quarter to the district 13; present number enrolled in branches 699; scattered 88; on district record, total 787. Written reports were read from Elders J. P. Carlile, J. Carlile, S. Butler, D. Parrish, T. W. Williams; Priests C. C. Larson and J. Lentz. Verbal reports from H. N. Hansen, C. Carstensen, C. G. McIntosh, D. K. Dodson, R. McKenzie; Priests S. Underwood, P. Rasmussen, and O. W. Jones. Bishop's agent, J. P. Carlile, reported: On hand last report $110.42; collected $238.38; total $348.80; paid out $256; on hand $92.80. Audited and found correct. Resolved that it is the sentiment of this district that the practice of publishing the Bishop's itemized reports in the Saints' Herald should be continued, and that the Pottawattamie delegates to the General Conference are hereby instructed to vote for the same. On motion the delegates were also instructed to vote to hold the next General Conference at Lamoni, Iowa. On motion the case reported from an elders' court to the last quarterly conference was continued and the court discharged. The following were appointed delegates to the General Conference with authority to add such as may be attending conference and in good standing, to the delegation: Agnes Hansen, H. N. Hansen, T. W. Williams, Juliette E. Hansen, Emma Currie, S. Butler, Bro. and Sr. J. R. Lapworth, Bro. and Sr. Joshua Carlile. Those in attendance being authorized to cast the entire vote to which the Pottawattamie district is entitled. A collection was ordered in each branch to meet the expenses of those delegates under General Church appointment. On motion the sitting of the next district conference was ordered for May 28 and 29, 1898, at Boomer. J. P. Carlile continued as president and Bishop's agent, and J. Chas. Jensen as secretary.

BIRMINGHAM.

Annual conference convened at Middle Class Schoolroom, Priestly Road, Birmingham, on June 5, 6, and 7, 1897, at 7:30 p. m.; C. H. Caton president, J. Caffall and Thomas Taylor appointed vice presidents. Announcements for Sunday services were made as follows: Morning preacher, Elder G. S. Greenwood; afternoon prayer and testimony service in charge of Elders T. Taylor and J. Caffall; evening service, preacher, Elder J. Caffall. The following branches reported: Priestley Road 126; net increase 4. Summerfield 27; net decrease 1. Stafford 26; net increase 2. Leicester 22; decrease 3. The Sunday services were fairly well attended and a good feeling was manifest through the day, the speakers doing good service. Bro. J. Caffall at the Monday session gave a long and complete report of his labors, and especially that performed by special request of 1896 conference re Leicester branch difficulty. The revelation given at the late General Conference was read and accepted by a rising vote and the singing of hymn, "We thank thee, O God, for a prophet," etc. Resolutions sustaining the authorities in America, etc., not forgetting Bro. Caffall in England and the home authorities and other closing formalities brought a very good conference to a close. After the adjournment of conference Bro. Caffall preached a very interesting sermon to the young people.

ST. LOUIS.

Conference convened in St. Louis, Missouri, Saturday, March 12, 1898, at 2:30 p. m. J. S. Parrish president, R. B. Trowbridge clerk pro tem. Elders M. H. Bond, J. S. Parrish, W. O. Thomas, N. N. St. Clair, formerly Moselle, 14; 5 received, 1 expelled, 1 died. The Quorum of Twelve Apostles was petitioned to return Elder M. H. Bond to labor in this district; also that a high priest be appointed to preside over the St. Louis district and branch. The recommendation that Bro. John C. Hitchcock be ordained to the office of elder was adopted. Bro. M. H. Bond, J. S. Parrish, G. F. Barraclough, W. O. Thomas, G. Elliott, and Srs. Margaret Thomas and Ettie Elliott were appointed delegates to General Conference; and also authorized to enroll others as assistant delegates of those from this district who may attend General Conference. A communication from the Southern Illinois district conference proposing a change in the boundary lines of their district was favorably received. Tent committee reported having received $86.46; expended $81.38½; balance $5.07½. Bishop's agent's annual report of December 31, 1897: March 1, 1897, balance due the church, $228.75; March 3, 1897, paid Bishop E. L. Kelley, $150; balance, $78.75; received since, $937.07; expended $860.75; December 31, 1897, balance due church $155.07. Bishop's agent's report of March 12, 1898: December 31, 1897; balance due church $155.07; received since $84.10; expended $131. March 12, 1898, balance due church $108.17. J. G. Smith, agent. Sunday services, preaching by Elders Parrish and Bond. Afternoon, sacrament, prayer, and testimony. An interesting time was had. Adjourned to meet in St. Louis, Missouri, on Saturday, June 18, 1898, at 2:30 p. m.

C. H. CATON, Pres.
CHAS. WALTON, Sec.

BORN.

BEESTRUM.—At West Salem, Wisconsin, August 18, 1897, to Bro. Juan Auguste and Sr. Bertine Beestrum, a daughter; named Edna May. Blessed at St. Louis, Missouri, March 20, 1898, by Elder M. H. Bond.

WHITNEY.—January 7, 1898, at St. Louis, Missouri, to Bro. William H. and Sr. Minnie L. Whitney, a son; named Clarence Belmont. Blessed by Elder M. H. Bond.

DIED.

DRIVER.—At Oakland, California, March 3, 1898, Ethel Narcissa, youngest daughter of Bro. John H. and Mattie A. Driver. Deceased was born at Haywards, California, January 26, 1887. She was baptized at the age of eight years. She was buried at Irvington, Elder Geo. S. Lincoln preaching the sermon.

JAMES.—At St. Louis, Missouri, March 8, 1898, daughter of Bro. George and Sr. Effie James. Born at St. Louis, April 16, 1895. Funeral service conducted by Elder M. H. Bond.

WESCOTT.—At St. Louis, Missouri, March 15, 1898, Charles William, infant son of Mr. Charles F. and Eliza Wescott, aged 1 year and 5 months. Funeral services by Elder M. H. Bond.

ROLAND.—John Roland was born in Wastage, Wales, February 22, 1856; married in 1882 to Mary Wall, and to them were born seven children; came to America in 1884; died March 14, 1896. Funeral sermon preached by Elder Frank Izatt.

FAIRCLOUGH.—Daisy L. Fairclough, March 12, 1898, at Boston, Massachusetts. Deceased was born at Worcester, Massachusetts, February 20, 1884; baptized at Boston with her mother, sister Mabel, and brother Herbert. She was a beautiful girl, her face always beaming with smiles, and radiant with the spirit of joy and peace. Remarkably quick to learn, never failing in her lessons, even while her health was failing, she obtained first prize in her class at Sunday school on Christmas for lessons and attendance. A fragile flower too delicate and beautiful for this mundane sphere. Funeral at the home, March 15. Among the many sympathizing friends and saints present was her Sunday school teacher, Ruthie Sheehy, and her class dressed in white, and each carrying a beautiful lily, sang "Precious Jewels," while they stood by the casket upon which they placed their lilies. Prayer by M. C. Fisher, sermon by R. Bullard.

BROWN.—Oscar H. Brown, March 22, 1898, at Dorchester, Nebraska. He was born at East Chester, New York, January 23, 1851, and went to Nebraska with his parents in 1870. He was baptized by Bro. T. J. Smith, February 4, 1878, and was ordained a priest of the Aaronic order, February 5, 1882. He was buried from the Latter Day Saints' chapel in Omaha, a large number of friends and acquaintances being present to pay their last sad respects. He leaves his wife, two sons, an aged mother, and several brothers. Funeral sermon by Elder F. A. Smith.

WONDERS.—At the home of Elder Jacob Stanley, son-in-law of deceased, Bro. John Wonders, March 21, 1898. Bro. Wonders united with the church at Streator, Illinois, March 19, 1878; baptized by Apostle T. W. Smith; was ordained to the office of teacher, March 31, 1878, by Apostle T. W. Smith. Deceased was born December 26, 1816, at Felton, Northumberland County, England. He died in the faith of a glorious resurrection with the just.

TANNER.—At Bevier, Missouri, March 23, 1898, William A., son of Bro. J. A. and Sr. Sarah J. Tanner, aged 1 year, 4 months, 13 days. Baby William's spirit has gone home to paradise. Funeral services by Elder J. C. Foss.

Archæological Committee's Report,
WITH MAPS.

Evidences Supporting the Book of Mormon.

This work presents the results of labors of the "Committee on American Archæology," appointed at the General Conference of 1894. The work has been written after much time and special labor in investigating every available source of written information on the subject.

It is divided into three parts. Part 1 contains a preface, and outlines the history of the Nephites. Part 2 is a synopsis of Jaredite history, and includes a summary of the conclusions reached by the committee, with a statement of the evidences upon which said conclusions are based. Part 3 contains much miscellaneous matter of general importance, including a list of early authors on American antiquities, with their opinions concerning the origin of the ancient Americans; a list of authors quoted; also an index of names of lands, cities, rivers, etc.

The committee has outlined and located the civilizations, lands, cities, rivers, and boundaries of countries named in the Book of Mormon. These are shown on six specially prepared Maps, included in the report. Other engravings also appear—illustrations of "Mexican Picture Writing," "Landa's Maya Alphabet," "LePlongeon's Egyptian and Maya alphabet," "Book of Mormon characters," "Bas Relief from Palenque," and "Inscriptions from Palenque."

The committee has summarized the leading archæological evidences obtainable in support of the claims made by the Book of Mormon; evidences have been gathered from sources not accessible to the average reader, making it a manual of defense of its archæological claims.

The preparation of the work has been completed at considerable expense, but the price has been made as low as possible.

Neatly bound in heavy paper covers; price 50 cents, mailed to any address.

HISTORY OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS. (Volumes 1 and 2 now ready.) Provided for by action of General Conference of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Written and compiled by President Joseph Smith and Apostle Heman C. Smith. Invaluable as a correct historical narrative, as a means of conversion to truth, and as a defensive weapon in meeting old and new objections urged against the latter-day work. It contains important documents connected with the establishment, growth, and internal and external affairs and progress of the church. The revelations given in this dispensation are inserted, in connection with accounts of the circumstances under which they were given. Biographical sketches, illustrations, complete indexes, sidenotes for ready reference, etc., are some of the features of the work. Volume 1 begins with the birth of Joseph Smith, the Prophet and Seer, in 1805, and narrates the circumstances of his calling and ministry, the rise of the church in 1830, and until the close of the year 1835. Volume 2 continues the history up to June 27, 1844, —to the assassination of Joseph and Hyrum Smith.

[Delay in mail service at Kansas City prevented our report of Religio from appearing in last issue of HERALD.]

THE "RELIGIO" CONVENTION.

NOT being present, we present the following report of the Religio Convention, kindly prepared for the HERALD by Sr. Louise Palfrey, Editor of the Religio's Arena, in Autumn Leaves:—

THURSDAY, MARCH 31.

The General Convention of our young people's society, the Religio, held at Independence, gives evidence of the growing strength and importance of this auxiliary to the church. While the society is, comparatively speaking, only in its beginning, the intelligent earnestness, noble aspiration, and developing ability displayed from its ranks not only suggest bright promises for the future as its work is extended among our young people, but its usefulness to the church is already being felt in the workers it is giving.

The regular business sessions were preceded by a series of institute meetings for disseminating better understanding of the society, its mission, aim, and methods, beginning Thursday evening, March 31, with a "model session." The attendance was good.

FRIDAY, APRIL 1.

The day was begun with a prayer meeting from nine to ten. It was an enjoyable session, and in the remarks that were made it was clearly evident that the trend of sentiment was towards a more spiritual characterization in the methods of the society.

Institute work was continued. In the morning, "Duties of officers" was discussed, Bro. J. A. Gunsolley leading. "Relationship of the society to the home, Sunday school, and the church," was in charge of Bro. J. F. Mintun.

The afternoon was occupied with considering "Elements of a good local society," by Bro. J. C. Hitchcock, and "What the Religio is, and what it will do for its members," by Sr. Louise Palfrey. These subjects were interestingly discussed, arousing thought, and many questions were asked.

Although the weather set in bad, there was a full attendance in the evening for organization. While the credentials committee, who were appointed to consist of Sr. Flo McNichols, Russell Archibald, and Arthur Allen, were out, short speeches were called for, and Denver, Colorado, Independence, St. Louis, Southern California, Montana, and Maine, Clinton district, and Boston, Lamoni, and Stewartsville interests were heard from.

Further speaking was cut off by the credential committee reporting. They suggested, and it was carried, that Bro. and Sr. Hubert Case be recognized as delegates to represent the Society Islands.

The reports of the officers were read. President Gunsolley's is presented as follows:—

PRESIDENT'S ANNUAL REPORT.

One year ago in reporting to you I said that it was the most critical period in the history of the society, and that all was gloomy and dark. This year I say that the prospects were never brighter. But this convention is scarcely less important than the last. This new spirit, or rather the renewed manifestation of the old spirit, must be carefully directed. During the first years of our experience we wandered from the true genius of our object in one direction; let us be careful that we do not go to an extreme in the opposite direction, because extremes are dangerous. Let us, rather, find the safe ground on which to occupy, and there abide.

Among the many things which are encouraging I might mention some. There has been a material change with most of the locals in the direction of more solid work, that is confining it more to the study of the word of truth, and to have less of the entertainment idea. Many who a year or two ago advocated the entertainment plan strongly have gone over to the other side, and though nearly all are of the opinion that our chief object should be to make preparation for usefulness, there is still some difference as to how this preparation is to be best accomplished. This is, to me, a hopeful sign.

In harmony with this idea of more substantial work, the one-course idea has been, and is, gaining favor. And this tendency is so marked that it is clearly the duty of this convention to make such changes in its plans of study as will meet this, what has grown to be a demand.

These two tendencies just mentioned are the legitimate results of the increase and cultivation of the spirit of service upon the young people of the church. They see as they have never seen before, that the burden of the work of the church—that of redeeming Zion and establishing it—is soon to rest upon their shoulders; and if I am not mistaken, there is coming from the ranks of young men and young women, a mighty army that will march this work on to victory, in this the "hastening time."

There is another very hopeful sign which may be seen by any careful observer, and that is the tendency toward a closer alliance with the Sunday school and the church. Yes, the two sisters, daughters of the same parent, have found that they can join hands in their work, and without jealousy or hindrance to either, cooperate in the humble part they may bear in the great work of restoration; and the manifest desire of both the sisters to be simply helpers in the great work is one which must commend them to the favorable consideration of all.

When at Woodbine last September, the Sunday school, through its superintendent, said to the Religio, by its president, "Do you people not wish to occupy two of our periods?" It was the older sister saying to the younger, Come, we will share with you the privilege which has been granted us by the reunion committee. And would it not have been manifest ingratitude if we had declined? Not only so, but there and then was ushered into active life a relationship between the sisters which was planted by the Father's hand, and which will add to the usefulness of each. This closer acquaintance was so pleasant to us that when in preparing for the winter Institute the older sister felt that she could not go on beyond a certain point until she had extended an invitation to the younger sister to join her. Shall we say that this was only the result of chance, or the mere outgrowth of courtesy, or from a fellow feeling between individuals? Ah no! Let us rather credit the common Father for being like himself in honoring, and condescending to direct those who are trying in humility to honor him. It is my conviction that this reunion work and Institute work has come to stay, and that this convention should recognize the work thus far done and encourage a continuation of it by adopting some plan for its perpetuation, if nothing more than to authorize the executive committee to make such provision as they may be able to do consistent with our financial ability.

Our brethren and sisters in Illinois have not "seized time by the forelock," but headed him off altogether in organizing a district association; and quite flattering reports come from the effort made. It has been thought for some time that district organizations would become a necessity in time, but does anyone doubt that it is already here? It seems to me that the good to be derived from it is so apparent that it needs only to be mentioned to this body to have such measures adopted as will make this a feature of our work in the future.

Until our district organizations become a common feature, it seems to me that much might be done in connection with district Sunday school associations. It has been tried in at least one instance where the Sunday school people accorded us the privilege willingly to represent ourselves, the result of which was that many friends were made to the Religio, and much prejudice removed. I am sure that much could be done in this way, and that it is worth our attention.

There is need of more local work being done in some places, as there are not a few young people in branches where local societies exist who know but little comparatively of the work of the Religio. Why not put the work so prominently before them that they will have no excuse for letting a good thing slip? Here is work for the visiting committee, or if you have none, then it may be the duty of the lookout committee.

The superintendents of the various departments have done their work faithfully and well. There has not been an issue of programs where there have not appeared all four, this year, I believe, which is a great improvement; and the character of the programs has been improved, likewise. One cannot appreciate the labors of the superintendents who has not had some similar experience. They are certainly to be commended for the excellent work done.

Like commendation of the work of our editor is deserving. The Arena speaks for itself, but we who have had the pleasure of perusing its pages have but little conception of the vast amount of labor expended thereon. Notwithstanding some feared we would not be able to sustain the fourteen pages allotted to us by the Board of Publication, it has been done, and sometimes we have lacked for space. The contents of the Arena have shown us that we have literary [ability] of no mean quality; and suggest that at some time we may do much more in the publishing line than we are doing at the present time.

We would not by any means forget to mention the beneficence of the Board of Publication in proffering us the use of fourteen pages of the Autumn Leaves, for by the use of this means we have been able to carry on our work at a very slight expense compared with former years. While not all are pleased with the manner in which the space has been occupied, we are sure that it has been a potent factor in reviving the interest upon the part of many individuals and not a few locals. It is a matter of much regret that we have not been able to do more in the way of subscriptions, but then something has been done in the way of actual subscribers, and more in the way of bringing the matter to the notice of the young people of the church. We ought to make as vigorous an effort as it is possible to do to swell the list in the year that is upon us.

The experience of the committee of five goes to show that the Religians are not just sure what they want the coming year for a course of study. Some favor one thing and some another. There is quite a variety of ideas with reference to the general plan of work to be pursued; [the societies] however, have not expressed themselves upon the question. But there is evidence showing that there is more or less thought being had upon the matter, and it is hoped that this convention will be able to do the right thing. More will not be said about the work of the committee here, as it will appear in its report.

The main question before this convention as it appears to your president is the course of study. It is a question upon which hinges largely the success of our future work. To answer this question wisely we must take into consideration another; namely, What is our proper relation to the church—to Zion? This problem solved correctly, and the other may be settled without mistake. First, then, we are living in the "dispensation of the fullness of times." What is to be the leading feature of this dispensation? Is it not the fulfilling of the prophecies of all the holy prophets since the world began concerning the latter days? Is it not the restoration of the gospel, the bringing in of the gentile fullness, the gathering out of all nations under heaven the honest in heart, and planting them upon the land of Zion, to build a city where peace shall reign in the midst of a world of trouble and commotion, a city wherein the pure in heart shall dwell, whose government shall be the government of God and Christ, a city which shall be caught up in the air to meet the Zion from above? How is this city to become pure except by keeping the commandments given in connection with the restoration of the gospel, keeping it as individuals? Who is to bear the burden of the work of building up Zion and establishing the pure in heart? Certainly not those whose heads are already silvered over with the frosts of many winters. If not these, then who? My dear Religians, can you answer? Will you answer? How will you answer? Shall not your work in this convention and in the subsequent year be such as will best qualify you for this important work? Any work which will not fit you for this work directly should scarcely commend itself to us as worthy our favorable consideration. In the injunction, "Search these commandments, for they are true and faithful, and the prophecies and promises in them shall all be fulfilled," is clearly pointed out the manner in which this work is to be accomplished, namely, by a fulfillment of the prophecies and promises contained in the commandments. How can these be fulfilled except by an intelligent obedience to them by the people of God. And this cannot be until they are first understood; and to be understood they must be studied. For the people of God to put off making a study of them is to defer making preparation for the part they might take in the work of which it has been spoken, and to defer making preparation is either to put off the time when the work shall be done, or else to permit the Lord to call others and commit to them the work which it is his will that we should do. As individuals can we afford to put it off at the risk of letting others do the work we might do? As a society, can we afford to make this mistake? Shall we not rather plan our work so as to make provision for that which will contribute most to the development of our young people in the direction of their most important work.

My advice to this convention is, to entertain this and all other questions of importance in a prayerful spirit, and if thought necessary let us fast and pray for divine guidance. Each one should feel perfectly willing to let his will become subservient to the will of the Master, which, if we are humble, will be the will of the majority. While we may, and should advocate our views, we should do it in the spirit of meekness and fairness, wishing only thereby to throw light upon the question under consideration. Any other spirit than this is from beneath and not from above. If we cannot enter upon the work of this convention in this spirit, we are not fit to represent the truth, and had better fast and pray until we experience a change of heart.

May the good Father be with us and grant that his will may become our will, and that we may be able to accomplish that which would be in harmony with his mind to the honor and glory of his name.

J. A. GUNSOLLEY, President.

LAMONI, Iowa, March 31, 1895.

The reports of Vice President F. E. Cochran and Secretary J. C. Hitchcock follow in the order named:—

VICE PRESIDENT'S ANNUAL REPORT.

I feel highly gratified with what, under the blessing of God, has been accomplished by Religio the past year.

Last convention we trembled in the balances; our right to exist was in serious doubt; and when we had tried in our own strength, and at every turn were baffled, then we humbly approached the Father of light and received direction most plain and unmistakable.

And surely the Spirit which then brought unity and consolation has been our strength and guide the succeeding twelve months.

Under the overruling of Providence, by kindness of the Board of Publication and editor of Autumn Leaves, and the untiring alertness and energy of our Arena Editor, our work has been represented where it should have been long ago; a position commensurate with the importance of the department of church work we have assumed to occupy. May the Father grant us grace that from henceforth we may wisely and diligently continue.

The guiding hand of Divinity may also be seen in the bond of sisterhood which has sprung up, blossomed, and bore fruit the past year, in the Reunion at Woodbine, Iowa, the Institute at St. Joseph, Missouri, and in one (at least) district Sunday school convention. And, a great wave of thankfulness rolls up from this heart that our elder sister, the General Sunday School Association, so graciously took the initiative and extended the helping, uplifting hand. O may grace divine bless and more firmly cement the union! "What God hath joined together, let not man put asunder."

As a result of these gracious blessings our work has moved grandly forward. To him who has guided be all the honor and glory.

This recognition and these blessings bring no light responsibility. By experience which cannot be mistaken we know the Source from whence our life as a society comes; we know how, when undecided or perplexed, to approach that Source. If, therefore, at any time we fail to call upon Him whose ear is ever open, how great our fall! We walk alone and in darkness!

That we have passed all danger points and that all is fair sailing, or that we may now drift with wind and tide, I am not convinced. "Eternal vigilance is the price of safety." And, it should be borne in mind that after several years of tempest-tossing, our bark, young and not overly strong, has but entered on the right course. How important, then, that we be not unduly elated over success attained, and that in true humility of spirit we pursue our way.

As your vice president views the present situation, it is one of grave importance. Serious problems face us, which, if rightly solved, mean a loosening of the grave-clothes of our society, that she may emerge from the darkness that has shrouded her, into the light and life of the mission she is, if faithful, destined to fill.

The varied experiences of the past have at last directed us to consider seriously one continuous course of study; and, our choice seems now to lie between two. Which shall it be? "Aye, there's the rub." Shall we say that either will do? That one is, under present circumstances, as good as the other, and that it is immaterial which we choose? Or does that savor too strongly of the "drifting" before-mentioned?

Shall we choose, rather, this view: That, under present peculiar conditions, one is correct, the other incorrect. Your servant inclines to the latter, and he would impress the thought that it does matter very materially whether or not the correct course is chosen. We can hardly afford, after the year of excellent growth we have had, to make a mistake and thereby cripple or handicap the work of our organization for the coming season. Three hundred and sixty-five days! How much of good or ill can come to us in that time!

Having purposely said this much of the gravity of the situation, it would be manifestly improper for me to give my opinion of the correct or incorrect course. I desire only to commend you to the great Source of all wisdom and knowledge, who last convention raised us to life when we were all but dead, and who has made that life so enjoyable and fraught with blessings to this moment. Seek all the information possible on the issues, lay aside all prejudice, leave your minds free and open to the Spirit's direction, and, having done this, turn your hearts to God, seek his face in this hour of need, and, rest assured, the needed direction will be given.

Two suggestions I beg to submit for your consideration:—

First. That an adequate recognition of

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION. SUNDAY, APRIL 3.

THE exercises preceding the regular business sessions of the General Sunday School Convention were held on Sunday evening, in the upper auditorium of the saints' church, beginning at 7:30 p. m.

The Religio Convention had brought many delegates, both laity and ministry, together, and at the opening exercises of the Sunday School Association a large audience was present. The weather continued stormy throughout the day, but few if any were deterred from being present on that account; the auditorium was well filled, except the gallery, which will doubtless be well patronized when the full delegation of visitors is present. Representatives from Maine to California and from Canada to Texas, are already present; the presence of quite a number of California saints being noticeable.

Bro. T. A. Hougas, the Superintendent, called the assembly to order, and with the singing of No. 14 in the Hymnal, followed by prayer by Bro. R. C. Evans, the Sunday school work was begun. An anthem, "Praise ye the Lord," was followed by hymn No. 57, when Bro. Hougas greeted the assembled delegates on behalf of the association.

He expressed his pleasure at meeting so many who thus expressed their interest in the Sunday school movement and its work. There had not always been such an interest as now. We rejoice in the thought that not only here but everywhere we find this same interest; and it is increasing. There are many places where the work is not yet planted, but we have been made to rejoice to see the desire to improve. We have been privileged to meet the Sunday school workers in many places during the year, in several States; and we find that the work as a whole is greatly improving, though there is still room for improvement. We find too that the work begun is one of the strong fortifications against the growing encroachments of unbelief and evil that are increasing in the world. We believe the work will grow and cause others to lend aid in its behalf.

Superintendent Hougas, assisted by the Secretary, Bro. W. N. Robinson, then presented a unique and interesting feature in the formal greeting of the assembly—a blackboard drawing of a large hand extended—"The General Association Hand," which was interpreted to the audience as follows, Bro. Robinson filling in by writing as the speaker proceeded: On the small finger was written, "Home Department." Such a department is now being developed. It is composed of isolated families or groups of families of saints, who are holding regular school sessions in their homes on Sundays. They continually received reports from such schools where two, or eight, or ten persons were having schools in their homes. The missionaries report that such schools have to a degree removed the sense of privation or isolation that many feel because of separation from branches. The next finger was denominated "Helps." The association extends helps to all its workers by books, quarterlies, class books, school records, etc. On the largest finger "Schools" was written; they are the working force, growing large and increasing in number. The next "Statistics," which are an index to the work, a record of what is being done. The thumb helps all the rest of the hand, hence was designated "The Holy Spirit." "We believe it accompanies the hand we extend to you. It is the inspiration and the force within the Sunday school movement." Across the palm of the hand was written, "Conventions and institutes." These are held for the purpose of properly manipulating and strengthening the elements at our disposal. "If you are with us, give us your hand."

As superintendent he had found four kinds of hand shakes in his travels and labors: The first might be called the Chinese hand shake. The Chinaman takes one of his own hands in the other and shakes it at his guests. In some places the greeting is something of this kind, a measure of formality or indifference being manifest toward our work. The next is an extension of one finger, where you get a few statistics, but lack life in their work. The next they give the whole hand, but let you do the shaking; this we call the pump-handle shake—you are permitted to do the work while they look on. The fourth and last is the genuine hand shake, when they are glad to see you and you know that they mean what they say and emphasize it with evidences of heart interest in the good work. The audience was evidently pleased with the greeting, and accepted the association hand with manifest good will and in the same spirit manifested by those extending it.

Addresses by Bro. J. M. Terry and T. W. Williams were provided for. Bro. Terry not being present, Bro. Williams addressed the assembly on what might be termed "additional or further growth in Sunday school work," in which he presented what might be termed the affirmative phases of the work lying before the association. We should look at the work in the light of the present. We want to see our children attain a development equal to any others. We should forget or leave behind past opposition to our cause and look ahead and move forward. Should remember that the church has officially recognized this movement, and will hardly withdraw its recognition so long as we move in harmony with it. The church is the mother, the association the child. The former is independent, the latter dependent. The latter is auxiliary; both should be welded. The latter is a great help, but is helpless without the church. Salvation comes through the church, its ordinances and authority and life; the Sunday school association receives all it has through the church. It emanated from and is but a part of the great central body, the church. Church workers, ministry and laity, were led to formulate and give shape to the movement. It is an organization for good within the body, and is provided for in the revelations of God's word, which recognizes such helps. He plead for the organization of mission schools in cities. We ought to be in the foremost ranks in reform work in drawing children Godward. Many children in the cities knew nothing of God and of a proper life. Their lives were sorrowful, many of them, in the extreme. Children must be met and labored with in the spirit of heartfelt love and kindness—a genuine interest in their welfare. It is kindness that brings heaven to the child, and the child to heaven, in harmony with the teachings of Jesus. The speaker made many other good points.

A vocal solo by Sr. Viola Blair, who was accompanied by Sr. Audie Anderson, closed the program of the evening. Announcements were made, a hymn was sung, and the benediction was pronounced by the presiding officer.

MONDAY, APRIL 4.

The convention met in regular business session at ten o'clock; Superintendent Hougas presiding, W. N. Robinson secretary. Hymn 158, Windowed Songs, "Go forth to the field of the harvest," was sung, and prayer was offered by Bro. Hougas. Hymn No. 74, "Abiding Rest," followed, and after a few brief words from the chairman the regular business was proceeded with.

Being so authorized the chair appointed a committee on credentials: Brn. Oscar Anderson, U. W. Greene, and James McKiernan. The time required to make up the roll of delegates gave opportunity for short speeches. In answer to call from the chair the following named responded: Brn. J. C. Crabb, J. H. Lake, Hubert Case, R. C. Evans, Sr. Louise Palfrey, Columbus Scott, Sr. Anna Sal-yards, Brn. J. A. Gunsolley, J. D. Erwin, William Newton, Sr. Viola Blair, Bro. J. L. Goodrich, Sr. B. C. Smith, Brn. A. M. Chase, M. T. Short, Sr. Mamie A. Allen, Bro. T. W. Williams, Sr. Roxanna Gaylord, Bro. H. E. Moler, Sr. J. C. Clapp, Joseph Smith, A. J. Keck, J. F. Mintun, Sr. Ella Miller, and Bro. E. H. Fannon. The sentiments expressed were excellent and edifying. There was a manifest intelligent interest that was based upon sincere devotion to the work of the association. It afforded just ground for hope of continued advancement.

President Smith expressed his interest in and acceptance of the work being done by the Sunday School Association, the Religio, and the Prayer Union. He recognized their legitimacy in the provisions of the word for "helps and governments." All could not be apostles and prophets, but in these various spheres of usefulness were hundreds of places where men and women could work. They were helps and governments, and as such he welcomed them. They had their place in the church, and he was glad to note the good work they were doing. Many were laboring within the scope of these organizations, and according to the leadings of the Spirit moving and qualifying them. He bade the association Godspeed in its efforts, and expressed his hearty sympathy in it, and his good will.

At this juncture the committee on credentials reported. The report included lists of all districts and schools composing the association, most of which were represented by delegates.

The assembly then adjourned until two o'clock.

The convention reassembled at two o'clock; prayer by Bro. J. H. Lake.

The report of the committee on credentials was adopted. The secretary was authorized to select assistants. He named Bro. J. F. Mintun and Sr. Belle James. Brn. A. M. Chase and Orville James were appointed choristers, they to select organists. The local janitors and ushers were requested to act for the convention.

A report from the credentials committee recommended that Bro. and Sr. Hubert Case be permitted to represent the Society Islands schools, which number 1,200 members. It was so ordered.

Reports of officers were next in order and were read as follows:—

Bro. T. A. Hougas, Superintendent:—

SUPERINTENDENT'S REPORT.

To my brothers and sisters and friends, co-laborers in the Sabbath school work, Greeting:—It is a source of great pleasure to me to meet with you here this afternoon. Gathered as we are from many parts of the country, we signify by our presence our interest and love for this department of the work we love so well; we acknowledge our responsibility therein and manifest a willingness to help carry whatever there may be of burden to the work. We recognize the necessity of systematic effort in the line of special instruction for both old and young. We recognize, too, that while we are finding, preparing, and furnishing opportunities for labor to a vast multitude of teachers of the truth, we are erecting a mighty bulwark against the incursions of sin and error upon the child, the home, the community, and against the kingdom; we are enlisting and equipping an army that will invade the territory of sin and the world, and rescue from its haunts and prisons precious souls, and save them from inevitable loss.

We have assembled here this afternoon in convention capacity, and we pray God's blessing to rest upon the meeting, his Spirit to abide in every heart, and that all may feel that we are here laboring for him and the upbuilding of his kingdom upon the earth.

Another year has passed since we last met, and with it has come and gone many opportunities. Many and varied are the conditions under which we have labored, and many and varied are the results we have observed.

The successful business man takes a complete inventory of his concern at least once per year, to see whether he has lost or gained in the year's work, and how much. This, however, is not his sole object in taking the account of his stock. If he has lost, he wishes to know where, to find the cause thereof, and as far as possible to remove it. If he has gained, he must know from whence came the profit, that he may continue the project and peradventure improve upon it. We have met here to take our annual account of stock, to see whether we have lost or gained in the year's work, and how much. If we have lost in some enterprise, let us seek out the cause of the failure and remove it, or overcome it. If we have gained we are just as desirous to learn the source thereof, that we may continue the project and improve upon it. The problems then before this convention are, Have we lost? Where, and how? Have we gained? What, and how much? What shall be our course of procedure the ensuing year?

Yes; another year has passed, and as we Sabbath school workers view the work done, is it with satisfaction or regret? Are we far in advance of where we were one year ago? We should be. Have we done what we could have done? Have any opportunities passed unimproved? We leave the question unanswered. Have you as members assisted in making your Sabbath school all that it could be made? Are you an officer, and have you improved your school? or a district officer, and have you labored to bring each school in your district up to a higher plane? Have you done all that privilege, duty, and opportunity will admit—all that your brethren have a right to expect of you? If you have, you have done well indeed.

The condition of the association in general is good. The work is making advancement in detail as well as in general. Many district officers are awakening to their possibilities. Many of those who before were only nominally officers are either in fact or relegated to the list of exofficers, as it should be. It is becoming known that as is the head so is the body,—alive, sick, or dead.

They begin to realize, too, that it is possible for even them to do something that will keep the work moving. As they grow proficient in the work they are better able to see the existing defects and to remove them. They begin to dig to the bottom in their district convention work. Instead of an unsystematic lot of haphazard work [gathered] together and called a program, they are studying the needs of their districts and in part at least supplying them. Entertainments of a purely literary nature are fast giving way to true convention and institute work. Officers and teachers are being trained, and the various districts are occupying higher ground. We believe that a greater interest exists in the Sabbath school work to-day than ever existed before in the association, despite some strongly retarding influences. Persons have freely confessed themselves converted to the Sunday school cause, and are falling in line of work. The missionaries, so far as I know, are beginning to go on record in strong and encouraging terms expressive of their sympathy and indorsement. Last, but not least, the Holy Spirit has spoken words of comfort, encouragement, and approval to the faithful laborers in this blessed work.

During the past year your humble servant has tried to keep a constant vigilance over the entire work of the association, and as possibilities would admit, to extend its usefulness. We have tried to plant the work and train the workers. To this end we have personally visited nine districts, assisting in conventions and institutes. Three more invitations to district conventions now lie on our table to be accepted and complied with if possible. We left home the third day of last August to attend to duties in a series of reunions. We were present and conducted the work at five, one each at Thurman, Iowa; Blue Rapids, Kansas; Montrose, Iowa; Nevada, Missouri; and Woodbine, Iowa. We returned after six weeks of constant but very satisfactory labor. Satisfactory not because we found all as we would like to have found it, or because we accomplished all that we sought to accomplish; but because without exception we could see at each place good results from work done. And we feel to say for this, God's name be praised, and to him be all the glory.

We have been connected with the reunion work of the church since the inception thereof, and we are becoming more convinced every year that these reunions afford the best of opportunities to plant the Sunday school work and to raise up workers, and we hope that the executive of the association will not fail to embrace every opportunity to do the work that can be done at these reunions.

In December of last year we planned for and with the assistance of others conducted the second Annual Interstate Sunday School Institute, at St. Joseph, Missouri. In this we were nobly assisted by our associate officers, Brn. Cochran and Robinson, Bro. J. F. Mintun, and Srs. Louise Palfrey and D. H. Blair. The Religio joined with us and did good work under the direction of their general officers, Brn. Gunsolley, Cochran, Hitchcock, and Sr. Palfrey. The work of the institute was, we believe, good and accepted of God, as was evinced by his Holy Spirit at the close of the session. One district, the Galland's Grove, Iowa, has adopted the plan of annual district institutes. They held their second in February and the results are marked and gratifying. We would like to see all districts falling in line, for we believe this to be one of the most successful ways of reaching and developing Sunday school workers. Bro. J. W. Wight said at Dow City a short time ago, "Institute work is necessary to the public school work, why not to the Sunday school work?" It is. We cannot grade up our Sabbath schools until we have graded up our Sabbath school workers.

Early in the convention year our associate officers insisted that the editorial work of the Sunday school department in Saints' Herald should be in the hands of the Superintendent of the General Association. After some little time we reluctantly accepted, and have done the best we could under the circumstances. We say "under the circumstances" not as an apology for any failure we may have made, but because it expresses exactly what we mean. For it often occurs we are not able to arrange the matter as we would like to have it arranged. We do not complain, for no one is at fault. The circumstances, "Aye, there's the rub." We need more space, and the Herald can scarcely spare what we now have. Like a large load in a small wagon; either the goods are jammed in so closely that they are damaged, or some of them left out entirely. But what can we do?

Just how much good the work of the department in Herald may have accomplished we do not know, nor how attractive it may have been we cannot tell. And although some features of the work are not as we would like, and others not at all satisfactory, yet on the whole we are gratified with the results. We made a call for contributions to the department, and soon they began to pour in, and continued till we now have sufficient amount if used in full to fill the department for two whole years. And a very large percentage of it is of excellent merit. We here express our thanks for the kindly spirit and interest in the department work manifested by so very many. It is a good indication.

Commensurate with the growing interest in the work our correspondence has reached nearly seven hundred letters this year, many of which required from three to ten pages of writing, and several hours of careful thought. This all being done by hand writing required many hours of labor. The office should be provided with a typewriter and a first-class manifold device. It will render less laborious the work of the Superintendent, and, best of all, it will greatly increase his possibilities.

Several other items I will not attempt to enumerate. But in summing up the work would say, only, that have done the best we could. We recognize God's hand in the work, and praise his name for the strength and courage he has given us when we were in the need thereof. And we bespeak for the General Association a peaceful, spiritual, and profitable convention—the closing of a successful year's work, and the opening of a year of still greater promise. May the blessing of peace, love, and unity rest upon us, and God's Holy Spirit direct us both during this meeting and in all time that is to come.

Reports of the First and Second Assistant Superintendents had not been received.

Bro. W. N. Robinson, Secretary.
(See page 228):—

An interesting item concerning the Society Islands schools was stated, as reported by Sr. Case. All their literature is in writing. There remain about fifty copies of the Question Books, formerly used by the Sunday schools in this country—all in script. All the members go to the Sunday school from the infant to the aged; a point for the study of many in our branches.

Sr. Mamie A. Allen, Librarian:—

LIBRARIAN'S REPORT.

Have on hand the bound volumes of Sunday school Quarterlies, that were handed over by the former librarian, also some unbound numbers. Have subscribed for nine numbers of each grade of the past year's issue. Had hoped that during the year I could find out exactly how many and what books are in the different Sunday schools, so I could make such report to the convention. Wrote to a number of the district presidents to find out, if possible, the names of librarians to correspond with them, and thus ascertain the data, but received no replies from some and from others the librarians were not known. So I simply make this general report from what I have been able to observe, and from what I have learned by correspondence.

In the larger Sunday schools good libraries have been started, and the books are in good circulation. In the smaller schools effort has been made in some, to begin a library; but little has, as yet, been accomplished towards effecting the result. No reports from district librarians have been sent to me, so I cannot make a full report, as I believe the librarian ought to be able to do.

MAMIE A. ALLEN, Librarian.

LEON, Iowa, March 23, 1898.

Sr. C. B. Kelley, Treasurer. The report showed the following totals: Balance last report $926.28; received since, $2,152.30; expenditures $2,444.37; balance on hand $634.21.

Number of Quarterlies now issued of each grade; Senior, 5,200; Intermediate 4,350; Primary 3,300.

The report was referred to an auditing committee. The chair appointed Brn. J. A. Gunsolley, H. E. Moler, and Sr. Ella Miller.

Reports were read from a number of workers and district superintendents:—

W. N. ROBINSON, General Secretary.

of her by Secretary Robinson. She promised to aid the Sunday school work of the Islands so far as her circumstances would permit.

A communication was read from the superintendent of the Fremont, Iowa, district.

The Revising Committee reported as follows:—

To the Sunday School Convention: As your Revising Committee, appointed at the convention of 1897, we appointed the following named editors to prepare lesson quarterlies: Sr. Anna Salyards editor of the Senior Grade; Bro. Duncan Campbell editor of the Intermediate Grade; and Sr. Vida E. Smith editor of the Primary Grade.

In harmony with the proceedings of last convention the following resolution was adopted by the committee and communicated to the editors: "The committee is of the opinion that the matter of uniformity of lesson texts, passed upon by the convention, should be given an early trial; and recommend to the editors that, in connection with the officers of the association, they consider the same with a view to adopting a uniform lesson text at the earliest time practicable."

The question of issuing Book of Mormon quarterlies, referred to the committee, was deferred for future consideration.

After consultation with the general officers the editors were "authorized and instructed to prepare a fifth quarterly during the present year's appointment, if practicable, at the same rate of compensation provided for the other quarterlies."

This extra quarterly has been prepared, and lessons are now provided for up to October 1, 1898; thus avoiding possible delay in issuance of lessons, and enabling all editors to keep the work ahead from now on.

We have revised the lessons during the year, as provided for in our appointment.

We submit the following communication from the editors with our report:—

"LAMONI, Iowa, March 24, 1898.

"Brethren of Revising Committee:—We, the editors appointed by you to prepare the several grades of quarterly lessons, are able to report to you that, at this date, we have completed the work assigned us; namely, five series of lessons, and that lessons are now prepared covering the time up to next October.

"We are further pleased to say that we have labored in mutual peace and good will and feel that we have derived benefit from our interchange of thought in preparing our work.

"Hoping that our work may be approved by our brethren and by the great Master, we subscribe ourselves,

"ANNA SALYARDS.

"DUNCAN CAMPBELL.

"VIDA E. SMITH."

Elder Heman C. Smith, whom the committee appointed its chairman, has not been with us since the month of July; but from correspondence is in harmony with revising work since that time.

Respectfully submitted on behalf of the committee.

E. L. KELLEY.

R. S. SALYARDS.

LAMONI, Iowa, April 2, 1898.

The Song Book Committee reported:—

We, your committee appointed on the work of the Sunday school song book, report, that we have unanimously concluded from experience in the past work of the committee that the possibility of compiling a creditable book for the Sunday schools is quite far in the distant future, and that the association would be warranted in abandoning the project for the present at least.

At the last annual meeting of the association the committee was authorized to publish any of the material on hand they deemed suitable in the Quarterlies or Autumn Leaves, having such matter made into plates for use in the future book. The committee have not considered it wise to incur the expense of making such plates.

In conclusion, the several members of the committee desire to state that they are not willing to longer continue on the work of the committee, and ask that the association will release them forthwith.

Signed,

F. G. PITT.

LUCY L. RESSEGUIE.

A. H. MILLS.

The report was adopted, the committee released.

The convention adopted "a vote of thankful appreciation to the editors and of the Revising Committee for the work of the past year.

The convention authorized the superintendent to appoint one hour's time for consideration of quarterly lessons. Ten o'clock Tuesday morning was the hour named; speeches were limited to three minutes, except by special arrangement otherwise.

An amendment to the Constitution was offered, in effect that district librarians be provided for, to assist in the work of the General Librarian, as recommended by the latter.

It was referred to a committee: Sr. M. A. Allen, Brn. J. A. Gunsolley, and William Clow.

The committee appointed to revise and cheapen prices of school supplies reported:—

We, your committee appointed to revise records and secure reduction in prices of same, report that, by our request, the price of class records has been reduced from 75 cents to 50 cents per dozen. Also a new Sunday School Secretary's Record has been provided, selling at 40 cents, good for one year. Plates for this were purchased by the association at a cost of about $15.00.

Respectfully,

T. A. HOUGAS.

J. A. GUNSOLLEY.

F. E. COCHRAN.

The report was received and spread upon the minutes.

A motion to provide for a Sunday school missionary was presented. It was referred to a committee: Brn. T. A. Hougas, G. H. Hilliard, and A. H. Smith.

Adjourned to 7:30 p. m.

The evening session opened with a larger attendance, quite a number of delegates having arrived during the day. The opening song was followed with prayer by Bro. J. M. Terry.

The first number on the program was a paper by Sr. Mamie A. Allen, the Librarian, on the subject of "The Sunday School Library."

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL LIBRARY.

The field of literature is large. No man alone can measure its length, and breadth, and compute its area in a lifetime. It would require all the lifetimes of all men to accomplish so great a task. Literature forms the basis of all culture, of all that is refining and elevating in the moral and intellectual nature. So-called literature, but which is better styled trash, works a contrary effect by lowering and debasing the standards of morality and intellectuality.

To-day among educators there is a growing sense of the importance of literature as one of the grand factors in the education of the child, and of what reading ought to do for the child.

Best thought among those prominent in educational circles seems to be in the direction that literature is another chapter in the revelation of life, and that it ought to make for the life and character of the individual. This growing conviction of the importance of reading creates a stronger demand upon the libraries so that the young people may acquire a love for reading and a taste for good reading.

We may forget things we learn, but we never forget that which we love. It is of great worth to us that the books which we place within reach of the young mind, so susceptible of impressions, be attractive, and along the line of best development of the good.

I believe, then, that those who are at all interested in the improvement of the child in the line of his reading (and we ought all to be interested) should see to it that we read literature, not read about literature. The true teacher, the true librarian, the true parent will do this.

In the child the interests in reading are at first narrow in range. Our efforts should be to widen those interests, and thus create new ones. The reader finds in his books that which strikes responsive chords in his own being. He finds examples of courage, of love, of devotion, and of self-sacrifice. He is inspired by these to form his ideal of that which is elevating, and the guiding stars that his imagination places before him, lead him on, and raise his life and life work to a higher plane. By means of his reading he comes in touch with the higher realities and nobler possibilities of life, and a life spurred to better deeds is the result of the time spent with the master minds of literature. What we want then is not only the good for our boys and girls, but we want the best; for there is truth in the words of Ruskin, "The good is the enemy of the best."

If we would know children we must know the literature of children, and by our knowledge and sympathy increase our power. During the past year in one of our Western States, observations were made upon children's reading by putting before each child a number of questions as to the kind of reading they enjoyed most; the source of obtaining reading matter, and whether they talked to anyone about what they had read. The answers revealed many general facts that are useful as guides in selecting reading matter for young people. In the boys at the ages from nine to fifteen, or during the formative period of their lives, an eager desire for stories of adventure, war stories, stories of great men, such books as appeal to the sense of manly vigor, courage, and bravery. Among girls of about the same age a similar tendency manifests itself in their desire to read of those of their own sex who have made something of themselves in the world. As the boys and girls become youths and maidens, desire becomes more eager for works of fiction, all those books that approach the sentimental and add the quality of affection to their ideas of manliness and womanliness.

The sources of obtaining reading were the school library, home library, and lastly, Sunday school library. The fact that the Sunday school library was the least used seemed to me to give the impression that the most attractive books were to be found somewhere else. The idea of placing on the library shelves reading matter that does not pertain to religion and the conversion of wayward boys and girls seems to be in the minds of some contrary to good judgment. But experience, I believe, will show differently. Other reading our young people will have, and if we do not use our efforts to direct the selection in the lines of their tastes we fail to a certain extent to do our whole duty.

In any library the books mostly called for are the ones in which the stories are true to life; where the characters are not altogether improbable and the events are such that might happen. Where the reading is carefully trained the youth and maiden do not have desire for the lower works of fiction and wild adventure stories; but the mind demands food of more substantial nature. It is true that many of the boys and girls in the Sunday school have their tastes for a certain class of literature formed before we have an opportunity to use our influence, and it is true also, that the Sunday school library forms only a small part of the child's reading, yet it is possible to make that influence that is within our power, and that small part the very best. And, I believe, we shall be able to realize as grand results in this department of Sunday school work as in any other.

During the year I have tried to think out the best plans for the practical work of the librarian, and the best means to accomplish the aim of the Sunday school library. The results of my thoughts which have seemed the most satisfactory I will present for your consideration. First of all it is necessary that the one selected to work as General Librarian should have the perfect confidence of the workers he represents, if such a one can be found; and I believe that among our numbers some are fitted for this through years of reading. It ought to be a person who is so well acquainted with books and authors that to run over a list of titles of books he will feel at home and among acquaintances, many of whom have become friends because of the rich quality of the literature they bring at once to his mind. Then, too, the librarian needs to be constantly on the alert for new books that are every year in the market. And he needs to read many of them, especially the works of new authors, that he may try them before assigning them to the list of friend or enemy.

I am aware of the fact that here lies an obstacle. New books are not attainable without expense, and unless the librarian is so situated that he may have access to these books without actually purchasing he may find it a difficult matter to obtain them.

The librarian ought to know the name and the author of every book that is to be found in any library of any of the Sunday schools that belong to the association. He ought to know these books either by his own reading of them or by the decision of some one in whom he has confidence as an adviser.

In connection with this idea of the amount of literature with which the librarian should be acquainted, I wish to present the plan that is followed by the Library Association of the State of New York for supplying public libraries with the best reading.

It seemed to me a most excellent one, and one which we might follow. The librarian is assisted by a literary committee. This committee situated at different places are constantly on the lookout for new books. They are placed under a similar responsibility to that of the librarian, and are persons whose judgment is such that it may be relied upon. Any book of doubtful character may be examined by the various members of the committee as well as by the librarian, and by the counsel of these be assigned its place. From time to time these workers in the line of literary development arrange a list of books that they have selected as the best, and with the prices at which they may the most reasonably be purchased, publish it, and from the list other libraries make their selection.

The librarian's field is not an easy one in which to work alone, for more or less our minds are prejudiced in certain directions, and while one chosen for this work must lay aside all personal feelings, as far as possible, and read literature from a moral and intellectual standpoint alone, it is easier and, I believe, better results can be obtained, if assistants are appointed by proper authority with whom the librarian may advise.

Our other plan, or rather a plan which may be made a part of the one just presented. In nearly all the leading magazines and papers of the day one part is devoted to short reviews of new books, an evidence of the great importance that is attached to literature. Could not something of this nature be done in our Sunday school work?

During the year as much, perhaps, as you had expected and anticipated has not been accomplished by the librarian for this department; but I give you the result of my thoughts, and I hope more successful work may be done.

And now, in closing, I leave with you a thought in the words of another:—

"It is through literature that the genius of the race, appearing in exceptional individuals, instructs the multitudes, educates man's insight into the distinction of good from evil, reveals to him the ideals of what ought to be, and elevates the banner of his march toward the beautiful good and the beautiful true."

The paper was attentively listened to, and was evidently appreciated by the audience.

Following this paper the assembly formed itself into a committee of the whole, for the purpose of considering the subject of "Sunday school libraries." The blackboard was called into requisition and the audience was asked to give expression to its opinions on the subject. The outline developed on the board resolved itself into the following:—

1. Object: ¹To provide for teachers' and officers' needs. This thought was elaborated to also comprehend the education, the development of the child, rather than to merely entertain—"to ²instruct and entertain the child."

2. Of what composed: ¹Historical: Standard and authentic works. ²Biographical works: Lives of men and women of commendable character. ³Scientific works: Carefully selected scientific works. ⁴Works of travel and exploration. ⁵Fiction: The discussion of this subject took a wide range, as usual. It was sought to draw a proper line between useful and improper fiction. Some argued against all fiction, some in favor of carefully selected works of fiction that possess merit and are designed to exert influence for good. The prevailing sentiment was in favor of reading "all good books," those possessing light and truth from whatever source, and that were calculated to broaden the mind and widen the sympathies of the human heart, and develop the humanities. The point was not overlooked in the general statement, that man, the offspring of God, has, through the great indwelling illuminant "that lighteth every man that cometh into the world," given expression to its inspiration in many of the good works of fiction that have been written to help the race to higher ideals and nobler conceptions of life. The audience accepted the statement, "carefully selected works of fiction." "Religious works: It was admitted that as much discrimination ought to be used here as elsewhere, hence the term "carefully selected" was also added.

The interest was unabated, but the time, already extended to 9:25, required that consideration of new features be proceeded to.

The next subject was the work of the librarians in the schools. Sr. Allen gave a brief statement of points already made in her report, published herewith.

The superintendent announced that further consideration would be taken up in the Institute work. The exercises were then brought to a close.

TUESDAY, APRIL 5.

Business was resumed at nine o'clock. The hymn "Come learn of the Meek and Lowly" was sung, followed by prayer by Bro. W. N. Robinson. After another hymn the minutes were read and approved.

The choristers announced appointment of Srs. Nellie Chatburn and Roxanna Gaylord as organists.

Certain proposed amendments to the Constitution, providing for the office of district librarian, were referred to a committee.

The report of Sr. Alice Case, superintendent of the associated mission Sunday schools of the Society Islands for the year ending April 2, 1898, was read:—

I submit below a brief summary of my work as district superintendent of the schools in the Islands mission. I have traveled extensively during the past year among the various schools, calling at the islands of Arutua, Apataki, Niau, Fakarava, Takaroa, Hikueru, Raroia, Taenga, Hao, Amanu, Marutea, Takaboto, and Tahiti; remained from three to five weeks on each island. I found everywhere an advancement manifest, and an increase in membership and attendance. I have organized three new schools in the past year, and would like just here to correct an item in the report which I handed to the secretary prior to this, in which I gave the number of schools to be 20. I should have said 22. In my visits to the schools I have everywhere met with courteous treatment from all, and have received the hearty aid and support both of laity and priesthood.

At our convention held the 2d of April, 1898, I was nominated for superintendent, by one of the principal elders of the South Sea Islands mission, and received the unanimous vote of the congregation. I make this statement to correct any erroneous impression that may have been left upon the minds of this convention in regard to the position I have occupied for the past two years, and which Sr. Ella Devore filled so acceptably for some years previous to my appointment.

As stated in the statistical report our growth has been retarded by lack of books. Both Sr. Devore and myself spent the greater part of our time in writing copies of the Question Book for the use of the schools. Could they be printed, so that they might be put into the hands of the people, much good might be done, and greater growth could be observed. I do not desire to be understood that I put this book (compiled by Sr. Devore) before the Quarterlies. By no means. But as the child must pass through the primary department before entering higher grades, so they of the Society Islands mission must be educated up to the point where they can intelligently use the Quarterlies.

As you will remember, we in America made use of the small Question Book compiled by Sr. Walker, before we grew into the books we use at present. When the proper time arrives, no one will be more pleased than I to see the Quarterlies translated and used among our schools of that far-off mission.

The people of the islands are greatly interested in both the Sabbath school and work proper, and the entertainments which are given yearly. The work of their present convention and entertainment was left in charge of the assistant superintendent, Bro. Tapu (Tāpoo), who will probably be placed in charge of the work for the coming year. Our thoughts and prayers are with that people, and we trust that they may grow and develop until they are at one with their brethren of a more favored race.

I feel to request that every Latter Day Saint may remember them before our heavenly Father, that they may be enlightened and uplifted by the efforts that have been and are being made in their behalf.

You sister and coworker in the Sabbath school, ALICE M. CASE.

The committee on credentials recommended that Brn. M. H. Forscutt and William Newton be added to the Society Islands delegation. It was so ordered.

The report of Bro. F. E. Cochran, First Assistant Superintendent, was read:—

FIRST ASSISTANT SUPERINTENDENT'S ANNUAL REPORT.

The General Sunday School Association may now be said, with some degree of truth, to have become strong. Our organization, considering its age, has rapidly extended. Still there is abundant room for growth in every phase of our work. We are not yet so strong that we cannot become stronger; not yet so perfect that there is no longer need for greater perfection. And while we may look with some degree of satisfaction at what has been accomplished, it should not be of that character that will lull us into the fancied security which will suffer us to relax vigilance. We have made mistakes, we may make more. And, what lies before is so much greater than what we have accomplished, that we are, comparatively, at the beginning of our work. In a word, if there is any point this side of eternity at which we may stop with safety, no one has really yet discovered it. I trust, therefore, it is no reflection on the body to suggest that wisdom, humility, watchfulness, and prayerfulness should characterize every movement of this convention.

In all our work the tendency to fall into ruts should be carefully watched, if not entirely shunned. Edward W. Bok says, "The average Sunday school of to-day is a rebuke to intelligence." (Of course he cannot be speaking of Latter Day Saint schools, for he probably has never seen one.) Is his statement correct? If it is, are our schools so far above the class of which he speaks that his criticism does not apply to them? If not, to what extent are our General Conventions responsible? Let others be as they may, the wheels of our chariot should have such broad tires that it will neither drop into the ruts others have made, nor leave behind harmful tracks into which others shall fall.

As a people we are sometimes understood to believe that there is nought of good to be found in other churches or in the world. The platform that "all things which are good, cometh of God," is so broad that we ought not be thus misunderstood. The question for us to decide, however, is, What is good? Policies, methods which are not really good, but which seem so, are adopted, and once in the rut, it is so hard to get out. That there is much of good in the outside Sunday school world I am convinced; but that there is vastly much more which is not good I am doubly convinced. As I regard it, therefore, along this line we need great diligence, lest we heap to ourselves those things that shall in the end prove to have been but unnecessary burdens which have hindered us from reaching the real good we seek.

We are a peculiar people. Our ministers present the word in ways characteristic only of the spirit that actuates our movement. Does it, or does it not, therefore, logically and consistently follow, that in our Sunday school work we should develop methods peculiar to none but Latter Day Saint schools? If you answer, "It does," then I ask, How far in this direction have we actually progressed?

One distinctive characteristic of the work of Jesus Christ is its marvelous simplicity. If, then, the Sunday school is the child of the church, does it not properly follow that it, too, should be simple—not complex—in all its departments and phases, school, district, and general; simple in method, simple financially?

In this connection permit me to call attention to what one of the Twelve Apostles wrote in Herald of April 1, 1896: "Stop putting so much money and effort into minor organizations, good enough in their place, but not fundamental. Our numbers are too few to support everything. Let's have a year's healthy growth once without increasing the outlay. Get on a better footing. We are getting topheavy with organizations, presiding functions and presidential material, all of which require increased financial aid."

Permit me to ask, Is there not here a broad hint that might be considered with profit by the General Sunday School Association? The hint, liberally interpreted into good round English would run thusly: Would it be wise to lessen our receipts and expenditures, and thereby encroach less on the financial domain of the church?

I was permitted to attend the Institute held at St. Joseph, Missouri, December 26-29, last. Much of the work done was excellent, and the Lord by his Spirit, to a marked degree, was present. Does it follow, however, that his presence indicated that the Lord would sanctify or bless the unwise things we may have said or done? I am frank to say that I am as yet unable to see, from a financial standpoint, at least, the wisdom of a general gathering of this kind intermediate between the fall reunions and the two General Conventions and Conference;—so closely upon the heels of the former, so nearly preceding the latter. Might not the same work—or a modified form of it—be done in such a way as to more generally diffuse it, attended with far less expense?

This report must not be understood to mean that the writer does not heartily indorse the Sunday school work. That he does indorse it does not mean an indorsement of all that has been, and is being done in the name of the Sunday school. The question, What is Sunday school work proper? and the other, What are possible burdens we are lugging along that were better dropped, are quite separate and distinct. It is only to the latter question that this report is addressed.

Our work has accomplished good. If continued along right lines it is destined to accomplish much more. Notwithstanding this it is quite possible to overestimate it. Nor has it yet arrived at a place where we may cry, from a Sunday school standpoint, with either safety or consistency, "All is ease in Zion."

In conclusion, permit me one suggestion for your possible action at this convention. I recommend that a standing committee of, say, five, composed of persons other than the General Officers, Quarterly Editors, or Revising Board, be appointed, whose duty shall be to take under consideration the coming year the question of improvement of our quarterly system.

That this convention may be marked by the presence of the Holy Spirit, and that we may eventually be led and guided into "all truth," is my prayer.

Your fellow worker,

F. E. COCHRAN,
First Asst. Supt.

The auditing committee's report on the Treasurer's account was presented. It contained recommendations that vouchers be obtained for all moneys expended, for publishing, and other expenditures. It was referred back to the committee for further consideration of the matter of vouchers.

Discussion of the Quarterly lessons being the special order of the hour, it was proceeded to, and the following named persons spoke under a rule limiting them to three minutes each: Srs. B. C. Smith, Blanche Andrews, Brn. W. A. Blair, E. D. Bailey, A. M. Chase, L. E. Hills, E. H. Fannon, Srs. Clara Peck, — Christiansen, C. Ballinger, Brn. David Anderson, C. Scott, W. N. Robinson, G. W. Blair, J. F. Mintun, Sr. J. C. Clapp, Brn. Frank Criley, H. H. Robinson, M. H. Bond, E. E. Petre, T. J. Sheldon, William Clow, Sr. B. C. Greer, Bro. Leonard Houghton, and Sr. Palfrey.

Others desired to speak, but time forbade. The discussion showed a wide range of opinion. Some favored an editor in chief, with one or more assistants. Some desired greater simplicity of language in the Intermediate grade. Some thought the historical lessons on the History of Israel should have been finished, but the majority favored the change to the more spiritual teachings of the lessons lately issued upon the attributes of God and the teachings of Christ. Some plead for graded text-books illustrated or accompanied by charts. Others thought the lessons too long. Less expense was also favored, while the idea was presented that Sunday school pennies spent for Quarterlies would never be collected for missionary work. Graded text-book work had been tried both in England and America and was obsolete; we had gone beyond that method. A teacher must learn how much of the lesson he can fix in the scholar's mind. All of a lesson need not necessarily be taught; some require and can assimilate more than others. The Quarterlies are edited by persons who cover a great deal of ground, and who seek to furnish the best of what they go over, which places it at the disposal of teachers. Memorizing of verses was favored, in lieu of any lesson system. Study of present Quarterlies necessitated study of the three standard books; this was both objected to and commended, the commendations showing the prevailing sentiment. The Quarterlies had prepared the young for church work. Study is required in the present system, and scholars get down to the study of principles, which they fix in mind. Teachers need to be spiritual; to do their work in the spirit of prayer. Some found the Quarterlies difficult at first, but after getting down to work they liked them. They were difficult only because heretofore teachers had not been required to get down to business. Both lower grades needed to be simplified; teachers must also be able to simplify for the smallest or youngest scholars. Many primary scholars cannot read, hence must be taught through the skill of the teacher to simplify and impart.

A suggestion that illustrated charts should accompany the primary lessons resulted in the discussion and adoption of the following resolution:—

Resolved, that a committee of three be appointed to investigate the subject of having illustrated cards to accompany the primary lessons, and upon consultation with the general officers, to publish if found practicable.

The following, in effect, in aid of the Saints' home, was also adopted:—

Resolved, that the General Sunday School Association assembled in convention request each school of the church to take up a collection on the third Sunday in May, 1898, for the purpose of furnishing the halls of the Saints' Home at Lamoni, Iowa; and that the treasurer of each school be instructed to send money to the General Association Treasurer, and that the latter be authorized to place this fund in the hands of the Bishopric for use; and so that it may be in hand by June 15, 1898.

Bro. Hougas explained that the collection was a special one—to be taken in addition to the regular collection in the schools on the date named.

The resolution was adopted with the understanding that the funds collected be sent to the General Treasurer, the latter to keep account thereof and turn over to the Bishop.

Adjourned to two o'clock.

The afternoon session was opened promptly; prayer by Bro. J. W. Waldsmith. Minutes read, approved.

The special order—the election of officers—was taken up, resulting in the choice of the following: T. A. Hougas, Superintendent; J. A. Gunsolley, First Assistant Superintendent; Charles E. Crumley, of California, Second Assistant Superintendent; W. N. Robinson, Secretary; A. B. Hanson, of Lamoni, Treasurer; Mamie A. Allen, Librarian. The choice in each instance was made unanimous.

A vote of thanks was tendered the retiring officers for their services.

The auditing committee reported. Their report was approved, including a recommendation that vouchers be obtained for all moneys expended.

Committee on Sunday school missionary reported:—

The committee met and consulted, and report: That in our judgment we do not consider that it would be wise at the present time to appoint missionaries or a missionary in the field as a Sabbath school missionary.

We believe the Superintendent and his two assistants are force enough in the field at present, with the aid which the general church missionaries give them, to meet all demands in that line. It is also our opinion that such missionary work would in some sense hinder local laborers; also the expense would be such that the association is not in condition to meet.

The committee are of the opinion, that if the association desires, the Superintendent might be so maintained in the field that he could give his entire time to the work; this would supply the want now felt, in part.

We also recommend that the regular church missionaries be requested to interest themselves and give as much of their time as they consistently can to the Sunday school work.

T. A. HOUGAS,
A. H. SMITH, } Com.
G. H. HILLIARD,

The body chose Bro. F. M. Sheehy, Sr. L. L. Resseguie, and Bro. C. H. Burr to act as committee on primary cards.

Committee to purchase furnishings for halls of Saints' Home, Alexander Hopkins, Frank Criley, E. L. Kelley.

The following amendments to the Constitution were adopted:—

We, your committee on amendments, report and recommend as follows:—

That article 3, section 1, of district associations, be amended by striking out the words "and a" and adding the words, "and a librarian."

That the following be added to article 4, as section 5:—

5. Librarian.—The librarian shall keep a record of all books by title and author in the various libraries in the district.

He shall seek to promote the efficiency of library service in his district by advising with General Librarian as to establishing and maintaining libraries, by informing himself of the needs and possibilities of his district, by encouraging the circulation of books between the schools of his district, and the collection and distribution of literature for missionary purposes.

He shall also do what he can in collecting and preserving such evidences of archæological and other data as have a bearing in establishing the fact of the ancient civilization of America and of the latter-day restoration.

MAMIE ALLEN, } Com.
WM. CLOW,

The assembly made choice of Brn. E. L. Kelley, R. S. Salyards, and H. A. Stebbins as the Revising Committee.

A resolution followed and prevailed: That the selection of editors and fixing of compensation be left with the Revising Committee, the Superintendent and First Assistant Superintendent.

Adjourned to seven p. m.

The evening session was opened with the usual exercises; Bro. J. L. Goodrich offering prayer. The minutes were approved.

The Superintendent, First Assistant, and the Secretary were authorized to appoint a committee on program for the next convention, the Superintendent to be chairman of said committee.

A resolution was adopted providing that when adjournment is had it be subject to the call of the Superintendent.

The following was moved:—

Resolved, that we adopt the recommendation of the First Assistant Superintendent, that a committee of five be appointed, outside of the General Association officers or the Revising Board, or editors, to take into consideration the arrangements and improvement of the Quarterlies or other course of study, and report at next convention.

It was adopted.

The following was also moved and adopted:—

Resolved, that we recommend to the committee appointed to select editors for the Quarterlies that there be a less number appointed, or that one be appointed as editor, and he to choose his assistant.

The Superintendent requested that he be provided with a typewriter and manifold device, in order to facilitate the work of correspondence. The request was granted; the Superintendent being authorized to make the purchase and draw on the Treasurer for the amount.

A committee of three was appointed by the body to solicit contributions of music, and to be custodians of music already collected, for a Sunday school song book: John L. Morgan, of Keb, Iowa; William Richards, of Higbee, Missouri; Sr. Belle James, of Independence, Missouri.

Committee of five to consider improvements in lessons: Brn. J. F. Mintun, M. C. Fisher, G. W. Blair, and Srs. Louise Palfrey and B. C. Smith.

The sum of one hundred and fifty dollars was set apart for use, under direction of the officers, for the good of the general work.

The general officers were instructed to submit an itemized statement of receipts and expenditures in their reports to the conventions.

The Secretary was instructed to publish in the HERALD a notice of a proposed amendment to the Constitution, to provide that all general officers and general appointees of the church be ex officio members of the Sunday school conventions.

The chair defined the general church authorities contemplated by the resolution as follows: The First Presidency, the Patriarch, the Twelve, High Council, Seventy, Bishopric, Church Secretary, Church Recorder, Church Librarian, Church Historian, Assistant Historian.

President Joseph Smith made an address, stating that according to what had been done in the conventions was in favor of education, and in the broad sense of the term. He made a plea on behalf of education upon general lines, for the purpose of preparing all our young people for the duties and privileges of life in its various spheres of action. The church had provided an educational institution. We must as a people rally to its support. We must not employ agents to do a work and then leave them unsupported in a financial, moral, or any other sense. This body cannot justly go back on its record in this regard. Graceland College should be made self-sustaining. We should make a cohesive effort. It is necessary for us to make this effort. Others here will speak further in behalf of the college. A man's religion, according to Henry Ward Beecher, should get him body, soul, mind, and pocket.

Bro. Anderson presented a song, words by Jean Ingelow, music by Sr. Audentia Anderson, "The White Clover Song," which had been published solely in the interest of Graceland College, which would be sold by him at fifty cents per copy. The song was then sung by Sr. Viola Blair, accompanied by Sr. Anderson.

Adjourned to 8:30 a. m.

WEDNESDAY, THE 6TH.

The closing session of the convention opened at 8:30 a. m.; prayer by H. N. Hansen.

The time was devoted to the reading of a Sunday school newspaper, edited by Bro. Charles Fry and Sr. T. A. Hougas. The newspaper was replete with spicy notes and hints from beginning to end. We regret that we have not room to publish it.

Bro. J. F. Mintun followed with an address, on how to carry home the good things heard at the conventions and institutes. He made many good points, but which we are unable to present in full in our limited space. Among them we note: Write the points in the heart and in the mind, and read the published accounts of the convention. Many heard with enthusiasm, but failed to retain and recall. All should be able by proper effort to retain, to recall, and to present and make personal use of what they learn in the gatherings.

The convention then stood adjourned, Bro. T. A. Hougas pronouncing the benediction.

The assembling was characterized throughout by a spirit of peace and unity, and seemed to be greatly enjoyed by all present. The workers were glad to be present, glad to meet one another, and renewed their interest in the work and increased their friendship for one another by meeting and greeting and in considering the interests of the general work. All separated in the spirit of happy good fellowship and gladness and good cheer.

Institute work and other features of incidental school work will be considered at called meetings of the workers during the conference. Another year of progress opens before the General Association. Success to all the workers. Those who labor will develop and be blessed in their efforts.

Elders E. L. Kelley, R. S. Salyards, and H. A. Stebbins, of the revising committee, and Elders T. A. Hougas and J. A. Gunsolley, of the association committee, appointed to select editors for Quarterly lessons, met and adopted the following:—

Resolved, that we employ one editor and such assistants as may be necessary. Sister Anna Salyards was appointed editor in chief, and Elder Duncan Campbell assistant editor.

The following was also adopted:—

Resolved, that the editors be authorized to solicit the assistance of such individuals in preparation of lessons as they may find available.

The report of Bro. M. C. Fisher, Second Assistant Superintendent, was received since convention adjourned, by the Association Secretary, Bro. W. N. Robinson.

THE GENERAL CONFERENCE.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 6.

THE forty-sixth General Conference of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints convened in the main auditorium of the stone church, at Independence, Missouri, on Wednesday, April 6, 1898, at ten a. m. The weather was cool but pleasant. The large assembly evidenced the increasing interest in the great latter-day work. Delegates were gathered from Maine to Canada and Oregon and Washington, on the North, and from the Gulf States on the South; from the Atlantic and Pacific States, east and west; and Europe, Australia, and the islands of the sea were also represented.

The assembly was called to order by President Joseph Smith, who announced the opening hymn, "Redeemer of Israel," which was sung, and President Joseph Smith offered prayer.

A permanent organization was effected by making choice of the following named officers: Presiding officers, The First Presidency, Joseph Smith, A. H. Smith, and E. L. Kelley; Secretary, R. S. Salyards, Church Secretary, who was authorized to choose his assistants. He made choice of Brn. T. W. Williams and A. B. Hanson.

A committee on credentials being provided for the President appointed as such Elders F. M. Sheehy, of Boston, Massachusetts; D. L. Harris, of San Bernardino, California; and James McKiernan, of Farmington, Iowa.

Addresses were called for, and the following named brethren responded: A. H. Smith, Patriarch and member of the Presidency; W. H. Kelley, President of the Twelve; James Caffall, J. H. Lake, and J. W. Wight, of the Quorum of Twelve; and E. L. Kelley, Presiding Bishop and acting Counselor in the Presidency.

Limited space prevents insertion of all.

Bro. A. H. Smith's address is as follows:—

I realize that the church members, many of them, have been wondering, and have asked in their thoughts, What is the Patriarch of the church doing? And I have thought to make some statement to the church relating to the matter. You will bear in mind that my call to the position of Patriarch was made last spring, and I made the effort to enter in upon the duties of that office, but I discovered that there was very little written in the records concerning the duties of Patriarch. I discovered something more than that, that there was something necessary that had not been provided for, but I was unable to provide these things. I have been willing to enter in upon the duties of the Patriarch so far as I understand them since my call, but earnestly desire more light in regard to the matter. Those wishing their blessings, of course, desire a copy of that blessing, and to obtain a copy I should have some one to make that copy,—take it as the blessing is given. I have felt very delicate about making or writing out a blessing after the blessing had been given. Again, I needed a record, for if a blessing was given there should be a record made of it. There was no provision made for this; and other things in like manner presented themselves as obstacles in the way.

I consulted, also, with the President of the church, and receiving no light or instruction that seemed to justify me in moving forward, I have not moved in that direction. However, I sought to improve the time in the line of Evangelist.

To me, it seems that there never has been so bright a prospect for the work as at the present time. The work is moving onward and accumulating, assuming proportions that are grand; and a realization of this fact encourages me in the call that has been made upon me; and my only desire is that I may make myself worthy, that I may be used by the Lord, in the calling whereunto he has called me, acceptably to him. I have not felt inclined to move forward hurriedly, but rather to move cautiously. I want to be right, and move in the right direction, but have not been inclined to push this matter at all—on the matter of my duties in the office named. I have felt myself ready when the Spirit would direct me to move forward, and I am still ready to move; and should it be the good pleasure of the Lord that these things that seemed to have been hindering should be supplied, the obstacles that have stood in the way should be removed, I shall enter in with joy and gladness upon the mission that has been assigned me in that direction. I shall make the effort in the future to make myself an approved servant. I have tried to in the past.

I would say that during the year what time I have been able to labor I have received the evidence of the Spirit confirming the work as strong or stronger than ever before. It has moved upon me in strength and power, and at times has caused me to weep and tremble, and rejoice in the work.

It is the work of God, and I desire to be an instrument in his hands to help move it on.

May God bless you.

Bro. W. H. Kelley:—

It affords us all, no doubt, great pleasure to be here to-day in such large numbers assembled after a year's separation, with beaming countenances and hopeful hearts. For myself the last year has been one of activity, so far as I have been able to be active; and my mind has been given to weighing matters probably as carefully as ever before, and more so. In the comparison of that that claims our attention, with others, its worth as compared with others, and at the conclusion of the year I meet with you here to-day still strong in the faith that this latter-day work is all that it claims to be. Though misunderstood by the masses of mankind, it has within it the principles of right, true gospel principles, as we find outlined in the scriptures of truth as taught by Christ and his apostles. That no person that is identified with the faith to-day needs be ashamed of his profession of faith; he need not be afraid that sometime along human experience he will have to give up his faith because some person has been able to prove it untrue; that is to say, if what has been revealed in the past—contained in the Bible, Old and New Testament—is true and came from God, if there is any such a thing as truth pertaining to the Christian religion. It is well known that the faith that we represent here to-day is not based upon creeds, councils, or inventions of men; that we go to the real source of Christianity for our profession of faith for fundamental principles, the New Testament itself; and hence it is easy enough as we pass along in the presentation of this faith—as it rubs against and is placed beside other faiths that we come in contact with in the world—to see its strength, its power, and its force; and whatever other individuals or persons representing other faiths may think of us as a people, they have been constrained to acknowledge that the faith or gospel principles that we advocate are founded in fact and cannot be overthrown. Some of our strongest antagonists have so declared, and this is much more than what can be expected to be said truthfully of many other theories of religion in the world.

In this day of advanced thought and comparison of views, people are looking for something as a foundation more real than true, in a religious sense, than what they have been conversant with in the past. The thinkers of the age, in a great many instances, are unsettled with reference to what they know about any religion—the Christian religion not excepted; the spirit of doubt and unrest is prevailing in churches as well as out of churches, and we find that individuals associated with the movement that we are engaged in, are the most staunch and confident of any class of workers that we have come in contact with. And when I make this remark, I do not do it in the sense but what others may feel as confident in following an untested, traditional faith, but I am talking of that class of individuals who think and make inquiry into the principles of their faith with a view to be able to assign a reason for their belief, and for their adherence to their cause. And I remark again, that so far as my experience goes among believers of the faith in the last year, their faith has been confirmed through the reading of the word, and through the impress of the Spirit, that we believe indited this latter-day work. The great claim that is made by us, in contradistinction to others to-day, is that God introduced this work specially for the good of mankind, and like he said to the apostles of old, "Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." We believe he has made a similar promise that he would be with us, and with all those that would become identified with this movement. Now if this part should fail we would necessarily lose heart, lose confidence; but in the presentation of this gospel theory, so to represent it, we find individuals coming from various parts of the land, becoming identified with it, and they make the statement that God does confirm that faith to them from heaven, which gives us strength and confidence to go on in the work. It enables us to measure others in some degree, so far as the spiritual forces are concerned. There are many spiritual forces that work to-day in the world, a great many kinds of people claiming they are moved upon by some spiritual power, so the claim of spiritual influences is not extraordinary in this regard; but what spirit is it that moves men, seems to be the question of to-day. Is it the one that moved the ancient saints and apostles? Is it the one that sustains the fact that Jesus is the Son of God, and he came unto the world to save men; that the doctrine that he consummated by his life work here was sanctified for the blessing, uplifting, and salvation of the human family? Is it that Spirit that sustains these facts, and if indeed the preaching of the gospel as declared by God was "the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth" is sustained by this heavenly force and power, it is no strange thing, it seems to me, that a handful of individuals, so to represent it, would congregate here to-day to take into consideration measures looking to the evangelization of the whole world. It is confessedly admitted that no such power of life and inspiration is among men of other faiths to-day as in ancient time.

So far as my observation goes, God has done his part in the last year among the saints, and among the ministers, when they have stood to preach the gospel with power and inspiration; surprising themselves at times, encouraging to believers, and convincing to inquirers. So we rejoice in the fact this morning that we are identified with a work that is in the hand of God, and he is able to give it success, so we are not discouraged in this regard. The work with us is increasing. There has never been a time when the outlook was more hopeful for the advance of the work in the East. Of course there is where wealth lies, where prejudice lies, where worldly influences lie, that are strong, and hence the opposition is greater perhaps than in any other part of the land. But the work is gaining in influence, and it commands respect. In many places men and women that at one time thought we were scarcely worth consideration, now begin to give us consideration, and believe we have the right of existence, and right of place in society. Best of all, they tell us that individuals that espouse this faith and live it, make good and worthy citizens, as good as any in the land, and our opponents are willing to concede this fact. So let them think as they may about our peculiar religious proclivities. If it turns out good men and women, loyal to state and society, with faith in God, they cannot find a great deal of fault with us any way. So I am in the faith this morning, and am pleased to see you all here; and may God bless us and make us strong for the work in the coming year, and confirm us for all time, is my prayer. Amen.

Bro. E. L. Kelley:—

The church finances for the year that has just passed, closed in a more satisfactory condition, to the mind of your speaker, than for any year prior in the history of the Reorganization. I present this thought at first for the reason that you all expect me at least to talk with reference to these conditions. Some things confront the church to-day that were never thought of, not necessary to think of, when in the beginning of the Reorganization thirty-eight years ago; or, we may say, forty-six years ago. At that time the work was young, the individuals engaged in it were young, the workers were young in the work; but now there are many in the church who are aged in years and aged in the gospel service. The conditions of the church to-day, by reason of its growth and development, call for attention to hundreds of individuals who have to have care and oversight, to some extent, that was entirely eliminated from the work of the Reorganization in its first years, or the organization of the church sixty-eight years ago. This may account, in some degree, for the fact that the work of the Bishop has been a little different to the work of the first Bishop of the church. It is our duty to meet the demands of the work as they arise. Men and women will do that if they expect that the work is to progress and meet the issues that it is possible for it to meet.

The past year we have been engaged not only in collecting and disbursing funds for the relief of elders' families and the poor, as was the work of the church when it was inaugurated, but also of building and maintaining a proper place for the aged, the superannuated who have become such when giving their lives to the work of Christ, and hence some criticisms have come from different parts of the country, thinking that we are overstepping the bounds in this, and complaining that the saints, as others, paid their taxes and kept up the institutions for the poor in different parts of the country, and they thought it was doubtful propriety for the church to undertake to establish and maintain an institution known as a home for the saints in contradistinction to a poorhouse as furnished by the world. Until I began to examine and inquire into the conditions and surroundings of these different places it did not occur to me that there was so wide a distinction between them and proper homes. You send our poor who have become so by reason of the fact that they have undertaken to live the religion of Jesus Christ and present it to their neighbors and others, send them to a place where they never hear a public prayer, where their surroundings are anything but saintly, where they never hear a real kind word, possibly; where if they complain of their affairs they are met with rebuff in the most stern way, and then call yourselves the Church of Jesus Christ which presents such a condition as that, shows that you are not entitled to the claim.

Our work, then, has been to change these conditions, and I present the idea because some instances have been presented, not only in our own county, but from others, with respect to the work of the church in preparing for the care of the worthy poor belonging to the church. As an example: I received from our Board of Supervisors a letter stating that an individual was in the poorhouse of our county, who claimed to be a member of the church, and giving his name, said that they understood that we took care of our own poor, and asking that we send up for him. I replied to them that it was the work of the church and the undertaking to care for every worthy poor person of the church who was under circumstances that they could not care for themselves nor had friends and relatives who could care for them; but where an individual, as was in that case, of doubtful condition, could not come recommended, had wasted his life in riotous living, had not borne properly the name and profession that he had passed under and had not represented Christ, we left him to the care of the world wherein he had lived. I received a letter back in reply that they believed that that was right and proper, and made no further objections. I only mention it to show you that the place prepared is for worthy individuals, whether they have been in the church a great length of time or a short time, so that they have done their work well and come well recommended from the president of the branch where they live, from the Bishop's agent, and the president of the district where they live, so that there may be no doubt as to worthiness, or that necessity exists for such a home and such a place. That is now finished, prepared, fitted, and completed and in proper condition, and relieves this arm of the service of one of the greatest burdens that has been upon it for the past three years.

There is, however, in the work that is closely connected with that of the Bishopric, another institution of no less importance to the church, and should be of equal interest to every individual of the church, and which has been a burden, to some extent, upon the Bishop of the church, because he is made the Trustee of the institution, and it needs the care and oversight or close watch of every member of the church for a few years to come in order that it may make the success that it, is possible to make. I refer to the college that by resolution of this body was inaugurated four years ago. The building began three years ago and the school opened a little more than two years, now being in its third year, and I am surprised that individuals claiming to walk in the light of God, standing in the situation that Jesus placed his disciples when he said, "I give unto you to be the light of the world," should so far misunderstand the object and the work and the benefits of this institution as to think that the church could afford that it should stop or that we should abandon the enterprise, and let the body progress as we hope to do. So far as I have been able to judge of this important work, not only of the surroundings of the immediate vicinity where located, but in various districts of the church, it is to-day doing more good for the work in the world than any five ministers that you have in the field, and yet sometimes individuals think if they should contribute ten cents or a dollar to the building up of Graceland College or the maintaining of the same, it would be lost to their credit, not only here in this world but in the beyond. Now, I am as much interested in this work as I have been in the work of building a home. I believe it is equally important to the church to keep our young men and women within proper lines and bounds, because by experience of my own in the world when a young man and the observations that I have since had in traveling over this country, I have found out there are more young men and women lost to the work of God by reason of miseducation and coming within the spirit of Babylon which is contrary to Christ, than are gained by a half dozen ministers. If this is true it devolves upon us to maintain an institution where our young men and women may receive such a high and valuable education as will enable them to meet with the learning and the training of those who pass through institutions that are not under surroundings as this institution is.

Graceland College, as it was ordered through direction of the General Conference in this room, is a nonsectarian institution, so directed to be. I notice one of the professors of that college in this audience who belongs to no church, if I understand his denominational place. We never asked him when he came from the State University of Iowa what his religion was. We wanted to understand whether he was a man willing to do right, and was moral in his life, understood the requirements of a professor in his work, and was educated in the sciences of the times that we expected him to teach. He has given us satisfaction in that regard. If it is a nonsectarian institution, that is as far as we have the right to go. We can neither teach infidelity nor sectarianism there, for when I refer to nonsectarianism I refer to the fact that we should no more teach infidelity in such an institution than we should teach the views of some religious denomination peculiar to its tenets. Such an institution we have. Such an institution is placed in proper surroundings. Whatever may have been said and done by individuals who have been adverse to it and have thought that the church looked forward to an educated ministry after the fashion of different societies of our times, has been a mistake. We believe that God, with a polished shaft in his hand, is able to perform better work than with an unpolished shaft, and if any of you think it is not true, work in the service of the church in any position that you will come in contact with individuals of diverse views awhile and you will find those who are most easily worked with are those who have become polished either by educational training or under the inspiring influences of the Spirit of God through a long experience.

Now these matters are before the church to-day. They are to be dealt with. There should not be a man or woman or a boy or girl whose name is upon the church record who would for a moment think that we will go backward with reference to this institution, but that we will move forward, and I will say in reference to it that this remark is called out by reason of the fact that institutions who have erected colleges and places of learning, churches of different names and varieties and stronger than we are in many regards, have failed in their undertakings. We should not think of failing. We cannot afford to fail. We must not expect to go backward, but our motto should be, Forward.

The organization was further completed by the following appointments: Brn. Orville James and A. M. Chase choristers, they being authorized to appoint organists; and as ushers: Brn. B. C. Smith, Samuel Burnham, Ira Burdick, Mark Harrington, Wesley Ballinger, Nephi May, Alma Chatburn, Harry Hatty, and C. F. Church.

The following order of meetings was announced by the chair: Prayer service at nine a. m.; preaching at 10:45 a. m.; business session at two p. m.; preaching at 7:30 p. m. The chairman also stated that the transaction of business being the primary object, seats would first be provided for the ex officio members and delegates, the audience to occupy remaining ones. Seats were open to all alike at preaching and prayer services.

The ministry and delegates were then assigned to regular places as follows: The First Presidency, the Twelve, and the Bishopric on the platform; the High Priests and Elders to the right; the Seventy in front; the delegates next to the Seventy; the space next to the delegates and the gallery being left for visitors and others.

Elders J. M. Terry, U. W. Greene, and J. F. Mintun were appointed a committee to supply information to representatives of the press.

Hymn No. 35 was sung, and President Joseph Smith pronounced the benediction.

The afternoon business session convened at two o'clock, President Joseph Smith in the chair. Hymn No. 16 was sung, prayer by Bishop Kelley.

Minutes of previous meeting were read and approved.

The committee on credentials made additional report. The committee was authorized to insert the name of G. T. Griffiths in the list of the Ohio delegation. Other requests and statements were referred to the committee.

Reports were read from the following named missionaries in charge: W. H. Kelley, Heman C. Smith, G. T. Griffiths, J. W. Gillen, R. C. Evans, E. C. Briggs, J. W. Wight, I. N. White, J. F. Burton, C. A. Butterworth, Joseph Luff, and T. C. Kelley. Reports were also read from Brn. Hubert Case and Gomer Wells.

Elder R. S. Salyards, Church Secretary, reported.

Elder H. A. Stebbins, Church Recorder, reported. The Recorder's report showed: Total membership 40,639; baptisms 2,755; received by letter 1,195; deaths 451; expulsions 162; net gain 2,269; ordinations 222; marriages 311. Gains by States: Missouri, 356; Iowa, 311; Nebraska, 180; Canada, 174; etc. New branches, 19. Increased efficiency of branch and district clerks was noted by the Recorder.

The report of the auditing committee on Herald Office accounts was read and included in the minutes.

Announcements were made. President Smith pronounced the benediction.

The evening preaching service at half past seven o'clock was in charge Elder of Henry Sparling; Elder U. W. Greene addressed the congregation.

THURSDAY, APRIL 7.

The morning prayer service at nine o'clock was in charge of Elders John Chisnall and C. A. Beebe.

Elder H. E. Moler addressed the congregation at the morning preaching service. He was assisted by Elder Hubert Case.

Business was resumed at two o'clock, President Joseph Smith in the chair. After singing No. 53 (Hymnal), prayer was offered by Elder W. H. Kelley.

After the reading of the minutes, an additional report from the committee on credentials was presented.

Reports were read from the following named missionaries in charge: James Caffall, J. R. Lambert, John H. Lake, and George Montague.

The Bishop's report, also the auditing committee's report thereon, were read:—

Balance last report $1,112.22; received since $27,253.41; total $28,365.63. Expenditures $24,645.88; balance on hand $3,719.75. Receipts of agents $37,495.58. Expended and remitted to Bishop by agents, $32,679.75. Balance due from agents $4,815.83. Assets $60,044.34; liabilities $17,480.32; net assets $42,564.02. Net assets last report $37,876.66. gain during the year $4,687.36.

The report will appear in full in the HERALD and the summarized statement in the Conference Minutes. We omit elders', Saints' Home, and other accounts.

The following preamble and resolution on the death of Frances E. Willard was presented:—

Whereas, in the death of Frances E. Willard there has been removed from this mundane stage of activities and usefulness to one of higher and greater possibilities a great and noble woman,

Therefore, be it resolved that we, the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, in General Conference assembled, hereby express our sympathy and condolence towards the family as well as the Women's Christian Temperance Union, that wonderful and useful organization of which she was the honored head, trusting that her death may be to that movement like seed sown upon good ground, bringing forth one hundred fold.

Moved by Elders F. M. Sheehy and M. H. Forscutt.

Elder Sheehy spoke eloquently in commemoration of Miss Willard "the uncrowned Queen of America," and by a rising vote the assembly heartily manifested its sincere approval of the document.

The following on the Cuban question, prepared by Elder Joseph Luff, was moved by Elder W. H. Kelley and seconded by Brn. G. T. Griffiths and J. W. Wight:—

Whereas, there exists a condition of affairs on the island of Cuba, under which thousands of our fellow human beings are being victimized by tyranny, oppression, and cruelty in various forms, resulting in loss of property, liberty, and life at the instigation of Spanish authority; and,

Whereas, the lovers of liberty on said island are engaged in a laudable effort to free themselves from those conditions and to secure complete independence for their island from the thralldom of the oppressor; and,

Whereas, the government of the United States is now taking steps to relieve the present suffering of said islanders, and is seriously considering ways and means by which to aid them in securing the independence sought,—

Resolved, that as a church in conference assembled, we declare our profound sympathy with the strugglers for freedom in Cuba, and our sincere hope for the success of their cause.

Resolved, further, that we believe it to be the duty of the United States to render all possible aid, promptly, in the direction named.

Resolved, further, that in our opinion, the Government of the United States is morally obligated to supplement the noble efforts of those islanders, and should rally to the rescue of life, and the securement of liberty and independence for them; and that much as war is to be deplored, it is nevertheless preferable (as a necessary means to the end desired) to a continuation of the conditions that have so long existed in Cuba, and among her people.

Resolved, further, that we feel ourselves called upon by every humane, sacred, and patriotic obligation to indorse and support whatever legitimate steps the American nation may be compelled to take in this desired direction.

Resolved, further, that a member of this body be appointed to raise the American flag to some conspicuous place over or within this building, and that it be continued there during the remainder of our sessions.

The document was adopted by a unanimous rising vote; and by a subsequent motion the Secretary was instructed to forward a statement of the action, together with a copy of the resolutions, to president McKinley, by telegraph; which was done immediately after the close of the session.

Two large United States flags were suspended from the gallery, the audience applauding the unfurling of Old Glory.

A resolution providing for preparation of a report blank for use of missionaries in charge, was referred to the Quorum of Twelve, with instructions to report to the present conference.

A petition from the Southeastern

Illinois district concerning boundary lines, attended by a statement from the St. Louis district concurring in the requests, was referred to a committee of three: Elders E. Etzenhouser, H. A. Stebbins, and F. M. Smith.

A petition from the Kewanee district, asking action on boundary lines between that and the Nauvoo district was also referred to the same committee.

Statement No. 3 of the Bishop's report to the conference of 1897, asking consideration of the question of publication of an itemized report of receipts and expenditures was taken up, resulting in the adoption of the following:—

Resolved, that our present practice of publishing an itemized account of all moneys placed in the hands of the Bishop be continued.

A request concerning a letter of removal was referred to the Secretary, the Recorder, and the missionary in charge of Ohio.

Sr. Belle James, of Independence, was appointed stenographer to the conference.

Bro. Ezra Strong and wife, of Waterloo, Iowa, were received into membership and their names ordered enrolled on the church record, on evidence of their original baptism at Kirtland, Ohio, in the days of the Martyr.

A petition from the Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, district asking that the subject of preaching in branch limits by teachers and deacons be considered and acted upon by the conference, was referred to the Quorum of Twelve, with instructions to report at the earliest practicable moment.

Announcements were made for the evening and following morning services. A motion to excuse Brn. C. Scott and F. A. Smith from officiating at the morning preaching service, because of a meeting of their quorum, was denied.

"America" was sung, and the assembly adjourned; benediction by President Joseph Smith.

Elder W. H. Kelley addressed the congregation at 7:30 p. m. The auditorium was filled and the speaker was given close attention. Elder J. C. Clapp had charge of the services.

FRIDAY, THE 8TH.

The morning prayer service was held at nine o'clock, in charge of Elders R. M. Elvin and Roderick May.

Preaching at eleven o'clock by Elder Columbus Scott, assisted by Elder F. A. Smith.

Consideration of business was resumed at the two o'clock session, Bishop E. L. Kelley presiding; prayer by Bro. J. H. Lake. The minutes were read; the committee on credentials reported.

An appeal from the San Antonio branch, from an action of the Southwestern Texas district was referred to a committee: Brn. M. H. Bond, C. P. Faul, and J. W. Brackenbury.

The committee to which was referred the petition of the Kewanee district reported, recommending changes in district lines of the Illinois districts concerned, and the formation of a new district. The report was denied. For particulars see regular minutes.

The same committee reported on the petition and concurrence therein of the Southern Illinois district. The report outlined boundary lines by counties, instead of by lines of railroad as proposed, etc. Report adopted; for details see minutes.

Elder Heman C. Smith, Church Historian, presented a report for the church year, in which the leading items of church history, including missionary and local labor, changes in quorums, etc., were recorded. The full report will appear in the minutes.

The Quorum of the Twelve reported on the question of proposed blank forms for reports of missionaries in charge. The report was adverse to the preparation of a blank form, but favored necessary brevity. We insert the concluding clause:—

As one means of greater uniformity we advise that the missionaries in charge be instructed to report the total number of sermons, baptisms, ordinations, public debates, and new openings made for preaching the word; also the number of General Conference appointees laboring in their respective missions, with the general average number of sermons preached by each missionary.

A motion to amend by providing that such reports be limited to one thousand words, and a further amendment to reduce the limit to five hundred words, were defeated, when the report was adopted.

A preamble and resolution providing for representation of the church and its publications at the Omaha Trans-Mississippi Exposition was referred to the First Presidency and Bishopric.

In response to request therefor, President Joseph Smith appointed a committee to administer to the sick during the conference: Brn. R. C. Evans, J. S. Roth, R. J. Parker, T. W. Chatburn, I. N. Roberts, F. A. Smith, and O. P. Sutherland.

Following the usual list of announcements,—of quorum meetings, railroad certificates from arrivals and for those for whom they had been filled, letters for conference delegates, etc., etc., the closing hymn was sung, and the benediction was pronounced.

The attendance is large. The number of railroad certificates handed in to the Secretary is far in excess of the number required to secure the reduced rate. The social phases of assemblage shows the prevalence of the friendly spirit peculiar to the general gatherings of the church. All seem to enjoy meeting old and new friends, and the general expressions and manifestations of regard indicate to some degree the prevalence of the spirit characteristic of "the family of God." No doubt there is room for improvement in this regard—for the full development of such spirit and sentiments growing out of it includes a vast amount of growth in godliness; but what does appear along true lines is pleasant to note. When a true Latter Day Saint feels right he feels well and manifests such feelings in no uncertain manner. The religious life is the complete life; hence something approaching completeness in development is necessary to realize or approximately sense it. Finite conditions are necessarily limited, but not so much so as is generally concluded. Power is given the church "to overcome all things," we are told, in the revelations of God, and with the overcoming the child of God finds expansion in heart, mind, soul, and spirit, and he feeds and grows upon all phases of good as his enlightened appreciation increases his power to absorb and to give out the good above, around, about, and within. To receive is to give, and to give to receive. The Father of lights is generous, and designs to bestow an endowment that shall enrich all who receive "the adoption of children." His people can scarcely be his and be very limited or narrow in the elements essential to all true phases of life. Capacity for happiness is attendant upon, is resultant from the life of Jesus "made manifest in our mortal flesh; and, as with the Master, grace for grace received by application, and reception of the divine favor means the new man "renewed in knowledge," and "after the image of Him who created him. Great possibilities for happiness are open to the "just and true;" but attainment is based upon real devotion to truth—upon the sublimation of the human nature to the partaking of "the divine nature." The profession of faith made by the child of God requires no ordinary effort to insure divine approval, success, and "the crown" of eternal life. "Who is sufficient for these things?"

The sermon at 7:30 was delivered by Elder James Caffall assisted by Elder W. B. Toney.

SATURDAY, THE 9TH.

Prayer service at nine o'clock; Elders H. A. Stebbins and Israel L. Rogers in charge.

Preaching at 10:45 by Bro. T. J. Sheppard; Bro. W. A. McDowell assisting.

The afternoon business session was opened with prayer by Elder M. H. Forscutt; President Joseph Smith in charge. By request, the sisters removed their hats, that all might be able to see all portions of the audience freely.

The First Quorum of Elders reported: Eighty-two of their number had preached 3,010 sermons, baptized 213.

The Quorum of Twelve reported on the petition from the Pittsburg district:—

As a quorum we have considered the question referred to us—the right of teachers and deacons to publicly preach—and report as follows:—

Whereas, the law contained in section 17, paragraph 11, Doctrine and Covenants, clearly authorizes teachers and deacons to "take the lead of meetings, . . . to warn, expound, exhort, and teach, and invite all to come to Christ;" and,

Whereas, in section 42, paragraph 5, teachers are required together with elders and priests, to teach the principles of the gospel; and in section 120, paragraph 2, either of said officers are permitted to preside and,

Whereas, in our judgment said duties include in their performance what is commonly understood to be preaching, and,

Whereas, in section 83, paragraph 22, teachers and deacons are limited in their duties to local service,

Resolved, that in our judgment teachers and deacons are authorized by the law to labor as preachers within branches to which they belong, when they are presidents thereof, or with the advice and consent of the chief presiding officer.

This question was discussed at great length, after which it was moved to lay the matter on the table. The motion was denied by a vote of 125 to 61. The report was then adopted.

The following resolution was presented:—

Resolved, by this body, in conference assembled, that we concur in and hereby adopt the definition of the duties of deacon as defined by President Joseph Smith in Herald of June 15, 1871, and No. 25, Vol. 31, of the Saints' Herald.

The question was deferred and made the special order for Monday, the 11th.

The following was also adopted:—

Whereas, there is in Shinn's School History of America, pages 289 and 290, an extremely gross misrepresentation of the teaching and contents of the Book of Mormon, Therefore be it resolved, that we take this opportunity to express our regret at such uncalled for treatment from one who could so easily have obtained a knowledge of the truth; and we hereby call the attention of our committee on encyclopedias and histories to this matter, and request them to take measures to provide at once that said History be corrected.

The Third Quorum of Priests reported: Forty-one reported 503 sermons, 14 baptisms.

A resolution prevailed providing for a joint prayer meeting of all the ministry, in the lower auditorium, on Sunday morning from 8:30 until noon.

This was also adopted:—

Resolved, that the Secretary be and, is hereby authorized to devise and have printed a blank form of delegate credentials; and that a copy or copies be sent to each district or branch entitled to representation, prior to the convening of each General Conference.

A resolution providing for change in the College boards, was deferred until Monday the 11th.

A report and decision from the Quorum of Twelve was read and included in the minutes. It is as follows:—

To the Conference:—The quorum has, up to and including this morning's session, held twenty-three meetings—two of which were for prayer, and at which the Spirit of the Master was copiously manifest.

We present the following and ask that it may be spread upon the minutes as a quorum decision.

We believe it to be the duty of all missionaries who contemplate going to other fields than their own to do missionary labor, to first obtain consent of the missionary or missionaries, who are in charge, if practicable, of the fields where labor is desired to be performed.

Also; should labor be done by missionaries where they are compelled to pass through other fields than their own, in getting to and from their respective "fields of labor," then in both of the above cases all such labor should be reported to the one in charge of such "field of labor."

J. W. WIGHT, Sec.

A Sister Crook, who resided about three miles from Independence, and who attended the conference, was struck by a car of the Electric Line, which runs between Independence and Kansas City, receiving injuries from which she died. Her death caused general sorrow and sympathy throughout the assembly. Her funeral was announced to take place Sunday afternoon from the church.

A hymn was sung; benediction by Bro. W. H. Kelley.

Preaching at 7:30 by Bro. I. M. Smith, assisted by Bro. J. A. Grant.

SUNDAY, THE 10TH.

The ministry present convened in general service of prayer and testimony in the lower auditorium from 8:30 to noon, and from 7:30 to 9:30 p. m.; President Joseph Smith, Bishop E. L. Kelley, and President W. H. Kelley in charge of morning service; Elders W. H. Kelley, J. W. Gillen, and R. C. Evans in charge of the evening session. Prayer was made in behalf of the duties of Patriarch; the appointment of evangelical ministers in large branches; the permanent filling of the Presidency; the establishment of stakes; the appointment of additional bishops, and of other general interests of the work. A general interchange of thought followed. The brethren were blessed by the presence of the Holy Spirit, and unity and peace attended. They were brought into closer touch and fraternity of spirit by the meeting.

Bro. S. F. Cushing, of Nebraska, was ordained after the morning hour by Elders A. H. Smith, G. H. Hilliard, and J. F. Mintun.

President Joseph Smith addressed the congregation at 10:45 in the upper auditorium. He was assisted by his eldest living son, Elder Frederick M. Smith. The sermon was an excellent presentation of facts.

Preaching at 2:30 p. m., in the upper auditorium by Elder F. M. Cooper, Elder M. H. Bond assisting. Two children were blessed at the conclusion of the service.

At 2:30 Elder Columbus Scott preached the funeral sermon of Deborah Crook, an aged sister, before referred to. A large audience attested sympathy and respect for the deceased. Elder G. E. Harrington was in charge.

Elder J. W. Wight was the speaker at the evening services. He was assisted by Bishop E. L. Kelley. Large audiences greeted the speaker at each service. Many were present from Kansas City and other points during the entire day.

CONFERENCE NOTICES.

Alabama district conference will convene at the Lone Star branch, in Monroe County, Alabama, May 7 and 8, 1898. Come, all who can, and let us have a good meeting.

J. G. VICKREY.

BORN.

MORGAN.—To Bro. John L. and Sr. Ann Ellen Morgan, at Keb, Iowa, March 14, 1898, a son, and named John L. Blessed April 3, 1898, by Elder W. E. Williams.

DIED.

JONES.—At Bevier, Missouri, March 23,

1898, Selina, daughter of Bro. John and Sr. Selina Jones, aged 18 years, 5 months, and 3 days. Baptized at Bevier, Missouri, December 11, 1890, by Elder Thomas Wellington. Selina always carried a smile on her face. She carried the same into paradise. Funeral service by Elder J. C. Foss.

BUNKER.—At Streator, Illinois, January 23, 1898, Betsey Bunker. Sr. Bunker was born March 10, 1816, at Athens, Maine; was baptized March 25, 1878, at Streator, Illinois, by Apostle T. W. Smith.

KENTY.—Elmira M. Kenty, Arlington Heights, Massachusetts, February 22, 1898. She was born September 7, 1870, at South Rawdon, Nova Scotia; baptized by Elder F. M. Sheehy, 1886. She leaves a sorrowing husband and three little children. Sister Elmira was a good saint and a most faithful wife and mother. She was sick about eight months, and manifested much patience and courage throughout her sickness. Her husband was her constant and faithful attendant through all her sickness and keenly feels his loss. She was fully prepared for the change and was anxious to depart. She has joined the victorious throng in the spirit world till the resurrection morn. Funeral services at their home, Arlington Heights, Massachusetts, February 25. Many friends and saints were present; a most lovely display of flowers from those who loved her. Sermon by Elder R. Bullard.

HESLOP.—William Henry Heslop, February 21, 1898, at Arnott's Biscuit Factory, New Castle, New South Wales. A promising young brother in his 18th year. He was caught in the belt and shafting while putting the belt over the pulley overhead, and was instantly killed. The writer was called from Sydney by telegram to conduct the last sad rites. He was interred in Sandgate cemetery on the 23d. The band of which he was a member ("Barkel's Modle") marched in front playing the funeral march which visibly affected all in the procession. Nearly two hundred factory hands also attended in a body. His employers covered the hearse with costly wreaths. It was the most beautiful and sad funeral procession that ever left the locality. The deceased was baptized on the 20th of December, 1896, by Elder C. A. Butterworth. He was beloved by society, church members, and fellow workmen. He has gone to join his deceased mother whose death he mourned much, thus creating a double vacancy in the home circle. The Gosford Road chapel was crowded to its utmost to hear the funeral sermon on the Sunday night following the terrible fatality. It is consolation to know that his mangled body will rise again with every part whole and perfect in the first resurrection. The branch in which this fatality happened, (the Hamilton branch, Newcastle,) has had five funerals within a few short weeks, and three of them were from sudden fatalities. G. R. WELLS.

TRACY.—At Hudson, Oregon, April 1, 1898, Bro. L. M. Tracy, aged 42 years, 1 month, and 23 days. Was baptized October 13, 1891; was firm in the faith to the end. After a very brief illness he passed away in perfect peace, without pain or a struggle. He leaves a wife and six small children, with numerous other relatives and friends to mourn his departure from this life.

DAVIS.—Eleazer Davis was born at Sonora, Steuben County, New York, August 18, 1826; baptized October 28, 1877; died March 8, 1898, at Missouri Valley, Iowa, firm in the faith. Funeral service at the home in charge of Elder D. R. Chambers.

PORTER.—James Thomas, only son of Smyth and Laura Porter, March 25, 1898, aged 5 months and 15 days. The words of the blessed Master come vividly to our minds, "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not; for of such is the kingdom of God." Funeral sermon by Elder William C. Marshall.

BERRY.—Alta, five months old daughter of Charles and Sr. Emma Berry, passed away beyond, March 14. Funeral services at the home on the 15th, Elder Alma Fyrando in charge.

MICKEY.—James B. Mickey was born March 25, 1858. Had lived near Calhoun, Iowa, for thirty-two years. Had suffered much for some years past. Died March 26, 1898. Though not a member of any church, his mother-in-law is a member with us, and he was highly spoken of by those who knew him best. Funeral services at the home of his parents, Sunday, March 27; Elder Alma Fyrando the speaker.

DURFEY.—William E. Durfey was born January 14, 1846, in Lee County, Iowa; died April 6, 1898, in Fremont County, near Farragut, Iowa. He united with the church in 1863. Has lived a member of said church until the present time, and passed peacefully away strong in the faith of this latter-day work. At the age of 18 years our brother enlisted in the 3d Iowa Cavalry, Company C, and served faithfully until the close of the war of the rebellion. Was honorably discharged and has since lived an honorable citizen of this country over eighteen years. Funeral sermon preached by Elder J. V. Roberts, assisted by J. B. Cline, at the Christian church of Farragut, to a large and attentive audience of friends and loved ones.

SECRETARY'S ANNUAL REPORT.

If we were justified in any degree of rejoicing in making our report last year, we feel that we would be justified in singing psalms in doing so this. While the ideal condition has by no means been reached, we are certainly several rounds farther up the ladder than we were on April 1, 1897, and believe it fair to state that at least reasonable progress has been made.

Our numbers have not increased as rapidly as some might think they should, but there are a number of reasons for this, though the recounting of them would hardly properly come under this report. That there are difficulties to be met and overcome still before us is quite apparent, though we believe no larger than have already been mounted. This fact gives us courage and reasons to believe they will be mastered in time.

Our report last year was for the two preceding years, and showed an increase in membership of 340, or on an average of 170 for each year. This year we have to report the organization of fourteen new societies and an increase in membership of about 415. In addition to this four commissions are now out to be reported on. It will be noted that this is a very favorable report as compared with the one for the previous year. Our increase last year was 10.7 per cent of our membership, this year 23.1 per cent of membership, or an increase of 12.4 per cent over the increase of last year, making us about 2,165 members. While we look upon the increase in membership with pleasure, there are points that we have gained during the past year of even a more encouraging nature; viz., learning where we are and what we are here for.

One of the difficulties encountered in the organization of societies is the scattered condition of the saints in both country and large cities. This is a difficulty that in our judgment can be successfully overcome but in one way, and an explanation of our idea of that would not properly come in this report.

During the year have written about five hundred letters, besides mailing charters, circulars, etc. Have sent out twenty-four lists of instructions and commissions, resulting in fourteen new societies and four still out as mentioned above. In this work have been assisted by Sr. Hitchcock and others.

During the month of November, 1897, the existing conditions appearing to demand action, I endeavored to secure five hundred new subscribers for Autumn Leaves. This with a view to showing our appreciation of the magazine and courtesies extended the society during the year. In doing this wrote personal letters to individuals in each locality where our work had been introduced where any special activity had been manifested, and to some places where no society had yet been formed, though I knew of those residing there who were interested. In this letter requested that they kindly take the task upon themselves to see what could be done, allotting them a certain portion of the anticipated five hundred and asking that they secure if possible. To do this in the manner I believed it should be done, required about fifty pages of closely written type-written matter. Quite a number of those to whom I wrote acted promptly and I believe it has materially assisted the magazine, not so much in new subscribers as awakening a more general interest. Quite a number of new subscribers were secured, though it fell far short of the five hundred, but as a great many remittances were made direct, cannot say to just what extent it came short of the number.

Our work has not yet been introduced in Canada to the extent we had hoped, though one society has been formed there under favorable conditions. Believe when we decide upon a more definite course of study, and our work presented in such a way as to be understood, societies will be formed in a great many places where it is thought they cannot now. Recently a society has been formed in Indian Territory, which is the first in that locality.

Unless something now unforeseen should arise, believe the Religio has seen its darkest days, and that by careful and prayerful work its success is assured. Not that we have reached what we are aiming at, but we are upon a good, broad road, and making encouraging progress.

J. C. HITCHCOCK.

St. Louis, Mo., March 31, 1898.

Treasurer Russell Archibald reported: Balance last report $109.24; receipts therewith $225.36; expenditures $171.52; balance on hand $53.84.

Frank Mills, J. M. Lampert, and Bro. Barraclough were appointed by the chair to be the auditing committee.

The President then stated the importance of the business before the convention on the morrow, and exhorting that prayerful, humble preparation be made for it. The session then adjourned to meet at 7:30 the following morning for prayer service preceding the day's labors.

SATURDAY, APRIL 2.

Notwithstanding the early hour, the workers evinced their sincerity by being present on time, and the season that was had more than repaid for the sacrifice of fasting that was made. It was encouraging and inspiring, adding another evidence of the Lord's approval of the Religio endeavor.

After a brief intermission, business meeting opened. A resolution passed that all visiting missionaries under General Conference appointment, by presenting request, be privileged to voice and vote in the convention.

The principal feature of business, the report of "the committee of five," was then taken up and read, afterwards considered by section. It was printed in the February number of Autumn Leaves, in the Religio department,—the Arena.

The same striking unity that had prevailed with the committee, in their work, was again evidenced, as, with a few amendments, the convention adopted the suggested Constitution and By-Laws as a whole.

It was moved to have one course of study hereafter. After some discussion the Book of Mormon and archæology was the study decided upon for one year.

It was moved that the money on hand, known as the literary fund, which money was loaned last year to the Bishop of the church, be left to the Executive Committee to use at their discretion.

Election of officers resulted in the same ones being chosen again, except the Vice President, F. E. Cochran, who was unable to act again, he stated, because of other duties. Bro. Ammon White, of Independence, was elected in his stead.

The question of extending the Religio work by systematically representing it at the church reunions and Sunday School Institute was presented, and it was moved and carried that the Executive Committee be authorized to take the matter in charge.

A vote of thanks was tendered to the officers of the General Sunday School Association for their courtesies shown at the time of the Woodbine reunion, and Institute at St. Joseph.

It was thought well to have a committee for the next year, similar to the committee of five, whose special charge should be to study improvement of methods and suggest such changes as seemed needed.

The following resolution was adopted: "Believing that the interests of the society could be conserved were the general sessions held during the time of convening of the General Conference, Resolved that we petition the General Conference at its coming session to grant the society one day, or as much time as may be agreed upon by the general officers and the Presidency of the church, to be devoted to the Religio convention at the succeeding General Conference of the church."

The benediction by Bro. A. M. Chase closed a most peaceful day's work.

The evening exercises included an address by President Gunsolley; a paper written by Sr. Marie Clark, of Chicago, was read by Sr. Flo McNichols; Bro. J. W. Wight talked about "The Religio, as viewed by a missionary;" Bro. F. M. Sheehy spoke of "The young people's place in the church," and Secretary J. C. Hitchcock made the closing address.

The Religions were much enthused by the words of encouragement given them.

SUNDAY, APRIL 3.

The local Sunday school held its regular session at 9:30, in charge of Bro. W. N. Robinson, superintendent, and Bro. Ammon White, assistant.

At eleven o'clock the service was under the auspices of the Religio society. Bro. Russell Archibald, of St. Louis, one of the pioneer workers, preached an excellent sermon, in which he dwelt largely upon the development of the race in attaining unto the knowledge of God essential to life eternal. He emphasized the necessity of proper moral and spiritual education of the young, in connection with which the purposes of the Religio were outlined by the speaker.

At half past two in the afternoon the Religio closed its convention with a social service in joint charge of the officers of the Religio and Sunday School Association. The two auxiliary societies were represented or merged in the service, which was in charge of Brn. J. A. Gunsolley and T. A. Hougas. The session was one of prayer and testimony, at which the sacrament was administered under the auspices of the Independence branch. The meeting was largely attended and well enjoyed by the large audience of home saints and visitors present. With this session the Religio services closed, and the workers take up the labors of the coming year with greater zeal and a better preparation to assist in laboring for the development of the young people.

BOOK OF MORMON MAPS NOW READY.

A large map of the Book of Mormon geography, as compiled by the committee on Archaeology; drawn for them and engraved by Bro. G. F. Weston, according to the Weston art method; 40x51 inches, designed for the home, office, and Sunday school. A durable, strong, and artistic map; mounted on cloth, in lasting colors; the surface varnished so as to be washed off with damp cloth when necessary; with stained and varnished strip at top and bottom.
Sent by express to any address for $2.50, express to be paid by purchaser.
This map has all the missionary and colonial journey lines between the lands Zarahemla, Lehi-Nephi, etc.; and the migratory journeys of the Nephites, Jaredites, and the people of Zarahemla, from their first landings to the Hill Cumorah; also the modern travels of Humboldt, Pizarro, and Cortez. It gives the native races of the United States, Central America, and Mexico—the Incas, Mayas, Aztecs, Indian tribes, etc. The ancient Peruvian roads are indicated as nearly as can be obtained, and an alphabetical index in full is to accompany it as soon as published, at twenty-five cents, giving references to page, chapter, and paragraph in Book of Mormon and other works; and also giving a reference to the numbers and letters on the margin of the map, so that the various locations can readily be found thereon.
Send money by postal money order to G. F. WESTON, Box 553, Buchanan, Berrien County, Michigan.

K. & W. and D. M. & K. C. Railways.

The D. M. & K. C. Ry from Des Moines to Cainsville has been rebuilt and that portion south of Van Wert will be standard gauge on or before November 1, 1897.

There is no road in Southern Iowa or Northern Missouri which has more good locations for business men than on the line of the Keokuk Route. More stock of all kinds has been shipped over this line than any road of equal mileage in Iowa or Missouri. (See Missouri Surplus Map at our stations.) The freight and passenger service is not equalled by any road in the state, except the Missouri River trunk lines, with each of which we have union stations and direct connections.

Persons seeking farms can find property at tempting prices; men seeking business locations can find towns with ample territory and settlers to warrant good business. Additional passenger service will soon be given which will add to the growth of the towns.

The towns between Des Moines and Cainsville are particularly well located for business. Look them up. Write to the undersigned for additional information. See folder for map and lands.

WAR AS A SCIENCE.

CHEMISTRY AND PHYSICS TO DECIDE FUTURE BATTLES.

"The next armed conflict in which Uncle Sam is called upon to engage will be a war of physics and chemistry. We are on the edge of a great revolution in the art of fighting, and before long the methods of warfare most approved to-day will be regarded as wholly out of date. Twenty years from now, reckoning at the very farthest, there will be no floating fortresses of the kind which we call battleships; they will be considered as representing an obsolete type of naval architecture, and their place will be taken by vessels comparatively small, yet infinitely more formidable and destructive. By that time, also, electricity will have made its appearance as an active agent of destruction, and military engines of all sorts will have assumed forms as yet undreamed of."

The remarks quoted above, says the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, were made by a government official, who is one of the foremost scientific men of this country. Imposing the condition that his name should not be mentioned, he proceeded to develop the idea by a series of suggestions so striking as to excite the utmost interest. He said:—

"To illustrate the tendency of the development of warfare at present, I will refer to the wiping out of the battleship Maine. According to my belief, it took just about three men to accomplish the destruction of that gigantic fighting machine. They had a large quantity of nitroglycerin, or some such high explosive, packed in bags impervious to water. In each bag was placed just enough cork to give the contents the specific gravity of water, approximately. Dragging the bags, one or more of the men swam out to within a short distance of the ship, then dived and swam under water to escape observation, and came up under the safe shelter of the side of the vessel. To attach the bags to the bottom of the ship was easy, and a chemical time fuse that would burn under water could be ignited readily enough, permitting the assassins to swim away at their leisure.

"In some such way as this, I think, the Maine was destroyed. I only cite the case to illustrate the ease with which a mighty warship of this description can be destroyed by two or three determined men at a minimum of cost. A few dollars' worth of high explosives will wipe out $4,000,000 worth of fighting machinery and several hundred lives. If half a dozen hostile vessels of war ventured into the harbor of New York they would be annihilated very quickly, not by our own warships, but by small groups of courageous men with so-called infernal machines of one kind or another. When this sort of thing can happen, and is always likely to occur, it means that the fighting ship of the type described is out of date. The modern battleship is constructed, so to speak, on a gunpowder basis; in the building of them no more account is taken of high explosives than if there were no such thing. But it is perfectly certain that the wars of the immediate future are to be prosecuted with high explosives.

"You must remember that as yet no adequate test of the efficiency of battleships has been made in practice. They are built on theory. What does their strength amount to, the thickness of their armor and the weight of projectiles they can throw, if they can be so readily destroyed? They represent a putting of matter in the wrong place. In a museum of natural history you will see the skeletons of many extinct animals which have lived at various epochs of the earth's history. You can tell at a glance the very ancient skeletons from those which belonged to creatures of more recent times, because the latter are so much lighter and more graceful, representing improved types. In one of these great warships you see a massing of material regardless of expense and without regard to practical conditions. Therefore this species of vessel is doomed to early extinction, like the hugs and unwieldy mammals of the Pliocene.

"The great warship and the great gun are the naval ideals of to-day. Both of them are based on what? On gunpowder. Modern forts, both on land and on sea, are built on a gunpowder basis, and without any consideration of high explosives. The very brains of army and navy men all over the world are adjusted to gunpowder, as it were. Military experts, generally speaking, are unable to think of war except in terms of gunpowder. Yet gunpowder is practically out of date. The day of high power explosives has arrived; they constitute the postulate to which ideas of warfare must be adjusted. These explosives have carried the art of war beyond the stage when the battleship can be useful. With their aid it is as easy to destroy the strongest armored ship as to smash up a wooden schooner. It is not possible to predict with confidence just what the character of the fighting vessels of the future will be, but a suggestion in that direction seems to be afforded by the torpedo boat. A torpedo boat costs $75,000, and you can build a whole fleet of such craft for the cost of one battleship.

"The advantage of high explosives is that only a little power is required to convey them to the place where they are to do work. Their adoption as a means of destruction is certain to introduce an entirely new series of inventions for war. The development of the art of war from this time on will be a battle of invention. If hostilities should break out between Spain and the United States invention in this line would be marvelously stimulated. Has it ever occurred to you to think of the fact that during our own civil war a greater number of fighting machines were invented than in all the history of the world up to that time? The Franco-Prussian conflict gave a great stimulus to military invention. We, of course, are a nation of inventors. A war with Spain would bring into existence many contrivances for destruction far surpassing what has hitherto been devised. The Spaniards, themselves not at all an inventive people, would think that they had come up against a nation of devils.

"It is logically proper to assume any absurdity for the sake of argument. Let us assume, then, that we were driven from the seas actually by the Spaniards, and that our defeat was absolute and overwhelming. The wind up of the whole affair would nevertheless be the total wiping out of Spain, for we would build vessels adjusted to requirements. There is no telling what we might do with electricity, which doubtless is destined to play a part in future warfare as an active agent of destruction. Telegraphy without wires is as yet in its infancy, but something very substantial in this line has been accomplished already. If we can convey, as we do, to a distance and without wire enough energy to communicate intelligence, we shall be able before long to convey enough energy to work injury. As our control of electrical energy becomes more complete, we can extend its reach further and further. It does not seem wholly improbable that the time will come when we shall be able to explode the magazine of a ship without going near it.

"The only attempt thus far made by the United States in the direction of utilizing high explosives for purposes of naval warfare if torpedoes be excepted, is represented by the so-called dynamite cruiser Vesuvius, which is now in the neighborhood of Key West. This vessel has on her forward deck three fifteen-inch guns which throw projectiles loaded with dynamite a distance of a mile. The ship is only an experiment, and her practical utility is regarded by naval authorities as very doubtful. The problem of throwing high explosives with safety to those who use them has not yet been solved satisfactorily. No explosive is good for fighting purposes that can be touched off by shock or otherwise than by actual contact with fire. The stuff called 'explosive gelatine,' for example, is the most powerful of all known explosives, being fifteen times as strong as gunpowder. It is made by dissolving gun cotton in nitroglycerine, the preparation having the consistency of honey. But it is very unsafe for use in battle, because a bullet striking it will set it off by concussion.

"It is extremely likely that in the next great war shells that liberate poisonous gases on explosion will be employed. It has been suggested that bombs loaded with hydrocyanic acid gas under pressure could be thus utilized, releasing such fumes on bursting as would destroy all life in the neighborhood. The French 'melinite' has for its base a coal tar product termed picric acid; its consistency is about that of molasses, and it is poured into shells and permitted to harden. This stuff is entirely safe to handle, though three times as powerful as gunpowder. The fumes set free by the bursting of a bomb loaded with it are most deadly. A single one, fired experimentally at a vessel on the deck of which had been placed a number of sheep and goats, killed by suffocation all of the animals that were not destroyed by the flying fragments. If a shell loaded with hydrocyanic acid gas—this is the same thing as prussic acid, and the deadliest of all poisons—should be fired into a ship and explode inside of the vessel, pretty nearly everybody on board would surely perish.

"In the recently published novel, 'War of the Worlds,' which describes an attack by Martians upon the earth, the assailants from the sister planet are represented as destroying immense numbers of people by letting loose a cloud of black vapor that sinks to the ground and smothers to death every living thing. The author may have in his mind bisulphide of carbon, an extremely explosive substance, which readily resolves itself into a most deadly gas when exposed to the atmosphere. This gas is heavier than air, and so sinks. The newly invented 'smoke grenades' are filled with chemical substances which, on explosion, produce clouds of dense, black smoke; they are intended to be carried in advance by skirmishers and thrown so as to conceal the troops following. A novel German contrivance is a bomb which, on exploding, scatters highly inflammable substances far and wide. A single one bursting over a town would set a whole district on fire at once. This kind of infernal machine is destined also for burning ships at sea.

"Respecting the prospects of using balloons and flying machines in war a great deal has been said, but it is all highly speculative. Balloons may be employed to drop explosives, but they are not very manageable, being to a great extent at the mercy of air currents. Nevertheless, it is said that both Germany and France now have balloons that can be steered and propelled against a pretty strong breeze. It goes without saying that, if a really practical flying machine should ever be devised, it would wholly revolutionize warfare. No fort could be built that would be strong enough to withstand high explosives dropped from above, and ships would be equally exposed to destruction. Under such conditions warfare would necessarily be transferred from the land and sea to the air, and the quarrels of nations would be decided by battles between fleets of airships.

"Chemistry and physics, as I have said, will be the basis of the warfare of the future. Under the former of these two heads comes photography, which will be largely employed. The latest invention in aerial photography is intended for military use. It is a bomb containing a camera and a parachute, and is fired vertically into the air from a mortar. When one thousand feet or so above the earth it explodes, liberating the camera, which is upheld in the air by the parachute. Then the camera takes one or more snap-shot pictures of the landscape below. It is weighted sufficiently to make it sink pretty rapidly, so that it lands not far from where it started, and is promptly picked up. Obviously, photographs thus taken will be of the utmost value to a commanding general in war time, giving him a survey of the field, of the distribution of the enemy's troops, and of hostile entrenchments and fortifications. Such bombs might be utilized to advantage by warships at sea for obtaining notification of the approach of a hostile fleet long before the vessels hove in sight. Owing to the curvature of the earth, a ship is invisible at a distance of only a few miles on the ocean. In this case the parachute and camera could be provided with a conspicuous float, so as to be found and recovered readily after reaching the water."—Chicago Tribune.

THE GENERAL CONFERENCE.

MONDAY, THE 11TH.

THE service of prayer and testimony at nine o'clock was in charge of Brn. J. A. Gunsolley and O. H. Riggs. The meeting was reported as a very spiritual one throughout. The gifts of the gospel were manifest at this meeting and at a number of others, to the instruction and comfort of many.

Elder F. C. Keck was the preacher at the 10:45 service. Elder M. H. Forscutt assisted.

The business session at two o'clock was in charge of President A. H. Smith. Hymn No. 62 was followed by prayer, Bro. J. C. Clapp invoking the divine blessing upon the assembly. The reading of the minutes followed.

A resolution was adopted deprecating misrepresentations published in the Kansas City Star, and requesting the press committee to take action to prevent repetition of similar reports.

The special order of the day,—a resolution to indorse President Joseph Smith's definition of the duties of deacons as published in the HERALD of June 15, 1871,—was taken up. After considerable discussion the matter was referred to the First Presidency, the Twelve, and the Bishopric.

The preambles and resolution providing for changes in the Articles and By-Laws of Graceland College were again deferred until the College Trustees had reported.

Elder F. M. Smith, Assistant Church Historian, reported. Bro. Smith also reported as Church Librarian. The full reports will appear in the minutes.

The following was moved:—

Resolved, that for the purpose of a wider dissemination of official notices affecting the interests of the membership of this church, the Secretary of the Church is hereby authorized to furnish Zion's Banner, Independent, ence, Missouri, with copy of such notices simultaneously with the copy furnished to the SAINTS' HERALD.

After much discussion it was moved to amend by striking out the words "is hereby authorized" and inserting the words "be permitted." This was also discussed, when the whole matter was laid on the table.

The time and place of next General Conference were made the special order for the following day's session.

The President announced that all new business must be placed on the table before the close of the business session of the 12th inst.

Announcements followed, the doxology was sung, and President Joseph Smith dismissed the audience.

The sermon at the evening service was delivered by President Joseph Smith; Elder S. F. Cushman, of Nebraska, assisted.

TUESDAY, THE 12TH.

The regular morning service of prayer and testimony was in charge of Elders Henry Kemp and John Pett.

The preaching at 10:45 was by Elder J. D. Erwin, Elder J. W. Jackson assisting.

Business was resumed at the afternoon session. The opening hymn was followed with prayer by President Joseph Smith, who presided over the session. The minutes were read.

Attention was called to the Kansas City Journal's report of proceedings of the 11th, which erroneously represented the conference as censuring the Kansas City Star for its publication of incorrect and sensational reports. The press committee was instructed to request correction of that feature of the Journal's report.

Reports were received from the First and Fifth quorums of Elders, and the First, Second, and Fourth quorums of Priests.

The committee appointed to consider an appeal from the San Antonio, Texas, branch recommended further consideration. The matter was referred to the Twelve for consideration and action, they to publish their decision through the HERALD.

A number of unenrolled elders requested enrollment in the Seventh Quorum of Elders, also that said quorum be fully organized by appointment and ordination of officers. The request was referred to the Quorum of Twelve for action.

A motion prevailed "that the Board of Publication be required to publish the third volume of the Church History as soon as practicable."

A motion involving questions concerning the right of quorums of elders to drop their members, and of the standing of elders so dropped, was referred to a committee for more perfect formulation: Brn. Alma Kent, R. Etzenhouser, and S. D. Condit.

A paper from delegates of the Central, Northern, and Southern Nebraska districts, asking action on district boundary lines, was referred to a committee: Elders James Caffall, J. W. Gillen, T. W. Williams.

The Fourth Quorum of Elders presented a paper asking the body to affirm that elders sent on missionary work should be sent two by two. It was discussed at length, moved to refer to the Twelve, and laid on the table.

A resolution concerning scattered members uniting with branches, and another declaring that letters of removal should be sent only to persons actually removing from one branch to another, were referred to a committee: Brn. R. M. Elvin, R. S. Salyards, H. A. Stebbins.

The committee to whom was referred the question of elders' quorums dropping their members, reported, in effect, that quorums had adopted rules which permitted them to drop members for cause and for the purpose of infusing new life in said quorums; that elders dropped stood with the body of the eldership not enrolled in quorums. Report adopted.

The following was adopted:—

Resolved, that the schedule of resolutions binding upon the body, that has been in process of preparation for fourteen years, be looked over, corrected, and published at the earliest practicable convenience.

Remaining resolutions were read, but adjournment was taken, the time limit of the session having been reached.

President Joseph Smith called attention, by request, to the practice of whispering and other annoyances that disturbed those present who desired to give due attention to conference proceedings.

Bishop Kelley read a request for a collection and donations to the Second Kansas City branch, the members of which desired to build a church.

The session adjourned, benediction by Pres. A. H. Smith.

Three persons were baptized during the afternoon, in the font of the Baptist church, by Elder M. T. Short.

At half past seven o'clock Elder F. M. Sheehy preached the sermon. He was assisted by Elder D. L. Harris.

WEDNESDAY, THE 13TH.

The opening service of prayer at nine o'clock was in charge of Brn. J. T. Kinnaman and J. T. Davis.

Preaching at the usual morning hour, Elder T. J. Sheldon occupying the stand, Elder I. N. Roberts assisting.

Afternoon session of business at two o'clock; Pres. A. H. Smith in the chair; prayer by Bro. G. T. Griffiths; minutes approved.

It was moved that all relating to the ministry being sent two by two be stricken from the record. Motion lost.

The special order of the day—fixing time and place of next General Conference—was taken up, through a resolution to meet at Lamoni, Iowa, April 6, 1900.

An amendment followed "to strike out 1900 and insert 1899." Speeches on the whole question were limited to three minutes, and the time and place considered separately. The amendment for 1899 was lost—vote 92 to 100. A motion to amend by adding, "or at the call of the First Presidency," was adopted. The original motion as to time and as amended was then adopted. The following named places were then placed in nomination; the figures show the result of the vote: Lamoni, Iowa, 175; Kirtland, Ohio, 10; Boston, Massachusetts, 10; Kansas City, Missouri, 3; London, Ontario, 4; Chicago, Illinois, 9; Papeete, Tahiti, 1. Lamoni was declared the unanimous choice.

The question was asked, if an invitation to the conference to meet at a given point also included the auxiliary societies. It was answered affirmatively.

The Seven Presidents of Seventy reported. The report showed six of their number present. Names of those selected for ordination as seventies would be reported by the Second Seventy.

The Second Quorum of Seventy reported: Had held seven business sessions, and two joint sessions with First Seventy. Thirty-eight had reported showing the following: 5,159 sermons, an average of 166; baptisms 320, average 10. Memorial resolutions on the death of Elders Edward De Long and V. D. Baggerly had been adopted and ordered sent to the families of the deceased. Elder Swen Swenson, selected at the conference of 1897, was again presented for ordination. Bro. H. J. Davison's ordination, provided for at the '97 session, asked that action be deferred for the present. The following were presented for ordination as seventies: Elders Frederick Gregory, Daniel McGregor (ordinations approved, provided for, and referred to the missionary in charge of Canada), R. J. Parker, D. W. Wight, D. C. White, M. R. Scott, Jr., and W. A. Smith. Brn. Swenson, Parker, Wight, White, Scott, and Smith (present) expressed willingness to accept ordination and were referred to the Quorum of Twelve therefor, by the chairman, and the brethren were ordained at the evening meeting of the Second Seventy, under direction of Bro. W. H. Kelley, of the Twelve, Brn. J. R. Lambert, J. H. Lake, Joseph Luff, E. C. Briggs, James Caffall, J. W. Gillen, G. T. Griffiths, and J. W. Wight officiating. Bro. William Aylor, of Oklahoma, whose ordination had been provided for by his branch, was ordained to the office of an elder at the same time and place.

A resolution prevailed providing that conference minutes be hereafter numbered consecutively in paging, following the minutes of 1897.

A resolution pertaining to distribution of funds among the families of missionaries, was laid on the table without discussion.

The chair declared the credentials committee discharged.

By request from the Independence Colored Baptist Church for a preacher for the evening service, the President appointed Elder C. H. Burr, Bro. Ed Miller, of Ohio, to assist.

Following the usual announcements a hymn was sung and President Joseph Smith dismissed the assembly.

Preaching at the evening session by Bro. R. C. Evans, assisted by Bro. A. J. Keck.

THURSDAY, THE 14TH.

Morning prayer meeting at nine, Elders H. N. Hansen and Henry Southwick in charge.

At 10:45 preaching by Elder W. C. Marshall, Elder C. H. Porter assisting.

Consideration of business was resumed at the two o'clock session, Pres. A. H. Smith presiding; prayer by Bro. E. C. Briggs. The minutes were approved.

The Quorum of High Priests reported: Twenty-two were present; 56 are living. Statistics so far as reported: 2,624 sermons, 204 baptisms, 147 confirmations, 24 ordinations, 164 children blessed, 1,828 administrations, 50 marriages performed. Three had died during the year.

The First Quorum of Seventy reported; number in quorum 69; six sessions had been held, three of which were joint sessions with the Second Seventy. Reports from 67 members show 7,290 sermons, 530 baptisms, 437 confirmations, 73 ordinations, 303 children blessed, 52 marriages. Thirty-five of the quorum were present. Request for ordination of David Smith, selected at last conference, was renewed. The conference provided for it by referring the matter to the missionary in charge of Michigan.

The Third Quorum of Elders reported. Two had died; they had dropped twenty-eight members, because of not reporting for two or more years. For full report see minutes.

The Fourth Quorum of Priests reported.

The committee to whom was referred the resolution concerning scattered members, also another pertaining to letters of removal reported:—

We your committee to whom was referred certain resolutions pertaining to enrollment of scattered members, and the question of issuance of letters of removal, report as follows, which we recommend for adoption:—

1. Resolved, that scattered members not enrolled upon branch records be instructed to unite with branches most convenient to their places of residence.

2. Resolved, that members changing their residences from branches where enrolled, be instructed to unite with branches most convenient to places where they reside.

3. Whereas, in the past members have obtained letters of removal which they have not presented to any branch, whereby such names have been removed from the general records of the church,

Resolved, that letters of removal be issued only to persons actually changing residence from one branch to another, and that names of branches to which removals are made be included in said letters of removal.

The report, including its recommendations, was adopted.

A petition concerning certain boundary lines of the Des Moines and Eastern Iowa districts was referred to said districts with permission to establish said boundary lines.

The Board of Trustees of Grace-land College presented its financial report. (For report, see minutes.) Action was deferred until the proposed amendments to the college articles were considered. The proposed amendments were then read.

The following was then moved and adopted:—

Resolved, that we proceed to the choosing of successors to the retiring members of the college boards, with the understanding that at the convening of the next General Conference we desire all the members of both boards to resign, with the view to the choosing of but one board thereafter.

Following this, Bro. J. R. Lambert presented his resignation as a member of the Board of Directors; a written resignation from Bro. D. F. Lambert, of the same board, was also presented. Both resignations were accepted.

The election of members of the college board was deferred until the following day's session; as were also other resolutions pertaining to college interests.

The assembly then adjourned.

The sermon at the evening service was delivered by Bishop E. L. Kelley, Elder C. P. Faul assisting him.

FRIDAY, THE 15TH.

Morning prayer service as usual at nine o'clock, Elders W. E. Peak and J. W. Peterson in charge.

Preaching at 10:45 by Elder M. T. Short, assisted by Elder F. M. Slover.

The business session opened at the

- Respectfully submitted,
J. W. WIGHT, Secretary.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, April 15, 1898.

The report was approved.
The Second Quorum of Elders reported.

A report was received from the Committee on Trans-Mississippi Exposition. It recommended that inasmuch as an exhibit would be attended with considerable expense, and as no religious exhibit was provided for, that none be made by the church, unless the Omaha branch should decide to make an effort in that direction, and that in that event the church should aid as it could. Report adopted.

The following from the Quorum of Twelve was presented:—

To the Conference:—I am requested by the Quorum of the Twelve to ask your consideration of and action upon the following preambles and resolution:—

Whereas, a necessity exists for a more perfect understanding throughout the church regarding the binding force of rulings rendered by missionaries in charge in cases of conflict between them and districts or branches; and

Whereas, we have been asked to render a quorum decision on the question;

Resolved, that section 120: 4, 5, of the Doctrine and Covenants makes the decision of a missionary in charge (he being a member of this quorum or a seventy acting under the direction of the Twelve) paramount in cases of disagreement between his ruling and that of a district conference or a branch, said decision being subject to after appeal provided for in the law.

Respectfully submitted,

J. W. WIGHT, Secretary.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, April 14, 1898.

The First Presidency stated that being one of the three quorums in whom was vested the responsibility of rendering decisions, they had not had opportunity to pass upon the question; they therefore requested that the matter be deferred. After some discussion the matter was indefinitely postponed.

The First Quorum of Teachers reported.

The conference then proceeded to the election of two trustees for Grace-land College. The nominations and votes were as follows: Ellis Short 141, G. H. Hilliard 119, J. H. Hansen 42, John A. Hougas 9, E. A. Blakeslee 1. The choice of Brn. Short and Hilliard was then made unanimous.

Proceeding to the election of six directors, the nominations and votes were as follows: J. H. Hansen 131, P. P. Kelley 128, Daniel Hougas 22, E. L. Kelley 121, R. S. Salyards 134, William Anderson 138, Columbus Scott 71, G. H. Hilliard 104. The choice of the six receiving the highest vote was made unanimous.

A vote of thanks was tendered the retiring directors.

The following resolution was moved:—

Whereas, the Financial Report of the Board of Trustees of Graceland College shows a large indebtedness, to the proper payment of which the church is morally in honor bound; and, believing that the church should use that department of its working forces which the law creates to be the financial agents for the accomplishment of its financial ends; therefore be it

Resolved, that the Bishop be hereby authorized and instructed to devise and make such arrangements for the collection of means as may be adequate, and out of such means so collected, and such funds of the church as are not otherwise appropriated, liquidate the indebtedness, and provide for the further carrying out the desires of the church heretofore expressed in conference enactments directing the establishment of an institution of learning to be maintained by the church.

It was amended to read "Bishopric" instead of "Bishop."

Considerable discussion followed, and the hour of adjournment having arrived, it was sought to defer until the following day's session; but the assembly proceeded to consider the question.

A substitute was offered, providing in effect, that all missionaries be authorized to work and receipt for specified contributions.

This was followed by an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause of the substitute and inserting, to read as follows:—

Resolved, that the Trustees of Graceland College be instructed to reduce the present price of lots at its disposal, one half, and make special efforts to dispose of them at the reduced price.

Resolved further, that the President of the church be authorized to select a committee of three, whose duty it shall be to travel among the branches until our next General Conference, and solicit aid towards liquidating the debt on the college, and that the members of said committee shall be expected to do missionary work during their travels, and their expenses be borne the same as those of other missionaries.

Resolved further, that President Joseph Smith be requested to travel as much during the said time as may be practicable, for the same purpose, and that he, in association with the Bishopric, direct the course and methods of the committee herein asked for.

Pending discussion the assembly adjourned. Additional resolutions were read, the doxology was sung, and Pres. Joseph Smith dismissed the audience.

Preaching at 7:30 by Elder M. H. Forscutt, Elder S. W. Simmons assisting.

SATURDAY, THE 16TH.

The usual prayer and testimony service at nine o'clock in the morning, Elders C. A. Butterworth and J. M. Terry in charge.

Preaching at 10:45 by Pres. Joseph Smith, assisted by Pres. A. H. Smith.

Business session at two o'clock; a hymn was sung; prayer by Elder M. H. Bond.

Bro. C. R. Duncan asked the privilege, and explained that his report was delayed because of poor mail facilities in his field.

The First Presidency reported on the following missionary appointments:—

The following appointments are made by the First Presidency, and are hereby reported to the conference for its action:—

1. William H. Kelley and Joseph Luff; Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Eastern and Middle States, District of Columbia, Ohio, the Virginias, and Maryland.

2. Heman C. Smith; European mission until August, with permission to return home then; thereafter to labor in Iowa and Minnesota in connection with Elder Joseph R. Lambert, unless otherwise provided for.

3. John H. Lake; Northern Illinois (except those counties in Illinois which now form a part of the Nauvoo district) and Wisconsin.

4. Edmund C. Briggs; Michigan and Indiana.

5. James W. Gillen; Colorado, Eastern Wyoming, and New Mexico.

6. Joseph R. Lambert; Iowa, including those counties in Illinois which now form a part of the Nauvoo district, and Minnesota, in charge, until the return of Heman C. Smith, then to be associated with him.

7. James Caffall; Nebraska and North and South Dakotas.

8. Gomer T. Griffiths; Pacific Slope mission.

9. Isaac N. White; Missouri, Kansas, and Southern Illinois.

10. John W. Wight; Rocky Mountain mission.

11. Richard C. Evans; the Canadas.

12. We recommend as before, that suitable subdivisions of fields be made, and competent men placed in charge as soon as practicable.

It is to be understood if there should be any territory not included in these appointments, such territory is not exempt, but is still under the supervision of the missionaries thus appointed.

JOSEPH SMITH, for the Presidency.

Done at LAMONT, Iowa, March 29, 1898.

The following additional report from the Quorum of the Twelve was presented:—

To the Conference:—The Quorum of Twelve beg leave to report additional appointments as follows:—

SEVENTY.

F. J. Chatburn; Missouri, after September 1.

ELDERS.

J. T. Kinnaman; Kewanee, Illinois, district.

M. L. Sory; Clinton, Missouri, district.

R. S. Mengel; Western Nebraska.

I am further authorized to submit to you the following preambles and resolutions as the action of the Quorum of the Twelve:—

Whereas, by rule of General Conference, no elder can be ordained within organized districts without the consent of the district conference or the missionary in charge; and,

Whereas, in section 120, paragraph 1, of Doctrine and Covenants, provision is made for the organization of branches by district presidents, with the knowledge, consent, and direction of the missionary in charge; and

Whereas, a question has arisen as to whether the words "missionary in charge," in these instances, includes within their meaning those who may be appointed over "fields of labor" as assistant missionaries in charge; and,

Whereas, this question has been submitted to us for our expression upon it;

Resolved, that in our opinion the words referred to do not include assistant missionaries in charge of "fields of labor," but refer directly and only to those who have been placed in general charge by the action of General Conference or either of the appointing councils in session.

Whereas, a necessity exists for a more perfect understanding throughout the church regarding the binding force of rulings rendered by missionaries in general charge, in cases of conflict between them and districts or branches; and

Whereas, we believe the law contained in section 120, paragraphs 4, 5, Doctrine and Covenants, clearly settles the matter;

Resolved, that in our opinion the decision or ruling of a missionary in general charge (he being a member of this quorum, or a seventy acting under the direction of the Twelve) is paramount in cases of disagreement between his ruling and that of a district conference or branch, said ruling being subject to appeal as provided for in the law.

Resolved further, that in the absence of any specific provision of the law in the case, we believe that the rulings of an high priest or elder, when acting in the capacity of a missionary in general charge, should be entitled to the same consideration as that of a twelve or seventy.

Respectfully submitted,

J. W. WIGHT.

That portion of the report relating to missions was adopted. The remainder was received and spread upon the minutes.

A report from the Second Seventy was read, and referred back to the quorum.

A report from the Fourth Quorum of Elders was read.

The resolutions on the college question were then taken up. The amendment to the substitute (providing for a committee of three, etc.) was lost.

The substitute (providing for donations of different amounts, etc.) was also lost.

The original motion (which placed the matter in the hands of the Bishopric, etc.) was adopted.

The conference indorsed the action of the Quorum of the Twelve, reported to the conference of 1888. It is as follows:—

Whereas, the Lord has spoken against the use of tobacco and strong drink on different occasions; and whereas, in all our appointments we ought to show respect unto said counsel. Therefore, resolved, that henceforth we recommend no man for General Conference appointment whom we know to be addicted to either of the above evils, and that this decision take effect one year from date.

The assembly proceeded to make choice of a committee to audit the accounts of the Bishop and the Herald Office. Brn. F. M. Weld, W. N. Robinson, and J. A. Gunsolley were chosen. The choice was made unanimous. Any two of the committee were authorized to select a third, should any one be unable to serve.

The following additional report from the High Priests' Quorum was presented:—

To the General Conference, Greeting:—As Secretary of the High Priests' Quorum I hereby present for your sanction the following brethren for ordination to the office of High Priest; namely: John R. Evans, George Montague, Richard Bullard, V. M. Goodrich, Joseph Squires, Sr., G. J. Waller, Emery W. Nunley, William Leeka, and Russel Archibald, Jr.

The Quorum of Twelve have approved of these nominations as well as the Quorum of High Priests, and we respectfully ask that the body provide for the ordination of the above-named brethren.

Respectfully submitted,

H. A. STEBBINS,

Secretary High Priests' Quorum.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, April 16, 1898.

Brn. Nunley and Leeka made statement of willingness to accept ordination. Others spoke, recommending those named who were absent. The report was then adopted, and the ordinations sanctioned.

The ordination of Bro. Albert Carmichael, of California, as a high priest, was also approved by the conference; and all so recommended were referred to the missionaries in charge for ordination.

The Independence Sunday school was granted permission to hold its regular session at 9:30 Sunday morning, the lower auditorium not being needed by the ministry or the conference.

An invitation to accept administration of the sacrament under the direction of the Independence branch at 2:30 p. m. on Sunday, was thankfully accepted.

The following from the representative of the Kansas City Journal was received:—

The correspondent of the Journal desires to thank the Press Committee for courtesies shown, and individual members of the conference for similar favors during the present session of conference. C. A. CARROLL.

Subscriptions amounting to six hundred dollars, or more, were made to the college fund.

Announcements followed, a hymn was sung, and the assembly adjourned to meet Monday morning, nine a. m., for the transaction of business.

At 7:30 p. m. Pres. A. H. Smith addressed the congregation. He was assisted by Elder O. H. Riggs.

SUNDAY, THE 17TH.

The local Sunday school held its regular session in charge of the superintendent, Bro. W. N. Robinson.

Sunday, 10:45, President Joseph Smith was the speaker, assisted by Elder M. H. Bond.

At 2:30 p. m. sacrament and prayer and testimony service in charge of Elders G. E. Harrington, Roderick May, and W. H. Garrett. Two baptized were confirmed by Elders A. H. Smith and E. C. Briggs. A child was blessed by Elders Joseph Smith and G. E. Harrington. Prayer was offered for a number of sick. The session was marked by many testimonies from the membership and ministry. In evidence of the attending inspiration and power of God in his various manifestations, the spirit of love and peace prevailed. The testimonies in evidence of the divinity of the work were similar to those recorded in the church in New Testament times.

Elder G. T. Griffiths was speaker at the evening service. He was assisted by Elder F. A. Smith.

Large numbers were present from surrounding localities, though many of the ministry, the delegates, and visitors had returned home.

MONDAY, THE 18TH.

The closing session began at nine o'clock, President Joseph Smith presiding. Prayer by Elder T. W. Williams.

All not present of those selected for ordination to the office of high priest except Bro. G. J. Waller referred to missionaries in charge of fields. Bro. Waller's ordination was referred to President Joseph Smith to provide therefor. Brn. William Leeka and E. W. Nunley were ordained during the session.

All general officials, including Board of Publication, sustained, also auxiliary societies and standing committees. The Church Librarian was authorized to select an assistant if he so desire.

Independence saints and friends, choristers, organists, ushers, and janitors, were granted vote of thanks.

A motion to refer certain questions to the Presidency, Twelve, and Bishopric, was lost.

Conference then adjourned. President Smith addressed the assembly at length at the close. Fuller particulars next week. Our closing report is by wire, hence brief.

Balance total college donations, $821.50.

The brethren separated in excellent spirits.

THE WORK IN AUSTRALIA.

THE Town and Country Journal, published at Sydney, New South Wales, a fifty-two page illustrated weekly, with "circulation three times that of any other weekly newspaper in Australasia," contains in its issue for January 15, 1898, almost a full page of illustrations with accompanying article devoted to "The Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints." The first cut is a large photo-engraving of Brn. C. A. Butterworth, John Kaler, and Gomer Wells, the general missionaries in that field; which shows Bro. Butterworth, the missionary in charge, standing in the center of the group with the others arranged one on each side. Below is a large group picture of "local preachers and officers," in which are Brn. "L. Anderson, Thomas Gregory, Henry Broadway, W. H. Broadway, Alex. Seaberg, E. J. Haworth, Francis Whalen, Joseph W. Smith, C. A. Davis, and John Holden."

The following is the printed article. It should and doubtless will do much in enlightening the public concerning the cause in the colonies. The brethren have reason to be gratified in the favorable notice thus given of them and their work:—

THE LATTER DAY SAINTS.

The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints of New South Wales held its conference in Newcastle during the holidays just past, beginning on Christmas Day, that being the most convenient time for the lay delegates. When President Ballard opened the session there were representatives from every church in the colony, Sydney sending the largest delegation. There were also present three ministers of special significance, whose portraits are reproduced in this issue: Elder C. A. Butterworth, of Victoria, minister in charge of Australia; and Elders John Kaler and G. R. Wells, of Sydney and Newcastle respectively. These three are authorized traveling evangelists and general counselors for the church in Australia. The report of the committee on credentials showed a fair attendance of local preachers and officers. There was also a large attendance of lay delegates. Much of the routine business is omitted; but it is of interest to hear that this church is meeting with some encouragement, as the reports of the recording clerks showed. Several chapels have been built. In addition, a substantial amount had been contributed to the mission fund, and the treasurer reported a balance in hand. The majority of the churches reported a healthy spiritual condition, and the ordination of several local ministers was provided for. Action was taken at this session by which the church will apply to the Government for burial allotments in public cemeteries. The district elected Elder John Kaler, of Sydney, as its president for the coming year, and Elder G. R. Wells, of Newcastle, his assistant. Mr. C. S. McLaren, of Tuncurry, was chosen clerk and recording secretary; and Mr. W. J. Haworth, of Wallsend, assistant. Delegates were chosen to represent them as a district at the general assembly in America next April. The conference adjourned, to meet in Sydney the coming Easter.

This church draws a sharp line of distinction between itself and that of the Brighamite Church of Utah. They say that they have no connection whatever with the polygamous Mormons of Utah (who also call themselves Latter Day Saints). They say that this distinction is expressed by Americans in calling the Utah people "Brighamites" and the Reorganized Church "Josephites;" the latter being so called because they refused to follow Brigham Young, but adhered to the old standard as supported by Joseph Smith (son of the original founder). He resides at Lamoni, State of Iowa, the headquarters of the church. Here are published three periodicals in the interest of the church. At the death of the founder, in 1844, Young led a small portion of the church to Utah. There he re-baptized his followers, and in the year 1852 first proclaimed the doctrines of polygamy, plurality of gods, etc. About this same time, those remaining throughout the East called a conference in the State of Wisconsin, and started to reorganize the church by denouncing Young as a usurper and false teacher, and declared that they would endorse none but the original creed (propagated by Smith), which says that "one man shall have but one wife, except in case of death." They also chose as their president Joseph Smith, eldest son of the founder, who has presided over the church to the present time. The reorganized body has fallen heir to the properties of the original church, by decision of the civil courts.

Their faith as presented at this conference is briefly stated as follows:

They hold the Bible as the book of all books; all others are appendages or helps; that the first principle of religion is faith in God, and Christ's the only name by which men can be saved; that repentance from all sin is essential; also adult baptism by immersion for the remission of sins, and the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Spirit, ordination of ministers, and blessing children. They believe in anointing the sick as stated in the fifth chapter of James. They also believe in a literal resurrection of all men, the righteous first at the coming of Christ to reign on earth, the rest to come forth after the millennial age. They believe we are living in the last days of this age; hence the term "Latter Day" Saints. They hold that all men will be rewarded or punished according to the degree of good or evil they have done. They teach that present-day revelation is a necessity in order to have a ministry called of God as in the apostolic age; and they copy the New Testament organization from the office of deacon to that of apostle.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

BRO. G. R. WELLS, Sydney, New South Wales, March 7:—

The inclosed handbill will explain the latest movements in Sydney:—

Four nights' religious debate, in the Hampden hall, Beattie Street, Balmain, between Mr. J. Bell, Christadelphian, and Elder J. Kaler, Reorganized Church of Christ of Latter Day Saints. Mr. A. Gow, J. P., chairman. Discussion to commence at 7:45 p. m. Subjects: For Monday, March 7.—"The Bible teaches there is a spirit in man that survives the death of the body in a conscious state." Mr. Kaler affirms, Mr. Bell denies. For Tuesday, March 8.—"The Bible teaches only a portion of mankind will be resurrected, and hence have an opportunity of salvation." Mr. Bell affirms, Mr. Kaler denies. For Monday, March 14.—"The Bible teaches the laying on of hands is a principle of the gospel and essential to a full salvation in the kingdom of God." Mr. Kaler affirms, Mr. Bell denies. For Tuesday, March 15.—"The Bible teaches Jesus Christ was nonexistent as a person prior to his birth of the Virgin Mary." Mr. Bell affirms, Mr. Kaler denies. Admission free! A collection will be taken each night in aid of the Balmain Cottage Hospital. Come and hear these very important subjects discussed by able disputants.

March 14 Bro. Wells again wrote:—

Two nights of the Kaler-Bell debate at Balmain suburb have passed, and we are satisfied with the way our faith has been defended. The Socratic method of questioning is Mr. Bell's forte, and by it he seeks to make it appear to the audience that his opponent is "cornered," but it wasn't the success he hoped in this case, thus far. Some good has been done already. We have heard of one man who was "on the fence, and leaning towards Christadelphianism" before the debate; and who was urged by that people to hear the debate and be finally convinced. It worked just the other way. After hearing two nights he abandoned the position altogether.

The Rev. James Green, of the Primitive Methodists, came in to hear a part of one proposition. The next day he had handbills out advertising an "expose" of both churches represented at the debate. Thus a new element has showed itself. He may have to face a debate himself. This is the same man who entered a week's debate with Elder J. W. Wight near New Castle a few years ago, and who was compelled by his congregation to stop at two nights, I believe.

Bro. D. E. Tucker, Gordon, Alabama, April 2:—

I have made two or three new openings since my arrival here. Made a new opening south of Chipley, Florida, at Orange Hill, one hundred and forty-two feet above sea level—the most beautiful place I have seen in the South. While there I preached in two different houses; among Baptists, M. E.'s, and Freewills. All were very friendly and invited me to return. Bro. John Cooper preached there some five years ago and baptized three or four, but did not return, so they went back to the Baptist Church. Two members of the Utah church there; good people, investigating our claims. Have been listening for our guns at Cuba. Success to the church, the United States, and Cuba.

Bro. C. J. Hunt, Emmetsburg, Iowa, April 4:—

I have been holding meetings north of this city for ten days, and have had very good attendance. I baptized and confirmed Raymond and Rosa Speer yesterday. Their parents, Mr. and Sr. S. R. Speer, live ten miles north of the city, at whose home I was made welcome during my sojourn in that locality. I go from here to Coalville then home, Deloit, Iowa.

Bro. George Edwards, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, August 11:—

At the recent select entertainment, given in Schyuler Hall, Sixth and Diamond Streets, this city, under the auspices of Miss Laura Christy, nearly $50 was realized, the same being turned over to the chapel fund of the Philadelphia branch, for the benefit of which the entertainment was given.

"Vast is the mercy of God, and when a man doeth aright, Glad is the right hand Angel, and setteth it quick on the roll;
Ten times he setteth it down in letters of heavenly light,
For one good deed ten deeds, and a hundred for ten on the scroll."

SELECT READING FOR MAY MEETINGS OF DAUGHTERS OF ZION.

READING.

Dear Sisters:—As we have carefully read the entire text upon this subject, we have found ourself wishing that we could present it entire to you, for there is not a sentence in the whole chapter which is not calculated to do you good and the subject is one of vital importance to every mother. The habit of reading good books can and ought to be established at an early age and carefully cultivated until a taste for good reading is formed in the child. If this is done it will yield a plentiful harvest of good fruit, but if you neglect to do this you leave the ground undisturbed for tares to be sown, spring up, and grow.

Listen, parents, we beg of you, to this warning:—

"Scarcely any danger is more menacing today than the evils resulting from impure and trashy literature. It debauches the mind as alcoholic drinks do the body, and for some Satanic reason which we cannot comprehend, individuals, and even societies, are systematically sowing the country with the vile stuff. A writer in the Christian Union, says that more than six thousand persons are daily employed in the business of disseminating obscene books, papers, and pictures. Anthony Comstock, that dauntless knight of the White Cross, in one year seized fifteen thousand letters of orders to dealers and publishers of these wares in New York, written by students of both sexes. City children going to school often have the vile stuff thrust into their hands with an injunction to secrecy, and it is sown broadcast over the country through the post offices. Many schools, especially those for girls, have ceased to publish catalogues, because lists of names thus secured are used for this ignoble purpose."

Notice next the estimate placed upon another class of reading, which many parents consider harmless and not only read themselves but allow their children free access to the same. We trust this point will be thoroughly discussed.

"Obscene literature, which can be reached by the law, is really not so dangerous as the other two classes, for they abound everywhere, and under sanction of law, both civil and social. Take up any daily paper and see if you do not there find details of revolting crime, yet these papers come into our homes. Of course some papers are much better in this respect than others, but many so-called respectable papers seem to delight in 'running a muck-rake through the haunts of sin,' and dishing up as the daily mental food of their readers the pollution they find there. They will give whole columns, or even pages, to the sickening details of crime or of a prize fight, but begrudge five lines to notice a meeting in the interests of philanthropy. If you reproach the editors for their course they reply, 'We are not responsible, we simply supply the popular demand,' and prove this assertion by turning to their ledgers and showing how the demand for their paper was increased by thousands by an unusually 'interesting' case of crime detailed in its columns. Nor is this confined to large city dailies. I chanced to be in a small country town during the first murder trial ever held in its courts. The case was one involving even more than the usual elements of uncleanness and blood, all fully brought out in the evidence. The editor of the only daily paper in the village devoted almost the entire space in his paper for two weeks to these revolting details, and men, women, and little children eagerly read them. I remember a gentleman whom I considered a sensible, honorable man, expressed the greatest astonishment on learning that I had neither attended the trial nor read the accounts of it. If all would refuse to read such records of crime the nuisance would be abated.

"Now the work for parents who would preserve their children from the contamination of such familiarity with crime, is to set their faces like a flint against this morbid taste, refuse to let such papers come into the house, and thus decrease the demand that regulates the supply. Do you say, 'We cannot do without our daily paper'? Better do without its news for a little time than debauch your own minds and the minds of your children. It would be but for a time; if every Christian father would refuse to subscribe for papers so smirched, and let the publishers know why he thus refused, they would very soon publish cleaner sheets. Nor, in the meantime, do we need to be deprived of news. There are some papers that do give the news without this horrid seasoning of crime. Patronize them.

"Then there are the five-cent 'Boys and Girls' Own Papers,' the nickel libraries and various weeklies with innocent, homelike titles, but concealing underneath these the very poison of asps. They are filled with stories of criminal life, often with a vein of licentiousness running through them, of very questionable adventures of boys and girls. These are often introduced into the home by the parents themselves who have not the slightest idea of their character. We were once in a country neighborhood where nearly every family had subscribed for a paper which at its best was trashy, and some of its stories actually vile, because a number of pretty chromo cards was given for each subscription. So all through the year these papers came month by month into these homes and wrought their work upon the minds of the children growing up therein. The same sum invested in the Youth's Companion would have brought a healthful influence into each of those homes.

"The work of the books and papers we have mentioned is always baneful. Its effect may not be manifest at once, but it tells on character. A pupil of my own, a lad of sixteen, committed suicide in a melodramatic way. He imagined himself in love with a young Miss of fourteen, and that he had a rival to her affections, a schoolmate of his own age. He invited the two to take a walk with him, and when well out of town, suddenly faced his companions and demanded of the girl in a theatrical manner, which she loved best of the two before her. Taken by surprise and overcome with the ludicrousness of the situation, she burst out laughing. 'Do you thus mock me!' he cried, drew a pistol from his pocket and shot himself through the breast. The ball did not strike the heart, but produced a fatal wound from which he died after hours of agony, vainly imploring his friends to save him from the consequences of his own act. In his pocket was found a sensational novel portraying a scene exactly similar to the one he had enacted, except that the would-be hero's wound did not prove mortal, but produced its intended effect in softening the heart of his lady love.

"A friend of mine once noticed some boys very busily at work or play in a vacant lot near her home. It was during the summer vacation, and every morning they came as regularly as they were accustomed to go to school, and worked away all day long. This unusual freak of boy nature in vacation, excited her curiosity, and she watched them to see what they were about. Their work proved to be the building of a railroad which, in due time, was equipped with good box cars, stolen, as she afterwards learned, from a dry goods store. When their road was fully equipped, the object of all this work proved to be the enacting of a train robbery, after the manner of the James brothers, whose life they had been reading. This is the natural result of reading stories of crime, yet parents, even Christian parents, admit and even bring such reading into their homes.

"The last class, trashy reading, is scarcely less deleterious in its effects as it is more widespread, finding an entrance into many homes from which the other two classes are excluded. It seems harmless, nothing impure in it; indeed, much of it is of the goody-goody order, but a course of such reading debilitates, if it does not debauch, both the intellect and the moral sense. It gives false views of life, inculcates false aims, and therefore unfits for doing life's work well. It engenders a dreamy sentimentalism which makes real work distasteful, thus leading to discontent with one's surroundings.

"As a teacher, I have watched this matter very carefully, and have always found that when boys and girls become addicted to reading trashy literature it is next to impossible to get any real good work out of them. Their mental tissues grow flabby as those of the body do when fed upon slops; when required to do anything demanding close application they were always found wanting. They were lacking in the 'clear grit' that conquers difficulties. I have followed these pupils out into the world and almost invariably have found them failures there, lacking in the patient perseverance that conquers difficulties, vacillating in purpose and weak in execution. One such now rises vividly before me, a bright, handsome boy, an only son. As a child in the lower grades of school, he was unusually quick in his studies; but in the grammar school we noted a change which grew more noticeable as he passed into the high school. He seemed, in the expressive Western phrase, 'to have lost his grip.' Anything at all difficult seemed to appall him, instead of arousing his boyish determination to conquer it. One by one his studies were given up as 'too hard' until he fell out of his class. Searching for the cause his teachers thought they discovered it—and we think they were right—in his bookcase. It was filled with trashy books, from Oliver Optic's down, and every spare moment was spent in reading them. His mind was enervated and his taste so vitiated that solid mental food was distasteful. For the past five years he has been drifting aimlessly about, now trying this thing, now that, to make a living, but invariably coming back upon his father for support every few months. Lately the father has died, leaving very little for the support of his family; what Ralph will now do to support himself and wife, for he has a wife, we cannot imagine. Doubtless other causes operated to produce these results, but the most apparent, and we believe the most potent, was trashy reading."

PRAYER UNION.

SPECIAL REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.

AN aged sister, herself sick and infirm, desires the assistance of the Prayer Union in behalf of her son who is badly addicted to the drink habit. The young man is a member of the church, and is struggling with feeble strength to free himself from its deadly grasp. Will the Union kindly uphold him, with their faith, prayers, and fasting, to Him who is able to overcome in all things?

Sr. Jane Heaton, of Blackfoot, Idaho, requests the faith and prayers of the Prayer Union that if it be pleasing to God she may be relieved of her deafness and healed of other bodily infirmities.

Letter Department.

PITTSBURG, Kan., April 11.

Editors Herald:—This is a city of about twelve thousand inhabitants, and only three saints besides the writer live here. We do not have much preaching here. Bro. Richards preached a few times last winter at my house, and Bro. Spencer preached twice. Have seen Brn. Cather and Evan Davis a few times as they were passing. The latter may have a discussion with a Spiritualist here. I have lately met Evan's father, Bro. John T. Davis, and also his brother John Arthur Davis; they live four miles south and one mile east of here.

I was impressed by reading the remarks of Bro. A. H. Smith at General Conference. He says, "I have felt myself ready when the Spirit would direct me to move forward, and I am still ready to move." Ah, if we could all say that, I believe God would soon remove all difficulties, and much greater progress would be made than at present. I believe Paul made a true statement when he said, "That there should be no schism in the body; but that the members should have the same care one for another. And whether one member suffer, all the members suffer with it; or one member be honored, all the members rejoice with it." Let us all stand united in the bonds of the gospel.

Apostle John H. Lake said, "We say we are not ashamed of the gospel of Christ, but the gospel may be of us; we should be careful that it is not." Bro. J. W. Wight's remarks on the Utah apostasy, that there were many honest-hearted people in Utah, and the hopeful sign of the fact that they are teaching the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants in the public schools, impressed me. I also appreciate the position taken by Bishop E. L. Lelley in regard to the Saints' Home and Graceland College. These two institutions are the fruits of the blessed gospel of the Master. "By their fruits ye shall know them." The world will learn to know us by our fruit. These institutions should be supported, and other fruit borne for the good of God's children and a sin-cursed world, as soon as possible. I am glad that progress is being made by the church everywhere. I have been in the church five years, and can say that I rejoice at this time more than ever before, because I was sought out from the world and permitted to enter into this church and have fellowship with the people of God. May I prove a wise servant. I ask the prayers of the saints.

ALBERT T. DAVIS.

BEELER, Kan., April 3.

Editors Herald:—The debate held at Ransom, Kansas, began March 22. Propositions: 1. Resolved, that the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is in harmony with the New Testament Church in organization, doctrine, and practice. 2. Resolved, that the Church of Christ of which I, J. E. Sniffin, am a member, is in harmony with the New Testament Church of Christ in organization, doctrine, and practice.

We were pleased with the way Bro. Pender defended the first proposition and criticised the second, and with the interest the people manifested in our faith. We are satisfied the debate has done much good for the cause, and that if it can be followed with able preaching much good can be done there.

Much good was done at the three different places where Bro. Pender preached during his stay in Ness County. After the debate closed he preached one night in the large new Methodist church which the Methodists tendered the use of. About three hundred people attended. The Christian people held meeting at the same time in the schoolhouse, and it was said by an attendant at their meeting that about sixty attended. The people are anxious for Bro. Pender to return and preach.

The debate continued nine evenings, and was presided over in an able manner by Mr. J. G. Arnold, of Ness City, who showed no partiality, and kept good order. Bro. Pender was applauded much more than his opponent.

We are very much pleased with Bro. Pender's visit, as we think it will help us to get more missionary help. We have never been able to get much such help. It seems that the church thinks it not worth while to labor here, and Bro. Pender admits that he was surprised to see how people turn out to meeting, and how much they are interested.

Yours hopefully,

T. E. THOMPSON.

ANDERSON, Mich., April 4.

Editors Herald:—In this a small part of Father's vineyard, the work is progressing, if but slowly. Though few in number, we are still trying to keep the gospel banner waving; and although, we have a good deal to contend with, yet we hope to show by our lives we are not what some pretend to think us. It is a grand and noble work, and I long to see others embrace it. I have passed through heavy trials and bitter sorrow, that I feel without Father's sustaining grace I could not have borne; but his grace is all sufficient.

Elder E. H. Durand, of Detroit, has been with us a short time; had the pleasure of baptizing one young man before he left. There are others who say they know this work is right, but still remain outside. I presume it is natural to have a preference of who shall baptize us, but it may not be safe to remain too long out of the fold. May all who profess to be followers of Christ live true and faithful lives, as our influence is either for good or evil; and when life's work is ended, may we all be gathered home with Father, is the prayer of your sister in Christ,

GOD'S PLAN OF SALVATION FOR MANKIND.

KIND FRIEND:—The probabilities are that this treatise would not have been written if I had less regard than I have for the truth of God's plan for the salvation of mankind, and were not the predominant desire of my soul that mankind should attain to the fullness of salvation offered to man through obedience to that plan, which is professedly known and as professedly recognized as the doctrine of Christ by all professors of so-called Christianity, each however having his own peculiar ideas as to the essential and nonessential powers of that doctrine; each placing his own private interpretation upon them independent of the word written for their instruction and learning. I read that,

All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness: that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works.—2 Tim. 3: 16, 17.

I also read:—

We have also a more sure word of prophecy; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the daystar arise in your hearts: knowing this first, that no prophecy of Scripture is of any private interpretation. For the prophecy came not in old time by the will of man: but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost.—2 Peter 1: 19–21.

The doctrines of Christ being prophetic in their nature, on account of the promises to be realized in the future, of an eternal salvation through obedience in this life to the commands embodied therein, bring them under the rule established in the foregoing scriptures, and therefore are given for our instruction in righteousness, or right doing; and are also not subjects for any man's private interpretation, lest we should be led away by the cunning craftiness of men who lie in wait to deceive, having a form of godliness but denying the power thereof. I also read:—

Whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God. He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath both the Father and the Son.—2 John 1: 9.

And Jesus declared:—

My doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me.—John 7: 16.

And the Father who sent him has said:—

So shall my word be that goeth forth out of my mouth: it shall not return unto me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it.—Isa. 55: 11.

I believe the foregoing fully establish a foundation upon which we may safely build, ever remembering the principles involved in the quotations made, never allowing our minds to be drawn away from the word of the Lord and the labors of his immediate followers, either by the traditions of the fathers or the private opinions of our own minds, which are either of them liable to lead us away from the truth, for I read:—

The things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God.—1 Cor. 2: 11.

And the apostle goes on to say:—

[Now we [speaking to the church] have received, not the spirit of the world [which is contradictory and opposed to the spirit of truth] but the Spirit which is of God; that we might know the things that are freely given to us of God.—1 Cor. 2: 12.

This principle is in full conformity with the promise of Christ:—

Howbeit when he, the Spirit of truth, is come, he will guide you into all truth: for he shall not speak of himself; but whatsoever he shall hear, that shall he speak: and he will shew you things to come.—John 16: 13.

This being true, there should be no difficulty among men professing to be the true followers of Christ, as all professed Christians do to fully come to an understanding of every truth of God, for I read:—

God is not a man, that he should lie; neither the Son of man, that he should repent: hath he said, and shall he not do it? or hath he spoken, and shall he not make it good?—Num. 23: 19.

Under these assurances from God, and in consideration of the varied opinions of so-called Christianity, would it not be well for them to follow the instructions of the Apostle John to the church in his day:—

Beloved, believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they are of God —1 John 4: 1.

Bring then

To the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them.—Isa. 8: 20.

If these rules were followed and put in force, the churches might be brought into one body, not many as now, and if they met with any points of doctrine which they could not understand, or which might be the means of producing schism in the body, if they had brought themselves into full harmony with God's law, and were acknowledged of him, they would, like the ancients did, inquire of the Lord through his duly appointed prophet, and get the question settled; for if the Lord has a work upon earth, that is his mode of operation; for it is written:—

Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets.—Amos 3: 7.

Just exactly upon the same principle upon which Christ acted at the conversion of Saul. He was told to go down to Damascus and it should be told him what he must do. And the Lord commanded his servant, Ananias, to go and tell Saul what that something was that he must do. (See Acts 22: 16.) Cornelius too was told to send for Simon Peter, and he should tell him what he ought to do. (Acts 10: 6.) This was God's mode of doing business, both in the prophetic age and in the gospel dispensation, so long as men taught and did all things which Jesus had commanded his apostles. It is written:—

For I am the Lord, I change not.—Mal. 3: 6.

Every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights, with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning.—James 1: 17.

And as further evidence that it was the intention of Christ, in the organization of his church, that mankind might have the same opportunities of coming unto him with all perplexing questions, that there might be no schisms among them, it is written:—

And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ: till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ: that we henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive.—Eph. 4: 11–14.

And because of this plan of organization, and the privileges of prophetic inspiration, they could do as the apostle continues:—

But speaking the truth in love, may grow up into him in all things, which is the head, even Christ: from whom the whole body fitly joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body unto the edifying of itself in love.—Eph. 4: 15, 16.

Would to God that I had the power to indelibly emphasize and fix this quotation, in its full intent and meaning, upon the soul of every man and woman who are seeking for and desire salvation in the kingdom of God; especially backed up as it is with the promise:—

If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him.—James 1: 5.

Such a state of things, however, can never exist in a disjointed body, such as the Christian world, so-called, presents to-day; for I am fully aware that they scout the idea of prophetic inspiration to-day, together with all the gifts of the Spirit enjoyed by the primitive church, as being no longer needed; that such things were only intended to endure in the church until it became established, and then ceased. John Wesley thought differently; he said:—

This was the real cause why the gifts of the Holy Spirit were no longer to be found in the Christian church, because the Christians had turned heathen again, and had only a dead form left.—Sermon 94.

The prophetic gift was one of the gifts of the Spirit enjoyed in the early church (1 Cor. 12:10), and the promise of the Spirit which gave these gifts to every man as he the Spirit would, was promised to all whom the Lord our God shall call. (Acts 2:39.) With such an order of things in the church to-day properly used, as in the ancient church, and which would be in the church if recognized of God as his, —there then would be no necessity or room for the troublesome questions which now distract so-called Christianity. That which has been said, I believe to be a sufficient introduction to that which may follow, ever keeping in mind the rules established in the foregoing quotations; having myself in this no other desire but to come to the truth, for it is written:—

The truth shall make you free.—John 8:32.

The first thought that presents itself to my mind as a proper commencement to investigate God's plan of salvation for mankind is, What is the kingdom, or church? Or, as often called by the Apostle Paul, what is the body of Christ composed of? The first intimation we have of actual work in the establishment of the kingdom of God, in the meridian of time, is the following:—

In those days came John the Baptist, preaching in the wilderness of Judea, and saying, Repent ye: for the kingdom of heaven is at hand.—Matt. 3:1, 2.

Among the first things which Jesus did, after he began his ministry, the record says:—

From that time Jesus began to preach, and to say, Repent: for the kingdom of heaven is at hand.—Matt. 4:17.

The law and the prophets were until John: since that time the kingdom of God is preached, and every man presseth into it.—Luke 16:16.

It appears from the above that a kingdom was to be set up. The establishment of a kingdom requires at least four things: first, a king; second, subjects; third, officers; fourth, laws. There is no necessity for me to multiply texts to prove that God is its King; for if it was the Kingdom of God which was about to be set up, God would certainly be its Supreme Ruler, and its laws would emanate from him, and his subjects would be expected and required to yield implicit obedience, if they entertained the hope of receiving its benefits and blessings. We shall therefore rest content with the declarations of Jesus given above (Luke 16:16). This Jesus the Christ was, and is, and will be its chief officer, he being designated, "Prince of Life." (Acts 3:15.) "Prince of Peace." (Isaiah 9:6.) "Prince and Savior." (Acts 5:31.) "The Messiah, The Prince." (Dan. 9:25.) And will eventually become "Prince of the kings of the earth." (Rev. 1:5.) And will so remain, and finally put the last enemy, death, under his feet.

And when all things shall be subdued unto him, then shall the Son also himself be subject unto him that put all things under him, that God [the King] may be all in all.—1 Cor. 15:28.

This Prince, when he came to earth in the meridian of time, did not come in his power and great glory, as he is to come when he comes to reign as King of kings and Lord of lords; or as quoted above, as Prince of the kings of the earth. But as the meek and lowly Jesus he was, however, no less a personage than the Prince of Life, who among the first acts of his ministry gathered around him twelve men, which he organized into a quorum, which he designated "Apostles." (Luke 5:16.) These he sent out through the cities of Judea with the same proclamation he had used:—

Repent ye: for the kingdom of heaven is at hand.—Matt. 3:2.

We also read:—

After these things the Lord appointed other seventy also, and sent them two and two before his face into every city and place, whither he himself would come. Therefore said he unto them, . . . The kingdom of God is come nigh unto you.—Luke 10:1-9.

Thus we have one of the objects of Christ's work—the establishment of the kingdom of God. And in order to its establishment, the organization of two of its quorums of officers—the quorum of apostles and also a quorum of seventy—who acted as evangelists, or messengers to open up as assistants to the apostles. Jesus the Prince being their Prophet, or Revelator of the will of God to them, while he remained with them on earth.

Then said Jesus unto them, when ye have lifted up the Son of man, then shall ye know that I am he, and that I do nothing of myself; but as my Father hath taught me I speak these things.—John 8:28.

For I came down from heaven not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me.—John 6:38.

The labors of these officials he had chosen, was to present the claims of the kingdom of God to the people, and persuade citizens to enter into it.

Now after that John was put in prison, Jesus came into Galilee, preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God, and saying, The time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand: repent ye and believe the gospel.—Mark 1:14, 15.

And we read that many believed. These labors continued with varied successes for about three years and a half, when the Prince was arrested, tried, and convicted of what the Jews clamored was a breach of their law, backed by false evidence and the clamor of the mob, supported by their high priest and rulers, and was put to death, suffering ignominiously upon the cross. His death, however, did not destroy the work he had done; for he, by the power which God his Father had given him, burst the bands of death and arose triumphant from the grave, and established the kingdom of which he had preached, in a greater degree of power than before. His command to his apostles before-time was:—

Go not into the way of the Gentiles, and into any city of the Samaritans enter ye not: but go rather to the lost sheep of the house of Israel.—Matt. 10:5, 6.

The veil of the temple had not yet been rent. But now a better day had come; the law which had been added to the gospel by Moses as a school-master because of Israel's unbelief, had been fulfilled in Christ. And he, while yet with his apostles, teaching them more fully of the things of the kingdom, prior to his ascension to his Father, gave them a broader commission,—not changing the gospel in any of its principles, for they are and were from the beginning, and will be unto the end, fundamental truths, unchangeable in their nature, as is God from whom they came; for as the Apostle Paul declared, they are

The power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; . . . for therein is the righteousness of God revealed from faith to faith: as it is written, The just shall live by faith.—Rom. 1:16, 17.

If the righteousness of God is revealed in the gospel, and if it was necessary that Jesus himself, who knew no sin, should fulfill all righteousness, how much more is it necessary that we, poor fallen humanity, should fulfill all righteousness; seeing that it is the power of God through which our salvation comes, and our course is made plain by the invitation of Jesus, Come follow me? If we then desire the salvation of God, it will be necessary that we shall inquire of what does the gospel consist, seeing that the righteousness of God is revealed in it, and that it is necessary for us to fulfill or obey it; and as Jesus preached the gospel (Mark 1:14) its principles necessarily became his doctrine and Jesus said:—

My doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me.—John 7:16.

For I have not spoken of myself; but the Father which sent me, he gave me a commandment, what I should say, and what I should speak. And I know that his commandment is life everlasting: whatsoever I speak therefore, even as the Father hath said unto me, so I speak.—John 12:49, 50.

And the Father hath said:—

So shall my word be that goeth forth out of my mouth: it shall not return unto me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereunto I sent it.—Isa. 55:11.

Therefore,

Whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God. He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath both the Father and the Son.—2 John, v. 9.

With the foregoing quotations for a basis, we will proceed to examine what those doctrines are. The Apostle Paul, writing his epistle to the Hebrew church, a people to whom he said:—

We are made partakers of Christ, if we hold the beginning of our confidence steadfast unto the end.—Heb. 3:14.

Therefore leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on unto perfection; not laying again the foundation of repentance from dead works, and of faith toward God, of the doctrine of baptisms, and of laying on of hands, and of resurrection of the dead, and of eternal judgment.—Heb. 6:1, 2.

These people had obeyed the first four of these fundamental principles, by which they became partakers of Christ, and were now exhorted by the apostle to go on to perfection; building upon this foundation all the virtues (see 2 Peter 1:5-8) growing out of it, which would be the evidence that they were holding the beginning of their confidence steadfast; which, if they continued to do unto the end, would entitle them to all the privileges and blessings to be derived from the resurrection and the eternal judgment. It appears then that faith toward God, repentance from dead works, the doctrine of baptisms, and of laying on of hands are the four first principles and foundation of the doctrine of Christ, on which we must abide and grow in grace, or we have not God. It is written:—

Without faith it is impossible to please him: for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him.—Heb. 11:6.

God the Father hath said of the Son:—

Thy throne, O God, is forever and ever: a scepter of righteousness is the scepter of thy kingdom.—Heb. 1:8.

A scepter is an emblem of royalty. The use of the royal scepter is described in the Book of Esther, chapter 5:1-3. The royal scepter then which the Son, Jesus the Christ, the Prince of Life, holds out to the people is a scepter of righteousness; and this righteousness is the righteousness of God revealed in the gospel, through which mankind, if they will, may be rescued from their fallen condition to the favor and presence of God, as at the beginning, but in a greater degree of perfection. Jesus said:—

Let not your heart be troubled: ye believe in God, believe also in me. In my Father's house are many mansions: if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you, . . . that where I am, there ye may be also.—John 14:1-3.

And this place he was going to prepare was not for the apostles alone, but for all them who should believe on him through their teaching. (See John 17.) This then is the ultimate of the reward for all those who take advantage of the presentation of this scepter of righteousness by faith in God, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and seeking diligently to serve him. For Jesus said:—

Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven.—Matt. 7:21.

Faith then is the first and grand moving principle of all action, whether it pertain to this life, or the life to come. For,

Through faith we understand that the worlds were framed by the word of God.—Heb. 11:3.

And in order to our salvation and eternal life in the presence of the Father, we must center our faith in Jesus the Christ:—

For there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved.—Acts 4:12.

And as in our natural state we are prone to sin, and as whosoever committeth sin transgresseth also the law: for sin is the transgression of the law.—1 John 3:4.

And as the royal law of God is embodied in the Scriptures (James 2:8); and as Jesus declared the first commandment to be, thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind.—Matt. 22:37.

Therefore as all have sinned and come short of the glory of God.—Rom. 3:23.

we live, and move, and have our being; . . . for we are also his offspring.—Acts 17:28.

Seeing then that we all have sinned against him who is our Father and friend, and who so loved us in our fallen condition, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life.—John 3:16.

For

the Lord . . . is longsuffering to us-ward, not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance.—2 Peter 3:9.

Repent ye therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out, when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord; and he shall send Jesus Christ, which before was preached unto you: whom the heavens must receive until the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began.—Acts 3:19-21.

For

Unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation.—Heb. 9:28.

From these passages then, it appears that the final blotting out of sin does not transpire, nor the time of refreshing come, until Jesus shall appear the second time unto them who shall be looking for him. This gives significance to the word of Jesus:—

But he that endureth to the end shall be saved.—Matt. 10:22.

And also to the words of Paul:—

For we are made partakers of Christ, if we hold the beginning of our confidence steadfast unto the end.—Heb. 3:14.

How then shall we be relieved from the burden of our sin when we shall have repented toward God; that is, ceased to do evil and learned to do well; or shall be in like condition as the people upon the day of Pentecost, and shall inquire:—

Men and brethren, what shall we do? Then Peter said unto them, Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost.—Acts 2: 37, 38.

I am now fully aware that I am entering upon ground which you may possibly consider debatable; but I shall strive to keep upon the side of truth, let it cut wherever it may; or if it cut with both edges, striving and praying to be led by the Spirit of truth, which leads into all truth. In the first place I shall endeavor to show you that the ordinance of baptism is for the remission of sins, and not because of the sins having been remitted previous to baptism; and also that the Holy Ghost is not received as an indwelling gift of God, by the penitent believer, until after his birth of the water, or baptism in water; also that no man can be saved in the kingdom of God without the baptisms of water and of the Spirit. In the first place we will try and discover what is the meaning of the word "remission." I find it to signify: "Abatement, relaxation, release, forgiveness; pardon;" but not a blotting out until the times of refreshing shall come, and Jesus shall be revealed the second time without sin unto salvation. This is in keeping with the words of the Prophet Ezekiel, chapters 18 and 33. As quoted before, it is said:—

John did baptize in the wilderness, and preach the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins.—Mark 1: 4.

John the beloved disciple, speaking of John the Baptist, says:—

There was a man sent from God, whose name was John. The same came for a witness, to bear witness of the Light, that all men through him might believe.—John 1: 6, 7.

And Mark, speaking of the time when this John came, says it was:—

The beginning of the gospel of Jesus Christ, the Son of God.—Mark 1: 1.

Not as some say, that the baptism of John was a relic of the washings under the Mosaic law; but it was the beginning of the gospel of Jesus Christ, and one of the principles of the doctrine of Christ; and both Mark and Luke say that John preached the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins. (Mark 1: 4; Luke 3: 3.) And as before quoted, he was sent from God, and this was part of his mission. Jesus, also, in his final instructions to his apostles, prior to his ascension, taught the same doctrine, as shown in his commission; and also in the apostles' teachings and practices, after his ascension, as will appear. It is written:—

Then opened he their understanding, that they might understand the Scriptures, and said unto them, Thus it is written, and thus it behooved Christ to suffer, and to rise from the dead the third day: and that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem. And ye are witnesses of these things.—Luke 24: 45-48.

And he said unto them, Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned.—Mark 16: 15, 16.

Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world.—Matt. 28: 19, 20.

From reading the contexts of the above quotations, it appears that they were all uttered in the same last course of instructions given by Jesus, and in the consecutive order in which they are here quoted, and these constituted as a whole the commission given by Jesus to his apostles, and embodying their authority to act after they should receive the power promised from on high, for which they were commanded to tarry in Jerusalem. (Luke 24: 29.) From this time forth the apostles and other officials whom Christ had appointed in his church, were left to carry out the instructions they had received, without the personal companionship of their Master and friend; but when the Holy Ghost the Comforter should come, Jesus had promised that he should lead them and guide them into all truth, and bring to their remembrance all things which he, Jesus, had commanded them. (See John, chapters 14, 15, and 16.)

And when the day of Pentecost was fully come, they were all with one accord in one place. And suddenly there came a sound from heaven as of a rushing mighty wind, and it filled all the house where they were sitting. And there appeared unto them cloven tongues like as of fire, and it sat upon each of them. And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance.—Acts 2: 1-4.

There were about one hundred and twenty disciples assembled there, and upon this occasion there were assembled in Jerusalem Jews, devout men from sixteen different nations, speaking different languages; and these Jews heard these disciples speak in their own tongues the wonderful works of God. And they were all amazed and wondered what all this meant; but some mocked and said, "These men are full of new wine." But Peter gave them to understand that they were not drunken, as they supposed; and he forthwith preached Christ unto them; and they finally believed Peter's preaching, and cried out, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" And now I wish you to notice closely the answer of Peter, and remember that he now spoke under the influence and power of the Holy Ghost, whose duty was, under the promise of Jesus, to bring to Peter's mind the principles or doctrines he had been taught by the Master, which would be an acceptable, true, and correct answer to the question propounded:—

Men and brethren, what shall we do? Then Peter said unto them, Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. For the promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call.—Acts 2: 37-39. (Read all of Acts 2.)

This answer of Peter's stands good for all the ages, and any departure from it setting forth any other mode by which men can be saved, is a departure from the straight and narrow way which leads to eternal life and salvation in the celestial kingdom, where God and Christ will dwell, the Mansion which Jesus promised to go and prepare, from the fact that it embodies the teachings of John, the man sent from God, in the beginning of the gospel of Jesus Christ. It embodies the pattern set by Jesus, when he demanded his right to enter the sheepfold by the door of baptism, that he might fulfill all righteousness, and when he was baptized, as he came up straightway out of the water, he received the gift of the Holy Ghost, which rested upon him in the shape of a dove, and a voice from heaven was heard saying,

This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased. (Matt. 3:13-17; Mark 1:9-11; Luke 3:21; 22.)

Thus the porter admitted through the door into the sheepfold the Shepherd of the sheep, and who was, as an acknowledgment of his obedience, publicly acknowledged by his Father as his well beloved Son; and Jesus says, Come follow me. And he also said:—

Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that entereth not by the door into the sheepfold, but climbeth up some other way, the same is a thief and a robber.—John 10: 1.

In connection with the above, I will introduce some of the instructions of the Apostle Paul in regard to this matter:—

Know ye not, that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death? Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death: that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life. For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection: [That is, as Jesus was planted in the tomb mortal, he was raised from the tomb immortal; so, also, we in likeness of his burial and resurrection are planted, buried in the watery grave, full of sin, we arise from the watery grave with our sins remitted, and it is expected of us that we will henceforth walk in newness of life.] Knowing this, that our old man is crucified with him, that the body of sin might be destroyed, that henceforth we should not serve sin.—Rom. 6: 3-6.

Buried with him in baptism, wherein also ye are risen with him through the faith of the operation of God, who hath raised him from the dead. And you, being dead in your sins . . . hath he quickened together with him, having forgiven you all trespasses.—Col. 2: 12, 13.

That is, they having been buried in baptism, in obedience to the command, they had risen unto a new life. God having, through that act of submission to his will, remitted all their former sins.

For ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus. For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ. . . . And if ye be Christ's then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise.—Gal. 3: 26-29.

But God be thanked, that ye were the servants of sin, but ye have obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine which was delivered you. Being then made free from sin, ye became the servants of righteousness.—Rom. 6: 17, 18.

From these quotations it is plain that by obedience to the act of baptism we die to sin and arise from the watery grave a new man in Christ Jesus, and are made partakers of Christ, if we hold the beginning of our confidence steadfast unto the end.—Heb. 3: 14.

Yes, the Apostle Peter was correct when he commanded: "Repent, and be baptized every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins;" and it was so recognized by all the early saints. Barnabas, one of the disciples who lived and wrote about the time that John the Revelator was liberated from Patmos, left the following on record:—

Blessed are they who, placing their trust in the cross, have gone down into the water. . . . We indeed descend into the water full of sins and defilement, but come up bearing fruit in our hearts.—Epistle, chap. 11.

Tertullian, another of the early and most esteemed fathers, wrote:—

We, after the example of Jesus Christ, are born in water.—The act of baptism itself is carnal, in that we are plunged in water; but the effect is spiritual, in that we are freed from sin.—On Baptism, chap. 1 and 7.

The question is often asked, What effect can the water have in washing away sins? In answer I would ask, "What effect the water had in the healing of the Assyrian leper? Or, was it not rather Naaman's obedience to the word of the Lord through his servant Elisha? (2 Kings, chap. 5.) Answer these questions in your own heart, and then perhaps you will be able to tell why being buried in water will wash away sins.

And now why tarriest thou? arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord.—Acts 22: 16.

There is, however, another birth inseparably connected with this birth of water, so much so that without either or both, there is no salvation in the kingdom of God. But you say, Was not the thief on the cross saved without baptism? for Jesus said to him,

To-day shalt thou be with me in paradise.—Luke 23: 43.

I will answer by asking you two questions. First, can you prove that this thief had not been baptized; either by John, or by Jesus, or by any of his apostles under the authority of Jesus, and that the sin for which he was now suffering was not a sin committed for which Jesus became an advocate with the Father for those who believe on him. (See 1 John 2: 1; Heb. 7: 25.) I wish you to understand that these passages refer in their effects only to subjects of the kingdom, and not to the world. Second, how did this thief know that Jesus was the Lord, and that he could be of benefit to him when Jesus came into his kingdom, unless he was a baptized believer in Christ, and it had been revealed unto him by God, as it had been unto Peter? for I read that no man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost.—1 Cor. 12: 3.

Whenever you can answer these questions satisfactorily in the negative, then will be the proper time to spring the question of this thief's salvation in the kingdom of God without baptism. Jesus the Messiah, the Prince of Peace and Life, said:—

Verily, verily I say unto thee, Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God.—John 3: 5.

These births are the outgrowths of faith in Christ and in his gospel, For therein is the righteousness of God revealed from faith to faith: as it is written, The just shall live by faith.—Rom. 1: 17.

In the beginning of the gospel of Jesus Christ, John, in the declaration of his mission, said among other things to the Pharisees and Sadducees:—

I indeed baptize you with water unto repentance; but he that cometh after me is mightier than I, whose shoes I am not worthy to bear: he shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost, and with fire.—Matt. 3: 11.

And Jesus who came after John, of whom he spake, said unto his disciples:—

If ye love me, keep my commandments. And I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you forever; even the Spirit of truth; whom the world cannot receive, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him: but ye know him; for he dwelleth with you, and shall be in you. . . . But the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you.—John 14: 15-17, 26.

And when the day of Pentecost was fully come they, the apostles, and all who were with them in the upper room received the promise:—

And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost.—Acts 2: 4.

And Peter under his, the Holy Spirit's influence, made to the people the promise:—

And ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. For the promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call.—Acts 2: 38, 39.

And I wish you to distinctly remember that the promise of the gift of the Holy Ghost was made and followed after the command was given to be baptized for the remission of sins, and not to be received before. And a very pointed instance of the intent, mode, and manner of reception in apostolic times is shown in the conversion and reception of the Holy Ghost by the Samaritans:—

Then Philip went down to the city of Samaria, and preached Christ unto them. And the people with one accord gave heed unto those things which Philip spake, hearing and seeing the miracles which he did. . . . And there was great joy in that city. . . . But when they believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized, both men and women. . . . Now when the apostles which were at Jerusalem heard that Samaria had received the word of God, they sent unto them Peter and John: who, when they were come down, prayed for them, that they might receive the Holy Ghost: (for as yet he was fallen upon none of them: only they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus:) Then laid they their hands on them, and they received the Holy Ghost.—Acts, chapter 8.

The question now arises, Had and did Philip and the apostles Peter and John taught and done, in this instance, the things which Jesus had commanded and said unto them? Had the Holy Ghost, under whose power these men acted, done for them that which Jesus promised? Had it brought to their remembrance the things necessary for the occasion, which Jesus had said unto them? If both these questions are answered in the affirmative, then these disciples had fully established the law of the kingdom of God, governing in all like circumstances when initiating subjects into that kingdom. And now, by what right or authority do professed Christians claim these ordinances, especially the laying on of hands with prayer, are nonessential to man's salvation? Especially when we consider the words of the Apostle Paul, written to the Ephesian church, and referring to the time of these people's first experience, as recorded in Acts 19: 1-6. He says:—

In whom ye also trusted, after that ye . . . believed, ye were sealed with that Holy Spirit of promise.—Eph. 1: 13.

But if Philip, Peter, and John had not taught and done the things which Jesus had taught and said unto them; but had exercised their own judgment, and followed their own opinion and private interpretation of the things they had been taught, then of right the Holy Spirit had withheld the promised assistance, and they were no longer entitled to the promise Jesus had made unto them under the authority of his Father, to be with them even unto the end of the world. It was upon obedience to the things Jesus had said unto them that the promise hinged; and if disobedient, the Lord would be no longer under obligations to accept, but to reject their work. But the sequel proves they had done that which they had been commanded; for,

They went forth, and preached everywhere, the Lord working with them, and confirming the word with signs following.—Mark 16: 20.

In full accord with the promise:—

And these signs shall follow them that believe; in my name they shall cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick and they shall recover.—Mark 16: 17, 18.

But, says the objector, did not Cornelius receive the Holy Ghost before baptism, and that without the laying on of hands and prayer? I answer, Yes. But if you will read all the circumstances attending it, as recorded in Acts, chapters ten and eleven, you will discover the deep-seated prejudices in the hearts of the Jews against the Gentiles, and the absolute necessity for a special interposition of the hand of the Lord to remove it from the church. This he did; first, by the vision and command to Peter; second, by the visitation of the angel to Cornelius commanding him to send for Peter, who should tell him things he ought to do; and afterward by the miraculous power of the Holy Ghost upon Cornelius and his house, not only confirming Peter, but convincing the Jews that were with him, that God was no respecter of persons under the gospel dispensation. And the first thing that Peter told them they ought to do, he commanded them to be baptized in the name of the Lord. And now I wish to ask, Did the Lord by this special circumstance change the fourth principle of the doctrine of Christ—“The laying on of hands”—and prayer that those who had believed, repented, and been baptized might receive the Holy Ghost to some other way? If so, please show us the word of the Lord for it. The traditions of men, or the opinions of collegiate reverend divines, will not answer the purpose. We shall see. The circumstance in Samaria, which we have considered, transpired according to Bible chronology in the year A. D. 34. That in regard to Cornelius in the year A. D. 41. Fourteen years afterward, or in the year A. D. 55, I read:—

And it came to pass, that, while Apollos was at Corinth, Paul having passed through the upper coasts came to Ephesus; and finding certain disciples, he said unto them, Have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed? And they said unto him, We have not so much as heard whether there be any Holy Ghost. And he said unto them, Unto what then were ye baptized? And they said, Unto John's baptism. Then said Paul, John verily baptized with the baptism of repentance, saying unto the people, that they should believe on him which should come after him; that is, on Christ Jesus. When they heard this, they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus. And when Paul had laid his hands upon them, the Holy Ghost came on them; and they spake with tongues, and prophesied.—Acts 19: 1-6.

Yes; the Lord still confirmed the words and acts of Paul by signs following the believer. Thus you see the gospel law established under the teachings of Jesus, and introduced in practice by the Apostles Peter and John, and was still in force and produced the legitimate effects—the gift of the Holy Ghost. Referring to the above circumstance, the Apostle Paul, in writing to the Ephesian brethren nine years afterwards, in the year A. D. 64, says:—

In whom also ye trusted, after that ye heard the word of truth, the gospel of your salvation: in whom also, after that ye believed, ye were sealed with that Holy Spirit of promise, which is the earnest of our inheritance until the redemption of the purchased possession, unto the praise of his glory.”—Eph. 1: 13, 14.

Perhaps the idea may now strike you, or if it does not, I will help you. Granting that the thief upon the cross had been born of the water, he had not been born of the Spirit, because of not having had hands laid upon him. Granted.

For the Holy Ghost was not yet given; because Jesus was not yet glorified.—John 7: 39.

The Apostle Paul embodies these principles of baptisms and the laying on of hands as principles of the doctrine of Christ, in his epistle to the Hebrew church in the year A. D. 64. (Heb. 6: 1, 2.) And remember, that the Apostle John wrote his second epistle general to the churches in the year A. D. 90, forty-nine years after the conversion of Cornelius, and said:—

Whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God.—2 John, v. 9.

But we will proceed and see what the Apostle Paul has to say in regard to the gospel he preached, written to the Galatian church in the year A. D. 58:—

But I certify you, brethren, that the gospel which was preached of me is not after man. For I neither received it of man, neither was I taught it, but by the revelation of Jesus Christ.—Gal. 1: 11, 12.

But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed. As we said before, so say I now again, If any man preach any other gospel unto you than that ye have received, let him be accursed. For do I now persuade men or God? or do I seek to please men? for if I yet please men, I should not be the servant of Christ.—Gal. 1: 8-10.

In the language of the Apostle Paul I would advise:—

Examine yourselves, whether ye be in the faith; prove your own selves.—2 Cor. 13: 5.

Ask yourself the question, Am I fearing God and giving glory to him? Am I worshiping him that made heaven and earth, and the sea and the fountains of water? Am I a believer in its full sense in the Lord Jesus Christ? Have I fully repented of all my sins toward God? Have I been baptized, born of, buried with Christ by baptism in water for the remission of my sins; and have I risen from the watery grave a new creature in Christ Jesus, freed from sin? Have I received the seal of my adoption into the family of God, by the prayer of faith, and the laying on of the hands of those who have authority from God, that I might receive the Holy Ghost? Has my faith been confirmed by having received any of the gifts of that Holy Spirit promised by Jesus to them that believe (Mark 16: 17, 18), and of which the Apostle Paul would not have the Corinthian saints ignorant, impressing upon their minds that the gifts he then enumerated “worketh that one and the selfsame Spirit, dividing to every man severally as he will”? (See 1 Cor. 12: 1-11.) Am I going on unto perfection, “giving all diligence, adding to my faith virtue; and to virtue, knowledge; and to knowledge, temperance; and to temperance, patience; and to patience, godliness; and to godliness, brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness, charity. For if these things be in you, and abound, they make you that ye shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ.”—2 Peter 1: 5-8.

And this is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent.—John 17: 3.

If all the above questions can be answered in the affirmative, all is well. If any of them must be answered in the negative, then remember that,

Sin is the transgression of the law.—1 John 3, 4.

And that,

There is no respect of persons with God. . . . For not the hearers of the law [the law of faith.—Rom. 3: 27] are just before God, but the doers of the law shall be justified.—Rom. 2: 11-13.

It will also be well and of the first importance to heed the following:—

Thus saith the Lord, Stand ye in the way, and see, and ask for the old paths, where is the good way, and walk therein, and ye shall find rest for your souls.—Jer. 6: 16.

And if you do this and find it, then, Earnestly contend for the faith once delivered to the saints.—Jude 5: 3.

These principles,—these doctrines, this gospel of the kingdom of God with all its attendant powers and blessings—are taught, preached, earnestly contended for, and enjoyed by the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, as a witness unto all nations that the hour of God's judgment is come. (Rev. 14: 6, 7.) And also the ushering in of the dispensation of the fullness of times [that] he might gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven, and which are on earth; even in him.—Eph. 1: 10.

And they invite you to come.

And the Spirit and the bride say, Come. And let him that heareth say, Come. And let him that is athirst come. And whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely.—Rev. 22: 17.

And now in conclusion I say, that my earnest desire and prayer to God is that all mankind would come unto Christ and be saved, and that by their obedience to God's plan of salvation their sins may be in that condition that they may be blotted out, when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord; and he shall send Jesus Christ, which before was preached unto you: whom the heaven must receive until the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began.—Acts 3: 19-21.

And that each, after having put their hand to the gospel plow, may never look back, for they will then have been made partakers of Christ, and if they then hold the beginning of their confidence steadfast unto the end, they shall receive Eternal Life, the greatest gift of God to man.

I am your friend for Christ's sake,
WILLIAM HAWKINS.

REUNION NOTICES.

A reunion of the church will be held at Shelton, Nebraska, from May 31 to June 5. This reunion is held under the auspices of the Central Nebraska district. The conferences of the Northern and Southern Nebraska districts have consented to unite in the services of this reunion, which will, we trust, add to its interest, and efficiency. Shelton, Nebraska, is on the main line of the U. P. R. R. about 190 miles west of Omaha.

The place secured upon which to hold this reunion is adjoining the town on the north, and is one of the most beautiful groves in Nebraska. Hay and fuel will be furnished free of charge, grain at market price on the grounds. Straw for use in tents will be free.

The Presidency and the Bishopric of the church will be represented, nothing preventing more than is now known. Likewise the General Superintendent will be present a part of the time. It is also expected that all general missionaries of the church laboring in Nebraska who consistently can will be present to assist in and enjoy the services. Tents will cost for use during the time of the reunion as follows: 10x12 $2.50; 12x14, $2.75. All who wish tents will correspond with Jacob Hershey, Shelton, Nebraska.

Those coming by rail will correspond with J. F. Lippencott, Shelton, Nebraska, or Leslie Boodry, Cairo, Nebraska.

Let all come with prayer in their hearts, and bring Bibles, Hymnals, or Harps, Windowed Songs, and Quarterlies, so that you can enter into the services heartily. Those who can assist with the music, either vocal or instrumental, come prepared to do so.

The committee hope to see a goodly attendance, and trust that much material good may be done in the interests of the work of God.

Archæological Committee's Report,
WITH MAPS.

Evidences Supporting the Book of Mormon.

This work presents the results of labors of the "Committee on American Archæology," appointed at the General Conference of 1894. The work has been written after much time and special labor in investigating every available source of written information on the subject.

It is divided into three parts. Part 1 contains a preface, and outlines the history of the Nephites. Part 2 is a synopsis of Jaredite history, and includes a summary of the conclusions reached by the committee, with a statement of the evidences upon which said conclusions are based. Part 3 contains much miscellaneous matter of general importance, including a list of early authors on American antiquities, with their opinions concerning the origin of the ancient Americans; a list of authors quoted; also an index of names of lands, cities, rivers, etc.

The committee has outlined and located the civilizations, lands, cities, rivers, and boundaries of countries named in the Book of Mormon. These are shown on six specially prepared Maps, included in the report. Other engravings also appear—illustrations of "Mexican Picture Writing," "Landa's Maya Alphabet," "LePlongeon's Egyptian and Maya alphabet," "Book of Mormon characters," "Bas Relief from Palenque," and "Inscriptions from Palenque."

The committee has summarized the leading archæological evidences obtainable in support of the claims made by the Book of Mormon; evidences have been gathered from sources not accessible to the average reader, making it a manual of defense of its archæological claims.

The preparation of the work has been completed at considerable expense, but the price has been made as low as possible.

HISTORY OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS. (Volumes 1 and 2 now ready.) Provided for by action of General Conference of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Written and compiled by President Joseph Smith and Apostle Heman C. Smith. Invaluable as a correct historical narrative, as a means of conversion to truth, and as a defensive weapon in meeting old and new objections urged against the latter-day work. It contains important documents connected with the establishment, growth, and internal and external affairs and progress of the church. The revelations given in this dispensation are inserted, in connection with accounts of the circumstances under which they were given. Biographical sketches, illustrations, complete indexes, sidenotes for ready reference, etc., are some of the features of the work. Volume 1 begins with the birth of Joseph Smith, the Prophet and Seer, in 1805, and narrates the circumstances of his calling and ministry, the rise of the church in 1830, and until the close of the year 1835. Volume 2 continues the history up to June 27, 1844, —to the assassination of Joseph and Hyrum Smith.

The D. M. & K. C. Ry from Des Moines to Cainsville has been rebuilt and that portion south of Van Wert will be standard gauge on or before November 1, 1897.

There is no road in Southern Iowa or Northern Missouri which has more good locations for business men than on the line of the Keokuk Route. More stock of all kinds has been shipped over this line than any road of equal mileage in Iowa or Missouri. (See Missouri Surplus Map at our stations.) The freight and passenger service is not equalled by any road in the state, except the Missouri River trunk lines, with each of which we have union stations and direct connections.

Persons seeking farms can find property at tempting prices; men seeking business locations can find towns with ample territory, and settlers to warrant good business. Additional passenger service will soon be given which will add to the growth of the towns.

The towns between Des Moines and Cainsville are particularly well located for business. Look them up. Write to the undersigned for additional information. See folder for map and lands.

ARCHÆOLOGICAL FINDS.

CHRISTIAN LITERATURE OF THE FIRST THREE CENTURIES BROUGHT TO LIGHT.

DISCOVERY of catacomb inscriptions by Wilpert.

Le Blant's discoveries in Roman Africa and Gaul.

Inscriptions unearthed by Huebner.

Antiquities dug up on the Dalmatian Coast.

Ramsay's explorations in Asia Minor.

Bryennio's discoveries in the Jerusalem monastery of Constantinople.

Finding of the Gospel of Peter by the French archæological mission.

Recovery of Tatian's Diatessaron or Harmony of the Four Gospels.

Professor Harris' discovery on Mount Sinai.

Papyrus dug up at Benehsa.

This is preëminently the day of the archæologist.

The tape line and the space are commentators par excellence. There is an ancient tradition that the sitting statue of Memnon at Thebes emits a musical sound when struck by the rays of the rising sun. The sun of this century has touched every ancient statue, temple, and rubbish heap, and they are singing an anthem. The Christian scholar believes it is an anthem to the praise of our God and to the integrity of his word.

A perfect passion for archæological research possesses this age.

It is a part of the development of the historical and critical spirit.

Within the last quarter of a century the Palestine Exploration Society and the Egyptian Exploration Society have come into being, wonderfully stimulating archæological research. In the vast field of Christian archæology rich have been the results. Important documents and notable inscriptions have been discovered, and much light has been thrown upon Christian art and symbolism. Contributions have been made by a group of notable men. First must be mentioned the late Commendatore De Rossi, whose monumental works, "Roma Sotteranea" and "Inscriptiones Christianæ Urbis Romæ," have been the basis of all following work in this direction. By his side must be mentioned, among the Italians, such men as Garucci and Gregorutti. Among the French Roller and Le Blant stand easily first. Germany gives a notable list of eminent names—Piper, Kraus, Schultze, Nikolaus, Mueller, Huebner, Wilpert and others. In England W. M. Ramsay takes the lead. The English speaking world is also under lasting debt to an American scholar, the late Dr. Charles W. Bennett of the Garrett Biblical Institute, for producing the best book in English on the subject—his "Christian Archæology."

Lately great interest has been aroused in the entire subject and many young scholars have come to the front. The first congress of Christian archæologists was held in 1894 at Spalato in Dalmatia, on the site of Diocletian's palace. Such men as Kraus and Wilpert, among Catholic scholars, and Mueller and Schultze among the Protestants, were the leaders. The next congress assembles at Ravenna in 1898. The result of such a conference of Christian archæologists is to insure a scientific study of all the early Christian monuments and to stimulate research in this direction. It goes without saying that the work within the past twenty-five years has done much to shed light upon some vexed problems in the life of the early church, and also to increase the mass of evidence to the genuineness and authenticity of the New Testament Scriptures. The Christian world has now and then been profoundly stirred by the bringing to light of some document or monument and the rapid preparation of the material for publication has soon given to the church the history of the find. Thus with increasing interest the attention of the Christian scholars is directed toward the early Christian centuries.

As the excavations in Egypt have served to assist us in reconstructing the history of the land of the Pharaohs; as the finds in Assyria and Babylonia have made Old Testament life and literature more vivid; as the spade of Schlieman and Curtius have rescued much of Grecian literature from the region of myth, so the researches into early Christian art have removed many misconceptions, pushed back the date of early Christian literature and enabled us to reconstruct to a large extent the worship and policy of the church. We have been enabled also to correct much of the erroneous chronology of the early centuries. The study of the inscriptions, both classical and Christian, has cast unexpected light upon the Patristic writing. Investigations in early Christian art have shown us that the early Christian church was not averse to art, but on the contrary cultivated and practiced the fine arts.

By the study of inscriptions and burial monuments no ordinary light has been thrown upon the history of early heresies. Much of the writings of the early centuries is in the nature of apologetic. The personality of the writer, his bias, his passion, often enter largely into the writing and the position of his adversary is not unfrequently utterly misrepresented. The incised marble of the rude fresco often serve to correct these misrepresentations, thus telling unconsciously the true story of the life of the early church.

The geographical field of Christian archæology is naturally that territory once occupied by the early Christian church and in which remains now exist. Early Christian documents, inscriptions, churches, mosaics, frescoes, etc., are the material which is to be interpreted. Yet, we must confess the disappointment that the actual finds have been so few compared with the territory. Great areas of early Christian life and activity are almost entirely barren of Christian monuments of any character.

We know that in the fifth and sixth centuries were flourishing churches in Palestine, of which scarcely a trace remains. Italy, Northern Africa, Asia Minor, Gaul, Spain, and the Dalmatian Coast are the chief areas for the Christian archæologist. The forces of nature, the devastating irruption of the barbarous hordes from the north, the persecutions of the imperial powers and the wars and rivalries of opposing sects have served to sweep away many noble and valuable Christian monuments.

Italy has furnished us with the chief monuments in the way of Christian art and epigraphy. From the days of Bosio (1674) to the present time the catacombs have been a rich mine of Christian archæology, while the city of Rome itself has given up in the course of excavation many valuable relics of the church. De Rossi may be said to have founded the scientific study of these remains. With indefatigable patience and erudition he has reduced to systematic form the labors of his predecessors and his with unerring instinct opened some remarkable discoveries.

Recent work in the catacombs has been carried on especially by Wilpert, in the discovering and interpreting of catacomb frescoes. Much of the earlier work in this direction is inaccurate and has been copied by all who have followed De Rossi. Wilpert has also done much to throw light on Christian symbolism.

In Roman Africa and Gaul, Le Blant has been and is the great authority in the Christian epigraphy of these regions, publishing several hundred inscriptions, chiefly from the fourth to the sixth centuries.

The work of Huebner on the Christian archæology of Spain has brought to our knowledge about 300 inscriptions from the fourth to the eighth centuries. These are mostly dated and suffice to show that there was a large number of flourishing churches in Spain during this period.

The Dalmatian Coast has in recent years given us many valuable finds. The antiquities of Aquileit, which in the fifth century was a second Rome, have been for many years known through the labors of Bertoli, Zandonati, Gregorutti and others. Two thousand inscriptions have been unearthed here and new ones are being daily brought to light at Dalona, Merusinac and other places under the auspices of the Austrian imperial archæological commission. In formulæ, symbolism, and style they differ decidedly from those at Rome, frequently giving light as to the subjects and mode of Christian baptism of the period, which is the fifth and fourth centuries.

Asia Minor has been recently explored by W. M. Ramsay, who in his "Cities and Bishoprics of Phrygia" (London, 1895) has published one hundred and fifty Christian inscriptions from the southwestern and west central districts of Phrygia. Ramsay shows that with these inscriptions it is possible to fix with complete or approximate certainty the Christian origin of a large number of documents of the third century. These Phrygian descriptions belong to the period before Christianity was legalized by Constantine. In this period a Christian was esteemed by law a traitor and an outlaw. The inscription did not, therefore, to the uninitiated, bear on its face the evidence of its Christian character. He shows that something like a symbolic language of epitaphs was devised, so that the Christian tombs were marked by variations from the customary sepulchral formula, apparently insignificant in themselves and easily eluding notice, but giving a Christian turn to the language and clearly significant to the brethren. This system seems to begin about 200 A. D., and to be confined to certain districts of Phrygia, where the population was to a very large extent Christian, and where there was less chance of malevolent pagans setting the law in motion against suspected Christians.

To quote Ramsay, in Contemporary Review, September, 1896: "The importance of these documents lies in the fact that they reveal to us the character of the commonplace, undis-tinguished members of the Christian congregations in these cities of Phrygia. Literature shows us the character and works of the great church leaders and heretics; but if we want to find out anything about an ordinary congregation in a Roman city we must go to the epitaphs and above all to the epitaphs of Eumeneia in Phrygia. They bring before us a picture of rich and generous development, of concession, of liberality, in which people of adverse thoughts were practically reconciled in a single society. But they also show us Eumeneia as mainly a city of Christians in the third century. Nothing similar to this is known throughout the ancient world. Eumeneia stands before us as the earliest Christian city of which record remains and exemplifies the reconciliation of two hostile religions in a peaceful and orderly city."

The School Gazette says:—"The editor of the School Gazette has been a constant student of PUBLIC OPINION for ten years, and he owes much to that paper for the help it gives him in his work. Those who aim to become philosophic students of the world's doings, cannot afford to be without it."

The Superior, (Neb.) Weekly Journal, a representative member of the rural press, said in a recent issue:—"To the busy man who desires to keep in touch with the big world beyond our little Western towns, PUBLIC OPINION is a necessity."

DANCING, AND OTHER THINGS.

IT is to be taken for granted, we suppose, that all questions asked of "ye editors," are to be considered as serious, and should therefore be treated seriously.

Here is one:—

Dear Editor Herald:—I would like to ask a question or two.

1. Is dancing a crime for which a young member can be suspended?

2. Is an elder in good standing who flirts with and makes love to two or three at one time, and goes from place to place telling of it, and how he can get this one and that one, when it is he who makes each one think she is the only one woman in the world he wants?

3. Is it all right for an elder to go into a saloon and take strong liquor for his stomach's sake of course? If a young brother was seen doing the same thing, in the next Herald there would be a letter asking the General Conference to speak out definitely against the "young" using liquor of any kind, no matter if it is for the stomach.

The young may be able to tell of a few things that the older ones do that may not be according to law, and good Christian practice.

I do not wish to make any excuse for the young, nor to encourage dancing; but think there are other vices that are not just the proper examples for a "saint" to set before the world.

If you feel that it will do any good to answer these questions, I would be pleased to hear from you in private letter, or through the Herald.

You may smile and throw this in the waste basket, but it may do some of the young good if you would explain the terrible sin there is in dancing. I have taken enough from the elders and apostles on this subject, and I suppose there are others who have done the same, and would like to be shown where they are in fault. I for one would be willing to give it up, even if it is the only one thing I enjoy.

Your fault-finding

YOUNG SISTER.

1. Every branch and district of the church may enact such rules and regulations as may be considered best calculated to establish and maintain the good order of its respective organization, and conserve the good of the whole church.

In the light of this fact we must answer, Yes, to the first question, provided local regulations have so been adopted; not otherwise.

2. Every elder is in good standing until it is known that he is a transgressor, or by indiscreet and unwise conduct he has proved himself an improper representative of the faith and the church. But an elder who would or does do as the question suggests is certainly acting in an improper and unmanly, if not an immoral manner, and should be promptly rebuked; first, by the women, young or old, who are the victims of his discourteous and ungentlemanly conduct; second, by the officers of the branch or district, or both of this class of officers; and if he persists in such course he should be promptly dealt with for unministerial and improper conduct.

The good name of the church has suffered enough from sins arising from loose morality in some who represent it; and it is time a halt was called in such affairs.

The church does not send men out to misrepresent the fair name of the "Bride, the Lamb's wife," and the sober, staid, steadfast men and women making up the church; and if by evil conduct, or conduct that leads to evil they misrepresent the moral and law-abiding character of the church, they should be looked after. So, if our "fault-finding young sister" has charges to make against any "elder," young or old, who has been guilty of trifling with the fair sisters, either in or out of the church, she should formulate her charges and present them in writing to the president of branch, president of district, or missionary in charge, with a statement of the names, times, places, and evidences and witnesses' names, that the matter may be inquired into; and thus prevent further and possibly irreparable misconduct.

3. We think not. We think it unministerial for the minister of the word to tamper with one of the great evils of the time, one of the most seductive and greatest wrong and evil producers the age knows anything of. Of course we are writing in general terms, and not in reference to any particular person. Albeit, we sincerely doubt the suggestion that is made regarding the appeal to conference in case a young brother should be seen doing as the question suggests.

There is little doubt that an observant, fault-finding young person could find some things in the older ones not exemplary, and that these older ones for the sake of consistency, and because of their professed love for the work should refrain from doing; and possibly these same young people could suggest some things some older ones do not do that it would be an advantage to themselves and the church if they would do. But this would not change the laws nor the duties of all under the laws any more than the overfrequent advice and scolding of the older ones, elders, and apostles, given to the younger, affects the responsibility of these younger people and changes the situation for them.

We know of no scriptural law, either in the Old or New Testament, or in the revelations of later times that in so many words makes or declares dancing in itself a crime. We are therefore unable to tell how "terrible" a "sin" it may be.

There are some who believe that dancing is "revelling," and one of the apostles writing in the New Testament classes revellings with the things which are unprofitable and which are characteristic of those who are not walking as children of the light. We do not find the words "revelling" and "dancing" used to mean the same thing; and yet can easily see how a dance could be made a revel, a mad and foolish revel.

Bro. David Smith once said of dancing: "It is to be noticed that those who are patrons of the dance are not usually attendants at the prayer meetings and church services; the two seem not to go in hand together.

The spirit of the dance seems to shut out the spirit of worship."

It is said in the good book that "whatsoever is not of faith is sin." And it is certain that dancing as conducted at the balls and parties of the day is not of faith and does not tend to the better morality, but does tend towards evil. In such understanding we can state with confidence that attending dances as they are usually carried on in the fashionable and semi-fashionable world is a very plain folly.

We are not inclined to state that dancing, the saltatory motions of keeping time and step to music is a crime, any more than running, walking, playing tag, baseball, marbles, prisoners base, or wolf, or jumping the rope, as the same are played by our growing lads and lasses are crimes; yet each may be made a folly. Nor are we inclined to write that riding for pleasure, in buggy or on horseback, sailing, rowing, and many other athletic pursuits are crimes, yet each may be done in such times and fashion as to be a folly.

One reason why we do not care to thus write is, that too much stress is sometimes laid on restrictive enactments of the church, or decisions of condemnation by officers of the church in regard to personal conduct; and make these to take the place of the directive and corrective teaching of the Holy Spirit in the true disciple. It is clear that if the lives and personal conduct of the members of the church were to be made to conform to rules formulated by the church and printed, to be conned and noted and observed, there would seem to be no office work for the Spirit to perform, the place of that important and not to be dispensed with witness-bearing power being usurped by moral metes and bounds prescribed by law. We have reason to believe that this was what Jesus was trying to avoid when teaching the gospel and drawing the contrast between the law and the gospel economy; hence we cannot accept what seems to do away with that purifying and ennobling power.

This "fault-finding young sister," would do well to consider whether it would not be more consistent to listen to the Great Teacher of Life by his Spirit, that will impress his children with what is seemly, or unseemly, rather than to wait for an act of church lawmakers by which restraint from whatever tends to carelessness of conduct might be enforced and church membership be endangered. It is certainly worthy of a thought, at least.

Efforts have been made from time to time to get the conference to pass a stringent rule against dancing and providing for its enforcement; and each attempt has failed for the reason alleged above, it was thought to be contrary to good reason and true principles of government in the gospel church to begin making a list of offenses by church enactment. Once committed to such a policy and there would be no practicable end of "thou shalt do this" and "thou shalt not do that" enactments, and the Great Lawgiver's word would be made nugatory: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and thy neighbor as thyself; on these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets."—Jesus.

Men and women who are righteously self-governed are much the best governed people that the world has.

REBAPTISM.

WE have the following note, in the form of a question, with the request that it be answered in the HERALD. We greatly dislike to attempt the discussion of queries which arise from conditions that would make the possible answers to be personal and tend to injure the feelings of others, or the work as a consequence. It is possible that this question has, or may have personalities in it somewhere; but no offense is intended.

I do not want to stand in the way of any coming into the church who deserve to be in; but if we can break the laws of the church to such an extent that we have to be cut off, and then turn around and be baptized just as though we had never been in, seems to me a very poor way of doing such business. Mr. A. B. went out of the church for transgression several years ago, and now wants to be baptized "and wash away his sins." I cannot help but believe it to be making light of God's holy ordinances. To me it looks like sacrilege.

We are aware that considerable objection is made to what is called "rebaptism," the term meaning that the person has once been baptized, has had his membership taken for cause, and seeks to be reinstated in the church.

We share this objection to some extent; but not in the way that some do. We have thought that where a person was legally made a member of the church, and for reason was expelled by the lifting up of the hand, he might be reinstated as a member upon proper proof of repentance by the lifting up of the hand to receive. But, some years ago, the elders and delegates to conference took the matter up on proper resolution and vote, and after a rather exhaustive discussion, by vote decided that where a member was disfellowshipped by trial and vote, he could only be restored to his rights of fellowship upon a proper application made to the branch where the person was disfellowshipped, proper restitution, reparation, or confession by the offender, properly made to the branch, that upon such application the branch might by vote consent to the person being baptized; it being supposed, of course, that due confession and restitution are to be a condition of reception by baptism; as if the person had not before been baptized. This is now the rule of the church and should be observed.

The argument is that persons who may fall into transgression, and are punished by being disfellowshipped, should be permitted to the benefits of repentance and should not be pursued in punishment beyond due bounds, and that it is a sufficient safeguard to the church to insist that before a person is disfellowshipped shall again be baptized, he shall make restitution, reparation, or confession to the satisfaction of the branch where he was disfellowshipped, in such way and terms that it will make manifest the fact that true and full repentance has taken place; and that when this is done the church should receive the penitent one into the fold again; that he may by renewed probation commend himself to God, leaving all other questions of worth, sufficient punishment, adequate and prevailing repentance, final decision to heaven or hades to be settled by the Great Judge who will "bring every work unto judgment with every secret thing," according to the philosophy of "the Preacher."

It is no worse for the church to accept the professed repentance of a man once overtaken by sin or transgression, and enduring the penalty of law by expulsion, than it is for the church to endure the constantly reiterated charges of wrongdoing upon the part of members made by those outside, and sometimes in the church, of which charges no evidences are presented or known. In the first case the church does know the extent of the wrong done, or folly committed, in the last named it does not and cannot.

If the church is but an overgrown individual the same as an incorporation, then it comes under the solemn direction of the Master, the head of the church, "I say unto thee, not only seven times, but seventy times seven, if he repent."

Finally it is a question to be settled by the branch of the church in the which the trial and conviction of the individual was had, who are and must be the sole judges of the degree of turpitude attaching to the first wrong, and the genuineness and character of the repentance manifested by the returning member. It is better to err on mercy's side than on the side of justice; the first may be forgiven by and by, the latter will not, cannot from the nature of it.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION. ADDITIONAL.

We have received the following additional reports, from Bro. W. N. Robinson, Secretary of the General Association, with request to publish to complete minutes, for the information of all interested:—

To the General Sunday School Association Assembled:—During the conference year my labors have been at Lamoni, Iowa, Independence and Allendale, Missouri, and in the Eastern mission, at which places I have served the association either in convention, reunion, or local works. In a few cases I have succeeded in introducing Institute work at conventions with excellent results, also furthering the association methods, records, and its general interests at large.

I trust some action may be had at the convention now assembled whereby "uniformity of text" for our Quarterlies may be given a chance in its strictest sense; also that some provision may be made for "normal training" work for our teachers; and I look forward with interest to the time when Institute work can be enjoyed and participated in, in all parts of the field, under the direction of the General Association. I am,

Yours for work,

M. C. FISHER,
Second Associate.

Boston, Mass., April, 1898.

Sunday school convention met for business Monday morning, April 5. Business sessions were held Monday and Tuesday with increasing interest manifested. We have paid all charges for the year and are out of debt, and have the safe balance in the treasury. We have made gains in districts, schools, and general membership. The total number of schools at present is 323, a net gain of 57. The total membership 14,755, a net gain of 2,231. The officers selected for the ensuing year are:—

T. A. Hougas, Superintendent, (reëlected,) Henderson, Iowa.

J. A. Gunsolley, First Assistant Superintendent, Lamoni, Iowa.

Charles E. Crumley, Second Assistant Superintendent, Los Angeles, California.

W. N. Robinson, (reëlected,) Secretary, Independence, Missouri.

A. B. Hanson, Treasurer, Lamoni, Iowa.
Miss Mamie Allen, Librarian, Lamoni, Iowa.

EXPECT A THEOLOGICAL FIGHT.

CONGREGATIONALISTS of Chicago anticipate that the meeting of the State Association of Congregational Churches, to be held in the Union Park Church in this city May 16 to May 19, will witness a lively fight over the question of universalism that may result in action that will mark an epoch in the history of the church.

For the last year Congregational ministers in meetings and through the sectarian press have been discussing universalism and quite a number of them have espoused the principle of universalism in a more or less guarded form. Recently the Rev. E. S. Carr of Stillman Valley has served notice through the church organs that at the State association meeting he will submit a resolution pronouncing against universalism as a Congregational doctrine.

There are said to be a number of leading Chicago pastors who will stand up for that form of universalism recently espoused by Dr. George A. Gordon of the Old South Church, Boston, who holds that "the success of God means the salvation of all men, and even in hell the fire may burn and the worm gnaw in the service of the eternal grace."

The Chicago association will hold its annual meeting at the Desplaines Congregational church on May 3.—Tribune, April 21.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

"WAR" between the United States and Spain has now actually begun. How far-reaching the results will be, time only can reveal. However momentous the events to transpire and how serious the results to follow, we believe that Cuba will be free, and that the path to freedom will be opened to other peoples and nations. We may look for troubles and overturnings among the nations, but God is at the helm and his wonder-working hand will be seen by those who discern the signs of the end. It seems fitting that the nation chosen to enlighten the world with the demonstration and inspiration of Liberty should deal a blow to Spain, the representative of oppression and superstition. The HERALD may or may not give leading items of news as in the past. Demands upon our space and the necessities of our readers must determine. We have tried to indicate leading movements in the shifting scenes of the world-panorama—such as show changes having close connection with the signs of the times. We shall decide later as to continuing the practice. Did all have access to such items we would cease mention of them. Can the traveling ministry or others state briefly if our world-items have been useful to them.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

"Wait for His soon appearing; watch and wait.
Out of the doubtful mists shall come to thee Proofs of a Father's love. The ministry
Of his own angels shall alleviate Thy sorrow's overburden, soon and late;
And Faith shall teach thee of the things to be
When He shall come, whose daily prophecy Streams now in glory through the advent gate."

DAUGHTERS OF ZION.

THE Daughters of Zion met for the annual transaction of business on the afternoons of April 8 and 9 in the basement of the saints' church at Independence. The attendance and interest were good.

Previous to this a prayer meeting was held at the home of one of the members, which was earnestly participated in by nearly all present; and which we trust will result in good to the work. Sr. M. E. Hulmes presided, assisted (in the business meetings) by Sr. B. C. Smith.

Reports of the officers were read, also reports from a number of local societies. Verbal reports were called for and some interesting remarks were made concerning the benefits received from the work of the society. Sr. Dr. Greer reported for the young ladies' classes of Lamoni, and Sr. Moxon reported similar work done in Independence.

The following is the report of Sr. M. E. Hulmes, Chairman of Advisory Committee:—
"Since our last general meeting the Advisory Committee has held a number of meetings, some of which were regular, and some special. Owing to the fact that two of our committee live at a distance, it was impossible for all to be present; but, through correspondence, we were not deprived of their valuable assistance. We wish also to acknowledge the great advantage gained from the frequent consultations with Srs. Stebbins, Walker, and Kelley, of Lamoni, who were ever ready and competent with their suggestions; also, there were others who gave us support along literary lines.

"I feel to report that good has been done, though not to the extent desired.

"At our earlier meetings we examined various manuscripts which had been received, and prepared them for use as might be decided upon. We also determined upon a course of topical discussions to be used in connection with the local work already planned in the Home Column. This course, as decided upon and partially carried out through the year, embraced a series upon Care of the Home, (with divisions such as Cleanliness, Care of Waste Material, Economy of Strength, Ventilation, etc.), Nursing the Sick, Dress Reform, Preparation and Care of Food, Home Decorations, etc. We suggest that this plan, or a similar one, be followed during the coming year.

"Requests had been made through the Herald previous to the adoption of the foregoing plan, for locals to send to committee lists of such questions as they would wish discussed; but, together with the request made, about the same time, for quarterly reports from locals, this notice was complied with in but few instances.

"When entering upon my work as chairman, I felt as if there should be more interest in the local work, both here and at Lamoni. We could not expect the work to flourish elsewhere, if in the principal places of the church the locals did not keep in the advance. So, the plan I followed, in both places, was to visit the sisters in their homes, extending warm invitations to attend the local meetings, explaining our work, and seeking by such means to remove prejudice and awaken interest in their minds. I am thankful that good resulted from this and my heart was made to rejoice at the increase in interest as shown by the greater attendance as well as by other indications.

"I am glad to report that in Lamoni, as well as here, the classes for the young sisters have been reorganized; and, through the efforts of earnest members of our society, a great interest has been developed in this branch of our work. In Lamoni the classes are under the direction of Sr. Greer, M. D., who has also been conducting the physiological study; she is assisted Sr. Frances Davis in charge of the Physical Culture department, and up to January, Sr. Anderson in charge of the literary work. They have two classes;—one for girls between the ages of twelve and sixteen (which class has been very well attended), and one for older young ladies, the attendance of which has been reduced since the organization of a literary society which meets on the same evening; however the interest is very great and their meetings are successful in spite of the fact that it is so difficult to find an evening which is not occupied by other interesting meetings.

"In Independence these classes are at present under the direction of Sr. Cole Moxon; and, while they are progressing nicely, they are in a state of development and are waiting for help and further suggestions.

"Having studied the needs of the young classes in this department, I realize that they need some special work mapped out for them, for the guidance of those classes which may not be situated where their advantages are equal to their necessities.

"The general outlook of the work of the organization of the Daughters of Zion is brighter, and we expect it to be still brighter as the plans adopted are more fully carried out. I feel that there are many who need to be educated up to the necessity of such a work as ours. May we never grow faint-hearted, because the fact exists that we must meet obstacles in the way. I need not call to your mind the truth of how many great achievements have been accomplished after great struggles. Is not our cause worth great effort, also? I am thankful for the number who are ready to answer, Yes!

"My earnest desire is to see the work move carefully along, even if not so rapidly as some might expect. That God may bless us wherein we are working according to his will, and guide us in regard to what he would have us to do, is my prayer.

"M. E. HULMES,

"Chairman of Advisory Committee."

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.

A full report of all moneys received by the society since its organization was submitted by the Treasurer. This had been requested by the President in behalf of distant members who desire to know what disposition had been made of the funds. The report is somewhat lengthy but will be published if space enough can be secured.

A resolution was passed, providing for a committee whose duty it shall be to supply monthly readings for the young ladies' societies.

Paragraph I of Article V. of the Constitution was revised to make it read:—

"All general officers and presidents of local societies must be members who are Latter Day Saints in good standing. Members who are not Latter Day Saints may hold the offices of secretary and treasurer in the local societies."

The Advisory Committee elected for the ensuing term is composed of Srs. Mary E. Hulmes, Emma Smith, Bertha A. Greer, M. D., Audentia Anderson, and Mary Robinson.

By choice of the Advisory Committee, Sr. M. E. Hulmes was made its chairman, and she thus becomes the President of the organization.

Sr. Anderson was chosen corresponding secretary of the Advisory Committee. Sr. Callie B. Stebbins was continued as recording secretary, and Sr. Viola Blair as treasurer.

Short speeches were called for and a number of sisters responded. In their remarks there was expressed the firm conviction that the work engaged in by the Daughters of Zion is a good one, also the desire to see it accomplishing its purposes and to aid in this by wise, patient, and prayerful effort. Encouraging words were spoken and wise advice was given. A number expressed the hope that more young mothers, those who seemingly most need to be aroused to earnest thought in regard to their families, might become interested in the work of the society.

A letter was read from Sr. Walker and a resolution adopted requesting that it be published in the Home Column.

The suggestion concerning sending a delegate to the Mother's Congress was considered, but no action was taken, it being left for the Advisory Committee to request sisters who are expecting to attend to take notes and return to us as much benefit from their attendance as possible.

Dr. Greer gave a physiological lecture to the Young Ladies' Improvement Society, Monday, April 11.

PRAYER UNION.

SPECIAL REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.

A SISTER sends for prayers in behalf of her husband, son, and daughter. They are possessed with an evil power; the son with swearing and liquor habits. Her request is, if it is God's will, the evil power may be rebuked by the power of God.

Sr. E. A. Van Eaton earnestly desires, and asks in Jesus' name, your prayers in behalf of her little boy, who is ruptured, that if it is God's will he may be healed. Also for herself, that she may be healed of an affliction from which she has suffered for four years. She received great help through the united prayers of herself and husband.

Thankful Wixon, Dennis Port, Massachusetts, writes: "Knowing of the faith that is manifested toward the saints, and being a member of the church and a firm believer in its glorious truths, I pray that you will make it a subject of prayer in my behalf. I had the lagrippe about three months ago, and it has left me very poorly, not able to do my work, with quite a large family, and I am feeling discouraged."

"I request that the Prayer Union pray for my mother, who has been having very hard sick spells for many years. Has been instantly healed a couple of times by being administered to; but in a course of six months or a year the same old trouble comes back again. I have a brother that is a member of the church who is in the habit of drinking. He is a bright young man and well thought of by all who know him. Pray that he may have more faith and will-power to overcome all his weakness. YOUR SISTER."

A man in Glasgow, having been charged with keeping a lottery, pleaded in extenuation that he became acquainted with lotteries in church bazaars. This did not avail, but the judge said that "churches which held lottery bazaars ought to be pulled up."

Letter Department.

WOODBINE, Iowa, April 14.

Editors Herald:—As there has been a great deal said recently in letters in the Herald about the propositions for discussion between us and D. H. Bays, and whereas Mr. Bays has tried to make it appear that he had nothing to say in the matter, I wish to give the facts as they are.

I presented four propositions to Elder Bays at Mondamin in November involving the claims of the Reorganization and Christian Church, the Book of Mormon and Bible. The second proposition as it now stands, and as published in Herald by Bro. Williams, was accepted by Bays without demur. He objected to first proposition involving our church, claiming that we ought to put in the word "only," making it read that we were the only church accepted by God, etc. I replied that we would insert the word "only" in our proposition if he would insert it in his. He declined to do this and accepted the proposition as it stands now.

The third, or Book of Mormon proposition, was the one upon which the fight was made. He insisted that I should affirm that the Book of Mormon was a true history of the people of ancient America. I declined to do this and gave the following: "Is the Book of Mormon a true record and are its inspirational claims entitled to the respect and belief of all Christian people?" which I claimed covered the ground fully. After a month or two's correspondence he finally agreed to the proposition as above. Proposition four was his own wording as it now stands. Now he claims he was forced into the acceptance of propositions; that he signed them under protest, etc.; while the facts are, both propositions involving his faith and belief were accepted without protest by him. While No. 2 was written and formulated by us, yet he accepted it readily; the other he wrote himself. Bro. Lambert has all or nearly all the correspondence between myself and Elder Bays, and I am sure will bear me out in the statements made. And, as long as I am missionary in charge of the field where the debate is held, I shall insist that there be no change in the propositions. Let them come up and face the issue or back squarely down.

Yours for the truth,

H. O. SMITH.

OAKFIELD, O., April 19.

Editors Herald:—I went to Sharon, Pennsylvania, conference, and wife and baby accompanied me. We stopped here on our way home, and I have done quite a good deal of preaching, and some are so pleased to think I returned, they put a piece of poetry in the Western Reserve Democrat, a copy of which I send you.

"Elder F. C. Smith, of Kirtland, is at Oakfield, whereupon our lyric poet burst forth thusly:—

"The bluebird may sing of the coming of spring,
The frog it may croak of the rain;
But the people 'round here are all ready to cheer,
For we have our own preacher again.

"Tho' Mecca refuse to hear the glad news,
Tho' Bristolville call us insane,
Tho' Deacon C. stands and refuses to strike hands,—
We have our own preacher again."

Some call us "Mormons," and will not come and hear; while others say, "If he is a Mormon, I wish we had twenty thousand of them here." I look for some to obey soon. We are stopping with the family of John Hicks, very nice people, from England. I want to go from here to Locust Point and Catawba Island. We were to visit a place called Nelson Ledges, where the rocks are all broken up. There is a place called the "Devil's Den;" it is a dark hole seventy-five or a hundred feet deep; and the "Old Maid's Kitchen." I did not meet the old fellow in his den, nor any old maids in the kitchen. It certainly is a wonderful place and something to remind one of the terrible shaking up the earth got during the reign of the Nephites on this continent, when Christ was crucified.

F. C. SMITH.

FENTRESS, I. T., April 18.

Editors Herald:—Since last writing I have been to Wilburton; met with quite a number of saints, and find them firm in the faith. I viewed the coal fields of that place, they are better than I had anticipated. If the brethren would organize a coal company and take up some of the coal claims still vacant there, they could do well. Any brethren wanting to take stock in a coal company will do well to correspond with Bro. Peter Adamson, who resides at Wilburton. He is the president of the town, and an experienced coal miner. I am greatly pleased with the prospect for that place, and advise the organizing of a coal company among the saints. There is money in the coal crop, and why not the saints come together and make money for themselves, as well as to work by the day for others. I will take a share myself. Who next? There are eight I think at Wilburton that will take one share each; so we have nine shares to begin with.

I brought Bro. Adamson home with me, and showed him the prospects for coal here, and he thinks it is good. He thinks we could work both places. While his part of the country may be the best for coal, this country is the farming country. Saints hunting locations will find it to their interest to come. We have a fine soil and good water. Thousands of acres laying out, not farmed at all. It is no trouble for a man to find a home here, and the way he gets land beats owning the land. You can lease for a number of years say, eight or ten years, and have no taxes to pay. There is plenty of timber, and plenty of prairie, and plenty of water, and a fine stock raising country. The soil produces from twenty-five to sixty bushels of corn, and is a fine fruit country. Apples, peaches, pears, grapes, berries, and plenty of plums. The main crop being cotton. I will say that there is scarcely anything that you want to plant that does not do well here. Come, and we will take pleasure in showing you over the country, and doing anything to aid you in our power to find suitable locations. We are just twenty-four miles east of the Oklahoma line, in the Creek Nation, on the North Canadian River.

Bro. Adamson left us to-day. He staid five days with us, and preached six sermons, five of them in my house and one at an Indian church house. He had to have an interpreter, but he warmed them up. He left some interested, and they are investigating, and I believe will soon obey the gospel. He is an able man and willing to work, and a man well liked where he is known. Any saints going to Wilburton will find a home with him, and any coming to this part of the country will be cared for by us. So come, brethren, and let us see what we can do.

Pray for me brothers, and sisters, that I may ever be faithful to keep the commandments of the Lord is my prayer.

Your brother in the faith,

J. N. PERKINS.

BYRNEVILLE, Ind., April 20.

Editors Herald:—Ten years ago Bro. M. R. Scott, Sen., came to this place with the restored gospel. My husband and I were baptized by him; being the first in this neighborhood who accepted it. Soon others followed. I have been made to rejoice many times by the blessing I have received from God, for which I praise his holy name. I wish I could have obeyed sooner. We now number about fifty, and have preaching services nearly every Sunday now. I want to live humble and faithful, for the humbler we are the more blessing we will receive from on high. I rejoice indeed in this glorious light of the latter-day gospel. My prayer is that God may give me grace and strength to overcome the trials and temptations of this life, that I may endure to the end. I ask the prayers of all the saints, that I may be guided by the Spirit of the Lord. Ever praying for the welfare of Zion, I remain your humble sister in Christ the Lord,

ELLEN JENKINS.

BURLINGTON, Iowa, April 18.

Editors Herald:—A negro calling himself Dr. Taylor, claiming to be a priest in the Latter Day Saints Church, is traveling from branch to branch, sponging his way along; he smokes and chews tobacco. He says Bro. Asa Cochran baptized him at Lamoni; but has forgotten when, or who ordained him. He has no papers to show who he is. He says he was a Catholic priest eighteen years, also a monk for some time. He was born in East India; has been all over the world. He has eight daughters, two are doing missionary work in the Latter Day Saints Church in Carrolton, Missouri. He now lives in New York. He is poorly posted in the Latter Day Saints doctrine. He was in the Burlington branch nearly a week, preached once; some gave him money. He left very unceremoniously. Said he was going to visit the New London branch. Who is he?

I was called here by telegram from conference, to preach the funeral sermon for Sr. Anna Wilson. She was born in Denmark, October 1, 1820; raised a Lutheran; but saw that Luther's catechism and the Bible did not agree. Then she and her husband joined the Baptist Church, and there was the same trouble. The creed and the Bible were at variance. Then they joined the Mormons and went to Utah, and there they found that Brigham had added heresies and damnable doctrines to his creed. Then they went to California; then came to Iowa, where they found the Church of Jesus Christ, and they were baptized; and since that time to the day of their death (he died in 1891, she on the 13th) they lived the life of true saints. She passed away peacefully. She left six children to mourn the loss of an affectionate, good old mother. She was loved by all who knew her, which was demonstrated by the immense crowd which packed the union church at her funeral. I would not ask for a more attentive congregation. The funeral was nine miles west of Burlington; the Burlington saints furnished the music. May our last hours be like Mother Wilson's were.

J. S. ROTH.

ALBION, Idaho, April 18.

Editors Herald:—I wish to say through the Herald and Autumn Leaves, as well as Zion's Ensign, that I have started in the missionary field for "Zion's weal," with all my might, mind, and soul, for all the days of activity the dear Lord will grant me in the flesh, to work for the recovery of Zion's children and the spread of this grand and glorious message of the "fullness of times." I am a messenger before the face of the Lord, and the precious promise of the Comforter is to me that as I walk up lovingly with him I shall receive grace for grace, and I shall declare this glad message in the "power and spirit of Elias." If the Comforter ever spoke by my mouth, I know this, that when the nations, "standing at arms," grapple in deadly conflict, peace will be taken from them and not restored till the coming of our Lord. All who have a "hope of a portion in Zion" should rouse every power of body and soul to renounce every vice, folly, or sin of every name or nature, and "perfect holiness in the fear of the Lord." Remembering the "parable of the foolish virgins," strengthen the hands of those laboring for the spread of truth, and uphold each other by prayer and fasting, that faith may grow and become mighty and strong in the "remnant whom the Lord hath called." Especially remembering those who have labored long and faithfully; hoping and waiting for the consolation of Israel. Look upward now more earnestly than ever before, with pleading eyes and hearts of love, that the Lord may rain righteousness upon his children.

Yours earnestly,

CHARLES ALBERTSON.

RED OAK, Iowa, April 17.

Editors Herald:—As I have been reading the notes from the General Conference this afternoon, and enjoying such a peaceful influence in so doing, I thought I would write and ask the sister who wrote some time ago of the meetings that were held in the city of Chicago, but did not give the address of their meeting place, if she would answer my letter and tell me where their meetings are held, or better still, if some of the young men of the branch would call on my two sons who are employed in the Chicago, Burlington, and Quincy freight depot, corner Harrison and Canal Streets, Door 5; their names are O. E. and O. J. Stephenson. Their work is in the city and their homes at La Grange; one is married and the other single; both are young men and both belong to the church. They have never lived where they could attend either church or Sabbath school, so have never had the chance of gaining much knowledge of our church and her meetings; both being baptized when about twelve years old, and as we have always been isolated from the church I am so anxious they should go and learn more of our belief, for themselves, so they need not be influenced to join other churches, as so many have tried to persuade me to do. Had the sister given her address in her letter to the Herald, I should have written directly to her some time ago. Hoping this will find its way to her, or some one who will visit our boys, and asking an interest in the prayers of the saints that I may continue faithful and overcome, and be counted worthy a place in Christ's kingdom.

My husband has been sick with inflammatory rheumatism and unable to do a day's work since the first week in January, and is in bed at this writing. Please pray for him, saints.

Yours in gospel bonds,

JENNIE STEPHENSON.

SCIENCE AND REVELATION.

INHARMONY is usually the result of attempts by some person or thing to usurp the province or place of some other person or thing. The remedy for the evil resulting from such inharmony, consists in placing each of the jarring elements from which it results in its proper domain.

That those who have accepted the New Testament Scriptures as containing revelation from God, are under obligation to avoid the "oppositions of science falsely so-called," there can be no question; for this is enjoined by the apostle. But the exhortation to avoid the "oppositions of science falsely so-called," is tantamount to a declaration that there is science truly so-called, that should be received. This fact it would be well for religionists of all classes to carefully consider. It need not be urged upon the attention of those who accept the Bible, that they are under obligation to receive revelation from God, for that book itself they believe contains such a revelation. Then, being placed under obligation to receive both true science and true revelation, when there is a clash between reputed science and reputed revelation, and as a result inharmony, and therefore evil, into which domain, that of science or that of revelation, must we enter for safety and final decision of any vexed question?

Upon one hand it is urged, that the analytical and synthetical processes employed by scientists are absolutely certain; while upon the other hand it is urged with equal vehemence, that the voice of God in revelation is equally certain also. So that, when science affirms one thing to be true, and revelation affirms an opposite thing to be equally true, there is a square contradiction, and resulting inharmony between the two things.

No matter how glibly scientists and philosophers may talk, nor into how many parts they may divide and subdivide the processes upon which they depend for the solution of any given problem, the two processes named, analysis and synthesis, constitute all the means they have for investigation. In more simple terms all they can do, is to take apart and put together. Manifestly, then, whatever by reason of distance or peculiarity of organization, effectually eludes either or both of these processes, baffles and defies the scientist. His processes address themselves exclusively to the external senses, and therefore the boundary of these senses is the boundary of his knowledge, unless it can be shown that the processes of analysis and synthesis can be conducted without the use of these external senses. In endeavoring to arrive at a conclusion as to what the boundaries of these senses are, it will be found that they do not refer so much or so specifically to distance as to direction. The astronomer with his telescope may soar to an almost infinite distance amid the starry host, partially analyzing the states and conditions of the numerous worlds by which he finds himself surrounded; but let him change direction, and leaving the physical enter the spiritual domain, and by what methods known to science will he then proceed. Will his microscope enable him to tell with certainty, whether if a man die he shall live again? Can he with these and any and all the other appliances with which he is familiar, tread with boldness and certainty the great beyond, and answer the question of questions with human kind, Shall I live after the dissolution of this body? Will he dare so to trifle with the sweetest and best aspirations of the human heart, as to attempt by a process of analysis and synthesis to determine for the stricken mother whether she shall meet again her departed child? Whether the great beyond is a reality? Imagine a Hume or a Voltaire attempting to cheer a suffering soul in the hour of death by his frigid philosophy, and you will at once see the dividing line between the domain of science and that of revelation.

It should be remarked in this connection to guard against the possibility of misunderstanding, that the domain of science as we have just seen, does not and cannot include the domain of revelation; but for the reason that the greater includes the lesser, the domain of revelation includes that of science.

When faced with the facts just urged in favor of the superiority of revelation over natural science, the scientist has a place of refuge to which he seldom fails to flee. He asserts that human reason is the final test of all things. By it alone can error be detected and truth established. To hear him loosely talk of this quality of the human mind, one would think it was the beginning and the end, the center and circumference of all things, whether in the physical or spiritual domain. But what is reason? Simply and only that faculty of the mind by which we utilize facts already known, in the discovery of those which are unknown. When Galileo looked through his primitively fashioned telescope he saw spots upon the surface of the sun. He watched until they disappeared, and then until they reappeared. From these facts now in his possession, he ascertained the farther fact that the sun revolved upon its axis. Had Galileo not had in his possession the facts concerning rotary motion, and the facts concerning spots upon the sun's surface, and that they disappeared, and reappeared after a time, he could never have discovered the additional fact of the sun's motion upon its axis. This is but a simple illustration of all the processes of reasoning. Suppose a man knowing absolutely nothing about the science of medicine should advertise to deliver a lecture thereon; would not people go rather expecting to see a lunatic than to hear a sensible lecture?

It should be noticed further, that the facts upon which the processes of reasoning depend, must be co-extensive with the subject reasoned upon, or the reasoning must and will be defective. In order then for certainty to attach to any scientific deduction, it must first be affirmatively shown, that the reasoner has in his possession all the facts concerning the particular thing upon which he attempts to reason. If he fails to make this appear, then there is not only some uncertainty attaching to his deductions, but the utmost uncertainty; for it being admitted that there are some things concerning the matter under consideration which he does not know, the inquiry is at once suggested, How many? Are the unknown facts more or less than the facts known? Who can answer? The scientist? No; for he admits that there may be some things in regard to the matter of which he has no knowledge, and thus shows, that the knowledge he has of the matter may only be the smallest fragment of the facts attaching thereto. He thus renders his claims to certainty, to say the least, very uncertain. They are as if one said, I have only read a portion of this book, I do not know but there may be much more unread than read, but I will tell you as a certainty, that the plot of the writer is bad. Or, I have looked at a portion of this picture, how much more there is of it I do not know; but the design of the artist I am prepared to say with perfect certainty, is bad. Or, a man having seen a city, and confessing that he does not know whether he has seen it all or not, tells the world that he is prepared to state with certainty how many houses there are in it, and how many people there are in them. No reasonable man will claim that he possesses a knowledge of all the facts in the domain of any one of the sciences. All his reasonings, therefore, are uncertain. There may be, and the history of the development of knowledge since the dawn of the historic period would lead us to so conclude, many more facts unknown than known; much more landscape to be seen than has been seen; and hence all the scientist's reasonings, even in his own proper domain, that of the physical, are subject in the light of stubborn facts, not only to the charge of uncertainty, but to the charge of the greatest uncertainty. The medical man, so long as there are hundreds of mysteries surrounding the physical and mental organizations of men can do little but experiment, and while he may know that certain remedies under certain circumstances produce certain results, he does not and cannot know with his present limited vision, whether some other remedy unknown to him would not do a thousand times better. There is to him a boundary between the unknown and the known; and so long as this is the case he can but work with the greatest uncertainty. Can the astronomer tell anything with certainty of the construction of the universe as a whole, while he knows but a part of it? and there is an unknown, of the extent and character of which he knows nothing? Can the chemist tell the effect of the combination of all matter, while there are many facts consequent upon the combination of only parts thereof, of which he knows nothing? Are we forced to believe that he can carry ten thousand pounds, while he has never demonstrated his ability to carry one thousand?

With the simple fact suggested, that all reasoning, in the absence of affirmative proof that the reasoner possesses all the facts in existence relative to the thing reasoned upon, is open to the charge of uncertainty, the whole of the bigoted charges and pretenses of materialistic philosophers can be overturned, without going to the trouble of showing that what facts are known, so far as they make at all, make against the theories of these said philosophers. All scientific deductions are uncertain, and subject to change as the domain of known facts becomes enlarged. So far as science is concerned, while anything is unknown, there is nothing known.

To science then we cannot look for a certain demonstration of anything. Its light, even in its proper sphere, is uncertain and may be very misleading. Where then shall we go for the light of life? From what fountain shall we drink, and know that we are drinking the waters of life? If we answer, To revelation from God, the mind at once turns to the black and discouraging picture of priestly domination and usurpation, and charges these upon revelation. If we are to be guided by revelation, who is to tell us what is true and what is false? If we are bound to obey the commandments of God when presented to us or be condemned, by what means shall we know which are the commandments of God? There can be no justice in a judgment which rewards for obedience and punishes for disobedience, unless there is some certain means by which the subject of these rewards or punishments may know what is required of him by his judge. The solving of the problem here suggested is of almost infinite importance. Had the ancient Christian Church understood and generally practiced the rule we are about to lay down, which emanated from the lips of Jesus, there could have been no great apostasy from the complete organization and pure doctrines of that church. Had the Latter Day Saints adhered to it, there could have been no latter day apostasy, no priestly domination, "In the salt land not inhabited," and no enslavement of the people of God, made free by obedience to the gospel under the presidency of Joseph Smith the martyr.

It should be remembered as we approach this test, the beauty and grandeur of which enlarge as we near it, that God is the Father of all; not merely of the Pope or the priest. Jesus said:—

If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself.—John 7:17.

Thus in one sublime sentence the whole world is made free to approach the Father of all, each by himself and for himself, and receive that which shall enable him to know the truth of any purported message from God to him. Then, so far from Christ "laying the world beneath the feet of priests," as Ingersoll has affirmed, he lays the whole world at the feet of God, and God only. Every human being is thus entirely disenthralled from the dominations of priests and the unwarranted assumptions of philosophers, and placed if he will in direct communion with his Father and God. This rule is in harmony with the highest form of human freedom, and the noblest form of divine worship. It is subjection to God only, worship of God only. There is no room here for the dictation of Pope or President. No chance for the uncertain, shifting, illusive reasoning of materialistic philosophers. By the enunciation of this sublime thought, by the giving of this highest and best test, Jesus placed every human being on the direct road to heaven. Thus an impregnable fortress is erected by the great teacher, that affords ample protection against anarchy upon one hand, and slavery upon the other. Against this a few random shots will avail nothing. To it our opponents must lay a regular siege; and this will but serve to develop the completeness of its equipments and the massive strength of its walls.

This rule places every man holding authority to administer in the ordinances of heaven, in the capacity of a servant of God and the people; and no man in the capacity of dictator, no man in the charge of other men's souls. If obeyed, it would sweep away at one grand stroke the thralldom of millions, and hurl from their seats of profit, luxury, and crime, thousands of base usurpers.

How marvelous it is, that with this notable test forming the core of Christ's teachings, a philosopher and lawyer of the nineteenth century should say, that Christ "laid the world beneath the feet of priests." Surely he allowed a life-long practice to so far mislead him, as to cause him to state but one side of the case, and that quite unfairly. The saying of Christ referred to, will stand forever to refute such baseless charges.

Revelation of God to every individual, then, is the final test. Whatever is given of God through his appointed ones for the direction of the general affairs of his church, must be tested by the direct testimony of God's Spirit to each individual to whom the commandment or direction comes. This is the communion of spirit with spirit, the highest type of communion, the most certain means of obtaining knowledge. Consciousness of the existence of anything is the highest form of knowledge. Every human being is conscious of his existence; yet to prove such existence by analysis and synthesis, would be difficult; and in order do it at all, the existence of some one to make the analysis will have to be admitted. A man who has a red hot iron applied to his flesh, does not need a scientist to demonstrate to him by a process of analysis and synthesis that said iron was red hot when it was so applied. A man who has had the power of God's Spirit applied to his inner consciousness does not need a priest to tell him he has felt the power of God.

The whole gospel economy proceeds upon the theory that each human being is amply qualified to commune with God for himself. Thus the claim of Protestantism that revelation has ceased, and the claim of scientists that it never began, are both seen to be opposed to the teachings of Christ.

Science so far as found useful should be used; but as the lesser is subject to the greater, as a part is swallowed up in the whole, as the creature should be subject to the Creator, so the domain of natural science must be subject to the domain of direct revelation from God to every human being. He who at one comprehensive glance views the entire picture of human life, and thus is enabled to correctly estimate the result of the varied blendings of lights and shades, is the only one perfectly qualified to direct us to the realization of those things for which the hearts of men universally long. This being we believe to be God. To him we invite the world to come. To his feet and his alone, we ask all mankind to bow.

"GRACELAND COLLEGE."

I AM proud of a Latter Day Saint that has a good education. Not that he is any better, or that I love him any more than a brother that cannot read or write; but I rejoice in his ability which is increased by education. Two things we ought to be proud of, that is "ability and virtue." Virtue and education make a man a power. The world respects a man that has education and knowledge.

For instance, I was traveling with a brother in the Wisconsin mission and stopped with a man that was erecting a new barn. He became confused as to cutting the rafters. The brother stepped up and took the square and drew him a correct pattern. I noticed the regard and respect the act drew from the stranger, just the simple fact that the brother was a thorough carpenter gave him encouragement to the more respect us. Education without virtue counts nothing for the building up of Zion, but to the contrary, it places a leverage in the hands of the power of darkness that all the more hinders the progress of God's work. The amount of good that education will do us through our young men and women will depend upon the principles that form the moral platform upon which they act for God, men, and themselves.

Now that education and virtue may be cultivated together, the church has been wise in bringing Graceland College into existence, established in the midst of the church, under the watch-care of the saints, and where the church affords splendid opportunity for instruction and encouragement in good works. We may think that our children will do just as well at home schools, and the expense so much more to send a distance; but just a word, saints. Send a boy to college, and when he comes home what are his principles? Similar, to a great extent, to the spiritual influences that have surrounded him.

Many young men have been ushered from colleges with a vicious, selfish, greedy character, taught to use the education obtained as a means for self-interest and personal greed. The spirit of the world teaches no good for the Lord's Zion. A gentleman told me that his first act of gambling was while attending one of the principal colleges of our land. How much better it would be if you can have the influence of the church mingled with the school days of your children.

Graceland College ought to turn from her doors some of the greatest men of our day; men who have principle. The world needs them. The success of the college depends upon the saints, the thoroughness of every department; and the value of the Faculty depends upon the price we can pay. If we want one of the best schools in Zion's land, let us put the means there to make it such. Among the undertakings of the church I look at the "Saints' Home" as a duty we owe to those for whom it is intended. And the college is a "golden cup," held out by the arm of the church, a gift to the rising generation, where all may come and drink of knowledge secure.

SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS, April 8, 1898.

REDEMPTION—AN ESSAY.

THE redemption of the children of Adam is the grand central point around which all the doctrines of the gospel of Christ revolve. At the outset it may be well to explain what the term "redemption" means. First. The doctrine of the resurrection of the body, which has been disintegrated ages ago, is utterly untenable and against the laws of nature, which are the laws of him who is without a shadow of change. The body is resolved back to the original, the primal element, the elementary atoms, and goes to form and maintain other living organizations.

The sheep grazing in the church-yard eats the grass which grows and develops from the gases, atoms of the dead beneath. We eat of the flesh; our garments are made from the wool; and shoes, gloves, etc., are made from the hide. Thus we and our apparel are parts and portions of the bodies of our dead ancestors.

Those who have been slain and eaten by cannibals have become part and portion of their slayers, and should their bodies be resurrected, whose would they be? Not the ones destroyed, certainly, but portions of the bodies of all the living creatures into which the atoms composing their bodies at time of death had helped through the ages to maintain. Truly our ancient teachers were wise when they symbolized Nature by a serpent eating its tail—living upon itself.

It may be said that "the body the Savior arose in was the one laid down." Certainly; but then it did not see corruption. "Thou wilt not leave my soul in prison, my spirit unclad, neither wilt thou suffer thine Holy One to see corruption." There was no disintegration of the molecules—no separation of the atoms composing the body.

But why the need of redemption? What end was to be gained thereby? An unembodied spirit cannot attain to the fullness of the measure of the glory intended for them by the great All Father. A disembodied spirit is under condemnation. A reëmbodied spirit is in a glorified condition, and takes part in the glorious march of the gods, eternal progression.

Adam, an unembodied spirit, was embodied by his father and his God; and by his transgression became disembodied, and through him his children; for nothing born of those under the penalty of disembodiment (death) can inherit, be reëmbodied unto eternal life. That which is born of "flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of heaven." We think it is a grand error to say that death—disintegration—was not in the world prior to the Adamic transgression. The spirit Son of God, Adam, was possessed of eternal endurance of life is now and ever will be, in fact he cannot be deprived of it; but his physical body can come under the destructive laws of nature, and he can be disembodied and remain so eternally, a spirit unclad, one who having no wedding garment cannot enter and partake of the marriage supper of the Lamb.

Death, disintegration, decay, was in the world from the commencement; every living thing save Adam and Eve was subject to it. There was then as now all the varied phenomena of nature. The sun made its annual round; there was the equinoxes, and the solstices; spring, summer, autumn, and winter. There was the budding of the leaf, the growth of the fruit, its maturity, and its decay.

Adam ate of the fruits of the various trees, to keep up his physical force; those fruits were acted upon by his physical organization, as they are now by ours. There was absolutely no difference. He ate of them and they were received unto his stomach, underwent the processes of digestion, absorption, and assimilation; and the refuse passed out by the natural channels,—disintegration, decay, death, was there; moreover from the fact of these processes going on in the primal pair, we deduce the conclusion that their bodies would every seven years (or perhaps more) be completely changed. That the component atoms of their bodies at the time God separated and called them, were after a time replaced by others. That in fact the laws of nature were in full force and operation upon them as upon us.

How then could their bodies have been possessed of eternal endurance of life? I hear some exclaim. Well, the fact is that they were not possessed of it, but they were preserved unto eternal endurance, or would have been had they not transgressed. We argue as follows, and from that deduce our conclusions. The penalty for disobedience was,—“decaying, thou shalt die;” rendered “dying, thou shalt die.” Decay and disintegration of the body was the penalty. But if they were subject to the natural law—a misnomer this, for there is no such thing as natural law, all is, are laws of the spirit, hence spiritual law, and the term “natural law,” simply distinguishes between the known and the unknown laws; between spirit acting upon matter and spirit operating on spirit. Adam and Eve were told that they could eat of every fruit growing in the garden save one. These would keep their bodies in health and strength, but only for a time; for every action they performed, every breath drawn, was so much drain upon the physical organization, and finally they would succumb to the all powerful forces of nature, “decaying they would die.” Inasmuch as these fruits could not keep the body unto eternal endurance, there was another tree, or other trees in the garden, the fruits of which possessed the especial property of replacing that portion of the physical force lacking, and thus keep the body in perfect equilibrium, free from decay, and in full vigor of life. This fruit was that of the tree of life; geometrically speaking it was the complement of the circle of physical life; the other fruits kept the body in vigor up to a certain point, beyond which they could not supply the life force equal to the demand. The powers of nature were superior to the power of the food they ate, and the result was decay and disintegration—death. Then did the wonderful virtues of the tree of life come into play, and what the common fruits could not accomplish it supplied, and the circle of life was maintained complete and without break.

That this was the case is evident from the action of Deity in banishing them from the garden wherein the tree of life flourished, “Lest he put forth his hand and [continue] to eat of the fruit of the tree of life and live forever.” It was for this the Savior came into the world, donned the mendicant robe, went abroad preaching and teaching without “purse or scrip,” receiving acts from the villagers and people among whom he traveled, and finally died on Calvary, that he might bring about the reëmbodiment of the disembodied, and restore again the tree of life to them, and place his—on second thought I won't say it; but you may study 1 Corinthians 11: 27–30, and you may possibly find something to think about.

Well, was the sacrifice on Calvary full and complete, or but partial? If it was full and complete (and we fully believe it was), death was completely conquered, and man, through absolute purity of life and pride in the Master, can reap the full and complete fruits of that sacrifice. If, on the other hand, it was but partial, where are we? Death was not conquered, and still retains dominion over the sons and daughters of Adam.

In reply it may be said, “The time will come when death will be conquered, and the children of God rescued from its grasp.” Just so; nevertheless, to those who having fulfilled the perfect law, the memory of having been vanquished and deprived of entering their Father's kingdom will ever remain; and, as with the sons and daughters of Job who were slain, carried off, etc., the fact of their father's wealth being restored seven fold did not repay them for their sufferings and death, etc. So with the saints, an eternity of bliss will not efface the fact that they, after obeying the Lord to their utmost, were held prisoners by an enemy whom he had conquered and had all power over.

All power is now given unto me, both in heaven and on earth.

Master; even the devils are subject unto us.

But with what kind of bodies do they come? What is the nature of the body in which the saints are reëmbodied?

There are also celestial bodies, and bodies terrestrial.

It is sown in [disembodied from] corruption; it is raised [reëmbodied] incorruptible.

“It is sown [disembodied] in dishonor”—conquered by death; it is raised [reëmbodied in] a spiritual body.

“It is disembodied in weakness,” unable to resist death. “It is reëmbodied in power”—a conqueror of death.

There is a natural body born of humanity; there is a spiritual body, born of the Spirit.

Now this I say, brethren, that flesh and blood [that which is born of flesh and blood] cannot inherit the kingdom of God; neither doth corruption [that which is born of corruption] inherit incorruption.

If then the decomposed body is not, cannot be resurrected, what is the nature of the bodies of the reëmbodied spirits, and whence derived?

For we know that if our earthly house of tabernacle be dissolved [disintegrated] we shall have a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal [as] in the heavens.

Surely if Deity could from the already existing elements command, and fish were brought into being, it is no stretch of imagination to suppose that the “house not made with hands,” will have the same origin! A house not born of the flesh, nor by the power of the flesh, but by the Spirit of God.

Christ is the great exemplar of the reincarnated saints. He arose in the body which died on the cross; it was brought back to life eternal, how?

For Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust that he might bring us to God, being put to death in [by] the flesh, but *quicken*ed by the spirit.

What is a quickening? A making alive,—a birth from dead, inert matter, to living form. What was quickened? That which was dead, inert; the body of flesh, and blood, and bones.

How did it arise—corruptible or incorruptible?

I am he that liveth, and was dead; and, behold, I am alive for evermore.

Except a man be born of water, and of the Spirit, he cannot enter the kingdom of God.

Was the Master's body born of the Spirit after he had been slain by his enemies? And now, behold that body, spirit born, eating of a piece of fish and honeycomb, before his disciples, evidently for the same purpose as when he called Thomas to examine the wounds on his person. That food entered the stomach, was digested, absorbed, assimilated, and went to form various microscopical portions of the body, as all food does; a portion was taken up and deposited at the roots of the nails, to help form the horny substance of which they are composed; another portion was taken up and carried by the circulation to the base of the teeth, and finally found a microscopical portion of enamel for them; hair, muscle, sinew, bone, all received a portion of that fish and honey, while the non nutrient parts thereof passed away by nature's outlets. Christ, the resurrected, reëmbodied Christ, eat because he was hungry! Yes, I know it is written, "They shall hunger no more, neither thirst;" of course not, for there shall be an abundance of corn, wine, and oil; but it is nowhere said, they shall eat no more, and if they eat the food goes to form flesh, and bone, and thew, and sinew.

I have said that the bodies of the saints will be called into existence; perhaps I should have said they are being called into existence even since the "world's Consoler" triumphed over the natural law, to use a popular term; and the sons and daughters of God are not condemned to remain under the power of death for ages. May it not be that the reëmbodiment has been going on ever since the Master's resurrection, and will continue to until every son and daughter of Adam, found worthy, will be reëmbodied, clad upon with a body born of the Spirit,—born not of the flesh, nor by the power of the flesh, but by the power of the Spirit of God?

Why should the soldiers and servants, all children of the victorious commander and king, be subject to and imprisoned by the defeated foe? Why should they remain in his power, when their commander has the keys and the power to open their prison doors, and liberate his soldiers who valiantly fought for him? Does a commander show his loving-kindness in letting his friends lie in the prisons of his enemy when he has the power, and by every law of honor and friendship should liberate them? I speak from an earthly standpoint; but justice is justice, whether on earth or in heaven, and can never be anything else! These are simply thoughts that will obtrude themselves upon my thinking faculty, and will not down; will persistently recur and,—will ye, will ye,— cause themselves to be expressed; and whether they be right, or whether they be wrong, of one thing we are assured, that there will come a time in,—it may be the near future, or the far off time,—when the sons and daughters of God will be reëmbodied, and in joy and gladness greet each other, clad in their wedding garments, and sit down with all the worthies of bygone ages to the marriage feast of the great Commander.

Ah! we talk of the joy which many of us have felt when wife greets husband, parents greet children, children greet father, brother greets brother returned from earth's blood-stained battle fields alive and unharmed. But how faint is that greeting when compared with the joyous greetings when parents meet children, husband greets wife, brother greets brother, friend greets friend, when clad upon with their tabernacle, (the building from God, the house not made with hands,) they again strike hands and meet as conquerors never more to be overcome.

We talk of the mighty shout of victory raised by the victorious army on earth's blood-stained battle fields. But how think you it will compare with the glorious shout raised by the saints when rising "more than conquerors" they greet each other? would you learn the words of it,—here they are: "O grave, where is thy victory; O death, where is thy sting?" I will conclude with these verses, which have been taking form and shape in my brain while penning this essay:—

VERITAS VINCIT.

The victory will come by and by,
And the saints will arise from the tomb,
To inherit the promise God gave,—
(The earth in its Edenic bloom.)

O how sweet as we greet,
When we rise from the long, silent sleep by and by,
O how sweet as we meet,
When as conquerors we rise from the tomb.

We know our Redeemer doth live,
And life—endless life—will bestow,
Upon those who have fought the good fight,
And faithfully walked here below.

O how sweet as we greet, etc.

Write, "Blessed are the dead," saith the word,
Yea, all those "who die in the Lord,
For they rest from their labors" and toil,
And life, endless life's their reward.

O how sweet as we greet, etc.

Though death our bodies destroy,
And we lie down in silence to sleep;
In the flesh we shall see the dear Lord,
And in gladness again we shall meet.

O how sweet as we greet, etc.

TWO CLIPPINGS.

HERE is a clipping from the Primitive Christian (Campbellite) in its issue for March 29, 1898, written by Rev. W. J. Owens, who attended the debate between Bro. Pement and Rev. Alexander. Rev. Stone regards it a "success," (?) but is very careful to warn his brethren to be "careful" as "no good has come of these late debates with that people"!

The debate reported from Wheatland, Missouri, was regarded by all I talked with there as a success on the part of Bro. Alexander, but my observation and acquaintance with the Mormons leads me to conclude they are unworthy of a notice, and they seek a debate in order to notoriety. In my acquaintance, comparatively no good has come of these late debates with that people.

Brethren preachers, we need to be careful as to debates, for I verily believe more good can be done in preaching than in debating, unless it be in remote cases.

Here is another clipping from same paper. These fellows have been snowed under so often of late when meeting our brethren where we have forced them to stick to the Bible—King James' Translation—that they now would like to dodge any issue that compels them to meet us and use a text book that the people are so conversant with—leaving them no chance to dodge from Dan to Bathsheba to seemingly gain their point. What next?

Should Christians be like the Mormons and a few other superstitious sects, in reference to King James' Translation of the holy Scriptures? Should Christians regard it as a correct and perfect translation, in opposition to the best scholarship in the world? To do so would show our stupidity and weakness.

INDEPENDENCE, Mo., April, 1898.

STRANGE IF TRUE.

LYMAN ABBOTT makes the following statement in regard to the establishment of the church by our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ:—

Such are the companions whom Jesus selects to accompany him in his itinerant ministry, to witness his cures, to hear his instructions, to receive the interpretation of his parables and apothegms, to be witnesses of his sufferings, his death and resurrection, and so to be prepared to coöperation in carrying on the work which he was by his death to inaugurate. The form of their organization was as slight as the principles of their selection were peculiar. In fact, there was nothing which could be designated as an organization. Jesus provided no constitution. He appointed no officers. He left the church to form itself in the future as circumstances might dictate.—Jesus of Nazareth, p. 223.

Without doubt there are thousands of good, earnest, honest people who read the deductions and conclusions of Mr. Abbott and believe every word to be as true as the gospel. Perhaps some may think me over critical in taking exception to the above statement; but I am satisfied that it is not a statement of the truth, but rather a misstatement, and that by using this misstatement as a text I may help some poor soul who is faithfully struggling in darkness to win the crown of eternal life.

There is no transcending the limits of reason and truth in assuming that Christ, the Son of God, knew and understood the object of leaving the abode of his Father and coming to this sin-smitten world. Hence there is consistency in the prophetic words:—

Sacrifice and offering thou didst not desire; mine ears hast thou opened: burnt offering and sin offering hast thou not required. Then said I, Lo, I come, in the volume of the book it is written of me, I delight to do thy will, O my God; yea, thy law is within my heart. I have preached righteousness in the great congregation; lo, I have not refrained my lips, O Lord, thou knowest. I have not hid thy righteousness within my heart; I have declared thy faithfulness and thy salvation: I have not concealed thy loving kindness and thy truth from the great congregation.—Ps. 40:6-10.

Paul made application of the above scripture in his commentary on the mission work of Christ as the great high priest of the new covenant, and church of the living God.

Wherefore, when he cometh into the world, he saith, sacrifice and offering thou wouldest not, but a body hast thou prepared me; in burnt offerings and sacrifices for sin thou hast had no pleasure. Then said I, Lo, I come (in the volume of the book it is written of me) to do thy will, O God. Above when he said, Sacrifice and offering and burnt offerings and offering for sin thou wouldest not, neither hadst pleasure therein; which are offered by the law; then said he, Lo, I come to do thy will, O God. He taketh away the first, that he may establish the second, by the which will we are sanctified through the offering of the body of Jesus Christ once for all.—Heb. 10:5-10.

There is a perfect agreement in the prophecy and the application thereof. The next witness.

The Savior speaks for himself:—

My meat is to do the will of him that sent me and to finish his work.—John 4:34.

To this I add:—

For I came down from heaven, not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me.—John 6:38.

Again:—

I can of mine own self do nothing: as I hear, I judge: and my judgment is just; because I seek not mine own will, but the will of the Father which hath sent me.—John 5:30.

Once more and of equal importance:—

For I have not spoken of myself; but the Father which sent me, he gave me a commandment, what I should say, and what I should speak. And I know that his commandment is life everlasting; whatsoever I speak therefore, even as the Father said unto me, so I speak.—John 12:49, 50.

From the foregoing it is clear that the coming of Jesus Christ was to accomplish a work of God—the establishing of the church, for in the church salvation is found. (See Acts 2:47.)

These citations without an equivocal indicate that the Christ had a work to accomplish for God in the interest of humanity, and I will proceed to prove that work to be the establishing of the church.

Mr. Abbott says:—

Jesus provided no constitution.

Mr. Robert Hunter, A. M., F. G. S., in the Encyclopædic Dictionary, gives the following definition of constitution:—

1.—The act or process of constituting, making up, or forming.

2.—The act of constituting, establishing, or enacting; enactment, establishment.

3.—An established form of government; a system of law and customs.

4.—Any particular law, rule, or regulation: an established custom; an institution or usage.

In the great preaching commission the Savior instructed:—

Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world. Amen.—Matt. 28:20.

From the things that all disciples of the Lord are "commanded" to "observe," we will now formulate and present for careful consideration the Christian constitution, with this premise: that the following is now as fully in force and as binding as when uttered, and is likewise applicable to all who desire to be disciples of the Lamb of God:—

Then said Jesus to those Jews which believed on him, If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed.—John 8:31.

CONSTITUTION.

1.—FAITH.

And Jesus answering saith unto them, Have faith in God.—Mark 11:22.

Then touched he their eyes, saying, According to your faith be it unto you.—Matt. 9:29.

2.—FAITH IN CHRIST.

For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life.—John 3:16.

Let not your hearts be troubled: ye believe in God, believe also in me.—John 14:1.

3.—FAITH IN THE LAW.

Think not that I am come to destroy the law, or the prophets: I am not come to destroy, but to fulfil. For verily I say unto you, Till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law, till all be fulfilled.—Matt. 5:17, 18.

Search the scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life: and they are they which testify of me. . . . For had ye believed Moses, ye would have believed me: for he wrote of me.—John 5:39, 46.

And why call ye me, Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say.—Luke 6:46.

He that hath my commandments and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me: and he that loveth me shall be loved of my Father, and I will love him, and will manifest myself to him.—John 14:21.

5.—FAITH TO CONTINUE.

Every tree [person] that bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down, and cast into the fire.—Matt. 7:19.

If a man abide not in me, he is cast forth as a branch, and is withered; and men gather them, and cast them into the fire, and they are burned.—John 15:6.

6.—REPENTANCE.

From that time Jesus began to preach, and to say, Repent: for the kingdom of heaven is at hand.—Matt. 4:17.

The time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand: repent ye, and believe the gospel.—Mark 1:15.

I tell you, Nay: but, except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish.—Luke 13:3.

7.—BAPTISM.

Then cometh Jesus from Galilee to Jordan unto John, to be baptized of him. But John forbade him, saying, I have need to be baptized of thee, and comest thou to me? And Jesus answering said unto him, Suffer it to be so now: for thus it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness. Then he suffered him. And Jesus, when he was baptized, went up straightway out of the water: and, lo, the heavens were opened unto him, and he saw the Spirit of God descending like a dove, and lighting upon him: and lo a voice from heaven, saying, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased.—Matt. 3:13-17.

Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost.—Matt. 28:19.

Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned.—Mark 16: 15, 16.

8.—PROMISE OF THE HOLY SPIRIT.

And, behold, I send the promise of my Father upon you: but tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem, until ye be endued with power from on high.—Luke 24: 49.

And I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you forever; even the Spirit of truth; whom the world cannot receive.—John 14: 16, 17.

But the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you.—John 14: 26.

9.—LAYING ON OF HANDS.

And when he had said this, he breathed on them, and saith unto them, Receive ye the Holy Ghost.—John 20: 22.

Suffer little children, and forbid them not, to come unto me: for of such is the kingdom of heaven. And he laid his hands on them.—Matt. 19: 14.

And he laid his hands on her: and immediately she was made straight, and glorified God.—Luke 13: 13.

10.—RESURRECTION.

For as the Father raiseth up the dead, and quickeneth them, even so the Son quickeneth whom he will.—John 5: 21.

Jesus said unto her, I am the resurrection, and the life: he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live.—John 11: 25.

11.—JUDGMENT.

For the Father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment unto the Son.—John 5: 22.

As I hear, I judge.—John 5: 30.

12.—HONOR FATHER AND MOTHER.

For God commanded, saying, Honor thy father and mother: and, He that curseth father or mother, let him die the death.—Matt. 15: 4.

Honor thy father and thy mother: and, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself.—Matt. 19: 19.

13.—SHALL NOT KILL.

Ye have heard that it was said by them of old time, Thou shalt not kill; and whosoever shall kill shall be in danger of the judgment: but I say unto you, That whosoever is angry with his brother without a cause shall be in danger of the judgment: and whosoever shall say to his brother, Raca, shall be in danger of the council: but whosoever shall say, Thou fool, shall be in danger of hell fire.—Matt. 5: 21, 22.

14.—ADULTERY.

Ye have heard that it was said by them of old time, Thou shalt not commit adultery: but I say unto you, That whosoever looketh on a woman to lust after her hath committed adultery with her already in his heart.—Matt. 5: 27, 28.

15.—SHALL NOT STEAL.

Thou shalt not steal.—Matt. 19: 18.

16.—FALSE WITNESS.

Thou shalt not bear false witness.—Matt. 19: 18.

17.—COVETOUSNESS.

And he said unto them, Take heed, and beware of covetousness: for a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth.—Luke 12: 15.

18.—RECONCILIATION.

Therefore if thou bring thy gift to the altar, and there rememberest that thy brother hath aught against thee; leave there thy gift before the altar, and go thy way; first be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift.—Matt. 5: 23, 24.

19.—GOLDEN RULE.

And as ye would that men should do to you, do ye also to them likewise.—Luke 6: 31.

20.—DUTY IN A NUT-SHELL.

Jesus said unto him, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. This is the first and great commandment. And the second is like unto it, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets.—Matt. 22: 37-40.

After a careful and critical examination of the foregoing succinct, Christ-uttered constituent principles of God's economy for the salvation of the widespread offspring of Adam, it would seem utterly impracticable for Mr. Lyman Abbott, or another intelligent man to say that "Jesus provided no constitution" for his faithful followers. As to the slighting remark that Christ was derelict in accomplishing God's will in granting to man an ample organization, is more assumed than proved. Hunter's definition of organization is:—

1. The act of organizing; the act or process of arranging and getting into proper working order: as the organization of an expedition.

2. The state of being organized; that which is organized: an organized body.

3. Organic structure; the disposition or arrangement of the organs for the performance of vital functions.

4. The arrangement of the parts of an aggregate or body for work or action; systematic preparation for action.

On account of the paucity of that which was written by the first four writers of the New Testament, and in the light of the above definitions, I cannot perceive how any scholar with an open Bible in his hand, could have the audacity to say: "In fact, there was nothing which could be designated as an organization." Should we adopt the deductive method of studying the ministerial work of Christ from the time of his temptation until his expiration on the cross, no other conclusion could be fairly reached, than that Christ devoted himself assiduously to laying the foundation, to disciplining the chosen ambassadors of the everlasting gospel, in an ample preparation of those who were to be the active ministers in the great "expedition" against all sin and unrighteousness. Jesus said: "Upon this rock I will build my church." Be it understood that Jesus Christ is, and was the chief master builder of the church, the great superintendent of the holy compact of the living temple of our God, and that each individual initiated into the covenant of the gospel is an integral part of "the whole family in heaven and earth," for

Neither is there salvation in any other; for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved.—Acts 4: 12.

The following indicates the activity and faithfulness of Christ in establishing an organization:—

And he said unto them, I must preach the kingdom of God to other cities also; for therefore am I sent.—Luke 4: 43.

The word "kingdom" in this text discloses the work of organization without the possibility of mistake or doubt, unless this scripture be interpreted according to sectarianized tradition or creed-formed thought.

Here is another, the perspicuity of which should dispel even the shadow of a doubt in regard to Christ leaving an organization at the time of his departure:—

And it came to pass afterward, that he went throughout every city and village preaching and shewing the glad tidings of the kingdom of God.—Luke 8: 1.

The above is confirmatory that Christ accomplished that whereunto he was sent. Paul who was more than eighteen centuries closer to the scenes of the earth-life actions of Christ and, therefore, had a much better opportunity of observation and knowledge as to what the Savior did, writes:—

Therefore as the church is subject unto Christ, so let the wives be to their own husbands in everything. Husbands, love your wives, even as Christ also loved the church, and gave himself for it.—Eph. 5: 24, 25.

While this is clearly instruction to husbands and wives in their domestic relationship; nevertheless there is incidentally and fortuitously the following three important things:—

1. The church is, and was, and always will be subject to Christ, for he purchased it—the church—all the redeemed—of all ages and climes, with his own life.

2. Christ loved the church in such a devoted manner before his passion that he was the comforter to the disciples, and by his wise instruction a means of sanctification to those who walked in the light of his pure, unselfish life.

3. Having accomplished the organization of the church prior to his crucifixion, he of his own volition willingly gave himself for the church. Thus both his life and his death were in the interest of the church—his own body.

The above is further explained in the following:—

And he is before all things, and by him all things consist: and he is the head of the body, the church: who is the beginning, the firstborn from the dead; that in all things he might have the preëminence. For it pleased the Father that in him should all fulness dwell.—Col. 1:17-19.

It would have been strange indeed that Christ should have labored without the observance of law or system—in a haphazard way—and utterly failing in that which was ordained of God—the organizing of the church. Paul knew better than to hint at such an absurd thought as Christ being a failure or a lawless fellow who had no fixed purpose or rule to work by, only to flash like a meteor upon the religious horizon, then to suddenly depart life, and leave to less favored sons of God the accomplishment of the very work that God sent the Only Begotten into the world to do. No! most emphatically no! Christ was not a meteor, nor yet a fixed star in the constellation of God's divinely appointed ministers. He is the central figure, The Sun of Righteousness. Well might the great apostle say:—

Who now rejoice in my sufferings for you, and fill up that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ in my flesh for his body's sake, which is the church.—Col. 1:24.

Much more in evidence from the Scriptures might be introduced that Christ did leave a church—an organization—as an institution wherein man could work out his salvation.

John S. C. Abbott, D. D., says:—

Jesus, the "Son of man" and the "Son of God," has introduced a system of religion so comprehensive, that it is adapted to every conceivable situation in life; so simple, that the most unlearned, and even children, can comprehend it.—History of Christianity, p.13.

This able writer concedes that Christ left to the world, "a system"—an organization. Again, he says:—

Almost nineteen centuries have passed since Christianity was established in the world. Its founder was rejected by his own people and put to death. It was not wanted by the nations. It was foolishness to the Greek, and a stumbling-block to the Jew.—History of Christianity, p. 505.

The establishing of Christianity was the organizing of the Church. As to the unwarranted assumption that Christ "appointed no officers" I cite:—

He came unto his own, and his own received him not. But as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believed on his name: which were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God.—John 1:11-13.

This gift of Christ to those who believed on him, of "power to become the sons of God," was the installing of officers in the church; the bestowal of the priesthood unto faithful men, who became the "brethren" with Christ, fellow-laborers in the work of the church. The proof lies in the statement:—

For every high priest taken from among men is ordained for men in things pertaining to God, that he may offer both gifts and sacrifices for sins.—Heb. 5:1.

Some of the membership of the church are to be set apart by ordination as high priests, and this office in the priesthood obtained by ordination like that of Melchisedec, comes Without father, without mother, without descent, having neither beginning of days, nor end of life; but made like unto the Son of God; abideth a priest continually.—Heb. 7:3.

Melchisedec, as an high priest in the priesthood, was made like unto Christ, and all those who are so fortunate as to obtain the like priesthood, by being favored of God and receiving "power to become sons of God," will abide in the companionship of Melchisedec and be made an equal heir with the captain of our salvation.

To those officers in the church during the earth-life of Christ, he said:—

Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you, and ordained you, that ye should go and bring forth fruit, and that your fruit should remain; that whatsoever ye shall ask of the Father in my name, he may give it you.—John 15:16.

Was there not another reference in the New Testament as to Christ endowing the church with officers, it seems that the above would be satisfactory to any reasonable man who professes a belief in the Bible and in the gospel. Those men were chosen by the Lord, and were set apart for the work of the ministry by ordination. The names of some chosen are given:—

And when it was day, he called unto him his disciples: and of them he chose twelve, whom also he named apostles; Simon, (whom he also named Peter,) and Andrew his brother, James and John, Philip and Bartholomew, Matthew and Thomas, James the son of Alpheus, and Simon called Zelotes, and Judas the brother of James, and Judas Iscariot, which also was the traitor.—Luke 6:13-16.

The disciples—followers of Christ—were called together, in all probability in a conference of the church, and then and there from among those disciples the Savior "chose" or selected "twelve," and these he "named apostles" (the title of office bestowed by call and ordination), as a designation in office, from others chosen to work in the great vineyard of the Lord.

The same historian last cited says:—

After these things the Lord appointed other seventy also, and sent them two and two before his face into every city and place, whither he himself would come. Therefore said he unto them, The harvest truly is great, but the laborers are few: pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he would send forth laborers in the harvest. Go your ways: behold, I send you forth as lambs among wolves.—Luke 10:1-3.

Blind, indeed, must have been the eyes, and dull the comprehension of the man who reads the above and then says that Christ "appointed no officers." Hear the report of these men upon their return:—

And the seventy returned again with joy, saying, Lord, even the devils are subject unto us through thy name.—Luke 10:17.

These men were the duly appointed and qualified officers of the church, authorized to officiate in the name of Jesus Christ. The gospel is an authoritative message from heaven, and those who bear the tidings of the same must be duly appointed and ordained to qualify them to administer in the ordinances thereof; otherwise they would be guilty of spiritual forgery, in which event there is a sure promise:—

Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven. Many will say to me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name? and in thy name have cast out devils? and in thy name done many wonderful works? And then will I profess [say] unto them, I never knew you [ye never knew me]: depart from me, ye that work iniquity.—Matt. 7:21-23.

Herewith I submit some evidence as to what was done:—

And God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers, after that miracles, then gifts of healings, helps, governments, diversities of tongues.—1 Cor. 12: 28.

This was not an aftermath, but the original planting by the immediate presence and divine work of the Master, ere he said, upon the tree, "It is finished."

Mr. Abbot, adroitly paves the way for an apology for divided and antagonistic Christianity, by the statement:—

He left the church to form itself in the future as circumstances might dictate.

This certainly will not fall far short of the old adage: "It is only a step from the sublime to the ridiculous." All the creations of God bear evidence of harmony and perfection, and to think that the giver of eternal life would leave the chief work—the church—to the ipse dixit of theological manufacturers is contrary to the universal testimony of all God's work.

The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul: the testimony of the Lord is sure, making wise the simple.—Ps. 19: 7.

In conclusion I offer the beautiful words of the prophet:—

For my thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways, saith the Lord. For as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my ways higher than your ways, and my thoughts than your thoughts.—Isa. 55: 8, 9.

HALF-FARE PERMITS.

Published lists of all General Conference appointments have been sent to B. C. Caldwell, of the Western Passenger Association, and to F. C. Donald, Chairman of the Central Passenger Committee, at Chicago, in order to facilitate prompt issuance of half-fare permits to General Conference appointees. Conference Minutes will also be forwarded to said officials, as soon as issued.

Such district appointees and local pastors as are entitled to half-fare permits under association rules (which require that applicants devote their time to religious work, having no other business or occupation) are referred to general missionaries in charge for indorsement, as heretofore. Lists of said general missionaries in charge, with names, addresses, and their territory, together with advices according to the foregoing, have also been forwarded to the associations named. General Conference appointees who need aid in securing permits over lines of other associations or roads, will be promptly assisted, so far as possible, on application to the undersigned. Personal applications are generally successful, however, where proper statements are made. Local applicants can obtain needed assistance through their respective missionaries in charge.

In bonds,

The ministers who have been appointed to labor in the above named mission, will please take notice of, and cooperate with the following arrangements.

ASSISTANTS IN CHARGE.

Minnesota, I. N. Roberts; Galland's Grove district, C. E. Butterworth; Little Sioux district, J. F. Mintun; Fremont and Pottawattamie districts, Henry Kemp; Des Moines district, C. Scott; Eastern Iowa district, J. W. Peterson; Nauvoo district, F. M. Weld.

The ministers laboring in Decatur district will report directly to me, at Lamoni, Iowa.

Some few of the ministers have been careless and negligent about reporting, as well as some other things. Now carelessness and negligence are very poor qualifications for a minister of Jesus Christ, and I sincerely hope the wrong will be corrected. Most of my ministers, however, I am glad to say, have been prompt and careful. If you cannot retain the few simple rules given for reporting, procure the minutes of the conference for 1893, and on page 68 you can read them as often as necessary. In No. 3 of these rules, second line, read furnished instead of "published." The mistake was a bad typographical error.

All appointees will please get into their respective fields as soon as practicable. The proper question is not how much or little others may have done, or are doing, but rather, How much can we do? God requires each one to do all that he consistently can do for the advancement of the work.

The danger of an improper intimacy between the sexes will never cease (though it may grow less) while we are mortal; and the ministers of this church should be worthy examples of purity and wisdom, to those without and within. Once in a while, a minister acts very foolishly in his conduct towards the opposite sex to say the least of it; and his unnecessary folly injures the work, and causes others to hang their heads with shame. These things should be corrected.

My attention has been called to the occasional practice of giving a large or small sum of money to a traveling minister, as a private donation. My opinion is that it is highly improper for a minister to say anything, intentionally, that would induce the saints to donate in that way, that is, with the understanding that they [the ministers] were not to report donations made to the Bishop. When a minister receives a sum of money, large or small, he should take it for granted that it is given to him because he is a minister of the church. If he needs it for current and personal expenses, let it be so used and reported to the Bishop. If not so needed, let him send it to the Bishop at once. Gifts received for performing the marriage ceremony should be reported to the Bishop just the same as other donations.

Our best incentive to action should be our belief and knowledge of the truth of the work we are called to represent. God will save to the uttermost those who put their trust in him and obey the gospel. The work is what it is represented to be in the sacred books of the church. It becomes more and more apparent that upon this foundation alone can we safely stand.

Those who are in charge of "fields of labor" will please see that their associate ministers are furnished with their post-office addresses promptly.

While we shall feel keenly the loss of some of our best men, let us hope that our loss will be more than satisfied by the gains brought to the church, through their labors, in their new fields; and, further, that the good and able men who have been appointed to supply their places, will so soon as they have time to thoroughly master their new environment, prove to be as wise and faithful as their predecessors.

Should my health permit, I would be glad to be active in the field as much as practicable; but if not, I must submit to the inevitable with as much grace as possible.

J. R. LAMBERT,

Missionary in charge.

LAMONI, Iowa, April 21, 1898.

To the Ministry and Saints in Missouri, Kansas, and Southern Illinois; Greeting:—I hope and trust it is through the kind hand of Providence, and the best wisdom of the body, that I am continued in charge of my former mission. I therefore take pleasure in earnestly requesting the hearty cooperation of all the saints, and more especially the traveling and local ministry in the mission, in order that the best results may obtain to the great work we are so earnestly engaged in.

In accordance with instructions received from the First Presidency, to subdivide the mission into "fields of labor," I am pleased to place the following named brethren in charge; to wit: Will S. Pender, Northeast and Northwest Kansas districts; Peter Anderson, Nodaway, Missouri, district; F. C. Keck, Spring River district in Missouri and Kansas; Henry Sparling, South Missouri district; D. C. White, Clinton district; H. O. Smith, Far West district; Robert M. Elvin, Northeast Missouri district, and F. M. Slover, Southern Illinois district.

All brethren laboring in these respective "fields of labor" will please notice and act in harmony with the above appointments, and try to make the work a success by harmoniously working together. It will be well for those under General Conference appointment to confine their labors within the fields assigned them, except when otherwise instructed by the missionary in general charge. Let due respect be shown to those who are in charge of branches and districts, that there may be no unnecessary friction. We are all workers together in Christ Jesus, in order to convert and save those who are honestly seeking after the truth. "Be ye clean that bear the vessels of the Lord." "Save yourselves," that ye may be the "salt of the earth," and the "light of the world."

Don't be jealous of each other's success. Make yourselves students of the "word." Teach the "word of wisdom" by practice, and you have God's unalterable decree, that "all saints who remember to keep and do these sayings, walking in obedience to the commandments, shall receive health in their navel, and marrow to their bones, and shall find wisdom and great treasures of knowledge."

All ministers who are not in charge should report their labors to the one in charge of the "field of labor" about the first of July, October, January, and March. Those placed in charge should have all reports in my hands by the 10th of the month. Let these reports consist of the number of sermons, baptisms, children blessed, debates, ordinations, and the number of new places opened for the preaching of the word; where and what the prospects are. During the year I hope to be able to visit the different parts of the mission, and give such aid to the work as time and ability will allow.

Those needing my advice or immediate presence may feel free to correspond with me regarding such, and proper attention will be paid to such correspondence.

Hoping and praying that we may all be found true to every trust confided of God, and that peace and the fellowship of God's Holy Spirit may be and abide with all, I am,
Your fellow servant in Christ,

I. N. WHITE.

INDEPENDENCE, Mo., April 22.

P. S.—St. Louis and Independence districts will receive my personal oversight till later along in the year. I. N. WHITE.

APPOINTMENTS.

W. E. Peak in charge Southern Nebraska district.

F. A. Smith in charge Northern Nebraska district.

D. M. Rudd, Northeastern Nebraska, extending his labors to Dawes County.

S. D. Payne, Western Nebraska.

T. J. Sheldon, under the direction of W. E. Peak.

W. W. Whiting will labor in the Central Nebraska district. (Confer with Bro. W. Rumel, Clearwater, Nebraska.)

C. W. Prettyman will labor in Broken Bow and vicinity as the way may open.

R. S. Mengle will labor in Western Nebraska, coöperating with S. D. Payne, as far as in their judgment it may be for the best good of the work.

Swen Swensen, Dakotas.

W. Sparling to be associated with Swen Swensen, extending the work in one or both of the Dakotas, as they shall find it practicable.

M. H. Forscutt will labor in the Southern Nebraska district, Nebraska City the objective point.

W. H. Walling (priest) assigned to the Dakotas under the direction of Swen Swensen.

D. T. Tyson (priest), Nebraska, under the direction of F. A. Smith.

S. Woods and H. W. Belville (priests) to be associated in ministerial labors in Washington County, Nebraska, looking after the interests of the work in North Bend and vicinity, rendering ministerial aid at Blair and Fremont.

I respectfully suggest that the above brethren embrace every opportunity to break into new localities; not growing weary in well-doing, going two and two when the interest of the work demands and it is found practicable.

In bonds,

JAMES CAFFALL.

To the Ministry and Saints of the Kirtland District:—Until further notice my permanent address will be 4728 Jacob Street, Wheeling, West Virginia. Any communication pertaining to district matters will receive immediate attention. There is an abundance to be done, and I trust all will labor together to the accomplishment of the same. I would like to know the addresses of the ministry of this district.

F. J. EBELING, Pres.

ACKNOWLEDGMENT.

To those thoughtful and kind-hearted saints, that so surprised me April 2, by presenting a suit of tailor-made clothes, I wish to make this acknowledgment, and return thanks for that much-needed and appreciated gift. May our heavenly Father fully and freely reward each of you for the charity bestowed; and I pledge my saintly honor to earnestly seek to continue worthy of your confidence and esteem.

In bonds,

ROBT. M. ELVIN.

CONFERENCE NOTICES.

Conference of the Northwestern Kansas district will convene with the Elmira saints, Saturday, May 28, ten a. m., in the one hundred schoolhouse, about seven miles southeast of Beloit, Kansas. Ministry and branch clerks will please forward their reports to Mrs. Ella Landers, Lenora, Kansas.

L. F. JOHNSON, Pres.

ELLA LANDERS, Sec.

BORN.

SNODGRASS.—At Eight Mile, Cass County, Missouri, November 26, 1897, to Bro. James A. and Sr. Lissie V. Snodgrass, a daughter. She was named Lissie Myra and was blessed April 14, 1898, at Independence, Missouri, by Elder H. A. Stebbins, assisted by Elders T. W. Chatburn and N. B. Ament.

DIED.

HAZELTON.—N. N. Hazelton was born April 5, 1843, at Madison, Ohio. He served two years and nine months as private, Company A, 111th Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry. Was honorably discharged and returned to his old home in Ohio. He soon moved to Wesley, Illinois, where he met and married Alice Anna Ball, January 19, 1867. He was baptized into the church, January 15, 1869, at Wesley, Illinois, by Nelson Van Fleet. Was ordained an elder, December 9, 1877, at Nobletown, Kansas, under the hands of Father Landers and Nelson Van Fleet.

Removed from Kansas to Lamoni, Iowa, in March, 1881, where he has since resided, and where he died April 11, 1898. He was the father of three daughters and two sons. Wife, three daughters, and one son remain to mourn. Services in the brick chapel at Lamoni, April 12; interment in Rose Hill cemetery.

WOOTEN.—John R. Wooten was born April 6, 1855, near Galesburg, Illinois, his youth and early manhood being passed in the cities of Galesburg and Chicago. On the 12th of December, 1881, he was united in marriage to Miss Margaret Crafts, at Creston, Iowa, and to them have been born two daughters and one son. In January, 1895, he united with the Beth-Eden Baptist Church, of Omaha, Nebraska. Removed with his family to Lamoni, Iowa, in the August following, where they have since resided, and where his death occurred April 11, 1898. His wife and three children mourn his departure. He was kind to his family, a quiet, unassuming man, of gentlemanly deportment in his relations with his fellow men. He said to his wife shortly before his death, that he was prepared to enter the unseen state. Funeral services at the residence, April 13. The remains were sent to Lincoln, Nebraska, for interment.

FRY.—Sarah Fry was born in Hartford County, England, March 7, 1816; baptized first in 1853; went to Utah, returned, and united with the Reorganization in 1871. After a short illness passed away March 12. Funeral services at saints' chapel, Logan; sermon by Elder Alma Fyrando.

HARRIS.—In San Bernardino, California, February 19, 1898, after an illness of eighteen hours, Lloyd Aldridge, youngest child of Bro. David and Sr. Bettie Harris, aged 6 years and 10 months. Funeral sermon by Elder William Gibson.

BARR.—At Oleander, Fresno County, California, January 30, 1898, Glaude Albert Barr, aged 22 years; eldest son of Bro. and Sr. Barr, formerly of Santa Ana, southern California. Bro. Glaude was baptized February 12, 1889, at Newport, Orange County, California, by President Joseph Smith; confirmed by Elder D. S. Mills; was ordained an elder January 9, 1898, by Elder Thomas Daley.

WILSON.—At Burlington, Iowa, April 13, 1898, Sr. Anna Margret Jensen Wilson, aged 77 years, 6 months, and 13 days. Funeral sermon was preached by Elder J. S. Roth on the 17th at the Union church, nine miles west of Burlington. An immense crowd followed her to her resting place. She was a true saint, and according to God's word will come forth in the first resurrection.

BADHAM.—Mary D. Richards, born in Highland County, Ohio, April 19, 1821. Married to Samuel Badham, March 20, 1845. Baptized in the old church by Elder John Landers. United with the Reorganization in 1863. Died at her residence near Henderson, Iowa, April 2, 1898. She was the mother of seven children, six of whom and her husband had passed away before her. She leaves one sister, one son, eleven grandchildren, and many friends and relatives to mourn her departure.

HISTORY OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS. (Volumes 1 and 2 now ready.) Provided for by action of General Conference of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Written and compiled by President Joseph Smith and Apostle Heman C. Smith. Invaluable as a correct historical narrative, as a means of conversion to truth, and as a defensive weapon in meeting old and new objections urged against the latter-day work. It contains important documents connected with the establishment, growth, and internal and external affairs and progress of the church. The revelations given in this dispensation are inserted, in connection with accounts of the circumstances under which they were given. Biographical sketches, illustrations, complete indexes, sidenotes for ready reference, etc., are some of the features of the work. Volume 1 begins with the birth of Joseph Smith, the Prophet and Seer, in 1805, and narrates the circumstances of his calling and ministry, the rise of the church in 1830, and until the close of the year 1835. Volume 2 continues the history up to June 27, 1844, —to the assassination of Joseph and Hyrum Smith.

THE KEOKUK ROUTE.

K. & W. and D. M. & K. C. Railways.

The D. M. & K. C. Ry from Des Moines to Cainsville has been rebuilt and that portion south of Van Wert will be standard gauge on or before November 1, 1897.

There is no road in Southern Iowa or Northern Missouri which has more good locations for business men than on the line of the Keokuk Route. More stock of all kinds has been shipped over this line than any road of equal mileage in Iowa or Missouri. (See Missouri Surplus Map at our stations.) The freight and passenger service is not equalled by any road in the state, except the Missouri River trunk lines, with each of which we have union stations and direct connections.

Persons seeking farms can find property at tempting prices; men seeking business locations can find towns with ample territory and settlers to warrant good business. Additional passenger service will soon be given which will add to the growth of the towns.

The towns between Des Moines and Cainsville are particularly well located for business. Look them up. Write to the undersigned for additional information. See folder for map and lands.

ARCHÆOLOGICAL FINDS.

ANOTHER notable contribution of Ramsey to Christian archæology is in his find of the Alexander stela and of the Abercius stela on his first and second visits to Phrygia. The Abercius inscription was known to the Byzantine hagiologists, but had been considered generally as a piece of legendary poetry. The biography of Abercius relates that Abercius was Bishop of Hierapolis in Phrygia in the second half of the second century and that during the reign of Marcus Aurelius and Lucius Verus he visited Rome and on his return in his seventy-second year caused his epitaph to be engraved upon a slab. But the unsolvable difficulty appeared that among the Bishops of Hierapolis at that time the name of Abercius does not appear. This doubt vanished perfectly in consequence of discoveries due to W. Ramsay in his first journey through Phrygia in 1882 to Hierapolis. He found a stela from the year 3,000 of the Phrygian reckoning, 216 of the Christian reckoning. In his second journey he found the original inscription of Abercius built into the walls of a bath. Putting these two stela together and with the help of the manuscript copies the entire inscription is reproduced.

It appears that the stone found in 1882 contained an inscription taken from the first and the last parts of the Abercius inscription, with the substitution of Alexander for Abercius, and is hence called the Alexander stela. The entire inscription makes up forty-four lines. In substance it relates that Abercius went to Rome to behold the splendor of the city; that he passed through Syria, visited Nisibis, crossed the Euphrates, and everywhere faith is his guide, everywhere he feeds upon the mystic "Ichthus," everywhere he received brotherly greeting.

De Rossi esteems this inscription one of the most important, one of the most remarkable monuments which Christian antiquity has given us. "Epigrama dignitate at pretio inter Christiana facile princeps." Here we have a testimony to the widespread truth in the beginning of the third century and in all probability in the latter half of the second century. The mystic allusion to Christianity under the name "Ichthus" accords with Ramsay's description of the sign language of the Phrygian Christian monuments. Lightfoot accords with De Rossi in his high estimate of this inscription. He is followed by Kraus, Wilpert, and others. Harnack is inclined to reckon it among the fruits of the Asiatic Cybele cultus, but he has scant following among Christian archæologists. The stela has been donated by the Sultan to the Christian museum of the Vatican. Its genuineness conceded, it is the first dated Christian inscription which carries us back within the latter half of the second century.

Within the past twenty-five years the Christian world has been thrilled with a brilliant succession of documentary finds, in which Christian literature of the first three centuries are familiar to every Christian scholar. It will be necessary to give merely an outline of some of these important finds.

The most important discovery since the Convent of St. Catherine in 1859 gave up the renowned Sinaitic manuscript must be reckoned that of the "Diadache" in 1873, by Bryennois, in the Jerusalem monastery at Constantinople. This was published in 1883 and took the Christian world by storm. Its coming produced vast literature on both sides of the Atlantic. Christian scholars everywhere have recognized this as the oldest church manual, going back to the early part of the second century and giving most valuable light on church life, as well as showing the large liberty allowed in the mode of Christian baptism.

In connection with this manuscript was found the complete epistles of Clemens. The first epistle, as is well known, was discovered in the same folios with the Alexandria manuscripts, but here was brought to light the second epistle, thus completing the letters of this important church father.

These letters seem to have been cherished as much almost as the canonical writings. Eusebius identifies Clemens as a friend of St. Paul, and speaking of the first epistle, declares: "We are aware that this epistle has been publicly read in very many churches, both in old times and also in our own day." As to the second epistle its authenticity may be questioned, but evidence is abundant to show that it was a homily to be read in the churches and may be assigned to the early part of the second century.

We next have to notice the finding of the gospel of Peter and the apocalypse of Peter. This discovery was made by the French Archæological mission in Cairo in 1886. In the grave of a monk in an ancient cemetery at Akhmin, the ancient Panopolis, upper Egypt, was found a parchment containing the gospel of Peter and a fragment of the apocalypse of Peter, together with a fragment of the book of Enoch, in Greek. The gospel of Peter was published in 1892, under the care of Mr. Bouriant, in the memoirs of the French Archæological mission at Cairo. This parchment Codex, which is now in the museum at Gizeh, is assigned to a date between the sixth and twelfth centuries. Harnack assigns the gospel to the first quarter of the second century. Previous to this discovery all that had been known of this gospel was allusions by Serapis, Bishop of Antioch, Origen, Eusebius, and Theodoret. It differs in many important details from the canonical gospels, but corroborates them in general. Harnack in "Texte und Untersuchungen," has given a critical examination of its peculiarities.

One of the most romantic histories is that of the recovery of the text of Tatian's "Diatessaron, or Harmony of the Four Gospels." The reconstruction of the text from ancient authorities is a monument of Zahn's brilliant scholarship, but it was not until 1888 that we came into possession of the connected text itself.

The Arabic text was published at Rome in 1888 from manuscript brought from the East by Joseph Assermani in 1719. When the visitor apostolic of the Catholic copts was in Rome in 1886, and was informed of the Vatican manuscript he told of another manuscript of which he knew and which he was instrumental in sending to the Borgan Museum. The latter manuscript is complete, containing 355 folios. The importance of the Diatessaron of Tatian, which must have been composed in the second century, cannot be overestimated, in that it bears upon the date and formation of the canonical gospels, giving unequivocal testimony to the early date of the gospel of John.

Another surprise greeted the Christian world, when, in 1889, Professor J. Rendel Harris of Cambridge discovered in the library of the Convent of St. Catherine on Mount Sinai the Syrian version of the apology of Aristides, the philosopher. Aristides and Quadratus had been mentioned by the fathers as early apologists of the church, and it had been stated that both had presented apologies to the Emperor Hadrian on his first visit to Athens (125-133).

In 1878 the Armenian monks at Venice published a Latin translation of an Armenian fragment, which Renan pronounced spurious because it contained theological terms of a later date, but this was found to be due to the translator. About the same time that Professor Harris discovered the Syriac manuscript the Greek text came to light, Professor Robinson, editor of the Cambridge "Texts and Studies," showing that the Apology of Aristides was incorporated with the early Christian romance of Barlaam and Josaphat. We have therefore now the translations of both into English, the Syriac being the fuller. Heretofore Justin Martyr has been considered the leading apologist of the early church. This discovery places Aristides as the earliest apologist. The internal evidence indicates that it is of a very early date. As it was presented to Hadrian on a visit to Athens it dates from 125 to 133. The type of Christian practice is that found in the "Teaching of the Twelve Apostles." His apology is therefore of great value as giving a picture of the lives of the early Christians and the simplicity of their doctrine.

Still further, must we mention a number of apocalypses and romances from the early church. These are given to us chiefly through the editors of the Cambridge "Texts and Studies" and are from manuscripts ranging from the eighth to the fifteenth centuries. They are largely apocalyptic writings and early Christian romances.

Among those recently discovered additions to early Christian literature are the vision of Paul, the apocalypse of the Virgin, the apocalypse of Sedrach, the testament of Abraham, the acts of Xanthippe and Polyzena and the narrative of Zosimus. We shall in all probability recover still more of this literature, which must have been extensive.

It is from these apocalypses that we have those pictorial representations of heaven and hell which have had so wide an influence. Only one who read the apocalypse of Peter or the apocalypse of the virgin could have painted such a picture as Orcagna's "Triumph of Death," or could sculpture such a scene as Adam Kraft's "Last Judgment" on the Church of the Virgin at Nuremberg.

In this year of our Lord remarkable discoveries on the Nile are astonishing the Christian world. The finding of the "Logia" or "Sayings of Jesus," is fresh in our minds, while the news comes that from that same great collection of papyrus rolls dug up at Benehsa a page of the gospel of Matthew has come to light. At this very hour competent scholars are patiently deciphering these wonderful documents.

These are some of the finds of recent years in the field of Christian archæology. Dry and uninteresting may be these details to the average mind, but to the Christian scholar they possess a positive fascination. That in these last days the very stones are crying out and that the buried ages are coming forth to give eloquent and unmistakable testimony of the genuineness and authenticity of the scripture records, wonderfully stirs the Christian imagination and gives increased stability to Christian faith.

What vast material here for the correcting of the scripture text, for the filling up of lacunæ in the history of the early church, for the understanding of the doctrine and polity of the early Christians, and for the clearing away of much medieval rubbish. We expect that when the one hundred "Tells" now marked on the map of Palestine are opened up; when similar mounds in Egypt are explored; when the dark places of Oriental monasteries are cleaned out; when, in short, the incubus of Christian exploration, the Turk, shall have been swept away, the archæologist of the future will bring into yet fuller and clearer light the glory of the sacred scripture, and the greatness, simplicity, and influence of the early Christian church. — Cleveland Plain-dealer.

HALF-FARE PERMITS.

Published lists of all General Conference appointments have been sent to B. C. Caldwell, of the Western Passenger Association, and to F. C. Donald, Chairman of the Central Passenger Committee, at Chicago, in order to facilitate prompt issuance of half-fare permits to General Conference appointees, Conference Minutes will also be forwarded to said officials, as soon as issued.

Such district appointees and local pastors as are entitled to half-fare permits under association rules (which require that applicants devote their time to religious work, having no other business or occupation) are referred to general missionaries in charge for indorsement, as heretofore. Lists of said general missionaries in charge, with names, addresses, and their territory, together with advices according to the foregoing, have also been forwarded to the associations named. General Conference appointees who need aid in securing permits over lines of other associations or roads, will be promptly assisted, so far as possible, on application to the undersigned. Personal applications are generally successful, however, where proper statements are made. Local applicants can obtain needed assistance through their respective missionaries in charge.

EX-PREMIER CRISPI'S FORECAST.

AT the risk of being misunderstood by some we publish the following significant statements made by Ex-Premier Crispi, of Italy, a statesman of pronounced ability and large experience. Our object in the republication is to call attention to the significant utterances of Signor Crispi concerning the causes that have brought Spain to her present condition—the rule of ignorance and superstition; also to present a forecast of the general European situation as seen by one who for a number of years past has been an active participant in much of its diplomacy; and in confirmation of prophetic prediction.

Latter Day Saints have looked for political and general changes and upheavals in the world—for wars and rumors of war; for the casting down of thrones and other institutions not based upon truth and right and destined to be moved and overturned in the shaking time. And as discerners of the signs of the end they will not be surprised, but confirmed, by reading the statements of the Italian ex-Premier, in the light of past, present, and prospective history.

Europe is indeed and has been for years an armed camp, underlying which is a political volcano that may at any time belch forth a flame vastly more destructive than Nature's fiery subterranean eruptive forces. Millions of her numerous hosts have left the plow and pruning hook and taken up sword and musket, becoming trained instruments of destruction instead of peaceful producers in harmony with the divine economy and decree of self-helpfulness and keepership of brother man.

Such abnormal conditions cannot much longer continue in the present age, and we may rejoice in all that proclaims and moves forward to secure the deliverance and freedom of the oppressed. We are to be glad with them that freedom for the race is secured in the events that prepare for the ushering in of the reign of universal peace.

The downfall of Babylon proceeds, it is the preparation for the reign of the only true Potentate, the King of kings and Lord of lords.

We trust none of our brethren will take offense at our repetition of all of Premier Crispi's statement. It is not given for the purpose of calling attention to his opinions of possible future policies of the United States, of which he may not be so well informed as concerning European affairs. Our own country has disclaimed any purpose of territorial acquisition in the present conflict with Spain and has declared her purposes to be purely in the interests of humanity for the relief and deliverance of the oppressed and suffering Cubans.

We reciprocate the kindly feelings of brotherhood developing and being cultivated by the two great divisions of the English speaking people, and trust it may continue, as we believe it should, until the Anglo-Saxon race shall practically become one in the great work of the emancipation of the world, under the banner of liberty and progress. God speed the day!

Rome, April 25.—Ex-Premier Crispi has given an interesting interview on the Hispano-American war. Asked what would be the result, the great Italian statesman said, emphatically: "It is the end of Spain."

"I regret, like all Italians, that our Latin sister should have allowed herself to be drawn into such an imbroglio, but I can assure you she will only get out after being considerably damaged."

"You are severe on valiant Spain."

"Valiant and chivalrous, yes; but Spain in our nineteenth century needs a practical spirit, in which Spaniards are absolutely wanting. They have committed enormous faults, for which they are now paying."

"I do not say Americans have any right to interfere in the affairs of Cuba, but certainly the Spaniards have shown themselves cruel, barbarous, and incapable of governing the Pearl of the Antilles. In one way or another they will lose this beautiful colony. The first cause of it all is the general condition of ignorance in the upper, as well as the lower, classes. It is priesthood, absolutely sovereign everywhere, which has led this fine country to ruin. The Catholic religion is, indeed, a beautiful religion; Christianity has done much good, but by their ever retrograde spirit the Catholic clergy have done irreparable damage to the Latin races."

"What result do you anticipate it will have?"

"Grave results. Cuba after the war will be a small republic, of which there are already too many over there, and will be constantly in revolution or bankruptcy; but that is the unimportant side of the affair. It is to be feared the Americans, intoxicated by easy success, will throw haphazard all their energy against the European colonies which are in the neighborhood of their republic. Canada will assuredly be one of their first victims, unless an Anglo-American alliance be established between London and Washington, and that would offer, in my mind, many dangers for the peace of the world. If the United States beat Spain as is probable, they will be obliged, in order to maintain their position, to have recourse to costly armaments, and Europe, which is looking forward to the actual time of disarmament, will be more than ever plunged into endless expense. Territorial armies and navies must now be increased. Where they will stop I don't know. In any case, it seems to me the war has in store some unpleasant surprises."

"Do you think Europe ought to have intervened in this war to save Spain?"

"Alas! Europe resembles Spain from a certain point of view. Anarchy is everywhere dominant. To speak frankly, there is no Europe. The European concert is only a sinister joke. Nothing must be expected from the concert of the powers."

"We are, then, marching direct to ruin and decadence?"

"No; toward the unknown. Who knows what to-morrow has in store for us? We must have confidence in the future."

Neutrality was proclaimed by the Italian government to-day.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

HERALD matter crowded out by the Bishop's report will appear next week.

Letter Department.

LAMONI, Iowa, April 28.

Editors Herald.—In your issue for the 27th inst., page 261, is found a letter from Elder H. O. Smith of Woodbine, Iowa, relating to certain propositions for debate, agreed upon by himself and Elder D. H. Bays. So far as I know, the statements of Bro. Smith's letter are strictly correct. They are in complete agreement with the correspondence which was placed in my hands, and with the information conveyed to me by Elder Smith, at the time Elder Bays accepted the first two propositions referred to. These propositions read as follows:—

"1. Is the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, organized and established through the instrumentality of Joseph Smith and his coworkers, the church of God in fact, and in harmony with the Bible in doctrine and organization?"

"2. Is the church of Christ, (sometimes called Disciple Church,) organized and established through the instrumentality of Alexander Campbell and his coworkers, the Church of God in fact, and in harmony with the Bible in doctrine and organization?"

The above propositions, with two additional ones, were formulated by myself, and submitted to Elder Bays last November, with the results described in Bro. Smith's letter. And as a further confirmation, I quote from Elder H. O. Smith's letter of last November, as follows:—

"MONDAMIN, Iowa, Nov. 20, 1897.

"Bro. Lambert:—I submitted the propositions you gave, to D. H. Bays, last night, and we have just had an interview. He finds fault with the 3d and 4th, and I will send his idea of how they ought to be. I can see no especial objection to either. He, you will observe, takes out the words 'verbal and written,' as found in your proposition No. 4. He accepts the 1st two without change, except he wants the word 'only' inserted between 'the' and 'church,' making it read 'the only church of God in fact,' etc. I would not consent to this unless he would affirm the same for his church. This he refused to do. Then he said he would accept the first two, as they were written by you, provided you refused to insert the word 'only' as I told him then that I would submit the matter to you and abide by your decision."

Ten days later Elder Bays writes to H. O. Smith, dating his letter at "Persia, Iowa, Nov. 30, 1897." In this letter he objects to the wording of the Book of Mormon proposition, No. 3, and writes up what he is willing to affirm as No. 4, as follows:—

"4. The Bible contains all the revelation of God's will to man necessary for the government and salvation of his people in every age of the world."

This proposition we accept just as he wrote it.

On the second page of this same letter, I find the following significant paragraph:—

"As we have agreed upon propositions 1 and 2, I see no reason why we may not name the time at once, and have your man on the ground promptly, and the other propositions can be arranged when we meet."

Concerning proposition No. 4, as given above, and afterwards accepted by us, Elder Bays made the following statement in this same letter of November 30:—

"That is exactly what the Christian world believes, and that I am willing to affirm. What more can you ask?"

On December 6, 1897, at Magnolia, Iowa, Elder Smith replied to the above letter, taking the position, substantially, that Elder Bays must either accept our wording of our own proposition or show wherein it failed to cover the issue. This is the position we occupied all the way through. He showed too, that the additional words for which Elder Bays contended are superfluous, and that too according to his own statement of the claims of the Book of Mormon. However, as a means of compromise, Bro. Smith submitted a substitute for my No. 3, formulated by himself, and indorsed by me as soon as I saw it; but still Elder Bays continued to object to the form of this proposition alone as we had agreed upon the other three.

In a letter addressed to D. H. Bays, and written at "Woodbine, Iowa, December 24, 1897," Elder H. O. Smith makes the following statements:—

"I shall consent to no change of Book of Mormon proposition, as sent to you in my last, as it fully and fairly states the issue, and you ought not to refuse to accept it, especially as you stated to me that you wanted the propositions so that neither could quibble over the wording. We will only affirm what the Book of Mormon claims for itself, and that ground the proposition fully covers."

Next I present the following statement:—

"Woodbine, Iowa, Dec. 30, 1897.

"Bro. Lambert:—

"I have just received a letter from Bays in which he accepts our wording of proposition 3."

Thus ended the controversy about the wording of proposition No. 3. At this juncture the correspondence begins to deal with indorsements rather than with propositions. A few of Elder Bays' letters are not in my possession. I presume they are in the hands of Elder H. O. Smith.

Where, then, I ask, is the evidence that Elder Bays signed the propositions under protest? Is he compelled to hold a debate with the Latter Day Saints? Is he not of age and of a sound mind? Let the protest be shown, if there be one in existence, that we may see its scope and application.

Yours for truth and right,

J. R. LAMBERT.

PASTORAL.

To the Saints of Minnesota, Dear Brethren and Sisters:—As we are now entering upon the duties of another conference year, I hope that all will realize that each one is or should be equally interested in the spread of the gospel.

Brn. E. A. Stedman and Eli Hayer will respond to all legitimate calls in southern Minnesota. Saints living there are requested to give these brethren their support and assist them in securing places in the different towns and country to speak in.

Our reunion is to take place at Wadena on the 18th of June. All are cordially invited to attend. Will further say to the saints in Minnesota and the Dakotas that it will take some means to make this meeting a success, and we as a committee do hope and pray that all will contribute to this fund as requested in a previous notice in Herald and Ensign. All those who want board at private places or other places will please notify the committee at once through its secretary, T. J. Martin, Detroit, Minnesota. Board will only be secured for those who report to the committee as above requested. Please see to it at once so we can give notice through the papers in due time.

My field address is Audubon, Minnesota.

Yours in bonds,

I. N. ROBERTS,

Missionary in Charge of Minnesota.

To My Colaborers and the Saints of the Fremont District:—Having been returned to labor among you for another year or more, I take this opportunity to return my sincere thanks for past favors received, and the manner in which you have sustained me, in administering to my temporal needs, while in weakness I have humbly sought to administer to you the bread of life. God has blessed our labors, and during the last fifteen years many precious souls have been added to our number. And as laborers together with the Master, I think we understand each other much better than ever before, and can now move out to a much better advantage, laboring together in greater unity and more in harmony with the law as given. I am satisfied we understand each other better and are thus prepared to do more good.

Also to my brethren in the Pottawattamie district: I am glad to be associated with you once more in this great work. Now let all take hold with renewed energy and zeal to push the work on to victory.

With Bro. I. M. Smith and myself, also Brn. D. C. Chambers and C. J. Carlson as missionaries in the two districts, with the local force, I think we can accomplish a good work. To this end let us labor unitedly and in strict harmony with the district authorities, and this we can do to the onward march of the work to the glory of God.

Bro. Smith and myself have conferred together in reference to our work. I want the other brethren named to report to me as soon as possible so we can all get to work, as we have no time to waste.

Address all letters to my mission address, Box 659, Shenandoah, Iowa.

Praying for Zion's weal, and for her final triumph, I am,

Yours in the one faith,

HENRY KEMP.

April 27, 1898.

To the Saints of the Northern Illinois and Wisconsin Mission, Greeting:—Another missionary year of toil and labor has passed away and a new epoch in the history of the church has dawned upon us; whether it will be for good or ill, time will have to reveal. Therefore let us prepare for a two years' conflict, as that is the time until the next General Conference. Until that time I wish to place in charge as follows:—

consin. All the general missionaries that labor in that State will report to him in accordance with the rules of reporting.

Bro. J. M. Terry to have charge of the missionary work in the city of Chicago, and in the language of the Lord in 1885, "My servants, the elders, when passing to and from, should labor in the city when time and opportunity permit, that my people there may be strengthened and encouraged. And this should be agreeable to the elders in charge of the branch and the district, who should ever be willing to aid such ministration; and this should be without jealousy on either part." So may it be.

Bro. F. M. Cooper in charge of the Northern Illinois district (except the city of Chicago). All that labor in the said district will please report to Bro. F. M. Cooper, 583 Fulton Street, Chicago, Illinois, in accordance with the rules of reporting.

Bro. J. C. Crabb will be in charge of the Kewanee district and all that portion of northern Illinois not included in that district, and it will be expected that all that labor in that district will report to him.

I expect to travel and labor throughout the mission and assist all as my circumstances and ability will enable me to. After June 1 I will make Sandwich, Illinois, my headquarters, all mail matter sent me there to be in care of I. L. Rogers. My home address is Temple, Lake County, Ohio.

In conclusion, let me say to all saints and the lovers of truth, and to all the local officers of the mission, Arise and shake off the coals from your garments and prepare for the battle, for "we have all for life enlisted," and the Captain is calling for volunteers, and the warfare is with the world. No mine can be arranged that can blow up the ship from without, but the danger is from internal eruption, by the officers and members thinking they can run the ship by human wisdom. The history of the past should teach us what the results will be when the charts (the books) are not heeded, and the compass (the Holy Spirit) is not followed; failure and disappointment must be the result. A word to the wise should be sufficient. Let the watchword be, On, on to victory! is the advice and desire of Your fellow laborer,

J. H. LAKE.

To the Ministry and Saints of the Rocky Mountain Mission; Greeting:—In view of the possibility of change to be made it is not felt to be advisable to appoint any in charge of "fields of labor." The ministry will therefore report direct to me every three months— or July, October, January, and March 1—the number of sermons, baptisms, ordinations, marriages, and new openings. Don't fail to keep an itemized account under these five headings. Your adherence to this and promptness in reporting will permit me to do likewise to the First Presidency, and the saints and readers of the Herald will become acquainted with our labor and a better unity will be had.

Brn. A. B. Moore and Gomer Reese will labor in Montana, E. A. Davis and S. D. Condit in Idaho, Robert Parker and D. W. Wight in Utah, commencing at Provo in tent work; R. J. Anthony in southern Utah, especially among the scattered saints, some of whom have not been visited in years. While we have lost some of our ablest men for that mission, those gained are young and able men and to the saints with whom the missionaries shall labor I appeal for your hearty coöperation; that as "laborers together, for good," we may merit divine assistance in every good word and work.

I expect to visit as many places as will be possible under the exigencies that may arise, and ask that I may be notified as to places where and the time when labor is to be most likely successful. We are hopeful that a tent will be purchased for Idaho, and all desiring tent service are requested to let me hear. Letters will reach me at Lamoni until further notice, as I do not expect to reach my field until in June on account of a prospective debate. In writing me it will not come amiss if you drop in a small fee for the Idaho tent. In case of any discussion likely to arise write me before final arrangements are made.

In bonds,

J. W. WIGHT.

LAMONI, Iowa, April 29, 1898.

TENT FUND APPEAL.

As a few of the Idaho saints have raised about half enough for the purchase of a tent for that State, and on account of the special need of one that the people of that very peculiar mission may the more readily and easily be reached, I take this method of once more asking the saints and friends throughout the world to respond with your nickel, dime, or dollar,—or even more,—that we may be supplied in that direction. I fully realize the closeness of the times and the many financial calls being made upon you, but sacrifice under such conditions will be more fully appreciated and God will the more readily bless. The tent is no longer a venture, but our success in Utah last summer—and you will remember we did not get it till July—was so gratifying that we are very anxious now for Idaho to benefit in this way. You will at once see that our anxiety is for the good of the work, as no financial benefits accrue to anyone.

Your ample response last year makes me hopeful now, but I realize that to make this appeal the financial success it merits will mean for you to send your mite to me at Lamoni, Iowa, just as soon as possible after reading this, and all who read it. Who will be the first? For the sake of five cents or a dime will anyone be a means of permitting the Utah church to continue to laugh at our futility to reach the people? Surely never.

For right,

J. W. WIGHT.

CONFERENCE NOTICES.

Galland's Grove district conference will convene at the saints' chapel, Deloit, Iowa, June 4, 1898, at ten a. m., holding over Sunday. A report is desired from each and every branch, and from every minister laboring within the district, both General Conference appointees and local ministers. A cordial invitation is extended to all, and everybody will be made welcome.

CHAS. E. BUTTERWORTH,
JAMES M. BAKER,

Presidents.

Conference of the Southern Wisconsin district will convene with the East Delavan branch at East Delavan, Wisconsin, June 4 and 5, 1898. We expect Bro. J. H. Lake to be present, and also others of the ministry. So, dear saints, try and be present and do all you can to make the meetings profitable to all. Send branch and official reports to W. A. McDowell, East Delavan, Wisconsin.

W. A. MCDOWELL, Pres.

DISTRICT PRESIDENT'S NOTICE.

To the saints in the Northern District of California, Greeting:—Having been appointed president of this district, I am anxious to do what I can for the furtherance of the work. Bro. James Parr is joined with me in the work, so both of us will answer calls to the best of our abilities and opportunities. And as the Bishop's agent I would ask that the saints send in their tithes and offerings so the needy may be cared for and the work helped on. Let us all labor together with God, for the salvation of man.

In bonds,

C. A. PARKIN.

DIED.

PEARSON.—At St. Joseph, Missouri, March 20, 1898, Sr. Selena Pearson, aged 67 years and 7 days. Six children mourn her departure, her husband and four children having passed to the other shore. She united with the church in 1893. The branch will miss her, for she was always on hand at the time and place of worship, and her voice was heard in prayer or testimony. She has left a good record. Always anxious to do good, her reward will be that of the tried, true, and faithful. Her remains were laid to rest in Mount Mora cemetery. Brief services were held, in charge of Elder William Lewis, at which the beautiful words in Revelation 14:13 and 1 Corinthians 15:12-28 were read.

Burlington Route
THE season of this health resort opens May 15. The Evans Hotel at Hot Springs, South Dakota, will be open for business on May 15, with Mr. Harry Clark as manager. The hotel has been thoroughly renovated since last season, and the plunge baths have all been refitted.

The Hot Springs have gained a great reputation for remarkable cures of acute rheumatism, neuralgic troubles, indigestion, and other ailments, and many people visit them annually from Iowa, the excellent hotel accommodations making it a very desirable health and pleasure resort. The Burlington Railroad, the direct line to the springs, runs a through service of Pullman cars and coaches, which makes the resort easily reached from here. 16 4

THE KEOKUK ROUTE.

K. & W. and D. M. & K. C. Railways.

The D. M. & K. C. Ry from Des Moines to Cainsville has been rebuilt and that portion south of Van Wert will be standard gauge on or before November 1, 1897.

There is no road in Southern Iowa or Northern Missouri which has more good locations for business men than on the line of the Keokuk Route. More stock of all kinds has been shipped over this line than any road of equal mileage in Iowa or Missouri. (See Missouri Surplus Map at our stations.) The freight and passenger service is not equalled by any road in the state, except the Missouri River trunk lines, with each of which we have union stations and direct connections.

Persons seeking farms can find property at tempting prices; men seeking business locations can find towns with ample territory and settlers to warrant good business. Additional passenger service will soon be given which will add to the growth of the towns.

The towns between Des Moines and Cainsville are particularly well located for business. Look them up. Write to the undersigned for additional information. See folder for map and lands.

TO SUCCEED AS AN ORATOR.

THINGS THAT ARE NECESSARY FOR THE PUBLIC SPEAKER.

COLONEL ROBERT G. INGERSOLL was asked the other evening to talk on the best way to succeed as an orator. The conversation was started by the question, “What advice would you give to a young man who is ambitious to become a successful public speaker or orator?”

“In the first place,” said Colonel Ingersoll, “I would advise him to have something that the people would be glad to hear. This is the important thing. Back of the art of speaking must be the power to think. Without thoughts words are empty purses. Most people imagine that almost any words uttered in a loud voice and accompanied by appropriate gestures constitute an oration. I would advise a young man to study his subject, to find out what others had thought, to look at it from all sides. Then I would tell him to write out his thoughts or to arrange them in his mind, so that he would know exactly what he was going to say. Waste no time on the how until you are satisfied with the what. After you know what you are to say, then you can think about tone, emphasis, and gesture; but if you really understand what you say, emphasis, tone, and gesture will take care of themselves. All these should come from the inside. They should be in perfect harmony with the feelings. Voice and gesture should be governed by the emotions. They should unconsciously be in perfect agreement with the sentiments. The orator should avoid any reference to himself.

“The great column of his argument should be unbroken. He can adorn it with vines and flowers, but they should not be in such profusion as to hide the column. He should give variety of episode by illustrations, but they should be used only for the purpose of adding strength to the argument. The man who wishes to become an orator should study language. He should know the deeper meaning of words. He should understand the vigor and velocity of verbs and the color of adjectives. He should know how to sketch a scene, to paint a picture, to give life and action. He should be a poet and a dramatist, a painter and an actor. He should cultivate his imagination. He should become familiar with the great poetry and fiction, with splendid and heroic deeds. He should be a student of Shakespeare. He should read and devour the great plays. From Shakespeare he could learn the art of expression, of compression, and all the secrets of the head and heart.

“The great orator is full of variety—of surprises. Like a juggler, he keeps the colored ball in the air. He expresses himself in picture. His speech is a panorama. By continued change he holds the attention. The interest does not flag. He does not allow himself to be anticipated. He is always in advance. He does not repeat himself. A picture is shown but once. So, an orator should avoid the commonplace. There should be no stuffing, no filling. He should put no cotton with the silk, no common metals with his gold. He should remember that ‘gilded dust is not as good as dusted gold.’ The great orator is honest, sincere. He does not pretend. His brain and heart go together. Every drop of his blood is convinced. Nothing is forced. He knows exactly what he wishes to do—knows when he has finished it, and stops.

“Only a great orator knows when and how to close. Most speakers go on after they are through. They are satisfied only with a lame and impotent conclusion. Most speakers lack variety. They travel a straight and dusty road. The great orator is full of episode. He convinces and charms by indirection. He leaves the road, visits the fields, wanders in the woods, listens to the murmurs of springs, the songs of birds. He gathers flowers, scales the crags, and comes back to the highway refreshed, invigorated. He does not move in a straight line. He wanders and winds like a stream.

“Of course, no one can tell a man what to do to become an orator. The great orator has the strange something known as magnetism. He must have a flexible, musical voice, capable of expressing the pathetic, the humorous, the heroic. His body must move in unison with his thought. He must be a reasoner, a logician. He must have a keen sense of humor—of the laughable. He must have wit, sharp and quick. He must have sympathy. His smiles should be the neighbors of his tears. He must have imagination. He should give eagles to the air, and painted moths should flutter in the sunlight.

“While I cannot tell a man what to do to become an orator, I can tell him a few things not to do. There should be no introduction to an oration. The orator should commence with his subject. There should be no prelude, no flourish, no apology, no explanation. He should say nothing about himself. Like a sculptor, he stands by his block of stone. Every stroke is for a purpose. As he works the form begins to appear. When the statue is finished the workman stops. Nothing is more difficult than a perfect close. Few poems, few pieces of music, few novels, end well. A good story, a great speech, a perfect poem, should end just at the proper point. The bud, the blossom, the fruit. No delay. A great speech is a crystallization in its logic, an efflorescence in its poetry.

"I have not heard many speeches. Most of the great speakers of the country were before my time. I heard Beecher, and he was an orator. He had imagination, humor, and intensity. His brain was fertile as the valleys of the tropics. He was too broad, too philosophical, too poetical for the pulpit. Now and then he broke the fetters of his creed, escaped from his orthodox prison, and became sublime.

"Theodore Parker was an orator. He preached great sermons. His sermons on 'Old Age' and 'Webster' and his address on 'Liberty' were filled with great thoughts, marvelously expressed. When he dealt with human events, with realities, with things he knew, he was superb. When he spoke of freedom, of duty, of living to the ideal, of mental integrity, he seemed inspired.

"Webster I never heard. He had great qualities, force, dignity, clearness, grandeur; but after all he worshiped the past. He kept his back to the sunrise. There was no dawn in his brain. He was not creative. He had no spirit of prophecy. He lighted no torch. He was not true to his ideal. He talked sometimes as though his head was among the stars, but he stood in the gutter. In the name of religion he tried to break the will of Stephen Girard—to destroy the greatest charity in all the world; and in the name of the same religion he defended the fugitive slave law. His purpose was the same in both cases. He wanted office. Yet he uttered a few very great paragraphs, rich with thought, perfectly expressed.

"Clay I never heard, but he must have had a commanding presence, a chivalric bearing, a heroic voice. He cared little for the past. He was a natural leader, a wonderful talker—forcible, persuasive, convincing. He was not a poet, nor a master of metaphor, but he was practical. He kept in view the end to be accomplished. He was the opposite of Webster. Clay was the morning, Webster the evening. Clay had large views, a wide horizon. He was ample, vigorous, and a little tyrannical.

"Benton was thoroughly commonplace. He never uttered an inspired word. He was an intense egotist.

No subject was great enough to make him forget himself. Calhoun was a political Calvinist—narrow, logical, dogmatic. He was not an orator. He delivered essays, not orations. I think it was in 1851 that Kossuth visited this country. He was an orator. There was no man, at that time, under our flag, who could speak English as well as he. In the first speech I read of Kossuth's was this: 'Russia is the rock against which the sigh for freedom breaks.' In this you see the poet, the painter, the orator.

"S. S. Prentiss was an orator, but with the recklessness of a gamester, he threw his life away. He said profound and beautiful things, but he lacked application. He was uneven, disproportioned—saying ordinary things on great occasions, and now and then, without the slightest provocation, uttering the sublimest and most beautiful thoughts.

"In my judgment Corwin was the greatest orator of them all. He had more arrows in his quiver. He had genius. He was full of humor, pathos, wit, and logic. He was an actor. His body talked. His meaning was in his eyes and lips. Governor O. P. Morton of Indiana had the greatest power of statement of any man I ever heard. All the argument was in his statement. The facts were perfectly grouped. The conclusion was a necessity.

"The best political speech I ever heard was made by Governor Richard J. Oglesby of Illinois. It had every element of greatness, reason, humor, wit, pathos, imagination, and perfect naturalness. That was in the grand years, long ago. Lincoln had reason, wonderful humor and wit; but his presence was not good. His voice was poor, his gestures awkward—but his thought were profound. His speech at Gettysburg is one of the masterpieces of the world. The word 'here' is used four or five times too often. Leave the 'heres' out and the speech is perfect.

"Of course, I have heard a great many talkers, but orators are few and far between. They are produced by victorious nations—born in the midst of great events, of marvelous achievements. They utter the thoughts, the aspirations of their age. They clothe the children of the people in the gorgeous robes of genius. They interpret the dreams. With the poets, they prophecy. They fill the future with heroic forms, with lofty deeds. They keep their faces toward the dawn—toward the ever-coming day."

ADAM, EVE, AND THE APPLES.

How many apples did Adam and Eve eat? Some say Eve 8 and Adam 2—total of 10 only. Now, we figure the thing out far differently. Eve 8 and Adam 8 also—a total of 16.

And yet the above figures are entirely wrong. If Eve 8 and Adam 82, certainly the total would be 90. Scientific men, however, on the strength of the theory that antediluvians were a race of giants, reason something like this: Eve 81 and Adam 82—total, 163.

Wrong again. What could be clearer than if Eve 81 and Adam 812, the total was 893.

If Eve 811st and Adam 812, would not the total be 1,623?

I believe the following to be a fair solution: Eve 814 Adam, Adam 8124 Eve—total, 8,938.

Still another calculation is as follows: If Eve 814 Adam, Adam 81242 oblige Eve—total, 82,056. We think this, however, not a sufficient quantity. For, though we admit that Eve 814 Adam, Adam if he 8081242 keep Eve company—total, 8,082,056.

All wrong. Eve when she 81812 many, and probably she felt sorry for it, but her companion, in order to relieve her grief, 812. Therefore, when Adam 81814240fy Eve's depressed spirits. Hence, both ate 81,896,864 apples.—Boston Journal.

The month of April, 1898, has taken its place in American history by the side of the memorable Aprils of '61 and '65. April indeed has been an eventful month, this year, and nowhere have its dramatic incidents been more ably set forth than in the editorial departments of the American Monthly Review of Reviews for May. The diplomatic, financial, political, and military phases of the Cuban situation are exhaustively reviewed in the illustrated "Progress of the World" and "Record of Current Events" down to the outbreak of hostilities between the United States and Spain, while "The War Question in Cartoons" and "Leading Articles of the Month" throw important side-lights on the discussion.

LAMONI, IOWA, MAY 11, 1898.

ARCHBISHOP IRELAND ON AMERICA.

AT a late visit to Notre Dame University, Archbishop Ireland, of the Catholic Church, made an address to the faculty and students, from which we make the following extracts:—

I have spoken two words—two glorious words—"Catholic America." The word Catholic tells of the life of the soul, tells of the God above us, and of the Redeemer linking us to God. The word Catholic tells of the society built by Christ himself, tells of the hope of the other life, tells of the noblest, best, and purest aspirations of the present life. It tells of all that is great, beautiful, and civilizing during eighteen centuries. It is a word at the sound of which hearts must throb and pledges must issue forth from the soul for loyalty to the duties and inspirations coming from that word Catholic America. All people love their country, as it is their duty to do; but the love for one's country must be the stronger and the more fervent in proportion as that country has claims upon her children; and what country has such claims upon the allegiance of its sons as America? The word America sums up the highest gifts of civilization; it sums up the sweetest gifts of providence to human society—civil and political liberty without stain.

It is the duty of Americans who love their country; it is in a special manner the duty of Catholics to love their country, for in addition to all the reasons which others have for patriotism, we Catholics have the further reason that loyalty to country is a duty imposed upon our Christian hearts by our Christian religion. And it is well that we make known elsewhere and at every time and without ostentation, by rational deed and rational word, our faith and our loyalty.

In the greeting addressed to me mention was made of the future. It is well that we look to the future. It is well, particularly for young men with their ardent imagination, their courageous hearts, to speak of the future, to look forward to it, and to bound forward to it. No man ever accomplished anything who did not look into the future and hope in the future. No people ever become great who do not look to the future. The common man from whom nothing great can come is always satisfied with the present day and the present hour; the builders of nations, the apostles of religion, always look beyond the present. They see the beauties of possible victory and they are entranced at the sight. A new life comes to them, great deeds are accomplished. You, my friends, must be ambitious of doing great things. There is a true, a noble and God-commanded ambition that should not be absent from the soul of the Christian and the patriotic American; it is the ambition of serving for God's sake humanity and country. It is the ambition to bring out into salutary action the potencies of the soul, all the faculties which God has implanted in our nature. You must look forward to the future, gentlemen, and resolve, each one of you, to play well his part.

There is a great future for America. How much it has already accomplished for the human race, how much more will it accomplish if it continues in its traditions, loving national liberty, defending it against all perils, protecting it from apathy, from excess of ardor and building up a noble, perfected humanity! As you look to the future be determined to do all you can for America; to do all you can to perpetuate her liberty and to elevate and improve the social condition of her people. Look up to the starry banner and resolve that you will ever be ready in word and act, even at the sacrifice of life, to guard that banner from any stain; aye, to add, as years go by, to its glory, till all the peoples of the earth, however otherwise they may be prejudiced against it, seeing it elevated on high, must of necessity proclaim that it symbolizes what is best in human civilization!

Further along in this address the Archbishop has this to say of the laymen of the Catholic Church. It is significant; and we think instructive:—

I say to you in all frankness that so far our Catholic laymen in America have not attained to the high positions which it seems to me belong to them. There are reasons, and I need not lose time explaining them; I speak the fact. But I say there is no reason why the future Catholic laity should not do their full duty and receive a full reward for their labor. To-day where are the Catholic laity in the halls of congress? They can be counted on the fingers of the two hands. Where are the Catholic laity in high government positions? Few are there. In our strange conditions we wonder when one or two are discovered there.

Among the writers of America whose words are welcomed by the millions of readers are few Catholics. Let us write down one hundred names of the great men of America. I am talking now of power, not of moral goodness. Let us write down the names of one hundred men who have power in America. There are few Catholics. There are causes for all this; but the fact is unfortunate, and the Catholic Church will not have had its full and true development in America until its friends are in the highest walks of life. Why should Catholics not be there? Have they no ambition for great things as well as others? Have they not opportunities for education? Is it because prejudice keeps them down? They sometimes say that prejudice keeps them down, and they content themselves with that. Prejudice may have done this in the past; it does so no longer; and anyhow, power can rise above and crush out prejudice. Now I think this wanting in our Catholic young men of to-day; they are not sufficiently ambitious. They must propose to themselves great things. They must be made of that stern stuff which will be dismayed by no obstacles. They must hold out to themselves that they are working for God and for church, and that their own elevation is the elevation of the church.

It may be well for us of the church—which to us means more than the Catholic Church can mean—to take the suggestion made by this stirring advocate of the Catholic faith to the rising members of his flock, into serious consideration, and continue to ask ourselves, Are we represented in the places where education, study, research, and energetic push can put us? If not, is it because there is no ambition among our rising—coming—men? Is it because of the prejudices of the past? Or, is it the outcome of a too hesitating policy and lack of effort upon the part of those to whom opportunity comes to lay hold upon the facilities for advancement open to us? Surely the Master is willing, and has promised much to the faithful and energetic who occupy till he comes.

SUNDRY ITEMS.

BRO. JAMES CAFFALL, of the Twelve, requests us to state the following:—

Please say to the saints at Atchison, Kansas, that their invitation to visit them on my way homeward from conference was duly appreciated and would have been complied with but for the fact that I was not equal to the task.

A brother writing to us on other matters, adds:—

I often wonder why there are so frequent arrivals and departures of members of the ministerial forces at and from Lamoni. This may savor of an unbecoming inquisitiveness; I know this is a trait in human character, but I think it should be kept in proper limits; if it is not, trouble will ensue.

Of this we note, that we suppose such frequent coming to and going from Lamoni, on the part of the ministry is attributable to two causes; one, the fact that quite a number of the force have their homes at Lamoni, and visit that place to see home and home treasures; the other, the fact that headquarters is located there, and it is needful for some of the force to come into touch with the leading spirits of the work at the center of labor, to see whether they are running without tidings, to ascertain if they are still acceptable as coworkers, to give the authorities advices of things in their fields, to ask for and receive advice regarding their own work, and sometimes to rate the church officials for apparent or real shortcomings, personal negligence of duty; and a host of other things, including a personal curiosity very strong whether exactly proper or not.

It is often productive of good results to step out of the ranks now and again to greet a comrade and bid him good speed; so we accept the coming and the going as a matter incidental, and cannot find it in the heart to reprove, if once in a while a soldier comes who leaves his field when he might be actively preaching the word while absent. And it may be that the curiosity referred to by our brother which causes some to visit Lamoni, may not be commendable and may result in trouble somewhere along the line, and ought to be guardedly repressed by them who indulge therein.

FAR-OFF AUSTRALIA.

WE have received at the Herald Office from Bro. W. H. Broadway, of New Castle, Australia, a photographic picture of Brn. Butterworth, Kaler, and Wells, leading elders in charge of the work in far-off lands; and a group of ten of the district force, all excellent pictures. The names accompanying the district group, as published in the Town and Country Journal, heretofore received; and hence we are able to single out the different faces to study them; and taking them as a whole the group represents ability, fidelity, and courage, all qualities necessary to pushing the cause to success.

We are pleased to acknowledge the receipt of these photos, and to greet the coworkers, as if in person, with a fellow-soldier's, "Hail brothers! How goes the battle?"

The following letter accompanied the photos:—

Hamilton West, NEWCASTLE,
N. S. W., March 11.

Joseph Smith; Dear Brother:—I dare say it will be quite a surprise to you to receive a letter from far-off Australia. The Hamilton branch wish to pay their respects to you by presenting you with a photograph of the three missionaries, Brethren Butterworth, Kaler, and Wells; also group of officers of the church in Sydney district. They were taken at our district conference last December. Those on the group are only a portion of the officers in this district, the others not being in time to have theirs taken. We are also sending with the photos, a copy of the Town and Country Journal, (a weekly paper published in Sydney,) with a report in of conference; also a little about the church, as you will read, by Bro. G. R. Wells. The conference passed off splendidly, being the best ever held by us in New South Wales, the Spirit of the Lord being manifested in prophecy and tongues, with the interpretation. We were sorry when it was over, the unity of mind and love among the saints and friends present making it so enjoyable, all having come with the intention of receiving a blessing. Since conference we have had a few trials and sorrows to bear, losing two of our number in Brn. John J. Broadway and William Heslop, the first being my brother and the latter my cousin. They were two of the best we had in our branch, always alive to the work, although young in years, fourteen and seventeen years respectively; they while on earth lived such lives that when called away strangers to the faith came from different parts to pay their last respects. Whenever I think of them, this passage of scripture always comes into my mind: "Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth."

Bro. Kaler is in Sydney at present, having a discussion with Mr. Bell, a Christadelphian. Some reverend gentleman intends next Sunday to expose Reorganized Mormonism and Christadelphianism, he having attended part of the discussion. The same gentleman (Mr. Green) discussed with Bro. J. W. Wight, of the Twelve, when out here in Australia.

The work here is progressing as well as can be expected. Three were baptized a little over a week ago here in Newcastle. Trade is very slack here at present, the coal mines not working as well as they should. The fact of the matter is that there are too many coal mines; it would be better if they joined hands, as too many competitors run down the price of coal, and in consequence the miners' wages have got to come down too. One thing, the saints here have never wanted for anything, which is a great blessing.

I hope conference in America will be a great success spiritually.

I am forwarding the photos and paper by same mail as this. I am certain you will appreciate them as a token of our respect and love for you. Our prayers here are that the Lord will bless you, and ever keep us in the narrow way, so that when he comes we may all meet each other.

Your brother in the gospel,
W. H. BROADWAY,
For the Hamilton Branch Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

A NEW IDEA.

SR. NELLIE HAWLEY MARTIN, of Perry, Iowa, has about concluded to take up a role of gospel work; here is her idea:—

I now have such a wide field in which to work, that I am about to give up my profession and devote my time and money to the church. I wish to tell you of a plan I have discovered that works as magic. I buy vellum paper in large sheets, cut out covers for a booklet, place inside of this some of our pamphlet church work; I then paint flowers on the outside and tie the booklet with a dainty cream ribbon. I then tell my friends, "Now if you will read and study this I will present it to you." To make these, requires much time, but it is so effectual. So much prejudice has been removed here that it is now quite a pleasure to live.

We certainly wish Sr. Nellie the best of success. And why may not a sister do such a work for the cause? Sr. Nellie has been quite a help already to the elders who have essayed to do work at Perry.

By late advices we learn that our veteran brother, H. J. Hudson, of Columbus, Nebraska, has been lately elected Police Judge of that city. He has served in the capacity before, and gave great satisfaction to the citizens; and now, although nearly seventy-six years of age, he is again invested with the judicial ermine, to serve his fellow men in an office of trust and responsibility. It is well, that integrity and moral uprightness meet with their just reward in the appointment of Judge Hudson. May his life be like that of the sturdy oak.

CHURCH PUBLICATIONS.

THE Herald Office has sold five hundred (500) copies of the Book of Mormon since January 1, 1898, and is now printing another edition.

Eight thousand (8,000) copies of the Saints' Hymnal are now in use, and one thousand (1,000) remain printed and rapidly going into circulation.

The demand for church publications is thus indexed to our readers.

These books are bound to sell, otherwise they would not have been bound.

We still remain short of the three thousand new subscribers asked for the HERALD some time ago. We live in hope and hope to see them soon. All workers are requested to do what they can to enlarge the HERALD list. Please do not forget the SAINTS' HERALD.

Our special premium offer of a brand new "Self-Pronouncing Sunday School Teachers' Bible" is still open to all:—

For one (1) new subscriber to the HERALD at $1.50 and $1.25 in cash additional we will send the HERALD for one year to any address and a copy of the Bible to the remitter.

Or, anyone sending ten (10) new subscribers for the HERALD at $1.50 each, cash accompanying orders, will receive a copy of the Bible.

Some have sent in part of the required number. We hope to hear from them with completed lists.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

WORD from Bro. J. F. Burton, who during the conference was reported as ill, announces his recovery. He wrote from Papeete, Tahiti, about March 20:—

I am just getting up from a spell of sickness—neuralgia of the stomach. Leave next week for our conference up to the Paumotus. Am quite weak yet, but gaining. Am lonely since Bro. and Sr. Case left.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

LAMONI has added a broom factory to the list of her industrial plants. The list is not large—not what it ought to be by any means—but we are glad to chronicle an additional plant that supplies labor for some of our population. Bro. A. M. Newberry is the proprietor, Bro. J. D. Bennett foreman. The number of hands employed is not large, but work turned out is of such a grade as to insure good demand for its broom products. The work is pronounced excellent by those competent to pass upon it. Success to the new enterprise. We hope for others to follow in our young city. We need more manufactories, large and small.

Bro. Joseph Luff, of Independence, attended the meetings of the Board of Publication from the 3d to the 5th inst., returning home on the 5th.

Bro. James Bradley, residing near Anamosa, Iowa, returned home after a visit to relatives and friends at headquarters. Bro. Bradley was born in March, 1805, and is hale, hearty, and bright in his ninety-fourth year.

Sr. Anna Nielsen, of Nebraska City, Nebraska, writes of her experiences and impressions at conference. Most of the general matter mentioned has already appeared in our conference report, hence we do not repeat it. Come again, Sr. N.

During an after-conference visit to Lamoni, Elder Jacob Reese, of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, called at the Saints' Home and was so favorably impressed with its general arrangement and furnishings that seeing some rooms unfurnished he forwarded thirty dollars to Bro. Criley with instructions to fit up a large bedroom therewith. This has been done and the room is now complete with matting on the floor, a new dresser, stand, chairs, bed and bedding, pictures, etc.; all in neat, tasty, and general good form. They who occupy will be glad because of Bro. Reese's visit and generosity.

Our cover article from Colonel Ingersoll contains some excellent points for orators and public speakers in general. The Colonel says some good things and we give him due credit for them. His criticism on Lincoln's masterly Gettysburg oration may be based upon proper ground as to some minor points of literary style, but it has not prevented the newspaper man from remarking that both Moses and Lincoln seem quite likely to stand the Colonel's criticisms. Moses and his writings have survived, and there is no disposition to detract from the worth and fame of the great emancipator of modern times. The inspiration and grace of God made both great and gave them and their services to humanity. To him is the honor due, to them due credit for their lives and work.

Sr. D. Kelley, Bagdad, Florida, writes expressing her love for the cause. Although isolated from saints and among the world, she holds firmly to the faith, trusting in the Master for grace to endure unto eternal life.

Bro. H. E. Brown, of St. Helena,

Napa County, California, has been trying to get the faith before his neighbors, but with considerable opposition to meet. The Adventists were to hold their camp meeting at that point in June next. He asks if authorities in charge could follow with a series of meetings.

A list of one dozen chairs, six rockers among the number, arrived at the Saints' Home this week, the gift of Beebe & Runyan Furniture Company, of Omaha, Nebraska. A good remembrance.

"A man may be a good talker and still have an impediment in his thoughts."

Brn. J. R. Lambert and J. W. Wight, of Lamoni, left home on the 8th inst. for Mondamin, Iowa, to be present at the Williams-Bays debate, which opened on the 9th inst. at that point.

Brethren of the missionary force at Lamoni have departed one by one for their fields of labor, and local forces have also begun the regular campaign work of the new year, hence the battle is on again with renewed energy.

"O foolish soul! why should you now assail
Your long-time creed, because weak mortals fail?
If you have sought a just and righteous man,
Fulfilling well the Infinite's great plan,
And, searching earnestly, have failed to see one,
Despair not,—vindicate your creed and be one."

DAUGHTERS OF ZION.

BELOW we give Sr. Walker's letter:—

To the Advisory Committee of the Daughters of Zion, Greeting; Dear Sisters:—In response to your request for a paper treating upon "The origin of the Daughters of Zion," I shall endeavor very briefly to outline its origin and the work contemplated by it.

In the word of God we are told that in the beginning when the earth was without form and void; and darkness was upon the face of the deep, the Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters, and God said, "Let there be light, and there was light." It was thus the Spirit of God moved upon the hearts of many who were earnestly working for the upbuilding and redemption of Zion, and because of this our faith is firm that in his own due time the Lord will say, "Let there be light," and at his command light will be given.

The grand and closing work of creation, was the instituting of the family relation, and its perfecting the creation of woman. It is woman in her relation of wife, mother, and sister that the society we represent is intended to benefit, and through her "all mankind."

God ceased from the work of creation upon our earth when he had created man male and female, and contemplating his work he pronounced it good—very good, and gave to man commandment to multiply and people the earth. He was also to have dominion over all the creations which had here preceded him. Can the human mind grasp or by the power of thought contemplate a more responsible position than man was placed in?

Parenthood was made obligatory upon him by the Creator. It is not our purpose at this time to ask why this was so, but simply to accept it as a fact which cannot be gainsaid, and through obedience to this law man became the medium of perpetuating the work of the Creator.

But God pronounced his work good, and from this we can but infer that it was done in wisdom and with a perfect knowledge and understanding of all the laws governing it, even if we fail to take into account the perfection of God. At last, after long, long centuries of darkness and dense ignorance, the world is awaking to a knowledge of the grave mistakes and grosser sins of the past, committed by parents against their children, both before and after birth, and with awed and penitent hearts many are striving to forsake the ways of error and walk according to the law which God has given—proof of which giving is established by the fact that few parents can contemplate their children and truthfully say of them as God said of his work, "It is good," for the sour grapes of which the parents have eaten have left traces in the offspring which ought not to have been there.

In times past, when a special work was contemplated by the Lord to be intrusted to the hand of man, the mother of that man was considered, hence we often find such mothers being instructed by angels. In our time, however, it is not an individual case only. A people are to be prepared to meet the Lord at his coming, hence the Spirit of God is moving upon the great deep of humanity's heart, and if we are in a peculiar sense the people of God, is it more than we ought rightfully to expect that his Spirit would move upon us in a peculiar degree, causing us to contemplate the solemn responsibility resting upon all who by the covenant of marriage have placed themselves in a position to assume the responsibility of parenthood? To us it seems both natural and reasonable to expect this, and if we are at all prepared to answer your question, we would say the Daughters of Zion movement had its origin right here: The Spirit moving upon the hearts of a few earnest workers, who felt deeply the need of the work contemplated, to organize themselves for the purpose of more effectually accomplishing that work.

THE WORK CONTEMPLATED.

This is fully set forth in our Constitution and By-Laws. First, "We unite for mutual benefit and to increase love for the sanctuary of home; to study to educate our children in the principles of the gospel, to prepare them to resist the evils of the world, and to become active agents for good."

Is there a power more potent, for either good or evil, than home influence? If all the homes of our fair land were pure, there would be little left for church or society to do by way of reformation. How important, then, in view of this fact, it becomes, that we seek diligently to do our work here faithfully, wisely, and well, and how helpful it has often been found by many a mother, old as well as young, to counsel with other mothers as to the best means of making home attractive to the children and winning them to love and reverence the good and beautiful. Again, how grand a result it is, and how the heart of every true mother must swell with gratitude to God when her children go out into the world not only prepared to resist temptation, but also prepared to extend a helping hand to the tempted ones of earth.

The second object is, "To promote social purity and teach the sisters the great responsibility of motherhood, that they may be mothers indeed, guarding the interests not only of their own children, but of the children of others."

It is an awful thing to witness a young life crushed and blasted by the power of sin, before it even realized the blessedness of its own God-given heritage of purity and innocence. How many a mother's heart would faint and sicken with terrible remorse could they hear the cry which in after years will come from the agonized soul of their boy or girl, "O why did not my mother warn me of this awful gulf before my feet led me to its brink!" It is then when too late the betrayed, the ruined one realizes the blessedness of the purity they have lost. Mothers by counseling together may aid each other, and while saving their own, be helpful in saving others.

The third object is, "To extend a helping hand to erring ones and to do all in our power to win them to paths of righteousness."

Speak gently to the erring one;
You know not all the power
With which the dark temptation came,
In some unguarded hour.

And lastly, we are "To be ready to sustain every good work, that our influence may assist in the establishment of Zion, the pure in heart."

The above are the principles we are pledged to sustain and advocate, and if there be a lack of good in our organization, it arises not from the character of the work contemplated, but from our failure to do that work.

If we might be permitted to make one or two suggestions for the consideration of the society, we would say that so far as our experience goes, the first great need is that it should (either through its Advisory Committee or through the appointment of a committee) select some one or more persons, thoroughly competent, to either prepare or compile a work treating upon "Motherhood" in all its various physical, mental, and spiritual relations, for the use and instruction of young mothers. Many helpful works of this kind have been published and are on sale, but the majority of young mothers do not know where such works can be obtained. If found inexpedient to either prepare or compile such a work, might it not be advisable to appoint a committee for the purpose of carefully examining the best of such publications and selecting therefrom one or more which in their judgment should seem best suited to our needs and which the society could recommend to its members.

In conclusion permit me to say that the time is ripe for this movement. Last year at our nation's capital was held the first National Congress of Mothers. It was from its very inception a grand success. This present year, on May 2, the second congress will convene, and already the hearts of mothers throughout our land are beating with quickening throbs as they look forward to its assembling and the results to be achieved therefrom. If we could send one or more delegates to this congress, what a quickening impulse might be returned to us. The principles of the congress are embodied in quotations, "The child is the hope of the race." "To cure is the voice of the past; to prevent, the Divine whisper of to-day." "The National Congress of Mothers, irrespective of creed, color, or condition, stands for all parenthood, childhood, homehood. Its platform is the universe; its organization the human race." God grant to it and to our own organization the guiding of his Holy Spirit, and zeal which shall never abate until the battle is won.

Faithfully yours,
M. WALKER.

HOLLISTER, California.

Dear Sisters:—I have thought for a long time that I would write and ask the prayers of the Prayer Union in my behalf. I have been afflicted for several years with rheumatism, but for the last three years I have been getting worse, and now I cannot dress or undress myself without help, and I am in pain every hour of my life, and for the last month I have not been able to do any sewing, which I have always tried to do before, although my hands and feet are badly drawn out of shape, and at times the pain is almost more than I can bear.

I have been promised through the gift of tongues that if I was faithful and patient I should be healed. I received this promise in our Prayer Union when there were only three sisters present, two sisters beside myself, Sr. Stone giving the tongue and the interpretation. Again on our last sacrament Sunday through the gift of prophecy in administration, I was promised that if I would keep the Word of Wisdom and be patient and faithful I should be healed. Our meeting was one long to be remembered, for the Spirit was with us in power.

Now, dear sisters, I ask you to pray for me, that I may be faithful and patient in my suffering, and have strength given me to keep the Word of Wisdom, and be patient with my children, and raise them aright. It is very hard to be patient when I see so much to do that no one but a wife and mother would think of or care about doing.

A few of the sisters here have our Prayer Union every Thursday at three p. m., that being the most convenient time for those that live quite a way from my house, and as I can walk but a few steps at a time, they always meet at my house. For about a year there was only Sister Davis and myself, but we met every Thursday, but now there are a few others. We are encouraged, and are blessed and comforted many times.

My husband is an elder, but on account of my being sick all the time he has not been able to do as much church work as he would like to do.

Again I would ask your prayers that I may live so as to receive the blessing promised. May God bless all of his handmaidens that we may be faithful, is my earnest prayer.

Your sister in Christ,

MRS. C. W. HAWKINS.

SPECIAL REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.

Prayer is requested for "Auntie Groom," of Helena, Montana, who is suffering severely from a complication of diseases. Please remember a great sufferer.

Sunday School Department.

ELDER T. A. HOGAS, EDITOR.

Henderson, Mills Co., Iowa.

NOTICE TO SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

THE supplement of the Herald of last week gave the substance of a resolution that prevailed at the late General Sunday School Convention at Independence, Missouri. It was to the effect that each Sunday school of the church is requested to take up a separate and special collection on the third Sunday in May for the purpose of purchasing furnishings for the halls of the Saints' Home at Lamoni, Iowa. Said collection to be forwarded as soon as practicable to the treasurer of the General Sunday School Association, Bro. A. B. Hanson, Lamoni, Iowa.

This is a move in the right direction. Private individuals and other societies have furnished various rooms in the Home and we as Sunday School workers now have the opportunity to drop in our "mite" as this noble work draws on to completion. Shall we not respond? We trust you will.

This notice may reach you too late to observe the regular day. If it does, it will do equally well on a following Sunday. This need not and should not in any way interfere with the regular collection of the day. Previous notice of this special collection should be made to each school by the one in charge giving full explanation of the object of the collection and that the funds will be received by the Association Treasurer and by him turned over to a committee appointed by the General Convention to make the purchase. Also that full report of the whole matter will be made in due time.

The Home is moving right on to completion—is now being occupied—and we trust will meet the laudable end for which it was intended. And may our efforts to help in this line be abundantly successful.

Your brother and colaborer,

T. A. HOGAS, Gen. Supt.

FOR the reason that the HERALD needed a great amount of space in which to publish the proceedings of the General Conventions, the "Religio" and General Sunday School Association, and the General Conference, the Sunday School Department was dispensed with for a few issues. Now that these gatherings are past, and their proceedings published, we again take up the work about where we left it.

The General Sunday School Association has reason to congratulate itself that the convention just passed into history was one of the best, all things considered, that it has yet held. Peace and harmony prevailed, and a desire to ascertain what is for the best interests of the work seemed to actuate every one in all their efforts from the beginning to the close. And the earnestness and prayerfulness of the workers was rewarded by a better understanding being had on many points and an assurance felt by many that a more united effort along the line of Sunday school work was now possible than had been heretofore. With the Sunday school work, as with all other lines of spiritual work, the better we understand it the better work we can do in it; the better we understand it the more we love it and the more zealous we become in it. Hence we look for the work done at the convention to bear good fruit during the coming year.

A part of the officers of last year were obliged to decline further service to the association on account of other duties which demanded their undivided attention. All filled their positions well and effectually. And we here express our appreciation of the earnestness, thoughtfulness, and efficiency with which they each did their work. We regret to see them step out, but it seemed to be necessary. However, we feel assured that they are not out of the work, for they are too thoroughly imbued with a love therefor to ever lay it entirely aside.

As you have already been apprised, Bro. J. A. Gunsolley, of Lamoni, Iowa, was chosen First Assistant Superintendent. He is known to church people generally, being connected with much of the auxiliary work of the church as well as much of the regular work. He has been in the General Association since its organization and keeps in touch with its work and its workers. We bid him welcome and work. It is indeed, a very pleasant recollection to us that Bro. Gunsolley and the General Superintendent were roommates and classmates during their schooldays. They struggled together with the various difficult problems found in their school work. They shared their pleasures when hard work was set aside. They found refreshment and joy in the Sunday school and in the social meetings of the branch in which they then resided. Last, but not least, realizing that they could not always remain together, they persuaded two other roommates, two "fair daughters of Zion," that it were better for all concerned that life's stormy sea be sailed with them. So, in the due course of years, the pleasant dream became a sacred reality. And now while these intimate associations have heretofore been only or little more than a pleasure, they become a real benefit. Two persons who know each other so well can do much more and better work than were they only strangers. We gladly welcome the brother into the pleasures and responsibilities of the General Association duties and bid him Godspeed therein.

Bro. Charles E. Crumley, of 964 Court Circle, Los Angeles, California, was chosen Second Assistant Superintendent. We have never had the pleasure of meeting the brother, but from the confidence expressed by many who are acquainted with him, we feel that the work will not suffer at his hands. This is the first time the western slope saints have been represented in the choir of general officers. This we trust will be the means of stimulating the Sunday school movement to greater possibilities in that region. We do not mean by this that California is especially behind, for such is not the case as we understand it. But that with them, as with all other sections, there is room for great improvement, and one of the general officers with his many opportunities to advance can do much more to build up the interests of the Sunday schools than he could possibly do otherwise. So we look forward with pleasure to the many good things in store for California. We hope to have the pleasure of meeting the brother sometime in the near future. We welcome him into our association as an officer and pray God to bless him for his work.

Our General Secretary, Bro. W. N. Robinson, of Independence, Missouri, has filled his place for five years and is known to all the Sunday school workers. A man of sufficient energy and ability, he has pushed the work in his department to its utmost. And the association owes much of its growth to the results of his efforts. He is equally as successful as an organizer and adviser and has many times sacrificed home and business interests to "be about the Father's business." The rewards for his labors will not fail.

Bro. A. B. Hanson, of Lamoni, Iowa, was elected Treasurer of the General Sunday School Association. His name was brought forward by those who knew him best. He enjoys the confidence of all and we feel assured he will do well his whole duty.

Sr. Mamie A. Allen, of Lamoni, Iowa, began her work as Librarian a year ago. Prior to that time, it will be remembered, there was no Librarian of the General Sunday School Association. The work is thus very new with us. She began with nothing to build upon. All that has been done is original with her, has been thought out, then done. She presented in a paper read before the late General Convention some very valuable thoughts along the lines of Sunday school library work—some that elicited a very interesting evening's discussion. And we do not doubt but there were those present who went away feeling that there was more in the library makeup than they "had dreamed of in their philosophy." We do need a good Sunday school library, but have no use whatever for any other kind. Better to have no book at all than a bad one. Sr. Allen is now executing a plan of work that will certainly be productive of good when completed. If you are in need of advice in this work, write her. Or if you are anticipating purchasing books for a Sunday school library, correspond with her before so doing.

We were glad to see her continued in the work she had begun so well, and wish her success and the blessing of God's Holy Spirit therein.

The General Superintendent was continued in his position. This we interpret as an indorsement, in part at least, of the work done or attempted during the year. We shall labor, as before, for the upbuilding of the work and the glory of God, trusting that he will guide us ever as we need.

SOME of our correspondence has run behind, which we very much regret. Owing to the extra amount of work incident to a General Convention, we were unable to be prompt with it all. We are about up with it now, and think we will be able to keep it thus. We are always glad to hear from the Sunday school people, as it is indicative of life and interest.

THE best season of all the year for the Sunday schools to prosper is now upon us. Is your school "looking up" any? Upon these cheerful spring mornings it seems that every one should feel like going to a house of worship and study of God's word, and praise his name. Put your visiting committee to work gathering in the indifferent ones. Awake to your own possibilities and duties and see if an increase in interest and attendance cannot be had.

ARGENTINE, Kan., April 4.

Editors Herald:—I mingle my voice with many of the good expressions made in your columns of the onward march of the restored gospel, and the good being accomplished by God's servants in winning their way into new fields, and also the good accomplished in the old fields. Surely the hastening time has come, and God is preparing the way before his faithful servants in many ways. There seems to be a general awakening in regard to the way of salvation, and as the proclamation is being repeated of the expression of Jeremiah, "Stand ye in the ways, and see, and ask for the old paths, where is the good way, and walk therein, and ye shall find rest for your souls," it truly has an awakening effect upon many; and when the message of the restored gospel is proclaimed we see a fulfillment of the words of Christ where he says, "I am the good Shepherd, and know my sheep, and am known of mine."

Last evening we closed a protracted meeting of twenty-nine sermons in a nice little hall, the use of which is so generously donated to us, by Mrs. T. Jones, and at the close of our meetings we sang from the heart, "Praise God from whom all blessings flow." The hall was full nearly every night, and even a few nights when it was raining the congregations were good. Many have through this series of meetings been brought near the kingdom of God and thoroughly impressed with the sign that we have hung up in the hall, "Primitive Christianity; no more, no less." Not only have the people who came been instructed by us, but day after day during these four weeks have the people who heard, proclaimed throughout the city what they heard, so that more preaching was done by the congregation than by us. The result is that in the near future many will no doubt unite with the family of God. During our protracted efforts we were ably assisted by Bro. R. J. Parker, T. W. Chatburn, M. F. Gowell, and R. Etzenhouser. Bro. Frank Parker, who has lately been ordained to the office of priest, rendered us excellent assistance.

F. C. WARNKY.

BILOXI, Miss., April 25.

Editors Herald:—I frequently see requests for prayer in our papers by sisters whose husbands and sons are addicted to the drink habit. Having been a member of the W. C. T. U. for a number of years, I have learned some of the precautions necessary to successfully overcome the habit.

Use neither tea, coffee, nor tobacco. Saints should not use them anyway, as they are forbidden by the Word of Wisdom. Substitute some brand of wheat or rye coffee, or make it yourself.

The use of tobacco is sure to prevent a cure. If unable to abstain any other way, get Bro. Ordway's remedy and give it a thorough trial. If possible take a Turkish bath once a week; if not be sure to take a hot bath twice a week just before retiring. If a bath tub is not available, use a wash tub. Use soap freely. If troubled with headache, bathe the feet in hot water and apply cold cloth on head.

Eat plenty of fruit, fresh apples preferred. Be sure to use graham bread and very little meat. Avoid pepper; it only serves to excite the thirst.

Frequent bathing, wholesome and proper food, and avoiding that which excites the appetite, will help a long, long way on the road to recovery, and keep you there too.

The above rules are simple, but they are imperative, and cannot be neglected if anyone desires to overcome and remain free from the habit.

This and avoiding the society of those who increase the temptation to drink, will, with a firm trust in the Lord, bring the desired blessing.

Your sister in the gospel,
MRS. IDA STEWART.

BOZEMAN, Mont., April 4.

Editors Herald:—I have just returned from Willow Creek, where I was well received by the people. There seems to be a fine class of people, and it seems to me there is a good field for the church. Two Utah elders have been there; I would like very much to have seen them; they say they are coming this way. I will agree to entertain them with what is written in the books. Those fellows either willfully misrepresent matters, or they are very ignorant as to facts. I intend to make it as interesting as I possibly can for those elders wherever I find them.

Since my appointment, last conference, I have endeavored to keep posted on the demands of the work throughout the eastern part of the State, and have written to all parties that I have been able to get their address, but have received no answer from some. Now I ask it of the saints throughout the eastern part of Montana that they correspond with me. A letter addressed to me at Bozeman will always find me; I see by a late Herald that some of the Utah elders have been at Gebo, misrepresenting matters as usual. Now I stand ready to do all I can to see that the work does not suffer here; but there is one thing our people must bear in mind, that we cannot keep posted on the demands of the work in every locality unless you communicate with us.

Bro. Wells has made an opening at Big Timber, and has baptized two there, and thinks more will follow. I think there is a good field for the church in eastern Montana. I think ere long we will be able to build up a permanent work at Bozeman. We have the material to build with, and plenty of it; all we want is a little more of the good old fire within.

In bonds,

GOMER REESE.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., May 1.

Editors Herald:—When we read of the list of conference appointments and learned that but one missionary had been sent to this part of the country and he to labor but part of the time in this large district, it appeared that something had been forgotten. Possibly this is due in a measure to the fact that last year we were more favored, having two sent here in addition to the one that is to labor with us part of the time this year. When the fact became known at our Sunday services following the date the appointments had been announced at Independence and prior to receipt of published list, that Bro. Bond was assigned elsewhere, the many eyes that were moistened with tears testified to the high esteem and appreciation by the saints of his labors among us. While this may be a favorable indication, the fact that God has shown his approval of his work while with us by a bounteous outpouring of his Holy Spirit at many times, is to us a much greater evidence that his work has been acceptable to our heavenly Father than even the tears of good, honest, and sincere saints. We feel quite sure that these tears bespoke the real feeling of the heart, and that St. Louis has just as good Latter Day Saints as the church can produce when measured from a moral or spiritual standpoint. Yet there is a possibility of our being mistaken in our judgment when considering a man's ability or fitness for a place, basing our thoughts on our personal feeling for him; hence as we view the situation the only correct way to determine in such matters is whether the results of his labors have shown whether God has approved or disapproved the work done. We feel safe in saying that the results of his work will not be taken, even though he is; and while a remembrance of personal relations may be the means of cheering us in future hours, the developing results of careful and persistent labor will do a great deal more for us and the church generally.

While these conditions may be true, please do not consider us as man-worshippers. We feel like giving a most hearty amen to a part at least of the sentiment expressed in "Conference Aftermath" in current number of the Ensign. Man when measured by the stupendous work assumed by him when this great cause was intrusted to his care is but a small affair, and he only becomes mighty and strong as he is operated upon by the Spirit of God. To believe that people are to be astonished and magnified by some man's ability in this latter-day work, usually means disappointment to all concerned. By this we do not wish to argue that all men are of the same worth in the same place, for all men do not live with the same strictness nor exercise as great care; but with same conditions God is surely no respecter of persons.

I feel to be expressing the sentiment of a majority of our people, at least, when I say that, though we may feel sad to have to say farewell to Bro. Bond, that others sent here to labor will have our most hearty support and coöperation. The work is onward here; and the outlook has never been brighter since I have been acquainted with the saints in this locality than at present. Our desire and effort should be, and is to see it go forward. When Zion is fully established it is our fervent hope that our district may be one of the polished gems therein.

A number of the brethren from the East stopped over with us a short time on the return from conference—Brn. Marshall, Scott, Slover, Miller, and Sheehy, that we now call to memory. Bro. Sheehy remained over Sunday, speaking in the morning and evening at the chapel, and in the afternoon at Cheltenham, making it rather a busy day. He also materially assisted in other work while here. None of the others above-mentioned remained over Sunday.

The thought is sometimes expressed that all men are born free and equal. Possibly they are, but when I think of the four young men who are now giving up their entire time to advocating a system of religion in this city as founded through Joseph Smith and sadly contorted by Brigham Young, I feel to question the thought. Those who try to raise additional funds for foreign missions in different denominations tell us that more young men are offering themselves every year than can be taken care of, for want of funds. This is the argument used at least, and we have no reasons to question the statements. It is a fact well known that many of them do go whether all go that want to or not. Some of them sacrifice the pleasures of home and pleasant surroundings; they go and teach a system of ethics pure and simple so far as the moral part of their teachings are concerned. They try to teach what they know, and in the best manner possible; and whatever the ultimate results may be, they in many cases assist some people by their wholesome teachings. Frances Willard and Lady Henry Somerset have taught many wholesome truths. These people teach what little they understand of the good and the pure of the Bible and let the rest alone. The four young men above referred to may come with just as good intentions, with just as good motives as the others; but they have been unfortunately born, unfortunately taught, and instead of teaching only the pure principles of the gospel, in their efforts to explain away the apparently clouded portions of the Scriptures mix it all up together, and in the strenuous effort to cover up and explain the misdoings of those ancient men of note, apparently overlook and forget the pure and wholesome teachings of Jesus Christ. There is nothing in the teachings of Jesus Christ that needs explaining away. It will, as the record has it, stand the test. We are not here as representatives of Abraham, David, or Solomon; but of Christ.

While anyone who understands fully the teachings of the gospel can but hold some of their teachings in contempt, the sacrifice they are making must elicit some sympathy. The most disgusting feature of their work here is their attempts to cover up that in their system that will not stand the light of the noonday sun, and the means adopted to accomplish this purpose. For example, they have all along contended that polygamy was no longer a tenet of their church; but when closely pressed recently they explained the situation thus: When the edict went forth that polygamy must cease to be practiced, this does not say that a man who had a number of wives must cease to treat them as his wives, it was interpreted by them to mean that no one should marry more than one wife henceforth under present conditions; and, that a man who already had more than one wife and now living with them as such, it was not polygamy, but "cohabitation." Truth is mighty and will prevail, and in our judgment it is better to go down with truth with the knowledge that it will ultimately prevail, than to vainly attempt to bolster up a system with truth submerged by a contortion of the English language. Those "silken cords" are nice and soft, but I don't want them around my neck.

May God's choicest blessings be with the right,
Yours hopefully,

J. C. HITCHCOCK.

BEARDSTOWN, ILL., May 3.

Editors Herald:—Twice twelve years ago to-day I was baptized in Spring River, at Galesburg, Jasper County, Missouri. My consort, and Brn. Charles and Henry Wagner, all long since deceased, and Mr. John Merrill, who also was immersed, formed the party that drove over from Joplin in a cold drizzling rain. Being chilly from the long, slow, damp journey; and having gone there to district conference to obey my matured convictions, I went not near the fire till I had personally tested the temperature of the clear, roaring, rushing tide. The milldam was just above; the hamlet, and forest were adjacent; the pebbles were beneath our feet, while on the strand, and in the water, the voice of melody graced the peaceful scene; and praise and prayer crowned the occasion.

Elder Isaac Ross, of Pleasant View branch, Kansas, with stately tread and strong arms, and a kind, sympathetic, tender voice authoritatively exclaimed, "Morris, being commissioned of Jesus Christ I baptize you," etc., and presto! it was done. That happy time is an oasis in my grateful memory.

My regrets are that I did not find the way of life a score of years sooner and that I have done so little for the cause that has done so very much for me. My desires have been in favor of the good and the true, but my ardor and zeal have fluctuated somewhat, I fear. Amid complex trials from within and persecutions on most every hand, yea, when death saddened my heart, and shattered my fondest hopes of domestic tranquility, I did not wholly despair, but saw dimly, through the hot blinding tears, the reward that awaits the faithful. The consolations of the Christianity of Christ and the Bible; when evil surmisings abound and friends are few and far between, and foes are all around to tear and crush afresh the wounded broken heart, are incomparably glorious and immeasurably blessed. Sympathetic friends may freely tender condolence and do all they well can to assuage grief and lift burdens; but God alone can turn sorrow into joy and gladness.

For my two hundred and sixty-eight months of ministerial service I have averaged about one baptism per month. If this count was many times larger it would appear small indeed as compound to the billion and one half of earth's teeming inhabitants that need the gospel. A very few of those I watered have grown cold and weary and either sat down on the highway or turned away for the leeks and onions and flesh-pots of sin. Several have died in the faith, and with their faces Zionward many linger on the shores of mortality; and a few have been called into the ministry.

As I grow older I will doubtless baptize fewer when others are ready and willing to wield that arm of service. It will encourage them, and aid them to have a good report, and crush out selfishness in preferring others, as also in vindication of the law. The missionary spirit has been upon and within me as I have traversed the continent almost from east to west beyond the Rockies, and from Canada to the cotton fields of the sunny South. As I cruised amid the coast islands of the Atlantic, and doubled Maine at Eastport, passed through New Brunswick, over the Bay of Fundy forty-five miles in width, and sojourned in Nova Scotia a season, I did lift up my voice at times and in places too numerous to mention. I trust, if health, strength, and mind will abide with me to stand at my post and answer to roil call.

I feel hopeful that I may providentially be permitted to do much solid lasting work yet. I have the moral support of my wife and children, and they have the spirit to sacrifice for the work. To have loved ones at home praying for you is a great consideration for the field forces. These humble advocates of redeeming love that go forth to publish salvation abroad are remembered at the throne of grace, and in a temporal way, by the worthy who toil in the affairs of this busy life.

They should merit esteem by due sobriety in demeanor, having hopeful cheerful spirits, studious habits, energetic and courageous push, tempered with charity for the weak, justice for the strong, pity and forgiveness for all.

Local authorities would do well to see that the law is kept within their jurisdiction. And now may the God of grace advance the cause of Zion, and shield, direct, and protect her children.

INDEPENDENCE, Mo., May 4.

Editors Herald:—Will you please insert that Brn. Gillespie and Miller, who aid the work as they see opportunity, again allow my mail in their care; my field address therefore is care of Box 28, Cleveland, Ohio.

I desire correspondence from points where labor is needed in Ohio and Pennsylvania, especially from points outside of branches. Will be in Ohio about May 20.

In bonds,

FULTON, Iowa, April 24.

Editors Herald:—Ministerially I have not done perhaps as much labor as some of my brethren; but it has been great consolation to me to know that what I have done the Lord has blessed, and in some cases to a great degree.

Bro. Peterson and I have labored together most of the last fall and winter, and we endeavored to honor that portion of Scripture which says that the missionary should go into the world and open up new fields and leave the branches to the care of their presiding officers. I do not desire to assume the position of a critic, but looking our district over the thought comes to me, Had we as missionaries applied the command, "Go ye into all the world" more forcibly in our labor heretofore, our field would possibly have numbered many hundreds more. I believe the present authorities of the districts have done and are doing nobly in the prosecution of missionary work in the district. Some of the most promising openings have lately been effected in our field, more than for years before. The southern part of the district until recently has had but little labor performed there for a good many years. Some twenty or thirty years ago Elders Ruby, Bronson, LaRue, Holmes, T. W. Smith, Bro. Joseph Smith, and others had done work there, and the work was in a prosperous condition; but later the hand of the evil one, in the way of aspiration, was permitted to enter and now only a few remain to tell the history of the past and the doings of the Lord there.

Strange the story, and O, how humiliating to hear how the strong ones in Israel, Saul like, fell and brought shame and disgrace upon themselves and the church!

It is true, the mainstay of the church is in its presiding authority, and my soul lights up with great hope for the work in the district; for, generally speaking, we have good presiding officers; that is, men who are careful and pains taking. The work therefore in the district is in the best shape generally, that I have seen it for years.

The Lord has blessed me much in my labor during the past year, and many times while presenting the truth have I been given marked evidences of its divinity. Just after Christmas, while passing through Davenport, I was called upon to go and administer to a prominent physician's wife, of Rock Island, Illinois. There had been attending this lady five of the best physicians of Rock Island, Davenport, and Moline. This woman was Mrs. Dr. Asay, and her affliction was paralysis of the stomach and throat. This was the greatest case of suffering I ever witnessed, and the medical skill of the physicians was baffled. After the first administration the paralysis began to leave this woman's throat and after the fourth or fifth administration the paralysis had left her stomach. This was one of the greatest cases of healing I ever saw.

On my return trip from the northwest I stopped off at Grove Hill, where my wife was visiting her folks; and while there the saints and friends made up a box sociable for our benefit. The receipts were about sixteen dollars, and to say I was thankful for their favor is only putting it mildly, for this came in a time of need, and I am sure from those who are our friends indeed.

May heaven smile upon Zion, is my prayer.

Editors Herald:—In your issue of the 6th inst. the Rev. T. W. Williams says that I had delivered a lecture on Mormonism; and from the manner in which he makes the statement the reader must infer that the lecture was against the above ism.

Now I will say that I have charge of Union Hall of this city, and have acted as chairman of a succession of spiritualistic meetings during the last four months, and that there has not been any lecture, either by myself, or any other person, delivered either for or against Mormonism.

Yours respectfully,

MAGNOLIA, Iowa, May 4.

Editors Herald:—I bid my dear brethren, sisters, and friends of the Nebraska mission adieu, it having seemed wisdom in the appointing power to return me to another mission formerly occupied. It is with much satisfaction that I take a retrospective view of my labors for the past two years, knowing as I do that I sought to labor with but one object in view, and that the good of souls and the advancement of God's work in all departments thereof. To say that I have accomplished all the good I had desired would be falsifying my hopes, but that some progress was made I am assured.

For the assistance and hearty cooperation of many of the saints I feel truly gratefully, and for the expressions of others as to their willingness to have helped more than they could under the circumstances, I am equally as grateful; and for the unity and peace that prevailed almost universally with all officials, local and general, I return my thanks to God. Wherein differences existed it was of the head and not of the heart, as a rule.

Last but not least I must not forget the kindness and assistance of the little folks, some of whom made sacrifices of things they would have had pleasure in possessing, for the greater pleasure, as it seems to have been, for them to help the missionary with means to pay his expenses. May God's richest blessings be upon all such, and upon all who have by kindly word or deed encouraged the missionary on his way.

To you I can heartily commend for assistance and encouragement my brethren who labor among you this year.

My experience at the Conventions and Conference at Independence was in some respects very instructive, and I trust in every way will be profitable; yet not equal in some respects to those I have attended. While it may be that as a whole they were the equal of any attended, yet in contrast with what was hoped they may have seemed not equal. I believe at times to maintain with honor positions occupied is as great as at other times to take what seems to be great strides towards positions to be occupied; and I am satisfied that the church has in some departments attained higher spiritual grounds, and in no particular can I see but that, we have made wise movements towards maintaining every position previously occupied; hence on the whole I feel satisfied, and believe the saints with courage and confidence can move forward.

To attain to any position there must be recognized in us by the heavenly Father virtue and ability to maintain such position; and as we are seeking a very high position when we pray "Thy kingdom come," we should prepare ourselves by a cleansing of all filthiness of the flesh and of the spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of the Lord, laying aside all superfluity of naughtiness, jesting, light-mindedness, and foolish talking, in order to receive instruction from our Father concerning farther preparation to be made preparatory to the coming kingdom.

When an accident has happened to one of our friends and there is a necessity for a surgical operation, it is with seriousness of mind that we see the work done, fearing lest it may not be done properly and the friend remain a cripple, or suffer longer than is necessary, and thus be an extra burden upon his friends. We claim that a terrible accident has happened to our best friend, the body of Christ, that it became disorganized, and that it caused untold suffering to many members of that body, and we are called to assist in the reorganizing of that body that it may be a perfect body in its operations in every part, and every joint act in supplying the needed action, for the purpose of accomplishing all the good, and enjoying all the possibilities of the body of Christ. We are laborers together with God to the end that this may be accomplished, but I fear that we are not, as servants of God, as serious minded as we would want the surgeon to be who would operate upon an afflicted friend, nor as serious minded as we would be while the surgeon was operating, nor as serious minded as God whom we serve wants us to be; for has he not spoken against too much laughter and light-mindedness? But, when has he had the occasion to reprove his people for their consideration and over much sober-mindedness? Has not the church remained in a crippled condition and Zion suffered longer than was necessary, and that because we would not, as instruments for God's service, prepare ourselves, or place ourselves in such a position that God could prepare us to do the work needed for the complete reorganization of his church preparatory to the coming King where we are to be, if worthy, kings and priests unto God? I think this is evident to all who stop to consider the matter seriously.

May we as servants of God, who stand upon the walls of Zion and behold suffering humanity, and the great need of help, and that hastily, so prepare ourselves that when we meet in another General Conference we may do so acceptably to God, in a solemn assembly, to show forth that wisdom that gives evidence that we have been taught of God, and that we are in such assemblies under the guidance of a godly power to work out such results as will effect many souls favorable to God, give life to the famishing, and prepare a feast and a robe for the prodigals we are inviting to return.

I shall enter upon my present field of labor with confidence born of the blessings I have here enjoyed when laboring in the past. I have already enjoyed largely of the Spirit's help in my ministry here since my return from the conference. Two were led through the waters of regeneration last Sunday at this place, and others are near. Opposition is shown through one of the local ministry, he trying to show what he thinks others ought to believe, though he knows nothing about it himself; and to show how foolish Paul was to believe in such things as the gifts of tongues and interpretation. He claimed to speak in tongues one eve at his service, and then told the audience that the reason they could not understand it was because he had not told some one what he was going to say beforehand so they could interpret. How wise (?) this man's logic will be in the day of judgment when placed side by side with the statements of Paul that these gifts are the gifts of the Spirit of God, by which all have been "baptized into one body, and have all [of God's children] been made to drink into that one Spirit." Sad will be the day for all such who love a lie so well as to turn or try to turn God's word into a falsehood, or a thing of deception.

My hope grows brighter, and the barriers grow thicker; but in God is my trust.

Your brother,

J. F. MINTUN.

IS IT A STATE CHURCH?

It is not that I have any animosity to the good old "stars and stripes" that I pen what shall follow, because I have none; yet I love the British ensign more. Several weeks at a time have the "stars and stripes" fluttered in the breeze over my house in honor of those whom and that which I love of that country, and doubtless will continue to do so. But some years ago one of the church missionaries to this country chanced to attend a service in an Anglican Episcopal church, and became very much disgusted because he saw a picture of the Queen, which represents British institutions, hanging up in a church, pretending to be the church of Christ, which I will admit is a disgusting sight. Yet as that church is a State church, and draws support and defense directly from the State, it is in a measure excusable. But will anybody explain to me why it should be any less disgusting to have a church decorated with United States insignia by order of General Conference? Does the church draw any direct support from that government? Will the United States government protect the church there any more than the Canadian government will the branches of that church here? Was it not government troops that permitted the mob to slaughter the prophet? Did the government redress that crime? Was it not a United States President that said, "Your cause is just, but we can do nothing for you"? Has not the Church of Christ been forced in all ages to fight its way through and up against all earthly governments? And what does Christ owe to any nation?

Now in harmony with a remark in an apostle's speech, which refers to being made loyal to State and society, by this church, I as a representative of the British state should demand that the Canadian flag should also wave in this General Conference to the proportionate size as the church has Canadian church members. And how could it be denied? Now if that is granted to me, which should be, it should also be granted to all other nationalities, Spanish as well. And would not that look beautiful, to see every man's seat in the Church of Christ decorated with his national flag?

I am not protesting against that act simply from a personal standpoint, but because it involves a principle. The resolutions concerning the Cuban trouble merits the same censure.

Now let us consider the real worth of that resolution, as couched in the fourth resolve in the document. What can the church do as a church to support in any material way any step that the American nation might take in that praiseworthy object of aiding the Cubans? Can it draft any of its members to take up arms? Can it take any of the church funds for war appropriation? While I, with the whole British nation, so far as I know, am in profound sympathy with the United States government upon this matter, yet what power has the church, as a church, to operate with me as a member upon that matter? Not an atom. Then what does the church offer to the government? Simply nothing; nothing. O sympathy; some may reply! What right has the stone kingdom, as a kingdom, to sympathize between nations as nations. The matter of right and wrong is an individual matter in that regard. If not and the General Conference of the Kingdom of the Prince of Peace should be turned into a war powwow. Why does it not spread out a little wider and consider China, and offer a little "nothing" to that country, which is being carved up? Also to some of the North American Indian tribes, whose rights and privileges have been curtailed, to speak mildly, by the United States government officials?

Brethren, I think we should be careful of the point of this wedge. I paid twenty-five cents for the daily Ensign to hand around. They came. One I hid, so that two Adventists of the seventh day order, with whom I expect to discuss the claims of our church within a few days, would not get hold of it and ask me why the General Conference does not provide me with a little "stars and stripes" to stick up on my end of the platform for a sort of an inspiration, which of course would be perfectly consistent; but it would make the church a laughing-stock just the same. Equally so were it the British ensign. I feel that

It is rare when injustice, or slights patiently borne, do not leave the heart at the close of the day filled with marvelous joy and peace.

The happiness of life depends much on little things; and one can be brave and great and good while making small sacrifices and doing small duties faithfully and cheerfully.

I am not gaining popularity in this; but it does not matter. I am not especially anxious for popularity in the element that would seek to make the Church of Jesus Christ a state church, by clothing it with state insignia, with cheers and national anthem; but rather go on record in protest before God and angels, and do what I can to keep our church on earth free from the trammeling influences of any and all earthly governments, as I find that all the kingdoms (governments) of this world shall become the kingdom of our Lord and his Christ. I do not want this to be put in the waste paper basket, but published; and if my position is wrong, let some one show me from Scripture wherein it is, and so justify the General Conference.

Yours for the truth,

H. J. DAVISON.

A LIFE'S MOTTOES.

MANY years ago a young man was reading his Bible and his attention was peculiarly attracted by these verses:—

Trust in the Lord with all thine heart; and lean not unto thine own understanding. In all thy ways acknowledge him, and he shall direct thy paths.—Prov. 3: 5, 6.

He stopped his reading to meditate upon them. "What a wonderful promise is contained in these verses," he thought, "and why do not all men accept that beautiful promise, 'He shall direct thy paths'? How good it would be to have God to direct our paths." He concluded he would try to obtain that promise, and after much cogitation and the formation of many resolutions, he began the task.

In all his labors, duties, and business he sought to acknowledge God, and his directing power; and he was very happy in his work.

At one time he was about to enter upon a transaction, in which he felt some doubt, as to the fitness of asking God to direct in it; not that it was unlawful, yet he could not bring himself to ask God to bless him in it; and he did not.

Shortly after this he went again to the Lord to seek his direction, this time feeling free and clear to ask; and in doing so he quoted the verse, "In all thy ways acknowledge him, and he shall direct thy paths," and it flashed upon his mind that God said "in all thy ways" not at some times, and in some ways acknowledge him, but in all things God must be acknowledged, or there is no promise. And as this thought revolved in his mind and fastened itself there, he learned that he had set himself no easy task when he set out to receive that wonderful promise, "He shall direct thy paths."

However, as a result of his cogitations he fully resolved to continue striving for the fulfillment of the promise. But his views had been enlarged, and he found it necessary to examine himself squarely, and to look at himself without flinching, and see himself just as he was, and find out whether he really intended to strive for the prize or not. The examination was not very flattering, yet as a result of it he thought he saw great need of having God to direct his ways, for certainly he had not been very successful while leaning unto his "own understanding."

But new difficulties arose, for he now has heard the elders preach, and in acknowledging God in all his ways he felt sure that he was directed to obey the fullness of the gospel. And having been a member of one of the Protestant churches, and reared very strictly, he was shocked at some things which he saw and heard in the Church of Christ. This called for another self-examination as to what was erroneous in his former religious training, what was tradition only, and harmful, what must be put away, and what might be retained, and how should he so endeavor to do right, amidst such a conflict of teaching and example as to intelligently and conscientiously acknowledge God and seek his direction.

After much meditation upon the subject he concluded to make himself acquainted as far as possible with the instruction that Christ gave to his disciples, and try to follow it, and also Christ's example. He readily knew that this was a very high standard, and that he could not expect to attain to its perfection; but he wanted a standard, he wanted some directions upon which he could rely implicitly, some instructions following which he could unreservedly acknowledge God and seek his direction. So he chose Christ as his standard. He was not long in learning the fact that if he would practically apply the teachings and example of Christ in his everyday life, and possibly in the church, he had very much enlarged upon the task or difficulties which he had encountered when he first discovered that he must acknowledge God in all his ways.

To illustrate: He was blamed wrongfully and reviled, before his brethren; he had the weapons and the power to chastise the reviler; what should he do? Jesus was his instructor, and when he was reviled, he reviled not. But the law, "An eye for an eye," is very precious to the natural man. But Jesus said, "resist not evil" and "whosoever shall smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also;" and yet he reasoned, "But justice demands the punishment of wrongdoers, and surely I may punish this reviler, and I understand that it is my duty to punish him." Then the motto came to his mind, "Lean not unto thine own understanding, . . . and he will direct thy paths." And this is his direction: "Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you." And he thought also of the question of Jesus, "And why call ye me Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?"—Luke 6: 46.

And then his resolution, that come what might, he would always follow the teachings of Jesus to the best of his knowledge. And what could he do?

Now this has taken sometime to relate, but it was only a few seconds passing through his mind, and he decided not to reply, but he spoke kindly and as he understood it, Christlike. He thought he had conquered again, but some of his brethren did not see this; with them he lost influence. He thought he could ask God to acknowledge his act because it was in harmony with Christ's teachings, but some of his friends thought it was childish, almost like imbecility, not to give the reviler as good as he sent; some thought him afraid to do so, and so the judgments ran.

But as he tried to practice the teachings of his standard in precept and example, he found how far short he was of being indeed a true follower of Christ the Lamb of God; for it seemed impossible for him to practically follow his teachings and example, and many times daily he would find himself doing contrary to the standard, either in deed or thought or in words. And he thought of his endeavor to keep the "Word of Wisdom" by putting away boughten tea and coffee, and drinking all kinds of hot slop drinks at meals; how he fed his poultry and pigs corn instead of rye, and in many other ways doing violence to the instruction in that revelation; and how he found this sentence also in it as a part or summing up of the conditions upon which the promises are to be received: "walking in obedience to the commandments;" and he thought, "that is something like 'in all thy ways acknowledge him;'" and so he reasoned with himself that if he could not receive the fulfillment of this last promise unless he acknowledged God in all his ways, how could he receive the promises of the former, unless he walked in obedience to all the commandments? Yet notwithstanding all this, he still tried to acknowledge God in all his ways, and marvelous were the many ways and instances in which he was directed in pleasant paths. But he found it no flowery bed of ease, but an unceasing watching, and praying, and working; and also it was no easy task to avoid superstition, or a yielding to evil-doers, or compromising the law of God upon the one hand, or a failure to follow Christ in word and example upon the other hand; but where the lines of demarcation were not sufficiently plain for him to decide the question clearly, he chose to risk erring upon the side of mercy; and he soon learned that it required all his fortitude, courage, patience, energy, determination, and faith to even strive to follow conscientiously the mottoes which he had chosen so long ago, and would long since have given up in despair, but he had learned that he who has Jesus as his intercessor at the day of accounting need have no fears, and that he would most surely clear the record of all that is of mortality and give a clean passport into the heavenly city to all those who had tried to acknowledge God in all their ways, and who had tried to act Christlike while here. And then in that beautiful city all will be Christlike, for all shall see him as he is.

He is now an old man, still trying to live as near as possible to his mottoes. And although with much regret and heartfelt sorrow he looks back upon his many failures, he knows that there has been no failure upon the part of God in fulfilling his promise, but times without number his directing hand was manifest and the Lord directed his paths, and he tried to walk in them.

And he counsels all saints to try these mottoes faithfully, that they may obtain the fulfillment of that blessed promise, "He shall direct thy paths." And when he does, be sure to "walk in them." Then you will be found "walking in obedience to the commandments," and will receive wonderful blessings in this life and in the world to come a crown of glory and life everlasting. D. E.

DOCTOR ADLER ON RELIGION.

THE RELATION OF MAN TO THE INVISIBLE.

DR. FELIX ADLER continued his course of lectures before the Society of Ethical Culture in Carnegie Hall yesterday morning. The hall was crowded to its utmost capacity.

"What is Religion?" was the subject chosen by Dr. Adler. Introducing the subject, he likened man's life to a clearing in a dense forest. "In life," said he, "we are in a clearing in a dense forest. Surrounding us is a darkness into which no human being has ever penetrated. This is the great unknown. Men have given us a variety of definitions for the word religion. One has told us that it is a belief in a divine God. Arnold says that it is ethics plus feeling for mortality, touched by devotion.

"In their way these definitions are all very well, but they do not cover all. For instance, where would the religion of the Buddhist, of the old Greek come in under these definitions? These definitions are all true, but that is not all that is required. To be a complete definition all the surrounding circumstances must be taken into consideration and embodied. The man who defined man as a biped without feathers told the truth, but such would hardly be accepted as a good definition. To my mind, the best definition would be: 'It is the relation of man to the invisible reality.' This is a definition which is broad enough to cover all nations and religions, from the lowest forms to the highest. It fits man's mind as to what the invisible is.

"There are three phases in the advance of religion. First, the earliest, when it meant the utter dependence upon a superior power. It was religion born of fear and slavery. Even to-day there those who will tell you that religion is the outgrowth of abject fear. It is true that fear plays an important part, but as an accepted truth this statement is a gross exaggeration.

"With the advance of religion human life has become more secure. But even to-day we witness the horrible ravages of famine in some of the backwoods countries. In the civilized countries, however, famine has ceased to be a menace. We are not dependent upon the success of our crops as are the people in the backwoods. To a more or less extent, medical science has given us a safeguard against the ravages of physical ills, but these are but temporary and uncertain at best. Religion also teaches men to help themselves. In the olden times religion was slavery in its methods. Men who worshiped were dependent upon the caprices of the gods. The gods were swayed by impulses.

"The second period marked a great change. It was when the Hebrew combined all the spirits into one, and began teaching the law or morality, that religion began taking its greatest strides in the advancement of the world. It marked the end of the reign of the capricious gods. It turned uncertainty into certainty, for, according to the laws of the prophets, the people could anticipate God's ultimate acts as to the coming life.

"This advanced religion also did away with the idea that God could be won over by gifts and flattery. It taught that these ideas were nothing short of insults to the Almighty. But with all the great advance, man's emancipation has not yet been worked out, and there remains much to be accomplished. We know that a life of conscientious morality will be rewarded in the other life, but this is not enough to do. And right here is where some of us turn our backs in fear. There comes to some of us a feeling of despair.

"In our physical ills shall we become stoics? Shall we make believe that which we do not feel or believe? Decidedly no. Let us face the problems of life face to face and trample and conquer our physical ills with the spiritual instincts that are strong within all of us. What is it that causes the man who is lying on a sick bed to smile with contentment? It is because he has discovered an ideal. He has discovered that he has a soul, a something which physical ailments cannot touch.

"Religion is that something which sustains, redeems, and consoles man in times of need. Within all of us there is a great spiritual force, but we must have God's help in bringing it forth. To those who lead a thoughtful, good life there comes a wondrous change; a feeling of the nearness with the Almighty."

In closing, Dr. Adler took exception to certain public criticisms that he was trying to teach a new religion.

"That is not so," he said. "I only draw a sharp line between ethics and religion. I have found that while the sustaining power is invisible, it is real."—New York Tribune.

Conference Minutes.

KIRTLAND.

Items omitted from minutes of conference held at Sharon, Pennsylvania, March 19 and 20, 1898. The following preamble and resolutions were adopted:—

Whereas, we believe that there should be some protection against unwise desire to ordain persons to the priesthood and avoid unpleasant complications as have occurred in the past; therefore, be it

Resolved, that all persons to be ordained in this Kirtland district shall be, by the branch of which they are members, recommended to the district conference for ordination; and also that the advice and consent of the missionary in charge be sought.

This resolution shall not be construed to interfere with the right of certain general church officers to ordain persons to the priesthood where no branch organization exists.

Resolved, that the conferences of this, Kirtland, district meet en masse, and all members in good standing be eligible to take part in the deliberations.

Petition of the Conneaut Township branch for the ordination of Bro. Ulysses Garwood to the office of teacher, and Bro. Frank Atwood to the office of deacon was granted; and the president of the district was instructed to write to the missionary in charge for his consent, and then provide for the ordinations.

HIGH COUNCIL.

The High Council held seven sessions at Independence, Missouri, from April 9 to 16, 1898. Unity and peace prevailed during the transaction of business. On roll call the following were present:—

Presidency: Joseph Smith, Alexander H. Smith, Edmund L. Kelley.

Councilors: James C. Crabb, Calvin A. Beebe, William Anderson, John Chisnall, John A. Robinson, Charles E. Butterworth, Robert M. Elvin.

Absentees: Charles Derry, David Dancer, Asa S. Cochran, James H. Peters, Frederick G. Pitt.

The following High Priests, on nomination and vote, were chosen to fill the places of the absent councilors: Jacob W. Waldsmith, John M. Terry, Roderick May, Temme T. Hinderks, Francis M. Weld. And in the case of Wilson Hudson vs. Bishop's Court, High Priest Henry A. Stebbins to take the place of councilor Robert M. Elvin.

In the matter from England, three sessions of four hours each were given to the patient hearing and examination of the papers submitted, and following decision was unanimously adopted.

DECISION.—South Manchester branch, England, vs. W. J. Armstrong, et al. Decision of High Council. This case comes before the High Council in an irregular way, being an appeal from the action of an elders' court and district conference, but is of long standing and numerous complications, and one of the parties in the case having in the meantime died, the council has thought proper to pass upon the merits of the controversy rather than to refer back to local authorities. The law defining the duties of the High Council of the church is as follows: The "high council was appointed by revelation for the purpose of settling important difficulties, which might arise in the church, which could not be settled by the church, or the bishop's council, to the satisfaction of the parties."—B. of C. 99:1.

Provision is also made in the law for an appeal direct to the High Council from the decision of a council called abroad by the traveling high priests abroad, par. 11 and 13. There is also provision for an appeal from the action of a district conference to the General Conference of the church. (See Book of Rules.)

The question of whether the action should be to the General Conference or Bishop's Court depending upon the matters in controversy; and where parties are in doubt as to the proper course to pursue, the advice of the Missionary in Charge should be obtained in writing to guide. (See Book of Rules, p. 137—f.)

In the case under consideration suggestion is made of the death of Bro. John Smith, and so much as relates to him will not be considered in the opinion of the council.

This cause arose by reason of the action taken by the Manchester, England, district, and supported by Manchester branch to separate and divide the Manchester branch into four different organizations, and arrange for four different meeting places in the city of Manchester instead of one.

The object evidently was for the purpose of extending the work in the city of Manchester and better accommodating all parties concerned.

In attempting to carry out the action agreed upon it was found impracticable to organize the proposed branch in East Manchester on account, so far as the record discloses, of obtaining suitable place of worship; and the branch instead, retained the membership of its members in the places it had been able to organize, and in the meantime designated as the South Manchester branch that part which, if the record is understood, the original Manchester branch was located.

No appeal was ever taken from the action of the branch or district towards dividing and reorganizing the original branch; but after the case before us arose, the legality was questioned in a collateral way, but not sufficiently early in the proceedings to properly call in question the validity of the acts.

We think, then, the action of the district conference and branch in their work of reorganization must be sustained.

The defendants herein subsequently to division refused to meet or worship with the South Manchester branch, and certain members thereto belonging, and for which offense they were charged with unchristianlike conduct, and an elders' court was called, and the parties, failing to make restitution in time specified, were severed from the church, and from this action the appeal comes before the council.

The claim is made by the defendants of (1) insufficient labor performed prior to calling of court of elders. Of (2) severe action of the officers in suspending them from fellowship and church privileges prior to filing of charges and calling of court; and (3) of the officer's incapacity to call a court because in some way related to the matters in controversy by reason of the part they took in proceedings to divide branch as per action of the branch and district conference.

The evidence presented from both sides as to the sufficiency of labor under the charges is not very full; but letters submitted indicated due attempts on part of the officers to perform this work.

Upon the second complaint made we are of the opinion that the officer or officers in the act of suspending the members from the church privileges prior to the filing of charges was premature and unwarranted in the law. There is no question but that an officer's license may be demanded and the officer silenced by his superior officer during the pending of an investigation; and the act of an officer refusing to so comply with the request or demand of his superior officer in such case is rebellion against constituted authority; but we are not ready to say that members before due charge made against them can be suspended at the discretion of either presidents of branches or districts.

We are of the opinion, then, that justice demands in the case before us that the final act of excision by the branch should be revised and that the parties who have made this effort to be restored but who have taken an irregular course under the law, be given an opportunity now after reflecting over the conditions to become reinstated, and we therefore advise and direct that opportunity for confession and return be given after due notice shall have been given to each in the spirit of charity and brotherly consideration.

Should defendants or either of them refuse to avail themselves of such opportunity, as herein indicated, after due notice as set forth, then and in that case he shall stand expelled from the church and without membership or rights therein.

Done at Independence, Missouri, April 14, 1898.

Signed, JOSEPH SMITH.
ALEXANDER H. SMITH.
E. L. KELLEY.

Three sessions were had in the examination of the appeal of W. Hudson from decision of Bishop's Court. In this case A. H. Smith of the Presidency presided, and the same counselors acted, with the exception that High Priest, Henry A. Stebbins, filled the place of R. M. Elvin. Appellant, W. Hudson, was represented by Elder H. R. Harder, and Lamoni branch by R. M. Elvin. The following decision was unanimously adopted.

W. Hudson vs. Lamoni branch.—In the case of appeal from elders' court, also Bishop's Court, to the High Council, brought to the notice of the First Presidency and by them laid before said High Council of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, at Independence, Missouri, April 15, 1898, in which W. Hudson is appellant, and the Lamoni branch of said church Lamoni, Iowa, is defendant, before said council, was this day heard, the council being called for trial of said case. This case, as above stated, came before the council by notice from the Presidency of the church.

The High Council being presided over by A. H. Smith of the Presidency, he does hereby render his decision after patiently hearing all the evidence in the case, also the pleading of the High Councilors and advocates of both the appellant and defense. It is the opinion of this court, First, The charges against W. Hudson in the case, brought before the elders' court, were irregular or not in proper form. The charge being in the name of Robert White, not in the name nor for the Lamoni branch, nor as an officer of that branch. Second, The judgment of the court of elders was in error, as the testimony does not establish any crime or specification as set forth in the charge of undue or unwarranted intimacy of defendant W. Hudson and Sr. Preston. It does not appear in evidence that the said W. Hudson did commit any breach of Christian discipline or moral law. Therefore, the findings of the elders' court should not obtain.

Further, it appears the appeal to Bishop's Court was not fully perfected. The defendant nor plaintiff being notified of trial, time, or place thereof.

Further, in the findings of the Bishop's Court it is stated: "that the defendant in the case (W. Hudson) was not charged in the complaint with having committed any crime." In this it is our opinion the decision is in error, as an unchristianlike act is a breach of Christian discipline, and to that extent a crime; otherwise there can be no just trial for such act. Again, "undue and improper familiarity" with another man's wife is a breach of moral ethics and the laws of good society, and unbecoming a Christian, and in so much is criminal.

And as this council has to judge of the merits of this case by the testimony placed before us only, and as not a criminal act has been proven against the defendant (W. Hudson), and virtually so admitted by decision of the Bishop's Court and by the advocate for the Lamoni branch, the decision of said Bishop's Court should be set aside.

And inasmuch as no breach of Christian discipline, as of the church, nor breach of moral conduct such as specified in the charge, as to say, undue and improper familiarity with Sister Mary Preston, the wife of William Preston, has been clearly established by the evidence, we therefore decide that the obligation imposed upon the defendant, W. Hudson, by the elders' court be and is hereby removed, and his name cleared from the cloud thus placed upon it.

(Signed) A. H. SMITH, of Presidency, President of Court.

PASTORAL.

To the Saints of Des Moines District:—For another conference term am I assigned to missionary labor in the district conjointly with the other missionaries named for the field. We are desirous that the unity of feeling, on the part of all concerned, that has hitherto characterized our labors together, may continue and increase in strength as the time passes.

The coöperation of all is desired to continue the spread of the work of God. We shall continue to encourage the saints to heartily coöperate with their chosen branch officers, both in attending their appointments for services, heeding their instructions, and in seeking by holy living, and by distributing the printed church literature, to build up and spread the work abroad. We develop and grow into the spirit and genius of the latter-day work by the mutual recognition and respect of the rights and privileges of the local and traveling ministry, as set forth in the divine law, and by honoring each in their respective places.

Let not the missionaries forget to report, as desired, on or about the first of the months of July, October, January, and March. My post office address is Box 211, Lamoni, Iowa.

It will greatly oblige us for all the officers to report promptly, in writing, to the district conferences. It is their duty to do so. Promptness and faithfulness to duty is demanded of us all in this great transitional hour of the world, and is all essential to the advancement and success of the cause.

Your servant for Christ's sake,
C. SCOTT.

To the Saints and Friends of the Little Sioux District Mission:—It has seemed wise in those whom God has given authority to appoint the fields of labor in all the world, and in the General Conference of the body of Christ, to appoint me to labor in your midst, associated with Brn. Alma M. Fyrando and Hubert Case, both well known to most of you, and need no commendation from me, for their past labor in building up the kingdom of God in your midst and elsewhere has proven them worthy of your utmost confidence, spiritually and financially; and it must not be forgotten that Bro. A. M. Fyrando is the Bishop's agent, and it should not be forgotten that those who depend upon the missionary for support, must, while they are engaged in missionary work, be supplied from the offerings of your love for the building up of God's kingdom here on earth.

With all the authority in me vested, relating to local officials who can do missionary work, I urge you to not forget that he that soweth sparingly shall also reap sparingly, and he that is slothful shall not be considered worthy to stand; but he who doth the Father's will, occupying upon the gifts and callings of God unto him, shall of the Father reap life everlasting, besides a hundred fold in this life. Let your labor be done in order, subject to those who are over you in the gospel, and let nothing be done for honor or vain glory, but all should be done to the glory of God.

Saints living isolated from branches, and those who have friends desiring preaching in their locality, will please write to me with all obtainable information relating to the work to be done. It may not be possible to satisfy every demand, but we will try to answer as time will permit and wisdom or the Spirit of God may direct.

This district has endured the effects of many apostates and opposers of the truth, with but very little injury resulting to the work, and that injury time with its slow but sure movements has nearly effaced; but the work of opposition goes on, both by apostates and others, and to prevent the effect sought by them we only need to live very near to God, whose work this is in which we are engaged, remembering that he is more interested in the final triumph of this work, and the salvation of his children, than we can possibly be. We can afford to let the heathen rage without becoming unduly exercised, moving along humbly and trustingly in the ways God has marked out, occupying till the Master says it is enough.

It will be the aim of each of the missionaries to assist all departments of the church, giving to each such time and support as may in our judgment seem necessary. I ask an especial interest in your prayers, that the physical and spiritual strength of the missionaries may be equal to the task before them, as this is necessary under present known conditions.

My permanent address is Box A, Magnolia, Harrison County, Iowa.

May the peace of the Lord Jesus Christ and the fellowship of the Holy Ghost be and abide with our work as we labor together with God. Even so. Amen,

J. F. MINTUN,

Assistant Missionary in Charge.

To the Officers and Saints of Arizona, Nevada, California, Oregon, and Washington Mission; Greeting:—Having been appointed in charge of the above-named territory, and feeling keenly the magnitude and great responsibility that has been placed upon me, I herewith invite a deep interest in your prayers, and your hearty support and coöperation.

In harmony with the instructions of the First Presidency to divide our missions into "fields of labor" and place others in sub-charge, I hereby appoint assistants in charge: T. W. Chatburn, Nevada. H. L. Holt, Oregon and Washington. F. M. Sheehy, northern California. T. W. Williams, central California. D. L. Harris, southern California. I shall expect a report from the above-named brethren every three months.

Bro. A. M. Chase will labor in Oregon and Washington with Bro. H. L. Holt. A. C. Barmore and F. B. Blair in northern California until further notice. Thomas Daley and E. Keeler in central California. R. R. Dana and William Gibson in southern California.

Those brethren will report to the assistants in charge about the first of July, October, January, and March.

The traveling ministry are requested not to interfere with local affairs, but to leave all such matters to be adjusted by the proper authorities.

I hope that the appointees will please get into their respective missions as soon as practicable, and that those in charge will publish their post office address in Herald and Ensign as soon as possible.

Before arranging for debates, I believe it will be to the best interest of the church to first consult with the presidents of branches, districts, and mission. The church has been injured through unwise debates in many places. Hence the writer is of the opinion that men who have ability for that line of work should be selected to do the debating. A man may be a good preacher but a poor debater.

We sincerely hope that the saints will ever bear in mind the fact that the temporal arm of the church must be upheld and supported by us, therefore it is absolutely necessary that we impart freely of our earthly substance as the Lord shall prosper us. Send in your mites and tithing to the Bishop's agents in your respective districts.

Let us avoid the horrible practice of finding fault and speaking disrespectfully of each other, and of one another's labor in the Master's cause; but let us earnestly strive to manifest in our daily lives the fruits of the Spirit of God, which are love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance, against such there is no law.

Those needing my counsel or my presence, will address me at Temple, Lake County, Ohio, until further notice.

I shall try and visit all the districts in my mission just as soon as the way opens up. I pray God to abundantly bless and crown our weak efforts to win souls to Christ. Let us as God's ministry, local and traveling, seek to fulfill the duties of our calling as outlined in the law. Deal gently with the erring one, and let us be kind in administering the law. Our mission is to save the people from their sins. I will be in the mission just as soon as circumstances will permit. With love to you and gratitude to God, and an earnest prayer for the welfare of the latter-day work,

I remain your brother in gospel bonds,

GOMER T. GRIFFITHS.

Missionary in Charge.

To the Saints of Kewanee District; Greeting:—Having been appointed to labor in your district, and the field being new to me, would like, should any want my help in their locality, that they would write me in regard to the same. My home address is Little Sioux, Iowa.

Hoping that good may come to all, I remain yours in hope,

J. C. CRABB.

Bro. C. H. Porter will labor in Saline, Richardson, and other counties in Nebraska, as the way may open.

Bro. W. W. Whiting, because of previous appointment, will not reach his field of labor until early in June.

JAMES CAFFALL.

I wish to say through the Herald to the saints and friends of South and North Dakota, that I have been returned to that field of labor; also Bro. William Sparling and W. H. Walling (priest). Bro. W. Sparling will labor in Marshall and Brown counties, South Dakota, and Sargent County, North Dakota. (Confer with Bro. J. T. Bierlein, Kidder, South Dakota.) Bro. W. H. Walling will labor in Gregory and Bonhomme counties, South Dakota. (Confer with Bro. W. A. Willoughby, Bonesteel, South Dakota, and also with Sister Sarah J. Allen, Springfield, South Dakota.)

Now, brethren, by the help of God and his Holy Spirit, let us try to forward the cause of Christ in the Dakotas for the next two years. But we earnestly desire that our efforts in that line will be supplemented by the hearty coöperation of all the saints, that the work of God may be placed on a better footing, and that many precious souls may receive the gospel in the Dakotas during this conference year. During the year I hope to be able to visit the different parts of my mission, and give such aid to the work as time and ability will allow.

Hoping and praying that we may all be found true to every trust confided of God, and that peace and the fellowship of God's Holy Spirit may be and abide with all of us, I am,

Your fellow servant in Christ,

SWEN SWENSON.

Field address for the next two months will be Howard, Miner County, South Dakota, care of Charles Howery.

LEBECK, Cedar County, Missouri, May 3, 1898.

To the Ministry and Saints of Colorado, Eastern Wyoming, and New Mexico; Greeting:—Having been returned to this field, I earnestly desire and solicit the hearty coöperation of all the ministry, but more especially the General Conference appointees, with whom I desire, so far as practicable, to be in touch; so that I may know where they are, and what they are doing, and the success attending their labors, and if needful, to cheerfully render them any assistance I may be capable of.

It will be noticed, in looking over the list of appointments, that all under my charge are assigned to "Colorado," although the mission includes, Eastern Wyoming and New Mexico. I shall now divide up the field in the following manner for the present:—

O. B. Thomas and A. Kent, Eastern Colorado and Eastern Wyoming. They may be associated or otherwise, as they in their judgment may think best for the good of the work.

J. B. Roush will labor in the western part of Arapahoe County, also in Douglas, El Paso, and Pueblo counties. After the 1st of June, Denver as an objective point. W. A. Smith to be associated with him in Yuma County until the 1st of June.

W. A. Smith and F. L. Sawley will labor in Southern Colorado and New Mexico. These appointments may be changed at any time should the necessities of the work demand it.

Until farther notice, all will report direct to me, as near as practicable on the 1st of July, October, January, and March.

I would be pleased to have the saints who desire preaching where they reside, to correspond with me touching the matter. My home address is Lamoni, Iowa; my field address will be No. 2851 California Street, Denver, Colorado. J. W. GILLEN, Missionary in Charge.

May 9.

ORDINATION OF HIGH PRIESTS.

In order that their names may be placed upon the record of the High Priests' Quorum, and also be published in the forthcoming list of the quorum (to be sent to its members), I desire that the brethren named and chosen for ordination as High Priests should write me as to their willingness to be so ordained; and that immediately upon their ordination, either they or the officers who ordain should send to me the date, the place, and by whom hands are laid upon each, with the name of the speaker underscored, in case more than one officiated.

The names of those chosen during the late General Conference, and who have not yet been ordained, are as follows: John R. Evans of Lucas, Iowa; George Montague of Moorhead, Iowa; Richard Bullard of Boston, Massachusetts; Joseph Squires of Brooklyn, New York; Vinton M. Goodrich of Chillicothe, Ohio; Gilbert J. Waller of Honolulu, Hawaiian Islands; Russell Archibald, Junior, of Saint Louis, Missouri.

Prompt attention to the requests will be appreciated.

Respectfully presented,

H. A. STEBBINS,

Secretary High Priests' Quorum.

Zion's Ensign please copy. 2t

BORN.

LOGSDON.—To Bro. Albert and Sr. Maggie Logsdon, at Irondale, Ohio, April 18, 1898, a daughter, named Lizzie M.

GILES.—To Bro. Edward and Sr. Emma Giles, at Keb, Iowa, November 30, 1894, a daughter, and named Elizabeth. At Keb, Iowa, May 12, 1897, a son, and named Edward John. Blessed at Keb, Iowa, April 20, 1898, by Elder W. E. Williams.

DIED.

PAGE.—At Lamoni, Iowa, April 25, 1898, Sr. Eliza G. Page, aged 90 years, 3 months, and 24 days. She was born in Vinal Haven, Maine, January 1, 1808; received the gospel in the east in 1835, being baptized by Jonathan Hale and confirmed by Wilford Woodruff. She there married a Mr. Grant. After his death she lived in Nauvoo where she taught school in 1843-4. In 1845-6 lived in New Orleans and married Captain Page. They went up the Mississippi in 1847 and settled twenty miles east of St. Paul, where Hudson, Wisconsin, now stands. St. Paul was then a trading post, having but seven buildings in it. Hearing about the church being reorganized she went down to Nauvoo in 1865 and united with it. Captain Page died the same year. She continued in Hudson until 1892, when she removed to Lamoni. While not a wealthy woman yet she had means for comfort, and gave freely to the church, the Saints' Home, etc. She was the mother of five children. One died in infancy, one son in the army, and two sons died in 1885-6, a daughter (Mrs. Abbie Bailey) only surviving. Mrs. Bailey lives at Hudson. After November 15, 1897, she was unable to be out of her house. Her granddaughter, Miss Mary Bailey, was with her much of the time she lived in Lamoni, and took faithful care of her for the last eighteen months. The funeral sermon was preached by Elder H. A. Stebbins, by Sister Page's request, and Bishop E. L. Kelley had charge of the services throughout.

LYNCH.—Bro. Milton Lynch was born in Edwards County, Illinois, October 28, 1828, of Latter Day Saint parents; died at Harlan, Iowa, April 12, 1898. When five years old his parents moved with the church to Far West; and after being driven from Missouri settled in Nauvoo, Illinois. Bro. Lynch was one of the first to leave Nauvoo for the West; came as far as Council Bluffs in 1846, and made his home there till 1852. With other doubters and objectors to the polygamous teachings of Brigham Young, he dropped out of the procession to Utah, and remained in Iowa. In 1852 he was married to Sr. Elizabeth McCord, eldest daughter of Alexander McCord, and the same year settled in Galland's Grove. Since then he has been a constant resident of Shelby County except while in the late war. He and wife moved to Harlan about five years ago; his wife preceded him to the spirit world a year ago. In 1859 Bro. Lynch was baptized into the Reorganized church, and remained a faithful member until death. So well did himself and wife love the church they agreed to leave the principal part of their property to the church. In conformity to that agreement, and willingly and gladly for himself, he willed his property, except a few minor bequests, to the church. The estate consists of about two hundred and seventy acres of land, the Harlan home, and other property. The value of the bequest to the church is said to be about $6,000. Bro. Lynch was a splendid example to follow. He lived a life of toil; was a staunch friend to his fellows, and never failed to do his part as a citizen and neighbor. He was always ready to bear his testimony to the truthfulness of this latter-day work, and departed this life with full hope of coming forth in the morn of the first resurrection.

MARSHALL.—At her home near Wirt, Indiana, March 1, 1898, Sr. Eletha Jane, wife of Elder W. C. Marshall. She was the youngest daughter of Bro. John H. Fewell; was married to W. C. Marshall, March 7, 1882. By this means he was brought into contact with the restored gospel and labored hard against it, but of no avail. He accepted the angel's message, February 15, 1888, on which date himself and wife were baptized by Elder C. Scott. Deceased was born March 3, 1865. Father, stepmother, two brothers, one sister, husband, and four children mourn. She remained a faithful member of the church, never having a doubt. She had many evidences of her acceptance with God. Interment in the McKay cemetery, March 3, 1898; remarks by Elder J. D. Porter to a large gathering.

RICKMAN.—In Detroit, Michigan, March 24, 1898, Bro. John L. Rickman. He was born at Hillsborough, Highland County, Ohio, May 21, 1849. He was married to Miss Mary Hughes, November 21, 1892. He thus leaves a young widow and three children. He enlisted in the 25th Ohio regiment at the first call for colored volunteers during the late war, and served his country for three years. He was eighteen months in Andersonville prison. He was wounded during the war, which was the cause of his death. Bro. Rickman had been engaged in the Baptist ministry for a long number of years, but engaging in a discussion with Elder W. J. Smith in November, 1896, recognized in the latter-day work the voice of the Good Shepherd, and was accordingly baptized on the 15th of December of that year. He was sick but five days. Funeral sermon was preached at the saints' hall by Elder W. J. Smith, from 1 Corinthians 15: 26, to a large concourse of people. Bro. Rickman died in the full possession of his mental faculties. About twenty minutes before he died he prayed most fervently, after which he sang the hymn, "Savior, more than life to me, I am clinging, clinging close to thee," etc.; then peacefully passed from the shore of mortality to await the final roll-call when the acts of his life will be passed upon and reward appropriated according to merit.

MORGAN.—Mrs. Dinah Morgan was born January 4, 1823, near Blackwoods, Glamorganshire, South Wales. She was married to Theophilus Walters in 1849, and they emigrated to America in the month of October, 1854. To them was born eight children, six of whom survive her, her husband and two daughters having gone on before. She united with the Latter Day Saints Church in 1846 or '47. She has lived a consistent and faithful Christian life ever since, and always taught her children to be honest and faithful. She died in Wellston, Ohio, January 1, 1898. Funeral services held at the residence of Bro. Thomas and Sr. Williams, conducted by Elder A. W. Kriebel and Priest William Wilson.

GALLEY.—March 25, 1898, at Columbus, Nebraska, Mary Minerva Galley. Born February 25, 1821, in Otsego County, New York, moving in early life to Illinois. In the spring of 1868 she came to Columbus and was married to Bro. Geo. W. Galley. In June, 1868, was baptized by H. J. Hudson into the Reorganization of Latter Day Saints. Sr. Galley had many good qualities which her friends will ever remember. She was of taciturn temperament, determined in her convictions, often to her own hurt. During the last war she served as nurse in the hospital at St. Louis. The funeral service was held at the home of her husband on Sunday, the 27th, conducted by Elder H. J. Hudson, he also preaching the funeral discourse. A large number of friends and neighbors paid their last respects to the deceased, during one of the most severe snowstorms of this season.

TOPLIS.—There occurred at Hiteman, Iowa, April 8, 1898, a very sad accident. Bro. Samuel Toplis left his home and loved ones in good health and spirits in the morning, and was carried home a corpse before three p. m., having been crushed in the mine by falling slate. Bro. J. S. Snively was sent for to preach the funeral sermon and the Red Men (a secret order to which Bro. Toplis belonged) secured the opera house for the services, which were held April 10, at one p. m. The building was filled to its utmost capacity by friends, and admirers of our departed brother's sterling qualities. Bro. Snively, through the aid of the Spirit, spoke words of comfort and consolation to the bereaved ones, and pointed them to Christ as the first fruits of the resurrection, and produced scriptural proof for the benefit of those who were not of the household of faith, showing that our hope is not vain. Bro. Toplis was born in Lincolnshire, England, August 4, 1845; emigrated to America, May 18, 1882; married Sr. Amelia Griffiths at Lucas, Iowa, February 23, 1886; baptized August 22, 1893, at Hiteman, Iowa, by Elder J. S. Snively. Wife, four stepsons, and five stepdaughters mourn, also three brothers and three sisters, who are in England and Wales. After the services were concluded in the opera house, the remains were viewed by over one thousand friends, then the Improved Order of Red Men (of which he was the organizer in this place) tenderly bore him to Albia and laid him to rest. JAS. ARCHIBALD.

BLAIR.—At Fontanelle, Iowa, April 6, Forest, infant son of Bro. Elmer and Sr. Sarah Blair. He was born February 7, 1897, and blessed by Elder Senterlow Butler. Funeral services were held at the Adventist church, the sermon being preached by Elder Butler.

EHLERS.—At the home of her son, four miles north of Stewartville, Missouri, April 18, 1898, Sr. Anna Catherine Ehlers. Deceased was born March 3, 1823, at Linsweege, Groszherzogthum, Oldenburg, Germany. First heard the gospel in the German branch; to her it was glad tidings of great joy, and she was baptized May 2, 1880. Departed this life with that blessed assurance of a part in the first resurrection. Sr. Ehlers was the mother of eight children. On Sunday morning at her request the undersigned administered to her; she was ready to go, anxiously waiting to meet where sorrow and suffering are no more. Funeral sermon in the German church by Elder T. T. Hinderks, assisted by Elder Wm. Lewis. T. T. H.

WASSON.—At her home near Henderson, Iowa, April 18, 1898, Sr. Ida Walker Wasson, at the age of 24 years and 18 days. Our departed sister united with the church June 9, 1889, and remained a true and consistent member to the time of her death. She was married to Elmer E. Wasson, August 7, 1892. Her death was sudden, and to the loving husband the summons was a terrible blow. Husband, two small children, three sisters, two brothers, and relatives and friends mourn her early departure. Funeral services held in the Christian church at Henderson, in charge of Elder D. Hougas.

CUTLER.—Thaddeus Cutler, son of Alpheus and Lois Cutler, died at the home of his son Erastus, in Summerfield, Kansas, May 2, 1896, aged 86 years. He was born in Lisle, Broome County, New York, June 18, 1809; was married to Lemira Scott, August 16, 1829; joined the church of Latter Day Saints in January, 1833; ordained a priest under the hand of John P. Green. Lemira Cutler, wife of Thaddeus Cutler, died at Summerfield, Kansas, December 29, 1897, aged 86 years. She kept the faith, and died in hope of a glorious resurrection. Four sons and one daughter mourn.

MILLARD.—At his residence in Carson City, Nevada, April 25, 1898, Elder Thomas Millard. Born in Cambridge, England, October 21, 1822; was a member of the old church in England; baptized and confirmed in Carson City, by Elder Abednego Johns, October 1, 1871; ordained an elder by Elder E. Penrod, December 10, 1871. His faith in the latter-day work was steadfast and unwavering until death. He leaves a son and two daughters, and a number of grandchildren,

HISTORY OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS. (Volumes 1 and 2 now ready.) Provided for by action of General Conference of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Written and compiled by President Joseph Smith and Apostle Heman C. Smith. Invaluable as a correct historical narrative, as a means of conversion to truth, and as a defensive weapon in meeting old and new objections urged against the latter-day work. It contains important documents connected with the establishment, growth, and internal and external affairs and progress of the church. The revelations given in this dispensation are inserted, in connection with accounts of the circumstances under which they were given. Biographical sketches, illustrations, complete indexes, sidenotes for ready reference, etc., are some of the features of the work. Volume 1 begins with the birth of Joseph Smith, the Prophet and Seer, in 1805, and narrates the circumstances of his calling and ministry, the rise of the church in 1830, and until the close of the year 1835. Volume 2 continues the history up to June 27, 1844, —to the assassination of Joseph and Hyrum Smith.

THE KEOKUK ROUTE.

K. & W. and D. M. & K. C. Railways.

The D. M. & K. C. Ry from Des Moines to Cainsville has been rebuilt and that portion south of Van Wert will be standard gauge on or before November 1, 1897.

There is no road in Southern Iowa or Northern Missouri which has more good locations for business men than on the line of the Keokuk Route. More stock of all kinds has been shipped over this line than any road of equal mileage in Iowa or Missouri. (See Missouri Surplus Map at our stations.) The freight and passenger service is not equalled by any road in the state, except the Missouri River trunk lines, with each of which we have union stations and direct connections.

Persons seeking farms can find property at tempting prices; men seeking business locations can find towns with ample territory and settlers to warrant good business. Additional passenger service will soon be given which will add to the growth of the towns.

The towns between Des Moines and Cainsville are particularly well located for business. Look them up. Write to the undersigned for additional information. See folder for map and lands.

THE ART OF PREACHING.

LECTURE BY THE BISHOP OF RIPON.

THE fact that the Bishop of Ripon was to deliver a lecture on preaching yesterday afternoon in the Cathedral Hall, Ripon, in connection with the summer lectures to the clergy of the diocese, was, of course, sufficient to account for a crowded attendance, which included several ladies and gentlemen of the laity.

The Bishop began his lecture by observing that his subject might be defined as the "Art of Preaching." Such a term, he was aware, might challenge a sort of criticism. It would be asked by some if it were not a little unworthy to class such a subject as preaching among the arts. If the objection were analyzed they would find that some would say that preaching, above all things, should be natural, and based on simplicity, while art implied elaboration. But if he asked what was art, he was told by Lord Bacon that it was "man added to nature." And why should such a principal duty of the clerical profession be the one of all to be undertaken without training? In regard to simplicity, he would point out how necessary it was that they should be perfectly clear, and the gospel was so simple in itself that they should endeavor to excel in its clear exposition. He did not believe in the pursuit of "art for art's sake," but none the less did he believe that there was an art in preaching, to be followed for ultimate advantage.

QUALITIES OF A PREACHER.

There were certain qualities requisite in a man who was to succeed as a preacher. These might be described as an able mind, sound judgment, keen imagination, and fair range of thought. Those things appeared to lie on the surface, though in regard to any of them he did not wish to disparage even bishops' examinations. (Laughter.) He thought they would all agree as to the desirability of raising the standard of knowledge a little higher. Vivid imagination was most essential in a preacher. No one became an effective speaker, capable of influencing large numbers of men and women, without possessing the gift of imagination. It was sometimes said in a disparaging sense that a man was imaginative, but that was really praise. Fenelon's criticism of Bourdaloue was that, while he was clear, cogent, and tightly logical, he was too much so, not allowing his hearers an instant's pause from the strain of the argument. To keep their hearers' attention it was necessary to vary the tension upon their minds by relaxing the strain.

A PLEA FOR INTERESTING SERMONS.

In dealing with certain parts of the Bible, they would be able to illustrate the customs and habits of Oriental peoples. In that way their sermons would gain in interest more than they would if their sermons were merely exhortations and arguments. If, in fact, they considered their sermons as they would if they were about to teach a Sunday school class—trying to discover what they could say of interest about their subject in the way of information—he believed it would be a great improvement. (Applause.) Let them hunt up illustrations. He was perfectly certain that all the complaint about dull sermons—uninteresting sermons—would fail if people could come away from church saying that they had learned from the sermon something they had not known before. It did not do to say merely that they preached the truth. Of course they preached the truth—he knew that—but they should likewise say something which would stimulate their hearers' curiosity, and awaken the desire for further knowledge. Thus they would induce those who listened to them to pursue with more intelligence and avidity than they had ever done before the particular subjects of which they, as preachers, had treated. He did not, of course, say that they were to crowd all they knew into a sermon (laughter) or that because there happened to have come to their hands a particular bit of information they should rush it in (laughter); but he did say there was many a sermon into which interesting information might be conveyed. Sermons should not be cast in a dry—what he would call the "sermonesque"—style. The preacher should say to himself when in front of the congregation, "These people are here, and I want to interest them. I want to persuade them of the necessity and importance of a reformation of life, and therefore I must give them reasons. I shall, accordingly, treat them as reasonable beings, reason being the common factor between us." Therefore, instead of allowing their sermons, as it were, to elaborate themselves, let them view their subject from a natural, moral, spiritual, and intellectual standpoint, and thus adduce reasons why the message it conveyed should be accepted as true. By adding to their discourse the illustrations which their own imagination would supply, they would be giving to it a likeness and an "acceptance" in the best sense of the word, which would be of the very greatest value.

FALLING BACK ON OLD SERMONS.

He would like to say a word on another point; namely, in regard to progress for themselves. (Applause.) The meaning of that was that the man who did not, day by day, advance in personal cultivation was losing his power over others. (Hear, hear.) He did not know whether it had happened to any of the clergy present, though it had occurred to himself when hard pressed with affairs to consider the possibility of falling back on an old sermon. (Laughter.) It might have occurred to them, because, of course, they had plenty of them. (Renewed Laughter.) Well, they went to their old storehouse, picked up a sermon, looked at it, and then said, "That won't do." (Laughter.) They took up another and found that it would "hardly suit." (Laughter.) And after looking over the whole lot they discovered nothing which would assist them. He did not know whether such an experience had happened to them, but he would be bold to say it had. (Laughter.) Why was it that they dare not go back on that old sermon? It was because there was happening in all of them something which they had not noticed. They had been growing. The clothes which formerly fitted them fitted them no longer, and however inconvenient that might be they should welcome it as a sign of growth. He would say to them therefore, "Progress!" Let them always keep alive, and let them press into service whatever they found suitable from the world of thought around them. Some years ago the most eminent bishop of his day in Ireland gave a charge to his clergy on the importance of preaching, and on the necessity of spending time in their studies so as to become acquainted with the world of thought. That bishop, it might interest them to know, was abused—though it was fifty years ago—just as he might have been to-day—(laughter)—by the critics in the newspapers. (Renewed laughter.)

AN APPEAL TO THE CLERGY.

He recognized how difficult it was, in face of the enormous increase in their work, and the necessity of devoting to it additional energy, for the clergy to find time to grow in power and efficiency, but he would say to them, "Do it for the sake of those to whom you minister!" Let them do it at all costs, for it was of transcendental importance that they should not have to go back on the old, dull, flat sermon, which they themselves felt did not fit their mood, and, they might be sure, did not fit the mood of their hearers. Let them keep alive, and then they would feel that they had something to say to their people. Let them study also to gain in spiritual depth and wisdom. Let them study the capacities for prayer and for communion with God. Let them realize his presence and love, which were eternal and unchanging. These would so grow and strengthen in their grasp over them that inspired thereby they would gain fresh knowledge and illustration from the great world about them, and so be enabled to carry on the message, ever old, yet ever new, to all the sons of men—a message which, because it was eternal, was none the less full of usefulness to humanity; and, because it was of this world, would help them to understand the world which was to come. (Loud applause.)

The Bishop pronounced the benediction, and the proceedings terminated.—Leeds Mercury, September 11, 1897.

TELLS WHY HE LEAVES PRESBYTERIANISM.

IN view of certain erroneous statements which have appeared recently with regard to the late reception into the communion of the Episcopal Church of Professor Charles W. Shields of Princeton College, Dr. Shields consented to-day, for the first time, to speak on the subject.

"For the last thirty years," he said, "I have held the chair of the Harmony of Science and Revealed Religion in the philosophical department of Princeton College, which, though practically Presbyterian, is under no ecclesiastical control.

"My retirement from the Presbyterian Church was voluntary and strictly constitutional and regular in form. The license of the much misrepresented Princeton Inn was indorsed by other church members in good standing and was not contrary to any Presbyterian law or canon applicable to the case.

"I left the Presbyterian Church on personal grounds, in order to protect myself from detraction, as well as to protest against a false temperance which seems now to be terrorizing that communion.

"In my letter of withdrawal I announced an intention to enter some other portion of the visible Catholic Church, and I have now fulfilled this intention consistently with my public record in the cause of Catholic unity. I have long maintained in my writings the historic churches of the reformation, such as the Lutheran, the Reformed, the Presbyterian, and the Protestant Episcopal, are generally more or less normal portions of the Catholic and Apostolic Church, which should be reunited in this country. To the last named communion, the Protestant Episcopal Church, I have been drawn by my studies, tastes, affinities, and opinions."

For many years Professor Shields has been an earnest advocate of the principles of church unity. In 1894 he became the founder and first President of the League of Catholic Unity.

Professor Shields is still the President of the league. He received the right of confirmation into the Episcopal Church at the hands of the Rt. Rev. A. N. Littlejohn, Bishop of Long Island, nearly two months ago, and not from Bishop Potter, as previously reported.—N. Y. Correspondent, Chicago Tribune, April 16.

FOODS AND THEIR EFFECT ON THE TEETH.

People who live on natural food have good teeth, while those who live on carbonaceous food have bad teeth. Savages, whether herbivorous or carnivorous, have good teeth. Our ancestors, who ate their grains and their meats as nature furnished them, with all their requisite elements, had good teeth, as have also the laboring classes of Europe and, indeed, of the whole world, who live in a similar manner. Good teeth are made and kept in repair only with food containing the elements of which good teeth are constructed, of which starch, butter, all oils and sugar contain not a particle. Of other causes of decay in teeth that next in importance to want of proper elements is the irregular temperature to which they are exposed.

TRIBUTE, LATE BUT GOOD.

THE Creston Gazette published at Creston, Union County, Iowa, issued a souvenir number for March, 1898, from which we extract the following in regard to the Mormons, the saints, exiled from the State of Illinois. It is a late but none the less pleasant tribute to an oppressed people:—

ADVENT OF MORMON PILGRIMS.

The first white people to dwell on Union County soil were Mormons who had left Nauvoo, Illinois, because of difficulties with the people of Hancock County. They left comfortable homes on the east bank of the Mississippi and journeyed westward to seek a new home where civilization would not molest or interfere with the customs and forms of their peculiar religion. After enduring untold hardships, suffering from cold and hunger, many of the band dying of disease brought on by exposure, a portion of the party stopped in Union County, June 17, 1846, having decided to make a temporary abiding place where they could rest, raise a crop, and thus secure a new stock of provisions before continuing their journey toward the setting sun. This band of Mormons halted on the east side of Grand River, on an elevated plateau, where they prepared to enjoy a season of rest. Their camping ground was near where the I. K. White homestead is now located, in Jones Township. About three thousand of them remained, the balance continuing westward to the Missouri River, where they stopped for a brief period. This village they called Kanessville, while the Union County stopping place was christened Pisgah. This point is an historic spot. The remains of many Mormons sleep there beneath the green sward, and an imposing monument, erected by the Utah Mormons some years ago, marks the last resting place of the dead.

It was a beautiful spot. Nature, at that season, was in her most handsome garb, and Pisgah was indeed a haven of rest to the weary pilgrims who had journeyed across Iowa toward the setting sun. Cabins were erected and ere long all were very comfortably located in a settlement about three miles square on sections 30 and 31, New Hope Township, 5, 6, 7, 8, 16-17-18-19, and 30 Jones Township, and 12 and 13 Union Township. Crops were planted and the rich soil yielded abundantly. The Mormons who formed the Pisgah colony were industrious and frugal, seemingly peaceable and not disposed to cause trouble in the village. Whatever difficulties arose were adjusted by reference to the church, subject to the approval of their ruling bishop. This officer during the early part of their stay was Huntington, who died during the latter part of the year 1846, and was buried at Pisgah. Huntington was succeeded by Coleman Boran, who was known as president. Two log churches were built, in which religious services were held. A mill was also erected on Grand River where some of the corn raised was ground into meal.

These Mormon pilgrims remained in this county several years, the last of them leaving in 1852, taking up the journey toward the Rockies. A portion of them finally reached Salt Lake, where a city was founded by these people, the first to till the soil in this part of Iowa, the advance guard of the civilization that followed shortly afterward. During their stay here, history tells us, this band of people were diligent and peaceable. While in this county they did not practice polygamy. Theirs was a hard life; a struggle under adverse circumstances, but it seems they continued firm in the faith, preferring to suffer hunger and cold rather than relinquish their religious creed. But they left their footprints on Union County soil; they were the pioneers. They erected the first cabins, built the first mill and were the first to till the soil here. Mt. Pisgah, in Jones Township, is the historic spot in all of Union County, a place made prominent because of toil and the hardships of the early pioneers who laid the foundations of this peerless county.

ORIGIN OF THE BROTHERN MOVEMENT.

BRO. C. J. HUNT sends us a copy of the Gospel Messenger, of December 4, 1897, the official organ of "The Brethren," published at Mount Morris, Illinois. In this publication we find some items of interest, among them the statement of the origin of the Brethren movement, which we give herewith.

We have an interest in tracing the origin of all religious societies, that the facts as they are may be learned and actual knowledge of the religious foundations upon which churches are built be made plain. We believe that societies should represent themselves, hence are glad to give the Brethren's statement just as they have prepared it:—

On the banks of the River Eder, in Germany, stands the ancient village of Schwarzenau. The whole country round about is a delightful region. Here, in the year 1708, very early on a beautiful morning, eight persons, in deep solitude, walked to the bank of the historic stream. There were five men and three women. They had previously decided that one of their number should baptize the leader, and he the rest of them. The form of baptism was that of trine immersion, but the name of the one to first perform the rite on this occasion has never been revealed. The leader is supposed to have been Alexander Mack. He was, at this time, twenty-nine years old, a man of considerable wealth, and no small amount of talent. He became the first preacher and elder in the Brethren Church, and helped to lay, in the hearts of the people, the foundation of a grand reformatory movement. He and his people accepted the New Testament as their only infallible rule of faith and practice, and, in harmony with its teachings, conducted the affairs of the kingdom. The doctrine preached by these earnest Brethren spread rapidly, and hundreds were gathered into the kingdom. In time bitter persecution swept away much of their property, scattered the flock, and drove most of them to America. They settled in the vicinity of Germantown, Pennsylvania. In the year 1729, Alexander Mack, now in his fifty-third year, sought a place of safety in the Western World. He settled in Germantown. He had been stripped of all his wealth, but rejoiced that he was permitted to worship the God he loved without being molested. His time, however, was short, for he lived only six years after landing in America, and now all that is mortal of him rests in the Brethren's burying ground, in the city of Germantown, Pennsylvania. Though a man of great piety and well versed in the Scriptures, he left behind him but one book. This was completed in the month of July, in 1713, only five years after he was baptized. It has been translated into English, and well deserves a careful reading. In their seventeenth year all his sons united with the church, and left behind them noble records.

That there may be no misunderstanding of the official character of the foregoing the following is also given from the same issue of the Messenger, page 776:—

The Gospel Messenger, published weekly, at $1.50 per annum, by Brethren Publishing House, Mount Morris, Illinois. D. L. Miller, Mount Morris, Illinois, H. B. Brumbaugh, Huntington, Pennsylvania, Editors. J. H. Moore, Office Editor. Joseph Amick, Business Manager. Advisory Committee, Enoch Eby, Daniel Hays, W. R. Deeter.

From the foregoing it will be seen that the inception of the movement was faulty in itself. The action of those initiating the organization was similar, in some respects, to that of the New Light or Campbellite movement, which was based upon the assumption that "If we have authority to preach, we also have authority to baptize." These two movements are but two among the many that have been inaugurated upon the supposition that men are authorized to originate religious organizations without direct authority to them from the great Head of the church. The sincerity and good intentions of church leaders are not called in question by these comments; it is the propriety and correctness of their acts that we question.

We find another clipping in the Messenger and which, unmarked, we call attention to:—

We are asked to say whether the church is divinely authorized to make laws to govern her members? Most assuredly she has not been so authorized. It is her duty to understand, teach, and enforce the laws laid down by inspiration, and recorded in the New Testament. The teaching of the New Testament she may interpret, and determine the meaning, but she has not the authority to make any law. She will do well if she teaches and enforces those already made.

We suggest that a close adherence to New Testament principles would prevent a multitude of organizations that are constantly appearing upon the scene and adding to the religious confusion and uncertainty that have caused the modern theological babel.

The provisions of holy writ for an authoritative reestablishment of the kingdom of God with the gospel as an ensign to the nations have offered and continued to offer the divine solution of the problem; a problem not left to the finite wisdom of imperfect, erring man. Our readers will note the many points suggested by the insertions.

WILLIAMS-BAYS DISCUSSION.

WHILE the HERALD goes to press we suppose that there is a sort of spirited discussion going on at Mondamin, Iowa, between Elder Davis H. Bays, of the Christian Church, and Brother Thomas W. Williams. Of the work Elder D. H. Bays, of the Christian Church has been doing of late the following is a specimen:—

D. H. Bays, of Persia, writes that he is ready to meet Mormons in discussion. He has been charged with cowardice by Latter Day Saints. Let them show willingness to discuss the real issue and he will be with them forty days and nights if necessary. By the way we have his book on Mormonism. Price $1.50.—Christian Index, of Des Moines, Iowa, April 20, 1898.

"Mormanism cannot be met and its doctrines refuted by tar and feathers. Many times have I been appealed to for literature to counteract the effect of Mormon literature and preaching. In D. H. Bays' work, 'Doctrines and Dogmas of Mormonism,' the demand is met. With few exceptions those who have undertaken to expose Mormonism have dealt with the follies and grosser crimes of the system and have paid little or no attention to the fundamental principles on which the church of the saints is based. In this volume the author has endeavored to present the doctrines of the church as it is defined by its leading minds, and overthrow the arguments presented and prove the entire system erroneous. He anticipates every objection and marshals his facts in a systematic, compact, and logical way. He has availed himself of the best scholarship of the day. If one wants a fair, clear, clean, dignified discussion of the whole scheme and history of Mormonism by one who is abundantly qualified for such work, both by natural ability and acquirements, one who advocated those principles for almost a lifetime and was then won from the error of his way by the power of the truth, then this is the book most heartily recommended."

The above is only part of the good things the Christian Guide, of Louisville, Kentucky, says of "Doctrines and Dogmas of Mormonism," by D. H. Bays.—Christian Evangelist, St. Louis.

Our Christian friends have not progressed far enough in Christian grace, as to give men and their theories right and proper names, and to those who differ from them courteous treatment. They do not even know how to spell Mormonism correctly all the time; but we are glad to learn that they are reaching the conclusion that the theories which they call Mormonism cannot be "met and refuted by tar and feathers." Good, sensible conclusion, that.

REVIEW OF UTAH ELDERS.

IN the San Diego, California, Evening Tribune for March 18, Bro. Albert Carmichael has a scathing review of one Elder J. W. Nixon, of Utah, who essayed a reply to a Rev. Charles R. Bliss, in regard to some theories and doctrines said to be held by the church in Utah. It really seems to us that the authorities of the church in Utah should inform the elders whom they send out on missions upon the history of the teaching and practices of the church under the rule of Pres. Brigham Young, Heber C. Kimball, J. M. Grant, George A. Smith, and others from 1844 to 1876, as the same are shown in the church literature current at the time.

Burns wrote once:—

O, would some power the giftie gie us
To see ourselves as others see us;
It would from many a blunder free us,

Some of the young elders sent out are compelled to keep silent when the works and teachings of President Young and others confront them, all because they are ignorant of the past of the church they essay to serve.

When Job wrote, "O that mine enemy had written a book," he knew well how hard it was for a man to meet and justify his own record, if he had been growing crooked in life's ways. The Times and Seasons, published from 1839 to 1846; the Deseret News, and the Journal of Discourses, are formidable documents for our Utah contemporaries to face. Bro. Carmichael has used the Journal well in his screed in the Tribune at San Diego.

MISTAKE CORRECTED.

WE are requested by Bro. T. W. Williams to give room to the following:—

I am pleased to report that Benjamin Winchester did not lecture against Mormonism. He informs me that he has said nothing reflective of our people; that what has been said in their meetings has been rather complimentary. T. W. WILLIAMS.

We hope that Mr. Winchester will accept the correction in good part. We do not know whose was the mistake in reporting the meeting heretofore referred to in the HERALD.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

BRO. W. H. KELLEY, Temple, Ohio, May 6:—

Our business meeting here went off nicely and satisfactorily on Tuesday night last. Sunday meetings are arranged as follows: Sunday school at nine a. m.; preaching at eleven; prayer service 2:30 p. m.; and preaching at 7:30 p. m. Officers elected were Frank Steffe president, D. H. Proper and E. Miller priests, E. Curry teacher, J. Gillespie deacon, William Grazer clerk, Sr. Martha Lake treasurer, Sr. J. Abbott solicitor; so Kirtland has made a good beginning under the new regime. Brn. J. H. Lake and G. T. Griffiths are here; Sr. Griffiths and family returned from the East on the 4th inst. Bro. F. C. Smith preached here last Sunday evening and starts on a mission to the northeastern part of the district this morning. The writer occupied at Cleveland last Sunday, where there is a little band of saints standing up for the cause and wearing a look that means success; saints reported as well. Late spring, trees are in bloom. Mother Earth is covered with a carpet of green. Atmosphere cool and the weather is damp. The war cry is prominent and newspaper men are reaping a harvest. Everybody is glad that Uncle Sam is teaching the folks across the waters some needed lessons. It is said fools learn only by experience, and "whom the gods would destroy they first make mad." Satisfied with church and country, yours, etc.

Bro. R. M. Maloney, Kingfisher, Oklahoma, May 12:—

All well, in good health, and encouraged in the prospects for this year's labor. Father is with us.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

THE HERALD readers are indebted to Bro. J. F. Mintun for the report of the Williams-Bays debate which appears in the present issue. Under date of the 12th Bro. Mintun writes: "All goes well; commence the second proposition to-night. Campbellite Church on trial the next three nights; large crowds." The 13th: "First night on second proposition passed off pleasantly. Bays has conceded enough to overthrow his claims and Bro. Williams used his concessions with telling effect. Larger attendance than previously."

We learn with regret that Bro. L. L. Wight, who writes from Medina, Texas, has been quite disabled, the result of a kick from a horse, which broke the right arm. That and an attack of "lagrip," put him out of the fight for awhile.

Sr. Groom, formerly of Council Bluffs, Iowa, now of Helena, Montana, would like some HERALDS or Ensigns to distribute about where she lives. Address her care A. R. Lemon, No. 54 South Rodney Street, Helena, Montana. She says, also, that should any of the eldership be passing or desirous to do some work at Helena, she would be one to help the work on. Those having the charge of that part of the field might do the sister some good by calling on her.

Bro. J. W. Peterson would like to get the addresses of any and all saints or their friends desiring visits at Dubuque, Iowa. Address him at Fulton, Iowa, between May 17 and 21. Bro. Peterson will be at Dubuque May 23 or 24. He would also preach at Rock Island, Illinois, May 8, and at Clinton, Iowa, May 15.

Bro. G. H. Hilliard has been and is yet at Lamoni, in attendance at sessions of the Board of Directors and Board of Trustees of Graceland College, which have met and organized and transacted business during the past ten days. Bro. H. has also been engaged with Bishop Kelley in work pertaining to the temporal arm of the service.

Original Poetry.

BEHOLD THE LAMB OF GOD.

BY J. S. STRAIN.

O Jesus, blessed Lamb of God,
Whose weary feet this earth hath trod,
Oft wearied with thy toils by day,
No place thy weary head to lay.

Thy body also suffered pain,
As thou didst tread Judea's plain;
Thou hast surely, suffered all,
Entailed on us by Adam's fall.

No different were thy pains from mine,
Although in part thou wert divine;
Human, our pains and woes to know,
Divine, the blessing to bestow.

Yes, thou wert often seen to sigh,
As scenes of sorrow met thine eye;
Sighed to see what sin had wrought,
In Eden's garden, sacred spot.

Yea thou didst weep at Lazarus' grave,
The friend whom thou did'st come to save,
And called him back to life again,
Who in the grave four days had lain.

The harlot, kneeling at thy feet,
Did for thy pard'ning love entreat;
Her many sins thou didst forgive,
And bade her go in peace and live.

The sick, the lame, the halt, the blind,
In thee a present help did find;
And none were ever turned away,
Who unto thee for help did pray.

O Him of Nazareth, blessed friend,
On whom our hopes of life depend;
How oft we wound thy tender heart,
When we from virtue's path depart.

O thou art loving, kind, and just,
Help us, dear Lord, in thee to trust;
To trust whatever may befall,
O be to us our all in all!

Our all in sickness and in health,
Our all in poverty and wealth;
In whom we trust for sins forgiven,
On whom we rest our hopes of heaven.

Be ours when earthly friends shall fail,
Be ours when passing through the vale;
Then take away death's sting and pain,
And bring us forth with thee to reign.

SELECT READING FOR JUNE MEETINGS OF DAUGHTERS OF ZION.

READING.—CONTINUED.

"WHAT is trashy reading?" one asks; "does it include all fiction?" by no means. It is said of Christ that without a parable spake he not unto them, and parables are a species of fiction. Fiction has a legitimate place in literature, an important work to perform; but it must be such fiction as is true to life, and inspires to purer, nobler manhood and womanhood. Trashy reading is such fiction as presents distorted views of life, addresses the weaker rather than the stronger side of our nature, and whose effect is to enervate and thus to unfit for the real conflict of life. If you are in doubt concerning which side a book belongs to, read it yourself before allowing your child to do so, and note its effect upon your own mind; if in closing it you are conscious of having gained good from its perusal, a better understanding of nature and of men, a firmer determination to do right, or if it has rested you and given you a few hours of healthy fun or pleasure, the book is a good one; you can safely trust it in the hands of your child. If contrary effects follow, be sure your child will be better off without reading it. . . .

A taste for good reading must be cultivated; this will destroy a relish for the bad. Make sure that from the very first the papers and books given your child to read are pure in sentiment and diction, healthful in moral tone, bright and interesting, true to his own child-life or its noblest ideal.

No matter how good a book may be, if it is dull and stupid, or written in stilted style, foreign to child language and thought, no child will read it willingly. But when as now, the brightest minds, the most ready pens in the country, are engaged in preparing literature for our boys and girls, there is no need of giving them either unpalatable or unhealthy mental food. We do not believe that the child lives who would not be charmed with "Our Little Ones" or "Wide Awake;" the boy or girl whose taste has not been vitiated that would not enjoy the "Youth's Companion," "St. Nicholas," or "Harper's Young People." And as for books, pure, bright, entertaining, instructive, their names are legion.

Character is determined by reading fully as much as by associates. Books read in childhood often influence destiny. When Benjamin Franklin was a little boy, the remnant of an old book, tattered and torn, fell into his hands. It was Cotton Mather's "Essays to do Good." In his letters Franklin says: "Several leaves were missing, but the remainder gave me such a turn of thinking as to have an influence on my conduct through life; for I have always set a greater value on the character of a doer of good than any other kind of reputation, and if I have been a useful citizen the public owes all the advantage of it to that little book." Jeremy Bentham records that the whole current of his thought and the studies of his life were directed by a single phrase in a book which attracted his attention when a child, "The greatest good to the greatest number." . . .

Well-read children are best equipped for life. They stand on firmer foundations and have a broader outlook than those whose knowledge is circumscribed. They more naturally grow into men and women of general intelligence, able to cope with difficulties, because fertile in expedients to overcome them. Whatever befalls them it is strange if in their reading they have not met its parallel and gained some hint to govern their own conduct in the circumstances. For this reason well-written biographies of noble men and women, especially their boy and girl life, are helpful to our little men and women. No boy can read "The Boy Franklin," "David Livingstone," or the "Life of Peter Cooper;" no girl can become thoroughly acquainted with Lydia Maria Child, Mary Lyon, Frederika Bremer, Dorothea Dix, Emily Huntington Miller, "Pansy," Mrs. Somerville or Frances Power Cobbe without forming higher purposes in life, and having the good within her deepened and strengthened. The early reading of books that aid in forming high ideals has prevented shipwreck in thousands of lives. When treating of imagination we saw what an important part ideals play in forming character. The books we read, the companions we choose, determine, in large measure, what these ideals are.

Fixed habits of reading good books form a safeguard against temptation. They provide occupation for the spare moments—and the spare moments are the time when temptation enters. They erect a barrier against bad companionship, both of men and books, and make such companionship, when forced upon us, so distasteful that it loses its power to harm. If one loves to read and has formed the habit of reading good books, he will pass through unscathed through temptations which ruin his neighbors not thus protected. All the homilies on morality ever written have not the power to keep boys out of the saloon, the dance-house, the gambling-hell, which such ideals fixed in his mind might have. How can a young man find any pleasure in such naunts after his soul has become thoroughly imbued with this sentiment of Milton's: "That a man to be strong must be absolutely pure; that great courage, magnanimity, and achievement are based upon self-respect; that a man shall be as perfect as his ideal of a woman; that self-mastery, with disdain of the finical, luxurious, and immoral must be the first conquest; that a great man must be himself unblemished."

What girl can fritter away the blessed dawn of girlhood in vanity and aimlessness, if on her heart are engraved these words of Ruskin: "Remember that the happiness of your life, and its power, and its post, and rank on earth and in heaven depend on the way you pass your days now. They are not to be sad days; far from that—the first duty of young people is to be delighted and delightful—but they are to be in the deepest sense, solemn days. There is no solemnity so deep to a rightly thinking creature as that of the dawn. But not only in that beautiful sense, but in all their character and methods, they are to be solemn days. Every day of your early life is ordaining irrevocably for good or evil, the custom and practice of your soul; ordaining either sacred customs of dear and lovely recurrence, or trenching deeper and deeper the furrows for seeds of sorrow. Now, therefore, see that no day passes in which you do not make yourself a somewhat better creature."—Childhood; its Care and Culture.

In our next we will append brief lists of books in various departments of reading, which we trust will be found helpful to parents, also to such committees as may be seeking books for the Sunday school library. It will be well therefore for the local presidents to provide their own selections for the July meeting as we will not have space for both.

PRAYER UNION.

SPECIAL REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.

MARY A. FARLEY, Durango, Colorado, asks special prayers in behalf of her little girl, that if it be God's will, she might be healed of cancer on her gums.

Sr. Ellen Frankvill, Blair, Nebraska, wishes prayers for her brother, Dan Carter, who is paralyzed and has not walked nor talked for three months, that he may regain his speech and use of his limbs.

Letter Department.

GARDEN GROVE, Cal., May 4.

Editors Herald:—I have been enjoying the pleasures of home for a season. I have been quite busy since getting here, visiting the branches and friends. Wife complains some at my pretending to be at home when I am not; but after a year's absence among strangers it is pleasant indeed to meet old friends again.

The branches of this district seem to be improving. That of Los Angeles is already showing the effects of the labors of Bro. Henry Smith, in the increased attendance, and especially in the good feeling and unity that seem to obtain in it. His being placed there was a wise move. All large branches should have some one who can devote all his time to them.

This will be a hard year for the work in California in a financial sense, as crops are almost a total failure. Myself and many others of the West were surprised at the number of men appointed to California—eight or ten, and two to Oregon and Washington. The appointing powers surely do not realize the necessity of laborers in the North; or do they think the two mentioned, equal to the nine? Well, I trust we will all do the best we can. If the war goes on it will be hard to interest the people in gospel matters.

I shall start on my mission the eighth, if all goes well; and will here take occasion to say that I am satisfied with my appointment; and will again say to the saints and friends of Oregon and Washington that we (Bro.

Chase and myself) ask them for their cooperation. During the past year we had no reason to complain, but rather to be thankful for the assistance received from the saints and our Father, and trust that the coming year will be blessed to our cause, as it surely will if we all work together, remembering that while it is God's work it is also ours. Doubtless some disappointment will be felt on account of no more men being appointed for that field, but it is well to bear in mind that God's ways are not often ours, but with your help we will try and fill all calls. We very nearly done so last year, and feel just as determined this year.

We will be pleased to hear from all, especially from those wanting preaching. We have not mapped out our plan of operation for the summer; will know better how to do so when we hear from those of the mission. My address for a while will be Looking Glass, Douglass County, Oregon.

Trusting that God will bless and direct us the coming year, I remain,

Your coworker,

HIRAM L. HOLT.

FULTON, Iowa, May 9.

Editors Herald:—We are not dead, but might be more active in the Master's service; we cannot do too much for our God.

We have been blessed of late. I had the pleasure of baptizing two; one quite old man, and one young German Lutheran lady, the fruits of whose labor I know not, but God gave the increase. May many yet obey the gospel in this branch.

We seem to be in love and union as a branch. We all seem to love one another, by which means we should know that we are Christ's disciples. May we so continue, for how would it be if a child was born and given to a cold-hearted stepmother? And if we are in love with God and his work, we will let our light shine to all about us. We would also give of our substance for the advancement of his cause, we would pay what is due the Lord, and not rob God. We would remember that whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap. The more we do for him the more he will bless us.

The Lord has blessed me in various ways in the past, for which I feel thankful. May Zion prosper and let her light shine in these troublesome times.

Your brother,

JOHN HEIDE.

NOTES AND NOTIONS.

ON Bro. R. May's return to "the royal Suburb" the saints listened to a sermon treating somewhat of the great barrier, between the church and people, as it exists in England.

As immorality is coming in upon the world like a flood it will be necessary, he said, that the moral tone of the church be raised in order that the honest may say that this gospel came not in word but in power.

A Sunday school worker in one of our large branches believes that the difficulty of carrying on Sunday school work with complete order and discipline can be considerably obviated by choosing officers and teachers, well seasoned, and mostly from the ranks of the priesthood, instead, as in some instances, from among the inexperienced element.

Good, patient teachers, he remarks, should not be suffered to toil on with only two or three pupils while others with no greater ability perhaps face every Lord's day from twenty to thirty; and he is supplemented by the prophetic cry, "There'll be an explosion from the outside some day." We do not think so; only let us be just toward one another.

Above all things, we think social position among Sunday school workers should be estimated as "a hoary relic of a mossy past."

The late forward movement of our President and his consort in favoring the peculiar adjustment of the Stars and Stripes and the Union Jack on the occasion of their nuptial feast was a cheery omen, as we see it now, of our amicable relationship with the mother country.

All the Dewey folks are feeling in good spirits, and among the surging crowd is a Latter Day Saint sister here whose claim is that an old sweetheart of hers was related to the hero.

While the boys were "marching away" giving a long and lingering look toward the imposing stone church, the dear old Temple Lot, clad in richest verdure, with all the realities, and possibilities, clustering around its glorious future, attracted the gaze of many a tearful eye; but just as attractive then were the red, white, and blue colors waving majestically from a United States officer's trees opposite. The only person who noticed nobody going along was "Wardie" the small boy who, with a newspaper close to his face, was reading "the latest."

Well may we be proud of Old Glory, under whose beneficent colors, "dethroned kings and defeated revolutionists" have alike found safety. The patriot may leave home and family to serve in the cause of freedom from oppression, the war poet may sing of his love for country, our statesmen may with cunning eloquence tell of their country's vast resources, her independence, her opulence, and the beneficence shown toward her own and the vast immigrant population, but the one great source of delight to every Latter Day Saint is the knowledge that here, beneath the soil of loved America, were laid away, centuries ago, the historic records of God's ancient people and from her sacred soil sprang forth the greatest light of many centuries, a light which is destined when empires and earthly kingdoms shall have crumbled to dust, to fill the earth with a glory inconceivable.

Who can love America so well as the inheritors and guardians of such a wondrous gift to man, as the Book of Mormon? Quite a cutting criticism is the following upon some one's writings at the Hub:—"Nobody in the United States knew there was such a person in the service of Admiral Dewey, until a Boston newspaper announced in one of its headlines that 'Several was killed at Manila.'" But we are nearly all "in it." Even the eldership of our church, were it not addicted to the "verb habit," might be classed among the literati of the age; and it is plainly to be seen that we must have a corps, in reserve, of college-bred ministers, for special occasions at least. . . .

The Literary Exchange was on the very eve of donating a few Voice of Warnings to the soldier boys, when Bro. J. C. Foss announced that "they are going down to give a Voice of Warning to the Cubans." Of course he meant the followers of General Blanco; so we retreated for the present.

They say "a man is as old as he feels," which makes Admiral Dewey about twenty-one. But pshaw! our President can score that. He is four or five years older than the Admiral; but to see his maneuvers at the head of the conference one would not have judged him to be over twenty.

Spain Street, New Orleans, has been changed to Dewey Avenue; and our patriotic choir librarian says she will erase "Isabella," "Florence," "Augusta," and all those mediæval titls from the "Choir Herald" covers and substitute good Yankee names.

Everybody is studying history. Even the once peace-loving Sunday school teacher is studiously reviewing passing events, and making good use of her researches.

It seems to be impossible for our elders to "close" without letting the congregation know just how they stand as to Pobre Espana. There was no apparent demonstration last Sunday at the morning service ably conducted by Bro. Luff; but in the evening (pulpit occupied by G. H. Hilliard) enthusiastic applause was heard from the "amen corner" and a silent clapping of hands was noticeable in the choir, previous to the final song—

"My country, 'tis of Thee."

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, May 16, 1898.

MONDAMIN, Iowa, May 12.

Editors Herald:—I was pleased that you inserted Mr. Benjamin Winchester's note. It was reported, and I heard it from a number, that he was to lecture against Mormonism. He informs me that nothing has been said against our people, but some things were said in our favor. It is encouraging that this old veteran of the "days of yore" does not feel to fight the doctrine of his youth. We congratulate him.

DELHI, Ont., May 7.

Editors Herald:—This morning, after partial recovery from la grippe I thought I would pen your readers a few lines, as no doubt many will be asking, "What is Bro. Tomlinson doing, as we have not heard from him for a long time?" For the last two weeks I have been laid up with la grippe, not able to do anything, but at present I am gaining strength again and expect to be out in the field ere long. I intend returning to King Lake, as many are anxious for my return. This is a new place I opened up in last December. I secured the schoolhouse one mile east of there; held revival meetings for nine nights. The first night there were but one man and a few little boys present, but before the nine nights were closed the house would not seat them all. And, of course this did not please some, and the house was closed. This was on December 16. I then went to Otterville branch, then on home for Christmas holidays. I remained home two days, then on to Petrolia to see my parents. I labored there some, and by request of Bro. H. Huston and the promptings of the divine Comforter I went to Forest and held revival meeting there one week; baptized two heads of families; then on home and remained two days, then on to Otterville branch. Here I held revival meetings, over a week; baptized two there, and one more followed there in a short while after, making three there as results of those meetings.

I then went back to King Lake, secured the Baptist church as it was vacant. The pastor there could get no one out to hear him, so gave it up. I held revival meetings there for seven nights, and almost filled the church; and of course this displeased some of their head men, and they ordered this holy temple to be closed, and we were once more turned out in the cold. But there was a good Samaritan, an exhorter in the Messiah Church, who had attended my meetings all the way through, and he let me have a vacant house right in the village. The following evening, with the assistance of Bro. Isaac Pearson and others in favor of our work, we had it cleaned out and seated, and well filled with interesting listeners. I continued there up to the 6th of March with crowded house every night and Sundays. The last week there Elder John McKenzie, from Drombo, ran over and rendered good service for a few nights. We were glad to get help, as I was most done out, preaching every night and on Sundays and acting as deacon and pastor, sweeping, cutting wood, lighting fires, shoveling snow, and visiting and talking half the night with the people after services.

On the 5th of March I received word that my mother was not expected to live, to come immediately, so had to leave a fine interest there. However mother did not die, so I returned home and began packing up household effects and moved my family down to this place. After getting settled I returned to King Lake, but found a tenant in the house. He gave me privilege to hold two meetings that day, as I had sent notice ahead to the postmaster there for meetings at 2:30 and 7:30 p. m. and of course we were closed out again. I then visited one week there, talking and praying with the people. The following Sunday I came back to North Middleton branch to help them, as that was their first Sunday to begin their Sunday school. We had a good gathering and I enrolled twenty-five scholars, most all of them outsiders. Then I returned to King Lake, tried several places to get to hold meetings in and failed. The church and school and hall were all denied me. Then I thought, "Why not try and build a church?" I went to the postmaster there, who strongly defended me and cared for me considerable whilst there. I said: "What will you give towards building a Latter Day Saints church here?" He said, "I will give you the ground right across there," pointing to the opposite side of the road from the post office. "All right," I replied. So I went right at it and drew up a subscription list. He signed me over the ground and said, "When you start to build I will do more for you." This man is one of the wealthiest men there, owning one hundred and fifty acres of land, a store, and blacksmith shop, post office, and two dwelling houses. In all so far I have the promise of the ground, and fifteen hundred feet of lumber, and thirty dollars in money, and several days work, and the carpet for the stand.

I then returned home. The week being very wet and no appointment out for Sunday, the following Monday I felt impressed to return there, and so boarded my two wheel chariot and arrived there by noon, took dinner with Mr. Emerson Beemer, the good samaritan. After dinner I started for the post office, met an attendant of my meetings, and learned from him that one Rev. Mr. MacIntosh from California, was engaged by the Baptists to lecture against the church. This was about two o'clock in the afternoon, and all my books were seven miles away. However, I made good time there, got my histories, took abstracts and notes concerning the characters of Joseph and Hyrum, and Whitmer, Cowdery, and others, the Temple Lot Suit, the Dickhout case in Canada, and prepared myself for the battle. It was then five minutes past seven, and I had about nine miles to make by eight o'clock, as that was the hour the lecture began. When I got in about a mile and a half of Mr. Beemer's, I broke the pedal of my wheel, and had to walk and run the rest of the way. However, I succeeded in getting there in time. A chairman was appointed, and the reverend gentleman began his preamble. I took notes, and after he got through asked for permission to reply. The reverend gentleman did not want to give me the privilege of replying, but I called for a vote of the house. The chairman put the vote and it was carried in our favor; but limited me to a half hour's speech. I read extensively from Doctrine and Covenants and Book of Mormon, and the marriage trial in Canada in 1893, and the temple suit at Kirtland and our marriage ceremony, and quoted the revelations on one wife system, also Emma Smith's dying testimony concerning the burning of the polygamous revelation, showing it was a creature of Brigham Young's own make up. The history entitled "From Palmyra to Independence" rendered me great service, as I had copied many leading men's testimonies concerning the good character of the prophet and his assistants in bringing forth the latter-day work.

I felt bold in standing up for the cause I love so well. Before I took the stand my legs were trembling under me, and my heart beat fast; but after I arose, all timidity left me, and peace came to my soul, and I felt that God was near. And so he was, and he helped his weak child. This is the first time I ever had to meet an opponent in this line. This man claimed he had been in Salt Lake, and California, and Michigan and other states and claimed the Utah Church and the Reorganization were all the same; but this he could not prove. I proved to the contrary.

We think all worked for good and that God will cause the wrath of man to praise him. After the lecture I called to see the Baptist deacon, to see how he felt. He received me very kindly, and expressed his willingness to learn more of our faith, and that he was seeking for light, and that was the reason he got this reverend gentleman to lecture on what he called Mormonism. These are not just his words, but the inferences. I had a long chat with him, with the invitation to come again, as he wished to know more about the church. I will return as soon as I feel able to do mission work. I wish I could give the outline of this reverend gentleman's discourse, but space will not permit; besides a lot of it was slang, about like we would hear in a bar room.

Ever praying for the welfare of Zion, I am as ever, your well wisher,

S. WM. TOMLINSON.

DEFENSIVE.

PERHAPS no doctrine taught in the Holy Scriptures has been so fruitful of controversy as the principle of baptism. Many have been the speculative opinions expressed in sermons, books, and papers; and the common people are kept in a constant state of mental bias and uncertainty by professed religious teachers.

Theoretical dogma has largely displaced the practical observance of the divinely appointed rite. Fine spun hobbies have seemingly satisfied the conscience of the doctors of divinity, until their divisive teaching, as Dean Stanley says:—

The changes have altered the very meaning of the apostolic language.

Lyman Abbott, in relation to baptism and Christ accepting and teaching the same, says:—

Baptism was not adopted by Christ till after his resurrection, and it was then ratified and made sacred by a new significance rather than commanded as a necessary service. There is no evidence that any one of the twelve ever received what we should call Christian baptism, i. e., the baptism in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. Christ never administered the rite. And though there are reasons to think that the four disciples, Peter, Andrew, Philip, and John, who joined Jesus first at the Jordan, may have been baptized by the Baptist, since they were previously his disciples, yet it is clear that such a baptism was not recognized as a Christian rite by the apostles.

This entire absence of all ceremonies not only gave offense to the Pharisees, but was a cause of serious perplexity to the honest disciples of John. They questioned whether one could really be the Messiah whose views on baptism and ablutions were so lax, and who positively disowned all observance of religious fasts.—Jesus of Nazareth, p. 224-5.

All these propositions, no matter how egregiously erroneous they may appear, are supported, as Mr. Abbott supposes, by the scriptures. That Christ did not adopt baptism till after his resurrection, he cites Matthew 28:19, and Mark 16:16, 17. He has the following footnote on Mark 16:—

Make belief, but not baptism, essential, though it is by far the strongest passage in support of the necessity of the ordinance. It is not found in some of the oldest manuscripts, and its genuineness is matter of grave dispute among Bible critics.

That Christ did not administer the ordinance of baptism he cites John 4:2. That John's baptism was not Christian baptism he cites Acts 19:1-5. That Christ disowned all religious feasts and was lax as to the necessity of baptism he cites John 3:25, 26. Christ was not the author of baptism, therefore there is no such a thing as Christ—or Christian baptism, in the sense that baptism originated with him, the proof is found in the following:—

My doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me.—John 7:16.

This avowal upon the part of Christ disproves the empty assertion that he was the author or originator of baptism. Paul writes concerning the people of God under the leadership of Moses:—

And were all baptized unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea; and did all eat the same spiritual meat; and did all drink the same spiritual drink; for they drank of that spiritual Rock that followed them: and that Rock was Christ.—1 Cor. 10:2-4.

The provisions of salvation being administered during the time of Egyptian exodus is in harmony with:—

I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end, the first and the last.—Rev. 22:13.

The truth revealed in the above was understood by Peter when he made answer to Jesus:—

Lord, to whom shall we go? thou hast the words of eternal life.—John 6:68.

John's testimony agrees with the above:—

A man can receive nothing, except it be given him from heaven.—John 3:27.

The marginal reading makes this verse to read:—

A man can take unto himself nothing, except it be given him from heaven.

As this is in immediate connection with the subject of baptism, the case stands thus—neither John, nor yet Jesus could take unto themselves the ordinance of baptism, or any other ordinance, principle, or office, only as God shall grant from heaven. The adoption of baptism by Jesus, or rather his submitting to the ordinance, is recorded as follows:—

Then cometh Jesus from Galilee to Jordan unto John, to be baptized of him. But John forbade him, saying, I have need to be baptized of thee, and comest thou to me? And Jesus answering said unto him, Suffer it to be so now: for thus it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness. Then he suffered him. And Jesus, when he was baptized, went up straightway out of the water: and, lo, the heavens were opened unto him, and he saw the Spirit of God descending like a dove, and lighting upon him: and lo a voice from heaven, saying, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased.—Matt. 3:13-17.

And it came to pass in those days, that Jesus came from Nazareth of Galilee, and was baptized of John in Jordan.—Mark 1:9.

Now when all the people were baptized, it came to pass, that Jesus also being baptized, and praying, the heaven was opened.—Luke 3:21.

None can honestly and truthfully say that Jesus did not submit to the baptism of John. Now let me ask you, dear reader, if John's baptism was good enough for Jesus, and in so doing he was fulfilling all righteousness, was it not equally good enough for all other people of that time? Especially so, when it is clear that this ordinance was committed from heaven unto that Prophet, saying, The voice of one crying in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths straight.—Luke 3:4.

In the cheerful submission of Christ to the heaven appointed ordinance of baptism there is something quite significant in the following confession:—

And he that sent me is with me: the Father hath not left me alone; for I do always those things that please him.—John 8:29.

This is a most beautiful thought and so nicely expressed, that God who sent his Son as a "propitiation for our sins," did not leave that Son alone in his arduous work of self-abnegation and severest trial alone, and that dutiful Son "always" did that which was pleasing unto his loving Father.

The reader will make note of the following important fact—God the Eternal Father did not publicly acknowledge Jesus Christ to be his Son until that Son came up out of the water of baptism, then the Father opened heaven and sent down the astonishing announcement: "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased."

As to the baptism of the twelve apostles, be it understood that the silence of the inspired writers, the absence of documentary evidence, is not absolute and positive proof against the baptism of the said twelve, for the individual is hopelessly swamped in defeat, who undertakes to prove by any other than implication that any person of that time was ever baptized according to the formula: "in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." The want or absence of such evidence that any were so baptized is not to be so construed that none were so baptized as required in the commission of the apostles to go and preach the gospel to "all nations." And it is further, nothing but logically fair that these apostles, in their preaching, required no more of the converts made by their preaching, than they themselves had complied with.

The magnitude of misrepresentations made against Jesus Christ by professed followers, will never be known till eternity shall unclothe them to the astonished view of the self-deceived. There are millions who seem to honestly believe that "Christ never administered the rite" of baptism. The examination of a little scripture should remove such a false idea.

After these things came Jesus and his disciples into the land of Judea; and there he tarried with them, and baptized.—John 3:22.

Avoiding the coloring adroitly foisted upon the foregoing text by the perversion of creed interpretation it would convey the following intelligent communication to our mind: That after the events previously recorded, Jesus in company with his disciples came into Judea, temporarily located, or prolonged their visit, and while thus remaining in that vicinity, no doubt ministering the word of the gospel to the people "He"—that is Christ—"baptized." The personal pronoun "He" is so indivisibly connected with the action "baptized," that to adopt any other view than that Christ officiated in the ordinance of baptism, would make this word of the Lord nugatory and meaningless to us.

And John also was baptizing in Enon near to Salim, because there was much water there; and they came and were baptized.—John 3:23.

I have never learned that anyone called in question that this verse taught that John baptized those who came worthily to him, and it certainly teaches more. The word "also" establishes the fact that John was "like-wise" baptizing, or, "in like manner" to some one else baptizing. Christ and John are the two central figures of the gospel narrative here recorded, and plainly teaches that both were engaged in the act of administering the rite of baptism.

We next have some of the Jews and John's disciples discussing the topic of "purifying," that is, the forgiveness of sin—the remission of sin through or by obedience to the ordinance of baptism, and this occasioned the following:—

And they came unto John, and said unto him, Rabbi, he [Christ] that was with thee beyond Jordan, to whom [Christ] thou barest witness, behold, the same [Christ] baptizeth, and all men come to [Christ] him.—John 3:26.

The reading of this always impressed me that somebody was jealous of the success of Jesus baptizing, and perhaps there was a desire upon the part of those visitors to John to create strife between him and his illustrious cousin, seeing that both John and Jesus were preaching:—

Repent ye: for the kingdom of heaven is at hand.—Matt. 3:2, and 4:17.

Those who discovered that these two men were preaching alike and administering the ordinance of baptism alike, were either ignorant that both were the sent of God, or meddlesome in other men's business; but John had a perfect understanding of the situation when he testified of Christ:—

He must increase, but I must decrease.—John 3:30.

By this time, possibly, some are getting uneasy lest I omit to notice that portion of the word depended on by all who hold a contrary opinion to that of Christ personally administering the ordinance of baptism. Well here it is:—

When therefore the Lord knew how the Pharisees had heard that Jesus made and baptized more disciples than John, (though Jesus himself baptized not, but his disciples.)—John 4:1-2.

This seems to lack explicitness in that it contradicts the statements of chapter three, and furnishes the un-believer with argument against the claims of those who profess to believe the Bible. It may be a partial fulfillment of an ancient prophecy:—

Who is this that darkeneth counsel by words without knowledge?—Job 38: 20.

There is another translation that I will submit as my explanation, it reads:—

When therefore the Pharisees had heard that Jesus made and baptized more disciples than John, they sought more diligently some means that they might put him to death; for many received John as a prophet, but they believed not on Jesus. Now the Lord knew this, though he himself baptized not so many as his disciples; for he suffered them for an example, preferring one another.—John 4: 1-4.

On the question of whether the baptism of John was a Christian baptism—or of like worth for salvation to the baptism administered by the Apostles, will make a short comparison.

REPENTANCE AND BAPTISM.

JOHN.

Repent ye: for the kingdom of heaven is at hand. . . . And were baptized of him in Jordan, confessing their sins. . . . I indeed baptize you with water unto repentance.—Matt. 3: 2, 6, 11.

John did baptize in the wilderness, and preach the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins. And there went out unto him all the land of Judea, and they of Jerusalem, and were all baptized of him in the river of Jordan, confessing their sins.—Mark 1: 4, 5.

And he came into all the country about Jordan, preaching the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins. . . . Then said he to the multitude that came forth to be baptized of him, O generation of vipers, who hath warned you to flee from the wrath to come? Bring forth therefore fruits worthy of repentance. . . . John answered, saying unto them all, I indeed baptize you with water.—Luke 3: 3, 7, 8, 16.

There was a man sent from God, whose name was John. . . . John answered them, saying, I baptize with water.—John 1: 6, 26.

For John truly baptized with water.—Acts 1: 5.

CHRIST AND THE APOSTLES.

He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned.—Mark 16: 16.

And said unto them, Thus it is written, and thus it behooved Christ to suffer, and to rise from the dead the third day: and that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem. And ye are witnesses of these things.—Luke 24: 46-48.

Then Peter said unto them, Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins.—Acts 2: 38.

But when they believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized, both men and women. . . . And Philip said, If thou believest with all thine heart, thou mayest. And he answered and said, I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God. And he commanded the chariot to stand still: and they went down both into the water, both Philip and the eunuch; and he baptized him.—Acts 8: 12, 37, 38.

And now why tarriest thou? arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord.—Acts 22: 16.

Let us draw near with a true heart in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water.—Heb. 10: 22.

theological hair-splitting definitions, may be able to discover that John's preaching and baptism was not Christian! But work-a-day people will only be able to see that John preached repentance and baptism for the remission of sin, and that Christ and colaborers preached repentance and baptism for the remission of sin, and that repentance and baptism for the remission of sins are God's means of salvation for mankind. This talk about John's baptism not being a Christian baptism is a polite way of branding John as a fraud or impostor, or that God sends men to preach a gospel in which there is no salvation.

The slam at Jesus that he was "lax" in anything pertaining to duty or obedience, is without a screed of evidence, and is a reflection upon the memory of him that never man spake like this man.—John 7: 46, and taught them as one having authority, and not as the scribes.—Matt. 7: 29.

That Jesus disregarded the traditions and perversions of his time can easily be understood; but without doubt he was most punctilious in the requirements of God's immutable law. Of a truth it is now as it was of old:—

For what man knoweth the things of a man, save the spirit of man which is in him? even so the things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God.—1 Cor. 2: 11.

Or as expressed in the language of Jesus himself:—

All things are delivered unto me of my Father; and no man knoweth the Son, but the Father; neither knoweth any man the Father, save the Son, and he to whomsoever the Son will reveal him.—Matt. 11: 27.

In the absence of the revealing the things of God unto weak man, and in a state of hallucination will fulfill the parable:—

Can the blind lead the blind? shall they not both fall into the ditch?—Luke 6: 39.

The following is as true now as when uttered:—

Wherefore I give you to understand, that no man speaking by the Spirit of God calleth Jesus accursed: and that no man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost.—1 Cor. 12: 3.

The conditions upon which we are to possess and enjoy the Holy Spirit was explained to Nicodemus:—

Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God.—John 3: 5.

This birth by water and the Spirit is: baptism in water for the remission of sin, the obtaining of the Holy Spirit as God hath promised and appointed, and those who keep all the commandments of God may rest assured of the blessing of the aroma of perpetual flowers, the "twelve manner of fruits," that are ripening every month, upon the tree of life, and an eternal home in the paradisaical abode of those redeemed out of "every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people." Halleluiah to our God and his Son Jesus Christ!

GOD'S PUNISHMENT.

THERE is a great difference of the teachings of men on God's punishment of the wicked; some tell of a hell, or lake of fire, in the middle of which stands a great monster of hideous form; in his hands is a long pitchfork, into this lake is cast all the wicked; here they roast and burn forever. They can never die. They live on for ever. Afar off they see pleasant vales and cooling streams; they crawl towards them. Just as they get there, this monster reaches out his fork and brings them back to the center; and this goes on for ever. And some say that the blessed up in heaven, can look down on this lake of torment and that their happiness is increased in seeing such things. Others teach that all things was foreordained; so that if a man was born to be hanged, he will so die. That a few of the human race will be saved, but the great majority shall all go to that roasting hell. The extremes on the other side tell us that such is the goodness of God, that all mankind will be saved. There is no devil; there is no hell, or lake of fire. That all the sufferings of mankind is ended when they die; and like the good preacher said, he could not be happy at supper with the Lord Jesus, unless he had Judas Iscariot on one side, and that murderer on the other. Said murderer had most wickedly abused a young woman and then killed her. Yes, they say we will all be there, a great, happy family. This is founded on the traditions of men. What does the law say; for when the prisoner has been found guilty, it is by the law he is punished. When men disobey

Those who depend wholly upon

God's commands, they are made to suffer by his laws.

Mankind are here to live and learn, to taste the bitter, that they may know the sweet; to learn the evil, that they may know the good; to gain an experience for themselves, that they may choose of their own will, as to their acts. God may know what men may do; but men do not know till they have a time of trial to prove themselves. That men may know how to act and be justified by God, the law is given. Christ is the law-giver; his law is, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, he that believeth not shall be damned."

Paul tells us there are three states of future life. To make it clear to our understanding, he calls our attention to the light of the sun, moon, and stars. The light of the sun is the greatest, grandest, and best of all; thus he says is as the light of the Celestial state, which is the highest state of perfection that men can gain. And to obtain this condition, Christ says, men "must be born again of water and of the Spirit." The law is a law of mercy, this is the day of God's mercy. All who will, may obtain by obeying the command to be born again, and living in obedience to the teachings of Christ the remainder of the days of their life. Repentance from evil is asked. All who are willing may so obey, live, and receive. All others are under condemnation; for John tells us the wrath of God is upon them who obey not the gospel. They, by their own acts reject the day of God's mercy; and so must abide the law of God's justice. Some say there are good men in all churches; yes, and there are many good, honest, and just men who have no use for church membership; and who only believe Christ was one of many reformers. But it is not a question of goodness; it is an act of obedience first, the goodness afterwards. If men have willfully set aside God's word as of no worth to them, oftentimes trample it scornfully under their feet as a thing despised, God has decreed such shall never dwell in his presence. As it is written, Eternal is God's punishment. Endless is God's punishment. Now does not the word eternal mean to endure for ever—everlasting. Endless, without end.

Right here some men's patience fail; they get angry, and say, "Why, I thought your God was a God of mercy; now he dooms all to hell, except the few who are born again." Nay, friend, just wait a minute and you will learn that God is indeed a God of mercy; for while men did not know what they would do when they had free will to act and choose for themselves, God does so. He prepares a place for them, the terrestrial world. Here dwell men who died without law; the spirits of men kept in prison for disobedience, who afterward receive the gospel; the honorable men of the earth, and they who are not valiant in the testimony of Jesus. And here is a great beauty, a grand comfort, a blessed assurance, that the tongue of man fails to describe; the sublimity and far reaching results for good the mind of man cannot comprehend. They that knew no law shall have part in the first resurrection; which shall be in the resurrection of the just, and they shall live through the thousand years of peace, with Christ as king. This is supposed to be a great, grand educational era, and they all shall have the full benefit. Is there anything found in the wisdom of men like this? Where will we find it? Think of it; the many millions in every land, who have lived since the days the gospel law was taken from the earth, till the day it was restored, and who shall not see the mercy of God herein? Nay, when we consider the weakness of humanity, we sometimes think it was a great mercy the law was not in force, so that all those who have lived and died without law may have a much better chance to hear and obey under a reign of righteousness, than they would or could have had under the rule of the wicked. Let them who wish to learn a knowledge of the future state not only read but study all of section seventy-six, Doctrine and Covenants, and they will not need to give heed to the traditions of men, for therein are the mysteries of God revealed concerning all of Adam's race—the conclusion of the seventh paragraph reads:—

But, behold, and lo, we saw the glory and the inhabitants of the telestial world, that they were as innumerable as the stars in the firmament of heaven, or as the sands upon the sea shore, and heard the voice of the Lord, saying: These all shall bow the knee, and every tongue shall confess to him who sits upon the throne forever and ever; for they shall be judged according to their works; and every man shall receive according to his own works, and his own dominion in the mansions which are prepared, and they shall be servants of the Most High, but where God and Christ dwell they cannot come, worlds without end.—D. C. 76: 7.

The tree has much fruit; some of it falls off green, some withers and decays; it is only that which remains and ripens without spot or blemish that we call perfect. So it is with the tree of humankind. Then there must be in the person a qualifying state of perfection. Can it be found short of obedience to God's commands, by living by every word he has given for our guidance? Some one says if God's punishment is endless, how then can he be a God of mercy, since the disobedient in this life never obtain to the celestial state; they are then condemned forever. Let us look at it thus: Men condemn themselves. Yes, this is too true. The idea can be understood in the boy who was sent to school. His father says, Son, obey the teacher; study to learn; it is all for your good; do not neglect, for you can never have a chance like this again. What can the boy know of the great importance of the need he has to be diligent; he must believe his father; if he does, he is obedient; if he neglects, plays truant, has lots of fun as he sees it, when he comes to manhood has a chance to fill a place of trust, but cannot, who shall we say is to blame,—not his father, nor his teacher, then it must be himself; and will sorrow or regrets help him? Nay; and yet how many men have had to sorrow all their life because of the disobedience and willful neglect in their youthful days. So then with the disobedient to God; they have none but themselves to blame.

Punishment is of two kinds. Those who disobey men's laws are beaten with the whip called cat-o-nine-tails, get the sweat locker, hard labor, or short rations; this is physical suffering. Men who are ambitious for place of rule and authority; who love to be called Right Honorable, Reverend, Judge, or Master, and fail to obtain their desires, suffer mentally, which is the most severe and intense of suffering.

The Lord has said there will come a day when men shall come to him and say, Lord, we have cast out devils, and in thy name done many wonderful works; yet he will say unto them, I never knew you. Others will find fault with him. Have they not labored and bore the burden and heat of the day? And there are those who only worked one hour, yet are made equal with them; and they are told many are called, few are chosen; are not all such doomed to bitter disappointment, their suffering and its duration none can tell; but it looks like as such are of them whose worm dieth not, nor torment ever ends. Some are rewarded, because they feed the hungry, clothed the naked, or even gave a cup of cold water in his name; showing us that for every good act of men there is a recompense; others were turned away, because there was no good deeds done by them; hence no good in themselves. Some there are who obey God's laws in this life; others in prison, when the gospel is preached to them in the spirit life beyond the grave. While others never obey, hence they must be of those who are subdued and compelled to confess and bow the knee; evidently those lose their agency or freedom of acting as they choose, for they remain servants of the Most High forever.

It seems that the impressions and acts of this life are so firmly stamped on the mind of the person that they can never be fully erased; for after the reign of peace and all things are established as God wills there is the unjust, filthy, liars, sorcerers, etc. Hence the reason why they remain, and can only be as servants; for if permitted to rule, they would still act unjustly and do wickedly. After all that could be said, or would be written, what can man do but learn to obey. God is the Father; he knows what is best for the good of all. It is a great day, the day that a man learns to trust God. This life is a life of trust, what can the child know or understand of its father? It simply loves and trusts. What can men tell of, or how can they understand God? His work and ways, then, they must love and trust, and show their love in their obedience to his word. The importance of this life few can tell till they leave this stage of action, so that we each and all should seek to live and act justly, truthfully, and patiently abide the days of our probation, for in so doing God has promised us rest and happiness; but of that happiness and rest what can mortals know, but like Job of old, we may say, though he slay me, yet will I trust in him.

WILLIAM CAIRNS.

ONE WAY INTO CHRIST, ONLY.

THERE is but one way that man can get into Christ, and that is by obeying the commandments laid down in the New Testament Scripture.

Faith, repentance, baptism, laying on of the hands for the gift of the Holy Spirit, etc., and baptism and laying on of hands must be administered by one having the authority. We read:—

Jesus answered, Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God.—John 3: 5.

That is, he must be immersed by one called of God to administer these ordinances.

Does not this cut out all other denominations? We read:—

For the Son of Man shall come in the glory of his Father, with his angels, and then he shall reward every man according to his works.—Matt. 16: 27.

Does not this place every man outside the church in the same position; for that kingdom spoken of in John certainly means the kingdom of heaven; for we read:—

Except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God.—John 3: 3.

He that . . . climbeth up some other way, the same is a thief and a robber.—John 10: 1.

How many are there to-day that are trying to get in some other way. One will say, None but these other sectarian churches. How about the moral man? He says he is as near right as any of the Christian world to-day. Will he see, or enter into the kingdom of heaven? Has he ever obeyed the commandments? Has he done as he understands the Scripture to teach him to do? Will he be rewarded according to his work? If so, why will not the biggest part of the people in the sectarian churches be saved, or "rewarded according to their works?"

And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God; and the books were opened: and another book was opened, which is the book of life: and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works.—Rev. 20: 12.

There is more than one book spoken of here. Is not one, the record that Christ keeps, or the Lamb's book of life; and the other the general church record kept here on earth? We read that what is "loosed on earth is loosed in heaven, and what is bound on earth is bound in heaven." These books must correspond with each other. It takes two witnesses to condemn a man in our courts on earth, and these two books will condemn us if our names are not recorded there. Now is it only those that have their names written in these books that will be "rewarded according to their works?"

And whosoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire.—Rev. 20: 15.

Is not this book of life the record that Christ keeps? If it is, how will we get our names written there, only by obeying the commands? Can those that have not their names written there, can they possibly be rewarded according to their works? They have their reward already, they will be "cast into the lake of fire."

SPIRITUAL GIFTS.

NOW CONCERNING spiritual gifts, brethren, I would not have you ignorant.—1 Cor. 12: 1.

Notwithstanding all that has been written on this subject, I am assured there is amongst us, ignorance not only of these precious gifts, but of the divine purpose in giving them. I do not set myself up as an unerring teacher, but by the help of the Spirit of the Lord may say something of benefit to some.

From the above text it will be seen that the apostle was addressing the "brethren," and the subject was "spiritual gifts," and that he does not want them to be ignorant. These brethren, no doubt, were as well informed as the ordinary brethren of the latter-day dispensation. We know that some are better informed than others in every line of thought, and it is by observing and trying to come up to the true standard, that we may finally attain unto it. In 1 Corinthians 12: 31 we have the following:—

Covet earnestly the best gifts.

Or, in other words, desire earnestly the best gifts. We believe this to be the words of inspiration, not only in part, but as a whole and in its order. Now if we begin at the seventh verse we have this:—

But the manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal.

Divine knowledge gives to each man that which will be best to develop him into the Christ character. In the next verse he says, in point of order, that "wisdom, knowledge, and faith" are the best gifts. Therefore it is plain that these are the ones to "covet earnestly." Some of our people think that those who do not have the gifts which can be seen at once, such as "tongues" and "prophecy," are not seeking for and obtaining the best gifts. I myself once thought so. I thought those who had the gift to speak in "unknown tongues" were the highest favored, and Paul names this gift the eighth and I put it first. I was ignorant of the divine arrangement, and Paul wishes his brethren not to be so. "But," says one, "are not all the gifts equal?" In a certain sense, yes, for they are of divine appointment. But that some have precedence of others is plain. "The body of Christ," his church, has all these gifts in it. But supposing it had all the gifts which correspond with the eyes, ears, arms, hands, fingers, legs, feet, and toes, and the brain was defective, what kind of a body would it be? How many are confined in madhouses who have all their limbs perfect?

There is another gift which we would do well to have, the "discerning of spirits;" not only to be able to discern the evil spirit when manifest, but to discern our human spirits. There is the Spirit of God, the spirit of the Devil, and human spirits. You would not take a "spirited" horse and hitch him with one that is slow and not "spirited." Why? Because you discern their spirits. Why then do we not discern human spirits in the same way? and what a blessed gift, and greatly to be desired!

Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit.—John 15: 8.

Some of us have made grave mistakes, too, in the "fruits" of the Spirit and the "gifts" of the Spirit. I was one among the number. There is a vast difference, almost as widely separated as day and night. We would not call an apple dew or sunshine, and yet the dew and sunshine help to produce the apple; and so the gifts of the Spirit help to produce that fruit that will glorify God and named by Peter as virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, godliness, brotherly kindness, and charity.

"For if these things be in you and abound they make you that ye shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ."

If we have these fruits we will be able to endure to the end. It is not said he that has the gifts shall be saved, but "he that endureth to the end shall be saved." These gifts are given to produce fruit, and with that we will be able to endure to the end. There is another side I wish to present. A few (and I am glad there are but a few) of us are afraid to fast and pray to God for the gifts; for, say they, "If you seek for gifts the Devil will give you all you want." Business men, on the same principle, might be afraid to take any money because there are counterfeits.

God hath not given us the spirit of fear; but of power, and of love, and of sound mind.—2 Tim. 1:7.

God wants us to be fearless in the performance of duty and in rendering service to him. He wants us to love him with all our hearts, and "perfect love casteth out all fear." We are to seek to obtain and retain that Spirit by which all the gifts are given; seek by fasting and earnest prayer to obtain the Holy Ghost and let divine wisdom "divide" as he will. He knows better than we, what gift is best for us. However, wisdom is the best gift God can give to man. A certain man desired wisdom and it pleased God so that he gave him wisdom and riches too. We know that a lack of wisdom works disastrously to us in any of the walks of life.

Some may think I place too little value on the "outward" manifestation, but I certainly do not. I believe that what divine wisdom has once said, never will be changed.

I desire with all my heart, to do all I can for the advancement of truth.

RULES AND REGULATIONS

FOR ADMISSION OF MEMBERS AND GOVERNMENT OF THE SAINTS' HOME, LAMONI, IOWA.

1. Worthy saints who are in need of a home, and who are unable on account of age or ill health to provide for themselves, and who are without relatives or friends who can provide for them, are entitled to a place in the Home.

2. Worthy aged saints who are unable to arrange suitable homes with relatives and friends, and who are able to provide for themselves at the Home, may be received upon due arrangement being made with those in charge.

3. Parties seeking admission to the Home must present recommendations from their respective branches and the Bishop's agents where they reside. Where persons have never resided near a branch, so as to become identified in branches or with local authorities, they must present suitable recommendations from some general church officer.

4. When practicable, applications should be made through the Bishop's agent in the district where applicant resides.

5. The Matron in charge of the Home will treat all with patience and kindness, and all members of the Home must observe the rules, requests, and orders of the Matron, and when a request or order on the part of the Matron is thought to be unreasonable, parties cannot of themselves refuse to comply, but must refer such request or order to the Bishop or some member of the Bishopric, or in their absence the President of the Church or the Missionary in Charge.

6. Proper respect and decorum toward each other must be observed by all having a place in the Home, and no one shall give orders to, or command or direct any other member, without the request or direction of the Matron; or if outside or farm work, the Superintendent of the farm.

7. Cleanliness and godliness must be observed at all times, and care taken both in personal habits and in the rooms of building.

8. Each must so far as possible respect the wishes of his or her associates, and maintain due decorum in all his or her relations with associates and parties in charge.

9. Each person may have absolute quiet and rest in his or her own room, and must not be intruded upon unnecessarily by others.

10. No person shall interfere with the kitchen work, and those wishing to aid in this department must first obtain the consent of the Matron.

11. All shall observe the hours fixed by the Matron for retiring in the evening and rising in the morning, sickness and inability to comply to be considered.

12. The use of tobacco or any narcotic, except under the advice of a physician, and strong drink is positively forbidden.

13. For any persistent violation of any of these rules, the party so violating and refusing to comply shall be dismissed from the Home.

14. The Home is open to visitors free Wednesdays and Saturdays only. On all other days contributions will be required to aid in defraying the expenses.

15. The occupants of the Home are expected to observe strict decorum in regard to the conduct of the affairs of the Home and its government, and must not discuss the management of the Home or talk of its domestic affairs to visitors or outside persons. Complaints should be made to the Matron, or to the Bishop, his counselors, or some general officer, if any are to be made.

By the Bishopric,
E. L. KELLEY,
Presiding Bishop.

LAMONI, Iowa, March 1, 1895.

These rules are concurred in by us.

JOSEPH SMITH.
ALEX. HALE SMITH.

WILLIAMS-BAYS DEBATE.

The Williams-Bays debate, concerning which so much has been published in the Herald, began at Mondamin, Iowa, May 9, by Bro. T. W. Williams affirming the following proposition:—

"Is the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, organized and established through the instrumentality of Joseph Smith and his coworkers, the Church of God in fact and in harmony with the Bible in doctrine and organization?"

Bro. J. W. Wight acted as moderator for Bro. Williams, and Elder Mellinger, pastor of the Disciple Church here, acted as moderator for Elder D. H. Bays. Mr. W. T. Stamper acted as chairman.

BRO. T. W. WILLIAMS' FIRST SPEECH.

Gentlemen Moderators, Ladies, and Gentlemen:—I am here to affirm the proposition just read. In the affirmation of the proposition I am expected to lead and to represent one of the churches now in existence, comparing it with the church as organized in New Testament times. In going in search of something we must have clearly in view that which we desire to find. It is my purpose to show what the Church of Christ is, and to show that the church represented by me is in harmony with the Scriptures, and is the Church of God in fact.

The term "Reorganized" indicates that something has been disorganized, disarranged; and the term "The Church of Jesus Christ" indicates whose church it is, and "of Latter Day Saints" shows of what it is composed.

We now proceed to show that this church is in harmony with that composed of former-day saints.

In Matthew 16:18 Jesus says "I will build my church." He then is the builder, and when it is built it will be his church. There should be no contention about this. 1 Corinthians 3:11 and Acts 4:10-12 show what Christ's relationship should be with the church on earth; hence the same relationship should and does exist with the church composed of Latter Day Saints.

The true church is Christ's, and the name of Christ is Jesus, as was given him by the angel, hence the name of the Church should be Jesus Christ; and Paul confirms this position in Ephesians 3:14, 15, wherein it is recorded that "the whole family in heaven and earth is named" "Jesus Christ."

When men are baptized they are baptized into Jesus Christ. (Romans 6:3.) "Jesus" means Savior, as the angel said when giving the name; Christ means "the anointed," hence "Jesus Christ" indicates "The anointed" "Savior," to "save his people from their sins."

The term "latter day" indicates the times in which we live, and no one will deny successfully but what we are living in the latter days.

The people of God should be called saints to be in harmony with the Bible. (See Rom. 1:7; 1 Cor. 1:2 and Eph. 1:1.)

The church was and should be authoritatively represented. John who baptized Jesus was sent of God (John 1:6). The Father sent Jesus Christ (John 12:49, 50). And as the Father sent him so he sent his disciples. (John 20:21.) In Romans 10:13-15 this authority is still farther extended to all who preach, for "how can they preach except they be sent?" The Comforter was to guide into all truth, and so the Holy Ghost designated and should designate who should represent the church. Acts 20:28 says the Holy Ghost made overseers. Acts 13:2 designated the choice of Barnabas and Paul as ministers. John 15:16 says, "I [Jesus] have chosen you and ordained you" (the apostles). And 1 Corinthians 12:28 shows that "God set in the church" certain officials; hence we conclude that no one can act officially save God has directed him to so act.

I now show by 1 Corinthians 12:28 what officers God set in the church; viz., "First apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers," etc., and when these officials acted according to God's decree their acts were blessed. Also by Ephesians 4:11 that "he [Christ, see v. 8] gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some pastors and teachers."

In Matthew 10:1-4 it is shown that Jesus chose the original twelve apostles, and God called him; hence God set them in the church these officials. Acts 13:2 shows the selection of Barnabas and Paul, and they were apostles. Acts 14:14. Acts 1:16-26 evidences the choice of Matthias, as the Lord would show which to choose. He was numbered with the twelve and the choice approved of God.

D. H. BAYS' FIRST SPEECH.

Gentlemen Moderators, Ladies and Gentlemen:—It is a pleasure for me to meet so able an opponent, because I believe that he is a gentleman, and that he is sincere in believing what he represents. It is my purpose to present to you facts as I view them.

I now read the proposition. Now if the Latter Day Saints are correct in their claims, then everybody else is wrong. My opponent has drawn the line in his argument between the Latter Day Saints and all other Christian people. We cannot afford to be in error. If we show them to be in error, they ought to accept of the conclusions. Who is right, they to the exclusion of all else, or is it not more probable that they are wrong than that all others are wrong?

This people is not the only church claiming to be Latter Day Saints, but even they are excluded from being right by these people. The church in the West have good reasons for calling themselves Latter Day Saints, for Joseph Smith gave it existence.

I object to the name of the church as found in the proposition because it is not scriptural. The brother ingeniously explains the prefix, Reorganized, and the affix, "of Latter Day Saints." I have no objection to the word "Jesus." The appellation "Latter Day Saints" is superfluous because everybody knows we are living in the latter days. The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints was organized in 1830, in New York, by Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery, as is claimed. The corporate name of this church is not "The Church of Jesus Christ."

The church organized by Christ and the apostles was never destroyed. They take the position that church was destroyed and did not exist till Joseph Smith reorganized it. The claim of apostasy is admitted to have existed, but that apostasy destroys authority, must be proven. If he proves that apostasy abrogates authority, then he has good authority for a reorganization.

The church organized in 1830 has apostatized, for the name formerly used was "The Church of Latter Day Saints." (Church History, vol. 1, p. 550; vol. 1, pp. 556, 557; vol. 1, p. 572.) This is three counts against the church that it is not the Church of Christ. The church at this time was only five years of age. The little girl was not old enough to marry and change her name. This was her maiden name. I also find that Joseph Smith, the father of the church, calls his child "The Church of Latter Day Saints." (Church History, p. 583.) My opponent can't find the term "The Church of Jesus Christ" in the Bible. The first name the church was called was "The Church of Christ" (D. and C. 17:1), and then in 1835 it was called "The Church of Latter Day Saints."

Jesus and the apostles called the people of God "disciples." The word "disciples" is used in the Bible fifty-five times, the term "saint" only twenty-nine times. The whole family was called "Jesus Christ," not "saints." Williams would lead you to believe that the people of God were called saints always. Jesus never called his followers saints.

WILLIAMS' SECOND SPEECH.

I did not say all other churches were wrong; that was Bays' deduction only. I spoke of the church built by Christ being right. The only question at issue is, Which church is in harmony with the New Testament? All people recognized of God are called saints. He will not show where the people of God were ever "called to be disciples." I have shown they were "called to be saints."

He asks me to prove that apostasy abrogates authority. Acts 20:28 says "not sparing the flock." This shows that "grievous wolves entering" did not spare anything, and this shows authority was destroyed. He admits he has no objection to the name Jesus being attached to the name of the church.

He said all intelligent people admitted we were living in the latter days. Intelligent men do say we are not living in the latter days. Some scientists claim the world will last 50,000 years yet. Are they not intelligent? They certainly are, though they may be in error.

To call the name of the church, "The Church of Christ" or "of Jesus Christ," and also "The Church of Latter Day Saints," does not prove apostasy any more than to call Sarah Jones, Sarah only, or Miss Jones. To call her Sarah does not prove she is not Miss Jones.

In the Doctrine and Covenants 16:1-4 we have reference made "to building up the church of Christ," and therein it is said, "Behold, JESUS CHRIST is the NAME which is given of the Father, and there is NONE OTHER NAME GIVEN whereby man can be saved; wherefore, all men must take upon them the name which is given of the Father, for in that name shall they be called at the last day; wherefore, if they know not the NAME by which they are CALLED, they cannot have place in the kingdom of my FATHER."

Disciples of what? of Paul, Aristotle, or of whom? A disciple is a follower or learner.

The apostolic office is a permanent office in the church. (1 Cor 12:28.) God set apostles in the church.

Judas, one of the apostles, fell. This was a good time to set the world right if there was to be no succession. I read Acts 1:16-26. Peter refers to what David spake as being fulfilled in the case of Judas. He says Judas "obtained a part of this ministry." The apostles presented the matter of choosing one to "take part of this ministry and apostleship," to the Lord and asked him to "show whether of these two thou hast chosen." Matthias was chosen, "and he was numbered with the eleven apostles."

In Acts 13:1, 2 it is shown that the "Holy Ghost said, 'Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them.'" Acts 14:14 shows their office work, that of apostles. Ephesians 4:11-14 shows the officers herein mentioned were to remain till the attainment God has indicated—"till we all come in the unity of the faith and of the knowledge of the Son of God unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ."

Prophets were in the church. (Acts 13:1; Eph. 4:11, and 1 Cor. 12:28.)

Seventies were in the church. (Luke 10:1.) Evangelists were in the church. Philip was an evangelist (Acts 21:8), called of God. (Acts 6:5.) Timothy also was an evangelist. (2 Tim. 4:5.)

There were pastors, or those having charge (Acts 14:23) with God's approval; and overseers (Acts 20:28), the Holy Ghost so designating them.

Bishops were also in the church (1 Tim. 3:1-4), and these should be wise men.

There were also Teachers (Acts 13:1; Eph. 4:11) and Deacons (Phil. 1:1; 1 Tim. 3:8-10).

We insist that these officers must be in the church always, for Jesus Christ is the same forever (Heb. 13:8, Mal. 3:6), and what the Lord doeth he doeth it "forever."

BAYS' SECOND SPEECH.

My opponent must prove the proposition. He now wants me to prove a negative. I don't wonder at it. He has a hard job to prove a succession of the apostolic office, and that is the reason.

Jesus never called his followers saints. In John 7:3 Jesus calls his people "disciples." Paul never employs the term disciples, and he is the only one that calls God's people "saints." Which is right—Paul says in passages referred to by Bro. Williams, "Called to be saints," not "called saints" then. May become saint at once, some in a few days, some in glory.

Latter Day Saints draw the line sharply, and distinctly say that they are the "only church." The Doctrine and Covenants says it is the only true church. If my opponent does not tell us of one other church that is right, then by his silence he declares it is the only church. I did not say that he said no others could be saved except Latter Day Saints. The logical sequence is that he is right, then all others are wrong.

I don't care anything about the use of the word "sparing" in Acts 20:28; the term "the flock" was not the whole church. He says that means to abolish the whole church, but it does not.

Did he find the passage that says "apostolic office?" Paul says in Romans 11: 13 that he magnified his office, but that does not say it was the apostolic office.

Kelley in Presidency and Priesthood says God created the office. I don't believe there was such an office. He must prove there was an apostolic office, then to prove its permanency. Prove this and your work is done.

Matthias' calling don't prove the perpetuity of the office. The apostles selected two men, the apostles voted and Matthias got the most votes; that is all there is of it. This could not form a precedent. That which cannot be repeated, cannot form a precedent. To fill Judas' place cannot be repeated. To repeat this would prove that Jesus must be again betrayed, crucified, and then go to glory. This cannot be repeated. He used 1 Corinthians 12: 28 to prove that God set the "apostolic office" in the church. I used to use that argument, and I knocked my opponents out. I hope it won't have that effect in this case.

How many men in the Latter Day Saints' Church have received the office of prophet by the laying on of hands? Joseph Smith is in the office of Presidency, not in the prophetic office.

No such officer as an evangelist was ever ordained in the Latter Day Saints' Church. We call these people "Mormons" because it is more convenient—because of brevity.

I have had pleasure to lay on hands with two of these brethren present. There are no Mormon pastors in the church.

He must show that he is exactly in accord with the Bible.

Everything depends upon his showing that apostasy abrogated authority.

PASTORAL.

To the Saints of the Eastern Mission:—The late General Conference has now gone into history. By its action the conditions in the Eastern mission were in some respect changed, so it is necessary that something be said concerning it, in order to adjust ourselves to present conditions, and so take hold anew, and energetically for another year's work, or more. The conference in point of tone and results was all that in consistency could have been wished for. Grave and sober thoughts and spiritual light guided in quorum and conference, indicating both divine recognition and devotion of the adherents to the cause. All saints, so far as we learned, returned joyfully to their homes, strengthened in the faith.

It will be observed that the mission in charge of Bro. G. T. Griffiths last year was again united with the Eastern mission proper, and Brn. Joseph Luff and Wm. H. Kelley placed in charge. The lakes and the line between the states of Indiana and Ohio form the principal western boundary of the mission as now constituted. It includes Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, the New England States, New York, Pennsylvania, Maryland, the District of Columbia, Delaware, the Vir-ginias, and the State of Ohio, and a portion of Northeastern Kentucky.

It will have been observed also that three of our most efficient laborers were removed from the east and sent to other missions; namely, Brn. U. W. Greene, I. M. Smith, and F. M. Sheehy. They will be missed, and it will be difficult to supply their places. It is gratifying, however, to know that the east is able to furnish promising stars for other fields; and while we feel their loss, we will try and be consoled in the thought that they will serve others as well, and that as the cause is one, that wherever they are we are all laboring to the one great end, the enlightenment and redemption of the world from sin, superstition, and ignorance, and the establishment of God's order of things among men. So we will be content, and try and train up others as promising.

The ministry are expected to take their places in their respective fields as promptly as practicable, and serve the cause as diligently and untiringly as if engaged in lucrative pursuits. The saints in general should support the efforts of the ministry to get the work before the people, and "success" should be the motto of every one. The idea of failure should never enter the council of saints. In the nature of things their cause cannot fail, and the rewards of diligent service are sure. They belong to God to bestow. Saints may blunder, suffer fatigue, privation, and loss after the manner of men, but their rewards in God's work are sure. Even the fall of a "sparrow" is noted by him. Courage, and on.

In order to facilitate missionary labor and effect order, the following appointments have been agreed upon, though it may be necessary to make some change later in some of them.

G. H. Godbey; West Virginia and Northeast Kentucky.

L. R. Devore; Pittsburg district.

J. L. Goodrich; Virginia.

R. Etzenhouser; Kirtland district and adjacent places to the east.

W. W. Blanchard; Western New York and Vermont.

J. F. McDowell; Pittsburg district, etc.

D. L. Shinn; to labor in connection with the ones in charge of Kirtland district and Western New York.

Holmes J. Davison; Nova Scotia.

T. C. Kelley; Maine, in charge after U. W. Greene leaves for his mission.

Richard Bullard; in charge of the Massachusetts district as a "field of labor."

Joseph Squires; in charge of New York district.

A. H. Parsons; in charge of Philadelphia district.

Wyoming district is not fully provided for; neither is Ohio district.

Elder J. T. Davis will be expected to labor in the following named places, in harmony with those in charge, as wisdom directs: In Ohio district at Wellston, Syracuse, Coalton, Jackson, etc.; in Pittsburg district at Irondale, Etnaville, etc.; and in Kirtland district at Sharon, Palmyra, Youngstown, Conneautville, etc.; also at points in West Virginia.

Bro. G. T. Griffiths has been consulted also in the arranging of the missionary forces in the territory which was in his charge last year.

Bro. F. M. Sheehy will be expected to aid the work in Western New York all he can before starting to California. Also Bro. U. W. Greene in Maine before going to Honolulu.

Temple, Ohio, is the permanent address of Wm. H. Kelley, and mail sent to that address for Joseph Luff will reach him.

Respectfully submitted,

WM. H. KELLEY.

JOSEPH LUFF.

To the Ministry in South West Mission:—I am in the field and would be pleased to hear from all. I have not made any appointments as yet; but as soon as I can place myself in a condition to learn the needs of the mission I will appoint others to assist me. I trust we may labor together in unity, and not allow a jealous thought to enter our minds. Pray for each other and the good Lord will bless us in our work. When it becomes necessary to defend the restored gospel, be sure that we enter the arena with fair propositions, clearly stated, with a desire for truth to prevail, and not caring so much for victory.

Dear, saints, let us do what we can with our means in placing the Bishop's agents in a condition to assist the Bishop with tithes and offerings.

May our heavenly Father bless us in his work is my prayer. A. J. MOORE.

BEAVER, TEXAS, May 7.

Permit me to say through the Herald that as Bro. Caffall has appointed me to labor in "Saline, Richardson, and other counties in Nebraska, as the way may open," I desire to hear from the saints and friends in the territory specified, especially in Richardson County, relative to the work in said field. I wish to accomplish as much good as possible, and desire the hearty coöperation of all the brethren and friends interested. I am not doing much preaching now, owing to the farmers being so busy planting corn; but I am in the field arranging for a close and systematic prosecution of the work. Please write to me at my home address, Wilber, Nebraska, as soon as possible, so that we may labor together unitedly and intelligently.

Your brother in Christ,

C. H. PORTER.

EAGLE, Nebraska, May 13.

CHURCH RECORDER'S NOTICE.

I again call the attention of district presidents and clerks to the necessity of the reports of branches being forwarded to the General Church Recorder, that he may do his work according to the commandment given in section 17, paragraph 25 of the Book of Covenants. To this end it is provided in Book of Rules, section 173, as follows:—

"For, according to the passage quoted, the object of thus reporting . . . is the placing in possession of the Church Recorder, as quickly as possible, accurate and systematic reports from all parts of the church; said reports being made out for that purpose and that purpose alone,—the sending of them to conference being only the preliminary movement for the purpose of ensuring their transmission to the appointed recording officer of the church. . . .

"After these [branch officers] have done their duty, it devolves upon the presidents and clerks of districts, or conferences, to faithfully transmit to the General Recorder the reports which have come into their hands, through this careful provision of the law."

So I again call attention to the fact that reports of branches in some of the districts in England are far behind, and their records imperfect. There should be something done immediately towards giving me an account of all losses by death and otherwise, and of all names added, and their items of birth, baptism, and confirmation; and of changes of name by marriage, as well as of ordinations that have taken place since last reports. The branches in Wales are mostly in arrears, too, and full corrections are needed of quite a number.

Not yet have any reports come from the officers of the Kirtland, the Oklahoma, and the Northern Texas and Choctaw districts since the organization of these districts, and I am desirous to have complete reports of all branches in their bounds. Branches in them that are already on the General Record only need to be corrected by reports of gains, losses, changes of name, ordinations, etc.; but of all new branches I need full copies of records, every name and all items of date and place, to fill up the columns provided in the records.

I also mention that the March reports received by the Northern California and Southern Missouri districts have not yet come into my hands, nor the April reports from Central California.

The May conferences advertised are held in Alabama, Pottawattamie, Northwestern Kansas, Western Maine, and Northern Nebraska.

The June conferences will be held in the following districts, namely: Mobile, Northern Illinois, Southeastern Illinois, Kewanee, Nauvoo, Decatur, Des Moines, Eastern Iowa, Fremont, Galland's Grove, Little Sioux, Northeast Kansas, Eastern Michigan, and probably Northern and Southern Michigan, Northern Minnesota, Northeast Missouri, Nodaway, Far West, St. Louis, Independence, Clinton, Southern Nebraska, Southwestern Texas, Northern Wisconsin, and Southern Wisconsin.

A few conferences will be held in July and August, and some are not yet appointed. Hoping for prompt action upon the part of branch and district clerks in getting in reports,

Your brother,

H. A. STEBBINS.

LAMONI, Iowa, May 12.

REUNION NOTICE.

To the Readers of the Herald and all who are interested in the Coming Bluff Park Reunion; Greeting:—I wish to say we, your committee, are not dead, but are only waiting and watching for the good time coming, when the cruel war is over, and peace, glorious peace, is the rule all over our bright land, "and Johnnie comes marching home," etc. We are looking forward to the 19th of August next, to have a real old-fashioned good time, by the gathering of the saints and friends in reunion at the Bluff Park camp grounds, near Montrose, Lee County, Iowa, just across the river from Nauvoo, Illinois.

At the last meeting of the committee a request was sent out to each and all of the districts which were instrumental in instituting the Bluff Park reunion, asking that a soliciting committee be appointed to collect means to make our reunion a glorious success. The object of this collecting of means was to relieve the committee of much anxiety and labor during our meeting, and avoid passing the hat and the collection while everybody ought to be enjoying themselves to the fullest extent, and thus relieve our gathering of this unpleasant feature as much as possible.

I have received only one official notice of such action from one district, namely, the Decatur district, Iowa. Incidentally, I have learned that two of those districts refuse to take such action; for this I am sorry, and believe if they had been correctly informed of the good already done by our reunions at Bluff Park, they would not have withheld the helping hand. However, I hope they may change their mind and still stand by the organization, and come and meet with us, for we are going to hold our reunion all the same.

And now I once more ask the coöperation of all the districts. Just a few dollars from each will place the committee upon such safe footing that we can assure you from the start a grand, good time. You must not fall into the idea that it is all play at a reunion, and that the only object is to have simply a glorious good time, for the individual enjoyment of all who go, just for relaxation and pleasure, for this is an erroneous idea.

Our Bluff Park reunion has made it possible for us to reach, with the preaching of the word, hundreds which we could not have reached in any other way, and prejudice has been removed in a remarkable manner; but it is hard work for your committees and for those in charge. It is universally admitted that our conferences, general and district, do an immense amount of good, so much so that they are held at different places, changing from place to place for the prestige they give the work. So our reunions are a power for good.

Our General Conference is now placed two years apart, so our reunions ought to be the better attended. So come out and enjoy a two week's outing, combining pleasure, innocent pleasure, worship, and gospel labor. The place is all that can be asked for it. Historic, healthful, pleasant, easy of access, and one of the most beautiful sceneries on the father of waters—the Mississippi River. Cottages and tents can be rented for the reunion term reasonably, if those desiring apply in time; Brn. J. S. Snively and Daniel Tripp, committee on cottages; address Montrose, Iowa.

Please, remember, one day of the sessions will be set apart for a steamboat excursion or a visit to Nauvoo, the historic city. Come one, come all. We think we are safe in saying you will never regret it.

The First Presidency and Bishopric have promised, if health and no unforeseen event occurs to prevent, to be with us and aid in gospel work. Good speakers will be on hand, and we trust great good will be done.

By order of committee,

ALEX. H. SMITH, Sec.

CONFERENCE NOTICES.

I should have said in the notice sent for publication that Nodaway district conference would be held at Sweet Home, Missouri, on the fourth instead of the "first" Saturday and Sunday in June.

WM. WOODHEAD.

Kewanee district will hold a conference at Rock Island, Illinois, the first Saturday and Sunday in June, in the Swedish Baptist church, corner of 5th and 21st Streets. Those who attend are requested to notify Bro. W. E. LaRue, North Harrison Street, Davenport, Iowa, by letter, stating when they will come, and they will be met at train. Saints there are not prepared to keep teams. Bring Hymnals, Winnowed Songs, etc. Bro. Joseph Smith may be in attendance. The above instructions apply to Sunday school convention also.

S. A. WHITEHOUSE, Secretary.

Conference of Northern Nebraska district will convene May 28 and 29, at Waterloo, Nebraska. Those notifying us will be met at the train.

RICHARD BROWN, Secretary.

Spring River district conference will convene June 4, at Weir City, Cherokee County, Kansas.

T. S. HAYTON, Sec.

Lock box 493.

Some think a mistake was made in notice for Decatur district conference to meet June 11. It was for good and sufficient reasons the change in date was made.

On duty,

ROBT. M. ELVIN.

London district will meet June 18 and 19, with Windham branch. All trains will be met on the T. H. and B. railroad at Vanessa, Friday and Saturday; anyone coming on Thursday will please drop a card to R. C. Longhurst, Vanessa, and they will be met at station. All coming to conference by train please ask the station agent for a delegate's certificate, and pay single fare, and if there be fifty such certificates taken out you will get home for one third fare; if there be three hundred, you will get home free; but if there be less than fifty present you will get home for two thirds fare, just the same as if you had taken a return ticket at first; hence there is no loss by taking this kind of a ticket, and there probably will be one third fare gain. Branch secretaries, have your reports made out in time for conference. We hope each branch will feel this responsibility, and that all will report. Local ministry are also requested to send reports of their labors. All are heartily invited to come and bring the gospel peace. Secretary's address, Hopeville, Ontario.

R. C. LONGHURST, Pres.
MAGGIE MACGREGOR, Sec.

Eastern Iowa district conference will convene with Brushcreek branch, June 4, at ten a. m. The statistical reports from all branches are requested; also ministerial reports from all the priesthood, so we may know what has been done in the last quarter for the Master. Come one, come all, and bring the good Spirit with you.

C. E. HAND, Pres.

Nauvoo district conference will convene at Keb, Iowa, June 4 and 5. Branch reports should be in the hands of secretary, R. Warnock, Farmington, Iowa, by the 1st. Expect Brethren Kelley and Lambert to be with us. Let us have a good turn out.

F. M. WELD, Pres.

There has been a committee appointed by Keb branch to meet all those contemplating attending the Nauvoo district conference, which convenes June 4 and 5. The committee are Brn. D. T. Reese, C. E. Burk, and D. T. Williams. They will be recognized by a bunch of red, white, and blue ribbons, which they will wear on lapel of coat. Those who are coming will do well to notify the committee which train they will arrive on.

JOHN BRENNAN, Clerk of Branch.

Northeastern Missouri district conference will convene at Higbee, June 4, continuing over the 5th. We invite all who can to attend this meeting; election of district officers will take place. All reports should be forwarded to George Tryon, Huntsville, Missouri. Brn. R. M. Elvin and William Summerfield, missionaries to district, will be present, and possibly Apostle I. N. White. Come prepared to enjoy yourselves.

J. A. TANNER, President.

Conference of Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana district will convene at Coldwater, Michigan, June 4 and 5, at ten a. m. Full reports, branch and ministerial, are necessary. Missionary in charge, all general appointees, and district locals, are expected to attend. "Remember the Maine" issue is the liberation of the masses from the blinding mists of error, and the establishment of the kingdom of God. All written reports should reach district president, No. 28 Clinton Avenue, Coldwater, Michigan, by June 3.

S. W. L. SCOTT, President.

Southeastern Illinois district will convene at saints' chapel, near Tunnel Hill, June 4 and 5. Clerks of branches will please see that reports are made out in due time, approved, and sent to J. D. Stead, Tunnel Hill, Illinois, care of Wm. R. Smith. It is hoped we will have a good attendance. Bro. I. N. White, missionary in charge, is expected to be with us. Come one, come all, and bring the spirit of the Master with you.

J. D. STEAD, Secretary.

Northeastern Kansas district will meet at Scranton, Kansas, June 4. We hope to receive reports from all officers and branches. Hope to have a good attendance. Branches please remember to send delegates on the basis of one vote for each six members or fraction thereof.

PHINEAS CADWELL, President.
JAMES W. BURNS, Clerk.

Florida district conference will convene with Calhoun branch, June 4 and 5. Hope to see good representation from all the branches in the district, and reports properly made out and to hand in time. Hope to see as many of the ministry as can be present. All are invited.

B. L. JERNIGAN, Sec.

Conference of Mobile district will convene with Theodore branch, Saturday June 4, at ten a. m. Branch reports that cannot be sent by messenger so as to arrive in time for reading should be sent by mail to the secretary, at Theodore, Mobile County, Alabama, immediately after the 31st of May. Let all come who can. Bro. Turpen is expected to be there.

W. L. BOOKER, Pres.
C. I. CARPENTER, Sec.

Spring conference of the Chatham district will convene in Ridgetown, Saturday, June 4, at ten a. m. Officers of branches will please see that their branches are properly reported.

GEORGE GREEN, Pres.
RICHARD COBURN, Clerk.

ORDINATION OF HIGH PRIESTS.

In order that their names may be placed upon the record of the High Priests' Quorum, and also be published in the forthcoming list of the quorum (to be sent to its members), I desire that the brethren named and chosen for ordination as High Priests should write me as to their willingness to be so ordained; and that immediately upon their ordination, either they or the officers who ordain should send to me the date, the place, and by whom hands are laid upon each, with the name of the speaker underscored, in case more than one officiated.

The names of those chosen during the late General Conference, and who have not yet been ordained, are as follows: John R. Evans of Lucas, Iowa; George Montague of Moorhead, Iowa; Richard Bullard of Boston, Massachusetts; Joseph Squires of Brooklyn, New York; Vinton M. Goodrich of Chillicothe, Ohio; Gilbert J. Waller of Honolulu, Hawaiian Islands; Russell Archibald, Junior, of Saint Louis, Missouri.

Prompt attention to the requests will be appreciated.

Respectfully presented,
H. A. STEBBINS,
Secretary High Priests' Quorum.

Zion's Ensign please copy.

BORN.

FRANK.—At Fulton, Iowa, March 27, 1898, to Mr. L. W. and Sr. Lena Frank, a son. Blessed May 8, by Elder John Heide, and named William Harold.

MARRIED.

MEADOWS—PERRY.—At the home of the bride's parents, Bro. and Sr. Perry, at Oskaloosa, Iowa, May 5, 1898, Mr. Albert H. Meadows to Sr. Jessie R. Perry, Priest C. B. Brown officiating. Only a few friends and relatives were invited; who, after partaking of a fine repast and enjoying a very pleasant evening, left the happy young couple with many wishes for their future happiness and welfare.

DIED.

ANDREWS.—Florence Millicent, infant daughter of W. L. and Sr. Blanche I. Andrews, died at their home, Shenandoah, Iowa, April 26, 1898, aged 1 year, 5 months, and 4 days. The little one was ill but a little over twenty-four hours, and suffered intensely. Services in the church at Farm Creek, in charge of Elder A. Badham; after which she was laid to rest in the Henderson cemetery, by the side of her brother and sister who had gone before, to await the resurrection morn, when the dead in Christ shall rise first.

Sleep on, beloved, sleep and take thy rest;
Lay down thy head upon thy Savior's breast;
We love thee well, but Jesus loves thee best—
Good night! Good night! Good night!

BENNER.—Frederick A. Benner, born in Fremont County, Iowa, April 26, 1880; died April 25, 1898. Deceased never united with any church, but believed in the doctrine as taught by the church, so far as he understood it. Funeral in McPaul schoolhouse by H. F. Durfey to a large assembly of friends and relatives.

SMITH.—Simon Long Smith passed peacefully away at his home in St. Joseph, Missouri, April 29, 1898, at 2:45 a. m., at the age of 65 years, 3 months, 8 days. Bro. Smith was born ninety miles west of London, England. Was baptized in 1850, and emigrated to Utah in 1858. He became a bishop and served that church faithfully for about twenty years. By the labors of Bro. E. C. Brand he was shown the folly of Brighamism, and abandoned it for the true and original faith of the church. He visited Martin Harris just before he died, who told him that polygamy was not a doctrine or practice of the church in Joseph's days, but was the work of Brigham Young. He was ordained an elder in the Reorganization soon after his baptism by Bro. — Phillips. He was a great lover and student of the Book of Mormon. "I am leaving this world in peace," were his last words. His funeral occurred from the church Sunday morning in charge of Bro. D. J. Krahl, the sermon being by J. M. Terry from Genesis 17: 7, 8.

RICHARDS.—At Big Bend, West Virginia, March 24, 1898, Delila Richards, whose maiden name was Bennett. Sr. Richards was born July 1, 1831, in Calhoun County, West Virginia; baptized January 15, 1888, by Bro. L. R. Devore. While she had few opportunities to hear preaching or attend branch meetings, yet she lived the best she could.

HISTORY OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS. (Volumes 1 and 2 now ready.) Provided for by action of General Conference of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Written and compiled by President Joseph Smith and Apostle Heman C. Smith. Invaluable as a correct historical narrative, as a means of conversion to truth, and as a defensive weapon in meeting old and new objections urged against the latter-day work. It contains important documents connected with the establishment, growth, and internal and external affairs and progress of the church. The revelations given in this dispensation are inserted, in connection with accounts of the circumstances under which they were given. Biographical sketches, illustrations, complete indexes, sidenotes for ready reference, etc., are some of the features of the work. Volume 1 begins with the birth of Joseph Smith, the Prophet and Seer, in 1805, and narrates the circumstances of his calling and ministry, the rise of the church in 1830, and until the close of the year 1835. Volume 2 continues the history up to June 27, 1844, —to the assassination of Joseph and Hyrum Smith.

K. & W. and D. M. & K. C. Railways.

The D. M. & K. C. Ry from Des Moines to Cainsville has been rebuilt and that portion south of Van Wert will be standard gauge on or before November 1, 1897.

There is no road in Southern Iowa or Northern Missouri which has more good locations for business men than on the line of the Keokuk Route. More stock of all kinds has been shipped over this line than any road of equal mileage in Iowa or Missouri. (See Missouri Surplus Map at our stations.) The freight and passenger service is not equalled by any road in the state, except the Missouri River trunk lines, with each of which we have union stations and direct connections.

Persons seeking farms can find property at tempting prices; men seeking business locations can find towns with ample territory and settlers to warrant good business. Additional passenger service will soon be given which will add to the growth of the towns.

The towns between Des Moines and Cainsville are particularly well located for business. Look them up. Write to the undersigned for additional information. See folder for map and lands.

WILLIAM EWART GLADSTONE.

GLADSTONE is dead. These three words convey to a larger number of people a profound sense of common and individual loss than could the death of any other man who has been identified with the history of the last half of the nineteenth century. No other has left his name so deeply engraven upon the history of his own times and country during the period in which he lived, as he whose career has just closed—a career distinguished for its splendid achievements in scholarship, in literature, in oratory, and in statesmanship. It was by what he accomplished in these several departments of human effort and by the exalted personal character which he maintained throughout his whole public life that Mr. Gladstone won, by common consent of his own people and the most enlightened nations of the world, the title of “The Grand Old Man” of England—a distinction as creditable to his country as it was to himself. Now that his splendid career is ended, with the voice of partisan criticism and malevolence hushed, there will arise from the English nation a universal acclaim of eulogy upon the character and public services of one who has accomplished so much for his country and his race.

Though not always consistent in his view and position on questions of public policy, Mr. Gladstone's public career was regarded as in the highest and best sense a model for the admiration of the English nation and the emulation of its statesmen. Born in the same year with our own grandest patriot and statesman of the present century, Abraham Lincoln, they entered public life in the same year (1832)—Lincoln as the unsuccessful candidate for a seat in the legislature of his State and Gladstone as a successful candidate for the English Parliament. As the son of a successful Liverpool merchant, Gladstone possessed rare advantages in his early life, which were faithfully improved as a student in the historic schools of Eton and Christ Church College, Oxford, graduating from the latter with the highest honors in 1831. The rank he had already taken is indicated in his election to the English House of Commons the following year, at the age of 23 years, beginning a public and official career which was continued without interruption (except for a short period in 1846-'47) up to his final retirement from public life as a member of Parliament and Premier of the British Empire at 85 years of age in 1894. He thus entered Parliament three years earlier than the late Charles P. Villiers, who, by continuous service in the House of Commons from 1835 until his death in January last, had won the title of the “Father of the House.”

Endowed by nature with a splendid constitution and a powerful physique, Mr. Gladstone was gifted with a mind of remarkable clearness and vigor, which his regular habits of life enabled him to retain almost unimpaired to the very last. The position which he assumed as a leader in the early years of his parliamentary career led the brilliant Macaulay, even while criticising some of his opinions, to speak of him before he had reached his thirtieth year as “a young man of unblemished character and of distinguished parliamentary talents, the rising hope of those stern and unbending Tories who follow reluctantly a leader whose experience is indispensable to them, but whose cautious temper and moderate opinions they abhor.” For a generation no man speaking as a mere private citizen has been assured of so large an audience or, as an official, wielded a more widely extended power. However much of his success in each of these was the result of his extraordinary intellectual abilities and his skill as a leader, no less was also due to his lofty aims and unselfish ambitions and the purity of his private and public life.

It was Mr. Gladstone's fortune conspicuously to be identified with public affairs through two generations of the most progressive period of the world's history. A disciple in early life of George Canning, we find him successively identified with the administrations of Sir Robert Peel, Lord Aberdeen, Lord Palmerston, and Lord John Russell, and the final triumphant opponent of Disraeli, as he afterwards was of the present British Premier, the Marquis of Salisbury. During that period he held the positions of Junior Lord of the Treasury, Under Colonial Secretary, Vice President of the Board of Trade, Colonial Secretary, and twice Chancellor of the Exchequer, until in 1868 he was called to assume the duties of Prime Minister. To this position he was recalled three times, serving during his four terms nearly thirteen years—a longer period than any other man in English history served except the younger Pitt.

Allusion has already been made to Mr. Gladstone's changes of position on questions of public policy. While these might ordinarily imply fickleness or inconsistency of character, in his case they indicate a progressiveness in accordance with the spirit of the times in which he lived, and above all a desire to be right and a courage which enabled him to change his opinions when he became convinced that he was in the wrong. Entering upon public life as a Tory, he became a member of the coalition ministry of the Earl of Aberdeen in 1852, and still later a Liberal of the Liberals. A protectionist at the beginning of his parliamentary career, he became a free trader and would have been one of the most vigorous supporters of the repeal of the corn laws but for the fact that this question was settled during the brief season he was out of Parliament in 1846. Opposed to the removal of the civil disabilities of the Jews, he became one of the most efficient champions of that measure. In his early parliamentary career a champion for the maintenance of a state church, he became a leader of the movement for the disestablishment of the state church in Ireland and carried that measure successfully through Parliament during the first year of his premiership.

A supporter of the Crimean war for the preservation of the integrity of the Ottoman empire, in 1877 he opposed the moral support given to Turkey by Disraeli and in his later years was one of the severest critics in the British empire of the policy of the allied powers in tolerating the atrocities of the Armenian massacres and the aggressions of the Turks upon the little kingdom of Greece.

The author of the sentiment in 1861 that Jefferson Davis had "established a nation" in the Southern States of the American union, he lived long enough to see and confess his error, and it was under his administration that the United States secured indemnification for the losses to American commerce through the confederate cruiser Alabama. Originally opposed to home rule for Ireland, he finally became its ablest and most earnest champion, and what Ireland has secured in that direction to-day, even through a Conservative administration, it owes more directly to Mr. Gladstone than to all other men. Some of the most important measures of governmental reform adopted by his opponents within the last thirty years were initiated by him and finally accepted when public sentiment became so strong that it was suicidal for any party to oppose them.

Mr. Gladstone's numerous literary productions appearing during a busy Parliamentary career bespeak the drift of his mind towards religious inquiry and even theological controversy, as well as classical study. It is to his abilities as an orator and thinker on questions of national polity, however, that the world will look for an explanation of his influence and the basis of his fame. As a parliamentary debater it is confessed that he was without a rival in his time—even if he had an equal in English history—combining as he did in his magnificent personality many of the qualities which contributed to the highest success of a Pitt, a Burke, and a Fox. Gifted with a voice of remarkable sweetness and power, eloquence seemed to flow from his lips as if the gift of nature almost unaided by art. The chief criticism of his style has been that his sentiments were sometimes overflowed by a superabundance of words, though in vehement rhetoric this sometimes gave him increased power and ended in the overthrow of his adversary. No better description of his peculiar powers as an orator is extant than that furnished by his devoted friend, admirer, and zealous parliamentary collaborer in behalf of the cause of home rule for Ireland, Justin McCarthy. Mr. McCarthy in his "History of Our Own Times" says:—

"Mr. Gladstone's first oratorical qualification was his exquisite voice. Such a voice would make commonplace seem interesting and lend something of fascination to dullness itself. It was singularly pure, clear, resonant, and sweet. The orator never seemed to use the slightest effort or strain in filling any hall and reaching the ear of the farthest among the audience. . . . Somebody once said that Gladstone was the only man in the house who could talk in italics. The saying was odd, but nevertheless appropriate and expressive. Gladstone could, by the slightest modulation in his voice, give all the emphasis of italics, of small print, of large print, or any other effect he might desire to his spoken words. . . . Sometimes he involved his sentence in parenthesis within parenthesis until the ordinary listener began to think extrication an impossibility; but the orator never failed to unravel all the entanglements and bring the passage out to a clear and legitimate conclusion. There was never any halt or incoherency, nor did the joints of the sentence fail to fit together in the right way. . . . Interruption only gave him a new stimulus and appeared to supply him with fresh resources of argument and illustration. His retort leaped to his lips. His eye caught sometimes even the mere gesture that indicated dissent or question; and perhaps some unlucky opponent who was only thinking of what might be said in opposition to the great orator found himself suddenly dragged into the conflict and overwhelmed with a torrent of remonstrance, argument, and scornful words. . . . He was always terribly in earnest. Whether the subject were great or small he threw his whole soul into it."

Of the speech in which Mr. Gladstone first showed his great power as a debater and took rank as a leader in the House of Commons—the speech in which he met and vanquished Disraeli on the budget, resulting in the overthrow of the Derby ministry in 1852—Mr. McCarthy says:—

"That speech put him in the foremost rank of English orators. Then, perhaps, he first showed to the full the great quality in which as a parliamentary orator he has never had a rival in our time—the readiness which seems to require no preparation, but can marshal all its arguments as if by instinct at a given moment and the fluency which can pour out the most eloquent language as freely as though it were but the breath of the nostrils."

That this is not intended to be the mere language of extravagant eulogy is evident from the purpose had by Mr. McCarthy in the publication of his "History." To conclude with one final quotation from his volume:—

"Did we regard parliamentary speaking as a mere instrument of parliamentary business and debate, then unquestionably Mr. Gladstone is not only the greatest, but by far the greatest English orator of our time; for he had a richer combination of gifts than any other man we can remember and he could use them oftenest with effect. . . . He seemed as if he could not be anything but eloquent. Perhaps, judged in this way, he never had an equal in the English Parliament. Neither Pitt nor Fox ever made so many speeches containing so many great qualities. Chatham was a great actor rather than a great orator. Burke was the greatest political essayist who ever addressed the House of Commons. Canning did not rise above the level of burnished rhetorical commonplace. Macaulay, who, during his time drew the most crowded houses of any speaker, not even excepting Peel, was not an orator in the true sense. Probably no one, past or present, had in combination so many gifts of voice, manner, fluency and argument, style and passion, as Mr. Gladstone."

Mr. Gladstone was to English legislative history what a Webster or a Clay were in America a half century ago, or to great political reforms in some sense what Abraham Lincoln was at a later and more stormy period. While no other statesman of his own or any other nation has equaled him in the length of his public career, covering a period of nearly two thirds of the century, it is equally true that no statesman of the nineteenth century in any land has equaled him—Abraham Lincoln alone excepted—in the importance and far-reaching effect of the reforms which he instituted. His name will go down in history as that of England's wisest, most liberal, and progressive statesman.—Chicago Tribune, May 19.

SUGGESTIVE.

WE are receiving articles from several of the brethren on the subject of coöperation, community of labor and interests, some of which have merit. But, we can but think if the men who write them would take up the history of communal and industrial societies, as the same have been originated, planted, flourished, and decayed, or are in the bloom of success, it would aid them to a better understanding of the subject, and might help them to lay much more definite plans before our readers. The following which is suggestive may direct the thoughts towards some of the lions (big or little) that may be in the way.

LAST OF THE ZOAR SOCIETY.

AFFAIRS OF THE ONCE PROSPEROUS OHIO COLONY WOUND UP AND THE PROCEEDS DIVIDED.

Massillon, O., April 19.—The affairs of the Zoar society have finally been settled, and the society, which was prosperous for four-score years, is now a thing of the past. The proceeds from the sale of seven thousand acres of land and other property owned by the society net each member about $12,000. Some of the members do not know the value of money for it was never used by them. All earnings of the society went into a general fund and members in exchange for labor simply secured food and clothing. It was the younger members who rebelled and brought about the change.

In this case the men who became restless and uneasy under the peculiar regime of the society rulers, and who brought about the rupture of the bonds and dissolved the society, were not the ones who originated the plans, furnished the funds to create and carry on the operations of the society in detail, and bore the brunt of the long, tedious, and hard battle to make headway against the systems ruling among their fellow men; but were the younger element, those who had not labored and borne deprivation and studied and practiced the closest economy and self-sacrifice to accumulate the aggregated wealth of land and property which was finally distributed by the courts, those most likely who took into the society little or nothing, and whose labor contributed but little to the volume of property the society died possessed of.

We read considerable of the histories of the various societies in the United States, this last winter, this colony of Zoarites among them. The working details of any of them did not commend themselves to our judgment, as being applicable or available to us as a people, however others may have seen them. And as yet not having seen divine light cast upon the problem in its working details, we are still waiting, hoping that the gospel economy, as we do understand it, may prevail until other directions are given. One of the surest ways of making headway in the plans some of our advisers are ready to present for our general acceptance, is for these same men and women to get together, so many as are of the one mind, and proceed at once to put their schemes into operation "without waiting for those who may be faithless or opposed, to become convinced of feasibility, or success."

Such a course of procedure is quite lawful, both so far as the law of the church and the law of the land are concerned. Such schemes are permissible under the revelation of August, 1831, section 58, paragraph 6. And under the laws of the order or orders of Enoch. We should really like to see some of the schemes put into operation; nothing succeeds like success, and nothing proves a plan so well as disaster—or success. One plan carried unto success, would be the nucleus of many; a section of the church made successfully coöperative, would soon leaven the lump with the principles of its success and perpetuity, and prove the parent stock from which other sections would speedily take the fruit of example and success.

One brother writes that he is already to join with even a few others in a coöperative system. Can he find the few, willing to put forth the energies, the will, the labor, and adopt and practice the principles of self-repression and sacrifice such a work would inevitably demand? The entire wealth of the church divided by the number of members, would increase the separate fortune of the individuals but little, and would by no means give each a competency to be enjoyed without labor; but while this is true, there can be, and is no reason why, many or few, as the case may be, should not contribute much or little to a coöperative association, if they so desire and can agree as to the working details.

IS IT JUSTIFIABLE FEAR?

THE Christian Index, published by the Christians, a religious sect, at Des Moines, Iowa, is vexing its soul in regard to two serious things which threaten the Christian peace in America. In its missionary notes for April 20, it has the following given in the order here reproduced:—

The Boston Pilot says, "The child is living to-day who will see the majority of the people of America Roman Catholic."

Mormonism is yet a threatening danger; they are redoubling their efforts to win adherents. They send out three thousand missionaries who must go at their own expense. They have sixty-six missionaries at work in Eastern Tennessee; thirty-four in Eastern Kentucky. We must send the light of truth to cast out this darkness. Help our Home board do this.

Catholicism and Mormonism; two peculiar things conjoined against which the Index wants help to cast them out as "darkness." That is right, friend Index, "turn on the light." But the help the Index wants is monetary. "Help the Home board;" is its cry.

These people will spend thousands of dollars freely to sustain the efforts of their missionaries, boards of effort of all kinds, presses and printing plants, schools and colleges. Ought the saints to be behind them in commendable effort to carry abroad the light, as it is in Jesus? Verily, nay!

The "Mormon missionaries;" that is, the elders from Utah, representing the theories, doctrines, practices, and church organizations as formulated, promulgated, and set in being by President Brigham Young, Heber C. Kimball, Orson Pratt, and others, are giving the men whom the Index represents, Christians, so-called, and a whole lot of others, creedologists, Protestants, sects, and churches, a deal of trouble of mind, because forsooth, they are sending their propagandist forces all over the country. We commend the zeal of the one, and pity the other because of their fear.

If our friends of the Index have the exact truth, faith, doctrines, organization, and church practices included, why should they fear, or of what be afraid? Why hesitate to meet the hosts of those they deem in error in the arena of controversy and let the intelligence of the people determine, each for himself, where the truth may be? The motto of every true believer should be, Examine "all things; hold fast that which is good."

The Index people borrow some one else's trouble and by use make it theirs. The Catholics come in for a share in the fear of these self-appointed guardians of the religious consciences of the public. The Boston Pilot, published at the "Hub," may think that America's hosts will become rapidly Catholic, and for such a change to take place in the lifetime of the child "living to-day," would be a very rapid work; but, we with many others do not share in the fear that the contemplation of such a thing seems to create in the Index people. To us, Catholicism with the Inquisition and Jesuitical College eliminated, and the church, relieved of temporal power and the political domination of state affairs has no more terrors than do Anglicism, Presbyterianism, Methodism, or the theories of Alexander Campbell, his coworkers and successors: for, if there is anything in the idea and claim to authority and rightful church existence, by virtue of apostolic succession, the Catholics are in the best condition to maintain their claim, as the origin of all of the Protestant bodies may be traced to the Catholic Church from which the Reformers wrought.

Intolerance is no more to be feared or condemned in the Catholic Church than in the M. E. or Christian, so-called. But why should the Christian Index express fear of Catholicism in America? If with the Christian Church, or the followers of Alexander Campbell, the truth is to be found, where is the ground for fear?

MINISTERIAL EXPERIENCES.

THE elders meet with some queer experiences in their field work. Here are specimens of it.

Bro. Henry C. Smith, writing from Los Angeles, California, May 9, in a postscript writes thus:—

I like to have forgotten to tell you of a little experience had the other day on the street corner. I was talking with a brother when a man passed us; the brother and I parted, and the man, watching his chance, returned and asked, "Can you tell me what to do to be saved?" I told him I thought I could, and commenced to do so. In speaking of Christ and his doctrine, he interrupted me with, "Who is Christ?" and, "Why look to a dead man, as Christ?" After talking a little while he arose in his dignity and said, "I am Christ; God, the Father, and the Son."

I looked him squarely in the eye and reached out my hand to touch him, and said, "You poor creature!" He at once drew back, and gave me such a cursing as I have not had for many years, using the most profane language; and then started off with a kind of dead chuckle, as near as I can describe it.

Another man came to one of our meetings not long since, and wished to speak, or deliver a message. He then went on to tell us what the Lord had revealed to him concerning the elementary world and the nations of the earth. I took liberty to tell him that he was being deceived; but he went on through the city, warning the inhabitants of impending dangers that were to follow at a certain time. (The time mentioned by him is now passed, and we breathe quite freely again.)

Another an old man came into our prayer meeting and wished to be administered to; claimed to have been baptized into the church in 1842; but knew little about the church, or its history. We tried to inform him of the changes in the church since that day; and he seems to be somewhat interested; but I guess is a little unsound in mind. How good it is to know that the truth cannot be tossed to and fro with every wind of doctrine.

To us one of the wonders is that after the fearful experiences the church passed through so many retained their natural soundness of mind. It was enough to turn the strong brain, let alone the weak ones.

BRO. F. M. McDONALD, priest of the New London, Iowa, branch, has sent us a book, entitled, "the Bible and Reason against Atheism;" which we accept, and thank the brother for his kind thoughtfulness.

Bro. John S. Kier, of Chicago, sends clipping from a local Illinois paper from which we note that he is at work defending the faith.

Original Poetry.

COMMUNING.

BY E. A. RHODES.

Lord, in trouble and in woe
Whither can thy children go
Except to thee, O God, Most High,
Who hearest when to thee they cry?

Thou leadest them in pastures green
And by the quiet waters side,
And thou canst guide through life's dark dream,
And thou dost watch at eventide.

Lord, thou dost feed and fold thy sheep
And care them in the silent night;
Though hirelings sink in slumber deep
Thou keepest watch till morning light.

O God, I thank thee that the dawn
Of latter-days has come for me;
That I no more in darkness mourn
Because my way I cannot see.

Take ye my yoke and learn of me,
The loving Savior left command,
And we as children ought to be Obedient to that gentle hand.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

"There's many a cross in the way we go,
And we may not choose but take it,
Yet evermore holdeth this truth the same:
That our life is what we make it.

Still into our hands come the somber threads
And bright ones,—the gift of heaven—
But what we weave is the pattern we choose
To make from the threads that are given."

"It is the most reasonable thing in the world," says Mark Hopkins, "to believe that God being what he is, will do as he promised to do;" and Jeremy Taylor suggests that "it is impossible for that man to despair who remembers that his helper is omnipotent." If faith be well founded, all else follows most naturally. It is well then that faith is the first principle in revealed religion—the foundation stone. Just to thoroughly believe this one grand truth ought to and would lift the Christian above each anxious care besetting the pathway of life. Alas, how many of us are constrained to say, "Lord, I believe, help thou mine unbelief," simply because from day to day we are living beneath our privilege.

"If I were you"—Just stop, my friend, before you finish that sentence, long enough to remember that, you are not me. Perhaps somewhere in this broad universe I may have my exact counterpart, but no two have ever yet been found exactly alike in all respects. The difference in the needs of your life and mine—your soul and mine—will be measured by the demands of the immortal spirit within us. What a miserable paraphrase then upon the needs of human beings is the narrow, one-sided, selfish, "I standard."

If your friend, in trouble, perplexity, or distress come to you and ask "What would you do if you were me?" It will be ample time to suggest what seems to you the wiser plan of procedure; but until such advice is asked, you will act wisely and well, if you respect the individual right which each man or woman holds as a legacy direct from God, to judge and determine for himself or herself that which he or she ought to do under the circumstances, and until such action causes the individual to infringe upon the rights of another, you have no right to interfere, not even so much as to obtrude that miserable "I standard" before his eyes.

"By five years' experience in the school-room," writes a contributor to Autumn Leaves, "I have found how great the duty is to rightly mold and elevate the mind of youth. We must have that spirit which recognizes and reverences the workmanship of God in every child, which yearns to be instrumental in training it to the highest attainments of which it is capable."

PRAYER UNION.

SPECIAL REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.

EARNEST prayer is requested on behalf of Sr. Coons, that if it is God's will she may be healed of a cancer that is fast eating her life away. Also for Sr. VanBrunt, that she may be healed of the asthma; she suffers very much.

BLACKFOOT, Idaho.

Dear Sister Walker:—The Lord has been so good to me and my family lately, that we want all the dear saints to rejoice with us. Our daughter, Agnes, was stricken with jaundice; her body, and the white of her eyes, was as yellow as they could be. She suffered dreadfully. I gave her some laxative medicine, which only made her worse. When asked if she had faith that the Lord could cure her, she replied, Yes. We could not make arrangements to send for Elder Grimett to administer the ordinance of healing, owing to the absence of my husband and daughter Frances. So I gave her some consecrated oil, and applied some to the eyes, head, and body; then we knelt in prayer to God, the giver of all good, who heard and answered our prayers; and now she is well. To him be all the praise.

One very peculiar feature in the healing I wish to mention. When the yellow left her body, it began to spread over her face. I could not endure to see it there, and asked God to rebuke it and not let it spread over her face. Shortly after it had all disappeared. I have wept tears of joy to see the Lord's goodness to me. May I ever prove faithful and be privileged to do something for him in return for his wonderful goodness to us. We miss the brethren, and pray God to bless them.

I wish we had a branch organized here. Ever praying for the welfare of the church, I remain,

Your sister in the gospel,

JANE HEATON.

LA SALLE, Illinois.

Dear Sister:—I am one of the isolated sisters; there are not any saints living here to my knowledge. For the past few weeks I have been trying to follow the topics in the prayer union subjects, and on Thursday afternoons to learn the memory verses, and think if I but follow it up it will help me ever so much. If all the lone ones would do the same I think they would be benefited thereby. I enjoy reading the Home Column, and think the articles therein contain some excellent thoughts. I have two sweet children, and beg the sisters to pray for me that I may be given courage and strength to teach them to love and serve their Maker when they become old enough to be so taught. Pray, dear sisters, for me and for my husband, that he my quit strong drink.

Lovingly yours,

MAUD WHITNEY.

INVOCATION.

IN BEHALF OF THE PRAYER UNION.

Father, now we come to thee,
Humble in sincerity;
Hear, O hear us when we pray,
Bid our thoughts turn not away.

Help us each thy will to do,
Though our numbers be but few;
Humble handmaidens are we,
Met to offer prayer to thee.

Where two or three together meet,
To worship at our Savior's feet,
Thou in thy great tenderness,
Promised thou wouldst surely bless.

Oh, do not our prayers despise,
Send thy Spirit from the skies;
Fill our soul with joy and peace,
May our zeal and trust increase.

On the subject of to-day,
Help us each aright to pray;
Each Prayer Union wilt thou hear,
May each feel that thou art near.

May the sick for whom we pray,
Feel a holy, peaceful ray
Of the Spirit's quickening power,
Healing them at this same hour.

Wherein we have failed, dear Lord,
To hear and heed thy blessed word,
O forgive our waywardness,
Keep our feet in paths of peace.

We praise thy name for blessings given,
And the hope we have of heaven;
May that precious hope increase,
Till we reach that realm of peace.

PRAYER UNION SUBJECTS.

MEMORY VERSES FOR JUNE.

Thursday, June 2.—The church, its ministers and membership. That righteousness, love, and zeal in the work and spread of the gospel may increase and to this end the saints with one heart and mind bring their tithes and offerings into the Lord's storehouse. That God will continue to reveal his mind to his servants in the direction of the affairs of the church.

Memory Verses.—D. C. 64:5; 70:2, 3.

Thursday, June 9.—Our families. Prayer for the members of our families by name, and for the families of each other and those of the ministry. For the youth of the church in general.

Memory Verses.—D. C. 68:4; 90:6-9.

Thursday, June 16.—Missions and Sunday school work, and the church publications. Also for the poor, the sick, and afflicted.

Memory Verses.—D. C. 1; Matt. 25:32-47.

Thursday, June 23.—Zion, our country, its welfare and prosperity, and its speedy purification by the reception of truth. That the scattered remnants may be gathered in, and the kingdom of Christ be established.

Memory Verses.—D. C. 45:4-15.

Thursday, June 30.—The gathering of Israel to their own land, and the restoration to them of the pure gospel in its fullness, and its acceptance by them to their everlasting peace.

Memory Verses.—Hosea 6:1-3; Isa. 12.

Sunday School Department.

ELDER T. A. HOGAS, EDITOR.

Henderson, Mills Co., Iowa.

Send communications for this department to the Editor
Address minutes and notices of conventions, etc., to "Editors Herald, Lamoni, Iowa."

BRO. W. S. HODSON, writing from Fanning, Kansas, asks:—

"Have we the right to hold Sunday school institutes in and of a district? If so, would you advise holding more than one a year?"

Yes, all districts have not only the right to hold Sunday school institutes, but they have our most hearty approval, and best wishes, and prayers, in so doing. Several districts have already done so and have found it an effective way to enlist and develop Sunday school workers. Institute work has been found to be absolutely essential to success in day school work, and is being found equally as beneficial to the Sunday school work. Other districts will do well to give it a trial. We need to get to the bottom in our work. There is where the institute aims.

As to how many a district should try in a year, must be governed by the circumstances of the district concerned. Some could have one, some two, and some even more. But as a rule one a year, together with two or three other conventions, is about all a district can support. One good one well attended would do more good to the work than several that were of poor quality and not attended. Some districts at this special time meet for a two-days' institute. This seems to be about right. There is time enough to do a great deal of work, and most of the workers can spare the time for this once a year.

Who will be the next to take it up?

THE following extracts from the report sent by Bro. F. G. Pitt, who is now in the European mission. It was received prior to the General Convention, but was mislaid and could not be found till after the convention was over. We give such parts thereof as are of general interest:—

18 Braithwaite Road,

BIRMINGHAM, Eng., March 10, '98.

Bro. T. A. Hougas:—Your very kind and welcome letter received. Thanks for your words of cheer. I think we can receive lots of encouragement in this distant field without it spoiling us.

In answer to your request for a report from me touching the Sunday school work in my mission, I would say: It would afford me the greatest of pleasure to be able to say to you that all the schools were doing finely and that the work here was far in advance of what it is in your country. But such is far from being true, and with a few exceptions the Sunday school work cannot be said to be in a very good condition. I know of no schools in all Wales that you would really call schools. There is one place and perhaps two where a few meet and study a Bible lesson, but they are not conducted anything like our Sunday schools. . . . I have not visited all the schools in England yet. Some that I have visited have no schools, some are very poorly managed, and a few are fairly well conducted. The best I have seen are in Manchester. Here they have some really good Sunday school workers, and the schools, I think, would compare fairly well with the majority of ours in America. But these could be greatly improved if they would more fully adopt the Quarterlies and the system therein recommended.

The idea that the Sunday school is for little children only, retards the work wherever it obtains. In many of the schools I see no classes formed of older members, such as form our Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants classes. I do not remember having seen a class in either of the two last books mentioned since I have been in this country. . . .

Most of the scholars are boys and girls under sixteen years of age. The result is that in some places our young people gradually drift away into the world. . . .

It is by no means all the fault of our members that the work is not in better condition in this country. Habits, customs, and conditions are much different here from what they are in America. Let me name a few: Here Saturday afternoon is a holiday. This includes Saturday night as well, which, with some means all night. It is astonishing to see the crowds on the streets every Saturday night. I have come home as late as one or two o'clock in the morning and people would be sitting on their doorsteps and standing on the streets talking with their neighbors as though they had no idea of the lateness of the hour or of bedtime. Late hours are the rule here. As a result people are late getting up Sunday morning, and have not the time to get the children ready and bring them to Sunday school. If the children come at all, they must be sent, not brought. Again, in many places the street cars do not run on Sundays till afternoon, and as many of the saints live a long way from the place of meeting, it becomes very difficult to meet till afternoon. And then the saints like to have their testimony meeting. When there is not time for both, the Sunday school is neglected. . . .

. . . The schools are generally lacking in the bright cheerful songs adapted to the child's mind. Of all places the Sunday school is the last place where those slow, doleful tunes should be sung. I learn that one reason why our tunes are not more generally adopted is because many here have been taught to sing by the old "sol-fa" system, and do not understand the staff system. Another thing: The Winnowed Songs are too expensive to give to the children. Books are much cheaper here than with you. If we had the Winnowed Songs printed in a little book without the music that would sell for about fourpence, it would be a great assistance. . . . You may be sure that I am still greatly interested in this Sunday school work. And if I continue here, I lose no opportunity in trying to bring about a better condition in the Sunday schools and among the young people generally. But thus far, while I see oh! so much to be done, I find the opportunities for doing it are not abundant. It is a well-known fact that English people, generally, love their country, and there is nothing wrong about that. It is really commendable. But when this love of home and home institutions prevents them from receiving good from any outside source, it is simply carried too far. . . . You can readily see that where that spirit obtains how hard it is to even offer one's services where he can see how conditions could be improved. I am glad to say, however, that this sentiment does not prevail all over England. In many places I have found the saints very willing to be corrected and to be put right. And personally I have met very kind treatment wherever I have been. I believe, however, that none of us are too old or too wise to learn, and that we ought to accept all the good we can get from every source; then we may expect to grow.

Prejudice runs high here, the people are largely under priestly control. This makes it very hard to reach the outside world. But in some sections the Sunday school is doing a good work among the young. And if it can be made to hold the young people after they grow up, so that they will not drift away into the world, a much greater work may be accomplished than is being accomplished now in some localities. . . .

I would love to be with you in the General Convention and in all your work. May God bless you all.

Yours in bonds,

F. G. PITT.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., May 11.

Editors Herald:—I am doing what little I can for the interest of the work in this great "city of churches." The way was opened up for me to visit some from house to house, and in this way I have found some that are willing to listen to what I have to say; and since I have commenced in this way I find more than I can attend to at present.

I am expecting to preach in a private house in a few days, as there is a young man that I have been talking with who has promised to assist me in getting those that he is acquainted with to come to his house and hear. So I expect to be busy and do all I can for the work in this city. Hoping that I may be remembered in your prayers with all the saints, I remain, your brother in Christ,

JOSEPH SQUIRE, SEN.

FISKVILLE, R. I., May 13.

Editors Herald:—Times are a little lively in this section of the world just at present and the sight of blue coats, brass buttons, and other paraphernalia of war are everywhere in evidence of Uncle Sam's activity. Still, the same conservativeness clings to the people, and it will take something remarkable to get them out of the well-defined spiritual ruts they are now running in.

At the present writing we (that is I and myself) are holding forth at the saints' chapel at Fiskville, to small but apparently interested audiences. Last Sunday morning I thought I would step into the Baptist church in this place and hear the new preacher (a former acquaintance). I was invited to take a seat on the stand and requested to add a few remarks, which I did at the close of the sermon. I then asked the Reverend gentleman if he could be present and preach in our chapel the following Tuesday evening, and he said that he could and would. I therefore announced that he would be the preacher for Tuesday evening, and told all to come. The Baptist preacher also announced that he was to preach for the saints and "help Bro. Robley" and "believed in unity" etc. But alas! the young preacher had forgotten that he was bought with a price—something like three hundred dollars a year—and that his employers might object to him preaching to the benighted Latter Day Saints. But they did object, and therefore the preacher did not come, or send any word in a direct manner to enlighten the public why he did not. However, we have not lost any sleep over the matter, and feel happy, knowing that such sentiments voiced in the manner related above, will only react on the parties harboring them; and already we have evidences that this is the case.

Before coming to Fiskville this time I went to Plymouth, Massachusetts, and held a number of services in the union church, and also in the houses of Brn. Sampson and Joy, which were well attended by the saints, a number of strangers also being present. I felt well while at Plymouth and the Spirit was with us. I found a comfortable and hospitable home at Bro. Hemmerly's and was entertained by others of the saints as well.

While at Plymouth a business meeting was held by the branch to talk over matters relating to building a chapel; and after due deliberation they concluded to make a beginning at once, paying as they went or nearly so. They put the writer (while there) in as sort of a charge d' affairs and I "donned the blue," only in this case it was a pair of blue overalls. Before I left the foundation was well under way, and a letter from Plymouth recently says they are having remarkable success in obtaining money from friends for the building. Bro. Nickerson, the president of the branch, and his excellent family, are energetic and faithful in the work. Bro. Leland is superintendent of the Sunday school and is a young man of integrity and worth, and is a great help even now, and will no doubt be more so in the future, if faithful and humble. I believe there is a brighter outlook for the work in Plymouth now than there has been for some time in the past.

The prayer meetings in Providence are well attended, and usually a goodly portion of the Holy Spirit is present. Looking for the final redemption of Zion, I see God's hand at work in the world.

Hark! it is the voice of Jehovah
Saying with the nations,
Long, long have I borne in patience,
Waiting in vain for repentance.
Now the sword of mine anger is falling,
And will light on the nations in justice;
For the wicked shall not always flourish,
And God will yet bless the faithful;
And Zion my own shall find favor,
While safety shall be in her border,
My gospel shall go to the people,
And many will hear its glad message
And rejoice in God their Creator,
While others reject to their sorrow,
And curse the great God who has made them.
And mourning, and sorrow, and anguish
Shall cover the earth like a blanket.
But fearlessly those who are faithful
Can look to the Father for succor;
For he never will leave nor forsake them
In the hour of want or of danger.

ELIZA, Ill., May 17.

Editors Herald:—I moved here March 1 from Iowa, after having been away a year. The branch here is badly scattered. There are some very earnest saints that are willing to do what they can for the spread of the gospel. There are also some that seem to be quite indifferent about the work, having their talents hid in a napkin, seeming to care more for the things of this world than for heavenly things.

I am trying to do what I can to get the truth before the people. I do not do as much preaching as I would like to, as I have to labor for the bread that perisheth, but try to have from one to two appointments every Sunday. There are many calls for preaching within a few hours' drive from here. I had the pleasure of baptizing a man of education and ability on May 1. He was very near to infidelity when he came in contact with the saints. He first heard the gospel by Bro. J. W. Peterson, began to investigate, and was soon convinced of the truth, and obeyed it.

J. W. ADAMS.

APPLEDORE, Ont., May 12.

Editors Herald:—It is some time since I have written to your columns, but it is not because I am not interested in the work. I feel I owe much gratitude to my Creator for his many blessings bestowed upon me from my earliest recollections. I have a desire to fill well my mission in life, to aid in cheering others along life's journey, and try in humility to reap a reward with the true and faithful.

Elder St. John and Elder Blackmore held service at Thorncliffe. Bro. G. F. Green occupied the stand here, while Elder Green preached at Blenheim and Cedar Springs last Sabbath. All services were well attended.

Yours in hope,

MARY M. GREEN.

NEOLA, Iowa, May 13.

Editors Herald:—I have read Sr. Dodd's letter from Pocatella, Idaho, also Sr. Emerson's from Ticonic, Iowa. I have only one child, a little girl two years and four months old. I have had so much spare time this winter. How many times I have thought, I do wish I could do something to help keep the blessed news of the angel's message rolling. If I know myself I know I love this grand work of God more and more every day.

I read this winter in the Herald of an elder who had been away on a mission and when he came home he found his wife had been obliged to keep the children out of school because they were barefooted, having no shoes to wear. This made me feel sad. If they love the work well enough to forsake home and go out into the world, their families ought to be cared for better than this. I cannot see why every branch could not have a Ladies' Aid Society. The ladies and society of the Presbyterian Church here in this place seems to have good success in making rag carpets. They sell them as fast as they can get them made. A carpet of this kind can always be sold any place, and at a good profit too. Nice quilts can easily be sold, but it takes more work to make them than to make a carpet.

This would be the plan I would first suggest to try for those who are united with branches close by. Oftentimes some of us get behind with our plain sewing and are obliged to hire the work done. If we had a society in each branch we could call upon them to all come some day and do the work. The money for the sewing could be paid to the aid society. In this way we could keep the money in the church and could get help from our friends and neighbors.

There are so many I know that do not pay tithing, and I believe we could get help from them in this way. I cannot think of any plan for the scattered sisters only what has already been suggested.

I can say as Sr. Emerson said in her letter in the Ensign, that if there is a society in any place where they thought they could sell any kind of hand work, I will try and get others to help me and will send in a box. I do all kinds of painting both oil and pastel. If I knew where I could send work of this kind to be sold, I would be very glad. There are so many kinds of fancy needle-work, too numerous to mention. We can all do something in this line. I think tissue and crape paper flowers are just beautiful when made real nice. There has been quite a few of them sold here and they are not what I call natural or lifelike either. But the things just mentioned cannot be sold every place, as a carpet or quilt could be.

We could send all moneys to the Bishop and have him keep a separate account and report once a year; then we would know what we had accomplished. And perhaps be more encouraged to try harder another year.

Let us wake up and get to work at once and not lose any time remembering that when a day is spent we cannot call it back. Let us see what we can do for the Master this year. I believe many souls would be glad to receive this work if they knew what it was. Let us strive as never before to live by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of the Lord.

Your sister in Christ,

LUCINDA CARLILE.

PLEW, Mo., May 13.

Editors Herald:—The signs of the times indicate that summer is nigh in this region. Everything seems to be robed in a garment of green. The farmers are all busy planting, etc. Bro. Beebe and I came here from the Downie church, about eight miles from here in Bro. John Waldron's neighborhood, where we endeavored to hold a series of meetings. The inclemency of the weather prevented us from accomplishing much. We go to that locality to-morrow, where we will be for the next few weeks, endeavoring to sow the gospel seed among the strawberry "campers."

This is a great strawberry country. It takes about four thousand pickers. People come from all parts of the country, so we believe this an excellent opportunity to do missionary work. Through the day we will be numbered among the "pickers," but at night will hoist the gospel banner of King Immanuel. Please send us about five hundred or more tracts to Sarcoxie, Missouri.

While at this place we have been domiciled at Bro. Killebrew's and Mrs. Snead's. We preached about six sermons at Plew to small crowds, but fair liberty was enjoyed. Several have inquired about that Englishman at Springfield. In bonds, A. M. BAKER.

MONDAMIN, Iowa, May 19.

Editors Herald:—I send you to-day the discussion of Tuesday night. Storming very hard now, so that the prospect is not good for large attendance to-night.

To-night closes the discussion on Book of Mormon proposition, and Williams has proved every point he has attempted to prove, and Bays has not attempted to disprove many of them, and those he has attempted to disprove he has failed—utterly failed. The saints all feel surprised and some of them disappointed to think Bays has done no better. Your brother,

J. F. MINTUN.

MONDAMIN, Iowa, May 19.

Editors Herald:—I am fully convinced that every point made(?) in Davis H. Bays' work, "Doctrines and Dogmas of Mormonism," can be fully and satisfactorily refuted on his own grounds. I have considerable matter colated and shall proceed as rapidly as I can to collect more when the discussion closes, so that we can get out a suitable reply. His contention on the language of the Book of Mormon will prove a boomerang to him, and his defeat means an effectual and lasting rebuke to the "Christian unbelieving society."

Yours,

T. W. WILLIAMS.

STANDLEY, I. T., May 17.

Editors Herald:—Please announce that Bro. W. B. Toney, for reasons best known to himself, turned his part of the debate with J. W. Chism over to me. The debate between J. W. Chism and myself will begin at Coalgate, Indian Territory, June 15, at ten o'clock a. m., and will last six days. The propositions: First, "The church of which I, J. W. Chism, am a member, known by me and among my brethren as the Church of Christ, is identical in origin, organization, faith, and practice with the Church of Christ in the days of the apostles."—J. W. Chism affirms; J. D. Erwin denies.

Second, "The church of which I am a member, known by me and my brethren as the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, is the true Church of God and accepted by him."—J. D. Erwin affirms; J. W. Chism denies.

Elder J. W. Chism is the great Texas lion that skinned A. J. Moore, at Manchester, Texas, and scattered the saints: skinned I. N. White at Kosoma, Indian Territory, and caused a murmur in the camp of Israel.

Come one, come all. If he skins J. D. Erwin, I'll quit debating. I've met him once before in debate. In bonds, JEFFERSON DAVIS ERWIN.

DAVENPORT, Iowa, May 16.

Editors Herald:—Our branch in Rock Island is in fair condition at present; as also the Sunday school. We hold meetings every Sabbath at two p. m., in the Swedish Baptist church, corner of Fifth and Twenty-first Streets. We have been using this church some time, but after the people found we were somebody indeed, and after consultation with their ministers and others, have concluded that it is best that we find other quarters, which we will be obliged to do after our June conference. We are very grateful, however, to have the use of this house for Sunday school convention and conference.

We hope there may be a good attendance of saints and friends. The saints are scattered around in the three cities, so much so that it will make it somewhat inconvenient getting around, and so few in number that it may be difficult to find places for all to stop; but the committee will do the best we can to find room for all; so do not stay away on this account. All those coming will please write me when they are coming, so we may know how many to provide for. When arriving in Rock Island go to the church, as directed above.

We are arranging for an entertainment Friday evening. We trust it may be a success. We have written some for help and hope they will respond soon. Let all the schools be well represented in the Kewanee district; and do not forget to send reports to the district secretary as soon as accepted.

Bro. Joseph Smith has promised to be present, and others are expected, and we hope we may be favored with such meetings as will not soon be forgotten. Bring Bibles, Quarterlies, Hymnals, Winnowed Songs, etc.

Your brother in Christ,

W. E. LARUE.

North Harrison Street.

CHICAGO, Ill., May 15.

Editors Herald:—With much pleasure I write a few lines since the conference advised that my husband, Elder G. H. Graves, be appointed to Chicago among the colored people. There are only he and poor I to hold up the standard of this great work among our race, as there is only one brother in the church here colored, and he is but young and does hardly know the mysteries of the work, and we are very much in need of a little assistance in preparing our little mission, as the saints here are but few; but they have given us a helping hand, for which we thank God.

Bro. Reese gave us five dollars towards some chairs, and the West Pullman saints and some of our own branch made us a pound party, and I am safe to say we will not want for food for a month or six weeks, for which our hearts were made glad and to rejoice in God for his goodness.

There have been several sermons preached by different brethren since we have had the mission, and Bro. Cooper will speak for us in the coming week. Bro. Strange speaks for us to-night, and there are several that are investigating the work. I have a brother and sister here, and they are not in the church; but my brother said he would be baptized in two weeks; and others are near the door. Now if there are any of the saints in any of the branches that feel as though they could help us in our struggle (for our people are poor and we have a hard task as colored people) if the white saints will help us we may do a great work here.

I trust you will consider our application and pray God in our behalf and act as it seems best to you for us.

Pray for me in my affliction, as I have been an invalid for nine years, and have much to contend with on that account; but I am still contending for the faith that was once delivered to the saints. I am,

Your sister in the faith of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ,

ANNIE GRAVES.

CHICAGO, Ill., May 15.

Dear Brothers and Sisters in the one faith of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ:—As Mrs. G. H. Graves has inclosed to the Herald our necessities, I will inform you all what I need.

At present I need eighty chairs and I can get them for about twenty cents each, second-handed, and paint them myself. The ones I have now a white gentleman loaned me, and he wants them about the 1st of June.

I can get eighty chairs for sixteen dollars, and I want to get a little lumber for a platform for the pulpit. Bro. Lange who is a carpenter has made us a very nice pulpit and made it a present to the mission. When I get well established here I can greatly help your book concern, and I will do all in my power for the Herald Office in books and papers and tracts. I could use about three thousand tracts now, if I was able to send for them, and could also use lots of ministers' cards, for I intend to stir up the people in Chicago this year.

Please to pray God for us.

Your brother in bonds,

G. H. GRAVES.

Editors Herald:—Reading in one of the late issues what a brother says conference decided upon in regard to mission work for those who use intoxicating drink or tobacco, I could not resist the temptation of writing on a few subjects that I feel deeply upon. Now, take men who have been in the habit of using tobacco to excess, spending money that was badly needed in their families, and bring a noble, true-hearted elder in their midst, have him preach the everlasting gospel as they never heard it preached and talk to them of being pure and clean, giving up all bad habits, we can realize what would be their thoughts; and before they are baptized, feeling they must give up tobacco, they stop its use. Then after they have entered the work and almost overcome, "not quite," their appetite which was great for its use, to have one come among them who uses it, one can easily see that they would think, "If it is right for him, it is not wrong for me."

Then, take one who can drink from one to two glasses of hard cider, which will have no apparent effect upon him, and let them spend a social evening in a company of young people where one half a glass to some would cause intoxication; it is not hard to understand what might be the result. O, that all might remember what the Scriptures say: "It is good neither to eat flesh, nor to drink wine, nor anything whereby thy brother stumbleth, or is offended, or is made weak."

I was also glad to read the remarks made by a brother in regard to the attention paid the opposite sex. It is a thing to be deplored. Our elders should remember that by their own church they are looked upon as true and noble men, called of God, and that it is wrong to carry on a flirtation with one of the fair ones, making her and the world at large believe he is serious when such is not the case. It does seem as if they do not stop to realize the great hurt they do the cause, as the world is watching for every flaw. The innocent, of course, have to bear the blame, while the wrongdoer can seek other fields. If they think their conditions are such that they cannot marry, then let them overcome their propensity for flirting, as it may take months or years to build the work up again, and may be a lasting sorrow to one who was made to believe they were more than sister or friend. For there are women, I am glad to say, who so prize their fair name that to have one word of reproach cast upon it would cause deeper sorrow than the loss of the most beloved friend.

May these few remarks, written in a spirit of love and kindness be the means of doing some good; and may the day soon come when all who profess to be lovers of Christ will look upon his work as the holy and sanctified work it should be.

ANON.

WEST CONCORD, Minn., May 18.

Editors Herald:—I came here yesterday from the city of Minneapolis, and although it was a bad, stormy night I had the pleasure of speaking to a fair congregation and rode home in one of the hardest rainstorms I have been out in for a long time. To say that it was dark would be to put it mildly, but a good team and a safe driver took us home all right.

I baptized three at Minneapolis before I left there; two of them heads of families. Others are believing, but may put it off until too late.

I wish to say to all interested in gospel work, that my mission address will be West Concord, Dodge County, Minnesota, and letters to that address will reach me. I will be glad to hear from any desiring preaching, and trust that all will be active and secure places that we may occupy when we do come. The "hastening time" is upon us and we must keep pace with it or be left behind.

For truth and right,

E. A. STEDMAN.

CHICAGO, Ill., May 18.

Editors Herald:—This will let you see that I am still interested in this great latter-day work; and I am thankful that I am, for as I see it, it is the greatest thing of worth that the mind of man can think on.

Strange, is it not, that so few know anything about what the Author of the universe has done in this day and generation? The Christian world make manifest their interest in religion by the sacrifices they make. It is said that religion costs the world two billions of dollars every year. This shows they have considerable interest in it.

Now what is the position we occupy as a religious denomination? Just this: to let the whole religious world know that God is a being that stands to his word. He has made certain promises, and made known in the word that they would be fulfilled. We come and tell the people that the angel has come, as promised, and they find fault because God has fulfilled his word. Would anyone on earth find fault because it was said of them they were men of their word. Now this is what Latter Day Saints are found fault with for—for saying that God is a being of his word. Inclosed is a clipping, you can insert, if you please.

If you put this in the Herald it is the first since '76, twenty-two years ago.

JOHN S. KEIR.

GLENWOOD, Iowa, May 16.

Editors Herald:—It is a sad reflection indeed, when we stop to think that so few people (comparatively) know that the gospel is preached now and confirmed with signs following the believer.

A few days before leaving home for this mission field a windstorm passed in the near neighborhood where I live, killing two persons; injuring one. This storm traveled in a northeasterly course and when some two miles from my home, turned and passed by. My mother remarked, "Do you remember the prophecy, delivered by Bro. Salisbury some eighteen years ago that the storms should pass on the right hand and on the left, and the faithful saints should be spared?" My mind naturally reverts to that night as the saints of Pilot Creek branch were gathered together at the home of Dick Chatfield.

I see in the minds' eye some who have passed into the unseen. How sweet must be the sleep from which none ever wake to weep. To you that remain of that little company let me ask, What have we to fear, so far as this work is concerned?

Bro. W. W. Whiting made a good impression on the minds of the people in a two weeks' effort at Mallard last winter. To counteract this a reverend Dunkard made an attack on saintism, criticising the Inspired Translation mainly. Having met him before we wrote asking him to harmonize some passages as found in King James' version. After trying hard to make them look proper, he remarked that if we "only would work as hard to harmonize the Bible" (A. V.) as we did to find fault with it, it would be commendable." He added that "Joe Smith might have stolen some ancient manuscript and signed his name to it; calling it an inspired translation." Yes! He might not, then what? He concluded by saying he was "disgusted with Joe Smith and his revelations." Well, we happen to be of a different turn of mind. We are "disgusted with" everything else but "Joe Smith and his revelations."

Here is a portion of one that affords us much consolation: "And any man that shall go and preach this gospel of the kingdom, and fail not to continue faithful in all things, shall not be weary in mind, neither darkened, neither in body, limb, or joint, and an hair of his head shall not fall to the ground unnoticed. And they shall not go hungry, neither athirst."—D. C. 83:13.

Our Dunkard friends say we must obey God, yielding obedience to the doctrine as stated in Hebrews 6:1, 2; but when we want them to broaden out on their belief, to accept the Pauline idea that by virtue of this obedience we are to receive that Spirit which testifies of Christ and calls some to apostolic and prophetic offices, they want to drop the question. I asked this reverend once by letter to explain why God's church was not organized to-day as we find it delineated in 1 Corinthians 12:28; Ephesians 4:11? Kind reader, what do you think he answered me? Why, he says, "I have neither time nor paper to answer your questions." A few months before this I asked him the same question, but he confessed he had "never given the matter a thought." And this man thought he was competent to annihilate Mormonism, so-called.

It may seem incredible but this man was the second preacher I have met that seemed unable to give me a satisfactory answer to this momentous question. It is often urged to our embarrassment that but a few of the Latter Day Saints ministers are learned. We confess to the truth. But most are like Bro. C. E. Butterworth who replied to a wise (?) man: "I can tell you what the gospel is." One of these ministers offered to pray for me. I replied that I was willing he should pray God to help me add to my "faith," "virtue," "knowledge," etc. (2 Peter 1:5,) as I needed to do all this. "But" he "need not ask God to lead me to accept something that did not recognize apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, and teachers, and all the gifts of God's Spirit," which are familiar to most all Herald readers, "because I" did "not believe God would hear" him.

Was I justified in this? Could I believe God's word and follow any other course of procedure?

Hopefully,

C. JOSEPH CARLSON.

CO-OPERATION.

It is a grand and good thing to have a spiritual salvation, that looks to the future and assures us of life and happiness beyond; a religion and theology that reveal the true order of the universe and of the plan of God for the salvation of souls in the future worlds; this is good, and in the contemplation of which there is food for the soul, and the being becomes enlarged. But, man cannot live by spiritual things alone, but by every good thing that proceedeth out of Mother Earth. Man, being both spiritual and physical, cannot live alone on spiritual food, nor alone on material food; but by a harmonious combination of the two. We have the spiritual element of our food amply provided for in the gospel, as also the temporal element when the saints shall possess the kingdom, and Christ shall be their ruler and lawgiver; but that time is not yet, and in working out our temporal salvation now, we are confronted with the injustice, inequality, extremes, and abnormities of our present social and industrial system.

The physical needs must first be supplied in order to the healthy growth of the inner man. The missionary who is sent out to preach to people concerning a spiritual salvation, and point them to a future world for an inheritance, and is confronted with a few tired people as his audience who are so weary toiling for bread to fill the crying mouths of their hungry babies that their minds are unfit to contemplate the deep things of a spiritual and future life, begins to think there ought to be something done to alleviate the embarrassment of the poor—begins to desire to preach a temporal gospel as a preparatory step to preaching the gospel of faith in a future life. When he meets good men and women who are not afraid to work, and who do work from morn till night and do not win enough to enable them to clothe themselves and little ones in a way compatible with their good sense of just pride, the missionary feels doubly the need of doing something toward a temporal salvation. Especially does he feel so when he is cognizant of the fact that this condition is responsible to some extent for the smallness of his audiences; that it explains why there are no more children in the Sunday schools than there are—why there are many kept from day school to earn bread who are not really old enough to perform manual labor. The old argument that people are poor because they are “too lazy to work—hunt for work and pray that they will not find it,” is a very superficial and threadbare one, and ceases to satisfy even the most casual thinker. People are honorably poor. They will work, and work hard, excepting a very few, whose numbers are only as a drop in the bucket, compared to the whole. Everywhere people are crying for work, but every avocation is overdone, and for every vacancy there are dozens to fill it. Times are hard and growing harder, till it is so bad you have to almost buy a chance to work; and it is even a fact that people buy a position in some avocations. The general cry is that “something must be done.” The question is, What can be done?

When we look around and see who it is that is poor, and who it is that is rich, we find that the people who are prospering are the ones who are working coöperatively, or those who have enough capital to work immense schemes without coöperating with anyone. We see organized effort. Many men put their mites together and form a powerful corporation; and they do this for the very purpose of being able to compete with men who have individually large fortunes which are a power with which they can do great things in the business world. Men of less means cannot do such great things alone, and hence cannot compete with those of amassed wealth. But by a great many “small men” combining together, their aggregate strength may become as great or greater than that of a single individual. Therefore small industries and individual effort are being continually crowded out of the race. They who choose to go it singly and alone cannot long stand the pressure, but will be compelled to learn the lesson in time that, being a part of one great whole, man must work in harmony with all the other parts of the whole—must coöperate with the others, to help and be helped. One ant could not accomplish much alone, but in coöperating with his fellows, much is accomplished and all are sustained in plenty. Going it alone would be attended with fatal results. So it is with man. He must learn that he is dependent to a certain extent upon his brother, and is also to some extent his brother's keeper. This being the case, the sooner he learns the principles of coöperation and puts them in practice, the sooner he will come out from under the embarrassment of the present independent haphazard system.

We take another look, and see that the people who are not prospering are the ones who will not, or have not as yet organized; who do not work together—to each other's hands. And we see with no uncertainty that they are fast becoming slaves to the people who organize and work coöperatively—with combined effort. “In union there is strength.” “United we stand, divided we fall.” Cannot we see many monumental object lessons laying immense stress upon these truisms?

Look at the Standard Oil trust; the sugar trust; the railroad companies; the mercantile corporations, etc. All these succeed and prosper by working together. Why cannot Latter Day Saints coöperate and better one another? Why cannot a corporation be formed in which any or all may take stock, however small, having for its object the obtaining of homes for the poor, and assisting them to locate therein? the duty of the managers and directors of which should be to negotiate for and purchase lands where they could be had upon reasonable and easy terms. Then locate a colony or such number as would see fit, on those lands, and establish a commonwealth peculiarly their own, and adopt an industrial system something like the Labor Exchange movement. I do not say it should be exactly like it, but after that manner. Some system by which commodities could be exchanged without money. Such is the Labor Exchange which is organized all over the country. People can get along without money if they will coöperate. People once got along without money, and we, with all our learning and knowledge of economics in our day surely ought to be able to do so. It is possible, and highly practicable.

But some will say, “I have seen enough of organizations, and ‘Order of Enochs,’ and such things.” True, there have been organizations formed by the saints, and have fallen through, and some have been losers thereby. But if they are investigated, it will generally be found that they were not organized according to law, and on business principles. Business is business, and recognizes no honesty in anyone—does not take it for granted that Bro. So-and-so is “all right”—does not say, “We will not take the trouble to draw up a contract in writing with Bro. A. or Bro. B.” It holds everybody to the line, whether honest or dishonest, and gives no one a chance to be a rogue. That is the way business does things, and if things are done on business principles, there will not be so many failures among Latter Day Saints when they attempt to work coöperatively, or organize for any common good.

As for myself, I am a firm believer in the principles of coöperation, and think it ought to be thoroughly discussed by the members of the church. I verily believe the converging of circumstances will finally drive us to coöperative movements. It seems that the whole trend of affairs is to educate the saints up to that point at which it would be possible for God to inaugurate his great coöperative plan in which every man will seek "another's good."

All will not believe in such a movement until it is tried and proven successful by actual experience. But there are enough in the church who are thoroughly converted to the idea, if they will put their shoulders to the wheel unitedly, and upon business principles, to set it rolling. Those who have faith in the good of coöperation should confer together, and devise ways and means, rules and regulations, laws and by-laws, etc., necessary to the effectual working of a coöperative association, and incorporate according to law, bind and bond every man who has any responsibility upon him, and make a fair clear start in the light of good common sense, judgment, and humanitarian principles, doing so with the coöperation of all who have faith in the movement and are willing to work, regardless of those who prefer to stand back and assume the role of calamity prophets, starving or dying in their tracks rather than risk a little time and energy in trying to better their condition.

I, as another brother or two have already done through the columns of the Herald, announce myself as ready to aid with all my might a movement of this kind among the saints. I would like to hear from or correspond with anyone who thinks it ought to be worked up, and discuss ways and means toward that end. Action is what we want.

In hope of better things,

CO-OPERATION.

I READ Bro. Curtis' remarks in a late Herald in regard to Graceland College. Much that he offered I heartily concurred in, but there is something in this that puts me to thinking that after all there is not so much difference in or out of the church in doing business. We preach the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man, but we practice hard, cruel competition just as they of the world. The pure doctrines of socialism are condemned as being visionary and impracticable. We find those outside the church advocating many of the beautiful principles that harmonize exactly with the teachings of our Savior, while many of the leading men of the church are opposed to them.

But for fear that this may get so long that it will reach clear into the wastebasket I will not undertake to advocate socialism, notwithstanding I think it stands next to the gospel. In fact when we enjoy what the gospel is calculated to bring to us, we will enjoy socialism.

Now in regard to Graceland College. Suppose this school was of that kind that the poorest boy in the church could have the advantages it offers, what a grand thing it would be. But the facts are, only a few at the head can avail themselves of this opportunity.

A good education should be the rule and not the exception; but what are the facts? Why, a young man that rises from obscurity and makes what people are pleased to call his mark in the world, is looked upon as a prodigy. Under a proper system all the good and noble that is in an individual would be developed. Society should owe this to every child that is born; they should have access to the best schools in the land, also an equal share of what God has created for the good of all.

I look at my three little boys and wonder. Will they ever have an opportunity to take a term at Graceland College? Hardly. They will probably like thousands of others, be fighting with poverty.

Suppose that instead of a school for the rich of the church and those drawing good salaries, there was an industrial school where the poor boy could have gone and worked his way through, would it not be much better? I think I hear some one say "Crank! Anarchist!" In this grinding competitive system we cannot all draw prizes. There is one thing that has put me to thinking so many times, and that is, How can Latter Day Saints vote to uphold such a system and still claim to believe the teachings of Jesus? I hope the time may soon come when our poor boys and girls can have the advantages of the best schools in the land; when every able-bodied man can have access to what the All-Father has provided for his children, when greed and avarice will be driven from among us and love, peace, and good will prevail.

This perhaps may not come to us until the millennium is ushered in, but for me, I am not opposed to a step in this direction. What little I have is ready to be turned in whenever a coöperative colony is organized among the saints.

Opposers of socialism always fail to mention Ruskin Colony that was organized several years ago in Tennessee. It is working successfully thus far. I am glad that I did not arrange to go there, as I would have still been a stranger to this grand latter-day work. It seems to me that a colony of this kind could be organized among saints, where we could live almost independent of the outside world. Surely the thought is worthy of consideration in these perilous times. Ever hoping for the success of this latter-day work and for the redemption of Zion, I am,

Yours in the one faith,

THE POWER OF PRAYER.

AN INCIDENT OF THE WAR.

AT the Presidio, San Francisco, there resides Bro. and Sr. Fred Ursenbach and family. He is one of the chief musicians of the military band, and has been in the service many years, and recently obeyed the gospel. She is an old time and faithful saint, who has been afflicted for years with a complication of complaints, which has kept her an invalid. They are a very devoted couple, and he has spent all the time he could in her company and attending to her wants. He has almost served as a nurse for her and the children.

When they received the news about a week ago that his company was ordered to Florida, on account of the prospect of war, they were almost broken down with grief, on account of separating, and her being left alone, in her almost helpless condition, with two small children to care for, with small income, and prospects that possibly he might never return.

After five days of anxiety, sorrow, and tears, the day of his departure arrived. They had each kept up the best they could for the other's sake though each felt the parting only too keenly. The heartaches they endured during those days none but those who have had similar trials can ever know. Each one tried to be brave, to help the other, while their quivering lips and moistened eyes told only too plainly how hard the effort was.

She had been praying all the time that something might happen to prevent his going. But now she realized that he must go, and she asked the questions over and over again, "Will he ever come back? Will I ever see him again?" And then in her distress she prayed to the God of the saints. Mustering all the faith at her command, and centering her thoughts on the one desire, she asked, "O God, give me some evidence that he will come back to me. If he will come back, show me in some way, that I may know he will come, so that while I am alone and waiting, I may have some assurance." And then thinking that possibly she was not asking aright, she added, "Father, if it is not best for me to know, show it to some one else; make it manifest; make it known to some one, in some way, that he will come back to me." And then as she lay there on the bed looking up at the ceiling, thinking, she heard the door open, and her husband entered the house, and came in the room, and walking over to the bed, leaned over, and looking into her eyes said, "I will come back to you!"

As soon as she could control herself she asked, "What made you say that?"

He replied, "I don't know, only something seemed to tell me to say it."

Then she told him of her prayer, and through their tears they thought they could see the kind hand of a loving Father.

When we asked her if her husband had been near enough to hear her pray, she said no, for he was not in the house, and she had not spoken a word, she was praying silently; but she believed that God heard and answered. It cheered them both, and helped to give them comfort, and they both believed that all would be well and that he would come back to her.

He marched away with his company Wednesday. I visited her at her home last night. She, brave heart, is bearing up nicely, and is surprised at her own strength; and although she is very sad and sorrowful, feels that she has a duty to perform in overcoming her grief and living for her children and the future. She also feels determined to get well and perform her part in life. When she feels to give way to sorrow she hears his words ringing in her ears, "I will come back to you."

Saints, pray for them, that they may both be shielded from danger, and soon be united again.

BAPTIZED INTO HIS DEATH.

IN an excellent article published in the Herald of April 20, under the title of "God's plan of salvation for mankind," on page 254, first column, I find a parenthetic explanation to a feature of baptism which, to my mind, though in harmony with it, is not the grand truth sought to be taught by Paul in that passage. I read "that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death" (not his burial, but into his death to sin). "Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death" (to sin, which is life to righteousness): "that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life" (in this new life—that is, separated from the old life which was death in sin). "For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death" (not burial, but death—death to sin), "we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection" (that is, come forth in the first resurrection).

This is not a matter of words only, but it involves a principle. It teaches that at baptism the spirit is buried into a death,—death to sin,—which is like Christ's death to sin, which arises to a newness of life, which is a spiritual life. Thus we see the spirit is born of the Spirit of God, and thus we see, too, that baptism is indeed a washing (baptism) of (belonging to) regeneration. (Titus 3:5.) The spirit takes on the new life. This does not in any way weaken the force of the argument that baptism is by immersion, but rather insinuates that it is, although not valid proof, as it is not talking of the body, but of the spirit. But as the spirit is to be immersed into Christ's death, it is but fitting that the outward act of the body should be something that would represent it, hence the institution (as easily proven in other scriptures) by immersion.

To seek to prove a proposition upon an unwarranted hypothesis but weakens the position. Fortunately there is sufficient evidence for immersion other than the suggestive language used in the text under consideration, which, in my judgment, is one of the strongest texts for the baptism for remission of sin, rather than baptism because sin has been remitted, as some hold; for if the spirit has passed from the life in sin to death to sin before, it cannot be said we are buried into that death at baptism, hence the words of Paul would not be true. To adhere strictly to what Paul says will keep the way clear and plain. With kindest intentions,

H. J. DAVISON.

CO-OPERATION.

I NOTICE under the above caption some interesting correspondence. It has been said, "It takes talk to build railroads;" and it proves a fact with most any other business of importance; and if I can contribute a word that will be of any help, or advance the good work a step in that direction, I will cheerfully do so, because I feel the need of such a work among us. I have seen the need and also heard the requests of others along this line. And while I do not believe the saints should do anything hastily or presumptuously without the favor and divine will of our heavenly Father, I believe we have provisions already given by him in Doctrine and Covenants, section 38, if put into effect (similar to the Order of Enoch) that will make provisions for the "poor" that "have complained before me." (Par. 4.)

I have been engaged with manufacturing establishments for the past twelve years, a sufficient time to convince me that it is a paying business; and manufacturers generally since the war have made their calculations on getting rich in a very few years. But since riches spoil people with pride, I do not think it is the proper thing for individual saints to be the sole owners and controllers of fortunes as a rule. But we have a promise in Doctrine and Covenants.

And if ye seek riches which it is the will of the Father to give unto you, ye shall be the richest of all people; for ye shall have the riches of eternity; and it must needs be that the riches of the earth are mine to give.—38:9.

Now to avoid the pride of the Nephites of old I would suggest a coöperative plan after the Order of Enoch, by the church appointing a council to preside over all the interests of the church, that is pertaining to the manufacturing and agricultural departments; also a treasury and treasurer. And when the order is established, let the saints throughout the land take stock in the order, by shares of ten dollars each or whatever amount the directors or council shall fix. Then let manufacturing of various kinds begin on a small scale, forming the buildings so additional room can be added as demands of the business suggest. Let this council also purchase all the land in their power, at least as far as wisdom suggests, and let it be cut up in small farms and tilled and improved by home seekers among the saints.

Let those saints who are favorably situated throughout the countries remain, until directed otherwise, and as they are prospered let them continue to feed the treasury, and thus advance the work until it comes to a paying business and every department self-sustaining, and by this order let us "be one," and "If ye are not one, ye are not mine." (D. C. 38: 6.)

Paul says "the Lord knoweth them that are his," (2 Tim. 2: 19). Now if we are to be one, and unless we are one we are none of his, where is the dividing line to be drawn, while some of our number are accumulating their thousands, living in luxury and splendor, while others by the vile oppression of the wealthy world cannot earn a modest living for themselves and families. I am personally acquainted with some such cases now. Such ones should have a place in Zion, where their time could be used continually to their advantage. Now I don't want to be understood by any to believe that I think all should be equal in dollars and cents, for such is not the case; but I believe the strong should bear the infirmities of the weak financially; that is make provisions by wise counsel and means to give honorable and steady employment to all the poor, unfortunate saints who are oppressed by the world and cannot help themselves. Now I believe it is extremely necessary that the saints should acquaint and equip themselves with every facility of manufacturing interest and product, and in a sense become the leading spirit in that line; for we have been warned and rewarned that the time will come when the rich men of this world will weep and howl for their miseries which are coming upon them. (See James 5; D. C. sec. 45). Now the signs of the times are to be our instructor in a measure, so let us not be sleeping on our rights, but let us awake to a full sense of the situation, and while we have the time and opportunity let us use what means God has given us to our best good and God's glory. I believe God will help those who try to help themselves, and those who wait to be commanded in all things are slothful servants (D. C. 58: 6).

We have a command to gather out from the wicked, and establish ourselves in Zion. The coöperative plan seems the most convenient method to me. What think you, brethren? When the time comes that Zion will be the only people that will not be at war with each other, which time seems very near our doors, then Zion will find a good demand for all they can produce. It is then that the "wealth of the Gentiles will flow to Zion to beautify the place of his feet."

Ere long I expect to see many of the manufacturing establishments now in the world destroyed by the oppressed laborers, and that will be the time when the rich men will weep and howl. I hope to see a place provided for all the laboring saints before that time comes, for surely it will come.

Trusting this matter may be kept glowing through the press, until the best and wisest measures may be devised, adopted, and set in motion for the welfare of Zion, I prayerfully await the day.

Conference Minutes.

WESTERN MAINE.

Conference of above district convened at Little Deer Isle, May 7, at two p. m. S. G. Cunningham president, W. W. Blanchard clerk pro tem. Branches reporting; Greens Landing, Bray's Mountain, Little Deer Isle, and West Surry. Elders reporting: S. G. Cunningham, W. W. Blanchard, and J. J. Billings; Priest J. E. Eaton; Teacher Edwin Pert; Deacon H. B. Eaton. Voted to allow those officers present without written reports to report verbally. Elders reporting under this were: G. W. Eaton, Otis Eaton, and John Blastow. Teachers Alonzo Hutchison, L. T. Gray. Bishop's agent's report read, audited, and approved. Voted to accept the resignation of W. W. Blanchard as Bishop's agent, to take effect at the appointing of his successor. S. G. Cunningham was sustained as district president. Upon his request Bro. Edwin H. Pert was released as district clerk and Ralph Farrell was appointed in his place. Voted to leave the recommending of some one for appointment as Bishop's agent to district president and present agent. Upon request and recommendation of the Bray's Mountain branch, the ordination of Bro. Nathan S. Eaton as teacher, and Alonzo Harvey as deacon, was ordered. A vote of thanks was tendered the saints and friends of Little Deer Isle for entertainment, and voted to pass a paper through different branches in the district to ascertain how much money could be raised toward supporting S. G. Cunningham as district missionary. Adjourned to meet at West Ellsworth at call of president. Preaching by G. W. Eaton and W. W. Blanchard. Four were baptized. The saints left for their homes pronouncing it one of the best, if not the best conference of the district for ten years.

WILLIAMS-BAYS DEBATE.—NO. 2.

Tuesday, May 10.

T. W. WILLIAMS' FIRST SPEECH.

The proposition: "Is the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, organized and established through the instrumentality of Joseph Smith and his co-workers, the Church of God in fact and in harmony with the Bible in doctrine and organization?"

I have shown that Jesus Christ was the Son of God; that he was named Jesus by the angel; called Christ because he was the anointed of God.

I have shown that the people of God were called saints; that there was a disintegration of the church or kingdom of God; that those who were officials in the church were called of God; and that the officials God set in the church were apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, teachers.

My opponent has presented no proof against the name of the Church of Jesus Christ, but I have presented several proofs in favor of that name. I have presented Biblical proof to sustain my contention; Bays simply denies it, without proof.

He concedes that if I show abrogation of authority by apostasy that I have proven the necessity of a reorganization.

He refers to Acts 20: 28 and says, "I don't care about the word 'spare,' because it only applies to the church at Ephesus." Acts 19: 10 shows that all they "which dwelt in Asia had heard the word of the Lord Jesus," and Acts 20: 28 refers directly to the "church of God which he hath purchased with his own blood." Do you think this only refers to the church at Ephesus that he had purchased with his own blood? Is that the only church thus purchased? I think not.

For proof of the extent of the apostasy I refer you to 2 Timothy 1: 15, where it says that "all they which are in Asia be turned away from me;" and Revelation chapters 2 and 3 shows the condition of those churches at this time.

Revelation 13: 7, 8, proves a complete apostasy for all the saints are overcome, and "power was given him over all kindreds, and tongues, and nations. And all that dwell upon the earth shall worship him."

I have shown that the term "saints" is used sixty-two times in the New Testament; and in 2 Corinthians 1: 1; Ephesians 1: 1; Philippians 1: 1; and Colossians 1: 2, which I have previously read, are found the statement "saints which are."

The word "saint" is applied forty or fifty times in the Bible as the specific name of the people of God.

The name "brethren" and "disciples," as found in the Bible, is not used as the distinctive name of God's people. God calls his people "saints." (Ps. 85: 8; 50: 5.)

A man may be a disciple of Aristotle or a brother of Judas, but he cannot be a saint of Aristotle or of Judas. 1 Corinthians 14: 33 says, "all churches of the saints;" but does it say anywhere in the Bible "churches of the Disciples or Brethren"? I ask him to present one proof where the term "disciple" is applied to the laity as a distinctive name.

Others used the term "saint" besides Paul, although it has been denied. In Acts 9: 32 Luke uses that term. Acts 9: 13 says Ananias used it, and in Jude 1: 3, 14 the term is used; and in Revelation it is used fourteen times.

He says that in no place in the Doctrine and Covenants can I find the statement "The Church of Jesus Christ." Bays says we have apostatized because the term "Church of Christ" was first used, then "Church of Latter Day Saints," now the name "Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints." Had he have read all of the history of the General Assembly of 1835 (Church History, Vol. 1, p. 572), he would have destroyed his own argument; but he did not, for there is found the name of the church as, "The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints."

I find the term "Church of Jesus Christ" in Doctrine and Covenants on page 103: "This church of Christ bearing my name," which name is Jesus Christ. Page 322: "I subscribe myself your servant in the Lord, prophet and seer of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints." See also page 336. And also I find the same term in Times and Seasons, vol. 4, p. 12, and in Church History, vol. 2, p. 151. He must either tear down my affirmative or build up something to prove a negative.

He asks me to prove this proposition beyond the possibility of a doubt, but that is something that has never been done.

He says we believe no one can be saved outside of the church. He knows better. But our affirmation is that there is but one Church of Christ. He says Romans 11: 13 does not refer to the office of an apostle. It reads "I am the apostle of the Gentiles, I magnify mine office." What plainer language could be used than this to state that Paul held the apostolic office. What office did Paul hold if not that of an apostle? (See Col. 1: 25; Acts 13: 1, 2; and Acts 14: 14.)

He asks: "Did God create the office of an apostle." "Kelley says he did." He says,

"Take that book [the Bible] and show me when God created the office of an apostle."

To create means, to bring into being; to originate; to appoint; to make. Paul held the office. Who created it, man, or God? Paul says that that which he preached he received by the revelation of Jesus Christ (Gal. 1: 11), and that "when it pleased God, . . . to reveal his Son in me, that I might preach him among the heathen; immediately I conferred not with flesh and blood."—Gal. 1: 15, 16.

In Bays' book (which certainly is good authority) he speaks of official characters as applying to apostles. He says that no precedent was ever or can ever be established except all the circumstances are the same. If this is true, then there never has been a precedent.

D. H. BAYS' FIRST SPEECH.

Bro. Williams has spent his time on an issue that is immaterial. He does not affirm in the proposition that the people of God were to be called saints. If I concede all he has argued, nothing is proven in support of the proposition. I shall not attempt an answer to all these points.

He says, Did Jesus call the laity disciples? Find where the word "laity" is in the Bible. Are the ministers the only followers of Christ?

The word "disciple" occurs fifty-five times in the New Testament according to Cruden's Concordance, the word "saint" only twenty-nine times. Jesus never calls his people saints; he calls them disciples. Paul did not call them disciples. Bro. Williams does not show that he did. Paul applies the term "saint." The word "saint" as used in the Psalms did not refer to the followers of Christ; they were saints under the law, if there could be such a thing. He could not find the statement, "the office of an apostle." Every one sent was an apostle. Every man who took a mission was an apostle. I used the word "official" in "Doctrines and Dogmas of Mormonism" not because I believe it to be true, but for convenience. We concede and urge that there was an apostasy, but did it abrogate all authority? I deny that it does. He must prove that it does. Thus far he has only assumed that it did.

The Doctrine and Covenants of 1835 is not like the one now published by the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. The church in Utah has the one of 1835 with additions the same as this people have it with additions. Besides, the title page is not the same. The edition of 1835 uses the term "Church of Latter Day Saints" on title page, and in the Lectures on Faith. There is the name of the church as given by its father. A father ought to know the name of his child. He uses passages that he tortures into the meaning The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

Acts 13: 1, 2, refers to the "work," not the ministry or apostleship of Barnabas and Paul. Does it say that they were ordained to the office of an apostle? There is not a hint of an ordination. It says they sent them away on a mission. (See Acts 14: 19-26.) They preached the gospel (v. 21); confirmed the souls of the disciples—why did he not say saints?—(v. 22); ordained elders in every church (v. 23), and fulfilled their “work.” The work they did was to preach the gospel and set in order the churches by ordaining elders, so the work could be perpetuated. They did not ordain them apostles? Not a word about ordination to the apostleship. Acts 9: 19, 22, 26 does not show that Paul was ordained an apostle, but it is said that he did not confer with flesh and blood.

He has proved that apostles were in the church, but he has not proved that such an office existed to continue in the church.

I present this little article entitled “identity.” Bro. Williams has seen that before. [It had been prepared by Bro. Williams in his discussion with W. W. Blalock at Tabor.—J. F. M.] On this the ordinances are faith, repentance, baptisms, laying on of hands, resurrection, eternal judgment, and birth of water and the Spirit. What does this mean? He mentions baptisms, then follows with birth of water and the Spirit as separate ordinances.

Faith and repentance are required; all Christians admit that. Baptism is believed in except by a few. He has laying on of hands as an ordinance. Did Jesus ever teach the laying on of hands? Point to one passage where Jesus laid on hands for the giving of the Holy Ghost to baptized believers. What apostle taught the necessity of the laying on of hands to give the Holy Ghost? Let us examine the Pentecostal service. They were taught to repent and be baptized; they had previously believed. This would have been a nice place to bring in the laying on of hands, but Peter did not hint at it. He will bring in Acts chapters 8 and 19 to prove they laid on hands for the giving of the Holy Ghost. They received the Holy Ghost; that is true. But did they teach it as essential to salvation? You can't prove that it is a part of the gospel. Not a word about it being a principle of the doctrine of Jesus Christ. The Book of Mormon chapter 12, tells what the gospel is, but does not say one word about the laying on of hands.

WILLIAMS' SECOND SPEECH.

He asks me to find “laity” in the Bible. I used that term to express my meaning. Laity means those who are not officials in the church. Christ used the term “disciple” as applied to officials generally.

Cruden's says saint is found twenty-nine times in the New Testament, and Young says sixty-two times.

He asks me to find where it says “apostolic office.” I found it in Bays' book. But he says he used it for convenience. Is it right to use a term for convenience when it is not true? He thus contradicts himself.

Matthew 11:11-13 says that “from the days of John the Baptist until now the kingdom of heaven suffereth violence, and the violent take it [the kingdom of heaven] by force.” The Revised Version says the “men of violence” take it by force. This shows a complete apostasy.

The name, The “Church of Jesus Christ” was used as early as 1829. (Church History, vol. 1, p. 60.) Here it says that the Lord commanded Joseph Smith to “ordain Oliver Cowdery to be an elder in the church of Jesus Christ.”

When he read from Acts 13th and 14th he read very peculiarly. Why did he not read Acts 14:14 where it distinctly says that Barnabas and Paul were apostles? But, no; he began reading the 14th chapter at the 19th verse purposely. Why did he not read the 27th verse of the 14th chapter, where he gathered the church together, showing that he had general oversight, thus one of the general officials? But, no; he dare not read these verses. It would have been death to his position.

He has conceded that I have proven the identity of church officials when he says, “Of course apostles, prophets, evangelists, etc., were in the church in New Testament times.” He asks, “Did Jesus promise the gift of the Holy Ghost?” I answer, Matthew 28:20: “And, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world.” This promise was made upon the express conditions that they observed the commands he had given them. Would God approve the disciples' actions if they did contrary to that which he commanded them? I think not. Jesus laid his hands on children and blessed them (Mark 10: 13-16), and instructed his disciples that the works he did they should do also, as those who believed on him. Then they would lay their hands upon little children and bless them, “and greater works than these shall he [he that believeth on me] do.” Even does he prove that Jesus never laid his hands on any one for the gift of the Holy Ghost, the above would permit them to do greater works; but, of course, this must be as he had commanded them.

Acts 8: 12-17 shows that baptized believers did not receive the Holy Ghost till they had received the laying on of hands, and when they laid their hands upon them “they received the Holy Ghost,” hence showing that God approved of their action. In Acts 19 God confirms the act of the laying on of hands again. In Acts 9 the history shows that God sent Ananias that Paul might be “filled with the Holy Ghost;” and Ananias laid his hands upon him, after which God's blessing came.

In the choice of Matthias as an apostle God was a party to it. Would God be a party to that which was not necessary? The history says that Matthias was numbered with the Twelve; that is, he took the “bishopric” or “office” held by Judas, which was that of apostle. If the choice of Matthias was a human act, then God gave crowning evidence in confirming the act.

1 Corinthians 12:28 says God set apostles in the church; and Ephesians 4:11-13 tells how long they would remain in the church: “Till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ.” God did not put twelve apostles in the church at Ephesus but in the general church of which the church at Ephesus was a part. There were prophets in the church in New Testament times, we have prophets in the church.

Doctrine and Covenants 104: 4 shows that the Presidency have a right to officiate in all the offices of the church; and in Sec. 19: 1 Joseph is called a prophet; and Sec. 107: 29 makes provision for his ordination.

In Doctrine and Covenants 124: 2, provision is made for an evangelical minister and patriarch, and Sec. 104: 17 makes provision for evangelists in the church. Hence it is proven that we believe in evangelists.

Bays says “I will call them Mormons.” All right. The party who ought to know the meaning of the word better than any other says the word means “more good.” When he calls me a “Mormon” then he admits that I am more good than he is. That's all I can see in that.

The term “pastor” is used in the New Testament only once. We have pastors, those having charge of local congregations.

High priests are mentioned in Hebrews 5: 1-5, and John was a priest. (John 1: 6-8.) Priest means a minister. Zacharias, the father of John, was a priest (Luke 1: 5), and ministered acceptably before the Lord. So John was by right a priest, and was sent of God, to minister for him. Clement, one of the early Christian writers, says: “It will behoove us (Christians), looking into the depth of divine knowledge, to do all things in order, whatsoever our Lord has commanded us to do. He has ordained by his supreme will and authority, both where and by what persons they (the sacred services) are to be performed. For the CHIEF PRIEST has his proper office, and the PRIESTS their proper place is appointed, and the layman is confined to that which is commanded to laymen.”

In Christian Antiquities by Bingham, vol. 1, page 11, we find this: “St. Clement, of Rome, and St. Jerome (whom especially I cite because appealed to by our opponents), both concur in speaking of the order of the Christian ministry under the very terms of high priests, priests, and Levites, which obtained under the Mosaic dispensation.” St. Jerome says: “What Aaron and his sons were among the Jews, the bishop and his presbyters were among the Christians.” These early writers and others confirms what the New Testament says about high priests.

I now present evidence upon doctrine: Romans 1:16, 17, records Paul as saying, “I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth.” Paul says, 1 Thessalonians 1: 5: “Our gospel came not unto you in word only, but also in power [authority], and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance.” In 2 John 1: 9 it states that “whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God;” and Hebrews 1:2 says “the principles of the doctrine of Christ” are “faith in God,” “repentance,” “baptisms,” “laying on of hands,” “resurrection of the dead,” and “eternal judgment.”

In order to make baptism effective and operative it was performed by one sent of God,—having power or authority. John 1:6 shows John was sent of God. John 12:49, 50 shows that Jesus was sent of God. Peter was called of God (Matt. 10:1); Paul was called of God (1 Cor. 1:1); and Ananias was called of God (Acts 9:17).

Jesus Christ blessed children by the laying on of hands (Mark 10:13-16), and told his disciples that the works "that I do shall ye do." (John 14:12).

BAYS' SECOND SPEECH.

I said there was no such office as a prophet in the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Joseph Smith was never ordained a prophet. I argue that God must make a prophet—not made by the laying on of hands. If a prophet was made by the laying on of hands, Brigham Young would have been one.

He says the office of seventy was a New Testament office and refers to Luke 10:1. Christ appointed these and sent them out, and that is the last you ever heard of Seventies. It is not found in the New Testament that a seventy is an office in the church.

He says they have pastors in the church. No man was ever ordained a pastor in his church. He says they have evangelists in the church and that A. H. Smith is an evangelist. Joseph Smith received that revelation that made A. H. Smith an evangelist a year ago. This was the first time it ever existed. It was made right there. Do you know why it was made? I will tell you. It was made to keep the patriarch in the Smith family. It has always been there.

I am going to be hurried a little to get to the points I want to make. Only one place in the Book of Mormon where the laying on of hands is mentioned. On pages 471 and 472 of Book of Mormon is a record of their having formed a church, and there they baptized in the name of Jesus Christ; but not a word about the laying on of hands. To declare more than this cometh of evil.

In the Church History, vol. 1, p. 36, is an account of the baptism of Oliver Cowdery, and he received the Holy Ghost immediately, without the laying on of hands. So also was it with Joseph Smith. I have never seen a passage anywhere to prove that Joseph Smith or Oliver Cowdery received the laying on of hands. On page 37 is an account of the baptism of Samuel H. Smith, and immediately he received the Holy Ghost. Now if these men could thus receive the Holy Ghost, what is the use of the laying on of hands? Jesus Christ never taught nor practiced the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost. The Apostles only practiced it twice. It is mentioned in the Book of Mormon once and that was four hundred and twenty years after Christ after all the Nephites were dead. This was an afterthought of Moroni. The Doctrine and Covenants says the Book of Mormon contains the fullness of the gospel.

I will show you the difference between the way Jesus called his apostles and the way the Latter Day Saints call them. Jesus' call was personal and direct. He said to his disciples, "Follow me." Did Jesus lay on hands to ordain them apostles? An apostle is one commissioned. (See Matt. 28:19, 20; and Mark 16:15.) Paul was an ambassador of Jesus Christ. (2 Cor. 5:20.) An ambassador is a minister of the highest order or rank. Such are deputed to represent God on earth.

The office of an apostle not of the highest rank in the Latter Day Saints' Church. The First Presidency is above that of an apostle, the Patriarch next to the Presidency, then comes the apostles. The Latter Day Saints are wrong even if the office of an apostle should be in the church, for they make them third in rank. The apostle must be a witness. (See Luke 24:48; John 15:27; and Acts 1:8.) An apostle cannot be succeeded, because we cannot have a successor to a witness. Courts decide test cases on record of previous witnesses. An apostle must be with him from the beginning and a witness of the resurrection. (Acts 1:22.) Matthias must be a witness of the resurrection to be an apostle. Acts 10:39-41 shows that witnesses were chosen of God to whom Jesus appeared after his resurrection. Jesus appeared to these three times. (John 21:13, 14.)

The Latter Day Saints have men who are dubbed apostles because of the laying on of hands. Paul had previously known Jesus before he became a follower. The disciples had some doubt about his being an apostle till they learned that Paul had seen Jesus while he was in mortality and talked with him; then they accepted him. Paul sealed his apostleship by miracles. I have rubbed up against apostles all my life and am not afraid of them. It is because the power of an apostle does not belong to them.

Church History, vol. 1, pp. 540, 541, shows that Joseph Smith's apostles were chosen by three men, and not by Jesus Christ. The three witnesses—Oliver Cowdery, David Whitmer, and Martin Harris—were to pray, and they were blessed by the laying on of hands, then they proceeded to make choice of the Twelve. Mormon apostles were called by three witnesses; God never called them.

PASTORAL.

To the brotherhood and friends of Little Sioux district; Greeting:—I take this method of informing you that the office of district president at the coming conference, to be held in June, will substantially be vacant; the writer and one of his council, having been sent to other fields of labor. You will therefore go to the conference, (the membership of the district having voice and vote,) and make such choice of some one to preside over the district for the balance of the term, as you may think best.

Having been president of the district (with the exception of something like five years) since 1870, it is nothing more than natural that I should feel an especial interest in its welfare, or the welfare of the people therein. Since 1870 many who were members of the church have passed behind the vale, others have gone elsewhere, yet the district has steadily increased in membership.

While on mission work in the Nauvoo district, during which time the late David Chambers presided, on my return I could see that advancement of a substantial character had been made. And while since his death, we have not made the advancement that I would like to have seen, yet no cause for complaint exists.

The branches are well supplied (with but few if any exceptions) with an efficient ministerial force to keep them running in good shape—thus leaving the General Conference appointees at liberty to extend the work into localities where branches do not exist—which, I presume they will willingly do.

I used to be somewhat worried over the thought, as to who would carry on the work when the older ones passed away; but that has long since ceased to disturb, since through the instrumentality of Sunday school work and other helps, there are a goodly number of the younger element growing into prominence, and probable usefulness, to supply all needed demands.

In this district there has been developed some of the best of the ministerial force of the church; and while I feel that to God belongs all the glory, yet I cannot but think that I am justified in expressing a pride for the same.

I feel for one to say that in all these years, no church member in the district has given just cause to feel offended at anything said or done by them. Therefore I would be ungrateful did I not feel a willingness to express my gratitude for kindnesses received from your hands. I will expect nothing but your best wishes, and most fervent prayers in my behalf, that I may be sustained physically, mentally, and spiritually.

And while I leave you for a time, I expect to find where I am going another field well sprinkled over with Latter Day Saints that are equally as good as the best of us, and enjoying the same "divine unction" as we ourselves enjoy, at least at times. And may we all meet on happy grounds, and on enjoyable terms, in the "sweet by and by," is my desire and prayer.

J. C. CRABB.

LITTLE SIOUX, IOWA, May 15.

To the Saints of Nauvoo district:—As I have been again assigned to this field for missionary labor, and being placed in charge, I would like the hearty cooperation of all of the branches and scattered saints. Anyone desiring preaching in their locality, please write me, addressing me at Lamoni, Iowa, my home address, and it will be forwarded to me quicker than any field address I might name (as my work of district president keeps me on the move), and we will do the best we can to provide for you. Hope the local ministry will try and do as much as possible this year, and keep a careful account of all their work for the year, that I may be able to make a fuller report of work done in the district next General Conference. Saints, please let me hear from you soon and often for the protection and advancement of the work. I am your brother in bonds,

F. M. WELD.

CONFERENCE NOTICES.

Conference of Northeastern Illinois district will convene at Mission, Illinois, Saturday, June 11, at 10:30 a. m. Nearest railway stations are Seneca on Rock Island and Sheridan on C. B. & Q. railroad. Persons coming by rail, please notify Thomas Hougas, St. Vanger, Illinois, stating road and time of arrival at least three or four days in advance, that arrangements may be made for sufficient teams to convey visitors to church, which is some miles from either station. A good attendance is hoped for.

F. M. COOPER, Pres.
E. E. JOHNSON, Sec.

Quarterly conference of the Little Sioux district will convene at Magnolia, Iowa, Saturday and Sunday, June 11 and 12. Bring the Spirit with you.

A. M. FYRANDO, Sec.

Northern Minnesota conference will be held at Wadena, Saturday, June 18, followed by a reunion continuing one week. All are cordially invited to attend.

G. L. JONES, Sec.

Northern Nebraska district conference will convene at Valley, May 28 and 29, preceded by the Sunday school convention the 27th. All interested are invited to be present and take part in the services.

J. M. STUBBART, Pres.

Kentucky and Tennessee district conference will convene with Eagle Creek branch, Saturday, July 9, at ten a. m. Invitation is hereby extended to all who find it possible to come and meet with us.

A. J. MYERS, Sec.

Conference of Eastern Michigan district will convene four miles west of Amadore, Michigan, June 11 and 12, at ten a. m. Full reports, branch and ministerial, are necessary. Missionary in charge, all general appointees, and district locals are expected to attend. All written reports should reach district secretary, William Davis, at Amadore, Michigan, by June 9.

A. BARR, Pres.
WM. DAVIS, Sec.

CHURCH RECORDER'S NOTICE.

By some chance I published in my recent notice that the Independence district would hold a conference in June. In reviewing the notice I discover the mistake. My lists show no conference in that district until September. The following districts have lately given notices of holding June conferences, and from them the branch reports will be expected in good season, namely: Chatham, Ontario; London, Ontario; Florida; North-western Kansas; Southern Michigan; making thirty conferences to be held in June.

H. A. STEBBINS,
General Church Recorder.

RELIGIO DISTRICT CONVENTION.

Convention of the Northeastern Illinois district Religio association will convene at Mission, Illinois, Friday, June 10, at ten a. m. Persons coming by rail will please notify Thomas Hougas, Stavanger, Illinois. (See conference notice of this district for further particulars as to roads, etc.) In order to attend this convention it will be necessary for some who come by rail to reach Mission the night before, but let everyone interested in Religio work that can possibly do so make an extra strong effort to get there in time to attend this convention. It is hoped that every local will have some representatives present, and that this convention will be of benefit to the religio work in this district.

MARIE H. CLARK, Pres.
JOHN MIDGORDEN, Sec.

RULES AND REGULATIONS

FOR ADMISSION OF MEMBERS AND GOVERNMENT OF THE SAINTS' HOME, LAMONI, IOWA.

1. Worthy saints who are in need of a home, and who are unable on account of age or ill health to provide for themselves, and who are without relatives or friends who can provide for them, are entitled to a place in the Home.

2. Worthy aged saints who are unable to arrange suitable homes with relatives and friends, and who are able to provide for themselves at the Home, may be received upon due arrangement being made with those in charge.

3. Parties seeking admission to the Home must present recommendations from their respective branches and the Bishop's agents where they reside. Where persons have never resided near a branch, so as to become identified in branches or with local authorities, they must present suitable recommendations from some general church officer.

4. When practicable, applications should be made through the Bishop's agent in the district where applicant resides.

5. The Matron in charge of the Home will treat all with patience and kindness, and all members of the Home must observe the rules, requests, and orders of the Matron, and when a request or order on the part of the Matron is thought to be unreasonable, parties cannot of themselves refuse to comply, but must refer such request or order to the Bishop or some member of the Bishopric, or in their absence the President of the Church or the Missionary in Charge.

6. Proper respect and decorum toward each other must be observed by all having a place in the Home, and no one shall give orders to, or command or direct any other member, without the request or direction of the Matron; or if outside or farm work, the Superintendent of the farm.

7. Cleanliness and godliness must be observed at all times, and care taken both in personal habits and in the rooms of building.

8. Each must so far as possible respect the wishes of his or her associates, and maintain due decorum in all his or her relations with associates and parties in charge.

9. Each person may have absolute quiet and rest in his or her own room, and must not be intruded upon unnecessarily by others.

10. No person shall interfere with the kitchen work, and those wishing to aid in this department must first obtain the consent of the Matron.

11. All shall observe the hours fixed by the Matron for retiring in the evening and rising in the morning, sickness and inability to comply to be considered.

12. The use of tobacco or any narcotic, except under the advice of a physician, and strong drink is positively forbidden.

13. For any persistent violation of any of these rules, the party so violating and refusing to comply shall be dismissed from the Home.

14. The Home is open to visitors free Wednesdays and Saturdays only. On all other days contributions will be required to aid in defraying the expenses.

15. The occupants of the Home are expected to observe strict decorum in regard to the conduct of the affairs of the Home and its government, and must not discuss the management of the Home or talk of its domestic affairs to visitors or outside persons. Complaints should be made to the Matron, or to the Bishop, his counselors, or some general officer, if any are to be made.

By the Bishopric,
E. L. KELLEY,
Presiding Bishop.

LAMONI, IOWA, March 1, 1898.

These rules are concurred in by us.
JOSEPH SMITH.
ALEX. HALE SMITH.

REUNION NOTICES.

The annual reunion of Southern California district will assemble at Ocean Park, South Santa Monica, July 8, at ten a. m. sharp. This beautiful park is situated three fourths of a mile south of Santa Monica proper, and is known as Ocean Park Station. Electric lights on the grounds. Closely surrounding it there is now a population of six or seven hundred residents, and in July this number will be greatly augmented by people who at that season of the year resort to the beach to avoid the heat of a July sun in the interior, so that we are confident that the ears of a large number of people who know nothing of our faith will be saluted for the first time by the sound of the true gospel.

The sea beach, six hundred feet distant, is connected with the park by broad walks of asphaltum and planks. Bathing in the surf at this point is said to be unsurpassed by any other of the seaside bathing places. But now, while speaking of this especial subject, we wish to impress it upon the minds of all members of the church, that it is the earnest and particular request of your committee that you shall refrain from bathing or strolling on the beach during the hours of meetings; but be prompt in your attendance at such services. This you will no doubt recognize to be your duty; but besides that, you will quiet the fears of some who think the meetings will be sparsely attended because of being held so near the beach. In complying with the above request you will manifest your high regard for the great work intrusted to all, and show carkers that their suspicions are groundless.

Needed supplies can be obtained close at hand at reasonable rates or prices; also meals and lodgings, or if desired, rooms and vacant houses can be rented. Horse feed is expensive this year, and unless stock has to be fed at home, possibly it might be cheaper to come on the railroad at one and one third fare, which will be granted us. However, each one must be their own judge in this matter. The committee will attend to supplying wood as heretofore. Good grounds for teams and wagons adjacent to the park. A high board fence surrounds the park; ample supply of good water for domestic use and for animals very convenient. Ample shade is also offered by large bluegum trees. Tables with seats already arranged, so nothing in this direction needed. Ample room for tents inside the park.

The committee has arranged with the Santa Fé railroad company for the customary rates of fare on all their lines of road. All persons purchasing tickets to reunion will be supplied by local agents with proper certificates, which will entitle them to return tickets at one third fare. Bedding, snugly rolled, will be carried as baggage; smaller packages can be carried as hand baggage. As the Santa Fé railroad company has granted us the exclusive use of their park free of charge during reunion, save the patronage of their lines of road, the committee request all to come on their trains who make the trip by railroad, or as much so as possible.

We also hope to secure the attendance of all the General Conference appointees to California, who together with our local talent will form a corps of able speakers.

Now, saints of Southern California, far and near, let us all who possibly can come to the reunion by the sea, even if it requires a sacrifice for us to do so, bringing with us the Spirit of God; and let us have the grandest and the most glorious season of spiritual enjoyment ever had in this district. We can if we will, for the signs of the times bespeak our speedy triumph. All saints, pray for the Spirit of God to be with us.

Dear Brn. G. T. Griffiths, F. M. Sheehy, T. W. Williams, and F. B. Blair, missionaries to California:—We the saints of Southern California most earnestly and cordially solicit the attendance of each and all of you at our annual reunion, which will convene at Ocean Park, South Santa Monica, Los Angeles County, July 8. We truly hope that conditions may be of such a nature that each of you may be able to accept our mutual invitation, coming as early as you can, and remain until our reunion is over, and then as much longer as possible.

Respectfully yours, chairman of reunion committee,
R. R. DANA.

To the Saints of Massachusetts District:—The reunion committee desire to hear from those who will tent in the pleasant grove which has been tendered your committee for the use of the district reunion. We invite all who can to engage tents, that our meeting together may partake more of the social than conventional life, while we renew old acquaintances and form new ones. Let us hear from you if you desire a boarding tent, which we may have if assured of sufficient patronage. Let us hear from you as branches or individuals. Address all orders for tents to C. D. Gerrish, 129 Center Street, Dorchester, Massachusetts. All other communications may be sent to S. W. Ashton, Fall River, Massachusetts; or to John Smith, 526 Purchase Street, New Bedford, Massachusetts. Railroad rates, price of board, and other necessary information to be supplied later. Reunion is to be at Dennisport, North Harwich Station, N. Y., N. H., and H. R. R., August 6 to 15 inclusive.

C. D. GERRISH,
S. W. ASHTON, } Com.
JOHN SMITH,

Minnesota and Dakota reunion will be held at Wadena, Minnesota, on main line of N. P. R. and Park Rapids branch of G. W., June 18, continuing over two Sundays. An invitation is extended to all missionaries to be present. Bishop E. L. Kelley will be in attendance. Good grounds; good board $3.25 per week. Stabling, with hay, $2.00 per week, per team. All desiring board will confer a favor by writing to T. J. Martin, Detroit City, Minnesota; or I. N. Roberts, Audubon, Minnesota.

By order of committee,
I. N. ROBERTS, Pres.
T. J. MARTIN, Sec.

NOTICES.

All those interested in the salvation of their friends in Germany and Switzerland, please send their addresses at once to Robert Oehring, Meadow Grove, Nebraska.

BORN.

SHAW.—At Lamoni, Iowa, September 10, 1897, to Bro. A. E. and Sr. Emma Shaw, a daughter, named Alta. Blessed at Lone Rock chapel, May 15, 1898, by Elders R. M. Elvin and Hugh N. Snively.

DIED.

SYLVESTER.—Sr. Sarah Sylvester was born in New Haven, Connecticut, August 16, 1853; died in Omaha, Nebraska, April 19, 1898. Funeral services by W. H. Walling.

ETTLEMAN.—At McPaul, Iowa, April 21, 1898, Susan Ettleman. She was born September 12, 1826, in Stark County, Ohio; moved with her parents to Missouri, where she united with the church about 1838, being baptized by Elder Yewell. Came to Fremont County, Iowa, where she was united in marriage to Samuel Ettleman, October 10, 1847. Sr. Ettleman never united with the Reorganized Church, but held firmly to her faith, never accepting any other doctrine. Funeral in McPaul schoolhouse, to a large assembly of friends and relatives, by Elder H. F. Durfey.

ALLEN.—Pierre W. Allen, born April 21, 1898, at Thurman, Iowa; died April 21, 1898. Funeral at the house by Elder H. F. Durfey.

LEADINGHAM.—At his home, Shenandoah, Iowa, May 3, 1898, William D. Leadingham; was born in Aberdeen, Scotland, September 13, 1826; united with the church in an early day. With his wife and four children emigrated to Utah in 1856; became dissatisfied with the condition of things there, and returned to Iowa in 1861. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church, January 31, 1863, at Manti, by Elder Charles Derry. Worked in the office of priest in that branch; for the past twenty years as an elder, faithfully performing the duties of his office, preaching and defending the faith, and presiding over the Shenandoah branch much of the time. Bro. Leadingham was a man of God, his word was his bond. Honored and highly respected by all who knew him. He leaves a wife, four sons, and one daughter, and a large circle of friends to mourn. Funeral sermon by Elder H. Kemp in the church at Shenandoah. Interment in Rose cemetery. We all hope to meet him in the sweet by and by.

WASHBURN.—At Galien, Michigan, April 23, 1898, Sr. Laura Amelia Washburn. Born at Buchanan, Michigan, July 15, 1846; married to her first husband, Bro. James Howell, January 15, 1882, he dying in 1884; married to Bro. Cyrenus Washburn, February 23, 1886. She was baptized soon after uniting with her first husband, and remained a faithful, consistent, and honored member till the angel of death waved his scepter and bade her go hence. Funeral remarks by Elder S. W. L. Scott, to a large congregation in Saints' hall. "Sweet be thy repose."

DREHER.—Mr. Charles L. Dreher was born October 17, 1847, in the State of New Jersey; died March 21, 1898, at Ottumwa, Iowa. He was united in marriage in 1893 to Sr. Agnes Powell, daughter of Bro. and Sr. Birchell, of Ottumwa, Iowa. He was not a member of the church, but he was a man of good character and was a father indeed to his stepdaughters. Sermon by Elder J. S. Snively to a large and attentive congregation, assisted by John Brennan.

MCDUGAL.—At Centralia, Kansas, April 21, 1898, Mr. Louis McDougal, aged 20 years and 8 months. Father, mother, sisters, and brothers mourn. His departure was unexpected to all, having been sick but a few days. Thus the summons comes oftentimes to the young as well as to the aged. Funeral services in charge of Rev. P. K. Shoemaker. A large number of friends and neighbors were in attendance.

RICHARDS.—At his home, Big Bend, West Virginia, March 23, 1898, Bro. Thomas J. Richards. Deceased was born at Big Bend, West Virginia, August 4, 1871. He heard the angel's message through Bro. L. R. Devore, and was baptized by Bro. T. J. Beatty, January 30, 1888. He was one of the charter members of the Fairview branch, and lived his religion. A young man of excellent repute. His last words were that he was going to his home of rest and peace.

WRIGHT.—At Ladd, Illinois, George Fremont, son of George and Ellen Wright; born December 16, 1895; died May 6, 1898. The poor little fellow was playing with the fire and was burned to death. Funeral conducted by Elder Frank Izatt, in the union church.

The great nutritive powers of chocolate are now so generally recognized that it has been adopted for campaign use in the armies and navies of almost every European government.

HISTORY OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS. (Volumes 1 and 2 now ready.) Provided for by action of General Conference of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Written and compiled by President Joseph Smith and Apostle Heman C. Smith. Invaluable as a correct historical narrative, as a means of conversion to truth, and as a defensive weapon in meeting old and new objections urged against the latter-day work. It contains important documents connected with the establishment, growth, and internal and external affairs and progress of the church. The revelations given in this dispensation are inserted, in connection with accounts of the circumstances under which they were given. Biographical sketches, illustrations, complete indexes, sidenotes for ready reference, etc., are some of the features of the work. Volume 1 begins with the birth of Joseph Smith, the Prophet and Seer, in 1805, and narrates the circumstances of his calling and ministry, the rise of the church in 1830, and until the close of the year 1835. Volume 2 continues the history up to June 27, 1844, —to the assassination of Joseph and Hyrum Smith.

TOBACCO HABIT CURED, OR NO PAY.

Bro. B. F. Ordway, of Peoria, Illinois, positively guarantees three boxes of "Quit-To-Bac" to permanently take away all desire for tobacco, or will promptly refund money paid for it. Three boxes sent post paid anywhere for $1.50. No bad effects from use of Quit-To-Bac. It is a great nerve tonic. Why not try it? It has cured hundreds; why not you? Remember, No Cure, No Pay. Address, B. F. ORDWAY, Peoria, Illinois.

THE KEOKUK ROUTE.

K. & W. and D. M. & K. C. Railways.

The D. M. & K. C. Ry from Des Moines to Cainsville has been rebuilt and that portion south of Van Wert will be standard gauge on or before November 1, 1897.

There is no road in Southern Iowa or Northern Missouri which has more good locations for business men than on the line of the Keokuk Route. More stock of all kinds has been shipped over this line than any road of equal mileage in Iowa or Missouri. (See Missouri Surplus Map at our stations.) The freight and passenger service is not equalled by any road in the state, except the Missouri River trunk lines, with each of which we have union stations and direct connections.

Persons seeking farms can find property at tempting prices; men seeking business locations can find towns with ample territory and settlers to warrant good business. Additional passenger service will soon be given which will add to the growth of the towns.

The towns between Des Moines and Cainsville are particularly well located for business. Look them up. Write to the undersigned for additional information. See folder for map and lands.

TO BE A SECOND BROOK FARM.

A CO-OPERATIVE COLONY PLANNED FOR OKLAHOMA.

GUTHRIE, Ok., April 18.—With a soil remarkable for its fertility and capacity to produce a diversity of food products, and a climate free from the rigors of severe winters, what better place than Oklahoma could be found to test the feasibility of a coöperative community composed of persons who are poor in purse but rich in hope? Such an experiment is to be made, and students of social economy will watch its progress with interest. The community is to be known as the Oklahoma Coöperative Industrial Association, and is patterned largely after the famous Brook Farm Community, founded at Roxbury, Massachusetts, in 1842, in which George Ripley, Nathaniel Hawthorne, George William Curtis, Charles A. Dana, and other well-known New Englanders were interested. There were two stages of development in the Brook Farm Community, the idyllic or intellectual and the industrial. The first was portrayed by Hawthorne in “The Blithedale Romance;” the second, a period of the toil and struggles of persons who had no conception of the meaning of transcendentalism, found an historian, not without defects, in John Francis Codman.

THE NEW TESTAMENT'S CODE.

The Oklahoma experiment corresponds closest to the industrial stage of Brook Farm, but differs vitally in that the New Testament is named as the standard of morals. Brook Farm was without religious restrictions. The promoter of the Oklahoma Association is C. B. Powell, of Edmond, who is actively at work inducing persons dissatisfied with present social conditions to lend their assistance in building this new Utopia. The home of the association has not been fixed.

Mr. Powell believes that the declaration of principles and the constitution and by-laws are the best that have been drafted for such an association. The declaration of principles reads:—

WHAT THE COLONISTS BELIEVE.

“We believe that man has a physical, intellectual and spiritual nature and is a rational, responsible, and social being.

“That his Creator gave him dominion over the earth and all things therein, and commanded him to multiply, replenish, and subdue it.

“That man is a progressive being, capable of infinite possibilities; of intellectual and moral development through the intellectual and ethical resources which God has given for that purpose.

“That this development must be attained through education and training.

“That earth, air, and water and all that is implied therein constitute the natural resources and are the common heritage of mankind.

“That it is by labor upon these resources that man is able to supply his wants.

“That the great purpose of man's life is the highest possible development of himself.

“That it is impossible for the individual to carry out the purpose of his being by his own unaided effort. He must have the coöperation of all others.

“That it is only through the coöperation of human effort that the highest development of man is attainable.”

It is proposed, through associated effort, to lessen the causes of poverty and to increase the ability of the individual to supply his wants by receiving the full product of his toil.

A COUNCIL OF SEVEN.

The officers will consist of a council of seven members, elected annually, who will elect a president, vice president, secretary and treasurer. Only the president will exercise appointive power. The council will arbitrate all differences between members, summon witnesses, hear and determine all causes arising under the laws of the association, issue scrip to the workers and depositors, negotiate exchanges, fix prices on products to be distributed, do the clerical work of the association, purchase real estate, purchase live stock, building material, merchandise and produce, and superintend public improvements, and will also have charge of the schools and of all the property of the association. It will not be allowed to contract debts without the consent of two-thirds of the members.

A thorough system of physical, mental, and ethical culture will be taught in the schools. No religious or scientific creed will be established by law, and no scrip will be issued to any religious preacher or teacher for services rendered in such capacity.

The initiative and referendum is to prevail morning, noon, and night. Members guilty of crimes and misdemeanors prohibited by the laws of the State are to be turned over to the civil authorities to be tried and punished according to law.

A town site will be laid out in lots of one fourth acre each. The association will build houses for the members, and all lands not so occupied will be used for coöperative purposes.

The labor of the departments will be performed by details of laborers, arranged by the superintendent of each department. Each detail will choose a foreman from its number to take charge of the work assigned to it, keep the time of each laborer and make a report each day to the superintendent, who will make a weekly report to the secretary of the association of the number of days' labor performed in his department. Each person's labor will be accredited to the person performing it; also the number of days' labor bestowed upon each kind of product.

SCRIP FOR MONEY.

A system of finance will be maintained by a quarterly issuance of scrip, equal in value to the products and merchandise in charge of the treasurer in the warehouses. The value of the product will be ascertained by computing the cost of production at the rate of one dollar a day for the labor bestowed upon it. The laborers will receive scrip according to the amount of work performed.

The association requires members to sign the following pledge:—

"I do solemnly agree that I will do all in my power to carry into effect the objects of this association as set forth in its declaration of principles, constitution and by-laws, and that I will neither use myself, sell or give to others, nor in any way induce or encourage others to use intoxicants as a beverage except that such intoxicants may be used when ordered by a physician for medical purposes, and if addicted to the use of tobacco that I will neither sell nor give it to others not in the habit of using it, but will always discourage its use."

CHILDREN AS WARDS.

New members must deposit enough money or its equivalent to maintain them six months. Children of members will be considered as wards of the association and will receive wages for their labor in proportion to what it is worth as compared with adult labor. Alien children over ten years old may be received on the same terms.

An invalid department will be established where the sick or those who have been partially disabled may be supported and furnished with such labor as they may be able to perform. All members reared in the association will be retired from the general department of labor at fifty years of age; those having a diploma from the school and having kept their pledge, will be admitted into the council. Members without these qualifications may go into the invalid department. —Kansas City Star, April 19.

THE FACTOR OF PERSONALITY.

PERSONAL influence! Yes, how that survives and defies all attempts to render it ineffective! Men who disbelieve in it and set up socialist or communist ideas, denying to any individual any priority or advantage over his fellows, see with astonishment and mortification that the hated thing enters into their most secret circles and sways all their action. It was supposed that it was only in the unenlightened ages of the world that any one man could have any personal command in great affairs. With contempt it was pronounced that the heroes of antiquity or the great captains of bygone centuries must have had an inferior crew to deal with when so paramount a position was given to any individual. Englishmen in more recent times thought that it was only Frenchmen who could let "Bonny" ride so roughshod over them, when "liberty, equality and fraternity" had but just been inscribed over the doors of every public building in France. Who but unenlightened Russians would allow a czar to have absolute dominion? Nowadays surely, it was argued, when intelligence, culture and education are so generally diffused, none could arrogate to himself any large share of the admiration and worship of fellow countrymen.

Is this so? Do we not rather see that men, even if raised to a high level of knowledge of material things, are yet as emotional as ever, as apt to follow like sheep the lead of one, as incapable of weighing and judging the faults of those who by appeals to their pride, their passion and prejudice may rise to the head of affairs? Except in the very rare cases where great wars or convulsions of the political world are in progress, it is most difficult to get electors to value the "high politics" at stake at their proper measure of importance. Rather will they discuss the character of a candidate, and his private affairs, his position in society, the influence he may be able to use for their individual benefit; nay, even his appearance seems often to them of more account than his principles. The personal factor seems to be almost as great as ever.—The Marquis of Lorne in North American Review.

ANCIENT AMERICAN CANALS.

THE remains of a wonderful irrigation system long concealed have recently been uncovered in Arizona. Says The Mining and Scientific Press of it:—

"During my last visit to Arizona, I saw in the Salt River Valley a sight that would strike a stranger as queer. A steam dredging-scow, such as is used in deepening rivers and harbors for navigation, was voyaging slowly and steadily through a wide strip of arid desert. It was started landward from Salt River, and was excavating its own channel ahead, the river waters following and floating it as it advanced. But the work was not, in fact, the making of a new channel, but the digging out of an old one, the irrigating canal made by a civilized people that lived and flourished and departed before recorded American history began. That there was a time when this wide valley, now being again redeemed to man, was a garden of plenty, teeming with inhabitants, is shown by the extensive and regular system of broad canals leading from the river, through which water for irrigating was conveyed for centuries. With the drifting sands and earth, these canals are still plainly indicated on the face of the ground, and so skillfully were they planned and built that modern engineering science applied to irrigation can do no better than retrace their course and restore them. What race laid out the canals and built the towns whose ruins are strung along the valley is a question not yet settled by archæologists. Aztecs or Toltecs, or each in their turn, probably tarried here in their centuries long southward to the valley of Mexico, and the ruins may be of an older people than either of them."—Ex.

RESULT OF OVERCULTURE.

Like the professors of Harvard College who denounce the war as causeless and unrighteous, it is men of superior intellectual attainments—with a good many grand exceptions, to be sure—that constitute the tory element in this war. It is a case of overculture. The artificial cultivation of the intellect has weakened the natural sense of the relation of things. The refinements of logic, of theory, of speculation, have usurped the place of those impulses which move men of less delicate training. Technical doubt takes the place of the impulse of straightforward common sense.—Boston Post.

HEALTH SCIENCE.

MEN of all ranks have more or less to say about the laws of health and "nature's laws," whatever may be meant by the latter term. It seems to be the usual opinion that if man (anybody) would but live according to the laws of health there would be no need for physicians, or nurses, for all would be healthy, none be sick.

This may be so. But, there are so many who do not, will not, or cannot so live in accordance with the so-called laws of health, that it may be said with good reason, "there is none that doeth good, no not one."

Upon the apparent reasonableness of the idea that men would not be sick if they lived according to the law, there has been builded a half religious body of believers who style their faith and philosophy, Health Science, or the science of right living. One phase of it is, that the spirit is the master, that the body is so far a servant and dependent on the spirit that if the man believes he has no sickness, he has none. That so long as the mind is in control and thinks the body is not sick, the body is free from disease; that on the contrary, the mind being the source or center of control, if the thought that the body is sick obtains, then it is sick; therefore, if a man thinks himself to be sick, he is sick; if he thinks himself to be well, he is well. "As a man thinketh so is he."

The logic of this leads to the effect that if by any real, known, or unknown cause persons are overcome of sickness, it is the result of breaking the laws of health, and that in such case careful nursing, with a sedulous training back of the mind to normal conditions will convince the mind of the sick one that the body is not sick, and return to health be secured. Whatever else may be done by nurses in the faith, the general proposition is as stated; but no resort must be had to the doctors or to medicine.

Many of the teachers of this philosophy are women; possibly because they are by natural capabilities the better nurses, and some of them are to be found in nearly all large cities now.

Whether the science has been sufficiently demonstrated, or not, it seems to have very sincere devotees in many places; and in some the practitioners have come into collision with the medical men, and the officers of the law. One case of this kind occurred a few years ago at San Bernardino, California, in which the patient died, and the attendant Health Scientist was arrested for malpractice. The case failed of conviction for technical reasons. Another of recent occurrence is attracting attention in the newspaper realm, and is the occasion of much talk in both secular and religious circles. Miss Isabella Franklin Jones was a believer in and teacher and exponent of the Christian Scientist's faith and practices. She wrought well as a teacher and advocate of the theories, until when forty-five years of age was taken sick. What laws of life she failed to keep, why she permitted the body to secure the displacement of the spirit in control, and why there was a failure to reason the patient back to normal conditions, are not stated and probably not known. It is known, however, that she was sick; that a physician was called, pronounced the disease to be pneumonia, and left medicines and directions for their administration. Miss Jones, who had been a "Liberal Scientist," different from the Christian Scientists, for the reason that the latter believe in Christ as a divine healer and regard the Bible as the word of God, and the former do not so believe, as we suppose; after taking one dose of the medicine, presumably while the doctor was present, refused to take any more, preferring to trust to her faith in her science of which she had been a demonstrator.

She was consistent enough to think that if the science was good enough to be taught and to live by it was also good enough to die by. So she preferred to take the chances in her own theories. Her body was sick enough to die notwithstanding there was strong protest made by the spirit, and she died.

All this occurred at Kansas City, Missouri, where not long ago Mrs. Amanda J. Baird, a Christian Scientist Healer, had been arrested for failing to report to the proper authorities a case of contagious disease treated by her. The notoriety given the science by this arrest made it necessary for the general officers of the Scientists to send a representative of the science to overcome the prejudice resulting from the arrest. Miss Jones came, and did much to restore the loss, but she has now herself failed as a demonstrator.

But the object of this writing is not to make light of the faith of the Health Scientists; for whatever may be said about it, what we claim as "faith to be healed," they call the "effect of mind over matter;" our thought being that God has provided a rule by which his own power over disease may be exercised for the relief of the believer; their thought is, that by a provision of creation, or nature, mind as mind has this power, open to all, but greatest among those who school themselves to believe. The point is here, Mrs. Amanda J. Baird, a Healer, as she styled herself was arrested because she failed to report a case of contagious disease treated by her, and Coroner Bedford is reported as saying that inquiry will be made, and if Mrs. Baird had attended Miss Jones, she will be arrested. Coroner Bedford is a physician; and the inference is all too plain that in case Miss Jones believes in healing by Health Science, was cared for by a practitioner of her own faith and practice, instead of a licensed physician of some school, the one so waiting upon her would be arrested—and for what?

By what rule of the law of common rights, the free exercise of individual judgment in religious things, does the coroner propose to arrest, try, and condemn Mrs. Baird? Has human jurisprudence reached such a stage that none but Allopathic, Eclectic, or Homeopathic physicians are to be allowed to cure or kill people? And are the sick, if they happen to be sick enough to need attention, to be compelled to put themselves into the hands of those in whose practices they have no confidence—no faith?

Has there yet been an authorized inquiry made by the State of Missouri, by which the number of deaths by or recoveries from diseases by the various classes of physicians under their respective treatments, has been compared with the number treated by Health Scientists under their treatment, and the decision made in favor of the doctors and their pills and potions? If so, we have not yet been favored by seeing the report.

Hundreds of sick are all round us; nine tenths of the cases are attended by the so-called regular faculty. No public opinion seems to be outraged when any of these sick people die. By some it is called "dispensation of Providence," by some it is attributed to improper conduct of the patients; but none seem to attach any inquiry as to the possibility of death resulting from fault of the doctor, or the specific school—the philosophy—of medicine of which he is the representative.

Suppose that Miss Jones did have Mrs. Baird to attend her, and while being treated by her, or nursed by her, death ensued. Is it competent for the coroner to say legally that "Miss Jones died from the effects of treatment according to the Health Science school of practice?" It appears that Miss Jones took one dose of medicine from an attendant physician and refused to take more. Has the coroner any means of determining whether Miss Jones would have recovered had she taken all the medicine the doctor left, or is it a fact that recovery is so usual in cases of pneumonia, under medical treatment, that none are supposed to die? In other words, do physicians invariably succeed in causing sick people to recover?

We have given attention to this matter for the reason that as a people HERALD readers believe in faith healing, or healing by faith. Not by what is known as Health Science, to be sure; but by that law of healing prescribed by the Lord, the Savior, and practiced by him. And, it may be that sometime somebody may take it into his head to arrest the elders who may be called in to pour on oil and lay on hands, charging that such treatment and lack of medicine taking was the producing cause of the resulting death, thus making them parties to murder by faith.

It is certainly out of the order of common prudence and common sense for municipal governments to arraign and condemn a course of treatment given the sick upon grounds of prejudice alone. And unless there should be an examination and the result of it show that there were a greater number of deaths among those treated by faith, or by Health Scientists, than among those treated by the Doctors of Medicine, there should be neither legislative enactment against the latter, nor prosecutions for deaths that occur.

If the death of a patient proves the system bad, then there is no successful system of medicine, for all have lost, and do lose patients by death.

A LETTER from Elder E. D. C. Smith, son of Uncle William B. Smith, the brother to Joseph and Hyrum, written at Chetek, Barron County, Wisconsin, seems to give good promise for the work up there. He writes:—

I am holding regular preaching services every Lord's day at two different school-houses, and two prayer meetings each week, besides working out on the farm every working day in the week. So you see I am facing the music pretty well. I conducted a funeral service last week, and performed a marriage ceremony also; so you will see I am getting some experience in gospel work. I have not baptized any yet, but expect to soon. . . . We have Sabbath school here every Sunday. My children attend. I am so thankful that God has opened the way for me and my family to get spiritual food; and that I now have a chance to do something for the Lord who bought me with his own precious blood. Hope you are all well.

We are pleased to note the progress this son of Uncle William is making. It is pleasing to think that so many of those who stood and labored with Joseph and Hyrum in the faith are represented by their sons in the Reorganized Church. We bid you a hearty "Good speed," Bro. Smith.

THE following is from the Chicago Tribune of May 27. The cause of the financial trouble is not named:—

BRIGHAM YOUNG'S SON A BANKRUPT.

London, May 26.—In the bankruptcy court to-day a receiving order was issued against J. W. Young a son of the late Brigham Young. His liabilities are £333,892 ($1,669,410).

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

ELDER J. C. CRABB, Joy, Illinois, May 22:—

You will give Joy, Illinois, as my mission address, and oblige me. Preached at Millersburg yesterday; begin here to-night.

Bro. W. T. Maitland, writing from Des Moines, Iowa, May 23:—

New blood is entering the branch, both by baptism and by letter, and we feel a new impulse, and thank God we live. Bishop Kelley did us good and we take heart of hope. We are glad to note the sturdy activity and persistent zeal of our young presiding priest, Victor Gunsolley. He has waked up and for all day. Jerry will be glad to hear this, and we are proud to record it.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

BRO. J. C. CLAPP at last accounts was at Sedalia, Graves County, Kentucky, his field address and headquarters. He was finding plenty to do and was hopeful of success.

Cards to the editors announce the marriage of Bro. E. A. Blakeslee of the Bishopric, to Miss Adeline, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John B. Graves, of Benton Harbor, Michigan, which occurred May 18 last. "At home" is announced after July 1, at Galien, Michigan. The HERALD extends congratulations and best wishes to Bro. Blakeslee and wife.

Bro. D. C. White, of Blairstown, Missouri, is out in a pastoral in the form of a "salutation" to his district, in which all are urged to lend their hearty support in advancing the cause. Bro. White pleads with all to bear a hand with a view to making the Clinton district the "banner district of Missouri." We are sure that he will throw decided energy into the work, as all should, and as all must do, if the cause is to move as it ought to move. Let us all be alive and at our work with that consecration and energy of which the cause of God is worthy.

Elder Hugh Palmer, of Akron, Ohio, reports the baptism of four, with others to obey, as a result of local labor at that point. He is to meet a Disciple minister in discussion on June 6.

The Reorganized Church has furnished a number of volunteers, who responded to President McKinley's first call for the war against Spanish oppression. Those so far reported to us are: Joseph G., son of President Alexander H. Smith, Winfred B., eldest son of Bishop E. L. Kelley, James, son of Bro. W. H. Kelley, William S., son of Bro. C. E. Blair, all of Lamoni; and Alma, son of Bro. Alexander McCallum, grandson of President Joseph Smith. Brn. J. G. Smith and A. McCallum enlisted in Missouri regiments, the others in Iowa regiments. All honor to the brave boys who have gone to the front to help maintain the right.

Other Lamoni boys also enlisted, to whom is due the same credit for love of country: Ralph Grenawalt and Bro. Morgan Graham.

Bishop E. L. Kelley, who has been negotiating with the Christian people to meet Clark Braden at Tabor, Iowa, and who was given to understand that the discussion would not be held, has finally succeeded in inducing the representatives of that body to meet the issue. The debate will begin at Tabor, Iowa, on the evening of Monday, the 30th. Bro. J. W. Wight has been chosen to represent the church in the discussion.

Bro. G. H. Hilliard, of the Bishopric, left Lamoni on the 27th, going to Boomer, Iowa, to attend conference of the Pottawattamie district, May 28 and 29. He also expected to attend the Fremont district conference a week later, at Henderson, Iowa, June 4 and 5.

The Utah Church will be represented in the United States army to invade Cuba, by a son of George Q. Cannon and a grandson of President Brigham Young, deceased.

From a late issue of the Chicago Tribune we learn that one Clark Braden, Jr., was arrested in Chicago, on some charge. We have already made note of the arrest of the same individual, of one bearing that name, in the city of New York. We do not know who Clark Braden, Jr., is, or to what family he belongs; we simply note the item from the passing news.

Coincidences are often interesting: Rear Admiral Dewey was born in Vermont; Admiral Sampson was born in Palmyra, New York. Both have rendered and are rendering good service in the cause of liberty against oppression. Another prominent American was born in Vermont and an important part of his work was done near Palmyra, New York. He did much good for America, his native land, and for his countrymen. He was a loyal American and died in an effort to deliver humanity from bondage. Though unrewarded by his country, he lives in the hearts of those who understood his work and that of his colaborers.

In the Word of Wisdom is found a caution against adulterations of various articles. The following is among the many items which indicate that the admonition was not without cause. The days have come that "eternal vigilance is the price of safety" in all that man partakes of—mentally and bodily:—

Washington, May 13.—The ways and means committee concluded its hearings on the pure flour bill this morning. U. S. Glick and Dr. A. Behr of the Glucose Sugar Refining Company appeared before it in opposition to the bill, and Augustine Gallegher appeared in its favor. Dr. Behr, chemist of the company, admitted that glucose starch, which the bill seeks to prevent being used as an adulterant of flour, contained free sulphuric acid.

Press of other matter caused us to neglect mention of the prediction of "Professor J. B. Dimpleby, of London, England," a scientist who issued a pamphlet in which he prophesied the end of the world to occur on Easter Sunday, 1898. However, if any were not ready among our readers, let it not be charged to us.

Original Poetry.

THE LONE PATH.

BY J. M. HOLADAY.

A secret path each one will tread;
Its silence fell on me with dread.
Oft was I forced to go alone,
Afar from everyone that I had known.
At first I went a little way,
And then rushed back to loved ones gay

Till one by one they left my sight;
But that lone path is now a blaze of light.
A queen needs love as badly yet
As the humblest girl you've met,
Or as the boy with temper mild
Upon Nebraska's unfenced western wild.
Queen Caroline long pined alone,
And died for love she could not own;
Not England's gold or London's pomp Prevented her from dying there of want.

'Tis love that heals our troubled ways,
Till to its other sphere we raise;
For love alone will fail to stand
Unless it winneth order's cunning hand.
Hence heaven sometimes calls aside
Each man alone, to teach and chide;
With him it holds an interview—
No other form can enter there with you.

Sin must stimulate the soul
Of him who still lacks self-control;
It leaps on him with fiery pains,
Until that lonely pathway he regains.
Love will every trouble hush,
If order's glance inspires its blush;
Pure thought attains this azure law,
And will restore that love without its flaw.

A thoughtful resignation sane
Survives the blaze of fortune's reign;
This order shines within itself,
And borrows not the brilliant arts of pelf.
This secret order far exceeds Ambition's wonder-working deeds.
A public favorite to be,
Is no deliverance at last to me.

The labor-saving arts now tell
All men to think and laugh right well,
For that, as hand-work disappears,
The mind must find employ in higher spheres.
Delusion charms the willing head,
Until with order it is wed;
And love and order undefiled,
In him doth blaze who is no more beguiled.
COUNCIL BLUFFS, IOWA, SEPT. 1, 1897.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

"O Youth and Beauty, loved of all!
Ye pass from girlhood's gate of dreams;
In broader ways your footsteps fall,
Ye test the truth of all that seems.

"Give and receive; go forth and bless
The world that needs the hand and heart
Of Martha's helpful carefulness
No less than Mary's better part."

WHY IS IT SO?

YES, dear reader; why is it so? Why are there so many cases of sudden death among our young married women, as well as occasionally a case among those who are not married? And worse still, why do we meet such cases in the church, among those who claim to have been cleansed from sin by obedience to the Christ-given plan of salvation? Our soul has been shocked as well as pained, several times during the last year, because of the sudden death of sisters in the church who were young, blessed with good health, and the promise of many years of usefulness, and the enjoyment of earth's blessings, provided they kept the physical and spiritual laws of God. But alas, by following the fashion of the world, they have taken their own life! They felt unreconciled to their condition, and instead of going to God in prayer, that they might be reconciled, guided, and carried safely through, they rashly attempted to counteract the laws of nature.

Yes; the law of God that was given at the day of creation, and has generally been kept down to the present—down to this enlightened age, the nineteenth century—since our beloved Master took little children in his arms and blessed them. What would he have said if the wives in his day had adopted the methods of the present day? I think he would have said, "Depart from me, ye workers of iniquity."

How can one be a true worshiper of God, an obedient child of God, and commit such a crime? 'Tis a worse sin than to face a foe with dagger or revolver. That is self-defense; this is destroying the harmless without any cause, except a shirking of duty, and that probably, in many instances, is caused by ignorance and a lack of faith. That is why it is so, no doubt. The teachings of the foolishly wise is a curse to the women of our land; a curse to the rising generation, and consequently a curse to our whole nation. Even the heathen and the savage tribes would be ashamed of such a practice. They live more in harmony with their physical laws, notwithstanding their ignorance compared with our world-wide notoriety—consequently their posterity are more numerous and more hardy. That is why it is so.

We are glad that this very important subject has had an occasional place in our periodicals, and hope, yes pray that those who have right views and clear understanding may contribute freely to our columns concerning the matter, that our sisters may have a better understanding of their mission and life work. "O, how vulgar," says one whose modesty is only mockery. Vulgar is a Latin word meaning "common," and surely pure teaching on our subject is not common; but low, obscene illusions are common among those who are not rightly educated.

Our common newspapers bring to nearly every house in the states their license, so to speak, to sexual crime, and advertise remedies for the same, equal to the priests selling a right of indulgence in sin. We have been disgusted by just glancing at the pictures. We doubt not that many have made themselves wrecks by low, ignorant indulgences; but we think that the teaching of truth is a cheaper and a more sure remedy than patent nostrums. The iniquities of the fathers are visited upon the children, as well as the iniquities of the mothers; and thus children who are suffered to see the light of this world are not unfrequently physical wrecks, and why is it so?

Because of the iniquities of their ancestors, filtered into their blood, and stamped on their whole being, many cases of cripples, and of idiots or worse, half idiots, have been caused by their parents' ignorance, or injudicious conduct.

Then is it not high time that the truth of our being was proclaimed through the church publications? If not, and things go on as they have commenced, where a few years hence will be the rising generation to fill the places of the present officers of the church! They will pass on, and over, so will the lay member; and if the spirits are not suffered in their turn to be clothed in the flesh, where will the church be? Probably with some of those spoken of in Revelation.

Dear young mothers who are thus tempted to violate God's law, stop for one moment and consider the matter. Are you willing to rashly thrust yourself unbidden into the presence of God? And besides, how sad and lonely must be the condition of your husband, and who will care for the little ones left in a cold, sinful world, without a mother's love, a mother's protection to shield them.

We are acquainted with two dear sisters in the church who each have borne ten children, nearly all of them are still living. They are almost four score—have seen six generations—have a large posterity and have waded through seas of affliction, yet shrunk not from their duties, deserted not their post, and now are only waiting to be gathered home with the faithful. Their means was very limited, and could I tell you how very, very hard those women labored to aid in procuring sustenance for their little ones, you could not believe me, for women don't do so now—don't live as long either.

Dear sisters, don't scorn this little essay; don't scorn the writer, for she feels that it was prompted by the Holy Spirit. If not prompted, she knows that the approving smile of the Father and the Son rest on her soul, will rest on her work, and good will be done thereby, if in only one case. Sisters, we shall know one another by and by—when we meet on the glorified earth.

PRAYER UNION.

SPECIAL REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.

SR. JOSEPHINE SALISBURY, of Fountain Green, Illinois, earnestly entreats that you will remember in your prayers (with fasting if possible) her youngest daughter, Julia, who is sorely afflicted with neuralgia of the heart and stomach. She is ambitious to excel as a pupil at school, but has a chronic granulation in her right eye. She has strong faith in the gospel—has been a member of the church eight years, and has been promised the blessing of health if faithful. She has fasted and prayed many times (on one occasion fasted forty-eight hours), but still does not receive the blessing. And now her greatly distressed mother asks your faith and prayers in her behalf.

Sister Thomas Althrope, of Council Bluffs, requests the faith and prayers of the Prayer Union that if it be the Lord's will she may be relieved of a very serious and painful affliction.

Sr. R. W. Davis, of Lebeck, Missouri, earnestly requests the prayers of the Prayer Union in behalf of her husband who has been afflicted for some months. He desires health that he may not be hindered in his ministerial work.

Letter Department.

MAQUOKETA, Iowa, May 21.

Editors Herald:—I landed in this town a few days ago, feeling about as dark as a mortal can feel; with an appointment out for preaching that night. If I had been unusually slack in obedience to the divine law I should not have thought it strange that I felt so dark, but I had been making an extra effort to come up higher and in some regards by the Lord's help had made some advancement. In such times I have long since learned to stand still and see the salvation of the Lord.

No other subject but the signs of the times presented itself to my mind, and so I spoke with fair liberty on that subject, dwelling largely on the subject of cyclones. The next day, in the afternoon, one of the worst and by some said to be the very worst cyclone ever in the State visited this section of country. "Coming events cast their shadows before," it is said, and in this case was probably true. Reports vary as to the number of persons killed. One whole family was swept out of existence on this planet. The family consisted of husband, wife, and three children. Every monument in one cemetery was not only blown down, but blown away, and cannot be found. Three hundred dead cattle were dropped in the same graveyard above-mentioned. Trees nearly three feet through were twisted off or torn out of the ground. One hay barn was blown away and the hay was untouched. Buildings were so completely demolished that it would be difficult to find an armful of the timbers. There is on exhibition in this place an inch thick pine board with a rye straw driven through it. Six inches of the straw on either side of the board still remain and so solidly there that it cannot be pulled out without breaking the straw.

I was within hearing distance of the storm. Bro. Elder Warren Turner was in the track of the storm. I have not learned yet whether he was damaged by it or not. One peculiar feature of the cyclone was, it traveled slowly and was not accompanied by rain. On account of its slow movements most people who saw it got into their cellars. Had it traveled as swiftly as cyclones usually do, five hundred people would have been taken unawares and possibly most of them killed.

Am feeling well spiritually and physically. Go this evening to Fulton. My permanent address will be Edgewood, Clayton County, Iowa. Those wishing preaching, address me there.

In bonds of peace,

J. W. PETERSON.

NANTYGLO, Wales, May 12.

Editors Herald:—I feel truly thankful to God for leading me to the truth. For some time I used to speak disrespectfully of the saints, but after casting aside prejudice, the gospel preached by my fellow brethren got to have an effect upon me; but I struggled on for about two years or so, not willing to yield to the spirit that was leading me to do right. I had not hitherto worshiped with any class of religionists, and felt to try something else rather than be with the people who had wrought upon me concerning my duty to God, so I tried the Primitive Methodists and went in and out among them for some time, and one night they prayed for me and I prayed also; they then claimed me as one of their converts. I said that I had not had the Holy Ghost as it was received on the day of Pentecost. "O," they said, "you'll have grace day by day and grow gradually in the Spirit!" I said, "Is that all the acknowledgment you people get from God?" "Yes," one said. "Well, said I," "there is no guiding hand among you, only to live morally, and I can do that without professing religion, and this is sham."

So I went to the saints' meetings and I felt a portion of the power of God as I now understand it, and it haunted me day and night, telling me or convicting me to obey the doctrine of Christ. I felt that the saints' testimonies were borne with assurance and I desired to become like them, and I was baptized by Elder John Jones and was confirmed. My letter may seem wearisome. As the brethren were coming toward me I could feel the Holy Spirit of promise as their hands were coming down on my head, and I cried in thankfulness to God in the name of Christ for such an assurance in my day. There is a power in this work beyond the power of man. I said at my confirmation, "It is enough, heavenly Father."

My better half has, after a little teaching, become a saint, and seeing the harmony of this work and the gifts of the gospel poured out upon God's children I rejoice and say to the ministry of Christ, Be not daunted if the seed sown by you doth not spring up immediately. It will grow. Think how long it was taking root in me.

We are gaining gradually in numbers here and there is reason to hope a good branch will be raised here in time.

Your brother in bonds,
LEWIS OAKEY.

MANCHESTER, England, May 8.

Editors Herald:—Just a few words to all who are interested in Sunday school work. In answer to an invitation I attended the city of Sheffield on the 29th ult. and May 1, in order to take part in the anniversary services of the branch Sunday school. The proceedings opened on Sunday the 1st at 2:30 p. m., under the direction of Bro. Fred Beaumont. The superintendent, Bro. Joseph Arber, attended on crutches, having recently met with an accident. Five tons of armor-plating fell upon him and he mercifully escaped having both legs cut off. We can ill spare good men from our ranks—faithful, persistent men especially. The scholars appeared delighted to see our brother amongst them again, and showed it by looks and gesture. A nice platform had been erected, and the children were tastefully dressed in white. The singing was very sweet, and showed that pains had been taken in the preparation. One hymn in memory of our late Bro. Hoole was nicely sung by Miss Nelly Mellard.

Short addresses were given at intervals by Elders John Austin, district president, and S. Platts, and Priests Joseph Arber and F. Beaumont on suitable topics. In the evening your correspondent was called upon to address a good congregation, composed of members and non-members, and the major part of the singing was done by the children. On Monday evening the school again held a meeting, which is described as grand. I have since received word that some outside the fold were benefited.

While musing upon the scene I thought, "Saints of Sheffield, you have draped your pulpit in black out of respect for the honored dead, whilst your children are arrayed in white. It occurred to me that you might have used the black for the memory of your spiritually dead; whilst the white, the emblem of purity, is a more fitting symbol of the life and memory of the departed brother whom we all loved."

Our Sabbath school work in this country is growing. To all coworkers I would say, Prepare for all discouragements, and stick to your guns. As a Sunday school official I sincerely regret the imminent retirement of our respected brother, Elder H. C. Smith, from our midst. May his life be long spared to the church.

In gospel bonds,
WM. R. ARMSTRONG, District Secretary
Sunday School Association.

Editors Herald:—We came to this place on the 7th of May. My husband was enroute to his field of labor. He was taken sick on the 9th and has been confined to his bed ever since.

Your sister in the faith,

BELLSGROVE, W. Va., May 19.

Editors Herald:—I held some of the most spiritual meetings last winter I ever attended in the State, and the greatest manifestation of power in administering to the sick, receiving the evidence while my hands were yet on their heads that they would be healed. The outlook for the spread of the truth in West Virginia was never better since I have been doing missionary work.

What has become of Bro. W. H. Kelley, our missionary in charge? I have written him, but cannot hear from him. I began my year's labor at Mount Nebo, in Roane County, West Virginia. This was where Bro. J. L. Goodrich, myself, and the saints were rocked and shot at last October. I baptized three on the 14th, Bro. Cadle, his wife, and daughter. No wonder his Satanic Majesty raged last fall when he saw that his kingdom was in danger. But though he does rage and cause persecution, the honest in heart will obey the voice of God and come out of Babylon.

I will go to Gay on the 20th and preach in the private house of Bro. and Sr. Tuttle on the 21st and 22d. I will go from there to Centerville branch, in Wayne County, West Virginia. God bless us all is my prayer.

G. H. GODBEY.

NEW CASTLE, N. S. W., April 23.

Editors Herald:—Our last conference here on Easter Saturday and Sunday was splendid, for peace and unity prevailed. One thing is very gratifying in the work out here; namely, the fact that the young men are being pointed out for the ministry. Brn. Walter J. Haworth and William H. Broadway were ordained elders by order of the last conference. They are both talented young warriors and will make good workers if they only live humble and faithful, so the Holy Spirit can teach them, and lead into truth, and develop them in this great gospel ministry.

Most of my time during the last six months was spent in completing the missionary cottage here on church lot. Am glad it is done now and my hands more free for the ministry. If we leave here, the neat little four roomed cottage will be ready for some other elder and family to enter in and occupy. It has cost about two hundred and twenty-five dollars, only about eight dollars being paid out for labor. Saints are getting on very well in meeting payments on the land and I hope soon to see it dedicated.

If Bro. Wight could step into our chapel, and also the cottage, he would see and rejoice that the good seed sown in the past by himself and others was not in vain. Our conference and the Victoria conference were in session the same time as the General Conference at Independence.

Love to all,
JOHN KALER.

HONOLULU, H. I., May 10.

Editors Herald:—In compliance with the wish of a great many saints in Southern California and elsewhere, I write the Herald to note a few incidents of my trip to these islands.

On Saturday night, April 2, I was very much surprised after answering a knock at the door, to see an army of saints demanding admittance. They came armed with chairs, cakes, and ice cream. I realized it was a surprise party. They were members of the Newport branch and friends. The time was profitably spent in singing, etc.

After the writer and a few others sang a saints' hymn, Branch and District President Bro. A. Carmichael presented me, on behalf of the branch, with a very handsome Bible, accompanied with a very appropriate speech, as a token of their regards and good wishes. It made me feel happy and glad to know that my services in the past were appreciated.

On Sunday following I left my home and dear ones, and arrived at Los Angeles in time to preach for the saints there. After several good-byes and "God bless you," I boarded the train on Monday morning for San Francisco; arrived there safely next morning. At this place I visited some of the saints, among whom were Bro. and Sr. Anthony; also Bro. Andrews and his genial companion, who received us very cordially and entertained us. Next day, April 6, the steamship Zealandia left the American shore, and while good-bye's and waving handkerchiefs were plentiful on the wharf and the steamer, there was not one to say good-bye to your humble servant. My thoughts were flying homeward and also to Independence, Missouri, for General Conference was convening that day, and my prayers were that God would bless those assembled.

In a little while we were through the golden gate. The next day I paid my tribute to David Jones in two installments, after which I felt free to enjoy myself during the voyage, which I did. On Sunday, the 10th, which was Easter, I preached in the saloon of the big steamer to about seventy passengers and officers. The purser had the saloon fixed up to appear like a church, with hymn books and Bibles distributed to every one. The pulpit was covered with "Old Glory." It was my first experience in preaching on the ocean. I was truly blessed of God during my effort. A lady passenger accompanied the singing on the piano. Before dismissing service a converted and well-educated Chinaman bore his testimony to the truth of Christianity.

I went to sleep that night realizing that I had done my duty on that day, though it was on the ocean.

Arrived at our destination at two p. m. on the 13th, being exactly seven days out. I met Bro. G. J. Waller soon after arriving. Also Bro. Ingham, and together we went to the prayer meeting, and there I found about a dozen native saints. They all gave me a very hearty welcome. I have preached several times since I came, Bro. Poepoe, interpreter.

I find Bro. Waller a very busy man, both in temporal and spiritual things. He displays a great amount of patience in teaching the natives the plan of salvation. He has been the means of translating the Doctrine and Covenants and the Book of Mormon. There is a Book of Mormon class every Wednesday evening before the prayer meeting. I think that many of the native brethren are far ahead of many in America in Book of Mormon knowledge. They always kneel during prayer, except during dismissal, and they are fine singers, quick at learning, but incline to sing very slowly. I am glad to see that a missionary has been appointed for these islands. He will have to learn the language in order to do much good.

Yours in the work,

JOHN MORRIS.

OSKALOOSA, Iowa, May 25.

Editors Herald:—Mid scenes of confusion, general anxiety, and apprehension incident to these troublous times the Master is caring for his own and the work here is still showing signs of his approbation; for he is still blessing the efforts of his servants.

Bro. W. H. Kephart has been laboring in this vicinity about four weeks, opening up a new work four miles north of here, which promises to be a grand opening. The meetings were attended by fair-sized congregations and the very best interest was manifested.

Bro. Kephart also held meetings at Pekay, eight miles south of here. Returning to Oskaloosa he led four precious souls into the liquid wave, on Sunday, the 22d inst., two of which are heads of families. This makes five baptized in this branch during the present month, a promising young lady having been baptized on the 5th. There are still more near the kingdom, and so we have cause to rejoice, and desire to live worthy of renewed and continued blessings.

ERYSIPELAS.

As there are some troubled with erysipelas, I will tell them what cured me. I had it over twenty years ago. I stopped it by painting with iodine. About a year after it came in my face again and I asked God what I should do that I might not have it again. He told me at once what to do. I never thought nor heard of it before. He said to put a speck of concentrated lye on the spot where it commenced. I did so; it was on about three minutes. He told me to wash it off. I did so and was perfectly well. I have never had it since.

LEAVENWORTH, Ind., May 16.

Editors Herald:—In the primitive church, Christ placed in it officers to look after the membership, and to see that the law was kept. When Israel kept the commandments God blessed them, and when they failed to obey the statutes they had to suffer.

The Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints ought to obey the church law and the law of God. Corruptions of some of the members keep good, moral, and honest-meaning people out of the church.

I believe the branches ought to be rid of card players, drunkards, and liars, and those that do not attend our meeting for worship. I do believe the elders ought to see that the law is observed in every branch.

I ask the saints to pray for our branch at Leavenworth, Indiana.

PETER A. FLINN.

WILBURTON, I. T., May 20.

Editors Herald:—I have been receiving letters from all over the country from the saints inquiring what kind of a country the Indian Territory is. I have answered a good many letters. But now I take this plan of writing to so many.

First, Wilburton is a coal mining district; two veins of coal here, one vein four and one half feet thick, the other vein five feet thick.

The veins are about fifty feet apart. The coal is of a fine quality. There is land here with three and four veins of good coal under it. Miners' wages when paid by the day are two dollars and twenty-five cents. Price for mining by the ton, sixty cents, unscreened coal. Screened coal, seventy-five cents per ton. Miners mining by the ton can make two to three dollars a day. We have four coal companies shipping coal from here now. Work is pretty steady here, but hard sometimes for a strange miner to get work.

This is a good stock country. Cattle live mostly all winter without any feed. Lumber is eight dollars a thousand.

This is a mountainous country; lots of work for good teams hauling logs to the mill in Wilburton, and hauling lumber. Good teams can make from two dollars and fifty cents to three dollars per day. Good farming land in the valleys. You cannot own land here, you must lease the land from the Indians. There is no trouble in getting a good lease. You have no taxes to pay, except five dollars per year permit. You can keep all the cattle you want by paying twenty-five dollars per year. Ten cows and calves is the limit for a farmer without paying extra.

This is a pretty healthy country, very pleasant winters. Winters are short. Produce of all kinds grows well here.

As a great many of the saints want to know about Fentress, Indian Territory, where Bro. Perkins lives, Fentress is about seventy-five miles west of Wilburton, in the Creek Nation. It is an extra fine farming country, and I think underlaid with coal.

We have—the saints here—been contemplating organizing a coal company, but as yet we have never organized. We want it confined to the saints or those whom they may recommend.

I am contemplating visiting the Creek Nation again to preach and to prospect for that coal. I have been forty years working in the coal mines and would like to see the miners and members of the church organized into a coal company on the cooperative plan. Would like to hear from others before we organize. Plenty of open schoolhouses in this district for preaching, but the laborers are few. But if we are united we all things can do. I never felt better in my life than when preaching this gospel of the kingdom.

I rejoice in this latter-day work; the Lord has truly blessed me in my labors of love. I have many testimonies of this marvelous work.

My ruling desire is to spend my last days on this earth in preaching a restored gospel. Pray for me that I may ever keep faithful is my humble prayer.

PETER ADAMSON.

ELGIN, Cal., May 21.

Editors Herald:—By scanning your pages I see that Bro. T. W. Williams is appointed missionary in charge of Central California district, and as I live within limits of said district I thought I would enter my plea in behalf of the few isolated saints of this place, as we are very desirous of ministerial labor being performed in our neighborhood, believing it will result in good to the cause, by both strengthening the saints and convincing others of the truthfulness of our message. Some are now almost persuaded, and I think if we could have more preaching soon they would be thoroughly convinced.

We have had no preaching of our faith since Bro. Parker was here in February, and we are getting hungry. Bro. Parker did a good work and gained friends, both to himself and the cause he so ably represented; and now if Bro. Williams will make it a point to visit us, we will be glad and will do the very best we can by him.

We likewise extend an invitation to Bro.

Griffiths to visit us before his time expires, but as he has such a large territory we can't expect him to stay long in any one place; but we do desire the honest in heart among our neighbors to have the privilege of understanding the gospel in its fullness; and for this reason we are willing to receive any servant the Lord sees fit to send.

We have a commodious school building 26 x 72 feet, which I think can be secured for services. If not, we have a smaller building—the one in which Bro. Parker held forth while here—that can be used. Should the brethren come the southern route, this will be a convenient stop in passing from Los Angeles to San Francisco by rail; and anyone wishing to find us can do so by dropping a card to George Ross, or J. W. Steele, Elgin, California, and they will be met at the Dos Palos depot. Will say for Bro. Parker's benefit that Mr. Blaney is still here and has been chosen pastor of the Christian Church.

Praying God's blessing to attend the preaching of his word throughout the land, I am as ever,

Your sister in Christ,

SARAH J. ROSS.

MILWAUKEE, Wis., May 25.

Editors Herald:—I wish some of our elders would come to Milwaukee to preach. There are five Utah elders here, preaching on the street, and they are telling the people that they are not the Mormons and do not practice polygamy. The people do believe them to a great extent; the papers speak well of them.

I wish some of our elders were here to show the people and tell them the difference between us. I spoke to the Utah elders and they told me they would come and see us and talk to me of the differences, and gave me some of their tracts. If any of our elders can come to Milwaukee I will do all I can to help them. I will give them a home and help in any way I can. I am not rich and have not a grand home, but will do the best I can for the gospel, which I love.

THE SLEEPING TIME AND MID-NIGHT CRY.

WHILE the bridegroom tarried, they all slumbered and slept. And at midnight there was a cry made, Behold, the bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet him.—Matt. 25: 4, 5, I. T.

This scripture has troubled the minds of some; they want to know when this sleeping time will come to all, and how saints after having obeyed the gospel, if living faithful, can be in this condition. For surely this cannot be literal, natural sleep, it must be spiritual sleep; and we want to know when this condition shall obtain, and when the midnight cry shall come, notifying all to prepare for the coming of the bridegroom.

And then, at that day, before the Son of Man comes, the kingdom of heaven shall be likened unto ten virgins, who took their lamps, and went forth to meet the bridegroom. And five of them were wise, and five of them were foolish. They that were foolish took their lamps and took no oil with them; but the wise took oil in their vessels with their lamps. While the bridegroom tarried, they all slumbered and slept. And at midnight there was a cry made, Behold, the bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet him. Then all those virgins arose, and trimmed their lamps. And the foolish said unto the wise, Give us of your oil; for our lamps are gone out. But the wise answered, saying, Lest there be not enough for us and you, go you rather to them that sell, and buy for yourselves. And while they went to buy, the bridegroom came; and they that were ready went in with him to the marriage; and the door was shut. Afterward came also the other virgins, saying, Lord, Lord, open unto us. But he answered and said, Verily I say unto you, You know me not. Watch therefore; for you know neither the day nor the hour wherein the Son of Man cometh.—Matt. 25: 1-12, I. T.

In considering this parable, we cannot take it in the order in which it stands in the book, because the call must of necessity be made before the preparation begins; and the preparation is made before the wise go in to the marriage. We will therefore consider the tarrying time and the call first.

Christ is the bridegroom, and this parable was given by him while on earth in his personal ministry. He was going away for a time to leave his disciples, with a promise to come again, as we learn from John 14: 2, 3:—

I go to prepare a place for you. And when I go I will prepare a place for you, and come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, ye may be also.

The tarrying time, then, must be while the bridegroom is gone away from the earth; and will be consummated when he returns to receive his bride. This seems sufficiently clear without multiplying evidence. While Christ has gone there was to come a time of darkness and trial. The evil one was to have great power, an apostasy was to occur, and darkness reign for a time.

The Jews were rejected because they rejected the Messiah; the kingdom was taken from them and given to the Gentiles. Paul says, when writing to the Gentiles:—

Well; because of unbelief they were broken off, and thou standest by faith. Be not high-minded, but fear; for if God spared not the natural branches, take heed lest he also spare not thee. Behold therefore the goodness and severity of God; on them which fell, severity; but toward thee, goodness, if thou continue in his goodness; otherwise thou also shalt be cut off.—Rom. 11: 20-22, I. T.

And that there would be a falling away from the original faith before Christ came again is positively asserted by Paul. He says:—

Let no man deceive you by any means; for there shall come a falling away first, and that man of sin be revealed, the son of perdition.—2 Thess. 2: 3, I. T.

Also in Revelation twelfth chapter it is clearly shown that the church would be driven into the wilderness, and remain there twelve hundred and sixty years. "The dragon, that old serpent," also called Satan, made war with her:—

And the woman fled into the wilderness, where she had a place prepared of God, that they should feed her there a thousand and two hundred and threescore years. And there was war in heaven; Michael and his angels fought against the dragon; and the dragon and his angels fought against Michael; and the dragon prevailed not against Michael, neither the child, nor the woman which was the church of God, who had been delivered of her pains, and brought forth the kingdom of God and his Christ.—Rev. 12: 5-7, I. T.

This shows quite clearly that the church was to finally succeed in bringing forth and establishing the kingdom of God. Although the organization as established by Christ and his former apostles might be broken up and the saints scattered, and the dragon seem to have dominion for a long time, we must not conclude from this that the dragon was to entirely prevail, for the Lord says "he prevailed not." God had prepared the place in the wilderness for his church, so the word says; and Christ had declared the gates of hell should not prevail against it. The church was to go into the wilderness for a specified length of time, then come out again.

The term wilderness here evidently means the same that it does in Doctrine and Covenants 85: 17, "in the wilderness, because you cannot see him."

Therefore, to the woman was given two wings of a great eagle, that she might flee into the wilderness, into her place [prepared of God], where she is nourished for a time, and times, and half a time, from the face of the serpent.—Rev. 12: 14, I. T.

Evidently the Lord preserved a people that was designated by him the church in the wilderness, and must be the same ones that were to be called out of Babylon, as stated in Revelation 18: 4:—

And I heard another voice from heaven, saying, Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues.

Evidently this was the same people referred to in Doctrine and Covenants 84: 3:—

Therefore, thus saith the Lord unto you, with whom the priesthood hath continued through the lineage of your fathers, for ye are lawful heirs, according to the flesh, and have been hid from the world with Christ in God: therefore your life and the priesthood hath remained, and must needs remain, through you and your lineage, until the restoration of all things spoken by the mouths of all the holy prophets since the world began.

Those people holding legal right to the priesthood (hid from the world with Christ in God) must be the church in the wilderness, or God's people in a disorganized condition. And when the appointed time came for the church to come out of the wilderness, God sent the angel flying "in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach . . . to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people;" to warn the world of the impending doom that awaits the wicked, and call out the people of God, that they might prepare for the coming of the bridegroom. Before the call was made, they all slumbered and slept, and this was the condition all were in when the gospel came in this generation to be preached as a witness. That all would be in a deep sleep when the gospel would be introduced is clear from Isaiah 29: 10:—

For, behold, the Lord hath poured out upon you the spirit of deep sleep. For, behold, ye have closed your eyes, and ye have rejected the prophets, and your rulers; and the seers hath he covered because of your iniquities.—I. T.

Now as the gospel is the power of God unto salvation, and the only means provided by which mankind can prepare to meet the Lord at his second coming and enter into the marriage feast, we conclude that the time when all slumbered and slept was while they were in spiritual Babylon, mixed up with the world. And now God sends the gospel and calls them out of the wilderness, and organizes his church. In Doctrine and Covenants 5:3 the Lord says this is "the beginning of the rising up, and the coming forth of my church out of the wilderness; clear as the moon and fair as the sun, and terrible as an army with banners." And again, section 32: 2:—

And verily, verily I say unto you, that this church have I established and called forth out of the wilderness; and even so will I gather mine elect from the four quarters of the earth, even as many as will believe in me, and hearken unto my voice.

Now as God's people are mixed up with the nations of the earth, in this deep spiritual sleep, representing the midnight, in the parable, they are to be called out to prepare to meet their Lord. That this is the true position is made clear in Doctrine and Covenants 108: 3-5:—

Send forth the elders of my church unto the nations which are afar off; unto the islands of the sea; send forth unto foreign lands; call upon all nations; firstly, upon the Gentiles, and then upon the Jews. And, behold, and lo, this shall be their cry, and the voice of the Lord unto all people: Go ye forth unto the land of Zion, that the borders of my people may be enlarged, and that her stakes may be strengthened, and that Zion may go forth unto the regions round about; yea, let the cry go forth among all people: Awake and arise and go forth to meet the Bridegroom. Behold, and lo, the Bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him. Prepare yourselves for the great day of the Lord. Watch, therefore, for ye know neither the day nor the hour. Let them, therefore, who are among the Gentiles, flee unto Zion. And let them who be of Judah, flee unto Jerusalem, unto the mountains of the Lord's house. Go ye out from among the nations, even from Babylon, from the midst of wickedness, which is spiritual Babylon. But verily thus saith the Lord, Let not your flight be in haste, but let all things be prepared before you; and he that goeth, let him not look back, lest sudden destruction shall come upon him. Hearken and hear O ye inhabitants of the earth. Listen, ye elders of my church together, and hear the voice of the Lord, for he calleth upon all men and he commandeth all men everywhere to repent; for, behold, the Lord God hath sent forth the angel, crying through the midst of heaven, saying: Prepare ye the way of the Lord, and make his paths strait, for the hour of his coming is nigh, when the Lamb shall stand upon Mount Zion, and with him a hundred and forty-four thousand, having his father's name written in their forehead: wherefore, prepare ye for the coming of the Bridegroom; go ye, go ye out to meet him.

This revelation and instruction was given to the elders in 1831, the next year after the church was organized, and shows conclusively that the call was to go to them while in Babylon, or in this deep spiritual sleep; and makes it clear what they were to come out of, and where they were to come to. And the language is the same as used in the parable in Matthew 25.

Awake and arise and go forth to meet the Bridegroom. Behold, and lo, the Bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him.

We now have found the tarrying time and the sleeping time. And in Doctrine and Covenants 34: 5 the Lord says of his elect,

For they will hear my voice, and shall see me, and shall not be asleep, and shall abide the day of my coming, for they shall be purified even as I am pure.

This makes it clear, that after the gospel call reaches the true child of God, he will not be asleep again, but will be watching and working; for in Matthew twenty-fifth chapter, after the Lord gives the first parable, he gives another explaining it altogether, and says:—

Now I will liken these things unto a parable. For it is like as a man traveling into a far country, who called his own servants, and delivered unto them his goods. And unto one he gave five talents, to another two, and to another one; to every man according to his several ability; and straightway went on his journey.—Verses 13-15, I. T.

This represents the Lord going away (the tarrying time).

Then he that had received the five talents, went and traded with the same; and gained other five talents. And likewise he who received two talents, he also gained other two. But he who had received one, went and digged in the earth and hid his lord's money. After a long time the lord of these servants cometh, and reckoneth with them.—Verses 16-19, I. T.

This represents the coming of the bridegroom.

Those that improve on the talents given represent the wise virgins, and receive their reward, or enter into the marriage feast; while he that did not improve on his talent, represents the foolish virgins that were rejected.

Section 45: 10, Doctrine and Covenants, shows that the separation of those virgins will occur at Christ's coming:—

And at that day when I shall come in my glory, shall the parable be fulfilled which I spake concerning the ten virgins.

But the call goes before, that they may prepare and be ready when he comes,

For they that are wise and have received the truth, and have taken the Holy Spirit for their guide, and have not been deceived, verily I say unto you, They shall not be hewn down and cast into the fire, but shall abide the day, and the earth shall be given unto them for an inheritance.

The personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth was not believed in nor expected by any of the churches, until it was preached by the elders of this church in this generation. But since the cry came from heaven to this church, and the elders were sent forth among the nations to tell them to awake and arise and prepare to meet the Bridegroom, others have accepted the idea, and many now believe in Christ's personal coming and reign on earth, and many think it is very near.

Therefore while the Bridegroom tarries, let us watch and pray and work; for the sleeping time for God's elect (if the gospel has reached them) is past, and only those who improve on the talents committed to them, will be able to abide the day, and enter into the marriage supper of the Lamb when the Bridegroom comes to receive his bride.

CO-OPERATION.

HAVING seen in a recent issue of your paper some ideas upon the above-named subject, I wish to cast my mite into the treasury of coöperation. First, let me state that it is not my intention to judge or condemn the brethren who have written on this subject, as evidently their purpose in so doing is highly commendable. One writer says: "It seems to me that it does not require much of an effort, on the part of any of us, to see that there is something wrong with our industrial system, when strong men cannot find employment sufficient to support their dear ones."

Now it seems to me that it does not require any greater effort on the part of any of us to see that there is something wrong with us (Latter Day Saints) as a people when numbers of our children are not clothed sufficiently well to attend our Sunday schools. What is our church but a great coöperative system, the most perfect and far-reaching in the world, if carried out according to the divine plan? If, then, we are not all enjoying the temporal blessings which should be ours as members of this most perfect organization, where is the fault? Is it in the system, or is it in us? We must acknowledge the fault is all our own. Not always the fault of the individual deprived of the blessings, but of us collectively. That the system is perfect, none can dispute. That provision is made in it for relieving the wants of the needy, we know. Shall we, living as we do in the last days, when the signs of the times tell us that our redemption draweth nigh as surely as the budding tree tells us that summer is near, make the awful mistake that some of God's people made in former ages? At one time God's people wanted a king that they might appear like the other nations of the world. Their pride would be satisfied with nothing but a king, notwithstanding God had promised to be their king. They got their wish. You know the story. I need not repeat it.

From reading the Holy Scriptures we find that the children of Israel could not, or would not, abide the gospel law which was "preached before" "unto Abraham," and so the law of Moses was added. Shall we then ask for a supplement to the "perfect law of liberty," which we as a people profess to have looked into? How dare we ask for new revelation to help us out of our present troubles, when our absolute refusal to obey the law already given has brought these troubles upon us?

One brother says: "The Bishop cannot help if he hasn't something to help with." Why has the Bishop nothing to help with? This same writer says: "A great many men work hard all their life, and yet are poor; not because they have not worked hard enough, but because they have been lacking in definite purpose or management." One brother says, "There are men of means," etc. Tell me, if you please, where in our law is the clause which gives a man a right to accumulate and possess "means," while his brother who has worked as hard or harder than he has is destitute of the plain comforts of life? Did the man endowed with the "definite purpose or management" have anything to do with forming his own intellect? "For who maketh thee to differ from another? and what hast thou that thou didst not receive?"

—1 Cor. 4:7. It is sometimes the case, even among Latter Day Saints, that the man with the "five talents" uses them to hoard up "means" which at the end of life he bequeaths to his children, who never worked for a penny of it, and who while enjoying the wordly pleasures which they can secure with it, often neglect their soul's salvation, and through this very "means" which the father has gathered, the souls of his children are lost. What will be his answer when called to account for the use he made of his Lord's money? Do not understand me to say that there are no wealthy men who are using their "means" rightly, but I fear that a great many fail to recognize the fact that they have been endowed with wisdom from on high for the express purpose of accumulating the "means" for carrying on this great work.

While some give generously and others bountifully, they do not seem to realize that every "mite" belongs to the Lord. This great coöperative system must be perfectly carried out in every detail if we are to receive the promised blessings. These men endowed with the wisdom, or, in our brother's words, "definite purpose or management" which enables them to accumulate riches, are just as essential to the carrying on of the work, and should feel just as responsible for the manner in which they use their gifts, as the men endowed with the ability to preach the word. "But now are they many members, yet but one body. And the eye cannot say unto the hand, I have no need of thee: nor again the head to the feet, I have no need of you. Nay, much more those members of the body, which seem to be more feeble, are necessary."

I heard one of our ministers say not long ago, "I like to see people dress as well as they can." Now in my estimation that is the very mainspring of our present calamity. The rich man dresses his wife and children as well as he can. He has paid his tithing, and made his generous freewill offerings, and is still able to dress his dear ones in the fashion of the world. The middle class man likes to see his wife and children looking as well as his neighbors, so he skimps his tithing and does not feel able to make any freewill offering. He lets his papers run another year without paying up, and dresses his dear ones in the fashion of the world. The poor man cannot by any dint of skimping in these "perilous times" dress his wife and children like the others, so he dresses himself and wife "as well as he can," and his children are left at home. I know a husband and wife who have three bright little boys aged nine, six, and four, and a little girl aged eight. The parents reside three miles from the branch of which they are members, and when going to church they usually leave the children at home. On one occasion, however, the children insisted on going along, and the parents agreed to let them go if they would promise to remain in the wagon some distance from the church during service. They promised.

The wagon was driven to a nice shade in the suburbs, and the little ones were left to play there while the father and mother walked on to attend social meeting at the church. The mother said afterward that she was "just scared to death" all the time during service for fear those children would tire of playing at the wagon and come walking into the church with their little bare feet and torn straw hats. And yet, kind reader, "of such is the kingdom of heaven." If a railway locomotive had run over them in their guileless, innocent play, and crushed out the little lives, their pure spirits would have flown right to the paradise of God; yet if they had walked into the church that day, who would have seen the bright eyes of innocence in the absence of ribbons, laces, shoes, etc.? Ah, dear saints, is it right? Are we living according to the plan?

God has said in his word, "Let" your adorning be not "that outward adorning of plaiting the hair, and of wearing of gold, or of putting on of apparel." And again: "Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world." And in latter-day revelation, which should be especially binding upon us, we are instructed to dress plainly and let our clothing be the workmanship of our own hands, and yet every year hundreds of dollars are poured into the lap of the goddess Fashion, to satisfy "the lust of the eyes," "the pride of life," while the Bishop has nothing with which to help the needy. Where is the remedy? Shall we appoint a day of fasting and prayer, and with one accord cry, "O Lord, this law which thou hast given us is not just to our liking. Please give us an amendment"? or shall we not rather follow after that charity which never faileth. Oh, my dear brother! you who have been endowed with the "definite purpose or management," will you not recognize the fact that you have been endowed and given that very work to do for the Lord? And you, wife or daughter of the man thus favored, will you not pause a moment and don the mantle of charity? Place yourself in the position of your less favored sister, and then say from your heart, "Dear Lord, if putting on of costly apparel makes my sister to offend, I will wear no costly apparel while the world stands."

Says one, "I never wear my best dresses to church lest I make my sisters feel badly." What do you have those best dresses for? Is there some place else where you go that you fear some one would point you out and say, "That lady in the plain dress is a Latter Day Saint. They are a peculiar people. They do not dress in swell style." When, O when, will Latter Day Saints everywhere and in every condition come to know again that they must be a peculiar people if they would please their Lord?

The poor in our church are not wanting help from the Bishop unless actually suffering from hunger or cold, or prostrated upon beds of affliction. What they want is simply that brotherly love which causes recognition of rights and feelings. When Jesus said, "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not; for of such is the kingdom of God," he did not add, "and see that they are dressed in the latest fashion." You who to-day are dressing your children in the fashion of the world are forbidding the poor man's children to come to Christ. Mothers, can you make the diamond eyes of childhood sparkle with more brilliance? Can you make the dimpled cheek more blooming, can you make the guileless heart more pure by heaping upon them the imported goods from the fashionable shops? Think on these things. Awake! trim your lamps and see that you have oil in your vessels, lest the midnight cry is heard and you be found not ready. Let us not think because we are not all officers in the church that we are useless members of the body. If we have a talent for performing a certain kind of temporal labor, believe that you have been endowed to do that kind of work, and let everything you do be done to the honor and glory of the Lord. In this great coöperative organization it is necessary to have men and women skilled in different kinds of workmanship. Let us not covet some other's talents. If he does not make the best use of them it will be his loss; but let us strive to make the best possible use of the gift that is in us, no matter how humble our station may be. Let us live our religion pure and undefiled. Let us keep ourselves unspotted from the world, and our God will not be slow to help in every time of need.

"Let us shake off the coals from our garments

And arise in the strength of the Lord."

Your sister humbly and devotedly in the work,

AN INTERESTING DISCOVERY.

THE following is an extract taken from the Sunday World-Herald, of Omaha, Nebraska, April 11, 1897:—

Doylestown, Pa., April 10.—An archaeological specimen has been presented to the University of Pennsylvania by the Bucks County Historical Society, which proves that the symbol of the cross was known and used in ancient America before the birth of Christ. The importance of the facts proven by this relic of ancient days was first made known by Henry C. Mercer, Curator of the section of American and Prehistoric Archaeology of the Museum of Science and Art of the university. The object which has demonstrated the interesting facts stated is a spindle whorl.

This whorl or weight used to give momentum to the spindle stick, a thin rod about a foot long pushed for an inch or more through an orifice in the center of the whorl. In discussing these facts, Professor Mercer said to the writer:—

"The thread material used in this spindle attached to a distaff held in the left hand ran to the spindle, which, being twirled on the knee and being left free to act, spun or wound the thread. These whorls prove a strange coincidence in the thread-making processes in the old and new worlds. Dr. Schliemann found several thousand whorls at Hissarlik, and, strange to say, many of them were decorated with the swastika, or bent armed cross. Others were marked with the ordinary cross. By the bent armed cross is meant a cross which resembles two letter Z's, one placed across the other just as if each was a single bar.

"Some of the Mexican spindle whorls are marked with crosses, but none show the design in its symbolic form so clearly as the specimen I brought to light the other day. It was recently obtained—the specimen—by J. W. Detweiler, of Bethlehem, Pennsylvania, from an ancient and probably pre-Columbian grave in the Rio Cauca Valley, in the republic of Colombia. Here the idea of cross symbolism in ancient America, rather than mere decoration by means of interesting lines, is well brought out by the eight smaller crosses between the arms of the central cross.

"To my mind the specimen shows: First, the cross symbol existed in ancient America before the coming of Christianity. Second, the cross symbol carved on a spindle whorl by ancient Americans in just the same manner as ancient Asiatics and Europeans had carved crosses on spindle whorls, before the birth of Christianity. Third, the identity of a peculiar process for spinning in the old and new worlds before the discovery of America by Columbus."

A study of the face of the whorl found in South America shows it to be of exceeding age. Its general style and workmanship make it plainly apparent that it is the result of the labor of the people who inhabited that part of South America, now known as Colombia, before the star of Bethlehem startled the shepherds. In some particulars it resembles in a great degree stone objects found in the monuments of the moundbuilders and also calls to mind certain carvings on implements of stone used by the Aztecs, Mexico's early settlers. Directly across the center, or rather around it, is a belt large on each side in point of width, narrowing down until in the center the longitudinal lines come close together. Above and below this belt are the crosses which show that they are not purely for ornament but possessed at one time a symbolic significance to the persons who carved them.

Archæological records in regard to the sign language of ancient peoples of both the eastern and western hemispheres show nothing existed so far as history knows in those early days in the way of a sign which corresponded to the cross. Therefore, it is not believed to have been a character of that method of writing which obtained in greater or less degree throughout the tribes of Indians of North and South America. The discovery calls to mind an earthen vase also in the museum of the University of Pennsylvania, found in a stone grave or mound near New Madrid, Missouri, several years ago by Horatio Rust.

This vase, the body of which was oval in form, bore upon the neck a series of perfect crosses, the design being a combination of the Roman and Greek crosses. The crosses on this vase, however, can hardly be called as symbolic in design as those on the whorl found in Colombia. The discovery of these crosses on different articles, all of which were made before Christ was born, in Mexico, the United States, South America and ancient Egypt show to the mind of the archæologist that while the cross is truly symbolic of Christianity, it, at the same time, was most assuredly a religious emblem before the Son of Man was ever heard of.

The question of the origin of the cross has been quietly argued for some time past, it being held that the discoveries previous to the revelations made by Professor Mercer indicated plainly that instead of the cross as a symbol being coincident with the birth of the Savior, it was held to denote sacred thought and belief during a period so long ago that the known history of mankind does not touch upon it. Professor Thomas Wilson; of the Smithsonian Institution, who has made this matter a study, finds ample evidence for the belief quoted, and declares it to be beyond question that the Christian symbol is really borrowed from the ancients.

The second curious fact which the Columbian relic demonstrates is the similarity in the process of spinning which obtained in both the old and new worlds nineteen hundred and more years ago. It shows beyond peradventure the fact that other discoveries have indicated that the primitive methods of weaving, of sewing, of writing, are all like unto each other, and indicate that the instincts of humanity, like that of the lower grades of animals of the same class, runs in a similar groove until civilization steps in with its numberless ramifications. The relic in the possession of the University of Pennsylvania, therefore, more than almost any other in existence, marks the link that binds forever the history of ancient and modern.

STELLA.

WATER BAPTISM, OR BIRTH OF WATER.

WHY was it said by Jesus, Ye must be born again, born of water, if it was (is) not essential, as many are claiming at the present time? Did the Christ, who said his Father gave him a commandment what he should say and what he should speak, and who, the prophet Isaiah (55: 4) has told us, was given for a witness, a leader, and a commander to the people, teach things that were not essential? I think not, and propose to give a few reasons, for what they are worth.

First, I find that he taught a natural law, and I think we are given quite plainly to understand that to be born the second time we must pass through the same element as at the first birth, and that all things, the earth included, had their origin in and were born of water. In Genesis 1: 9 we read: "And God said, Let the waters under the heaven be gather together unto one place, and let the dry land appear:

and it was so." Now according to this the earth came out of or was born of water, and had its new birth, was reborn, when it came forth from its baptism of water by the flood, and is now waiting its baptism of fire. (2 Peter 3: 6, 7.)

Again: "God said, Let the waters bring forth abundantly the moving creature that hath life, and fowl that may fly above the earth in the open firmament of heaven. And God created great whales, and every living creature . . . after his kind: and God saw that it was good."—Gen. 1: 20, 21. By this we learn that the waters brought these forth; that they were born, had life, through or by water. And there was not a man to till the ground until God had caused a mist to go up and water the whole face of the ground of which man was formed. (Gen. 2: 6, 7.) So it would seem that water was an essential element in his formation; and I think it may be truly said that the first man was born of water, and he was commanded to multiply, and from that day to this all men have been born of water, as everyone knows who knows anything about a birth. Therefore when the Savior told Nicodemus that he must be born again (John 3: 7), I think he meant that he must pass through or be born of the same element that he was the first time, for nothing else would constitute a new birth. Then his temple would be clean and pure as it was when he was born the first time. Then the Spirit can enter in and abide there, hence he is now in Christ a new creature; old things have passed away; all things have become new. (2 Cor. 5: 17.)

But all these outward ordinances must be performed by one whom God has authorized, or there will be no regeneration, no birth, no new life, no new creature. Old things will remain. This is the way it looks to me.

PASTORAL.

To coworkers and Saints dwelling in Nebraska and the Dakotas; Greeting:—The following thoughts and suggestions are offered with due respect, and I trust with becoming candor. To desiginedly annoy saints or sinners were unbecoming anyone, much more so one who claims to follow and represent Christ. But to make himself a cringing sycophant to curry favor, at the expense or sacrifice of principle or manhood, would be despicable. I have not so learned Christ.

Christ's method of adoption, adapted as it is to all ranks and conditions of mankind is just, true, and sublime; but not more so than the method of adjudication, the object of which is to vindicate the innocent and punish the guilty, is therefore a preventive to berating, accusing, and condemning anyone, by slander and backbiting. These facts are made patent to the God-fearing Bible student, and when understood and appreciated, will environ him against the above demoralizing practices, begetting within him a desire to adopt gospel principles as his polar star through this dark maze.

There are doubtless within the above realms officials officiating as elders, priests, teachers, deacons, district and branch presidents, and possibly I may have your indorsement in the statement that none of these are appointed to remain as ciphers, or become unduly officious, rather to be active and diligent according to the gifts and calling of God unto you, teaching according to the office appointed, for so says the law, as found in Doctrine and Covenants 38: 5.

On the hypothesis that God has placed the members as it has pleased him, as a preventive to schism in the body, the idea of every one teaching according to the office to which he has been appointed, is quite in harmony with the above, and with an understanding of it, it would seem there ought to be a continuous coöperation to prevent schism in the body, which I think may be said to be a sin.

But we learn from the latter-day revelations that subsequent to man's fall he became sensual, carnal, and devilish. Hence our religious warfare consists in subjugating these evil propensities, which involves a necessity for self-abnegation, examination, etc. And as if to meet an exigency the Lord has given a pattern in all things, which I herewith submit.

"And, behold, he that is faithful shall be made ruler over many things. And again, I will give unto you a pattern in all things, that ye may not be deceived, for Satan is abroad in the land, and he goeth forth deceiving the nations; wherefore he that prayeth whose spirit is contrite, the same is accepted of me, if he obey mine ordinances. He that speaketh, whose spirit is contrite, whose language is meek, and edifieth, the same is of God, if he obey mine ordinances. And again, he that trembleth under my power shall be made strong, and shall bring forth fruits of praise, and wisdom, according to the revelations and truths which I have given you."—D. C. 52: 4.

Hence the revelations and truths which God has given is the test of our doings. I therefore need not be deceived by any man, through feigned piety, nor none need thus to be deceived by me. We are quite apt to notice what we think faults in others, and have thought it wrong to have men's persons in admiration; but I think it would not injure us a bit to more closely examine self. It will matter but little what may be said about me when dead—nor I am not much concerned as to what may be said about me while I live; but am anxious that all shall know I'm approachable if complaints are to be offered.

I hardly think our work of subjugation can be thorough unless we are properly advised as to our spiritual latitude and longitude; and an occasional peep into the gospel mirror, or the perfect law, will help us in this matter.

Paul makes a visible distinction between the works of the flesh and the fruits of the spirit, and concedes the fact of being called unto liberty, but denied the right of using such liberty as an occasion to the flesh. Christ prayed not that the disciples might be taken out of the world, but he did pray that they might be kept from the evils of the world. Christ gave some stirring instruction to his disciples (Matt. 5: 13-16), from which I gather that they were to give practical demonstration of a godly rectitude in contradistinction to that evinced by the nonmembers of the church; and furthermore declared that those failing to hear the church, after due labor and space for repentance of course, were to be to the church "as a heathen man and a publican."

I do not cite these scriptures to induce you to be hasty, or create an over anxiety to find occasion against somebody; heaven forbid. Rather to stimulate you to diligence, coöperating together to teach, encourage, and inspire the saints to works of faith, etc., thus trying to prevent evil, so that in the event of it coming to the surface, despite your efforts, you may be the better prepared to meet and adjust it. Thus prove yourselves to be as the watchman spoken of by Ezekiel 33, or as the wise man who foreseeth the evil and hideth himself from it. We should be constantly striving to become more efficient in our several callings, discriminating between gospel promptness and slothfulness, avoiding extremes, finding and pursuing the golden mean. God's law is perfect, and if adopting it as a rule of action, our work will be perfect, for God's law does not lead us to imperfection.

I have no wish to be an alarmist or a croaker; but I do believe there has been too great a laxity in teaching and enforcing the law, so that it is made to appear to some that the church is a nursery for crime. I don't expect to please everybody; but we ought to be consistent within ourselves. No sober thinker would be stumbled because we labor with the erring one, pointing him to a higher plane as the Doctrine and Covenants 42: 23 imposes and demands; every word of which reflects a justice and love in dealing with the transgressor, that is seldom equaled and never surpassed in any church discipline; but if no effort is made when evidence of immoral conduct is manifest in the members what can an observer think but immorality is tolerated?

The "Thou shalt" and "Thou shalt not" cannot be construed to mean a warrant to do as we please, unless we please to refrain from what the law prohibits, and practice what it imposes. But is not the "Thou shalt" and "Thou shalt not" arbitrary? Most decidedly it is, in a sense; for no law, human or divine, can be formulated but what is arbitrary, it being mandatory and restrictive. Hence the verity; therefore the imperativeness of God's law, and the advocacy of absolute rights or absolute liberty is wide as the poles, therefore irreconcilable. Therefore the right of citizenship does not carry with it the right to enter the sacred precincts of God's divine economy to modify its reflected decrees, to priest nor people. And I have heard quibbling to reason away the verity of law that appeared to me sickly, sentimental, and disgusting; which caused me to resolve if I should ever think God's saving method other than a verity, I would leave it and spend the residue of my days in obscurity. So be or not be evincing a decision of character one way or the other.

The evidence of Christ submitting himself to the will and work of the Father, is indisputably set forth in the fact of an advocacy and practice of the written word from the inception to the termination of his ministerial work. And I recognize the right in no man to cry halt, when Christ has commanded a forward movement. Nor would I think myself authorized to meddle with branch or district matters that were in their incipency, or in a more advanced condition, toward a finality, to raise an influence against or for plaintiff or defendant, for I would think that pure meddlesomism a betrayal of ignorance or evincive of some wretched policy.

I have heard much said about a man's worth being decided according to the amount of money that jingles in his pocket, and I have pondered if the giving of gifts referred to in section 85 Doctrine and Covenants would ever tend in that direction. I was not an eavesdropper, nor an inquisitor; but heard something in that direction that appeared rather an uncertain sound, and I marveled and praised God for the possibility of every individual acquiring a gospel knowledge and a conception of individual responsibility.

To you the fact will appear on mature consideration that the success of the whole body is affected by the legitimate and continuous activity of the several intègral parts. The slothful not being counted worthy to stand. (D. C. 104: 44.)

The High Council of Kirtland, October 18, 1837, resolved to commence a reform by pruning the church of unruly members. On the 22d the church in Kirtland disfellowshipped twenty-two members, until satisfaction should be made, for uniting with the world in a dance. On the 23d the High Council resolved that unruly children should be reported to their parents, and in case the parents neglect to take suitable notice of it, the parents be reported to the church authorities. On the 29th nine more members were reported to the church for having taken part in the dance referred to, and eleven of the thirty made confession. Church History, v. 1, p. 110.

Whatever may be said of the above, it is clear to be seen that our predecessors saw danger in the saints walking in the counsel of the ungodly, standing in the way of sinners, and sitting in the seat of the scornful; so gave the dancing saints to understand that they would have to quit the dancehouse or the church. They did not seem to think that mercy would be evinced by tolerating the most effective practice to open the way for being inveigled in the meshes of demoralization and spiritual death; so like faithful watchmen, moved, seeking to conquer but to save.

I believe they were right. If any of our young and virtuous sisters have any dubiety as to the practice of dancing opening the way to ruin, let them consult some of the mothers in the church who are striving to raise the young sisters to a higher plane, and I believe they will receive such lessons that will induce them to shun the dancehouse as they would a rattlesnake. Think of one of our unsuspecting, confiding sisters being whirled around in the embrace of a whisky-drinker, or tobacco-chewer, or whoever may seek her hand in the accursed dancehouse, and whose fears would not be aroused for her safety. It is indeed a pity if there is any young sister in our church who cannot see the danger attendant in participating in dancing as practiced to-day, God help them.

It may perhaps be said that the action was irregular, in disfellowshipping, before labor, etc. We have only the general facts, not the details; but as it is, it is made to appear that the disfellowshipping was really suspension, which is not out of harmony with the teaching of that found in Doctrine and Covenants 46: 1. As the one trespassing is not to partake of the sacrament until a reconciliation is affected, what is this but suspension?

I would stop here, but wish to refer to the exigency confronting us, due to the erection of a college, not authoritatively or dictatorially, but rather a review of a church act, in which as a member of the body, I am interested. You are familiar with that known as common consent, the merits of which I shall not now essay to discuss. Under or by this method annual conferences have been sanctioned, for which there is no warrant in law. Reunions, so to speak, established here, there, and everywhere, by and through which thousands of dollars have been annually spent. And when the fact was announced that our book concern was trembling on the brink, I thought there would be suggestions for retrenchment; but alas, my anticipations went up pumpkins and came down squashes, for the advocacy for public gatherings was still frequent and persistent. And however ardent the desires for an increase of elders in the great harvest field, the desire for the gratification arising from public gatherings predominated.

And now, last but not least, common consent has built us a college. O yes; it's a church measure. And it is too late now to squirm and say we didn't need a college; it's here. And in my opinion while it would be bad enough to begin a united coöperation to liquidate the college debt, it were much worse not to do it, because the fair fame of the church is in jeopardy; and who is there claiming to be Latter Day Saints, that would not be willing to sacrifice to foster the fair fame of the church? It would not do to say we were not there to vote for the college, for we have recognized the method of representation, and our delegates vote for us, and the minority is supposed to submit to the will of the majority.

I think something ought to be done immediately for to stop the leakage caused by paying out big sums of money for interest. Forty thousand quarter dollars would aggregate ten thousand dollars, which would prove a lifter. It may be that some would be unable to give that much, but many could do more, so that it would aggregate this. This would prove a great event, and no one oppressed; and perhaps some bearing a heavy burden would be relieved.

Unless an exigency arises necessitating it, there will be no General Conference until 1900. In view of the present status of finances, I had flattered myself we should hear at least some suggestions of economical nature even to the discontinuance of some of the costly reunions, and the money thus spent, or part of it, go toward liquidating the college debt; so every possible energy be bent in this direction. But in a reunion notice I find a reminder of General Conference being two years apart, and therefore our reunions ought to be better attended; and a new feature to this reunion is added—"steamboat excursion." Can it be possible that the belief has obtained that an appeal has only to be made, and money will come pouring in from the body in any quantity at any time, for any purpose? Hardly. But if this impression has obtained, unless due caution is exercised, we may, when too late, learn a mistake has been made. Have we not already made a mistake? Are we not forbidden to get in debt? Was the college such an absolute necessity that debt contracting was a necessity? Were it so, as necessity knows no law, then are we justified? But was it so? If not, then there has been a mistake. Ought we not therefore to bring all our energies into requisition to deliver ourselves from present bondage? (D. C. 18:5; 64:6.) Joseph Smith, Sr., was commanded to let his family be small, as pertaining to those who did not belong to his family, which was tantamount to imposing economy. Christ imposes reckoning the cost before building; which presupposeth trouble of building if the cost thereof is not available, and as I believe prohibitive to contracting debt.

I have before stated that money is a requisite commodity, and as the Latter Day Saints have but a limited portion of the same, the strictest economy is most essential. An economist in times of stringency, lops off the luxuries—being satisfied with the necessities.

I hold these public gatherings are luxuries, and in view of the present crisis ought to be lopped off—and the necessities looked after. Well; perhaps we shall hear of this kind of legislation at the advertised reunion for the present season. In regard to the future we shall see. Had we unutilized thousands we might build institutes of learning, etc., but as the preaching of the gospel is or should be the first work, all else secondary.

These are the sentiments of my little self, with due deference to all concerned. If my position is erroneous I shall stand corrected on the production of evidence to substantiate the error.

My permanent address is No. 308 Oak Street, Council Bluffs, Iowa. The brethren of Southern Nebraska district will report to Bro. W. Peak; those in Northern Nebraska district to F. A. Smith. Reports should be sent in by the first day of the months of July, October, January, and March.

In bonds,

JAMES CAFFALL.

In report of Elder J. R. Lambert to the General Conference, the Eastern Iowa district (that is, the local ministers) is only credited with having preached "eleven" discourses and baptized "two." My attention has been called to this item, and I find upon a more careful examination of data submitted, that the local force of the district should be credited with thirty-five sermons and three baptisms. I misunderstood Bro. Peterson's report. The fault was partly mine and partly his. I am sorry the error occurred, but am glad my attention was called to it, so that I could correct at once, which I herewith do with pleasure.

WILLIAMS-BAYS DEBATE.—NO. 3.

MAY 11.—T. W. WILLIAMS' FIRST SPEECH.

This is the last speech upon this proposition in which I can bring in new matter. In the early church there were spiritual gifts. (Mark 16: 15-20.) Promises were made by Jesus Christ, and history records that they were realized wherever they preached. The gifts of the Holy Ghost were to be in the church, and Paul did not wish the saints to be ignorant concerning them. In order to be in harmony with the Bible the Church of Christ to-day must realize these spiritual experiences. As a church we do realize them.

The Bible states that the laying on of hands was used in ordaining (Acts 13: 1-3; 1 Tim. 4: 14), and for confirmation (Acts 19: 6; 8: 17; 9: 17, and 2 Tim. 1: 6). Resurrection and eternal judgment were taught as principles of the doctrine of Christ.

Pastors is from the original poimen, meaning shepherds. Pastors were in the church. (Acts 14: 23.) They ordained elders in every church. These were for pastors over those churches. (See also Titus 1: 5, and Acts 20: 28.) He says, "I never laid on hands to ordain anyone to the office of pastor." By the laying on of hands men were set apart and qualified to act in the office to which the Lord had called them, whether high priest, elder or priest, and then the local congregations selected them as their pastors. Bays won't deny but this is the scriptural way.

Bays said: "I am going to concede that apostasy abrogates all authority and refer to it later." He intends to refer to the Reorganization. I showed complete apostasy for the New Testament church (Acts 20: 28; Acts 19: 10; 2 Tim. 1: 5; Matt. 11: 12; Rev. 13: 7), then showed that it was to be restored. (Matt. 24: 14, and Rev. 14: 6; Acts 3: 19-21 and Eph. 1: 8-10.) Will Elder Bays deny there was need of a restoration? There was not a complete apostasy in 1844, but a disorganization, and there were those officials who retained their integrity and the authority remained with them. A reorganization was necessary, but a restoration was not.

Bays says I can't find the term "office of an apostle." Again I cite him to Romans 11: 13, and to Doctrines and Dogmas of Mormonism, page 91.

He says the Doctrine and Covenants of 1835 does not read like the one we now publish, that there are some changes and additions. So with the Brighamite Church they have the Doctrine and Covenants of 1835 with some additions. This is the difference between us and the Brighamites in this regard: The additions we have published with that published in 1835 are in harmony with those revelations previously published, and those the Brighamites have published are contradictory.

He urges that different names were applied to the church till 1838. That is true, that in 1838 the Lord gave the name by which the church should be called. (Church History vol. 2: 151.) "Revelation given at Far West, April 26, 1838, making known the will of God concerning the building up of this place and of the Lord's house, etc.

"Verily, thus saith the Lord unto you my servant Joseph Smith, Jr., and also my servant Sidney Rigdon, and also my servant Hyrum Smith, and your counselors, who are and shall be appointed hereafter; and also unto you my servant Edward Partridge, and his counselors; and also unto my faithful servants, who are of the High Council of my church in Zion (for thus it shall be called), and unto all the elders and people of my Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, scattered abroad in all the world; for thus shall my church be called in the last days, even the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints."

God is the Father of the church and he knew what to call it. On April 6, 1830, at the organization of the church we have the history that Oliver Cowdery was ordained "an elder of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints." (Times and Seasons, vol. 3, p. 943; also Church History, vol 1: 77); the Lord having previously instructed Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery concerning this ordination. (See Church History, vol. 1: 60.) "The word of the Lord came unto us in the chamber [in David Whitmer's house], commanding us that I should ordain Oliver Cowdery to be an elder in the Church of Jesus Christ, and that he also should ordain me to the same office."

In regard to apostles, Bays says every one sent is an apostle. Why were some who were sent by Christ called apostles and some called seventies (Luke 10: 1-17)? Bays says all that Jesus did to qualify those disciples to be apostles was to say to them "Follow me;" yet I find that Jesus both chose and ordained them. (John 15: 16.) He asks, "Did Jesus lay on hands to make apostles?" We do not claim that laying on of hands alone makes apostles. God calls certain ones to this office, and by his Spirit qualifies, and then by the laying on of hands they are set apart to act as apostles in the church. He admits that Matthias was an apostle, yet finds fault with us because of the manner the apostles were called in the latter days. (See Acts 1: 24.) The apostles prayed, they chose by direction of the Lord. (Church History, vol. 1: 541.) Those appointed of the Lord to select the Twelve, prayed, then they gave their choice. Their appointment is found in Doctrine and Covenants 16: 6. Christ followed a similar course. Before he chose the twelve apostles he prayed all night. (See Luke 6: 12, 13.) The apostles of the Reorganized Church were chosen in a similar manner. (See Saints' Herald, vol. 1, p. 55.) Apostles were to be of the highest rank, says Bays, but says they are not of highest rank in Reorganization. Doctrine and Covenants 17: 1, 2, and 19: 1 show they are first in the church. He says the patriarch is above the apostle. See Doctrine and Covenants 104: 11 and 122: 9. This shows their order to be contrary to what Bays says. The Presidency becomes such because of apostolic qualification. Bays says an apostle is a special witness of the resurrection. All witnesses of the resurrection were not apostles. Bays urges that to be an apostle they must have been with Christ from the beginning, yet admits that Paul was an apostle who had not been with Christ from the beginning, and yet thinks no one could be an apostle now because none now live who have been with Christ from the beginning. How are men made special witnesses for Christ according to the Bible? Luke 24: 49; Acts 1: 8; and Ephesians 4: 8 tell us plainly. And what is there to hinder one being an especial witness to-day as well as Paul was?

Bays says: "Find the passage where it says that Christ laid on hands to confirm a baptized believer." If he will put his finger on one passage that says Christ baptized for the remission of sins, then I will find in the same chapter and verse where he laid on hands to confirm and give the Holy Ghost.

Bays says that laying on of hands is only mentioned in the Book of Mormon once. If he had read Moroni 2, it would have shown that Moroni was writing that which was spoken and done by Christ when he appeared upon this land after his resurrection; and in Nephi 8: 10 the incident is recorded to which Moroni refers.

The apostles were sent out to represent God and Christ (John 20: 21); and the apostles practiced the laying on of hands for the giving of the Holy Ghost (Acts 8: 14-17; Heb. 6: 2; Acts 19: 6); and God approved of their act. Do you think God would approve in such a marked manner that which they were not sent out to teach and do? Peter and

John were sent down to Samaria by the apostles of Jesus Christ for the very purpose that they might lay hands upon those baptized that they might receive the Holy Ghost. Children were blessed by the laying on of hands (Matt. 19: 13-16), and they were to lay on hands on the sick that they might recover. (Mark 16: 19.)

He said I could not find when Joseph and Oliver were confirmed. I have found it, (Times and Seasons, vol. 3, pp. 944, 945; Church History, vol. 1: 77.) We don't argue that God cannot nor has not given the Holy Ghost without the laying on of hands, but we argue that it is a principle of the doctrine of Christ, and that those who refuse to abide therein hath not God. (2 John 1: 9.) Should he argue that because some received the Holy Ghost before the laying on of hands there is no need of the laying on of hands, then, by the same reasoning I will prove that because Cornelius received the Holy Ghost before baptism that baptism is not necessary.

Bays argues that Brigham Young was made a prophet by the laying on of hands. I demand the proof that he ever received the laying on of hands to ordain him a prophet. Show in the New Testament where anyone was ordained a prophet. If he can't do this and there is no existing evidence that anyone was ordained a prophet in the Reorganization, then it shows we are in harmony with the New Testament.

BAYS' FIRST SPEECH.

Elder Williams made the statement that Jesus did not call the laity disciples. I will now show him that he did. (John 6: 66, 67; 8: 30-32.)

Williams said apostasy destroyed all authority. He had to do that to prove his case. Did the church become extinct? Matthew 16: 18 says the gates of hell should not prevail against it—the church. It should read "The gates of hell shall overcome and destroy it," for them to make their case. But it don't read that way.

If the acts of the apostles proved what was the doctrine of the church, then when Paul circumcised Timothy it made circumcision a doctrine of the church, did it? Crack that little nut, Bro. Williams.

God set in the church apostles, prophets, etc.; but I challenge him to prove that they were a part of the church. The church would first have to exist before apostles could be set in it. A field would first have to exist before you could set an orchard in it.

He knows the weakness of his position. Now if apostasy destroys authority as a rule, what becomes of the church organized in 1830? It only lived fourteen years when it became so corrupt that it was rejected with their dead. If apostasy abrogates authority, then all the authority which Joseph Smith received was abrogated.

Williams says the man-child spoken of in Revelation 12 is the authority. Where was the man-child from 1844 to 1853? These people came out from the Strangites, the William Smithites, and other ites. They wrangled for two years, then Jason W. Briggs and Henry Deam got revelations saying they must organize. These apostate Strangites had a conference and renounced J. J. Strang. They then appointed three men to select apostles, following the old example. They were to choose seven apostles only. They were to leave five vacancies to let the Smiths in. They could not ordain above the office they held. High priests and seventy ordained an apostle. Joseph Smith was waited upon by a committee. He came to the church in 1860, and ordained to the Presidency by man-made authority. Where did you get your authority? Jason W. Briggs got ashamed of his baby—the Reorganization—and resigned and quit. In 1873 the program for calling apostles changed and Joseph Smith received a revelation designating who should be apostles, in violation to previous revelations and to interpretation of the Bible. [At this point Bays presented a chart showing the officials we claim are in the church, then said:]—

They confess that the Presidency are above the apostles, yet the Bible says apostles first. Show where Presidency is mentioned in the Bible. A patriarch was selected to bless the whole church. Yes, he gets pay for it. Show where a patriarch was in the church in New Testament times. Why don't you preach all you believe and tell about Presidency, patriarch, etc., being in the church. No, you don't do it. I did not do it when I was preaching for Latter Day Saints.

Find high priest as an officer of the New Testament Church. Either preach what you believe, or close your mouth and quit preaching a falsehood. Don't go about the country preaching one thing and believing another, and thus deceive the people. Bishopric is another triumvirate in the Latter Day Saints. Not such a bishopric in the Bible. They also have what they call a High Council—high tomfoolery. Such a system don't make good nonsense. Every branch is full of elders. They used to make them by the bushel. They have priests, but they are not found in the Bible as a part of the Bible. Elder Williams said: "If I am not in harmony with the Bible, then I will quit." I have shown him out of harmony in having more officials in his church than in New Testament church and in showing two officials—Prophets and Pastors—that is not in his church.

I read from Presidency and Priesthood page 49 where is shown a rule and pattern by which to try what professes to be true and of God. Bro. Williams will admit that this is a good rule. Two of the officials in the detector not in their church, and seven in their church not in the detector.

LAST SPEECH ON FIRST PROPOSITION.

May 11.—Bro. Williams' second speech. You will notice that Elder Bays, when we began this discussion, called me a gentleman, and one who was sincere in that represented; but now he will have it that I am a liar and deceiver.

It is Luke, not Christ, who speaks of the children of God as disciples in Luke 6:13. He charges that the men who were instrumental in establishing the Reorganization came out of polygamy, inferring that they were those who had believed in if not having practiced polygamy. This is not true. They were men who had never believed in or practiced polygamy, but had kept themselves free from such iniquity, remaining pure.

The church in a general sense, as an organization, was rejected; but it was not rejected in an individual sense.

He claims that the Reorganization began and ordinations performed without proper authority; but this is not true; for a command from God is sufficient authority, and they acted only as commanded of God.

He claims that Jason W. Briggs became ashamed of the church, but in his testimony in the Temple Lot suit, as found in the Abstract of Evidence, the opposite is shown. He maintained his integrity in the doctrines and authority of the church.

He says our religion is tomfoolery. This is not argument, and no proof is offered that it is such.

Summary of T. W. Williams on proposition 1.

Proposition. Is the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, organized and established through the instrumentality of Joseph Smith and his coworkers, the Church of God in fact, and in harmony with the Bible in doctrine and organization?

I have shown:—

1. That the church is Christ's. (Matthew 16: 18.)

2. That being his church, it must bear his name. (Ephesians 3: 14, 15; Romans 6: 3; Acts 4: 12; 1 Corinthians 16: 24; Philippians 2: 10, 11.) That the angel named him Jesus. Matthew 1: 4.)

3. That God's children were called to be saints, and were saints. (Rom. 11: 7; 1 Cor. 1: 2; 2 Cor. 1: 1; Eph. 1: 1; Phil. 1: 1; Col. 1: 2; Ps. 50: 5; 97: 10; Jude 1: 3.)

4. I have proved by Elder Bays' own admission that we are living in the latter days—hence "Latter Day Saints."

5. I have shown an apostasy. (Acts 2: 28; 19: 10; 2 Tim. 1: 5; Matt. 11: 12; Mark 1: 1; Rev. 2: 12-16, 20; 3: 1, 14, 7); showing disarrangement, necessitating a rearrangement or restoration.

6. We have shown the forecasting of scripture on the restoration. (Matt. 24: 14; Rev. 14: 6; Acts 3: 19-21; Eph. 1: 8-10.)

7. In the organization of the church I have shown that we are in harmony with the Bible, for Elder Bays admitted that I have proven that apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, teachers, deacons, etc., existed. (Eph. 4: 11-18; 1 Cor. 12: 28; Matt. 10: 1-5; Luke 6: 12, 13.)

8. I have shown that we were in harmony in the choosing of apostles: Christ choosing (Luke 6: 12, 13); choice of Matthias (Acts 1: 23, 24); choice of Twelve in first organization of Latter Day Saints church (Church History, vol 1, p. 541); choice of Twelve in Reorganization (Saints' Herald, vol. 1, p. 55).

9. I have shown that apostles were first in the church. (Eph. 4: 11; 1 Cor. 12: 28; D. C. 19: 1, p. 102.)

10. There were prophets in the church. (Acts 13: 1; Eph. 4: 11; 1 Cor. 12: 28.) We have prophets. D. C. 19: 1.) Evangelists in church. (Eph. 4: 11; 2 Tim. 4: 5.) We have them. (D. C. pp. 382: 2; 292: 17; 356: 8; Church History, vol. 2, p. 16.) Pastors, overseers, elders or priests. (Acts 20: 28; Eph. 4: 11; Acts 14: 23.) We have them. Teachers in church. (1 Cor. 12: 28; Eph. 4: 11, 12.) We have them. Deacons. (1 Tim. 3: 8.) We have them.

11. There were chief apostles. Math. 71:1-4; Math. 26:36-38; Gal. 2:9; "Presidency and Priesthood" pp. 60, 61.

12. High priests and priests. "Instructor, p. 87;" "Pres. and Priest." pp. 28, 29; Heb. 3:1-3; 8:3; Luke 1:5; John 1:6-8; "Bingham Church Antiquities, vol. 1, pp. 11, 16, 54; "Smith's Bible Dictionary," p. 1646.

13. As to doctrine, I have shown that we believe in God, in Christ, and in the Holy Ghost; the necessity of subscribing to the principles of the doctrine of Christ; viz.: Faith, repentance, baptisms, laying on of hands, resurrection of the dead, and eternal judgment.

14. We have shown that the signs are to follow them that believe. (Mark 16: 17-19), and that there are spiritual gifts which God gives to those who love him. (1 Cor. 12: 1-11.) This he has not tried to controvert.

Presented in Williams' last speech, May 11.

BAYS VS. BAYS.

1. Every one sent out by Christ as ministers were apostles.

2. No one can be an apostle except he be a personal witness of the resurrection and with Christ from the beginning.

3. Matthias was chosen, Barsabas was not, yet both had equal qualifications as above specified.

4. Paul, who was not a personal witness, was by revelation made an apostle. Yet no man can be an apostle to-day because not being with Christ from the beginning.

1. Bays insisted that the name of the church was "The Church of Christ," yet he admitted that "Jesus" was his name.

2. Confessed that the church should bear his name, yet objected to us because we used the term "Jesus Christ."

1. Denied that we could find where the church was called "The Church of Jesus Christ."

2. We found it in two places. (D. C. 103, 322, 336. See Preface.)

He misrepresented the minutes in saying that it only read "Church of Latter Day Saints." It was shown that it read otherwise. (Church History, vol. 1, page 573.)

He admitted that the term saint is applied to the followers of Christ; also said anybody had sense enough to know we were living in the latter days, and yet he finds fault because we use the term "Latter Day Saints."

Bays said: "Paul never employed the term 'disciples' and he was the only New Testament writer employing that term." (See Jude 1: 3, 14; Luke, Acts 9: 32; Ananias, Acts 9: 13. Bays-vs. the Bible.)

Bays said: "There is no such thing as an apostolic office;" yet, in his book, Doctrines and Dogmas, p. 91, he speaks of the apostolic office, and says they were representative officers. Bays says that he used that term only for "convenience."

Bays says, "No such office as Evangelist in the Latter Day Saints Church," then said that the office was created one year ago.

He again crosses himself by stating that A. H. Smith was placed in that office because it's always been in the Smith family. I suppose he said this for convenience.

Bays said that the Book of Mormon never says that the laying on of hands was for the reception of the Holy Ghost, and yet said it was found in Moroni, ch. 2. This was shown to be a gross misrepresentation from Nephi 2, compared with Moroni 2.

Bays said: "There was no record when Joseph and Oliver were ever confirmed by the laying on of hands." I proved from Church History that at the organization of the church all present were confirmed; and Joseph and Oliver were present.

Bays insisted that I must find in the Bible the exact statement on the name in order to prove my claims; and then turns around in an argument on the necessity of repentance and baptism, using Acts 2: 38 and says, "Of course they believed," although it is not found in so many words; then adds, "Why didn't the apostles mention the laying on of hands in this connection?"

Remember the nature of his proof on the negative of this proposition and see how well it applies to the next proposition.

Bays' last speech on first proposition.

I am reminded of the story of a lawyer advising his student in regard to what he should do to be successful in conducting a suit; saying that when he had not evidence to sustain his side of the case, "abuse the opposing attorney." If I have to resort to such tactics I am going to quit. I have referred to him and the leading representatives only incidentally.

The Book of Mormon refers to the laying on of hands only once, and then it was written four hundred and twenty years after Christ.

I said those were first members of the Reorganization, came out of Strangism. I honor them for so coming out of Strangism and William Smithism.

He claims there was purity in some of the individuals of the rejected church, then he wants to make you believe there was not a pure man or woman on the earth previous to the organization of the Latter Day Saints Church.

He says that Jason W. Briggs went out because of personal difficulty. That is a fabrication.

A strange position to take to say that a patriarch is an evangelist. An evangelist is a traveling minister, and a patriarch is a father of a family; so they are not the same.

I have shown that there are no "prophets" in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. I preached for the Latter Day Saints for twenty-seven years, and held several discussions, and now Williams says they got tired of me and did not want me to represent them any longer. The facts are I wrote a letter and resigned my ministry, and E. C. Briggs labored with me three days to get me to come back and represent them again. That's how they kicked me out.

I now present my summary:—

I have proven that the church represented by Williams is wrong in name. There is no warrant in the Bible for calling it the church of Jesus Christ; besides, it is contrary to the standard books of the church. The Book of Mormon invariably calls it the "Church of Christ," and Joseph Smith calls it the "Church of Latter Day Saints." The Title Page of Doctrine and Covenants, and also the Lectures of Faith calls the church the "Church of Latter Day Saints." Williams against Joseph Smith and the books.

Mark 16:18 says: "They shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover." But Williams says the recovery depends upon the faith of the one sick whether they recover or not. Jesus against Williams.

He has not proven by a single passage that an apostolic office was created.

He has not proven that there was in the church the apostolic or prophetic office. I proved that an apostle was an ambassador. He did not try to disprove it. I proved that an apostle must be with Christ from the beginning, and a witness of the resurrection. Latter Day Saint apostles are impossible, and it is ridiculous to claim they are apostles. An apostle is witness of the resurrection, and no man can be such a witness to-day. See! Apostles were set in the church, but I have proved that they were no part of the church, and they are not necessary to the work of the ministry.

The Reorganized Church is without authority, according to the argument of Williams. He said apostasy destroyed authority, and hence total apostasy destroys all the authority Joseph Smith possessed. In "Tullige's History" it is claimed there was a total apostasy. The apostles of the Reorganized Church were ordained by men not having authority. (Life of Joseph the Prophet, p. 600.) I said the authority was not present at the ordination of these apostles. In 1873 for the first time in the Reorganized Church were apostles called by revelation.

All churches of Latter Day Saints have the same organization, and teach the same doctrine. That which proves too much proves nothing.

Jesus neither practiced nor taught the laying on of hands. No apostle taught this practice as essential to salvation. Apostolic practice no more enjoins this ordinance as necessary than the practice of circumcision is enjoined because an apostle practiced circumcision on Timothy. If the church is to be in harmony with all the practices of the apostles, then they must acknowledge circumcision.

They have two triumvirates, The First Presidency and Bishopric. These are not mentioned in the Bible. They have omitted prophets, evangelist, and pastor, from the officers in their organization.

Conclusion:—They are wrong in doctrine, and radically wrong in organization; hence they are weighed in the balance and found wanting; and such an inscription should be nailed above the door of this fraud, that all who run may read.

REUNION NOTICES.

Southern Missouri district reunion is to be held at West Plains, July 29 to August 7. The district conference is also to convene at the same place; due notice of which will be given by the district president or secretary I suppose. Brethren and sisters, begin to prepare to come to the reunion when you get this notice. Bring your tents and covered wagons, and stay the whole time, and let us have a spiritual feast.

C. J. SPURLOCK, Sec.

CONFERENCE NOTICES.

Southern Nebraska district conference will meet in Nebraska City, June 26 and 27. Elder M. H. Forscutt has promised to give a lecture on the life work and martyrdom of Joseph and Hyrum Smith during this conference. Let all come who can, and enjoy a good season of spiritual refreshing. All branches please send reports not later than June 10, to Nebraska City, to

DIED.

HALL.—At his home in Ontario, California, Monday, May 16, Bro. Matthew Hall. He was born in Hexham, Northumberland, England, May 1, 1819. His early life was passed as a locomotive engineer in England. In January, 1851, he sailed for America, landing at New Orleans, March 10. From there he came to Council Bluffs, or Kaneshville as it was then known, living near there until 1853, when he came to Harrison County and settled in Douglas Township on the farm still owned by his estate and occupied by his grandson, Matthew McHenry. He was married March 25 to Miss Jane Bell at Newcastle, England, and to them was born one child. Mrs. Hall died in England in 1849, and a year afterward he was married to Elizabeth A. Boustead who died February 12, 1883. Afterwards he was married to Miss Ellen White, of Council Bluffs. In his religious belief he has long been a consistent Christian gentleman, a member of the Latter Day Saints Church. Owing to Mr. Hall's early resolution to never go in debt, he was always prosperous, and his dealings with men have always been above reproach and governed by the strictest integrity. Resolutions of respect were adopted by the Directors of the Woodbine, Iowa, Board of Directors, of which Bro. Hall was a member since 1891; signed by Pres. G. H. Kibler, cashier, Lewis Haas, and several of the directors.

LEIGHTON.—At Huron Centre, Michigan, May 16, 1898, after an illness of ten days caused from injuries received while playing at school, Charles John, son of Robert and Emma Leighton, aged seven years and six months. Funeral services at the Gore school-house, sermon by Bro. Thomas Rawson. We feel assured that he is at rest in the paradise of God.

WAYT.—At Glen Easton, West Virginia, April 29, 1898, Sr. Caroline Wayt. Born April 22, 1845, at Liberty, West Virginia; baptized August 2, 1877, by Elder James Craig.

HISTORY OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS. (Volumes 1 and 2 now ready.) Provided for by action of General Conference of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Written and compiled by President Joseph Smith and Apostle Heman C. Smith. Invaluable as a correct historical narrative, as a means of conversion to truth, and as a defensive weapon in meeting old and new objections urged against the latter-day work. It contains important documents connected with the establishment, growth, and internal and external affairs and progress of the church. The revelations given in this dispensation are inserted, in connection with accounts of the circumstances under which they were given. Biographical sketches, illustrations, complete indexes, sidenotes for ready reference, etc., are some of the features of the work. Volume 1 begins with the birth of Joseph Smith, the Prophet and Seer, in 1805, and narrates the circumstances of his calling and ministry, the rise of the church in 1830, and until the close of the year 1835. Volume 2 continues the history up to June 27, 1844, —to the assassination of Joseph and Hyrum Smith.

THE KEOKUK ROUTE.

K. & W. and D. M. & K. C. Railways.

The D. M. & K. C. Ry from Des Moines to Cainsville has been rebuilt and that portion south of Van Wert will be standard gauge on or before November 1, 1897.

There is no road in Southern Iowa or Northern Missouri which has more good locations for business men than on the line of the Keokuk Route. More stock of all kinds has been shipped over this line than any road of equal mileage in Iowa or Missouri. (See Missouri Surplus Map at our stations.) The freight and passenger service is not equalled by any road in the state, except the Missouri River trunk lines, with each of which we have union stations and direct connections.

Persons seeking farms can find property at tempting prices; men seeking business locations can find towns with ample territory and settlers to warrant good business. Additional passenger service will soon be given which will add to the growth of the towns.

The towns between Des Moines and Cainsville are particularly well located for business. Look them up. Write to the undersigned for additional information. See folder for map and lands.

IRREGULAR PRACTICES IN THE CHURCH.

IMPORTANT PRONOUNCEMENT BY THE PRIMATE.

The Archbishop of Canterbury presided yesterday over the meeting of the Upper House of Convocation of the Southern Province. There were twenty-one bishops present.

The Bishop of London presented a petition from Mr. Kensit setting forth:—

"That in a large number of the dioceses of this Province, and especially in the Metropolitan area, services other than those in the Book of Common Prayer are in constant use; that these services are mostly taken from the Roman Missal and other similar books belonging to the Church of Rome, and are alien to the principles of the Reformation. Your petitioner has been charged with violent conduct in attempting to stop by public protests these illegal services, and he therefore prays your honorable House to take such steps that shall cause these illegalities to cease, and thus relieve him from the painful duty he is compelled to perform."

The Archbishop said the petition was evidently one of the gravest importance, and it would be well for the bishops to take the opportunity of discussing the subject, and of publicly declaring what in their view was the right course to take in reference to recent troubles. It was very much to be regretted that Mr. Kensit, in the assertion of what he considered the law of the Church of England, should have taken a course which certainly did not tend to a more diligent and careful observance of that law. It was not in that way that it would be easy, or even possible, to bring about a harmonious acceptance of the law of the church, or of the authority of those who had to administer it. Quite independently of anything that Mr. Kensit and his friends might have done there was real reason for the bishops to take counsel together on this matter, and to endeavor by every means in their power to restrain a great deal that he could not too severely censure in those against whom Mr. Kensit had protested. The bishops were required to take some notice of it, and before long some notice would have been taken of it in that House. He had himself been carefully collecting evidence of various particulars which he had intended to submit to both Houses of Convocation. He had been making preparations for dealing with the whole matter, and much regretted that this interruption had occurred and that so much bitterness of feeling had been created, because he felt certain that the bishops would have been much better able to deal with the practices which were inconsistent with some of the formularies of the Church of England if there had not been these cases of serious and angry conflict. During the last three or four years he had noticed that there was a much greater willingness than there was before to admit the authority of the bishop in his diocese. When he first came to London he found that extreme men would listen to what the bishop said, but were not at all ready to admit that the bishop's opinion had more weight than their own. There was a very distinct change in that in the course of the last few years, and in several cases where he had objected to practices which appeared to him to be inconsistent with the Prayer Book he found that while those who were practicing them were quite unconvinced by anything that he said, they were quite prepared to submit to positive command, upon the ground that the responsibility would then be upon him, and not upon those who submitted.

There was a real desire to work with the bishops, and that was due a great deal to the fact that some years ago the bishops tacitly decided that no good was to be done by prosecutions, which only embittered the controversy. He did not mean that there was any formal agreement to that effect, or that there had been no cases in which the bishop would not have been fully justified in going into the court upon some ritual question. There was, however, a strong feeling that those prosecutions did not promote the harmony and efficiency of the church, and that it would be better for a little while to abstain from anything of the kind. That had had a very calming effect, and had convinced the clergy that the bishops had no desire to simply worry them. On the other hand, there was a real desire to conciliate their action, and not to be tyrannical or to interfere with small things. There was now a much greater readiness to submit to the episcopal views. There were those who had done many things which he much regretted in the way of innovations who would have been ready to give up such practices at once on being told that the bishop disapproved. There was a growing feeling that the Prayer Book should be adhered to in the letter and in the spirit, and that those who had been setting it aside sometimes in important points would not object to being told that they had no authority for what they were doing, and that what they were doing was inconsistent with the promise they had made. Many of the leaders in these things felt that their followers were going quite beyond the rule of the English Church, and were not justified in doing so. He believed that by quietly and firmly requiring the clergy to keep within the proper limits, the bishops might succeed in no very long time in restraining the extravagances which they had at present to deplore. A declaration in that House to the effect that they thought that some men were going outside the fair limits of what could be allowed in the Church of England would have a very considerable effect both upon the clergy and the laity. Sometimes those who stepped outside the proper limits of the Church of England were men devoted to their work, and examples of the deepest piety, and interference would stop what was really in some cases religious work of the best kind. The time, however, had come when the bishops ought to be prepared to deal with this matter, not in the way of prosecution—he hoped that was a long way off yet—but in the way of personal command, with the authority that belonged to them. Every clergyman had made a distinct promise that he would use certain prescribed forms and none other, and to remind men of their solemn promise, and to call upon them to observe it, was no tyranny whatever. In many cases if such action on the part of the bishops was taken there would be no longer any resistance to their authority, and gradually they would be able to make the clergy feel that no innovations which they could introduce could do sufficient good to overbalance the serious mischief that was done in shirking the authority of the rulers of the church, and by dividing the church into opposite parties bitterly opposed to one another. (General cheers.)

The Bishop of London said when he first came to the diocese of London he discovered that there were one or two features in the conduct of the service of some of the churches which awakened natural anxiety. There was the introduction of unauthorized services, and additions to or omissions from the communion service, which seemed to be made for the purpose of reading that service in the terms of the service of the Church of Rome; and further, there was the needless use of the Roman language. These three things seemed to be opposed to the principles of the Church of England, and to need restraint. The end was entirely indefinite, and they did not know in many cases what they were doing at all. The number of churches in which these things were done was comparatively small, and the number of clergy concerned comparatively few. He believed there was a possibility of a loyal union amongst the clergy on the basis of the Prayer Book as interpreted by the Bishop. The church of England, as the national church, was bound to be the guardian of all that experience in the past had shown to be the highest and strongest qualities of the English race, and that duty must not be frittered away by sensuous methods of worship. (Cheers.)

The Bishop of Winchester said there were undoubtedly services going on in some of our towns, in a few churches, which were alien services, and were, in fact, such services as brought about the Reformation. It was the duty of the Bishops to set their face against such services, for it was their absolute duty to protect parishioners in these important matters. Parish clergymen had a large elasticity allowed them, but that must not degenerate into license.

The Bishop of Rochester said the interest in this question was centered in London. He was convinced that the present was a hopeful time, and not one for lamentation. What had distressed the laity was the apparent apathy of the Bishops, but the church had passed through a time when a good deal of episcopal inaction was not only desirable but very useful. The time had come, however, when order must reign throughout the church, and that order must be of a spiritual kind.

The Bishop of Gloucester said he was persuaded that all churchmen were longing to hear the words of gentle but still firm command from the heads of the church.

The Bishop of Worcester remarked that beyond the question of ritual there was the far more important question of doctrine.

The Bishop of Hereford thought the expressions which had been used would have a great effect in restoring the confidence of the faithful laity.

The Bishop of Southwell said there was a very strong undermine of disloyalty to the church emanating from secret societies in the interests of the Church of Rome.

The Archbishop of Canterbury said he had little fear of the effect of these societies if they existed.

No resolution was passed and the subject dropped.

In consideration of the presentation of his memorial to Convocation by the Bishop of London, Mr. Kensit undertook that he would make no public protest in any church in London during the next two months, and that arrangements made for public protests in thirteen other dioceses should be similarly suspended.—Yorkshire Post, May 12, 1898.

The Catholic World Magazine for June has a finely illustrated article on "Annapolis, the Home and Training-School of our Navy." We wonder to how many people who know the story of the Boston Tea-party like the alphabet, the story of the much more dramatic burning of the Peggy Stewart, as well as her obnoxious cargo, will be quite a new chapter in history!

The American Monthly Review of Reviews for June is a well-illustrated "war number." The magazine opens with the editor's review of the first month's campaigning in our contest with Spain. This is followed by the detailed account of the struggle in the "Record of Current Events" and "Cartoon Comments" on the war, chiefly from foreign journals. The contributed articles include a character sketch of Admiral Dewey by Winston Churchill, two articles on the Philippines, and one on "Spain and the Caroline Islands" from a missionary point of view. The department of "Leading Articles of the Month" also deals with many questions growing out of the war. Altogether there are more than eighty pictures of subjects related to the present crisis.

SOMETHING NEW ABOUT THE BOOK OF MORMON.

THERE has been so much said and written about the Book of Mormon since its appearance among the literature of the times, that one would hardly think anything new or peculiar could be presented. But as the age is one of strange and peculiar surprises, and as here and there they crop out in our experiences, we give the latest concerning the book about which and against which so much has been said and written. It comes to us in the Pacific Transcript, a little paper published at Pacific, Missouri, and is to be found in the number of that paper for Friday, April 15, 1898, as an editorial, the author, C. L. Phifer, being the author and publisher. It is quite unique and will please many of our readers.

THE BOOK OF MORMON.

While the Christian Bible is the best book in the world, the sacred books of other religions, loved, believed in, treasured, and eagerly read by millions, are worthy our respectful attention. Indeed I am not sure but that the very prestige they have gained stamps them as among the world's greatest books, and that for this reason a man who aspires to read the best should peruse them even before he finds place for many classics that have pleased the living but never been pillows for the dying head. For my part, individually, I have for years considered it a privilege to read the Bible of any people. I have read several; I have been converted to none; yet in every one I have found much to admire.

The last one I have read is the American Bible, the Book of Mormon. As with all the others, it has not converted me, but I find good in it. I began the perusal with all the popular misconceptions concerning it. I ended with the feeling that it is worthy a place in any scholar's library. If it sanctions polygamy, I didn't notice it. If it is impure in tone or teaching or the work of an ignoramus, then I am unable to read a book understandingly.

The author is not a fool. If he is a knave he cleverly masks himself. His style never varies from that of the pious oriental. Sometimes it is tiresome, but it never betrays nineteenth century manner. The claim that the work was translated from ancient plates is not betrayed by any literary lapse in the unlettered author. Smith has produced a remarkable work, to say the least. Unbelievers in its divinity might well class it as the greatest American novel, for it deserves the term. The romance of it is complete. As a story composed of many stories, it is plausible and takes rank along with biblical and profane history. It easily excels, in this regard, the Koran, the Zend, and the Vedas, though the legendary matter of commentators on the Koran approach and perhaps excel, not the continuity of the story, but the story in detail.

But in teaching, in doctrine, the author of the Book of Mormon is sadly lacking. He has enunciated nothing new. For the most part his teaching is copied word for word from the Bible, "here a little and there a little." Siddartha and Zoroaster plunged boldly into the sea of life's perplexities, and each brought up his own pearls, which he strung into a necklace of beautiful philosophy. Neither is like anything else in the world. Confucius and Loo Tsai found new stones, and polished them, and cut new sides to them, but the stones are not exceptionally rare. Socrates talks in language of to-day, only with infinite skill, and succeeds, mainly, in proving that his antagonist has muddled his own argument. Mohammed borrows from the Jews' Bible, but he doesn't hesitate to add to it or alter it. Joe Smith alone has no message, dare not controvert or show us a new side of things, and cannot alter or add one line or one doctrine, though he pretends to give an addition to the Bible.

Indeed, it seems to me Smith's original idea must have been to write a religious novel—and he wrote it, a great one; that he was too simply devout to add anything to the Bible; and that the way in which his book was received, led him, with his idling disposition, into the claims he afterward made.

The Book of Mormon is one half larger than the New Testament. It contains thirteen "books," each one purporting to have been written by an ancient and handed down from antiquity, being finally engraved on brass plates and hidden until at the right time they were to be found. Smith found them, and by miraculous aid translated them. In doing so he used a bright stone, and seems to have anticipated the modern fad of crystal gazing, which is now used for the seeing of spirits. The various books in the Book of Mormon are as follows: First and Second Nephi, Jacob, Enos, Jarom, Omni, Words of Mormon, Alma, Helaman, Nephi, Book of Mormon, Ether, and Moroni.

A family of Israelites in the days of Zedekiah leaves Canaan, wanders in the wilderness, and after many adventures build a boat and put to sea. They finally reach the promised land, which proves to be America. A long history is given of them here.

A family at the time of the dispersion of mankind from the tower of babel wandered westward, and after appropriate adventures settled in America.

These peoples built cities, grew rich, waxed wicked, had prophets, fought battles, witnessed miracles, and had a generally interesting history covering many centuries.

The coming of Christ is prophesied. At the hour of the crucifixion there were signs and wonders of the most startling nature.

After the crucifixion and the resurrection of Christ, between those events and his final ascension, he appears, amid signs and wonders, to his people in America, where he teaches, heals and selects his disciples, much as he did in Palestine—finally ascending on high.

Scattered throughout the work are numerous prophecies and precepts, but as already indicated they bear a close resemblance to scriptural words. There is a similarity of style throughout the book, and not the marked contrast there is between Paul and Isaiah, between David and Luke.

GRACELAND COLLEGE COMMENCEMENT.

THE first annual commencement exercises of Graceland College will be held at Lamoni, Iowa, June 10-14, next, at the college chapel and in the brick church—the saints' church—under the auspices of the faculty and the college boards.

Much local interest is manifested in the coming exercises, as showing, to some extent, the work of the college force and students for the closing year. Interest in the general results of the year's work is also as widely indicated as the desire for the growth and success of the institution prevails, and which we trust is rapidly increasing in behalf of this first temple of secular education erected by the church.

The graduating class is necessarily small, owing to the recent date of opening of Graceland. A yearly increase of students completing the course may be looked for; and we trust the increase in number will equal the just expectations of those who toil and otherwise strive for the abundant success of the institution.

The following summary of the program is as full as we are able to announce to date. Those desiring copies of the regular completed program should address Prof. J. T. Pence, Acting President, at Lamoni, Iowa, who will take pleasure in forwarding to those desiring them.

A large attendance of the friends of Graceland is desired:—

- 1.—Exercises of Literary Society; Friday eve., June 10, eight o'clock; College Chapel.
- 2.—Elocution and Physical Culture; Saturday eve., June 11, eight o'clock; Brick Church.
- 3.—Baccalaureate Sermon; President Joseph Smith; Sunday morning, eleven o'clock; Brick Church.
- 4.—Exercises of Musical Department; Monday eve., June 13, eight o'clock; Brick Church.
- 5.—Junior Oratorical Contest; Tuesday eve., eight o'clock; Brick Church.
- 6.—Commencement; Wednesday morning; ten o'clock; Brick Church.

DECORATION DAY AT LAMONI.

LAMONI distinguished itself in an exhibition of the patriotic spirit on Decoration Day. The public schools under the charge of Principal G. N. Briggs and his corps of teachers, rendered a program of drills, music, recitations, and other exercises in keeping with the character of the day. These exercises included an address by Prof. J. T. Pence, Acting President of Graceland College, and were held at the brick church, where a large audience was present to witness the program and to join in the march thence to the cemetery.

The procession formed at 1:30 p. m., in the business center of the city. It was composed of the I. O. O. F. band, the local post of the G. A. R., local lodges of the Odd Fellows and Modern Woodmen of America, followed by the school children and attended by citizens. The route of march was to the brick church to witness the exercises, all going thence to Rose Hill Cemetery, where the graves of the soldiers and others were decorated, with the usual formal and informal ceremonies.

Altogether the day was a notable one. The weather was unusually clear, pleasant, and bracing, and the spirit of the affair entire was of a high order of patriotism and general fraternity in keeping with the occasion.

Each feature of the exercises was excellent, but the school children deserve especial recognition of their drills and general esprit de corps. They furnished one of the truest interpretations of American patriotism it has ever been our lot to see and realize. Success to our public schools and to the spirit of universal emancipation and progress which they foster and diffuse at home and abroad.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

SEDALIA, Ky., May 1.

Editors Herald:—In your issue for April 27, in answering "young sister's question," "Is dancing a crime for which a young member can be suspended?" your answer is, "Every branch and district of the church may enact such rules and regulations as may be considered best calculated to establish and maintain the good order of its respective organization, and conserve the good of the whole church." And in the light of this fact you answer, "Yes, . . . provided local regulations have so been adopted," etc.

I have in answer to the same question said, "No;" and as I desire to be in harmony with the church, I would like to know if the word "suspended" means cut off? And if so, does a local organization have power to cut members off for causes that the general church has never taken action on?

For my own part I do not believe that any local organization can legislate in such matters. God alone can state the terms upon which men and women can come in or go out of the church.

If you say they may suspend them from fellowship in their branch, it will not help the matter; for if they are not worthy of fellowship in one branch, they are not in another.

Please explain and confer a favor on

J. C. CLAPP.

We have always supposed and have so taught that branches and districts may regulate their own domestic affairs in their own way, with deference only to the general laws given to the church and accepted by all as the rules of faith and practice. And we do know that local organizations do enact rules to govern their members and enforce them by penalties more or less severe, including the suspending from church privileges and "cutting off," as a withdrawal from the fellowship of an expelled member is sometimes called.

We do not care to discuss the fine-drawn difference between "suspension" and "cutting off," as it seems profitless to us. The 112th section, paragraph 10, of Doctrine and Covenants, declares that the church in dealing with members for infraction of church laws "can only excommunicate them from their society and withdraw from their fellowship."

Some branches and districts have declared by vote that they will not ordain to office, or sustain in branch or district office anyone using tobacco or strong drink; yet the church has not taken action on this nor does the law make such a provision.

The Quorum of Twelve will not recommend, or appoint to a mission anyone who is in the habit of using strong drink, or tobacco; yet the church had taken no such action prior to April, 1898, nor is there explicit instructions to this effect from the Lord.

We were not deciding upon the rightfulness or wrongfulness of the act of saltatory motion, commonly called dancing, as we could not point to the law making it a crime, nor to the act of the church by which it has been named as a crime; but we could state what a branch or district could do, and in some instances has done.

We are quite willing that the brother should hold and enjoy his opinion as to what a local organization can or cannot do; we state only what has come under our observation.

SMITHLAND, Iowa, May 23.

Editors Herald:—What is meant by, No change in the "consecrations for Independence Temple"? Is there a fund to receive donations or consecrations?

As appear in minutes of General Conference for 1898, page 95, seventh line from top.

Respectfully, your brother,

F. E. COHRT.

Consecrations for Independence Temple fund have nothing to do with Temple Lot suit; but consist of funds contributed by brethren for temple purposes.

HIGH SCHOOL COMMENCEMENT AT LAMONI.

LAMONI with her public schools, college, church interests, religious and secular press, has become an educational center; and as such has been and is busy with the rendering of public educational programs during the present season of summer celebrations and commencement exercises.

Not the least among the public occasions held of late were the graduating exercises of the high school, at the brick church, on Friday, the 3d inst. The class numbered nine; two girls and seven boys. The program was an excellent one throughout and was well rendered. The exercises were in charge of Prof. G. N. Briggs, superintendent of schools. The church was artistically decorated with floral and other devices, in keeping with the season and the occasion. A large and appreciative audience greeted the graduates, each of whom in his turn bore well his part, receiving from the Board of Education a diploma as having finished the high school course.

The program is given herewith:—

PROGRAM.

 Presentation of Diplomas, R. S. Salyards.
 Music, Quartet.
 Benediction, Dr. J. H. Hansen.

THEOLOGICAL.

THE action of the Presbyterian General Assembly, at Winona, Indiana, in its late sessions is thus reported by a secular journal, the Chicago Tribune, in its issue for May 29, which we append for the information of our readers. In thus republishing the Tribune article, it will be understood that neither Dr. McGiffert's views nor those of his opponents are indorsed by the HERALD. The discriminating reader will note the trend of both extremes in the controversy and be able to distinguish between them and the true biblical status of the matters involved:—

THE CASE OF DR. M'GIFFERT.

Evidently heresy hunting is less in favor with the Presbyterian General Assembly than it was before the cases of Professor Briggs and Professor Smith had appeared.

The attitude of the present assembly has been conciliatory, and the action taken on Dr. McGiffert, of Union Theological Seminary, while in the end it will probably amount to expulsion, has been milder than was to be expected. The church is on the defensive rather than on the aggressive, as before. The cumulative signs of the last few years have not been without their lesson to the ultra-conservatives. The whole matter was put into a nutshell by the Rev. Sheldon Jackson when he said: "We cannot afford to destroy our church."

The moderate views represented by Dr. Jackson prevailed by an overwhelming majority in the assembly. The report made by his committee was accepted with scarcely a dozen dissenting votes among the 600 commissioners of which the assembly is composed. This report steers between the two extremes. It censures Dr. McGiffert's "History of the Apostolic Age" as heretical, but it refrains from directly attacking the author, further than by counseling him either to reconsider his views or to withdraw from the Presbyterian ministry. This action, to be sure, is more than severe enough, but the spirit in which it is done is far different from that of the memorial of the Pittsburg Presbytery which led to the action, and which denounced the book as "a flagrant and ominous scandal." There is a distinct desire for peace, not war.

The same conciliatory tendency is also seen in the quiet dropping of the Princeton Inn affair. The refusal of President Patton and other Princeton professors to attend the assembly was too ominous a sign to be ignored, so the wise peace diplomats in the church decided not to further alienate the great Presbyterian institution by censuring it on a detail of morals which it was entitled to settle as local conditions dictated. They contented themselves with the diplomatic observation that "Princeton's morals were safe in the keeping of her own officers"—which is undoubtedly as true as it is politic.

No portion of the church is more weary of heresy hunting than the New York Presbytery. It has had its fill of that sort of thing in the previous cases, and when a minority report threatened to repeat history by referring the McGiffert case to the New York body the commissioners from that presbytery metaphorically got on their knees and implored: "Whatever else you do, do not send the case back to New York." So the case was left hanging in the air for a year, with the burden of action thrown on the supposed offender's shoulders.

It is not likely that Dr. McGiffert will recant even to the extent that Galileo did before he muttered under his breath: "The world does move, for all that." Not being under the cruel necessity of going through a mock recantation, Dr. McGiffert will probably do the other thing and leave the Presbyterian ministry. There are plenty of other churches in which he can work and worship without having to narrow his historical methods to the rule and square of the Westminster Confession. If the body to which he belongs insists on that style of history it is entirely within its right in asking him to get out, and he should not ask to stay. Even the theological world is a wide one in these days, and a natural process of growth and decay will show in good time whether the old idea of Biblical interpretation or the later and more rational one is to triumph.

In the meantime it is pleasing to note that peace and harmony are more sought after than heretical scalps. The Presbyterian Church is too sturdy and sterling an element in the nation to be seen with equanimity weakening itself by a belligerent ultra-conservatism.

The action of the Presbytery of New York in erasing the name of Dr. Briggs from its roll, was approved.

Dr. Briggs, after identifying himself with the Protestant Episcopal Church, has been ordained among its ministry:—

New York, May 27.—Professor Charles Augustus Briggs, D. D., of the faculty of the Union Theological Seminary, was ordained as a deacon in the Protestant Episcopal Church to-day. The ceremony was performed by the Rt.-Rev. Henry C. Potter, D. D., Bishop of New York, in Grace Church. Only a small number of clergy and the family of Dr. Briggs were present at the service.

It was shortly before Easter that Dr. Briggs was received into the Episcopal communion having determined to leave the Presbyterian denomination, in the ministry of which he had been a distinguished figure.

There were present at the church the Rev. Dr. Huntington, rector; the Rev. Dr. George F. Nelson, the Reverends Bishop, Perry, Van Rensselaer, Bailey, and Johnson, of Grace Church staff, and the Rev. Dr. Perkins.

Dr. Briggs was not the only candidate for ordination. He was joined by the Rev. Charles H. Snedeker, formerly a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church.

From the Chicago Tribune of June 1:—

German Baptists in annual conference at Burlington Park yesterday decided that no divorced person should be admitted to membership if he or she had remarried during the life of the first spouse, unless the divorce had been obtained on scriptural grounds. The poke bonnets and plain dresses of the women were ordered continued as the approved costume, and a ban was laid on gold, even in teeth and spectacle frames, on neckties, and on tobacco, though laymen were not strictly prohibited from using the weed.

HERE IS AN EXAMPLE.

A MISS REASOR, a student of a high school in Illinois, graduates this summer, taking first honors easily. But what is remarkable in her school career is that she graduates at nineteen, after a school experience of thirteen years, during the entire term of which she had not once been absent, or tardy. Can you scholars of the saints emulate that record?

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

BRO. ALBERT T. DAVIS, formerly of Pittsburg, Kansas, writes from Carthage, Missouri, May 28:—

Please forward the Herald hereafter to Fort McPherson, Georgia, as I have joined the regular army and will be sent there soon. The Herald is a source of great joy and comfort to me. Pray for me. May God bless the church.

Bro. C. A. Parkin, San Francisco, California, May 30:—

Bro. Fred B. Blair preached for us morning and evening and gave perfect satisfaction to all who heard him. I am proud of such young men to teach and defend this latter-day work. God bless and aid them, as I know he will.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

By a copy of the Perry (Indiana) County Sunday school association program, sent us by Bro. James M. Baggerly, we notice that the association meets at Bristow, Indiana, June 4 and 5, for business. One Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints church in Tobin Township is reported. Bro. James M. Baggerly is down for the reading of a paper, "What is the cause of indifference to Sunday schools among the people?" at 3:35 p. m. Sunday afternoon. Success to Bro. James.

Bro. J. H. Reynolds, No. 102 Belmont Street, Seattle, Washington, formerly a member of the Armstrong branch, Kansas City, Kansas, writes for the HERALD, for tracts, etc., that he may keep informed and up in line with church progress, and interest friends and strangers in the cause. He desires to meet any of the church located in Seattle and near by.

Query: Should a new convert have greater interest in church work than one long connected with the body? If the recent convert surpasses the older or longer baptized one, is it not an indication that the latter has failed to "grow in grace?" A true and lasting growth is a constant growth, in harmony with the law of the Spirit of life. Evidences of spiritual decadence and death are seen in him who does not grow.

Bro. W. O. Wetherbee, formerly of Clayton, Illinois, is removing to Los Angeles, California, and desires to hear from some of our people in that city. He requests that some write him, addressing to that point.

The State University of Iowa has issued an excellent program of commencement exercises, which cover the week from June 2-9 at Iowa City. We acknowledge receipt of program which includes an invitation to be present, from the Regents and Faculty.

Bro. Heman C. Smith has sent us a copy of the Western Mail, of Friday, May 20, published at Cardiff, Wales. The issue is a veritable Gladstone memorial number, being devoted almost entirely to an account of the life and services of the illustrious English commoner, the Grand Old Man. Eulogies from the pens of men eminent in all the leading avenues of life at home and abroad, bear tribute to the memory of Gladstone, and voice the sense of great loss realized by the masses of the people. The Leeds Mercury and Manchester Chronicle, of May 19, also sent us, contain biographical sketches of Mr. Gladstone's career. His life and work have been great for good. The spontaneous tributes of respect to his memory and the manifestations of deep feeling caused by his death, on the part of his countrymen and in America and other lands, mark the widespread character of his influence and the stable character of the impression of his work upon the heart and mind of the civilized world.

Bro. George Barrett, of Pittsburg, sends us a clipping from the New Castle, Pennsylvania, Courant-Guardian, of the 23d, which speaks in terms of praise of the patriotism and eloquence of Bro. Ephraim Thomas, who officiated at a flag raising on the 21st. "Mr. Thomas in an eloquent manner voiced the sentiments of his fellow workmen. Mr. Thomas is an able speaker and his speech was another evidence of the intelligence and feeling and patriotic principles which are embodied in the workingman," says the Guardian.

It has been said that there are a thousand good talkers to one good thinker; and that to reverse the order would assist to bring in the looked-for millennium. He who thinks correctly develops ability to reach correct conclusions, and acting in harmony with truth becomes an additional force for good in the moral and general family of man.

"It is a strange fact that injuries to the tongue, whether a man or animal, heal more quickly than those of any other part of the system." Injuries from or caused by the tongue are not so easily or readily repaired or healed. Its possibilities for evildoing are ably stated in James, chapter 3.

"Children's Day" was duly observed by the Star of Bethlehem Sunday School and the branch, of Lamoni, on Sunday, the 5th inst. Heavy rains during the night and morning interfered to some extent with the attendance and general enjoyment, but those permitted to be present appreciated the occasion with its exercises. The floral and general decorations were superb, bearing evidence of the taste and skill of those arranging them.

Bro. D. W. Wight was at Provo, Utah, on the 3d; had been doing tent work until stormed out on the 2d. He reported snow up the mountains, with sleet and cold in the lower altitudes.

Thanks to the prompt action of Bro. J. W. Wight we have a report of the Wight-Braden discussion for the HERALD readers. This is as it should be. The HERALD wants the news and desires it promptly—on time.

Original Poetry.

"WHISPERS."

Not all of our dear Father's blessings,
Are found in the casket of health;
For, in affliction, when pain is distressing,
Sometimes his Spirit—gently caressing—
Bestoweth rare jewels of wealth
On those who ne'er knew the pleasure
Of health in its vigor and prime;
Or like a dream now seemeth the measure,
Once they enjoyed of this heavenly treasure,
And showeth them beauties sublime.

Thus in his favor they seem to draw near
That wonderful haven of rest;
They gaze on its beauties, its music they hear

Without the assistance of eyesight and ear,
And sweetly recline on his breast.
Magnificent wonders roll past,
In matchless and endless parade;
Each by the others in beauty surpassed,
By reason of fashion in which they were cast;

Yet each for a purpose was made.

Translucent scenes that fall on the gaze,
And order so wondrous and quaint,
With lovely cantatas that constantly raise,
All over that land in worship and praise,
None but the All-Father can paint,

From him to all nations is sent
This message to humble and grand;
Saying: "God is God, to fullest intent,
And all must obey him with cheerful consent,
Who'd dwell in this beautiful land.

"Intelligence was not created or made;
And, it neither indeed can be.
It always existed; but measure, or grade,
By which is beheld each varying shade,
Was made by your Father's decree.

Measures are spirits that he made,
Of matter chaotic in space;
Adjusted them all so none could evade,
Beholding his power in wisdom displayed,
Receiving a portion of grace.

"Happiness spread like the sparkling dew,
For all spirits with God did dwell;
In filial devotion they worshiped so true,
In this world of bliss that was hidden from view,

When the hosts of Lucifer fell.
Ere that awful event took place,
Redemption's plan had been given,
Whereby all beings that sank in disgrace,
Through humble repentance might fully retrace,
The pathway leading to heaven.

"To learn of this plan they often did meet,
In temples so spacious and fair;—
With fond recognition each other did greet,
In freedom and union surpassingly sweet,
Their voices ascended in prayer.
Still that worship continues to be;
Through Jesus they render each vow;
Although they worship untrammelled and free,
Yet through the same forms that are given to thee,
In humble devotion they bow.

"There's only one form of worship to know,
As seen by your dear Savior's prayer;
And God never changing, no other below,
E'er will be given through which to bestow
His mercies abundant and rare.
'Give us this day our daily bread,'
And likewise each other request, Means that your Father through Jesus has said,
In this narrow pathway each being must tread,
That attains to fullness of rest."

Thus are instructions whispered to all,
Direct from the fountain of light;
Like dewdrops distilling, these notes ever fall,
E'en though we do not respond to their call,
Revealing the pathway of right.
'Tis thus revelation doth run,
Expansive, and limitless too;
Bearing the "record of Father and Son,"
Unto ev'ry being, till time shall be done,
Convincing each heart that 'tis true.

And when "ev'ry knee" to Jesus shall bow,
And ev'ry tongue shall confess he is Lord;
We'll know by the record that's written, I trow,
Wherein we have failed in keeping each vow,
And that we've "been judged" by his
"word."

Books will open,—one in each breast—
Containing the deeds we have done;
Judgment will enter as we have disgraced,
Or followed the teachings that there are impressed—
The light of the Crucified One.

Records thus written will always agree,
Without an exception or flaw,
With the Lamb's Book of Life, so spotless and free,
Revealing the plan of salvation to be Immutably governed by law.
O, may we be thoughtful and wise,
Heeding each message that's given;
Through patient endeavor, constantly rise,
Till we fully attain to all that implies—
Rest in the Kingdom of Heaven!
In true fraternity,
R. H. WIGHT.

"We share our primal parents' fate,
And in our turn and day
Look back on Eden's sworded gate
As sad and lost as they.
But still for us his native skies
The pitying Angel leaves,
And leads through Toil to Paradise
New Adams and new Eves!"

"WHO IS YOUR TEACHER?"

I HAD been reading the annual report of the Daughters of Zion, wherein mention was made of efforts being put forth to interest young mothers in the necessity for such a work as is contemplated in the above-mentioned society. While pondering these things my attention was called to my little six month's old girl, and as I glanced in her direction, with my mind full of the theme I had been reading, I saw by some secret process belonging to the domain of the spiritual, rapidly changing pictures of my babe, as infant, child, miss, maid, wife, mother; and following these, like a flash came this query, as though one asked me pointedly, "What shall this work mean to your daughter?" I confess I was startled for a moment at the force of the query and its appositeness.

As I gave rein to my thoughts, the picture of two little tots came before me, one of whom asked the other in baby lisping tones, "Who ith 'oor teacher?" and to my consciousness was presented this query, "What? shall this kind of teaching begin so soon?" Experience answered with many arguments upon the affirmative, and I was obliged to admit the need of lessons of good to antidote those of positive evil begun while yet the babe knew not the power of words, nor was responsible for deeds. I made swift decision that all the good which I might obtain from the teaching, lectures, and association of the Daughters of Zion, would not be too much to fit me to be a teacher of my own daughter, in the vital affairs of life, its functions, issues, purposes, dangers, and safeguards; and I would thankfully avail myself of one of the divinely approved "helps" in his kingdom.

We read this cheering and beautiful promise in his holy word, "They shall all be taught of God." While provision has been made for specifically doctrinal teachings through the ministration of elder, priest, teacher and deacon, as branch ministers. Divine wisdom evidently has directed in the organization and development of this potent factor in the education and fitting of latter-day Israel to become Zion, the pure in heart. As the divine Spirit is intelligence, light, and life; and knowledge is power, so they who avail themselves most diligently and conscientiously of those helps to come up higher, the soonest reach those heights, walk by the Spirit, obtain power, become Zion. Shall we not be taught of God? Shall we not choose the same teacher for our daughters? What good has come to the graduates of the schools of folly and fashion in Babylon? Attend a meeting of Daughters of Zion and hear some of those same graduates of Babylon testify with tears of remorse and shame that loss and misery, suffering and sorrow is their portion, and hear them express their thanks to God with choking sobs and tears of gratitude that light has come, even though it be at the eventide of life, and too late for themselves; yet they hail with joy the means of blessing to their daughters and their children; hear this, as I have heard, and methinks there is but one answer to the question concerning yourself and your daughters, "Who is your teacher?"

"CEMITA."

SWEETLY TRUSTING IN THE SAVIOR.

Sweetly trusting in the Savior,
Trusting to his holy will;
Though all things look dark as midnight,
We must sweetly trust him still.
Trust him while the day is breaking,
Trust him at the noontide hour;
When the shades of night are falling,
And the clouds is blackness lower.

Sweetly trusting in the Savior,
As the months and years go by;
Enemies may gather 'round you,
Yet the Lord will hear your cry.
He is able to protect you,
Keep you safe from every harm;
Rest, then, weary, heartsick mortal,
In the shelter of his arm.

Sweetly trusting in the Savior,
Trust him in the time of need,—
He is close to God, the Father,
And for you will intercede.
Look to him in every trial,
He will strength and comfort give;
Place yourself within his keeping—
By his holy precepts live.

Sweetly trusting in the Savior,
Trust him all your lifetime, dear;
Then in sickness or in danger,
You need never have a fear.
Trust him now, and trust him ever,
Whether joy or sorrow come;
Then when life's brief change is over,
He will lead you safely home.

DISCIPLINE AND ITS RESULTS.

Harry Gammidge, Before a Convention at Hamilton West, New South Wales.

HAVING had some knowledge of the teaching profession, I thought the subject of "Discipline" might be touched upon. What I read before you this afternoon is mostly taken from "Eladman's School Method."

While in the teaching profession I found that without "order and obedience to rule" in a school, all work is next to impossible. Hence, in fostering discipline, one must apply all the means and appliances possible to maintain "obedience, good order, steady progressive work, and good conduct."

VALUE OF DISCIPLINE.

1. It renders school work possible. For without "perfect order and obedience to rule" work would be impracticable. 2. A teacher will obtain "good discipline" for his own comfort and peace. 3. It is satisfaction to the pupils. The teacher, after having gained order, will present the lesson in such a manner as will interest the pupils, and thus it becomes a source of satisfaction to them as well as to the teacher. 4. It results in a habit of "order and submission to rule" and is thus the foundation of a life of good principles. 5. It becomes an aid to "intellectual improvement and moral growth." (I was much pleased at the way in which the model classes were controlled this morning.)

SOME MARKS OF GOOD DISCIPLINE.

In its exercise it is: 1. Regular. A true teacher will not be strict one time and careless or loose at another time. 2. It is impartial. He will not at any time show favor to one and disfavor to another. It not only causes an ill feeling amongst the scholars, but it tends to create a dislike for the teacher. Thus a spirit of disunion in the class is planted. 3. It is kind. At all times a teacher should use kindness in firmness. 4. It is strong. Not strong in body, necessarily, but in all things pertaining to the management of his school work. Must not say one thing and mean another thing. 5. It is discriminative. Not harsh and mechanical. 6. It is thorough, descending to points of detail. A teacher should use language so simple that the weakest may understand the meaning thereof.

RESULTS OF GOOD DISCIPLINE.

1. A teacher can rule without difficulty. 2. The pupil will be diligent and active. 3. Work will be continuous, quiet, and orderly. 4. All movements will be executed with sprightliness and quiet; just as we saw in the model primary class. . . . 5. There will be a "good tone" in the school. This will be evinced by honesty in the work and a general feeling of responsibility. . . . "It is the school tone which rules" and the teacher governs by acting upon it. His action, long continued, becomes creative. So that the teacher's characteristics manifest themselves in the tone he succeeds in creating. Remember, "as is the teacher so is the school."

OUR MISSION TO THE CHILDREN.

BY ELDER W. R. ARMSTRONG.

IF the Sunday school work is important (and is there one in the church that will question it?) it is important that we do our part, not only in making ourselves as perfect as we can in the work to be done, but in reaching out a helping hand. It may not be a great deal that each one can do, but it will be a serious thing for us if left undone. If we cannot do all we would, the effort will enrich all who make it.

Then our mission to the little ones. . . . It seems to me that if we have any mission to the children, we must get nearer to them in order to fulfill it. And the first step is to LOVE THEM.

They will love us if we first love them, and no one is so quick to detect the spurious article as the children. If we love them we will draw them to us, as Christ by his love drew all men unto him.

There is a saying something like this: "We must bring ourselves down to the level of the children." I have always felt as if it were going up, hand in hand with purity and innocence. A boy in our school once being asked, Why do we come to Sunday school? replied, "Because we love to do so." Have we a mission to such as these? Is it not to help them to keep their garments unspotted from the world? to be a voice of warning to them, to teach them the lessons of Christ? . . . to stir up the fruitful soil of their hearts by kind words, with loving purposes, and plant therein seeds which shall bear fruit in consecration of their lives to all high and holy thoughts, words, and deeds? to help them remember that whenever they see a noble action it is for them to emulate, from whomsoever they hear a grand thought voiced? It is for them to put it away in their heart of hearts and live by it. And to see how with their best discernment and energy they can proceed to do it. It is ours to lead and guide them, so that as they grow into better things we will be able to continually meet them from a still higher plain, and to help them to be courteous at home and abroad. (There can be no higher title given to them than that of Christian gentlemen); to be a guide in their intellectual pleasures to such good purposes that they may desire the wisdom which comes from the reading of all good books.

Men and women who are of the most use in the world and in the Lord's work do not throw away God-given time in reading trashy literature. If we do all this and the seed bear fruit, they will certainly be followers of Christ, loving virtue in women and honor in men.

But must it be the parents alone who shall do this? Nay, but as far as lies in your power, all whose work lies with children, all children, or who have opportunity to gather in from the highways and hedges. Is not this the spirit of the gospel? We believe so. This 'doing unto others.' And think also that the time is coming when more of the force of the work will be concentrated upon its children. All this takes time. Ah yes! and patience, and self-denial. But, then, you are drawing upon the love which faileth not; and he that dwelleth in love, dwelleth in God. So our reward is with us. We cannot put forth a helping hand without ourselves receiving the benefit. Let us hear the poet on this matter:—

What a mission is thine, O teacher,
Most blessed beyond compare;
A mission an angel might covet
Leading the youthful and fair
To the One altogether lovely,
Bidding them sit at his feet
Where they may learn precious lessons
Of perfect love, rich and sweet!

A Christian woman once said, "My highest ideal in life is to help somebody up." Do you think there could be a more exalted mission?

What is yours, dear teacher? Is it to have the largest class in your school? Is it to teach beautifully illustrated lessons, so that you shall establish for yourself a reputation as a brilliant teacher? Is it to win the love of the children that you may fill your heart with this sweet joy, and surround your life with its sunshine? Is it to be an efficient aid to the superintendent whom you esteem and honor? Then you have not found the true aim, the highest ideal of the teacher. Your aim, your one ever-present purpose should be to win the children to righteousness. There is meaning in that capital. The word means not only a true life, but the one righteous life. Lead the children to know and love that life.

An old Scotchman was noted for always having a fine flock of sheep. Being asked the reason why he was so successful, he replied significantly, "I tak care o' the lambs!"

Teachers, that is our work—to take care of the lambs. Christ's injunction to Peter, "Feed my lambs," was not for Peter alone. Sunday school workers, it is as much your duty to warn and sow the seeds of truth as it was for Peter or any others to feed the lambs of God. May each one of us see the importance of doing our part, realizing the fact that life is real, is earnest, and passing rapidly. Let us hasten then to our mission field and work while it is yet day; and may our heavenly Father bless both the children and their helpers.

Read before the Sunday School Convention held in Manchester, England, August 2 and 3, 1897.

WALES, Iowa, May 9.

Editors Herald:—I belong to the household of faith, and have received many blessings since yielding obedience to the gospel of Christ. I have been in the church not quite two years, but in that short time have received much knowledge of the Scriptures and plan of life and salvation. My husband is an elder in the church and preaches whenever opportunity offers.

This forenoon while engaged in prayer I felt a strong impression that I ought to write to the Herald concerning a dream I had some time ago. The dream is as follows: I was standing in the Latter Day Saints' burying ground, and in my right arm was an infant babe. I do not know how I got there, nor where I came from; I was there, and all at once the earth was changed, and about eight or nine of the saints arose and threw off the dirt as if it was but bedclothing and we were all standing there together—those that arose and myself. It seemed as if I was expecting some one whom I dearly loved to arise, but that one did not arise; and many others of the saints did not arise, and I, being grieved because of this, asked one of the saints who stood by me why all the saints did not arise. He said unto me: "None cometh up in this resurrection but those that are just;" and I awoke.

If anyone can understand this dream so he can interpret it, I should be glad to hear it. I ask an interest in the prayers of all God's children that I shall be able to overcome.

Your sister,

ANNIE NEEDHAM.

STANDLEY, I. T., May 26.

Editors Herald:—I read in your last issue a letter written by Bro. J. D. Erwin, announcing a debate to be held by himself and Elder Chism. I know but very little about this debate, as it was arranged for some time ago. The facts in the case are that Bro. White held a debate here last year with Chism, and I do not hear any complaints. I believe Bro. White was satisfied with the results of the debate, and the saints, I am sure, feel satisfied.

This boasting spirit is not catching, I trust. I only hear of Elder Chism and Bro. J. D. making any noise over their debates. Probably they haven't learned that misrepresentation and self-conceit have no place in the mind of a careful observer.

I suppose I ought to apologize for Bro. J. D.'s boasting statements, but will pass it by for this time.

Will the ministry please consult with me before arranging for debates?

GOOSE CREEK, W. Va., May 29.

Editors Herald:—After leaving General Conference, I stopped three days on my way home at Rocheport, Missouri, with Mr. Edward Byers, my wife's brother. They are members of the M. E. Church, but are conservative and fairminded people, and are disposed to hear the angel's message with gladness. They have not had an opportunity to hear any of our ministry, though they have lived there for about twenty years. A protracted meeting—quarterly I believe—was going on, and I made no attempt to do any preaching there. Could not some of our elders call on them and open the work there? If any can, I will give them a letter of introduction, and feel sure they will meet with a kind reception, and receive good treatment.

On arriving home I found it necessary to remain a short time to arrange a few business matters before going to Virginia, and of filling some appointments made for me by my brother, V. M. Goodrich, who lives in Chilli-cothe, Ohio, and who presides over the Byers branch. I baptized three at Richland Furnace, and left a good interest, with a report to my brother of my labors there and a request of him to continue the effort.

From there I went to Moxahala, Perry County, Ohio, near where I was called to preach last September (Bear Run), and where two, a man and wife, gave their names for baptism, but deferred for the want of "much water there," and therefore, they, desiring to defer it till it should rain, or till some future time, I enrolled their names as candidates, obtained a four months' subscription to the Herald, and took my leave with a promise to return when opportunity offered.

On returning I found the enemy had entered and sowed tares in the field, and the woman had lost her "first love," being made to believe that I had three or four wives and was a "Mormon," and a "deceiver," and that no respectable family would allow me to come in their house, etc., etc. The children also were "trained up in the way" she thought they ought to go, and so they would not speak to me, when I met them.

Not so with the man, however, for he is still in the faith and says he will be baptized as soon as he can get his wife reconciled a little. The Christian preacher, Rev. Dunlap, of Columbus, told me I was no gentleman or I would not come into a neighborhood where there was a church and want to preach; that I was a stranger here, and that no stranger should ask for the privilege, etc.; that I had been here about a year ago and, was refused, and that now to come again was very ungentlemanly, to say the least, etc. I asked him if the commission to the ministry was not to "go to" "every creature" whether acquaintances or strangers; if he thought Paul and Peter and the ancient ministers who went "two and two" went only to their acquaintances, etc. He said that time had passed away, and he was not there to argue the question, and would not have any discussion about the matter there, etc. I told him I had a perfect right to ask if desired, and that he had just as good a right, I supposed, to refuse; that I had not, however, in this case, asked for the church at any time; that he was laboring under a mistake, and that I had been sent for by a member of his community, all strangers to me then; and that I came by request; and that I had promised to return again when I could; and that I had come in fulfillment of that promise; and that although I had not asked to preach, being requested by some of his own members to announce meetings for three evenings at their house, as they desired to hear me, and as they had asked him for the church unsolicited by me, and they were refused, etc. He said he was acquainted with my Mormon doctrine; that he was no follower of "Joe Smith" and his Mormon Bible, and so on; and he showed by his attitude that cholera had taken the place of reason; and that his heart was filled with prejudice rather than patriotism.

I domiciled at Mr. Samuel M. Brown's, an excellent and influential family, living about a mile from Moxahala, and with whom also resides Johnny Curl, an old soldier, whose patriotic heart still throbs for the rights of men, where I held one service, and then by invitation and arrangement made by this old patriot, I preached in Mr. Ault's hall, in Moxahala, the next night, and being invited to the M. E. church by one of the trustees, I occupied there three evenings, and left with the best of feelings toward all, with the invitation not to make this the last visit, but to come again whenever I could, and that the hall was open. I am sure this is a permanent opening and that the Lord has a people that will hear him. I was kindly cared for at Moxahala by Mr. and Mrs. Lazarus, communicants of the M. E. faith, but not members. Mr. Lazarus is also one of the trustees. I hope to be able to return there sometime, or have some of the Ohio appointees go.

Well, I took the train Saturday morning for Goose Creek, but could not make connection so as to reach there till Sunday, and so was left in Parkersburg over night. I reached Goose Creek on Sunday about noon, but not in time for forenoon service, as had been announced for me, but in time to announce my presence before dismissing, and services for night, when I was greeted with a nice audience, and discoursed to them from Proverbs 22:28 principally; but there being so many bright little girls and boys near me on the front seats, I could not refrain from talking to them awhile in the beginning, from the first verse.

I will hold two other services here and then move on toward the Old Dominion. I hardly expect to be at the district conference of either the West Virginia or the Ohio district, unless I am so instructed by the missionary in charge, though I cannot say positively yet.

My mission address till September will be New Hope, Virginia. If there are any in this mission who desire preaching, or who have relatives or friends who will entertain an elder, and where you think an opening can be effected, please address me as above, and I will do what I can to reach them.

With love for all and malice toward none,
I remain Yours in bonds,
J. L. GOODRICH.

COOK'S POINT, Tex., May 31.

Editors Herald:—Again I testify that before I came into the Reorganized Church I knew that the claims—as set forth in the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants—were true. I read the claims from the standpoint of the church; read what the enemies had to say against it; examined the matter very closely from both standpoints. The greatest evidence that I received before I came into the church as to its claims was and is the testimony of the Holy Spirit. Since I came into the church I have continued to investigate; have read every book and paper I could get for and against, and have read a number of them along the line for the last eleven years.

The last book I read, written against the church, is the one by Elder D. H. Bays, and I must say that it is the most ingeniously gotten up of any I ever read of the kind. I have read it a great deal and I am prepared to say without any hesitation, that it fails to set aside the claims of the church. There are many glaring mistakes or misrepresentations in it. I can see very clearly that it is the result of the author's apostasy from the truth. And so I can say to-day, I retain my testimony as to the divinity of the work that we are engaged in; the only difference between now and when I came into the church is, I am much stronger in the faith once delivered to the saints. I am satisfied, judging the future by the past, that the doctrine which we teach is here to stay until it accomplishes the purpose God intended it should, and, that all the ingenuity of the Devil and men, who are his servants, cannot destroy it; but that it will triumph over every opposition. And when the Master comes he will find people on earth organized as he left them, still teaching and practicing the same doctrine which he has given them, and that such will be saved from sin and its effects with an everlasting salvation.

Now while I am sure of the above, I want to tell you some of my convictions as to how we should build upon the foundation of apostles and prophets. I am satisfied there are too much time and labor used in vindicating the Book of Mormon and Joseph Smith the Seer; they will both stand upon their merits; neither was perfect, neither is the Book of Mormon yet absolutely perfect in language; but the doctrine that it teaches is true as the doctrine taught in the Bible, for it is the same. Joseph Smith taught the true doctrine as contained in them both (the gospel in its fullness). I think, yea, I know that we should practice what we believe and teach now. We should turn our attention now, I think, to practical preaching, and "live by every word that has proceeded out of the mouth of God," "and be not conformed to this world, but be transformed by the renewing of our minds, that we may prove what is that good and acceptable will of God." We should be able to demonstrate to the people everywhere that we are what we profess to be, and we cannot do it unless we walk closer with God. Let us depend more upon God and less upon man—even ourselves. Self, self; how hard to control, but let us do like Paul said he did, labor to keep his body under subjection. Let us not believe or teach anything as the doctrine of the church except what we see plainly taught in the three standard books. There is danger of being led astray now as there was heretofore. We need more power of the Holy Ghost and less theory. I suggest that we individually walk closer to God hereafter, and earnestly contend for the faith, and practice it in our lives, and God will bless our efforts and crown them with success. I am yours in the faith,

E. W. NUNLEY.

BEULAH, Mich., June 1.

Editors Herald:—Everything seems to move on nicely here in Michigan. There are some coming into the church now and then here and there, and we are enjoying the Spirit of the Master. Prospects are bright ahead for church work. The local ministry are helping considerably in many places.

Prospects for a bountiful harvest of fruit and grain are good, though there are fears of frosts; but God rules; seedtime and harvest will come.

We are opening up some new places, and as usual the people are rousing up. Some are astonished to hear the true gospel proclaimed, and say it is too good to be true. Others say, It's the worst thing they ever heard in their lives. One man to-day said: "I never heard the like in all my life! I can scarcely wait until to-night to hear what will be said next." Some say "I'll never go again," but the next night they are there again, and so the good work goes on.

Never mind the flag that represents the countries which gave us birth, but "remember the main" question before us—the great latter-day work. We are brethren of the one common family. God is our Father. This is his land, and will be the home of the saints.

THE BOOK OF DANIEL.

WHILE I believe the gospel is the all-important thing for us to study, for it is the power of God unto salvation and obedience to it is the only way we may become heirs to the promise, yet I cannot but think that the Book of Daniel and Revelation and the visions and prophetic periods given therein are for the Latter Day Saints to understand and are for our benefit. Let us examine these books to-night. I wish to call your attention first to the 9th and 10th verses of the 12th chapter of Daniel:—

For the words are closed up and sealed till the time of the end. Many shall be purified, and made white, and tried; but the wicked shall do wickedly: and none of the wicked shall understand; but the wise shall understand.

Who are the wise referred to in this verse? We read the 3d verse of the same chapter:—

And they that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament.

Let me ask you a question. Are not God's people wise if they obey the gospel, become members of his kingdom, keeping his commandments? And the Latter Day Saints are wise if they do this, and in the time of the end the wise were to understand.

Let us notice now a few passages in Daniel and learn, if we can, what the book of Daniel is telling us about. We read Daniel 2:29 where God through Daniel is revealing to the King Nebuchadnezzar his dream and vision:—

As for thee, O king, thy thoughts came into thy mind upon thy bed, what should come to pass hereafter: and he that revealeth secrets maketh known to thee what shall come to pass.

And Daniel tells the king of the great image that he saw and verse 41 reads:—

And whereas thou sawest the feet and toes, part of potter's clay, and part of iron, the kingdom shall be divided.

I believe the fourth kingdom spoken of here is the Roman power and that Nebuchadnezzar was shown the great events that should happen until the end of the world. We read the 44th verse:—

And in the days of these kings [when it is divided into ten kingdoms as the ten toes represented] shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom which shall never be destroyed.

We read in the twelfth chapter that the words of this book was sealed up till the time of the end; now let us turn to Revelation tenth chapter and read the last four verses. Here we find John is commanded to eat a book as the Prophet Ezekiel was. (Ezekiel 3: 1-4.) After Ezekiel had eaten the book he was told to go to the "house of Israel and speak with my words unto them," evidently what was written in the roll or book, and so with John after he had eaten the book he was told to prophesy again, and from there the rest of the book of Revelation is what Daniel told us, but makes it much plainer. I will not read, but ask you to read, when you have time, Daniel 8: 13. Then turn to Revelation 11: 2; Daniel 8: 10-12, 24, 25; Revelation 12: 1-7, 17. Then we read Daniel 2: 41-44, and turn to Revelation 17: 12 and we find the ten kingdoms had not come yet but were to receive power as kings after John's time, and I can say the ten kingdoms referred to in Revelation 17: 12 and in Daniel 2: 44 were in existence from 1829 until 1846, and then was the time that the God of heaven would set up a kingdom which should never be destroyed and he did so in the way described in Revelation 14: 6.

But I wish to call your attention to Daniel 8: 14:—

And he said unto me, Unto two thousand three hundred days; then shall the sanctuary be cleansed.

We read in verses 16, 17, 19:—

And I heard a man's voice . . . which called and said, Gabriel, make this man to understand the vision. So he came near where I stood: and . . . said unto me, Understand, O son of man: for at the time of the end shall be the vision. . . . Behold, I will make thee know what shall be in the last end of the indignation: for at the time appointed the end shall be.

Verse 26:—

Wherefore shut thou up the vision; for it shall be for many days.

Now the thought is, what part of the vision was shut up? I am sure it was the cleansing of the sanctuary.

We find the angel made plain the rest of the vision of the different kings. Let us now look at 9: 3, 17:—

And I set my face unto the Lord God, to seek by prayer and supplications, with fasting, and sackcloth, and ashes. Now therefore, O our God, hear the prayer of thy servant, and his supplications, and cause thy face to shine upon thy sanctuary.

Verses 21-23:—

Yea, while I was speaking in prayer, even the man Gabriel, whom I had seen in the vision at the beginning, being caused to fly swiftly, touched me about the time of the evening oblation. And he informed me, and talked with me, and said, O Daniel, I am now come forth to give thee skill and understanding. At the beginning of thy supplications the commandment came forth, and I am come to shew thee; for thou art greatly beloved: therefore understand the matter, and consider the vision.

Now we find the angel telling Daniel about the vision that he had as recorded in the eighth chapter and goes into detail and tells Daniel how long was given the Jews and holy city (Jerusalem) to finish their transgressions and the desolation that was to come on their land and upon the holy city and give both the sanctuary and the Jews to be trodden under foot by the gentiles as spoken of in Daniel 8: 13 and Revelation 11: 2.

Now let us turn to Daniel 9: 24 and read carefully:—

Seventy weeks [of the 2,300 days, seven days in a week makes 490 days are cut off] are determined upon thy people [the Jews] and upon thy holy city, to finish the transgression, and to make an end of sins, and to make reconciliation for iniquity, and to bring in everlasting righteousness. Know therefore and understand, that from the going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem, unto the Messiah the Prince, shall be seven weeks, and threescore and two weeks.

Read Ezra 7: 6-15. There were seven weeks or forty-nine years in which to rebuild Jerusalem and sixty-two weeks after that or in 434 years Jesus was baptized and after the sixty-two weeks the Messiah shall confirm the covenant with many for one week and in the midst of the week he shall cause the sacrifice and the oblation to cease. He was crucified in the midst of that week. Seven weeks, sixty-two weeks, and one week make seventy weeks that were determined upon the Jews of the 2,300 days; in forty-nine years Jerusalem was rebuilt; 434 years after Jesus was baptized. In A. D. 27 he was to confirm the covenant. Seven years brings it to A. D. 34; forty-nine years, four hundred and thirty-four years and seven years make four hundred and ninety years, which taken from 2,300 years leaves 1810 years, added to 34 A. D. brings it to 1844. Then shall the sanctuary be cleansed. Now let us learn what the sanctuary is.

In Exodus 25: 8, 9 God told Moses to let them [the children of Israel] make me a sanctuary; that I may dwell among them according to all that I shew thee, after the pattern of the tabernacle.

And 2 Chronicles 20: 7-9 also shows us what the sanctuary was in the Mosaic covenant. Now we find Moses was commanded to build the sanctuary after the pattern God had given him,—for what reason?

Let us read Hebrews 8: 5 and Colossians 2: 16, 17, where we learn that the sanctuary and ordinances of the first covenant were a shadow of heavenly things to come. Let us examine a few other quotations. We learn the first covenant had twelve men of the children of Israel to go before the ark of the Lord God. (Joshua 4: 2-7.) The Savior chose twelve of his disciples whom he named apostles and ordained them that he might send them forth to preach. Luke 6: 13 and Mark 3: 14.)

We read again in Numbers 11: 16, 17:—

And the Lord said unto Moses, Gather unto me seventy men of the elders of Israel, whom thou knowest to be the elders of the people, and officers over them; and bring them unto the tabernacle of the congregation, that they may stand there with thee. And I will come down and talk with thee there: and I will take of the spirit which is upon thee, and will put it upon them: and they shall bear the burden of the people with thee.

After this let us turn to Luke 10: 1:—

After these things the Lord appointed other seventy also, and sent them two and two before his face.

We find the first covenant had twelve men to go before the ark and Jesus chose twelve men and named them apostles and they were to be in the new and everlasting covenant, also the same with the seventy.

Let me call your attention again to Hebrews 9: 1, 11, 12:—

Then verily the first covenant had also ordinances of divine service, and a worldly sanctuary. But Christ being come a high priest of good things to come, by a greater and more perfect tabernacle, not made with hands, that is to say, not of this building; neither by the blood of goats and calves, but by his own blood he entered in once into the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption for us.

What do we learn from this? We learn the sanctuary was to be cleansed in 1844 in the time of the end; we learn also the sanctuary of the Mosaic covenant was a shadow, a type, a figure, of heavenly things that were to come in Christ Jesus, and he, when he came, set up a greater and more perfect tabernacle or sanctuary.

Then the sanctuary to be cleansed in 1844 was the church after it had come out of the wilderness; but how was it cleansed?

Then let us turn to Leviticus 16: 5-23, and learn how the sanctuary was cleansed under the Mosaic covenant, for it was a figure, a shadow of how it was cleansed in 1844. We find there were two goats taken, one was for a sin offering and his blood was to make an atonement for the sanctuary and cleanse it from the uncleanness of the children of Israel.

And Aaron shall lay his hands upon the live goat and put the sins of the children of Israel on him and the scapegoat shall bear upon him all their iniquities unto a land not inhabited and he shall let go the goat in the wilderness.

Let us read Hebrews 5: 1 and 8: 3:—

Every high priest taken from among men is ordained for men in things pertaining to God, that he may offer both gifts and sacrifices for sins.

Read also Hebrews 9: 22. "Without the shedding of blood there is no remission;" then the sanctuary could not be cleansed in 1844 without the shedding of blood. Joseph Smith was ordained a high priest by three angels and his life was taken in 1844 and the scapegoat, Brigham Young, went into the wilderness uninhabited, and those who wished to practice the wicked things he taught went with him, and so the church was cleansed and they brought reproach upon the church and it is cleansing it to-day for it keeps out those who would come in for society or popularity or any selfish motives, and Peter tells us of this. We read also in 2 Peter 1: 1 that to them that have obtained like precious faith with us through the righteousness of God, and our Savior Jesus Christ.

Let us see what he tells them in 2 Peter 2: 1, 2:—

But . . . there shall be false teachers among you, who privily shall bring in damnable heresies, even denying the Lord that bought them. . . . And many shall follow their pernicious ways; by reason of whom the way of truth shall be evil spoken of.

This was the cleansing of the sanctuary spoken of in Daniel 8: 13, 14.

CO-OPERATION.

WHILE I heartily indorse coöperation in everything that is good and true, both temporally and spiritually, and believe that now is the accepted time of all others when coöperation in temporal affairs should move the church as a body, as a means of self-protection, and that Zion never will be re-deemed upon any other than a practical coöperative or social and economical system, in the which every man works equally, both spiritually and temporally, for the good of his brother as for himself; this is the standard to be arrived at, and the only coöperative society that will stand the fiery crucible through and by which all things will be tried. So in order to make sure investments in temporal coöperation there is the prerequisite coöperation of each one sacrificing self, while all selfishness ends, and patiently working, and economizing, and having just what others had, and in the fullest sense of the word doing "unto others" "as ye would that others should do unto you."

This first social coöperation in heart and soul would make possible the second, with sure, practical, and beneficial returns, both spiritually and temporally; for self and selfishness, with pride to back it up, is the rock upon which every organization of the kind has been wrecked. Therefore, we as the light of the world and as wise servants should look well to the prerequisites through and by which the shoals and rocks can only be avoided, before we launch the coöperative ship.

Now, I have no doubt that some, like myself, who see the great need of coöperation, and who are a little over-zealous, will say: "Bro. Haws is throwing cold water upon this so-much-needed forward movement." But all will most assuredly admit that to be forewarned is to be forearmed. Therefore let us try what could be done with a promiscuous and unprepared society who were willing to pool their money and labor, but not willing to put into practice the above-named prerequisites with many others. I ask, How long would the coöperative ship sail smoothly? Would she not soon be wrecked on the same old rock of self and self-interests? Is it possible to bind men or societies upon any other basis than the one God has given: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. . . . Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." (Matt. 22: 27-29)?

The coöperative ship that is built and sailed upon this basis with the above-named requirements will sail clear of all the shoals and breakers, and land its cargo at the feet of Jesus Christ in Zion, when he comes with his ancients to reign in glory.

Yours for truth,

A. HAWS.

BAPTISM.

ON page 534 of the Book of Mormon we have the following concerning baptism:—

Neither did they receive any unto baptism save they came forth with a broken heart and a contrite spirit, and witnessed unto the church that they truly repented of all their sins."—Moroni 6: 1.

Also in Book of Doctrine and Covenants:—

All those who humble themselves before God and desire to be baptized, and come forth with broken hearts and contrite spirits, and witness before the church that they have truly repented of all their sins, and are willing to take upon them the name of Jesus Christ, having a determination to serve him to the end, and truly manifest by their works that they have received of the Spirit of Christ unto the remission of their sins, shall be received by baptism into his church."—D. C. 17: 7.

Now let us who have officiated in the sacred ordinance of baptism ask ourselves if we have strictly complied with the foregoing word of the Lord relative to this important matter? If we have not, something is wrong. We should live by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God. (Matthew 4: 4.)

FROM THE PATRIARCH.

To the Saints; Greeting:—It is with feeling of gratitude towards our heavenly Father, that I address these lines of greeting.

For the past year I sought light on my duties as "patriarch to the church, and an evangelical minister to the whole church," feeling a great timidity upon entering in upon a field of duties I knew so little about, and upon which there was so little written. I earnestly prayed and hoped that the Lord would be so gracious that he would give some instruction at the late General Conference, but was disappointed.

I did receive encouragement in spirit and was promised that if I would move forward the spirit of my calling would rest upon me and I should be blessed, and others through me should receive a blessing, and the Spirit's influence would attend me.

Since the General Conference I have tried to enter upon my patriarchal duties and have verified the promise. The Spirit has been with me, for which I am thankful. Thus being encouraged, I shall continue in those duties, and take this means to inform the saints that at any time when it is possible for me to get a stenographer, I will attend to blessings. Bro. E. L. Kelley has kindly offered me Bro. E. Bell, the stenographer who writes for him, to aid me in Lamoni. My office will be at my residence until other arrangements are made.

There is a question of finance which all ought to understand in relation to these blessings. I am often asked: Is there a charge made for blessing? I answer, in one sense, No; and again, in another sense, Yes. That is, it rests with the party who receives the blessing. They should remember that the Patriarch must live, his family must live, and he must defray the expense of stenographer, who also must live; and records must be kept, and these expenses must be borne, and necessarily those who are benefited should supply the means to meet them. The Patriarch cannot, the church ought not to be expected to do so without receiving some return; hence it is expected that the parties blessed will give as their circumstances will permit or the Spirit may direct. As the Patriarch is expected to report every dollar received and from whom received, it will at once be seen there is little chance of the Patriarch making merchandise of the blessings of God. The Patriarch draws his support from the Bishop just the same as any missionary in the field. Thus you see the poor can receive blessings as well as those who are well off in this world's goods; yet all should remember that as God gives with a liberal hand and freely, so as God has blessed the individual, so let him give.

In my travels, until I can have a stenographer to travel with me, as I said above, when possible, to get one, I will do the best I can to bless the saints. And may God bless us all, letting his steady hand guide all along life's rugged way, bringing us off conquerors at last, giving us a bright inheritance in his celestial world, I shall ever pray.

ALEXANDER HALE SMITH, Patriarch.

ACTION ON SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS, BRANCH APPEAL.

To Whom it may Concern:—The committee appointed to examine the appeal sent from the San Antonio, Texas, branch to the General Conference for adjudication, and which was referred to the Quorum of Twelve, for examination, report its findings as follows:—

On May 19th, 1898, the full committee, selected by the quorum to examine and dispose of this matter, by reporting their findings through the Herald, met at the hotel in Kirtland, Ohio, and carefully examined the papers placed in its hands in regard to it.

It appears in evidence that at one time—date not given—there was a church organized in Southwest Texas by Elder I. N. Roberts, and named "Oakwood." This church acquired church property, and had a regular place of meeting. It had a membership at one time of about 75 persons. In course of time some 18 members belonging to said organization became located at San Antonio, some fifteen or sixteen miles from Oakwood. The branch frequently held meetings at San Antonio, or met with the saints at that place.

Later on the 18 members at San Antonio obtained letters and withdrew from the Oakwood branch with the avowed purpose of being organized into a new branch; the president of the Oakwood branch, J. P. Neal, presiding at the meeting when the move was made. Elder I. P. Baggerly, then missionary in charge of that "field of labor," under Elder George Montague, was sent for and the 18 members were organized into a new church, called San Antonio. The district conference had also voted that this organization might be effected. So far as anything appears to the contrary, this movement was by mutual consent of all parties. There was no "malicious" intent manifested by the parties withdrawing, they only desired a more convenient place of meeting.

After the San Antonio branch was organized it was reported to the district conference and was recognized. The Oakwood branch also recognizing its existence by not reporting the 18 members who formerly belonged to that branch. Oakwood reporting 57 and San Antonio 18 members. At this time had the Oakwood branch reported the full membership formerly belonging to it, the membership would have numbered 75. This shows the understanding and action which had obtained at this time.

So far then as the facts appear upon the papers before the committee, there is no question in their minds but that San Antonio was a regularly constituted, legal branch; and that the district conference transcended its prerogative, and its action was illegal, when it proceeded at one of its sessions to bar the San Antonio branch from a representation in its sessions, by passing the following at Gett Crossing, August 7, 1897: "Resolved, that the San Antonio branch of Southwest Texas district of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints has no legal existence according to law or precedent, and that its report should not be received by the body."

The request of the chief missionary in charge that both branches "disorganize" could not affect the legal status of either. It was then optional with the branches to take that course or not. One, the San Antonio, voted against it. The claim made that San Antonio was within the territory embraced by the Oakwood branch when that branch was organized, and that therefore its organization was illegal, is not valid. Territory is not included in the organization of a church, in the sense of ownership or control. A church is purely an association or organization of believers united together, and properly authorized for mutual aid and encouragement to themselves and others.

Territory does not figure as a factor in the organization. Neither members, officers, or the association may necessarily be owners of a single foot of land in their individual or collective right; or either control an acre of territory. The Oakwood and San Antonio branches might either or both dissolve or disorganize, or remove to other parts without in the least affecting the territory where their respective membership now reside, or where they should move to and continue their organizations. Officers of a branch have charge of the organization, not the territory where the membership composing the organization chance to reside. The phrase "branch limits" in use means nothing more than the membership accustomed to meet at a given place or center.

Used in a similar sense of neighborhood or vicinity, branch officers have jurisdiction over the membership of a branch, but essentially nothing to do with the territory where they reside. So that when the Oakwood branch granted letters to its 18 members involved, its right of control or direction ceased; said members had the undoubted right to be organized into a new branch. They were living fifteen or sixteen miles away from place of meeting of the Oakwood branch and their procedure could not in consistency harm any one or militate against the thrift and progress of the Oakwood branch.

It is the judgment then of the committee that the San Antonio branch has a competent legal standing, and that recognition is due it from the Southwest Texas district.

WILLIAMS-BAYS DEBATE.—NO. 4.

MAY 12.—ELDER BAYS' FIRST SPEECH ON SECOND PROPOSITION.

We are about to enter upon an examination of second proposition as read, and in this investigation we want to present the truth as God's word reveals it unto us. I again read the proposition, "Is the Church of Christ (sometimes called the Christian or Disciple Church) as restored by Alexander Campbell and his coworkers, the Church of God in fact and in harmony with the Bible in doctrine and organization?"

Note that the words "sometimes called the Christian or Disciple Church" are in parenthesis. This is the Church of God in fact. If I show the doctrines and organic structure to be in harmony with the Bible, then I have proven the proposition. There can be but one "Church of Christ," other churches something else. The Book of Mormon, page 33, paragraph 46, says "there are save two churches only: the one is the church of the Lamb of God, and the other is the church of the devil." As we proceed we shall see this is right. My opponent is here to prove the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is the Church of Christ, and others are the church of the Devil.

This church as restored by Alexander Campbell is in harmony with the Bible in doctrine and organization, is what I shall prove. The question before us is, What is the Church of Christ—what does it take to constitute the Church of God in fact? the King James translation of the Bible to be the standard of evidence.

The Church of Christ consists of all regenerated beings in heaven or on earth. The plea of the Disciples has always been that all regenerated people, whether in this church or not, are the Church of Christ. A regenerate person is one renovated in heart—a Christian. Persons who have been born anew, born Christian, who have been changed from the natural to the spiritual, are the Church of Christ.

Psalms 37: 3-7 reads thus: This shows something of what a regenerate person is. Verse 28 says that "the Lord loveth judgment, and forsaketh not his saints"—the people of God—regenerate. Verse 37 also bears upon this subject: "Mark the perfect man."

Psalms 1: 1, 2 shows that a regenerate man is one who "walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly," "but his delight is in the law of the Lord."

Psalms 15: 1, 2 speaks of those who shall abide in the Lord's tabernacle: "He that walketh uprightly, and worketh righteousness, and speaketh truth in his heart." He that has the law of God in his heart will speak the truth. He won't utter one thing and believe another.

Psalms 19: 7-9. Perfect law restoring the soul, etc. This shows the kind of being that is regenerated.

There was no gospel law in that dispensation as in the days of Christ. This was a righteous man according to the law. Galatians 3:6-8 says Abraham believed God and it was accounted to him for righteousness. The gospel to Abraham was the promise of the Christ. This was good news. That promise justified all who believed in it. The gospel as we now have it justified after Christ came. Ephesians 3:14, 15. The whole family of God in heaven and earth are known by the name of Jesus Christ. Paul says they are his people, his church in heaven and earth. Those who believe in God and work righteousness are the church of Christ, surrounded by whatever environments.

There is a visible church on earth, composed of people in our midst—local congregations form the militant church. The triumphant church is composed of those in heaven.

1 Corinthians 1: 1, 2, speaks of the local church, and shows the kind of local congregation we talk about—one composed of those sanctified in Christ Jesus; born anew: saints.

1 Corinthians 10: 31, 32, refers to the Church of God, as also does 1 Corinthians 15: 8, 9.

Galatians 1: 2 refers to the local church at Galatia; and the writer says this is the Church of God, he persecuted. (Vs. 13.)

1 Thessalonians 1: 1, and 2 Thessalonians 1: 1 refer to another local church.

Revelation 1: 4, and chapters 2 and 3 speak of the "seven churches in Asia." All these local churches constitute the Church of God.

Ephesians 4: 1-6 speaks of "one body and one Spirit." There is but one body (Rom. 12: 4, 5), yet many members (1 Cor. 12: 12, 13.) By one Spirit are we all baptized into the one body. 1 Corinthians 12: 27 says we are "the body of Christ and members in particular;" members constituting the local churches. One body can have but one head unless it is a monster. Jesus is the head. The one body we have been speaking of is the church (Eph. 1: 22, 23), and Christ is the head. (Eph. 5: 29, 30.)

Many members of one body with Christ the head (Eph. 4: 15, 16), and every joint supplieth the members, edifying itself in love, maketh increase.

WILLIAMS' FIRST SPEECH.

I was pleased with prayer, and the spirit of it is that which should govern in the examination of this proposition.

I read the proposition: "Is the church of Christ (sometimes called Christian or Disciple Church) as restored by the instrumentality of Alexander Campbell and his coworkers, the Church of God in fact and in harmony with the Bible in doctrine and organization?"

I also read the Credentials of Bays:—

WOODBINE, Iowa, Jan. 8, 1898.

"This is to certify: That D. H. Bays is a minister among us, and that we hereby indorse him as being in good standing, able to defend the truth, and show up error, especially the errors of that sect known as Latter Day Saints or Mormons."

"M. PUGSLEY,

"Secretary of the Harrison County Board of the Disciples of Christ.

"A. M. HAGGARD,

"Secretary of the Iowa Christian Convention, Oskaloosa, Iowa."

DES MOINES, Iowa, January 15, 1898.

"To whom it may concern:—We hereby certify that Elder D. H. Bays, of Persia, Iowa, is a member in good standing in the Church of Christ of Woodbine, Iowa, and recognized as a minister of the gospel of Jesus Christ among the Disciples of Iowa, and the United States. Also, that as a defender of the New Testament faith and doctrine he has the indorsement of his own congregation, and that in any and all discussions with the so-called Latter Day Saints he has the confidence and indorsement of his brethren at large.

"Signed, H. O. BREEDEN,

Vice Pres. of the Iowa Christian Convention.

"A. M. HAGGARD,

Sec. of I. C. C.

"A. T. MARSHALL,

Sec. of the N. W. Dist. I. C. C."

(The above with four others of like import were read.—J. F. M.)

Note that this man as a representative of the Christian Church is backed up by recommendations as but few receive.

The rules and terms of debate were read and the proposition reread.

Bays has not defined the proposition. What does it mean? Will he answer the following questions: What is the incorporate name of the church he represents? What is the meaning of the word "restore"? And what did Alexander Campbell restore? What is the nature of the Church of God in fact? What is the character of the organization he represents, and what the organization of the Church of Christ? What are the doctrinal features of his organization? What was restored, church in Mondamin? or, is this church a part of that restored?

Did Alexander Campbell restore the Church of Christ, or a part of it?

In "Doctrines and Dogmas of Mormonism," page 82, Bays adopts methods by which to detect—a rule of identity. I hope Bays will not go back on it. What kind of a bill is he going to offer to the cashier?

He says, I am here to show you there were but two churches. I am here to examine the propositions before us.

WIGHT-BRADEN DEBATE.—NO. 1.

Wight-Braden discussion, commencing at Tabor, Iowa, May 31; Banker Nettleton acting as chairman; J. D. McClure acting as moderator for Elder Braden; F. A. Smith Elder Wight's moderator.

Proposition:—"The revelations that Joseph Smith gave to the world are true, and Joseph Smith was a true prophet of God." Elder Wight affirmed.

ELDER WIGHT'S FIRST SPEECH.

Gentlemen Moderators, Ladies and Gentlemen:—It affords me pleasure to stand before you to present what I believe to be the truth. And believing it to be such I feel it a duty to maintain it in a gentlemanly way.

If, at the conclusion, I am convinced that Elder Braden has defeated my proposition, I will gladly yield. I have an earnest desire to determine the truth, for I know that the truth will prevail and that it alone will save in the end.

As a fundamental basis, a premise upon which to build, I lay down this proposition: We can't live without revelation; neither spiritually, physically, socially, nor morally. He gave illustration from a physical standpoint, and to illustrate the mental fact told of a case in New Zealand where a man and woman, who had not spoken for years, and to whom as husband and wife three children had been born during the time, none of whom could speak a word, as the result of having been denied present revelation as to language. All believe that for four thousand years God had spoken to men—Adam, Moses, et al. How do you know that God spoke to them? You say the Bible tells you so. How do you know that the Bible tells the truth? Isaiah 11: 11. (In passing will say the question is wholly one sided. If God did speak to Joseph Smith, in the judgment you'll have to meet the issue.) Here we learn that God is to set his hand a second time to gather Israel from Assyria, Egypt, etc. We have no Bible record of God having gathered Israel from either Assyria or Egypt but once, and no record that he gathered them from the islands of the sea; hence this must be a time subsequent to the writing of Bible history. Their great prophet-leader three thousand five hundred years ago clearly depicted their universal dispersion and final gathering. In Isaiah 29: 14, 17, we have a startling statement. God is to proceed to do a marvelous work and a wonder among the people just a little while before Lebanon becomes a fruitful field. In 1830 Joseph Smith proceeded, together with his coworkers, to organize a church after the apostolic pattern, and it was so marvelous a fact that it was like throwing a bomb into the midst of the religious arena. Many had been church organizers but he alone had claimed divine appointment, hence the "marvelous." And since that time the mighty theological ocean has been so perturbed that wherever this work has gone incidents like that which brings us together have resulted. Only twenty-three years this side of such commencement Lebanon was restored by the descent of the "former and latter rains," after one thousand seven hundred years of desolation. Putting the two facts together can you say there is no God in it? Plenty say: "O, had we lived in days of the prophets, we would not have killed them!"

ELDER BRADEN'S FIRST SPEECH.

The proposition involves three issues: No dispute that he was the Mormon prophet. He claimed to translate—1. Book of Mormon. 2. The Bible. 3. The Book of Abraham. 4. Kinderhook plates—partially.

We shall examine the Book of Mormon, the Inspired Translation, and the Doctrine and Covenants. Why do you accept part of his translations and reject part? Why accept one hundred and five revelations and reject forty-five?

Mormons dare not debate the real issue; they try to substitute another. If an attorney were to produce in court a plate and a bill and prove that the prisoner made both he would be punished, unless he produced government authority authorizing him to do such work. If the prisoner's attorney were to admit that his client made plate and bill, and refuse to produce government authority, and propose that the government attorney throw out his indictment against the prisoner, and lay down a bill that he claimed was made by the government, of another and entirely different kind, proposing to lay down a similar bill made by the prisoner, and that they wrangle over the question which bill most nearly resembled the bill prescribed by the law, would any prosecuting attorney that was not an idiot accede to a demand so absurd? An exact bill does not prove it to be genuine, neither does one lacking in exactness prove it a fraud.

We can prove that Smith was an impostor and that he was not the real author. The only issue to be discussed is, Was Smith inspired? The Latter Day Saints dread a fair investigation. They want to drag others into it. Church propositions is a trick of the Mormons. Mormonism is not what they teach in their first sermons. Mormons should defend what they have that is not in the Bible. They accept Book of Mormon, Inspired Translation, and Doctrine and Covenants. They misrepresent when they say they have only the Bible. Cited Doctrine and Covenants, "As if from my own mouth;" "appoint" his own "successor;" greater than Christ.

Mormon Scriptures excel the Bible; Christ and apostles play second fiddle to Nephites. When you are in the fold they lay aside the Bible and give you the Inspired Translation, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants, as infallible books. In addition it gives to you a pope; yea, more than a pope. If you can swallow all this you are just right to become a Mormon.

ELDER WIGHT'S SECOND SPEECH.

I sincerely hope that no personalities will be indulged. If assertion is all that is necessary to decide this debate, we may as well close now. We should bring proof. He says Latter Day Saints dread fair investigation, and in next breath says their side only should be investigated! Says we sold him our books—a peculiar way to show dread. If a man can't prove he has authority from the government to issue a bill, he is a fraud. Just the issue. Can't he see that he thus puts into my hands a club with which to batter out his theological brains? I never before knew that I kept the Book of Mormon or any of our books in the background. Why, those very books are before us now and I am defending them. He says to hold the Latter Day Saints to the real issue. Why not then investigate our claims from the standpoint of church propositions. We should defend the church. I've been looking for that "darkey in the woodpile" all these years, but have not seen him yet. Surely some one in our ranks should have the courage to tell you about the fellow if they have found him. But this tit-for-tat business is not my way of debating. He says we do not use King James' Bible. I have carried mine till I had to get it rebound. Says we teach that Book of Mormon alone has fullness of gospel, but Doctrine and Covenants 42:5 says that in Bible and Book of Mormon is contained "fullness" of the gospel.

I now return to my affirmative. Jeremiah 16: 14 shows that God is to do a work that is to so eclipse the leading out of Egypt that that event is to be forgotten. He is to send for hunters and fishers to do this work, and you remember that in calling Peter and Andrew Jesus said, "I will make you fishers of men." Jeremiah 31: 9, 10 shows the Lord is to lead them. Is the Bible leading Israel back? "I will keep them as a shepherd doth his flock." He will be with them. That will be present revelation.

Ezekiel 20: 34-38 shows that the Lord is to plead with them face to face. The Lord is certainly to do something. How does he do it? By revealing it to his servants the prophets. (Amos 3: 7.)

BRADEN'S SECOND SPEECH.

He says we can't live without food, hence must have present revelation. We live without present creation, so we live with what God has given in the Bible. God was ages in creating, consummating it in woman. He was four thousand years in revealing till the Bible was complete, and now we don't need it. I defy you, sir, to bring an idea from your books which is not in the Bible.

The work of Isaiah 29 was done by Christ. Not a hint in the Bible of a restoration from the Roman dispersion. Isaiah prophesied of the Assyrian captivity and their return therefrom. He says I made assertions. He seems not to accept his own books. Find from the Bible that Smith had the authority. How many of them preach from these books? You decide it among yourselves if these books are kept in the background. How can we settle a church proposition till we settle what are the Scriptures?

He says he always preached the King James—just what I told you. How many times have you had your copy of the Inspired Bible rebound? If Smith was inspired, he had more right to translate than any other. Jeremiah 16:14 refers to the action under Ezra. Find where in the Bible "last days" refer this side of Christ. Jeremiah 31:10. He can't find in the Book of Mormon where an Ephraimite ever came to America; then why quote prophecies of Ephraim? Ezekiel 20. I defy you to find any reference, except in Daniel, of a hint of any restoration except the Assyrian. Amos 3:7 related to Ezra. B. of M., page 21, par. 118-122, large type edition: This is an unmitigated fabrication. We have three manuscripts that were in existence before the Catholic Church. Show that the Catholic Church ever changed one thing in the Bible.

Smith's manuscript of the Bible was completed in 1832; left in widow's hands till 1863. Smith was to give the exact translation: In 1 John 5:7 an interpolation, also 1 Corinthians 13:5. These errors have been detected and corrected by students, but Smith did not know enough!

SECOND NIGHT—ELDER WIGHT.

He reiterated the premise. The negative has talked of a counterfeit bill. Yes, the counterfeiter is abroad in the land. Has talked about our meeting the issue squarely. It might be well to determine where the fear really is. It is certainly begging the question to accuse of cowardice. I have a paper here, the Church Register, Plattsburg, Missouri, from which I will read:—

"Their [the saints'] work is more dangerous to the Church of Christ than to any other religious body, and has done us more harm than any other people. When we were loyal to our original position and teaching of the Bible in regard to the Holy Spirit, we alone could meet them. Sectarianism could not.

"At present we are no more successful than others who adopt the sectarian position in regard to the Holy Spirit. All should forever abandon the idea that Mormonism is so silly, so shallow, so absurd, that anybody can defeat a Mormon. We have paid a defeat as a price of teaching preachers with such an idea their folly more than once."

And this signed by five men, all of whom I think are present. No wonder they won't debate church propositions! Yes; the counterfeiter is abroad in the land, sure enough! Beware of him!

We have never denied that the Book of Mormon contains the fullness of the gospel, but protest against his statement that it alone does so contain.

Joseph Smith appointed his own successor! Was it more of a crime for him than for Moses and Elijah? (Num. 27; Deut. 34; 1 Kings 2:15.)

"In thee and in thy seed." Not a hint that he is to be a Messiah. Abraham pointed to Christ prospectively, they backward, through the gospel. Creation ceased with woman. True. But we have procreation, and in it the manifestation of present revelation. If God wished me to do a special work, how would I determine it without present revelation? "Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secrets to his servants the prophets."

Says all those prophecies refer to Assyrian captivity. That was their first captivity in Assyria, and God was to set his hand the second time to gather from there and Egypt, and from the islands of the sea. Says Palestine was restored after seventy years' rest. But it did not enter into the condition seen in Isaiah 34, during that period.

Smith was the only one claiming right to build by angelic ministration.

SECOND NIGHT—ELDER BRADEN.

Like him I will run my own side of the question. We read in the Book of Mormon where the Roman Catholic Church took away many things from the Bible. Smith claimed to give just what the authors wrote. The Lord spake unto Moses. Third person changed to first, "I God;" in Book of Mormon, I Nephi; same author. Created spiritually before naturally. The tree became a living soul! Adam-God theory. Satan offers salvation! Adam asked why he offered sacrifices. God called men by Holy Ghost to repent.

Anti-masonic times, hence Master Mahan! Do you get the jingle? "Master Mason." Cain the father of the negro. Represented as having a written language, while it was not had till after the flood. Water baptism way back there. Mormonism complete. Original sin taught. Had the name of Christ. Immortal glory when Moses did not hint of future life. Couldn't Enoch play witty? Heart expanded wide as eternity. Bowels yearned and all eternity sho-o-k. What a bowel-ache! Enoch's city meet New Jerusalem and didn't know of old. Genesis 14 lingo about Melchisedec. All had that priesthood and taken up into heaven. Are you people ready to believe that all these things were had before the flood? Such stuff! The most infamous thing Joe Smith ever did was to lay his hand upon the word of God and stick his balderdash in it. Why is there not a hint in the Bible that these things were before the flood? If Inspired Translation is God's word, King James' is not. The Inspired Translation was made by an anti-proslavery bigot in 1832.

ELDER WIGHT.

The attack made upon the Inspired Translation is parallel with that made by infidels upon King James'. Genesis 43:30; 1 Kings 3:26; Jeremiah 31:20. Their bowels yearned; and Isaiah 16:11, "bowels sound like a harp." Should I descend to the depths of ridicule I could talk about a brass band being somewhere. As one claiming to be a Christian minister I trust I shall never descend as low as my opponent has gone to-night. This answers his entire half hour. Says Ezekiel 20 and Amos 3 were uttered eight hundred B. C. What if they were? It is their fulfillment and not their utterance of which we speak. Tells us Book of Mormon says the Roman Catholic Church would change Bible. It says no such thing. Why put words there that cannot be found? It says great and abominable church. Paul said the mystery of iniquity doth already work. Doctrine and Covenants 42:15. The Scriptures are to be preserved—a true prediction, hence Smith was a prophet. Emma kept them in safety. Compared King James and Inspired Translation in Matthew 8:11, 12; John 3:32, 33.

We believe the Book of Mormon to be a record of the prehistoric Americans. Says scholarship has proved interpolation and changes—agrees with Inspired Translation. Give him rope and he will hang himself. Deuteronomy 13 and 18, how to know a true prophet. J. Smith called the world back to the true God. "In the and thy seed" another prophecy fulfilled; whip Utah people with that. Law of creation now executed in procreation and the foliage and vegetation, we now see demonstrates present revelation. Malachi 3:6, God unchanged; Zechariah 14; Christ to come the second time; Acts 1, in "like manner" as he goes. Angels were sent prior to his first coming, so they will have to be sent prior to his second, or else God will change. Matthew 24, Luke 21; signs were to precede his second coming. Matthew 24:3, "What shall be the sign of thy coming and of the end of the world?" Matthew 24:14, "gospel of the kingdom" to be "preached;" a fine chance for the detector to be applied here. Jesus says, "If any man will do his [God's] will, he shall know of the doctrine."

BRADEN.

He don't know the difference between creation and procreation. God perfected his work in creation, also in revelation. He says we have suffered defeat. Not on those propositions, however; but on acting the fool in discussing them. The Bible is defective; the Book of Mormon is not. Unless Christ's work is defective, there is no place for Joseph Smith. Doesn't he know the difference between answer to prayer and revelation.

Book of Revelation written in year 65 not 98. John says in last chapter, "Come quickly"—right away. Do we need a revelation to preach, baptize, administer Lord's supper, etc.? No.

Calling out of Egypt was first; from Assyria, second. They went to islands, — China, etc. Acts 2, Jews out of every nation under heaven. "I, Clark Braden," in former propositions discussed. Kelley made me put that in. How wide is eternity? Diaz long before published a book advocating the American Indians descendants of Israel. Errors in Bible as found by scholars were not corrected by Smith. The most dangerous counterfeit is that printed on stolen government plates. Isaiah 2, Micah 4, refer to last days of Jewish dispensation. You keep these things in background in your first preaching. Children of the kingdom referred to Jews, Matthew 8:11, 12. What has he quoted from the Bible to show that Joe Smith was a prophet? You Mormons mention one passage he has shown, if you can. Where is his defense of anti-Masonic-proslavery baptism, etc., before the flood?

THIRD NIGHT.—ELDER WIGHT.

Was amused and yet pained that Elder Braden in his closing speech last night told you that I had not made a point. Like the boy, fearing his picture of a horse would not be recognized he wrote beneath, "This is a horse." Why, he insulted your intelligence by such a statement, and your feelings by the depths to which he descended in his expression. Said I could not mention a place where I had used the Inspired Translation twenty times. At Kingsley, Iowa, in fact, I make use of it yet. Made light of tree having living soul. By resorting to his tactics could make fun of a tree having knowledge of good and evil. He distorts the meaning and ridicules his construction. Soul: "The seat of real life or vitality."—Webster. "Thou sun, of this great world both eye and soul."—Milton. He knows we do not teach Adam-God. Why bring it up?

Adam knew God in Edon. Why not Christ? See John 17: 5: "Glorify thou me with . . . glory had . . . before the world was."

Smith entered into Masonry hence could not have been striking at it. Let him prove no written language before flood. Ridicules baptism then Paul says gospel to them. (Heb. 4: 2; Peter; Acts 3: 20.) Says all prophets prophesied of Christ. Jesus (John 8: 5-7) said Abraham rejoiced to see his day. Before Abraham was I am. 2 Peter 2: 5. God saved Noah, a preacher of righteousness. Romans 1: 17; righteousness of God revealed in "the gospel." Scoffs the idea of Adam knowing about original sin. He was the guilty party; he should have known it. Genesis 9: 25: Curse of Canaan is just as likely to have been a basis for slavery and the colored man as Inspired Translation. If blasphemy for Smith to translate, what of Campbell? In preface of his translation Campbell says: "But some are so wedded to the common version, that the very defects in it have become sacred; and an effort, however well intended, to put them in possession of one incomparably superior in propriety, perspicuity, and elegance, is viewed very much in the light of making 'a new Bible,' or of 'altering and amending the very word of God.'"

Says I don't know difference between creation and procreation. Pro. means for. Creation was the act of producing without the existence of previous kind; procreation is creation resulting from the union of kinds. In it we have present revelation. Creation changed in form, not in fact. If Bible is completed revelation, why don't it bring us out of this religious chaos? He confounds revelation with plenary inspiration. Revelation has degrees. Had the brother's prayer been answered it would have been revelation to the extent of the answer. Revelation is to disclose, uncover, make known. Having never met him before, our chairman is a revelation to me. It is immaterial whether John wrote the Apocalypse in 65 or 98 A. D. Was banished to Patmos under Domitian in 95. His predictions have not all been fulfilled. He reads from Acts 2 and then said Jews were in all nations. Don't he know that Roman governors ruled in Judea then? This is the way he meets my argument about God setting his hand the second time—about like all the rest of his Scripture exegeses! "Wide as eternity." Figurative when in King James', but when found in Inspired Translation he literalized. Why so unfair? Suppose I turn to Philippians 1: 8, and ridicule, as has been done by him.

ELDER BRADEN.

Will now examine Doctrine and Covenants. Smith gave one hundred and fifty revelations. There are one hundred and thirty-five in the Utah edition, one hundred and nine in the Lamoni. King Follet sermon the foundation for plural Gods. This book is to be assailed as the real Mormonism—their confession of faith. Page 102 spoken as by God's own mouth. Page 118; the Devil led astray one third of the angels; taken from Revelation 12, in which John was picturing something away down in the future. Page 211; Lucifer, the Devil; Isaiah 14: 12 says it was the king of Babylon. Pages 128, 129; didn't mention slavery. Said Cain was made a black man. Spirits of dead men never called angels. Page 96; baptism of fire; Joe's ignorance. Page 107 "Adam means many"—an ignoramus' blunder! It means man. Page 214; tells us what "telestial" means. Pages 295-299; literal descendants of Aaron. What balderdash! Page 255; Alphas and Omegas, Greek and Latin, ignoramus' blunder. Sum and Bonum—that's Latin for you! Pages 295, 199; no Aaronic priesthood now; Christ only Melchisedec. Page 199; Mormon hierarchy. I'd like to have scripture for more than three of these officers. Page 225; infant baptism and ordination. Page 65; only church. Page 227; all who reject will be damned. Page 75; John to live; Bible said he would die. Bowels hurts my friend. Why not tell us how to measure time in miles and how space can shake? Page 218; Michael; 294, father of all mankind. Book of Mormon don't teach polygamy directly, "for if I will saith the Lord," opens up the way. Page 291; Adam, ancient of days; 79, ancient of days brought before the Father. Adam the Father, God. Judge Philips said the Utah church introduced this, but it is right here in the Doctrine and Covenants, and Kelley put his foot in it when he wrote that out for Judge Philips.

Book of Mormon "fullness of gospel" in three places; Bible in one, page 308 "In thee and thy seed." Paul says Christ, not Joe Smith. Page 226; Book of Mormon new covenant. Page 65, only church on earth. Page 97; blessing children; Christ blessed for five thousand, therefore we should. Two hundred children baptized at eight, with that age the only qualification. Page 332, 35, 38. Baptism for dead—why not practice now? Page 244; feet washing—why not practiced? Pp. 300, 301; tithing mentioned in Old Testament not in New. P. 255; endowments. Utah people consistent with book, p. 109; work miracles when called upon, yet they won't do it.

ELDER WIGHT.

Faith required for miracles; sign seekers not to have them. Jesus could do no mighty miracle because of their unbelief. Lam. 2: 11; Jeremiah's liver poured out on the earth. It is he, not I, that has the ache. They did not know of Ancient America before 1830 in English. Baldwin, 1871, "Ancient America," p. 102; "Native Races," vol. 4, p. 79. Let him read his proof rather than assert it.

Government has to give authority to issue bills. He don't claim any authority from God. Doctrine and Covenants 19: 2 shows that we are to give heed to his words that he received while walking in all holiness. Let him read Exodus 4: 16: "instead of God;" 7: 1: "I have made thee a god to Pharaoh;" Ps. 82: 6: "ye are gods." Had he found this in Doctrine and Covenants, how terrible it would have been! Luke 10: 16: "He that heareth you heareth me." John 10: 34-36: "Ye are gods."

He says Isaiah 2 and Micah 4 were fulfilled in days of Christ! Well, so they have not learned war since then(?). That is his interpretation of scripture!

Now for the Inspired Translation, Genesis 19: 8, King James men were to do with Lot's daughters as they willed; Inspired Translation, they were not to. Exodus 7: 1. Joseph's prediction about manuscript preserved in safety fulfilled; was a true prophet. Had some great man uttered such, he would have been a prophet. Exodus 23: 3, King James, not countenance a poor man; Inspired Translation, not countenance wicked. John 6: 46. "No man hath seen God." Genesis 32: 30, Jacob saw him. No contradiction in Smith's. Acts 9: 7: "heard" "voice;" 22: 9 did not hear voice. In the Inspired it reads alike in both. If Smith were a moral reprobate, why give to the world a higher moral translation?

ELDER BRADEN.

Now is a good time for all Mormons who can't stand it to go out. We only have his word that he preached from Inspired Translation. Did Adam know anything of Christ's glory? If the prophets knew of Christ why don't they tell us? Smith changed his mind on Masonry. I don't have to prove there was a written literature in Adam's time. Is all righteousness in the gospel? Faith, etc.? Can't find a word in Campbell's translation not in the Greek. Smith put in over fifty interpolations. He doesn't seem to know the difference between translation and interpolation. I don't know a set of Kilkenny cats worse than the Mormons; revelation against revelation; dividing into sects—forty or fifty of them; when will they stop? Quoted Acts 2 to set aside assertion that Israel was not scattered before Roman dispersion. How can I have faith to command mountain unless God tells me to? Did not say American antiquities not known prior to 1830. That is a falsehood, sir! Said the idea that Indians were Israelites had obtained.

Page 52 Braden and Kelley Debate; fifty authors to prove it. I don't issue Bible bills; give out the bills God gave. Don't give new revelations. God's mouthpiece, I have no objection to it being there if he were a prophet; but it is folly to apply it to Joe Smith. Isaiah and Micah were fulfilled in Christ. Countenance a poor man. Countenance in face—Thou shalt not browbeat. John 6: 46, seeing God. Hosea, an inspired prophet. Says Jacob saw an angel.

Immoral passages left in Smith's Bible. Book of Mormon teaches revenge. Mountain Meadow Massacre—Joe Smithism gone to seed. Doctrine and Covenants 268, 277, 285, 286, "Avenge me of mine enemies." P. 306; God's vengeance poured out. J. D. Lee murdered in fulfillment of this. P. 194 means this: "Don't get in debt to your enemies, but borrow and purchase on credit, and pay back when you get ready." Lord tells them to steal. In fact that's what they did both in Missouri and Illinois.

FOURTH NIGHT.—ELDER WIGHT.

Deuteronomy 14:21, King James, give or sell flesh that dieth of itself to aliens. Inspired Translation, shalt not give it. Told us last night that King James was his ox; Inspired Translation mine. Why don't he accept Campbell's translation as his "ox," when he defies me to show a word in it not in the Greek? Somebody else afraid to bring their Bible out!

In denying the necessity of present revelation he parallels the unbelieving Jews (John 9:29-34.) "God spake unto Moses, but as for this fellow, we know not whence he is." Jesus says he that doeth God's will shall know of the doctrine. Mr. Braden says he knows God spake for four thousand years, but he won't do so now. Doctrine and Covenants 32:3, can't be saved without faith. I am testing Joseph Smith—testing the bill. Braden says he is circulating God's bill. It is Campbell's interpretation rather than he is circulating. Hebrews 11:6, faith a gospel principle; Smith all right so far. Doctrine and Covenants 2:6, repentance taught. Matt. 3:2; 4:17; John 1:6, with Mark 1, and Luke 3, teach it. Doctrine and Covenants 17:21, baptism by immersion in water. Matt. 3:11, Jesus baptized; Matt. 28:19, Jesus taught; Mark 16:16, Jesus taught. Doctrine and Covenants 32:3, confirmation by laying on hands. God gives Holy Spirit. Same in Acts 8:14-18; 19:6. The test works like a charm in every case; thus far bill is genuine. Doctrine and Covenants 28:3, resurrection of dead. Same in John 5:25-29; 1 Cor. 15:12-26; Doctrine and Covenants 18:1; judged according to deeds. 2 Cor. 5:10, Rev. 20:12, same. He told us last night that Christ is now reigning. If so, I don't want to be here when the "little season" comes. Zechariah says Christ will come to Mount Olivet, and it will cleave in twain. That has not yet been done. Will you take the Bible or Braden? Says no record of dead man's spirit coming to any in form of angel. John says the angel said to him, "I am thy fellow servant and of thy brethren the prophets." Doctrine and Covenants 38:5, virtue; 2 Peter 1:3 teaches same.

Braden says saints fight like Kilkenny cats. When he proves it, I'll meet the issue.

D. C. 42:17, knowledge. 2 Peter 3:18, same. D. C. 6:8; 11:4, temperance. Acts 24:25. D. C. 30:3; Rom. 5:3, 4, patience.

Suppose we do fight like Kilkenny cats, what has that to do with the question at issue?

ELDER BRADEN'S FIRST SPEECH.

He has read you some good things, but what I want to know is, did Smith get them from heaven? Some of the grandest sermons have been preached by the greatest scoundrels that ever disgraced our country. Cowdery to convert Lamanites. Defy him to show that one was converted. D. C. 231; New York and Boston to be destroyed in a little while. Prophecy failed. Page 138; Covill's heart was right. Mormon God saw he had stuck his foot in it, hence gave another revelation. Page 185; Smith to preach in Cincinnati; didn't do it. Page 259; Zion not to be moved; it was. Page 278; Smith's army to conquer; died of cholera; bummed their way home. Page 321; Smith to triumph over enemies; killed in less than two years. Pages 300, 301; one tenth to be paid. Page 193; if don't pay, be burned. Page 109; Joe not to have strength in temporal things; six footer! born tired! Page 140; Smith's family well provided for. Page 202; committee to edit Book of Commandments; page 201, carry to Zion; page 230, money sent to publish it; page 63, one hundred and sixty-three pages destroyed by mob; enough collected to make ten copies—I have one of them. Church accepted that book; revelation entirely changed; revelation addressed to three witnesses not in Book of Commandments; the Lord learned something and changed the revelation, then lied and said they were the same. Exodus 22, Leviticus 15, means if an animal get killed they could give it to the stranger or sell it to an alien. Genesis 6:6 simply indicates a change of purpose in the mind of God. John 29:30, let them prove their claims to working miracles like Jesus did. Says Smith preaches faith—I can say the same of all impostors; they all steal from the New Testament. The Christian dispensation began with the ascension of Christ. Statement of angel to John, "I am thy fellow servant," is doubtful translation. If he will give me file of Herald I will show him where they have wrangled. Beside Smith preaching good things, what proof has he given of his prophetic mission?

ELDER WIGHT'S SECOND SPEECH.

If assertions prove a case he has succeeded admirably. He says he can show from Koran same as I have shown. Why don't he bring that book and prove his assertion? I have a Koran, and it does not teach these things. Says the question is, Did Joseph Smith get the revelation from God? Proposition is: "The revelations that Smith gave to the world are true, and he was a true prophet of God." He calls for miracle. Here is one (reads from "Hayden's History of the Disciples," pp. 250, 251). Just think of him claiming to be a minister of Christ and ridiculing healing when Jesus taught it! We take the Bible as it reads—he doesn't.

I will now continue affirmation. Doctrine and Covenants 17:3; 1 Tim. 6:3; godliness or righteousness; D. C. 38:5, 1 Thess. 3:12, brotherly kindness. D. C. 59:2, Matt. 32:29, charity—love thy neighbor as thyself.

Braden called me a fool. Bible says such an one is in danger of hell fire. Doctrine and Covenants 104:11, Luke 6:13, apostles, special witnesses. Acts 1:7, 8, Holy Spirit made them witnesses. Doctrine and Covenants 107:39, Amos 3:7, prophets. Doctrine and Covenants 104:11, Luke 10:1, 17, seventy. Doctrine and Covenants 104:7, 2 Timothy 4:5; evangelists. Doctrine and Covenants 17:9, Acts 20:17, elders. Doctrine and Covenants 104:32, Titus 1:7, bishops. Doctrine and Covenants 17:10, Ephesians 4:11, 2 Chronicles 15:3, priests or pastors. Doctrine and Covenants 17:11, Acts 13:1, teachers. Doctrine and Covenants 17:11, 1 Timothy 3:13, deacons.

Thus I have shown you the exact counterpart of the gospel and church organization.

1 Corinthians 12:3; man cannot say that Jesus is the Lord without the Holy Spirit. How can Braden say it? The Holy Spirit gave nine gifts. All churches believe in three of them. What right to believe in few and reject so many? Said he could not have faith to remove mountain unless God told him. Just what we have been contending for. He has given his whole case away.

ELDER BRADEN'S SECOND SPEECH.

He has said I falsified their books. A man who says I have read into their books what is not there, is a lying scoundrel! Claim to be filled with the Holy Ghost—acting the hypocrite. Now quit it, sir! Book of Mormon, page 20, what is meant by great and abominable church? God repenting is used eighteen or twenty times. Amos 3:6, evil in city, and God has done it, means his judgments. Speaks of laying on of hands; tries to lead me to change proposition; you can't do it, sir. They are chuck full of signs, but can't prove them. I could bring in spiritists, mesmerists, etc., etc., and they will testify of healing—hundreds of cases.

Do they quarrel? How is it closer home! I am not disputing what was in the apostolic church; it is what he claims in his dispute. I can say by the Holy Ghost that Jesus is the Christ, for we have Holy Ghost's words right here (in Bible).

Read a list of questions and handed to Elder Wight at conclusion.

CONFERENCE NOTICES.

Northern Michigan district conference will convene at Coleman, June 24. Any company of ten or more coming to conference from any one point, who will club together and purchase one company ticket, will get one third off on their fares, and on returning at the same rate. Do not forget to bring your basket with provisions, and thus lighten the burden of others. Those wishing to pay their way at hotels will obtain reduced rates. Everybody come who can; there will be a large gathering, and as usual we expect a grand good time. Let every branch and officer report; send reports to me at Coleman, Michigan. J. J. CORNISH.

DIED.

HISTORY OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS. (Volumes 1 and 2 now ready.)

Provided for by action of General Conference of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Written and compiled by President Joseph Smith and Apostle Heman C. Smith. Invaluable as a correct historical narrative, as a means of conversion to truth, and as a defensive weapon in meeting old and new objections urged against the latter-day work. It contains important documents connected with the establishment, growth, and internal and external affairs and progress of the church. The revelations given in this dispensation are inserted, in connection with accounts of the circumstances under which they were given. Biographical sketches, illustrations, complete indexes, sidenotes for ready reference, etc., are some of the features of the work. Volume 1 begins with the birth of Joseph Smith, the Prophet and Seer, in 1805, and narrates the circumstances of his calling and ministry, the rise of the church in 1830, and until the close of the year 1835. Volume 2 continues the history up to June 27, 1844, —to the assassination of Joseph and Hyrum Smith.

THE KEOKUK ROUTE.

K. & W. and D. M. & K. C. Railways.

The D. M. & K. C. Ry from Des Moines to Cainsville has been rebuilt and that portion south of Van Wert will be standard gauge on or before November 1, 1897.

There is no road in Southern Iowa or Northern Missouri which has more good locations for business men than on the line of the Keokuk Route. More stock of all kinds has been shipped over this line than any road of equal mileage in Iowa or Missouri. (See Missouri Surplus Map at our stations.) The freight and passenger service is not equalled by any road in the state, except the Missouri River trunk lines, with each of which we have union stations and direct connections.

Persons seeking farms can find property at tempting prices; men seeking business locations can find towns with ample territory and settlers to warrant good business. Additional passenger service will soon be given which will add to the growth of the towns.

The towns between Des Moines and Cainsville are particularly well located for business. Look them up. Write to the undersigned for additional information. See folder for map and lands.

GROWING BREADTH OF RELIGIOUS VIEWS IN THE PROTESTANT CHURCH.

THE most interesting feature of the reception given to Archbishop Corrigan at the Metropolitan Opera House on Thursday evening was the participation in it of a number of Protestant gentlemen, prominent in the politics, business, and society of the city. The occasion was one of congratulation to the Archbishop upon having completed twenty-five years of successful labor on behalf of the Roman Catholic Church, and the Protestants referred to not only testified silently by their presence on the stage and in the boxes of the opera house their respect and admiration for the eminent Roman Catholic prelate, but two of them delivered orations in praise of him and his work.

Until within a comparatively short period an occurrence like this could not have happened. Fifty years ago, certainly, there could not have been found in this city a single Protestant who would have been willing to join with his Roman Catholic fellow citizens in celebrating the achievements of a priest of their church, much less to give utterance in words to his approval of them. At a still earlier epoch the universal belief of Protestants was that the Church of Rome was anti-Christ and a spiritual Babylon, fitly described in the Apocalypse as an abominable harlot. The memories of the Spanish inquisition, of the cruelties perpetrated upon the Protestants of Holland, and of the condemnation of Galileo were invoked to stimulate hatred of the scarlet woman and to inspire the treatment as social and political outlaws of all who acknowledged her claims to authority.

How wonderfully this intolerant hatred of Roman Catholics has given way to the advance of civilization, and how it has been succeeded by more genial sentiments, Thursday's celebration is convincing proof. The Roman Catholic Church has not changed its character nor abated one jot of its pretensions to be the only true Christian church. In its eyes all Protestants are schismatics and heretics, and if it could rescue them from their errors by any measures however painful, those measures it would not hesitate to adopt. Undeterred by their consciousness of this fact and seeing only the good done by their traditional enemy our New York Protestants come bravely forward to acknowledge that good and to extol it.

Probably this indifference to Roman Catholic censure through an overpowering admiration for Roman Catholic excellencies may be but a part of the growing indifference to the trammels of all religious authority which has lately become so conspicuous among leading Protestants. The fear of the thunders of excommunication may have been dissipated by the same skepticism as that which has dissipated respect for the authority of the Scriptures and loyalty to the ancient creeds of Protestant ecclesiastical bodies. But, whatever it springs from, it is an encouraging sign of progress in religious freedom and in religious liberality.—New York Sun.

METHODISTS IN DOUBT.

STATISTICS ARE PERPLEXING.

METHODIST ministers are worrying over the fact that the increase in the church membership this year is not equal to their expectations. For 67,467 increase last year they have added only 19,500 members, and the comparison of results alarms many of them. At the Methodist preachers' meeting to be held Monday afternoon they will discuss the situation. Dwight L. Moody will be present, and in the course of his address it is thought he will offer some advice as to ways and means of stirring up religious enthusiasm.

The falling off in the increase has been the subject of much discussion in the church since the publication of an article in Zion's Herald about a month ago which laid the responsibility of the church's meager achievement upon the Epworth league. It was charged that the league was lacking in spiritual aspirations and that in many churches it was nothing more than a social club. The same criticism was applied to the Christian Endeavor society and other young people's societies in connection with churches.

DO NOT AGREE WITH THE WRITER.

Bishop Ninde took issue with the writer of the article, and many pastors opposed the views expressed in the Herald article, among them the Rev. W. T. Perrin, of Boston, who, while denying any decline in the soul-saving efficiency of the church, said the ministry would be to blame if there were.

The Rev. H. C. Jennings of the Western Methodist Book Concern said yesterday: "It is just the swinging of the pendulum. If any cause is to be assigned I think the action of the last conference may have had something to do with it; also the fact that the church is losing something of its eagerness for sensational evangelists. Those who do enter the church are people of solid character. The day of clap-trap is past. I don't think there is any cause for anxiety on account of statistics."

EDITOR THOMPSON'S COMMENT.

David D. Thompson, of the Northwestern Christian Advocate, said: "In the history of the Methodist Episcopal Church in this country there has been an actual decrease in membership sixteen times. The most serious was in 1846, when half a million members left and organized the Methodist Episcopal Church South. For seven years during the one hundred years' history of the church, down to 1874, the increase in membership has been 100,000 or more; with the exception of these years the average increase for the century would be about that of the present year."— Chicago Record.

FORESEES A NEW THEOLOGY.

PROFESSOR HERBERT L. WILLETT, of Chicago University, in an address on "A Religious Forecast," delivered last night before the Congregational Association of Illinois, made the assertion that Christianity has as yet only partly emerged from the confines of heathenism.

In support of this statement the speaker cited the doctrines which have prevailed in the past. He pointed to the tendency to scientific inquiry and the application of critical methods to the scriptures, and, admitting that analysis had thus far been destructive, declared that the removal of error was opening the way for a constructive theology and the growth of a deeper sense of work in the common cause of man.

If the plan favorably reported from committee yesterday afternoon be adopted, the association this morning will establish a ministerial bureau, devised to bring together pastorless churches and churchless ministers. The bureau is expected to be self-supporting. When a minister is supplied with a church through its agency he will make a cash return for the benefit received and the churches for whom pulpits are filled will pay for that service. Action on the matter was deferred until this morning.

Several important matters will have to be decided to-day, among them the fate of the State Foreign Missionary society. The Rev. Joseph H. Selden of Elgin, chairman of a committee appointed a year ago, reported in favor of a more compact organization. The report was tabled, with the understanding that it be called up again.

The Committee on Resolutions was busy all day and will report at this forenoon's session. It will bring to the front the dispute which threatens most to the peace of the association—that on the advisability of making a stand against universalism. Many of the members of the association believed that the Rev. E. S. Carr's proposed resolution demanding strict orthodoxy on the doctrine of retribution would be killed in committee, but committeemen were strenuous in their denials of any clash in their meeting.— Chicago Tribune.

INTERNATIONAL TEMPERANCE CONGRESS.

An International Temperance Congress will be held at Prohibition Park, Staten Island, New York, from July 1 to 6 inclusive.

The object of the congress is to secure an exchange of views so that the different classes of temperance workers may become better acquainted with the work and purpose of one another, and to discuss plans for united effort along such lines as the following:—

1. To prevail upon the 115,000 physicians in the nation to cease prescribing alcohol for internal use, except as they would prescribe other poisons.

2. To bring the leading life insurance companies to acknowledge publicly, what they admit privately, that total abstainers are at least twenty per cent safer risks than moderate drinkers, and then to take the further logical step to grant these total abstainers the benefit of their abstemious habits in lower insurance.

3. To urge upon the more than 300 universities and colleges of America to protect their students by providing clean and anti-liquor surroundings.

4. To see that the millions of children in the Sunday schools are systematically fortified against the drink habit by moral and spiritual arguments, as they are now beginning to be fortified in the public schools by physiological and hygienic arguments.

5. To urge upon the 100,000 clergymen in this country to preach systematically, at least once a month, on temperance.

6. To teach the industrial and commercial classes to recognize the vital bearing of total abstinence on their respective interests.

7. To agitate for total abstinence as a qualification of teachers in our public and other schools—as it is rapidly becoming a qualification of engineers and others who handle complicated machinery, there being found nowhere more complicated workmanship than that of the immortal human minds and hearts, which are placed within the training of teachers.

8. To agitate for total abstinence in the officers and men of the army and navy who are placed, not to defend simply a railroad train, but a government.

Also, there is to be an exchange of views on such questions as, Fermented and unfermented communion wine; Partisan and non-partisan prohibition movements; The best substitutes for saloons.

SPECIAL NAVY SUPPLEMENT.

THE subject of our Navy is one which is all-engrossing at the present time, and the desire for accurate and reliable information concerning our vessels has induced the Scientific American to publish a Special Navy Supplement of 40 pages, with 90 illustrations. Every effort has been made to explain what the Navy is. Comparisons have been drawn, not only between the various types of vessels, but also between different vessels of the same class. The descriptions are couched in untechnical language, and after a careful reading of this number any one can discuss the merits of the various vessels very much as he would talk of the good and bad points of a horse. The clear diagrams showing the differences between these modern fighting machines render analysis of this kind easy. It is beautifully illustrated by half-tone engravings and woodcuts showing not only the naval vessels themselves, but guns, gun turrets, conning towers, steering apparatus, etc. This number has a colored cover and colored map of Cuba. Price, 25 cents. Munn & Company, 361 Broadway, New York, are the publishers.

MR. PATTON AS A PESSIMIST.

President Patton, of Princeton, doesn't take a very high view of the abilities of this generation. In an interview published in a local paper he says:

"This is an age of second-class men. When Bismarck and Gladstone have passed away what really great men will be left? The periods of greatness of literature or statesmanship are recurrent. The Elizabethan age was a marked period; the early Victorian era gave us many men great in statecraft and literature. We have fallen on a barren time now. Mr. Augustine Birrell phrased it very well when he said that the only men who had anything to say were scientists, and they did not know how to say it; and the only men who knew how to say anything were the literary men, and they had nothing to say. In reading Tennyson he said: 'I may put by in my memory the lines that I think are worth remembering. The others I am willing to forget as soon as I have read them.'"

"Is it not remarkable that this generation has not one great poet?" was asked.

"It is a fact," said Dr. Patton. "We are left to choose between Mr. William Watson, who poetizes on poetry, and Mr. Rudyard Kipling. Not that I would belittle Mr. Kipling, for I think that if he ever becomes serious he may still do something worthy. In fact, he has done recently something which seems to bear the mark of inspiration. His recessionary was the literary feature of the Queen's jubilee."—Ex.

PALESTINE.

It is customary with some to thoughtlessly speak of the great and important work done in Palestine as done in a "little corner of the world," but this is exactly the reverse of the truth. Some time ago we wrote an article, which was published elsewhere, in which we took the position that no country in the world could have been better adapted to the work performed, because of it being, in the time of Christ, as near the center of the then known world as possible, and because of its variety of products, scenery, and climate; and also because it was situated on the "highway of nations," thus affording facilities for the spreading of the glad news not surpassed by any nation or country then known to the world. We then, and do now, wonder how any one could speak of it as a "little corner of the world." We see now that "Dr. Theobald Fischer, Professor in Marburg," takes this view of the subject. In an article on Palestine, published in the May and June (1896) numbers of the Geographische Zeitschrift, extracts of which are published in the Palestina, of London, England, for June and July, 1896, occurs the following:—

But another feature made itself felt, which was in strong contrast to that exclusiveness; Palestine's position in the midst of, and in close vicinity to, the great commercial routes of the world. Palestine offered no allurements to the Lords of those routes, but its inhabitants were enabled to introduce their products, material and spiritual, into the traffic of the world. This position of the country showed its effects upon the spreading of the Jews and Judaism about the beginning of the Christian era. The Jews went to Abyssinia, South Arabia, and India; to Egypt, in whose center of commerce, Alexandria, that metamorphosis probably took place, which turned an originally agricultural into a mercantile people; to Barka, where they were very near founding a new empire at the commencement of the second Christian century, and further through North Africa and Southern Europe. Christianity proceeded in a similar way. . . . If the orthodox cosmographers of the middle ages, mainly from religious causes, considered Jerusalem as the center of the world, and marked it as such on the maps, it was not altogether without geographical foundation.

To us this appears to be an important point. In the former dispensation God chose a central point, and one possessing the greatest facilities for the spreading of light, in which to establish his work and set up his kingdom. In like manner he chose one of the central and most important nations of the earth, and the one in which the greatest religious liberty was guaranteed, and hence possessed the greatest facilities for the spreading of light, in which to establish his work and set up his kingdom in the last dispensation. The importance of this should not be overlooked, and to represent God as doing a work, either then or now, which so vitally concerned the whole world, in a "little corner," is misrepresenting him. Dr. Fischer's remarks concerning the present condition and future prospects of Palestine will be especially interesting to the readers of the HERALD. He is quoted as saying:—

The population of Palestine is chiefly an agricultural one; cattle breeding takes only a second place. The cultivation of the ground progresses everywhere, especially in the neighborhood of the towns. Arboriculture—the vine included—ranks first. Jaffa is, for several kilometers, surrounded by orange groves. Olive groves are found all over the country, even east of the Jordan, the largest being those in the neighborhood of Gaza. The fig tree is also cultivated. . . . The production of wine is being carried on on a large scale around Haifa, Jerusalem, Es Salt, and other points, especially about Hebron. Cereals, cotton, sesame, and tobacco are also grown. The wheat of Palestine is held in high esteem. . . . Little cheerful as the aspect is that Palestine presents at the present day, the question as to its future can be answered with the greatest confidence. The moment a wise and benevolent government is established, and the development of the country is aided by good management, a new departure will set in. Even now a progressive movement can be noticed, in consequence of improved communication, and increased European influence. This is most noticeable in Haifa, Jaffa, Nazareth, and, above all, in Jerusalem; in a slighter degree, even in the country east of the Jordan. The small town of Nazareth alone possesses three hospitals, seven convents, and twelve schools of Europeans, in some of which artisans are being trained. In Jerusalem, where the Mohammedan population forms already a minority of the inhabitants, the Jews have seventy synagogues, besides numerous other institutions. Christians of all nations and denominations have their churches, convents, orphanages, schools, etc.

The settlements on the plateau to the north extend to a considerable distance. The narrowly built city harbors within its irregular square of barely four kilometres not less than twenty-four religious communities, twelve of which are Christian. Jerusalem with its ever varying scenes presents now more than ever the aspect of a peculiar cosmopolitan city, of a holy city, the seat and center of three cosmopolitan religions. Even east of Jordan cities, desolate for many centuries, rise up again. . . .

Although the layer of soil may have become somewhat thinner and more broken, and, perhaps, the showers somewhat less frequent and more irregular, yet are the conditions of the country still essentially the same, especially in view of the progress made in the mechanical appliances. Palestine can again become "The South," and the granary of the Southeast Mediterranean and of Europe. It is capable of increasing its population fourfold; i. e., to three millions, or 100 per square kilometer. It only requires a development of its agriculture. . . . The plain to the coast west of the Jordan, with its infinite water supply could support a very dense population, and the conditions are highly favorable for the growth of oranges, cotton, tobacco, sugarcane. On the plateau west of the Jordan also it only wants a husbanding of the water supply, especially a storing up of the winter supply, to turn a large portion of the land into garden plots, such as are found at present only near Bethlehem, Nabulus, Djennin, and a few other places. With increased artificial irrigation more valuable articles could be produced everywhere, for which there would be no lack of good markets in the country or on the Mediterranean, especially in Egypt. The valley of the Jordan could be turned into a tropical garden over its whole extent. Its dates would be like in ancient times, better than any other, and far better than the Egyptian; it would grow oranges, cotton, sugarcane, bananas, and, in winter, all sorts of vegetables. Jericho, now only five days' journey from Berlin, can be reached from Jerusalem by an easy morning walk; it lies 1,050 meters lower than the latter city and its temperature is in January 2° centigrade above that of Cairo; it can again become what it was at the time of Herod, a magnificent winter abode. It would derive additional value from the hot mineral springs in its vicinity, at Tel el Hamman (Ain es Sultan), from the Dead Sea with its glorious scenery and its springs, like Ain Djidi, Hammam es Zerka (Calirrhoë), Ain es Sara and others, from the numerous relics of antiquity all round, from the Jordan, so rich in fish, etc. It is told of Thales of Miletus, that having foreseen a rich harvest of olives, he proved to a scoffer that his philosophy was of great practical value, by buying up all oil presses in Iona, which he let out again, at a high rate after the harvest. In the same manner the geographer of the present day can advise the foundation of a sanatorium at Jericho, in the same way as the German settlers at Haifa intend to establish such an institution on Carmel.

The whole of the land east of the Jordan, from Moab to Hermon and the Hauran is a wheat country which cannot anywhere be surpassed in excellence. The most fertile tracts, exposed to the heat of the sun, after the harvest is ended in May, soon becomes a waste, and have to be evacuated by its inhabitants. But by a prudent storing up of the abundant water supply during winter, it might be made permanently habitable. The many ruins of hundreds of towns and villages show that the district was densely populated before the invasion of the Arabs. Nature itself lends a hand, for the winter rains frequently are gathered and preserved in excavations in the rocks, and to this day remains of such cisterns, covered or open, are extant, by means of which only it was possible for Bosra (Bostra), to become an important centre of the traffic to Damascus. Some of them are still in use, and aqueducts can still be traced, one of which called the Pharaonic, stretches over a length of 44 kilometers. . . . In those days the whole country was probably under cultivation, large tracts irrigated, and the bad harvests rarer.

The cultivation of the whole of Palestine is a tender plant, which necessitates careful nursing and strong protection, it will wither in the absence of either. The districts bordering upon the desert are the theater of a constant struggle between waste and fertility. Whenever a strong hand protects the land, and an organized management prevails, settlers crowd into those territories and move the landmarks of the cultivated land forwards; the settlements gain in population, the latter grows richer, civilization progresses; the cultivated country triumphs over the desert. The reverse takes place as soon as the vigor of the population is being paralyzed.

At the present day small beginnings of a return of a golden age for Palestine are perceived everywhere. Its further development depends upon the course events will take in the East. But the European influences appear so strongly to affect the tottering Turkish Empire, that no reversion in the proceedings set on foot need be feared, though obstacles may have to be overcome. We can confidently say: Palestine possesses not only a grand historical past, but also a glorious future!

To this we add the report of the Agricultural School at Jaffa:—

The managers of the agricultural school at Jaffa have issued their report for the first part of the year 1895-96, and it shows that the results have been, on the whole, favorable. It is well known that all important agricultural operations, such as sowing, planting of trees and vines, etc., are principally done in winter, and that the success of such work depends greatly on the atmospheric conditions of the season. This year the weather has proved particularly favorable. The oldest inhabitants do not remember, in the last twenty years, a winter so mild, and having the rains so well distributed, without hail or storms.

The first rain fell in November, just at the time when the sowing for the winter and other pressing work was at hand. At that period, the soil, hardened by the fierce heat of the summer, would resist the action of the plough, unless moistened by an abundant downpour.

A rain which, with intervals, lasted for six days, and was succeeded by brilliant weather made a proper execution of the first labors possible. All work connected with the growth of barley, wheat, and fodder was actively pushed forward and the fields sown.

December brought a fresh supply of water, again followed by beautiful weather. During this month the olive plantations were attended to, the almond groves extended, preparations made for foresting, shrubberies laid out, the vineyards manured, and the potatoes sown.

In January there was the same succession of rain and good weather, and what frost there was, caused only some slight damage to some of the plants of the kitchen gardens. In this month, the dressing of the vines absorbs the greater part of the work, there is the pruning, the manuring, etc. Here and there the plough is still busy in the gardens and orchards, and the cultivator, drawn by six horses, works in the little garden below, on the site of the old orangery, a clayey corner, which they had improved and covered with maize for fodder.

In March the various growths already showed unmistakable signs of health and vigor; the wheat and barley shot forth capitably, the almond trees were in full bloom, the young almond and olive plantations were thriving beautifully; slight rain showers gave from time to time a new life to the vegetation. Towards the end of the month and the beginning of April, a sharp downpour, preceded and followed by light siroccos, which had no disquieting effects, closed the season.

They have thus happily passed the first period of their activity. They now hope that the summer may not have anything disagreeable in store for them.

It is known that there is a regular series of labor connected with the vineyards. The first work, consisting of manuring, was done in December. But before this the clearing of certain stumps must have been effected, partly for the purpose of destroying the insects that lodge under the bark, and partly in order to extract the superfluous suckers and roots. In January and February the pruning was commenced, but it was quickly finished by the pupils of the school. The pruning was followed in March by the second and third items of work, which consist of extirpating the weeds and breaking the outer crust. At the same time they replaced the stocks wanting in the vineyard of muscatels, adjoining the vineyard Crémieux, they again grafted certain stocks, paid the necessary attention to the new graftings, cut the shoots of the supports, and were actively busy during a portion of the season in weeding out the dog grass.

The first smoking with sulphur, which is done three times a year, was applied in April. It is a preventive of cryptogamic diseases. A different kind of treatment was applied to some vines where some traces of mildew showed themselves.

At the beginning of the season, when it was found that the supply of manure was insufficient, they sowed between the vines on Mount Isaac, where the soil is poor and calcareous, lupines, which were eventually hidden in the ground under the form of green manure. The various proceedings of pruning, weeding, manuring, grafting, smoking, etc., entailed an expenditure of 3,242 francs.

The vineyards are splendid, they look neat and are laden with fruit. If there be not any strong siroccos, the vintage is sure to be satisfactory. Thus far that wind has been very moderate, without having caused any injurious effects.

The new orange gardens are one of the finest works ever undertaken by Mikveh Israel. Almost four hectares are covered with orange trees, and two and a half hectares with fruit trees, of the most delicate varieties, producing apricots, plums, peaches, medlars, pineapples, and bananas. The whole forms a splendid orchard, sheltered from the wind by a triple hedge of mimosas, eucalyptus, and pomegranates.

The total expenditure of this great work does not exceed 30,000 francs; add to this another 5,000 francs for expenses till the period of production has arrived. This will bring it up to 35,000 francs, a very moderate outlay indeed, considering the returns that may be confidently expected. To judge by the Montefiore orangery, which covers no more than a hectare and a half, and which, according to the most moderate calculation, is able to bring an annual return of 4,000 francs, Mikveh Israel may expect their garden to produce upwards of 10,000 francs.

During the winter they were occupied in this garden with filling up holes, weeding, planting the lower portion, regrafting certain stocks, and sowing a few potatoes between the rows of orange trees. Up to the present the cost of this garden amounts to 1,412 francs, besides the cost of the teams.

The almond plantation has, during the year, been enlarged by about one hectare. As the nursery did not offer a sufficient number of stocks, the planting was for the greater part effected by sprouting kernels directly sown on the spot. This system, though successful, is nevertheless inferior to that of using plants from the nursery; the latter are always more vigorous and promise more certain results.

As for the kitchen garden, the greater portion to the sum of 2,050 francs expended on this branch, was absorbed by winter vegetables. There were beans, horse beans, peas, cabbages, beet roots, carrots, artichokes, gourds, salads, spinach, radishes, etc. A number of vegetables were also prepared for the summer.

The principal consumers of these products are the staff and the pupils of Mikveh Israel. If there were, near Mikveh, a market for these vegetables, their cultivation would be a source of considerable profit. As it is, only half a score of families—the gourmands of Jaffa—are being supplied. The Arab is frugal, and prefers being provided for a few pence to using such delicacies.

It must be said, that on the whole, the cultivation of such articles as are difficult to preserve, and for which there is no export in view of the scanty means of communications which this country possesses, is not at all advantageous. Oranges, wine, olives, almonds, and some cereals will most likely, for a long time, remain the sole resources, until new outlets will have been opened.

One of the most interesting of their labors is the foresting. Imagine an immense ravine, broken up in all ways, serving as a breeding place for mosquitos, snakes, jackals, spoiling the aspect of the vineyards, and constituting an ugly spot in the midst of cultivation. This eyesore has to a great extent been transformed into a picturesque plantation. It has been planted over with a great number of trees of various descriptions. This work has occasioned an outlay of 1,000 francs.

In the sale of wine there was startling progress. Whilst last year there was an average sale of scarcely 40 hectolitres per month, it has risen this year to 70 hectolitres, amounting to 2,800 a month. The fact is that their wine is daily more and more appreciated, and that its quality enables them to cope with the constantly increasing competition. A very interesting question arises in connection with this. Will it be possible for their sale of wine to remain thus steadily increasing, considering the incessant progress of the wine culture in Palestine, and the extension of Jewish colonies which produce wine of all qualities and values? Will it be of advantage to Mikveh Israel to continue extending its vineyards? Whether it will be possible for them to sell their wine much longer with the same facility and the same profit, is a question which it would be difficult to answer before another two or three years will have elapsed; before the colonies of Zichron Jacob, Rehobot, and Rishon-Le-Zion will have disposed entirely of their enormous stock of wine, and of the stock which the various Jewish vineyards have commenced producing.

Nevertheless it appears that the question as to the further increase of the vineyards of Mikveh Israel should be answered in the affirmative. The only untoward results in the wake of new plantations can only be a stagnation, or decrease in the disposal of wine, and this consideration they think, ought not to stay their hands. If there is a crisis in store in the commerce of wine in Palestine, the crisis will anyhow affect them. Supposing even the worst that could happen, that they were obliged to sell their wine at 15 francs the hectolitre, the half of their actual price, even in that case every hectare of vineyard would produce almost 250 francs, and although, at the present moment, a hectare produces on an average of 500 francs annually, yet it is an average remuneration of 250 francs, an income by no means to be despised, especially as they have land in abundance, and would be able to increase the output to about 2,000 hectolitres. Even in that case the vine would be more remunerative than either cereals or farming.

The following from the Palestina for June and July, 1896, will serve to show the interest taken by the Jews in the products of their native soil:—

THE PALESTINIAN EXHIBITION IN BERLIN.

Nothing is more calculated to bring the practical results achieved by Zionists, of all shades, before the eyes of Western Europe than the Judæo-Palestinian Exhibition in Berlin.

It forms a part of the International Exhibition opened some weeks ago by the Emperor of Germany. A special division "Cairo" forms a sort of annex to the general exhibition, and it is there that a committee of Berlin Jews, under the leadership of Dr. Hirsh Hildesheimer and Herr Willy Bambus, arranged for the exhibition of such products from the colonies of the Holy Land, as would best demonstrate the practicability of a Jewish colonization of Palestine. The Judische Presse gives a description of the spectacle this exhibition presented during the first days after it was opened, which shows that it promises to prove a success in every way.

On the "Pyramiden Platz" the Edû Temple has been erected, which contains the collections of the Khedive and the sugar exhibition. Opposite this building, by the side of the Kaih-Bey Mosque with the graves of the Khalif's a plain structure rises up, whose colossal unhewn stones and mode of construction, gives the impression of the tower of a fortress of times long gone by. This peculiar building, by its architecture, and its clever imitation of old, weather-worn masonry, reminds one of the tower of David, in Jerusalem, and it is there that the Palestinian exhibition is housed. A wooden porch, roughly put together, and richly festooned with flowers, bears the inscription in Hebrew and German, "Products of Jewish villages in Palestine." Neatly worked chairs and tables are placed in abundance before the entrance. The sight that strikes the visitor on entering is astonishing indeed. Architecture and art have combined in producing really grand results. The walls painted in a soft white are adorned with arabesques representing palms, vines, etc., and are more-over ornamented with a number of scripture texts all round in large Hebrew letters, all bearing reference to agriculture. Opposite the entrance we read: "A land of wheat and barley, and vines and fig trees and pomegranates, a land of olives and honey."—Deuteronomy 8: 8. On the left: "The fig tree ripens its green figs, and the vines are in blossom and give forth their fragrance."—Song of Songs.—2: 13. On the right: "With fat of lambs, and rams of the breed of Bashan, and goats, with the fat of kidneys of wheat, and of the blood of the grapes thou drinkest wine."—Deut. 32: 14.

The back wall of the room is occupied by a pyramid of enormous wine casks, the top one of which exhibits a "Hechsher" (license) from the Chief Rabbi of Jerusalem, Rabbi Saul Eliashar. The room is crowded with throngs of visitors, both Jewish and Christian, the latter of whom express a desire to taste the "Jew wine." It is amusing to witness how pleasantly disappointed most of them are. They put the cup to their lips with a rather anxious grimace, quite prepared to swallow down some very doubtful concoction; but their features relax at every sip, and but few go away without some words of praise as to the quality and low price. And it is quite deserved; the wine is excellent, both the sweet "Esra mark," at 20 pfennige (2½d.) a glass, and 1½ mark (1s. 6d.) the bottle; the red "Rishon L'Zion" wine, at 25 pfennige (3d.) the glass, 1½ mark (1s. 9d.) the bottle; and the cognac. The latter, although still young, is of excellent quality, and better than most of the French second class cognac, and sells at 15 pfennige (2d.) a glass, and four mark (4s.) the bottle.

The second room contains the other products of the Holy Land. It is larger, but decorated in a manner similar to the first. Here again the Scripture texts are a prominent feature. They are the following: "Drink thy wine with a merry heart."—Ecclesiastes 9: 7. "A land wherein thou shalt eat bread without scantiness."—Deuteronomy 8: 9. "Thou shalt not lack anything in it."—Deuteronomy 8: 9. "The mountains shall drop down sweet wine, and the hills shall flow with milk."—Joel 3: 18. "I cause thee to drink of spiced wine, of the juice of my pomegranates."—Song of Songs 8: 2.

One side wall gives the names of the Jewish villages in Palestine, and the others are decorated with photographic views of the colonies and the agricultural school, Mikveh Israel, and with two superior maps of Palestine. The products are exhibited on long tables. Not less than twenty-three glasses contain specimens of various cereals and pulse, and samples of each are placed on plates for examination. Such visitors as have some knowledge of agriculture express surprise at the quality of the wheat, and the size of the lupins, maize, etc. Even during the very first days of the exhibition more than a hundred farmers applied for, and obtained samples of various kinds of corn, while corn merchants and middlemen show a particular interest in the specimens of wheat exhibited here.

The general public, that have no special knowledge of the quality of products of the soils, are chiefly interested by the exhibition of the silk; there are the cocoons, the silk yarn, and the colored materials, as worn in the Holy Land by the well to do as Keffijes. It has a special interest for the ladies; they admire the beautiful textures, and their astonishment is increased by an inspection of the perfumes, and especially by the eau de Cologne, manufactured in the colony of Yessud Hamaalah. Thousands of bottles might have been sold, there is a constant demand for them, but the small supply was already sold on the second day of the exhibition, and a further supply has been ordered. Besides these products, there are the jellies prepared from all sorts of fruits, the mixed pickles, liquors, and, especially the olive oil and honey.

Besides these products of agriculture in its widest sense, there are the well-known carvings in olive wood and stone, made by Jewish turners of Jerusalem; they include a few masterpieces, such as a "Sederdish," a work box, etc. All exhibits have not arrived yet; for instance, such fruits as have not yet been gathered. But varieties of almonds and apricots are already on their way to Berlin, and other fruits will be sent on. Numerous photographs, not only of the colonies, but of memorable sites and monuments are also offered for sale.

Jaffa oranges are now sold on the English markets at about one shilling three pence a dozen (thirty cents).

THE SOLDIERS AND THE CHURCHES SOUTH AND NORTH.

OF late years the soldiers of the South and the North who wore the gray and the blue have practically and actually set aside all differences and become united in the common cause of our country; leaving all past causes of separation and division with the history of the past. This feeling and sentiment which developed some years ago, has been perfected since the outbreak of war with Spain. However, our Methodist, Christian, Baptist, and other churchmen, who separated into divergent bodies known as "North" and "South" churches, have not yet become reunited in the bonds of fraternity and peace.

True, they have fraternized together through committees and talked over such reunitions of separated church divisions, but have not been able to complete the unity for which they have labored. Why is it that our government militant army of men sent into the field as soldiers have exceeded them in this respect?

Is it possible that there is more unity of sentiment in those partaking of our national American spirit than among those making claim to represent the unity of Christ and his doctrine? Something surely is lacking, with this state of affairs continuing.

The boys of the blue and the gray have set a commendable example to the separated church bodies. The spirit in which they have greeted one another in the common cause of our country against oppression is highly Christian in character. Worthy of note, too, in this connection, is the hearty reception to the sixth Massachusetts regiment by the people of Baltimore, as that body of troops passed through that southern city enroute south. In '61 the sixth Massachusetts was stoned and mobbed and shot at in the streets of Baltimore, but in '98 it is met with every possible demonstration of fraternity and affection—garlands of flowers, food, and warmest demonstrations of welcome greeting them from the citizens of the monumental city.

It appears that some of our churchly brethren will have to wake up and keep step to the music of national unity.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

BRO. J. M. TERRY, Chicago, Illinois, June 7:—

All goes well so far; good spiritual meetings, an increased desire to work, and a general rallying of forces. Feel encouraged and shall try to recognize no discouragement.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

BRO. A. B. PIERCE writes of good work being done by the young people and others of the branch of Providence, Rhode Island. The aid society and other organizations for good were doing much in various lines of effort to make the work spiritually, socially, and generally attractive as a force for good. The musical, literary, and other talents of saints and friends were being developed in the various social and other services. The Providence Journal in a late issue had commended their work in terms of no uncertain praise.

Students of the world's progress want Public Opinion, which contains a weekly summary of the best thought of the times. Its political, religious, literary, and general columns are up to date and full of matter of importance and interest. The subscription price is $2.50 per year. Address the publishers, No. 13 Astor Place, New York.

We thank brethren who have sent us a report of the Central Nebraska district reunion, held in a grove near Shelton, Nebraska, the first week or ten days in June. Brn. James Caffall, J. W. Waldsmith, W. E. Peak, S. D. Payne, C. W. Prettyman, L. Gamet, J. M. Stubbart, T. J. Sheldon and others of the ministry were present. A pleasant and profitable season was enjoyed; seven were baptized. Sunday school and Religio meetings were held, in addition to the preaching and prayer services. All were so well pleased that another reunion, in 1899, was decided upon, and Brn. W. E. Peak, S. D. Payne, and F. A. Smith appointed a committee to appoint time and place and to make all necessary arrangements therefor. Reunions have become so abundant that the HERALD has been obliged to omit publication of regular reunion minutes. Brief reports or outlines thereof are acceptable however, and in keeping with our limited space and the growing demands upon it.

Brn. A. H. Smith and J. R. Lambert returned on Monday, the 13th, from attendance at conference of the Nauvoo and Decatur districts, held at Keb and Hiteman, Iowa.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

"With peace that comes of purity
And strength to simple justice due,
So runs our loyal dream of thee;
God of our fathers!—make it true.

"O Land of lands! to thee we give
Our prayers, our hopes, our service free;
For thee thy sons shall nobly live,
And at thy need shall die for thee!"

ONLY A LITTLE WHILE.

"GOOD morning, Mrs. Raymond. I am very, very glad to see you; but you have found me wearied and out of sorts. I always feel so—and I can't help it—when my housework is not properly done; my baby has been so sick and cross for a week, I could not attend to anything but him and the cooking. I can't bear to live in such shape—but I can't help it."

"I heard he was sick, and came in to help you," replied the caller, at the same time turning her attention to the sick child in the cradle. "How is he this morning? Don't you feel better, dear?"

He recognized the gentle voice and feeling expression of the kind neighbor.

"He is awful sick, and always was a sick, troublesome child; and sometimes I think—I don't know but 'tis wicked—that we both would be better off if he should die."

"Very true in regard to the little ones, for no doubt they are saved in the fold of Christ, and thereby escape all of life's woes; but it cannot be so without deeply lacerating our very souls. None but those who have had the experience can tell. So, dear Mrs. Kimball, fold him in the bosom of your fondest affections, regardless of your household cares, for it is only a little while that we can have them at the longest," replied one who had been bereft of her children at different ages, and had seen the last one of her surviving children go out into homes of their own. "We will admit," she continued, "that it is very hard and oftentimes tedious to care for our sick ones and attend our household duties too; but such has been the experience of many women, such is the experience of many, and such will be the experience of many more. 'Tis the common lot of women, who move in life's common sphere; but 'tis only for a little while, though the days and the nights may seem to be very long."

"I suppose it is so, but it is awful tedious to have a sick child to care for, two children to get ready for school, and the work to do for a husband and a hired man—and at just such a time too. I tell you 'tis awful, Mrs. Raymond," was the reply, accompanied by expressions suited to the emotions of one who felt that no woman ever had quite as hard an experience as she had, notwithstanding she had a good home, a kind husband, and not a large family.

"I know it seems to be very hard, and especially when our mental and physical powers have been overtaxed. Then we can see how weak we are in our own strength, and how necessary it is for us to draw from the great source of strength. There is no time in a woman's life that she so much needs the aid of a higher power as she does when rearing her family. She needs first to have a thorough understanding of her business, that is, strive to have an understanding of each new experience, as it presents itself; she also needs patience, wisdom, and grace every moment, that her labors may be crowned with success; no failure so great, so awful as a family failure, and we are sorry to say it is quite as often caused by the wife as by the husband," was the thoughtful and true answer.

The little sufferer fell asleep under the soothing influence of the kind woman, and the mother had a few moments to rest and collect her thoughts, after expressing her feelings.

"Before marriage I thought it would be only a delightful pastime to have a good companion, a nice home, and a few children—had I known the reality of such a life, the responsibilities of such a life, I never would have accepted the situation. I would sooner be called an 'old maid' all my days than have such care, such anxiety."

"Many a young, inexperienced girl has thought as you did, and a large number of them have met more trying, more stern realities than you have had to contend with; but by perseverance and a struggle for self-possession have come off conqueror; and in old age could look back on their past experience with regrets over their indulgence in weakness, but with joy that they had with the help of God won the victory and been crowned with success. There can be no victory without labor; no victory without a warfare."

"Just so; but I can't have patience with children; I never was used to them, neither was I ever maid of all work till after I was married. If I was not married I never would be. And I've heard many a woman express the same, and seen others who wanted to." The intonations accorded with the sentiment, and she childishly administered to the needs of the little sufferer.

"Certainly, certainly. I have known tired mothers to feel just as you do; but the frequency of the case does not prove that it is the best method—the right method. God created the world, created mankind, and made certain laws by which all things are governed, each in its own order, from the most minute object up to woman. Woman—the crowning work of the Creator—who can deny it? The last act in every well-arranged program is always the best. We do not try to prove our point, by referring to those who have dwarfed their physical or mental powers by ignorance—or by willfulness; but to woman as designed by her Creator. Now, Mrs. Kimball, please don't be offended at my plain remarks, for you know I have had a broad experience, and am one of your best friends, consequently wish to make a few suggestions, hoping you will study the same and profit thereby." This remark was expressed in a manner that gave evidence of her sympathy and kind wishes toward the other. "If generations before us had rightly filled their mission—that is if they had understood their work and faithfully performed it, from beginning to end—one generation after another, children would be less troublesome and parents would have more strength and more patience."

"I don't fully understand you, Mrs. Raymond," replied the one addressed, her countenance assuming a look of interest.

"Well, I will try and make it plain: If mothers as well as fathers, if young women as well as young men, all had lived consistent lives in every sense of the word, our cemeteries would not be so full; our asylums, our hospitals, would not be so thronged, our present mothers would not be so weak and nervous, and their offspring would be a comfort instead of an annoyance. Less than a century ago children were considered a blessing—an honor. In many cases of late they are considered the reverse, and what is the cause? A perversion of God's laws. And the result is a curse upon humanity.

"There is too much struggle for popularity, for style, and eminence; and what is the result? Let the beholders answer.

"If people only would be satisfied to live on a pure, consistent plane of life, generations hence would bless their memory. 'Tis only a little while that mothers can do their work, and we are glad that some of them are trying to do their work faithfully. Mothers; yours is the greater work on earth. On you rests the destinies of nations. Let man boast of his great power, but what is he without a mother?"

"May mothers rightly govern themselves, and thereby perform their designed work in the manner that will insure them the plaudit: 'Well done, thou good and faithful.'"

Dear mothers, it will be only a little while.

PRAYER UNION SUBJECTS.

MEMORY VERSES FOR JUNE.

Thursday, June 16.—Missions and Sunday school work, and the church publications. Also for the poor, the sick, and afflicted.

Memory Verses.—D. C. 1; Matt. 25: 32-47.

Thursday, June 23.—Zion, our country, its welfare and prosperity, and its speedy purification by the reception of truth. That the scattered remnants may be gathered in, and the kingdom of Christ be established.

Memory Verses.—D. C. 45: 4-15.

PRAYER UNION.

SPECIAL REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.

SR. PAULINE RUBY, of Omaha, Nebraska, earnestly desires the faith and prayers of the Prayer Union in behalf of herself, that it may please God to restore to her her hearing; for her sister, Mrs. C. M. Bell, who has heart and stomach trouble; and for her niece, Mrs. Jennie Thomas, who appears to have a cancer in her head. The latter is not a member of any church, but has faith in the promises of God. Sr. Ruby has been promised the blessing she asks, if her faith fails not, and she entreats your prayers that God may strengthen her faith.

UNDERWOOD, Ont., May 31.

Editors Herald.—"Marrying and giving in marriage" is the order of the day. We are pleased to notify Herald readers of the marriage of Alice, youngest daughter of Alexander Clark, of Waldemar, to Mr. Archie McLean, of Toronto branch; both members of the church. Wedding occurred last Wednesday at residence of bride's father, where a distinguished company were present, some coming from British Columbia, Idaho, and one from Lamoni, Iowa, ye Editor's wife. Elder R. C. Evans tied the nuptial knot.

This makes the second marriage this year among the daughters of Bro. Clark. It seems they are in great demand; howbeit, be it known to all ye single men that only one more daughter remains to pass through the ordeal—the last but not least, and unless ye manifest diligence ye shall lose your reward. The happy couple have taken up residence at Toronto.

The wedding festivities had scarcely broken up when another event of pleasing importance was hailed with delight—this time a uniting of our northern branches in a two-days' meeting at Garafraxa branch. It was a grand success. Saints from Arthur, Egremont, Proton, Masonville, Cedar Valley, and surrounding country turned out abundantly, while Gentiles caught up the spirit of the time and so were numbered among us. Meetings were crowded from first to last. Report says that fully nine hundred people were in attendance at our Sunday afternoon service to listen to an Elder Evans' two and one half hours' sermon; so great was the crowd that we had to take possession of Isaac Taylor's barn in order to accommodate the multitude.

The prayer service was spiritual, the gifts being manifest to encouragement of saints and to the calling of Douglas Cameron to office of priest.

The work has a progressive appearance in this northern clime, and why should it not? Is it not recorded that Israel is to come from the "north country?" I am alone in this northern field, which extends to the north pole, and in breadth it reaches the two oceans. I trust that ye apostles, prophets, and bishops will in future recognize the locality of the ten tribes by sending us help.

Unity is increasing among saints, while Israel in Babylon are clamoring for greater light. Shall we lay down the armor, put out the candle, or hold our peace until our brethren in the dark shall see the light? I pray not.

Yours in the work,

DANIEL MACGREGOR.

LOOKOUT, Cal., May 29.

Editors Herald.—While the General Conference was in session I was preaching at Santa Rosa. I patiently waited for the news of its proceedings. We were anxious to know what would be done for this State. Thanks to the Quorum of the Twelve for remembering it so well.

I spoke sixteen times there and eight times at Fulton, a little town near by. At first I announced but three meetings at the last named place, for I was very anxious to get through in that region and move on to this part; for the saints here had already sent the money to bring me. I also wanted to give myself time to stop and hold a few meetings at Auburn and Sacramento while enroute. I closed there on a Friday evening. I had a fair audience and interest that night. The saints thought I ought to remain longer, and so did I; but I decided to go to Santa Rosa and start from there to Sacramento the next day. That night I dreamed I was holding church at Fulton and intended to continue over Sunday and that it was very important that I should. "But," I thought to myself, "I have spoiled it all, for I have already dismissed and I am now at Santa Rosa and aim to go to Sacramento to-morrow." The dream impressed me very much. I did not know it was from God, but thought it might be, and I believe it is much better to heed such admonitions than to risk your own judgment in a direction in which we have not received anything that resembles divine counsel. Some saints make a mistake in applying human reason, cold calculation, to revelation. It must be received upon faith, and it sometimes takes more to accept one than to get it. We are benefited, it appears, just to the extent that we have the Holy Spirit to interpret and appropriate what comes from God. The size or number of revelations does not constitute the pivotal point, but our power to understand. A little dream very often means as much as an open vision or an angelic visitation, if properly interpreted.

I sometimes find myself inclined to accept only what harmonizes with my own feelings, failing, it seems, to realize that the Lord knows more about anything than I do. May I ask, How many of the saints can unreservedly say with Paul, "I have confidence in God?" I am not certain I can, for there is enough of the carnal mind about me that I am not willing under all circumstances to have my ideas of propriety reversed.

Not having any appointment at Sacramento, nor any dream calling me that way, I concluded to remain. Accordingly I gave out other appointments and stayed more than a week longer and by so doing baptized two that I believe will be an honor to the cause. One was ready, and the other all but ready to enter the kingdom when I prepared to leave. My stay in that country was made pleasant by Bro. Lewis Cooper and daughter Etta, by an occasional drive. It does one good to look at nature, especially in this State where she is so gorgeously arrayed. For some time I have been trying to cultivate my mind, but now I am seeking more to enlarge my soul and improve my body, and natural scenery helps amazingly.

Bro. Alex. Schelling loaned me a bicycle while there, which I found very convenient in passing to and fro. I shall not forget the kind ministrations of others "whose names are in the book of life," among whom I will mention Sr. Jennie Page and always-on-hand, Sr. Tupper. May God bless them all.

I held twelve meetings at Auburn and three at the capital city. Upon the last of two short visits to the latter place I met Bro. D. L. Harris and heard him preach twice. He was on his way home from General Conference. I must say in this connection a good word for the saints there. The most of them are living as near the standard of this latter-day work as their surroundings will at all admit. It really takes more of God's grace to keep up interest in his work when a person is following an avocation where his associates are not friends to grace to help him on to Him than is required for one who is wholly engaged in gospel work. Indeed, I am willing to concede that the standard of spirituality generally is as good out here as anywhere I have been, but I am also free to admit that I have not lived under "the droppings of the sanctuary" as much as some. Justice, however much I might be inclined to be merciful, requires me to state that some who profess to be saints do not work at the trade very much.

The following dialogue represents the condition that exists to some extent here as well as elsewhere. He who runs may read:—

Minister: "Is your Pa a Christian?"

Little Boy: "Yes, sir; but you can't tell it on him."

However, the spiritual status is not as far below what it is East as some believe. The East (significant word that) has not as great a monopoly on things lovely and of good report as a few are wont to think. Some of those who write from there to the church papers are like the man who wore red magnifying glasses when he ate cherries to make them look large and luscious. In other words, they have the land-agent faculty. It is, of course, when not extreme, an enviable trait; for it is good to be able to look on the bright side, to be as optimistic as the facts will allow.

I came to this place the 20th inst. The saints appeared to be and I think, really were glad to see me. I like to be in this country because my health was better here than anywhere in the State. If I were to remain long enough I believe it would become permanently good.

When I was here before the Spirit spoke to me, as I believe the following words: "In a way thou hast not looked for I will bless thy labors here." It came like a telegraphic communication. It is the last line except the word "God," "I" being used instead, of the following verse of poetry which I had often used to console myself when discouraged and heavy-hearted:—

"Be not weary or distrustful, O, thou servant of the Lord,

Though thy work seem fruitless labor, thou shalt reap a rich reward.

Work not with a faltering spirit though no sings of life appear,

In a way thou hast not looked for God will bless thy labors here."

Bro. William Newton, who was with me at the time, asked me what I understood by the word "here." Did it mean this locality or the world? I replied that it meant my labors generally. Since I came here this time the following words were given me in a dream: "You can do more good here than anywhere else." Now what did it mean? May not its meaning include both? It will not mean practically anything unless I do my part. What little experience I have had in regard to divine communications has convinced me that God oftener indicates what may be than what will be. The fact that a person is represented in a dream or otherwise as being in a certain condition or position is no evidence that he will ever reach it. An individual may have a vision of heaven, and then go to hell if he starts in that direction and heads that way long enough. If a certain point is reached it will be because certain conditions have been complied with or intermediate steps taken. The man who believed he would meet with three surprises in heaven and among other things said, "I will be surprised to find myself there," was evidently mistaken upon this point. No man will go there unless he purposes to, so when he gets there he will not be astonished. I once dreamed that I went to Monroe City, Indiana, and presented the gospel and that forty people accepted it. I went there and preached with ordinary attendance and interest, had much opposition to encounter. My brother, Charles Barmore, was with me. He dreamed that faithfulness and the gift of continuance were required to make the work there a success. I dreamed of seeing a man with whom we stopped one night arise in an audience, apparently an assembly of saints, and tell about the light that had dawned upon his mind since he obeyed the word of God. We went away and never returned, as a consequence there are no saints there. Whose fault is it? This occurred in the autumn of 1894. In how many cases are the saints to blame for the failure of certain persons to accept the truth? Sometimes the failures of humanity are charged upon God.

I know people who are floundering upon the shoals and sands of doubt because a certain manifestation failed, when the fault is theirs. Nearly all of God's promises are based upon conditions, and he is the judge as to whether they have been fulfilled or not. He told the saints to build a temple and the city of Zion, but they failed to do so, and he revoked the command, which he says he has a right to and does do. It isn't right to put forth human hands to steady the Lord's ark, but to stand still and see his salvation and yet, we as lively stones are built up a spiritual house. We must strive, however, according to the law if we expect to be crowned.

There are some things about this latter-day work, some things about God's ways, I don't understand. All of my expectations have not been realized, but I have thereby learned that God sometimes causes our disappointments and the shattering of our plans and opens doors through which we pass into the enjoyment of brighter things than we even imagined. My likes and dislikes, I have discovered, have nothing to do with God's choices. It has become a proverb among Latter Day Saints that a revelation is like lightning, no one knows where it is going to strike. It is best to let God's will, not ours, be done. Many of the sectarian people are willing to believe the gospel so far as it is in harmony with their creeds, and some saints have little creeds with which they want to harmonize God.

Heaven forbid that I should ever pit my judgment against Jehovah's wisdom. I am justifiable in using the best wisdom I have until God speaks, but then I must keep silence. There is then no place for self-assertion. I must remove my hat, take my shoes from off my feet, tamely submit and humbly acknowledge that he is omnipotent and omniscient, not I. We should ever remember that "God is his own interpreter,

And he will make it plain."

Again:—

"Judge not the Lord by feeble sense,
But trust him for his grace;
Behind a frowning providence
He hides a smiling face."

It is certainly a mistake to think a certain thing is not from God because circumstances, are, at a certain time, against its realization. The Lord does not work according to human time. Anything from him has as much time in which to vindicate its truthfulness as he has years in which to live, though it may not take that long.

"Truth crushed to earth will rise again;
The eternal years of God are hers."

Yours, laboring for and hoping to soon see her triumph,

ALMA C. BARMORE.

TABOR, Iowa, June 7.

Editors Herald:—The Wight-Braden debate is moving along very nicely. We are perfectly satisfied with our part of the work. The disputants are very spirited, and earnest in their arguments. Bro. Wight is behaving himself wisely, and doing his work very pointedly; Mr. Braden is doing his best, as he should; but we see no reason for fear. We are hopeful and rejoicing in the truth, for it alone will triumph. We are seeking to God for help, and the Master has said, whose word never fails, we shall find. To him be praise and honor forever for the needed help thus far bestowed.

Bro. Wight has been amply supplied. He is cheerful and encouraged, knowing that God is at the helm, and that he will direct by the Holy Spirit of promise to his name's honor and glory.

We are assured that our work, which we know to be of God, will suffer no loss in this part of his moral vineyard through this debate, but to the contrary, good will be done, and the truth be made to shine the brighter, the folly of man be seen, and the power of God manifested. Honest souls will receive the gospel and rejoice in hope of immortality and eternal life. More anon.

Yours in the truth of God,

HENRY KEMP.

HENDERSON, Iowa, June 6.

Editors Herald:—Please allow me room in your columns to say to my correspondents that they are not forgotten, even though they may be neglected. I can't say that I am very busy, for I am not. Farmers in this country are too busy, just now, to attend meetings of week-day evenings. Were I better acquainted in my mission I might manage better, and do more; but as it is, I have to make haste to go slow. Trust to get acquainted with the saints, and the needs of the work in the two districts (Pottawattamie and Fremont), as fast as circumstances will permit, and shall use my best endeavors to advance the cause of my Savior both among saints and sinners.

I shall expect, and have good reasons for believing that I shall receive, the hearty cooperation and good will of the saints in the two districts. Have attended the conferences of both districts, and was pleased with the unity of purpose and the Christlike spirit manifest on both occasions.

My address, for the present, is Henderson, Mills County, Iowa. Anyone desiring work done in his or her locality will please write me here and, if practicable, I shall be glad to respond. I want to get out of those parts of the mission that have been well and thoroughly worked, just as soon as possible, and open up some new fields and work those which have been more or less neglected. It is far more pleasant to work among the saints, but, as missionaries are not out on pleasure excursions, we can't always do that which is most pleasant, and have a clear conscience at the same time. And the saints will please bear in mind that they can greatly assist the missionary in getting into new fields, especially when the missionary is a stranger both to the people and the country.

Bro. Joseph Carlson is here now, and is a bright young man, well informed in the work, and anxious to be about his "Father's business."

Brn. Kemp and Hilliard were with us at both conferences, alive in the work and using their influence to enliven others. Bro. David Chambers was at the Pottawattamie district conference and, while I did not hear him preach, I was well pleased with his zeal and humility.

Hoping, praying, and laboring for the interest of Zion, I am as ever,

In bonds,

Editors Herald:—In General Conference minutes in Bro. Joseph Luff's report, page 81, is a statement that may carry with it the thought that I have labored in Florida during the last year, which it may be proper for me to explain. There is a settlement on what is known in Southwestern Colorado as the "Florida (Flo-re'-ta) River," where I held several meetings; but I have not been in the State of Florida in the last year.

THE FAITH THAT CURES.

IN the Medical Record, which is a weekly journal of medicine and surgery, published in New York, in the number for last May, we find an article under the above title. In it the question of healing through faith as a legitimate therapeutic measure is discussed calmly and judiciously. The aim of the physician being the cure of disease, anything by means of which this end can be reached is worthy of scientific study. The fact, which admits of no doubt, that many persons, condemned by competent physicians to a life of incurable suffering, have been cured by means of prayer, led the great Dr. Charcot to investigate the subject, with the view of determining if possible the extent and limitations of the therapeutic miracle. He does not pretend that science is yet in position to explain all the puzzling facts embraced under the general term miraculous, but he holds that the frontiers of the supernatural in the therapeutic miracle are steadily receding, and he doubts not that eventually the complete solution of what but a few years ago was one unfathomable mystery will be reached.

As a fair sample of the whole, he takes the well-known case of the Demoiselle Coirin, who was cured miraculously after fifteen years of suffering. Her troubles began in 1716, following a fall from a horse, in which she struck her left side against a heap of stones. She began soon after to have vomiting of blood, and three months later the left breast became hard, swollen, and purplish in color. This became gradually worse and finally opened, giving exit to blood and other discharges. It was looked upon as a cancer, and the surgeons advised that the breast be amputated, but the mother would not consent to the operation. Two years after this a paralysis appeared in the left side, and this with the "cancer" persisted without any remission until the year 1731. In the summer of this year a pious woman made a nine-days' prayer for her at the tomb of the blessed Paris, and brought her some earth from the tomb and also a garment which had been laid upon it. After putting on this garment the paralytic was able to turn herself in bed; and the next day the earth was applied to the "cancerous" ulcer, and the secretions dried up; and the night after this the circulation was suddenly restored in the paralyzed limbs. The restitutio at integrum was not, however, instantaneous, for the cicatrization was not complete until the expiration of eighteen days. Six weeks elapsed before the atrophied legs had acquired sufficient strength to enable the woman to go out of doors, and another week before she was able to mount into a carriage.

"Even fifteen years ago," Charcot says, "the interpretation of all the elements of this curious observation would have offered many difficulties. The hysterical nature of the vomiting of blood and of the paralysis was then recognized, but it had not then been so clearly demonstrated that hysterical contractures or paralysis may be accompanied by muscular atrophy."

"The more we investigate the facts of healing by faith," says the writer, "the more evident is it that this mode of cure obeys natural laws. For example, a study of the reported cases of the alleged miraculous cure of organic lesions, such as ulcers, shows that the suddenness of the cure is more apparent than real. Thus, in the case of the Demoiselle Coirin, the purely hysterical manifestations, that is, the circulatory disturbances and the paralysis, disappeared instantaneously, but the complete cicatrization of the ulcerated surface occurred only after a considerable interval, and the atrophy resulting from the long disuse of the paralyzed limbs required a normal time for its repair."

As the result of his studies, Charcot believed that not all persons are proper subjects for miraculous healing, but only those whose maladies are capable of being influenced by the action of the mind on the body—that is to say, the hysterical.

Suggestion, either from outside or of autochthonous origin, is the therapeutic agent. And in suitable subjects; that is, the hysterical of either sex—the influence of the mind on the body is sufficiently powerful to bring about recovery from maladies which, but a short time ago, owing to our ignorance of their nature, were regarded as incurable. At the close of the article he says: "But even though we are unable to accept a supernatural explanation of such cure, we must acknowledge their existence, and ought, as conscientious physicians to avail ourselves of them when the other resources of our art fail us."

Any method of cure is worthy of scientific study. I do not know whether or not I shall be able to throw any new light on the subject of the healing of the sick by faith, for it has been taught to the Latter Day Saints ever since 1830. Still it may not be time lost to you, if you will go with me into this study and see if science goes hand in hand with "faith."

The method of cure practiced by Jesus, was through faith. The expressions, so often occurring in the Gospels, "Thy faith hath saved thee," "Be it unto thee according to thy faith," and, "Thy faith hath made thee whole," express the fundamental idea in the system of healing disease by Jesus and his disciples. It was the cure of the body through the influence of the plastic and sovereign mind upon it. In an act of faith the mind rises out of the preconscious range of its action, and from an intelligent impulse it becomes a conscious, voluntary effort, but loses none of its creative efficiency, for faith combines into a concentrated form, and into a unity, all those mental states—as thought, imagination, belief, and feeling—which influence the condition of the physical organism. We have in history a good illustration. At the siege of Buda, in 1625, when the garrison was on the point of surrendering, in consequence of the prevalence of scurvy in an aggravated form, the Prince of Orange caused to be introduced a few bottles of sham medicine, as a sovereign remedy and infallible specific for the disease. This given in drops as such produced the most astonishing effects. Such as had not moved their limbs for months before were seen walking in the streets sound, straight, and whole; and many who declared that they had been rendered worse by all former remedies recovered in a few days. In the explanation of this interesting fact the inquiry arises, what was the principle or medium of cure in this case? Everyone will answer at once that it was the influence of the mind on the body. It was certainly not the effect of the medicine, for there was no medical virtue in what was given. But what particular mental state, or what form of mental action, was it that possessed such therapeutic efficiency? It would commonly be attributed to what is called imagination. I can discover here but little that answers to the idea expressed commonly by that term. It was faith that made them whole. It was their confidence in the remedial virtue of the prescription that effected the astonishing results; and this was no miracle, but the expression of a general law in regard to the action of the mental forces upon the bodily organism. But is it not better, rather than to resort to sham medicine to follow the plan of the Latter Day Saints, and instruct the people in the use of this spiritual principle of cure, and educate them to make an intelligent exercise of faith and imagination for the cure of their mental and bodily diseases, and how to believe unto salvation?

We should become informed how to exercise a saving or healing faith in the Divinity that dwells within us. It becomes then an intelligent method of cure, and far more reliable than the administration of drugs in Allopathic or Homeopathic doses. A genuine act of faith in God is a movement of the whole being towards him, and brings the soul into a vital contact and vivifying conjunction with him who is all powerful to heal and to save. New vitality and life are thus received.

Faith is the most intense form of mental action. When the mind rises from the preconscious to the conscious range of action, its activity separates itself into two distinct phases, the intellectual and emotional; but at the summit of our being, in a genuine act of faith, they unite in one intense focus. "Faith," by the best authority, is regarded as the highest intellectual sensibility. It is not possible to say whether it resembles most an intellectual or an emotional state of consciousness; the two seem to be perfectly blended in that pure spiritual elevation where our intellectual gaze upon truth is not separable from the love and ecstasy we feel in the contemplation of it. "He that loveth not," says the Apostle John, "knoweth not God;" his consciousness has not reached that high elevation where knowledge and love are inseparable, and in the light of which alone we can know God aright.

Faith, then, when perfect, is the state of consciousness which links our present to our future life. The denizens of heaven are termed indifferently Cherubim and Seraphim, spirits that are replete with knowledge or burn with love; and as we have just seen, it is the Cherubic and Seraphic life united which expresses the perfect state of man's consciousness on earth—a state in which we have equally a perception and a love of the beautiful, the good, and the eternally true.

When I recommend faith as an efficient remedy for the cure of disease, or an intelligent exercise of belief by a volitional effort, combined with an act of the fancy or imagination, I shall be met with the question, Can anyone believe without evidence? To this I answer that belief or faith is a form of knowing. It takes the place of knowledge. It is a mode of cognition that acts beyond the limited circle of perception by the senses. In its highest form it is an intuition of the love, an inward seeing, a clear perception of truth, without any objective or external evidence. Hence, in the Hebrew language we have the same word (amuna) to express the idea of faith and that of truth. Much that goes under the name of knowledge, when closely analyzed, is found to be nothing but a belief in varying degrees.

On the subject of the nature and essence of faith and its relation to knowledge, Coleridge very truly says that "it consists in a synthesis (or uniting together) of the reason and the individual will. By virtue of the latter, therefore, it must be an energy, and inasmuch as it relates to the whole man, it must be exerted in each and all his constituents or incidents, faculties, and tendencies; it must be a total, not a partial, a continuous, not a desultory, or occasional energy. And, by virtue of reason faith must be a light, a form of knowing, a beholding of truth."

Faith and knowledge cannot be separated. On this subject Cousin remarks that "to believe is, in a certain degree, to comprehend." Faith, whatever be its form, whatever be its object, whether vulgar or sublime, faith cannot but be the consent of reason to what reason comprehends as true. This is the foundation of all faith. Take away the possibility of knowing, and there remains nothing to believe, for the root of faith is removed. In all faith there is knowledge, and in all knowledge there is much that is only believing.

Faith, which in its highest form, is an inward seeing; is the divinely appointed method of attaining the real knowledge. Sensation is never knowledge, but only feeling. Our knowledge of matter must rest upon faith, or intuition.

Just as sensation gives us an immediate knowledge of the world, so there is an inward sense—rational intuition—or a spiritual faculty of perception, by which we have a direct revelation of supersensual things.

We gaze upon them with the inward eye, and have just as firm a conviction of their reality as we have of those material objects upon which we look with the bodily eye. It is by this two-fold faith, or revelation, that man has access to the whole material of truth,—material which his understanding afterwards molds into various shapes, and employs on the one hand for the purposes of this life, and on the other for the preparation for the life to come. Leave out, however, this direct inlet to our knowledge, and all demonstration, all definition, in short, all philosophy are but a sport with words; a superstructure sometimes complete enough in itself, but baseless as the most airy visions of the imagination.

Faith is the Christian means and method of cure, and is based upon a correct philosophy of human nature, and of the relation of the spirit to the body. All belief implies some degree of knowledge; and faith, which is always united to imagination, is an inward seeing, and is the highest form of cognition and degree of knowing. The mind, as all admit, affects the body; and the mental philosopher affirms that its varying states are the body's health or malady.

The immortal Spirit creates for itself a body in harmony with it, and is the operating cause of its conditions of health and disease. But faith and imagination are the most intense and influential forms of mental action that can be brought to bear upon the physical organism. To change our belief with regard to the body, either involuntarily or by a conscious volitional effort modifies its condition. If we believe and imagine that a change is being effected in ourselves, or in others who are in contact with us, it will be so; for whatever in this way the spirit predicts will find its fulfillments in the altered condition of the body.

Fear—in its varying forms of doubt, anxiety, foreboding, and melancholy—is the spiritual root of disease, and a prophecy of it, and faith sustains the same radical relation to health; and their previsions and predictions will be realized in the corresponding modifications of the physical condition.

Belief being the foundation of all knowledge, so it is the ground of all reality. To believe that we have a thing and to have it, are one and the same so far as our mental possession of it is concerned. Belief in its higher form is a complete conviction that a thing is true, or that it really exists. In this sense, to believe that we have a thing is a mental appropriation of it, and it becomes to us a reality. Its reality to us is in exact proportion to the strength of our faith. To believe that we are well, or are becoming so, makes it a reality to the extent of our inward conviction of it. This principle was taught by Jesus, the Christ, when he said: "According to your faith be it unto you," which expresses a law as uniform in its operations in the realm of mind as gravitation is in the region of nature. (Matthew 9: 29.) Also in that remarkable saying "What things soever ye desire, when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, and ye shall have them." (Mark 11: 24.) This is based upon a correct philosophy of the mind, that to have, and to believe that we have, are the same. Take away our belief in the possession of anything, even though we may hold it in our hands, it is to us as good as annihilated. The testimony of our senses to the existence of an object, if we have no faith in its reality, brings no evidence or conviction with it. To believe that we have a disease is to have it, while the full persuasion of it remains. On this subject James Mill truly observes: "To have a sensation and to believe that we have it are not distinguishable things."

It is in accordance with one of the deepest laws of the spiritual universe that the restoration of the body to health and harmony, is, and must ever be, through faith. It is important to remark that belief is not a mere passive state of the intellect, but is also a voluntary act. Hence we should not wait for a saving faith to come to us, but by a volitional effort use the power we already possess. In the Gospels, men are blamed for not believing, which could not in justice be done if belief and unbelief were wholly beyond the control of our volitions. In its essential character, belief is a phase of our active nature, otherwise called will.

In conclusion let me say that, it is the want of faith in our age which is the greatest hindrance to the stronger and more marked appearance of that miraculous power to heal the sick. With the Latter Day Saints we find that the doctrine of Jesus is true; that in the cure of disease it is unto us according to our faith. Not only hundreds but thousands of the saints have obeyed the scriptural injunction and called for the elders of the church, when they were sick, and by the prayer of faith were made whole. This is truly, in a temporal sense, the gospel, or the power of God unto salvation.

THE CANAL OF JOSEPH.

HOW MANY of the engineering works of the nineteenth century, remarks Engineering, will there be in existence in the year 3000? Very few, we fear, and still less those that will continue in the far-off age to serve a useful purpose. Yet there is at least one great undertaking conceived and executed by an engineer which during the space of four thousand years has never ceased its office, on which the life of a fertile province absolutely depends to-day. We refer to the Bahr Joussuf—the canal of Joseph—built, according to tradition, by the son of Jacob, and which constitutes not the least of the many blessings he conferred on Egypt during the years of his prosperous rule. This canal took its rise from the Nile at Asiut, and ran nearly parallel with it for nearly two hundred and fifty miles, creeping along under the western cliffs of the Nile valley, with many a bend and winding, until at length it gained eminence, as compared with the river bed, which enabled it to turn westward through a narrow pass and enter a district which was otherwise shut off from the fertilizing floods on which all vegetation in Egypt depends.

The northern end stood seventeen feet above low Nile, while at the southern end it was at an equal elevation with the river. Through this cut ran a perennial stream which watered a province named the Fayoum, endowing it with fertility and supporting a large population. In the time of the annual flood a great part of the canal was under water, and then the river's current would rush in a more direct course into the pass, carrying with it the rich silt which takes the place of manure, and keeps the soil in a state of constant productiveness.

All this, with the exception of the tradition that Joseph built it, can be verified to-day, and it is not mere supposition or rumor. Until eight years ago it was firmly believed that the design had always been limited to an irrigation scheme larger no doubt than that now in operation, as shown by the traces of abandoned canals and by the slow aggregation of waste water which had accumulated in the Birket el Querum, but still essentially the same character.

Many accounts have been written by Greek and Roman historians, such as Herodotus, Strabo, Mutianus, and Pliny, and repeated in monkish legends or portrayed in the maps of the Middle Ages, which agreed with the folk lore of the district. These tales explained that the canal dug by the ancient Israelite served to carry the surplus waters of the Nile into an extensive lake lying south of the Fayoum, and so large that it not only modified the climate, tempering the arid winds of the desert and converting them into the balmy airs which nourished the vines and the olives into a fullness and fragrance unknown in any part of the country, but also added to the food supply of the land such immense quantities of fish that the royal prerogative of the right of piscary at the great weir was valued at $250,000 annually. This lake was said to be four hundred and fifty miles round, and to be navigated by a fleet of vessels, while the whole circumference was the scene of industry and prosperity.—Sel.

OLIVE OIL.

"OLIVE oil is now used in many ways at one time never thought of. Besides being more largely used medicinally it enters into various processes of cooking much more extensively than it did.

"It is well known that good eggs fried in olive oil are much better flavored than when any other kind of fat has been used.

"In massage, bathing, and for numerous other purposes the use of this most natural valuable food is greatly extending. The value of good olive oil is beginning to be more generally recognized throughout the world than it formerly was. Eminent authorities have experimented with it and found it a potent agent for any defects of the excretory ducts, especially the skin. Eczema has rapidly disappeared upon a discontinuance of starch foods and a substitution of a diet of fresh and dried fruits, milk, eggs and olive oil.

"Its beneficial effects when taken in conjunction with a fruit diet have frequently been marked upon the hair, nails, and scalp, quickly clearing the latter of scurf, and supplying to the sebaceous glands the oily substance which they secrete when in a healthy condition, and the absence of which is the cause of debility of the hair, frequently ending in baldness.

"It has long been observed that those who live upon olive oil as a common article of food, and take it as such, are generally healthier and in better condition than those who do not. Its therapeutic and prophylactic properties are now well-known to medical men.

"Oil is destructive to certain forms of micro-organic life, and it is reasonable to suppose that they can best be eradicated from the system by its internal use. The use of oil not only does this, but it restores to the worn out or diseased tissue just those elements of repair that its weak reconstruction demands."—Claffin's Drug-gist.

WILLIAMS-BAYS DEBATE.—NO. 5.

MAY 12.—ELDER WILLIAMS' FIRST SPEECH CONCLUDED.

Alexander Campbell calls all other religious organizations "works of the flesh." (See Christian System.) The "Restorer"—Alexander Campbell—calls the followers of Christ "Christian" (see Christian System), and condemns the sects. He favors the name "saint."

All the principles contained in Psalms 37:

3-7, and Psalms 1: 1, 2, are good and necessary. Is that all a man must do not to walk in the counsel of the ungodly to be a child of God? Will the law to David regenerate a person? If so, what need we of more?

Galatians 3: 6-8 says Abraham believed God and it was counted to him for righteousness, and also that the gospel was preached to him. What does the gospel indicate that man should do to be saved?

He says all these local churches constitute the "one body." Does he mean the local M. E., Latter Day Saints, and Disciple Church constitute the one body? Did Alexander Campbell restore a local M. E. society?

Bays contends that the church cannot have but one head and Christ is that head. Yes, Christ is the head of the church as the husband is the head of the wife, but the wife has a head also.

He is committed by the proposition that the church was restored—re-established. Then the Church of Christ was lost, if Alexander Campbell restored it, as the proposition claims which he signed. He must show a complete return of that which once was.

I shall set up a counter claim as well as negate. I shall prove that he is not in harmony with the Bible. The Bible is the rule of evidence.

Matthew 7: 29 shows that Jesus spoke with authority. He was sent of the Father, and was commanded what to speak. (John 12: 49, 50.) John 1: 6 gives evidence that John was sent of God. Mark 1: 1 says his work was the beginning of the gospel of Jesus Christ, hence those sent to restore the gospel must be sent of God.

ELDER BAYS' SECOND SPEECH.

I will briefly answer question: The Church of Christ is the name of the church. Laws of the States differ, hence the incorporation name would be controlled by the law of the State in which it was incorporated.

We have no general church authorities. We have no central organization like the Catholic Church—No High Muck-a-muck in our church.

He read Webster on the meaning of the word "restore." Webster is good authority. I accept of his definition.

Bro. Williams, the Church of Christ is the Church of Christ. All the regenerated compose that church—All who are born anew.

Bro. Williams thinks Alexander Campbell says that which contradicts what the Disciples teach to-day. Alexander Campbell is not regarded as unquestioned authority. People of this church can think for themselves, whether it differs from Alexander Campbell or any other. If we differ from Alexander Campbell it is not material. But he can't show any difference from present position of the Disciples with those away back there.

What was done before Christ, was done under the law, having faith that pointed to Christ. They were regenerated through the law—called saints. People must be regenerated under the condition in which they are placed. Can an unregenerate become a Christian?

Wife must have a head to be sure. Wife represents the church. Head of the church is Christ, and not man.

There are Christians in the Methodist Church and in all other churches. It makes no difference whether a person is obedient to that form of doctrine required in the gospel or not; if he is regenerate he is a member of Christ.

Sectarianism must be abolished. There should be no barriers. All are Christians in all churches, even in the Latter Day Saints' Church, if he has obeyed the gospel. All the family in heaven and earth are of Jesus Christ. (Eph. 3: 14, 15.)

I shall not quarrel about the kingdom of God being the Church of Christ. We agree upon that.

All who confess that Jesus Christ is Lord to the glory of God are of the church. (Phil. 2: 9-11.)

Matthew 28: 19, 20, bears record that Christ the King, gave the commission. The church will be built up under this commission. Luke 16: 16 presents mark of distinction. They believed the law and prophets until John, then "kingdom of God is preached." I will trace the kingdom from its inception to its consummation. Matthew 10: 4-7; they preached the kingdom is at hand. John made the same announcement: "Repent ye, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." Mark 1: 14, 15, shows that Jesus preached the same and told the people to "Repent ye, and believe the gospel." John preached the Kingdom is at hand; Jesus preached the same, and so also did the apostles. This was something new to be preached.

Luke 10: 1, 8, 11, shows that the Seventy were to preach that the kingdom of God is come nigh unto you. Luke 9: 27, says there were some there who would see the Kingdom come. It was now drawing very near. The counterpart of Luke 9 is in Matthew 16: 18-27. The Son of God was to be slain. Time of kingdom very nigh.

The commission was given after his resurrection. He was soon to take his seat on the throne of his glory. Matthew 28: 19, 20, Luke 24: 47, 49. The apostles were instructed where to begin to preach the kingdom. They were to tarry at Jerusalem, and there receive the Spirit. They spake in other languages and they then went out into all the world.

After his resurrection Christ told Mary to touch him not, for as yet he had not ascended to his Father: he had not been crowned yet. On Pentecost Peter said he hath become "both Lord and Christ." He did not take charge of the kingdom until he was crowned.

This kingdom or church must be perpetuated. Jesus said to carry it to all the world. This was the privilege given. How was the church to be perpetuated? We don't read of evangelists, pastors, bishops, teachers, or deacons till after Pentecost. They were given to establish and perpetuate it. (Eph. 4: 11, 12.) Without evangelists there would be no missionary work, no spread of the church. Some churches have been anti-missionary and they died.

Paul sent Timotheus (1 Cor. 4: 16, 17) as an evangelist. Paul had a certain way to do his work. This was one of the means of propagating the gospel.

Acts 14: 20-23 shows Paul's way. Men were now entering the kingdom through much tribulation. Elders were ordained in every church. Evangelists preached and brought people into the church, and elders were ordained as governors and feeders of the flock.

ELDER WILLIAMS' SECOND SPEECH.

I read the proposition again. It reads: "Is the Church of Christ;" not churches of Christ. Alexander Campbell and his coworkers were to restore one church. How could they restore that which already existed?

What is the incorporate name of the church, Disciples, Christian, or Brethren? No State designates what name a church shall be incorporated under. His statement in reference to that matter is false.

There can be no Church of Christ unless there are general officers under which the local churches are united. Destroy the general officers of this government and you destroy the government. Destroy the general officers of the church you destroy the one body.

I gave the definition of "restore." He acknowledged it was correct. He also said that Alexander Campbell was not accepted as unquestioned authority. Then when he restored the church the people don't have to believe he restored right principles. They claim he restored the right interpretation of the Scriptures. This being true and the people not believing his interpretation, who is right? If Alexander Campbell did restore the right interpretation of the Scriptures, as is claimed, then he could take stronger positions than he has taken. I find it a great trouble for him to show any harmony between what is claimed Alexander Campbell restored and the Bible.

Alexander Campbell has pitted himself against all sects, and calls them ungodly and following their own will rather than the will of God. Can an ungodly man be a regenerate man?

He has affirmed that an ungodly man is regenerated according to Alexander Campbell.

Luke 16:16 claims that the kingdom of heaven was preached and men pressed into it.

Matthew 18:18: Jesus instructs those having trouble to "tell it to the church."

The Bible seems to be in the middle, Alexander Campbell on one side, and Bays on the other.

Christ is the husband and the church the bride, hence in that sense is Christ the head of the church.

Will he take the position that in other churches men and women are made Christian? Do these churches that sprinkle create Christians?

He says that the name Christian is not the peculiar name of the church Alexander Campbell restored; yet in "Distinctive Peculiarities of the Disciples" it is argued, "If you are only a Christian, why do you need more than that name to tell what you are?"

In "Memoirs of Alexander Campbell," by Richardson, vol. 2, p. 59, is found the following as the sentiments of Alexander Campbell: "Every Christian who understands the nature and design, the excellence and glory, of the institution called the Church of Jesus Christ, will lament to see its glory transferred to a human corporation." You see Alexander Campbell called the church the "Church of Jesus Christ." He was mistaken in name, according to Bays, hence not a restorer.

In the "Christian System" Alexander Campbell calls the other churches "an adulterous brood"; that the church was lost in the dark ages and not till of late restored. (See "Instructor," p. 67.) What think you now of the apostasy as understood by Alexander Campbell?

On the same page of the Instructor—page 67—is an extract from Barton W. Stone, who says that "Sectarianism is but another name for heresy." Can a person be in heresy and regenerated?

The family name is Jesus Christ (Eph. 3: 14, 15), hence we contend the church on earth should be known by that name. John 17:18 says Jesus was sent of the Father, and that by the same authority he sent the apostles. 1 Corinthians 7:20-22 gives evidence that every man should abide in the "calling wherein he was called," as he is "called in the Lord." Acts 13:2 shows how some were called of the Lord, which is by the Holy Ghost. 1 Corinthians 12:28 says the officers were set in the church by God. "The Restorer," Alexander Campbell in "Christian System," says the officers are chosen by local congregations and acknowledges this is only "apostolic tradition." The Pharisees in New Testament times said their authority was tradition.

He cannot find the term "The Church of Christ" in the Bible. He must find the identical words according to his own argument. Had Alexander Campbell had the word of God to have guided him he would not have resorted to tradition.

In preface to "Christian System" Alexander Campbell is made to say that there had been a "great apostasy," and that he said concerning the work of himself and coworkers that they "formed societies against their will." He claimed to introduce a reformation at first, then compelled to institute a restoration.

In the church according to the Bible were apostles and prophets. Did Alexander Campbell restore these officers in the church by authority? If he did not, he did not restore the Church of Christ.

He set out to prove that Alexander Campbell restored the Church of Christ. He can't find a passage that Alexander Campbell restored a single principle that was not in the world when he came. Does that which he brought into existence bear the marks of the detector?

Head of woman to unite its forces, to bind into one body. Christ to give counsel to woman through her head. Ephesians 4:11 says that apostles, prophets, etc., were given that we be not carried about with every wind of doctrine.

MAY 13.—ELDER BAYS' FIRST SPEECH.

It is a pleasure for me to appear before you to affirm the proposition under consideration. We are here for truth. We should not strive for mastery, but for the truth.

I thought the ruling of the chair was not just right at the time, but now I think it was just right. I say this in justice to the chairman. [Bays tried to introduce the name of Joseph Smith, and to reflect upon his character while in the examination of this proposition; but the chairman ruled him out of order in so doing.—J. F. M.]

He says the disciples of to-day are in conflict with the published views of Alexander Campbell, but he does not tell us where. I say there is not a single point wherein we are at variance with Alexander Campbell. We are not here to prove whether we differ from Alexander Campbell or not; the question is whether they taught anything contrary to the Bible or not. I say they did not. Suppose the Disciples do differ from Alexander Campbell; he only gave his opinion. We are not compelled to take the word of anyone as leader, as some have to. I know a people who in their discipline are instructed to take the word of a man as though it proceeded from the mouth of God. We stand upon the Bible and the Bible alone, as the man of our counsel. He must show where these reformers differ from the Bible. He says that Alexander Campbell denounced all reformers as wicked men, and said that all the people in other churches were wicked people. Alexander Campbell's contention and my contention is that there are Christians in all churches. Our distinctive plea has been the union of all Christians everywhere, and that that unity must be upon the basis of God's word, and upon God's word alone. Human creeds cause divisions, and they are at variance with the tone and word as found in the Bible. Creeds, disciplines, etc., are but human institutions. They are the device of the people, and not of God.

He is trying to dodge the force of my argument by saying the woman must have a head of her own. Williams' church has a head of her own. It is a hydra-headed monster. Yes, the woman must have a head of her own. This is a mere evasion of the issue by Elder Williams.

Colossians 1:18 shows us that there is one body. These local churches constituted the one body. There are many members, yet but one body. By one Spirit we are baptized into one body. (1 Corinthians 12:13) If the church has any other head than Christ, let Williams describe it. In Colossians 1:18 Paul is not talking about a male or female body. "He is the head of the body." This is a clear statement. Christ is the head of the church—the one body. Williams wants a two-headed concern. Local churches are not united here. All these different churches are only a matter of convenience, and it is helpful. One can be a member of the church triumphant and yet not be a member of any local church. By one Spirit are we all united into one body. I am going to read from Doctrine and Covenants. The brother may object. Sec. 17:25, I read. That is just what we teach.

He talked about apostles and prophets. We have apostles and prophets. There is a church militant and a church triumphant. These two compose the whole church. Original twelve in heaven. We have same apostles and same office work, so shall all after churches be governed.

In Revelation 12:1, 2, the woman represents the church. The Twelve are in heaven. The head of the church is in glory. Stars on the head of the woman in glory. Same twelve in church to-day. The word "apostle" is from apostolos, one sent. Everybody sent is an apostle—one sent; but not apostles of Christ. Williams is an apostle, being sent by the April conference. The Church of Christ sent missionaries to various places. Paul and Barnabas were apostles of the church of Antioch.

We have prophets. A prophet; what is it? Primarily, one who predicts; but it also means a preacher of the gospel of Jesus Christ. Acts 15:32 Judas and Silas were sent out to preach, and they were prophets. Acts 16th and 17th chapters show that miracles were wrought by them. An evangelist is a prophet, hence Judas and Silas were prophets and evangelists. A prophet is a preacher of righteousness. Evangelists are to travel and preach. Acts 15:37 evidences that John Mark was an evangelist and a prophet. Acts 16:1; Timothy is an evangelist and a prophet. Luke is called by everybody, the evangelist, because of the fact of his writing the gospel. In Colossians 4:14 Luke is called the physician. The 7th and 8th chapters of Acts show that Stephen and Philip were evangelists.

ELDER WILLIAMS' FIRST SPEECH.

Bays says Evangelists are prophets. Let us see Ephesians 4:11. That says there were both prophets and evangelists. It would not sound well to say prophets and prophets. You do not think Paul talked that way.

Bays is the husband, his wife is in Michigan. Bays can write to his wife, but if she had no head she could not understand what he wrote. Bays said the affirmative must prove beyond the possibility of a doubt. Where can he find a "Thus saith the Lord" for the position he has taken? He has admitted that Matthias and Paul were both of the twelve apostles. Now he says the stars in Revelation 12:1, 2, represent the original twelve, Who are they?

The proposition says the Church of Christ, and Bays contends for that name. Alexander Campbell calls it the "Church of Jesus Christ," Bays says it is not the "Church of Jesus Christ." If Alexander Campbell is in harmony with the Bible, then Bays does not, and the Disciples cannot, agree with both Alexander Campbell and Bays.

In the Christian System Alexander Campbell is made to say that, "The seniors or elders always ordain." Ephesians 4:4 says, "There is one body, and one Spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling;" and 1 Corinthians 12:12 says, "All the members of that one body, being many, are one body: so also is Christ." If Alexander Campbell misrepresents God, he is not right. Compare the church he restored with the one spoken of in the Bible. (Eph. 4:11; and 1 Cor. 12:28.) Because other churches are wrong does not prove that he is right. He is trying to say he is clean by saying others are blacker than he. He has to go back and hedge on former proposition.

Alexander Campbell, in the Christian System, is made to say, "Still the question recurs, Are all religious sects works of the flesh? Paul makes no exception. We dare not." Bays says there are Christians or members of the Church of Christ in all churches; Alexander Campbell says not. Here is a contradiction. Alexander Campbell says they are of the flesh—wicked men.

He refers to Colossians 1:18 and says Christ is the head. We insist that Christ is the head as the husband is the head of the wife. Wife should not rebel against her husband.

We insist that he put his finger on a passage in the Bible that says that anyone is a child of God out of the church.

He says they believe in Doctrine and Covenants, section 17:25. Do they send teachers to a conference from the several churches? Then there must be one to preside—one earthly head. I should think he would take a stronger position if he believes thus.

He says, "We have apostles;" but they are in heaven. If in heaven, what are they doing for the church? Apostles and prophets were placed in the church for the work of the ministry till we all come "in the unity of the faith" to a perfect man, in the stature of Christ Jesus. Apostles gone to heaven. They did not go when Christ did; they were left to do their work.

When he admits that in Revelation 12:1, 2 the woman refers to the church, he admits a complete apostasy. (Rev. 13:7, 8.)

Prove by the Bible that Stephen, Philip, or John Mark were prophets. He claims to speak where the Bible speaks and that where Bible is silent he will be silent.

To restore means more than to organize and establish, as was in the proposition at first. A thing cannot be restored until it is lost. A thing must be disestablished before it can be reestablished. When it is restored, it must fill all details of the detector.

What is the Church of Christ as it was and is in the mind of God? Christ organized it under God. If Alexander Campbell restored the church without the Holy Spirit, then he must be greater than Jesus Christ. Matthew 7:29 says he taught with authority. In Matthew 16:18 he says, "I will build my church." Christ builds; that is, controls and advises. It is claimed that Alexander Campbell did the work of restoration without advice from Jesus Christ. Alexander Campbell did not want to leave the Baptist Church. The brethren in the Baptist Church drove them out, yet Bays says they are all of one body. In John 15:16 Christ says, "I have chosen you, and ordained you." 1 Corinthians 12:28 says, "God hath set some in the church." Christ as the builder was taught the will of God by the Spirit. As there is but one body, all the characteristics of that one body must now exist. Supposing a house of large proportions should burn and I should build a 4 x 6; would that house be restored? No; a similar house must be there.

Revelation 12 presents evidence of an apostasy; Revelation 14:6 shows a restoration. Angels were to minister in the restoration. John saw the restoration by an angel. 1 Thessalonians 1:5 shows that the gospel must exist in power, and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance.

In "Our Movement," page 13 is the following: "The present state of the church with its divisions, its party spirit, its party names, its conflicting creeds, is not what Christ intended, and cannot be approved by him.

"These evils are a result of a departure from the purity and simplicity of the gospel.

"Therefore, the only permanent remedy is to return to the simple faith and practice of the apostolic church, throwing overboard whatever corruptions have crept into the church during the succeeding ages.

"This accomplished, the church should resume its original unity, and under the sole leadership of Christ go forward in its sublime mission of bringing the whole earth in subjection to him. . . .

"The restoration of the gospel in its faith, doctrine, and ordinances, just as it was preached and practiced by the inspired apostles."

Here is another conflict with Bays.

In W. L. Hayden's tract, "What is the Christian Church?" page 3, we read:—

"This was not merely a reformation; it was a complete restoration of primitive Christianity in letter and in Spirit, in principle and in practice, in its pristine beauty, its perfect unity, and its original power. In order to such a restoration, we must go back to the beginning of the gospel of the Son of God. Whatever cannot be found at the beginning, sanctioned by inspired precept or precedent, is not from the beginning, and is therefore without divine authority. Hence the grand men who became the great lights in this restoration movement went back of all reformations, back of the great apostasy, that culminated in the Romish Papacy."

John 15:16 and Luke 6:12 show that Jesus chose twelve disciples, called them apostles, and ordained them, giving them authority to act for him.

He said that when Jesus sent out the Seventy, the kingdom had come "very nigh." Now it seems from the arguments that we are to abandon both apostles and seventies to have the kingdom. Strange logic!

Ephesians 4:11 and 1 Corinthians 12:28 show that apostles, prophets, etc., were set in the church militant. According to the argument of Bays Alexander Campbell must have done a work in heaven to have restored the church as it was, since a part of it is in heaven.

ELDER BAYS' SECOND SPEECH.

I am going to run over the fox's tracks. I will follow his tracks to his hole. I say that evangelists are prophets; he says they are not. It is now for you to decide.

Yes, my wife has a head, and a good one, too. When I write she understands it. He will have it that the church has a husband head and a head of her own; but did he tell you what the head is? Bro. Williams, don't talk in innuendos. I am not ashamed of my little woman.

I called upon him to show that Alexander Campbell and the Disciples disagreed with the Bible. I don't care if I do disagree with Alexander Campbell; that is only a side issue.

We have prophets and apostles in every sense of the term.

He says: "I think I gained a victory on the other proposition, and don't have to refer to it while discussing this proposition." Yes: the Spanish claimed a victory at Manila. I think Williams will bear watching; I need it, I know.

If we prove we are in harmony with the Bible, we prove all we claim. We will try and sustain this claim.

Matthew 28: 20 makes Christ to say "I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." He is with those sent to-day as much as he was then.

Revelation 12 does not admit of an apostasy. I will show you about that after awhile.

He talks about apostles of Christ. I say they are apostles of men and not of Christ. There is not an apostle of Christ living to-day. Christ commissioned his apostles, and his apostles only. He did not commission anyone else. You cannot find it in the Scriptures. They went out and ordained others, and conferred authority. When this was done then the law was given.

John 14: 23 says Christ would manifest himself. This was by the Comforter; hence we have the Bible. We now have all truth right here. By this he will try us all. I will be tried by this in the day of judgment.

He asks if I will prove that Christ instructed Alexander Campbell. Mr. Campbell did not profess to receive revelation, nor to have seen angels. He must prove that we can't restore that which is lost without a revelation. Prove that, Bro. Williams, or your whole system falls.

The proposition reads "restored through the instrumentality of A. Campbell and his coworkers." He claims that the great architect must be there to restore. Suppose the capitol at Washington was destroyed; would we have to resurrect the architect in order to rebuild the building? The architect makes plans and these are submitted for our guidance. Jesus Christ is the great architect of the church. Paul says he was a wise "Masterbuilder." Do we need to call up the architect? No, sir; we get the plans and specifications from the archives where they have been kept. Here are the plans and specifications (holding up the Bible). Alexander Campbell took the plans and specifications, and the building is restored without a communication with the architect. It is a farce to talk about the need of the architect being present. All his argument vanishes like fog before the sunlight. I have not taken the position that all was gone. Fires of apostasy have burned, but the walls remain. Martin Luther, and Wesley, Knox, and Zwingli began to build. Martin Luther broke the bands of superstition and introduced liberty; then came reformation after reformation. Sectarian lines were drawn. Against party lines we make a fight, and invite all to come up to the standard as in old time.

He argues that we must have all these spiritual gifts mentioned in the Bible. If it takes that to have the Church of Christ, there is no Church of Christ to-day; for no one can do these things.

Garrison says that which they preached and practised. That is the sticking point. He says Garrison contradicts Alexander Campbell. Garrison says we should return to all gospel practices as well as the precepts of the apostles; not all the apostles practiced, else we should have circumcision, for Paul circumcised Timothy. Gospel practices and precepts are all that are referred to.

He says all the original power must be restored with the gospel. The gospel is the power of God unto salvation. (Romans 1:16.) That power has been restored. What is that power? Convicting, converting, sustaining, and preserving power; all the power God thought to be necessary; all the power necessary to salvation.

Evangelists, elders, pastors, and deacons exist by reason of apostolic authority, and not by direct authority of Christ. These officers were to direct till the end, their duties being to set in order and ordain. (2 Tim. 2:2; 3:16, 17; 4:5; and Titus 1:5-8.) When the apostles were taken away, all the work of the church was performed by the officers they set in the church. No other officers are necessary. If I show they could do all that was necessary to salvation, I prove that no others are needed. Philip, an evangelist, baptized, and the Holy Ghost came. According to Doctrine and Covenants elders can baptize and lay on hands. Evangelists are higher in authority than an elder. What need is there of any other officer in the church?

BRO. WILLIAMS' SECOND SPEECH.

He asks, What need of other officers, if elders could do the work? They could do some of the work, but not all.

He is the fox this time, and he says the hound will get the fox. The fox has been in the hole ever since we began this proposition, only now and then sticking his head out, as much as to say, Here I am. Yes; there is where he will be all the time.

Prophets are evangelists, Bays said. That's all the proof he presents or can present.

Bays says Christ has not been heard from for a thousand years or more; yet he says Christ is perfect. Then there must be something the matter with the woman, or church, as she used to hear from him.

He said there was no difference between "Disciples" and Alexander Campbell. Then I have proven both contradict the Bible. Disciples say, "Where Bible speaks, we speak; and where Bible is silent, we are silent;" and Bays is claiming to represent the Disciples.

He said not a vestige of the original church was left. This is proof of a total apostasy.

Matthew 16: 19 says that keys of the kingdom were given to Peter. He stood above the others. He said a few nights ago that I must prove that there were any apostles on the earth, and that Christ commissioned none but the apostles. Now he says there are several here, and hence there are here those commissioned by Christ.

In the Bible is contained truth; but he cannot prove that the Bible contains all truth, neither can he prove there can be a restoration without revelation.

Matthew 28: 20 promises that Christ will be with them to end, providing they would teach all things he had commanded them. If they did not teach all things, then he did not promise to be with them.

John 14: 21, 23, Christ promises to manifest himself if they would keep his commandments. Without revelation no one can know God. (Matt. 11: 27.)

Did Alexander Campbell put apostles, prophets, and spiritual gifts in his church? No; Christ is the builder. No one can build without direction from Christ. If the church is built under direction of Christ, the gates of hell shall not prevail against it. Paul was a masterbuilder, because he received revelation from Christ. (Gal. 1:11, 12.)

The proposition claims the church was restored by Alexander Campbell and his coworkers. Now Bays claims that Luther, Wesley, Knox, and others assisted, and they taught sprinkling. Were they coworkers with Campbell? "Reformation" means one thing, "restoration" quite another thing. To restore is to bring back that which is lost; to reform is to make better that which exists.

Mark 16: 15-17 shows that signs shall follow the preaching of the gospel. Bays is out of harmony if he does not have them in his church.

The apostles taught and practiced the laying on of hands, but circumcision was not taught to be observed, and only practiced for convenience, and not as a gospel ordinance. They laid their hands on baptized believers in the name of Jesus Christ, and the Holy Ghost came to confirm.

He says all the original power is in the church he represents. Acts 2: 38, 39 gives promise of the Holy Ghost to all who call upon the name of the Lord, and that promise consists of gifts and fruits, as God gives. (1 Cor. 12: 9-11; Gal. 5: 22, 23.)

He said Jesus did not set apart evangelists, elders, pastors, etc.; but that the apostles did. Then we must have living apostles to set men apart to these offices now. If that referred to by Bays is the rule, we cannot have living evangelists without apostles.

He refers to Hebrews 6: 1, 2 and tries to controvert the laying on of hands, yet this passage says it is a principle of the doctrine of Christ. The Bible says children were blessed by the laying on of hands; also ordination and confirmation were performed by laying on of hands.

What is it claimed that Alexander Campbell restored? The keys to the interpretation of the Scriptures. Has he restored ordination? He has not apostles, prophets, etc., yet claims to have pastors. Paul said they all should remain, and that for the same time. One man has as much right to restore as another.

In "Hayden's History of Disciples," we find that Campbell says that the Papacy arose and men groped in darkness, and that even in his day he says: "The primitive gospel, in its effulgence and power, is yet to shine out in its original splendor, to regenerate the world."—pp. 36, 37. Then we conclude that the primitive gospel was yet to shine out. Alexander Campbell says so. J. Z. Tyler says in his tract "The Distinctive Peculiarities of the Disciples," that we are working towards the original gospel. Here is one preacher against another. He can make his own application.

I have shown that Alexander Campbell indorsed the name "saint" and the name of the church as "The Church of Jesus Christ." Paul never used the term "Christian" as applied to the children of God.

I find Bays out of harmony in these points. He takes the Bible as his guide to build the church, while all others took God as their guide; yet he claims that the church he represents is the Church of God in fact. He has not told us which is the general church or some local church. He discards many of the officials and blessing of the Spirit. It would look strange for a man to deed his son a farm and yet not deed him the fruit that grew on it. He says, "Gifts of Spirit do not follow now." God filled the disciples full in the past, but now we must sit down at the table, and only read about their being full. I want the same to-day, and God will give it.

WIGHT-BRADEN DEBATE.—NO. 2.

ELDER WIGHT'S NINTH SPEECH.

Joseph Smith's teaching in the Doctrine and Covenants is in direct harmony with the teachings of Christ. We examine the Book of Mormon, which claims to be a record of three colonies, two of which were Israelitish. If Israelites were on this land, why not God speak to them? John 10: 16; Jesus had other sheep besides those at Jerusalem. Gentiles become sheep by obedience, and were not then in that condition. He was to visit these sheep. (Reads several passages from Book of Mormon.) I ask you if accepting and obeying such teachings would not make you better.

Ridicule won't remove the force of these teachings. If the book is what we claim for it, its prophetic utterances will be fulfilled. Mr. Braden demanded of us a miracle. We produced it from his own history. He says it was the result of a sudden shock. Such assertion could apply to every miracle ever wrought and strike at the teaching of Jesus. Matthew 24: 14. If we are to have the gospel of the kingdom, all the appurtenances—officers, gifts, etc., must exist and be enjoyed. Jesus said: "These signs shall follow them that believe." Which is the believer, Mr. Braden who says they shall not, or I when I stand for the fulfillment of Christ's statement? The Book of Mormon mentions plenty of gold. In 1830, exclusive of Asia the annual output was $30,000,000 only. Ancient America wove all manner of cloth. Mr. Smith saw only the rude Indian with his loin cloth. Whence could he get his inspiration in this direction? Mr. Braden asserts that it was a prevalent theory in 1830, that Indians descended from Israel.

ELDER BRADEN'S NINTH SPEECH.

Outlines of the Book of Mormon. They, the Nephites, had superior prophets, miracles, etc., to the Bible—a church so perfect that Christ's played only second fiddle to it.

I have my opponent on trial for trying to pass counterfeit bills. I will prove that Smith had no authority to issue. They had inspired engravers, interpreters, guard, possessors, and scribes. The original copy of the Book of Mormon is much the direct work of God as the two tables of stone. Page 202: 27 contains thirteen participial phrases from one noun; 758 ungrammatical and ignoramus' uses of words in Book of Mormon. Mr. Braden spent rest of time in reading pages where errors in grammar could be found.

ELDER WIGHT'S TENTH SPEECH.

The Book of Mormon must go down because it contains grammatical errors! 758 of them!! Just think!!! The American Bible Society informs us that there are some 23,000 in the B-i-b-l-e! If there be "mistakes, they are the mistakes of men," says one of the Book of Mormon writers. We are willing to put the books (Book of Mormon and Bible) in the hands of a committee composed of your college professors and let them decide the question of grammar.

We are not after mastery, but the truth. We ask for more than assertion to demonstrate the truth, however. Book of Mormon page 38: 130; all kinds of animals. Two large animals named—not then known—since found. The horse especially; not discovered till years after, and thought by scientists at that time that it had been unknown in America till brought by Spaniards. Book of Mormon long ridiculed on this point. Now we have the fossil remains. How did Mr. Smith get ahead of science? Mr. Braden says we are agreed as to Bible, but he fails to represent our belief in Book of Mormon. We believe it to have been a Bible to Israelites in America, and a record of God's dealings with them and others.

I now present you some of his prophetic utterances. Doctrine and Covenants 45:11: "Ye hear of wars in foreign lands, but, behold, I say unto you, They are nigh, even at your doors, and not many years hence ye shall hear of wars in your own lands." Was Smith a true or false prophet? Lay aside your prejudice, and listen not to the scurrilous stories and assertions of my opponent, and examine it in the light of a desire for truth. Suppose Mr. Smith was a true prophet, what will you do in the day of judgment if you reject him?

Doctrine and Covenants 98: 4: Zion not to be moved out of her place. Zion sometimes means land, sometimes the people. Here it has reference to the land or location. "Notwithstanding her children are scattered." Why did he not read all this the other night rather than read the portion that suited him and then ridicule it? Those that remained faithful and their children have been and are returning and building up the "waste places," and they are going there with "songs of everlasting joy."

He says the bill nearest the genuine is the most dangerous. True. But suppose it be the exact counterpart or a genuine Bible bill, what then? If my opponent comes to you and presents that which is contrary to the Bible it must be counterfeit. Suppose he were to come claiming to be a minister of Christ? How would you determine? Doctrine and Covenants 102: 7: "Behold, I will give you favor and grace in their eyes." A peculiar prediction that, so soon after they had been driven and while they were yet in the midst of trouble.

ELDER BRADEN'S TENTH SPEECH.

Will he accept all that that is good in the Koran as given by inspiration of God? It is one thing to say a thing is good, but another thing to say it came from God. Because there are good things in the Book of Mormon, it is no evidence that it came from God. Mrs. Johnson's healing was the result of shock. The physician had healed his mother in same way. If I were to concede spiritual gifts that would be no proof that Smith had them. When Spaniards conquered Peru, the king filled a room with gold for his release. We knew for three hundred years that there had been a great civilization in America. All these things were known.

I will accept his challenge, only it must be Revised instead of authorized version. The Book of Mormon says domestic animals; but, sir, you can't find the fossil remains of the domestic horse. The most perfect specimen of the mastodon ever found was dug up within a few miles of Smith a few years before the Book of Mormon came out. Zion not to be moved. He says it means land! What a prophecy. The land won't be moved. I guess Smith was a prophet! I'll prophecy. A thousand years from now the hills and rivers in Jackson County will be there!

"They shall return." Question as to whether it means the same individuals or those going now. I have no objection to their having everything that was in the apostolic church, if they only have such things. The fact that miracles once existed is no evidence that they exist now. I was once a boy; so I am now! God once gave revelations, hence he does now. What reasoning! The things existing in the church were given to give truth, but are not needed now. He would not claim to need revelation for new truth, but for details such as that Joe should have a house to live in.

BISHOP'S AGENTS' NOTICES.

To the Saints of Utah:—As Bro. Kelley has seen fit to retain me as his agent for Utah, and I now expect to visit Montana and Idaho before I reach you, it will be satisfactory to me if you pay your tithes and offerings to either D. W. Wight or R. J. Parker. I need not remind you that this is the financial law of the church, and that the church cannot get along without financial aid. Could all hear the cries that come up to the Bishop and know how some of the wives and children of the ministry suffer as a result of not being maintained, I am sure that you would the more readily put your hands forth in the way of tithes and offerings to assist the needy. I need but say that there is now an urgent demand for this matter to be attended to.

I congratulate the saints of Utah for what you did last year, and only ask that you remember that some are sacrificing the love of home and all its ties that you may have the gospel. Their wives, children, mothers, and sisters, stay at home, and sometimes are short of the necessities of life! Can't you help bear the burden? Will the saints of Montana and Idaho also remember you have Bishop's agents and missionaries in your fields? J. W. WIGHT, Bishop's Agent.
Tabor, Iowa, June 7.

The saints of Oregon and Washington will please notice that my present address is John Day, Oregon. I trust all will give an assisting hand, by sending in their tithing to the sustaining of the missionaries' families of Oregon and Washington. All means received by me has been and will be strictly for the building up and prosecution of the great work in this part of the field. Thanking you for past assistance, I trust each will apprehend the just obligation in equally assisting according to your means.

I am your servant,
ALMA MORRIS, Bishop's Agent.

PASTORAL.

I have for the past month tried to inform myself in regard to the best interest of the work in this field, and I have concluded to place T. J. Sheppard in charge of Texas and Western Louisiana; C. R. Duncan in charge of Oklahoma and Indian Territory; and J. W. Jackson in charge of Arkansas. Will these brethren please publish their permanent addresses, so that all who labor in their fields may know where to report. Praying the good Lord to bless us all in our work,

I remain your brother,
AMOS J. MOORE.

BEAVER, TEXAS, June 7.

To the Elders and Saints of Southeastern Mission; Greeting:—As I was placed in charge of the missionary work in above mission I give notice that Elder J. C. Clapp will have charge of Kentucky, Tennessee, and North Alabama; Elder D. E. Tucker will have charge of Florida, Georgia, North and South Carolina, and Southern Alabama. The missionaries laboring in their fields will report to them the first of July, October, January, and March, giving number of sermons preached, baptisms performed, and new openings made, etc. Presidents of districts and branches and isolated members who desire their labors will correspond with me and those in charge of the territory in which labor is desired.

Dear brethren, let us make an effort to do all we can to advance the cause of Christ, so when we look over our record we can rejoice rather than mourn. I desire officers of districts and branches to assist the missionaries in mission work all they can, after they have discharged their duties in their respective offices first; for in the past the work in places has suffered loss, and the missionary work hindered, because some have failed to do their work as local officers in their own district or branch that they were called to do—that is to feed the flock—and gone elsewhere to do missionary work. Let every man learn his duty is a very essential command, then perform it in the fear of God, remembering that we will have to render to God a final account. J. C. Clapp's mission address is Sedalia, Kentucky; D. E. Tucker's is Milton, Florida; mine is Garland, Alabama. Your colaborer in gospel bonds.

M. M. TURPEN.

THEODORE, Alabama, June 7.

To the Saints of Southern California district, Greeting:—Having been assigned the above-named field of labor by the General Conference of 1898, and in accordance with the instructions of missionary in charge, Bro. G. T. Griffiths, that those placed in sub-charge publish their post office address, I wish to state to those wishing to address me, my permanent address will be San Bernardino, California. I desire the cooperation of all the saints in the district, and let us work together for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all. I shall be pleased to hear from all, especially those wanting preaching in their neighborhood. Let us try and make this one of the most successful years ever known to California. Our force is not very large, but let us work the harder.

Yours for truth,
D. L. HARRIS.

To the Brethren of Far West, Missouri, District:—Having been appointed as assistant missionary in charge of Far West district I take this means of informing you that those of the traveling and local ministry are expected to report to me all matters pertaining to the labor done, and all items of interest that may take place in your immediate fields, especially the sermons preached, baptisms performed, and so forth. This I believe is required by our historian, that all may be kept informed of the history we are making. Your reports are due and should be made out and forward to me on the first of July, October, January, and March of each year. Please be prompt, so I may be the same in reporting to Bro. I. N. White. Keep me informed as to the needs of the mission in its various parts.

My address is Box 733, St. Joseph, Missouri. Yours for Zion's weal,

H. O. SMITH.

ST. JOSEPH, MISSOURI, June 10.

TWO-DAYS' MEETINGS.

The following two-days' meetings will be held in Galland's Grove district, and the ministers named will have charge at the point mentioned in connection with their names:—

Auburn, Iowa, June 25 and 26. Elders J. M. Baker and William McKim.

Dow City, June 25 and 26. Elders J. T. Turner and Benan Salisbury.

Deloit, July 9 and 10. Elders R. Wight and Priest A. H. Rudd.

Harlan, July 9 and 10. Elders George Montague and W. A. Carroll.

Benan; grove meeting, commencing July 9 and continuing until the 17th. Elders Charles Derry and J. M. Baker.

Those in charge may secure the services of other ministers to help if they can, and should think best so to do. If convenient, commence the two-days' meetings Friday evening, instead of Saturday morning. If the ministers give their time, the saints and friends should pay their expenses.

CHARLES E. BUTTERWORTH,
J. M. BAKER, Presidents.

REUNION NOTICES.

Southeastern Illinois reunion will be held in the grove by the saints' chapel near Parish, Illinois, commencing July 22, ending on the 31st.

More anon, by order of committee.

J. D. STEAD, Clerk.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA REUNION RATES.

The Santa Fe Railroad Company has agreed to furnish those attending reunion at Santa Monica, July 8 to 17, a twelve days' limit of time, beginning the 7th and lasting until the 18th. Now let it be particularly remembered, that it requires fifty fares to the reunion to secure the one-third rates on the return trip. Therefore every person purchasing a ticket to the grounds, of necessity should obtain certificate from the agent where the ticket is purchased, so that all may avail themselves of the reduced rates on their return home. The committee makes the above earnest appeal to all. Therefore do not allow yourselves to either neglect or forget to carry out this instruction.

R. R. DANA, Chairman.

DIED.

POWELL.—On May 25, 1898, near Lamoni, Iowa, at the home of her daughter, Sr. James Richardson, of cancer of the tongue and throat, Mrs. Elizabeth Powell, aged 76 years, 2 months, and 4 days. She suffered much, and during ten months partook of only liquid food. The name of her first husband was William Robinson, brother of James, formerly of Kewanee, Illinois. She was once a Wesleyan Methodist, but of late years believed largely in the restored gospel of Christ, yet she greatly feared going into the water and delayed until it was too late. Funeral sermon by Elder H. A. Stebbins at the house.

HUFFMAN.—At Lexington, Michigan, May 26, 1898, Sr. Lena, wife of William Huffman, of Elk Township, member of the German branch of Cash, Sanilac County, Michigan. Services at the Baptist church, conducted by P. W. Surbrook, of Lexington, Michigan.

HISTORY OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS. (Volumes 1 and 2 now ready.) Provided for by action of General Conference of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Written and compiled by President Joseph Smith and Apostle Heman C. Smith. Invaluable as a correct historical narrative, as a means of conversion to truth, and as a defensive weapon in meeting old and new objections urged against the latter-day work. It contains important documents connected with the establishment, growth, and internal and external affairs and progress of the church. The revelations given in this dispensation are inserted, in connection with accounts of the circumstances under which they were given. Biographical sketches, illustrations, complete indexes, sidenotes for ready reference, etc., are some of the features of the work. Volume 1 begins with the birth of Joseph Smith, the Prophet and Seer, in 1805, and narrates the circumstances of his calling and ministry, the rise of the church in 1830, and until the close of the year 1835. Volume 2 continues the history up to June 27, 1844, —to the assassination of Joseph and Hyrum Smith.

THE KEOKUK ROUTE.

K. & W. and D. M. & K. C. Railways.

The D. M. & K. C. Ry from Des Moines to Cainville has been rebuilt and that portion south of Van Wert will be standard gauge on or before November 1, 1897.

There is no road in Southern Iowa or Northern Missouri which has more good locations for business men than on the line of the Keokuk Route. More stock of all kinds has been shipped over this line than any road of equal mileage in Iowa or Missouri. (See Missouri Surplus Map at our stations.) The freight and passenger service is not equalled by any road in the state, except the Missouri River trunk lines, with each of which we have union stations and direct connections.

Persons seeking farms can find property at tempting prices; men seeking business locations can find towns with ample territory and settlers to warrant good business. Additional passenger service will soon be given which will add to the growth of the towns.

The towns between Des Moines and Cainville are particularly well located for business. Look them up. Write to the undersigned for additional information. See folder for map and lands.

PRESBYTERIAN ANCHORS DRAGGING.

SIGNS are not wanting to indicate that some of the largest vessels of the Presbyterian squadron are dragging their anchors badly. The drift is all in one direction, too—toward Episcopalianism. Now, when a Calvinistic anchor fails to hold it must be admitted that the case is serious. Without any intention of unduly alarming the conservative Presbyterian brethren, it may yet be asked, in view of recent events, how long it will be at this rate before the whole Presbyterian fleet, with Princeton as the flagship, will be riding in Episcopalian waters.

Ever since the beginning of the trial of Dr. Briggs for heresy five years ago it has been apparent that the region of the Westminster Confession was suffering from a severe wind of doctrine. Though Dr. Briggs did not part his cables or cut adrift from Union Theological Seminary, he was suspended from the ministry and allowed to remain only on the understanding that he was to wrestle with himself and develop a spirit of repentance. How successful his wrestlings were may be inferred from his total abandonment of the Westminster creed a few days ago and from his formal admission into the Episcopal Church by Bishop Potter of New York.

Now comes the report that Professor Shields of Princeton has likewise abandoned Presbyterianism and been confirmed in the Episcopal faith. Professor McGiffert of Union has long shown signs of steering in the same direction. Latest and most significant of all is the statement that President Patton of Princeton, with Professors Duffield and Cameron of that college, has refused to go as a delegate to the coming session of the Presbyterian General Assembly.

On the surface, at least, the Princeton trouble appears to be a matter of personal liberty rather than one of doctrine. The fat was in the fire from the moment when Professor Shields, Grover Cleveland, and other Princeton property owners signed a petition that a liquor license be granted to the Princeton Inn, a local hostelry said to be frequented more or less by students and professors. The unregenerate Grover might have been excused, but it was otherwise with the professor who held the chair for the promotion of harmony between science and revealed religion. His views of harmony resulted only in discord. Indignant Presbyterians all over the country have refused to admit the need of any alcoholic lubricant to ease the friction between science and religion. It is expected that the entire Princeton faculty will be severely censured by the General Assembly, hence President Patton and his colleagues have decided to begin the war themselves by staying at home and leaving Princeton unrepresented in that legislative body.

When a Presbyterian stronghold such as Princeton shows this increasing disposition to break away from the denomination it is time there was a general inspection of anchors. It would be sad to have the Calvinistic brethren all wake up some fine morning to find themselves Episcopalian. Perhaps it would be well for them not to hold their lines quite so stiff on non-essentials and to allow a little more liberty of thought and action. Certainly the greater latitude allowed by the Episcopal Church is the present attraction in that direction, and if all the liberal thinkers should take a notion to follow Dr. Briggs' example the true blue Presbyterian Church would become alarmingly small.—Chicago Tribune.

HOW THE BRAIN WORKS.

A COMMITTEE of British physicians, acting jointly, has for some years been giving particular attention to this topic, and their researches, though not yet altogether complete, already show some very interesting results, which, taken together with those of investigators on the Continent, let us see a long way into the intricacies of the brain.

It has shown unequivocally, for example, that a brain cell, which is the really important part of the brain, actually loses part of its substance during action. The brain cells of persons and of animals that have died during a period of great exhaustion from overexertion are found to be greatly changed from the condition of the normal cell during times of health and vigor. The cell of the exhausted brain, instead of being plump and full of nervous matter, is found to be hollowed out or “vacuolated,” a cavity within its substance having formed and being filled with water. This means that a part of the cell substance has been actually consumed during the time of brain activity, precisely as coal is consumed when one gets heat from a furnace.

It is found, further, that if an animal whose brain cells are thus exhausted is permitted to rest and to sleep, its cells rapidly recuperate, new material being supplied from the blood until the vacuolation has disappeared and the cell is practically as good as new again. This explains why sleep is necessary to our existence. During waking hours our brains are literally worn away, and sleep is the state during which the repair shops of the brain make good the damage of the waking hours. Thus the brain of a person who suffers from insomnia is in the condition of a locomotive which is run night and day without going to the repair shops. Disaster must ultimately result.

It is not sleep alone, however, that rests the brain cell, though sleep is absolutely essential to recuperation of the brain as a whole. But not all parts of the brain are involved in any one kind of mental effort. The blood supply of the brain is so arranged that by expansion or contraction of different arteries, parts of the brain may be flushed with blood and other parts dammed off, so to speak, somewhat as the various currents of an irrigated field are regulated by the gardener. And as a rapid flow of blood is essential to great mental activity, this means that one part of the brain may be very actively at work while another part is resting and recuperating.

Thus it is that a person suffering from brain fatigue may leave his desk and go out into the fields, or on the highways with a bicycle, and by diverting his mind give the overworked cells a chance to rest and recuperate.

But it must not be overlooked that such exercise involves other brain cells, which in turn become exhausted; and that in the end, for the recuperation of the brain as a whole, sleep is absolutely essential. No recreation, no medicine, no stimulant, will take its place. The man who does not give himself sufficient hours of sleep, or who is unable to sleep when he makes the effort, is literally burning away his brain substance, and can no more keep on indefinitely in this way than a locomotive can run on indefinitely without getting fresh supplies of fuel.—San Francisco Call.

LIVE IN THE OPEN AIR.

CONSUMPTION, that scourge of Eastern Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York, and New Jersey, has lost some of its terrors of late.

Recent English experiments have shown that consumption is almost always developed as a result of overcrowding and bad air.

Take a boy of a slight inherited tendency to consumption and put him at work on a farm, and he will probably escape the disease himself and have healthy children.

If he goes to work in a bank or dry goods store he is almost certain to contract the disease, unless he is very careful in his out-of-work hours to seek outdoor pursuits.

These facts suggest what is known as the outdoors treatment of phthisis. Dr. F. W. Burton-Fanning reports that success follows its use in a very large percentage of cases, even where there is considerable lesion of the lungs.

The fever is reduced, in some cases yielding wholly in a month, in others persisting for six or seven months.

Appetite improves, sleeplessness vanishes, and night sweats depart if the patient is kept out of doors literally all the time, winter and summer. Of course, a dry, warm, sunny climate has usually its advantages for such a purpose, but there are reasons why a radical change of climate is not always advisable. Such resorts as are found in Cornwall, England, or in Atlantic City, or Southampton, Long Island, in this country, probably answer quite as well as the Riviera or Florida.

Of course the open air treatment does not in any way mean that the patient must live an active life out of doors. This would be a great mistake, except as a prophylactic in mild cases, as all the vital powers are needed to throw off the disease, and too much exercise lowers the vitality of the sick.

The preferred plan is to put the sick into open tents; in summer and pleasant weather take their beds and hammocks out of doors. A movable wind shelter which can be turned as required is a valuable adjunct in the treatment.

Sleeping rooms must always have their windows fully open, winter and summer, according to Dr. Burton-Fanning. So long as the patient is properly clothed he need not fear damp or cold. Consumptive patients are less liable to nasal catarrh than are comparatively healthy people.—New York Journal.

PATTIE; OR LEAVES FROM A LIFE. REDUCED from $1.15 to 75 cents. An excellent work for the home, also for young people's libraries and societies. Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa.

TERRIBLE HEREDITY.

A special study of hereditary drunkenness has been made by Professor Pellman, of Bonn University, Germany. His method was to take certain individual cases, a generation or two back. He thus traced the careers of children, grandchildren, and great-grandchildren in all parts of the present German Empire until he was able to present tabulated biographies of the hundreds descended from some original drunkard. Notable among the persons described by Professor Pellman is Frau Ada Jurke, who was born in 1740, and was a drunkard, a thief, and a tramp for the last forty years of her life, which ended in 1800. Her descendants numbered 834, of whom 709 were traced in local records from youth to death. One hundred and six of the 709 were born out of the wedlock. There were 144 beggars, and 62 more who lived from charity. Of the women, 181 led disreputable lives. There were in this family 76 convicts, 7 of whom were sentenced for murder. In a period of some seventy-five years this one family rolled up a bill of costs in almshouses, prisons, and correctional institutions amounting to at least 5,000,000 marks, or about $1,250,000.—Ex.

UNFERMENTED GRAPE WINE.

A reader of the Philadelphia Press contributes to it the following recipe for unfermented grape wine, which she says is an excellent one:—

Take twenty pounds of Concord grapes, add three quarts of water, crushing the grapes in the water. Stir them until it reaches boiling heat, let them cook fifteen or twenty minutes, then strain through a cloth. Add three pounds of granulated sugar. When the sugar is dissolved, strain again through a cloth; heat to boiling point again. Pour it into bottles, and seal instantly. Have the bottles thoroughly heated. Dip the necks with corks in into the hot sealing wax.

DEEP BREATHING.

S. Ciccolina advocates special daily attention to deep breathing as a means whereby almost every person can induce a vast improvement in general health, besides a permanent development of lung power. The method recommended is to breathe from the abdomen entirely; to exhale by the compression of the muscles overlying the stomach, and to inhale by expansion or inflation of the stomach. The ribs should be motionless during the acts of inhalation and exhalation. The inhalation—through the nose—should be slow and deep, and the air is to be held for a few seconds, which can be done after a little practice. It is then forced into the upper chest by contracting the abdomen, drawn back into the abdomen by expansion of the stomach, and finally exhaled rapidly through the mouth. This rapid exhalation has the effect of greatly expanding the chest, and the whole process, if practiced, at first for a few minutes, then gradually longer until it can be kept up for an hour, should be persevered in until it becomes second nature. It is quite a potent cure for nervousness, even consumption, hysteria and many allied pathological conditions. Care should be taken that the air breathed is perfectly pure, and if the practice is maintained indoors, the windows of the room should be kept open.—Ex.

LAMONI, IOWA, JUNE 22, 1898.

FROM THE FIELD.

THE following is from the Beardstown, Illinois, Evening Star, for May 4, and is a bright, racy exhibit for an elder in the field. It will be read with pleasure by some of our HERALD patrons:—

THE SAINTS.

Preaching and patriotism go hand in hand. The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints have their headquarters, business center, publishing house and book bindery at Lamoni, Decatur County, Iowa. It is their universal belief that this great Nation was founded in eternal justice. They stoutly advocate that the God of battle was on the side of the Revolutionary soldiery and victory was inevitable. The tree of human liberty was planted secure in the craggy heights and sunny vales of the Atlantic States. The rootlets were watered with the tears and blood of illustrious patriots. Under the far-famed and wide-spreading branches of the above-named plant dwell all fowl of every wing.

Forest and field, mountain and plain, the realm of mechanism and the arena of science, art, discovery, and liberal education are all duly represented between the two great oceans which are the natural highway for the commerce and trade of the whole civilized world. The sparkling lakes in our northland, that abound with the finny tribes, feed the rushing rivers that replenish the hungry sea. The network of railways distribute the productions of field, factory, mine, and shop. The necessities of life are laid at the door of the frugal, while luxuries in fabric and food come within the range of the provident rustler. Free schools, benevolent institutions and public improvements are fostered "in the land of the free and the home of the brave."

Political and religious liberty, without a national creed are the bulwarks of the government. All attempts to unite and combine church and state, and foster any mode of faith and worship, ought to be rebuked and nipped in the bud. The fires of '76 are burning on the altar of Cuba. Their prolonged, conscientious, unyielding, heroic struggles for independence ought to touch the heart of a stone.

In the language of the immortal Hebrew prophet, Moses, we should "Proclaim liberty throughout all the land, unto all the inhabitants thereof, it shall be a jubilee," etc.

If I die ere our tropical neighbors gain their merited freedom, and the horn of plenty teems temporal prosperity into their laps and the olive branch of peace waves over their homes, I will think my demise is untimely, and I will try and turn over in my newly-made grave.

True Americanism, the faithful interpretation of the Monroe Doctrine and the "perfect law of liberty," with all that is pure and good, cry out to lend a helping hand before it is too late. I wore the blue for three full years in the front, during our recent national unpleasantness. An honorable war in the interests of downtrodden, mentally or physically shackled humanity, surely is far better than a base peace, while virtue is sacrificed and partly expires. Shall I, like the vain and unfeeling priest, or the haughty, heartless Levite, pass heedlessly by on the opposite side when mangled, pillaged humanity needs attention and care? Let us act the humane part of the Samaritan, and bind up the wounds, apply the mollifying ointment, and foot all necessary expenditures.

A religion that does not seek to lift heavy burdens and raise up the fallen, and bind up heart wounds; yea that careth not for both the tabernacle of clay and the inner man should speedily be relegated to the realm of oblivion. When worshipers become proud and vain they ought to be reminded that a haughty mien paves the way for an ignominious downfall. It is right to feel grateful for pleasant homes and good environments, but business cares and domestic joys, or worldly emoluments and honors should not wholly engross our time and talent, for indeed St. Paul wisely saith "not slothful in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord." The war spirit is in the atmosphere and has largely crowded out detailed theology or even a brief sketch of our church development, methods, growth, etc.

SUGGESTIONS TO CHURCH-GOERS.

IN proposing to attend church service, or concert, recitation, entertainment, or public service open to the public either free or for pay, the persons so attending will manifest good sense and good will as well as good breeding, if they will give heed and observe the following rules of good conduct in such places:—

1. Before going make up your mind that you are going for a good purpose—to receive some benefit from what you may see and hear.

2. Conclude that others go there for the same purpose.

3. You have a right to see and hear all that is done or said, without being disturbed. Every other person in attendance has the same right.

4. No one has a right to annoy or disturb you in the exercise of the privilege to hear and see, to prevent you from enjoying the exercises and getting the most benefit from them; as a consequence you have no right to annoy, or disturb anyone else to prevent them from enjoying the exercises.

5. Whispering, laughing, giggling, talking in loud tones, moving from place to place, wiggling and twisting about in the seat, coughing or clearing the throat, drumming on the floor with the feet, or shuffling the feet noisily on the floor, or drumming on the seat or rail with the fingers, drumming with the nails against the teeth, whistling or making any other noise with the lips, tongue, or voice, are all calculated to disturb and annoy others, and ought not to be indulged in. Spitting on the floor, chewing of tobacco or gum during the exercises are in very bad form, and should be avoided entirely.

6. Be sure to go early enough to be seated before the exercises begin. It is bad form to come after services begin; and is besides annoying to many, and the preacher, or those in charge especially.

7. Sit quietly. Do not turn your face toward the entrance at each arrival, or at any little bustle near the door. If anything comes in that may be dangerous or likely to hurt anybody, the officers in charge will give due notice and warning. To keep turning the head to ascertain who may be coming in at the door, especially after the services have begun, is an act of disrespect to the speaker or the persons occupying the stage doing their part of the program.

8. Stay in your seat until the exercises close. And, do not attempt to go out until the benediction is pronounced. The parting song and benediction, good word, are as much a part of the service as the sermon, and many who attend are seriously disturbed and hurt in feelings by the unseemly haste of those who are disrespectful enough to bustle in getting ready to go, or who do go out while the song is being sung, or the benediction being said.

9. Anything which is calculated to disturb the peace or quiet of a seat mate or a neighbor, is improper and ought not to be done. The intention-cordial, or good feeling which is necessary to the best enjoyment of all should be cultivated by all; hence it is the duty of every one to see to it that his conduct at meeting, concert, recitation, entertainment, or any other assembly which the public may attend, is of the best. The public has a right to look for this and to demand it, if there be any who will not grant it.

10. While the above is for the consideration of the pewholder and seat-occupier, the duties of the preacher may be summed up about this way:—

11. The preacher should be natural, in his attitude, gestures, and speech.

12. He should have something to say and say it in an interesting way.

13. He should avoid repetitions. They are as much out of place in a sermon as in a prayer, and vain in either.

14. He should avoid the use of pet phrases, so far as possible.

15. He should be in touch with the people as well as enraptured with the beauty of his own speech; and should never speak longer than a well-known custom of his congregation permits. Extra long, or even long sermons, sometimes defeat the very object for which the preacher labors through his overtime.

16. While the preacher demands and expects that his audience will give him attention and due respect, he should remember that he must respect his audience.

17. It is in bad form and useless for the preacher to berate his audience, present and before him, for the failure of others to attend, or to scold the absentees over the shoulders of those present. Those who have come to hear should be first in the preacher's mind and consideration; and it is his duty to put the best ability he has at his command, natural or granted, for the occasion into his effort for the direct benefit of those who are present; and any effort to score those absent is lost, not reaching its object, and is besides annoying and distressing to those who are present and should be treated to better things.

18. No matter how small the audience, it is wise for the preacher not to notice the fact or refer to it in his effort. It is productive of the best results for him to proceed upon the lines of his subject. One or two interested listeners is better than a houseful of uninterested and inattentive people who do not hear, and who take no heed of what is said.

19. It is the duty of the preacher or actor to be at his post ready to undertake his part. A minister who is too late in keeping his appointment must expect to meet some annoyed if not irritated members of his congregation. Such tardiness is as a rule unjustifiable, and deserves rebuke.

20. Preacher and audience should be at one in interest in the subject presented, and should have the best of feelings each for the other. This disregarded, and the preacher will toil in vain.

NEW BANK AT LAMONI.

A BANKING institution to be known as the "State Savings Bank of Lamoni," has been organized at Lamoni, with a paid up capital of $14,000.

This new corporation has bought the bank building and office fixtures of the Lamoni State Bank, which is going out of business, and will begin its official business existence July 1, ready for any and all business, that such an institution may legitimately do.

The stockholders of this new institution are David Dancer, William Anderson, William A. Hopkins, Oscar Anderson, Frank Criley, Andrew K. Anderson, Lucy L. Resseguie, Ella D. Whitehead, George H. Hilliard, George W. Blair, and Alice P. Dancer. The Directors are David Dancer, President; William Anderson, Vice President; William A. Hopkins, Cashier; Oscar Anderson, Assistant Cashier; and Frank Criley, Andrew K. Anderson, Lucy L. Resseguie, and Ella D. Whitehead.

The members of this new banking institution are men and women of sterling worth and citizens whose character and reputation are so far above reproach. The financial ability of those chosen to conduct the business of the corporation is good, and of their faithful conduct of affairs there need be no question.

Interest will be paid on time deposits, according to the rules of the bank. Those who may have business requiring the services of a bank, or who have money to intrust for safe keeping, may send to the State Savings Bank of Lamoni, with safety, and will be served with fidelity and good will.

NEED OF DISPASSIONATE JUDGMENT.

SOME one sends us anti-Catholic newspapers with marked articles containing what to us appear harsh and drastic criticisms of the Roman Catholic Church. We do not republish said articles for two reasons; viz.; lack of space, and lack of sympathy with the spirit of the writers. We do not believe in the spirit of Roman Catholicism, neither do we believe in the spirit and methods of those who cultivate bitterness and unjust sentiments towards it. There is a saying, "Give even the Devil his due," the spirit of which, to say the least, might be emulated by many with profit. Catholics have common rights with others, no more, no less. When they or others resort to use of wrong methods, correction should be demanded; but persecution or bitter aspersions should not be made use of.

Men can and should be firm in insisting upon rigid execution of the laws without respect to religious societies, but also without resort to injustice. It is the strong man who can do his opponents impartial justice; who does not permit his own strong convictions upon public or religious questions to sway him an iota beyond the straight line of right and truth.

There is need for the cultivation of the spirit of dispassionate, intelligent fairness in all phases and departments of life. Extremes vary from truth, the path of which is straight. The individual who permits personal dislike, religious prejudice, or selfish ends to sway his judgment, is incapable of reaching correct conclusions or of rendering an unbiased judgment.

He who has disciplined himself to see and adjust himself to truth in all its phases, and in the affairs of ordinary life and duty, has attained advanced development. He has thus become an honor and of use to society. He has not succeeded, however, without much self-denial, self-correction, and strict honesty in the examination. If he has thus succeeded he shows forth the fruits of just convictions, based upon proper standards of criticism. If he has not, his low standards and imperfect methods of thought are manifest in unjust, erroneous, and harmful words and work. All need a baptism of the spirit of self-examination. Are we able to receive it? is a question that we all might consider with profit to ourselves and to others.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL COLLECTIONS FOR THE SAINTS' HOME.

DURING the late convention of the General Sunday School Association a resolution was adopted requesting every Sunday school of the association to take up a special collection on the third Sunday in May (the 16th) for the purpose of furnishing the halls of the Saints' Home and otherwise contributing to the completion of that worthy institution.

The response to the resolution was both general and generous, the saints and their children taking the matter to heart as well as in hand and contributions reached Bro. A. B. Hanson, the treasurer, amounting to five hundred dollars and over, and are still coming in as the outlying schools continue to remit.

Brn. Frank Criley, W. A. Hopkins, and Bishop Kelley were appointed a committee by the General Association to act on its behalf in purchasing necessary supplies in making the general outlay of the fund. Accompanied by Bro. Criley, of the purchasing committee, and by Bro. D. F. Lambert, of the Patriot, the writer made a tour of inspection of the Home, on the morning of the 18th inst., to note the results of the contributions of schools.

Entering the front of the first floor hall the leading features noted in the purchase are the hall floors neatly and substantially covered with one hundred yards of heavy linoleum, tasty in pattern and light in color, in keeping with the general, cheery surroundings. The floors had also been painted on the margins. Besides this, one half dozen light-wood hall settees and one and a half dozen neat chairs were placed in position, and molding and pictures pleasing to the eye adorned the walls. Large cocoa mats at the principal entrances and Smyrna rugs at the openings to leading rooms were also found in place, adding a sense of comfort to the general appearance. Entering the dining room, tableware and pictures were pointed out as representing a portion of the Sunday school purchase money.

Approaching the stairway to the second floor the steps were found covered with heavy fluted rubber, which with the reliable banister rails prevent the aged from slipping or falling.

Entering the halls on the second floor they were found covered with ninety yards of neat ingrain carpet, heavily padded, the walls adorned with molding and pictures, and made comfortable by two large settees, twelve chairs, door mats, etc.

The good work made possible by the school children had not stopped here, however, for leaving the building a brand new windmill was pointed out, towering high above the Home and furnishing an abundant water supply from the Home well for the convenience and comfort of its inmates. The fund had been sufficient to purchase that necessary and desirable accessory, and also five hundred feet of sidewalk, which had been built around the entire building and to the entrance gate to the grounds.

The windmill was purchased at cost. Bro. John H. Hougas, of Lamoni, a skilled mechanic and builder, erected the mill free of cost, taking charge of the work, as he has done in much other public church work, without cost to the body.

We failed to mention another item; viz., the bill for window shades for the Home, amounting to ninety dollars ($90.00), was also paid from the school fund.

The work of the association and its schools, including that of all concerned, is creditable and greatly beneficial to the Home. The children and all the workers included deserve credit for their excellent united effort. The results will add to the comfort of the many aged ones who find a resting place at the Home. The money collected was mostly made up of penny donations, and shows what can be done by will and work. It has been wisely expended and will prove a blessing to those receiving from the gifts.

The Home is a delightful place and a credit to the church.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

BRO. G. H. HILLIARD, writing from Little Sioux, Iowa, June 17, requests us to announce the following appointments for him during the months of June and July. Saints in the localities named will be interested in taking note that they may hear Bro. Hilliard's stirring discourses: "Logan, Iowa, June 18 and 19; Woodbine, the 20th; Dow City 21, 22; Deloit 23 and 24; Galland's Grove 25 and 26; Defiance 27 and 28; Harlan, 29 and 30; Persia July 1 and 2; Underwood 3 and 4."

Reports of the Williams-Bays and the Wight-Braden debates will be continued in the HERALD until completed. Other demands have crowded out remaining matter, but all will be inserted—a portion each succeeding week until the entire report is completed. The subject matter will prove valuable and of worth to all lovers and defenders of the truth.

Bro. J. W. Wight returned to Lamoni on the 18th inst., and so far as we are able to discern, no worse but rather the better for his rencounter with Mr. Braden, at Tabor. The God of battle seems, as of old, to be on the side of the right in these days of war.

Bro. M. Johnson, now at Omaha, relates his pleasure at meeting with saints at Omaha, where he has located while in attendance at school. He feels at home among those of like faith.

Brn. A. H. Smith and E. L. Kelley, of the Presidency, left Lamoni on the 20th inst. for Wadena, Minnesota, to attend a reunion of the Northern district of that State.

Bro. and Sr. William Newton, of Santa Rosa, California, reached Lamoni on the 16th inst., enroute to England, where Bro. Newton expects to resume missionary work in July.

In next week's issue we shall endeavor to give a report of Graceland College commencement exercises. Other matter of equal importance has prevented earlier insertion.

Doubtless our readers are enjoying the spicy reports of the Williams-Bays and Wight-Braden debates. The reports have been forwarded by Brn. Mintun and Wight, at our request. They contain many new points on the propositions, and show the latest developments in the various forms of opposition invented to overthrow the latter-day work. Brn. Wight and Mintun have our thanks for their excellent work. The HERALD readers doubtless appreciate the value of said reports and the amount of labor required to prepare them.

"The poorest day that passes over us is the conflux of two eternities."

"An imperial edict has been issued providing for the establishment of the University of Pekin, China, on European models. The dignitaries have been commanded to confer immediately for the carrying out of the scheme." China, long inert and buried in the stolidity of its peculiar civilization, is beginning to awaken to the necessity of learning modern sciences and adopting western civilization.

The Chicago Tribune is authority for the statement that eight Mormon missionaries have been sent to New Zealand from New South Wales to work among the Maoris, among whom there are said to be four thousand members of the Utah church.

The appeal of the Bishopric in behalf of Graceland College fund should receive a hearty and prompt response from every one interested in the success of the work. The College was built by direction of the General Conference, hence the burden of liquidating the indebtedness assumed rests largely upon the financial arm, to whom is presented claims due from the church. The appeal ought not to be received with indifference, but deserves a hearty and prompt response from the body. Let all bear a helping hand and the indebtedness will soon be cancelled. Where there is a will there is a way.

COLLEGE AID.

TEN CENT COLLECTION THE SECOND SUNDAY IN JULY, 1898.

ALSO

Subscription of One Dollar, to be Completed by August 1.

TO THE SAINTS:—In order to meet the college claims now pressing upon the church, each member of the church is asked to help in a collection for this purpose to the amount of ten (10) cents to be taken the second Sunday in July next.

The amount is small, but if all will perform this small part it will be of great good to the body, and relieve the Bishopric of a burden which is greatly trying and annoying. Brothers and sisters in every branch and district of the church, will you aid this

TEN CENT COLLECTION?

Do not hesitate and question as to whether it will be enough to do much good; let us all see that it is done, and then count the result as the returns come in.

We ask that Bishop's agents, and presidents of districts, and presidents of branches, take charge of this in their respective places of work, advertise the collection in their meetings, and arrange for taking the same.

A subscription of one dollar ($1.00) each is also authorized to be taken in every branch and district of the church to be superintended by Bishop's agents, and presidents of branches.

It is not a big sum, but if faithfully carried out it will do the work and the Bishopric will not have to call upon you again for the college. If not furnished we will be compelled to trouble you again.

Presidents of branches have an opportunity here to do an excellent work alongside of every other branch. Let us hear from you, brethren. The call is within the reach of all; and we rely upon each and every one of this great gospel family to give the help. If a member or friend cannot give the one dollar, he can give to the ten-cent collection. If possible give to both.

In taking and reporting the ten-cent collection give name of branch and amount.

In taking the dollar subscription, give name of subscriber and amount.

Report these to the Bishop's agents in respective districts, or to E. L. Kelley, Bishop, Lamoni, Iowa.

The last General Conference of the church at its regular business session held April 16, 1898, passed the following resolution:—

Whereas, the financial report of the Board of Trustees of Graceland College shows a large indebtedness, to the proper payment of which the church is morally in honor bound; and believing that the church should use that department of its working forces which the law creates to be the financial agents for the accomplishment of its financial ends; therefore, be it

Resolved, that the Bishopric be hereby authorized and instructed to devise and make such arrangements for the collection of means as may be adequate, and out of such means so collected, and such funds of the church as are not otherwise appropriated, liquidate the indebtedness, and provide for the further carrying out of the desires of the church heretofore expressed in conference enactments directing the establishment of an institution of learning to be maintained by the church.

This places a burden of no little care and weight upon the Bishopric, and the result of its undertaking in this department of financial work is of the highest importance to the church.

If you are a member, you are, or should be, equally interested in this work as any member of the Bishopric or the entire body. The undertaking it is true, if to be accomplished by a very few, is a mammoth one; but if by the united membership of the body it may be quickly and successfully performed.

It will not comport with a godly walk or spirit for a single member of the body or church to say that he will not do what he can and as soon as he can to aid in this work, for the good of the church demands action at once; and, under such conditions, all should make some effort at least.

The Bishopric to a degree has already felt the approaching financial burden and feels that it may safely rely upon the saints individually to lift whatever part it is possible for him or her to do, and thus equalizing the load by a united effort move it at once out of the way.

In devising ways and means, therefore, it has been our purpose to give every one a chance to perform a part, that no one may have to do another's work, but each his own; and having arranged the matter of collections so that it is possible for every one to act, we urge the faithfulness enjoined by the Master upon the church at Philadelphia:—

"That no man take thy crown."

Let each perform his or her own work, and neither wish nor permit another to perform it for him.

One of the most stinging rebukes to the ancient Scribes and Pharisees came by reason of their lack in performance of duty, and a failure of appreciation of the burdens of their fellows.

For they say, and do not. For they bind heavy burdens and grievous to be borne, and lay them on men's shoulders; but they themselves will not move them with one of their fingers."

Let this not truly be said in any sense of Christ's children.

In this call the Bishopric has considered the necessities, and asked as little as would perform the work. It is not out of the reach of a single person who will strive to help.

May the Lord bless you in helping.

Confidently in the one hope,

E. L. KELLEY,

G. H. HILLIARD,

Of the Bishopric.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

Blotted out!

All within and all about
Shall a freer life begin;
Freer breathe the universe
As it rolls its heavy curse
On the dead and buried sin!"

WASN'T WANTED THERE.

SHE was a little old woman, very plainly dressed in black bombazine that had seen much careful wear, and her bonnet was very old-fashioned, and people stared at her tottering up the aisle of the grand church, evidently bent on securing one of the best seats, for a great man preached on that day, and the house was filled with splendidly dressed people who had heard of the fame of the preacher, of his learning, his intellect, and goodness, and they wondered at the presumption of the old woman. She must have been in her dotage, for she picked out the pew of the richest and proudest member of the church and took a seat. The three ladies who were seated there beckoned to the sexton, who bent over the intruder and whispered something, but she was hard of hearing, and smiled a little withered smile, as she said gently:—

"O, I'm quite comfortable here, quite comfortable here."

"But you are not wanted here," said the sexton pompously. "There is not room. Come with me my good woman; I will see that you have a seat."

"Not room!" said the old woman, looking at her sunken proportions and then at the fine ladies. "Why, I'm not crowded a bit. I rode ten miles to hear the sermon to-day, because—" But the sexton took her by the arm, and shook her roughly in a polite, underhand way, and she took the hint. Her faded old eyes filled with tears, her chin quivered, but she rose meekly, and left the pew. Turning quietly to the ladies, who were spreading their rich dresses over the spot she left vacant, she said gently:—

"I hope, my dears, there'll be room in heaven for us all."

Then she followed the pompous sexton to the rear of the church, where, in the last pew, she was seated between a threadbare girl and a shabby old man.

"She must be crazy," said one of the ladies in the pew which she had at first occupied. "What can an ignorant old woman like her want to hear Dr. — preach for? She would not be able to understand a word he said."

"Those people are so persistent. The idea of her forcing herself into our pew! Isn't that voluntary lovely? There's Dr. — coming out of the vestry. Isn't he grand?"

"Splendid! What a stately man! You know he has promised to dine with us while he is here."

He was a commanding-looking man, and as the organ voluntary stopped and he looked over the vast crowd of worshipers gathered in the great church, he seemed to scan every face. His hand was on the Bible, when suddenly he leaned over the reading desk, and beckoned to the sexton, who obsequiously mounted the steps to receive a mysterious message. And then the three ladies in the grand pew were electrified to see him take his way the whole length of the church, to return with the old woman, whom he placed in the front pew of all, its occupants making willing room for her. The great preacher looked at her with a smile of recognition, and then the service proceeded, and he preached a sermon which struck fire from every heart.

"Who was she?" asked the ladies who could not make room for her, as they passed the sexton at the door.

"The preacher's mother," replied that functionary in an injured tone.

How few remember that "while man looketh on the outward appearance, the Lord looketh on the heart."—Selected.

SMITHLAND, Iowa, May 22.

Dear Sisters:—Feeling it my duty to help support the Home Column, I thought I would write you this lovely Sabbath day. We organized a Daughters of Zion and Prayer Union here last summer, and had several good meetings, when circumstances became so I could no longer attend as president, and it was abandoned, much to my regret. I believe the secretary did not send in the names for enrollment as instructed. Two of our number have moved away, thus leaving the number of workers so small we can hardly carry on a society profitably at present; so we try to do all we can in Religio and Sunday school work. I would like to be where I could attend the Daughters of Zion meetings, as I feel it would be a great help to me in training my boy and girl. I find a great deal of help in Herald and Autumn Leaves, and only wish I had more time to write for their support than I have, but with two babies, about all the time I have for writing is Sunday afternoons, and that at the expense of staying home from afternoon services; but I do not consider the sacrifice too great if I can do any good. I hope to get my work arranged soon so I can do the same amount of writing without missing the preaching in the afternoon, as there is nothing I love better than to hear the gospel preached.

Not long ago I was thinking about the Hope being supported by so few, and wondered why. I think many sisters might do more, and many brothers also, especially the ministry who for most part have nothing to do from morning until evening, except think and study for preaching in the evening. Could they not write many instructive articles for the Hope? Either descriptive of some place of interest they have visited; some incident in their own lives; or better still, something illustrative of the great plan of salvation. Perhaps they will tell us they have a higher mission than this. Let us say then, the Lord when here on earth commanded the Apostle Peter to feed his lambs. How can they be fed better than through the Hope? Yet, when have we had an article from the pen of an elder, let alone an apostle? Brethren, please think of this and help lift the burden from the overworked mothers who now supply its columns.

There is one question I wish to ask before closing. We read in Home Column, and hear the elders teach, You must never tell a child to do a thing a second time. When we tell them once and they do not mind, what are we to do? if we must not tell them again. I must close as it is supper time.

Your sister in Christ,

PRAYER UNION.

SPECIAL REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.

SR. ALICE PICKENS, Tennessee, desires the faith and prayers of the Union, that she may be restored to health. She has been sorely afflicted for a long while.

Sr. Estella Hart, of Broughton, Kansas, asks your faith and prayers in behalf of her father (Elder Henry Hart), who is very badly afflicted, that if it is right in the sight of God he may be speedily restored to health. He places his entire trust in the Lord, whom he believes is able to do all things.

Letter Department.

LOCUST POINT, Ohio, June 3.

Editors Herald:—I came here last fall, preached a few sermons, had a great interest, and the people seemed anxious for me to return. I came, and have been here four weeks to-day. The crowds are on the increase and interest also. Have baptized ten and expect more on Sunday. I have been preaching in a fruit house, but now I have the Seventh-day Adventist church. It was dedicated the first Sunday after I arrived. It is a nice, large church, and is full every night, besides a lot out of doors.

The United Brethren are terribly worked up. I have baptized four of their best members, and some of the Adventists are talking of obeying. I have been here twenty-four days and preached twenty-four sermons. I guess by fall, if all goes well, we will have a church built here. Some of the members are quite well off. There is a good crop of preachers; they are very young and green yet, but the people are ripe to receive the word and to be gathered into the fold.

Yours for the truth,

F. C. SMITH.

INDEPENDENCE, Mo., June 15.

Editors Herald:—I left Independence on May 26 and called that evening at Bro. D. C. White's, in Blairstown. Next morning, in company with D. C. and his daughter May, started for the Coalhill conference in carriage. Drove twenty miles and took dinner at Bro. and Sr. Matthews' in Clinton. Drove to Deepwater and put up for the night at Bro. I. N. Delong's. They hustled around among their neighbors and before nine had quite a houseful of saints and friends, to whom I broke the bread of life with fair liberty.

Next morn found us on the road early and drove in at Bro. Odes', near Taberville, where we all relished a sumptuous dinner of fish and many other fine things. Bro. W. E. Haden had joined us at Clinton and we felt just at home with the jolly young folks as they made the long hours seem short by chipping in a song now and then. Left Bro. Odes' and passed on through Taberville, meeting Sr. Baugh and others, all anxious to have us remain and preach; but no time. Pulled in at Lebeck near sundown, a little tired. Here we met the Andes, Kecks, Walters, Bakers, Duncans, and some others, all seemingly glad to see us. Next morning we drove to Eldorado Springs where we held a few meetings, and on Friday, June 3, met the saints at Coalhill church, where the Clinton Sunday school convention went into session at ten. There seemed to be considerable push and energy in many of the workers. Sr. Dr. Miller, who is district superintendent, never tires when she sees anything to do that will help this great latter-day work on. Had an entertainment at night, which was good, but a little tedious because of length. Late hours found your writer domiciled at Bro. Keck's, where we were cared for during the next two days.

Conference convened at 9:30, June 4, with

D. C. in chair and Sr. Miller clerk. I was asked to preside over the conference, but declined, to give others experience, and I soon learned Bro. D. C. was no slouch in handling the pros and cons in a business meeting. Glad to see men post themselves so they can be wide-awake leaders; such men are needed all along the line. The conference was quite well attended and everything went off in fine order. Bro. Sory spoke to us on Daniel's image, Saturday night. While he did well in elucidating some of the "hoofs and horns," I thought it would have taken one hundred years of such "suppositions" and attempts at straightening up the faults that Adventists had made along that line to have convinced me that the Latter Day Saints had any gospel to save.

Sunday morning came and the place swarmed with saints anxious to take part in the early prayer service, which lasted from 9:30 to a few minutes after eleven. I was announced to preach the dedicatory sermon at eleven. I had visited that vicinity in 1886 and held a public debate with the Christians who had a flourishing congregation then, but now it is a thing of the past, and the saints have built up a flourishing church and are prosperous. At the time of debate we only numbered eight souls all told in that whole country; but they reach now up into the hundreds and are still moving forward with the angel's message to save. No minister in the church could have been better prepared to appreciate the surroundings than was myself. This is the home of brethren F. C. Keck, R. T. Walters, Swen Swenson, and D. E. Tucker, who at the time of the debate knew not the gospel, but are now all seventies and are wide-awake missionaries. This is the home of Brn. Abner Lloyd and C. M. Schroder, who are elders and the charter members of the branch. Srs. Schroder and Lloyd are not a whit behind with their "good works" with the "chiefest of workers." My sermon for that occasion was well received and I pleased myself, which is of no little moment. We had a "basket dinner" and the long table just teemed with good things. Bro. D. C. spoke in the grove by the church at two, and was followed by a Christian lady on "Woman's rights." I spoke at night, which closed the conference.

The success had in the dedicatory service spurred up the Veve saints, some ten miles further west, and they invited me to officiate in the dedicating of their church the next Sunday. I agreed to this and spent the week at Eldorado Springs, trying to speak to the people in the courthouse and to encourage the saints to live to please God by taking Christ as their model. Bro. Walters joined me, and Bro. Floyd drove us over to the Veve chapel Sunday morning in time to meet with the Sunday school and give them a short talk. I was proud of the school, and thanked God that he had put it into the minds of the young men and women to carry forward the Sunday school work. I preached the dedicatory sermon at eleven, Bro. Walters leading in prayer. Again God blessed us for the occasion and the saints and friends all seemed to enjoy the services. Another sumptuous "basket dinner" was spread in the yard and none went hungry. At two we enjoyed a saints' meeting presided over by Bro. Joseph Sterling. I spoke at night and left Bro. Walters in charge of two more appointments. Monday, 13th; Bro. Bud drove me to Nevada, where I took train for Independence. On the morning of the 17th I leave for St. Louis, where I will attend that conference and then pass on to Illinois to remain till some time in August. Am billed to attend their reunion to be held at Parrish from July 22 to August 1.

I am glad to note the activity among a large majority of the missionaries. Hands full and pressing forward, we are trusting, hoping, and expect victory by and by.

I. N. WHITE.

TABOR, Iowa, June 17.

Editors Herald:—Our debate closed last night; twelve sessions, six nights on each proposition. We were hindered three nights by rain. Bro. Wight held out well unto the last. He was sustained by the faith and prayers of the saints. God came to his help beyond our expectation, by the power of his Spirit. To him be all the praise.

Bro. Fred Smith did his work well and satisfactorily as moderator for Elder Wight. Bro. Samuel Orton and his amiable wife did a praiseworthy work in caring for the elders, making them as comfortable as possible. Other good sisters also did well. They aided as they could. Be it to the credit of the dear saints who so liberally came to our help in paying the expense, and sending our beloved brethren on their way rejoicing. They have, by their fair dealing and honest, earnest, faithful work, found a warm place in the hearts of the saints and many friends of this community.

Bro. Charles Fry did exceedingly well as a scribe for Elder Wight. Bro. Wight is sending a brief synopsis of the argument, which will suffice and satisfy the inquiring minds of your readers.

We have lost nothing through the debate, but gained much. The saints have increased in faith. We have made many friends who bade us Godspeed in our work. Some have been converted to the truth of our position and are ready to unite with us. We are lonesome to-day, as the brethren left us this morning, but we intend to push forward in this work, preaching the gospel to the many who are anxious to hear. We are still hopeful and in the faith.

To my collaborators in this mission: Please do not forget to report to me the first of July. My mission address is, Box 659, Shenandoah, Iowa.

In bonds,

HENRY KEMP.

CANADY, Miss., June 13.

Editors Herald:—I left home on the 31st ult. for the southern part of my field of labor, meeting with the saints at Theodore, Alabama, in conference capacity on the 4th of June. We had a very good conference, everything considered. I was truly blessed while instructing the saints and in teaching others not of the faith.

Bro. Carpenter and I remained for four days after conference and continued meetings with fair interest. We then came here to assist in a two-days' meeting and to continue longer if interest would justify. We had a fair attendance yesterday morning, but rain prevented many from coming last night. We hear that the yellow fever has made its appearance again on the coasts of Mississippi, and we may be quarantined for some time, and we have fears that it may hinder us in our work here; yet we will try and do the very best we can under the circumstances. Perhaps we did wrong in coming here when we did, but we hoped to do what we could in this part first before the fever made its appearance, then to move on north. I hope the saints will remember us in their prayers that we may not be prevented from doing good by being detained here unnecessarily, but that the way may open and we be given wisdom to go where we can do the most good.

At present we could not go very far from here, for lack of means, unless we should go on foot. We are willing to do for the best, and pray for divine direction.

Kind regards to all the saints where we have labored and elsewhere.

In gospel bonds,

M. M. TURPEN.

WEST FORK, Ind., June 7.

Editors Herald:—I am still trying to speed the gospel plow. I had the pleasure on Sunday last to lead three more precious souls into the waters of baptism to arise and walk in newness of life. I am trying to do my whole duty toward God and man that I may have a crown of righteousness that fades not away, to wear in the sweet by and by. Let us all do our duties and each one do his or her part of the work that we may rejoice together in the kingdom of God.

G. JENKINS.

KING LAKE, Houghton, Ont., June 3.

Editors Herald:—After the lecture at Glenmeyer Baptist church, by the Rev. Mr. McIntosh, referred to in my last, we secured Mr. John Dawson's house near here, and began meetings, and on the 22d ult., baptized four noble souls. One was the good Samaritan spoken of in my last, Emerson Beemer, and his noble wife; and one was Mrs. Arn, from Vienna. This lady heard the gospel a year ago, when I held meetings in the Catholic church at Vienna. The other lady was the mother of John Dawson, and a member of the Baptist Church, but saw her church was built upon a sandy foundation, and not according to the Bible. Others are near the kingdom. The post master's wife is ready, waiting on her husband, so I am informed; and also Mrs. John Dawson.

I am doing what I can to push the work here. I have succeeded in getting forty-five hundred feet of lumber in logs, and two cords of shingle wood, and two thousand shingles already cut, and thirty dollars in money and a considerable lot of work signed, towards our church.

I called on a Baptist trustee to see if he would give something. He said he would rather sign a paper to have me sent out of the country. We feel that if it was not for the good laws of our land we would soon be driven out and suffer as saints in days of old. We ask the prayers of God's people that the enemy may be driven back and God's work prevail.

Since writing I held two meetings here yesterday, the 5th, and baptized one, Mrs. Franks, making five in all here, and expect to baptize more next Sunday. I go to Vienna to-day to canvass for our new church here. Have called a meeting for next Wednesday evening to appoint a building committee, as we would like to get our church up this summer. The enemy is working hard to hinder the work here, and we are working most night and day for its progress. Remember us at the throne of grace.

ELDER S. W. TOMLINSON.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., June 9.

Editors Herald:—The work in Broad River, Connecticut, is progressing very well. I was with them last Sunday and noticed some improvement, in the singing and Sunday school work especially. The sisters are doing well. Two were added to their number on Sunday by baptism and others are near the door. Bro. A. E. Stone, of New Canaan, is doing well. He has opened his house for the preaching of the word, and some are interested.

Bro. William Hobson is also laboring in Danbury, about twenty miles east of Norwalk, and is doing good. Elder Rushton, from England, arrived here about two weeks ago, and has succeeded in getting employment, so the outlook for the New York district looks a little more favorable for the future. Bro. Homer Buttery, teacher of the branch, is doing his part in assisting, also Julius Cable, deacon, is at his post, which is quite commendable.

May the Lord guide and bless his servants.

JOSEPH SQUIRE, Sr.

NEVADA, Iowa, June 8.

Editors Herald:—The first conference of the Des Moines district of the Reorganized Church held at Nevada, Story county, Iowa, June 4 and 5, 1898, is now past and we hereby commit it to record. It was not so largely attended as are some of the conferences of the district, but was quite well attended by both ministry and membership, the season of the year, and other circumstances of a local character considered. A busy season for the farmers, especially, and but two families of saints reside here—Brn. W. C. Hidy's and W. C. Hardy's. Some of their friends here aided in the entertainment of visiting saints. Mr. Kegrice, a Dunkard minister, and several of his members resident here, attended the preaching services throughout the conference session, and are interested in the work, favorably so. The minister came from Marshall County to attend.

The Sunday school convention and its work was left mainly to the older people, as but few of the younger men were present, but it was nevertheless profitable, and good interest was manifest. One new school has been organized during the last quarter, south of Collins, at Clear Creek, in Jasper County, with Bro. William Owens superintendent. Bro. George Shimel has lately been laboring at Clear Creek and baptized eleven persons, mostly heads of families, people of influence. It is contemplated that a branch will be organized there at no distant day. The splendid manner in which the two families of saints resident here entertained the fifty to sixty visitors to conference, is worthy of mention. No one was slighted in the least; no complaints heard. Bro. Frank L'Hommiedieu and wife, and Sr. Bett, of Colorado, contributed their share of the substantial to feed the multitude and otherwise aid the good work. Thirty-three additions to the church by baptism were reported; also considerable labor by the local ministry.

The Perry branch is doing something to help Bro. J. W. Morgan, its president, give some of his time to work in the field. This is commendable, and as part of the result, five have lately been added to the branch at his hands.

Conference was here in the district tent, so that clouds and rain militated somewhat against the attendance; but some here are interested, consequently the tent will remain here for a week, then go to Harding, near Des Moines, for some days; and then it will go to Perry for a season. Bro. W. C. Nirk was reelected district president, and A. McCoy was elected secretary.

Unity and good feeling prevailed, and the saints and ministry separated feeling courageous and hopeful, Bro. J. S. Roth going to Mahaska County, Bro. E. B. Morgan to Clear Creek, Jasper County, Bro. W. H. Kephart and correspondent remain to occupy and then ship the tent. Brn. Cook, Shimel, Morgan, and other laborers are feeling well in the cause and will do what they can in the good work.

Responsibilities here are increasing, and we need the prayers of the saints.

Hopefully,

C. SCOTT.

SINKING SPRINGS, Ohio, June 5.

Editors Herald:—Since early in May I have been quite active. In the early part of the month I labored at Davisville and Westville, and baptized two ladies at the latter place. I also labored a few days at Vales Mills. The branch there is in fair condition. A Religio society organized there by H. E. Moler before he left for conference is doing well.

On the 24th I received a letter from an energetic young West Virginian, requesting me to repair to this place and say the words that would make him and one of Highland's daughters one for life, and on the morning of the 30th Bro. F. J. Ebeling, of Wheeling, West Virginia, and Minnie M. Rhodes were joined in marriage in the presence of the bride's mother and brother, and ever since Bro. F. J. has been wearing a smile which seems to say, "I came, I saw, I conquered!" May peace attend them through life. They left for Wheeling on the morning of June 3,

The Holy Spirit was present to confirm the union. At one time I doubted the propriety of them uniting, but at the time of the union all doubts were removed.

I called Bro. S. J. Jeffers here in order to use him and Bro. Ebeling as an elders' court; some things here had to be adjusted. Bro. Ebeling preached a few times while here, and Bro. Jeffers once, and last night after the preaching service I baptized three, making eleven I have baptized since my March report.

Although we are quite short of laborers in this district, the work is making some progress. I go home to-morrow for a few days. I desire to do all that I can to advance the interests of the cause: for I believe marvelous things will occur in the future, and that we all may have our lamps trimmed and brightly burning, is the desire and prayer of

Your brother and colaborer in the Lord,
JAMES MOLER.

Sunday School Associations.

SOUTHERN MICHIGAN AND NORTHERN INDIANA.

Convened at Coldwater, Michigan, June 3. Sr. J. H. Royce, district superintendent, in the chair, G. F. Weston secretary, Bro. Fay assistant. Sr. Maud Leggett organist. Forenoon session devoted to reports of officers. School reports from Knox, New Troy, Hartford, Galien, Flint, Anderson, Buchanan, Grand Rapids, Alpine, South Scott, Coldwater, and Clear Lake; four of which had not before reported to the district, and two were nearly organized, making a total district membership of 469; gain 89. An improvement in reporting is noticeable, but the delegate system is neglected, and a motion was put into effect to procure printed blanks for credentials. Sr. A. E. Corless, delegate to the General Convention, reported. A chalk design was given by Bro. G. F. Weston. The district treasurer reported $1.13 received. An interesting entertainment was given by the Coldwater saints principally, on Saturday evening, doing much credit to the participants. A model Sunday school was conducted on Saturday afternoon, in charge of Sr. Ella Davis, and a detailed blackboard diagram of the lesson given at its close, by Sr. J. H. Royce; subject, The resurrection. Election of officers: Sr. J. H. Royce district superintendent for one year, Bro. S. W. L. Scott assistant, Bro. G. F. Weston secretary, Bro. John Shook treasurer. A collection of $1.50 was taken to pay secretary's bill and to procure credential blanks. Adjourned to Friday before next district conference.

NORTHEASTERN MISSOURI.

Convention at Higbee, Missouri, June 3. Prayer meeting in charge of J. A. Tanner. M. A. Richards in the chair, M. J. Richards secretary. Sunday schools reporting: Higbee, Bevier, Pollock, Salt River, Huntsville. Superintendent's report read, which was very interesting; assistant superintendent and secretary gave verbal reports. Treasurer's report read: On hand $5.63, receipts $6.48, total $12.11, expenditures $2.27. Balance $9.84. G. Tryon treasurer. In accordance with general by-laws the term of officers was changed from June to February. Election of officers: Louise Palfrey superintendent, W. E. Burch assistant, Allie Thorburn secretary, G. A. Tryon treasurer. A resolution that hereafter nominations for district officers be made at convention prior to convention for election. It was deferred until next convention. In the evening a literary and musical program was rendered. Adjourned to Friday prior to district conference.

GALLAND'S GROVE.

Association convened at Deloit, Iowa, June 3; William McKim superintendent, Fred Shumate secretary. Reports received from the following schools. Galland's Grove, Deloit, Auburn, Harlan, Salem, Pilot Rock, Dow City, Benan, and Defiance; no report from Coalville school. Total enrollment in district 393; amount in district treasury $4.51. An assessment was authorized to the amount of $15 for expense of district. Discussion on the following subjects was held: "How to become a successful Sunday school teacher;" "Home department of the Sabbath school," and "Aim of a Sunday school library." A splendid entertainment of a temperance character was held in the evening. Adjourned to meet at Galland's Grove at 10:30 a. m. day previous to setting of district conference. A peaceful spirit prevailed throughout the entire session.

CONVENTION NOTICES.

WILLIAMS-BAYS DEBATE.—NO. 6.

MAY 14.—ELDER BAYS' FIRST SPEECH.

Now I examine the word "restoration." He gave the definition the first night, and last night he gave another. I will fail if the last definition he gave is right; I shall utterly fail to prove the proposition. He said that to restore, something must be destroyed; that restored means more than to organize or reestablish. Let us see what Webster gives. "To bring back to a former state; to bring back that which was lost." Mark 3: 1-5 gives a history of a withered hand being restored. The hand was not destroyed, but withered. Reestablish does not mean to recreate. If church was lost, could bring it back; but if it was destroyed, you could not. If a watch was utterly destroyed, you could not bring it back; but if it was lost, it could be found. If a child was lost, we would hunt the child till it was found. Church was in the wilderness. If the child was destroyed by wild beasts, then it could not be found.

Williams says that Paul in Hebrews 6: 1, 2 calls these principles the doctrine of Christ. He does not say these six principles are the principles of the doctrine of Christ. These were something they should leave. Look at the meaning of the word "leave." Paul was not talking about the gospel; if he had been, he would not have said what he did. They were not to lay again the foundation of dead works. Instead of adhering, they should repent of something. Webster's definition of repentance, "a turning away." Then repentance is turning away from sin to righteousness. They were to repent of something; of dead works. What are dead works? "Law is not of faith." "That which is not of faith is sin." This was the law of Moses referred to. (Heb. 8: 2.) Law of sin and death. They were to repent of a dead law and all the works of the law. Repent of dead works and turn towards God. "Faith towards God" is a Jewish teaching. Faith towards God is of the law, and they should turn away from it. "Baptisms" (See Heb. 9th and 10th chapters) refers to divers washings under the law, never to the "one baptism." "Laying on of hands" was not a gospel principle, and never will be. (See Ex. 29: 10; Lev. 1: 4; Heb. 6th chapter.) Paul was talking about the Jewish law. I have given the meaning as I believe it means. In leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ and turning to the law, you would be laying again the foundation of dead works, as taught and practiced in the law. This was what Paul wanted to impress. Hebrews 5: 12 refers to propositions which are of the law, and not of the gospel.

What is the gospel? 1. The facts of the death, burial, and resurrection of Jesus Christ. (1 Cor. 15: 1-4.) 2. The commands of Jesus Christ. 3. His promises.

The commandments are: Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. (Mark 16: 15, 16; Acts 16: 31.) Repentance in the broadest sense, not from dead works. (Luke 24: 47; Acts 17: 31.) Baptism. (Acts 10: 48; 2: 38.) Peter commands. The promises are: Forgiveness (Hebrews 8: 4, 6, 12) of pardon. Holy Spirit to all who believe. (Acts 2: 38.) To all who obey. (Acts 5: 32.) All who obey the gospel will receive the Holy Ghost. (Romans 8, 9, 14, 17.) Eternal life. (Romans 2: 7; Mark 16: 16.) Saved means eternal life. Romans 6: 23 says the gift of God is eternal life. The gospel commandments are: faith, in God and Jesus Christ, repentance, and baptism.

Was the Church of Christ wholly destroyed? It was not. The validity of his argument depends upon this point. It existed through the apostasy. I will prove him wrong, and my position correct. Matthew 16: 18 says, "The gates of hell shall not prevail against it." Then it is Jesus the Son of God against Williams.

In Revelation 12: 1 the woman represents the Church of Christ. The moon was the law of Moses. The man child is interpreted as priesthood by Williams. I say it means Christ. The woman fled into the wilderness, where God has a place prepared for her. If the church was so corrupt as Williams tries to make out, would God prepare her a place? She shall live and be fed. The thirteenth verse says the dragon persecuted her. Dragon is pagan Rome. Woman had two ways to escape. She went into the place God had prepared for her, and went from face of serpent. Revelation 17: 3 shows another woman on a scarlet-colored beast. This was Roman power, church and state combined; Mystery Babylon, the Mother of Harlots. This woman was drunken with the blood of the saints. Revelation 18: 1 shows an angel was to come with power to give light—light was to spring up where woman was in the wilderness; then is Babylon fallen, and the cry is made, "Come out of her, my people." God's people yet in existence—saints indeed. From 313 to 607 A. D. there were many differences of opinion, but beginning with Martin Luther a change came, and finally the church was restored. Now she is living.

BRO. WILLIAMS' FIRST SPEECH.

I refer to a statement I made, in which I said he peremptorily declined to put the word "only" in his proposition, and now read from a letter by H. O. Smith, Herald, p. 261, 1898, in which it is shown that H. O. Smith agreed to put the word "only" in our proposition, if he would put it in his, and he declined to do this. I will also call upon Miss Anna Stuart to tell the conversation that occurred at her father's house, between H. O. Smith and Elder Bays.

"Did Bays refuse to put in the word 'only' in his proposition?"

"He did."

"Tell what he said was the reason he assigned for not being willing to do so."

"He said: 'We do not believe we are the only Church of Christ, and they (the Latter Day Saints) do.'"

Now you see how much there was in his saying that my statement that it was he who peremptorily declined to put in the word "only" was false.

Luke 16: 16 says the kingdom of God then existed, and men pressed into it. Luke 17: 21 says the kingdom was then within or among the Jews. Matthew 11: 12 says the kingdom "suffereth violence." This it could not do unless it existed. Matthew 21: 31 says, "The publicans and the harlots go into the kingdom of God before you." Matthew 18: 17 says, "Tell it unto the church." Jesus would not tell men to do the impossible, hence the church must then have existed.

Paul said, "Be ye followers of me." Paul directed and controlled the labors of the lesser officers. It is the privilege of an apostle to regulate and control the church. Peter and John laid hands on people of Samaria as an apostolic example. Peter, James, and John were considered chief apostles, or pillars of the church. In 2 Corinthians 11: 28 Paul says he had "the care of all the churches"; that is, he had general supervision.

Bays says, "Men can be saved in any organization." Alexander Campbell says, in "A Brief Sketch of Alexander Campbell," by Jerome A. Scott, pages 54, 55: "A mind not devoted to the whole will of God, revealed in the New Book, is not regenerate." "Away with your sprinkling, and pouring, and babyism." "Many, we fear, think they are pleasing and serving God, while they are pleasing and serving themselves. They think they are devout, but they are devoted to their own will." Here it is, Alexander Campbell against Bays. Alexander Campbell says they are regenerate who do "the whole will of God;" Bays says they are regenerate whether they do the whole will of God or not, and even further says they may be regenerate and not do God's will—not be members of any church.

Bays refers to Colossians 1: 18, and says "Christ is the head." Yes; but Ephesians 5: 23 tells how he is the head. He is a director and controller, thus holds a close relationship as a husband to a wife. Would a human body without a head be a perfect body? He claims Alexander Campbell restored the church—head and all; then if Christ is the head in the sense Bays argues, he must have restored Christ. Bays will have to find a little more Christ than he has.

He cannot find any evidence that an evangelist is a prophet. He says a preacher is a prophet. Then Bays is a prophet; and if so, according to 1 Corinthians 14: 37, he will have to acknowledge what Paul wrote "are the commandments of the Lord." 1 Corinthians 12: 28 and Ephesians 4: 11 says what officers are in the church; and Hebrews 6: 1, 2 tells what are "the principles of the doctrine of Christ." Will he acknowledge these things are of God? No; he refuses to receive them as the commandments of God. He says, "We have apostles and prophets in our church;" then says, "You cannot find a living apostle;" then he has everybody sent on a mission an apostle, and every preacher a prophet.

Alexander Campbell must restore that which is in heaven and on earth to restore the Church of Christ according to Bays, as he says the head is in heaven. Was there anything lost in heaven?

Garrison says their effort was "the restoration of the gospel in its faith, doctrine, and ordinances; just as it was preached and practiced by the inspired apostles." Where does the New Testament provide for the ordination of a pastor?

In examining the subject of baptism, and their authority to baptize, Barton W. Stone said: "It was finally concluded among us, that if we had authority to preach, we had authority to baptize. The work then commenced. The preachers baptized one another, and crowds came and were baptized."

Alexander Campbell was baptized by Matthias Luce, a Baptist minister previous to this. They then ordained elders. Who did the ordaining?

Ephesians 1: 22, 23 says that God "gave him [Christ] to be the head over all things to the church, which is his body."

Alexander Campbell in Millennial Harbinger, vol. 5, p. 40, says: "As there was immediate divine direction in the building of the second temple—no inspiration or miraculous influence—but the builders had to pattern after the first as well as they could, so we regard the second church. We have to pattern after the first as well as we can. But we can never equal it. With all our efforts the great disparity will ever remain. And could the apostles and primitive Christians be here, they would doubtless weep at beholding it."

He referred to the word "restore," and read the same as I read the first night. To reestablish anything it must first have been established. He referred to the withered hand. It was in a dead condition; Christ put life into it. He argued that the church was lost, and it has been found. If a child went into the wilderness and was lost, the same child must be found. To find any other child would not do. He claims that the woman that was found has no head on earth. That would not be the same woman that went into the wilderness, for she had a head, and twelve stars on her head. Then he said last night that there was not a vestige of the original church left. That proves a complete apostasy.

He said Hebrews 6: 1, 2 did not refer to the principles of the doctrine of Christ. It says so plainly. Hebrews 5: 12 shows they had accepted the first principles of the oracles of God and now invited not to lay again the foundation for such a beginning. To leave all these principles, must forsake the resurrection and eternal judgment. Were resurrection and eternal judgment a part of the Mosaic law? He has assumed his position; has not proven it. He claims faith towards God was a part of the law; but faith in Jesus Christ was a part of the gospel. They had faith in Jesus Christ in the days of Moses, and before. Moses bore the "reproach of Christ" (Heb. 11: 26); and Job knew that his redeemer lived. (Job 19: 25.) Abraham was saved by faith in the gospel of Jesus Christ, for the gospel was preached to Abraham, and his belief was counted to him for righteousness, and righteousness is revealed in the gospel of Jesus Christ. (Rom. 1: 16, 17.)

He claims that the laying on of hands was an ordinance of the law. Peter and John, apostles of Jesus Christ, laid on hands at Samaria; Paul, another apostle of Jesus Christ, laid on hands at Ephesus, and God blessed their acts. Why would God bless that which they should repent of, that which was dead works?

He referred to the death, burial, and resurrection of Christ as the facts of the gospel. They are not the only facts of the gospel. It is a fact that some must preach the gospel, and it is a fact that the Comforter would come, and reveal the things of God, and show you things to come. Right down the ages Christ has revealed himself to his people.

Acts 5: 32 promises the Holy Ghost to all who would obey. When given to-day it will be given as then, by the laying on of hands. On Pentecost it was manifest by speaking in tongues. Peter and John laid on hands and the Holy Ghost came. Paul laid on hands and the Holy Ghost came and manifested itself in tongues and prophecy. Ananias was sent to Saul, that he might be filled with the Holy Ghost. God is an impartial God. We would not know that he was unless he manifested himself thus. Acts 10: 34 says "That God is no respecter of persons." Bays says we do not get the Spirit of God like they did in the past; that we do not enjoy the gifts as they did.

You cannot know Christ by reading a letter from him. Paul knew God; but that is no evidence that you knew him, says Bays. Jesus promised, "If any man will do his [the Father's] will, he shall know of the doctrine." If anyone obeys he can know. I am entitled to the same evidences. God is the father of the race. His intelligence shines unto all his children through the Spirit. I know, because God manifests to me.

Bays said Alexander Campbell did not receive any revelation; then he is out of harmony with the Bible. Amos 3: 7 says that "the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets." Solomon says, "Where there is no vision, the people perish." (Prov. 29:18.) When the church of God is in favor with him it is not destitute of his power.

ELDER BAYS' SECOND SPEECH.

About the word "only." Williams misstated it. He states it right now. He said, "Elder Bays peremptorily declined to have it in his proposition." The sister reports our conversation about it correctly. Williams was misleading you.

I said a man would be saved if he obeyed the gospel, whether he was in any church or not, or in whatever church he might be. Everybody who has obeyed the gospel is a Christian.

Alexander Campbell said those who had not obeyed God's will could not be regenerated. That's what I say.

He talks about Alexander Campbell restoring Jesus Christ. That's too silly too talk about. Its an absurdity, and beneath a man's dignity to talk that way.

He says a patriarch and evangelist is the same thing. Then he admits that a prophet and an evangelist is the same.

I did not say you could not find a living apostle; I said, You could not find a living apostle of Jesus Christ.

There is decay if dead, and there would have to be a recreation. The withered hand was not dead. Do you see the difference? Put that in your pipe and smoke it.

He talks about a woman with no head, in the wilderness. I believed in a live one with a head.

He asks about the resurrection under the law. I will show him about that. In Ezekiel 37: 1-14, I read about resurrection under the law. The resurrection was then in prospect; now it is resurrection in fact. The laying on of hands was under the law, as I showed you.

I now present my summary. I need not refer to the organization of the church. 2 Timothy chapters 2-4, Titus 1: 5-8 I presented as evidence on organization.

Was the church lost? Elder Williams says it was. I have proven that it continued. Matthew 16: 18; Revelation chapters 12, 17, and 18 in evidence. I showed there was brightness to exist, surrounded by darkness. Remnant of woman's seed in the wilderness. These were saints. The beautiful Christian system has been restored.

Luke 16: 16 and Matthew 10: 1-5 was the formative period of the kingdom of God.

None but the apostles were commissioned by Jesus Christ; they ordained others.

Ephesians 4: 11 shows the officials in the church then to be in the church till perfected. Then Paul in 1 Corinthians 4: 16 says, "Be ye followers of me;" and in 1 Corinthians 14: 37 instructs the saints to accept of what he did as the commandments of God. He instructed to ordain elders in every church. Here was power given to be perpetuated in the church to preach the gospel. This power would remain as long as one good man lived who had obeyed the gospel of Jesus Christ.

We have the twelve apostles in the church referred to in Revelation 12: 1. 1 Corinthians 12: 28; apostles are referred to, but they are now represented in the person of evangelists. There are no living apostles of Jesus Christ. The apostles of to-day are apostles of the churches sending them. Acts 13: 1-3 shows that Saul was sent by the church at Antioch. If you please we have apostles, Biblical and legitimate. What have you to say to that?

We teach faith towards God and Jesus Christ, not towards God only; also repentance and baptism, and have the spirit that will save. We teach the promises of forgiveness, and eternal life by obedience to the gospel. Eternal life is the greatest gift to man.

Church government was lost, and Alexander Campbell and coworkers sought to restore that which was lost. In Revelation 18: 4 we are shown that a cry would be made, "Come out of her." God must have a people or church there, or he could not say for them to come out. The call came after it had been over a thousand years in the wilderness. Now the church stands erect, with power to save all who obey the gospel of Jesus Christ. The whole Christian system is again restored, with all its beauty and power.

He argues that the laying on of hands is; first, for the giving of the Holy Ghost. He cannot find a passage showing that Jesus taught and practiced it. Suppose we admit the Holy Ghost is received like it used to be, then we would want to see the same power before we would accept of such a claim. I have had some little experience. I was in one meeting where they spoke in unknown tongues. A person got up and claimed to give the interpretation, and afterwards another got up and said the interpretation was not correct, and gave another interpretation as he claimed. They did not speak in tongues in New Testament times as they do or claim to do now.

The Latter Day Saints said if I would have my arm administered to I would be healed. I said if God would heal me I would preach the gospel all my life. I was administered to and not healed. Again I was administered to and yet my arm was as stiff as a poker. We want to see these things now, if they exist. They do not have this power, that's what's the matter. If they did, why would they take people to the insane asylum, why have an eye put out, and it not healed, why have a surgeon, and a knife applied? When Jesus said to Lazarus, "Come forth," how much faith did Lazarus exercise? And when the girl was raised from the dead, she could exercise no faith. Jesus smote the blind man and he was healed. I will promise any faith healer that if he will make me sound and well I will bow to whatever power he may exercise. I never saw a case of healing. When I was administered to and not healed, I was first led to doubt. Never in any case have they healed anyone. Faith healers have tried to heal a paralyzed limb, but failed. They speak boastfully of doing these things.

ELDER WILLIAMS' SECOND SPEECH.

Matthew 16: 18 has reference to the final triumph of the church with Christ as the builder: that is, the church while remaining under his directing influence and control.

Hell will not prevail over its accomplishing what God purposed. However, Matthew 11: 12 says the "violent take it [the kingdom of heaven] by force." The kingdom as established in that dispensation would be taken into the possession and be controlled by violent men. While the people of God would not exist upon the earth, yet the organic structure of the church would remain as God ordained it should, whenever the church was on the earth. Revelation 12 says the church went into the wilderness, into a disorganized condition. The church was destroyed from the face of the earth.

Elder Bays said that the man child represented in Revelation 12 was Christ, and that the head of this woman was Christ; that would make it appear that a woman brought forth her own head. How ridiculous!

In Revelation 13: 7, 8 it is clearly set forth that there would be a total apostasy, for it says that "all that dwell upon the earth shall worship him"—"the beast"; power was given him (the beast), "over all kindreds, and tongues, and nations." What plainer language than this could be used to show a complete apostasy? Then to apply his own statement when he said, Not a vestige of the church was left.

The passage he used in Revelation 18: 4 is against his position, for a voice was heard from heaven, saying, "Come out of her, O my people." As he said that Alexander Campbell heard no voice from God, received no revelation, he cannot have been the one to restore the church. The passages he uses are the strongest witnesses against his position. He refers to the blood of the saints being drunk, and all become martyrs. Where? On the earth.

Alexander Campbell says that members of other churches are doing their own will, not God's will, and condemns all sects as fleshly.

God's love is boundless; for every man shall receive the fruits of his own labor.

This man represents a wolf in sheep's clothing. He tries to curry favor with all the churches, that they may come and help him kill the Mormons; then he reserves the disposition to turn around and kill you.

We believe that all will be rewarded for the good they do, whether in Methodist Episcopal, Congregational, or Latter Day Saints churches; but there can be only one church right in doctrine and organization.

Who said Alexander Campbell restored Christ? His own proposition, and the position he occupies says this. I was only showing how absurd his position was. Yes; it is too silly a position to take if it cannot be talked about.

He says they have apostles, but they are not apostles of Jesus Christ; for he said that no living apostle of Jesus Christ could be found upon the earth to-day. Then they must have apostles of men or devils.

He referred to the withered hand. If Jesus Christ did not give new life to it, what caused it to become whole? He says that Alexander Campbell claimed that no new spiritual life came to him. We argue that however slightly withered the church is, it can become no better unless Christ gives it new life. I do not smoke such argument as he has made in my pipe. I smoke something better.

He refers to Ezekiel 37, and claims that proves resurrection under the law. He knows better than that. He knows that Ezekiel is speaking by prophecy of the resurrection.

His argument falls in every part, because he cannot sustain it by evidence. He has not shown that they have any authority to ordain.

I introduce a chart that illustrates the arguments made. On this side is the picture of a perfect human body, as drawn from Steele's Physiology, which represents the perfect church as Christ established it; and here is a headless body, representing the claims made by Bays for the church of Christ on earth to-day. Here is represented the doctrine and organization of the perfect church:—

ORGANIZATION.	DOCTRINES.
1. Apostles.	1. Faith.
2. Prophets.	2. Repentance.
3. Seventies.	3. Baptisms.
4. Evangelists.	4. Laying on of hands.
5. Priests.	5. Resurrection.
6. Teachers.	6. Eternal judgment.
7. Deacons.
8. Bishops.
9. Elders.
10. Helps.
11. Governments.

These are not supposed to be in the order of their authority.

CHRIST'S WIFE—CHURCH.
(The drawing forwarded with notes represented a human figure entire.)

ORGANIZATION.
1. Apostles.
2. Prophets.
3. Seventies.
4. Evangelists.
5. Priests.
6. Teachers.
7. Deacons.
8. Bishops.
9. Elders.
10. Helps.
11. Governments.

DOCTRINE.

1. Faith.
2. Repentance.
3. Baptisms.
4. Laying on of hands.
5. Resurrection.
6. Eternal judgment.

On the opposite side of this board we have a representation of Alexander Campbell's Restoration, as represented by himself and this representation of the church it is claimed he restored, especially as represented by Elder Bays.

ALEXANDER CAMPBELL'S RESTORATION.

(Elder Williams here represented divided portions of a human body, but lacking a head. One arm was labeled "Congregationalists," another "Lutherans," the upper trunk "Presbyterians," the waist "Baptists," the limbs "Disciples" and "Methodists" and the feet "Latter Day Saints" and "Seventh-day Adventists.")

IF—Title.

"Could the apostles and Primitive Christians be here they would doubtless weep at beholding it."—Millennial Harbinger, vol. 5, p. 40.

CAMPBELL'S WIFE—CHURCH.

ORGANIZATION.
1. Evangelists.
2. Elders, Bishops, or Pastors.
3. Deacons.

DOCTRINES.

1. Faith.
2. Conversion.
3. Baptism.

He has not even claimed that they believe in the Lord's supper, hence I must erase that. Neither has he claimed that they believe in Resurrection and Judgment; hence I erase those principles.

Do you wonder that Campbell would say that the apostles and primitive Christians would doubtless weep at beholding it? I do not. I would wonder if they could behold it and not weep!

He has not proven that the church he represents is the Church of God in fact, it not being in harmony with the Bible in doctrine or organization; having no spiritual life, having no communication with Jesus Christ, and receiving none of the precious blessings that were enjoyed by the church in the past.

Friends, the system represented by Elder Bays is wrong, and you who have been sincere in believing that way, we invite you now to consider well, and come to the true gospel light, that you may enjoy what God is willing to bestow upon you.

I thank you for the attention you have given me, and I ask you to consider prayerfully the arguments made, and to decide in favor of the truth.

WIGHT-BRADEN DEBATE.—NO. 3.

ELDER WIGHT'S ELEVENTH SPEECH.

Doctrine and Covenants 38:4; 113:4; prophetically presage his death. Zechariah 2:3 shows an angel was to come to a "young man" in a time when it would be necessary to measure Jerusalem. Joseph Smith was a young man, and one of his first declarations was that Jerusalem was to be restored and the people returned. Both pulpit and press were arrayed against him and cried out, "False prophet!" Time with her changes has gone on apace and Smith is now proven a true prophet by a literal and undeniable return of the Jews and the rebuilding of their beloved city. Malachi 3 foreshadows the second coming of Christ, and tells of a messenger to come to prepare the way. Of all the church organizers Mr. Smith was and is the only one ever making the claim that he was especially connected with that restoration by angelic visitation and the authority connected therewith. That Malachi has reference to Christ's coming yet future, is seen in the statement, "Then shall the offering of Judah and Jerusalem be pleasant unto the Lord." When the fullness of the Gentiles comes in, the gospel is to go to the Jews, and they accepting it will offer pleasant offerings—a thing they did not do before, else Jerusalem would not have been wept over, and a prediction that her house was left unto her desolate. Here read statements from Josiah Quincy, Prior, and Smucker, in favor of Mr. Smith. Also from Times and Seasons, vol. 5, p. 754. Inspired Translation to be printed by itself (1866) and in aftertime New Testament portion to be bound with Book of Mormon. Prophecy on Rebellion read and analyzed. No man now can write so complete a history of that war; strong mark of inspiration. He asks for scripture for our church officers after I have previously given it. Finds fault with Doctrine and Covenants for saying that John was ordained while an infant, but he can read in Jeremiah 1:5 Jeremiah was ordained or chosen before he was born, and think nothing of it because it is in the Bible!

As to polygamy the Book of Mormon says:

"There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife: and concubines he shall have none." Am prepared to meet any advance he may make along that line.

Mr. Braden says all the prerequisite to the baptizing of children is eight years, and yet the Doctrine and Covenants here shows (reads) that they are to be taught the principles of the gospel before baptism. Scoffs the idea of baptism for dead, yet Paul says: "Else what shall they do which are baptized for the dead, if the dead rise not?" Asks what of feet washing? We believe it. Says I can't find tithing in New Testament. Let him read Luke 18: 12. He will find about endowment in Luke 24. Not the kind in Utah, but the kind at Pentecost. That kind we believe in, and not the secrets of Utah. Acts 3: There is to be a restitution and when it comes the Holy Spirit will be manifest in enduing power. Says that Peter said they did not know of the gospel prior to Christ. I ask his proof. He wants to know why revelation does not stop trouble in the church. For the same reason, I presume, that it failed to do so in the apostolic church. Paul said that they had that in their midst that the Gentiles would not even name.

ELDER BRADEN'S ELEVENTH SPEECH.

Doctrine and Covenants page 321: Smith to triumph over his enemies, and yet killed in less than two years! Find in Bible about Smith's coming. We are to have Bible proof for these things. Christ's work was prophesied of.

The world spoke of the return of Israel for hundreds of years. Statement of Quincy not scripture. Inspired manuscripts in the hands of Smiths. They could easily fulfill his prophecy. My opponent can't prove that Smith ever gave the war prophecy. Thousands of persons prophesied of the war while the South applied to Great Britain, no nation was engaged in that war but our own, hence prediction a failure. No ordination in case of Jeremiah. Baptized for dead meant the dead Christ, and referred to the resurrection. It was only that old Pharisee that paid tithes before Christ's dispensation. Endowment of Holy Spirit not like that of Mormons. Book of Mormon says a nation lived here from 2200 B. C. to 700 B. C.; the second nation 600 B. C. to 400 A. D. We have an authentic history back to 400 A. D.; tradition still farther back. No Mormon can identify a man, river, mountain, city with such in Mexican or Maya history. Can't find a single Mormon name in ancient American history. Book of Mormon says they offered human sacrifice. Archaeology disputes it. Book of Mormon says they had coins; denied by Bancroft. Book of Mormon says they had domestic animals; American archaeology says they never domesticated them. Indians cannot be traced back to any other nation. Archaeology knows nothing of the Book of Mormon. There have not been such changes in Central America or the United States as the Book of Mormon speaks of. He can't take a mountain, river, or city in Book of Mormon and point out on the map. Popocatepetl has been the name of that mountain from time immemorial. Book of Mormon names are Hebrew names twisted and fixed up till hardly recognizable. Book of Mormon says aborigines were Christian; archaeology says human sacrifice offered from time immemorial. Ancient civilization in Africa, Asia, Ceylon. I can prove that the Nephites were in Ceylon just as much as he can prove they were in America.

ELDER WIGHT'S TWELFTH SPEECH.

Smith's declaration of his death we have never claimed other than a prophetic declaration. He says world was full of the idea that Jews would return. Fact is plenty don't believe it now—but very few in 1830. Says thousands prophesied of the war. Let him name one only and stand by him and make the issue. Bring the prophecy of but one, rather than so much asserting. Still tries to maintain Doctrine and Covenants teaches eight years as the only requisite, (here read fully and showed the falseness of Braden's claims.) Says I found an old Pharisee paying tithes. I thought that in his eagerness to prove his wonderful alibi he would fall over that "old Pharisee." Suppose we turn to Christ's own words (Matt. 23: 23): "These ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone." Here is Christ plainly teaching tithing.

Why doesn't he read from American archaeology where they state such things, and cease so much assertion? But of course the whole thing is a fabrication because Braden says so! Says he's willing to accept my challenge, but must have the Revised Version to compare with the Book of Mormon grammatically. The other night he told us that I had accepted the Inspired Translation for my "ox" and he was willing to take King James' for his. But when you come to sound him on the matter he first has King James', then Alexander Campbell's, then Revised Version. Presume he has this odd number of oxen so that when one is sick he will still have a team to yoke up. He is like a jack in the box on this Bible question; you don't know where to find him! Guess somebody else has another(!) Bible!

Says horse was not domestic. "Dr. Leidy has shown that before the age of man, this was emphatically the country of the horse."—Hayden's Great West, p. 44. Suppose those horses must have had five legs—one running up from the back—so they couldn't domesticate them.

In harmony with previous tactics he ridicules the idea of Zion's removal, when the evident and only construction was that a change of location would not be had. Numerous ones then alive afterward returned and with their children have been and are rebuilding "waste places."

Signs came as a result of belief. If we now believe we should have them.

We are under the Constitution, but still have special legislation. By proving truth in the revelation we prove the revelation true to the extent that truth is in it. Summary: Showed the necessity of revelation, without it we die. Mr. Braden failed to prove the opposite, contenting himself with assertion. In every age, so far as the Bible reveals, God has wrought by revelation. He does nothing without. Prophets have fore-shown the general scattering and return of Israel to and from all parts of the world. Does nothing without revealing to prophets.

Prophet says this general regathering is to be so much more wonderful than the coming out of Egypt that that will be forgotten. Mr. Braden seeks to find fulfillment in return from seventy years' captivity, but we still speak of Israel having come out of Egypt, so here Mr. Braden has utterly failed. While it is true that Luke in Acts 1 shows that they were from every nation, I have shown you that it was not from farther west than Rome, south than Egypt, north and east than Southern Asia; so that Luke's statement is hyperbole rather than literal. As Israel was never, literally, scattered into all the world till after the Roman dispersion, the prophecy must be fulfilled subsequent to that time.

9. Upon this we showed that since 1830 Israel has been going back, and that one of Mr. Smith's first prophetic utterances was concerning their return.

10. Revelation 14; an angel was to bring the gospel. Mr. Smith was the only church organizer who claimed the visitation of an angel, hence his claims harmonized with Bible.

11. Showed by Isaiah 2 and Micah 4 that God was to establish his kingdom in "last days"; and as nations were not to learn war any more, we can be, at best, but in the incipency of that promise; and it was not, as Mr. Braden says, fulfilled in Christ.

12. Then we showed that Smith in his teaching was in harmony with the gospel—strong presumptive proof of his claims—in teaching faith, repentance, baptism, laying on of hands, resurrection, eternal judgment. That he was also right in church organization—apostles, prophets, seventy, evangelists, elders, bishops, priests or pastors, teachers, deacons. That he taught all the gifts and graces with signs following.

13. I then showed the superiority, morally, of the Inspired Translation, and Alexander Campbell's testimony.

14. Showed the Book of Mormon to be in harmony with the Bible in its morals and gospel teaching, and proved that it told of prehistoric America before such fact was known to the English speaking public. In its internal predictions it preceded scientific research.

15. By prophetic statement showed the truth of the revelations in Doctrine and Covenants.

16. Then showed biblically that such an individual—a prophet—was to come.

17. By his prophetic declaration re the war, he proved his prophetic mission. And I showed from Hayden's History of Disciplesism a well-attested miracle. Upon this point he has repeatedly called upon us and when we give him proof he strives to explain it away.

MR. BRADEN'S TWELFTH SPEECH.

Doctrine and Covenants 113; a singular thing; it is not a revelation, and yet they quote from it. Nullification was not settled till January, after the war prediction. Baptism of children; nothing said about teaching till after baptism. Matthew 23: 23 I said he could not find in New Testament Church anything about tithing. He finds the isthmus mentioned in Book of Mormon. My question was to find a name. He ought not to contend for comparing translation three hundred years old with Book of Mormon. He don't know the difference between making laws under a constitution and in making a constitution, or making additions to it.

Summary: Joseph Smith greater than Jesus Christ. He (Wight) didn't give you the strong meat of Mormonism. No saint can say he has the same Bible that other people have. Suppose that Israel did return, how does that prove that Joseph Smith was inspired? He could have copied that from the Bible. Smith prophesies of Christ's second coming; does that prove him to have been inspired? God can give revelation now as in former times. He can create, but he doesn't do it. If the plan of creation is completed, so is revelation. If people need a new revelation to understand the old, where will it all end? Good things in Smith's works; that is not the issue. But did God authorize him to utter them? Confucius, Mahommed, and others said good things, but were not inspired. Smith foretold the preservation of the manuscript. Yes, it was in his family and they could carry it out as they would with a will. Revelation on the war. They won't acknowledge it as a revelation. The truth is if Smith did get it up (the revelation) it was during the nullification of South Carolina; but when Jackson crushed the rebellion, the revelation was laid aside till the Civil War, then brought out. Archæology says that Indians have been dark since the days of Abraham. Bancroft and Short both say that the Book of Mormon is untrue in the statement of a white race.

Elder Wight: "Page please?"

Elder Braden: "Do you challenge the statement?"

Elder Wight: "Yes, sir."

Elder Braden: "Well, I will furnish it. I come headed for these fellows."

Mayas divided their month into three periods instead of four, as Book of Mormon says. I handed him two questions about the church in the Book of Mormon. Why don't he answer them?

Elder Wight: "I handed them to moderators and they have not been returned."

Elder Braden: "Well, I demand that they be passed upon."

Elder Smith: "I handed them to the chairman, and my recollection is that he thought we had about enough on that subject."

Chairman: "My recollection is that they were moved to one side and neglected."

Elder McClure: "They never came before me."

Elder Wight: "When the moderators pass on them and hand them to me I will be ready to answer."

Elder Braden then read a long list of questions and handed to Elder Wight, and the first proposition became a fact of history.

ELDER BRADEN'S FIRST SPEECH; SECOND PROPOSITION.

He spent some time in answering questions asked by Elder Wight. Failed to state the proposition. Not a particle of corroborative testimony for Book of Mormon like there is for the Bible. Bible uttered the language of the writings of three hundred persons. Book of Mormon pet phrases: "Harrow up," "retain," for preserve; "fleeth" for entice; "cast about you" for look; "support" for defend; "it mattereth not;" "dwindle in unbelief;" "own due time of the Lord;" "more part;" "but what;" "I Nephi," etc. "It sufficeth me;" "hide up;" "it is wisdom in me;" "in fine;" "of which hath been spoken;" "had ought;" "nations, kindreds, tongues, and people." The fact is, one man has put his mistakes, errors, blunders, all through the book. "Chains of hell;" "probation;" "bar and tribunal;" "judgment seat," and "judgment day."

The following not to be found in Old Testament: "Bonds of iniquity;" "holy order of God;" "points of doctrine"—camp meeting expression. What is the meaning of "I will liken," "requisite," etc.? Blunders corrected but left in. What sense! "Whiteness of driven snow." Old Nephi talking of snowdrifts in Central America. "Hope of glory;" "beyond the mark;" "became for themselves;" "hindermost;" "bearing down against church;" "popular." "Priestcraft"—not in Bible; on "morrow month"—awkward. "Course" for direction. Compass not then known. Quotation from Watts. Blood from every pore. Indians had synagogues. Christos (Greek); not then known. Fiery flying serpents.

ELDER WIGHT'S FIRST SPEECH.

Does Mr. Braden wish us to understand that modern translators would insert ancient expressions? No, they would be true to existing conditions, hence his argument falls flat. Analyzed the proposition and answered questions handed in by Elder Braden. (These with their answers will be submitted later.)

ELDER BRADEN'S SECOND SPEECH.

And their "innocent blood" a seal to Mormonism. That's why I use the term. Don't accuse me of calling you Mormons when it's in your own books. How did old Nephi quote from Shakespeare? Ignorant uses of words running from beginning to end. Where did Smith get his interpolations? He hasn't shown where a church ever changed any manuscripts. He has never answered what church is meant in Book of Mormon. Smith retained errors in original manuscripts. He says they might be in the original. Let him prove it. Wight says gospel doesn't include all of Christ's teachings. Compass back there. What did Nephites know of Christ and anti-Christ? Book of Lamb of God. His name is Christ; Jesus Christ. Name not in the New Testament. Had gospel of Christ—atonement of Christ. Nephi preached almost everything preached in New Testament. False Christ; Jesus' mother—Mary; salvation through blood of Christ; called by name of Christ. Testimony of Jesus Christ. If all these things were revealed before Christ what was left for him to reveal? Observed Lord's day—first day of week. Persecutions of those who belonged to church of God. A band of Christians. Took on them the name of Christians. Bible says followers of Christ were first called Christians at Antioch. Book of Mormon says they were called that hundreds of years before.

Where will he find one idea of these things in Old Testament? Nephites had all the apertenances of the gospel before Christ? Why Christ so much better to the Nephites than to the Israelites? Why did he want to visit the people here when they already had all these things? When Jesus ascended he said he would not come again, Book of Mormon against Christ.

ELDER WIGHT'S SECOND SPEECH.

I gave Webster's definition of the gospel. He talks of the definition being as wide as Enoch's heart. Pits himself against Webster. Which will you take? Read from Eusebius to show that Christ and the gospel were known on the eastern continent before Christ, and from Short's American Antiquities to prove that they were known on this continent. He has handed in this long list of questions with the object to defeat me. Denies coins having been had in America. "Copper coins are very abundant in the ruins of Central America."—Atlantis, p. 245. Smith triumphed over his enemies as did Christ. (Col. 2: 15.) Inspired Translation manuscript in Smith's family, but how did he know they would not be lost, burned, or stolen, or but his own people might turn from the faith? Might we not say that when Agabus prophesied of Paul being bound that his friends worked out the fulfillment? Prophecy of Rebellion was not laid aside and brought out after the war, but was published in 1851. Where does American archæology say there were dark Indians since Abraham? Short, pp. 186-7 says they had white people here in prehistoric times. Braden says all but Mormons are to be damned. Doctrine and Covenants 76: 4 says that all the works of his hands are to be saved except the sons of perdition. In fact, we are broader than any but Universalists. There is a glory of the sun, one of the moon, and one of the stars. "In my Father's house are many mansions," says Jesus. My friends, he says such things to prejudice your minds. 2 Corinthians 5: 15; we are to be saved according to our works. I can't conceive why he stands here night after night and tells you differently. The only dispersion of Jews into all the world was under Rome. From that God is now gathering them. He says the only point I made on my affirmative was that our church was like the apostolic. Thank you, Mr. Braden! Strong presumptive proof of Mr. Smith's claim. Let him prove there was no written literature before the flood, and he may have some reason for his otherwise unfounded assertion. Took up and answered more questions.

ELDER BRADEN'S THIRD SPEECH.

He called attention to my peculiarities. They are very marked. Some peculiarities run all through the Book of Mormon; showing it the work of one mind. It quotes four hundred times from New Testament also quotations from modern authors. Had all peculiarities of Christian church hundreds of years before Christ. "The Lord redeemed my soul from hell;" "remission of sins;" "immortality;" "atonement;" all before Christ. "Poured out soul;" "encircled with chains of hell;" "harrowed up"—lay as if dead two days—falling down power. Ammon's joy—a regular campmeeting, hallelujah time. Where do you read such talk as this in Old Testament? Not a hint in Old Testament about baptism. Israelites all baptized in Jordan. Matthew 3: 15; Acts 2: 38, quoted in Book of Mormon. If you are idiotic enough to swallow such stuff you are just right to become a Mormon. If Book of Mormon is true, the Bible tells a lie in saying that John was the first to baptize. The Book of Mormon is thrice blasphemous; it strips the Son of God of all honor of coming here to save men. Christ was a farce and played second fiddle to Nephites. Not Christ, but Joe Smith, fulfilled the prophecies. This is what Mormonism teaches. Why did God not give Smith quotations from Inspired Translation instead of from the Authorized Version? Didn't God know as much in 1828 as in 1832? God took from the King James' and put in the Book of Mormon, afterward took from Book of Mormon and put in Inspired Translation, so we have an agreement. Book of Mormon has all the popular ideas of 1830.

ELDER WIGHT'S THIRD SPEECH.

His entire effort reminds me of the darky preacher who said: "The Apostle Paul preached till midnight and lo, and behold! a man fell out de window and killed hisself and lo, and behold! dey pickt up twe've baskets full o' de fragments!" Or, of the one who said, "Judas went and hanged himself; go dou and do likewise!" The fact is that Mr. Braden by a grouping of phrases scattered throughout the Book of Mormon and by consecutive reading has made it to appear that there is a continuity of this kind of jargon in the book. The fact is, ladies and gentlemen, Mr. Braden has read into the book——"

Braden: "Mr. Chairman, I call him to order. When he says that I have read into the book he is an infamous, lying scoundrel; and I will not stand it any longer!"

The Chairman: "I presume that Mr. Wight will not make assertions of that kind unless he expects to prove them."

Wight: "I expect to prove my statements, Mr. Chairman."

The Chairman (standing): "These are places peculiar to occupy. It would seem that points of order might be raised without resorting to such language. Mr. Wight may proceed."

Elder Wight: "I have no desire to cast reflections but expect to prove to you all that I have said." (Here Braden proposed to submit the manuscript to a chosen committee which was agreed to; but when Elders Wight, Smith, and Kemp went to see him next morning he said that if Mr. Wight had used the word "consecutively" there was no issue.)

Elder Wight now took up and answered a long list of questions.

ELDER BRADEN'S FOURTH SPEECH.

"Behold" is used 1,512 times in the Book of Mormon. No wonder Wight got it off in his darky story. I never said, No white people in prehistoric times. Said that archaeologists said dark skinned Indians were in Peru since Abraham's time. He found where twelve apostles were chosen, but he failed to find successors, or successors to seventy. The Book of Mormon says John not to die; the Bible; "If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee?" A flat contradiction.

Phillips' decision teaches Adam-God theory.

Cowdery to go to Lamanites. He never preached a sermon. Give him "power to build up my church." He didn't do it. Matthew 24: 34, I believe was fulfilled in that generation. The Book of Mormon writer represents writer as using first person. His abridgement don't help him. He throws infidel epithets at the Bible. If he can't raise the Book of Mormon to the Bible he seeks to drag the Bible down to the level of the Book of Mormon. I defy him to take out the word "liken" in the Bible, and insert another word in its place. Spalding was a bitter anti-Masonic man and had access to Morgan's book. There are thirty-six attacks in Book of Mormon on secret societies. Josephites, Manassehites, Judahites, but no Ephraimites. If no Ephraimite came, away goes the stick of Ephraim.

It would not do to say the characters on the plates were Hebrew. Egyptian had been changed. Let him show how Nephites leaving Jerusalem with some twenty persons could build a temple, have a foundry, build cities, have an army, in thirty years.

The Book of Mormon full of pet phrases. Modern ideas, quotations from New Testament hundreds of years before Christ. Quotations are from King James. It blunders in language.

ELDER WIGHT'S FOURTH SPEECH.

It is my opponent who makes infidel thrusts. If he finds in the Book of Mormon certain things he makes a thrust at them. When I find the same "pet expression" in the Bible I'd like to know if it is not also thrusting at its validity as well? Or does it make the expressions worse to be in the Book of Mormon than if found in the Bible? I challenge him to show that Book of Mormon quotes Shakespeare. Suppose I turn to Numbers 26: 54 and read "more inheritance," or Acts 27: 12 and read "more part," does that invalidate the Bible? No; no more than it does the Book of Mormon. Yes, sir; Mr. Smith was tried before our courts and as many times acquitted because of lack of evidence. "To what shall I liken thee?" says Jeremiah. Said Nephi talked of snowdrifts in Central America, when the real fact is, Nephi said nothing about drifts and mentioned snow before they left Asia. Laughs about the compass, yet Encyclopedia Britannica says it was known in China 2,634 B. C.! Had he turned to section 110 he would have found the name of the church three times; but he goes to the statement of a writer who evidently used the name because it was so common in the world, and nightly applied that name here. Says Book of Mormon is wrong about Christ coming to Nephites, for he won't come till his second coming. How did it happen that he appear to Paul who fell to the earth? Was this the "fall-down power" of which he prates so much? Let him turn to Isaiah 53: 12 and he will find the silver tongued prophet talking about "pouring out" the soul. And the wise man—Proverbs 6: 13—uses "speaketh with his feet." Were I to descend to the depths of ridicule I could talk about feet having a mouth!

He needs only to turn to Jude and to Second Peter and he will find expressions equal to "chains of hell." "Judgment seat," in Romans 14: 10; "bonds of iniquity," Acts 8: 23. He needs but to look at Acts 22: 14 to find "see that Just One and shouldst hear the voice of his mouth;" or to I Corinthians 9: 1, "Have I not seen Jesus Christ our Lord?" And what becomes of his allegation that the Book of Mormon told a falsehood about Christ's coming? He need only turn to Daniel 3: 25 to find that the Son of God was known. In the proper time I will show him the word "Messiah" in the Old Testament.

Braden: "Where is it?"

Wight: "I will show it to you in the proper place."

Abraham knew the Lord (Gen. 18), while he dwelt in Mamre. Job (chap. 19) knew his Redeemer was alive! Paul writing to the Hebrews (11: 26) says Moses esteemed "the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures in Egypt." But Mr. Braden will likely go right on and assert that they knew nothing of him. He says the Doctrine and Covenants teaches stealing. Do you people have to lock up your houses to keep our people from stealing from you? Read Doctrine and Covenants 64: 6 and you will find there is no stealing taught. In 42: 7, 23, "Thou shalt not steal." Why, then, get up here and deliberately assert that which is so contrary to the real teaching?

DECATUR DISTRICT.

At the last sitting of the Decatur district conference, held at Hiteman, Iowa, Bro. R. M. Elvin resigned his position as president of the district, and it was accepted by the conference. Without either desire for the position, or effort to secure it, on my part, the care of the district was left with the missionary in charge till the time for the election of officers, which will not occur till February, 1899.

Bro. Heman C. Smith is my associate in this mission, and upon his return from England he will, with his consent, assume his share of the duties belonging to the care of the district; indeed it is possible that we may so divide our work as to leave the chief responsibility of this added burden upon him.

I am aware that the district needs a great deal more attention and work than we will be able to give it; but we will try to do all we can consistent with other demands, and earnestly ask the cooperation of all the saints and local ministers of the district. All elders and priests who are not engaged as branch officers, should, if at all practicable, fill regular appointments as often as their circumstances will permit. Do not wait for places to be hunted up for you. If you labor carefully, and build safely, (that is according to the pattern,) your work will not only be tolerated, but encouraged.

We will help you what we can in the branches when necessary; but it is important and necessary that the branches should learn to do their own work, and do it well. Observation teaches me that there should be the utmost freedom between the president of the branch and the subordinate officers, and this can hardly be unless they meet together once a month, or as often as occasion requires, for the purposes of adopting such measures as may be found expedient and necessary, and a free interchange of thought.

Let us be fully occupied with the Master's business, so that we will have neither time nor inclination to indulge in that which is unlawful and unprofitable.

Your coworker and brother in Christ,

J. R. LAMBERT,

Missionary in Charge.

LAMONI, Iowa, June 17.

PASTORAL.

To the Saints in Southeastern Nebraska Mission; Greeting:—It is five years past since I came to labor among you, and I feel thankful for the kind treatment and generous assistance which I have received during that time. While there has been trials to meet and difficulties to contend with, by your hearty coöperation these have largely been overcome, and the work kept in a prosperous condition. There are no difficulties in the mission of such a character as to retard the onward march of truth during the coming year, and I hope none will arise; but may every saint feel a special desire to do something for the advancement of the church in his locality, and thus make a united effort. When we all work together, success is sure to crown our efforts.

I feel to commend you for the sacrifices you have made by paying your tithes, and hope you will sustain your former record—if not surpass it—during the coming year. Bro. J. W. Waldsmith, Nebraska City, Nebraska, is still our Bishop's agent, and will gladly receipt all tithings sent to him. It seems to me that every saint should make an effort to have his name on the tithing record. It need not be a large amount, if unable to so do; but something should be done by every one in sustaining this part of the great work which we love so much.

Bro. James Caffall has seen fit to reappoint me as missionary in charge of this mission, and I hope the saints in the different parts of the field will keep me posted as to the prospects and needs of the work in their several localities.

Bro. C. H. Porter will labor in the Southeastern part of the State. Bro. M. H. Forscutt, Nebraska City and vicinity. Bro. T. J. Sheldon in the Northwestern part of the district. These brethren will labor in the localities named for the present, and I hope the saints will render them such assistance as lies in their power, for the triumph of Zion's cause.

Yours in Christ,

W. E. PEAK.

NETAWAKA, Kansas.

To the Saints and Friends of the Restored Gospel in the Northeast Missouri district, composed of the following counties: Adair, Audrain, Boone, Calloway, Carroll, Chariton, Howard, Knox, Lewis, Linn, Macon, Marion, Monroe, Pike, Putnam, Ralls, Randolph, Shelby, and Sullivan; Greeting:—Missionary in charge, I. N. White, having designated the undersigned to the oversight of missionary work in the above district, I respectfully ask for the coöperation of W. E. Summerfield, General Conference appointee, and Jacob Waltenbaugh, appointed by Bro. I. N. White, and all local laborers to push the cause of truth, and I request scattered saints residing in any of the above counties to furnish me information as to opportunities and demand for preaching in their neighborhoods. Will all the ministry of the district kindly report to me the first of July, October, January, and March, giving such information as will be of value to the missionary in charge.

All letters addressed to me: Box 224, Lamoni, Iowa, will receive as prompt attention as circumstances will permit.

Your servant,

ROBT. M. ELVIN.

LAMONI, Iowa, June 18.

NOTICES.

To all Lovers of Music:—The committee on Sabbath school song book respectfully request an immediate contribution of suitable music, or words and music, as we desire to push this work to an early completion. You are earnestly urged to give us your aid at once. Send to John L. Morgan, Keb, Iowa.

W. J. RICHARDS.

HIGBEE, Mo., June 4.

To Whom it May Concern:—Sufficient is received to purchase the Idaho tent, which is now ordered and will reach Pocatello about the middle of July. Brn. Anthony and Condit will be expected to be there to start it, and as soon as we can so arrange we expect Bro. E. A. Davis to assist one of the above brethren. Individually and in behalf of the people of Idaho, all contributing are thanked. So soon as I can after getting home I will publish the amount you have contributed.

J. W. WIGHT.

To the Several Branches in Nauvoo District; Greeting:—I take this opportunity to call your attention to a resolution passed at your district conference some two years ago: "Resolved that once a month, or upon sacrament Sunday of each month, a special collection be taken up, and (50 per cent) one half of the amount be turned over to the district treasurer, for the purpose of bearing the traveling and sundry expenses of the district officers and missionaries." The branches are getting very careless in this matter which should not be, as it is very important. Owing to the hard times already the missionary force has been unable to answer outside calls for preaching for want of means. Hereafter I hope and pray each branch president will be very careful to see this collection is taken, and the amount due the district properly forwarded to me. Don't hesitate because the amount is small, everything helps; just do all you can, and the Lord will bless the effort.

Brethren and sisters, can't we arise from our present careless condition and do more for the advancement of the work in this district the coming year? Ever praying for the advancement of the work, and that God will bless his people, I remain as ever, your brother,

In bonds,

JAMES L. WRIGHT, Treas.

No. 1001 South Tenth Street, BURLINGTON, Iowa.

I hope for the success of the cause the above notice will be carefully heeded. Many places we go it is impossible for the people to help us with one cent; they often need help themselves. And if this fund is properly sustained, we will be able to meet with and encourage this class. Yours for the truth,

F. M. WELD, Pres.

REUNION NOTICES.

Annual reunion of Northwest Kansas district and joint reunion with Northeast Kansas district will assemble at Blue Rapids, Marshall County, Kansas, August 19 to 28. Small tents can be rented for entire reunion (ten days) as follows: 10x12 feet $1.75, 12x14 feet $2. Parties desiring to rent should order early, as the tent firm wishes thirty days' notice in order to furnish number and size desired. Please send cash with order for tents. The camp ground is beautifully located near the Big Blue River, and convenient to hotels and stores. Hacks meet all trains. We hope that both districts will be well represented; and all others that can come and meet with us we will gladly welcome. That the Spirit of God may meet and abide with us, and that this effort may be crowned with success is our prayer.

By order of committee: William Landers, Lenora; A. Z. Smith, Idylwild; B. F. Lee, Minneapolis; W. S. Pender, Northeast district, Fanning, Kansas.

CONFERENCE NOTICES.

Conference of West Virginia will convene with the Centerville branch in Wayne County, Saturday, August 6, at ten o'clock. Local brethren, and as many of the laity as can come are cordially invited to attend. Those expecting to attend will write to Bro. W. R. Odell, who will give all necessary instructions as to teams meeting them at Kenova, the station to get off at.

G. H. GODBEY, Pres.

DIED.

WISCHMEYER.—At Nebraska City, Nebraska, June 13, 1898, Sr. Mary L., beloved wife of Henry Wischmeyer, aged 51 years, 11 months, and 26 days. Was married to Bro. Henry Wischmeyer, June 18, 1864, in St. Louis, Missouri. Both joined this branch soon after it was organized in 1866. Husband, eight children, and grandchildren, with other relatives, mourn.

HISTORY OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS. (Volumes 1 and 2 now ready.) Provided for by action of General Conference of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Written and compiled by President Joseph Smith and Apostle Heman C. Smith. Invaluable as a correct historical narrative, as a means of conversion to truth, and as a defensive weapon in meeting old and new objections urged against the latter-day work. It contains important documents connected with the establishment, growth, and internal and external affairs and progress of the church. The revelations given in this dispensation are inserted, in connection with accounts of the circumstances under which they were given. Biographical sketches, illustrations, complete indexes, sidenotes for ready reference, etc., are some of the features of the work. Volume 1 begins with the birth of Joseph Smith, the Prophet and Seer, in 1805, and narrates the circumstances of his calling and ministry, the rise of the church in 1830, and until the close of the year 1835. Volume 2 continues the history up to June 27, 1844, —to the assassination of Joseph and Hyrum Smith.

THE KEOKUK ROUTE.

K. & W. and D. M. & K. C. Railways.

The D. M. & K. C. Ry from Des Moines to Cainsville has been rebuilt and that portion south of Van Wert will be standard gauge on or before November 1, 1897.

There is no road in Southern Iowa or Northern Missouri which has more good locations for business men than on the line of the Keokuk Route. More stock of all kinds has been shipped over this line than any road of equal mileage in Iowa or Missouri. (See Missouri Surplus Map at our stations.) The freight and passenger service is not equalled by any road in the state, except the Missouri River trunk lines, with each of which we have union stations and direct connections.

Persons seeking farms can find property at tempting prices; men seeking business locations can find towns with ample territory and settlers to warrant good business. Additional passenger service will soon be given which will add to the growth of the towns.

The towns between Des Moines and Cainsville are particularly well located for business. Look them up. Write to the undersigned for additional information. See folder for map and lands.

DRINK STATISTICS IN THREE GREAT CITIES.

DRUNKENNESS and the disorderly acts consequent upon it are decreasing in the enlarged New York. In Paris the police figures show that they are increasing, and in London, where systematic temperance agitation is kept up, the arrests for drunkenness and offenses caused by it keep pace with the expansion of the population.

In New York there are now approximately 12,000 liquor saloons, hotels, restaurants, taverns, and road-houses, the present population being about 3,300,000. Three years ago the number was greater by nearly 3,000. The annual consumption of intoxicating beverages includes 7,000,000 barrels, or about 200,000,000 gallons, of beer and ale, and about one-fifth as much whisky and other ardent spirits, though this portion of New York's liquor bill can be less accurately computed. Relatively little wine is drank even among the foreign-born inhabitants from wine-drinking countries, Italy and Hungary notably. About 500,000 barrels annually may be estimated as the quantity, bringing up the city's entire consumption of beer, ale, wine, and whisky to 8,800,000 barrels a year.

A recent official report gives the number of drinking places in London as 14,000. The daily consumption of wine is 5,500 gallons, besides 16,000 gallons of spirits, and the quantity of ale, beer, and porter drank yearly may be estimated fairly at 200,000,000 gallons, or about 550,000 gallons daily.

The population of Paris returned by census of 1896 is 2,600,000. The consumption of beer is much greater than formerly, but is yet much less than in either London or New York, amounting to no more than 10,000,000 gallons annually. Paris, however, exceeds all other cities in its consumption of wine, taking 125,000,000 gallons yearly.

Of the three cities London consumes in a year the most beer and ale, and Paris the most wine. New York is second to London in its consumption of ale and beer, and is ahead of Paris in its consumption of spirits.—New York Sun.

SALT IS HIS TOPIC.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass, June 19.—The Rev. Henry Van Dyke, of New York, delivered the baccalaureate sermon before the senior class of Harvard University this afternoon in Appleton Chapel. Four seniors capped and gowned, met in front of Holworthy Hall and in line marched to the chapel to hear the parting words of religious advice from this famous divine.

The subject of the sermon was "Salt," and it was taken from the text in Matthew 5:13: "Ye are the salt of the earth." Mr. Van Dyke's delivery was peculiarly forcible and the rousing effect that it had upon the students was noticeable. He said in part:—

"One of the books which used to be considered indispensable to the library of a well-furnished clergyman in the last century was called: 'The Complete Duty of Man.' It is an excellent, large volume of many pages, but the divine Master has put the essence of it in the one word 'salt.'

"The figure of speech is plain and pungent. Salt is savory, purifying, preventive. From the beginning of human history men have set a high value upon it and sought for it in caves and by the seashore. The nation that had a good supply of it was counted rich. A bag of salt was worth more than a man. The Jews prized it especially, because they lived in a warm climate where food was difficult to keep and because their religion laid particular emphasis on cleanliness and salt was largely used in their sacrifices. Christ chose an image which was familiar when he said to his disciples: 'Ye are the salt of the earth.' There is no use in saving salt for heaven; it will not be needed there.

"The historian Livy could find no better phrases for the people of ancient Greece than 'salt gentium' and 'the salt of the nations.' But it was not from this point of view that Christ was speaking. He was not paying compliments. He was giving a clear and powerful call to duty. His thought was not that his disciples should congratulate themselves on being better than other men. He wished them to ask themselves whether they actually had in them the purpose and power to make them better men. Did they intend to exercise a purifying, seasoning, saving influence on the world?

"Men of privilege without power are waste material. Men of intellectual, and moral, and religious culture who are not active forces for good in society are not worth what it costs to produce them. They are meant to be the salt of the earth, and their first duty is to be salty. This is the subject of which I want to speak to you to-day.

"This fact brings you face to face with a question: 'Are you going to be worth your salt?' You have had mental training and plenty of instruction in various branches of learning. Harvard offers her students more and better religious privileges than any other college in the country. Be the salt of the earth. Think first of the influence which men of intelligence may exercise in the world if they will only put their culture to the right use.

"Half the trouble of mankind comes from ignorance—ignorance which is systematically organized, with societies for their support and newspapers for its dissemination; ignorance which consists less in not knowing things than in willfully ignoring the things that are already known. What I plead for to-day is the wider, nobler influence which an educated man renders to society simply by being thoughtful and helping other men to think.

"It is one of the burning questions to-day whether university life and training really fit men for taking their share in this supreme conflict. Therein lies your responsibility, gentlemen. It lies with you to illustrate the meanness of an education which produces learned shirks and refined skulkers, or to illuminate this culture with light of devotion to humanity."

TO CONVERT ENGLAND TO ROME, THIS COUNTRY, FRANCE, AUSTRALIA, AND CANADA ASKED TO JOIN.

THERE has been laid before the Roman Catholic Archbishops and Bishops of the United States and Canada a request to consider the formation of affiliated fraternities of the Archconfraternity of Our Lady of Compassion, which has its headquarters in the Church of St. Sulpice, Paris, and for its object the conversion of England to the Roman Catholic faith. This movement originated with Cardinal Vaughan, Archbishop of Westminster, who laid the matter before Pope Leo XIII. about a year ago. After careful deliberation, and after calling into consultation the Archbishops of Paris and of Autun, the Pope gave his approval and his formal sanction of special services to be held in St. Sulpice, Paris, to formally inaugurate the organization of the original archconfraternity. These services have already been held, Cardinal Vaughan being the principal figure in them, and reading at them the formal sanction and blessing bestowed upon the movement by the Pope.

While France has been chosen, from historic reasons, to be the seat of this movement, the chief centers of activity are intended to be congregations speaking the English language. Hence the appeal to the archbishops and bishops in the United States and Canada. The same appeal has also gone to Australia, to New Zealand, and to every country where the English tongue is spoken. It is an appeal and not a command, because, owing to the peculiar character of the movement, the Pope has expressed a wish that confraternities come into existence voluntarily if at all.

Cardinal Vaughan has just issued a pastoral letter, which was read in all Roman Catholic churches in England last Sunday, in which he describes the inauguration of the archconfraternity, and points out that already the Cardinals of Paris, Lyons, Autun, Rheims, of Malines in Belgium, the Archbishops of Rouen, Aix, and Aries, the Bishops of Montpellier, Nimes, Marseilles, Orleans, Arras, and other dioceses have taken steps to further the interests of the confraternity of prayer. He says that the Cardinals of Paris, Lyons, and Autun have issued pastoral letters devoted entirely to the subject of prayer for the return of England to the Roman Catholic faith, and he closes by telling English Catholics that English-speaking people in the United States, in Australia, and everywhere will join in this movement.

The movement is to be made to take the form of an organized society in different churches, the members pledging themselves to prayer, to hear masses at stated intervals, and through their proper ecclesiastical head to make regular reports to the headquarters of the movement in the Church of St. Sulpice, Paris. Cardinal Vaughan, in his pastoral just issued, urges the faithful not to hate those who are in error, but to hate only the error itself, and says that England will never be won to the Roman Catholic faith by controversy, but by calm expositions that satisfy the reason, and by the prayers of righteous men "which availeth much."

It is said that it is doubtful if any American archbishops or bishops issue pastorals on the subject, as the French and English prelates have done, but that permission will be given to form confraternities in such churches in this country as may desire to do so.—New York Sun.

QUEEN DOESN'T KNOW "EXPEDIENCY."

So scrupulous was the Queen in taking care to fully understand every document placed in her hands that Lord Melbourne was reported to have occasionally declared that he would rather have to deal with ten kings than one queen. Having submitted some act of government for the royal approval he was proceeding to urge the expediency of the measure when the Queen stopped him, observing: "I have been taught to judge between what is right and what is wrong, but 'expediency' is a word I neither wish to hear nor to understand."

The funeral of a workingman in Japan costs eighty-three cents, unless the family wishes to have it especially fine, when it will cost as much as $1.25. The price of a coffin is twenty cents, and the rate for cremation is from forty to seventy-five cents. Refreshments figure up from eleven to twenty-five cents.

LAMONI, IOWA, JULY 6, 1898.

COLLEGE COMMENCEMENT AT LAMONI.

THE week ending Wednesday, June 15, was a marked one in the history of Lamoni. The end of the school term for Graceland College for the year '97-'98 had been reached; and professors and students were strenuously busy in being ready for the first commencement and graduating exercises, and the granting of its first diploma. The class was not large, but all parties connected with Graceland, Boards of Directors and Trustees, the faculty and auxiliary teachers, the students, and all classes of citizens were just as interested and anxious for success and the smooth carrying out of the arranged program as if the class had numbered dozens.

The commencement exercises began on the evening of Friday, June 10, when a house packed to the doors greeted the Athenian Literary Society at its closing program for the College year. The College graduate was also to graduate from the society, and the program of the evening was full of good things for all, and was propitious in promise of what the whole course would be.

Fred M. Smith received his degrees and diploma, closing his connection with this social organization in the esteem of all.

The exercises on the evening of Saturday the 11th, consisted of a recital given by the pupils of the elocutionary class of Mrs. Ruth Lyman Smith, Bachelor of Elocution and Oratory. The program was a specially good one showing rare good taste and judgment in the selections.

The class showed the result of the drill and training in which they had been engaged, and testified to the skill and efficiency of their teacher.

Sr. Ruth Lyman Smith is well qualified to fill the position she has occupied in the list of Graceland teachers. The exercises were held in the church, the college chapel being quite too small to accommodate the crowd of citizens.

On Sunday morning the church was again crowded, and Pres. Joseph Smith delivered the baccalaureate sermon; and when it is considered that it was his first effort in that direction, in an entirely new role, and the graduating student being his oldest son, if he did well it is traceable to the spirit of the occasion, and the kindly appreciative sympathy of a more than usually interested audience, largely composed of those identified in the success of the college, both in and out of the church.

Elder R. S. Salyards had charge of the services, whose earnest invocation was itself a tribute to the supremacy of God the Father of all.

Monday evening, Prof. Arthur H. Mills, who is teacher in instrumental music in Graceland, gave a class recital by his pupils. The audience was appreciative and the program good. And so far as we could learn Bro. Mills' reputation as a musical instructor was assured to the citizens and patrons of the college. He had worked incessantly to justify the action of the Board of Directors in choosing him to occupy as the music teacher and was very successful.

There was an oratorical contest on Tuesday evening, for a prize of fifteen dollars, offered by Mr. William Pence, the father of J. T. Pence, Professor of Latin and Greek, in which Harry Nicholson, Nellie Anderson, and Wilber B. Gillen, son of Bro. J. W. Gillen, of the Twelve, were contestants. The judges were Professors Darrah and Carter, principals of leading schools in Decatur County. The award was given to young Gillen, and was indorsed by the audience. The orations were all good, and showed good mental training and much native ability. The young woman did well, but was contending against too great odds in her brother contestants. Young Nicholson, son of the banker, gained some points which were strongly commendatory of his effort. Professor Pence presided with dignity and prudence.

Wednesday morning at 10:30 of the clock, the people gathered again in the auditorium of the church for the closing exercises.

After the invocation, and a duet by Professor Mills and one of his pupils, Professor Pence, who had been Acting President of Graceland for the school year, introduced the graduate, Frederick M. Smith, son of President Joseph Smith, who had chosen as a theme, "The Mission of Graceland College." He sketched rapidly the events leading up to the locating and building the College at Lamoni, recapitulated the labors of the Trustees, stated the resolution of conference authorizing the work, and gave a graphic and glowing account of its school work, the principles in which it was founded, and depicted its mission.

Graduate Smith was followed by Mrs. M. F. L. Fitzpatrick, Professor of French and German, in an excellent paper upon the benefits of education and methods and results. It was well delivered and well received by the audience.

The address of Professor Pence was an opportune effort, and bristled with good thoughts. He augured a pleasant future for Graceland from the results so far obtained.

The diploma which gave the emancipated student the right to sign himself Bachelor of Science, was delivered in words of cheer and encouragement and healthy advice by Bishop E. L. Kelley on behalf of the Board of Directors, and the exercises of the first commencement for Graceland were over; five busy scenes of patrons, faculty, and students enjoying them to great satisfaction.

There were on the platform, of the Board of Directors and Trustees, President J. Smith, E. L. Kelley, J.

H. Hansen, R. S. Salyards, Frank Criley, William Anderson; of the Faculty, Professors J. T. Pence, T. J. Fitzpatrick, Mrs. M. F. L. Fitzpatrick, and the graduate.

We take the occasion to remind the readers of the HERALD that Graceland College is the creation of the church through its authorized delegates in council assembled; and the church, both as an associated body and as individuals, is under moral and honorable obligations to put forth every possible effort to sustain and perpetuate the school. It is not justifiable to say, "Well I am not in favor of educating our young men and women beyond the limits of the common schools of the country," and thus evade what moral obligation rests upon every individual member; for the reason that the duties of citizenship of the State and Federal Government, includes that of giving our children an opportunity to secure the best that is within our reach. Besides this, the revelations of the Lord to the church make it the duty of parents to get for themselves and their children a knowledge of governments, kingdoms, countries, peoples, things above the earth, on the earth, and in the earth; the knowledge of men, history, and all things within the domain of their lives. (See Doc. and Cov., sec. 85:21.)

Those who attended the exercises of the commencement week were strongly impressed that the college had already wrought much good, and would be the means of great good and advancement, if it is properly sustained.

Bro. O. H. Riggs wrote lately that a woman in New York City had given to the medical society of which he is a member, a building that made the surroundings of the society equal to the best; the gift was that of many thousands of dollars; and while we felt like being thankful to think there were such women in the world, we felt like praying, not for her especially, but for one just like her who would put a strengthening prop of dollars under our institution at Graceland.

It is expected now that Bro. Ernest R. Dewnsnup, of England, a graduate of Owens College and London University, will come to the aid of Graceland and take charge of its destinies as an educator.

He will be the President and an active teacher with the faculty already secured. Honors to Graceland, and to God thankfulness for his favor, and prayers for the complete success of our work.

Baccalaureate sermon by President Joseph Smith, delivered Sunday, June 12:—

I ought not to make an apology after so much has been said in reference to this occasion, for no one who is to address a congregation in our chapel is expected to make an apology, but the habit of apologizing before the sermon is so foreign to me that I will not resort to it now. The occasion is new, but I accept the logical conclusion of my own philosophy, therefore I have no apology to make this morning. It is understood that this effort is to be a baccalaureate sermon, preceding the college exercises from which students grow from scholars to citizens and take up the active lines of life, aside from their studies, including the labor to secure a place among men, and incidentally a living; and I take it for granted that if education does not properly fit them for some portion of the great struggle in which they are to engage, there necessarily has been a mistake, either in the course which they have pursued, or the studies in which they have been engaged.

I have chosen the text for this morning's sermon from the writings of Paul. My reason for doing this is that he was a citizen of no mean city, well acquainted with the philosophy of the Jews, a man acquainted with the history and theories of his time, and qualified to weigh well whatever was presented to him of an intellectual character:—

"Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed."

This text is prolific of thought, and from among those thoughts suggested to me I shall present a few. The prominent thought, to my mind, is the injunction to the individual, to whom Paul wrote and carefully stating to him that there was one to whom his allegiance was due, and to whom it must be his first effort to approve himself, and that was God.

There is a position held that man is accountable, not for the act of creation, but for that which has been conferred upon him in the creation of man, to make him what he is; and if it be true that he has been made but a little lower than the angels, and as philosophy has long held, the only animal endowed with reason, it is because of that reason, that ability and power to reason, which is the best gift God could give to man after he had created him; and it was that thus he might well hold him responsible. The thought that man may go stumbling along in life, blindly feeling his way without any representation, that he is responsible to divine power, which while creating him has left him without direction, but permitting him to drudge without regard to his fellows, is not a pleasant one to hold, nor do I or any of us accept it. Such a life will inevitably be a failure. Man is not answerable to God for acquired ability; he is answerable to him for the faculties with which he has been endowed by creation by which he is enabled to answer the demands of his best desires and secure what will fit him for life's activities. I mean by this that God has placed within man ability, but he has not put within him knowledge. He has simply fitted him with the power to acquire and use knowledge. He has not especially endowed him with the faculty for any particular branch of science, but has qualified him for all of them, and thereafter put him upon his good behavior. A good while ago, I took issue with the statement of the poet with regard to the natural characteristics of man and of the animal. This poet wrote:—

"And reason raise o'er instinct as you can;
In this 'tis God directs, in that 'tis man."

I thought then and think now the poet made a mistake; for certainly, if God made man in his likeness, he possessed the power to reason, and endowed man with this power above the beast. God is the God of reason as well as the God of instinct, and if the thought of the poet is to be taken in this sense, that the conditions which he proposed to endow the animals with are strikingly different from those with which he proposed to endow the reasoning animal man, and having thus given him this higher qualification, he has done all he intended to do for him and in that sense left him to the creation of his own world, then man surely would not be responsible.

If we are to answer to God for that which has been granted unto us, whether it be rich or poor, one of the active questions that every man must necessarily solve, stating it at the outset of his career, that he is forced to answer how best to put himself in a condition to properly answer. I may say this morning that the thought that suggests itself to me is, that one of the first things which an individual should take into account before settling upon an occupation he proposes to follow in life, he proposes to answer to God for his being and natural endowments, and to answer to man for the use he makes of that with which God has endowed him. I may possibly be asked by some one, If man proposes to answer to God, he must necessarily answer to man? To this I reply, There is an element in man that may lead him to suggest his service to his fellow man as being the just service of God for the fact of his having lived in the world. Hence in the selection of an occupation it seems to me that one of the best methods by which man may witness to God his desire to answer for the responsibility, is to secure, if he can, a position that will make him an active integral portion of the great mass of workers in the world. He cannot take it into thought that he is a born genius, but he should so cultivate whatever God may have endowed him with by natural selection, that he may answer unto his fellow man until he finally lays down the weapons of his warfare in death, therefore he can answer unto God and to man; proving by his earnest service to the good of his fellow man that he loves God and proposes to answer to his love in an honorable service.

It is a man's duty to study himself, to become acquainted with himself, to know the powers that are within him, to know the extent to which his powers may reach; and while God has spread the evidences of his intelligence so widely that everything in the wide field is open to man for examination, every avenue for acquiring knowledge is open for his occupation by reason of that which God has put within him. He meant by this to indicate that the wide field was open to man's research and for him to enter in and occupy. For a man to become acquainted with himself, he must become acquainted with his fellow man, and if he knows what other men may do, he knows what he may do; if he knows what other men have done, he can say, What other men have done, I can do. Whatever man may do that is legitimate for him to make an effort to accomplish, and while he is doing it, the only thing he must be careful about is, that while a few only may become great, all may become good. All there is within the human domain is open to man's inquiry; it is for him to say how to make the inquiry. If this mission has been imposed upon him by divine will and command, then man has no choice; but if there has been no divine intervention, the whole wide world is open to his choice, and he may make it as he will, unto life, happiness, and success, approval of God, or to degradation and final defeat and death. It may not alone be found in religious circles. There is nothing but what these elements enter into.

It is said, "Every man is the architect of his own success." This being true, is it absolutely true, or only relatively true? It cannot be true in an absolute sense, for man is largely responsible to God and his fellow man for the development and use of that which is within him; and this is especially true in regard to his education. I am aware that it sometimes happens, and that this truism is not always applicable, that men are controlled by that which is without, the circumstances which control them, and as a consequence it has followed that the other saying is approved,

"There is a divinity that shapes our ends, Rough hew them as we will."

Still he may and must in a large degree control his circumstances, or choose the conditions and circumstances by which he is to be controlled; and in this he is the architect of his own success. He is responsible for that which may enter into his life, and by that which he proposes or submits himself to be surrounded by. One of the finest things that education provides a man with is the ability and power to surround himself with those things which tend to make him nobler and wiser. If he takes to himself that which is degrading, he is responsible in a divine sense unto the power of God. The student is responsible for the developing element in his own education. I may be answered, "Does not the choice of the processes that he uses transcend the choice of the teacher he represents? Are they not responsible to him for the character of his education?" I answer, from time immemorial until now it has never been in the province of a teacher to give a man success. It is not within the power of the teacher to confer the education. It lies with the student. The teacher may make every effort possible, but he never can supply the inner and better element which will give the student success.

Design, application, industry; these the teacher can never give the student. He may exercise them, but it rests with the pupil to apply them. If he has them not by gift, he can attain them; but unless he is willing in heart and in brain, the teacher may labor in vain. Application is one of the forces that made the teacher; it is one of the elements that will make the scholar. Elihu Burritt became the master of several languages. It was necessary for him to labor day by day, and while he was blowing the fire that heated the iron his brain was at work accomplishing the work of securing the languages. His book lay open on the forge at which his work was done. He was called the learned blacksmith.

Poverty does not always put it out of reach to accomplish an education. Every child that will may have an opportunity to get an education. I may pause for a moment and ask what an education is. Is it the filling of the head with knowledge? Oh, no! Is it the reaching out and getting everything within man's reach? No. Education is the ability or trained faculty to acquire knowledge. It is called by some "applied knowledge." I agree with this in a sense. The accomplishing of that ability is to bring the faculties into such condition that whatever a man sees he may understand; what he reads he may comprehend. When that is done he may go into any occupation. I understand, then, that that is what I should mean by the use of the words, "one's education."

A brother once came to me and wanted me to help him obtain a situation. I asked him what he could do, and he said, "I am a learned incapable." A head full of knowledge with no power of application; could not set himself to work at all. He made the mistake of drifting along, getting this and that, until finally thrown upon his own resources, without a proper study of himself, he came into the active press of everyday life unfinished. One thing that education does: if successful it gives increased power and broadens the mind and heart. The ignorant man is narrow, as a rule; not only narrow, but he is not in a condition to be brought in broad ways of thought and action. He drifts along in grooves, and while he may succeed in a sense, he does not reflect credit on that which the Maker has put within him.

There are two great enemies to education that are productive of failures; these enemies are, vacillation and hesitancy. We trust men who will act. We mean men who will act in the circumstances that surround them. These two enemies have crippled some of the brightest minds that we have, and I do not believe I shall be outraging any principles of trust when I say that these two things have injured the success of some of the brightest minds that have been attendant upon this college. The patient plodder who sticks to his work is the one who succeeds. No matter if he is less brilliant than his fellows, that pupil who presses patiently forward will be found at the front at the close of the year. The reason that he is there is because he has accomplished a partial knowledge of these surroundings, and has worked to a design, and has never for a single instant permitted that design nor the way to reach it to leave him.

The education of the heart goes on at the same time that the education of the mind is going on. It follows that it will be more complete when the other is finished; and by the education of the brain the education of the heart is going on, and after a time we have a properly trained man because his heart has taken the education at the same time that his head has. I am thankful we have been preaching a religion of the head and of the heart. Man being a man of creation of heart and brain, we have to make a grand success in life. The choice of a pursuit must depend on the man's knowledge of himself. Some people when they die expect to have nothing to do, only to sing and play. The choice of a pursuit depends largely upon the natural capabilities, and the desire to make them established, creates the desire to cultivate them. As a consequence, we have genius. But I have often found that men of genius have not accomplished as much as men of power.

There are two questions that remain, I shall be brief upon them: Where is the room for the thinker and the worker, and in the language of one of the brightest minds that loved position, "There is room at the top." He who strives earnestly and reaches the top will find that there is plenty of room. Those who have a bad foundation, will be below him. Try then, students, all of you, to be qualified to occupy at the top. Never be satisfied with a smattering of knowledge of your chosen pursuit; keep steadily at it until you have reached an acquaintance with all that is within the domain. Fit and prepare yourselves by the accomplishment of labor and you will score a complete success.

We are celebrating the success of Graceland College. We are in duty bound to give it our moral support. The whole community is interested in it, while I as a man may be pleased that the student to graduate to-day forms a portion of my family and may reap the first benefits; nevertheless it reaches out into every branch of the community, and I am thankful the occasion is of that character, though it really finds its first developed plant in my family. I feel then that our obligation to Graceland College, is to see to it that we by no means slacken our efforts to relieve it from everything that may hinder its progress, and thence to continue earnestly until we shall send from this little hamlet of ours individuals who may be justly found in the front ranks of men of ability and force in the great battle of life, because they have made a right choice, because they have been diligent in the occupation which they have chosen to follow.

THE COMMENCEMENT EXERCISES.

The services at the regular commencement exercises on Wednesday, the 15th, were opened with prayer. The addresses are given herewith. Vocal and instrumental music also made up a portion of the program, an appreciative audience giving careful attention to every feature. Dr. J. H. Hansen, of Lamoni, dismissed the assembly, after which audience, faculty, and graduate were severally congratulated on the spirit and success of the occasion.

The address of the graduate, Bro. Fred M. Smith, is as follows:—

MISSION OF GRACELAND COLLEGE.

"Resolved, that in the opinion of this conference, the time has arrived when it may be expedient to establish an institution of learning under the control or influence of our church organization, and to this end there shall be a committee appointed (by the body) to receive proposals for a location and take such other preliminary measures as may be necessary; and said committee are empowered after receiving such proposals to make all necessary arrangements for the establishment of such institution."

Thus run the words of the resolution passed on the 11th of April, 1890, at Lamoni, by the General Conference of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, which sanctioned the establishment of Graceland College. For years before this, large hearts had meditated this step, and broad-minded, liberal-thinking men had fondly dreamed of the time when active operations should begin for providing a place of learning where their youths and the youths of others of their own faith could be educated as the world educates and yet be under influences tending to propagate the principles of religion which they infuse into their children from infancy. We can only imagine the joy these men experienced when they realized that by the adoption of this resolution their long-cherished plans and hopes were soon to materialize.

Time in his course measured the months and even years while the body of men called into existence as a committee by the resolution were quietly, somewhat slowly, but nevertheless surely prosecuting the work before them. Lasting and imposing work, like the formation of the enduring, wonder-inspiring giant of the forest, is accomplished only after lapse of time. Father Time in his rounds inspects critically and instigates needed changes, while his divisions of the year season and solidify, and the tempest is defied. The work of the committee under the supervision of the bearer of the sickle reached its first goal when the workmen's spades first disturbed the ground whereon to build; another when the corner stone with appropriate ceremonies was lowered into place; still another when the ball on the flagstaff was placed at its high elevation above the ground whereon stands the monument to their efforts.

The liberality of the propagators of the institution is nowhere more strikingly manifest than on the corner stone, which bears the somewhat paradoxical inscription, "Graceland College, Nonsectarian; Erected 1895; Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints."

Here is the first college founded by a religious people occupying a unique place in the theological world bearing an inscription on its corner stone which boldly asserts, that though brought into existence by a religious body, yet the truths of science and learning would be promulgated and taught among its students unbiased by religious tenets; and that while every effort would be made to surround the student by moral influences tending to enoble and elevate, yet in the classroom and chapel the principles and doctrines of no one religion would be taught,—that the object of the school should be to promulgate truth in all its forms and wherever found. Indeed, Latter Day Saints, the object of whose religion might briefly be expressed in the words, "Teach God and his work,—truth,—and grant to man his agency," living up to these principles, could not well place any other inscription on the corner stone of their college.

In the interim of the breaking of the ground for building and the last finishing touches of the painter's brush the then actively operative committee had rented suitable rooms, and on September 17, 1895, the first scholar registered as a Graceland student. Once, twice, thrice, and four times came the ambitious neophytes of Minerva's learning to schedule as students while Graceland was in rented quarters; near five hundred times did Apollo in his duteous, daily journeyings cross the firmament in his fiery chariot and look down upon the France Block as the temporary home of the school. Then came a gala day. The beautiful new building stood invitingly finished, opening its broad portals to the small but happy group of students. The dedication of our college marked an epoch in the lives of its founders; it was the consummation of long-cherished hopes. On that day in the chapel room, where were held the dedicatory exercises, were breathed stirring sentiments of patriotism and generous words of encouragement by men summoned from various places to participate; while, typifying the spirit of the institution and designating the patriotism of the institutions, directly above that paradoxical corner stone, on a staff visible for miles in every direction, floated gracefully, beautifully that loved emblem of liberal freedom—our country's honored flag.

Twice, now, have the first birds of spring on their return from tropical climes found activity in the new home of our school. Twice has old Boreas subjected this citadel of learning to sieges of bombardment by storms of wintry blasts and masses of snow. For the second time have we a succession of "rare June days" while the Graceland student plods his steady way up College Hill and the ungarnished road to knowledge.

To-day has another goal been reached in the history of Graceland, for to-day its first alumnus becomes such. True, but one; and while that one may miss the associations of classmates, and feel keenly the awful responsibility of being at the same time head and foot of his class, salutatorian and valedictorian as well as last, and constituting at once the whole regime of officers, having the responsibility of selecting colors, giving class yell, class prophecy, class poem, and discharging the many duties generally devolvent upon many; yet he feels proud that to him our institution gives its first degree.

Thus have we attempted briefly to outline events as Graceland's history has been shaped. Its history complete is found only in the history of its students, faculty, and founders,—the value of its work can be ascertained only by noting the degree of success achieved by its alumni and children; much, then, remains for the future to tell.

The principles of patriotism and liberal generosity so manifest at its inception and its subsequent growth have borne fruits most grand. At the staff wherefrom has floated many times the Stars and Stripes there was placed 'neath Old Glory, by liberty-loving students, a flag which represents a people which is, with all the zealous patriotism of our Revolutionary forefathers, now struggling for what our flag represents—liberty. One of the very boys who, in his sympathy, helped to make and hoist the flag he thought was the emblem of that people, now shoulders a musket in the army that is fighting to liberate the brave sons of devastated Cuba from Spanish tyranny, while five more of his college mates are marching 'neath battle flags being carried against the arms of that odious oligarchy, Spain. Probably no other college in the United States has furnished so many soldiers per hundred students.

Graceland is not represented in the ranks of our nation's defenders only, but among the moral warriors who from the rostrum wage war on error; for it has had no less than four representative students who have taken upon them the responsibility of the priesthood among the people who founded the school, thus manifesting their intention to labor for the sake of humanity and the church. Two of the four are duly appointed missionaries.

Short as has been the life of Graceland its students are found in many avocations of life, filling places of trust and responsibility.

Upon the lips of many lies the question, ever ready to be hurled at any active friend of Graceland, often in the acrid tone of acerbity, "What is the mission of Graceland?" and the active friend is lead thoughtfully to ask himself the question, "What is the mission of Graceland?" Hundreds of colleges are scattered over our land—every State boasts an Athens. Has, then, our institution a mission as distinctive as to justify founding and maintaining it?" In seeking to fortify his position as a friend many reasons come to the self-questioned one why Graceland should be—why it must continue to be.

The student in the world finds in his heart always a feeling of reverence and love for the institution which has fostered him while journeying the weary way of knowledge. The alumnus of our public schools finds always within him a love for the community which supported the school he attended. The graduate of a State college feels always reverential love toward the State which fosters his Alma Mater. The student who has pursued a course of study in an institution under the care of a church cannot but feel this same love towards the church, even though not affiliated with it. Then should not Latter Day Saints feel that interest in their young, should they not be as solicitous to gain and hold the love and good will of their young, that they will see to it that a place is provided and maintained where they can acquire an education and feel that they have been fostered in their efforts by the church of their choice?

One still more important function yet has Graceland. Our ministers, sacrificing as they do, working hard and earnestly in the interests of the church and humanity, and receiving as they do barely living expenses for themselves and their families, are left often utterly powerless to aid their children in acquiring the benefits of a higher education. Often, indeed, even a common school education for their children is beyond their reach, and their young grow up under the buffetings of the world and are led from the church of their childhood and the paths of rectitude, because, aye, why? Has not, then, Graceland a mission no other school in existence can perform? Is it not to become the refuge of ambitious young Latter Day Saints who are, because their fathers are arduously working for humanity, sacrificing home, and even family for the sake of the work of the church they represent, unable to attend the schools of the lands? What more noble mission for the church than to foster, by the means of Graceland, its indigent but ambitious and worthy young.

Founded by magnanimous liberality, dedicated midst waves of patriotism, her students now fighting under and for the flag of freedom and taking upon them the task of helping mankind, inculcating into all who are connected with her the spirit of magnanimity and liberalism, her mission seems to have been successfully entered in upon and uniquely marked out for the future.

Graceland may be a failure; it may be none will help sustain her. It might, left to itself, like the sick, hunger-weakened pauper who falls by the wayside and dies unvisited and alone, sink into the oblivion of memory, and be buried 'neath the debris of frustrated hopes and shattered dreams of success. But no! It cannot be! Graceland cannot, must not fail! That beautiful building on College Hill empty, or tenanted by others than Graceland students would be an indelible blot on the history sheets of the people who founded it. She is not a pauper; she is the child of a people who will not desert her. Her support must be forthcoming. At her pinnacle must float still that glorious emblem. Behind her walls must be diffused still the principles that will send from her hundreds who will rise in their gratitude and call her blessed. She must be the pride and joy of the hundreds who, recognizing the uniqueness of her mission, will generously support her in her noble work.

As I meditate thus over the short history of Graceland and the work accomplished in her short life, and think of the time yet before us, my heart o'erflows with welling hopes for my Alma Mater; and could I be transported on the wings of prophetic vision past the obscurity that conceals from us the future, I cannot doubt that I would see, floating on the placid surface of the sea of education, a noble ship, plowing her majestic way through the quiet waters, propelled by the force of internal energy, controlled by loyal hands and noble minds; coming from her decks the hum of the throngs of busy, active young, on her mast perching the pearly bird of peace, calmly watching the waving of pennants of victorious old gold and loyal navy blue gently fluttering in the soft zephyrs of prosperity.

An address by Mrs. M. F. L. Fitzpatrick, Professor of French and German:—

THE COLLEGE GRADUATE.

Men are born free, but not intellectually equal. The faculties of every individual bear strengthening. Men do not see nor think alike; their senses are differently affected under the same circumstances.

Progress in mind is a natural desire in humanity.

Each individual gains from experience and study, an additional knowledge, largely of the same kind as he already possesses; and broadens in knowledge when other minds are made subservient to his own, and he is called upon to see and think as others see and think, or to compare the knowledge of others with his knowledge. Although one individual may never be exactly what another is, he may attain to the highest possible degree in a sphere all his own, the sphere outlined by the faculties with which he is naturally endowed; for every individual seems best fitted for some certain pursuit in life.

Some of the great attainments of the human mind are:—

The cultivation of self-reliance and the reasoning faculties.

The formation of right habits.

The power of concentrating the mind upon any special subject, which is a power of the highest value, and worthy any effort for its attainment. This power alone goes far to mark the difference of intellectual greatness in the minds of men; for the perfection of the disciplined mind is not to be able on some great contingency to rouse up its faculties and to draw out a giant strength, but to have it always ready to produce a given and equal quantity of results in a given and equal time. Attention is the father of memory. The profound thinker can hold his attention on a subject, look through, around, and beyond it.

It further attains a clearer knowledge of mental operations; the cultivation of the judgment so as to be able to compare opinions, facts, and theories; the knowledge of self; that is, to know what one cannot do, as well as what one can do, and that there are others superior in knowledge and wisdom.

The knowledge of human nature, which it is popularly believed can be studied only by moving or crowding among men, may be gained during college life; and if the student, at the time of his graduation, has not a deep insight into human nature, it is his fault or that of his instruction; finally to know honestly and usefully how to apply whatever knowledge one may have acquired.

A liberal education, especially a widely elective course of study, favors to discover to the student the proper bent of his inclinations, and it is evident the pathway to success is shortest when the bent of mind is discovered and followed from the beginning. There are few geniuses born into the world, and it is not so much the object of education to locate these geniuses as to enable ordinary minds to develop themselves for active and effective usefulness, and to develop to the utmost their individual, innate talents.

One may have a good mind and sound judgment, and yet never attain to distinction without severe application. One must, as a rule, labor for all the distinction one has, and nothing is worth possessing or offering to others which has cost no effort to procure.

Self-evident as it may seem, the admonition to the student to devote himself to study, cannot be repeated too often or too emphatically. It applies not alone to the last terms of college, but also to the first. The temptation to enjoy collegiate liberty after the necessarily more rigorous training of lower schools, manifested first of all by neglect of study, is no doubt great with the young student; but there must be a limit to forbearance, for, in reality, collegiate liberty when properly interpreted is a very different affair. It is not the liberty to do nothing, but the liberty to study. In order to enjoy the full benefit of this liberty to study, the first condition is a love to study, the second, a willingness and adaptability to do independent work.

The criticism is often made that graduates are impractical, and that persons trained from earliest youth to a certain work are better fitted for it than students who pursue that work after graduation. Formerly only a small per cent of graduates adopted some business pursuit; but this is true no longer, and every year a large per cent enter into business life. On comparing the college man with the noncollege man, the fact is observed that the former has decidedly the advantage. He has a quickness of perception that is lacking in the latter, and soon reaches, and being mentally superior, surpasses an uneducated man who has had a several years business start. Men who are successful without an education, could have become eminently so if they had added it to their already excellent qualities. It has been estimated that there are ten times as many prosperous educated business men to the same proportion of uneducated business men: and the average of their prosperity is high.

At the present time no matter what his business may chance to be, the manufacturer endeavors to thoroughly understand every detail and continually tries to improve his processes. For the accomplishment of his purpose he engages the services of men trained scientifically at a university, or in a school of research; in truth, men who are not so trained are now not at all employed by the leading manufacturers.

The growth of knowledge, the increased facilities for imparting the widely elective courses of study, and the almost general acknowledgment that all knowledge is equally honorable, has mitigated much of evil in the dead or decaying systems of the past. Art, science, and industry unite in a happy combination to ameliorate the race.

I am sorry to admit that there are a few college graduates who have little of which to boast. These individuals are unfortunately of the number doomed to failure under any conditions. An educated person without energy of application can truly never be successful.

In this, the second century of our republic, the conditions for amassing wealth are based largely on ability and merit, which are most essential to financial success. The best opportunities are open to men of the strongest intellect and ability. But success does not mean alone the accumulation of wealth, else we could set the youth to labor early and grind out his existence at the shrine of Mammon. It means, however, to be able to deal with the most difficult questions of life, of country, and of state; it means the obtaining of the highest mental and moral development, the elevation of the individual and humanity, for which no education can be too broad or too deep consistent with thoroughness; for the solving of the great questions with which we have to deal, such as the labor question and others of political or the applied sciences, enriches humanity far more than all the ignorance of the world though it be combined with strength.

Educating includes the making of good citizens. Every truly educated citizen regards it his duty to aid in the promotion of all that is good and true. It is the duty of a graduate to be a true citizen. Let him, therefore, unite the true with the beautiful and the good; let him represent a state not inert, but that of inertia.

"Education has the duty to furnish the state and society with generation after generation of well-trained young men permeated with systematic knowledge, governed by high moral views, keeping alive the sacred torch of science and bearing it aloft through all the difficulties and perplexities of daily life."

Parents, as a rule, labor to acquire wealth which their children are to inherit; but the greatest inheritance they can bestow upon them is as thorough an education as their abilities can command.

All are not in the currents of improvement and culture, and in our progressive epoch, when the glorious light of intelligence sheds its brilliancy upon us, when all lands and all streams are open to investigation and research, when all winds and all terrestrial phenomena are being illuminated with the radiance of science, when all the history of the past and these form the single and organized environment of every mind, it depends on each nation and each individual to say how much it or he will enter into the conscious enjoyment of this estate. There are, in this world, men and women who cannot read and who are incapable of performing any skilled labor whatever, who are the survivors of long past ages of ignorance and inexperience, and who are only in the eddies of culture, as one author eloquently says, in the zone of calms. Between the two extremes are we each and all, and I should be untrue to you if I did not implore each one before me to strive to be in the moving current as much as possible. We should be the heirs of the ages, and should not desire to be their prodigal sons.

A great philosopher once said that the spiritual life and the conquests of the earth are better than the ownership of the earth.

Tennyson measured the conquest of the earth by the evident progress in the substitution of mechanical appliances for the hands and the arms of man; by the increase and perfection of industries, the progress of culture, or the growth of the spiritual life evidenced by the development and diffusion of literature, sculpture, painting, music, engraving, landscape, and architecture, derived from the sights and sounds in the world of nature; by the origin and growth of language; the organization of families, society, and the government; the ever wider and deeper knowledge and explanation of the cosmos and man's relation to it termed science and philosophy; the more ideal conception of the spirit world and the divine life within us, which are the inheritance of the present generation.

The children of education and knowledge are especially the heirs of all the ages. They bear the stamp of intellectual kinship and upon them devolves the duty to uphold it. They should be ever the foremost in unselfish devotion, in zeal regardless of recompense, in love that springs from intellectual maternity.

Gradually as the years roll on the guardians of the past must surrender their trusteeships. To-day it is a Gladstone or a Dana who rests forever from his labors; to-morrow it is a great inventor or brilliant historian; the next day a daring explorer, or perhaps a genius of art who lays aside his pencil or chisel which he cannot will to another. Anon the career of a generous patron of science is ended.

"Now who of all human beings should have a true and abiding interest in the preservation of these honored careers? Whose hearts should bleed when such men die, whose hearts should be glad when they are honored, who in their unwritten wills gave and bequeathed to their children and heirs, to have and to hold so long as they live and to hand down with accrued interest and betterments to their successors, all true knowledge, all skill acquired with infinite pains, all the harvest of human industries that have been raised upon the generous and fertile environment called earth?"

Graduation does not mean the end of study, but the beginning. To the knowledge already gained may the alumnus add new knowledge in his ever upward career, till his name shall shine with luster amid the honored alumni of the world.

Address of Prof. J. T. Pence, Acting President, Professor of Latin and Greek:—

INDIVIDUALISM VERSUS SOCIALISM.

Living under the benign influence of a progressive age, we are proud of our inheritance, proud that we are made the recipients of these benefactions, the cumulative wisdom of many centuries. Not boastful of our advantages, for I am constrained to believe that we have not yet reached that period when we can complacently remark, "And man was made a little lower than the angels."

The responsibility that attaches to us because of our heritage must be highly appreciated. No contentment can come where there is a knowledge of duty not well performed, while it is imperative that that which is our birthright must be faithfully preserved. Not only must it be preserved, but must be cherished with usury in order that we may act in harmony with the Biblical injunction, "and with it bring five other talents."

No one should be permitted to hide his talent under the guise of his indolence and profit from him who has been faithful to the trust imposed. The state exists for the individual and it performs its highest functions when he performs his duty to the state. Individualism has passed through a series of phases. At one time it holds a prominent place in the minds of men, everything becomes subservient to its demands; the public clamors for its advancement; the learned profession wisely or unwisely takes up the refrain; the people of whatever caste gladly respond to the spirit of the times, and thousands are devoting their attention to discussing the ethics of individuality. At another time the discrepancy between individual minds has been noticed as becoming too great. The haughtiness of the one imposes upon the good nature of the other. A disparity has arisen that demands adjudication.

It is said by socialists that the higher duty of the state is to protect the weak against the strong; that the application of the rules of individualism is destructive of the rules of the social compact; that the state is the higher power and must insinuate its workings into every avenue of thought and action. And thus through the long catalogue of events is seen the high and low barometric pressure applied to the actions of men. At a period like our own which of these diametric rules shall be observed? Shall it be the first, that combines that which is beneficial from a wise use of individual application, with that which is vicious from an unwise use of the same? or shall it be the second with like results? Shall it be an irresponsible individuality, or shall it be an intense socialism? Like most other questions regulating the conduct of human affairs, it depends very largely upon its application.

Every new doctrine has some good principles. They may be exceedingly meager, but it is very likely that a ray of truth will be extracted from a world of error. Even if they should be devoid of every intrinsic excellence, the experiments made and the vices exposed will more than compensate for the expenses incurred. So the extreme positions occupied by the individual and the state respectively only operate to expose the vulnerable characteristics of both, and to affirm the seemingly axiomatic truth that their combined forces are indispensable in the accomplishment of the highest ideal. There is but little doubt that society is made better by the freedom of personal action, by the adoption of those principles which are characterized and summed up in the personal "ego." The prenatal influences acting as a magnet upon the mind along with present environments that may operate in the same line, will certainly produce greater efficiency than if a rule of action were followed directly opposed to the line of least resistance.

The lines of human progress are certainly more rugged and various because of this intellectual abandon. Not all are measured upon this Procrustean bed, and all feel the impulse of a natural law. Not all may grasp the geometric rules of Euclid nor sing the measures of Homer. It was the unbalanced Columbus who believed that the earth is round, and the heretic Galileo believed in the principles of Copernicus. Prof. David Swing has said that "intense passion is the condition of man's success," and what is true of individuals is true of communities.

In the long vista of the past, several peaks arise to mark the passion of nations. Sculpture arose in Greece, the Grecian mind lost sight of every accomplishment except that that was robed in art. The Ionic intellect was fruitful of resources, but strangely biased. The national mind was bound up in the aesthetic; the physical and moral forces of all were directed to that end; they mount upward, and on the summit we recognize the form of Praxitiles. What but his genius with the wisdom of Phidias could immortalize the little peninsula.

Rome was proud of her statesmen, and although statesmanship was a synonym for war, she proved well her claim. What nation can point with equal pride to the continued success of an imperial soldiery? War was her vocation and in it she conquered. What other nation can claim a Caesar? The period of oratory called for a master mind and Cicero was at the helm.

A third peak arises and we recognize the institutes of Justinian. Far below the altitude attained by these men cluster the Roman citizens, but their position is marked by their abilities, not by their desires. Every man would have been a Caesar, every man a Cicero or Justinian. Another age produces a Luther. These are but the peaks that ever and anon arise to declare a martyr or mark a distorted civilization, when the state is everything, the individual nothing.

It is the enthronement of the individual in this era that marks the progress. The olive branch is for him who wins through his own efforts. The individual is king, made so by being heir of the centuries, working to promote the race, losing sight of personal aggrandizement, recognizing that he is but a factor in the grand tragedy of social life. The language above the portal of the Delphic oracle has been the watchword, Know thyself. The Greek god that sat within and spoke the future was the incarnation of the principle, whose announcement was cut by sculptors above the passage way to that mysterious sanctuary, Know thyself, and all the nations have caught the spirit. For a thousand years it slumbered, to be awakened on a new continent, put into active operation by the combined forces of an accelerated civilization. The unveiling has been accompanied with much heraldry, the turning of thoughts upon self has dissipated more superstition than all else combined. The proper appreciation of self is a virtue not to be disparaged. A knowledge of the inner consciousness coupled with a desire to do the right should be the goal of all true manhood and true womanhood. The spirit of education that marks the age is one to be approved. It commends virtue, it disparages vice; it accepts the true, it rejects the false; it cherishes the good, it condemns the bad; it advocates the growth of individuality, yet cherishes the principle of the social compact, teaches that each individual must depend upon self for his own promotion, yet be dependent upon others for its highest accomplishment. While it is in accord with these abstract conceptions of right, and while in harmony with the early notion of first principles, it has become modernized to meet the exigency of the times.

The social state has been widely changed. Equality has taken the place of a crushing inequality. All matters are assuming a common level. All movements, whether of politics, education, ethics, science, or religion, have been observed working hand in hand before the searchlight of advancing truth. What for the future shall be the character of our institution, educational and other? Shall we observe the experiences of the past, profit from them, or blindly steer for the maelstrom that is certain to come to the unwary? No small factor is it to judge what plan of campaign will succeed.

All must be given credit for patriotic motives, and it is only a difference of means to gain the same end. It is often suggested that the Republic shall stand stolidly by, careless alike whether the world moves forward or back, but by example show the benefits we enjoy under a republic. Under the light of a broader civilization, it would seem we should occupy a wider sphere, free ourselves from selfishness, and live for the race, for "all are but parts of one stupendous whole whose body nature is, and God the soul."

Standing upon the apex of the ages we can see the benefits and the disadvantages of the past. All the peaks have risen higher, there has been a general leveling up, until the deviations of the plane have become less marked. The great disparity between men is becoming less, when with Tennyson we can reflect,

"When the centuries behind me like a fruitful land reposed,

And I clung unto the present for the fullness that it closed,
When I dived into the future far as human eye could see, Saw the vision of the world and the wonders that will be."

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

CHEERING news is received from Bro. John H. Lake, who of the work in his district has this to say:—

Bro. F. M. Cooper has moved to Plano, and as soon as he gets things in shape he and I are to go to some place where they have been asking for help for some time. Bro. Henry Southwick has been here [Sandwich, Illinois.—Ed.] laboring among the saints, and has done good, so reported. Brn. H. E. Moler and A. J. Keck have started with the tent in West Pullman, and expect to use it in other places in the city. [Chicago.—Ed.] Good reports from the tent work at Geneva Lake, Wisconsin, by Brn. Wildermuth and Houghton; tent full and numbers standing outside. So far as reported to me all are doing well in the mission.

Bro. R. M. Maloney, Dyke, Oklahoma, June 17:—

After spending four weeks at home and preparing farm and garden, I bade adieu to loved ones this morning and am off to the mission field. Prospects are good for the work and I am feeling well myself; health good. Oklahoma is booming with a good wheat harvest. We hope also for a good harvest in the Lord's field.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

BRO. J. W. WIGHT, our doughty warrior, fresh from the field of forensic dispute with Rev. Clark Braden, of the Disciple Church, at Tabor, Fremont County, Iowa, put in an appearance at the sanctum, on Saturday, June 18, smiling and happy. He bore some scars, but the wounds were minute, not big enough nor ugly enough to cause him to lose his temper or deport himself in an unchristianlike way in the conflict. It is clear that he managed to keep his opponent busy, and, as a consequence, to lose his Christian temper; albeit the conduct of these Disciple disputants is more and more steadily showing that whatever may be their treatment of others, they do not care to treat their "Mormon" contestants, as they persist in calling us, with due courtesy. They seem to forget that all men are entitled to fair consideration, however strange their views may be, if they are consistent in their adherence to and support of them. Bro. Wight did not come home on his shield as fathers used to charge their sons to do if defeated in battle, but brought his shield, the Word, home with him.

The appeal of the Bishopric in behalf of Graceland College fund should receive a hearty and prompt response from every one interested in the success of the work. The College was built by direction of the General Conference, hence the burden of liquidating the indebtedness assumed rests largely upon the financial arm, to whom is presented claims due from the church. The appeal ought not to be received with indifference, but deserves a hearty and prompt response from the body. Let all bear a helping hand and the indebtedness will soon be cancelled. Where there is a will there is a way.

A late issue of the Aledo, Illinois, Republican contains a column article defensive of the faith, from the pen of Bro. M. T. Short. Many have been reached through their county papers by Bro. Short, who believes in the press as an arm for good in the work of the church militant.

The Rev. John Fletcher, of Grand Valley, Ontario, has published an article in the Dufferin Advertiser, of late date, in which he criticises certain features of the faith of the saints. Success to our cause in the Dominion has caused some adverse criticisms upon the church, but such have been met in the past and probably will be answered in future. The Dufferin Post, of the 2d, reports a late conference of the saints and a sermon by Bro. R. C. Evans.

Bro. Thomas F. Roe, of Utica, Indian Territory, writes an urgent request for the missionaries in that field to visit him. Brighamite elders have been through that country and the people are stirred up and look to him for an interpretation of the true faith. Many are interested and good might be done. He promises a home to the visiting elder. He writes to come prepared to meet a Campbellite minister who, so far, defies all comers and carries a theological chip constantly on his shoulder.

Bro. D. R. Jones, writing from Sheridan, Nevada, commends the labors of Bro. J. Arthur Davis, and of Bro. R. W. Davis and wife, who "labored faithfully and traveled hundreds of miles over deserts and mountains, through heat and cold," to establish the work; Sr. Davis also doing good work among the young people. Prospects were not flattering. The people are liberal, but prefer shallow religious theories to truth. The saints are scattered, but the faithful among them hold fast to the truth.

COLLEGE AID.

TEN CENT COLLECTION THE SECOND SUNDAY IN JULY, 1898.

ALSO

Subscription of One Dollar, to be Completed by August 1.

TO THE SAINTS:—In order to meet the college claims now pressing upon the church, each member of the church is asked to help in a collection for this purpose to the amount of ten (10) cents to be taken the second Sunday in July next.

The amount is small, but if all will perform this small part it will be of great good to the body, and relieve the Bishopric of a burden which is greatly trying and annoying. Brothers and sisters in every branch and district of the church, will you aid this

TEN CENT COLLECTION?

Do not hesitate and question as to whether it will be enough to do much good; let us all see that it is done, and then count the result as the returns come in.

We ask that Bishop's agents, and presidents of districts, and presidents of branches, take charge of this in their respective places of work, advertise the collection in their meetings, and arrange for taking the same.

A subscription of one dollar ($1.00) each is also authorized to be taken in every branch and district of the church to be superintended by Bishop's agents, and presidents of branches.

It is not a big sum, but if faithfully carried out it will do the work and the Bishopric will not have to call upon you again for the college. If not furnished we will be compelled to trouble you again.

Presidents of branches have an opportunity here to do an excellent work alongside of every other branch. Let us hear from you, brethren. The call is within the reach of all; and we rely upon each and every one of this great gospel family to give the help. If a member or friend cannot give the one dollar, he can give to the ten-cent collection. If possible give to both.

In taking and reporting the ten-cent collection give name of branch and amount.

In taking the dollar subscription, give name of subscriber and amount.

Report these to the Bishop's agents in respective districts, or to E. L. Kelley, Bishop, Lamoni, Iowa.

The last General Conference of the church at its regular business session held April 16, 1898, passed the following resolution:—

Whereas, the financial report of the Board of Trustees of Graceland College shows a large indebtedness, to the proper payment of which the church is morally in honor bound; and believing that the church should use that department of its working forces which the law creates to be the financial agents for the accomplishment of its financial ends; therefore, be it

Resolved, that the Bishopric be hereby authorized and instructed to devise and make such arrangements for the collection of means as may be adequate, and out of such means so collected, and such funds of the church as are not otherwise appropriated, liquidate the indebtedness, and provide for the further carrying out of the desires of the church heretofore expressed in conference enactments directing the establishment of an institution of learning to be maintained by the church.

This places a burden of no little care and weight upon the Bishopric, and the result of its undertaking in this department of financial work is of the highest importance to the church.

If you are a member, you are, or should be, equally interested in this work as any member of the Bishopric or the entire body. The undertaking it is true, if to be accomplished by a very few, is a mammoth one; but if by the united membership of the body it may be quickly and successfully performed.

It will not comport with a godly walk or spirit for a single member of the body or church to say that he will not do what he can and as soon as he can to aid in this work, for the good of the church demands action at once; and, under such conditions, all should make some effort at least.

The Bishopric to a degree has already felt the approaching financial burden and feels that it may safely rely upon the saints individually to lift whatever part it is possible for him or her to do, and thus equalizing the load by a united effort move it at once out of the way.

In devising ways and means, therefore, it has been our purpose to give every one a chance to perform a part, that no one may have to do another's work, but each his own; and having arranged the matter of collections so that it is possible for every one to act, we urge the faithfulness enjoined by the Master upon the church at Philadelphia:—

"That no man take thy crown."

Let each perform his or her own work, and neither wish nor permit another to perform it for him.

One of the most stinging rebukes to the ancient Scribes and Pharisees came by reason of their lack in performance of duty, and a failure of appreciation of the burdens of their fellows.

For they say, and do not. For they bind heavy burdens and grievous to be borne, and lay them on men's shoulders; but they themselves will not move them with one of their fingers."

Let this not truly be said in any sense of Christ's children.

In this call the Bishopric has considered the necessities, and asked as little as would perform the work. It is not out of the reach of a single person who will strive to help.

May the Lord bless you in helping.

Confidently in the one hope,

E. L. KELLEY,

G. H. HILLIARD,

Of the Bishopric.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

"Don't let your heart grow cold, and you may carry cheerfulness and love with you into the teens of your second century, if you can last so long."

THE MOTHER'S DUTIES.

IT IS surprising how few mothers appreciate the possibilities of combining the duties and pleasures of motherhood in becoming a real "mother-nurse" to their children. The sight of a little girl at play with her dolls has a tendency to arouse some sentimental emotion in the breast of the average spectator. The little performer in the unconscious drama dresses and undresses her mimic babies, puts them to bed, and sings them to sleep with lullabies, and the whole is looked upon as a touching forecast of a maternal future. And yet, if the mother of dolls belonged to the leisured, conventional class, that sentimental spectator would be almost shocked to see her, grown to actual motherhood, performing with earnestness and regularity those same offices for her flesh-and-blood babies which she had once done in play for her waxen effigies. For in spite of a pretty generally received theory that the righteous concern of a woman is the care of her children through all the stages of childgrowth, it is a remarkable fact that the average woman who can afford to hire the services of an efficient nurse, takes but little part in the daily life of her nursery, and altogether hands over to her nurse the duties she was once so happy to perform for her dolls.

It is true, these women have found more amusing games to play at than this of live doll-tending, which entails patient service and self-sacrifice, and they deem their maternal duty all fulfilled by some institution of state calls, exchanged at regular intervals between nursery and boudoir. Maternity with many of these becomes a mere pose, assumed out of deference to traditional ideals.

Do we not know the smart afternoon caller, who stops short in the middle of her muffin and her gossip, and, assuming a madonna-like expression, ostentatiously makes for the door, explaining that this is her "children's hour," which she would not miss for the world? Her children's hour, indeed! Can she realize the immensity of the debt she has incurred towards these helpless human beings when she thinks to cancel it by one small daily hour of personal service?

I know of another mother, who, pursuing hard all day her own personal pleasure and profit, chooses to express her maternity by having her child brought into her bedroom of a morning, before she is up, and feeding it with a rich sweetmeat, or otherwise forbidden delicacy. "I wish always to be associated in my child's mind with pleasure-giving sensations," explains this lady, strangely content to play the part of dessert in a banquet, where she could be the piece de resistance. It is not in this wise that the ideal mother conceives of her duties to her babies.

I know again of another mother, whose home is as a temple she has raised to her children, with herself as high priest. Right on top of a hill stands the wide, low house, its courtyard, round which the rooms are built, open to the sky. The garden in which it stands slopes down the hillside, and at the bottom of the hill are woods and running water. To look around the many-windowed rooms is like turning the leaves of a glorious picture-book, for on every side is seen a beautiful bit of surrounding country. And here the mother lives with her little ones, bringing, perhaps, by her sweet presence and unconscious teaching, the inner life into harmony with the beauty outside the walls. A woman of the highest culture and intellectual resources, it is her delight to share all the nursery tendance, and, white-aproned and bubbling over with mother-love, she is to be found every morning, before the rest of the world is up, taking active part in the bathing and dressing of her little ones. Her nurses have learned to value her presence, which brings with it no atmosphere of fault-finding or majesty. They have unconsciously learned to look upon their work in all its details from a higher plane—to realize the endless opportunities for good or for evil which arise in the children's daily life, and to discern the right moment and method of interference. And it is from the mother of the children that these things can best be learned; for, besides the extra love and forbearance, she brings to the task of understanding their often puzzling little natures, her thorough knowledge of them furnishing her with a key to the mystery of ways and moods.

Most of the little ones bred in such an atmosphere of "thinking love" have a better chance of attaining the right moral development than the many children who are being "slapped into manners" by smart, white-capped, experienced nurses in nurseries remote from the mother's ear and eye.

It may be argued that the woman of leisure has no right to devote herself exclusively to these motherly duties. She is a member of a community as well as a mother of children, and as such has duties to perform. But it is pretty generally conceded, that the more you do the more you find you can do, and the intelligent mother will be able to manage her time so as to include other than home duties in many ways, and if something must be neglected, let it be the outside rather than the home duties. And the happiness of knowing that she must be to her children as sunshine and the air they breathe—the deeper happiness of feeling that by her ceaseless care and watching she has done something towards helping forward the progress of mankind toward higher things will more than compensate for the present ceaseless round of duties in the nursery, and the duties will become pleasures when viewed from this standpoint.—The Home Queen.

PRAYER UNION.

SPECIAL REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.

BRO. COLUMBUS SCOTT, of Lamoni, Iowa, earnestly requests the faith and prayers of the Sisters' Prayer Union, that if it be the Lord's will he extend to him sufficient health and strength to enable him to magnify his calling. He has great confidence in the prayer of faith, and desires that God may bless him with needed wisdom as well as health. May it please God to hear and answer in mercy.

Letter Department.

OMAHA, Neb., June 11.

Editors Herald:—On May 7 and 27 respectively we were called upon to conduct the funeral services of Elder Elisha McEverts and Bro. Isaac Ashton, from the saints' chapel at Little Sioux, Iowa. They were pioneers of Western Iowa, with which history theirs must be inseparably interwoven.

Both were members of the Little Sioux branch of the church, and each had and bore a strong testimony to the truth as revealed through the instrumentality of the Smith family.

It seemed a peculiar yet sad way to begin and end our short visit to our native town, after seventeen years' absence, by administering these last sad rites to two of the hardy pioneers who with my father helped to make the country habitable. Bro. McEverts was born at Montezuma, Pike County, Illinois, April 5, 1846, and in 1854, with his father's family, came to Harrison County, Iowa, where his remaining earthly probation was spent, excepting the years 1864 and 1865, which were devoted to his country's cause.

He united with the church September 9, 1877, and endeavored to magnify his calling as an elder by preaching from time to time as opportunity and circumstances permitted. He died of sublingual cancer, May 6, 1898, after eighteen months' patient suffering from that dread destroyer. A wife and nine children were left to mourn, but not without the consolation of the hope of a final reunion.

Bro. Ashton was born July 4, 1811, in Hampshire County, Virginia. He united with the church at Nauvoo, in 1840. He came to the Little Sioux sometime about 1849, and settled at Ashton, near the present site of Onawa, Iowa, in 1852, being the first settler and first individual to turn a furrow in the territory that was afterward organized into Monona County. Often have I heard my father mention his name when relating incidents of early life on the Little Sioux, when their only associates were the half hostile red men, who grudgingly shared these then prolific hunting grounds with the "pale face."

Bro. Ashton remained firm in the faith espoused at Nauvoo, but did not reunite with the church until a few years prior to his death, while living with his daughter Sr. Herbs, at River Sioux. Of nine children born to him four remain to mourn his departure. Previous to his death he told his daughter to direct the officiating minister at his funeral, to the family Bible, where on two or three pages his nearly palsied hand had traced some brief incidents of his life, dwelling especially on his associations with the church and the trying scenes at Nauvoo, when Joseph was martyred and many led into following Brigham by reason of the deceptive voice, etc. His strong faith shines forth in this simple and meager narrative, in the conspicuous omission of individual biography for the more full recording of church incidents and expressions of faith therein. He died May 26, 1898, at his daughter's home,
S. D. CONDIT.

DETROIT, Minn., June 16.

Editors Herald:—Since leaving my home on the 28th of April I have been busy proclaiming the gospel to the people. In some places preparations for war hindered me some. Have baptized seven since landing in my mission. Many others are almost persuaded, but hold back for reasons best known to themselves. I am feeling quite well in the work, and, as a whole, I believe the saints are feeling good.

On May 30 I was called in company with Bro. Henry Way to administer to Sr. Ochser, who was very low. The Spirit of our Master was with us and the blessing we sought was given to our hearts' content, the gift of tongues being enjoyed by the writer, all present rejoicing under the power of the Spirit. The work up here is moving on slowly but surely. With love to all I am,

Yours in the faith,
I. N. ROBERTS.

EAST DENNIS, Mass., June 3.

Editors Herald:—I have been putting in a little labor for a week or two in this part of the district. I found Bro. George Robley busily engaged at Dennisport, holding up our beautiful standard in the saints' chapel on my arrival May 25. The noble band of sisters there had by their united efforts renovated the interior of the chapel, and it was made very attractive, clean and homelike for the saints and friends to meet in and worship the Lord.

Arrangements had been made for its dedication on the Sabbath following. Although it had been built nearly thirty years it had never been dedicated to the Lord and his service. The next day after my arrival I received a dispatch to attend the funeral service of our aged sister, McIntyre, of Boston, to whom I had administered the day previous and was impressed to say to her daughter that the end was near. She only lacked a few days of being ninety-two years of age. All her mental faculties were keen to the end; and her faith in the angel message, the divinity of the work, the calling and prophetic work of Joseph the Seer, and the divinity of the Book of Mormon, never faltered. "Her end was peace." Funeral services at her daughter's, Mrs. Chick's, May 27, where she lived up to her departure.

On my return to Dennisport I started in to assist George in the services which were being held every night; good audiences and good attention. Saturday was used for the decoration of the chapel for the special services on the Sabbath. The flowers were very nicely arranged, and Old Glory, our beautiful star spangled banner in rich profusion draped the back and front of the platform, everything being in harmony with the day (Memorial Sunday) and our free and glorious gospel and also the dedication of a free pulpit. Bro. George led two noble women into the waters of the ocean to commemorate the event, after he had preached the dedicatory sermon. The day will go down in the history of Dennisport as a pleasant occasion, as it took on much of the appearance of conference, the chapel being well filled.

I am at writing at the home of our aged brother and saint, Luther Sears and his noble daughter Sr. Abbie M. Chace, who are making my visit a pleasant occasion. I am trying to tell the gospel story every night to them and their neighbors.

The work in the district with few exceptions is onward, and our army of young saints is coming grandly forward in the conflict, and claiming the attention and admiration of those who love the work. May steadfastness of purpose and spiritual power be granted them.

The few saints in this place need the sympathy and prayers of God's people, being isolated from frequent association with the saints, and are greatly opposed in their work for the Master.

The following lines were suggested to my mind as I stood on the shore and thought of those I left behind years ago. If you have no room for them, put them away:—

I stood on the sands as the tide was just leaving,
And wished in my heart a fond message 'twould bear
Across the deep blue as I watched its breast heaving
Some words of endearment to friends dwelling there.

O watery expanse why should you divide me
From those whom my heart yearns so oft to behold?
O, wings of the morning, how glad would I use thee;
To my dear ones away my heart's message unfold!

In fancy I hear in thy music sweet voices,
Blend in harmony sweet the glad song of my heart;
My soul all enraptured awakes and rejoices
As I linger to catch the sweet strains ere we part.

Perhaps on yon shore some feet may be straying,
Some fond heart re-echoes the throbbing of mine;
And could I but hear what your soul's harp is playing,
The chords would be perfect 'twixt my harp and thine.

R. BULLARD.

CASTLE ROCK, Wash., June 6.

Editors Herald:—Please say to the saints that my permanent field address is Castle Rock, Washington. We arrived here May 13 and at once commenced our work of getting ready to begin the campaign with the tent, meanwhile preaching a few times in and around this point; but just as we were about ready to start to join Bro. Holt in Southern Oregon, our boy—Charley—developed a (to us) very interesting case of the measles. Of course that, as the coal miners would say, "put a sprag in the wheel." Well, the boy is all right and the girl is enduring them just now.

If all goes well we will be ready for our field work with the tent in a week or so. Meanwhile calls come for preaching near this place, and I am trying to fill them, so am not inactive.

I find that the seed sown here last year has been growing and only needs a little cultivation. I baptized one at Lank schoolhouse on the 29th of May, a Sr. Willard Johnson. Others are near. One young lady of about seventeen years of age gave her name for baptism, but her father prevented her, alleging that she was not old enough. Well, the excuses are many, but the Master will put the responsibility where it belongs.

I suppose Bro. Holt is in the field by this time, as I receive a letter from him written from Oakland, the 29th, saying he would start for Looking Glass, Oregon, the next day. There has been considerable rain here since our arrival, but it seems now to have cleared up for the summer season. Prospects for fruit are fine here. Gooseberries are many and cheap and strawberries are coming into the market. Well, this will please Bro. Holt, as he looks forward to the time when we shall live on an exclusive diet of fruit. However, he insists on classing beans with this fruit and excluding onions and potatoes, and this I think hardly fair treatment for our staple articles; and he can have a foretaste of those joys now. Well we'll try to help him taste them.

Hopefully your brother,

A. M. CHASE.

SAN JOSE, Cal., June 14.

Editors Herald:—I left Lamoni on May 17, stopped over night at St. Joseph. Next morning took train for the West and arrived at Salt Lake City on Saturday at noon. I went to Bro. Ethan Barrows', where I was royally received and cared for. I attended the Tabernacle service of the great American apostate church. Three of its representatives spoke, occupying one hour and fifteen minutes. They all testified that they knew Joseph Smith was a prophet of God, and the last speaker knew that Brigham Young was his successor, and eulogized him to the skies. He also testified that he loved his children and his wives (plural). Not a word of gospel from any of them; boast and bombast were their stock in trade. The music was grand, and the only attraction, and that accounts for the large attendance at their meetings. If the preaching that I heard was a fair sample, it is no wonder they are making so few proselytes.

I reached San Francisco without accident or incident; found Bro. C. A. Parkin; he kindly gave me necessary information. From there I came to San Jose, and am making my headquarters with Bro. and Sr. J. B. Carmichael, 54 Colfax Street. He is the president of the branch here, and is alive in the work, and is helping me to get places to preach in, and assisting in the meetings, besides making my stay here very pleasant. I met Bro. and Sr. Daley here; I like him very much; he is wide-awake and full of push. We were called upon to officiate at a funeral of a man that was killed by a runaway team; he was not a member of any church, and his friends did not want him sent to a place of fiery flames, hence they invited us to preach his funeral sermon, knowing we would give him an opportunity after death to accept the gospel.

All goes well; we have laid siege to this place. Bro. Daley has taken the west side of the city and I the east. We are having a good interest, preaching in private houses every week night except Wednesday and Saturday. Wednesday night is prayer meeting, and Saturday general shopping. We preach at the hall on Sunday. We think if a persistent effort is made here, good will result. We are not confined to the saints' houses for preaching, others have invited us to occupy their homes; and we have many invitations to call and talk with them. Generally speaking prospects are good for gospel work here.

Crops are poor; fruit will be good wherever it can be irrigated. Hay and grain are a failure; a bale of good hay will bring as much as a horse. This is not overdrawn, for it has to be shipped here from the east.

Yours for the truth,

E. KEELER.

PROVO, Utah, June 20.

Editors Herald:—Bro. Parker and I closed a series of thirty-one sermons in this place last evening, and intend to go with the tent to Nephi to-morrow.

Bro. Parker baptized five yesterday, and one more, at least, is intending to obey in the near future. Others are interested and may obey sometime.

Good liberty has been granted, as a rule; and, although ample opportunity has been extended, the Brighamites have not seen fit to make a defense. The saints have treated us royally, and we shall ever remember their kindness with grateful hearts. They have abundantly sustained their part of the work.

To the saints and friends who may not otherwise receive communication from me, I will say that you are remembered just the same, and trust you will not forget that we need the assistance of your prayers.

In bonds,

D. W. WIGHT.

PLANO, Ill., June 16.

Editors Herald:—We are feeling that God is with us in this district. Our conference, held June 10 to 12, was indeed enjoyable. Beginning with the district Religio convention on Friday morning, through the Sunday school convention in the afternoon, and conference business sessions of Saturday morning and afternoon, the good Spirit of peace and unity prevailed, and encouraging interest in the various features of the work was manifested. The Sunday school convention appointed a committee, (Bro. J. M. Terry, Sr. Marie Clarke, and your servant,) to arrange for a two days' institute, which will probably be held at the next meeting. For this step we have long hoped, so we are pleased.

Friday evening a program, instructive in Religio and Sunday school work, with some entertaining features beside, was rendered. We think a very profitable hour and a half was spent.

Saturday afternoon, after business was finished, an hour was used in social service. Then came the softening influence of the Spirit that speaks peace to the soul and points the ways of God to man. Fervent prayers sent humble but eloquent pleas to the throne of grace. Living witnesses told in inspiring words of God's condescension to bless a single, lowly soul, and spoke of faith and knowledge in the gospel. Then, as if to make it more like the Pentecost of blessed memory, came through the beloved president of our mission the familiar but marvelous gift of tongues. After a pause the interpretation spoke words of encouragement and of admonition, and called to Brn. Elmer Johnson, of Chicago, and David Anderson of Mission, to enter in and occupy—the former as deacon, the latter as priest. Brother Elmer was ordained and promised higher responsibilities; Brother David's ordination was ordered. Saturday night the writer occupied the stand.

Sunday morning another good prayer and sacrament service was had. Sunday school proved that Mission branch is far from the rear of the procession in that line of work. The order of the school was indeed commendable. Bro. J. M. Terry introduced himself to the district conference by a sermon that must make us all desire to cultivate an acquaintance with him in the pulpit. In the afternoon Bro. H. E. Moler also made his initial bow to our district assembly, and we think all were pleased with our new missionary. Bro. F. M. Cooper was in an old field to him, but the way he laid down gospel truth and put the Pedobaptists in the jug was refreshing to those who know him well. His preaching was on Sunday night. Bro. Lake remains at Mission over next Sunday and preaches.

Mission church, nine miles from any town of consequence, is a wonder in the matter of attracting crowds. Sunday night about five hundred were in attendance. Bro. Moler and I had been hunting for a fortnight for some one to whom to preach, hence it was refreshing to face so many people. We two are associated to work with the district tent, and begin at once in Pullman, Chicago. Bro. Cooper moves his family from Chicago to Plano this week. There is probably other news from these parts, but I either don't know of it, or can't think of it.

Still in the faith,

ADAM J. KECK.

LAMONI, Iowa, June 24.

Editors Herald:—A part of the thanks for the report of the Wight-Braden debate are due Bro. Charles Fry, as I copied some of his notes without change. In fact it was due to his most excellent report that I was permitted to daily prepare for debate and report to Herald as well.

Yours,

J. W. WIGHT.

Annett. Priests: R. Burr, W. H. Taylor baptized 1. J. H. Tyrrell, Bishop's agent, reported: Receipts $765.25; paid out $556.61; balance $208.68. Audited and found correct. District treasurer, G. Hampshire, reported receipts $23.47; paid out $22.98; balance 49 cents. Audited and found correct. A petition was presented from Petrolea branch, requesting conference to provide for the ordination of Bro. R. H. Huston; the matter was left in hands of missionary in charge and district president. Petition from Zone branch to divide the district was lost. Elder G. Green was sustained as district president, A. Leverton vice president, R. Coburn secretary, J. H. Tyrrell Bishop's agent, G. Hampshire district treasurer. Motion to allow J. H. Tyrrell $25 per annum was defeated. Preaching by J. Shields, S. Brown, R. C. Evans, A. Leverton. Collections amounting to $18.36 turned over to Ridgetown branch. At Monday morning prayer and testimony meeting Bro. James Williamson was called to office of elder, and Bro. B. Schrader to office of priest, and both ordained; three were baptized and ten children blessed. Adjourned to Zone, October 1.

NORTHEAST MISSOURI.

Conference at Higbee, June 4 and 5; J. A. Tanner president, G. A. Tryon secretary. Reports read from High Priest R. M. Elvin; Elders J. A. Tanner, J. F. Petre, W. E. Summerfield, R. R. Jones, J. T. Williams, W. Vincent, W. J. Vaughan; Priests J. Waltenbaugh, D. Edmunds, R. Thrutchley, J. I. Young, F. M. Burch, W. Chapman, W. Kelso, F. T. Mussel, G. O. Adkins. Teachers J. J. Jones, C. A. Brown, E. E. Petre, H. W. Gipson; Deacon T. E. Perry. Branches reporting: Bevier 177, Higbee 114, Missouri River 29, Salt River 23, Pollock 18, Huntsville 16; Hannibal and Carrolton not reporting. District treasurer's report: On hand last report $21.15, receipts $8.41, disbursements $20.96, on hand $8.60. Bills allowed: to president $2.95, secretary $1.40. Election of officers resulted in choice of J. A. Tanner president, J. F. Petre vice president, G. A. Tryon secretary and treasurer. Priest J. I. Young was allowed privilege of laboring in district as circumstances permit. Preaching by Elders R. M. Elvin, J. A. Tanner, W. Summerfield. Adjourned to Pollock, September 24, 25.

FLORIDA.

Conference convened with Calhoun branch, June 4; S. D. Allen presiding, B. L. Jernigan clerk. District treasurer received 65 cents; paid out 66 cents; due treasurer 1 cent. Bishop's agent's report: On hand February 4, $48.50; received $46.50; total $95; audited and found correct. Branch reports: Calhoun 64. Coldwater 56; 1 died; 4 removed. Greenwood 30. Pleasantview 26. Edendale 18. Openhead 11, a new branch. Ministry reporting: Elders E. Powell, D. E. Tucker, J. N. Hawkins, S. D. Allen; Priests V. S. Jernigan, J. P. Calhoun, C. Dixon; Teacher J. L. Rice. E. Powell elected district president, B. L. Jernigan sustained as secretary and treasurer. A vote of thanks was extended to S. D. Allen, our retiring president, for his untiring efforts and usefulness. Conference adjourned to Coldwater, Saturday nearest the full moon in September.

Sunday School Associations.

KEWANEE.

Convention of district Sunday school association convened June 3; Bro. A. Whitehouse in the chair, Sr. Lamb secretary. The usual business was done and short talks were given by Brn. Crabb, W. P. Terry, and Sr. Strange. Six Sunday schools reported; namely: Buffalo Prairie, Kewanee, Millersburg, Canton, Rock Island, and Peoria Zion's Hope. Next convention to convene two days before conference instead of one, and the secretary to correspond with Bro. T. A. Hougas asking him to attend the same. The entertainment of next convention to be left in hands of the Sunday school where the convention is to convene, and that the school may confer with district superintendent if they so wish. Officers elected for ensuing year: Alma Whitehouse superintendent, W. E. LaRue assistant, Eva Holmes secretary, Minnie Terry treasurer. The evening session was an entertainment under the auspices of the Rock Island Sunday school. Adjourned to Buffalo Prairie, September 1.

WILLIAMS-BAYS DEBATE.—NO. 7.

ELDER WILLIAMS' FIRST SPEECH.

It is with pleasure I essay the task before me. With the assurance and implicit trust in what I believe, I enter into the task of proving the proposition. The proposition is:—

"Is the Book of Mormon a true record, and are its inspirational teachings entitled to the belief and confidence of all Christian people?"

Because a thing is generally rejected does not argue it is false. To be generally accepted does not prove it true. Jesus Christ said the truth would be espoused by the few and rejected by the many. Galileo was ostracised and persecuted for advocating a truth. At the onset anything new seems to be peculiar. It is however due that you investigate it carefully and prayerfully when first presented, so you can intelligently decide.

Rev. John McCalman, of the Christian Church, said March 4, 1894, in a sermon: "The word of the Lord is divine communication, teaching his children what to do under circumstances in which they find themselves at a given time and place. Sometimes we call it confidence. If to-day your hearts are open to receive divine communication, the word of the Lord will be present. You ask, How shall I know it is the word of God? Joseph Smith published to the world at large that he had received a divine communication. Now, what right have I to say that that communication was not a divine one?"—"Palmyra to Independence," p. 4.

The wise man, in Proverbs 18: 13 says, "He that answereth a matter before he heareth it, it is folly and shame unto him."

What is the Book of Mormon? It claims to contain a record of three colonies that came from the eastern continent to America. The Bible is a record of a people or peoples on the eastern continent. The Book of Mormon contains a history of a people who came from the tower of Babel, and of two other peoples who came from Palestine about 600 years B. C. It is a brief record of other peoples than those referred to in the Bible.

The first colony wrote a record which came into the hands of the second colony, and they made an abridgment of it, and it was hid up in the earth. Joseph Smith found this abridged record by direction of God and translated it by the power of God.

We will look up the meaning of the proposition. "Record," according to Webster, means: "A register; an authentic or official copy of any writing, or account of any facts and proceedings, entered in a book for preservation; or the book containing such copy or account." The Book of Mormon claims to contain accounts and proceedings of a people who came to this continent. The word "true" means "Genuine; real; not counterfeit, adulterated, or false; not false or pretended." It is my purpose to prove the Book of Mormon such a record. In deciding on a case a true judge decides as to the plausibility of a thing being true. The audience to-night are the jurors, and should not decide till all the evidence is in. You should weigh the evidences carefully as I present them. When I present testimony, a mere denial by Elder Bays does not prove the testimony untrue. This is not the proper way to prove a negative. He must show by evidence that the evidences I present are false, or prove that the evidence means something else than I claim it means. He must disprove what I present, or prove an alibi.

Hedge's Logic gives the proper rule by which to try cases of moral reasoning: "We must consider each side of the question, and give our assent to that on which there appears the greatest weight of evidence." "But in moral reasoning there is often a contrariety of evidence; and the degree of assurance, we feel in the conclusion, must depend on the degree, on which the evidence on one side exceeds that on the other." Then you should decide on the preponderance of evidence.

It is a mere begging of the question to reject evidences used in favor of the Book of Mormon that he would use to prove the truthfulness of the Bible. According to the statement of the Christian minister he should not reject such evidence. The same argument which is used to reject the Book of Mormon, he should be willing to have used against the Bible. I shall use internal, external, and circumstantial evidence to prove the Book of Mormon a true record. Not all the statements in the Bible are accepted by some, and yet they claim that it is a true record. The history of Jonah and the whale is not accepted as true by some, and yet none such would reject the Bible because of this. Some even reject the record found in the Bible about the immaculate conception of Jesus Christ, and yet claim the Bible is a true record.

2 Timothy 3: 16, 17, claims that all Scripture given by inspiration of God is beneficial. Should I prove that the teachings contained in the Book of Mormon are in harmony with the character of God, it is worthy of your belief and confidence.

There are several arguments removed from this debate from the position taken by Elder Bays in "Doctrines and Dogmas of Mormonism;" two of which are the "Spalding Story" as the origin of the book, and Sidney Rigdon as chief assistant of Joseph Smith in its existence.

There are two books now published by the Christian Publishing House, of St. Louis, Missouri, one by Braden, the other by Bays; the one claims that the "Spalding Story" was the Book of Mormon, the other says that such a claim is false; yet both are used to down the Book of Mormon. Bays, in referring to the "Spalding Romance," confessed the lamentable failure of those who had used such an argument against the Book of Mormon, and says, Do you use such an argument, it will let you down. The Christian Publishing House indorses this.

Bays says Oliver Cowdery, and not Sidney Rigdon, assisted Joseph Smith in bringing into existence the Book of Mormon. Braden says Sidney Rigdon assisted. The Christian Church was taken up with Braden's theory for a decade, but now abandons that and takes up with Bays' theory without it being proven. Bays does not prove that Sidney Rigdon did not assist Joseph Smith, yet the Christian ministry, without waiting for him to prove it, recommends his theory, and some say that Bays and his book are "children of Providence."

You should be willing to accept of the same proof for the Book of Mormon as is used to prove the Bible true. Attacks of an infidel character should have no weight. The book claims to come from God. You should examine its claims, trying it by the standard—the Bible. It claims to contain a communication from God. These claims are proper claims. The object of the book is the next thing to examine. In the preface we find the following: "An abridgement taken from the Book of Ether: also, which is a record of the people of Jared; who were scattered at the time the Lord confounded the language of the people, when they were building a tower to get to heaven: which is to show unto the remnant of the house of Israel what great things the Lord hath done for their fathers; and that they may know the covenants of the Lord, that they are not cast off forever; and also to the convincing of the Jew and Gentile that Jesus is the Christ, the Eternal God, manifesting himself unto all nations." Here is the special object of the book; it is to prove that Jesus is the Christ, the immaculate Son of God, born of the Virgin Mary, and in this respect is in harmony with the Bible. Will my opponent deny this? Also, on pages 493, 494, I read:—

"And now behold, I would speak somewhat unto the remnant of this people who are spared, if it so be that God may give unto them my words, that they may know of the things of their fathers; yea, I speak unto you, ye remnant of the house of Israel; and these are the words which I speak, Know ye that ye are of the house of Israel. Know ye that ye must come unto repentance, or ye cannot be saved. Know ye that ye must lay down your weapons of war, and delight no more in the shedding of blood, and take them not again, save it be that God shall command you. Know ye that ye must come to the knowledge of your fathers, and repent of all your sins and iniquities, and believe in Jesus Christ, that he is the Son of God, and that he was slain by the Jews, and by the power of the Father he hath risen again, whereby he hath gained the victory over the grave; and also in him is the sting of death swallowed up. And he bringeth to pass the resurrection of the dead, whereby man must be raised to stand before his judgment seat. And he hath brought to pass the redemption of the world, whereby he that is found guiltless before him at the judgment day, hath it given unto him to dwell in the presence of God in his kingdom, to sing ceaseless praises with the choirs above, unto the Father, and unto the Son, and unto the Holy Ghost, which are one God, in the state of happiness which hath no end. Therefore repent, and be baptized in the name of Jesus, and lay hold upon the gospel of Christ, which shall be set before you, not only in this record, but also in the record which shall come unto the Gentiles from the Jews, which record shall come from the Gentiles unto you. For behold, this is written for the intent that ye may believe that; and if ye may believe that, ye will believe this also; and if ye believe this, ye will know concerning your fathers, and also the marvelous works which were wrought by the power of God among them; and ye will also know that ye are a remnant of the seed of Jacob; therefore ye are numbered among the people of the first covenant; and if it so be that ye believe in Christ, and are baptized, first with water, then with fire and with the Holy Ghost, following the example of our Savior according to that which he hath commanded us, it shall be well with you in the day of judgment. Amen."

The object then is to establish the divinity of the Bible, and that Jesus is the Christ, the Redeemer of the world.

I now refer to the Jaredite colony. On pages 500 and 503 we have an account of Jared and his brother with others coming forth "from the great tower, at the time the Lord confounded the language of the people, and swear in his wrath that they should be scattered upon all the face of the earth." The language of these few remained the same; and the Lord directed them until they came to "the land of promise, which was choice above all other lands which the Lord God had preserved for a righteous people." These families came forth from the tower of Babel, led by the hand of the Lord. I will sustain this proposition by the Bible.

ELDER BAYS' FIRST SPEECH.

So far as the argument of Bro. Williams as relating to the Book of Mormon, I might just as well take my seat and let him go on. He has made a very nice speech, but what proof has he presented in favor of the proposition? But I will follow him and see what he has done. Has he been telling you something new? Any truth when new is in the minority. Galileo when he advocated his theory was in the minority, and the Spaniards persecuted him. That's their way of doing. The Book of Mormon is in the minority and will probably so remain. Every truth has not remained in the minority, whether it was a religious, moral, or scientific truth. Galileo is not in the minority now. The Book of Mormon has been going on since 1830, and now only a few believe it—probably 150,000 to 200,000. Christianity was in the minority at first, but how long did it remain so? It soon arose supreme. What truth is in the Book of Mormon not contained in the word of God? In all the professed revelations believed in by Latter Day Saints there is no new truth presented in so many words, or in essence.

He referred to what a Christian minister said, and stopped where he did, so as to create the impression that you ought not to reject that which claims to be a revelation from God. I will show proof that the Book of Mormon is not a revelation from God.

I am glad he has read in "Doctrine and Dogmas of Mormonism." I hope he will learn something from it.

In Orson Pratt's works, pages 55 and 56, we find what Orson Pratt says about the Book of Mormon, and of you if you reject it: "If he (Joseph Smith) was sincere, then the Book of Mormon is a divine revelation, and this church must be 'the only true and living church of Christ upon the face of the whole earth,' and there is salvation in no other." Do you hear that? No salvation in any other! Williams says now there is. Then you realize your condition. "All men among all nations, kindreds, tongues, and people, are required under the penalty of eternal damnation to believe, receive, and obey the Book of Mormon." All are required to believe and obey the Book of Mormon or be under the penalty of eternal damnation. That's the position of Bro. Williams and Orson Pratt. Remember it is "everlasting damnation," a damnation you cannot get out of.

I will now examine the proposition. "Is the Book a true record?" The proposition does not contain the claim of divine origin. I urged that this clause should be in the proposition. In a letter from H. O. Smith of December 24, 1897, we have this in reply to this request from me. "We will only affirm what the Book of Mormon claims for itself." Elder J. R. Lambert in a letter dated December 20, 1897, says, "We will affirm the claims of the book." They would affirm nothing more or nothing less for the book only that it was a true record. If a true record, of what? of whom? Of what continent, country, islands? Where?

In the Book of Mormon, page 4, paragraph 14, we read of the river Laman running into the Red Sea. I have examined Cram's and Rand and McNally's Atlas of the latest date, and I cannot find the River Laman. Such a river cannot be found. It may be argued that they crossed the Red Sea to the west side; but the record says they went in a south southeast direction. What an idea! To have in that day such a modern idea as south southeast. The idea of these people talking about the south southeast direction, that is a point between southeast and south. The mariner's compass never existed till the twelfth century. The Arabs about the eight century knew of North, South, East, and West, and intermediate points. We further read that they traveled and came to the sea Irreantum. Can you find it on the map? Joseph Smith knew there was a Red Sea and gave the name, but he gave this sea a funny name. He should have translated it in English. Joseph made that little record himself.

On page 40, paragraph 28, we read that God commanded Nephi to build a ship, and then they all got into the ship and went to the promised land. It don't tell where that is, nor doesn't even tell what direction it is. The Book of Mormon may be a record of the Chinese Empire, Africa, or Central America, so far as the record itself shows. Bro. Williams says they came forth from the tower of Babel.

Bro. Williams is anxious for Bays to do something. Well, I will show him I will do something before this discussion closes. He says it is my duty to prove it is not true. He makes the claim that the Book of Mormon is a true record. He must prove it. The thing alleged in a charge against a person must be proven. He says I must prove the book not a true record. He is here to prove the proposition true; I will prove, or try to, that it is not a true record. This artful dodging has ceased. He must come down to business.

A thing must be proven by the evidence, not by the preponderance. When he presents a witness and it is not material to the question at issue, I have only to deny it. When one witness says one thing and another another, we would judge by the preponderance of evidence; then preponderance goes. But this question does not partake of that nature.

He realizes that there are weaknesses in the Book of Mormon, and is trying to hedge against them. We don't have to apologize for the weaknesses in the Bible. What has Jonah and the whale to do with the truthfulness of the Book of Mormon? There is no apology to offer for the Bible; but Williams has commenced to apologize already.

Clark Braden took the position that the Book of Mormon was written from the "Spalding Romance," and Bays has refuted that position, says Williams. You should not allow this to have weight in the present argument. I believed I had something better to present. What if it is Braden vs. Bays, what has that to do with the question? That does not prove the Book of Mormon a true record. This is mere subterfuge. Bays speaks on this subject from experience. Those who have taken this position in argument against the Book of Mormon—that it was written from Spalding's Romance, have gone down and will go down.

WIGHT-BRADEN DEBATE.—NO. 4.

ELDER BRADEN'S FIFTH SPEECH.

Read from Doctrine and Covenants concerning Aaronic priests; fullness of the gospel; only church; avenge, curse, revenge, stealing, Oliver Cowdery to preach to Indians and convert them. Zion means people. (Book of Mormon 239; 22; 282; 33.) "Made a blunder, tried to correct and left the blunder there." Think of the Lord starting out and saying such a ridiculous thing! How could Lehi quote scores of times. Inspiration gave these blunders. Did not quote those statements because they were wrong, but because they were modern? Camp meeting expressions of 1830. What did those Nephites know about them? Genesis 11: 9; language confounder. Book of Mormon says the Jaredites kept the language. 2 Kings 25 says some of Zedekiah were killed; Book of Mormon says one came over to America. The book says Christ was born at Jerusalem: Bible says in Bethlehem. The book says God is flesh; John says God is Spirit. So light that it did not get dark on this continent when the sun went down, and three days of darkness. Without fall no children; Bible says, "be fruitful and multiply," Book of Mormon says Christ crucified on the 4th of April. Bible says 14th. Says men became angels.

ELDER WIGHT'S FIFTH SPEECH.

I told you the paragraphs cited by him were not to be found on the pages noted, and he knows that he could not find them there when I went to him this morning. You will remember that I told you he could not find that long rigmarole of phrases which he read consecutively. He knows that it can't be found in the book that way. We believe there was a church on the American continent before Christ, but will Mr. B. tell us where to find twelve in the American church prior to Christ? The Bible hints a condition of this kind. (Gen. 48; 49; Deut. 33; Ps. 85; Ezek. 37.) Jews of old apostatized. (Dan. 9: 25, 26.) "Messiah" is found. He says we are to steal. The Lord to take as seemeth him good according to his will. Will Mr. Braden say it is the will of the Lord to steal? D. and C. 42: 23 says: "If he or she shall steal, he or she shall be delivered up to the laws of the land," But he can turn back to Exodus and read of the Israelites being told to borrow the jewelry of the Egyptians and take it away with them! But of course that is not stealing, because the Bible tells of it! Israel took Canaan by force. Saints were to purchase the land. They did so and were driven away by a mob. If this book (D. and C.) teaches such things, why don't you people see the fruits of such teaching? Hold his army "guiltless." Yes, for taking their own. Make proposals for peace; does not look as though there was to be revenge. But in the "Christian System," pages 337-339, we have something about the Lord's army. (Read it.) Does that teach revenge? Are we to be afraid of these people—the Christians—waiting till their army becomes very great? The fact is, neither teaches it. He ridicules the idea of Nephites talking of fiery flying serpents, but he needs only to turn to Isaiah 14: 29; 30: 6, to find the same statement. Will he tell us it is worse for the Nephites to make the statement than for Isaiah?

ELDER BRADEN'S SIXTH SPEECH.

Church was not in the Old Testament times. Christ said, "I will build my church." No gospel in Old Testament times. Stealing; will of the Lord to take when he pleases and pay as seemeth him; good; you are the Lord's servants. I have never used the expression, "Old Joe Smith." Vengeance all right under old law, but forbidden under new. Serpents were not flying in Moses' time, and Book of Mormon falsified in saying so. Abinidi disguises himself and then says, "I, Abinidi." Coriantum cuts off Shule's head. He then throws up his arms and dies. Moroni lies about exchange of prisoners. Change of skins; Lamanites debased; became skillful; had synagogues. How can these things be reconciled? Fair skin, changed; Nephite apostate becomes dark; changed by miracle from white to dark and vice versa; was done by the faith of the one baptizing. Nephites leave homes and wealth. This gives the book away. Jaredites leave home. Prosperous, then opposite. Good, wicked; then good and wicked again; then they get good and wicked again. Ten changes from great good to great wickedness in short time. Priests of Noah steal twenty-four women and in eighty years descendants nearly as numerous as Nephites. Nephites left their wealth in Jerusalem—traveled to Red Sea in three days. No river running into Red Sea. Raw meat made sweet. Nephi digs ore, builds ships all himself; yea, verily! Ship going backward. How did they know? The Nephites strictly kept up the law, to which they knew they were dead. Joseph a descendant of Joseph in Egypt. What tribe of Indians did he come from? Quote Watts. Olive tree grows old in a lifetime. Temple like Kirtland. Corrects mistakes, then makes them again. Stares for one hour. Crowd smites Amulon and all say the same word. Smith was a great admirer of Mohammed and the Koran. Money digging justified by tale of others. Smith did not know that Christian era was not reckoned till 500 A. D., but Nephites fully up with the times; commenced counting first year after Christ was born.

ELDER WIGHT'S SIXTH SPEECH.

He says all from twenty-four women equalled the Nephites. It was the descendants of all the dissenters. He got his soul "harrowed up" the other night, but here in Uncle Tom's Cabin Mrs. Stowe uses the same expression. He says the Book of Mormon quotes from the New Translation. Will he submit five such to me?

Braden: "I will, if you will agree to hand me back manuscript."

Wight: "I will make such agreement, with our chairman here as a witness." Mr. Braden never insinuates. O no! Redeemed my soul "300 B. C.," said Mr. Braden. Had he searched the Bible as closely as he has the Book of Mormon he would have found—"the Lord hath redeemed the soul of his servants."—Ps. 34: 22. Why, Mr. Braden, 1,000 B. C.! Was it worse for a Nephite to make such statement 300 B. C. than for David to utter it 1,000 B. C.? Psalms 71: 23: "My soul, which thou hast redeemed." Deuteronomy 8: 17: "Fell upon my face." Why, Mr. Braden, here's your "fall down power." Daniel 10: 7-10: "Heard the voice of his words" while "in a deep sleep." Why, if he found that in the Book of Mormon it would be enough to condemn it. If one have to resort to attacks of that kind, it only serves to show the strength of the book. Daniel 9:24-26: "Unto the Messiah;" "Messiah be cut off." Here is his word that he said I could not find in the Old Testament.

No such changes ever took place in America. Well, Baldwin says they did. (Read from it.) Which will you take, Mr. Braden's assertion or the scientist's statement? Here in Braden-Kelley debate Mr. Braden depended on the Spalding story. (Here gave a history of it.) Now he goes back on it. Bays in his book says the Book of Mormon never so originated. Christian Church publishes and recommends both books, notwithstanding the contradiction! Braden says the Book of Mormon teaches human sacrifices. I need only turn to Short's Americans of Antiquity here, page 216, and find it verified. If he knew there were white people here in prehistoric times, why did he attack the book on that point? Says baptism unknown before Christ. Smith's Bible Dictionary, art. Baptism says not only known, but practiced.

ELDER BRADEN'S SEVENTH SPEECH.

Am willing to leave the matter to the college faculty as to the descendants of Noah. I showed you that twenty-four women and as many men had descendants equalling Nephites in eighty years. "Harrow up." I showed that it was by authors hundreds of years apart. I criticised the use of Christos, a Greek word, instead of Hebrew word Messiah. I defy him to show that archaeology says these animals were domesticated. When they get ready to discuss Spalding story I will be ready for them.

Never said anything about human sacrifices among the Nephites. Can't find a statement of any writer within years of Christ that hints baptism. Crucifixion of Christ—darkness three hours. In America they had a sky-splitting terrible-howling old time. Had darkness three days and three nights. Jesus crucified fourth day of April; Bible says fourteenth. "I am Jesus Christ." What did those people know about Jesus Christ—the Anointed? Alpha and Omega. What did they know of Greek letters? Beautiful language of Jesus changed to balderdash of Rigdon. The idea! unutterable rot! People after losing their loved ones, having a regular hallelujah time of rejoicing. Cyclone didn't touch the righteous. The great mountain coming down on the cities, but didn't hurt the righteous—not one. Lamanites in South America; Nephites in New York. Proposed to march three thousand miles so as to have it out up here in western New York, that they might hide up record! Think of those fool Nephites sending to South America for Lamanites to come. The latter brought their women and children. Babies armed themselves! and they fought till few were left, and all to leave a record for Joe to find. Rant! stuff! balderdash! Do you think God would notice such stuff? An insult to common sense, and yet fullness of the gospel!

ELDER WIGHT'S SEVENTH SPEECH.

He asks what a literal descendant of Aaron is. I answered, blood descendant. Doctrine and Covenants says bishop is to be literal descendant. Why does Mr. B. think all our priests are to be? Book of Mormon contains fullness, not is the fullness. Book of Mormon not alone new covenant, but former commandments also. Jesus says he that believeth not shall be damned; but, of course that is all right because in the Bible, but all wrong because in the Doctrine and Covenants. It does not say they are to be eternally damned in hell. Paul (1 Cor. 15) says there are three glories. Every one to be rewarded according to deeds. The only true church. Why doesn't he read the qualifying clause "with which I, the Lord, am well pleased." Takes the parable of Sec. 98 and tries to make it appear that we are to enter into a war of revenge. Why did he not read where we were to purchase the land, and where we are "forbidden to shed blood?" As the cursing, Jesus practically offers the same thought—"whosoever sins ye retain, they are retained." Genesis 27:29: "Cursed be every one who curseth thee." (See 12:13; Numbers 24:9.) With such facts why will he through the Doctrine and Covenants thus continue to stab the Bible with his infidel thrusts?

ELDER BRADEN'S EIGHTH SPEECH.

Contrast the beautiful story of the crucifixion in New Testament with the balderdash of Book of Mormon. Have you ever had a bishop who was a literal descendant of Aaron? It is a question whether former commandments are joined to Book of Mormon in that section. All who reject shall be damned. The only true church. It teaches to curse your enemies. New Covenant claimed to be better than the old. Book of Mormon and all connected therewith inspired. "Every whit;" "more part;" olive tree; two churches only. Lie low in the dust in the midst of the ocean. Liken means apply. "More history part." "It sufficeth me." "Have save it be one wife." Why didn't he say have one wife only? If my people sow filthiness. Weapons of peace—o—r—weapons of war for peace. Awful affliction to be swallowed up in joy. Being shielded from vital parts of body—o—r—vital parts of body being shielded. They sleepeth and we have took their wives. Garb of secrecy. Expounded all scripture in one. I don't know what that means. Power to give Holy Ghost. Such grammatical monstrosities and stuff doled out by God to Joe Smith! Whole face of the land covered with dead. Number killed 2,000,000 besides wives and children; 500,000 killed in civil war in four years; but here ten millions killed in a few months. Nephites four years in gathering together for war. Men, women, and children; just imagine the babies fighting in the war! No wonder there were so many killed. They fit, and they fit, and they fit! Coriantumr turned up three hundred and fifty years afterwards among the people of Zarahemla.

ELDER WIGHT'S EIGHTH SPEECH.

If Braden would fit and fit and fit into the Bible like he does into the Book of Mormon he could make it look very ridiculous indeed. He says imagine inspiration putting such silly things there. The fact is that no claim is made of the kind, but they are the ungrammatical expressions of the writers. Moroni says if there be mistakes they are the faults of men. The Church History, vol. 1, p. 80, shows that Cowdery did preach to the Lamanites though Mr. Braden denies it. He was given power to convert them providing they receive it. The Doctrine and Covenants plainly says that a high priest can act in the Bishop's office. He says if Book of Mormon is true Bible tells falsehoods in saying John was the first man to baptize. I ask him where it says so. Book of Revelation says John was yet to prophesy before kings and nations. Can he point to his history where he did so?

Ephraim could have come to America in present century and then been in time to have had the stick of Joseph in his "hand." Nephite temple not fully like Solomon's, as the book will show. Says Book of Mormon false as to division of year. From Bancroft, vol. 5, p. 62, we learn: "Resemblances have been found between the calendar systems of Egypt and America." How he parades the idea of Christos being known. Max Müller asks: "Why should there be any hesitation in pointing out in the Old Testament an Egyptian custom or a Greek word?" (Braden, interrupting.) Wight: What's the matter with him? He must have one of those terrible fits! We'll need to call the doctor in! I thought he'd have a fit before we got through with him. He says Lehi quoted from Shakespeare. Did Jesus quote from Rig Veda in that memorable prayer? 1,200 B. C. the Bramins said: "O God have mercy, give me my daily bread." Or did Paul draw his inspiration from the same source when he wrote about a third heaven? Infidels say that Christ quoted. You would hardly like me to ridicule the Bible and say that Paul and Jesus had quoted from the Rig Veda, would you?

But he finds a terrible mistake in the Book of Mormon saying that Christ was born at Jerusalem, while the Bible says he was born in Bethlehem. Well! Why, I took up Webster's School Dictionary to-day and the very first definition given the word "at" is "near." How profound! The fact is that the real strength of this book (Book of Mormon) is seen in the necessity of resorting to ridicule to put it down.

He still prates that Christ was not to come to earth after his ascension till his second coming. Why, turn to Acts 8:17 and Ananias says, "Jesus that appeared unto thee in the way as thou camest." Why continue to ridicule the Book of Mormon for declaring only what the Bible so plainly states? Can't you see, my friends, his indirect stab at the Bible? Why not make an issue and stand by it, rather than this ridicule? It is not argument.

PASTORAL.

To Whom it May Concern:—At the General Conference Bro. J. B. Roush was appointed to labor in "Colorado, till September 1, then Eastern Iowa." W. A. Smith was appointed to labor in Colorado. After the application for such an appointment by Bro. Roush, it was found by experience that his peculiar condition of health would not permit him to labor in Iowa, with safety, if indeed he could labor there at all. In this conclusion Brn. Roush and Gillen fully concur. Bro. W. A. Smith being already in Iowa, we made an exchange by virtue of which W. A. Smith will labor in Iowa, and J. B. Roush in Colorado for the entire year.

We present two reasons for this arrangement: To secure the continued services of Bro. J. B. Roush to the church, as well as to prevent what, under the circumstances, would seem to be a rash and unnecessary exposure of life; and to save the expense of taking Bro. Smith into Colorado, and then returning him or some other one to supply the place of Bro. Roush next fall. So, under such peculiar circumstances, we have concluded to run our own risk and answer before our quorum and the General Conference if necessary.

Your brethren in the cause of truth,
J. W. GILLEN.
J. R. LAMBERT.

To the Scattered Saints of Kentucky, Tennessee, and Northern Alabama; Greeting:—Forasmuch as Elder M. M. Turpen has requested me to take the oversight of the work in the territory named above, and desiring to labor where work is most needed, I desire all the scattered members that feel an interest in the work (and certainly all should feel an interest) to correspond with me, and let me know of the needs, hopes, and prospects of the work in your several localities.

Come, brethren and sisters, let us get acquainted and labor together in union. The cause is a glorious one, and its triumph will be a glorious one, and some will be crowned with honor and adorned with palms of victory for aiding in the great conflict against the darkness and superstition of the age. Shall we be among them? Let us all answer Yes, and then show our earnestness in the work by rushing to the front.

Remember, dear saints, "To him that knoweth to do good, and doeth it not, to him it is sin."—James 4: 17. It is good to pray for the redemption of Zion and her children; it is good also to work for it, but infinitely better to pray and work both together.

My address will be Sedalia, Graves County, Kentucky. In bonds,

J. C. CLAPP.

To the Missionaries in Texas, and Saints Throughout the State:—Having been appointed to take charge of the work in Texas, I wish to announce that my address for the present will be Medina, Bandera County, Texas. I am desirous to work in harmony with my brethren, and keep in touch by correspondence with the saints throughout the entire State.

Bro. I. P. Baggerly will labor for the present in Texas Central district.

Bro. L. L. Wight in Taylor, Nolan, and adjoining counties.

Bro. H. P. Curtis, whose health at present is very poor, may labor anywhere in Western Texas that he may think is best for his health.

Bro. A. J. Currie, Sr., who is not under conference appointment, but is a willing worker, will, by request, labor in Gonzales and Grimes counties.

All district and branch officials, with all who have made a covenant to serve God, are requested to consider the great importance of the work, and the responsibility that rests upon each and every one to aid and assist in every way that the law has provided. I would be glad to hear from all who want preaching, and we will do all we can to visit you; but brethren, don't let us forget that it requires some means to travel from place to place. May we all labor in peace and unity till the work is done.

Please be prompt in reporting. Not later than the last day of June, September, December, and March.

Your brother,
T. J. SHEPPARD.

REUNION NOTICES.

Reunion of Northeast and Northwest Kansas districts:—The annual reunion of the above-named districts will meet at Blue Rapids, Kansas, August 19, at three p. m., and will continue in session until and including Sunday, August 28. Those wishing tents should order them at once, as the firm furnishing them requires thirty days' notice of the number and size of tents needed before they can supply them. Tents 10x12 feet will cost $1.75; 12x14 feet $2 for use during the entire reunion. Send cash with orders to Bro. William Landers, Lenora, Kansas. Fuller details will be published later.

William Landers, Mrs. A. Z. Smith, B. F. Lea, Committee Northwest Kansas district; Frank Lofty, W. S. Pender, Committee Northeast Kansas district.

To the Saints of Southeastern Illinois District; Greeting:—Our reunion, of which a notice of time and place has already appeared in the Herald, (July 22d to 31, near Parrish, in Franklin County, Illinois,) bids fair to be the best one held in the district. Bro. I. N. White writes me he will be with us, and with others of the ministry, the reunion will be furnished with good speakers. Bro. Johnson informs us we can get the use of the soldiers' tents at seventy-five cents each; they are seven feet square, but can have two or three, if we want them, at the same money a larger one from the city would cost us. These tents will be delivered on the ground for those who will write Andy Johnson, Parrish, Illinois. Should any want a larger tent, write me at Xenia, Illinois, and I will try and get it for them. Bro. Dillen thinks his pasture, three quarters of a mile from the ground, will furnish pasture for the horses; good spring of water in it. Those coming on the train should write W. S. Miller, Parrish, in time for him to meet them at the train.

J. D. STEAD.

CONFERENCE NOTICES.

The conference and reunion of the South Missouri district will convene at Dixon Grove, in the city of West Plains, Missouri, commencing Friday, July 29, to hold over to August 7. Come one, come all; bring your tents and have a spiritual feast.

C. M. BOOTMAN, Dist. Pres.

EUROPEAN MISSION.

The annual conference of the above-named mission will convene at Birmingham, England, on Saturday, 30th July, at six o'clock p. m. sharp. Rule 7 states: "That the authorities of districts, branches not in the districts, and missions, send a report of the spiritual condition of the work in their respective fields to each conference; such reports to be in writing and duly signed by the president and secretary of such district or branch; said report to reach the secretary of the European conference not later than July 20 in each year." Rule 8 states: "That all elders or priests laboring by appointment from these conferences, or not included in any organized district, report their labors to the annual conference. All reports must be submitted in writing, handed to the secretary, and be read from the table." Elders from all parts of this field are earnestly invited to attend. (Rule 8.)

HEMAN C. SMITH,
President of the European Mission.

Northeastern Texas and Choctaw conference will convene July 15, at ten a. m., at Shawnee branch, on Shawnee Prairie, Red River County, Texas. A beautiful grove to hold conference—a desirable place to camp and pasture for stock. The place of conference is seven miles south of Texas and Pacific Railroad. Douglass is the station to get off. Bro. Thomas Pollard lives at said station; he will take care of those coming and conduct them to place of conference. Come one, come all; and if God blesses us with his Spirit we will have a happy time. May God bless us in this great latter-day work. Remember July the 15th. We will have a few days' meeting after conference.

E. A. ERWIN.

DIED.

DOBBS.—At Glen Easton, West Virginia, April 18, 1898, Bro. Amos Dobbs. Born in Washington County, Pennsylvania, May 10, 1832; baptized November 2, 1865, by Elder James Brown.

DULL.—Mary C. Dull passed peacefully away at her home at Limerick, Ohio, May 13, 1898. She was born October 4, 1845; married to David Dull, June, 1867; to them were born ten children, nine are living, who with husband, aged mother, six grandchildren, and many friends mourn. Sr. Dull united with the church September 21, 1884, and remained in the faith until removed by death. Funeral at residence; sermon by T. J. Beatty, to a large assembly of relatives and friends.

DEWITT.—At Wheeler's Grove, Iowa, December 18, 1897, Glen Carlis, son of Mr. and Sr. J. W. DeWitt, aged 2 years, 1 month, 1 day. Services held in Carson church, conducted by Elder D. Hougas; after which the little one was laid to rest in the Carson cemetery.

A Warning to Users of Alum Baking Powders.

CASES OF POISONING IN INDIANA.

The following appeared in the Logansport, Indiana, Times.—

Dr. Souder was summoned by telegraph last Sunday night to attend the family of Braden Harper, living southwest of Logansport. Four of the family were poisoned from eating dumplings. The father and one child, who had not partaken of the dumplings, were well, while the mother and three children were in a serious condition. It is probable that had not vomiting ensued, emptying the stomach, the four would have died from the effects. It is supposed the poison was caused from the baking powder used in making the dumplings. The wife probably added a larger amount than she usually did, which in the greater quantity proved a noxious poison. The baking powder used was branded the * * * *, manufactured by the * * * *. This should be a warning in using cheap baking powders, which flood the country. People buy them because they are cheap, and the merchant buys them because he can sell them for a profit. In many stores one can not purchase a standard brand. You have to purchase the cheap stuff or do without. We are of the opinion that most of the prize baking powders belong to this class.

The highest authorities in chemical science pronounce alum injurious to health and a destroyer of digestion.

Here is explicit evidence that it is a noxious poison.

Alum baking powders likewise coagulate the blood rapidly, interfering with its ready course through the arteries and valves of the heart, predisposing to heart-failure.

The laws of Minnesota and Wisconsin prohibit the sale of alum baking powders, unless they are branded as a warning to the public.

By the laws of England it is a crime to put alum in bread in any form.

NOTE. The Royal Baking Powder Co. publish the above facts because they are facts of great importance, and to say that while alum baking powders are sold cheap they have little strength, and are dear at half price, to say nothing of their effect upon the health, and the bitter taste they impart to the food.

The Royal Baking Powder is far above question as regards its quality and healthfulness, because it is made of cream of tartar derived only from grapes. No other article has ever received such high praise for its quality.

Consumers may use the Royal with full assurance that they not only get the worth of their money, but that they also get the best cream of tartar baking powder that can be had.

The Staff of Life in Danger.

Extreme care is necessary in purchasing baking powders to avoid those made from burnt alum, phosphatic or other harsh acids, of which there are innumerable brands in the market.

Great efforts are made to foist these inferior powders upon consumers by the inducement of a lower price and by grossly false representations as to their ingredients and comparative value.

Alum baking powders have been declared by the most competent authorities injurious to health. Therefore every precaution must be taken to keep them out of the food. They are sold under many names, and new brands are continually appearing.

It is safe to avoid the use of any new or doubtful brand until you have had it analyzed. The purity of any powder sold at a lower price than Royal may be suspected.

Royal is a pure cream of tartar baking powder and its exclusive use is the practical and positive safeguard against alum and the various adulterations found in other brands. It has been analyzed and recommended by the U. S. Government chemists, by the health officers of New York, Chicago, San Francisco, London, etc., and by eminent physicians and scientists generally, who give it the greatest praise for its marvelous purity and leavening strength.

The Royal powder costs only a fair price per pound, and is cheaper and better at its price than any similar article in the world.

MISFIT EMOTIONS.

AS A peaceful life becomes more and more a necessity, we gain wisdom as to the things which promote and the things which destroy it. At different times we conceive the trouble under different similes. Perhaps we may account for a good share of the trouble by simply saying that our lives are dislocated and ineffective because of our applying the wrong emotions to the different occasions which meet us.

We use scorn at the wrong time. Our mercifulness is often unwise and untimely. Severity is used when it is the last thing to be thought of. When it is all over, and too late, we see how our emotions and the events to which we applied them had no real relation in truth. They are misfits.

We are the disciples of a Master who has never wished he had acted differently, repenting neither of severity nor mercy, yet exercising both in relation to people toward whom no man had dared exercise them before. Joining scorn with the priest and mercy with the publican, no wonder men felt he was turning the world upside down. The Gospel of Luke especially is a history of the inversion of traditional emotions. Yet no one has ever seriously called in question the inevitable fitness of the feelings of Jesus in every event in which he showed them.

When a day is over, and, as in most days, we are compelled to cast up its losses, we discover that perhaps the larger part of them are due to feeling the wrong emotion toward some occurrence during the day. Common sense alone will not restore rightness, though in all the operations of the Spirit common sense is, of course, presupposed. Right feelings cannot be attained by any mere shrewdness; the best that mere calculation can do is to help us hide or show them. Their lore is in the love of God made known to us through Christ. It is nothing less than self-robbery to treat our fellow-men wrongly, to meet their mistakes with condemnations too strong, or habitually to fail in delicate appreciation of their goodness through emotions which are ignorant and untrained. Right feelings are all that can ever appropriate to us the good which is in our surroundings.

Jesus saw at once what things to make light of, and passes his insight on to whoever will have it. Perfectly incalculable is the misery stored up in some souls which were designed to be joyous and clear through just this magnetizing of the trifles of life. Spiritual growth may be traced in the increasing quickness of recoil which we experience when we find that we have failed to cherish the right feeling in a given instance.

How often one finds himself growing more and more serious through the hours of the day over some trifle which the quiet of the evening reveals to him to have been an excellent but lost opportunity for amusement!

Every occasion makes a demand upon our feelings. Hourly we are thrown into new relations, and to meet those occasions and fill those relations in just the right spirit is to live nobly and beautifully. The thoughtful are always saying to themselves, in the midst of the varieties of life, "How ought I to feel in this matter?" The rising of some change in life, a new position, the incurring of an injury, the sudden revelation of sin in some one of whom we did not suspect it, the more bitter discovery of some hitherto unprobed wickedness in ourselves, whatever it may be,—these are the things which make us wonder how we ought to feel about things. The hardened one callous to our help, the one whose integrity has shown a rift, the man who throws himself as a dead weight upon charity, the criminal, the outcast, the neighbor, to feel for each in turn the right emotion, this is a life-long question; for as we feel we act. In earlier days we do not look at things like these with much refinement. As we go on toward character, every man who approaches us makes a difference in ourselves.

Some suffer from too little feeling. It is the dull ache of coldness. The utter absence of a mood to match the occasion which is bringing forth a healthy excitement in others, to sit among people who are caught up out of themselves by some unselfish interest, and to feel that we cannot get far enough away from self to share with them,—this is a bitter experience. There seems to be upon some people a malign and contradictory fate of never being in chime with anything at the same time with others. The right feeling comes too late when the occasion to be appropriated is gone. We must go softly in the region of the temperaments, but we may warn every man of the necessity of "cultivating opposites," and not making his temperament a god. Isolation may be the mark of lofty minds, but is even more the mark of unhealthy minds. When one finds his antagonisms outstripping his sympathies, and attributes it all to a badly arranged world, let him get down on his knees and pray for a better mind. Never does a man stand more in need of the salvation of Jesus than when he finds himself in this condition. Not to catch all the greater relationships between ourselves and our surroundings and our neighbors, to say nothing of those deeper and finer relationships constantly disclosed to the sympathetic, is to lose our life.

The parable of the Prodigal Son, or that part of it relating to the elder brother, is a study in these misfit emotions. All out of tune with what was going on in the house that night, the elder brother sincerely thought his emotion the right one, but he was miserable with it. The right one was in him if he could only get at it

Nothing wastes us like anger over the matter which deserves no such distinction. The instant and instinctive measuring of an affair, the knowing just how much attention to give to it and how soon to forget it, comes as the teaching of Jesus. There is such a thing, too, as using all our earnestness in combating earnestness. A man with a touch of the negative in him will spend more force and waste more feeling over a trifling inaccuracy in scholarship or a defect in taste than he can get out of himself for any large and positive employment. It is a mark of spiritual sanity to know what things bulk large in life, and to be at your own disposal for them.

How to deal with the weak so that they shall not become weaker is a continual problem. Not to mistake weakness for badness, not to approach the crushed and disheartened with the stalwart treatment which belongs to the hardened and aggressive, is a learning, the lack of which confuses everything we do. And then there are those who remain spiritually poor in spite of great opportunities for nobler living. These are the special trial of the Christian worker. Only with much suffering and forbearance can the Church keep the right attitude toward the outside world, which detects a false ring in the Church's word much more quickly than it will acknowledge a true one. If a man is not a Christian and refuses all your best efforts to make one, the alternative for you is not anger, nor sourness, nor enmity. The cause never demands this. Deep regret answers sufficiently. Men cannot be driven into the kingdom, nor hated into it, nor shaken into it. All such attitudes and efforts recoil upon us with misery, and finally endanger our own faith because they destroy our love.

Let us take time, then, about choosing our emotions. This may seem a psychological error, but there is something of truth in it. Let us take a little more time to see how we will feel. Right moods or wrong moods are what bring us peace or storm. Right moods are the offspring only of a heart held close to God. They come rarely at the beginning of life. As experience deepens, it leads into them, and, when they come, power and control and character and happiness come with them. Perhaps there is no moment in which a man feels the peace of God enter his soul more definitely and powerfully than the moment in which, at great cost, he has led forth just the emotion to meet some vital and exacting occasion.—Trumbell in S. S. Times.

EXTRAORDINARY RUN OF A FREIGHT TRAIN.

A few days ago the Pennsylvania Railroad turned over to the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad at Chicago a train load of government supplies bound for San Francisco. It was made up of ten freight box cars heavily loaded. The distance to Denver by this, the Short line, is 1,025 miles, and the run was made in 37½ hours—an average of 27½ miles per hour, including the many stops for coal, water and change of engines. This is the fastest time on record for so long a freight run. The Burlington not long ago broke the world's record for long distance running when a special passenger train ran the 1,025 miles in 1,047 minutes, but this freight run, without accident or delay of any kind, is considered quite as important as the other and shows what can be accomplished on a well managed railroad.

ALPHABET OF PROVERBS.

A grain of prudence is worth a pound of craft.
Boasters are cousins to liars.

Denying a fault doubles it.
Envy shoots at others and wounds herself.
Foolish fear doubles danger.
God teaches us good things by our own hands.
He has worked hard who has nothing to do.
It costs more to revenge wrongs than to suffer them.
Knavery is the worst trade.
Learning makes a man fit company for himself.
Modesty is a guard to virtue.
Not to hear conscience is the way to silence it.
One hour to-day is worth two to-morrow.
Proud looks make foul work in fair faces.
Quiet conscience is quiet sleep.
Richest is he that wants least.
Some faults indulged are little thieves that let in greater ones.
The boughs that bear most hang lowest.
Upright walking is sure walking.
Virtue and happiness are mother and daughter.
Wise men make more opportunities than they find.

AN ELOQUENT SPEECH.

THE following is from a farewell sermon preached by Bro. T. W. Williams, at Council Bluffs, Iowa, June 12, on the occasion of his going west, to his new field, as reported in the Nonpareil, of the 13th. It is an eloquent and feeling tribute to both Bro. Williams and the Council Bluffs saints:—

"Reluctantly I appear before you to deliver a closing effort after a five-years' sojourn in your midst. In leaving you there is, however, the pleasant consciousness that progress marks our pathway; and, though the ideal has not been fully realized, yet we have experienced seasons of ecstasy and often the inspiration of divine congratulation has thrilled our beings. Many faces that greeted us when first we appeared in your midst are not present to bid God-speed in departing. Because of the crushing blight of hard times numbers have gone from us hoping to better their financial condition. Others there are whose bodies lie in the 'city on the hill,' their spirits having 'gone on before.' The gray-haired matron and the venerable sire; budding manhood, and the immortal tendrils of a day. We miss them, O, so much! It is gratifying as the years come and go, to observe how easily the responsibilities of life are shifted from overtaxed age to the shoulders of ambitious youth. And when I look into the faces of the ever-increasing army of young people, I have no fears for the future of God's marvelous work.

COMPLIMENTS THE PRESS.

"A source of gratification is the publicity given our work. Prejudice is passing away like the hoar-frost before the rising sun and where men once scoffed they now respect. The newspapers have been very courteous and considerate, and through their instrumentality, in no limited degree, have we been privileged to show the people our fidelity to God and loyalty to his Christ. Where hitherto the name Latter Day Saint was a synonym for polygamy and the kindred evils of the Brighamite deflection, we have lived to see our earnest toil show the striking difference between us, and that we are in no way responsible for those follies.

"It is to be hoped that the injunction of the apostle will be a monitor for, we all, 'Be perfect.' It is our carnality that banishes God and severs friendship. It is true humanity which keeps God ever near and clasps hands across a continent and makes all men one.

THE PROMISE OF THE FUTURE.

"Be of good cheer.' Why?

"Because this life is but the first act in the drama of existence. We are but preparing for another and the chance acquaintanceship of the 'now' will be intensified in the real conception of the 'then.'

"Be of one mind; live in peace!" What a wonderful transformation, were this more than sentiment with us! Theoretical Christianity! The poet's dream, the writer's paradise, the toiler's haven! Thus far the practical is but the shadow. The primary object of Christianity is not to prepare us for a life with angels in an imaginary heaven, spending our time in enforced idleness, but to develop true manhood, purify womanhood; to transfer heaven to earth—make a paradise here.

"Ever will I remember our life together; not only have the members of the church been good and kind, but the people of Council Bluffs, with true genuine western hospitality have ever shown their big-heartedness.

"Yes, 'the God of love and peace shall be with you,' and may 'the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, and the love of God, and the communion of the Holy Ghost, be with you all. Amen.'"

WILLIAM'S VISIT TO PALESTINE.

BEIRUT, June 19.—In view of the approaching visit of Emperor William to Palestine, an aid-de-camp of the Sultan is examining and having repairs made upon all the roads in Syria and Palestine, and all the troops have been presented with new uniforms.

Berlin, June 25.—The details of the journey of the German Emperor and Empress to Palestine are interesting. The party will number ninety persons, and no newspaper men will be officially permitted to accompany them. Their Majesties will spend six days in the Holy Land. They will land at Jaffa, where they will be received by a Turkish escort 100 strong. Besides, there will be present 12,000 Turkish troops, all in new uniforms. They will leave Jaffa on October 26 for Jerusalem, pitching their tents for the first night beside the ruins of Casarea.

They will arrive at Jerusalem October 29 and will attend divine services on the morning of the 30th in the Protestant church at Bethlehem and in the afternoon on the Mount of Olives. The Church of the Redeemer at Jerusalem will be consecrated on October 31. Their Majesties will encamp the same night on the plain of Jericho, and will visit the Dead Sea and the River Jordan on November 1. Then they will spend four days sightseeing at Jerusalem.

They will probably return by way of Nazareth, whence they will visit the Sea of Galilee and Mount Tabor. They will go to Jaffa and thence to Beyrout. On November 10 they will visit Damascus and the ruins of the Temple of Baal. They will return homeward via Constantinople, whither they will be escorted by nine Turkish warships.

Emperor William, the sensational and spectacular young man who rules upon the throne of Germany is making preparations to visit the Holy Land. Attended by a gaudy retinue of distinguished soldiers and civilians he will go to Palestine to inspect the ancient land with a view to locating sites made sacred by past association and tradition. The Sultan of Turkey, whom the Emperor has befriended to a degree in the late Greek and Cretan troubles, has purchased a plat of ground said to measure about three hundred yards square, just outside the city of Jerusalem, which he will present to the Emperor that the latter may found a monastery (?) at the city. The visit of the German ruler may serve to open the land more fully to Christian and Jewish occupation. The rule of the Ishmaelite must certainly be near its end. The German Emperor has shown no scruples against taking a share of the Celestial Empire and will probably be willing to receive a good portion of the Sultan's empire when the powers make ready to divide it. We shall see.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

BRO. W. H. Kelley, Cleveland, Ohio, June 28:—

I came here to-day from Akron, where I held meetings Sunday and Monday last. There is a little band of saints there who seem to be getting along nicely, and by proper effort their numbers may be added to. It is cool and pleasant to-day. Crops are fine and fruit prospects excellent.

EDITORIAL ITEMS.

IN answer to a question: The College belongs to the Church, not to private individuals. The receipts from scholars go into the College expense fund.

The saints at Flagundus, Pennsylvania, are awaiting the coming of some of the ministry in that field; the meantime doing what they can to establish truth. So writes Bro. G. H. Parker, under date of June 25, who also reports many blessings received because of efforts made for good.

Six have been added to the church at Tabor, Iowa, since the late discussion there; so writes Bro. S. Orton, late date.

Bro. H. T. McClain, Coalgate, Indian Territory, writes of the Erwin-Chism debate, claiming victory for our cause. He is doing what he can to maintain the work locally.

Bro. H. E. Brown, of Helena, California, writes of the efforts of the Adventists at that point. He would like to see some of the traveling ministry at work among the Helena people.

Letters are received from Sr. I. L. Jones, Canton, Illinois, and Bro. J. E. Ritter, at San Francisco with the army enroute to the Philippine Islands. He commends many of his comrades for their moral character and interest in religious duty. He believes the war will still further open the door for the preaching of the gospel, in the Orient.

The Military Tract Press Association held its twenty-first semiannual meeting at Nauvoo, Hancock County, Illinois, June 10, 1898. The Editor of the HERALD was honored by an invitation to be present and address the association; but by reason of previous engagements he could not attend. However, after the meeting was over, Friend Baumert, of the Independent, Nauvoo, sent the editor a badge; a piece of pretty pearl-colored ribbon, with a picture of the Temple and a description of it, and title of the association printed on it; a souvenir of the meeting—had we been present. We regretted somewhat that we were not able to be there, to renew some old acquaintances and make some new ones among the editors.

The general mission board of the Presbyterian Church, acting under instructions from its General Assembly, is preparing to enter the Philippine Islands, believing that God in his providence has opened the way for Protestant Christianity and civilization.

It has been noted that the Emperor of China has issued an edict commanding that a university be established in the city of Peking, for the education of the Chinese in western civilization, arts, sciences, etc. Our own people have ordered a college built. They will not permit the heathen Chinaman, as he is perhaps unjustly called, to excel them in this good work. Let us all aid the College fund as requested by the Bishopric.

Emperor William, of Germany, in a recent address to his soldiers, stated that the army was the base or foundation of his throne. He also commended the principle of "blind obedience" to the soldier, for the perfection of discipline and defense of Fatherland. Our glorious country, established under the inspiration of divine Providence, is based upon the principle of government by the people and for the people, and asks only that intelligent, discriminating obedience be rendered by a free soldiery and a free people. It is because such sentiments prevail that Americans and others have so far been invincible. Love of liberty has prompted the American soldiery to place their lives upon the altar to secure both their own freedom and the freedom of an oppressed people. There is little danger to any government whose citizens continue to be actuated by such exalted principles. They approach the spirit of the empire of the Nazarene who, as Napoleon has said, founded and rules an empire in love, not by force of arms. God will continue to favor the peoples who contend for liberty and enlightenment, and their strength will continue in him. Emperor William's crown is insecure. Already the restlessness of the people of Germany manifests that widespread dissatisfaction exists. Love of country and love of a would-be absolute monarch are two diverse sentiments. Emperor William's throne represents the not divine rule of kings, and of ambition under sceptered sway, which must in time be cast down to make room for the heightening frame and spreading branches of the tree of liberty. God and humanity—with all men free and equal—is the liberty that is enlightening the world universal, preparatory to the reign of love of the Prince of Peace. The growth of liberty means the downfall of unjust principles and of those in whom they find expression and life. Proclaim liberty not only throughout America, but throughout the world universal.

Bro. R. C. Evans is to meet a representative of the Campbellite Church at Chatham, Ontario, in September next, in public discussion. Each disputant is to affirm the faith and general claims of his church.

The HERALD is indebted to Sr. Annie Allen, of Lamoni, for the stenographic report of Pres. Joseph Smith's late baccalaureate sermon.

Bro. Criley, our Business Manager, requests that remittances be not sent by cash inclosure, unless sent by registered letter. Remit by money and express order or by registered letter. A number of letters containing bank bills have been stolen, hence this request.

"Christianity is not a circumstance in life, it is the very life."

The college article, the reports of debates, and other extra matter have crowded out a number of letters which will appear in our next issue. We now hope to have sufficient space at our disposal to meet all demands without delay.

Mothers' Home Column.

EDITED BY FRANCES.

"If any little word of mine
May make a life the brighter,
If any little song of mine
May make the heart the lighter;
God help me speak the little word,
And take my bit of singing,
And drop it in some lonely vale,
To set the echoes ringing."

CHOIRS.

MY ideas of a church choir differ from some but if they will do others good, they are welcome to my experience as leader and teacher for fifteen years. A few years ago I was member of a fine musical club. Our conductor was a gentleman of European musical training. Concerts of superior music were given monthly in the finest theater of the city. The conductor stood with his back to the audience and facing the singers, who kept their eyes strictly on his finger, which was kept as much as possible from view of the audience. Certain slight movements of his hand or head meant differences in expression to be obeyed instantly by all. Every selection was sung from memory. This club had its season patrons. Invitations were sent to lovers of music, and only those were admitted. An admission was charged, also a small monthly fee was required of members. The gentlemen's concert suits were black, with white waistcoats, ties, and shirts. The lady club members wore cream nun's veiling, made Galatea style, loosely shirred below the neck, angel sleeves, a white cord girdle at waist, which slightly confined the straight cut robe. Corsets were not worn.

We considered this quite an ideal club, because every member had been admitted only after strict examination as to voice culture and character. Members voted upon the latter, and if one black ball was found, the person was not accepted. We did not coincide with public leading, as we considered that diminishes the good effect. Every choir should so perfect themselves in expression, coloring, and "grammar" of music, while practicing under good leadership, that the master is not needed in public to guide, only to sing among the others if he chooses; but not to lead by motion of any kind, or prominence, as it detracts from the object, which is to cause our minds to center on heavenly melody alone.

How much better it would be if certain Latter Day Saint choirs would copy after the above rule. Outsiders would be attracted and perhaps unawares caught in the heavenly net of the gospel. We have been guilty of going to certain churches just to hear the music from trained singers. I noticed in two certain choirs a constant discord; and as I knew two of the members could not sing the scale, I wondered why Latter Day Saints should allow this unpleasant conglomeration of sound so grating on musical senses. We confess our tempers were ruffled enough while sitting in the congregation to wish we and our friends, we had brought for the first time, were somewhere else. Order is heaven's first law.

We occasionally see choirs consisting of one third the number in the congregation. This should not be in a small room. It is not necessary to have more than a quartet except in a large edifice. Do away with more than one person for each part, or at most have two. Do not ask every particular friend to join the choir, and do not be afraid of offending by gently expelling a discordant voice who has innocently or purposely gotten into the choir for honor or imagined help. Listen for your choicest voices in the branch, select a quartet from them, and a leader who will meet with you every week or two, let them beat time with baton, or simply by a slight motion of hand. Learn from them where to shade your music, if they understand it; if they do not, let their way be paid if possible by the choir to learn from a master, if one is in your town. Music is a part of the service.

Sunday School Department.

ELDER T. A. HOUGAS, EDITOR.
Henderson, Mills Co., Iowa.

(Send communications for this department to the Editor Address minutes and notices of conventions, etc., to "Editors Herald, Lamoni, Iowa.")

THE article "Inspirational Teaching" that appeared in the department in Herald of March 30 was written by Bro. W. R. Armstrong, of Manchester, England, but by some oversight was not accredited to anyone.

THE New South Wales district Sunday school association voted to ask the General Sunday School Association to make provision for the appointment of "alternates" to take the place of absent delegates in district or general conventions. Such action, we believe, would not be necessary because the anticipated action is often taken both in districts and in schools sending delegates to their respective conventions. True, there is no mention made of such action in either the church "Book of Rules" or the "Constitution and By-laws" of the General Sunday School Association. But it is a practice almost universally accepted as proper, and advisable where there is important business to be transacted by the body of which they are to be a part. Appoint your delegates, and if there is any doubt that they can all attend the convention, appoint "alternates" who will take the place of absent delegates. The "alternates" stand in the order of their appointment—the first appointed filling the first vacancy.

CLEANING TIME.

Written for the Sunday school convention of the Clinton, Missouri, district, by Mina Perkins Kearney.

SPRING is the general cleaning time of the year. Then nature, like a good housewife, dresses everything anew in clean, beautiful raiment. She covers everything unsightly with lovely, living green. Everything old and wornout is brushed aside, and new shoots and vines take the place of dead ones, while the old ones which still have life, not wanting to be cast aside, send forth new tendrils that they may still cling and grow side by side with the young vines, beautifying and enriching Mother Nature the whole year through.

Yes, cleaning time has come, and we, as Sunday school workers, must realize this fact, and get the foggy notions in regard to this department of gospel work out of our heads, and put forth new vines of energy, new tendrils of hope, if we do not wish to be cast aside like old rubbish, along with other dead vines and branches.

Come! awake! let us reason together and say with the poet,

"Yes, clean yer house, an' clean yer shed,
An' clean yer barn in ev'ry part;
But brush the cobwebs from yer head,
An' sweep the snowbank from yer heart.
Yes, w'en spring cleanin' comes aroun',
Bring forth the duster an' the broom,
But rake yer foggy notions down,
An' sweep yer dusty soul of gloom."

Yes, rake out every idea or notion that Sunday school work is merely to be tolerated and pushed aside on every occasion, or whenever an opportunity occurs; that it is simply a small auxiliary of the church that could easily be dispensed with and not much harm done. Let us, as a district, awaken to the fact that we must sweep out such thoughts from our minds, brush down the cobwebs that keep tangling up our ideas; get these cobwebs and old ideas out together.

"Sweep ol' ideas out with dust,
An' dress yer soul in newer style;
Scrape from yer min' its worn-out crust
An' dump it in the rubbish pile.
Sweep out the hates that burn an' smart,
Bring in new loves serene an' pure;
Aroun' the hearthstone of the heart
Place modern styles of furniture."

The old church had no Sunday school; certainly not, and neither did the church as reorganized, for many years; but what are the consequences of such neglect? Everywhere you will find evidences of it in the fact that those who should now be bearing the gospel banner bravely forth to battle are either marching with the enemy,—the world,—or have sunken into a state of chronic indifference, out of which nothing less than a twelve inch gospel gun fired close by their ears can arouse them; then, perhaps they might not know they were hit until they were blown into eternity and found out they were all out of harmony with the country there, and they would have to be pushed off in one corner until they were acclimated.

Some fear the Sunday school workers will endeavor to crowd the church work out. This is mere nonsense. How could the Sunday school get along without its parent, the church? Surely it is her—the church's—duty to take the Sunday school by the hand and lead her along; watching over her as a parent over a child; not taking every opportunity to crush the workers therein, by quietly pushing them to one side as if their work was of no importance whatever.

"Clean out yer mornil cubby-holes, Sweep out the dirt, scrape off the scum;
'Tis cleanin' time for healthy souls
Git up an' dust, the spring hez come!
Clean out the corners of the brain,
Bear down with scrubbin' brush an' soap,
An' dump ol' Fear into the rain,
An' dust a cozy chair for Hope."

Be sure to dust it well in every corner and crevice and install her therein, that she may, by her bright and encouraging glances and sunny smiles, impart new life to the seemingly dead vines and branches as well as to strengthen the new ones.

Let those who in the past have felt their labor was not appreciated allow the smile of Hope to once more shine into their hearts, and turning their eyes heavenward begin once again to grow and flourish in the Sunday school work. God needs your talents. They were given by him for the good of his cause. Then do not allow them to waste away.

Did it ever occur to you why those called to the Sunday school work should have a nature so sensitive and easily touched or crushed? Those in whose care God places the future of his little ones, must have their very souls in tune with that of the children. In some things they must remain children themselves; not in mind or development but in tender, loving, childlike feeling and simplicity.

Then you of the church militant, who, through the fiery furnace of affliction and hardships, have been made strong and firm so as to fittingly meet the rebuffs and blows of the world you have to boldly face, may you stand like sentinels guarding the precious flock of our Master and kindly and tenderly watching over those who under your care and supervision, have charge of the lambs of the fold.

Ye workers of the Clinton district, the cleaning time is here! Let us go at it with the vim and zeal that characterizes the modern housewife. If there lingers an ounce or even a grain of prejudice in the minds of any against the advancement of the Sunday school work brush it out. If it sticks too tightly to be brushed or swept out, then take spiritual soap and water and scrub with might and main until every speck is removed.

"Clean out the brain's deep rubbish hole,
Soak ev'ry cranny great an' small,
An' in the front room of the soul
Hang pootier pictures on the wall;
Scrub up the winders of the mind,
Clean up, an' let the spring begin;
Swing open wide the dusty blind
An' let the April sunshine in.

"Plant flowers in the soul's front yard,
Set new shade and blossom trees,
An' let the soul once froze an' hard
Sprout crocuses of new ideas.
Yes, clean yer house an' clean yer shed
An' clean yer barn in ev'ry part;
But brush the cobwebs from yer head
An' sweep the snowbank from yer heart!"
—Sam Walter Foss.

ARTHUR, Ont., June 4.

Editors Herald:—I have purchased and read the two church histories recently from you; and love them so much. I now desire to know if there is a third one published. If there is, please send me one.

My heart is made to melt to read of the cruel assassinations of our dear, beloved brethren. O, how I long to see and meet them! What love the gospel brings for those we never saw! My spirit swells within me while I read Williard Richard's testimony of the death of the Martyr. O, may we be found as true to our Lord and keep the faith till celestial ground is ours!

Yours in gospel love,
GEORGE BUSCHLEN.

DELLSLOW, W. Va., June 19.

Editors Herald:—This place is about six miles east of Morgantown in Monongahela County on "Decker's Creek," near the Pennsylvania line, where once the Bickertonites had a branch of fourteen members; some of whom are still here, but many have fallen asleep. Among the survivors I find an aged sister, Mary Stimmel, at whose home I am stopping, sharing the friendship and hospitality of the family. She says: "I will keep any preachers but the Salt Lakers." My effort this afternoon in the schoolhouse made plain the difference, etc. Intelligent men gave me the hand with congratulations and thanks for the explanation.

I am quite a distance from where I was last Sunday. I met Bro. J. L. Goodrich in the County of Doddridge, and the pleasure of such an unexpected coming together was mutually enjoyed. He (ex)pounded the Scriptures in the morning and I in the afternoon. The attendance was good, and the interest unusually warm, but for the fact that the preacher preached, and preached, and preached until it rained, and then he seemed satisfied as though he had accomplished his purpose. Raining, like preaching, is quite enjoyable for awhile, but when it rains too long, not knowing when it is done, the good is changed to an evil.

But, we had to part. I came this way, and he went that way, and thus we were separated. He is now probably in the Old Dominion, near Staunton, in Augusta County. Something has caused it to rain to-day, interrupting our services somewhat, and I begin to imagine Bro. Goodrich has been at his old tricks again. However I believe him "the right man in the right place."

I heard the announcement here last evening, that "a Josephite" would preach in the schoolhouse, and one of those "ites" was heard here for the first time. I think a good opening is made here for the gospel. I learn since coming that Bro. Joseph Moxon, of Banning, Pennsylvania, was seriously crushed in a coal mine. I hope and pray that he will soon recover from his injuries. He is well known, and of good report in this country. It was he who preached here more or less a year ago, and opened the way for "the present incumbent."

FORESTER, Mich., June 16.

Editors Herald:—The Eastern Michigan conference convened with Fremont branch, June 11 and 12; E. C. Briggs in the chair; Elders J. J. Cornish, J. A. Grant, William Davis, E. H. Durand, and William Dowker present. Business session passed off very pleasantly, the Spirit of the Master being present to comfort and cheer, bringing that love and charity that ought always to be with the children of God. Our social meetings were grand, and the teaching and general instruction of the president of the mission was grand and edifying. The preaching was good, the Spirit assisting each speaker.

Nine were baptized on Sunday afternoon, Bro. J. J. Cornish officiating. In the confirmation the Spirit was present to confirm and seal the young converts heirs and joint-heirs with Christ of the glorious inheritance he has promised to those that love him. So passed off a peaceful session without a jar.

In gospel bonds,

BAZINE, Kan., June 20.

Editors Herald:—We have just closed a successful tent meeting at Bazine, Ness County, Kansas. Bro. Pender began services June 2; the writer came to assist on the 14th. Six persons were baptized yesterday, and that many more say they will obey the gospel when we return a week from next Sunday to fill appointment in the Methodist church.

Much of the country is sparsely settled and some have come nine, twelve, and fifteen miles to attend the services. This is near where Bro. N. Lund (priest) lives, and he has created interest by preaching occasionally. Bro. E. H. Ebert (deacon), also living near, has been at work, and being on grounds during tent meeting, rendered useful service. We move to Ness City this week. Bro. Pender is announced in Ness County paper to lecture on Thursday night to the teachers in attendance at the institute on "Prehistoric America and the Christ."

Yours in the work,
WILLIAM MANNERING.

STEWARTSVILLE, Mo., June 19.

Editors Herald:—We are always glad to hear from the various parts of the land. We have had one of the wettest seasons in the recollection of the oldest settlers. This is the 19th day of June, and not one half the corn planted yet; and that which is in is smothered with weeds. To-day is pleasant and looks as though we might have a change. There will be a large crop of hay if we can have weather suitable to harvest it. Wheat is damaged some by rain, even on high land, and very much on low land. I have been in this part for twenty-three years, and it is the worst season I have seen. There will be a large crop of fruit. Last year was very dry and hot; still we had fair crops. There is much old corn in the country, and because of the poor prospect for a crop this season, they are asking forty to forty-five cents per bushel, and quite a good deal selling at forty cents. This week corn shipped here from Nebraska sold for thirty-four and one half cents. With good weather from this on, as we hope we will have, we can yet raise a good crop of corn. If the farmers will use wisdom and not try to mud the corn in; but wait and let the ground be in a condition suitable to cultivate, in the end you will make by it. I see some trying to plow when the poor horses can hardly go because of the mire. In temporal as well as spiritual things we should let patience have perfect work.

Well, Mr. Editors, you and others may think this article a new departure; it is, but as we like to hear from others in this line, possibly it may be all right. Because of the extreme wet weather our district tent is still under shelter. Brn. Dice, Head, and Paul have been at work getting out seats for the tent; they intend to make thirty, each ten feet long. They are made from good material and in workmanlike manner. All that are interested in this matter that have not as yet subscribed, can do so at once. The seats will cost, completed, about $1.25 each. They are made from the model presented by Bro. I. N. Roberts. I think Bro. Grant is the inventor. The seat is in two pieces only. The tent and seats can all be loaded into one wagon. Our committee will improve some on the model; no objections to this. As soon as the weather is such that it will be advisable to do tent work, Brn. Alfred and Ammon White will take charge and labor in the district; there are lots of good openings. We hope to see our missionary in charge, Bro. H. O. Smith, take a trip out in the district. I am aware that he has plenty to do in St. Joseph; it is a large field. Still the local brethren there can keep the ball rolling over one Sunday at a time. Brn. D. E. Powell and A. W. Head, president and vice president of the district, will do what they can in the work, and the Bishop's agent is going to be on the lookout; he will see that the names of all the members in the district are on his book. This is a very important matter, and we hope that all who have not as yet complied with the law of tithing will do so at once. The expenses to be met every month in this district are about one hundred dollars. We have four missionaries' families and several poor that are depending on the church for their support. Let me ask all to consider this, and if the agent does not call on you, please send to him; and those of you that have in the past sent your tithes and offerings direct to the Bishop, please remember that the Bishop has an agent in the Far West district, and in order that this district may get proper credit for what its members do in this line, please send your tithes and offerings to the agent; he will give you receipt for the same and see that you have proper credit, not only on the agent's book, but on the Bishop's books. Honor all men in their calling.

Let us as members of this district put forth every effort to see that we are all doing our part, and that the work will not suffer because of our slothfulness. Though the prospect is now gloomy for a corn crop, let us do our duty and leave the rest in the hands of Him whom we serve, and it will be well with us. WM. LEWIS.

BEACON, Iowa, June 20.

Editors Herald:—The Sisters Kramer tried hard to get a church here for me, but failed. Then Brn. Kramer and Luke procured the city hall for me and I began operations on the night of the 14th. Had a small crowd to begin with; last night about one third could not get in. But O, how the Devil rages! The Baptist minister said at his meeting some time ago that the Devil was asleep here, and I believe it; for he had nothing to fear. But the second sermon I preached awakened him sure, and he raved because his dominion was disturbed. The M. E. minister warned some of his members not to go to hear me, etc. Another said his Bible didn't read as I read out of mine; but the next night he came up and said he was wrong; that both Bibles read alike. A woman jumped up and left in the middle of the meeting, saying that I preached damnable doctrine and ought not to be allowed to use a church anywhere; so you see the Old Harry has waked up mad because he was disturbed in his feathery nest. I will continue here until July 1, if I am not mobbed out by the righteous Pharisees.

Four have asked for baptism which will be attended to next Sunday, and there may be others by that time. I am glad that I am able to be about my Father's business again, for I am not contented unless I am; but my deafness is a great detriment to me, and I desire an interest in the prayers of all God's children that my hearing may be restored.

In the fray for victory for King Immanuel,

ARTHUR, Ont., June 10.

Editors Herald:—Just one year ago the writer secured a school for preaching, two miles from Arthur, and work was begun by J. L. Mortimer who preached for several Sundays, baptizing a few, the house being well filled by many honest hearers. In a couple of months Elder MacGregor came along and has done a wonderful work. He has been with us probably three months off and on, having baptized about thirty. We have also had a short visit from Elder Tomlinson; he also baptized some and rendered much aid in general spirituality. We had a flying visit from Elder R. C. Evans, and those who know him best love him most. His presence always renders a coaxing desire to come up higher. We are always made to feel our weakness when a few hours in his presence, by the superior wisdom and the spirit that seems to surround him. Elder Shields also called to see us, and preached an excellent sermon, in his plausible manner. We were made to feel his earnest counsel by the sweet Spirit accompanying his exhortation. Others of the priesthood have visited us in the past year, all rendering able assistance to the furtherance of our Lord's work here.

At the end of the year we are pleased to tell the saints that we have a large Sunday school organized, and a branch raised up of forty-nine members. Most all of them, say about forty, have been brought into the kingdom no doubt by the effect of all our labors; hence Paul may plant and Apollos water, but after all the Lord does the work.

None of us can do too much; the work is intrusted to all, and the Lord divides the work to each severally as he will; and the work of the prophet, apostle, priest, or laity, is equally estimated by the One who appoints. There should be no jealousy among the saints to aspire after another's work, for if we were fitted for our brother's or sister's work we would have that work to do. Let us all do the little work we have to do, and do it well, and when the race is run we will be commended for doing well what little we had to do. Saints oft crave another's work, but sometimes forget to see the greater work placed upon us the more will be expected. I have seen those who craved to preach, and would not even do the little duties of attending to their own families. The man who expects to convert the world must begin at home and rule well his own family, if he is permitted to live at home with them. Aspiration and exaltation are seeds of apostasy, ruin, shame. Let us be diligent in well-doing, and if we never rise to the positions in life anticipated, let us remember that the Lord does all things well, and that our strength and success lie solely with our own humility. If we are of a proud spirit, it is the most disgusting feature, to my mind, the human soul can possess.

To those who have heard of the quick rise of our branch, there were four more added on the 6th of June; two heads of families and two promising young men; these make the forty-nine, and more are near the door. The late two-days' meeting at Garafraxa rendered spiritual strength to our branch as well as the surrounding vicinity. We surely ought not to forget to mention the able assistance rendered by Elder MacGregor's wife, Maggie. Her counsel as a Sabbath school worker is to be esteemed as excellent. She has made many warm and lasting friends. We are once more left to control the affairs of the branch, feeling very insignificant to perform the duties of an officer over a bunch of sheep.

Let us all pull together, saints; God is at the helm. My heart rejoices to hear of the spread of the gospel. The Lord wants a full, consecrated life; go heart, and hand, and pocket book to spread this work. The self-denying, liberal, broad-minded, generous-hearted will receive more of the earnest here, which assures us of a larger heritage there. If I have written with a spirit to teach, don't look upon me as a crank, for the Lord knows the motives we all have in view, and he sees as man does not.

Your interested brother,
GEO. BUSCHLEN.

LAMONI, Iowa, June 29.

Editors Herald:—I am trying to keep things moving in my part of the great harvest field the best I can; but, of course, we have the usual opposition and adversity to meet, and sometimes, it may be, the unusual both in amount and kind. But the confirmation of the truth, as it comes to us through the divine Spirit, and the bright and firm hope of triumph in the right, is indeed, the best part of our experience.

I am thankful to be able to state that I am much better, physically, than I was one year ago (and more especially five or six months ago); but I find it a great struggle to be able to remain in the field a week or two at a time; and sometimes when overburdened with grave responsibilities and writing, it throws my stomach and nerves into a bad condition.

In company with Bro. J. W. Wight, I started for the Mondamin debate, on the 8th of May, returning home on the 28th. Bro. T. W. Williams, our disputant, did well. Under trying circumstances—things well calculated to exasperate—he bore himself like a good soldier for Christ. In my judgment, Elder Bays is very unfair, bitter, and inconsistent, in his opposition. But notwithstanding what Elder W. L. Mellinger has written and published in the Christian Index of June 1, I am sure we stood much better with the people at the close of the debate than we did at the beginning, while Elder Bays, in my judgment, did not stand so well; nor was I alone in this opinion, by any means.

A number of elders were in attendance at the debate, and on the two Sundays Bro. J. F. Mintun provided places for them to preach (or most of them) which was evidently the right thing. The first Sunday I spoke twice in Mondamin, the second twice in Little Sioux.

On June 4 and 5 I attended the Nauvoo district conference in company with Bro. A. H. Smith, at Keb, Iowa. We had a good, peaceful session. The church was dedicated, Bro. A. H. Smith preaching the sermon, and Bro. James McKiernan offering the prayer. I spoke on Saturday night, Sunday at 10:45 a. m., also on Tuesday night. Bro. McKiernan spoke on Sunday night, and Bro. A. H. Smith again on Monday and Wednesday nights.

On the 11th and 12th of June we were in attendance at the Decatur district conference, held at Hiteman, Iowa. I spoke by request of the district president on Friday night and Sunday afternoon. Bro. A. H. Smith delivered another dedicatory sermon at 11 a. m., and Bro. R. M. Elvin offered the dedicatory prayer, and preached on Sunday night.

Our work becomes more and more important to us as we understand more about it. There is no room for bitterness and ambition. There is, however, a strong and growing demand for more knowledge, discernment, energy, courage, godly zeal, and last, but not least, love. Love for God and man.

Last Saturday and Sunday Bro. Bell and I occupied at the Union schoolhouse, near Spring Valley, some twelve or fourteen miles from Davis City. We held services Saturday night and Sunday. Attendance not large (partly on account of the weather), but our meetings were good, and the interest fair. Bro. Bell has done a good work in this region of country and is well liked by the people. Our leading purpose was to investigate the propriety of organizing a branch at Spring Valley, but after obtaining some knowledge of the situation it was decided to defer.

Before Elder D. H. Bays commenced his debate at Mondamin, he and Bro. C. E. Butterworth had entered into a written agreement that the debate should be repeated at Defiance, Iowa, provided the missionary in charge would consent. I had an interview with Elder Bays concerning the matter, while at Mondamin, and we partially completed the arrangements, leaving some matters to be determined upon the acquirement of further information. I am now waiting for a reply to a letter which I sent to Elder Bays on the 23d inst., which will determine whether he can and will meet us again on the same propositions, and in the same order, which were debated at Mondamin.

Your brother,

J. R. LAMBERT.

N. B.—By recent letters from the brethren at Hiteman, Iowa, I learn that Miss Emma Parsons of the Missionary Baptist Church, has been delivering some lectures on Mormonism, at that place. She failed to make any distinction between us and the Brighamites, and greatly misrepresented us on some points, so I am informed. Expect to go to Hiteman next week, if the Lord will, raise the tent, and defend the truth.

J. R. L.

DETROIT, Texas, June 21.

Editors Herald.—After leaving Lamoni for my field I stopped in Kansas City for a day or two, the guest of Bro. George Hitchcock, formerly of Pawnee, Missouri. I was much pleased to find him in the enjoyment of our holy religion. I visited our oldtime neighbor, Bro. James Anderson, and found him contending for the faith; had a pleasant visit.

Preached Sunday at the Armstrong branch, and felt so blessed of the Lord, but this was no wonder when I observed that the saints of this branch were united in the love of the gospel of Christ, more harmoniously than I had noticed in any branch of the church for a long time.

Here I met our worthy brother, William Newton, and his wife, en route to their mission in England; also Elder George Hicklin. I was strengthened to hear his testimony. I also met our young missionary, Bro. Parker. I do not remember the name of the modest young presiding elder of this branch, but be assured that my meeting with the Armstrong branch was a feast to my soul. The day will be one long remembered by me.

From there I proceeded to Baxter Springs, Kansas. I also stopped there near one week with Bro. Baldwin, late of Southern Indiana, who came into the church, I believe my last year, in that State. I preached in his house to his neighbors while there, and at Elder —'s house.

From there I went by team with Bro. Baldwin to Galena; preached in the saints' church three times, then to Standley, thence to my field, where I have been busy preaching at Midway and at the Mabry schoolhouse, and at this place. Have felt blessed of the Lord all the time, for which I am thankful. There are some believing at all these places.

I see nothing discouraging in this part of the Northeastern Texas district, but much to encourage. The conditions are much better than they were two years ago, and I urge the saints and local ministry to renew their diligence in the work and strive to hold the ground we thus occupy.

Next week I start to the Central Texas district. Will not be back probably the balance of the year. I hope Bro. W. B. Toney and J. D. Erwin will keep the ball rolling in this part of the district. Bro. Toney is expected to be here soon.

I hereby extend thanks to the saints for their many tokens of love and esteem since I have been laboring among them; also to friends of the church.

As ever,

I. P. BAGGERLY.

VIOLA, Iowa, June 24.

Editors Herald.—Bro. W. B. Thomas kindly brought the district tent to this place, the 21st inst., and so far I have held three services. The first two were poorly attended for various reasons, but last night the attendance was all that could be expected. The work was begun here by the White boys (as they are called) and by Bro. R. Etzenhouser. Only five members reside here at present, but we hope for more. The members are well respected, which makes the missionary feel happy and greatly encouraged for the success of the meetings.

Dr. Potter, so far as I can see and learn, has done well under the circumstances. I hope he may continue and become a mighty power for good. Bro. and Sr. John Newlin are trying to do all they can for the good of the cause they love. If I can read human nature aright, aided by the Spirit of the Master, the church will hear from Bro. John at no very distant day. Sr. Hart keeps the hotel, but at present is in deep water owing to the sickness of her husband. Sr. Pitkin, who is a sister of the wives of I. N. and Alfred White, also lives here. With these noble saints back of the meetings with their influence and prayers we hope to do some good.

I am alone now, but expect help soon, either from Bro. Hand or some other. Am expecting Bro. Hills up several times, as he only lives fifteen miles away, and I understand is at liberty in the evening and on Sundays.

To-day's Herald containing the minutes of the Eastern Iowa district leaves out some very important items which should appear, whether the fault of the secretary or typo I am unable to say—the recommendation of Bro. C. G. Dykes for ordination as a priest and denying the request of the apostolic branch for the ordination of Bro. J. W. Wilson to the office of an elder. The same minutes might have said that Bro. C. E. Hand presided at that conference. Our secretary is very busy on the farm, preparing to take the field, and in his hurry, I presume, overlooked these items. I only mention them to give honor to whom honor is due.

Being so near the proposed new territory between the Des Moines and Eastern Iowa districts at this writing, it would be easier for me to visit any part of that territory now than at any other time. Therefore if there are any saints or friends in either Bremer, Blackhawk, Buchanan, Linn, or Johnson counties, who wish preaching or know of any opening where good could be done, I would be pleased to hear from them. I have not seen the necessity of writing a pastoral yet, nor could I well do so and give my permanent address, but will say this much. It is probable that Bro. Lambert will require a report from all the local force of the district next spring; therefore it will be necessary for each one to keep a strict record of all his ministerial labors. This applies to elders, priests, teachers, and deacons; and that our report may at least be much better than last year it will be necessary for each one to strive harder than ever before to do something. Let the elders and priests, so far as they can without neglecting the branches too much, push out into new fields and get the work before the people. That will give the teachers and deacons a chance to labor more in the branches.

It will be well for the branches to encourage these new beginners by their presence and prayers. Every one must have a beginning. If the branches encourage the beginners, they might become bright lights in the church. They will at least do much better than if criticised and ridiculed and otherwise discouraged. This work is the Lord's and the office of a teacher or deacon is as much of the Lord as the office of an apostle. Those therefore who place discouragements in the way of these lesser officers are doing nothing less than fighting against God. Let us encourage one another, then, and all work together for good.

J. W. PETERSON.

INSPIRATIONS OF LIBERTY.

"On songs of jubilee,
Breathed from the lips of suffering slaves set free,
By breaking every Cuban's captive chain;
By bidding Asia's isles rejoice again,
By war for justice, liberty, and peace;
Content when tyranny is crushed to cease,
Thus with mine heel on thy proud neck, O Spain, Thus will I raise the Maine."

—Mr. Tudor, Iowa.

CONCERNING the natives of the Philippines, the historian says we know something of the cruelties of the Spaniards in Cuba, but they are not to be compared to those in the Philippines, where often the old inquisition methods are still employed. To use his words, "The coming of the United States forces must be to these poor people as if the heavens opened, and an angel of peace and mercy descended." He says that for centuries they have been in a condition worse than slavery, and yet have shown "a knowledge of the rights of man and a capacity to appreciate the boon of freedom."

We are reminded of remarks made in a recent discourse by Elder Joseph Luff, one of which was that the events now transpiring prove the fulfillment of the prophecy: "It shall come to pass, after many days, slaves shall rise up against their masters, who shall be marshaled and disciplined for war;" that this revelation refers to the 'downtrodden of Cuba and the Philippines, as well as to the now liberated slaves of the South.

Also are recalled the earnest and soul-stirring words of Elder I. N. White, who, just previous to his departure for distant fields of labor, related a vision which he had seen a short time ago, and it was in regard to the present and future conditions of the nations. The Almighty, he declared, was allowing fear to seize the hearts of men, and the nations also; causing them to look with awe and wonder upon this nation; not that it is so very great and formidable, but he has designed from the beginning that this republic shall be dedicated to the loftiest principles of government; and that, as was shown to him, it shall be a consecrated land where, in his own good time and according to his great purposes, will be built a holy city—Zion—the pure in heart. This accords with the revelation given to the elders who were commanded to go to the West to carry the gospel, that "the terror of the Lord also shall be there, inasmuch that the wicked will not come unto it, and it shall be called Zion."

On a previous occasion Elder White stated that the Lord was moving upon the nations, and opening the way for the islands of the sea to be disenthralled, and when Cuba should be free he would be ready to go there and tell them that God had sent the angel messenger to proclaim to them the message of life and salvation.

President McKinley's reply to the recalled Brazilian minister, about to take leave for Portugal, was pertinent when he referred to this republic as founded "on the immutable basis of union, justice, self-control and charity toward all." The reply of the courteous diplomat was also significant. He said: "My heart and sympathy will be with your noble people, and with the standard-bearer of republican America, who is advancing the outposts of human freedom into the last entrenchedments of the past."

As the British view it: "Americans may not be acting like angels, but are obeying a wholesome and legitimate instinct in saying that they will not tolerate Armenian massacres or worse at their very doors."

As the Germans view it, old Europe is now shaken to its foundation "by a new power,—no militarism, no huge fleet, yet a mighty element power."

The American motto is: "For our cause, it is just."

"Nor is he far astray, who deems,

That every hope which rises and grows broad,
In the world's heart by ordered impulse streams
From the great heart of God."

—James Russell Lowell. C?

BOSTON, Mass., June 23.

Editors Herald:—This writing finds me at home, about prepared to start for my new field of labor—California; and by the time this reaches you I will likely be on my way, as I expect to start the 29th.

For over twenty-five years I have been associated with the church work in the East, during which time a generation of young saints has grown up, about all of whom I have known from their childhood. Many of the older generation have passed away. With about every Latter Day Saint family in New England, and also Nova Scotia, I have broken bread at their tables and slept in their "spare rooms."

It is with no ordinary feelings that one detaches himself from the association of the best years of his life. It is not possible for any other people on this earth to know me as well as the saints of New England. We have fought the battle of life together, with foes without and sometimes within and among ourselves. Doubtless there are good, tried, and true saints on other parts of this terrestrial ball; but better ones no dispensation of God ever had than those whom I have here in my native land.

It was of grand old New England that primarily the poet, S. F. Smith, sang:

My native country, thee—
Land of the noble, free—
Thy name I love!
I love thy rocks and rills,
Thy woods and templed hills,
My heart with rapture thrills,
Like that above.

I was baptized in California and a few months afterward started for the East to make my parents a visit, then to return; but little did I think of the time that would elapse. I now go back not as a beardless boy, but a man "with blonde among the raven." I feel, however, a freeness going to the new field that helps one to break away from the older environment.

"I go devoted to his cause,
And to his will resigned;
His presence will supply the loss
Of all I leave behind.
His promise cheers the sinking heart,
And lights the darkest cell."

Since I last wrote for your columns I have labored in interesting fields, principally Oswego County, New York, where in the early days of gospel work Elder James Blakeslee labored so successfully. Those that remember him now though are few and aged. The work of restoring the "waste places" seems to apply to missionary fields as well as to particular spots called stakes. I have more than once followed in the wake of the early missionaries and recognized the hand of God in their work.

At Vermillion live Bro. Geo. and Jay Whitehead, whose parents were members in earlier days and with whom I made my first advent there and was kindly cared for. The principal point of labor was at Palermo, some five miles away, where I had the use of the union church during my three visits. I found a class of people who had been praying for divine light and who had discernment enough to recognize it when it came. The results are that sixteen were baptized, and prospects are bright for more to follow. Of course the usual tactics used by Satan when his dominion is invaded were freely indulged in, and while they are new and strange to the new ones just hearing first principles, they are old and stale to the soldiers of the cross, who like Paul, "are not ignorant of his devices." There is a sort of a monotony to Satan's wiles in the main, for he is the same old "father of lies" wherever you deal with him, and can't seem to get out of that rut.

He has, however, become quite adept in using men of the clerical cut to do work for him. Too bad these men will allow themselves to descend to such level! The people in Oswego County who have obeyed the glad tidings are among the best citizens there.

I preached also at Vermillion, in the home of Mr. Keller, and from there was invited to use the hotel hall by the kindness of the lady who owns it, while the local church across the street, which is supposed to be dedicated for the preaching of the gospel, was refused by the local preacher.

At Pennellville I used the Universalist church and had interested audiences. An excellent field is now open in that part of the county, and I would like to have stayed and continued the work, but conference orders otherwise.

Previous to going to the above places I called at Manchester and visited the Hill Cumorah, where that mighty battle between the Ancient Nephites and Lamanites was fought, ending in the destruction of the former. It is certainly an excellent place for such a purpose and shows generalship on the part of the Nephite leader, who was then on the defensive. The lack of proper information among the people now living around the hill concerning the history of the early days of the latter-day work there is lamentable. Their principal source of knowledge or lack of knowledge is from Pomeroy Tucker, whose book is now about obsolete. During the past few years quite a pilgrimage from the people out west have been made there.

I went from there to Palmyra, and called on Mr. Pliny Sexton, a banker, who has the first copy of the Nephite record that came from the hands of the printer. It is unbound and the leaves mostly uncut. It is the copy preserved by Major Gilbert, and through him to Mr. Sexton. I heard of it through some of the Utah people that I met in Pennsylvania. I was anxious to talk with him and inform him in regard to the heresies of Utahism. He treated me very cordially and expressed appreciation of my visit. He is a brainy and liberal-minded man that benefits one to converse with. He prizes the copy he has and when any doings relative to town affairs are on, he has it on exhibition. His father, who was of Quaker origin, lived around Palmyra and knew the Seer and his family. Some fine day that section must be treated to a proper rendering of the religious movement that had its rise there and has since blessed so many of earth's children.

I would like very much to have the opportunity to do such delightful work when it pleases God to have it done. It is gratifying to feel that truth has nothing to fear or be ashamed of, and that there is no place in heaven or on earth where it dare not go because of any weakness in itself. By and by the mists will clear away, light and truth dominate; for the "eternal years of God are hers." So we can labor on with strong assurance of its final success.

Sincerely,

F. M. SHEEHY.

WESCOTT, Neb., June 22.

Editors Herald:—I am in the field, doing the best I can to advance the good cause. Am glad to say that church interest is good in these parts. I have visited a few new places recently, and have found some that seem willing to hear the truth. All things considered, I think the work is moving onward here.

I note with pleasure the deep impressions made by Brn. J. W. Gillen and D. M. Rudd here in their plain and powerful declaration of the truth. May the Lord bless them. Those wishing our assistance, please address me at Wescott, Nebraska.

Yours in bonds,

C. W. PRETTYMAN.

COLDWATER, Mich., June 20.

Editors Herald:—Yesterday morning I listened to one of those beautiful sermons that you don't hear every day; it was so gentle and so clear, so high and so grand; yet it fell on the audience like a gentle rain.

After the sermon we went to the Coldwater River and in its clear and pure water your humble servant baptized a promising young man and a beautiful young lady. The sermon, and the baptism, and the confirmation, were made grand by the gentle presence of the Spirit. The sermon was preached by Bro. Leonard Scott.

I have been kindly received by old neighbors in every place that I have been.

Conference Minutes.

DECATUR.

Conference held at Hiteman, Iowa, June 11 and 12; R. M. Elvin president, B. M. Anderson secretary. Branch reports: Lucas 163; loss 3. Pleasanton 103; loss 1. Wirt 37; gain 2. Greenville 50. Centerville 43; loss 2. Allendale 92; loss 2. Davis City 82; gain 6. Leon 46; loss 2. Lone Rock 92. Lamoni 1,291; gain 42. Hiteman 55; loss 6. Net gain for the district 34. Ministry reporting: A. H. Smith, of the Presidency; J. R. Lambert, of the Twelve; High Priests R. M. Elvin, A. S. Cochran, H. A. Stebbins baptized 2, J. S. Snively baptized 1; R. S. Salyards, of the Seventy, baptized 1; Elders H. N. Snively baptized 2, J. Wahlstrom, J. A. Gunsolley, T. R. Allen, M. D. Lewis, G. W. Thorburn, J. Allen, J. W. Loach, T. J. Bell baptized 4, his report came to hand too late to be read in conference. Priests A. B. Hanson, D. E. Daniels, W. T. Shakespeare, N. Lovell, J. Wilkinson, M. Taylor, J. T. Williams, J. Lovell; Teachers W. E. Evans, J. Richardson; Deacons J. T. Williams, J. J. Griffiths. Elders' courts reported in the cases of G. W. Roberts, of the Allendale branch, B. F. Melvin, of the Wirt branch, and John Barrett, of the Lone Rock branch. The findings in each case were adopted, and the recommendations were referred to each of their respective branches for final action. Bishop's agent, David Dancer, reported: Balance on hand February 4, $38.02; received $369.98; paid out $839.72; due agent, June 8, $431.72. The following communication was also read:—

LAMONI, Iowa, June 8.

Bro. President of the Decatur District and conference assembled, Hiteman, Iowa; Dear Brethren:—You will notice by my report that the Decatur district is in debt to me a little over $400, which I have advanced for the support of elders' families and a few others. There is a great deal of money due other families.

I cannot advance any more for some time, and I am in hopes the district will be able to pay this indebtedness to me at an early date.

Your colaborer,

DAVID DANCER.

The secretary, in his report, stated that it had been reported to him that two members of the Cainesville branch had joined other churches, whereupon a committee was appointed to investigate the matter. H. N. Snively, J. A. Gunsolley, James Allen, committee. The committee appointed at last conference to acquaint the Lucas branch with the status of B. V. Springer reported having done its work. The district Sunday school association reported. The committee appointed to solicit funds for the Bluff Park reunion reported no money received. The following resolution which was referred to this conference from February conference was adopted: "Resolved, that officers of branches whose labors are reported to their branches, shall not hereafter be required to report to conferences of this district, unless they have performed labor outside of their respective branches, provided that this action shall not be so construed as to prevent branch presidents or other officers from reporting the conditions of their branches." The rules of representation also having been referred to this conference was postponed indefinitely. Bro. Elvin having been appointed to another field of labor by General Conference, resigned his office as president of the Decatur district, which was accepted by a standing vote of ten for and eight against. It was then moved and seconded that the district be left in care of the missionary in charge until next annual election of officers of the district. Carried. H. N. Snively was appointed a missionary in the district. On Sunday morning the new and substantial church building was dedicated; sermon by Patriarch A. H. Smith. A collection was taken up to defray incidental expenses in connection with the dedication. Preaching by H. N. Snively, J. R. Lambert, and R. M. Elvin. A good time was had throughout the conference. Adjourned to Davis City some time in October, date to be given later in notice through the HERALD.

LITTLE SIOUX.

Conference met at Magnolia, Iowa, June 11. Branches reporting: Union Center, Magnolia, Persia, Little Sioux, Missouri Valley, Logan, Woodbine. Ministerial reports: J. W. Wight, C. Derry, G. Montague, J. F. McDowell, J. F. Mintun, A. M. Fyrando, F. E. Cohrt, S. B. Kibler, F. Hansen, R. Farmer, J. Emmerson, D. Maule, A. A. Baker, D. R. Chambers, Oscar Case, Hubert Case, B. L. Lewis, D. Lewis. Priests: E. Hall, R. A. Ballantyne, R. Chambers, W. T. Fallon, S. H. McDonald. Teachers: E. C. Outhouse, C. M. Wilder, J. S. McDonald, A. Hight. Spiritual report of branches showed general improvement. Bishop's agent, A. M. Fyrando, reported: Due church March 1, $20.73; receipts, $553.08; paid out, $478.93; due church, $94.88. Audited and found correct. A communication from Galland's Grove district was read, requesting the co-operation of Little Sioux district in procuring the removal of the General Reunion to Galland's Grove district, providing a suitable place was obtained. By motion it was decided to grant request of said district. The resignation of Bro. J. C. Crabb, as district president was called up; resignation accepted, and vote of thanks extended for faithful services done. A. M. Fyrando was chosen district president, Sr. Lenna Strand secretary. A. M. Fyrando was sustained as Bishop's agent. Arrangements for two days' meetings were left with district president and missionary in charge. Tent work was placed in charge of missionary in charge and district president. Branch presidents were instructed to collect funds for tent expenses. One social service was held. Preaching by Hubert Case, G. H. Hilliard, and J. F. McDowell. Adjourned to Little Sioux at call of president.

NORTHEASTERN KANSAS.

WILLIAMS-BAYS DEBATE.—NO. 8.

May 16.—ELDER WILLIAMS' SECOND SPEECH.

He tried to infer that he had nothing to do. He could have proven an alibi if my argument so far was impregnable. Elder Bays places himself against facts. Christian philosophy was not popular, and Jesus said it would not be popular; he said "few there be that find it." "Blessed are ye, when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake." "Ye shall be hated of all men for my name's sake." (Matt. 7:14; 5:11; 10:22.)

Did Galileo in one hundred years become popular? Yet he wonders why the Book of Mormon in seventy years has not become so. No position ever taken by men has gained much more rapidly than did the Book of Mormon. In about fourteen years about two hundred thousand persons accepted it. Those who professed to believe it and who did not brought a stigma upon it, or many more would believe it to-day.

I read just what the Christian minister said and made no comment upon it. I am glad he has concluded garbled statements must cease, heartily glad of it. He had better wait till he finds what I am afraid to defend before he says anything about what I am afraid to defend.
